Sec. 1.—"It being the duty of all men to worship the Supreme Being, the Great Creator and Preserver of the Universe, and their right to render that worship in the mode most consistent with the dictates of their consciences; no person shall by law be compelled to join or support, nor be classed with, or associated to, any congregation, church, or religious association," etc. "Each and every society or denomination of Christians in this State shall have and enjoy the same and equal rights and privileges," etc., etc.

Sec. 2.—"If any person shall choose to separate himself from the society or denomination of Christians to which he may belong, and shall leave a written notice thereof with the clerk of such society, he shall thereupon no longer be liable for any future expenses which may be incurred by said society."

From the Revised Statutes of 1875.

Ecclesiastical Societies.

ARTICLE I. (1821.)

Sec. 1.—"Christians of every denomination and Jews may unite to form religious societies; and societies incorporated, or formed by voluntary association, for public religious worship, shall hold and manage all property belonging to them, appropriated to the use and support of public worship, and may receive grants or donations, or, by voluntary agreement, establish funds for the same object."

1868.—"Any person may terminate his membership of any religious society by giving notice in writing of his intention so to do, to its clerk, or if there be no clerk, to any other officer thereof."

1821 (Note).—"Towns not divided into societies are corporations for the purpose of supporting religious worship, and may hold property for this purpose in the name of the town. (Kirby, 46: 8 Conn. 35)."

Note.—"The legislature cannot divide an ancient territorial ecclesiastical society into two, nor divide its funds and assign a portion to a new society."

Blasphemy Law. (Code of 1842 and 1821. Still in force.)

Sec. 1.—"Every person who shall blaspheme against God, either of the persons of the Holy Trinity, the Christian Religion, or the Holy Scriptures, shall be fined not more than one hundred dollars, and imprisoned not more than one year, and may also be bound to his good behavior."

Note.—"Blasphemy was made a capital offence and punished with death in the code of 1842, and remained so until the revision of 1784, when the penalty was changed to whipping upon the naked body, not exceeding forty stripes, and sitting in the pillory one hour."

In the revision of 1821, the present provisions were enacted:—

Sunday Laws.

Sec. 57 (1702).—"Every person who shall travel, or do any secular business, or labor, except works of necessity or mercy, or keep open any shop, warehouse, or manufacturing or mechanical establishment, or expose any property for sale, or engage in any sport or recreation on Sunday, between sunrise and sunset, shall be fined not more than four dollars, nor less than one dollar: but haywards may perform all their official duties on said day."

Sec. 58 (1784).—"Every person who shall be present at any concert of music, dancing, or other public diversion on Sunday, or the evening thereof, shall be fined four dollars."

Sec. 62 (1814).—"Every proprietor or driver of any vehicle, not employed in carrying the United States mail, who shall allow any person to travel therein on Sunday between sunrise and sunset, except for necessity or mercy, shall be fined $20 (twenty dollars), to be paid to the town in which the offence is committed."

Evidence Admissible.

For evidence admissible, v. 11 Conn. 455. Grand Juror may, on sight, arrest and detain offender. Accused is not entitled to trial by jury. 12 Conn. 448. Note given on Sunday void. 1 Root, 474. Money loaned on Sunday cannot be recovered. 35 Conn. 216. Contracts made on Sunday void. 37 Conn. 555. Value of horse hired on Sunday and killed by hirer may be recovered. 40 Conn. 111.

Sec. 63 (1821).—"No person who conscientiously believes that the seventh day of the week ought to be observed as the Sabbath, and actually refrains from secular business and labor on that day, shall be liable to prosecution for performing secular business and labor on such day, provided he disturbs no other person while attending public worship."

Exempt from Taxation.

Sec. 12 (1872).—"Buildings and portions of buildings occupied exclusively as colleges, academies, churches, or public school-houses or infirmaries; parsonages of any ecclesiastical society to the value of $5000, while used solely as such; buildings belonging to and used exclusively for scientific, literary, benevolent or ecclesiastical societies, not including any real estate, conveyed by any ecclesiastical society or public or charitable institution, without reserving an annual income or rent, by a conveyance intended to be a perpetual alienation."

"Lands used exclusively for cemetery purposes."

"Musical instruments, used exclusively in churches, or by any organized band, and others, not exceeding in value $25." Cash, to the value of $100. Books, to the value of $200. Mechanics' tools, to the value of $200. Furniture, to the value of $500," etc., etc.

"The statute of 1702, exempting from taxation certain lands given for the maintenance of the ministry of the gospel, or for any public or charitable use, did not constitute a contract between this State and the donors or donees that such property should forever remain so exempt; but if it is a contract, a lease of nine hundred and ninety-nine years, without reserving rent, is a violation of such contract," 38 Conn. 116, "and such property may be taxed at the will of the legislature. No act since 1821 has repealed the exemption. Improvements not permanent and such as may be removed at the expiration of the lease, are taxable. A lease of nine hundred and ninety-nine years is, for all practical purposes, a conveyance in fee."

Administration of Oaths.

Sec. 2 (1855).—"When any person required to take an oath, shall, from scruples of conscience, decline to take it in the usual form, a solemn affirmation may be administered to him in the form of the oath prescribed, except that instead of the word 'swear,' the words 'solemnly and sincerely affirm and declare' shall be used; and instead of the words, 'so help you God,' the words, 'upon the pains and penalties of perjury,' shall be used."

EXTRACT FROM A LECTURE

ON EMOTION AND INTELLECT.

BY CHARLES ELLIS.

The history of religion reveals the struggle between emotion and intellect that man has made in his slow growth from naked savagery and wall-eyed faith in myth, into the well-clad intellect and the fair-visaged liberty of the present day. Through the whole long history the greater we find the intellectual culture, the freer and better do we find the people. This is equally true of nations. Where a people are governed by emotional faith, there can be no generous development. Progress is made only by stealth and through the energies of those who are sceptics to the old routine of life and faith. Nations die because they have not proper intellectual development. Dead nations are generally suicides.

"Their breath is agitation, and their life
A storm whereon they ride, to sink at last;
And yet so nursed to bigotry and strife,
That, should their days, surviving perils past,
Melt to calm twilight, they feel overcast with sorrow,
Sorrow and supineness, and so die,
Even as a flame unfed which runs to waste
With its own flickering."

Ease and luxury, greed and envy, or the emotional and the marvellous, overcome the mind where no healthy intellectual activity is allowed; and so the passions, the forces of the four-footed beast yet lingering in man, sway and overturn the progress of the grandest life upon the globe. Egypt, Assyria, Greece, Rome, forever point mankind to the sad warning of their self-destruction. All the past hands to us its experience, and warns us to profit by its errors. From the grave of wasted opportunity a voice forever cries, "Move on!" The intellect forever commands, "Forward, march!" Only the passions, the priests, the emotions lure us to camp and loiter and loaf upon the old fields of ease, effeminacy, vice, and death. And so powerful are their influences that, while we move slowly on to new fields, new life, new religion, and new experience, we still keep our eyes over our shoulders, looking for the glory of the past. With all its teaching and progress, the world has not ceased to look backward with longing and regret for some supposed glory, some fictitious "Golden Age" that has long since sunk below the horizon of memory, never realizing that the future is laden with sublimer realities than ever could have been known to the past. Alas! fatal looking back! Oh, why won't people "remember Lot's wife!" Looking back and longing for the things that are past has converted—"converts," you know—millions upon millions of avaricious old ladies, of both sexes, into lifeless pillars of salt that now line the old emigrant trail of humanity across the wide plains of life. And there they stand, perpetually pickled petrifications, a salt and bitter warning to all live people to flee from the past and keep abreast with the pulsing life of the ever-present time.

Priestcraft, in its efforts to keep the yoke upon the neck of man, teaches that the best days of human life were in the long-dead past. And mistaken people of to-day get upon their knees and whine and sniffle and wear long, sad, sour faces—as if that were the only kind "God made in his own image,"—and call themselves ugly names, doubtless the truest words they utter, and pray to God for the return of the days of holy old Adam, when man was supposed to have been an immortal animal, before the too sweet tooth of Mother Eve had ushered gloomy death into the world. For shame, that it should always have been so! They all did it! The ancients looked back to what they called a "Golden Age" when the gods mingled with mortals, and the earth was a garden of roses; when men lived, like Methuselah, for hundreds of years; and when the "sons of morning" and the angels, girls or daughters, of heaven sang their psalms and hymns together, and flirited the long, luxurious hours away. And, alas! too many in this grand century are still looking into the night of mythology, and are striving, under the lead of priestcraft, to carry our race back into a condition of slavery under the old ghosts, goblins, devils, and divine horrors, instead of looking at the sunlight of intellect and civilization that glows around them, making the only "heaven" that man can ever know by seizing the present hour and improving the golden opportunity of to-day!

Having gorged themselves with the mince-pie of dead theology, they lie on their backs shivering and groaning beneath a horrible nightmare of superstition which gallops down upon them from the past; and when the intellect would turn them upon their sides to let the blood of knowledge run free, and throw off the hideous dream, some pious priest draws back the curtains of hell, shakes down the ashes, turns on the draft, stirs the blue flames of the burning pile, wakes up the agonies of sweltering souls, and shouts, "HE THAT DOUBTS SHALL BE DAMNED!" So the poor believers remain in torpid misery, the victims of too much gorging on unwholesome theology. Priestcraft keeps God locked up in the past, and there it would force us to remain and worship. Thus we hang between the dead past and the living future,—
"Like a star 'twixt night and morn
Upon the horizon's verge."

We incline to move on, half-conscious that the true way is before us; and yet we sag back as though we should be damned for lifting our over-loaded cart out of the rut of theology in which it stands hub-deep in the black prairie-mud of superstition. Amid the whirl and rush of the great Mississippi of time and life, emotion-governed man is often confused, as, amid shoals and snags, he has to seek the channel,—sometimes lonely, delayed, disappointed, fearful, and depressed, but never utterly lost. The intellectual magnet still holds allegiance to the pole-star of destiny, and though the iron bolts and bars of superstition and the iron glove of priestcraft may swerve it aside, strike them off, and the needle will sweep to it, rest, and point again to the starry way in the upward march of man.

Persons desirous of hearing Mr. Ellis lecture should send to him for his circular at No. 8 Portland Street, Boston, Mass.

IS IT A NEW MOVE?

EDITOR INDEX:—

Our Camden Catholicism is becoming more dictatorial; and now our only English-speaking Catholic priest has threatened never to perform any of the rites of the church in behalf of such persons as send their children to the public schools! And all this, too, just after the Catholic has joined effort with the Protestant to keep the Bible as part of New Haven's system of education!

What shall be said of this new pronunciamento? It is, perhaps, but a new move in the common principle of spiritual tyranny which the Catholic Church has always enforced; but ill-done as it is, it does not seem just the proper thing for our Protestant friends, who make the public schools sectarian and tax us all to support them so, to condemn, as they do here, the faith-blind or hypocritical priest who but legitimately favors an argument of similar purport to their own. What will be the end to all this? Shall the public schools be destroyed, and upon their ruins each petty or gross sect establish its own methods of education, or shall they be made so honest in their establishment, so pure in their aims and means, so impartial in their manner of teaching, that no grounds could be found for objecting to them as favoring any religious creed on the face of the globe?

This school-question is a perplexing one; but it is evident our Camden priest has taken some kind of a bull by the horns, to what effect I suppose will appear hereafter. A friend, just the other day, told me of one poor lady who wished heartily to leave her child in the public school it is now attending, but has sadly, by her superstitious reverence for her priest, succumbed to the fears that arose from the latter's threatening. Neither can hers be an isolated case, for 'tis really a phenomenon how people, even in this age, consult less their own inclinations and promptings of heart than they do those of the fleshly priest, who cannot by any miracle of nature enter into a true communion with their feelings.

I would like to ask you—for perhaps you know—whether this action of Camden Catholicism is a purely individual whim of the priest, or is of common practice in all the churches of the sect? We all know that the priests hate the schools; but I am curious for information as to whether this method of threatening is of universal acceptance.

What a great, grand fight the Liberal League has before it! How vast is this unsightly monster of sectarianism that has even polluted with its touch America's halls of education! HORACE L. TRAUBEL.

CAMDEN, N.J., Oct. 6, 1878.

[We understand it to be the fixed policy of the Catholic Church in this country to do what the Camden priest has done, and to require the children of its adherents to be sent to Catholic parochial schools wherever they exist. It is not by any means a "new move."—ED.]

"WERE THERE any aliens and strangers among the Jews at the time of their journey to the promised land?" asked the superintendent last Sunday. "No, sir," replied the smart bad boy on the back seat; "they were all to the manna born." School closed with singing.—Burlington Hawkeye.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 30, 1872.
 To THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
 Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publisher

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.Y.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
 JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $1.20 for one year, including postage, or 80 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street Boston.

PUBLICATIONS INDEX TRACTS.

FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Oelia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. H. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Kesab Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morrie.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wilson and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. E. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion." Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Lasker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for Five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for Five cents at the office.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fifth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 8.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.Y.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
 JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of these several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Pric.
ALCOOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BAOON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. O. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	1.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	2.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	5.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately, 3 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.50
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWERS). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.30
CONWAY (MONROE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter, with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, &c. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.50

Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellaneous. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	1.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols. Illustrated.....	6.00
DEQUATRE (HENRI). Discourse on the Method of Highly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DURRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Poets. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising— Adam Bede..... The Mill on the Floss..... Momo..... The Mill on the Floss..... The Same. Library Edition. 3 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wife and Wisdom.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellaneous.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Quercet the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	2.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GOETHE'S (W. B.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Oreed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMESTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. in England, Book II. in Scotland. Book III. in France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	5.50
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second. Child World. Part First.....	1.00
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	1.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	3.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON) Life. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Of the Skeltons.....	1.75
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Moses the Fairy; A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Running, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aerodynamics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.00
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Glanville's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analytical Introductions by R. Jowett, M.A. Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Lecturer Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KEER (ORPHEUS O.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWIS (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.D.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. B.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUNBROOK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	8.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES) Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	1.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.50
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN) Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN) Voltaire.....	2.00
Bousquet, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER) Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workbench. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Geography and Antiquities. Three vols.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Elkies from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, and the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKEE (THEODORE) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	2.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans, Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations.—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.50
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS) The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PELPH'S (ELIZABETH STUART) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trotty Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged in.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTER (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours.....	1.50
of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, &c. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, &c.....	4.50
The Expansion of Heaven.....	2.50
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHLLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	5.00
SOIKNE PRIMER: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	11.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	1.50
Social Statistics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	1.50
Sociology.....	1.50
Descriptive Sociology. Parts I, II, and III, each.....	4.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	2.50
Universal Progress.....	2.50
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER). Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorised translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	1.00
The Ulster-Room Taine's History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNISON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Remond, and Lovel the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market. 1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humors, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....	1.25
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.50
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
The Cape Cod.....	2.00
Lectures.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada; or, A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLER (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	1.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	1.50
Light and Electricity.....	1.50
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	2.00
Forms of Water.....	2.00
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
Lessons in Electricity.....	1.50
Addresses before British Assoc. at Belfast.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	2.00
Vols. III, IV, and VI, each.....	2.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.50
Hauterings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	5.00
WHIFFLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	3.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
W. G. A. A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	1.50

ADDRESSES:

THE INDEX,

231 Washington St., Boston.

GOLD

Any worker can make $12 a day at home. Costly outfit free. Address TRUB & Co., Augusta, Maine.

MR. MILLS' LECTURES FOR THE SEASON OF '78, '79.

1. The Advances of Science in our Time: what do they promise for man?
2. The Labor Question: its present condition, and the possible solution.

CONVERSATIONAL LECTURES.

1. The Gnostic Wisdom of the East: China, India, etc.
2. The Poetic Thought and Religious Sentiment of the East.
3. Pythagoras and his Institution.

Representative Men of our Time: 1. Huxley; 2. Max Müller; 3. Emerson.

For terms, etc., please address CHAS. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.

TO THE AMERICAN PATRONSCHOICE LITERATURE.

We have made arrangements with Messrs. CHAPMAN & HALL, London, England, for the right to publish an American Edition of

The Fortnightly Review,

Edited by JOHN MORLEY,

and are now publishing this celebrated Monthly Magazine, from a special duplicate set of stereotype plates, which are forwarded from England so promptly as to enable us to produce each month, not only an exact facsimile of this able Review, but to publish it almost at the same time the original is from England. It is in every respect equal to the London issue, at about half the original price. This effort will place in the hands of American readers the freshest utterances of leading thinkers on live issues with a promptitude unequalled. The comments of a large number of the best European thinkers on Science, Philosophy, Literature, Politics, and Miscellaneous Matters of general interest cannot fail to be appreciated and encouraged by thoughtful American readers. The following are a few of the contributors:—

Matthew Arnold, Alfred R. Wallace, Herbert Spencer, Frederick Harrison, Goldwin Smith, Prof. Tyndall, Right Hon. Lyon Playfair, Prof. Huxley, Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Prof. Darwin, Lionel A. Talmage, Author of Supernatural Religion, M. E. Grant Duff, M.P., Sir John Lubbock, Hon. Robert Lowe, Anthony Trollope, Leslie Stephen, T. Adolphus Trollope, John Morley (the Editor), Sir H. S. Maine, G. H. Lewes, Sir David Wedderburn,

AND NUMEROUS OTHERS.

Subscription Price, $5.00 per Year. Published every month by the ROSE-BELFORD PUBLISHING CO., 60 York Street, Toronto, Ont.

RADICAL LIBERAL LECTURES

By B. F. Underwood,

FOR THE FALL AND WINTER OF 1878-9.

1. The Theory of Evolution.
2. Darwinism Defined and Defended.
3. The Philosophy of Herbert Spencer.
4. The Genesis and Nature of Religion.
5. Modern Scientific Materialism.
6. Natural Selection versus Design in Nature.
7. An Hour with German Thinkers.
8. Intuition and Instinct Viewed in the Light of Modern Psychology.
9. The Pros and Cons of a Future Life.
10. Is there a Personal Intelligent Deity?

11. The Demands of Liberalism Pertaining to State Secularization.
12. Monogamic Marriage versus the Vagaries of Free Love.
13. Woman: Her Past and Present; Her Rights and Wrongs.
14. Religious Revivals: Their Causes and Consequences.
15. The Struggles and Triumphs of Free-thought in Europe and America.
16. Issues of the Age.
17. Buddha and Buddhism.
18. Ancient Egypt: Its Laws, Customs, and Religion.
19. The French Revolution: Its Causes and Consequences.
20. Crimes and Cruelties of Superstition.
21. Cook and other "Scientific" Annihilators of Materialism Reviewed.
22. Paine the Pioneer of Free-thought in America.

23. A Liberal's Answer to the Question, "If not Christianity, What?"
24. Christianity: To what Extent has it Helped or Hindered Civilization?
25. Jesus: All that is Known and what is Guessed about Him.
26. A True Man Better than a True Christian.
27. Judaism and Christianity Outgrowths of Paganism.
28. Science versus the Bible.
29. The Origin and History of the Bible. (From one to six lectures.)
30. The Four Gospels Unhistorical and Unreliable.
31. Evidences for the Divinity of the Bible Examined.
32. Popular Assumptions Regarding the Bible and Christianity.
33. Bible Prophecies Falsified by the Facts of History.
34. Popular Objections to Liberalism Considered.

For terms, etc., address B. F. UNDERWOOD, THORNDIKE, MASS.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT BETWEENReligion and Science,

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER. For sale at this office. Price—One dollar and seventy-five cents. Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

WEST NEWTONEnglish and Classical School.

The twenty-fifth school year of this Family and Day School for both sexes will begin WEDNESDAY, Sept. 19, 1877. For Circular and information apply to NATH'L T. ALLEN, West Newton, Mass.

NEW BOOK BY INGERSOLL.

Contains his latest lectures on "The Ghosts," "Liberty of Man, Woman, and Child," "Centennial Oration," "Farming in Illinois," and others. Handsomely bound in one volume. Price $1.50. Also

THE GODS AND OTHER LECTURES.

Same style. Price $1.25. Sent post-paid on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY—PRICE TWO CENTS.THE SECULAR REVIEW.

EDITED BY CHARLES WATTS.

The SECULAR REVIEW is the leading organ of Secularism, and each week has Special Articles on Theological, Social, Scientific, and Political Subjects. Its distinctive features are the advocacy of Constructive Secularism, and the dissemination of useful information on all questions which affect the welfare of the people. Letters are inserted in its "OPEN COLUMN" from all who are courteous in the expression of their views; while a special department is allotted for "NOTES AND QUERIES."

The Contributors to the SECULAR REVIEW comprise the principal advocates of Secularism, including its founder, G. J. Holyoake.

CHARLES WATTS, Publisher, 84 Fleet Street, London, E.C.

THE INDEX IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by international P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston, U.S.A.

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD.GREAT THROUGH LINE AND UNITED STATES MAIL ROUTE.

The attention of the travelling public is respectfully invited to some of the merits of this great highway, in the confident assertion and belief that no other line can offer equal inducements as a route of through travel. In stands confessedly at the head of American railways. The track is double the entire length of the line, of steel rails laid on heavy oak ties, which are embedded in a foundation of rock ballast eighteen inches in depth. All bridges are of iron or stone, and built upon the most approved plans. Its passenger cars, while eminently safe and substantial, are at the same time models of comfort and elegance.

CONSTRUCTION AND EQUIPMENT THE PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD

THE SAFETY APPLIANCES

In use on this line well illustrate the far-seeing and liberal policy of its management, in accordance with which the utility only of an improvement and not its cost has been the question of consideration. Among many may be noticed

The Block System of Safety Signals, Janney Coupler, Buffer, and Platform, The Wharton Patent Switch, and the Westinghouse Air-Brake, forming in conjunction with a perfect double track and road-bed a combination of safeguards against accidents which have rendered them practically impossible

Pullman Palace Cars

are run on all Express Trains from New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington, to Chicago, Cincinnati, Louisville, Indianapolis, and St. Louis.

WITHOUT CHANGE,

and to all the principal points in the far West and South with but one change of cars. Connections are made in Union Depots, and are assured to all important points. The Scenery of the Pennsylvania Route is admitted to be unsurpassed in the world for grandeur, beauty, and variety. Superior refreshment facilities are provided. Employees are courteous and attentive, and it is an inevitable result that a trip by the Pennsylvania Railroad must form

A PLEASING AND MEMORABLE EXPERIENCE.

Tickets for sale at the lowest rates at the Ticket Offices of the Company in all important cities and towns.

FRANK THOMSON, L. P. FARMER, General Manager, General Passenger Agent, C. S. HALDEMAN, New England Agent, 203 and 205 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 80 CENTS. Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the fine list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

THE INDEX AS AN ADVERTISING MEDIUM.

Testimony of one who has tried it.

FLORENCE, Iowa, Jan. 5, 1878. ... THE INDEX is the best advertising medium which I have tried. ... E. C. WALKER.

THE NEWBURY STREET SCHOOL

will be re-opened for its twelfth year October 2. Address

Miss M. S. DEVEREUX,

34 NEWBURY STREET, BOSTON.

Pupils received into the family under the special care of Miss M. S. Devereux and Miss Lucretia P. Hale.

References: Rev. Dr. Orville Dewey, Sheffield, Mass.; Rev. E. E. Hale, Rev. J. F. Clarke, Hon. Nathaniel Silsbee, Dr. Oliver W. Holmes, Mr. Henry E. Raymond, Boston; Prof. Benjamin Pierce, Cambridge, Mass.; Mr. A. C. Richards, Irvington, N.Y.; Mr. H. R. Blahop, New York.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF O. B. FROTHINGHAM, T. W. HIGGINSON, W. J. POTTER, W. H. SPENCER, F. W. NEWMAN, CHAS. VOYSEY, A. W. STEVENS, R. H. RANNEY, F. E. ABBOT.

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

A REMARKABLE BOOK.A MODERN SYMPOSIUM.*SUBJECTS:*The Soul and Future Life.

By Mr. Frederic Harrison, Hon. Roden Noel, R. H. Hutton, Lord Selborne, Prof. Huxley, Canon Barry, Lord Blachford, Mr. W. R. Greg, Rev. Baldwin Brown, and Dr. W. G. Ward.

The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief.

By Sir James Fitz-James Stephen, Prof. Clifford, Lord Selborne, Rev. Mr. Martineau, Mr. Frederic Harrison, the Dean of St. Paul's, the Duke of Argyll, Dr. W. G. Ward, Prof. Huxley, and R. H. Hutton.

1 Vol. Crown, 8vo. Cloth, neat, $1.25.

This volume contains the scholarly utterances of the leading scientists and philosophers of Great Britain on two of the most important subjects of the century. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass., for

TRACTS.

- I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 20 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.
- II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Welsch.
- III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.
- IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.
- V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Fair Lectures, Feb. 18 and 20, 1876.)
- VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles E. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II, III, IV, V, VI, 10 cts. each; ten for 90 cts.; one hundred, $5.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 50 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS FOR 1872, '73, '74, '75, '76, and '77, Five cents each.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLETT & Co., Portland, Maine.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth 15 cts. free. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

SINGLE BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

for the years 1871, 1872, 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877 (Vols. 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8) can be furnished on application at this Office. PRICES—volumes for 1871 and 1872, $2.50; volumes for 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, $3.00. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS OF THENATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

1. EQUAL RIGHTS IN RELIGION. Contains an Historical Account of the Liberal League movement; a full Report of the Centennial Congress of Liberals at Philadelphia, July 1 to 4, 1876, with Essays by F. E. Abbot, James Parton, B. F. Underwood, and others; the Constitution of the National Liberal League, List of Charter Members, etc., etc. Octavo, pp. 190. Cloth, $1.00; paper, 75 cents.
2. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES, adopted at Philadelphia, July 4, 1876. With Resolutions of the Congress, Extracts from Letters by Distinguished Citizens, Constitution of the National Liberal League, etc. Adapted for gratuitous distribution by friends of the cause. Octavo, 24 pp. Single copies, 3 cts.; 10 copies, 15 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.
3. PRIVILEGE FOR NONE—JUSTICE FOR ALL. Contains the N. L. L. Platform and Resolutions adopted at Rochester, Oct. 26, 1877, full information how to organize Local Leagues, etc. Twenty-page tract for the use of workers. Single copies, 5 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.

ADDRESS

National Liberal League, 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON.

SEND ONE DOLLAR

For a handsome Certificate of Membership as an ANNUAL MEMBER of the NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

For TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS, a still larger Certificate of Membership as a LIFE MEMBER,

Will be sent to any person; and individuals cannot render more efficient assistance to the National Liberal League than by making themselves Annual or Life Members of it.

The following extracts from the Constitution of the National Liberal League explain the privileges of membership:—

ARTICLE IV.—Any person who shall pay one dollar into the treasury shall be entitled to a certificate, signed by the President and Secretary, as an annual member of the National Liberal League. Any person who shall pay twenty-five dollars or more into the treasury shall be entitled to a similar certificate as a life-member. All the persons present as members at the Centennial Congress of Liberals, at which this Constitution was adopted, are hereby declared permanent or charter-members of the National Liberal League.

ARTICLE V.—... All charter-members and life-members of the National Liberal League, and all duly accredited delegates from local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution, shall be entitled to seats and votes in the Annual Congress. Annual members of the National Liberal League shall be entitled to seats, but not to votes, in the Annual Congress.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE 231 Washington Street, Boston.

ORGANIZE! CHARTERS

For Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues, conferring the privilege of representation by five delegates in the Annual Congress of the National Liberal League, will be promptly sent on application, according to the following provisions of Constitution of the same:—

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ARTICLE XIII.—The Board of Directors shall have authority, as often as they receive a written application signed by ten or more persons and accompanied by ten dollars, to issue a charter for the formation of a local auxiliary Liberal League.

ARTICLE XV.—Local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized under charters issued by the Board of Directors shall be absolutely independent in the administration of their own local affairs. The effect of their charters shall be simply to unite them in cordial fellowship and efficient co-operation of the freest kind with the National Liberal League and with other local Leagues. All votes of the Annual Congress, and all communications of the Board of Directors, shall possess no more authority or influence over them than lies in the intrinsic wisdom of the words themselves.

ARTICLE XVI.—Every local auxiliary Liberal League organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution shall be entitled to send its President and Secretary and three other members as delegates to the Annual Congress.

These Charters are beautifully printed on the best of paper. Adorned with the handsome Seal of the National Liberal League, they will, if tastefully framed, make a fine ornament for any hall.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE 231 Washington Street Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 9.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, NOV. 7, 1878.

WHOLE No. 463.

LIBERAL LEAGUE PLATFORM

For the Presidential Election of 1880,

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.
2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.
3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.
4. N. B.—The nomination of candidates upon the above platform was postponed to a future Congress of the National Liberal League.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or sowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

GLIMPSES.

GAMBETTA sees clearly the great and growing peril of the claims of Clericalism, and the necessity of upholding the secular State in its prior claims upon the citizen. Says the Tribune: "Eighteen months ago, when the Italian Ministry were striving to bind the clergy hand and foot by means of the Mancini bill, Gambetta demanded the introduction of a similar act in France. At Romans he declares that it is in the Church that the spirit of the past takes refuge and gathers strength. He inveighs against 'the spirit of the Vatican and of the Syllabus, which is nothing but the abuse of ignorance, with the purpose of enslaving.' He calls for the abolition of indulgences and privileges, which 'form half the power of these priests, who live on public credulity alone.' He maintains that young men who are being educated for the priesthood must serve their time in the army, and that obligatory service must be made a reality without respect to vocations. Not only will seminary students be forced to go into camp and learn to be soldiers, but priests will have to leave their parish work and train with the reserves. A body of two hundred and fifty thousand men employed in or training for the service of the Catholic Church will thus be exposed to the burdens of military service and to the temptations of barrack life, not only in time of war but during years of peace and prosperity. This seems to be the leading feature of the Republican policy which the leader of the party has outlined." This account of the matter is colored by the Tribune's usual prejudice in favor of "the Church." But one may well ask by what right two hundred and fifty thousand young men evade duties which all others must share. "Privilege for none—justice for all."

WHAT THE Independent says in this paragraph is exactly what the American people ought to take to heart: "The Protestants in some of the manufacturing towns in Connecticut are complaining that the Catholics, through their control in school-boards, are in effect turning the public school into an instrumentality for the propagation of their peculiar religious faith, at the expense of the general public. In Waterbury, one of the most thriving manufacturing towns in the State, a Catholic priest is a member of the school-board; and distinctively Roman Catholic schools, in which all the teachers and all the children are Catholics, and in which Catholicism is taught as a part of school instruction, are established and conducted by this board. The same fact is said to exist in other manufacturing towns of the State. This, of course, is offensive to Protestants, and ought to be to all good citizens. It presents the anomaly of a public school, supported by general taxation, yet practically belonging to and managed in the interests of a religious sect. Bad and anti-American as it is, we do not see that those Protestants who insist that the public school shall be both religious and Protestant in its character can reasonably object to it where the Catholics have the majority. It is simply applying their own principle in support of Catholicism; and, if the principle is a good one at all, it is just as good when a Catholic applies it as it is when applied by the Protestant. We object to it, no matter who applies it. It is no better in the hands of Protestants than in those of Catholics. The public school should not be worked in the interests of either, but in those of the general community, irrespectively of the peculiar tenets of any religious sect; and then no sect will have any just cause of complaint."

COMMENTING on the cipher despatches unearthed by the Tribune, the Nation unmercifully pricks a bubble of superstition blown by the former journal: "The Tribune says that their failure was owing to the direct interposition of Providence. In one of the cipher despatches four words were missing which made it unintelligible, causing a delay,—or, as the Tribune puts it: 'But if, in the secret purpose of any trusted and sworn member of that board of three, upon whose action depended the fate of forty millions of people, there lurked a thought of treachery and crime, the God of Nations saved this land from ruin and dishonor, for his lightnings refused, until it was too late, to bear intelligibly the shameful order to consummate the crime, and held their secret until the danger had passed.' We cannot believe, however, that such astute politicians as 'Zach' and 'Bill' Chandler in their dealings with Dennis and McLin trusted altogether in the God of Nations. We fear we shall never know precisely what saved us from ruin and dishonor until we know what the Republican agents did between the 30th of November and the 5th of December, 1876, and get a glimpse of the secret despatches on their side. We know from their own appearance before the Potter Committee what manner of men the Florida counters were; that some of them, at least, were marketable the cipher telegrams show, and we therefore have our curiosity roused as to the precise means employed by the God of Nations to make them give the Presidency to the right man, and yet satisfy the longings of their corrupt nature for money or goods. That anything in the nature of a miracle, such as change in the quality of electricity or of iron wires, was resorted to for this purpose we refuse to believe. We feel quite sure no such tremendous exercise of power was needed to overrule Dennis or McLin for good in any required direction."

THIS is what Gambetta said at Romans on the eighteenth of last September: "The clerical question—that is to say, the question of the relations of the Church and the State—keeps all the other questions in suspense. Here in the Church it is that the spirit of the past takes refuge and gathers strength. I denounce the ever greater danger society runs from the Ultramontane spirit,—the spirit of the Vatican, of the Syllabus, which is nothing but the abuse of ignorance with the purpose of enslaving. I have spoken of the relations of the Church and the State; I am perfectly aware that to be correct I should have said of the churches; but from the governmental and national point of view it is only Ultramontanism which persists in opposition to the State. The clerical spirit endeavors to filtrate into everything,—into the army and the magistracy; and there is this that is peculiar to it: it is always when the fortune of the country is falling that Jesuitism rises. Far be it from me to wish to put shackles on liberty. I am an obstinate partisan of liberty of conscience. But the ministers of religion have duties to the State, and what we exact is the fulfilment of these duties. Apply the laws—all the laws—and abolish indulgences. If the law is applied, order will be restored to France, without persecution, by simply continuing the traditions which prevailed from the aurora of the Revolution in 1789 till the last glimmer of the Revolution in 1848. They were not abandoned till in December the mitrailleurs, and those who blest the mitrailleurs, combined. Indulgences must be abolished. Privileges form half the power of these men. They live on public credulity alone. Yes, every one must be subject to the common law. Obligatory service must be made a reality. Vocations must only be allowed after the first of all vocations—that of serving the Fatherland—has been fulfilled. As to public instruction, it must be the passionate solicitude of your legislators, senators, deputies, and public servants. It is their duty to make the people of France the most cultivated and best educated of all peoples. To attain this result, again, the enterprises of clericalism must be thwarted. The reasoning power of our children must be exercised; only healthy and safe notions must be deposited in their minds, in order to accelerate the progress of the public mind. Give them notions of our public law, teach them their duties as citizens, make them not illiterate, but sensible and patriotic men."

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE OF AMERICA. OFFICERS.

President.	FRANCIS E. ABBOT.....Boston, Mass.
Vice-Presidents.	HON. E. P. HURLBUT.....Albany, N. Y.
	HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL.....Boston, Mass.
	HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES.....St. Louis, Mo.
	HON. HENRY BOOTH.....Chicago, Ill.
	HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN.....Irvington, Ind.
	HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT.....Boston, Mass.
	MR. O. B. FROTHINGHAM.....New York
	MR. WM. J. POTTER.....New Bedford, Mass.
	MR. R. P. HALLOWELL.....Boston, Mass.
	MR. JAMES PARTON.....Newburyport, Mass.
	MR. F. SCHUENEMANN-POTT.....San Francisco, Cal.
	HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE.....Providence, R. I.
	REV. M. J. SAYRE.....Boston, Mass.
	RABBI B. FELSENTHAL.....Chicago, Ill.
	REV. W. H. SPENCER.....Sparta, Wis.
	MR. SAMUEL L. HILL.....Florence, Mass.
	MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH.....Detroit, Mich.
	MR. KARL HEINZEN.....Editor of "Der Pioneer," Boston.
	MR. HORACE SEAYER.....Editor of the "Investigator," Boston.
	RABBI ISAAC M. WISE.....Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
	MR. MORITZ KELLINGER.....Editor of "Jewish Times," New York.
	REV. ROBERT COLLIER.....Chicago, Ill.
	COL. ROBERT O. INGERSOLL.....Peoria, Ill.
	DR. T. L. BROWN.....Birmingham, N. Y.
	ROD. E. S. MCCORMICK.....Franklin, Pa.
	ELDER F. W. EVANS.....Mount Lebanon, N. Y.
	MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON.....New York City.
	Mrs. AMY POST.....Rochester, N. Y.
	Mrs. ELIZABETH OADY STANTON.....Trenton, N. J.
	Miss SALLIE HOLLEY.....Lottsburgh, Va.
	JOSEPH McDONOUGH.....Albany, N. Y.
	RABBI MAX SCHLESINGER.....Albany, N. Y.

Secretary.	W. H. HAMLEN.....231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.
Assistant Secretary.	Miss JANE P. TITCOMB.....142 Chandler St., Boston.
Treasurer.	J. A. J. WILCOX.....3 Famberton Square, Boston.
Board of Directors.	J. A. J. WILCOX.....B. I. GREEN.
	F. E. ABBOT.....O. D. B. MILLS.
	D. G. CRANDON.

Executive Committee.	Alabama.....J. R. HALL, Selma.
Arizona.....JOHN A. HENRY, Monticello.
California.....L. HATON, San Francisco.
Colorado.....DAVID T. HEALS, Grenada.
Connecticut.....GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
Delaware.....JOSEPH D. GOBLT, Greenville.
Florida.....T. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprise.
Georgia.....DR. A. A. BELL, Madison.
Illinois.....DR. A. G. HUMPHREY, Galesburg.
Indiana.....N. D. WATKINS, Xenia.
Iowa.....J. O. MICHELER, Adet.
Kansas.....JOHN S. FARNSWORTH, Fort Scott.
Kentucky.....R. S. CLARK, Wilsonville.
Louisiana.....EMERSON BENTLEY, New Orleans.
Maine.....DR. W. H. BROWN, Bangor.
Maryland.....J. S. RUSSELL, New Market.
Massachusetts.....W. H. SAYWARD, Boston.
Michigan.....KARL SCHUMMANN, Detroit.
Minnesota.....J. H. ASSETT, Minneapolis.
Missouri.....R. FETTERSON, St. Louis.
Montana.....W. E. CUPPLAND, Lincoln.
Nebraska.....V. G. BARRETT, White Rock.
Nevada.....FRANCIS W. ORVIN, Pahrump.
New Hampshire.....C. D. B. MILLS (Chairman), Syracuse.
New Jersey.....J. W. THORNE, Warren.
New York.....E. D. STARK, Cleveland.
Ohio.....SAMUEL COLT, Hamboldt Basin.
Oregon.....W. H. BALDWIN, Eugene.
Pennsylvania.....GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
Rhode Island.....P. W. FULLER, Columbia.
South Carolina.....DR. E. H. PRICE, Chattanooga.
Tennessee.....DR. L. J. RUSSELL, Harrisville.
Texas.....R. L. MACDONALD, North Bennington.
Vermont.....L. SPAULDING, Norfolk.
Virginia.....DR. A. M. DENT, Weston.
Washington.....ROBERT O. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
Wisconsin.....DR. P. WILCOX, Yankton.
Wyoming.....DOOLITTLE, Washington.
	W. FERGUSON, Provo City.
	NORMAN S. PORTER.

Finance Committee.	D. G. CRANDON, Chairman.....Chelsea, Mass.
	Mrs. SARAH B. OTIS.....137 Warren Avenue, Boston.
	HARLAN P. HYDE.....231 Washington St., Boston.

CHUNDER SEN'S OPINION OF CHRIST.—We sincerely wish, sometimes, that Christ had been an Indian instead of a Jew. At the present day there is not a Hindu down whose cheeks tears do not copiously flow at hearing of the heavenly love and purity of Rama Chandra. His exploits are sung, his name is uttered, his mercies remembered in every village and family of the country. The great Rama has mixed himself up with the blood of the people; and, whether one be living or dead, Rama Chandra is the consolation, hope, and salvation to all. A prophet like Christ would not have fared worse. A devout bhakta would have shed rivers of tears as he pronounced the name of that sweet prophet. Creeds and formulas would not have come to disfigure him, and there would have been no sects to kindle the flame of persecution which has burnt up the very love which Christ came to preach. In India Rama has left us no bitter legacy of dogmas. The only thing we have inherited from him is his name, his life, his triumph. So it would have been if Christ had been with us. We should have devoted an epic to his glory, sung his name through every city and village, comforted the weak in their sorrows and the dying on their death-bed, remembered him in every act of daily life, and died finding consolation and strength in his holy example. We wish, indeed, that Christ had been born in India.—Indian Mirror.

THE Scientific American says: "During the Centennial summer samples of air were collected on various occasions, upon the Exhibition grounds at Philadelphia and in the different buildings; also in this city, in Brooklyn, Hoboken, and on many of the Adirondack Mountains, with a view to transmitting them to the chemists of 1870, to determine whether the earth's atmosphere is undergoing change. That the atmosphere has undergone enormous changes since the earlier geological ages is beyond a doubt. The present question is whether such changes are still slowly going on, and what their nature may be. The ordinary statement that the air has an invariable composition is not strictly true, since samples of air collected at different times and in different places are never found to be absolutely identical. The difference may be slight; but an apparently insignificant decrease in the percentage of oxygen becomes of grave importance when the deficiency, as is usually the case, is made up of less beneficial elements."

Free Religion.

THE ORDINATION ADDRESS OF FREDERIC A. HINCKLEY.

The Free Religious Society of Providence held its first service for the season Sunday last. After the singing of a hymn and the reading of selections from Emerson and Weiss, by Mr. A. W. Stevens, of Boston, Mr. B. A. Ballou, President of the Society, addressed the Resident Minister elect as follows:—

MR. FREDERIC A. HINCKLEY:—
I am instructed by the Free Religious Society of Providence to officially recognize you as our Resident Minister; and we therefore ordain and install you as such, in accordance with the principles and usage of our religious fellowship.

To which Mr. Hinckley responded:—
MR. PRESIDENT AND MEMBERS OF THE FREE RELIGIOUS SOCIETY OF PROVIDENCE:—

It is with no formal ceremony, but with the earnest purpose of the heart, that I here and now assume the trust you have tendered me. I assume it with a sincere desire to consecrate my best efforts to the service it implies. I assume it in the spirit of liberty. I assume it in the spirit of brotherly love. And may all the good influences which the past or the present can bring bless this, our united effort, to carry the principles of a natural, free, and practical religion to the souls of men.

After the singing of another hymn, Mr. Hinckley delivered the following address:—

THE WORK OF A FREE RELIGIOUS SOCIETY.

Friends,—The occasion dictates the theme to-day. Summoned by you to service in a field as yet but little tilled, where the rules of guidance are few and the opportunities many, it seems natural that we should pause a moment on the boundary, to survey the work to be done; for a clear conception of its character and hearty cooperation in its performance are the most vital prerequisites of success.

The first thought which comes to me is of the difference between the duties I now assume and those of a minister in the churches. The Catholic, the Evangelical, even the so-called liberal clergyman is an official. He wears in spirit, if not in fact, the robes of office; he is the representative of an ecclesiastical dynasty, of a creed of greater or less sternness, of a close corporation. His position commands for him respect, independent of anything he really is or does. Whatever he may be individually, the moment he enters the pulpit, he is expected to conform to certain customs, which have essentially become laws in church government. He is to read selections from the Bible of only one of the world's many religions, and is not to expound even them in the clear light of reason; he is to use certain pet phrases which are often made to cover a multitude of sins; and he is to guard and shave down and pair off his thought, to the end that it may never fall in seeming respect for the system whose willing servant he is supposed to be, but whose slave he often is. Thus he must produce from forty to fifty discourses annually, with his brain in chains, and keep the Christian institution under his charge in vigorous condition on a mixed diet of fettered thought, superstitious reverence for meaningless forms, and a shallow, not to say, lazy conformity to custom.

But I have not come here to be an administrator upon the estate of the past. You neither confer, nor would I accept, any robes or authority of office. The only respect which I have either the right or desire to claim from you is that which you are bound to give to honest thinking and honest living. I could not if I would, I would not if I could, appeal to any other standard of judgment. When I occupy this desk, my first and highest duty will be to speak, not what you think, but what I think; not what the Christian system may approve, but what it seems to me universal religion, including the good in all systems, approves; not what is in the interests of a sect, a social condition, a race, but what conforms to the truth which is greater than all sects, underlies all social conditions, and is the life and hope of all races. In doing this part of my work, I am not limited to our own Bible; I may, I must, seek the light which is in other scriptures, ancient and modern. I must recognize the fact that the world has had many saviors, and is yet to have many more. Nor is this all. Surrounded, as we all are, by the only materialism much to be feared—the greed for office, for honor, and for gold—it will be a part of my duty to emphasize the ideal, and to show, if possible, that whatever may be in store for man hereafter, be it personal or impersonal immortality, or total annihilation, there is a life of the spirit, a life which means the subordination of the sensual, the cunning, the grasping to the pure, the just, the divine, which can and ought to be lived here and now. When I see a practice which to me seems immoral, a social condition which to me seems unjust, a national act or relation which to me seems wrong, it will be my duty to say so. You know me well enough to know that you have not invited a man here who believes much in metaphysical dreaming. When we say we are for truth and justice, I am sure we are agreed in endorsing Emerson's statement, that "Truth is the summit of being, and justice its application to affairs." Nor is there serious danger in being a little aggressive. There are those who fear so much from the rough waters of free thought and free speech that they never set sail. It seems to me the spray of agitation may have a healthy effect upon the finest organization. Honest thought freely spoken is just what we need. Honest thought suppressed is to-day the curse of the Church. It begets insincerity, hypocrisy, and all manner of sins. The very essence of our movement, the distinguishing characteristic of this platform, is its freedom. I hope, however, I may "never forget the prudence which should temper firmness"; I hope I may never fail to recognize the difference between liberty and license; I hope I may always practice that real virtue which consists in cherishing what the great declaration calls "a decent respect for the opinions of mankind." The animating spirit of the Free Religious movement is not the same as that of the old and some of the present reform movements. In the anti-slavery days, much hard language was used, sometimes of a very personal nature. It was a hand-to-hand contest, and there was little opportunity for careful weighing of words. No one need regret it; but the method then so prevalent is not exactly our method. However bad a man's opinion may be, we believe he has the same right to it, so he be honest, that we have to our own. We believe in knocking down the opinion; we do not believe in knocking down the man. We would speak the truth as it is given us to see it, but we would speak it in the spirit of love. I hardly need remind you, friends, that while we all have much in common, the body of Free Religious people was never yet seen in which there were not great and often very vital differences of opinion. Indeed, there is not one of us who would believe there was much free religion in an assembly where these differences were wanting. The lesson is obvious. You could not expect any one man's thought to represent you all, even if any one man could be found who could do justice to himself or to his hearers in one discourse per week the year round. And so very wisely you have arranged to hear a portion of the time from speakers from abroad. But in the selection of these, and the use of so much of the time as you have allotted to me, it may not be possible to satisfy all. I can only say, so far as I am concerned, that it will be my constant endeavor, in so far as I may conscientiously do so, to see that all the phases of your thought are represented; and to this end I not only invite, but I urge you to make suggestions and criticisms. However it may be in the Church, your representative ought not to be beyond friendly criticism, for he is neither above you nor over you, but one of you; and the friendships which such a relation will naturally beget ought to stand and be benefited by mutual criticism as well as general cooperation. So while I think the language of Burke to his Bristol electors applicable to my own little self, that you have not chosen me to be "a weathercock on the top of the edifice, exalted for my levity and versatility, and of no use but to indicate the shiftings of every fashionable gale," I nevertheless feel sincerely that there is much homely sense in the old proverb, "Many heads are better than one," and that we may all sit in reverent and equal fellowship at the feet of the only leader we can own, the one universal spirit of truth.

But the time has come in your life, as an organization, when you recognize what many thoughtful people in our movement everywhere are recognizing, that if free religion is the broad and comprehensive thing we have regarded it, it must do something more than provide weekly afternoon entertainment for the mental faculties of adults. It must consider the children and young people; for it is a simple truism to say that no movement can long survive which does not enlist the sympathies of the rising generation. More than that, every observing parent among us has seen that Sunday is a poor day for the children, unless something is provided to occupy their minds, and that in many cases the invitations constantly extended from the Sunday-schools of liberals and even Evangelical churches, accompanied with the temptation, natural and legitimate, of a desire to mingle in social enjoyment with their peers in age and tastes, lead our children into an atmosphere not such as we should select, and fill their minds with ideas far different from those which we ourselves hold very vital and dear. I have heard of a free religious mother, who hearing her children's voices after she had put them to bed one night, listened—with what astonishment you may imagine—to hear them singing with all the innocence and enthusiasm of childhood, "We are Saved by the Blood of the Crucified One." It is not strange that under such circumstances there has been a growing perception of the need, which has finally with you resulted in a demand for the application of free religious principles to the wants of the children. So we say we are trying to organize a Sunday-school, but that title gives no idea of what we wish it to be. In the first place, it is not simply a school which is purposed. Teaching according to the methods of modern evolutionary thought is, indeed, a large and valuable portion of the work to be done in it; but the wholesome influence of rational worship is distinctly recognized, and general exercises of a purifying and inspiring, and yet a plain and practical character are an essential part of what is needed. Then the associations of the term Sunday-school are such as are calculated to mislead. To the popular mind, Sunday-school means something inconceivably stupid,—an attempt to cram little brains with what they cannot understand, and the routine performance of general exercises, which if comprehended at all, undermine the reason, and ultimately crush that natural, spontaneous freedom which makes childhood so beautiful and so well-nigh omnipotent. I hope I do no injustice to the popular Sunday-school. I know its social advantages, which we have been too slow to adopt, but it undertakes to deal with some of the most tender elements of human character, and it almost without exception perverts them. In what is entitled "A Short Catechism for Young Children," claiming to contain "most of what is absolutely necessary to be known in order to salvation," and which it is said may be taught to children before they can read, may be found these questions and answers, and they are a good example of the whole book.

Q.—Who made you? Ans.—God.

Q.—Who redeemed you? Ans.—Christ.

Q.—Who sanctifies you? Ans.—The Holy Ghost.

Q.—Of what were you made? Ans.—Of dust.
Q.—What does that teach you? Ans.—To be humble and mindful of death.
Q.—For what end were you made? Ans.—To serve God.
Q.—How should you serve God? Ans.—By believing on His Son, calling on His name, and obeying His commands.

And in an appeal to the rising generation this occurs, addressed, remember, to young children, even before they can read. "Oh, think, seriously think, how deplorable is your natural estate!"

Well, that is a catechism of the old school, pernicious, utterly pernicious, from beginning to end. What do children know about redemption and sanctification? What do they know about serving God in any way, and especially in the way of such a meaningless abstraction as by believing in His Son and calling on His name? Why, friends, it occurs to me that a child born into this world of parents who have paid any regard whatever to the laws of life is already redeemed and sanctified, and that a religion which meets him with the inglorious announcement that his natural estate is deplorable is a sham and a lie.

All this, however, is being slowly but surely outgrown, and let us be thankful for it. It is the natural revolt of human nature against an inhuman belief and inhuman methods. But how is it with the more liberal text books? Take the Unitarian, for example. Running through them all can be seen a direct attempt to teach the child that Jesus was in some special and exceptional sense a Savior, and that the Church and its forms are divinely ordained. Worse than that, the child is taught to accept on trust, as facts, certain things which the teacher himself does not and cannot know to be facts. Take such subjects as the character of God and the immortality of the soul. What right have we to fill the child's mind with our mere opinions and hopes; or, if you please, our intuitive conception about the unknowable in precisely the same tone of assured confidence that we teach him the demonstrable facts of physical and mathematical science? For that matter, why should we seek to impose upon him anything of this nature? The misconception of education so prevalent in all our systems of teaching has done nowhere such serious harm as in Sunday-schools even of the most liberal denominations. The idea has been adopted that the child's mind is a little empty vessel, and that outside parties have only to turn on the faucets of human knowledge, and let the stream run until it is full. Such a process is an outrage upon the young and growing reason everywhere, and especially so in the realm of religion. Well, that is not what we propose to do here. So far as I know, there has never been a Sunday-school text-book published which we could possibly use without violating our conscientious convictions. We start on a new basis. Our system must be one of evolution. Here stands the child before us, just brimful of inquisitiveness, full of energy, full of mental acuteness. He has hands, he has a heart, he has a head. His salvation consists infinitely more in being well employed than in believing—let me say it with all reverence—in Jesus Christ or even in God. It is not in his nature to speculate, any more than it is in the nature of the little seed just sending its tiny shoot above the soil to at once bear flower and fruit. He is to be a growth, slow, natural, sure. And we, we are to minister to that growth, to guide it towards, but never to pervert it from, its legitimate tendencies. We should respect the laws of that little mind as profoundly as Newton must have respected the law of gravitation when he saw the apple fall. So, then, if we would do a true work in education, we must study the evolution of individual minds and hearts.

How shall we, in the work we are now undertaking, do that? We need, it seems to me, to recognize at the outset that a child is a social being, a moral being, and an intellectual being. From this recognition it is easy to see that we must provide social enjoyment, endeavor to guide and strengthen character, and lead the mind in its search for knowledge. Every one may feel, and it's according to the genius of our faith to so order our arrangements that he shall feel, that he comes to our free religious school to have a rational good time; that its atmosphere is one full of cheerfulness, and that associated with it in social meetings, for games, dances, and the like, is an amount of real attractive pleasure which he would not willingly forego. I mention this first, not because it is the most important, but because it is a necessary first step toward success, and because it ministers directly to that thorough acquaintance between all connected with our movement, young and old, which is also an essential element of success. Of course it is a means, not the end. But, before we can reach the end, we must all be children together. Social enjoyment, therefore, with all that promotes it in the highest and best sense, is an important feature of our work.

We naturally desire, also, to influence for good the growing character. How shall we do that? It is claimed by many—mistakenly, as I think—that the silent influence which comes from personal contact is the only way. That it is the best way, few will question, but by no means is it the only way. To read a good book, an inspiring hymn, or to sing an elevating song, is to come into indirect contact with so much of personal character as has gone into book, hymn, and song; sometimes, too, with this advantage that books, and especially hymns and songs, may be selected which represent the highest and purest entrenchments of character, and so are far beyond the average tone of the life which created them. We have thought, therefore, that a few general exercises, joined in by old as well as young, simple in form and reverent in spirit, expressive of the loftiest human aspirations and the purest moral precepts would have a direct and powerful influence on individual character and upon the character of our movement as a whole. So we have procured a little book of songs, called The Morning Stars, by J. Villa Blake, a radical minister; and a book of selections, prose and poetical, for general exercises, originally published by a school similar to ours in another city. These books are not made up as most books of the kind are,—about one-third good and two-thirds bad or indifferent. The music of The Morning Stars is exceptionally good, and the words free from the objectionable theology which so frequently and imperceptibly asserts itself in songs and hymns. Its publisher told me that on one occasion a committee from a Universalist school bought a large number of copies of it, because of its beautiful music, but after a few days use, came back with them in great dismay, saying they could not possibly use the book, for they could find nothing about Jesus Christ in it. The name of Jesus does occur in it, and it is full of his spirit; but it has none of the qualifications calculated to make it acceptable to institutional religion. When it is remembered how far the hymns of a people lay behind their most advanced thought, I think all will agree that The Morning Stars shines with a clear and unmistakable brightness which will not lead astray. Of the little service book, let me say it is as successful in what has been kept out of it as in what has been put in. And it is said, you know, that Bryant's work, on the New York Evening Post, during the latter part of his life, was in filling the waste-basket. Certainly there is no more important part in the making up of a book or a newspaper. Well, this little book is very limited. The means of those who published it made it necessarily so, but it is choice. He must be critical indeed who can object to anything in it. It opens with an exercise to be read or repeated by the superintendent and school, designed to take the place of the prayer usually used in Sunday-schools. It is a prayer in the good sense; that is, it is the natural expression of an aspiration, a longing for something higher and better than we have yet attained. It is not a prayer in the, to many of us, objectionable sense, of being addressed to any one or of being a special appeal or plea. It looks to and aims at an inward condition rather than an outside power. Following this aspiration, if you choose so to call it—we purposely refrained from calling it by any name—come prose and poetical selections, from some of the Bibles of the world and some of our more modern prophets. These are intended for alternate readings by the superintendent and school. Their subjects will indicate somewhat their character: Noble Living, Three old Saws, Rest, A Happy Life, Brotherhood, Small Beginnings, The Fountain, Wisdom, Charity, Cheer, Nobility, Suppose, Longing; and the collection closes with a few simple lines, which again we did not name, to be repeated by the superintendent and school in place of a benediction. Of course there is room for difference of opinion as to the effect of such exercises as these; but, for one, I am strongly of the conviction that they will always prove an advantage, provided they are kept, as they always should be, reasonably spontaneous and attractive. An occasional talk by the superintendent, or by some other person selected by him, provided it be very brief and to the point, can be made to add interest and profit to the general exercises. Another feature of interest which we hope to cultivate, and one not without its moral influences, too, is that of self-government. The members of the school should, it seems to me, feel that this is an affair of their own. To accomplish this, let them elect a portion of their officers, and vote under certain limitations on questions of policy. For example, suppose they elect a secretary who shall keep a brief record, and read it each Sunday at a time in the session specially devoted to business, and a treasurer who shall hold the collections taken up each Sunday, together with any donations of money which may be received. When a social meeting is proposed, or an anniversary meeting, or a picnic, let the school vote upon it, and appoint its own committee to act with the superintendent in arranging for it. In these and many other matters constantly coming up, the hearty interest of children and young people can be enlisted by giving them a voice in the decision. I have known young people of all ages to discuss in a frank and mutually respectful but very earnest way, in a school thus governed, many a question of school management; and I believe their interest in the work they were doing was greatly increased thereby. Certainly the education derived from it for future duty in the formation and expression of opinion was of no mean value.

But what shall we teach, and how? Shall we teach about a personal God, or about the character of the great first cause, call it by what name you will? I should say never, save as in the natural development of the young mind it comes to crave knowledge concerning its origin and the origin of things. Even then we should be extremely careful to state the case just as it is—to confess that we have no positive information, and in the nature of things can have none; that we may conjecture and form our individual conceptions, but that after all they are mere conjectures; that some men have held one view, and others entirely different views; that the highest conception of which man is capable is what he usually calls God, but that whether there is such a Being, and if so, what is his character, are questions upon which mankind are not agreed, and of whose solution they must so long as they live in this world, at any rate, remain in ignorance. That is the only honest way of stating the case when it must be stated. Then the child can be left as he should be, to form his own conceptions. Nor do I conceive this to be a matter for regret. It is of infinitely more importance to teach the godlike than to teach God. Truth, justice, mercy,—we know what these are. They have not been veiled from our eyes, and it will not weigh against a man in this world or any other that he seeks truth, does justice, and loves mercy, but knows not the Author of his being. Brimstone won't burn for such men as it did once.

Shall we teach the doctrine of a future life? I should say no, again. Simply when it becomes necessary, but not before, represent the case as it is. Say that here again we trench upon the unknowable; that men differ, too, about that, some thinking they know there is a life beyond, and some say they know there is not. Say what is the truth, that it cannot be demonstrated either way beyond dispute, but that most people and races have ever hoped for a new form of life after what we call death; and that the hope which to many of us has seemed an intuitive faith may not be without its significance.

Is there, then, nothing left to teach? Why, I had almost said everything is left! If there be a God, as I believe, but cannot demonstrate, I am sure he will be better pleased to have me apply myself to the duty he has placed next me, than in wandering in dreamy speculations into realms I know not of. If there be a future life, in some form or other, as I also believe, but cannot demonstrate, I am sure I shall be better prepared for it if I earnestly and contentedly live my life here and now. If there is any one thing which seems to me hinted by Nature, by every faculty and circumstance of our being, it is that we are denizens of mother earth, and our chief duty is to consider her affairs. As Pope has interpreted it, "The proper study of mankind is man." The broadest possible culture of humanity—that is our end and aim, is it not?

Now it has seemed to me that, with this purpose kept constantly in view, we need to enter upon such class or group work as follows:—

1st. The comparative study of religions. There should be an opportunity for all wishing it, and all should wish it sooner or later, to obtain a reasonably correct idea of each of the great religious systems of the world, and their relation to each other. Few will desire to make this branch of human knowledge an exhaustive study, nor can many do so with profit; but a general idea of each system and its place in the world's history is desirable, and its acquisition may be made easy and attractive to young men and women from eighteen or twenty upward.

2d. An elementary knowledge of social science and political economy is invaluable, and directly in the line of our work. The acquirement of this, too, may be made practicable and attractive. How men live together, the principles of trade, the laws of productive and distributive industry,—in a word, the science of society, presented not in the way of advancing pet theories, but giving as settled principles only such as are universally accepted, and where there are two or more sides, stating each with judicial impartiality—what more important feature in religious education can there be than that? This group is well adapted, is it not? to young men and women from say fifteen years upward.

3d. Popular biography. The lives of the great and good of the past and present can be made an exceedingly interesting and profitable study between the ages of ten and fifteen, or thereabouts. Take some of the names in our own history: for example, Washington, Jefferson, Sumner, Franklin, Morse, Burritt, and the like; the contemplation of such character as these possessed, under skillful treatment, can hardly fail to ennoble the whole of life.

4th. For children ranging, perhaps, from eight to ten and twelve, or even older, there is the great realm of natural science. And how easily the little folks, even when they can but just run and play, take to this realm. One member of this group finds discarded birds' nests; another has been to the beach, and picked up a pocketful of pretty stones and shells; another has been gathering wild or garden flowers; another has a piece of tin-foil which can be made to sing; and so on ad infinitum. Why, what a world of texts they all have in their keeping! Very slowly but very surely a student of science, who has not forgotten how to be a child with children,—who, like all successful teachers, prefers to study with them rather than lecture to them,—will find the youngest minds passing from the simple to the complex in a way that will be a constant surprise.

5th. The youngest children, those who are just passing from babyhood, the smallest, but by no means least important element in our undertaking. They need to be taken, after the close of the general exercises, into a room by themselves, and, under the lead of some one who understands and cannot help loving childhood, taught simple songs and games such as are familiar to Kindergartners, and such as a good Kindergarten can invent and develop indefinitely.

And 6th. The adults, even the oldest of us, shall we not find the "Conversational Group" proposed for us a mutually helpful thing? We are needed in the general exercises of the school; and, after they are over, we can pass to this group and spend from thirty to forty minutes or more in considering such topics as may be of interest and profit. Such a company of adults has been maintained in a movement similar to ours, and there is every reason to believe it will be successful with us; successful, I mean, not simply in point of numbers, but of real, substantial results. These class or group lessons, together with an occasional general lesson for the entire school, cover the plan for special teaching so far as it has been developed; but it can be extended indefinitely, as there shall be a demand for special branches of study.

I have very briefly, and I know very imperfectly, hinted at the work we propose doing in our school; but in truth it cannot be fully foretold. It will grow upon our hands, and we shall need to adapt our methods to the circumstances of the case as they arise. Do not hesitate, friends, any or all of you, to attend our school sessions, and to suggest to me improvements, if any occur to you. It is not an iron system which we are inaugurating. It is pliable, and, so far as I am concerned, will ever be kept so. No method of education, secular or religious, can be in the highest degree successful otherwise. I think you will agree with me that what we propose is not merely a new Sunday-school after the old type, it is a movement essentially unique in its character, and must ultimately be judged by its own merits and defects, and not by any name it bears, or any power of wealth or ecclesiastical history which stands behind it. And when we remember that we are doing this work, not simply for our own children, though that should be inducement enough, but that in and through it we are making an effort to solve a problem of general and increasing interest, ought we not to resolve to make it as thorough and complete as our capacities will permit? I am sure that if we realize its importance, we shall not hesitate to do so.

I ought to say something of our proposed way of using the fourth Sunday of each month—the meeting for discussion or conversation. At this meeting it is designed to have a paper or papers read by members of the society, presenting one or both sides of some subject of interest, and to follow it or them with general conversation. I see the word conversation rather than discussion, because it seems to me more in accord with the spirit which should characterize this meeting. In the latter, the aim too often is to say smart things and to trip each other up. In the former, it is by a friendly comparison of notes to arrive at the real and substantial truth. If we all shun the spirit of mere discussion, and adopt the conversational method, I feel sure that this experiment will not be the least successful one of our movement.

One word more. We have not fulfilled our mission here when we have provided entertainment and instruction for ourselves and for our children. We are members of society, and citizens of a State and nation; to these we owe a duty not only as individuals, but as free-religious organizations. Free religion has a word for every relation in life. It is our duty to voice that word. This movement can be, may I not say it should be? a recognized power on the side of social purity and universal justice. Whatever difference of opinion there may be concerning methods,—and there always will be very great difference,—I for one feel that in the face of impurity or injustice of any kind whatsoever there should be nothing equivocal in the attitude of free religion. It needs not a microscope to read the clear handwriting of liberty, and she it is who sets for us our copy. More than that, friends, we ought to hold ourselves above prejudices; we should aim to represent nothing less than humanity. Any law or custom which makes a distinction on account of color of the skin, of wealth, of sex, of social position,—may I not say it is obnoxious to all free-religious eyes? Are we not agreed in demanding the total separation of Church and State, equality of rights and duties for all, and sober, virtuous living? Well, that is an anomaly in the religious world. No church ever took such a position as that without causing an earthquake, and perhaps being itself buried in the ruins. The Church has encouraged profession at the expense of practice; it has divorced religion from morality. If there is any one thing for which we stand more than for any other, it is their indissoluble union. Free religion means nothing, if it does not mean a morality which will not forge paper and appropriate trust-funds; it means nothing, if it does not mean ultimately the abolition of tricks in trade; it means nothing, if it does not mean universal brotherhood, where there shall be neither Jew nor Gentile, neither black nor white, neither male nor female, neither master nor slave, but all shall be free to make the most of the faculties with which they have been endowed.

That is the word of free religion to city, State, and nation. It is a sublime word. Let us be neither ashamed nor afraid of it; it will touch customs grown hoary with time; it cannot fail to come into conflict with iniquity organized into statute law. Not the less must it be spoken, spoken in the aggressive spirit of impartial justice, tempered by personal love and good-will.

In such a work as all this plainly is, the maintenance of a free platform, the adaptation of free religious principles to the young, the introduction into one of our Sunday meetings each month of the conversational method, the championship of truth, justice, and purity, in the community—we shall need and naturally develop the fellowship of the spirit. Through the work itself, through social meetings, through the sober and the joyous experiences of life, we shall be drawn almost irresistibly into closer friendships, and thus come to appreciate more fully in each other some characteristics which in the colder light of mere superficial acquaintance we might condemn.

And so, friends, not without distrust of my own ability, but with assured faith in the value of the work we are undertaking, and relying on your considerate coöperation, I assume the responsibilities to which you have called me. I assume them in the simple faith of the spirit, recognizing no ignorance which an earnest search for the truth will not overcome, and no chains save such as link humanity together in the omnipotent bonds of universal love.

As Sunday after Sunday we gather here, it will not be as an army with banners flying. No bell from tower-crowned cathedral shall summon us to ceremonial and formal prayer; but down deep in our heart of hearts, a principle shall be quietly at work, making every place a temple of worship, and every act of life a prayer.

Thus shall we lift ourselves into the calm repose of an unshakable faith in the integrity of the universe; strengthen the moral tone, and enlighten the minds of our children; make our city, State, and nation better for our living in them; and do our little part, in a rational, common-sense way, toward converting the world from sin and ignorance and shame to the divine life of virtue, knowledge, love.

That is the mighty work we have undertaken. I know, friends, that in its performance, you will help me, and I hope earnestly and sincerely that I may be of some little help to you.

Mr. A. W. Stevens, of Boston, then made an address full of thoughtful suggestions, after which the meeting was closed with a hymn, followed by a closing word from the resident minister.—Providence Journal, Oct. 12, 1878.

AN IMPORTANT OPINION: THE COMSTOCK LAW CONSTITUTIONAL.

BOSTON, Oct. 21, 1878.

MR. F. E. ABBOT:

My dear Sir,—As junior counsel in the Heywood case, I had facilities for observing, if not for directing, the proceedings. I assisted in examining the questions of law affecting the case, and have watched the subsequent discussion with much interest. I join in claiming that his conviction and punishment were wholly unjust, and agree that whatever real and well-grounded objections may be made to the book are only for offences against good taste, and not against any existing law. The injustice and illegality are likewise, in my mind, attributable to causes that I have not yet seen discussed.

Upon the most mature reflection that I have been able to give the subject, I do not reach the conclusion that the statute under which this indictment was found is either unconstitutional or unsound, or that it can certainly be framed in any better form of words. It has been stated that the statute can exclude matter from the mails only for "postal reasons." This ground of unconstitutionality was carefully examined by us, long before it appeared in print; and, although on first view quite plausible, it was abandoned, and never presented to the Court, because believed to be clearly unsound. The constitutionality of a statute is a question of powers, and not a question of reasons. Power is the legal point of jurisdiction, while reasons only affect the policy or discretion of the law-making department. If Congress has not the power to determine what may or may not be carried in the mails, then it cannot make such regulations for any reason, however good. If that body has such power, then it can make such regulations, which will be valid in law, without respect to the reasons that may have operated to bring about their enactment. It is certainly settled that the power to make such regulations is vested in the source whence this statute comes.

Moreover, as governments are established to promote the general good, it is implied in their institution that they will necessarily act in view of the promotion of sound morality, and that, therefore, all proper measures look to this, as one of their ends. This seems to me to establish the propriety of any measure tending to repress the acknowledged evils of distributing really obscene literature. In this great incidental purpose of promoting morality, there can be no difference between the national and State governments, and each may so shape its measures within the scope of its powers as to present or restrain any form of immorality. In the national government, however, this repression is incidental only to the exercise of its powers, for police regulations as such belong to the States.

In the administration of justice by civilized methods, it has been found that men, even when dressed in the ermine and mounted on the bench, are made more considerate of rights and more attentive to justice, by giving the suitor the right to appeal from the first decision, and have the same reviewed in a higher tribunal, whose more deliberate course of proceeding may furnish a better test of accuracy. This is a well-settled conclusion of history. The tone and purity of the Court of last resort are maintained by its removal from the original scene of conflict, the character and learning of its judges, and their independent position; while the salutary check upon the tribunal of original jurisdiction is here replaced by the necessity of having the final decisions published, and subjected to the criticism of a bar as learned and just as the Court, and to the further criticism of all mankind.

In the Circuit Courts of the United States, no appeal or writ of error has ever been provided in criminal cases; so that the ruling of the judge who presides at the trial is final. Here, in my opinion, arose the trouble in the case of Heywood. The brutal manner in which he was at first arrested aroused much feeling, and this brought a great many persons who sympathized with him to the trial. Therefore a strong reactionary feeling arose among those engaged in the prosecution, and in this I think the Court had far too large a share; and I believe the excitement of the judge had an undue and biasing influence on the jury. I am not aware that just such a trial ever before occurred in one of our national courts. I believe that many of the rulings in matters of law were erroneous, that the charge to the jury was shocking, and that in consequence thereof Heywood was improperly and illegally convicted. There were no means of having these rulings reviewed in the Supreme Court, and punishment followed as a matter of course. I believe the practice of omitting the book from the indictment, and substituting the characterization thereof by the prosecuting officer, is contrary to principle and all practice except that of Massachusetts; and that in this case it deprived Heywood of the benefit of a deliberate opinion of the Court on the principal question in dispute; i. e., the obscenity of the book.

I believe that a plain and direct method of carrying law questions in these cases from the Circuit to the Supreme Court would place these prosecutions where the corresponding cases in the State Courts now stand, and confine them to the cases of really obscene literature; and this so effectually that no pestiferous fellow, sent out by a few bigots in the city of New York, could put the innocent citizens of other States in prison. The remedy, in my opinion, is to apply to Congress for a writ of error in these cases to the Supreme Court of the United States; and not for a repeal of the statute of 1873, or even for a modification thereof. It is impossible to make a statute that may not be abused; so that, with good laws, it is equally essential to secure upright and intelligent administration of justice.

GEORGE W. PARK.

VICTOR HUGO AND HIS ADMIRERS.

I have said Victor Hugo was the great central figure of the whole (literary congress). It was success enough for a literary convention that he took its presidency. It is not easy to imagine the atmosphere of veneration in which the veteran author is living. His admirers speak of him with bated breath. After his oration they bowed down around him with almost canine servility. At the banquet at the Centinental Hotel, I saw them kiss his hand passionately. He receives all with a sort of solemn benignity,—the sort of manner people who have an idea of greatness expect in their celebrity. But has he not had practice? In 1830 already, when he had struck with "Hernani" the death-blow of the old-fashioned classic drama, he had about him followers who thought it strange that he could walk the street like an ordinary mortal; that he ought only to appear in a triumphal car with a winged Victory holding laurels over his head. His "Hernani," revived at the Français, is a long way from its proper daylight now, when realism has come so near finishing romanticism in its turn; but it is gorgeously done, and one can be half-way dazzled by it into a conception as of some wild, different plane of existence, of a melodramatic life where all is Herculean feats, raptures, agonies, flashing rapiers, incredible sacrifices. At Belleville, if one will go to the other extreme of society, he can see at the same time a version of "Les Misérables." At the fine-arts exhibition of the year appears not only Emeralda, long since become a standard theme, but a new subject, Gilliat and his devil-fish cut in marble. Observing all this to which the writer can attain, perhaps it is not always so great a hardship, one reflects, that his income falls below that of some tradesmen.

We saw him first when he came to open the public séance on the third day at the Châtelet Theatre,—a short old man with hair and beard cropped close, square in every dimension, in a dress-coat with the waistcoat buttoned nearly to the throat, where an end of white scarf shows. His face is much wrinkled, and the almost absence of eyebrows gives it a senile feature; but the voice is strong and deep, and shows an abundant fund of force remaining. He does not use the trick of our orators of beginning in an undertone and rising by degrees. He launches at once upon a tide of swelling, prophet-like sentences, his eyes raised to heaven. "The greatness of the memorable year in which we are in this: It gives the hearing to civilization. . . . Menaces resound. The union of the people's smiles. . . . What is civilization? It is the perpetual discovery made by the human spirit on its march. Hence the word progress."

How well we know them, these sonorous sentences, into which no ray of humor ever enters—the "big injun" talk, as I have heard it called. They have always the manner of inspiration. It is their admirable feature that more than half the time they have its real matter. Behind me, in the audience, is a man who cries at every one of them, "Ah, quel mot!" "Quel mot, français!" "C'est d'une finesse!" "Il est le plus grande poète du monde."—New York Nation.

GEORGE ELIOT AT HOME.

I was led to an old-fashioned sofa that stood at one end of the room, some distance from the wall. My hand was held for a moment by a lady in the plainest possible attire, who is thus vaguely described in Rouledge's Men of the Time: "George Eliot, said to be the daughter of a clergyman, born about 1820." Somewhat to my surprise I found her intensely feminine. Her slight figure—it might almost be called diminutive,—her gentle, persuasive air, her constrained gesticulation, the low, sweet voice,—all were as far removed from the repulsive phenomenon, the "man-woman," as it is possible to conceive. The brow alone seemed to betray her intellectual superiority. Her face reminded me somewhat of the portrait of Charlotte Brontë that every one is familiar with. Yet there was no striking similarity. I should rather say the types of head and face are the same. When she crossed the room to call attention to a volume under discussion, she seemed almost like an invalid, and evidenced also an invalid's indifference to fashion and frivolity in dress. The guest, who sat careless, crosswise in his chair, was Edward Burne Jones, the preraphaelite artist to whom Swinburne dedicates "L'aus Veneris," and to whom he sings:—

"Though the world of your hands be more gracious,
And lovelier in lordship of things,
Clothed round by sweet art with the spacious,
Warm heaven of her imminent wings,
Let them enter unfaded, and nigh fainting,
For the love of old loves and lost times;
And receive in your palace of painting
This revel of rhymes."

Burne Jones had evidently not arrayed himself for the occasion. He wore a blue merino shirt-collar and cuffs as blue as indigo, artist jacket, and a general every-day air that bordered upon affectation. The conversation which I had interrupted was soon renewed, and it was better than a thousand books to hear the riches that these three souls lavished upon one another. Art, philosophy, the music of Wagner,

Rome ancient and Rome modern, Florence,—how they all love Florence and how they detest modern Rome! All English people seem to inherit the love of Florence. The conversation was presently interrupted. Some one entered, and, having said his opening lines, withdrew to a chair and subsided. The artist departed; the artistic atmosphere grew thinner and thinner. The three who had been discoursing like prophets upon a mountain-top came down out of the high places, and it was discovered that, after all, they were only a little more than ordinary when taken off their guard. Professor Lewes was the life of the circle, which increased as the reception hours drew to a close. Mrs. Lewes was the same placid, self-poised, kind-hearted, womanly soul who suffered no one present to feel neglected, for she took care to call the forlorn ones to her and distinguish them for a moment at least. Perhaps it is half true, the strange story that I heard in all its variations, for there were those present who sat transfixed and gazed rapturously upon the creator of Romola and Adam Bede. Every syllable she uttered sank into fertile hearts. They will all spring up, blossom and bear fruit; but not in this paper. It is said that there are note-books that go regularly to the priory and gorge themselves with wisdom; it is said that the professor has dipped his pen into the pages of Daniel Deronda. I know nothing of this. I can speak for the homely home that seemed almost bare, and for the homely hospitality, than which nothing can be less pretentious; and if I had doubted myself up to date, the exquisite charm of the hostess, as she detained me to renew an invitation which was to embrace the season—each Sunday from 2.30 to 5 P.M.,—was sufficient to dismiss me in the best of humors. I shall never forget the absolute repose of Mrs. Lewes, the deliberation with which she discussed the affairs of life, speaking always as if she were revealing only about a tenth part of her knowledge upon the subject in question. With her it seemed as if all the tides had come in; as if she had weathered the ultimate storm; as if circumstances and not desire had swept her apart from her kind and left her isolated, the unrivalled mistress of a passionate experience. The professor accompanied me to the door, offering me a cigar of the very best brand. People, mild-eyed ladies with severely correct escorts, followed us, still dazed with the delicious awfulness of their interview. A young woman, without escort, stalked solemnly up the gravel path, gurgled at the threshold, and passed into the presence of the high priestess. The professor shook me warmly by the hand and whispered, "That is Miss —," but I failed to catch the name. I smiled knowingly, turned on my heel, and it was all over.—San Francisco Chronicle.

SECULARISM IN HOLLAND.

A dispatch from the Hague informs us that an educational law has been adopted by the Chambers of that town, and sanctioned by the king, excluding the Bible and religious teaching from the primary schools. This prohibition, though confined to the lower grade of schools, is significant, and may hereafter be extended to all the public schools of the Hague and Holland. If the principle is proper for the primary schools it would be proper for all the higher grades. Where people of all religious sects are required to pay taxes for the support of common schools it is manifestly improper to compel the teaching of the tenets of any one sect, and the school authorities in this country might learn wisdom and justice from the people of the Netherlands. The teaching of religion should be left to parents and the churches. The business of the public school is to inculcate the general principles of morality and to instruct children in the common branches of learning. It is not for the State, in this country, to assume the duty of giving religious instruction to anybody, child or adult. Here Church and State have no legitimate connection, and it should be the aim of all true friends of religious liberty to keep them separate forever. The evils incident to all alliances between them in the Old World should be a sufficient warning to the people of this country to beware of any such coalition. No sect in the majority, in any city or district, should be allowed to force its religious doctrines down the throats of the minority in the public schools, or in any institution created and supported by the State, by the people at large. How would the Protestants take it if in districts where the Catholics predominate the latter should compel the reading of their version of the Bible and their religious books in the public schools? How would Christians generally like it if the Jews, being in a majority in a district, should compel the reading of the Talmud in the schools? And have not the Jews and the Catholics a right to complain if others force upon their children religious teachings contrary to their doctrines? The Constitution of the United States and the Constitution of this State recognize no religious sect, but protect all in their right to worship God in their own way. "Congress shall make no law respecting the establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof," says the Federal Constitution; and the same instrument provides that "no religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office of public trust under the United States"; and the Constitution of Pennsylvania declares that "all men have a natural and indefeasible right to worship Almighty God according to the dictates of their own consciences; no man can of right be compelled to attend, erect, or support any place of worship, or to maintain any ministry against his consent; no human authority can, in any case whatever, control or interfere with the rights of conscience, and no preference shall ever be given to any religious establishment or mode of worship." These provisions sufficiently indicate the genius and spirit of our government respecting religious liberty, and exhibit as plainly as possible the enormity of any attempt by any religious sect to force its doctrines upon any other sect or class, through the public schools or by any other means. The school authorities of the Hague and the King of Holland have set a good example to those controlling the public schools in this country, and have shown themselves to be true friends of religious liberty and of religion itself, which should everywhere be free and untrammelled by State interference.—Philadelphia Record.

SALARIES OF THE ENGLISH CLERGY.

In addition to their stated salaries, the archbishops and bishops have each an episcopal residence or palace rent free, and residences are also furnished the deans of the cathedrals. The Archbishop of Canterbury's salary is $75,000 per year; that of the Archbishop of York $50,000; Bishop of London $50,000; Bishop of Durham $40,000; Bishop of Winchester $35,000; Bishop of Ely $27,500; six bishops have $25,000 each; eight have $22,500 each; eight others have $21,000 each; one, the Bishop of Truro, has $15,000; and one, the Bishop of Sodor and Man, has but $12,000. The average salary of the thirty archbishops and bishops is $26,750. In the various cathedrals there are twenty-nine deans, with an average salary of $7007 each. The highest is that of the Dean of Durham, $15,000, and the lowest $1025, that of the Dean of St. David's. The deans of St. Paul's and Westminster have $10,000 each. Most of the cathedrals have also from four to six canons each. The whole number is one hundred and twenty-eight, and the average salary $3813. A number receive as much as $8250 each, and a few have as little as $1750. The most expensive see is that of Durham. The bishop has $40,000, the dean, $15,000; one canon has $7500, five other canons have $5000 each, and three archdeacons receive an aggregate of $7290. The total of items given is $94,790. This, however, is only a part of the whole expense, for there are prebendaries, minor canons, singing men, choirsters, a treasurer, chancellor, registrar, chapter clerk, etc., besides, who are a part of the force of every cathedral.

In a parish, the rector is more than a mere tenant. He is the absolute owner of the parsonage, glebe lands, and other parochial real property for life. It is possible to dispossess him of his benefice; but this is a thing very rarely done, and is by no means an easy matter. The rector owns this property just as much as the Duke of Devonshire owns his vast estates. The rector cannot sell it, it is true; neither can the Duke of Devonshire sell his without a special act of Parliament. Nearly all the large estates in the kingdom are under the law of entail; that is, the descent is fixed, and the owner cannot sell it, or change the course of descent. However, when all interested parties are agreed, the estate may be disentailed by special act of Parliament. The value of livings is various. The clergy list gives the incomes of over thirteen thousand benefices,—mostly parishes; and from these it appears that ten hundred and fifty-four clergymen get less than $500 per year; two thousand nine hundred and ninety-one get from $500 to $1000; six thousand eight hundred and fifty-three get from $1000 to $2500; one thousand eight hundred and nine get from $2500 to $5000; two hundred and forty-nine get above $5000; and the remaining incomes are not stated. The average of those stated is $1600, and to this must always be added the use of the parsonage rent free.—London cor. Cincinnati Gazette.

THE SALE OF CHURCH LIVINGS IN ENGLAND.

The Ecclesiastical Gazette is a kind of official organ of the Church of England, and in this there is a large advertising business of this kind. In size it is about ten inches by eight. I bought a copy a short time ago, and that number has very nearly four entire pages devoted wholly to such advertisements. One agent begins by saying that "Patrons desirous of effecting private sales of advowsons, presentations, chapels, etc., should confidentially communicate with Mr. James Beck, 27 Bedford St., Strand, London." Another agency is "managed by a clergyman long benefited." He says his commissions are "very moderate," and that "desirable advowsons are now on sale with prospect of immediate possession, and numerous clients are desirous of purchasing livings for exchange in every diocese in England." He has some livings in and near London which will be disposed of "at a sacrifice." A little further down the column this clergyman-agent offers for sale the next presentation to a living in the county of Buckinghamshire, and delicately says, "The present incumbent is about seventy-five years of age, and in a very bad state of health." That makes it doubly desirable. The law objects to the sale of a presentation when the place is actually vacant, and sales are generally of the next presentation, and subject to the life of the present incumbent. He closes by saying that "if sold at once, no reasonable offer will be refused." Interest is often allowed on purchase money until the next presentation occurs. In that number of the Ecclesiastical Gazette, eighty-seven livings are offered for sale or exchange. The Times and other papers also often have such advertisements.

The query naturally arises whether the law allows transactions like these. Strictly it does not; and simony, or the buying and selling of church preferment, is a crime at law. There are two express statutes on the subject. One forbids the passing of money or other valuable property between the recipient and the patron. This is easily evaded, however. The intending purchaser simply hands a friend the necessary amount of money, and this friend buys of the patron the right of the next presentation; that is, of filling the next vacancy. This seems to satisfy the law; and yet no one would say that the real meaning of the law was not violated, for the living is sold just as truly as if there were no intervention of a third party at all. It is really a marvel that so definite a law is not held to cover even that violation of it. Another law prohibits even the sale of the right of presentation when the living is actually vacant. Even this may be evaded, however, by making a temporary appointment, and placing the recipient under bond to surrender it when desired to do so; that is, when a satisfactory sale has been effected to some one else.

Patrons are usually prudent enough to have a candidate in waiting when a vacancy occurs, and the almost universal method of selling a living is by selling the right of next presentation. Nevertheless, I see a few advertisements which promise immediate possession, which makes it clear that the second law is also often violated. A man once went to the eight London agencies and found that they gave in the aggregate particulars of sixteen hundred and seventy-six livings that were then offered for sale or exchange; and one prominent agent declared that he had enough more on his private books at home to swell the total to twenty-three hundred and eighty-three. Nearly all the eight thousand livings at the disposal of private parties are regularly sold; or, if not sold, given to some relative or friend out of mere favoritism. I do not for a moment suppose that the lord chancellor or any of the bishops dispose of any of the immense number of livings in their gift for money.—London cor., Cincinnati Gazette.

PROTESTANTISM is split into one hundred and one different sects. The Greek Church, separated from the centre of unity, and shutting its ears to the voice of the infallible guide, is also undergoing a rapid progress of disintegration. Every year one or more new sects arise, and some of them have attained large proportions. In 1868 appeared a sect who call themselves "Little Christians." The founders of it began by baptizing each other, and changing their names. They reject the use of holy water and images; they have no priests and only a slight form of prayer. This sect has become very numerous. In the same year the sect of the "Helpers" appeared. They never entered a church, and perform such worship as suits them in secret and in their own houses. Notwithstanding that in the province of Niakta there were more than twenty different sects, a new one appeared there in 1870, whose principle tenet was, not to owe no man anything, but to owe every one everything. They are called "Non Rent Payers," and the sect is popular, save with its creditors. Still another new sect are the "Cheslenniks," or "Counters." It was founded by a man named Maxim, who says that he was accosted in the woods, one night, by a venerable personage "who offered him a book to read. Opening it, Maxim found the message of salvation written in the Slavonic tongue. It commanded the people of God to count themselves, and be set apart from the world. It called the national church the devil's church; it declared Thursday to be the true Sabbath; it spoke contemptuously of saints and angels, and abolished the seven sacraments and the priesthood. Maxim returned to Semenov and preached the new doctrine. He speedily made converts, who counted themselves off and formed the 'Secret Semenov Church.' They show the bitterest contempt for the Council and the State. While the Orthodox pass by to church on Sunday morning, they shut themselves in their houses and manifest their despite in true Oriental style. Their chief tenet is that man must sin in order to be saved from sin. This doctrine, of course, leads to wild excesses, and the sect is looked upon as very immoral." Another extraordinary sect is called the "Napoleonists." Their cardinal principle is hatred of the Established Church and of the Government, and "as Napoleon was the chief enemy of Russia in recent times, they look upon him as the true Messiah, and worship him as God. Placing his bust on an altar, they fall before it in prayer. The worship has to be maintained privately; but they are said to be numerous, even in Moscow. They believe that Napoleon is still alive; that he fled from St. Helena to Central Asia; that he is now dwelling in Irkutsk, near Lake Baikal, on the frontiers of Chinese Tartary; and that he will come forth at the appointed time, leading a great army to the overthrow of Russia and to the uplifting of his church to glory and to power." The Greek Church, it will be seen, with all the power of the State at its back, has not been able to retain its unity or to prevent its people from straying away into these fearful, if ludicrous, heresies. Schism, like heresy, has within itself the seeds of its own disintegration.—Catholic Review.

CASH RECEIPTS.

N.B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING NOVEMBER 2.

Erwin Brown, $2; William Kincaid, $1; Edw. Doyle, $10; Jacob Hoffman, $13.20; W. D. Pitt, $3.20; S. N. Allen, $1; Louis J. Doyle, $5; New England News Co., $5.48; S. H. Roper, $23.20; Mrs. E. P. Robeson, $10; Elizur Wright, $200; James Eddy, $20; B. R. Tucker, $10; C. A. Tucker, $10; A. Folsom, $50; Dr. J. C. Michener, $3.20; Mrs. M. E. Bird, $10; Dr. J. E. Oliver, $12; T. H. Knowles, $10; L. O. Bass, $10; Mrs. K. G. Wells, $10; C. Graeter, $10; George Riker, $5; L. Spaulding, 10 cents; R. D. Leet, $1; H. Laid, $1.60; W. H. Fitch, Jr., $3.20; Miss E. J. Leonard, $5; Mrs. A. C. Spooner, $1.60; A. S. Brown, $13.20; Nath'l Cummings, $10; Dr. C. H. Horsch, $20; W. L. Taylor, $10; J. Sawyer, $10; Mrs. C. P. Cummings, $10; Dr. H. K. Oliver, $40; Mrs. M. C. Perkins, $10; Jno. D. Caldwell, $3.25; N. E. Jams, $1; E. North, 30 cents; Cash, $2.50; Mrs. Eliza B. Miller, $10; Jas. A. Dupee, $10; Prof. W. C. Russell, $20.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N.B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

BOSTON, NOV. 7, 1878.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
(JULIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHERRY, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH GADY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIZUR WRIGHT, C. D. B. MILLS, W. D. LE SUEUR, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, JAMES E. OLIVER, Editorial Contributors.

THE SYRACUSE CONGRESS.

The Second Annual Congress of the National Liberal League convened at Syracuse, N.Y., Saturday, Oct. 26, 1878, at 10 o'clock, A.M. According to the report of the Committee on Membership, it was composed of twelve charter-members, one life-member, two annual members, and one hundred and twenty-three delegates representing thirty-two Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues, making one hundred and thirty-eight members in all.

Saturday Morning Session.

The President made brief introductory remarks, welcoming the delegates, and expressing a hope that harmony and courtesy would prevail throughout their deliberations. He stated that the Directors had endeavored, in all their arrangements, to secure perfect fairness and justice to all; and with this object in view he submitted to the consideration and free action of the Congress, on behalf of the Board, the following resolutions:—

1. Resolved, That the proceedings of this Congress shall be governed by the general rules of parliamentary law.
2. Resolved, That the Committee on Membership are hereby instructed to report a complete list of the members of this Congress, classified respectively as delegates, charter-members, life-members, and annual members; and to add the name of each delegate to the name of the Local League which he or she represents.
3. Resolved, That, in order to secure the prompt and orderly transaction of the important business of this Congress, all resolutions, after being read, shall be referred to the Committee on Resolutions without debate.
4. Resolved, That the general order of business for the several sessions of this Congress shall be as follows:—

Saturday, Oct. 26.

BUSINESS SESSION, AT 10 A.M.

1. Reading of Records of last Congress by the Secretary (if required).
2. Appointment of Committee on Membership.
3. Address by T. B. Wakeman, Esq., of New York; being his speech on the Constitutionality of the Comstock laws, delivered at Faneuil Hall, Boston, Aug. 1, 1878.
4. Address by Hon. E. P. Hurlbut, of Albany, on "The Liberty of Printing."
5. Report of the Committee on Membership.
6. Appointment of Committees on Resolutions, on Nominations, and on Finance.
7. Report of the Directors.
8. Report of the Treasurer.
9. Temporary Adjournment.

BUSINESS SESSION, 3 P.M.

1. Report of Committee on Resolutions.
2. Debate and Vote on the Resolutions concerning Freedom of the Press and Obscene Literature.
3. Temporary Adjournment.

PUBLIC SESSION, 8 P.M.

1. Addresses by Invited Speakers.
2. Temporary Adjournment.

Sunday, Oct. 27.

BUSINESS SESSION, 10 A.M.

1. Debate and Vote on the remainder of the Report of the Committee on Resolutions.
2. Temporary Adjournment.

BUSINESS SESSION, 3 P.M.

1. Report of the Committee on Nominations, and Election of Officers for the ensuing year.
2. Report of the Finance Committee.
3. Miscellaneous business.
4. Free Conference; short speeches, etc.
5. Temporary Adjournment.

PUBLIC SESSION, 8 P.M.

1. Addresses by Invited Speakers.
2. Final Adjournment.

The spirit of the "repeal" party immediately revealed itself in the objections made to the above order of business. Nobody could find any fault with the order itself, or even attempted to do so; it was on its very face too fair, systematic, and in every way proper, for any reasonable objection. But it was declared to be an "undemocratic" attempt to tyrannize over the Congress, to prevent it from managing its own affairs, etc., regardless of the fact that it was simply submitted for approval, and could be amended or changed in any manner the Congress saw fit. A fair, orderly, and expeditious course of proceedings was evidently not desired. After long and profitless wrangling, the first three of the resolutions were adopted; on motion of Mr. H. L. Green, the fourth was amended as follows, and then adopted:—

Resolved, That a committee on order of business be appointed by the Congress, and that such committee nominate the members of the standing committees and officers of the League, subject to the approval of the Congress.

On motion of Mr. T. B. Wakeman, it was then

Resolved, That this committee consist of one member to be appointed by each Local League represented, and one by the life and one by the charter-members, with power to appoint sub-committees.

The entire remainder of the morning session was wasted in the election of this committee, which had only to do over again in a bungling and loose manner what had already been well done by the Directors beforehand, with a self-evident purpose to save time and trouble for the Congress and facilitate its business. Great confusion of course followed the destruction of this well-laid plan; and the sincere efforts of the President to reduce it to a minimum, and to help the Congress out of the snarl in which the mere perversity of the majority had entangled it, were necessarily to a considerable extent neutralized by the want of support. The Directors had proposed an Order of Business; the majority preferred a Disorder of Business; and the latter had their way.

During the interval between the morning and afternoon sessions, the general committee elected the following sub-committees:—

On Resolutions, Messrs. E. P. Hurlbut, C. D. B. Mills, B. F. Underwood, T. B. Wakeman, J. E. Oliver, T. C. Leland, F. Rivers—four for "reform," and three for "repeal."

On Nominations, Messrs. J. H. W. Toohey, J. McArthur, G. E. Gordon, D. H. Clark, T. L. Brown—three for "reform," and two for "repeal."

On Membership, Messrs. D. G. Crandon, J. H. W. Toohey, H. L. Green, Mrs. Amy Post, Mrs. L. N. Colman—one for "reform," three for "repeal," and one doubtful.

Some changes appear to have been subsequently made. These sub-committees, however, were not even reported to the Congress for "approval," as required by the vote,—much less elected. Nothing could be conceived more "undemocratic" than the mode in which these committees were appointed; but nevertheless a majority in each of the two leading committees was opposed to "repeal."

Saturday Afternoon Session.

Pending the report of the Committee on Resolutions, the general committee reported through Mr. Rivers, the chairman, as the order of business for the afternoon, the addresses by Mr. Wakeman and Judge Hurlbut, with a subsequent discussion of fifteen-minute speeches on the main question. This report was adopted, with an amendment limiting the speeches to ten minutes. If the original order of business submitted by the Directors had been adopted, these addresses would have been made in the forenoon, thus giving ample opportunity for a full and fair debate in the afternoon. As it was, many hours had been squandered in getting the convention started, and nothing remained but to repair the blunder as well as might be, by crowding into the afternoon the forenoon's work.

Mr. Wakeman then read his Faneuil Hall Speech on "The Comstock Law considered as to its Constitutionality." It was an ingenious, plausible, but narrow and sophistical plea for "repeal," ignoring distinctions which exist, and inventing others which do not, and raising a cloud of empty technicalities which a small circle of personal followers mistake for solid and substantial arguments.

Judge Hurlbut next delivered his address on "The Liberty of Printing," which we shall next week be permitted to lay before our readers in full. His venerable and dignified appearance, his impressive and deliberate manner, his wit, brilliancy, and epigrammatic pungency, lending to his restless logic a popular effectiveness which we never saw surpassed by any other public speaker, carried the audience by storm, and fairly convulsed them with alternate laughter and applause. The address, though not at all controversial, left not an inch of standing-room for Mr. Wakeman's specious argument; it was demonstration, impregnable and complete, and convinced every close reasoner in the hall that the cry of "unconstitutionality" is mere whistling against the wind. If "repeal" had not been a foregone conclusion with the majority, resting on grounds with which reason has nothing to do, the debate would have ended then and there with a unanimous vote against it. More than thirty years ago, Judge Hurlbut published in Edinburgh and London his Essays on Human Rights and their Political Guaranties, with a preface and notes by the famous George Combe—a work which gave its author the highest reputation as a philosophical jurist and a champion of human liberty in its noblest sense; while his little treatise of 1870 on Religion and the State is one of the noblest and most powerful contributions to the literature of political secularism ever made. When such a mind as this ponders, digests, and deliberately rejects the legal theory to which "repeal" is now clinging with desperate determination,—when it delivers its calm, judicial decision in favor of the constitutionality of the so-called Comstock law,—those who know the ultimate invincibility of reason will know what fate awaits the pert unscrupulousness of "repeal."

Judge Hurlbut closed his magnificently victorious paper with a draft of such a statute as the United States may constitutionally enforce for the exclusion of obscene literature from the mails, without infringing in the slightest degree upon the freedom of the press:—

A LAW TO PREVENT THE FORWARDING AND DISTRIBUTION OF OBSCENE LITERATURE BY THE MAILS.

SECT. I. Be it enacted, etc.

That there shall not be forwarded by the mails, nor distributed by any deputy postmaster, any obscene print, picture, drawing, or printed composition, manifestly designed, or mainly tending, to corrupt the morals of youth.

SECT. II. If any person shall deliver at any post-office, with intent to have forwarded, or distributed, any obscene print, picture, drawing, or printed composition, mentioned in the preceding section, he shall be fined, for the first offence, not exceeding — dollars, and for the second or any subsequent offence shall be imprisoned not exceeding — months.

Provided, however, that no printed book, argument, essay, treatise, or disquisition, put forth in sincerity and good faith, and in which no obscene words, phrases, or pictures shall be employed, although its doctrines or sentiments, if carried into practice, would have a bad influence on society or government, shall be deemed obscene within the meaning of this law.

In connection with this draft of a statute submitted by Judge Hurlbut to the Congress itself, we add here the draft of some resolutions on the same subject which we personally wrote and submitted to the Committee on Resolutions, in order that the public may understand how earnestly and practically the "reform" party at this Congress strove to protect liberty to the uttermost, yet without denying the nation's indubitable right to refuse to be made an involuntary accomplice in the crime of circulating obscene literature:—

ON FREEDOM OF THE PRESS AND OBSCENE LITERATURE.

1. Resolved, That the freedom of the press which is guaranteed by the United States Constitution includes freedom to publish, and freedom to circulate by all customary channels, all theoretical opinions on all literary, scientific, political, social, moral, religious, or other subjects; that no indecencies of a merely incidental or occasional character, however reprehensible and deserving of public censure on moral or literary grounds, cause a forfeiture of this freedom, or constitute a just reason for legal prosecution or punishment; and that any narrower rules of judgment on this subject must compel legal condemnation of many of the most precious works of human genius, including the Bible.

2. Resolved, That by "obscene literature" we understand such writings or publications as do not appeal to or seek to elevate either the intellectual, moral, or aesthetic condition of their readers, but show on their face that they were composed with unmistakably base motives, in order to poison the imagination, inflame and pervert the passions, and incite to vicious practices; that it is justly made a crime at common law to circulate such literature in any manner; and that it is an outrage on common decency to claim for such literature the freedom of the press.

3. Resolved, That, while we recognize the supreme importance of extinguishing as far as possible the demand for obscene literature by educational and moral means, we also recognize the practical necessity of legislation against the crime of circulating it; and we maintain the right and duty of both Congress and State Legislatures, each in its appropriate province, to enact laws for the punishment of this crime.

4. Resolved, That, owing to the absence of definition in the United States statutes on this subject, and the abuse of power by the officers appointed to execute it, great wrong has been done to individuals, and dangerous violations of the freedom of the press have been consummated; and we seriously and earnestly protest against these wrongs and violations.

5. Resolved, That, in order to prevent these evils for the future, the following safeguards should be secured: (1) the amendment of the United States laws concerning obscene literature, in accordance with the principles enunciated in the foregoing resolutions; (2) the right of appeal and writs of error from the circuit courts to the Supreme Court of the United States in all criminal cases under these laws; and (3) a new legislative provision requiring that the entire publication alleged to be obscene, for circulating which through the mails any person shall be hereafter prosecuted in the United States courts, shall be set forth in the indictment.

8. Resolved, That a commission should be appointed, composed of able and influential citizens of the highest character, who shall be charged with the duty of devising, adopting, and carrying into execution such measures, as in their judgment, shall be best calculated to obtain from Congress the above-mentioned safeguards; and the Directors of this League are hereby empowered and instructed to select and appoint the members of said commission, and to cooperate with them in all possible ways.

7. Resolved, That, in order to enable the Directors to discharge the duty imposed upon them by the preceding resolution, we hereby appeal to all citizens who love equity and prize the freedom of the press to contribute liberal donations towards a fund of five thousand dollars, said fund to be paid to the Treasurer of this League, and appropriated by the Directors to the sole purpose of defraying the expenses of the said commission.

These were the practical measures for the protection of liberty which the "reform" party were desirous to carry into execution. The advocacy of these principles and measures was the avowed reason, and the only reason, why the old Board of Directors was dismissed with an evident but impotent purpose to make the dismissal disgraceful. The inference was forced upon the minority at Syracuse, and is now forced upon the public, that the "repeal" party are seeking something more than the effectual protection of liberty; and the question is most pertinent—What is that more? Let thoughtful minds answer that question for themselves.

Saturday Evening Session.

Mrs. Clara Neymann, of New York, delivered with her accustomed grace and earnestness an address on "The Issues of the League," which was a plea for harmony and peace on the basis of rejecting the whole question, and taking ground "neither for reform nor repeal." If the League had not already taken strong "reform" ground at Philadelphia, which it must necessarily retain till this ground was changed, her gentle appeal would have had a better chance of being heeded; as it was, the "repeal" party were determined to carry out their purpose of forcing a change of ground on this question.

Professor Oliver followed with an address on "The Nature of the Liberal League Movement," which bore throughout the impress of his own high thought and earnest spirit, and ended too soon for those who knew the wealth of his mind and heart.

During the afternoon, it had leaked out that the majority of the Committee on Resolutions were in favor of "reform," not "repeal." This was a most vexatious circumstance to the majority. In order to overcome this almost insuperable obstacle to the success of the "repeal" programme, Mr. Courtlandt Palmer very unexpectedly moved the adoption of two resolutions, as follows:—

Resolved, That the Committee on Resolutions be instructed to report a resolution in favor of the repeal of the Comstock postal laws.

Resolved, That they be also instructed to report a resolution in favor of the practical enforcement of constitutional and State laws against obscenity.

After a necessary suspension of the order of business by vote, these resolutions were declared in order.

Mr. R. P. Halliwell, of Boston, moved to amend them by substituting the following:—

Resolved, That total separation of Church and State is the sole purpose of the National Liberal League.

Resolved, That the platform adopted at our last annual convention, whereby this League merged into an equal civil, political, and religious rights association, is hereby repealed.

Dr. John Winslow, of Ithaca, moved to amend Mr. Halliwell's amendment, by substituting the following:

Resolved, That, however its members may differ as to questions of constitutionality, the National Liberal League fully recognizes the necessity of suppressing obscene literature by such legislation as shall be proper and constitutional, and shall also protect absolute freedom of discussion upon all subjects.

The evening was consumed in debating these amendments and others, and in getting out of the parliamentary snarl in which the Congress entangled itself. The "reform" side were accused of "filibustering" by their opponents; but, if that epithet was deserved, the "repeal" side earned their share of it. Neither side intended to filibuster; the amendments offered were finally disposed of by substituting Dr. Winslow's for Mr. Halliwell's, and then appending it to Mr. Palmer's as a third resolution. At this point, when a vote might have been reached, Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., of New York, moved to amend the series of three resolutions then before the Congress, by substituting therefor some new ones of his own, as follows:—

Resolved, That we believe the United States postal law concerning obscenity to have been enacted without due deliberation; that there are high precedents and good reasons for doubting the constitutionality of such legislation; that it is certain that unjust prosecutions have been made under this law, and, as it stands, it should be repealed.

Resolved, That the present laws for the suppression of obscenity in the various States are so construed as to be dangerous to the liberties of the people and the press by their failure properly to define obscenity, and must be so modified as to render them sufficient for the total suppression of obscenity without endangering the liberties of the press.

Motions to adjourn (it was nearly eleven o'clock) had been several times made and lost. But Dr. Foote's amendment was too much for the patience of the Congress. It was moved and voted to refer this new amendment to the Committee on Resolutions; the President ruled that the amendment necessarily carried with itself the resolutions it was to amend, and that thus the entire batch of resolutions was removed from the Congress to the Committee. This result, though apparently exasperating to those who wanted to force through a vote for "repeal" that evening, was a mistake of the "repeal" party itself, and had to be digested. The adjournment was then effected.

We frankly confess we regretted that amendment after amendment should have been made to Mr. Palmer's resolutions instead of meeting squarely the issue forced on the Congress, and debating the merits of the question. The majority was clearly on the "repeal" side; they hungered and thirsted for a decisive vote; but, with all their eagerness and their evident collusion to carry their point, they were wretched tacticians, and did not know how to do it. It was a blunder to spring Mr. Palmer's resolutions on the Congress that evening, contrary to their own order of business; if these resolutions had passed, no committee would obey such instructions against their own self-respect. The "repeal" party, moreover, should have respected their own order of business, which permitted discussion, but not action, on the main question that night; and they only betrayed a reckless disregard of fair play, in attempting to overrule in advance the report of their own committee on resolutions. Notwithstanding all this, we regretted the failure to meet the issue on its merits.

Sunday Morning Session. *

The Syracuse Standard of Monday morning said:—

The Sunday morning session was in some respects a quiet one and in others rather troublesome to the New York party. During the recess the majority, who had sought to force the Congress to express an opinion in favor of the repeal of the law, had become frightened. Rivers, of Boston, now resting under indictment for the sale of obscene literature, urged a square expression of the Congress in favor of his views. He wanted the United States authorities rebuked for what they had done. Wakeman, of New York, a supporter of Rivers, was more politic, and hesitated about giving the Abbot party such open cause for disruption. He, and others who stood with him, feared the odium which would fall upon them if the Abbot party should secede, on the ground that they could not live with those who sustained and fostered the sale of obscene literature and sought to repeal the laws making the sale a crime. Wakeman believed the majority had better make concession rather than be compelled to stand alone before the public; and hence the Committee on Resolutions fixed up a compromise that the Comstock postal law question should not be touched by either party.

At the opening of the morning session, J. H. Adamson, of Passaic City, N.J., alleged that he would show up the New York party in its true light; he had facts to back him.

Cries from the New York faction—"Give us the facts!"

Adamson—"I'll give 'em to you fast enough!" Mr. Adamson fixed his papers, and was proceeding to tell how Bennett, of the Truth Seeker, by letter had offered his League a bribe of ten dollars to vote with the New Yorkers.

That made the New York party frantic, and Bennett called for the letter he had written; he didn't want his letter produced in a garbled manner.

Adamson went on to read that his League had refused to be bribed, when he was called to order, and the Chair was asked to rule that Adamson must produce the letter.

Adamson said he had not the letter with him, but he would willingly send for it and have it published; and then he averred he had some more bottom facts which he could give, but the New York party cried him down, and the President finally ruled him out of order unless he produced the letter.

Mr. Courtlandt Palmer, of New York, on behalf of the Committee on Resolutions, submitted the following partial report as a measure of conciliation and honorable compromise:—

Resolved, That this Congress does not, at the present session, express any judgment in regard to the

Comstock postal law question, but that it hereby recommends that the members of the League and all liberals inform themselves, as far as possible, as to its constitutionality, with a view to decisive action at the next Congress.

Resolved, That the freedom of the press, which is guaranteed by the United States Constitution, includes freedom to publish and freedom to circulate by the customary channels all opinions on literary, scientific, political, social, moral, religious, or other subjects.

Resolved, That while we recognize the supreme importance of extinguishing, as far as possible, the demand for obscene literature by educational and moral means, we also recognize the practical necessity of legislation by the proper and constitutional authority against the crime of publishing it, and laws for the punishment of the same.

The first of these resolutions was urged upon the Congress by Mr. Wakeman as an act of extraordinary "magnanimity" on the part of the majority. According to the Standard, he "said he appreciated the position of Mr. Palmer, who did not wish to force a conscience not prepared for conviction, referring to the Abbot party. He regretted, however, to be obliged to go home while two League members lay under arrest, and that arrest instigated by church authorities. He believed the arrested parties were guilty of no wrong whatever; and yet he thought, before generally asking the Congress to favor the repeal of the Comstock postal laws, they had better take another year to fully think the matter over. He had yielded this much to save heart-burnings."

Rev. Mr. Gordon emphatically opposed any proposition to leave the League a whole year under the disgrace of not knowing its own mind on this subject. This was not a constitutional question; it was a moral question, and could not be too soon decided.

The President asked and received permission to express his opinion on the resolutions. He stated distinctly that he understood this to be a proposition to leave the League for another year exactly as it was left at Philadelphia; that that position was in favor of "reform," and against "repeal"; that he himself, with all the rest of the League, had been perfectly satisfied to hold that position for two years, and desired simply that it should not be changed at all now; that he could not oppose these resolutions, since they proposed to leave that position wholly unchanged; that he appreciated the "magnanimity" of the majority in not exercising their evident power to force a vote for "repeal," and was in favor of the resolutions, not as a compromise,—which it was not,—but a complete postponement of the whole question for a year.

And thus the "reform" party fell into the trap. The resolutions passed, as did also the following, presented by Mr. Underwood on behalf of the Committee on Resolutions:—

Resolved, That since the growth and influence of the Liberal League movement depends primarily on the multiplication of local auxiliary liberal Leagues, and since the multiplication of these Leagues depends chiefly on the zeal and activity of the members of the Executive Committee of the National Liberal League, we recommend to their earnest attention the following points:—

(1.) That they appoint at least three of their associates in their own immediate neighborhood, to the end that the several State sub-committees may hold frequent and regular meetings for consultation and action.

(2.) That they use all diligence in forming as large a list as possible of the names of prominent and active members throughout their respective States.

(3.) That they enter into correspondence with the latter as local agents, for the purpose of stimulating them to initiate the organization of Local Leagues in their respective towns.

(4.) That they continually impress upon these local agents, and through them upon liberals everywhere, the innumerable advantages which must accrue to themselves and the liberal cause by building up numerous Local Leagues, and thereby creating a vast and strong constituency for the National League.

(5.) That if any of the Executive Committee finds himself unable to discharge the duties of his office, he should nominate to the Directors, as his successor, some capable and energetic man or woman who is willing to assume these important duties.

Resolved, That it is inexpedient at this time to nominate candidates for the Presidency and Vice-Presidency of the United States, and that it must remain inexpedient to take this step until the local constituency of the National Liberal League is vastly increased.

Resolved, That the sinister and ruinous bearings of the Edmunds' constitutional amendment upon the cause of State secularization are dangerously misunderstood and disregarded by nearly the whole people, and especially by liberals; that notwithstanding the excellence of the major part of this amendment, the proviso that it shall not have the effect to exclude the Bible from the public schools would indirectly but completely Christianize the now secular Constitution, by recognizing the Bible as having a divine right to be read in public schools, which is superior to the right of Congress and of the people, and would thus plant the nation unawares on the found-dation principle of orthodoxy; while the further proviso that this amendment shall not have the effect to impair the rights of property already vested is designed to secure the perpetual exemption of church property from taxation, with all the growing evils of that mountainous injustice.

Resolved, That we earnestly counsel all Local Leagues to hold frequent public meetings for the purpose of enlightening the people as to the unspeakable importance involved in this still pending attempt to Christianize the Constitution by stealth, and as to the paramount necessity of defeating the proviso now attached to this proposed amendment.

Mr. Hamlen, the Secretary, read the report of the Directors for the past year, showing that the number of Local Leagues had more than trebled in that time.

Mr. Wilcox, the Treasurer, read his own report, showing that the receipts for the year had been $911.98, the expenditures $588.87, and the balance on hand $323.11.

Mrs. Neymann read a communication from the German Union of Radicals, which was courteously received, and a time was set for its consideration.

Sunday Afternoon Session.

The report of the Committee on Nominations was the first business in order on Sunday afternoon. It was divided; the majority report of three proposing the re-election of the old list of officers without change, while the minority report of two proposed that "the chief officers of the past year be dropped, and men known to be for the repeal of the Comstock postal law be elected in their stead." As finally made up and elected, this latter list was as follows:—

President, Hon. Elizur Wright.

Vice-Presidents, as before, but dropping the names of Hon. E. P. Hurlbut, R. P. Halliwell, and B. F. Underwood, and adding the names of Mrs. James Parson, Miss Jane P. Titcomb, Francis W. Titus, Mrs. A. C. Bristol, J. H. W. Toohey, Dr. J. R. Monroe, Prof. J. E. Oliver, Mrs. C. Neymann, Henry Damon, and Hon. S. Brewer.

Secretary, A. L. Rawson.

Assistant-Secretary, Mrs. A. C. Bristol.

Treasurer, Courtlandt Palmer.

Executive Committee, H. L. Green, chairman, and the rest as before.

Finance Committee, Mrs. L. N. Colman, Frank Rivers, J. S. Verity.

The Board of Directors was thus composed exclusively of persons known or believed to be strongly in favor of "repeal," as opposed to "reform," of the postal law of 1873. If the new Board had been constituted of persons in favor of "reform," so that the attitude of the League might remain unchanged on this question, there would probably have been no withdrawal; certainly we should not have withdrawn. But the mutual agreement of the two parties to "express no judgment" on the question at this session, and to postpone for a year "decisive action" upon it, was flagrantly violated by this total sweep of the chief offices and the election of a new administration unanimously pledged to "repeal." The minority saw, as the outside world sees, that the League can "express its judgment," and take "decisive action," just as effectually by a change of administration as by a mere formal resolution; they saw that the agreement had been broken and that they themselves had been treacherously deceived.

The two reports of the committee were received, and the Congress proceeded to elect officers for the ensuing year. We called Vice-President Brown to the chair, which we vacated for that purpose. A motion was made by Asa K. Butts, one of the leading spirits of the "repeal" party, to cut off all debate on the subject of candidates; but it was voted to allow half an hour of debate, limiting the speeches to five minutes. The speeches made showed unmistakably the animus and purpose of the proposed change; it was meant to punish the old Board for their position of "reform," and to make a new Board whose position should be for "repeal."

The vote for President was taken by ballot. Hon. Elizur Wright had 76 votes, and F. E. Abbot 51; and Mr. Wright was declared elected. Let us say here that Mr. Wright is one of our best and most honored personal friends, who, if he had been present, would have been disgusted at the spirit, tactics, and proceedings of those who used his name without authority. As to his real position on the Comstock postal law, it is not for us to speak; he was claimed to be in favor of "repeal," and as such elected. When his election was announced, our uppermost feeling was simply one of deep relief at our own release from all further care, labor, and responsibility for the conduct of the League; and after a short interval we took our seat in the body of the house, with the intention of remaining a quiet spectator of the proceedings for the remainder of the session. The statement in the papers that we "headed" the withdrawal is utterly untrue. After the agreement of the morning, our expectation that a moral protest would be necessary had ceased. The idea of organizing a new League originated with Judge Hurlbut, not with us; before we had left the platform, he was the first to rise, resign his Vice-Presidency and life-membership, and leave the hall. Mr. B. F. Underwood and Mr. R. P. Halliwell successively rose also, and resigned their Vice-Presidencies and charter-memberships. It was not till after we had taken our seat in the body of the house that Rev. G. E. Gordon rose, and said: "I wish to say that, as the minority are out of sympathy with this League, I invite them to meet me in the parlors of the Syracuse House, in order that we may advise together as to what course we shall take to DEFEND OURSELVES."

That was the purpose of the withdrawal—to "defend ourselves" from the treacherous action of the majority in pledging the League to "repeal" after they had agreed to "express no judgment" and take no "decisive action" for another year; and to save the liberal cause from public shame. The withdrawal was neither suggested nor headed by us; we simply followed Mr. Gordon with the rest. If a new Board had been elected which, like the old one, stood four to one in favor of "reform" and against "repeal," we should have refused to withdraw and remained with the old League, a contented and satisfied member. The question was a personal one neither with us nor with the other seceders, as is sufficiently evident from the resolutions they presently adopted. Nothing is more contemptible than a wrangle for office; this spontaneous, impressive, solemn movement of the minority was a great and unexpected moral protest, which filled us with awe, and imperatively commanded our adhesion. The cause of just liberty and pure morality was at stake; that cause must not be abandoned, though calumnies buzz about us like flies in midsummer. We bear our enthusiastic testimony to the strength, elevation, and grandeur of the moral purpose of the minority in taking simultaneously this impressive step of withdrawal. Let them have the glory of it; it is theirs, not ours, except as simply one of many moved by a common spirit.

The Phoenix rising out of the Ashes.

While the Congress remained to conclude its session, the minority assembled at 4 P.M. in the parlors of the Syracuse House. Rev. Mr. Gordon called the meeting to order, and suggested the election of a Chairman and Secretary. Hon. E. P. Hurlbut was elected Chairman, and Mr. R. P. Halliwell Secretary. It was voted to appoint a committee of five to draw up a statement of reasons for the withdrawal, and to report one hour hence. This committee was elected as follows: Rev. G. E. Gordon, Mr. C. D. B. Mills, Mr. B. F. Underwood, Hon. E. P. Hurlbut, Mr. R. P. Halliwell.

At 5.15 P.M., the meeting was again called to order, and the committee made the following report:—

WHEREAS, The Congress of the National Liberal League, assembled at Syracuse, October 26 and 27, 1878, to which we were delegates, was radically divided into two parties, one favoring total repeal, and the other opposed to such repeal, of certain laws of the United States relating to the circulation of obscene literature; and

WHEREAS, The whole question was, by the proposition of the majority and the consent of the minority, dropped from the consideration of the present Congress; and

WHEREAS, The subsequent nomination and election of the chief executive officers for the ensuing year, including the President, were made by the majority dependent upon their expressed opinion on the question which had been thus disposed of, to the surprise and deep disappointment of the minority; and

WHEREAS, The minority cannot but regard this action of the majority as a breach of faith and an unjust act toward the minority; therefore,

Resolved, That we, the undersigned, protest against the animus, aims, and results of such proceedings, and hereby withdraw from the session of the Congress to take such action as we may in the future deem advisable.

Resolved, That we believe that the existing United States laws against obscenity need to be reformed and amended, being now in several particulars oppressive in the modes of administration and in the penalties; yet we are in favor of proper laws, by State and National Governments, against the publication and circulation of obscene literature, tending to corrupt the morals of youth.

This report was adopted, and the following names were subscribed to the resolutions:—

E. P. Hurlbut, Albany; Franklin Goodyear, Cortland, N.Y.; Z. T. Watkeys, Syracuse; Nettie C. Truesdell, Syracuse; Gustavus E. Gordon, Milwaukee; Harriet A. Mills, Syracuse; W. H. Hamlen, Boston; T. C. Gage, Fayetteville, N.Y.; B. F. Underwood, Thorndike, Mass.; Catherine C. Hurlbut, Albany; Eben Turk, Chelsea, Mass.; John Nill, Watertown, N.Y.; E. A. Sawtelle, Boston; Thos. Dugan, Albany; James B. Pike, Rochester; David H. Clark, Florence, Mass.; Moses Hays, Rochester; S. R. Urbino, West Newton, Mass.; W. D. Hunt, Scott, N.Y.; Francis E. Abbot, Cambridge, Mass.; M. N. Lady, Albany; J. H. Adamson, Passaic City, N.J.; Sarah B. Otis, Boston; Hope Whipple, Boston; D. G. Crandon, Chelsea, Mass.; Charles Ellis, Boston; John W. Truesdell, Syracuse; H. P. Stark, Rochester; Joseph McDonough, Albany; M. Schiesinger, Albany; John Preat, Albany; C. D. B. Mills, Syracuse; R. P. Halliwell, Boston. In all, 34 names.

A committee of seven, consisting of F. E. Abbot, C. D. B. Mills, D. H. Clark, J. McDonough, Mrs. S. B. Otis, E. P. Hurlbut, and R. P. Halliwell, were then appointed to report a plan of organization and list of officers of a new League at 9 P.M. The meeting then adjourned to that hour.

At 9 P.M. the meeting was again called to order. Mr. Halliwell, the Secretary of the Committee, reported on its behalf a constitution substantially identical with that adopted at the Centennial Congress of Liberals, excepting the enacting clause of the preamble and the first article, which were as follows:—

Therefore, We, the Protesting Members of the Second Annual Congress of the National Liberal League, convened at Syracuse, N.Y., Oct. 26 and 27, 1878, hereby associate ourselves together as a permanent organization, and adopt the following

CONSTITUTION:

ARTICLE I. The name of this association shall be "The National Liberal League of America," founded on the principles originally adopted by the Centennial Congress of Liberals at Philadelphia, July 1-4, 1876.

This report also was adopted. A list of officers was then reported, and unanimously elected, as printed on the second page of this issue.

The following resolution was reported by the Committee, and adopted unanimously:—

Voted, That all Local Leagues that approve the formation of the National Liberal League of America are invited to dissolve their connection with the old League, and to join this League.

As soon as new charters can be prepared, they will be issued without any additional charge to all Leagues already chartered, on receipt of a properly authenticated notice that they have accepted the above invitation; and all Local Leagues are urged to hold immediately public meetings to decide as to which of the two National Leagues they will give their adhesion.

The following votes were also passed:—

Voted, That THE INDEX be the official organ of the National Liberal League of America.

Voted, That the President be authorized to make such verbal changes in the Constitution as are necessary to enable all persons present who give their names and addresses to the Secretary to become Charter Members.

Voted, That the thanks of this League are hereby extended to Judge Hurlbut for his able paper on "The Liberty of Printing," and for the noble and efficient aid he has rendered to the liberal cause in initiating this movement.

Under the above resolutions, the following additional names have been added to the list of charter-members, though not appended to the resolutions of protest first adopted:—

Mrs. Julia A. J. Perkins, Baldwinsville, N.Y.; Alvin F. Bailey, Syracuse; Mrs. Harry J. Perry, Syracuse; Aziel D. Perry, Syracuse; Nathan Hanford, Etta, N.Y.; Mrs. S. A. White, Boston; Gansevoort de W. Hurlbut, Albany, N.Y.; Jeanette Hurlbut, Albany; Ernest Hurlbut, Albany; Mrs. S. A. Underwood, Thorndike, Mass.; Hiram Ladd, Victor, N.Y.; A. C. Stone, Freeville, N.Y.; W. R. Lazenby, J. E. Oliver, John Winslow, W. A. Anthony, N. A. Randolph, all of Ithaca, N.Y.; D. B. Morton, Groton, N.Y.

The meeting was then adjourned sine die. The Syracuse Daily Standard of October 28 had these plain-spoken words to say on the events of the two preceding days:—

The Congress of Radical Thinkers held at Wisting Opera House Saturday and yesterday must have furnished much food for thought to those who have any regard for the decency of society and the purity of mankind. But one question arose for consideration, and that related exclusively to obscene literature. By persistent as well as quiet effort, a majority of the League was composed of Free Lovers and dirty literature defenders, and from first to last they were determined upon making a point in favor of its free circulation. Their remarks sometimes almost polluted the atmosphere of the opera house, and one who said that "if they should be left alone, they would stink themselves to death," was not so far out of the way as he might have been.

The decent element was compelled to leave; it had no other refuge than in the organization of a new association. The League in Syracuse represented by Messrs. C. D. B. Mills and John W. Truesdell repu-dilated the perfumers and joined the new association. The one represented by Mrs. Colman remained.

The seceders are entitled to the commendation of all defenders of morality for the course they took. Such a spectacle was never presented in Syracuse before, as that when men and women rose in their places and openly advocated the uprooting of principles of morality. The Journal was severely criticised by them for calling things by their right names. In place of "socialistic privileges," it said "free love"; instead of "radical publications," it said "obscene literature." The adherents of immorality should thank the Journal rather than blame it for not speaking yet more plainly, and sinking not a few members of the disgraceful combination to a level beneath that of brothels.

It were well if the League had never met here. It were better if only the conservative portion of it had come. While the minority did not hold to Orthodox ideas, its defence of the principles of morality was able and earnest. It would make no compromise with debasing influences, and therein showed an honesty and sincerity of purpose which will be respected by all decent-minded people.

Friends of enlightened liberty and social purity, the crisis has come: you will meet it as you think best. If you approve the action of these men and women whose consciences commanded them to make this earnest and indispensable protest in your own cause, give the new League your heartiest support. It needs money for immediate use, since the balance of nearly two hundred dollars that will remain in the treasury after paying all bills, carefully gathered and husbanded for the cause of State Secularization, must now be turned over to the cause of "repeal." It needs even more the moral support of votes of adhesion from the old Local Leagues, and from many new ones all over the land. Think on these needs, and do what you can to meet them.

THE HONEY OF POISON.

Somebody in the Commonwealth reports concisely a sermon of the eloquent Phillips Brooks—and an excellent sermon it seems to have been—from the words in the Gospel of Mark, said to have been uttered by Jesus after his resurrection: "And these signs shall follow them that believe: in my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover."

Mr. Brooks is reported to have said that "for a time the literal fulfilment of these promises followed the disciples of the Lord," but after awhile a change took place, and "it is now no longer material serpents and poisons, and physical illness and demons, over which the believer has control, but the spiritual counterparts of these things." How could preaching more effectually defeat itself? Had the reverend orator referred to his text merely as a venerable fiction, expressive of the truth that a virtuous man with pure and honorable motives may mingle with the vicious without being hurt, he would have been using his high powers at least innocuously. But when he begins by conceding the "literal fulfilment" of words attributed to Jesus, which no intelligent man can believe he uttered, he binds on the souls of a great part of his audience the chains of falsehood and superstition. Worse than that, he belittles human nature as well as God, by implying that there can be a better foundation for good morals than the immutable laws of nature as they reveal themselves to all intelligent human minds in all times and places. Nobody knows better than Phillips Brooks that the historical evidence of the "literal fulfilment" which he concedes, amounts to nothing. To assert as a truth that of which there is no satisfactory evidence is to lie. And a lie does not become a truth by being multiplied by a thousand million liars. Mr. Brooks is an uncommonly humane man. No one can doubt the benevolence of his motives. But is it too much to ask him to stop and think of the terrible responsibility he takes in conceding the literal truth of what neither he nor any other man in this age of the world can possibly know to be true? The great spiritual or subjective truths which Mr. Brooks preaches, no sane man can quarrel with, nor with the telling figures of speech by which he enforces them. But when he goes back to ancient poetry and history, written by superstitious men in a superstitious age, and concedes literal truth to every thing he finds there, the young men of this generation, who are schooled more or less in the laws of evidence and the first principles of scientific inquiry, and are therefore unable to believe in the letter of his scriptures, instead of being profited by his subjective truths, are poisoned by the example of what seems to them hypocrisy, in the most fashionable pulpit in the land. O Mr. Brooks! this is a terrible responsibility.

