II. 8. "Now therefore, thus shalt thou say to my servant David, Thus saith THE LORD OF HOSTS: I took thee from the cote, from following the sheep, to become leader over my people Israel;

9. "And I have been with thee whithersoever thou wentest, and have cut off all thine enemies from before thee, and have made thee a great name, like the name of the great upon the earth:—

10. ("Also I will appoint a place for my people Israel, and will plant them, and they shall dwell under their own jurisdiction, and they shall not be disturbed any more, neither shall the sons of iniquity continue to trouble them, as at the first;

* The question is answered in the parallel passage, "Thou shalt not build me a house to dwell in," 1 Chron. xvii. 4.

11. “Even from the time that I appointed judges over my people Israel,—and I have given thee rest from all thine enemies.

III. “Moreover THE LORD declareth unto thee, that THE LORD will make thee a house, [or household:]

12. “When thy days shall be expired, and thou shalt be with thy fathers, I will raise up THY SEED after thee, which shall issue from thy loins, and I will establish his kingdom;

13. “HE shall build a house for my name, and I will establish the throne of his kingdom for ever;

14. “*I WILL BE TO HIM A FATHER, AND HE SHALL BE TO ME A SON:—(whosoever [shall be concerned] in injuring HIM , even I will chastise them with the rod of men, and with the stripes of the sons of Adam.)—

15. “And my mercy shall not depart from HIM, as I withdrew it from Saul, whom I withdrew before thee:—

16. “But thy house and thy kingdom shall be established before ME † for ever; thy throne shall be confirmed for ever.”

1. This illustrious prophecy, here attempted to be rendered more closely and correctly, is divisible into three parts. It opens with a gentle refusal; Shalt thou build me a house for my dwelling? tacitly intimating the reverse; as clearly stated in the parallel passage; and the reason is afterwards assigned, in a

* The authorized translation of this passage, (If he commit iniquity, I will chastise him with the rod of men, and with the stripes of the children of men,) is incorrect: for

1. The conditional particle, If, is wanting in the original.

2. The first term, אֲשֶׁר, Asher, signifies, “whosoever,” frequently; as “whosoever regardeth not the word of the Lord [by Moses,] left his servants and cattle in the field,” Exod. ix. 21. “And whosoever smiteth Kiriath Sepher, I will give him my daughter Achsah to wife,” Josh. xv. 16; being put elliptically, for כֹּל אֲשֶׁר, omnis qui, or quicumque, as “they that made idols, are like them; and so is every one that trusteth in them,” Psalm cxv. 8.

3. The second term, בְּהֵעוֹתוֹ, be-haotho, may either be taken as a verb, “in injuring him,” or a noun, “in his injury,” either from the verb עוֹת, aoth, to injure, or wrong, by “perverting judgment,” as it is used Job viii. 3; Lament. iii. 36; or from the noun עוֹתָהּ, aothah; which, with the affix, aoth-i, signifies “my wrong,” Lament. iii. 59.

The ancient versions, followed by our English Bible, were probably led into this grievous mistranslation and misapplication of this passage to CHRIST, “who did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth,” 1 Pet. ii. 22, by confounding “HIM” with “his children,” in the parallel passage, Psalm lxxxix. 30—33, “If his children forsake my laws,” &c. from which they incorrectly borrowed the particle if.

† The Sept. and Syr. Versions, supported by some MSS. of Kennicot and De Rossi, instead of לְפָנַי, lipnich, “before thy face,” read לְפָנַי, lipni, “before my face,” which is justified by the parallel passage, and absolutely required by the context.

later prophecy, to David himself; because thou hast shed much blood in the earth in my sight; in which Solomon is expressly foretold by name, as the son who was chosen to build the Temple; “Behold, a son shall be born to thee, who shall be a man of rest—for his name shall be Solomon,—[‘peaceable;’] He shall build a house for my name,” 1 Chron. xxii. 6—10. “Solomon thy son, he shall build my house and my courts,” 1 Chron. xxviii. 6. But this later prophecy was delivered about the twentieth year of David’s reign, five years after the former, and shortly before Solomon’s birth, who, in consequence of it, was surnamed by the prophet Nathan, “Jedidiah,” or “beloved of THE LORD,” 2 Sam. xii. 24, 25.

The confounding of these two prophecies together, has greatly embarrassed commentators, blending the Temple of Solomon with the Temple of CHRIST; the mortal son of David, with the immortal SON OF GOD, in all the ambiguities of the double interpretation of prophecy. See their distinctness proved at length, in the fourth Dissertation on the Prophecies, explaining the divine and human nature of CHRIST, referred to before; in which the two prophecies and their parallels are fully translated, with Remarks.

2. The second part, in its parenthetical clause, looks far into futurity, to the final destination of the people of Israel; promising them a flourishing settlement, an independent establishment, and lasting rest from all their enemies, such as they had not enjoyed, even from the infancy of their state, in the days of the judges.

3. The third part announces, with much solemnity, that future son of David, who was to accomplish all this: and who is distinguished from any of his immediate sons, by the appropriate term, “seed,” which is “CHRIST,” Gal. iii. 16, who was to be peculiarly THE SON OF GOD.—*I WILL BE TO HIM A FATHER, AND HE SHALL BE TO ME A SON,—as this passage is explained, as applied by St. Paul, Heb. i. 5.—“He shall build a house for my name,”—not the temporary, perishable house which David meditated, and Solomon built; but that “temple which CHRIST promised to build up,” John ii. 19; and those “temples of GOD, to be inhabited by the SPIRIT OF GOD,” 1 Cor. iii. 16, namely, our Blessed Lord himself, and his faithful followers, or Church; and perhaps, also, that glorious future temple in Judea, (emblematical of that “built without hands, eternal, in the heavens,” 2 Cor. v. 1,) described in the most magnificent terms by the prophets, Zechariah, vi. 12, 13, Ezekiel, xl. &c. Tobit, xiv. 5, 6, &c. and in the Apocalypse.

* The parallel passage, in the latter prophecy, applied to Solomon, resembles, but is not the same as this: “He shall be to ME a son, and I will be to him a FATHER,” 1 Chron. xxii. 10; for, 1. there is a remarkable transposition of the terms, which is verified in both cases, by the parallel passages, and by all the ancient Versions: 2. This promise is conditional, as explained by the context, and twice by GOD himself: “If thou wilt walk in my ways, to keep my statutes, &c. then I will lengthen thy days,” &c.; 1 Kings iii. 4, ix. 4.

The succeeding parenthetical clause predicts the sufferings of the MESSIAH, from his ungrateful countrymen, and his own household, the Jews, “to whom he came, but they entertained him not,” John i. 11; but denied the HOLY ONE and THE JUST, and killed the PRINCE OF LIFE, Acts iii. 14, 15, for which that wicked and apostate generation, and their children, have ever since been visited with the rod, and chastized with stripes, even to the present day! A visitation and chastisement to be extended to all disobedient and apostate Christians likewise, as appears from the parallel explanatory clause, in the sublime commentary of Ethan, Psalm lxxxix. 30—33.

(“If his children forsake my laws, and walk not in my judgments; if they break my statutes, and keep not my commandments: then will I visit their transgressions with a rod, and their iniquity with stripes;”)—and who that ponders these things cannot but perceive the arm of THE LORD, now revealed, in the signs of the times, and those tremendous “wars and unsettlements,” now raging throughout Christendom! (June 21, 1809.)

But the finest commentary on this incidental prediction of the sufferings of the MESSIAH, and the chastisement of his foes, is furnished by David, in his celebrated prophecy of the second Psalm; whose title, in the Arabic Version, is,

PSALM II. OF DAVID.

A PROPHECY CONCERNING CHRIST THE LORD, AND THE CALLING OF THE GENTILES.

1. Why did the Gentiles rage,
And the peoples imagine vanity?
2. The kings of the land confederated,
And the rulers were assembled together,

- Against THE LORD,
And against HIS MESSIAH:—
3. " *Let us break their bands asunder,
And cast away their yoke from us.*"—
 - II. 4. HE that sitteth in the heavens shall smile,
And THE REGENT * shall deride them;
 5. Then shall He speak to them in his wrath,
And terrify them in his anger:—
 6. " *Nevertheless I was ordained KING,
On Sion, my holy mount :*
 7. I will declare GOD'S decree:—
THE LORD said unto me,
" THOU ART MY SON,
THIS DAY HAVE I BEGOTTEN THEE :
 8. *Ask of me, and I will give thee
The Gentiles for thine inheritance,
And the ends of the earth, thy possession :*
 9. *Thou shalt rule them with an iron rod, [or sceptre]
And crush them like a potter's vessel."*
 - III. 10. Ponder now, therefore, O ye kings,
Be instructed, ye judges of the earth.
 11. Serve THE LORD with fear,
And rejoice in HIM with trembling :
 12. Kiss THE SON [also] lest He be angry ;
And [so] ye perish from the way [of life]
If his wrath be kindled even a little :
Blessed are all that trust in HIM."

The sole application of this illustrious prophecy to the MESSIAH, or CHRIST, was the unquestionable doctrine of the pri-

* The original term, אַדְנִי, ADONI, is clearly distinguished from יְהוָה, IAHOH, "[THE] LORD," ver. 2, before; and from אֵת יְהוָה, ÆTH IAHOH, "THE LORD," ver. 11, afterward: and it corresponds to מְשִׁיחוֹ, MESHIHU, "HIS MESSIAH," ver. 2; and also to בְּנִי, BENI, "MY SON," ver. 7; and to בַּר, BAR, "THE SON," ver. 12. It occurs in the form of regimen, and is used elliptically, for אֲדֹנָי יְהוָה, ADONI-IAHOH, as fully expressed, Amos viii. 9, &c. But אֲדֹן, ADON, is applied to Joseph, the patriarch, as "Lord, (or Superintendent) of Pharaoh's household; and Ruler, (Regent) over all the land of Egypt," Gen. xlv. 8. Here, therefore, ADONI should be rendered REGENT, to distinguish it from IAHOH, whose appropriate rendering is "LORD." And the full title, הָאֲדֹן יְהוָה, HA ADON IAHOH "THE REGENT LORD," occurs Exod. xxiii. 17, xxxiv. 23, &c. And St. Paul seems to sanction the application of Regent to CHRIST, 1 Cor. xv. 27, 28.

Nothing, indeed, has so much obstructed the improvement of Sacred Criticism hitherto, as the unwarrantable neglect of acquiring clear, distinct, and correct ideas of the various names and titles of THE DEITY, that occur in the Hebrew Scriptures. The six terms, Æl, Æloh, and Ælohîm; Jah, Jahoh, and Adoni; which have all appropriate significations, being unfortunately confounded together, and reduced to only two, Θεός and Κυριός, Deus and Dominus, God and Lord, in the Vulgate Greek, Latin, and English translations of the Bible. See my Dissertation on the Primitive Names of the Deity, No. VI. in which I have attempted to decypher their radical significations, p. 111—224.

mitive Jewish Church: the only question at that time was, whether the character corresponded to JESUS OF NAZARETH.

1. The Talmud, Cod. Succa, cap. 5, declares, “Our masters deliver, that the BLESSED GOD said unto the MESSIAH, son of David, (who is shortly to be revealed in our days) ASK of me somewhat, and I will give it thee,” &c. as it is said, Ps. ii. 7, 8.

2. The Midrash Tillim, understands the Gentiles, verse 1, of Gog and Magog, alluding to Balaam’s prophecy, Numb. xxiv. 7; and in a curious critical remark on the divine decree, verse 7, it states, that he is styled בְּנִי, MY SON, [absolutely] not לִי, TO ME A SON, or AS A SON, [relatively, as in Nathan’s prophecy.] This higher title was conferred on CHRIST “the day of his resurrection, when HE was ordained SON OF GOD, with power, according to the spirit of holiness,” Rom. i. 3.

3. R. Obadiah Gaon observes, that this Psalm alludes to the days of CHRIST, when mankind shall be converted to the worship of GOD. And he explains the inauguration of the MESSIAH, verse 6, My God hath made me to reign upon Sion, my mount, and this shall be in the redemption to come. And this is a curious additional proof of the genuine punctuation נִסְכַּחְתִּי (Nisachti) passively, “I was ordained,” followed by the Sept. εγω δε κατασταθην; the Vulg. Ego autem constitutus sum; and St. Paul, του ορισθεντος, Rom. i. 3, instead of the present Masorete punctuation, נִסְכַּחְתִּי (Nasachti) actively, “I ordained,” &c. inextricably embarrassing the sentence, in which there is only one speaker, the MESSIAH. And Gaon applies the last sentence, “Blessed are all that trust in Him;—to those that expect redemption, to them will the light arise.”

4. Its correspondence to JESUS OF NAZARETH is proved by the apostolical key thereto, furnished by the immediate inspiration of the HOLY SPIRIT, Acts iv. 24—31, when, after reciting the two first verses of the Psalm, the Apostles expounded them: “For, in truth, both Herod and Pontius Pilate” [“the kings of the land”] with “the Gentiles” [the Romans] and “peoples of Israel” [the Jews, and “the Rulers,” the Sanhedrim, or Council,] were assembled together against thy holy child JESUS, whom thou didst ANOINT, to do whatsoever thy counsel predetermined to happen,” &c.

5. The appropriation of these two kindred prophecies to JESUS CHRIST, as “THE FIRST BORN,” (τον πρωτοτοκον) Ps.

lxxxix. 27, or "THE ONLY BEGOTTEN SON OF GOD," (τον μονογενην) John iii. 18, in the sublime introduction of the Epistle to the Hebrews, i. 5, 6, precludes their primary or literal application to David or Solomon, and their secondary or spiritual only, to CHRIST; a fiction introduced by the later Jewish Rabbis, "to answer the heretics," or Christians, as Solomon Jarchi confesses.

DAVID'S PROPHECIES OF THE MESSIAH.

These prophecies of Nathan and David form the basis of an admirable chain of prophecies, interspersed through the book of PSALMS, which is expressly ranked by our Lord himself among the prophetic scriptures testifying of him, Luke xxiv. 44, describing his lineage, his sufferings, and his ensuing glory, Matt. xxii. 42; Luke xxiv. 25; such as

Psalm cxxxii. An excellent commentary on Nathan's prophecy, styling the promised son of David the MESSIAH, which St. Peter applied to OUR LORD, Acts ii. 30.

Psalm xxii. His sufferings and crucifixion, which the chief priests unwittingly quoted against him on the cross, "He trusted in GOD; let Him deliver him now, if He will have him," verse 8, Matt. xxvii. 43; and OUR LORD applied to himself, "MY GOD! MY GOD! why hast thou forsaken me?" verse 1, Matt. xxvii. 46; and St. John, to the partition of his garments among the Roman soldiers, verse 18, John xix. 24.

Psalm xvi. His death and resurrection: applied to OUR LORD by St. Peter, Acts. ii. 25—31, and by St. Paul, Acts xiii. 35, 36.

Psalm lxviii. His ascension and spiritual gifts to his disciples; applied by St. Paul, Ephes. iv. 7, 8.

Psalm cx. His exaltation, kingdom, and priesthood; applied by OUR LORD to himself, as that spiritual son of David whom David called LORD, Matt. xxii. 44; by St. Peter, Acts ii. 32—36; and by St. Paul, who explains from hence the nature of his kingdom, 1 Cor. xv. 25—28; and of his priesthood, Heb. vii. 1—28, viii. 1.

Psalm cxviii. His rejection by the Jews, and adoption of the Gentiles, and establishment of his Church; cited by OUR LORD, Matt. xxii. 42; expounded by St. Peter, Acts iv. 11; 1 Pet. ii. 4, 5; by St. Paul, Rom. ix. 32, 33; Ephes. ii. 20, 21; and by St. John, Rev. xx. 10—14.

Psalm xlv. His divinity and exaltation above the angels; expounded Heb. i. 8, 9; 1 Pet. iii. 22; Ephes. i. 22; Phil. ii. 9—11; and his spiritual union with his Church, and the happy fruits of it, Rev. xxi. 2, &c.

Psalm l. This sublime Psalm of Asaph recognizes the MESSIAH under the fullest title of THE DEITY, ÆL ÆLOHIM IAHOH, "THE GOD OF GODS, the LORD," rising by a noble climax, from the lowest to the highest, or most august, which is twice repeated with emphasis, Josh. xxii. 22, and there more correctly rendered "THE LORD, GOD OF GODS," than in the looser renderings of the compound here, in the Prayer-book, "THE LORD [even] THE MOST MIGHTY GOD;" and of the Bible, "THE MIGHTY GOD [even] THE LORD."

The Psalm of this highly inspired prophet opens with a grand description of THE MESSIAH, or REGENT LORD, summoning the whole world to judgment, from the rising to the setting sun, ver. 1—4. It then represents the resurrection of "the Saints," or the gathering of CHRIST'S "elect" from the four quarters of the globe, at the first resurrection, ver. 5, 6; compare Matt. xxiv. 31; John v. 24; Rev. xx. 4, 5. His address to "the Saints," ver. 7—15; to the wicked, ver. 16—22; at the general judgment; corresponding to our Lord's grand scenical trial, Matt. xxv. 31—46; and the impressive conclusion, "to honour THE SON," (as in Psalm ii. 12,) on account of the powers of judgment * vested in him by THE FATHER, ver. 23; is finely and fully explained and applied to himself, by our Lord, John v. 21—23; deriving his title thereto, from this ancient prophecy, no less than from his stupendous miracles, and not merely claiming credence on his own assertion, John viii. 54.

Psalm lxxii. This Psalm forms a concluding supplement to the preceding; it describes, in the most beautiful imagery, and the most lively colours, the peaceful glories of the MESSIAH'S future reign; his righteousness, or impartial administration of justice; the universal homage and worship to be paid to him; the perpetuity of his dominion, "whose name shall endure for ever, in whom mankind shall be blessed, and whom all nations shall call blessed." Magnificent predictions, utterly inapplicable to Solomon, but truly characteristic of CHRIST.

* This seems to be the peculiar import of Adon, derived from the future tense, אָדֹנָי, judicabo, of the verb, יָדַן, Dün, judicavit.

Besides these leading Psalms, immediately and solely applicable to the divine economy of the Christian dispensation in its grand outline, there are many others that contain minuter traits of the divine and human character of the MESSIAH, which it is incompatible with the nature of this work to particularize. This specimen, however, is abundantly sufficient to shew how extensively “the word of knowledge,” or the gift of prophecy, was communicated to this highly-favoured prince, and will naturally account for the veneration in which the Book of Psalms, of which he was the principal composer, has always been held in the Jewish and Christian Church.

DAVID'S CONQUESTS.

This active and enterprising prince, desirous to complete the reduction of the promised land, which had been begun by Moses and Joshua, and continued by the Judges and Saul, first turned his arms against his nearest, most warlike, and most inveterate foes, the Philistines, westwards, whom he subdued, and took from them Gath and its territory, 2 Sam. viii. 1; 1 Chron. xviii. 1; and formed a life-guard of the Cherethites of Gaza, the Pelethites of Askelon, and the Gittites of Gath, who were faithfully attached to him during all his wars and rebellions, 2 Sam. viii. 18; xv. 18.

He next turned eastwards, and subdued the Moabites beyond Jordan, and made them tributaries, 2 Sam. viii. 2.

Thence he proceeded northwards, and defeated and subdued the Syrians of Zobah and Damascus, extending his conquests to the river Euphrates, as originally promised to Abraham, Gen. xv. 18; 2 Sam. viii. 3—10.

He then went southwards, and defeated the Edomites, in a pitched battle, in the valley of salt, with the loss of 18,000 men, and put garrisons in Edom; thus fulfilling the former prophecies of the future subjection of Esau's family to Jacob's, Gen. xxv. 23; xxvii. 40; Numb. xxiv. 18; 1 Chron. xviii. 12, 13; 2 Sam. viii. 13, 14*.

“Thus David acquired a name; and the fame of David went out into all lands, and the Lord brought the fear of him upon all nations,” 2 Sam. viii. 13; 1 Chron. xiv. 17.

* In this last passage, אַרַם, Aram, “Syria,” is put by mistake for אֶדוֹם, Edom, “Idumæa,” which occurs in the parallel passage.

These conquests seem to have employed him about three years.

DAVID'S FIRST OFFENCE.

About the eighteenth year of his reign, and forty-eighth of his age, during the Ammonite war, which David undertook to revenge an insult offered to his ambassadors, and consigned to the care of Joab, while he remained at home himself, in an idle and unguarded hour, at even-tide, walking on the roof of his house, he saw the beautiful Bathsheba bathing, the wife of Uriah, the Hittite, who was serving under Joab at the siege of Rabbah; he sent for her, and he lay with her, 2 Sam. x. xi. 1—5.

To screen the effects of their adultery, he sent for Uriah, her husband, from the camp, expecting that he would visit his wife on his return; but Uriah avoided her, either thinking connubial gratifications inconsistent with his military service, or perhaps entertaining some suspicion of his wife's infidelity. Disappointed in this device, he contrived, in concert with the unprincipled Joab, the base and treacherous expedient of destroying the gallant Uriah by the sword of the children of Ammon; concluding his complicated crime with a hypocritical letter of condolence to Joab for Uriah's unworthy fate: "Let not this trouble thee, for the sword devoureth one as well as another." And to fill up the measure of his successful guilt, he openly took Bathsheba to wife, after her mourning was expired, and she bare him a son, 2 Sam. xi. 6—27.

"But the deed which David had done" with so much privacy, thinking to escape human detection, "displeased the LORD, and he sent Nathan, the prophet, to reprove him;" who, by a fictitious tale of oppression applicable to the case, the rich man, his stock and his herd, representing David, his wives and concubines; the poor neighbour, and his one little pet ewe lamb, Uriah and his wife Bathsheba; and the traveller, David's concupiscence, going to and fro, seeking whom it might devour, to which she was wantonly sacrificed; so kindled David's anger, that he not only sentenced the supposed offender to make restitution fourfold, according to the law, Exod. xxii. 1, but even to suffer death, exceeding the rigour of justice. Instantly the prophet retorted—Thou art the man! In the name of the Lord, he authoritatively upbraided him with his ingratitude and transgression, and threatened him that the sword, which he had privily employed to cut off Uriah, should never depart from his own house, and that his own wives should be publicly dishonoured by his neighbour—his own son Absalom, as verified by the event.

Convicted and confounded, David instantly confessed his guilt. “I have sinned against THE LORD!”—And for this speedy humiliation, without attempting to dissemble or cloke his guilt before the face of Almighty God, and his prophet, the Lord was pleased to remit the sentence of death which he had pronounced on himself, and to transfer it to the fruit of his crime. “THE LORD also hath put away [the punishment of] thy sin; thou shalt not die; but the child that is born to thee shall surely die,” 2 Sam. xii. 1—14.

The Rabbins remark, that three more of David's sons were cut off by violent deaths, thus completing the fourfold retaliation for the murder of Uriah, which he had himself denounced, namely, Amnon, Absalom, and Adonijah.

The fall of David is one of the most instructive and alarming recorded in that most faithful and impartial of all histories, the HOLY BIBLE. And the transgression of one idle and unguarded moment pierced him through with many sorrows, and embittered the remainder of his life; and gave occasion to the enemies of the Lord to blaspheme, on account of this crying offence of the man after God's own heart. When he only cut off the skirt of Saul's robe, his heart smote him for the indignity thus offered to his master*; but when he treacherously cut off a faithful and gallant soldier, who was fighting his battles, after having defiled his bed, his heart smote him not; at least we read not of any compunction, or remorse of conscience, that he either felt or expressed, till Nathan was sent to reprove him. Then indeed his sorrow was extreme; and his Psalms, composed on this occasion, express, in the most pathetic strains, the anguish of a wounded spirit, and the bitterness of his penitence.

- LI. 1. “Have mercy upon me, O God,
According to thy loving kindness;
According to the multitude of thy tender mercies,
Blot out my transgressions;
2. Wash me thoroughly from mine iniquity,
And cleanse me from my sin:

* 1 Sam. xxiv. 5; compare 2 Sam. x. 4.

3. For I acknowledge my transgression,
And my sin is ever before me."
10. "Create in me a clean heart, O God,
And renew a right spirit within me ;
11. Cast me not away from thy presence,
And take not thy Holy Spirit from me ;
12. Restore unto me the joy of thy salvation,
And uphold me with thy free Spirit."

And his thankfulness for the divine pardon and forgiveness :—

- XXXII. 1. "Blessed is he whose unrighteousness is forgiven,
And whose sin is covered.
2. Blessed is the man to whom the Lord imputeth not iniquity,
And in whose spirit there is no guile."—
5. "I acknowledged my sin unto thee,
And mine iniquity did I not hide :
I said, I will confess my transgressions to THE LORD,
And Thou forgavest the iniquity of my sin."—

And his rapturous praise and thanksgiving :—

- CIII. 1. "Praise the Lord, O my soul,
And all that is within me, praise his holy name.
2. Praise the Lord, O my soul,
And forget not all his benefits :
3. Who forgiveth all thy sins,
And healeth all thine infirmities :
4. Who redeemeth thy life from destruction,
And crowneth thee with loving kindness,
And tender mercies."— 11. "For look how high the heaven is
In comparison of the earth,
So great is his mercy also Toward them that fear Him :
12. Look how wide also
The east is from the west,
So far hath he set
Our sins from us."
13. Like as a father pitieth his children,
So the Lord pitieth them that fear Him :
14. For he knoweth our frame,
He remembereth that we are dust !"

Still the rising again of David holds forth no encouragement to sinners who may wish to shelter themselves under his example, or flatter themselves with the hope of obtaining his forgiveness ; for though his life was spared, yet God inflicted those temporal judgments which the prophet denounced, "that his soul might be saved in the day of THE LORD, and that others, admonished by his example, might be the more afraid to offend."

The remainder of his days was as disastrous as the beginning had been prosperous. Rape, incest, murder, and rebellion, raged among his children: he was deserted by his friends, reviled by his enemies, banished from his capital, and plunged into the deepest affliction by the ingratitude and death of his favourite and rebellious son, Absalom; and, to fill up the measure of his calamities, by a dreadful plague brought upon his subjects by his last offence: so that he died exhausted at seventy, still older in constitution than in years.

THE BONDAGE OF THE AMMONITES.

David has been censured for his cruelty to the Ammonites, after the reduction of Rabbah, which seems to have taken place after the birth of Solomon, about the twentieth year of his reign; but the Hebrew text will admit of a milder construction than that of the English Bible, 2 Sam. xii. 31.

“And David took the king’s crown from off his head, (the *value whereof was a talent of gold) with the precious stone, (which Josephus says was a Sardonyx, set in the front of the crown. Ant. VII. 7, 5.)

“And David brought forth the people that were therein, and put them to saws, and to harrows of iron, and to axes of iron, and made them pass by [or to] the brick-kilns; and thus did he unto all the cities of the children of Ammon.” That is, he put them to hard labour, and the most servile employments †.

* It is generally supposed, with our received Translation, that “the weight of the crown was a talent of Gold :” that is, 125 pounds weight, and would be much too heavy to wear on the head. For the Hebrew talent, amounted to 3000 shekels, (or 12,000 Attic drams, which made two Attic talents,) Exod. xxxviii. 25, 26. But the silver shekel of the Sanctuary weighed 20.

† The preposition כּ, which is rendered under, in rather an unusual sense, by the English Bible, in several places signifies to or for; as in the following passage, where it is connected with the same verb, שׂוּב, to “put,” or to “appoint,” or “impute :”

“This shall be the manner of the king that shall reign over you: He shall take your sons to himself, and appoint them to (or for) his chariots, and to (or for) his horsemen,” &c. 1 Sam. viii. 11.

“Let not the king impute [blame] to his servant, [nor] to all my father’s house,” &c. 1 Sam. xxii. 15.

But what shall we say to the parallel passage, 1 Chron. xx. 3, which in our English Bible is rendered, “He cut them with saws, and with harrows of iron, and with axes?”

Here the verb שׂוּב, if derived from שׂוּב, Serravit, may not unreasonably signify to divide or separate the people to these different servile employments; but I am persuaded it is incorrectly written for שׂוּב, “he put,” as in the former passage, only obliterating or omitting the lower part of the Mem final, ם, which would leave a complete Resh, ר.

And David was justified in thus enslaving the Ammonites by the law of Moses. “An Ammonite or a Moabite shall not enter [as a freeman] into the congregation of Israel, even to their tenth generation.” Deut. xxiii. 3.

The mother of Rehoboam was Naamah, an Ammonitess, 1 Kings xiv. 21. She could not therefore be the wife of Solomon, she was only a concubine.

THE RAPE OF TAMAR.

We may date this first domestic calamity that befel David “out of his own house,” as predicted by Nathan, about the twenty-third of his reign, before the commencement of which, Amnon, his eldest son, was probably born.

David's remissness in punishing this outrage, though it made him “very wroth” at the time, 2 Sam. xiii. 23, probably led to Amnon's assassination by Absalom, the brother of Tamar, about two full years after, or the twenty-fifth of David's reign, 2 Sam. xiii. 22—29. The affliction of David must have been greatly aggravated by the first hasty report, that Absalom had slain all the king's sons, and that there was not one of them left! And though relieved by the safe return of the rest, “the king and all his servants wept very sore.”

Absalom fled for refuge to his grandfather Talmai, king of Gesher, where he remained in disgrace three years, 2 Sam. xiii. 37, 38; and though he was then permitted to return to Jerusalem, by the policy and intercession of Joab, David did not admit him into his presence till two full years after. We may therefore date this reconciliation in the thirtieth year of David's reign, 2 Sam. xiv. 1—33.

ABSALOM'S REBELLION.

This ambitious and turbulent youth ill requited his father's lenity and kindness. He studied to gain popularity, and “stole away the hearts of the men of Israel ;” and fomented a con-

And in this milder sense, the Syriac and Arabic Version understood the two parallel passages, declaring expressly in the latter, (1 Chron. xx. 3.) that David “put none of them to death.” However, on the other hand, the Greek Sept. Latin Vulgate, and Josephus, all adopt the received interpretation, that he put them to the torture, and then slew them. Antiq. VII. 7, 5. This cruel treatment of the conquered Ammonites (if it be true, which still may be doubted) is the most barbarous act of David's reign; and cannot be justified by the heinous abuse and affront offered to his ambassadors.

spiracy, which, at the end of *four years, broke out into open rebellion, in the thirty-fourth year of David's reign, at Hebron, about twelve miles south of Jerusalem, xv. 1—13.

Alarmed at this formidable rebellion so close to him, David hastily took his flight, with his family and servants, "by the ascent of Mount Olivet, [or the upper road to Jericho] and wept as he went up, barefoot, and with his head covered; and all the people that were with him covered every man his head, weeping as they went up," in token of extreme sorrow and humiliation, xv. 14—30.—By the same descent, the divine Son of David, above a thousand years after, wept over Jerusalem, at the prospect of her impending woes!—He wept, not for "himself," but for "the daughters of Jerusalem, and for their children," Luke xix. 37—41, xxiii. 28.

After he had passed the summit, he was wounded with the false report of the desertion of Mephibosheth, the son of his faithful friend Jonathan, whom he had treated with the utmost kindness and hospitality, and restored to all his grandfather Saul's lands, 2 Sam. ix. 1—13, and too hastily gave away his lands to the treacherous informer Ziba, who had a powerful party. So just is Seneca's observation, that "kings give many things with covered eyes, especially in time of war." And though his eyes were opened afterwards to Mephibosheth's innocence, yet he dared not altogether to rescind the unadvised grant to Ziba, "Do thou and Ziba divide the land." The reply of Mephibosheth was worthy of the son of Jonathan: "Yea, let him take all, since my lord the king is come again to his own house in peace," 2 Sam. xix. 24—30.

Soon after, at Bahurim, on the eastern side of Olivet, David bore with meekness the curses and insults of Shimei, a relation of Saul; and when urged by his nephew Abishai to punish him on the spot, he refused permission: Behold, said he, my son, who came forth of my bowels, seeketh my life, how much more now this Benjamite? Let him alone, and let him curse, for THE LORD hath bidden him. It may be that the Lord will

* Instead of "forty years," the present reading, 2 Sam. xv. 7, the Syriac, Arabic, and several MSS. of the Vulgate, supported by Josephus, Theodoret, and the context, read "four years;" the present reading being utterly inexplicable. It could not, as Usher imagined, denote Absalom's age at the time, when he could not have been much above thirty years old.

look on my affliction, and requite me good for his cursing this day, xvi. 5—13.

They then refreshed themselves in the plains of the wilderness, and without delay passed over Jordan that night, in consequence of intelligence that Absalom had been advised to pursue him with a party of twelve thousand men, and smite him before he could collect an army, xvii. 1—22.

The treacherous adviser Ahitophel, whose wise counsel was defeated by the artful policy of Hushai, David's friend, which made him hang himself in despair, was more successful in his first advice, that Absalom should lie with ten of his father's concubines, whom he had left behind at Jerusalem, "in the sight of all Israel," that it might engage them more heartily in his cause, by precluding the possibility of reconciliation with his father after this heinous insult; the infatuated youth thus unintentionally fulfilling Nathan's prophecy, xvi. 20—22, xvii. 23.

The wretched end of Ahitophel, who was esteemed as THE ORACLE OF GOD for the wisdom of his counsels, was the just punishment of his treason: "The providence of the wisest men being too short to over-reach the providence of GOD; he often permits such Ahitophels for the punishment of their presumption, as well as of their malice, to perish by their own devices," Prideaux's Connections, Vol. I. p. 162.

It is generally supposed that David composed the fifty-fifth Psalm, on occasion of Ahitophel's treachery, but perhaps it may rather refer to the treachery of Judas as a prophecy. The minute predictions of the circumstances of our LORD'S passion, which occur in the Psalms, justify this supposition; and lead us to conclude, that the imprecations which abound in this Psalm, the sixty-ninth, and hundred and ninth, &c. are not uttered against the personal enemies of David, but of CHRIST. This is expressly asserted in one place, which may furnish a key to the rest:

"Do not I hate them, O Lord, that hate Thee?
And am not I grieved with those that rise up against Thee?
Yea, I hate them right sorely,
Even as though they were mine enemies."—Ps. cxxxix. 21, 22.

And to confirm it, we may observe, that the imprecations which are usually supposed to be uttered against Shimei, Ps. cix. 6—9, are expressly applied to Judas by St. John, xiii. 27, and by St. Peter, Acts i. 20; and the imprecations against the MES-

SLAH'S persecutors, Ps. lxxix. 21—26, are also applied to the Jews by St. Peter *, Acts i. 20.

David, we see, refrained from cursing Shimei in return, at the time, when he had the greatest provocation, from a religious motive; and when "he prayed to THE LORD," it was not against Ahitophel himself, but against his counsel: "O LORD, turn the counsel of Ahitophel into foolishness," xv. 31.

This may contribute to remove the offence † which these imprecations have given to many pious and devout admirers of the Psalms of David in general, who have not rightly conceived their drift.

The death of Absalom, who was slain by Joab in his flight from the pitched battle in which he and his adherents were defeated, put an end to his rebellion, but renewed his father's grief, which was excessive, even to weakness, and justified Joab's indignant reproach, "Thou lovest thine enemies, and hatest thy friends;" &c.; and his threat, "I swear by the Lord, if thou go not forth, [to speak comfortably to thy servants] there will not one tarry with thee this night; and that will be worse unto thee than all the evil that befel thee from thy youth until now." This wholesome rebuke and menace roused David from his lethargy of grief, and "he arose without reply, and sate in the gate," to receive the congratulations of his friends; while "all Israel," of Absalom's party, "fled each to his tent," or returned home, xix. 1—8.

Whatever were Joab's crimes, among them disloyalty was not to be reckoned. He was a brave soldier, and a faithful servant, ardently attached to his master in the worst of times, preferring David's interest and glory before his own. Witness his risking his life to get David a drink of water from the well of Bethlehem, 1 Chron. xi. 17, and his giving the glory of the capture of

* In the present text of Acts i. 20, γεννηθητω ἡ επαυλις αυτου ερημος, the singular, αυτου, "his," is αυτων, "their," in the prophecy itself, Ps. lxxix. 25; in the original, in the Sept. (γεννηθητω ἡ επαυλις αυτων ερημωμενη) and in all the ancient versions, warranted by the context; and in the citation, the plural "their," is the reading of the Vulg. and Æthiop. and it seems to be required by the context, where not only Judas, but also his associates, were noticed before, "Judas, who was guide to them that apprehended JESUS," Acts i. 16, and who were equally criminal.

† Hammond, Merrick, Horne, &c. contend, that these imprecations should be rendered not as imperatives, but as futures; not, Let them be confounded, &c. but, They shall be confounded, &c. as only intimating the future event. But this is a nice distinction, almost without difference, and is overturned by the ancient versions, and the citations in the New Testament, rendering them imperatively.

Rabbah to David, "lest I take the city, and it be called after my name," 2 Sam. xii. 28. And now he gave the most unequivocal proof of his unshaken fidelity, in knowingly incurring the king's displeasure to rid him of an obstinate rebel against his own father, whom no forgivenesses could soften, and no favours could bind, for whom Joab himself had so successfully interceded, and was likely therefore to have been otherwise well disposed to Absalom, from the very circumstance of having served him. Joab's motive, indeed, for killing him, is well expressed in Cushi's report to the king: May the enemies of my lord the king, and all that arise against thee to do thee hurt, be as that young man, xviii. 32. When David, therefore, on his return to Jerusalem, immediately deposed Joab from being captain of the host, which he had gained as the reward of his distinguished valour at the capture of Jebus, twenty-seven years before, 1 Chron. xi. 6, and appointed the rebel Amasa, who had served under Absalom in that station, 2 Sam. xvii. 25, xix. 13, he seems to have acted rather ungratefully and unwisely, justifying Joab's reproach, "Thou lovest thine enemies, and hatest thy friends." But the old grudge and jealousy which he entertained against "the sons of Zeruiah," who were above his control, and too powerful to be punished, as in Abner's case, 2 Sam. iii. 38, combined with Joab's disobedience of orders in killing Absalom, which he could never forget, nor forgive, to the day of his death, seem to have got the better of his usual temporizing caution, and political prudence.

SHEBA'S REBELLION.

This rebellion soon succeeded the former, and was probably connected therewith. Sheba, a Benjamite, blew the trumpet, saying, "We have no part in David, neither have we inheritance in the son of Jesse: every man to his tent, O Israel!" and he drew to his standard all the tribes except Judah, 2 Sam. xx. 1, 2.

Amasa, the new captain of the host, having failed to assemble the men of Judah within the time appointed by David, the king commissioned Abishai, the brother of Joab, to take the royal guards, and pursue Sheba without delay, before he could get into fenced cities, for that otherwise he might raise a rebellion more dangerous than Absalom's.

On this occasion, "Joab's men," or his company, followed Abishai, and Joab himself as a volunteer, his zeal for his king and country rising paramount to his late disgrace. But when Amasa met them at Gibeon, to take the command, Joab, under pretext of saluting him as his "brother *," assassinated him as he had Abner, and took the command himself, causing proclamation to be made, He that favoureth Joab, and he that is for David, let him follow Joab. He then pursued Sheba, besieged him in a town to which he had fled, demanded his head from the inhabitants, and crushed the rebellion; and returned triumphant to Jerusalem, in possession of his former station, of which David dared no more to deprive him.

FAMINE.

These rebellions, about the thirty-fourth year of David's reign, were succeeded by a remarkable famine for three successive years. It was inflicted, according to the oracle, for the massacre of the Gibeonites by Saul, and his bloody house, 2 Sam. xxi. 1, 2.

This massacre is not mentioned in the history of Saul's reign. Some commentators think that the massacre of the priests at Nob is meant: but they were not Gibeonites, nor was it done "through zeal for the children of Israel," which is the reason assigned, but in revenge for harbouring David. Might it not have taken place after Samuel's death, at the same time that Saul destroyed the diviners and wizards, in his zeal to reconcile himself to the LORD? Why it was thus punished so long after, is hidden among the mysteries of PROVIDENCE. Perhaps it was sent at this juncture to punish the nation for their recent rebellions against God and the king, in which the house of Saul took an active part.

The atonement required by the Gibeonites was the execution of seven of Saul's house, who were accordingly given to them; two sons of Saul by his concubine Rizpah, and five grandsons by his elder daughter Merab, (not Michal, as in the text, David's wife) whom she bare to Adriel, the Meholathite, 1 Sam. xviii. 19. Thus was all the house of Saul destroyed, except Mephibosheth, the son of Jonathan, whom David spared on account of his covenant with Jonathan, xii. 3—9.

The sacred historian relates a striking instance of maternal tenderness of affection, in Rizpah watching over the remains of her children, to protect them from the birds and beasts of prey, xii. 10, 11. And then David's respect to the bones of Saul and Jonathan, which he interred honourably with those of these victims in the family sepulchre. After these atonements, and acts of pious duty, "God was entreated for the land, and removed the plague," xii. 13, 14.

* Joab and Amasa were cousins german, the sons of Zeruiah and Abigail, sisters of David, 1 Chron. ii. 13—17.

LAST PHILISTINE WAR.

Thinking this a favourable opportunity to shake off the yoke, when the Israelites had been weakened by two rebellions, and three years of famine, the Philistines renewed the war about the thirty-seventh year of David's reign, but were defeated in four engagements, and finally subdued. In the first, David waxed faint, and was in danger of being slain, when the valiant and trusty Abishai succoured him, and slew the gigantic Philistine. After this, the people would no more let David go forth to battle, "lest he should quench the light of Israel." In this war, the remainder of Goliath's family were slain by David's worthies, xxi. 15—22.

DAVID'S SECOND OFFENCE.

The numbering of the people was one of the last and most reprehensible acts of David, about two years before his death. In the pride of conquest, after he had subdued all his enemies, he issued an order for this purpose to Joab and his captains. This act is ascribed in one place to "the anger of THE LORD against Israel;" in another to "Satan, who stood against Israel," and "moved or *incited David thereto," 2 Sam. xxiv. 1; 1 Chron. xxi. 1. From whence we may collect, that GOD permitted Satan to tempt David to commit a crime that would draw down punishment upon him and upon his people; as he afterwards permitted the same evil and lying spirit to seduce the prophets of Ahab, 1 Kings xxii. 22, and the disciple of CHRIST, Luke xxii. 3, John xiii. 27.

The ruling passion by which the tempter assailed David, was "the pride of life," which, though checked and mortified by the wholesome restraints of adversity, broke out again in the sunshine of prosperity. In this light it was evidently considered by Joab, and the captains of the host, who remonstrated against the decree: "Now THE LORD THY GOD add unto the people (how many soever they be) a hundred fold, and that the eyes of my lord the king may see it; but why doth my lord the king delight in this thing?"—for "the king's word was abominable unto Joab," which he considered as "a cause of trespass unto Israel," 1 Chron. xxi. 2—6.

* The original verb, סוּחַ, Suth, which is the same in both places, though variously rendered "moved" and "provoked" in the English Bible, signifies to "incite" or "persuade," 2 Kings xxi. 5; there rendered "stirred up."

The offence of David seems to have chiefly consisted in his persisting to require a muster of all his subjects able to bear arms, without the divine command, without necessity, in a time of profound peace, to indulge an idle vanity and presumption, as if he put his trust more in the number of his subjects than in the divine protection; and the offence of his people might also have been similar, always elated, as they were, and provoking the anger of the LORD, in prosperity, by their forgetfulness of Him*, Deut. vi. 10—12.

The return made by Joab, without counting Levi and Benjamin, (for he did not finish the return, from some indications, it should seem, of the divine displeasure in the course of it, 1 Chron. xxvii. 24,) was 900,000 men in the ten tribes of Israel, and 400,000 in round numbers, of Judah alone, amounting to one million three hundred thousand in all †, 1 Chron. xxi. 5.

"And David's heart smote him after he had numbered the people; and David said unto THE LORD, I have sinned greatly in what I have done. And now I beseech thee, O Lord, take away the iniquity of thy servant, for I have done very foolishly," 2 Sam. xxiv. 10. Upon this occasion, perhaps, he composed the nineteenth Psalm; which, after celebrating the power and "glory of GOD," displayed in the visible creation, as supreme Lord of all, 1—6, and an encomium on "the law of the Lord," and "the fear of the Lord," 7—11, concludes with a prayer for GOD'S pardoning grace to cleanse him from sins of ignorance and infirmity, and for restraining grace to guard him from "presumptuous sins," committed wilfully and with a high hand against the light of conscience, that "they might not have the dominion over him," and involve him in "the great trans-

* Une corruption nationale dans les sujets, et une démarche de vanité dans le prince, furent punis du même coup. Chais.

† This account in Chronicles is verified by Josephus, who reckons 900,000 in Israel, and 400,000 in Judah, without specifying the amount, Ant. VII. 13, 1, and is more probable than that in Samuel, 800,000 in Israel, and 500,000 in Judah, 2 Sam. xxiv. 9.

gression" of apostacy from GOD ; that so " his meditations and his words might be always acceptable to THE LORD, his STRENGTH and his REDEEMER," 12—14. Nothing surely could be more suitable to his situation, in that " great strait," or crisis, when the LORD had given him the choice of three plagues, three years of famine, three months of war, or three days of pestilence, 1 Chron. xxi. 11, 12. David chose the last ; so THE LORD sent a pestilence, which destroyed 70,000 men, it should seem, in the course of two days.

David's profound humiliation, when he saw the angel of the LORD hovering in the air, with a drawn sword in his hand, over Jerusalem, ready to destroy it, and he and the elders, clothed in sackcloth, fell on their faces ; his humble confession of his peculiar sin, and pious intercession for his erring people ; his generous devotement of himself and his father's house to the plague in their stead ; altogether appeased the divine wrath before the expiration of the appointed time. And GOD said to the angel, It is enough, stay now thine hand.

This angel, who appeared to David, and probably to the elders, for he appeared to Araunah, or Ornan, and his four sons, and who commissioned Gad, the prophet, (the same that had announced the plagues) to command David to erect an altar unto the LORD, in the threshing-floor of Ornan, on "Mount Moriah, where THE LORD appeared to David," or over which he was seen in the air, 1 Chron. xxi. 15—20, 2 Chron. iii. 1, seems to have been the same that appeared to Joshua in that attitude, as the CAPTAIN OF THE LORD'S HOST, to remind David of the true defender of his empire, " HIS STRENGTH," and who, on this occasion, under the divine mercy and forgiveness, became his REDEEMER also.

When David had purchased the threshing-floor from Ornan, the proprietor, which he refused to accept as a gift, and built the altar there unto the Lord, and offered burnt-offerings and peace-offerings, and called upon the name of THE LORD, he was pleased to answer him from heaven, by fire upon the altar, which consumed the burnt-offerings, in token of full reconciliation, and of acceptance of this altar at Jerusalem, (instead of the altar of the Lord made by Moses in the wilderness, which at this time was at *Gibeon, and was thus superseded) in the place which the Lord now chose to put his name there, having originally appointed it for the site of his temple and worship, 1 Chron. xxi. 19—30, xxii. 1; Deut. xii. 21.

* David was afraid to go to sacrifice at the altar there, because of the sword of the angel of the Lord in the way thither, 1 Chron. xxi. 30.

This last offence of David is still more astonishing and alarming than the first. This was an offence committed immediately against GOD. How “the light of Israel,” and “a luminary of the world,” an “inspired prophet,” the most highly gifted, favoured with such “abundance of revelations” concerning THE MESSIAH, and his future dispensation of grace to mankind, could be so “exalted above measure,” by the innate “pride and naughtiness of his heart,” 1 Sam. xvii. 28, as to forget, not merely for a moment, but for “nine months and twenty days,” (the time employed in making the return) “THE LORD, his strength, and his redeemer,” unmoved by the representations and remonstrances of his most faithful friends, who abominated the order, and forewarned him of the divine displeasure, is well nigh inconceivable, and altogether frightful. Most strongly, indeed, does his fall, on this occasion, urge the necessity of vigilance and prayer, to correct the “deceitfulness of the human heart,” and to counteract the “craft and subtlety of the devil or man working against us;” while his rising again furnishes an abundant source of consolation to all returning penitents, not to despair of the riches of divine mercy, from a sense of their own unworthiness, and manifold demerit.

ADONIJAH’S REBELLION.

The close of David’s life was embittered by another unnatural rebellion, excited by his son Adonijah, who was next to Absalom, and resembled him in beauty and ambition. He also was a favourite with his father, “who had not displeased him, at any time, in saying, Why hast thou done so?” But treading in his brother’s steps, he courted popularity, and drew over to his party, Joab, the commander-in-chief of the forces, who at last forsook his aged master, and Abiathar, the high-priest, who had shared his fortunes, and invited all the king’s sons, except Solomon, the heir apparent, 1 Kings ii. 15, and gave them a public entertainment at En Rogel, “the fountain in the king’s garden,” according to Josephus, where he was proclaimed king by the company, “God save king Adonijah.”

In this emergency, the prophet Nathan sent Bathsheba to inform the old king of their proceedings, and confirmed them himself. David instantly appointed Nathan, the prophet, Zadok, the priest, Benaiah, and his own guards, the Cherethites and Pelethites, who continued faithful, to anoint and proclaim Solomon king, at the fountain of Gihon or Siloam.

To ratify this coronation, he called a general assembly of the people, in which Solomon was formally elected king, and Zadok high-priest, in the room of Abiathar, who was deposed. And he solemnly recommended Solomon and the nation to build the temple of the Lord, according to the model communicated to him by THE SPIRIT; and to contribute liberally themselves, in addition to the ample stores and materials which he had provided; and concluded with a most noble and devout thanksgiving to THE LORD for all his mercies to himself, and to his people, of which the doxology seems to have been adopted in THE LORD'S PRAYER:—"Blessed be thou, O Lord God of Israel, our father, for ever and ever: [for] thine, O LORD, is the greatness, and the power, and the glory, and the victory, and the majesty: for all that is in the heaven and in the earth is thine; thine is the kingdom, O Lord, and thou art exalted as head above all," 1 Chron. xxix. 10, 11.

DAVID'S LAST ADVICE.

David has been censured for betraying a vindictive spirit, in his dying advice to Solomon, respecting Joab and Shimei, and for a breach of his oath to the latter, but his conduct appears to be justifiable in both cases.

1. Solomon's first royal act of grace, and certainly by his father's advice, was the pardon of Adonijah, his brother, and of all his abettors, on the condition of their future good behaviour, 1 Kings i. 52. But Adonijah forfeited it afterwards, by his audacious application to have his father's concubine, Abishag, given him to wife. "Ask for him the kingdom too," said Solomon to his mother, who made the indiscreet request, "even for him, (and for Abiathar, the priest, and for Joab, the son of Zeruiah,) for he is my elder brother," 1 Kings ii. 22. The parenthetical remark shewing, that he evidently considered Adonijah as acting in this case by the advice and with the concurrence of Abiathar and Joab. And why should Joab fly to the altar for refuge, on the execution of Adonijah, if he was not conscious to himself that he was involved in this second act of treason?—And Solomon put him to death, not for this, but for the "innocent blood which he had shed;" for he spared his associate Abiathar's life, "though he was worthy of death," on account of his sacred character, and joint sufferings with David his father: but he banished him to his estate, to prevent him from fomenting fresh disturbances in the capital, and at court.—Joab's declaration at the altar, "Nay, but I will die here," shewed that he expected no further mercy, because he did not deserve it.

2. David did not advise Solomon to put Joab to death, absolutely or unconditionally;—"Do, therefore, according to thy wisdom, and let not his hoary head go down to the grave in peace;—that is, Though you have now pardoned Joab through policy, and as I was compelled to do myself, by the exigency of the times, and the predominant influence of the sons of Zeruiah; yet, should he offend again, act according to your discretion, and then punish him as a hoary murderer, and confirmed traitor, with death.

3. When the over-zealous Abishai wanted permission from David to put Shimei to death, on his return to Jerusalem, for his former cursing and ill treatment, and for which Shimei now humbly asked pardon, with a thousand men at his back; David sharply rebuked Abishai: "What have ye to do with me*, ye sons of Zeruiah, that ye should this day be as Satan † unto me? Shall there be any man put to death this day in Israel? for do I not know, that I am this day king over Israel, or restored to my throne? Therefore, the king said unto Shimei, Thou shalt not die: and the king swore unto him," 2 Sam. xix. 23.

David religiously kept his oath to Shimei, as appears from his last advice to Solomon: "I swear unto him, by THE LORD, saying, I will not put thee to death with the sword," 1 Kings ii. 8, though Shimei might have deserved it by a fresh offence: for it is highly probable that he was engaged in Adonijah's rebellion, since it was not till after the execution of Adonijah and Joab, that Solomon sent for Shimei, and ordered him to reside in Jerusalem, and not to quit the city under pain of death, the day that he should pass over the brook Kedron. A condition which Shimei thankfully accepted: “The saying is good: as my Lord the king hath said, so will thy servant do.”

* מַה לִּי וְלָכֶם, τι εμοι και υμιν. Here, by the idiom of the dead languages, the first person is put first; as Ego et Rex meus, in Cardinal Wolsey's correct Latinity. In modern language, the first person is put last; John ii. 4.

† לְשָׂטָן. Le-Satan, "for Satan;" or "as an adversary," εις επιβουλον. Sept.—Matt. xvi. 23.

And this measure was evidently dictated by David's advice; on the meaning of which, therefore, it forms the best comment: “And behold thou hast with thee Shimei,” &c. “Now, therefore, hold him not guiltless:” but guard him as a disaffected and dangerous Benjamite, and keep him with thee still, or confine him to Jerusalem, lest he kindle rebellion among the tribes, by stirring up their minds, like Sheba, “for thou art a wise man, and knowest what thou oughtest to do unto him,” as well as to Joab, in order to prevent his cabals; and, if he offend again, “bring down his hoary head to the grave with blood,” for your own security, and the peace of your kingdom, for his past crimes deserve death. And in this provisional sense, the advice is understood by Josephus:

“He then obtained a promise of indemnity from me, but now, whenever you find a reasonable cause (αιτιαν ευλογον), punish him.” Ant. VII. 15, 1.

Shimei afterwards transgressed the convention, and went to Gath, a suspicious quarter; upon which, Solomon, after taxing him with the breach of his oath, put him to death. “So the kingdom was established in the hand of Solomon,” after the death or banishment of his most dangerous foes, from their rank, wisdom, and consequence, 1 Kings, chap. ii.

David appears to have survived the coronation of Solomon half a year; for though he reigned seven years and six months over Judah, and thirty-three years over all Israel, yet his reign is reckoned only forty years, 2 Sam. v. 4, 5; 1 Chron. xxix. 27. This interval he seems to have employed in those public acts and regulations, contained in the five last chapters of the first book of Chronicles.

SOLOMON.

The age of Solomon, at his accession to the crown, is not noticed in Scripture; but that he was then about twenty, neither less nor more, may be collected from incidental circumstances.

1. His son Rehoboam was forty-one years old when he succeeded him, 1 Kings xiv. 21, and was born, therefore, the year before his accession, 1 Kings xi. 42; we may reckon then, that

Solomon was a father about nineteen; and this agrees with David's description of him to the assembly of the people: "Solomon my son is young and tender," 1 Chron. xxii. 5; which well accords with that age. It is true that Solomon styled himself, "a little child," even after his accession, 1 Kings iii. 7; whence Josephus reckoned him no more than twelve years old. But Solomon at this time was married to the king of Egypt's daughter, 1 Kings iii. 1. He therefore only modestly counted himself a child in understanding; as is evident from his ensuing prayer to the Lord for wisdom to judge or govern his people, which THE LORD was pleased to grant him, and also riches and honour in addition *, for his wise choice, 1 Kings iii. 5—13.

2. The series of ensuing events after Solomon's birth, fully occupy, as we have seen, the last twenty years of David's reign; so that Solomon could not well have been born later, without encroaching too much upon the time allotted for them. Nor could Solomon have reasonably been called "old," in the decline of life, as he is, 1 Kings xi. 4, unless he had lived full sixty years, while that term sufficiently corresponds to the shortening of his days; as may be inferred from the divine promise of lengthening his days, on condition of his obedience, 1 Kings iii. 14.

THE TEMPLE BUILT.

Solomon spent three years in preparing timber, stone, and other materials, and procuring skilful workmen from Hiram, king of the great commercial city of Tyre, with whom he was in friendship; and laid the foundation of the Temple, in the fourth year of his reign, in the second month of the year, and finished it in the eleventh year and eighth month, in the space of seven years and six months, 1 Kings vi. 1—38.

This was a work of extraordinary despatch, if we consider its magnitude, variety, and minuteness. The summit of the rocky lime-stone Mount of Moriah was first to be levelled, and hollows and inequalities to be filled up, in order to form a sufficient area or platform for the Temple itself, its courts, porticos, and surrounding offices, which altogether composed a prodigious pile of building, the most splendid and magnificent, perhaps, that the world ever saw; worthy of the Divine Architect who planned, and of the wise and opulent prince who executed it. See the account of the area and buildings of the Temple, in the foregoing Elements of Ancient Geography, Vol. I. p. 428.

* "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you," Matt. vi. 33, Luke xii. 31.

THE DEDICATION.

Solomon's prayer on the Dedication of the Temple is one of the noblest and most sublime compositions in the Bible, exhibiting the most exalted conceptions of the omnipresence of THE DEITY, and of his superintending Providence, and of his peculiar protection of the Israelite nation, from the time that they came out of Egypt, and imploring pardon and forgiveness for all their sins and transgressions in the land, and during their ensuing captivities, in the prophetic spirit of Moses, 1 Kings viii. 12—60; 2 Chron. vi. 1—42.

“I have surely built THEE a house to dwell in, a settled place for thee to abide in, for ever.—”

“*But will GOD, indeed, dwell on the earth? Lo, the heaven and the heaven of heavens cannot contain THEE: How much less this house that I have built !—”

——— “Hearken THOU to the supplication of thy servant, and of thy people Israel, when they shall pray toward this place; and hear Thou in heaven, thy dwelling place: And when Thou hearest, forgive!—”

* Similar sentiments were entertained by the wisest and best informed of the Heathen poets and philosophers.—Unquestionably from REVELATION traditional:

Ποιος δ' αν οικος τεκτωνων πλασθεις υπο
Δεμας το Θειον περιβαλοι τοιχων πτυχαις;

But what house framed by builders can, within the compass of its walls, contain THE DIVINE BODY? Euripides frag.

Ω αμαθεις ανθρωποι, διδαξατε ημας τι εστιν ο Θεος εν τοις ναοις αποκεκλεισμενος;
——— απαιδευτοι, ουκ ιστε οτι ουκ εστι Θεος χειρομητος;

O ignorant mortals, teach us why is THE DEITY shut up in sanctuaries? Ye unlearned, know ye not, that GOD is not made with hands? Heraclitus.

St. Paul, therefore, in his celebrated discourse to the Athenian philosophers, might have appealed to the Heathen Theology also, for the truth of the following observation, as well as to SCRIPTURE:

“THE GOD who made the world and all things therein, He being LORD of heaven and earth, dwelleth not in sanctuaries made with hands; neither is worshipped with men's hands:”—“for we ought not to think that THE DEITY is like unto gold, or silver, or stone, engraven by man's art and ingenuity.” Acts xvii. 24—29.

“ If they sin against Thee, (for there is no man that sinneth not,) and Thou be angry with them, and deliver them to the enemy, so that they carry them away captives into the land of the enemy, far and near : yet if they shall bethink themselves in the land of their captivity, and repent, and make their supplication unto thee saying, We have sinned, and done perversely, and have committed wickedness, and so return to Thee, with all their heart, and with all their soul ;—then hear Thou their prayer, and their supplication in heaven, thy dwelling place, and maintain their cause.——

“ THE LORD OUR GOD be with us, as He was with our fathers : Let Him not leave us, nor forsake us : May He incline our hearts to walk in all his ways, and to keep his commandments, and his statutes, and his judgments, which he commanded our fathers :—May he maintain the cause of his servant, and the cause of his people Israel, at all times, as the matter shall require ; That all the nations of the earth may know that THE LORD is GOD, and that there is none else.——

“ O LORD OF GODS, turn not away the face of thy MESSIAH ; Remember the mercies of David thy servant.”

The conclusion of this admirable prayer, (of which the foregoing is an extract,) shews how clearly Solomon understood the difference between the future son of David, the MESSIAH, and himself, whose presence he prays may not be averted, or withdrawn, from his people, the Jews, according to the mercies of GOD, covenanted with his servant David ; or “ for his servant David's sake ;” as in the parallel passage, Psalm cxxxii. 10 ; 2 Chron. vi. 42. For surely Solomon could not possibly apply the term MESSIAH, or “ ANOINTED,” in this place, to himself, without incurring the imputation of presumption or profaneness, especially on so solemn an occasion. He could not be ignorant that his father David had applied that term to the SON OF GOD, Psalm ii. 2—7 ; and also Ethan, in his hymn, Psalm lxxxix. 20 ; explanatory of Nathan's prophecy, 2 Sam. vii. 14, both borrowing it from Hannah's thanksgiving, in which it was first introduced into the language of prophecy, 1 Sam. ii. 10.

The LORD'S acceptance of Solomon's Temple, and of this dedication, was shewn, 1. By the glory of THE LORD filling the house, or inner Temple, as soon as the ark of the covenant was brought from the temporary Tabernacle erected for it, in the city of David, to the sanctuary of the Temple; so that the priests could not stand to minister, because of the cloud, 1 Kings viii. 3—10; and 2. as soon as Solomon had ended his prayer, the fire of the Lord came down from Heaven and consumed the burnt offering and the sacrifices, as in the case of David's offering, 2 Chron. vii. 1. 1 Chron. xxi. 26.

After he had finished the Temple, Solomon built his own house at Jerusalem, the Queen's house, the summer house in the forest of Lebanon, the house of Millo, or "town house," and the walls of Jerusalem. All these buildings and public works employed him till the twentieth year of his reign, 1 Kings vii. 1, 2, ix. 10—24.

About this time, as it seems, the Lord appeared again by night to Solomon, and promised him, that if he would walk, like David his father, in integrity of heart, and in uprightness, observing the divine laws, that He would establish the throne of his kingdom for ever; but if he or his children forsook them, and served other gods, that he would cut off Israel, and cast them and their Temple out of his sight, and make them a proverb and a bye word among all people, 1 Kings ix. 2—10, 2 Chron. vii. 12—22.

SOLOMON'S BUILDINGS, REVENUES, &c.

After this, Solomon built Gezer, and the lower Bethhoron, in the south; the former having been given as a present by Pharaoh, king of Egypt, to his daughter, Solomon's wife. (He probably was the Cephrenus of Herodotus, and the Shishak, or Sesac of Scripture.) And in the north he built Baalath, or Baalbech, whose magnificent Temple lies near Tripoli, and is so well described by Maundrell, p. 135. And Tadmor in the wilderness, afterwards called Palmyra, about twenty-seven miles north of Damascus, and about a day's journey west of the river Euphrates; as a barrier against the incursions of the Syrians of Mesopotamia, beyond that river. He built this city about the twenty-fourth year of his reign, according to Abulfaragi, p. 34, whose magnificent ruins are described by Wood and Dawkins. And, we may suppose about this time, extended his northern frontier to the great river Euphrates; and his southern to the river of Egypt, or the Nile, or the desert of Shur, bordering thereon; 1 Kings iv. 21, 2 Chron. ix. 26, fulfilling the Abrahamic covenant, Gen. xv. 18. See the boundaries of the promised land, Vol. I. p. 413, &c.

Solomon also cultivated commerce extensively. Mention is made of two voyages undertaken by his ships, in partnership with those of Hiram, king of Tyre, the greatest commercial city of the ancient world. The former from Ezion geber, a port on the Elanitic gulph of the Red Sea, eastwards, and southwards to Ophir, most probably Sofala, a part of the eastern coast of Africa, opposite to the great island of Madagascar; whence they imported “gold and almug trees, or ebony, and precious stones,” 1 Kings ix. 26—28, x. 11; and the latter, westwards, to Tarshish, or Tartessus, now the isle of Cadiz, on the coast of Spain; whence they brought “silver; and proceeding southwards along the coast of Africa, as far as Guinea, brought back “gold, ivory, apes, and peacocks,” x. 22. The voyage to Guinea and back again, might well occupy “three years,” which was the time spent by the Phœnician mariners employed by Pharaoh Necho afterwards, in the circumnavigation of Africa, according to Herodotus, IV. 42. See Vol. I. p. 447, &c. of this work.

These commercial voyages brought into his dominions a prodigious influx of wealth; so that the weight of gold that came to Solomon in one year, was 666 talents, or £3,646,350 sterling: (reckoning a gold talent worth £5475, at £4 an ounce, with Arbuthnot,) besides the revenue he raised from the merchants, the traffic of the spice merchants, and of all the kings of Arabia, and governors of the country, x. 14—21. As to silver, it was of no estimation in the days of Solomon; he made it to be in Jerusalem as stones; and cedars as the sycamore trees in the valley, for abundance, ver. 21—27.

He also carried on a great inland trade, in Egyptian linen, yarn, horses and chariots, with all the kings of the Hittites and Syrians; and he multiplied horses and chariots in his dominions, and also wives and concubines; all contrary to the divine command, Deut. xvii. 16, 17, for he had 12,000 horsemen or cavalry, and 1400 chariots; 700 wives who were princesses, besides Pharaoh's daughter, and 300 concubines, ver. 26, xii. 3: and these foreign wives, taken from the prohibited nations, the Moabites, Ammonites, Edomites, Zidonians, and Hittites, turned away his heart after their own gods, and seduced him to build temples, and sacrifice to them also, on the Mount of Corruption, opposite to Mount Sion, to Chemosh, or Peor, the abomination of the Moabites; to Moloch, the abomination of the Ammonites, and Ashtoreth, the goddess of the Sidonians. See Vol. I. p. 427.

SOLOMON'S OFFENCE.

This great and astonishing offence, according to Abulfaragi, p. 35, took place about the thirty-fourth year of his reign; when "he was old," or about fifty-four years of age, 1 Kings xi. 4.

And THE LORD was angry with Solomon for this, and (appearing to him probably a third time,) said unto him:

"Forasmuch as this is done by thee, and thou hast not kept my commandment and my covenant, which I commanded thee, I will surely rend the kingdom from thee, and will give it to thy servant [Jeroboam.] Notwithstanding I will not do it in thy days, for David thy father's sake; for I will rend it out of the hand of thy son [Rehoboam.]—not all the kingdom, but will give one tribe to thy son, for David my servant's sake, and for Jerusalem's sake," xi. 9—13.

This prophecy was soon after communicated by Ahijah to Jeroboam an Ephraimite, whom Solomon had appointed ruler over all the charge of Joseph; and accompanied with the significant act of rending his own new garment into twelve pieces, and giving ten of them to Jeroboam, reserving only two, Judah and Benjamin, (which had now coalesced into one,) to Rehoboam: promising Jeroboam, from THE LORD, that the kingdom of Israel should be established in his family, if he would keep the statutes and commandments of the Lord, like David; and that for this idolatry of Solomon, the house of David should be afflicted with captivities, but not for ever, until their redemption by THE MESSIAH, xi. 26—39.

For this prediction, and the spirit of disaffection which Jeroboam, in consequence of it, excited against Solomon, among the ten tribes, Solomon sought to kill him; but he fled for refuge to Shishak, king of Egypt, who protected him; and there he remained till Solomon's death, xi. 40.

Beside this dangerous domestic enemy, the Lord stirred up two foreign adversaries to trouble Solomon's repose; Hadad, of the royal family of Edom, southwards; and Rezon, king of Damascene Syria, northwards, xi. 14—25.

SOLOMON'S WISDOM.

This illustrious prince, under whom the kingdom of the united tribes of Israel arrived at its highest pitch of glory, was no less celebrated for his wisdom than for his prosperity.

His political wisdom was early evinced in his famous decision of the case of the two mothers claiming the same infant; by which he so ingeniously discovered the true mother, by proposing to cut the living child asunder, and give each a part; which was instantly rejected by her “whose bowels yearned upon her son,” 1 Kings iii. 16—28.

He also composed 1500 songs, or pieces of Lyric poetry, of which his Canticles, or Song of Songs, only remains; and 3000 proverbs; of which the principal are collected in his book of Proverbs; he was skilled also in Botany and Natural History of every kind; his wisdom excelled the wisdom of all the children of the east, the Chaldeans, Persians, and Arabians; and he was wiser than all his contemporaries at home, than Ethan, the author of the lxxxixth Psalm; Heman, the author of the lxxxviiiith; and their brothers, Chalcol and Darda, sons of Mahol, or of “the choir;” and the queen of Sheba, or Abysinia, and people from all the kingdoms of the earth, came to hear the wisdom of Solomon, and to prove him with hard questions; who left him in the highest admiration of the wisdom which GOD “had put in his heart,” 1 Kings iv. 29—34, x. 1—24.

SOLOMON'S FAITH AND REPENTANCE.

What grand and sublime conceptions Solomon entertained of the omnipresence of THE DEITY, appears from his Dedication prayer, and from his Proverbs, xv. 3—11, &c. and Ecclesiastes v. 1—8.

How magnificently does he describe the primæval birth of the eternal SON OF GOD, under the character of WISDOM, personified; to which so many references and allusions are to be found in the OLD and NEW TESTAMENT.

THE LORD got ME *, the beginning of his way †,
Before his works of old.

From eternity was I ordained ‡, from first §,
Long before the earth.

When as yet there were no depths [of the sea]
I was born :

When as yet there were no fountains springing with water,
Before the mountains were established, before the hills,
Was I born," Prov. ix. 22—25.

His Canticles, or Song of Songs, is considered by the most judicious interpreters, as a mystical allegory, representing, under the figure of a marriage with the Shulamite, or Solomon's bride, vi. 13, the spiritual union between GOD and his Church; of which the conciser model was furnished by the forty-fifth Psalm. An allegory, frequent in the prophets, Isai. liv. 5, 6, Jer. ii. 2. iii. i. &c. Ezekiel xvi. 32, &c. and adopted in the NEW TESTAMENT. Thus John the Baptist beautifully represents CHRIST as the bridegroom; himself as his friend, or

* The apocryphal Book of Wisdom introduces, by a reference to this passage, the following admirable invocation, Wisd. ix. 9, 10.

"O send forth (WISDOM) out of thy holy heavens,
Even from the throne of thy glory;
That being present She may labour with me,
That I may know what is pleasing in Thy sight!"

And OUR LORD assumes the title of WISDOM, compare Luke xi. 49. with Matt. xxiii. 34, and declares that "WISDOM shall be justified of all her children," Matt. xi. 19, Luke vii. 85. He, who was "born unto us WISDOM FROM GOD," 1 Cor. i. 30.

† CHRIST is styled "the first born of all creation," Col. i. 15; "the beginning of the creation of GOD," Rev. iii. 14.

‡ In Micah's famous prophecy of the birth of CHRIST at Bethlehem, v. 2, cited Matt. ii. 6, his eternal generation is subjoined.

"Whose issues [of life] are from old,
From days of eternity."

And the very expression, "was I ordained," (נִסְכַּחְתִּי, nisachthi,) here applied to the primæval birth, was employed by David to denote his last birth, on the day of his resurrection.

"Nevertheless, I was ordained king,
On Sion, the mount of my Holiness," Psalms ii. 6.

Proving the adulteration of the present Masoretic punctuation, נִסְכַּחְתִּי, (Nasachti),

"I have ordained," or "set."

§ OUR LORD styles himself "the first and the last," Rev. i. 17; who had glory with THE FATHER, "before the world was,"—"Whom THE FATHER loved before the foundation of the world," John xvii. 5—24.

bridesman; and the Church, his spouse, John iii. 28. OUR LORD also adopts the title of bridegroom, Matt. ix. 15, and in the parable of the Virgins, or bridesmaids attendant on the marriage, Matt. xxv. 1. "The Lamb's wife" also, the Church, is represented as "a bride adorned for her husband," Rev. xxi. 2—9: who ought to be "without spot," Ephes. v. 27; as the Shulamite is represented, Cant. iv. 7. And surely, had not this beautiful pastoral poem been understood in a spiritual sense, it would not have been admitted into the SACRED CANON by the ancient Jewish Church. This was probably one of his earliest productions, from the warmth and luxuriance of the imagery.

His last production, Ecclesiastes, or the Preacher, is understood by the most judicious interpreters, to contain a formal recantation of the sins of his youth, and a public test of his sincere repentance in his age, written after the last divine warning; by which he must have been an "an old and foolish king" indeed, if he were "no more to be admonished," in a passage so remarkably apposite to his own case, iv. 13.

This work appears to be a philosophical enquiry into that most important and disputed question, What is the summum bonum, or "chief good" of man?—"what is best for the sons of men to do, under the heaven, all the days of their life?" ii. 3.

1. In the course of it he states the various opinions that had been held on the subject, and the result of his own dear-bought experience, in search of the respective enjoyments of human wisdom and human folly; classing, under the former, the pursuit of several sorts of knowledge and science; and under the latter, pleasures of the sensual kind, mirth, wine, eating and drinking, *women, &c. grandeur, magnificent works, splendid palaces, great treasures, and "whatsoever his eyes desired;" but he pronounces them all to be "vanity and vexation of spirit;" or disappointment and grief: for that "in much wisdom is much grief, and he that increaseth knowledge, increaseth sorrow," from the greater insight he acquires of the follies and vices of mankind, and of his own inability to correct or reform them, i. 18; that "of making many books there is no end, and that much study is weariness of the flesh;" from the endless variety and discordance of the opinions of philosophers respecting the chief good *, xii. 12. That sensual gratifications are madness and folly, and the cares of this world, its goods and its labours, which no man knoweth “whether he shall leave it to a wise man or a fool,” are precarious and deceitful, and incapable of satisfying the rational desires of man. And the result of all his researches, “Vanity of vanities, all is vanity,—has been, and ever will be, the course of the world †, for there is “nothing new under the sun.” This is the substance of the two first chapters, and of the subsequent illustrations.

* Against women he inveighs most bitterly, vii. 26—28; and in his Proverbs, ii. 16—19, vii. 6—27, ix. 13—18.

Solomon, however, was by no means a gloomy moralist,

* See this fully illustrated in Cicero's Treatise on the subject, De finibus bonorum, and on the immortality of the soul. Quæst. Tusculan.

