The Principles of Mature.

The devotional faculty as much proves the existence of a God as any other faculty of the human soul proven its legitimate object. The existence of the optic sense proves light alor open. The existence of the auditory sense proves sound to olfactory, odors, etc. So the existence of the amain-overs presupposes sex; the existence of the philoprogenitive eme Being. The myriads of China, and Japan, and and Africa's awarthy millions, with one voice testify ny's instinctive belief in the existence of God. conceiving mind. Yet, let the manner of conceiving what it may, all without exception ascribe to he attributes. All spontaneously believe that he can God be what it may, all winner.

All apontaneously believe that he can be moved by prayer, appeared by sacrifices, exalted and glorified by praise, and provoked to wrath by misdeeds. All believe that he has intelligence, and windom, and power to overrule that he has been, jealously, hatted, mercy, etc., indicating their conception of him as a human being.

Spiritual perception of him as the Divine Man. It has taken up the idea that God is the groundric center of the universemble Great Positive Mind. And from that refined and intensity.

gain inquire who he is?

The answer to this inquiry may be further elicited by an-her inquiry, namely: What does this instinct of worship equire? What does the heart of man demand? I affirm that none other than a human God will satisfy it; none other that one other than a human God will satisfy it; none other will meet its wants and answer its devotional impulses and desires. No man can worship a principle. He might as well worship electricity or magnetism. No man can worship to totality of law; none can worship Nature, or the soul of the universe. Pantheism is as much out of the question here as Atheism. An organized, personal, intelligent, and emotional human God is the only God that can be worshiped by tional human God is the only God that can be worshiped by the heart of man-the only God that can be loved with a hu man love, and the only God that can be rationally conceived

Hence it conceives God as fixed mathematically in the center of the universe, he he as fixed mathematically in the center of the universe, he he again inquire who he is? this conception. It is purely mathematical. God is the itsual center of the universe. And what is the opiritus ter? Why, it is the Rest Man—the Being of the most and truth. The Being of the greatest love and the modom is the center of the universe. But the center only coresponds to the mathematical center of the material universe

The Principles of Nature.

ANCIENT CHRISTIAN SPIRITUALISM

In the pending controversy in respect to the alleged exist ing intercourse between man and the denizens of the unseen world, the professodly Christian Church has, strange to say shown herself the most formidable champton in the negative Not that the believers in Christ and the Bible suppose it impossible, in the nature of things, for any interchange of though to take place between men in this world and initiable intelligences in the other, for the Book which they professodly receive as the Chart of their faith, is full of testimonies to the reality of such occurrences. But it is assumed and proclaimed with much assurance by them, that the link of connection between mundane and spiritual intelligences was permanently secred at the close of the apostolic age—that since then the Spirit-world has been dumb and silent to all the invocations of mortals, and all alleged messages, impressions, and muraculous endowments from that quarter have necessarily belonged to the category of illusions or willful impostures.

Now it is upon this assumption, and upon this alone, the the Church's whole opposition to the doctrine of existing apiritual intercourse rests; and unless the assumption can be shown to be well founded, the opposition must evidently either gire way, or be terned with equal force against the reality of the same phenomena as alleged in Biblical record to have existed in the former ages of the world.

But where, we ask, are we to find a shadow of proof that spiritual intercourse was intended to cease at the close of the apostoic age? It will not be asserted that this proof is found in the known constitution of man or of Spirits, or in the known relations of the material and spiritual worlds, for these, for anght we can determine, are essentially the same now as they were before the apostless were in their graves. Nor can I imagine where proof of the point can be found in the Bible. The only three passages I have yet seen or heard adduced as proof (rix., the refusal of Abraham in the parable to send Lazarus from his bosom back to the earth; the asying of Jesus on the cross, "It is finished;" and the prohibition in the Revelation of St. John against adding any thing to that particular book, Rev. xxii 18), it seems to me do not meet the case, and the very weakness of the arguments derived from these passages conveys an idea of the desperancess of a cause which finds it increasing to make the series.