E. W.

Communications.

NOTES OF WESTERN UNITARIANISM.

The Western Unitarians are, almost without exception, radicals; what they think they speak freely. They welcome the broadest thought in their conferences. At the Michigan State Conference held last week in Charlotte, George Stickney of Grand Haven read a paper on "Taxation." It was pronounced by all who heard it one of the ablest and most interesting defences of church taxation they had ever heard. A move was at once made to bring the subject of taxing church property before the State Legislature this winter, and a resolution to that effect was unanimously passed. Mr. Stickney was invited to give his essay in the Unitarian Church, at Ann Arbor, and it was proposed to have him go before the Legislature with it.

The little fortnightly published in Chicago, called Unity, is published by a committee of Unitarians. Its range of thought is very broad. It has recently republished Higginson's Sympathy of Religions. Other papers to come are to be written by men who will keep abreast of modern thought in what they say in its pages. Its department of "Notes and News" endeavors to look all along the line, and to record the doings of all liberal bodies and believers or non-believers. One of the editors of this department, Rev. J. T. Sunderland, has just gone from Chicago to Ann Arbor, Mich. Maintained there by the American Unitarian Association, he is a broad-gauge thinker, who speaks his own mind. It has surprised many that the Association should send such a man there, but all expect the best results from it. Mr. Sunderland is a clear thinker and a good preacher, who deals in strong and effective thought. The other editor of this department of Unity, George W. Cooke, of Grand Haven, Mich., has just received a call to Unity Church, Indianapolis, where he expects soon to begin work.

As expressing the tone of the Western Unitarian work, let me call attention to a little book on the Bible, just issued by Putnam's Sons, and written by Rev. J. T. Sunderland. Its title is What is the Bible? In a clear, strong way, the author deals with this old book, and shows forth its value in the religious teaching of the present time. The Unitarians have never before issued any book on the Bible so plain, outspoken, and up with advanced scholarship: indeed, there is no other book to be had for a small sum in this country which treats the Bible in a rational way. Though very reverent towards the Bible, Mr. Sunderland does not hesitate to put it fully alongside of other sacred books, and to show up its errors of all kinds, and its contradictions. In showing the Bible to be a growth, and that it is the literature of a thousand years, he fully explains what cannot be understood so long as any theory of "moral winnowing" is maintained. All the book needs to recommend it to many thoughtful readers is to say, that it represents the rational scholarship of Europe, in presenting the opinions worked out there by the ablest students. In an appendix is a helpful list of books written from a rational standpoint, and which will be of material aid to those seeking to understand the Bible, as it is now interpreted by such men as Kuenen and Davidson.

Mr. Sunderland rejects all supernaturalism, and shows the folly of trying to find anything infallible in the Bible. His opinions are those substantially of Theodore Parker, and furnish another illustration of the influence of that brave, earnest worker. Unitarians have too often dealt with the Bible in an indecisive manner. If they now learn to handle it plainly and with ungloved hands, they can do the world much good. As an earnest of what many are ready to do, Mr. Sunderland's book is very promising. Many will enjoy its clear, strong words and its earnest spirit of truth.

GEORGE W. COOKE.
GRAND HAVEN, Mich., Oct. 15.

A FEW PLAIN POINTS.

NEW HAVEN, Ct., Oct. 16, 1878.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

Will you allow me a word in reference to this obscenity business?

1. There are books, pictures, and merchandise manufactured and sold for no other purpose than to debauch the young for the benefit of private purses.

2. We do, we must, have laws prohibiting such manufacture and sale.

3. If it is possible to define this misdemeanor so as to prohibit the manufacture and sale of such goods, it is just as possible to define it so as to prohibit their transmission through the mails.

4. If Congress can properly forbid the mailing of matter which is liable to endanger public life or property, it is not an act of oppression when it deals likewise with that which unquestionably and by universal consent endangers and destroys the moral and physical well-being of the young.

5. When all the State and municipal authorities are doing their utmost to suppress this criminal traffic, the national authorities may properly second their efforts in a region where the State cannot interfere so far as to forbid the coöperation of the mails in the furtherance of that traffic. And when Congress in the enforcement of such a law imposes a penalty upon its violators, it is not an act of oppression.

There is no reason why such a provision should suppress anything but crime, if properly worded. Let us then work for reform in this matter, but not commit the mistake of demanding the removal of every restriction upon the circulation, by aid of the mails, of the most abominable nastiness.

The post-office department reserves the right to open all packages consigned to them not paid for by letter postage; let there be no "censorship" beyond that. If no good comes from it other than to impose the burden of letter postage on what would otherwise go as merchandise and books, it will help the cause of decency a little. The Liberal party should be the last to ask freedom for obscenity.

R. M. SHERMAN.

VOICES FROM THE LOCAL LIBERAL LEAGUES.

[The following communications from Local Leagues could not be presented to the Syracuse Congress, on account of the chaos into which it was thrown by the perverse rejection of the Order of Business submitted to it by the Directors; but they are here published as the best amends for the omission that can be made under the circumstances. It will be noticed that these three Leagues call for "reform," and not total "repeal," of the postal law of 1873; and in this respect they doubtless represent the vast majority of liberals, notwithstanding the majority for "repeal" obtained in the Congress by extraordinary exertions on the part of a disaffected and vindictive clique.—ED.]

ENTERPRISE, Kansas, Oct. 18, 1878.

TO SEC'Y N. L. L., 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, MASS.:

Dear Sir,—Owing to our great distance from the place of meeting, we shall not be able to secure a delegation in the Second Annual Congress. We have nevertheless taken into consideration the questions announced in the call for the Congress. The following resolutions were adopted by our League at our meeting, Sept. 20, 1878:—

Resolved, That the most efficient measures that can be adopted for a great increase in the number of Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues is an increased circulation of THE INDEX, and all other liberal papers that justly appreciate the great danger to our liberties resulting, on the one hand, from the activity of those who seek to destroy the secularity of the Constitution, to retain and secure still more support from the government for their religious and sectarian institutions, and, on the other hand, from the indifference of the great majority of liberals; also, the employment of lecturers who fully understand the situation and the necessity for immediate action.

Resolved, That every Local Liberal League be called upon to circulate petitions against the Constitutional Amendment now in the hands of the Judiciary Committee of the United States Senate.

Resolved, That the Comstock laws be so amended as to relieve Comstock of his arbitrary rights and duties.

Resolved, That the resolutions in relation to obscene literature, passed by the Centennial Congress of the National Liberal League, at Philadelphia, Pa., should be confirmed by this Second Annual Congress.

Resolved, That we highly appreciate the value of the services of the Directors of the National Liberal League, and, heartily approving of the platform of their published card, do unanimously vote for the reelection of Francis E. Abbot for President, William H. Hamlen for Secretary, J. A. J. Wilcox for Treasurer, and D. G. Crandon for Chairman of the Finance Committee of the National Liberal League.

The above resolutions were unanimously adopted. The following was laid upon the table:—

Resolved, That it is not expedient to nominate a President and Vice-President of the United States at the second annual Congress of the National Liberal League.

I am very truly yours,

E. L. SENFT,

Sec'y Liberal League of Enterprise, Kansas.

HALL OF LIBERAL LEAGUE, I

VINCENNES, Ind., Oct. 20, 1878.

Dear Sir,—I am instructed to forward to you the enclosed resolutions, unanimously adopted at our meeting of this date, and request that you cause the same to be presented to the National Liberal Convention.

Very truly yours,

ORLAN F. BAKER,

Sec'y Vincennes Liberal League.

Resolved, That we are opposed to the "Comstock law," opposed to Comstock himself, and earnestly desire the speedy removal of both. We oppose the prostitution of the United States mail service to vendors of obscene literature, and to the polluting manipulations of the fingers of a spy and public informer, and will lend our efforts to bring about such modification of the present legislation that the people may be reasonably secure from either of these reproaches.

HALL OF ST. LOUIS BRANCH NO. ONE

OF NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, I

408 WASHINGTON AVE., ST. LOUIS, MO.,

Oct. 20, 1878.

FRANCIS ABBOT, ESQ.:

Dear Sir and Brother,—At a regular meeting of this League, held to-day, the following was passed unanimously:—

Resolved, That the Liberals of the United States demand that the law prohibiting the sending of obscene matter through the mails be required to clearly define what is obscene; and that a copy of said resolution be sent to the National Convention.

Respectfully and fraternally yours,

JOSEPH CLARKE, Sec'y.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookeller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
 GENTLEMEN,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory results—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 Mrs. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
 JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well-informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $ 30 for one year, including postage, or $8 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street Boston.

PUBLICATIONS INDEX TRACTS.

OF THE
FREE
 RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. B. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. E. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion"; Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Lasker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for Five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for Five cents at the office.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1878 and 1879 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1873 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fifth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyses the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 8.

THE INDEX,
 A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO
FREE RELIGION.
 PUBLISHED BY THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:
 FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:
 O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 Mrs. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
 JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 25 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALLOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALLOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.50
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	1.50
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	1.50
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Printer.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilisation in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	5.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verses.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside. A Series of Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions Common-Sense in Religion.....	3.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.20
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
COORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter; with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, &c. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE B.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.50

Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellaneous. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	2.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DEQUATTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUBRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Adam Bede.....	1.00
Romola.....	1.00
The Mill on the Floss.....	1.00
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wife and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellaneous.....	1.50
Representative Man.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems With Portraits.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.25
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Prose Works. 3 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformation of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 3 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.....	2.00
Cosmic Philosophy.....	5.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	3.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMILTON (PHILIP G.). A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	5.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	2.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	1.50
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	1.50
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	1.50
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	1.50
The Marble Faun.....	1.50
The English Note-Books.....	1.50
The American Note-Books.....	1.50
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	1.50
Our Old Home, and Septimus Felton.....	1.50
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Old-Fashioned Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	1.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 3 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bite of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Migrations of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Heaven.....	2.50
INGELW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skelton.....	1.75
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mopse the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection" and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah F. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with Disquisition on Astronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	13.00
KERR (ORPHEUS O.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 3 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 3 vols.....	3.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.D.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 3 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. O.). Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilisation, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	5.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	5.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1843.....	5.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.). The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MENVALES (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 3 vols.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte.....	1.50
Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.00
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN) Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Land.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.). Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	5.50
Chips from a German Workbench. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.50
NASHY (PETROLEUM V.). Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
[E]ckose from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.). A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations, A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.60
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Truist Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged in.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.00
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Seasons, and Physical Conditions, with three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expense of Heaven.....	2.50
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	1.50
SOHELLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	5.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	51.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT). Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.25
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Station; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.00
The Principles of Biology. 3 vols.....	5.50
The Principles of Psychology 3 vols.....	5.50
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	1.50
Sociology.....	1.50
Descriptive Sociology. Parts I, II, and III, each.....	1.50
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	1.50
Universal Progress.....	2.50
STOWE (HARRIET BECHER). Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.75
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	1.50
The Glass-Boon Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.50
Vanity Fair.....	1.50
The Newcomes.....	1.50
Adventures of Philip Fendennis.....	1.50
The Virginians.....	1.50
Edmond, and Lovell the Widower.....	1.50
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.50
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market. 1. Harry Lyndon, Boggarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Noobe, Sketches, Denis Deval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humors, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....	1.50
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.50
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	5.00
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
Lessons in Electricity.....	1.50
Address before British Assoc'n at Belfast.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH). Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES). The King and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	2.00
Vols. III. IV. and VI., each.....	2.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Sauterlings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN). American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	5.50
WHIPPLE'S (E. F.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	5.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Science and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldsworthy's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	1.50
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	1.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

231 Washington St., Boston.

GOLD Any worker can make $12 a day at home. Costly outfit free. Address TRUS & Co., Augusta, Maine.

MR. MILLS' LECTURES FOR THE SEASON OF '78, '79.

1. The Advances of Science in our Time: what do they promise for man?
2. The Labor Question: its present condition, and the possible solution.

CONVERSATIONAL LECTURES.

1. The Gnostic Wisdom of the East: China, India, etc.
2. The Poetic Thought and Religious Sentiment of the East.
3. Pythagoras and his Institution.

Representative Men of our Time: 1. Huxley; 2. Max Müller; 3. Emerson.
For terms, etc., please address
CHAS. D. B. MILLS,
Syracuse, N. Y.

TO THE AMERICAN PATRONS OF CHOICE LITERATURE.

We have made arrangements with Messrs. CHAPMAN & HALL, London, England, for the right to publish an American Edition of

The Fortnightly Review,

Edited by JOHN MORLEY,

and are now publishing this celebrated Monthly Magazine, from a special duplicate set of stereotype plates, which are forwarded from England so promptly as to enable us to produce each month, not only an exact facsimile of this able Review, but to publish it almost at the same time the original is from England. It is in every respect equal to the London issue, at about half the original price. This effort will place in the hands of American readers the freshest utterances of leading thinkers on Novecento with a promptitude unequalled. The comments of a large number of the best European thinkers on Science, Philosophy, Literature, Politics, and Miscellaneous Matters of general interest cannot fail to be appreciated and encouraged by thoughtful American readers. The following are a few of the contributors:—

Matthew Arnold, Alfred R. Wallace,
Herbert Spencer, Frederick Harrison,
Goldwin Smith, Prof. Tyndall,
Right Hon. Lyon Playfair, Prof. Huxley,
Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Prof. Darwin,
Lionel A. Talmach, Author of Supernatural Religion,
M. E. Grant Duff, M.P., Sir John Lubbock,
Hon. Robert Lowe, Anthony Trollope,
Leslie Stephen, T. Adolphus Trollope,
John Morley (the Editor), Sir H. S. Maine,
G. H. Lewes, Sir David Wedderburn,

AND NUMEROUS OTHERS.

Subscription Price, $5.00 per Year.

Published every month by the ROSE-BELFORD PUBLISHING CO., 60 York Street, Toronto, Ont.

RADICAL LIBERAL LECTURES

By B. F. Underwood,

FOR THE FALL AND WINTER OF 1878-9.

1. The Theory of Evolution.
2. Darwinism Defined and Defended.
3. The Philosophy of Herbert Spencer.
4. The Genesis and Nature of Religion.
5. Modern Scientific Materialism.
6. Natural Selection versus Design in Nature.
7. An Hour with German Thinkers.
8. Intuition and Instinct Viewed in the Light of Modern Psychology.
9. The Pros and Cons of a Future Life.
10. Is there a Personal Intelligent Deity?
11. The Demands of Liberalism Pertaining to State Secularization.
12. Monogamic Marriage versus the Vagaries of Free Love.
13. Woman: Her Past and Present; Her Rights and Wrongs.
14. Religious Revivals: Their Causes and Consequences.
15. The Struggles and Triumphs of Free-thought in Europe and America.
16. Issues of the Age.
17. Buddha and Buddhism.
18. Ancient Egypt: Its Laws, Customs, and Religion.
19. The French Revolution: Its Causes and Consequences.
20. Crimes and Cruelties of Superstition.
21. Cook and other "Scientific" Annihilators of Materialism Reviewed.
22. Paine the Pioneer of Freethought in America.
23. A Liberal's Answer to the Question, "If not Christianity, What?"
24. Christianity: To what Extent has it Helped or Hindered Civilization?
25. Jesus: All that is Known and what is Guessed about Him.
26. A True Man Better than a True Christian.
27. Judaism and Christianity Outgrowths of Preexistent Heathenism.
28. Science versus the Bible.
29. The Origin and History of the Bible. (From one to six lectures.)
30. The Four Gospels Unhistorical and Unreliable.
31. Evidences for the Divinity of the Bible Examined.
32. Popular Assumptions Regarding the Bible and Christianity.
33. Bible Prophecies Falsified by the Facts of History.
34. Popular Objections to Liberalism Considered.

For terms, etc., address

B. F. UNDERWOOD,
THORNDIKE, MASS.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT BETWEEN

Religion and Science,

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER. For sale at this office. Price—One dollar and seventy-five cents. Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The twenty-fifth school year of this Family and Day School for both sexes will begin WEDNESDAY, Sept. 19, 1877. For Circular and information apply to
NATH'L T. ALLEN,
West Newton, Mass.

NEW BOOK BY INGERSOLL.

Contains his latest lectures on "The Ghosts," "Liberty of Man, Woman, and Child," "Centennial Oration," "Farming in Illinois," and others. Handsomely bound in one volume. Price $1.50. Also

THE GODS AND OTHER LECTURES.

Same style. Price $1.25.
Sent post-paid on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY—PRICE TWO CENTS.

THE SECULAR REVIEW.

EDITED BY CHARLES WATTS.

The SECULAR REVIEW is the leading organ of Secularism, and each week has Special Articles on Theological, Social, Scientific, and Political Subjects. Its distinctive features are the advocacy of Constructive Secularism, and the dissemination of useful information on all questions which affect the welfare of the people. Letters are inserted in its "OPEN COLUMN" from all who are courteous in the expression of their views; while a special department is allotted for "NOTES AND QUERIES."

The Contributors to the SECULAR REVIEW comprise the principal advocates of Secularism, including its founder, G. J. Holyoake.

CHARLES WATTS, Publisher,
84 Fleet Street, London, E.C.

THE INDEX IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Kellingwood Abbot.

Address THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston, U.S.A.

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD. GREAT THROUGH LINE AND UNITED STATES MAIL ROUTE.

The attention of the travelling public is respectfully invited to some of the merits of this great highway, in the confident assertion and belief that no other line can offer equal inducements as a route of through travel. In stands confessedly at the head of American railways. The track is double the entire length of the line, of steel rails laid on heavy oak ties, which are embedded in a foundation of rock ballast eighteen inches in depth. All bridges are of iron or stone, and built upon the most approved plans. Its passenger cars, while eminently safe and substantial, are at the same time models of comfort and elegance.

CONSTRUCTION AND EQUIPMENT

THE SAFETY APPLIANCES

In use on this line well illustrate the far-seeing and liberal policy of its management, in accordance with which the utility only of an improvement and not its cost has been the question of consideration. Among many may be noticed

The Block System of Safety Signals, Janney Coupler, Buffer, and Platform, The Wharton Patent Switch, and the Westinghouse Air-Brake, forming in conjunction with a perfect double track and road-bed a combination of safeguards against accidents which have rendered them practically impossible.

Pullman Palace Cars are run on all Express Trains from New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington, to Chicago, Cincinnati, Louisville, Indianapolis, and St. Louis.

WITHOUT CHANGE,

and to all the principal points in the far West and South with but one change of cars. Connections are made in Union Depots, and are assured to all important points. The Scenery of the Pennsylvania Route is admitted to be unsurpassed in the world for grandeur, beauty, and variety. Superior refreshment facilities are provided. Employes are courteous and attentive, and it is an inevitable result that a trip by the Pennsylvania Railroad must form

A Pleasing and Memorable Experience.

Tickets for sale at the lowest rates at the Ticket Offices of the Company in all important cities and towns.

FRANK THOMSON, L. P. FARMER,
General Manager, General Passenger Agent,
C. S. HALDEMAN, New England Agent,
203 and 205 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 80 CENTS. Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the fine list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

THE INDEX AS AN ADVERTISING MEDIUM.

Testimony of one who has tried it.

FLORENCE, Iowa, Jan. 5, 1878.
... THE INDEX is the best advertising medium which I have tried.
E. C. WALKER.

THE NEWBURY STREET SCHOOL will be re-opened for its twelfth year October 2. Address

Miss M. S. DEVEREUX,

34 NEWBURY STREET, BOSTON.

Pupils received into the family under the special care of Miss M. S. Devereux and Miss Lucretia P. Hale.
References: Rev. Dr. Orville Dewey, Sheffield, Mass.; Rev. E. E. Hale, Rev. J. F. Clarke, Hon. Nathaniel Sillsbee, Dr. Oliver W. Holmes, Mr. Henry E. Raymond, Boston; Prof. Benjamin Pierce, Cambridge, Mass.; Mr. A. O. Richards, Irvington, N.Y.; Mr. H. R. Bishop, New York.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF
O. E. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
R. H. RANNEY,
F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

A REMARKABLE BOOK.

A MODERN SYMPOSIUM.

SUBJECTS:

The Soul and Future Life.

By Mr. Frederic Harrison, Hon. Roden Noel, E. H. Hutton, Lord Selborne, Prof. Huxley, Canon Barry, Lord Blackford, Mr. W. E. Greg, Rev. Baldwin Brown, and Dr. W. G. Ward.

The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief.

By Sir James Fitz-James Stephen, Prof. Clifford, Lord Selborne, Rev. Mr. Martineau, Mr. Frederic Harrison, the Dean of St. Paul's, the Duke of Argyll, Dr. W. G. Ward, Prof. Huxley, and E. H. Hutton.

1 Vol. Crown, 8vo. Cloth, neat, $1.25.

This volume contains the scholarly utterances of the leading scientists and philosophers of Great Britain on two of the most important subjects of the century.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass., for

TRACTS.

I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.

II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.

III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.

IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.

V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13 and 20, 1873.)

VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles E. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II., III., IV., V., VI., 10 cts. each; ten for 80 cts.; one hundred, $8.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS for 1872, '73, '74, '75, '76, and '77. Five cents each.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $4 outfit free. Address H. HALLITT & Co., Portland, Maine.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

SINGLE BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

for the years 1871, 1872, 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877 (Vols. 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8) can be furnished on application at this Office. PRICES—volumes for 1871 and 1872, $2.50; volumes for 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, $3.00. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

THE BEST PORTRAIT OF THOMAS PAINE.

Engraved by the famous W. Sharpe from Romney's celebrated portrait—

Helotype Copy

by James R. Osgood & Co., of Boston. This is a beautiful work of art, and by all odds the very best likeness of Thomas Paine to be found. It is 10x8 inches in size, and will be mailed post-paid on receipt of $1.00. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE OF AMERICA.

1. EQUAL RIGHTS IN RELIGION. Contains an Historical Account of the Liberal League movement; a full Report of the Centennial Congress of Liberals at Philadelphia, July 1 to 4, 1876, with Essays by F. E. Abbot, James Parton, B. F. Underwood, and others; the Constitution of the National Liberal League, List of Charter Members, etc., etc. Octavo, pp. 190. Cloth, $1.50; paper, 75 cents.
2. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES, adopted at Philadelphia, July 4, 1876. With Resolutions of the Congress, Extracts from Letters by Distinguished Citizens, Constitution of the National Liberal League, etc. Adapted for gratuitous distribution by friends of the cause. Octavo, 24 pp. Single copies, 3 cts.; 10 copies, 15 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.
3. PRIVILEGE FOR NONE—JUSTICE FOR ALL. Contains the N. L. L. Platform and Resolutions adopted at Rochester, Oct. 26, 1877, full information how to organize Local Leagues, etc. Twenty-page tract for the use of workers. Single copies, 5 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.

ADDRESS

National Liberal League of America,

231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON.

FROTHINGHAM'S WORKS.

THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY. An Essay. Third Edition—Revised. Price $1.50.

"Nobody can peruse this book without respect for the learning, mental honesty and skill in the statement of his convictions, possessed by the author, and for the essential integrity and philanthropic tendency of his spirit."—Springfield Republican.

"A profoundly sincere book, the work of one who has read largely, studied thoroughly, reflected patiently. . . . It is a model of scholarly culture and of finished and vigorous style."—Boston Globe.

THE CHILD'S BOOK OF RELIGION. For Sunday-schools and Homes. Price $1.00.

THE SAFEST CREED, AND OTHER DISCOURSES. 12mo, Cloth, $1.50.

Not "food for babes," but full of suggestion for earnest and thoughtful men.

STORIES FROM THE LIPS OF THE TEACHER. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"The Parables are so re-told as to absorb the attention of the reader, and to fasten upon the mind what the writer believes to have been the impression the Saviour meant to convey. It is in style and thought a superior book, and will interest alike young and old."—Wm's Herald (Methodist).

STORIES OF THE PATRIARCHS. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"A work of culture and taste; it will be welcome to all ages, and gives the sublimest lessons of manhood in the simple language of a child."—Springfield Republican.

BELIEFS OF THE UNBELIEVERS. A Lecture. 12mo, Cloth, $1.00.

TRANSCENDENTALISM IN NEW ENGLAND. A History. With sketches and studies of Emerson, Alcott, Parker, Margaret Fuller, the Brook-Farm Community, etc. 8vo, Cloth extra, with steel portrait of the author, $2.50.

THE LIFE OF THEODORE PARKER. 8vo. With Portrait, $3.00.

The New York Tribune closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

THE CRADLE OF THE CHRIST. A Study in Primitive Christianity, illustrating the prime importance of the Messianic Idea in the New Testament, as the key to the development of Christianity from Judaism. Octavo, Cloth, $1.75.

Mailed, post-paid, on receipt of price, by THE INDEX 231 Washington St., Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 9.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, NOV. 14, 1878.

WHOLE NO. 464

LIBERAL LEAGUE PLATFORM

For the Presidential Election of 1880,

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbathian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.

2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.

3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

N. B.—The nomination of candidates upon the above platform was postponed to a future Congress of the National Liberal League.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday or the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

GLIMPSES.

THEY ARE OVERDOING it in New Haven. It is not very shrewd to force so big a dose of theology into the children, especially as the doctors disagree. How much pains bigots take to evade the simple requirements of justice! They will have to meet them in the end. The schools will at last be made secular.

THE HERESY-HUNTERS of Chicago are busily at work on Dr. Thomas, a popular Methodist preacher of that city. The wicked man does not believe in vicarious atonement, or plenary inspiration, or everlasting punishment! It is high time to cremate the criminal, and dispatch him on a tour of discovery in the other world. This world is suffering for lack of an explorer like Stanley in those torrid regions.

A MAN named F. W. Mixers, at the time of the Syracuse Congress, took a drink of blue vitriol at Rochester, mistaking it for water, but fortunately recovered under medical treatment. Did it protect him in the least to suppose that he was swallowing water instead of poison? The honest liberals who unsuspectingly drank the dose of "repeal" at Syracuse will find it worse than blue vitriol, unless they protect themselves in season by withdrawal. That is the only medical treatment that will avert the effects of the poison.

THE "REV. A. F. BEARD, D.D.," in the Christian Union of November 6, asserts that among the "avowed purposes" of the "second annual call of the National Liberal League" were "the denial of the Bible as a book of divine authority, the denial of personal immortality—of Christianity, in short, . . . the destruction of Christianity." Again he asserts: "Here is a Society which declares that Humanity is God, and seeks to prove that man is kin to the beasts by his body and is not kin to God by his spirit." These assertions are unqualifiedly untrue. If "the Rev. A. F. Beard, D.D.," has not intended to falsify, he will recall them.

PROFESSOR ROMANES, in his address before the British Association, was decidedly sarcastic: "A pike requires three months to learn the position of a sheet of glass in its tank; and when once the association is established, it is never again disestablished, even though the sheet of glass be taken away. From which we see that a pike is very slow in forming his ideas and then again in unforming them, thus resembling many respectable members of a higher community, who spend one-half of their lives in assimilating the obsolete ideas of their fathers, and through the rest of their lives stick to those ideas as the only possible truths. They can never learn when the hand of science has removed a glass partition."

WHAT HAS the New York Independent to say to this statement of the Albany Argus? "Judge Gilderleeve, of New York City, has decided in a recent case that no guilt attaches to the man invited into a criminal action by an official who issues the invitation to the crime for the purpose of punishing it. The decision has particular interest for the Westport ex-postmaster who was enticed by a government detective into an offence, and then prosecuted for committing it. Also, for those persons in Stamford and Norwalk who were induced by detectives, imported in the former instance by a clergyman, to sell liquor, and then prosecuted for selling it. Morally, the procurement of crime is crime, and it should be made such in law."

THE NEW YORK Sun, pointing out how the Protestant and Catholics are already beginning to wrangle over the fruits of their victory on the school question, adds: "And now the Jews of New Haven come forward to say that they would like to be consulted in regard to the liturgy to be used in the public schools. The Rev. Dr. Kleeberg, the Jewish rabbi, avers that it is unjust to attempt to formulate any worship for tax-supported schools to which all parties are not agreed. The Jews of New Haven, he adds, have three hundred children in the public schools, and mean to present their view of the prayer question to the Board of Education, although they do not fear that anything in the manual which may be adopted will have a proselyting effect upon their offspring. So far the attempt to frame a style of prayer that will satisfy even Christians of all sorts seems to be a sad failure, and now that the Jews claim a hearing the prospect of a harmonious arrangement is more distant than ever."

THE LIBERAL LEAGUE ideas are exerting their influence more and more. In San Francisco, a "large and enthusiastic meeting at Horticultural Hall" recently adopted these strong resolutions:—

Whereas, One of the chief fundamental principles on which this Government is founded in this Republic is full freedom of opinion on religious subjects; and,

Whereas, It is the duty of the State to protect the rights of conscience and give no preference to any particular form of religious belief; and,

Whereas, History proves that all ecclesiastical interference in State affairs is dangerous to liberty:

Resolved, That we, the people of San Francisco, in mass meeting assembled, declare ourselves utterly opposed to the persistent agitation of religious zealots who attempt to force the State into a recognition of their narrow dogmas and peculiar observances.

Resolved, That the entire separation of Church and State is the will of the American people; it is the law of the land, and should ever remain so, practically and not theoretically.

Resolved, That our delegates to the Constitutional Convention are hereby instructed to earnestly oppose, with all their ability, all attempts to engraft upon the Constitution any and every clause looking to a recognition of what is called observance of the "Christian Sabbath," or any form of religious belief.

THE NEW YORK Christian Union of October 30 said: "Our information as to the proceedings of the once famous but rapidly becoming infamous 'National Liberal League,' at its Second Annual Congress in Syracuse, reaches us through a telegraphic report in the New York Times. The result has more than justified all that the Christian Union has said respecting the party which engineered the Faneuil Hall meeting, attempted to give itself respectability by securing as a figure-head the Hon. Elizur Wright, of Boston, and while disavowing free-love doctrines fraternizes with the men and women who hawk about free-love literature and canonize Mr. Heywood, who has happily fallen a martyr to the not yet obsolete public sentiment against obscenity in art and literature. The meeting abandoned from the first its old-time themes, dropped its rather tame tirades against the injustice of Sabbath legislation and the employment of chaplains by the government, and waxed hot in a discussion over the laws for the repression of licentious literature. Finally, the party which whispers its disapprobation of such literature and howls its indignation at all attempts to repress it carried the convention; and the party of decency, headed by Mr. Francis E. Abbot of THE INDEX, and numbering a little over a third of the whole members in attendance, withdrew in a body. Whether they will return again, or whether the somewhat minute National League is to be divided into two smaller National Leagues, was at last reports still under consideration. Mr. Abbot and so far as we know those associated with him are men of high moral character and earnest purposes; and widely as every Christian believer must differ from him in his whole philosophy of life—social, political, and religious—it is impossible not to feel a combined sentiment of pity and respect; pity for one who finds himself and his principles betrayed for the use of such vile purposes, and respect for the courageous battle which he has made against the attempted perversion."

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE OF AMERICA. OFFICERS.

President.
FRANCIS E. ABBOT.	Boston, Mass.
Vice-Presidents.
HON. E. P. HURLBUT.	Albany, N. Y.
HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL.	Boston, Mass.
HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES.	St. Louis, Mo.
HON. HENRY BOOTH.	St. Louis, Mo.
HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN.	Chicago, Ill.
HON. ELIZABETH WRIGHT.	Boston, Mass.
HON. O. K. PROTHINGHAM.	New York.
MR. WM. J. POTTER.	New Bedford, Mass.
MR. E. P. HALLOWELL.	Boston, Mass.
MR. JAMES PARTON.	Newburyport, Mass.
MR. F. SCHUBENMANN-POTT.	San Francisco, Cal.
HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE.	Providence, R. I.
REV. M. J. SAVAGE.	Boston, Mass.
RABBI E. FELSANTHAL.	Chicago, Ill.
REV. W. H. SPENCER.	Sparks, N. Y.
MR. SAMUEL L. HILL.	Florence, Mass.
MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH.	Detroit, Mich.
MR. KARL HEINZ.	Editor of "Der Pioneer," Boston.
MR. MORRIS SEAY.	Editor of "The Investigator," Boston.
RABBI ISAAC M. WISE.	Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
MR. MORITZ ELLINGER.	Editor of "Jewish Times," New York.
REV. ROBERT COLLIER.	Chicago, Ill.
COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.	Peoria, Ill.
DR. T. L. BROWN.	Binghamton, N. Y.
HON. R. S. MOORE.	Franklin, Pa.
ELDER P. W. EVANS.	Mount Lebanon, N. Y.
MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON.	New York City.
MRS. AMY POST.	Rochester, N. Y.
MRS. ELIZABETH ADY STANTON.	Tenafly, N. J.
MRS. RALLIE HOLLEY.	Lottsburgh, Va.
JOSEPH McDONOUGH.	Albany, N. Y.
RABBI MAX SCHLESINGER.	Albany, N. Y.
Secretary.
W. H. HAMLEN.	231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.
Assistant Secretary.
MISS JANE P. TITCOMB.	142 Chandler St., Boston.
Treasurer.
J. A. J. WILCOX.	3 Pemberton Square, Boston.
Board of Directors.
J. A. J. WILCOX.	W. H. HAMLEN.
F. E. ABBOT.	C. D. B. MILLS.
D. G. ORANDON.
Executive Committee.
Alabama.	J. H. HALLEY, Selma.
Arkansas.	JOHN ABBOTT, Monticello.
California.	J. L. HATCH, San Francisco.
Colorado.	DAVID T. BEALS, Granada.
Connecticut.	GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
Delaware.	JOSEPH D. GORLEY, Greenville.
Florida.	T. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprise.
Georgia.	DR. A. A. BELL, Madison.
Idaho.	DR. A. G. HUMPHREY, Galesburg.
Indiana.	N. D. WATKINS, Xenia.
Iowa.	J. C. MICHELER, Adel.
Kansas.	JOHN FARNSWORTH, Fort Scott.
Kentucky.	S. B. CLARK, Hillsboro.
Louisiana.	EMERSON BENTLEY, New Orleans.
Maine.	DR. W. H. BROWN, Bangor.
Maryland.	J. S. RUSSELL, New Market.
Massachusetts.	W. H. SAWYARD, Boston.
Michigan.	KARL SCHUMMANN, Detroit.
Minnesota.	J. B. BASSETT, Minneapolis.
Missouri.	E. PETERSON, St. Louis.
Nebraska.	W. E. CUPPLAND, Lincoln.
Nevada.	V. G. BARRETT, White Rock.
New Hampshire.	WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
New York.	FRANCIS W. ORVIS, Pastic.
North Carolina.	J. W. THORNE, Warren.
Ohio.	E. D. STARK, Cleveland.
Oregon.	SAMUEL COLE, Humboldt Basin.
Pennsylvania.	G. W. BALDWIN, Lancaster.
Rhode Island.	GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
South Carolina.	F. W. FULLER, Columbia.
Tennessee.	DR. E. E. PALMER, Chattanooga.
Texas.	DR. L. J. RUSSELL, Harrisville.
Vermont.	L. HAUGHTON, North Benning.
Virginia.	L. SPAULDING, Norfolk.
West Virginia.	DR. A. M. DEBT, Weston.
Wisconsin.	ROBERT C. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
Dakota.	D. P. WILCOX, Yankton.
District of Columbia.	W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
Utah.	W. FERGUSON, Provo City.
Wyoming.	NORMAN S. PORTER.
Finance Committee.
D. G. ORANDON, Chairman.	Chelsea, Mass.
MRS. SARAH B. OTIS.	137 Warren Avenue, Boston.
HARLAN P. HYDE.	231 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES

Chartered by the National Liberal League of America.

FLORENCE, MASS.—President, Seth Hunt; Secretary, Clarence E. Brown.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Florence Liberal League.

N. Y.—The above is an acknowledgment of the fact that a charter is due and will be sent as soon as possible. Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues originally chartered by the "National Liberal League" will receive charters from the "National Liberal League of America" without extra charge, if they send a certified copy of their vote to accept the following invitation:—

"Resolved, That all Local Leagues that approve the formation of the National Liberal League of America are invited to dissolve their connection with the old League, and to join this League."

AMONG THE WASHINGTON RELICS which lately came into the possession of the government, is a ledger in which the Father of his Country kept his personal accounts for a number of years. The book is reported as full of odd items which an admiring country will be astonished to hear about at this late day, although a century ago they may have been well enough. It is recorded in the handwriting of the Father himself how much that illustrious man lost or won at cards, the sums he expended for play-tickets for himself and friends when he went to town, and what it cost him for hair powder, black silk stockings, as well as for claret, which is as favorite a beverage during the warm season now as it was in the stirring times just before the Revolution, although the men of the present day are able to economize some on hair-powder and black silk stockings. There are indications in some parts of the unique accounts that the man who was first in the hearts of his countrymen never missed a horse-race, if he could help it; and he seems to have been a common kind of human being enough to bet on the wrong horse more than was good for one side of his ledger. Perhaps, in the interest of this gentleman's reputation, the government had better not dig up any more relics of the Father of his Country. It would be shocking in the extreme to see our young men growing up in imitation of him, and our Presidents all trying to become second Washingtons.—Ec.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

The Liberty of Printing.

AN ADDRESS AT THE SECOND ANNUAL CONGRESS OF THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, ON SATURDAY, OCT. 26, 1878.

BY THE HON. E. P. HURLBUT,
OF ALBANY, N. Y.

MR. PRESIDENT, AND BRETHREN OF THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE:

Ladies and Gentlemen,—My subject is "The Liberty of Printing"—a matter of the utmost concern to an enlightened age, and priceless in a land of freedom; and should I stumble under its weight, by reason of age or infirmity, I trust that, in your charity, I may have credit at least for good intentions, which are considered by some as not a mean order of talents.

The Liberty of Printing—what is it? It is, speaking figuratively, to enjoy an intellectual atmosphere as free as the material one which we breathe, being on our guard against impurities.

It is to stimulate and be stimulated by the oxygen and ozone of the cultured human intellect, avoiding the deadly malaria lurking in the marshes and sewers lying at the base of the depraved mind.

It is the parent of science, the educator of our race, the unfettered moral and intellectual giant, under whose tread and at whose call mankind have torn the serf's collar from their necks, broken the chains of kings and emperors, and compelled Pope, prelate, and priest to give a reason for the faith that is in them, or thenceforth to resign their leadership of mankind.

In France it demolished the Bastille; in Spain it abolished the Inquisition, and in New England Cotton Mather as an "institution"; although the latter died hard, maintaining with his latest breath "that there is a God, a devil, and witches."

Public sentiment, stimulated by the press, abolished the slave trade in Great Britain, slavery in her West India colonies, and finally slavery in these United States. It consolidated Italy, and shut up the viceroy of heaven in the Vatican. Without the liberty of printing, a democratic republic cannot exist; a plea for the former is a plea for its life.

Thus knowledge, science, virtue, human enlightenment, and progress—law, order, and free government—are founded on books, as the world was once fabled to rest on Atlas. We have been taught to reverence the Book; let us rather hold all good books to be sacred.

But all books are not good; and here we encounter a difficulty which the wisest philosophers, jurists, and statesmen have been greatly embarrassed in their attempts to remove.

Attend to one of the most gifted of mankind, treating of this subject. "I deny not" (says he) "but that it is of the greatest concernment in the Church and Commonwealth to have a vigilant eye how books demean themselves, as well as men, and thereafter to confine, imprison, and do sharpest justice on them as malefactors; for books are not absolutely dead things, but do contain a progeny of life in them, to be as active as that soul whose progeny they are; nay, they do preserve as in a vial the purest efficacy and extraction of that living intellect that bred them. I know they are as lively and as vigorously productive as those fabulous dragon's teeth, and, being sown up and down, may chance to spring up armed men."

"And yet, on the other hand, unless wariness be used, as good almost kill a man as a good book; who kills a man kills a reasonable creature, God's image; but he who destroys a good book kills reason itself, kills the image of God, as it were, in the eye. Many a man lives a burden to the earth; but a good book is the precious life-blood of a master spirit, embalmed and treasured up on purpose to a life beyond life. It is true, no age can restore a life, whereof, perhaps, there is no great loss; and revolutions of ages do not oft recover the loss of a rejected truth, for the want of which whole nations fare the worse. We should be wary, therefore, what persecutions we raise against the living labors of public men,—how we spill that seasoned life of man, preserved and stored up in books; since we see a kind of homicide may be committed, sometimes a martyrdom; and if it extend to the whole impression, a kind of massacre, whereof the execution ends not in the slaying of an elemental life, but strikes at the ethereal and fifth essence, the breath of reason itself,—slays an immortality, rather than a life."

Thus wrote that great scholar, statesman, and poet, John Milton, on "The Liberty of Unlicensed Printing." His argument was designed to overthrow a statute, then in full force in England, "To regulate printing, that no book, pamphlet, or paper shall be henceforth printed, unless the same shall be first approved and licensed by such, or at least one of such, as shall be thereto appointed." The statute once abolished, he claimed that all printing should be free,—except that authors should be held responsible for the abuse of their freedom; or, to use his own words,—that the law should "thereafter confine, imprison, and do sharpest justice on them as malefactors," for the printing of offensive books.

But how are we to enjoy the benefit of good books without incurring the evil of bad ones?

In the olden time, it was attempted to draw the line in Greece; and books which were regarded as atheistical and blasphemous, or libellous, were burned, and the authors banished. Of books tending to voluptuousness, they took no heed; and an ancient poet complained that for this reason there was a dearth of chastity.

Ancient Rome did but little on the subject; some books were condemned and burnt,—books that were blasphemous,—but a censorship was never established until after the invention of printing, when the Popes were alarmed at its influence in the diffusion of knowledge. They prohibited the printing of certain heretical books, and forbade their subjects to read them, by their famous Index, under pain of censure or excommunication.

This censorship spread over Europe like a malarious atmosphere, until even liberty-loving England at last embraced it. But as she was the last to adopt, so, let it be remembered to her honor, that she was the first to abolish it; and now, so far as I know, the main, if not the only restrictions, which are in practical operation on the liberty of the press in that country are in reference to libels on private character, and obscene books, prints, drawings, and pictures.

In these United States, there has never existed a censorship of the press; but of late it has been compelled to attend to a grim farce, in which a notable Paul Pry has been the sole actor. Such has been the success of his performances, that he has completely "brought down the house"—but mainly, I trust, on his own head. Now, while I do not object to the ostensible aim and object of this procedure,—to wit, the suppression of obscene literature,—I protest, in the name of liberty and human rights, against the course and manner of it, as low and mean, too cunning to be innocent, too sharp to be honest, oppressive, and at war with the whole theory of administration in a free government.

Let us examine this subject, with a view to secure the just freedom of the press, and at the same time to prevent so much of its licentiousness as is practicable. I know this is delicate ground, and is rendered doubly so under our complicated system of government; so that we need all the lights of the law, and of human experience and philosophy, in order to achieve success.

Now, as I have said, England intends that her press shall be free; and yet in the reign of her present beneficent queen she has passed statutes against obscene books, pictures, etc., and endeavored to suppress them.

The wilful exposing of an obscene print, or indecent exhibition, is an indictable offence at common law, ranking with the indecent exposure of the person. As there is no absolute freedom for man in the social state, so there is and can be none for the press. All social and moral freedom is limited by rights. There is a natural, and there is a civil freedom; and the latter only is accorded to man in the social state. The first, if he were the only ape-like man existing at the beginning of our evolution, was absolutely free. But the moment he came to have peers, he found he had to conduct within certain limits, which respected the rights and feelings of others, or he would be treated not as a respectable Adam, but rather as the first "tramp."

At length, after long ages of experience in the social state, the idea of not doing to another what he would not have done to himself became seated in the fibres of his brain, and was transmitted by heredity; so that now the essence of all morality and all law may be summed up in a precept of eight words, and can be taught without express revelation or a burdensome priesthood: to wit,—Be just and kind to all sensitive beings.

There is, as I was saying, no liberty in the social state which has not respect to others' rights and feelings. You may not slander a man or woman, without being amenable to the law; and yet this responsibility, which is a decided infringement of the absolute freedom of speech, obtains in every State in the Union.

The Constitutions of these States all, however, declare that speech shall be free; but by what language do they declare it? In this—to wit: "Every citizen may freely speak, write, and publish his sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of that right; and no law shall be passed to restrain or abridge the liberty of speech or of the press." And in the New York Constitution, it is written that "in all prosecutions or indictments for libels, the truth may be given in evidence"—clearly showing that the Constitutional freedom of speech and of the press, thus secured to every citizen, was to be limited by the rights of others; that libellers should be held responsible as for an abuse, and that the just restraint and punishment of the licentious exercise of that freedom was not to be regarded as a violation of it.

If by the words, "being responsible for the abuse of that right," it were intended to limit such abuse to libels on private character, as some contend, why did not the framers of the Constitution say so in exact words, instead of employing a phraseology which implied a great deal more? They were familiar with the common law, which went further, and condemned as offenders as well the authors of obscene prints, drawings, and pictures as others who offended against good morals and manners.

The Constitution of Louisiana in the days of Edward Livingston declared that, "Printing presses should be free to every person who undertakes to examine the proceedings of the Legislature, or any branch of the government; that the free communications of thoughts and opinions are one of the invaluable rights of man, and that every citizen may freely speak, write, and print on any subject, being responsible for the abuse of that liberty."

Mr. Livingston was appointed a commissioner to frame a criminal code under this Constitution. He was a truly great man, statesman, and jurist. No American lawyer ever enjoyed a higher reputation, either at home or abroad. He was a firm supporter of the liberty of the press, and his code provided penalties against its infringement. He was liberal in his views of religion, and expressly provided, for the first time in this country, that the religious opinion of a witness should neither affect his competency nor his credibility. His code as reported was the admiration of jurists and publicists all over the world, and will endure as a perpetual monument to his fame. I feel the utmost assurance that, in framing the law on this subject, Mr. Livingston weighed most critically all the objections that can be raised against a law punishing the authors of obscene prints. While deliberating on the provisions of the common law as to the offences of a moral nature, he had doubts and misgivings as to what portion of them he would embody in his code; and, "while yet he had formed no decision," he wrote to a learned doctor of the civil law, expressing his doubts and difficulties, asking for advice and suggestion, and saying that one of his embarrassments arose from "the difficulty of defining the offence." He objected to the "general expression of the English law," as "putting too much power in the hands of a fanatic judge with a like-minded jury." But after full reflection, he at last settled upon the following as a safe and salutary law, and reported it to the Legislature of Louisiana for enactment.

Title sixteen of his code concerns "Offences against Morals," and the second chapter of this title provides for the punishment of "Offences against Decency," the first section whereof is as follows:—

"If any one shall make, publish, or print any obscene print, picture, or written or printed composition, manifestly designed to corrupt the morals of youth, or shall designedly make any indecent or obscene exhibition of his person, or the persons of others, by which pudicity" (modesty or chastity) "is offended, he shall be imprisoned not more than six months, or fined not more than one thousand dollars, or both; and the imprisonment, or a part of it, shall be in close custody."

This statute he considered to be in entire harmony with the liberty of the press, as secured by the American Constitutions; and I emphatically concur in his opinion, and see now how wise and guarded is the law he proposed. The print or picture must be "obscene." The instinct of every man and woman of ordinary intellect and common modesty defines the meaning of that word. You seem to need hardly any explanation about it, any more than you do to define the peculiar odor of that animal of which this country is so happy as to enjoy the monopoly, and known to our natural history as mephitis Americana. Your sense of smell defines his odor. So in the case of an obscene picture; you look at it, and turn away offended, disgusted. You read the obscene book, and are shocked in every modest fibre of your brain. If you need any further guide, the common law everywhere prevalent will supply illustrative cases.

But this wise and cautious law-giver did not stop with the one word "obscene"; the book or print must also be "manifestly designed to corrupt the morals of youth"—the author having the wisdom to foresee that any further abridgment of the liberty of the press would work more evil than good; while the suppression of obscene prints, designed, or mainly tending, to corrupt the morals of youth, was such a beneficial work as no law-giver could properly neglect.

There are those who demand that the statute shall define what it means by "obscenity." With jurors in general it would not be necessary, and it requires their verdict in order to convict. I confess I have not the capacity to define it by words, so as to preclude all possibility of error in the courts. That cannot be done for any law. Perhaps the only thing that can be done would be to specify certain prints that shall not be deemed obscene, which would be saying what is not rather than what is obscenity. You see the difficulty when the law is applied to pictures, in which case you would have to give illustrations, in order to be definite, and your statute book itself would become pictorial and immoral at once. The picture defines itself, and so do most obscene prints. A lawyer would say, after adopting Mr. Livingston's provision, leave it to the juries and the courts under the common law, and be sure you have intelligent juries and competent judges.

I have no objection, however, to a proviso by which it should be declared that an argument or treatise written in sincerity and good faith—in which no obscene words should be employed, although its doctrines, if carried into practice, would have a corrupting influence—should not be deemed within the meaning of the statute against obscene prints; but I feel assured that, when we narrow down the offence, as in the Louisiana code, we shall be reasonably secure from dangerous constructions.

A case has arisen in which the author of a pamphlet, without employing an obscene word, has advocated a course of conduct between the sexes utterly subversive of civilization, the family, and the State; leading to a return to the manners of the ape-like man, or rather to those of the man-like ape. It is a clear case of inverse evolution; of an author, as the phrase is, "exceedingly backward in coming forward," and particularly forward in going backward; but I should pause long before I held it to be obscene in a legal sense, or if so, such a species of obscenity as the law could condemn, without danger of trenching on the freedom of discussion and the proper liberty of printing. It might be indictable in the court of Judge Lynch, as "an assault and battery" on society and morals, and the culprit be punished according to his code, which some are inclined to regard as an implied and necessary supplement to the Democratic constitution of government.

When young and sanguine, I published certain essays on human rights, in which I remember to have argued in favor of their natural origin; and among other things I maintained that a man had a legal right to be a fool, since Nature made him so; but that society could not afford to allow him to be a knave, however Nature may have abused him. And now that I am old I see no reason to depart from that doctrine, and I would apply it to the liberty of printing. If there were nothing else to be considered but practicability, think what an army of martyrs would spring up in the literary world under a contrary rule! As the world even now can scarcely contain all the foolish books, including dollar and dime novels, so the prisons could by no means contain their authors; and moreover Dame Nature would have to get up a special evolution of Pillsbury's in order to supply the keepers!

Here, then, I take my stand. I will ask no further limitation of the liberty of printing than the code of Mr. Livingston creates, and I incline to accept no less. It is in harmony with the common law; it is constitutional; it is called for by the cultivated sentiments of mankind; and it is conservative of the morals of youth. If we maintain the residue of our criminal code, let us by no means omit that.

Having now drawn a line of separation between the liberty of the press and its licentious abuse in the State governments, we are prepared to look at the Constitution of the United States, and to see what rule is to obtain in our Federal Union.

We encounter at once the provision in the Constitution of the United States, that "Congress shall make no law abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press"; so that the question again recurs, What is this freedom of the press; and is it one in the States and in the Confederacy? I have labored in vain, unless I have shown that it is not absolute and unlimited; that the press is not at liberty to print false libels on private character, nor to publish obscene prints or pictures. This would not be freedom, but licentiousness; and it is nowhere written that laws cannot be passed by the proper authorities restraining that. That which the State Constitutions and laws ordain on this subject defines the freedom of the press. Nay, the framers of the Constitutions of the States and also of the United States, in employing the phrase "freedom of the press," used it in the sense well understood, and as defined by the writers on the common law; and let us see what they say on the subject. Sir William Blackstone, the most accomplished of them all, who wrote before any of these Constitutions were framed, holds this language:—

"The liberty of the press is indeed essential to the nature of a free State; but this consists in laying no previous restraints on publications, and not in freedom from censure for criminal matters when published. Every freeman has an undoubted right to lay what sentiments he pleases before the public; to forbid this is to destroy the freedom of the press; but if he publishes what is improper, mischievous, or illegal, he must take the consequences of his own temerity. To subject the press to the restrictive power of a licenser, as was formerly done both before and since the Revolution, is to subject all freedom of sentiment to the prejudices of one man, and make him the arbitrary and infallible judge of all controverted points in learning, religion, and government." He argues then in favor of punishing the licentiousness of the press, and concludes thus: "And to this we may add, that the only plausible argument heretofore used for the restraining the just freedom of the press, 'that it was necessary to prevent the daily abuse of it,' will entirely lose its force when it is shown (by a reasonable exertion of the laws) that the press cannot be abused to any bad purpose without incurring a suitable punishment; whereas it never can be used to any good one, when under the control of an inspector. So true it will be found that to censure its licentiousness is to maintain the liberty of the press."

Now, I hold that the phrase, "freedom of the press," means the same in the Federal and the State Constitutions, and in all nothing more than freedom from previous censorship; the States, and not the Federal Government, having the power to punish abuses.

And now assuming that the States where the printing is conducted by their laws condemn and punish obscene prints, can a paper containing matter condemned by such laws gain any new right or exemption by being placed in the mails? Is it suddenly cleansed there? The obscene print was not free at its birth, and can gain nothing by setting out on its travels through the mails. The stigma and the disability still rest on it. It was never free (except from a licenser), and can never become so until obscene literature becomes innocent and right by the common law and the statutes of the several States. And when that shall happen, it will be of little consequence what matter shall be printed or mailed, for law, reason, and morality will have departed from the land.

It is a maxim of the law, that a man shall gain nothing by his illegal act. A print that has no right to exist can claim no protection from the law, which does not cherish, but rather abates, nuisances. Shall the law, then, not only protect, but carry thousands of miles, and distribute to tens of thousands of people, prints which it condemns as infamous, and whose authors it punishes by fine and imprisonment? Shall the government become an accessory after the fact, and at the same time hold its lash over the head of the principal? This would be to the last degree unreasonable.

The State and Federal Governments together constitute a complete sovereignty over the press and the distribution of printed matter through the mails, and this would be the sum of their joint operations: the State would define and control the liberty of the press, would punish and condemn obscene prints, and imprison offenders; while the United States would circulate such prints to the utmost limits of the very State that forbids and punishes them. The State would fine the offensive author and printer, while the United States would take a fee from them, a reward as carrier, and assist their trade in corrupting the morals of youth. The State would have acted wisely; but Uncle Sam would have played either the knave or the fool, and he might devoutly cry "In God we trust" forever, and stamp it holly on every poor penny he has got, but he would share the fate of other hypocrites, for nobody would trust him!

Now the power to establish post-offices and post-roads, and to carry the mails, having been delegated as a Federal power, resides in the government of the United States, to the exclusion of the several States. In executing this power, the government is clothed with a limited sovereignty, and may do whatever is necessary and proper or conducive to the end of carrying the mails, so as to answer the intent and object of their institution. It may appoint and control its agents; may punish fraud, robbery, and other offences which obstruct, hinder, or prevent the success of the mail enterprise. When it punishes a robbery, or other offence against the mails, it is not for the purpose of a general correction of the public morals, or of enforcing any of the Ten Commandments, but to enable it to succeed in safely delivering the mails. It is the duty of the government to remove all obstacles to the complete and beneficial exercise of its power, which is useful, beneficial, and concerns all the people. It therefore punishes offences which interrupt, prevent, or embarrass its operations, lest it should fall short and fail of its duty.

But the power delegated to the general government was bestowed by the States, which made criminal the printing and sending abroad of obscene publications; and when they surrendered the power of carrying the mails, did they intend to destroy or defeat their own purposes, and to arm an enemy in the agent which they created that should destroy the efficacy of their own laws? Was it not expected that the power delegated should be so exercised as not only to be beneficial, but innocent in its operation? That in respect of the matter carried, the States and the United States should act in concert? That the latter should not disseminate what the former stamped with infamy?

Would the State itself, if carrying the mail, imprison the obscene author, and yet carry and distribute his filthy goods? And shall we hold to such a narrow construction of the Federal powers as will make the States and the United States thus play at cross-purposes? I think not.

By stuffing the mails with obscene matter, the service is made to exceed and overdo its proper office; to be harmful and a nuisance, rather than a benefit to the people; and it seems hardly to be straining a point to hold that, by the delegation of power to Congress to make all laws necessary and proper to carry into effect the powers conferred in reference to the mails, authority is desired to prevent as well the mischiefs of carrying obscene literature as those arising from mail robbery, so that the service should be protected as well from the dangers of excessive, as those of inadequate performance, and be not only useful, but harmless,—at least to such extent as not to be accessory to crime. It is but a mode, in either case, of protecting its limited sovereignty, and discharging its office with integrity and decent dignity.

The case is widely different from that presented in the days of Jackson, when Congress was agitated by a proposal to exclude printed articles, against slavery, from the mails. Slavery is not sanctioned by the law of Nature, nor by the common law, and can only obtain by local and wrongful legislation. Being contrary to natural right, and offensive to the just sentiments of the civilized world, it was universally lawful, and even commendable, to write and speak against it.

The exception in a few of the Southern States, created by unjust legislation, could not render a dissertation against slavery, written and printed in a free country, unlawful in itself. If the paper were innocent in its inception, by the law of the place where it had its origin, it did not lose its character by being placed in the mails. And so it is evident that Congress could not throw it out of the mails without trespassing on the right of property and abusing its power. The only act of repression could be done by the slave State after the mail service was completed. The paper was innocent when placed in the mails, innocent while being transported, and when delivered, and could only become offensive by force of a local law, operating on the person to whom the printed matter was addressed, after he had received it. No wonder that learned jurists and wise senators refrained from laying hands on such printed matter, and thrusting it out of the mails, as mentioned in the very able and ingenious argument of Mr. Wakeman, delivered at the late "Indignation Meeting" in Boston.

But the printed matter which I would exclude from the mails is unlawful in the place of its origin, unlawful during its transit, and unlawful at the place of its destination. Its preparation is a crime, its author a criminal, its possession and circulation a crime, in most, if not all, civilized countries, and wherever the common law prevails, or its spirit has been embodied in a statute; and if the carrier or distributor be a private person, he would be particeps criminis in judgment of law. And now shall we place the Federal Government in the same category?

This government assumes the burden of the mails; it may say when and where it will carry them, what it will carry, and what it will not; for it seems too clear for debate that a power to choose implies also a power to reject. And if there be a power to reject any printed matter—as I contend there is, if it be obscene and unlawful,—an incidental power exists to make that rejection effectual. This is usually done by the infliction of pains and penalties; and in the infliction of these the government proceeds, not as against moral offences, but offences against the proper regulation of the mail service. I concede that any step beyond this would be pure usurpation and tyranny on the part of the Federal Government.

It is a business, this carrying of the mails, within the competency of private persons. Let us imagine our Uncle Sam carrying the mail-bag on his own broad shoulders, having told everybody what he would carry, and what he would not, and a person should come and insist upon cramming his mail-bag with bad matter which the old gentleman had sworn he would not carry, I think our uncle would make no bones of settling the matter off-hand, pedibus et manibus, to the utter discomfiture of the assailant; and he would serve him right. It would be a mode, according to the rhetoric of such cases, of "putting a head on him"—an article of furniture which he would seem greatly to need.

It is conceded that a single undivided sovereignty like the Government of Great Britain can exclude obscene literature from the mails by seizing the foul prints, and the infliction of pains and penalties. But it is claimed that in our distribution of powers between the States and the Federal Government this authority has not been conferred on the latter. Where, then, can it be found? If reserved to the States, or the people, it is clearly not available; for no State can touch the mail service without trenching on a power it has in general terms delegated to Congress; and no popular mass can meddle with the mails without being guilty of riot. So it is left that, if the Congress of the United States has not the power to exclude obscene prints from the mails, this one item of sovereignty is lost, and our government has tied its hands, so as to be at the mercy of those who deal in obscene literature as a profession and business. A construction of the Federal Constitution which leads to such a conclusion is surely too narrow to be sound.

Now to my mind there seems to be nothing in the way of protecting the mails from foul matter but the fear of violating the freedom of the press; and as I trust you are by this time satisfied that there ought to be no obstacle in that, we come to the inquiry, What is the Federal Government to do in reference to obscene prints?

In my judgment, Congress should declare that such prints are not mailable matter; but in doing so should employ the word "obscene" only, following the language of the provision in the code of Mr. Livingston as to the corruption of youth; being exceedingly particular, so that no religious fanatic or visionary moralist could find a word or clause on which to base a persecution of anybody for God's sake!

A God of ordinary ability is supposed to be capable of taking excellent care of himself, and to scorn the assistance of a creature but imperfectly developed from the ape.

The law should then affix such a penalty as would be sufficient to deter people from mailing obscene publications, and no more; for the object is not to make a moral code, nor a penal code, nor enforce a creed, nor build up a catechism, but simply to protect the government in the fit and proper discharge of its function as mail carrier.

A fine of a moderate sum for the first offence would be sufficient, say not exceeding fifty or a hundred dollars; and for the second offence, imprisonment not exceeding six months. In all cases where punishment and penalties are inflicted, the legislature should be careful to observe the supreme law, which ordains that excessive fines shall not be imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted.

If the government should find it necessary to go further, and to seize the foul matter mailed (a delicate procedure, and one which nothing but necessity can warrant), it would encounter a provision in the Constitution securing the people against unreasonable searches and seizures, and forbidding warrants for that purpose except upon probable cause, and supported by oath. The people are not secure from all searches, but only from unreasonable ones, without probable cause and legal warrant.

So used are the people to this, that the first thing a plain man thinks of when he loses anything mysteriously is a search warrant. It is the one idea with him, as was an "alibi" in every case at law, with Tony, the venerable parent of Sam Weller.

It may be a very difficult process, but it can hardly be deemed "unreasonable," to search for and to seize prints whose aim is to corrupt youth, whose existence is a crime, and which are forced into the mails against the express injunction of the law. I will leave this to the mothers of the land; they have a right to be heard on this subject, and to have their feelings respected by the laws. Let their quick sense of fitness, their apt and delicate judgment, make the decision, and woe to that man and that nation that ventures to disregard it!

But if the government shall be compelled by the persistence of wrong-doers to seize the foul prints, how shall this be done? The only course which occurs to my mind, from what reflection I have been able to bestow on the subject, would be to commit the search to the several deputy post-masters, who should apply to a United States commissioner or judge for a warrant, and under that to seize the suspected prints, and carry them before the officer issuing the warrant, who should determine on reading or inspection whether obscene, and tending to corrupt the morals of youth, or not. If he held them obscene, the owner should have notice and a right of appeal to the Circuit Court, and thence to the Supreme Court of the United States; for no man should be thus deprived of his property, and stigmatized as a public offender, without the full benefit of a judicial trial.

It is better that obscene literature should prevail for a season than that any man, however humble, however depraved, should be deprived of his legal rights without due process, and the enlightened judgment of the law.

Brethren of the National Liberal League, you are organized to perform a necessary and a noble work,—no less than that of perfecting our system of free government, founded by a wise and virtuous generation, and intended to effect a perfect separation of the Church from the State. The task which you have assumed to execute is Herculean, taxing your strength and resources to the utmost. You have to make war on the myths, traditions, and prejudices of long ages. You have a thoroughly organized majority, misled by their spiritual guides, to contend against,—a majority which, though differing in many things, and forever disputing among themselves, nevertheless is always ready to unite against you, as a common enemy; and you see Catholic and Protestant hugging each other in sweet embrace, as of late in New Haven, while maintaining the Bible, prayer, and psalmody in the common schools. If all the discordant religious sects could unite, they would paralyze your efforts, render the idea of a purely secular government infamous, and make religion the parent and master of the State. The plan of our forefathers would be stamped out, and time might restore that grand Christian invention, the Inquisition.

Be sure, then, that you do nothing to unite and consolidate forces so dangerous to a free State. As yet you are not surrounded by such intelligence as will forgive your slightest mistake in reasoning, or error in morals. A believer can do with impunity what will excite the utmost horror if done by a sceptic. As such of you as have no Redeemer may not commit fraud nor forgery, nor rob a bank, nor poison, nor commit adultery with impunity, so you cannot commit a mistake, even in respect of the liberty of uncensored printing, without calling down on your heads and on your cause the loudest denunciations of the "unco gild." "Ah! ha!" would say those who pardon the offences of the godly, "It is just as we expected. These infidels oppose our holy religion from no other motive than to get rid of the moral restraints which it imposes; for you see that where two or three of them are gathered together, they incontinently betake themselves to reading and circulating The Fruits of Philosophy and Cupid's Yokes." And all the congregation would lift up their pious voices, and exclaim in the language of the immortal Widow Bedott, "O Elder Sniffles, how true that is!"

I entreat you, therefore, to be wise; and being in fact the true friends of morality and enlightened freedom, that you take no such position on the subject of the freedom of the press as will enable even a Jesuit to argue that you are the friends of licentiousness.

Above all things, reverence the family as founded in Nature, and tolerate nothing which can corrupt the morals of youth. All power, even the most salutary, is capable of being abused; but an argument based on its abuses cannot overthrow the power itself. If otherwise, no government could stand. Let imperfect laws be amended; let unjust ones be abolished; let abuses in administration be corrected; and when government appoints to office one who, like Satan, becomes—

"The tempter ere the accuser of mankind," a spy whose moral qualities fall below the requirements of even that mean office, let him, but not the government, be abolished.

Judge Hurlbut then read the following draft of a United States statute on this subject:—

A LAW TO PREVENT THE FORWARDING AND DISTRIBUTION OF OBSCENE LITERATURE BY THE MAILS.

SECT. I. Be it enacted, etc.

That there shall not be forwarded by the mails, nor distributed by any deputy post-master, any obscene print, picture, drawing, or printed composition, manifestly designed, or mainly tending, to corrupt the morals of youth.

SECT. II. If any person shall deliver at any post-office, with intent to have forwarded, or distributed, any obscene print, picture, drawing, or printed composition, mentioned in the preceding section, he shall be fined, for the first offence, not exceeding — dollars, and for the second or any subsequent offence shall be imprisoned not exceeding — months.

Provided however, that no printed book, argument, essay, treatise, or disquisition, put forth in sincerity and good faith, and in which no obscene words, phrases, or pictures shall be employed, although its doctrines or sentiments, if carried into practice, would have a bad influence on society or government, shall be deemed obscene within the meaning of this law.

A SPLIT IN THE LIBERAL LEAGUE.

The "irrepressible conflict" between the two wings of the Liberal League has culminated at last. For several months there has been a fierce contest between the Heywood faction on the one side, and on the other a minority headed by F. E. Abbot, editor of THE INDEX. The former party have endeavored to obtain the repeal of the Comstock postal law, which has so hindered the spread of obscene literature; the latter have opposed them, desiring that the law be amended, not repealed. At the convention of the League, which has been in session at Syracuse, this week, the majority prevailed, and elected officers of the Heywood party. Immediately Abbot and his friends seceded. "Judge E. P. Hurlbut, of Albany, declared he could no longer remain in the League after its action in the displacing of Abbot from the Presidency, and directed the President to strike his name from the roll. The members who seceded, led by Abbot and Judge Hurlbut, organized a new League, to be called the National Liberal League of America, and elected F. E. Abbot President. Fifty members of the old League, comprising the most intelligent and respectable portion, signed the Constitution of the new League."

The sympathies of all decent people must be with Abbot and his party, against whom all this fierce opposition has been excited simply because he was not willing to countenance the free circulation of obscene literature through the mails. We do not agree with a great many of Mr. Abbot's opinions; we are sorry for him because he thinks he has outgrown the Christian religion; and we hope that he will yet be converted to that faith. But we honor him for the stand he has taken against the lawless clique who think that "free thought" requires them to become the champions of indecency and vice; and we hope that his secession may have the effect of causing them to appear before the world in their true light, so that all decent persons may be warned away from them.—Milwaukee Christian Statesman, Oct. 31.

REPEAL—AMEND.

THE BOOK ON WHICH THE LIBERAL LEAGUE CONGRESS WENT TO PIECES.

Last year we published a petition to Congress, asking the repeal of certain sections of the law regulating the transmission of obscene literature in the United States mails. That petition was signed by several thousands, and, with others aggregating over fifty thousand signatures, was presented to Congress. We asked the signatures to the petition because we believed the law, which is better known as the Comstock law, was unconstitutional in some of its provisions, and oppressive. In this view our readers coincided, and all are of the same opinion still. Neither the Journal, nor a single subscriber, however, has any excuse to offer for those engaged in the dissemination of obscene literature, but will do all that is possible to suppress such traffic, and bring the vile utterers of the soul-debasing stuff to such punishment as shall prove reformatory. Not a single subscriber of the Journal signed that petition with a view to having the field left clear for these nefarious scoundrels to cultivate. All desired, and still desire, such laws as shall effectually squelch an evil which has grown to mammoth proportions. If the present law can be so amended as to relieve it of objectionable features, without impairing its effectiveness, we are willing to labor for such amendment, rather than for its repeal.

The active part taken by thousands of the best citizens in protesting against the law because they believe it to be, as it is now written, a dangerous precedent and tending towards an impairment of the inalienable rights of citizenship, seems to have encouraged the lepers who feed upon the profits of the forbidden traffic to believe that in the abrogation of the present law was their license, and that no new law would hold them with so firm a grip, and anyway things could be no worse for them. It is a most significant fact, deserving the serious attention of every law-abiding, moral citizen, that the movement for the repeal of the law has the unanimous and enthusiastic support of free-lovers, vendors of obscene literature, quack doctors, and the immoral, licentious element generally. Why is this? It must be because the law as it now stands is far more effective in breaking up the obnoxious traffic than has ever been the case before; for no respectable person will assert that this scandalous horde are actuated by a deep patriotism, or unselfish love of constitutional rights. Indeed, when such champions of repeal prate about the sanctity of citizenship, and fear it is to be debauched, the respectable citizen will interpret the sentiment as he sees it written in letters of living brass upon the countenance of each canting hypocrite: "I fear we cannot longer trench upon the sanctity of virtuous homes nor debauch the minds of the young for our profit and pleasure."

In view of the grave interests involved in the issue between repeal and amendment, and the knowledge that the National Liberal League Congress as a body would be far from a unit in its action on the matter, and the certainty that the bad blood which had been engendered by months of ill-natured bickerings would surely burst forth and flood the assemblage with disgrace, if decisive action was forced upon the Congress, it was well to postpone discussion.

The Committee on Resolutions, through their calm, clear-headed chairman, presented an able series of resolutions calculated to produce the desired effect, and the Congress adopted them.

Had the committee on the nomination of officers for the ensuing year been actuated solely by a desire to serve their country; had they held in abeyance their partisan feelings and pursued the policy likely to have secured the confidence of the great Liberal public, all would have been well. We know nothing about the "true inwardness" of the proceeding, and care less. When such cool, dispassionate, able, and patriotic men as G. E. Gordon, B. F. Underwood, C. B. D. Mills, Judge Hurlbut, and others, withdraw from the Congress, and solemnly declare there has been a breach of faith, such declaration will be believed by nine-tenths of the people. It seems to us inevitable that the new organization will soon embody an overwhelming majority of the liberals, who are in favor of a pure morality, united with civil and religious liberty.—Chicago Religio-Philosophical Journal, Nov. 9.

AFTER-DINNER ORATOR: "It's in the wonderful insight inter 'uman nature that Dickens gets the pull over Thackeray; but, on t'other hand, it's in the brilliant shafts o' satire, t'gether with a keen sense o' humor, that Dicky gets the pull over Thackens. It's just this: Thickery is the humorist, and Dackens is the satirist. But, after all, it's 'bsurb to in-stoot any comparison between Dackery and Thickens."

MR. CONWAY ON THE TRUE LOVE FETE.

Mr. Edward Truelove, imprisoned four months for selling a Malthusian pamphlet by Robert Dale Owen, had a welcome on his release from prison which will not have failed to make its impression. There has been far more and more wide-spread feeling about this affair than you are likely to have noted in America. Mr. Truelove is one of the most venerable booksellers in London. He is a man not only of unblemished character, but of singularly modest manners and unaggressive temper. He probably has not an enemy on earth. But by the necessity that the officials of the Vice Society should preserve their salaries by perpetually parading before the community as suppressors of vice, and through the timidity of jurors lest they should be proclaimed as supporters of vice, this excellent man was thrown into prison, and the Home Secretary had not the moral courage to stigmatize the wealthy puritans who pay the Vice Society detectives (without knowing that they have sunk to mere slanderers) by releasing him. He did not even mitigate the imprisonment. For a month Mr. Truelove had no bed to sleep on (for we do not live in the days of Howard), and for several months he was allowed no communication with his family. He was dealt with as a felon for doing what he honestly believed would preserve society from felons. It was a terrible blow to his devoted wife and to his lovely daughter, but they bore it nobly. They declined all offers of money and were satisfied with the warm sympathy extended to them from multitudes,—among these some members of Parliament, and others of high position. Mr. Truelove cared little for the physical hardships of his imprisonment. He says that his suffering was being cut off from communication with his family and friends. He did not know how it fared with his family, or how with others who were subjected to similar persecutions. When toward the close of his term the Governor of the prison was allowed to read to him his letters, and he learned that it had fared well with those he loved, he wept the first tears, and they were tears of joy. He will prepare some account of his imprisonment for publication.

His release was celebrated by a festivity at the Hall of Science, which was beautifully decorated and crowded with a company whose appearance was enough to attest the many social circles which have been moved by interest in this case. Many ladies had volunteered to decorate the hall with flowers and evergreen, and mottoes were on all sides, such as "Thorough," "Honor," "Welcome, brave Champion!" Many-colored flags were hung through the room, but they were not flags of England or of any country, nor did they hold antique devices. They were simply colored and decorative designs. Mr. Bradlaugh presided as President of the Secular Society, and Dr. Drysdale with him as President of the Malthusian League, and they were supported on the platform by as many gentlemen and ladies as it would hold, representing many shades of opinion, from Mrs. Besant on one side to a clergyman, the Rev. Stewart B. Headlam, on the other. There was great enthusiasm, and when Mr. Truelove came on the platform he was welcomed with prolonged cheers. There was excellent music, also. Mr. Bradlaugh made a stirring speech to Mr. Truelove, saying to him that while he was in jail one hundred memorials, bearing eleven thousand signatures, had been sent up to the Home Secretary, but they had all been treated with contempt. Then cries of "Shame!" resounded through the room. "Yes," cried Bradlaugh, "but the shame will not be ours, if at the next election that contempt is not answered, and the Tory Government made to receive what we owe it." At one point when Bradlaugh spoke of the honor we had come to pay him, Mr. Truelove said, "The cause." "Ay!" said the speaker; "but the cause cannot win save through the men who work and suffer for it; and in honoring our cause we honor you!" Loud cheers frequently interrupted this introductory speech, in the course of which Bradlaugh said that, though brief, Mr. Truelove's imprisonment had been the harshest ever suffered in defence of liberty of the press.

Some apprehension was felt by the many friends of Mrs. Besant at seeing her also on the platform. Since the severe ordeal through which she has passed she has suffered an alarming illness (brain fever), and has had to abstain from public work. It was evident that she ought not to have come to this meeting. She began by saying that she was not strong enough to speak at any length. She held in her hand a purse (it contained at the time £177, but will have reached £200 since). "We give it to you," she said, addressing Mr. Truelove, "not as payment for a courage that cannot be paid for; not for a loyalty which cannot be purchased; but as a sign of our reverence and gratitude. It is not gold I hand you in this purse, but the love and sympathy of men and women. But we must remember that though a step forward has been taken, the victory is not yet won. 'Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty' that is won; but liberty not won is far costlier. Already great has been the cost exacted by our oppressors. You, sir (turning to Mr. Truelove), they robbed of your liberty; your family they robbed of your love and care; me they have robbed of my child." As the beautiful young mother said this, and her voice lowered, there passed over the audience a feeling that not only called forth tears, but even made them tremble as branches agitated by a wind. The room was hushed in a deathlike stillness. "What is the next price we are to be called upon to pay?" she continued. "We know not. Yet one thing I know: so long as Liberty needs champions to battle for her, and sacrifices to worship her, so long also will there be found gallant spirits to fight for her, loyal hearts ready to lay their dearest on her shrine."

When the enthusiastic plaudits which followed these words, uttered in the most impressive manner of this strangely magnetic and eloquent woman, had subsided, they arose again as happier cheers to greet Mr. Truelove, who, however, said but few words, and evidently labored under strong feeling. He limited himself on this occasion to a hearty expression of gratitude. Other addresses followed, the most important being from Dr. Drysdale, who mentioned two distinguished professors—Bain, of Aberdeen, and Hunter, of University College, London—as strong sympathizers with the Malthusian League. The clergyman (Headlam) made an excellent speech. He said he was not a Malthusian, though he might be one, perhaps, if he had studied the question. He was there for three reasons: first, because we ought to reverence law and order, and in proportion to our reverence should be condemnation of their dishonor when an innocent man is punished for trying to do good; secondly, because the more he differed from a man the more did he desire that man's freedom to express his opinions,—it is they who gag thought who suffered in the end, not the gagged; thirdly, he felt strongly that the population question ought to be discussed; it is praiseworthy in them who have brought it forward, and all the more because it is a delicate one. Should not all try and help? He also declared that he was not alone in this opinion, but knew other clergymen who felt the need of such discussion.

The Secular Choral Union, at the close, sang a stirring "Song to the Men of England," to music by its conductor, an able German named Trousdale; after which Mr. Truelove had a good deal of hand-shaking to do. And so ended what I venture to predict will be the last gathering which will be here needed to pay honor to a prisoner so worthy of honor as Edward Truelove. — Cincinnati Commercial, Oct. 6.

CATHOLIC WORSHIP IN OUR PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

The Hartford Courant says that three Protestants of New Haven—ex-President Woolsey, Dr. Harwood, and the Rev. John E. Todd—have been in consultation with two Roman Catholics—Fathers Fitzpatrick and Murphy—and "have agreed upon the following manual, which is yet to be submitted to the Board of Education." It gives it as for the use of all the schools. Our own readers, to whom we gave the facts a fortnight ago, will easily recognize it as being only the form of worship agreed upon for those pupils who are Roman Catholics. We give it entire:

MANUAL.

(To be said kneeling.)

Teacher.—In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Amen.

Let us pray:

Direct, we beseech Thee, O Lord, all our actions by Thy holy grace, and by Thy assistance bring them to a happy issue, that every prayer and work of ours may always begin by Thee, and under Thy guidance may be finished, through Christ our Lord.

Children respond.—Amen.

Teacher.—Come, O Holy Ghost, replenish the hearts of Thy faithful and enkindle in them the fire of Thy love. Send forth Thy Spirit and they shall be created.

Children respond.—And Thou shalt renew the face of the earth.

Teacher.—Let us pray:

O God, who by the light of the Holy Ghost didst instruct the hearts of the faithful, grant us, we beseech Thee, through the same Holy Spirit, a love and relish of what is right and just, and a constant enjoyment of His consolation, who livest and reignest world without end.

Children respond.—Amen.

THE LORD'S PRAYER.

Teacher.—Our Father who art in Heaven, hallowed be Thy name; Thy will be done on earth

Children.—As it is in Heaven.

Teacher.—Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us; and lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil.

Children.—Amen.

THE ANGELIC SALUTATION.

Teacher.—Hail, Mary, full of grace, the Lord is with Thee; blessed art thou among women, and blessed is the fruit of thy womb, Jesus.

Children respond.—Holy Mary, Mother of God, pray for us sinners, now, and at the hour of our death.—Amen.

THE APOSTLES' CREED.

Teacher.—I believe in God, the Father Almighty, Creator of heaven and earth; and in Jesus Christ, His only Son, our Lord, who was conceived by the Holy Ghost, born of the Virgin Mary, suffered under Pontius Pilate, was crucified, dead, and buried. He descended into Hell; the third day he rose again from the dead; He ascended into Heaven, sitteth at the right hand of God the Father Almighty; from thence He will Children.—Come to judge the living and the dead.

Teacher.—I believe in the Holy Ghost; the Holy Catholic Church; the communion of Saints; the forgiveness of sins; the resurrection of the body; and life everlasting. Amen.

In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Amen.

Here the Ten Commandments, as found in Exodus xx., 1-17, will be repeated, either by the teacher alone or by the children in unison, all being seated. Finally a hymn chosen from the Selection will be sung by the pupils.

This is the manual of worship to be said every morning by the Catholic children wherever these reach thirty per cent. of the whole number of pupils, and a very good manual it is. It contains a pretty full body of divinity, and excellent prayers for help to secure rightness of character; and it has a peculiarly Roman Catholic quality in the response of the children "Holy Mary, Mother of God, pray for us sinners, now, and at the hour of our death." We find no fault with it in any respect, and we think that, the principle of religious teaching in the State schools being granted, Fathers Fitzpatrick and Murphy have probably prepared a better manual than the Protestant one.

But we disapprove utterly of either the Protestant or Catholic religion's being taught in the State's buildings, in the State's time, and at the State's expense. We simply present this manual to our Protestant people, and we repeat the question: Are you willing to teach Romanism in the public schools? Are you willing to pay for it? For you Protestants pay for having the children taught to pray "Holy Mary, Mother of God, pray for us sinners, now, and at the hour of our death." Are you willing to do it? Are you willing to purchase at such a price the privilege of adding just a little in the public schools to the religious teaching which you give your children in your churches? We are not, and we protest against such a perversion of the rights of the State. It is the first step to denominational schools, and the breaking up of our public-school system.—N. Y. Independent.

DR. ADAM CLARK, who had a strong aversion to pork, was called upon to say grace at dinner, where the principal dish was roast pig. He is reported to have said, "O Lord, if thou canst bless under the Gospel what thou didst curse under the Law, bless this pig."

Poetry.

WHEN THE MISTS HAVE ROLLED AWAY.

When the mists have rolled in splendor
From the beauty of the hills,
And the sunshine, warm and tender,
Falls in kisses on the rills,
We may read love's shining letter
In the rainbow of the spray;
We shall know each other better
When the mists have cleared away.

CHORUS.—We shall know, as we are known,
Never more to walk alone,
In the dawning of the morning,
When the mists have cleared away:
We shall know, as we are known,
Never more to walk alone,
In the dawning of the morning,
When the mists have cleared away.

If we err, in human blindness,
And forget that we are dust;
If we miss the law of kindness
When we struggle to be just,
Snowy wings of peace shall cover
All the anguish of to-day,
When the weary watch is over,
And the mists have cleared away.

CHORUS.—We shall know, etc.

When the allver mist has veiled us
From the faces of our own,
Oft we deem their love has failed us,
And we tread our path alone;
We should see them near and truly,
We should trust them day by day;
Neither love nor blame untuly,
If the mists were cleared away.

CHORUS.—We shall know, etc.

When the mists have ris'n above us,
As our Father knows his own,
Face to face with those that love us,
We shall know as we are known;
Love, beyond the orient meadows
Floats the golden fringe of day;
Heart to heart we'll bide the shadows
Till the mists have cleared away.

CHORUS.—We shall know, etc.

CASH RECEIPTS.

N.B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING NOVEMBER 9.

A. J. Grover, $1; Lewis G. Jones, $3.20; Clemens Vonnegut, $10; Mrs. L. E. Blount, $13.20; Carl Edelhelm, $3.20; J. C. Fargo, $2; Wm. H. Ovington, $3.20; Leopold Goepper, $3.20; John Curtis, $1.20; New England News Co., $3.88; C. D. B. Mills, $10; Mrs. Clara M. Rotch, $50; A. D. Dickenson, $3.20; William Jones, $3.20; J. G. Richardson, $10; Mrs. M. M. Ballou, $10; Mrs. Benj. Ireson, $10; Eliza Wright, $100; E. W. Hooper, $3.20; H. D. Bennett, $10; Mrs. S. S. Pierce, $3; E. Whitcher, $3.20; Mrs. F. Wason, $1.80; Mrs. E. B. Chace, $16.40; S. G. Morgan, $30; W. C. Gannett, $50.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N.B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N.B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N.B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

BOSTON, NOV. 14, 1878.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 38 Monroe Street: J. T. FRY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH OADY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIZUR WRIGHT, C. D. B. MILL, W. D. LE SUEUR, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, JAMES E. OLIVER, Editorial Contributors.

WE ARE very sorry that we credited the excellent article on "A Non-Political but Important Issue," in THE INDEX of October 31, to the Detroit Free Press. Instead of to the true source, the Detroit Free Press. The article was so good that we ought to correct our own inadvertency, and we do so most cheerfully.

AT A CONVENTION of non-Mormon women, held in Salt Lake City, Utah, November 7, the following appeal to "Mrs. R. B. Hayes and the women of the United States" was adopted: "It is more than thirty years since polygamy planted itself on the shores of the great Salt Lake. During these years Congress utterly failed to enact efficient or enforce existing laws for the abolition of this great crime, and we believe that more of these unlawful and unhallowed alliances have been consummated the past year than ever before in the history of the Mormon church, endowment houses, under the name of temples, being erected in different parts of the country, costing millions. It is impossible to ascertain the exact number of polygamous marriages, for they are consecrated in these endowment houses, an institution no Gentile is permitted to enter, where brotherhood and sisterhood are sealed and bound by oaths so strong that even apostates will not reveal them, and to mention which witnesses on the witness-stand unblushingly purjure themselves, abjuring of late all considerations of oath and duty. Considering all our surroundings, polygamy has never taken such a degrading and debasing form in any nation or among any people above the condition of barbarians as in Utah. It is degrading to man and woman, a curse to children, and a destruction to the sacred relation of family, upon which the civilization of nations depends; and there are things that cannot be repeated or printed that reduce the system to the lowest form of indecency. That it should be practiced in the name and under the cloak of religion; that an apostle polygamist with four acknowledged wives is permitted to sit in Congress, only adds to the enormity of the crime and makes it more revolting to our common Christian principles. Our legislature is composed almost entirely of polygamists and members of the Mormon priesthood, and they have thrown around polygamy every possible safeguard in their power, and the right of dower has been abolished to break down the distinction between lawful wife and concubine. The Mormons are rapidly extending their settlements in Arizona, Idaho, New Mexico, and Wyoming. They have the balance of power in two territories, and are, without doubt, plotting for it in others. We call upon the Christian women of the United States to join us in urging Congress to empower its courts to arrest the further progress of this evil, and to delay the admittance of Utah into Statehood until this is accomplished; and we ask you to circulate and publish our appeal, in order to arouse public sentiment, which should be against an abomination that peculiarly oppresses and stigmatizes women. It is our purpose to ask names to a petition designed for Congress; and we hope also, that every minister of the gospel will commend it to the women of his congregation, and that all Christian associations will do what they can to obtain signatures. With the cordial coöperation and concerted action of the Christian women of our land we may confidently hope that the great sin of polygamy may be abolished."

HAS LIBERALISM A MISSION?

Is there or can there be any valid reason why those who have once climbed above the malarious intellectual and moral lowlands in which most men live, and reached the uplands where the clear, cool winds of truth and higher purpose bring fresh life to their half-smothered souls, should ever plunge again into the stifling atmosphere they have left behind? Is the hope of rousing others to effect an escape which they have not even learned to desire a sufficient motive in the eye of reason? Is it true, as some say and more evidently believe, that personal culture is the one thing needful, and that all generous identification of self with the multitude tends simply to hold back or even drag down the individual without raising the multitude up? Must all who thus make common cause with the common people, who strive to give voice to their semi-articulate needs and clearness to their confused thoughts and aspirations, and who seek to unite for useful purposes the energies that aimlessly waste themselves in all directions or are guided by artful hands to purposes worse than useless,—must all such be set down in truth, as the fashionable school of culture are quick to set them down, as persons whose hearts are better than their heads, to be pitied or contemptuously ignored by all who can rise superior to the follies of philanthropy? Does reason, coldly and critically comparing the outlay with the result, justify or condemn the attempt to emancipate mankind from low ideas, low aims, low conditions, and to sow the seeds of something better? In a word, has liberalism any mission to fulfil other than the careful coddling of Number One?

These questions are sure to be forced sooner or later into the consciousness of every one who takes up the work of bettering society in any large, enlightened, and unselfish spirit. The first lesson taught him by experience is that, with all their lip-homage to truth, truth is the last thing in the world that men generally desire. Nothing is easier than to win their applause by giving them back their own crude opinions and calling it truth; but whoever offers them a better article than their own opinions must take the consequences of his temerity. The churches contrive to excommunicate every minister who can see farther than the church-creed and intrepidly tells what he sees. The liberals exclaim against the churches for their narrowness and blindness, and then straightway go and do likewise. All the world shouts the praises of truth; but nearly every one of the shouters means merely his own opinion!

So far as our observation goes, the school of positive science is almost the only school in which the love and practice of truth can be thoroughly learned: we say positive science, for outside of that, and especially in matters of religious belief, most scientific men are just as dogmatic as their neighbors. It was a wonderfully advanced idea, that of submitting one's private thinking to the objective test of VERIFICATION, and rising above the petty conceit that the test of truth lies in the thinker's own mind. Here lies the corrective, and the only possible corrective, of that inordinate vanity which makes of the average churchman and the average come-outer a mere top, spinning restlessly but unprogressively about its own axis. Until men learn this difficult and doubtless humiliating lesson of submitting their opinions to the test of facts, it makes precious little difference whether they "stay in" or "come out"; they are nothing but bundles of prejudices, that is, of prejudgments. The truth-lover is he who has no love whatever for his own opinion as such, but an overmastering passion for that which, no matter at what cost to his pride, shall prove to be true. If we were called upon to name the one man of the nineteenth century in whom this chief of spiritual virtues has shone out with a brilliancy surpassing that of all his contemporaries, we should unhesitatingly name Charles Darwin. Let all the theologues and all the philosophies, Christian or what not, lay their heads together to nominate his equal; they cannot produce another in whom the love of truth has so utterly burned out of his soul all trace of dogmatism and opinionativeness, or lit so pure a flame of devotion to the unbribable veracity of Nature. It is a cheap and tawdry heroism to die for one's opinions; it is the grandest of human achievements to live, like Darwin, for the truth. And science, not Christianity, nor any type of semi-dogmatic heresy, is the altar on which that supreme sacrifice is laid.

The first lesson of the high-souled reformer's experience, we repeat, is that men do not generally love or seek truth for its own sake. It takes a richly developed and highly cultivated mind even to comprehend what the love of truth for its own sake is. The types of culture which are furnished by the universities, outside the field of positive science, seldom include it. The various schools of radical isms, however devoted their adherents may be to the propagation of their own peculiar forms of belief, seldom include it. The numerous systems of philosophy, however well represented by acute defenders, seldom include it. The churches, pledged to their creeds, seldom include it. The countless special reforms of the day, each with its petty panacea for the universal ills which flesh is heir to, show not the faintest conception of it. Where shall it be found? Only here and there, in the rarest, the noblest, the most highly intellectual natures, which by virtue of brain can comprehend it and by exaltation of soul can dedicate themselves to it. The love of truth cannot be orthodox, for orthodoxy, the "right doxy," rules it out at the start by a brazen-faced assumption of infallibility in somebody's ipse dixit. But heterodoxy is no proof of the love of truth, since heterodoxy is too often a mere blind, bull-headed, dogged plunge into the "other doxy." The love of truth will have none of these things, but exacts the single eye, the clear head, the lofty soul, the will passive in all things save the pursuit of truth itself, and in that the will resistless as the gravitation that swings the planets round the sun. The love of truth is that supreme spiritual liberty which is absolute obedience to Nature, and thus constitutes the soul of all liberalism that deserves the name. This is the liberalism, and the only form of it, to which a great and generous nature can surrender itself with glad abandon, as something to which life may be consecrated without self-degradation—the liberalism which scorns the trick of cherishing reserved finalities, set up like little idols in some secret inner shrine of superstition—the liberalism which elevates the love of truth and righteousness (for righteousness is nothing but the truth of life) into a religion. He is the genuine liberal, he alone, whose whole soul glows with the permanent and intense white-heat of devotion to the truth of Nature in all its boundless universality, over and above his own inadequate conceptions of it—who knows and feels and obeys the supremacy of that envioning Universe which stamps upon his mind, as upon a feebly sensitized spiritual surface, those impressions of surrounding relationships which he calls his perceptions of truth and right. This subordination of subjective conceit to objective verification becomes the warp and woof of his religion, on its intellectual side; it is the love of truth elevated to a positive, powerful, living faith; it is the liberalism which stands ready to make all mankind one with themselves, one with each other, one with that boundless Nature which Humboldt loved to call the "Living Whole."

Has liberalism, then, no mission?

Look about you, and ask yourself if the world has no need of the love of truth we have portrayed. If not, then liberalism has no needed mission, and it is folly unfathomable to waste time and soul in the effort to fulfil it,—sheer abuse of life's opportunities to bend one's strength to the task of planting unwanted seed in sterile soil. But if the world suffers from nothing so much as from the lack of a love of truth for its own sake,—if amelioration of the evils which oppress mankind is deferred or defeated chiefly because the intellectual and moral energies of the race run to waste in the service of superstition, selfishness, and crazy misconstruction of humanity's real wants,—then liberalism has a mission more important than that of all the religions put together: namely, to teach mankind to deal with the facts of this universe in the spirit of absolute honesty, and to treat as their deadliest foe whatever tends to shut out the light of reality from their own minds. Despite the bitter hostility which awaits every effort to dispel popular prejudice, there is no worthier life than that which devotes itself to turning darkness into daylight in matters of public concern. The species of culture which ignores the unity of human interests, and fancies it can perfect itself in isolation, rests on the morality of barbarism, and belies the name it assumes. By neglecting their natural function of popular exposition and turning aside from the thankless work of showing to the bewildered many wherein lies the real truth and the actual duty, men of cultivation not only betray their brethren, but also themselves, and forfeit the personal culture which they aspire to win. This melancholy exhibition is constantly before the observer; it is the saddest aspect of the age. Liberalism's chief mission is to those who think themselves liberals; it cannot ennoble the many before it has inspired and dominated the few.

Not until the ideal of personal culture includes the high obligation of making plain to the perplexed common mind the path of duty in the field of living practical issues, however humble, can culture in the genuine sense be won. Fastidiousness, delicacy, the natural repugnance against coming into personal contact with lower types of feeling or thought, are no excuses for neglecting this obligation. The moral integrity of the individual, to foster which is an essential part of true personal culture, requires him to integrate himself with his race, and bear his proportion of the common burdens, according to the degree of his capacity. He will stand aloof at his own peril, and cannot escape his individual share in a common disaster. Liberalism has indeed its mission to the world. But has it none to us who bear its name?

A CARD.

I notice by the report, in the last issue of THE INDEX, of the recent Congress of the Liberal League at Syracuse, that my name was left on the list of Vice-Presidents of the old League. I have received no official information of such election, and do not know the address of the new Secretary of the League. Therefore I take this method and this earliest opportunity to say that, had I been present at the Congress, I should have been one of the seceding minority on the question at issue, and that I cannot longer hold office nor retain my membership in the old League.

WM. J. POTTER.

A CARD.

On page 536 of THE INDEX of Nov. 7, the impression is unintentionally conveyed that all the present officers of the National Liberal League were selected as "men known to be for the repeal of the Comstock postal law." This was true of the chief officers, perhaps, but not of the Vice-Presidents. For instance, Judge Brewer, Mrs. Neymann, and myself were chosen expressly as being non-seceding friends of Mr. Abbot; and I think it was known that both Judge Brewer and I were opposed to "repeal."

I resigned the position, however, after the adjournment, fearing lest, when the position of the League came to be misrepresented, the odium which I would have accepted for myself might fall upon the University.

J. E. OLIVER.

[Professor Oliver misunderstood the "page" referred to, through not remembering that the "administration" of the League is vested exclusively in the Board of Directors, consisting of the President, Secretary, Treasurer, Chairman of the Executive Committee, and Chairman of the Finance Committee. There was no error, and no ground of misconception if this fact is borne in mind.—ED.]

SIGNIFICANT WORDS.

We presume that we shall obey the wishes of the writers in printing the subjoined extracts from letters recently received.

Mrs. Elizabeth Cady Stanton says: "I write specially to have my name registered as a member of that division of the League of which you are President. While our country is flooded with obscene literature, mailed to our sons and daughters in every college and seminary in the land, we certainly need some restrictive laws and supervision. If our present laws are, as claimed by some, unconstitutional, they should be amended, but surely not repealed altogether. If Anthony Comstock has not sufficient wisdom and discretion to do justice, to discriminate between what may be published in the interests of social science and what is radically obscene and vicious, let his place be filled by some wiser man. . . . I am glad to see that my friends Judge Hurlbut and Charles D. B. Mills stand with you. I do most unequivocally."

Miss Jane P. Titcomb energetically refuses to be a Vice-President of the "repeal" League as follows: "In your reported list of the new 'repeal' Board, so disgracefully thrust upon the sturdy old League, I note with dismay my own name figuring as one of the Vice-Presidents in the renegade crew. My immediate friends are wholly aware it could not have stood there long enough to get into print, had I been present at the Congress; but lest more remote acquaintances should thus receive the impression of any sympathy on my part with that noxious body of fevered pulse and flaccid vertebrae, I beg you to give me the benefit of this public denial."

Hon. George W. Julian writes: "I am glad things went as well as they did, and that decency has the substantial victory. I shall await the full proceedings with interest, and in the mean time you will of course understand my position, and that, if I am to be Vice-President, it must be in the new organization."

William Little, Esq., a prominent lawyer of Manchester, N.H., who was elected member for that State of the Executive Committee of both the National Leagues, indicates his probable action as follows: "I am in full sympathy with your position on the Comstock laws question, and think your friends did right at Syracuse."

Mr. Clarence E. Brown, Secretary of the Liberal League of Florence, Mass., wrote as follows on the third of November: "At a regular meeting of the Florence Liberal League, held this evening at the house of David H. Clark, it was voted to surrender our charter as Auxiliary League to the National League, and procure a charter from the new organization. This is to ask for a charter under the new organization, and to send you the following resolutions:—

"Whereas, We, the members of the Liberal League of Florence, Mass., having listened to the report of our delegate, David H. Clark, to the Second Annual Congress of the National Liberal League held at Syracuse, N.Y., Oct. 26 and 27, hereby express our hearty approval of the course pursued by the minority in withdrawing from that body:

"Resolved, That we withdraw as an Auxiliary League of the National Liberal League and surrender our charter under that organization. And further

"Resolved, That our Secretary be instructed to procure a charter under the National Liberal League of America.

"Said charter will be actually surrendered as soon as circumstances shall promise its legal reception by the National Liberal League."

THE SYRACUSE CONGRESS.

The withdrawal and protest of the seceding members of the National Liberal League have abundant justification, as the circumstances are reviewed that preceded and occasioned it. That occasion substantially is well described in the protest that was drawn up and signed by the names of those who united in it. There are other things beside that in the haste of the moment were omitted to be mentioned, which are of almost equal significance, as furnishing ground for the painful final step that the minority felt themselves compelled to take.

It was quite plain to those who had closely watched the spirit and the movements of the party, which by dint of most extraordinary and persistent effort had secured a majority on the floor of this Congress, that there were two objective points in their strategy to be carried in this meeting: one was repeal, a declaration by the Convention demanding the total repeal of the Comstock laws, so-called; the other was to displace the President from the chairmanship of the League, or (to put it briefly) to "bounce Abbot."

This individual had grievously offended in the matter of opposing the unqualified repeal of the Comstock postal laws; he had committed that sin which knows no forgiveness either in this world or the world to come. He had been found, moreover, to be guilty of "culture"; and how could such a man be qualified to be President of the Liberal League? He had insisted, and endeavored to make sure, that the initial organization of this Congress should be vested solely in those who came as duly accredited delegates or duly accredited charter or life-members, and so had been caught in the very act of attempting to "put the Convention in his pocket." There were a thousand reasons demonstrating his utter unfitness for the position he occupied. The Truth Seeker had lately very kindly pointed out about fifty of these in a single article. He must go. Down with him!

Both the objects named above were sacredly dear to the repealing heart; and both were, if possible, to be carried without involving chance of any rupture and severance of the body.

The first of these points, by an apparent change of base on the second day of the Convention, the majority "magnanimously" waived, generously consenting to hold all expression of opinion, so far as the Congress was concerned, in abeyance until the next annual Convention, sending us all home, meanwhile, to study for a twelve-month and inform ourselves in regard to the constitutionality question, that we might at the end of the time come together, ripened for "decisive action." It was a shrewd stroke, a card well played, and the minority with all becoming gratitude signified their acceptance and their joy. The sequel presently showed the extent and the meaning of the concession, and by consequence the reach of the conciliation.

The second point came up, and this was presumably, if possible, more dear and vital in the eye of the repealer than the first. That point was determinedly carried,—carried over the heads and against the earnest, pressing protest of the minority, carried, too, in specially offensive and ruthless manner. The act itself of displacing Mr. Abbot from the Presidency for the reason for which it was done,—the man who had been the very father and founder of the League, who had sacrificed and wrought more for it than any other one in it, nay, almost more than all others, and who was up to this hour the very life and soul of the organization,—this act was a deliberate indignity to him, and not less than that to all the non-repealing members. But, as one of the ardent repealers expressed it in the Convention (this, according to my recollection, was his language): "I found, this morning, I had been sold out by some of my friends in regard to one of the things I came here to do (i.e., get a declaration for repeal); and now I am determined not to be sold out on the other." So, doubtless, said they all.

Then note two or three points in the procedure: the attempt was made at the outset, after the nominations were submitted from the two sections of the committee, to cut off all debate, and take the vote instantly. That failing, a vote was passed, crowding all debate within the space of thirty minutes; nobody must be allowed a word thereafter. And finally to that most reasonable demand—a demand which none with any regard for fairness would think of refusing—that the vote be taken by roll-call, and the ayes and noes recorded, a peremptory denial was returned. It is no excuse to say that the roll was not ready, and the preparation of it would involve some slight delay. The Committee on Membership had been instructed by the Convention to make out a roll of the members in attendance, and it was by neglect of their duty that it was not at hand. It would have been simply just to require them to make it out. And the denial was in face of the affirmation of one member that there were, or had been, persons on the floor who, as he was very credibly informed, were not delegates.

There were other features in the transactions of this Convention that must go unmentioned here, which mark the procedure as a most extraordinary indignity of very pronounced type and character.

When, for instance, the chairman (one of the Vice-presidents at this time), in reply to the boisterous demonstration from the side of the majority that was attempting to clamor down a member from the other side, who was speaking both temperately and fittingly, "sustained" him in this fashion: "Let him blow through; he will feel better when he has done,"—it was plain that not only the spirit of fairness had then departed, but that the sense of decency and shame was also on the wing.

The demand and heated clamor for repeal will, in part certainly, be interpreted, and justly, too, by the public mind, by and through transpiring events that lie along beside it. Note the persistent and resolute effort to push out before the public a kind of literature which, if not technically and under legal construction obscene, is manifestly in extreme degree demoralizing, adapted to break up and annihilate the very foundations of social order, and blot out to extinction the primal decencies of our civilized life. Those who are doing this thing, and those who are winking at, abetting, or defending it, will be held to a strict accountability by the public mind. It cannot possibly, and it ought not, to be otherwise.

I have friends, old and dear, that to my surprise and sorrow are ranged on this wrong side that was taken in the Convention. I trust that erewhile they will see that they are placed in a false, in a fatally false position, and will hasten to abandon it. Free discussion, sober, earnest, candid thought, however radical, an appeal to the intelligence, the reason, is ever to be not only tolerated, but encouraged and welcomed. That is always in order. Nastiness, coated and disguised as you will, has no right but to be extinguished.

It is the extreme of absurdity and folly, it is sheer madness, in fact, for any party, any body of persons, small or great, well-meaning or otherwise, to array themselves against the clear moral sentiment of the age, nay, of the ages of mankind. That sentiment, and the life, the behavior, that is based upon and inspired from it, is too precious, costly, blood-bought, have come down from too many centuries and millenniums of toil and struggle on the part of man to master himself, to tame and subjugate, or to curb and restrain the ferocious, hot passions within him,—there is too much at stake in it to permit that it be lightly treated, or sought ruthlessly to be ravished away. The organization that shall attempt that, if such a one be possible, will be quickly and irrevocably ground to powder. If radicalism cannot get farther than that, it shall infinitely better shut shop, stop business, and close the concern. The law of "natural selection" and the "survival of the fittest" will take it in hand, and swiftly smother it to utter extinction.

Members and friends of the National Liberal League of America! We stand at immense moral vantage at this new beginning of our career, in the approval and the sympathy of clear-seeing and right-minded people throughout the country. They mark the issue that has been brought out; and the moral sentiment, the conviction of society, is challenged and stands with us. Shall we be prompt and discerning enough to show ourselves equal to the hour, worthy the great privilege and the grand occasion that is open before us? Everything depends now on the quickness, the wisdom, and courage of our response.

C. D. B. M.

Communications.

ÆSTHETIC SENSE OF ANIMALS.

NO. II.

If, then, sounds do, according to their loudness, timbre, or pitch, produce in animals different states of consciousness that may be classed either as pleasurable or painful, we can hardly doubt that the pleasurable states are in very many cases the result of the excitation of the æsthetic sense,—perhaps in nearly all those cases where the sounds producing them are in no way connected with arousing into action the life-serving functions. While all, or most all, æsthetic emotions are pleasurable, all pleasurable states are by no means associated with a sense of the beautiful. If we are hungry, eating produces a pleasurable state, but ideas of the beautiful are not thereby aroused. And so on in similar numerous instances. I have no doubt but that there are very many cases in which it would be quite impossible to tell by the expressions or language of the emotions whether a given emotion is the result of the excitation of the æsthetic sense, or the arousing of pleasurable feelings connected with the life-serving functions. While the excitation of the æsthetic sense and a pleasurable state of consciousness produced by some prospective benefit about to be received, cause the contractions and relaxations of nearly the same facial muscles, and similar movements of the limbs and body indicative of the feelings, yet if the feelings are strong in either case—so strong as to visibly affect the limbs and body,—we can sometimes distinguish an æsthetic emotion from an emotion aroused by a prospective benefit or other cause not associated with a sense of the beautiful. The attitude and general expression of a dog listening to the music of a piano, may, perhaps for a few moments, be about the same as under many other circumstances,—such as when he is about to receive kind attentions or a benefit from his master. But presently as the music becomes more stirring or pathetic, he will get down and crawl, or roll and howl, thus showing in the clearest possible manner that he appreciates those combinations of sounds we call music. At least, such actions of a dog have come under my notice when he was permitted to come into the parlor and a piece of music was played for him with a view of noting the effects it produced. I do not believe that dogs ever act in the same manner when about to receive kind attentions or food. If the same muscles of expression perform different functions, it must be that they receive nervous discharges of different strengths and intensities, and from different nervous centres, caused by different kinds of emotions.

Probably almost every one has read of instances in the early settlement of some of the States of the Union, where wolves were kept at bay and their fierceness allayed by the music of the violin or fiddle. To what extent animals in a feral state are capable of appreciating music as arranged for the ears of the civilized man, we have no definite means of knowing; but from such evidence as we have, it seems probable that it will depend upon the degree of intelligence possessed by the individuals of any particular species. For instance, I believe, as a class, that the ungulate or toed animals, as lions, tigers, wolves, etc., are more intelligent and more capable of appreciating music arranged according to the scale of the civilized man, than guilicate or hoofed animals, as cattle, sheep, etc. While we know well enough that various species of animals can be taught to distinguish one musical air from another, we know very little about how music affects the feelings of the individuals of any given species, between a state of indifference up to a strong pleasurable emotion. As indicated by the expressions or language of the emotions, very few observations have been carefully made under this head. But from such facts as we have, it seems probable that if careful experiments could be made under favorable conditions, it would be found that most animals would show an appreciation of music, but that the appreciation would be different in different species, and in different individuals of the same species.

That various species of animals produce sounds and songs for the satisfaction or entertainment of each other, independent, too, of the life serving functions, cannot for a moment be questioned. The male of the prairie chicken (Tetrao cupido) of the Western States, early in the morning, during the spring or commencement of the breeding season, produces a peculiar sound at a low pitch, accompanied by a kind of strut and erection of the feathers of the body, but more prominently those about the neck, apparently for the purpose of attracting or charming the females, as several are always spectators to these queer antics. While we would perhaps be unable to distinguish any difference in the sounds thus produced by the males, the female prairie hen may be able to distinguish a difference as marked as that of the voices of several persons we hear conversing together.

Different pieces of music, which with us arouse different sentiments and emotions, would probably appear all alike to the savage,—a mere babel of sounds. As the voices of those with whom we are familiar are recognized as having different degrees of sweetness or harshness, so it may be with animals that endeavor to attract each other by such sounds as they are able to produce. Does it not seem just as reasonable to suppose that creatures of relatively simple organizations should require only simple sounds to satisfy their rudimentary æsthetic sense, as that creatures of very complex organizations should require complex combinations of sounds to satisfy their relatively developed æsthetic sense?

When we see what a wide difference there is among ourselves as to what constitutes beautiful combinations of sounds or good music, we ought not to hesitate to go further and admit that an æsthetic sense of some degree between zero and the highest phase of development may belong to animals. The actions of the mocking-bird (Mimus polyglottus) in imitating the voices of other birds and animals, and sometimes even in singing the fragments of a tune, may perhaps as well be considered instinctive, as the actions of the cuckoo in laying her eggs in other birds' nests. But if the female selects from the competing singers a male with the most melodious voice, and the power of combining with the best effect into his melody the songs of other birds and the sounds produced by other animals, it is difficult to see how we can resist the conclusion that she displays a sense of the beautiful in the appreciation of sounds, when slightly different in timbre and pitch, sweetness and harshness. Even if it be admitted that most of such actions are instinctive, still it can hardly be denied but that in some of them a small dose of judgment or reason comes into play. Nor would it in the case of human beings be thought to weaken the force of the argument to say that a certain individual instinctively appreciated a beautiful landscape view, a fine piece of music or an elegant painting or statue.

By the process of sexual selection continued through thousands of generations, we can easily see how the mocking-bird has attained its wonderful power of imitating the notes of other birds, and the sounds produced by other animals. The competitive singing contests of the males to attract the females are common to quite a number of species of birds; and to say that the females in such cases do not display a sense of the beautiful in the appreciation of auditory impressions, in selecting as partners the best singers, would be contrary to the experience of those who have given considerable attention to the subject of sexual selection among birds.

Nor does it seem easy to believe that accidental selection, that is, selection without any regard to a sense of the beautiful, would have ever produced so many species of singing-birds as are known to exist throughout the world. In most cases we can satisfactorily account for the peculiar habits and structure of an animal as being of advantage to it in the struggle for existence. We can see, for instance, that the webbed feet of a water-bird are of advantage to it, serving as paddles in swimming; and that the peculiar structure of the bill of the woodpecker is suitable to its mode of life in catching insects between the chinks of bark of trees; and so on in endless other cases. But it will not be claimed that being a good singer would be of especial advantage to a bird in gaining a living, in capturing insects, or in escaping from enemies.

The various facts above referred to (and numerous similar ones might have been given), I think, show beyond a reasonable doubt that animals have an æsthetic sense, and that it may be excited by sensations and impressions received through the sense of hearing.

Do animals have a sense of the beautiful aroused by sensations and impressions received through the sense of sight? We shall find evidence of the required kind showing that they do. Indeed, the evidence ought to be more abundant here than where we find it through auditory impressions. The erection of the feathers and the pompous struts of the males of the prairie-chicken, already mentioned, probably have equally as much to do in attracting the females as the accompanying low thundering sounds. Though the male may not appear as elegant to us during the performance of these strange actions, as when his feathers are unerected in his natural state; yet the case may be quite different with the females. During these competitive charming contests of the males, there may be something in their carriage eminently attractive to the females, unperceived by us. Even according to our ideas of beauty, the prairie chicken may be considered as rather elegant in form and color, superior, perhaps, to most birds of the same size, among whom courting contests between the males for the purpose of attracting the females are not known to exist.

Mr. Darwin, in his work on the Origin of Species, refers to the rock-thrush of Gulana and birds of paradise congregating and of the males displaying their gorgeous plumage before females, and of the females choosing for their partners the males most attractive according to their sense of beauty. The brilliant and variegated colors of these birds show that the females, during the process of selection through thousands of generations, not only have appreciated brilliant colors, but complex combinations of colors. And in this respect their sense of the beautiful has had a marked correspondence with ours; for there is no one so vulgar in his taste as not to admire the fine plumage of the bird of paradise.

WILEY BRITTON.

THE MYSTERY OF MONEY.

The word money is susceptible of many definitions, according to the point from which it is viewed. It is a device whereby the money-getters enslave the value-creators; it is a weapon used in the universal struggle after more than an equal share of the common wealth; it is the exchange-medium which renders possible the division of labor and such measure of civilization as we enjoy and suffer; it is the abstract ideal of value, or appropriable desirableness to which all concrete commodities are referred; it is—but never mind any more definitions; after all, money remains a mystery.

A dollar is neither here nor there. It is nothing in particular. It means, like everything else, whatever we make it mean. Do you say it means a certain number of grains of gold of a certain fineness? But, suppose gold to become suddenly plentier through improvements in the modes of its extraction, is it not certain that at once it would be claimed that so many grains of gold no longer constitute a dollar? What so many grains of gold are worth depends on the relative plentifulness of gold. So with all other commodities, including labor. In a word, abstract value is a myth; there is no absolute standard of value. Commercial value signifies the relative desirableness of all exchangeable articles, and varies in each according to its varying quantitative relation to the others. Pardon these truisms.

But in order to buy and sell understandingly,—that is to say, with hope and chance of profit, or at least even exchange,—in order to be able to guess how much of this goes for how much of that, some approximate general measure of value is desirable. This comes nearer being found in labor than aught else; but labor itself being unavailable for currency, an indestructible, portable, condensed product of labor,—namely, the precious metals,—has been generally found most available.

But what is used for money is of little importance; the main point is how much is used. And even this question would be of little account if the muchness or the littleness of it were unvarying or uniformly varying, so that people might know what to calculate upon. All commodities are continually changing in value (relative desirableness) according to their ever-changing relative plentifulness. But of money it is desired that it shall vary in its ratio to the aggregate of wealth as little as possible. The fact that gold and silver, owing to their slow-varying difficulty of production, have been so much used for money does not certify that they are eternally to remain the sole or principal currency. In fact, they are much like the big stone that the boy carried so many years in one end of the bag to balance the grist across the old mare's back. Some day the boy finds out that he need not carry the extra weight of the stone; some day mankind will find out that gold and silver mining is an enormous waste of labor.

The emergencies of the late war revealed in a clearer light than had ever been seen before the capabilities of a national currency based not upon gold and silver but upon national credit. In fact, faith is the real basis of all money; he who parts with a load of wheat for a gold piece does so because he knows that others also have faith in the intrinsically worthless gold, and will exchange for it any commodity he may chance to want. Faith must float any currency; and faith in a currency depends on its general acceptance, founded on its material fitness and the belief that its volume will not be suddenly sensibly expanded or contracted. Faith in gold is a conventionalism which it undoubtedly took ages to create, and means a general belief, evolved from long experience, that the difficulties of gold-extraction cannot be suddenly overcome in such degree as to make gold so plenty as to unsettle prices. It is a conventionalism that has long been gradually giving place to a more enlightened and less expensive one.

The prime desideratum in a currency is the rigidity that makes it an approximation to abstract value, and makes it an equitable and calculable solvent of obligations. This quality can evidently be imparted to a so-called irredeemable paper currency by any people arrived at the proper stage of self-control and harmonious compromise of opposed interests. Are we that people? Can we hold a paper currency as steady as Nature holds a metallic one?

We observe a marked difference of opinion upon this and most other economic questions between the capitalist or creditor, or absorptive class on the one hand, and the popular laboring tax-paying class on the other. In both these classes, and in the middle class, neither rich nor poor, that acts as "bumper" and peacemaker between the two extremes, we see that opinion is mainly generated by class-interest. In fact, there is little science of money matters only after the fact; there are simply certain results from the conflict of class-interests. Economic questions look entirely different to the many who get only a poorish living by constant toil, from what they do to the less numerous optimistic class who are luxuriously supported by some legal lien upon labor.

The people by giving way to their patriotic passions in the late war got themselves into a fix; the class who fauten in proportion as the people grow lean and pauperized desire to hold them to the utmost calamitousness of the consequences. The masses, who have to do all and pay all, desire to pay off the mortgage upon the fruits of labor in the easiest obtainable currency; the holders of the mortgage desire payment in the scarcest, hardest dollar. It is a problem in the solution of which equity is difficult if not impossible, and soulless legalism is cruel and dangerous. It is certain at this day and age of the world that no important case is going to be decided against the people by default; things are not to be completely one-sided. Few people, I guess, have much faith in the essential humanitarianism of the capitalistic class; there is a deep-seated, if not very definite feeling that they own the government, and play fast and loose with financial legislation and currency contrivances; and that, whoever wins, the workers lose.

The well-worn "halfpenny" about the "paramount importance of preserving inviolate the public faith" is not near so decisive as interested moralists would have us believe. The national credit is valuable only as it ministers to national well-being; in itself and as an ultimate it is naught. To build up an aristocracy of wealth upon widespread popular pauperization and virtual enslavement is none the less a devilish thing for being done legally. When did any anti-popular party ever fail to have the law of the land and the formulas of nominal morality on their side? We hold that the greatest good of the greatest number overrides all those stereotyped canons of conduct which political tricksters are so loud-mouthed to preach up when advantageous to them, and equally ready to ignore when not.

A confederation of Shylocks stand to-day demanding with starkest legalism their pound of flesh nearest the people's heart. They have captured the President and his Cabinet; they present a bold front. Note this, that their influence is strongest on the governmental departments farthest removed from direct accountability to the popular will. A schism is growing between government and people, which if it continues must amount to revolution. In millions of homes where men sit unemployed, watching their families slowly sinking into the degradation of extreme poverty, is gathering a force which the men who do nothing but draw interest would do well to make some sort of living arrangement with. Admit that our national government has become the well-managed agency of the creditor interest; still it is a fact that this is not the era in which any government can long endure that is radically alienated from its people.

Gold and silver are not, and never again will be, the basis of American currency. They are intrinsically useless commodities, valuable chiefly to trade off for about equally useless foreign fineries and poisons. The real basis of American currency is to be the needs and the mutual faith of the American people. Speed the coming of the American Dollar! a dollar with an idea in it; a dollar that represents science, faith, and progress, as the old earth-bound dollar represents unfaith in the capacity of the people to emancipate themselves from the pressure of barbaric necessity without running into destructive excesses.

The American unit of value that has long been shaping itself—call it labor-dollar, greenback, national value-certificate, or what you please,—will be a national promissory note, legal tender in all transactions of citizens with the government, and each other, and redeemable in no definite amount of labor, gold, silver, or any other commodity, but worth, as everything is, whatever it will bring. What it will bring will depend mainly on how plenty it is, and the prospect of its steady uniformity in volume. It makes no manner of odds whether it is scarce enough to make wheat sell for half a dollar a bushel, or plenty enough to make it sell for ten dollars; the main point, in order that the people may not be too badly plucked by the currency-gamblers, is that it should be unvarying in volume. How is this to be effected? By a constitutional apportionment of the issue to the population. A ratio of dollars to persons must be adopted and adhered to. This is a compromise (as far as the currency is concerned) between those who want and those who have, such as no one can well object to.

There is no intrinsic value in gold and silver such as fits them for currency. If they could be had for the picking up, their availability as money would plainly be gone. They make good money because they are durable and equally scarce. Their value as money is wholly conventional. The general agreement to use them as vouchers may be transferred to a less expensive set of counters.

G. E. TUFTS.
BINGHAMTON, N. Y.

CHICAGO CORRESPONDENCE.

Oct. 25, 1878.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

I have felt a strong impulse many times to seize my pen and enter into some of the warm and interesting discussions that have filled your columns of late. THE INDEX is a most provocative sheet. You are sure either to heartily agree or disagree with every word it utters. It never inspires indifference. The entire change in the spirit of the paper under the administration of Mr. Stevens was noteworthy and curious. He had much to say for the claims of literature over polemic, and the advantages offered in a quiet, peaceful, meditative life, over one spent in the turmoil of controversy and reform. Mr. Stevens evidently places more emphasis on the to be of life, than the to do, with its consequent to suffer. There is no more seductive appeal under the sun than that which pleads for the universal in contradistinction to small and wearisome particulars. The strongest heart of the most active worker in the world's great work of suffering and wrong is often assailed by such temptations, and longs to turn from the agitation and the strife, and lie down in the cool and pleasant places of the earth, to be henceforth "divinely unemployed." Doubtless there is much of truth and wisdom in what Mr. Stevens had to say concerning the benefits arising from a reposeful, contemplative existence, one not unkindly of, but unharassed by, the toil and sorrow of a troublous world. Very likely we all need to acquire the art of keeping cool; to learn to temper our judgments, steady our wills, and abate our enthusiasms. The world is too full of fanatics, and too empty of philosophers; and if some of these over-zealous actors could be induced to step outside the arena, and become mere lookers-on, the world would have gained at least that much less noise. But this it is unreasonable to hope for. The clamor and confusion of present transitions must continue for many years to come. The world has just awakened from a long night of superstition, and the morning hour is the time for dispelling shadows, for clearing away the rubbish of yesterday and putting the house in order. By and by will come the noontide of fulfillment, followed by the afternoon of peace and quiet repose. There are harder tasks set to our doing just now than to con the lessons of ancient wisdom and lore; more solemn duties to perform than that of comfortably adjusting oneself to the softer side of life. Not but that the world greatly needs a higher culture, and more symmetrical development of the individual; but these are finer issues, which must abide the settlement of coarser, if not graver needs. The reformer's task is not an easy one. He may prefer the quiet of his study to the excitements of public life, the companionship of congenial friends to the society of his coadjutors; but he looks upon life as something more than a boon, as a duty and responsibility which he must bear to the end. The man most in accord with the spirit of the times is not he who under the banner of reform rushes in hot-headed pursuit after every moral phantasm of the day; much less is it he who turns coldly aside from the more active phases of thought and endeavor with the excuse that they are so many useless agitations, which distract and weary the soul. The world owes much to the student and recluse. The inspiration which comes from lofty and lonely thinking, from the calm meditation of the philosopher and song of the poet is too great to be measured; but inspiration is not meant simply to exalt and refine the soul of him that receives it, but some few of heroic metal must work it out into deeds, and a positive benefit to mankind. He, then, is the man for to-day who, avoiding the errors of the fanatic and the delusions of the dreamer, combines hope, courage, and patience. The world never needed reform more than to-day; but the reformer must become the thinker as well, and not be unmindful of the sweeter side of life,—that of love and charity and brotherly good-will. The man who can mingle with and uplift the multitude, yet not feed on its excitements, but withdraw into and above himself for support and sustenance, who lives for the world but to himself, whose faith in humanity and the "eternal rightness of things" outruns even his faith in himself and his cause,—such a man is the hero of the hour.

No one can deny that there is a great deal of bluster and swagger connected with present reformatory movements; that the ends proposed are often puerile, the means devised inadequate. The strain and tension of modern social life, with its various philanthropies and benevolent enterprises, its reforms and iconoclasms, is felt by every one, but that is because we are spurred on by a too greedy spirit of accomplishment. We have learned to labor, but not to wait. The latter, the new philosophy is teaching us how to do. Evolution is the doctrine of small beginnings and small results, with an infinite waiting spell between. The reformer needs to study the methods of nature, and not add an impatient fuss and worry to his hope for better things.

"THE WOMAN QUESTION."

An article in a late number of THE INDEX, with the above heading, is worthy of a careful reading, and no doubt meets the assent of all thoughtful advocates of woman's rights.

The writer says "we are in favor of woman's rights because we are in favor of human rights." This is all that any true woman demands. "Human rights" is synonymous with "woman's rights." Had our masculine law-makers been always in favor of human rights, no agitation of the woman question would ever have been called up. Women only want equality and justice. They have no wish to ignore the line which Nature has drawn between the sex capacities of woman and man. They only want the opportunity of making the most of themselves as women. They do not want to take the positions of men, nor to exchange places or occupations with them. Neither would they take it upon themselves to designate men's sphere, as men are so often doing for women. A man is supposed to know the sphere to which he belongs. No woman presumes to attempt to enlighten him on that subject. Why not conclude that a woman also will know her sphere? Why the necessity of repeatedly reminding her that she is a woman? Surely women need this assistance from men no more than men need it from women. Let us have more confidence in each other; let us presume that the man will be manly, and the woman womanly; that the husband and father will study to promote the happiness of those under his care, and that the wife and mother will find her delight in her husband and children, endeavoring on her part to do all she can to make her home a paradise. Admitting all this,—nay, more,—admitting that a woman has, or rather can have, no higher ambition than to fill this position, and scrupulously educates herself for the place, what then? Are there no women eminently qualified for the responsible post who never marry? That young lady whose lover was killed in the army, who has no heart to grace another man's fireside, what shall we do with her? Should she enter a business partnership with her brother, where her energies would be so taxed as to leave no time for morbid complainings for her loss, would not public opinion say she was out of her sphere,—that she was competing with men? Suppose again, what is daily happening, that a happy, contented, capable wife and mother is suddenly left a widow. She looks about for the best method of caring for herself and her fatherless little ones. A public office is sought which requires her attendance but a part of each day, commanding a salary sufficient for support, leaving much time still to devote to the loved family. Ah, she is seeking a public position,—scrambling for the loaves and fishes. Too long have the loaves and fishes fallen to men. It is time that women came in for their share.

Truly, "not all men are fit to be entrusted with the suffrage." Yet many unfit men are entrusted with it.

It is likewise true that many women are fit to be entrusted with the franchise, and many more would fit themselves for it if it were entrusted to them. They would "quietly visit the polls, and then go about their private business." It is to be regretted that "some public women by their masculine manners and gestures and fierce invective" have caused apprehension on the part of men that the womanly name will be cheapened and coarsened by too much publicity. Few women are pleased with "fierce invective" even from a man. But men have for so long a time been the teachers and example, it would be singular if they were not imitated. Women will outgrow that, and speak in a less masculine and more womanly way ere long.

L. R.

"BIRDS OF A FEATHER FLOCK TOGETHER."

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 2, 1878.

MR. ABBOT:

My dear Sir,—It seems that there are two classes of liberals. One class consists of sober-minded thinkers, bred to habits of morality and honor, who have grown dissatisfied with the doctrines of the Church, who believe that its promises are empty and worthless. They separate from the Church because they cannot feel it honorable to seem to believe what they really doubt. I hope this class is a large one.

The other class has the reputation of rejecting the Church and its doctrines, because they do not wish to practice the morality which the Church teaches. This class is always described by the clergy under the name of "liberal," the former one being usually ignored altogether. I must say just here that these two classes are also found in the Church, and liberals usually allude to only one class in describing the characteristics of churchmen.