† The finest comment on this aphorism, vanity of vanities, &c. a man of the world, the celebrated Earl of Chesterfield, has unintentionally furnished, in the volume of his Letters published by Dr. Maty, in one of which, written not long before his death, he thus complains :—

“I have run the silly round of business and pleasure, and have done with them all. I have enjoyed all the pleasures of the world, and consequently know their futility, and do not regret their loss. I appraise them at their real value, which is in truth, very low : whereas those that have not experienced, always over-rate them. They only see their gay outside, and are dazzled with their glare ; but I have been behind the scenes : I have seen all the coarse pulleys and dirty ropes which exhibit and move the gaudy machine ; I have seen and smelt the tallow candles which illuminate the whole decoration, to the astonishment and admiration of an ignorant audience.—When I reflect back upon what I have seen, what I have heard, and what I have done, I can hardly persuade myself, that all that frivolous hurry, and bustle, and pleasure of the world had any reality ; but I look upon all that has passed, as one of those romantic dreams, which opium commonly occasions, and I do by no means desire to repeat the nauseous dose, for the sake of the fugitive dream.

“Shall I tell you, that I bear this melancholy situation with that meritorious constancy and resignation which most people boast of ? No, for I really cannot help it : I bear it, because I must bear it, whether I will or no : I think of nothing but of killing time, the best I can, now that he is become mine enemy.—It is my resolution to sleep in the carriage during the remainder of the journey.” Horne's Sermons, Vol. IV. p. 34.

What a frightful picture does the gloomy conclusion exhibit, of a dying libertine, whose God was this world, its fashions, its follies, its principles, and its practices ; whom he served so zealously in his youth, but who deserted him in his old age ! If he looked forwards to futurity, and backwards to that time which he murdered, and which, therefore, was become his enemy ; he must have had little disposition to sleep in his carriage. How bitterly must he have regretted, that he had not feared GOD, and kept his commandments ! If he believed a future judgment, must he not have “trembled,” like another Felix, for the violation of the duties of righteousness and temperance ?—How different the cheering conclusion of the apostolic preacher to all true believers :

“I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith. Henceforth, there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which THE LORD, THE RIGHTEOUS JUDGE, will give me at that day ; and not to me only, but unto all them also, that love his appearance,” [at his second advent in glory,] 2 Tim. iv. 6—8.

neither a morose Cynic, or “snarling” philosopher, who from the abuse of this world’s goods, decried their moderate and seasonable use, iii. 1—8, nor a Manichean Atheist, who held the predominance of an evil principle, Isai. xlv. 7, Amos iii. 6. On the contrary, he recommends a moderate enjoyment of the good things of this life, considering them as the gift of GOD;—that “to enjoy is to obey.”

“GOD hath made every thing beautiful in its time, [or proper season]—I know that there is no good in them, [the things themselves,] but for a man to rejoice [in them] and to do good in his life; and that every man should eat and drink, and enjoy the good in all his labour: it is the gift of GOD,” iii. 11, 12.

And to prevent this abuse, GOD has implanted in the heart of man, a presentiment of a future state of retribution; founded on the otherwise unaccountable dispensations of his providence in this life, in which injustice, oppression, and vice, are not uniformly punished, nor virtue rewarded; leading the wise to the rational conclusion, that GOD will judge the righteous and the wicked, if not here, most probably hereafter; and the fool, to the opposite senseless and grovelling conclusion, that men are no better than brutes; that all go to the same place, all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again; upon which hypothesis there is nothing better than that a man should enjoy his own works, for that his lot is only in this world; for who shall demonstrate to him a future state of retribution?—which he thus expresses:

GOD hath also set *futurity in their heart; inasmuch as man cannot find out [or account for] the work that God doeth from the beginning to the end [of the world, otherwise]—I know that whatsoever GOD doeth, it shall be for *futurity [to decide; when] there will be nothing to add, nor to diminish from it. And GOD doeth it, that [men] should fear before his presence, [for HE that is HIGHER than the highest, regardeth, v. 8.] What hath been, is now, and what shall be, is now; but GOD will require the past. Moreover I saw, under the sun, the place of judgment, that impiety was there, and the place of justice, that iniquity was there : and I said in my heart, GOD will judge the righteous and the wicked, for there is a time there, [in the future state,] for every purpose and for every work [to be judged,] iii. 11—17. Compare ix. 1—3, viii. 14.

‡ The word עולם, Olam, is variably rendered, “the world,” ver. 11; and “ever,” ver. 14; incorrectly in both; it signifies “the future world,” whose duration is “hidden,” or indefinite; (which is the literal meaning of the word,) whence it is frequently rendered “eternity.”

“ I said in my heart, according to the [foolish] discourse of the sons of Adam :—GOD created them*, to shew them that they were like beasts : for the event to the sons of Adam, and the event to the beasts, the same event is to them [both ;] as the one dieth, so the other dieth ; the same spirit is to all : so that there is no pre-eminence of the man above the beast ; for all are vanity. All go unto one place, all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again. Who knoweth that the spirit of the sons of Adam goeth upward, and the spirit of the beast downward to the earth ? Wherefore, [concludes this foolish reasoner,] I perceive that there is nothing better, than that the man should rejoice in his own works ; for that is his lot : for who shall bring him to see what shall be after him ?” iii. 18—22. Compare viii. 15, ix. 4—6.

The former conclusion (of a future judgment,) he thus supports :

“ Because sentence is not speedily executed against an evil work, therefore the heart of the sons of Adam is fully bent to do evil : but although the sinner may do evil a hundred times, and his days be prolonged ; yet surely I know, that it shall be well to them that fear GOD, who are afraid of his presence ; but it shall not be well to the wicked, nor shall he prolong his days as a shadow, [which lengthens as the sun declines,] because he is not afraid of the presence of GOD,” viii. 11—13.

The latter conclusion he thus refutes, in the following ironical concession to the youthful libertine :

“ Rejoice, O young man, in thy youth, and let thy heart cheer thee in the days of thy puberty, and walk in the ways of thy heart, and in the sight of thine eyes !—But know thou, that for all these, GOD will bring thee into judgment,” xi. 9.

And he recommends early piety ; to consecrate the prime of life to God, rather than the dregs of old age, of whose infirmities and privations he gives a lively enigmatical description; concluding with the different destinations of the spirit of the man and of the beast.

* The Syriac Version here, furnishes an excellent emendation of the Masorete text ; instead of לברם, “ to manifest (or prove) them,” from ברר ; reading בראם, “ created them,” from ברא.—Solomon, in the sequel, only repeats the Epicurean arguments against a future state, in order to refute them afterwards.

“Remember THY CREATOR, even in the days of thy youth; before the evil days [of age] come, and the years approach, in which thou shalt say, I have no pleasure in them;—[before] the man shall go to his long home, and the mourners go about the streets [at his funeral.]——

“Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was [originally;] but the spirit shall return to THE GOD who gave it,” xii. 1—7.

These probable deductions of reason in favour of a future state, Solomon crowns with asserting its certainty, from the dictates of Revelation; contrasting the firm, impressive, and uniformly consistent information of the inspired writers, with the vague, uncertain, and unsatisfactory arguments of mere philosophers.

“The words of the wise are as goads, and as nails fastened: the master-collections were given by ONE SHEPHERD. And further, my son, from these, be admonished, that of making many books there is no end, and much study, [or reading,] is weariness of the flesh.”

“Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter; Fear GOD, and keep his commandments, for this is the whole of man; [his chief good.] For GOD will bring every work into judgment, together with every secret; whether it be good, or whether it be evil,” xii. 11—14.

This authoritative conclusion expresses the dictates of THE ONE HEAVENLY SHEPHERD, the Instructor of the World, who communicated “the words of the wise,” or “the master-collections *,” to Job, Moses, Balaam, David, Ethan, Heman, &c. those inspired writers, who revealed God’s decrees to mankind, and placed this important doctrine of a future state of retribution, upon a solid basis, even before the CHRISTIAN REVELATION.

* This expression, בעלי אספות, (Baali Asuphoth), “master-collections,” seems to correspond to the κυριαὶ δοξαί, or maxime ratæ sententiæ, “the authoritative aphorisms” of Epicurus, and other heathen philosophers, “which were of the greatest importance to living happily.” According to Cicero, in his enquiries about the chief good, or De finibus bonorum, ii. 7.

The sentiments of Solomon are in perfect unison with theirs, and were derived from them, or from the same source. The general turn of his argument, strongly resembles that of Job, in favour of a future state; whose words, "naked came I out of my mother's womb," &c. i. 21, he had adopted, v. 15; and many of the Psalms express the same persuasion, xiii. 3, xvi. 9—11, xvii. 13—15, xlii. 2, lxxiii. 24—26, lxxxviii. 10—12, xc. 3, &c. with which Solomon must have been well acquainted. And OUR LORD has decided the question, that the doctrine of the resurrection, and a future state of rewards and punishments, was taught by "Moses and the prophets," in his refutation of the Sadducees, who denied a resurrection, Matt. xxii. 29—32, and in his instructive parable of Lazarus, Luke xvi. 19—31.

From this truly wise and religious conclusion of the book, we are warranted charitably to hope that Solomon died a sincere penitent, and was restored to the divine favour, for this public humiliation.

SIXTH PERIOD.

FROM THE REVOLT OF THE TEN TRIBES, TO THE DESTRUCTION OF JERUSALEM. 404 YEARS.

KINGS OF JUDAH.

	Y.	B.C.
1. Rehoboam	17	990
2. Abijah	3	973
3. Asa	41	970
4. Jehosaphat	25	929
5. Jehoram, or Joram	8	904
6. Ahaziah	1	896
7. Q. Athaliah	6	895
8. Joash, or Jehoash ..	40	889
9. Amaziah	29	849
Interregnum	11	820
10. Uzziah, or Azariah .	52	809
11. Jotham	16	757
12. Ahaz	16	741
13. Hezekiah	29	725
14. Manasseh	55	696
15. Amon	2	641
16. Josiah	31	639
17. Jehoahaz, 3 m.
18. Jehoiakim	11	608
19. Jehoiachin, 3 m.
20. Zedekiah	11	597
Jerusalem taken ..	404	586

KINGS OF ISRAEL.

	Y.	B.C.
1. Jeroboam	22	990
2. Nadab	2	968
3. Baasha (24)	23	966
4. Ela (2)	1	943
5. Zimri and Omri (12)	11	942
6. Ahab	22	931
7. Ahaziah	2	909
8. Jehoram, or Joram ..	12	907
9. Jehu	28	895
10. Jehoahaz	17	867
11. Jehoash, or Joash ..	16	850
12. Jeroboam II.	41	834
1st Interregnum	22	793
13. Zechariah & Shallum	1	771
14. Menahem	10	770
15. Pekahiah	2	760
16. Pekah	20	758
2d Interregnum	10	738
17. Hoshea	9	728
Samaria taken	271	719

This period has been hitherto considered as the Gordian knot of Sacred Chronology; the intricacy of which, all the chronologers have complained of, but none have been able to unravel. The difficulty of harmonizing the reigns of the kings of Judah and Israel together, has principally arisen; 1. from the discordance of some of the correspondences in the years of their respective reigns, with the direct lengths of those reigns; and 2. from not critically determining the duration of the two interregnums or vacancies, in the succession of the latter kings, so as to make them correspond with the former throughout.

The whole is here adjusted and harmonized, and it is hoped, satisfactorily, upon the following principles:—1. The standard of the reigns of the kings of Judah is considered as correct; for it is verified by the concurrence of the books of Kings and Chronicles, (the latter relating especially to the kings of Judah,) and of Josephus, Abulfaragi, and Eutychius. The incorrectness, therefore, complained of, must be confined to the latter series; and must be remedied, by reducing it to the former. 2. The two series of reigns agree in three points of time: 1. The reigns of Rehoboam and Jeroboam began together, or in the same year, 1 Kings xii. 1—20; 2 Chron. x. 1—19; as did also, 2. The reigns of Queen Athaliah and of Jehu, who slew the two kings of Judah and Israel, Ahaziah and Jehoram, the same day, 2 Kings ix. 24—27; and, 3. Samaria was taken by the Assyrians in the ninth year of Hoshea, king of Israel, and in the sixth year of Hezekiah, king of Judah, 2 Kings xviii. 10. 3. Hence it necessarily follows, 1. That the first six reigns in Judah must be equal in length to the first eight in Israel; and also, 2. That the next seven in Judah, to the sixth of Hezekiah, including one interregnum, must be equal to the remainder in Israel, including two interregnums. 4. But upon comparing the former together, it appears that the first six of Judah amount to ninety-five years; whereas, the first eight of Israel amount to ninety-eight years, according to the table of reigns in Scripture. Consequently, three years must be retrenched from the latter, to reduce them to an equality with the former.

Accordingly, one year is here subtracted from each of the reigns of Baasha, Ela, and Zimri, which are thereby reduced from *current, to complete years. And this reduction is warranted by the correspondences: for Baasha began to reign in the third year of Asa, king of Judah, 1 Kings xv. 33; and his son Ela, in the twenty-sixth of Asa, xvi. 8, which gives the reign of Baasha, $26 - 3 = 23$ years complete. Ela was slain in the twenty-seventh of Asa, xvi. 10; he reigned, therefore, only $27 - 26 = 1$ year complete. And Zimri and Omri reigned in succession, from the twenty-seventh to the thirty-eighth of Asa, xvi. 29; or only $38 - 27 = 11$ years complete. And as their reigns were all included in the one reign of Asa, and therefore more likely to be correctly referred thereto, this is a reason why these three reigns should be selected for reduction, rather than the succeeding or the preceding. 5. Upon comparing the latter together, it appears that there was one interregnum in the kingdom of Judah, of eleven years, and two in Israel of twenty-two years, and of ten years; which are requisite in both, to equalize the two periods together, of 176 years each; counting from the joint accession of Q. Athaliah and Jehu, to the sixth of Hezekiah, and capture of Samaria, in the same year.

* That the reigns in these lists are all computed, in current time, (according to the popular mode of computation in the east, and every where, see Vol. I. p. 21,) may further be collected from that of Zedekiah, eleven years; which actually was only ten years, four months, and eight days, supposing the first year to have been complete. Compare 2 Kings xxiv. 18, with xxv. 2—4.

That the lengths of these interregnums are rightly assigned, will appear from the correspondences of reigns. 1. Amaziah, king of Judah, survived the death of Jehoash, king of Israel, fifteen years; he died, therefore, about the sixteenth year of his son Jeroboam II. 2 Kings xiv. 17; 2 Chron. xxv. 25; but Azariah, or Uzziah, did not begin to reign until the twenty-seventh year of Jeroboam II. 2 Kings xv. 1; 2 Chron. xxvi. 1; therefore, from the death of Amaziah to the accession of his son Uzziah, there was an interregnum of $27 - 16 = 11$ years.

2. Jeroboam II. began to reign in the fifteenth year of Amaziah, king of Judah, and reigned forty-one years, 2 Kings xiv. 23; he died, therefore, in the sixteenth year of Uzziah, king of Judah; but Zechariah, his son, did not succeed him till the thirty-eighth of Uzziah, 2 Kings xv. 8; consequently, the first interregnum in Israel lasted $38 - 16 = 22$ years.

3. Pekah, king of Israel, began to reign in the fifty-second of Uzziah, 2 Kings xv. 27; 2 Chron. xxvi. 3; and in the twentieth year of his reign was slain by Hoshea, xv. 30, in the third year of the reign of Ahaz, king of Judah, 2 Kings xvi. 1; but Hoshea did not begin to reign till the twelfth year of Ahaz, xvii. 1, or the thirteenth current, 2 Kings xviii. 10; consequently, the second interregnum in Israel lasted $13 - 3 = 10$ years.

6. A curious and satisfactory confirmation of this adjustment of the reigns of the kings of Israel, is furnished by Josephus, who reckons their amount, from the revolt of the ten tribes, to the extinction of that kingdom, 240 years, Ant. IX. 14, 1; and if, from the whole corrected amount, 271 years, we deduct the two interregnums, 32 years, the remainder, 239 years, complete, or 240 current, gives the lengths of the reigns alone. This furnishes a decisive proof of his great skill as a chronologer, in developing the length of this intricate and perplexed period. That he was no stranger to the chasm of thirty-two years in Israel, we may infer from his taking into account the eleven years of interregnum in Judah, necessary to complete his amount of the whole period, from the foundation to the destruction of the Temple, 441 years. See Vol. I. p. 301.

7. We are now competent to detect some errors that have crept into the correspondences of reigns; and which have hitherto puzzled and perplexed chronologers, and prevented them from critically harmonizing the two series; not being able to distinguish the genuine from the spurious numbers.

1. "Jehoshaphat began to reign over Judah in the fourth year of Ahab," 1 Kings xxi. 41.—It should be the second.

2. "Ahaziah, the son of Ahab, began to reign over Israel in the seventeenth of Jehoshaphat," xxii. 51.—It should be the twentieth of Jehoshaphat.

3. "Jehoram, the son of Ahaziah, began to reign over Israel in the second year of Jehoram, son of Jehoshaphat," 2 Kings i. 17.—It should be in the twenty-second year of Jehoshaphat; as also, where it is again incorrectly stated, in the eighteenth, 2 Kings iii. 1.

4. "Jehoram, the son of Jehoshaphat, began to reign over Judah, in the fifth year of the reign of Joram, the [grand] son of Ahab," 2 Kings viii. 16.—It should be the fifth year from the death of Ahab; or the third year of Joram's reign.—"Jehoshaphat being then king of Judah"—is an anachronism, and an interpolation in the Masorete text.

5. "Jehoash began to reign over Israel in the thirty-seventh year of Joash, king of Judah," 2 Kings xiii. 10.—It should be the thirty-ninth year; as in the accurate Aldine edition of the Greek Septuagint. See Jackson's Chron. Vol. I. p. 182.

6. The correspondences by which the interregnum in Judah was collected, are incorrect; they should be $25 - 14 = 11$ years.

7. "Hoshea slew Pekah, king of Israel, in the twentieth year of Jotham," 2 Kings xv. 30. But Jotham reigned only sixteen years, xv. 33.—It should be in the third year of Ahaz, as collected from xvi. 1.

REHOBAM.

From seven hundred wives and three hundred concubines of Solomon, only one daughter is noticed, Taphath, 1 Kings iv. 11.

His successor, Rehoboam, was a spurious son*, by an Ammonitess, born the year before his own coronation; and therefore “unworthy of the kingdom*.”

Upon the death of Solomon, the factious and discontented tribes recalled Jeroboam from Egypt, and, with him at their head, applied to Rehoboam for redress of grievances in the late reign. A rough answer, which he indiscreetly gave them, following the advice of the companions of his youth, rather than of the old counsellors of his father, furnished them with a pretext for revolt, which they had long meditated from the time of Absalom and Sheba's rebellion; and immediately they appointed Jeroboam their king. Ephraim indeed, of which tribe he was, all along envied Judah her precedence, as we have seen; and God now made them the instruments of correction to both. For “the cause was from THE LORD,” to fulfil his threat to Solomon, and his promise to Jeroboam. Such are the incidental traits that distinguish sacred history from profane: in the latter, revolutions of states are usually attributed to human sagacity and secondary causes; but in the former they are uniformly attributed to the SUPREME GOVERNOR OF THE UNIVERSE, guiding and directing the operations of all inferior agents, according to his sole will and pleasure, that the fierceness of man might turn to his praise. THE ORACLE, accordingly, stopt the warlike preparations of Rehoboam, to punish this revolt, and commanded the militia of Judah and Benjamin, 180,000, whom he had mustered, to disperse again, and not proceed to fight against their brethren of Israel, 1 Kings xii. 1—24.

Rehoboam, during the first three years of his reign, walked in the way of David and of Solomon at first; he built and fortified a number of fenced cities in the land of Judah; and gave an asylum to the Priests and Levites, and such of the godly people of Israel as fled from Jeroboam's idolatries, the golden calves set up at Dan and Bethel, to seek the LORD GOD of Israel, and to sacrifice at Jerusalem, the established place of worship. And by their accession, the kingdom of Judah was strengthened, 2 Chron. xi. 5—17.

For Jeroboam, by a wicked policy, in order to prevent the re-union of the ten tribes to Judah, 1. detached them from the national worship prescribed by the law of Moses; saying to the people, “It is too much for you to go up to Jerusalem to worship THE LORD: Behold thy Gods, O Israel, who brought thee forth out of the house of Egypt!” repeating the proclamation of Aaron, Exod. xxxii. 4. 2. Rejecting the priests and Levites, who refused to conform to this idolatrous worship, he appointed “the lowest of the people,” who had neither learning nor religion, to be priests of the high places which he had made; and 3. he changed the feast of Tabernacles from the seventh month, as prescribed by the law of Moses, to the eighth month; even in the month which he had devised of his own heart; and on this festival, 4. acted as high priest himself, 1 Kings xii. 25—33. For these abominations and sacrilege, while he was officiating at the altar of Bethel, to burn incense, a prophecy was denounced against it, foretelling its future destruction and profanation, by Josiah, king of Judah, by name, 361 years before the event; (dating this denunciation in the seventh year of Jeroboam,) and when he stretched forth his hand from the altar, commanding to lay hold on the man of God, who dared to utter it in his presence, his hand was withered; but restored again, upon the prayer of the prophet. But this instance of divine severity, tempered with mercy, had no lasting effect on his corrupt heart.—He persisted in his evil ways, which brought down destruction upon his house or family, 1 Kings xiii. 1—34, xiv. 1—20.

* Υἱὸς αὐτοῦ Ροβοὰμ, ἐξ ἀλλοφυλῶν, ἀναξίως τῆς ἀρχῆς· οὐ γὰρ ἡ πολυγαμία τὴν εὐεκενίαν ποιεῖ. Suidas, voce Ἀστάρτη.

Rehoboam also, and the Jews, relapsed into the sodomies and abominations of the devoted nations of Canaan; and forsook the law of THE LORD, and all the people with him. Wherefore, in the fifth year of his reign, the LORD brought up against him Shishak, king of Egypt; who took his fenced cities, plundered the treasury of the house of the Lord, and of the king’s house, and reduced the kingdom to subjection,—“that they might know [the difference between] GOD’S service, and the service of the kingdoms of the countries” around: by comparing the mildness of the one, with the rigour of the other.

Upon this visitation, the princes of Israel and Rehoboam humbled themselves, and said, “THE LORD is righteous;” and by that means, averted the divine wrath, so that the remainder of his reign was rather prosperous, for “he dealt wisely,” and in “Judah also things went well;” but like the frail Solomon, “he desired many wives;” for he had eighteen wives, and threescore concubines ; by whom he had twenty-eight sons, and threescore daughters ; and he dispersed all his children throughout all the lands of Judah and Benjamin, into every fenced city, and gave them provision in abundance. He reigned seventeen years, 1 Kings xiv. 21—29, 2 Chron. xi. 17—23, xii. 1—15.

ABIJAM

Succeeded Rehoboam. He was the son of his favourite wife, Maachah, the daughter of Absalom *, 1 Kings xv. 2, 2 Chron. xi. 21, 22.

In a battle between Abijah and Jeroboam, the army of the former is reckoned 400,000 men, of the latter 800,000 ; of which 500,000 were slain, 2 Chron. xiii. 3—17. The numbers in this wonderful battle, are probably corrupt, and should be reduced to 40,000, 80,000, and 50,000, as in the Latin Vulgate of Sixtus Quintus, and many earlier editions ; and in the old Latin translation of Josephus ; and that such were the readings in the Greek text of that author originally, Vignoles judiciously collects from Abarbanel's charge against Josephus, of having made Jeroboam's loss no more than 50,000 men, contrary to the Hebrew text. See Kennicott's Dissertations, Vol. I. p. 533, and Vol. II. p. 201, &c. 564.

The speech of Abijam to the Israelites before the battle, is admirable. It breathes the general spirit of piety and fortitude, and severely reproaches Jeroboam for his rebellion, and his people for their apostacy ; and thus contrasts the obedience of the Jews, and its consequence :

“ We keep the charge of THE LORD OUR GOD : but ye have forsaken Him. And behold, GOD himself is with us for our captain, and his priests, with sounding trumpets, to cry alarm against you : O children of Israel, fight not against THE LORD THE GOD OF YOUR FATHERS, for ye shall not prosper.”——
“ So the children of Judah prevailed, because they relied upon the LORD, THE GOD OF THEIR FATHERS,” 2 Chron. xiii. 11—18.

Notwithstanding this, the sacred historian reprobates his con-

* She is called “ Micaiah, the daughter of Uriel, of Gibeah,” 2 Chron. xiii. 2.—Uriel might have been married to Thamar, the daughter of Absalom, 2 Sam. xiv. 27. And if so, Micaiah, or Maachah, was the grand-daughter of Absalom ; which is more probable, as she was the grandmother of Asa, 1 Kings xv. 10.

duct during his short reign of three years. For “he walked in all the sins of his father which he had done before him,” especially in multiplying wives: for he had fourteen wives, and by them twenty-two sons and sixteen daughters; “and his heart was not perfect with the Lord his God,” to avoid and remove the idolatries and abominations of the land, “as the heart of David his father. Nevertheless, for David’s sake, did THE LORD HIS GOD give him a lamp in Jerusalem, to set up his son after him, and to establish Jerusalem,” 1 Kings xv. 3, 4, 2 Chron. xiii. 21.

This is a lively and impressive instance of the imperfect religion of those times, divided between the service of GOD and the service of idols:—so strikingly reprobated by the LORD through the prophets afterwards.

“Moreover this have they done unto ME: they have defiled MY sanctuary in the same day, and have profaned MY sabbaths: For when they had slain their children to their idols, then came they the same day into my sanctuary to profane it! and lo, thus have they done in the midst of MY house,” Ezek. xxiii. 38, 39.

The conduct of the Jews all along, till the destruction of their Temple, and the Babylonish captivity, was exactly similar to that of the Heathen colonists, transplanted from Assyria and Babylonia in their room. “They feared THE LORD, and served their own gods,” 2 Kings xvii. 33. And is not the incongruous service of GOD and Mammon, (or “the World,”) similar among Christians also, at the present day? Matt. vi. 24; for “the friendship of the world is enmity with GOD,” James iv. 4. —“The god of this world,” 2 Cor. iv. 4, or “the prince of this world hath no part with CHRIST,” John xii. 31, xiv. 30, for “what concord hath CHRIST with Belial?” 2 Cor. vi. 15.

ASA.

“The heart” of this excellent prince, the son of Abijam, “was perfect with THE LORD all his days; and he did what was right in the eyes of THE LORD, as did his father David; for he removed all the Sodomites out of the land, and the idols which his father had made; and deposed his grandmother, Maachah, from being queen, because she had made an idol in a grove, which he destroyed," 1 Kings xv. 8—14, 2 Chron. xiv. 1—5, xv. 16, 17.

In consequence of this, "the land was quiet," or at peace during the first ten years of his reign, until Zerah invaded Judah, with a prodigious army of African Ethiopians, (or Abyssinians,) and Libyans; consisting of a million of men, (which Josephus reduces, more probably, to 90,000 infantry, and 100,000 cavalry, Ant. viii. 12, 1.) and three hundred chariots. This mighty host, Asa advanced to meet on the borders of his dominions; and after prayer to God, "who can equally help with many, or with the powerless," totally overthrew the enemy, and gathered immense spoils and cattle, 2 Chron. xiv. 9—15, xvi. 8.

The following noble exhortation of the inspired prophet Azariah, who came out to meet Asa on his return, after this great victory, (as Melchizedek did Abraham,) may thus be more correctly and intelligibly translated.

"Hear me Asa, and all Judah, and Benjamin :

"THE LORD is with you, while ye are with Him: And if ye seek Him, He will be found by you; but if ye forsake Him, He will forsake you.

"Now, for many days, [the revolted tribes of] Israel have been without THE TRUE GOD, and without a teaching priest, and without the law: [therefore have they been delivered into the hands of their enemies*.] But [if] in their trouble they had turned unto THE LORD THE GOD OF ISRAEL, and sought Him, He would have been found by them. Hence, in those times, there hath been no [settled] peace to the goer out, nor to the comer in [about his business] but great vexations, upon all the inhabitants of that land: for tribe hath been destroyed by tribe, and city by city; because God hath vexed them with all adversity.

"Be ye, therefore, confirmed [in the true faith,] and let not your hands be weak [to root out idolatry,] for your work shall be rewarded," 2 Chron. xv. 1—7.

And most powerful was the effect:

"And when Asa heard these words, even the exhortation of [Azariah, the son of] Oded the prophet, he confirmed himself

* This is the judicious insertion of the Syriac and Arabic Versions, required by the context.

[in the faith,] and put away the abominable idols out of all the land of Judah and Benjamin, and out of the cities which he had taken from Mount Ephraim; and renewed the altar of THE LORD that was before the porch [of the temple] of THE LORD.

“ And he gathered all Judah, and Benjamin, and with them the refugees out of Ephraim and Manasseh, [northwards,] and out of Simeon [southwards:] for they flocked to him in abundance out of Israel, when they saw that the Lord his God was with him. So they gathered themselves together at Jerusalem in the third month, in the fifteenth year of the reign of Asa: and they offered unto THE LORD, at the same time, of the spoil which they had brought [from the Ethiopians,] seven hundred oxen, and seven thousand sheep.

“ And they entered into covenant to seek THE LORD, THE GOD OF THEIR FATHERS, with all their heart, and with all their soul: that whosoever would not seek THE LORD, THE GOD OF ISRAEL, [but relapse into idolatry,] should be put to death, both small and great, man and woman. And they sware unto THE LORD with a loud voice, and with shouting, and with trumpets, and with cornets. And all Judah rejoiced at the oath: for they sware with all their heart, and sought HIM with all their desire. And THE LORD was found by them, and gave them rest round about,” 2 Chron. xv. 8—15.

What an interesting and affecting picture is this, of national repentance and reformation!

II. How different was the distracted state of the revolted tribes, as described by the prophet, during the long and peaceful reign of Asa.

When Jeroboam, notwithstanding the warning he had received, persisted in the sin of idolatry, and “made Israel to sin,” the old prophet Ahijah, who had originally communicated the divine appointment to him, was commissioned, near the close of his reign, 1. to denounce the death of his most hopeful son, Abijah, about whose sickness the wife of Jeroboam came to consult him in disguise; 2. the approaching destruction of his house or family, by a succeeding king of Israel. 3. And the captivity of the tribes of Israel, beyond the river [Euphrates, by the Assyrians,] for their idolatries, 1 Kings xiv. 1—16.

Accordingly, in the second year of Asa, Nadab, the son of Jeroboam, who succeeded him, and walked in his way, after two years' reign was slain by Baasha; who assumed the crown, and utterly destroyed the family of Jeroboam, 1 Kings xv. 25—30.

Baasha walked in the same way, and the destruction of his family also was denounced to him by the prophet Jehu, 1 Kings xvi. 1—4.

In the twenty-fifth* year of Asa, his repose was interrupted by an irruption of Baasha into his frontier, who began to build a fortress at Ramah, in order to prevent any intercourse between the two kingdoms. Upon which Asa sent presents to Benhadad, king of Syria, who dwelt at Damascus, to invade the northern parts of Israel. This put a stop to the building, which Asa thereupon destroyed, and built two other fortresses with the materials at Geba and Mizpah. Baasha was prevented by death, next year, from renewing hostilities; as we learn from Josephus, 2 Chron. xvi. 1—6. For he died in the twenty-sixth of Asa, 1 Kings xvi. 8.

Ela, the son of Baasha, succeeded him, and reigned only two years, or one complete, when he was murdered in his drunkenness by Zimri; who destroyed all the house of Baasha, as foretold, 1 Kings xvi. 1—14.

But Zimri himself was slain, after seven days' reign, by Omri, 1 Kings xvi. 15—20.

The kingdom was then split into two factions; the one supporting Omri, and the other, Tibni; at length, after a civil war, which lasted six years, the faction of Omri prevailed; and Tibni was put to death. Omri then reigned without a competitor, six years more, or twelve years current in all; and exceeded all his predecessors in idolatry, 1 Kings xvi. 23—28.

In the thirty-eighth year of Asa, Ahab, the son of Omri, began his reign in Israel. He outstript even his father in idolatries; in addition to the golden calves of Jeroboam, worshipping Baal, or the sun, the god of the Zidonians; being corrupted by his wife Jezebel, the daughter of Ethbaal, king of Zidon. "And he did more to provoke THE LORD, THE GOD OF ISRAEL, to anger, than all the kings of Israel that were before him," 1 Kings xvi. 29—33.

Thus Asa lived to see no less than seven kings or competitors for the crown, in the miserably rent and convulsed state of Israel, increasing in idolatry, and increasing in misery.

* The Masorete text corruptly reads, "in the thirty-fifth year," 2 Chron. xv. 19.

Asa himself, however, towards the close of his reign, did not perfectly retain his integrity; for he imprisoned Hanani the seer, who reproached him for relying on the king of Syria for aid against Baasha, rather than on THE LORD who had delivered him from the Ethiopians and Libyans; and he also oppressed some of the people; and when afflicted with a grievous disease in his feet, “he sought, not THE LORD, but the physicians,” 2 Chron. xvi. 7—14.

JEHOSHAPHAT.

This pious prince, the son of Asa, “walked in the first ways of his father David, and his heart was exalted in the LORD.” The first act of his reign was the removal of the high places and groves throughout Judah, which Asa had left untouched, 1 Chron. xv. 7.

In the third year of his reign, he sent chosen princes, priests, and Levites, through all the cities of Judah, to instruct them in the book of the law of THE LORD. These were wise regulations, to banish false religion, and to teach the true. Hence the fear of THE LORD fell upon all the neighbouring kingdoms, so that they made no war against him until he attacked them, and he prospered exceedingly; so that his militia, if the numbers be correct, amounted to one million one hundred and sixty thousand men, 2 Chron. xvii. 1—19, which was not far short of the amount of the united kingdom in David's time, 2 Sam. xxiv. 9.

His affinity with the idolatrous Ahab was the capital error of his reign. He married his eldest son Jehoram to Athaliah, the daughter of Ahab and Jezebel. This disastrous connection, mischievous to himself, and ruinous to his family, took place about the thirteenth year of his reign, 2 Chron. xviii. 1, xxi. 6.

In consequence of it, about seven years after, in the twentieth of his reign, he imprudently joined Ahab in an expedition against the Syrians. Ahab was slain at Ramoth Gilead, and Jehoshaphat narrowly escaped the loss of his life, or of his liberty, had he not cried out, and THE LORD helped him, and disposed his pursuers in the battle to depart from him, when they found that he was not the king of Israel. For thus “helping the ungodly, and loving them that hated THE LORD,” he was reproved by Jehu, the prophet, 1 Kings xxii. 2—33, 2 Chron. xviii. 2—31, xix. 1—3.

He had again the imprudence to join Ahaziah, who succeeded Ahab, in a commercial voyage for gold to *Ophir, but his ships were broken at Eziongeber; for this also he was reproved by Eliezer, the prophet, who ascribed the shipwreck to the displeasure of THE LORD. Ahaziah proposed a second voyage, but Jehoshaphat refused, 1 Kings xxii. 48, 49, 2 Chron. xx. 35—37.

After the death of Ahaziah, who reigned only two years, and was succeeded by his brother Jehoram, son of Ahab, Jehoshaphat was a third time persuaded to join the latter in an expedition against the Moabites who had rebelled, at Ahab's death, in which the two kings, with the king of Edom, the vassal of Jehoshaphat, and their armies, were in danger of perishing for want of water in the wilderness of Edom, through which, taking a compass round the salt sea, they had designed to invade Moab. In this emergency, they were delivered by Elisha, the prophet, through regard to Jehoshaphat, as he told Jehoram, who procured them a miraculous supply of water, which filled the valley, and they defeated the Moabites, and pursued them into their own country. This was about the twenty-second year of Jehoshaphat, 2 Kings iii. 5—27.

Jehoshaphat made a further reformation in religion, for after Ahab's death he took another circuit through his dominions, and brought back the people from Beersheba, southwards, to Mount Ephraim, northwards, unto THE LORD, THE GOD OF THEIR FATHERS, 2 Chron. xix. 4. However, the high places of the Ephraimites were not taken away, because as yet they had not prepared their hearts unto THE GOD OF THEIR FATHERS, like the Jews, whose high places he had taken away in the beginning of his reign, 2 Chron. xx. 33.

He also appointed a court of justice at Jerusalem, chosen out of the priests, Levites, and chief of the fathers of Israel, or elders, to whom the local judges, whom he had set in each of the fenced cities throughout the land of Judah, were to report their proceedings; with strict injunctions to both, to administer justice without respect of persons, and without receiving gifts, in the fear of the Lord, and with a perfect heart, 2 Chron. xix. 5—9.

* The Masorete text, both of 1 Kings xxii. 48, and 2 Chron. xx. 36, interpolates "Tarshish," which must be expunged, because they could not go from Eziongeber to Tarshish, or vice versa, without circumnavigating Africa.

His prosperous reign was closed with a signal deliverance by the sole arm of THE LORD, from a formidable invasion of the Moabites, Ammonites, and their confederates, from Mount Seir. When Jehoshaphat had proclaimed a public fast throughout all Judah, and in an admirable prayer besought THE LORD “to judge their enemies,” HE sent a spirit of discord between them, so that the Moabites and Ammonites first destroyed the inhabitants of Mount Seir, and afterwards each other, and left immense spoils and riches, which Jehoshaphat and his people were three days in gathering; and on the fourth, they returned home, from Engedi to Jerusalem, where they held a solemn thanksgiving in (Shaveh, or the king’s dale, where Melchizedeck blessed Abraham, thence called) the valley of Berachah, or “blessing;” and from the foregoing circumstance, the valley of Jehoshaphat, “THE LORD will judge,” 2 Chron. xx. 1—26.

II. With the reign of Jehoshaphat, one of the wisest and greatest of the kings of Judah, we are to contrast that of his contemporary Ahab, the most idolatrous of the kings of Israel, 1 Kings xxii. 25.

ELIJAH THE PROPHET.

During the reign of Ahab, GOD raised up a prophet of a superior order, Elijah, the Tishbite, (from Thebez, probably a city of Gilead, or Manasseh, eastwards of Jordan) to prevent the total apostacy of the kingdom of Israel. This illustrious prophet, the greatest that had appeared both “in word and deed” since the days of Moses, boldly predicted a long drought to Ahab, not to be removed but by his own intercession, 1 Kings xvii. 1. For Elijah apprehended, that the idolatries of the nation would draw down destruction from God, and therefore he prayed for a lesser chastisement to work their reformation; and when that end was accomplished, he prayed again for its remission. It is so understood by the son of Sirach, Ecclus. xlvi. 10, and also in the NEW TESTAMENT. “Elijah prayed earnestly that it might not rain, and it rained not on the land for the space of three years and six months: he prayed again, and the heaven gave rain, and the land produced its fruit,” James v. 17, 18.

After such a denunciation it was necessary for the prophet to withdraw from the presence and solicitations of the king, when the drought should commence, which it did, probably, about the sixth year of Ahab. Accordingly, he was directed by “the ORACLE OF THE LORD, who came to him,” to retire eastwards, beyond Jordan, and hide himself by the brook Cherith; so he went thither, and the Orebim, or natives* brought him bread and flesh, morning and evening, by the divine command; and he drank of the brook, until it was dried up, for want of rain, at the end of the year, or beginning of spring, (see Vol. I. p. 35, note) 1 Kings xviii. 3—7.

The ORACLE OF THE LORD then sent him westwards to Zarephath, or Sarepta †, a town of Zidon, under the dominion of Jezebel's father, where he lodged with a poor widow, and was miraculously supported with her and her family, during the famine occasioned by the drought, for many days, as he prophesied, “Thus saith the LORD, THE GOD OF ISRAEL, The barrel of meal shall not waste, nor the cruse of oil fail, until the day that THE LORD shall send rain upon the land,” xvii.

* This is the judicious rendering of the Arabic version. הערבים, Ha Orebim, “the Orebites,” might have been the descendants of Oreb, whom Gideon slew upon the rock Oreb, Judges vii. 25. And Jerom mentions “the Orbim, who fed Elijah,” as being “inhabitants of a town on the borders of Arabia,” iii. 119.

All the other versions, and Josephus, followed by our English Bible, render the word, “the ravens ;”—which certainly is more miraculous; but surely divine agency is not to be introduced on the stage, except in cases of importance and difficulty, that cannot be otherwise explained:

Nec DEUS intersit, nisi dignus vindice nodus
Inciderit.———

HOR.

And the multiplication of miracles unnecessarily tends to their depreciation. Indeed, the difficulties attending the vulgar opinion have greatly embarrassed the commentators. Take the following note of the elaborate Poole, in his Synopsis, as a specimen:—“Unquestionably they brought meat dressed, not raw, Gen. ix. 4. You may ask, where did the ravens get it? Answ. 1. From the kitchen of king Ahab or of Jehoshaphat. 2. Or it was prepared for him by some of the seven thousand, to whom God communicated the secret, 1 Kings xix. 8. Or, 3. The angels, perhaps, exposed the provisions in some certain place, whence the ravens brought it. 4. Where the ravens could procure it, HE might provide, who gave them such a commission, and who could effect this in a thousand ways.”—“GOD prepared a table for his servant in the utmost penury. He did not take care that wine should be brought to him.”—Such a comment, put out of a learned language into plain English, can only excite a smile, mingled with regret, that literary talent should be so wasted or misemployed on idle speculation. Let me not be understood by this instance, however, as wishing to depreciate Poole's learned, excellent, and astonishing Variorum Commentary, to which I have been indebted for much solid and useful, as well as critical information.

† Now called Sarphan, about three hours' journey from Sidon, in the way to Tyre. Maudrell, p. 48.

8—16. Menander, the historian, mentions this drought, or want of rain for an entire twelvemonth, as happening in the reign of Ethbaal, Joseph. Antiq. VIII. 13, 2. Here, by prayer to GOD, he restored the widow's son to life, xvii. 17—24. From hence, at the end of three years, (during which Ahab had sought the prophet through every nation and kingdom, but in vain) the ORACLE OF THE LORD commanded him to go and shew himself to Ahab. In the way he met Obadiah, the ruler of Ahab's house, who was faithful, and commissioned him, "Go tell thy lord, behold Elijah is here." Ahab, when he saw him, reproached him as the cause of the national calamities: Art thou he that troubleth Israel? But the prophet boldly retorted the charge upon himself, and his father's house, because they forsook THE LORD, and followed Baalim. He then required the king to call a solemn assembly of all Israel to Mount Carmel, and also to bring all his prophets or priests of Baal, or the sun, and of the groves. There he reproached the people with the destruction or banishment of the prophets of the Lord, of whom he alleged that himself only remained, while the prophets of Baal alone were four hundred and fifty, fed at Jezebel's table, and also with their divided worship:—"How long halt ye between two opinions? If THE LORD be THE GOD, follow Him, but if Baal, follow him." And when "the people answered him not a word," at a loss how to decide, he proposed a solemn sacrifice to each, and "the God that answereth by fire to consume his sacrifice, let him be THE GOD." This was a fair trial of Baal's power in his own supposed element, and approved as such by all the people. Accordingly, when Baal answered not his prophets, but THE LORD answered Elijah's prayer, "all the people, when they saw the fire of THE LORD consume the sacrifice, as on former occasions, fell on their faces, and said, 'THE LORD, HE IS THE GOD! THE LORD, HE IS THE GOD!'" not Baal. Then Elijah commanded them to ratify their abjuration of Baal, by slaying his priests, which they immediately did, in the enthusiasm of their zeal for THE LORD, at the brook Kishon, which had been the scene of Barak's victory over the idolatrous Canaanites.

Immediately after this national conversion, he went up to the top of Mount Carmel, and prayed fervently for rain seven times, which at length came in the form of a little cloud, like a man's hand, rising out of the Mediterranean sea: a phænomenon frequent in warm climates, xviii. 1—46. “Much, therefore, availed the energetic supplication of this righteous man,” James v. 16. This happened about the tenth year of Ahab.

Elijah was now compelled to fly for his life, to avoid the threatened vengeance of Jezebel for destroying her prophets, and when he had travelled about 150 miles, from Samaria to Beersheba, to the southern extremity of Judah, he left there his servant, and went alone a day’s journey into the wilderness, and prayed for death to end his troubles. Here, indeed, his firmness and confidence in the divine protection seems to have forsaken him, justifying the apostle’s observation suggested probably thereby, “Elijah was a man subject to like passions as we are,” James v. 17; 1 Kings xix. 1—4.

To strengthen his faith, and to reward his sufferings in the cause of the God of Israel, whose honour he had so zealously vindicated, Elijah was encouraged by the angel of the Lord to undertake “a great journey” to the Mount of God, Horeb, where the divine presence had been manifested to Moses, the great founder of the law, and was now, probably, promised to be manifested again to this great restorer of the law. On this mysterious occasion, the angel twice touched him, and twice made him eat of the heavenly food prepared for him; and on the strength of both, perhaps, he travelled by a circuitous route forty days* in the wilderness, till he came to the cave where Moses is supposed to have been stationed, when he saw the glory of THE LORD in “the cleft of the rock,” Exod. xxxiii. 22; 1 Kings xix. 5—8.

Of the invigorating virtue communicated by the divine touch, we have instances afterwards in the cases of the prophet Daniel, x. 10, and of the apostle John, Rev. i. 17, to enable them to sustain the glory of the divine presence. Moses, Elijah, and JESUS, all fasted forty days in the wilderness, perhaps to intimate the likeness of their commissions, to propose, to restore, and to perfect THE LAW by God’s last and best gift, THE GOSPEL; of which they also were witnesses, with CHRIST, at his transfiguration, Matt. xvii. 4.

And now the ORACLE OF THE LORD personally came to Elijah, and said unto him, “What doest thou here, Elijah?”

* The direct distance from Beersheba to Horeb was not above 150 miles, which might have been easily travelled in five or six days.

That the prophet knew him is evident from his answer: "I have been very zealous for THE LORD, the GOD OF HOSTS: for the children of Israel have forsaken THY covenant, thrown down THY altars, and slain THY prophets with the sword, and I only am left, and they seek my life to take it away," 1 Kings xix. 9, 10.

Here Elijah evidently recognizes the speaker as THE LORD, to whom he appositely gives his title of THE GOD OF HOSTS, to mark his superiority over Baal, "the sun," and all the host of heaven and earth.

Then THE ORACLE said, "Go forth from the cave, and stand upon the mount before the presence of the Lord, for lo, THE LORD is about to pass by."

The first harbinger of His presence, "who maketh the winds his messengers, and flaming fire his ministers," Psalm civ. 4, controuling all the elements of nature, was "a great and strong wind, which rent the mountains, and brake in pieces the rocks, but THE LORD was not in the wind." This was succeeded by "an earthquake, but THE LORD was not in the earthquake." And this again by "a fire, but THE LORD was not in the fire." At the last came "a still small voice, [and THE LORD was there*]" and when Elijah heard it, (the same, probably, in which THE ORACLE had before accosted him, and which therefore he knew,) he wrapped his face in his mantle (in token of awe and reverence), and went forth, and stood in the entrance of the cave.

And now the same question was repeated from the glory of THE LORD, "What doest thou here, Elijah?" And the same answer given by the prophet as before, to mark, perhaps, more strongly the identity of THE ORACLE, and of the DIVINE PRESENCE.

The ORACLE, in reply, gently rebukes the prophet for his crimination of the whole people of Israel, and his arrogance in representing himself as the only prophet left:—"Yet have I left to ME seven thousand men in Israel, who have not bowed the knee to Baal †." It is understood as a rebuke by the son of Sirach, Ecclus. xlvi. 7; and by St. Paul, Rom. xi. 2—4.

* Κάκει Κυριος. This is the judicious insertion of the Alexandrine Greek version.

† St. Paul, by his rendering τῆ Baal, (Rom. xi. 4,) seems to have understood "the heifer Baal," Tobit i. 5, or the golden calf of Jeroboam, worshipped by the northern tribes at Dan, 1 Kings xii. 30.

He then directs Elijah to return home by a different way, through the wilderness of Damascus, and in his way to anoint or appoint Elisha to be his successor, and (either by himself, or by Elisha) Hazael to be king of Syria, at Damascus, and Jehu to be king of Israel, as the chosen ministers of divine vengeance upon Ahab's house and people, 1 Kings xix. 11—18.

So Elijah returned from the Mount of GOD, and at Abel meholah, on the western side of Jordan, in the half tribe of Manasseh, cast his mantle upon Elisha, the son of Shaphat, a man of opulence, who was ploughing with twelve yoke of oxen, to signify his prophetic call. This Elisha immediately obeyed, after asking permission to take leave of his parents, to which Elijah consented, 1 Kings xix. 19—21.

This mysterious transaction is of the greatest importance. 1. It evinces the intimate analogy between the Mosaical and CHRISTIAN dispensations, as explained by OUR LORD and his Apostles, that it was the same divine person who appeared in glory to Moses and Elijah at Horeb, and with them to his chosen apostles Peter, James, and John, declared by a voice from heaven to be the SON OF GOD.

2. It demonstrates the personality of the ORACLE OF THE LORD, who seems to have appeared in a human form at first to Elijah, and afterwards in glory; and also the propriety of rendering דָּבָר יְהוָה, DABAR IAHOH, not “the word of the Lord,” as in the English Bible, which is frequently confounded with the written word, but THE ORACLE OF THE LORD, as expressly rendered by St. Paul in this place, ὁ χρηματισμος, THE ORACLE*, Rom. xi. 4, whom he elsewhere calls ὁ λαλων “THE SPEAKER,” Heb. xii. 25, because λαλει τα ρηματα του Θεου, “he speaketh the oracles of GOD,” John iii. 34. And so should the synonymous terms, ὁ Λογος, John i. 1, &c. ὁ Λογος του Θεου, Rev. xix. 11, &c. Ρημα Θεου, Heb. xi. 3, (taken from the usual renderings of DABAR IAHOH throughout the Septuagint version) be translated THE ORACLE, &c.

The last interview of Elijah with Ahab was about nine years after, or the nineteenth of his reign, to denounce the divine vengeance against him and his family for “killing” Naboth, under the form of law †, at the instigation of Jezebel, and “taking possession" of his vineyard. The behaviour of Ahab on this occasion shews the force of guilt. Hast thou found me, O my enemy? illustrating the remark, "Be sure your sin will find you out," Numb. xxxii. 23, and "the power and spirit of Elijah," — "I have found thee, because thou hast sold thyself to work evil in the sight of THE LORD," &c.

* “Χρηματισμος, oraculum nuncupatus.” Macrob. Somn. Scipionis, lib. I. 3.

† Naboth was accused by suborned witnesses of blasphemy and treason, for which he was stoned to death, and his goods confiscated to the king.

On hearing this dreadful denunciation, "Ahab rent his clothes," in token of extreme grief, and put sackcloth upon his flesh, and fasted, and lay in sackcloth, and went groaning, in token of humiliation and contrition.

And THE ORACLE OF THE LORD came to Elijah, saying, "Seest thou how Ahab humbleth himself before me? Because he humbleth himself before Me, I will not bring the evil in his days, but in his son's days will I bring the evil upon his house," 1 Kings xxi. 1—29.

This gracious respite proves the merciful goodness of GOD tempering the rigour of his justice, "not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance," even the most wicked. The sincere, though imperfect and short-lived sorrow and contrition of Ahab, shews that "the spirit of THE LORD" is rarely "quenched" altogether, even in the worst men; while the fall of David and Solomon, &c. and the failings of Moses and Elijah, &c. prove that it is liable to be "grieved," through the frailty and infirmity of human nature, even in the best. "For there is no man that sinneth not," 1 Kings viii. 46, "not a just man upon earth, that doeth good, and sinneth not," Eccl. vii. 20, "for in many things we all slip," James iii. 2. Compare Job ix. 20; Psalm cxliii. 2; Rom. iii. 23, v. 12; 1 John i. 8, 9, &c. either by "sins, by negligences, or by ignorances," Litany.

JEHORAM OR JORAM.

This prince succeeded his father Jehoshaphat in Judah, and was thirty-two years old when he began to reign, and reigned eight years; but he walked in the ways of the kings of Israel, like the house of Ahab, seduced by his wife Athaliah.

The first act of his wicked reign was to slay his six brothers with the sword, whom their father Jehoshaphat had amply provided for, and given them fenced cities in Judah, and also several of the princes or nobles.

He then erected high places in the mountains of Judah, resembling those in Israel, and compelled his subjects to commit fornication, or idolatry.

For these heinous crimes, God punished him in various ways. 1. By the revolt of the Edomites, fulfilling Isaac's prophecy to Esau, Gen. xxvii. 40, and of Libnah, on the southern frontier of Judah. 2. By invasions from the Philistines in the west, and the Arabians, bordering on the Cushites, or Midianites, in the east, who carried away all his substance, and all his wives, except Athaliah, who was spared in anger, and slew all his sons, except the youngest, Jehoahaz, her son; and to fill up the measure of his woes, the Lord smote him with an incurable disease in his bowels, so that they dropped out, and he died after a sore sickness of two years, suffering the visitations of Job, but without his consolations.

All these were denounced against him for his crimes by the prophet *Elisha, in a letter which he sent to him early in his reign. Thus did this great prophet take cognizance also of the affairs of Judah, 2 Chron. xxi. 1—20.

JEHOAHAZ, OR AHAZIAH.

He was twenty-two years † old when he began to reign, and he reigned only one year; for, following the evil counsels of his mother, and the house of Ahab, he foolishly joined Jehoram, the son of Ahab, king of Israel, in a war against Hazael, king of Syria, in which he was wounded, and afterwards slain, in Samaria, by Jehu, who rebelled against Jehoram, 2 Chron. xxii. 1—9.

Q. ATHALIAH.

When this wicked woman saw that her son was dead, she arose and destroyed all the seed royal of the house of Judah that survived the slaughter of Jehoram, the Arabians, and Jehu ‡, except her grandson Joash, the son of Ahaziah, an infant

* The Masorete text here, by mistake, reads Elijah, (2 Chron. xxi. 12,) instead of Elisha, for Elijah was translated during the life-time of Jehoshaphat, 2 Kings iii. 11. Thus Michal was put for Merab, 2 Sam. xxi. 8.

† The Masorete text here (2 Chron. xxii. 2,) incorrectly reads 42 years, but the Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic versions read 22, which is confirmed by 2 Kings viii. 26.

‡ Jehu destroyed forty-two "brethren of Ahaziah," or his cousin-germans, the sons of a year old, who was hidden from her rage, with his nurse, in the chambers of the temple, by his aunt, Jehoshabeath, the wife of Jehoiada, the high-priest, and assumed the throne. She reigned six years over the land, during which this wicked woman and her sons broke* up and plundered the house of GOD, and built a house of Baal, and erected altars, and established priests for his service; which were pulled down and destroyed when she was slain, in an insurrection excited against her by Jehoiada, the high-priest and guardian of the young king, 2 Chron. xxii. 10—12, xxiii. 1—15, xxiv. 7.

II. We are now to resume the history of the house of Ahab, till their destruction also by her contemporary, Jehu, in Israel.

After the disastrous commercial voyage which Jehoshaphat, king of Judah, had undertaken with Ahaziah, the son of Ahab; the latter, who followed the idolatries of his parents, in addition to that of Jeroboam, fell from a lattice in his upper chamber, and was sick. He then sent messengers to the land of the Philistines, to consult Baal-zebub, "the fly-god" of Ekron, whether he should recover. But Elijah, by command of THE ANGEL OF THE LORD, or THE ORACLE, met the messengers on their way, and sent them to Ahaziah, with a denunciation of death from THE LORD for his impiety, in forsaking THE GOD OF ISRAEL. And when the king sent an officer and fifty men to apprehend the prophet, he called down fire from heaven, and consumed this party, and a second; but he went with the third, who besought him, and confirmed the denunciation to the king himself, who died accordingly, after a short reign of two years, and left no son, 1 Kings xxii. 51—53; 2 Kings i. 1—18.

Jehoram, his brother, succeeded him. He removed the image of Baal which his father had made, but he still left the golden calf of Jeroboam. The beginning of his reign was prosperous, for he succeeded in reducing the Moabites, who had rebelled on his father Ahab's death, by the assistance of Jehoshaphat, and the prophet Elisha, for Jehoshaphat's sake, as observed before; but the latter part was calamitous, for he was involved in war with the Syrians, during which, and for the last seven years of of his six uncles, who had been put to death by his father Jehoram, 2 Kings xi. 13, 14; 2 Chron. xxii. 8.

* This wicked queen massacred all the royal family, except Joash, her grandson: "the sons of Athaliah," therefore, noticed 2 Chron. xxiv. 7, must denote her idolatrous adherents, "sons of Belial."

his reign, dearth and famine prevailed in the land, and in Samaria, during the siege; and he was slain by Jehu, who rebelled against him, when he was anointed king by the messenger of Elisha, and executed divine vengeance upon Jezebel, and the whole house of Ahab, whom he cut off, 2 Kings iii. 1—27, iv. 38, compared with viii. 1—3, vi. 8—25, ix. 1—37, x. 1—11.

ELISHA THE PROPHET.

However calamitous in other respects, his reign was distinguished above that of any of the kings of Israel by the translation of the great prophet Elijah, and by the splendid miracles of his servant Elisha, “who poured water on the hands of Elijah,” 2 Kings iii. 11.

The translation of Elijah by a whirlwind, in a fiery chariot and horses, happened about the first year of his reign. It was witnessed by Elisha, and probably by the fifty sons of the prophets, who foretold it to Elisha on the morning of that day, and went to Jericho, and stood afar off, during Elijah's miraculous passage of Jordan, which he smote with his mantle, and the waters divided for him and Elisha. This we may collect from their obeisance to Elisha, on his return, as the successor of Elijah, “on whom his spirit rested,” when he divided the waters of Jordan with Elijah's mantle; and also from their importunity to suffer them to search for Elijah's body in the wilderness, which they did in vain.

Along with his “falling mantle,” Elisha received that “double portion of the spirit,” and of the power of Elijah, which GOD granted to the pious request of this most faithful servant, whom nothing could separate from his master, to reward his tried affection and persevering patience with the choicest gifts of THE SPIRIT; but “the hardest” to be obtained, unless by “the energetic supplication” of an Elijah, 2 Kings iii. 1—18.

The prophecies and miracles of Elisha were numerous and important.

1. He healed the bad waters of Jericho, which had been cursed perhaps for rebuilding the city, contrary to the divine command, Josh. vi. 26, when Hiel, the Bethelite, who ignorantly, or presumptuously, rebuilt it, laid the foundation in the death of his eldest son, and set up the gates thereof in the death of his youngest, 1 Kings xvi. 34; 2 Kings ii. 18—22.

2. He cursed the idolatrous inhabitants of Bethel, who mocked him, and said, “Go up thou bald head, Go up thou bald head,” or follow thy master Elijah, joining insult to incredulity. And this curse, pronounced “in the name of THE LORD,” brought two she bears out of the wood, who tore forty-two “children” of them, or rather “youths,” or “lads,” as the original לָבָד (Ieled) elsewhere signifies, Gen. xliii. 8 ; 2 Kings ii. 23, 24.

3. He foretold the miraculous supply of water to Jehoshaphat in the wilderness of Edom, 2 Kings iii. 17.

4. He multiplied the widow’s oil to pay her debt, 2 Kings iv. 1—7.

5. By his prayers he procured a son for the rich and hospitable Shunamite, 2 Kings iv. 8—17.

6. And by his prayers restored the child to life again, iv. 18—37.

7. He cured the poisonous pottage in the course of the seven years’ famine which he foretold, iv. 38—41, viii. 1.

8. He entertained a hundred men with a present of twenty loaves of barley, and full ears of corn, who did eat, and left fragments thereof, iv. 42—44.

9. He cured Naaman, the Syrian, and transferred his leprosy to the covetous and lying Gehazi, his own servant, v. 1—27.

10. He made an iron hatchet to rise from the bottom of the water into which it had fallen, vi. 1—7.

11. He discovered the secret counsels of Benhadad, the king of Syria, in his war with Israel, to Jehoram, and saved him several times. And when Benhadad sent a large force to apprehend him, he prayed to God, and not only opened the eyes of the young man, his servant, to see that they were protected by an angelic host of fiery horses and chariots, but blinded the eyes of the Syrians, so that he led them into the midst of Samaria, and delivered them into the hands of Jehoram, whose eagerness to kill them he rebuked, and made him entertain them hospitably, and send them away safe to their master, vi. 8—23.

12. When Benhadad afterwards besieged Samaria, and caused a great famine, so that the woman eat her own child, and the king in his wrath was going to “take away the head of Elisha,” for not relieving the famine, and to “rely on THE LORD no longer,” but to surrender the city, Elisha stopped him, by predicting the greatest plenty in twenty-four hours; and when the courtier, on whom the king leaned, disbelieved and derided, the prophet told him that he should see it with his eyes, but not eat thereof. Both came to pass accordingly, for the Syrians were panic struck that night by “ a noise of chariots, and a noise of horses, a noise of a great host,” caused by the LORD, and fled for their life in the twilight, leaving their camp richly and plentifully furnished; and the courtier, whom the king appointed to take charge of the gate of the city, was trodden to death by the people returning loaded with the spoils, vi. 24—33, vii. 1—20.

13. When the time was come for appointing Hazael to be king of Syria, Elisha went to Damascus, about the twelfth year of Jehoram, king of Israel, and ambiguously foretold that Hazael would kill his sick master Benhadad, and succeed him in Syria, and do infinite mischief to the children of Israel. Hazael's exclamation, Can thy servant, a dog, do this great thing! marks not horror at its wickedness or cruelty, but surprise and astonishment at his own insignificance, as if unequal to such “ great” and daring deeds, viii. 7—15.

14. Soon after, when Jehoram was wounded in an engagement with Hazael, Elisha sent a young man of the prophets to anoint Jehu, king of Israel, in his room, who thereupon conspired against and slew Jehoram, ix. 1—24. Fulfilling, in these two last instances, the injunctions of Elijah, in obedience to the commands of the Oracle at Horeb.

15. Elisha lived till the reign of Jehoash, or Joash, the grandson of Jehu, in whose thirteenth year he died, (according to Abulfaragi, who dates his death in the thirty-sixth year of Joash, king of Judah, p. 39.) He foretold that the king, who came to see him, and lament over him in his last sickness, as Israel's protector*, by the symbolical representation of shooting three arrows, should defeat the Syrians thrice; which happened accordingly. He lived to a great age, for his ministry lasted from the translation of Elijah seventy years, 2 Kings xiii. 14—25.

16. The last miracle was the most extraordinary of all: a dead man was restored to life, by only touching the bones of this prophet, in his sepulchre, 2 Kings xiii. 20—22. The reality of

* “ O my father, my father, the chariot of Israel and the horsemen thereof!”—By thus repeating the exclamation of Elisha on the translation of Elijah, 2 Kings ii. 12, he seems to have asked a blessing of the prophet: alluding also to the remarkable protection of the fiery chariots and horses afforded to Elisha, 2 Kings vi. 17.

this miracle was the doctrine of the primitive Jewish Church, in the following admirable character of Elisha, drawn by the son of Sirach :

“The spirit of Elijah rested upon Elisha : whilst he lived, he was not moved with the presence of any prince, neither could any bring him into subjection : nothing could overcome him, and after his death, his body prophesied. He did wonders in his life, and at his death his works were marvellous,” Ecclus. xlvi. 12—14. Certainly, there was no innate virtue in the bones of Elisha, to produce any effect at all, much less one of this stupendous size. It was the immediate work of GOD ; and concurred with the translation of Elijah to keep alive and confirm, in a degenerate and infidel age, that grand truth of a bodily resurrection, which the translation of Enoch was calculated to produce in the antediluvian world ; and which the resurrection of CHRIST, in a glorified body, fully illustrated.

JOASH, OR JEHOASH.

This young prince, preserved by PROVIDENCE from the unnatural rage of his grandmother Athaliah, was seven years old when he began to reign at her deserved death, and he reigned forty years at Jerusalem. He did what was right in the sight of the LORD, all the days of his excellent guardian, Jehoiada.

In the twenty-third year of his reign, he thoroughly repaired the breaches of the Temple, after it had been built 360 years ; and made vessels of gold and silver for sacrifice, and offered burnt-offerings continually, during the life of Jehoiada, who died at the great age of a hundred and thirty years, and was buried among the kings of the family of David, “because he had done good in Israel, both towards God and towards his house,” 2 Kings xii. 1—16, 2 Chron. xxiv. 1—16.

After his death, Joash, to gratify the princes of Judah, forsook the house of GOD, and served groves and idols ; and most ungratefully joined with the people in a conspiracy against the inspired Zechariah, the son of Jehoiada, whom they stoned to death, by the king’s command, because he reproved them for their idolatries, and warned them of the divine displeasure. But the Lord looked upon his blood, and required it, as the dying martyr prayed ; and brought Hazael and the Syrians against them that same year ; who first stript the sacred and royal treasury, and afterwards, with a small company of men, defeated a very great host, and executed judgment against Judah and Jerusalem, and destroyed all their princes, and spoiled the country; and after their departure, Joash himself, when greatly diseased, was slain in a conspiracy, by two of his own servants, of whom the mother of the one was an Ammonitess, and of the other a Moabitess. Thus was he punished by the sons of idolatresses for his idolatries, and to avenge the blood of the sons of Jehoiada, 2 Kings xii. 17—21. 2 Chron. xxiv. 17—27.

II. His contemporaries in Israel were Jehu and his son Jehoahaz, and grandson Jehoash.

Jehu, after executing judgment upon the family of Ahab, purged Israel of its idolatries, and, by subtilty, destroyed all the worshippers of Baal, with his images and house; and for this service, God promised that his children of the fourth generation should sit on the throne of Israel. But because he still adhered to the idolatry of Jeroboam, THE LORD stripped him of his dominions eastward of Jordan; for Hazael smote the Gadites, Reubenites, and Manassites. He reigned twenty-eight years, 2 Kings x. 18—36.

Jehoahaz his son succeeded him, and reigned seventeen years in Israel; but he followed the idolatry of Jeroboam. Wherefore the Lord delivered the people into the hand of the Syrians, who oppressed them, and left Jehoahaz only fifty horsemen, and ten chariots, and ten thousand footmen, 2 Kings xiii. 1—8.

In the days of his son Joash, who reigned sixteen years, the Lord granted deliverance to Israel from the oppression of the Syrians. For Joash smote them thrice, according to the prophecy of Elisha; and recovered the cities of Israel, which Hazael had taken, from his son Benhadad, xiii. 10—25.

AMAZIAH.

This prince succeeded his father Joash in Judah, he was twenty-five years old when he began to reign, and reigned twenty-nine years, 2 Kings xiv. 1, 2; 2 Chron. xxv. 1.

The first act of his reign was the punishment of his father's murderers, but not of their children; respecting the law of Moses, (Deut. xxiv. 16.)

He afterwards, about the twelfth of his reign, invaded the Edomites, who had revolted in the days of Joram, (2 Kings viii.

20—22,) and slew ten thousand of them in Mount Seir; and destroyed ten thousand more whom he had taken captives, by cruelly casting them down from the top of a rock, so that they were all dashed to pieces. And yet, notwithstanding this success, which he had procured by dismissing an hundred thousand idolatrous auxiliaries, whom he had hired from Israel, by the advice of a prophet, and trusting solely to his own forces; he forsook THE LORD and “sought after the gods of the Edomites, which could not deliver their own people;” as the prophet upbraided him, and threatened him with destruction from THE LORD, 2 Kings xiv. 7; 2 Chron. xxv. 5—16.

To revenge the depredations of the discontented auxiliaries, whom he had sent back, and who slew three thousand men of Judah, and carried home much spoil,—he proclaimed war against Joash, the king of Israel, in the pride of conquest over the Edomites. But the Lord humbled his pride; he was defeated and taken prisoner by Joash, who brought him in triumph to Jerusalem, broke down four hundred cubits of the city wall, from the gate of Ephraim to the northern corner gate, and pillaged the Temple and the king’s house, and took hostages that he should not rebel in future.

At length he was slain, by a conspiracy formed against him at Jerusalem, when he had fled to Lachish, 2 Chron. xxv. 17—28.

AZARIAH, OR UZZIAH.

This prince was only five years old when his father was slain, and after an interregnum of eleven years, he was elected king; for he was “sixteen years old” when he succeeded to the throne. This naturally accounts for the length of the interregnum, 2 Kings xv. 1, 2; 2 Chron. xxvi. 1. Amaziah was slain “fifteen years” current after the death of Jehoash, king of Israel, 2 Kings xiv. 17, or fourteen years complete from the accession of Jeroboam II. his son; and Azariah, or Uzziah, did not begin his reign till the twenty-fifth of Jeroboam, (according to the foregoing correction, instead of the twenty-seventh year,) 2 Kings xv. 1, which gives the length of the interregnum, eleven years complete.

The reign of Azariah, fifty-two years, except that of Manasseh, was the longest of any of the kings of Judah. The former part of it, while he followed the counsels of Zechariah, who had instructed him in the fear of God, was eminently prosperous; for GOD helped him against the Philistines, the Arabians, and Ammonites; he fortified Jerusalem, built towers, and digged wells in the desert for his numerous cattle; he cultivated husbandry, and embodied a militia of 307,500 men, and furnished them and the city with various weapons, offensive and defensive. “And his name spread abroad, even to the entrance of Egypt, for he was marvellously helped, till he was strong,” 2 Chron. xxvi. 3—15.

But in the twenty-fourth year of his reign, according to Abulfaragi, p. 39, “when he was strong, his heart was lifted up to his destruction;” for he presumed to invade the high-priest’s function, and entered into the temple of the Lord to burn incense upon the altar of incense. For this sacrilege, THE LORD smote him with leprosy, in the very act, “and the priests thrust him out from thence, yea himself also hastened to go out from thence;” and so he was cut off from the house of the LORD, and remained a leper till the day of his death. During his seclusion, his son Jotham governed as regent, 2 Chron. xxvii. 16—21.

The year of his death was distinguished by the following remarkable vision of Isaiah, on his designation to the prophetic office, containing an important sequel to the prophecies of Moses.

I. ISAIAH’S VISION OF THE GLORY OF CHRIST.

VI. 1. “In the year that king Uzziah died, I saw THE REGENT [LORD] sitting on a high and lofty throne, and his glory filled the Temple.

2. “Above Him stood the Seraphim; each of them had six wings; with twain he covered his face, and with twain he covered his feet, and with twain he did fly.

3. “And they cried [alternately] to each other,

HOLY, HOLY, HOLY, LORD, GOD OF HOSTS,
The whole earth is full of his glory.

4. “And the posts of the door were shaken by the voice of their cry, and the Temple was filled with smoke.

5. “Then said I, Woe is me, I am undone; for I am a man of impure lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of impure lips; for mine eyes have seen THE KING, THE LORD OF HOSTS.

6. "Then one of the Seraphim flew unto me, and in his hand was a live coal, which he had taken with the tongs from the altar.

7. "And he touched my mouth [therewith] and said, Lo this hath touched thy lips; thy iniquity is removed, and thy sin purified.

8. And I heard the voice of THE REGENT [LORD], saying, Whom shall I send, and who will go to this people? And I said, lo, here am I, send me.

9. "And He said, *Go, and tell this people :
Hearing ye hear, but do not understand ;
And seeing ye see, but do not perceive :*

10. *This people have hardened their heart,
And stopped their ears, and closed their eyes ;
That they might not see with their eyes,
Nor hear with their ears,
Nor understand with their hearts,
Nor be converted ; that I should heal them.*

11. And I said, *How long, O REGENT [LORD], [Shall their obduracy continue?]
And he answered,
Until the cities be wasted without inhabitant,
And the houses without man,
And the land be utterly desolate.*

12. Even [until] THE LORD shall remove THE MAN [CHRIST],
*And shall multiply the residue [of the dispersion]
In the midst of the earth.—*

13, *Yet still in it shall be a tenth,
And it shall return.
But it shall [again] be for a prey ;
Like an oak [that is burned,]
And like acorns, shaken from their cell :
[Still] a holy seed is [in] its stock."*

In this magnificent, but highly figurative and most abstruse vision, (here attempted to be rendered more closely and intelligibly,) the mystic temple is supposed to be thrown open to view, even to the inner sanctuary; when the prophet, standing outside the temple, sees THE DIVINE PRESENCE seated on the mercy seat, and elevated over the ark of the covenant, between the Cherubim or Seraphim, and his glory filled the Temple.

1. This DIVINE PERSON, termed throughout the vision אֲדֹנִי, ADONI, ver. 1—8—11, (which is a contraction of אֲדֹנֵי יְהוָה, ADONI IAHOH, "THE REGENT LORD;" as in Amos viii. 9, and in numberless passages of Scripture,) was THE SON OF GOD, or the MESSIAH; who is so contrasted with אֱתֵי הוּוֹה, ÆTH IAHOH, or יְהוֹה, IAHOH, singly, denoting GOD THE FATHER, Psalm ii. 2—11, cx. 1. See the sixth Dissertation on THE PRIMITIVE NAMES OF THE DEITY, in the volume of Dissertations on the prophetic Character of CHRIST, where the propriety of rendering ADONI, "REGENT," is shewn.

This was the decision of the primitive Church. The learned Cyril declares, τον πατερα μεν γαρ ουδεις εωρακε πωποτε, ο δε τω προφητη φανεις, υιος ην. "For THE FATHER, indeed, no one ever saw, (John i. 18.) But He who then appeared to the Prophet was THE SON."—And our most learned and orthodox Bishop Bull asserts, "Wherever it is evident, that not a mere angel, but GOD HIMSELF appeared, we constantly affirm, following the concurrent judgment of primæval antiquity, that there, not THE FATHER, but THE SON, is to be understood."

2. We are indebted to the Septuagint and Arabic versions for a very important emendation of the Masorete Text, verse 8, reading לעם הוּוֹה, "to this people," instead of לנו, "for us," or to us." This is absolutely required by the context, to determine the prophet's mission to the people of Israel. For how, otherwise, could he offer himself, "Lo, here am I, send me,"—he knew not whither?

3. The masterly translation of the message delivered to the prophet by "THE LORD OF GLORY," according to the evangelist John, xii. 40, (more correctly rendered ["This people] have blinded their own eyes, and hardened their own heart, that they might not see with their eyes, and understand with their heart, and be converted, and I might heal them,) detects an error in the Masorete punctuation of the three verbs of ver. 10, by rendering them indicatively, not imperatively: הִשְׁמִין Hishmen, instead of הִשְׁמִין Hashmen, τετυφλωκεν "hath blinded," &c.

And this is confirmed by the freer Septuagint Version also, rendering all these verbs indicatively, and one of them not in the active conjugation Hiphil, with the evangelist, but in the passive Hophal; for "the heart of this people is hardened," επαχυνθη; and this is cited Matt. xiii. 15; Acts xxviii. 26; Rom. xi. 8. Still the meaning is precisely the same in both translations; for the heart of the people was hardened by themselves *, in this latter, as unequivocally expressed in the former. N. B. Our English Bible has unwarrantably assumed a nominative case, [HE] hath blinded their eyes, &c. John xii. 40, as if it were GOD that did so, and not they themselves, in the first instance, as in Pharaoh's case, noticed before.