But on the other hand, Jenus and his aposities seem to have considered a perpetuity of the spiritual intercourse during the after ages of the true Church as a matter of course, and show by several implications that they expected its continuance so long as Christians remained faithful. Thus Jenus promised the Holy Spirit indiscriminately to those who would sincerely and devoully ask it of the Father (Luke Xi. 13), and Paul distinctly characterized the Christian dispensation as one which brought those who received it "to an innumerable company of supples, to the general assembly and church of the first born, which are written in heaven, and to God the Judge of all, and to the spirits of just men made perfect." Heb. xii. 22, 23. It appears that during the age of the aposites, prophets, seers, discerners of spirits, speakers with direct tongues, workers of miracles, and other. "mediums." for divine and apritual influences, existed and were multiplied in the Church everywhere; and there is no evidence, either in reason or history, to show that the gifts of these were all taken away, and the lamp of heaven forever ceased its direct shinings, as the last of the aposites analt into his grave. There is, on the contrary, the most direct and positive historical evidence that these spiritual gifts were universally considered by the Christians are assisting uninterropledly, to a greater or less setter, in the Church, for nearly three hundred years after the commencement of the Christian era. Their existence was then disputed only by a few, and by the mass of the Cutholic world their occasional occurrence has been admitted in all ages, down to the present day, and even some Protestant accubace, unit recently, believed the same.

Let us now glance at some of the numerons historical institutionies as to the post-apostolic perpetuity of apiritual gifts and intercourse in the Christian Church. The learned Dr. Mosheim, in treating the history of the Church during the second century, says, "It is easier to conceive than to express how much the miraculous powers and the extraordinary divine gifts which the Christians exercised on various occasions contributed to extend the limits of the Church. The gift of foreign tongues appears to have gradually ceased as soon as many nations became enlightened with the truth, and numerous churches of Christians were everywhere established, for the became less necessary than it was at first. But the other gifus with which God favored the rising Church of Christ were, as we learn from numerous testimonies of the snicients, still conferred upon particular persons here and there." Dr. Murdock, the translator of Mosheim, sanctions these statements with emphasis, adding a long note, in which he argue the point, and refers to numerous passages in the ancients to

The epsides of St. Barnabas, St. Clement, St. Ignatus, St. Polycarp, and the Shepherd of Hermas, written immediately after the apostolic age, or perhaps one or two of them a little before the death of St. John, distinctly recognized the existence of mirraculous, prophete, and other extraordinary spiritual gifts in the Christian church during the lives of their authors; and these epsitles were for a long time afterward publicly read in the Christian churches as possessing an authority little inferior to that of the apostolic writings themselves. The authors of these respective productions are called the Apostolic Fathers, from the fact that they were the cotemporaries and immediate successors of the apostole. The writer of the epistle of St. Barnabas is thought to be the Barnabas spoken of in the Acts of the Apostles as at one time the companion of Paul, though by others this has been disputed. St. Clement is supposed to be the Clement spoken of by Paul in Phil. iv. 3. St. Hermas was a brother of a bishop of Rome, and wrote his tract in his old age, about the middle of the second century. The revelation which it contains purports to have been given him by an angel who appeared in the habit of a shepherd; and hence the book is settled. The Shepherd of Hermas."

The account which Hermas gave of his experience will be recognized as bearing a close resemblance to some experiences and some experiences of the control of St. Ionatus was an immediate disciple and personal associate of the beloved St. John, and was by the latter sponted bishop of Antich. He was said to be "a man in all things like unto the apostles." He was said to be "a min all things like unto the apostles." He was aummoned from his bishopire to Rome in the year 127, where he suffered marrydom by being exposed to the fury of wild beasts in the theater. He was accompanied to Rome by some of the members of his church, who wrote an account of his journey and arrival there, and testify to the existence of visions and apirtual apparations at that age in the following passages: "The night after his (Ignatus") sufferings," say they, "we were together watching in prayer, that God would wouchsafe us (weak men) some assurance of what had passed; whereupon several of the company fell into a slumber (ecatatical, because watching in prayer), and therein saw visions in which Ignatus was represented, which, when we had conferred together, we glorified God, being thereby assured of his bleasedness."