Now what I wish to say is that, if the Syracuse Convention has been the means of separating these two classes in a manner that will be recognized by all the world, it will be a great relief. Some of us are inclined to be choice in our moral associations. We cannot expect to eliminate all bad men from any association of human beings; but we would like to have a large majority of our associates in favor of order and honor.

F. E. NIPHER.

[That there were not a few of the above-mentioned second class in the majority at Syracuse, was painfully evident; but there were also others of the first class, who did not understand the character of the movement they had been misled into sanctioning. Time will undeceive the latter. Indiscriminate judgments are always unjust, and we must all carefully avoid this injustice. But Professor Nipher is substantially correct. The position of "repeal" is morally indefensible, and in the long run will be understood to be such by liberals as well as by the general public.—ED.]

THE GREAT DANGER.

EDITOR INDEX:—

The danger that threatens our Republican system, which is, theoretically at least, the best form of government yet devised for the equal protection of all, and the welfare of the people is, that the unintelligent and reckless, outnumbering the intelligent and law-abiding classes, and, mistaking liberty for license, may run the Democratic engine off the track into the dismal swamp of anarchy. Free religion, also, is liable to the same danger, and from similar causes.

As we observe among Christians, that they are divided into two classes,—the true believers, whom we may respect, and the hypocrites, whom we must despise,—so, also, among freethinkers we find the intellectual and the thoughtless classes; the former, while rejecting all ecclesiastical authority, insisting on moral and conventional restraints; while the latter—in general from want of due reflection, I think,—in their zeal for toleration are in danger of rushing into the slough of moral chaos. Let us hope that, in the Convention of the National Liberal League, about to assemble at Syracuse, good sense and calm judgment will guide its deliberations; and that, by the action of its delegates, the banner of the organization will be planted upon the impregnable side of the momentous question that seems likely to disturb its councils.

A more suicidal act could not be performed than to pledge the Liberal League to the support of the movement for the repeal of all national laws for the suppression of the beastly vice of circulating obscene publications, pictures, etc., among the young people, through the agency of the United States mails.

D. C.

WOBURN, Mass., Oct. 19.

SMALL BOY (entering shop): "I want a penny worth o' canary seed." Shopkeeper (who knows the boy): "Is it for your mother?" Small boy (contemptuously): "No; it's for the bird."

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
 TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,

HENRY S. STEVENS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
 JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $1.20 for one year, including postage, or 50 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street Boston.

PUBLICATIONS INDEX TRACTS.

OF THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Chadwick, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keeshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. E. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion." Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Lasker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for Five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for Five cents at the office.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1873 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'Truths for the Times,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fifth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 8.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
 JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	2.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work: A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	3.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physios and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.5
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. O. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA O.). The Education of American Girls.....	1.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Bible.....	2.25
The World-First.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	2.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 21 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Post-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
CORBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.20
CONWAY (MONOURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.0

Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellaneous. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 3 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols. Illustrated.....	8.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUBRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising--Adam Bede.....	5.00
Scenes.....	5.00
The Mill on the Floss.....	5.00
Felix Holt.....	5.00
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life.....	5.00
The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellaneous.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	1.25
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.....	2.00
Cosmic Philosophy.....	6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. E.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	3.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	5.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second. Child World. Part First.....	1.00
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	1.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	5.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	5.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimus Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journey.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.00
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Mountains of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Of the Skelias.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Moses the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aerodynamics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Diseases. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Oriental Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A. Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Bagin Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS O.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LEOKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	3.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	4.00
LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAFAEL, D.O.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. B.) Poems. 3 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	3.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. O.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 3 vols.....	6.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE). The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace. Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1859 to 1868.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. J. D.). The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	1.50
The Subjection of Women. Essay on Liberty--both in one vol.....	1.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.00
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	6.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.). Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
On the Science of Religion. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Traditions and Customs. Vol. II. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.). Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
2 Ekkoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	2.50
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings. Historic Americans--Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations--A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.50
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHILIPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART). The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolley Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged in.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear if.....	1.00
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours; the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, &c. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expansion of Heaven.....	2.00
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHILLER (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	5.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.25
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.25
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.25
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 35 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT). Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Humani- tial to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	1.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	2.50
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	2.50
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.50
Sociology.....	1.50
Descriptive Sociology. Parts I., II., and III., each.....	4.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	2.50
Universal Progress.....	2.50
STOWE (HARRIET REECHER). Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Olney-Book Table. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fluke.....	2.50
TENNISON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip Fendennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Esmond, and Love the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humorous, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unre- printed Pieces.
THAXTER'S (MRS. OELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.50
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.50
The Maine Woods.....	2.50
Cape Cod.....	2.50
Letters.....	2.50
A Yankee in Canada.....	1.50
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	1.50
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	1.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	1.50
Light and Electricity.....	1.50
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	1.50
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	1.50
On Sound.....	1.50
Radiant Heat.....	1.50
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
Lessons in Electricity.....	1.50
Address before British Assoc'n at Belfast.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH). Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES). The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	1.50
Vols III IV. and VI., each.....	1.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.50
Sanctaries.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	1.50
WEISS (JOHN). American Religion.....	1.50
A Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	1.50
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	1.50
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	1.00

ADDRESSES!

THE INDEX,

231 Washington St., Boston.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY—PRICE
TWO PENCE.

THE SECULAR REVIEW.

EDITED BY CHARLES WATTS.

The SECULAR REVIEW is the leading organ of Secularism, and each week has Special Articles on Theological, Social, Scientific, and Political Subjects. Its distinctive features are the advocacy of Constructive Secularism, and the dissemination of useful information on all questions which affect the welfare of the people. Letters are inserted in its "OPEN COLUMN" from all who are courteous in the expression of their views; while a special department is allotted for "NOTES AND QUERIES."

The Contributors to the SECULAR REVIEW comprise the principal advocates of Secularism, including its founder, G. J. Holyoake.

CHARLES WATTS, Publisher,
84 Fleet Street, London, E.C.

THE SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN.

THIRTY-FOURTH YEAR.

The Most Popular Scientific Paper in the World.

Only $3.50 a Year, including Postage.
Weekly, 52 Numbers a Year.
4,000 Book Pages.

The SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN is a large First-Class Weekly Newspaper of Sixteen Pages, printed in the most beautiful style, profusely illustrated with splendid engravings, representing the newest inventions and the most recent Advances in the Arts and Sciences; including New and Interesting Facts in Agriculture, Horticulture, the Home, Health, Medical Progress, Social Science, Natural History, Geology, Astronomy. The most valuable practical papers, by eminent writers in all departments of Science, will be found in the Scientific American.

Terms, $3.50 per year, $1.00 half year, which includes postage. Discount to Agents. Single copies, ten cents. Sold by all News-dealers. Remit by postal order to MUNN & CO., Publishers, 37 Park Row, New York.

PATENTS In connection with the Scientific American, Messrs. MUNN & Co. are Solicitors of American and Foreign Patents, have had 34 years' experience, and now have the largest establishment in the world. Patents are obtained on the best terms. A special notice is made in the Scientific American of all inventions patented through this Agency, with the name and residence of the Patentee. By the immense circulation thus given, public attention is directed to the merits of the new patent, and sales or introduction often easily effected.

Any person who has made a new discovery or invention can ascertain, free of charge, whether a patent can probably be obtained, by writing to the undersigned. We also send free our Hand Book about the Patent Laws, Patents, Caveats, Trade-Marks, their costs, and how procured, with hints for procuring advances on inventions. Address for the Paper, or concerning Patents, MUNN & CO., 37 Park Row, New York.

Branch Office, corner F and 7th Streets, Washington, D.C.

RADICAL LIBERAL LECTURES.

By B. F. Underwood,

FOR THE FALL AND WINTER OF 1878-9.

1. The Theory of Evolution.
2. Darwinism Defined and Defended.
3. The Philosophy of Herbert Spencer.
4. The Genesis and Nature of Religion.
5. Modern Scientific Materialism.
6. Natural Selection versus Design in Nature.
7. An Hour with German Thinkers.
8. Intuition and Instinct Viewed in the Light of Modern Psychology.
9. The Pros and Cons of a Future Life.
10. Is there a Personal Intelligent Deity?
11. The Demands of Liberalism Pertaining to State Secularization.
12. Monogamic Marriage versus the Vagaries of Free Love.
13. Woman: Her Past and Present; Her Rights and Wrongs.
14. Religious Revivals: Their Causes and Consequences.
15. The Struggles and Triumphs of Free-thought in Europe and America.
16. Issues of the Age.
17. Buddha and Buddhism.
18. Ancient Egypt: Its Laws, Customs, and Religion.
19. The French Revolution: Its Causes and Consequences.
20. Crimes and Cruelties of Superstition.
21. Cook and other "Scientific" Annihilators of Materialism Reviewed.
22. Paine the Pioneer of Free-thought in America.
23. A Liberal's Answer to the Question, "If not Christianity, What?"
24. Christianity: To what Extent has it Helped or Hindered Civilization?
25. Jesus: All that is Known and what is Guessed about Him.
26. A True Man Better than a True Christian.
27. Judaism and Christianity Outgrowths of Preexistent Heathenism.
28. Science versus the Bible.
29. The Origin and History of the Bible. (From one to six lectures.)
30. The Four Gospels Unhistorical and Unreliable.
31. Evidences for the Divinity of the Bible Examined.
32. Popular Assumptions Regarding the Bible and Christianity.
33. Bible Prophecies Falsified by the Facts of History.
34. Popular Objections to Liberalism Considered.

For terms, etc., address
B. F. UNDERWOOD,
THORNDIKE, MASS.

GOLD

Any worker can make $12 a day at home. Costly outfit free. Address TRUE & Co., Augusta, Maine.

THE INDEX
IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

Address THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston, U.S.A.

TO THE AMERICAN PAT-
BONS OF
CHOICE LITERATURE.

We have made arrangements with Messrs. CHAPMAN & HALL, London, England, for the right to publish an American Edition of

The Fortnightly Review,

Edited by JOHN MORLEY,

and are now publishing this celebrated Monthly Magazine, from a special duplicate set of stereotype plates, which are forwarded from England so promptly as to enable us to produce each month, not only an exact facsimile of this able Review, but to publish it almost at the same time the original is from England. It is in every respect equal to the London issue, at about half the original price. This effort will place in the hands of American readers the freshest utterances of leading thinkers on live issues with a promptitude unequalled. The comments of a large number of the best European thinkers on Science, Philosophy, Literature, Politics, and Miscellaneous Matters of general interest cannot fail to be appreciated and encouraged by thoughtful American readers. The following are a few of the contributors:—

Matthew Arnold, Alfred R. Wallace,
Herbert Spencer, Frederick Harrison,
Goldwin Smith, Prof. Tyndall,
Right Hon. Lyon Playfair, Prof. Huxley,
Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Prof. Darwin,
Lionel A. Talmage, Author of Supernatural Religion,
M. E. Grant Duff, M.P., Sir John Lubbock,
Hon. Robert Lowe, Anthony Trollope,
Leslie Stephen, Adolphus Trollope,
John Morley (the Editor), Sir H. S. Maine,
G. H. Lewes, Sir David Wedderburn,

AND NUMEROUS OTHERS.

Subscription Price, $5.00 per Year.

Published every month by the ROSE-BELFORD PUBLISHING CO., 60 York Street, Toronto, Ont.

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD.

GREAT THROUGH LINE

AND UNITED STATES MAIL ROUTE.

The attention of the travelling public is respectfully invited to some of the merits of this great highway, in the confident assertion and belief that no other line can offer equal inducements as a route of through travel. In

CONSTRUCTION AND EQUIPMENT

THE PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD stands confessedly at the head of American railways. The track is double the entire length of the line, of steel rails laid on heavy oak ties, which are embedded in a foundation of rock ballast eighteen inches in depth. All bridges are of iron or stone, and built upon the most approved plans. Its passenger cars, while eminently safe and substantial, are at the same time models of comfort and elegance.

THE SAFETY APPLIANCES

in use on this line well illustrate the far-seeing and liberal policy of its management, in accordance with which the utility only of an improvement and not its cost has been the question of consideration. Among many may be noticed

The Block System of Safety Signals, Janney Coupler, Buffer, and Platform, The Wharton Patent Switch, and the Westinghouse Air-Brake, forming in conjunction with a perfect double track and road-bed a combination of safeguards against accidents which have rendered them practically impossible.

Pullman Palace Cars

are run on all Express Trains from New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington, to Chicago, Cincinnati, Louisville, Indianapolis, and St. Louis.

WITHOUT CHANGE,

and to all the principal points in the far West and South with but one change of cars. Connections are made in Union Depots, and are assured to all important points. The Scenery of the Pennsylvania Route is admitted to be unsurpassed in the world for grandeur, beauty, and variety. Superior refreshment facilities are provided. Employes are courteous and attentive, and it is an inevitable result that a trip by the Pennsylvania Railroad must form

A Pleasing and Memorable Experience.

Tickets for sale at the lowest rates at the Ticket Offices of the Company in all important cities and towns.

FRANK THOMSON, L. P. FARMER,
General Manager, General Passenger Agent.
C. S. HALDEMAN, New England Agent,
203 and 205 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 80 cents. Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the fine list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

THE INDEX AS AN
ADVERTISING MEDIUM.

Testimony of one who has tried it.

FLORENCE, Iowa, Jan. 5, 1878.
... THE INDEX is the best advertising medium which I have tried. ...
E. C. WALKER.

THE NEWBURY STREET
SCHOOL will be re-opened for its twelfth year October 2. Address

Miss M. S. DEVEREUX,

24 NEWBURY STREET, BOSTON.

Pupils received into the family under the especial care of Miss M. S. Devereux and Miss Lucretia P. Hale.
References: Rev. Dr. Orville Dewey, Sheffield, Mass.; Rev. E. E. Hale, Rev. J. F. Clarke, Hon. Nathaniel Bliss, Dr. Oliver W. Holmes, Mr. Henry E. Raymond, Boston; Prof. Benjamin Pierce, Cambridge, Mass.; Mr. A. C. Richards, Irvington, N.Y.; Mr. H. B. Bishop, New York.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF
O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
R. H. RANNEY,
F. E. ABBOT.

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

A REMARKABLE BOOK.

A MODERN SYMPOSIUM.

SUBJECTS:

The Soul and Future Life.

By Mr. Frederic Harrison, Hon. Roden Noel, R. H. Hutton, Lord Selborne, Prof. Huxley, Canon Barry, Lord Blackford, Mr. W. R. Greg, Rev. Baldwin Brown, and Dr. W. G. Ward.

The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief.

By Sir James Fitz-James Stephen, Prof. Clifford, Lord Selborne, Rev. Mr. Martineau, Mr. Frederic Harrison, the Dean of St. Paul's, the Duke of Argyll, Dr. W. G. Ward, Prof. Huxley, and R. H. Hutton.

1 Vol. Crown, 8vo. Cloth, neat, $1.25.

This volume contains the scholarly utterances of the leading scientists and philosophers of Great Britain on two of the most important subjects of the century.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass., for

I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 50 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.

II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.

III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.

IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.

V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13 and 20, 1876.)

VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. O. Gannett.

No. II, III, IV, V, VI, 10 cts. each; ten for 90 cts.; one hundred, $9.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 50 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS for 1872, '73, '74, '75, '76, and '77, Five cents each.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLETT & CO., Portland, Maine.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & CO., Portland, Maine.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The twenty-fifth school year of this Family and Day School for both sexes will begin WEDNESDAY, Sept. 19, 1877. For Circular and information apply to

NATH'L T. ALLEN,
West Newton, Mass.

NEW BOOK BY

INGERSOLL.

Contains his latest lectures on "The Ghosts," "Liberty of Man, Woman, and Child," "Centennial Oration," "Farming in Illinois," and others. Handsomely bound in one volume. Price $1.50. Also

THE GODS AND OTHER LECTURES.

Same style. Price $1.25.
Sent post-paid on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE
OF AMERICA.

1. EQUAL RIGHTS IN RELIGION. Contains an Historical Account of the Liberal League movement; a full Report of the Centennial Congress of Liberals at Philadelphia, July 1 to 4, 1876, with Essays by F. E. Abbot, James Parton, B. F. Underwood, and others; the Constitution of the National Liberal League, List of Charter Members, etc., etc. Octavo, pp. 180. Cloth, $1.00; paper, 75 cents.
2. PATRIOTIC ADDRESSES TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES, adopted at Philadelphia, July 4, 1876. With Resolutions of the Congress, Extracts from Letters by Distinguished Citizens, Constitution of the National Liberal League, etc. Adapted for gratuitous distribution by friends of the cause. Octavo, 24 pp. Single copies, 3 cts.; 10 copies, 15 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.
3. PRIVILEGE FOR NONE—JUSTICE FOR ALL. Contains the N. L. L. Platform and Resolutions adopted at Rochester, Oct. 26, 1877, full information how to organize Local Leagues, etc. Twenty-page tract for the use of workers. Single copies, 5 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.

ADDRESS

National Liberal League of America,

231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON.

FROTHINGHAM'S WORKS.

THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY. An Essay. Third Edition—Revised. Price $1.50.

"Nobody can peruse this book without respect for the learning, mental honesty and skill in the statement of his convictions, possessed by the author, and for the essential integrity and philanthropic tendency of his spirit."—Springfield Republican.

"A profoundly sincere book, the work of one who has read largely, studied thoroughly, reflected patiently. It is a model of scholarly culture and of finished and vigorous style."—Boston Globe.

THE CHILD'S BOOK OF RELIGION. For Sunday-schools and Homes. Price $1.00.

THE SAFEST CREED, AND OTHER DISCOURSES. 12mo, Cloth, $1.50.

Not "food for babes," but full of suggestion for earnest and thoughtful men.

STORIES FROM THE LIPS OF THE TEACHER. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"The Parables are so re-told as to absorb the attention of the reader, and to fasten upon the mind what the writer believes to have been the impression the Savior meant to convey. It is in style and thought a superior book, and will interest alike young and old."—Zion's Herald (Methodist).

STORIES OF THE PATRIARCHS. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"A work of culture and taste; it will be welcome to all ages, and gives the sublimest lessons of manhood in the simple language of a child."—Springfield Republican.

BELIEFS OF THE UNBELIEVERS. A Lecture. 12mo, Cloth, $1.00.

TRANSCENDENTALISM IN NEW ENGLAND. A History. With sketches and studies of Emerson, Alcott, Parker, Margaret Fuller, the Brook-Farm Community, etc. 8vo, Cloth extra, with steel portrait of the author, $2.50.

THE LIFE OF THEODORE PARKER. 8vo. With Portrait, $3.00.

The New York Tribune closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

THE CRADLE OF THE CHRIST. A Study in Primitive Christianity, illustrating the prime importance of the Messianic Idea in the New Testament, as the key to the development of Christianity from Judaism. Octavo, Cloth, $1.75.

Mailed, post-paid, on receipt of price, by THE INDEX 231 Washington St., Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 9.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, NOV. 21, 1878.

WHOLE NO. 465.

LIBERAL LEAGUE PLATFORM

For the Presidential Election of 1880,

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.

2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.

3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

N. B.—The nomination of candidates upon the above platform was postponed to a future Congress of the National Liberal League.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

GLIMPSSES.

LEO XIII. evidently hankers after temporal sovereignty quite as strongly as his predecessor. All Popes come to that at last, however liberal at the start; "It's the nature of the beast."

PROFESSOR R. A. PROCTOR, in the Echo, asks if there can be anything more ghastly or more grotesque than the thought that the Almighty destroyed the women and children who were on board the Princess Alice, because certain politicians in England have regarded too lightly the sufferings of women and children in Bulgaria. He remarks that the Oriental mind could form no better conception of God than as a despot, cruel, treacherous, and merciless, slaying not only those who had offended him, even unwittingly, but their wives and children, and all belonging to their household; but it has been left to English theologians to invent a false God even more horrible,—"a God who, being offended with one set of persons, would wreak vengeance on an entirely different set, avenging the wrongs of women and children, not by punishing the persons who had offended him, but by destroying hundreds of women and children, and bringing sorrow on thousands more."

THE SAN FRANCISCO Post, like many other secular journals, is growing restive under the multiplying exposures of dishonest church-members: "He was a member of the Second Baptist Church, a treasurer of the Sunday-school, and an active member of the Young Men's Christian Association." This description follows the telegraphic notice of the defalcation of Calder, the bank cashier at Providence, R.I. With the addition, 'and a thief,' it would have been perfect. It is not exceptional, however. It comes so frequently over the wires nowadays that when any glaring crime against morals, any conspicuous breach of trust, any malignant meanness, is reported anywhere and by any person, we invariably expect to read at the close the explanatory note: 'He was a pious young man.' How is it that religious profession and rascality walk along the highway of life nowadays banded together like the Siamese twins? Has the 'Gospel of Greed' according to Beecher, and the fashionable lights of the Church who 'prophecy smooth things to the people,' anything to do with it? Anyhow, the occurrence is so frequent that it has ceased to be accidental. There is cause somewhere for such results."

THE "Prophetic Conference," at New York, was an astounding anachronism. Here was a great collection of ecclesiastical leaders, uniting in this melancholy confession of their own mediocrity:—

"We desire disclaiming what doctrines have been or may be held in connection with the belief of the pre-millennial coming of the Lord which conflict with the faith once delivered to the saints and received by the Church universal along the ages, and to bear our united testimony to that which we believe to be the truth of the gospel in the particulars which follow; viz., First, we affirm our belief in the supreme and absolute authority of the written Word of God on all questions of doctrine and duty; second, the prophetic words of the Old Testament concerning the first coming of our Lord Jesus Christ were literally fulfilled in his birth, life, death, resurrection and ascension; and so the prophetic words of both the Old and New Testament concerning his second coming will be literally fulfilled in his visible body returning to this earth in like manner as he went into heaven, and this glorious epiphany of the great God, our Savior Jesus Christ, is the blessed hope of the believer and of the Church during the entire dispensation; third, that this second coming of the Lord Jesus Christ is everywhere represented in the Scriptures as imminent and may occur at any moment; yet the precise day and hour thereof is unknown to man and known only to God; fourth, the Scriptures nowhere teach that the whole world will be converted to God, or that there will be a reign of universal righteousness and peace before the return of our blessed Lord; but that only at and by his coming in power and glory will the prophecies concerning the progress of evil and the development of anti-Christ, the times of the Gentiles and the in-gatherings of Israel, the resurrection of the dead in Christ and the transfiguration of his living saints, receive their fulfillment and the period of the millennial blessedness its inauguration; fifth, the duty of the Church during the absence of the bridegroom is to watch and pray, to work and wait, to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature, and thus hasten the coming of the day of God, and to his later promise, 'Surely I come quickly,' to respond in joyous hope: 'Even so; come, Lord Jesus.'

"Resolved, That the doctrine of our Lord's pre-millennial advent instead of paralyzing evangelistic and missionary efforts, is one of the highest incentives to earnestness in preaching the gospel to every creature 'till He cometh.'"

SCOTLAND is taking painful but instructive lessons on the necessity of looking deeper than church-membership to find the secret of moral integrity. In the light of the now constant occurrence of such events as the Pall Mall Gazette here records, the public mind is becoming gradually weaned from the superstitious notion that Christianity is the "foundation of morality": "The Scotch papers are beginning to be very communicative respecting the personal career, character, and claims to notice of the six or seven gentlemen who, as directors and officers of the City of Glasgow Bank, seem to have contrived to divide among themselves and their friends, and otherwise to squander, very nearly seven millions of money; and it is very edifying and instructive to find that these gentlemen were mostly distinguished for the exemplary nature of their walk and conversation. One of the most distinguished of the group, on account both of his high moral example and the extent to which he helped himself and his friends to the bank's cash, was Mr. Lewis Potter, a native of Scotland, and himself and relatives long connected with the City of Glasgow Bank. This gentleman, we are told, 'has lived sumptuously on a beautiful estate near Edinburgh, and has taken an active part in all movements affecting the moral and religious welfare of the district, and was warmly attached to the Free Church.' Indeed, so warmly was he attached to that institution that five years ago he built the Burnbank Free Church, and became responsible for the greater portion of the cost of the fabric, and in consequence of this liberality has enjoyed great fame for pious zeal and benevolence. A slight drawback, however, has come to light by the failure, since it now appears that the cost of the Burnbank edifice did not come out of Mr. Lewis Potter's own pocket; and it is considered to be very doubtful whether, in consequence of Mr. Lewis Potter's ingenious manipulation of the transaction, the share-holders of the bank will be able to establish any lien over this ecclesiastical asset. So that Mr. Lewis Potter furnishes one more to the very, very long roll of instances in which, as Swift says, 'There was a man who, of his great bounty, built a church at the expense of the county.' But upon the special test of sufficiency and rectitude to which the Scottish nation attaches the highest value,—namely, the observance of the Sabbath,—Mr. Lewis Potter is described as giving forth a testimony most consistent and emphatic. During all the years when, according to the inspectors' report, he actively assisted in falsifying the accounts, in making away with the cash reserve, and in deceiving the share-holders and the public, he steadily refused to take in or read Monday's newspapers because they were printed on the first day of the week. Of Mr. William Taylor, also, another director of the City of Glasgow Bank, it is remarked that he occupied a prominent position as president of the Glasgow Young Men's Christian Association, and as a representative on several occasions of St. Enoch's Church in the General Assembly. It is lamentable to have to add that, notwithstanding the eminence of these two gentlemen in all the pious virtues, they went on steadily year after year falsifying the accounts and ruining the share-holders."

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE OF AMERICA.

OFFICERS.

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. E. P. HURLBUT.....Albany, N. Y.
 HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL.....Boston, Mass.
 HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES.....St. Louis, Mo.
 HON. HENRY BOOTH.....Chicago, Ill.
 HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN.....Irvington, Ind.
 HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. WM. J. POTTER.....New Bedford, Mass.
 MR. E. P. HALLLOWELL.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. JAMES PARTON.....Newburyport, Mass.
 MR. F. BOHRENMANN-POTT.....San Francisco, Cal.
 HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE.....Providence, R. I.
 REV. M. J. SAVAGE.....Boston, Mass.
 RABBI B. FELSENTHAL.....Chicago, Ill.
 REV. W. H. SPENCER.....Sparta, Wis.
 MR. SAMUEL L. HILL.....Florence, Mass.
 MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH.....Detroit, Mich.
 MR. KARL HEINZEN.....Editor of "Der Pioneer," Boston.
 MR. HORACE SEEVER.....Editor of "The Investigator," Boston.
 RABBI ISAAC M. WISE.....Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
 MR. MORITZ ELLINGER.....Editor of "Jewish Times," New York.
 REV. ROBERT COLLYER.....Chicago, Ill.
 COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.....Peoria, Ill.
 DR. T. L. BROWN.....Binghamton, N. Y.
 HON. E. S. MOORMICK.....Franklin, Pa.
 ELDER F. W. EVANS.....Mount Lebanon, N. Y.
 MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON.....New York City.
 MRS. AMY POST.....Rochester, N. Y.
 MRS. ELIZABETH GADY STANTON.....Tombury, Va.
 MISS RALPH HOLLEY.....Lottsburgh, Va.
 JOSEPH McDONOUGH.....Albany, N. Y.
 RABBI MAX SCHLESINGER.....Albany, N. Y.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN.....231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

Miss JANE P. TITCOMB.....142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

J. A. J. WILCOX.....2 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

J. A. J. WILCOX.....W. H. HAMLEN.
 F. E. ABBOT.....O. D. B. MILLS.
 D. G. ORANDON.

Executive Committee.

Alabama.....J. H. HALLEY, Selma.
 Arkansas.....JOHN ABBOTT, Monticello.
 California.....J. L. HATCH, San Francisco.
 Colorado.....DAVID T. BEALS, Grandville.
 Connecticut.....GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
 Delaware.....JOSEPH D. GUNDEL, Greenville.
 Florida.....T. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprise.
 Georgia.....DR. A. A. BELL, Madison.
 Illinois.....DR. A. G. HUMPHREY, Galesburg.
 Indiana.....N. D. WATKINS, Xenia.
 Iowa.....J. C. MICHENER, Adel.
 Kansas.....JOHN FARNSWORTH, Fort Scott.
 Kentucky.....S. B. CLARK, Wilsonville.
 Louisiana.....EMERSON BENTLEY, New Orleans.
 Maine.....DR. W. H. BROWN, Bangor.
 Maryland.....J. S. RUSSELL, New Market.
 Massachusetts.....W. H. SAYWARD, Boston.
 Michigan.....KARL SCHMIDT, Detroit.
 Minnesota.....J. B. BASSETT, Minneapolis.
 Missouri.....B. PETERSON, St. Louis.
 Nebraska.....W. E. COPELAND, Lincoln.
 Nevada.....V. G. BARRITT, White Rock.
 New Hampshire.....WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
 New Jersey.....FRANCIS W. ORVIS, Passaic.
 New York.....C. D. B. MILLS (Chairman), Syracuse.
 North Carolina.....J. W. THORNE, Warren.
 Ohio.....E. D. STARK, Cleveland.
 Oregon.....SAMUEL COULT, Humboldt Basin.
 Pennsylvania.....G. W. BALDWIN, Lancaster.
 Rhode Island.....GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
 South Carolina.....W. F. FULLER, Columbia.
 Tennessee.....DR. E. E. PRICE, Chattanooga.
 Texas.....DR. L. J. RUSSELL, Harrisville.
 Vermont.....R. L. HAUGHTON, North Bennington.
 Virginia.....L. SPAULDING, Norfolk.
 West Virginia.....DR. A. M. DANT, Weston.
 Wisconsin.....ROBERT C. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
 District of Columbia.....D. F. WILCOX, Foulton.
 Utah.....W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
 Wyoming.....W. PARSONS, Poudre City.
 Wyoming.....NORMAN S. PORTER.

Finance Committee.

D. G. ORANDON, Chairman.....Chelsea, Mass.
 MRS. SARAH B. OTIS.....137 Warren Avenue, Boston.
 HARLAN P. HYDE.....231 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES

Chartered by the National Liberal League of America.

FLORENCE, MASS.—President, Seth Hunt; Secretary, Clarence E. Brown.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Florence Liberal League.

SYRACUSE, N.Y.—President, John W. Truesdell; Secretary, Mrs. Nettie C. Truesdell.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Onondaga County Liberal League.

N.B.—The above is an acknowledgment of the fact that a charter is due and will be sent as soon as possible. Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues originally chartered by the "National Liberal League" will receive charters from the "National Liberal League of America" without extra charge, if they send a certified copy of their vote to accept the following invitation:—

"Voted, That all Local Leagues that approve the formation of the National Liberal League of America are invited to dissolve their connection with the old League, and to join this League."

THERE IS A genuine ring about this colored sermon, colored only as to its orthography. The tinted Johnson got hold of a bottom fact on which to base his theory, and it would do no harm if it found its way among the pale faces: "Broddren, my 'sperience is dat it ain't de perfection of 'ligion, but de 'casional practice of it dat makes a man 'ceptable up yonder. When yer gits ter de golden gate an' Peter looks yer right in de eye and yer shows him yer long creed an says, pompous like, dat yer 'longed ter de big 'Piscopalian Church, de 'postle 'll shake his head an say, 'Dat ain't nuff ter get yer through.' But if yer takes all yer bills under yer arm, yer grocer bills an' yer rent bills, an' he looks 'em over an' finds 'em all receipted, he'll say, 'Yer title's clear, an unlock de gate an' let yer pitch yer voice for de angels' song. But 'tain't no use ter trabble along dat narrer path 'less yer can kerry, folded up in yer creed, a good recommendation from yer creditors. Hebben ain't no place fur a man who has to dodge round a corner fur fear ob meetin' some one who'll ask fur dat little bill dat nebber was paid."

[FOR THE INDEX.]

The Liberal League:

ITS OBJECTS AND CONDITIONS OF ITS SUCCESS.

AN ADDRESS DELIVERED BEFORE THE SECOND ANNUAL CONGRESS OF THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE AT SYRACUSE, N.Y., OCT. 27, 1878.

BY B. F. UNDERWOOD.

Having been invited to address this Congress, I cannot do better, in view of the extraordinary proceedings of its sessions yesterday and to-day, than to explain the reasons of the existence of the Liberal League, state its principles and purposes, point out dangers that threaten its usefulness, and indicate some of the conditions on which alone its growth and success can be reasonably expected.

From the beginning of our national existence, sagacious, just, and courageous men have protested against the wrong, and spoken words of warning against the danger, of preserving in this Republic any vestiges or traces of that union of Church and State which was once complete and universal throughout Christendom. Jefferson thoroughly comprehended the importance of State secularization. So did Franklin. The former declined, against the urgent solicitation of the clergy, to appoint a day of fasting, thanksgiving, and prayer, on the very just ground that, as President of the United States, his duty was to execute the laws, not to appoint days for religious service. From that time until now, every generation has had men in this country who have raised their voices or wielded their pens in opposition to all those laws and practices which imply a connection between government and religion. Judge Hertell, of New York, and Abner Kneeland, of Boston, nearly half a century ago, called attention to the very wrongs against which we, members of the Liberal League, protest to-day; and the so-called "infidel" papers that have been published in this country have without exception insisted that justice, equal rights, and religious liberty demand their entire removal. All honor to the brave men, living and dead, who in years past, with a solid public sentiment against them, for conscience' sake and from love of liberty and right, opposed every law and every practice involving a union of Church and State.

Until within the past few years, however, the number interested in this reformatory movement was comparatively small; and, although some of its features were occasionally forced upon the notice of the people in certain localities, it was too far in advance of public opinion to command permanent attention. Generally, it received no recognition from the press, pulpit, or people. It was regarded as only the outcropping of "infidelity," too insignificant to be worthy of notice.

But of late, the movement has acquired in this country a strength it never possessed before, and it is gaining friends and growing in importance every day, advancing evidently with the progress of education and liberal thought. The prominence given the cause of State secularization by Francis E. Abbot, the ability and persistency with which, in spite of popular ignorance and misconception, and in spite of apathy among liberals, he has stated and maintained its principles, together with the formation of the Liberal League, and the publication of its platform and the proceedings of its meetings and conventions by the liberal and secular press, have, among other causes, contributed greatly to call attention to the subject and to awaken interest in it.

The principles involved in the movement have been presented to the public with great clearness and definiteness. They have been published and circulated widely. They have been explained by many speakers from the platform. Petitions have been circulated and numerously signed, asking for State secularization. The leading papers of the country begin to speak respectfully, and some of them approvingly, of the general objects of the Liberal League. This organization is increasing in number and influence, helping, and (if dissensions do not destroy its efficiency) destined yet more to help, to secure the total separation of Church and State in this Republic.

Thus far, the movement has been sustained by liberals, or those who stand outside of the Christian churches, as was the anti-slavery cause in its early days, when the struggles and sacrifices of its now revered but then despised defenders were rewarded by malicious misrepresentation, bitter denunciation, and open violence. The great majority of the adherents of Orthodox Christianity, and many of those of what is called Liberal Christianity, including prominent leaders, appear to have no sympathy with the objects of the League. Since they recognize Christianity as true and divine, they seem to think the government should so recognize it, and that no harm is done if Pagans, Jews, and Free-thinkers are compelled to help support it. This fact is not very creditable to the adherents of the popular faith. It seems to indicate that between this faith—as many noble men and women as it can claim—and a sentiment of justice there is unfortunately no necessary connection.

It must be admitted, however, that some of the evils against which we protest, especially the use of the Bible in the public schools, have, the past four or five years, been ably and earnestly opposed by a few of the representatives of the Orthodox denominations. Not a few in the churches, probably, see the justice of our claim; but since the agitation for State secularization originated among liberals, and is sustained by them, and since the movement as an organized effort is yet in its infancy, and of course unpopular with the masses, they avoid any identification with it.

All classes of liberals see and acknowledge the justice of the demands of the Liberal League, but from various reasons many have shown indifference to its success. One reason is, probably, that they have become so accustomed to the evils which the league aims to remove, that they fail to realize fully the flagrant wrong that they involve to themselves and others who reject Christianity,—the infringement on their rights, and the violation of religious liberty,—and hence they think less of working for the success of these great principles of equality than of opposing, in a general way, the creeds of the churches. Slavery in every form tends to make its victims contented and submissive, by the very conditions to which it habituates them. Some trust wholly to the growth of a more just public sentiment, by education and the progress of liberal thought, and justify their inaction by declaring that such reforms cannot be hastened, or if they are they are liable to be succeeded by dangerous reactions; while others dislike from personal considerations to encounter the hostility of the clergy and the churches, and so stand aloof from the League. But it is unquestionable that liberals are fast waking to the importance of this subject, while the public feeling is steadily growing in our favor.

Since the Liberal League is composed wholly of the class known as liberals, a few remarks here in regard to the desirability and practicability of organized effort on their part may be appropriate and timely. It is often asked, Why do not liberals organize for the dissemination of their principles, and thus secure an influence which, without organization, is impossible? The reason that liberals do not unite, and have not in the past united, to advance their views on the subject of religion is, it seems to me, obvious enough, although apparently overlooked by many. The very diversity of belief among liberals renders it impossible for them to subscribe to any creed that may be prepared for them as a basis of union. If they did organize, they would be unable to fix on any religious doctrines as those of the association, and it would be equally impossible to have any representatives, for the reason that no person could represent all the conflicting systems and different schools of thought which have their adherents among liberals. True, different classes of liberals—theists, atheists, spiritualists, materialists, transcendentalists, etc.—might organize as such separately, were they so inclined; but if they should, the basis would be too narrow to suit the broad, liberal minds of the class, even, whose particular views the organization should represent and endeavor to advance. Such an association would be exclusive from the beginning, and liable to become sectarian, rigid, and unprogressive with age. A basis of organization, to secure the support of all classes of liberals that have outgrown the creeds of the churches, must be broad and comprehensive, as that of a body formed to advance particular views on religion, and to oppose all others, never can be. It must be like that of the Free Religious Association, which requires no declaration of religious belief as a test of membership, and is pledged to the support or advancement of no school of thought or system of faith, but whose object is to encourage the study and the courteous discussion of all schools and systems, whose representatives are cordially welcomed to the privileges of membership and to the liberty of the platform. Such an association, too catholic and cosmopolitan to receive sympathy or support from any class of sectarians or zealots, religious or unreligious, is admirably adapted to encourage impartial investigation, to promote breadth of thought, an appreciation of the good in all systems, and a considerate regard for all who love and are searching for the truth.

While an organization of this broad character is possible among those who differ widely on questions of religion and philosophy, it is quite as practicable, and to say the least quite as important, for them to organize for the removal of evils to which they are all opposed, and for the accomplishment of work in which they feel a common interest.

Such an organization is the Liberal League. Its primary object is neither the promulgation nor the discussion of the doctrines of any system of faith or philosophy, except so far as it clearly conflicts in practice with equal rights and the religious liberty of citizens. It is an organization formed in the interests of justice and freedom to all. It declares that in this Republic, where there is great diversity of belief on the subject of religion, all have the right to worship in the manner that seems to them best, or not to worship at all if that is their pleasure, and that there should be no compulsory support of any religion, and no law or practice by the general or State governments directly or indirectly recognizing any religion either as true or false; in other words, that there should be a total, absolute separation of Church and State, both in theory and in practice, now, henceforth, and forever; that the government should be entirely secular, and should have nothing whatever to do with any religion, nor with any anti-religious system or belief, except to protect its adherents, when necessary, in the rightful enjoyment of their faith or convictions, when their beliefs are not of a character that requires them to infringe on the rights and liberties of other citizens. It protests against the use of religious books and the performance of religious service in our public schools; it protests against the exemption of churches from their just proportion of taxation, when liberal halls are taxed like other property; it protests against the recognition by the State of the claims of any religion as to the sacredness of one day over another; it protests against the employment of chaplains by the government, and the conversion of halls of legislation into places for religious service, and the payment for such service—however small the amount—from the public treasury; it protests against all religious service at the public expense, or by the direction of the constituted authorities, in any department of the national or State government; it protests against public appropriations for institutions in which religious doctrines are taught; it protests against proclamations by the President of the United States, and by Governors of the States, appointing days for thanksgiving and prayer. Against all these, and other similar practices, the League firmly and earnestly protests; and it demands that they cease, since they are inconsistent with the government of the United States and the genius of free institutions; since they are a denial of that separation of Church and State, and that principle of religious liberty which so many are praising, but which so few seem to understand; and since impartial justice and the cause of religious liberty demand the removal of these wrongs, and the complete secularization of the State.

With these objects in view, the League invites all, without regard to religious belief, nationality, sex, or race, to join in the accomplishment of its work. No question is asked how much or how little you believe; whether you are a Christian, Jew, Buddhist, Mohammedan, Pagan, Spiritualist, Atheist, or Sceptic; whether you are in favor of coin or "flat money"; whether you are for or against woman suffrage; whether you are a Republican or a Democrat, or neither: if you recognize the importance and justice of our work and will assist us in helping educate the people in our principles, your cooperation is desired.

And here I deem it proper to emphasize the fact that, to insure success, the Liberal League must confine itself to the objects for which it was organized. It must keep constantly in view State secularization, and, to this end, every other consideration must be subordinate. It is now, and in the future still more will be, composed of somewhat heterogeneous elements. One great danger that is a standing menace to all such organizations is the liability of giving undue prominence to questions which have no direct bearing on their objects, and concerning which there is the same difference inside as there is outside of their membership,—questions which, at certain times, owing to some circumstance, absorb public attention, and which seem to many, under the influence of temporary excitement, of more importance than the objects which called the organization into existence; and thus they are often the cause of dissension, and not unfrequently destroy the harmony and unity of organizations whose aims and objects at the beginning were clear, definite, and well understood.

Let the Liberal League avoid this rock on which so many organizations have been dashed to pieces. Its members, as individuals, are at liberty to advocate what they choose on all subjects, and to join any party or association pledged to other reforms; but as members of the Liberal League it is all-important that they keep constantly in mind the purpose for which the organization was formed. Outside the Liberal League, individually or as members of other organizations, they can use their influence in favor of the Republican or Democratic party, gold or greenbacks, woman-suffrage or anti-woman-suffrage, prohibition or license, Christianity or anti-Christianity, Spiritualism or materialism, theism or atheism, evolution or creation; but the dissemination of any views on these subjects, however desirable, is no proper part of the work of the Liberal League. There are indiscriminating minds that will pronounce this a narrow policy, because they fail to distinguish between the legitimate work of the League and their cherished convictions on subjects that are beyond the province and scope of this body. There are some individuals in such a chronic state of excitement in regard to some subject that they must introduce it whenever they have an opportunity to address the public, whatever the object for which the meeting was called. We may concede to such persons honesty and zeal; but they lack judgment and discretion, and constitute the most troublesome element with which conventions have to deal.

But to all such persons we must say: While we welcome you to this organization and desire your assistance, we cannot as members of the League decide on, or consume our time in discussing, questions that are utterly alien to the principles and purposes of this body. By this course alone can harmony be maintained, and the efficiency and success of the League secured.

For two days, nearly the entire proceedings of this Congress have related to the question whether the law of 1873 against the circulation of obscene literature through the mails should be modified or totally repealed. The main objects of the Liberal League have been lost sight of, and, from listening to the discussion yesterday and to-day, no person could get any idea of the real purpose for which the National Liberal League was organized.

From the first, I have insisted that the question as to the constitutionality of the law of 1873 is a question with which the Liberal League has nothing to do; and the difference of opinion on this subject has been given a prominence to which, in this body, it is not entitled.

Because there were reasons for believing that persons had been unjustly convicted of circulating obscene literature, owing to the loose and defective character of the law under which they were tried, the National Liberal League at Philadelphia in 1876 passed a resolution demanding, in the interests of justice, that all laws against obscenity should be so clear and definite as to allow only the conviction and punishment of guilty persons; and lest the resolution should be uncharitably construed by anybody to intimate sympathy with any who were engaged in circulating moral filth, it added that it was in favor of proper legislation against obscene literature. That resolution was, I believe, right and timely. Both the contending parties can concur in it now. It was simply a protest against what seemed to be a wrong to individuals in consequence of loose legislation.

In no way did that resolution lead to the discussion that has been going on respecting the Comstock law, or to the scenes we have witnessed at the sessions of this Congress. If we are wise, we will hereafter confine our discussions to the purposes of the League. Unless questions that are not germane to the objects of the organization can be kept out of our Conventions, the usefulness of the League and even its existence will soon end.

While guarding against dissension within, public opinion is the field without, to which we should give constant attention and devote our labors. It is ours to cultivate and to improve to the extent of our ability.

The advancement of the cause of State secularization will not be promoted by trusting simply to the tendency of the age, nor by relying wholly on the course of evolution. The tendency of an age is but the visible expression of the growing convictions and feelings of the people; and it may be encouraged and directed wisely, or it may be retarded or changed for evil by individual, and yet more by organized, effort; while the modifications of beliefs and of institutions are hastened or hindered by our contributions to character and conduct, which are themselves factors in the process called evolution. It becomes our duty, then, to avail ourselves of all practicable means to instruct the people in the principles of the Liberal League, and to enforce the justice of its claims. We should, through the press and by essays and lectures, show how the evils against which we protest imply a union of Church and State; show that equal rights and the best interests of the State call for its total divorce from the Church; that the support of Christian morality, even, forms no part of the duty of the national or State governments; that natural morality can alone claim the recognition or constitute the basis of a government that is purely secular; that natural morality is independent of Christianity and of all other systems of religion; that the claim that, because morality is the foundation of the stability and well-being of the nation, it is the right and duty of the government to sustain Christianity is a claim that is unjust and absurd, shallow and false, and involves an insult to the millions of noble men and women, living and dead, whom this religion does not and cannot claim as adherents.

The usual means of reaching the people are open to us,—the platform and the press. Our influence should be brought to bear on all public speakers who are known to be friendly to our principles, to induce them to use their influence with the public in favor of State secularization, whenever a favorable opportunity offers itself. Members of the League should encourage the press to give prominence to this subject whenever possible. All the liberal papers are open to us; and, although some of these papers have treated the work of the League as something of inferior importance to most other matters, yet if the League is active, energetic, and aggressive, it will not only arouse from their "masterly inactivity" some of our liberal journals, but give us, to some extent, the influence of that large class of papers whose editors are in sympathy with us, and who will favor our movement as far as their business interests will permit. It is useless to spend time in denouncing these men for lack of moral heroism or loyalty to principle. It is better to obtain their aid by making it possible for them to support our movement without personal sacrifice. The formation of new Leagues must be encouraged, and money raised for the circulation of our papers and literature.

We must agitate and educate until a strong public sentiment shall be formed in favor of our principles, when political parties will be forced to give their recognition and endorsement by incorporating them in their platforms. There is a large element that will oppose with religious zeal the reforms at which we aim, in proportion as they begin to command general attention. But when the movement gains more strength, it will have the countenance of many of the influential minds whose sympathy is now with us, but who fear they will impair the value and endanger the success of their labors in the fields of reform, if they now connect themselves with the Liberal League. Politicians will smile on us in proportion as we increase in numbers and power. The more sagacious of the religious leaders will defend our movement when its triumph shall appear probable; and possibly the Orthodox clergy, fifty years from now, or sooner, will be pleased to claim the credit of having originated this reform, and will maintain it is clearly taught in their sacred books. Before that time, without doubt, selfish demagogues who now turn from the reform with affected disgust, and are ready by appeals to popular prejudice and religious bigotry to increase the opposition, if thereby they can secure votes for office, will, with the same corrupt motives and designs, endeavor to foment themselves on us, and use the League as a means of gratifying their ambition and greed. There is no beneficent movement which this class has not opposed, when it was weak; nor has a reform ever acquired strength and given promise of speedy success which the same class has not tried to use for personal ends or party schemes. Let us profit by the past, and guard against this charge that will increase with our growth in numbers and influence.

I hope the Liberal League will continue its noble work; and to this end all personal feelings should be subordinated, and the object of the League kept steadily in view. The principles for which we contend are just, and, I am confident, will, in spite of the opposition of enemies and the folly of friends, ultimately triumph.

WHEN MEN grow virtuous in their old age, they are merely making a sacrifice to God of the devil's leavings.—Swift.

THE BIBLE IN THE SCHOOLS.

A PECULIAR PHASE OF THE QUESTION IN NEW HAVEN.

PROTESTANT AND ROMAN CATHOLIC CLERGYMEN UNITING IN PREPARING A MANUAL FOR USE IN THE SCHOOLS.—ONE MANUAL FOR PROTESTANTS, AND ANOTHER FOR ROMAN CATHOLICS.—THE SUGGESTIONS NOW UNDER CONSIDERATION BY THE BOARD OF EDUCATION.

NEW HAVEN, NOV. 3.

The schools of the city of New Haven are under control of a board of education elected at an annual school election. The members of this board, who have been named a Committee on Schools, now have under consideration several interesting documents submitted by citizens, who, either individually or in groups, think they have hit upon something in the way of religious exercises in the schools which will suit all beliefs and shades of opinion. Not long before the last annual election, a majority of the board unceremoniously voted to discontinue the religious or devotional exercises which had, up to that time, been in use in the schools. This action raised a whirlwind in the city. The election was conducted solely with an eye to the religious issue. The tickets were Bible and anti-Bible. The Bible people won by a very heavy majority, and soon after election the board (the new members turning the scale) restored the former condition of things. But in the election, the Bible party had been made up of Protestants and Roman Catholics. The latter fought as manfully as the former for the retention of religious exercises in the schools, and one of the new members of the board is a Roman Catholic. The first thing to be done after election by the Bible party was the preparation of such a directory or manual of worship for the schools as would suit everybody. The most systematic effort made in this direction was the work of several prominent clergymen, including Rev. Dr. Harwood, Rector of Trinity Episcopal Church; Rev. Dr. Leonard Bacon, Pastor Emeritus of Centre Church, and sometimes called the Nestor of New England Congregationalism; Rev. John E. Todd, of the Church of the Redeemer, a son of Rev. Dr. Todd, of Pittsfield; ex-President Theodore D. Woolsey, of Yale, and President Porter, of Yale; but the last-named two did little besides giving their signatures.

A good many persons tried their hands at the reconciliation of beliefs, among them George Beckwith, a very eccentric man, whose disregard for his personal appearance is proverbial, whose knowledge is sufficient to make his almanac an authority, and whose old white hat and bare feet are New Haven landmarks. Beckwith is strongly opposed to liquor saloons and churches. In the document he submits to the board, he asks them "to ascertain how many of the parents or guardians are respectively Protestant Christians, Jews, Catholics, Spiritualists, and Infidels." He calls for the devotion "of thirty minutes each morning to the reading of passages from the Protestant New Testament, the Old Testament, the Catholic Bible, Andrew Jackson Davis' Divine Revelations, and Thomas Paine's theological works, the time to be apportioned to the respective books according to the number of scholars whose parents or guardians are respectively Protestants, Jews, Catholics, Spiritualists, and infidels."

Rev. Dr. E. E. Beardsley, Rector of St. Thomas' Episcopal Church, and the author of several biographies and works relating to Church history, suggested to the board that the Lord's Prayer, without the final ascription, and with the following words added, would be sufficient:—

"Direct us, O Lord, in all our doings, with Thy most gracious favor, and further us with Thy continual help, that in all our works begun, continued, and ended in Thee we may glorify Thy holy name, and finally by Thy mercy obtain everlasting life. Amen."

German residents presented through Maler Zunder, a German member of the board, the following form:

1. Reading from some of the Psalms or Proverbs.
2. Prayer, as follows: "All-kind Father, we are assembled here this day to learn how to develop all the good feelings and noble emotions within us, and to suppress all bad and low desires of wrong and evil. May we learn to understand and appreciate the importance of this day. May we earnestly listen to all the teachings, and may our entire attention now be directed to Thee, O God, and Thy commandments. Amen."

3. Singing of hymns from a selection chosen by the Superintendent of the Schools.

Philip Pond, an insurance agent, had heard that the devotional exercises were to be confined to certain selected passages of Scripture, and he wrote as follows, in opposition to such action:—

"Myself and thousands of others voted to have the Bible placed back in the schools, not a collection of extracts taken here and there, intermingled with portions of creeds,—which satisfies no one. Let a portion of the Scriptures be read by the teachers, followed by the Lord's Prayer, or, if they choose, offer prayer in their own words."

But the most important suggestion was that which I have already referred to,—the manual prepared by the clergy; and as fragments of it in a garbled condition have already appeared in one or two papers, I gave it entire as it was offered to the board Friday night. It was presented by Rev. Dr. Leonard Bacon and Rev. Dr. Harwood, with the following written statement:—

To the Board of Education:—

The people of New Haven having by a large majority manifested their wish that there "shall be appropriate devotional exercises" in the public schools, and it being very desirable that these exercises shall be such as will best satisfy the greatest number, and it being understood that the Board of Education is ready to hear and consider suggestions on this subject, we, the undersigned, beg leave respectfully to recommend the plan herewith submitted as one which will in all probability be satisfactory to the great body of the friends of religion and of the public schools.

This is signed by forty-one clergymen, including ex-President Woolsey, President Porter, Dr. Bacon, Dr. Harwood, Dr. Noble, five pastors of Roman Catholic churches, one Universalist clergyman, the prominent Baptist and Methodist clergymen, many of the Congregational and Episcopal clergymen, and the pastor of the Yale College Church. Some of the signers are in favor of abolishing devotional exercises in the schools, but in signing "take the ground that if there are to be such exercises, as the people have decided that there shall be, the plan submitted is no more than just and fair." The manual submitted is in three parts. One form is for the use of the schools generally, in all rooms where the Roman Catholics do not amount to thirty per cent.; another is for the use of Roman Catholics in those rooms in which they number thirty per cent.; and the third is a selection of hymns for general use. The plan is described, in a neatly-bound book, as follows:—

1. All the scholars of each school shall assemble in one common room, or in as many different rooms as may be found necessary, at the opening of each morning session, for devotional exercises.

2. The devotional exercises shall be those which are prescribed in manual "A," herewith presented.

3. Where not less than thirty per cent. of the scholars in any school are directed by their parents or guardians to require a separation from the devotional exercises of the whole school, for the purpose of uniting in a different devotional exercise, they shall meet for that purpose in a separate room or in separate rooms, while the other scholars are assembled in the common room or rooms; but neither in that common room nor in that separate devotional exercise shall there be any dogmatic teaching of religion.

4. It is understood that this privilege is to be conceded only to those who cannot, on conscientious grounds, join in the devotional exercises of the whole school.

5. A form of worship, herewith submitted in manual "B," having been prepared by and for the use of those who alone can at present claim the privilege, this form and no other shall be allowed them.

The directions for the use of manual A, which is for the use of the schools generally, are as follows:—

MANUAL A.

The school shall observe a respectful silence while the principal, or one of the teachers or pupils appointed by the principal, shall read the selection for the day of the month. He shall then read the Lord's Prayer. [This follows, with the exception.] He shall then read the Ten Commandments. The school shall then join in singing a hymn from manual "C," the selection being left to the conductor of the exercises.

The selections of Scripture for each day of the month are, in order, as follows, from the King James version:—

Psalms I. and xxiii.; Matthew v., 1-12; Job xxviii., 12-28; Romans xii.; Psalms xix.; Matthew vi., 19-34; Proverbs iv., 1-18; Romans xiii.; Psalms xxiv.; Matthew vii., 1-12; Proverbs viii., 1-21; Matthew xviii., 21-35; Psalms xxxvii., 1-11; Matthew xxv., 1-13; Proverbs xxii., 1-12; I. Corinthians xiii.; Psalms lxxiii.; Mark xii., 13-17, 28-34; Ecclesiastes xii.; Ephesians vi., 1-18; Psalms xc.; Luke vii., 40-50; Isaiah lv., 1-11; James i., 12-27; Psalms xcl.; Luke xv., 11-32; Psalms ciii.; II. Peter i., 1-11; Psalms cxxi. and cxxx.; Luke x., 25-37; John xv., 1-15.

MANUAL B.

Manual B, the one introduced for the use of Roman Catholic children, is the one which some one of the clergymen betrayed to the outside world before the plan had been fully agreed upon, and was in this way the cause of considerable hard feeling. As submitted to the board it is as follows:—

[To be said kneeling.]

Teacher—In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Amen.

Let us pray. Direct, we beseech thee, O Lord, all our actions by thy holy grace, and by thy assistance bring them to a happy issue; that every prayer and work of ours may always begin from thee, and under thy guidance may be ended: through Christ our Lord.

Children respond—Amen.

Teacher—Come, O Holy Ghost, replenish the hearts of thy faithful, and enkindle in them the fire of thy love. Send forth thy spirit and they will be created.

Children respond—And thou wilt renew the face of the earth.

Teacher—Let us pray. O God, who by the light of the Holy Ghost didst instruct the hearts of the faithful, grant us, we beseech thee, through the same Holy Spirit, a love and relish of what is right and just, and a constant enjoyment of his consolation who liveth and reigneth, world without end.

Children respond—Amen.

The Lord's Prayer.

Teacher—Our Father, who art in heaven, hallowed by thy name. Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven.

Children—Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us; and lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. Amen.

The Angelic Salutation.

Teacher—Hail, Mary, full of grace. The Lord with thee. Blessed art thou among women, and blessed is the fruit of thy womb, Jesus.

Children—Holy Mary, mother of God, pray for us sinners now, and at the hour of our death. Amen.

The Apostles' Creed.

Teacher—I believe in God, the Father Almighty, Creator of heaven and earth; and in Jesus Christ, his only Son, our Lord, who was conceived by the Holy Ghost, born of the Virgin Mary, suffered under Pontius Pilate, was crucified, dead, and buried. He descended into hell; the third day he rose again from the dead. He ascended into heaven, and sitteth at the right hand of God, the Father Almighty; from thence he will come to judge the living and the dead.

Children—I believe in the Holy Ghost, the Holy Catholic Church, the communion of saints, the forgiveness of sins, the resurrection of the body, and life everlasting. Amen.

In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Amen.

The teacher shall then read the Ten Commandments taken from the Douay version, Exodus xx., 1-17. The scholars shall then join in singing a hymn from Manual C.

The hymns for the third manual have not yet been selected; but if the plan just given be adopted, the promoters of it will choose thirty or forty hymns for general use.

In submitting this plan, Rev. Dr. Bacon spoke at some length in favor of its adoption, and said two Roman Catholic clergymen had aided in its preparation. Gen. Francis A. Walker is a member of the board, who voted for the abolition of the devotional exercises. He asked Dr. Bacon what would be done in a school where the Roman Catholics outnumbered the Protestants; were the Catholics to retire? Dr. Bacon thought some arrangement could be made, even if, as he was informed, there were no unoccupied rooms in the school buildings, which could be used by retiring worshippers. In reply to another question put by Gen. Walker, he said that no provision had been made for the use of rosaries or crucifixes in the schools. Gen. Walker wanted to know whether any provision had been made for the opinions of Hebrews, of whom there are many in the schools; and from what Dr. Bacon said, it didn't appear that the Hebrews had been consulted; but he couldn't see how any Hebrew could object to the chapters of the New Testament in the proposed ritual. Dr. Harwood, of Trinity Church, explained that no new ritual would have been submitted except for the demands of the Roman Catholics. The working of the plan would be awkward at first, but soon it would run smoothly. No ecclesiastical was to be allowed in the schools, nor any ecclesiastical furniture. He had been surprised by the liberality shown in the conference by the Roman Catholic priests. Rev. Dr. Bacon defended at length the rights of the Roman Catholics. He thought there were in the room persons who could settle the question of religion in the schools for the whole country. People were determined not to keep God out of the schools or out of business, and not to allow atheism to become the country's established religion. Before adjournment, George Beckwith condemned the ritual as unjust to atheists, and P. C. Moulton, a prominent architect, pleaded for the use of the "Bible of the Ages," and presented the views of Rev. O. B. Frothingham on the question. The people are now waiting to see what the Committee on Schools will do with the plans submitted. The end is not yet, and many believe that the union between the Protestants and Roman Catholics, who have been bitter antagonists in school elections before the last one, will be short-lived. At all events, the condition of the question of the Bible in the schools in New Haven is peculiar enough to attract much attention from other quarters.—N. Y. Times, Nov. 4.

TAKE YOUR CHOICE.

The National Liberal League having split into two factions at Syracuse, it becomes a matter of "taste" as to which one Western rationalists owe allegiance, if to either. The West is a big country, and, united with the South and North-west, it is quite formidable. It might be possible that Western liberals could organize and stand alone, and not pay tribute to warring factions located in the great Eastern cities, the hot-beds of corruption and fraud of all kinds. That such questions as free lust and free transit through the malls of abominable literature should be allowed to creep into and burst up a League of liberal thinkers calling itself "National," is a blasting, blighting, withering disgrace to the freethinkers of this entire continent. But we are glad the line was drawn, and hope that good men—men with pure desires for the elevation of our race—will stand together everywhere.

The Seymour Times is not an organ. It owes neither money nor allegiance to any body, league, or clique. It speaks for itself only. Its aim is to defend the right, as it is able to understand the right. It wants no affiliation with anybody who winks at or defends immorality, or any measure that leads to it. Therefore, it is in a position of independence, and its suggestions are its own only. But it has some very positive convictions as to the duty of people who are opposing the fallacies, the follies, the frauds, the impositions, and the tyrannies of what is styled "the Christian religion." If we haven't something better to offer, we had better put up our shutters and quit business. Liberalism as interpreted by those holding to one of the Eastern factions is entirely too liberal. Orthodoxy will hold the fort till the crack of doom, if opposed only by "liberals" who are so liberal as to concede to vice and immorality and abominable indecency equal rights before the law with virtue and morality and refined thought and action.

The only way to oppose the religion of superstition and faith is to come before the people with a purer, a better, religion. Good people will cling to their old faiths till something better is offered. We cannot expect to succeed with the religion of humanity and justice while we go about, Vandal-like, tearing down the bulwarks and safeguards that society has upreared to restrain the vicious and immoral. Our doctrine and actions must commend themselves to the good and the virtuous. We cannot become the champions of vice. We must so act and proclaim that the suspicion of evil, even, cannot attach to us. Every man who rejects the "Savior," the myths and the faiths, should so deport himself as to become a shining light to society. He should be noted for his honor, his charities, his love of truth and justice, and for his kindness to everything around him. It is urged by the creeds that "infidelity" leads to immorality. This we must disprove by our daily walk. We must unite with all good men for the promotion of virtue and the suppression of vice. We have nothing to do with people who want to do away with the marriage relation, make the commingling of the sexes promiscuous and indiscriminate, and abandon the offspring to chance. Let such people take care of themselves. If they take ground with us in some matters, so be it; but that doesn't identify us with their cause, nor bind us to fight their battles. Such a question as promiscuity in the sexual relations is foreign to the objects of any League of freethinkers. This question, however, has split the National Liberal League; the advocates of this doctrine have caused the disruption. It is the defence of them and their right to print and circulate scandalous literature that has caused the trouble.

We give elsewhere a communication from H. L. Green, Chairman of the Executive Committee of one of the factions. We advise deliberation and no hasty action. But as we regard the Eastern split as irreconcilable, and as clean-cut as the line between morality and immorality can be, new Leagues forming and old ones in reorganizing might do well to consider what kind of company they desire to keep.

The North-western Liberal League at Indianapolis might form a nucleus for Western Leagues, which might send representatives to the Eastern Leagues, or to whichever they might desire to affiliate with, and this might answer as good a purpose as to organize under a charter obtained from either of the warring factions.—Seymour (Ind.) Weekly Times, Nov. 9.

MR. GLADSTONE ON THE REFORMATION.

Mr. Gladstone, since his retirement from the Premiership, has been a frequent and copious contributor to the public journals. Not a month, and scarcely a week, has passed in which more than one essay on theology, literature, or politics have not emanated from his versatile pen. The variety of his themes is surprising; they range from an interpretation of some disputed passage in Homer to the Vatican decree of infallibility, or the American theory of universal suffrage. The wide sweep of his studies and the breadth of his literary culture are equally conspicuous. It is certainly gratifying to find a public man—a man busy from his early days in political contests—still cherishing the tastes of a scholar, and discovering a penetrating knowledge of subjects of great moment, to which, however, statesmen and politicians are usually quite indifferent. In this country, we have hardly furnished a parallel instance. Mr. Sumner, in his scholarly tastes, may be thought to have approached nearest to the standard; but Mr. Sumner was not a very exact scholar, and he was no theologian. It must be confessed, however, that, for his present reputation at least, Mr. Gladstone has written too often and too much. The English people do not admire volubility in a public man. An oracle loses prestige by opening its mouth on slight occasions. It is felt that a man who has governed England is playing an inferior part when one of his chief occupations has come to be the composition of magazine articles.

But if Mr. Gladstone's recent productions have called out unfavorable comment of this sort, and if they have sometimes borne marks of haste and of a want of thoroughness, such will not be the verdict respecting his recent article in the Contemporary, which is entitled, "The Sixteenth Century Arraigned before the Nineteenth: A Study on the Reformation." The author has passed through changing phases of political opinion, and has been allied to different parties; but on one subject he has adhered constantly to his early position. His theological tendencies, involving a predilection for the High Church and for sacramental piety, have remained substantially unaltered. His views of the necessity of establishments have varied widely between the time when he composed his book on Church and State, and his act for disestablishing the Irish Church, to say nothing of his present rather ambiguous position on the general subject. But as to theology proper, he does not appear to have essentially modified his early convictions. He still has a strong leaning toward tractarian and ritualistic views in religion.

The article before us is really a review of the respective claims of the Anglican and Roman Catholic bodies, together with a criticism of the Reformation. The small impression which the Romish Church has made upon the English nation, notwithstanding the great improvement of the Roman Catholic clergy, and the accession to the Roman communion of a considerable number of individuals distinguished for their talents or rank, convinces Mr. Gladstone that there is somehow an insuperable gulf between the Latin Church and the deepest feelings of the English people. He admits a certain narrowness and provincial character which has belonged, at critical eras, to the organization and administration of the English Church, and which renders the opprobrious title of "Anglican paddock" not wholly inapposite. His firm conviction that the English Church is strong against Romanism makes him willing to concede this much, and to allow, moreover, that the Protestant movement carried in it certain infelicities, if not extravagances, of doctrinal statement which it is the proper business of Anglicanism to correct. The Reformation, he tells us, was a great and necessary upheaval, occasioned by doctrinal error and by a wide-spread profligacy in morals. Yet there are points on which the old Protestant theology is fairly open to some modification. He implies that justification is one of these. On this topic, he thinks that there is no great difficulty in arriving at a statement satisfactory to both the contending parties. The recent ecclesiastical conference at Bonn has proved this. Mr. Gladstone might have referred also to the conferences in the Reformation period, when Melancthon and Contarini joined hands in promulgating this dogma. Then, Mr. Gladstone is of opinion that in denying the scholastic doctrine of purgatory, and in rejecting the obnoxious practical evils connected with it, it was not requisite to cast away prayers for the increase of the rest and holiness of the pious dead, or to maintain the stiff proposition that character, whether good or evil, is fully ripe at the moment of death. Recent vehement protests against the old Protestant conception of the future life are owing, as he supposes, to the extreme form which that conception was made to assume. Moreover, Mr. Gladstone would connect a sacrificial idea with the Eucharist; but in what sense precisely he does not explain. Protestantism has erred, he judges, in a certain exclusive valuing of Scripture, and in a disposition to ignore the other sources of evidence relative to the real nature of primitive Christianity. Troubles about inspiration, he intimates, have their source, and may find a practical remedy, in a more reasonable view of these collateral proofs relative to the character and contents of apostolic teaching; that is, we suppose, in a reference to the testimony of the early Church and the Fathers. In England, he grants that the enhancement of the power of the sovereign by the abolition of Papal authority was, in its effect, unfavorable to civil as well as to ecclesiastical liberty, and that Protestantism is responsible for Erastianism in Church government.

Having made these concessions, which most Protestants will consider to be too generous, Mr. Gladstone returns to the charge, and undertakes to show that English Protestantism has the advantage over Romanism in several main particulars. The Italian Renaissance was saturated with infidelity. This was not true of the same era in England. The great writers of the English Renaissance were, at least, believers, and friendly to religion. This is shown with regard to the Elizabethan period, and even concerning the reign of Anne and the eighteenth century. The Roman Church, as the example of Italy proves, has shown itself to be less competent to cope with infidelity than has the English Church. Then, the Roman body has deliberately given up that spirit of freedom which is vital to the rational defence and the real prosperity of religion. Mr. Gladstone closes his discussion by a critical review of Dr. Newman's tests of a sound development and criteria of an infallible Church. It is pointed out that these criteria may exist, and that there may yet be such inequality in their degree of activity that the result is a one-sided development of doctrine.

We have given only a bare outline of this masterly discussion. No one could have written it save the man who had been long familiar with the history of theology and conversant with ecclesiastical controversies. The reader will be apt to wish for a more definite statement of the author's creed with reference to the points on which he takes issue with popular and traditional Protestantism. But with respect to the vigor and learning manifested in the essay, and the sincerity of belief which pervades it, there can be among competent judges but one sentiment.—N. Y. Times.

MODERN JUDAISM.

"DO WE EXPECT THE ADVENT OF A PERSONAL MESSIAH?"

The Rev. Sol. Schindler began a series of lectures on this subject at the Temple Adath Israel, Saturday morning. The motive of the lectures was set forth in the following introduction: Last spring, when Great Britain was about to interfere in the Turco-Russian war, I happened to ride home from the city in a horse car. Right at my side I recognized a gentleman who had formerly lived in my street, and after the usual greeting we entered into a talk about the political condition of the day, considering all the probabilities which might possibly spring from the British intervention. Our chat having arrived at this point, my neighbor solemnly began: "I think that Great Britain has still one mission to fulfil; and this is, to restore Palestine, the Holy Land, to your people; and I firmly believe that the time of the advent of your Messiah is near at hand, and that you will return in a short time to the land of your forefathers." I was astonished at these words, which were sincerely meant, and uttered without any mixture of mockery or sarcasm.

"My dear sir," I answered, "do you really believe that any Israelite residing here would leave the soil of this our blessed country, and return to Palestine for the sake of that superannuated belief? Do you really think that we Israelites of the nineteenth century believe in the coming of a personal Messiah, or in the restoration of the Jewish nation?"

"Do you not believe in the advent of a Messiah?" he exclaimed, personally horrified at my disbelief.

"No, sir, I do not," I calmly replied.

"And do you not wish to return to the Holy Land? Do you not long and sigh and pray for the reestablishment of your people in Palestine?"

"No, sir," was my answer, "I do not, and as far as I know, none of my co-religionists in this country desire it. Though in the orthodox congregations this hope or this belief still lingers in some superannuated prayers, which are thoughtlessly spoken, there is no individual, even among them, who would give up his realities here, small as they ever may be, for the greatest expectations in Jerusalem. There might perhaps some have been found who would like to go as carpet-baggers to such a newly created country; but if there was not a certainty for them to win, to make a fortune there, they would assuredly not do it. For a mere national pride, or, as you may call it, for religion's sake, perhaps a few enthusiasts who have nothing to lose and all to win might emigrate; but to be sure not a single one of the intelligent Israelites of this country, not a single one of that class of Jews who by their intelligence, industry, honesty, modesty, and humanisms have made the Jewish name honored and respected in this country."

"And do you not believe in your prophets," he exclaimed, "who have foretold the advent of a Messiah?"

"My friend," I answered, "time does not allow me to answer this question now; but let me tell you that it requires more than to be simply a reader of the Bible to understand what prophetism is, and what the prophets which you mean have foretold. To understand that requires a thorough knowledge of history in general; it requires a liberal tendency and a mind free of any prejudices. As far as I know, have those prophets which you refer to never prophesied a Messiah who would appear at our time; as far as I know, has the belief in a personal Messiah always been refuted by the Jewish rabbis as soon as it transgressed the limits of a theory and ventured to assume a practical shape. But even if those prophets had predicted a Messiah for our time, and even if such belief would have been sustained at all times and in every respect by the Jewish ministry of old, neither I nor any other thinking and intelligent Israelite of our age could be compelled to endorse such a belief after the sad experiences which Judaism had with its several Messiahs."

The car stopped, and I left that gentleman with an expression of surprise in his face at hearing such words from an Israelite, and even more from a minister of that denomination. I have not met him since, but this conversation made a deep impression upon me. I had never thought in all my life that any of our Christian friends could be mistaken as to our position in regard to that belief. I had never thought that any of our Christian neighbors could have the slightest doubt in our love for this our country, and could think that we long for exchanging it for Palestine. I had never dreamt that the medieval wish was still alive in this enlightened century, in this free country, and among our friends and neighbors, the wish to see at one fine morning the whole Jewish community depart, with bag and baggage, for Palestine, or for any other place from whence they never might return. I made, therefore, more inquiries about that matter. I questioned here and there, and I found that our Christian friends are generally not only entirely ignorant about our position regarding the Messianic question, but that they almost know nothing about our Judaism,—about the Judaism of the nineteenth century.

To enlighten them on this and kindred subjects is the object of these lectures,—to be continued on alternate Saturday mornings at 10 A.M. The next one will be devoted to an historical inquiry into the origin of the belief in the advent of a personal Messiah.—Boston Advertiser, Nov. 4.

IN HIS LITTLE BOOK called, in despite of the definite article, Fortune of the Republic, Mr. Emerson has literally undertaken to teach his countrymen

"What makes a nation happy and keeps it so."

And this is one part of his instruction, that morality is the basis of all legislation. "Tis not free institutions, not a democracy, that is the end,—no, but only the means. Morality is the object of government. We want a state of things in which crime will not pay; a state of things which allows every man the largest liberty compatible with the liberty of every other man. Humanity asks that government shall not be ashamed to be tender and paternal, but that democratic institutions shall be more thoughtful for the interests of women, for the training of children, and for the welfare of sick and unable persons, and serious care of criminals, than was even any—the best—government of the Old World. . . . I hope America will come to have its pride in being a nation of servants, and not of the served." This is akin to Milton's remark in the Reason of Church Government,—"For who is there, almost, that measures wisdom by simplicity, strength by suffering, dignity by lowliness? We may be well assured that he who disdained not to be born in a manger disdains not to be preached in a barn." Again Emerson says—and Mr. Parkman may well consider it—"If we found our people clinging to English traditions, which are graceful enough at home, as the English Church, and entail estates, and distrust of popular election, we should feel this reactionary, and absurdly out of place. Let the passion for America cast out the passion for Europe." Nevertheless, the choice of Butler to represent Concord in Congress, and similar pieces of nonsense in the voting multitude, do not escape the notice of the sage. "The record of the election now and then alarms people by the all but unanimous choice of a rogue and brawler. But how was it done? What lawless mob burst into the polls and threw in these hundreds of ballots in defiance of the magistrates? This was done by the very men you know,—the mildest, most sensible, best-natured people. They have been scared or warped into some association in their mind of the candidate with the interest of their trade or of their property. . . . After every practical mistake, out of which any disaster grows, the people wake and correct it with energy.

In each new threat of faction the ballot has been, beyond expectation, right and decisive." "Justice satisfies everybody, and justice alone. Our helm is given up to a better guidance than our own; the course of events is quite too strong for any helmsman."—Boston Literary Letter to the Springfield Republican.

Poetry.

THE HINDU'S SEARCH FOR TRUTH.

All the world over I wander, in lands that I never have trod.
Are the people eternally seeking for the signs and steps of a God?
Westward across the ocean, and northward ayont the snow,
Do they all stand gazing, as ever,—and what do the wisest know?

Here in this mystical India, the deities hover and swarm,
Like the wild bees heard in the tree-tops, or the gusts of a gathering storm;
In the air, men hear their voices; their feet on the rocks are seen;
Yet we all say, Whence is the message, and what may the wonders mean?

A million shrines stand open, and ever the censer swings,
As they bow to mystical symbols, or the figures of ancient kings;

And the incense rises ever, and rises the endless cry
Of those who are heavy laden, and of cowards loath to die;

For the destiny drives us together, like deer in a pass of hills;
Above is the sky, and around us the sound and the shot that kills;

Pushed by a power we see not, and struck by a hand unknown,
We pray to the trees for shelter, and press our lips to a stone.

Here are the tombs of my kinsfolk, the first of an ancient name,—

Chiefs who were slain on the war-field, and women who died in flame;

They are gods, these kings of the foretime, they are spirits who guide our race.

Ever I watch and worship; they sit with a marble face.

And the myriad idols around me, and the legion of muttering priests,

The revels and rites unholy, the dark, unspeakable feasts,—

What have they wrung from the silence? Hath even a whisper come

Of the secret whence and whither? Alas! for the gods are dumb.

Shall I list the words of the English, who come from the uppermost sea?

The secret,—hath it been told you, and what is your message to me?

It is naught but the world-wide story, how the earth and the heavens began;

How the gods are glad and angry, and a deity once was a man.

I had thought: "Perchance in the cities, where the rulers of India dwell,

Whose orders dash from the far land, who girdle the earth with a spell,

They have fathomed the depth we float on, or measured the unknown main.

Sadly they turn from the venture, and say that the quest is vain."

Is life, then, a dream and delusion? and when shall the dreamer awake?

Is the world seen like shadows on water? and what if the mirror break?

Shall it pass like a camp that is struck, as a tent that is gathered and gone,

From the sands that were lamp-lit at eve, and at morning are level and lone.

Is there naught in the heavens above, whence the hail and the levin are hurled,

But the wind that is swept around us by the rush of the rolling world?—

The wind that shall scatter my ashes, and bear me to silence and sleep,

With the dirge, and the sounds of lamenting, and voices of women who weep?

—Cornhill Magazine.

CASH RECEIPTS.

N. B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING NOVEMBER 16.

Mrs. E. M. Babb, $1; John Campbell, $3.50; William Botch, $20; Mrs. Sarah Emerson, $10; John Wilson, $20; John Nill, $3.20; John H. Titcomb, $3.20; William Archibald, $2.30; O. Braylor, $1.25; H. W. Wellington, $5; J. H. Adamson, $1; J. S. Palmer, $10; F. H. Badger, 30 cents; P. V. Wise, $1; G. H. Porter, 85 cents; Hiram Blanchard, $5.70; Louise M. Thurston, 25 cents; T. B. Skinner, $2.50; G. A. Bourne, $13; Warren Emerson, $10; Lizzie E. Dorr, $10; D. B. Dunning, 25 cents; Geo. B. Young, $3.20; F. A. Adams, $3; J. E. Peck, $1; W. D. Le Sueur, $2; J. M. Aldrich, $10; R. D. Sawyer, $3; Dr. G. F. Matthes, $10; G. E. Baxter, $3.25; J. L. Walting, $1.50; W. G. Gage, 50 cents; W. C. Fuller, $3.20; Cash, $1.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

The Index.

BOSTON, NOV. 21, 1878.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO OFFICE, No. 25 Monroe Street; J. T. FRY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHERRY, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIZABETH WRIGHT, C. D. B. MILLS, W. D. LE SUEUR, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, JAMES E. OLIVER, Editorial Contributors.

MR. FROTHINGHAM declines to be a Vice-President of the National Liberal League of America for reasons which he states thus: "The action at Syracuse, dividing the League on a question in my judgment incidental, if not foreign, to the purpose for which it was instituted, has for the time alienated my sympathy. Should harmony be restored and the original work of the Association be resumed, my interest may revive." It is only necessary to say that the minority desired no change in the attitude of the League, as taken originally at Philadelphia; but they could not conscientiously submit to be forced into a position which denies the original principles of the organization, and which in their opinion equally denies the principles of public morality. The responsibility for the division rests with those who insisted on diverting the League to objects hostile to those for which it was founded. Self-respect in this case commanded the exercise of the "divine right to bolt." The public are not slow to understand this moral necessity.

PROFESSOR WILLIAM JAMES, one of the most accomplished instructors of Harvard College, has just delivered at the Lowell Institute, in Boston, a series of extremely able lectures on "The Brain and the Mind." The Advertiser of Nov. 2 gave this interesting notice of his closing lecture:—

Professor James, in closing his interesting course of lectures at the Lowell Institute last evening, examined and took issue with the theory advanced by Professor Huxley, Professor Clifford, and others, as to the efficacy of consciousness and its relation to the nervous system. They hold that the mind is pure mechanism; that thoughts follow each other in a certain order, because the brain tracts awaken each other in that order; that feeling is an inert, uninfused passenger. This conscious-automaton theory Mr. James devoted his hour to combating, on the plane of facts and common sense, without appealing to any a priori or metaphysical ideas. In closing he said: "If men of science are those who are guided by concrete facts, and metaphysicians be those who dogmatically proclaim as true whatever unverified conceptions may occur to their minds as possible, and may flatter their taste, then we here are men of science, and Huxley, Clifford & Co. are metaphysical dreamers. Many persons nowadays seem to think that any conclusion must be very scientific if the arguments in favor of it are all derived from twitching of frogs' legs—especially if the frogs are decapitated,—and that on the other hand any doctrine chiefly vouched for by the feelings of human beings, with heads on their shoulders, must be benighted and superstitious. They seem to think, too, that any vagary or whim, however unverified, of a scientific man must needs form an integral part of science itself; that when Huxley, for example, has ruled feeling out of the game of life, and called it a mere bystander, supernumerary, the matter is settled. The lecturer knew nothing more deplorable than this indiscriminating gulping down of everything materialistic as peculiarly scientific. Nothing is scientific but what is clearly formulated, reasoned, and verified. An opinion signed by the Pope, if it have these merits, will be a thoroughly scientific opinion. On the other hand, an opinion signed by Professor Huxley, if it violate these requirements, will be unscientific. To talk of science as many persons do whose mental type is best represented by the Popular Science Monthly is ridiculous. With these persons it is forever science against philosophy, science against metaphysics, science against religion, science against poetry, science against sentiment, science against all that makes life worth living. The truth is, that science and all these other functions of the human mind are alike results of man's thinking about the phenomena life offers him. No mode of thinking is against any other, except false thinking and illogical thinking. If we think clearly and consistently in theology or philosophy, we are good men of science too. If we think logically in science, we are good theologians and philosophers. If, on the contrary, our thought is muddled in one field, it is worthless in all the rest. It must be that truth is one and thought woven in one piece. I, for one, as a scientific man and a practical man alike, deny utterly that science compels me to believe that my conscience is an ignis fatuus or outcast; and I trust that you too, after the evidence of this evening, will go away strengthened in the natural faith that your delights and sorrows, your loves and hates, your aspirations and efforts are real combatants in life's arena, and not impotent, paralytic spectators of the game.

THE STRUGGLE FOR MASTERY.

Two great forces are forever contending for the mastery of the world, the constructive and the destructive forces of society. There is no need to spin speculations on the abstract question whether evil is a mere negation, or whether the old dualism of Ahiman and Ormuzd had any truth in it: what we mean is well enough covered by the familiar truism that "life is a battle,"—that nothing good can be won or kept without struggle, and that the non-resistant inevitably tends to become the non-existent.

Free thought has been the breaking-up of the foundations of the great deep, and the mud has come up with the water. No wonder that morality comes in for its share of the general commotion, when everything else is shaken; no wonder that the most precious acquisitions of the human mind, the costliest gains of civilization, wrested from savagery like the plains of Holland from the sea, threaten to be swept away by the mad outburst of the imprisoned forces. But the crisis is none the less perilous because it is not wonderful. Human society is passing from the old stability of tyranny, based on dogma, to the new stability of freedom, based on knowledge, and no one can doubt less than we the ultimate success of the passage. But the intervening period—possibly a very long one, and certainly one in which this generation is preëminently interested—is full of terrible possibilities of human suffering for the time being. In the presence of mad assaults on morality, non-resistance is the only infallible method for converting these possibilities into actual facts. Social demoralization is the certain cause and precursor of social misery on the most extensive scale; but the morality which will not stoutly assert and defend itself against all comers is a wretched sham, doomed to disappear before the fierce and violent forces which are constantly assailing it.

A spectacle is now offered to the world which ought to startle every noble spirit in the liberal ranks out of his false sense of security, and convince him that events are transpiring which threaten to array against all liberalism the solid, unbroken, overwhelming moral sentiment of the nation. It avails nothing to say: "I am not a member of the Liberal League; it does not concern me in the least whether it goes for 'repeal' or 'reform'; let those settle that question who are personally interested." Such reasons for inaction will not shield any liberal from the disgrace which is darkening now over the whole liberal body, and which will daily grow blacker and blacker if the liberals as a whole tacitly consent to be represented by the party which clamors for total repeal of the postal law of 1873. It is not simply their attitude on this question, but the general element in the community which backs and sustains them, which challenges public attention and gives character to the repeal movement. For instance, Colonel John C. Bundy, editor of the Chicago Religio-Philosophical Journal, the leading Spiritualist paper of the West, had these noteworthy words in the article which we republished last week in THE INDEX:—

The active part taken by thousands of the best citizens in protesting against the law because they believe it to be, as it is now written, a dangerous precedent, and tending towards an impairment of the inalienable rights of citizenship, seems to have encouraged the lepers who feed upon the profits of the forbidden traffic to believe that in the abrogation of the present law was their license, and that no new law would hold them with so firm a grip, and anyway things could be no worse for them. It is a most significant fact, deserving the serious attention of every law-abiding, moral citizen, that the movement for the repeal of the law has the unanimous and enthusiastic support of free-lovers, vendors of obscene literature, quack doctors, and the immoral, licentious element generally. Why is this so? It must be because the law as it now stands is far more effective in breaking up the obnoxious traffic than has ever been the case before; for no respectable person will assert that this scandalous horde are actuated by a deep patriotism, or unselfish love of constitutional rights. Indeed, when such champions of repeal prate about the sanctity of citizenship, and fear it is to be debauched, the respectable citizen will interpret the sentiment as he sees it written in letters of living brass upon the countenance of each canting hypocrite: "I fear we cannot longer trench upon the sanctity of virtuous homes nor debauch the minds of the young for our profit and pleasure."

So also Dr. J. R. Monroe, editor of the Seymour, Indiana, Weekly Times—a most outspoken and thoroughly radical secular journal—says in an article which we reprint in full in another column:—

That such questions as free lust and the free transit through the mails of abominable literature should be allowed to creep into and burst up a league of liberal thinkers calling itself "national" is a blasting, blighting, withering disgrace to the freethinkers of this entire continent. . . . Liberalism as interpreted by those holding to one of the Eastern factions is entirely too liberal. Orthodoxy will hold the fort till the crack of doom, if opposed only by "liberals" who are so liberal as to concede to vice and immorality and abominable indecency equal rights before the law with virtue and morality and refined thought and action. . . . Such a question as promiscuity in the sexual relations is foreign to the objects of any league of freethinkers. This question, however, has split the National Liberal League; the advocates of this doctrine have caused the disruption. It is the defence of them and their right to print and circulate scandalous literature that has caused the trouble.

Now the writers of these extracts are leading liberals in the West; they write in the interest of liberalism, not of Christianity. They show that this issue between "repeal" and "reform" in the Liberal League is recognized by keen-eyed radicals as only a strategic point in the vaster battle which is always going on between the destructive and constructive forces of society. No doubt there are most excellent and worthy persons, actuated only by the best and purest motives, who are at this very moment throwing their influence on the wrong side in this momentous struggle, utterly unconscious of the nature of the movement they are so disastrously aiding. Mr. Wright himself, whose letter of acceptance will be found in another column, is one of the bravest, noblest, purest, most honorable and upright men in America; he has spent a long life in the service of his race, and would not for worlds lend his sanction to anything which he considers wrong. Nor is he the only one of whom such things should be said; there are others in the ranks of "repeal" of whose purity of purpose there can be no doubt. But—and here lies the tragedy of it all—these persons are powerless, and will speedily find themselves powerless, to control or influence the course of the movement which uses them only as blinds and decoys to the general public. The "repeal" movement itself is only one part of a still larger movement whose constituency, as Colonel Bundy points out, is made up of "free-lovers, vendors of obscene literature, quack doctors, and the immoral, licentious element generally"; and all the protestations of the small minority whose motives are high and pure can neither change nor hide this terrible fact. Whoever gives aid or sympathy to the movement for "repeal" is—we deliberately and emphatically repeat the statement—a "willing or unwilling abettor of obscenity and free-love." Willing or unwilling—conscious or unconscious—that is the only difference; and we should be recreant to every consideration of public duty, were we to suppress or withhold the plain truth of this matter through fear of giving offence. We desire to offend no one; but we must take the consequences of telling the truth. The liberal public needs woefully to be warned as to what is going on; but whoever warns them must expect to be assailed, as we have been for the past year, with such persistent malignity and unscrupulousness as tell their own story of confession to all who can understand.

The fact, of which all liberals must sooner or later become aware, is that liberalism itself is now on trial before the world. Will it, or will it not, submit to be governed, guided, and represented by the combined forces of general licentiousness and immorality? The battle would have been lost at Syracuse, if the minority had not refused to be dragged behind the chariot of "repeal," and made on the spot a solemn moral protest which converted defeat itself into a splendid victory. For themselves, this protest is sufficient; but it will not be, or be considered, the protest of liberalism, unless liberals at large, by a vast majority, endorse it by their open, active, and vigorous support. The movement which, by means characteristic of itself, got control of the Syracuse Congress is merely part and parcel of a vaster movement of the worst elements in the country, whose object is to revolutionize society, break up the foundations of all public morality, and establish a state of things in which the institutions of property and the family shall disappear altogether.

The only question is now whether liberalism shall be hoodwinked and led to the slaughter by this infamous movement, or whether it shall indignantly vindicate its claim to be the true friend of morality and the true reformer, educator, and conservator of society. The struggle for mastery is going on all about us; can any one possibly remain blind to it? The liberal who, for any reason, will not vote on the right side, throws his vote on the wrong side. Silence, inaction, indifference, are the powerful allies of this perverse movement, which is struggling all over the world to destroy the entire fabric of modern civilization, and to restore the fierce, brutal, demoralized rule of a barbarism once outgrown.

Friends who have trusted us these many years,

you have no reason to distrust us now. The cunning falsehoods with which your ears are assailed cannot change the honest motives or the clear insight with which we have acted. You know us too well by this time to believe that mere personal pique, or mere desire for a paltry office, or any unworthy feeling or object whatever, has been the secret spring of our action. You know well that nothing but devotion to the cause of a pure, wise, enlightened, patriotic, and unselfish liberalism has governed our entire course in these painful issues. We therefore calmly rely on your strong moral sense and clear intelligence, in the certainty that time will make perfectly plain the substantial wisdom of what we have done. But meanwhile we appeal to you, not for our own sake in the least, but for the sake of liberalism itself, threatened as it is with deep and damning shame, to do all that you can, by word and deed, to sustain that cause of combined LIBERTY AND MORALITY which the National Liberal League of America was organized to represent and work for. Not for us, but for yourselves and your children, for the cause of truth and freedom and the nobler future of mankind, let it appear unmistakably that liberals, as a class, do not lose sight of the permanent interests of society, but have closely at heart the supremacy of virtue over vice, of liberty over licentiousness, of public order over the madness of moral anarchy and corruption.

MR. WRIGHT'S LETTER OF ACCEPTANCE.

Mr. Wright sends us the following correspondence for publication:—

NEW YORK, Oct. 31, 1878.

Honored and Dear Sir,—On behalf of the Congress of the National Liberal League held at Syracuse, N.Y., on the 26th and 27th inst., we have the honor to notify you that you were there elected the President of the League for the ensuing year, and we respectfully request your acceptance of the office. Our appointment as a Committee for this purpose was accompanied with the request that we should present to you some statement of the present position of the League, and the assurance that any suggestions from you as to its future would be gratefully received.

Such statement, and any information you may wish, will be gladly furnished by the members of this Committee, who will present this letter to you. With great respect we remain

Your obliged and obedient servants,

T. B. WAKEMAN, 93 Nassau St., New York City,
H. L. GREEN, Salamanca, N.Y.,
MRS. AUGUSTA COOPER BRISTOL, Vineland, N.J.,
COURTLANDT PALMER, 117 East 21st St., N.Y.,
EDWARD H. SEARING, Sherwood, N.Y.,
J. S. VERITY, 8 Broadway, Cambridge, Mass.,
To Hon. ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston, Mass.

League
Com.

THE REPLY.

BOSTON, November 7, 1878.

Respected Fellow Citizens,—By no means insensible to the kindness which has conferred upon me the office of President of the NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, by a majority of the votes of its recent Congress at Syracuse, I accept it with extreme sorrow and reluctance, and only in the hope that by doing so that unity which seems essential to success may be restored sooner than it otherwise might be. Believing, as we all do, that freedom cannot exist in a State which punishes or proscribes men for their opinions, we seem logically bound to tolerate among ourselves all differences of opinion not inconsistent with the aim of our movement to bring about a total separation of the functions of the Church from those of the State.

The essence of our secularism is that the State has nothing to do with religion or with the hearts, the motives, the moral character, of the citizen, any further than it must infer a bad motive from a bad act, unless there is proof to the contrary. On the other hand, the Church should have nothing to do with temporal punishment and political proscription, for any cause whatever. It is the proper function of moralists, philosophers, and churchmen to exalt the aims, refine the tastes, enlighten the consciences, and purify the hearts of the people, and with all mine I bid them God-speed in this, provided they use legitimate means,—among which I do not reckon pains and penalties, personal calumny, or any legal coercion or proscription whatever. But the function of the State is far humbler. It can only interfere with morals when moral influences have so far failed that the vices of some have trespassed on the rights of others. And even benevolence itself may trespass upon rights, so that the State may have to interfere to keep the peace. In a secular sense, men have a perfect right to be wicked in their hearts, provided they are innocuous toward others in their acts. Hence I think we are logically inconsistent, if we do not make our fellowship in the League as broad as that we aim to establish in the State. With the highest possible respect for their motives, it seems to me that the minority of the Congress, in seceding from the majority and forming another League, have rather unwittingly seceded from the principle of secularism, in the direction of becoming a church, and that after a year's reflection they will see no reason why they should not reunite with us. I say this after having carefully read, in THE INDEX of this date, Judge Hurlbut's draft of a reformed United States statute. With all possible deference to Judge Hurlbut's legal ability and moral courage, I must confess I think his statute is as unsafe as it is unconstitutional, and withal quite impracticable.

It lacks an essential element of a penal statute, a strict definition of the crime.

Though for more than forty years I have held the opinion that the general government has no right, either rational or constitutional, to exclude anything from the mails on account of its moral character, I should cheerfully, if present, have concurred in the vote to postpone the question of the repeal of the Comstock law for a year; and having done so I certainly should have voted to reelect the former officers, for whose self-denying and meritorious services I feel deeply grateful. While I have no ability to fill the place occupied by either of them, I cannot but recognize the right of others to vote as they saw fit; and on full inquiry and reflection, I cannot believe they committed any breach of faith in doing so.

For my life, I cannot see why the advocates of "repeal" should be stigmatized by anybody as abettors of obscenity, because they believe it should be punished, as most other offences are, by a jurisdiction outside of the mails, where only it can do mischief, and not by the jurisdiction which governs the inside, where it can do none. Of course we must expect to be, and so must our friends of the seceding League, no matter how personally innocent or zealous for the enforcement of law they may be; but so much the worse for those who bring the charge against us without being able to prove it. We can take refuge, if we must, behind the example of one who, for objects he deemed important, made himself of no reputation.

The League is responsible only for its corporate aim, the total separation of Church and State. Men of the most diverse opinions, each responsible for his own—whether saints or sinners—may well agree in this, and especially the saints, if they have any sincere and intelligent desire to save the souls of men; for the largest liberty under just laws is sweet to all. Little do the fanatical persecutors of Heywood think how they may be preparing to have the tables turned upon themselves. If, by the aid of liberals, or without it, they can get a law confirmed which makes it easy to perpetrate such outrages on the liberty of printing, the proudest boast of our republic will be turned to a mockery, and the hearts of kaisers, popes, and inquisitors will be gladdened and strengthened everywhere. Such a thing cannot be without a terrible reaction.

The degradation of the human soul can only be prevented or cured by pure scientific truth—truth, prompt, brave, gentle, unobtrusive—truth, derived not from the human imagination, but from the study of facts—truth that should rather be called the hoe of the human affections, to eradicate tenderly the natural weeds for the benefit of the valuable plants in the heart of the child or the depraved brother, than the Sword of the Spirit. The only use of the sword of steel, in the State, is to perform a grim and by no means angelic duty when abstract sin has ripened into concrete crime. And badly enough does it perform it when only impecunious malefactors feel its edge, while the magnificent corrupters and plunderers of millions are allowed to revel in palaces, and worship in still more gorgeous untaxed churches.

All sincere and intelligent religion must yet be on the side of the League. It is only the people who do not desire to do as they would be done by that can quarrel with the League, when they once understand it.

The wisdom of the ages—and this is the best of it—has come down to us mixed with many of their mistakes, if not their follies, just as ours will go down to posterity. It is for us to winnow the wheat from the chaff at our peril, and do our level best to-day in all fidelity and charity, in all courage and hope, to make the future both wiser and better.

With the most cordial regard, I am truly yours, for the whole of humanity, ELIZUR WRIGHT.
To T. B. Wakeman, H. L. Green, Augusta Cooper Bristol, Courtlandt Palmer, Edward H. Searing, and J. S. Verity, Committee of the National Liberal League.

A LETTER FROM MR. BRADLAUGH.

This letter from Mr. Bradlaugh has just been received:—

LONDON, Nov. 7, 1878.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Dear Sir,—I have seen recently in THE INDEX several references to the case of Queen v. Bradlaugh and Besant. In THE INDEX for October 24, I find the following paragraph:—

"As I understand it, Mr. Heywood now lies in Dedham jail simply because a jury decided that to preach free love is obscene; nor will this verdict surprise any one who knows the public feeling. A decision similar in principle was reached by an English jury in the case of the Crown v. Bradlaugh and Besant."

This is a pure misapprehension. Neither myself nor Mrs. Besant advocates "free love," nor did the jury think so; nor is Dr. Knowlton's pamphlet, for circulating which we were prosecuted, in the most remote manner connected with "free love" advocacy.

Yours obediently,
C. BRADLAUGH.

We are very glad to see this misapprehension corrected authoritatively. If it lay in the passage quoted from Mr. Ellershaw's communication (which we had not supposed), it should have been pointed out at the time. The "decision similar in principle," as we understood the passage, was that to preach preventive checks was obscene. In any case, all doubt will certainly be removed by Mr. Bradlaugh's explicit statement; and no excuse is left for imagining or saying that "free love" has received any countenance from either of the distinguished defendants in that now famous suit.

ANOTHER VOTE OF PROTEST.

Mr. Mills sends for publication the following resolutions:—

Whereas, The Congress of the National Liberal League lately held in this city did, by the action taken by the majority in the selection of officers for the ensuing year, violate in plain and unequivocal manner the spirit and clear purport of the concession and pledge they, the majority, had just made to the minority, displacing the devoted and invaluable president from the chairmanship of the League, for the sole reason, as distinctly appeared, that he had steadfastly stood for, and not against, national legislation for the restraining of the circulation of obscene literature through the mails, and had opposed the unqualified repeal of the Comstock postal laws, remaining therein unwaveringly faithful to the original declared position of the National League, and did, in this action named above, virtually commit the League in its management, conduct, and manifest attitude to their cherished measure of repeal; and

Whereas, The minority in said convention, feeling themselves aggrieved and deeply wronged by the action of the majority in this and sundry other matters, did withdraw from the Congress, and organize themselves into a new League, upon the original foundation of the old, taking the name of "The National Liberal League of America"; therefore,

Resolved, That we, the Onondaga County Liberal League, do hereby withdraw ourselves from associate connection with the National Liberal League, and surrender back our charter received from them.

Resolved, That we do hereby make application for affiliation and membership, as a Local Liberal League, with and in the National Liberal League of America, and that our president and secretary are hereby instructed in our behalf to ask a charter to be issued to us by the directors of the same.

The above resolutions were unanimously adopted at a meeting of the Onondaga County Liberal League, of Syracuse, N.Y., on the evening of Nov. 3, 1878.

J. W. TRUESDELL, President.

NETTIE C. TRUESDELL, Secretary.

THE MERIDEN LEAGUE.

WEST MERIDEN, Ct., Nov. 15, 1878.

DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

At our League meeting last evening, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:—

"Resolved, That while we appreciate the earnest and efficient services of Francis E. Abbot in the National Liberal League, and desired his continuance in the presidency of that League, we believe that in the election of Hon. Elizur Wright, so long and favorably known as a defender of human rights, we have a pledge that the League will continue to aim at justice for all, and that fellowship in the League, being based on this principle, 'will be as broad as that we aim to establish in the State.'"

Cordially yours,
EMILY J. LEONARD.

Communications.

MR. JULIAN'S ESSAY.

EDITOR INDEX:

Dear Sir,—I have just finished reading Hon. George W. Julian's very able discussion of the question, "Is the Reformer any Longer Needed?" republished by you from the North American Review. While I most heartily agree with him in his general conclusions as to the need of reforms, and of reformers to carry them out, even though they may be of the species known as fanatics, yet he seems to have an impression as to the position of the evolutionists on this question somewhat different from the impression I had got by reading their works.

The evolutionists do hold that society is a growth, and that civilization is the result of natural laws; but I do not understand them to hold that therefore we should fold our hands and do nothing, letting evolution take the place of individual effort. The evolutionist who is true to his principles ignores no fact. He takes note of every influence that has helped to bring the final result. While he recognizes society as a growth, and civilization as a development, he also sees that this growth, this development, is but the result of the united efforts of the individuals of which society is composed. He, therefore, of all men, should be most anxious that these individual efforts should be well-directed, in order that the result may be the best possible. He deplores misguided fanaticism, but he joins heart and hand with every wisely ordered effort for the advancement of the individual and the consequent improvement of society. He sees that all reforms have progressed slowly and surely, that they have gone on in accordance with a natural law of growth, "of a piece with the development of the embryo, or the unfolding of a flower," and that this is the way that reforms in the future are bound to advance; but he certainly does not ignore the individual effort that has been the cause of their starting, nor the steady and continual, though often apparently spasmodic and misdirected, application of this effort which has kept these reforms growing after they had once taken root. He may say that every condition of the individual or of society is the offspring of a previous condition, modified by the influence of surrounding circumstances; but he also recognizes that each and every one of us has some influence in making the circumstances by which we are surrounded.

Evolution, therefore, when clearly understood, need not lead to scientific fatalism, but should inspire in the breast of every lover of truth a stronger desire to see the reformatory forces of society directed in the proper way, so that the result may be the best that could be reached, considering the circumstances. Most respectfully yours,

CHAS. J. BUELL.

ROSENDALE, N.Y., Nov. 5, 1878.

"THE DESECRATION OF THE SABBATH."

JACKSONVILLE, Ill., Oct. 14, 1878.

EDITOR INDEX:—

The enclosed slip from the Jacksonville, Ill., Daily Journal gives a series of resolutions passed by the Illinois Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, which met recently in this city:—

Methodist vs. Methodist.

"The Foreign Element" of the Methodist Episcopal Church Heard From.

The Daily Journal of Oct. 8 contains several resolutions passed by the Illinois Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, as follows:—

Resolved, That, as ministers, we will oppose by tongue and pen, and by our personal influence and example, the desecration of the Sabbath,—such as excursion-trains, whether to camp-meetings or not; the sale of anything on Sunday at camp-meetings; the keeping open on Sunday of barber-shops, tobacco or cigar shops, clothing stores, drug stores (except for the sale of needed medicines), and business houses of all kinds.

Resolved, That we will discourage the burial on Sunday of any person who could as well be buried on Saturday or Monday, thereby preventing interference with the various regular Sabbath services.

Resolved, That, as American citizens, we will insist on our American Sabbaths, and if our foreign element like the foreign Sabbath best, let them go where they can enjoy it without disturbing the rights and privileges of the citizens of this country.

Resolved, That, as newspaper men and newboys ought to have a Sabbath as well as other people, we will discourage Sunday newspapers, and teach our people that it is as sinful to buy newspapers on Sunday as it would be to buy groceries or any other kind of merchandise.

Resolved, That we mean what we say, and that we defend the fourth commandment, even if it renders us unpopular.

In reply to the first item, let us kindly ask our brethren if the "foreign element" only desecrates the Sabbath? By whom only, and for whose benefit, excursions are made up and the Lord's day disgraced? Are barber, cigar, and tobacco shops, drug and clothing stores, kept open by "foreigners" only?

Is it the custom of the American people to bury their dead on the Sabbath? or is such done by the "foreign element" only?

In the third item, we read that those of the "foreign element" who do not like the American Sabbath shall go where they can enjoy it. We fully agree with the above, so far that "those foreigners" who do not respect the Sabbath, and do not obey the laws of the American country, ought to be brought to the way of righteousness (which can be done only by Christian love and good example), and if not, "let them go where they can enjoy it." But Conference has failed to tell us where that portion of the American "element" who do not care for the Sabbath and the laws,—where shall that "element" go to?

We would further request the brethren to explain the difference between the foreign and American Sabbath, or is there any such?—which can be judged best by observers who did have the privilege of keeping the Sabbath in foreign as well as in this land.

In conclusion, the question arises, By which "element" is the country most endangered and the laws disobeyed? Who are those who took the bankrupt law, robbed private and public property, disgracing God, men, and country? Are they of the "foreign element" only?

We mean what we say, and do "defend the fourth commandment, even if it renders us unpopular."

Respectfully,

MEMBERS OF M. E. CHURCH, of the "Foreign Element."

The Journal is Republican in politics, but is run especially in the interest of the Presbyterian Church, and always in opposition to liberal thought. The editor has crawled into his Orthodox shell, pulled the shell after him, and then swallowed himself, shell and all. The above communication would never have appeared in the Journal, were it not a slip at the Methodist Episcopal Church, and the editor could not resist the temptation to give Methodism a stab, notwithstanding he well knows that his own, the Presbyterian, Church would endorse the resolutions, if called upon to do so. The resolutions are odious, and would, were their spirit incorporated, in our State laws, be subversive of the rights of our best citizens. The attempt of Orthodoxy to compel all citizens to comply with their idea of the "American Sabbath," and the impudence of telling "our foreign element" to leave the country if they do not wish to comply with it, was never excelled in any country, or by any people. As well might the Illinois Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church resolve that all persons not Orthodox in their belief should be deprived of one-seventh part of the sun-light as to presume to dictate to any American citizen (whether of foreign birth or native born) how he shall, or how he shall not, occupy any portion of his time, so long as he does not infringe the rights of others. But Orthodoxy presumes to be the sole arbiter for all mankind in the matter of morals and religion, while their dogmas offer a premium (in the way of substitution) for any and all immorality, vice, and crime. "Consistency, thou art a jewel."

This is not sent you expecting you will publish it, but with the hope that, in your own good time, in the columns of THE INDEX, you will give these resolutions the rebuke they so richly deserve; and no one can do so more effectually than yourself.

Very respectfully, JOHN C. GRIERSON.

P.S.—We are making an effort to have our League represented at Syracuse on the 28th and 27th inst. Your position in regard to obscene literature is correct,—should and will prevail. J. C. G.

[We could not do justice to Mr. Grierson's subject in any better way than by publishing his excellent comments as they stand.—Ed.]

BIGOTRY UNITES.

DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

We have been hearing much during the last few days of a compromise which has been effected by the Protestants and Catholics in New Haven, to the end that the religious exercises held in the schools may be of such a prearranged character as not, by word or purport, to offend the moral sensibilities of either of the two ruling theologies. One curious observation in connection with the matter should not be disregarded by secularists in the views they may chance to form in judgment of this newly-conceived phase of the vexatious school question. I refer to the palpable fact that while the committee that manipulated this arrangement, arranged things evenly for Catholics and Protestants, they showed no little respect for the rights of freethinkers, Jews, and kindred non-Christians. They either hypocritically or by honest bigotry failed to carry their argument for the just treatment of each other to its only legitimate conclusion, which would have claimed from them an equal consideration for the affirmations of secularists, who are taxed for school-support proportionally with Catholics and Protestants. They are blind to the basis of their own position, or, possibly, like Church and State of old, imagine heterodoxy, social or religious, to be without the pale of the conservative many, whom government is bound, perforce, to respect and protect. They tax us, that they may coerce us, and excuse themselves to the populace by making synonyms of "heresy" and "immorality," and then inferring from this premise what they conceive to be a justification for their method of coercion,—the province of government to punish and not be ruled by "vice." This is their virtual position, though they might hesitate to avow it, and is plainly much more gross than acute.

A remarkable change of base is this of the Catholics and Protestants of New Haven,—perhaps a very fortunate one for the secularist, if he will consider that the fight he must enter as one party, should the policy extend further, will be but two-sided, instead of in that perplexing triangular position which requires him to antagonize separately both Protestants, who like the schools but smirch them with bigotry, and the Catholic, who opposes the schools altogether. In so happy an event, the contest would be a direct one, as is self-evident; so let us at least pick this one grain of comfort out of the new manoeuvre of the Connecticut religionists. HORACE L. TRAUBEL.

CAMDEN, N.J.

PRINCIPLES, METHODS, MEN.

NO. IV.

We come to the last term of our formula, Men. One hears daily such expressions as these: "I go for principles before measures"; "Measures before men"; "Give us the right men, and measures will take care of themselves." These expressions are as common as the faces you meet. Every quack in religion, politics, or social affairs makes for himself a crutch out of one of these catches, on which he hobbles before the world, and proclaims that that is the pillar of safety to which society must "tie up." But society soon finds to its sorrow that it has been helped neither to a decent crutch to get on with, nor a pillar of support, but to the horn of a sad dilemma instead, on which it is being tossed, without making any advance, or finding any safety or repose. And yet all the doctors know that one does not get on well with a single crutch, if he is badly crippled; and every builder knows that an edifice is not secure with but one support; and every body knows that every stool, even, requires three good legs to stand firmly upon. How, then, can it be supposed that society should find a stable basis and the conditions of an orderly progress with anything short of the threefold support found in the formula of principles, methods or measures, and men? And is not this the true formula, not only for building up society, but for the safe management of every enterprise, whether of business, politics, or education? It is the law of social movement; and no undertaking has any reason to hope for success which wants the completeness of our formula. Principles and methods must not only be right, but they must be personated in true character. The new church of principles and the new state of social equity must of necessity be administered by those whose lives are governed by principles, and coordinated to the methods of the divine social code, which demands unity of interests through universal coöperation. The regenerated state, which is but the regenerate collective life or social institutions, can no more be administered by, or with safety be trusted to, the unregenerate class—the "every-man-for-himself," and "the-devil-take-the-hindmost" class,—than the honest, just, and truly self-respecting or regenerate man can safely enter into and administer the affairs of the existing social state, or the systems of labor, trade, and finance created under it. It would be as dangerous to the state in the former case, as to the morals of the man in the latter: in the former, the man would deprave and pervert the state to his own selfish ends; in the latter, the state would be sure to corrupt the man.

As no movement can succeed by any other formula than that under consideration, let it be conceded that we have at last discovered the key to true social progress—principles, methods, men,—a threefold regeneration.

We have used the term regeneration deliberately and with a purpose. We believe in regeneration fully and entirely, both of the individual and of society, and especially of society. But we may as well say the regeneration we speak of is quite another thing than that which is so much talked about by the religious teachers of the day. That we have faith in is not wrought through fear of divine or satanic wrath; nor through faith in the purgative power of any blood shed on any sacred mount; nor in the imputed righteousness of any Lord; nor in any genuflections or prostrations of the body, eucharistic feasts, holy-day observances, or rites of washing; nor sacred books and inscriptions; but through faith in the everlasting principles of right, planted in our natures—self-evident, self-assertive, and omnipresent,—a living spirit which gently approves, or fills with mournful unrest the erring and disobedient soul. The regeneration which we believe in is such an intelligent regard for the principles of right conduct in individuals and associations as at all times, and under all circumstances, holds the man to honor and rectitude,—convictions so deeply grounded in intelligence and the moral sense, concerning the demands of principles, as to forbid one course of conduct to an individual, and the exact opposite to a member of a business firm, corporation, or of a profession. The regeneration we believe in is such a deep wakening of the moral sense as to make the subject of it feel that he is not only responsible for his own personal conduct, but also for the laws, usages, political and social institutions under which he consents to live. If he may not pick his neighbor's pocket, he cannot, without guilt, take part in a system of trade which does it; if he may not, as an individual, stand over his fellow while at work, with a bludgeon to rob him of his earnings, he cannot do it as a stockholder in a cotton mill; if he may not, as an individual, lurk like a pard by the way-side, to demand of the farmer three-fifths of his produce for being let go to market without having his throat cut, neither can he do it as a shareholder or manager of a railroad company; if he may not, as an individual, steal the land from under your feet for his personal profit, neither can he, as a member of Congress, steal the inheritance of your children by voting away the public domain to a ring of plunderers, of whom he himself is one. Neither can he abet the theft though having no direct interest in it by selling his services as a professional lobbyist.

The regeneration which we have faith in, is that exaltation or growth of the moral nature which lifts the man above the selfish and brute instincts into an apprehension of principles and the nobler sentiments as the rule and motive of conduct in every sphere of life,—a regeneration which insures an integral righteousness that shapes not only the conduct of the individual, but moulds the entire surroundings of his life, his associations, his business, his interests, and the social institutions under which he lives. The regenerate man is not concerned about his own or his neighbor's personal sanctity, while indifferent and silent as to the social relations and forces which, from their very form, must of necessity convert the love and goodness of the purest souls into the hatred and malevolence of demons. The regeneration we preach is not only an exaltation of individual life, a change of purpose in the man, but of the form of society also; and without the latter, the former is a delusion and a snare.

The regenerate man is he in whom the church of principles lives. He does not join the Church, but this church is joined to him, and surely guides his every step. The voice of this divine mother is ever with him, speaking to his affections and his intellect that love and wisdom which embody the regenerate men into the righteous commonwealth.

But where are we to look that we may be gladdened with such a spectacle?—regenerate men forming the regenerated social state—true offspring of the church of principles? Not they who have joined the Church, but to whom the Church is conjoined, and whose individual and collective life she wholly guides. This mother, whose divine voice speaks to their affections and understanding, the love and wisdom of the Eternal Word—that word, that light, which leads and lights all souls who come into the world, the substance of all symbols, rites, and sacrifices, the interpretation of all scriptures, and the authority of all commandments. The church of principles is a church of authority, and the only authority; and she shall yet rule the individual, the State, the trade, industries, and institutions of this world.

Many signs betoken the dawn of that complete social reform, the need of which is proclaimed by so many voices, from every sphere and function of our existing society. We may vainly beat the air for a time, in our partial and isolated efforts. Ere long we shall see that there is a divine method or law of social evolution, a science of reform which it is our first duty to know and apply. Society is the collective man, and must be regarded as an integral organism. A part cannot be made to stand for the whole. Partial efforts at reform are really no advance. It is only through a social mechanism or system homogeneous with the spirit of equity and love to the neighbor, that anything deserving the name of a remedy for our social evils is possible. The isolated competitive régime is not that system, but combined associated interests. Working on the basis of equitable coöperation is that system. By such a system it would be impossible to work ill to one's neighbor; for, as we have already shown, a social organization homogeneous with the principle of justice, could manifest only practical beneficence in harmony with the primordial law announced in the outset, and which we here repeat; namely, function determines organization, and organization determines limits, and fixes the relative character and form of manifestation or use. If thinking is to be done, it demands a brain; digestion, a digestive apparatus; secretion, the organs necessary to that end. But the special kind of thinking, digestion, and secretion is determined by the special kind of organization. If the function is human intelligence, then there must be organized a human being; if brute thinking and feeling, a brute organization. Human thought and feeling, digestion or secretion, cannot be that of the brute; and vice versa. The same food eaten by a man and a brute, becomes, in the one, brute tissue, brute force, and ferocity; in the other, the substance of the "human form divine"; the brain force of the sage, the poetic imagery of the artist, or the divine beneficence of the good great soul.

What is law as to function and organization in one sphere of life is equally law in all spheres; is as true in the sphere of social function and organization as in the material sphere. As it is impossible to get anything but swinish manifestations through a swine, or serpent actions through the serpent, so it is utterly impossible to get honor, truth, and justice from a social organization, the function, spirit, and form whereof are the normal development of the forms of baseness, falsehood, and injustice.

Principles, methods, men: these formulate the only possible conditions of permanent and successful social progress. The supreme love of right and the love of the neighbor as one's self are the eternal rules of social conduct; and universal cooperation, through unity of interest, is their eternal method or mode of action. Opposed as these teachings may be, and will be, by established conservatism; chatter and bark as the mercenary press may at communism; anathematize as a hypocritical and hireling priesthood will upon the infidelity of science; continue though ignorant and corrupt legislators may to "frame inquiry by a law,"—each and all of these know through the ineradicable presence in the soul of the pure ideal life that the supreme love of God and the love of the neighbor as one's self, are the external basis of the science of social conduct, the law of social order and that friendly cooperation in all things is the logical form of such social action. All our dreams of utopias, of divine republics and millenniums are the spontaneous homage or accords paid by all souls to their truths. JOHN ORVIS.

HOW TO PROVE "PLENARY INSPIRATION."

[A subscriber sends the following letter by Rev. Huntington Lyman for publication, with a request that it receive an "able reply" from some one.—ED.]

Perhaps you have not turned your attention to the matter sufficiently to know how strong you may be in asserting the plenary inspiration of the Bible. No matter how strongly you put it,—you may even be defiant if you choose; for if the Bible falls of evidence, then everything falls. Even the battle of Waterloo or that of Gettysburg has not half so much evidence as the fact that God has spoken to us through inspired men. The Bible is its own witness; not that it can prove itself by saying, "I am true"; no book can brace itself in that way. As I am in for it, I will give one or two lines of proof that no disbeliever can or will try to meet. It was very fit that the Bible should start with proof. Our Bible does so.

The science of geology was nothing until this century had got along to its sixteenth year. Now, if it appears that geology was known to Him who inspired the first chapter of Genesis, then two things are proved: First, that God has spoken to man by a written word; second, that he who wrote that chapter was inspired. I say, upon those two points you may be defiant; try it if you meet an unbeliever. First, the Bible asserts creation. No man taking a position opposite to that can give any rational account of how things came to be in the earth just as they are needed; how everything that nourishes vegetation came to be there, if God did not make it there. Second chapter of Genesis, second verse, you find the word darkness; now science never reached that deep thought until in these last years. Now, it says there must have been darkness. Then we have light before the sun. Science agrees. Without following every particular, we come to verse nine, which recognizes the fact, the wonderful fact, that once the whole globe was under water. I would hold the unbeliever hard to that. How came Moses to know that the whole globe was once under water? Manetho, Berossus, Herodotus, did not know it; Abraham did not; our grandfathers did not; but now all the world knows it. So we go on through the chapter.

Now, the facts of geology are such that no two of them would occur to any mind. They are all so out of the track of human thinking that no man can think, or is in the least danger of thinking, that they could have been invented.

1. In this chapter, the great facts are given.

2. They are set forth in the order in which science says they took place.

3. Where two things occurred in one geological period, they are so recorded in the Book and so recorded in the rock.

See II., Genesis, 20, 21. These two creations, fish and birds, occurred on the same geological day. So says the Book, so say the rocks. The same wonder is repeated. See verses 24-27. The mammalian beasts were created the same geologic day with man. So say the rocks, so said the Bible four thousand years ago.

Don't let him off. Require that he should account for the statement of these profound geological facts: that they are stated in their order; that where one creative act was done on one day, where two were done on one day, where three were done on one day, it is set forth both in the rocks and in Revelation. The Bible and Nature harmonize in all these facts. Don't let him off until he acknowledges that none but God could have informed him. Then you have gained two most important points: First, God has by the hand of man given a written revelation; second, God made Moses to know of things that took place thousands and millions of years before he was born. Then not a particle more is needed to make it probable that he also was made to know of things that should take place thousands of years after his death. You will find it a perfect choker, if you hold the man to it. No man dare write out any argument of denial who has a sixpenny regard for his own reputation. Therefore, I say, you may be defiant.

Perhaps he will say that does not prove the whole Bible. Then ask him if anything you have said shows that you have tried to prove the whole by this single chapter? But make him admit that the two points you undertook to prove are proved. If he wants to go further, take him into Deuteronomy, and ask him to read the twenty-eighth chapter. Then if he knows anything of Jewish history, you may face him down on that chapter. Ask him, Does not that chapter describe the fortunes of the Jews as they were two or three thousand years after it was written? The fact is, there is nothing that is so supported as is the Bible. If men do not know how firm it is, it is through no fault of demonstration.

H. LYMAN.

"PUBLIC ENEMY."

EDITOR INDEX:—

Appropos to your forcibly drawn indictment of the Roman Catholic Church, published in your issue of Sept. 5, I send herewith a transcript of a note which I find in the second volume of Lecky's History of the Development of European Morals, which I think will be new to some of your readers, as it certainly was to me. I had not supposed it possible, that in this age of decency and enlightenment, the Catholic Church would dare promulgate such abominable doctrine. It is enough to make the stoutest adult tremble; how much more, then, timid and impressible childhood!

The claim everywhere boastingly set up by evangelical Christians, that the rapid spread of Christianity was solely due to its superiority to all other religions, is hardly sustained by the solid facts of history, and requires much modification. I imagine that a critical examination of the subject would show that the methods adopted by the Church to impress the minds of the uninformed masses with the unlovely doctrines contained in the gospels, were the important factors of its growth, rather than the purely ethical and altogether lovely precepts of Jesus. What here follows will, I think, sustain this view.

Mr. Lecky, writing only a few years ago, says: "Few Englishmen, I imagine, are aware of the infamous publications that are circulated by the Catholic priests among the poor. I have before me a tract 'for children and young persons,' called 'The Sight of Hell,' by the Rev. J. Furniss, C.S.S.R., published, par missu superionum, by Duffy (Dublin and London). It is a detailed description of the dungeons of hell, and a few sentences may serve as a sample:—

"Seel on the middle of that red-hot floor stands a girl. She looks about sixteen years old. Her feet are bare. She has neither shoes nor stockings. . . . Listen! she speaks. She says, 'I have been standing on this red-hot floor for years. Day and night my only standing place has been this red-hot floor. . . . Look at my burnt and bleeding feet. Let me go off this burning floor for one moment, only for one single short moment.' . . . The fourth dungeon is the boiling kettle; . . . in the middle of it there is a boy. His eyes are burning like two burning coals. Two long flames come out of his ears. . . . Sometimes he opens his mouth and blazing fire rolls out. But listen! there is a sound like a kettle boiling. . . . The blood is boiling in the scalded veins of that boy. The brain is boiling and bubbling in his head. The marrow is boiling in his bones. . . . The fifth dungeon is the red-hot oven. . . . The little child is in this red-hot oven. Hear how it screams to come out. See how it turns and twists itself about in the fire. It beats its head against the roof of the oven. It stamps its little feet on the floor. . . . God was very good to this child. Very likely God saw it would get worse and worse, and would never repent, and so it would have to be punished much more in hell. So God in his mercy called it out of the world in its early childhood."

After reading the foregoing soul-sickening extract, can any man, with a spark of humanity in his bosom, or a particle of honesty in his nature, say that Voltaire wrote either too soon or too harshly of the Romish Church? D. C.

WOBURN, Sept. 23.

THE AMERICAN INQUISITION.

All thinking liberals must have read of the fate which has overtaken Mr. E. H. Heywood with profound attention, and I hope also with some degree of that righteous anger which St. Paul commends.

Mr. Heywood is a man with the courage of his opinions, and whose mouth will not easily be closed by either threats or penalties; but, on the other hand, many people think that he is apt to let his zeal run away with his discretion. I once read a pamphlet of Mr. Heywood's upon the free-love doctrine, and must say that I considered it a singularly weak performance; and this, not so much on account of the inherent feebleness of the author's case, as because he was altogether too passionate and too pathetic, in a certain way, to do justice to it. But with his social opinions we are not now concerned, because no one explicitly denies the right of free discussion.

Nominally Mr. Heywood stands condemned for having circulated a pamphlet containing certain obscene sentences. But now, what is an obscene sentence? Who shall judge? The current fashion of the day decides. What else can we appeal to? Therefore, it really is for having offended against modern fashion that he is going to suffer so severe a penalty. Is modern fashion worthy of so much credit? Is it so certainly immaculate? nay, is it even the best standard we possess?

There is not one among all Shakespeare's plays which can now be put upon the boards before a New York or London audience without being first expurgated and, in the process, spoiled. Macaulay says, with his usual exaggeration, that the purism of a society's speech is in inverse ratio to its purity of living. And many men superior to Macaulay have believed that a return from the absurd affectations of modern manners to the simpler language which was customary in the Athens of Socrates and in the Europe of the Renaissance would prove, morally, distinctly beneficial. Of the fouler portions of the Bible I omit all mention, because a reference to them would only be an argument ad hominem, no doubt legitimate, but less satisfactory than an appeal to the nobler classics. Whatever we may do, of course, offences against taste will always happen; but these can never be held actionable. If they were—ye gods! what a labor should we not have on our hands.

For my part, I am inclined to doubt whether even really obscene literature, written with vile intent, does any considerable harm. To exclude voluptuous images from the eyes and fancies of the young is obviously an hundred times impossible; and therefore probably a large majority of the purchasers of unclean books and pictures were, in fact, corrupted to begin with. There is only one effectual mode whereby this infamous traffic can be finally suppressed. Stop the demand and the supply will cease. Educate the young, and encourage in them a decent (not indecent) familiarity. CHARLES ELLERSHAW.

NEW YORK CITY.

A FRIENDLY LETTER TO "THE INDEX."

MR. ABBOT:—

If this seems worth its room in your paper, you are at liberty to place it there. I wish to say something about the glorious cause of freethought and liberty, in which I am working about as diligently as I can; but the liberal papers contain so much that is instructive and able that I must write with diffidence.

For three years, I was a member of a church; I was superstitious and extreme; I read one year with the view of preaching the doctrine of the church to which I adhered. By-and-by the "sledge-hammer blows" of the Age of Reason were brought to bear upon me, and the scales of Bible superstition tumbled off my eyes. Now, in proportion to my ability, money, and opportunities, I think I am doing as much to impart good and useful ideas, and to undeceive religious dupes, as most of our workers. I feel that we ought to show our religious friends the follies in the Bible and churches. We must reason and kindly persuade them to give up teaching the foolishness and slavery of the Bible. But, when we have detached from their minds all their curious notions, we must give them something better. It seems to me that all you editors of freedom and workers in free religion, all the lecturers of infidelity and Spiritualism, ought to make the world grow better; and I trust that it is advancing somewhat. We can't do much with the old fogies who will not read our books nor listen to our lectures. But let us all and each be a constant example of honesty and consistency. Each of us can be upright, and thus help to better the world; why not? Let us not walk too high, so that our heads bump the stars; but let us teach and better the common thinking people. The duty of us all is to teach people by precept and example to be clean, healthy, honest, and enterprising. We must be indulgent and kind towards each other, and especially gentle and charitable to Christians. J. CARTRITE.

CASTANA, IOWA.

BOOK NOTICE.

HYGIENE OF THE BRAIN, AND THE CURE OF NERVOUSNESS. by M. L. Holbrook, M.D. New York: M. L. Holbrook, Publisher.