4. The LORD OF GLORY'S complaint against his people, is only the renewal of that of Moses :

“Ye have seen all that THE LORD did before your eyes, in the land of Egypt, unto Pharaoh and all his servants, and all his land; the great trials which thine eyes have seen, the signs and the great miracles: yet THE LORD hath not given you a heart to understand, nor eyes to see, nor ears to hear, unto this day,” Deut. xxix. 2—4.

And the enquiry of the prophet, How long [shall their obduracy continue?] was evidently suggested by the denunciation of Moses against them during their captivities; “great plagues, and of long continuance; sore sicknesses, and of long continuance,” Deut. xxviii. 59, the repetition implying very long continuance.

The desolation of the whole land, in THE LORD'S answer, was also foretold by Moses, most expressly, during their captivities. “Then shall the land enjoy her sabbaths as long as it lieth desolate, and ye be in your enemies land,” Levit. xxvi. 34.

5. The twelfth verse, (which is exceedingly obscure and unintelligible in most of the versions; or in the English Bible, is a mere repetition of the eleventh,) by the doubly emphatic term, אֵת הָאָדָם, Æth Ha Adam, as distinguished from אָדָם, Adam singly, in the preceding verse, seems to denote “THE SECOND MAN, who is THE LORD from heaven,” as contrasted with “the first man, and his posterity from earth,” 1 Cor. xv. 45—47; and to intimate his rejection by the Jews, after the first desolation, ending with their return from the Babylonish captivity; to be followed by a second, during their dispersion after the Roman captivity.

6. The thirteenth and last verse, the most obscure of all, is here collected from the Syriac and Arabic Versions, compared with the Chaldee paraphrase; and explained by Jerom; and seems to intimate, that the land should recover after the desolations of Titus and Adrian; and a holy seed again “take root downwards, and bear fruit upwards,” Isai. xxxvii. 31. To this St. Paul seems to allude, in the grafting of the Gentiles upon the holy stock of the convert Jews, Rom. xi. 16—26.

* This also appears from the parallel passages of Ezekiel: “He that heareth, let him hear, and he that forbeareth, let him forbear; for they are a rebellious house,” Ezek. iii. 27. “Son of Man, thou dwellest in the midst of a rebellious house; which have eyes to see, but see not; they have ears to hear, but hear not,” xii. 2.

II. ISAIAH'S PROPHECY OF THE REJECTION AND SUFFERINGS OF CHRIST.

This evangelical prophet, (as he has been justly styled,) not only “saw the glory of CHRIST,” in prophetic vision; but he also “spake of his” rejection by the Jews, who “believed not on Him,” and of his sufferings, in the following circumstantial prophecy, cited by St. John, xii. 37—41, who connects it with the foregoing vision.

- LIII. 1. [LORD] who hath believed our report?
And to whom hath the arm of the LORD been manifested?
2. For he grew up before Him, as a tender [or sickly] plant,
And as a root from a parched ground.
He had no form nor comeliness that we should regard him,
No [dignified] presence, that we should desire him.
3. He was despised and rejected of men,
A man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief;
And as one that hideth his face from us,
He was despised, and we esteemed him not.
- II. 4. Surely, he hath borne our griefs,
And carried our sorrows ;*

* This important clause has been variously translated :

- | | |
|--|-----------------------|
| “ He onely taketh away our infirmitie ;
And beareth our paine. ” | Coverdale, 1550. |
| “ He only hath taken on him our infirmitie ;
And borne our paynes. ” | Bishop's Bible, 1577. |
| “ Surely, hee hath borne our infirmities ;
And caried our sorowes. ” | Geneva Bible, 1593. |
| “ Surely, He hath borne our griefs ;
And carried our sorrowes. ” | Our Bible. |
| “ Surely, our infirmities He hath borne ;
And our sorrowes He hath carried them. ” | Bishop Lowth. |
| “ Surely, our infirmities he took away ;
And our sicknesses, he removed. ” | Dodson. |
| “ Surely, our infirmities he hath borne [away],
And our sorrowes, he hath carried them. ” | Magee. |

Of these several translations, that furnished by Our Bible (and now restored in the text) seems to be the best, for the following reasons :

Yet we accounted him

Stricken, smitten, and afflicted of GOD.

5. But he was wounded for our transgressions,
He was smitten for our iniquities,
The chastisement of our peace was laid upon him,
And with his stripes we are healed.

6. All we like sheep had strayed,
We had erred, each according to his own way,
But THE LORD laid upon him
The iniquities of us all:

III. 7. He was brought to [trial] and questioned,
But he opened not his mouth;

1. The original nouns, rendered "griefs" and "sorrows," are correctly repeated from ver. 3.—"A man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief," appositely explaining both their nature and cause, "what and whence they were." But these words, when referred at first to CHRIST, evidently denoted not bodily pains and distempers, but the diseases and torments of the mind; and therefore must denote the same when afterwards referred to us. The word מִכָּאָב, Machab, is correctly rendered "sorrow," and so understood, in another parallel passage, "My servants shall sing for joy; but ye (wicked) shall cry for sorrow of heart," Isa. lxx. 14. See other instances, Magee on Atonement, Vol. I. p. 417—419. The other noun, חֲלִי, Holi, is usually rendered sickness; but sometimes grief, Jer. vi. 7, x. 19. And it must frequently be understood in the sense of grief, even when rendered sickness; as in Deut. xxviii. 61, &c.

2. Of the original verbs, נָשָׂא, Nasha, is rightly rendered "He hath borne," in the primary sense of the word bear, Deut. i. 12, &c.; or, He hath taken on him (Bishop's Bible), or taken upon himself the burden of those sins which excite our griefs, by suffering for them in our stead. It is secondarily used, in the sense of bearing away, carrying off, or removing, in many places; but this seems to be rather inconsistent with the context in this place, which describes the vicarious sufferings of CHRIST, in the first instance, not their beneficial consequences to us. And these sufferings are next detailed, "He was wounded for our transgressions," &c.

3. The Evangelist Matthew, however, availing himself of the latitude of the original nouns and verbs, has elegantly applied the clause, by way of accommodation:

Αυτος τας ασθενειας ημων ελαβε,
Και τας νοσους εβαστασεν.

"He hath borne [away] our infirmities;
And carried [off] our sicknesses." Matt. viii. 17.

Which is the only sense applicable to the miraculous cures of diseases, noticed in the foregoing part of the chapter. The attempt to harmonise the Prophet with the Evangelist principally occasioned the foregoing diversities of translation. Throughout this chapter, indeed, the Prophet, justly styled evangelical, has given a striking description of that great propitiatory sacrifice of "CHRIST our Passover." The plain result of the whole is obviously this:

The righteous "Servant of THE LORD," (lii. 13.) though without sin himself, was here foretold to submit to be treated as the vilest of sinners, in obedience to the DIVINE WILL; and having the burden of our transgressions laid upon him, to suffer chastisement on account of them; and by offering up his life a propitiatory sacrifice, resembling those under the Law, to procure for us a release from the punishment which was due to our offences. See Magee on Atonement, Vol. I. p. 409, 410.

- He was led away, as a lamb, to slaughter ;
And, as a sheep, before her shearers, is dumb,
So he opened not his mouth.*
8. *From custody and from judgment, he was taken [to be crucified,]
And [the men of] his generation, who can describe ?
For he was cut off from the land of the living ;
Through the wickedness of my people,
He was smitten [to death]*
9. *And his grave was appointed with "the malefactors,"
But with "the rich man" [was] his tomb.
Although he had done no wrong,
Neither was guile found in his mouth,*
10. *Yet it pleased THE LORD,
To make his bruising grievous.*
- IV. Since thou [LORD] hast made his soul a sin-offering,
11. *He shall see a seed that shall prolong their days ;
And the will of THE LORD shall prosper in his hand.
His soul shall see [the fruits] of his labour,
And he shall be satisfied to the full.
By knowledge of him shall my servant justify many,
And he shall bear their iniquities.*
12. *Therefore, I will allot him for his portion, the many,
And he shall share, for his spoil, the mighty,
Because he poured out his soul unto death,
"And was numbered with the transgressors :"
And he bare the sins of many,
And interceded for the transgressors.*

This luminous prophecy, (which is here attempted to be more closely and intelligibly rendered,) describes, as an historical anticipation of the event, the rejection of CHRIST by the Jews, his unjust sufferings, and his ensuing glory. It opens with the prophet's complaint to "THE LORD," (which is inserted from the evangelist's citation, John xii. 38, following the Septuagint,) of the unbelief of his own countrymen, the Jews, respecting the evidences of CHRIST'S mission, from prophecy, "our report ;" and from the miracles he wrought, "the arm of THE LORD : " because "they were offended at Him," at the apparent meanness of his condition, "as the carpenter's son," Matt. xi. 6, xiii. 54—58 ; at his poverty and distress, Matt. viii. 20, Luke viii. 3, &c. which are here figuratively described under the image of a "sickly plant, growing from a parched soil," &c.—"The hiding or covering the face," was a token of extreme humiliation and affliction ; as in the case of David, that type of CHRIST in his persecutions and afflictions ; who "went up by the ascent of Mount Olivet," on his flight from his ungrateful and rebellious son, Absalom, "weeping, with his head covered, and barefoot,"

2 Sam. xv. 30; in the same spot, where JESUS “wept” also, over the impending calamities of Jerusalem! Luke xix. 41.—The complaint itself is supposed to be uttered after CHRIST’S resurrection.

The second part states the vicarious nature of Christ’s sufferings, as an atonement for the sins of the world. And the same subject is resumed in the fourth part, at the conclusion of the chapter.

The third part describes, 1. his iniquitous trial and examination before the chief priests and the council of the Jews, Pilate, and Herod; and his dignified silence when questioned by them in many words; and again, at his last examination, before he was led away to be crucified. On these occasions he “opened not his mouth,” but “held his peace, and answered nothing,” Matt. xxvi. 62, 63, Matt. xxvii. 11—14, Luke xxiii. 7—9, John xix. 9, Acts viii. 32—35.—2. The enormous wickedness of that generation who cut off, by a violent death, “the innocent” and “the just,” as he was acknowledged to be openly by his betrayer, by his judge, and by his Roman guards. Their wickedness was described by OUR LORD, his apostles, and the Baptist: “wherunto shall I liken this generation?” Matt. xi. 16; or “wherunto shall I liken the men of this generation?” Luke vii. 31,—“a wicked and adulterous (or apostate) generation,” Matt. xii. 39; “a sinful generation,” Mark viii. 38; “a faithless and perverse generation,” Matt. xvii. 17; “a crooked or untoward generation,” Acts ii. 40; “a generation of vipers,” Matt. iii. 7; and still more strongly by the Jewish historian, Josephus, avowing the justice of their doom.

“To recount, indeed, separately, [all] their iniquity would be impossible: but I may briefly say, Never did any other city suffer such [woes,] nor was there a generation more productive of mischief from the beginning of the world.” Bell. Jud. v. 10, 5. Hudson, p. 1246.

“I cannot forbear what the calamity prompts me to say: I think, that if the Romans had delayed to come upon these offenders, the city would either have been swallowed up by an earthquake, or overwhelmed by a deluge, or partaken of the thunderbolts of Sodom, for it bore a generation much more atheistical (γενεαν πολυ αθεωτεραν) than they who suffered thus. In whose phrenzy then, all the people perished together,” p. 1256.—“For some how, that time became fruitful of all manner of wickedness among the Jews; insomuch that they left no work of mischief unpractised: nor if a person wished to frame a crime in imagination, could he invent any newer. So diseased were they all, both in public and private, and so ambitiously did they strive to exceed each other in acts of impiety toward God, and of injustice toward their neighbours: the powerful on the one hand, ill-treating the populace, and the multitude on the other, eager to destroy the powerful; for the one wished to tyrannize, the other to commit violence, and to plunder the property of the wealthy," p. 1314*.

In this part, ver. 8, there are two remarkable various readings, furnished by the Septuagint Version; 1. εν τη ταπεινωσει αυτου η κρισις αυτου ηρθη, "in his humiliation his judgment was taken away;" which is supported by the citation, Acts viii. 32. Still, however, the present Masorete reading seems preferable; because the Hebrew עָצַר, ταπεινωσις, is no where else so rendered by the Sept. and because "the custody, judgment, or sentence, and leading away of CHRIST to execution," as described by the evangelists, naturally succeed "his trial and examination;" and the rendering "custody," is supported by the Syriac version. 2. ηχθη προς θανατον, "he was led to death," where, instead of the present text, למו, "to them," the Sept. evidently read למות, "to death," as afterwards, ver. 12. And that this was indeed the genuine reading of the earlier Hebrew copies, may be collected, 1. from Tertullian's translation, A facinoribus populi mei perductus est ad mortem, "Through the crimes of my people †, he was led to death." And also from Origen's account of a disputation he had with some learned Jews, who maintained that the prophet meant not one man, but a nation, or the people of the Jews, who were smitten of God, and dis-

* To these attestations of SCRIPTURE and of Josephus, we shall add some from the Rabbins themselves.

"In that generation in which THE SON OF DAVID shall come, the Synagogue shall be a brothel, Galilee shall be destroyed, and Gibeā shall be desolate." Schir. R. i. f. 17. "The wisdom of the Scribes shall rot, good and merciful men shall fail, TRUTH itself shall fail, and the face of that generation shall be like the face of dogs."—"R. Levi said, THE SON OF DAVID shall not come, save in a generation whose faces shall be impudent and deserving of destruction. R. Jannai said, When you shall see generation after generation, railing and blaspheming, then expect the feet of KING MESSIAH."—It is said of KING MESSIAH, Come hither, approach to the kingdom, and eat of the bread; (that is, the bread of the kingdom,) and dip thy morsel in the vinegar, (these are the corrections, saith Scripture, Isai. liii. 5,) Ruth, R. ii. 14. See Wetstein, N. T. on Acts viii. 33.

† "The people of the prophet," for he is the speaker throughout the chapter.

persed among the Gentiles for their conversion. But Origen urged many parts of this prophecy, to shew the absurdity of their argument; and seemed to press them hardest with this passage in the Septuagint, ἀπο τῶν ανομιῶν τοῦ λαοῦ μου ἤχθη πρὸς θάνατον, which surely would not have distressed or silenced them, if it had differed from their Hebrew verity at that time, to which they constantly appealed from all citations of the Septuagint disagreeing therewith: such they reprobated or rejected with contempt.

3. The Septuagint reading is also supported by the Arabic version, and by a Syriac MSS. Mediolanensis, c. 313, communicated to Dr. Kennicott. Dissert. General. § 69, 11, p. 30, and 124. Indeed it is highly probable, that the genuine reading was adulterated afterwards by the Jews, to invalidate the force of this signal prophecy. Instead of לָמוֹ, the present Vulgate and Syriac editions read לוֹ, “to him.” See De Rossi’s collations on the place. This variety is an indication of error.

Next follows the remarkable account of his interment, verse 9, which was “appointed” or intended by the Jewish government to have been with “the malefactors,” emphatically, his fellow-sufferers*, John xviii. 30, Luke xxiii. 32, who were usually buried infamously at the foot of the cross, whence their “skulls,” when removed by other bodies, usually “rolled” down the hill into the valley of Goatha beneath, Jer. xxxi. 39, thence called Golgotha, and freely interpreted “the place of a skull,” Matt. xxvii. 33. The verb should be understood, and pointed passively, וּנְתַן, put for וּנְתַן, in Niphal) as in 2 Sam. xviii. 9, and in one of De Rossi’s Spanish MSS. And נָתַן, Nathan, is frequently used in the sense of “appointing,” or “designing,” 1 Chron. xvi. 4, Gen. xvii. 5, &c.

With קַבְרוֹ, “his grave,” as intended with “the malefactors,” is strongly contrasted in the next line, בְּמַתּוֹ, (put for בְּמִוְתוֹ) “his tomb,” which actually was with “the rich man” emphatically, as Joseph of Arimathea is described, Matt. xxvii. 57, who buried his honoured LORD “in his own new tomb,” designed for himself, Matt. xxvii. 60, “wherein never man before was laid,” Luke xxiii. 53, “hewn into the rock,” Matt. xxvii. 60,

* The parallel passage, “and he was numbered with the transgressors,” verse 12, is cited by our Lord himself, Luke xxii. 37.

“in a garden,” on the brow of the hill adjoining the place of crucifixion, John xix. 41.

This, therefore, from its elevated situation, was critically marked by במות, Bamoth, masculine, or its plural, במותים, Bamothim, in regimen, במותי, Bamothi, which denotes “a high place,” or “lofty altar,” as of Baal, Numb. xxii. 41, Josh. xiii. 17, &c. or of the TRUE GOD, as at Gibeon, 1 Chron. xvi. 39, 40, and so במות, Bamoth, the plural feminine of במה, Bamah, is used, “high places,” 2 Chron. xxxiii. 17. The same word thus indiscriminately denoting both the singular and plural. In either case, it corresponds to מרום קבר, Marum Kiber, “a high sepulchre,” such as that of the proud Shebna, the scribe, “hewed or engraved for himself in a rock,” Isa. xxii. 16, or to מועלה קברי, Maalah Kibri, “the highest of the sepulchres of the sons of David,” in which Hezekiah was interred, 2 Chron. xxxii. 33. And at the present day, the tomb of Joseph of Arimathea, in which he was actually interred, is shewn to travellers, situate under our Lord’s, or lower down on the side of the hill. And this custom was general. Even in China, “*the tombs of persons of rank are situated apart from those of the vulgar, on the slope of hills, on terraces of a semicircular form, and supported by breast walls of stone, and doors of black marble. And oftentimes obelisks * are erected on the terraces*,” as remarked by Sir George Staunton, in his account of the embassy to China, Vol. II. p. 445.

And OUR LORD also, (alluding, it should seem, to this very passage) twice foretold, (not “his burial,” but) his “entombment,” (ενταφιασαι με—ενταφιασμον) Matt. xxvi. 12, Mark xiv. 8, to distinguish it from the ordinary burial, expressed by the verb θαψαι, Matt. viii. 21, 22. He was not only entombed with the rich, but he was also embalmed like the rich, for Joseph of Arimathea and Nicodemus “took his body, and swathed it in linen, with the aromatic spices, as is the custom with the Jews to embalm,” (ενταφιαζειν) John xix. 40.

The fourth part describes the reward † of “the grievous

* This is a custom of the remotest antiquity. Thus Jacob erected a pillar on Rachel’s tomb, Gen. xxxv. 20. Homer also notices the custom, Iliad. xvii. 434; Odys. xii. 14, &c.

† The Rabbinical commentary Siphre, on this passage is remarkable.

“R. Joses said, Go and learn the merit of THE MESSIAH, and the reward of the just, bruising" of the blessed "seed of the woman" on the cross, Gen. iii. 15, in obedience to his heavenly Father's will, by the promised prosperity of "his seed;" their justification by faith in him, (as will be explained under the reign of Ahaz) and his triumphs over his adversaries, the many, and the mighty of this world, as more fully described in the ensuing prophecies, Isa. lxii. 10—12, lxiii. 1—6, and explained in the foregoing prophecy of SHILOH.

The references to this fifty-third chapter of *Isaiah, in the

from the ancient Adam: he had only one precept given him, and that a negative one, yet he transgressed it. Observe how many deaths are decreed to him, and to his generations, and to generations of generations, until the end of all generations. But whether is multiplied, the measure of good, or the measure of vengeance? the measure of good is multiplied, but the measure of vengeance is diminished: therefore, KING MESSIAH, having been afflicted, will repay all men their desert, as saith SCRIPTURE, Isaiah liii." See Wetstein, N. T. on Rom. v. 15.

* This prophecy made so strong an impression, even to conviction, on the mind of the dissipated and sceptical Wilmot, earl of Rochester, that he declared, that "in all history, he could find no one but JESUS CHRIST, with whose character the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah could agree." See his life by Burnet. It is remarkable, that David Levi omits this prophecy in his two volumes.

That several of the learned Jewish Rabbis are by no means insensible to the evidence of this illustrious prophecy, may appear from the narrative of Solomon Duitch, a learned Rabbi, and teacher of several synagogues in Germany; Lond. edit. 1771, who became a convert to Christianity, and relates the following conversation which he had with another learned German Rabbi relative thereto, p. 33.

—"Did you not desire me to explain to you the fifty-third of Isaiah? I, having answered in the affirmative, he went into another room, and brought from thence a German Bible; out of which he read to me, with the greatest reverence and devotion, the twenty-sixth chapter of Matthew, and then addressed me thus: 'My beloved friend, you see in the fifty-third of Isaiah, the clearest prophecy of THE MESSIAH, who should be scorned and despised, and even suffer death: and for what? for his own trespasses? Oh, no! it was for "our iniquities," and for "our trespasses;" which you will clearly perceive, and even must be allowed by many of our Rabbis. But in that chapter which I have read unto you, is contained the fulfilment of that prophecy of Isaiah: JESUS OF NAZARETH IS THE TRUE MESSIAH. But, alas! what an unhappy thing is that to us! Our forefathers, who lived in his days, would not receive nor acknowledge him as the true Messiah and Saviour: and should you ask me, why they did not? I could answer you a great deal on that head: but I am sorry that our time is too short to give a full insight into the extreme blindness and prejudices of our forefathers in general in those days. Their poor and unhappy offspring, following their example, have continued in their blind ways, and have led us on, as blind leaders, to this very day. O what shall I, poor, wretched creature, now do or undertake? I see clearly the beams of the sun shining into my understanding, but cannot possibly rise out of the dark cloud. How could I leave my wife, whom I love as myself? and how could I abandon my children, who are of my own flesh and blood? O my heart, my fatherly heart cannot bear the thought of it! Besides, by what means could I get my bread? I cannot labour, having learnt no business, and to seek my support from charity, is revolting against my nature.

NEW TESTAMENT, are abundant, as containing the whole scheme and substance of CHRIST'S atonement. See particularly Acts viii. 35; Matt. viii. 17; 1 Pet. ii. 24; Matt. xxvi. 18; Ephes. v. 2; Heb. ix. 29; Matt. xx. 28; 1 Tim. ii. 16; Phil. ii. 8; Rev. v. 6, &c.

II. The kings of Israel, contemporary with Uzziah, were Jeroboam II., Zechariah and Shallum, Menahem, Pekahiah, and Pekah.

Jeroboam II. succeeded his father Joash, and reigned forty-one years, 2 Kings xiv. 23. He was the most prosperous of any of the kings of Israel, and was successful in his wars with Syria, and recovered Damascus, (which David formerly had taken and garrisoned, 2 Sam. viii. 6,) and all the border belonging to Israel, from the entrance of Hamath, or Mount Libanus, eastwards of Jordan, to "the sea of the plain," or dead sea, including the settlements of the Transjordanite tribes, which Hazael had reduced, 2 Kings x. 32, 33, and restored the ancient limits of the kingdom of Israel at the time of the separation, but he adhered to the idolatry of his name-sake Jeroboam.

The prophet Jonah foretold his successes, but his prophecy on this subject has not reached us. He was born at Gath-hepher, in Galilee, 2 Kings xiv. 23—29. His prophecy against Nineveh, which is fortunately preserved, was probably later, when his reputation was established by his earlier prophecies.

In the reign of Jeroboam II. flourished also the prophets Hosea and Amos, who predicted the captivity of Israel, and its long continuance.

HOSEA'S PROPHECIES.

Hosea predicted the speedy extinction of the house of Jehu,

Besides this, I am afraid of being turned off by the Christians, who, without doubt, would mistrust my sincerity, after they had been so often deceived by false and inconstant proselytes. What shall I do, miserable that I am!

"Having related to him all the ways in which THE LORD had led me from the beginning, he fell down on his knees, and shed a flood of tears. It is impossible for me to describe the anxiety of his soul; he prayed with a broken and contrite heart before GOD, that He might in pity look down upon him, and grant him the same grace as to me, to deny himself, and loose his heart from all temporal concerns, enabling him to rely and trust in HIM alone."

See further interesting particulars, in the Christian Observer, November, 1809, p. 739—741, from which this extract is taken. May the labours of the London Society, for promoting the conversion of the Jews at home, contribute to promote that most desirable end!

for persecuting GOD'S servants, and dissolution of the kingdom of Israel for her "whoredoms," or idolatries, and their rejection by GOD as "his people," and preference of the kingdom of Judah :

" Yet a little while, and I will avenge the blood of Jezrael *, (the seed of GOD,") upon the house of Jehu, and will abolish the kingdom of the house of Israel ;"—" for I will no more have mercy upon the house of Israel, but I will utterly take them away. But I will have mercy upon the house of Judah, and will save them by THE LORD THEIR GOD, and will not save them by bow, nor by sword, nor by battle, by horses, nor by horsemen," Hosea i. 4—7.

2. The future conversion of both houses, of Israel and of Judah, to CHRIST, appears to be foretold :

" Nevertheless, the number of the children of Israel [who shall be converted] shall be as the sand of the sea, which cannot be measured, and cannot be counted ; and it shall be, that in the place where it was said unto them, Ye are not my people, it shall be said unto them, Ye are sons of the living God.

" And the children of Judah, and the children of Israel, shall be united together, and shall appoint themselves ONE HEAD, and shall come up from the earth, and great shall be the day of Jezrael, (the seed of GOD,") 10, 11.

3. The long desolation of Israel and Judah, before their final conversion, is thus foretold :

" For the children of Israel shall continue many days without king, and without ruler, without sacrifice, and without image, without oracle, and without divination † : afterwards shall the children of Israel return, and seek THE LORD THEIR GOD, and THE BELOVED ‡ THEIR KING ; and shall fear the Lord, and his goodness, in the latter days," iii. 4.

AMOS' PROPHECIES.

Amos prophesied against the house of Jeroboam II. two years before "the great earthquake," Amos i. 1. This earthquake

* There seems to be a play upon the word Jezrael, as contrasted with Israel.

† The Jews, were to be debarred, during the desolation, from the exercise of their own religious, and also of their idolatrous rites.

‡ David, here, is not a proper name, but an appellative, signifying "the beloved," Isaiah v. 1.

seems to be predicted in the following passage, as to be accompanied by a great eclipse of the sun :

“ Shall not the land quake for this,
 And every inhabitant thereof mourn ?
 Shall it not all rise [in waves] as a river,
 And be removed and swallowed up as the river of Egypt ?
 And it shall be in that day, saith THE REGENT LORD,
 That I will cause the sun to disappear at noon,
 And I will darken the earth in day-light.”—Amos viii. 8, 9.

But, according to Usher, there happened a great eclipse of the sun, ten digits in magnitude, (and which, perhaps, in Samaria might have been total,) B.C. 791, which counted two years backwards, gives B.C. 793, the last year of Jeroboam. Such a curious coincidence of astronomical computation with prophecy, affords a strong presumption, bordering on certainty, that the chronology of the reigns of the kings of Israel is here rightly assigned.—The prophecy is as follows :

“ The high places of Isaac shall be desolate,
 And the sanctuaries of Israel shall be waste ;
 And I will rise [in judgment] against the house of Jeroboam
 With the sword.—— Amos vii. 9.

Hereupon Amaziah, the idolatrous priest of Bethel, accused Amos to Jeroboam, of conspiring the death of the king, maliciously misinterpreting the prophecy, as if he had said, “ Jeroboam shall die by the sword,” vii. 10, 11.

A long interregnum of twenty-two years followed the death of Jeroboam shortly after, occasioned probably by the nonage of his son Zechariah, the fourth of the dynasty of the house of Jehu, who was slain, after he had reigned six months, by Shallum ; and he, after he had reigned a month, was slain, in turn, by Menahem, who reigned ten years, and treated most cruelly the towns that refused to acknowledge him, 2 Kings xv. 8—18.

2. The downfall, indeed, of the kingdom of Israel was most rapid, after the death of Jeroboam, until the Assyrian captivity, seventy-four years after, and it was thus denounced to the idolatrous priest of the king’s chapel at Bethel :

“ Now, therefore, hear the word of THE LORD :
 Thou sayest, Prophecy not against Israel,
 And drop not [thy word] against the house of Isaac :
 Therefore, thus saith THE LORD :
 Thy wife shall be a harlot in the city,
 And thy sons and thy daughters shall fall by the sword ;

And thy land shall be divided by line,
 And thou shalt die in a profane land;
 And Israel shall surely go into captivity,
 Out of their own land.”

Amos vii. 16, 17.

3. In another celebrated prophecy, (the meaning of which has been much disputed, and which is cited, with some variation, in the NEW TESTAMENT,) the prophet threatens Israel with “captivity beyond Damascus,” even “beyond Babylon,” because they united the sacrifices of THE LORD with the sacrifices to their idols, while they neglected the weightier matters of the law, judgment and righteousness, even from their earliest days in the wilderness:

“ Did ye offer unto ME [alone] sacrifices and oblations
 [Pure and undivided] in the wilderness,
 For forty years, O house of Israel? ——— [Nay, verily,]
 But ye [then] carried in procession the shrine of [the sun]
 Your king, and of the dog-star, your god,
 Your images, which ye made for yourselves to worship.
 [And ye do so still :]
 Wherefore, I will transport you beyond Damascus.”—Amos v. 21, 27.
 [“ Nay even] beyond Babylon.”———Acts vii. 42, 43.

The Israelites certainly did sacrifice unto THE LORD in the wilderness; at Horeb, the mount of God, when they arrived there from Egypt, as a sign that GOD conducted them, Exod. iii. 12, xviii. 12; at the erection of the tabernacle, Levit. ix. 1—24; at the passover of the second year, Numb. ix. 1—5; and on several other occasions, as in the thirty-ninth year, on the conquest of the Moabites, Numb. xxxi. 29—41. But they did not sacrifice to THE LORD exclusively, they sacrificed to the false gods of their neighbours likewise, Deut. xxxii. 17, and to Baal-peor, signifying the generative powers of nature, supposed to reside in the sun, who was styled Moloch, “king,” by the Canaanites, Numb. xxv. 1—4; Levit. xx. 2.

There is no direct evidence, as I recollect, that the Israelites worshipped the dog-star in the wilderness, except this passage, but the indirect is very strong, drawn from the general prohibition of the worship of the sun, moon, and stars, to which they must have been prone, Deut. iv. 19. And this was peculiarly an Egyptian idolatry, where the dog-star was worshipped, as notifying, by his Heliacal rising, or emersion from the sun’s rays, the regular commencement of the periodical inundation of the Nile. And the Israelite sculptures at the cemetery of Kibroth Hataavah, or “graves of lust,” in the neighbourhood of Sinai, remarkably abound in hieroglyphics of the dog-star, represented as a human figure with a dog’s-head. See Vol. I. p. 403—407, and Niebuhr’s engravings there referred to.

That they afterwards sacrificed to the dog-star, there is express evidence in Josiah’s destruction of idolatry, 2 Kings xxiii. 5, where the Syriac Mazaloth (improperly rendered “planets,”) denotes “the dog-star ;” in Arabic Mazaroth, Job xxxviii. 32, as shewn in the foregoing analysis of the book of Job.

The Hebrew compound in this prophecy, כִּיּוֹן כּוֹכַב (Chiun Chochab) corresponds to the Greek, Ἀστρῶος κων, or Ἀστροκωνος, “the dog-star ;” whence we collect, that the Greek, κων, “dog,” is derived from the Egyptian, Chiun. The meaning of which is, perhaps, most naturally furnished by the root, κω, “to be pregnant.” The Egyptian name, therefore, intimating the fecundity produced by this star in Egypt. But instead of the Egyptian Chiun, the Alexandrian version of the prophecy substitutes Ραιφαν, or Ρεφφαν, whence Ρεμφαν is easily formed, Acts vii. 43. A title of the same import in Arabic ; for رَيْف, Raiph, or Riph, in that dialect, signifies “a fruitful and verdant plain.” See Castell’s Lexicon Heptaglotton. And “Upper Egypt is now called Reif.” Asiat. Research. Vol. I. p. 388. And “Ryf is the common name of Egypt” among the Arabs of the desert, in the neighbourhood of Sinai, as we learn from Niebuhr, Vol. I. p. 194. The import of both Chiun and Remphan are well expressed in Virgil’s account of the fertilizing power of the Nile in Egypt :

“Et viridem Ægyptum, nigrâ fecundat arenâ.”

The mighty Assyrian power, which was to be employed as the instrument of divine chastisement on this occasion, seems to have lain dormant for a considerable time, until “God stirred up the spirit of Pul, and his successors,” Tiglath-pileasar and Shalmanazar, to put the prophecy in execution, 1 Chron. v. 26. The prophecy of Jonah against Nineveh was probably not later than B.C. 800, at which time it was “an exceeding great city, of three days’ journey in circuit,” Jonah iii. 3. But Pul’s first invasion of Israel did not take place till thirty years after, when he levied a contribution of a thousand talents of silver on Menahem, which he willingly gave, and exacted from his wealthiest subjects, that “the Assyrian power might favour him, and confirm the kingdom in his hand." We may therefore date this invasion in the first year of Menahem, for it was probably excited by the distracted state of the kingdom since Jeroboam's death, of which the Assyrians were tempted to take advantage, xv. 16—22.

Pekahiah succeeded him, and reigned only two years, when he was assassinated by Pekah, the son of Remaliah, who reigned twenty years, xv. 23—26.

Pekah himself underwent the same fate from Hoshea, xv. 30, when a second interregnum ensued of ten years, after which Hoshea reigned nine years, till the capture of Samaria by the Assyrians, and subversion of the kingdom of Israel, xvii. 6.

JOTHAM.

This prince succeeded his father Azariah, or Uzziah. He was twenty-five years old when he began to reign, and reigned sixteen years. His reign was prosperous, because "he did what was right in the sight of THE LORD." He built the high gate of the Temple, and cities, castles, and towers, throughout his dominions, and subdued the Ammonites, and made them tributaries for three years. "He became mighty, because he prepared his ways before THE LORD his God," 1 Chron. xxvii. 1—9; 2 Kings xv. 32—38.

AHAZ

was the idolatrous son of a pious father. He succeeded Jotham when he was twenty years old, and reigned sixteen years. This prince exceeded all his predecessors in apostacy, forsaking THE LORD, and following all the abominations of the heathens; for he burnt incense in the valley of Hinnom, and sacrificed his son to Moloch: he introduced a new Syrian altar from Damascus, on which he offered sacrifices instead of the altar of the Lord, which he removed from its place; and he stripped the Temple of the sacred vessels, and shut up the doors of the Temple itself, and made altars in every corner of Jerusalem, 2 Kings xvi. 1—19; 2 Chron. xxviii. 1—26.

His reign accordingly was most calamitous: "For the Lord brought Judah low because of him, for he made Judah naked," or idolatrous, and transgressed sorely against THE LORD, 2 Chron. xxviii. 19.

In the very beginning of his reign, Ahaz was invaded by a formidable confederacy of Pekah, king of Israel, and Rezin, king of Syria, formed in the latter part of his father's reign, 2 Kings xv. 37, and designed to dethrone the house of David, and make the son of Tabaal king in the room of Ahaz, Isaiah vii. 5, 6.

In this war, Rezin recovered Elath, and carried away captives a multitude of the Jews to Damascus; and Pekah slew in one day 120,000 men in Judah, and carried away captives 200,000 women and children to Samaria, whence they were sent home again by the advice of the prophet Oded, and the heads of the children of Ephraim, Azariah, Jehizkiah, Berechiah, and Amasa, for fear of "adding to the sins and offences of the nation, and to the fierce wrath of the Lord against Israel;" which proves, that in the most corrupt times, still a righteous few were found, even in Israel, who feared the Lord, and dreaded his deserved judgments, 2 Chron. xxviii. 5—15; 2 Kings xvi. 6.

The confederate powers then besieged Ahaz in Jerusalem, but could not take the city; while, to aggravate the general calamity, the Edomites in the east, and the Philistines in the west, invaded the south of Judah, and took several cities of the low country, with their villages, and occupied them, 2 Kings xvi. 5; 2 Chron. xxviii. 17, 18.

In this extremity, surrounded on every side with enemies, Ahaz rejected a gracious sign of deliverance from THE LORD, offered to him and the house of David by the prophet Isaiah, under pretence that "he would not tempt THE LORD," Isa. vii. 11, 12, but in reality because he had put his trust in the king of Assyria, and called upon the rapacious *Tiglath-pileasar for assistance against Rezin and Pekah, professing himself his vassal, and sending him a subsidy of all the sacred and royal treasures. Accordingly, Tiglath-pileasar, glad of a pretext for attacking the Syrians and Israelites, "hearkened to him," and invaded them in the second year of Ahaz, B.C. 740. He took Damascus, slew Rezin, and carried the inhabitants captives to Kir, or Assyria proper, 2 Kings xvi. 7—9. And, at the same time, carried away the Transjordanite tribes of Reuben, Gad, and half Manasseh, captives to Media, where he planted them in Halah, Habor, and on the river Gozan, 1 Chron. v. 26, and also the other half of Manasseh in Galilee, 2 Kings xv. 29; but "he distressed Ahaz, and strengthened him not," 2 Chron. xxviii. 21.

* Or Tiglath pul assur, "the tyger lord of Assyria."

Pekah also was slain in a conspiracy by Hoshea, in the fourth year of Ahaz, or the twentieth year from his father Jotham's accession, as foretold by Isaiah.

III. ISAIAH'S SIGNS AND PROPHECIES RESPECTING THE CAPTIVITIES, AND FINAL RESTORATION OF THE JEWS.

1. Though the faithless Ahaz rejected the offered sign of deliverance, still the prophet proposed one, connected with the following illustrious prophecy of the permanency of the house of David:

VII. 14. "THE LORD himself shall give you a sign.

*Lo, the virgin * shall conceive and bear a son,*

And shall call his name IMMANUEL, ("GOD WITH US.")

15. Butter and honey shall he eat,

When he shall know to refuse bad [food] and choose good."

16. "But before the child shall know,

To refuse the bad, and choose the good,

The land [of Syria and Israel] which thou fearest,

[O Ahaz] shall be deprived of both her kings."

Thus signifying, that the divine child, and future son of David, after his weaning, should be fed with nourishing food like other children; but that before he should come to the time of discerning his food, (about two years old) the two kings, Rezin and Pekah, should be removed.

2. The same was signified by the name of the prophet's second son, Maher shalal hashbaz, ("Hasten the prey, quicken the spoil,") "for before the child shall know to pronounce my father, and my mother, the riches of Damascus, and the spoil of Samaria, shall be carried away by the king of Assyria," Isaiah viii. 1—4.

3. With the fate of Rezin and Pekah, "those smoking firebrands" to Judah, the prophet connects also the ensuing captivities of Israel and Judah:

* העלמה, Ha-almah. This word is applied to Rebecca, Gen. xxiv. 43; to Miriam, Exod. ii. 8; and to virgins as opposed to concubines, Cantic. vi. 8.

“ Yet within sixty-five years shall Ephraim be broken,
From being a people.—
If ye believe not, ye shall not be established.” Isa. vii. 8, 9.

And accordingly, from the date of this prophecy, B.C. 740, to B.C. 675, when Esarhaddon, or Sargon, or Sarchedon, took away the remnant of Israel, Isa. xx. 1—3, Tobit i. 21, and his generals took Jerusalem, and brought away Manasseh in fetters to Babylon, 2 Chron. xxxiii. 11, was sixty-five years.

4. And he specifies the causes of these captivities, of both “ the houses of Israel,” by the Assyrians and Babylonians.

VIII. 6. “ Forasmuch as this people [Judah] refuse
The softly flowing waters of Shiloah * ;
And [Israel] rejoice in Rezin,
And Remaliah’s son [Pekah ;]

7. THE LORD shall bring upon them [both]
The mighty and abundant waters of the river [Euphrates,]
Even the king of Assyria, and all his glory, [or power]
And he shall rise above all their channels,
And go over all their banks.” VIII. 6, 7.

5. But though the Assyrian inundation was to sweep away both houses of Israel and Judah into captivity, and that Israel should cease from being a nation, when the Samaritans were established in their room ; yet it was “ only to reach up to the neck of Judah,” not totally to overwhelm it, as being more immediately “ the land of IMMANUEL’s” birth, and therefore more under the divine protection.

VIII. 8. “ And he [the Assyrian] shall pass through Judah, Overflowing and overspreading ;

* Josephus represents the fountain of Siloam as “ a sweet and copious stream,” and records a remarkable prodigy respecting it, which happened twice at the sieges of Jerusalem, at first by the Babylonians, and afterwards by the Romans, in his excellent speech to the besieged, exhorting them to submit to Titus.

“ The springs now flow more plentifully for Titus, which were dry for you ; for ye know, that before his coming, not only Siloam, but all the springs without the city failed, so that water was bought by the pitcher. But now they so abound to your enemies, as not only to suffice for themselves, and for the cattle, but even for watering the gardens.”

“ This prodigy ye also formerly experienced at the destruction of the city by the Babylonians, when the king (Nebuchadnezzar) besieged it, who took the city, and the temple, and burnt them ; and yet the people at that time, I think, were not so impious as you. Insomuch, that I think GOD has deserted the sanctuary, and joined the Romans, with whom ye are now at war.” Bell. Jud. v. 9, 4.

These were significant tokens of the divine displeasure to the Jews, for refusing SHILOH, their great “ APOSTLE,” and his “ softly flowing waters,” or beneficent doctrines and miracles, furnishing a curious and valuable commentary both on Isaiah and John.

He shall reach even to the neck ;
 And the expansion of his wings [or squadrons]
 Shall fill the breadth of thy land, O IMMANUEL."

6. This was more plainly signified in the name of the prophet's elder son, Shear-jashub, ("a remnant shall return,") whom he took, at first, to meet Ahaz, vii. 3, as explained afterwards :

- X. 20. " And it shall come to pass in that day [of deliverance]
 The remnant of Israel, and the escaped of Jacob, Shall no longer lean on him who smote them,
 But upon THE LORD, the HOLY ONE OF ISRAEL, in truth.
 21. A remnant shall return, a remnant of Jacob,
 TO THE MIGHTY GOD.—
 22. For though the people of Israel be as the sand of the sea,
 Yet only a remnant of them shall return ;
 An overflowing consummation is decreed in righteousness,
 23. For THE LORD, THE GOD OF HOSTS, will make
 The decreed consummation in the midst of the land."

7. And the following is the magnificent description of their divine deliverer, the future IMMANUEL or CHRIST : (x. 27.)

- IX. 6. " For unto us [believers] a child is to be born * ,
 Unto us a son is to be given ;
 And the government shall be upon his shoulder,
 And his name shall be called
 WONDERFUL, COUNSELLOR, MIGHTY GOD,
 FATHER OF THE FUTURE [AGE], PRINCE OF PEACE.
 7. Of the increase of his government and peace
 There shall be no end ; upon the throne
 Of David, even upon his kingdom,
 To fix, and to establish it,
 With judgment and with justice, for ever.
 The zeal of THE LORD, [the GOD] OF HOSTS,
 Will perform this."—

8. And the NEW TESTAMENT has decided the application of these illustrious prophecies, (not to Hezekiah, as has been idly imagined, but) to CHRIST, by the archangel Gabriel, in his annunciation to the blessed virgin, and his vision to her espoused husband Joseph :

" Fear not, Mary, for thou hast found grace with God ;
 And lo, thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bear a son,
 And shalt call his name JESUS, (SAVIOUR.)—

* In numberless instances, the present tense is taken infinitively, governed of a future auxiliary verb understood ; thus in the reference to this text, combined with Mich. v. 2, in Herod's enquiry, Που ὁ Χριστος γενναται, the present γενναται is put for μελλει γεννασθαι, "is to be born," Matt. iv. 4.

He shall be GREAT, [OR WONDERFUL] and shall be called
THE SON OF THE MOST HIGH : And THE LORD THE GOD
Shall give Him the throne of his father David,
And He shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever,
And of his kingdom there shall be no end." Luke i. 31—33.

"Fear not, Joseph, thou son of David,
To take unto thee Mary thy [espoused] wife,
For that which is conceived in her is of THE HOLY GHOST ;
And she shall bear a son,
And thou shalt call his name JESUS :
For He shall save his people from their sins." Matt. i. 20, 21.

And the evangelist records this as the fulfilment of the prophecy of Isaiah respecting IMMANUEL. He therefore understood JESUS as synonymous therewith.

9. The following magnificent description of the final restoration of Israel, of the conversion of the Gentiles, of the rebuilding the last temple and city, is given by Isaiah :

- LX. 1. " Arise, shine [O Jerusalem] for thy light is coming,
And the glory of THE LORD is rising upon thee.
2. For lo, darkness shall cover the earth,
And a thick cloud the peoples ;
But THE LORD shall arise upon thee,
And his glory shall be seen upon thee.
3. And the Gentiles shall walk by thy light,
And kings by the brightness of thy rising.—
7. Thy sons shall come from afar,
And thy daughters shall be carried on the shoulder.—
All the flocks of Kedar shall be gathered unto thee,
The rams of Nebaioth shall minister unto thee,
They shall ascend with acceptance on mine altar,
And I will glorify the house of my glory.—
8. Who are these that fly as a cloud,
And as doves to their dove-cots ?—
[The dispersed of Judah, who shall be collected,
And return to their own land *.]
9. Surely the isles shall wait upon ME,
And the ships of Tarshish among the first,
To bring thy sons from afar,
(Their silver and their gold with them)
For the sake of the name of THE LORD THY GOD,
And for the sake of THE HOLY ONE OF ISRAEL :
Because He hath glorified thee.
10. And the sons of strangers shall build thy walls,
And their kings shall minister unto thee.

* This ellipsis, involved in the preceding question, and containing the answer thereto, is happily supplied by the Chaldee paraphrase.—The exiled Jews wish for the wings of a dove, to return speedily to their promised rest in their native land, Psalm lv. 6.—The imagery is simple and affecting.

- For in my wrath I smote thee,
But in my favour will I pity thee.
11. And thy gates shall be open continually,
They shall not be shut day nor night,
To bring unto thee the power of the Gentiles,
And their kings, in procession.
For the nation and kingdom which will not serve thee Shall perish; yea, those nations shall be utterly wasted."

From this luminous and remarkable prophecy, it has been conjectured, that the restoration of the western Jews to their own land will be promoted by some great maritime power, denoted by "the Isles and Tarshish," through zeal for THE LORD, who will also assist in rebuilding the temple, that it may be "a house of prayer for all nations," as foretold, Isa. lvi. 7. The destruction of the infidel nations forms a striking contrast.

10. The peace and quiet which the Jews shall then enjoy, "when the sons of violence shall no more molest them," 2 Sam. vii. 10, is finely described by Isaiah also.

- XXXIV. 17. "Thine eyes shall see THE KING [MESSIAH] in his beauty * :
They shall see the land enlarged, [or freed.]
18. Thine heart shall reflect on the terror [past.]——
Where is [now] the Register † !
Where the Receiver [of the tribute money ‡ !]
Where the Assessor of our fairest houses § ;
19. Thou shalt see no [more] the fierce people ¶ ;
A people of deep speech which thou couldst not hear,
Of stammering tongue which thou couldst not understand.
20. Behold Sion [once more the city of our solemnities ¶ ;
Thine eye shall see Jerusalem a quiet abode **.
The tent shall no [more] be removed,
Neither shall its pins be plucked up,
Nor any of its cords be broken for ever ;
Because the glorious NAME OF THE LORD †† Shall be with us."——
- XXVIII. 5. "In that day shall THE LORD OF HOSTS
Be for a crown of glory,
And for a diadem of beauty,
Upon the residue of his people."

MICAH'S FAMOUS PROPHECY.

Micah was the contemporary of Isaiah, and has furnished the following improved summary of his prophecies respecting THE MESSIAH, and the final return of the Jews.

* Psalm xlv. 2. Matt. xxiii. 39. † Luke ii. 1—5. ‡ Matt. xvii. 24.
§ Luke ii. 2. || Deut. xxviii. 49. ¶ Isaiah ii. 3.  Jer. xxiii. 6.
†† Isaiah vii. 14; ix. 6, 7; x. 20—22; xxx. 26, 27.

- V. 2. "And art thou, Bethlehem Ephratah, little to be [esteemed]
 Among the thousands of Judah?—
From thee shall issue [THE LEADER,]
Who shall rule my people, the Israel [of God]
- II. (But his issuings are from old,
 From days of eternity.)
- III. 3. Therefore he will give them up [for a season]
 Until the time that she which shall bear
I have borne: Then shall return
The residue of thy brethren [the Jews]
Along with the outcasts of Israel.
- IV. 4. And He shall stand and guide them
 In the strength of THE LORD,
 In the majesty of THE NAME OF THE LORD HIS GOD.
 And when they return, He shall be magnified
 Unto the ends of the earth,
 And HE shall be their PEACE."

This prophecy consists of four parts, 1. The human birth-place of CHRIST. 2. His eternal generation. 3. His temporary desertion of the Jews, until his miraculous birth of the virgin, after which they are to return with the true Israelites. 4. His spiritual and universal dominion.

The application of the first part of this prophecy was decided at the time of OUR SAVIOUR'S birth, by the most respectable Jewish synod that ever sate, convened by Herod, to determine from prophecy the birth-place of the MESSIAH, which they agreed to be Bethlehem, upon the authority of Micah, which they cited. Their citation, of the first part only, is given by the evangelist Matthew, in an improved translation of the original, greatly superior to any of the ancient versions.

Matt. ii. 6. "And thou Bethlehem, territory of Judah,
 Art by no means least among the captains of Judah;
 From thee shall issue THE LEADER,
 Who shall guide my people, the Israel [of God]."

1. Here the evangelist has removed the ambiguity of the question proposed by the prophet, by supplying the answer in the negative. As in Nathan's prophecy, "Shalt thou build me a house?" 2 Sam. vii. 5, the parallel passage answers in the negative, "Thou shalt not build me a house," 1 Chron. xvii. 4.

2. He has supplied a chasm in the Masorete text, of נגיד, Nagid, a usual epithet of the MESSIAH, 1 Chron. v. 2, Isaiah lv. 4, Dan. ix. 25, usually rendered ἡγούμενος, "leader," by the Sept. and retained here by the evangelist, as a necessary distinction of his character, as supreme commander, from “the captains of thousands, styled ἡγεμοσι, judiciously substituted for the thousands themselves in Micah, to mark the analogy more correctly.

3. He has also determined the pastoral nature of the MESSIAH’S “rule” by the verb ποιμανει, “shall guide as a shepherd,” afterwards intimated by Micah, רעה, και ποιμανει, as there rendered by the Sept. For He is “the shepherd of Israel,” Gen. xlix. 24, Ps. lxxx. 1, “the chief shepherd,” 1 Pet. v. 4, and “the good shepherd,” John x. 14, who appointed his apostles to “guide and pasture his sheep,” John xxi. 6.

4. The human birth of the MESSIAH is carefully distinguished by Micah from his eternal generation, in the parenthetical clause, which strongly resembles the account of the primæval birth of WISDOM, Prov. viii. 22—25.

5. The blessed virgin of Isaiah’s former prophecy, vii. 14, is evidently alluded to by Micah, and also the return of the remnant of the Jews, Isaiah x. 20, 21, and of the final peace of his kingdom, Isaiah ix. 6, 7*.

This prophecy of Micah is perhaps the most important single prophecy in the OLD TESTAMENT, and the most comprehensive, respecting the personal character of the MESSIAH, and his successive manifestations to the world. It crowns the whole chain of prophecies descriptive of the several limitations of the blessed seed of the woman, to the line of Shem, to the family of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, to the tribe of Judah, and to the royal house of David, here terminating in his birth at Bethlehem, “the city of David.” It carefully distinguishes his human nativity from his eternal generation; foretels the rejection of the Israelites and Jews for a season; their final restoration, and the universal peace destined to prevail throughout the earth in the Regeneration. It forms, therefore, the basis of the NEW TESTAMENT, which begins with his human birth at Bethlehem, the miraculous circumstances of which are recorded in the introductions of Matthew’s and Luke’s gospels; his eternal generation, as the ORACLE, or WISDOM, in the sublime introduction of John’s gospel; his prophetic character, and second coming, illustrated in the four gospels and epistles, ending with a prediction of the speedy approach of the latter in the Apocalypse, Rev. xxii. 20.

* See further remarks on the construction of this prophecy, Dissertat. X. of the volume of Dissertations before referred to.

HEZEKIAH

was twenty-five years old when he succeeded his father Ahaz, and reigned twenty-nine years in Jerusalem. He was a most pious prince, and trusted wholly in THE LORD THE GOD OF ISRAEL, so as to deserve that high eulogium, that "there was none like him among the kings of Israel after him, nor any that were before him," 2 Kings xviii. 1—5.

He began his reign by the restoration of the true religion, and the abolition of idolatry throughout his dominions. "He, in the first year of his reign, in the first month, opened the doors of the house of the Lord, (which his father Ahaz had shut) and repaired them," and sanctified the house, and set in order the service thereof, and offered sin-offerings and burnt-offerings for the people, 2 Chron. xxix. 1—36. 2. He removed the high-places, and brake the images, and cut down the groves; and when the brazen serpent which Moses had made, was converted into a holy relic, and the children of Israel idolatrously offered incense unto it until his days, he broke it in pieces, and instead of Nahash, "a serpent," called it in contempt, Nehushtan, "a brazen bauble," 2 Kings xviii. 4.

Accordingly, the LORD was with him, and he prospered whithersoever he went forth to war; and he smote the Philistines, and rebelled against the king of Assyria, or withheld the stipulated tribute which his father Ahaz had paid to Tiglathpilesar, 2 Kings xviii. 7, 8.

In the fourth year of his reign, Shalmanasar, the son and successor of Tiglathpilesar, invaded Israel, and besieged Samaria, and took it the third year after, or the sixth of Hezekiah's reign; and fulfilling the prophecies of Amos, and the other prophets, transported the chief of the people of the seven western tribes beyond Assyria, and planted them in Media, 2 Kings xvii. 5, 6, whither his father had transplanted the Transjordanite, or eastern tribes, 2 Kings xv. 29; 1 Chron. v. 29. Thus was completed the captivity of the ten revolted tribes*, in the course of twenty-one years, from B.C. 740 to B.C. 719.

* The tribe of Naphtali is said to have been carried away by Tiglathpilesar, 2 Kings xv. 29, but Tobit, who was of that tribe, ascribes his captivity to Ennemessar, or Shalmanasar, more probably, Tobit i. 1, 2.

Instead of turning his victorious arms against Hezekiah, as might have been expected, Shalmanasar employed the five remaining years of his reign in endeavouring to reduce the revolted provinces of Syria and Phœnicia, and in the blockade of Old Tyre, the siege of which was raised at his death, as we learn from the Tyrian annals, cited by Josephus, Ant. IX. 14, 2.

This respite from invasion Hezekiah employed to the best advantage. He proclaimed a solemn passover to be held at Jerusalem by all his subjects, to which he invited and exhorted the attendance of the remnant of the ten tribes that had been left behind by the Assyrians, of whom some mocked, and refused to come; but a great multitude of them came: but not having been properly sanctified, Hezekiah interceded for them with the Lord:—"THE GOOD LORD pardon every one that prepareth his heart to seek GOD, though he be not purified according to the purification of the sanctuary. And the Lord hearkened unto Hezekiah, and healed the people." So there was great joy in Jerusalem; for since the time of Solomon, there was not such a passover held in Jerusalem. And the prayers of the priests, Levites, and people, ascended to GOD'S holy dwelling-place, even unto heaven, 2 Chron. xxx. 1—27.

At length, when Sennacherib, the son and successor of Shalmanasar, invaded Judea with a mighty army, in the fourteenth year of Hezekiah's reign, Hezekiah humbly acknowledged his offence, and offered to submit to any tribute the king should impose upon him; and, accordingly, he paid the stipulated sum of three hundred talents of silver, and thirty talents of gold: to raise which, he was compelled to exhaust the royal and sacred treasuries, and to strip off the gold with which the doors and pillars of the temple were overlaid, which must have been to him a grievous necessity indeed, 2 Kings xviii. 13—16.

Sennacherib, however, after he had received it, broke faith; and while he was employed himself with the main body of his army, in reducing the fortresses of Judea, and had taken Libnah, and was besieging Lachish, those two important frontier towns toward Egypt, which he was determined to invade, because So, king of Egypt, had encouraged Hoshea to revolt, with promises of assistance, which he did not perform; and now, perhaps, the same were renewed to Hezekiah, as we may collect from Rabshakeh's advice to him, "not to trust upon the staff of that bruised reed, Egypt," (upon which, if a man lean, it will break and pierce his hand,) 2 Kings xviii. 21, he sent three of his generals, Tartan, Rabsaris, and Rab-shakeh, with a part of his forces to threaten Jerusalem with a siege, unless they surrendered, and submitted to be transported to Assyria, vaunting over the GOD OF ISRAEL, as if unable to deliver his people from their yoke, 2 Kings xviii. 17—35.

At this critical juncture, Hezekiah fell sick of the plague, and was warned from THE LORD, by the prophet Isaiah, to prepare for death. On this awful summons, Hezekiah sought THE LORD: he turned his face to the wall, not to be overheard by his attendants, and prayed unto THE LORD, and said, “I beseech thee, O LORD, remember now how I have walked before thee in truth, and with a perfect heart, and have done that which is good in thy sight. And Hezekiah wept sore.”

Most immediately efficacious was this short and fervent prayer. Before Isaiah had gone out of the king’s apartment into the middle court of the palace, the ORACLE OF THE LORD came to him, saying, “Turn again, and tell Hezekiah, the captain of my people: Thus saith THE LORD, THE GOD of David, thy father, I have heard thy prayer, I have seen thy tears; behold, I will heal thee. On the third day thou shalt go up unto the house of THE LORD, [to return thanks for thy perfect recovery] and I will add unto thy days fifteen years; and I will deliver thee and this city out of the hand of the king of Assyria, and will defend this city for mine own sake, and for my servant David’s sake.”

By the prophet’s prescription, they applied a cataplasm of figs to the plague boil, and Hezekiah recovered. Still, however, the recovery was miraculous, having been promised to be perfected on the third day.

Still more miraculous and unaccountable was the sign of Hezekiah’s recovery on the third day, given him by THE LORD, at his request, when the sun’s shadow on the dial of Ahaz instantly went back ten degrees that it had gone down. It is as impossible to be explained upon any known principles of astronomy and natural philosophy, as the stations of the sun and moon, in Joshua’s time, for twelve or thirteen hours.

The date of Hezekiah’s sickness and recovery, is fixed to the fourteenth year of his reign, which was promised to be lengthened fifteen years, 2 Kings xx. 1—11; Isaiah xxxviii. 1—22. By this lengthening of his reign to twenty-nine years, he left a successor to fill the throne of David, for Manasseh, his son, was only twelve years old at his accession, 2 Kings xxi. 1.

Shortly after, Sennacherib, we learn from Herodotus, invaded Egypt, but without success; for at the prayer of Sethos, king and priest of Vulcan, to his god, an immense number of mice entered the Assyrian camp at Pelusium, and gnawed to pieces their quivers and bows, and the handles of their shields. In the morning, the Assyrians, finding themselves without arms, fled in confusion, and lost great numbers of their men, Herodot. B. II. §. 141. This is evidently a caricature of the miraculous deliverance promised to Hezekiah for the blasphemies of the Assyrians: “Lo, I will send a blast upon him, and he shall hear a rumour, and shall return to his own land, and I will cause him to fall by the sword in his own land,” 2 Kings xix. 7.

The rumour which Sennacherib heard, was, that Tirhakah, king of Cush, or Arabian Ethiopia, was come out to fight against him, and to intercept him on his passage homewards: he then sent a boasting letter to Hezekiah, defying the GOD OF ISRAEL, and threatening the Jews with destruction. But that night the angel of THE LORD smote, in the camp of the Assyrians, a hundred and eighty-five thousand men. The instrument of vengeance was probably the blast, or hot pestilential south wind blowing from the deserts of Libya, called the Samum, or Simoom, which is so well described by *Bruce.

* The following description is given by Bruce, in his travels through the deserts of Abyssinia and Nubia.

“This hot wind is called by the Arabs Samum, or Simoom. It is generally preceded by an extreme redness in the air, and usually blows from the south-east, or from due south, a little to the east. It appeared in the form of a haze, in colour like the purple part of a rainbow, but not so compressed, or thick: it was a kind of blush upon the air. Their guide warned the company, upon its approach, to fall upon their faces, with their mouths close to the ground, and to hold their breath as long as they could, to avoid inhaling the outward air. It moved very rapidly, like a kind of blush upon the air, about twenty yards in breadth, and about twelve feet high from the ground; so that,” says Bruce, “I had scarcely time to turn about, and fall upon the earth with my head to the northward, when I felt the heat of its current plainly upon my face. We all fell upon our faces, until the Simoom passed on, with a gentle ruffling wind. When the meteor, or purple haze, had passed, it was succeeded by a light air, which still blew, so hot as to threaten suffocation, which sometimes lasted three hours, and left the company totally enervated and exhausted, labouring under asthmatic sensations, weakness of stomach, and violent head-achs, from imbibing the poisonous vapour.”

Bruce met it at Rashid, near Sennaar, March 20, 1772, and again at Chendi, Oct. 13; and in their passage through the great desert of Nubia, on his return home, Nov. 16. See his Travels, Vol. V. p. 80, 295, 322, 323, 350—353.

It is remarkable, that the blast which destroyed the Assyrians happened at night,

So Sennacherib returned to Nineveh, exasperated by his defeat, where he inflicted many cruelties upon the captive Israelites, and fifty-five days after his return he was assassinated by his two eldest sons, as he was worshipping in the house of Nisroc, his god, (signifying “king of flight,” corresponding to Zeus φυξιος, “Jove [the god] of flight,” among the Greeks.) They escaped into the land of Armenia, while his third son, Esarhaddon, reigned in his stead, 2 Kings xix. 9—37, Tobit i. 18—21.

At this favourable juncture, when the Assyrians were weakened by so great a blow, the Babylonians revolted, and also the Medes. And Merodach Baladan, king of Babylon, sent letters and a present to Hezekiah, to congratulate him on his recovery. Hezekiah, flattered with this embassy, in the pride of his heart, shewed the Babylonian ambassadors all his treasures, which he had probably recovered from the Assyrians, and increased with their spoils: for which he was reprimanded by Isaiah, and warned in the name of THE LORD, that all his treasures, and all his posterity, should be carried away captives to Babylon; thus unfolding his former indistinct prophecy to Ahaz, Isaiah vii. 9, which began to be fulfilled in the captivity of his son Manasseh, and was completed in that of Zedekiah, the last of his race. Hezekiah received the message with due submission to the will of THE LORD, thankful that the evil was not to be inflicted in his own days, 2 Kings xx. 12—20.

MANASSEH.

The youth of this prince, who was only twelve years old when he unhappily lost his father, and began to reign, was soon corrupted by evil counsellors, for he revived all the abominations that Hezekiah had destroyed: he built altars for all the host of heaven in the courts of the temple; he erected an idol in the house of God; and he sacrificed his children to Moloch in the valley of Hinnom; he used enchantments and witchcraft, and made divination by Ob; and he made Judah and Jerusalem to do worse than the heathen whom THE LORD had destroyed whereas the Simoon usually blows in the day-time, and mostly about noon, being raised by the intense heat of the sun.

before the children of Israel, 2 Kings xxi. 1—9, 2 Chron. xxxiii. 1—9.

For all these national enormities, the LORD threatened Manasseh, that he would bring such evil upon Jerusalem and Judah, that both the ears of the hearer should tingle, 2 Kings xxi. 10—15. And accordingly, in the twenty-second year of his reign, B. C. 675, (as the Jews in Seder Olam Rabba, and the Talmudists, date the year of his captivity and repentance, see Ganz, p. 45,) “the captains of the host of the king of Assyria took Manasseh alive, and bound him with fetters, and carried him to Babylon,” 2 Chron. xxxiii. 11.

This king of Assyria was Esarhaddon, or Asaradine, who, six years before, B. C. 680, had taken Babylon, and subdued the Babylonians, weakened by intestine divisions, and an interregnum, as we learn from Ptolomy's Canon. He was a prosperous prince, and afterwards transplanted a colony of Babylonians, Cuthites, and Syrians, into the cities of Samaria, in the room of the captive tribes, about B. C. 675, as observed before, p. 420.

The captivity of Manasseh probably lasted during the remainder of the reign of Esarhaddon, about twelve years, during which he humbled himself greatly before the God of his fathers, who heard his supplication, and brought him again to Jerusalem into his kingdom; when he knew in his affliction, that THE LORD HE WAS THE GOD, and none else. The remainder of his reign he spent in reforming the national religion, and abolishing the idols he had set up; and he so far succeeded, that though the people still sacrificed in the high places, it was unto the LORD THEIR GOD only, 2 Chron. xxxiii. 12—17.

AMON.

This prince, who came to the throne when he was twenty-two years old, and who was born therefore after his father's return from captivity, forsook THE LORD, and revived the idolatries that Manasseh had suppressed. He was slain in a conspiracy by his own servants, after a short reign of two years, 2 Chron. xxxiii. 21—24.

HOLOFERNES'S INVASION OF JUDEA.

This last Assyrian invasion of Judea is noticed only in the apocryphal book of Judith, but it is perfectly consonant with the whole range of sacred and profane history, and supplies some important links in both, which are not to be found elsewhere.

The object of this invasion was to punish all the western states who had refused to send auxiliaries to Nebuchadonosor, king of Assyria, the grandson of Esarhaddon, in his war with Arphaxad, or Phraortes, king of Media, whom he slew in a pitched battle, and took Ecbatana, the capital city, B. C. 641, Judith i. 1—16. See the analysis of Assyrian and Median chronology.

The next year, B. C. 640, Holofernes was sent on this commission with a mighty army, who reduced all the maritime states bordering on the Mediterranean, and also the states eastwards of Jordan, and pitched in the borders of Judea, near Bethulia, after the assassination of Amon, when the nation was governed by *Joachim, the high-priest, and the senate, or council of the elders at Jerusalem, iv. 8, xi. 14, xv. 8.

The description of the state of Judea, on the news of his approach, exactly corresponds to this period, and to no other in the Jewish history, earlier or later.

“ Now the children of Israel, that dwelt in Judea, heard all that Holofernes, the chief captain of Nebuchadonosor, king of the Assyrians, had done to the [adjacent] nations, and after what manner he had spoiled all their temples, and brought them to nought. Therefore they were exceedingly afraid of him, and were troubled for Jerusalem, and for the temple of the LORD THEIR GOD.”

“ For they were newly returned from the captivity [of Manasseh,] and all the people of Judea were lately gathered together, and the vessels, and the altar, and the house were sanctified, after the profanation [of them by the Assyrians at that time.] —And every man and woman, and the little children, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem, fell before the temple, and cast ashes

* He is called Eliachim, a word of the same import in the Syriac version, as being derived from the names of God, IAH and ÆL. See 2 Chron. xxxvi. 4. Josephus calls him Eliakiah, Ant. x. 4, who is called Hilkiah, 2 Kings xxii. 8.

upon their heads, and spread out their sackcloth before the face of the Lord, (also they put sackcloth about the altar) and they cried to the God of Israel, all with one consent, that He would not give their children for a prey, and their wives for a spoil, and the cities of their inheritance to destruction, and the sanctuary to profanation, and for reproach, and for the Gentiles to rejoice at," Judith iv. 1—15.

And Judith herself represents the state of national religion at that time, as exactly corresponding to Manasseh's reformation :

"For there arose none in our age, neither is there any now in these days, neither tribe, nor family, nor people, nor city among us, which worship gods made with hands, as hath been aforetime." Judith viii. 18. While the administration of the government by the high-priest and council at Jerusalem, proves that there was no king in being at the time, and therefore fixes the precise time of this invasion after the assassination of Amon, and before the appointment of Josiah, which has been incorrectly placed in the reign of Manasses by Usher, Petavius, Huetius, and Prideaux ; in the reign of Josiah, after the reformation in the twelfth year of his reign, by Jackson ; and so low as the reign of Darius Hystaspes, by Whiston ; long after the subversion of the Assyrian monarchy.

The stratagem of the Jewish heroine to work the destruction of the Assyrian general, by the fascination of her charms, and the artful tale she told, proved effectual. It struck a panic terror through all the Assyrian host, who fled in disorder, and were chased by the Israelites beyond Damascus, and few of that great multitude ever reached Nineveh, while their rich camp near Bethulia was spoiled by the inhabitants of the country, Judith chap. ix.—xv.

Thus was the death blow given to the mighty Assyrian empire, by the hand of a Jewess of the obscure tribe of Simeon ! They never recovered its disastrous consequences. The western nations all shook off the Assyrian yoke ; the eastern, the Medes, rallied after their recent defeat, and recovered Ecbatana, and the cities that had been taken by Nebuchadonosor ; they even carried the war into Assyria, and in conjunction with the Babylonians, who again revolted, besieged and took Nineveh, and put an end to the Assyrian empire, B.C. 606, (about thirty-four years after the defeat of Holofernes,) as we learn from the joint testimony of Sacred and profane history. Tobit xiv. 15, Herodot. B. I. The book of Judith, therefore, is a valuable appendage to both*.

JUDITH'S THANKSGIVING.

After this signal deliverance, Judith, as "a mother in Israel," composed a hymn, or song of praise, which may vie with those of Miriam and Deborah, for sublimity and chasteness of imagery :

- XVI. 2. "Begin unto MY GOD with timbrels,
Sing unto MY LORD with cymbals;
Tune unto Him a new psalm,
Exalt Him, and call upon his name.
3. For the God that breaketh battles is THE LORD :
Among the camps, in the midst of the people,
He delivered me out of the hand of my persecutors.
- II. 4. The Assyrian came from the mountains of the north,
He came, with myriads of his army,
Whose multitude stopped the torrents,
And their horse covered the hills.
5. He said that he would burn my borders,
And kill my young men with the sword,
And dash my sucklings against the ground,
And give my infants for a spoil,
And my virgins for a prey ;
6. But THE LORD, THE ALMIGHTY, disappointed them
By the hand of a woman !
- III. 7. For their mighty one fell not by the young men,
Neither did the sons of the Titans smite him,
Nor huge giants encounter him ;
But Judith, the daughter of Merari,
Relaxed him by the beauty of her countenance.
8. For she put off the garment of her widowhood,

* There are a few mistakes in the Book of Judith, which have been unwarrantably supposed to impeach the authenticity of the whole.

1. It is said in Achior's speech, v. 18, that "the Jews were led captives into a land that was not theirs, and the temple of their God was cast to the ground." This evidently relates to the destruction of the temple by Nebuchadnezzar, after the destruction of Nineveh ; but both were standing in the time of Judith. Accordingly, Jerom has rejected this verse as an interpolation, in his Latin Translation.

2. Judith is said to have lived a hundred and five years ; "and there was none that made the children of Israel any more afraid in the days of Judith, nor a long time after her death," xvi. 23—25. Her longevity is inconsistent with the history : we can scarcely suppose her to have been more than thirty years of age, when she fascinated Holofernes with her charms. If then she survived seventy-five years, she must have seen the destruction of the city and temple of Jerusalem, and the captivity of the whole Jewish people by Nebuchadnezzar, which was only fifty-four years after, B.C. 586.

- To raise those that were depressed in Israel;
 She anointed her face with ointment,
 And bound her locks in a fillet,
 And took a linen robe, to deceive him.
9. Her sandals ravished his eyes,
 And her beauty captivated his soul :—
The scymetar separated his neck !—
- IV. 10. The Persians shuddered at her boldness,
 And the Medes were dismayed at her hardness ;—
11. They who wanted to humble me cried aloud,
 And they who wished to weaken me
 Were terrified and astonished ;
 They lift up their voice, and were discomfited.
12. The sons of the damsels [of Israel] pierced them
 With their darts ; they wounded them,
 As the fugitives ; at the array Of MY LORD, they perished !
- V. 13. I will sing unto THE LORD a new song :
 O LORD, great art Thou, and GLORIOUS,
 WONDERFUL in strength, INVINCIBLE !
14. Let all thy Creation serve Thee :
*For Thou spakest and they were made,
 Thou sentest forth thy Spirit, and they were formed ;
 And there is none that can resist thy voice !*
15. For the mountains, with the waters, shall be shaken
 From their foundations ; the rocks also, as wax,
 Shall melt at thy presence.
 Still, Thou art propitious to them that fear Thee.
16. For any sacrifice is but little for a sweet savour,
 And all the fat too little for a burnt offering Unto Thee : But he that feareth THE LORD
 Is great at all times.
- VI. 17. Wo to the Gentiles that rise up against my race ;
 THE LORD, THE ALMIGHTY shall judge them
 In the day of judgment ; which shall consign
 Their flesh to fire and worms, and they shall weep
 In torment for evermore."

JOSIAH.

After the punishment of his father's murderers, "the people of the land made Josiah king in his stead," when he was only eight years old, and under the guardianship of the high-priest, who seems to have faithfully discharged his important trust, by the excellent education he gave the young king.

For in the eighth year of his reign, he began to seek after the GOD of David his father, while he was yet young. And in the twelfth year, he began to purge Judah and Jerusalem, from the high places, groves, idolatrous images and altars, which had been erected in his father's short reign; and he proceeded in this reform, conducted under his own presence, through all the cities of Manasseh, and Ephraim, and Simeon, even unto Naphtali; until he had destroyed all the traces of idolatry throughout all the land of Israel. Of which now he seems to have quietly recovered possession, after the defeat of Holofernes, and depression of the Assyrian power; for otherwise, surely, he durst not have attempted such a reformation therein. On this occasion he executed the sentence pronounced against the altar of Bethel, in the days of Jeroboam the first, but spared the sepulchre of the man of GOD, who had foretold Josiah by name, 2 Chron. xxxiv. 3—7; 2 Kings xxiii. 4—20.

When this abolition of idolatry was effected, in the eighteenth year of his reign, he repaired the breaches in the House of THE LORD. At that time Hilkiah, the high-priest, found the original books of the law, in the hand-writing of Moses, which had been deposited beside the ark of the covenant, in the sanctuary, Deut. xxxi. 24—26, and by his direction, Shaphan, the scribe, read from this venerable copy the prophecies of Moses against the kingdom of Judah, foretelling the destruction of the Temple, and the desolation of the land. On hearing these, the king rent his clothes, and sent to enquire of Huldah the prophetess, residing at the sacred college in Jerusalem, who confirmed the denunciations against the people for their idolatries, but that Josiah himself should be taken away in kindness, and “die in peace,” “before his eyes should see the evil to be brought upon Jerusalem,” 2 Kings xxii. 3—20; 2 Chron. xxxiv. 8—33.