personal disciple and associate of St. John, and was by this apositie appointed bishop of Smyrna. During the earlier ages of the Church he appears to have been universally considered as endued with similar apiritual gifts to those which characterized the aposities, one among other proofs of which lact is the eateers in which his writings were bolden for three hundred years, during which time, as before stated, they were publicly read in the churches in connection with those of the aposities. This holy man auffered marryrdom for the Christian cause in the year 147, when at an advanced age. A account of his last suffering, with what preceded and followed, was written in a circular letter by some members of his church at Smyrnas, and directed to all other churches, an some particulars of the history are entirely conclusive as the manifestation of spiritual presence and influence in those days. Speaking of several others who suffered marryrdo at the same time, they say, "While they were under to ments they were obsert from the foldy (growbably under it existance) impressions), or, rather, the Lord Christ stood them, and conversed with them, and revealed things to the inconceivable by man; as if they were no longer men, it al, eady become angels. As to Polycarp, he saw a vision three days before he was taken; and behold, the pillow under his head he saw all in a fame; whereupon, turning to those about him, he said, prophetically, 'I shall be burnt alive.' After his apprehension, and while he was going into the place of execution, there came a voice from heaven, saying, 'Be strong, and quit thyself like a man, Polycarp.' Now no one saw who spoke to him, but many of our brethren heard the voice.'" After describing the scenes of the execution, the writers say, "Such was the end of Polycarp, who, in our times, was a truly opostolical and prophetical teacher; for every word that went out of his mouth either has been already fulfilled or will be." The writer of the copy of this account, from which the foregoing is extracted, adds, "This episle of Polycarp, by Caius; after which I, Pionius, wrote it from the same copy, which I found, by a revelution, wherein Polycarp appeared and directed me to it, as I have and do declare in a most soleum manner.

Justin Marty, an emment apologist and defender of Christianity, who flourished about the middle of the second century, affirmed, according to Eusebuss, that the gift of prophecy shome brightly in the Church in his time. About the year 180, Athenagoras, in an apology which he was commissioned by his Christian brethren to carry to the Emperor of Rome, describes in it what in our phrase would be called "speaking mediums," and which second to have abounded in the Church at those times under the names of prophets and propheteses." I call them prophets," says he, "who, being out of themselves and this own thoughts, did utter forth whatsoever by the impelling power of the Spirit he wrought in them; while the Divine Operator served himself of them, or their organs, even as men do of a trumpet, blowing through it. Thus have we prophets a history and the prophets as in a time to qual and worthy of human reason, O ye emperors, to yield up our faith to the Divine Spirit who mores the months of the prophets as his instrument?

Ammonus Saccas, a Uhristan philosopher, who opened a school at Alexandria, in the latter part of the second century (which school was for a long time in great repute), laught the art of procuring communion with spirits, or demons, as he called them. His disciples called this art "theurgy;" but whether the spirits invoked by such means were always of the most Christian character does not appear. (See Mosheim.)

During the fore part of the third century (spiritual gifts in the Church still continuing as general as before). Eusebius relates, that while a persecution raged at Alexandria, there was among the martyrs a young woman named Potomiana, whose courage and fortitude under her last sufferings excited the astonishment of the spectators. Three days after the execution of her body, this same Potomiana appeared in spirit by night, "to one Banildes, a Roman soldier, and, covering his head with a crown, said he must shortly be taken away. The vision wrought effectually to convert Banildes," and who, for his confession of faith in Christ, was loaded with chains, and shortly afterward rewarded with the crown of martyrdom "Many others also, at the same time, in Alexandria, were wrought upon to the open confession of their faith in Christ.

An account of the election of a Bishop of Jarusalem is also worthy of note, as showing the manifest operation of spiritual influences at that age. It is to the effect that when Narcissus, Bishop of Jarusalem, was about one hundred years old, and disqualified by that extreme age for the further discharge of his official functions, Alexander, a Cappadocian bishop, was admonshed, in a vision by night, to go to Jerusalem for some purpose. When Alexander approached Jerusalem, several of the chief persons of the church of that city also had visions, in which they were directed to hasten out of the gates of the city, and receive the bishop ordinated for them by God. Heing thus miraculously appointed. Alexander exercised the functions of hishop to that church for years, and died while under impresonment for the faith, in the year 253.