In spite of title, which might seem to give this little volume place only among medical works, a glance at the contents is most convincing proof that the readers of THE INDEX cannot afford to be without a knowledge of it. Dr. Holbrook, who has had long experience in the study and care of nervous diseases has supplemented his own thorough, but most simple and plainly put introduction to nerves in general, by a series of letters from literary and professional men at home and abroad. These letters give minutely the mental and physical habits of men whose life and work we are all eager to know, beginning with O. B. Frothingham, and including Bryant, Gerritt Smith, Dr. B. W. Richardson of London, known as one of the best authorities on "Health and Disease"; Bronson Alcott, the Howitts, Horace and Mary Mann, and so on, through a list of representative names. From this fund of experience, most attractively told, one cannot fail to draw conclusions both helpful and stimulating, as to personal effort in the same direction. Dr. Holbrook is, fortunately, a man not of one, but many ideas, and has a sturdy common-sense and a plainness of presentation which render his book exceptionally valuable to those who have not time for more elaborate works on the same topic; and readers of THE INDEX will find here another most efficient tract, that, if distributed broadcast among "Liberal Leagues" the land over, would tone down asperities, and make "Free Discussion" a much less nervous and wrath-producing factor than at present. CAMPBELL WHEATON.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.

TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
 Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STUBBS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

Office, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tena-
 sy, N.Y.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 O. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
 JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the difference between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.20 for one year, including postage, or $1.00 for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street Boston.

PUBLICATIONS INDEX TRACTS.

OF THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles E. Malcolm, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by O. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Bursleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, O. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. O. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Oathrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. O. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. E. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by O. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion"; Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Laaker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for Five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for Five cents at the office.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1873 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fifth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 8.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal DEVOTED TO FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tena-
 sy, N.Y.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 O. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
 JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALLOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALLOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	1.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work: A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AURBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights.....	1.50
Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.50
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.5
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	2.00
BARTOL (REV. O. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	6.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	2.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	2.25
BURKE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 3 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 3 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Faust and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religious.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects.....	3.00
Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.30
CONWAY (MONOURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
COBBELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Mason, Lyell, &c. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.5

Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	1.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUNNING (JULIA). Philosophers and Poets. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising—Adam Bede, Romola, The Mill on the Floss, Felix Holt, Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	2.50
Middlemarch. 3 vols.....	1.50
Wit and Wisdom of The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellanies.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.20
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Alphonse Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Original History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	2.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.....	2.00
Cosmic Philosophy.....	5.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 8 vols.....	8.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Selective A. Edition.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. B.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends, by Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.). A Painter's Camp-Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	1.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	1.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	2.50
Songs of Seven.....	1.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Of the Skelligs.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mopea the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	2.00

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an appendix treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS O.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 4 vols.....	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	1.50
LEWES (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	3.00
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D'O). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. First Series.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.). Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	5.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES) Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.). The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	3.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte.....	1.50
Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	3.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	3.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	3.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.00
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN) Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN) Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER) Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NASSY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkos from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans.—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations.—A. D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.60
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS) The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Truist Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 16 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Geometry, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expense of Heaven.....	2.00
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHLLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMER: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 26 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.50
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT). Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.50
First Principles.....	2.25
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	1.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	1.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	6.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	6.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	1.50
Sociology.....	1.50
Descriptive Sociology. Parts I., II., and III., each.....	4.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	4.00
Universal Progress.....	2.50
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER). Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.50
New Life of Jesus. Authorised translation. 3 vols.....	12.50
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	1.50
The Classic-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.50
The Newcomes.....	1.50
Adventures of Philip Fendennis.....	1.50
The Virginians.....	1.50
Edmond, and Lovell the Widower.....	1.50
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.50
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.....
1. Barry Lyndon, Roggarty Diamond, &c.....
2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c.....
3. Knobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c.....
4. Four Georges, Humors, &c.....
5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.50
The Maine Woods.....	2.50
Cape Cod.....	2.50
Letters.....	2.50
A Yankee in Canada.....	1.50
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.50
TYLER (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	1.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.50
Fragment of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.00
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	2.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
Lessons in Electricity.....	1.50
Addresses before British Assoc'n at Belfast.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES) The Ring and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	1.50
Vol. III. IV. and VI., each.....	1.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.50
Sauterlings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN). American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIFFLE'S (K. F.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	3.50
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldswaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	1.50
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTEK'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	1.50

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

231 Washington St., Boston.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY—PRICE
TWO PENCE.

THE SECULAR REVIEW.

EDITED BY CHARLES WATTS.

The SECULAR REVIEW is the leading organ of Secularism, and each week has Special Articles on Theological, Social, Scientific, and Political Subjects. Its distinctive features are the advocacy of Constructive Secularism, and the dissemination of useful information on all questions which affect the welfare of the people. Letters are inserted in its "OPEN COLUMN" from all who are courteous in the expression of their views; while a special department is allotted for "NOTES AND QUERIES."

The Contributors to the SECULAR REVIEW comprise the principal advocates of Secularism, including its founder, G. J. Holyoake.

CHARLES WATTS, Publisher,
84 Fleet Street, London, E.C.

THE SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN.

THIRTY-FOURTH YEAR.

The Most Popular Scientific Paper in the World.

Only $3.20 a Year, including Postage. Weekly, 52 Numbers a Year, 4,000 Book Pages.

THE SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN is a large First-Class Weekly Newspaper of Sixteen Pages, printed in the most beautiful style, profusely illustrated with splendid engravings, representing the newest inventions and the most recent Advances in the Arts and Sciences; including New and Interesting Facts in Agriculture, Horticulture, the Home, Health, Medical Progress, Social Science, Natural History, Geology, Astronomy. The most valuable practical papers, by eminent writers in all departments of Science, will be found in the Scientific American.

Terms, $3.20 per year, $1.60 half year, which includes postage. Discount to Agents. Single copies, ten cents. Sold by all News-dealers. Remit by postal order to MUNN & CO., Publishers, 37 Park Row, New York.

PATENTS. In connection with the Scientific American, Messrs. MUNN & Co. are Solicitors of American and Foreign Patents, have had 34 years' experience, and now have the largest establishment in the world. Patents are obtained on the best terms. A special notice is made in the Scientific American of all inventions patented through this Agency, with the name and residence of the Patentee. By the immense circulation thus given, public attention is directed to the merits of the new patent, and sales or introduction often easily effected.

Any person who has made a new discovery or invention can ascertain, free of charge, whether a patent can probably be obtained, by writing to the undersigned. We also send free our Hand Book about the Patent Laws, Patents, Caveats, Trade-Marks, their costs, and how procured, with hints for procuring advances on inventions. Address for the Paper, or concerning Patents, MUNN & CO., 37 Park Row, New York.

Branch Office, corner F and 7th Streets, Washington, D.C.

RADICAL LIBERAL LECTURES.

By B. F. Underwood,

FOR THE FALL AND WINTER OF 1878-9.

1. The Theory of Evolution.
2. Darwinism Defined and Defended.
3. The Philosophy of Herbert Spencer.
4. The Genesis and Nature of Religion.
5. Modern Scientific Materialism.
6. Natural Selection versus Design in Nature.
7. An Hour with German Thinkers.
8. Intuition and Instinct Viewed in the Light of Modern Psychology.
9. The Pros and Cons of a Future Life.
10. Is there a Personal Intelligent Deity?
11. The Demands of Liberalism Pertaining to State Secularization.
12. Monogamic Marriage versus the Vagaries of Free Love.
13. Woman: Her Past and Present; Her Rights and Wrongs.
14. Religious Revivals: Their Causes and Consequences.
15. The Struggles and Triumphs of Free-thought in Europe and America.
16. Issues of the Age.
17. Buddha and Buddhism.
18. Ancient Egypt: Its Laws, Customs, and Religion.
19. The French Revolution: Its Causes and Consequences.
20. Crimes and Cruelties of Superstition.
21. Cook and other "Scientific" Annihilators of Materialism Reviewed.
22. Paine the Pioneer of Free-thought in America.
23. A Liberal's Answer to the Question, "If not Christianity, What?"
24. Christianity: To what Extent has it Helped or Hindered Civilization?
25. Jesus: All that is Known and what is Guessed about Him.
26. A True Man Better than a True Christian.
27. Judaism and Christianity Outgrowths of Preexistent Heathenism.
28. Science versus the Bible.
29. The Origin and History of the Bible. (From one to six lectures.)
30. The Four Gospels Unhistorical and Unreliable.
31. Evidences for the Divinity of the Bible Examined.
32. Popular Assumptions Regarding the Bible and Christianity.
33. Bible Prophecies Falsified by the Facts of History.
34. Popular Objections to Liberalism Considered.

For terms, etc., address
B. F. UNDERWOOD,
THORNHILL, MASS.

GOLD

Any worker can make $12 a day at home. Costly outfit free. Address TRUB & CO., Augusta, Maine.

THE INDEX
IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

Address THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston, U.S.A.

TO THE AMERICAN PAT-
RONS OF
CHOICE LITERATURE.

We have made arrangements with Messrs. CHAPMAN & HALL, London, England, for the right to publish an American Edition of

The Fortnightly Review,

Edited by JOHN MORLEY,

and are now publishing this celebrated Monthly Magazine, from a special duplicate set of stereotype plates, which are forwarded from England so promptly as to enable us to produce each month, not only an exact facsimile of this able Review, but to publish it almost at the same time the original is from England. It is in every respect equal to the London issue, at about half the original price. This effort will place in the hands of American readers the freshest utterances of leading thinkers on the issues with a promptitude unequalled. The comments of a large number of the best European thinkers on Science, Philosophy, Literature, Politics, and Miscellaneous Matters of general interest cannot fail to be appreciated and encouraged by thoughtful American readers. The following are a few of the contributors:—

Matthew Arnold,	Alfred R. Wallace,
Herbert Spencer,	Frederick Harrison,
Goldwin Smith,	Prof. Tyndall,
Right Hon. Lyon Play-	Prof. Huxley,
fair,	Prof. Darwin,
Right Hon. W. E. Glad-	Prof. Clifford,
stone,	Author of Supernat-
Lionel A. Tallemaque,	ural Religion ,
M. E. Grant Duff, M.P.,	Sir John Lubbock,
Hon. Robert Lowe,	Anthony Trollope,
Leslie Stephen,	T. Adolphus Trollope,
John Morley (the Ed-)	Sir H. S. Maine,
itor),	Sir David Wedder-
G. H. Lewes,	burn,

AND NUMEROUS OTHERS.

Subscription Price, $5.00 per Year.

Published every month by the ROSE-BELFORD PUBLISHING CO., 60 York Street, Toronto, Ont.

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD.

GREAT THROUGH LINE

AND UNITED STATES MAIL ROUTE.

The attention of the travelling public is respectfully invited to some of the merits of this great highway, in the confident assertion and belief that no other line can offer equal inducements as a route of through travel. In

CONSTRUCTION AND EQUIPMENT

THE PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD stands confessedly at the head of American railways. The track is double the entire length of the line, of steel rails laid on heavy oak ties, which are embedded in a foundation of rock ballast eighteen inches in depth. All bridges are of iron or stone, and built upon the most approved plans. Its passenger cars, while eminently safe and substantial, are at the same time models of comfort and elegance.

THE SAFETY APPLIANCES

in use on this line well illustrate the far-seeing and liberal policy of its management, in accordance with which the utility only of an improvement and not its cost has been the question of consideration. Among many may be noticed

The Block System of Safety Signals, Janney Coupler, Buffer, and Platform, The Wharton Patent Switch, and the Westinghouse Air-Brake, forming in conjunction with a perfect double track and road-bed a combination of safeguards against accidents which have rendered them practically impossible.

Pullman Palace Cars

are run on all Express-Trains from New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington, to Chicago, Cincinnati, Louisville, Indianapolis, and St. Louis.

WITHOUT CHANGE,

and to all the principal points in the far West and South with but one change of cars. Connections are made in Union Depots, and are assured to all important points. The Scenery of the Pennsylvania Route is admitted to be unsurpassed in the world for grandeur, beauty, and variety. Superior refreshment facilities are provided. Employes are courteous and attentive, and it is an inevitable result that a trip by the Pennsylvania Railroad must form

A Pleasing and Memorable Experience.

Tickets for sale at the lowest rates at the Ticket Offices of the Company in all important cities and towns.

FRANK THOMSON, L. P. FARMER,
General Manager. General Passenger Agent.
C. S. HALDEMAN, New England Agent,
203 and 205 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 80 CENTS. Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the fine list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

THE INDEX AS AN
ADVERTISING MEDIUM.

Testimony of one who has tried it.

FLORENCE, Iowa, Jan. 5, 1878.
... THE INDEX is the best advertising medium which I have tried. ...
E. C. WALKER.

THE NEWBURY STREET
SCHOOL will be re-opened for its twelfth year October 2. Address

Miss M. S. DEVEREUX,

34 NEWBURY STREET, BOSTON.

Pupils received into the family under the special care of Miss M. S. Devereux and Miss Lucretia P. Hale.
References: Rev. Dr. Orville Dewey, Sheffield, Mass.; Rev. E. E. Hale, Rev. J. F. Clarke, Hon. Nathaniel Silsbee, Dr. Oliver W. Holmes, Mr. Henry E. Raymond, Boston; Prof. Benjamin Pierce, Cambridge, Mass.; Mr. A. C. Richards, Irvington, N.Y.; Mr. H. R. Bishop, New York.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF
O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
R. H. RANNEY,
F. E. ABBOT.

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

A REMARKABLE BOOK.

A MODERN SYMPOSIUM.

SUBJECTS:

The Soul and Future Life.

By Mr. Frederic Harrison, Hon. Roden Noel, R. H. Hutton, Lord Selborne, Prof. Huxley, Canon Barry, Lord Balfour, Mr. W. B. Greg, Rev. Baldwin Brown, and Dr. W. G. Ward.

The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief.

By Sir James Fitz-James Stephen, Prof. Clifford, Lord Selborne, Rev. Mr. Martineau, Mr. Frederic Harrison, the Dean of St. Paul's, the Duke of Argyll, Dr. W. G. Ward, Prof. Huxley, and R. H. Hutton.

1 Vol. Crown, 8vo. Cloth, neat, $1.25.

This volume contains the scholarly utterances of the leading scientists and philosophers of Great Britain on two of the most important subjects of the century.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass., for for TRACTS.

I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.

II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.

III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.

IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.

V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13 and 20, 1876.)

VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. O. Gannett.

Nos. II, III, IV, V, VI, 10 cts. each; ten for 80 cts.; one hundred, $3.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 50 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS for 1872, '73, '74, '75, '76, and '77, Five cents each.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLETT & CO., Portland, Maine.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address BRINSON & CO., Portland, Maine.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The twenty-fifth school year of this Family and Day School for both sexes will begin WEDNESDAY, Sept. 19, 1877. For Circular and information apply to
NATH'L T. ALLEN,
West Newton, Mass.

NEW BOOK BY INGERSOLL.

Contains his latest lectures on "The Ghosts," "Liberty of Man, Woman, and Child," "Centennial Oration," "Farming in Illinois," and others. Handsomely bound in one volume. Price $1.50. Also

THE GODS AND OTHER LECTURES.

Same style. Price $1.25.
Sent post-paid on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE
OF AMERICA.

1. EQUAL RIGHTS IN RELIGION. Contains an Historical Account of the Liberal League movement; a full Report of the Centennial Congress of Liberals at Philadelphia, July 1 to 4, 1876, with Essays by F. E. Abbot, James Parton, B. F. Underwood, and others; the Constitution of the National Liberal League, List of Charter Members, etc., etc. Octavo, pp. 120. Cloth, $1.00; paper, 75 cents.
2. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES, adopted at Philadelphia, July 4, 1876. With Resolutions of the Congress, Extracts from Letters by Distinguished Citizens, Constitution of the National Liberal League, etc. Adapted for gratuitous distribution by friends of the cause. Octavo, 24 pp. Single copies, 8 cts.; 10 copies, 15 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.
3. PRIVILEGE FOR NONE—JUSTICE FOR ALL. Contains the N. L. L. Platform and Resolutions adopted at Rochester, Oct. 26, 1877, full information how to organize Local Leagues, etc. Twenty-page tract for the use of workers. Single copies, 5 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.

ADDRESS

National Liberal League of America

231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON.

FROTHINGHAM'S WORKS.

THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY. An Essay. Third Edition—Revised. Price $1.50.

"Nobody can peruse this book without respect for the learning, mental honesty and skill in the statement of his convictions, possessed by the author, and for the essential integrity and philanthropic tendency of his spirit."—Springfield Republican.

"A profoundly sincere book, the work of one who has read largely, studied thoroughly, reflected patiently.... It is a model of scholarly culture and of finished and vigorous style."—Boston Globe.

THE CHILD'S BOOK OF RELIGION. For Sunday-schools and Homes. Price $1.00.

THE SAFEST CREED, AND OTHER DISCOURSES. 12mo, Cloth, $1.50.

Not "food for babes," but full of suggestion for earnest and thoughtful men.

STORIES FROM THE LIPS OF THE TEACHER. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"The Parables are so re-told as to absorb the attention of the reader, and to fasten upon the mind what the writer believes to have been the impression the Savior meant to convey. It is in style and thought a superior book, and will interest alike young and old."—Zion's Herald (Methodist).

STORIES OF THE PATRIARCHS. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"A work of culture and taste; it will be welcome to all ages, and gives the sublimest lessons of manhood in the simple language of a child."—Springfield Republican.

BELIEFS OF THE UNBELIEVERS. A Lecture. 12mo, Cloth, $1.00.

TRANSCENDENTALISM IN NEW ENGLAND. A History. With sketches and studies of Emerson, Alcott, Parker, Margaret Fuller, the Brook-Farm Community, etc. 8vo, Cloth extra, with steel portrait of the author, $2.50.

THE LIFE OF THEODORE PARKER. 8vo. With Portrait, $3.00.

The New York Tribune closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

THE ORACLE OF THE CHRIST. A Study in Primitive Christianity, illustrating the prime importance of the Messianic Idea in the New Testament, as the key to the development of Christianity from Judaism. Octavo, Cloth, $1.75.

Mailed, post-paid, on receipt of price, by THE INDEX 231 Washington St., Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 9.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, NOV. 28, 1878.

WHOLE NO. 466.

LIBERAL LEAGUE PLATFORM

For the Presidential Election of 1880,

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution; including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.
2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.
3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.
4. N. B.—The nomination of candidates upon the above platform was postponed to a future Congress of the National Liberal League.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

GLIMPSSES.

ELI PERKINS certainly made a good joke at last, when he emitted the following: "My Uncle Consider stood looking at one of the new silver dollars, and seeing 'In God we Trust' on one side and the 'United States of America' on the other, sadly remarked: 'Well, Eli, I knew we were becoming a very wicked and worldly people, but I never expected to live to see the day when God and the United States would be on opposite sides.' 'Arise and sing!'"

THIS SLIP is sent to us from the Belfast (Maine) Progressive Age of July 4: "Jeremiah Richards, of Lincolnville, was before Trial Justice R. W. Rogers of this city, Tuesday, on a charge of 'travelling and laboring on the Lord's day.' It appeared from the testimony that the respondent had hauled lime on Sunday, June 2, and he was fined $5.00 and costs for the offence, which he paid. George A. Knight was the complainant, R. F. Dunton appearing for him, and F. A. Greer for the respondent."

IT IS a noticeable indication of the spread of radical thought at the West that so many secular journals, published in the various towns and cities at which Mr. Underwood lectures, should be willing to publish his lectures in full or in part, usually with nothing but complimentary remarks. This is doubtless in no small measure due to the fact that Mr. Underwood never indulges in rant or abuse, but invariably treats his subjects in the manner of a candid and thoughtful gentleman. Yet, for all that, the phenomenon is inexplicable except on the supposition that public opinion is not offended by his very frank radicalism. It is one of the best signs of the times.

HERE IS an old story full of possible applications to modern affairs: "There is a proverb current in Northern India which says of any one who meets with unexpected good fortune that 'he has struck with the axe of Mahmoud, the Ghaznvide.' This curious saying takes its origin from a historical episode of the first conquest of India. When Mahmoud, of Ghazni (Ghizni), descending upon the Punjab from Afghanistan, entered the City of Somnauth, in which stood the most sacred of all the Hindu temples, the Brahmin priests met him at a gate of the shrine, offering an enormous ransom if he would but spare their temple and its idol. The eyes of the rapacious Afghans sparkled at sight of the treasures thus spread before them, and murmurs of approval were heard here and there; but Mahmoud sternly bade them be silent, and, pointing to the huge idol that stood in the midst, shouted, 'God has raised me up, not to traffic in idols, but to sweep them from the earth. Behold my answer!' One downright blow of his battle-axe sent the hideous image crashing on the pavement; and as it broke asunder out poured heaps of gold and jewels worth fifty-fold the offered ransom,—this strange hiding-place being, in fact, the treasury of the cunning Brahmins, who were thus sacrificing a part in order to save the whole."

THE Pall Mall Gazette is not deeply impressed with the sincerity of the "new crusade" against Turkey: "Two Christian armies animated by the most intense sentiments of religious animosity against each other are now engaged in introducing the blessings of civilization into European Turkey, at the point of the bayonet. There seems to be some danger that these crusaders in the cause of humanity, after having bathed the plains of Bulgaria and the hill-sides of Bosnia with the blood of the populations they are engaged in reforming, will turn their weapons on each other, in their zeal to see justice done to the Sultan, and to prevent deeds of rapine and spoliation. As a preliminary measure, they are already beginning to accuse each other of committing atrocities. 'It is impossible,' writes the Golos of St. Petersburg, commenting on the occupation of Bosnia by Austria, 'to be astonished at the fact that the Sultan has energetically refused the coöperation of a Power which, without anything having authorized it, has violated the territory of a friendly State, in order to perpetrate the most horrible atrocities.' When Christian rogues wrangle over their plunder to such an extent that one of them in his bitterness espouses the cause of the Mohammedan victim, this 'new crusade' may yet have in store for us some novel and instructive development."

THE OCTOBER number of Scribner's Monthly said of Mr. Emerson: "Among the inconveniences of age, Mr. Emerson now finds an infirmity of memory which somewhat interferes with his literary work, though it does not wholly impede it, as is shown by this lecture, delivered last March, at the Old South Church in Boston. Characteristic of the man, his aims and patriotic hopes, it is also one of the finest and noblest pieces of writing he has published. Standing at the twilight of a long life of literary activity, and himself aware that his faculties are no longer to be fully relied upon, he is yet able to concentrate his thought upon a lofty subject, and utter, with the pregnant homeliness of his habitual style, words of comfort to a nation in a time of depression, if not actual distress. How many literary men are there who would not, in this case, introduce themselves into the discussion, and lament in one way or another the decay of their faculties, the loss of the pleasures of this world? Emerson has no remark to make about himself; he is absorbed in the future of the United States. Without a trace of the narrowness or querulousness of an old man, he throws all his energy into the old work which he has pursued so long,—that of giving spiritual comfort to his fellow-countrymen. The lofty enthusiasm that has always marked his career burns just as warm now as ever; it seems to burn even more clear, because in this one of the last utterances of the old poet he calls things by their everyday names rather than by their symbols, and, in his eagerness to be explicit, has no leisure for those condensed generalizations which have proved a stumbling-block to many, but to those who relished his style an addition to their pleasure in his work."

THE Graphic points out some amusing blunders of the old masters: "Many of the old masters made amusing and curious blunders in their works. Tintoret represented the 'Israelites Gathering Manna,' armed with guns. Cigoli painted 'the aged Simeon at the circumcision of Christ with a pair of spectacles on his nose; and Rubens committed the same error in his famous picture of 'Mary Anointing the Feet of Christ.' In a picture of 'Christ Healing the Sick,' by Verrio, the spectators are represented as wearing periwigs on their heads. Albert Durer painted the expulsion of Adam and Eve from the Garden of Eden by an angel in a flounced dress. The same artist, in a picture of 'Peter Denying Christ,' introduces a Roman soldier smoking a German pipe. A Flemish picture of the wise men worshipping the infant Christ has one of them depicted in a large white surplice and in boots and spurs. In this incongruous dress, he is represented in the act of presenting the child with a model of a Dutch man-of-war. An artist of the same school, in a painting of Abraham offering up his son Isaac, the patriarch, instead of using a knife as described in the Scriptures, is holding a blunderbuss to the head of Isaac. Bellini has pictured the virgin and child in the act of listening to a violin; in another picture, he has drawn King David playing a harp at the marriage of Christ with St. Catherine. In a French picture of the 'Last Supper,' the table is ornamented with tumbler filled with cigar-lighters. The crowning blunder is shown in a painting of the Garden of Eden, in which Adam and Eve are represented in all their primitive simplicity, while in the immediate background appears a hunter in a modern sporting-suit, in the act of shooting ducks with a gun."

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE OF AMERICA.

OFFICERS.

President.
FRANCIS E. ABBOT.	Boston, Mass.
Vice-Presidents.
HON. E. P. HURLBUT.	Albany, N. Y.
HON. SAMUEL E. REWALL.	Boston, Mass.
HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES.	St. Louis, Mo.
HON. HENRY BOOTH.	Chicago, Ill.
HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN.	Irrington, Ind.
HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT.	Boston, Mass.
MR. WM. J. POTTER.	New Bedford, Mass.
MR. R. P. HALLOWELL.	Boston, Mass.
MR. JAMES PARTON.	Newburyport, Mass.
MR. F. SCHUBERT.	San Francisco, Cal.
MR. ABRAHAM PAYNE.	Providence, R. I.
REV. H. J. SAVAGE.	Boston, Mass.
RABBI B. FELSENTHAL.	Chicago, Ill.
REV. W. H. SPENCER.	Sparta, Wis.
MR. SAMUEL L. HILL.	Florence, Mass.
MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH.	Detroit, Mich.
MR. KARL HEINZEN.	Editor of "Der Pioneer," Boston.
MR. HORACE SEAYRE.	Editor of the "Investigator," Boston.
RABBI ISAAC M. WISE.	Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
MR. MORITZ ELLINGER.	Editor of "Jewish Times," New York.
REV. ROBERT COLLYER.	Chicago, Ill.
COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.	Peoria, Ill.
DR. T. L. BROWN.	Binghamton, N. Y.
HON. E. S. MCCORMICK.	Franklin, Pa.
EDWARD F. W. EVANS.	Mount Lebanon, N. Y.
MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON.	New York City.
MRS. AMY POST.	Rochester, N. Y.
MRS. ELIZABETH ADY STANTON.	Tenney, N. Y.
MISS SALLIE HOLLEY.	Leitersburg, Va.
JOSEPH McDONOUGH.	Albany, N. Y.
RABBI MAX SCHLESINGER.	Albany, N. Y.

Secretary.
W. H. HAMLEN.	221 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.
Assistant Secretary.
MISS JANE P. TITCOMB.	142 Chandler St., Boston.
Treasurer.
J. A. J. WILCOX.	8 Pemberton Square, Boston.
Board of Directors.
J. A. J. WILCOX.	W. H. HAMLEN.
F. E. ABBOT.	C. D. B. MILLS.
Executive Committee.

Alabama	J. H. HALLEY, Selma.
Arkansas	JOHN A. HENNS, Monticello.
California	J. L. HATCH, San Francisco.
Colorado	DAVID T. BEALS, Grenada.
Connecticut	GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
Delaware	JOSEPH D. GORLE, Greenville.
Florida	T. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprise.
Georgia	DR. A. A. BELL, Madison.
Illinois	DR. A. G. HUMPHREY, Galesburg.
Indiana	N. D. WATKINS, Xenia.
Iowa	J. O. MICHELER, Adair.
Kansas	JOHN FARRSWORTH, Fort Scott.
Kentucky	B. E. CLARK, Wilmore.
Lebanon	EMERSON BENTLEY, New Orleans.
Massachusetts	DR. W. H. BROWN, Bangor.
Michigan	J. S. RUSSELL, New Market.
Minnesota	W. H. SAYWARD, Boston.
Missouri	KARL SCHMIDT, Detroit.
Montana	J. B. BASSETT, Minneapolis.
Nebraska	R. PETERSON, St. Louis.
Nevada	W. E. COPELAND, Lincoln.
New Hampshire	V. G. BARRETT, White Rock.
New Jersey	WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
New York	FRANCIS W. O'NEIL, Passaic.
North Carolina	C. D. B. MILLS (Chairman), Syracuse.
Ohio	J. W. THORNTON, Warren.
Oregon	E. D. STARR, Cleveland.
Pennsylvania	SAMUEL COLE, Humboldt Basin.
Rhode Island	G. W. BALDWIN, Lincolnville.
South Carolina	GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
Tennessee	P. W. FULLER, Columbus.
Texas	DR. E. B. PRICE, Chattanooga.
Vermont	DR. L. J. RUSSELL, Harrisville.
Virginia	E. L. HAUSER, North Bennington.
West Virginia	L. SPAULDING, Norfolk.
Wisconsin	DR. A. M. DENT, Waton.
Wyoming	ROBERT C. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
District of Columbia	D. P. WILCOX, Tancton.
Wyoming	W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
	W. FERGUSON, Provo City.
	NORMAN S. PORTER.

Finance Committee.
D. G. CRANDON, Chairman.	Chelsea, Mass.
MRS. SARAH B. OTIS.	127 Warren Avenue, Boston.
HARLAN P. HYDE.	231 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES

Chartered by the National Liberal League of America.

FLORENCE, Mass.—President, Seth Hunt; Secretary, Clarence E. Brown.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Florence Liberal League.
SYRACUSE, N. Y.—President, John W. Truesdell; Secretary, Mrs. Nettie C. Truesdell.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Onondaga County Liberal League.
ALBANY, N. Y.—President, Thomas J. Hennessey; Secretary, Thomas Dugan.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Albany Liberal Association.

N. B.—The above is an acknowledgment of the fact that a charter is due and will be sent as soon as possible. Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues originally chartered by the "National Liberal League" will receive charters from the "National Liberal League of America" without extra charge, if they send a certified copy of their vote to accept the following invitation:—

"Voted, That all Local Leagues that approve the formation of the National Liberal League of America are invited to dissolve their connection with the old League, and to join this League."

GENERAL SHARPE is quoted by the Kingston Freeman as telling this story concerning the recent army-meeting at Springfield: "Henry Ward Beecher was the orator and R. H. Stoddard the poet. Mr. Beecher arrived in the morning at the Massasoit House, and in the afternoon came Mr. Stoddard and his wife, who had ordered a new dress to attend the reception. The dress, of course, did not reach Mr. Stoddard's house until after his trunk had been packed and sent by the expressman to the cars. So when the poet entered the hall of the Massasoit House, he was struggling with an enormous paper-box containing the new robe with all its flounces and furbelows. 'Mr. Beecher,' said General McMahon, 'this is Mr. Stoddard, the poet.' 'Glad to see you, sir,' said Mr. Beecher; and then pointing at the box, he inquired: 'Is this your poem?' 'Part of it,' replied Mr. Stoddard. It is needless to remark that the question and the answer made lively laughter for a few moments."

CONSTITUTION

OF THE

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE OF AMERICA.

PREAMBLE.

WHEREAS, The Constitution of the United States, from beginning to end, in spirit and in letter, is framed in accordance with the principle of the total separation of Church and State; and the Treaty with Tripoli, signed by George Washington as a part of the supreme law of the land, declares emphatically that "the Government of the United States is not in any sense founded on the Christian religion"; and

WHEREAS, Notwithstanding these facts, the administration of the National Government, and the administrations and constitutions of the several State Governments, maintain numerous practical connections of the State with the Church, thereby violating the spirit of the United States Constitution, and the glorious traditions which dedicate this country exclusively to the natural rights of man; and

WHEREAS, The welfare and peace of the Republic, the equal religious rights and liberties of its citizens, and the most precious interests of civilization, alike require that all the political and educational institutions of the nation which are supported by taxation, should be more faithfully conformed to the spirit of its fundamental law;

Therefore, We, the Protesting Members of the Second Annual Congress of the National Liberal League, convened at Syracuse, N. Y., October 26 and 27, 1878, hereby associate ourselves together as a permanent organization, and adopt the following

CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.—The name of this association shall be "The National Liberal League of America," founded on the principles originally adopted by the Centennial Congress of Liberals at Philadelphia, July First to July Fourth, 1876.

General Object.

ARTICLE II.—The general object of the National Liberal League of America shall be to accomplish the TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to the end that equal rights in religion, genuine morality in politics, and freedom, virtue, and brotherhood in all human life, may be established, protected, and perpetuated.

Specific Objects.

ARTICLE III.—As means to the accomplishment of this general object, the specific objects of the National Liberal League of America shall be:—

1. To urge the adoption of such a "Religious Freedom Amendment" of the United States Constitution as shall effect the complete secularization of the Government in all its departments and institutions, State and National, and shall secure to every American citizen the full enjoyment of his opinions on the subject of religion, whatever they may be, without molestation, disability, or deprivation of any civil or political right.

2. To advocate the equitable taxation of church property; the total discontinuance of religious instruction and worship in the public schools; the repeal of all laws enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath; the cessation of all appropriations of public funds for religious institutions or purposes of any kind; the abolition of State-paid chaplaincies; the substitution of simple affirmation, under the pains and penalties of perjury, for the judicial oath; the non-appointment of religious fasts, festivals, and holidays by public authority; the practical establishment of simple morality and intelligence as the basis of purely secular government, and the adequate guarantee of public order, prosperity, and righteousness; and whatever other measures or principles may be necessary to the total separation of Church and State.

3. To promote the formation and multiplication of local auxiliary Liberal Leagues throughout the country, in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution, in order to institute combined and vigorous agitation for the adoption of the "Religious Freedom Amendment," and, pending its adoption, to secure through State and municipal action the accomplishment of the various special reforms above enumerated.

4. To defend through the courts, by the combined efforts and means of the liberals of the country, any American citizen whose equal religious rights are denied, or who is oppressed on account of any opinions he may have held or expressed on the subject of religion.

5. To promote, by all peaceable and orderly means, active propaganda of the great principles of religious liberty and equal rights, devotion to truth for its own sake, and universal brotherhood on the ground of a common humanity; more particularly, to establish a Liberal Lecture Bureau for the mutual benefit of hearers and lecturers, by which the formation of local liberal societies may be facilitated and stimulated, and by which liberal lecturers of sufficient ability and unblemished moral character, without the least discrimination on account of their religious opinions, may be encouraged, furnished with employment, and helped to devote themselves to the liberal cause.

6. In all other proper and practicable ways, to promote the final emancipation of the State from the control of the Church, and to foster the development of that natural intelligence and morality which constitute the necessary and all-sufficient basis of secular government.

Membership.

ARTICLE IV.—Any person who shall pay one dollar into the treasury shall be entitled to a certificate, signed by the President and Secretary, as an annual member of the National Liberal League of America.

Any person who shall pay twenty-five dollars or more into the treasury shall be entitled to a similar certificate as a life-member. All the persons present as members at the Centennial Congress of Liberals, at which the principles of this Constitution were originally adopted, and all the persons present at the meeting at which this Constitution was itself formally adopted, provided such persons give their names and addresses for this purpose to the Secretary, are hereby declared to be permanent or charter members of the National Liberal League of America.

Annual Congress.

ARTICLE V.—The Annual Congress of the National Liberal League of America shall be held at such time and place and with such sessions as the Board of Directors may announce; and public notice of the Congress shall be given at least one month previously. The first Annual Congress shall be [was] held in the year 1877. Other conventions of the League may be held at such places and times as the Board of Directors shall appoint.

All charter-members and life-members of the National Liberal League of America, and all duly accredited delegates from local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution, shall be entitled to seats and votes in the Annual Congress. Annual members of the National Liberal League of America shall be entitled to seats, but not to votes, in the Annual Congress.

Officers.

ARTICLE VI.—The officers of the National Liberal League of America shall be a President, six or more Vice-Presidents, a Secretary and Assistant Secretary, a Treasurer, a Board of Directors, an Executive Committee, and a Finance Committee. All these officers shall be elected at the Annual Congress, and shall hold their offices for one year, or until others are chosen in their stead. The Board of Directors shall have power to fill any office of the League that may be left or may become vacant before the meeting of the Annual Congress succeeding their own election.

President.

ARTICLE VII.—The President's duty shall be to preside at the Annual Congress and other conventions of the League, and at the meetings of the Board of Directors, and to countersign all orders upon the treasury duly drawn by the Secretary.

Secretaries.

ARTICLE VIII.—The Secretary's duty shall be to keep the records, complete lists of members, and other papers of the League, and also of the Board of Directors; to report promptly to the Board of Directors all facts communicated to him by the Secretaries of local auxiliary Leagues, and to prepare a careful condensation of the same for the Annual Congress; and to conduct such correspondence as usually pertains to his office. It shall be the duty of the Assistant Secretary to assist in this work under the Secretary's direction.

Treasurer.

ARTICLE IX.—The Treasurer, after giving security satisfactory to the Board of Directors, shall receive and hold all funds of the League, subject to orders duly drawn by the Secretary and countersigned by the President. He shall report the state of the finances of the League at every annual Congress, and oftener if required by the Board of Directors or Finance Committee; and upon the election of a successor, he shall deliver to him all the property of the League that he may hold.

Board of Directors.

ARTICLE X.—The President, Secretary, Treasurer, Chairman of the Executive Committee, and Chairman of the Finance Committee, shall constitute the Board of Directors, which shall be intrusted with the general management and control of the affairs of the League from year to year. They shall make a full report of their doings on the first day of each Annual Congress. All appropriations from the treasury shall be by vote of the Board of Directors.

Executive Committee.

ARTICLE XI.—The Executive Committee shall be composed of one member from each State and Territory of the Union, and shall act under the instructions of the Board of Directors. It shall be the duty of each member of the Executive Committee to select and associate with himself four other good citizens of his own State or Territory, as the Executive Sub-Committee for that State or Territory, and he shall be himself the Chairman of the same, and promptly report its organization to the Secretary of the National Liberal League of America. Each Sub-Committee shall appoint a Local Agent in as many of the cities and towns of its own State or Territory as possible. It shall be the duty of each Local Agent, with the help and cooperation of the State Sub-Committee, to organize, if possible, a local auxiliary Liberal League in his own city or town, to report its organization promptly to the Chairman of the State Sub-Committee, and to promote by its means the general objects of the National Liberal League of America.

The Chairman of the Executive Committee shall be elected as such by the Annual Congress, and shall be ex officio a member of the Board of Directors.

Finance Committee.

ARTICLE XII.—The Finance Committee shall be composed of three members, elected by the Annual Congress. It shall be their duty to devise ways and means for raising such funds as may be needed for the successful prosecution of the work of the League, and to carry them into execution with the help of the Board of Directors.

The Chairman of the Finance Committee shall be elected as such by the Annual Congress, and shall be ex officio a member of the Board of Directors.

Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues.

ARTICLE XIII.—The Board of Directors shall have authority, as often as they receive a written application signed by ten or more persons and accompanied by ten dollars, to issue a charter for the formation of a local auxiliary Liberal League.

ARTICLE XIV.—Charters so issued shall contain Constitutions substantially similar to this Constitution, but adapted to local wants, providing for regular and frequent meetings to promote the mental and moral culture and general social enjoyment of the members, for Children's Fraternities to promote the welfare and happiness of their children, for Relief Committees to supply the needs of sick, poor, or distressed members, and in general for whatever may conduce to the private benefit as well as the public usefulness of the local Leagues.

ARTICLE XV.—Local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized under charters issued by the Board of Directors shall be absolutely independent in the administration of their own local affairs. The effect of their charters shall be simply to unite them in cordial fellowship and efficient cooperation of the freest kind with the National Liberal League of America, and with other local Leagues. All votes of the Annual Congress, and all communications of the Board of Directors, shall possess no more authority or influence over them than lies in the intrinsic wisdom of the words themselves.

ARTICLE XVI.—Every local auxiliary Liberal League organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution shall be entitled to send its President and Secretary and three other members as delegates to the Annual Congress.

ARTICLE XVII.—It shall be a special duty of the Secretary of each local auxiliary Liberal League to furnish the Secretary of the National Liberal League of America with a complete list of all the members with their post-office addresses in full, and a list of the officers, and also to furnish him with information of all important action of his own local League.

Amendments.

ARTICLE XVIII.—Amendments to this Constitution may be made at any Annual Congress of the National Liberal League of America by a three-fourths vote of the qualified members present. But no amendment shall be made, unless the proposed amendment shall have been published together with the required public notice of the Annual Congress which is to act upon it.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

Prof. Francis Newman

OF

"THE ATHEISTIC CONTROVERSY."

Under the title of "The Atheistic Controversy," Prof. Newman, in the Contemporary for October, reviews "A Candid Examination of Theism," by "Physicus." Of "Physicus," the Professor affirms: "He makes war on everything he entitles supernatural, and professes to fight under the banners of science. He plants his feet on solid earth, with 'that great and accurate thinker, John Stuart Mill'; esteems the axioms of theists 'illegitimate assumptions and begging of the question'; and has the ready answer, 'How do you prove it?' to everything that any of us may regard as a first principle." It is not surprising that in reply to such a challenge one of the illustrious adherents of theism (eminently a religion of faith) should brace himself for the encounter,—should on behalf of theism take up the glove so boldly thrown down, the "prove it" of "experiential philosophy."

As "Physicus" must be aware, Prof. Newman is a trained fencer with the weapons selected in this combat for proof or non-proof of Deity,—logic and metaphysics. Though Prof. Newman does not agree with Mill or with "Physicus" as to the basis for the establishment of first principles, "Physicus," says Newman, "deals with our (supposed) first principles as rudely as Mill." Axioms, according to the champion of theism, must underlie first principles; while Mill, he assures us, "had such hostility to axioms that he avowed that only by experience did he know that the whole was greater than a part, and that in a world in which he had no experience two and two might make five." Here, of course, we have "experiential philosophy" carried à l'outrance, to express that it believes in nothing it cannot verify. This school of thought makes the verification of a truth its test. Prof. Newman considers "that first principles should be based on axioms the truth of which has received the consent of the human race as their justification, as in the case of Euclid's twelfth axiom, the truth of which was apprehended solely through mind and not measurements." Certainly, measurements would never demonstrate the existence or non-existence of Deity from any point of view; nor can mind in the abstract be accepted as umpire to determine the universal axiom on which to base first principles in religious belief, as only in the exact sciences can this be taken as a test. Have theistic first principles, as here explained by their champion, the right to claim, as basis, axioms which have received the consent of the human race as justification of their truth? "Theists insist now as of old that these two axioms are legitimate. Man is not the highest being in the universe, and the Power which created him must have possessed all the human powers and more beside. From these axioms, we infer that the power which we call God is a mind and something more, or rather much more, independently from the argument of design. They corroborate one another. We appeal to human consent for the establishment of these axioms."

That is to say, "the consent of the human race" that theism is the correct appreciation of Deity? "Physicus" treats first principles founded on such axioms "with scornful contempt," says the Professor, and "demands proof thereof." We certainly agree with our author when he affirms that "the abyss between theists and agnostics [or atheists, as he adds] is deeper than any doctrine of theism. We differ on metaphysics and logic."

Evidently, the metaphysics of theology and that of experiential philosophy is not the same science, though we do not feel sure this is a true explanation of the difference. "Through the non-cultivation of metaphysics in the spiritual school for at least half a century in England, the atheist has great facility of dictating and passing as current his own metaphysics. Hence, by a single surreptitious axiom which makes our five senses our only trustworthy informants he can explode theistic belief as an absurdity." Then, in this case, there are metaphysics common to theism and not so to atheism? This is indeed to make the solid ground tremble beneath one's feet.

To our thinking, the entire controversy hinges on this: whether first principles to be logical must be based on verifiable or unverifiable positions; whether on axioms depending for justification of their truth on the consent of the human race, or on the established results of experience. As opposed to what he considers the postulates of theism, "Physicus," maintains,—"There can no longer be any greater doubt that the existence of a God is wholly unnecessary to explain any of the phenomena of the universe than there is that if I let go of my pen it will fall upon the table." "Physicus" concludes that the doctrine of the "persistence of force" renders the Deity of theism and theology generally a superfluous power in creation, and no doubt in so doing ranks himself as a disciple of Laplace, who said, after his famous explanation of the cosmos and all its wondrous workings, "Dieu est une hypothèse dont je n'ai pas besoin." A sentiment which another great French savant thus reads: "Laplace parlait ainsi du Dieu personnel de qui l'on dit qu'il a créé le monde et qu'il le gouverne. Mais dans ce grand nom de Dieu il est permis d'imaginer de placer une idée différente et non moins grande assurément." Different, indeed, and not less grand. A Deity the omnipotence of which is not "necessary to limit." A Deity to which the epithet "Almighty" does not seem "improper, misleading, and unjustified, a mere exaggeration," as Prof. Newman holds, "of poetry and uncritical adoration." A Deity which, by those who apprehend the grandeur and sublimity of its nature, is termed "La loi primordiale et finale, la loi suprême, la loi des lois."

Whether "Physicus" associates anything of divine with the power which, according to him, "suffices to explain all the phenomena of the universe" we do not clearly gather. But call it what one will, to the human mind incapable of originating or explaining whence such came or how it acts, it is "Deity"; this power which still to the very princes of science remains a mystery; of which Prof. Tyndall says, "I dare not call it a mind, and I refuse to call it a cause." This same "force" which necessitates the falling of the pen from the relaxed grasp of "Physicus" also regulates all those marvels implied in the word gravitation, a power which, when it burst upon him in all its wondrous possibilities and actualities, Newton rightly termed divine. Divine according to the interpretation of Prof. Newman? "That God had invested matter with the power of gravitation," we cannot determine. It is, however, held that "the Principia went to show that, given in matter the force and law of gravitation and the laws of motion, there needed no artificer now to conduct the solar system." In fact, as all devout students of Nature have affirmed, from the infancy of the Greek scientific school down to this nineteenth century, when we can point to our own "Democritus" and "Lucretius," "the infinity of forms under which matter appears was not imposed upon it by an external artificer"; as, in the words of Giordano Bruno, "matter by its intrinsic force and virtue brings forth all these forms which from the lowest develop into the highest," till "the ascidian becomes man." However, to theism as explained by its present champion, this is blank atheism, as Prof. Newman says: "The argument from design, if it be not wholly fallacious, proves mind in the universe. Of course, it is only from experience of our own minds that we have such a word as mind, or can attribute mind to another. In so far, reflection on our own mind is needed, if we are to discern design and a designer." This can bear but one explanation; namely, that, as all psychologists allow, we can only argue from the known to the unknown; we must judge the mind of God the designer from what we know of the human mind. We cannot follow the discussion carried on as to the "mind of God," and the possibility of the human mind to conceive of what "Physicus" terms "the unknowable" or the "inconceivable existent"; whether "time had a beginning"; or as to that "past eternity" which, according to Herbert Spencer and "Physicus," "constitutes a direct contradiction and confutation of theism."

This contest of able minds on abstract problems not capable of defining, we leave our readers to explore in the Contemporary. Our own summing up of the matter is that no satisfaction can accrue from this discussion as to the logical basis of theism and agnosticism, as these combatants cannot agree on the nature of the axioms that should underlie first principles. For while "Physicus," following his master, John Stuart Mill, fiercely demands of theism, "What is your omnipotent, omniscient, good, merciful Heavenly Father about, that half creation groans in agony, the one-half preying on the other, and enjoying life at the expense of all that makes life worth having to that other? the only answer he receives in solution of this fearful mystery is, 'that the God of theism is limited in power; that he should not be called omnipotent, but wise, as the task of wisdom is to overcome difficulties,'—the difficulties, namely, 'of reconciling the maintenance of strict, unchangeable laws of Nature and the free will of man, with the general well-being of the world.'" How, we would ask, can this view of Deity satisfy those who can worship nothing less than perfection? How can the reply to such a statement of theism be other than in the well-known words of Epicurus, "Ou Dieu veut ôter le mal de ce monde et ne le peut; ou il le peut et ne le veut pas." "Against this rocher inébranlable," says Voltaire, "thousands of learned theologians and savans have bent their bows in vain, beneath whose shelter all atheists have taken refuge." And on this account specially, we take exception to the definition of Deity as here set forth by the champion of theism; for, but limit its power, and to the human mind there is no more either of belief in it or reverence for it.

Our own escape out of this quagmire of theological conception concerning Deity, free will, and necessitarianism is by following on the lines of that philosophic conception of the problem of evil which maintains that "the injustice and misfortune incidental to this life are solely the work of man; that, as he is king of the universe, it is by an abuse of his liberty in the choice between good and evil that the latter prevails in his kingdom." In view of the theistic as well as Christian argument "that evil is permitted to abound by an infinitely wise and good Providence," M. Alexandre Weill demands, "What is the meaning of the word progress? What use is it for man to combat these things, if in their nature they are essential to humanity? Why struggle to abolish injustice, brutal force, the law that might is right,—in fact, the sum total of evil, if it is the work, designedly, of the Creator?" We certainly indorse this reading of "the enigma of evil," which every one born into the world might help to abate, would he, as a unit of the great human family, remember that as surely as the sun rises and sets on our good or evil deeds, it is an immutable law that "le bien produit toujours le bien, et le mal engendre le mal."

The grand idea of perfecting one's own nature morally and physically, that thereby we may assure the perfecting of humanity, is the key-note of the teaching of the great Hindu and Chinese sages. Confucius sums up the whole matter in these terse lines: "Renouvelle toi chaque jour; faites le de nouveau, et toujours encore." And in place of the "divine Providence" of theology, let us commend the study of this ideal. "Le parfait, le vrai dégagé de tout mélange est la loi du ciel. La perfection on le perfectionnement, qui consiste à employer tous ses efforts pour découvrir la loi celeste, le vrai principe du mandat du ciel, est la loi de l'homme. Celui qui tend constamment à son perfectionnement est le sage qui sait distinguer le bien du mal, qui choisit le bien et s'y attache fortement pour ne jamais le perdre."*

M. Alexandre Weill also claims these ethics of Confucius as the essence of the Mosiac philosophy. And unless Christianity and theism can present a higher conception of Deity than is traced for us under the grand figure of Justice, immutable and incorruptible, they must mutually consent to stand on that lower level, the failure to harmonize man's highest aspirations towards perfection with his intellectual and rational instincts.

From this study of "The Atheistic Controversy,"—the controversy on "truths that never can be proved,"—we turn to Bunson's fine expression on such themes: "What were the first questions that posed mankind? Exactly those which pose him to-day. The grandest, the most sublime, the most difficult, of all which still make themselves heard above the tumults of earth. Whence comes this universe? Why was creation at all? Whence came it? Whither goes it? Who made the light? Who made the night? In nearly the same terms, this inextinguishable curiosity is found expressed in the Vedas of the Hindu, in the Zend Avesta of the Medes, and the Eddas of the Scandinavian. Now, as then, man seeks on the face of Nature the traces of her vanished God."

LONDON, October, 1878.

A REVISED SCRIPTURE.

THE BIBLE OF TO-DAY. By John W. Chadwick. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons.

This volume makes no pretension to independent research or original learning. It merely aims to present, in compact and solid form, the results in biblical criticism reached by the "liberal" school of thinkers, especially summarizing the conclusions of what is known as the Dutch school, at the head of which stands Dr. Abram Kuenen, Professor of Theology at the University of Leyden. The book is the more valuable for being a compilation; for the critics whose conclusions it reports are among the most distinguished for learning and sagacity; their works are but little known, and until they are more widely read and understood than they are, any fresh studies would be out of time and place.

In a modest preface, Mr. Chadwick remarks that "those who have kept abreast of modern critical studies (their name is legion in the most Orthodox circles) must be aware that these results are almost without exception those which have been reached by many scholars of unimpeachable Orthodoxy." This statement is in substance true. That is to say, a few scholars of unimpeachable Orthodoxy have reached the results embodied in Mr. Chadwick's volume. But that legions of people in the most Orthodox circles are aware of this fact, we cannot believe. On the contrary, we think it unlikely that any outside the ranks of scholars, or that more than a comparatively few outside the ranks of "liberal" scholars, are acquainted with them. The very names of the writers he alludes to as his authorities, Goldziher, Tiele, Knappert, Muir, Kelm, Reville, will sound strange in the common ear. In this country, very few of the lality bestow attention on books of this description; and the clergy, being chiefly preachers devoted to professional routine, read in the direction of accepted tradition, and keep within the confines of their sect. It is true that Prof. Robertson Smith, of Aberdeen, though holding heretical opinions in regard to the Pentateuch, could not be convicted of heresy by his local presbytery. But it is also true that the opinions were deemed heretical, and that vehement efforts were made to convict him. Dean Stanley finds himself secure in his ecclesiastical position, notwithstanding his breadth of doctrinal sympathy; and Benjamin Jowett maintains his position as Professor of Greek in the University of Oxford, in spite of opinions to the last degree unorthodox. But these gentlemen owe their security to the elasticity of the National Church rather than to the enlightenment of the religious community. They are not loved or approved of. Voices are loud against them. They are accused of disingenuousness and disloyalty. The evangelical churchmen of England inveigh bitterly against them, and they would be condemned by an overwhelming vote, if a vote could be taken. Their opinions are abhorred, simply because the grounds of them are not understood. It were a poor compliment to pay to the popular clergy, to suppose them familiar with these views, and at the same time hot in their opposition to those who profess them.

*Quatre Livres de Philosophie Morale et Politique de la Chine. (M. G. Panthier.)

The preface of Mr. Chadwick's book contains a list of the important works consulted and relied on for his conclusions. Deservedly, he ranks high Baur's Paulus, but he makes no mention of a volume by Baur quite as important, Die Kanonische Evangelien, a book which embodies the remarkable studies first published in successive numbers of the Theologische Jahrbücher. We are more surprised at his reference to the essays of Mr. Matthew Arnold, Literature and Dogma, God and the Bible, etc. Mr. Arnold is a cunning scribe, an accomplished man of letters, a delicate critic of the forms of literary art; but as a biblical scholar he is of no reputation. His volumes on these subjects are clever and interesting, valuable, too, as studies in contemporaneous speculation; but as contributions to knowledge they are without worth. We respect his judgment on the literary merits of the Fourth Gospel, even when he is almost alone in declaring them to be "almost inappreciable"; but his opinion of the genuineness of that gospel is of no weight whatever against Hilgenfeld or Reuss, to say nothing of Baur. He is not to be mentioned the same day with Reville, Nicolas, or Kuenen. Mr. Chadwick really weakens the authority of his conclusions by appealing to such an authority.

And this is a pity; for the conclusions are valuable, and his way of putting them is clear, candid, and convincing. He has studied hard and sat longest at the feet of the ablest of his teachers, pondering on their words, comparing them with one another, and, when required, deciding between them with intelligence. His book conveys the solid results of a very laborious and thoroughly competent research, conducted by master minds. Ewald, Baur, Zeller, among the older men; Reville, Nicolas, Kuenen, among the more recent, are authorities. Their conclusions, no doubt, are, in some respects, open to question. In important respects they are questioned. But they deserve respectful consideration; and he renders a great service who reports them accurately. To pronounce a critical opinion on the validity of these conclusions would be out of place in a notice of Mr. Chadwick's book. We have not room even to describe or enumerate them. Two or three samples, however, must be given to illustrate their character. In regard to the Old Testament, the most prominent general feature of the criticism is the complete rearrangement of the writings, the consequent shiftings of dates, the incidental revision of the arguments respecting the authority, genuineness, and composition of the separate documents, and the inevitable reconstruction of the entire Hebrew history, literary, political, moral, and religious. The assignment of the first place to the prophetic books, making them the bed-rock, the hard-pan, on which the whole structure of Church and State rested, compels a reconsideration of the whole of Israel's case; and the assignment of these writings to so late a period as eight hundred years before Christ, at the earliest, compresses the history into much less than half the space originally allowed, while it ascribes the shaping of ideas and institutions to local causes and the action of motives quite other than spiritual. Thus, the very groundwork of the accepted theories is removed; the "first principles" are shaken by revolution.

The shock is felt in the region of the New Testament and of primitive Christianity. The ideas that shaped the expectations and dictated the literature of the age of Jesus, his disciples, and apostles are set in new positions. The New Testament literature is arranged according to new methods. The Gospels are scrutinized with fresh eyes. The Epistles take their place under the direction of a different authority. The reconstruction is thorough. The old arguments are not so much as mentioned; the old explanations are passed by without notice; the old discussions are regarded as obsolete. New criteria of judgment are set up; writings are arranged according to the order suggested by ideas, no longer according to the order suggested by tradition. The unguineness of the Gospels, as they stand, is conceded; the authorship of the Epistles is decided or left doubtful, according to the type of doctrine which they represent. The "Gospel of John" becomes a "dogmatic exposition of a theological conception," published about the year 140. The "Acts of the Apostles" is "a theological romance with a set purpose." The Christ of Paul was "an ideal conception, evolved from his own feeling and imagination, and taking on new powers and attributes, from year to year, to suit each new emergency." As to the great apostle's witness to the resurrection of Jesus, the result of the new criticism is that "he puts his own vision of Jesus, years after his death, exactly on a level with his previous appearances; or rather that he puts his previous appearances exactly on a level with his own vision,"—a demonstration which might have been sufficient for Paul, but can hardly be satisfactory to a modern inquirer.

Mr. Chadwick is right in his conjecture that such conclusions will be astonishing, if not offensive, to people of conventional opinions. He, however, is not responsible for them. Objectors must smite his masters, not him. He has performed his task as expositor with carefulness, calmness, and dignity. His pages are free from exaggeration; and, while the reader is never left in uncertainty as to the direction of his own sympathies, no expression is given to his theological or critical antipathies. The style is clear, compact, vital. Plainly, the writer enjoyed his task. Evidences of a bright, quick, active, sympathetic intelligence are everywhere present: flashes of wit illuminate the chapters. Mr. Chadwick has shown himself simply capable of writing admirable books of his own. It is the more remarkable that he succeeds so well in interpreting the thoughts of others. This book is, so far as we know, the only book of the kind in existence in any language. It is full of curious information. It is comprehensive and detailed, literal, and at the same time suggestive. The chronological tables are exceedingly useful for reference. An index would be an assistance to the seeker for separate items. But the arrangement is so clear and the table of contents so minute that really no index is required. For the rest, an index might prevent hasty readers from diligently perusing the entire volume, which would be a misfortune.—O. B. Frothingham, in the Library Table, Nov. 9.

JOSEPH COOK ON THE SYRACUSE CONGRESS.

PRELUDE TO HIS ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTEENTH LECTURE, BOSTON, NOV. 18.

The Rev. Joseph Cook continued his discussion of great social questions of the day, on Monday. The subject of his prelude was the present attitude of the Free Religionists of the country. His address included a review of the proceedings of the Syracuse Convention of the National Free Religious Association in regard to the postal laws relating to the circulation of infamous literature through the mails. Upon this matter, he spoke with his usual force and fearlessness, and his expressions were heartily indorsed by his audience.

On current events, Mr. Cook said:—

As the agent of the New York Society for the Suppression of Vice was engaged in the performance of his duties at Newark not many years ago, he was stabbed twice by a criminal who had been making an infamous use of the mails under eighteen different aliases and through fifteen post-offices. The second blow of the dagger laid open a great flesh wound in the face, severed four arteries, and came very near being fatal. (First annual report of the New York Society for the Suppression of Vice, p. 9.) It is with men of the type of this assassin that the majority of the National League of Free Religionists have now publicly struck hands, in demanding the total repeal of the laws which repress in the United States the most abominable traffic known to the leprous outlaws of the ghouls and ogres of the city slums. I am not speaking at random, nor in haste. Utterly incredible as the news may appear to excellent people who are slow to believe reports of ghastly crime, and too busy to attend to the obscure performances of infidel conventions, the following facts are all matters of painful public notoriety in Boston, and susceptible of the most explicit proof from the pages of the Free Religionist official publication which I hold in my hands.

1. A Free Religious infidel lecturer has lately been arrested in Boston and sent to Dedham jail, for making an immoral use of the mails.

2. A meeting in sympathy with this public criminal was held by Free Religionist infidels in Boston in Faneuil Hall.

3. At the National Convention of Free Religionist infidels at Syracuse in October, a large majority of the one hundred and thirty-eight representatives of cultured freethought present there elected a set of officers known to be in favor of the total repeal of the present United States laws against the immoral use of the mails.

4. A minority at this convention seceded, and formed a new National Liberal League, of which the object is to make the postal laws loose, rather than to repeal them, so far as they touch the topic of the distribution of infamous matter.

5. Men under indictment for crimes against the postal laws were prominent at the Syracuse Convention, and their sentiments are reflected in the action of the majority.

6. The lawlessness of the majority is officially denounced by the loose minority in terms too scathing to be publicly cited.

7. Official and unofficial authorities agree that the public language of the men and women representing the majority of the Free Religionist Infidel Convention of Syracuse was unreportably odious, immoral, and vile.

8. According to the official confession of the minority, therefore, the principal branch of the National League of Free Religionists is now in alliance with criminals of the most low and infamous type.

At Syracuse, the National Infidel League of Free Religionists, so far as their principal organization is concerned, transformed themselves into a national lepers' league or moral cancer-planters. [Applause.] There are several things that injure a man more than to cut his throat. An honorable daughter dead is mourned less than a daughter dishonored. I know a school of superb culture, a temple of sanctity, where three hundred young women are gathered under the very best religious influences and the loftiest educational incitements. I have wandered up and down the halls of the palatial building in which their instruction is given; I have admired the works of art there; and had occasion to study minutely the enthusiasms for art and social improvement and religious usefulness which fill that school, and vivify its lofty regard for intellectual culture. But this institution publishes no catalogue. Why? Go to the New York Society for the Suppression of Vice, to the Boston Society, or to the committees which have been organized to suppress vice at Providence and New Haven and Cincinnati and St. Louis and Chicago, and you will find that school catalogues are made the lattice-work through which moral lepers and assassins, secretly at night, under the cover of the mails, throw their poison into seminaries of all grades. It is a terrific sign of the times when shrewd men of affairs, conducting a great school, dare not publish a catalogue. The criminals whom the Free Religionist infidels encourage make this caution necessary. I show you the caution in actual exercise. Within twenty miles of Boston the resplendent school I have described stands in its stately park, and within fifty rods of this platform is a hall, the most honored in this city, where a meeting was held in sympathy with the Free Religionist criminal who is now in Dedham jail. The thoughts which these facts suggest cannot be publicly expressed, but if they did not incite to moral rage, our apathy would itself deserve to be smitten with thunderbolts.

Daniel Webster once found Faneuil Hall shut to himself and his political friends. A hundred signatures opened it last summer to sympathizers with a moral cancer-planter. All your reputable press was against the meeting. Boston, so far as she noticed any such gathering of apologists for a convicted criminal of the most infamous type, shuddered at it. This city believes in free speech and the right of assembly, but not in moral assassins in masks. Is it quite decent or safe to give the enemies of Boston an opportunity to injure its good name? Is freedom of speech to be carried so far that speech becomes so free that it could not be reported and sent through the mails without being actionable at law? It is evident, from the New York press and Syracuse journals, and from the testimony of this infidel paper which I hold in my hands, that the language of the defenders of the successful majority of Free Religionists at Syracuse was so infamous that it could not be reported, published, and sent through the mails without subjecting the newspapers thus publishing it to prosecution.

A small minority, less than a quarter, of the Syracuse Convention seceded from it, and protested against the action of the majority; and this minority thinks itself very virtuous because it wishes to have a little restriction put upon the immoral use of the mails. But, after all, what does even the seceding party want? The editor of the special organ of that party drew up and submitted to the proper committee a series of resolutions, and he prints them in columns now before me; and one of their first requirements is "that no indecencies of a merely incidental or occasional character, however reprehensible and deserving of public censure on moral or literary grounds, shall cause a forfeiture of the freedom of the press or constitute a just reason for legal prosecution or punishment." That is the style of law the minority wants,—a law with loop-holes in it large enough to drive a coach and four through. This same set of resolutions asks for "a new legislative provision requiring that the entire publication, for circulating which through the mails any person shall be prosecuted in the United States courts, shall be set forth in the indictment." Who does not see what these provisions mean?

There were two parties at Syracuse, this paper alleges,—one for repeal, and one for reform. A more accurate statement would be, that there were two parties there,—one for lawlessness, and one for looseness. [Applause.] There was a party there in favor of no law, and there was a party there in favor of a coach-and-four loop-hole law. I respect the remnants of virtue in this little minority. The editor of this paper says that when the minority resolved to secede, their action was a great and to him "unexpected" protest, and "filled him with awe." [Laughter.] The epic dignity with which the collisions between the petty factions of this small convention are described in this official sheet reminds one of Horace's description of the trip of the country mouse and the city mouse to Rome:—

"Jamque tenebat
Nox medium cœli spatium."
(Satires, Book II., vi.)

In language approvingly cited from the brave Syracuse Standard into this official organ of the Free Religionists (Nov. 7, 1878, p. 535), I read that "Rivers, of Boston, now resting under indictment for the sale of infamous literature, urged a square expression of the Congress in favor of his views. He wanted the United States authorities rebuked for what they had done. Wakeman, of New York, a supporter of Rivers, was more politic, and hesitated about giving the minority such open cause for disruption. He, and others who stood with him, feared the odium which would fall upon them if the minority should secede on the ground that they could not live with those who sustained and fostered the sale of infamous literature, and sought to repeal the laws making the sale a crime. Wakeman believed the majority had better make concession rather than be compelled to stand alone before the public; and hence the Committee on Resolutions fixed up a compromise that the postal-law question should not be touched by either party."

The scheme was that nothing should be said on the subject for another year; that is, that on this stupendous theme, this blazing matter of common morality and decency, a convention of the representatives of cultured freethought should not know its own mind for a year! A promising compromise was patched up on this precious basis; and then the majority, violating it, elected a board of officers, composed, according to the official statement, of men "known or believed to be strongly in favor of repeal, as opposed to reform, of the postal law of 1873." Thereupon, when a vote had been taken electing a president by the majority of seventy-eight votes, leaving only fifty-one to the man who represented the minority, the latter seceded, and thirty-four of them signed a protest. A few more names were obtained afterwards; and the result of all is, that there are now two Liberal National Leagues.

The local leagues which furnished the majority at Syracuse are scattered through many States, and their lecturers can be relied upon to teach the abominable doctrines of that majority. The evil of such inculcations is not a small one, and frankness concerning it will be justified by all thoughtful friends of moral order. At Toronto, not long since, and at Chicago, I met representatives of Free Religion distributing documents at the door of my lecture-halls. I have heard of them in St. Louis and in Cincinnati and in Rochester, Baltimore, Washington, and New York.

In this same official organ (Ibid., p. 536), I find language cited from the faithful Syracuse press that I dare not read. You would drive me out of the door yonder if I were to recite language that was uttered at Syracuse by Free Religionist women. "But one question arose for consideration, and that related exclusively to infamous literature. By persistent as well as quiet effort, a majority of the League was composed of free-lovers and infamous-literature defenders, and from first to last they were determined upon making a point in favor of its free circulation. Their remarks sometimes almost polluted the atmosphere of the opera house." The sense of what remains of this official extract is, that if Thomas Carlyle's advice concerning raw sceptics had been followed, and the majority had been covered under a glass bell, the atmosphere there would have caused them to perish in their own corruption. [Applause.]

God be thanked that behind this scheme of infidelity for the immoral use of the mails, there is, most significantly, little financial strength. It is officially stated (Ibid., p. 437) that the balance of money which will remain in the treasury after paying all bills had been "carefully gathered and husbanded for the cause of State secularization," and that it will now "be turned over to the cause of repeal,"—that is, of lawlessness. The Free Religionists have had an organization more than ten years. They have swept the Pacific Coast; they have officers at work in the Mississippi Valley; they have used skilful men as agents. Some of them have ability; I suppose some of them have wealth. But, after more than ten years of effort, sweeping the whole broad floor of this Union, there occurs this division, and the amount of plunder to be carried off amounts to "nearly $200." [Laughter.] God be thanked for this phenomenal imppecuniosity! [Laughter.]

Large sums are now required by the Societies of Boston and New York for the Suppression of Vice, and are called for by such men as Howard Crosby, Dr. William M. Taylor, Stephen H. Tyng, Jr., William E. Dodge, and Dr. John Hall. I might name in a similar connection a dozen of the prominent leaders of thought of the great metropolis and in Boston, and of all the religious creeds.

God has said that whoever offends one of his little ones, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck and he drowned in the depths of the sea. Is there no granite left in Massachusetts of the old-fashioned sort, out of which millstones can be made for the necks of cancer-planters? [Applause.]

Both these schismatic organizations, the majority and the minority, have presidents in Boston. I have in my hand the list of officers of both bodies, and I find that the chief of them are from this cultured city. They are nearly all men unknown to me; I do not know even the philosophical school-boy who edits this paper. [Laughter.] In the list of officers of the seceding Liberal League, we have the names of Mr. Frothingham, of New York, Mr. James Parton, of Newburyport, and Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll, of Peoria, Ill. The finance committee, composed of three members, is from Chelsea and Boston. This is the party of looseness, as opposed to that of lawlessness. This is the minority which, turning State's evidence, now denounces the majority, and so gives us at last official authority to proclaim as an indisputable historical fact that the word "Infamy" is written across the forehead of the majority of the Syracuse representatives of Free Religion on this continent. [Applause.]

Do but behold you poor and starved band,
And your fair show shall suck away their souls,
Leaving them but husks and shales of men.
There is not work enough for all our hands;
Scarce blood enough in all their sickly veins
To give our naked curtle-axes stain.

(Shakespeare, Henry V., act iv., scene 2.)

—Advertiser, Nov. 20.

A DOCTOR in Vermont kept missing his wood and set watch. As expected, it proved to be the work of a near neighbor, who soon appeared, and, carefully culling out all dry wood, started off with an armful. The doctor hastily gathered up an armful of green wood and followed, tugging as fast as he could; and just as the man threw down his armful, the doctor did the same, exclaiming: "There, you must burn green wood part of the time—I have to," and departed, leaving the thief to his own reflections.

A PROMISED AUTOBIOGRAPHY.

A rumor reaches us that Mr. Thomas Carlyle has determined to write an autobiography, and that he is already engaged in its preparation. This will be agreeable intelligence to a great number of readers,—to all who like remarkable books, and take pleasure as well as find profit in studying the characters of remarkable men. After many years spent in elucidating the mysteries and the morals of hero-worship, Mr. Carlyle has become his own hero, and in his own original way will tell us the story of his struggles and experiences, his successes and failures, since he left the little village of Ecclefechan, and began to study men, to write books, and to do desperate battle against shams. We shall know why he refused to become a clergyman; what chance directed him to the study of the German literature and language; and how he became to be what he calls himself in his copyright petition to Parliament, "a writer of books," beginning with a translation of Legendre's Geometry. There will be something said of the Life of Schiller; of the translation of Wilhelm Meister; of the long residence among the hills and morasses of Craigenputtock; of the sound, honest work done for the Edinburgh Review; of the Sartor Resartus, which in 1833 so astonished the readers of Fraser's Magazine,—the wonderful philosophy of Diogenes Teufelsdröckh. Perhaps we shall be told how it was that the startling article on "Characteristics" so suddenly terminated his connection with the Edinburgh Review. We cannot venture to predict the method which Mr. Carlyle will adopt in telling his story, but we may be sure that it will be truthfully and attractively told. Indeed, so fascinating a work may be anticipated that it would be a real disappointment to learn that the rumor is without foundation. If written veraciously, and Mr. Carlyle could not possibly write in any other way, autobiography is the most desirable and valuable and agreeable form in which the events of a man's life can be recorded. Indeed, it is so inherently and naturally entertaining that the lives even of ignorant men, no matter how clumsily they may be put together, hardly ever weary us. There are scores of religious autobiographies, for instance, which hold our attention by their obvious and passionate sincerity, although they may be void altogether of literary merit. There are lives of men written by themselves which are one long confession of dishonesty and selfishness, made with such a frankness that we may almost regard their authors as under some superior influence. There are the Memoirs of Bubb Doddington (Lord Melcomb Regis), a book valuable, inasmuch as it proves that a man may be absolutely void of moral sense, as some are deficient in the sense of smell. Really, though Bubb was a peer of the realm, his career hardly seems a whit more respectable than that of Stephen Burroughs, the Connecticut counterfeiter, who also added his autobiography to the literature of the language. A precious scamp he was, and an odd and entertaining book he gave to the world.

Generally speaking, a man knows much more of his own life than anybody else can possibly know of it. Nobody can write its history so well as he can. Usually, the autobiographer, with a charming naïveté, takes the whole world into his confidence, and prattles as confidently of his disreputable as of his honorable doings. The Confessions of Rousseau afford an illustration of this; but the autobiography of Ben Franklin, before it was tampered with by his editors, is a more pleasing one. The Memoirs of Alfieri have the same winning frankness. There is no book which gives us a more satisfactory insight into the mysteries of the German courts in the days of Frederick the Great than the autobiography of the Margravine of Bayreuth. The only work of any value which Gifford, the editor of the Quarterly Review, left behind was the story of his early life, when he was a cobbler's apprentice. Miss Martineau's autobiographic work is so clear and honest and good that we can only regret that she did not complete it. But we must not be tempted into a bibliography. A little reflection will recall to the reader's memory books of this kind numerous enough to fill the shelves of an ordinary library.

Though we may never have these promised volumes, there is a pleasure in forecasting their character and contents. We shall have the old style, which, rugged and uncouth as it may be, is still as much a style as Addison's or Macaulay's. We shall have something of the old cynicism or pessimism, or by whatever name it may be called. We may expect to learn something more of Edward Irving, of John Sterling, possibly of poor Leigh Hunt, and of how many more! We surely shall not miss that sincerity everywhere to be observed in the writings of Carlyle, and which atones for all his strange talk about Shams and Chimeras and Windbags; while here and there, scattered through the wilderness of words, will be little touches of idyllic pathos which will move the hardest of us to tears. Mr. Carlyle's disciples may be few; his admirers may not be critically judicious; but there is a vast circle of readers to whom he has brought profit and pleasure, and who will never weary of hearing the most individual man of his time, as he talks or even prosed of himself.—N. Y. Tribune.

SHORTLY BEFORE his departure for Europe, our poet-sculptor, William W. Story, sent to the World the following clever adaptation of Heine's Glueck and Unglueck:—

"Luck's the giddiest of all creatures.
Nor likes in one place long to stay;
She smooths the hair back from your features,
Kisses you quick—and runs away!
"Dame Ill-luck's in no such hurry,
Nor quick her close embrace she quits;
She says she's in no kind of hurry,
And sits upon your bed—and knits!"

Poetry.

THE NEW CHURCH DOCTRINE.

BY WILL CARLTON.

There's come a singular doctrine, Sue,
Into our church to-day;
These cur'us words are what the new
Young preacher had to say:
That literal everlastin' fire
Was mostly in our eye;
That sinners dead, if they desire,
Can get another try;
He doubted if a warmer clime
Than this world could be proved.
The little snip! I fear sometime
He'll get his doubts removed.
I've watched my duty, straight and true,
And tried to do it well;
Part of the time kept heaven in view,
An' part steered clear o' hell;
An' now half of this work is naught,
If I must list to him,
An' this 'ere devil I have fought
Was only just a whin.
Vain are the dangers I have braved,
The sacrifice they have cost;
For what fun is it to be saved,
If no one else is lost?
Just think! Suppose, when once I view
The heaven I've toiled to win,
A lot of unsaved sinners, too,
Comes walkin' grandly in.
An' looks at home, same as if they
Had read their titles clear,
An' looks at me as if to say,
"We're glad to see you here!"
As if to say, "While you have b'en
So fast to toe the mark,
We waited till it rained, an' then
Got tickets for the ark!"
Yet there would be some in that crowd
I'd rather like to see:
My boy Jack,—it must be allowed
There was no worse than he,—
I've always felt somewhat to blame,
In several different ways,
That he lay down on thorns o' shame
To end his boyhood's days;
An' I'd be willin' to endure,
If that the Lord thought best,
A minute's quite hot temperature,
To clasp him to my breast.
Old Captain Barnes' evil son,
With heterodoxy crammed,—
I used to think he'd be the one,
If any one was damned.
Still, when I saw a lot o' poor
That he had clothed and fed
Cry desolately round his door
As soon as he was dead,
There came a thought I couldn't control
That in some neutral land,
I'd like to meet that scorched-up soul,
An' shake it by the hand.
Poor Jennie Willis, with a cry
Of hopeless, sad distress,
Sank sudden down one night to die,
All in her ball-room dress.
She had a precious little while
To pack up an' away;
She even left her sweet, good smile,—
'Twas on the face next day;
Her soul went off unclothed by even
One stitch of saving grace.
How could she hope to go to heaven
An' start from such a place?
But once, when I lay sick an' weak,
She came and begged to stay;
She kissed my faded, wrinkled cheek,
She soothed my pain away;
She brought me sweet bouquets of flowers
As fresh as her young heart;
Through many long and tedious hours,
She played a Christian part;
An' ere I long will stand aroun'
The singing saints among,
I'll try to take some water down
To cool poor Jennie's tongue.
But tears can never quench my creed,
Nor smooth God's righteous frown,
Though all the preachers learn to read
Their Bibles upside down.
I hold mine right side up with care,
To shield my eyes from sin,
An' coax the Lord, with daily prayer,
To call poor wanderers in;
But if the sinners won't draw nigh,
An' take salvation's plan,
I'll have to stan' an' see 'em try
To dodge hell if they can. —N. Y. Tribune.

CASH RECEIPTS.

N.B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING NOVEMBER 23.
E. C. Darling, $1.60; A. Blun, $4; C. H. Preston, $1;
H. W. Brown, $3.20; W. H. Crowell, $4.40; Alex. Farquharson, $1.21; S. Brooke, $3.20; E. W. Weir, $26; O. Brayton, $5; American News Co., $19.50; R. Campbell, 10 cents;
J. D. James, 10 cents; E. W. Searing, 10 cents; Thomas Martin, $1; W. E. Coleman, $1.25; Dr. Jno. P. Atwater, $3.27; J. Fisher, 25 cents; J. E. Follett, $10; C. D. Child, $2.

The Index.

BOSTON, NOV. 28, 1878.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 28 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLSON OFFICE, No. 35 MONROE STREET; J. T. FURT, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH CARY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIZABETH WRIGHT, C. D. B. MILLS, W. D. LE SUEUR, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, JAMES E. OLIVER, Editorial Contributors.

IN THE STATE of New York, the property of every clergyman, whether in active pastoral charge or not, is, according to Attorney-General Schoonmaker, exempted from taxation to the amount of fifteen hundred dollars. On what grounds?

A WASHINGTON correspondent thus expresses the opinion of a disinterested and observant spectator: "I admire the stand you have taken on the 'obscenity' question. I regret to see so much loose thinking among radicals as the discussion of this question has developed. Some of the radical papers are no doubt largely to blame for this. I think that they are either reckless, or do not appreciate the responsibility of their calling. They let their antagonisms to the churches sometimes drive them to absurd extremes, without regard to whether their utterances have a tendency to lower or elevate the tone of public morality."

WHAT A refined lady who was present at the Syracuse Congress thought of the "remarks" there made by the majority, is expressed in the following clipping from the Syracuse Journal of October 31: "We take the following opinion of the proceedings of the Congress of the National League, which met in this city recently, from the Fayetteville Recorder, and assume that it was written by a lady of that village who has a national reputation as an able and earnest advocate of the rights of women:—

"What it assembled for is more than we can imagine. The avowed object of the League is to secure the entire separation of Church and State. Just exactly what this means, we don't know. The two days' session of the League was devoted almost entirely to the discussion of the obscenity question. It was certainly a surprise to us to see so large an assemblage of apparently intelligent, educated men laboring so strenuously to carry an immoral project, and still more wonderful was it to see equally well-educated and intelligent women lending their efforts in the same direction. While the advocates of the repeal of the postal law of 1873 claimed that their only aim was to secure the inviolability of the mails and the freedom of the press, and repudiated sympathy with free-lovelism, yet it was only too evident that this doctrine was predominant in their minds. The entire movement was in the interest of the author of Cupid's Yokes, and the publishers of works of similar character. It is creditable to the seceders that they gave so marked a disapproval of the project. The attempt to give the endorsement of the League to the circulation of obscene literature will keep thousands aloof from any connection therewith. The American people will never be educated to regard the marriage ceremony as a farce, or consent to the introduction of immoral books into their families. Free-lovelism is a heresy that an intelligent community will brand with the ignominy it deserves. Intelligence, even, is hardly requisite to stamp it with utter disfavor. The natural instinct of a pure mind, though uneducated, will revolt at the monstrous proposition that would disrupt families, surround the home circle with libertines, and destroy the purity of loved ones. In scanning the intelligent features of the members of the League, we were amazed at the effrontery with which many of their owners advocated a heresy designed to subvert public morals. That fathers and mothers could lend their aid in advocacy of such rank immorality, and at the same time claim purity and decency as guiding stars, is an enigma we are wholly unable to solve. We attended the Congress with the desire and expectation of receiving some enlightenment regarding its object; some advanced ideas in liberality; some lessons, from educated minds, upon which we could ponder; some new facts or theories we could compare with old teachings. We left thoroughly disgusted with the entire proceedings, and the mental expression, if that is liberalism, we want none of it."

JOSEPH COOK AS "DEVIL'S ADVOCATE."

Since the days of Pope Benedict XIV. the Curia of Rome, in deciding on the claims urged in behalf of new candidates for the honors of canonization (the ceremony by which deceased persons are ranked in the catalogue of the "saints"), has been in the habit of appointing an advocatus diaboli, or "devil's advocate," whose duty it is to sift these claims with the utmost severity, and advance everything he can to the discredit of the candidate. His duty does not require him to ascertain beforehand the truth of all the charges he brings against the deceased, but simply to lay them before the regular tribunal, to be adjudged true or false according to the evidence.

Rev. Joseph Cook, the personage who performs on the stage of Tremont Temple in the character of "The Monday Lectureship," saw fit to play the part of "devil's advocate" before the tribunal of public opinion, with regard to the claims of the two National Liberal Leagues to public confidence. If this tribunal were so constituted as certainly to administer justice by ensuring a fair hearing of both sides, there would be no need to comment on the nature of his performance; the untruthfulness of most of his charges could then be readily exposed, and real justice meted out to the candidates for public regard. But the contrary is the case. The "devil's advocate" had the floor all to himself; no opportunity was given to the parties interested, or to any of their friends, to present a counter-statement and expose the falsehoods unblushingly told. The audience was composed for the most part of persons utterly ignorant of the real facts of the case, and presumably prejudiced against the parties arraigned. The reporters for the press laid the ex parte statement of the "devil's advocate" before the public, unaccompanied by any statement on the other side; these reports have gone out to the country by the hundred thousand copies, and will of course produce the effect designed. In the light of these facts, every disinterested spectator will conclude that in this case the "devil's advocate" played with distinguished ability the part of his principal, and, since the word devl (δαιμόλιος) signifies "slanderer" or "calumniator," has qualified himself to receive the delighted commendations of the Master he served. We wish him joy of the honors he has earned from the "Father of Lies."

From the authorized report of the address, revised by the lecturer himself, we extract in another part of this issue so much as relates to the Syracuse Congress. It is worth reading as one of the curiosities of Orthodox literature, illustrating as it does the "true inwardness" of the Orthodox body, which accepts Mr. Cook as one of its leading lights. But we propose to deal with it solely as a statement of facts, and first to point out three points in which it states what is in glaring contradiction of the facts.

1. The first point which must strike with astonishment the candid and well-informed reader is the systematic, intentional, and damaging confusion of the National Liberal League with the Free Religious Association, from beginning to end of the extract. Mr. Cook is perfectly well aware of the fact that these are two distinct organizations, having no connection with each other,—the latter having been organized at Boston in 1867, and the former at Philadelphia in 1876. He perfectly well knows that the "Free Religionists," as an organized body, have nothing to do with the National Liberal League, except as individuals in their private capacity have joined it as members; and that neither the organizations nor their respective constituencies are in the least degree, formally or morally, responsible for each other's doings.

Nevertheless, with full knowledge of the truth, Mr. Cook deliberately and wilfully undertakes to lay on the shoulders of the "Free Religionists" and the "Free Religious Association" moral responsibility for the collective action of the majority of the National Liberal League, and thereby overwhelm his religious opponents, not by fair discussion, but by public odium, disgrace, and shame. To accomplish this unscrupulous object, he uses means equally unscrupulous. Instead of referring to the Syracuse Congress as held by the National Liberal League, he sends forth to the public his description of it as a convention of the "National Free Religious Association," the "National League of Free Religionists," the "Free Religionist Infidel Convention," etc., etc. Not in a single instance, though he declares that he is "not speaking at random, nor in haste," but with the "official report" before him, does he tell the truth in this matter, even by accident.

Still worse than that, speaking of the unexpended balance in the treasury of the National Liberal League, he says: "The Free Religionists have had an organization more than ten years," i.e., the Free Religious Association, and then proceeds to speak of the League's balance as if it were that of the latter organization!

Moreover, he refers to Mr. E. H. Heywood as a "Free Religious infidel lecturer," to the Faneuil Hall meeting as "held by Free Religionist infidels," etc. All this is said in the light of full knowledge of the truth. We leave judgment upon it to be passed by the public conscience.

2. Mr. Cook dares to make this assertion: "It is evident from the New York press and Syracuse journals, and from the testimony of this infidel paper which I hold in my hands [exhibiting a copy of THE INDEX], that the language of the defenders of the successful majority of Free Religionists at Syracuse was so infamous that it could not be reported, published, and sent through the mails without subjecting the newspapers thus publishing it to prosecution."

With regard to THE INDEX, for which alone we can speak, we pronounce this utterly false. We have never said or intimated that the language of the majority was in any degree of the character above stated. From the Syracuse Standard we quoted an extract which, as we understand it, we considered no more severe than the strictest truth warranted, and in which it was said of the majority: "Their remarks [not language] sometimes almost polluted the atmosphere of the Opera House," etc. If it had occurred to us that the word "remarks" would have been imagined to mean the language in which the remarks were couched, we should have said at the time what we say now, that we heard no obscene or unreportable word from either side during the whole of the session of the Congress. This unequivocal statement is due in justice to the majority. Their "remarks" seemed to us at times sufficiently vile to justify every syllable that the extract from the Standard contains; as when, for instance, a woman—we spare her the publication of her name—rose in her place, rebuked Mr. H. L. Green for disclaiming the name of "free lover," and told him he ought to consider it a title of honor. "Remarks" such as that, especially from the mouth of a woman, abundantly justify what the Standard said; for the meaning beneath the language is the open advocacy of infamous and shameless immorality. But we wish to do justice to the majority and the minority alike; and we brand Mr. Cook's allegation as a slander of our opponents.

3. Mr. Cook declares that the object of the minority at Syracuse was "to make the postal laws loose, rather than to repeal them, so far as they touch the topic of the distribution of infamous matter." This every reader of THE INDEX knows to be false. The object was to make the postal laws precise, definite, and effective, instead of loose, dangerous, and self-destructive, as they now are, permitting as they do the punishment of men for promulgating mere theories, and thereby tending to create a public opinion which must inevitably make those laws a dead letter even for their legitimate objects. Mr. Cook must know that Anthony Comstock's absurd fanaticism, which not only makes him procure the imprisonment of mere social theorists as criminals, but also moves him to declare war on the historical paintings of artists of high reputation like Hans Makart on the ground that they are indecent, is doing more for the repeal of those laws than the utmost activity of all the repealers put together. The object of the minority was to confine the operation of the laws to their original and proper objects,—to protect the country from an infamous traffic, yet without violating in the least the rights of free thought or of legitimate art. The laws are shamefully "loose" as they are and as they have been administered, and the minority desired sincerely to render them strict and effective within their proper scope. To describe the party of "repeal" as that of "lawlessness" is certainly just, provided the inevitable practical results of the measure they all advocate, and not the motives of the better portion of them, are considered; but to describe the party of "reform" as that of "looseness" simply betrays Mr. Cook's own desire to retain the "looseness" of the laws as they are, for the purpose of suppressing and punishing men for the public expression of their opinions. The sober judgment of the country will not permanently sustain such a law as Mr. Cook would consider strict, which would punish free thought as a crime. What the minority seek in this matter is exactly what the overwhelming majority of the nation will ultimately approve and establish: namely, a postal law which shall protect intellectual liberty to the uttermost, yet at the same time prevent the malls from being made the instrumentality of a criminal traffic which debauches the young for the sake of gain.

Sooner or later the period of clear thinking and right purpose will arrive; and then neither the madness of "repeal" nor the intolerance of Orthodoxy will shape legislation on this subject. The National Liberal League of America represents the broad, comprehensive, all-sided wisdom which is fated at last to triumph over both. All the "looseness" in this case, whether logical or legislative, is to be found in the two fanatical extremes of "repeal" and Orthodoxy; and the people will not be long in finding it out.

There would be little utility in specifying further the misrepresentations of this reckless religious demagogue of Tremont Temple. "Devil's advocate" though he is, and an adept at his trade, with all the bling-gate of Dennis Kearney at his tongue's end, it is nevertheless the bitter truth he tells, and not the calumny, that stings. Disregard the sophomoric absurdity of his turgid and bombastic rhetoric, and ponder the hard and unpalatable fact at the core of this statement he makes: "It is with men of the type of this assassin that the majority of the National League... have now publicly struck hands in demanding the total repeal of the laws which repress in the United States the most abominable traffic known to the leprous outlawry of the ghouls and ogres of the city slums."

Is it not true that the vendors of really obscene literature desire the repeal of the postal law of 1873? Is it not true that the majority of the Syracuse Congress unmistakably announced to the public, by the election of a new Board of Directors unanimously in favor of the repeal of that law, that they desire the same thing? Is it not true that the National Liberal League has thus put itself at the head of the vilest class of criminals in the community, and made itself the public mouthpiece of their heart's desire? Is it not true that, in working for the repeal of that law, the members of the League, however opposed they may wish and think themselves to be to the circulation of obscene literature, are yet practically engaged in breaking down the law which the circulators of that literature know to be the most formidable obstacle of their trade?

To these questions we see not how any thinking man can give a negative answer. Yet, if a negative answer is the only true one, who shall dare to blame Joseph Cook or anybody else for pointing the finger of scorn at a liberalism which is capable of taking such a stand and doing such a task as that? What we said last week we repeat now: liberalism is on trial before the world. If the liberals of the United States, as a body, actively or passively acquiesce in the demand for "repeal" unambiguously made by the National Liberal League, when the opportunity stands easily open to them to sustain the demand for "reform" made by the National Liberal League of America,—or if, not being interested in the Liberal League at all, they yet neglect to make some other equally clear and emphatic protest against the madness of the hour,—they will lose all right to complain of the misrepresentations with which they will be overwhelmed, and the beginning of which they already see. Lack of the sturdy protesting spirit now will give Orthodoxy an unanswerable and stinging charge to bring against the moral influence of liberalism, and it will be most eagerly employed.

For the certainty of misrepresentation is one of the most obvious elements of the situation. It was to be expected. It cannot surprise any reasonable mind in the least. The general community have been taught by the churches to distrust profoundly the moral tendencies of all unorthodox thought; and thousands of ready tongues and pens will hasten to "improve the occasion." Believing as we do that genuine liberalism has a higher and purer, because a truer, morality to teach than that of the churches, we have always believed that liberals, as a class, are grossly misrepresented by being held up as either conscious or unconscious friends of immorality. But, we frankly confess, this belief will be not a little shaken, if they now either actively or passively second the demand for "repeal." They have been warned often and long enough as to the real character of that demand; they can no longer plead ignorance of the great controlling considerations of the issue. If, for any reasons whatever, they now fall into line behind those who have raised the banner of "repeal," the public will certainly judge them in accordance with the common principle of the law, that a man must be presumed to intend the consequences of his own acts. To keep up the senseless protestation of purity of motives when the question is of practical social results, is only to invite the derision of the public. And who can measure the disaster that will inevitably befall the liberal cause, when from all hands the taunt is thrown in the face of every inquirer by the churches that the liberals have "struck hands" with the vendors of vile literature in demanding total repeal of the most effective law against its circulation? The only possible way to prevent the disaster is to refuse the alliance to which they are now invited, and to take the ground of "reform."

We repeat—the only possible way. The present disgrace could never have been inflicted upon the liberal cause, had it not been for the abstention of the better class of liberals. The majority at Syracuse could have been easily outnumbered if this class had been a tenth part as active and determined in preventing the disgrace as the other class were in producing it. They were certainly warned in season. But they neglected the warning. Now it comes, not from a true and faithful friend, but from the bitterest and most unscrupulous of their enemies. Let it no longer be deplored, but heeded, even from the enemy's mouth. The mistake may yet be repaired. Shall the will to repair it be found wanting?

Liberals of America, we know that multitudes of you angrily resent our persistent warnings and urgent counsels; we know that other multitudes of you are impatient of them; we do not know that multitudes of you are grateful for them. Nevertheless, you have one true friend who dares to oppose his own party, when it is in the wrong, and who will speak the needed truth to the end, be the consequences to himself what they may. You can easily send him back to private life and stop the unwelcome voice. Do it if you please. But know well that to his dying day he will bear in his heart the proud remembrance that he would not follow the multitude to do wrong, but left behind him a record of which he had never need to be ashamed. He has now but one request: "Strike, but hear."

ANOTHER PROTEST.

E. W. Meddaugh, Esq., one of the most eminent members of the Michigan bar, who was a member of the commission of eighteen appointed by Governor Bagley, a few years ago, to revise the Constitution of that State, writes as follows, under date of Detroit, November 18: "I infer from your account of the proceedings at the Liberal League convention, at Syracuse, that I was reflected one of the Vice-Presidents of the old League. I respectfully decline the honor. The position taken by the majority on the issue that dismembered the League was, in my judgment, so plainly and radically wrong as to place those responsible for it among the worst enemies of true liberalism. A sufficient number of such friends would kill any cause. While I do not doubt the majority includes good, pure souls who were moved to the action by conviction, you may be assured that the real responsibility for it rests not with them, but with others who were possessed of and moved by the 'cheap commercial spirit,' and other considerations of even a lower order. Time will show this. The minority acted wisely and well in seceding and organizing a new League. We can afford to be beaten, to be crushed out of existence even, both as a League and personally, if only our cause remains just and pure; but with our cause tarnished, we cannot afford its triumphant success. Better a thousand times defeat on the platform of the new League than victory on that of the old."

MR. GREEN'S CARD.

Mr. Green sends us the following card for publication:—

EDITOR INDEX:—

Mr. C. D. B. Mills, in his recent editorial contribution to THE INDEX, says: "The committee on membership had been instructed by the convention to make out a roll of the members in attendance, and it was by neglect of their duty that it was not at hand." This is a misrepresentation, and I am confident, Mr. Abbot, you will allow me to correct it through THE INDEX. I was chairman of that committee, and Mr. D. G. Crandon was one of the members. Mr. Crandon was one of the old Board of Directors, and he informed the committee that a full list had been made out; and, as there were no contested seats, and no one was admitted to the hall except on tickets issued by the said Board, the committee decided unanimously to accept of the list as already perfected.

Mr. Abbot, if convenient, please show this card to Mr. Crandon before you print it, and get his endorsement of my statement.

H. L. GREEN.

We have shown the above to Mr. Crandon, as desired. He states that he did not say that "a full list had been made out"; and also that the committee held no meeting all together and did not "decide unanimously to accept" a list which had not been made out at all.

At the time when the vote was passed instructing the committee on membership to report a complete list, Mr. Crandon was absent from the hall, attending to the issuing of tickets to members who had not previously obtained them. No list could possibly have been made out beforehand, for this self evident reason. Mr. Green heard the resolution of instruction passed, of which Mr. Crandon at the time was not aware; and it was manifestly the chairman's duty to see that the resolution was obeyed.

THE ALBANY LEAGUE.

ALBANY, N. Y., Nov. 18, 1878.

F. E. ABBOT, Esq.:

Dear Sir,—At a recent meeting of our League, the report of the delegates to the Syracuse Congress, setting forth their reasons for withdrawing from the hall and their subsequent action in participating in the formation of a new League, was submitted.

At the request of the League, I hereby inform you that the action of our delegates has been sustained, and you are at liberty to consider the "Albany Liberal Association" an auxiliary of your League; and we trust that for the future we shall be hampered with nothing that is not laid down in the declaration of principles.

Yours very truly,

THOS. DUGAN, Sec'y.

Communications.

ÆSTHETIC SENSE OF ANIMALS.

(CONCLUDED.)

NO. III.

BY WILEY BRITTON, WASHINGTON, D. C.

It may be suspected, too, that form and carriage of the body, as well as brilliant plumage, are appreciated by the females, when choosing their nuptial partners, at these competitive displays of beauty and attractiveness by the males; for the males are generally described as performing strange actions on such occasions. It must be observed, however, that, throughout the animal kingdom, there are numerous cases in which it is, perhaps, impossible for us to tell anything about to what extent selection has been governed by an appreciation of form and colors by the males and females of any given species of the lower animals, for the effects of this appreciation have been so often obscured by so many contingencies upon which the existence of the species depends. That is, natural selection and sexual selection in many cases tend to produce opposite effects in the organization and color of the individuals of a species; and if, in the struggle for existence, more individuals are continually preserved by natural selection than by sexual selection, then the effects of sexual selection will gradually disappear. For instance, if, in a given locality, the females of a given species of birds select males of a brilliant or conspicuous color, and if, in this same locality, there is a species of animal that preys upon birds, and can secure those of the selected color easier than those of any other color, then we see a cause in operation which must continually tend to obliterate the effects of sexual selection, or selection based upon the preferences of the females for a particular color or colors. The young birds most strongly resembling the selected males being continually destroyed, and those colored most like surrounding objects, so as to better elude their enemies, being continually preserved, it will at once be seen that conditions are required which are rarely favorable for the development of the æsthetic sense in animals in the appreciation of colors. Even if food and the climate were suitable, we may doubt whether the bird-of-paradise would be able to maintain itself in this country for very many generations unless natural selection gradually changed its color and habits so as to enable it better to meet the destructive influences to which it would probably be subjected. Its gorgeous plumage would make it easily detected and destroyed by hawks or other birds of prey. I am satisfied that there are very few who more than dimly appreciate with what a plethora of relations the inhabitants of any given country are bound together. While the number of birds-of-paradise would depend upon the number of hawks or other birds of prey, or animals competing for them for food, the number of hawks might depend upon the number of animals of a particular species that robbed their nests or destroyed their young; and so on in ever-increasing complexity. And so, continuing the process of tracing the relations of one animal to another in a complicated environment, we might find that the color of the plumage of a bird was dependent upon the number of parasites or insects infesting the animal that preyed upon young hawks. For we know that if there was not some check or destructive influence in operation, the number of hawks would so increase that in a few years they would be more numerous than any other bird. As hawks prey upon our domestic chickens, pigeons, etc., no doubt most people think that the hawk species should be completely exterminated. But are we quite sure that their complete extermination is desirable? May not a few hawks in any locality be highly beneficial in preventing the inordinate multiplication of small birds that live upon the small grain and seeds raised by the farmer? It seems quite probable. Though this question may have very little to do with throwing light on the subject under consideration, still it serves to show how liable we are to overlook the concatenation of causes by which given effects are produced, or how a given state of things intimately connected with our well-being is often dependent upon remote and apparently insignificant causes. After an impartial consideration of multitudinous facts such as have been brought forward in this discussion, it seems that the objections generally urged against the views here maintained ought to have very little weight. From what has been said, we may believe that, even though the colors of individuals of various species would indicate that during the process of selection their parents and ancestors were incapable of appreciating contrasts of lights and shades in colors to any marked extent, yet such may not have really been the case, since the individuals produced by sexual selection would be those continually destroyed by enemies in their environment. Elegant forms and graceful carriage of the body will rarely have been disadvantageous to the individuals of most species of animals in securing food and escaping from enemies; and no doubt many species have been greatly improved in this respect by sexual selection. Except where mode of life has required peculiar form and structure, the forms of birds, in numerous instances, strongly indicate that the process of selection has not been carried on regardless of a sense of the beautiful. This remark will apply with nearly equal force to most species of animals in a feral state. There are, however, quite a number of cases in which it would be hard to explain the peculiar structure and extraordinary development of certain parts, which are neither elegant according to our sense of beauty, nor, as far as we can see, of particular advantage to the species in its struggle for existence. Yet when amongst ourselves we see what extremes in taste there are in dress and decoration, we ought not to be surprised to see now and then something analogous among the lower animals. The uncouth form of the extinct dodo and the extraordinary development of the bill of the toucan, it will, no doubt, be difficult for many to believe, are the results of either sexual or natural selection; for it does not seem that the form in the one case, and the extraordinary development of bill in the other, could have been more advantageous to the progenitors of these birds in the struggle for existence than a form more perfect and a bill less developed. But until we understand more about the mysterious laws of the correlation of growth, that is, why the development of a given part is always accompanied by the peculiar development of some other part,—as, for instance, why cats with blue eyes are almost invariably deaf, or why hairless dogs have imperfect teeth, or pigeons with short beaks, small feet,—until we understand more about these laws and the actions and reactions of sexual and natural selection, we must remain in ignorance of the causes which produced so many peculiar forms and structures and extraordinary development of parts, as the large bill of the toucan, and the tuft of hair on the breast of the turkey-cock.

To what extent animals have emotions of beauty aroused by olfactory sensations and impressions, cannot be definitely shown. I cannot call to mind a single species that bears any evidence of sexual selection having been influenced by peculiar odors produced by either the males or females. There may, however, be such cases. Still, as we shall presently see, they could have no direct influence in modifying the form, movements, and color of a species. Though odors may never be factors in sexual selection among animals, yet it is quite probable, if indeed not certain, that by association they may arouse emotions of beauty. The odor of well-cured new-mown hay I believe frequently causes in a horse, which has had no mixture of hay with his food for some time, a slight wave of pleasurable emotion, even though he has recently been well-fed, and cannot be supposed to feel the pinch of hunger. But in such cases, there is always just reason to doubt whether the emotion is one associated with the pleasure of eating, or an æsthetic emotion aroused by the thought of gambolling on the meadows with his fellows. An emotion aroused by a thought associated with the pleasures of eating, and an emotion aroused by a thought associated with the play-impulse, probably cause slightly different kinds of movements of the body and limbs, and the contractions and relaxations of different muscles of expression, and nervous discharges from different nerve-centres; yet these various expressions of the feelings graduate into each other by such insensibly fine steps that we can hardly hope to tell the kind of emotion accompanying a given expression in every case. A little consideration will make it evident enough that smells or odors never arouse emotions of beauty except by association, either in man or the lower animals. No matter how keenly we may appreciate an odor, if we carefully analyze our mental states, it will be found there is nothing in the odor of itself we regard as beautiful. The perfume of a rose or lily of the valley, though we regard it as delightful, would not arouse in us emotions of beauty, if we had never seen either of these flowers. It is possible that even disagreeable odors may arouse emotions of beauty; still it is likely that the odors in such cases weaken the strength and intensity of our appreciation of the object thus called up into consciousness.

The perfume of a tuberose is not generally considered as delightful as a tea-rose; yet everybody regards it as a beautiful flower. Considering its delicate structure, we may believe that if its odor was more agreeable, it would be more of a favorite than it is in the parlors and drawing-rooms of those who appreciate Nature's choicest productions of loveliness and beauty. But it does not seem likely that odors play a very important part with the lower animals in arousing emotions of beauty; for, from our knowledge of their representative faculties or power of reviving in imagination objects and things, we are hardly justified in believing that with them an odor often associates itself with the play-impulse, or with the colors, forms, and structures of objects, except when these latter attributes are connected with the life-maintaining functions. An animal that preys upon creatures of another species of a particular color, and that produce a peculiar odor in self-defence when attacked, will, when the sensitive nerve-fibres of its olfactory organs are excited by this peculiar odor, have revived in imagination the creature producing it, though the creature itself is unseen.

From the above facts and considerations, and from the interpretations given to the mental phenomena of various species of animals, we conclude that many of the lower animals are endowed with most of the same kinds of sentiments, emotions, and feelings belonging to man, and that among these is the æsthetic sense. It has frequently been urged that, because animals do not appreciate a fine landscape view, a beautiful painting, or any of the elegant works of art, they cannot have an æsthetic sense. But this objection cannot be valid, for there are those among ourselves whose æsthetic sense in special directions would not be questioned, yet who are incapable of appreciating works of great merit, as painting and sculpture.

A traveller in Australia,* studying the natives of that island, states portraits of Queen Victoria and Prince Albert were shown to a number of them, for the purpose of observing the effects the pictures produced upon their minds. These native Australians not only had no ideas of the merits of the pictures, but did not even know what they were, one or two of the most intelligent among them who could count as high as three or four remarking that they looked like boats or kangaroos. Shall we say that, because these savages are incapable of appreciating the merits of a fine painting or piece of sculpture according to the conceptions of the European artist, they do not possess even a rudimentary æsthetic sense? Ethnological collections from Australia relating to dress and decoration show very conclusively that the natives of that island, centuries before they were discovered by Europeans, had an appreciation of the colors and forms of objects, irrespective of utility. Where the conditions have been favorable for sexual selection, we have evidence it seems ought to be convincing, that many species of animals have an appreciation of colors, forms, sounds, etc. We have also seen that the form and colors of a creature do not invariably indicate what the exact taste of its parents and ancestors may have been in these respects; for natural selection coming into play will have continually preserved individuals slightly different from those produced by sexual selection, while these latter are continually destroyed.

IS THE POSITION OF "REPEAL" MORALLY INDEFENSIBLE?

EDITOR INDEX:—

I am not a member of any League. Perhaps because I was born free, and taught to follow the truth whithersoever it might lead, I have been content to be in league with Liberty and Light. It seems to me that, not being identified with either side of the split, or with any sect or set, I may be able to take a more dispassionate and possibly a clearer view of the situation than those directly engaged on one side or the other can do.

Let us look at principles first, and then see how they apply:—

1. No liberal will assert that belief or opinion is a matter of will. That is the doctrine of the Church. Ours, on the contrary, is that a man must believe or disbelieve according to the testimony presented to his mind and the logical requirements of his organization.

2. That no moral quality attaches to the rational conclusions at which the mind arrives, will hardly be disputed by any modern thinker.

3. The question on which the liberals divided at Syracuse was simply one of judgment: namely, Is a certain law of Congress constitutional, or, if it is constitutional, is it on the whole a good and rational law, adapted to produce the good results for which it is enacted? There is absolutely no necessary logical connection between the decision of the question of constitutionality and the criminality of circulating obscene books. Murder, robbery, and arson are crimes, but it would not therefore make it constitutional to forbid the transmission through the mails of books or newspapers containing descriptions and pictures of these crimes, or of books attempting to prove that murders are inevitable concomitants of our present social system, or that our existing methods of business enable the rich to spoliage the poor, the capitalist to rob the laborer under cover of law.

4. Circulating obscene books may be or may not be a crime at common law; that is not the question. The question is whether it is constitutional, or, if constitutional, whether it is wise, to forbid the transmission of any class of mailable matter through the mails, on account of its real or supposed moral quality. It is a question not of morals, but of law and common-sense.

5. I have read that has been written by laymen Abbot and Wright, by lawyers Hurlbut and Wake-man, and I have thought much for myself.

One thing all agree in, and no rational man will venture to dispute the conclusion; namely, that the offence consists in sending corrupting stuff to minors. No one outside of a church or a lunatic asylum will maintain that the rights of an adult are invaded by the production on the part of another adult of any amount of obscene matter, so long as he has no power to force any one to read or examine it unless he chooses; and, if any adult has such depraved taste as to want such things, I know of no rational ground on which the State can interfere to punish him. So far, then, as I know, all agree that the only rational ground for the interference of the State is the right of parents and guardians to determine what their minor charges shall read or receive from others.

*See Popular Science Monthly, Vol. iv., pp. 729-35.

But the existing law makes no distinction between minors and adults, and is not at all based upon this ground, and is therefore believed by many careful and competent thinkers to be clearly unconstitutional. Is there any moral quality attached to that belief?

6. But in view of the fact that the question is an open one, upon which equally good and able men and women may differ and do appear to differ, it is too soon for the minority to brand the majority as immoral or vice versa. This sort of thing savors too much of the morals and manners of the Church; and liberals who find the so-called religious papers praising their action may well suspect that they have made a mistake. Timeo Danaos et dona ferentes.

7. I fail to see why the League should not have left leaguers free to advocate repeal or reform, according to their measure of wisdom and judgment. It seems to me that some things ought to be taken for granted among rational beings who are working together for a great principle, or for all true principles. And I think it should have been assumed as a matter of course that all leaguers and leaguers are equally opposed to impurity of all sorts, and to any corrupting of children, whether by books giving false ideas of sex under the name of obscene stories, or calling themselves catechisms or tracts. And if I were convinced that modification is better policy than repeal, I should resent any imputation on the part of Christians or liberals that those who took a different view were in favor of corrupting youth.

8. The fact undoubtedly is that this legislation has grown out of the domination of the State by the Church; and I think this fact explains the instinctive opposition of so many liberals to it. It is not credible that a purely secular State would not find a less objectionable and more efficient way of dealing with obscenity than this, which cannot, under the best circumstances, do more than nip off a few leaves from an evil tree, and which to do even that requires a spy, informer, and promoter of crime, the services of a false and foul-minded fanatic of filth, who fancies that the sight of a copy of Makart's great picture endangers the morals of the youth of New York, because there is in it the nobly-painted representation of some scantily-draped maidens. Is such a person a probably efficient protector of youthful morals? Could you find a decent man to do his work? No! That is one of the practical objections to any such law.

In a neighboring city, a boy was asked by his teacher, "Who made you?" She expected him to reply, "God"; but instead he said, "My parents." "Go to your seat, you awful boy!" said the enraged teacher; and such was the excitement that his parents had to take him away from the public, and put him in a private school. His mother had taught this boy the physiological facts that she knew, and she told the new teacher that she didn't want him taught any theology. After he had been four years in the school, the teacher told his mother that he didn't know anything about her theology, but that her boy was the best boy he had ever had, and the one who respected him the most. That boy didn't require Comstock laws; and it is my opinion that it would be easier to make all children as safe from corruption as that boy was than it would be to check obscenity appreciably by the best laws that can be devised.

F. S. C.

[1 and 2. We agree, certainly, with the first two "principles" laid down.

3. Here the difference begins, and it is deep. Take an illustration: People differed honestly, not many years ago, on the question whether slavery was right or wrong; opinions were just as sincere on one side as on the other. Did that fact prevent the question of slavery from being a moral question? Did it render it morally defensible to sustain slavery by law? Did it render the position and action of the United States government on this question a matter of pure indifference to liberals or to the people? Most certainly not; and it is precisely so with this other question of the mails. We never said or implied that it makes a man immoral in personal character to believe that the law of 1873 ought to be repealed; but we do say it would be a national immorality to repeal that law, and that it is indefensible morally (i.e., on moral grounds) to call for its repeal. If "moral science" is not an absurd phrase, it means that moral questions, like all questions of scientific truth, shall be submitted to the test of facts, and not settled off-hand by a mere assertion that somebody's motives are pure. Conscientious repealers are just as possible as conscientious slave-holders; and one class make nearly as bad a moral mistake as the other. The point we insist upon is that this question of repeal or reform is one that involves national morality; it cannot be, and will not be, shut down to the bare point of constitutionality. That the United States government should be reduced to a mere tool in the hands of criminals for the lucrative sale of vile literature, is a proposition which will certainly strike fire out of the American conscience, if it is pressed in good earnest as a practical measure. Let the repealers go on, if they have the courage they claim; the experiment will be an interesting one.

4. The question is: shall the whole people, in their corporate capacity as mail carriers, become the paid agents of confessed criminals in corrupting the morals of youth? If this is not a "question of morals," there never was and never will be one.

5. We are not "attaching any moral quality" to a "belief." A Thug is not immoral because he thinks murder right, but because he commits it; the "moral quality" appears whenever he acts, and it does not depend merely upon his own opinion of the action. So the government acts, whenever it "enacts" a law or repeals one; the government is really the people; the "people" means you and us; and the "moral quality" of the government's action attaches to every citizen who assents to it.

6. "Equally good and able men" thought slavery right and wrong. Nevertheless it was no fault to charge the former class, in upholding it, with practical complicity with a crime against humanity. The morality of motives is one thing; the objective morality of actions is another, to be judged by another standard.

7. Nobody cared what "leaguers" thought at Syracuse; it was what they did, in making the League collectively change its original position, that made the trouble. The question turned wholly on collective action, which concerned every member, and not on private thought, which concerned only the individual.

8. We utterly disbelieve the theory that the common law, on this subject, is a mere creature of the Church. There is a moral sentiment native to mankind, which made the Church rather than the Church it. As for Comstock, we were the first to call for his dismissal.—Ed.]

AN INQUIRY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Sir,—I have read in THE INDEX Judge Hurlbut's proposed draft of a law to prevent the "forwarding and distributing of obscene literature by the mails"; but it seems to me that when once a letter or communication of any sort is enveloped, sealed, directed, paid for, and dropped into any post-office box, it has got to be delivered to the person to whom it is addressed.

How, then (unless some person be empowered by the law to open and examine letters and packages while they are in the mails), is it to be known whether there be anything in them obscene or not? It seems to me that obscene or objectionable things must be suppressed before they get into the mails or after they are taken out.

Doubtless there is an answer to what puzzles me so much, and I shall be greatly obliged if you will give it.

Respectfully yours,

A SUBSCRIBER.

[1. All sealed letters or packages which pay letter-postage are invariably delivered, unopened and unopened, to the persons addressed.

2. If it can be shown subsequently, by evidence satisfactory to the courts, that matter has been thus forwarded by mail which is forbidden by law, the act of forwarding can be punished accordingly. That the present law can be so amended as not to violate the freedom of the press in any degree, and that offences against it can be detected by justifiable means, is what we firmly believe.—Ed.]

JUDGE HURLBUT'S ESSAY.

BEAVER, BEAVER CO., Pa., Nov. 17, 1878.

MY DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

Permit me, in a few words, to express my sentiments in regard to your manly course. Every freethinker, every man and woman in this country, will sooner or later acknowledge that the position you and your followers have taken is the only tenable and true one. The action of the majority, after listening to the masterly address of the Hon. E. P. Hurlbut on "The Liberty of Printing," is a psychological problem; I cannot believe that they all are in favor of the abuses of a so-called "free press," which would surely multiply unless checked by some legal restriction. That religious bigots very generally associate freethought with libertinism, no one will deny; and we owe it to ourselves, I should think, to show to the world that liberalism has no sympathies with libertinism.

I cannot accept the "Fruits of Philosophy" of these "repealers"; it is Dead Sea fruit, emitting the odor of the Mephitis Americana. I think we can safely submit any doubtful case to the honest judgment of an American jury: it is not such a difficult matter to ascertain what is pure and what is impure, what is wholesome and what is not. Let the law be changed; the draft proposed by Judge Hurlbut is admirable, and should satisfy everybody except the contemptible, miserable, unscrupulous rascals who make their living by bringing their obscene trash into market.

Very sincerely yours,

HUGO ANDRIESEN.

"TRUTH PREVAILS."

MOMENCE, Ill., Nov. 8, 1878.

F. E. ABBOT:

Dear Sir,—Enclosed find eighteen cents (six stamps). Please send value in your paper, THE INDEX, commencing with first number since Oct. 26, 1878.

I have read nothing but the Truth Seeker as yet, concerning the division of the Liberal League, but have read enough there some time ago, as well as at the present time, to convince me that you are nearest right, although in the "minority." It seems to me a bad thing for Bennett's cause that in speaking of you he is obliged to quote your language, and in reporting the division of the Liberal League he is obliged to report the proceedings of his opponents, as both weaken the side he would strengthen, and strengthen the side he would weaken.

Having read only the Bennett side of the question, I now wish to read the other.

S. W. DENNIS.

MR. UNDERWOOD'S PHILOSOPHY.

Mr. B. F. Underwood, the materialistic and liberal lecturer, in concluding his recent able and interesting discourse in Investigator Hall, gave the following summary of his philosophy in regard to mind and matter:—

1. No subject too sacred for discussion.
2. No beliefs on any subject should subject those who entertain them to persecution or legal disabilities of any kind.
3. There should be a complete separation of the Church and the State, such as the Liberal League aims to secure.
4. The untrammelled exercise of reason, and the free expression of belief on all subjects, is every man's right, and sometimes a positive duty.
5. Beliefs are neither moral nor immoral.
6. But beliefs react on character and influence credulity, and hence the importance of right beliefs.
7. Doubt leads to investigation, and investigation leads to knowledge. It should therefore be encouraged. There is danger of believing too much rather than too little.
8. The enlightened human reason is the highest and best standard of truth that man possesses.
9. All claims for objective standards in the form of book revelations are unproved and incapable of proof.
10. The Jewish and Christian sacred Scriptures must take their place among the other sacred books of the past.
11. These sacred books are neither superhuman productions nor fables gotten up by priests to deceive mankind; but they are natural outgrowths of the human mind through centuries of ignorance, credulity, and superstition.
12. Systems of religion are neither revelations nor inventions of priests, but the results of ages of speculation and imagination, of hopes and fears.
13. Morality is the science of human relations. It depends in no way for its sanction or its authority on the supernatural.
14. There is no efficacy in prayer. Reliance on ourselves, and our power to control the forces of Nature, have already practically taken the place of supplication, fasting, and prayer.
15. This life is worthy of our best efforts, and its interests and enjoyments should not be subordinated to the fancied interests and enjoyments of any other world, real or imagined.
16. The old theories that at birth the mind is like a piece of wax, susceptible equally to all impressions, and that it is crowded with innate ideas, are both untenable; but all are born with good and bad tendencies, the result of ancestral experiences, organized in the race in the form of aptitudes or predispositions.
17. That the transmission and strengthening of the good tendencies, and the suppression of the bad tendencies, are under the control of man in proportion to his acquaintance with biological and psychological science.
18. That the dissemination of knowledge in regard to the human body and all its functions is not only right and proper, but highly important as a means of reform.
19. That since this subject opens a field for quacks and charlatans, and for unscrupulous writers and lecturers whose success consists chiefly in their ability to attract attention on subjects that require scientific knowledge and conscientiousness in their treatment, by coarse language and pandering to the passions of the sensual and the vicious, it is important that such pretended teachers be discountenanced, and that educated, worthy, and discreet persons only be encouraged in the field of reform.
20. That monogamic marriage is the highest and noblest relation that has obtained between the sexes; and its destruction and the substitution therefor of any kind of promiscuity would be most calamitous, and involves a long step back toward barbarism.
21. The tendency of thought in regard to the formation of worlds is, that they are evolved by natural causes and without the intervention of any supernatural power.
22. In regard to life, that it has a physical basis, and has appeared on the globe in a manner as natural as the cooling of the globe, and has been developed into all the variety and complexity seen in the organic world to-day, by entirely non-miraculous causes and natural processes.
23. In regard to adaptations of Nature, that they are eternal, such as the adaptation of matter to space, or they are the result of the "survival of the fittest," as in the case of animals and plants adjusted to their environment.
24. In regard to the ultimate nature of things, they are utterly inscrutable to the mind of man.
25. That we know the outer world only as we are related to it, only as it is colored by the mind, only as it is affected by our consciousness.
26. That all efforts to know "the thing itself" must prove fruitless, since we can know things only in relation to ourselves.
27. That the order of phenomena, and not its ultimate nature of things, is the province for exploration and discovery.

29. That our influence endures with the race; that all preceding generations exist in this generation, and that we who live to-day will live in all future ages of the race; that every human being contributes by his or her thought and action to make the world of humanity better or worse.—Boston Investigator, Oct. 2.

ARISTOCRATIC RASCALITY.

At a recent meeting of the stockholders of the City of Glasgow Bank, the Rev. Mr. Robertson of that city, who happens to be one of these swindled stockholders, gave his opinion of the bank directors in the following words:—

"Respecting the directors I scarcely dare to speak. I must endeavor to restrain my just indignation, and speak calmly as a minister of religion. Sir, these gentlemen have been faithless to high office, disloyal to truth and the first principles of morality. What, with respect to some of them, deepens the discredit is that they trod the streets of the city arrayed in the garbs of religiousness, making long prayers while desolating widows' houses, erecting churches while wrecking homes. Their honor is tarnished, their reputation stained; but the day of reckoning has already dawned. The majesty of the law is now vindicating its claim. For my part, I wish them no sorrier, heavier punishment than that they be haunted night and day with the ghastly visions of the hundreds of happy families they have wrecked and blighted, till the feeling of remorse is kindled within their hearts, and they are driven to their Maker's presence to seek his forgiveness, and that they may leave his presence determined to spend the utmost energies of their remaining years in some poor measure to undo the evil they have done."

We decidedly like the speech of this Scotch clergyman. These bank directors, prior to the discovery of their rascality, walked the streets of Glasgow as among its first citizens. They belonged to the wealthy and refined class. They lived in splendid houses, and those of them who went to church sat on cushioned seats. They were members of rich firms and did a vast business. They were selected as bank directors because it was assumed that they had the requisite skill, and further assumed that they had sufficient integrity to exercise this skill in the interest of the shareholders and that of the general public. To them an immense trust was confided, and they knew it.

And yet the facts prove them to be the most detestable rascals that language can describe,—deceiving the public and deceiving the stockholders by a deliberate and cunningly planned system of long-continued fraud and falsehood. The excuse of ignorance, misapprehension, bad judgment, and consequent mismanagement, in respect to these directors, will not avail. They were liars and hypocrites, and they knew it. They were conspirators against the property rights of hundreds of innocent victims, worse for the community than fifty times their number of professional burglars and thieves. No amount of public indignation against such scoundrels is misplaced or too intense for the occasion; and, if Scotch law is without a severe penalty for such aristocratic monsters, then Scotch law needs reforming.

There is a tendency in society to deal gently with crime in high places, and severely with it only in low places. If any difference is to be made in the two cases, this tendency should be exactly reversed. Considered as wrong-doers, those who are ignorant and degraded, and even depraved, largely by the force of circumstances, have a far stronger claim upon our sympathy than those upon whom fortune has bestowed its smiles. The culture and opportunities of the latter, as compared with those of the former, greatly add to their guilt.

We agree with the Rev. Mr. Robertson in hoping that the reflections of these Scotch bank directors will lead them to profound penitence; and we think that imprisonment at hard labor for at least twenty years would be helpful to the process, and at the same time a suitable warning to others. Such a warning would publish its moral throughout the world. If the law has no such penalty, then Scotland specially and the world generally should supplement its defects by holding the names of the Glasgow bank directors in permanent abhorrence. Society should everywhere be armed against such villains and villainies. The ban of reprobation should follow the villains to the grave, and the places of respectability should know them no more forever. This is a moral as well as a physical system, and its withering frown upon guilt is a beneficent part of its order.—N. Y. Independent.

THE VISITOR in the Cathedral of St. Peter at Rome, standing on the marble floor, looks up into the dome which springs overhead like the all-covering heaven. There in a glorious atmosphere of blue are floating the forms of apostles, evangelists, and saints, angelic in their lightness and grace. To the worshipper on the pavement, rapt in wonder, the heavens seem coming down with these angelic forms. Up, through a narrow winding stairway, he climbs to the narrow balcony that surrounds the dome. What are those forms made of? Bits of charcoal, pieces of brick, fragments of broken glass, which the artist, calculating the effect from below, put in their places, where each one would be most effective. Who cares that the floating forms are composed of such base materials picked up in the street? There they are; there they have been ever since the artist placed them there. There they will stand as long as the mighty edifice is allowed to remain on the globe. It is of no consequence that lovely things have ugly beginnings. The question is, are the things in themselves beautiful?—Bz.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12	Insertions, 10c per line.
" 13 " 25 "	8 " "
" 26 " 51 "	6 " "
" 52 " " "	5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX.

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
DAVID H. OLARK, Florence, Mass.
MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tennessee, N.Y.
J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
O. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $1.20 for one year, including postage, or 50 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street Boston.

PUBLICATIONS INDEX TRACTS.

OF THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by O. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Bonhoeffer's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Galtrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keesh Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. R. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by O. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion"; Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Lasker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for Five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for Five cents at the office.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, coarseness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fifth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 8.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal DEVOTED TO FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:
FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tennessee, N.Y.
J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion;

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual;

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of these several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	2.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.50
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	1.50
Edelweiss.....	2.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physico and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.5
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	2.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	1.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRAQUETT (ANNA O.). The Education of American Girls.....	2.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Secretary.....	1.25
The World-Friend.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BURCHER'S Force and Matter.....	2.25
BURKE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero-Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	2.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. E.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.20
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
COOPER (JAMES) and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, &c. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.5

Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.40
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	5.00
DEQUARTER (R. K.). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	1.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DURING (JULIA). Philosophers and Poets. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising— Adam Bede.....	1.00
Scenes from the Mill on the Floss.....	1.00
Stilas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life.....	1.00
The Name. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	2.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	2.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellanies.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	1.25
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (R. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. ("George Eliot's" translation.).....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	2.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	2.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREGG (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.80
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	2.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	2.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	2.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	2.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skel- lings.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mopse the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. 1. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	2.5

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer. 2 vols.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah F. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.00
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Astronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Clande's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	1.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by S. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KER (ORPHEUS O.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LEOKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Nationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	5.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	3.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWIS' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols.....	3.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL D'O). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. O.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.50
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	5.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE). The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	2.50
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1868.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	3.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	3.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	3.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.00
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras. Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Bousquet, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	2.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography, and Aesthetics. Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 1 vol.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations.—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.50
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS) The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PEEP'S (ELIZABETH STUART) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trotty Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Rodged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear.....	1.00
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	1.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, &c. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.00
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Secondary, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, &c.....	5.50
The Expanses of Heaven.....	2.50
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	1.50
SCHLLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., F.G.S., F.G.S., F.G.S.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 28 vols.....	41.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	1.50
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT). Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	1.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	1.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	4.50
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	4.50
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	1.50
Descriptive Sociology. Parts I., II., and III., each.....	4.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	2.50
Universal Progress.....	2.50
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER). Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	1.50
TAINES (H. A.) History of English Literature. 3 vols.....	1.50
The Classic-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip Fendennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Hammond, and Level the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market. 1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Hamlets, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....	1.25
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Lakes of Shells.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.50
The Maine Woods.....	2.50
Cape Cod.....	2.50
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.50
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.50
TYLER (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 3 vols.....	5.50
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.50
Light and Electricity.....	1.50
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	1.50
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	1.50
On Sound.....	1.50
Radiant Heat.....	1.50
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
Lessons in Electricity.....	1.00
Addresses before British Assoc. at Belfast.....	.50
TYLER (SARAH) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES) The Bible and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	2.50
Vols. II., IV. and VI., each.....	2.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Banqueting.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN). American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	5.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	2.00
Character and Characteristic of.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.25
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Gough's Life.....	1.50
We Girls. Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folk.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Panicles. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	2.00

ADDRESSES:

THE INDEX,

231 Washington St., Boston.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY—PRICE
TWO PENCE.

THE SECULAR REVIEW.

EDITED BY CHARLES WATTS.

The SECULAR REVIEW is the leading organ of Secularism, and each week has Special Articles on Theological, Social, Scientific, and Political Subjects. Its distinctive features are the advocacy of Constructive Secularism, and the dissemination of useful information on all questions which affect the welfare of the people. Letters are inserted in its "OPEN COLUMN" from all who are courteous in the expression of their views; while a special department is allotted for "NOTES AND QUERIES."

The Contributors to the SECULAR REVIEW comprise the principal advocates of Secularism, including its founder, G. J. Holyoake.

CHARLES WATTS, Publisher,
84 Fleet Street, London, E.C.