In the same year the king commanded all the people to keep the passover, according to the law; which was observed with the utmost solemnity by the priests and Levites, and by all Judah, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and by all the residue that was to be found in Israel, whom he made to serve the Lord their God during his days. There was no such passover kept in Israel from the days of the Judges, and of Samuel the prophet; nor during all the days of the kings of Israel and Judah. And Josiah received the heightened eulogium of his great grandfather Hezekiah; that “like unto him there was no king before him that turned to THE LORD with all his heart, and with all his soul, and with all his might, according to all the law of Moses; neither after him arose any like him," 2 Kings xxiii. 21—25; 2 Chron. xxxv. 1—19.

Josiah indeed, seems to have surpassed Hezekiah, Jehoshaphat, and all his predecessors, in his zeal for THE LORD; in restoring the true religion, and suppressing idolatry; which must have been considerably increased, by knowing that he was pre-ordained for that purpose, many centuries before his birth. If any one could, he would have redeemed his devoted country:

————— Si Pergama dextrâ
Defendi possent, etiam hæc defensa fuissent!

But the taint of the idolatry introduced by Manasses, was too deeply imbibed by the nation, to be cured by Josiah. It broke out immediately afresh upon his death, which he indiscreetly drew down upon himself. 2 Kings xxiii. 26—28.

Pharaoh Necho, king of Egypt, taking advantage of the embarrassment of the king of Assyria, involved in a war with the Medes and Babylonians, who besieged Nineveh, B.C. 608, and to make reprisals, perhaps, for Sennacherib's invasion, advanced through Judea, in order to take Carchemish, an important pass on the Euphrates. But Josiah opposed his passage, either indisposed to the Egyptians, who had proved "a broken reed" to the Jews in their wars with the Assyrians; or thinking it safer to attach himself to the latter, who if they recovered, might inflict a severer vengeance on his delinquency, and deprive him of his Samaritan dominions; and accordingly, he was wounded in battle at Megiddo, and died at Jerusalem, lamented by all Judah and Jerusalem, and by the prophet Jeremiah in his Lamentations, 2 Chron. xxxv. 20—25. Josiah reigned thirty-one years, and left three sons*, Jehoiakim, Jehoahaz, or Shallum, and Zedekiah, 2 Kings xxiii. 30, Jerem. xxii. 11.

JEHOAHAZ, or SHALLUM,

though the second of Josiah's sons, was elected king by the people on his father's death, when he was twenty-three years old. He reigned only three months, during which he relapsed into the idolatries of his forefathers, Amon and Manasses.

* Four sons of Josiah are mentioned, 1 Chron. iii. 15; but the eldest, Johanan, seems to have died before his father, for there is no notice taken of him afterwards.

When Pharaoh Necho returned from his expedition to Carchemish, he took Jerusalem, called by Herodotus, Cadytis, “the holy city,” (see Vol. I. of this work, p. 425,) laid thereon a tribute of a hundred talents of silver, and one talent of gold; deposed Jehoahaz, and carried him away captive to Egypt, where he died; and appointed his eldest brother king in his room, whose name, Eliakim, he changed into Jehoiakim, in token of subjection, 2 Kings xxiii. 31—34, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 1—4.

The prophet Jeremiah foretold the death of Jehoahaz, or Shallum, in his captivity :

“ Weep ye not for the dead, neither lament him [Josiah :]
But weep sore for him that goeth away ;
For he shall return no more, nor see his native country.”

For thus saith the Lord touching Shallum the son of Josiah, king of Judah, who went forth from this place ;

“ He shall not return hither any more ;
But shall die in the place where they have led him
Captive ; and shall see this land no more,” Jer. xxii. 10—12.

And the prophet Ezekiel thus describes his ferocious disposition, in the figurative style of Jacob's prophecy :

“ What is thy mother [Judah ?]—A lioness :
She lay down among lions,
She nourished her whelps among young lions,
And she brought up one of her whelps :
He became a young lion, and learned to catch the prey ;
He devoured men.
The nations also heard of him,
He was taken in their pit,
And they brought him in chains to the land of Egypt.”

Ezek. xix. 1—4.

JEHOIAKIM

the eldest son of Josiah was twenty-five years old when he began to reign, and reigned eleven years. He trode in the steps of his idolatrous predecessors, 2 Kings xxiii. 34—37.

In the first year of his reign, and of the siege of Nineveh, by the confederate powers of Babylon and Media; Nebuchadnezzar, the son of Nabopolassar, king of Babylon, was sent by his father, with a part of his army, to chastise the Egyptians, Syrians, and Phœnicians, who had revolted, and reduce them to obedience ; in which he succeeded: according to Berosus, cited by Josephus, Ant. x. 11, 1.

On this occasion Jehoiakim became his vassal for three years. During which period the city of Nineveh was taken by the confederates, in the second year of Jehoiakim, B.C. 606; and Nabopolassar dying, Nebuchadnezzar succeeded him, B.C. 604, according to Ptolomy's Canon. And the first year of Nebuchadnezzar's reign, in which Jehoiakim rebelled, is said to correspond to the third of Jehoiakim, Dan. i. 1, but to the fourth of Jehoiakim, Jer. xxv. 1, 2 Kings xxiv. 1, supported by Josephus, Ant. x. 6, 1. The variation may easily be reconciled, by supposing that Jehoiakim was appointed king by Pharaoh Necho, on his return from Carchemish, about the month of July, whereas the thoth, or accession of Nebuchadnezzar commenced Jan. 21, B.C. 604*. So that "the first year of Nebuchadnezzar, was partly the third, and partly the fourth of Jehoiakim." According to the ingenious solution of David Ganz, p. 47, adopted by Jackson, Vol. I. p. 188. Jehoiakim was probably encouraged to rebel by Pharaoh Necho, who undertook a second expedition against Carchemish, which had been recovered by Nebuchadnezzar, and was defeated by him there; as we learn from Jeremiah xlvi. 2. On which occasion, Nebuchadnezzar pursuing his victory, stripped the king of Egypt of all his northern possessions, from the river Euphrates to the Nile; so that "he came no more out of his own land" to invade the Babylonians; and left Jehoiakim in the lurch, 2 Kings xxiv. 7.

Nebuchadnezzar then besieged and took Jerusalem, and carried away part of the sacred vessels, which he lodged in the temple of Belus, at Babylon, and also "certain of the king's seed," or royal family, and "of the princes" or nobles, among whom was the prophet Daniel, and his companions: probably as hostages for the fidelity of the king and his people, Dan. i. 1—3, 2 Kings xxiv. 2.

BABYLONISH CAPTIVITY.

We may therefore, with Daniel, the highest authority, date the commencement of the Babylonish captivity, in the third year of Jehoiakim, B.C. 605, which is confirmed by Berosus, who represents this expedition of Nebuchadnezzar, as having taken place before his father Nabopolassar's death; having heard of which, Nebuchadnezzar left his Syrian, Phœnician, Egyptian, and Jewish captives, with his heavy armed troops and baggage, to the care of his "friends," or officers, to be conducted to Babylon; and went thither himself with a small party, across the desert, to take possession of the kingdom; when he appointed the fittest stations in Babylonia to be colonized by the captives. Joseph. Ant. x. 11, 1. To which destinations they did not arrive till the fourth of Jehoiakim.

* See Vol. I. p. 157. Tab. XVII. Nabonassarean years adjusted to Julian, and the explanation of the principles upon which Ptolomy's Canon was constructed, p. 285.

The duration of this captivity for seventy years, to the Jews and all the surrounding nations, was foretold by the prophet Jeremiah, xxv. 11, xxix. 10, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 21—23. It expired B.C. 536, the year that Cyrus took *Babylon, and issued a decree for the return of such of the Jews as chose, throughout his dominions, to their own land, Ezra i. 1—3, which was effected "in the seventh month of the first year of Cyrus king of Babylon," Ezra iii. 1, v. 13; and this corresponds with the account of Josephus, "in the first year of Cyrus, which was the seventieth (το εβδομηκοστόν,) from the day of the removal of our people from their native land to Babylon," &c. Ant. XI. 1, 1. for from B.C. 605, to B.C. 536, was 69 years complete, or 70 years current.—This, it is hoped, will be found a satisfactory adjustment of the chronology of this most intricate and disputed period of the captivity; in which all the varying reports of sacred and profane history are reconciled, and brought to harmonize with each other.

Jehoiakim was not reformed by adversity. The whole of his reign was cruel, tyrannical, and oppressive; "his eyes and his heart were intent on covetousness, oppression, violence, and shedding of innocent blood;" as of the prophet Urijah, "whom he slew with the sword, and cast his dead body into the graves of the common people; because he prophesied of the impending calamities of Judah and Jerusalem," Jer. xxii. 13—16, xxvi. 20—23; wherefore his doom was thus denounced by the prophet Jeremiah, xx. 18, 19.

* Ptolomy's canon dates the first year of Cyrus, B.C. 538, two years earlier; reckoning from the decisive defeat of Nabonadius, and commencement of the siege, which lasted two years, as proved, Vol. I. p. 168, 169.

“ Therefore, thus saith THE LORD
 Concerning Jehoiakim the son of Josiah, king of Judah,
 They shall not lament for him, [saying]
 Ah my brother ! or Ah, sister !
 They shall not lament for him, [saying]
 Ah Lord, or Ah, his glory.
He shall be buried with the burial of an ass,
Dragged, and cast out beyond the gates of Jerusalem.”

Jeremiah himself was imprisoned, for his warning prophecies, in the fourth year of Jehoiakim ; the following year, the fifth, Jeremiah wrote a roll, and sent it by Baruch the scribe, to the princes and people of the Jews, denouncing destruction to them by the king of Babylon, unless they repented. This roll was communicated to Jehoiakim, king of Judah ; and a few leaves of it were read before him, as he sat in his banqueting house, with a fire burning on the hearth before him, in the ninth month (Chisleu) ; when the king, in a rage, burnt the roll, and ordered Jeremiah and Baruch to be taken, [and put to death,] but THE LORD hid [or protected] them. Whereupon his doom was more explicitly denounced.

“ Therefore, thus saith the Lord,”
 Concerning Jehoiakim king of Judah :
He shall have none to sit upon the throne of David :
And his dead body shall be cast out,
In the day to the heat, and in the night to the frost. Jer. xxxvi. 1—30.

At length, in the eleventh year of his reign, “ THE LORD sent against him predatory bands of the Chaldeans, Syrians, Moabites, and Ammonites, to avenge the innocent blood which he and his people had shed, following the example of Manasseh,” 2 Kings xxiv. 2—4 ; and we learn from Ezekiel, in his figurative description of Jehoiakim, as another rapacious “ lion’s whelp,” succeeding Shallum ; that “ the nations from the provinces, set upon him on every side, and spread their net over him ; he was taken in their pit. And they secured him in chains, and brought him to the king of Babylon,” Ezek. xix. 5—9, “ Nebuchadnezzar,” who “ bound him also in fetters, [intending] to carry him to Babylon,” 2 Chron. xxxvi. 6 ; but he died, and we may conclude, was buried with the burial of an ass—the just reward of “ his abominations,” 2 Chron. xxxvi. 8.

JEHOIACHIN, JECONIAH, OR CONIAH,

the son of Jehoiakim, was eighteen years old when he began to reign; and he did what was evil in the sight of THE LORD; wherefore, "he did not sit," or remain, "upon the throne of David," as foretold; for he reigned only three months and ten days, when Nebuchadnezzar sent his servants to besiege Jerusalem; and he surrendered himself into their hands, and was brought to Babylon, where he remained in captivity all his days, 2 Kings xxiv. 8—12, as foretold by Jeremiah, xxii. 24—27, who also foretold the failure of his succession, Jer. xxii. 29, 30.

*O Earth, Earth, Earth, Hear the Word of THE LORD ;
Thus saith the Lord, Write this man childless,
A man who shall not prosper in his days ;
For none of his seed shall prosper,
Sitting upon the throne of David,
And reigning any more over Judah.*

Accordingly, when Nebuchadnezzar deposed him, he appointed his uncle Zedekiah king in his stead; and none of Jehoiachin's family reigned any more over Judah. For though Sheshbazzar, prince of Judah, his descendant, was appointed tirshatha, or governor of Judea, under the name of Zorobabel, at the return from the captivity, in the first of Cyrus, Ezra i. 8, ii. 2, v. 14, Haggai i. 1, 1 Chron. iii. 17, 18, Matt. i. 12; yet he was merely a provincial governor under the Persians, and not a sovereign. And the Asamonean or Maccabean dynasty, who reigned in Judea, until Antigonus, the last of them, was slain at Herod's instigation, were of the sacerdotal family of Aaron. Herod himself was an Idumæan.

Along with this prophecy however, is connected that other noble prophecy, foretelling the future reign of CHRIST, the son of David.

JEREMIAH'S PROPHECY OF CHRIST.

- XXIII. 5. "Behold, the days are coming, saith THE LORD, That I will raise up unto David, A RIGHTEOUS BRANCH;
And A KING shall reign and prosper,
And shall execute judgment and justice in the earth. . .
6. In his days Judah shall be saved,
And Israel shall dwell safely:
And this is his name, which they shall invoke,
THE LORD OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS."

The ancient rabbinical book of Ikkarim, well expresses the reason of the appellation: "THE SCRIPTURE calls the name of the MESSIAH, IAHOH, OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS, to intimate that He will be A MEDIATORIAL GOD, by whose hand we shall obtain justification from THE NAME: wherefore, it calls Him by the name of THE NAME," (i. e. the ineffable name IAHOH, here put for GOD HIMSELF.) See Buxtorf's Lexicon, voce יהוה.

Hence, probably, Paul, the worthiest disciple of the famous doctor Gamaliel, declares, that "JESUS CHRIST was born unto us, WISDOM FROM GOD, and RIGHTEOUSNESS, and SANCTIFICATION, and REDEMPTION," 1 Cor. i. 30. And that "GOD transcendently exalted him, and bestowed on him THE NAME ABOVE EVERY NAME: that at the name of JESUS, every knee should bow, of celestial, terrestrial, and infernal beings; and every tongue should profess, that JESUS CHRIST is LORD: to the glory of GOD THE FATHER," Phil. ii. 9—11.

Along with Jehoiachin were carried into captivity "the king's mother, wives, and officers; all the princes, and all the mighty of the land, and all the craftsmen and smiths;" or all the principal inhabitants to the number of seventeen thousand, who might be dangerous if left behind, by creating disturbances; and who could be useful in their new settlements, by bringing with them their superior knowledge and skill in arts and manufactures. "None remained but the poorest sort of the people of the land," the labourers, and others of the lowest class, 2 Kings xxiv. 14—16.

On this occasion the prophet Ezekiel was also carried into captivity, and planted, with others, on the river Chebar, or Chaboras, which runs into the Euphrates near Carchemish, Ezek. i. 1. There he was favoured with some remarkable visions, analogous to those of Isaiah, Ezek. i. 26, iii. 23—27, viii. 4, &c. xiii. 2, and uttered prophecies in the reign of Zedekiah, foretelling his fate; and also the future restoration of the Jews. His prophecies are usually dated from Jehoiachin's captivity, B.C. 597.

ZEDEKIAH.

His name originally was Mattaniah, which Nebuchadnezzar changed into Zedekiah, when he appointed him king in his nephew's room, and exacted from him a solemn oath of allegiance and fidelity, Ezek. xvii. 13, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 13. He was twenty-one years old when he began to reign, and he reigned eleven years, and followed his brother Jehoiakim's evil example, 2 Kings xxiv. 17—19. In the fourth year of his reign the kings of Edom, Moab, Ammon, Tyre, and Sidon, sent ambassadors to Zedekiah, urging him to join them in a confederacy to break the Babylonian yoke. But he was wise enough at this time to reject their solicitations, and to hearken to the prophet Jeremiah in preference to the false prophet Hananiah, who boldly predicted, that within two years Jeconiah should return from captivity, and the Babylonian yoke be broken. But he died the same year himself, for teaching rebellion against THE LORD, as Jeremiah foretold, chap. xxvii. and xxviii.

But in the ninth year the national sins accumulated to such a degree, (as may be seen in Ezekiel's vision, in the sixth year of Jehoiachin's captivity, chap. viii.) that both the king, his servants, and people, were ripe for divine vengeance. They accordingly rejected the admonitions of Jeremiah, and looking for assistance from Pharaoh Hophra, king of Egypt, they rebelled against Nebuchadnezzar, who thereupon, with a great army, invaded Judea, took most of the cities, and in the tenth month, and tenth day of the month, besieged Jerusalem, 2 Kings xxiv. 20; xxv. 1; Jer. xxxix. 1; Ezek. xxiv. 1.

Early in the next, or tenth year of Zedekiah, the Egyptians made a shew of coming to their relief with an army. When the Chaldeans heard of their approach, they broke up the siege of Jerusalem, and advanced to give them battle, but the Egyptians being intimidated, returned home without risking an engagement, and left the Jews to their fate; as Jeremiah forewarned the messengers of Zedekiah, whom he sent to enquire of the Lord:—"Thus saith THE LORD, THE GOD OF ISRAEL, Thus shall ye say to the king of Judah, who sent you unto me; Behold Pharaoh's army, which is come forth to help you, shall return to Egypt into their own land, and the Chaldeans shall come again and fight against this city, and take it, and burn it with fire."

"Thus saith THE LORD; Deceive not yourselves, saying, The Chaldeans shall surely depart from us: for they shall not depart. For though ye had smitten the whole army of the Chaldeans that fight against you, and there remained only wounded men among them, yet should they rise up, every man in his tent, and burn this city with fire," Jer. xxxvii. 2—10. Compare Ezekiel xxxi. 1—18.

At the departure of the Chaldean army, Jeremiah attempted to quit the devoted city, and to retire to his inheritance in the land of Benjamin; but he was apprehended at the gate of Benjamin, and charged with desertion to the Chaldeans, and thrown into a dungeon, where he remained many days; the princes urging the king to put him to death, because he dispirited the people by his prophecies, exhorting them to submit to the Chaldeans to save their lives, and threatening them with the sword, the famine, and the pestilence, if they maintained the siege. But Zedekiah at this time rescued him, and drew him out of the dungeon; when he again exhorted the king to submit and surrender himself to the king of Babylon's princes; but his evil genius prevented him from following this salutary counsel, Jer. xxxvii. 11—27.

The retreat of the Chaldean army proved a snare to the Jews. It tempted them to break through a salutary reform which they had made, on the first impression of terror produced by the Chaldean invasion. In compliance with the divine law, Zedekiah and the princes had proclaimed liberty to their Hebrew bond servants, as in the sabbatical year, and actually set them free. But when the Chaldeans were gone, and the danger, as they thought, over, and not likely to return, the faithless and mercenary government and masters broke the covenant, and compelled those whom they had discharged to return to their former servitude. For which God, in his anger, declared by the prophet Jeremiah:

"Thus saith THE LORD: Ye have not hearkened unto me, in proclaiming liberty every one to his brother, and every one to his neighbour: Behold, I proclaim liberty in regard to you, saith THE LORD, unto the sword, and to the pestilence, and to the famine; and I will make you to be removed into all the kingdoms of the earth."——

"Behold I will command, saith the LORD, and will cause [the king of Babylon's army, which are gone up from you,] to return to this city; and they shall fight against it, and take it, and burn it with fire; and I will make the cities of Judah a desolation without an inhabitant," Jer. xxxiv. 7—22.

On the return of the Chaldean army to the siege, shortly after, in the tenth year, they pursued it vigorously, until the eleventh year of Zedekiah, and in the fourth month, and ninth day of the month, after a siege of eighteen months from the beginning, they stormed the city about midnight, and put the inhabitants to the sword, young and old, many of them in the temple courts, 2 Kings xxv. 2—4; 2 Chron. xxxvi. 17—19; Jer. xxxix. 1, 2; and the army of the Chaldeans pursued Zedekiah, his sons, and officers, and the remnant of his army, and overtook them in the plains of Jericho, and brought them prisoners to the king of Babylon, at Riblah, in Cœle Syria, where Nebuchadnezzar upbraided him for his ingratitude and breach of faith; then caused his sons to be slain before his eyes, and his eyes to be put out, and commanded his officers to carry him in fetters of brass to Babylon, where he died, 2 Kings xxv. 6, 7; Jer. xxxix. 4—7.

On this occasion, the seemingly dissonant prophecies of Jeremiah and Ezekiel were fulfilled on Zedekiah. The former had told the king, after the return of the Chaldean army to the siege, that he should surely be taken prisoner, that his eyes should see the king of Babylon, and that he should be carried captive to Babylon, and should die there, not with the sword, but in peace, and with the burnings or interment of his fathers, the kings of Judah, Jer. xxxii. 4, 5; xxxiv. 3—5; whereas, the latter foretold, that he should be brought captive to Babylon, yet should not see it, though he should die there, Ezek. xii. 13.

Ezekiel also, like Jeremiah, connected the subversion of the kingdom of Judah, with the future kingdom of CHRIST, in the following remarkable prophecy:

EZEKIEL'S PROPHECY OF CHRIST.

And thou profane, wicked prince of Israel [Zedekiah,] Whose day is come, in the time of iniquity, [in] the end;
 Thus saith THE REGENT LORD;
 Remove the diadem [or priestly mitre] and take off the crown;
 This shall not be the same [or continue.]
 (The humble HE exalteth, and the exalted HE humbleth.)
 Iniquity, iniquity, iniquity I will account it:
 Even this [diadem and crown] shall not be [any more,]
 Until He shall come WHOSE IS THE JUDGMENT,
 And to him will I give it. Ezek. xxi. 25—27.

This most obscure and difficult prophecy, (here attempted to be rendered more intelligibly, by the help of the ancient Versions,) seems to bear a remarkable correspondence to Jacob's famous prophecy, Gen. xlix. 10. The diadem, or priestly mitre, (according to the Chaldee paraphrase,) corresponds to the law-giver or scribe; and the future prince, WHOSE IS THE JUDGMENT, to SHILOH, who was to unite both functions in CHRIST, of High Priest and King.

Such were the admirable prophecies of Isaiah, Micah, Jeremiah, and Ezekiel, during this disastrous period, by which the minds of the faithful were still supported by the prospect of a future redemption and spiritual consolations.

About a month after taking the city, in the seventh day of the fifth month, and in the nineteenth year of his reign, (which therefore was B.C. 604—18=B.C. 586,) Nebuchadnezzar sent Nebuzaradan, captain of his guard, with an army of Chaldeans, to Jerusalem, who burnt the temple and city to the ground, and demolished its walls, and carried away to Babylon all the vessels of brass, silver, and gold, which had been left before, and all the treasure of the temple, and of the king's palace, and of the house of the princes, and of the rest of the people, who had been left behind in Jehoiachin's captivity, he left none remaining but the poor of the land, to be vine-dressers and husbandmen, 2 Kings xxv. 8—12; Jer. lii. 12—16.

Four years after, in the twenty-third year of Nebuchadnezzar, Nebuzaradan entered again the land of Judea, and carried off a few miserable gleanings of the inhabitants from Jerusalem, Jer. lii. 30.

Thus was the land left desolate, that "she might enjoy her sabbaths," or sabbatical years of rest, of which she had been defrauded by the avarice and disobedience of the Jews; fulfilling the early denunciation of Moses, Levit. xxvi. 34, and the later of Jeremiah, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 21; and it is truly remarkable, that Nebuchadnezzar left it in that state, and did not attempt to recolonize it, as the policy of the Assyrian kings had led them to do in Samaria. The land, therefore, lay still vacant for their reception against their return: the providence of the GOD OF JUDAH, insensibly over-ruling the counsels and decrees of that haughty and arrogant conqueror, whom He had raised up to be the scourge of his chosen people, when their apostacies and abominations rendered them unworthy of his tutelar care and protection, and they were transported into captivity "for their good," Jer. xxiv. 5. There they were cured of the idolatrous infection they had imbibed in Egypt, and renewed in Canaan, in the course of seventy years, in "the third or fourth generation of them that hated GOD," and provoked him to chastise them so long. When the remnant that returned were purified in the furnace of affliction, and had "purged away [a part of] their dross," Isai. i. 25.

SEVENTH PERIOD.

FROM THE DESTRUCTION OF JERUSALEM TO NEHEMIAH'S REFORM. 166 YEARS.

BABYLONIAN DYNASTY.

	Y.	B.C.
Nebuchadnezzar destroys Jerusalem	} 25 last ..	586
appoints Gedaliah governor
subdues the Ammonites , &c.	—	585
besieges Tyre	—	584
desolates Judea	—	582
subdues Egypt	—	570
his first dream	—	569
sets up the golden image	—	569
his second dream	—	568
Evilmerodach	} 3	561 releases Jehoiachin
Belshazzar	5	558
, his feast and death	—	553

MEDIAN AND PERSIAN DYNASTY.

Darius the Mede, or Cyaxares	2	553
Cyrus the Persian	15	551
Cyrus takes Babylon ; first, of his sovereignty	—	536
The Jews return from captivity under Zerubbabel	} —	536
Jeshua high-priest fifty-three years
The second Temple begun	—	535
Cambyses	8	529
Darius Hystaspes	36	521
The Temple finished	—	516
Xerxes	21	485
Jehoiakim high-priest, thirty years	—	483
Artaxerxes Longimanus	41	464
—, stops the rebuilding of Jerusalem	—	463
—, marries Esther	—	458
—, sends Ezra to Judea	—	457
Eliashib high-priest, forty years	—	453

	Y.	B.C.
Nehemiah governor of Judea , twelve years.....	—	444
———— rebuilds the walls, and the city
———— returns to Persia	—	432
———— comes again to Jerusalem	—	424
Darius Nothus	3 first ..	423
————
Nehemiah's reform, and end of the Canon of the Old Test. 166		420

The Jewish chronology of this period is exceedingly intricate, and interwoven with that of the Babylonians, Medes, and Persians; by which the sacred historians and prophets, Ezra, Nehemiah, Jeremiah, and Daniel, usually compute the times. The confusion of names is embarrassing: the royal title, Ahasuerus, is applied to Xerxes, Ezra iv. 6; to Artaxerxes Longimanus, Esther i. 1; and to Astyages, the father of Cyaxares, or of Darius the Mede, Dan. ix. 1; and “Darius, king of Persia,” denotes Darius Hystaspes, Ezra iv. 5—24; but “Darius the Persian,” Darius Nothus, Nehem. xii. 22.

The chief difficulty in adjusting the chronology of this period, arose from the supposition that Babylon was taken by Darius the Mede, and Cyrus, on the night that Belshazzar was slain, Dan. v. 31; whereas Darius then took possession of the kingdom peaceably, appointed Nabonadius, a Babylonian nobleman, king of Babylon, and died two years after. Cyrus, on the rebellion of Nabonadius, took the city, fifteen years after the death of *Darius, as will be seen in the ensuing analysis of Median and Persian chronology.

The times of the Jewish high priests, are taken from the Chronicon Alexandrinum, according to Prideaux.

In adjusting the reigns of the Persian kings from Xerxes downwards, according to Ptolomy's Canon of Chaldean or Nabonassarean years, I have retained the conumerary Julian years, before the Christian era, in preference to the incipient, or those in which the reigns strictly began; because the conumerary correspond more exactly to the Greek chronology of the Olympiads, and to the leading transactions of their reigns, their wars, &c. in the spring and summer months.

* Ezra's and Ptolomy's canon (corrected,) date the sovereignty of Cyrus from the capture of Babylon, B.C. 536. It is doubtful, whether Daniel's last prophecy, in “the third year of Cyrus, king of Persia, x. 1, is to be dated from thence, or from the death of Darius, B.C. 551. I have adopted the former; others, perhaps, may prefer the latter.

GEDALIAH.

After the conquest of Judea, Nebuchadnezzar left Gedaliah governor of the land; whose father, Ahikam, was a man of considerable distinction and credit in the days of Josiah, 2 Kings xxii. 12, and in the reign of Jehoiakim, who, by his interest at court, and with the people, screened the prophet Jeremiah from the resentment and fury of both, Jer. xxvi. 24. Gedaliah appears himself to have been also of a generous and unsuspecting disposition, wishing to promote the welfare of the people, by reconciling them to the Babylonish government; and rejecting, as a calumny, the information of an intended conspiracy against him by Ishmael, one of the seed royal of Judah, instigated by Baalis, king of the Ammonites. Hence the prophet Jeremiah, when liberated from prison, by the express order of Nebuchadnezzar himself, (who treated him with much consideration, and recommended him to the protection of Nebuzaradan, the captain of the guard, “who gave him provisions, and a reward, and let him go,”) preferred staying with Gedaliah, his friend, and the people that were left in the land, to the captain’s offer, of taking him to Babylon, and providing for him there, Jer. xxxix. 11—14, xl. 2—6; 2 Kings xxv. 22—24.

Soon after, Gedaliah was treacherously slain by Ishmael, and a party of ten men, who slew also the Jews and the Chaldeans that were with him at Mizpeh, his residence, and attempted to carry away captives to the Ammonites, the king’s daughter and the residue of the people; but was prevented by Johanan and all the captains of the forces, who pursued him, and brought back the people; but Ishmael escaped with eight men only to the Ammonites, Jer. xli. 1—16.

Fearing the resentment of the Chaldeans for this massacre, Johanan, the captain, and all the people, great and small, fled to Egypt for an asylum, in spite of the remonstrances of Jeremiah, who promised them safety from THE LORD, if they remained in the land; but that they should die by the sword, by the famine, and by the pestilence, if they disobeyed the voice of the Lord, and went to Egypt: but in vain; Johanan, and all the proud men, taxed the prophet with speaking falsely, in order to give them up into the hand of the Chaldeans, to be carried away captives to Babylon; and they took with them all the remnant of Judah, and compelled Jeremiah himself to accompany them to Taphanes, or Daphnæ Pelusiacæ, in Egypt, and they settled there, and at Migdol and Noph, or Memphis, and in the country of Pathros, or Upper Egypt, Jer. xlii. and xliii.

There Jeremiah denounced against them the approaching invasion of Egypt by Nebuchadnezzar; who should “smite the land of Egypt, and deliver such as were destined for death, to death, and such as were for captivity, to captivity, and such as were for the sword, to the sword;” he foretold also the destruction of the gods of Egypt, and of the images of Bethshemesh, and of their temples; and the delivery of Pharaoh Hophra, king of Egypt, into the hand of his enemies, who should seek his life, and that only a small number of the Jews, that escaped the sword of the Chaldeans, and the famine, should return again into the land of Judah; and he concluded thus: “All the remnant of Judah that are gone to sojourn in the land of Egypt, shall know, whose word shall stand, mine or theirs,” Jer. xliiii. 8—13, xliv. 1—30.

This last and most ominous prophecy proved fatal to the prophet: his ungrateful and infatuated countrymen stoned him to death, and cast his body into a pit; according to ecclesiastical tradition.

THE AMMONITES, &c. SUBDUED.

The year after the conquest of Judea, Nebuchadnezzar resolved to take a severe revenge upon all the surrounding nations who had solicited the Jews to a confederacy against him, or encouraged them to rebel, though they afterwards rejoiced at their destruction, and left them in the lurch; the Ammonites, Moaabites, Edomites, and Arabians; the Sidonians, Tyrians, and Philistines; the Egyptians and Abyssinians, &c. Jer. xxvii. 3, Ezek. xxv. 1—3, xxvi. 1, 2, Jer. xxxvii. 7, &c.

The subjugation and desolation of all these countries by this “servant of THE LORD,” as he is styled, or his scourge to chastise them, when their iniquities came to the full, was foretold in general terms; that “all these nations should serve Nebuchadnezzar, his son, and his son’s son,” “according to the days of one kingdom,” or duration of the Babylonian dynasty, “for seventy years,” (from the overthrow of Nineveh by the Babylonians and Medes, B. C. 606, to the capture of Babylon by Cyrus, B. C. 536,) Jer. xxv. 11, xxix. 10, xxvii. 7, Isai. xxiii. 15.

Some of them were conquered sooner, others later, but the end of this period was the common term for the deliverance of them all, as well as the Jews, from the Babylonish captivity.

The punishment of each was particularly foretold by the prophets: the Ammonites, Amos i. 13, 15, Ezek. xxv. 4—10, &c. the Moabites, Ezek. xxv. 8—11, Jer. xxv. 21, xlvi. 40—47, &c. the Edomites, Amos i. 13—15, Obadiah 10—16, Jer. xlix. 17, &c. the Arabians, Jer. xxv. 24, &c. the Sidonians, Jer. xxv. 22, xlvi. 4, Ezek. xxviii. 21—23, &c. the Tyrians, Isai. xxiii. 1—15, Jer. xxv. 22, Ezek. xxvi. 7—13, xxvii. 2—36, &c. the Philistines, Jer. xxv. 20, Ezek. xxv. 16, Zeph. ii. 5; the Egyptians, Isai. xix. 4—23, Jer. xlvi. 13—26, Ezek. xxix. 2—12, xxx. 20—26, xxxii. 2—16, Joel iii. 19, the Ethiopians or Abysinians, Isai. xviii. 1—7, Ezek. xxx. 4—11.

SIEGE OF TYRE.

After Nebuchadnezzar had subdued the eastern and western states, in the first campaign, he commenced the siege of the strong city of Old Tyre, on the continent, in the second year after the destruction of Jerusalem; and took it after a long and obstinate siege of thirteen years, according to the Tyrian annals, recorded by Josephus, Ant. x. 11, 1.

That the commencement of the siege is rightly assigned to the year B. C. 584, two years after the destruction of Jerusalem, may be collected from SCRIPTURE and the Tyrian annals.

1. Ezekiel, immediately after the destruction of Jerusalem, B. C. 586, prophesied the siege and destruction of Tyre, by Nebuchadnezzar, xxvi. 1—11, and in the two succeeding prophecies, he represents it “as situate at the entry of the sea ;” and gives a curious account of its commerce, xxvii. 3, &c. and their king as puffed up with pride and presumption, so as to fancy himself a god, and not a man; but who should be slain as a man, xxviii. 2—9; alluding, perhaps, to his name, Ithobaal, or Ethbaal, according to the Tyrian annals, signifying, “the Master,” which was a Phœnician title of God. These latter prophecies were probably delivered in the course of the ensuing year, B. C. 585, during the invasion of the neighbouring country. And a subsequent prophecy, delivered after the end of the siege, “in the twenty-seventh year of Jehoiachin’s captivity, in the first month, and the first day of the month,” or the first day of the year, Ezek. xxix. 17, 18, decides that the city was taken about the end of the foregoing year, or B.C. 597—26=B.C. 571; adding, therefore, to this, the length of the siege, it began, B.C. 571 + 13=B.C. 584.

2. This same date is furnished also by the Tyrian annals. From the commencement of the siege of Tyre, in the seventh year of Ithobaal, by Nebuchadnezzar, to the fourteenth of Hirom, when Cyrus obtained the sovereignty, was forty-eight years and three months*; therefore, adding these to the date of the capture of Babylon, B.C. 536; the sum gives B.C. 584, as before. Joseph. cont. Apion. i. 21.

This curious coincidence of sacred and profane chronology, establishes both; and also confirms, by the respectable authority of the Tyrian annals, the date of the capture of Babylon, B.C. 536, which was furnished by the slight correction of Ptolomy's canon, Vol. I. p. 169.

During the siege of Tyre, Nebuchadnezzar sent Nabuzardan, with a part of the army, into Judea, to revenge the death of Gedaliah, whom he had appointed governor of the land. But the country was so thin of inhabitants, in consequence of the secession to Egypt, that he carried away captive no more than 745 persons. This was the last deportation of the Jews, in the twenty-third of Nebuchadnezzar, B.C. 582, Jer. lii. 30.

About the same time, Nebuchadnezzar invaded Elam, or Elymais, and took Shusan, or Susa, its capital, from the Medes, as foretold by Jeremiah, xxv. 25, 26, xlix. 34, 35, and Ezek. xxxii. 11—24.

In consequence of this, we learn from Xenophon, that a war broke out between the Medes and Babylonians, occasioned by

* Ithobaal	13	0	} Kings.
Baal	10	0
Ecnibaal	2	M.	} Judges.
Chelbes	10	M.
Abbarus	3	M.
Mitgen	6	0	} Kings.
Belator	1	0
Merbal	4	0	} Kings.
Hirom	13	0
	—————
	48		3 M.

And Josephus reckons, that from the beginning of the siege to the end of the reign of Hirom, (which lasted twenty years,) was fifty-four years three months: from which, subtracting the six last years of Hirom, there remain forty-eight years three months.—Cont. Apion. i. 21.

the conquests of "the king of Assyria," in Syria, Arabia, Hyrkania, and Bactria, which threatened the safety of the Median empire: and that in the course of it, Abradates, king of the Susians, renounced his alliance with the king of Assyria, and joined Cyrus, for the restoration of his wife Panthea, inviolate, after she had been taken prisoner by the Medes and Persians. Cyropæd. B. i. and vi. Xenophon dates the commencement of this war, about the twenty-seventh year of Cyrus' age, B.C. 572, in the thirty-second of Nebuchadnezzar, two years before the capture of Tyre. Still Shushan, or Susa, the capital, was recovered, or remained with the Babylonians, in the reign of Belshazzar; for we read that Daniel the prophet "was employed there, about the king's business," viii. 2. This coincidence of sacred and profane history, is curious and important; it tends also to support the credit of Xenophon as an historian in the Cyropædia, the basis of which is true, though moulded by the philosopher into an historical romance.

Before Tyre was taken, the inhabitants fled with their effects to the insular Tyre, in its neighbourhood, having the command of the sea; so that Nebuchadnezzar found but little spoil therein, as we learn from Jerom, on Isai. xxiii. 6. To this circumstance the prophet Ezekiel alludes, in his last prophecy, when he declares that "Nebuchadnezzar and his army had no wages for the great service they had served against Tyre;" in the long course of which, "every head was made bald, and every shoulder peeled," Ezek. xxix. 18; and as a recompence, he promises them the plunder of "the land of Egypt, her multitude, her spoil, and her prey," vers. 19, 20.

INVASION OF EGYPT.

Accordingly, in the spring of the year, B.C. 570, after the Tyrian war was finished, Nebuchadnezzar invaded Egypt, and quickly overran the whole extent of the country, from Migdol, its northern extremity near the Red Sea, to Syene, the southern, bordering on Ethiopia, or Abyssinia, which he also reduced, with the other auxiliaries of the Egyptians, according to prophecy, Ezek. xxx. 1—12.

In the course of this war, that "cruel lord, and fierce king," so wasted and depopulated the land with fire and sword, that it lay desolate, in a manner, for forty years; after he had defeated the proud and haughty tyrant, Hophra, or Apries, as he is called by Herodotus, and forced him to become his vassal, Jer. xlvi. 25, 26, who was soon after slain by the Egyptians, Herod. ii. § 162—169, fulfilling Jeremiah's prophecy, xlv. 30, and Ezekiel's, xxxii. 32. And on their return from captivity, at the end of that period, they were doomed to be the “basest of the kingdoms ;” who should no more have an independent “prince” of their own, Ezek. xxix. 13, 14, xxx. 13. And accordingly, they were ever after subject to foreign powers, to the Babylonians, Persians, Macedonians, Romans, Mamalukes, and Turks, down to the present day.

NEBUCHADNEZZAR'S FIRST DREAM.

This remarkable dream happened “in the second year of Nebuchadnezzar's reign,” Dan. ii. 1, and is therefore dated B. C. 603, by Usher, and the Bible Chronology. But the context furnishes internal evidence that this date is too early.

1. On his first invasion of Judea, in the first year of his reign, Nebuchadnezzar selected the most promising youths of the royal captives, and among them Daniel and his three friends, to be educated in his palace for three years, in the dialect and learning of the Chaldeans, in order to qualify them for holding the first offices in the state, and to attach them to his person and service by a wise and liberal policy ; and at the expiration of that time, they were brought before the king to be examined as to their proficiency, who “found them ten times better informed in all matters of wisdom and understanding than all the magi, (“diviners,”) or astrologers, that were in his whole realm,” Dan. i. 1—21. The term of their education, therefore, was not expired until the fourth year of his reign, before which it is not likely that Daniel should expound the dream.

2. But Daniel is represented, at the time of the dream, 1. as included with his three friends among the magi and wise men decreed to be slain for not telling and interpreting the king's dream ; 2. as living in his own house ; 3. as being now grown to manhood ; and 4. as being appointed Archimagus, or chief over all the wise men of Babylon, immediately after, in reward of his skill, ii. 12—48. These circumstances, especially the last, are inconsistent with the foregoing supposition.

3. Daniel, in expounding the dream, styles Nebuchadnezzar king of kings, invested with universal dominion over all the earth ; which was not true, or realized in fact, until his return from the conquest of Egypt, which crowned the whole, when he set himself down to enlarge and embellish Babylon with the spoils of the conquered countries, and to people it with the captives.

4. The most judicious historians and chronologers reject the earlier date of the second year of his reign. Cedrenus and Syn-cellus reckon it the twentieth, or the year after the destruction of Jerusalem; Abulfaragi and Euty chius the twenty-third, or the year after the final desolation of Judea; and Josephus, “the second year after the devastation of Egypt *,” Ant. X. 10, 3; whence Jackson prefers B.C. 569, which is adopted in this work.

5. And this leads us to a more consistent explanation of the text, where “the second year of the reign of Nebuchadnezzar” means “the second year of his sovereignty,” as established by the conquest of Egypt, according to the judicious interpretation of Josephus, Petavius, and Jackson, which is likewise warranted by analogy; thus “the first year of Cyrus, king of Persia,” Ezra i. 1, by no means denotes his accession to the crown of Persia, in B.C. 559, nor of Media, in B.C. 551, but of Babylon, B.C. 536; whence he is afterwards styled “king of Babylon,” Ezra v. 13, because it was not till the conquest of Babylon that “GOD had given him all the kingdoms of the earth,” or made him full successor of the Babylonian monarchy.

The king’s requisition to the wise men of Babylon, to tell him his dream, in the first instance, before they attempted to interpret it, though as they alleged, in excuse for not doing so, unusual and impossible for mere mortals, was yet founded on profound policy. He justly considered their telling the dream itself, as a sure test of the truth of their interpretation afterwards, and which it was not unreasonable to require of them even upon their own principles; because the same DIVINE POWER which could communicate to them the interpretation, as they professed, could also communicate to them the dream itself. He did not forget the dream, as generally imagined, from the expression, “the thing is gone from me,” verses 5 and 8, which may rather be rendered, with the Septuagint and Arabic, “the decree is gone forth from me,” and shall not be reversed; or with the Syriac version, “the decree which I have pronounced is certain,” or unalterable ; namely, for putting them all to death, if they could not tell the dream. And this surely was a more consistent reason, why the wise men wished “ to gain time,” or suspend the execution of it, verse 8 ; and why Daniel, who was involved in their danger, complained, “ why is the decree so hasty from the king ?” verse 15.

* μετὰ δὲ ἔτος δευτερον τῆς Αἰγυπτου πορθησεως.

Upon the fervent prayer of Daniel and his three friends, that “ they might not perish with the wise men of Babylon,” “ the secret was revealed to him in a night vision ;” and from his thanksgiving to GOD, and declaration to the king, when brought before him, we may collect both the occasion and the drift of the dream, verse 17—29.

The thoughts which came into the king’s mind, upon his bed, were, “ what should come to pass hereafter,” or what should be the future destiny of that great empire which he had now acquired ; whether it should continue, or whether it should be changed, and pass away to others, in the course of “ those times and seasons of revolution, in which GOD removeth, and setteth up kings ;” and the ensuing dream figuratively intimated that it should be changed.

In the compound image which he saw in his dream, 1. “ the head of pure gold,” denoted Nebuchadnezzar himself, and the succeeding kings of the Babylonian dynasty ; 2. “ the breast and arms of silver,” the next kingdom of the Medes and Persians, inferior to the former ; 3. “ the belly and the thighs of brass,” the succeeding kingdom of the Macedonians and Greeks, whose arms were brass ; 4. “ the legs of iron, and the feet and toes partly iron and partly clay,” the empire of the Romans, which should be as strong as iron, but the kingdoms into which it was to be divided, composed of heterogeneous materials, which should be partly strong, and partly weak ; and 5. the spiritual kingdom of the STONE, or of CHRIST, which was to be set up by the GOD OF HEAVEN, “ in the days of these kings,” or before the end of the last, the Roman empire, upon the ruins of those temporal kingdoms and empires ; and was destined to fill the whole earth, and to stand or continue for ever, ver. 31—45.

The prophet’s interpretation only specifies the Babylonian empire, the succeeding not being then in existence : their names are collected from the ensuing visions of Daniel, gradually unfolding this primary vision ; with which, therefore, they are all intimately connected, and with each other, as links of one grand chain of prophecy, reaching from their commencement to the end of time.

Then Nebuchadnezzar prostrated himself before Daniel, and offered him incense, according to the usual mode of adoration to kings and superiors in the east, and confessed that THE GOD of Daniel was GOD OF GODS, and LORD OF KINGS, who could enable him to reveal this secret; and he appointed him ruler over the whole province of Babylon, and also "chief governor over all the wise men of Babylon," ("Rab Mag, or Archimagus," Jer. xxxix. 3.) the two highest civil and ecclesiastical employments in the state; and, at his request, promoted his friends to conduct, under him, the affairs of the province of Babylon, while he acted himself as privy counsellor to the king, to advise him in the administration of justice, ver. 46—49.

THE GOLDEN IMAGE.

The Septuagint and Arabic versions state the erection of this image in the eighteenth year of Nebuchadnezzar, or the year before the destruction of Jerusalem; but this is too early, for the foregoing reasons. It was evidently after the dream, which it follows in detail, and not more than a year after, because the ensuing dream was fulfilled only seven years before his death. We may therefore most probably place it about the end of the same year in which the first dream happened.

This image appears to have been made and erected by the haughty and arrogant conqueror, in opposition to his dream, and the foregoing interpretation thereof. The whole image, and not the head only, was made of gold, to denote the continuance of his empire, and it was consecrated to his tutelary god Bel, or Belus, Dan. iii. 14, iv. 8, whose power he now considered as superior to that of the God of the Jews, revoking his former confession, verse 15; but the stupendous deliverance of the three pious friends of Daniel from the burning fiery furnace, who refused "to serve his god, or worship his golden image," by the SON OF GOD *, in a glorious form, or THE ANGEL OF THE LORD, again compelled him to confess, that THE GOD OF THE

* Daniel might have communicated to Nebuchadnezzar, Nathan and David's prophecies of THE SON OF GOD, 2 Sam. vii. 14, Ps. ii. 7, cx. 1, &c.

JEWES was superior to any other, “because there was no other god that could deliver after this sort,” verse 16—29.

This was probably the statue of solid gold, twelve cubits high, which, according to Herodotus, stood in the temple of Belus, till it was taken away by Xerxes, l. § 182. See Vol. I. p. 457. The height mentioned by Daniel, sixty cubits, probably included the pedestal, or pillar, on which it stood, because otherwise its height would have been disproportionate to its breadth, six cubits, Dan. iii. 1.

NEBUCHADNEZZAR'S SECOND DREAM.

This was a merciful warning to this great prince, who was spoiled by prosperity, when “at rest in his house, and flourishing in his palace,” “to break off his sins,” especially his inordinate pride, “and his iniquities,” especially his capricious cruelty, (v. 19,) “by shewing mercy to the poor, that it might be a lengthening of his tranquillity,” according to the sage and honest advice of his chief counsellor Daniel, after the king had told his dream, and the prophet had given the interpretation thereof from GOD.

The great and flourishing tree denoted the king himself, and his extensive dominions; the HOLY WATCHER who came down from heaven, and commanded to hew down the tree, but to bind the stump of its roots that was left in the ground with a band of iron and brass, that it might be wet with the dew of heaven, and its portion with the beasts of the field, until the expiration of seven times, signified the decree of the MOST HIGH, for depriving him of his reason, and banishing him from men, or human society, to associate with the beasts of the field for seven years, until he should come to himself, by this wholesome but severe discipline, and “know,” or openly acknowledge, the supremacy of GOD, “who ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever he willeth,” iv. 4—27.

This was literally fulfilled twelve months after, when, forgetting his dependance upon God, he arrogated glory to himself: “Is not this great Babylon, which I have built for the capital of the kingdom, by the might of my power, and for the honour of my majesty!—While the word was in the king’s mouth, there fell a voice from heaven, saying, O king Nebuchadnezzar, to thee it is spoken: the kingdom is departed from thee,” &c. iv. 28—33.

“ At the end of the days,” or expiration of the appointed time, when “ his reason returned to him, and he was re-established in his kingdom,” humbled and instructed by sufferings, he gratefully acknowledged “ the signs and wonders which THE MOST HIGH GOD had wrought towards him,” and “ praised and extolled THE KING OF HEAVEN, all whose works are truth, and his ways judgment, and who is able to abase those that walk in pride,” iv. 1—3, iv. 34—37.

Shortly after he died, and was succeeded by his son,

EVIL MERODACH.

The accession of this prince was in the thirty-seventh year of Jehoiachin's captivity, Jer. lii. 31. 2 Kings xxv. 27, or B.C. 597—36 = B.C. 561, which exactly accords with the date of the accession of Ilvarodam, in Ptolomy's Canon, proving that he was Evil Merodach, and also the correctness of this period of sacred chronology, from its conformity with that scientific canon.

The first act of his reign was the enlargement of the Jewish king, Jehoiachin, from his prison, whom he treated kindly and hospitably all the days of his life, setting him above all the other captive kings that were in Babylon, Jer. lii. 32, 2 Kings xxv. 28; compare Esther iii. 1. A Jewish tradition, noticed by Jerom, on Isaiah xiv. 29, reports, that Evil Merodach, (or “ foolish Merodach,”) during his father's distraction, behaved so ill, in provoking a war with the Medes, that on his recovery, Nebuchadnezzar threw him into prison, where he contracted an intimacy with Jehoiachin. But this imprisonment probably happened at an earlier period. Xenophon relates, in his Cyropædia, b. 1, that the son of the king of Assyria, or Babylon, during the reign of Astyages, king of Media, on a hunting party, when he was going to be married, wantonly made a predatory excursion into the Median territory, but was encountered and repulsed by a party of Medes, chiefly by the valour of young Cyrus, the grandson of Astyages, then about fifteen or sixteen years old, which fixes the date of the transaction about B.C. 584, the year of the siege of Tyre. But this aggression of Evil Merodach, and still more his disgraceful defeat, must have provoked his irritable father, and also his mother, the wife of Nebuchadnezzar, who was a Mede herself, and the daughter of *Astyages, for this insult offered to his grandfather.

* Fragm. Alex. Polyhist. apud Cedren.

Herodotus, who calls her Nitocris, and represents her as the principal improver of Babylon, because she carried on, during her regency, the works which Nebuchadnezzar had begun before his distraction, says, that she carefully and anxiously endeavoured to obstruct the passes leading to Media, and to prevent any intercourse with that kingdom, because the Medes were now grown powerful and formidable, B. i. § 185.

On Evil Merodach's accession to the throne, Xenophon relates, that he set himself to form a powerful confederacy of the neighbouring states, the Lydians, Cappadocians, Phrygians, Carians, Paphlagonians, and Cilicians, westwards, and the Indians eastwards, against the Medes; alledging, that by their junction and intermarriages with the Persians, they were grown great and powerful, and unless they were opposed with the united force of the confederates, they would subdue them separately; but Cyrus, who was appointed general of the combined army of the Medes and Persians, by Cyaxares, his uncle and father-in-law, by his promptness and activity, anticipated the threatened invasion, attacked the Babylonians, routed, and pursued them to their camp, and in the engagement slew their king. Cyropæd. B. 1—4. Such was the end of Evil Merodach.

BELSHAZZAR

was his son, and consequently the grandson of Nebuchadnezzar, who is called, however, “his father,” by the usual latitude of signification attached to that term in Scripture, Dan. v. 2—11—13.

The only circumstances of his reign recorded, are the visions of the prophet Daniel, in the first and third years, Dan. vii. 1, viii. 1, and his sacrilegious feast and violent death, Dan. v. 1—30.

Isaiah, who represents the Babylonian dynasty as “the scourge of Palestine,” styles Nebuchadnezzar “a serpent,” Evil Merodach “a cockatrice,” and Belshazzar “a fiery flying serpent,” the worst of all, xiv. 4—29. And Xenophon confirms this prophetic character by two atrocious instances of cruelty and barbarity, exercised by Belshazzar upon some of his chief and most deserving nobles. He slew the only son of Gobryas, in a transport of rage, because at a hunting match he hit with his spear a bear, and afterwards a lion, when the king had missed both ; and in a fit of jealousy, he brutally castrated Gadatas, because one of his concubines had commended him as a handsome man, Cyrop. lib. iv. and v.

His last and most heinous offence was the profanation of the sacred vessels belonging to the temple of Jerusalem, which his wise grandfather, and even his foolish father, had respected. Having made a great feast for a thousand of his lords, he ordered those vessels to be brought during the banquet, that he, his princes, his wives, and his concubines, might drink out of them, which they did ; and to aggravate sacrilege by apostacy and rebellion, and ingratitude against the supreme author of all their enjoyments, “ they praised the gods of gold, silver, brass, iron, and stone, but THE GOD in whose hand was their breath, and whose were all their ways, they praised or glorified not.”

For these complicated crimes, his doom was denounced in the midst of the entertainment : a divine hand appeared, which wrote on the plaister of the wall, opposite to the king, and full in his view, a mysterious inscription.

This tremendous apparition struck Belshazzar with the greatest terror and agony : “ his countenance was changed, and his thoughts troubled him, so that the joints of his loins were loosed, and his knees smote against each other.” This is one of the liveliest and finest amplifications of dismay to be found throughout the sacred classics, and infinitely exceeds, both in accuracy and force, the most admired of the heathen ; such as “ et corde et genibus tremit,” of Horace, and “ tarda trementi genua labant,” of Virgil.

When none of the magi, or wise men of Babylon, whom the king hastily sent for, could even read, much less interpret the inscription, “ the queen mother,” or “ *grandmother” of the king, who had not attended the sacrilegious feast, but came in upon this alarm, recommended Daniel, who also had been absent from it, as one “ in whom was the spirit of the HOLY GODS,” (but whom Belshazzar had not respected, like his grandfather) as best qualified to shew the interpretation.

When the venerable prophet was sent for and brought in, he modestly declined the proffered honour and rewards, as having no weight to induce him to comply with the king’s request : “ Thy gifts be to thyself, and give thy rewards to another ; nevertheless, I will read the writing to the king, and make known to him the interpretation."

* So she is called by Josephus, ἡ μᾶμμη αὐτοῦ.

The reason why the wise men of Babylon could not read the divine inscription, was, that it was written in the primitive Hebrew character, which differed totally from the Chaldee. It was the original, from which the Samaritan was formed, and which therefore it nearly resembled, though greatly superior to it in beauty, symmetry, and elegance. Some advantageous specimens of it are fortunately preserved on sacred shekels, and Jewish coins of high antiquity, drawings of which may be seen in Walton's Supplementum de Siclorum formis et inscriptionibus, p. 38, prefixed to the first volume of the London Polyglott Bible, and elsewhere. The difference between the ruder Samaritan and the Chaldee, may be seen by the plates of Numerals in the first volume of this work.

On this occasion, to shew that the writer of the inscription was the offended GOD OF ISRAEL, he adopted his own sacred character, such as he formerly wrote on the tables of the decalogue. That character, we may be sure, was carefully copied by Moses in his book of the law, the original of which was found in Josiah's days; and was most likely to be brought to Babylon along with the precious furniture of the temple, and to have been under Daniel's care, or in his possession, as Archimagus: he therefore must have been well acquainted with the character even without inspiration.

After undauntedly reminding the king of the punishment incurred by Nebuchadnezzar, for his pride and capricious cruelty, in the temporary loss of his understanding, and of his kingdom, and his own pride, rebellion, and ingratitude, Daniel proceeds to read the inscription, which was in the Chaldee, or vernacular tongue; and which, collated with the interpretation, furnishes a more correct reading of both, supplying obvious omissions in the present Masorete text, as follows:

THE INSCRIPTION.

MENE, MENE, TEKEL, [PERES] UPARSIN.
 "NUMBER," "NUMBER," "WEIGHT," ["DIVISION,"] "AND DIVISIONS."

THE INTERPRETATION.

MENE,—“ God hath numbered thy reign, and [MENE,] hath finished it.” The repetition emphatically signifying, that the decree was certain, and would “ shortly come to pass.” See Gen. xli. 32.

TEKEL,—“Thou art weighed in the balance, and found wanting.” See Job xxxi. 6, Rev. vi. 5.

PERES,—“Thy kingdom is divided;”

[UPARSIN,]—“And given to the Medes and the Persians.” [Darius and Cyrus.]

Notwithstanding this terrible sentence, Belshazzar had still the justice to fulfil his promise to the prophet.

“And the same night was Belshazzar, king of the Chaldeans, slain,” Dan. v. 25—30.

The conciseness of Holy Writ has not explained how he was slain. This we may collect, with some correction*, from the account of Xenophon, that he was slain by conspirators; for he states, that Gobryas and Gadatas, who led the band that broke into his palace, were the first who adored the gods for having punished the impious king, (τον ανοσιον βασιλεα,) Cyropæd. lib. vii.

Indeed, Daniel's interpretation of the hand-writing upon the wall most probably hastened his doom. The conspirators, with their most injured leaders, now considering him as devoted to immediate destruction by GOD himself for his “sacrilege,” which is strongly implied in the term ανοσιον.

The great feast, on the night of which he was slain, appears to have been a season of profound peace and tranquillity, when “a thousand of his lords” could freely come from all parts of his empire without molestation or interruption from a besieging enemy, and when the king would be most apt “to forget God, after he had eaten and was full.”

We learn from Berosus, that his son Laborosoarchod, though a boy, (παις) succeeded him, but was slain in a conspiracy nine months after, Joseph. contr. Apion. I. § 20. He is therefore omitted in Ptolomy's Canon. See Vol. I. p. 172.

The family of Nebuchadnezzar being now extinct, and the Babylonian dynasty ended, according to prophecy, who had so good a title to the crown as Cyaxares, or “Darius the Mede?”
1. He was pointed out as the next successor by the prophet Daniel, whose interpretation of the divine inscription “must

* Xenophon supposed that this happened when Babylon was surprised and taken by Cyrus. But we learn from the Canon of Ptolomy, that Babylon was taken seventeen years after; and from Berosus, who consulted the Chaldean records, that Cyrus then took Nabonadius prisoner, in the Acropolis, or citadel, treated him kindly, and sent him away from Babylon, to reside in Carmania, where he remained till his death. Xenophon evidently confounded this feast with the Sakea, when Babylon was taken, Vol. I. p. 168.

naturally have had the greatest weight with the grandees and the whole nation ; 2. He was the queen mother's brother, and the next of kin, by her side, to the crown ; and 3. He was by far the most powerful competitor for it ; and also a prince of an easy and amiable disposition. Upon all these accounts therefore, we cannot hesitate to admit, that the Babylonians made him, soon after, a voluntary tender of the sovereignty, and that "Darius the Mede, took, or accepted, the kingdom," with their free and full consent, Dan. v. 31.

DARIUS THE MEDE.

The first act of his sovereignty, as we may collect from Berosus, was the appointment of Nabonadius, a Babylonian nobleman, not allied to the royal family, to be king, or viceroy, under him, according to the established policy of the Medes and Persians, to conciliate the good will of his new subjects, in leaving them to be governed by a native prince.

The prophet Daniel, who contributed so materially to the accession of Darius, was naturally in the highest favour with him ; accordingly, on his next appointment of the presidents of the provinces, he set Daniel at their head, and designed to set him over the whole united realm, because of his consummate wisdom, Dan. vi. 1—3.

This of course excited the envy and jealousy of the presidents and princes ; who, not being able to find any fault in his public administration, because he was faithful to his trust, contrived a most artful and wicked expedient to work his downfall and destruction ; by prevailing on the easiness and vanity of the king, to pass a royal decree, that no prayer or petition should be made to any god or man, save the king himself, for thirty days ; and that whosoever transgressed this impious, adulatory decree, should be cast into the den of lions, ver. 4—9.

After this decree was signed by the king, Daniel's enemies watched, and found him praying and giving thanks to God as usual, thrice a day, in his chamber, with his face towards Jerusalem ; and accused him of transgressing the decree, and demanded his punishment ; which the king was most reluctantly compelled to order ; expressing a wish to Daniel, when he was thrown into the den of lions, "May the God whom thou servest continually, deliver thee !"

The next morning, after a night of mourning and fasting, the king arose very early, and went in haste to the den of lions; and when he came to it, he cried to Daniel with a doleful voice, “O Daniel, servant of THE LIVING GOD, hath thy God, whom thou servest continually, been able to deliver thee from the lions? Then said Daniel to the king, O king live for ever! MY GOD hath sent HIS ANGEL, and hath shut the lions’ mouths, so that they have not hurt me; forasmuch as before Him innocency was found in me, and also before thee, O king, have I done no hurt.”

Then the king was exceeding glad, and retaliated the same punishment upon his accusers, their wives, and their children; whom the lions instantly mastered, and brake their bones in pieces, before they reached the bottom of the den, ver. 10—24.

The pious decree of Darius upon this occasion, is similar to those of Nebuchadnezzar, when Daniel interpreted his dream, and on his recovery from his distraction. Thus did GOD render the captivity of the Jews a means of recalling the heathen nations to the knowledge and fear of Him, by the signs and wonders which he displayed by the hands of the captive prophets.

“Darius the Mede was sixty-two years old at the time that he became sovereign of Babylon,” and reigned two years only, when he died. This is an important chronological character. It decides that he could not possibly have been Astyages, as several chronologers have imagined, Cedrenus, Marsham, Jackson, &c. for he was born B.C. 553 + 62 = B.C. 615; only sixteen years before the birth of Cyrus, B.C. 599, whereas Herodotus calls Astyages, when Cyrus was born, γῆρων “an old man.”

The testimony of Xenophon concurring with Daniel, in the succession of Cyaxares to his father Astyages in the throne of Media, is of the highest importance; because Æschylus, Herodotus, Diodorus Siculus, Justin, &c. and the apocryphal history of Bel and the Dragon, all represent Cyrus as immediately succeeding Astyages; taking no notice of the intermediate reign of Darius the Mede, or Cyaxares; because he was eclipsed by the superior lustre of his nephew Cyrus. Who, in fact, governed Cyaxares himself, by that ascendancy which great souls have always over little ones. Indeed Cyaxares felt and complained of the superiority of Cyrus: When Cyaxares once wished to restrain the youthful ardour of Cyrus in the chace, and threatened him with chastisement from Astyages, his grandfather, if he persisted; Cyrus said, “Chastise me yourself, uncle, if you please, and as you please, but only gratify me in this.” At length, Cyaxares answered, “Do as you please, for even now you seem to be our king.” Cyropæd. lib. I. p. 30. And after Cyaxares succeeded to the crown, he said, on one occasion, “I would ten times rather (said he,) chuse to be buried under the earth, than to appear so mean, as to see my subjects neglecting and deriding me. For I am not ignorant, not only that you are greater than I, but that even several of my subjects come to meet me more powerful than myself; and are so well appointed, as to be able rather to injure me, than to be injured by me.” Cyropæd. lib. v. p. 301. Hutchinson.

CYRUS.

This illustrious Persian, who was honoured by name with the title of GOD’S “shepherd, that should perform all his pleasure,” Isai. xlv. 28; “Cyrus, THE LORD’S anointed, whose right hand He promised, about 113 years before his birth, to uphold, to subdue nations before him,” xlv. 1, really succeeded his grandfather Astyages, and, nominally, his uncle and father-in-law, Cyaxares, in defect of issue male, to the peaceable inheritance of the united empire of Media and Babylonia, according to Sacred History:

“And king Astyages was gathered to his fathers, and Cyrus, [king] of Persia, received his kingdom.” Bel and the Dragon, ver. 1.

This also is confirmed by the poet Æschylus, who fought at Marathon against the Persians, and therefore might reasonably be expected to have been acquainted with Persian affairs. In his Persæ he reckons Cyrus the third in succession from the martial founder of the empire, Cyaxares I., which his son Astyages established by his prudence, and Cyrus, favoured by fortune, raised to the height of prosperity, by his peaceful virtues and his conquests*.

* Μηδος γαρ ην ο πρωτος ηγεμων στρατου
 Αλλος δ' εκεινου παις, τοδ' εργον ηνυσε,

These higher and earlier testimonies infinitely outweigh the report of Herodotus, implicitly followed by his successors in general, that Cyrus dethroned his grandfather Astyages. Indeed, the history of both, as detailed by Herodotus, is a tissue of strange improbabilities and absurdities, from beginning to end, that carries its own refutation along with it; as will be fully shewn in the ensuing analysis of Median and Persian chronology.

“Daniel,” we are told, “prospered in the reign of Darius, and in the reign of Cyrus, the Persian,” vi. 28. His last vision was dated in the third year of Cyrus, probably not long before his death, x. 1. Cyrus “conversed much with him, and honoured him above all his friends,” according to the apocryphal history of Bel and the Dragon, in which are recorded two remarkable instances of his wisdom, in detecting the imposture of the priests of Bel, who, with their families, consumed the provisions offered to the idol; and also in destroying a great serpent, worshipped at Babylon, by balls of pitch, fat, and hair, after swallowing which, he burst asunder; to convince the king, in both cases, of the foolishness of his idolatrous worship, and to convert him to the true faith.—These are not improbable. But the sequel is absolutely incredible, that Cyrus was compelled to throw him into the lion’s den, by the enraged Babylonians, for destroying their idol, where he remained for a week, and was supported by a mess of pottage, made by the prophet Habakkuk, in Judea, which an angel transported, prophet and all, to the lion’s den in Babylon! This is evidently a caricature of the former trial of Daniel, and how inconsistent with the noble character of Cyrus, thus tamely to sacrifice his venerable friend and instructor!—

Φρενες γαρ αυτου θυμον οιακοστροφουν'
 Τριτος δ' απ' αυτου Κυρος, ευδαιμων ανηρ, &c. Persæ.

————— “Asia’s brave host,
 A Mede * first led. The virtues of his son †
 Fix’d firm the empire; for his temperate soul
 Breatl’d prudence. Cyrus ‡ third, by fortune graced,
 Adorned the throne, and blessed his grateful friends
 With peace. He to his mighty monarchy
 Joined Lydia and the Phrygians; to his power,
Ionia bent reluctant; but the gods
 With victory, his gentle virtues crowned.” Potter’s Translation.

* Cyaxares I.

† Astyages.

‡ Cyrus.

THE RETURN OF THE JEWS.

In the year of the capture of Babylon, and first of the sole sovereignty of Cyrus, he issued his famous decree for putting an end to the captivity of the Jews, and for rebuilding the temple of Jerusalem, Ezra i. 1—4.

It is said that “GOD stirred up his spirit” to do so; and this we may conclude by the wise counsel of Daniel; 1. to “fulfil the prophecy of Jeremiah,” xxv. 11, this being the year of the expiration of the captivity, which Daniel had computed before, ix. 2; and 2. to fulfil the prophecy of Isaiah, respecting the rebuilding of the temple, xliv. 28, to which Cyrus, in his decree, manifestly alluded: “THE LORD, THE GOD OF HEAVEN, hath given me all the kingdoms of the earth, and He hath charged me to build him a house at Jerusalem.”

Though the decree gave a general permission to “all GOD’S people” throughout the empire to return, it was particularly addressed to the tribes of Judah and Benjamin, to whom Jerusalem belonged. And among them GOD stirred up the heads of families, the priests and Levites, to accompany Zerubbabel, or *Zorobabel, the prince of Judah, whom Cyrus appointed tirshatha or governor of Judea, by the surname of Sheshbazzar, Ezra i. 5—8; ii. 2—63; and the remnant that returned, including the men and their servants, amounted to about 50,000 †, ii. 64, 65.

After their arrival in their respective cities, the whole congregation unanimously assembled at Jerusalem, in the seventh month of the year, and the high-priest Joshua, or Jeshua, and the priests, erected the altar of the Lord, and renewed the morning and evening daily sacrifices, and all celebrated the feast of Tabernacles, according to the law of the LORD, Ezra ii. 70; iii. 1—6.

THE TEMPLE FOUNDED.

In the second year of their return, in the second month, the

* Zorobabel was the son of Salathiel, the son of Jechoniah, or Jehoiachim, king of Judah, Matt, i. 12.

† The number of the congregation was 42,360, (Josephus reckons it 42,462,) which added to 7337 servants and maids, makes 49,697, or 50,000 in round numbers, according to Abulfaragi, p. 53.—The detail falls short of this, at present, in the Masorete text.

governor, high-priest, and remnant of the people, laid the foundation of the second temple, with joyful acclamations; but many of the ancient men, who had seen the first temple, wept when they considered the inferiority of the present, not in its dimensions, which appear to have been the same, but in the solidity and richness of the materials, Ezra iii. 8—13. The interval between the destruction of the first, and foundation of the second temple, was fifty-one years.

But after the death of their patron Daniel, (probably in the third year of Cyrus, soon after his last vision, x. 1,) the adversaries of the Jews, the Samaritan colonists, who had been planted in the room of the ten tribes by Esarhaddon, and had offered to join in building the temple, but were refused by the Jewish government; in revenge, obstructed the building, and by their interest at the Persian court, got an order to stop the work, during the remainder of the days of Cyrus, who was either absent in foreign wars, or not at leisure to attend to such provincial matters. And so the work was discontinued, in consequence of their successful opposition, during the ensuing reign of Cambyzes, and till the second year of Darius Hystaspes, Ezra iv. 1—5; iv. 24.

The work was then resumed, chiefly by the exhortations of the prophets Haggai and Zechariah. For Zerubbabel the governor, and Jeshua the high-priest, made application to the Persian court, and obtained a renewal of the original decree of Cyrus for rebuilding the temple, which they set about with so much alacrity, that the work was begun on the twenty-fourth day of the ninth month, in the second year of Darius, and finished on the third day of Adar; the twelfth month, in the sixth year of his reign, within four years and a quarter, Ezra v. and vi. 1—15; Hag ii. 18.

They then celebrated the dedication of the temple, restored the divisions and courses of the priests and Levites, and observed the ensuing passover, and feast of unleavened bread, with joy; for THE LORD had turned the heart of the king of Assyria (Persia) unto them, to strengthen their hands in the work of the house of GOD, THE GOD OF ISRAEL, Ezra vi. 16—22.

HAGGAI'S PROPHECIES.

These, though short, are important.

1. He reproached the princes and heads of the people with dwelling in ceiled houses themselves, while the temple of THE LORD lay waste. To their neglect he ascribed the drought and failure of crops, which the LORD had sent upon them; and foretold a blessing of plenty from the day that they set about rebuilding the temple, i. 1—12, ii. 17—19.

2. To comfort the survivors who had seen the glory of the first house, and wept at the comparison, and to encourage the rulers and the people to prosecute the work with zeal, he foretells the greater future glories of this house, in the following magnificent prophecy.

- II. 6. Thus saith THE LORD OF HOSTS:
 Yet once more, shortly, will I shake
 The heavens and the earth,
 The sea and the dry land,
 7. And I will shake all nations.
 And THE DESIRE OF ALL NATIONS shall come,
 And I will fill this house with glory,
 Saith THE LORD OF HOSTS.
 8. (The silver is mine, and the gold is mine,
 Saith THE LORD OF HOSTS.)
 9. The glory of this house [at] the last,
Shall be greater than [at] the first,
 Saith THE LORD OF HOSTS:
And in this place will I give peace,
 Saith THE LORD OF HOSTS.

The repetitions here, I will shake, &c. seem to intimate two comings of Christ, after great national convulsions and signs: as explained by OUR LORD, Matt. xxiv. 6, 7, xxiv. 29—31, and two temples to be filled with his glory: the last, after his second coming in glory, to take vengeance on all his adversaries; and to this chiefly St. Paul applies the prophecy, Heb. xii. 26—29.

Though this temple was thrown down by Herod the Great, and rebuilt from the foundations, as we learn from Josephus, Ant. xv. 11, 3, still it was customary to call it the second temple: thus Josephus himself says, "From the building of the second temple by Haggai, in the second year of king Cyrus, till its destruction by Vespasian, was 639 years, and forty-five days." Bell. Jud. vi. 4, 8. And the Seder Olam reckons "from the building of the second temple, till its destruction by the impious Titus, 420 years." See Ganz Chronol. p. 94. These numbers are both incorrect: the true interval was 605 years.

CHRIST is here styled "THE DESIRE OF ALL NATIONS;" a title founded in the Abrahamic covenant, that in Him should all the nations of the earth be blessed. He was therefore the earnest and anxious expectation of the whole world, from Abraham's days, John viii. 56, Luke x. 24. Hence Titus was styled by the adulation of the Romans, hailing him as the promised MESSIAH,—deliciæ humani generis, "the delight of mankind." The plural form, deliciæ, critically corresponding to the Hebrew, חמדות, or fully, חמדות, Hemdoth, "desires," which is applied to Daniel, ix. 23, and is there put elliptically, for אִישׁ חמדות, Aish hemdoth, "a man of desires;" as fully expressed in two subsequent passages, Dan. x. 11, x. 19; and rendered in all three, by the Sept. ανηρ επιθυμιων, "a man of desires," or a "favourite." Malachi also, in his explanatory prophecy, iii. 1—3, calls him "THE REGENT, whom the Jews sought;" "THE ANGEL OF THE COVENANT, in whom they delighted."

CHRIST, at his first coming, virtually filled the temple with the glory of his doctrines and miracles, by which "he manifested his glory" to his disciples and the Jews, John ii. 11—23.

And after his second coming, the glory of the temple that shall be built in the last days, shall exceed that of Solomon's temple; as intimated by Isaiah, "I will glorify the house of my glory," lx. 7; and also by Ezekiel, "The glory of THE LORD came into the house by the eastern gate," &c. xliii. 4, and by the author of Tobit, in the following remarkable description of the three temples, xiv. 4—6.

1. "Jerusalem shall be desolate, and the house of God in it shall be burned, and shall be desolate for a time.

2. "Again GOD will have mercy upon them [in their captivity,] and bring them back to the land [of Judea,] where they shall build a temple, but not like the first, until the time of that age be fulfilled.

3. "And afterwards they shall return from all places of their captivity, and build up Jerusalem gloriously, and the HOUSE OF GOD shall be built in it, for ever, with a glorious building: as the prophets have spoken."

And it is only then, and there, that "peace shall be given to the world," "when all nations shall turn and fear THE LORD GOD truly, and shall bury their idols," according to Tobit's conclusion.

The parenthetical clause of Haggai's prophecy, ver. 8, seems to relate to the contributions of the Jews to the second temple, Ezra ii. 68, 69; and of the king of Persia, Ezra vii. 15—20, which GOD represented as his own property, Psalm l. 10; according to that union of present and remote events, so frequent in the prophetic Scriptures; as we have seen in the prophecies of Nathan, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Daniel, &c.