Tertullian, in his fract concerning the soul, chap. ix., says. "We had a right, after St. John, to aspect prophesyings, and we do now acknowledge the same spiritual gifts; for there is at this day living among us a sister who is partaker of the gift of revelations, which ahe receives under exclasely in the apiritual the public congregation; wherein she converses with angels, sometimes also with the Lord, and seeth and heared divine mysteries, and discoverath the hearts of some persons and does minister succor to such as desired; and while the Scriptures are read, or pealmant are singuing, or they are preaching, or prayers are offered up, subjects from thence are ministered in her visions. We had once some discourse touching the soil while this sister was in the sport! after the publicarvices were over, and most of the people gone, she acquaint of us with what the saw, as the custom was, for these thing are heedfully digested, that they may be duly proved. Amon other things, she told us that a material soul was before he and the Spirit was before the after the spiritual spiritual informed Spiritualist can fail to be atruck with the similarity of this description given by Tertullian, and many occurrences which are witnessed at the present day? The description which the prophetess, mentioned in this extract, gave of the soil, will be recognized as perfectly accordant with the revelations which Swedenburg and subsequent "mediums" have given on the same subject.

Notwithstanding there appears to have been a gradual decline and final cessation of heathen aracles after the entablishment of the Christian Church (and we might show strong reasons for believing that these oracles were actual apiritual communications, as both heathens and Christians believed them to he), there seem to have still been among the heathens some mediums for spirits (or the alledged gods) for a long time after the apostolic age. Between these spirits and their mediums on the one hand, and the Christian prophets on the other, there was generally an open hostility; but wherever a trial of powers occurred, the heathen spirit was forced to give way, showing the existence still in the Church of that power conferred by Jeanu upon his disciples to "cast out devila." Hence we find Tertullian, in his "Apology for the Christian Religion," holdly challeuging all heathendom to a trial of the powers of their patron apirits and divinities, who were accustomed to possess and speak through the bodies of certain men. "Hitherto," says he, "we have used words; we will now come to a demonstration of the very thing, that your Gentile gods are no one of them greater than another. For a decision of the point, let any one that is judged 'to be possessed by a devil be brought into open court before your tribunals; when that spirit shall be commanded by a Christian to speak he shall as truly confess himself a devil there, as elsewhere halsely claims to be a god. Or let one equally be produced who is among you Gentiles judged to be inspired of God, whe waits at your altars, and is esteemed a sacred person by you, may, though he be acted by one of your most venerated deities, be it Diana the heavenly virgin, or Esculapius that prescribes your medicines, and who pretends to relieve the dying yet these, or any others, when they are summoned, if they dare to lie unto the Christian summoning, and if they do not confess themselves openly to be devils, then let that reproach full Christian's blood be spill by you on the spot."

It may not be presumed that Tertullian would have given his open challenge to the heathen detics (or tutelar spirits) unless the example of common and notorious occurrences had been such as to give him confidence of victory in the trial; and hence we find him afterward triumphing over the vanquished demons in the following manner: "A fine Deity, indeed, that is subject unto a man! But they know that our Christ is their judge, and that they are by so uncontrollable authority made subject to his servants; therefore from our fouch and breath they fly out of the bodies where they did reside, unwilling and with giref, in your presence.

Tertulian died about the year 231, and hence this reflex of the state of spiritual gills among the Christians must be considered as applicable to the Church a little before that time. Numerous testimonies might be cited to prove that this power of "casting out devils," or in the more fastidious phrase of imodern Spiritualists, of expelling "unprogressed Spirits," continued for a long time after that, as did also the necessity of frequently exercising it. Indeed, Mosheim informs us that in the third century the office of exercist, as a special office, was created in the churches, it being the dup of the one holding it to cast out these subtile and unchristian spirits from the bodies of such as were infested by them, and which they did by a process similar to that employed by the aposities.