THE SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN.

THIRTY-FOURTH YEAR.

The Most Popular Scientific Paper in the World.

Only $5.00 a Year, including Postage.
Weekly, 53 Numbers a Year,
4,000 Book Pages.

THE SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN is a large First-Class Weekly Newspaper of Sixteen Pages, printed in the most beautiful style, profusely illustrated with splendid engravings, representing the newest inventions and the most recent Advances in the Arts and Sciences; including New and Interesting Facts in Agriculture, Horticulture, the Home, Health, Medical Progress, Social Science, Natural History, Geology, Astronomy. The most valuable practical papers, by eminent writers in all departments of Science, will be found in the Scientific American.

Terms, $5.00 per year, $1.00 half year, which includes postage. Discount to Agents. Single copies, ten cents. Sold by all News-dealers. Remit by postal order to MUNN & CO., Publishers, 37 Park Row, New York.

PATENTS In connection with the Scientific American, Messrs. MUNN & CO. are Solicitors of American and Foreign Patents, have had 34 years' experience, and now have the largest establishment in the world. Patents are obtained on the best terms. A special notice is made in the Scientific American of all inventions patented through this Agency, with the name and residence of the Patentee. By the immense circulation thus given, public attention is directed to the merits of the new patent, and sales or introduction often easily effected.

Any person who has made a new discovery or invention can ascertain, free of charge, whether a patent can probably be obtained, by writing to the undersigned. We also send free our Hand Book about the Patent Laws, Patents, Caveats, Trade-Marks, their costs, and how procured, with hints for procuring advances on inventions. Address for the Paper, or concerning Patents,
MUNN & CO.,
37 Park Row, New York.

Branch Office, corner F and 7th Streets, Washington, D.C.

RADICAL LIBERAL LECTURES

By B. F. Underwood,

FOR THE FALL AND WINTER OF 1878-9.

1. The Theory of Evolution.
2. Darwinism Defined and Defended.
3. The Philosophy of Herbert Spencer.
4. The Genesis and Nature of Religion.
5. Modern Scientific Materialism.
6. Natural Selection versus Design in Nature.
7. An Hour with German Thinkers.
8. Intuition and Instinct Viewed in the Light of Modern Psychology.
9. The Pros and Cons of a Future Life.
10. Is there a Personal Intelligent Deity?
11. The Demands of Liberalism Pertaining to State Secularization.
12. Monogamic Marriage versus the Vagaries of Free Love.
13. Woman: Her Past and Present; Her Rights and Wrongs.
14. Religious Revivals: Their Causes and Consequences.
15. The Struggles and Triumphs of Free-thought in Europe and America.
16. Issues of the Age.
17. Buddha and Buddhism.
18. Ancient Egypt: Its Laws, Customs, and Religion.
19. The French Revolution: Its Causes and Consequences.
20. Crimes and Cruelties of Superstition.
21. Cook and other "Scientific" Annihilators of Materialism Reviewed.
22. Paine the Pioneer of Free-thought in America.
23. A Liberal's Answer to the Question, "If not Christianity, What?"
24. Christianity: To what Extent has it Helped or Hindered Civilization?
25. Jesus: All that is Known and what is Guessed about Him.
26. A True Man Better than a True Christian.
27. Judaism and Christianity: Outgrowths of Pre-existent Heathenism.
28. Science versus the Bible.
29. The Origin and History of the Bible. (From one to six lectures.)
30. The Four Gospels Unhistorical and Unreliable.
31. Evidence for the Divinity of the Bible Examined.
32. Popular Assumptions Regarding the Bible and Christianity.
33. Bible Prophecies Falsified by the Facts of History.
34. Popular Objections to Liberalism Considered.

For terms, etc., address
B. F. UNDERWOOD,
THORNDIKE, MASS.

GOLD

Any worker can make $12 a day at home. Costly outfit free. Address
TRIM & CO., Augusta, Maine.

THE INDEX IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

Address THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston, U.S.A.

TO THE AMERICAN PATRONS OF CHOICE LITERATURE.

We have made arrangements with Messrs. CHAPMAN & HALL, London, England, for the right to publish an American Edition of

The Fortnightly Review,

Edited by JOHN MORLEY,

and are now publishing this celebrated Monthly Magazine, from a special duplicate set of stereotype plates, which are forwarded from England so promptly as to enable us to produce each month, not only an exact facsimile of this able Review, but to publish it almost at the same time the original is from England. It is in every respect equal to the London issue, at about half the original price. This effort will place in the hands of American readers the freest utterances of leading thinkers on the issues with a promptitude unequalled. The comments of a large number of the best European thinkers on Science, Philosophy, Literature, Politics, and Miscellaneous Matters of general interest cannot fail to be appreciated and encouraged by thoughtful American readers. The following are a few of the contributors:—

Matthew Arnold,	Alfred R. Wallace,
Herbert Spencer,	Frederick Harrison,
Goldwin Smith,	Prof. Tyndall,
Right Hon. Lyon Playfair,	Prof. Darwin,
Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone,	Prof. Clifford,
Lionel A. Talmage,	Author of Supernatural Religion ,
M. E. Grant Duff, M.P.,	Sir John Lubbock,
Hon. Robert Lowe,	Anthony Trollope,
Leslie Stephen,	T. Adolphus Trollope,
John Morley (the Editor),	Sir H. S. Maine,
G. H. Lewes,	Sir David Wedderburn,

AND NUMEROUS OTHERS.

Subscription Price, $5.00 per Year.

Published every month by the ROSE-BELFORD PUBLISHING CO., 60 York Street, Toronto, Ont.

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD. GREAT THROUGH LINE

AND UNITED STATES MAIL ROUTE.

The attention of the travelling public is respectfully invited to some of the merits of this great highway, in the confident assertion and belief that no other line can offer equal inducements as a route of through travel. In

CONSTRUCTION AND EQUIPMENT

THE PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD stands confessedly at the head of American railways. The track is double the entire length of the line, of steel rails laid on heavy oak ties, which are embedded in a foundation of rock ballast eighteen inches in depth. All bridges are of iron or stone, and built upon the most approved plans. Its passenger cars, while eminently safe and substantial, are at the same time models of comfort and elegance.

THE SAFETY APPLIANCES in use on this line well illustrate the far-seeing and liberal policy of its management, in accordance with which the utility only of an improvement and not its cost has been the question of consideration. Among many may be noticed

The Block System of Safety Signals, Janney Coupler, Buffer, and Platform. The Wharton Patent Switch, and the Westinghouse Air-Brake, forming in conjunction with a perfect double track and road-bed a combination of safeguards against accidents which have rendered them practically impossible.

Pullman Palace Cars are run on all Express Trains from New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington, to Chicago, Cincinnati, Louisville, Indianapolis, and St. Louis.

WITHOUT CHANGE,

and to all the principal points in the far West and South with but one change of cars. Connections are made in Union Depots, and are assured to all important points. The Scenery of the Pennsylvania Route is admitted to be unsurpassed in the world for grandeur, beauty, and variety. Superior refreshment facilities are provided. Employes are courteous and attentive, and it is an inevitable result that a trip by the Pennsylvania Railroad must form

A Pleasing and Memorable Experience.

Tickets for sale at the lowest rates at the Ticket Offices of the Company in all important cities and towns.

FRANK THOMSON, L. P. FARMER,
General Manager. General Passenger Agent.
C. S. HALDEMAN, New England Agent,
203 and 205 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 80 CENTS. Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the fine list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. ANY OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

THE INDEX AS AN ADVERTISING MEDIUM.

Testimony of one who has tried it.

FLORENCE, Iowa, Jan. 5, 1878.
... THE INDEX is the best advertising medium which I have tried. ...
E. C. WALKER.

THE NEWBURY STREET SCHOOL

will be re-opened for its twelfth year October 2. Address

Miss M. S. DEVEREUX,

34 NEWBURY STREET, BOSTON.

Pupils received into the family under the special care of Miss M. S. Devereux and Miss Lucretia P. Hale.
References: Rev. Dr. Orville Dewey, Sheffield, Mass.; Rev. E. E. Hale, Rev. J. F. Clarke, Hon. Nathaniel Blahoe, Dr. Oliver W. Holmes, Mr. Henry E. Raymond, Boston; Prof. Benjamin Pierce, Cambridge, Mass.; Mr. A. C. Richards, Irvington, N.Y.; Mr. H. E. Bishop, New York.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF
O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
R. H. BARNES,
F. E. ABBOT.

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

A REMARKABLE BOOK. A MODERN SYMPOSIUM.

SUBJECTS:

The Soul and Future Life.

By Mr. Frederic Harrison, Hon. Roden Noel, R. H. Hutton, Lord Selborne, Prof. Huxley, Canon Barry, Lord Blackford, Mr. W. R. Greg, Rev. Baldwin Brown, and Dr. W. G. Ward.

The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief.

By Sir James Fitz-James Stephen, Prof. Clifford, Lord Selborne, Rev. Mr. Martineau, Mr. Frederic Harrison, the Dean of St. Paul's, the Duke of Argyll, Dr. W. G. Ward, Prof. Huxley, and R. H. Hutton.

1 Vol. Crown, 8vo. Cloth, neat, $1.25.

This volume contains the scholarly utterances of the leading scientists and philosophers of Great Britain on two of the most important subjects of the century.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass., for

TRACTS.

- I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.
- II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.
- III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.
- IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.
- V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13 and 20, 1878.)
- VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II., III., IV., V., VI., 10 cts. each; ten for 50 cts.; one hundred, $5.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 50 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS FOR 1872, '73, '74, '75, '76, and '77, Five cents each.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLET & CO., Portland, Maine.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & CO., Portland, Maine.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The twenty-fifth school year of this Family and Day School for both sexes will begin WEDNESDAY, Sept. 19, 1877. For Circular and information apply to

NATH'L T. ALLEN,
West Newton, Mass.

NEW BOOK BY INGERSOLL.

Contains his latest lectures on "The Ghosts," "Liberty of Man, Woman, and Child," "Centennial Oration," "Farming in Illinois," and others. Handsomely bound in one volume. Price $1.50. Also

THE GODS AND OTHER LECTURES.

Same style. Price $1.25. Sent post-paid on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE OF AMERICA.

1. EQUAL RIGHTS IN RELIGION. Contains an Historical Account of the Liberal League movement; a full Report of the Centennial Congress of Liberals at Philadelphia, July 1 to 4, 1878, with Essays by F. E. Abbot, James Parton, B. F. Underwood, and others; the Constitution of the National Liberal League, List of Charter Members, etc., etc. Octavo, pp. 190. Cloth, $1.00; paper, 75 cts.
2. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES, adopted at Philadelphia, July 4, 1878. With Resolutions of the Congress, Extracts from Letters by Distinguished Citizens, Constitution of the National Liberal League, etc. Adapted for gratuitous distribution by friends of the cause. Octavo, 24 pp. Single copies, 3 cts.; 10 copies, 15 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.
3. PRIVILEGES FOR NON-JURORS FOR ALL. Contains the N. L. L. Platform and Resolutions adopted at Rochester, Oct. 26, 1877, full information how to organize Local Leagues, etc. Twenty-page tract for the use of workers. Single copies, 5 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.

ADDRESS

National Liberal League of America

231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON.

FROTHINGHAM'S WORKS.

THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY. An Essay. Third Edition—Revised. Price $1.50.

"Nobody can peruse this book without respect for the learning, mental honesty and skill in the statement of his convictions, possessed by the author, and for the essential integrity and philanthropic tendency of his spirit."—Springfield Republican.

"A profoundly sincere book, the work of one who has read largely, studied thoroughly, reflected patiently. It is a model of scholarly culture and of finished and vigorous style."—Boston Globe.

THE CHILD'S BOOK OF RELIGION. For Sunday-schools and Homes. Price $1.00.

THE SAFEST CREED, AND OTHER DISCOURSES. 12mo, Cloth, $1.50.

Not "food for babes," but full of suggestion for earnest and thoughtful men.

STORIES FROM THE LIPS OF THE TEACHER. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"The Parables are so re-told as to absorb the attention of the reader, and to fasten upon the mind what the writer believes to have been the impression the Savior meant to convey. It is in style and thought a superior book, and will interest alike young and old."—Zion's Herald (Methodist).

STORIES OF THE PATRIARCHS. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"A work of culture and taste; it will be welcome to all ages, and gives the sublimest lessons of manhood in the simple language of a child."—Springfield Republican.

BELIEFS OF THE UNBELIEVERS. A Lecture. 12mo, Cloth, $1.00.

TRANSCENDENTALISM IN NEW ENGLAND. A History. With sketches and studies of Emerson, Alcott, Parker, Margaret Fuller, the Brook-Farm Community, etc. 8vo, Cloth extra, with steel portrait of the author, $2.50.

THE LIFE OF THEODORE PARKER. 8vo. With Portrait, $3.00.

The New York Tribune closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

THE ORACLE OF THE CHRIST. A Study in Primitive Christianity, illustrating the prime importance of the Messianic Idea in the New Testament, as the key to the development of Christianity from Judaism. Octavo, Cloth, $1.75.

Mailed, post-paid, on receipt of price, by THE INDEX 231 Washington St., Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 9.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, DEC. 5, 1878.

WHOLE No. 467.

LIBERAL LEAGUE PLATFORM

For the Presidential Election of 1880,

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.
2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.
3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.
- N. B.—The nomination of candidates upon the above platform was postponed to a future Congress of the National Liberal League.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

GLIMPSES.

GOVERNOR RICE'S Thanksgiving proclamation hints at Christianity without venturing explicitly to indorse it, when it tells the people of Massachusetts that "thanksgiving is due" for "the redemption of the world." There might be some force in this suggestion if the world had really been "redeemed." This was not the case, at last accounts.

SAYS the Chicago Alliance: "We have never seen illustrated more forcibly the inconsistency into which some men are betrayed for the sake of beating an opponent. . . . But we think it tolerably clear that such a compromise, by men claiming to have convictions worth holding, as has been consummated at New Haven is indefensible on any ground, and foolish to the last degree. If the public schools of New Haven are to be no longer 'Godless,' they are certainly in a fair way to become supremely ridiculous."

THE SPRINGFIELD Republican well says: "The novel plan proposed in New Haven for teaching the Roman Catholic religion in the public schools has been defeated before coming to trial. It was an unwise, a mischievous, compromise, but it was more just than the reported decision of the committee to return to the old way of Bible readings. The only right thing to do in a country like ours is to completely sever Church and State. The commonwealth has no business teaching religion at all. This sticking to the old legacy of the Puritans gives the Roman Catholics a perfectly reasonable pretext for demanding special attention to their peculiar rights of conscience. These are like the camel of the Arabic fable, of which everybody is tired of hearing. When they fairly get settled in the American school system, that broad democratic tent will be pretty well spoiled for its intended uses."

THE NOVEMBER number of the Contemporary Review gives as follows the exact language respecting atheism used by Professor Max Müller recently in Westminster Abbey: "There is an atheism which is unto death; there is another atheism which is the very life-blood of all true faith. It is the power of giving up what, in our best, our most honest moments we know to be no longer true; it is the readiness to replace the less perfect, however dear, however sacred it may have been to us, by the more perfect, however much it may be detested, as yet, by others. It is the true self-surrender, the true self-sacrifice, the truest trust in truth, the truest faith. Without that atheism, religion would long ago have become a petrified hypocrisy; without that atheism, no new religion, no reform, no reformation, no resuscitation, would ever have been possible; without that atheism, no new life is possible for any one of us."

THIS is what the Independent says of the New Haven school question: "The effort of the Protestant and Catholic clergy to frame a directory of worship for the public schools of New Haven proves to be labor lost. The liturgy which they proposed, with other plans for compromise between the Catholics and Protestants, was submitted to a special committee of the New Haven School Board; and this committee reported against all the plans, and recommended that the Board simply re-establish the religious services formerly in use, and make them applicable to all the schools, without any discrimination or distinction on religious grounds. The report was adopted by a majority of the Board; and this settles the school question in New Haven, until it shall again be unsettled. The services to be had hereafter will be justly regarded as Protestant in their character and tendencies; and Catholics, Jews, and indeed all persons who dissent from Protestantism, or who believe that the public school should be simply a secular institution, if they live in New Haven and are taxpayers, will have the privilege of supporting the Protestant religion under the coercion of law.

And if they have children whom they wish to send to the public school, then these children must participate in such forms of religious worship as State authorities see fit to prescribe. So the case now stands. To suppose that this will be the end of the question is greatly to mistake its merits, as well as the instincts of human nature."

THE Contemporary Review thus refers to "Häckel and Monism": "Professor Häckel is well known as the representative of the extreme school of materialism, and as the avowed and self-constituted champion of Darwinism run mad. He recognizes but one force in Nature—the mechanical; and hence he calls his profession of faith monism, in contradistinction to dualism, which implies a belief in soul or spirit, or some force or efficient cause which is other than mechanical. By virtue of this mechanical force, carbon, hydrogen, oxygen, and nitrogen united originally to form the earliest organisms, which appear to have been monera; and from these, by casual variation, by selection, by inheritance, and by adaptation, all the forms of animal and vegetable life, as we now know them and as they appear in paleontological records, have been formed. Man himself has no other or especial origin. He is a direct descendant of the catarrhine apes, which, in common with all other vertebrata, have been derived from a single pair of animals, unknown and unrecorded in history, 'for it is unthinkable that all the various and complicated life-conditions which lead through a long course of development to the typical vertebrate animal could accidentally occur more than once in the earth's history.' To promulgate this doctrine, especially that part of it which relates to man's origin, is Häckel's life-long mission. All his works, whatever may be their professed object, relate to this; and his address at Munich had no other end in view. In all this he sees no difficulty, and has no doubts or misgivings. There is no more difficulty in accounting for the phenomena of life than for the falling of a stone to the earth. 'When a stone which is thrown into the air falls again to the earth according to definite laws, when a crystal is formed from a saline fluid, when sulphur and mercury unite to form cinnabar, these facts are neither more nor less mechanical life-phenomena than the growth and flowering of plants, than the propagation and sensory faculties of animals, or the perceptions and intelligence of man.' Further, there is no essential distinction between living and not-living matter; it is all a 'question of degree.' All the natural bodies with which we are acquainted are 'equally living.' And still further, every atom of matter has a soul—the 'Atom-Soul'—which is the sum of the 'Atom-Forces'; and when a certain number of carbon atoms unites with another number of hydrogen, oxygen, nitrogen, and sulphur atoms to form a molecule of protoplasm, called technically a 'Plastidule,' the sum of the atom-forces of these elements constitutes a Plastidule-Soul; and thus, 'through the accidental (zufälliges) aggregation of manifold combinations of the constant unchangeable Atom-Souls, originate the complex and highly variable Plastidule-Souls, the molecular factors of organic life.' There is no difficulty as regards the central soul, mind, or spirit (for the terms are used interchangeably) of man. 'For all soul-life is ultimately referable to the two elementary functions of sensation and motion, and their conversion into reflex action. The simple sensation of like and dislike (lust und unlust), the simple motions of attraction and repulsion,—these are the true elements from which, in endlessly manifold and complicated combinations, all mental faculties are built up. The love and hate of atoms, the attraction and repulsion of molecules, the motion and sensation of cells and organisms built up of cells; the thought and consciousness of men,—these are only various steps of the universal process of psychological evolution."

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE OF AMERICA.

OFFICERS.

President.
FRANCIS E. ABBOT.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.
HON. E. P. HURLBUT.....Albany, N. Y.
HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL.....Boston, Mass.
HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES.....St. Louis, Mo.
HON. HENRY BOOTH.....Chicago, Ill.
HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN.....Irvington, Ind.
HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT.....Boston, Mass.
MR. WM. J. POTTER.....New Bedford, Mass.
MR. R. P. HALLOWELL.....Boston, Mass.
MR. JAMES PARTON.....Newburyport, Mass.
MR. F. SCHUENEMANN-POTT.....San Francisco, Cal.
HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE.....Providence, R. I.
REV. M. J. SAVAGE.....Boston, Mass.
RABBI S. FELSENTHAL.....Chicago, Ill.
REV. W. H. SPENCER.....Sparta, Wis.
MR. SAMUEL L. RILL.....Florence, Mass.
MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH.....Detroit, Mich.
MR. KARL HEINZEN.....Editor of "Der Pioneer," Boston.
MR. HORACE SEAVEY.....Editor of the "Investigator," Boston.
RABBI ISAAC M. WISE.....Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
MR. MORITZ ELLINGER.....Editor of "Jewish Times," New York.
REV. ROBERT COLLYER.....Chicago, Ill.
DR. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.....Peoria, Ill.
DR. T. L. BROWN.....Binghamton, N. Y.
HON. R. S. MCCORMICK.....Franklin, Pa.
ELDER F. W. EVANS.....Mount Lebanon, N. Y.
MR. ELIZABETH THOMPSON.....New York City.
MR. A. MY POST.....Rochester, N. Y.
MR. ELIZABETH OADY STANTON.....Tombey, N. J.
MISS SALLIE HOLLY.....Lottsborough, Va.
JOSEPH MODONOUGH.....Albany, N. Y.
RABBI MAX SCHLESINGER.....Albany, N. Y.

Secretary.
W. H. HAMLEN.....231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.
MISS JANE P. TITCOMB.....142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.
J. A. J. WILCOX.....5 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.
J. A. J. WILCOX.....W. H. HAMLEN.
F. E. ABBOT.....C. D. B. MILLS.
D. G. CRANDON.

Executive Committee.
Alabama.....J. H. HALLEY, Selma.
Arkansas.....JOHN A. HENNS, Monticello.
California.....L. E. HATCO, San Francisco.
Colorado.....DAVID T. BAILEY, Granada.
Connecticut.....GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
Delaware.....JOSEPH D. GORLT, Greenville.
Florida.....T. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprise.
Georgia.....DR. A. A. BELL, Madison.
Illinois.....DR. A. G. HUMPHREY, Galesburg.
Indiana.....N. D. WATKINS, Xenia.
Iowa.....J. O. MOHRENB, Adel.
Kansas.....JOHN F. ARNOLD, Fort Scott.
Kentucky.....EMERSON BENTLEY, New Orleans.
Louisiana.....DR. W. H. BROWN, Bangor.
Maine.....J. S. RUSSELL, New Market.
Maryland.....W. H. BAYWARD, Boston.
Massachusetts.....KARL SCHUMMANN, Detroit.
Michigan.....J. E. BARNETT, Minneapolis.
Minnesota.....R. F. FERRISON, St. Louis.
Missouri.....W. E. CORLEND, Lincoln.
Montana.....Y. G. BARNETT, White Rock.
New Hampshire.....WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
New Jersey.....FRANCIS W. ORVIS, Passaic.
New York.....O. D. E. MILLS (Chairman), Syracuse.
North Carolina.....J. W. THORNE, Warren.
Ohio.....E. D. STARK, Cleveland.
Oregon.....SAMUEL COLT, Humboldt Basin.
Pennsylvania.....G. W. BALDWIN, Lancaster.
Rhode Island.....GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
South Carolina.....P. W. FULLER, Columbia.
Tennessee.....DR. E. E. PRIOR, Chattanooga.
Texas.....DR. L. J. RUSSELL, Harrisville.
Vermont.....R. L. HAUGHTON, North Bennington.
Virginia.....L. SPAULDING, Norfolk.
West Virginia.....DR. A. M. DENT, Weaon.
Wisconsin.....ROBERT C. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
Wyoming.....D. E. WILCOX, Fankton.
District of Columbia.....W. H. DOUGLASS, Washington.
Washington.....W. FERGUSON, Provo City.
Wyoming.....NORMAN S. PORTER.

Finance Committee.
D. G. CRANDON, Chairman.....Chelsea, Mass.
MR. SARAH B. OTIS.....137 Warren Avenue, Boston.
MR. LAN P. HYDE.....231 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES

Chartered by the National Liberal League of America.

FLORENCE, MASS.—President, Seth Hunt; Secretary, Clarence E. Brown.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Florence Liberal League.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.—President, John W. Truesdell; Secretary, Mrs. Nettie C. Truesdell.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Onondaga County Liberal League.

ALBANY, N. Y.—President, Thomas J. Hennessey; Secretary, Thomas Dugan.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Albany Liberal Association.

N. B.—The above is an acknowledgment of the fact that a charter is due and will be sent as soon as possible. Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues originally chartered by the "National Liberal League" will receive charters from the "National Liberal League of America" without extra charge, if they send a certified copy of their vote to accept the following invitation:—

"Voted, That all Local Leagues that approve the formation of the National Liberal League of America are invited to dissolve their connection with the old League, and to join this League."

APPROPOS OF Sabbatarian muddle-headedness and want of logical consistency, I was travelling on the underground-railway last Sunday evening, and at one of the stations there entered the carriage a bishop—apparently a colonial or a pan-Anglican—and another gentleman. "No," said the bishop in audible voice, resuming what appeared to be an interrupted conversation—"no, we must oppose the Sunday opening of museums. It has an interest for us as well as for you. Once let them get in the thin end of the wedge, and the sacredness of the Christian Sunday will be gone forever." And the bishop who said this was travelling in a railway-carriage on a Sunday evening, and never thought of the "thin end of the wedge" argument in connection with that circumstance.—Truth.

SATIRE LIES respecting literary men during their lives, and eulogy does so after their death.—Voltaire.

The Literature of German Materialism.*

Germany is a land of strange contrasts, furnishing extreme illustrations of religious faith and unbelief. Watch a string of pilgrims making their way on foot, under the guidance of their priest and sacristan, mile after mile to some holy spring, where, years ago, people say, a blind man received sight and another was cured of scrofula and boils. Listen to their refrain, chanted unweariedly up hill and down. There is all the appearance of a pious, not to say superstitious, land and copious simple faith. But if you go into the taverns and restaurants of the town or village from which the pilgrims went forth in the morning, and listen to the frank talk of the place, you may hear avowals of the most novel and pronounced forms of heterodoxy; you may perhaps catch expressions, the spirit of which is il faut s'abriter la théologie. This contrast is of old standing in many parts of Germany. It grows, however, sharper and more visible. It is no longer local and exceptional; it is wellnigh everywhere. No flags of truce pass between the two camps of Belief and Unbelief. No mediators interpose to moderate the strife. No quarter is asked or offered. There are no Schleiermachers, with easy, affable, accommodating forms of rationalism; there are few theologians of the stamp of Daub and Günther, ready to strike up strange liaisons with philosophy; and there is little philosophical mysticism shading off into religious quietism. The systems of philosophy in vogue at present in Germany do not easily permit of the use of those cuttle-fish devices open to disciples of Hegel and Schelling, who, when pressed as to their orthodoxy, emitted a cloud of dark explanations, and made their escape in a friendly fog. The reign of Transcendentalism is long over, and downright speech is the fashion. The mist which hid the eternal combatants—the friends and foes of Authority and Faith—from each other has rolled away, and the hostile columns have met. In this country the theologian and the man of science, as a rule, go their own ways in peace. But in Germany they cannot keep their hands off each other. There is a permanent, elastic, and comprehensive casus belli, and the strife breaks out at election times, in political trials, at scientific congresses, over open graves and banquet tables. It is hard to say which is more acrimonious; sometimes there is little to choose between the tirades and intolerance of the priest and the savant. We should not like certain German theologians to have their own way with modern materialists. Our recollection of certain bishops' pastorals is that they are occasions not for feeding the lambs of the Church, but for whacking its foes in the laboratory. As for the scientific combatants in the Cultur-Kampf, it is possible that some of them would like to give their opponents just one gentle pinge,—of course, for the good of science. The angry feeling breaks out in many ways and in odd places. Ernst Haeckel, the learned and warlike Professor of Zoology at the University of Jena, and the ablest exponent of Darwinism in Germany, cannot refrain from appending to an exposition of the development theory a string of sneers, at best a little irrelevant, against the Church of Rome, complaints that the State allows the existence of monasteries and celibacy as an institution, and expressions of satisfaction that some bishops and Jesuits were in prison for disobedience to the law. If a savant happens to let fall conciliatory words; if he makes some remarks a little humbling to science, as Du Bois Reymond did at the Leipzig Congress; if he avows his belief, as Rudolf Wagner did, in the faith of the simple peasant; if he hints, as Virchow hinted, at the inadequateness of physical explanations of life, and the propriety of caution in accepting scientific surmises as proved, he is assailed as if he were some traitor to the cause of science, who had gone over to the enemy and become an ally of the Jesuits. The bad blood bred by Vogt's pamphlet, Köhlgrube, is not yet quite forgotten. We know not how many shrill and acrimonious last words there were about it. The Kampf um die Seele has been a very rough and carnal contest. We must add that the German Materialists and Anti-Materialists have pushed their theories to extremes. Nowhere is ridicule—the moderator and chastiser of extravagances—less potent than in Germany. Intrepid logic, not afraid to face a fact or two, is pretty sure to meet there more approbation than derision. Most philosophers can command a hearing. The various universities serve as so many free States, into which all philosophic wares enter untaxed. They are, too, cities of refuge. Persecuted in Munich, the theorist may flee into Jena.

A great change has come over the spirit of German science and philosophy, and this change is the key to many enigmas in connection with socialism, and to many problems of the future in the fatherland. It has not been the work of a day. Thirty to forty years ago, Hegel was supreme in Germany,—or Prussia, at all events. Strong in the protection of the Minister of Public Worship, Von Altenstein, he had driven away possible rivals, such as Beneke or Schleiermacher; Hegelianism had become the State philosophy, part and parcel of the regal rights of the House of Hohenzollern, an extension, so to speak, of its foreign policy. Hegel's monopoly of speculation was as close as that of some Continental States in regard to tobacco. All philosophers who did not evolve being out of not-being were officially denounced as superficial. In those days, Hegelianism was bread and butter, places and orders, to its votaries. It was a protection for speculations the most dangerous to Church and State; like the neutral's flag, it covered the enemy's goods. It was everywhere. Gans applied it to jurisprudence; Hegstenberg, Strauss, and Baur to theology; and in the very novels and legal books of practice of the time, you find traces—the shuffling, stern-foremost style, the Broddignagian phrases, the clouds of lean abstractions corresponding to no reality, like the paper money of a bank with a low reserve—of the omnipresent influence of Hegel. But when "the mighty cedar of Lebanon" fell, the influence of Hegel fell with him. After his death, his authority faded like a heap of loose sand roughly fingered by the wind; and, with the exception of the veteran Michelet and Rosenkranz, there has long been scarcely an important adherent of Hegelianism in its birthplace. It has taken refuge in Oxford, to which, it has been said, bad German philosophies go after death.

*Die Ideale des Materialismus. Von Armand Penster. Reissner und Gans, Köln.
Zellseelen und Seelenzellen. Von Ernst Haeckel. Deutsche Rundschau.

The next striking figure in German thought is Schopenhauer. There is a picturesque strength about him which philosophers in general do not possess; his burly figure, his massive head, and his clear, piercing eye,—a seldier's rather than a thinker's,—his brusque temper and decisive ways, marked him out at a Frankfort table d'hôte or in a box at the opera, of which he was so fond, as a notable man. Possessed of much of the wit of his frivolous, gadding mother, the once famous Johanna Schopenhauer, and not a little of his father's business ability, full of audacious contempt for his countrymen, his clear nature revolting against the cloud-capped sages whom he found in authority, and writing with then unusual lucidity and naiveness,—the attribute of genius, according to him,—he was just the person, one would have thought, to make a revolution, and to make it at once. He did not mince matters in his books. All philosophy between his own time and that of Kant had been "mere University charlatanism"; Hegel was "a very ordinary intellect, but a very extraordinary charlatan"; and the tasteless pulp which was doled out to the youth of Germany at the universities as nutriment was a colossal mystification. But the preacher of modern Buddhism and the iconoclast of philosophical reputations did not get at once a hearing. He wrote now in a passion and now in the sulks. It was no use; the public was deaf to this termagant philosopher. It took twenty years and all the efforts of his friends or disciples,—Frauenstädt, Gwinner, and Hartmann,—before the German nation knew much of the Dantisc philosopher. Why was this? Perhaps because he had no University chair; perhaps, too, because he wrote in too homely and clear a fashion to be understood or thought much of by a generation bred on Hegelian fare. People liked a little fog in their national philosophy as they liked vinegar in their national dishes. They preferred, as Varnhagen Von Ense said, a sentence which it took along time to chew.

Meantime, Materialism had grown with marvellous rapidity. Heine early observed the coming change. The poet, who was also, in a jaunty way, a bit of a prophet, and who saw so many things that were to be, from his prison-bed in the Rue d'Amsterdam, says, in his poem of "The World Turned Topsy-turvy," that "the German bears believe no more, and have become atheistic, while the French parrots have turned good Christians." "We are grown out of delam," he wrote on another occasion. "Our latest philosophers have proclaimed thorough atheism as the last word of German philosophy."

Heine had in his eye Ludwig Andreas Feuerbach, son of Paul Johann Anselm Feuerbach, the illustrious jurist. People have somewhat forgotten this impetuous revolutionist, whose name twenty years ago was in all mouths, and his changing inner life, so typical of his seething, tumultuous time. Beginning as an ardent, ascetic student of theology at Heidelberg, he went as a young man to Berlin to study exegesis and Church history at the feet of Schleiermacher and the venerable Neander. He fell under the influence of Hegel, and turned his back on theology. Proceeding per saltum, or, rather, by curious spurts and zigzag movements, he journeyed on until he reached a pronounced, if not consistent, form of Materialism; and he who had proclaimed, Extra philosophiam, nulla salus, lived to write, "My philosophy is no philosophy." His desire was to build up a religion out of earthly materials, on a purely earthly foundation; and for this purpose he wrote book after book, much read twenty years ago here and in Germany and America, and translated into every European tongue. Rhapsodical in style, not to say ranting in parts, they were full of pious expressions and irreligious sentiments. They recall in many ways the later writings of Comte, whom Feuerbach resembled in all but his crude enthusiasm and gushing, illogical apostrophes. They declare that all knowledge is derived from the senses; that theology properly understood is anthropology; that homo deus homini is ever true; and that if religion is the dream of the human mind, it should be a dream about realities, not chimeras. Feuerbach's sentimental sacraes and excited untheological theology were for a time attractive and influential. Since he wrote, a crowd of writers—Moleschott, Vogt, Spiess, Burmeister, Ruge, Strauss, Marx, Hellwald, Wiener, Czolbe, etc.—have pushed along the path which Feuerbach entered. They have got weapons from physical science of which he knew little. They have grown in boldness and frankness. They have got rid of Feuerbach's desire to pour new wine into old bottles. People were a little startled and shocked at Vogt's unflinching enunciation, in his early works, of the doctrine that the soul is only a rather misleading name for the functions of the organs of the body, and that it must cease to exist with these organs. They have heard too much of this to be now surprised at it. A stream of materialistic literature has poured steadily forth from the press. And it is not literature speaking the language of science, and addressing a small circle of cultivated men and women. Materialism has appealed to the people, and its ablest exponents, such as Vogt and Büchner, write in a homely, lucid style which plain men and women can understand.

We might name a dozen books as fair samples of this literature. The Principles of Nature, by Professor Wiener, of Carlsruhe,—a prose De Rerum Natura, or explanation of everything, from the nature of atoms to the freedom of the will,—is an important work; Rosenkranz, no mean authority, says that it has been for Germany what the Système de la Nature was for France in the eighteenth century. Other books of consequence in this connection are Dr. Büchner's Force and Matter,—a clever book, written by one who comes of a family distinguished in letters,—which has passed through so many editions that it has been termed the Bible of German Materialism; the History of Human Development, by Professor Hellwald; and a little-known work of great ability, Schuricht's Extracts from the Journal of a Materialist. Their common characteristic is, that they are materialistic in the full sense,—Materialism naked and unashamed. We know that some of the writers to whom we refer would deny the propriety of the description; they would even say that it was meaningless. We quite admit that some of them have, especially of late, shown a great desire to effect a compromise between the two great schools of philosophy. Witness, for instance, the curious speculations by Professor Hückel in a recent number of the Deutsche Rundschau about Zelleseelen and Seelenzellen,—speculations which go to show that each cell of every living organism has its soul. But let us submit a few questions to some of the writers in question, and mark their answers. What—to put at once a leading question—is man? The reply of not a few seems to be, A bucket of water and a few pinches of phosphorus. What is thought? "Thought," says Moleschott, "is a movement of matter"; "without phosphorus, no thought." "Geist und Seele," says Hückel, "are only higher and combined or differentiated powers of the same function, which we speak of in the most general way as force; and force is a general function of matter. We know no matter not endowed with force, and, vice versa, we know no forces which are not connected with matter." Matter is almost deified. "Motion and matter," says Büchner, "are alike eternal." "All our life," Vogt somewhere observes, "the life of all organisms, the whole telluric and cosmic life, is built on the principle that matter remains eternally the same." "Matter," says Wiener, "is and always has been eternal." No mercy is accorded to teleology in any form. How was the world created? "Purely through physical and chemical forces, without organic substance, without a known Creator, nay, without a leading idea, the world exists." (Vogt.) What is the purpose of the world? "The laws of Nature," according to one answer, "are rude, inflexible powers, which know nothing of morality or pity." "The search after a cause for the world," says Büchner, "is like going up an endless ladder." Richard Schuricht—who, if he writes ironically, is no coarse caricaturist—will not allow men the satisfaction of believing that they are the subjects of fixed, necessary laws; that is not quite correct. Nature does, indeed, conduct her operations according to immutable, inflexible, determined laws; but the collocation of the forces of Nature, to use an expression of Dr. Chalmers, their relation to each other, is accidental. Necessity is, therefore, only a special case of chance. Man, the world, all that therein is, is but the product of an accidentally existing universe,—one of the bubbles on the surface of the ocean of Being which will by and by burst.

It is useless for any one to try to hide the irreligious or rather anti-religious character of much of this literature. The subject is a delicate one; but no one, the theologian least of all, can afford to shut his eyes to this grave characteristic of so much of modern German speculation. Atheism is written on many pages of the Materialistic and Social-Democratic literature. And, be it said, it is not timorous atheism which crouches under cover, speaks an esoteric language, seeks no converts, asks merely to be let alone, or strikes at its foes only from behind with the weapons of irony and innuendo. Not at all; it is atheism which comes out into the open, displays its menacing form with effrontery, speaks its mind roughly and freely,—atheism, active, militant, angry, intolerant, and fanatical. It addresses not merely professors and men of science; it speaks the patois of the common people. The tactics of secret sapping and ambushes are not to the taste of Büchner or Hellwald or Marx or journals of the stamp of the Volkstaat. They have no desire, common to some opponents of Orthodoxy, to translate the gospel narratives into beautiful pastorals or idyls. Religion in any form is in their eyes the Bastille of the human mind. We hesitate to quote typical passages from this literature; it is, however, perhaps not true wisdom to hide their character. So let one or two sentences serve as samples of dozens: "God did not create the world," says Büchner, "but the theist created God, and thereby all the injurious consequences which flow therefrom." The same writer observes:—

"Theism, or belief in a personal God, leads, as all history clearly shows, to monarchism and priestly rule; pantheism, or belief in an all-pervading God, leads, where it is in the ascendancy, to contempt of the senses, denial of the ego, to absorption in God, and to a state of stagnation. Atheism or philosophical monism alone leads to freedom, to intelligence, to progress, to due recognition of man,—in a word, to humanism."

"Socialism," says the Fürther Wochenblatt, a Social-Democratic journal, echoing the sentiments of Karl Marx, "is a child of atheism, and the beginning of a great period of atheistical culture." "He who takes from the people heaven," says the Volkstaat,

"must give it the earth." "When all is over with heaven, the people is justified in reclaiming the earth." We prefer not to quote samples of the dull and lumpy baldry of Vogt in his unscientific and weaker moments, or of some of the satirists of Social Democracy. But one or two extracts from graver authors may not be out of place: "Religions," says Arnold Ruge, the friend of Strauss and Feuerbach, "are all alike in this: they rest on stories or myths." Hellwald says:—

"The task of science is to destroy all ideals; to manifest their hollowness and nothingness; to show that belief in God and religion is deception; that morality, equality, love, freedom, rights of man, are lies; and at the same time to prove the necessity of all these errors for human development."

It would be a ridiculous mistake to confound with the writers whom we have quoted Schopenhauer and Hartmann, the most widely read of living German philosophers; they stand in a wholly different category. The former, who despised most of his countrymen, despised materialists perhaps a little more than others. But Schopenhauer and Hartmann both agree with Hellwald, Büchner, and Radenhausen, the author of Isis, in their antagonism to the claims of religion, natural or revealed. Schopenhauer's antipathy breaks out in such aphorisms as—"No one who really philosophizes is religious." "All positive religion is, after all, an usurper of the throne which belongs by right to philosophy. Philosophers will, therefore, regard it as a necessary evil and crutch for the sickly weakness of most minds." Hartmann, who is in many respects a disciple of Schopenhauer, begins one of his works with the assertion that religion and science must be in hostility. Protestantism is his special aversion, or rather object of contempt. It is the gravedigger of true Christianity. The freedom of opinion which it permits is antagonistic to the genuine Christian idea of obedience. Its liberalism is irreligious—an un-Christianlike Christianity; its amicable relation to this world is in opposition to the pessimistic spirit of the Gospels; and modern Protestantism is but a hybrid of mediæval Christianity and the paganism of the Renaissance. In a few sentences Hartmann runs up a new religion which will become truly universal,—the said religion to be a fusion of the religious ideas of Asia with the elements of Christianity worthy of preservation; the whole steeped, as far as we can make out, in any fiction which comes handy, and which the multitude is likely to believe.

It is a delicate task to make any general charge on this subject: the field is wide, and exceptions to any generalization can be found; but there is one unpleasant peculiarity of too much of this literature. The opinions which we have quoted are not rare. Those who entertain them are not likely to be converted or affected by scolding or remonstrance, and hard names are out of place; but it is not easy to understand the careless and unholy glee with which some of the authors trample under foot and besmirch ideas revered and tenderly regarded by their fellows. Helvetius and Lamettrie did not compass sea and land to make proselytes. At all events, they did not regard error as a black crime, and, looking down from their serene atmosphere, they would have been, perhaps, puzzled to understand the noisy levity, the unphilosophic rage and intolerance, of philosophers with respect to beliefs which are entwined with good lives. Each to his taste; but perhaps a touch or two more of solemnity might have been added without making this literature a whit less scientific in spirit.

We should pass over one of the salient marks of this literature if we said nothing as to the important part played by the Development Theory. The extent to which speculations about atoms figure in it is remarkable; we could name a dozen books in which they play as large a part as they do in Lucretius' Cosmology. But the multitudinous ways in which Mr. Darwin's theory is applied are still more surprising. Sometimes the speculations are a little crude and fanciful. We do not refer to the writings of scientific men of the stamp of Ocarus or Hückel, whose solid merits Mr. Darwin has, with his usual fairness and generosity, emphatically recognized. A little too much is made in popular scientific works of the ancestral ape, who is treated with all the respect due to the founder of the family. Just to spite the theologians, dozens of controversialists give daily thanks that their first parents did not live in innocence in Paradise, but swung themselves by their tails in primeval forests. No doubt the German materialists lay stress on the connection between man and the lower animals in order to uproot common ideas as to teleology; to emphasize the view that man is not qualitatively different from the higher mammals; that his brain, if more potent than theirs, differs only in degree; and that the boasted isolation of man from his ministering dependents is but the dream of soaring pride and egotism. Copernicus taught men to cease to regard the earth as the centre of the universe; the Development Theory teaches him to regard himself as no longer the central object of creation. Robinet gives us a wider horizon when he speaks of plants as "sedentary animals"; and our relation to all that lives is emphasized by speaking of man as a speaking ape. These are the explanations offered of this prevalent tendency. Whether it springs also in any degree from a desire to level down man, or to slur over the differences between him and his inferiors, and whether it is not too much in the spirit of a favorite dictum from Goethe, that reason had been given only to make man more brutish than the brutes, will be a matter of opinion.

German pessimism is associated with the name of Schopenhauer, the philosopher who counselled himself in these terms: "Study to acquire an accurate and connected view of the utter despicability of mankind in general." It is also connected with the name of Edward Von Hartmann, the most popular of modern German philosophers, whose work on the Philosophy of the Unconscious has had a marvellous circulation. Originally an officer in the Prussian army, he has turned his mind to literature and speculations. He is a writer of force and picturesque. He is not deficient in a Dilogenes kind of humor—not the subterranean mirth of Hoffmann, or that rather painful phenomenon which sometime, passes as humor in Germany, and which it requires a good deal of the beer of the country to appreciate but humor such as Englishmen can appreciate. He is consistently and thoroughly pessimist. The world itself stands self-condemned. The life of man is, in his view, more miserable because more intelligent than that of the higher mammals: theirs is worse than that of the oyster; and the best existence is that of unconscious matter. But in truth a cloud of gloom rests over the whole of the literature of modern Materialism. It is not lighted up by the hopes of human perfectibility, so characteristic of the buoyant spirit of French Materialism; and the spirit of which we speak is not a survival of Wertherism, the product of a boyish self-consciousness and sore and wounded vanity. Those who know the literature of moral pathology will think of Senancour and the sweet misanthropy and voluptuous despair which that eloquent valetudinarian liked to fondle. But they will find there is a difference; they will miss the high resolves made in gloom and lassitude, the soul wandering about over dark waters seeking a resting-place. The spirit of which we now speak is a calmly reasoned-out conviction, a mood of stagnant resignation to the fact that all is for the worst. We might name a dozen books, the authors of which virtually tell us that they are not prepared to incur any responsibility in regard to the continuance of this world; and that, if free to speak their minds, they are bound to say it ought to be wound up. Richard Schuricht, a writer in point, speaks in doleful, desponding terms. He is as much dissatisfied with the results of learning as Faust. More knowledge, he has found, is more misery. He is a materialist, and yet "Materialism," he says, "springs from a conviction based on experience that every effort is a failure, and our position is a comfortless one." What we know only diminishes our delusions, and "with the lost illusion goes the lost pleasure."

"The dying Goethe exclaimed, 'More light.' Not so we. We perish in that excess of light which modern physical science sheds on the burning question of the day. More to be desired by us would be that twilight in which thought cannot thrive, and in which Fantasy can find fit food. My blindness give me back again, my sense of darkness and of joy."

He scoffs at the efforts of Büchner and Feuerbach to clothe with dignity the materialists' creed. "All in this world is common; we materialists desire to make no exception." Man's motives must and ought to be self-interest: what pleases A is good for A; what hurts A is bad for A; B, C, and D's feelings go for nothing. "The most logical person in the world is the Devil, for he is an out and out egotist." Max Stirner, in his book, Der Einzige und Sein Eigenthum, takes the same line. Each man, according to his simple creed, is a law unto himself; he has no room within him but for himself,—Quisquis sibi Deus. Egotism, thorough-going egotism, is reason; to talk of anything else is folly, hypocrisy, or fear of the consequences to which rational Materialism leads. It would be worth while to trace in literature the influence of these speculations. The writer of Die Ideale des Materialismus says that philosophy has come down among the people; and it is quite true that the flavor of the doctrines which we have described may be detected in dozens of popular writers who do not openly philosophize. It is no fancy to say that there is an aroma of them in many of Paul Heyse's pretty pages, beautiful with the beauty of decay. Some of Spielhagen's characters—Oswald Stein, for instance—have breathed the vapors which exhale from this literature. And here in Die Ideale des Materialismus is a crude embodiment of its spirit. This is a jumble of tales, metaphysics, and poems, all in a strain of sentimental Materialism. It is written in mingled, affected German, and the style is marked by foppish ellipses. Its object is to carry the war against religion into the regions of the feelings; but the attempt is imperfect. It is, in fact, a farrago of coarse sentiments and situations and fine words, all too like a beronged and battered beauty. Much of it is as nasty as Gutzkow's novel, Wally, and we know nothing much worse in literature. It will be interesting to watch the outcome of the speculations to which we have referred. Whether German youth, which is in these days tempted to utter Goethe's last words, "Nun ist alles vorbei" before life is well begun, will do the great things wrought by a generation which heard and answered to Fichte's words of manly hope and call to action is a problem which we leave untouched.—London Times, Nov. 7.

"Now, my man," said the lawyer to the witness, "tell us exactly what passed." "Yes, my lord. I said I would not have the pig." "And what was his answer?" "He said he had been keeping it for me, and that he—" "No, no! He could not have said that. He spoke in the first person." "No, my lord; I was the first person that spoke." "I mean, don't bring in the third person. Repeat his exact words." "There was no third person, my lord; only him and me." "My good fellow, he did not say he had been keeping the pig. He said 'I have been keeping it.'" "I assure you, my lord, there was no mention of your lordship at all. We are on different stories. There was no third person there; and if anything had been said about your lordship I must have heard it."

MISERY'S PEAR-TREE.

AN ANCIENT LEGEND OF FLANDERS.

Once upon a time, there lived in the village of Vlcq, on the banks of the Scheldt, a good woman called Misery, who went about begging from door to door. In those days, the village of Vlcq was little better than a hamlet; it lay on the edge of a marsh, and there were only a few miserable farms covered with rushes to be seen. Misery dwelt apart in a lonely hut plastered with clay, where her sole companion was her dog, Faro; and her worldly goods were a staff and a scrip, which too often she brought back almost empty. To tell the truth, however, she had besides, in a little enclosure behind her hovel, a tree,—a single one. This tree was a pear-tree, so beautiful that its like has never been seen since the famous apple-tree of the Garden of Eden. The only delight that Misery experienced in this world was to eat the fruit of her garden,—that is, of her pear-tree.

Unhappily, the little boys of the village came to rob her enclosure. Every day, Misery started forth with Faro to beg; but in the autumn, Faro remained at home to guard the pears; and it was heart-breaking to both, for the poor woman and the poor dog loved each other with a great affection.

Now, there came a winter in which for two whole months it hailed fit to break the very stones. Then there fell such a snow that the wolves left the woods and came into people's houses. It was a terrible time for the whole country, and Misery and Faro suffered more than the rest. One evening, when the wind howled and the snow piled up in great drifts, the two unfortunates were nestling close to keep each other warm before the dying embers on the hearth, when a knock was heard on the door. Always, whenever any one came near the cabin, Faro barked with rage, thinking that it was the little marauders. This evening, on the contrary, he began to whimper gently, and to wag his tail as a mark of joy.

"For the love of God," cried a pleading voice, "open your door to a poor man who is perishing of cold and hunger!"

"Pull the latch-string," answered Misery. "It shall never be said that in such a time as this I would keep one of the dear Lord's creatures outside."

The stranger entered; he seemed even older and more miserable than Misery, and had no other covering than a blue frock all in tatters.

"Sit you down, my good man," said Misery. "You have come to a very poor place, but I have still something left to warm you up with."

She put her last stick on the fire, and gave the old man three morsels of bread and a pear, which was all she had left. Very soon the flame leaped up, and the old man ate with a hearty appetite. Now, while he ate, Faro licked his feet.

When her guest had finished, Misery wrapped her old coverlet of fustian around him, and forced him to lie down upon her cot, while, for herself, she settled herself to sleep with her head resting on her stool.

In the morning, Misery was the first to awake. "I have nothing left," she said to herself, "and my guest will go hungry. Let us see if there is no way to go and beg something in the village."

She put her head out of the door; the snow had ceased to fall, and the sun shone as if it were a spring day. She turned back to get her staff, and saw the stranger risen and ready to leave.

"What!" said she; "are you going already?"

"My mission is fulfilled," replied the unknown, "and I have to go to give account to my master. I am not what I seem; I am Saint Wanon, the patron of the parish of Condé, and I have been sent by the good father to see how my faithful ones practise charity, which is the first of the Christian virtues. I have knocked at the doors of the burgomaster and the burghers of Condé; I have knocked at the doors of the lord and the farmers of Vlcq; the burgomaster and the burghers of Condé, the lord and the farmers of Vlcq, have let me freeze at their thresholds. Thou alone hast had pity upon me, and thou art as wretched as I. God will reward thee; make a wish and it shall come to pass."

Misery crossed herself and fell on her knees.

"Great Saint Wanon," said she, "I no longer marvel that Faro licked your feet; but it is not for reward that I do a charity. Besides, I have need of nothing."

"Thou art too destitute of everything to have no wants; speak, what wilt thou have?"

Misery kept silent.

"Wilt thou have a beautiful farm, with the granary full of wheat, the wood-house full of wood, the cupboard full of bread? wilt thou have riches? wilt thou have honors? wilt thou be a duchess? wilt thou be a queen?"

Misery shook her head.

"A saint who has any self-respect ought not to be under obligation to a poor woman," returned Saint Wanon, with an air of pique. "Speak, or I shall think thou refusest me from pride."

"Since you insist upon it, great Saint Wanon, I will obey. I have there in my garden a pear-tree which gives me most beautiful pears; unfortunately, the young rogues in the village come to rob me of them, and I am forced to leave poor Faro at home to mount guard. Grant that whoever climbs my pear-tree may not come down without my permission."

"Amen!" replied Saint Wanon, smiling at her simplicity; and after having given her his blessing, he set out upon his journey.

The blessing of Saint Wanon brought good-luck to Misery, and from that time forth she never returned home with an empty sack. Spring followed winter; summer, spring; and autumn, summer. The little boys, seeing Misery go off with Faro, climbed up the pear-tree and stuffed their pockets; but when they undertook to come down, they found they were caught fast in a trap.

Misery, on her return, beheld them perched up in the tree, left them there a good while, and, when in the kindness of her heart she let them go, set Faro barking at their heels. They did not dare to come again; the villagers themselves avoided passing the enchanted tree, and Misery and Faro lived as happy as one can live here below.

Toward the end of the autumn, Misery was enjoying herself in her garden in the sun, when she heard a voice crying, "Misery! Misery! Misery!" This voice was so mournful that the good woman began to tremble in every limb, and Faro howled as though there had been a corpse in the house.

She turned round and saw a man, tall, lean, yellow, and old,—old as a patriarch. This man carried a scythe as long as a hop-pole.

Misery recognized Death.

"What do you want, man of God?" said she, in an altered voice; "and what have you come for with that scythe?"

"I come to do my work. Come, my good Misery, thine hour hath struck; thou must follow me."

"Already?"

"Already? But thou shouldst thank me; thou who art so poor, so old, and so crippled."

"Not so poor nor so old as you think for, master. I have bread in the cupboard and wood in the pile; I shall be only ninety-five come Candlemas; and as for being crippled, I am as straight as you on my legs,—without offence be it said."

"Go to! Thou wilt be much better off in Paradise."

"We know what we lose; what we gain by change, we know not," said Misery, philosophically. "Besides, it would grieve Faro so much."

"Faro shall follow thee. Come, make up thy mind."

Misery sighed. "Grant me at least a few moments, till I tidy up a bit; I should not like to make the people in the other world ashamed of me."

Death consented.

Misery put on her best gown of flowered Indian muslin, which she had had for more than thirty years, her white bonnet, and her old Silesian mantle,—all worn, but without a hole or a spot,—which she never wore except on the great saints' days.

While dressing herself, she cast a last glance upon her cabin, and called to mind her pear-tree. A strange thought came into her head, and she could hardly keep back a smile.

"While I am getting ready, will you kindly do me a service, man of God?" said she to Death. "If you will get up into my pear-tree and pluck me the three pears which are left, I can eat them on my journey."

"Be it so," said Death, and he got up into the pear-tree.

He plucked the three pears, and attempted to come down, but to his great surprise he was unable to stir from the tree.

"Ho! Misery!" cried he; "help me to get down. I believe this cursed tree is bewitched!"

Misery came to the door-way. Death was making superhuman efforts with his long arms and his long legs, but every time that he got himself free from the tree, the tree, as if it were a living creature, took hold of him again, and folded him in its long branches.

"My soul!" said she; "I am not at all in a hurry to go to Paradise. Thou art very well off. Stay where thou art, my good fellow. The human race will owe me a debt of gratitude."

And Misery shut her door, and left Death perched up in her pear-tree.

At the end of the month, as Death no longer did his work, everybody was astonished to find that there had not been a single loss of life at Vlcq, at Fresnes, and at Condé. The astonishment was redoubled at the end of the next month, especially when it was learned that it was the same at Valenciennes, at Douai, at Lille, and throughout all Flanders.

A like thing had never been heard of; and when the new year came in, it was known by the almanac that the same thing had happened in France, in Belgium, in Holland, as well as with the Austrians, the Swedes, and the Russians.

The year went by, and it was a settled fact that for fifteen months there had not been, throughout the entire world, a single case of death. All the sick had got well without the doctors knowing how or why, which had not at all prevented them from taking to themselves all the credit of the cures.

This year rolled round like the previous one, without any deaths; and when it came to St. Sylvester's day, from one end of the land to the other men embraced one another, and congratulated themselves on having become immortal. There were public rejoicings, and they had a fête in Flanders such as had not been seen since the world was.

The good Flemings, no longer having any fear of dying from indigestion, or from gout or apoplexy, ate and drank their fill. It was calculated that in three days each person ate a bushel of grain, without counting meat and vegetables, and drank a barrel of beer, to say nothing of Geneva and brandy.

I confess, for my part, that I find it hard to believe this; but all the same the world was never so happy, and nobody suspected Misery of being the cause of this universal felicity; Misery did not boast of it, from modesty.

All went well for ten, twenty, thirty years; but, at the end of thirty years, it was not a rare thing to see old men of one hundred and ten and one hundred and twenty years, which ordinarily is the age of the most extreme decrepitude. Now, these last, loaded down with infirmities, with memory gone, blind and deaf, deprived of taste, feeling, and smell, insensible of the slightest enjoyment, began to find that immortality is not at all the great blessing which it had been at first thought to be. They were seen dragging themselves along in the sun, bent double over their staves, with hoary locks, shaking heads, sightless eyes, coughing, tottering, their flesh gone, out of shape, withered up, like so many enormous snails. The women were even more horrible than the men.

The feeblest of the old men kept their beds; and there was not a house where you did not find five or six beds where the ancestors babbled, to the great weariness of their great-grandsons and the sons of their great-grandsons.

They were even obliged to get them together in immense hospitals, where each new generation was occupied in taking care of the preceding ones, who could not be cured of life. More than this, as there were no longer any wills made, nobody inherited anything, and the new generations possessed nothing of their own, all the property belonging by law to the great-grandfathers and great-great-grandfathers, who could not enjoy it.

Under invalid kings, governments grew weak, laws relaxed, and soon the immortals, sure of not being punished after death, gave themselves up to every crime; they pillaged, robbed, burned, but, alas! they could not kill.

In every kingdom, the cry "Long live the king" became a seditious cry, and was forbidden under the severest penalties, with the exception of the penalty of death. This was not all. As the animals did not die any more than the men, soon the earth was so overrun with inhabitants that it could not nourish them; then came a terrible famine, and men, wandering half-naked through the fields for want of a roof to cover their heads, suffered cruelly from hunger, without being able to die of it.

If Misery had only known of this frightful state of things, she would not have been willing to prolong it, even at the price of life; but, accustomed of old to privations and infirmities, she and Faro suffered less from them than others; and then they had become, as it were, deaf and blind, and Misery did not take much account of what was going on about her.

Then men set themselves to work with as much ardor to seek their final end as they had hitherto done to avoid it. They had recourse to the most subtle poisons and the most deadly weapons; but weapons and poisons only injured their bodies without destroying them.

Formidable wars were decreed. With common accord, in order to render one another the service of mutual destruction, nations rushed to arms, each against the other; but they inflicted the most frightful calamities, without succeeding in killing a single man. A Congress of Death was assembled; the doctors flocked to it from the four quarters of the globe; there came white, black, yellow, and copper-colored; and they all sought together for a remedy against life, without being able to find it. A prize of ten millions was offered to whomsoever it might be that should discover it; all the doctors wrote pamphlets on life, as they used to do on cholera, and they did not cure this disease any more than the other.

It was a more dreadful calamity than the deluge; for it lasted longer, and there appeared no sign of its ever coming to an end.

Now, at this time, there was in Condé a most learned physician, who spoke almost altogether in Latin, and whom they called Dr. De Profundis. He was a most worthy man, who, in the good old times, had helped off many a poor body into the other world, and who now was disgusted at being unable to cure any one. One evening, when he was coming from dining with the mayor of Vlcq, he lost his way in the marsh. Chance brought him near Misery's garden, and he heard a plaintive voice, which said:—

"Oh, who will set me free, and who will deliver the land from immortality, a hundred times worse than the pestilence!"

The learned doctor lifted up his eyes, and his delight was only equalled by his surprise; he had recognized Death.

"What! is it you, my old friend?" said he; "Quid agis in hac pyrâ perched? What are you doing up there in the pear-tree?"

"Nothing at all, Dr. De Profundis; and that is what makes me so unhappy," replied Death; "lend me your hand to get down."

The good doctor gave him his hand, and Death made such an effort to get himself out of the tree that he lifted the doctor off the ground.

The pear-tree immediately seized hold of him, and held him in its branches.

Dr. De Profundis struggled in vain; he was obliged to keep company with Death.

There was much astonishment the next day, and the day after, when he failed to appear. As he gave no sign of life, they had him placarded and advertised in the Gazette; but it was labor lost. Dr. De Profundis was the first man that had disappeared from Condé for many a year. Had he, then, found out the secret of dying, and had he, heretofore so generous, kept it for himself alone?

All the inhabitants of Condé set out upon the search, and they beat up the country so well in every sense of the word that they came upon the garden of Misery. At their approach, the doctor waved his handkerchief as a signal of distress.

"This way!" he cried to them. "This way, my friends! Here he is! Here is Death! I was right in my pamphlet. I said we should find him in the marsh of Vlcq, the true nest of the cholera. I have got him at last, but non possumus descendere; we can't get down from this cursed pear-tree."

"Long live Death!" shouted the Condéans in chorus; and they approached without fear.

The first comers held out their hands to Death and the doctor; but, like the doctor, they were taken off the ground, and seized by the branches of the tree. Very soon the pear-tree was entirely covered with men. Wonderful to relate, it grew in proportion as it got hold of people. Those who came afterward took the others by the feet, others hung on to these, and all together formed the rings of several chains of men which extended to the distance of a musket-shot. But in vain was it that the last ones pulled with all their might; they could not pull off their friends from the accursed tree. They took it into their hands to cut down the pear-tree; they started off to hunt up axes, and began to chop all at once. Alas! they could not even see the marks of their blows.

They looked at one another entirely confounded, and did not know what saint to call on, when Misery was attracted by the noise, and asked the cause of it. They explained to her what had been going on for so long a time, and she comprehended the evil she had unintentionally caused.

"I alone can set Death free; and I consent to do it, but on one condition,—that Death does not come for us, Faro and me, until I have called him three times."

"Agreed," said Death.

"Come down; I give you permission!" said Misery; and Death, the doctor, and the rest fell from the tree like so many over-ripe pears.

Death set himself at work without leaving his place, and sent off those who were in the greatest hurry; but every one wanted to be first. The great man saw that he would have too much on his hands. To assist him, he raised an army of doctors, and appointed Dr. De Profundis general-in-chief.

A few days sufficed to Death and the doctor to relieve the earth of the excess of the living, and everything got back into order again. Everybody who was more than a hundred years old had the right to die, and did so, with the exception of Misery, who held herself quiet, and who, since then, has not yet called Death three times.

That is the reason, they say, why Misery is always with us in the world.

MR. PARSONS AND HIS WORK.

[This record of most unselfish and truly philanthropic work, done by an Orthodox minister whose soul is far larger than his creed, must command the deepest sympathy of all who love mankind.—ED.]

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CHRISTIAN REGISTER:—

The questions asked by your correspondent have been asked by many others. Will you allow me to answer them in the Register, and tell you the financial side of this surprising story?

In May last, the attention of the New York Evening Post was called to Mr. Parsons, and his offer to take poor little children into country homes for two weeks during the summer. The Post stated this plan simply and distinctly, and called upon its readers for contributions to defray the expense of railway fares, offering at the same time to become their financial agent, to receive and apply all money given for this purpose, and to send out with Mr. Parsons needy children collected from the lowest quarters of the city. The money began to come in at once, and kept coming, in sums ranging from thirteen cents to two hundred dollars. Thirty-two lists were published in the Post from May 25 to August 29. The total amount received was two thousand nine hundred and eighty or ninety dollars and some odd cents. Out of this sum, one thousand and seventy-six needy ones, large and small, have had two weeks and more of unexpected happiness instead of their daily misery. The distance travelled away from New York and Brooklyn varied from two hours to twelve. In three special instances, they involved a night on the Hudson River, and three or four hours afterwards by rail. You will not find this an expensive record. Can money be made to do more?

Mr. Parsons found the places in the country by personal application. His own travelling expenses were provided for by season or transient passes over the different roads, given to him, like everything else, gladly, by the one great human heart, God's heart, beating in all the world. During the week, he introduced himself and his errand to the editors of local newspapers, and to resident ministers. He came sometimes upon a conference in session, or some county association of Sunday-schools. He was received as a stranger, with marked interest, or with a little suspicion and distrust, as it "happened." On Sunday, he presented his cause in any pulpit where he could gain permission; as, for instance, asking some Presbyterian brother for ten minutes before his sermon began, and some Baptist brother the same morning for ten minutes after his sermon was finished. And in ten minutes, many things can be said, where the tongue wags at both ends, and the listeners grow, second by second, more earnest and still!

In one instance, the speaker announced that he had places enough for dear, pretty little girls with curly hair and blue eyes,—little girls that one could take some pride in doing for; quiet little girls who would make no trouble. And he wanted places now for naughty little boys; especially for such as one troublesome little Dickie, who broke down a farmer's fruit-tree the year before, and went into all sorts of mischief,—poor Dickie! nine years old, with swellings in the glands of his neck, and hemorrhage, and not a bit taller since last summer; and his lame, tired mother dreading to see the doctor, lest he should tell her she must lose him. Before Mr. Parsons was out of the pulpit, one man had engaged Dickie. "You shall have him," was the answer; "he is a dear, bright little fellow; and there are plenty of Dickies." Some one else offered to take two unruly boys; and a third promised room for half a dozen of any sort selected. Boys were in the ascendant afterwards.

A call came from one village for twelve girls. The mission-teacher who was asked to make the hasty selection in the very height of the season appeared at the train with twelve boys and one girl. She could find no girls who needed the change so much as these boys did, she said. What could she do? Could they go, or must she take them to their homes again? No; they must go. And what would become of them in the country? They will find a welcome, was the answer. The country people will understand it. And they did. One of their entertainers wrote to a mother: "I grew very fond of your boy during his two weeks' stay. He is a perfect little gentleman; and we shall be glad to see him again next summer. I hope to hear that his cough is better."

At a junction, coming back alone, and waiting for connection, there is time for Mr. Parsons to drop in at the tailor's shop and have the buttons on his coat repaired,—terribly loosened in every trip by the children's handling,—and time to tell his story. Perhaps it is the tailor who says he should like to have two of the little strangers come to him; perhaps it is the tailor's wife, or some one standing by, who says that at her father's farm, a few miles back, it would only be a pleasure to care for three or four. The names are hurriedly written down; there is no time to shake hands over it; the train is coming. A round of good-bys with eyes and voices, and in the village shop there is something left better than gossip that summer evening; and half a dozen moaning little ones in the seething city do not know yet that they have found more than a dozen warm new friends.

The time is past when Willard Parsons can expect to be held as an impersonality. His work must be certified; its method is offered for inspection and study. It is no dream; it is a reform, which must move on in the full light. He has given more than any of us to the work of last summer. He is not a man of means; he has no money to give. He gave his services, although he had no home, no income, and his strength was not equal to the care of a parish and the children too. He chose to abide by the children. It was suggested that the call of the Evening Post for contributions to its "Fresh Air Fund" should be made to include his support; but this he declined. No suspicion of his being a broken-down minister, taking care of himself under the pretence of benevolence, must be allowed, for the children's sakes, to create a misunderstanding or prejudice towards him in his work. Friends, and their friends, recognizing this, have taken care that, after a raven sort of fashion, he should have his simple daily bread.

The office-rooms of the Evening Post have been his headquarters; and all their facilities were at his disposal. Throughout the summer, their columns have been freely offered to all who had communications, notes, or suggestions to make which could increase the interest so widely felt in this work, or could aid in its success. Many grateful thanks are given to the Evening Post for its graceful and most hospitable summer care.

Mr. Parsons is a Presbyterian minister, a bachelor, nearer forty than thirty years old. Those who desire to know more of the larger work which he hopes to do in the country for the delicate children of the poor next summer, or who would be interested in his plans and efforts to lessen the distress in their wretched city homes this coming winter, will find him at No. 40 New Bowery, near Chatham Square, New York. He has been sought as superintendent of the "Howard Mission and Home for Little Wanderers," and has just accepted the place and entered upon its duties. This mission is, as it should be for him to work in, independent,—connected with no sect or church. It marks itself "evangelical," but it takes broad ground for humanity; it promises to educate, cure, employ, and take by the hand, weak, suffering, sinning human bodies and souls.

Having thus answered many practical questions most naturally asked, may I ask you some in my turn? Will you do all that one paper can to stimulate an enthusiasm for genuine German kindergartening? Why should it be tampered with, and lowered, to "adapt it to American ways"? And why should the unreal, new thing be persistently mis-called by the old, real name? Why should not American ways and ideas adapt themselves loyally, even in names, to the best? E. I. L.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., October, 1878.

WHAT ARE CHRISTIAN VIRTUES?

Governor Bishop, of Ohio, having issued a proclamation calling upon "all Christian people" to appoint a day of prayer on behalf of the yellow fever sufferers, Mr. Daniel Wolf and Mr. B. Simon, of Cincinnati, wrote to him asking, in effect, if Jews might not also pray for the sufferers. The governor replied that the "word Christian was used by him only as a general term, intended to embrace all who recognized and relied upon divine protection in the hour of need." The inquiry of Messrs. Wolf and Simon seems to us to have been perfectly proper and reasonable; and while Governor Bishop's reply may acquit him of laying an intentional slight upon the Jews, it certainly convicts him of a very loose use of the English language, if not, indeed, of ignorance most reprehensible in a public official.

The term "Christian," notwithstanding Governor Bishop's explanation, does not "embrace all who recognize and rely upon divine protection." The Jews, the Mohammedans, the Buddhists, "recognize and rely upon divine protection," but no one except Governor Bishop would think of calling them "Christian people." Governor Bishop, like many estimable but thoughtless people, has fallen into the noxious habit of applying the term "Christian" to all deeds of virtue and charity, and to all people who do such deeds. We hear of the "Christian" sentiment of the country; we read of the "Christian" charity of people who contribute to the yellow fever fund; we are constantly having the pet fallacy dinned into our ears that all that is good and noble is "Christian," and that all that is un-Christian is the reverse of good and noble.

We protest against this misuse of terms. Christianity has no monopoly of virtues. It was not Christian sentiment that prompted the boys in our Hebrew Orphan Asylum last week to send their mite out of their meagre pocket-money to a Roman Catholic Orphan Asylum in New Orleans. This was a truly Jewish act. We have heard of no Protestant or Catholic Orphan Asylum that has followed the example. It is not Christian charity that has prompted the Jews all over this country to contribute, more liberally in proportion to their numbers, than all other sects combined, to the yellow fever fund. This was true Jewish charity.

The arrogance of Christians in claiming for themselves all the virtues of humanity is but a survival of the old Pharisee boast: "I am holier than thou." That Christianity deserves much credit, we do not deny; that it has much of good in its system cannot be gainsaid. But this is because Christianity, the offspring of Judaism, has retained in its system much that is Jewish, and because it is impossible for a religious system to be tinged with Judaism and not have something good in it.

In the name of the Jews we claim a share of human—not Christian—virtues. In the name of humanity we deny that virtues are sectarian. It is not Christian virtue that keeps Jewish men sober, and Jewish women chaste; it is not Christian virtue that has made the Jewish home a type of domestic purity and peace; it is not to Christian virtue that we owe the fact that Jews, in proportion to their numbers, contribute less to the criminal classes than any other sect; nor to Christian intelligence that is due the additional fact that Jews, in proportion to their numbers, contribute more than any other sect to the ranks of men famous in music, literature, politics, science, and commerce.

A truce, then, to this arrogant gush about Christian virtue, Christian charity, Christian sentiment. What is most noble is most human; what is most human is least sectarian. The Jews claim their just share of virtues; they deny that they are Christian virtues, but they will not insist that they are Jewish virtues, as long as they are recognized as human.—New York Reformer.

THE LOCAL paper says that a Bible-agent has disposed of one hundred and eighteen $18 Bibles to the conductors, engineers, brakemen, and other employes of the Fitchburg road. We trust the local paper is misinformed, and that no Bible-agent is abroad preying upon the substance of men of limited income at this rate. Over $2100 spent for Bibles by one hundred and eighteen men, and for big Bibles which lie on the parlor tables, a gilt bauble, unopened and unread. It used to be the fashion to establish one of these fetiches in every house, as a part of the family pretensions to respectability; but we are glad to observe that this vulgar estimation of the sacred book is falling into decay, and we should hope that Bible-agents would be instructed in accord with the improving taste of the time. The last $18 Bible which came under our notice was a Christmas present to a dusky washerwoman from her children, all of them working on scant wages, with only a thin skin of ice between them and poverty. That was away back in "good times," when it was fashionable to "sling money." When we are dropping the expensive miseries of bad habits, let us not forget that a wise frugality in other things is necessary to husband the family resources and its happiness, and that Bibles of moderate size, not too small or too big, but about the size of a common book, are the most constant investment for the purse and for piety.—Springfield Republican.

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

UNNAMED.

TO S. H. M.

I do not see, dear friend, as seest thou
The mystic worlds whose million glisterings bind
The swelling span of night. My senses feel
A vaguely conceived yearning softly steal
Upon their musing o'er the orbs that flow
Their dreamy courses through the seas of space.
I know of Nature what thou dost not find,
Survey in each new scene a blending grace
Whose every tint is beauty, that thy mind
Fits to ideals to mine dissimilar.
We share the passioned hope, seek longingly
To pierce the gloom: Thou seest in things that are
A witnessed God; I forge no term to key
The sweet, low whisper of grand mystery!

HORACE L. TRAUBEL.

CASH RECEIPTS.

N.B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING NOVEMBER 30.

E. Nannberg, $3.20; Chas. Post, $30; Dr. M. J. Safford, $3.20; Wiley Britton, $1; L. F. Johnson, $2; Mrs. James S. Kelley, $3.20; Chas. Graeter, $3.20; E. L. Crane, $3; M. H. Howard, 60 cents; A. Gourand, 80 cents; E. A. Sawtelle, 60 cents; Cash, $1; O. L. Spaulding, $3.20; Hon. J. C. Bliss, $3.20; T. B. Skinner, 25 cents; William Sterns, $3.20; Dr. G. E. Corbin, $2; F. V. Smith, $3.20; L. T. Ives, $3.20; Atherton Blight, $3.20; Seth Hunt, $10; Joseph Whitney, $3.20; Francis Alger, $3.20; E. W. Presbrey, $5; J. S. Shaler, $1.20; Henry M. North, $3.50.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

The Index.

BOSTON, DEC. 5, 1878.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO OFFICE, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FRET, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHERRY, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH CARY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIJAH WRIGHT, C. D. B. MILLS, W. D. LE SUEUR, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT WARREN KESEY, JAMES E. OLIVER, Editorial Contributors.

MR. UNDERWOOD lectures at Marysville, Ohio, December 3, 4, and 5, and at Big Rapids, Mich., December 7 and 8.

THERE is no lecturer among the Spiritualists who shows a better appreciation of the common principles and interests of all liberals than Mr. C. B. Lynn. He lectured at Troy, N. Y., November 24, on "Church and State," and made a very forcible statement of the necessity and utility of State Secularization.

THE SPRINGFIELD Republican shows that the ideas of the Liberal League are beginning to exert their legitimate influence: "It is a rare thing to find anybody who is exempted from a tax complaining of the fact; but the Michigan conference of Unitarian churches has resolved that, whereas the fundamental principles of this government are based upon absolute separation of Church and State, and the exemption of churches from taxation is an infringement of this principle, therefore it does 'earnestly protest against this species of injustice which compels the indirect taxation of many of our citizens to support forms of worship in which they do not believe, and which demoralizes the ethical standard of the churches themselves, making them dependents upon the State, rather than inferior yet independent factors of it.'"

A WASHINGTON dispatch of November 14 said: "The first of the Utah polygamy cases which stands on the calendar of the United States Supreme Court for the October term came up to-day on assignment, and was argued by Ben Sheeks of Utah, for the prisoner, George Reynolds, and by Attorney-General Devens for the United States. Reynolds, who is a Mormon, was indicted by the grand jury in 1875, for having contracted a polygamous marriage. Upon his plea of not guilty, he was tried in the district court for the Territory of Utah, and convicted. Upon an appeal to the Territorial supreme court, the judgment of the lower tribunal was affirmed, and the prisoner thereupon appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States on a writ of error. The errors assigned are very numerous, but only one involves the question of general public interest, namely; 'whether the United States Congress has a constitutional right to prohibit polygamous marriages in the Territories.' It was contended by the counsel for the prisoner that polygamy is enjoined as a religious duty, and held as an article of faith by the sect to which the latter belongs, and that Congress is forbidden by the first amendment to the Constitution to make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or to prohibit the free exercise thereof. Attorney-General Devens, of the counsel for the United States, urged in reply, that an interpretation of the Constitution which would restrain Congress from attaching a penalty to the crime of polygamy on account of its being an article of religious faith would also restrain it from attaching a penalty to any other crime which might be sanctioned by religion; that, under this rigid interpretation of the Constitution, a sect of East Indian Thugs who should settle in the Territories might commit murder with impunity, on the ground that it was sanctioned and enjoined by their system of religious belief. He closed with an eloquent and impressive reference to the well-known Mountain Meadow Massacre by the Mormon 'avenging angels,' as an illustration of the fanatical extreme to which men might be carried under a mistaken conviction of religious duty."

THE BIBLE AT THE BAR OF REASON.

There are many ways by which minds originally bred in Orthodoxy find their way to larger and freer views of religious truth. One is the way of imbibition, by which one unawares drinks in, as it were, the general disbelief of supernaturalism that pervades society in these modern days, and becomes radical before he knows it. Another way is that of conscious repulsion from still preached doctrines that become more and more abhorrent to reason and unperverted moral sentiment in proportion as they are pressed upon public attention. Still another way is that of conscientious study of the "evidences of Christianity," in the light of the literature of modern criticism, science, and philosophy. Others still might be readily enumerated, but this would be unnecessary.

One of the chief obstacles to the popular dissemination of the truth respecting Christianity has been the fact that hitherto the important discoveries of modern scholarship have been mostly buried, so far as the common people are concerned, in costly volumes filled with elaborate technical disquisitions on points beyond the comprehension of the average mind. This fulness of original investigation, discussion, and presentation is indispensable to the education of the teachers of the people; there is no sense in the complaints sometimes urged against it. But nevertheless it operates as a practical barrier to the diffusion of knowledge among the people at large, until these teachers undertake the humbler task of popularizing the results attained by throwing them into simple and condensed form, and bringing them before the general reader in treatises not too expensive for wide circulation. It is impossible to exaggerate the importance of this work, or the value of the services rendered to truth and human welfare by those who perform it.

Especially is what we have said applicable to the case of the Bible. This book is still regarded by millions of well-meaning people as "God's Holy Word," in a sense which is true of no other book ever printed. Whether believed to be "plenary inspired" or not, it is believed to be the only "authoritative revelation of God's will to man," and, as such, entitled to supersede without question every conclusion of the "unassisted human reason" that contradicts its teachings, whether in the province of history, physical science, philosophy, ethics, natural religion, or any other branch of human knowledge. The practical working of this belief is to quench the blaze of modern discovery, and leave the human mind at the mercy of those who, in matters intellectual, "love darkness rather than light." More than this, the effect is to perpetuate those unfavorable educational conditions of society which have grown out of the superstitious veneration for the Bible, and which block the path to a true social development. In every point of view, popular ignorance of what the Bible really is remains still, even at this late day, a source of popular indifference to the reform of innumerable social evils which are more or less visibly rooted in the Bible's influence.

It is cause for congratulation, therefore, that several valuable efforts have been made of late to illuminate the general public mind as to the real character of the Bible, treating it simply as a part of general literature, and not as an "inspired" book. The chief results of the criticism of such eminent scholars as Ewald, Baur, Strauss, Zeller, Bleek, Kuenen, and a host of others, are now brought within the reach of the common reader in forms that will not overstrain his interest or overtask his powers. In this laudable work the new Dutch school of liberal theologians have been of especial service. The Bible for Learners, written by Oort, Hooykaas, and Kuenen, and translated by Wicksteed, of which two volumes covering the Old Testament have already appeared, takes up the history of the people of Israel, and sifts it in the light of modern scholarship; it enables the intelligent reader to understand the Bible narratives, discriminating between the fact and the fiction woven in them, and separating the wheat from the chaff. A little book, by J. T. Sunderland, of Chicago, entitled What is the Bible? has just been published for the purpose of imparting trustworthy information about the Bible in a very condensed form, and of dissipating the crude popular beliefs of its infallibility, inspiration, self-harmony, etc. Containing less than two hundred pages, and giving only the most general results unencumbered with the antecedent processes, it is admirably calculated to meet the wants of people who have no time or taste for elaborate discussions on the subject. Perhaps it errs by excess of brevity, and gives scarcely enough to satisfy the curiosity of the inquirer, while giving too much to satisfy the "faith" of the confirmed "believer."

In this latter respect, the Bible of To-day, by John W. Chadwick, of Brooklyn, seems to attain the golden mean. It is full without being tedious, and, so far as our knowledge extends, is the very best book of the kind in existence. With regard to the Old Testament, it treats of "Ancient Fragments, 1320-800 B.C."; of "Prophetic and Contemporaneous Literature, 800-500 B.C."; of the "Age of Priestly Authors, 500-200 B.C."; and of "Apocryphal and Apocalyptic Literature, 200 B.C.-100 A.D." With regard to the New Testament, it gives with clearness and sufficient detail the chief points that have been established respecting the Pauline and other Epistles, the Gospels, the Acts of the Apostles, and the Apocalypse. It contains about three hundred pages, and is an invaluable compend for general use. Mr. Chadwick's style is excellently adapted to the work he has undertaken, and relieves the dryness of mere literary discussion with flashes of humor and the constant beauty of a genial, truth-loving, and reverential spirit. He supplies a want that has long been seriously felt, and cannot fail of winning the grateful appreciation of a very large circle of readers.

We ought not to omit to mention in this connection the series of lessons on the same general subject which Mr. W. C. Gannett, of St. Paul, has been periodically issuing for many months, in the shape of instalments of what we understand is designed to form a book when completed. Although we have had no opportunity to see these lessons, we have heard them spoken of in the highest terms by excellent judges, and know enough of Mr. Gannett's accurate scholarship and faithful, painstaking, and conscientious habit of mind to feel assured that these reports have told less than the truth.

It is greatly cheering to those who believe that the world will be made better, not worse, when the Bible has taken the place to which it is really entitled in general literature, to see these frank, timely, and invaluable attempts at popular illumination respecting its genuine character. Slowly the truth makes its way, but it does make its way at last. Individual tollers drop away, "wearied with the march of life;" but the cause of human progress, subject though it is to fluctuations and temporary reverses, never is defeated in the final upshot. Greater than men is man; and he is the greatest of men who most faithfully lives for man. Were it not that truth is the organic law of the human mind, against which no insurrection of churches or of mobs is or can be successful, who could contend against the mountainous discouragements which must be surmounted by the lover of truth who loves it, not for his own sake alone, but for the sake of his race as well? It is experience, not blind and baseless faith, which bids the undaunted spirit hold its own against hoary falsehood in Church and State; the long experience of the world tells him he does well to "trust the larger hope," and look steadfastly for the ultimate response of mankind to every true word he speaks. Even in the presence of the vast superstition respecting the Bible which broods like an enormous shadow over the human mind, there is no reason to doubt the final triumph of better thought and purer feeling. The race is still in its infancy; it can afford to grow slowly; its grand maturity will, for many a long day, exist solely as the dream of the lonely thinker or the scarcely less lonely worker for better things. Even in that distant epoch, when the minds of men shall no longer be as those of children in religious matters, the Bible will still retain its hold upon the respectful attention of the world: for manhood, better than heedless youth, remembers tenderly and lovingly the things and thoughts of vanished childhood. All that the Bible contains of truth and moral inspiration is imperishable; all that it contains less lofty or pure will be charitably forgotten. But to-day the need is deep and strong of honest, fearless, plain-spoken teaching; and as is the need, so also—thanks to the constitution of this universe—is the supply.

"THE OTHER SIDE."

The Rev. Joseph Cook is evidently hard pushed at times to find subjects for the "Preludes" to his Monday Lectures. And quite as evidently, as THE INDEX of last week showed, he does not always take pains to inform himself on the topics he chooses for these preliminary talks. A grosser piece of injustice, I venture to say, was never committed on any platform than that which he was guilty of in his attempted review of the Liberal League Congress at Syracuse,—wherein he confounds throughout the National Liberal League with the Free Religious Association, as if they were one and the same body. But this injustice was sufficiently exposed in the editorial columns last week. It remains to be seen whether Mr. Cook will now confess the wrong as publicly as he committed it.

In his "Prelude" the following week, Mr. Cook had to make the most of rather a small point, though he began, with his usual sensational rhetoric, as if he had something of vast moment to announce. He said that "a large significant star had lately appeared above the horizon of American religious science,—though the wall-eyed Radicalism of Boston was blind to it." This "star" proved to be the recent endowment of a professorship at Andover Theological Seminary on the "Relations of Christianity and Science," with a foundation of $50,000. This, indeed, is a very good thing for Andover to do. It is a somewhat significant thing. It is one of the signs that the educators of Christian ministers begin to recognize that Christianity has been put on the defensive by modern science. This, however, is a sign which Mr. Cook does not appear to recognize in his "star." On the contrary, he goes on to talk as if Andover were now to be open to the broadest possible discussions of the relations between science and religion, and its students to be encouraged to the fullest and most unbiased investigation of all the questions involved. Were this really to be the case, it would be a sign of momentous import. It would be tokened a theological revolution. It would be the assertion of the authority of human reason in religion above the claims of miraculous revelation. But neither Andover nor Mr. Cook is yet ready for this step. They may be moving unconsciously towards it, but they have no thought of yet taking it. And prudent thinkers will be slow to share Mr. Cook's apparent belief that all the puzzling problems between religion and science are now to be solved for the American pulpit. They will at least wait to see how the Andover professorship is filled, and in what spirit its duties are administered. They will readily admit that a broad-minded man, equipped with a thorough knowledge of both religion and science, might do much good in such a chair; but they will naturally think that it is more likely to be filled by some one of that "wall-eyed" type of Christianity which is blind to the real claims of science. Mr. Cook's Monday Lectureship, for instance, has been in existence several years, and has been specially devoted to the discussion of the relations of religion and science. But it has shown itself so "wall-eyed" with Christian bigotry on the one hand, and has been convicted so often of charlatanism and ignorance in scientific matters on the other hand, that it may be doubted whether it has contributed anything but confusion to the discussion of the problems it has had in hand. It certainly has not solved any one of them. And when Mr. Cook in his florid zeal, not unmingled with a strong flavor of personal conceit, goes on to ask, "Where are the lectureships, professorships, books, etc., on the other side?" "What enterprises have they started like the Andover endowment and his lectureship?" the prudent reader can but smile at the naïveté of the Monday lecturer. "The other side," as Mr. Cook expresses it, though it has had no professorship at Andover and no "Monday lectureship" in Boston, has certainly kept the theologians of the Christian Church pretty busy for the last generation or two. It has issued books by the score, like Darwin's and Lyell's and Tyler's and Haeckel's; not to speak of such Biblical critiques as Ewald's, Baur's, and Kuenen's. Even Huxley and Tyndall, though Mr. Cook rules them out of court for "narrowness consequent upon their lack of university education," have put many a university bred clergyman and lecturer to their mettle in defence of the theological dogmas of the Christian Church. I have seen it complained of in religious newspapers that "the other side" is altogether too strong in our colleges and in our scientific schools and technological institutes,—that it has professorships and lecturers, in fact, wherever science is taught,—unless the science be supervised and revised in the interest of certain religious beliefs. Indeed, if I remember rightly, Mr. Cook himself, in previous courses of lectures, has complained of Harvard College as given over to "the other side"; and I have heard it whispered that it was with a view to counteracting "Cambridge and Boston infidelity" that the so-called "Monday Lectureship" was established. At least "the other side" appears to have given him most of the topics for his lectures thus far, and to its activity he owes indirectly his career as a public lecturer. And the new Andover professorship is a piece of countermining by the Christian Church to withstand the "enterprise" of "the other side." In short, "the other side," to which Mr. Cook unwittingly refers, is the movement of freethought which has come with modern civilization; and neither Mr. Cook, with the broom of his Monday lectureship, nor the more fair and learned man who is to fill, we trust, the new chair at Andover, will be able to push back the tide.

W. J. P.

HUMANITY IN THE PALACES.

Two or three Sundays ago I found myself in New York, and in what may be called old New York. That part of the city, on that day, is a wonder of the world. You may scan the amazing architecture without being overrun by men and vehicles as on other days, for the people are not in the streets, except perhaps an apple-woman, or a policeman trying the doors to see if they have been left locked. You are among warehouses, vast and grand,—some of them where churches used to be. Trinity and St. Paul are there still. What they think of the various modern steeples that now surround and almost overtop them is best known to themselves. Perhaps if they could speak, they would call them temples of Mammon, and perhaps not. This is a marvel, this vast city, grown up from comparatively a village, within the memory of men now living. I stroll up and up Broadway.

There is a wonderful young man in this city. He is of a race noted in history. He may be a lineal descendant of that prophet whom the history of that race immortalizes for having slain some four hundred and fifty priests of Baal at the brook Kishon, and who then had to flee from the wrath of Jezebel, the owner of said priests. Under a juniper-tree in the wilderness he wished he might die, but the God of Israel took care to make him sleep on that foolish thought, and sent an angel to feed him. Next thing, in a cave, the same deity gave him a memorable lesson as to the proper way of making the world better. If the young man alluded to is Elijah redivivus, he has profited greatly by that lesson. He will slay more priests of Jezebel with no bloodshed at all. His name is Felix Adler.

I wanted to hear this Felix that Sunday; but my memory did not retain the locality of his place of teaching; and among the hundreds of notices of Sunday services in the newspapers, I could not find it, nor by inquiry at hotels. What a vast world this is, in which such a man can be hid! I cannot comprehend this single one of the thousand cities of my race, to say nothing of the whales of the sea and the grasshoppers of the desert; and yet I am expected to know the Infinite!

By the time the church bells were ringing I was up Broadway where, when a very little boy, I once saw fields and looked back at the city from high rocks. So with the soothing, blessed chimes in my ears, I stepped into Grace Church, where Dean Stanley preached the previous Sunday. It seemed likely to be crowded, and the portly sexton and his assistants were having their hands full to find seats for strangers. But that good man, without my telling him I was a little deaf, placed me in the rector's own pew, where I could not fail to hear every word. And never were words better worth hearing than those of Henry C. Potter, uttered that day. He will not quite have done his duty, however, till they are printed.

Before he took his text I was prepared for a good sermon, by his announcing the establishment of an "Industrial School" in his parish, and inviting his parishioners to aid him in the enterprise.

His text was from the incomparable cxlii. Psalm, that immortal lyric which embodies in the fewest words the upward social forces of humanity. And here I cannot but stop to remark how some of the greatest and best lyrical achievements in the world are really anonymous. This psalm, which may well enough be called miraculous, is attributed to King David. But to do this is unjust both to David and the Psalm. We cannot suppose him to have written the fifth verse without attributing to him an egotism entirely inconsistent with the sublimity and lyric fervor of the production. Some Israelite of a subsequent age, when the sins of David were forgotten in the glory of his genius, on his way up to Jerusalem with the joyous company of his tribe, may well have written, "For there are set thrones of judgment, the thrones of the house of David." For David himself to have written it was to blot his psalm with his own self-conceit and self-righteousness. It is often a heart the least known that utters the voice of the race.

Dr. Potter began his discourse by accounting for the great popularity of Dean Stanley, who had so crowded his church the week before; and he did so, not by attributing it to the superior wisdom or the dogmas of his church, but to his being one who opened his mind to all science, drinking in the wisdom of the age from every source. Of course the rector had to glorify the English mother church a little; and beginning far back of the eighth Henry, with the venerable Bede, he recounted her illustrious sons down to Dean Stanley, placing in his catalogue observably the names of men who were generally snubbed by the higher prelates of their day, such as glorious Ralph Cudworth, the ripe scholar and sincere Christian who temporarily demolished the terrible Hobbes; and then in his Intellectual System of the Universe attacked the infidels and atheists of all ages at once, doing it in a very different style from Bishop Fell's. In fact his candor was so large and his learning so thorough that he really proved atheists to be only theists on a broader scale; for he naively says, "These confounded atheists do at the same time when they verbally deny an idea of God implicitly acknowledge and confess it." Consequently his charity for atheists was not of the stingy sort so common to ecclesiastics.

Hobbes, whose heresy provoked the spear of Cudworth, began by assuming that man is naturally a beast of prey (not pray), nothing more or less. Consequently society is a composite, irresistible beast, a "Leviathan," so to speak. And is there not some danger, Cudworth notwithstanding, that, after all, our proud republic will show itself a mere brute—and of the annelid order at that? But Hobbes, no more than Cudworth, would deny that men as we find them are beings capable of exceeding happiness or misery, according to character and surroundings; so that, after the furious battle of that great century in which they lived, such men in ours as Stanley and Arnold, in the very bosom of the church, have come to the practical conclusion that, whatever may be true of extreme and bigoted atheists or extreme and bigoted theists, there may be and are good sceptics,—men who with the fullest sense of moral obligation to the principles of order and justice throw wet blankets over all super-scientific speculations about the infinite—past or future, high or low—only to persuade mankind more wisely to expend their energies in attaining the knowledge within reach, and making each other better and happier here and now, on the principle that a future eternity is only a repetition of now. These are the men of whom Franklin, Jefferson, and Lincoln have been types, not to say that Jesus, so far as we really know anything of him, was of the same sort.

Having thus given credit to his church, as well as to science, for the liberality of its most liberal members, Dr. Potter ably set forth the duty of a wealthy church, "Peace within her walls, and prosperity in her palaces," to do something for peace and prosperity outside. It was a noble sermon of human brotherhood, showing how the rich and the poor may coöperate to make both classes vastly happier than they are.

Here, then, is a clergyman who holds that the Church is to be the salt of this world as well as seasoning for another, and from this position it is but a single step to that of honestly paying its fair share of the taxes. If the Church, as Dr. Potter earnestly advised it, is going to do its best to prevent pauperism, it will of course begin by not being a pauper itself. It will join the Liberal League. It will not hesitate for a moment to set a patriotic example to those outside its pale.

It is to be understood that before listening to this grand sermon in such a place, I heard from their own lips a great deal about that fine congregation being all "miserable sinners," which I was too charitable to believe. Possibly some of them might have been sinners, but none seemed to be miserable. This struck me as a sort of parrot talk, venerated for its age, and being sandwiched between fine architecture and delightful music is likely to last some ages longer. Taken for what it is worth it is rather monotonous but not intolerable, and by way of contrast sets off a really grand and good sermon wonderfully well. I would willingly hear it many times more, to hear afterwards the great problem of the age so fairly grappled with. Such preaching reminds me of Samuel Royce's great work on Deterioration and Race Education, which possibly has set it a-going. It is the waking up of great minds to the new necessities growing out of a century of scientific thought, which has given the human mind such a way over matter that hundreds of old handicrafts are almost dismissed from the world, and three-fourths of the young are growing up without knowing what to do or how to get a living. The old system of education in things—that is, in handicraft arts especially—is done away with, and our education in words is no substitute for it. A new education in the nature of things, under the light which Baconian science has shed upon it, must at once be instituted, and thoroughly applied to the class of people who form the basis or foundation of society. Victories of mind over matter are of no use, if the mass of the people are to be left without knowledge of the new tools by which they can each and all achieve victories for themselves, justice being fairly established. There is want of salt here, and the churches have plenty of work to do. I believe Dr. Potter has undertaken this work, and no commendation of his noble example can be too high. All success to his industrial school.

E. W.

Communications.

THE SCIENCE OF UNIVERSOLOGY.

BY STEPHEN PEARL ANDREWS.

No. XXXI.

The proposition seems to be made good, by the preceding partial interpretation of the Apocalypse, that the mysteries of theology are, in a large degree, an adoption, a partial misapprehension, and a sort of sanctimonious exaggeration or exaltation, of the early and really profound speculations of philosophy. This view of the case will be confirmed by a farther-on examination of the subject; and the time seems propitious now for the revindication, by philosophy, of what was originally its own. To that end, the "secret wisdom," the Kabbala, and the Kabbalistic writings of the Old and New Testaments, must be re-examined in the light of a kind of scientific criticism exactly adapted to the case. Universology, which rediscovers the intellectual grounds of the early system of symbolism—which was the first attempt at the elaboration of a universal science—furnishes the key for, and is that alone which is competent to, the solution demanded. Nothing will more conduce to put the rightfulness of this claim past all doubt than an investigation of the nature and meaning of the so-called sacred numbers. In what precedes, of the interpretation of the revelation, I have purposely omitted numerical passages, reserving them for a special treatment under this head.

One, the One, was (and is) the head-number of all numeration; but it stood, as has been shown, in immediate relation with Two and Three,—they, collectively, being the composite head of number. Reflect how the world's first serious thinkers must have struggled with the primary problems of number and geometrical form; questions seemingly so simple that they had long ceased to excite interest in the scientific world, until they are, at this moment, recalled for universological purposes. To have discriminated the cardinal from the ordinal numbers, fractions from whole numbers, odd from even numbers, or the three dimensions,—each and every step was a grand scientific triumph of that early dawn of science and discovery. And for us, the solution of mysticism lies in recurring to just those beginning-points, and in taking up threads of investigation which were then provisionally abandoned.

As the definite science of mathematics emerged, the positivistic minds of that early day diverged from further search into the logical and metaphysical meaning of those prime elements (of number and form), and followed out the special elaboration of the new science. The subtler questions affecting the qualitative properties of number, completely surrendered by this class of thinkers for the more obvious and practical considerations of quantity, fell into comparative disrepute, and a feeling doubtless arose among them, like that for which the positivists of this age quote Newton as saying: "O physics, beware of metaphysics!" The subtler meanings were retained only in the memory of the common people, as something which science had been engaged upon, and so became first traditional, and then mythological. In this state, they were taken up by the priesthood, sanctified, and so were ultimately converted into mysteries.

It is in this manner that there has descended through all the ages, with the common people, with the dreamy thinkers of all schools, and in all theosophies and theologies alike, Naturian and Christian, a belief in the doctrine of "sacred numbers." Certain numbers have been reputed to have a pivotal or transcendent importance in the regulation of the affairs of the universe,—to constitute, in a word, the aristocracy of numbers; and to each of these superior numbers certain special meanings were attached. The whole philosophy of Pythagoras rested upon this idea, and his labors were an effort to recover and give form to an earlier and even then obsolescent system of thought. The Tetraktys, or sacred four, and the Decad, or sacred ten (1+2+3+4) were made prominent by him; but 1, 3, 7, and 12 (40 and 144) have among all peoples held preëminence. The philosophy of Charles Fourier is at bottom nothing else but the effort to adjust the universal distribution of things to the governing influence of these numbers; as in music, with its unison, its three chords, its seven diatonic and its twelve chromatic notes; and in all this, he is again in full harmony with the Christian Scriptures. All theologians recognize a certain mystical significance in these numbers; and the teaching of this lore, in connection with a special and very peculiar form of literature, the object of which was in part to conceal and in part to communicate ideas, constituted mainly, perhaps, the mysteries taught to initiates in the great religions of the past. The object of this Essenian* or allegorical form of literature was to convey definite philosophical doctrine in such a way as to be so understood by adepts, while it should seem to the uninitiated to be a simple narration of events. It was an extended parable, or a parable upon a large scale. It differed widely, however, from the simple allegory of our times, in the fact that the formation of this particular kind of allegory was rigorously governed by the secret wisdom, or cryptic science, which in turn furnished a key for its interpretation.

The most remarkable and brilliant writer of this school of whom we now know, was undoubtedly John the Revelator; and in respect to him the paradox already alluded to occurs, which is the very irony of history. The chief burden of his so-called Revelation was, as we have seen, a powerful invective against MYSTERY in the traditional and perhaps less accurately constructed works of other authors, really of his own school,—the Kabbalists, especially,—while he was himself employing a style, and consigning his thoughts to a form, which have proved the quintessence of mystery, from his day to this. It sounds like a huge joke to speak of a Revelation, which was so hermetically sealed that nobody has been, heretofore, able to reveal it.

The reason of this has been that the very technical and nicely-fitted key to this and other similar literary enigmas was lost, and was perhaps never possessed in perfection by more than a handful of persons. In respect to the matter of numbers, the following solution, derived from the universological rediscovery of the primitive basis of the doctrine of sacred numbers, will, it is believed, prove satisfactory.

Among the numerical passages omitted in the portion of the Revelation above treated of, are the expressions "time and times and half a time," often repeated (ch. xii. v. 14, et al.), and which is to be taken as meaning 3½, and the number 666 ("six hundred threescore and six," ch. xiii. v. 18). This last number, elsewhere assigned to Antichrist, has been the grand crux in the thousands of efforts which have been made to expound the Apocalypse. They are recalled here, to say that their solution (omitted above) will form an early portion of the following comment.

Numbers sometimes occur of course in these Hermetic writings, in their ordinary quantitative meanings, as in the case of the seven heads and ten horns, as above interpreted. But in addition to this ordinary use of numbers, numbers were employed in certain qualitative senses; that is to say, certain numbers were first supposed to involve the meaning of certain qualities, principles, or general ideas; and the numbers themselves were then used for those ideas, with no quantitative value whatever attached to them. This gave to the writings which employed this and other similar devices a secret meaning, the understanding of which and of the metaphysical or philosophical grounds of the devices constituted the far-famed "secret wisdom," or cryptic lore of the ancients. This obscurity given to the use of numbers was still further involved in mystery, and sometimes doubtless as a mere pedantry, by using augmentations, doublets, multiples, etc., of simple numbers to mean the same things as the simple numbers, with only perhaps some difference of emphasis. The key of this cryptic lore has not been retained among the moderns; but this style of literature has been known to have existed, something of its nature has been guessed, and theologians and others have referred to it as the origin of the doctrine of sacred numbers; but it has hardly been seriously suspected that portions of Genesis, the Revelation entire, and sundry other parts of the Bible are the purest instances of this exceptional form of literature.

The best known instance of a number having qualitative meaning is that of the number seven, which, it is agreed on all hands, is used throughout the Scriptures to denote ALL, ENTIRETY, the WHOLE, sufficiency, satisfaction, fulness, completeness, perfection, abundance, etc. One has only to look into any biblical dictionary to find all this asserted. Swedenborg assembles nearly thirty instances of this use of the word in the Bible. So in secular writings. Cicero styles the number seven "the knot and cement of all things, as being that by which the natural and spiritual world are comprehended in one idea." (Tusc. Quest. 1, 10.) But neither class has known the true reason why this number acquired this meaning; which will be shown farther on.

The number seven, used in this Kabbalistic or Hermetic sense, occurs quite frequently in the Apocalypse, thus:—

"The seven churches" means the whole Church, the Christian world.

"The seven golden candlesticks," all sources of enlightenment, the whole Church (ch. i. v. 19).

"The seven stars in the right hand of God," all the luminaries or great men of the Church, the favorites of God, whom he holds "in the hollow of his hand." Stars means celebrities, as we speak of theatrical stars. "The stars of heaven" are the leading men, the thinkers and philosophers of the whole world. So, to say of the dragon, "His tail drew the third part of the stars of heaven, and did cast them to the earth" (ch. xii. v. 4), means that the Kabbala tradition was one of the three great dominant systems of faith and philosophy; commanded the allegiance of one-third of the great thinkers or leaders of opinion; and, by so doing, was the badge of their degradation to a lower plane (did cast them to the earth). The tail of serpent or dragon merely repeats and emphasizes the back-extending trail-like character (traditional) of the animal itself, the whole animal of this type being nothing but a sort of animated tail (whence its symbolism).

* I employ this term not as though the Essenes were the only writers of this (Hermetic) style, but because with them, and especially with John the Revelator, we have what may be called the Augustan age of this remarkable literary development.

"The seven spirits which are before his throne," a periphrasis of perfection, the divine spirit.

"The seven angels of the seven churches," all the presiding officers and luminaries of the Church Universal (ch. i. v. 19).

"A lamb, as it had been slain, having seven horns and seven eyes, which are the seven spirits" (ch. v. v. 6), means the risen Lord or lordship over humanity, replete with all right principles or doctrines (seven horns, all points of doctrine), and all investigating powers, or powers of insight or wisdom (seven eyes, all insight), which are the entire spirit of the divine revelation made to man. The seven spirits, the whole spirit of God sent forth into all the earth.

"And I saw in the right hand of him that sat on the throne, a book written within and on the back side, sealed with seven seals" (ch. v. v. 1), means: I was contemplating as closely guarded by God himself (kept in his right hand) the volume of universal nature (the book), wholly unreadable (written within and on the back side, out of sight), and absolutely sealed (by seven seals), as the Problem of Being, to be resolved or read. The writer goes on to say that he sorrowed much that none could read the book (v. 2, 3, 4), but that assurance finally came to him that the Christian story is the solution. The seven seals were now to be taken off of the book (v. 5-14).

Observe here a peculiar characteristic in this literature. While seven means all, or the whole, it still suggests so much of its quantitative meaning that this writer immediately sets about elaborating this whole into seven constituent parts. So he names seven particular churches, and works up some sort of a message to each of them; and so here he sets a different angel to the opening of each seal; and so to the manipulation of the trumpets and vials which follow. The filling in of this detail makes a considerable part of the treatise, in volume; but it is less significant, and may be regarded as the flowering-out of the author's poetic license, rather than in the light of a fundamental part of the plot. The fact that these interpolations may sometimes run into fanciful involutions which we are not wholly able to interpret does not interfere with the fact that our key unlocks the main plot of this mystical composition.

When it came the turn of the seventh angel to remove the last seal (when the problem of the universe was to be finally or completely unfolded, solved), postponement takes place; "there was silence in heaven" for a short space; expectation is on tiptoe; seven other angels are introduced who are furnished with seven trumpets. This means that the formalities of complete promulgation (seven trumpets) had still to be waited for. The heraldry of heaven is marshalled to the front, and again we are carried through the detail of what occurred at the blast of each trumpet. This is an exquisite literary device, but, as a philosophical dénouement, the hoped-for ultimate solution of the problem of being, when "the mystery of God should be finished" (ch. x. v. 7), was destined never to be fully and satisfactorily accomplished by the philosophic method then in question. The process of partial promulgation now proceeded, as that of unloosing the seals had done before, until the seventh trumpeter comes forward, and with him the pregnant instant of time, when at last the whole truth was to burst on the waiting eye and ear; but, alas! another disappointment and postponement! Murmuring took the place of elucidation. Seven thunders uttered their voices (ch. x. v. 3, 4). The mighty angel waited till the thunders subsided, and then, armed with the seventh trumpet (v. 1-5), striding the land and the sea (v. 2-5), and holding the universe, as it were, in suspense, swore a most mighty oath "that there should be time no longer," and consequently tradition no longer and mystery no longer; but that from the instant that he should begin to sound, "the mystery of God should be finished."

But alas! and alas! he did not begin to sound. He never uttered the first note. An intervention took place from on high; expectation was allayed, and matters took another turn. A quiet intimation was conveyed to the intent listener (v. 8) that, instead of the trumpet-blast of an absolute and overwhelming revelation, he must content himself with receiving "a little book open," a small modicum or instalment of explanation of the great sealed book of Nature. This he was told he could "eat" (and digest) at his leisure. And the unpleasant information was added that, while in the eating, or at first, it would be pleasing and satisfactory to him (as new suggestions of truth are so), yet, as he should digest it, it would prove disappointing, baffling, and unsatisfactory. And his experience confirmed this assurance. "And I took the little book out of the angel's hand, and ate it up; and it was in my mouth sweet as honey, and as soon as I had eaten it my belly was bitter" (v. 10). "And he said unto me: Thou must prophesy again before many peoples and nations and tongues and kings" (v. 11); which meant that he must resume his weary task of trying to do some good, without so much as hoping for an absolute revelation of all truth. Sad and tragic ending of the splendid promise of the grand imaginative spectacle he had been witnessing! but strictly true to the logic of the nature of things.

Still, his patient waiting was ultimately, and in another sense, rewarded. After more delay, and three great woes, the seventh angel did finally sound, and the prospective triumph of Christianity was the burden of his trumpeting, not a philosophical but a practical solution, not an objective but a subjective SYNTHESIS of universal things (ch. xi. v. 15-18).

The seven vials of the wrath of God mean the entire subversive or disharmonic period of the development of history, prior to the advent of that high harmony of which Christianity was the promise, and of which it was the prospective realization. Vials mean (probably), etymologically, filled things, hence fulnesses, and "seven vials" means, emphatically, all of the given period.

Seven, meaning all, when it is applied to time (days, months, or years), means always or forever. The significance of the other sacred numbers will be resumed in the next article.

"FAS EST AB HOSTE, DOCTERI."

Even from the mountebank of the Monday Lectureship, who steals the livery of Science and Light to serve the devils of Dogmatism and Darkness in, we may learn that the enemies of free thought draw no fine distinctions between the liberals who advocate total repeal and those who favor modified repeal of the Comstock postal law. The law was undoubtedly intended by its promoters for the "stamping out of free thought," for they are much more afraid of free thought than of obscene literature, the circulation of which, in fact, plays into their hands; for if there were no sine, what would be the use of a scheme of salvation?

Greeley used to say, "Find out what the enemy wants you to do, and don't do it." Nothing would please the enemy more than a division among the liberal hosts, and the diversion of their work from the secularization of the State to a quarrel over the propriety of repealing the whole or a part of an odious law dictated by the Church to the State. Until there shall be a great change of public opinion, it is probably as impossible to modify as to repeal the law in question, and it seems to me wiser to attend to our direct business, the enlightenment of the people, and to leave law-making to those who believe in that and can do nothing better.

But there is one thing that ought not to pass without comment in a liberal paper. If a foreign visitor had reported that the girls of a neighboring college were so weak and so corrupt that the faculty of the college did not dare to publish a catalogue, lest circulars should be sent to these young ladies, products of our most Orthodox civilization, on the receipt of which they would at once send for "rubber goods" and obscene books, a storm of indignant denial and denunciation would have poured on that foreigner's head. But when a home-bred viper slanders the carefully nurtured daughters of his fellow-citizens, and by imputation the college and faculty, his remarks are applauded by the thoughtless brothers and fathers who listen to him, and the respectable press of Boston have no word of protest.

Is this terrible indictment of the college and its pupils and teachers true, or is the Monday Lectureship a malignant liar? It seems to me one of the cases in which, as the offender cannot be punished either by his corrupted conscience or by common law, there would be great sympathy with any brother of the insulted collegians who should publicly horse-whip the slanderer.

At the same time it must be said that horse-whipping will not cure Cook any more than penal legislation will save our children from corrupting influences of impure literature. There are many things that law cannot reach, and the evil of bad books and false teachings about sex is one of them. The true remedy is certain and easy of application—to be sure it would throw Comstock and the Society for the Suppression of Vice out of business, but we need not cry for that—it is good books and correct teachings. I know this remedy is too simple for Christians, but it ought to satisfy Liberals who believe in Liberty and Light, and not in Law and Lies. F. S. C.

"Nothing would please the enemy more than a division among the liberal hosts, and the diversion of their work from the secularization of the State to a quarrel over the propriety of repealing" the law of 1873? Yes, one thing would please them more: the refusal of the liberal hosts to divide on that issue, and their undivided support of "repeal."

The paramount necessity of "good books and correct teachings" does not remove the necessity of good laws and just courts for the punishment of crime.—Ed.]

SILVER AND GOLD.

The silver question will be upon us again soon with increased virulence. The measure of just relief which was potential in the act of last March has been neutralized by a hostile administration. Instead of coining the maximum amount, and then paying it out by preference, and so reducing our dollar of account to the value of the 412½ dollar where it rightfully belongs, that coin has been manipulated into a subsidiary coinage, and the country suffers all the evils of mono-metalism; and God only knows where the bottom of that policy is, if persisted in by the leading commercial countries!

The prevailing objection to the 412½ grain dollar is, that it is not valuable enough—is 16 per cent. short of the gold dollar. By persistently stating its gold value, and forcing our greenback to gold, innocent people are made to believe that silver has been guilty of such instability as not only to make it unfit for a standard, but to make it also a dishonest dollar for the payment of past debts.

Now if it were true that silver had really fallen in value as it is pretended, still the 412½ grain would be the dollar by which all public and private debts in this country could be justly paid; and this notwithstanding the brilliant and profound remark of some of our contemporaries, that "It takes one hundred cents to make an honest dollar." But it is not the fact that silver has fallen in value. It is worth while for those who would be right to give the matter a little careful thinking, even at the risk of experiencing a disagreeable mental strain.

True, the value relation of the two metals has changed from 15½, where it stood for many years, to about 18 now. But when the relation of two things has changed, how are we to know upon which factor to cast the responsibility? To illustrate: Last year a bushel of wheat exchanged in market for four bushels of potatoes; that is, bulk for bulk, the ratio of value was 4. This year, say, a bushel of wheat is equal in value to two of potatoes. The value relation has changed from a ratio of 4 to one of 2. Now the question is, Are we to attribute that change to a fall in wheat, or a rise in potatoes? It is simply impossible to argue from those data alone to answer. No one, unless he were a violent partisan of one of those commodities beforehand, would pretend to answer the question. By arbitrarily assuming either as a fixed standard, the other can be made to appear responsible for the change. But leaving out the assumption, a careful inquirer would refer them both to some third valuable thing. In the case supposed, if it should be found that as compared with cloth and iron, potatoes were of the same value at the two periods, while wheat showed the same changed relation to cloth and iron as to potatoes, the inference of a change in the value of wheat and not in potatoes would be justified.

Precisely so the mere fact of a change in the value of the two metals from a ratio of 15½ to one of 18 affords not the slightest ground for charging the fluctuation on one as against the other. To learn which has been guilty, reference must be had to other valuable things.

For the purpose of that reference it can hardly be necessary to give the detail of comparative prices of the leading commodities in 1874 and 1878. It is familiar information that prices have greatly declined since 1874 all over the world,—that the purchasing power not merely of our dollar of account, but of both metals, has greatly increased. A ton of silver in any market in Europe or America will buy more cotton, iron, wheat, stocks, land,—more of valuable products in general,—than it would when its market relation to gold was 15½. Silver, instead of going down, has, in fact, gone up, only not so far as gold. It will bring more, i. e., is worth more than it was in 1874, as measured by a day's labor; which, being every product in posse, is the criterion adopted by the economists for estimating the secular changes in all values, money included.

So the fact is, that in stability of purchasing power silver has beat gold by 16 per cent.; and the so-called "decline in silver" is really an advance in gold by 16 per cent. beyond that more stable and comparatively uniform amount of value which a dollar ought to possess.

Conceding, then, as we cannot but do, that a given quantity of silver will buy even more of the aggregate of commodities than it would when its ratio to gold was 15½, what arrant nonsense is it to say the change to a ratio of 18 means a "decline in silver"! The only way this pretence is made plausible is by asserting and assuming what is contrary to law, viz., that a gold dollar only is a legal standard in this country, and asserting what is contrary to the fact, that gold has not changed in value. By this perpetual reiteration, the mentally indolent are made to believe it.

In England, which has for forty years past made gold alone the standard, I do not see how they are to extricate themselves from the financial ruin that has only just begun. A pound sterling means by law a given amount of gold, and debtors there must take the ruin of the enormous appreciation of gold. Only within four years did mono-metalism hurt England, for it was not till the policy became general that gold was sent out of normal proportion to all other values. But this country was always and is still bi-metallic. Every contract made here has been made on the double standard, and has a legal and moral right to be discharged on that basis. True, financial mal-administration has brought upon us the beginning of the evil of mono-metalism; but two million a month, in spite of unfriendly discrimination, must soon break the power of that oppression. But we shall be deluged by a lachrymose flood, some of it crocodilean, but alas! much of it sincere moral feeling, at the "dishonesty of 84 cent dollars,"—and all on account of the prevalence of most transparent fallacies of both law and fact, viz., that the 412½ is not by statute established as the thing the word dollar means in all public and private contracts,—or that somehow those contracts imply gold (as though there was room for implication in contracts whose words had a statutory definition!); and second that silver has declined in value, as shown by the fact that it is worth less than gold, and that the honest thing to do is to put in about 20 per cent. more of metal in the silver dollar.

E. D. STARK.

CLEVELAND, O., Nov. 20, 1878.

THE BIBLE-IN-SCHOOLS QUESTION.

GROTON, N. Y., Nov. 24, 1878.

The enemies of religious liberty have not everywhere been so triumphant as at New Haven, where they seem to have captured an "elephant too big for their barn." More than five years ago, many of the citizens of Groton village petitioned the Board of Education to have the Bible-reading in school discontinued. The petitioners were met with defiance, and, in addition to the usual epithets that were hurled at them, their opponents (in order to intimidate men from signing the petition) declared that no man who signed the petition should ever be elected a member of the School Board—surely a very cheap honor, yet the declaration beautifully illustrates the persecuting spirit of the Bible-advocates.

At the commencement of the school year last August, the Bible-reading was discontinued, though not a member of the school board had signed the petition, and at the annual election of school officers in October, two new members were elected who not only signed the petition but are members of the Tompkins County League and readers of THE INDEX. It is best for the cause of liberalism that cities and villages should have the question thoroughly discussed, and those who insist on having the Bible read are unconsciously doing liberalism good service. Their efforts to secure advantage for their faith shows in the clearest light their unwillingness to trust it on its own merit. The intelligent moral sense of mankind will surely hold at a discount any religion, for which equal religious rights must be sacrificed. Therefore those persons who are trying to have the schools that are supported by impartial taxation favor their religion must bear the stigma of trying to sustain their faith at the expense of justice. Such a course will only add another chapter to the infamous record of religious zealots who have opposed scientific truth, and pleaded for human slavery as divine.

D. B. M.

MR. BRADLAUGH'S CORRECTION.

I learn with both regret and surprise that my reference to Mr. Bradlaugh (quoted in his letter) has caused offence. Accordingly I hasten to say that I had no idea of charging Mr. Bradlaugh with the advocacy of free love, which would have been unpardonable. The similarity of principle spoken of in my letter was only between the legal verdicts in the two trials, inasmuch as they both of them repressed the free utterance of opinion concerning the regulation of the commerce of the sexes. Mr. Bradlaugh does well to be jealous of his reputation, but at the same time, on re-reading the passage complained of, I still cannot see that it implies any comparison between Mr. Bradlaugh and the free-lovers, as I am sure it was not meant to.

CHARLES ELLERSHAW.

NEW YORK CITY.

AUTHOR OF THE MARSEILLAISE.

M. René de la Garde, who recently wrote a biography of Rouget de l'Isle, shows that the writer of the "Marseillaise" was a royalist. The song (words and music) was written at Strasburg on the 24th of April, 1792, at the house of M. de Dietrich, the mayor of the city, and on the news of war having been declared against Austria. The song created great enthusiasm, and was at once printed under the title of "Chant de Guerre de l'Armée du Rhin." The author addressed a copy of his work to Marshal Luckner, and dedicated it to "the manes of Sylvain Bailly, first mayor of Paris." It is curious to reflect that the mayor of Strasburg, in whose house the hymn was composed, perished on the scaffold; that Marshal Luckner, to whom the first copy was addressed, shared the same fate; and that Bailly, to whom it was dedicated, was executed on the Champ-de-Mars in a peculiarly revolting manner.

According to M. de la Garde, the hymn reached Marseilles in the month of June, and was at once monopolized by that revolutionary band which marched upon Paris to take part in the sanguinary scenes of the reign of terror. Lamartine, in his History of the Girondists, says: "The new song flew from city to city; the Marseillaise spread it all over France, and hence its name. De l'Isle's old mother, a pious woman and a royalist, alarmed at the effect of her son's voice, wrote to him, 'What is this revolutionary hymn, sung by bands of brigands who are traversing France, and with which your name is mixed up?' De l'Isle himself, proscribed as a royalist, heard it and shuddered as he escaped by some of the wild passes of the Alps." In fact, Rouget de l'Isle, having refused to accept the decree, which deprived Louis XVI. of his throne, laid down his sword. A few years afterward he returned to France, was thrown into prison, and, like Hoche, would have been guillotined but for the downfall of Robespierre.

M. de la Garde says that while Rouget de l'Isle was wandering about in a state of destitution his hymn was being everywhere performed. At a military spectacle at the opera, horse, foot, artillery, and the people howled it in chorus; and when they reached the last couplet actors and audience had to go down on their knees to Mlle. Mailart, who represented Liberty, and who was placed at the summit of a little mountain. Even the horses had to bow the head and bend the knee. The actor, Lalney, who was charged with the refrain, was dressed as a sans culotte, and wore a red cap. After each couplet he received an embrace from Mlle. Duchamp, who impersonated Egalité, and from Mlle. Florigny, who impersonated Fraternité. On the fall of Robespierre, Rouget de l'Isle wrote another song, calling on the Thermidorians to exterminate the successors of "the incorruptible." A few years later, when a descendant on England was contemplated, the lyric poet wrote:—

"Artisan des malheurs du monde, Trop fier dominateur de l'onde," etc.,

and warned us that Napoleon, a giant with terrible arms was about to seize and strike us. Rouget de l'Isle then celebrated in verse the eighteenth Brumaire, when Napoleon turned out the two chambers, and seized upon the supreme power. When the Bourbons returned, the versatile poet once more tuned his lyre, and wrote his "Dien conserve le Roi," which is about the most anti-republican anthem ever penned.—Pall Mall Gazette.

I AM CONVINCED that men do more harm to themselves than ever the devil could do to them.—Lord Byron.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 30, 1872.
 TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
 Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STEINER.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

Office, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
 JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.20 for one year, including postage, or 90 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street Boston.

PUBLICATIONS INDEX TRACTS.

OF THE

FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenstein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Oathrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. E. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion": Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Lasker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for Five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for Five cents at the office.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lectures on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fifth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 8.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

47

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
 JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

A7

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.50
Shawl-Straps.....	1.50
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	3.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUREBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Midwinters.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.5
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. O. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BARTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 3 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA O.). The Education of American Girls.....	2.25
BRIDGES (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BURCHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 3 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 3 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately, 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet Naturalist. With Memorial Verses.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.00
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects.....	3.00
Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.20
CONWAY (MONOURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
COBBELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses, by Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Mason, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.

Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 3 vols. Illustrated.....	6.00
DEQUATRE (HENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DURRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Poets. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 3 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising—Adam Bede, Romola, The Mill on the Floss, Felix Holt, Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life, The Name of the Lady Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 3 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (E. V.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellaneous.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Prose Works. 3 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 3 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBAUGH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	2.00
6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	2.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	3.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Miscellaneous Affiliates.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.00
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	5.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimus Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.50
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Of the Skeltons.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Moses the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah F. Cooke, Jr.....	3.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aerodynamics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Friends of Saints, Mr. Orlando's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	3.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KEMP (ORPHEUS O.). Versabilities, Poems, Parables, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 3 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 3 vols.....	2.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	2.00
LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.O.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. B.) Poems. 3 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. O.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
5.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 1 vol.....	5.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1859 to 1868.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte.....	1.50
Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.00
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Science of Language. Second Series.....	2.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities.....	2.50
Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Eskoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Catholic Union; Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organisation of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans.—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations.—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.80
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHILIPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolley Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Redged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	3.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc., with 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Society, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expansion of Heaven.....	1.50
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	3.50
ROHELLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	5.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.40
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	1.25
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	3.50
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	3.50
Philosophy of Style.....	.60
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.50
Sociology.....	1.50
Descriptive Sociology. Parts I. and II. and III., each.....	4.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	5.00
Universal Progress.....	2.50
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER). Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES (H. A.) History of English Literature. 3 vols.....	7.00
The Great-Boon Taines. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNISON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Emmond, and Lovel the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.....
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Hamorists, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unreprinted Pieces.....
THAYER'S (MRS. OELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLER (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.50
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragment of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.50
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.50
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.50
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	5.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
Lessons in Electricity.....	.50
Address before British Assoc'n at Belfast.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH). Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES). The Slings and the Stone. Vols. I and V, each.....	3.00
Vols III, IV, and VI, each.....	3.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Banterings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN). American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	2.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.30
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.00
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	2.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

231 Washington St., Boston.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY—PRICE TWOPENCE.

THE SECULAR REVIEW.

EDITED BY CHARLES WATTS.

The SECULAR REVIEW is the leading organ of Secularism, and each week has Special Articles on Theological, Social, Scientific, and Political Subjects. Its distinctive features are the advocacy of Constructive Secularism, and the dissemination of useful information on all questions which affect the welfare of the people. Letters are inserted in its "OPEN COLUMN" from all who are courteous in the expression of their views; while a special department is allotted for "NOTES AND QUERIES."

The Contributors to the SECULAR REVIEW comprise the principal advocates of Secularism, including its founder, G. J. Holyoake.

CHARLES WATTS, Publisher,
31 Fleet Street, London, E.C.

INTERESTING NEW BOOKS For Radical Thinkers.

THE BIBLE FOR LEARNERS. By Dr. H. Oort, Professor at Amsterdam, and Dr. I. Hooykaas, Pastor at Rotterdam, with the assistance of Dr. A. Kuyper, Professor at Leyden. A popular exposition of the "Dutch School" of modern inquiry in the historical study of the Bible. Vol. I., Patriarchs; Moses; Judges. Vol. II., Kings and Prophets. Vol. III., New Testament (in preparation). Price $2.00 per volume.

THE BIBLE OF TO-DAY. By John W. Chadwick. Containing the principal results of the best historical and scientific criticism of the separate books of the Bible and their mutual relations. 304 pages. Price $1.50.

WHAT IS THE BIBLE? By J. T. Sunderland. An attempt to answer the question in the light of the best scholarship and in the most reverent and catholic spirit. 175 pages. Price $1.00.

THE RELIGION OF ISRAEL. From the Dutch of J. Knappert. "Its purpose is to give a faithful and accurate account of the results of modern research into early development of the Israelitish religion." 283 pages. Price $1.00.

ASPIRATIONS OF THE WORLD: A Chain of Opals. Selected from the best ancient and modern scriptures, with an introduction. By L. Maria Child. 265 pages. Price $1.25.

A MODERN SYMPOSIUM. Subjects: The Soul and a Future Life; The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief. By Frederic Harrison, Professor Huxley, Sir James Stephen, Lord Selbourne, Canon Barry, the Dean of St. Paul, Duke of Argyll, and others. 261 pages. Price $1.25.

DETERIORATION AND RACE EDUCATION: with practical application to the condition of the people and industry. By Samuel Rorer. 564 pages. Price $2.50.

THE GHOSTS: Liberty of Man, Woman, and Child, etc. By Col. E. G. Ingersoll (the latest lectures). 212 pages. Price $1.50. Also, THE GODS, etc., same style. 233 pages. Price $1.25.