DOCTOR HEBERDEN'S INTERPRETATION.

The Septuagint Version has added the following gloss to the conclusion of the prophecy.

"And in this place I will give peace, saith THE LORD OF HOSTS: [Also, peace of mind for a possession, to every builder, in order to restore this temple."]

By the aid of this gloss, an ingenious physician, Doctor Heberden, laboured to limit the whole prophecy to the temple then building, and to its actual duration, till Herod's time; in a communication which Archbishop Newcome has inserted in his notes on the Minor Prophets, p. 170, as "a valuable communication, which will give the reader great assistance in determining the sense of the prophecy now under discussion."

A communication so recommended, is entitled to consideration.

1. The Doctor's translation of the Gloss is this :

"And in this place I will give peace—[of mind for a possession, to every one who forwards the building, for the sake of restoring this temple. So the Sept. add, having found it, probably, in their copy."]

Here the Doctor has mutilated the passage, by dropping the important words, which distinguish the future peace of the prophecy from the present peace of the gloss; thereby suppressing the former entirely. His whole interpretation, therefore, built on this suppression of evidence, falls to the ground, as a false and dishonest fabrication.

2. By the word חֲמֹדֶת, "precious things," he represents, "that nothing more was meant than the common richness of the building and its furniture;" as limited to this meaning, "by the mention of gold and silver, which follows." But this is rather inconsistent with his own rendering, "the precious things of all nations shall come ;” which surely intimate extraordinary richness ; and this rendering was not verified by the fact ; for while Haggai’s temple stood, the Jews were in a dependant and depressed state, and the temple itself not honoured, but often profaned and spoiled by foreign nations ; as we read in the history of the Maccabees.

3. The second temple included both Haggai’s and Herod’s, as we have seen, contrary to his supposition.

4. And is this illustrious title, THE DESIRE, or THE DELIGHT OF ALL NATIONS, appropriated to the BLESSED SEED OF THE WOMAN, from the beginning of the world, even before the Abrahamic covenant, at the time of the fall of our first parents ; and a long established prophecy, to be relinquished, merely upon the mistranslation of a gloss ? which also contradicts the express testimony of the best historian of those times, (Josephus.)

5. “The most plausible objections to the CHRISTIAN RELIGION,” as the Doctor observes, “have been made out of the weak arguments which have been advanced in its support.”—But surely this illustrious prophecy of Haggai deserves not to be ranked among those proofs which should be hastily surrendered to the adversaries of our holy faith ; which, though founded, at first, on “miracles,” is built and established, in these latter days, on the “former prophetic argument,” 2 Pet. i. 16—19.

There seems, indeed, to be an alarming propensity in some modern expositors of Scripture, to relinquish evidence the most tenable, on the first suspicion of its authenticity ; either through indolence, because they will not “search the SCRIPTURES” thoroughly, or through an affectation of candour, and freedom from prejudice. Such weak and injudicious concessions from the friends of religion, are more injurious and mischievous than the open attacks of its enemies ; “the pestilence that walketh in darkness,” is more formidable than “the arrow that flieth in the noon day.”

ZECHARIAH’S VISIONS AND PROPHECIES.

The authority of this prophet was equally effectual to promote the building of the Temple.

IV. 8. THE ORACLE OF THE LORD came unto me saying,

9. “The hands of Zerubbabel have laid the foundation of this house ; his hands shall also finish it. And he shall know

[by the performance,] that THE LORD OF HOSTS hath sent me unto you."

As the prophet Haggai had connected the present Temple with the future, and announced the greater glory of the last, so Zechariah, in continuation, ascribes the building of the future to CHRIST, at his second coming, in the following parallel prophecy.

VI. 12. "Behold the man * , whose name is THE BRANCH :

Even from beneath shall he branch forth,

And build the temple of THE LORD ;

13. Even He shall build the temple of THE LORD.

And He shall receive glory

And shall sit and rule upon his throne,

And shall be priest upon his throne ;

And the counsel of peace

Shall be between them both, [i. e. THE LORD and THE BRANCH]—

15. And they afar off shall come,

And build in the temple of THE LORD."

1. THE BRANCH, the title here given to CHRIST, is taken from Isaiah, who styled him, "a branch from the stem of Jesse," xi. 1 ; and from Jeremiah, "a righteous branch, or descendant of David," xxiii. 5, who was to be the builder of the spiritual Temple in the latter days ; according to Nathan's prophecy, 2 Sam. vii. 13.

2. "He was to branch forth from beneath," or flourish from the earth, after his interment, at his resurrection, Isai. vii. 11 ; Matt. xii. 40, xvi. 4 ; John iii. 19 ; when he was to receive "glory" from THE FATHER, Psalm ii. 7, xxi. 5 ; Dan. vii. 14 ; Acts iii. 13, v. 31 ; Matt. xxviii. 18.

3. He was to sit and rule upon his throne, at the right hand of the FATHER, as REGENT and HIGH-PRIEST, Psalm cx. 1—4 ; Isai. vi. 1 ; Mal. iii. 1.

4. And they were to dispense peace to mankind, John iii. 16, 17 ; Luke ii. 14 ; Rev. xxi. 1—5, xxi. 22, 23.

5. The final conversion of the whole earth, seems to be intimated in the conclusion, "And they afar off shall come," and as foretold in prophecy, Micah iv. 1—3 ; Isaiah ii. 2—4, &c.

2. Zechariah, in another prophecy, describes the first coming

* To this expression, and to the succeeding, "Behold thy king," ix. 10, Pilate might have alluded, John xix. 5—14. The Septuagint Greek version was current in Pilate's time ; he might, therefore, have been led from curiosity, and the general expectation of the coming of the Messiah, in that age, to read so remarkable a prophecy.

of Christ in the character of SHILOH, Gen. xlix. 11 ; Isai. lxii. 11, 12.

IX. 10. " Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Sion,
Shout, O daughter of Jerusalem,
Behold THY KING cometh unto thee,
He is JUST, and a SAVIOUR,
Lowly, and sitting upon an ass,
Even upon a colt, the foal of an ass."

See the express application of this prophecy to CHRIST, by the evangelists, Matt. xxi. 5 ; John xii. 15.

3. The rejection of CHRIST by the Jews, at his first coming, in the character of THE SHEPHERD OF ISRAEL, Gen. xlix. 24 ; Psalm lxxx. 1 ; Isai. xl. 11 ; and some of the most remarkable circumstances and consequences of it, his sale for thirty pieces of silver, his crucifixion, and the slaughter and destruction of the Jews by the Romans, and their final restoration, are foretold in the following prophecies :

- XI. 4. " Thus saith THE LORD MY GOD,
Feed * the flock of slaughter ;
5. Which these that buy them, slay,
And hold themselves guiltless ;
And those that sell them, say,
Blessed be the Lord, for I am rich !
Even their own shepherds spare them not !
6. For I will no longer spare
The inhabitants of the land, saith THE LORD.
But lo, I will deliver up every man,
Into the hand of his fellow, and into the hand of his king :
And they shall smite the land,
And I will not deliver [it] out of their hand,
7. So I fed † the flock of slaughter,
Even the poor ‡ of the flock.
And I took unto me two staves,
The one I called beauty, and the other bands,
And I fed the flock.
Three shepherds § also I cut off in one month,
And my soul was grieved at them,
And their soul also loathed me.
9. Then I said, I will not feed you ;

* John x. 14 ; Matt. xv. 24 ; John xxi. 16, xx. 17,

† Ibid.

‡ Matt. v. 3 ; Luke vi. 20 ; Matt. xi. 4.

§ שלשת הרעים. " A triad of shepherds." This may, perhaps, denote the three classes of chief priests, Scribes, and Pharisees, Matt. xxvii. 41, against whom, as " hypocrites," OUR LORD denounces severe " woes."

- That which dieth, let it die,
 And that which is lost, let it be lost ;
 And let the rest devour each others flesh.
10. So I took my staff, beauty, and cut it asunder,
 To break my covenant which I had made
 With all the peoples [of Israel and Judah,]
11. And it was broken in that day.
 And thus the poor of the flock who observed me,
 Knew that it was the word of the Lord.
12. Then said I unto them,
 If ye think good, give me my price,
 And if not, forbear.
So they weighed for my price thirty [pieces] of silver.
13. And the Lord said unto me,
*Cast it to the potter : (the goodly price
 At which I was valued by them !)
 And I took the thirty [pieces] of silver,
 And cast them [in] the house of the Lord,
 To the potter .
14. Then I cut asunder my second staff, bands,
 To break the brotherhood between Judah and Israel."

-
- XII. 9. " And it shall come to pass in that day [of deliverance,]
 I will seek to destroy all the nations
 That come against Jerusalem.
10. But I will pour upon the house of David,
 And upon all the inhabitants of Jerusalem,
 The spirit of grace and of supplications,
And they shall look upon Him whom they pierced †.
 And they shall mourn for him,
 As one mourning for an only son,
 And shall be in grief for him,
 As one grieving for his first born."

-
- XIII. 6. " And one shall say unto him,
What are these wounds in thy hands ‡ ?
 Then shall he say,
 [Those] with which I was wounded
In the house of my friends.
7. Awake, O sword, against MY SHEPHERD,
 And against the man that is MY ASSOCIATE,
 Saith THE LORD OF HOSTS.
Smite THE SHEPHERD, and the sheep shall be scattered §,
 And I will turn my hand against the little ones ||,
8. And it shall come to pass, saith THE LORD,
 That in the whole land, two parts shall be cut off,

* Matt. xxvii. 3—10.

† John xix. 37 ; Rev. i. 5.

‡ Psalm xxii. 16 ; John xx. 20—27.

§ Matt. xxvi. 31, John xvi. 32.

|| Luke xxiii. 28, 29.

- And die, and the third part shall be left therein.
9. And I will bring the third part through the fire,
 And will refine them as silver is refined,
 And will try them as gold is tried.
 They shall call on my name,
 And I will answer them,
 And I will say, They are my people,
 And they shall say, THE LORD IS MY GOD."

In the first of these characteristic prophecies respecting CHRIST, He is commissioned by THE FATHER to feed the flock, destined to slaughter, by the avarice and rapacity of their pastors; who should be destroyed by the hands of each other, and of their "king" Cæsar, whom they had chosen in preference to CHRIST, John xix. 15, breaking their covenant with CHRIST, which is figuratively expressed by the staff beauty, now broken also by THE SHEPHERD. Then is noticed the paltry price of thirty pieces of silver, (the compensation for the death of a slave, gored by an ox, Exod. xxi. 32,) for which CHRIST was betrayed and sold to the chief priests, by Judas, Matt. xxvii. 3—10*.

* This remarkable prophecy is applied, with some variation, by the evangelist, Matt. xxvii. 3—10.

After Judas had returned the thirty pieces of silver, for which he had betrayed his master, and cast them down in the temple, he departed and hanged himself in despair. Then the chief priests, who scrupled to put it into the sacred treasury, because it was the price of blood, took the money and bought therewith the Potter's field, to bury strangers in.

"Then was fulfilled that which was spoken by [Jeremiah] the prophet, saying, And they took the thirty pieces of silver, the price of him that was (so meanly) valued by the children of Israel, [whom they valued,] and gave them for the potter's field, as THE LORD appointed me."

In this passage there seem to be two interpolations.

1. Of Ιερεμιου, "Jeremiah," which is omitted by the Syriac and Persic Versions, and by two Latin copies in Blanchini's Evang. Quad. Augustine also observed that some Latin copies in his time, to which he attached credit, had only "per prophetam." See Wetstein.

2. Of the words, ὃν ἐτιμησαντο, "whom they valued," which are evidently a gloss upon τοῦ τετιμημένου ἀπο νόων Ἰσραὴλ, "who was valued by the children of Israel."

3. Καθὼς συνεταξέ μοι Κύριος. This refers to the beginning, "And the Lord said unto me, Cast it to the potter," &c. Zech. xi. 13, and is not immediately applicable to the act of the chief priests, unless their act, and the foregoing of Judas, of casting down the money in the temple, &c. may be ultimately imputed to CHRIST, as done by his instruments.

4. "The price of him that was valued by the children of Israel so meanly," expresses the sense of the indignant parenthetical remark of CHRIST in the prophecy, (the goodly price at which I was valued by them!) And it may in general be remarked, that the citations from ancient prophecy, by the evangelists, are adapted to the spirit rather than to the letter of the text; forming the best commentaries thereon.

Next the dreadful discord among the Jews themselves, that followed, by breaking the second staff, bands, or concord; adopting the imagery of Ezekiel, xxxvii. 16.

The next expresses the sorrow and compunction of the Jews, on their final conversion to CHRIST, for having crucified him. Which is so understood and applied by the evangelist, John xix. 37, Rev. i. 7.

The last describes “the wounds in his hands,” when He, the TRUE SHEPHERD, was smitten, and the sheep scattered; as applied Matt. xxvi. 31, Mark xiv. 27.

4. The final restoration of Jerusalem is predicted in the vision of a man with a measuring line in his hand, who was going to measure the length and breadth thereof, ii. 1—3. When this angel was departing, another superior angel desires him to inform the prophet, “Jerusalem shall be inhabited, without a wall, on account of the multitude of men and cattle to be contained therein.” This superior angel, (who strongly resembles the spiritual HIGH PRIEST in Daniel) then proceeds to declare, “And I, saith THE LORD, will be unto her a wall of fire round about, and I will be in the midst of her, for glory,” ii. 5. This sublime and beautiful imagery of the divine illuminating and protecting presence, residing in, and about, the New Jerusalem, is also found in Isaiah, lx. 19, and copied from both in the Apocalypse, Rev. xxi. 23; and the measuring line and rods, are also found in Jeremiah, predicting the future increase of the city, xxxi. 38—40; in Ezekiel, xl. 3—42, xlviii. 30—35; and copied in the Apocalypse, Rev. xi. 1, xxi. 15, 16. Indeed, “a good critical commentary upon this prophet, would be the best key to the opening of all the rest,” as judiciously remarked by Dr. Gregory Sharpe, p. 50, from whom also we learn, p. 355, that “THE SHEPHERD OF ISRAEL,” Zech. xi. 4—7, is CHRIST himself, and not Zechariah *; and when he is dismissed and rejected by his people, he demands, and receives, the paltry price of his services, which he casts contemptuously to the potter, by his unworthy instruments, Judas and the chief priests, as explained by the event.

* Not attending to this, Bishop Newcome and Dr. Blaney have miserably perplexed and obscured the prophecy in their translations and notes. Zechariah could not be “the shepherd” meant, as they suppose, with Grotius; but CHRIST himself, who made, and dissolved his covenant with the Jews, Zech. xi. 10, as well observed by Tarnovius, in Poole’s Synopsis, Vol. III. p. 214.

Among the evangelical prophets, who foretold the advents and character of CHRIST, none ranks higher than Zechariah; the prophetic spirit shining clearer and brighter as the time approached. And how was he treated by his ungrateful countrymen? “Zechariah, the son of Barachiah, was slain by them between the sanctuary (vaov) and the altar,” by the most atrocious sacrilege! as we learn from OUR LORD himself, Matt. xxiii. 35.

DARIUS HYSTASPES.

This wise and liberal prince afforded the Jews protection and encouragement during his reign. He was himself a disciple of the second Zoroaster, or Zerdusht, the reformer of the religion of the Magi, or Persian priesthood. Zerdusht was a servant of one of the Jewish prophets, probably of Daniel the Archimagus. See an account of his tenets in Prideaux.

XERXES.

Notwithstanding the opposition of the Samaritans, who in the beginning of his reign, (Ahasuerus’,) wrote unto him an accusation against the inhabitants of Judah and Jerusalem, Ezra iv. 6, Xerxes confirmed to the Jews all the privileges granted them by his father, especially the grant of the Samaritan tribute, for carrying on the building of the temple, and for the support of the temple worship and sacrifices. Joseph. Ant. xi, 4, 8, xi. 5, 1.

ARTAXERXES LONGIMANUS.

In the beginning of his reign the Jews set about rebuilding Jerusalem, and erecting the walls; but were stopped by an order from him, in consequence of a letter of complaint from the principal Samaritan officers, Rehum the chancellor, Shimshai the scribe, &c. against “the rebellious and bad city,” stating, that if it was allowed to be rebuilt and walled again, the inhabitants would foment sedition, as they had formerly done, and endanger the collection of the king’s revenue, by refusing to pay toll, tribute, or custom. And they appealed to the records of the empire to prove, that Jerusalem had formerly been destroyed, and its walls dismantled, because it had been a rebellious and seditions city. Whereupon, search having been made, the fact was found to be true; and the king, by letter, authorized the Samaritan chiefs to stop the work until further orders, which they did forthwith, “by force and power,” Ezra iv. 6—23*.

The opposition of the Samaritans on this occasion, was well timed. Egypt had revolted from the Persian yoke, at the instigation of Inarus; immediately on hearing the death of Xerxes, as we learn from Diodorus Siculus, lib. ii. The Samaritans therefore, could not have chosen a fitter opportunity to carry their point, or a stronger argument to work upon the king’s fears, than the danger that might result from permitting the Jews to fortify their city; not only of their following the rebellious example of the Egyptians, in refusing to pay tribute, but also of their obstructing the passage of the Persian army to be employed in the reduction of Egypt, either going or returning, through Palestine.

Artaxerxes, after he had subdued all his domestic foes and competitors for the crown, in the third year of his reign, instituted a general rejoicing at Susa, for half a year; and at a public banquet, when the queen Vashti refused to obey his summons, and shew herself and her beauty to the princes and the people, he deposed her from being queen, by the advice of his council, and appointed Esther, a Jewess, in her place, in preference to all the other virgins, her competitors, in the fourth year of his reign, Esther i. ii.

N. B. The royal title, Ahasuerus, in this book of Esther, is rendered “Artaxerxes” by the Septuagint Version, the apocryphal book of Esther and Josephus.

When Artaxerxes was firmly established on the throne, he

* This whole passage, ver. 6—23, is an historical anticipation, introduced, parenthetically, into the account of the former opposition of the Samaritans to rebuilding the temple from the time of Cyrus to Darius Hystaspes; describing their subsequent oppositions to rebuilding Jerusalem and its walls, in the ensuing reigns of Xerxes and Artaxerxes. It comes in between ver. 5 and 24, of this fourth chapter; of which the latter verse takes up the subject of the former again, and the fifth chapter proceeds immediately to the account of rebuilding the temple, on the exhortation of the prophets Haggai and Zechariah, by Zerubbabel and Jeshua, &c.

The merit of distinguishing these different oppositions, (which have been confounded by the best chronologers and commentators, Petavius, Usher, Prideaux, Le Clerc, Patrick, &c.) is due to Hoves, in his ingenious Strictures on Richardson’s Dissertations on the Literature of Eastern Nations. See his CRITICAL OBSERVATIONS ON BOOKS, Vol. II. p. 82, &c.

turned his arms against the Egyptians, and after various reverses of fortune, happily finished the war, in the sixth year of his reign, according to Diodorus.

EZRA.

Hence, we may presume, in the seventh year of his reign, "Ezra the priest, and a scribe of the law of the GOD OF HEAVEN *," was sent by the king and his council to Jerusalem, to beautify or adorn the house of THE LORD, out of respect to the former edicts of Cyrus and Darius Hystaspes, and to collect donations from the Jews of Babylon, for the service of the Temple, and also liberal offerings from the royal treasures; and he was also vested with ample powers, civil and ecclesiastical, "to appoint magistrates and judges throughout Judea and Samaria, and all the countries beyond the river, or westwards of the Euphrates, all such as knew the laws of his God, and to teach those that knew them not." He was authorized also to take with him all the people, priests, and Levites of Israel, who were willing to return from the captivity to Jerusalem; and the reason assigned for these regulations is highly honourable to the king's piety: "Whatsoever is commanded by THE GOD OF HEAVEN, let it be diligently done for the house of THE GOD OF HEAVEN; lest there be wrath [from Him] against the realm of the king and his sons," Ezra vi. 14; vii. 11—27.

This is a juster and nobler motive than "the solicitations of Esther," assigned by Prideaux, p. 205.

In this decree, however, we may observe that Ezra's commission is limited to the temple and its concerns, without any mention of repairing the walls. When Ezra, therefore, in his ensuing prayer, thanks GOD for giving the Jews "a wall in Judah and Jerusalem," ix. 9, he is not to be understood literally; the original term probably signifies "the fence of a shepherd's fold," here figuratively taken for their establishment again in their own land, "Judah," as well as "Jerusalem."

This pious ecclesiastic left Babylon with a party of 1754 persons, composed of the children of Israel, the priests, Levites, porters, singers, or choristers, and Nethinims †, or posterity of the Gibeonites, appointed by Joshua, and afterwards by David, for the service of the Temple; according to the catalogue, Ezra viii. 1—20. They set out on the first day of the first month, in the seventh year of the king's reign, and reached Jerusalem on the first day of the fifth month, after a journey of four months, under the divine protection only; for Ezra ingenuously confesses, "I was ashamed to require of the king a band of soldiers and horsemen, to defend us against the enemy (the Arabs), in the way, because we had spoken unto the king, saying, The hand of OUR GOD is upon all them for good that seek Him, but his power and his wrath is against all them that forsake Him," Ezra vii. 6—9; viii. 21—31.

* Prideaux has a learned and interesting article on Ezra, and his Canon of the OLD TESTAMENT, Vol. I. p. 253—286.

† Nethinims signifies "those who surrendered themselves."

The first reform of Ezra was the abolition of strange marriages with the idolatrous people of the land; for which the divine wrath visited them with great rain; and this offence prevailed not only among the congregation, but even among the sons of the high-priest Jeshua, and his brethren, and among the other priests, who all promised to put away their strange wives, chap. ix. and x.

In the fourteenth year of Artaxerxes, a dreadful plot for the massacre of all the Jews throughout his dominions, and the spoliation of their goods, contrived by Haman, the Amalekite, and an inveterate foe of that nation, was defeated by the piety and address of Esther the queen, and turned upon the contriver himself, who was destroyed with all his family, as related at length in the book of Esther.

On this occasion was displayed the mischievous effect of that absurd law of the Medes and Persians, that the king's decree, when signed by him, and sealed with his seal, could not be changed or repealed. For Artaxerxes was obliged to issue a counter decree, empowering the Jews to take up arms in self-defence, and to repel their assailants by force. In consequence of which, they slew in the palace of Shushan, on the appointed day of massacre, five hundred men, and the next day, continued at Esther's request, three hundred more; and in the provinces, seventy-five thousand men! Such was the bloody result of a rash and unjust decree, ratified at a banquet, "when the king and Haman sat down to drink, but the city of Shushan was perplexed."

NEHEMIAH.

At length, in the twentieth year of his reign, Artaxerxes granted that permission, which he had so long refused, of rebuilding the walls of Jerusalem, to the instances of Nehemiah, a Jew, and his cup-bearer, (when Esther the queen was present, Nehem. ii. 6,) whom he appointed tirshatha, or governor of Judea, in succession to Zerubbabel, Nehem. xii. 47, (whose death, about this time, might furnish an additional reason for his appointment,) while “Ezra, the priest and scribe,” zealously co-operated with him in his proper function of teaching the law to the people, Nehem. viii. 1—9; xii. 26.

Nehemiah was empowered to repair the wall and set up the gates, to build a palace for himself, and afterwards to rebuild the city; and, in conjunction with Ezra, to establish the civil and ecclesiastical polity of the nation. All which he accomplished with singular zeal, ability, and disinterestedness, in the course of his administration of twelve years; not without great threats and opposition from the chiefs of the surrounding nations, Sanballat the Samaritan, and his army, Tobiah the Ammonite, the Arabians, and the Ashdodites (or remnant of the Philistines.) But Nehemiah piously encouraged the people to rely on THE LORD, and “to fight for their brethren, their sons and their daughters, their wives, and their houses.” And he divided them into two parts, one to fight, and the other to build; and the builders too, “with one hand wrought in the work, and with the other held a weapon.” So the whole wall, which he had distributed in lots among the priests and heads of the people, was finished in the short space of fifty-two days. See chap. ii.—iv. and vi. 15, and vii. 1—4, and xi. 1, 2.

This change in the conduct of Artaxerxes, respecting the Jews, may be accounted for upon sound political principles, and not merely from regard to the solicitations of his cup-bearer, or the influence of his queen.

Four years before, in the sixteenth year of his reign, Artaxerxes, who, after the reduction of Egypt, had prosecuted the war against their auxiliaries the Athenians, suffered a signal defeat of his forces by sea and land, from Cimon the Athenian general, which compelled him to make an inglorious peace with them, upon the humiliating conditions, 1. That the Greek cities throughout Asia should be free, and enjoy their own laws ; 2. That no Persian governor of the provinces should come within three days' journey of any part of the sea coast with an army ; and 3. That no Persian ships of war should sail between the northern extremity of Asia Minor and the boundary of Palestine, according to Diodorus Siculus, lib. XII.

Thus excluded from the whole line of sea coast, and precluded from keeping garrisons in any of the maritime towns, it became not only a matter of prudence, but of necessity, to conciliate the Jews ; to attach them to the Persian interest, and detach them from the Grecian, by further privileges ; that the Persians might have the benefit of a friendly fortified town like Jerusalem, within three days' journey of the sea, and a most important pass, to keep open the communication between Persia and Egypt ; and to confirm this conjuncture (originally due to Howes), we may remark, that in all the ensuing Egyptian wars, the Jews remained faithful to the Persians, and even after the Macedonian invasion :—and surely some such powerful motive must have been opposed in the king's mind to the jealousy and displeasure this measure must unavoidably excite in the neighbouring provinces hostile to the Jews, whose remonstrances had so much weight with him formerly. It was necessary, therefore, to entrust the arduous and important commission to an officer high in favour, trust, and confidence, such as Nehemiah, whose services at court Artaxerxes reluctantly dispensed with, as appears from his appointing a set time for Nehemiah's return, and afterwards, from his return again to Persia, in the thirty second year of his reign. Compare ii. 6, v. 14, and xiii. 6.

How zealously he and his pious coadjutor discharged their commission, we may collect from the feast of tabernacles, which they celebrated with such remarkable solemnity, that it exceeded any held since the days of Joshua the son of Nun, at their first entrance into the promised land, Neh. viii. 9—18 : from the Levites' humble and pathetic confession of the sins of the people, and the iniquities of their forefathers, chap. ix. ; and from the solemn covenant, sealed by Nehemiah himself, the priests, Levites, and heads of the people, 1. To walk in God's law given by Moses ; 2. Not to intermarry with the people of the land ; 3. To observe the sabbath day, and not to buy nor sell goods or provisions thereon ; 4. To keep the sabbatical year, and remit debts therein ; 5. To pay a tax of the third of a shekel yearly, for the service of the temple ; 6. And to bring the first fruits of the ground, of their sons and of their cattle, to the house of God ; 7. And to give tythes to the Levites, chap. x.

During Nehemiah's absence at the court of Persia, these salutary regulations, and that solemn covenant were gradually infringed and violated, 1. Even Eliashib, the high priest, gave Tobiah the Ammonite, (the grand opposer of Nehemiah, iv. 3—7, vi. 19 ; but who, as well as his son Johanán, had married Jewish women, vi. 18, and was allied to the high priest) for lodgings, even in the temple itself, a great chamber, in which before was stored all the tythes of the Levites, and the offerings of the priests ; 2. And one of the grandsons of Eliashib, was son-in-law to Sanballat the Horonite, (another of Nehemiah's great opposers.) 3. The temple service was neglected ; the tythes appointed for the support of the Levites and singers, having been either embezzled by the high-priest or his deputies, or else subtracted by the laity. 4. The sabbath was profaned by selling victuals, and carrying burdens of all kinds. 5. And strange marriages were frequent among the people.

To redress these abuses and corruptions, “ after certain days,” or years, in which they had gained ground, Nehemiah obtained leave of the king to return to Jerusalem ; we may therefore date his return near the close of Artaxerxes' reign, B.C. 424, about eight years at the soonest, after he had left Jerusalem *. And this great work of reform he vigorously set about, and probably completed, not sooner than the fourth year of Darius Nothus, whom he calls “ Darius the Persian ;” and to whose reign he brings down the succession of the high priests, from the time of the return of the Jews, namely, Jeshua, Joachim, Eliashib, Joiada, Johanán, and Jaddua, xii. 10—22, xiii. 4—31 ; and from this year, B.C. 420 of the complete restoration of the Jewish polity, we may date the end of the Jewish canon, and commencement of Daniel's seventy weeks, with Scaliger and Mede, and even with David Levi, as shall be shewn in the sequel.

MALACHI'S PROPHECIES.

He was the last of the Jewish prophets, and the contemporary of Nehemiah ; to whose restoration of the Jewish polity, and final reform, he appears to have contributed the weight of his exhortations.

* Prideaux dates Nehemiah's return four years earlier, B.C. 427, or only five years after he left Jerusalem, which does not allow sufficient time for the corruptions to gain ground.

1. He reproves the priests and the people for sacrificing “polluted bread offerings,” and the refuse of their cattle, “the torn, and the lame, and the sick ;” and he foretels that pure offering [THE LORD’S supper,] to be presented to the LORD by the Gentiles, from the rising to the setting sun, i. 6—14.

2. He denounces “a curse,” or punishment, against the priests, for not instructing the people in the law, but causing them to stumble at the law ; and for being partial in their decisions, in favour of the rich against the poor, ii. 1—10.

3. He censures the intermarriages of the Jews with idolatresses, “the daughters of a strange god ;” the divorces of their lawful wives, “dealing unfaithfully every man against his brother, by putting away his daughter,” and “covering with the tears” of the divorced wives “the altar of THE LORD ;” and warns them “not to deal unfaithfully with the wife of their youth,” ver. 11—16.

4. He censures them for their wickedness, and for supposing that God would not mind nor judge it, ver. 17, iii. 15.

5. He taxes them with robbing GOD of their tythes and offerings ; and recommends them to bring the tythes into the storehouse of the temple, and that they should be blessed with abundant plenty, iii. 8—12.

6. He foretels the coming of CHRIST, and his harbinger the Baptist, to refine and purify the sons of Levi, the priests, and to smite the land with a curse, unless they all repented ; and the final conversion of the Jews, in the following remarkable prophecies :

- III. 1. “Behold I will send my angel [or messenger, the Baptist,]
And he shall prepare the way before Me.
And THE REGENT whom ye seek,
Shall suddenly come to his temple ;
Even THE ANGEL OF THE COVENANT in whom ye delight, Behold he shall come, saith THE LORD OF HOSTS.
2. “But who may abide the day of his coming,
And who shall stand at his appearance ;
For he shall be as a refiner’s fire,
And as fuller’s soap.
3. “And he shall sit refining and purifying the silver,
And shall purify the sons of Levi,
And shall refine them as gold and silver.
Then shall they offer unto THE LORD
An offering in righteousness.

4. "Then shall the offering of Judah and Jerusalem
Be pleasing unto THE LORD
As in the days of old,
And as in former years."

The application of the first angel or messenger, in this prophecy, to John the Baptist, is determined by three evangelists, Matt. xi. 10, Mark i. 2, Luke vii. 27, in the last case, upon the highest authority, that of OUR LORD himself; with a slight accommodation of expression: here GOD declares "he shall prepare the way before ME," or before the MESSIAH, who shall act in my name, as speaking to the Jews; there "he shall prepare the way before thee," as speaking to the MESSIAH. Indeed, the change of persons and speakers in ancient prophecies*, and the abrupt transitions which often take place, from THE LORD to THE MESSIAH, or to the prophet, without previous intimation, constitute the chief difficulty in expounding them, and require the most skilful discrimination of the interpreter. See Deut. xxxii. 31—33, where Moses is the speaker, Zech. xi. 11, CHRIST, and Isai. xxxvii. 26, THE LORD, in reply to Sennacherib's boast, ver. 24, 25, &c.

The second angel, or messenger, superior to the first, is styled, by way of eminence, מְלִיכָא, "THE REGENT," as CHRIST was described, Psalm cx. 1, "THE ANGEL OF THE COVENANT," or "MEDIATOR OF THE NEW COVENANT," which is synonymous therewith. Compare Acts vii. 35, Gal. iii. 19, with Heb. ix. 15, xii. 24, who threatens to refine and purify the sons of Levi, or the priesthood, (of whom he had complained, as THE SHEPHERD OF ISRAEL, in Zechariah xi. 4—8,) and "to smite the land with a curse," if they were disobedient to his first messenger, or forerunner.

- IV. 5. "Behold, I will send unto you Elijah the prophet,
Before the coming of the great and terrible day of THE LORD,
To turn the hearts of the fathers toward the children,
And the hearts of the children toward the fathers;
Lest I come and smite the land with a curse."

This great and terrible day of the LORD was the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, A.D. 70, to which John the Baptist, who came in the character of Elijah, or Elias, in his "power and spirit," of conversion and reproof, Luke i. 17, called the attention of his hearers. "O generation of vipers, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come?" &c. Luke iii. 7—14.

* "It is a remark that deserves particular attention, that the prophets, representing two persons, THE MESSIAH and themselves, in the very same discourses; will sometimes speak of themselves, and at other times in the character they are commanded to assume. Of this a thousand instances might be given." Sharpe's Second Argument, &c. p. 351.

With this awful prophecy of the Roman captivity, the prophetic canon of the Old Testament closes. Malachi flourished about B. C. 420, according to Kennicot, Dissert. Gen. § 14, p. 6, which sufficiently accords with the description of Josephus, and the varying accounts of chronologers. See Vol. I. p. 298. And with this same year, B. C. 420, we date the commencement of Daniel's famous prophecy of the seventy weeks, or 490 years, ending with the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus, after "MESSIAH the leader should be cut off," which remains to be distinctly considered, as forming one of the class of chronological prophecies.

From the "review of the leading prophecies of the OLD TESTAMENT, from Moses to Malachi, descriptive of the character and of the advents of THE MESSIAH," given in this work, we are abundantly warranted to conclude, that they were all together fulfilled in "JESUS OF NAZARETH," and all together in no other person. And that "this is HE, whom Moses and the prophets did say should come," to "whom give all the prophets witness," for "the testifying of JESUS is the spirit (or drift) of prophecy." The challenge of David Levi is now answered, and the Jews, we trust, left without excuse for their infidelity. See the Preface to this volume.

DANIEL'S VISIONS.

This highly-favoured prophet was early admired and celebrated in the Jewish Church for his consummate piety and wisdom, even in his own days. Ezekiel, his fellow captive, speaks of him proverbially, "Behold, thou art wiser than Daniel, no secret can be hid from thee!" xxviii. 3. And he ranks him among, and between, the most powerful intercessors with God, Noah for himself and family, and Job for his friends. "When the land sinneth, though these three men, Noah, Daniel, and Job, were in it, they should deliver but their own souls by their righteousness, saith THE LORD GOD," xiv. 14—18—20.

The apocryphal history of Susanna and the elders furnishes an instance of his judicial wisdom in early youth, by which he detected the false accusation of the elders. She is supposed to have been the wife of Jehoiachin, the captive king of Judah, by some of the Jewish Rabbis.

And Josephus, the great Jewish historian, thus describes him and his writings :—

“ It is fit to mention what may chiefly excite the hearer’s wonder in this person’s history. He was blessed with extraordinary good fortune in all things, as one of the greatest prophets, and during his life he was held in honour and esteem both by kings and by the multitude, and after his death he still enjoys an eternal remembrance. For the books that he wrote, and left behind him, are still read among us even now, and from them we believe that Daniel conversed with GOD; for he not only predicted future events like the other prophets, throughout the course of his function, but he also determined the time in which they were to happen. And when other prophets foretold ills, and were for that reason disliked by kings and the people, Daniel on the contrary was a prophet of good things to them, insomuch that from the favourable nature of his predictions he gained the good will of all; and from the certainty of the event, he also acquired with the multitude the credit and reputation of *divinity.” Ant. x. 11, 7.

And to crown all, our Lord himself expressly cites “ Daniel the prophet” by name, in explaining his predictions concerning the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans to his confidential disciples, Matt. xxiv. 15; an honour which he paid only to Moses, David, and Jonah besides. And on his iniquitous trial before the high-priest and Jewish council, he expressly applied to himself the famous prophecy of THE SON OF MAN coming in the clouds of heaven, Dan. vii. 13, which the high-priest immediately interpreted of THE MESSIAH, or THE SON OF GOD, rent his clothes, and charged him with blasphemy, Matt. xxvi.

* This representation is not quite correct. Daniel’s predictions were rather unfavourable or ominous to the enquirers, Nebuchadnezzar and Belshazzar, and to his countrymen the Jews, during the long continued period of the Roman captivity and ensuing desolation. Still, however, the unequivocal proofs he gave of divine inspiration, by revealing mysteries the most wonderful and stupendous, extorted the astonishment, the rewards, and even the adoration of those proud and haughty tyrants, whose fierceness was thereby turned to the praise of GOD, by whom they were humbled and punished. In this respect, the homage of the predicted sufferers themselves, evidently ranks him much higher in the scale of prophets, than if his responses had been favourable to their wishes.

63—65. The apprehensions of the Jewish council also, “lest the Romans should come and take away both their [holy] place and nation,” John xi. 48, were evidently founded on Daniel’s prophecies, especially that of the seventy weeks. And Josephus soon after said, that “Daniel wrote also concerning the Roman empire, and how that the land would be desolated by them,” evidently referring to “the transgression of desolation,” viii. 13, or the abomination of desolation, ix. 27, and xii. 11. And he recommended the perusal of the book of Daniel to all those who wished to understand the truth respecting futurity. Ant. x. 10, 4.

Of the high estimation indeed in which Daniel’s prophecies were held at that time, and a good while after, there cannot be a more unequivocal proof than the corruption of the Jewish Chronology in the Seder Olam Rabba, which rated the destruction of Jerusalem by the Babylonians, B. C. 422, and again by the Romans, A. D. 68, falsifying both dates, in order that the interval, 490 years, might correspond to their misinterpretation of the seventy weeks, the correct interval being B. C. 586 + A. D. 70 = 656 years, or 166 years more. And perhaps, to the detection of this error, in later times, (which was their own fault, and not the prophet’s) we may ascribe the low estimation in which the book of Daniel began to be held about the eleventh century, when it was degraded from the canon of the prophets into the lowest class *; and the Targum of Jonathan ben Uzziel thereon was probably suppressed, “he having been restrained (according to the legend of R. Abrudaham) from proceeding to explain Daniel, after he had explained Job, Proverbs, and the Psalms, by a voice that bid him stop there, lest the sons of men should learn from Daniel the time of the MESSIAH.” Hence the Rabbinical curse to any that attempt it, “May their bones be broken, may their souls go out, who compute the periods of the times!”

The visions of Daniel form a select class of prophecies; along with the diversified imagery, the sublime and magnificent apparatus of Isaiah, Ezekiel, and Zechariah, they possess the minute historical detail of Moses, and surpass them all in chronological precision and accuracy. They seemed designed by that ONE AND THE SAME SPIRIT, which dictated the whole, for a supplement to the rest, containing that further information necessary to make them intelligible to after ages. Still they are very abstruse, especially in the latter unfulfilled prophecies, and require a fuller exposition than the preceding, and a more expanded analysis. As a preparation for which, I have endeavoured, in the following scheme, to give a general view of the argument, the particulars of which shall be afterwards explained.

* Maimonides was the leading adversary of the prophet: he was opposed by Abarbanel, Jacchiades, &c. asserting that Daniel had attained the highest pitch of prophecy. See their comments, or Bishop Chandler’s Vindication, &c. p. 96, &c.

SCHEME OF DANIEL'S VISIONS.

I. DREAM. B.C. 569.	I. VISION. B.C. 558.	II. VISION. B.C. 556.	III. VISION. B.C. 553.
A compound image of gold, silver, brass, and iron , denoting four successive kingdoms . Dan. ii. 31—33.	Four wild beasts rising from the sea . Dan. vii. 2, 3.
I. Kingdom. B.C. 606. The head of gold; the Babylonians . Daniel ii. 37, 38.	I. Kingdom. A lion with eagle's wings . Dan. vii. 4.	II. Kingdom. A ram with unequal horns , the last higher, pushing westward, and northward, and southward . Dan. viii. 3, 4.	IV. VISION. B.C. 534.
II. Kingdom. B.C. 536. The breast and arms of silver; the Medo-Persian . Dan. ii. 39.	II. Kingdom. A bear with three ribs in his mouth. Dan. vii. 6.	III. Kingdom. A swift he-goat from the west , with a great horn , afterwards broken into four smaller ones to the four winds , or quarters of the world. Dan. viii. 5—8.	III. Kingdom. A mighty king of Greece to overthrow the fourth king of Persia ; his kingdom to be divided into four inferior, to the four winds , but not to his posterity . Dan. xi. 2—4.
III. Kingdom. B.C. 331. The belly and thighs of brass; the Macedo-Greecian . Dan. ii. 39.	III. Kingdom. A leopard with four wings and four heads . Dan. vii. 6.	IV. Kingdom. A little horn , B.C. 753, springing from one of these four horns , (the western) and waxing exceeding great towards the south, the east, and	A wild beast rising out of the sea , with a leopard's body, bear's feet, and lion's mouth , having seven heads , and ten horns . Pagan Rome.
IV. Kingdom. The legs of iron, the feet and toes partly iron and clay ; 1. The Roman Republic , B.C. 168. 2. The Roman Empire , B.C. 30.	IV. Kingdom. 1. A strong and terrible wild beast , diverse from the rest, with iron teeth , and afterwards ten horns . Pagan Rome . Dan. vii. 7—19.	A mighty king of Greece to overthrow the fourth king of Persia ; his kingdom to be divided into four inferior, to the four winds , but not to his posterity . Dan. xi. 2—4. A wild beast rising out of the sea , with a leopard's body, bear's feet, and lion's mouth , having seven heads , and ten horns . Pagan Rome.	A wild beast rising out of the sea , with a leopard's body, bear's feet, and lion's mouth , having seven heads , and ten horns . Pagan Rome.

I. DREAM.

3. The ten kingdoms, partly strong and weak, A. D. 356—483.

1. Huns, (Hungary - - 356
2. * Ostrogoths,
(Mæsia-Italy)
377

3. Visigoths,
(Pannonia) 378

4. Franks,
(Gaul) - - 407

5. Vandals,
(Africa) - 407

6. Suevi,
(Spain) - 407

7. Burgundians,
(Burgundy) 407

8. * Heruli,
(Italy) - - 476

9. Saxons,
(Britain) - 476

10 * Longobards,
(Danube) 483
(Lombardy) 526

Gaul, &c. strong.
Italy, &c. weak.

V. Kingdom.

A. D. 31.

The kingdom of the stone founded in the time of the four kingdoms, during the last, upon their ruins, finally to become the kingdom of the mountain, to fill the whole earth, and to stand for ever. THE KINGDOM OF CHRIST. Dan. ii. 34, 35, 44, 45.

I. VISION.

2. A little horn springing up among and behind the ten, before which three of them were plucked up*.

It had eyes like a man, and a mouth speaking great things against THE MOST HIGH; and it persecuted the saints for a time, times, and half a time, or 1260 days, beginning A. D. 620, ending A. D. 1880. Dan. vii. 8—25, xii. 7.

* Three plucked up. Neruli in 488, Ostrogoths 553, Lombards in 756.

V. Kingdom.

1. THE ANCIENT OF DAYS to sit in judgment on the four beasts, to destroy the body of the fourth beast in the fire, for the great words of the little horn, and to spare the lives of the other three, for a time and a season. Dan. vii. 9—12.

2. THE SON OF MAN invested with universal and everlasting dominion, and the kingdom of the saints established, vii. 22—27.

II. VISION.

the pleasant land (of Judea.)

2. Magnifying itself at length against the Host, and THE PRINCE OF THE HOST.

3. And taking away the daily sacrifice, and casting down the place of his sanctuary. And 4. Trampling on the sanctuary and host for 2300 days, beginning B. C. 420, ending A. D. 1880.

Pagan Rome, afterwards Christian and Infidel. Dan. viii. 9—14, 23—25, xi. 31—45.

IV. VISION.

V. Kingdom.

The wilful king to be destroyed at the time of the end. Dan. xi. 45. The saints to be delivered at the resurrection of the just. Dan. xii. 1—3.

THE REFORMATION.

At the end of 1290 days from A. D. 70.

1. By Wickliffe, A. D. 1360.—1335 days from ditto.

2. By Huss, A. D. 1405. Dan. xii. 10—12.

III. VISION.

Rev. xiii. 1, 2. The daily sacrifice to be taken away, the city and sanctuary of Jerusalem to be destroyed, and the desolation to commence at the end of 70 weeks, or 490 years, beginning B. C. 420, and ending A. D. 70. Dan. ix. 24—27.

IV. VISION.

The wilful king to continue his persecutions, blasphemies, innovations, &c. till the time of the end. Dan. xi. 36—44.

APOCALYPSE.

THE REFORMATION.

First Angel. A. D. 1. Wickliffe 1360
Second Angel.
2. Huss - 1405
Third Angel.
3. Luther 1517
Rev. xiv. 6—12.

This chronological scheme* is designed to exhibit a general outline of the visions; to bring into one collective point of view the connection of the parts with each other, and with the whole. The two first visions are emblematical, like Nebuchadnezzar's dream, which they were designed to explain and unfold; the two latter are historical, designed to explain the former, and complete the whole; and the correspondence of the several visions with each other, furnishes the safest clue to guide our steps through the mazes of these most abstruse and mysterious prophecies †.

Though the four visions do not commence from the same point of time, yet they run parallel to each other during the period of their synchronism, or coincidence of the corresponding parts of each. The symbols employed in each vision are strictly appropriate to the subject, and perfectly consistent with each other in the several parts of it. The same things, indeed, in the different visions are represented by different symbols, as the second kingdom by the silver part of the image, a bear, and a ram; and sometimes different things by the same symbol, as the little horns of the first and second visions, the former denoting Papal, the latter Pagan Rome, or the Roman republic. Still, however, the conformity in the one case, and diversity in the other, is so strongly marked by appropriate circumstances,

* The profoundly learned Mede styles the four kingdoms of Daniel, "a prophetic chronology of times, measured by the succession of four principal kingdoms, from the beginning of the captivity of Israel, until THE MYSTERY OF GOD should be finished," p. 654.

† Mr. Faber, who has introduced a new era in the study of symbolical prophecy, by establishing a stricter mode of reasoning than has been hitherto employed by writers on this most abstruse subject, in his valuable Dissertations, Vol. I. chap. 2, has given some judicious observations on the nature and classes of such symbols, and in his Preface the following simple and excellent rules:—

I. To assign to each prophetic symbol its proper definite meaning, and never to vary from that meaning.

II. To allow no interpretation of a prophecy to be valid, except the prophecy agree in every particular with the event to which it is supposed to relate.

III. And to deny that any link of a chronological prophecy is capable of receiving its accomplishment in more than one sense.

By the skilful application of these rules, he has detected several errors in the explanations of his predecessors.

To these rules I will venture to add a fourth:—

IV. To endeavour to find out the general scheme of the prophecy in question, by careful comparison of the parts with the whole, and with corresponding prophecies earlier and later.

With such a rule in contemplation, he might have rendered his work more methodical, and less diffusive, and consequently more generally useful.

that if the symbols themselves be correctly defined, and these circumstances carefully attended to, there can be little room for embarrassment or mistake in the general outline, however difficult it may be to explain particular passages, especially in the prophecies yet unfulfilled, towards the time of the end, in the last vision.

THE FIRST DREAM OF NEBUCHADNEZZAR.

This leading prophecy discloses the successions of empire in the heathen world, connected with the fortunes of God's chosen people, the Jews, and those only*, the Babylonian, Medo-Persian, Macedo-Grecian, and Roman, under the emblem of an image compounded of four metals, encreasing in hardness or durability, gold, silver, brass, and iron, and therefore made with hands, or of human fabrication, as temporary kingdoms, while the spiritual kingdom destined to overthrow them, and to rise on their ruins to universal and everlasting dominion, is aptly represented by "a stone cut out without hands," or formed by divine power alone, which smote the image upon its feet, or during the days of the last kingdom, and grew at length, from small beginnings, into a great mountain, which filled the whole earth, Dan. ii. 31—41.

1. The head of gold is interpreted by Daniel to denote Nebuchadnezzar himself, or rather his kingdom, whose duration was only seventy years, from the overthrow of Nineveh by the confederate Babylonians and Medes, B.C. 606, to the capture of Babylon by Cyrus, B.C. 536.

2. The breast and arms of silver denoted the Medo-Persian kingdom, whose arms and shields were frequently ornamented, or cased with silver; whence Alexander instituted that remarkable body of veteran infantry called Argyraspides, from their "silver shields," after the conquest of Persia, adopting the manners of the conquered nations. It lasted 205 years, from the capture of Babylon by Cyrus, B.C. 536, to the battle of Arbela, B.C. 331.

3. The belly and thighs of brass aptly denoted the Macedo-Grecian kingdoms of Alexander and his successors; for the Greeks usually wore "brazen armour," whence they were deno-

* The kingdoms of Assyria and Egypt were now in subjection to the Babylonian empire, they are therefore omitted; as are also the great eastern empires of Hindustan and China, which never had any connection with the Jews.

minated χαλκοχιτωνες Αχαιοι by Homer; and the Egyptian oracle, upon one occasion, described them as “brazen men rising out of the sea,” or Greeks in brazen armour, landing on the Egyptian shore, Herod. b. ii. It lasted 163 years, to the conquest of the first kingdom, Macedon, B.C. 168, and 300 years, to the conquest of the last, Egypt, by the Romans, B.C. 30.

4. The legs of iron, and the feet and toes partly iron and partly clay, denoted first, the Roman republic in its consular state, when it was strong; and afterwards, in the division of the eastern and western empires, which weakened it; and lastly, the ten kingdoms into which the western empire was divided, after the irruptions of the fierce northern nations. Its republican state in which it appeared to Daniel began B.C. 448, but did not reach its full vigour till the conquest of Macedon, B.C. 168, and ended with the conquest of Egypt, B.C. 30, after which it rather declined under the monarchy. The partition of the empire weakened it, until it gradually sunk under the repeated invasions of the Gothic and Vandalic tribes, and was broken into ten kingdoms. The list of these in the Scheme is taken from Machiavel, the best, because the most unprejudiced authority, in his history of Florence, lib. i, with their respective dates furnished by Bishop Lloyd. See Bishop Newton's Dissertations, Vol. I. Diss. xiv. or Faber's Dissertation, Vol. I. p. 187, 2d edition.

5. The fifth kingdom, which rose on the ruins of the preceding, was spiritual, or “not of this world,” John xviii. 36. It was at first the stone, cut out of the rock, without hands, or human power; that “stone which the builders rejected,” but which became “the head stone of the corner,” binding together both Jews and Gentiles in the same common edifice of Christian faith, Ps. cxviii. 22, Matt. xxi. 42, Eph. ii. 15—20; and which is to become, in the last days, the “mountain of the Lord's house, unto which all nations shall flow,” for religious instruction and edification, Micah iv. 1, Isa. ii. 2, from the ROCK CHRIST, Matt. xvi. 18, 1 Cor. x. 4, and his glorified apostles, Matt. xix. 28.

THE FIRST VISION OF DANIEL.

This corresponds to the dream, pourtraying the same things under different emblems, but more distinctly and circumstantially. The four kingdoms are now represented by four ferocious wild beasts rising out of the sea, agitated by the four winds striving for the mastery, or produced by political convulsions; the “raging of the sea,” being expressive of “the madness of the people,” Ps. viii. 1—3.

1. The first beast resembled a lion with eagle's wings, to express the fierceness and rapidity of Nebuchadnezzar, the founder of the Babylonian empire. Jeremiah described him before as a lion, iv. 7, and an eagle, xlviii. 40; and Ezekiel, as a great long-winged eagle, full of feathers, and of divers colours, xvii. 3. But at the time of this vision, “its wings were plucked, and it was made to stand erect only on two feet;” or its career was checked, and its stability weakened, by the victories of Cyrus, who first defeated and afterwards slew Evil Meradach, and left Belshazzar, at his accession, the timorous “heart of a man,” Ps. ix. 20, not the boldness of the lion. His fright and terror at the appearance of the divine hand writing on the wall is recorded as remarkable, vii. 4.

2. The second resembled a bear, a voracious wild beast, but more unwieldy, raised on one side, with three ribs in its teeth, aptly expressing the Medo-Persian empire, Darius the Mede being rather of a sluggish disposition, until roused and stimulated to conquest, on the Persian side, by his nephew and coadjutor Cyrus, who reduced Lydia, Babylonia, and Egypt, under his dominion, vii. 5.

3. The third resembled a leopard in fierceness and agility, with two pair of wings, to express extraordinary rapidity, aptly denoting the founder of the Macedonian empire, in both respects; “and the beast had also four heads,” or the four kingdoms of the Greeks, namely, Macedon, Thrace, Syria, and Egypt, into which his mighty empire was divided, after his death, among his generals, vii. 6.

4. The fourth, which succeeded these in dominion, was the most dreadful and terrible of all, and exceedingly strong, with great iron teeth, with which it devoured and brake in pieces the others, and trampled upon the residue, and it was different from all the foregoing beasts, and it had also ten horns. This accurately represents the Roman power, the most formidable and destructive of all. Its name, Ρωμη, signifies “strength,” and its great iron teeth correspond to the iron legs and feet, and its ten horns or kingdoms to the toes of the image. Daniel has not described its shape, but John has supplied the deficiency in the Apocalypse, representing it as compounded of all the rest, or combining their destructive qualities, having “the body of the leopard, the feet of the bear, and the mouth of the lion,” and exceeding them in having seven heads, but with the same number of ten horns, which marks its identity with Daniel's fourth beast, Rev. xiii. 1, 2. At the time when the prophet first saw it, Rome was in the zenith of her power, as after the conquest of Egypt; but was on the decline when the horns appeared.

5. While Daniel was considering the ten horns, he observed another little horn growing up among them, and behind * three of them, which were plucked up by the roots to make it conspicuous; but it differed from all the rest, in “having eyes like a man,” as a seer, or bishop †, invested with ecclesiastical authority, and “a mouth speaking great things,” in its spiritual fulminations, with “a look more stout than his fellows,” the temporal horns. Again, he observed it making war with the saints of THE MOST HIGH, and prevailing against them, and wearing them out, and speaking words [of blasphemy] against THE MOST HIGH, and thinking to change times and laws, during a period of a time, times, and the division [or half] of a time, vii. 7, 8.

This is an accurate delineation of the rise and progress of the papal power of Rome, during the division of the Roman empire in the west, among the barbarous northern nations.

At first, the pope was no more than bishop of Rome, unnoticed and inconsiderable, not possessing ecclesiastical jurisdiction beyond his own see, and subservient to the emperors. Precedence, indeed, was allowed to him in the general councils, because Rome was the imperial city, but this was only a precedence of rank, not of authority.

The removal of the seat of empire by Constantine the Great to Byzantium, or Constantinople, A.D. 330, in resentment for the ill-treatment of the Romans on his embracing Christianity, laid the foundation of the papal authority, by removing the controul of the emperor's presence, and accustoming the Romans to look up to the pope as their ostensible head. In the next place, the conversion of the Pagan invaders to Christianity contributed to extend his influence among them also. For as Machiavel observes, “The successors of St. Peter were revered at first by all men ; and the sanctity of their lives, and [supposed] miracles, and their [good] examples, did so extend the Christian religion, that the princes were under a necessity of obeying [or conforming thereto] to remove out of the way the great confusions that were then in the world." The first of these kingdoms, that of the Huns, arose about A.D. 356. The end of the western empire took place A.D. 476, on the capture of Rome by Odoacer, king of the Heruli, who caused himself to be proclaimed king of Italy. By this conquest, he stood "before," or in the way of "the little horn." It was necessary, therefore, that this regal horn should be "plucked up," and this was effected by Theodoric, king of the Ostrogoths, who conquered Odoacer, A.D. 488, and was proclaimed king of Italy, A.D. 493. He removed the seat of his kingdom to Ravenna, which also contributed to increase the pope's authority at Rome. But it was necessary that this second regal horn should be "plucked up;" and this also was effected by the generals of Justinian, the eastern emperor; Bellisarius, who defeated the Goths, and was proclaimed king of Italy, A.D. 540; and Narses, who utterly eradicated their kingdom, in conjunction with their auxiliaries, the Longobards, A.D. 553.

* Οπισω, Sept.

† Επισκοπος, an ‘inspector,’ or ‘overseer.’”

Italy now became a province of the eastern empire, and was governed by the emperor's lieutenant, Longinus, under the title of Exarch of Ravenna, who appointed a governor, called a Duke, in Rome. Soon after, the Longobards undertook the conquest of Italy for themselves, and Alboin, their king, subdued the whole, except Ravenna and Rome, A.D. 567; and at length, after they had feebly subsisted till A.D. 752, Aistulphus, then king of the Lombards, extinguished the exarchate, and became the third Italian horn. In this emergency, the Romans, who had thrown off their allegiance to the eastern emperor, A.D. 726, when no longer able to give their support and protection, applied for help to Pepin, king of France, the most powerful prince of the west, and their neighbour; who came to their assistance with a large army, dispossessed the Lombards, and eradicated the third and last horn. Thus were three Italian horns successively plucked up before the little horn, not by his own power, but by the interference of others; and in the same way it now became also a temporal power, for Pepin conferred the exarchate of Ravenna upon the pope, A.D. 756. His son Charlemagne annexed the duchy of Rome, and a considerable part of Lombardy also, to be held as fiefs, or the most honourable benefices, under him as sovereign, A.D. 774; and he was formally elected emperor of the Romans by the Roman people, and crowned by the pope, A.D. 779. And Louis the Pious, in the ensuing reign, granted “St. Peter’s patrimony” to the pope and his successors, in their own right, principality, and dominion, unto the end of the world, A.D. 817. Hence the pope assumed the three keys in his arms, and the triple crown, or mitre, as a temporal prince; and “his look was more stout than his fellows,” the other horns, whom he frequently awed by his anathemas, or excommunications. See Newton on Daniel, chap. vii. and Bishop Newton on Prophecy, Vol. I. Disc. 14.

The pope’s spiritual jurisdiction, also, over the other metropolitan sees was gradually enlarged, and he soon began “to change ecclesiastical times and laws.” Near the end of the second century, a violent controversy broke out between the Greek and Roman Churches, about the day of celebrating Easter. Polycrates, bishop of Ephesus, in a council held there, A.D. 197, decreed in favour of the fourteenth day of the paschal moon, according to primitive usage. On the other hand, Victor, bishop of Rome, in a council held there next year, decreed in favour of the fifteenth day, and absolutely excommunicated the Asiatic Churches for their schism. And so the controversy raged until the council of Nice, A.D. 325, when Constantine, the emperor, put an end to it, by a decree in favour of the Romanists; although they were taxed with judaizing by their opponents, in celebrating the feast rather with Caiaphas than with CHRIST. See Vol. I. p. 67.

At this time another innovation was introduced. The Greek Church had held the sixth of January both for the feast of the Nativity, and of the Epiphany, supposing, as was natural, that CHRIST was born on the day that the star first appeared to the magi. But the Church of Rome separated them, under the pretext that the second appearance of the star, on the way of the magi to Bethlehem, was holier than the first; and arbitrarily transferred the first appearance and the Nativity to the twenty-fifth of December, which was adopted at Constantinople, A.D. 335, not long before the death of Constantine, but with great discontents of the citizens, who objected to Gregory, the theologian from Rome: “You have divided the feast—you have involved us in polytheism!” See Vol. I. p. 91.

Not long after, Pope Damasus obtained an edict from the emperors Gratian and Valentinian, about the end of 378, or beginning of 379, vesting him with patriarchal jurisdiction over the whole western Church, and, in cases of doubt or difficulty, sanctioning appeals to Rome. Several of the Pope's decretal epistles to the other western Churches of Illyricum, Gaul, Spain, Britain, and Africa, are cited by Sir Isaac Newton, chap. VIII. And this edict was afterwards renewed and confirmed to Pope Leo, by the western emperor, Valentinian III. A.D. 445. Adding, that "for the bishops to attempt any thing without the pope's authority, was contrary to ancient usage, and that the bishops summoned to appear before his judicature must be carried thither by the governor of the province." See Newton, ibid. But the grand innovator in the times and laws of the primitive Church was Gregory the Great, who was elected pope, A.D. 590. Out of an affected humility, he styled himself Servus Servorum Dei, "Servant of the Servants of God," in opposition to the antichristian title of Œcumenical, (signifying catholic or universal,) assumed by John, the patriarch of Constantinople, "affirming, that any bishop who assumed that title was the forerunner of antichrist, by thus domineering over his brethren*." Yet, notwithstanding this, Gregory, in fact, encroached on his prerogative, by acquitting a priest of Chalcedon, who had been condemned for heresy; though Chalcedon lay within the eastern patriarch's jurisdiction, as defined by the fourth general council held there; and though Gregory professed to reverence the decisions of the four first general councils, as he did the four gospels. But the conjuncture was favourable for the aggrandizement of the see of Rome, and Gregory would not let it pass.

He also composed a ritual, called from him the Gregorian Liturgy, in which purgatory was set down as an article of faith; and invocations of saints and angels, veneration of relics, masses for the living and the dead, toleration of images in churches, pilgrimages, lustrations, abstinence from meat, milk, and eggs, on fast days, and the celibacy of the clergy, were all taught and enjoined; so that the pontificate of St. Gregory, (for he was canonized) forms a new era in the Church, which seems to have been “expressly” foretold “in the apostacy of the latter times,” by St. Paul, alluding, in the term ρητως, “expressly,” or rather, “oracularly,” to this very prophecy of Daniel, 1 Tim. iv. 1—3; Col. ii. 16—19, &c.

* Ego autem fidenter dico, quia quisquis se universalem sacerdotem vocat, vel vocari desiderat, in elatione sua, Antichristum præcurrit, quia superbiendo se cæteris præponit. Greg. Lib. VI. Epist. 50. See the Eighth Letter of my Letters to the Rev. Doctor Troy. Antijacobin Review, 1807, Vol. XXVII. p. 508.

In his zeal for propagating the Romish faith, he sent Austin, the abbot, on a mission to England, in A.D. 599, with forty monks, his assistants, besides some Franks, whom they took as interpreters; and who, after they had learnt the language, by their preaching and pretended miracles, made many converts among the Saxons and Angles, who were heathens; and Austin himself, for his successes, was consecrated archbishop of Canterbury by Gregory, in A.D. 601.

“Hitherto,” says Milton, “Austin laboured well among infidels, but not with like commendation, soon after, among Christians.” For having summoned the British bishops to a conference, about A.D. 604, he required them to conform to him in the day of celebrating Easter, and in many other rites*, in which that primitive Church differed from the Church of Rome; but the British bishops and clergy, offended at his haughty demeanour, (for he neither rose to meet them, nor saluted them as brethren, but sat all the while like a pontiff in his chair) neither hearkened to his proposals of conformity, nor would acknowledge him as their primate, being, as they said, under the spiritual authority of the bishop of Caerleon; for which Austin menaced them with destruction: “Since ye refuse to have peace with your brethren, ye shall have war with your enemies.” And accordingly, he or his monks stirred up Ethelfrid, king of Northumberland, to make war on them, about A.D. 607, who massacred about 1200 of the monks of Bangor †, and much

* See a particular account of these, Prideaux, Vol. II. p. 186—193.

† Milton's account of this transaction from the early British writers, Bede, the Saxon Annals, &c. is curious; and as it tends to shew the different spirit of the Romish and British Churches at that time, I shall give it in his own words. See Kenet's History of England, Vol. I. p. 39.

“Hitherto Austin laboured well among infidels, but not with like commendation, soon after, among Christians. For by means of Ethelbert, summoning the Britain bishops to a place on the edge of Worcestershire, (called from that time Augustine's oak) he requires them to conform with him in the same day of celebrating Easter, and many other points wherein they differed from the rites of Rome; which, when they refused to do, not prevailing by dispute, he appeals to a miracle—restoring to sight a blind man, whom the Britains could not cure. At this, something moved, though not minded to recede from their own opinions, without farther consultation, they request a second meeting. To which came seven bishops, with many other learned men, especially from the famous blood was spilt in the war kindled thereby, which lasted a good while. And it was not until A.D. 716, that the British

monastery of Bangor, in which were said to be 2100 monks, living all by their own labour, divided under seven rectors. One man there was who staid behind, a hermit by the life he led, who by his wisdom effected more than all the rest who went. Being demanded (for they held him as an oracle) how they might know Austin to be a man from GOD, that they might follow him, he answered, that if they found him meek and humble, they should be taught by him: for it was likeliest to be the yoke of CHRIST, both what he bore himself, and would have them bear; but if he bore himself proudly, that they should not regard him, for he was then certainly not of GOD. They took his advice, and hasted to the place of meeting; when Austin, being already there before them, neither arose to meet, nor received in any brotherly sort, but sat all the while pontifically in his chair. Whereat the Britains (as they were counselled by the holy man,) neglected him, and neither hearkened to his proposals of conformity, nor would acknowledge him for an archbishop: and in the name of the rest, Dimotheus, then abbot of Bangor, is said thus sagely to have answered him. As to the subjection you require, be thus persuaded of us, that in the bond of love and charity, we are all subjects and servants to the Church of GOD, (yea to the pope of Rome, and every good Christian,) to help them forward, both by word and deed, to be the children of GOD: other obedience than this we know not to be due to him whom you term the pope; and this obedience we are ready to give both to him and to every Christian, continually. Besides, we are governed, under GOD, by the bishop of Caerleon, who is to oversee us in spiritual matters.

“To which Austin, thus presaging, some say menacing, replies. Since ye refuse to accept of peace with your brethren, ye shall have war from your enemies; and since ye will not with us preach the word of life to whom ye ought, from their hands ye shall receive death. This, (though writers agree not whether Austin spake it as his prophecy, or as his plot against the Britains,) fell out accordingly. For many years were not past, when Ethelfrid, (whether of his own accord, or at the request of Ethelbert, incensed by Austin,) with a powerful host came to West Chester, (then Caerlegion;) where being met by the British forces, and both sides in readiness to give the onset; he discerns a company of men, not habited for war, standing together in a place of some safety; and by them a squadron armed. Whom having learned, upon some enquiry, to be priests and monks, assembled thither after three days fasting, to pray for the good success of their force against him: therefore they first, said he, shall feel our swords; for they who pray against us, fight heaviest against us, by their prayers, and are our dangerousest enemies *. And with that, turns his first charge against the monks. Brockmail, the captain set to guard them, quickly turns his back, and leaves above 1200 monks to a sudden massacre; whereof scarce fifty scaped. But not so easy work found Ethelfrid against another part of Britains that stood in arms; whom though at last he overthrew, yet with slaughter nigh as great to his own soldiers.

“To excuse Austin of this bloodshed, lest some might think it his revengeful policy, Bede writes that he was dead long before; although, if the time of his sitting archbishop be right computed, (sixteen years,) he must survive this action. Other just ground of charging him with this imputation, appears not, save what evidently we have from Geoffry Monmouth, whose weight we know.”

* How remarkably does this correspond with the description of the persecuted wittenesses in the Apocalypse, Rev. xi. 5, 6.

bishops were at length prevailed on to acquiesce, and submit to the see of Rome in spirituals. See Milton's early History of England, and Spanheim's Historia Christianæ Ecclesiæ, p. 1118.

The massacre of the Bangorian monks, is here dated with Milton, A. D. 607. But it probably happened later, when the influence of Austin and his monks was better established. Usher dates it A. D. 612, or 613. Religion of the Ancient Irish, p. 115. Bede writes that it happened "long after the death of Austin." But Austin sate as archbishop sixteen years, which would bring his death to A. D. 617, and that he died in that year, seems to be confirmed by Dupin, who mentions a letter of Boniface V. elected that same year, to Justus, bishop of Rochester, congratulating him on his appointment to the see of Canterbury, and sending him the pall of consecration. We are therefore warranted to consider this massacre as the first fruits of the little horn's war with the saints, about the beginning of the persecuting period of a time, times, and division [or half] of a time; of which the most probable commencement was A. D. 620, as will be shewn in the sequel. By which time the anti-christian title of "catholic or universal" head of the Church, conferred in 606 upon pope Boniface III., by the usurper Phocas, who murdered the good emperor Mauritius, came to be generally asserted, and admission thereof enforced by the see of Rome, wherever Gregory's Ritual was introduced and established, as it was about this time throughout the Latin Church.

It was not, however, without great reluctance and much opposition, that "the fellows of the little horn," both temporal and spiritual, were awed into submission by his "stout looks," and lofty pretensions. This led to his fulminating bulls and anathemas against the refractory, his excommunications and interdicts against princes, prelates, and kingdoms, who were not subservient to his will; and the religious wars, called crusades, against heretics at home, as well as against infidels abroad; against the Albigenses, Waldenses, Wickliffites, Lollards, Hussites of Bohemia and Moravia, Lutherans, Calvinists, &c. down to the revocation of the edict of Nantes, by Louis XIV.

"The little horn also spake great words against THE MOST HIGH." The lowly title of Servus Servorum DEI, assumed by Gregory the Great, was exchanged for Vicarius JESU CHRISTI, which originally meant the same *, but was afterwards perverted by the adulation of the partizans of the popes, to signify “the Vicegerent of JESUS CHRIST,” which, by a singular concurrence, meant the same as the obnoxious term Αντιχριστος, “Antichrist,” originally signifying a “Pro-Christ, or Deputy-Christ,” (like Αντι-βασιλευς, a “Viceroy,” Ανθυπατος, a “Pro-Consul, or Deputy Consul,”) or “a false Christ,” who assumed his authority, and acted in his stead; Compare 1 John ii. 18, 19, with Matt. xxiv. 5—24, as well as an “adversary of Christ—denying both THE FATHER and THE SON,” 1 John ii. 22, by the assumption of their titles; the popes being blasphemously styled “Our Lord God,” “King of kings, and Lord of lords,” as foretold of the man of sin, 2 Thess. ii. 3, 4.

THE JUDGMENT.

“I beheld till the thrones were erected, and THE ANCIENT OF DAYS sate: His vesture was white as snow, and the hair of his head like pure wool; His throne was flames of fire, his wheels glowing fire; A torrent of fire issued and proceeded from before HIM; thousands of thousands ministered unto HIM; and myriads of myriads stood before HIM. THE COUNCIL sate, and the books were opened.”

“I beheld then, on account of the voice of the great words which the horn spake; I beheld, even till the beast [which supported it] was slain, and its body destroyed, and delivered up to the burning of fire. As to the rest of the beasts, their dominion was taken away, but a prolongation of life was given them for a time and a season,” vii. 9—12.

From this mysterious description, it seems as if the fourth beast, in its last stage, of the empire of France, (since Buonaparte has been formally crowned by the pope; has adopted “the iron crown” of the kings of the Lombards, and now “sits in the throne of the Cæsars,” by his German conquests,) is doomed to a tremendous destruction, with the little horn, which

* Vicarius, in the classic authors, signified “a servant of servants.”

Sive VICARIUS est qui SERVO PARET, uti mos vester ait.

“Whether he be a vicar, who obeys a servant; according to your phrase.”

Hor. Sat. II. 7, 9.

Esse sat est SERVUM, jam nolo VICARIUS esse!

“It is enough to be a servant, I desire not to be a vicar!” Martial. II. 18.

“it hates,” and has abolished its temporalities, though still upholding its spiritualities, at the end of the time, or period appointed. But the lives of the other three beasts in the east, are still to be prolonged for a further period, called “a time and a season.” What that period may be, is “sealed,” or unrevealed in Daniel.

7. The vision concludes with the triumphant establishment of the kingdom of the stone over all the earth, by the MESSIAH.

“I saw in the visions of the night, and beheld, as [it were,] a SON OF MAN, came himself with the clouds of heaven unto THE ANCIENT OF DAYS, and was made to approach before HIM. And [HE] gave Him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all peoples, and nations, and languages, should serve Him: His dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom, which shall not be destroyed.” ——“And the saints of the MOST HIGH shall assume the kingdom, and shall possess the kingdom for ever, even for evermore,” vii. 13, 14.

This indefinite period seems to intimate the continuance of the kingdom of “the mountain,” during the Millennium upon earth, and its subsequent translation to heaven through all eternity, as described more fully in the NEW TESTAMENT, Luke i. 33, 1 Cor. xv. 25—28, 1 Thess. iv. 15—17, Matt. xxiv. 30—34, xxv. 31—46, Rev. xx. 4—15.

THE SECOND VISION.

This vision describes, more particularly, the succession of the second, third, and fourth kingdoms. It is dated near the close of the first, which therefore is omitted. The scene, accordingly, is laid at Shushan, in the kingdom of Persia, on the banks of the Ulai, or Choaspes, according to Rennel, Geography of Herodotus, p. 203.

The emblems in this vision are of a different class from those of the former, and are still more appropriate. Caranus, the founder of the Macedonian kingdom, B.C. 814, being in quest of a settlement, was instructed by the Oracle to follow the guidance of goats, which he accordingly did, and following a flock of goats flying from a violent storm of rain to Edessa, surprized the city, and made it the seat of his kingdom. Mindful, therefore, of the Oracle, he assumed the goat as his ensign, wherever he marched. Justin, lib. vii. 1.

The ram, in like manner, was the armorial ensign of the Persian empire, as we learn from Ammianus Marcellinus, lib. xix. And rams' heads with unequal horns, one higher than the other, are still to be seen on the ruined pillars of Persepolis. The lower horn denoted the Median power; the higher, which came up later, the Persian, viii. 1—3.

1. Daniel saw “the ram standing,” or established in his strength, after the succession of the Persian power under Cyrus; and then, “butting westward, and northward, and southward,” or subduing Lydia, Babylonia, and Egypt, with their dependencies, (represented in the former vision by three ribs in the bear's mouth,) And “he did according to his will, and became great.”

2. While he was considering the ram, a he-goat from the west, with a notable horn between his eyes, (Alexander the Great,) who touched not the ground [for swiftness,] came across the whole earth, (or the Persian empire,) and ran at the ram, (Darius Codomannus,) in the fury of his power; and “was moved with choler against him, and smote the ram, and brake his two horns, and cast him down to the ground, and trampled upon him. And there was none that could deliver the ram out of his hand.”

“Therefore the he-goat waxed very great. And when he was strong, the great horn was broken, and from it came up four notable horns, toward the four winds of heaven; (namely, the four kingdoms of Macedo-Greece, Thrace, Syria, and Egypt, erected by his successors, Cassander, Lysimachus, Seleucus, and Ptolemy,) viii. 4—8.

This interpretation is confirmed in the sequel, and also in the fourth vision.