Thus, employing a conection rout the ancient rausers now before us, an well as the testimony of Mosheim, Eusebius, and others, we might go on to cite numerous passages to prive that apritual manifestations in the form of prophetic dreams, risions, impressions, speaking impulses, power to cast out devils, etc., continued more or less in the Christian Church, and were universally recognized by its members, until the Church, owing to outer prosperity, grew so corrupt and worldly as to render the free and general access and operation of apritudia influences any longor impossible. These unfluences were operative upon simple-hearted and devoit men and women in all classes of Christian accety, and even simple and unsophisticated little children often uttered the world of superatal windom while under the divine affitus, and by the revolutions thus given forth the Church was principally governed, and opposing religious were triumphasally vanquished for more than two centuries. Indeed, no Christian ever though to denying the ensitence of these spiritual influences in the Church until near the age of Constantine. According to Eusebius they ensated in the Church to some considerable extent, even at that age, and Constantine homel sometimes experienced them—not only being adminished but with a vision of the luminous cross which he saw at mid-day in the heavens, but being warned in dreams and vasions concerning the plots of his enomines. St. Chan An, according to Musheim, as time and querient was the behild in spiritual communications in the fourth century, thas Nt. Ambrose publicly cited the teatimony of Spirita, called damona, who spoke through the vocal organs of men (as Spirita now do) in proof of the falsity of the doctrines of Arius; and the testimony was rebuilted by the followers of Arius, not by denying the reality of those spiritual communications, but by saying that Ambrose had briled the Spirita to give such testimony.* §

Dispensing with the abundant matter which might be given as corroborative of the foregoing, what, so far as we have as corroborative of the foregoing, what, so far as we have as corroborative of the foregoing, what, so far as we have an expension of the question which has occupied our thoughts? Why, it is proved as plainly and positively as any point can possibly be proved by betorical evidence, that the manifestations of aprintial power and influence did not cease with the spostolic age, the assertion of modern theologians to the contrary notwithstanding, but that they continued in uninterrupted succession, though somewhat declining in degree, for at least two hundred and fifty years afterward? But in proving this we prove at the same time that apprints communition in the normal printipe of the true and faithful Christian Church, irrespective of the age of the world in which it may exist, and that that Church which denies the possible Christian Church, irrespective of the age of the world in which thought and angels, must necessarily have experienced a mourtaful defection from the estate of that free and primitive Church, whose members, by an express Divine dispensation, were brought to an innumerable company of angels, to the spirits of just men made perfect, and to God the judge of all." On prefessed Church of Christ! how an thou missensity failers from the heavenly connections in which thou wast placed in this earlier days. How art thou puffed up with worldly pride and power, glounding upon the wealth of thy learning, this existing hower, the content of the prototype and prophetic mirror, the Landicese Church of old, thou art had ill spirited things poor, and mirror to three unner states, and report the in dust and ashes, if peradrenture God will listen to thy pentient prayers.

vain, and that the scotence is far more applicable to her communicants," He that is unjust let him be unjust still, and he that is holy let him be holy still, you the triat is at hand." And "he that hath cars to hear may now, we think, distinctly hear the angel trumpet sounding through the earth, saying to all who are willing "to follow the Lamb wittensacras as gooth, "Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakess of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues—come to the glorious city of the New Jerusalem, which already beganneth to descend from God out of herein, in which the spirit of the Lord alone reigns over his people forever."

But this spiritual desection of the Courch—this "partial deserg"—was distinctly predicted by the aposite Peni, that the "man of sin" I understand the mature state of ungodinass in general, and the lust of spiritual power and dominion in particular, whether applying to Catholice or Protestants—to men in this world or Spiritus in the other. It is that spirit of human schiahness that exalteth itself above all that is called God, and which, atting in the temple of God, seeketh to be worshiped as God, and which, I have no disposition to deary, is in some degree represented in the "signs and lying wonders and deceavableness" of a portion of the apprilial communications of this day. All these, together with the effect carcina of a Church which, like the Jewish Church of old, has fixed out its time and ceased to perform uses, will the Lord destrey, "with the brightness of his coming," as he demands in these latter days, "with all his holy an eds." to consume arrow and corruption, and establish his everlasting hangload?

Where, theo, is the sheological objection to the day? Such intercourse as applicable to this day? Such intercourse, when of a proper kind and properly conducted surely can not be proved ittegrunate by the goapel, or by the history of the post-apostolic Church, for we have seen that the teachings and examples of these are develodly in its fevor. Whoever desires the possibility in the nature of existing things, by that denial acknowledges his own condemns into maximal provided by the standard of the early Church. Who were inducentially demonstress the modern apriculat communications, as dominating uiters a sentence equally severagament the existing Church, for had not the latter early degenerated as to the spritted powers since the days of Tertak linn, she might now easily exerces and check the demons, as Tertulian and his confrient excited and allenced the Spritter