Any of the above-named books sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

RADICAL LIBERAL LECTURES

By B. F. Underwood,

FOR THE FALL AND WINTER OF 1878-9.

1. The Theory of Evolution.
2. Darwinism Defined and Defended.
3. The Philosophy of Herbert Spencer.
4. The Genesis and Nature of Religion.
5. Modern Scientific Materialism.
6. Natural Selection versus Design in Nature.
7. An Hour with German Thinkers.
8. Intuition and Instinct Viewed in the Light of Modern Psychology.
9. The Pros and Cons of a Future Life.
10. Is there a Personal Intelligent Deity?
11. The Demands of Liberalism Pertaining to State Secularization.
12. Monogamic Marriage versus the Vagaries of Free Love.
13. Woman: Her Past and Present; Her Rights and Wrongs.
14. Religious Revivals: Their Causes and Consequences.
15. The Struggles and Triumphs of Free-thought in Europe and America.
16. Issues of the Age.
17. Buddha and Buddhism.
18. Ancient Egypt: Its Laws, Customs, and Religion.
19. The French Revolution: Its Causes and Consequences.
20. Crimes and Cruelties of Superstition.
21. Cook and other "Scientific" Annihilators of Materialism Reviewed.
22. Paine the Pioneer of Free-thought in America.
23. A Liberal's Answer to the Question, "If not Christianity, What?"
24. Christianity: To what Extent has it Helped or Hindered Civilization?
25. Jesus: All that is Known and what is Guessed about Him.
26. A True Man Better than a True Christian.
27. Judaism and Christianity Outgrowths of Pre-existent Heathenism.
28. Science versus the Bible.
29. The Origin and History of the Bible. (From one to six lectures.)
30. The Four Gospels Unhistorical and Unreliable.
31. Evidence for the Divinity of the Bible Examined.
32. Popular Assumptions Regarding the Bible and Christianity.
33. Bible Prophecies Falsified by the Facts of History.
34. Popular Objections to Liberalism Considered.

For terms, etc., address
B. F. UNDERWOOD,
THORNDIKE, MASS.

GOLD THE INDEX IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

Address THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston, U.S.A.

TO THE AMERICAN PATRONS OF CHOICE LITERATURE.

We have made arrangements with Messrs. CHAPMAN & HALL, London, England, for the right to publish an American Edition of

The Fortnightly Review,

Edited by JOHN MORLEY,

and are now publishing this celebrated Monthly Magazine, from a special duplicate set of stereotype plates, which are forwarded from England so promptly as to enable us to produce each month, not only an exact facsimile of this able Review, but to publish it almost at the same time the original is from England. It is in every respect equal to the London issue, at about half the original price. This effort will place in the hands of American readers the freshest utterances of leading thinkers on the issues with a promptitude unequalled. The comments of a large number of the best European thinkers on Science, Philosophy, Literature, Politics, and Miscellaneous Matters of general interest cannot fail to be appreciated and encouraged by thoughtful American readers. The following are a few of the contributors:—

Matthew Arnold,	Alfred R. Wallace,
Herbert Spencer,	Frederick Harrison,
Goldwin Smith,	Prof. Tyndall,
Right Hon. Lyon Playfair,	Prof. Darwin,
Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone,	Prof. Clifford,
Lionel A. T. Tallemache,	Author of Supernatural Religion ,
M. E. Grant Duff, M.P.,	Sir John Lubbock,
Hon. Robert Lowe,	Anthony Trollope,
Leslie Stephen,	T. Adolphus Trollope,
John Morley (the Editor),	Sir H. S. Maine,
G. H. Lewes,	Sir David Wedderburn,

AND NUMEROUS OTHERS.

Subscription Price, $5.00 per Year.

Published every month by the ROSE-BELFORD PUBLISHING CO., 60 York Street, Toronto, Ont.

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD. GREAT THROUGH LINE AND UNITED STATES MAIL ROUTE.

The attention of the travelling public is respectfully invited to some of the merits of this great highway, in the confident assertion and belief that no other line can offer equal inducements as a route of through travel. In

CONSTRUCTION AND EQUIPMENT

THE PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD stands confessedly at the head of American railways. The track is double the entire length of the line, of steel rails laid on heavy oak ties, which are embedded in a foundation of rock ballast eighteen inches in depth. All bridges are of iron or stone, and built upon the most approved plans. Its passenger cars, while eminently safe and substantial, are at the same time models of comfort and elegance.

THE SAFETY APPLIANCES

In use on this line well illustrate the far-seeing and liberal policy of its management, in accordance with which the utility only of an improvement and not its cost has been the question of consideration. Among many may be noticed

The Block System of Safety Signals, Jannet Coupler, Buffer, and Platform. The Wharton Patent Switch, and the Westinghouse Air-Brake, forming in conjunction with a perfect double track and road-bed a combination of safeguards against accidents which have rendered them practically impossible.

Pullman Palace Cars

are run on all Express Trains from New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington, to Chicago, Cincinnati, Louisville, Indianapolis, and St. Louis.

WITHOUT CHANGE,

and to all the principal points in the far West and South with but one change of cars. Connections are made in Union Depots, and are assured to all important points. The Scenery of the Pennsylvania Route is admitted to be unsurpassed in the world for grandeur, beauty, and variety. Superior refreshment facilities are provided. Employees are courteous and attentive, and it is an inevitable result that a trip by the Pennsylvania Railroad must form

A Pleasing and Memorable Experience.

Tickets for sale at the lowest rates at the Ticket Offices of the Company in all important cities and towns.

FRANK THOMSON, L. P. FARMER,
General Manager, General Passenger Agent,
C. S. HALDEMAN, New England Agent,
203 and 205 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 80 CENTS.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the fine list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

THE INDEX AS AN ADVERTISING MEDIUM.

Testimony of one who has tried it.

FLORENCE, Iowa, Jan. 5, 1878.
... THE INDEX is the best advertising medium which I have tried. ...
E. C. WALKER.

THE NEWBURY STREET SCHOOL will be re-opened for its twelfth year October 2. Address

Miss M. S. DEVEREUX,

24 NEWBURY STREET, BOSTON.

Pupils received into the family under the especial care of Miss M. S. Devereux and Miss Lucretia P. Hale.

References: Rev. Dr. Orville Dewey, Sheffield, Mass.; Rev. E. E. Hale, Rev. J. F. Clarke, Hon. Nathaniel Silsbee, Dr. Oliver W. Holmes, Mr. Henry E. Raymond, Boston; Prof. Benjamin Pierce, Cambridge, Mass.; Mr. A. O. Richards, Irvington, N.Y.; Mr. H. R. Bishop, New York.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF
O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
R. H. RANNEY,
F. E. ABBOT.

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

A REMARKABLE BOOK. A MODERN SYMPOSIUM.

SUBJECTS:

The Soul and Future Life.
By Mr. Frederic Harrison, Hon. Roden Noel, R. E. Hutton, Lord Selborne, Prof. Huxley, Canon Barry, Lord Blandford, Mr. W. R. Greg, Rev. Baldwin Brown, and Dr. W. G. Ward.

The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief.

By Sir James Fitz-James Stephen, Prof. Clifford, Lord Selborne, Rev. Mr. Martineau, Mr. Frederic Harrison, the Dean of St. Paul's, the Duke of Argyll, Dr. W. G. Ward, Prof. Huxley, and R. H. Hutton.

1 Vol. Crown, 8vo. Cloth, neat, $1.25.

This volume contains the scholarly utterances of the leading scientists and philosophers of Great Britain on two of the most important subjects of the century.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass., for

TRACTS.

I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.

II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.

III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.

IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.

V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13 and 20, 1878.)

VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles E. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II., III., IV., V., VI., 10 cts. each; ten for 50 cts.; one hundred, $5.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS for 1873, '74, '75, '76, and '77, Five cents each.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $3 outfit free. Address H. HALLITT & CO., Portland, Maine.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STIMSON & CO., Portland, Maine.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The twenty-fifth school year of this Family and Day School for both sexes will begin WEDNESDAY, Sept. 19, 1877. For Circular and information apply to

NATH'L T. ALLEN,
West Newton, Mass.

NEW BOOK BY INGERSOLL.

Contains his latest lectures on "The Ghosts," "Liberty of Man, Woman, and Child," "Centennial Oration," "Farming in Illinois," and others. Handsomely bound in one volume. Price $1.50. Also

THE GODS AND OTHER LECTURES.

Same style. Price $1.25. Sent post-paid on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE OF AMERICA.

1. EQUAL RIGHTS IN RELIGION. Contains an Historical Account of the Liberal League movement; a full Report of the Centennial Congress of Liberals at Philadelphia, July 1 to 4, 1876, with Essays by F. E. Abbot, James Parton, B. F. Underwood, and others; the Constitution of the National Liberal League, List of Charter Members, etc., etc. Octavo, pp. 190. Cloth, $1.00; paper, 75 cents.
2. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES, adopted at Philadelphia, July 4, 1876. With Resolutions of the Congress, Extracts from Letters by Distinguished Citizens, Constitution of the National Liberal League, etc. Adapted for gratuitous distribution by friends of the cause. Octavo, 24 pp. Single copies, 3 cts.; 10 copies, 15 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.65.
3. PRIVILEGE FOR NONE—JUSTICE FOR ALL. Contains the N. L. L. Platform and Resolutions adopted at Rochester, Oct. 26, 1877, full information how to organize Local Leagues, etc. Twenty-page tract for the use of workers. Single copies, 5 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.

ADDRESS

National Liberal League of America

231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON.

FROTHINGHAM'S WORKS.

THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY. An Essay. Third Edition—Revised. Price $1.50.

"Nobody can peruse this book without respect for the learning, mental honesty and skill in the statement of his convictions, possessed by the author, and for the essential integrity and philanthropic tendency of his spirit."—Springfield Republican.

"A profoundly sincere book, the work of one who has read largely, studied thoroughly, reflected patiently. It is a model of scholarly culture and of finished and vigorous style."—Boston Globe.

THE CHILD'S BOOK OF RELIGION. For Sunday-schools and Homes. Price $1.00.

THE SAFEST CREED, AND OTHER DISCOURSES. 12mo, Cloth, $1.50.

Not "food for babes," but full of suggestion for earnest and thoughtful men.

STORIES FROM THE LIPS OF THE TEACHER. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"The Parables are so re-told as to absorb the attention of the reader, and to fasten upon the mind what the writer believes to have been the impression the Savior meant to convey. It is in style and thought a superior book, and will interest alike young and old."—Zion's Herald (Methodist).

STORIES OF THE PATRIARCHS. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"A work of culture and taste; it will be welcome to all ages, and gives the sublimest lessons of manhood in the simple language of a child."—Springfield Republican.

BELIEFS OF THE UNBELIEVERS. A Lecture. 12mo, Cloth, $1.00.

TRANSCENDENTALISM IN NEW ENGLAND. A History. With sketches and studies of Emerson, Alcott, Parker, Margaret Fuller, the Brook-Farm Community, etc. 8vo, Cloth extra, with steel portrait of the author, $2.50.

THE LIFE OF THEODORE PARKER. 8vo. With Portrait, $3.00.

The New York Tribune closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

THE ORACLE OF THE CHRIST. A Study in Primitive Christianity, illustrating the prime importance of the Messianic Idea in the New Testament, as the key to the development of Christianity from Judaism. Octavo, Cloth, $1.75.

Mailed, post-paid, on receipt of price, by THE INDEX 231 Washington St., Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 9.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, DEC. 12, 1878.

WHOLE NO. 468.

LIBERAL LEAGUE PLATFORM

For the Presidential Election of 1880,

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.

2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.

3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

N. B.—The nomination of candidates upon the above platform was postponed to a future Congress of the National Liberal League.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification for any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

GLIMPSSES.

NEXT SUNDAY evening a meeting of the First Liberal League of Boston will be held at the Woman's Club Rooms, 4 Park Street, at 8 o'clock. Rev. M. J. Savage, the President, will preside. All friends are invited.

A CORRESPONDENT sent us some time since the following anecdote, as "illustrating the thoughtlessness of Orthodoxy's older victims": "My little boy spoke of some one as a fool. A neighbor's boy (whose piety was entirely superficial, by the way) said: 'You mustn't say that; that's swearing; if you swear, the devil will get you.' 'There isn't any devil.' 'Of course there is. Ask your mother if there ain't a devil.' 'I did, and she said there wasn't.' 'Oh, you just wait till you get to Heaven, and see if there ain't a devil.'"

THIS is the way in which the New York Sun records the observance of a recent Sunday in that city: "Grand sacred entertainments abounded again last evening. At the Grand Sacred Opera House Mlle. Di Mureka warbled grand sacred airs from sundry grand sacred operas; Gilmore's grand sacred band brayed and thumped in a truly grand and sacred manner; and Levy ravished all ears with his grand sacred cornet. At Steinway Hall the grand sacred Red Hussars from Hamburg excited the devotional feelings of their hearers to the highest pitch by selections from the grand sacred German composers. At the Atlantic Garden a vast congregation listened to the grand sacred melodies of Strauss and Offenbach, and consumed a huge quantity of grand sacred beer. At the Volks Garden a programme of grand sacred Irish and negro songs was rendered; at Harry Miner's New Theatre the exercises were varied by the introduction of a grand sacred banjo; and at the National Garden there were grand sacred jigs, grand sacred feats on the grand sacred slack wire, and a grand sacred farce."

GENERAL SHERIDAN, in his annual report, says of the Indian question: "There does not seem to be now, and never has been, steadiness in the management of the Indians; and if it were not for the results which so surely involve the military, this would be none of my business, and would not be mentioned." He attributes our wars to two classes of causes: "The first being constant encroachment upon the lands of the Indians sacredly guaranteed to them by treaty, and constant removal of tribes to distant reservations, in which they are again troubled by immigration." The second cause the general describes as dissatisfaction of the Indian at being compelled to remain on reservations, with his limits circumscribed, his opportunities of hunting abridged, and his game disappearing; with sickness in his lodge from changes of life and food, and insufficiency of the latter, and this irregularly supplied, and reflection coming to him of what he was and what he now is. General Sheridan believes that with kind treatment of the Indians, administered with steadiness and justice, an outbreak of Indian hostilities may be entirely prevented.

THE FOLLOWING notice of the death of one of the most ingenious men of our times is from the Boston Advertiser: "GEORGE HENRY LEWES, the well-known English author and the husband of Marian Evans (George Eliot) is dead. Mr. Lewes was born in London, April 18, 1817, was engaged in early life as a clerk in a commercial house, then began the study of medicine, and finally devoted himself to literature and philosophy. Passing two years in Germany in the study of philosophy, he returned to England in 1840, and soon took a prominent position in literature. Among the works which he has published are a Life of Robespierre, Bomthorpe, a Novel, Comte's Philosophy of the Sciences, The Spanish Drama, The Noble Heart, a Tragedy, Biographical History of Philosophy, and the Life and Works of Goethe. He has contributed to all the leading English reviews and magazines, was literary editor of the Leader from 1849 to 1854, and in 1865 he founded the Fortnightly Review, of which he was editor until December, 1886, when ill-health compelled him to retire from the post. During late years he has paid much attention to strictly scientific studies, and he has read and published several papers on physiological subjects. His latest work is of a religio-philosophical character, and is entitled Problems of Life and Mind. Mr. Lewes has had a very peculiar domestic history, and his marriage with Marian Evans was made under extraordinary circumstances, considering the position of the parties."

EVER SINCE the Syracuse Congress, we have watched with some curiosity to see how long the "free lovers" would submit to be snubbed and pushed into the background as they have been by their companions. The last Word brings this sign of restiveness on the part of its editor, Mr. B. R. Tucker: "We entertain a very great respect for Mr. Courtlandt Palmer, of New York, and therefore deeply regret that he has recently made statements in the New York Times which are both foolish and false. After rebuking that journal for branding the repealers as free lovers, he says: 'To the best of my knowledge and belief, there was not a single person present who either publicly or privately advocated free love; and I was informed that the insignificant knot of people who avowedly profess an adherence to that doctrine remained studiously away from the Convention. They knew they would receive neither welcome nor recognition.' Now, in the light of the fact that the present editor of this journal, who claims to be as out-and-out a free lover as the country holds, was in almost daily receipt, for weeks before the League Congress, of letters from Mr. Palmer's most intimate friends and coworkers urging him to organize himself and his 'insignificant knot' of friends into one or more Liberal Leagues, and attend the Congress as a delegate, and telling him that the responsibility of success or failure rested upon his shoulders, these remarks of Mr. Palmer seem just a trifle 'cheeky.' We know they are not true. We know that any avowed free lovers, regularly elected delegates to the Congress, would have been promptly recognized, and most of them heartily welcomed. Moreover, such actually was the case. If we understand the English language, the writings of one of the hardest workers at the Congress, Mr. Theron C. Leland, show that he is nothing if not a free lover. What is the use, pray, of all these denials and disclaimers? Why not admit the truth, and say at once that free lovers have rights which other human beings are bound to respect; that there is nothing in the Constitution of the League which excludes them from membership; and that there were some delegates who were free lovers, and more who were not, just as there were some who were teetotalers, and more who were not, and some who were positivists, and more who were not? Why not say these things to the carpers and cavillers, and let them make the most of them?" Mr. Tucker, who is the "terrible child" of the "repeal" party and must be a thorn in the side of the more politic members of it, might also have quoted this sentence by Mr. Verity from the Truth Seeker of October 12, before the Congress was held: "Another reason—and this is the last I shall name—why we ought to vote for repeal is, because free lovers, or marriage reformers, like all other reformers, political, scientific, and religious, must always be radicals; and we liberals ought to be found standing by their side, and not standing with the conservatives, fighting against them." In short, what the very intelligent editor of the Vineland (N.J.) Independent said in his issue of November 28 is strictly true: "One thing, however, might be said,—that, while all the 'repeal' party are not 'free lovers' so-called, all 'free lovers' belong to the 'repeal' party."

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE OF AMERICA. OFFICERS.

President.
FRANCIS E. ABBOT.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.
HOW. E. P. HURLBUT.....Albany, N. Y.
HOW. SAMUEL E. SEWALL.....Boston, Mass.
HOW. NATHANIEL HOLMES.....St. Louis, Mo.
HOW. HENRY BOOTH.....Chicago, Ill.
HOW. GEORGE W. JULLIAN.....Irvington, Ind.
MR. ELIZUR WRIGHT.....Boston, Mass.
MR. W. M. J. POTTER.....New Bedford, Mass.
MR. E. P. HALLWELL.....Boston, Mass.
MR. JAMES PARTON.....Newburyport, Mass.
MR. F. SCHURMANN-POTT.....San Francisco, Cal.
HOW. ABRAHAM PAYNE.....Providence, R. I.
REV. M. J. SAVAGE.....Boston, Mass.
RABBI B. FELSANTHAL.....Chicago, Ill.
REV. W. H. SPENCER.....Sparta, Wis.
MR. SAMUEL L. HILL.....Florence, Mass.
MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH.....Detroit, Mich.
MR. HORACE BEAVER.....Editor of the "Republican," Boston.
RABBI ISAAC M. WISE.....Editor of the "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
MR. MORITZ ELLINGER.....Editor of the "Jewish Times," New York.
REV. ROBERT COLLYER.....Chicago, Ill.
COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.....Peoria, Ill.
DR. T. L. BROWN.....Binghamton, N. Y.
HOW. R. S. MCCORMICK.....Manti, Minn.
ELDER F. W. EVANS.....New York City.
MR. ELIZABETH THOMPSON.....New York City.
MR. AMY POST.....Boston, N. Y.
MR. ELIZABETH CODY STANTON.....Tombury, N. Y.
MISS SALLIE HOLLEY.....Lottsburg, Va.
JOSEPH McDONOUGH.....Albany, N. Y.
RABBI MAX SCHLESINGER.....Albany, N. Y.

Secretary.
W. H. HAMLEN.....231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.
MISS JANE P. TITCOMB.....142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.
J. A. J. WILCOX.....8 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.
J. A. J. WILCOX.....W. H. HAMLEN.
F. E. ABBOT.....O. D. B. MILLS.
D. G. ORANDON.

Executive Committee.
Alabama.....J. H. HALLEY, Selma.
Arkansas.....JOHN ANDERS, Monticello.
California.....J. L. HATGE, San Francisco.
Colorado.....DAVID T. BEALS, Granada.
Connecticut.....GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
Delaware.....JOSEPH D. GOULT, Greenfield.
Florida.....T. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprise.
Georgia.....DR. A. A. BELL, Madison.
Illinois.....DR. A. G. HUMPHREY, Galena.
Indiana.....N. D. WATKINS, Xenia.
Iowa.....J. C. MICHENER, Adet.
Kansas.....JOHN FARMWORTH, Fort Scott.
Kentucky.....E. B. CLARK, Wilkesville.
Louisiana.....EMERSON BERTLEY, New Orleans.
Maine.....DR. W. E. BROWN, Bangor.
Maryland.....J. S. RUSSELL, New Market.
Massachusetts.....E. A. SAWTELL, Boston.
Michigan.....KARL SCHMIDT, Detroit.
Minnesota.....J. B. BASSETT, Minneapolis.
Mississippi.....E. PETERSON, St. Louis.
Missouri.....W. E. OUELLET, Lincoln.
Montana.....Y. G. BARRETT, White Rock.
Nebraska.....WILLIAM LITTLE, Monmouth.
New Hampshire.....FRANCIS W. ORVIS, Passaic.
New Jersey.....O. D. B. MILLS (Chairman), Syracuse.
New York.....J. W. THORNE, Warren.
North Carolina.....E. D. STARK, Cleveland.
Ohio.....SAMUEL GOET, Humboldt Basin.
Oregon.....GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
Rhode Island.....P. W. FULLER, Columbia.
South Carolina.....DR. E. H. FRIED, Charleston.
Tennessee.....DR. L. J. RUSSELL, Harrisonville.
Texas.....E. L. HAUGHTON, North Bennington.
Vermont.....L. SPAULDING, Norfolk.
Virginia.....DR. A. M. DENT, Weston.
West Virginia.....ROBERT O. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
Wisconsin.....D. P. WILCOX, Yankton.
Wyoming.....W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
District of Columbia.....W. FERGUSON, Provo City.
Utah.....NORMAN S. PORTER.

Finance Committee.
D. G. ORANDON, Chairman.....Chelsea, Mass.
MR. SARAH B. OTIS.....137 Warren Avenue, Boston.
HARLAN P. HYDE.....221 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES

Chartered by the National Liberal League of America.

FLORENCE, MASS.—President, Seth Hunt; Secretary, Clarence E. Brown.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Florence Liberal League.
SYRACUSE, N. Y.—President, John W. Truesdell; Secretary, Mrs. Nettie C. Truesdell.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Onondaga County Liberal League.
ALBANY, N. Y.—President, Thomas J. Hennessey; Secretary, Thomas Dugan.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Albany Liberal Association.

N.B.—The above is an acknowledgment of the fact that a charter is due and will be sent as soon as possible. Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues originally chartered by the "National Liberal League" will receive charters from the "National Liberal League of America" without extra charge, if they send a certified copy of their vote to accept the following invitation:—

"Voted, That all Local Leagues that approve the formation of the National Liberal League of America are invited to dissolve their connection with the old League, and to join this League."

AN OLD darkey who was asked if in his experience prayer had ever been answered, replied: "Well, sah, some pra's is ansud an' some isn't—'pends on w'at you axes fo'. Just arter the wah, w'en it was mighty hard scratchin' fo' de cullud breddern, I 'bearded dat w'en ebber I pway de Lord to sen' one o' Marce Peyton's fat turkeys fo' de ole man, dere was no notice took of de partition; but w'en I pway dat he would sen' de ole man fo' de turkey, de matter was 'tended to befo' sun up nex' mornin', dead sartin'!"

SOME INTERESTING applications of Scripture are noted from time to time in connection with revival work. A girl ten years of age, who had become interested in the meetings in a neighboring city, was approached by a friend who thought her zeal was decreasing: "You ought not to put your hand to the plough and then look back," said he. "Guess I want to know how much I have ploughed, don't I?" was the quick reply.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

The Future Church.

BY CHARLES E. PERKINS,
OF OSWEGO, NEW YORK.

The influence of dogmatic theology is becoming more and more a thing of the past. Since the Protestant Reformation, it has declined steadily until the last generation, from which date its downward course has been wonderfully accelerated. In Catholic countries, as France and Italy, this fact is exemplified by the scarcity of priests and seminarians, as well as by the lessened interest noticed among communicants in the exercises of the Church. Not only is absence from the mass usual among the educated classes, but it is becoming common with the peasantry, upon whose unlettered minds the hold of religion has ever been peculiarly strong.

In Protestant Europe and the United States, there is no lack of clergymen; divinity schools are well attended; and zeal for church construction and extension has reached an unprecedented height. But while to the uninitiated this might indicate a prosperous state of theology, a very little study shows that the condition of affairs serves only to bear out the conclusion expressed at the opening of this article.

It will be of interest to consider the cause of this decline, which is admitted and deplored by the Catholic Church as well as by Protestant synods and conventions. From a rational stand-point, there appears no mystery connected with it, but the subject has received the attention of assemblies of divines year after year, until "how to meet the growing spirit of infidelity" has become a stock subject for animated discussion among them. They are no less at fault in selecting a remedy than in explaining the cause.

In the present widely diffused state of popular intelligence, systems of religion as well as schemes of every description are judged by the practical fulfillment of their promises; and the measure of success attending any theory is gauged by its ability to stand in the light of approved moral precepts.

Theology has been on trial for nearly nineteen centuries. It has held in Christian countries during this time absolute control of spiritual affairs, and for hundreds of years sat in judgment upon temporal matters, with the same unyielding and arrogant spirit which it manifested in its own special domain. For ages its dogmas met with no opposition, and until the seventeenth century the doctrine of a literal brimstone hell was universally taught and believed. What has been the effect of this unlimited control over the consciences of men? Has it rounded to the good of humanity? Has theology taught men to be liberal, mild, charitable, or forgiving? It is not denied that it has inculcated lessons of most awful cruelty; that it has inspired the committal of deeds the mere recital of which makes one's flesh creep with horror; that it has presided at the rack and in the dungeon, at the stake and in the chamber of the Inquisition; that it has stifled freedom of speech and thought, and that it has hung like a millstone about the neck of science, and led her devotees to martyrdom.

But let the result of theological teaching upon its own supporters be examined. The theologians have laid down two good principles as the foundation upon which their entire superstructure has been built,—punishment for sin and atonement for sin. A place of retribution more terrible in its character than anything the mind of man can conceive is represented as yawning beneath the feet of every living soul. How, then, can we reconcile the fact that people believing in the existence of these fiery torments in all their dread reality have not ceased to do evil through fear of meeting the penalty? How is it that even in our own day noted criminals, men whose lives have been steeped in guilt, meet their doom with complacency? Hell is a reality whose existence they have never doubted; but yet they die without fear. The mystery is solved, and by the criminals themselves. "I am not afraid to die," "I am going to meet Jesus," "Christ has pardoned all my sins," etc., etc.,—these are among the last words of desperadoes who perish upon the scaffold, with which the newspaper-reading public is familiar.

Faith in atonement in these cases nullifies the fear of punishment. Understanding this, it ceases to be matter of surprise that men having been educated to no fine sense of morality, but having unflinching faith in the Church and its method of salvation, should persist in the commission of crime. Their spiritual guides teach that absolution from any degree of guilt can at any moment be obtained, a simple exercise of faith being alone necessary upon the culprit's part. "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be white as wool," not because of any real or attempted redress, but "because ye have believed, ye are made whole." Where a man is inclined to depravity, he finds infinite encouragement from this doctrine of salvation without money and without price. It removes from his mind all fear of retribution, and, lulled by false security, he pursues his sinful way; he has learned not only that salvation exists for sin, but that hell exists principally for those persons who persistently reject the beautiful consistencies of Christianity. For heretics and infidels, there is no salvation.

It is not claimed that the influence exerted by the doctrine of the atonement is alike with all men; while it has a deplorable tendency to encourage some in wrong-doing, there are those so constituted that the effect upon them of this belief is to make them nobler and better. These persons are conscientious by nature, upon whom any claim of gratitude rests with great weight; and they are overcome by the sense of supreme obligation which is instilled into their minds by the belief that the Son of God died that they might live. To them a lifetime devoted to the service of God seems all too short to be expressive of their appreciation of his suffering and condescension in their behalf. To each of these classes, the atoning blood of Christ may be a living fact; but whereas one may be inspired by this consciousness to the practice of every virtue, the other will follow the path his baser nature marks out for him, confiding in the sufferings of his Lord to rescue him from the consequences of his acts.

Thus this doctrine becomes at once the shame and the glory of the Christian Church. It seems but natural to conclude that the greater number of those who are assisted in their aspirations after a higher life thereby would be good and useful members of society even without any religion; their moral faculties naturally preponderate, keeping the purely animal functions in submission, so that temptation to indulge in criminal acts comes with very subdued force upon them, in comparison with the overwhelming power it exerts over their weaker brethren.

That this is not the case in all instances is no refutation of the statement, as exceptions serve to prove the rule. It is, however, peculiarly the fault of emotional religion that it lends its aid chiefly to those least in need of it, while the class whose frailties are very marked are often effected disastrously by it. Belief in a state of future torture might have exerted a salutary influence upon the depraved and vicious portions of mankind, had its accompanying teachings been different. There are vast numbers who are only kept from commission of crime by the terror which the majesty of the civil law holds over them. They know that each infringement of law has its attendant penalty, which will in all probability be enforced; and this knowledge serves as a restraint upon their evil inclinations. Thus A may have a strong desire to kill B, but fear of encountering the hangman's noose prevents the accomplishment of the act, when moral considerations would avail nothing. The law knows nothing of punishment by proxy, and the murderer cannot plead immunity from the consequences of his crime, because a third party has suffered innocently for an offence of like nature. But if A, being a believer in future punishment and also in vicarious atonement, is bold enough to defy the law and take the life of B, he will have much less fear of the second death than of the first. According to the very fundamental principles of his faith, his chances for enjoying the fruits of Paradise are infinitely greater than those of his unbelieving neighbor, though the latter may be in all respects a highly moral citizen. Practically, then, the most dangerous criminals consider only the legal prohibition of crime, the divine code having lost its influence upon their minds by reason of the negative clauses with which the atonement covers it. Such characters are too often insensible to reason, care nothing for their moral obligation to their fellows, and can only be reached by teachings which appeal directly to their sensibility to fear.

A religion teaching that every sin has its penalty commensurate with the violence of the deed and the circumstances under which it was committed, and that from the divine judgment there is no appeal, would be of great practical benefit, especially in cases like the one just considered. Thousands would thereby be deterred from leading wicked lives who now act their inclinations with impunity.

That theology has made men bigoted, intolerant, cruel, and vindictive, no one at all familiar with its history can successfully deny. And as the object of religion is, or should be, to inculcate lessons exactly the reverse of these, we have forced upon us the conclusion that in this respect its long trial has resulted in failure.

We have seen that its effect as a bulwark of morality has been to a surprising extent neutralized by its own doctrines; here, too, has been at least partial failure. When the masses were uneducated, it was comparatively easy to keep the defects of the system hidden from popular view, but with popular education came a spirit of investigation and analysis which has been the most potent factor in the undermining of theology. Within a recent period, however, another and most important agency has been working in the same direction. The wide-spread discontent caused by the prevalence of hard times, which leads to the dismemberment, if not disruption, of political parties, and to assaults upon all existing principles of government, also tends to foster a spirit of animosity towards theology.

The workingman, tolling early and late at low wages, striving to maintain his place in the great battle for existence, looks with envious eyes upon the costly and magnificent temples erected ostensibly for God's worship, which, with all other forms of church property, escape scot-free from taxation. There is no subject upon which he is so sensitive as this of taxation, which is shown by the rage which has been kindled from one end of the land to the other against holders of bonds. Nor is this strange. The average workingman, even with good health, constant employment, and no stroke of ill-luck, can scarce hope to do more than make both ends meet. Every dollar, therefore, that is extorted from him in the shape of taxes is a very serious matter.

Then there are the poor and unemployed, forced to live in idleness and see their children growing up in poverty, exposed to every temptation, while millions are annually expended in the printing of Bibles and tracts (of which the world is already full), and for missionary work in foreign lands. A man with an empty stomach is not apt to look too closely at technicalities. Feeling keenly his own needy condition, and witnessing the lavish manner in which theological societies dispense their funds, arouses in his breast the most rancorous animosity against them.

He is told that the Church is peculiarly the refuge of the poor; but when, ragged and forlorn, he enters its portals, and sees its luxurious appointments, elegant upholstery, handsome ceilings, gorgeous windows, and the whole evincing æsthetic taste coupled with boundless wealth, he is inclined to doubt whether he is in perfect keeping with his surroundings. As the richly-attired congregation rustles in, and the salaried artiste who presides at the organ leads off in a softly modulated anthem, our poor friend feels decidedly uncomfortable, and is confirmed in the opinion that he has strayed aside into strange pastures. However inconsistent it may be, he leaves the church with his heart filled with bitterness towards it; the contrast with his own bare, hard lot is too great. Theologians advocate the building of mission chapels for this class of people,—a great mistake, for their over-sensitive natures resent condescension and patronage above all things.

But while the causes above enumerated have been sapping the foundations of the old theology, there can still be found in every community genuine representatives of the old religious thought. These deeply deplore the liberal utterances of the modern pulpit, while they view with unforgotten alarm the ever-widening chasm which marks the departure of the Church of to-day from that of the last century. In the minds of this conservative class, morality is indissolubly bound up with religion; and religion means to them an unhesitating belief in the Bible as it was interpreted by the founders of their respective creeds.

It matters not that science has removed every vestige of solid ground from beneath their feet,—that the biblical history of creation, taken literally, is so incompatible with facts as to be absurd,—or that the quickening instincts of humanity revolt in disgust from the cruel teachings of Calvinism. They are utterly unable to conform to the changed state of affairs. They attend church, and sigh in vain for the comforting doctrine of exclusive salvation, with its accompaniment of undying torture to those without the pale of Christianity. They see about them many who make no profession of piety, whose ranks are constantly recruiting, and they look back regretfully to the days when attendance upon "meeting" was compulsory, and when the minister and the tithing-man held undisputed sway, dividing the tithes between them.

The circle which bounds their mental vision is a narrow one, and they resist stoutly every effort made to enlarge it. Criticism of their creed is heresy; scepticism regarding any part of the Bible is infidelity. The general integrity, uprightness, and morality of most of those who reject Christianity is to them proof only of the insidious workings of the arch-enemy of mankind, who seeks to lure the faithful from their allegiance, through the medium of lives outwardly in conformity with good principles. The revelations which have been presented to us in the literature of China and the East, affording such grand aids to the study of universal religion, carry no lessons to them. They persist in believing that the precepts of Confucius and Mencius were in some unaccountable way connected with Christianity, although their authors died several centuries before Christ was born; and they class as "heathen" a people whose ethics are of the very highest order, spending millions in the hopeless endeavor to persuade them to exchange the Sau-king and Shi-king for the Hebrew Scriptures.

Trials for heresy are instigated by these zealots, and they are sufficiently numerous to make their voices heard in nearly every religious assembly. That they are entirely honest in their convictions, and earnest in their desire to reinstate the old theology, we readily admit; and we agree with them in the gloomy views which they take of their own efforts in this direction.

The characteristics of the old régime were an intense faith in the Scriptures and an unreserved reliance upon the teachings of the past. It scarcely requires an argument to prove that the ends chiefly subserved thereby were superstition and ignorance. A ban was placed upon all independent research, and the minds of men were hampered at every turn. Intolerance proceeded naturally therefrom, and persecution was born of intolerance. Unfortunately for mankind, the book upon which Christianity was founded was of such a character that progress in any direction was next to impossible, without coming in conflict with its real or fancied injunctions; and, as long as the theological thralldom existed over the majority of men, it was comparatively easy to curb the researches of philosophers and scientists. The history of progress, therefore, can truly be said to comprehend also the history of the decline of theological influence; for from the moment that real science gained a foothold in Europe, the vast and complicated system which the Church had erected began to fall away. It required less effort in each succeeding generation for men to free their minds from churchly domination; and, while rationalism gathered impetus from the increasing accessions to its numbers, theology lost in influence proportionately.

The characteristics of the present Church are of a very negative sort. It retains the name and outward form of worship which were bequeathed it by its ancestors. Its written creeds remain unchanged, but have come to form no more than a nominal foundation for an edifice that once rested solely upon them. What its communicants disbelieve would perhaps be easier of statement than what they really subscribe; but there is marked difficulty in attaining any positive knowledge as to the state of their faith.

It is no longer possible for intelligent churchmen to disregard the recent and great encroachments of science upon what had long been considered the unquestioned domain of theology. While there was the least plausibility in holding to the infallibility of the Scriptures, their dilemma, though pressing, was not wholly hopeless. As soon, however, as they relinquished one point in dispute in the effort to accommodate their system to scientific requirements, the entering wedge was admitted, which is now so nearly driven home that there is scarcely cohesion left sufficient to hold together the sheet-anchor of their religion.

In the matter of living faith, the Church of to-day stands a confessed nonentity before the tribune of its founders. With the sole exception of the lessening minority of conservatives already mentioned, its membership is made up of men and women who yield a nominal assent to its doctrines, while in reality living in utter disregard of them. They keep up its running expenses, contribute liberally to the missionary funds, and support Bible societies; in return for which they expect from their minister entertaining lectures which shall omit all allusion to unpleasant themes. They are making a social club of the once sacred Church, and, while confessedly democratic in their creeds, are rapidly assuming an exclusiveness which is an effectual barrier against the intrusion of the lower classes. It is this constant practicing of self-deceit that is the most powerful factor in the work of undermining the moral principles of church-members. They make a pretence of believing what they secretly acknowledge as being more than doubtful; and the schooling in dissimulation which they thus daily gain bears abundant fruit in the flagrant dishonesty that is so rampant among them.

Is, then, remedy for this undesirable condition of the Church to be found in a return to those principles which the conservatives desire? It is not, and for more than one reason; the first and most important of which is, that such a return is impossible. Unless all the modern stores of knowledge can be buried and their memory forever blotted out, the mental features of the Middle Ages can never regain an ascendancy. Nor is it desirable in a humanitarian point of view, as the chances of being defrauded by a dishonest church-member are preferable to being burned or tortured for admitting a fugitive doubt regarding a Church tenet. The real hope of true religion and morality is to be found, first, in that body of brave men whose courage equals their convictions, who have entirely withdrawn from Church alliances, choosing rather to face the opprobrium which still attaches to independence than to live longer under professions which are meaningless. It is theirs to exemplify to the world by their lives that the ever-living principles of morality, which governed the Chinese sages in their blameless conversation, are powers whose existence in the world is in no degree conditional upon the perpetuation of any religious system. It is theirs to prove that self-respect and not self-abasement is the key to true manhood. It is theirs to teach that man is the custodian of himself; that the power to resist evil coexists with his responsibility for its perpetration; that crime carries with it a punishment from which there is no escape; and that trust in a vicarious atonement is illusory.

A second and powerful source of aid, in the work of educating the people to a higher ethical standpoint, is found in those religious bodies which have had their origin within the present century, whose birth was unfettered by any of those malignant conditions which presided at the inception of Protestantism, and who seek to teach and practice, as Christians, those principles only which elevate and ennoble mankind. With equal propriety, these congregations might call themselves by any other name; they are Christians indeed in the best sense, but not in the popular sense. Among their numbers are some of the wisest and best of our scholars, authors, and statesmen. Many men of scientific attainments are also included in their ranks. They represent the power of conservation in the new Church. Between their belief and that of the rationalist there is a difference of degree rather than kind; and, as their ultimate tendencies are identical, we can predict with confidence their final union. Thus will be formed the Church of the future; and among its characteristics we may expect that bigotry, intolerance, false doctrine, and superstition will have no place. In its teachings, we shall look for sound principles of morality and right living, earnest denunciations of wrong, and the exaction from its members of a rigid conformity with acknowledged laws of truth and justice. Every fresh achievement of science, every discovery which aids in unravelling the history of the universe, will meet with instant recognition from the future Church; and thus will be ended at last the conflict, which has so long been maintained, of religion against science. As a public teacher, the future Church will exert itself in disseminating sound views upon all questions of moment, recognizing the fact that the nation is but the family enlarged and multiplied, and that public honor is quite as essential as private honesty. While striving to revive and maintain an earnest patriotism, it will endeavor by all means to promote a friendly interest between nations, and to inculcate a cosmopolitan spirit.

There will be no attempt to throttle individuality by insisting upon a prescribed formula of belief. Fellowship will depend solely upon good conduct. Each separate organization will adopt such rules for its government as the majority may decide upon. Especial care will be taken to make the Church and all its services attractive to the young, thereby offering a marked contrast to the old Church, which has ever been a source of dread to children.

It is not intended to change the order of Nature by attempting to place all mankind upon an intellectual or moral level. The folly of this course has been shown only too plainly by its result in the old religious system. All men are not created equal, although, until the privilege is forfeited, they have equal right to "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." It is not conducive to self-respect to treat with brotherly familiarity, within the sanctuary, those persons whose company would be shunned outside its walls; neither is it the effect of such usage to establish moral or religious principles within the heart of the party thus treated.

Kindness can exist without undue familiarity, and all experience has proven that the friendship of the gushing is not the most lasting; it too often expends itself in ostentatious pretence.

It will be said that the future Church will appeal only to the cultivated, and that the poor and lowly will be unable to appreciate or take part in it. In answer to this, we believe that truth ought to be propagated at least as easily as error, and that rational religion can be instilled into the minds of men, no matter how ignorant they may be, with greater facility than the unreasoning faith which the old dogmatic theology fosters.

THEOLOGICALS AND HISTORIANS.

England has several very eminent and learned theological writers; but too many of the clergymen who publish "apologies" for Christianity and revealed religion in our day have a peculiarity which did not belong to their predecessors of the last century. They do not appear to understand what, as lawyers say, is the issue. They do not address their defence to any known mode of contemporary attack. The theological teaching which is still mixed up with the secular education given in our universities has the same weakness. One of them, without exalting Bishop Butler to the pinnacle on which he was placed by the last generation of Oxford men, still attaches supreme importance to the arguments of a writer who has strong affinities for some of the theories of our time, on man and morals, which clergymen most dislike. The other university still defends Theism through one book of Paley and Christianity through another; while neither of these works has more than an occasional relevance to the arguments of the "Agnostic" or the criticisms of the Tübingen doctor. These oddities are pardonable in ancient seats of learning, which retain veneration for great names a little longer than is reasonable; but a less intelligible example of something like perversity in apologetics was given by a clergyman who read a learned and interesting paper to the Church Congress before it rose. Canon Tristram dealt with the newest of new knowledge, with readings of stone tablets and cylinders from Middle Asia, and with the most recent explorations of Palestine. He points out, upon this evidence, with an air of triumphant exultation, that most or all the towns mentioned in the Old Testament had their sites in real places, and that many of the most marvellous parts of the Hebrew tradition were known in some form or other to populations far beyond the borders of Palestine. Quis negavit? Who is the sceptic whom Canon Tristram conceives himself to have confuted?

No doubt, in the last century many facts were disputed which the key recently obtained to the ancient civilizations of the valleys of the Euphrates and Tigris has enabled learned men to establish. Voltaire would probably have denied that the stories of the deluge or of the tower of Babel had entered any brain except that of a fraudulent Jewish priest or Levite; and he possibly doubted whether Dan and Beersheba had any real existence. But does Canon Tristram think it worth while to reply nowadays to the historical theories of Voltaire? The fact is, that the far-extending shadow of this great name forces those who hate the man who bore it to attribute to him an influence which he never possessed. He assuredly never produced any effect to speak of in any Protestant country, least of all in England. The reason is not far to seek. The portions of the Old Testament which moved his scorn, and at which he taught multitudes in Roman Catholic countries to laugh, are listened to by Protestants from their childhood upwards, under circumstances which invest them with every association of reverence. We listen to the narrative of the Old-World tribal warfare which gave Palestine to the children of Israel, to the miraculous fall of Al, to the account of David's robber-life and of Solomon's wives, and to hundreds of passages of similar purport, without the very faintest inclination to laugh at them. The morality which they reflect has frequently been a theme of speculation with Protestants, in its relation to civilized morality; but the most sceptical of them would always have resented the gibes of the man who scoffed at them as unmannerly and indecent. But Voltaire was educated in a Catholic community, to whom the Bible—though as much the theoretical foundation of Christianity as it is to Protestants—was a sealed book. Even to our day, a Roman Catholic, though taught to venerate the Old and New Testaments abstractedly, has hardly any religious associations with them. When, then, Voltaire, with his belief already sapped by intercourse with the English Deists, came to examine the Old Testament, it seemed to him simply a collection of old wives' fables. He thought it not so much untrue as absurd. And this view he successfully conveyed to the great bulk of the educated classes of his day in those Catholic countries which prescribe the Lives of the saints for pious reading, rather than the scriptural text. The "withering sarcasms" of Voltaire are a commonplace with some English writers; but when they are directed against the Biblical narrative, there are few Englishmen whom they do not strike as the scoffs of an irreverent jester.

The theory of a simultaneous sacerdotal forgery of the Jewish records which Voltaire entertained, or at any rate suggested, would no doubt be finally exploded, wherever it was seriously adhered to, by the discovery of the keys to that ancient literature which the scholars of our generation have recovered from Assyrian stones. The kings of Judah and Israel were undoubtedly real persons, whose relations with their powerful conquering neighbors are now and then unmistakably referred to in the newly deciphered records. The earlier Hagiological narratives of the creation, the fall, the flood, and the dispersion of nations, were not in any way a peculiar possession of the Jewish priesthood, but in some form or other constituted the sacred story of crowded Asiatic populations. The topographical investigations recently undertaken have again shown that the places said to have been taken from the Canaanites during the progress of Joshua's conquest were as much real places as the points which marked the advance of the Dorians in the conquest of the Peloponnesus. Canon Tristram may claim a victory over Voltaire, if it be worth claiming; but does he think that the spirit which, in this day, is most adverse to the theological spirit and to supernatural explanations of human events, would at once allow itself to be defeated because the books of the Old Testament are shown not to have been the product of fraudulent invention? The enemy whom Canon Tristram evidently believes himself to be victoriously combating would find his principal weapon not in the unlikeliness of the Scriptural history to any other history, but in its extreme likeness. This is the view of it taken by that school of German theology at which Canon Tristram more than once carps. The critics who belong to it regard this history as made up, like a great deal of other very ancient history, of official chronicles, of poetry, of old legislation, and of primitive tradition; as exhibiting exactly the same mixture of the possible and the supernatural, as pervaded by exactly the same spirit of intense local or national pride. The discoveries at which Canon Tristram exults are not at all likely to convert this class of minds to a more theological view of the Hebrew records. If they accept the readings of the cylinders and tablets made by Mr. G. Smith and others as implicitly as does Canon Tristram, they may possibly say that the Jewish history now conforms more than ever to that secular history which is acknowledged to be governed by uniform laws. The earlier Hagiological literature of the Hebrews is now shown to be a local version of a literature extensively diffused over the whole of Middle Asia. That part of it written in Phœnician characters was never lost, and was widely diffused in spite of the varying fortunes of the race which preserved it; that part of it which was written in cuneiform letters on stone perished for a while when the great cities of Mesopotamia were overthrown; but, now that it has been recovered by modern learning, it proves to set forth substantially the same legends which have been so long and so familiarly known to us. In order to have the advantage over a foe far subtler and far more formidable than Voltaire,—the modern historical spirit,—Canon Tristram should show that the Jewish history has characteristic marks separating it from all other history, and not merely that it has a great deal in common with the history which the nations bordering on Palestine have left engraven on stone. The issue which the apologetic writer has to meet is plain enough. If there had been no Old Testament, several of the marvellous, supernatural stories which Mr. George Smith interpreted from the fragments of stone which he pieced together would have been at once set aside as having no claim to be received as historical truth, whatever else might be their interest. They would have been classed with the Hagiological literature spread in many diverse forms over the vast country of India, or with the legends which fill the infancy of Greece and Rome. But, since what appears to be a version of them forms part of the biblical history, the apologist should show that this version is widely separated from all others,—not that it is strikingly analogous to them. The undertaking would require many qualifications, among which moral sensibility would be almost as important as erudition; and we cannot say that it is superseded by Canon Tristram's suggestion that the flood should be put back a thousand years, and that the whole Hagiological literature of Middle Asia is probably derived from a communication which Noah made after the deluge to his sons, Shem, Ham, and Japheth.—Pall Mall Gazette.

CHRIST TO CONTROL THE GOVERNMENT.

For years, an organization has had an existence, looking to the introduction of the controlling influence of religious bigotry into all the affairs of our nation. At first, a struggling few openly advocated the recognition of God in the Constitution, but, from the notorious fanaticism of its leading advocates, the idea that in this free, secular republic such an event could ever be accomplished in the nineteenth century, with the light of the past history of nations who have established a theocratic or religious government shining upon it, caused the idea to be repudiated. But the psychology of fanaticism and bigotry is catching. When those who would attain to civil power through ecclesiastical assumptions find they can infuse into the masses an idea capable of extension, they will strain every nerve to operate upon the superstitious elements of those masses to accomplish their purpose.

In this matter of the union of Church and State, the idea of a union of the distinct organizations of the so-called Christian churches was by many looked upon as an utter impossibility; hence, whenever that idea was broached, it was scouted at as the result of the wild vagaries of some theoretical alarmist or of a disordered imagination; but it can be so looked upon no longer.

When, some three years since, Pope Pío Nono offered an allocation to all the erring children of the Holy Mother Church who had strayed into forbidden paths of whatever denomination, and tendered his gracious pardon to all who would return to the true fold, he made the advance towards a consummation the union. Through the ritualists of the English of Church, a near approach was made to enter the open door from the other side. The Holy Evangelical Alliance brought into fellowship the different offshoots from the Roman Catholic faith, and powerful condensing engines are at work to consolidate the whole into a political element. Just now, when the first step had been taken by the New Haven School Board to disconnect from our schools the various forms and ceremonials of religion, and leaving religion where the Constitution of the fathers placed it, to be taught in the family or in the church, each according to the dictates of conscience, the secret compact, which the parties spoken of have inaugurated, is revealed by the union in that city of Protestants and Roman Catholics, to not only restore religious exercises in the schools, but to establish a manual of religious exercises acceptable to the different parties in the compact. And this, Dr. Bacon explains, was for the purpose of "settling" this matter "for the whole country as well as for New Haven."

Only a few days since, a Roman Catholic priest in Aurora, Ill., conversing with a liberal friend of ours in regard to the state of religious affairs in Germany, remarked, in substance: "We have no longer any fight with the Protestants; they are glad we are Christians, and we are glad they are; it is only a question of time when they will all return to the fold of the Mother Church. It is with the infidels the contest must now be waged; it is the materialists and sceptics the Church has to fight."

Add to this the leading editorial in the Northwestern Christian Advocate, published previous to the election, showing its accord therewith, and the animus of the whole thing becomes apparent. From that article, we select the following choice tid-bits:—

"Since good government fosters religion, the conversion that comes of Christ must cover the ballot-box. It demands for the Master recognition in the primary act of government. In this is the royal, righteous union of Church and State,—Christ at the polls by proxy. . . . Vote, Christian! Vote for Christ. Vote to give Him a present kingdom in this country. Vote as you pray. . . . Would not the Christian millions, voting together, make a mighty party of themselves? With God, would they not be the majority? . . . Politicians, as rated in to-day's markets, may laugh at thought of a distinctively Christian party in politics. But the day will come when the vintage of their scorn will be the tears of their kind. The time is not extremely remote when the political office-seeker shall be catechised upon more than his back votes,—upon his recognition or rejection of the voice of God in government."

With no greater certainty can we foretell the approach of tempest and tornado by the signs of the heavens, when we see the sky become suddenly overcast with black and greenish clouds, when the lightnings leap and flash, and with their lurid glare light up the scene, when the thunders which at first seem but distant mutterings soon grow into a distinct roar, then swell, and crash, and boom, while the rising gale, like a winged fury, is sweeping forward with untiring force and increasing speed the storm-angel of destruction, than we can discern,—in these various combinations and operations, the gathering of a power always dangerous to civil liberty, and which, if it attains the supremacy in our government, is destined to overthrow and sweep away all freedom of conscience, and deprive citizens, by bloody edicts or cruel torture, if need be, of the right to think for themselves.

Let those who attempt to reason otherwise, and who argue the impossibility of such a result, review the history of the Church since it first attained to civil power. The bloody and monstrous acts of cruelty which bigotry has wrought in the name of Christ are without a parallel in the annals of outrageous deeds. The millions of spirits of those whose earthly all was sacrificed to this unfeeling Moloch of priestly bigotry and hate should rise up and inspire us to vigilance, and energize our determination to be and remain free.

To a great degree, we owe our present liberties to the influence of minds whose broad patriotism rose superior to the narrow confines of creeds, as expressed by them in the Constitution of the United States, and in our unsectarian schools. He who would manipulate the one, and change this secular government to a hierarchy,—the liberty of conscience to Church rule,—and thus change the other into the channel of sectarian dogmatism, is the enemy of civil liberty and of the "inalienable rights" of American citizens, and would be a fit tool to act as executioner to the Inquisition.

To "vote for Christ, vote to give Him a present kingdom in this country," means simply to disfranchise all non-sectarians of whatever name,—to have disabling laws which will prevent them from giving testimony, sitting on juries, or holding office. There is no use in trying to blind ourselves to the portent of the coming storm. The only way is to prepare for it, and begin at once our preparations. Delay may overthrow the citadel of religious liberty. If we temporize, and, like the Waldenses, accept the false assurances of our bigoted foes, like them we must expect to be outraged and slaughtered. Liberty and conscience—the bill of constitutional civil rights—is too precious a boon to be frittered away. To the Spiritualists, liberalists, and non-sectarians generally is committed its sacred keeping. While the bitterest foes among the religious denominations are combining to crush out the principles so dear to us, shall we continue divided and disorganized until the opportune moment to build up and establish those principles shall have passed, and we become the slaves of the bigot's power?

We must emphatically and unitedly insist that our schools shall be free from all religious teachings, and that all encroachment upon the domain of thought and conscience shall be inhibited in the future in fact, as it has been in the past by letter, from having any place in the organic structure of our government, or being engrafted anywhere upon it. Upon this depend our individual rights, our civil liberty, and the future prosperity of our country, and not only of our own country, but of all countries.—Chicago Religious Philosophical Journal, Nov. 23.

MISS HELEN TAYLOR ON THE OBLIGATION OF VERACITY.

Last Sunday evening, Miss Helen Taylor lectured at South Place Institute, on "The Obligation of Veracity." The audience was the largest that has yet attended the Secular Services held there on Sunday evenings, and was most enthusiastic in its appreciation of the lecture. The music, which was exceedingly well received, consisted of selections from the "Creation" and the "Stabat Mater." Previous to the lecture, Mr. Witton read a chapter from Herbert Spencer's Social Statics, entitled "The Effervescence of Evil."

Miss Taylor, on rising, received a perfect ovation. She commenced by remarking that it might be thought that she went too far when she selected the very fundamental principle of secularism as a guide in life, as against the fundamental principle of revelation, as the subject of her lecture; but the obligation of veracity had been the subject of her thoughts for many years, and she trusted that it would be always to her of the highest importance. It seemed to her that those who believed in a wise, good Judge—hearing all their wishes, and deciding justly—could never tell a lie. Yet we did not find that that thought governed men's minds as we should have believed. Truthfulness had not been the foundation of life in the past. It was upon our duties to our fellow-men that we could find a basis for truthfulness,—the accordance of fact with speech, neither more nor less. Truth does not consist only in speaking the truth; you must take care that your words convey a just idea to the person to whom you speak. You often convey the impression you wish to convey, like the Jesuits. We have got the words commonly used,—popularized, she thought, by Miss Edgeworth,—"The truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth." She thought that here too much was asked. The whole truth seemed to her too puzzling. It was asking too much to expect us to be able to know the whole truth; and, when too much was expected, we often fell short. We were not doing justice to our fellow-creatures, however, if we denied to them any truth we knew, and which they had asked of us. It was a part of the great law of equality and justice to let them know facts which might be of use to them in their daily lives. She felt quite convinced that, in savage and half-civilized countries, the habit of untruthfulness came from indefiniteness in their own minds. There was a saying she had often heard Catholic peasants in France give utterance to, Quelle chose de miraculeux,—something "rather miraculous,"—with reference to an image moving its eyes. Now, either the image did move its eyes, or it did not. If you asked them to define what the image did with its eyes, they could not tell you; the whole thing seemed to be beyond their ken.

Children, too, Miss Taylor continued, hear and read things which they cannot understand, and which they are told they cannot understand. They acquire thus a habit of confusedness of mind, which grows with them; and the greatest liars are those of the greatest confusedness of mind. We find this confusion among the ignorant Catholics of foreign countries,—the utterly indefinite state of mind in which people express themselves to their fellow-creatures. There was a country which was supposed to be haunted with devils. A poor Hindu was once sent into this country on an errand. As he was very quickly back, he was asked how it had happened that he could be back so soon; his answer was that he had been to the top of the pass, and the devils were standing there as thick as trees, and he could go no further. On examination, it was found that they were simply trees planted thickly. This Hindu had truthfully believed the image he had imagined in his mind.

One of the first things, said the lecturer, which had brought men's minds into anything like definiteness was justice in a country. Lawyers taught the value of precision, like men of science. There was a time when it had been thought that truth might be brought out by single combat,—when the weakest man in a fight was brought out as the liar. Lawyers had created a feeling of duty in men's minds. With their system of severe cross-examination, truth was elicited and definiteness enforced. So with the great events of Nature. Men of science have done for us in that direction what lawyers, with all their faults, have done for us in the other. The very cataloguing of natural objects had a tendency to a definite and precise habit of mind. Take, for instance, the man who went into the fields, and noted down the different varieties of flowers, their color, size, shape, height, etc. It would be more difficult for that man to tell a falsehood than for the one who, passing by, only saw that these were flowers. He would have to form some theory to excuse it.

Coming to another branch of her subject, Miss Taylor asserted that much mischief had been done by those who had ascribed the attribute of mercy to the Creator of this universe. Many a man, relying upon this attribute of mercy, was guilty of actions which he detested,—perhaps which he would punish in another man. Yet he laid the flattering unction to his soul that God would be more merciful than just. The secular belief was the true belief, that every action brought with it its own sure and definite results,—results on which the doctrines of generations yet unborn might hang. The secular belief, which inculcated a higher, sterner, a deeper, sense of duty, was better than that which included a capricious God.

Referring to the chapter read from Herbert Spencer's work, Miss Taylor said that, if growth and civilization were the adaptability of the organization to the outward circumstances, knowledge must be the foundation, she thought, of morality. One thing she was quite sure of,—it must be the foundation of truth; the importance of our words agreeing with facts. She had agreed with him when he had pointed out, in one of his articles, the enormous influence of man in altering circumstances around him. As men's minds, by science and by law, got more truthful and definite, people would know better and better how to adapt themselves to circumstances around them.

Having condemned the trickeries and deception of tradespeople, Miss Taylor remarked that she thought silence was the right of all persons when asked questions they did not think it right to answer. The truth ought to be held to, whatever the consequence might be. Truth was absolutely essential to good progress; falsehood was never even a good policy. Miss Taylor then quoted the case so ably put by the casuists, as to what one ought to say in the event of the unjust pursuers of a man asking which way he went. Miss Taylor thought, however hard it might be, it would be for the benefit of the human race if the truth were told. How many men had had to die at the stake in order that their principles might be received! Martyrs of science there had been, as well as martyrs of religion. There were cases when the good of the world must be bought by the martyrdom of individuals. Once allow untruthfulness on any occasion, and human ingenuity would constantly induce people to take advantage of it in cases in which their feelings were strongly interested. As we get nearer to the higher state, it is not for us to judge in individual cases. General rules have been laid down, which must be kept to in all cases, however difficult. People should think that the result of their actions must be considered as the result of the actions of the whole human race. It is the confidence in one another's truthfulness that enables society to hold together. The truthfulness of man to man is one of the highest conquests.

Miss Taylor resumed her seat amid loud and prolonged applause. Some little discussion followed, taken part in by a lady, a minister of religion, the chairman, and another gentleman, to the whole of whose remarks Miss Taylor ably and satisfactorily replied. —Secular Review (London), Nov. 23.

A FREE PRESS.

The American people glory in the freedom of the press; and there is just cause. In no other country of the world, perhaps, is the press so free to discuss all subjects,—to canvass the merits of every political candidate, to investigate every dogma, to censure all who are in authority, to propose and advocate new measures. In many countries, editors and authors must conform to the opinions of those who rule in Church and State, on peril of having their publications at any moment suppressed. It is one of the best indications of the progressed civilization of the American people, that no such censorship would here be permitted. The rights of free utterance are zealously guarded by all the conflicting parties and sects, no one of whom would dare propose to restrict the "inalienable rights" of the people in this respect. Only in a time of national peril has any attempt been made to exercise such restraint; and even then it by no means met with general favor.

But great as the attainments are which have been made in this direction by the people of the United States, still greater are in store. The press here is far from being free in the absolute sense. It is handicapped in many ways, and the utterance of truth constantly thwarted, in spite of all our boasting of free thought, free speech, and a free press.

My radical friend, Alexander, is very earnest on this subject; and though he sometimes expresses himself too strongly, he often hits the nail on the head. Witness the following sentences, which he threw at me the other day, appearing almost angry in his warmth:—

"Freedom of the press! I tell you the press is not free,—even in this free country. Nearly every paper is the organ of some sect, party, or interest, and is bound to represent, in all cases, its employers. The newspapers free! They are free to abuse one another, but show me one of any considerable influence that is free to speak the truth without reference to any man or body of men. Editors independent! They are, nearly to a man, dependent on their subscribers, and cater to their wishes as a French cook caters to the appetites of his employers. Money is the curse of literature, as it is of nearly everything else. Editors and authors inquire, What will please? What will sell? What will make my paper or book popular, and give it a large circulation? They do not inquire, What can I say for the cause of truth,—of progress,—of God? A free press! There never will be a free press until it is made independent of money,—till editors and authors cease to write with their eye on filthy lucre or vulgar fame. Why, sir, your large religious papers, which should speak as in the fear of God, are often prostituted to mammon,—often dependent on advertisements for their very existence! How can a man write the truths of heaven or earth when such is the fact? or when he has to keep ever on the guard against saying anything that may possibly offend some of his readers?"

"But," I suggested, "you would not prevent writers from seeking to please their readers?"

"I only affirm," he replied, "that the desire to speak the truth should ever be paramount; the desire to please will be all the more beautiful, and successful, too, in the long run, for acting in subordination to it. At present, the true order of this duality is reversed; that which should be secondary and accessory has become first and indispensable."

"True; but so long as men live by writing, will not authors be under so strong an inducement to please, that a truly free press will be nearly impossible?"

"Yes; but the time will come when a class of writers will arise who will write independently of the question whether their literary labors will replenish their purses."

"But will there remain sufficient inducement to such a class, should it ever appear, to stimulate their best endeavors?"

"Inducement! Is human nature so poor that mercenary reward is essential to the development of its powers? Far be the thought! On the contrary, let us rather say, its highest, noblest elements are inaccessible to such considerations; and that the purest, best results of talent and genius will be produced only under the impulse of the highest and purest motives." —American Socialist.

FAIR AGNES.

A ROMANTIC LEGEND OF NEW ENGLAND.

BY R. H. HOWARD.

Sir Charles Henry Frankland, son of a former governor of Bengal, and descended from a family of England tracing its lineage backward to the Norman conquest, had visited America long previous to the war of the Revolution, and was holding the office of collector of his majesty's customs in Boston under the royal government of Massachusetts. Unhappily, the gay manners and licentious principles of the young knight were better accommodated to the profligate circles of the Old-World courts in which he had moved than to the severe morality of Puritan New England society.

On some occasion, in pursuit either of business or pleasure, it would appear that this nobleman chanced to visit the village of Marblehead (some traditions say Gloucester), where, at the village inn, he found a damsel of "sweet sixteen," without shoes or stockings, and engaged in the very unromantic employment of scrubbing the staircase. Attracted, however, by her appearance,—for, notwithstanding her dishabille, she was evidently possessed of an unusually comely face and form,—the gallant youth went up and then he came down again, until at length he had quite fallen in love with the young bare-footed beauty. Meanwhile, the grace of her attendance upon the tea-table materially aided a conquest which, when our hero ascertained that to the charms of personal loveliness were united withal a lively wit and a strong though uncultivated mind, became complete. The "noble" adventurer improved his earliest opportunity to make known to the fair maid his feelings toward her. He did not feel at liberty at present, in view of the immense social disparity between them, to offer her his hand in marriage. But, if she was disposed, she should become his companion for life. On their return to Boston, she should at once be put in the way of acquiring all the accomplishments in the way of education which the best instructors of the time could bestow. This achieved, she should be installed the permanent and sole mistress of his mansion, as she was already the undisputed mistress of his heart. Bewildered by this sudden and most unexpected stroke of seeming good fortune, the rustic and penniless beauty yielded to the ardent and persuasive protestations of her "noble" lover, and consented forthwith to return with him to Boston.

The vigorous tone of moral sentiment existing from the earliest day here in New England, it needs hardly be said, was grossly outraged and scandalized by such a connection as this, all unblessed as it was by any pretence of matrimonial rites, and especially by one so conspicuously paraded before the eyes of all as was this of Sir Charles Henry Frankland. New England was as yet hardly prepared for the advent of the free-lover, and was particularly averse to tolerating such conduct in one of Frankland's high social position and commanding influence. Such behavior might possibly be allowed in the lax and profligate circles in the Old World. But New England society would admit of nothing of the kind, even though the offender was possessed of untold wealth, was a royal official and an English nobleman.

So it happened that, while the companion of Sir Henry was surrounded by all graces and luxuries and accomplishments, she was yet insulated amid a virtuous community. The knight himself was made to feel keenly the disgrace he was bringing upon himself and his house. At length, driven by the stern reprobation of an uncorrupted public opinion to seek a retreat beyond its censure for himself and his frail and comparatively unoffending associate, he purchased a wide domain in Hopkinton, and erected within its bounds one of the most splendid mansions of the country. The approach to it was through noble avenues, hewn out of the deep primeval forest, and overshadowed by the most ancient of trees. And there, in that quiet yet palatial retreat, Sir Henry was wont, it was said, to beguile his otherwise tedious days by maintaining, on a mimic scale, the customs of his baronial ancestors, and practising many of the usages of feudal times; while his magnificent stud of horses and pack of hounds, with feast and festival, combined to invite many a gay and unscrupulous guest from the haunts of the metropolis to the solitude of this then interior town.

But not always was Sir Henry Frankland to pursue this aimless, profligate career, or to withhold from his fair associate in sin the dower of wifehood, which was her due. An event is at hand which is effectually to sober him, and, by impressing permanently upon his mind a sense of the instability of human affairs, to direct his thoughts to higher things; and, having been appointed Consul-General to Portugal, it so happened that he was residing at Lisbon at the time of the great earthquake, November 1, 1755. Saved, as it were, by miracle from that most appalling and almost unprecedented ruin, this hitherto gay Lothario suddenly "came to himself," was so profoundly affected by his narrow escape from instant death that, immediately upon his deliverance, he made haste to do justice to his long-suffering companion by espousing her in due form, and so making her at last his lawful wife.

The two subsequently returned to America; and every year thereafter, as long as he lived, on the anniversary of his memorable deliverance, Sir Henry was accustomed to retire to a certain room in his house in Hopkinton, and there, having secluded himself from every visitor, keep solemn fast. In the apartment about him, it is said, were hung up, torn, soiled, and covered with lime and dust that had gathered on them at the time of the disaster, the identical garments worn by him amid the ruins and debris of that doomed city.

Having, many years after the events just recorded, revisited England on business, Sir Henry died suddenly at Bath, January 11, 1768. Lady Frankland continued to reside at Hopkinton until the breaking out of hostilities in connection with the American Revolution. Though a Marblehead girl herself, yet, as the wife of an English nobleman, she not unnaturally so incurred the suspicions of the sturdy patriots that her situation early became an extremely embarrassing, not to say a dangerous, one. Removal to Boston being obstructed, she sought the protection of the provincial Congress of Massachusetts, and received permission of one of the committees to proceed with her effects to the town. Notwithstanding this sanction of high authority, excitement yet among the inhabitants of the neighborhood ran so high—armed parties even assuming to arrest her journey, and to detain her person and effects—that it was not until the power of the provincial Congress actually interposed to liberate the same from captivity, that she succeeded in effecting her escape. After many delays, and after having been subjected to a multitude of needless annoyances, Lady Frankland finally sailed for England, bidding a lasting adieu to her native land and her forest home at Hopkinton. Tradition says that she was afterwards married to a Major Drew of the royal army, and that she finally died suddenly in the very act of dressing for a ball. While adjusting her hair before a mirror, she was seized with mortal sickness, and fell; and in a few moments, and with the gay attire of the ball-room, as it were, for her winding-sheet, expired.

Thus ended the romantic career of fair Agnes, the chamber-maid of Marblehead.

Some brief letters, it is said, of Lady Frankland are still preserved in the archives of the provincial Congress, remarkable for the beauty and grace of their chirography, though betraying in occasional errors of spelling the defects of her early education.

For many a generation the old Frankland mansion at Hopkinton was still standing. Reduced from its primitive aristocratic proportions to those of republican simplicity, it yet long retained, in its fine old hall, as also in its rich tapestry hangings, significant mementoes of its original and superlative magnificence.

SOUTH WALPOLE, Mass., October, 1878.
—Springfield Republican.

Poetry.

LUCRETIA MOTT.

PHILADELPHIA, OCT. 30, 1873.

Thrice noble woman, who hast lived so long
And served so well the people's sorest need!
Who, still, how'er thy heart might inly bleed,
Hast ever sung thy cheery household song;
Turning from strenuous battle against wrong,
With wholesome care thy growing flock to feed,—
In pastures green thy frolic feet to lead,—
To thee the laurel crown doth well belong,
For thou hast shown an unbelieving world,
Most womanly of women, that no less,
In the hot field where deadly shafts are hurled,
Women may keep their spirits' gentleness,
Than when at home, in soft seclusion curled,
They live unmindful of the world's distress.

J. W. C.

—Christian Register.

CASH RECEIPTS.

N.B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING DECEMBER 7.

F. A. Angell, $3.20; George Allen, $3.77; E. A. Stanton, 50 cents; Chas. E. Perkins, $1; Hon. A. D. White, $3.20; Dr. L. Crittenden, 25 cents; Miss H. E. Stevenson, $3.20; R. J. Young, $4.87; Mrs. E. C. Hegeler, $2; A. Y. Hagar, $3.20; C. A. Greenleaf, $1; Mrs. S. A. Underwood, 25 cents; Dr. L. F. C. Garvin, $10; A. B. Brown, 50 cents; S. P. Libbey, 80 cents; G. A. Ellis, $1.10; H. Lantz, $1; George Harpel, $5.20; William Jones, $3.20; Hon. George Roadley, $24; Homer McVean, $4.40; S. B. Dexter, 10 cents; D. B. Allen, $3; Howard M. Fisher, $5.20; Rev. M. J. Savage, $3.20; E. D. Stark, $4; Hopson & Sherman, $3.20; Adolph Werner, $10; W. P. Draper, $3.20; Cash, $8.35; B. A. Bal-lou, $4.40.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

The Index.

BOSTON, DEC. 12, 1878.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO OFFICE, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. O'BRYEN, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. OLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH CARY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIJAH WRIGHT, C. D. B. MILLS, W. D. LE SUEUR, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, JAMES E. OLIVER, Editorial Contributors.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The mastery, statesmanlike, and eloquent address of Judge Hurlbut on "The Liberty of Printing," proving unanswerably the constitutional right of Congress to prohibit the circulation of obscene literature through the mails, and demonstrating to the entire satisfaction of all who will listen to reason that the postal law of 1873 should be amended, but not repealed, has been printed for cheap distribution in the form of an eight-page tract, and can now be had at this office. No better service to the liberal cause at present can be rendered than by circulating everywhere this wise, weighty, and noble plea for private liberty and public morality combined. Price, single copies, 5 cents; five copies, 10 cents; fifteen copies, 25 cents; forty copies, 50 cents; one hundred copies, $1.00.

Erratum.—On page 5, second column, twenty-fourth line, the words "authority is desired" should be corrected to read "authority is derived." This is the only typographical error noticed by the author, and it is of sufficient importance to the main argument to be thus publicly pointed out.

MR. UNDERWOOD lectures at Carlinville, Ill., Dec. 11 to 14, and at Minier, Ill., Dec. 16 to 21.

THE Tribune publishes the following as "semi-religious intelligence": "A man went hunting in the Nevada Mountains, armed with a rifle, a hatchet, and a long bowie-knife. As he reached a clearing, he espied a huge grizzly bear, and at the same moment the huge grizzly bear espied him. Nothing daunted, the man discharged his rifle, but missed the bear. Somewhat excited, he threw the hatchet, and again missed the bear. At this point he made up his mind that with nothing but his knife left he needed some outside assistance, and he determined to ask for it. Now he was not a praying man, and was not familiar with the usual forms of petition, but the emergency was great, and with no thought of profanity he drew the bowie-knife, and ejaculated: 'O Lord! If you are on my side in this business, I expect you to see me well out of it. If you are on the side of the bear, you must draw it as mild as you can, and if possible dull his claws a little. But, if you have no preferences either way, just stand out one side, and you'll see the cussedest bear-fight that ever came off in the Nevada Mountains.'"

... Mrs. Alexander is one of the most religious murderers in the State of Connecticut. After she had appeared before the Grand Jury, Jailer Wells conducted her to a private room, and remained outside, while her counsel, Mr. Thompson, conferred with her. After the door was closed, she knelt down and said, 'Let us pray.' She first prayed for herself that God would instruct her in great affliction, and support her in all her trials, after which she begged to be forgiven all her sins. She asked that her counsel might be directed by the Holy Spirit so as to receive wisdom from above in the discharge of his duty in her case, as she was innocent of the crime. She then prayed for the Court, and last of all for the State Attorney, that he would be directed from on high in the discharge of his duty. She was so fervent and loud in her prayer that she was heard in the court-room."

F. R. A. CONVENTION.

A Convention of the Free Religious Association will be held in Providence, R.I., on Thursday afternoon and evening, the 19th inst. The recent more complete organization of the local Free Religious Society in Providence gives a special interest to this meeting. Prof. Adler, the new president of the Association, will preside, and will speak at length at the evening session. Other speakers prominent in the free religious movement will be present. Further particulars as to hall and speakers will be given in the Providence papers.

WM. J. POTTER,
Sec'y F. R. A.

MR. SAVAGE'S LAST BOOK.

Prevented inevitably from making an earlier notice of Bluffton, the last book published by Rev. Minot J. Savage, we are unwilling to leave it altogether unnoticed in these columns, although we are usually debarred by pressing duties from doing much in the direction of literary criticism. Mr. Savage was originally an Orthodox clergyman, and now occupies the Unitarian pulpit in this city once filled by Rev. George H. Hepworth. By his manliness and courage in uttering the convictions to which study and thought have brought him, and by his thoroughly modern treatment of topics which are usually neglected by the clergy, he wields perhaps a wider influence than any other Boston minister in favor of religious radicalism. He still belongs to a Christian denomination (the Unitarian), and still stands in a Christian pulpit. But his Christianity is as radical as Christianity, from the nature of the case, can ever be; and he must good-naturedly pardon us for thinking that his position, apart from names, is substantially that of the Free Religion which ignores Christianity altogether. Certainly he treats his subjects in the spirit of one who accepts unreservedly the scientific method in religion, and pleads for what he believes to be truth on purely natural and humanitarian principles. No tincture of supernaturalism, or belief in miracle, mars the modern gospel he preaches of simple "truth, righteousness, and love." He stands for the normal development of the individual man in the entirety of his being, and for the regeneration of society by the more faithful observance of the fundamental laws of human nature. Such a preacher as this is a permanent influence for good in any community.

In reading Bluffton, therefore, the central purpose of which is to describe the process of mental evolution by which a young Orthodox minister becomes radical, it is easy to perceive that the author's individual experience must have constituted the general fund upon which he has drawn in describing the psychological evolution of his hero. So far as it is a novel, the book has the simplest possible plot; and there is no reason to suppose that its mere incidents had any autobiographical origin. In fact, as a novel alone, it is not very successful; it lacks much that is essential to a good book of fiction. But the story is a mere string on which to arrange the changing thoughts of a reflective, honest mind, thrown by destiny into the position of a preacher of the outworn gospel of the past. It depicts the painful struggles of such a mind, both with itself and with untoward external circumstances, in attaining clear intellectual vision and a position before man that shall not fatally belie it. Sacrifices must be made, no matter how painful; martyrdom must be endured, none the less excruciating because it is of so obscure, secret, and invisible a kind as to make no appeal to the coarse sympathies of ordinary men. No soul ever yet loved truth above the success which the world at large prizes, without paying its full value for that "pearl of great price" in one form or another; and he who sneers at the possibility of "martyrdom" in modern times because he sees nobody roasting at the stake, or shrieking on the rack, knows little of the human soul and nothing of its deeper life. Concession, compromise, submission to ignoble expediences, are so common that only the few who never have bent the knee know what it costs to stand upright in the presence of a vast, imperious, unforgiving public superstition. It is the hidden pathos of a life lived in fealty to a higher law than society in general either sympathizes with or comprehends, that lends its chief interest to Mr. Savage's simple tale. Not many will enter into it very deeply; those who do must read between the lines. But wherever the book falls into the hands of any one whose experience fits him to understand it, it will be full of suggestion, and excite an interest by no means of a cheap order; for nothing is more genuinely interesting than to watch the struggles by which the truth-lover painfully climbs towards the temple of his austere mistress.

Perhaps the very simplicity and guilelessness of Mr. Savage's own nature, the robust sincerity which makes him disdain the ordinary politic disguises by which a preacher's radicalism is too often veiled from public view, unfits him for being a successful novelist as such. All art demands a certain artfulness—at least the ars celare artem. Especially in fiction, a plot, with all the secrecy and surprise inseparable from skilful plotting, is indispensably necessary. But Bluffton has no plot that is not transparent at the start. Its interest is not at all artistic, but psychological; and its psychological interest is of a kind that appeals only to those who can understand the deep passion for abstract truth. Would that this class were a larger one! Our poor old world is not yet old enough to hold many such, we fear. A book which hinges on the passion for truth—the only one which deserves to be called "the grand passion"—must be "caviare to the multitude," and content itself with the approbation of the few.

Some passages which have arrested our own attention may show the inner quality of this honest book:—

"Toward the latter part of his seminary-life, he began to use his own brain and think for himself. Not, by any means, that he questioned the system of orthodoxy,—very far from it; but he began to feel that, while such and such things might be true, he could not preach as a mere echo of others' thoughts. It must be true to him before he could dare to speak it. Thus, without knowing it, he admitted a principle fatal to his soundness, and that was to lead him a long and weary and painful way." [p. 26.]

"It is a strange fact that those men—even educated men—are few who can weigh evidence carefully, and so tell when a certain proposition is proved to be true, and when it is not. Most men's minds are like ill-constructed scales: they turn without much regard to the weights." [p. 67.]

The truth of this last passage has been curiously illustrated of late by the way in which some educated minds have weighed the arguments of Judge Hurlbut and Mr. Wakeman, and found the latter the stronger of the two!

"He could find, as others have done, a temporary peace by taking refuge in the practical, though he afterwards learned that no deep thinker can permanently rest, so long as the theoretical and practical are out of harmony." [p. 84.]

"The great battles of the world are fought alone. Before men appear in the great crises of the world, to head forlorn hopes, guide nations, or lead others to victory, they have first met, fought, and conquered themselves on the unseen battle-fields of the soul. There is no shouting, no noise of cannon, no waving of flags above the smoke; but only a cry of prayer, or a sigh of agony breathed out, that, like the puff of steam from a volcano, tells of the infernal strife below. It is the Armageddon battle-field, where the hosts of good and evil clutch in deadly encounter. He who has won here is safe. No other is fit to trust as leader when grand human destinies are hanging in the balance." [p. 123.]

"Strategy and deception are counted fair in war; but it seems questionable to me to fight the battles of truth and God in underhanded and deceptive ways."

"I do not quite admit your point," said Dr. Thomes; "has a man no rights in the Church in which he was born?"

"Yes," answered Mr. Forrest,—"the right either to remain loyal to it or to leave it."

"But may he not remain in it and reform it?"

"I think not," said he, "if I understand what you mean by reform,—that is, change it to something else. If a man is in a Shakespeare Club, and concludes that he would prefer a Philosophical Society, the simple and honest way would be to leave the first, and organize the second, not undertake to break up the Club while still claiming to be loyal to it." [p. 211.]

"It seems to me that Pius IX. was clear-headed and logical, when in his last encyclical he anathematized those who said the Church ought to progress, and conform to modern civilization. And the same is true of orthodoxy in any form. It claims to be based on a clear, explicit, and finished scheme of divine revelation; but to say that it can change, either to retrograde or advance, is simply confusion of thought, or misuse of language. If, then, orthodoxy ever was orthodoxy,—the true doctrine,—then it must remain so forever. There can't be any progress in the facts of the multiplication table. But if you admit that orthodoxy has changed, or can change in any degree, then it isn't orthodoxy any longer. It admits no past mistake; if there was a past mistake, then there is no certainty but there may be one now. You're all afloat. Instead of orthodoxy, it is rationalism, or the application of reason to all the problems involved." [p. 214.]

"Orthodoxy is a linked chain; it is a complete logical arch. But Liberal Orthodoxy knocks the key stone out, and thinks the rest will stand. It snaps one link, and thinks the chain will still hold the clear-headed thinkers of the world. It knocks the foundations out from under its house, and then proceeds calmly up stairs and sits down as if nothing had happened. Such feats are only possible in castles in the air. But men will knock their brains out against logical impossibilities, and still go on unconsciously of any accident." [p. 215.]

Such a book as Bluffton, clothing the pointed truths of radicalism in the light garb of a story, will find entrance where the iron-armored arguments of logic find no admission. It is a book which we should like to see circulated for this reason; and we can cordially recommend it as a useful holiday gift.

"REPEAL" AND "REFORM."

It would be unfair to charge all those who take the position of "repeal" with being in favor of obscenity. It has the sympathy, no doubt, of that small class of degraded creatures engaged in the business of selling vile books and pictures, and to it is attracted, I believe, a larger class that delights in a kind of literature which, although not really obscene, appeals only to coarse or distorted minds. But from these facts it no more follows that the great mass of the adherents of "repeal" are in favor of obscenity than the fact that drunkards generally are in favor of license versus prohibition proves that the party in favor of licensing and not prohibiting the sale of alcoholic drinks is in favor of drunkenness. In discussing this subject, let us do full justice to the advocates and adherents of "repeal" by according to them the same sincerity and honesty of purpose that we claim for ourselves. The results of their logic, the consequences of their action, the influence of their position, can be shown, without questioning their motive or reflecting on their character. Although there is a class brought into prominence for the moment by the discussion of this subject, of which they are taking advantage to propagate certain social theories in connection with the demand for "repeal" and in the name of Free Thought, yet the "repeal" party should not be held responsible for their views, or their mode of presenting them.

The real question is whether Congress has rightful authority to make a law excluding from the mails obscene literature. The great majority of liberals throughout the country will, I am satisfied, sustain the view that has been very ably maintained in the editorial columns of THE INDEX, and that was defended in a masterly manner by Judge Hurlbut in his Syracuse address on "The Liberty of Printing." But able and worthy men, like Eliza Wright, T. B. Wakeman, and James Parton, take the opposite view, and present ingenious arguments in favor of their position; and it must be confessed that quite a large number of liberals agree with them, and are ready to sustain them in an effort—however futile it may seem—to secure the total repeal of the law, by Congress, against the circulation of obscene literature through the mails.

That this difference was introduced into the Congress of the National Liberal League last month is to me a matter of deep regret. It should not have been done. It is a question on which the League should not have been called to pledge itself to either side. The Liberal League was not organized to decide whether obscene literature should be suppressed by the authority of Congress or by State legislation. But the subject of State Secularization was wholly, or almost wholly, lost sight of, and nearly the entire time was consumed in discussing "the obscenity question," and trying to compromise on a basis that would prevent a division of the organization.

As for myself, I am, with Judge Hurlbut and Mr. Abbot, in favor of a law by Congress against the transmission of nasty literature through the mails; but, knowing that there is a difference of opinion on this subject among liberals who are equally interested in the real objects of the Liberal League, I do not wish to see the organization committed to this view. Neither do I wish to see it committed to the opposite view. The resolutions on this subject adopted at Syracuse had the concurrence of the entire body, I think, and embrace all that comes within the scope of the League.

There are now two National Liberal Leagues. Let both agree to drop this "obscenity question," and, taught by past experience, and imbued with an earnest desire for the success of State Secularization, reunite at their next annual meeting, and resolve henceforth to confine their efforts to the real objects for which the organization was formed. The question as to the authority of Congress to legislate against the circulation of obscenity can be discussed outside of the League; and, if necessary, the friends of "repeal" and the friends of "reform" can form separate associations for the promulgation of their respective views on this subject.

Before I went to Syracuse, I was opposed to the introduction of this subject into the Congress, protested against it when it came up, and now, looking back and reviewing what was done, and observing the results, I cannot but feel satisfied that a very great and grave mistake was made in forcing this subject upon the Congress, especially at the time and under the circumstances. I say this with profound respect for Mr. Abbot, whose sincerity, earnestness, and disinterested devotion to truth none admire more than myself, and without questioning the good intentions of those who, on the other side, went to Syracuse resolved to commit the League to "repeal." B. F. U.

MR. UNDERWOOD'S ARTICLE.

So thoroughly candid and truth-loving a writer as Mr. Underwood, who deservedly stands in the front rank of representative liberals in the United States, will indulge us in a few additional remarks on the same subject, made in the spirit of sincerest esteem and good-will. At different periods there have been parties in this country who have taken the position of demanding repudiation, with reference to the public debt of the United States or of some of the separate States. Would it, or would it not, be unfair to charge them with being "in favor of dishonesty"?

It is plain that the phrase, "to be in favor of," has two meanings, one referring to intentions and the other to results. The majority of the repudiationists have undoubtedly been guiltless of dishonest intentions; they have believed that the public debt was wrongfully incurred, perhaps, or in some other way persuaded themselves that repudiation of it was honest and right. Others cared nothing about the right or wrong of the matter, and were only anxious to avoid the disagreeable necessity of paying what they owed. No sweeping condemnation of the intentions or motives of the repudiationists, therefore, would be fair or just. But it would be none the less fair and just to say that the entire repudiation party practically did their best to cheat the public creditors. So far as motives or intentions are concerned, the repudiationists should be judged solely as individuals, acquitting or condemning them according to their individual character; so far as practical results are concerned, it would be a mockery of all justice to deny that the repudiation party, as a whole, were the party of flagrant fraud. In the sense of intention, part of them were "in favor of dishonesty," and part were not; in the sense of practical result, they were all "in favor of dishonesty."

Precisely the same reasoning holds with regard to the advocates of "repeal." Taking them as a whole, and considering only their intentions, some are "in favor of" obscene literature, and others are not. But considering merely the inevitable practical result of repealing the most effective law against it, they are all "in favor of" it. We have never charged the repealers as a class with intending to favor it; but we have said repeatedly, and we now reaffirm, that they do practically favor it by striving to break down the strongest legislative barrier against it. However others may wilfully pervert our statements, Mr. Underwood is altogether too clear-headed and fair not to do them justice. He himself admits that not all who demand "repeal" do so from elevated motives. Very well; we have never said more than that, so far as motives and intentions are concerned. But, if it cost us every friend we had in the world, we should just as emphatically declare that the practical effect of "repeal" must be to foster and protect the spread of vile literature, and that all who demand "repeal" are practically helping to spread it. That is the truth, and we stand by it to the last.

The constitutionality of the law of 1873 is not the real question before the nation to-day. This law is constitutional by the only possible definition of constitutionality; that is, it has been duly enacted by the Congress of the United States, and declared constitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States, the authoritative interpreter of the Constitution. If that is not enough to make a law constitutional, what is? But if more is required, the people of this country will make the law of 1873 constitutional by amending their Constitution, rather than see themselves humiliated by being made the involuntary accomplices of the worst and vilest criminals in the land. This question is not a constitutional question; it is a moral question, and nothing else. It is woefully to miscalculate the moral forces involved in this issue to imagine that the people will ever again see the mails legally put at the mercy of the scoundrels who formerly abused them. There is a "higher law" than the Constitution itself, to which the Constitution, if defective, will have to conform at last. That "higher law" is the moral self-preservation of society; and it demands statesmen, not attorneys, for its expositors. But there is no necessity for appealing to the "higher law" in this case, since the Supreme Court has already heard and obeyed its mandates. The repealers have a bigger job on hand than they are aware of; to repeal the law of 1873, they must first repeal the moral constitution of human nature. But it will not be in our day.

This issue was brought into the Syracuse Congress by no act of ours. It was brought into the Centennial Congress of Liberals at Philadelphia by no act of ours; but, having been there introduced and thrown out, it was (Mr. Underwood will forgive us for reminding him of the circumstance) brought in again by Mr. Underwood himself, and settled wisely and well by the adoption of his own resolutions on this subject. The debate at the time, which turned wholly on this very law of Congress, shows that the National Liberal League then took unequivocally the ground of "reform" as opposed to that of "repeal"; and Mr. Underwood said to us at Syracuse that he had this very law in his mind, when he wrote his resolutions.

Now many months ago the repealers resolved to change this attitude of the League, if they could, and pledge it to "repeal." Mr. John W. Truesdell, of Syracuse, in a letter to the Truth Seeker of November 30, says: "At the Watkins Convention [held in August last] it was painfully evident to any keen observer that an effort was already on foot to change the administration or capture, as it is termed, the National Liberal League at the next convention. . . . The friends of the repeal movement, if I am correctly informed, organized a large number of new clubs with the avowed intention of committing the National Liberal League to the repeal movement and to get rid of Abbot." We had abundance of evidence to the same effect prior to the Watkins Convention; and, when we publicly exposed the existence of this combination in September, we did but warn the liberals of a trap which would otherwise have been sprung upon them unawares. The issue was not raised or introduced into the Syracuse Congress by us; it would have come up there all the same, if we had withheld our warning. Let the responsibility rest where it belongs; it is not ours. The effect of our warning should have been to rouse the liberals to a timely defence of the honor of their cause; the effect of it was to ensure that grand moral protest of the minority which is all that saves their cause from utter disgrace. Everything that we did we would do over again, unchanged; the question was forced into the Syracuse Congress by the repealers, and we at least gave the liberals of the country an opportunity to meet it like men. We wash our hands from all responsibility for the introduction of that issue; but we take all responsibility for giving fair warning that it was to be introduced. Why was not this warning better heeded? That is a question we cannot answer.

It is not our opinion that the issue was foreign to the legitimate objects of the Liberal League; though it is our opinion that this issue should have been more honorably settled. It is an issue both of freedom of the press and of the circulation of vile literature. When men are punished for promulgating their mere opinions as a crime, and when this oppression is a direct interference of the Church with the State, who shall say that it is an issue foreign to the objects of the Liberal League? Again our valued friend will pardon us for reminding him that, at Philadelphia, he thought this very issue "relevant" to the League's avowed object of separating Church and State, as shown by the printed Report of the Centennial Congress of Liberals. It was exactly as "relevant," and just as little foreign, at Syracuse. There was but one thing to do: to meet the issue without evasion or any attempt at compromise, and stand or fall with our principles. That was what we tried to do; and the liberal cause would to-day stand far better before the world, if the friends of "reform" had forborne to seek a common ground where common ground there was none.

Lastly, as to "reunion," we have but one word to speak. As to the course others may pursue, we have nothing to say; but the only "reunion" which we shall sanction will be unequivocally, avowedly, and emphatically on the platform of "reform." It is not necessary that we should have companions; we can stand alone; and we stand by no man's side on the platform of "repeal." If next year the members of the old League shall have learned wisdom enough to be ashamed of their work at Syracuse, and to stand henceforth for a liberty which is something better than a flat defiance of public morality, we shall rejoice to join them once more. But if not, the new League may go over to them in a body if they please, but we stay behind. The world needs to learn that principles are worth more than organizations, useful as these may be in their service. We have steered our little shallop too long by the clear starlight of ideas to take much heed of dancing will-o'-the-wisps on shore; and we care nothing for Leagues of any sort that take not the same celestial guides.

Communications.

A FEW QUESTIONS

FOR THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF AMERICA.

1. May not two parties desire the same thing for different reasons, and different things for the same reason?

For example, may not the vender of books that are unlawful, by a State law which has sunk to be a dead letter, wish for the repeal of the Comstock law to facilitate his trade, while I wish for it for the very purpose of having the State law put in force, so that he can produce nothing unfit to send through the mail?

2. Do I put myself at the head of murderers, when I oppose the enactment by Congress of a law giving the United States courts jurisdiction of murder in the States? Would I abet murder, if such a law had been unconstitutionally placed on the statute book, and I should demand its repeal?

3. May not the old Liberal League and the new League of America, one ask for "repeal" and the other for "reform" of the Comstock law, because both seek the same thing,—the most effective suppression of corrupt literature?

4. Is it quite the right thing to assume that men and women unconvicted of crime are abettors of crime because they are not willing to have crime punished by unconstitutional laws?

5. After all, is not the demand for that sort of literature, the supply of which to children and youth all decent people wish to suppress, due chiefly to the parents themselves, who meet the natural curiosity of their children either with evasions, frowns, or absolute lies?

6. Grant that there are bad people in the old League,—and I indignantly deny that one particle of proof of that has yet been presented,—how is the new League to keep them out of its pale, a thing which no church has ever yet succeeded in doing?

7. Why shall we not all come back to the faith that free speech will cure its own evils, so far as they can be cured?

8. If the mail-carrier is responsible for the immorality of what he carries, how does he escape that responsibility by either shutting his eyes or allowing the packages to be sealed? If the logic of the Comstock law is at all superior to that of a donkey, why should we not have everything which goes through the mails open to the eyes of a censor morum? Why not make clean and thorough work, if we undertake it at all? Why allow the detestable criminal to defeat us by a little muckraking and a higher-priced stamp? Are the friends of virtue determined to make practical fools of themselves?

A FRIEND OF BOTH LEAGUES.

[1. Yes, unquestionably.

2. No, because the States possess jurisdiction over the crime of murder. But the case is not in the least analogous to the crime of circulating obscene literature through the mails, inasmuch as the States possess no jurisdiction over the mails, and because Congress alone can constitutionally possess or exercise it.

3. Yes, so far as intention goes. But the question has nothing to do with intentions, but concerns solely the necessary effects of legislation in facilitating or thwarting the ends aimed at.

4. It would not be the "right thing" to assume that they intend to "abet crime." But it would be the "right thing" to say that they do "abet" it, if the measures they adopt practically facilitate it. If a man strives to put out a fire by a deluge of kerosene, mistaking it for water, it would be the "right thing" to say that he "practically abets" the conflagration. Why is this all-important word "practically," which we have always used, systematically overlooked? Do repealers wish to make us attack their motives in spite of ourself? Is it quite the "right thing" to pay no heed to this distinction, when disregard of it has the effect of turning a serious discussion of principles and measures into a frivolous and acrimonious war of personalities? We emphatically disclaim all responsibility for these personalities, but insist on our right and duty, as an editor, to discuss those principles and measures without being held to account for the personalities we have persistently avoided.

5. A difference of opinion on this point is quite possible. But it does not affect the unquestionable right of the United States to punish abuse of the mails for criminal purposes.

6. We do not know of any one who has publicly alleged, or tried to "prove," that there are "bad people in the old League." Certainly the new League will institute no inquisition to keep them out of itself. The whole question is one of principles and measures, and their necessary effects on society.

7. We have always believed that free speech will cure all evils of opinion, when truth and error are left free to combat each other. But this belief does not require us to ask the repeal of laws for the punishment of libel or circulation of vile literature.

8. No, we do not think the friends of virtue are determined to make practical fools of themselves; nor do we resent the implication that they do. We simply say that to punish a criminal act after it has been proved to have been committed releases the government from all moral responsibility in the premises; and that a censor morum is superfluous for this purpose.

For the writer of the above letter, whose incognito we are bound to respect, we entertain the deepest personal veneration; and we honor his intellect so highly that we do not fear he will be offended by our frank replies to his questions.—ED.]

THE "SEPARATION."

DEAR MR. ANNOT:—

To those who have followed the controversy on the Comstock laws in our liberal papers, the fact became more and more apparent that a division between two different liberal elements was unavoidable.

The separation came; but, unfortunately for the cause of high-toned, pure liberalism, the separation took place on grounds which divided friends as well as opponents. We were asked to decide upon a question which involves more than partisanship, which strikes at the root of American liberty, and upon which the most enlightened and intelligent people cannot agree without studying the matter up carefully and thoroughly. Our feeling for decency and purity would incline us to oppose "repeal" of the Comstock law. Our reason tells us that it is unjust, inefficient, arbitrary, unrepresentative, to invoke the United States Government to pass a law for the suppression of one social vice, while all others are free, or come under the jurisdiction of the respective States where the vice or crime has been perpetrated.

Justice seems to me of much greater importance than decency; justice is the very foundation of a republican government, and we should avoid the framing of laws, the execution of which would strike a heavy blow upon a fundamental republican virtue.

The reformers ask the suppression of a certain kind of literature written with the intention "to corrupt the morals of the young,"—an almost impossible thing to decide, for no one will own that he has written or published anything with such an intention. Our large cities are swamped with foul reading-matter which circulates freely, and cannot be reached by the desired law. Dime novels, Police Gazettes, and many of our dailies, contain dangerous items for the young; they are written for the sole purpose of exciting the imagination of the reader. Have we a right to punish one, and let ten go out freely?

This law which the reformers are so eager to put in force is wholly ineffective; and I do believe that we liberals could introduce more rational and more effective measures to show the Orthodox people that we stand for decency and a higher morality.

If a division between liberals is desired, let it be on such grounds as we can all understand and appreciate. There is no doubt that an internal conflict has ever existed between two classes of liberals since the time of Thomas Paine and, later on, Theodore Parker. We ever had the cultured and the less cultured, the conservative and the radical, liberal. The first would like to reform according to the law of development, slowly but surely; the latter is more impulsive, and would rather throw down every barrier at once, to obtain his long wished for freedom. There is no doubt that both mean well, and that society justifies their position. The National Liberal League, with its broad platform, was the first organization which aimed at a union between heterogeneous elements. The secularization of our government—a grand universal aim—brought all liberals under one leadership.

The newly-accomplished Union was frustrated by the introduction of a new issue which belongs by right in the domain of political and social science.

The old animosities awoke from their light slumber, and the cultured have again separated from the less cultured. As the contention took place not on account of culture or non-culture, decency or indecency, but on account of "reform" or "repeal" of an unjust law, the separation is not quite equal; and there are a good many friends of culture and a high-toned morality on the side of those who are accustomed to emphasize freedom much more than morality. They were compelled to this step, not on account of choice, but on account of right and justice. If the reformers desired a separation because they found it impossible to work together with the repealers, considering their method of propagandism dangerous, they ought to have said so before the Syracuse Convention. To infer, now, that "repeal" is synonymous with free-lovism, or that it must lead to it, is a great injustice to all those who differ from the reformers. Prejudice and mistrust towards certain personalities dare not influence our judgment when a principle is at stake. Much of the bitterness against the "repealers" has been caused by their actions; by circulating a kind of literature which is considered unchaste, misleading, and corrupting. Says the Reformer, though indignant at the publication of Cupid's Yokes and other such ill-timed publications: "We do not favor a law which persecutes those who utter their opinions, though these opinions may be dangerous to morality. No; we desire a law which shall punish those who intend to corrupt the morals of the young." Their position seems to me wholly inconsistent, and their repeated attacks upon free-lovism show that they would like to restrict the expression of its adherents.

While I fully agree with the reformers that liberals have to emphasize a higher and purer morality, and that great wrong and much harm is done by publishing books which indicate a false moral standard; while I fully believe that many liberals hurt the cause of purity and moral enlightenment by their indelicate and superficial manner of treatment,—I also believe that we have other means to fight against these evils than through the introduction of a law which can and will never do justice to all. Let the cultured liberals throughout the land be as vigorous and as public-spirited as the less cultured are, and the people will not be in doubt as to our motives and our principles. As long as the question of repeal or reform is kept in the foreground, a good portion of the best element is kept out of the reform party.

Truly yours,

CLARA NEYMANN.

NEW YORK, Nov. 27, 1878.

[Without at all discussing what appears to us otherwise erroneous in the above views, we most earnestly deprecate the suggestion that there is or has been any necessity of a separation between the "cultured" and "non-cultured" liberals. It would be impossible to draw any such line as that, and we repudiate the attempt as worse than impossible. The only separation has been on the practical question of supporting or opposing a mischievous movement for "repeal." As citizens of a common country, we have sought to unite all who seek State Secularization as the bulwark both of liberty and morality; we have never sought to exclude anybody for his private opinions, private character, or lack of "culture." At the polls these things are forgotten: the division there turns only on the question of measures and candidates. We always have been, and are, cordially with all those who support good measures and good candidates; we oppose those who support the contrary; we ask no question about "culture," and regard the recent attempts to excite hatred between so-called "cultured" and "non-cultured" liberals as a vile piece of demagoguism. Our platform is as broad as that of citizenship; and so is that of the Liberal League.—ED.]

HARDPAN.

EDITOR INDEX:—

1. I have carefully read your criticism of my article, and I see that the difficulty is not with logic, but with the premises. Let us see if we can get down to hardpan, and find a real starting-point. All agree that the crime in question consists solely in sending through the mails articles, books, or prints intended to corrupt the morals of youth. Now the doing of this is vicious, offensive, disgusting, immoral; but it is an open question whether it is such an offence as ought to be made a crime by a secular State, to be punished by law.

Even if the exaggerated stories and the lies out of whole cloth told by Comstock were true, no liberal will claim that there is a thousandth part of the vice, suffering, misery, and crime, caused by the circulation of obscene literature through the mails, that result directly and indirectly from the excessive use of tobacco and rum. Notwithstanding the enormous extent of the evils caused by rum and tobacco, their manufacture and sale on a large scale are not generally regarded as crimes among Christian and civilized nations, although there have been many abortive attempts to make selling small quantities of intoxicating liquors a criminal offence, and to suppress such sales by prohibitory laws.

The truth is, that there are many offences against social purity which are immoral, but which lie on that border-land between vice and crime where they cannot be reached by law without infringing on that personal liberty so dear to every freeman. Every prohibitory law has this fatal defect, which inheres in this postal law as well; namely, that it undertakes to punish only one of two parties, both equally necessary to the commission of the offence, and both of whom may be equally guilty. The sense of justice in every man's mind tells him that it is not fair to punish the seller of liquor and not the buyer, the sender of bad books and not the receiver. In the case of minors, it is their parents or guardians who deserve punishment the most.

This one-sidedness is a principal reason why all such laws fail to do good; for a law is of no use which is not based on justice.

If sending obscene books through the mails to minors who order them were a crime in the same sense in which slavery, the "sum of all villainies," is so, there could be no difference of opinion about it among liberals or thinking people; but the two only need to be contrasted, to show that to consider them equivalent in a moral point of view is a monstrous assumption.

Making merchandise of a human being is, in and of itself, a crime involving all other crimes. It does not need to be made so by law or by the Church, but was in fact sustained by the law and defended by the Church.

Although the motive of the publisher and sender of obscene literature may be the worst possible, the act does not necessarily do any harm in itself. It does not do any harm to those who don't read it, and it would not harm you or me, if we were unfortunately forced to read it, except to disgust us.

The great majority of decently brought up children would be too disgusted by them to read obscene books, if any came in their way. And there need be no call for such books, if parents, guardians, and teachers would even half do their duty.

The practical common-sense of mankind will see a very great distinction between this Church-begotten crime, and those crimes which we try, alas! mainly in vain, to prevent and punish by law. Let liberals leave law-making to those who are in that dispensation and believe in it, while we insist that the only real means for the suppression of vice is the expression of virtue.

F. S. C.

[1. Whether the circulation of obscene literature is justly or unjustly made a crime by the common law, as it is already, is not a question that can be consistently raised by the repealers in the National Liberal League; for they concede the criminality of the act and the justice of punishing it by State law. The radical wing of the repealers, represented by Messrs. Heywood, Tucker, and others, refuse this concession, and consistently demand the repeal of all laws, State or National, against obscenity. Apparently "F. S. C." belongs to this radical and logical wing; and, if he is equally logical with them, he will go on to demand the repeal of all laws for the punishment of all crimes whatever. Does he not intend to take this position, when he advises liberals to "leave law-making" to others? If so, the question turns simply on the proposal to do away with all government—to abolish the State altogether. Whether this is reasonable or not, we leave it to our readers to decide.

2. Not a word is said by "F. S. C." with regard to the main point of our comments; namely, that the real question now under discussion is—"Shall the whole people, in their collective capacity as mail carriers, become the paid agents of confessed criminals, in corrupting the morals of youth?" We wait still for a direct and frank answer to that question.—Ed.]

A PROTEST.

NEWPORT, R.I., Nov. 28, 1878.

EDITOR INDEX:

Dear Sir,—Will you permit a warm friend of yours, and one of the earliest of the annual members of the Liberal League, to enter a protest against the course pursued both by yourself and the friends of "repeal," in dividing an organization originally designed to secure secularization of the State, upon an issue so foreign to its objects as this obscenity discussion?

Yours truly, SAMUEL R. HONEY.

[We join in this protest, so far it lies against the forcing of division on this issue. But the division was forced by the repealers, not by the reformers. The League pledged itself to "reform" at Philadelphia; and the repealers joined the League while so pledged. It was they who forced the new departure for purposes of their own; and the minority could not submit to be forced to join it without forfeiture of their self-respect, unfaithfulness to the original principles of the League, and ruinous betrayal of the liberal cause. We do not doubt that Mr. Honey means to be just. If so, let him show that the minority could have honorably submitted, or else confine his censure to the faction which forced the division.

But the issue was not "foreign" to the objects of the League. In this point we agree with the repealers themselves. By punishing the expression of mere opinion as a crime, the Nation violated freedom of the press in consequence of adopting the Christian premise that opinions as such may be criminal or wicked. That oppression was a grievance to all who seek State Secularization; and a Liberal League which should dodge that issue ought to perish under general contempt.—Ed.]

WHOSE TURN NEXT?

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

The Chicago Times of the 20th of this month, in an editorial article, says: "The Post-office Department has prohibited the circulation in the United States mails of a periodical issued in Chicago by a society calling itself The United States Government Church, on the grounds of the blasphemous character of much of the matter which the periodical contains. At least, so says the department."

The Times further says: "This United States Government Church has some odd theories; believing, for instance, in four spiritual powers, in place of three: God the Father, Lord the Mother, Christ the Son, and Soul the Daughter. But this is no ground for suppression. There are people to whom the scheme of a Godhead composed of a Trinity is just as odd and mysterious as a quadripartite construction."

You may not have seen this article in the Times; but it is there, for the paper lies before me. I have given you only excerpts from it.

I have many times said, and more than once published in the papers, that it is "blasphemy," as the Church understands or defines it, which is to be suppressed, much more than obscenity. And Joseph Cook would burn the editor of THE INDEX at the stake with just as good relish as a better man than he, and far less dangerous, instigated and accomplished the imprisonment of Ezra H. Heywood in Dedham Jail, under pretence of obscenity. That was but dieting the public palate and stomach for more dreadful doses yet! PARKER PILLSBURY.

CONCORD, N. H., Nov. 28, 1878.

RESIGNATION.

BOSTON HIGHLANDS, Nov. 30, 1878.

MR. F. E. ABBOT, President of the National League of America:

Dear Sir,—Will you please take my name out of the list of Vice-Presidents of your League? I am radically opposed not only against the Comstock law, but also against every amendment to it, as infringements of the liberty of the press. In my opinion, there are better and more efficient means to suppress obscene prints than a censorship which opens the door to every other abuse of power.

Yours respectfully, KARL HEINZEN.

THE MALDEN LEAGUE.

MAPLEWOOD, MASS., Nov. 29, 1878.

TO THE SECRETARY OF THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE OF AMERICA:

Dear Sir,—I am instructed to report to you the following action of the Malden Liberal League at its last meeting, Tuesday evening, Nov. 26, 1878.

It was Voted, To withdraw from all connection with the National Liberal League; and

Resolved, That, believing the National Liberal League at its recent Congress held at Syracuse acted unwisely in allowing itself to be disturbed to the extent of causing a separation in its ranks, by an issue foreign to the purpose of its organization, and thereby greatly retarding the cause of Liberalism, we do cherish the hope that its divided ranks may soon be reunited, and declare our readiness to join in the work of prosecuting the specified objects of the League as set forth at its Centennial Congress at Philadelphia.

FRANCIS HINCKLEY, Sec'y.

FRIENDLY LETTERS.

SEAFORTH, Ontario, Nov. 24, 1878.

DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

I feel that the liberal cause has suffered a reverse through the split in the Liberal League. Our Orthodox friends (or enemies) will eagerly seize on this unfortunate occurrence to write and read homilies to their credulous flock, on the "tendencies of infidelity"; and they will be ready enough to point a moral and hang a tale on the unfortunate fact that about three-fifths of the freethinkers at the Syracuse Congress committed themselves to demand a total repeal of all national laws against obscenity. You, dear Mr. Abbot, and those who nobly stood for the cause of decency, have taken the only possible course consistent with honor, by coming out from among those who advocate such a step. I entirely approve of the course you have taken. I am in sorrow for two things: (1) that there is a breach in the ranks of the Liberal League, when the occasion demands of all union and agreement; (2) I feel sorry that we have such an undesirable element attaching itself to us as those who deal in obscenity, and circulate vile literature to spread the pestilence of moral corruption. Shame on men, and especially women, who deal in such abominations! I feel shame that my Orthodox friends can in triumph boast that the Church has steadily maintained that free thinking leads to free living, and that the late Congress vindicates the correctness of their claims.

The course you have taken shows there are still men in the liberal cause, with high aims and noble purposes, who wish to advance the cause of humanity and progress without throwing open the flood-gates of filth and impurities by removing the restraints the law wisely puts on men of base motives. Continue your noble resistance to the efforts of the repealers of the laws, national or State, against indecency. Purify as far as possible the liberal army from the stain of such moral blemishes. The cause of purity is the cause of humanity. The advocates of license are really disorganizers of society.

Allow me again to thank you for the firm attitude you have maintained on this question all along, and in conclusion hope you may be spared many years to edit THE INDEX for the liberal cause.

Yours very respectfully, W. CAMPBELL.

TIPPECANOE CITY, Ohio, Nov. 24, 1878.

MR. ABBOT:—

Find enclosed ten dollars, three of which are pay for the coming year's INDEX. The balance use in your own way to advance the cause you are engaged in, especially that part which teaches sound morality. The action of the last Liberal League Convention I think quite objectionable, because of its action in displacing the old officers for certain opinions which they as individuals held, thus committing the League as a whole to opinions held only by a part of the members of the League. I don't deny but Heywood and his party had as good a right to carry out their views on repeal or modification as Abbot and his party to carry out theirs, in the Convention. The discussion simply had no business there; and the majority, after agreeing to let the matter rest as it stood before the Convention met, and then indirectly voting for repeal by electing men who, they knew, took their own view of the subject, thereby committing indirectly the Convention to such views, violated their pledged faith, and left the minority no alternative but to secede or stand committed to the views of the majority.

That Congress can constitutionally say that dirty, filthy, obscene literature, written for the purpose of corrupting the morals and inflaming the passions of the young and inconsiderate in order that the writer or maller may the more easily fill his purse or gratify his licentious passions, shall not be sent through the mails, is a right which Congress, as I think, never should, and never will, abandon. And as for my little part in this matter, I enter my protest against ever being taxed for such a purpose as carrying the filthy stuff anywhere but to the fire. Yet no man should have his honest opinions, couched in such decent language as the English affords, excluded from the mails.

Respectfully yours,

E. L. CRANE.

OSWEGO, N. Y., Nov. 29, 1878.

F. E. ABBOT, Esq.:

Dear Sir,—The specimen copies of THE INDEX reached me this morning. I have only had time to glance casually at them, but I read with interest the article on "Rev. Joseph Cook as Devil's Advocate." I honor you, sir, for the stand you have taken in this matter, and I trust that liberals are not so blind to the great interests of their cause as to resent the sound advice you have given them. I believe that the proceedings of the majority in the Syracuse Convention have had the effect of strengthening the bonds of the Orthodox church upon many who, disgusted at its intolerance and narrow-mindedness, were upon the verge of casting in their lots with the disciples of rationalism. It is a source of deepest mortification to me that the record of liberalism is disgraced by such a blot. Its enemies are quick to discover any points of weakness, while acknowledgment of anything good in its work or teachings is only wrung from them with great effort. Here they have a legitimate casus belli; a vulnerable part has been discerned, and, as has been evinced by the Monday Lecturer's course, they are not slow to avail themselves of it. . . .

Yours very respectfully,
CHARLES E. PERKINS.

WEBSTER, Mass., Dec. 2, 1878.

DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

Allow me to thank you for the manly position you have taken on the Comstock question. I am at a loss to know how any pure-minded, intelligent liberal can take any other stand. You and the seceding party have my warmest sympathy.

Free religion must have for its basis the purest morality, the highest virtue, without which it must fall to the ground. I admire your review of Mr. Cook's lecture, if such a mass of false, ridiculous statements can be called a lecture, and that, too, from one professing to be a Christian.

Yours truly, MRS. A. C. WHITFORD.

ANECDOTES of Pio Nono are all the rage in the European papers. Hector Malot tells (Le Siècle) of his audience with the old Pontiff, who knew him as remarkably liberal in thought. "What do you desire in me?" said the Pope to his visitor. "I desire to present my respects," replied the visitor. "But you must ask something of me," said the Pope. Malot found himself in an uncomfortable dilemma; he didn't want to be rude, he couldn't conscientiously ask to be blessed; and while he was puzzling over the situation the Pope, with a smile of gentle malice, said, "Well, if you won't ask for my benediction I must give it to you without asking"—blessed him and passed on.

"WASN'T IT SCANDALOUS that a ball should be had in aid of the Old South Preservation Fund?" Yes, dear subscriber, it was. It reminds us of a case where a man of tainted moral character incontinently took hold of the wheelbarrow on which a poor woman was trying to get a barrel of flour, which somebody had given her, home. After he had dumped it at her door, and helped her roll it in, and unheeded it, she said: "I do really thank you, sir, for your kindness; but you must excuse my adding that I can't help wishing none of the neighbors had seen you doing it; for you know—"

THE Christian Life says: "Every one at Cambridge knows the Rabbi Schiller-Szinessy, whose Oriental learning is the pride of the University. But the Rabbi is not only a profound Talmudist, he is also a devout Jew, ever ready to break a controversial lance with the followers of the Nazarene. One of our friends asked him lately which was the best German translation of the Bible. 'They are all bad; Christianity falsifies all it touches.' 'But, Rabbi, Christianity has civilized Europe.' 'Blessed,' replied the Rabbi, 'be Jehovah; for he ever bringeth good out of evil!'"

DEPLORABLE accounts of the irreligion of Scotch farm-servants were given at a conference of clergymen held at Nairn. It was stated that in the eastern districts of Scotland the greater number of farm-servants had lapsed into heathenism. One speaker said that in his district 75 per cent. of the ploughmen never entered the church door, and that their State demanded the attention of the legislature, as it might develop into socialism and communism.—Secular Review.

"WHAT'S DE TIME o'day, ole 'oman?" said a colored countryman to Aunt Milly, trying to poke fun at the brass chain that held her front-door key around her neck. "Look at de town clock, chile. Dat's built for po' folks."

FIRST URCHIN: "When a doctor gets sick, what makes 'em get another doctor to give 'em medicine?" SECOND URCHIN: "Cos they can't take their own medicine—it's too nasty. They give it to folks."—Kingston Freeman.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
 To THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
 Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.
 Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

Office, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX.

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.Y.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. L. SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
 JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.20 for one year, including postage, or 90 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street Boston.

PUBLICATIONS INDEX TRACTS.

OF THE

FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keahob Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Harford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. R. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion"; Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Lasker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for Five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for Five cents at the office.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fifth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyses the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 8.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.Y.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. L. SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
 JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from

all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	2.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Kelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physios and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.5
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. O. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 3 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	2.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Printer.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	2.25
BUECKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 3 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 21 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.50
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience	1.00
Billy Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.20
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
COORELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDS BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.

Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellaneous. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourses on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUBRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELLIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising—Adam Bede.....
Ramola.....
The Mill on the Floss.....
Felix Holt.....
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life.....
The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellaneous.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portraits.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	2.00
6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 3 vols.....	2.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREEK'S (W. B.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMKERTON (PHILIP G.). A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art and Artists. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	5.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....
Mosses from an Old Manse.....
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....
The Marble Faun.....
The English Note-Books.....
The American Note-Books.....
The French and Italian Note-Books.....
Our Old Home, and Septimus Felton.....
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.). Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skel- lides.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mopse the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aerodynamics. By J. Ball Feltgrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion, India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A. Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS O.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols.....	3.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL D'O). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
5.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	5.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education, 1839 to 1845.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.). The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	2.25
Autobiography.....	3.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.00
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau. 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.). Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography, and Antiquities.....	2.50
Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Kikooes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.). A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, and the Organisation of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations.—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.50
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART). The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trotty Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, &c. With 16 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	1.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Sonnetary, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, &c.....	1.50
The Expense of Heaven.....	1.50
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHERLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	5.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Arnold Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 26 vols.....	21.50
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT). Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.00
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	4.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.25
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	1.50
Sociology.....	1.50
Descriptive Sociology. Parts I, II, and III, each.....	4.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	2.50
Universal Progress.....	2.50
STOW'S (HARRIET BECHER). Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 3 vols.....	7.50
The Classic-Era Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.00
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....
The Newcomes.....
Adventures of Philip.....
Pendennis.....
The Virginians.....
Remond, and Lovel the Widower.....
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the novels. Complete in 10 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market. 1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humors, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unreprinted Pieces.
THAXTER'S (MRS. OELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	1.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	1.50
The Maine Woods.....	2.50
Cape Cod.....	2.50
Lepus in Canada.....	2.50
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.50
TYLER (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.50
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.50
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.50
How a Mode of Motion.....	2.50
On Sound.....	2.50
Radiant Heat.....	5.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
Lessons in Electricity.....	1.00
Address before British Assoc'n at Belfast.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH). Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYER'S (REV. CHARLES). The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I and V, each.....	1.00
Vols III, IV, and VI, each.....	2.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Seauterings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN). American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	2.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Pansies. A volume of Poems.....	1.00
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	5.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

231 Washington St., Boston.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY—PRICE TWO PENCE.

THE SECULAR REVIEW.

EDITED BY CHARLES WATTS.

The SECULAR REVIEW is the leading organ of Secularism, and each week has Special Articles on Theological, Social, Scientific, and Political Subjects. Its distinctive features are the advocacy of Constructive Secularism, and the dissemination of useful information on all questions which affect the welfare of the people. Letters are inserted in its "OPEN COLUMN" from all who are courteous in the expression of their views; while a special department is allotted for "NOTES AND QUERIES."

The Contributors to the SECULAR REVIEW comprise the principal advocates of Secularism, including its founder, G. J. Holyoake.

CHARLES WATTS, Publisher,
84 Fleet Street, London, E.C.

INTERESTING NEW BOOKS For Radical Thinkers.

THE BIBLE FOR LEARNERS. By Dr. H. Oort, Professor at Amsterdam, and Dr. I. Hooykaas, Pastor at Rotterdam, with the assistance of Dr. A. Kneven, Professor at Leyden. A popular exposition of the "Dutch School" of modern inquiry in the historical study of the Bible. Vol. I., Patriarchs; Moses; Judges. Vol. II., Kings and Prophets. Vol. III., New Testament (in preparation). Price $2.00 per volume.

THE BIBLE OF TO-DAY. By John W. Chadwick. Contains the principal results of the best historical and scientific criticism of the separate books of the Bible and their mutual relations. 304 pages. Price $1.50.

WHAT IS THE BIBLE? By J. T. Sunderland. An attempt to answer the question in the light of the best scholarship and in the most reverent and catholic spirit. 179 pages. Price $1.00.

THE RELIGION OF ISRAEL. From the Dutch of J. Kappert. "Its purpose is to give a faithful and accurate account of the results of modern research into the early development of the Israelitish religion." 283 pages. Price $1.00.

ASPIRATIONS OF THE WORLD: A Chain of Opals. Selected from the best ancient and modern scriptures, with an introduction. By L. Maria Child. 386 pages. Price $1.25.

A MODERN SYMPOSIUM. Subjects: The Soul and a Future Life; The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief; By Frederic Harrison, Professor Huxley, Fitz James Stephen, Lord Selborne, Canon Barry, the Dean of St. Paul, Duke of Argyll, and others. 261 pages. Price $1.25.

DETERIORATION AND RACE EDUCATION: with practical application to the condition of the people and industry. By Samuel Boyce. 384 pages. Price $2.50.

THE GHOSTS: Liberty of Man, Woman, and Child, etc. By Col. R. G. Ingersoll (his latest lectures). 212 pages. Price $1.50. Also, THE GODS, etc., same style. 128 pages. Price $1.25.

Any of the above-named books sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

RADICAL LIBERAL LECTURES

By B. F. Underwood,

FOR THE FALL AND WINTER OF 1878-9.

1. The Theory of Evolution.
2. Darwinism Defined and Defended.
3. The Philosophy of Herbert Spencer.
4. The Genesis and Nature of Religion.
5. Modern Scientific Materialism.
6. Natural Selection versus Design in Nature.
7. An Hour with German Thinkers.
8. Intuition and Instinct Viewed in the Light of Modern Psychology.
9. The Pros and Cons of a Future Life.
10. Is there a Personal Intelligent Deity?
11. The Demands of Liberalism Pertaining to State Secularization.
12. Monogamic Marriage versus the Vagaries of Free Love.
13. Woman: Her Past and Present; Her Rights and Wrongs.
14. Religious Revivals: Their Causes and Consequences.
15. The Struggles and Triumphs of Free-thought in Europe and America.
16. Issues of the Age.
17. Buddha and Buddhism.
18. Ancient Egypt: Its Laws, Customs and Religion.
19. The French Revolution: Its Causes and Consequences.
20. Crimes and Cruelties of Superstition.
21. Cook and other "Scientific" Annihilators of Materialism Reviewed.
22. Paine the Pioneer of Free-thought in America.
23. A Liberal's Answer to the Question, "If not Christianity, What?"
24. Christianity: To what Extent has it Helped or Hindered Civilization?
25. Jesus: All that is Known and what is Guessed about Him.
26. A True Man Better than a True Christian.
27. Judaism and Christianity Outgrowths of Pre-existent Heathenism.
28. Science versus the Bible.
29. The Origin and History of the Bible. (From one to six lectures.)
30. The Four Gospels Unhistorical and Unreliable.
31. Evidence for the Divinity of the Bible Examined.
32. Popular Assumptions Regarding the Bible and Christianity.
33. Bible Prophecies Falsified by the Facts of History.
34. Popular Objections to Liberalism Considered.

For terms, etc., address

B. F. UNDERWOOD,
THORNDIKE, MASS.

GOLD Any worker can make $12 a day at home. Costly Outfit free. Address TRUB & CO., Augusta, Maine.

THE INDEX IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

Address THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston, U.S.A.

TO THE AMERICAN PATRONS OF CHOICE LITERATURE.

We have made arrangements with Messrs. CHAPMAN & HALL, London, England, for the right to publish an American Edition of

The Fortnightly Review,

Edited by JOHN MORLEY,

and are now publishing this celebrated Monthly Magazine, from a special duplicate set of stereotype plates, which are forwarded from England so promptly as to enable us to produce each month, not only an exact facsimile of this able Review, but to publish it almost at the same time the original is from England. It is in every respect equal to the London issue, at about half the original price. This effort will place in the hands of American readers the freest utterances of leading thinkers on the issues with a promptitude unequalled. The comments of a large number of the best European thinkers on Science, Philosophy, Literature, Politics, and Miscellaneous Matters of general interest cannot fail to be appreciated and encouraged by thoughtful American readers. The following are a few of the contributors:

Matthew Arnold,	Alfred R. Wallace,
Herbert Spencer,	Frederick Harrison,
Goldwin Smith,	Prof. Tyndall,
Right Hon. Lyon Playfair,	Prof. Huxley,
Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone,	Prof. Darwin,
Lionel A. Tollenache,	Author of Supernatural Religion ,
M. E. Grant Duff, M.P.,	Sir John Lubbock,
Hon. Robert Lowe,	Anthony Trollope,
Lealie Stephen,	T. Adolphus Trollope,
John Morley (the Editor),	Sir H. S. Maine,
G. H. Lewes,	Sir David Wedderburn,

AND NUMEROUS OTHERS.

Subscription Price, $5.00 per Year.

Published every month by the ROSE-BELFORD PUBLISHING CO., 60 York Street, Toronto, Ont.

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD. GREAT THROUGH LINE

AND UNITED STATES MAIL ROUTE.

The attention of the travelling public is respectfully invited to some of the merits of this great highway, in the confident assertion and belief that no other line can offer equal inducements as a route of through travel. In

CONSTRUCTION AND EQUIPMENT

THE PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD stands confessedly at the head of American railways. The track is double the entire length of the line, of steel rails laid on heavy oak ties, which are embedded in a foundation of rock ballast eighteen inches in depth. All bridges are of iron or stone, and built upon the most approved plans. Its passenger cars, while eminently safe and substantial, are at the same time models of comfort and elegance.

THE SAFETY APPLIANCES

In use on this line well illustrate the far-seeing and liberal policy of its management, in accordance with which the utility only of an improvement and not its cost has been the question of consideration. Among many may be noticed

The Block System of Safety Signals, Janney Coupler, Buffer, and Platform, The Wharton Patent Switch, and the Westinghouse Air-Brake, forming in conjunction with a perfect double track and road-bed a combination of safeguards against accidents which have rendered them practically impossible.

Pullman Palace Cars

are run on all Express Trains from New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington, to Chicago, Cincinnati, Louisville, Indianapolis, and St. Louis.

WITHOUT CHANGE,

and to all the principal points in the far West and South with but one change of cars. Connections are made in Union Depots, and are assured to all important points. The Scenery of the Pennsylvania Route is admitted to be unsurpassed in the world for grandeur, beauty, and variety. Superior refreshment facilities are provided. Employees are courteous and attentive, and it is an inevitable result that a trip by the Pennsylvania Railroad must form

A Pleasing and Memorable Experience.

Tickets for sale at the lowest rates at the Ticket Offices of the Company in all important cities and towns.

FRANK THOMSON, L. P. FARMER, General Manager, General Passenger Agent, C. B. HALDEMAN, New England Agent, 203 and 205 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 80 CENTS. Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the fine list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. ANY OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

THE INDEX AS AN ADVERTISING MEDIUM.

Testimony of one who has tried it.