“The ram which thou sawest, having two horns, are the kings [or kingdoms] of Media and Persia. And the rough goat is the king [or kingdom] of Grecia; and the great horn between his eyes, is the first king, (Alexander.) Now whereas that was broken, and four arose in its stead, four kingdoms shall arise out of the nation, but not in his power,” viii. 20—22.

“And now will I shew thee the truth. Behold, there shall yet stand up three kings [after him, from whom the vision commenced, Darius Nothus; namely Artaxerxes Mnemon, *Ochus,

* Ochus was immediately succeeded by his son Arogus, or Arses, who nominally reigned two years, and was put to death by his prime minister; who then appointed and Darius Codomannus] and the fourth, [Darius Codomannus,] shall be far richer than they all: and in his strength, through his riches, he shall stir up the whole [realm] against the realm of Græcia.”

“ And a mighty king, [Alexander,] shall stand up, and rule with great dominion, and do according to his will. But when he shall stand up [in his strength] his kingdom shall be broken, and divided toward the four winds of heaven: but not to his posterity, nor according to his dominion with which he ruled; for his kingdom shall be plucked up, and given to others beside them,” [namely, to his four generals,] xi. 2—4.

The fourth and last king of Persia, Darius Codomannus, was indeed “ far richer ” than his three predecessors, on account of the reduction of Egypt, which had revolted from the days of Darius Nothus. Alexander, after the victories of Issus and Arbela, found immense riches in his camps, in Babylon, Ecbatana, and Persepolis. And Alexander only anticipated the invasion which Darius had designed to make against Greece, on the death of Philip of Macedon; as will be shewn more fully in the ensuing Analysis of Persian Chronology.

3. The former vision having represented the fourth beast, or Roman empire, in its full strength, destroying the other beasts, or empires, which strongly excited the uneasiness and curiosity of the prophet to be further informed about it; this proceeds to satisfy his curiosity still further, by pointing out the rise and progress of that tremendous power, until the Roman captivity.

“ And out of one of the four horns, [or kingdoms, founded by Alexander's successors, namely, the Grecian or Western,] came forth a little horn; which waxed exceeding great toward the south, [Sicily and Africa,] and toward the east, [Macedon, Greece, and *Syria,] and toward the pleasant land [Judea.]

Darius Codomannus in his room. Though noticed in Ptolomy's Canon, he is therefore justly omitted here. Justin also, omitting Arogus, reckons Codomannus the immediate successor of Ochus. Lib. x. 3.

* The successive changes of empire from the Assyrians to the Romans, and the progress of the Roman conquests, are thus recorded by the Latin historians, Paterculus and Florus.

1. Assyrii principes omnium gentium rerum potiti sunt; dein Medi, postea Persæ, deinde Macedones; exinde duobus regibus, Philippo et Antiocho, (qui a Macedonibus oriundi erant) haud multo post Carthaginem subactam victis, summa imperii ad populum Romanum pervenit.

“ Of all nations, the Assyrians first possessed the sovereignty; then the Medes, afterwards the Persians, next the Macedonians; afterwards the two kings, Philip [of Mace-

And it waxed great, even to the host of heaven. And it cast down to the ground some of the host, and of the stars [of the Jews,] and trampled upon them, [Antigonus and his adherents.] Yea, it magnified itself even against THE PRINCE OF THE HOST. And by it was the daily [sacrifice] taken away, and the place of His sanctuary cast down. And a host was given [it] against the daily [sacrifice,] by reason of [Jewish] transgression; and it cast down THE TRUTH to the ground, and did [according to its will,] and prospered," viii. 9—12.

According to Varro and Dionysius Hal. Italy was first colonized from Greece, and the first Greeks who settled there were from Arcadia. And Reineccius and Sir Walter Raleigh are inclined to think, from several passages in Strabo, Dion. Hal. Pliny, and Justin, that Italy derived its name from a colony of the *Ætoli*ans, who settled there: for the Greek name Αἰτολία, Aitolia, in the Æolic dialect, used by the *Ætoli*ans, and which is the basis of the Latin tongue; was pronounced Æthalia, (as found in an island of that name, near Italy, peopled by the *Ætoli*ans,) whence Italia was easily formed; and the lower part of Italy, in the neighbourhood of Tarentum, which was founded by a colony from Lacedæmon, was called Magna Græcia, in which the Greek language prevailed for a long time.

Rome, founded B. C. 753, and inhabited by Grecian colonists, was originally a little horn, small and inconsiderable during its regal state; but increased rapidly when it became republican, B. C. 448, from its thirst for military glory, or conquest, as Sallust remarks: Sed civitas, incredibile memoratu est, quantum brevi creverit adeptâ libertate; tanta cupido gloriæ don,] and Antiochus [of Syria,] (both descended from the Macedonians,) having been subdued, not long after the conquest of Carthage, the supreme power descended to the Romans."—Patercul. lib. i. cap. 6.

2. Cedente Hannibale, præmium victoriæ Africa fuit; et secutus Africam terrarum orbis. Post Carthaginem, vinci neminem pudit, secutæ sunt statim Africam gentes Macedonia, Græcia, Syria, cæteraque omnia quodam quasi æstu et torrente fortunæ: sed primi omnium Macedones, affectator quondam imperii populus.

"Hannibal being worsted, Africa became the prize of victory, and was followed by the whole globe. After Carthage, no state was ashamed to be conquered. The fall of Africa was soon followed by that of Macedon, Greece, Syria, and all other countries; as if swept away by the tide and torrent of Fortune: and first of all, the Macedonians, who once had affected empire." Flor. lib. ii. cap. 7.

Such undesigned coincidences of profane history with sacred prophecy, are highly gratifying, and furnish the most satisfactory and convincing confirmations of the truth of the foregoing interpretations of these mysterious visions.

incesserat. And this rapid increase of territory is marked in the prophecy geographically, by the progress of their conquests: Sicily was made a Roman province in the first Punic war, B.C. 240; Carthage was subdued in the second Punic war, B.C. 200, and destroyed in the third, B.C. 145; and Africa reduced to a Roman province, by the conquest of Jugurtha, B.C. 105.

Macedon was subdued, B.C. 168; Greece reduced to a Roman province, B.C. 145, Syria and Asia Minor humbled, B.C. 187, and reduced to a Roman province, B.C. 66. Jerusalem was stormed by Pompey, B.C. 63; Antigonus the last king of the Asamonean race, and his adherents, were slain by Anthony, at the instigation of Herod, who was made king of Judea in his room, B.C. 37; Judea was made a Roman province on the deposal of Archelaus, A. D. 6. Pontius Pilate, the Roman governor, sentenced CHRIST to be crucified, A. D. 31; and Jerusalem was destroyed by Titus, A. D. 70.

And the Roman captivity was still more minutely described in the angel Gabriel's explanation.

“And at the end of their kingdom, [Alexander's successors,] when the transgressions [of the Jews] are come to the full, a [Roman] king, of fierce countenance, and understanding dark sentences, shall stand up; and his power shall be great, but not by his own power. And he shall destroy wonderfully, and prosper, and do [according to his will.] And he shall destroy the nobles, and the people of the saints. And through his policy also, fraud shall prosper in his hand, and he shall magnify himself in his heart, and in peace shall destroy many. He shall also stand up against THE PRINCE OF PRINCES. But he shall be [finally] broken without hand,” viii. 23—25.

This is a critical description of the Roman power and policy, in subduing the world by force or fraud. That peculiar characteristic of the Romans, “the fierce countenance,” first noticed by Moses, Deut. xxviii. 50; and again by Isaiah, xxiii. 19, is here repeated, a third time, so as to leave no doubt of its application; “the dark sentences” or “enigmas,” may refer either to those apologues of which the Romans were fond, (as that remarkable one of the belly and the members at variance, by which Menenius Agrippa quelled an insurrection of the Plebeians against the Patricians,) or it may denote their eagerness to pry into futurity by the arts of divination. They were “mighty, but not by their own power,” the singular progress of their greatness was owing, not so much to their own strength, as to the assistance of their allies, and not seldom to the feuds and divisions of their enemies, of which they were always on the watch to take advantage. And “they destroyed wonderfully,” both by their arms and their arts; and even “in times of peace,” by their cruel and bloody combats of gladiators and captives. “They magnified themselves in their hearts,” for their pride and haughtiness, as “the lords of the world,” was intolerable. And a Roman magistrate stood up against the PRINCE OF THE HOST, or the PRINCE OF PRINCES, and sentenced him to crucifixion, like the vilest of their slaves!— But this power was to be finally broken without hand, by divine power, as foretold in the first dream.

This description of the little horn throughout, from its rise to its destruction, is so exactly applicable in all its parts, to the Roman temporal power, and to no other, that we cannot hesitate to adopt it; being sanctioned also by the prevailing opinion of the generality of commentators*.

THE PROPHECY OF THE 2300 DAYS.

Moses had predicted that the desolation to follow the Roman captivity, would be of very long continuance, Deut. xxviii. 59. And Isaiah had enquired from THE ORACLE, in vision, How long it should continue? Isai. vi. 11; to which no definite answer was then given. That was reserved for the highly favoured Daniel; in a remarkable episode introduced into the midst of the second vision, and intimately connected therewith; immediately following the account of the destruction of the temple by the Romans.

* Mr. Faber, following Whitaker, has laboured to prove that this little horn denotes Mohammedism, and that it arose out of the eastern, or Syrian horn of the Macedonian beast; struck with its close resemblance in spirit, to *Poper*y, the corresponding little horn of the Roman beast. But to this hypothesis there are insuperable objections.

1. Mohammedism sprung up in Arabia, which never was subdued by Alexander or his successors; and not till long after the end of their kingdom. It could not, therefore, destroy the Jews, nor take away their daily sacrifice, nor stand up against THE PRINCE OF PRINCES; all which was done above 530 years before. The anachronism is obvious.

2. It breaks the uniformity of the scheme of Daniel's visions, which no where else, either introduces, or alludes to this second ecclesiastical persecuting power. That was reserved for the Apocalypse.

Mr. Faber seems here to have receded from one of his own excellent fundamental rules.

“To allow no interpretation of a prophecy to be valid, except the prophecy agree, in every particular, with the event to which it is supposed to relate.”

VIII. 13. "Then I heard one saint speaking: and another saint said unto that EXCELLENT SAINT who was speaking, How long [shall continue] the vision concerning the daily [sacrifice,] and the transgression of desolation; [which is destined] to give both the sanctuary and the host to be trampled upon?

14. "And He said unto him, Until two thousand and three hundred evening-mornings, [or days:] Then shall the sanctuary be cleansed.*"

* There is no number in the Bible whose genuineness is better ascertained than that of the 2300 days. It is found in all the printed Hebrew editions, in all the MSS. of Kennicott and De Rossi's collations, and in all the ancient Versions, except the Vatican copy of the Septuagint, which reads 2400, followed by Symmachus; and some copies noticed by Jerom, 2200; both evidently literal errors in excess and defect, which compensate each other, and confirm the mean, 2300.

By a radical and unfortunate error, which has misled many, the great Jewish historian, Josephus, in his interpretation of the second vision, chap. viii. mistook the "little horn," ver. 9, and "the king of fierce countenance," afterwards, ver. 23, for Antiochus Epiphanes, the great oppressor of the Jews, the profaner and the spoiler of their temple; and he unjustifiably altered the number 2300 to 1296, in order to make it square with his hypothesis. Ant. x. 11, 7, p. 445, 446, Hudson. Compare p. 540. But although there may be some traits of resemblance, yet, as Sir Isaac Newton and Bishop Newton justly observe, "By tracing the particulars, it appears, that though some of them may agree very well with Antiochus Epiphanes, yet others can by no means be reconciled to him: but they all agree and correspond exactly with the Romans, and with no one else; so that the application of the character to them, must be the right application." Newton on Daniel, chap. ix. p. 123; and Bp. Newton, Proph. Vol. II. p. 52—80.

There is reason, however, to think, that the number 1296, in the present text of Josephus is corrupt, and that he wrote 1260 days, or three years and half; which is the precise time that he assigns to the desolation: "Antiochus having taken Jerusalem by storm, and kept possession of it for three years and six months, was expelled from the country by the sons of Asamoneus."—"He stopped the celebration of the daily sacrifices for three years and six months." Bell. Jud. Proem. and i. 1, 1, pp. 956—958, Hudson.—But this does not correspond to Scripture; for from the time of the capture of Jerusalem by Antiochus, to the expulsion by Judas Maccabeus, was about five years; compare I Mac. i. 20 with iv. 36—52; and the daily sacrifices were suspended precisely three years, compare I Mac. i. 59 with iv. 52.

Wintle, in his notes on the place, wavers between the application to Antiochus and to the Romans, but rather inclines to the former. He retains the genuine number 2300: and to make it square with his hypothesis, he supposes "that the 2300 mornings [and] evenings*, only made up 1150 days, which divided by 365, will give three years and fifty-five days:" which is not exact. So he concludes with Gijerus and Michaelis: "Perhaps we cannot count these days, nor those in Dan. xii. exactly; but in the time of Antiochus they could, when it was most needful!—which," says he, is "an ingenious conjecture."

————— Hic onus horret,
Ut parvis animis et parvo corpore majus. Hor.

* The evening-morning was a civil, or calendar day. See Vol. I. p. 10.

This EXCELLENT SAINT, who uttered the response, was THE ORACLE himself; who before appeared to Isaiah in glory, sitting on his throne between the Seraphim, Isai. vi. 1, and now appeared to Daniel, “as a man, standing before him,” and bidding the other angel, whom he called Gabriel, to explain the vision to the prophet; who was so overpowered with the divine presence, that he fell on his face, in a deep sleep or trance, towards the earth, till Gabriel touched him, and restored him to his senses, and set him upright, and then explained to him, more particularly, (as we have seen,) the former historical part of the vision; concluding with a reference to the latter chronological part, or “vision of the evening-mornings,” that it “was true,” or would be verified by the accomplishment; but that the accomplishment was remote, or “for many days,” and that “the vision was sealed,” and its further disclosure shut up for the present.

Shocked at the calamities predicted to befall his people, during some long continued period of desolation and oppression, “Daniel fainted, and was sick for some days. Afterwards he arose, and did the king’s business. And he was astonished at the vision, but none understood” how the daily sacrifice should be taken away, or when the period of 2300 days should begin or end, viii. 15—27.

THE THIRD VISION.

Three years after, a further insight into the last mysterious vision was given to the prophet, immediately after his admirable prayer and confession of his own sins, and the sins of his people, and supplication for the holy mountain of his God; that his people might be restored from the Babylonian captivity, now drawing to a close, and the city be rebuilt: “Yea, while I was speaking in prayer, even the man Gabriel, whom I had seen in the foregoing vision, (viii. 16), flying swiftly, touched me about the time of the evening oblation, and informed me, and spake to me, and said:

IX. 22. “O Daniel, I am now come forth to give thee understanding and information.

23. “At the beginning of thy supplications THE ORACLE came forth, and I am come to tell thee [His response,] for thou art greatly beloved. Therefore consider the matter, and understand the vision.”

THE PROPHECY OF THE SEVENTY WEEKS*.

24. "Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people, and

* This illustrious prophecy Sir Isaac Newton justly represents as "the foundation of the Christian religion; for "we have, in this short prophecy, a prediction of all the main periods relating to the coming of THE MESSIAH; the time of his birth, that of his death, that of the rejection of the Jews, the duration of the Jewish war, whereby he caused the city and sanctuary to be destroyed, and the time of his second coming,"—"for it is not to be restrained to his first coming only." Newton on Daniel, p. 25, 137.

To deny these, and their application to JESUS CHRIST, has been the great object of Jewish writers. And David Levi, treading in the steps of his predecessors, has attempted to explain away the meaning of the prophecy in these respects, while he undesignedly verifies the present interpretation in others; and, upon the whole, is a valuable auxiliary to the present interpretations. See his Letters to Dr. Priestley.

1. He judiciously counts the time by weeks of years. "These seventy weeks," says he, "are, without doubt, 490 years." Thus adopting the authority of the ancient Versions, and most approved Jewish and Christian expositors, and rejecting the reveries of Michaelis, Dathè, Blaney, those Christian professors of Hebrew, who count not "70 weeks," but "70 seventies," 4900, or "many seventies," by a vague and indefinite hypothesis.

2. He correctly terminates the prophecy with the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus, with Mede and Scaliger, A.D. 70.

3. Though he nominally begins the prophecy with the former destruction of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar, professing to follow the incorrect chronology of Ganz, (shewn before to fall short of the truth no less than 166 years,) yet, in reality, he dates the commencement from the time of Nehemiah's reform, B.C. 420, as may appear from the following sketch of his argument: Letters, &c. Part II. 80—102.

"The Jewish nation, at their return from Babylon, did not undergo a thorough reformation, but on the contrary, still continued in many of their sins; for, in the first place, they had not entirely put away the strange women, (Neh. xiii. 4—24,) neither did they give the proper portion to the Levites, (ver. 10,) they also profaned the sabbath, (ver. 15,) and oppressed each other with usury, (ver. 1—3.) And they persisted in their sins during the second temple. The prophet Daniel, therefore, foretold that GOD, of his long suffering toward Judah, would wait, not only seventy years, (as in the Babylonish captivity,) but even seven times seventy years; after which, their kingdom should be cast off, and their dominion cease, and they themselves return in captivity by the Romans."

4. And he thus excellently explains the magnificent exordium of the prophecy.

"Seventy weeks are determined," 1. "to finish the transgression," i. e. IDOLATRY; 2. "to accomplish their sin," i. e. WHOREDOM; and 3. "to make atonement for iniquity," i. e. MURDER, which they added to their former sins, instead of repenting, during the second temple.

Here Levi candidly confesses the leading sins of his nation, especially that crying sin of MURDER, from "the murder of the prophet Zechariah the son of Barachiah, even between the sanctuary (vaon) and the altar," Matt. xxiii. 35, soon after their return, to the murder of JESUS CHRIST, which filled up the measure of theirs and their forefathers' iniquities, and which was retaliated by "the oppression, misery, and almost universal contempt under which, he complains, the Jewish nation are still labouring."—"All this was to come upon them," says he, "for the abominations which they had committed upon thy holy city, to complete the transgression and consummate sins; to expiate iniquity, and introduce everlasting righte-

during both the first and second temples." And he apprehends that "this is to last until they shall either thoroughly repent, or receive the full punishment for all their iniquities," and then "to bring in everlasting righteousness," or by means of the restoration of the Jews, to bring all nations to the knowledge of the ONE TRUE GOD, Isai. ii. 2, 3, and xviii. 3, and Zeph. ver. 3—9. Letters, Part I. and II.

5. He supposes the parenthetical prediction, ver. 25, to refer to the first return, after the Babylonish captivity, and "the continued troubles and alarms they underwent from their enemies, during the building of the temple and repairing the wall," as mentioned by Ezra, iv. 1—12, and Nehemiah, iv. 16. But this cannot be; for the promise to Daniel, "thou shalt return," was not fulfilled at the first return, which he survived, and soon after died in captivity; it remains, therefore, to be fulfilled, at the last return, at the resurrection of the just, as expressly repeated to Daniel at the close of the book. "But go thou thy way till the end, for thou shalt rest [till then,] and shalt stand in thy lot at the end of [the 1260] days," xii. 13.

6. He rightly considers the important term דָּבָר, Dabar, both in ver. 23 and 25, as equivalent to the fuller expression, דָּבָר יְהוָה, Dabar Iahoh, "the word of the Lord," at the beginning of the chapter, ix. 2; and, indeed, that the PERSONAL WORD, or ORACLE, is meant in this prophecy, appears from the parallel prophecy of Ezekiel, evidently alluding to Daniel's intercession and supplication for his people, which THE ORACLE declared to Ezekiel should be ineffectual to avert the second captivity, even though it were supported on each side by those two most powerful intercessors, Noah and Job, Ezek. xiv. 12—20.

Levi justly censures the rendering of this term, "commandment," in the English Bible, "by which Christians have confounded the prophecy, and bewildered themselves, so as to have no fixed period from whence to begin the seventy weeks." See the preface to this volume.

7. The last clause of the exordium, "to anoint the Holy of Holies," he understands of "the consecration of the second temple." But the most learned Jewish doctors, Abarbanel, Manasseh ben Israel, &c. confess, that the Holy of Holies, or sanctuary of the second temple, was never anointed or honoured with the Shechinah, or divine glory, like Solomon's. And Nachmanides has given the true exposition: "This Holy of Holies is the MESSIAH who is sanctified (or separated) from the sons of David." It should therefore be rendered THE SAINT OF SAINTS, to remove the ambiguity.

And THE SAINT OF SAINTS was actually "anointed with the HOLY GHOST, and with POWER," at his baptism, and again, at his transfiguration, Acts x. 38; and "with the oil of gladness above his fellows," at his resurrection, Psalm xlv. 7, ii. 7, Heb. i. 1—8. Levi unskilfully objects, that the ה emphatic, or demonstrative prefix, is wanting to מְשִׁיחַ, Messiah, or "anointed;" but it is superfluous, because of "THE LEADER," to which it is adjoined.

And THE MESSIAH was also "THE LEADER," as we have seen that epithet applied to him, 1 Chron. v. 2, Isai. lv. 4, Matt. ii. 6, citing Micah v. 2. Both, therefore, are epithets of CHRIST; David Levi, then, is guilty of a palpable violation of the unity of the prophecy, (of which he can scarcely be conceived to have been ignorant,) when he split these terms; applying Messiah, or the anointed, to king Agrippa, who, he says, was cut off by Vespasian, in the middle of the last week, A.D. 66; and the Leader, to Cyrus, ver. 25, and to Titus, ver. 26, thus introducing a trinity of persons into the prophecy, the most revolting and incomprehensible.

ousness; and to seal up vision and prophecy, and ANOINT THE SAINT OF SAINTS.

The hypothesis indeed, confutes itself: Cyrus could not be the first leader, nor Titus the second. For the first was to come after seven weeks and sixty-two weeks, or sixty-nine weeks, near the close of the prophecy. Nor could Cyrus come after the seven weeks singly, as he understands it; because the seven weeks actually commenced long after his death. And Titus could not be the second leader, because the word of the original is uniformly applied in the Old Testament, either to the kings of Israel or Judah, or to the rulers of their households, and never to a foreign or hostile prince. See Calasio's Concordance.

Agrippa was king of Galilee, and never was "anoointed" king of the Jews; nor was he cut off in A. D. 66: for both he and his sister Berenice, (the mistress of Titus,) were alive in A. D. 69, when they assisted Vespasian against Vitellius. Josephus also cites two letters of Agrippa, written after his history of the Jewish war. And Photius, in his Bibliotheca, cites Justus the Tiberian, as representing that Agrippa received an enlargement of his kingdom from Vespasian; and died after a long reign of fifty-one years, in the third of Trajan, A. D. 100.

8. Levi renders literally the concise phrase, ver. 26, וְאֵין לוֹ, "and not to him," as if signifying "there shall be no more of him," (Agrippa,) for "after his death, there shall be no more kingly power to the Jewish nation unto this day." But the Vulgate expresses its true meaning: Et non erit ejus populus qui eum negaturus est. "And the people that shall deny him shall not be his;" as Moses predicted,

"Their own iniquity hath corrupted his children, (now) not his,
A perverse and crooked generation," Deut. xxxii. 5.

9. Following the English Bible, Levi renders the Hebrew כְּנָף, Chanaph, "overspreading;" but it literally signifies "a wing," and here probably denotes the same as πτερύγον του ἱεροῦ, the "pinnacle of the temple," Matt. iv. 5, or the portico, or battlement of the temple, or "holy place," where "the abomination of desolation," or the idolatrous, and therefore abominable desolating standards of the Romans were to be "placed" at the siege, Matt. xxiv. 15. See Vol. I. p. 430. "The daily sacrifice, then absolutely taken away" at the destruction of the temple, was "virtually abrogated" when THE MESSIAH was cut off, according to Eusebius. See Vol. I. p. 94—100.

P.S. The three aforesaid professors of Hebrew, Michaelis, Dathè, and Blaney, conspired to set aside the prophet Daniel's testimony to the violent death of the MESSIAH, by a most unwarrantable change of the received punctuation; reading the verb יִכְרֹת, actively, iachreth, "He shall cut off" [the people of the Jews,] instead of ichareth, passively, "he shall be cut off;" in defiance of all the ancient Versions, and the grammatical construction of the whole passage, and of the parallel passage of Isaiah, liii. 8.

"He was cut off from the land of the living;
Through the wickedness of my people [Isaiah's people,]
He was smitten to death."

Here the corresponding verb נִגְזַר, Nigazar, is indisputably passive, and must be rendered, "He was separated, or cut off." See a critique on the German professors, Michaelis, Dathè, and Eichorne, respecting this prophecy, in the Inspector, p. 194—199. Eichorne rejected the book of Daniel entirely; and Michaelis, after labouring with much perverse ingenuity, like the cuttle fish, to perplex and confound the meaning, concludes, that "so far from counting the prophecy of seventy weeks, the great bulwark of the 25. "Know then and understand :

From the going forth of THE ORACLE to restore [thy people] and to rebuild Jerusalem, until MESSIAH THE LEADER, shall be seven weeks and sixty-two weeks.

(Thou shalt return, [and thy people, at the end of the vision of 2300 days,] and Jerusalem shall be rebuilt *, both the street and the breach [of the wall,] even in straitness of times.)

26. "And after the sixty-two weeks shall MESSIAH be cut off †; and [thy people] shall not be His ‡: a people of THE LEADER TO COME shall destroy both the city and the sanctuary §; and its end shall be in a deluge. And until the end of the war, desolations are decreed.

27. "But one week shall establish a [new] covenant with many ||; and half of the week shall abrogate the [daily] sacrifice and oblation ¶. And upon the pinnacle [or battlement of the temple shall stand] the abomination of desolation , even until the consummation [of the 2300 days ††:] But, then the decreed [desolation] shall be poured [in turn] upon the Desolator ††.

This chronological prophecy, (which I have attempted to render more closely and intelligibly, supplying the ellipses necessary to complete the sense of the concise original,) was evidently designed to explain the foregoing vision, especially in its chronological part of the 2300 days: at the end of which the predicted "desolation of the Jews" should cease, and their "sanctuary be cleansed," or their temple finally be rebuilt; by determining a certain fixed point or epoch within it, namely, the destruction of the city and temple of Jerusalem by the Romans, A.D. 70, for, counting backwards from thence seventy weeks of days, or $70 \times 7 = 490$ years §§, we get the beginning of the period,

Christian religion, he, on the contrary, was most apprehensive of its cause being undermined thereby."

* Deut. xxx. 3; 2 Sam. vii. 10; Isai. lx. 10; Tobit xiv. 5, &c.

† Isaiah liii. 8.

‡ Exod. vi. 7; Deut. xxxii. 5; Hos. i. 9; John xix. 15.

§ Dan. viii. 12; Matt. xxii. 7; John xi. 48.

|| Isai. xlix. 8; Jer. xxxi. 31; Heb. ix. 15; John xi. 42; Acts ii. 41, iv. 4, vi. 1—7.

¶ Heb. vii. 27.

 Matt. xxiv. 15.

†† Dan. viii. 14; Luke xxi. 22; Rom. xi. 25.

‡‡ Numb. xxiv. 24; Isai. li. 22, 23; Luke xxi. 24.

§§ Days are put for years in scriptural and prophetic language, see Levit. xxv. 8; Numb. xiv. 4; Ezek. iv. 6.

B.C. 420; and this being known, the end of the period also, A.D. 1880; for $420 + 1880 = 2300$.

The destruction of Jerusalem, therefore, divides the whole period into two unequal parts; the former, consisting of 490 years, beginning B.C. 420; the latter, of 1810 years, ending A.D. 1880.

I. The former part, and its divisions, noticed in this vision, are first to be considered.

1. The seventy weeks, or 490 years of which it consists, are historically divided into 62, 7, and 1, weeks; and the one week, subdivided into a half week. At the expiration of $62 + 7 = 69$ weeks, or 483 years, MESSIAH THE LEADER was to send forth "his armies, (the Romans,) to destroy those murderers, (the Jews,) and to burn their city," Matt. xxii. 7. And, accordingly, the Jewish war commenced in the last, or seventieth week, A.C. 65, during the administration of Gessius Florus, whose exactions drove the Jews into rebellion, according to Josephus, Ant. XX. 10, 1.

2. "After the sixty-two weeks," but not immediately, "the MESSIAH was cut off;" for the sixty-two weeks expired A.D. 14; and the one week, or passion week, in the midst of which OUR LORD was crucified, A.D. 31, began with his public ministry, A.D. 28, and ended with the martyrdom of Stephen, A.D. 34. (See the Articles of THE MINISTRY OF CHRIST, and GOSPEL CHRONOLOGY, Vol. 1. p. 94—101, in which is given the luminous account of the passion week, in reference to Daniel's prophecy, by Eusebius.) The passion week, therefore, began two weeks after the sixty-two weeks, or at the end of sixty-four weeks; and there were five weeks, or thirty-five years, after the passion week, to the destruction of Jerusalem. So that the seventy weeks must be chronologically divided into sixty-four, one, and five weeks*. For the one week in the prophecy is evidently not the last week of the Jewish war, and cannot, therefore, follow in the order of time, the sixty-two and seven weeks.

The magnificent opening of the prophecy itself, seems to blend

* This simple and ingenious adjustment of the chronology of the seventy weeks, considered as forming a branch of the 2300 days, was originally due to the sagacity of Hans Wood, Esq. of Rossmead, in the county of Westmeath, IRELAND, and published by him in an anonymous Commentary on the Revelation of St. John, London, 1787. Payne. 8vo. Whence I republished it in the Inspector, 8vo. 1799. And afterwards, in the Orthodox Churchman's Magazine, 1803; and now more correctly, 1809.

the fortunes of the Jews and of mankind together, in the important period destined, 1. "To complete the transgression, and consummate the sins" of the Jewish nation, "when their transgressions should come to the full," or they should "fill up the measure of the iniquity of their forefathers," Matt. xxiii. 32, by rejecting and "cutting off" THE MESSIAH, Isai. liii. 8; Acts ii. 23, iii. 13—15, v. 30, 31. 2. "To cover or expiate the iniquity of the human race, by the voluntary sacrifice of himself," Isai. liii. 4—6; 1 Pet. i. 19; Heb. ix. 26; John i. 29, &c.; and also "to introduce everlasting righteousness," during "the kingdom of THE GOD OF HEAVEN," and of his saints," which he was to found and establish upon earth; thence to be translated to heaven at the end of the world, Dan. vii. 13, 14, &c.; 1 Cor. xv. 23—28, &c. And, 3. "To seal, or close prophetic vision," when the grand scheme of Divine economy, in the Patriarchal, Mosaical, and Evangelical dispensations, should be sufficiently revealed to mankind by OUR LORD and his apostles, before the end of the seventy weeks; after "THE SAINT OF SAINTS should, on his resurrection, be anointed," or "invested with all authority in heaven and earth," Matt. xxviii; Rom. i. 4, &c.

"The decree of THE ORACLE for restoring the Jews, and rebuilding Jerusalem," could not refer to their return from the Babylonish captivity, which was now past, and the city rebuilt by Nehemiah, long before the commencement of the prophecy, B.C. 420, in the fourth year of Darius Nothus; it must, therefore, relate to the final restoration of the Jews, and rebuilding of their city, after the long-continued desolation which was to follow the Roman captivity, and to end with the period of 2300 days. Then follows a parenthetical apostrophe to the prophet himself, foretelling his, (and his people's,) final return, at "the end of 2300 days," or "resurrection of the just," Dan. xii. 13; Luke xiv. 14, &c. analogous to the parenthetical remark in Nathan's prophecy to the same effect, 2 Sam. vii. 10, and the rebuilding of the city, Isai. lx. 10; Ezek. xlvi. 30; Zech. ii. 4.

When the Jews should reject and cut off THE MESSIAH, they should also be rejected by him, and "no longer his" peculiar people, as expressly foretold by Moses, Deut. xxxii. 5, (more correctly translated,) and by the prophets, Hosea i. 9, &c., until their final adoption, Zech. viii. 8; and "the Roman armies" were to be sent, as "a people of MESSIAH TO COME" in judgment, in order to be the executioners of indignation against that "wicked and apostate generation" of the Jews, Matt. xxiii. 35, 36.

"The abomination of desolation," were the desolating standards of the Roman armies, which were held in abomination by the Jews, on account of the idolatrous worship paid to the images of their gods which they displayed. The phrase occurs in the same sense afterwards, xi. 31, xii. 11; and its signification is ascertained by OUR LORD himself, in his reference to, and citation of this very prophecy of Daniel, Matt. xxiv. 15, as explained of "the Roman encampments besieging Jerusalem," Luke xxi. 20. This testimony of OUR LORD himself, is decisive to prove that the seventy weeks expired with the destruction of *Jerusalem, A.D. 70, and, consequently, that they began, B.C. 420. And the fourth and last vision of Daniel is also decisive to prove, that the joint beginning of the 2300 days and seventy weeks, was in the reign of Darius Nothus, xi. 1, 2.

II. The latter part of the grand period of 2300 days, consisting of 1810 years after the destruction of Jerusalem, in like manner, contains three remarkable numbers of dates, 1260, 1290, and 1335 days, noticed in the last chapter.

THE 1260 DAYS.

This was the disastrous period of a time, times, and division (or half) of a time, during which the papal little horn of the fourth beast, or Roman empire, now become Christian, should "make war with the saints of THE MOST HIGH, prevail against them, and wear them out," by various modes of persecution and oppression, until the time of the end, and the judgment of the

* This also is the opinion of the Jews, as we have seen in the foregoing note, reviewing Levi's interpretation, and of the most skilful Christian commentators and chronologers, Mede, Scaliger, Wood, &c. The fullest exposition of Mede's opinion, is in the following passage of his works, p. 663.

"These seventy weeks of Daniel are a little provincial kalendar, containing the time that the legal worship and Jewish state was to continue, from the rebuilding of the sanctuary under Darius Nothus, until the final destruction thereof, when the kalendar should expire: within the space whereof their commonwealth and city should be restored; and sixty-two weeks after that, the Messias be slain for sin; and at the end of the whole seventy, their city and temple again destroyed, and their commonwealth utterly dissolved."

Mede, however, confounded Darius Nothus with Darius Hystaspes, "in the second year of whose reign, the whole temple, after a long interruption, began to revive," p. 697. It was in the fourth year of Darius Nothus, that Nehemiah's reform was completed, B. C. 420.

ANCIENT OF DAYS, Dan. vii. 21—26. And this is afterwards described, as during which, “the power of the holy people should be scattered,” xii. 7.

A time in the Chaldee language frequently signifies a year; and is so understood by Daniel himself, iv. 25—34; and in the phrase “at the end of the times, even of years,” which is paraphrased in the English Bible “after certain years,” xi. 13, the period therefore denotes three years and half, or forty-two months, or (allowing thirty days to the primitive month,) 1260 days, as this mysterious period is explained in the apocalypse, Rev. xii. 14, xi. 2, 3, xii. 6. This woful period of persecution is to expire along with the grand period in A. D. 1880, “after which the holy people, or saints, are to be delivered;” therefore, counting backwards from thence, we get A. D. 620 for the time of its commencement: which corresponds, as we have seen, with the Bangorian war in Britain.

It is truly remarkable, that the Mahometan power in the east, sprung up the very same year; for “the false prophet,” as Mahomet is styled in the Apocalypse, in A. D. 620 or 621, broached his celebrated journey to heaven in company with the angel Gabriel, which was so ill received by his countrymen at first, that he was forced to fly from Mecca, A. D. 622, whence the Arabian era of the hejira, (“flight,”) commenced; upon which he published his commission from GOD, in the Koran, to persecute infidels *.

The joint persecutions of the eastern and western apostacy, are foretold in the Apocalypse, chap. xiii. as will be shewn in the sequel.

This commencement of the 1260 days, analytically deduced, by a chain of reasoning from the context, is surely preferable to A. D. 606, adopted by Bishop Newton, Faber, and others; upon the hypothetical ground that this was the year in which the title of universal Bishop was conferred on the Pope, by the usurper Phocas; and the same year also in which Mahomet retired to his cave in Mount Hara, to fabricate his imposture. Neither of these events, in themselves, properly constituted, though they were the forerunners of persecution, not long after.

To comfort the faithful under the gloomy prospect of the corruptions of the Romish Church in the west, and the consequent persecutions of the saints produced thereby throughout this period; the prophet was favoured (and by the spiritual HIGH PRIEST himself, who solemnly announced the term of it,) with a cheering, but transient glance of the BLESSED REFORMATION, which took place in the course of it, by those wise and pious persons, who protested against the errors of the Church of Rome.

* See Salé's Prelim. Discourse, p. 39—49; and Koran, p. 236, and 149, 273.

THE 1290 DAYS.

“Many shall be purified, and made white, and proved, [in the furnace of persecution,] while the wicked shall do wickedly [in persecuting them.] And none of the wicked shall understand [these prophecies,] but the wise shall understand. Now, from the time that the daily [sacrifice] shall be taken away, and the abomination of desolation set up, there shall be 1290 days,” xii. 5—10.

The date of the destruction of Jerusalem, A.D. 70, is here marked by its two peculiar characters, in the second, third, and fourth visions. Counting forwards, therefore, from thence 1290 years, we get A.D. 1360, the precise year in which John Wickliffe first began to preach against the errors of the Church of Rome, at Oxford, in England, who may justly be styled the harbinger of the Reformation, England's morning star.

1. This is no novel hypothesis: it is as old as the Reformation itself. So early as the year 1390, Walter Brute, an Englishman, in the reign of Richard II. published a treatise Of the revelation of Antichrist in Britain, in which is the following remarkable passage, cited by Fox, in his Monuments, Vol. I. p. 441.

“Yet is she [the Church of Rome,] ignorant that within a little while, shall come the days of her destruction:—Because, that from the time the continual sacrifice was taken away, and the abomination of desolation placed, there be passed 1290 days, according to Daniel. And the chronicles added, do agree to the same,” [A.D. 70 + 1290 = A.D. 1360.] Indeed from this, and other passages of his work, Walter Brute appears to have been a man superior to the dark age in which he lived, and to have had a surprising insight into the principal prophecies respecting popery.

2. John Bale, Bishop of Ossory, who flourished about the time of the introduction of the Reformation into Ireland, A.D.

1535, in his valuable work, De Scriptoribus Britannicis, delivers the following encomium upon Wickliffe.

“THE ETERNAL FATHER raised him up, by his Spirit, in the year after our Saviour’s nativity, 1360, to stand forth a magnanimous champion of JESUS CHRIST, in defence of his truth, amid the darkness of impious locusts, (Rev. ix. 2, 3,) and to become the most invincible instrument of that age, against Antichrists.”

3. Henry Wharton, that very learned English divine, who flourished near the close of the seventeenth century, in his Appendix to Cave’s History, thus describes him and his doctrines :

“He began to be famous in the year 1360. About which time he first sharply attacked, both in his preaching and writings, the grievously encreasing superstitions of the age,—the enormous tyranny of the pope of Rome over the Church, now grown inveterate,—the erroneous dogmas of faith universally received in the schools,—and that most scandalous depravity of vicious morals, admitted by all, and even defended by most ; and especially he maintained, with equal constancy and erudition, the rights of the royal authority, and of the ecclesiastical order against the enormous usurpations of the see of Rome, and of the Mendicant Friars.”

4. The author of Sacræ Heptades, or a Treatise on Daniel’s seventy weeks, cited by the learned Whiston *, in his Treatise on the Revelation in 1706, p. 240, explains it in the same way.

“If we take Daniel’s era, that is, the ceasing of the daily sacrifice, by the destruction of the temple, which was in the year of our Lord 70, and add unto that number 1290, limited by the same prophet, it cometh to the year of our Lord 1360. About which time the excellent John Wickliffe, in England, and shortly after Johannes de Rupescissa, in France, (whose labours on the Apocalypse are said to be extant,) prophesied, or rather declared, many prophecies of the Apocalypse concerning Antichrist.”

5. The learned and judicious L’Enfant, Concile de Constance, Tom. I. p. 201, thus describes Wickliffe and his doctrines.

* This simple and obvious solution, adopted by Whiston, above a hundred years ago, has been strangely overlooked by succeeding commentators, down to the present time ; arbitrarily assuming, that the 1290 and 1335 days began along with the 1260. Hence Faber’s perplexities, and new coinage of “the afterhood of the times.”

“ He began to make a noise in 1360, by strongly opposing the attempts of the Monks, who, under colour of their exemptions, violated the rules and statutes of the university of Oxford.—In 1380, he undertook an English translation of the Bible.—In 1381, he began to attack the dogma of transubstantiation.—Among other things, he said, that for several years past, [from about the time of Radbertus, A.D. 820,] the Church had erred respecting the sacrament of the Eucharist; and that he was resolved to bring her back from idolatry to the service of THE TRUE GOD.”

The determination of the commencement of Wickliffe's testimony, in the year 1360, by so many independent authorities, is really remarkable.

THE 1335 DAYS.

—“ Blessed is he that waiteth, and cometh to the 1335 days,” xii. 12.

This is evidently a continuation of the former sentence, announcing a later period to be counted from the same fixed date, A.D. 70, which will bring us to a more advanced stage of the Reformation, when John Huss began to preach against the corruptions of the Church of Rome, at Prague in Bohemia, A.D. 1405. The correctness of this date is also vouched by the following authorities :

1. The author of Sacræ Heptades thus proceeds :

“ Besides that number of 1290, the number 1335, to which the prophet Daniel gives a blessing, is also fulfilled : for, account that from the desolation of the temple, and ceasing of the daily sacrifice, which happened about the same year of our Lord 70 ; add, I say, to that 70 the number 1335, and it cometh fully to the year of our Lord 1405.—Soon after which time, was assembled the great Councill of Constance.—In the same Councill, the godly Bohemians, Johannes Huss, and Hieronymus Pragensis, openly protested against the Pope ; saying, that if he did not follow CHRIST in his life, he was not CHRIST'S VICAR.”

2. L'Enfant gives the following account : Tom. I. p. 26, 205.

“ John Huss rendered himself very famous in 1405, by his preachings in Bohemia, at the celebrated chapel of Bethlehem, [in Prague,] of which he was curate.—It does not appear that he was accused of any innovation before this time.”

These luminous interpretations of our early Protestant divines, derive additional force and authority from the Apocalypse. For, as we owe to the visions of John the true interpretation of Daniel's mysterious time, times, and half a time; so to his subsequent visions we likewise owe a fuller revelation of the illustrious harbingers of the Reformation, Wickliffe and Huss, and also of its founder, Luther; in the following remarkable description of the three detached angels, or luminaries of THE CHURCH, following each other in succession.

1. The first angel is thus described, Rev. xiv. 6, 7. "And I saw another angel flying in mid-heaven, having THE EVER-LASTING GOSPEL to preach to the dwellers upon the earth, even to every nation, and tribe, and tongue, and people; saying, with a loud voice, Fear GOD, and give glory to Him, for the hour of his judgment is come: and worship Him who made the heaven and the earth, the sea and water-springs."

This angel, who is styled "another," as being different from those of the celestial choir who sung the new song of THE LAMB, Rev. xiv. 3, vii. 11, excellently represents the evangelist Wickliffe, who, by his vernacular translation of the Bible, first made, as it were, a republication of the primitive Gospel; which heretofore had been sealed or locked up from the vulgar of every nation of Europe, in the learned languages, and prohibited from the laity, by the spiritual tyranny of the see of Rome, wishing to rivet the chains of her votaries, by the blindness of ignorance. This first harbinger of the Reformation, warned the western world against "worshipping the creature instead of THE CREATOR," in compliance with the reigning superstitions and idolatries of the Church of Rome. By a usual anticipation in Scripture, GOD'S impending "judgments" are denounced as already come.

2. The second angel is thus described, ver. 8.

—"And another angel followed, saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city! because she hath made all the nations drink of the poisonous wine of her fornication."

This second angel, with equal propriety, represents Huss, the disciple and the follower of Wickliffe: who preached still more pointedly against the errors and corruptions of the Church of Rome; and foretold her doom, under the title of the mystical Babylon, that mother of harlots, or fruitful parent of superstition and idolatry in the west, as Babylon had been in the east, even from the days of Nimrod, Gen. x. 9, 10, and of rebellion, Gen. xi. 1—9; whose fall he anticipates in the language of Isaiah's watchman, "Babylon is fallen, is fallen, and all the graven images of her gods He hath broken to the ground," Isai. xx. 9.

3. The last angel is thus described, ver. 9—11.

—"And a third angel followed them, saying with a loud voice, If any one worship the wild beast and his image, and receive [his] mark in his forehead, or in his hand, the same shall drink of the wine of God's wrath, poured out, unmixed, into the cup of his indignation: and he shall be tormented with fire and brimstone, before the holy angels, and before THE LAMB; and the smoke of their torment ascendeth for ever," &c.

In this third angel, the sagacity of Mede first descried the faithful representative of *Luther, who, in the next century, A. D. 1517, "followed the other two; and warned the votaries of the beast, of the dreadful danger that impended over them, if they still persisted in following him; and therefore persuaded them, casting off all delay, to withdraw themselves forthwith from his company; that by this means, they would consult their own salvation; for that after this [notice,] his adherents could not be saved. This preaching, the most remarkable of all, was most happily discharged in the age before this, (says Mede,) by means of Luther and his successors: which, indeed, was followed by that excellent REFORMATION OF THE CHURCHES, when men every where, now not singly, as at the voice of the preceding angel, but by provinces and tribes, in order to assert and purify RELIGION, shook off the yoke of the beast every where." Mede's Works, p. 518.

Wickliffe and Huss, indeed, were the harbingers of this illustrious champion of the Reformation, who so boldly and successfully proclaimed "the terrors of THE LORD to persuade men." Their preaching was local, and confined to their own pale, or neighbourhood, and could not have an extensive influence. But in the riper age of Luther, many powerful causes co-operated to disseminate and propagate his doctrines, which either did not exist before, or did not till then combine their full and irresistible force.

* Whitaker and Faber suppose, that the first angel was Luther, the second Calvin, and the third either their disciples or the Church of England, which is neither Lutheran, Calvinistic, nor Arminian. But the present earlier arrangement of Wickliffe, Huss, and Luther, is surely preferable.

1. Luther's republication of the EVERLASTING GOSPEL in the German language, spread, with inconceivable rapidity, throughout the continent of Europe, and laid the axe to the root of the corrupt tree of Romish idolatry, superstition, and immorality, by exposing them in all their hideous deformity, to public view and abhorrence.

2. The invention of the art of printing in Germany, some time before, greatly facilitated the circulation of the writings of the Reformers, Luther, Zuingle, Calvin, Beza, Erasmus, Cranmer, Ridley, &c. among all ranks in Europe, from the highest to the lowest of the laity, among whom the Bible and its doctrines had been hitherto, in a great measure, sealed or shut.

3. The revival of letters in the west, after the dark middle ages of Gothic ignorance, and the introduction of the Greek classics, on the taking of Constantinople by the Turks, and the avidity with which all the ancient authors were then studied, contributed to open the minds of men, and lead them to assert the right of private judgment in matters of religion and morals, and to emancipate them from the spiritual tyranny of the Church of Rome, impiously claiming infallibility, and implicit belief and obedience to her decisions and decrees, however revolting or repugnant to REASON and SCRIPTURE*.

In the lives and deaths of those illustrious reformers, we have "a noble specimen of the patience of the saints; of those who keep the commandments of GOD, and the faith of JESUS CHRIST!" Rev. xiv. 12.

FOURTH VISION.

This last vision, in the third year of Cyrus, not long before the prophet's death, was ushered in with circumstances of peculiar solemnity; with the presence of CHRIST himself and his angels; both appearing in human form. First, the spiritual HIGH PRIEST cloathed in linen, as on the great day of atonement, appeared in glory to Daniel, and spoke to him; and when he heard the voice of his words, he fell into a trance with his face to the ground. The prophet alone saw this great vision, for his trembling attendants fled to hide themselves, x. 1—9.

Daniel was raised from his trance by the hand that touched him, (probably of the angel Gabriel,) who encouraged him nearly in the same terms as in the former vision of the seventy weeks. And who again came in human form, and touched and strengthened him, that he might shew him the Scripture of truth: representing himself as assisted by MICHAEL, one of the chief princes, and Daniel's prince; who therefore could be no other than the Spiritual HIGH PRIEST, or CHRIST, signified by the name, "Who is like God," ver. 10—21. Cyrus is supposed to be "the prince of Persia, who for one and twenty days withstood" the decree of the return of the Jews, Ezra i. 2.

* See in Robertson's History of Charles V. a masterly account of the rise and progress of the Reformation, Vol. II. p. 78—121.

This last prophecy contains four parts in the eleventh chapter, and an appendix in the twelfth.

1. The first part explains the overthrow of the Persian empire, under Darius Codomannus, the last king, by Alexander the Great; and the division of his great empire among his four generals, xi. 2—4, as already explained.

2. The second details, with minute historical precision, the intermariages and wars of the kings of the north and south, or of Syria and Egypt; and the oppressions and persecutions of the Jews, between these two contending powers, till the depression of Syria by the Romans *, ver. 5—30.

3. The third takes up the conclusion of the second vision, and relates in continuation, the proceedings of the Romans, after the removal of the daily sacrifice, and setting up the abomination of desolation, at the destruction of Jerusalem, A.D. 70, their various persecutions, blasphemies, apostacies, and innovations, Heathen and Christian †, ver. 30—39.

4. The fourth recounts the war of the wilful king with the king of the south, his expedition into the glorious land, of Palestine; his conquests of many countries in the east, except Moab, Edom, and Ammon, and in the south of Egypt, Libya, and Ethiopia. His return, in consequence of tidings from the east and north, which shall trouble him; his planting the tabernacles of his palace in the glorious holy mount, between the two seas; and his final destruction, without any to help him, ver. 40—45.

This last part of the prophecy appears to be unfulfilled; and to coincide, in point of time, with the third woe in the Apoca-

* This second part is particularly explained in the ensuing period.

† This third part is explained in the last period, in the Apocalypse.

lypse. They are therefore both sealed or shut up at present, till further lights shall be furnished by the events.

THE APPENDIX.

1. Michael's vindication of the saints, seems to correspond to the war in heaven between Michael and his angels and the Devil and his angels, Rev. xii. 7—11, probably when Christianity was established in the Roman empire, on the ruins of Paganism, under Constantine the Great.
2. A time of great trouble, such as never was since there was a nation, till the time of the end, or expiration of the persecuting period of a time, times, and half a time, or 1260 days, when the first resurrection shall take place of all that shall be found written in the book of life, Rev. xx. 4, John v. 25, &c.
3. The general resurrection, when the wise and good shall awake to everlasting life, and the wicked to shame and everlasting contempt, Rev. xx. 11—13, John v. 28, 29, &c.
4. The commencement of the Reformation in England, by Wickliffe, 1290 days after the destruction of Jerusalem, A.D. 70, or A.D. 1360.
5. Its progress in Germany by Huss, 1335 days after, A.D. 1405.
6. Promise to Daniel that he shall stand in his lot, at the end of 1260 days, or first resurrection.

EIGHTH PERIOD.

FROM NEHEMIAH'S REFORM TO THE BIRTH OF JOHN THE BAPTIST, 415 YEARS.

PERSIAN DYNASTY.

JEWISH HIGH PRIESTS.

	Y.		B.C.
Eliashib	7 last	420
Joiada or Judas	40	413
Jonathan or John	32	373
Jaddua or Jaddus	20	341

MACEDO-GRÆCIAN DYNASTY.

Onias	21	321
Simon the Just	9	300

	Y.	B.C.
Eleazer	15	291
Manasses	26	276
Onias II.	33	250
Simon II.	22	217
Onias III.	20	195
Jesus or Jason	3	175
Onias or Menelaus	9	172

ASAMONEAN PRINCES.

Judas Maccabeus	}	3	163
Jachim or Alcimus, high priest	}	—	163
Jonathan	}	17	160
appointed high priest	}	—	153
Simon		7	143
John Hyrcanus		30	136
Aristobulus I. and Antigonus		1	106
Alexander Jannæus		27	105
Q. Alexandra		9	78
Hyrcanus II.		3 M.	69
Aristobulus II.		6	6 M.....	69

ROMAN DYNASTY.

Hyrcanus II. again	23	63
Antigonus	3	40

IDUMÆAN KINGS.

Herod the Great	32	first	37
Birth of John the Baptist	415		5

The chronology of this period is collected from Nehemiah, the Maccabees, Josephus, and the Chronicon Alexandrinum. Nehemiah has given the succession of six high priests, from the return of the Jews after the Babylonish captivity, to the end of his own time, Nehem. xii. 10—26, Josephus has added nine more, to the regency of Judas Maccabæus. Ant. xx. 9, 1. But his present amount is incorrect; for it assigns to the fifteen, 414 years, instead of 372. The Fasti Siculi, or *Chronicon Alexandrinum, gives the detail more correctly, as published in Prideaux chronological tables, with some emendation, Vol. II. p. 127. Prideaux has judiciously altered the administration of

* This valuable record was found in an old library in Sicily. It was published with a Latin Version, A.D. 1624; and a short preface, written by Peter, Patriarch of Alexandria.

Simon the Just, from fourteen years to nine; following Eusebius, as more conformable to the Maccabees and Josephus. But the regency of Judas Maccabeus, which he dates at his father's death, B.C. 166, is here postponed till the death of Menelaus the high priest, when it was formally acknowledged by Antiochus Eupator, king of Syria, three years after, B.C. 163, which agrees with the duration of the Asamonean Dynasty, according to Josephus, reckoning it 126 years till the death of Antigonus. And the accession of John Hyrcanus, is dated B.C. 136, a year earlier than by Prideaux, because it agrees with Scripture, 1 Mac. xvi. 14; and with Josephus, stating that the year after his accession, B.C. 135, was a sabbatical year, as it actually appears to have been, according to the present system of chronology.

The last act of Nehemiah's reform, was the expulsion of a son of Joiada, and grandson of Eliashib the high priest, for marrying the daughter of Sanballat the Horonite, or Moabite, Nehem. xiii. 18, in the thirty-third year of Eliashib's pontificate of forty years, and therefore when Eliashib was old. This critically harmonizes with B.C. 420, the commencement of Daniel's grand prophetic period of 2300 days, and also of the seventy weeks*.

Nehemiah lived to a very advanced age; for from the date of his commission, B.C. 444, to the succession of Jaddua, B.C. 341, whom he notices, xii. 22, was an interval of 103 years. His age, therefore, could scarcely have been less than 130 years, equalling Jehoiada's, 2 Chron. xxiv. 15. Thus did "GOD" hear his repeated prayers, and "remember him for good," and for "his good deeds," his exalted piety, patriotism, and disinterestedness, bless him with uncommon "length of days, riches, and honours," in this life.

The apocryphal books of Maccabees and Josephus, are our chief guides in the history of this period. The first book of Maccabees, and the most correct, ending with the accession of John Hyrcanus, was probably written by the direction of that prince. The second, which is more minute and circumstantial, and abounds more in the marvellous, does not reach so far. It is an abstract of the five books of Jason, a Jew of Cyrene. There are two more books of Maccabees attached to the Alexandrine copy of the Septuagint Version. The apocryphal books use the era of Seleucida, beginning B.C. 312, with the murder of Alexander's son, Ægus, but with some variation, as explained in the first volume, p. 173, 174.

* Prideaux dates this last act too low, B.C. 409, to accord with his scheme of the seventy weeks, when "Joiada was high priest, who was the son of Eliashib," which offers violence to the text, Vol. I. p. 326.

JEWISH HIGH PRIESTS.

After Nehemiah, there were no more Persian governors sent to Judea. It was annexed to the province of Cœle Syria, and the administration of Jewish affairs left to the high-priests; subject however to the controul of the provincial governors.

Jonathan, (or, as Josephus calls him, John,) who came from the bad stock of Eliashib, in the eighth year of his pontificate, atrociously murdered his own brother Jesus, within the sacred precincts of the sanctuary itself, jealous of his superior interest with the Persian governor, Bagoses, who intended to make him high-priest. On hearing the horrible deed, Bagoses went to the temple, and when the priests attempted to hinder him from entering the sanctuary, he indignantly replied, Am not I purer than the murdered person there! For this he persecuted the Jews, and laid a heavy tribute on the lambs offered for burnt sacrifices, which was not remitted till the accession of Ochus to the crown of Persia, B.C. 358.

Afterwards the Jews incurred the displeasure of this prince, by joining, probably, with the revolted provinces of Phœnicia and Egypt. For which he took a severe revenge, for he marched into Judea, besieged and took Jericho, and carried away a great number of captive Jews, whom he transplanted into Egypt southwards, and into Hyrcania northwards.

This severity, perhaps, deterred the Jews from joining Alexander the Great at first, when he invaded the Persian dominions. For they declined his overtures, and refused to send him provisions while he was engaged in the siege of Tyre. Provoked at this, he threatened to punish them. Accordingly, in B.C. 332, after he had reduced Tyre, he marched towards Jerusalem with his army, but he was met at Sapha, an eminence near Jerusalem, which commanded a view of the city and temple, by a solemn procession, consisting of the high-priest dressed in his pontifical robes, attended by the priests in their proper habits, and the rest of the people in white garments, as Jaddua had been commanded, in a vision of the night. When they approached, Alexander, struck with awful respect, advanced alone to meet the high-priest, saluted him first, and adored the sacred name of God, written on the front of his mitre, to the great surprise and disappointment of the Phœnicians and Chaldeans, who attended the king, expecting his orders to destroy the priests and plunder the city. While they stood amazed, suspecting that Alexander had lost his senses, Parmenio, his confidential friend, came up, and asked him the reason of his conduct. The king replied, “I adore not the high-priest, but the God with whose priesthood he is honoured. When I was at Dios in Macedonia, and considering in myself how to subdue Asia, I saw in a dream such a person, in his present dress, who encouraged me not to delay, but to pass over with confidence, for that himself would lead my army, and give me the Persian empire. Since, therefore, I have seen no other person in such a dress as I now see him, and recollect the vision and exhortation in my dream, I think, that having undertaken this expedition by a divine mission, I shall conquer Darius, overthrow the Persian empire, and succeed in all my designs.” Having spoke thus to Parmenio, he presented his right hand to the priest, and went into the city, attended by the priests, and going to the temple, he sacrificed according to the high-priest’s directions, and treated the pontiff and the priests with distinguished honours. The book of Daniel was then shewn unto him, in which it was foretold that one of the Greeks should overthrow the Persian empire; pleased at which, and thinking that he was the person meant, he dismissed the multitude. The day after, summoning them to his presence, he desired them to ask whatever favours they chose, and at the high-priest’s request, he granted them the free enjoyment of their national laws, and an exemption from tribute every seventh year. He also promised to permit the Jews in Babylon and Media to enjoy their own laws, and offered to take with him, on the expedition, any of the people that chose to share his fortune, promising them the free use of their own customs and laws, which induced many to join him. Ant. XI. 8, 4, 5.

This relation of Josephus is confirmed by Origen, cont. Celsum, Lib. V. p. 265, and is perfectly credible in itself. The same spiritual high-priest who revealed to Daniel the vision of the he goat, and the overthrow of the Persian empire by Alexander the Great, might also have thus induced and encouraged the Macedonian himself to undertake the expedition. And surely as an instrument of Divine chastisement, he was as worthy of being favoured with Divine communications as Nebuchadnezzar or Belshazzar.

A fact of such public notoriety as the change of Alexander's wrath suddenly into mildness, in the presence of such a multitude of spectators, could not have been fabricated without detection; nor could it have been more rationally accounted for than by Alexander's relation. The historian Justin seems also to allude to this transaction, where he remarks that "Alexander was met by many kings of the east with *mitres."

"When Alexander afterwards wanted to rebuild the temple of Belus at Babylon, and employed all his soldiers in turn to remove the rubbish, the Jews alone refused to assist in the work, and suffered many stripes for their refusal, and paid heavy fines, until the king, being struck with their firmness, pardoned, and gave them an exemption. They also, on their return home, pulled down the temples and altars that had been erected by the colonists in their land, and paid a fine for some to the satraps or governors, and received a pardon for others." This account Josephus cites from the Greek historian Hecataeus, contr. Apion. I. 22, p. 1348; and it tends to confirm Alexander's visit to Jerusalem, and the recruiting of his army among the Jews. Their zeal on this occasion leads us to conclude, that Jaddua was a wise and good pontiff, and that during his administration he endeavoured to uphold Nehemiah's reform. Of this he gave a signal instance in the expulsion of his own brother Manasses, for marrying the daughter of Sanballat †, governor of Samaria, as we learn from Josephus, Ant. XII. 8, 2. He and his people, therefore, who concurred therein, were likely to be favoured with divine support and protection.

The apostate Manasses was made high-priest of the temple built by Sanballat, on Mount Gerizim, near Samaria, and proved a great annoyance to the Jews, by harbouring all that were banished or fled for this and other offences, by fomenting disturbances at Jerusalem, and by promoting a rivalry between the two temples at Jerusalem and Mount Gerizim; the Jews contending that sacrifices ought to be offered only at Jerusalem; the Samaritans at Mount Gerizim, where Joshua, they said, built the first altar, Joseph. Ant. XII. 1, 1. And this controversy subsisted till OUR SAVIOUR'S time, and created a mortal antipathy between the two sects, John iv. 9—20; Luke ix. 51—56; John viii. 48.

* Alexandrum obviam cum infulis, multos orientis reges habuisse. Lib. XI. 10.

† This Sanballat, who was a Cuthite, sent by Darius Codomannus, the last king of Persia, to be governor of Samaria, is not to be confounded with "Sanballat the Horonite," or Moabite, Neh. xiii. 28, in the reign of Darius Nothus.

THE SAMARITANS.

These originally were a heathen colony of Babylonians and Cuthites, settled in the country of Samaria, by Esarhaddon, king of Assyria, on the captivity and deportation of the ten tribes, who “feared THE LORD, and served their own gods,” at the same time, 2 Kings xvii. 24—34, or worshipped the God of Israel, but in an idolatrous manner, until Manasses, and the fugitive Jews who flocked to him, taught them to reject all idolatry, and worship the true God only, according to the Mosaical law. And from this time they may truly be reckoned a sect of the Jewish religion.

The Samaritans, in common with the Jews, admitted the authority of the Pentateuch, but rejected all the other books of the Jewish Canon, or rather held them to be apocryphal, or of inferior authority. That they did not entirely reject them is evident from their expectation of the MESSIAH or CHRIST, not only as a “prophet” or divine instructor, like Moses, but also to be “the SAVIOUR of the world,” John iv. 25—42. But these titles of MESSIAH and SAVIOUR were borrowed from the Psalms and the Prophets. Nor is it likely that Manasses himself, a Jewish priest, and a reformer of their religion, would have disclaimed the prophetical Scriptures, when he established the paramount authority of the books of Moses, and introduced them in the Samaritan, or ancient Phœnician character, transcribed therein from the Chaldee of Ezra's canon.

It has been imagined, but rather without sufficient foundation, that the present Samaritan copy of the Pentateuch was first introduced at the time that Esarhaddon sent to the heathen colonists one of the captive priests to teach them the way (or worship) of the God of the land, who came and dwelt at Bethel, and taught them how they should fear THE LORD, 2 Kings xvii. 27, 28. But it is no where mentioned that he brought with him a copy of the law of Moses; he might have taught them by tradition; or, if otherwise, it is clear the Samaritan copy, now extant, was transcribed from the Jewish of Ezra; for 1. It retains all the supplemental passages attributed to that scribe, and therefore could not have been of earlier date. 2. Many of the variations in the Samaritan copy are evidently occasioned by the mistake, or confounding of similar letters in the Chaldee character, Beth and Caph, Daleth and Resh, &c. which are unlike, and therefore in no danger of being confounded in the Samaritan. And 3. Some passages are wilful corruptions of Ezra's text, as in Deut. xxvii. 4, where, to uphold their heresy of erecting an altar upon Gerizim, and making it the mount of blessing, rather than Ebal; and after the ten commandments, in the twentieth chapter of Exodus, they interpolated an additional precept from the eleventh and twenty-seventh chapters of Deuteronomy, for erecting the altar in Mount Gerizim instead of Mount Ebal, and offering sacrifices to God thereon. Still, however, a Samaritan copy, even so early as the time of Manasses, is highly valuable, as furnishing several important various readings, which are a considerable improvement upon the present Masorete text; such as Gen. iv. 8, Exod. xii. 40, &c. noticed before; and a confirmation of the prolongation of the patriarchal generations, from the flood to Abraham, adopted in this work. See Vol. I. p. 282, &c.

The second point of difference between the Samaritans and the Jews, was, and still is, their rejection of all traditions, strictly adhering to the written law. Hence they were better disposed for the reception of THE GOSPEL than the Jews, who often “made the law of none effect, or transgressed it by their traditions,” “teaching for doctrines the commandments of men,” Matt. xv. 3—9; and, accordingly, the spiritual “harvest” of the Gospel, “ripened” much sooner among them than among the Jews, John iv. 35—42.

The belief of the resurrection of the dead, and of a future state of retribution, prevailed among the Samaritans as well as the Jews. And this furnishes a popular refutation of Bishop Warburton's paradox, that “Moses stands single amongst ancient and modern legislators, in teaching a religion without the sanction, or so much as the mention, of a future state of rewards and punishments:” for, not to insist on the internal evidence to the contrary, already adduced in the foregoing part of this volume, we may reasonably ask, Whence then did the Samaritans derive this doctrine, if not from the religion of Moses?

The death of Alexander the Great, B.C. 324, in the midst of his prosperity and of his excesses, during his ominous attempt to rebuild the temple of Belus at Babylon, which had been devoted to destruction, never to be rebuilt, by the sure word of prophecy, was calamitous to the Jewish nation. For, amidst the contests that prevailed among Alexander's successors, each striving for the mastery, and celebrating his death, as he himself foretold, with funeral games the most bloody; "evils were multiplied in the earth," 1 Mac. i. 9; and the Jews, from their intermediate situation, lying between the two powerful kingdoms of Syria northward, and Egypt southward, were alternately harassed by both*. "They resembled a ship tossed by a hurricane, and buffeted on both sides by the waves, while they lay in the midst of contending seas," according to the imagery of Josephus, Ant. XII. 3, 3.

At the first partition among the generals, after Alexander's death, the provinces of Cœle Syria, Phœnicia, and Judea, were allotted to Laomedon, as governor, and confirmed to him by a second. But Ptolemy Lagus, the natural brother of Alexander the Great, and governor of Egypt, soon wrested them from him, and besieged Jerusalem, which adhered to Laomedon, with a great army, and taking advantage of the Sabbath-day, stormed it, without any resistance from the inhabitants, B.C. 322. He treated them at first with great severity, and carried away a hundred thousand captives to Egypt, and, according to Appian, demolished their walls. But afterwards, wishing to attach a people so faithful to their governors, and so important as a barrier on his northern frontier, he restored all their former privileges under Alexander, entrusted to them the garrisoning of the most important fortresses of Egypt, Judea, and Samaria, and gave great encouragement to the Jews to settle in his new capital of Alexandria, by a wise and liberal policy. He also extended his conquests to Cyprus, Arabia, Libya, and Ethiopia, and became great.

But Seleucus, the governor of Babylon and of the eastern provinces, was greater; for, first he conquered Antigonus, and seized his provinces of Syria and Asia Minor; and at last he conquered Lysimachus, governor of Thrace, who had before annexed Macedon to his dominions. Thus Seleucus, surnamed Nicator, "conqueror," united three of the four kingdoms into which Alexander's empire was split; and was reckoned by Ap- pian, "the greatest king after Alexander." And so Daniel represents him :

* See the Tables of Egyptian and Syrian kings, Vol. I. p. 164 and 175.

"And the king of the south, [Ptolemy,] shall be strong; but one of his [Alexander's] princes, shall be strong above him, and have dominion : his dominion shall be a great dominion," Dan. xi. 5.

Ptolemy retained the possession of Judea, until the ambitious and turbulent Antigonus wrested it from him in turn, B.C. 312. But after the decisive battle of Issus, B.C. 302, in which Antigonus was defeated and slain, by the confederate forces of Seleucus and Lysimachus, Ptolemy quietly recovered and retained this important province, and by the wisdom of his government, he promoted the prosperity of the Jews, and gained their affection. The reign of Ptolemy is dated in the Canon, B.C. 305. For he did not assume the title of king, until after the extinction of "Alexander's posterity," by the murder of his natural son, Hercules, the year before; when the other generals also "put on crowns," 1 Mac. i. 9.

Judea was happy during his reign, in an excellent and patriotic high-priest, Simon, surnamed the Just. He repaired and fortified the city and the temple, with strong and lofty walls, and made a spacious cistern, or reservoir of water, "in compass like a sea," as we learn from his beautiful eulogy, the last in the book of Ecclesiasticus, l. 1—24. But his greatest and most important work, was the completion of the Canon of the Old Testament, by the addition of the books of Ezra, Nehemiah, Chronicles, Esther, and the prophecies of Malachi. He was the last president of the great council, or sanhedrim, among the high-priests; and was succeeded in that office by Antigonus Sochaus, a man of great learning and consummate piety. His doctrines, however, were too refined and spiritualized for ordinary apprehensions; he held that God was to be served, wholly from disinterested motives of pure love and reverence, founded on the contemplation of his infinite perfections, uninfluenced by the sordid expectation of reward, or servile fear of punishment. Hence they were either misunderstood, or perverted by his followers; of whom was Sadok, the founder of the atheistical sect of the Sadducees, who ultimately denied a resurrection, or future state of rewards and punishments; contending that there was neither angel nor spirit, but that death was an eternal sleep, Matt. xxii. 23; Acts xxiii. 8. This pernicious sect prevailed principally among the rulers, the rich, and noble, and even among several of the priests. They agreed with the Samaritans in receiving only the books of Moses as canonical, and in rejecting the traditions of the elders; and were the most violent persecutors of the Christians after our Lord's resurrection, Acts xxiii. 6.

Ptolemy Philadelphus, who succeeded his father Lagus, B.C. 285, was a great encourager of learning, and patron of learned men. Under his auspices was executed that excellent translation of the Old Testament into Greek, called the Septuagint, from the seventy or seventy-two interpreters, said to have been employed therein. At this time Eleazer, the son of Simon the Just, was high-priest, who furnished the king with a correct copy of the Hebrew Scriptures. Usher dates this translation, B.C. 278. At first, it is probable that only the Version of the Pentateuch was completed, and at the same time, perhaps, of the Psalms and Proverbs; for these three are much more correct, and written in a purer style than the rest; the whole, however, was finished not long after.

Seleucus Nicator survived his victory over Lysimachus only seven months, when he was treacherously slain, B.C. 280, by Ptolemy Keraunus, the younger brother of Ptolemy Philadelphus, king of Egypt, who was then a refugee at the court of Seleucus, and had been most kindly received by him. He was succeeded in his eastern dominions by Antiochus Soter, his son, to whom he resigned his favourite queen, Stratonice, because the prince was passionately in love with her. From this incestuous marriage, sprung all the kings of Syria, who so tyrannically oppressed the Jewish nation.

Antiochus Soter was succeeded by his son Antiochus Theus, B.C. 261, who carried on a long war with Ptolemy Philadelphus; and at length concluded a peace with him, on the condition of divorcing his wife and sister, Laodice, and disinheriting her two sons, and marrying Berenice, the daughter of Philadelphus, on whose issue he agreed to settle the crown of Syria, B.C. 252. But Philadelphus dying in B.C. 247, he took back his former wife, Laodice; who, fearing his fickleness, poisoned him, and set her son, Seleucus Callinicus, upon the throne, B.C. 246. Callinicus, in the beginning of his reign, at the instigation of his mother, seized Berenice in the asylum of Daphne, near Antioch, the capital of Syria, and slew her, with her young son, and many of her attendants. Whereupon Ptolemy Euergetes, her brother, slew Laodice in return, made war upon Callinicus, took from him Phœnicia, Syria, Cilicia, and several of his eastern provinces, and carried back into Egypt 40,000 talents of silver, and 2500 images of gods, among which were the gods of Egypt, carried away by *Cambyses; and survived Callinicus four years. Which is thus described in

DANIEL'S PROPHECY.

“And at the end of [several] years, they, [the kings of the south and north,] shall connect themselves together [by marriage:] for [Berenice,] the king's daughter of the south, shall come to the king of the north, to make an agreement. But she shall not retain the power of the arm, [or her interest with Antiochus; who, after some time, brought back his former wife, Laodice, and her children, to court:] Neither shall he, [Antiochus,] stand, nor his arm; [for he was poisoned;] and she, [Berenice,] shall be given up, and they that brought her, [her Egyptian attendants,] and he whom she brought forth, [her young son,] and he that strengthened her in those times. [Her father, Philadelphus, who died shortly before.]

“But out of a branch of her root shall one stand up in his estate, [her brother Euergetes,] who shall come with an army, and shall enter into the fortresses, [or the fenced cities,] of the king of the north, and shall act against them, and prevail: and shall carry captives into Egypt, their gods, with their princes and precious vessels of gold and silver. And he shall continue some years after the king of the north. So the king of the south shall come into the kingdom [of the north,] and shall return into his own land [of Egypt,]” Dan. xi. 6—9.

During the reign of Euergetes, Onias, the high priest of the Jews, the son of Eleazer, who succeeded Manasses the son of Juddua, by his sordid avarice, and embezzlement of the tribute of twenty talents of silver, usually paid to the Egyptians, so provoked the king that he threatened to confiscate the lands of Judea, and sent a colony of soldiers to occupy them. But fortunately for the whole nation, he was appeased by the policy and address of Joseph, the high priest's nephew; who generously borrowed the money upon his own credit, paid the tribute, and so ingratiated himself at the Egyptian court, that he obtained the lucrative post of farming the king's revenues in the provinces of Cœle Syria, Phœnicia, Samaria, and Judea.

* For this restoration of their gods, the idolatrous Egyptians gave him the title of Euergetes, “benefactor.”

In Syria, Seleucus Keraunus, inheriting the remains of his father's kingdom, B.C. 225, and thinking to recover the rest, raised a great army against the revolted king of Pergamus; but was poisoned by two of his generals, after a short reign of two years. His brother and successor, Antiochus Magnus, B.C. 223, carrying on the war, recovered almost all Asia Minor, Media, Persia, and Babylonia. In the third year of his reign he invaded and recovered great part of Cœle Syria; and the next year returning to invade Phœnicia, he beat the army of Ptolemy Philopator, who in B.C. 222, had succeeded his father Euergetes in Egypt. He then invaded Palestine, and the neighbouring parts of Arabia; and the third year returned with an army of 78,000 men; but Ptolemy coming out of Egypt with an army of 75,000, fought and routed him at Raphia, near Gaza, between Palestine and Egypt, and recovered all Phœnicia and Cœle Syria. These wars are thus described in

DANIEL'S NEXT PROPHECY.

“But his sons, [Seleucus Keraunus and Antiochus Magnus, the sons of Callinicus,] shall be stirred up, and shall gather a great army. And one [of them, Antiochus Magnus,] shall come effectually, and overflow [Cœlesyria,] and pass through. Then shall he return, [the next year,] and be stirred up, [marching even] to his fortresses, [the frontier towns of Egypt.] And the king of the south, [Ptolemy,] shall be moved with choler, and come forth, [the third year,] and fight with him, even with the king of the north, [Antiochus;] and he, [Antiochus,] shall lead forth a great multitude; but the multitude shall be given into his [Ptolemy's] hand [at the battle of Raphia,”] Dan. xi. 10, 11.

After this decisive victory, Ptolemy made an imprudent peace with Antiochus, whom he might have dispossessed of his dominions, if he had pursued his success. He then visited the cities of Cœle Syria and Palestine, which had submitted to him, and among the rest in his progress, Jerusalem. Here he offered sacrifices in the temple, and was desirous of entering into the sanctuary, being greatly lifted up by pride and presumption *. When Simon II, at that time high priest, remonstrated that it was unlawful even for the priests to enter the inner sanctuary, he answered haughtily, that although they were deprived of that honour, he ought not †, and pressed forward. But while he was passing through the inner court of the temple, he was shaken “like a reed, and fell speechless on the ground,” either by the terrors of the Lord, or by his own superstitious fears; and was carried off from the temple half dead; and departed with heavy displeasure against the whole nation of the Jews. At his return, therefore, to Alexandria, he began a cruel and impolitic persecution against the Jewish inhabitants, B.C. 216, in which, according to Eusebius, 40,000 Jews were slain, or 60,000 according to Jerom. These proceedings are thus foretold in

DANIEL'S ENSUING PROPHECY.

“And the multitude being taken away [of the Syrians,] his heart shall be lifted up; and he shall cast down many myriads [of his own subjects;] but he shall not be strengthened by it; for the king of the north shall return,” &c. Dan. xi. 12, 13.

About twelve years after the battle of Raphia, Ptolemy Philopator died, B.C. 205, a monster of cruelty and profligacy of every kind. He is accused, by some historians, of having murdered his father, his mother, and his brother; he killed his high-minded wife and sister, Arsinoe, who had shared with him the dangers of the battle; he gave himself up to the harlot Agathoclea and her brother his minion; and his death was followed by the massacre of all his unworthy favourites. He left his crown to his son, Ptolemy Epiphanes, a child of five years old. Thereupon Antiochus Magnus, confederated with Philip, king of Macedon, to invade and divide between them the dominions of Epiphanes. Hence arose a various warfare between Antiochus and the generals of the Egyptians; each of them, seizing, in turn, Phœnicia, Judea, and Cœle Syria, whereby these countries were much afflicted by both parties. First Antiochus reduced them, B.C. 203, the Jews willingly submitting

* Ὑβρεὶ καὶ θρασεὶ μεγάλως ἐπηρμενον, 3 Mac. ii. 21. N.B. The third and fourth books of Maccabees in Greek, are to be found in the Alexandrine Septuagint Version.

† Ἐι ἐκεῖνοι ἐστηρηγνται ταυτης της τιμης, ἐμε οὐ δεῖ, ibid.

to him ; but Scopas, the Egyptian general, recovered them in B.C. 199, who was odious for his rapacity. Next year, B.C. 198, Antiochus fought and routed Scopas, near the fountains of Jordan, besieged him in Sidon, took the city, and easily recovered Syria and all Palestine from Egypt. And in order to attach the Jews to his interest, who were now hostile to the Egyptians, he published an edict prohibiting all strangers from entering the temple of Jerusalem ; and he colonized Lydia, Phrygia, and other districts of doubtful fidelity, with Jews from Babylonia as well as Palestine ; and frequently reinforced their colonies. A circumstance which accounts for the great numbers of Jews scattered throughout those countries at the preaching of the gospel, 1 Pet. i. 1, James i. 1.

The defeat of his ally, Philip of Macedon, at the battle of Cynocephalæ, next year, B.C. 197, by the Romans, to whom he imprudently gave no support ; and his apprehensions of that republic, now growing formidable to the east, induced him to temporize with the Egyptians, and to offer his beautiful daughter, Cleopatra, in marriage to the young king, Ptolemy Epiphanes, when he should become of age ; promising, as her dower, to restore the provinces of Cœle Syria and Palestine, which he had wrested from Egypt. She was then betrothed to him, and the marriage took place at Raphia, when he was eighteen, B.C. 192. But Antiochus still kept possession of the provinces to be ceded *, and endeavoured to corrupt his daughter to betray her husband's interests. But he was disappointed. She was more attached to Ptolemy than to her father ; and being probably dissatisfied at his breach of promise, she joined her husband in an embassy to Rome, next year, to congratulate the Romans on driving Antiochus out of Greece, and to assure the senate of the readiness of the king and queen of Egypt to obey their directions.

For Antiochus having, as he imagined, secured peace with Egypt by this marriage, imprudently embarked in a war with the Romans, invading their allies, instead of directly invading

* Jerom and Appian say that Antiochus surrendered these provinces ; and Josephus appears to concur with them, intimating that their revenues were paid to the king of Egypt, Ant. XII. 4, 1. But Po'ybius denies it ; and they were certainly in the possession of the sons of Antiochus, namely, Seleucus Philopator, 2 Mac. iii. 3, and Antiochus Epiphanes, 2 Mac. iv. 7, the great persecutor of the Jews, who received tribute from them, 1 Mac. i. 29.

Italy itself, and carrying the war into their own country, according to the sage advice of Hannibal. With a formidable fleet he subdued most of the maritime towns of Asia Minor, Thrace, and Greece, and several of the islands, Samos, Eubœa; thus strengthening their attachment to the Romans; who by an artful and refined policy, had proclaimed liberty to all the cities and states of Greece, B.C. 196, in order to detach them from Philip of Macedon, and to break the power of the Achean league; and thereby had rendered themselves highly popular.

The Romans, therefore, readily espousing the cause of their allies, and Philip cordially concurring, Acilius, the Roman consul, defeated Antiochus at the straits of Thermopylæ, and drove him out of Greece; and soon after, Livius and Æmilius defeated his fleet near Phocœa, B.C. 191. Next year, Cornelius Scipio, and his brother Africanus, crossing over into Asia, obtained a decisive victory over Antiochus, near the city of Magnesia, principally by the assistance of Eumenes, king of Pergamos, B.C. 190. From Antioch, the fortified capital of Syria, to which Antiochus fled after the battle, he was forced to sue for peace; which was granted to him by the conquerors, upon the most humiliating conditions. 1. That he should surrender all Asia Minor, westwards of Mount Taurus, to Eumenes, king of Pergamos; 2. That he should defray the whole expences of the war; 3. That he should pay an annual tribute of a thousand talents*; and 4. That he should send twenty hostages to Rome, and among them his younger son, Antiochus, afterwards called Epiphanes, as pledges for the performance of these conditions.

After this, Antiochus retired to the eastern provinces that still remained to him, where he endeavoured to collect the arrears of tribute due to him, in order to defray his heavy engagements to the Romans. There he was slain two years after, in a sacrilegious attempt to rob the rich temple of Jupiter Belus, at Elymais in Persia, by the natives. These transactions of his reign are thus foretold in

DANIEL'S CONTINUATION.

“ For [Antiochus,] the king of the north shall return, and shall set forth a multitude greater than the former; and shall certainly come after certain years, [twelve,] with a great army, and with much riches. And in those times there shall many stand up against the king of the south, [particularly the Macedonians.] Also the sons of the revolters of thy people, [the Jews, Samaritans, &c.] shall exalt themselves, [or affect independence,] to establish the vision, [or bring on the predicted calamities,] but they shall fall [by Scopas.] So the king of the north shall come, and cast up a mount, and the arms of the south [Scopas, &c.] shall not withstand; but he, [Antiochus,] that cometh against him, shall do according to his own will, and none shall stand before him. And he shall stand in the glorious land, [Judea,] which shall be perfected, [or prosper] in his hand.

* The writer of the second book of Maccabees says, two thousand talents, viii. 8. But this might have included an arrear due at that time.

“He shall also set his face to go with the strength of all his kingdom [to Raphia,] and make an agreement [or treaty] with him, [Ptolemy,] and shall give him [in marriage his] daughter [Cleopatra, the fairest] of women, corrupting her; but she shall neither stand on his side, nor be for him, [but for her husband.]

“And after this he shall turn his face to the isles, [westward,] and shall take many. But a [Roman] prince, for his own behalf, [and to support his allies,] shall cause the reproach offered by him to cease: without his own reproach, he shall cause it to turn upon him. Then shall he turn his face towards the fort of his own land, [Antioch, in his flight eastward:] but he shall stumble, and fall at [Elymais,] and not be found,” Dan. xi. 13—19.

Antiochus was succeeded by his eldest son, Seleucus Philopator, B.C. 187, during the pontificate of Onias III. “when the holy city was inhabited with all peace, and the laws were kept very well, because of the godliness of Onias the high priest, and his hatred of wickedness.”—“And Seleucus himself, out of his own revenues, bore all the costs belonging to the service of the sacrifices,” 2 Mac. iii. 1—3. But upon the information of Simon, who was made governor of the temple, and had quarrelled with Onias, that the treasury of Jerusalem was exceedingly rich, and abundantly more than sufficient to supply the sacrifices; the king, who was straitened for money to raise the Roman tribute, sent his treasurer, Heliodorus, to seize and bring him the money. This sacrilegious attempt, however, failed; for Heliodorus was encountered by a celestial apparition, scourged severely by two angels, and carried off speechless by his guard for dead, until restored by the prayers of Onias, iii. 4—40. Josephus repeats the same, but attributes it to Apollodorus, governor of Cœle Syria and Phœnicia. De Maccab. § iv. p. 1395.

Seleucus was inclined to shake off the Roman yoke, but had not courage to attempt it. He was indeed no more than a tax-gatherer for them, during the twelve years of his reign; when he was murdered by his ambitious and wicked treasurer, Heliodorus, who usurped the kingdom.

These circumstances are thus foretold by Daniel.

“Then shall [Philopator] stand up in his estate, a raiser of taxes, in the glory of the kingdom. But within a few days, [or years,] he shall be destroyed; neither in anger, nor in battle, [but by domestic treason.]”

At the time of his death, his younger brother, Antiochus, who had been exchanged as a hostage, for his son Demetrius, at Rome, was then on his way home at Athens; and had sufficient address to ingratiate himself so with Eumenes, as to prevail on him to expel the usurper, and place him on the throne; and with the Syrians and Romans, to suffer him to reign in exclusion of the rightful heir, young Demetrius. On his accession, B.C. 175*, he was styled Epiphanes, “illustrious,” by the usual adulation of the Syrians; but from the wild and disgraceful freaks and excesses into which he ran, joined to the utmost profusion and extravagance, to support his interest with his subjects, and the Romans, he was nicknamed Epimanes, “the madman;” in greater conformity with his scriptural titles of “a vile person,” and “a wicked root.” With the history of his persecution of the Jews, the books of the Maccabees properly commence, 1 Mac. i. 10, 2 Mac. iv. 7.

The first act of his reign was the deposal of the worthy Onias III. whose sacred office he sold for 440 talents of silver, to his younger brother, the unprincipled Jesus, who assumed a Greek name, Jason; who gave him 150 more, for licence to erect a place of exercise at Jerusalem, for the youth of the city, according to the heathenish customs of the Greeks. Jason, however, did not long enjoy his ill-gotten dignity; three years after, he was supplanted, in turn, by his younger brother, Onias IV. or, by his Greek name, Menelaus, who gave the king three hundred talents more for the high priesthood than Jason had given; and Jason was compelled to fly into the country of the Ammonites; mean while, the wickeder Menelaus stole some golden vessels out of the temple, and sold them at Tyre and the neighbouring cities; and when reproved by his brother, the exiled Onias, he prevailed on Andronicus, the king's deputy at Antioch, to murder him: for which Andronicus was justly slain on the same spot, by the king. Josephus omits these circumstances of the sale of the pontificate; but from the character of all the parties concerned, they are highly credible.

* “In the 137th year of the kingdom of the Greeks,” or era of Seleucidæ, 1 Mac. i. 10.

Upon the accession of his young nephew, Ptolemy Philometor, to the throne of Egypt, which took place after the death of his mother and guardian, Cleopatra, in B.C. 172, he sent ambassadors to Alexandria to assist at the coronation; and there discovered that the ministers of the young king meant to renew their master's claim to the provinces of Cœle Syria, in right of the original partition treaty, in the reign of Ptolemy Lagus, and of his mother's dower.

Antiochus denied the claim, and despising the youth of Ptolemy, repeatedly invaded Egypt. In his first expedition, B.C. 171, he, on his way, was bribed to acquit the infamous Menelaus of a charge brought against him by the Jews, of robbing the temple of many of the golden vessels, 2 Macc. iv. 39—50, and afterwards gained a victory over the Egyptians at Pelusium. Next year, B.C. 170, he not only completely defeated the Egyptian army, but took Philometor prisoner, and subdued the whole country, except the capital, Alexandria. While he was thus employed, on a rumour of his death, Jason, with a party, surprized the city of Jerusalem, massacred the citizens, drove Menelaus, his brother, into the castle, and possessed himself of the principality. But he was soon expelled a second time, and perished miserably at length, a refugee in the strange land of Lacedæmonia. Antiochus, thinking mean while, that Judea had revolted, returned in great wrath from Egypt, took the city by assault, destroyed fourscore thousand persons, during a massacre of three days, plundered the temple of all its treasures, vessels, and golden ornaments, and carried away eighteen hundred talents to Antioch, 1 Mac. i. 20—28, 2 Mac. v. 1—23.

In his third expedition to Egypt, B.C. 169, he laid siege to Alexandria, where the Egyptians had proclaimed the younger brother of Philometor king, under the name of Euergetes II, nicknamed afterwards Physcon, from his corpulency. In opposition to whom, Antiochus left Philometor at Memphis, as titular sovereign, and also a strong garrison in Pelusium, the key of Egypt. But the brothers came to a mutual good understanding, united against their unnatural uncle, and sent an embassy to Rome, imploring protection. This brought on a fourth invasion, B.C. 168; but when Antiochus was within four miles of Alexandria, he was met at Eleusis by the Roman ambassadors, at the head of whom was Popilius Lænas, with whom he had been acquainted during a residence of thirteen years at Rome. Rejoiced to see him, Antiochus stretched out his arms to embrace him, but the Roman rejecting his salute, first sternly demanded an answer to the written orders of the senate, which he presented. The king declaring that he would deliberate on their contents with his friends; Popilius traced a circle round the king on the sand, with his rod; saying “I require your answer before you quit this circle;” then Antiochus, with a faltering accent, replied, “I will obey the senate;” and immediately withdrew his army from Egypt. Such was the terror inspired by these haughty republicans of “fierce countenance;” as they were characterized by the prophets, Moses, Isaiah, and Daniel. But this was after the conquest of Macedon that same year.

Upon this disgraceful repulse, while he was marching homeward, he sent Apollonius his general, with twenty-two thousand men, to vent his fury upon the unfortunate inhabitants of Jerusalem, who had been groaning for two years under the complicated tyranny and rapacity of Philip, the Phrygian governor, “more barbarous than his master;” and of Menelaus the apostate high priest, “worse than all the rest, who bore a heavy hand over the citizens, having a malicious mind against his countrymen the Jews;” 1 Mac. i. 29, 2 Mac. v. 22—24.

Apollonius, who was also “chief collector of tribute,” coming, in appearance, peaceably to Jerusalem, suddenly attacked it on the sabbath-day, slew great multitudes of men, and sold the women and children for captives; and then fortified the city of David on Mount Sion, for a citadel, “to lie in wait against the sanctuary, and to be an evil adversary unto Israel;” 1 Mac. i. 29—36, 2 Mac. v. 24—26.

To crown the extravagance of his rage, Antiochus now issued a decree for establishing the Grecian idolatry throughout his dominions, “that all should become one people, conform to his religion, worship his idols, and relinquish their own laws, and follow the strange laws of the land, under the pain of death*.” To this decree all the heathen conformed; and many also of the Jews apostatized to his religion, sacrificed to idols, and profaned the sabbath. And in the course of the same ominous year, B.C. 168, about six months after the capture of the city, the temple of Jerusalem was dedicated to Jupiter Olympius, and by the consent of the Samaritans, the temple on Mount Gerizim to Jupiter Xenius, “the defender of strangers,” as the inhabitants now affected to consider themselves disclaiming kindred with the Jews; an idol, or “the abomination of desolation,” was set up on the altar of the Lord at Jerusalem, on the fifteenth day of the ninth month Casleu; and on the twenty-fifth of the same month, sacrifices were offered upon the idol altar, built beside the altar of God; and idol altars were erected on every side, throughout the cities of Judea; on which the king’s commissioners enforced obedience to the edict. And an old Athenian minister, well versed in all the heathenish rites, was sent to Jerusalem to take care that they should be duly executed, 1 Mac. i. 41—59, 2 Mac. vi. 1—3.

The remarks of the sacred historian on the profanation of the temple, and on the sufferings of the Jews, are equally pious and judicious.

“THE LORD was angry for a while, on account of the sins of them that dwelt in the city; and therefore his eye was not on the [holy] place, [to protect it from profanation.]”—“FOR GOD did not chuse the people for the place’s sake; but the place for the people’s sake.”—“These punishments were designed, not for the destruction, but for the chastening of our nation:—for it is a token of his great goodness, when wicked doers are not suffered for any long time [to persist in their wickedness,] but are punished forthwith,” &c. 2 Mac. v. 17—19, vi. 12—17.

Antiochus commanded and superintended the most horrible tortures of the Recusants: witness the martyrdom of the venerable Eleazar, in his 90th year; for refusing to eat swine’s flesh, 2 Mac. vi. 18—31; witness the heroic mother and her seven sons, who nobly set the tyrant at defiance, and professed their faith and hope that "THE KING OF THE WORLD would raise them up who died for his laws, to everlasting life;" and threatened their tormentor, that "he should have no resurrection to life, but receive just punishment for his pride, through the judgment of God," chap. vii.

* This general persecution seems to have been raised, not from any regard to his own religion, but from a regular plan, and deep laid scheme of plundering the temples throughout his dominions, after he had suppressed their worship. For the temples were not only enriched by the offerings of the votaries, but from their sanctity were the great banks of deposit, and grand magazines of commerce. Gillies’s History of the World, Vol. II. p. 46.

When this dreadful persecution had raged about half a year, God raised up a deliverance for his people in the noble family of the Asamoneans, Mattathias and his sons. He was the son of John, the son of Simeon, the son of Asamoneus, 1 Mac. ii. 1, Joseph. Ant. XII. 6, 1; and a priest of the course of Joarib, the first of the twenty-four courses appointed by David, 1 Chron. xxiv. 7, descended from Phineas, the son of Eleazar, the elder branch of Aaron's family, 1 Mac. ii. 54, whose five sons were Johanan, Simon, Judas called Maccabeus, Eleazar, and Jonathan. He was also "a ruler, and an honourable and great man in the city of Modin; and strengthened with sons and brethren." Modin was a town near the sea side, 1 Mac. xiii. 26, about four miles from Diospolis, or Lydda, and a mile from Joppa, or Jaffa. Wells.

Apelles, the commissioner of Antiochus, having attempted to carry into execution the royal edict at Modin, endeavoured to persuade Mattathias, as a person of the first distinction and consequence there, to set the example; but he undauntedly refused, and said aloud, "Though all the nations under the king's dominion hearken unto him, to apostatize every one from the religion of their fathers, and consent to his commandments; yet will I, and my sons, and my brethren, walk in the covenant of our fathers. God forbid that we should forsake the law and the ordinances. We will not hearken to the king's words to transgress our religion, on the right hand or on the left;" and animated with the zeal of his ancestor Phineas, in the Midianite fornication and idolatry, Numb. xxv. 7, 8, he slew an apostate Jew, who was going to offer sacrifice on the idol altar; and killed the commissioner himself, who compelled men to sacrifice, and pulled down the altar, and proclaimed throughout the city, "Whosoever is zealous for the law, and a maintainer of the covenant, let him follow me." Then he and his sons fled to the mountains, (only ten persons in all,) and forsook all that they had in the city, 1 Mac. ii. 15—28, 2 Mac. v. 27. Joseph. Ant. XII. 6, 2.

To quell this insurrection, when many of the inhabitants had left the city, with their wives, children, and cattle, to dwell in the wilderness, the Syrian garrison at Jerusalem pursued them, and destroyed them all on the sabbath day, to the number of a thousand persons, without any resistance on their part; from a scrupulous adherence to the law of the sabbath, 1 Mac. ii. 29—38.

Whereupon Mattathias and his small party, agreed to fight in their own defence on the sabbath day, that they might not be exterminated; and being joined by a gallant band of Assideans, or “volunteers, wholly devoted to the law,” and by others that fled from persecution, they went, (chiefly by night,) throughout the country, and pulled down the altars, and pursued the proud persecutors; and the work prospered in their hand, till the death of Mattathias, B.C. 167, who recommended his second son Simon, to be their counsellor, and the valiant Judas, his third, to be their captain*, 1 Mac. ii. 49—70. Judas, most probably, derived his surname, Maccabeus, from a cabalistical word, formed of M. C. B. I. the initial letters of the Hebrew text, Mi Chamoka Belim Iahoh, “Who is like unto Thee among the gods, O Lord?” Exod. xv. 11, which letters might have been displayed on his sacred standard; as on the Roman ensigns, S. P. Q. R. Senatus populus que Romanus.

ASAMONEAN PRINCES.

JUDAS MACCABEUS.

This valiant chieftain, with his noble brothers, maintained a religious war for twenty-six years, from the time of the insurrection of Modin, with five successive kings of Syria; destroyed above two hundred thousand of their best troops, and finally established the independence of their own country, and the aggrandizement of their family. Such a triumph of a petty province over a great empire, is scarcely to be paralleled in the annals of history. But THE LORD fought for Israel, while they were re-

* In the year B.C. 167, the insurrection began to be embodied by the appointment of a chief, Judas Maccabeus, round whose standard the insurgents could rally; but it was not until the death of the high priest, Menelaus, and the appointment of Judas to be governor, by Antiochus Eupator, B.C. 163, that the Asamonean dynasty began.

ligious and virtuous, and put their whole trust in Him; and the inflexible spirit of the Jewish nation has ever grown more rigid under persecution, and their zeal waxed hotter in the furnace of adversity.

The first enterprize of Judas, B.C. 167, and his small but resolute band, was against “Apollonius that detestable ring-leader,” in massacring the citizens of Jerusalem, whom he defeated, though at the head of a great host, and slew, and took his sword, like that of another Goliath, slain by David, with which he afterwards fought all his life long, 1 Mac. iii. 10—12.

His next was the defeat of Seron, a Syrian general, and a mighty host of Græcising Jews and apostate Samaritans, with a small company, whom he encouraged in the language of Jonathan the son of Saul; “With THE GOD OF HEAVEN it is all one to deliver with a great multitude, or a small company,” &c. 1 Mac. iii. 13—24.

The king of Syria, Antiochus Epiphanes, filled with indignation at the successes of Judas Maccabeus, whose fame had spread through all the neighbouring nations; while he went himself into the eastern provinces to recruit his exhausted finances, appointed his kinsman Lysias, regent of all the western provinces, from Euphrates to Egypt, and commissioned him to raise and march an army to extirpate the Jews, and to plant a colony of strangers in their room.

Lysias, therefore, the next year, B.C. 166, sent a great army of forty thousand foot, and seven thousand horse, under Nicanor and Gorgias, an experienced general, to invade Judea; and so confident were they of victory, that Nicanor proclaimed a sale of the captive Jews beforehand, at the rate of ninety for a talent, or about two pounds sterling a head, which drew a thousand merchants from the sea coast of the Syrian camp at Emmaus, near Jerusalem, to make a cheap purchase of slaves. In this imminent peril, Judas and his party assembled at Maspeh, or Mizpeh, where they fasted and prayed at that sacred place of national congress, in time of old, and afterwards, Judas, in obedience to the law, Deut. xx. 5, dismissed all such of his men, as in the course of the passing year had built houses, betrothed wives, or were planting vineyards, or were fearful; which reduced his little army from six thousand to three thousand men, 1 Mac. iii. 27—57, 2 Mac. viii. 1—16.

Gorgias, with a chosen party of troops, 5000 foot, and 1000

horse, marched by night to surprize the army of Judas; but the Jewish general being apprized of his design, left his camp, and marched to attack, separately, Nicanor in the morning; routed his army, and slew three thousand of them, and set fire to their tents; and then quitting the pursuit and the spoil, returned to attack Gorgias and his party; who fled at the sight of the smoke of their tents, and the appearance of the conquerors drawn up in battle array; after which the Jews spoiled their camp, and got great riches, and seized all the money brought by the slave merchants. Nicanor, after his defeat, fled in disguise to Antioch, declaring that “the Jews had GOD to fight for them; and that they could not be hurt, because they followed the laws which he gave them,” 1 Mac. iv. 1—25, 2 Mac. viii. 21—36.

Immediately after, the Jews defeated another Syrian army under Timotheus and Bacchides, and slew above twenty-thousand men, reduced several strong holds, and charitably divided the united spoils with the maimed, the orphans, the widows, and the aged, 2 Mac. viii. 28—30.

Next year, B.C. 165, Lysias assembled a greater army of sixty thousand choice foot, and five thousand horse, and marched himself at their head, to invade Judea on the eastern side; and entered Idumea, which was now confined to the region westward of the Asphaltite lake, which formerly had belonged to the tribes of Simeon and Judah, but after the captivity, when it lay desolate, had been occupied by the Edomites, from Arabia Petraea (the ancient Idumaea) who made Hebron their capital city, and rebuilt the strong fortress of Bethsura, on their frontier, originally built by Rehoboam, 2 Chron. xi. 7. At this advantageous post Lysias encamped, and was encountered by Judas with only ten thousand men, who gained a most signal victory, killing five thousand on the spot, and putting the rest to flight. Observing that the Jews fought like men determined to conquer or die, Lysias did not venture to renew the engagement with his disheartened troops, though still much exceeding the Jews in number, but retired to Antioch, designing to bring a much greater army next year, 1 Mac. iv. 28—35.

Judas, availing himself of this respite from war, marched with his army to Jerusalem, which he recovered; he purified the city and the temple from the heathen pollutions, took down the old altar which had been profaned, and laid by the stones in a convenient place of the temple mount, until there should come a prophet to shew what should be done with them, in evident expectation of the prophet like Moses. He then built a new altar of whole or unhewn stones; repaired and furnished the temple and sanctuary with all the sacred utensils; and on the twenty-fifth day of the ninth month Casleu, B.C. 165, (precisely *three years after its profanation) he restored the regular service of the temple, offered sacrifice according to the law, on the new altar of burnt-offering, and celebrated the feast of the new dedication of the altar, (εγκαίνισμον.) And this was “the feast of new dedication” (εγκαίνια) “in winter,” or about the winter solstice, which OUR LORD, the true prophet like Moses, attended, John x. 22, the time exactly corresponding. It could not be the feast of dedication of Solomon’s temple, which was celebrated in the seventh month, about Autumn, 1 Kings viii. 2, 2 Chron. v. 3, nor of Zerubbabel’s temple, in the last month Adar, about the beginning of Spring, Ezra vi. 15, 1 Mac. iv. 36—59.

To secure the temple service from the incursions of the Syrian garrison in the citadel, he fortified the temple mount (now called Sion) with high walls and towers, and set a garrison therein; and he also fortified Bethsura on the frontier, to be a defence against Idumea, lying nearly midway between Jerusalem and Hebron, 1 Mac. iv. 60, 61.

During this disastrous war which he had kindled in the west, Antiochus Epiphanes was not more successful in the east. Like Antiochus, his father, he attempted to plunder the rich temple at Elymais, in Persia, and was repulsed and wounded, and, according to Jerom, slain in the attempt; but according to the Maccabees, he lingered for some time with a loathsome and incurable disease, confessing that he was smitten by the hand of God, as a judgment for his plunder and profanation of the temple at Jerusalem, and his persecution of the Jews. He died in the beginning of the year, B.C. 164, soon after the foregoing transactions, 1 Mac. vi. 1—16, 2 Mac. ix. 1—28.

The leading occurrences of his reign are thus foretold in

DANIEL’S CONTINUATION.

“And in his [Seleucus Philopator’s] estate shall stand up a vile person, [Antiochus Epiphanes] to whom they [the Syrians,

* The author of the second book of Maccabees says, “after two years,” according to his later commencement of the era of Seleucidæ, 2 Mac. x. 3. See Vol. I. p. 175.

who set up Heliodorus] shall not give the honour of the kingdom. Yet he shall come in peaceably, and obtain the kingdom by flatteries, [to Eumenes, king of Pergamus, the Syrians, and the Romans.] And the arms of the overflower [Heliodorus] shall be overflowed with a flood before him, and be broken; yea also the prince of the covenant, [the Jewish high-priest, Onias, deposed by him.]

“ And after the league made with him, [his nephew, Ptolemy Philometor, king of Egypt] he shall work deceitfully; for he shall come up, and shall become strong, [in Phœnicia] with a small people [or retinue.] And he shall enter into the quiet and plentiful cities of the province [of Phœnicia] and shall do that which his fathers and his fathers’ fathers have not done: [or shall outdo them in donations] he shall scatter among them [profusely] the prey, and the spoil, and the riches; [he had collected by plunder elsewhere, and from his own revenues, in order to attach the Phœnicians to his interest.] Yea, and he shall forecast his devices against the strong holds, [of Egypt] even for a [convenient] season.

“ And he shall stir up his power and his courage against the king of the south, [Ptolemy Philometor] with a great army; and the king of the south shall be stirred up to battle with a very great and mighty army, but he shall not stand: for they [even Antiochus and his counsellors] shall forecast devices against him; yea, they that feed of the portion of his meat, [Ptolemy’s tutor, Eulæus, and Macron, governor of Cyprus] shall [betray and] destroy him: [so that Ptolemy shall be taken prisoner.] And both these kings’ hearts shall be to do mischief [to each other;] and they shall speak lies at one table. [Antiochus shall pretend to restore the crown to Ptolemy, and Ptolemy shall pretend to oppose his brother, set up by the Egyptians on his captivity.] But it shall not prosper [on either side, for the war shall not cease, or come to] the end, which shall be at the time appointed. Then shall he [Antiochus] return into the land with great riches, and his heart shall be against the holy covenant, [or the Jewish temple and religion] and he shall do [according to his will, and spoil the temple of Jerusalem] and return into his own land.

“ At the time appointed he shall come again towards the south [Egypt]; but the latter [coming] shall not be as the former. For the ships of Chittim [or the Romans] shall come against him, [with ambassadors from Rome, commanding him to desist.] Therefore he shall be grieved, and return [towards Syria].

“And he shall have indignation against the holy covenant; so shall he do, he shall even return, and have intelligence with them that forsake the holy covenant, [the apostate Menelaus, and his party, to set up the Grecian idolatry, and abolish the Jewish religion.”] Dan. xi. 21—30.

These prophecies of Daniel, foretelling the sufferings and persecutions of the Jews, from Alexander's successors in Syria and Egypt, till the end of the reign of Antiochus Epiphanes, during a disastrous period of 160 years, are, if possible, more surprising and astonishing than even his grand prophetic period of 2300 years, and the several successions of empire, or the four temporal kingdoms, that were to precede the spiritual kingdom of God upon earth. The magnificence of the whole scheme, comprising the fortunes of all mankind, seems to be an object suitable to the OMNISCIENT GOVERNOR OF THE UNIVERSE, calculated to excite awe and admiration; but the minuteness of detail exhibited in this part, exceeds that of any existing history of those times. The prophecy is really more concise and comprehensive, and yet more circumstantial and complete, than any history. No one historian has related so many circumstances, and in such exact order of time and place, as the prophet; so that it was necessary to have recourse to several authors, Greek and Roman, Jewish and Christian, for the better explaining and illustrating the great variety of particulars contained in this prophecy. And if the authors who wrote of these times were all extant, or all entire, (neither of which is the case,) we should unquestionably have still greater reason to be astonished at the consummate exactness of the prophecy. Even the infidel Porphyry, who had access to several sources of information, now lost, was so confounded by this exactness, that he was driven to deny the authenticity of the prophecy itself, declaring that it could not possibly have been written before, but after, the reign of Antiochus Epiphanes. But the prophecy is so intimately connected with the preceding and following parts of the vision, which relate to the Macedonians and Romans, that it must have been written by the same hand, and therefore be esteemed equally genuine with the whole book of Daniel. The astonishing exactness, indeed, with which this minute prophetic detail has been fulfilled, furnishes the strongest pledge, from analogy, that the remaining prophecies were, and will be, as exactly fulfilled, each in their proper season.

Antiochus Eupator, the son of Epiphanes, a child of nine years old, was set up as king by his guardian Lysias, B.C. 164. His reign was short and turbulent, and his end unfortunate. Lysias, at the beginning, renewed the war against the Maccabees, with an army of four-score thousand foot, to revenge the signal defeat of the army of Timotheus, who was killed with his brother Chereas; but he was put to flight shamefully, with the loss of eleven thousand foot and sixteen hundred horse slain in the battle. Considering, then, with himself, as a man of understanding, that the Hebrews could not be overcome, because the ALMIGHTY GOD helped them, he offered them peace, on condition that they would be loyal to the state: to which they agreed; and Lysias obtained a decree from the king, dated the same year, that they should no more be required to conform to the heathen customs and worship, but allowed to live according to their own laws; and Menelaus, the apostate, who had laboured to promote it, was sent back “to comfort them,” and to be reinstated in the pontificate, 2 Mac. x. 14—38, xi. 1—38.

But this peace was of short continuance. The Jews were again molested by the governors of the Syrian provinces, and by the neighbouring nations, the Joppites, Jamnites, Arabians, and Idumeans, whom Judas successively reduced, after a bloody warfare, the particulars of which are detailed, 2 Mac. xii. 1—37.

All this while, the citadel of Jerusalem, which was garrisoned by Syrians and renegade Jews, proved a great annoyance to the temple worship, and, in the absence of Judas, actually “shut up the Israelites round about the sanctuary.” Judas, therefore, on his return, after the defeat of Gorgias, the governor of Idumea, purposed to destroy such pestilent neighbours, and besieged them with all the people, B.C. 163; but some of the besieged, forcing their way through in a sally, went to the king, and complained of the hostility of the Jews to the Syrian government, that they persecuted its friends, had fortified the temple and Bethsura, and were besieging the citadel; and would soon withdraw themselves from his dominion, unless they were speedily prevented, 1 Mac. vi. 18—27.

Provoked at this intelligence, the king assembled a vast army of a hundred thousand foot, twenty thousand horse, and thirty-two war-elephants, and with Lysias marched to Idumea, and besieged Bethsura. Judas, therefore, quitting the citadel, advanced to attack the king's army on the way, and slew about six hundred men; and his brother Eleazar, in the battle, attacked, as he thought, the king's elephant, got under him, stabbed him in the belly, and was crushed to death by the fall of the huge animal upon him. Finding the Syrian army, however, too strong, the Jews desisted from the attack, and retreated; and Bethsura soon after surrendered for want of provisions, for it was a sabbatical year of rest to the land*. The Syrians next proceeded to Jerusalem, and besieged the temple fortress, which was reduced also to the last extremity by famine, and must have soon surrendered, had not Eupator, and his guardian Lysias, been recalled by a civil war at home, commenced by Philip, whom the late king, when dying, had appointed regent, in exclusion of Lysias, with whose ill success against the Jews he was highly dissatisfied. Whereupon, hearing of this competitor, the king and his council renewed the peace with Judas upon the former terms, that the Jews should be allowed in future to live according to their own laws; broke up the siege, but violated the treaty by demolishing the strong walls of the temple mount; and then marched to attack Philip, who had got possession of Antioch, the capital, and defeated and slew him there, 1 Mac. vi. 28—63.

On this occasion, the high-priest Menelaus, the author of all these mischiefs, met with his deserts. At the approach of the Syrian army, he had abandoned his countrymen, and encouraged the king to invade Judea, "with great dissimulation;" not "for the safeguard of the country," nor regard to the Syrian interest, as he pretended, but because he thought "to have been made governor himself," if Judas and his party were destroyed. But the intended mischief recoiled on his wicked head: when the peace was concluded, he was sentenced to be suffocated in ashes, and died miserably at Berea, while Judas was promoted to be *chief governor, from Ptolemais unto the Gerrhenians, 2 Mac. xiii. 3—24.

* This is confirmed by the Chronology. The first general sabbatical year, after the second division of the conquered lands by Joshua, began B.C. 1589, as shewn before. From this, subtracting B.C. 162, the remainder, 1427 years, gives the length of the whole period inclusively; which, divided by the sabbatical period of seven years, leaves no remainder. Therefore, the last year, B.C. 163, was itself a sabbatical year.

Jacimus, or Alcimus, was appointed high-priest in his room, B.C. 163, to the exclusion of the rightful successor, Onias, the son of the worthy Onias, who, at the instigation of his wicked brother Menelaus, had been slain at Antioch. Upon this disappointment, Onias retired in disgust to Egypt, where he was appointed high-priest to a temple which he built at Heliopolis, and which subsisted nearly as long as that at Jerusalem, when both were destroyed in the reign of Vespasian.

But Alcimus, for his profligacy, and attempt to revive the heathenish rites, was soon expelled by the Jews, 1 Mac. vii. 5.

Soon after the defeat and death of Philip, another and more formidable competitor sprung up, to the destruction of Eupator and Lysias. Demetrius, the son of Seleucus Philopator, and the rightful heir of the crown, had been kept as a hostage, and afterwards in an honourable captivity at Rome, during the reign of his uncle Epiphanes, and on his death, solicited the senate for leave to return to Syria, but that politic body, preferring a minor like Eupator on the throne of Syria, to a prince in the prime of life, of considerable talents and ambition, refused his request; whereupon Demetrius privily escaped from Rome, and landed with "a few men †," only eight friends and their servants, at Tripolis, in Phœnicia; was joined by several of his adherents, under the persuasion that he was patronised by the Romans, and advanced to Antioch, where the army declared for him, and secured Eupator and Lysias, and, as a proof of their sincerity, brought them to Demetrius. But he said, "let me not see their faces;" so they were slain by the army, B.C. 162, 1 Mac. vii. 1—4; 2 Mac. xiv. 1, 2.

Now when Demetrius was established upon the throne of his kingdom, all the wicked and ungodly men of Israel, the traitors and apostates, with Alcimus at their head, came to him, and accused Judas and his party of killing the king's friends, and expelling themselves; whereupon the king appointed Alcimus high-priest, (who was desirous of recovering the office,) and sent Bacchides, governor of Mesopotamia, in whom he could confide, to reinstate Alcimus, and take vengeance on his enemies with a great force. After in vain attempting to entrap Judas and his friends deceitfully, by fair professions, Bacchides slew sixty of the Assideans, who were the foremost of the children of Israel to seek peace on this occasion, and came to treat, foolishly concluding, that “ a priest of the seed of Aaron, Alcimus, who came with this army, would do them no wrong.” After this perfidious massacre, Bacchides committed the country to Alcimus, left him a force to support him, and returned to the king, 1 Mac. vii. 4—22.

* From this year, B.C. 163, Josephus dates the accession of Judas Maccabeus to the principality of Judea; reckoning from thence to the death of Antigonus, the last of the dynasty, (B.C. 37,) 126 years current, Ant. XIV. 16, 4, or 125 years complete, Ant. XVII. 6, 3.

† Demetrius is represented, 2 Mac. xiv. 1, as "having entered the haven of Tripolis with a great power and navy;" but Polybius, the intimate friend of Demetrius, and the adviser of his flight from Rome, confirms the correcter account, 1 Mac. vii. 1.

But Judas and his party having got the upper hand, Alcimus was again expelled, and went a second time to Demetrius, bitterly complaining of Judas as a fomentor of war and sedition, and that as long as he lived, it was not possible that the state should be quiet. Whereupon the king sent Nicanor (who had been defeated before), with a great army, to destroy Judas and his brethren. At first, he endeavoured to entrap him by fair professions, but the wary Jewish general was not to be so caught, He then attacked Judas, but was defeated with the loss of five thousand men. Nicanor then waited for reinforcements from Syria, and when he had received them, renewed his attacks, but was defeated again, and slain, and his army so completely destroyed, that not a man out of thirty-five thousand escaped to carry the news to Antioch *. Thus the land obtained rest for a little while. This great victory was obtained on the thirteenth day of the month Adar, B.C. 160, in the beginning of the Julian year, 1 Mac. vii. 23—50; 2 Mac. xiv. 2—46; xv. 1—37.

Judas, having heard of the power, prowess, and policy of the Romans, how they had made extensive conquests in Spain, Macedon, and Asia, supported their friends, and humbled their enemies, took the opportunity of this respite to send an embassy to Rome, proposing an alliance with them, in order to be protected from the oppression of the Syrians. This, says Josephus, was the first treaty between them and the Romans, who received their ambassadors graciously. The senate, according to their systematic scheme of subjugation, *readily granting liberty to those who were under foreign dominion, that they might detach them from their rulers, and afterwards enslave them, when a fit opportunity offered. Accordingly, they made a defensive and offensive alliance with the Jews, and also wrote a letter to Demetrius, commanding him to desist from persecuting the Jews, and threatened him with war if he persisted. But before the ambassadors returned from Rome, (for “it was a very great journey,”) Judas was slain in a furious conflict with Bacchides and Alcimus, whom Demetrius had sent with the flower of his army to avenge the destruction of Nicanor and his host. For Judas, with desperate resolution, at the head of eight hundred men only, the rest having deserted him, charged the Syrian host, defeated the right wing, and pursued them to Azotus; but the left wing, being unbroken, pursued him closely in turn, and, after a most obstinate engagement, slew him, and the remnant of his men fled. Then Simon and Jonathan, his brothers, having made a truce, buried his body in the family sepulchre at Modin, in the neighbourhood, and all Israel mourned for him many days, saying, How is the valiant fallen that delivered Israel! 1 Macc. viii. 1—32; ix. 1—21.

* This is the simple account of the first book of Maccabees, and it is much more probable than the long detail of the second. The supposed reconciliation of Nicanor with Judas, “ that he would not willingly have Judas out of his sight, for he loved the man from his heart,” 2 Mac. xiv. 24, is inconsistent with his character, that he bore a deadly hate unto Israel, 1 Mac. vii. 26, and with his subsequent conduct.

Judas Maccabeus has been censured, as having taken a very improper step in courting the protection of the Romans, who were idolaters; a measure which was attended with fatal consequences to himself and his nation; for in consequence of this distrust in THE LORD, who had hitherto so wonderfully protected him and his men, he was left to fight his own battle with disheartened troops; THE LORD withholding the aid he expected from his new allies, which was altogether unnecessary while THE LORD fought for Israel. See Mrs. Trimmer's Sacred History, Vol. IV. p. 352—355.

In vindication, however, of this heroic patriot, we may observe that he had devoted his life to the service of his country, according to his father's dying advice, “Be zealous for the law, and give your lives for the covenant of your fathers,” 1 Mac. ii. 50.

* This is the reflection of Justin: A Demetrio cum defecissent Judæi, amicitia Romanorum petitâ, primi omnium ex Orientalibus libertatem receperunt: facile tunc Romanis de alieno largientibus, Lib. XXXVI. cap. 3.

And there were strong reasons for him to think that the time was now come for this sacrifice of himself:—1. His principal friends and steadiest supporters heretofore, the Assideans, had betrayed symptoms of disaffection, and were the foremost to seek peace with Bacchides, and to receive Alcimus as high-priest, whose enmity to him was notorious. 2. Immediately before the last battle, he was basely deserted by a great majority of his army of three thousand chosen men, who, if they had remained, would probably have defeated the left wing of the enemy, as easily as he, with eight hundred, defeated the right. His grief, indignation, and despair, indeed, are strongly depicted in his answer to his men advising a retreat:—*God forbid that I should do this thing, and fly: IF OUR TIME BE COME, let us die manfully for our brethren, and let us not stain our honour. This was not the language of a man “troubled in mind and sore dismayed,” “because danger presented itself to his view in all its horrors,” as inconclusively argued by Mrs. Trimmer, for danger he was inured to, and braved rather too rashly; but because “he was solicitous for his country’s honour, and his own fame,” as she admits in the very next sentence. This, indeed, is a just interpretation of his answer, and the true explanation of his conduct. 3. The Jews were not prohibited by the law of Moses from forming alliances with foreign nations, provided they were beyond the pale of the devoted land of Canaan, and Joshua readily concluded a treaty with the Gibeonites, supposing them to be such, nor durst he break it, notwithstanding the imposition on their part. Even within the pale, David and Solomon made alliances with the Tyrians, and are not censured for so doing by the sacred historians. And now, in a case of the most imminent peril, when Judas was contending with the whole force of a mighty empire, bent on his destruction, was he not fully warranted, in self-defence, to seek succour from the most powerful nation at that time in the world? who had conquered Macedon, and humbled Syria and Egypt, and were then renowned for their “moderation, good government, obedience to their consuls, and freedom from envy and emulation;” according to the sacred historian, reciting his motives, without the slightest imputation on his conduct, which was afterwards wisely adopted and followed by his brothers, Jonathan and Simon.

* Dulce et decorum est pro patria mori. HOR.

JONATHAN.

The death of Judas was followed by a merciless persecution of his adherents, and "there was great affliction in Israel, such as was not since the time that a prophet was not seen among them," i. e. from Malachi's death. Whereupon they elected his youngest brother, the valiant Jonathan, to be their prince and leader, as the fittest to supply his place, 1 Mac. ix. 23—31.

Bacchides, hearing this, sought to slay Jonathan, but he and Simon, and his party, fled to the fens of Jordan, and sent off their goods and baggage, under the care of their eldest brother John, to a place of security among the Nabathean Arabs of the desert. But on the way thither, they were attacked by another Arab tribe, the Jambrians, who slew John and the escort, and plundered the baggage, for which Jonathan, soon after, inflicted a severe retaliation upon a bridal procession of the Jambrians, whom he attacked, and slew the greater part, and took their spoils. Upon this, Bacchides attacked them in their camp on the sabbath-day, but the Jews repulsed him, slew a thousand of his men, and then swam across the Jordan and escaped. Not venturing to pursue them, Bacchides returned to Jerusalem, and repaired several of the fortresses in Judea, strongly garrisoned the citadel, Bethsura and Gazara, took the sons of the principal Jews as hostages for their good behaviour, and confined them in the citadel; and after the sudden death of Alcimus, the high-priest*, who was struck with a palsy while he was giving orders to pull down the walls of the sanctuary, which separated it from the outer court of the Gentiles, Bacchides returned to Syria that same year, B.C. 160, and molested the Jews no more for two years, 1 Mac. ix. 32—57.

But at the end of that time, the adverse faction, envying his tranquillity, framed a plot to surprise and seize Jonathan and his adherents in one night throughout the land, and prevailed on Bacchides to return with his army to carry it into effect.

* Josephus, by mistake, assigns the three years of the pontificate of Alcimus to Judas, Ant. XII. 11, 2, for Judas never was high-priest. But he tacitly corrects the mistake afterwards, Ant. XX. 9, in his catalogue of the high-priests, stating that Alcimus held the office three years, (instead of four years, in the former place, Ant. XII. 10, 6,) and that it was then vacant for seven years, until the appointment of Jonathan.

But Jonathan discovered it, and slew about fifty of the conspirators, and retreated with Simon and his friends to Bethbasi, in the wilderness, which they fortified. There they maintained a long siege against Bacchides, and finally defeated him; so that in his rage and disappointment he slew several of his unlucky advisers, and accepted proposals of peace from Jonathan, exchanged prisoners, and swore to molest him no more, and then returned into his own land, and came not any more unto their borders. Thus the sword ceased from Israel. We may date this peace, B.C. 156.

Jonathan now dwelt peaceably at Michmash, about nine miles north of Jerusalem, and a strong post; and began to govern the people according to the law, and to reform the state, by destroying the ungodly men, the apostates, out of Israel. 1 Mac. ix. 58—73.

Three years after, B.C. 153, a new competitor for the crown of Syria sprung up, Alexander Balas. This roused Demetrius from the shameful indolence and debauchery in which he indulged himself, living secluded in a strong castle near Antioch, and utterly neglecting the administration of the kingdom. Balas was the reputed son of Antiochus Epiphanes, but in reality an impostor of Rhodes, set up in opposition to Demetrius by the kings of Egypt and Pergamus, whom he had offended, and patronized by the Romans, who never forgave his flight from Rome, and assumption of the throne of his ancestors, without their consent; and now by a decree, empowered the impostor to raise forces for the recovery of the kingdom, with which he sailed to Ptolemais, secured that city, and was joined by numbers of the Syrians disaffected to Demetrius, 1 Mac. x. 1, 2.

This competition proved highly advantageous to Jonathan and the Jews, the rivals vying with each other who should purchase his assistance by honours and immunities. First Demetrius, by letter, appointed Jonathan his general in Judea, and empowered him to levy forces, and furnish them with arms, as auxiliaries, and restored the hostages in the citadel, whom Jonathan delivered to their parents. Then, quitting Michmash, he settled himself at Jerusalem, and recovered all the fortresses in Judea which Bacchides had garrisoned, the Syrians forsaking them, except the citadel and Bethsura, which still held out, they being garrisoned by apostate Jews, who had no other refuge. He also repaired the city, and rebuilt the walls of the temple mount, which Eupator had thrown down, 1 Mac. x. 3—14.

On the other hand, Balas, who had assumed the title of king, under the name of Alexander, by letter also, appointed Jonathan high priest*, and sent him a purple robe and crown, as Ethnarch, or prince of Judea, to gain his friendship and assistance. So in the seventh month of that same year, B.C. 153, at the feast of tabernacles, Jonathan put on the holy robe of the high priest, and levied forces, and provided arms, x. 15—21.

Hearing this, Demetrius resolved to outbid Alexander, and offered Jonathan further immunities and rewards, a release from tributes, customs on salt, and crown taxes, and the addition of the three governments of Apherema, Lydda, and Ramathem in Samaria, and the government of Galilee, to that of Judea; the freedom of the holy city, and exemption of its borders from tenths and tributes; the restoration of all captives that had been carried out of the land of Judea from all parts of the kingdom of Syria, with remission of their tribute, and even of their cattle; and immunity and toleration for all the Jews within the realm to celebrate their festivals, sabbaths, new moons, and solemn days, without molestation or hindrance in these, or in any other respects; and in return, he required an enrollment of thirty thousand Jews, to be paid by the crown, and to serve in the garrisons and places of trust, with liberty to live according to their own laws. He also offered the sea port of Ptolemais, in Palestine, with its territory, as a free gift to the temple of Jerusalem, for the necessary expences of the temple; and a remission of the five thousand shekels of silver, which had been annually paid to the king out of the revenues of the temple, because they appertained to the officiating priests; and to make the temple itself an asylum for debtors to the king, or for any other matter; and to pay the expences of repairing and fortifying Jerusalem, and the temple mount, out of the royal treasury. The list of these offered exemptions, immunities, and privileges, is curious: it demonstrates the greatness and extent of the oppressions and exactions of the Syrian government, respecting the Jews, throughout the empire; and it furnishes a sufficient excuse for Jonathan and the people, for rejecting them from the insincere Demetrius, and preferring the alliance of Alexander, x. 22—47.

* This dignity continued in the Asamonean line till the usurpation of Herod the Great. It was conferred on Jonathan, after it had been seven years vacant from the death of Alcimus. Joseph. Antiq. xx. 9.

Both kings having taken the field with their armies, next year, B.C. 152, Demetrius, who wanted neither courage nor conduct, when sober, gained the victory in the first battle; but Alexander, being supported by the confederate kings, and by the Romans, the next year, B.C. 151, fought a decisive battle, in which he defeated and slew Demetrius, x. 48—50. Justin, lib. xxxv. c. 2.

Alexander now sought Cleopatra in marriage, the daughter of his friend, Ptolemy Philometor, king of Egypt, whom he met, and married with great pomp, at Ptolemais; and there treated Jonathan, who had ably supported him in the war, with distinguished honours, ranking him among his chief friends, and making him a duke and partaker of his dominion, x. 51—66.

But Alexander, when established in the kingdom, fell into the same fatal excesses as his predecessor, took no care of the government, but left it solely to his favourite Ammonius, who slew *Laodice, the sister of Demetrius, and the unfortunate widow of Perseus, king of Macedon, and Antigonus, a remaining son of Demetrius; whose two other sons, Demetrius and Antiochus, had been sent during the war for security to Cnidus, in Crete.

When Ammonius had made Alexander and himself odious to the Syrians, in the third year of his reign, B.C. 148, young Demetrius came out of Crete, with a band of Cretans, whom Lasthenes, his friendly host, had hired; landed in Cilicia, and soon collected a great army to assert his right to the crown, and gained over to his interest Apollonius †, governor of Cæle Syria, whose first proof of attachment to his new master was the invasion of Judea, which adhered to Alexander; and having encamped at Jamnia, on the sea coast, as we have seen, sent a challenge to Jonathan, to come down from the mountains, and fight him there in the level plain. Jonathan accepted the challenge, and with ten thousand men took Joppa in the sight of the enemy, defeated them, pursued them to Azotus, which he took, and burnt the temple of Dagon, and slew with fire and sword nearly eight thousand men. For this essential service, Alexander sent Jonathan a gold buckle or clasp, such as was worn only by the royal family, and gave him Accaron, or Ekron, on the sea-coast, with the territory thereto belonging, x. 67—89.

* Among the Arundel marbles is an inscription to this queen, upon a statue erected to her. "The people of Delos erected this for queen Laodice, the daughter of king Seleucus, and wife of king Perseus, because of her virtue and piety to the temple, and her beneficence to the people of Delos." Prideaux, Vol. II. p. 116.

† Apollonius was one of the eight Syrian friends, with whom Demetrius had escaped from Rome, and now therefore naturally espoused the cause of his old master's son.

Alexander, who had shut himself up in Antioch, now applied for succour to his friend and father-in-law, Ptolemy Philometor, who accordingly brought a considerable army and fleet to his assistance, B.C. 147, and entered Syria; but having discovered a plot formed to take away his life, by the wicked minister Ammonius, who was afraid that the king of Egypt came to conquer Syria for himself; and the infatuated Balas refusing to surrender his favourite to public justice, thereby making the crime his own; Ptolemy therefore, in resentment, took away his daughter Cleopatra, and offered her in marriage to Demetrius, the rightful heir of the crown, whose cause he now espoused. Demetrius thankfully accepted the offer; and the Greek citizens of Antioch, having mutinied against Ammonius, slew him, endeavouring to escape in the disguise of female apparel; and Balas avoided a similar fate by flight. The inhabitants of Antioch then offered the crown of Syria to the king of Egypt, whose character for justice and clemency, even to a fault, was well known; but he refused the offer, and recommended to them the lawful heir, saying, that the crown of Egypt was sufficient for him. And sound policy recommended the dictates of justice, for he would probably have drawn down upon himself the indignation of the Romans by uniting both kingdoms, and their invasion would have been coloured by the claim of his new son-in-law. The battle of Antioch, next year, decided the contest in favour of Demetrius II. Balas was defeated, and fled for shelter into Arabia, but his host Zabdiel sent his head to Ptolemy five days after the battle, who died himself the third day after, of the wounds he had received. The death of these two kings of Syria and Egypt in the same year, B.C. 146 *, forms a chronological character for adjusting the reigns of both, as in the foregoing tables of the first volume of this work.

This representation of the disinterested conduct of Ptolemy

* This year was remarkable for the destruction of the two cities of Carthage and Corinth by the Romans.

Philometor, and the provocation he received, is furnished by Josephus, Ant. XIII. 4, 6—8, and differs from that of the author of the history of the Maccabees, who represents Ptolemy as setting out with a deceitful design to get Alexander's kingdom, and join it to his own; that he slandered Alexander, in charging him with a design to slay him; and that when he entered Antioch, he set the two crowns of Syria and Egypt upon his own head. This account, written evidently by a partial friend of Alexander's, carries with it internal marks of misrepresentation; and thence, we may conclude, that Josephus, to whom it was well known, tacitly rejected it, 1 Mac. xi. 1—19.

Demetrius II. chose Lasthenes, the Cretan friend, with whom he had found an asylum, and whom he considered as “a father,” 1 Mac. xi. 31, his prime minister. But Lasthenes, by his imprudence, or his inexperience for such an office, injured materially his master's interests. The first false step of the government was the massacre of the Egyptian soldiers, whom Ptolemy, his father-in-law, had left to assist in garrisoning the fortresses in the maritime towns, who, by the orders of Demetrius, were put to death by their Syrian associates; upon which, in disgust, the rest of the Egyptian army returned to Egypt, and would no longer support him. The next was, that in his security, thinking he had no other enemies to fear, he disbanded the greatest part of his army by a mischievous economy, retaining in his pay only his Cretan band, and some other mercenaries, thus depriving himself of the sheet anchors of his throne.

In the mean while, Jonathan availed himself of this respite, to besiege the citadel of Jerusalem, which had so long been a serious annoyance to him while in the hands of the Syrians and apostate Jews. Whereupon complaint having been made to Demetrius by some of the latter, he cited Jonathan to answer for his conduct before him at Ptolemais. Jonathan obeyed the summons, but left orders to prosecute the siege with vigour, and took with him divers rich presents for the king and his ministers, and so ingratiated himself into the favour of Demetrius, that he confirmed him in the high priesthood, and all his other honours, and ratified all the offers of his father, which Jonathan had declined when he preferred the friendship of Balas, xi. 19—38.

But the citadel still holding out, Jonathan applied to Demetrius to withdraw his garrisons from it, and from the other fortresses of Judea; which the king promised to do, provided Jonathan would send him a reinforcement, to quell the disturbances that broke out at Antioch, by his misconduct and cruelty, in persecuting his father's enemies, after he had disbanded and alienated his veteran troops. Accordingly, he sent three thousand Jews to Antioch; who, in a great insurrection, supported the king, and slew a hundred thousand of the citizens, and forced the rest to sue for peace; and then returned home loaded with honours and spoils. But Demetrius repaid the services of Jonathan with ingratitude; when he thought that the land was quiet, and that he had no further occasion for him. He broke his engagements at Ptolemais, demanded taxes, tribute, and tolls, as before, and threatened him with war, unless they were paid: whereby he alienated the Jews as much as the rest of his subjects, xi. 41—53.

At this juncture, Diodotus, afterwards called Tryphon, who had served Alexander Balas as governor of Antioch, and was therefore hostile to Demetrius, went into Arabia, and at length prevailed upon Zabdiel, who had murdered Alexander, and retained his son Antiochus in his hands, to send the young prince with him to lay claim to the crown of Syria. Whereupon all the disbanded soldiers and malcontents joined him, and in a pitched battle defeated Demetrius, took his elephants, and won Antioch, xi. 39—56.

As soon as Antiochus was crowned, under the title of Epiphanes, B.C. 144, he wrote to invite Jonathan to join him, offering him all the conditions which Demetrius had broken; and appointing his brother Simon lieutenant from the mountain between Tyre and Ptolemais, on the sea coast, called "the ladder of Tyre," unto the borders of Egypt. Jonathan accordingly espoused his cause, and by the assistance of the Syrian forces, expelled the hostile garrisons from Gaza, Bethsura, and Joppa; only the citadel at Jerusalem still held out for Demetrius, and maintained a long siege, xi. 57—62.

Jonathan now renewed the former alliance with the Romans, and made a league with the Lacedemonians, because the Jews and Lacedemonians were "brethren, both of the stock of Abraham," xii. 1—23.

Tryphon designing to remove the young king, Epiphanes, out of the way, in order to put the crown upon his own head, first invaded Jonathan, as the principal obstacle to his ambition.

But Jonathan advancing to meet him with an army of forty thousand chosen men, Tryphon did not venture an engagement, but under pretext of receiving him honourably, gave him gifts, and prevailed on him to disband the greater part of his men, assuring him that he came only with the design of putting him in possession of Ptolemais, and the rest of the stipulated fortresses. Jonathan was over-reached, and dismissing the rest, went, with a thousand men only to Ptolemais, where he was taken prisoner, and all his men slain, when they had entered the town peaceably; and not long after he was put to death by the perfidious Tryphon, who next slew his young master, and put on his blood-stained crown, B.C. 143, xii. 39—48, xiii. 1—31.

SIMON.

On the base capture of Jonathan, his brother Simon offered his services to his drooping countrymen: “Since all my brethren are slain for Israel’s sake, and I alone am left, far be it from me to spare my own life in any time of trouble, for I am no better than my brethren: doubtless I will avenge my nation and the sanctuary, and our wives and children; for all the heathen are gathered to destroy us of very malice.” Encouraged and animated by this generous offer, the people elected him their leader in the room of Jonathan, xiii. 1—9.

The first act of Simon was to repair the fortresses in Judea, and furnish them with provisions, in order to put the country in a posture of defence; the next was, notwithstanding the ill-treatment the Jews had received from Demetrius, (who after his defeat by Trypho, had abandoned himself to sloth and luxury at Laodicea,) yet preferring him to his perfidious rival, Simon sent respectfully to treat with him about a renewal of the former terms of accommodation; to which Demetrius gladly agreed, and confirmed them all; with an act of amnesty for all past offences. From this grant, the Jews date the independence of their country, and freedom from the Syrian yoke, B.C. 143; and thenceforth computed the times from this era of Simon’s reign, as high priest, and ethnarch, or prince of the Jews, instead of the era of Seleucidæ, of Contracts, or of Alexander’s successors, as before, xiii. 33—42.

At his election, however, by the people, there was a very remarkable reservation made on their part: that “the Jews and priests were well pleased that Simon should be their governor and priest, [he and his sons] for ever; until there should arise a FAITHFUL PROPHET," or THE MESSIAH, xiv. 41.

The next care of Simon was to reduce the strong fortresses that still held out. He besieged Gaza, and when his men had scaled the walls, the inhabitants threw themselves upon his compassion: "Deal not with us according to our wickedness, but according to thy mercy;" whereupon he generously spared their lives, but for their idolatries made them evacuate the city. After which, the citadel at Jerusalem, which had been so long a thorn in the sides of the Maccabees and their friends, was compelled, by the rigorous blockade, and by famine, to surrender next year, B.C. 142, xiii. 43—51.

Finding his son John a valiant man, Simon made him captain-general of all his forces, and sent him to reside in Gazara, near Joppa, on the sea coast; while he made the temple mount at Jerusalem his own residence, which he strongly fortified. His palace, probably, stood on the site of the castle of Antonia afterwards, xiii. 52, 53.

In the third year of his reign, B.C. 141, Simon renewed the former alliance with the Romans and Lacedemonians, and sent a present to Rome of a great shield of gold, weighing 1000 minæ, and worth, at the lowest computation, fifty thousand pounds sterling. This was accepted; the senate not only renewed the league, but sent letters also to Ptolemy, king of Egypt, Attalus, king of Pergamus, Ariarathes, king of Cappadocia, Demetrius, king of Syria, and Arsaces, king of Parthia, and to all the cities and states of Greece, Asia Minor, and the isles in alliance with them, to treat the Jews as their friends and allies; and to deliver up to Simon, the high-priest, all such traitors and fugitives, as should fly to them for protection, xiv. 24—27, xv. 15—24.

The same year Demetrius invaded, with a great army, the eastern provinces which had revolted, and was at first successful; but at last was surprised, and made prisoner by Arsaces, the founder of the Parthian empire. For his exploits in Hyrkania, during this war, John, the son of Simon, was surnamed Hyrceanus. During his captivity, Demetrius married the sister of the Parthian king; which gave such offence to his queen, Cleopatra, who had fled to Seleucia, for protection against the usurper Tryphon, with her two sons by Demetrius, that she offered the crown of Syria to his brother Antiochus, (afterwards called Sidetes, from his passion for hunting,) on condition that he would marry her. He accepted her offer, and assumed the title of “king,” and wrote a letter next year, B.C. 140, “from the isles of the sea;” from Cyprus, his residence, where he had remained after his brother’s accession, “to Simon the high-priest and ethnarch, (or prince of his nation,) and to the people of the Jews,” announcing his intention of coming to recover his father’s dominions from the usurper Tryphon; and to secure their assistance, confirmed all the grants of his father and of his brother, in their full extent, with the additional prerogative to Simon, of “coining money for his country with his own stamp*,” xv. 1—4.

The next, or fifth year of Simon’s reign, B.C. 139, Antiochus “came into the land of his fathers,” to attack Tryphon, who was deserted by most of his forces, so that few were left with him. He fled, therefore, to Dora from Antiochus, who besieged him there; and afterwards, by ship, to Orthosia, another maritime town of Phœnicia; and again, from thence, to Apamea, his native city, where he was taken, and put to death, as he most richly deserved, xv. 10—37. Joseph. Ant. XIII. 7, 2.

Elated with success, and forgetting the services of Simon and the Jews against his rival, Antiochus basely broke his engagements, reclaimed the citadel of Jerusalem, the strong cities of Joppa and Gazara, or a hundred talents in lieu of the two latter, and demanded five hundred talents for tribute and damages, otherwise, that he would make war against them; and he sent Cendebeus, with a powerful army, to invade Judea; but he was defeated by the Jews, under the conduct of Simon’s two eldest sons, Judas and John, xv. 26—41, xvi. 1—10.

The peace, however, procured by this victory, was not permanent. In the year, B.C. 136, the venerable Simon, and two of his sons, Judas and Mattathias, were treacherously assassinated at an entertainment given by his own son-in-law, Ptolemy; who then sent a party to destroy John Hyrcanus also; but he escaped, and fled to Jerusalem; where the people elected him in his father's room, and shut their gates against the wicked and ambitious Ptolemy, who thought to have secured the crown for himself. Disappointed in this, he wrote to Antiochus for an army to assist him in reducing the country and cities again under the Syrian dominion, 1 Mac. xvi. 12—22. Joseph. Ant. XIII. 7, 4.

* A curious confirmation of this fact, is furnished by a genuine copper coin of Simon’s, struck this very year; which was purchased by Dr. Kennicott, in the east, with the following inscription on the front, שנת ארבע, “the fourth year;” and on the reverse, לגאולת ציון, “from the deliverance of Sion.” The character is not Chaldee, (as here given,) but the ancient sacred character. An engraving of the coin, or medal, and of the inscription, is given in Kennicott’s Observations on the first Book of Samuel, vi. 19. Oxford, 1786, p. 49. The letter Thau, which twice occurs, is represented by “the mark X, or sign of the cross:” excellently explaining the vision of Ezekiel, ix. 4—6.

JOHN HYRCANUS.

As soon as Hyrcanus had performed the necessary sacrifices upon his appointment to the pontificate, he marched on an expedition against Ptolemy, and besieged him in a fortress near Jericho, to which he had fled; but the siege being protracted till the next year, B.C. 135, which was a sabbatical year*, it was broke up, probably for want of provisions; and Ptolemy fled to Zeno, tyrant of Philadelphia, and waited there till Antiochus should arrive. What became of him afterwards is uncertain, for no further mention of him is made by Josephus. Though Antiochus might have liked the treason, he must have hated and abhorred the traitor. And how could he trust an ungrateful viper, who had stung his best friend and benefactor to death? Ant. XIII. 8, 1.

Shortly after, Antiochus marched with a great army into Judea, and having ravaged the country, besieged Hyrcanus in Jerusalem, and reduced him to the last extremity, for want of provisions that year. On the approach of the feast of tabernacles, in the seventh month, about autumn, Hyrcanus applied to the king for a week's truce, during the celebration of the feast; which he not only granted, but supplied him with victims for sacrifice, and at length concluded a peace with the Jewish nation, when he had it in his power to have extirpated them, and was importuned so to do, but generously refused. However, he again reduced them under the Syrian dominion, dismantled

* The year B.C. 163, was proved in a former note to be sabbatical; consequently, B.C. 135, which was twenty-eight years after, (or 4×7), was also sabbatical. This fixes the accession of Hyrcanus, to the year before, B.C. 136; and corrects a mistake now in Josephus, who dates the invasion of Judea by Antiochus, in the 162d Olympiad; whereas, the year B.C. 135, in which it happened, was the second year of the 161st Olympiad. And this, probably, was the correct reading, according to Petit's conjecture. See Hudson's Note (b), p. 582.

Jerusalem, and made them pay a tribute for Joppa and the other towns, which they held under the grants of his predecessors.

Four years after, B.C. 131, Antiochus Sidetes marched with a great army against Phraates, king of Parthia, under pretence of liberating his brother Demetrius Nicator from captivity, and was accompanied in the expedition by Hyrchanus, prince of the Jews; who returned home at the end of the year, leaving Antiochus victorious over the Parthians in three battles, which put him in possession of Babylonia, Media, and all the revolted provinces, and confined Phraates within the original limits of the Parthian kingdom. But while the Syrian army was dispersed in winter quarters, the Parthians, assisted by the natives, who had been grievously oppressed by the enemy, conspired against them, and massacred them all in one day, and slew Antiochus himself, so that scarcely a man escaped to carry back the news of the catastrophe to Syria.

Upon this signal success, Phraates sent to apprehend Demetrius, whom he had released and sent back to Syria, in order to create a diversion, after having been thrice vanquished in the former campaign; but Demetrius had made such haste, that he escaped the pursuit, and again recovered his crown, B.C. 130.

After the death of Antiochus, Hyrchanus took advantage of the divisions and disturbances that ensued through the whole Syrian empire, not only to enlarge his territories, by seizing Madeba, Samega, and several other places in Syria, Phœnicia, and Arabia, and annexing them to his dominions; but also to render himself totally independent. For after this, neither he nor his descendants, paid any more tribute, service, or homage, to the kings of Syria.

Hyrchanus next invaded Samaria, and took Shechem, the chief seat of the sect of the Samaritans, and destroyed their temple on Mount Gerizim, which had been built by Sanballat. However, they still continued to have an altar there, on which they offer sacrifices according to the Levitical law, even to this day. See Prideaux Connex. B.C. 130.

After this, B.C. 129, Hyrchanus subdued the Idumeans, and gave them the choice either to embrace the Jewish religion, or else to quit the country, and seek a settlement elsewhere. Chusing, therefore, to relinquish their idolatry rather than their country, they became proselytes to the Jewish religion, and were then afterward incorporated with the Jews, so as to be reputed one and the same people ; and at length, the name itself was lost, or absorbed in that of the Jews. The later Rabbis, indeed, speak of Edom and Edomites long after, but they mean thereby, not the Idumeans, but Rome, and the Christians of the Roman empire, under these feigned names of reproach, for fear of incurring the displeasure or punishment of the Christian states in which they live.

About B.C. 128, Hyrcanus sent an embassy to Rome, to renew the league made with the Romans by his father Simon ; to which the senate readily consented, and decreed that the peace which they had been compelled to make with Antiochus Sidetes, should be null and void ; that Hyrcanus should hold Gazara, Joppa, and the other places, free of tribute or homage to the Syrians ; and that the Syrian kings in future should not presume to march their armies through the Jewish territories ; and that ambassadors should be sent to see all this executed. The Jewish ambassadors were also furnished with money to bear their expences home, and letters were written to all the Roman allies and confederates in their way, to give them a safe and honourable passage through their respective countries. In return for this, the Jews sent another embassy to Rome next year, with a present of a cup and shield of gold, valued at fifty thousand gold pieces of their money ; when another decree was passed by the senate, confirming the former. Josephus, who recites this decree at large, Ant. xiv. 16, by mistake, supposes it was granted to Hyrcanus the second, the grandson of John Hyrcanus. But this cannot be, for the decree is dated in “ the ninth year of Hyrcanus,” and one of the ambassadors, “ Numerius, the son of Antiochus,” mentioned in the body of the decree, had been sent to Rome on the former embassy by Jonathan ; but could not be alive in the reign of Hyrcanus the second. See Prideaux Connexions, B.C. 127.

Demetrius, after his restoration, having, by his tyranny, rendered himself odious to the Syrians, many of them revolted from him, and joined an impostor, supported by Physson, king of Egypt, as the son of Alexander Balas, who called himself Alexander Zebina, but was in reality the son of a broker at Alexandria. A battle was fought, in which Demetrius was defeated, and soon after slain, B.C. 126. To secure his conquest, Zebina made a strict alliance with John Hyrcanus, who took all the advantages of these divisions, that might justly be expected from a wise prince, attentive to the interests of his people, and his own security.

During the divisions and distractions that henceforth harassed and weakened the Syrian empire, John Hyrcanus increased in wealth and power; and about the year B.C. 110, undertook the entire reduction of Samaria, and sent his two sons, Aristobulus and Antigonus, to besiege the city, who took it next year, and totally demolished it. After this victory, Hyrcanus became master of all Judea, Galilee, and Samaria, and of several other places in the adjacent countries; and raised the glory of the Asamonean princes to its height; and spent the remainder of his reign respected by his neighbours, and free from foreign wars.

In the latter end of his reign, he discovered the symptoms of disaffection in the Pharisees, a proud and turbulent sect among the Jews, who boasted of superior sanctity, and derived their name from the Hebrew verb parash, to “separate or set apart” for sacred uses; and envied the prosperity of Hyrcanus. Upon which he quitted their sect, and attached himself to that of the Sadducees; who probably, at that time, went no further than to deny the authority of the oral or unwritten traditions, of which the Pharisees were too fond, and for which they were afterwards reproached by OUR LORD himself, as “rendering the law of no effect by their vain traditions,” Matt. xv. 6. For it is not to be imagined, that so pious and good a prince could have denied the resurrection and a future judgment. To the Pharisees, who courted popularity, may justly be ascribed the declension, and at length, the downfall of the state, by their continual opposition to their own princes, and afterwards to the Romans.

After he had reigned thirty years, Hyrcanus died. In addition to the government and pontificate, according to Josephus, he was gifted with prophecy, and foretold that his two eldest sons would not long reign; which was verified by the event. Ant. XIII. 10, 7.

ARISTOBULUS,

his eldest son, succeeded him. He first assumed the ominous title of king, which by their law was appropriated to the MES-SIAH; for whose rights a reservation was made by the people, as we have seen, when they elected Simon their ethnarch, or prince, 1 Mac. xiv. 41. He next imprisoned his mother, whom Hyrcanus had left in possession of the government, and starved her to death ; and then killed his next brother, Antigonus, who reigned jointly with him, upon a false suspicion of seeking his death. Finding his error, he fell sick and died, after a reign of only one year. Ant. XIII. 11.