FLORENCE, Iowa, Jan. 5, 1878.
... THE INDEX is the best advertising medium which I have tried. ...
E. C. WALKER.

THE BEST PORTRAIT OF THOMAS PAINE.

Engraved by the famous W. Sharpe from Romney's celebrated portrait—

Heliotype Copy

by James R. Osgood & Co., of Boston. This is a beautiful work of art, and by all odds the very best likeness of Thomas Paine to be found. It is 10x8 inches in size, and will be mailed post-paid on receipt of $1.00. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF
O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
R. H. RANNEY,
F. E. ABBOT.

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed post-paid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

A REMARKABLE BOOK.

A MODERN SYMPOSIUM.

SUBJECTS:

The Soul and Future Life.

By Mr. Frederic Harrison, Hon. Roden Noel, R. H. Hutton, Lord Selborne, Prof. Huxley, Canon Barry, Lord Blackford, Mr. W. R. Greg, Rev. Baldwin Brown, and Dr. W. G. Ward.

The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief.

By Sir James Fitz-James Stephen, Prof. Clifford, Lord Selborne, Rev. Mr. Martineau, Mr. Frederic Harrison, the Dean of St. Paul's, the Duke of Argyll, Dr. W. G. Ward, Prof. Huxley, and R. H. Hutton.

1 Vol. Crown, 8vo. Cloth, neat, $1.25.

This volume contains the scholarly utterances of the leading scientists and philosophers of Great Britain on two of the most important subjects of the century.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.,

for

TRACTS.

I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.

II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.

III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.

IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.

V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13 and 20, 1878.)

VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles E. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II., III., IV., V., VI., 10 cts. each; ten for 50 cts.; one hundred, $5.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 50 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS for 1872, '73, '74, '75, '76, and '77, Five cents each.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLETT & CO., Portland, Maine.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & CO., Portland, Maine.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The twenty-fifth school year of this Family and Day School for both sexes will begin WEDNESDAY, Sept. 19, 1877. For Circular and information apply to

RATH'L T. ALLEN,
West Newton, Mass.

NEW BOOK BY INGERSOLL.

Contains his latest lectures on "The Ghosts," "Liberty of Man, Woman, and Child," "Centennial Oration," "Farming in Illinois," and others. Handsomely bound in one volume. Price $1.50. Also

THE GODS AND OTHER LECTURES.

Same style. Price $1.25. Sent post-paid on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE OF AMERICA.

1. EQUAL RIGHTS IN RELIGION. Contains an Historical Account of the Liberal League movement; a full Report of the Centennial Congress of Liberals at Philadelphia, July 1 to 4, 1876, with Essays by F. E. Abbot, James Parton, R. F. Underwood, and others; the Constitution of the National Liberal League, List of Charter Members, etc., etc. Octavo, pp. 190. Cloth, $1.00; paper, 75 cents.
2. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES, adopted at Philadelphia, July 4, 1876. With Resolutions of the Congress, Extracts from Letters by Distinguished Citizens, Constitution of the National Liberal League, etc. Adapted for gratuitous distribution by friends of the cause. Octavo, 34 pp. Single copies, 3 cts.; 10 copies, 15 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.
3. PRIVILEGES FOR NONE—JUSTICE FOR ALL. Contains the N. L. L. Platform and Resolutions adopted at Rochester, Oct. 23, 1877, full information how to organize Local Leagues, etc. Twenty-page tract for the use of workers. Single copies, 5 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.

ADDRESS

National Liberal League of America

231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON.

FROTHINGHAM'S WORKS.

THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY. An Essay. Third Edition—Revised. Price $1.50.

"Nobody can peruse this book without respect for the learning, mental honesty and skill in the statement of his convictions, possessed by the author, and for the essential integrity and philanthropic tendency of his spirit."—Springfield Republican.

"A profoundly sincere book, the work of one who has read largely, studied thoroughly, reflected patiently.... It is a model of scholarly culture and of finished and vigorous style."—Boston Globe.

THE CHILD'S BOOK OF RELIGION. For Sunday-schools and Homes. Price $1.00.

THE SAFEST CREED, AND OTHER DISCOURSES. 12mo, Cloth, $1.50.

Not "food for babes," but full of suggestion for earnest and thoughtful men.

STORIES FROM THE LIPS OF THE TEACHER. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"The Parables are so re-told as to absorb the attention of the reader, and to fasten upon the mind what the writer believes to have been the impression the Savior meant to convey. It is in style and thought a superior book, and will interest alike young and old."—Zion's Herald (Methodist).

STORIES OF THE PATRIARCHS. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"A work of culture and taste; it will be welcome to all ages, and gives the sublimest lessons of manhood in the simple language of a child."—Springfield Republican.

BELIEFS OF THE UNBELIEVERS. A Lecture. 12mo, Cloth, $1.00.

TRANSCENDENTALISM IN NEW ENGLAND. A History. With sketches and studies of Emerson, Alcott, Parker, Margaret Fuller, the Brook Farm Community, etc. 8vo, Cloth extra, with steel portrait of the author, $2.50.

THE LIFE OF THEODORE PARKER. 8vo. With Portrait, $3.00.

The New York Tribune closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

THE CRADLE OF THE CHRIST. A Study in Primitive Christianity, illustrating the prime importance of the Messianic Idea in the New Testament, as the key to the development of Christianity from Judaism. Octavo, Cloth, $1.75.

Mailed, post-paid, on receipt of price, by THE INDEX 231 Washington St., Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 9.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, DEC. 19, 1878.

WHOLE No. 469.

LIBERAL LEAGUE PLATFORM

For the Presidential Election of 1880,

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.
2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.
3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.
- N. B.—The nomination of candidates upon the above platform was postponed to a future Congress of the National Liberal League.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

GLIMPSES.

THE FIRST LIBERAL LEAGUE of Boston held a meeting last Sunday evening at the rooms of the Woman's Club, No. 4 Park Street. The President, Rev. M. J. Savage, read the appeal of the National Liberal League of America to the Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues. The following votes were passed unanimously:—

Voted, That the First Liberal League of Boston approve the stand taken by the minority at the Second Annual Congress of the National Liberal League, with reference to the postal law of 1873, as the only position which can ultimately commend itself to the reason and conscience of the American people.

Voted, That we hereby dissolve our connection with the National Liberal League, and apply for a charter from the National Liberal League of America.

"GUSH WILL NOT remove a grievance," said Mr. Blaine in the United States Senate on December 11, "and no disguise of State rights will close the eyes of our people to the necessity of correcting a great national wrong." This was said with reference to the terrorism exercised over the negroes by which one white voter at the South has been made to offset two white voters at the North. But it applies equally well to the question of the postal law of 1873. All the clamor over the alleged unconstitutionality of that law is mere ineffectual "gush"; if that law were not constitutional now (as it is), the people would certainly make it so by constitutional amendment. The repealers are practically doing their utmost to keep Heywood in jail by blinding the public to the justice of reforming the law so as to protect the liberty of discussion.

THE NEW YORK Herald of November 8 told this touching story: "Six months," said the Fifty-seventh street court magistrate yesterday to a wretched drunkard who begged to be let off 'just this once.' Then, from the centre of the court-room, came a pale-faced, neatly dressed little girl, with tears in her large blue eyes, but firm resolve in her childish face. She made her way quickly to the prisoner's side, and, standing there with her small white hand in his, and addressing the magistrate, she said: 'Forgive him, Judge; he is my father. He may seem low and a drunkard to you, but he has been good to me—very good. He has a home, a wife, and three little children beside me. Do let him off, sir, and God bless you!' She could say no more, for tears interrupted further utterance. Suddenly the drunken prisoner had become a man again. His eyes were cleared, he stood erect, and pressed his little one to his heart. Then he bent over her, pushed the hair from her forehead, kissed her gently on the cheek, and whispered kindly words in her ear. 'McCarthy,' said the magistrate, 'you are free. Your child has saved you.'

THE National Reformer says: "The Grand Orient of France are stated to be about to issue a general invitation to their brethren in England, Ireland, Scotland, and the United States to take part in 'convent' (or secret convention) to be held in Paris, in order to revise the decision of the English-speaking Lodges, which have literally read the French Masons out of all fraternity, because of their erasure of the clause requiring belief in a Deity. If the Anglo-Saxon Masons adhere to their resolution, or even if they decline to accept the invitation to join a secret convention, the Grand Orient of France have resolved to declare themselves independent, with power and determination to issue warrants under their separate seal constituting branch Lodges in England, the United States, and other countries. A few members, constituting the old section, will probably maintain Masonry as a religious element in France; but the newer and more numerous revolvers will continue to exclude all reference to the Deity in their ceremonials, and thus practically Masonic Lodges will become freethought institutions."

THE Christian Register says: "The savage spirit of the old Covenanters, and of some of the Hebrew psalms, seems not to have wholly burned itself out in Scotland. A prayer recently offered in a Glasgow kirk by Rev. Robert Thompson, is thus reported: 'O God, confound the papacy. May the present Pope perish amid the intrigues of the Jesuits with whom he is surrounded and the devil whose servant he is.' Imagine this prayer followed by a pulpit-reading from the New Testament,—say the rebuke of Jesus to his disciples who wanted to call down fire from heaven on the Samaritans!" It is natural and quite professional to speak severely of the rival shop,—of the man who in your line of teaching or curing is practising upon a method which you do not believe in, and winning converts and followers. The Pope is running the rival shop now, and his method of Christianity is the miserable imposture. Why should not the sturdy Scotch Presbyterian say so in plain speech? In the first century the Scribes and Pharisees, sitting rightfully in Moses' seat, were the accredited teachers of religion; they maintained the rival religious establishment. Dr. Thompson would not be shut up to the choice of the obscure text above suggested for a weighty precedent from the New Testament for his "savage spirit." Let him read these vigorous words, that shame the tameness of his own, addressed to the antichrist of an earlier age (according to a gospel accepted as genuine by the Register) by the same Jesus who is quoted as rebuking him: "All that ever came before me are thieves and robbers." "Ye are of your father, the devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do." "Ye serpents, ye generation of vipers, how can ye escape the damnation of hell!"

THE WASHINGTON correspondent of the New York Times thus discourses of "The Southern Clergyman in Politics": "During frequent and extended trips through the Southern States, it has often been my good fortune to meet old rebel soldiers who had gone through all the hardships of the rebellion, but who were, nevertheless, warm in their regard and respect for their old enemies, and strong in their support of the Union which they had tried so hard to overthrow. General Hooker of Mississippi, who left an arm upon the battle-field; General Nicholls, of Louisiana, who bears the cruel marks of a dozen Northern bullets; Colonel Waddell, of North Carolina, a brave soldier who bled for the lost cause,—these men, and men like them, are, in spite of their democracy, always ready to extend the right hand of fellowship to their 'ancient enemies,' to acknowledge that some good thing may come out of the North, and to express loyalty to the nation's flag. Not so the Southern clergymen; they, as a class, never have a good word for the Union, and are always ready to join the women in abusing 'the Yankees.' In their partisanship they are more bitter and uncompromising than any other class of the community. They are all democrats dyed in the wool, last-ditch, unreconstructed democrats, ready at all times to denounce 'radicalism' as a crime against gods and men. So blinded are they by prejudice that they either cannot or will not see any of the outrageous acts which are continually being committed by their party friends for political effect. The orthodox Southern pastors can never be made to admit that the political rights of the freedmen are interfered with in any way; on the contrary, they are ever ready, even in the face of direct evidence of their truth, to denounce as 'radical lies' the reports of political outrages upon the negroes which are from time to time made to the people of the North. Even when forced against their will to admit the knowledge of some crime committed by the shot-gun bands who serve the democracy, they still refuse to denounce the criminals, or to use the influence of the Church in the interest of peace, order, and the laws. The Southern pastor brave enough to preach against the inhuman and ungodly practices of the KuKlux and the White League has yet to be heard from."

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE OF AMERICA.

OFFICERS.

Francis E. Abbot, President, Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

Hon. E. P. Hurlbut, Albany, N. Y.
 Hon. Samuel E. Sewall, Boston, Mass.
 Hon. Nathaniel Holmes, St. Louis, Mo.
 Hon. Henry Booth, Chicago, Ill.
 Hon. George W. Julian, Irvington, Ind.
 Hon. Eliza Wright, Boston, Mass.
 Mr. W. M. J. Potter, New Bedford, Mass.
 Mr. E. P. Halliwell, Boston, Mass.
 Mr. James Parton, Newburyport, Mass.
 Mr. F. Schuenemann-Pott, San Francisco, Cal.
 Hon. Abraham Payne, Providence, R. I.
 Rev. M. J. May, Boston, Mass.
 Rabbi B. Felsenthal, Chicago, Ill.
 Rev. W. H. Spencer, Sparta, Wis.
 Mr. Samuel L. Hill, Florence, Mass.
 Mr. E. W. Meddough, Detroit, Mich.
 Mr. Horace Seaver, Editor of the "Investigator," Boston.
 Rabbi Isaac M. Wise, Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
 Mr. Moritz Ellinger, Editor of "Jewish Times," New York.
 Rev. Robert Collyer, Chicago, Ill.
 Col. Robert G. Ingersoll, Peoria, Ill.
 Dr. T. L. Brown, Binghamton, N. Y.
 Hon. E. S. McCormick, Franklin, Pa.
 Elder F. W. Evans, Mount Lebanon, N. Y.
 Mrs. Elizabeth Thompson, New York City.
 Mrs. Amy Post, Rochester, N. Y.
 Mrs. Elizabeth Oady Stanton, Tenafly, N. J.
 Miss Rallie Holley, Lottsburg, Va.
 Joseph McDonough, Albany, N. Y.
 Rabbi Max Schlesinger, Albany, N. Y.

Secretary.

W. H. Hamlen, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

Miss Jane P. Titcomb, 142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

J. A. J. Wilcox, 8 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

J. A. J. Wilcox, W. H. Hamlen,
 F. E. Abbot, O. D. B. Mills,
 D. G. Orandon.

Executive Committee.

Alabama, J. H. Halley, Selma.
 Arkansas, John Atkins, Monticello.
 California, J. L. Hatch, San Francisco.
 Colorado, David T. Beals, Grenada.
 Connecticut, George W. Baldwin, Bridgeport.
 Delaware, Joseph D. Gault, Greenville.
 Florida, T. D. Gidding, Enterprise.
 Georgia, Dr. A. A. Bell, Madison.
 Illinois, Dr. A. G. Humphrey, Galena.
 Indiana, N. D. Watkins, Xenia.
 Iowa, J. C. Michener, Adel.
 Kansas, John Farnsworth, Fort Scott.
 Kentucky, S. B. Olark, Wilsonville.
 Louisiana, Emerson Bentley, New Orleans.
 Maine, Dr. W. H. Brown, Bangor.
 Maryland, J. S. Russell, New Market.
 Massachusetts, E. A. Sawtelle, Boston.
 Michigan, Karl Schmeck, Detroit.
 Minnesota, J. B. Bassett, Minneapolis.
 Missouri, E. Peterson, St. Louis.
 Nebraska, W. E. Cappeland, Lincoln.
 Nevada, V. G. Barrett, White Rock.
 New Hampshire, William Little, Manchester.
 New Jersey, Francis W. Overy, Passaic.
 New York, C. D. B. Mills (Chairman), New York.
 North Carolina, J. W. Thorne, Warren.
 Ohio, E. D. Stark, Cleveland.
 Oregon, Samuel Colt, Humboldt Basin.
 Rhode Island, George Lewis, Providence.
 South Carolina, P. W. Fuller, Columbia.
 Tennessee, Dr. E. H. Price, Chattanooga.
 Texas, Dr. L. J. Russell, Harrisville.
 Vermont, E. L. Haugston, North Bennington.
 Virginia, L. Spaulding, Norfolk.
 West Virginia, Dr. A. M. Dent, Weston.
 Wisconsin, Robert O. Spencer, Milwaukee.
 Dakota, D. P. Wilcox, Yankton.
 District of Columbia, W. H. Doolittle, Washington.
 Utah, W. Ferguson, Provo City.
 Wyoming, Norman S. Porter.

Finance Committee.

D. G. Orandon, Chairman, Chelsea, Mass.
 Mrs. Sarah B. Otis, 171 Warren Avenue, Boston.
 Harlan P. Hyde, 231 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES

Chartered by the National Liberal League of America.

FLORENCE, MASS.—President, Seth Hunt; Secretary, Clarence E. Brown.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Florence Liberal League.
 SYRACUSE, N. Y.—President, John W. Truesdell; Secretary, Mrs. Nettie C. Truesdell.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Onondaga County Liberal League.
 ALBANY, N. Y.—President, Thomas J. Honnessey; Secretary, Thomas Dugan.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Albany Liberal Association.
 BOSTON, MASS.—President, Rev. M. J. Savage; Secretary, Miss Jane P. Titcomb.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Boston, Mass.

N.B.—The above is an acknowledgment of the fact that a charter is due and will be sent as soon as possible. Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues originally chartered by the "National Liberal League" will receive charters from the "National Liberal League of America" without extra charge, if they send a certified copy of their vote to accept the following invitation:—

"Voted, That all Local Leagues that approve the formation of the National Liberal League of America are invited to dissolve their connection with the old League, and to join this League."

SIR WALTER SCOTT used to tell of a baronet who made himself the host of a number of Presbyterian ministers, seven of whom were put into a capacious many-bedded room, where the butler had carefully provided for each a Bible and a bottle of beer. "My friend," said one of the divines, addressing this functionary, after a brief general consultation, "you must know that the youngest minister reads aloud a portion of Scripture to the rest; only one Bible therefore, is necessary. So take away the other six, and in their place bring six more bottles of ale." The youngest minister must have had a droughty time of it.

THERE IS NO trifling with Nature; it is always in the right, and the faults and errors fall to our share. It defies incompetency, but reveals its secrets to the competent, the truthful, and the pure.—Goethe.

The Faith of the Doubters.

BY JOHN W. CHADWICK, OF BROOKLYN, N. Y.

Doubt, scepticism, infidelity, are words that convey much the same meaning to the average Christian mind, and a very disagreeable and even hateful meaning it is. The doubter is habitually spoken of as if he were a dreadful person. If not a sneer, a sigh is thought to be the fit accompaniment of any mention of him. Once he was roundly cursed; now he is let off with pity; and those who pity him felicitate themselves upon the beautiful spirit which they show in merely pitying, not cursing, him. One of Paul's grandest sayings, "He that doubteth is damned if he eat," is truncated by the omission of the last three words, so that it reads, "He that doubteth is damned"; and in this form the text is one of the most popular in the Bible. But what if it should prove that doubt is the obverse of a medal whose reverse is faith; that the doubter, instead of being damned (that is, condemned) either at the bar of his own conscience or at the bar of the generations that succeed him, is there approved and honored? What if, when Tennyson sings—

"There lives more faith in honest doubt, Believe me, than in half the creeds."

he takes no poetic license, but reports the simple truth? What if the doubters as such are or may be believers? That a man may be a doubter and a believer at the same time, no one will be so silly as to deny. He may doubt some things while believing others, as Luther doubted the infallibility of the Church while believing in the infallibility of the Bible. But that the doubter as such is often a believer, that any of the faith there is in him—it may be the best and purest—lives in the doubt, as Tennyson affirms,—this is another matter. It is indeed, and a much more important one. Strange and shocking as this idea may appear to many, it is confirmed by the history of civilization and religion, from the earliest down to the present time.

Tennyson did well to say, "In honest doubt." If he had said in earnest doubt, he would have done still better. There is doubt which is neither honest nor earnest; doubt which is mere cavilling, mere affectation. There may be more faith in this, even, than in half the creeds as commonly accepted, and still be precious little. "I have my doubts about the authorship of Shakespeare," sagely remarks the unearnest would-be literary sceptic. So had Delia Bacon; so has Judge Holmes. But in their doubt there lives an immense amount of faith,—faith in the plays, faith that their writer was a great philosopher and no mere manager of plays or actor on the boards. But the unearnest would-be literary sceptic takes up their notion, without weighing any of their arguments; and the only faith there is in his doubt is faith in his own personal consequence. "I have my doubts about a democratic form of government," says the unearnest would-be political sceptic, unable to distinguish between a momentary eddy and the great onward movement of events; and all the faith there is in such a doubt as his is less than any red republican's of Paris, and hardly more than a Sixth Ward repeater's. "I have my doubts whether there ever was any such person as Jesus," says the unearnest would-be religious sceptic. So had General Hitchcock, who wrote a book quite famous in its day, called Christ, the Spirit; but his doubt of the actual existence of Jesus was the obverse of his faith in the sect of the Essenes, of whose devout imagination he regarded the gospels and the sublime figure of Jesus as the manifest outcome. But in the mere whim of the ordinary doubter on this head, there lives no faith in anything but whimsicality and contrariety. It can safely be affirmed that "he that doubteth" in any of these unearnest, unthoughtful, frivolous ways is at least damned to the contracted hell of his own poor egotism and vanity and unearnestness; let us hope also to the accusing hell of his own better hours, and to the purifying hell of social disesteem.

Let it be understood then, once for all, that, when I speak of the faith of the doubters, I do not mean the faith of charlatans and coxcombs, but the faith of earnest, thoughtful men, whose doubts are no mere froth upon the surface of their minds, but their deep ocean currents, not lightly entertained, but feeding on their vital energies, having their heart and life in them. There are doubters whose doubts are of this sort. The world has never been without them. Let us trust it never will be, to the remotest future generations. Such a calamity will be the signal for an immobility and stagnation like that of China, which, at whatever stage of civilization it supervenes, is an intolerable calamity. So far, the world has never been without its honest, earnest doubters. And they have not all been monopolized by the religious sphere. We have a way of talking as if doubt were a disease peculiar to the religious constitution. But it is not. Disease or not, no sphere of human thought or action is proof against it. Every profession has and has had its doubters; every trade, every occupation, every department of human activity. And, so that they have been honest, earnest doubters, as such they have been men of faith; the faith living in the doubt, not merely outside of it, or in spite of it; the doubt being the sign and the expression of the faith.

I do not mean to say that all the men who have been good for anything since time began have been doubters, or that there is no faith in the world except that which wears the form of doubt. For its best health, the world needs two sorts of men: the sort that hold on and the sort that go ahead; the conservatives and the progressives; the men who say, "Let well enough alone," and the men who say,

"The best is good enough for me." It needs both kinds to make a world. And it needs more conservatives than progressives; because the established order is the result of infinite thought and patience operating through countless generations, and ought not to be at the mercy of any one generation of reformers. For the stability of society, we need a strong majority of conservatives. Honor thy father and mother,—the great, the immemorial, past,—that thy days may be long in the land. And as there are always fanatical doubters, men who think the past of no account, it is absolutely necessary that, to maintain the balance of the world, there should be fanatical conservatives, men who think the past superior to any possible present or future. Absolutely these men are not agreeable to those who differ from them widely, though to their own families and friends they are sometimes much more agreeable than the men whose tendency is strikingly centrifugal. But relatively they are most admirable. The economy of Nature makes good use of them. These and the moderate conservatives "maintain the state of the world"; keep all that has been won; hold fast to the embodied patience and fidelity of the innumerable generations of the past. These also have their faith, and it is not mere faith in the past, but faith in the men of the past, and that God has been their God. But if there were no others in the world but these, we should take no step forward. If there had only been these in the past, the past would not be a synonym for evolution from the lowest social forms, as it is now. The history of the past would not be the history of an illimitable progress. In truth, there would be no history at all. We should still be living in the prehistoric times; for history presupposes legions of doubters and dissatisfied men, without whom society could not emerge from its primeval brutishness. For it is always the faith of the doubters that "there is more truth yet to break out of God's word"; that the past has not exhausted the capacities of either man or God; that the best is yet to be; that there will come a time when our own realized ideals shall look just as barbaric and uncouth to future generations as the realized ideals of by-gone centuries and aeons look to us.

There is one very simple way of proving that to speak of the faith of the doubters is to be guilty of no solecism, no contradictory form of speech. For who are the men whom we, of this latest time, regard as preëminently men of faith? Why, to be sure, almost without exception, the men of science, thought, and skill, the leaders and founders who, in their day, were considered doubters and damned as such to social infamy, if not by church decree to everlasting punishment. Doubters they were, but in their doubt there lived a higher faith than that of the prevailing creeds and customs of their times,—a faith in human possibility, a faith, too, in themselves, as meant for great achievements, or in their work, so great as to make them almost forgetful of their own existence. But in his own lifetime the majority of men have always frowned upon the doubter, whether the object of his doubt has been some ancient creed or form, or some old way of making files or picking cotton. The present age is praised continually as being preëminently the age of invention; but every new invention in its day has been received with execration. Here, say the majority, is a machine that can be managed by one man or two, and do the work of ten or twenty or thirty or forty. The laboring man has always hated labor-saving machinery, has always imagined that it takes away his opportunity. The cotton-gin, the steam-engine, the sewing-machine, the loom, the type-setter, the mowing-machine, the horse-rake, the reaper,—all these inventions have been met with curses loud or deep; all their inventors have been involved in their unsparing condemnation. Do you think this statement doesn't tally with the fascination which Machinery Hall at the Centennial had for almost everybody, and especially for the tough-handed farmers and mechanics going there? But enter any town where, as in my own native town at the present time, a transition from hand labor to machine labor is taking place, and you will be much more fortunate than I have ever been if you can convince the men who are suffering from this transition, caught between the upper and the nether mill-stones of the opposing systems, that any labor-saving machine ever invented has not been prejudicial to the interests of the laboring class. Few indeed are those who see that such machines, by cheapening production, increase demand so rapidly that not only is there still work enough for all to do, but it is better paid. The English stocking-weavers thought it was all over with their trade when some one dared to doubt whether the old ways of making stockings were the best that could be had, and they cursed the doubter in proportion to their fear. But the event proved that stockings could be made so much more cheaply by the new machinery, that, whereas the multitude had been going stockless from sheer necessity, they now began to purchase; the demand exceeded the supply, and wages rose, and happiness increased. So it has always been, and so no doubt it will be for a long time to come.* A dozen years ago the capacity of labor-saving machinery in England was equal to six hundred million men, one man doing as much work as two hundred and fifty did a century and a half ago, and yet there is more labor and it has been better paid than when there was no machinery at all. But every man who has contributed to this result by his inventive genius has been a doubter in his day and generation. He has doubted whether the old ways of doing work are the best ways; whether a man should be worn out in doing what an iron horse can do as well or better. But in his doubt there has been a living principle of faith,—faith that, so that a thing be well done, the easiest way of doing it is the best way; faith that there will always be work enough for all, and that if there is more leisure it will be so much the better for us all. Do you say that in every such instance the doubt is entirely subordinate to the faith; the faith is the principal thing? Nay, but it is the first step which costs, and the first step in nearly all inventions and discoveries is a doubt. I say in nearly all, because the approach to some discoveries and inventions is from the scientific side. Necessity is not the only mother of invention. Columbus's doubt whether the shortest way to India was round the Cape of Good Hope was antecedent to his faith that it was not. Morse's doubt whether the mail-bag was the best means of communication between distant places was antecedent to his faith that it was not. It is the printer's impatience with the compositor and his stick, his doubt whether this can be the best method of type-setting, that sets him thinking and planning to make a compositor of iron and steel and brass, who will never get intoxicated and will never strike. Sometimes the faith is simultaneous with the doubt; sometimes it is brought forth after long travail. But even where there is no chronological sequence, the logical sequence is first the doubt and then the faith. The doubt is parent of the faith. Whatever exceptions there may be to this, in view of the fact that some of the greatest discoveries and inventions are made by men working solely under the inspiration of science, not at all under that of use, nor spurred on by necessity, the fact remains, that doubt born of mankind's impatience with the hardness of its lot has been the mightiest lever which it has brought to bear on the obstructions in the way of its advancement. Doubting whether some better state might not be possible for it, the faith in it has followed speedily. This is the rule of human progress. And great as are the discoveries and inventions into which scientific men have blundered while engaged in their great search for scientific truth, these are as nothing in comparison with those, small and great, of infinite variety, which have originated in men's discomfort and impatience, and their doubt whether the causes of their discomfort might not somehow be done away. Let us give honor, then, to every earnest doubter in the realms of discovery and invention, whether he be a Watt, a Stephenson, or the first man who doubted whether a piece of jagged, unwrought stone was the best implement which he could use to further his designs of sustenance or safety.

*If the desire of artisans for a more comfortable, and decent, and aesthetic life can only keep pace with the improved facilities for production. At present it is apparently lagging behind.

It sometimes happens that the man who doubts in these external things wakes a responsive echo very soon in human hearts. The seed he plants grows very rapidly, and, even while men say that it will never come to anything, its blossoms wave in air, its fruits drop down upon their senseless heads. In other things the growth is much more slow. In science and in art, in politics and in religion, he that doubteth in any serious and downright fashion is apt to be condemned much longer than the doubter in the sphere of use and skill. Copernicus only saved himself from damning by keeping to himself his great discovery of the earth's subordinate position in the solar system, but in his doubt of the Ptolemaic system of astronomy inherited a faith that the celestial mechanism was infinitely grander and more beautiful than it had been represented. A year or two ago the political economists celebrated in New York the one hundredth anniversary of the publication of Adam Smith's Wealth of Nations,—a book which revolutionized the theory of political economy, and has well-nigh revolutionized the practice. Smith was a doubter. He doubted the validity of the mercantile system of political economy, the gist of which was, that no country or individual could become richer without some other country or individual becoming poorer, and in which inhered the idea that the excess of a nation's exports over its imports is the sure sign of national prosperity; and for doubting this system he was roundly cursed by his contemporaries. But in his doubt there lived a faith of marvellous beauty and significance,—a faith that the gain of each may be the gain of all; a faith that exchange between individuals or nations may be a mutual benefit, must be where there is no dishonesty. In his own time, the poet who is bold enough to doubt whether he ought to go on singing the dear old strain gets little praise, and not a little scorn. Wordsworth was a doubter. He doubted the infallibility, not of Pope Alexander, but of Alexander Pope and the Augustan age of English poetry. And what a din there was about his ears for his temerity! But now who doesn't see that there was more faith in Wordsworth's little finger than in the whole of Pope's crooked little body? His doubt of Pope meant faith in nature and reality; faith in calling things by their right names; faith in the language of the people as the army from which the poet ought to draw the weapons of his song.

Every student of philosophy knows that Aristotle ruled the Middle Ages with a rod of iron. The authority of the Bible is not set up so confidently in religious matters now as the authority of Aristotle in matters of philosophy, five or six centuries ago. He that doubted Aristotle was condemned by all the schools, and the Church lent her thunders to enforce the verdict. But how we reverence to-day the men who broke away from that authority! How plain it is to us that their doubt of Aristotle, and still more of the miserable scholasticism which mutilated while pretending to interpret him, was faith in larger readings of the problems, physical and metaphysical, which clamored then as now for a solution!

But no class of doubters has in their own day been set aside so fiercely and condemned so loudly as that made up of those whose doubts have touched upon prevailing creeds in morals and religion. Between doubt and religion it has been assumed that there is nothing but antagonism. To doubt is to be an enemy of Christianity, an enemy of religion. No wonder, then, that the religious doubters have had a hard time of it; that they have been imprisoned, scourged, and crucified; that they have been obliged to drink poison, and to have molten lead poured down their throats, and have been burned alive in quick fires and slow, by those who thought they had more faith than their poor victims. But now, as from the vantage-ground of the present we look back over the past, who are the men that tower above the heads of their contemporaries as men of faith? None other than the very men who in their own times were held accused for their doubts. In England, Latimer and Ridley; in Switzerland, Servetus; in Italy, Giordano Bruno and Savonarola; in Austria, Jerome of Prague and John Huss; in Arabia, Mohammed; in Athens, Socrates; in India, Sakya Mouni; in China, Confucius and Lao Tse; and in Judea, one whose birthday festival at Christmas gathers like the tide, and breaks upon a hundred thousand hearths in waves of gift and song. Were their own times so much mistaken in them, then, as to think them doubters when they were not? No, for they were doubters of the most determined sort. They doubted much that other men believed. Mohammed whether all those idols in the temple at Mecca were more than so much wasted stone and timber; Confucius, whether all the ghost and goblin worship of his time had any necessary connection with religion; Buddha, whether the stupendous pantheon of the Brahmans, or their colossal system of caste, had any real validity; and Jesus, whether titling of mint, anise and cummin, and broadening phylacteries, and praying at the street-corners, standing on one leg or both, were the sum total or the purest aspect of religion. You find it easy enough to doubt all these things. But in the times of Mohammed and Confucius, Gautama and Jesus, it was a tremendous thing to do. Men-cius did well to take his coffin with him when he went to see a prince, and leave it just outside the door, ready for an emergency. The establishments of Arabia and China and India and Judea didn't exaggerate a particle the magnitude or the importance of the doubts which these men entertained. The mistake they made was in not seeing that in all these doubts there lived a faith of infinitely higher import than their own; in the doubt of Confucius, faith in this present life and the importance of conducting it with justice and sincerity; in the doubt of Buddha, much the same; in the doubt of Mohammed, faith in one holy omnipresent God, whose highest service is a life of temperance and honesty and truth; in the doubt of Jesus, a faith in God and man of unexampled height and tenderness; a faith in simple goodness and mutual helpfulness as the only truly great and eternally indispensable things in the religious sphere.

And what is true of these exalted beings, who stand out from all others in the world's history as the great men of faith, the great believers, is, in a measure, true of all those who, in more modern times, have been branded as infidels and doubters, even the great French infidels, as they are commonly called, D'Alembert, Diderot, Rousseau, Voltaire—not perfect men by any means, and hardly worthy to be spoken of on the same page with the great religious founders of antiquity—men often foolish, sometimes mendacious, sometimes criminal,—yes, very faulty men, tremendous doubters, and yet having far more faith in the eternal things than their most orthodox contemporaries, and better men into the bargain. Voltaire doubted the infamous, as he called the Roman Catholic Church; but he believed in Quakerism. He had a boundless faith in justice and humanity. If Rousseau's sentimental faith in God didn't amount to much, nor his conception of social origins, his faith in man and nature is at the root of plenty of our modern nature-worship and humanity. And what a doubter was our own Thomas Paine,—our own we have a right and ought to call him,—doubting the inspiration of the Bible, doubting the miraculous history of Jesus, doubting the right to be of monarchies and aristocracies. A fearful doubter! Even to-day the Philadelphia city government refuses to allow the noble bust which my friend Morse has made of him to be placed in Independence Hall, though but for his "Common Sense" it may be Independence Hall would have no such grand associations as it has to-day. I grant you that the victim is not without blemish; but few in his own day were men of such abounding faith in God and man as he. Some think we have proved already that he had too much faith in man, much more than man deserves. I do not think so. For too much faith in man wrote too little appreciation of the value and necessity of general and political culture, and you will hit the mark. Another set of doubters were the English Deists of the eighteenth century. Their doubts were not exaggerated by their contemporaries. They cut right and left. They impugned the supernatural Bible, the supernatural Christ, the supernatural Church. But in their doubts were implicated faiths vastly more sweet and precious than the faiths which they abjured. We call them Deists. It is a name which, in the eighteenth century, summed up a world of scorn, pity, and contempt. To call a man a Deist was worse than calling him a drunkard or a debauchee. What a commentary on the spirit of the age! For what is a Deist but a man who believes in God? This was the crime of Tindal and Collins and Shaftesbury and Herbert, of Cherbury and Blount and Bolingbroke. To this they added the crime of believing very much in human nature, in human reason, and conscience. They doubted that they might the more believe. The so-called faiths of their time appeared to them as poor transparent masks, through which they saw a grinning death's-head doubt of God and man and human life, of God as verily a living God, of man as anything better than a moral idiot, of human life as good for anything but a mere stepping-stone from nothingness into a life beyond the grave.

But, not to speak of others who, since their day, have doubted much in order to believe the more, consider for a moment some of the most conspicuous of the doubts which trouble and excite the established churches of the present time, and elicit now their prayers, anon their maledictions. Is there one earnest doubt in the religious world, among those who still account themselves religious, and believe that, in the future as in the past, religion is to be the dearest of all human interests,—is there a doubt among these which is not merely the negative side of some great positive belief? Are not all the leading affirmations of our popular Christianity essentially negative, all the denials of our modern rationalism essentially affirmative and positive? Is there not more faith in the denial of the Unitarian doubt of the Trinity than in the Trinitarian affirmation? For, in denying the Trinity of the Godhead, the Unitarian affirms its unity. Now, unity is an essentially affirmative and positive idea of which any sort of complexity is a negation. But the rational religionist doubts the supernatural theory of Christianity. Yes, because, like Confucius, he seeks "an all-pervading unity,"—a unity of the divine operation, as well as a unity of the divine Being. And in its very essence, how much more positive and affirmative is the idea of such a unity than the idea of a succession of catastrophes and interventions? The faith in these, of which men are so proud, is doubt of the great sweep of universal providence. The doubt of these, which is regarded as so criminal, is faith in omnipresent Deity. The language of faith concerning Christ is not infrequently the expression of a fearful lack of faith in God. Men tell us that their thought and feeling about Jesus exhaust their thought and feeling about God. I can only say, if they speak truly, they are greatly to be pitied. For what must be their ideal standards of the Infinite who find them met and satisfied by the person of the historical Jesus? His highest glory pales before my faintest thought of God. But not only is the language of men's faith in Jesus an expression of their lack of faith in God; it is also an expression of their lack of faith in man. So long as he is set apart as different in kind, not merely in degree, from all mankind, his sonship orphans all the rest of us. Either he was bone of our bone and flesh of our flesh, manhood of our humanity, or his greatness was a publication of our littleness. Again, our popular Christianity sets off its faith in the peculiar and miraculous inspiration of the Bible against the doubt of this by rational religionists. Well, superficially the two things are related in this way: as faith and doubt. But how is it essentially? Essentially, the popular faith is doubt, is faithlessness. Faith in the special thing is lack of faith in the greater and more universal. Belief that God has spoken in the Bible means doubt that he has spoken anywhere beside. Only because the denial of rationalism is later in time than the supernatural claim does it seem negative. Essentially it is positive. It affirms the larger fact, the fact of universal inspiration. Which is the higher faith, that in the Bible we have "the complete remains" of Deity, or that "The word by seers or sibyls told

In groves of oak or fane of gold,
Still floats upon the morning wind,
Still whispers to the willing mind?"

And so it is with every leading article of the supernatural creed. The formal affirmation masks an essential doubt. The formal doubt contains a larger affirmation. It is so with the doctrine of the atonement. It is so with the doctrine of the incarnation. Atonement and incarnation are not special facts, but universal laws. The old faiths, without exception, are faithless in their implications. The new doubts, almost without exception, are implicitly upon the side of faith. And even the exceptions, if indeed they be such, are not so faithless as the ancient creeds which still find nominal adherents. Büchner's doubt if there be any God is more consoling than faith in such a God as Calvin's. Büchner's doubt of immortality is better than Calvin's certainty of hell; and Calvin's own elect would say so if they had a chance.

A night or two ago, I sat down and read an hour or more in Frederick Faber's hymns. He is accounted the greatest hymn-writer after Keble that modern England has produced. He was one of the Tractarians who followed Dr. Newman into the Roman Church. The language of faith abounds in his hymns to an astonishing degree. And, here and there, there is faith in the ideas,—a faith sweet and sublime and strong and beautiful. Take, for example, such a stanza as I read at the beginning of this morning's service.* But for the most part there is doubt of "And yet we long and long to die,

We covet to be free,
Not for thy great rewards, O God!
Not for thy peace, but thee.

Some may call that the ecstasy of faith. To me it seems the ecstasy of denial and despair. God, then, it

"God is never so far off
As even to be near:
He is within; our spirit is
The home he holds most dear.
To think of him as by our side,
Is almost as untrue
As to remove his throne beyond
Those skies of starry blue.
So all the while I thought myself
Homeless, forlorn, and weary,
Missing my joy, I walked the earth, Myself God's sanctuary."

seems, is not here, but away off there beyond the hills of death. If this is faith, the more we doubt the better. If I cannot believe in God right here, in this life, the only life with which I have yet had any acquaintance, I will not believe in him at all. But thus far in the world's history it has always been regarded as a proof of faith to think meanly of this present life and very grandly of some other. That is like saying we have great faith in the genius of Beethoven, but despise the seventh symphony and, in fact, all the music of his writing we have ever heard.

But in all fairness it must be confessed that there are doubters in these latter days whose faith is not so patent as the faith of those who simply doubt or sturdily deny the various articles of the prevailing creed. There are men who doubt not only whether there is any God, but also whether there is any Man, or will be when this present concourse of atoms ceases from its organic functions. That faith can coexist even with such doubts as these is not to be denied. Doubtful of God and immortality, a man may still have faith in the order and beauty of a self-existing universe,—faith in his work, faith in his friendships and his loves, faith in this life's completeness in itself, so that it needs no other life beyond to place it out into perfection. But can it be affirmed that any faith lives in the doubts of doubters such as these? Perhaps not always, and yet, oftentimes, I am persuaded that in the honest atheistic doubt there lives more faith than in the garrulous creeds of the majority; for what is really doubted is not so much that there is any God as that there is any such as is reported in the creeds, as that any human speech can tell the ineffable secret. Oh, my dear friends, we are all of us too talkative about the mystery of mysteries:—

"Him who dare name and yet proclaim, Yes, I believe!"

So long as we are content to rest in feeling, all is well; but the moment we begin to speak, our words are trivial and false. There is more faith in the silence of some men than in the garrulity of others. But is it so in regard to immortality as well as in regard to God? It surely may be, so long as the faith in God remains; for then the doubt of immortality may only be the negative expression of the faith that if it is best for us to be immortal we shall be so; but, if we are not, then will it be because it is not best for us to be. This is the highest, deepest faith of all. I would that all our faith in immortality might be sustained in this invigorating, stainless air,—that it might lose itself in it as, when the lark becomes "a sightless song," he loses himself in the infinite space of heaven. But better far this faith without the faith in immortality than the faith in immortality without the faith in this. But suppose one hasn't faith in this, then can his doubt of immortality by any possibility contain an element of faith? I think it can, and faith of no mean order,—faith in the capabilities of matter, that out of it and it alone should come this thinking soul, that recognizes it as its progenitor. I cannot think this faith is warranted. Matter plus God may well do anything, but matter minus God not much. And yet this faith, methinks, is infinitely truer than the no-faith in matter, the scorn and curse of it, that has been characteristic of the bulk of human thought from the beginning.

Last, but not least, this word remains to say: There may inhere, there necessarily does inhere, in doubts that cut right to the heart of the most precious faiths humanity has ever cherished, so that they be honest, earnest doubts, a faith in honesty and earnestness; that it is better to be nobly true and simple and sincere with one's own self than to believe anything, however sacred or consoling; that no good can come from putting the telescope to a blind eye, and pretending that we do not see, or to a clear, far-sighted eye, and pretending that we see when we do not. This is the highest faith,—faith that no real good can come to us except along the path of our own personal integrity; that one atom of this should never go in barter for the gladdest, freest faith in God or the immortal life.

"Upon the white sea sand
There sat a pilgrim band,
Telling the losses that their lives had known,
While evening waned away
From breezy cliff and bay,
And the strong tides went out with weary moan.

"Some talked of vanished gold,
Some of proud honors told,
Some spoke of friends that were their trust no more;
And one of a green grave
Beside a foreign wave,
That made him sit so lonely on the shore.

"But when their tales were done
There spake among them one—
A stranger, seeming from all sorrow free—
'Sad losses have ye met,
But mine is heavier yet,
For a believing heart hath gone from me.'

"'Alas!' these pilgrims said,
'For the living and the dead,
For fortune's cruelty and love's sure cross,
For the wrecks of land and sea!
But, however it came to thee,
Thine, stranger, is life's last and heaviest loss!'"

What is this loss of the believing heart which of all losses is the heaviest? Not, I am sure, the loss of faith in any doctrine of a supernatural religion; no, nor even the loss of faith in those great supports and consolations common well-nigh to all sects and to all religions, though these are infinitely precious: but it is the loss of faith in simple truth, of thought and speech and life, as the one island which no sea can overwhelm,—the one final and imperishable good, in comparison with which all other faiths, however precious, are a very little thing.

IF YOU WANT enemies, excel others; if you want friends, let others excel you.—Colton.

MODERN ENGLISH THEOLOGY.

A summary of an introductory lecture by the new Regius Professor of Divinity at Oxford has found its way into the newspapers, and it shows in a very interesting way the view of theological studies which is taken in our day by a learned and reasonable man who is a theologian both by general and by special profession. The view is not only extremely unlike any which can be conceived as taken by a Professor of Divinity one, two, or three hundred years ago, but it would be hard to name any clergyman of even thirty years since who would have expressed himself in Dr. Ince's language, natural as it seems to us at this moment. The Professor does not appear to rate highly the phases through which theology has passed as it has been officially taught at Oxford. From the Reformation to the middle of the seventeenth century the university was given up to the disputes between the Roman Catholics and the Protestants, or between the Calvinists and the Arminians. From 1650 to 1750 politics stifled theology; there was a perpetual struggle for bishoprics and deaneries, first by preaching the doctrine of non-resistance to kings, afterwards by preaching against this doctrine in its original or its derivative shape. After a while the universities were indirectly affected by the attacks of the English Deistical and of the French Voltairean school; and then came the "Age of Evidences." Emotional English theology was not of official, but of private, or at most collegiate, origin. Wesley and Whitefield had little honor in their own alma mater; and the Oxford movement of later days, which Dr. Ince not unjustly reproaches with being little more than a reproduction of the thought of the past, owed its birth not to any professorial teaching, but to "the tutor's lecture-room, the country parsonage, and the parochial pulpit." For the theological controversies of the moment the Professor cannot disguise his disdain. Once upon a time the Oxford Divinity Schools were at issue on five points,—"predestination, universal redemption, reprobation, irresistible grace, and final perseverance." Now the points which are articles "stantis vel cadentis ecclesie" are six,—"incense, lights, vestments, eastward position, wafer bread, mixed chalice." Such trivialities the Professor asks his hearers to abandon for argument on the basis of supernatural religion. But they are not to imitate the "young curates who assail modern science by unverified assertions and ignorant abuse." They are rather to take as a model the "Relation of Christianity to the Positive Philosophy," by the Cambridge Professor of Divinity. The Church at large is to cultivate the "temper of a wise and bold comprehensiveness." Theology is to be rescued from a despairing pessimism, and is to disprove the position that "ignorance is the mother of devotion." This is chiefly to be effected by studying theology according to the Historical Method; and the labors of Professor Lightfoot and Mr. Sanday are pointed out as especially worthy of emulation. The Professor may be pardoned for hinting that such a mode of study and inquiry, besides fortifying the bases of revealed religion, will incidentally dispose of many Roman Catholic doctrines and practices,—such as penance, purgatory, and the supremacy of the Holy See, all of which can be easily shown to be of mediæval origin.

No language could be more sensible, liberal, or moderate; and it may be at once conceded that clergymen who followed such studies in such a spirit would equally preserve their own self respect and the respect of the community. But it is an interesting question how a Divinity Professor comes to be so highly privileged above his predecessors that he can speak of his study in such terms, not only without objection or scandal, but apparently amid general applause. There must be men still alive who as undergraduates were forbidden by university order to attend Dr. Hampden's lectures; yet this Professor, who, it may be observed, had as little of the confessor or martyr about him as any man ever born of woman, had simply published an opinion in language of extreme mildness, that the Athanasian Creed was expressed in highly abstract phraseology belonging to a philosophy long since obsolete. A circle of fire was drawn round him as an accursed thing, about forty years since, for uttering what most of us, including, we suspect, Dr. Ince, would now regard as an obvious commonplace. We believe that the change which has plainly come over English official theology can best be illustrated, if not explained, by a contrast which the new Oxford Professor has himself drawn. He places the six miserable points contended for by the Ritualists in juxtaposition with the five venerable controversies which raged in every English home during half the seventeenth century. Of course, as to the vulgarity of the Ritualist agitation there cannot be a question. If evidence were wanting that it is carried on by the most ignorant of the clergy and the most pushing of the laity, it would be supplied by the piece of news lately printed by us, that the clergy of a church in the suburbs of London, wishing to celebrate a mass for the dead on All Souls' Day, had to be drilled in the "Sarum use" on the subject by (to employ a new term) the sacristan, who (to employ an old one) is a bagman. How is it, then, that a large number of us have these ignoble experiments on popular bad taste forced upon our attention, when the nobler questions for which men fought and overturned thrones and died, in the seventeenth century, are hardly so much as spoken of among us?

Predestination, universal redemption, reprobation, irresistible grace, and final perseverance are topics of supreme importance; but on what foundation do they stand? If they were declared in the scriptural writings in terms which leave us as little doubt of the intention of the writer as the story of the resurrection and the commandment, "Thou shalt not steal," we should all know what was at issue when they were affirmed or denied. But in point of fact these broad and trenchant doctrines are all derived as inferences from a text here and a text there, from a line in this book and a line in that. In order that they may be supported, the verbal inspiration of Scripture must be literally and unreservedly accepted, and conclusions built upon its words by ordinary logical process must be received as declarations of sacred truth. Nothing, in fact, was in dispute in the first half of the seventeenth century except the sense of the scriptural words and the legitimacy of the reasoning by which the inference was reached. All were agreed that the words themselves, in some sense or other, were literally and of divine right true. Now the whole of this way of regarding the language of the Old and New Testaments has passed away; the very statement of the Oxford Regius Professor of Divinity, that "many popular notions of the books of the Bible are erroneous," is fatal to the old view. The change of opinion has taken place in the last twenty years, or even in a shorter time; but it has altered the whole aspect of theology to English eyes. The most learned of our theologians, starting from the abandonment of the verbal inspiration of Scripture, have entered upon an inquiry what the scriptural record really is,—a vast investigation, which can only be conducted according to the Historical Method. These are the labors for which Dr. Ince praises Professor Westcott, Professor Lightfoot, and Mr. Sanday; but whatever these theologians are contending for, it is not the verbal inspiration of Holy Writ. They seem to be occupied with driving certain English and German beekeepers from the outworks of a fortification which they had entered with a rush; and the whole issue seems to be whether the books of the New Testament were known to the Christians of the end of the first century; or, if only to those of the second, to what part of the century the appearance of these writings belongs. It is a characteristic of the controversy that it is carried on with a good-humor and gentleness extraordinarily unlike the ferocity of the old theologians. To speak plainly, a man cannot regard his antagonist as worthy of eternal perdition for a mistake as to the date, meaning, or bearing of a passage in an "early Father." It was a very different thing when the dispute was as to the effect of a declaration which was, in some sense or other, recognized as divine.

It would probably be necessary to track out some obscure dissenting sect in Wales in order to find a mind exercised as was Oliver Cromwell's on the subject of final perseverance; but the doctrine of the verbal inspiration of Scripture still survives, of course, in many classes of the English population, particularly among the large mass of uneducated Dissenters, and it still colors the pulpit language of the clergy of all denominations. But the sense of its untenability is in the air everywhere, and it still has much indirect effect in recruiting the Ritualist clergy. The Ritualist clergy and laity are, in fact, the portions of the classes to whom they belong who have consciously or unconsciously abandoned the view of the Bible which was till lately universal among the believers of all sects, but who have neither the taste nor the knowledge for the laborious studies recommended by Dr. Ince to English learners of divinity. The old Oxford school of High Churchmen—the so-called Tractarians—were as much wedded to sweeping doctrines as were their evangelical opponents, but they demanded a greater support of ecclesiastical tradition for those which they adopted. The Ritualist clergy obviously care nothing for doctrine, as is shown by the very facility with which they pass from one practice to another without observing that the proceeding implies a doctrinal change. This is their way of applying the Historical Method, substituting for the labor and learning which it demands a supposed obedience to Catholic tradition, which resolves itself into simoniacal imitation of the most modern observances of the Roman Church.—Pall Mall Gazette.

PYROTECHNIC RHETORIC.

Rev. Joseph Cook, a week ago, in the prelude to his Monday lecture, went off in one of his worst spasms of lurid oburgation, the occasion being the late Liberal League session at Syracuse, N.Y., when that body divided on the question of demanding the repeal of the congressional law pertaining to the use of the mail for the dissemination of improper literature. Every intelligent reader knows that the mission of the Liberal League is to bring about an entire separation of Church and State,—in other words, to allow religion or theology to stand on its own merits, while government concerns itself solely with the political or secular affairs of the people. It is almost as well known that gross abuses to individuals and property have come through Mr. Anthony Comstock's interpretation of what is improper literature,—in the suppression of such as he has deemed obnoxious, he being aided by the provisions of the law in question. It is not surprising, therefore, that many persons have thought the better way of getting rid of Comstock—who, we must confess, sometimes seems hardly to know the difference between a work of art and an obscene figure—is to repeal the law under which he gets his authority to supervise the methods and morals of his fellow-citizens who have no purpose nor desire to minister to prurient gratification. The Liberal League, naturally, in the pursuit of its mission, would have its attention directed to this effort of Comstock to give his operations under the civil law the bias of his denominational prejudices. The question of the circulation of obscenity is a wholly different one, as we understand it, from that of the privilege of a single individual to pronounce upon the turpitude of a publisher or author. While Comstock is not powerful enough to convict and punish, he is, unfortunately, powerful enough to cause to be arrested and annoyed, as in the case of a lady physiologist in New York, some very worthy people.

Joseph Cook, knowing these things as well as anybody of equal intelligence, in his "prelude" last week, arraigns the free religionists as the sympathizers with obscenity and lewdness! He knows that the Free Religious Association has no more connection with the Liberal League than the American Missionary Association has with the Republican party, though, as is most probable, members of the one belong to the other. In their corporate capacity and particular work they are as dissimilar as any two independent organizations. He knows, too, as well as anybody, that the free-religious movement has for its primal object the discovery and acceptance of moral truths, in whatever system of religion and from whatever people. It is the welcoming of all lofty thought and high endeavor, in whatever age and from whatever faith, as the correlative and adjunct of Christianity. And he knows that men like Rev. Messrs. Bartol, Dudley, Savage, Blsbee, and Hinckley, in our community, Rev. Messrs. Frothingham, Chadwick, Longfellow, and Johnson, in other localities, are sympathetic with the free-religious movement,—men who have been as pronounced against all vileness and social degradation as any men in the land,—who have preached and spoken against free love and all its abominations more often and more effectively than any other similar number of clergymen of any name. And yet, for the purpose of casting reproach upon these excellent teachers, this pretentious high moral lecturer does not hesitate to bear false witness against them by throwing out the impression, repeated over and over again, that they are in sympathy with the opponents of Comstock, in favor of the repeal of the obscenity law, and part and parcel with all that is lewd and loose in our social state! We give his intelligent hearers the credit of knowing that Mr. Cook was alandering his betters, and that they will soon come to the conclusion that such attacks as this will not advance the cause for which the "Monday lectureship" was instituted.—Boston Commonwealth, Nov. 30.

SINAI OR SODOM?

EDITOR COMMONWEALTH:—

Mr. Parker Pillsbury, in common with many others who justify the publication and free circulation of a book known by the silly title, Cupid's Yokes, seems to think, in proving that passages containing obscene words may be found in the Hebrew Bible, he has also proven that the obscene ideas, couched in unobjectionable language, which the above-named book teaches, are therefore meritorious and worthy of endorsement. A singular position this for a class of people noted for their contempt of the Bible, for their efforts to prevent its being read in the schools, and for their desire to cast upon it all manner of obloquy, and lay at its door all the unrighteousness of this and past ages! "Obscenity in the book we despise justifies obscenity in the book we approve" is their cry. "The Bible is obscene, therefore Cupid's Yokes is right in its obscenity," argues Mr. Pillsbury, a most renowned and sturdy anti-biblicist. Wherein does this differ from the simple-hearted deacon of a generation past who stubbornly believed the whale swallowed Jonah, for no better reason than "because the Bible says so"? In nothing that we can see, save that the deacon was sincere in his Bible faith, while these defenders of demoralizing doctrines use it only as a spiteful hit at those who, however bigoted and unenlightened they may have been, were, and are ever found to be, as a majority, the champions of home and chastity.

The enlightened respecters of bibles expect that the Bible of this age, however crude it may appear to the world two thousand years hence, will yet be something vastly in advance, both in diction and sentiment, of those of the ancient Hindus or Hebrews; but alas for such expectations, if Cupid's Yokes chance to be among the chronicles that find their way down to the coming centuries! Should this impossibility occur, the student of that distant future, comparing its loose and feeble rhetoric, its still looser and feebler tone, with the confident vigor of the healthy "Thus saith the Lord" of the dim-vested Hebrew, will surely conclude that the march of the ages was not progressive from Hebrew to Heywood. "Thou shalt not commit adultery," said the Hebrew; and, to make the command impressive to the world's childhood, he thundered it from Sinai, and graved it on tablets of stone, and made it the command of Jehovah. There was no doubt about it in the Hebrew mind forever after. "Beecher had an undoubted natural right to commit adultery," says Heywood. "No obscenity in that!" cries Mr. Pillsbury. If not, then where in the world is obscenity? Clean words may convey the foulest ideas, just as ideas high and noble may be expressed in language coarse and rude and vulgar; but it is the idea that is of consequence. Mr. Pillsbury's extracts from the Bible, made for the express purpose of proving its obscenity, do indeed prove that the letter of a people two thousand years ago was sometimes obscene; but the spirit is of stern, uncompromising personal purity and fidelity to home. Its teachings are monogamic, though some of its best men did not obey them. In this they did not differ greatly from many men of the present who yet believe with all their hearts in those same stern old principles, but find themselves too weak or wicked to obey them. The scarlet woman of the old prophet, whose history furnishes some obscene words for Mr. Pillsbury, yet suffered a terrible punishment for practising lawless abominations which Mr. Heywood advocates; and all who observe know that the prophet's picture is as true for to-day as for his time, though our century would tell it in different language, if, indeed, it has not become too weak and indifferent to tell it at all. The punishment of — and — curses the world to-day in the form of their children, who are practising all manner of lawlessness and license, and clamoring that it may be made lawful and considered respectable.

"Man is measured by his power of self-control," said a little lady; and 'tis just as much his duty and just as much to his benefit to control his physical appetites as to hold his temper in check; for one who pleads that he cannot, the "Thou shalt" of the law is as necessary and as wholesome as it was in days of old. "Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's wife," thundered cloudy Sinai, and, as a command of Jehovah that must be obeyed, it was effective. Let our modern law-givers be as uncompromising, and covetousness of that nature will speedily resolve itself into a governable temptation, and the vacillating Benedict will begin to discover the attractions of his own wife. Cupid's yokes will become easier and his burdens so light that the numbers who wish to assume them will not greatly diminish. There is a world of power for good in the old "Thou shalt," as in the positive must or must not of parents in earlier days. "John, you must not go fishing to-day!" said the dignified mother—not mamma—of a half-century ago,—tone, voice, expression, all indicating that she expected, and, if necessary, should enforce, obedience. With that "must" behind him, John found that his will was strong enough to resist the temptation to go; he was made to feel that going would be worse for him than not going, and thus early learned the useful lesson of obedience, and also his own ability to resist inclination; and he came into manhood with tried and developed powers for usefulness. Too often the modern mamma's word is a weak, "I would not go, Johnny;" the result of which is the wilful boy goes, and gets cold or something worse; but, worst of all, he gets no discipline, comes to manhood with no knowledge of self-denial or the beauty and power acquired in resisting temptation, enters life, and is defeated by himself. It were better for most children if parents retained more of the old Jehovah.

Mr. Heywood claims that his book imparts "physiological information." Granting that it does, we still cannot see any advantage to be derived from it beyond what is furnished by standard medical works. High scientific authority endorses the teachings of these books, and surely a trivial work like this in question can add nothing to them. Every country hamlet has its physician; let him or her, by lectures more or less public, as may be desired, instruct the people as far as it is possible to do so. And as for the license doctrines, their advocates, placed at hard physical labor, will find their brains less fertile in the evolution of ideas suited only to their own desires.—Earnest, in the Commonwealth, Dec. 7.

A CHRISTIAN PERVERT TO BUDDHA.

A correspondent, writing under date of the 15th July, says: "The great event of the year, so far, in Siam, has been the conversion to Buddhism of a European Christian, and his formal installation into the priesthood, which took place on the 8th inst. I forbear to give his name, for the simple reason that the man's vanity is so great that he would be delighted to hear that his name was trumpeted abroad, even affixed to so questionable a transaction as this. Not only that, but having renounced the sacrament of his baptism, I doubt whether he is entitled to any of the relics of his once Christianity, even of so trifling a nature as a name. Suffice it to say, that in country he is an Austrian, and in sect was a Roman Catholic. He was usually designated among the Siamese, Phra Kowtow, a name and title given him in mockery for his servile predilections. One could have understood the motives for this conversion better, had this man been a low-class, ignorant person, only anxious to find favor in the eyes of the Siamese for monetary purposes; but on the contrary, he is a superb scholar, a man of rare attainments in the various walks of science, literature, and art; a perfect draughtsman, an accomplished linguist, and a thorough scientist; with powers of memory and acquisition so strong that he picked up the Siamese language in a very few months, although it is notoriously the most difficult of all the Eastern tongues, not even excepting the Chinese. His avowed object, to his friends, is to obtain a more thorough knowledge of the Ball language, which can only be obtained in the higher grades of the priesthood. That some motive of this kind, rather than a devout conviction of the deity of Buddha, influenced his course, was so strongly suspected by the principal members of the hierarchy that for a long time he was unable to obtain admittance to a temple, until the king took compassion on him, and allowed him to pass his novitiate in his own magnificent place of worship, situated in the palace grounds. On the 8th inst. the installation took place, with even more than the usual ceremonies and barbaric grandeur. The procession was a most magnificent one, and the bands of music belonging to both kings filled the streets with music during the entire day and night. All Siam flocked to witness the ceremony,—that is, native Siam; the foreigners kept rigidly away, disgusted and enraged that a Christian could be found who was willing to abjure his God and his Savior to take up the tenets of heathenism. During the four years for which he remains secluded from the world, it is to be hoped that reflection may induce repentance.—China Mail.

WHY THE JEWS REJECT CHRIST.

A correspondent writes: "Will you please state clearly and concisely why the Jews do not believe that Christ was the Messiah?" We will. The Jews reject the belief in Christ as the Messiah because his coming did not fulfil the prophecies of the Bible in regard to the real Messiah; because those prophecies have not since been fulfilled; because of the important events that were to accompany the coming of Messiah, not one has come to pass.

1. The promised Messiah was to be a descendant of the royal house of David: Jesus was only related to David through Joseph, who did not know Mary until after the birth of the child (Matthew 1.). The New Testament does not claim that Mary was descended from David.

2. The promised Messiah was to bring universal peace (Isaiah xi., 3; Ezekiel xxxiv., 25). Jesus said (Matthew x., 34): "Think not I am come to bring peace; I came not to bring peace, but the sword."

3. The promised Messiah was to receive the homage of all nations and all rulers (Daniel vii., 27; Zechariah ix., 10). Jesus said (Matthew xx., 28) that he "came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many." Jesus never received the homage of all nations.

4. The coming of the Messiah was to be followed by the abolition of all empires, and the foundation of one great kingdom (Daniel ii., 44). All empires have not been abolished.

5. The advent of Messiah was to be followed by the conversion of the whole world to the religion of Israel (Zechariah vii., 23). The whole world has not yet been converted to the religion of Israel.

There are many other prophecies which were to be fulfilled prior to, or immediately after, the advent of the Messiah, and which are still unfulfilled. Among them are the following:—

I. The ingathering of the Ten Tribes and their union with Juda and Benjamin under the dominion of one king of the house of Judah (Ezekiel xxxvii., 16).

II. The rise of Gog and Magog and their incursions into the territory of Israel (Ezekiel xxxvii. and xxxix., and Zechariah xiv., 12).

III. The mount of Olives shall be rent asunder (Zechariah xiv., 4).

IV. The river of Egypt shall be divided and dried up prior to the gathering of the exiles of Judah (Isaiah xi., 15, 16).

V. Sin shall no longer prevail (Deuteronomy xxx., 6).

VI. Ancient troubles and sorrows shall cease forever (Isaiah lxx., 16).

VII. The divine presence (Shechinah) shall be restored (Ezekiel xxxvii., 26, 27, 28).

VIII. The prophet Elijah will appear before the coming of that "great and awful day" (Malachi).

IX. The future temple will be rebuilt according to the design predetermined by the Almighty (Ezekiel xl.).

X. The ancient division of the Holy Land will be resumed (Ezekiel xlii., 13).

XI. The resurrection of the dead will take place.

When these prophecies are fulfilled, the Jews will believe that Messiah has come. They will not believe that Messiah has come until God's promises have been fulfilled, "for God is not a man that he should lie, or the son of man that he should repent; but what he says he will do, and what he speaks he will confirm" (Numbers xxiii., 19).—Reformer and Jewish Times, Dec. 6.

Poetry.

QUESTION AND ANSWER.

- A.—What is the good and what is the bad?
Where is the perfectly true?
What is the end you live for, my lad?
And what, may I ask you, are you?
Unproven, I fear, is your heaven above;
Life is but labor and sorrow;
Then why should we hope, and why should we love,
And why should we care for the morrow?
- B.—There may be a fight worth fighting, my friend,
Though victory there be none;
And though no haven be ours at the end,
Still we may steer straight on.
And though nothing be good and nothing be bad
And nothing be true to the letter,
Yet a good many things are worse, my lad,
And one or two things are better.

—London Spectator.

PRENEZ GARDE.

BY ELIZUR WRIGHT.

On a Mutual web there sits a great spider,
A-weaving it higher and deeper and wider.
In this planet of lotteries nothing is more fine;
No matter how soon you embark in your corpin,
There's money in there for your widder and orphan.
If you enter that web, mind what you're about;
Write "no recourse" on your "draft," sir, in any event,
Or you'll miss of his present of thirty per cent.
No recourse for yourself, should you wish to get out,—
I tell you, it's not very easy describing
The arts of that spider in "freezing" and bribing.

CASH RECEIPTS.

N.B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING DECEMBER 14.

Subscription News Co., $2.18; Hon. J. M. Forbes, $3.20; Mrs. W. A. Stebbins, $3.20; A. McVean, $1; Dr. G. W. Topping, $3.20; Wm. Hill, $4; Mrs. C. B. Sherman, $1.50; T. H. Everts, $1; Mrs. A. M. Wright, $3.20; Arch McArthur, $6.40; F. A. Hinckley, $2.18; J. E. Jester, 15 cents; G. Zimmerman, $3.20; C. M. Langren, $3.20; Jno. G. Jenkins, $1; E. G. Thomas, $1; C. F. Gard, $3.20; A. W. Bemis, $1; Jere Brookway, $3.20; Henry Powers, $3.20; Noyes, Snow & Co., $2.70; L. C. Child, $4.40.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N.B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

BOSTON, DEC. 19, 1878.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 25 Monroe Street: J. T. FRY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. EDMUND CARY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIZUR WRIGHT, C. D. B. MILLS, W. D. LE SUEUR, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, JAMES E. OLIVER, Editorial Contributors.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The masterly, statesmanlike, and eloquent address of Judge Hurlbut on "The Liberty of Printing," proving unanswerably the constitutional right of Congress to prohibit the circulation of obscene literature through the mails, and demonstrating to the entire satisfaction of all who will listen to reason that the postal law of 1873 should be amended, but not repealed, has been printed for cheap distribution in the form of an eight-page tract, and can now be had at this office. No better service to the liberal cause at present can be rendered than by circulating everywhere this wise, weighty, and noble plea for private liberty and public morality combined. Price, single copies, 5 cents; five copies, 10 cents; fifteen copies, 25 cents; forty copies, 50 cents; one hundred copies, $1.00.

Erratum.—On page 5, second column, twenty-fourth line, the words "authority is desired" should be corrected to read "authority is derived." This is the only typographical error noticed by the author, and it is of sufficient importance to the main argument to be thus publicly pointed out.

THE NEW YORK Times of October 29 says: "In a work which Rev. Mgr. De Haerne, of the English College of Bruges, has just had published, showing the progress of Catholicism among people of Anglo-Saxon origin, some highly interesting statistics are given of the extension of the Roman Catholic Church in the United States. According to this authority, when the first Catholic Bishopric was established in this country, that is, at Baltimore, in the year 1790, there were only thirty thousand Catholics in a total population of more than three millions. In other words, the ratio of Catholics was as one to one hundred. During the next fifty years a great change took place, and the Catholic population, from thirty thousand advanced to about one million five hundred thousand, who represented one-eleventh of all the inhabitants. Within the period ending with the year 1876, the gain was also very great, though, of course, not so rapid proportionately as during the first half century of our national life. The number of American Roman Catholics in this last year is set down at six million five hundred thousand, or little less than one-sixth of the entire population of the country. The wealth, influence, and dignity of the Church, as represented by its buildings and lands, and by its priests, have been augmented with even greater rapidity than its worshippers; for in 1790 there were but thirty-four priests and hardly a score of church edifices, while in 1876 there were five thousand three hundred and eighty-eight clergymen, who ministered in eight thousand seven hundred and fifty-seven churches and mission stations. It is very easy for those who wish to draw the conclusion from these figures that the time is approaching when a numerical majority of the inhabitants of this country will be Roman Catholics, and when, as a natural result, the observance of that religion will be enforced by the State; but those whose fears or whose hopes lead them to reason in this way, overlook many important factors. The growth of Catholicism in the country is largely due to Irish immigration. Since the beginning of this century nearly four million Irish immigrants have landed on our shores, who have been, with few exceptions, Roman Catholics, and to this number should be added not less than one million German Catholics. The religious accessions that have been made outside of these and of their immediate descendants have not been very large."

F. R. A. CONVENTION.

A Convention of the Free Religious Association will be held in Providence, R.I., on Thursday afternoon and evening, the 10th inst. The recent more complete organization of the local Free Religious Society in Providence gives a special interest to this meeting. Prof. Adler, the new president of the Association, will preside, and will speak at length at the evening session. Other speakers prominent in the free religious movement will be present. Further particulars as to hall and speakers will be given in the Providence papers.

WM. J. POTTER,
Sec'y F. R. A.

THE GROWTH OF A GREAT NATION.

The speech of Mr. Blaine in the United States Senate on the eleventh of December, in support of his resolution of inquiry into "the crimes against a free ballot" in the recent elections at the South, brings out into full view of the American people certain fundamental necessities of their national development. As to its bearings on the Republican or Democratic party, we have nothing to say of the speech; nor do we intend to say much of it in any relation. But since it shows how the violent suppression of the rights of colored voters in the Southern States has practically operated to curtail the rights of white voters in the Northern States, and how it will within ninety days throw the whole legislative power of the government into the hands of a real minority of the people, it raises the vital question: shall the United States afford "national protection to national citizens," and thereby justify its claim to their supreme allegiance, or shall it continue to evade this duty and suffer republican government to fall gradually into contempt and extinction?

The perpetuity of our nationality itself is at stake in this issue. No government in a free nation can exist except through the love and respect of its citizens; and, to win these, it must be worthy of them. It cannot be worthy of them, unless it acknowledges its own obligations as completely as it asserts its own authority. Since the primary duty of every government is to afford protection to the equal rights of all its individual citizens, the correlative duty on the part of the latter is to uphold the government in its lawful authority and accord to it their supreme allegiance, as against all other human powers. These two duties are dependent on each other; they are the obverse and reverse of the same moral fact. Viewed from the side of the government, protection is a duty towards the citizen and allegiance from him a right; viewed from the side of the citizen, allegiance is a duty towards the government and protection from it a right. Every nation is strong in which these reciprocal rights and duties are fully observed, because in such a nation the just moral equilibrium between the individual and society is well maintained, and all the conservative forces of nature conspire to give it permanence. Conversely, every nation is weak in which this balance of rights and duties is not well maintained; the seeds of national disintegration are planted and must produce at last their noxious harvest. This is not mere theorizing; it is the result of human experience. Nothing but external violence can overthrow a nation in which this internal moral harmony obtains, and nothing can perpetuate a nation in which it fails to obtain.

It is evident, then, that national growth and strength depend ultimately on other causes than mere material prosperity. In the long run, the laws of the individual human intellect are the laws of collective human history. That is the truth obscurely enunciated in the well-known phrase, the "logic of events." He is no deep thinker who despises theories, ideas, principles, and relies on mere increase of population, territory, and wealth, as the basis and guarantee of national prosperity,—who considers government a mere device by which the affairs of the nation can be done on "business principles," without reference to any higher morality than the code which ignores all save expediency and the demands of human selfishness. Far more than the Church, which builds upon something it rates higher than what it deprecates as "mere morality," the State is a moral institution; in fact, it is the greatest moral institution ever founded by man, for it rests on nothing else than man's moral nature. Scientific ethics find that all moral relations are essentially social relations, and that morality is the fundamental law, established by nature itself, of all human society. The horoscope of a nation, therefore, may be surely cast from the kind of moral character expressed by its political constitution. Woe to that nation which thinks lightly of the duties it owes to its citizens, and imagines that governments are not bound by moral laws! The irrepealable law of justice will sooner or later grind it to powder, if it fails to establish that equilibrium of allegiance and protection which is the essential end of all government. That the United States have not as yet established this equilibrium is painfully evident to every large-minded and patriotic citizen. The nation is still in an embryonic stage. History explains the inchoate character of its nationality by the fact that it was originally a mere confederacy of States, each jealous of its individual sovereignty. The extreme theory of "State rights" has operated, and still operates, to retard that complete political unification without which no true national existence is possible. Nevertheless, the steady and relentless tendency is towards it. The civil war, destroying the extreme "State rights" theory as an active political force, produced a great advance towards a true national union; but the lurking influence of that theory still betrays itself in many ways.

The course of American history, and the evident trend of American destiny, can only be understood in the light of the fact that, as a nation, the United States are still in the process of evolution. Beginning as a mere military alliance of thirteen petty nationalities, it is evidently growing into one complete nationality, of which the political constitution may be expressed by the following formula: Individual self-government for individual purposes—Town government for town purposes—State government for State purposes—National government for national purposes.

In this perfectly natural and harmonious system of successive aggregations, dominated by the organic unity of the whole body politic, and by the fundamental law of the correlative duties of protection and allegiance as above explained, the United States will at last attain a matured national character, and exhibit a political structure analogous to the structure of all organized bodies, as revealed by science. In such a system, the individual will be wholly free in all that concerns himself alone, and only restrained of his freedom when he attempts to encroach on the equal individualities of others. But, as a citizen, he will hold various relations, standing, as it were, at the centre of several concentric circles. As a citizen of the town, he will owe subordinate allegiance to it in return for its municipal protection; as a citizen of the State, he will owe subordinate allegiance to it in return for its State protection; as a citizen of the United States, he will owe its supreme allegiance in return for its national protection. Such a system of political relationships is exceedingly simple, yet in accordance with the profoundest scientific truth; and in it will be found the only stable equilibrium which can be established between society and its multitudinous constituent individuals. Gradual approximation to this political constitution is, unless defeated by untoward influences, the natural and evident pathway of the United States to the position of a matured, powerful, just, and happy nation.

Indications of this national progress are often bewailed by superficial thinkers because they are thoroughly misunderstood. Such minds stickle for obsolete, narrow, and jealous constructions of the national Constitution, fearing "Federal tyranny" and the destruction of "State rights." The objections to the essential principle of the postal law of 1878, so far as based on its pretended "unconstitutionality," are of this petty character. Undoubtedly we shall hear equally timorous and contracted notions urged against the proposed national quarantine for the protection of the whole country against yellow fever and other contagious diseases, as mentioned in the New York Independent of December 12:—

"A bill will be submitted to Congress for the establishment of a national quarantine against yellow fever. There would be no necessity for such a federal law if State legislatures would do their duty; but their failure adequately to act, especially at the South, makes the question one of national importance. There can be no doubt of the power of Congress to pass such a bill, under its general power to regulate commerce."

Who can doubt that pathetic shrieks will be soon heard against such a tyrannical stretch of Congressional authority? The idea of deducing a power to establish a national quarantine from a mere power to "regulate commerce"! Here we have "implied powers" with a vengeance, and of course a new "Federal tyranny" panic will sweep over the land. If the quarantine shall be established, and it interferes with somebody's opportunities of making money out of the general distress of a pestilence, we shall see a new "repeal" movement started, all out of professed veneration for the Constitution. Such occasional hysterics are to be expected; but it is not to be expected that sensible people will therefore go into convulsions. All that need be said is that, if a practical necessity for a national quarantine shall be proved to exist, such a quarantine will be established by Congress; and the people's liberties will suffer no detriment, even if the Supreme Court should sanction the law by another common-sense construction of the Constitution.

It is easy to forget that no written Constitution can ever be final. Exigencies bring their own laws, and the forefathers' half-vision is supplemented by the children's experience. The dread of "concentration," "consolidated government," etc., may act as a useful brake on progress unduly accelerated; but that the United States will grow into a matured and completed nation, with all the recognized rights, powers, and obligations of sovereign nationality, we are glad indeed to believe. It will be a growth to be rejoiced over by every broad-minded and philosophic liberal; for it will mean only the better understanding and more efficient protection of individual liberties.

The three principles of the Rochester platform, in all their depth and breadth and height, are little appreciated to-day, it may be; but THE INDEX would have paid for itself fifty times over, if it had done nothing but launch that terse platform on the sea of political thought. It will not be forgotten; events will give it more and more prominence. In its two short years of useful life, the National Liberal League did enough to make its recent suicide a cause of everlasting regret to all liberals who comprehended and valued the interests of their own cause, and divined the future tremendous potency of such an organization to advance them. But, no matter by what party, the principles of the Rochester platform will yet be carried out in the fated evolution of the republic from a mere group of petty States into the greatest and strongest and justest nation of the earth.

SOCIAL SCIENCE.

John Stuart Mill prefaces his Principles of Political Economy with certain "Preliminary Remarks," intended to disabuse the minds of over-sanguine and somewhat superficial reformers, as to the peculiar province of that particular branch of science to which he proposed to invite their attention, and devoted the best energies of his life to elucidate.

"In every department of human affairs," wrote Mill, "practice long precedes science; systematic inquiry into the modes of action of the powers of Nature is the tardy product of a long course of efforts to use those powers for practical ends."

In the Sierra Nevada, after the discovery of gold in California had created settlements along the banks of the various water-courses, it was soon ascertained that it was of little or no use to send out surveyors for the purpose of discovering the easiest grades across the mountains, and the most practicable passes for travellers; all that was needed was to find the most plainly-trodden Indian trail, and to make the road conform to its devious windings; the experience of the American aborigines was seldom to be bettered by all the arts of civilized mankind, so far as the location of the shortest and easiest route between any two given points was concerned.

Thus it is, almost always, with most of the habits of humanity. Men fancy they have found "short cuts" to wealth or wisdom, to health or happiness; but there is no "royal road" to either. Conformity to the great natural laws, which are the same yesterday, to-day, and forever, is the only certain way to realize the aspirations entertained by the struggling, tolling millions, who are vainly striving to eat their cakes and have them too.

The ignis fatuus, which leads the weary wanderer farther and farther away from the village he seeks, is a fitting illustration of the communistic craze that has taken possession of the minds of certain classes in Europe and America; for the Nihilism of Russia and the—so-called—Socialism of Germany are synonymous with Communism, as expounded in America, and carried into its inevitable results in France. Communism is the enemy and end of modern civilization. The essential equality it proposes to establish between man and man is only possible in the barbaric eras. The very first step out of barbarism and toward civilization results in establishing inequality between men, based on their relative capacities of physical and mental power. The same law dominates mankind which governs the animal creation,—“the survival of the fittest,”—and whoever best adapts himself to his "environment" will inevitably distance all competitors, without regard to their unavailing protests. Whenever an individual, a family, or a race indicates the necessity of outside support, in order to perpetuate their existence, that individual, family, or race is doomed to final extinction. Nothing can save them except their own exertions. The price of continued existence, to most of us, is the power to work and to fight; to create the means of existence, and to protect them when created. Governmental assistance cannot save the laboring classes from the results of their own ignorance, folly, vice, and crime. At present, society is so formed that there is still a certain premium paid to the abstemious, industrious, and law-abiding among the proletarians; but the establishment of Communism, by forcing an equal division of the results of labor, would deprive these of the only stimulus to exertion, and, selfishness being the general rule, each would attempt to do as little as possible, while at the same time making inordinate demands upon the public or common fund.

The columns of THE INDEX have recently been enriched by the earnest, thoughtful, unselfish, and evidently sincere articles contributed by John Orris, Stephen Pearl Andrews, and Charles Ellershaw, each of whom in a different way perceives the necessity for improving the minds of men before seriously attempting to better their political condition; thus evidencing their having thought out the present problems of social science by a logical method to an assured conclusion, in marked contrast to the dogmatic assertions and crude assumptions of such would-be leaders of public opinion as Theron C. Leland, and some other contributors.

But, while confessing the value of speculative inquiry, and the formulation of new methods of thought, as the best if not the sole means to constant improvement in the condition of mankind, practical minds must still insist that means must always be proportioned to ends, and demand the proof that the existing millions of mankind possess the essential characteristics which should entitle them to the position claimed for them. The question resolves itself at once into a matter of fact. We must build with the material Nature has provided for us. System after system has been put upon its trial, Communism included, only to revert again to the "isolated family," as Mr. Orris terms it, as the primal unit of social evolution. He sees clearly that "the primordial cell determines the nature of every organic structure," and that "all of our anti-slavery, temperance, peace, moral reform, woman's rights, and labor-reform agitations, though prompted by right instinct, are but repetitions of the struggles of the giant with the hydra; for every head lopped off, a score or more hideous ones rise up." But he does not see that the "primordial cell" is just as much an unchangeable fact as its results are inevitable. The same law governed the creation of the "first or basic form of social selfishness" as obtained in all the subsequent steps. "Social selfishness" is only another name for "self-preservation,—the first law of Nature"! Herbert Spencer has elaborately demonstrated the absolute necessity of this same social selfishness to the perpetuation of the human race. The theory of utilitarianism takes its stand upon the same impregnable foundation. Hard as it appears to the altruistic reformer, Nature insists upon perpetuating types among mankind corresponding to the tiger and wolf, the hawk and vulture, the crocodile or deadly rattle-snake. So long as these forms persist, no amount of education can change their respective natures, and the struggle for existence among human beings will not be so unlike that of the animal creation. Homer divided mankind into the sheep and their shepherds, the dogs who guarded and the wolves who sought to exterminate the flock; and the parallel appears to hold as good to-day as in the earlier centuries; only the sheep are now insisting they are quite equal to protecting themselves against the wolves without the assistance of the dogs, and can also dispense with the overruling care and wise guidance of the shepherds. History, however, records how such experiments have always before terminated; nor is there adequate reason to doubt the same results will again ensue. If the accumulating wisdom of the centuries is to be derided and constantly set at naught, experience, at least, will demonstrate beyond the possibility of cavil the imperfection of weak humanity. The Spanish have as a familiar proverb,—“It is easier to wear shoes than to try to cover the world with leather.” And so it is easier to adapt ourselves to the environment than to create an environment that shall be more satisfactory. If every workingman would cease to worry himself about the wrongs inflicted upon society by the conspiracy of "Rings" of capitalists, and set about making himself independent of the aid of others' capital by the cultivation of the powers of his own mind and body, all would go well. A. W. K.

FRESH TESTIMONIES.

The testimony coming in to me, entirely unsolicited and indeed unexpected, from one portion of the country and another, confirms my impression, already strong, that the weight of the moral sentiment among liberals is preponderantly with us in the stand taken for protest at the late Congress in this city (Syracuse). It is to the lasting shame and reproach of liberalism generally in the land that it was absent, was caught napping, in that critical hour when such vital interests were exposed and at stake. That grave failure has already cost dear, and it will entail still heavier expense in time to come. But, if we will, all is not lost. The disaster may be partially retrieved, and liberalism may be saved from the reproach fast settling upon it. There are elements from which to gather the concentrated voice and utter the protest that shall be felt.

A gentleman in Lake City, Minn., a veteran friend of freedom, who in old age is still actively engaged in reform work, writes: "I am truly glad for the separation that took place at Syracuse. . . . The religious bigots would be in high glee if they could identify liberalism with obscenity. . . . I agree with Mr. Abbot that a man must have a right to advocate a wrong cause, provided he does it in chaste language. But it does not follow that we are to take him to our bosom on that account."

A lady of high culture and eminent worth in Mount Pleasant, Iowa, and a very active philanthropist, assures me of the deep interest that herself and friends have felt in the occurrences at the late Congress, and the issue that has been raised. She adds: "I scarcely need tell you that our sympathies are all with you and Mr. Abbot."

Another, a lady in Battle Creek, Mich., of not less exalted worth and royal character, a model woman, wife, mother, writes, speaking of herself and immediate friends: "We are unitedly in sympathy with yourself and Mr. Abbot on the vile-literature question. It is unaccountable to us how any right-minded person can possibly wish the repeal of the present laws in regard to it. . . . Almost any calamity would be preferable to having the young exposed to such an evil. They are always and everywhere in danger, guard them as carefully as we may; and it is passing strange that any one can be found to advocate for a moment any measure which will make the path to vice more easy."

A gentleman in Maple Rapids, Mich., who feels himself, evidently, with the National Liberal League of America, writes: "I am just commencing on a new campaign for the new year. . . . In addition to these two enterprises (soliciting subscribers for THE INDEX, and circulating petitions for the taxation of church property), I propose to do what little I can towards opening up work in Detroit, Pontiac, Fenton, Owosso, Ionia, and Grand Rapids."

What is wanted now is to concentrate, to give voice and united expression to this quiet but genuine and wholesome sentiment that, as I believe, exists widely through our country. A mission at this hour is devolved upon liberals second in importance, probably, to none that has ever been laid upon man. The fate or the fortune of liberalism and the cause of spiritual freedom, for the time being, at least, is largely in their hands.

It is my purpose soon to visit various States of the West, beginning with Ohio and Indiana, and taking Michigan, Illinois, Wisconsin, etc. Wherever there shall be liberals in any of those States who may wish to organize local Leagues, I will visit them and render such service as lies in my power, provided they shall communicate with me promptly, so that I may arrange accordingly; upon the sole condition that they meet the extra expense involved to me in the journey.

C. D. B. M.

ALEXANDRE DUMAS, the younger, was one day dining, in Marseilles, with Dr. Gistel, one of the most celebrated physicians in the country. "My dear friend," said Dumas' host after dinner, "they say that you improvise poetry most admirably. Pray, do me the honor to compose some trifle for my album." "Willingly," replied Dumas. Whereupon the album was brought, and the famous novelist began to write:—

"Since good Gistel sought this town,
O'er his healing hands to spread,
They've pulled the hospital quite down—"

"Flatterer!" murmured the doctor, delighted at this point. But Dumas continued:—

"And built two cemeteries instead."

Communications.

ÆSTHETIC SENTIMENTS OF PRIMITIVE MAN.

BY WILEY BRITTON.

NO. IV.

Having arrived at the conclusion that animals have an æsthetic sense, we may now speak of the æsthetic sense of the primitive human races as a fact unquestionable. How far we are justified in doing this will appear in the discussion upon which we are now about to enter. Though we know absolutely nothing of the languages of primitive human races, yet they have left us materials in the localities where they lived and passed their lives by which we are enabled to correctly interpret many of their habits, customs, sentiments, thoughts, and emotions. The light which psychology has thrown on the correlations between the mental phenomena of organisms and phenomena in their environments will enable us to use with confidence the materials left by primitive men in interpreting their thoughts, sentiments, and emotions.

Wherever man, at any stage of his intellectual development, has consciously and purposely made a mark that has survived the vicissitudes of time, we know that such mark represents a thought or a given action, or a combination of thoughts and actions; and, in many instances, we can interpret the nature of the thought or action it represents or stands for. If we pick up and examine a flint weapon, such as an arrow-point, a spear, or lance-head, we can feel no doubt but that the savage, while giving it its peculiar shape, had thoughts in his mind of the use to which it would be applied, such as in securing game, attacking enemies, or defending himself against enemies. And, in contemplating the use of either of these weapons, we may believe that the owner must have occasionally had such slight emotions as accompany thoughts of struggling with an enemy, or bringing down prey by a successful shot of an arrow or throw of the spear. The fluctuating thoughts of success and disappointment in the use of his weapons must also have lighted up and clouded his expression, in the same way that these thoughts produce in us sunny or cloudy expressions. And the thoughts and emotions excited by a new weapon intended to be used in attacking or defending himself against a powerful animal at close quarters must have been different from thoughts and emotions aroused by a new weapon, as a light arrow-point, intended to be used in killing birds and small animals. Hence it seems clear that no historical account of the thoughts and expressions of the savage while making or contemplating the use of one of these flint weapons would appear more reliable to our minds than the account which the weapon itself implies. Besides showing the purpose for which it was intended to be used, it also shows something of the quantitative effectiveness with which it might be used; as for instance, a sharp-pointed arrow or spear of a particular shape shows it would be more effective in the chase than a blunt-pointed one of a more clumsy or less perfect shape. And most of these flint weapons which were used in war and in the chase indicate that the savage must have had ideas of form and finish distinct from ideas of utility in making them. Constantly carrying several arrow-points in his quiver, it seems quite likely that slight differences in their shape and workmanship would be observed by him independent of utility; and, if those most attractive to his eye were as good in the chase as the less attractive ones, they would be most sought of the weapon maker. Probably the earliest differentiation of a specialized social function out of the homogeneous condition of every primitive society was that of weapon manufacturer. The uniformity in shape and workmanship displayed by the arrow-points, spear, and lance-heads, celts, skinning-knives, etc., of any given locality, show very conclusively that each of these weapons and implements was not made by different individuals. At some period of the stone age, not only among the aborigines of this country, but in most every country where much attention has been given to the study of the ethnology of its primitive races, unmistakable evidence is found that there existed in perhaps every social aggregate the specialized function of weapon manufacturer. The stone anvils found in so many localities by antiquaries, surrounded by flakes or chips of flint or stone, and partly finished, and broken pieces of weapons and implements, show as conclusively the existence of the weapon manufacturer during the stone age as the forge, tongs, hammers, scraps of iron, rusty pieces of tools and domestic implements, on the site of some ancient blacksmith shop, speak of the existence of the blacksmith during the iron age. Between the most primitive type and the most developed type of arrow-points there is a wide difference in both form and workmanship, as may be seen by examining the specimens in the cabinets of any tolerably full ethnological collection of relics of primitive races. And, contrasting these two types, we know that the most developed type could have never been reached without the weapon makers and their customers, generation after generation, had appreciated all the intermediate shades of difference. If the arrow-points which the weapon manufacturer made to barter or exchange for food, or skins for clothing, were slightly different in form and workmanship, as they must have been, we have presented a constant and practical method of determining the æsthetic development, as relates to weapons, of both manufacturer and customer. For if no one would give more for a good-formed and well-finished point than for one of inferior form and finish, then it is clear that arrow-points of inferior form and workmanship would continue to be produced, for less labor would be required to make them. But if those of superior form and workmanship were constantly selected, and exchanged for more food and clothing than the inferior ones, then it is plain there would be a sufficient stimulus for the weapon manufacturer to improve upon his old patterns, in both form and workmanship. From another point of view it may be shown that the tendency must have constantly been to select the best and most perfect weapon points; for a man whose judgment did not lead him to distinguish a superior from an inferior point would, other things equal, be less successful in the chase and in war than a man who always selected the best and most perfect arrow-points. A man apt in the use of a somewhat inferior weapon might successfully compete in the chase and in war with a man having a superior weapon, but unskilled in its use. Such instances, however, must have been of rare occurrence among primitive men, and in the slow progress which was made in the improvement and use of flint weapons and implements during the stone age could have had scarcely a perceptible influence, one way or other. An æsthetic sense that appreciated perfection in form and finish was not probably often dissociated from that general intelligence which appreciated the utility of an object and guided the hands in manipulatory skill.

It may also be observed that there are indications that use and beauty are so often correlated in primitive weapons and implements, as well as in many of our own industrial appliances, that we cannot always decide with certainty whether ideas of beauty or ideas of utility predominated in the mind of the maker while giving a particular shape and finish to a particular weapon or implement. There are many reasons for believing, too, that conceptions of beauty and conceptions of utility, in primitive times as now, frequently acted and reacted on each other in such a manner as to cause the part passu development of each. If the manufacturer of a given weapon saw that its more successful use required it to be of a slightly different form from, and worked down to finer outlines than the weapons he had usually made or observed; and if this slightly different form and these finer outlines of the weapon produced in him a more marked pleasurable state of consciousness than the weapons he had previously seen, used, or made, we can understand how more developed conceptions of utility may have tended to develop higher ideals of form and finish. That a good-shaped, well-finished weapon, domestic tool, or implement, manufactured with a view to its being used for a special purpose, is more convenient and effective than a ruder and less perfect weapon, tool, or implement, made with a view to its being used for the same purpose, there can be no reasonable doubt. In every weapon, domestic tool, or implement, there must be a maximum and minimum degree of perfection in form, size, and finish, which affects its utility in a greater or less degree. And the true æsthetic sense in these matters consists in appreciating the size, form, and finish best adapted to perform the particular work for which the thing is required. An arrow-point as large as a spear or lance-head, though well-formed, and exhibiting skilled workmanship, would hardly appear more attractive to the savage than to ourselves, if attached to an ordinary arrow-shaft, and used by a medium-sized man. But, with primitive men in the manufacture of their weapons and domestic implements, size of a weapon or implement was an attribute concerning which their judgment was rarely at fault to any marked extent, probably not to a perceptibly greater extent than among civilized men. The flint weapon points and the stone implements and tools used for domestic purposes, from all parts of the world, bear unmistakable evidence that the æsthetic development as well as the intellectual development of the primitive mind during the stone age, taking into account its possible limits of development during this age, was very great. Archaeologists describe the earliest of these flint weapons and domestic implements of primitive man, that is, those found buried deepest in the earth, as exceedingly rude and imperfect as contrasted with those of more recent date,—that is, those found upon and near the surface of the earth.

CHARLES SUMNER.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

In your paper of Oct. 17, I notice a renewal by Senator Thurman of the oft repeated charge, that Charles Sumner was deficient in political sagacity. It is there stated that "his colleague, Henry Wilson, excelled him in that sort of wisdom a hundred times over." Undoubtedly Henry Wilson was a far more available worker for the success of a party than Mr. Sumner was. Whatever question was proposed to Mr. Sumner, he straightway saw the bearings which that question had on universal principles of justice and freedom, and he followed wheresoever those principles led, without looking to the right hand or the left. If it was proposed temporarily to set aside a principle for what seemed essential to the present success of a party, he uniformly refused to deviate from the straight path. Under no circumstances whatever would he compromise a principle.

It was not so with Henry Wilson. In pledging himself to the native American party, I think he compromised an important republican principle. When it was proposed to admit Colorado into the Union, Mr. Sumner refused to vote for it, because the word "white" in her Constitution would cause an inequality of civil rights between white and colored citizens. Mr. Wilson voted for it, because the admission of Colorado was artfully linked together with the Bill for the Registration of Votes in New York; and he deemed the passage of the Registration Bill essential to the success of the Republican Party in an impending election. On that plea, he strongly urged his colleague to vote for the admission of Colorado. But then, as always, Mr. Sumner refused to "give up to party what was meant for mankind." His party, of course, denounced him as "impracticable," and praised Mr. Wilson for "political sagacity."

But if by statesmanship we mean ability to promote and secure the welfare of nations, is not a clear perception of universal moral principles, and unswerving loyalty thereto, a larger and wiser kind of statesmanship than skillful moves in a political game? No organization ever equalled the statesmanship manifested by the Catholic Church in its efforts to establish that church as a power on earth; but, in pursuit of that object, the sacred principle of individual freedom in matters of reason and conscience was violated; and we all know what has been the effect on the progress of mankind. The formation of our government furnishes us with a similar lesson. The Declaration of Independence was a fearless annunciation of great principles. But when the Constitution was formed, political sagacity took the place of moral inspiration. Men did not say, It is safe to follow these principles, because they are eternally true; they said, If we attempt to carry out these principles, some of the States will be offended, and without their help we shall not be able to establish our government. In this way slavery was introduced into the Constitution under a veil; and that diseased body spread a contagion which nearly destroyed the life of the nation.

I believe that a compromise of principle, viewed merely as a matter of expediency, is always short-sighted policy. Strict adherence to eternal principles of justice and freedom is the surest basis for the true prosperity of individuals and States. Compromise of a principle may seem to bring success for a time, as was the case with the formation of our government; but sooner or later the penalty comes. Political sagacity usually fails to foresee this. "Honesty is the best policy, but policy without honesty never finds that out."

Mr. Wilson was a sincere, earnest, and able advocate of the principles of justice and freedom; but the structure of his mind was well adapted to the formation of a party leader, and the ambition to become so sometimes proved a snare.

With Charles Sumner, the Republican Party was merely a means, never an end. As an instrument to advance great principles he rejoiced in it, and aided it with Herculean vigor and persistence; but the moment its policy threatened to interfere with the progress of great principles, he didn't care what became of the party. Hence, he was never popular with his party. Yet most of the measures from which the Republican Party derived its life and power originated with Charles Sumner. They were wont to pronounce him "impracticable" and "visionary." They generally hesitated to follow his lead, till the pressure of events compelled them to do so. He was the first to advocate emancipation as a war measure, in which he was not generally sustained by the Republican press. He was the first to urge the arming of the blacks; the first to claim suffrage for the colored race; and the first to take advantage of the absence of rebels to obtain a repeal of the Fugitive Slave Law. He was the first to demand, as "irreversible guarantees," that the unity of the Republic should be inviolate; that whites and blacks should be equal before the law; that the rebel debt should be abjured; and that education should be universal.

If undeviating adherence to great principles renders a man so clear-sighted as to the measures best adapted to advance those principles, is he not, in the largest sense of the word, a statesman?

L. MARIA CHILD.

[For one, we unqualifiedly answer yes.—ED.]

SCIENTIFIC SPIRITUALISM.

EDITOR INDEX:—

You have at different times printed able and interesting articles bearing on the subject of a future life. Evidently the kindly writers thereof desired to comfort us and themselves. But, while admiring their graceful and pleasing language, we cannot avoid a sense of disappointment that none of them offer anything more substantial than a "solemn hope." Hope is excellent; but even that buoyant quality may fade away unless based on something known. Our anxious hearts cannot be wholly quieted by the assumption of priests or the solemn hope of culture; we are impelled to ask if Nature may not furnish us some facts on which a reasonable hypothesis for immortal life may be founded. If Professor Fiske is correct in the conclusion of his article entitled, "A Crumb for the Modern Symposium," such an interrogation is worse than useless. He is amiable, and allows that science has not disproved immortality; but even our "solemn hope" is disturbed by his positive assertion that she never can furnish any proof in its favor! The reason given for this assertion is that science cannot reach mind that is "apart from matter," nor soul "dissociated from body"; which is, a good, sound reason. But why assume that mind in a future state is separated from matter and soul dissociated from body? As no man has ever found a suspicion of evidence that mind can exist apart from matter, why consider such a fancy? It is mere dogma, extracted from the remains of an old, burst, metaphysical balloon. It should be admitted at once that, if mind must be apart from matter in order to be immortal, there can be no future existence. In that case, solemn hope itself is an idle delusion. I have my opinion of that sort of scientists who discourse oracularly on the knowable and the unknowable, and who with omniscient serenity inform us what kind of evidence science cannot furnish; however, I will not express it now, except to say that a terrible fate awaits those who do not "mind their own business!"

The belief that mind and matter are one—inescapable and immortal—is ancient. Able men in all times have advocated it, and many have believed. So-called modern Spiritualism is built upon it. Whether science can or cannot justify that belief, and afford proof of immortality, it is significant that eminent scientific men like Professors Wallace, Crooks, Varley, Buchanan, Hare, and others, have testified that it can. Science is very young on this old earth—too young to put up bars, and assume that this question is not to be debated. More light is needed; the same analytic method that has worked such wonderful and beneficent results with the grosser forms of matter may yet be applied with equal success to the finer forms—to a vast realm of invisible substance. Believing that science can and will furnish evidence of a future life, I desire to enter my protest against all attempts to shut off investigation by erecting artificial barriers across her pathway. Give humanity a chance to exchange its wavering hope for the steady light of joy streaming through the benignant ministrations of science.

Since writing the above I have read an article in the North American Review (May-June 1877) under the title of "Soul and Substance," by Thomas Hitchcock. Those interested in scientific spiritualism will find themselves well paid by a perusal of it.

CASTANA, IOWA.

EX-REFORMER.

FIRST LIBERAL LEAGUE OF BOSTON.

A meeting of the First Liberal League of Boston was held last Sunday evening, Dec. 15, in the Woman's Club Rooms, 4 Park Street, to decide whether it should continue to be an auxiliary of the National Liberal League, or whether it should apply for a charter from the National Liberal League of America. The evening was rainy, but, notwithstanding that disadvantage, the parlors were nearly filled, about seventy men and women being present.

The meeting was called to order by the President, Rev. M. J. Savage, who brought before the meeting the special business to be considered. He read the "Appeal" of the National Liberal League of America to the local Leagues. The circular gave an account of the postponement of the postal law question by the majority of the Syracuse Congress until the next Annual Congress, and the subsequent practical retraction of that vote by the election of a new Board of Directors known to be unanimously for the repeal of that law. The circular also gave an account of the withdrawal of the protesting minority from the Congress, the resolutions passed by them on the subject, and a sketch of the organization of the new League then formed. Having thus brought the matter before the meeting, the President took the chair and called for remarks from the members.

Mr. E. A. Sawtelle submitted the following motions for consideration, and, being seconded, they were taken up for action:—

"Voted, That the First Liberal League of Boston approve the stand taken by the minority at the second annual Congress of the National Liberal League with reference to the postal laws of 1873, as the only position which can ultimately commend itself to the reason and conscience of the American people."

"Voted, That we hereby dissolve our connection with the National Liberal League, and apply for a charter from the National Liberal League of America."

Mr. Abbot spoke of the arrest of Messrs. Bennett, Heywood, and others, on the charge of circulating obscene literature through the mails, as the cause of the present agitation of the subject. He had read, as a duty, the pamphlet for which Mr. Heywood was sentenced, and, while differing with him utterly on the matters there discussed, had found no words employed in it that could properly be called obscene. Had the same language been used to defend the other side of the question, no one would have attempted to raise such a charge. If the ruling of the court which sat upon Mr. Heywood's case was correct, then nearly all that is called classical literature in all languages must come under the same condemnation. The speaker would have the present law so amended as to allow the freest expression of opinion upon all subjects; this is the right of all citizens.

"The question for action to-night is simply whether this League shall stand for liberty alone, forgetting or ignoring all other interests of society, or whether it shall stand for liberty and morality combined; and this question will be answered by the vote on the resolutions." Mr. Abbot specially requested those who differed from him to express their views in opposition to his, that the League might act intelligently; and he hoped to be set right if he was wrong.

At the close of Mr. Abbot's remarks, the President called for a free discussion of the question. But nobody appearing to be in favor of "repeal," he put the question to vote, and the resolutions were carried without a dissenting voice.

Rev. Mr. Savage was the next speaker. He said that, when he first heard of the division at Syracuse, he thought that it was wholly unnecessary that a question foreign to the original purpose of the League should have led to that result; but now he saw that, under the then existing circumstances, no other course was defensible. He, too, had read Mr. Heywood's book as a duty, and, while wholly disagreeing with the social theory there advocated, had not seen any particular words in it that could fairly be called obscene. The League, however, was not called upon to discuss that phase of the question. To his own mind, the need of very definite national legislation on this subject was evident. While in the South and West a few years ago, he had brought to his notice overwhelming proof that the traffic in really obscene literature and articles was immense. In some places he saw these things openly exposed for sale. He would not consent that the government should in any way shield the dealers in this infamous business. That citizens should be allowed to state their honest opinion on every subject was quite another matter, and that object can be gained without repealing a law which, for the present at least, is an absolute necessity.

Dr. Mary Safford Blake said that one need not go to other cities to find places where vile publications could be procured, and she thought that the present law against the spread of such corruption should not be repealed.

Mr. R. P. Hallowell agreed with the position taken by the minority at Syracuse, but regretted that the subject of obscenity was allowed to enter into the business of the League. The association was formed to promote the total separation of Church and State, and should hold firmly to the single advocacy of that object. No outside question should be allowed to enter for discussion. He was a woman suffragist, but should consider it highly improper for any one to bring that subject before the League. By the power of precedents, the National Liberal League has become a sort of omnibus, giving all hobbies a chance to enter; and there is always room for one more. Mr. Hallowell spoke of the valuable work that small committees might do on behalf of State Secularization by working both separately and jointly, and hoped that the National Liberal League of America would look only to that end.

Miss J. P. Titcomb offered a few remarks, in which she sought to impress upon the members the need of increased effort on behalf of this special League, the oldest in the whole country. She thought that there were many men and women almost ready to enter the liberal ranks, who were kept back chiefly by the fear of social ostracism or the pecuniary losses which might ensue, were they openly to espouse the objects of the League. These persons are not cowardly, their regard for others being their controlling influence. For such, all charity and kindness should be shown. She presented a plan of work by which the League should meet once a month, and listen to an essay upon some social or political topic, after which the paper thus presented should be discussed by the members. This proposed plan seemed to meet with favor, and another meeting was announced, at which this matter will be more fully considered.

Further remarks were made by Mr. Charles Ellis, Prof. Wetherell, and Mrs. S. B. Otis, at the close of which this very successful meeting was adjourned until the third Sunday in January, at 3 o'clock P.M.

W. H. H.

NOT A "QUESTION OF MORALS."

EDITOR INDEX:—

"The question is, Shall the whole people, in their corporate capacity as mail-carriers, become the paid agents of confessed criminals in corrupting the morals of youth? If this is not a 'question of morals,' there never was and never will be one."

So say you in your reply to "F. S. C.," in your issue of November 28. I would not be dogmatic, not even hasty in this matter, but inquire a little. "A question of morals" may be applied to a multitude of things; but here, practically,—and quite as well legally,—it is narrowed down to the simple question as to the amount of moral responsibility which "the whole people in their corporate capacity" assume in transporting the mails. And I answer plainly and bluntly, None whatever.

As to the first part of your question; the Convention which framed the Constitution, in granting to Congress the "power to establish post-offices and post-roads," neither for itself nor for the people as summed any responsibility whatever, as to the moral, religious, political, or other matter which should be carried through these offices, or over these roads. Had they done so, what a Pandora's box of mischief they would have opened!

The Rev. Joseph Cook denounces the doctrines of the free religionists as immoral. And the crowd of well-dressed dunces who listen to his balderdash every Monday applaud his sentiments. I hold his falsehoods and misrepresentations to be grossly immoral. What then? Shall we hold the whole people morally accountable for allowing the Daily Advertiser, which publishes his false and vile stuff, to be carried through the mails?

The Catholic Church claims, according to the late Pope's Encyclical, that the entire religious systems of Protestantism, with a large share of our modern scientific discoveries and teachings, are so certainly immoral as to involve the eternal damnation of untold millions of souls through their corrupting influence. May not the Catholic Church, with equal force, hold the whole people accountable for this, and insist that "if" the transportation of these damnable heresies through the mails "is not a question of morals, there never was and never will be one"?

Here are our newspapers filled with advertisements of rum, whiskey, gin, brandy, wine, and the whole list of abominable stuffs which fill our prisons, jails, lunatic and idiot asylums, almshouses with innumerable victims, which turn thousands of homes into domestic hells, freighting the mails every day, by tons on tons. May not the temperance advocates with ten-fold force insist that, if the transportation of these advertisements through the mails "is not a moral question, there never was and never will be one"? As I have had fair opportunities for judging, I am convinced that more than ten youths are corrupted and ruined by intoxicating drinks, where one is ruined by obscene literature.

Again, here are the lotteries. The Boston Herald of December 2, has the following:—

"Lucky numbers in the Kentucky lotteries. New York, Dec. 1 (Holy Sabbath remember). The prize of $14,000 in the recent Kentucky lottery was won by ticket No. 29,194, which was sold in Boston. No. 33,294 was sold in New York, and won $8,000. No. 13,593 is the winner of $4,000."

Here is the gambler's lure. And multitudes of people have been ruined by such ensnaring notices as these. Therefore, if transporting lottery notices, "schemes," tickets, through the mails "is not a question of morals, there never was and never will be one."

Now, don't let us hurry our conclusions; but, riding ourselves of all controversial feeling in this matter, let us thoughtfully inquire, if, in all the relations above cited, there are not as deep questions of morality involved as in the case which has divided our National League? And then we might pass on to others, almost without end; and yet in not one of them is the government, or "the whole people," in any way, or to any extent, responsible. The guilt of the sinner shall be upon his own head, and not upon other people's.

In granting the power to Congress "to establish post-offices and post-roads" for the purpose of facilitating intercourse among themselves, the people never intended to endow that body with any power of moral or religious censorship whatever over the mails. They were too fresh from their conflict with despotism, and too zealous of their rights for that. And so I cannot agree with you, that this is a point which involves any "national morality" whatever, nor that "it cannot be and will not be shut down to the bare question of constitutionality"; for it will "be shut down" to that question, and that only. No matter how moral an act of Congress may be, if it is unconstitutional, it must go. And, moreover, the Congress and the Supreme Court shall never, with their enlightened consent, become the legal guardians of the people's morals, as to what they shall publish or read. We only ask that the government itself shall not trespass upon, but protect us in, the enjoyment of our rights, and leave us to work out our redemption from all forms of vice and sin through the elevating influences of a higher education in all the departments of knowledge.

Fraternalty yours, L. MOODY.

AN "IRREPRESSIBLE CONFLICT."

OZARK, MO., Nov. 28, 1878.

MR. F. E. ABBOT:

Dear Friend,—For one, let me express my warm approval of the course you and your brave coadjutors have taken in protesting against the action of the Syracuse Congress. The issue between the two parties of liberals now known as the "repeal" and the "reform" advocates is one of vital moment to civilization itself. Comstock and the law he is enforcing are not the foundation of this conflict. A radical difference of opinion on some of the most serious questions of social welfare is the basis of this disagreement. There would have been an "irrepressible conflict," though Comstock and his law had never been known.

I do not wish to boast in this hour of our peril of any foresight in discerning the approaching crisis; but I have for some time seen that an event such as the Syracuse rupture was inevitable. The character and aim of the two classes of liberals arrayed against each other in this controversy were too hostile to render their harmonious cooperation possible. Let me say again that the issue is not a technical one, as to whether the Comstock law is constitutional, but it is one that reaches deep down into the very foundation of modern civilization and social purity. The animus of the repeal party is not hostility to the Comstock postal law merely, but it is hostility to that morality which underlies our social fabric. I wish to be understood as speaking now of the predominating spirit and character of that class of liberals who are advocating the repeal doctrine. That there are many pure, noble men and women on that side, I do not doubt; but free love, with its loathsome theory of social life, and its damning practice of licentiousness, will yet control the repeal party, and make its history so infamous that those who have followed it from a pure and chivalric love of liberty will leave it in disgust.

I wish to say to every friend of the seceding League that I believe a nobler cause never united men and women together than that which you have espoused. The cause of enlightened humanity as interpreted by the highest faculties of mind and soul is yours. The deep, vital instincts of civilization and morality commend your brave conduct in taking a stand in favor of social purity against the vicious tendency of an unreasoning fanaticism. What you have lost in numbers, by refusing to assist in committing liberalism to a dangerous and untenable position, you have gained a thousand-fold by the vast moral advantage which your new relation to the world gives you. I should be proud to march under the banner of the new Liberal League, though not a dozen souls in America would follow its leading.

Liberalism has now a mission grander than the dethronement of a waning religious superstition. It has the practical duties of life, the sacred interests of home and virtue to defend against the wild and rapacious demands of license and moral anarchy. The liberalism represented by the protesting party has the best element in society, for its ally; and, however much the world may dissent from the speculative opinions of the men and women who champion the new cause, it cannot withhold respect from such moral courage as the Syracuse seceders have shown. It is to be regretted that so many liberals are so wanting in good sense and moral integrity as they have shown themselves to be; but, as such is the character of a large element of liberalism, it is best that the truth be made apparent by some means, and the Syracuse Congress has only drawn lines where distinctions already existed.

H. CLAY NEVILLE.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLSON, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1873.

To THE INDEX Assn., Toledo, O.:
 Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory results—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers. Yours truly,

HENRY S. STEPHENS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

Office, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX.

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. ORENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.Y.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 O. D. R. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
 JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the difference between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well-informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later till "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.20 for one year, including postage, or $1.00 for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street Boston.

PUBLICATIONS INDEX TRACTS.

OF THE

FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wesson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by O. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. O. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Eschub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wesson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. O. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wilson and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. B. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by O. D. R. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion"; Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Lasker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for Five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for Five cents at the office.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1873 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fifth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 8.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.Y.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
 JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from

all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; a Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights.....	1.50
Villa Eden; the Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.5
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRAKET (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	1.50
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Friest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUEHNER'S Force and Matter.....	2.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilisation in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	5.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 11 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Post-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	3.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Billy Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	2.50
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.50
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
CORBE (FRANCOIS POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects, Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.30
CONWAY (MONOURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.50
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE E.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.

Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellaneous. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Kinotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	5.00
DEQUAIRES (KENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Compiling—Adapted.....	5.00
Novels.....	5.00
The Mill on the Floss.....	1.50
Eliza Harner and Scenes of Clerical Life.....	1.50
The same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (E. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellaneous.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	1.25
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gottfried Reinhold Leibniz. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.....	2.00
Cosmic Philosophy.....	5.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 3 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREGG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	5.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	1.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	1.50
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	1.50
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	1.50
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	1.50
The Marble Faun.....	1.50
The English Note-Books.....	1.50
The American Note-Books.....	1.50
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	1.50
Our Old Home, and Septimus Felton.....	1.50
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Of the Skelton.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mopse the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah F. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Astronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Mandale, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A. Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS O.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	3.00
LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustine to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	5.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWIS' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	1.00
LEWIS (G. E.) The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL D'O). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Higlow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Higlow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilisation, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	5.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	2.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1859 to 1863.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERRIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 3 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	1.50
The Subjection of Women.....	1.50
Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.50
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the San Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MULLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	2.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NASSY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organisation of Philanthropy.....	4.50
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	1.75
PARKER (THEODORE) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	2.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.50
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS) The Infants and the Finite.....	1.00
PHILIPS (ELIZABETH STUART) The Gates ajar.....	1.50
The Trolly Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged in.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects.....	1.75
Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.50
The Expense of Heaven.....	2.50
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHILLER (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	5.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Huxley.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.50
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Series of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	1.50
Descriptive Sociology. Parts I., II., and III., each.....	4.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	5.00
Universal Progress.....	2.50
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER). Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 3 vols.....	7.50
The Classic-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip.....	1.25
Pendennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Remond and Love the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 6 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	2.50
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.....
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Humors, &c. 4. Four Georges, Henrietta, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....
THAXTER'S (MRS. OELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	1.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.50
The Maine Woods.....	2.50
Cape Cod.....	2.50
Lectures.....	2.50
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.50
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.50
TYLER (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	1.00
Light and Electricity.....	1.50
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	2.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
Lessons in Electricity.....	1.50
Address before British Assoc. at Belfast.....	.50
TYTLE (BARAH) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYAGE (REV. CHARLES) The Sting and the Stone. Vols. I and V., each.....	2.00
Vols III, IV, and VI., each.....	2.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.50
Sauntering.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	5.00
WHIFFLE'S (E. F.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	5.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldwater's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Pantries. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	2.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

331 Washington St., Boston.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY—PRICE
TWO PENCE.

THE SECULAR REVIEW.

EDITED BY CHARLES WATTS.

The SECULAR REVIEW is the leading organ of Secularism, and each week has Special Articles on Theological, Social, Scientific, and Political Subjects. Its distinctive features are the advocacy of Constructive Secularism, and the dissemination of useful information on all questions which affect the welfare of the people. Letters are inserted in its "OPEN COLUMN" from all who are courteous in the expression of their views; while a special department is allotted for "NOTES AND QUERIES."

The Contributors to the SECULAR REVIEW comprise the principal advocates of Secularism, including its founder, G. J. Holyoake.

CHARLES WATTS, Publisher,
84 Fleet Street, London, E.C.

INTERESTING
NEW BOOKS
For Radical Thinkers.

THE BIBLE FOR LEARNERS. By Dr. H. Oort. Professor at Amsterdam, and Dr. I. Hooykaas, Pastor at Rotterdam, with the assistance of Dr. A. Kienan, Professor at Leyden. A popular exposition of the "Dutch School" of modern inquiry in the historical study of the Bible. Vol. I. Patriarchs; Moses; Judges. Vol. II. Kings and Prophets. Vol. III. New Testament (in preparation). Price $1.00 per volume.

THE BIBLE OF TO-DAY. By John W. Chadwick. Containing the principal results of the best historical and scientific criticism of the separate books of the Bible and their mutual relations. 304 pages. Price $1.50.

WHAT IS THE BIBLE? By J. T. Sunderland. An attempt to answer the question in the light of the best scholarship and in the most reverent and catholic spirit. 179 pages. Price $1.00.

THE RELIGION OF ISRAEL. From the Dutch of J. Knappert. "Its purpose is to give a faithful and accurate account of the results of modern research into early development of the Israelitish religion." 283 pages. Price $1.00.

ASPIRATIONS OF THE WORLD: A Chain of Opals. Selected from the best ancient and modern scriptures, with an introduction. By L. Maria Child. 285 pages. Price $1.25.

A MODERN SYMPOSIUM. Subjects: The Soul and a Future Life; The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief. By Frederic Harrison, Professor Huxley, Sir James Stephen, Lord Selbourne, Canon Barry, the Dean of St. Paul, Duke of Argyll, and others. 281 pages. Price $1.25.

DETERIORATION AND RACE EDUCATION; with practical application to the condition of the people and industry. By Samuel Boyce. 584 pages. Price $2.50.

THE GHOSTS; Liberty of Man, Woman, and Child, etc. By Col. R. G. Ingersoll (his latest lecture). 272 pages. Price $1.50. Also, THE GODS, etc., same style. 253 pages. Price $1.25.

Any of the above-named books sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

RADICAL LIBERAL LECTURES

By B. F. Underwood,

FOR THE FALL AND WINTER OF 1878-9.

1. The Theory of Evolution.
2. Darwinism Defined and Defended.
3. The Philosophy of Herbert Spencer.
4. The Genesis and Nature of Religion.
5. Modern Scientific Materialism.
6. Natural Selection versus Design in Nature.
7. An Hour with German Thinkers.
8. Intuition and Instinct Viewed in the Light of Modern Psychology.
9. The Pros and Cons of a Future Life.
10. Is there a Personal Intelligent Deity?
11. The Demands of Liberalism Pertaining to State Secularization.
12. Monogamic Marriage versus the Vagaries of Free Love.
13. Woman: Her Past and Present; Her Rights and Wrongs.
14. Religious Revivals: Their Causes and Consequences.
15. The Struggles and Triumphs of Free-thought in Europe and America.
16. Issues of the Age.
17. Buddha and Buddhism.
18. Ancient Egypt: Its Laws, Customs and Religion.
19. The French Revolution: Its Causes and Consequences.
20. Crimes and Cruelties of Superstition.
21. Cook and other "Scientific" Annihilators of Materialism Reviewed.
22. Paine the Pioneer of Free-thought in America.
23. A Liberal's Answer to the Question, "If not Christianity, What?"
24. Christianity: To what Extent has it Helped or Hindered Civilization?
25. Jesus: All that is Known and what is Guessed about Him.
26. A True Man Better than a True Christian.
27. Judaism and Christianity Outgrowths of Pre-existent Heathenism.
28. Science versus the Bible.
29. The Origin and History of the Bible. (From one to six lectures.)
30. The Four Gospels Unhistorical and Unreliable.
31. Evidences for the Divinity of the Bible Examined.
32. Popular Assumptions Regarding the Bible and Christianity.
33. Bible Prophecies Falsified by the Facts of History.
34. Popular Objections to Liberalism Considered.

For terms, etc., address

B. F. UNDERWOOD,
THORNDIKE, MASS.

GOLD Any worker can make $12 a day at home. Costly outfit free. Address

THE INDEX
IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

Address THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston, U.S.A.

TO THE AMERICAN PAT-
RONS OF
CHOICE LITERATURE.

We have made arrangements with Messrs. CHAPMAN & HALL, London, England, for the right to publish an American Edition of

The Fortnightly Review,
Edited by JOHN MORLEY,

and are now publishing this celebrated Monthly Magazine, from a special duplicate set of stereotype plates, which are forwarded from England so promptly as to enable us to produce each month, not only an exact facsimile of this able Review, but to publish it almost at the same time the original is from England. It is in every respect equal to the London issue, at about half the original price. This effort will place in the hands of American readers the freshest utterances of leading thinkers on the issues with a promptitude unequalled. The comments of a large number of the best European thinkers on Science, Philosophy, Literature, Politics, and Miscellaneous Matters of general interest cannot fail to be appreciated and encouraged by thoughtful American readers. The following are a few of the contributors:—

Matthew Arnold, Alfred R. Wallace,
Herbert Spencer, Frederick Harrison,
Goldwin Smith, Prof. Tyndall,
Right Hon. Lyon Playfair, Prof. Huxley,
Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Prof. Darwin,
Lionel A. Tallemaque, Author of Supernatural Religion,
M. E. Grant Duff, M.P., Sir John Lubbock,
Hon. Robert Lowe, Anthony Trollope,
Leslie Stephen, T. Adolphus Trollope,
John Morley (the Editor), Sir H. S. Maine,
G. H. Lewes, Sir David Wedderburn,

AND NUMEROUS OTHERS.

Subscription Price, $5.00 per Year.
Published every month by the ROSE-BELFORD PUBLISHING CO., 60 York Street, Toronto, Ont.

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD.
GREAT THROUGH LINE

AND UNITED STATES MAIL ROUTE.

The attention of the travelling public is respectfully invited to some of the merits of this great highway, in the confident assertion and belief that no other line can offer equal inducements as a route of through travel. In

CONSTRUCTION AND EQUIPMENT
THE PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD
stands confessedly at the head of American railways. The track is double the entire length of the line, of steel rails laid on heavy oak ties, which are embedded in a foundation of rock ballast eighteen inches in depth. All bridges are of iron or stone, and built upon the most approved plans. Its passenger cars, while eminently safe and substantial, are at the same time models of comfort and elegance.

THE SAFETY APPLIANCES
in use on this line well illustrate the far-seeing and liberal policy of its management, in accordance with which the utility only of an improvement and not its cost has been the question of consideration. Among many may be noticed

The Block System of Safety Signals,
Janney Coupler, Buffer, and Platform,
The Wharton Patent Switch,
and the Westinghouse Air-Brake, forming in conjunction with a perfect double track and road-bed a combination of safeguards against accidents which have rendered them practically impossible

Pullman Palace Cars
are run on all Express Trains from New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington, to Chicago, Cincinnati, Louisville, Indianapolis, and St. Louis.

WITHOUT CHANGE,
and to all the principal points in the far West and South with but one change of cars. Connections are made in Union Depots, and are assured to all important points. The Scenery of the Pennsylvania Route is admitted to be unsurpassed in the world for grandeur, beauty, and variety. Superior refreshment facilities are provided. Employees are courteous and attentive, and it is an inevitable result that a trip by the Pennsylvania Railroad must form

A Pleasing and Memorable Experience.

Tickets for sale at the lowest rates at the Ticket Offices of the Company in all important cities and towns.

FRANK THOMSON, L. P. FARMER,
General Manager, General Passenger Agent,
C. B. HALDEMAN, New England Agent,
203 and 205 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 80 CENTS.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the fine list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. ANY OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

THE INDEX AS AN
ADVERTISING MEDIUM.

Testimony of one who has tried it.

FLORENCE, Iowa, Jan. 5, 1878.
... THE INDEX is the best advertising medium which I have tried. ...
E. C. WALKER.

THE BEST PORTRAIT OF
THOMAS PAINE.

Engraved by the famous W. Sharpe from Romney's celebrated portrait—

Heliotype Copy
by James E. Osgood & Co., of Boston. This is a beautiful work of art, and by all odds the very best likeness of Thomas Paine to be found. It is 10x8 inches in size, and will be mailed post-paid on receipt of $1.00. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF
O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
R. H. RANNEY,
F. M. ABBOT.

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed post-paid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

A REMARKABLE BOOK.

A MODERN SYMPOSIUM.

SUBJECTS:

The Soul and Future Life.
By Mr. Frederic Harrison, Hon. Roden Noel, R. H. Hutton, Lord Selbourne, Prof. Huxley, Canon Barry, Lord Blackford, Mr. W. R. Greg, Rev. Baldwin Brown, and Dr. W. G. Ward.

The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief.

By Sir James Fitz-James Stephen, Prof. Clifford, Lord Selbourne, Rev. Mr. Martineau, Mr. Frederic Harrison, the Dean of St. Paul's, the Duke of Argyll, Dr. W. G. Ward, Prof. Huxley, and R. H. Hutton.
1 Vol. Crown, 8vo. Cloth, neat, $1.25.

This volume contains the scholarly utterances of the leading scientists and philosophers of Great Britain on two of the most important subjects of the century.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.,

for

TRACTS.

I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 50 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.

II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.

III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.

IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.

V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 18 and 20, 1875.)

VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. O. Gannett.

Nos. II., III., IV., V., VI., 10 cts. each; ten for 90 cts.; one hundred, $2.

ERASER AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 50 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. E. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS FOR 1872, '73, '74, '75, '76, and '77, Five cents each.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. E. A. platform. $1.00.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $4 outfit free. Address H. HALLETT & CO., Portland, Maine.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & CO., Portland, Maine.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.
The twenty-fifth school year of this Family and Day School for both sexes will begin WEDNESDAY, Sept. 19, 1877. For Circular and information apply to
NATH'L T. ALLEN,
West Newton, Mass.

NEW BOOK BY INGERSOLL.

Contains his latest lectures on "The Ghosts," "Liberty of Man, Woman, and Child," "Centennial Oration," "Farming in Illinois," and others. Handsomely bound in one volume. Price $1.50. Also

THE GODS AND OTHER LECTURES.

Same style. Price $1.25.
Sent post-paid on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE
NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE
OF AMERICA.

1. EQUAL RIGHTS IN RELIGION. Contains an Historical Account of the Liberal League movement; a full Report of the Centennial Congress of Liberals at Philadelphia, July 1 to 4, 1876, with Essays by F. E. Abbot, James Parton, B. W. Underwood, and others; the Constitution of the National Liberal League, List of Charter Members, etc., etc. Octavo, pp. 180. Cloth, $1.00; paper, 75 cents.
2. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES, adopted at Philadelphia, July 4, 1876. With Resolutions of the Congress, Extracts from Letters by Distinguished Citizens, Constitution of the National Liberal League, etc. Adapted for gratuitous distribution by friends of the cause. Octavo, 34 pp. Single copies, 3 cts.; 10 copies, 15 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.
3. PRIVILEGE FOR NONE—JUSTICE FOR ALL. Contains the N. L. L. Platform and Resolutions adopted at Rochester, Oct. 26, 1877, full information how to organize Local Leagues, etc. Twenty-page tract for the use of workers. Single copies, 5 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.

ADDRESS

National Liberal League of America

231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON.

FROTHINGHAM'S WORKS.

THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY. An Essay. Third Edition—Revised. Price $1.50.

"Nobody can peruse this book without respect for the learning, mental honesty and skill in the statement of his convictions, possessed by the author, and for the essential integrity and philanthropic tendency of his spirit."—Springfield Republican.

"A profoundly sincere book, the work of one who has read largely, studied thoroughly, reflected patiently. It is a model of scholarly culture and of finished and vigorous style."—Boston Globe.

THE CHILD'S BOOK OF RELIGION. For Sunday-schools and Homes. Price $1.00.

THE SAFEST CREED, AND OTHER DISCOURSES. 12mo, Cloth, $1.50.

Not "food for babes," but full of suggestion for earnest and thoughtful men.

STORIES FROM THE LIPS OF THE TEACHER. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"The Parables are so re-told as to absorb the attention of the reader, and to fasten upon the mind what the writer believes to have been the impression the Savior meant to convey. It is in style and thought a superior book, and will interest alike young and old."—Zion's Herald (Methodist).

STORIES OF THE PATRIARCHS. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"A work of culture and taste; it will be welcome to all ages, and gives the sublimest lessons of manhood in the simple language of a child."—Springfield Republican.

BELIEFS OF THE UNBELIEVERS. A Lecture. 12mo, Cloth, $1.00.

TRANSCENDENTALISM IN NEW ENGLAND. A History. With sketches and studies of Emerson, Alcott, Parker, Margaret Fuller, the Brook Farm Community, etc. 8vo, Cloth extra, with steel portrait of the author, $2.50.

THE LIFE OF THEODORE PARKER. 8vo. With Portrait, $3.00.

The New York Tribune closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

THE CRADLE OF THE CHRIST. A Study in Primitive Christianity, illustrating the prime importance of the Messianic Idea in the New Testament, as the key to the development of Christianity from Judaism. Octavo, Cloth, $1.75.

Mailed, post-paid, on receipt of price, by THE INDEX 231 Washington St., Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 9.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, DEC. 26, 1878.

WHOLE No. 470.

LIBERAL LEAGUE PLATFORM

For the Presidential Election of 1880.

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.

2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.

3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

N. B.—The nomination of candidates upon the above platform was postponed to a future Congress of the National Liberal League.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

GLIMPSES.

DICKENS said, in Little Dorrit: "There is no playing fast and loose with the truth in any game, without growing the worse for it."

A BROTHER CLERGYMAN, eulogizing the late Dr. Putnam, shows that godliness is sometimes profitable: "It was said that the price of real estate in Roxbury was advanced by the strong attraction of his preaching."

JUSTICE CHARLES H. TRUE, of Pittsford, N.Y., not long since performed a marriage service, which he concluded with this pithy emanation of the usual formula: "What love hath joined together, let not discord put asunder."

THE NEW YORK Reformer and Jewish Times may be pardoned for hitting back in the very effective style: "One of the most touching sights in the world is to see a Christian congregation, whose membership list includes two defaulting bank-cashiers and a bankrupt bank-president, and whose church is in the heart of a city where murder, robbery, and drunkenness are rampant, taking up Sunday collections for the conversion of the Jews to Christianity and for the purchase of Bibles and blankets for the savages of Africa."

THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION held a very pleasant convention last Thursday at Providence. Dr. Felix Adler, of New York, presided, and made an eloquent and noble address in the evening "The Aim of Free Religion." Mr. W. J. Potter, of New Bedford, opened the afternoon session with an extremely able essay on "Liberal Religion as a Philanthropic Power." Interesting extempore speeches were made by Mrs. Anna Garlin Spencer, Col. T. W. Higginson, Rev. Frederic Hinckley, Rev. Dr. J. L. Dudley, and Mr. Frederic A. Hinckley (whose opening discourse in this issue of THE INDEX will receive the commendation of all who can appreciate its rare merit.) Next week we shall republish a good report of the convention.

SAYS THE BOSTON Advertiser of December 21: "E. H. Heywood, who was serving a sentence in the Dedham jail for circulating obscene literature through the mail, has been pardoned by President Hayes, and released. A public reception will soon be given him in this city." Having signed the petition for Mr. Heywood's pardon, we are very glad to learn its success in procuring his release. But we see no reason for canonizing him or elevating him to the pedestal of martyrdom. While we believe that his legal conviction was unjust and his imprisonment oppressive, we also believe that he has an unsettled account with the enlightened moral convictions of mankind. Sincere as he undoubtedly is, we have no special honors to pay to any man who preaches the "natural right to commit adultery."

MR. M. D. CONWAY writes: "Mrs. Besant has failed to convince her eminent enemy, Sir George Jessel, that her husband has no right to the advantages of the private deed of separation between them, now that he has taken back the daughter conceded her by that separation. She had claimed her rights as a wife to enter his house and see her children when she pleased. The husband sued for an injunction to restrain her from this. She resisted, and pleaded that a husband could not sue his wife. She brought high authority for this, but Sir George said he must overrule them. If this decision shall be sustained, womenkind will have gained a much more important point than Mrs. Besant has lost. It carries them at a bound to a degree of independence which was never before conceded in any English court."

EVEN THE NEW YORK Tribune cannot refrain from pointing the finger of scorn at church-members who cloak fraud with hypocrisy: "There was one very exemplary man among the directors and officers of the City of Glasgow Bank, who squandered seven millions of money confided to their charge. This was Lewis Potter. Five years ago he built the Burnbank Free Church and became responsible for the greater portion of the cost of the fabric, and in consequence of this liberality enjoyed great fame for pious zeal and benevolence. During all the years when, according to the inspectors' report, he actively assisted in falsifying the accounts, in making away with the cash reserve, and in deceiving the shareholders and the public, he steadily refused to take in or read Monday's newspapers because they were printed on the first day of the week. Of William Taylor, also, another director, it is remarked that he occupied a prominent position as President of the Glasgow Young Men's Christian Association, and as a representative on several occasions of St. Enoch's Church in the General Assembly."

IS ENGLAND prepared to take up the task set before her by the Church? Cardinal Manning "holds that the Imperial policy of England entails religious obligations of the most comprehensive scope. At a meeting of the Roman Catholic clergy and laity in Liverpool, some weeks ago, he reminded them that when God raised up a mighty empire, He did it for a purpose. The old Roman Empire did its work, and it was crushed, crumbled, and utterly destroyed. The great Catholic Empire of Spain had passed away like a shadow; and the greatest empire the world had ever seen for extent was the British Empire, which they had helped to build up. They had what Spain never had. They possessed at this time an eighteenth portion, at least, of the habitable globe, and had over 240,000,000 of fellow-subjects; and these 240,000,000 of men, with their 150 princes and chieftains—these realms and kingdoms and principalities—were all gathered under the sovereignty of the British Empire. Was this without a divine purpose? Was it to pass away as a shadow, like Spain? Upon them it depended to give answer under God if they were to be faithful to their duty. If they partook of the greatness of that empire, they partook of its responsibilities. If they partook of its wealth, they partook of its duties. If they partook of its powers, they would partake of its doom. Englishmen must cope with paganism within their mighty empire."

HERE is a practical commentary on "free love," given by the Tribune as "an Italian romance": "The only son of a noble house fell in love with the only daughter of another noble house. The lovers were handsome, rich, and young, and they were very fond of each other. When the young Count asked the hand of the girl he loved, her father refused point blank, without giving any reason. He was so firm, however, that the young lover saw that it was useless to insist. Every one condemned the tyranny of the girl's father, and the lovers resolved to marry without his consent, trusting that he would speedily forgive and forget their disobedience. A day was fixed upon, and both repaired to the Mayor to have their union made legal. It was there the crash came, for the bridegroom learned that his papers were not correct. His name was not registered. His father had omitted that form. Mad with doubt and apprehension, he flew to his father, and demanded the reason of this omission. What passed between the father and son none may ever know, but as soon as the young man left his father's presence he blew out his brains. He was not the legitimate son of the Count. The Count, in atonement of his youthful fault, had brought up his illegitimate son as his heir, and had never had the courage to confess the truth to him. This was the reason of the girl's father's objections to the marriage. He knew the secret. The boy's mother was a woman of the lower orders. He would not survive the knowledge of his shame. The girl is mad with grief, and it is feared that she also will put an end to her days. 'I cannot live without him,' she cries in her agony: 'let me go to him, let me go to him.'"

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE OF AMERICA.

OFFICERS.

President.
FRANCIS E. ABBOT	Boston, Mass.
Vice-Presidents.
HON. E. P. HURLBUT	Albany, N. Y.
HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL	Boston, Mass.
HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES	St. Louis, Mo.
HON. HENRY BOOTH	Chicago, Ill.
HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN	Ipsington, Ind.
HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT	Boston, Mass.
MR. WM. J. POTTER	New Bedford, Mass.
MR. E. P. HALLOWELL	Boston, Mass.
MR. JAMES PARTON	Newburyport, Mass.
MR. F. SCHUBERT	San Francisco, Cal.
HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE	Providence, R. I.
REV. M. J. KAYAGE	Boston, Mass.
RABBI B. FELSANTHAL	Chicago, Ill.
REV. W. H. SPENCER	Sparta, Wis.
MR. SAMUEL L. HILL	Florence, Mass.
MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH	Detroit, Mich.
MR. ROBERT BEAVER	Boston, Mass.
RABBI ISAAC M. WISE	Cincinnati, Ohio
MR. MORITZ ELLINGER	New York, N. Y.
REV. ROBERT COLLIER	Peoria, Ill.
COT. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL	Chicago, Ill.
DR. T. L. BROWN	Binghamton, N. Y.
HON. E. B. MCCORMICK	Franklin, Pa.
MR. E. W. EVANS	Mont Lebanon, N. Y.
MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON	New York City
MRS. AMY PORT	Rochester, N. Y.
MRS. ELIZABETH CODY STANTON	Tenafly, N. J.
MRS. RALPH HOLLEY	Leedsbury, Va.
JOSEPH WOODBURN	Albany, N. Y.
RABBI MAX SCHLESINGER	Albany, N. Y.
Secretary.
W. H. HAMLEN	231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.
Assistant Secretary.
MISS JANE P. TITCOMB	142 Chandler St., Boston.
Treasurer.
J. A. J. WILCOX	3 Pemberton Square, Boston.
Board of Directors.
J. A. J. WILCOX	W. H. HAMLEN.
F. E. ABBOT	O. D. B. MILLS.
D. G. CRANDON
Executive Committee.
Alabama	J. H. HALLEY, Selma.
Arkansas	JOHN ARRESE, Monticello.
California	J. L. HATCH, San Francisco.
Colorado	DAVID T. BEALS, Granada.
Connecticut	GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
Delaware	JOSEPH D. G. ELLIOTT, Greenville.
Florida	T. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprise.
Georgia	DR. A. A. BELL, Madison.
Illinois	DR. A. G. HUMPHREY, Galesburg.
Indiana	N. D. WATKINS, Xenia.
Iowa	J. O. MICHENER, Adel.
Kansas	JOHN FARNSWORTH, Fort Scott.
Kentucky	S. B. CLARK, Wilsonville.
Louisiana	EMERSON BENTLEY, New Orleans.
Maine	DR. W. H. BROWN, Bangor.
Maryland	J. S. RUSSELL, New Market.
Massachusetts	E. A. SAWYER, Boston.
Michigan	KARL SCHMIDT, Detroit.
Minnesota	J. B. BASSETT, Minneapolis.
Missouri	B. F. FETTER, St. Louis.
Nebraska	W. E. COFFLAND, Lincoln.
Nevada	V. G. BARNETT, White Rock.
New Hampshire	WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
New Jersey	FRANCIS W. ORVIS, Passaic.
New York	O. D. B. MILLS (Chairman), Syracuse.
North Carolina	J. W. THOMAS, Warren.
Ohio	E. D. STARK, Cleveland.
Oregon	SAMUEL COLT, Humboldt Basin.
Rhode Island	GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
South Carolina	P. W. FULLER, Columbia.
Tennessee	DR. E. H. PRICE, Chattanooga.
Texas	DR. L. J. RUSSELL, Harrisville.
Vermont	B. L. HAUGHTON, North Bennington.
Virginia	L. SPAULDING, Norfolk.
West Virginia	DR. A. M. DENT, Weston.
Wisconsin	ROBERT O. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
Wyoming	D. F. WILCOX, Cheyenne.
D. G. CRANDON, Chairman	Chelsea, Mass.
MRS. SARAH B. OTIS	127 Warren Avenue, Boston.
HARLAN P. HYDE	231 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES

Chartered by the National Liberal League of America.

FLORENCE, Mass.—President, Seth Hunt; Secretary, Clarence E. Brown.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Florence Liberal League.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.—President, John W. Truesdell; Secretary, Mrs. Nettie C. Truesdell.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Onondaga County Liberal League.

ALBANY, N. Y.—President, Thomas J. Hennessey; Secretary, Thomas Dugan.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Albany Liberal Association.

BOSTON, Mass.—President, Rev. M. J. Savage; Secretary, Miss Jane P. Titcomb.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Boston, Mass.

PASSAIC CITY, N. J.—President, J. H. Adamson; Secretary, F. W. Orvis.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Passaic City Liberal League.

N.B.—The above is an acknowledgment of the fact that a charter is due and will be sent as soon as possible. Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues originally chartered by the "National Liberal League" will receive charters from the "National Liberal League of America" without extra charge, if they send a certified copy of their charter to accept the following invitation:—

"Poted, That all Local Leagues that approve the formation of the National Liberal League of America are invited to dissolve their connection with their old League, and to join this League."

STUTTERERS are compelled to talk life easily whether they will or no. Two men were afflicted with it at work at a forge. The iron was red-hot and placed on the anvil, when the first said, "John, s-s-strike it hard." The other answered, "Jim, where shall I hit it?" "No matter now; it's got to be cold," was the reply; and the bar was put into the forge again.

TWO FRENCHMEN were noisily discussing together a political question: "I have never yet altered my opinion," exclaimed one. "And I," cried the other, "have never yet shouted 'live a body!'" "Naturally," was the reply; "Monsieur is a physician."

(FOR THE INDEX.)

The Use and Abuse of Legislation.

AN ADDRESS BEFORE THE FREE RELIGIOUS SOCIETY OF PROVIDENCE, R. I.

BY FREDERIC A. HINCKLEY.

I suppose that Robinson Crusoe did not trouble himself much about affairs of State. He had no occasion, so far as we can see, for calling a caucus, acting as its chairman and secretary, and electing himself delegate to the congressional, county, and councilor conventions. Probably no legislature sat in the lone island at the mouth of the Orinoco, and Crusoe was singularly free from all anxieties about tinkering the tariff or changes in the currency. It is quite in the range of the probabilities, however, taking human nature as we find it, that when relations were formed between him and the man Friday, difficulties not recorded in the history may have occurred. And if Friday had no conception of the State, I doubt not, subject as he was to the personal caprice and passion of another, that he at times felt the evil of its absence. Be that as it may, when the Crusoes and the Fridays are multiplied by thousands and millions, the condition of things is essentially changed, the friction increases, and a new system of regulation becomes indispensable. So out of the very necessities of the case, government springs up. It stands to reason, spite of the abolition of the State advocated by some,—it stands to reason that the rule, or rather the absence of rule, which may exist in a community of two men, will never do, nay, is impossible, in a community of a thousand men. We can all see this if we will. Everyone knows who has given the subject a moment's attention, that there must be a radical difference between the government of a country village and the government of a large city, a difference made necessary by the congregating of people within small space. A man may swing his arms freely in the woods, but if he swings them in a crowd he is in danger of hitting somebody; and if in a crowd of a thousand men each one should practice the freedom of the woods, it is easy to see what would result. So I say with the multiplication of people on a given tract of territory, government comes in naturally, the State is inevitable.

Out of its necessity seems to come conflict. That is, absolute personal freedom on the one side seems to be at war with the State, which is said to be an essential curtailment of personal freedom on the other. This conflict, however, is not between just such forces as is claimed. For the only personal freedom which it legitimately interferes with is one which, if not interfered with, would infringe upon the personal freedom of others. Hence when the State is restricted to its proper work, when it does not usurp power which belong, and in all ages should be left, to the individual, the contest is one between the bad and the good, the lawless and the self-governing, elements in the community. A good statute properly enforced rarely troubles the innocent. As a rule it is a "Rogue who feels the halter draw."

I say this is the case with a good statute properly enforced. I know very well, we all know, there are bad statutes, and that there is such a thing as very bad enforcement of a good statute. This has arisen partly from the passions of men and partly from a failure to thoroughly comprehend the sphere of government and the limits of legislation. Legislation was once for the benefit of the king, then the nobility, and so on. We are agreed, it is our American idea, that it is now for the benefit of the people. But that leaves the whole matter in doubt. What are legitimate subjects of legislation? What is its primal object? Well, under Crusoe's order of things, in that crowd of a thousand men swinging their arms ad libitum, somebody, indeed everybody, would get hit; it would be a mob. Under a well-governed State, every hand would come down, and move only in such fashion as not to hit other people's personal property; that would be society. Legislation, then, is the effort to regulate the relations of men, and legitimate legislation is the process of securing to every individual the largest possible freedom which he can enjoy without having conflict with a like freedom for everybody else. Manifestly, a condition of society in which all its members have not equal opportunities before the law for the highest possible development of the faculties which God has given them is an unjust condition; and the one end of all enactments should be to secure these opportunities thus freely and equally. Any legislation which really secures this end is a legitimate use of human law, and any legislation which subverts it is an abuse of human law.

That we have too much legislation is unquestionably true. On some points the life is well-nigh legislated out of us. The real difficulty is in drawing the line at the right place, and keeping constantly in view the purpose of legislation, and resolutely refusing to pervert it to base uses. We never can do this successfully until we recognize the true significance of liberty. The standard of interpretation has been variable. There has always been respectable support to the idea that "liberty means the license to do wrong." We see this in the glided barbarism men call chivalry; we see it in the fiat of the king,—the State, it is I; we see it in every form of slavery, where the minority think themselves commissioned to care for and live upon the majority; we see it in our own day and midst, in the assumption of the disreputable trades,—the dram-shop, the house of prostitution, and the publication of obscene literature,—that freedom guarantees to them the right to debauch men and degrade women and poison the moral atmosphere of little children. Such liberty as that is a disgrace to the name; it is simply the personal interest, appetite, passion, of the strongest, the smartest, or possibly the majority, set up as the law of action for society, instead of the well-recognized principles of equity which should reign supreme. All legislation which strengthens such liberty as that, if liberty we must call it, is an abuse. It undermines the integrity of the individual, it saps the virtue out of a community, it retards the progress of mankind. But there is a true liberty. One of its apostles has defined it thus: Liberty, he says, means every man enjoying all his natural rights, and endowed with all needed political rights to protect his natural ones. But what are natural rights? Can they be anything less than a chance to develop to the highest and noblest results the faculties with which one has been blessed, and in a community an equal chance for all to this development? No wrong, no impurity the world ever saw, can come under such a definition as that, because wrong and impurity never help towards, on the contrary they always prevent, the attainment of the highest results. So, with this broad and ennobling idea always in view, we say the individual has a natural right to the largest possible liberty in the development of all his faculties, and the sphere of legislation is to secure each and all individuals in the exercise of this right.

It is singular to observe how often illegitimate legislation is defended in the name of liberty, and how often legitimate legislation is denounced in the name of liberty. It shows only the more unmistakably how great the lack of clearness and agreement in our ideas concerning the function of legislation. Let me cite a few examples:—

Take the question of the Bible in the public schools. The cause of the Protestant as against the Catholic has always been, and is to-day, fatally weak, because we have insisted on demanding of the Catholic in the public school certain things to which no conscientious Catholic can submit. In most cases throughout this country, the Catholic child is required either to take active part in, or to respectfully listen to, the reading of King James' version of the Bible. To this he objects, whether with or without good reason it is not necessary to discuss. He has an inalienable right to object, and since he objects, it is an act of tyranny on our part to compel him to submit. Let us examine this point a little. There are, or may be, several reasons urged against the reading of the Bible in the public schools.

1st. There are those who accept the Bible without qualification, who may and some of whom do hold that to make the reading of it a piece of disagreeable routine work is only to win for it permanent disrespect.

2d. There are those who believe the original manuscripts to have been infallible, and who yet think it possible that they may have been essentially changed in the translations, and that it will not do to claim too much for one translation as against another.

3d. There are those who believe the Bible to be, like other books, in part defective; that it teaches, or may be honestly interpreted to teach, some things that ought not to be taught. That at all events and on the best showing, it enters or is interpreted to enter the realm of sincere religious differences, and therefore should not be mingled with that system of public education whose aim is to teach universally accepted principles of science and universally accepted facts of history.

And these three classes are agreed, for the several reasons mentioned, in demanding that the use of the Bible in the public schools cease. Now what is the legitimate function of legislation here? How should our government treat this question? In the light of the principles we have laid down, the answer is plain. If it can be shown that the reading of the Bible in the public schools helps the individual to the highest possible development of his faculties, and does not interfere with a like liberty of development in all, then it may and should be maintained. If on the contrary this cannot be shown, it should be at once abolished. It is true there are some who claim that this custom is a positive help in the development of the religious faculties of their children. I do not agree with them, but will not now argue the point. Granting it for the sake of the argument, where does it bring us? Why, there are others whose religious development is, or is claimed to be, positively retarded and perverted by it, as, for instance, the Catholic. If then the religious development of one class is had at the expense of the religious development of another class, the State, representing both and all classes, and bound to treat all to the same equality of rights, must decline to legislate for the one as against the other, and must so legislate as to place both on the same footing before the law. How can it do that? In only one way: by completely secularizing the public school system. The Catholic, whatever may be the falsity of his general attitude, has a grievance; any one, whatever his religious belief, has a grievance, until we so order our legislation that it shall cease doing in this matter just what it ought not to do, and do what sound principles and the exigencies of the case require. Some say let it do nothing; but that would leave the regulation to personal caprice and local determination. If the system of public schools is to be maintained,—and spite of all just criticisms, of which there may be many, few of us would want to see it abolished,—if this system is to be maintained, it will be under public regulation; and in view of the demand of the Catholic, and I hope of all radicals also, its highest success will depend in no small degree upon positive enactment excluding the Bible from the public school. If then the Catholic is not satisfied, it will be his fault and not ours. Now it is our fault, and ours alone.

That is one example of a misuse of the legislative function. Here is another: There are some States in this Union, there is at least one in New England, where persons of different color cannot legally marry. It is sometimes said the negro question is settled. It will never be settled so long as such an infamous statute as that remains. Imagine two hearts drawn together by the irresistible attraction of mutual love, an attraction implanted in human nature everywhere,—an attraction which, under favoring circumstances, may grow into the holiest relation the world knows,—and a sovereign State stepping in and saying, Stand back, I cannot recognize these bands; the attraction is nothing; the sympathy is nothing; the love is nothing, because—one of you is black and the other white. From such an iniquitous piece of legislation as that, I would, were the case mine, appeal as confidently to the higher law of personal liberty as I would have done from the Fugitive Slave Bill. It is another relic of the "barbarism of slavery." But calmly, philosophically considered, can it be shown that the development of the highest faculties of either party will be helped by prohibiting such an union? To ask such a question seems like opening an issue supposed long since to have been practically settled. We discovered it rather late,—but let us not forget the discovery,—that the color of the skin is a superficial difference as compared with the lungs, heart, and all the more vital physical, mental, and moral organs which all have in common. Let us insist, and keep on insisting, that legislation in this matter shall lift itself to the level of the nineteenth century; that it shall cease to be degraded to the service of an oppressive act of tyranny; and shall be consecrated to the higher and legitimate use of protecting personal liberty.

I might keep on raising points in this way; but there is one issue of such vital interest to liberals, and one too which is so much befogged by prejudice and passion, that I feel compelled to give it special attention. I refer to the question of repeal or reform of the obscene literature laws. The arrest and imprisonment of certain parties for sending obscene publications, or what are supposed to be such, through the mails, has aroused strong feeling and naturally enough wide differences of opinion. The selection too of an agent to do this work, narrow and bigoted in his views and unprincipled in his methods, has only served to increase the difficulty. Thoroughly incapable of discriminating between honestly held theories which, however obnoxious they may be, have some rights in a country where free thought, free speech, and a free press are supposed to be sacredly maintained, and a base traffic designed and carried on for the sole purpose of coining money by appealing to and debauching human passions,—a traffic which under no condition of things should have any right save that of a fair trial and a speedy conviction,—he has succeeded admirably in increasing the mental and moral fog in which the whole question has been enveloped. He has forced a discussion concerning what should be considered obscenity in the eye of the law, if indeed anything should be, which is becoming more and more general, and which, in the shape it has been taking recently, is fraught with serious consequences to the liberal movement in religion. To this discussion there are really three parties.

1st. Those who uphold the law as it is, and consider the operations of its agent in the main justifiable. 2d. Those who, outraged by the interpretation of the law and the manner of its enforcement, demand its immediate and total repeal. And 3d. Those who agree with the second party in denouncing some of the operations under the law, but dissent in toto from their theory of what they call the "rights" of an abominable traffic, and who therefore ask for its amendment. These three parties are popularly known as the Comstock party, the party of repeal, and the party of reform.

Let me say just here that amid all the discussion of these three points, I know of no one who has shown such a clear conception of the whole problem involved as has Francis Ellingwood Abbot; and I say this with the greater satisfaction because, in the value I set upon the agitation of social and industrial questions, I have often found myself differing widely from the brave editor of THE INDEX. But in the controversy over what he calls the question of repeal or reform, he has with rare ability and a keen moral perception planted himself upon the solid foundations where, it seems to me, all liberals should stand; and I earnestly and unequivocally place myself by his side.

Leave the law as it is, repeal it, or reform it, which? In the light of the principles laid down concerning the legitimate function of legislation, I cannot see how we can help saying emphatically no! to the first two questions, and as emphatically yes! to the third. To leave the law as it is under the interpretations already given it is to make it possible to arrest and imprison a man for honestly held and expressed opinions. Is it right to do this? That is a very serious question. Let us not decide it hastily. Let us suppose the worst case of this kind conceivable, the advocacy of theories concerning the relations of the sexes which you and I would agree in pronouncing unclean; let us go farther and suppose them advocated in language such as to us would seem vulgar and without excuse, but which, nevertheless, is the best expression of an honestly held theory which a crude and unbalanced mind can attain. Suppose all this,—shall the law interfere? Again let me say, Let us not be hasty. Before answering, let us remember how often the spirit of intolerance, in the form of "I am holier than thou," "I am right and you are wrong," has ridden coach and six over the dearest of human rights and the most tender of human feelings. Let us remember how in all ages persecution has been carried on in the name of morality. Let us remember, what it is now very hard to remember, how men have been mobbed, persecuted, martyred, out of this very attempt to force the views of certain people, possibly the majority, upon certain other people, possibly the minority. Let us remember, also, the frailties of human nature, that the best of us are liable to go wrong, and that, according to what seem to us fundamental principles, the only safety for the human mind is to allow it to develop in freedom in its own God-given way. Let us remember all this when we answer the question, Is it a legitimate use of human law to interfere with the advocacy of honestly held theories? To my mind there can be but one answer to that. You will remember, some of you, that at the breaking out of the rebellion the question was much discussed, What constitutes treason? And all clear-minded people reached the conclusion which was that of the law, that there must be something amounting to an overt act. If a man believed a State had a right to secede, he was free to express his belief publicly or privately; but if he joined the Confederate army at the South or sought to incite resistance at the North, that was quite another thing. Is it not just so in this case? So long as a man simply advocates honest opinions in an honest manner, is he not exercising an inalienable right with which statute law should not interfere? And if he offends against decency in such advocacy, or what to us seems decency, is it not sounder in principle and safer in practice to leave him to the judgment of the moral sense of mankind than to make an apparent martyr of him by subjecting him to fines and imprisonment. I think nearly every case which has agitated the public, and certainly the one most prominent of late in New England, illustrates the correctness of this position. The average moral sense of the people of New England, a pretty safe thing to trust, was taking good care in a quiet way of the author and agitator, when the law stepped in and raised him and his advocacy to an eminence they could never have reached otherwise. It did not wait for anything which could be called an overt act, and so aggravated unnecessarily and most unwisely the difficulty. I have no special sympathy with the sufferers by this action. It is not saying too much to say they had done all two people could do to make freedom of speech and pen harder for those of us who wish sometimes to exercise them in channels not altogether popular. But if we are to have a censorship of thought set up, who knows who may be the next victim? It may be you or I, friends, tomorrow. I sincerely hold views believed by some honest and to-be-respected people immoral,—why, this platform represents some ideas, in which we are all agreed, which to good and true people in some of the sterner faiths seem utterly bad. And while we are unwilling to allow these people the privilege of shutting us in their prison walls for our opinions, shall we claim the privilege of shutting other people up for their opinions? No; legislation passes beyond its province when it interferes with the right to form and freely express honest convictions.

The law in question is, then, in its present form and interpretation an abuse of legislation. Shall it be repealed?

Before answering this question, let us ask, What does repeal mean? Now there is such a thing as corrupt and what we call obscene literature. There is such a thing as a vile and wide-spread traffic in pictures and printed matter, carried on for the express purpose of coining money by appealing to and perverting human passions. It enters our schools, it meets our children on street corners, it stares at them out of shop-windows,—so-called respectable shop-windows too. That such a traffic is always an evil and never anything but evil, no one will deny. But it is claimed that freedom of thought, speech, and press require that we should make no legal effort to restrain it; that it is simple and unmitigated tyranny to inflict imprisonment for such an offence. Let us suppose a man caught poisoning the water which a family or a great city of families were to drink. We should hardly advocate the abolition of all laws against murder, because forsooth it would interfere with his individual liberty to do what he chose. And I confess I can but doubt a man's ethics when he regards the poisoning of the mind as a less iniquitous thing than the poisoning of the body. It does seem to me that before we make the trade in obscenity free, we should grant permission to the vendors of deadly poisons to infect ad libitum the Pawtucket, and by abolishing all quarantine regulations should invite the small-pox to dwell in our midst; for obscene literature is deadly poison, it is small-pox to the mind and conscience. By our definition of liberty, all such permission to do that which corrupts and degrades humanity, instead of helping its development, is a direct violation of the law of personal freedom, and, however much it may take its name, is under all circumstances the same ugly "license to do wrong" which has always claimed to be the virtue to which in every fibre of its make-up it is diametrically opposed. If, therefore, legislation has any use whatsoever, it can never be better employed than in protecting the free, natural growth of the young mind from the sinful and criminal influences which an immoral traffic, whatever its nature, would throw around it. And it can never be so false to its duty as when it devotes its time and energies, as in truth it generally does, to the protection of property to the exclusion of a reasonable care for the protection of persons; thus demonstrating anew the truth of Emerson's assertion that—

"Things are in the saddle,
And ride mankind."

There would be far less danger than there really is from this view, if only those who act from motives of self-interest entertained it. But there is a large number of people who advocate total repeal, because they fear if they do otherwise they shall infringe upon personal liberty. These parties are for the most part liberals in religion, and they have brought us face to face with the issue which sooner or later meets every body of thinkers.—Are religion and morality inseparable, or can they be divorced at pleasure? The liberals who are willing to let morality go—for they it is who give to the repeal movement what strength it has—are, it seems to me, making a most fatal mistake. When I say let morality go, I do not mean to impeach them personally. I know many of them to be among the purest of men and women in their individual lives. So has it been with many in our churches; but that does not alter the fact that the general attitude of the Church has been to divorce religion from morality, and make the profession of a belief of infinitely greater consequence than the living of a true and noble life. Just so is it with the liberals of whom I speak. Their public attitude is that of divorcing liberty (which rightly understood is the soul of our religion) from morality. In the name of freedom, they propose to open the floodgates of immorality.

Well, friends, if this contest is to come, perhaps the sooner the better. I have heretofore expressed my conviction, which I beg leave to repeat whenever occasion offers, that there can be no true liberty without morality, and that nothing could be worse for the liberal cause than to have a wholesome restraint upon a plainly immoral traffic condemned by its advocates. It seems to me that on this point Mr. Abbot has not been one whit too strenuous. I can but agree fully with him in the view that free religion, by virtue of the indissoluble union in it of freedom and religion, each inclusive of the other, and both inclusive of morality, is naturally and inevitably opposed to the law as it stands; is as naturally and inevitably opposed to its total repeal; and therefore must insist upon such amendment of it as, while maintaining with unabated rigor its restrictions upon the circulation of literature designed to corrupt the moral sense, shall not punish the honest advocacy, by speech or press, of views supposed by their holders to represent a higher and purer condition of living than any yet attained. If there is any other way than this in which to avoid intolerance on the one hand and licentiousness on the other, I have yet to see it; and if this is not a fair and righteous distinction between the use and abuse of legislation, I know not what is.

Very hastily and imperfectly I have now cited one example of the failure to distinguish between true and false legislation, from each of the three great divisions of our system of government, the municipal, the State, the national. I might multiply instances; but perhaps that is unnecessary. I might also show how often we put our emphasis on legislation of secondary importance and pass lightly over that of primary importance; how near to criminality it comes when we so neglect well-proven principles of hygiene in our systems of sewerage, or our total lack of anything which can be called a system, as to invite yellow fever and small-pox and diphtheria and kindred diseases to prey upon our citizens and pick off the members of our own families. I might call your attention to the laws for the benefit of great corporations,—a vast accumulation of good and bad legislation,—and show how comparatively little has been done to protect the subjects of those corporations—the operative in the mill and the passenger in the railroad train—from the accidents sure sooner or later to come as the result of insufficient precaution and care. I might show you how much more attention the interests of manufactures and commerce and agriculture receive in every legislature in this country than those of education, the prevention of crime, and the reform of the criminal. I might go still further, and show you how much greater in national affairs seems the desire to promote harmony and peace than the desire to preserve the rights of man, as if there could be peace and harmony upon any other basis than that of impartial justice. All that would show, not what is sometimes claimed, that legislation is always an evil, but that the failure to use it for its legitimate purposes is an evil. Let it make our cities fit to live in, let it teach the State and nation to treat the citizen as the first object of their thoughtful care; then it is a blessing and only a blessing, without which civilization would be barbarism and society a mob. If the world is better to-day than in the olden time, if this country is better than some, possibly all, others, it is because we have come near to that estate where "Sovereign law, the State's collected will,

O'er thrones and globes elate,
Sits empress, crowning good, repressing ill."

How important it is, then, to draw the line wisely; to see that the law is made to serve man, never to enslave him; to make it an insurmountable obstacle in the way of evil, and a strong defence to whatsoever principles are honest and free and pure!

There is a beautiful engraving familiar to many of you, representing the Roman Cornelia and a lady of the Campagna. While the lady is ostentatiously showing her diamonds, Cornelia, with her right arm around one son and her left hand reaching forth to the other, exclaims, with all a fond mother's pride, "These are my jewels." History has not informed us what became of the diamonds, but it has told us that these two sons of Cornelia became leaders of the Roman Republic.

May it be the good fortune of our Republic to count as its priceless jewels, not its sails whitening every sea and its manufactures making their way into every realm, but the high honor and moral integrity of its sons and daughters.

May our Commonwealth remember that inside its walls of brick and stone, and tending the machinery which makes so much of its prosperity, are veritable men and women, with brains to think and hearts to love,—its real and most enduring wealth.

May our city never forget that more important, far more important, than any other question it can deal with, is the physical and moral health of its people, without which fine streets and buildings are but a mockery and sham.

And so every branch of our government becoming inspired with the spirit of Cornelia, regarding its men, women, and children, of whatever clime or condition, its most precious jewels,—may we not hope for truer and purer legislation?

At all events, let those of us who believe in freedom in religion and religion in freedom assert our faith in the conscience as the centre of all true action, whether inside or outside legislative halls. Let us stand with unflinching purpose for the indissoluble union between religion and morality.

Thus, and thus only, shall we usher in that liberty which means the inalienable right of the human soul, of all human souls, to the highest possible development; thus and thus only, secure such legislation as, accomplishing this end, shall be liberty's strong defence and shield.

Then we can say with the poet, as never before,—

"O Law! fair form of liberty,
God's light is on thy brow;
O Liberty! thou soul of law,
God's very self art thou.

"O daughter of the bleeding past!
O hope the prophets saw!
God give us law and liberty,
And liberty in law."

CURTAINMENT

OF THE POWER OF THE CATHOLIC EPISCOPACY OF THIS COUNTRY.

Some weeks ago there was a report from Rome that a change had been decided on in the administration of the Catholic system in the United States. We paid no attention to the rumor, because similar reports had previously proved to be without foundation. In the last days of Pius IX. it was stated that he was about to remove the Church in America from under the control of the Propaganda. But he never did, and not even the appointment of an American Cardinal has brought the looked-for change about. It is generally known that the Church is under the missionary system, unlike the Latin and Continental churches, which are under canonical law. The bishops in the United States have the fullest control over the clergy, removing them from one place to another at will, with or without their consent or that of the congregations. The priests have no choice, but submit; though infrequently they have appealed to the Pope, and on a few occasions to the civil courts of the country. The most noted case of appeal to the courts was that of Father Stack against Bishop O'Hara, of Scranton, which was, it will be remembered, decided in favor of the priest, who had refused to relinquish his pastorate in Williamsport, at the order of his bishop.

It now appears that the reports of a coming change were well founded. The Sacred Congregation of the Propagation of the Faith at Rome has addressed a letter of "Instructions" to Archbishop Gibbons, of Baltimore, to be by him, as the incumbent of the oldest See in the United States, communicated to the other prelates of the country. According to the title of the document, the "Instructions" are upon the subject of the hearing and deciding of criminal and disciplinary causes of the clergy. It bears date July 20, 1878, and is signed by Cardinal Simeoni, as Prefect of the Propaganda, formerly Papal Secretary of State. It opens by stating that the forms of procedure in criminal causes of the clergy, ordered by the Second Plenary Council of Baltimore, have not given satisfaction. Missionary rectors who have been tried and convicted under them, especially those rectors who have been removed from their posts, have made complaints against these forms, which complaints in some instances have been forwarded to the Apostolic See. These cases have been increasing in frequency, and, owing to defects in the rescripts received at the Vatican, it has been hardly possible to judge of the complaints correctly. To the end, therefore, that innocent clergymen shall not be punished nor the guilty escape justice, the Sacred Congregation, with the approbation of Pope Leo XIII., has drawn up a code of procedure.

It is prescribed that each of the bishops in the United States shall call a diocesan synod as soon as possible, and select therein five, or, if by reason of peculiar circumstances so many cannot be had, three, at least, of the most worthy priests in the diocese, who are learned in canon law, to constitute a judicial council or commission of investigation. One of them shall be authorized to preside. Their duty shall be "to hear and pass upon the causes, criminal and disciplinary, of priests and other clerics, according to the form hereinafter to be proposed, as also to aid the bishop in passing sentence." The councillors "will sedulously endeavor to pursue their investigations accurately, and to adduce all the testimony and obtain from the accused all that is deemed necessary to the establishment of truth, and shall furnish good and substantial reasons for pronouncing a safe and prudent sentence."

Then follows a provision which strips the bishops of the unquestioned power they have hitherto exercised in the removal of priests at will. It is prescribed that, "whenever there is question of the removal of the rector of a mission, the same cannot be ejected from the office committed to him unless by the vote and council of at least three members of the above-mentioned commission called to try the case." The commissioners are to hold office in the interim of the synodical meetings.

The form of procedure provides that the commission shall not be summoned to meet unless a statement of the case in writing shall be made by the bishop, and the missionary rector shall have chosen to be tried rather than surrender his office voluntarily. The bishop shall appoint the time and place of meeting, notifying each councillor by letter. He shall present a transcript of the case to the council, and shall cite the missionary rector in question by letter to appear before the council, and present in writing an answer, with proofs to sustain it. When the council is met, the bishop shall enjoin secrecy upon the councillors respecting the proceedings, and warn them to be careful what they say or do, that no grounds for suits of libel in the courts may be given. Witnesses may be summoned on both sides, and shall be examined by or through the president of the council. Those for the prosecution shall be questioned in the absence of the missionary rector, and the finding of the council shall be certified to the bishop, each councillor furnishing a written opinion where there is not unanimity of judgment. There is an appeal from the council to the metropolitan.

The change thus provided for will be a grateful one, doubtless, to the Catholic priests of this country. It breaks the tyranny of the bishops over them, and submits their grievances to the judgment of their own brethren. It is also a step toward the bringing of the Catholic people in this country into closer relations with the Holy See. We shall be curious to see what the Ultramontanes think of it. The old system is in perfect harmony with their cherished doctrine of centralization. The new one is not, as it seems to us.—Independent, Dec. 5.

ORIGIN OF THE "JINGOS."

The World of November 20 contained the following curious paragraph upon this subject:—

"It is a common belief that the term Jingo was first applied to a certain political party, about two years ago, by Mr. G. Holyoake. The name is, however, very much older. In a recent interesting article in the Fortnightly Review, on 'Epping Forest,' Mr. A. R. Wallace enumerates the following trees as suitable for planting: 'The elegant cryptomeria and retinosporas, and the remarkable Salisburia, or ginkgo tree,—a pine with foliage like that of a gigantic maiden-hair fern.' On applying to a distinguished scientific friend, I learn that the ginkgo or jingo tree received its name of Salisburia from Smith so long ago as 1796. Was Smith also among the prophets?"

The editor of the World (November 27) says: "Mr. George Jacob Holyoake sends me the following," which appears in the department of that paper, entitled "What the World Says," signed "Atlas":—

"The new peripatetic party born of this government were not named Jingos until my letter appeared in the Daily News, to which you have referred. Mr. Auberon Herbert being assailed in Hyde Park by unclassified followers of Lieutenant Armit, my object was to mark them by a name by which they might be conveniently known, as similar creatures were likely to arise elsewhere. A title, as you will be aware, to obtain currency, must be brief, characteristic, and musical. I selected one from the Jingo song they sang, and I entitled my letter, 'The Jingos in the Park'; and, defining them as the new class of music-hall patriots who had begun to infest legitimate political meetings, I knew nothing then of the ginkgo tree, or I would have advised the Ranger of the Park to plant one for the Jingos, just as we have a Reformers' Tree, where working-class politicians often meet. The term Jingo is older than the name of the ginkgo tree mentioned by Mr. Wallace, just as the Cave of Adullam was a name known long anterior to Mr. Bright's selection of it to designate the eccentric confederates of party discontent who met in the Tea Room of the House of Commons."—Secular Review, Dec. 7.

HISTORIC HOAXES.

THE SUCCESS OF THE FOOL-HUNTER IN ALL AGES—THE GREAT CAT HOAX, THE BOTTLE SWINDLE, AND VARIOUS FRENCH IMPOSITIONS.

The fool-hunter has, from time immemorial, been one of the most successful of sportsmen. No matter what game he flies at, he never fails to bring it down. Here are specimens:—

In August, 1815, just before Napoleon I. started on his exile to St. Helena, a quantity of handbills were distributed through the city of Chester, England, at the direction of a very respectable-looking, Quakerly-looking sort of a personage, informing the public that a great number of genteel families had embarked at Plymouth, to proceed to St. Helena with the troops appointed to guard the ex-Emperor. Now, St. Helena, the bills stated, was cursed with a plague of rats, and the British ministry had pledged itself to clear the island of these noxious animals, for the benefit of the resident citizens. Accordingly all good Britons were called upon to furnish their quantum of grown cats or thriving kittens, for the carrying out of this purpose. The government was willing to pay the piper, and, in addition to free transportation in a vessel to be specially chartered for the purpose, offered for each "athletic, full-grown tom-cat" sixteen shillings; for each "adult female puss" ten shillings; and half that sum for every vigorous kitten that could "awill milk." The result can be imagined. Within three days over three thousand cats were collected in Chester, the city was a pandemonium, and one street, in which the cat merchants had been directed by the bills to assemble, was the scene of positive and bloody riots. Meantime, some mischievous boys had let the cats out of their bags, and a colossal hunt had to be organized among the hoaxed spectators. In one day five hundred of the obnoxious felines had been thrown into the river Dee, and Chester for months was afflicted with swarms of stray cats as a result of the freak.

The most glaring yet successful of old-time hoaxes was perpetrated in 1749. The Duke of Montague wagered that, let a man advertise the most impossible thing in the world, he would find fools enough in London to fill a play-house to see it, and pay handsomely for the privilege. "Surely," said Lord Chesterfield, "if a man should say he would jump into a quart bottle, nobody would believe that." A wager was made on this basis, and the following advertisement inserted in the papers:—

"At the New Theatre, in the Haymarket, on Monday next, the 12th inst., is to be seen a person who performs the several most surprising things following, viz.: 1. He takes a common walking-cane from any of the spectators, and thereupon plays the music of every instrument now in use, and likewise sings to surprising perfection. 2. He presents you with a common wine-bottle, which any of the spectators may first examine; this bottle is placed on a table in the middle of the stage, and he (without any equivocation) goes into it in sight of all the spectators, and sings in it; during his stay in the bottle any person may handle it and see plainly that it does not exceed a common tavern-bottle. Those on the stage, or in the boxes, may come in masked habits, if agreeable to them, and the performer, if desired, will inform them who they are. Stage, 7a. 6d."

Another section of the advertisement cannot fail to interest the believer in Spiritualism. It says:—

"NOTE.—If any gentlemen or ladies (after the above performance), either singly or in company, in or out of mask, are desirous of seeing a representation of any deceased person, such as husband or wife, sister or brother, or any intimate friend of either sex, upon making a gratuity to the performer, they shall be gratified by seeing and conversing with them for some minutes, as if alive; likewise, if desired, he would tell you your most secret thoughts in your past life, and give you a full view of persons who have injured you, whether dead or alive. For those gentlemen and ladies who are desirous of seeing this last part, there is a private room provided."

At the designated time the theatre was crammed from pit to dome. When the appointed time passed and the conjurer did not appear, a horrible uproar rose. One person in the audience proposed, if the lookers-on would pay double price, to crawl into a pint bottle. Finally some one threw a lighted candle on the stage. Within ten minutes more the theatre was gutted, the benches converted into a large bonfire in front of the building, and the drop-curtain hoisted on a pole, presumably as a banner to the triumph of public gullibility. A number of people were blamed for this hoax, notably Foote, the actor, who was one of the lessees of the theatre; but the real author was the Duke of Montague.

Busy as the French were with their national troubles, they found time during the darkest days of the revolution to go booby-hunting. In March, 1792, an "entertainment" was advertised in the Place de Greve. A certain Professor Bussy declared his intention to walk from one side of the square to the other in mid-air, naked, and without artificial aid. All Paris turned out and spent an unsheltered afternoon in a terrific rain-storm, to be disappointed. Next year another swindler hired a court-yard in the Rue du Temple, and got five francs a head from seventeen hundred people, who wanted to see him burned alive in a charcoal furnace, and afterward reappear, phoenix-like, in the smoke from the chimney. This personage found a rival a month later in a man who promised to publicly convert himself into a stew, acting as his own butcher and cook, and then serving himself, done to a turn, around to his audience, in the guise of a waiter. When the rage for mesmerism was at its height, a so-styled Professor Misamer (note the imitation) called for ten thousand people to assemble in the Champs de Mars and be mesmerized by him in three simple motions, after which they would be able to go about exercising the new force by themselves. Three times the number called for paid half a franc apiece for the pleasure of learning that they had been swindled out of the gate-money. This hoax led to a horrible catastrophe, for the people who were victimized began, as usual, to fight among themselves, and in the disturbance twenty-one women and nearly fifty children were maimed or suffocated.—Advertiser, Dec. 11.

GEORGE HENRY LEWES.

George Henry Lewes died in London, Sunday, December 1, at the age of sixty-one, very suddenly, as it would appear. Although he has of late years been somewhat overshadowed by the greatness of his second wife, known to the world as George Eliot, he was a man of varied attainments and extraordinary powers, and did valuable work in many departments of thought. He began his career as clerk in a large foreign house, but he soon abandoned money-making for medicine, which he studied both in England and Germany, taking especial interest in physiology. Proficient in many languages, he fixed at length upon literature as a profession; and literature with him included everything worth thinking or writing. From the age of twenty-one until his death, his pen was constantly in his hand, and everywhere he was a critic. A mere list of his contributions to the leading reviews would far exceed our space. In 1849 he founded the Leader, and in 1864 the Fortnightly Review. He wrote three or four novels, now hardly known, although one or two of them still figure in the collections of Harpers and Tauchnitz. Both as critic and dramatist, he devoted special attention to the stage. In 1850, "The Noble Heart," a five-act tragedy of his, was produced at the London Olympic; and it was soon followed by nearly a dozen other plays, more or less taken from the French, and more or less successful, under the nom de plume of "Singsby Lawrence." Among them was an English version of Balzac's fine play "Mercadet," called by Mr. Lewes "A Game of Speculation," which Charles Mathews used to act very successfully. Before this, Mr. Lewes had published an admirable little history of the Spanish classical drama; and in 1875 his Actors, and the Art of Acting was printed, and soon after reprinted here, a collection of criticisms mostly upon actors whom he had seen and studied, and perhaps the best work in English on the actor's art. He wrote several biographies, among them one of Robespierre, and one which is probably Mr. Lewes's best known work, that of Goethe, of which a third and final edition was published in London in one volume in 1875. It is an admirable example of what the biography of a great author should be. Ample, but not too extended, exact and appreciative, written in an easy style, full of apt illustrations and references to other literatures, this Life of Goethe is interesting even to those who know nothing of him save his name, and leaves them with the desire to end their ignorance at once. In Germany it is cited as authority, and in France it has achieved the honor of plagiarism. Mr. Lewes' work on the Physiology of Common Life was for many years the best popular work on the subject, and is not yet quite antiquated, notwithstanding the great strides physiology has taken in the last few years.

It was in philosophy, however, that he attempted most. He brought to its study a mind colored by his scientific training, and he made it his great object to carry into metaphysics the methods of modern physical research, seeking to solve some of the abstrusest problems of thought by the positive analysis and negative synthesis of his materialism,—for materialist he certainly was. His first important philosophical work, his Biographical History, was published in 1845. Eight years later appeared his work on Comte's Philosophy of the Sciences,—no mere translation, but a re-examination of the subject in the light Comte had thrown upon it. He never followed the Frenchman in his dogmatic vagaries; and later in life he passed more completely out of his power, though, like Mr. Mill, he was always considerably influenced by Comte's methods of analysis. His most elaborate philosophical work, on the Problems of Life and Mind (both volumes of which were fully reviewed in the Nation), was an attempt to extend to a portion of metaphysics methods which both the positive and idealist schools had held inapplicable to it, and he considered that he had redeemed to accurate thought much that had been too hastily given over to speculation; and in a measure he did so. But his work was injured by the extent to which he carried his German notion of unifying all relative terms; and his death left his work unfinished, with hardly the preliminary excavations completed for the foundation of the new creed he proposed to erect. His ability was so well recognized that he was an acknowledged leader of his school in England. His religious views were very radical, and very negative in their character. Their principal interest comes from the profound influence he exerted over the great novelist. The bald faith that satisfied the vigorous brain of her husband, while it compelled her acquiescence, never satisfied her woman's soul. Perhaps, too, the fading of her romantic sentiment, and her growing habit of didactic philosophizing, are to be attributed in part to her husband's influence; but it would be very unfair to place upon him the burden of her faults without also crediting him with something of the development of her virtues. Without saying anything as to the other aspects of their relation, we must admit that he surrounded her sensitive genius with an atmosphere in which it thrived steadily, and grew to be England's chiefest artistic glory; and perhaps he may be better known for this in the years to come than for his own original work. Yet he has not only given to the world works upon dramatic art and organic science, upon history and metaphysics, which, by common consent, rank among the best of their kind, but he poured out for nearly two score years a flood of essays that were never thrown aside unread. His style was clear and often eloquent, though he gained the clearness sometimes at the expense of completeness, and his eloquence was not the compulsion of passion. His insight was keen, if it did not fathom the profoundest depths. His critical taste was keen and delicate, but it was the intellectual more than the æsthetic side that appealed to him. Extraordinarily prolific as he was as a writer, he was never dull or weak or commonplace, never obscure or cowardly or false. He was a characteristic man of our time, and literature loses much by his death.—Nation, Dec. 12.

MISS HELEN TAYLOR AND "VERACITY."

Sir,—As Miss Helen Taylor lectured under the auspices of the British Secular Union there is a propriety in this criticism appearing in the Secular Review. I heard the lecture in question. Miss Taylor said if a man, escaping from unjust pursuers, came to a place where two roads diverged, and took one, it would be the duty of an observer, when questioned, not to deceive the pursuers by a falsehood. A lady said the questioned person should keep silence. Miss Taylor, in her reply, explained that of course silence, if practicable, would be right, but that the hypothesis did not admit that refuge, the only alternative being truth or falsehood. This was the case of conscience, as I understood it. Otherwise the moral difficulty is very much lessened, if not quite removed. I give Miss Taylor all due credit for candor. I like people to have the courage of their opinions. Nevertheless, it appeared to me that the lady did not carry the audience with her here. The chairman hoped that none of us might be placed in such a painful position.

Miss Taylor's proposition is, that no conceivable circumstances can override the obligation to veracity. I differ from her. If I should be unhappily placed in the supposed situation, I must either tell a falsehood, or be accessory to murder. The sin of murder is so much greater than that of falsehood that I should conceive it, not merely excusable, but a positive duty, to deceive the pursuers under such circumstances. This case of conscience is somewhat vague, and one which rarely occurs. Let us suppose another more real, and which might happen to anybody. I will suppose Miss Taylor one evening passing through the Seven Dials. Suddenly a panting, hunted woman rushes up to her, and cries: "My husband is after me with a knife. For God's sake say I went down there, and save my life." Pointing to a street, the woman vanishes in the opposite direction. Presently the man comes up, mad with rage, and questions Miss Taylor: "Which way did my wife go?" I suppose silence impossible; no alternative but truth or falsehood. According to her theory, Miss Taylor ought to tell the truth. "Truth ought to be told, whatever the consequences might be. Falsehood was never even a good policy. The good of the world must be bought by the martyrdom of individuals," etc.

Will it benefit the world that this woman should be murdered? In order to give the defender of veracity at all hazards every reasonable advantage, I will not even suppose the woman innocent. I will suppose that she has given her husband the greatest provocation a wife can give. The life of this woman is in Miss Taylor's hands. By a word, or even a silent gesture, she may save the woman for future repentance, or doom her to immediate death. Ought Miss Taylor to tell the truth, when in a minute or two she may hear the death-cry of the wretched woman, or even be an eye-witness of her murder? Ought Miss Taylor to be accessory to a murder by telling the truth, or prevent it by telling an untruth? Would Miss Taylor really think it her duty to put this intending murderer on the track of his wife?

I cannot, of course, tell how Miss Taylor would act in such a terrible emergency. I think she ought to choose the latter alternative. My impression is, that, independently of her sympathy for "woman's rights," a true womanly, and indeed healthy, human instinct would prompt her to cast her theory to the winds, and save the woman's life, by deceiving the husband for his own good. It would, I think, be easy to prove, in such a case, falsehood or deception a positive duty. There is no rule without exception: and, in such a case, it would be, I think, morally wrong to tell the truth. I will go further, and say it would be morally right to deceive an intending murderer, even if it were possible to take refuge in silence. To a man or woman telling an untruth from such a noble motive the grand sentiment of Sterne would apply: "The accusing spirit which flew up to Heaven's Chancery with the untruth blushed as he gave it in; and the recording angel, as he wrote it down, dropped a tear on the word, and blotted it out forever." Miss Taylor, telling a falsehood under such exceptional circumstances, would be, in the words of Horace:—

"Splendide mendax, et in omne virgo Nobilis ævum."

Yours truly, J. McGRIGOR ALLAN.
—Secular Review, Dec. 7, 1878.

ENDLESS HELL TORMENT.

THE OLD DOCTRINE OF A HELL OF ENDLESS SUFFERING IN LITERAL FLAMES STILL TAUGHT TO CHILDREN.

The Sunday School Teacher's Quarterly is an evangelical work published in Chicago by David C. Cook, editor and proprietor, Rev. C. N. Pond associate editor. Each number contains the lessons for a quarter, and is designed for the whole country. In many respects, it is well managed, and contains much that is valuable; but the doctrine it inculcates for the hundreds of thousands of children is of the most horrid description. It regards the parable of the rich man and Lazarus as a piece of real history, and makes it to teach the endless damnation of the soul in hell. Some fourteen pages at the close of the work are devoted to spiritual songs, which the publisher recommends all schools to adopt and sing in preference to all others. Among others is the following, prepared expressly to be sung at the time the above lesson was to be heard:—

The Rich Man and Lazarus.

See Dives in the flames below,
With burning thirst consumed,
Writhing in torment, pain, and woe,
To endless sorrow doomed.

CHORUS.—Sinners, beware; the warning take;
Avoid the flames of hell;
Escape the fiery, burning lake,
That you in Heaven may dwell.

With supplicating voice he cries
For comfort and relief;
But Abram his request denies,
Nor will assuage his grief.

CHORUS.—Sinners, beware, etc.
The wretched beggar at his door
Ascends to joys above,
To live in bliss forevermore,
And praise redeeming love.

CHORUS.—Sinners, beware, etc.
O God, assist me by thy grace,
To shun the pains of hell;
Conduct me to thy heavenly place
Eternally to dwell.

CHORUS.—Sinners, beware, etc.

It is said that the shocking doctrines of the creeds are not taught at the present time, as of old. Nor are they in the pulpit; but in the Sabbath-school they are still enforced, and, if once instilled into the minds of children, eradication is next to impossible. The Romish Church says: "Give us the first ten years of the child's life, and the remainder may be yours."

In this country, there are thousands of children, from Universalist families, in what are regarded as evangelical schools, to receive instruction more or less impregnated with the above shocking doctrine. Is it safe, is it wise, is it kind, on the part of the parent, to subject his child to the possibility of a belief that will fill his soul and all his being with sadness, and possibly embitter his whole life?

It may be said that the above hymn was not designed for this Sabbath-school Quarterly, but got into the work through mistake. Instead, the publisher informs his readers that all the hymns of the work are "written expressly for the Quarterly," are "submitted to the Board of Sunday-school Music, and approved by them," before they can be "admitted." The above saintly effusion, so full of gospel sweetness and cheerfulness and beautiful Christian thought for the children, was written expressly for this work, by Rev. Joseph H. Martin, D.D., and was approved by the Sunday-school Board. This very man would not dare to read that hymn in his pulpit, but he thinks he can instill its sentiment into the minds of little children in the Sabbath-school with impunity. But the public will judge both him and the terrible doctrine of his creed, and pronounce upon them!—Gospel Banner.

Poetry.

JOSEPH, THE NEX PERCE.

From the northern desolation
Comes a cry of exultation:
"It is ended. He has yielded. And the stubborn fight is won!"

Let the nation in its glory
Bow with shame before the story
Of the hero it has ruined, and the evil it has done.

How he prayed while hope remained,
Through the white man's hands were stained
With the blood that cried for vengeance of his murdered kin and clan,
For the home the good God gave him,
And the treaty sworn to save him,
For the shelter of his children, for the right to be a man.

Then the troops began to hound him,
And he wrapped his blanket round him,
And he called his braves to follow, and he smote them hip and thigh.
But the hosts grew vast and vaster,
And the whirlwind of disaster
Drove him out into the mountains and beneath an alien sky.

Through the continental ridges,
Over tottering torrent bridges,
By the verge of black abyasses, in the shade of mountain hoar;
Herds and wives and children bearing,
Months he journeyed, toiling, darning,
With an army trailed behind him and another crouched before.

Thrice the sudden blow descended,
Roar and flash and clashing blended;
Twice his rear-guard faced and checked them till the hunted tribe were free.
Once he reeled, but swiftly rallied,
Forth upon the spoilers sallied,
Drove them headlong into shelter, captured all their cannonry.

But the mountains could not shield him,
And the snowy heights revealed him,
And the false friends would not aid him, and his goal was far away;
Burdened by his weak and wounded,
Stripped and harried and surrounded,
Still the chieftain of the Northland, like a lion, stood at bay.

From the freedom that he sought for,
From the dear land that he fought for,
He is risen by a nation that has spurned its plighted word;
By the Christians who have given
To the heathen—gracious heaven!—
With the one hand theft and falsehood, with the other ball and sword.

—W. H. Babcock, in Harper's Magazine for December.

CASH RECEIPTS.

N.B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING DECEMBER 21.

F. O. Hearn, $3.20; T. W. Newcomb, $3.25; John A. Todd, $2; J. J. Dooley, $3.20; L. S. Judd, $3; Mattie Johnson, $1.50; Frank J. Mead, $2; J. W. Kellogg, $3.20; Jacob Stern, $3.20; H. H. Bigelow, $3.20; John S. Verity, $3.20; Henry Schoeppey, $1; Karl Schmemmann, $1.00; Chas. G. Schaefer, $3.50; C. F. Woods, $3.20; Morris Einstein, $13.20; J. E. Jester, 20 cents; Gen. A. J. Warner, $3; C. E. Perkins, 25 cents; E. B. Babcock, $1; E. C. Galbreath, $1.50; Jennie Yose, $1; Mrs. Benj. Ireson, $3.20; N. Little, Jr., $3.20; J. L. Whiting, $1.50; E. H. Warren, $3.20; Mrs. M. E. Brown, $3.20; M. S. Devereux, $6.50.

N.B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N.B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N.B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

BOSTON, DEC. 26, 1878.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FRY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHERNEY, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH CARY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIZABETH WRIGHT, C. D. B. WILLS, W. D. LEBURN, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, JAMES E. OLIVER, Editorial Contributors.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The masterly, statesmanlike, and eloquent address of Judge Hurlbut on "The Liberty of Printing," proving unanswerably the constitutional right of Congress to prohibit the circulation of obscene literature through the mails, and demonstrating to the entire satisfaction of all who will listen to reason that the postal law of 1873 should be amended, but not repealed, has been printed for cheap distribution in the form of an eight-page tract, and can now be had at this office. No better service to the liberal cause at present can be rendered than by circulating everywhere this wise, weighty, and noble plea for private liberty and public morality combined. Price, single copies, 5 cents; five copies, 10 cents; fifteen copies, 25 cents; forty copies, 50 cents; one hundred copies, $1.00.

Erratum.—On page 5, second column, twenty-fourth line, the words "authority is desired" should be corrected to read "authority is derived." This is the only typographical error noticed by the author, and it is of sufficient importance to the main argument to be thus publicly pointed out.

PLEASE EXAMINE your mail-tag, and see if it is not time to renew your subscription. We would also suggest that the address and money of a new subscriber would be a very acceptable New Year's gift to THE INDEX.

THIS INQUIRY is made by a correspondent: "Diogenes, in reply to the question—'How best to order one's conduct?'—said: 'By repressing those things in ourselves that we blame in others.' This is paganism, is it not?" Yes, and a very good edition of the Golden Rule.

It is not often that the philosophy of "free love" is so frankly stated as in the following communication of a "Cigar-Maker, formerly a Typo," to the Cincinnati Times: "Being a communist, I read your editorial of to-day, Monday, containing the resolutions passed by the French Commune of New York City. It is in the main correct, but on the point of atheism I would say that it is not an essential one. We would permit any belief or superstition that did not interfere with others. We are for the total extermination of priests and priestcraft, because it does interfere with others. As to the family relation, it has been a point of hot argument among us whether our unanimous views on that subject should be boldly and frankly advanced, or not urged till the establishment of the commune. I have always urged that none of our views are wrong, and, therefore, all should be equally asserted. The family relation is an artificial one, and tends directly to inequality. The family once allowed, communism is an absurd chimera. A little reflection will convince one of this. The family, the priesthood, and property abolished together, communism and universal equality become a possibility and a fact. The numbers, even, of the sexes are unequal. The children in different families are unequal in number. How, then, can all have equal lives without community in all things? Plain talk is best. We gain nothing by dissimulation. All children should belong to the State—that is, to society. All women should belong to all men; and should any man say 'except my mother, my daughter, or my wife,' that man has not yet freed himself from the effects of his warped and one-sided education, began in helpless childhood. No; no one's relations are any better or any worse than any one else, nor shall one fare better or worse than another. The day when all shall be equal will come; and will it not be better than the present unequal struggle, in which the weak or the poor are trampled on?"

MR. WASSON ON DUTIES AND RIGHTS.

Mr. David A. Wasson recently read at the Chestnut Street Club a paper on "Rights, Theoretical and Practical," which we find thus reported in the Boston Advertiser:—

Mr. Wasson mentioned, in opening, the profusion of modern utterance upon the subject of rights, and the propensity of many to conceive of ethical obligation under this form exclusively. Rights of various orders are jumbled together, as if there could be no distinction between them. A natural right seems to signify popularly but little more than everybody's privilege. A right is simply what the general law of right, or rational spirit of righteousness, requires in a certain relation. Every real right, to be grounded in thought, must be reasoned from ethical principles, taken in connection with the determinate conditions to which these apply; and the mother of rights is the moral spirit. The two poles of ethical obligation, distinct and inseparable, are that every right implies a duty, and every duty a right. It is a commonly accepted dogma that all men have equal rights; but it can be true only as it is also true that all men have equal duties; but outside the ranks of communism, the unqualified assertion that the duties of all are equal would scarcely be hazarded by the hottest zealot for equality. The whole truth as to equality of rights is probably very nearly comprised in the following particulars: 1. Every right has an equal sanctity, and is to be guarded equally in all men whose right it is. 2. Some rights (those of personality) are necessarily those of all human beings. 3. Those rights which are from their very nature conditioned upon special qualification, and which particular men may either have or want, should be accessible to all upon the same terms. 4. All citizens are of right equal before the law, which does not signify that they are of necessity equal behind the law, or in the framing of it.

The right to life, for example, implies one's duty to make his life of worth. The conception that a society has no obligations to its members is antiquated. Men, as constituting a community, are not bound to give rights a sufficing force because they have so agreed; rather, they have agreed, because they were bound to do so. Further, every right or duty belongs to every other, and constitutes with every other an ethical system consistent in all parts with itself as a whole. So there are rights to life, liberty, and property, but subject to higher rights. After discussing the nature of the social body, Mr. Wasson reached the conclusion that the general right, which includes every other, is the right of all men to be governed, or the right of every one to a governed state of all others with himself. Every natural right claims as its due a governed state of society.

A full review of rights under the classification of rights of personality, of relation, and of function followed, the thought made prominent being that there is not absoluteness of rights, but they have their place in the scheme of society. While considering the rights of function Mr. Wasson said that here is a work to be done which belongs to the required activities of civilization; for the doing of this work fitnesses are requisite which cannot be assumed as those of all human beings. The right of suffrage is certainly not to be reckoned among the inborn rights of personality, for that right does not always and everywhere exist for any one. The personal right to suffrage comes only with the personal qualification. It seems manifest that the title of any individual to the elective franchise can come only from his present ability to make it veritably a means toward those great ends for which alone political powers of any sort exist,—namely, a faithful, constant, and intelligent performance of the nation's duty. The matter has its immediate practical importance, for the ancient policy of this Commonwealth is now assailed. An agitation is arising for the abolition of the one or two easy conditions to suffrage, which the good sense of Massachusetts has retained. The regular democratic convention, assembled in Faneuil hall in September last, resolved with a loud voice that every citizen has a right to vote without condition or qualification of whatever sort. It is obvious enough that this resolve was but a bid against Butler for the votes of a class willing to escape the payment of a poll tax without prejudice to their privilege of imposing taxes upon others; but the paltry stratagem would not have been resorted to had not the way been prepared for it by a class of dogmatists who may probably mean well, but who mean it in a very ungainly way.

Mr. Wasson's conceded ability as a speculative and ethical writer ensures the most respectful attention to all his opinions on such subjects; and the above is especially provocative of thought. Very likely the report is an imperfect one, and what we have to say should be read with that fact in mind. Taking, however, the report as it stands, and assuming for the time being that it is essentially correct, we shall venture to make it the text for some remarks on the same topic, inviting Mr. Wasson to set us right in these columns if we fail to conceive his meaning accurately.

First, what is a right? Mr. Wasson says: "A right is simply what the general law of right, or rational spirit of righteousness, requires in a certain relation."

As a definition, this statement seems to lack the definiteness necessary for scientific precision. In fact, it begs the question by referring to a "general law of right" which is itself to be determined. Modern thinkers, moreover, do not reason down from abstract general laws to particulars, but gather them from a careful study of these particulars by generalization. It savors too much of the "high priori school," of the deductive dogmatism which is losing caste as a practical method, to deduce the concrete realities of existence from purely abstract being. That method of thinking is out of date. No "general law of right" can be laid down anterior to, and independent of, the specific moral facts of which it is simply the intellectual generalization in their highest unity.

Further, a right is not something which is "required in a certain relation"; it is, on the contrary, the relation itself. Relations are of innumerable kinds. There are relations of place, time, number, quantity, quality, etc., etc. Now moral relations, like mathematical relations, constitute a separate class by themselves, irreducible to any other class. A right is necessarily a relation between at least two moral beings; it could have no existence except as something which one such being can justly claim from another. We heartily agree with Mr. Wasson, if we understand him, that "the two poles of ethical obligation, distinct and inseparable, are that every right implies a duty, and every duty a right." Of the two moral beings (or "terms") necessary to the existence of a moral relation, the right of one is the duty of the other, and vice versa. For instance, if A has a right to be paid ten dollars by B, it is B's duty to pay the ten dollars to A. "Right" and "duty" are different names for one and the same moral fact, looked at from opposite sides; they cannot exist separately.

There was a curious misconception of this truth by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, who, as reported, made some remarks on Mr. Wasson's essay. He "doubted the proposition that rights and duties are correlative. He may have a right to go to town by either of two roads, but it may not be his duty to go by either. If there is a duty where there is a right, it destroys all indifference in choice. Some things which a man has a right to do, he has a right not to do,—as to insist upon payment of a debt, or to forgive it. Some rights we do not exercise, because the principle of love supervenes." It is evident that Dr. Clarke imagined the right and the duty to inhere in the same person, instead of being different names for the same relation between two persons. He thought that, if A has a right to go to town by either of two roads, the correlative duty would necessarily also be A's; whereas the truth is, that, if A has a right to go by either road, then it is the duty of B (and every other person) not to interfere with A, no matter which road he chooses. Nothing could be more certain than that, wherever there is a right, there is also a duty; but they do not both belong to the same person. If Dr. Clarke had understood this point, he surely could not have questioned it.

"Every real right," says Mr. Wasson, "to be grounded in thought, must be reasoned from ethical principles, taken in connection with the determinate conditions to which these apply, and the mother of rights is the moral spirit." Rather should it be said that every real right must exist in nature before it can exist in cognition. Ethical relations are just as much objective facts as mathematical relations are; they are not the product of "reasoning" of any sort. If A and B exist, the existence of the moral relation between them is given in their own existence as the "terms" of that relation. Hence it would be a far more accurate statement to say that "the mother of rights is" NATURE. That is, all rights which are real at all are natural rights. On this point, Judge Hurlbut, in his Essays on Human Rights and their Political Guarantees (1845), admirably said: "The duty of the legislator is simply to conform to natural truth. He is the mere minister and expositor of Nature." . . . Man, then, must know himself, and his true relation to his fellow-men and external nature. All truth becomes natural truth—all rights natural rights—all wrongs natural wrongs." That moral philosophy is fatally defective which fails to ground itself on this great truth of the objectivity and essential naturalness of all moral relations.

"It is a commonly accepted dogma," says Mr. Wasson, "that all men have equal rights; but it can be true only as it is true that all men have equal duties. But, outside the ranks of communism, the unqualified assertion that the duties of all are equal would scarcely be hazarded by the hottest zealot for equality." We are no zealot, hot or cold; but, purely in the spirit of exact science, we "hazard the assertion" that all men have equal duties precisely in the same sense in which they have equal rights. What we mean is this: if it be true (for example) that all men have an equal right to their own lives, it is just as true that all men have an equal duty to respect each other's lives. Keep clearly in view the fundamental fact that every right and its correlative duty are merely different names for the same moral relation as viewed from opposite sides, and that each of the two belongs to one, and only one, of the two or more persons between whom the relation subsists, and all is as clear as crystal. The right of A to his life is the duty of B, C, D, etc., to respect it; that is all. There need be no confusion. To say that all men have equal rights before the law (which Mr. Wasson admits) is simply to say that they have equal duties before the law with respect to those rights; it is not at all to say that all men have precisely equal duties with respect to other matters. Of course, nobody ever said or thought that there is not an infinite multiplicity of special rights and duties growing out of the special circumstances and relations in which different individuals are differently placed. But it takes no "hottest zealot of equality" to perceive that all men have equal duties precisely in the same sense in which they have equal rights, and in no other sense.

Mr. Wasson, however, seems not altogether to have escaped confusion on this point. He says: "The right to life, for instance, implies one's duty to make his life of worth." On the contrary, the only duty which one's right to life strictly and scientifically "implies" is the duty of every other man to respect that life. Dr. Bartol, in his remarks on the essay, well said that animals have rights—that "alligators have a right not to be shot for sport." Nobody would say that the alligator's right to his life "implies" the "duty to make his life of worth"! But everybody would say that the alligator's right to his life does "imply" the duty of every moral being to refrain from shooting him in mere wantonness of sport. We unhesitatingly admit man's "duty to make his life of worth," but this duty has far deeper and better foundations than a mere "right to life": namely, the possession of a moral nature which gives the ideal of "worth," and the existence of a socio-moral environment which renders its realization a possibility.

"Mr. Wasson reached the conclusion that the general right which includes every other is the right of all men to be governed, or the right of every one to a governed state of all others with himself." Verily, this is a startling conclusion to be reached in a free country! We should reverse it, and say that the general right which includes every other is the right of every one to be let alone, and not to be governed at all, until he interferes violently or fraudulently with his neighbor. Why is not that the correct proposition? The necessity of an orderly or "governed state of society" results from the mere co-existence of multitudinous moral individualities in juxtaposition; it is not an abstract first principle from which to reason down to concrete facts. No less than Mr. Wasson would we lay emphasis on the universal obligation of society to preserve itself intact and pure; but we arrive at it apparently by a different route—by beginning with the patent fact of co-existing individuals with equal rights and duties, and proceeding thence to the consideration of the necessary conditions of securing for each the largest play of his individuality that is consistent with these equal rights. The basis of social philosophy, like the basis of society itself, is on this earth—not in the clouds. It will not do to inveigh against democratic dogmatists in the name of a dogma more dogmatic than their own—the dogma that all we need is to be well "governed." That is an obsolete idea, as little in harmony with valid ethical science as with all the instincts, traditions, and principles of American civilization.

The fact is—and here comes the great contention—that, if we have no right more precious than that of being "governed," we shall not wisely suppress the question: who is to do the governing? No inquiry is more fundamental to the establishment of a sound republican theory than that which concerns the source of political power. The right of the people as a whole to govern must stand unimpeached until some superior claim is made good. Dream as one may about the "rule of the wisest and best," it is a momentous assumption for any class of the people to set themselves up as such, and therefore as the natural governors. We respectfully call for their credentials, a default of which we prefer to trust ourselves to universal suffrage. The right to vote is either a "natural right," or it is no right at all; that is, it results from the very nature of a society composed of equal individuals, among whom none can be found with an authentic commission from the Almighty to officiate as governor. We demand adequate reasons for the disfranchisement of any class, such as may be rendered for withholding the ballot from children, from lunatics, from criminals, from non-naturalized foreigners. Mr. Wasson, we understand, neither believes in universal suffrage nor in any "natural right" of suffrage at all. If so, we desire particularly to know what he conceives to be the legitimate source of political power, and whence its title to "govern" is derived. In our own view, society is nothing but a strictly "natural" fact, and all its rights and duties are equally "natural"; from which it follows that the right to vote comes scientifically under the same head. Having a great and sincere respect for Mr. Wasson's mind, we should give our closest attention to his views on these vital points; and THE INDEX is cordially at his service, if he should find no better medium for giving them to the public.

NOTES AND NEWS.

BY L. K. WASHBURN.

N. B.—Information in regard to matters pertaining to Liberalism, such as the organization of new societies, reports of liberal lectures and meetings, or criticisms of free-thought and Free Religion—would be gladly received for this department. Address L. K. Washburn, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

Matthew Arnold will soon give the world a new volume of essays. Orthodox critics will please sharpen their lead pencils.

The command of the Nazarene to "love God and man" is twisted by the popular faith into "love the Trinity and members of the Church."

As a man believeth, so is he: this is the creed of the Church. A man is known by the theology he accepts: this is the motto of Christian society.

The late G. H. Lewes' funeral was of the simplest character, only old and intimate friends being present. Among them were Robert Browning, Anthony Trollope, and Herbert Spencer.

The man who cannot sit down and read a good book an hour or two every day has no chance of peace here or anywhere else. The elements of wholesome rest and enjoyment are not in his nature.

The new liberal society of Orange, Mass., has adopted a good motto: "Think for yourselves, and accept the truth as revealed by the strongest light of reason and logic; for the truth shall make you free."

Rev. John Fraser, an English Unitarian, has published an address on "Why I Remain in Unitarianism." We have not seen the address, but presume it is because he is not very radical; else he would have been turned out.

The year of phenomenal politics in Massachusetts has closed, and the casting lots for the State and municipal garments is over. The result is a division of the political vesture. New party jackets will be seen at the City Hall after January 1. Democratic tailors are busy.

Father Hyacinthe has returned to Paris. His mission in Geneva, where he undertook to preach new Catholicism, was a failure. He now thinks that "France is open to the preaching of another Catholicism than that of the Vatican," and has gone there to make the experiment.

A man has met with a bad change of heart when he gives up his reason and common-sense for the thirty-nine articles of nonsense which one has to say one believes, in order to get into the Church. If a man sticks to good deeds through life, he will have heaven here, no matter what he gets hereafter. A heaven in the hand is worth two in the bush.

A good Christian neighbor said to us not long ago: "You do not know the joy there is in Jesus." We had to confess that we did not. Judging from the appearance of most people after they get Jesus, we should say that there was not much fun in him, or, if there was, that no one seemed to find it. An ordinary Orthodox saint is not our idea of a happy person.

One sign of the increase of the influence of free thought is seen in the decrease of attendance at Christian places of worship. Civilization is death to Christianity. The school-house is killing the Church. It is only necessary to support teachers of natural sciences to take away the priest's office by "natural selection." When this is done, we shall have another illustration of the "survival of the fittest."

Dr. Charles Culla, the prayer doctor of this city, has added another scalp to his belt of miraculous cures. A lady from Holliston, who has been suffering from chronic diseases for thirty years, is reported to have been cured by a few passages of Scripture, the regular dose of prayer which the doctor administers, and a drop of oil on the forehead. We say, in the language of the acetic: "We do not believe; help us to continue to disbelieve all such foolish and improbable stories as the above."

Henry Ward Beecher prayed on Sunday morning, November 24, that the United States may become

"Emmanuel's land." This is a treasonable prayer. There is no way provided to punish such an offence as this, so the eloquent preacher of Plymouth Church will escape this time. But we hope that his petition will be unnoticed above and below, and, as man has more to do with making this land what it is than God, we ask him to see that the United States does not become "Emmanuel's land," or anything like it.

The "First Free Religious Society of Lynn" is in a flourishing condition. The services are held every Sunday P.M., at half past ten o'clock, in the Oxford Street Chapel. Meetings have been sustained by this society through voluntary contributions for nearly one year and a half. From three to five hundred people gather every week in the chapel to show the faith that is in them. If liberals everywhere had the courage of their convictions, there would be Free Religious societies in every city and town of Massachusetts.

Two States, New Hampshire and Vermont, have passed laws making tramps criminals. Why not go further and declare that it is a crime to be poor and unable to get work? It strikes us that the action of the legislatures of these two States in thus dealing with this class is unjust. If we can cure the evils that make tramps, by punishing every man who asks for a crust, then perhaps we can remove the causes of intemperance by punishing every one who buys a glass of beer. This kind of legislation may rid one or two States of tramps, but it does not solve the tramp problem.

On Wednesday, December 25, was celebrated throughout Christendom the birth of the Christian Savior. The usual number of silly hymns and poems have been written upon the occasion. As a children's day we welcome the advent of Christmas; but the elaborate ceremonies of the Church at this time have no significance, since it is not known whether Jesus was born in the winter or summer, or if he was born at all. The amount of foolish sentimentality annually expended upon the birth of Jesus makes sensible people blush for human nature. But piety must nurse some humbug, and perhaps this is as harmless as any.

Bishop Simpson is lecturing before the Yale theological students. Think of a Methodist preacher as a lecturer in Yale College. Orthodoxy is setting a trap for Liberalism,—that is plain; and it begins by inviting a Methodist bishop to fill the chair of the Lyman Beecher lectureship. We rejoice at these signs of the times, and hope that the day will come when not only a Methodist but a Unitarian and a Free Religionist will be invited to tell "what they know about preaching" to Yale theological students. Minot J. Savage and O. B. Frothingham might break some of the old Orthodox cobwebs that have been spun by Edwards and Adams and Hopkins to hold the mind in bondage to Christian superstitions; but we venture the assertion that those who would gain new liberty by their words would rejoice in their emancipation. Let Yale give her students an opportunity to hear a few liberal preachers, and we shall have swarms of radical ministers. When will Harvard College have a Theodore Parker lectureship?

There have been attempts made recently to bring discredit upon Free Religion by misrepresenting its principles and purposes. Notably among these attempts was the effort of the Boston Monday Cookship, in his attack upon the Liberal League a few weeks ago. He saddled upon Free Religion what is called free love, and told his audience that this social heresy was the fruit of Boston infidelity. We have always admired Mr. Cook's power of statement. He is one of the few speakers of the day who know how to say things. He has the gift of utterance. We say this because we believe "in giving the devil his due." But we must also say that he has a genius for misunderstanding whatever is opposed to Christianity. Free Religion is clean, decent, respectable. There is no smirch on its garments, and the Rev. Joseph Cook cannot make it foul by throwing mud at it in Tremont Temple. He showed by his remarks some ignorance of Free Religion. He doubtless presumed upon the credulity or the stupidity of his audience, when he declared that the Congress of the Liberal League was a Free Religious convention. We presume he knew to whom he was speaking. We would like to have Mr. Cook point out the injustice in "The Demands of Liberalism," as they are published on the first page of this paper. The National Liberal League of America is a League that stands for liberty and morality both, the opinion of all the Joseph Cooks in the land to the contrary notwithstanding.

THE DEAN OF CHICHESTER made a good point on the Darwinians in a sermon at Oxford the other day. "Ye men of science," said he, "ye men of science, leave me my ancestors in Paradise, and I do not grudge you yours in the Zoological Gardens."

HIS MOTHER was mending his primer, which showed sad evidence of wear and tear. He looked on for a while in a brown study, and then said, "Ma, why are you like one of them prize opera singers?" "I am sure I do not know, my child. Why?" "Because you're a primer-darner."

DURING the debate on the civil rights bill, Mr. Ben Butler, who was leading the Republican side, asked Mr. Randall, the Democratic leader, to agree to a Sunday session, in order to finish up the business. Randall objected, saying that he had some hopes of a hereafter. Butler replied, "If you have, you will be the same there as here, a member of the lower house."

Communications.

THE PASSAIC CITY LIBERAL LEAGUE.

PASSAIC CITY, N.J., 17, 7, 102.

W. H. HAMLEN, Esq., Sec'y N.L.L. of America:
Dear Sir.—At a regular business meeting of Passaic City Liberal League, held Dec. 15, the following resolutions were adopted:—

"Whereas, We, the members of Passaic City Liberal League, having deliberated on the report of our delegate, J. H. Adamson, to the Second Annual Congress of the National Liberal League, do sincerely approve of the minority's withdrawal; therefore, be it

"Resolved, That we withdraw from and surrender our charter as any auxiliary of the old, and that we unite with and procure a charter from the new organization, the National Liberal League of America."

Respectfully yours,
F. W. ORVIS,
Sec'y P.C. L.L.

IMMORTALITY.

If infinite intelligence can be demonstrated, personal immortality can. It is popularly conceived that there was a time when there was nothing in existence but God,—when cause was, but effect was not, and a consequent commencement to the production of effect. Now it can be proved that there never could have been a commencement to the production of effect; hence that there is an infinite power; therefore relative, but not absolute, originality; and, consequently, infinite intelligence. A commencement to the production of effect implies that God, cause, the producing power, was self evolved from nothing, all things being necessarily produced by the self-evolved cause, directly or indirectly, from nothing; because, if the producing power commenced to produce, itself had a commencement, for non-productive cause is as certainly a nonentity as non-caused effect; and as the producing power came from nothing, all things of course were primarily produced therefrom. Now, as a commencement to the production of effect has been shown to be an utter absurdity, exit a commencement and eternally productive power, which, being eternal, is also infinite, for to be one is to be the other. Infinite power involves infinite variety; for infinite power can no more produce finite variety than finite power can produce infinite variety; in other words, the effect must be commensurate with the cause, and, being infinite, it must, like infinite power, be eternal.

Now, do infinite and eternal power and variety admit of further power, further variety? If not, can there be, or has there ever been, anything absolutely original? When a babe in arms transfixes the earth with a pin, throws it over his shoulder and walks off with it; something absolutely original will have transpired; or when a toothpick is endowed with motion, sense, and reason; or fire is frozen; or something is evolved from nothing; or when any other utterly absurd and impossible manifestation of power is produced. Now, as there can be nothing absolutely original, it will at once be seen that the progress of finite intelligence proves infinite intelligence.

As it has been demonstrated that there never could have been a commencement to the production of effect, it follows that there never could have been a time when there was nothing in existence but God, in any other sense than there is not now, never has been, and never can be, anything in existence but God. Hence, if we construe the term God to mean a perfect, non-progressive, superintending personality, there is no God; but, if we construe it to mean an infinite power, infinitely intelligent, never commencing and never ceasing to produce, which is in and of and is all things, there is a God.

As there can be nothing distinct from or external to that which is infinite in space,—to God,—it is apparent that there can be no intelligence distinct from or external to infinite intelligence. It therefore follows that finite intelligence comes from and is a part of infinite intelligence. Hence, infinite intelligence is latent in finite intelligence, or finite intelligence is infinite intelligence in embryo; therefore finite intelligence is, prospectively, all that infinite intelligence is actually; consequently, finite intelligence never ceases to progress, and, never ceasing to progress, it of course survives death and is immortal.

Boston. E. B. B.

THE "REPEAL" PISTOL UNLOADED.

MR. EDITOR:—

I have been for the most of the time a silent spectator while the froth of the "obscenity" storm has been leaving its high-tide mark of moral depression all over the land,—nevertheless, an interested one. A delegate to the Syracuse Convention, I found, in five minutes from the opening of the Congress, that there was to be nothing there if not a quarrel, and made up my mind to have nothing more to do with it than my duty as a delegate required of me. With the exception of asking two or three questions of the president, which did not in all interrupt the fight more than two or three minutes, I said nothing. But I voted with the "reform" party all through, and signed the protest of the minority. Upon reflection, I am not sorry that I did so. After having read the efforts of the other side to convince the people that they did right in committing the League to the repeal of the Comstock law on the ground that said law is unconstitutional, I am convinced that my early convictions, formed before I had had any opportunity to read either side of the controversy, were correct. My conviction is that the law is constitutional, and therefore that the movement for the amendment of it is the proper method of procedure. In the only paper I have written upon the matter [an article refused by the Truth Seeker and afterwards published in THE INDEX], I took the ground that the first thing to be done is to appeal to Congress to remove Comstock. Put an honest agent in his place, and the law would be harmless as it is. But, to make assurance doubly sure and take a bond of fate, I said, let us aim to have Congress so amend the law that the crime against which it stood should be so clearly defined that there could be no chance to injure innocent people. I do not see anything wrong with that opinion now.

The only argument against it from the other side will be that drawn from the assumption that the law is unconstitutional.

I want to examine that briefly. The Supreme Court has decided that it is constitutional; that settles it until that decision is reversed. But it has been threatened that the opinions of the Supreme Court will be trampled under foot by public opinion as they have been in other cases. Suppose that such an event is possible; that does not prove that the law of 1873 is not now constitutional. Suppose that the repeal party should be augmented to such a degree that it could march to Washington and confront Congress with a force sufficient to coerce it and compel the repeal of the law, that would not prove that Congress had no right to pass the law. It would prove only this, that the country had undergone a reversion to the condition of barbarism, where muscular power is king and moral convictions have not yet been born.

It is said that the Constitution gives Congress no authority to control the public mails. The reason given is that the Constitution does not particularize, does not say what shall or shall not be carried. It does not particularize in regard to the navy, but says Congress shall have power "to provide and maintain a navy." A navy is for purposes of war. What right, according to the reasoning of the repealer, has government to use the navy in times of peace, or to use it at any time except for war purposes? Clearly, none. But our navy is being continually used in exploring expeditions, to promote knowledge, the sciences, arts, and industries of the country. It is used, according to the judgment of government, for the good of the people. Why hasn't Congress the same right to control the use of the mails, which, like the navy, is only one arm of the public service of the people, for the good of the people? The Constitution says no more and no less about the mail than about the navy. It says Congress shall have power "to establish post-offices and post-roads." That's all. But it closes thus: Congress shall have power "to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers." The power to establish mails carries with it the power to keep them up, and this implies and necessitates the power, and the right also, to protect them against any enemy, or influence, or misuse that would either directly or indirectly, either immediately or eventually, weaken, degrade, corrupt, or destroy their usefulness. Either this must be true, or the word ought should be abolished; either Congress is right in declaring that filth shall not be carried virtually free in the public mails, or all ideas of right and duty and protection should be obliterated.

What are the mails for? For the mutual benefit of the people. What are the people? Society. What is society? A combination, a union of two or more persons for mutual benefits, for general good. Without society nothing like progress is possible. Without society we have anarchy, chaos. Without society every individual is the enemy of every other. The individual stands up, before society began, as a murderer, a thief, an assassin, a robber, a destroyer of human life, an enemy to human affection. To have society he foregoes his privilege to be all these bad things, and agrees to treat his people well, that he may receive the benefits of mutual interests which will lead to mutual advancement, elevation, progress. In no other way have we been pushed up from the condition of savagery. In no other way can we keep up or go higher. Society is the greatest reality in the universe. It is humanity at its best. It can only exist so long as it tends to the mutual or general good of its members. When it ceases to do that, it falls to pieces. Only through it can we rise. Our first and profoundest duty is to protect society. For this we have LAWS. The necessary machinery for the execution of laws constitutes GOVERNMENT. What is the relation between government and society? Society is the creator of government. Society makes government, and instructs it to make and execute laws,—for what? For the good of the people, for precisely the same end for which society exists. Government, then, is an instrument created by society to enable it to carry out its design of general good, and to protect itself against whatever endangers its own existence.

Laws are made and executed only for the general good of society. It is for the safety of society that jails and penitentiaries are built, that men are manacled, incarcerated, and hung.

What, now, can we think of a society which keeps up jails and penitentiaries for its own protection, and yet encourages a class of men and women in any business or profession or life, the legitimate end of which can only be to make the criminals who necessitate jails and gibbets? What can we think of it? Only that in some way those who control that society are peculiarly interested in the jail and gibbet business, and so desire to promote criminality. No other supposition is possible. What will be the end of such a society? A steady descent from vice to crime. First, a mental rot, that spreads itself through the moral and then through the physical nature, until at last we have a leprosy that can never be cured—that can only be banished from sight and sound and left to die of its own fearful crimes.

Better far than this, I say, let society be true to the laws of its own existence, the good of the whole, which will necessitate the strict moral conduct and growth that will in time make jails and gibbets and broken-necked angels unnecessary, and bring about the time when the face of humanity shall be no longer scabbed and scarred with jails, gibbets, lunatic asylums, schools for idiots, houses of prostitution, homes of misery, and all the unholy blight of theological scrofula that curses our moral blood to-day!

Society is destroying itself when it fosters the existence of any business that degrades any of its members. Society has no right to allow any of its members to make a business of obscenity. Society is bound to protect itself. Now, therefore, the existence and execution of laws for the protection of society against obscenity is a necessity, as laws against murder, rape, arson, and theft are necessities. We must have laws against all crimes against society! Or we must repeal them all! If obscenity must be free and unhampered by law, then the repealer must demand the repeal of all laws against crime,—for if the school is right, the scholars should not be condemned for what they learn,—if obscenity should be free, then the murderer must be free, for obscenity makes murder, rape, arson, theft, and all other crimes possible! If it is right to protect society against one, it must be against all. This is the way it strikes me.

Again many on both sides say this question does not belong to the Liberal League. But, if the moral condition of society is not worth consideration in the question of State Secularization, then I don't think you need trouble yourselves to make any change. I, for one, prefer to take my chances for liberty under "Church and State," with a God on the throne to hold his subjects in check through fear of hell, than to expect it under a system that denies God, throws the reins loose upon the neck of passion, and leaves the beast that is in humanity to trample upon liberty and load the moral atmosphere with its fetid breath of license! If the Liberal League does not draw humanity to a higher level, we have no use for it! If infidelity is to be only a protective union for hypocrisy, dishonesty, obscenity, and social ruin, then, in the name of all that is clean, let it die.

CHARLES ELLIS.

Boston, Dec. 8, A.R. 102.

LAW vs. LAWS.

EDITOR INDEX:—

I too am a friend of both Leagues, though belonging to neither, and not so well known as your unknown correspondent who asks such pointed questions. It has long been evident that no league pledged either to "repeal" or to "reform" could command the support of all liberals. The initial mistake was to entertain the question of obscenity at all; the League might properly pass the strongest resolutions sustaining the freedom of the press, as a part of universal freedom, but there was no more reason for taking action as to the laws for punishing or preventing the circulation of obscene literature than for pledging themselves in regard to punishing theft, murder, or any other crime. No union is possible except on a basis of leaving every person and every league free to advocate the total or the partial repeal of Comstock laws, as accords with their judgment and conscience.

"The constitutionality of the law of 1873 is not the real question before the nation to-day." That may be true as to the nation, but it certainly is a question before the liberals, and they must and will decide it for themselves, however the Supreme Court may have ruled. Supreme courts often make mistakes.

Undoubtedly I mean to take the position that the only way effectually and practically to benefit the world is to discover the inherent laws which govern the universe, and order our lives in conformity with them, regardless of the laws made in Washington or on Beacon Hill; but I do not therefore propose attempting to repeal existing laws, except such as clearly and practically infringe upon human rights. Theoretically, all human laws may be said to infringe upon and interfere with my right to govern myself; but as a practical man, I prefer to let these laws die by doing away with the necessity for them, unless in such extreme cases as the law of 1873.

I thought I had shown clearly enough that the people of the United States have no right to use Comstock and his laws for the suppression of obscene literature, and that it is very easy to suppress it in the right way, by destroying the demand for it.

I did not directly reply to the question of the responsibility of the people for the moral character of the sealed matter that passes through the public mail, because, that they do assume or can assume any such responsibility, as a practical proposition seems so preposterous as to be unthinkable to an unprejudiced mind. Let us see to what this responsibility idea legitimately leads. It is corrupting the morals of children which constitutes the crime abetted by sending obscene matters through the mails. In order to free the people from complicity in this crime, these matters must be prevented from being received by the post-offices, or from being delivered, if received. The most ardent advocate of Comstock and his work and ways will not maintain that hundreds or thousands of the corrupting matters do not pass through the mails every day, week or month. Unless Comstock's stories about the "pins" of it are all false, it must be so. Now and then by ordering something in a decoy letter, Comstock gets an offender into his net, and in time he may have that one incarcerated. But not until the mischief has been done, aided and abetted by the people. Not only that: all who know anything of the ways of trade know that so long as the business is profitable, that is, so long as there is a demand, persons will take the place of those caught, and we supply the demand. Of course the people are responsible for all the damage done, and can only free themselves by total prohibition of the carriage of any immoral or criminal matter through the mail.

Two or more persons plan a murder by means of letters sent through the mails; of course the people are morally responsible. It is needless to multiply examples to show that the only escape from damning responsibility is the appointment of a Censor Morum with full powers, provided with an Index Expurgatorius, compiled by an Immaculate Congressman, and adopted by an infallible Majority vote, and making it his duty to examine every letter or package and see that there is nothing in it inconsistent with his ideas of legalized morality, before passing it through the mails. Otherwise the people become the paid agents for the commission of all the crimes which can be committed by aid of the mails.

I cannot see that punishing a few or even all of the criminals after the government has aided the commission of the crime relieves the people of all moral responsibility. That seems to me a very impractical notion. But the practical fact is, that there is no such moral responsibility and cannot be in a free country.

F. S. C.

[1. Our correspondent does not succeed in making his positions self-consistent. On the one hand, it was a "mistake" to "entertain the question of obscenity"; on the other hand, it was not a mistake to entertain the question of the "constitutionality of the law of 1873." It so happens that these two questions are inextricably entangled with each other. How is it possible to entertain the latter without ipso facto entertaining the former?

2. This matter of "responsibility" is so plain that it needs few words. No government can possibly prevent the commission of crime; it does its whole duty, if it checks crime as much as it can by punishing it after it is committed. The people justly hold their government "responsible" for enacting good laws against crime and enforcing them as well as it can. If, instead of doing this, it should first furnish extra facilities for the commission of crime and then connive with the criminals by refusing to punish them for abusing these facilities to criminal ends, all the special pleading in the world would fail to shield the government from the people's just wrath. That is precisely the case with the mails. The "responsibility" of the government and the people for the right use of the mails simply means that they are bound to take all reasonable precautions against their perversion to the public injury; and the law of 1873, being one of these reasonable precautions, will stand unrepelled till the crack of doom. Whether it shall be amended or not, so as to protect the right of free discussion of social questions, is another question. The "responsibility" of the people leads to no such absurd conclusions as are above drawn from it, but is precisely the same as that which is universally recognized with reference to all other crimes.—ED.]

A CONVERTED EDITOR.

For several weeks past it has been stated on the streets that R. Dalley, Esq., editor of the Evening News and National Democrat, in this city, had turned infidel, and in the future would espouse the dark cause which leads to despair, death, and damnation. For the purpose of finding out whether there was any truth in the reports in circulation, we visited Mr. Dalley yesterday and asked him the following questions:—

Reporter.—There are rumors in town that you have turned infidel, and propose in the future to work in the infidel cause. Is this true?

Mr. Dalley.—Yes, it is true. I am a confirmed infidel, and expect to work for the cause.

Rep.—How long have you denied the infallibility of the Bible and consequently the divinity of Jesus Christ?

Mr. D.—It was some time in 1866, when I resided in Memphis, Tenn., at the time I was studying theology with a view to enter the Orthodox ministry (that was my desire from early youth), and greedily devoured anything on religion, visiting Catholic priests, Jewish rabbis, and Orthodox Protestant ministers, in my earnest desire to learn the truth and preach the pure gospel. In the midst of my studies I received from my brother, John A. Dalley, of Dayton, Ky., several volumes of Theodore Parker's works, which I read with my usual avidity. This led me away from the Orthodox belief. I was convinced that Jesus of Nazareth was a man, a good man; yet, like all other good men, liable to err,—that he did err. I next read Paine's Age of Reason. The logic and facts contained in that little book, which will live side by side with the Bible forever, completely knocked the pins from under what little Orthodoxy I had left in me, and I abandoned the idea of entering the Orthodox pulpit. At first I thought I would find rest for a weary soul in the Universalist or Unitarian Church, but found so much of the old Orthodoxy in them that it was a hindrance to my growth of free thought on religion; and, failing to find a congenial organization in which to propagate natural religion and morality, I withdrew to myself and devoted my energies to business, hoping the day would come when I could devote my life and energies to the dissemination of Liberal Christianity, or what is commonly denominated infidelity. This has always been my most earnest desire.

Rep.—But, Mr. Dalley, don't you know that when you attack the infallibility of the Bible you are destroying the Christian religion, and with it all morality, law, order, and the general happiness of mankind?

Mr. D.—No, sir; I don't. I know that I am doing exactly the contrary.

Rep.—Don't all infidels deny the existence of a God and a future state, thereby destroying the strongest support which human virtue and morality has?

Mr. D.—No; all infidels do not deny the existence of a God or future state. In fact, the most of them are deists. As a matter of course, all atheists are infidels, but they are a small portion of freethinkers,—or infidels, as Orthodoxy opprobriously calls them. You are very much mistaken when you say that infidelity destroys the only incentive which man has to be virtuous and upright. I need only refer you to the fact that all reforms start in infidelity. Jesus was considered an infidel in his time; so was Martin Luther; and so are all Protestants regarded infidels if they are out of the pale of the Catholic Church. Thomas Jefferson, the father of American Democracy, a pure patriot and honest man, the man to whom above all others we are indebted for religious liberty, was a confirmed infidel. The pure, moral, and upright Franklin was an infidel. John Adams, the second President of the United States, if not a confirmed infidel, was a disbeliever in the divinity of Jesus Christ and the gospel plan of salvation. Stephen Girard, whose benevolences are counted by the hundreds of thousands, and whose money built the Girard College, was an infidel. In our own State, Michael C. Kerr and Oliver P. Morton were infidels, and I think their morality will stand alongside such Christian statesmen as Howard, Colfax, and Garfield. Certainly Kerr and Morton were never caught in Credit Mobilier scandals or Freedmen's Bureau swindles. There are other great and good men who were infidels, but these will suffice for the present. In Jeffersonville there are at least twenty liberals, and there is not one among them who is a bad man or woman. I think of one who has been a little wild, and has gambled; but then, do not professed Christians do the same? Can you tell me of an infidel or freethinker who has been convicted and punished for a great crime?

Rep.—But, Mr. Dalley, what incentive is there for a man to do right if he does not fear God and believe in the Bible?

Mr. D.—I will answer that question by asking another. Do men who fear God, as you say, and believe in the Bible always do right, and do men who are infidels always do wrong? And while you are thinking over that, let me say there is no crime known to the divine or secular law that has not been committed by men professing to love God, and who did actually believe in the divinity of Jesus Christ and in the infallibility of the Bible. The Jews murdered innocent women and children; the Christians during the crusades went to the tomb of the Savior with their hands dripping with the blood of Mohammedans, men, women, and children. The Spanish Inquisition was run by men believing in the Orthodox faith. John Calvin believed in the Bible and Christ, and he burned Michael Servetus alive. The Puritans burned witches. Men and women believing in God and the Bible have actually committed promiscuous sexual intercourse, and gloried in their shame, thinking it to the glory of God. Abraham, whom God chose among men, was a liar, and accepted from Pharaoh and Abimelech a bribe as the price of his wife's debauch. After debauching Hagar he drove her out into the world to starve, because of the jealousy of Sarah. David, who was considered a man "after God's own heart," was a common freebooter, and murdered his captives, and deceived and lied in a manner truly shocking to our ideas of morality and religion. Having seduced Uriah's wife, he sent Uriah to be killed because he would not hide David's ruin. So you will see by this that it does not follow that if a man does believe in the Bible, or accepts the Mosaic writings, he will necessarily be a good and religious man. The infidel is the strictest moralist. He has no religion except correct conduct. He does not bother his mind about the eternal essence, or about Christian dogmas. His work is the full and perfect development of all the functions of man; and if he fails of these, he is not true to that yearning in the soul of man which ever reacheth upward to that impulse universally planted in man, and impels him to be honest, true, good, obedient, kind, and all that implies a good man.

Rep.—How is it, Mr. Dalley, when you have a good business, and must know that the utterance of such views as you hold will injure you, that you persist in doing so?

Mr. D.—I can only say that it is a disposition I inherit from my father, who never could refrain from boldly uttering the honest convictions of his mind. I have every inducement to keep quiet. I have smothered my convictions and listened to the pleading voice of personal ease and business interests for twelve years, but I can no longer hide my honest sentiments. A premium is always offered for hypocrisy, but manliness is too often beaten with a lash. I have fully determined to leave my present business on December 1. After that time, I will cease to be editor of the News and National Democrat, and if I do not sell the paper I will lease it to parties until such time as they are able to buy it. I had intended to defer this important step for a year or two, but my affairs have turned in such a way that it cannot be delayed any longer.—Louisville Courier-Journal, Nov. 7.

[Mr. Dalley's honesty and courage deserve great respect. He writes to us that he "desires the liberals of the country to call him to the work"; by which we understand that he desires lecture engagements. His present address is Jeffersonville, Indiana.—ED.]

THE GLASGOW BANK AND THE SCOTCH CHURCH.

The failure of the City of Glasgow Bank seems likely to act as a serious blow and great discouragement to the credit and status of the order of officers known in Presbyterian churches as elders. "Since the closing of the doors of the City of Glasgow Bank," says a Scotch paper, "elderdom has suffered a terrible blow. It had experienced in Glasgow many reverses, and has survived them all; but it never experienced one like this"; and the writer then carries his retrospect so far back as to find himself compelled to lay before his readers the following very candid piece of history: "Long ago it used to be a standing joke on the Royal Exchange of Glasgow to ask, when a more than usually ugly bankruptcy occurred, 'In what kirk is the bankrupt an elder?' And though the question was lightly put, it was almost invariably answered in deadly earnest, that the bankrupt had been a burning and shining light in some west-end congregation, was a liberal subscriber to all religious schemes, and always ready to put his hands into the pockets of his creditors to assist Church extension and missionary enterprises." This is bad enough, but there is worse to come; for the editor of this Scotch newspaper actually goes on to say: "We have heard of many business men, taught by sharp experience, whose first question about a new customer was, not whether he had a balance at his banker's, but whether he was an elder, deacon, Sunday-school teacher, or liberal subscriber to new churches. If he was, these suspicious worldlings looked sharply after their goods, and kept plecty on short credit." But not only is plecty kept on short credit, but, if this native testimony is to be believed, plecty is in imminent danger of getting no credit at all. "How can it be otherwise?" says the writer. "We have been made bankrupt in religion and morality, as well as in purse, by the conduct of some of the very burning and zealous lay teachers among us. Succeeding the bright times of revivalism and evangelism, what a comment it is upon them! The eldership has become associated in men's minds with gigantic swindling and fraud, and with all that is mean and base in business." This Scotch commentator is right, and it is the more creditable to him that he condemns thus strongly the conduct of certain of his countrymen to their faces. The sterling qualities of the Scottish nation have been overclouded and overborne sadly too long by a degenerate Puritanism, following what was once a real and active moral force in the country; but even the failure of the City of Glasgow Bank is not too high a price to pay for some sensible abatement of the hypocritical Sabbatarianism and fierce intolerance which have of late prevailed in Scotland.—Geneva Continent, Nov. 13.

HOW TO MEET HENRY.

Rev. Dr. Alex. Clark, of the Methodist Recorder, is engaged in quite an interesting controversy with one of his correspondents, Rev. Dr. Murray, concerning the question as to how infidels, such as Colonel Ingersoll, should be met by their Orthodox brethren, when by rising into prominence they challenge public notice. Dr. Clark maintains that it is uncharitable, and, so far as results are concerned, worse than unprofitable, to attempt to silence an adversary, even though an infidel, by denunciation and abuse. It is not to be taken for granted that men are rogues because they are sceptical. Unbelievers may be as honest in their convictions as believers, and are entitled to fair and honorable treatment, therefore, from the latter. This respect has not been accorded to Colonel Ingersoll. He has been abused like a pick-pocket; he has been charged with having a vulgar liking for indecent literature, and for exerting his influence for the repeal of the order which prevents the carrying of this sort of matter through the mails; and in various respects his habits of life have been proclaimed as vicious,—nay, vile. Now all these charges against the colonel are basely, slanderously false, as he declares, and as those who are personally acquainted with him well know. There is not a man to be found who, in the privacy of his family and in the larger circles of society, is more free from fault, or who is entitled to higher respect. It is admitted that he is wrong—altogether wrong—in his theological notions, and that every proper Christian effort should be used both to convert him, if possible, and, if that cannot be accomplished, to at least counteract the effect of his teachings. But this is not to be done by means of misrepresentation and vilification. Men are not persuaded thus to become Christians. The sound Orthodoxy of Dr. Clark himself, his correspondent of course does not think of questioning, nor would any one else; and therefore his testimony in the case is all the more valuable. To those of his brethren who would serve well and successfully in the cause to which they have addressed themselves we would say: "Go ye and do likewise."

We trust the many admirers of Dr. Clark (and they are legion) will read this sensible piece of advice; and then, as the Leader suggests, go and do likewise.—Pittsburgh Leader.

IT IS SAID that one of the French Bourbon princesses, while playing as a child with her favorite nurse, suddenly looked at the woman's hand, and then regarded her own with intentness, counting its fingers. "How is this?" at length questioned the imperious young patrician; "you have five fingers, exactly the same as myself!"

A YOUNG WOMAN applying for the situation of governess to a village school, being questioned by the clergyman as to her qualifications, replied: "I ain't much of an arithmeticker, but I'm an elegant grammarian."

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public in respect fully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 26, 1872.
 To THE INDEX ASSOC., Toledo, O.:
 Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.
 Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STEVENS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association.

OFFICE, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.Y.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
 JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the difference between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.20 for one year, including postage, or $1.00 for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street Boston.

PUBLICATIONS INDEX TRACTS.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, O. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keesh-Chander Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. E. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion"; Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Lasker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for Five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for Five cents at the office.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fifth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyses the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston, Mass.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal DEVOTED TO FREE RELIGION. PUBLISHED BY THE INDEX ASSOCIATION.

AT
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:
 FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.Y.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.
 JAMES E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N.Y.

THE INDEX aims—
 To increase general intelligence with respect to religion;
 To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual;

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.
 The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.
 Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.
 Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.
 The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from

all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Ecce Homo.....	1.50
Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.50
Shawl-Straps.....	1.50
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	1.50
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.5
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	1.50
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Legend of the World.....	2.25
The World-Friend.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BURROUGHS'S Force and Matter.....	2.25
BURKE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 3 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.30
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscript by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Foot Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Billy Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCIS POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.20
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Mason, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE E.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Oldenry.....	1.

Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellaneous. In two parts. Part I, "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 1 vol.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DEQUARRIES (HENRY). Discourses on the Method of Rigly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DIKENS'S Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUBRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 3 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising—
Adam Bede.....
Scenes from the Mill on the Floss.....
Scenes from Felix Holt.....
Scenes from Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life.....
The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellaneous.....	1.50
Representative Man.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems—
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (E. F., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	4.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	2.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	2.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Miscellaneous.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.). Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portraits.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.). A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second. Child World. Part First.....	1.00
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	3.00
Twice-Told Tales.....
Mosses from an Old Manse.....
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....
The Marble Faun.....
The English Note-Books.....
The American Note-Books.....
The French and Italian Note-Books.....
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 3 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Whilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Mountains of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELW'S (JEAN) Prose. Of the Skeltons.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Week.....	1.25
Moses the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. 1. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
II. Physics and Politics, or Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.60
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aerostatics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Glanville's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion, India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by J. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustine to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	5.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWIS'S Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWIS (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.D.). What is Judaism? or, A Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	6.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 3 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.). Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 3 vols.....	8.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1859 to 1868.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.). The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 1 vol., each.....	3.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	1.50
The Subjection of Women.....	3.50
Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.25
Autobiography.....	1.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.50
Three Essays on Religion.....	1.00
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras. Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.). On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Housseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.). Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	2.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NABBY (PETROLEUM V). Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.00
Sketches from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.). A History of the Hobson Monarchy.....	4.50
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.50
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings on Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations—A.D. I. and M.DCCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.50
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PELLET'S (ELIZABETH STUART) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolley Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged in.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.00
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Sonnetry, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	1.50
The Expanses of Heaven.....	1.50
ROSETTI (CHRISTINA G.). A Shadow of Dante.....	1.50
ROHELLEN (H.). Spectrum Analysis, its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	4.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS:
1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.40
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Huxley.....	.40
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.40
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	$1.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMITH'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT). Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.50
First Principles.....	2.00
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	1.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	1.50
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	2.00
The Principles of Psychology. 1 vol.....	1.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	1.00
Sociology.....	1.50
Descriptive Sociology. Parts I, II, and III.....	4.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	1.00
Universal Progress.....	2.50
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER). Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.). The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.00
The Classic-Room Talks. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fluke.....	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.15
Vanity Fair.....
The Newcomen.....
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....
The Virginians.....
Lord and Lovel the Widower.....
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.50
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c.
2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c.
3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c.
4. Four Georges, Hamlet, &c.
5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unpublished Pieces.....
THAYER'S (MRS. OLLIE) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Walden in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.50
The Maine Woods.....	2.50
Cape Cod.....	2.50
Letters.....	2.50
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.50
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.50
TYLER (EDWARD B.). The Early History of Mankind.....	1.50
Primitive Culture. 3 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.50
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	2.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings of the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
Lessons in Electricity.....	1.50
Address before British Assoc'n at Belfast.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH). Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES). The Ring and the Stone. Vols. I and V, each.....	1.00
Vols III, IV, and VI, each.....	1.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.50
Sanctuary.....	1.50
Back-Log Stables.....	2.50
WEISS (JOHN). American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	2.00
Character and Characteristic Man.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	1.50
Child Life.....	1.00

ADDRESS!

THE INDEX.

321 Washington St., Boston.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY—PRICE TWO PENCE.THE SECULAR REVIEW.

EDITED BY CHARLES WATTS.

The SECULAR REVIEW is the leading organ of Secularism, and each week has Special Articles on Theological, Social, Scientific, and Political Subjects. Its distinctive features are the advocacy of Constructive Secularism, and the dissemination of useful information on all questions which affect the welfare of the people. Letters are inserted in its "OPEN COLUMN" from all who are courteous in the expression of their views; while a special department is allotted for "NOTES AND QUERIES."

The Contributors to the SECULAR REVIEW comprise the principal advocates of Secularism, including its founder, G. J. Holyoake.

CHARLES WATTS, Publisher,
84 Fleet Street, London, E.C.

INTERESTING NEW BOOKS For Radical Thinkers.

THE BIBLE FOR LEARNERS. By Dr. H. Oort. Professor at Amsterdam, and Dr. I. Hooykaas, Pastor at Rotterdam, with the assistance of Dr. A. Krienen, Professor at Leyden. A popular ex-position of the "Dutch School" of modern inquiry in the historical study of the Bible. Vol. I. Patriarchs; Moses; Judges. Vol. II. Kings and Prophets. Vol. III. New Testament (in preparation). Price $1.00 per volume.

THE BIBLE OF TO-DAY. By John W. Chadwick. Critical and scientific criticism of the separate books of the Bible and their mutual relations. 304 pages. Price $1.25.

WHAT IS THE BIBLE? By J. T. Sunderland. An attempt to answer the question in the light of the best scholarship and in the most reverent and catholic spirit. 179 pages. Price $1.00.

THE RELIGION OF ISRAEL. From the "Dutch of J. Knapert. Its purpose is to give a faithful and accurate account of the results of modern research into early development of the Israelitish religion." 382 pages. Price $1.00.

ASPIRATIONS OF THE WORLD: A Chain of Opals. Selected from the best ancient and modern scriptures, with an introduction. By L. Maria Child. 265 pages. Price $1.25.

A MODERN SYMPOSIUM. 5 subjects: The Soul and a Future Life; The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief. By Frederic Harrison, Professor Huxley, Sir James Stephen, Lord Selbourne, Canon Barry, the Dean of St. Paul, Duke of Argyll, and others. 381 pages. Price $1.25.

DETERIORATION AND RAUC EDUCATION: with practical application to the condition of the people and industry. By Samuel Boyce. 64 pages. Price $2.50.

THE GHOSTS: Liberty of Man, Woman, and Child, etc. By Col. E. G. Ingersoll (his latest work). 212 pages. Price $1.50. Also, THE GODS, etc., same style. 735 pages. Price $1.25.

Any of the above-named books sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

RADICAL LIBERAL LECTURES

By B. F. Underwood,

FOR THE FALL AND WINTER OF 1878-9.

1. The Theory of Evolution.
2. Darwinism Defined and Defended.
3. The Philosophy of Herbert Spencer.
4. The Genesis and Nature of Religion.
5. Modern Scientific Materialism.
6. Natural Selection versus Design in Nature.
7. An Hour with German Thinkers.
8. Intuition and Instinct Viewed in the Light of Modern Psychology.
9. The Pros and Cons of a Future Life.
10. Is there a Personal Intelligent Deity?
11. The Demands of Liberalism Pertaining to State Secularization.
12. Monogamic Marriage versus the Vagaries of Free Love.
13. Woman: Her Past and Present; Her Rights and Wrongs.
14. Religious Revivals: Their Causes and Consequences.
15. The Struggles and Triumphs of Free-thought in Europe and America.
16. Issues of the Age.
17. Buddha and Buddhism.
18. Ancient Egypt: Its Laws, Customs and Religion.
19. The French Revolution: Its Causes and Consequences.
20. Crimes and Cruelties of Superstition.
21. Cook and other "Scientific" Annihilators of Materialism Reviewed.
22. Paine the Pioneer of Free-thought in America.
23. A Liberal's Answer to the Question, "If not Christianity, What?"
24. Christianity: To what Extent has it Helped or Hindered Civilization?
25. Jesus: All that is Known and what is Guessed about Him.
26. A True Man Better than a True Christian.
27. Judaism and Christianity Outgrowths of Pre-Christian Heathenism.
28. Science versus the Bible.
29. The Origin and History of the Bible. (From one to six lectures.)
30. The Four Gospels Unhistorical and Unreliable.
31. Evidence for the Divinity of the Bible Examined.
32. Popular Assumptions Regarding the Bible and Christianity.
33. Bible Prophecies Falsified by the Facts of History.
34. Popular Objections to Liberalism Considered.

For terms, etc., address
B. F. UNDERWOOD,
THORNDIKE, MASS.

GOLD

Any worker can make $15 a day at home. Costly outfit free. Address TRAU & Co., Augusta, Maine.

THE INDEX
IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

Address THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston, U.S.A.

TO THE AMERICAN PAT-
RONS OF
CHOICE LITERATURE.

We have made arrangements with Messrs. CHAPMAN & HALL, London, England, for the right to publish an American Edition of

The Fortnightly Review,
Edited by JOHN MORLEY,

and are now publishing this celebrated Monthly Magazine, from a special duplicate set of stereotype plates, which are forwarded from England so promptly as to enable us to produce each month, not only an exact facsimile of this able Review, but to publish it almost at the same time the original is from England. It is in every respect equal to the London issue, at about half the original price. This effort will place in the hands of American readers the freshest utterances of leading thinkers on New Issues with a promptitude unequalled. The comments of a large number of the best European thinkers on Science, Philosophy, Literature, Politics, and Miscellaneous Matters of general interest cannot fail to be appreciated and encouraged by thoughtful American readers. The following are a few of the contributors:—

Matthew Arnold,	Alfred R. Wallace,
Herbert Spencer,	Frederick Harrison,
Goldwin Smith,	Prof. Tyndall,
Right Hon. Lyon Play-	Prof. Huxley,
fair,	Prof. Darwin,
Right Hon. W. E. Glad-	Prof. Clifford,
stone,	Author of Supernat-
Lionel A. Tallemache,	ural Religion ,
M. E. Grant Duff, M.P.,	Sir John Lubbock,
Hon. Robert Lowe,	Anthony Trollope,
Leslie Stephen,	T. Adolphus Trollope,
John Morley (the Ed- Sir H. S. Maine,	Sir David Wedderitor),	burn,
G. H. Lewes,

AND NUMEROUS OTHERS.

Subscription Price, $5.00 per Year.
Published every month by the ROSE-BEL-
FORD PUBLISHING CO., 60 York Street,
Toronto, Ont.

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD.
GREAT THROUGH LINE

AND UNITED STATES MAIL ROUTE.

The attention of the travelling public is respectfully invited to some of the merits of this great highway, in the confident assertion and belief that no other line can offer equal inducements as a route of through travel. In

CONSTRUCTION AND EQUIPMENT

THE PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD stands confessedly at the head of American railways. The track is double the entire length of the line, of steel rails laid on heavy oak ties, which are embedded in a foundation of rock ballast eighteen inches in depth. All bridges are of iron or stone, and built upon the most approved plans. Its passenger cars, hie eminently safe and substantial, are at the same time models of comfort and elegance.

THE SAFETY APPLIANCES

in use on this line well illustrate the far-seeing and liberal policy of its management, in accordance with which the utility only of an improvement and not its cost has been the question of consideration. Among many may be noticed

The Block System of Safety Signals, Janney Coupler, Buffer, and Platform, The Wharton Patent Switch, and the Westinghouse Air-Brake, forming in conjunction with a perfect double track and road-bed a combination of safeguards against accidents which have rendered them practically impossible.

Pullman Palace Cars

are run on all Express Trains from New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington, to Chicago, Cincinnati, Louisville, Indianapolis, and St. Louis.

WITHOUT CHANGE,

and to all the principal points in the far West and South with but one change of cars. Connections are made in Union Depots, and are assured to all important points. The Scenery of the Pennsylvania Route is admitted to be unsurpassed in the world for grandeur, beauty, and variety. Superior refreshment facilities are provided. Employees are courteous and attentive, and it is an inevitable result that a trip by the Pennsylvania Railroad must form

A Pleasing and Memorable Experience.

Tickets for sale at the lowest rates at the Ticket Offices of the Company in all important cities and towns.

FRANK THOMSON, L. P. FARMER,
General Manager. General Passenger Agent.
C. S. HALDEMAN, New England Agent,
203 and 205 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 30 CENTS.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the fine list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. ANY OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

THE INDEX AS AN ADVERTISING MEDIUM.

Testimony of one who has tried it.

FLORENCE, Iowa, Jan. 5, 1878.

THE INDEX is the best advertising medium which I have tried.

R. O. WALKER.

THE BEST PORTRAIT OFTHOMAS PAINE.

Engraved by the famous W. Sharpe from Romney's celebrated portrait—

Heliotype Copy

by James R. Osgood & Co., of Boston. This is a beautiful work of art, and by all odds the very best likeness of Thomas Paine to be found. It is 10x8 inches in size, and will be mailed post-paid on receipt of $1.00. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,

T. W. HIGGINSON,

W. J. POTTER,

W. H. SPENCER,

F. W. NEWMAN,

CHAS. VOYSEY,

A. W. STEVENS,

R. H. RANNEY,

F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX,

and will be mailed post-paid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,

No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

A REMARKABLE BOOK.A MODERN SYMPOSIUM.

SUBJECTS:

The Soul and Future Life.

By Mr. Frederic Harrison, Hon. Roden Noel,

R. H. Hutton, Lord Selbourne, Prof. Huxley, Canon Barry, Lord Blachford, Mr.

W. R. Greg, Rev. Baldwin Brown, and

Dr. W. G. Ward.

The Influence upon Morality of a

Decline in Religious Belief.

By Sir James Fitz-James Stephen, Prof.

Clifford, Lord Selbourne, Rev. Mr. Martineau, Mr. Frederic Harrison, the Dean of St. Paul's, the Duke of Argyll, Dr. W. G.

Ward, Prof. Huxley, and R. H. Hutton.

1 Vol. Crown, 8vo. Cloth, neat, $1.25.

This volume contains the scholarly utterances of the leading scientists and philosophers of Great Britain on two of the most important subjects of the century.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St.,

Boston.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIA-TION.

Send to Offices at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.,

for

TRACTS.

I. TAXATION OF ORPHAN PROPERTY, by

James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 30 cts.;

one hundred, $1.50.

II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.

III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W.

Higginson. Enlarged edition.

IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.

V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen

(Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal

American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two

Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 18 and 20, 1878.)

VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An

Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts

Laws. 4. The Workingman's

Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple,

Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt,

and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II, III, IV, V, VI, 10 cts. each; ten for 80 cts.; one hundred, $3.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter.

5 cts. (Ten for 30 cts.; one hundred,

$1.50.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. E. A. ANNUAL

MEETINGS for 1872, '73, '74, '75, '76, and

'77, Five cents each.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION,

a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. E. A. platform. $1.50.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and 95 cents free. Address H. HALLIST & Co.,
Portland, Maine.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth
$5 free. Address STRINSON & Co.,
Portland, Maine.

WEST NEWTONEnglish and Classical School.

The twenty-fifth school year of this Family and Day School for both sexes will begin WEDNESDAY, Sept. 19, 1877. For Circular and information apply to
NATH'L T. ALLEN,
West Newton, Mass.

NEW BOOK BY INGERSOLL.

Contains his latest lectures on "The Ghosts,"
"Liberty of Man, Woman, and Child," "Centennial Oration," "Farming in Illinois," and others. Handsomely bound in one volume.
Price $1.50. Also

THE GODS AND OTHER LECTURES.

Same style. Price $1.25.

Sent post-paid on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUEOF AMERICA.

1. EQUAL RIGHTS IN RELIGION. Contains an Historical Account of the Liberal

League movement; a full Report of the Centennial Congress of Liberals at Philadelphia, July 1 to 4, 1876, with Essays by F. E. Abbot, James Parton, E. F.

Underwood, and others; the Constitution of the National Liberal League,

List of Charter Members, etc., etc.

Octavo, pp. 180. Cloth, $1.00; paper, 75 cents.

2. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE OF

THE UNITED STATES, adopted at Philadelphia, July 4, 1876. With Resolutions of the Congress, Extracts from Letters

by Distinguished Citizens, Constitution of the National Liberal League, etc.

Adapted for gratuitous distribution by friends of the cause. Octavo, 24 pp.

Single copies, 5 cts.; 10 copies, 15 cts.;

50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.

3. PRIVILEGES FOR NONE—JUSTICE FOR ALL.

Contains the N. L. L. Platform and Resolutions adopted at Rochester, Oct.

26, 1877, full information how to organize Local Leagues, etc. Twenty-page tract for the use of workers. Single copies, 5 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.

ADDRESS

National Liberal League of America

231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON.

FROTHINGHAM'S WORKS.

THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY. An Essay. Third Edition—Revised. Price $1.50.

"Nobody can peruse this book without respect for the learning, mental honesty and skill in the statement of his convictions, possessed by the author, and for the essential integrity and philanthropic tendency of his spirit."—Springfield Republican.

"A profoundly sincere book, the work of one who has read largely, studied thorowly, reflected patiently. . . . It is a model of scholarly culture and of finished and vigorous style."—Boston Globe.

THE CHILD'S BOOK OF RELIGION. For

Sunday-schools and Homes. Price $1.00.

THE SAFEST CREED, AND OTHER DIS-

COURSES. 12mo, Cloth, $1.50.

Not "food for babes," but full of suggestion for earnest and thoughtful men.

STORIES FROM THE LIFE OF THE TEACHER. With Frontispiece. Cloth,

$1.00.

"The Parables are so re-told as to absorb the attention of the reader, and to fasten upon the mind what the writer believes to have been the impression the Savior meant to convey. It is in style and thought a superior book, and will interest alike young and old."—Evangelist (Methodist).

STORIES OF THE PATRIARCHS. With

Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"A work of culture and taste; it will be welcome to all ages, and gives the sublimest lessons of manhood in the simple language of a child."—Springfield Republican.

BELIEFS OF THE UNBELIEVERS. A

Lecture. 12mo, Cloth, $1.00.

TRANSCENDENTALISM IN NEW ENGLAND.

A History. With sketches and studies of Emerson, Alcott, Parker, Margaret Fuller, the Brook Farm Community, etc. 8vo, Cloth extra, with steel portrait of the author, $2.50.

THE LIFE OF THEODORE PARKER. 8vo.

With Portrait, $3.00.

The New York Tribune closes a four and a