ALEXANDER JANNÆUS.

He was the third son of Hyrceanus, and succeeded his brother, B.C. 105. His first act was an attempt to recover the important sea-port of Ptolemais, which he besieged. But the inhabitants having applied for succour to Ptolemy Lathyrus, then reigning in Cyprus, who came to their assistance with a great army, he was forced to raise the siege ; and Alexander having endeavoured to circumvent Ptolemy in a treaty of peace, while he was underhand treating with Cleopatra, queen of Egypt, his mother and his rival, Ptolemy, provoked at this duplicity of conduct, invaded the territories of Alexander, defeated him in a pitched battle, in which he lost 30,000 men, overran the whole country, ravaging and destroying it in a grievous manner, and Alexander must have been undone, had not Cleopatra brought an army to his relief next year ; which compelled Ptolemy to retreat from his territories, and at length, Ptolemy, being successfully opposed by his mother, returned to Cyprus in B.C. 101, foiled in all his attempts to recover the crown of Egypt out of her wicked and ambitious hands.

Alexander availed himself of this riddance, to recover several of the fortresses on his frontiers, which had been taken from him, or had revolted. But at the siege of Amathus, beyond Jordan, and the strongest in all those parts, he was surprized and defeated, with the loss of 10,000 men, by the prince of Philadelphia, whose treasures were deposited there, and sent back, with loss and disgrace, to Jerusalem. This was highly gratifying to the faction of the Pharisees, who alienated the affections of the people, and stirred up a bloody intestine war against him during the greater part of his turbulent reign.

This first broke out B.C. 95, in the eleventh year of his reign. Having entered the temple at Jerusalem, to officiate as high priest in the feast of tabernacles, he was insulted by the populace, and pelted with citrons while he was offering sacrifices upon the great altar ; to which they added opprobrious language, intimating him to be unworthy of that sacred office. This so enraged him, that he fell upon them with his guards, and slew six thousand of them. And to prevent the like insult, he inclosed the priest's court, which contained the altar and sanctuary, with a wooden partition, excluding the approach of the people; and for the safety of his person, he employed a guard of six thousand foreign mercenaries, and endeavoured by severity, and the terror of his executions, to allay the storm that had been raised against him by the adverse faction; but he could not quell it by such methods. And three years after, in consequence of a great defeat he received from Obodas, an Arabian king, in Gaulonitis, on the eastern side of the lake of Gennesareth, the Jews broke out into open rebellion for six years, in which, though he repeatedly defeated them, he could not subdue their refractory spirit. Wearied at length, with punishing and destroying his people, he sought an accommodation, and offered to grant them any reasonable conditions they chose. With one voice, they desired him to cut his throat, for they could be at peace with him on no other terms; and that considering the great mischiefs he had done them, it were well that they could be reconciled to him, even in his grave. They then sent for succours to Demetrius Eucharès, king of Damascus, who brought a powerful army to their assistance, and overthrew Alexander, with the loss of all his Greek mercenaries to a man, B.C. 89; and he would have been utterly ruined, had not six thousand of the Jews themselves, compassionating his distress, revolted from the Syrians, and joined him. Being a man of most undaunted spirit, and possessing great resources in himself, he continued the war with his own people after the departure of the Syrians, and at length he defeated them with great slaughter, and shut up the remainder in Bethome, which he besieged and took the year after, B.C. 86. On this occasion he was guilty of a most barbarous act of cruelty, which got him the appellation of Thracidas, "the Thracian." He brought eight hundred of the prisoners to Jerusalem, and there crucified them all in one day, and put their wives and children to death before their faces, as they hung dying on the crosses; while he, his wives and concubines, were feasting in view of the horrid scene, to glut their eyes with the spectacle! After this, Alexander had no more disturbance; the rebels who survived flying the country; after he had destroyed above fifty thousand of them in the course of the war.

After this, he spent three years in recovering fortresses, which had revolted during the civil war, and extended his conquests beyond Jordan. He returned to Jerusalem victorious in B. C. 82, and gave himself up to luxury and drunkenness, which brought on a quartan ague, under which he languished for three years, and at length died at the siege of Ragaba, beyond Jordan, in the country of the Gerasenes.

In his last moments he advised Alexandra his queen, to conceal his death, until the capture of the fortress, and then on their triumphant return to Jerusalem, he recommended her to convene the heads of the Pharisees, and offer to be guided by their counsels in the administration of the kingdom; and to lay his dead body before them, and resign it wholly to their discretion, whether to treat it with ignominy, in revenge for all the evils they had suffered from him, or otherwise; adding, that if she followed this advice, she would not only procure him an honourable funeral, but security for herself and her children. And the event justified the prediction: for his funeral obsequies were more splendid than those of any of his predecessors; and Alexandra, according to his will, was quietly established in the government, B. C. 78.

Q. ALEXANDRA.

And now the Pharisees, having gotten the upper hand in the state, released the prisoners, and recalled the exiles of their party, and being strengthened by this accession, they demanded justice against the advisers of the crucifixion of the eight hundred; which in fact involved all the adherents of the late king. They began with Diogenes, a chief confidant of Alexander, and having cut him off, proceeded to the most obnoxious of the royalists. The queen, much against her will, acquiescing in their vindictive measures, for fear of involving the country again in a civil war; and submitting to a less evil, in order to avoid a greater.

Alexandra had two sons; the elder, Hyrchanus, who was of a quiet, indolent temper, she appointed high priest; but the younger, Aristobulus, inherited his father's spirit, and highly disapproved of his mother's proceedings. In the seventh year of her reign, B. C. 72, he came to her at the head of the royalists, seeing no end of the prosecutions, and proposed, either that they should go into voluntary exile; or else, that they might be dispersed through the several garrisons of the kingdom, in order to avoid the fury of their enemies. The queen agreed to the latter proposal, and put them in possession of the fortresses, except Hyrcania, Alexandrium, and Machæra, where she kept her treasures.

Next year she sent Aristobulus with an army to attack Ptolemy Menæus, at Damascus; but he returned without doing any thing memorable in the expedition; only making use of this opportunity to secure the army in his interest.

The following year, B.C. 70, she was threatened with a formidable invasion by Tigranes, king of Armenia; to whom the Syrians, harassed by the perpetual competitions of the different royal families for the crown, had voluntarily surrendered it, B.C. 84, and put themselves under his protection. From this danger she was relieved by the Roman invasion of Armenia, which took place shortly before her death, next year, B.C. 69.

HYRCANUS II.

After her death, Hyrcanus took possession of the throne. The year of his accession is doubly determined by Josephus, Ant. XIV. 1, 2, as the third year of the 177th Olympiad, which ended in the Julian year, B.C. 69; the same year in which Q. Hortensius and Q. Metellus Creticus, were consuls at Rome. This, therefore, is a useful character for adjusting the chronology of this period. But his reign was short, only three months; for his brother, Aristobulus, having got most of the fortresses of the kingdom into his hands, during his mother's sickness, and the people being weary of the tyranny of the Pharisees, and fearing their ascendancy over the weak Hyrcanus, joined Aristobulus, and the army of Hyrcanus deserting him, he was forced to surrender the crown and pontificate to his brother, and willingly agreed to lead a private life under his protection. "So Aristobulus went to the palace, and Hyrcanus to the house of Aristobulus," as Josephus relates.

ARISTOBULUS II.

Antipater, the father of Herod the Great, an Idumean, whose name originally was Antipas, was much in the confidence of Alexander Jannæus, and his wife Alexandra, and had been appointed by them governor of the province of Idumæa. He had amassed considerable wealth, and formed a connexion with the Arabs in the east, and the Gazites and Ascalonites in the west. Fearing Aristobulus, he instigated Hyrceanus, to whom he had attached himself, to fly for refuge to Aretas, king of the Arabs, for that his brother meant to put him to death; and with much solicitation prevailed on him at length to escape by night to Petra, the residence of Aretas. Espousing the interest of Hyrceanus, the Arabian prince brought him back to Judea, with an army of fifty thousand men; and being there joined by the Jews of his party, gave battle to Aristobulus, defeated him, and compelled him and his party to take refuge in the temple mount, and besieged him there.

While Pompey, who succeeded Lucullus in the command of the war against Tigranes, was employed in Armenia against him and Mithridates, he sent Scaurus into Syria; who finding that Lollius and Metellus had taken Damascus, marched directly to Judea. The two brothers having separately attempted to gain him to their side, by the offer of four hundred talents each; he preferred that of Aristobulus, not only because he was more solvent, being in possession of the royal treasures, while Hyrceanus was poor, but because it was easier to intimidate the fugitives with their Arabian auxiliaries, than to reduce a fortress of the greatest strength. He therefore commanded Aretas to withdraw his troops, threatening him with war from the Romans if he refused. After which Scaurus returned to Damascus. Meanwhile Aristobulus, having raised a powerful force, invaded Aretas and Hyrceanus in turn, and defeated them with great slaughter; among others of the Jews attached to Hyrceanus, who fell in that battle, was Cæphalion, the brother of Antipater.

Not long after the conquest of Armenia and Iberia, Pompey having finished the war in the north, B. C. 65, came to Damascus, and went through Cœle-Syria; and stripping Antiochus Asiaticus of all his dominions, (the last of the Seleucian family,) he reduced them to a Roman province, under the pretext that he was a weak prince, and unable to protect the country from the ravages and depredations of the Jews and Arabs; and that the Romans having taken this country, by conquest, from Tigranes, were not to lose the fruits of their victory. Here Pompey was met by ambassadors from all Syria, Egypt, and Judea; and Aristobulus sent him a golden vine, of the value of 400 talents; which Strabo afterwards saw in the capitol at Rome with the inscription, Alexander the king of the Jews, which he had presented as an offering to the temple, and his son now sent to the Romans.

Pompey, on his return next year, B.C. 64, from the Mithridatic war in Pontus and Cappadocia, to Cœle-Syria, was addressed by Antipater and Nicodemus, the deputies of the two brothers, Hyrchanus and Aristobulus, to settle the controversy between them; but he put them off till the ensuing spring, in order to finish the conquest of Syria, and repress Aretas, who had taken advantage of his absence in Pontus, to recover a good part of his dominions, and to make incursions into Syria. Accordingly, next year, B.C. 63, on his return to Damascus, the two brothers came in person to plead their cause before him; several of the Jews complaining of both, that they had changed the form of government to regal, instead of pontifical, contrary to the established usage, in order to enslave the people. Hyrchanus pleaded his prior claim to the crown, as the elder brother, and complained of the usurpation of Aristobulus; while Aristobulus alleged the imbecility of Hyrchanus. This last circumstance, probably, decided the artful Roman in favour of Hyrchanus; he did not, however, openly declare his sentiments, but left the matter undecided, till he should have leisure to come in person, and settle the matter at Jerusalem.

Disappointed in his expectations, Aristobulus prepared for war. Pompey, therefore, on his return from an expedition against the Nabathean Arabs, marched against Aristobulus, and summoned him into his presence from his strong fortress of Alexandrium. Aristobulus unwillingly complied, for fear of irritating the Roman general by a refusal, who, when he had got him into his power, compelled him to sign an order for the surrendering of all his fortresses to the Romans. But he grievously resented this imposition, and when he was dismissed, fled to Jerusalem, and there prepared for a siege. Pompey followed him with his army. On his approach, Aristobulus, wavering in his resolution, went again to Pompey, promising submission and a sum of money to prevent a war. His proposal was accepted, and Gabinus, one of Pompey's lieutenants, was sent with a body of troops to recover the city and the money. But when he came to Jerusalem, he was disappointed; the gates were shut against him, and no money to be had, because the soldiers of Aristobulus would not agree thereto, indignant at his detention. Whereupon Pompey marched directly, with his whole army, to Jerusalem, keeping Aristobulus in custody, and being admitted into the city and palace by the faction of Hyrchanus, he besieged the adherents of his brother in the Temple Mount, and at length, after three months' siege, took it by assault, in the first year of the 179th Olympiad, ending B.C. 63, the same year in which C. Antonius and M. Tullius Cicero were consuls, which ascertains the year of its capture, and of the commencement of the Roman dynasty in Judea. Ant. XIV. 4, 3.

On this occasion Pompey was guilty of violating the sanctity of the Temple. For not content with viewing the outer court, he, with his principal officers, by a sacrilegious curiosity, entered into the inner Sanctuary, or Holy of Holies. And here, it has been remarked, his prosperity ended. He was ever after unsuccessful in all his undertakings, as if to punish him for this act of sacrilege against THE LORD. And this the Jews resented more than their sufferings. However, he spared the sacred treasury, in which there were above 2000 talents, besides the sacred utensils, and other articles of great value, and left them for the sacred uses to which they had been devoted. The next day he restored Hyrchanus to the pontificate, and made him prince of the country, and tributary to the Romans, but forbade him to wear a crown, and dismantled the walls of Jerusalem. And he took with him Aristobulus and his two sons, Alexander and Antigonus, and two of his daughters, to grace his triumph at Rome.

HYRCANUS II. again.

From the first accession of Hyrchanus, B.C. 69, to his restoration, B.C. 63, was an interval of six years and nine months, being the amount of his first reign of three months, and his brother's of six years and six months*.

* This is the rectification of a double error in the present text of Josephus, dating the reign of Aristobulus "three years and six months," Ant. XIV. 6, 1; but "three years and as many months," Ant. XX. 9. That it must have been six years at least is demonstrated by Josephus himself, both from the Olympiads and Consuls above-mentioned; and as the "six months" are specified in the former passage, and in the latter are said to be "as many" as the years, the two passages correct each other, and furnish six, the true number of years.

The reign of this meek and quiet prince, who was unfit to guide the helm of the state in such tempestuous times, was disastrous throughout.

While Pompey was returning to Rome with his royal captives, Alexander, the eldest son of Aristobulus, contrived to escape on the way, and returning to Judea, created fresh disturbances. In the year B.C. 57, he collected an army of ten thousand foot and fifteen hundred horse, and seized Alexandrium, Machærus, Hyrkania, and several other strong fortresses, and garrisoned them, and from thence ravaged the whole country. Hyrcanus was not in a condition to suppress him, and wished to have rebuilt the walls of Jerusalem, but the Romans, in their jealousy, not permitting this, he was forced to call upon them for succour. Accordingly, Gabinius, president of Syria, sent Mark Anthony, his general of horse to his relief, who being joined by Antipater and Malichus, with the forces of Hyrcanus, defeated Alexander near Jerusalem, with the loss of three thousand men, and shut him up in Alexandrium, and besieged him there. But by the prudent mediation of his mother, Gabinius concluded a peace with him, on condition of his surrendering Alexandrium, and the other fortresses, which were demolished by the advice of this lady, that they might not give occasion to future revolts.

To please the Jews, Gabinius, at this time, made a change in the government of Judea, from regal to aristocratical. Hitherto the administration of public affairs had been managed under the prince, by the two sanhedrims, or councils, or courts of justice; the lesser, consisting of twenty-three persons, was instituted in every city; each of these lesser was subject to the jurisdiction and controul of the great sanhedrim of seventy-two members, sitting at Jerusalem. Gabinius suppressed both, and in their room appointed five independent tribunals, at Jerusalem, Jericho, Gadara, Amathus, and Sephoris, and invested each with power to administer summary justice to all the inhabitants within their respective districts. This threw the whole power into the hands of the nobles of the land, who presided in these courts, leaving Hyrcanus only the name.

But ten years after, Julius Cæsar, on his passing through Syria, after the Alexandrian war, in gratitude for the effectual assistance he had received from Antipater, the general of Hyrcanus, reinstated Hyrcanus in the Principality, restored the ancient form of government, and appointed Antipater procurator of Syria and Judea.

Gabinus was succeeded in the government of Syria by Crassus, B.C. 54, who, to make preparation for the Parthian war, which he meditated, plundered the Temple at Jerusalem of all the treasures which Pompey had respected, and of every thing else worth taking, and carried off to the amount of ten thousand talents, or about two millions sterling. But this sacrilegious plunder proved the prelude to his ruin; for having invaded the Parthian territories without provocation, and when the Parthians were unprepared for war, he overran a great part of Mesopotamia without opposition. But the next year, B.C. 53, the Parthians encountered him, and by his own misconduct principally, in listening to traitors, and neglecting the advice of Cassius and his best friends, was defeated with great slaughter, and himself and his son killed, near Charrae, the site of the ancient Charran, in the days of the Patriarchs, in the north-west quarter of Mesopotamia.

Cassius, having escaped to Syria, collected an army there, and defended that province successfully against the Parthians, who invaded it next year, B.C. 52. He then marched into Judea, and forced Alexander, the son of Aristobulus, who was raising fresh disturbances, on the news of the defeat of Crassus, to terms of peace.

Aristobulus, two years before, had found means to escape, with his younger son Antigonus, from captivity at Rome, and returning to Judea, excited a revolt; but by the activity of Mark Anthony, and the troops sent against him by Gabinus, was defeated, taken with his son, and sent back again to his former prison. Gabinus, however, having represented the services of his wife in suppressing Alexander's insurrection, his family was set at liberty, and he only kept in custody. But in the civil war which broke out between Cæsar and Pompey, Cæsar, thinking it would promote his interest, released Aristobulus out of prison, and sent him with two legions into his own country to reclaim the crown. But Pompey's party contrived to poison him on the way, B.C. 49. And Alexander, his son, in expectation of his arrival, having raised forces, Pompey sent orders to Scipio, his father-in-law, whom he had appointed president of Syria in the room of Bibulus, to put him to death, who had him taken, brought to Antioch, and, after a formal trial, beheaded.

Two years after, Antigonus, the surviving son, applied to Julius Cæsar, on his return from the Alexandrian war, to be restored to his father's Principality, stating the calamities that had befallen his family for their adherence to his cause. But Cæsar, from regard to Antipater, who then attended him, rejected his petition, and treated him as turbulent and seditious, B.C. 47.

Antipater had now great credit with the Romans, and influence at home, and in fact governed Hyrchanus. He appointed Phasaëlis, his eldest son, to be governor of Jerusalem, and Herod, his second, governor of Galilee, when he was at least twenty-five years old*, and took a progress with Hyrchanus, through Judea, to settle the affairs of the kingdom. Bell. Jud. I. 10, 1—4.

Herod having exerted himself with great spirit and activity in clearing his province of robbers, or banditti, and put Hezekiah, their leader, and several of his associates, to death, by his own authority, without any formal trial, excited the envy and jealousy of several of the leading Jews; who forced Hyrchanus to summon him to appear before the sanhedrim, to answer for his conduct. Herod attended the summons, and came clothed in purple, and with a numerous retinue, and brought a letter from Sextus Cæsar, then president of Syria, to Hyrchanus, with express orders to acquit him, under pain of incurring his highest displeasure, which Hyrchanus was sufficiently inclined to do without this mandate. All this, however, so intimidated his accusers and the sanhedrim, that they all sat silent; until Sameas, a man of great wisdom and integrity, had at length the courage to arraign him, not only for the crime imputed to him, but also for his arrogance and presumption in daring to appear before them, not as a criminal, but as their superior. And he predicted, that this Herod, whom they now iniquitously spared, would execute the just judgment of God upon them all, which afterwards came to pass; for Herod afterwards put Hyrchanus and the whole sanhedrim to death, except Pollio and Sameas, whom he spared for recommending the surrender of the city to

* The present text of Josephus reckons Herod's age only fifteen years at this time, Ant. XIV. 9, 2. But he was seventy at his death, B.C. 4, and consequently was born B.C. 74, from which subtracting 15, we should have the date of this appointment B.C. 59, considerably too early. If it was B.C. 47, as we may collect from the history, he was rather 27 years old.

Herod and Sosius; because “the crimes of the people were such that they could not escape him.” Ant. XIV. 9, 4.

On this occasion, however, Hyrcanus, seeing the sanhedrim provoked against Herod, adjourned the court till next day, and advised him to fly from the city that night, which he did, to Damascus; and was with difficulty dissuaded by his father and brother from marching with an army to Jerusalem, to avenge the insult he had received, in being summoned to clear himself before the sanhedrim.

After Julius Cæsar’s return from the African war, in which he subdued the remains of Pompey’s party, B.C. 44, when he entered on his fifth and last consulship, Hyrcanus sent an embassy to him, for permission to repair the walls and fortifications of Jerusalem. Cæsar not only granted this request, which Antipater immediately executed; but by a decree, confirmed Hyrcanus in his prerogatives of high-priest and ethnarch; and remitted the annual tribute to be paid to the Romans every seventh or sabbatical year; and granted such further privileges and immunities to the Jews, throughout the empire, that they could hardly be said to feel the weight of the Roman yoke.

But this happy state was of short continuance.

The assassination of Sextus Cæsar in Syria, by Bassus, and of Cæsar himself at Rome, by Brutus, Cassius, and their confederates, rekindled the flames of war. Cassius soon seized and secured the province of Syria, and was forced to levy heavy contributions there, for the support of an army of twelve legions, which he had raised. He assessed Judea in 700 talents; of which Antipater commissioned his sons, Phasaëlus and Herod, to raise the one half, and Malichus, a Jew, (one of the principal supporters of Hyrcanus,) and some others, to raise the remainder. Herod ingratiated himself with Cassius, by the speedy payment of his quota; but Malichus, being dilatory, Cassius would have put him to death, had not Hyrcanus redeemed him at the expense of a hundred talents, which he sent him out of his own coffers.

Malichus, and the heads of the Jewish nation, jealous that an Idumean, and a foreigner, as they accounted him, should govern the state, plotted to destroy him and his whole family. Soon after he poisoned Antipater with a glass of wine, which he prevailed on the high-priest’s butler to give him at an entertainment in the palace. Phasaël and Herod, in turn, revenged this, by procuring the assassination of Malichus, by a party of the Roman garrison at Tyre, in obedience to the orders of Cassius, which Herod procured.

After the defeat and death of Cassius and Brutus at Philippi, B.C. 42, by Antony and Octavius, the troubles broke out afresh in Judea. The faction of Malichus gained Hyrchanus to their side, and Felix, the commander of the Roman forces at Jerusalem, by representing the overgrown power of the sons of Antipater. But Phasaël and Herod soon mastered the faction, drove Felix out of Jerusalem, and recovered Massada, and all the fortresses that they had taken; and upbraided Hyrchanus with favouring the adverse faction, who had always strove to curb his power, while he owed his support to the wise and vigorous counsels of their father Antipater. Hyrchanus judged it imprudent to oppose "these sons of Zeruah," who controuled him as much as David was controuled by Joab and Abishai. And a match was set on foot between Herod and Miriam, or Mariamne, the beautiful and accomplished grand-daughter of the high-priest, which for the present reconciled all differences between them.

But the adverse faction, though repressed, was not extinguished. It soon found another head in Antigonus, the younger son of Aristobulus, and under pretence of restoring him to his father's throne, raised new disturbances in the state. And his claim was supported by Marion, king of Tyre, Fabius, governor of Damascus, and Ptolemy, prince of Chalcis, who had married a sister of Antigonus.

The next year, B.C. 41, after the victory at Philippi, Anthony passed over into Asia, to secure that important country in the interest of the conquerors. At Daphne, near Antioch, a deputation of a hundred of the principal Jews came to complain against the sons of Antipater. Anthony gave them a hearing, and asked Hyrchanus, then present, whom he thought the fittest to conduct the administration of affairs under them? to which he replied, the two brothers; induced, probably, by the contract of marriage between Herod and his grand-daughter. Whereupon Anthony, who was well disposed towards them before, made Herod and Phasaël Tetrarchs, committed the affairs of Judea to their administration, imprisoned fifteen of the deputies, and would have put them to death, had not Herod saved them by his intercession. Still not baffled, they renewed their complaints to him against the two brothers at Tyre, in a body of a thousand deputies. But Anthony, considering this as an insult, and a tumult, ordered his soldiers to disperse them, who slew several, and wounded more.

No sooner had Herod weathered this storm, than he assayed another, more dangerous to encounter. The following year, B.C. 40, the Parthian general, Pacorus, who had taken Sidon and Ptolemais, was induced to undertake to restore Antigonus to his father's kingdom, for the promise of a thousand talents, and five hundred Jewish women. Accordingly, he sent a part of his forces, under his cup-bearer, called also Pacorus, to see the contract put in execution. After frequent engagements with the two brothers, in which the Antigonians were rather worsted, finding they could not prevail by force, they had recourse to fraud. The cup-bearer proposed to Phasaël to go on an embassy to Barzaphanes, who governed Syria under Pacorus, as the best mode of settling their differences. Contrary to Herod's advice, Phasaël went, and took Hyrchanus with him; but the treacherous Parthian seized them both, and put them in chains, while the cup-bearer endeavoured to entrap Herod at Jerusalem. But he, having timely intelligence of the treachery, fled with his family and most valuable effects, to Massada, the strongest fortress in the country, built on the top of a very high mountain, near the Asphaltite lake. Finding that Herod had escaped, the Parthians first plundered the country, made Antigonus king, according to agreement, and delivered up Hyrchanus and Phasaël to him, before they left the country. Phasaël, knowing that his death was determined on, dashed out his brains against the walls of his prison. Antigonus spared his aged uncle's life, but barbarously cut off his ears, to incapacitate him from being any longer high-priest, and then sent him into exile to Seleucia in Babylonia.

ANTIGONUS.

In this emergency, Herod went to Egypt, took shipping at Alexandria, and sailed to Italy, intending to implore assistance of Anthony and the Romans, to place Aristobulus, the brother of his espoused Mariamne, on the throne of Judea; who was the son of Alexandra, the daughter of Hyrchanus, by Alexander, the eldest son of Aristobulus; so that he united the titles of both brothers to the crown: proposing nothing further for himself, than to govern the country under Aristobulus, in the same manner as under Hyrchanus. But Anthony chose to make Herod himself king, in reward of his past services, and for the promise of a great sum of money; and by his interest with Octavian, procured from the senate, contrary to their usual policy, a decree to that effect, in the course of that same year, B.C. 40. Herod made such dispatch, that he returned to Judea before the end of it, and raising forces of every kind, foreigners as well as Jews, relieved his friends at Massada, who had been closely besieged all the while by Antigonus. At one time they were reduced to the utmost distress for want of water, and must have surrendered next day, had not a providential rain fallen the night before, and filled all their cisterns, so as to enable them to hold out until Herod came to their succour.

Next year, B.C. 39, Herod carried on the war against Antigonus, with various success. The Roman generals sent to his assistance, by order of Anthony, namely, Silo and Machæras, doing him more hurt than good. And his brother Joseph, who had defended Massada so gallantly, being left to command in Judea, while Herod attended Anthony in Syria, contrary to his orders, went on an expedition against Jericho, in which he was slain, and most of his forces cut in pieces. This disaster encouraged a revolt of the disaffected in Galilee and Idumæa. Afterwards Herod himself was wounded and repulsed at Jericho, but near the end of the year obtained a signal victory over the army of Antigonus, commanded by Pappus, whom he slew.

The following year, B.C. 38, Herod besieged Jerusalem. During the siege, he consummated his marriage with Miriam, or Mariamne, whom he had espoused four years before. This affinity with the Asamonean family, he hoped would conciliate the people to his government. On his return to the siege, he was joined by Sosius, president of Syria, with a powerful force which Anthony sent to his assistance. Their joint army, at the lowest computation, amounted to 60,000 men. At length, after they had vigorously besieged the city about half a year, they stormed it, the year following, B.C. 37. And the Roman soldiers, exasperated at the opposition they had experienced, plundered the city, and massacred the inhabitants without mercy, Sosius encouraging his men. Insomuch that Herod complained, that the Romans were going to make him king of a desert; and was forced to redeem the city from total destruction, by the present of a considerable sum of money, to satisfy the rapacity of the Romans.

Antigonus surrendered himself to Sosius, and implored his clemency. But the Roman general, despising his pusillanimity, rejected him with scorn, calling him, in the feminine gender, Antigona, and sent him in chains to Anthony, at Antioch; who, not long after, was prevailed upon, by the solicitations of Herod, and a large sum of money, to execute him, like a common malefactor, by the rods and axe of the lictor: intending, by this ignominious death, to which the Romans never before had subjected any crowned head, to lessen the attachment of the Jews to the Asamonean family; who, during his lifetime, could not, in general, be prevailed on to acknowledge Herod as king, by any tortures; as we learn from Strabo, cited by Josephus. Ant. xv. 1, 2.

Such was the end of the Asamonean dynasty, after it had subsisted 126 years. "A noble and illustrious house," says Josephus, "distinguished by their descent, by the dignity of the pontificate, and by the great exploits of their ancestors for the nation."

The fortunes of this house seem to be referred to in the following obscure

SEQUEL OF MICAH'S PROPHECY.

- V. 5. "When the Assyrian shall have come into our land,
Then shall be raised up against him *
Seven Shepherds, and eight princes of men.
6. And they shall waste with the sword
The land of Asher, and the land of Nimrod, in its coasts;
Thus shall HE deliver [us] from the Assyrian,
When he shall have come into our land,
And when he shall have trampled on our borders."

"The Assyrian" here, (according to the ingenious conjecture of Dr. Gregory Sharpe †,) aptly denotes Antiochus Epiphanes, and the succeeding kings of Syria, who ruled in Assyria and Babylonia, and greatly oppressed the Jews, as we have seen. The "seven shepherds" to be raised up by THE MESSIAH for the deliverance of his people, represent the seven Maccabees,

* Instead of the Masorete reading, וְהִקְמַנּוּ, "Then shall we raise against him," the Sept. read, וְהִקְמוּ, καὶ ἐγερθησονται. "Then shall be raised up against him."

† See his Second Argument in Defence of Christianity, &c. p. 162, &c.

old Mattathias, his five sons, and his grandson John Hyrcanus, who signalized themselves in the defence of their country, and carried the war into the enemies' land of "Asher and of Nimrod;" and the last, in particular, raised the glory of his house to the highest pitch, and derived his name, Hyrcanus, from his exploits in these countries. These are aptly termed "shepherds," because they were leaders of the people, acting under the great SHEPHERD of ISRAEL, and the prime "LEADER," CHRIST, noticed in the foregoing part of the prophecy.

Their successors are distinguished from them by the title of "princes," because, not satisfied with the modest title of "Ethnarchs" and "High Priests," they assumed the crown as "kings," following the example of Aristobulus, the eldest son of Hyrcanus; who, with his two brothers, Antigonus and Jan-næus, Alexandra, her two sons, Hyrcanus and Aristobulus II, and the two sons of the latter, Alexander and Antigonus, make up eight. Queen Alexandra may justly be reckoned in the number; for as Josephus observes, "she was a woman free from the weakness of her sex, and more practised in the arts of government than most men."

If this interpretation be admitted, (which certainly is less objectionable, and more exact and consistent throughout, than any other that has been proposed hitherto,) it fills up an important chasm in the prophetic series of the Asamonean dynasty, between the Macedo-Grecian dynasty and the nativity of CHRIST, at Bethlehem, under the Romans, with which the prophecy commences, perfectly corresponding therewith; and thus renders the whole the most comprehensive and important single prophecy in the OLD TESTAMENT.

HEROD THE GREAT.

His accession is dated by Josephus, in the consulate of Marcus Agrippa and Caninius Gallus, B.C. 37, and in [the third year of] the 185th Olympiad.

To secure himself on the throne, he began his reign by cutting off the heads of the Asamonean party; and among them, all the members of the Sanhedrim, except Pollio and Sameas, who alone had recommended the surrender of the city to Herod; whereas the rest joined in the general cry, the temple of the Lord! the temple of the Lord! As if GOD would protect it;

though they had such dear-bought experience to the contrary, when the national sins drew down Divine chastisement upon the people; as before remarked in the second of Maccabees, v. 19, 20.

The Pollio and Sameas of Josephus were the Hillel and Shammai of the Rabbins; two of the most eminent among the ancient doctors of their nation. Hillel was of the royal line of David, being descended from Shephatiah, the son of Abital, David's wife, 1 Chron. iii. 3. He was born in Babylonia, and came to Jerusalem in the fortieth year of his age, and for his eminence in the study of the law, was appointed president of the great Sanhedrim, forty years after, in the eightieth of his age, and held that high station for forty years more; and it continued in his family till the tenth generation. For he was succeeded by Simeon, the same who is supposed to have taken CHRIST in his arms, when he was presented in the Temple, Luke ii. 25—35. His son, Gamaliel, was president of the Sanhedrim, when Peter and the Apostles were summoned before them, Acts v. 34; “At whose feet the Apostle Paul was bred up,” or educated, in the sect and discipline of the Pharisees, Acts xxii. 3. He lived till within eighteen years of the destruction of Jerusalem, and in the Jewish writings is distinguished by the title of Gamaliel the Old. He was succeeded by Simeon II. who perished in the destruction of Jerusalem. His son was Gamaliel II. and his again Simeon III. He was succeeded by his son, the celebrated R. Judah Hakadosh, or “the holy,” who composed the Mishna, or Traditional Law. His son and successor was Gamaliel III.; after him Judah Gemaricus; after him, Hillel II. the ingenious compiler of the present Jewish Calendar, or technical Chronology, about A.D. 358.

Shammai had been a disciple of Hillel, and approached the nearest to him in learning and eminence of all the Mishnical Doctors. He was vice-president of the Sanhedrim, and disagreed in several points with his master. Hillel was of a mild and peaceable temper, but Shammai of an angry and fiery spirit. Hence proceeded violent disputes and contests between the two schools, which at length ended in bloodshed. At last they were allayed by a fictitious Bath Col, or voice from heaven, deciding in favour of the school of Hillel, to which the school of Shammai submitted.

In the room of Antigonus, Herod appointed Ananelus high priest, B.C. 36. He was an obscure priest, of the pontifical family, residing among the Jews of Babylonia, whom Herod had formerly known, and now promoted, for his insignificance, to that high office, that he might not interfere with the royal authority. But this appointment produced great disturbances in his family. For Mariamne, his favourite wife, and her mother Alexandra, took umbrage at the exclusion of Aristobulus, her brother, the rightful successor to the pontificate. Mariamne was perpetually teasing him on the subject, and Alexandra, who was a woman of high spirit, and of great understanding, went further, for she complained to Cleopatra, queen of Egypt, by letter, and began to engage Anthony himself to interfere, by means of Dellius, a favourite of his. Herod therefore found it necessary, for his own quiet and safety, to depose Ananelus, and appoint Aristobulus, then a youth of only seventeen years, high priest in his stead, next year, B.C. 35.

Alexandra having thus extorted from Herod the pontificate for her son, pursued the same means for obtaining the crown also, which Herod had usurped; by intriguing with Cleopatra to gain over Anthony. But Herod detecting their intrigue, confined her to the palace, and set spies to watch her proceedings. Resenting this imprisonment, she formed a plot for escaping to Egypt with her son, but Herod seized them both on the road, when they attempted to put it into execution; and out of an affected clemency, pardoned both, because he dared not punish either; determined, however, to rid himself of such a dangerous competitor, whenever a convenient opportunity should offer. And the attachment of the multitude was soon publicly shewn to the young prince; for at the ensuing feast of Tabernacles, he discharged the functions of the high priest with so much grace and dignity, and the beauty of his person was so set off by the splendour of the pontifical robes, that he charmed the whole assembly, and every tongue was loud in his praises. This raised the tyrant's jealousy to such a pitch, that he could not brook any further delay, but immediately after the festival was over, took him down to an entertainment at Jericho; and after dinner, several of Herod's attendants, bathing in a pond, he was persuaded to bathe also, and was dipped, and held so long by them under water, that he was drowned. Herod expressed the greatest grief at this unfortunate accident, as he affected to consider it, and interred him with great pomp. But every one saw through his hypocrisy, and none more clearly than Alexandra, who was inconsolable, and could not have survived her loss, but for the desire of revenge. Accordingly she acquainted Cleopatra with the treacherous murder of her son, and engaged her so effectually in her interest, that she never ceased importuning Anthony to call Herod to an account. Anthony therefore cited Herod to appear before him in Syria, next year, B.C. 34. But Herod, by fair words and large presents, so mollified Anthony, that nothing could be done against him; though Cleopatra, who attended the trial, prosecuted this cause to the utmost; not so much to gratify Alexandra, or to promote justice, as to gain Herod's kingdom for herself, if he should be put to death. Anthony satisfied her covetousness, by giving her Cœle-Syria instead of Judea, and so she dropped the prosecution.

This prosecution, however, gave great rise to another tragedy in Herod's family. For when Herod was summoned to appear before Anthony, apprehensive of the event, he left directions with his uncle Joseph, who had married his sister Salome, to put Mariamne, his beloved wife, to death, if he should be condemned; fearing lest Anthony, who admired her even upon the fame of her beauty, might take her to himself, after his death. But Joseph imprudently divulged the secret to Mariamne, which exceedingly offended her and her mother Alexandra; and the latter plotted to fly for protection to a Roman legion, stationed near the city. Upon Herod's return, his sister Salome, the fire-brand of her family, disclosed to him all that had happened, and malignantly accused her own husband Joseph of too great familiarity with Mariamne, ready to sacrifice him to her hatred of the latter; who being a woman of high birth, and still higher spirit, looked down on Salome as her inferior, and treated her with contempt. An offence not to be forgiven by an haughty and revengeful woman. Herod, though struck with jealousy, restrained himself through love to Mariamne, and questioned her in private about the charge. But she vindicated herself so fully, with all the persuasiveness of conscious innocence, that the king was satisfied, and asked her pardon for listening to such injurious reports; and assuring her of his love, pressed her to return it; but she resentfully remarked, that his conduct did not correspond with his professions, for that if he loved her, how could he order her to be put to death, though innocent, in case

Anthony should determine against him? This imprudent declaration rekindled his jealousy, and convinced him that the charge was true; he flung her from his arms, ordered Joseph to be put to death, without admitting him into his presence; and though his love at this time restrained his rage against Mariamne, he put her mother Alexandra into custody, as the cause of all these mischiefs. Ant. XV. 3, 9.

In the year B.C. 32, the civil war between Anthony and Octavius broke out, and when Herod was raising forces to assist the former, his patron, he was commissioned by him, at the desire of Cleopatra, to invade Malchus, king of Arabia Petraea, who now withheld from her the tribute which he had paid for a part of his territory adjoining Egypt, that had been unjustly granted to her by Anthony. This wicked and rapacious queen, hoping that one or the other of these kings would be slain in the war, and that his kingdom would become a prey to her. Herod at first defeated Malchus, but in a second engagement, being treacherously deserted by Cleopatra's general, Athenion, who turned his arms against him, was overthrown with great slaughter, and hardly escaped himself with the remnant of his army.

To aggravate this disaster, the next year, B.C. 31, opened with a dreadful earthquake in Judea, which destroyed thirty thousand souls: this fresh calamity induced Herod to sue for peace to the Arabians; but they thinking this a favourable opportunity of reducing the whole country, haughtily refused it, put his ambassadors to death, and invaded Judea. Herod, whose army had not suffered by the earthquake, which only overthrew their tents, marched against them, and in two successive engagements, either killed or took prisoners the whole of their army, and compelled them, in turn, to sue for peace, which he granted on his own terms, and returned in triumph to Jerusalem, having reduced the Arabians under his dominion.

The battle of Actium, Sept. 2. B.C. 31, gave Octavius a decided victory over Anthony, who fled to Egypt, as his last retreat. There, Herod, by a special messenger, recommended him to put Cleopatra to death, who had been the cause of all his misfortunes, to seize her kingdom and treasure, raise a new army, and carry on the war; promising to support him to the utmost. But the infatuated Roman rejected this advice; and Herod thought it high time to look to himself, and make his peace with Augustus, on the best terms he could. Apprehensive, however, that he might be deposed, and Hyrchanus restored to his throne, (which he had formerly held under the protection of the Romans, until he was dispossessed by the Parthians;) he trumped up a sham plot against the poor old prince, as if he held a treasonable correspondence with Malchus, king of Arabia; and under this pretence caused him to be beheaded, after he had passed the eightieth year of his age.

Of all the atrocious cruelties of Herod, this was marked with the highest perfidy, ingratitude, and breach of hospitality. Hyrchanus had lived in exile, for some time, at Seleucia, where he was treated with the highest respect by the king of Parthia, and honoured as their king by the Jews of Babylonia, and of the Parthian empire, who composed a body altogether more numerous and wealthy than those of Judea, and supplied him with a maintenance suitable to his rank and dignity. But on hearing of the death of Antigonus, and advancement of Herod to the throne of Judea, his love of his country prompted him to return home, and put himself under the protection of Herod, who owed to him the rise of all his fortunes, his affinity with the royal family, and even his life, when arraigned before the Sanhedrim. Herod also was anxious for his coming, in order to have him in his power, that he might, by his death, prevent his restoration to the throne, in case of a reverse of fortune. And therefore not only importuned Hyrchanus to come, but sent an embassy to Phraates, king of Parthia, to solicit his permission. Contrary, therefore, to the advice of all his friends, Hyrchanus returned to Jerusalem, in the second year of Herod's reign; who treated him with all seeming respect; until his wicked policy tempted him to cut off his king and his benefactor, six years after.

Herod's next care, before he went to make his peace with Octavius, (who came to Rhodes in his way to Egypt, the ensuing year, B.C. 30, after he had settled matters in Italy, Greece, and Asia Minor, and secured those nearer countries in his interest,) was to secure his own family and his treasures, in case he should be unsuccessful, in consequence of his known attachment to Anthony. His mother, sister, wives, and children, he placed in the strong fortress of Massada, under the care of his brother Pheroras. But Mariamne, and her mother Alexandra, who disagreed with his mother and sister, he left in Alexandrium, under the care of Sohemus, a trusty Idumæan, with orders to put them both to death, if Octavius should treat him harshly, and then that he should endeavour to secure the crown for his children, in conjunction with Pheroras.

Octavius, however, gave him a most favourable reception, struck with the dignified frankness of his demeanour; openly avowing his attachment to Anthony, as long as he could serve him, and now offering his friendship to Augustus, promising to serve him with the like fidelity. That artful politician not only restored him his diadem, which, on entering, he had laid aside, but afterwards enlarged his dominions, by the restoration of a part which Anthony had taken from him to give to Cleopatra, and by further grants, and always treated Herod with more distinction and regard than any of the tributary kings of the Roman empire.

But however successful Herod was in his public proceedings, he was most unhappy at home. The affections of his wife Mariamne were still further alienated from him, by the discovery of his last directions to Sohemus, which, by her address, she extorted from him. And she received Herod, on his return home, after his good fortune, with coldness and sadness, so as to provoke him most highly; and presuming too much on her unbounded influence over him, she failed not to aggravate his displeasure, by her reserve and haughtiness. While he was fluctuating between love and resentment for a year, sometimes wishing to put her to death, but again fearing to punish himself still more severely, she brought matters to a crisis, by one day refusing his proffered love, and upbraiding him with the murder of her father, (or grandfather, Hyrchanus,) and of her brother. Enraged at this, and spurred on by the false accusations of Salome, he put her confidential chamberlain to the torture, who declared that her hatred towards him proceeded from what Sohemus had told her. This instantly excited his jealousy of Sohemus, who he concluded must have been too intimate with her, for that otherwise he would not have betrayed the secret. He ordered him to be immediately seized and put to death, and had Mariamne tried and condemned, by intimidated judges, and at the instigation of his sister Salome, fearing he might relent, executed immediately, under the alarming suggestion, that if her life was spared it might excite a public commotion.

While she was leading to execution, her unworthy mother,

Alexandra, fearing to be involved in her doom, met her on the way, reproaching her with ingratitude to her husband; adding that she was justly punished, and even dared to pull her by the hair; but Mariamne, without uttering a word, bore it with dignified composure, ashamed of her mother's baseness, and without changing colour, submitted to death, retaining her nobleness of mind even to the last.

Alexandra did not long escape, for when Herod fell sick next year, B. C. 28, oppressed with the most poignant grief and remorse for the injured Mariamne's death, she laid a plot for seizing the government, but it was disclosed to Herod by the officers whose fidelity she endeavoured to corrupt, and he instantly ordered her to be put to death.

The next year B.C. 27, Augustus got that name, instead of Octavius, and with it the whole power of the state, which was vested in him by the senate and Roman people, with the liberty to resign it every ten years, when he should find the burden too heavy for him; but he retained it till his death. That he might not seem, however, to assume the whole authority to himself, he divided the empire into two parts; the quiet and peaceable provinces he assigned to the senate, to be governed by consular and prætorian officers, according to former usage; these were called senatorial; but the turbulent and insecure, which lay on the outskirts of the empire, he reserved for himself; these were called imperial, and governed by his presidents and procurators. By this profound political arrangement, under the appearance of leaving to the senate the most settled parts of the empire, and the easiest to be governed, and taking the most troublesome to himself, he secured the whole military power, which was necessarily stationed in the imperial provinces, to keep them in awe; such as Cilicia, Syria, Phœnicia, Cyprus, and Egypt in the east, and Spain in the west.

Herod was still harassed with domestic troubles. His turbulent sister, Salome, having fallen out with her second husband, Costobarus the Idumean, the year following, B.C. 25, sent him a bill of divorce, contrary to the law and usage, which confined that privilege to the husband, Deut. xxiv. 1, 2, &c. Matt. v. 31, xix. 7, and accused him to Herod of plotting with Lysimachus, Antipater, and others of the Asamonean party, and of having concealed the sons of Babus, whom Herod, at the taking of Jerusalem, had entrusted to him to be executed. Finding this last information of Salome to be true, he believed the rest, and put them all to death. But he was still harassed with tumults and conspiracies during the remainder of his reign, which, though he punished with encreasing severity and cruelty, as he advanced in years, he could never entirely subdue.

To secure himself the better against such tumults and conspiracies, he built several strong cities and fortresses in the land. He rebuilt Samaria, which John Hyrcanus had destroyed, and restored it to its former splendour, calling it, in Greek, Sebaste, "the city of Augustus." Having finished this, he began another city at Strato's tower, on the sea coast of Palestine, between Dora and Joppa, which, in honour of his other name, Cæsar, he called Cæsarea. Here he made the most convenient and safest port in all the coasts of Phœnicia, by running out a vast semi-circular mole, of great depth and extent, into the sea, so as to form a spacious and secure harbour against the stormy south and west winds leaving only an entrance into it from the north. Some of the stones employed in the work were fifty feet long, eighteen broad, and nine thick, and the foundation was sunk twenty fathom, or one hundred and twenty feet in the sea. When Judea became an imperial province, after the banishment of Archelaus, Herod's son, it was usually the residence of the Roman procurator, or governor, Acts xxiii. 23, 24.

He also built a strong and magnificent palace for himself on Mount Sion, the site of the original fortress of Jebus, which David took, 2 Sam. v. 7, and of the citadel which had so much annoyed the Maccabees in the Syrian wars. It was remarkable for two large and sumptuous apartments, the one called Cæsareum, in honour of the emperor; the other Agrippæum, in honour of his favourite Agrippa.

But his greatest and noblest work was the rebuilding of the temple, which had gone greatly out of repair, by length of time, and had also been materially injured in the civil wars. By this pious work, he probably thought to make atonement to God for all the blood that he had shed, as well as to conciliate the minds of his subjects, who were wonderfully attached to the forms of their religion, however they denied its power, and to erect a lasting monument to his own honour; and, perhaps, it was to disappoint him in this last expectation, that the Jews affected to call Herod's "the second temple" still, though the second, built by Zerubbabel, had been pulled down to the foundation on this occasion; or rather, perhaps, because the daily sacrifices had never been intermitted while it was building.

Herod made this proposal to a general assembly of the people, in the eighteenth year of his reign, probably at the passover, B.C. 19, but they were startled thereat, apprehending that when he had pulled down the old temple, he might not be able nor willing to build the new; he therefore promised them that he would not attempt to demolish the present, until he had provided all the materials for immediately rebuilding it. And he kept his word; for he employed a thousand carts to draw stones and materials, ten thousand of the most skilful workmen, and a thousand priests, whom he had instructed to be masons and carpenters; and, after two years' preparation, pulled down the old temple, and began the new, in the twentieth year of his reign, B.C. 17. And such was their expedition, that the sanctuary (ὁ ναός) was built in a year and a half, and the rest of the temple (το ἱερόν), containing the outer buildings and porticos, in eight years more, so as to be then fit for divine service, according to the king's intention. But the expense of adorning and finishing the whole was still carried on from the sacred treasury, and was not completed till the administration of Gessius Florus, A.D. 62, when eighteen thousand workmen were discharged at once.

To find further employment for these, king Agrippa, who then had the care of the temple, under Claudius, was recommended by the people to take down and rebuild the eastern outermost portico, which had been originally built by Solomon, not wishing that the sacred treasure should be laid up, for fear it might become a prey to the Romans, but Agrippa unwisely refused their request, on account of the length of time, and the greatness of expense the work would require. So these men, for want of support, began those robberies and seditions which ended in the destruction of the temple. Joseph. Ant. XV. 11, 1—6; xx. 8, 7.

This determines the date of our Lord's first passover, A.D. 28, which was forty-five years complete, or the forty-sixth current, from the foundation of the temple, B.C. 17. And leads us to an emendation of the English translation of John ii. 20. "Forty and six years hath this temple been in building, [and is not finished yet,] and wilt thou erect it in three days?" For such is the proper rendering of the Greek aorist, ἠκοδομηθη. Herod, indeed, only began the work, which the funds of no individual were competent to finish; especially his, which must have been considerably exhausted by his other public buildings, carrying on at the same time, the city and harbour of Cæsarea, &c. The Temple, as Tacitus remarks, was a work of “immense opulence,” on which a great many years, and all the sacred offerings sent from all parts of the world, for the use of the temple, were expended. The free will offerings and gifts to the sacred treasury are noticed as considerable in OUR LORD’S days, Mark xii. 41—44; Luke xxi. 1—5. And were continued in those of Paul, Acts xxiv. 17.

The year after the foundation of the temple was laid, Herod went to Rome, to visit Augustus, and to see his two sons by Mariamne, Alexander, and Aristobulus, who had been educated there for three years past, under the immediate inspection of the emperor himself, who had them lodged in the royal palace. He was received with great honour and kindness by Augustus, and took back his sons, whose education was now complete, to Judea; and soon after married the elder to Glaphyra, the daughter of Archelaus, king of Cappadocia, and the younger to Berenice, the daughter of Salome, his sister. But the wicked Salome, notwithstanding her closer affinity, envied the young princes their merited popularity, fearing also that she might suffer for having advised their mother Mariamne’s death; and she never ceased to calumniate them both to Herod, until at length his jealousy got the better of his paternal affection. For she was so base, as to alienate her own daughter’s affections from her husband, and prevail on her to betray his confidential conversations, respecting the king’s cruelty and ill-treatment; which she reported, with aggravations, to Herod.

To check the pride and insolence of Mariamne’s sons, who certainly were not sufficiently guarded in their conversation respecting their father; three years after their return, Herod brought to Court, B.C. 13, his eldest son, Antipater, whom he had by his first wife, Doris, when he was in a private station, and whom he had divorced on his marriage with Mariamne. But this measure only provoked them to greater discontents, and more intemperate language than before. Of which, Antipater, who was no less artful than ambitious, failed not to avail himself; and took care to have them constantly reported to his father, by his own emissaries; while he openly espoused their cause, and endeavoured to excuse them from the charges, so as to persuade the old king that he was no less attached to his brothers than to his father: and at length to recommend him to Augustus as his successor, and obtain the emperor's permission to leave the crown to him, in the first instance, and afterwards to the sons of Mariamne, two years after, B.C. 11.

Josephus gives a full detail of all the various plots that were laid by Antipater and his wicked associates, Salome, the sister, and Pheroras, the brother of Herod, to compass the destruction of the unfortunate princes, which they at length accomplished, by a false charge, that they intended to poison their father; and Herod, in his rage, at last ordered them both to be strangled, at Sebaste, after he had accused, and got them to be condemned to death, in a council held at Berytus, before Saturninus and Volumnius, governors of Syria, B.C. 6. By the death of these two unfortunate brothers, the noble family of the Asamoneans became utterly extinct; and this disastrous period, marked by civil wars, and domestic treasons and massacres, was brought to a conclusion, according to prophecy, about the birth of John the Baptist, Mal. iv. 5, 6.

END OF VOL. II.

LONDON:

GILBERT AND RIVINGTON, PRINTERS,
St. John's Square.

A

NEW ANALYSIS

OF

CHRONOLOGY AND GEOGRAPHY,

HISTORY AND PROPHECY :

IN WHICH

THEIR ELEMENTS

ARE ATTEMPTED TO BE EXPLAINED, HARMONIZED, AND VINDICATED,

UPON SCRIPTURAL AND SCIENTIFIC PRINCIPLES ;

TENDING TO REMOVE THE IMPERFECTION AND DISCORDANCE OF PRECEDING SYSTEMS, AND TO OBIVIATE THE CAVILS OF SCEPTICS, JEWS, AND INFIDELS.

BY THE

REV. WILLIAM HALES, D.D.

RECTOR OF KILLESANDRA, IN IRELAND ; AND FORMERLY FELLOW OF TRINITY COLLEGE, AND PROFESSOR OF ORIENTAL LANGUAGES IN THE UNIVERSITY OF DUBLIN.

SECOND EDITION, CORRECTED AND IMPROVED.

IN FOUR VOLUMES.

VOL. III.

CHRONOLOGICAL HISTORY OF THE NEW TESTAMENT.

LONDON :

PRINTED FOR C. J. G. & F. RIVINGTON,

ST PAUL'S CHURCH-YARD, AND WATERLOO-PLACE, PALL-MALL.

MDCCCXXX.

*2231.5
v. 3

1859
2012
2012

Plin.
35340

TEMPORA si FASTOSQUE velis evolvere MUNDI. HOR.

May 25, 1859

LONDON :
GILBERT AND RIVINGTON, PRINTERS,
ST. JOHN'S SQUARE.

CONTENTS OF THE HISTORY.

VOL. III.

THE NEW TESTAMENT.

- IX. PERIOD. CANONICAL GOSPELS, 3; their authenticity, ibid.;—Order, 9;—Time, 20;—Inspiration, 26;—Style, 30;—Credibility, 36.
- JOHN BAPTIST, 38; GENEALOGY OF CHRIST, 42; ROMAN TAXING, 48; VISIT OF JEWISH SHEPHERDS AND PARTHIAN MAGI, 53; MASSACRE OF THE INFANTS AT BETHLEHEM, 58. Archelaus, Ethnarch, 59; CHRIST VISITS THE TEMPLE, 61; MINISTRY OF THE BAPTIST, 62.
- INTRODUCTION OF JOHN'S GOSPEL, 67; PREACHING OF THE BAPTIST, 70; JESUS BAPTIZED, 72; JESUS TEMPTED, 76; Deputation to the Baptist, 81; BAPTIST'S MESSAGE TO CHRIST, 85; CHARACTER OF THE BAPTIST, 86.
- CHRIST'S PUBLIC MINISTRY. FIRST PASSOVER, 87; NICODEMUS, 89; SAMARITAN WOMAN, 90; CHRIST'S FIRST RETURN TO GALILEE, 91; first visit to Nazareth, 94; SERMON ON THE MOUNT, 96; MIRACLES, 97;—Leper cured, ibid.; Centurion's Servant cured, 98; Widow's Son restored to life, 99;—Jairus's daughter, ibid.; SECOND PASSOVER, ibid.; Cripple cured on the Sabbath-Day, 100;—SECOND RETURN TO GALILEE, 101; Disciples pluck the ears of corn, ibid.; 12 APOSTLES CHOSEN, 103; THE CURE OF DEMONIACS, 104; Blasphemy of the Pharisees, 107; Unbelief of our Lord's family, 111.
- PARABLES, 112. The Sower, 113; The Tares, 117; Mustard Seed, 118; Leaven, 119; Hidden Treasure, ibid.
- MISSION OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES, 120; CHRIST'S second visit to Nazareth, 122; Return of the Apostles, ibid.; THE 5000 FED, ibid.; CHRIST WALKS ON THE SEA, 124; his conversation with the people fed, 125.
- THIRD PASSOVER, 126; SYROPHENICIAN WOMAN'S DAUGHTER CURED, 128; THE 4000 FED, 129; visits Magdala, 130. Cæsarea Philippi, ibid.; THE APOSTLE'S PROFESSION OF FAITH, 131; CHRIST'S TRANSFIGURATION, 132; DEMONIAK CURED, 134; CHRIST'S second return to Galilee, 135; MIRACLE OF THE TRIBUTE MONEY, ibid.; Ambition of the Disciples, 136.
- THE FEAST OF TABERNACLES, 138; Woman taken in Adultery, p. 140; SIGHT GIVEN TO THE MAN BORN BLIND, 143; CHRIST'S third return to Galilee, 145.
- HE VISITS SAMARIA, 146; MISSION OF THE 70 DISCIPLES, ibid.; HE VISITS JUDEA, 148; PARABLE OF THE HUMANE SAMARITAN, 149; Martha and Mary, 150.
- THE FEAST OF DEDICATION, 151.

- CHRIST VISITS PERŒA, 154 ; Question of Divorce, 155 ; CHRIST blesses little Children, 156 ; The rich young Ruler, ibid. ; CHRIST returns to Judea, 158 ; LAZARUS RAISED TO LIFE, ibid. ; CHRIST retires to Ephraim, 161. His last Journey towards Jerusalem, 161 ; He passes through Jericho, ibid. ; Zaccheus, 162 ; PARABLE OF THE NOBLEMAN, 163 ; He arrives at Bethdny, ibid.
- HARMONY OF THE PASSION WEEK, 164. CHRIST'S feet anointed, 168 ; Public procession to Jerusalem, ibid. ; the barren fig tree cursed, 172 ; the Temple purged again, 173 ; Pharisees and Sadducees silenced, ibid. ; Sadducees silenced, 174 ; OUR LORD'S PROPHECIES ON MOUNT OLIVET, 176 ; CHRIST'S head anointed, 177 ; HE CELEBRATES THE PASSOVER, 179 ; INSTITUTION OF THE LORD'S SUPPER, 183 ; THE NEW COMMANDMENT, 186.
- HIS LAST DISCOURSE, 187 ; HIS INTERCESSION, 190. He goes to Gethsemane, 197 ; HIS AGONY, ibid. ; CHRIST apprehended, 202 ; Peter's first denial, 205 ;—Second denial, ibid. ;—Third denial, 206 ; CHRIST examined before the High Priest, 207 ; His trial before the Council, 208 ; Judas hangs himself, 211 ; CHRIST brought before Pilate, 213 ; His trial before Pilate, 218 ; He is sent to Herod, 220 ;—Sent back to Pilate, 221.
- THE CRUCIFIXION, 226 ; CHRIST'S INTERMENT, 238 ; The Tomb guarded by Roman Soldiers, 240.
- HARMONY OF THE RESURRECTION AND OF OUR LORD'S APPEARANCES AFTERWARDS, 241. The Resurrection Day, 245 ; The Sunday following, 258 ; The Mountain in Galilee, 262 ; The Sea of Tiberias in Galilee, ibid. ; Jerusalem, 265 ; THE ASCENSION, 267 ; CHARACTER OF CHRIST, 268.
- THE SPIRIT OF THE GOSPEL, 283. I. THE MYSTERIES OF THE GOSPEL. THE TRINITY, 286 ; REGENERATION BY BAPTISM AND THE SPIRIT, 295 ; RENOVATION AND SANCTIFICATION BY THE LORD'S SUPPER AND THE SPIRIT, 299 ; JUSTIFICATION BY FAITH, 311 ; JUSTIFICATION BY FAITH AND WORKS, 320.
- II. THE DUTIES OF THE GOSPEL, 322 ; THE LORD'S PRAYER, 323.
- III. THE SANCTIONS OF THE GOSPEL, 356 ; THE TWO RESURRECTIONS, 358.
- IV. THE EXTRAORDINARY AIDS OF THE GOSPEL, 375 ; 1. The expulsion of Demons, 375 ; 2. The gift of Tongues, 376 ; 3. Handling Serpents, 379 ; 4. Drinking deadly potions, 380 ; 5. Curing Diseases, ibid. ; their duration, 381.
- V. THE ORDINARY AIDS OF THE GOSPEL, 383 ; The Fruits of the Spirit, ibid.
- SKETCH OF THE CONSTITUTION OF THE PRIMITIVE CHURCH, 388, MAINTENANCE OF THE CHURCH, 400 ; HERESY AND SCHISM, 406.

THE HISTORY OF THE CHURCH, 414.

- THE CHRONOLOGY VERIFIED, 414 ; THE CANONICAL ACTS AND EPISTLES OF THE APOSTLES, 419 ; THE EPISTLES OF PAUL, 421 ; To the Galatians, ibid. ; To the Thessalonians, 423 ; Titus, 424 ; Corinthians, 426 ; 1 Ti- mothy, 428; Romans, 429; Ephesians, 430; Colossians, 431; Philemon, ibid.; Philippians, 432; Hebrews, 433; 2 Timothy, 441.

THE CATHOLIC EPISTLES, 446. James, 447; Jude, ibid.; Peter, 448; John, 451; Apocalypse, 456; CHRONOLOGICAL ORDER OF THE EPISTLES, 462.

THE RISE AND PROGRESS OF THE CHURCH, 463.

Matthias elected an Apostle, 463, THE DAY OF PENTECOST, 466; The cripple cured, 470; Trial before the Sanhedrim, 471; SECOND EFFUSION OF THE HOLY SPIRIT, 472; Charitable contributions to the Church, ibid.; Ananias and Sapphira, 473; Proceedings of the Sanhedrim, 474; The election of Deacons, 476; Stephen's trial and Martyrdom, ibid.; First Jewish persecution, 481; Baptism of the Ethiopian Chamberlain, 482; CONVERSION OF SAUL, 483; Saul retires to Arabia, 487;—His first visit to Jerusalem, 488; Rest of the Churches in Judea, 490; CONVERSION OF CORNELIUS, 491; Saul's second visit to Jerusalem, 499; Second Jewish persecution, ibid.; Saul's vision and Revelations, 501; First Mission of Barnabas and Saul, 508; First Council of Jerusalem, 513; Paul's third visit to Jerusalem, 514; Paul's Second Mission, 516; Paul visits Athens, 519; His first visit to Corinth, 531; His Fourth visit to Jerusalem, 532; Paul's Third Mission, 533; His Fifth visit to Jerusalem, 536; Paul's First visit to Rome, 545; His Second visit to Rome, 546; First Roman persecution, 549; JEWISH WAR, 552; Siege of Jerusalem, 555.

X. PERIOD. PROPHETIC HISTORY OF THE CHURCH, 558; CHRIST'S PROPHECIES, 560.

I. Signs of the destruction of Jerusalem, 563.

II. Signs of CHRIST'S presence, at the Regeneration, 567; Parables, 570.

III. Signs of the conclusion of the World, 574.

THE APOCALYPSE, 576. DESIGN, 578; INTRODUCTORY VISION, 579; EPISTLES TO THE SEVEN CHURCHES, 582; GRAND CELESTIAL VISION, 585; First Scene, 586; Second Scene, 588; Third Scene, 590.

SCHEME OF THE PRIMARY SYMBOLICAL PROPHECIES, 592.

SECONDARY SYMBOLICAL PROPHECIES, 595.

SEVEN SEALS, 597; Fourth Scene, 602; Fifth Scene, 604.

FOUR WAR TRUMPETS, 608; DANIEL'S FOURTH VISION, PART III. 611.

THREE WOE TRUMPETS, 615; SEVEN VIALS, 619.

THE CODICIL, 633; Milton on Toleration, 648.

APPENDIX, 653.

ANALYSIS
OF
SACRED CHRONOLOGY.
CONTAINING A CHRONOLOGICAL HISTORY
OF
THE NEW TESTAMENT.

Των παντων κακων αιτιον, μη αναγνωσκειν ΒΙΒΑΙΑ, ΨΥΧΗΣ ΦΑΡΜΑΚΑ.
CHRYSOSTOM.

“ *The cause of all these evils, not to read
THE SACRED BOOKS, those MEDICINES OF THE SOUL.*”

ANALYSIS

OF

SACRED CHRONOLOGY.

NINTH PERIOD.

FROM THE BIRTH OF JOHN BAPTIST TO THE DESTRUCTION OF JERUSALEM, 75 YEARS.

ROMAN DYNASTY.

IDUMÆAN KINGS.

	B.C.
Herod the Great	2 last
John Baptist born about Spring	} 5
Roman Enrollment by Cyrenius
Nativity of JESUS CHRIST about Autumn
Visit of the Parthian Magi to Jerusalem
Massacre of the Infants at Bethlehem	} 4
Archelaus Ethnarch of Judea 10
Passover , April 12

ROMAN PROCURATORS.

	A.D.
Roman Assessment, or Taxing, by Cyrenius	} 6
1. Procurator, Coponius 2
CHRIST visits the Temple	8
2. P. Marcus Ambivius 4	9
Tiberius made Colleague of Augustus	12
3. P. Annius Rufus 1	13
4. P. Valerius Gratus 11	14
5. P. Pontius Pilate 10	25
John's Ministry , about Autumn	26
CHRIST baptized about Autumn	27

CHRIST'S MINISTRY.

	A. D.
I. PASSOVER	28
CHRIST purges the Temple.....
—— opens his Ministry in Judea	}
John imprisoned by Herod Antipas	}
CHRIST'S Ministry in Galilee	}
Sermon on the Mount	}
II. PASSOVER	29
12 Apostles sent to proclaim CHRIST.....	}
John beheaded	}
III. PASSOVER	30
70 Disciples sent to proclaim CHRIST	}
CHRIST'S Transfiguration	}
IV. PASSOVER	31
CHRIST'S Crucifixion, Resurrection, Ascension	}
Church of CHRIST founded at Pentecost	}
Church encreased	32
Church multiplied	33
Martyrdom of Stephen about Autumn	}
I. Jewish persecution of the Church	}
Paul's Conversion and Ministry	}
6. P. Marcellus	1 } 35
7. P. Marullus	5 } 36
Jewish Embassy to Caligula	40
Herod Agrippa , King of Judea	3 } 41
Martyrdom of James the Elder	}
II. Jewish Persecution of the Church	}
Famine in Judea in the reign of Claudius ..	}
8. P. Cuspius Fadus	2 } 44
9. P. Tiberius Alexander	1 } 46
10. P. Ventidius Cumanus	5 } 47
I. Council at Jerusalem	49
11. P. Felix	10 } 52
Paul imprisoned at Jerusalem	59
12. P. Porcius Festus	1 } 61
Paul's first visit to Rome	}
13. P. Albinus	1 } 63
14. Gessius Florus	1 } 64
Paul's second visit to Rome	}
The Jewish war	5 } 65
Martyrdom of Peter and Paul	}
I. Roman Persecution of the Church }.....	65
Vespasian invades Judea	68
Titus destroys Jerusalem	70

The Chronology of this short, but most eventful and important period, is exceedingly intricate and embarrassed. The Evangelists, in their concise memoirs, notice but few dates, and even these are not easily reconcilable with each other, nor with the corresponding annals of ecclesiastical, Jewish, and profane history. Nor is Josephus, to whom we are principally indebted for this outline, sufficiently explicit in determining the several years of the reigns and administrations of the Roman emperors and procurators. However, from those that he has determined, the rest may be supplied with a considerable degree of precision. A fuller outline of the Gospel Chronology, during the former part, to the conversion and ministry of Paul, A.D. 35, and of the principles upon which it was constructed, may be seen, Vol. I. p. 96—99.

Before we enter upon the history of this period, it will be requisite to enquire into the nature and extent of the evidence afforded by those incomparable historians, the Evangelists, in respecting their, 1. authenticity, genuineness, and integrity, or freedom from adulteration; 2. order; 3. time of composition; 4. inspiration; 5. style; and, 6. credibility.

THE CANONICAL GOSPELS,

AUTHENTICITY.

The four Gospels have been uniformly attributed, by the uninterrupted tradition of the Church, to the Apostles Matthew and John, and, the companions of Apostles, Luke and Mark. The two former personally attended CHRIST throughout the greater part, or the whole, of his ministry. And Luke, “the physician” of Antioch, was the intimate friend and companion of Paul in his travels, who mentions him honourably, Philemon 24; Col. iv. 14; 2 Tim. iv. 11; whose ministry forms the latter part of his second work, the Acts of the Apostles. Mark also, was the nephew of Barnabas, Col. iv. 10, and the joint companion of him and Paul, Acts xii. 25, and afterwards of Barnabas, when they parted, Acts xv. 39, and also the intimate friend of Peter, Acts xii. 12, whom he accompanied to the mystical “Babylon,” or Rome, 1 Pet. v. 13. All, therefore, had the best opportunities of procuring the most authentic and correct information; as stated by Luke, in the classical preface to his Gospel, which may thus be more clearly rendered, 1—4.

“Forasmuch as many have taken in hand to compose a narrative of the things that are fully believed among us, [Christians]; according as they delivered them to us, who, from the beginning, were eye-witnesses and ministers of THE ORACLE: it seemed good to me also, having been accurately informed in all things from the very first, to write unto thee, in order, most excellent Theophilus, that thou mightest well know the certainty of those matters, in which thou hast been instructed by word of mouth.”

In the original, the term πολλοι, may reasonably include the preceding Evangelists, Matthew, and perhaps Mark, among other writers of Gospels. The verb επεχειρησαν, “have taken in hand,” or “undertaken,” is used with latitude, both in a good and a bad sense. Several commentators, following Origen, take it in the latter; but that it should rather be taken in the former, may justly be inferred from St. Luke classing himself among those writers, εδοξε καμοι, “It seemed good to me also.” Πραγματων, the general subject of their writings, is rightly rendered “things,” as including both facts and doctrines; and seems to be synonymous with λογων, “matters” afterwards; by a usual Hebraism, denoting words and things. Οι αυτοπται, και υπηρεται ΤΟΥ ΛΟΓΟΥ, in strictness, can only denote the eye-witnesses and ministers of the PERSONAL WORD, or ORACLE, who conversed with, and ministered unto Him, απ’ αρχης, “from the beginning” of his mission; as understood in the parallel passages, John xv. 27; Acts i. 22, 23; 1 John ii. 14, &c.; and παρεδσαν, “delivered them by tradition,” either in speech or writing; and these were the apostles and disciples in general; from whom likewise St. Luke, παρηκολουθηκοσι, “derived information, as an attendant,” on St. Paul especially, ανωθεν πασιν ακριβως, “in all things, accurately, from the very first,” or from the very commencement of the GOSPEL dispensation, in all the wonders accompanying the birth of the Baptist, the annunciation to the Virgin Mary, &c. which he alone records in his curious and valuable Introduction. And he wrote καθεξης, “in order,” or methodically, in a regular, well connected narrative, though more observant of the order of place, than of time. And his chief object in writing his Gospel, was that Theophilus, επιγνως, might well, or intimately know, (which is the proper import of the verb, 2 Cor. vi. 9; Matt. xi. 27, &c.) by a written and authentic record, ασφαλειαν, “the certainty” of the matters, in which κατηχηθης, he had been instructed by word of mouth, or by some preachers of the Gospel.

This, it is hoped, will be found a more correct translation and explanation of this concise and difficult Preface; suggested, chiefly, by Townson's judicious Observations, Vol. I. p. 212, &c.

Some German critics, Le Clerc, Michaelis, Koppe, Lessing, Eichhorne, &c. have supposed that the three first Evangelists did not see each other's Gospels; and to account for the remarkable verbal harmony notwithstanding, that appears between their Gospels, they have supposed that all the Evangelists made use of a common document in the Hebrew or Syrochaldee dialect, which contained a short narrative of the principal transactions of CHRIST'S ministry, which served as a basis for their Gospels; and which they altered and enlarged, according as they got fuller information.

This hypothesis has been adopted and modified by the learned and ingenious Dr. Marsh, in his elaborate Dissertation on the origin of the three first Gospels, annexed to his Notes on the third volume of Michaelis; who conjectures that Luke meant to express the title of this common document, which was Διηγησις περι των πεπληροφορημενων πραγματων. κ. τ. λ. p. 197.

At the same time, he candidly notices an objection, which he leaves to the decision of the learned, whether it may not destroy the whole conjecture: namely, that Luke omits the article την, in his account, αναταξασθαι διηγησιν, κ. τ. λ. p. 199, note.

But that profound Greek critic, Middleton, in his Doctrine of the Greek Article, p. 288, gives a verdict against him, observing, that "The title of a book, as prefixed to the book itself, should be anarthrous, [without the article:] but when the book is referred to, the article should be inserted." And he instances, in Hesiod's Poem, entitled Ασπις Ἡρακλεους, [Hercules' Shield,] which Longinus thus cites, εγχε Ἡσιοδου και ΤΗΝ Ασπιδα θετερον. ["If the Shield also is to be ascribed to Hesiod."]

And surely, Luke's preface militates against this hypothesis throughout: for Matthew and John, who were "eye-witnesses and ministers" of the "ORACLE," had no need of a common document; and Luke expressly asserts, that he derived his information from *Apostles; and we may conclude the same of

* Luke accompanied Paul the Apostle to Jerusalem, Acts xxi. 8, and continued there for two years, during Paul's imprisonment, till the administration of Festus, A.D. 62.

Mark; while, according to Origen, all were impelled to write, and inspired by THE HOLY SPIRIT; whom CHRIST had solemnly promised to send, to guide them into all the truth of the Gospel, John xvi. 13.

That the succeeding Evangelists did not see the Gospels of their predecessors, upon which the whole hypothesis hinges, is a negative which cannot be proved. Whereas, the affirmative, that they did, is not only highly probable, if we consider the intimate connexion and correspondence subsisting between them, but appears to be sufficiently proved, from internal evidence, namely, by the verbal agreement between the first three Evangelists: as appears by comparing, 1. Matthew and Mark together, and Matthew and Luke together; 2. Mark and Luke together; and 3. all three together.

1. Matthew and Mark agree together, verbally in several passages; especially one long passage of Matthew xxiv. 9—36; compared with Mark xiii. 13—32; and Matthew and Luke also; compare Matt. xi. 4—19, with Luke vii. 22—35. In each of these cases, the variations are so trifling, that they might easily pass, as belonging to one and the same text. At least they do not differ more from each other, than each differs from itself in different manuscripts. Marsh's Dissert. p. 4, note.

2. Mark and Luke agree together, and differ from Matthew in many places. For instance, if we compare Mark x. 14—19, with Luke xviii. 16—20, we shall find every word of the latter contained in the former, which is somewhat fuller; while both differ from the Hebrew and from the Sept. of Exod. xx. 12—17, in the order and in the enunciation of the moral commandments of the Decalogue. Dissert. p. 73.

3. Matthew, Mark, and Luke, agree word for word, in several passages; for instance, Matt. xxiv. 33—35, Mark xiii. 29—31, Luke xxi. 31—33, &c.

And this agreement is strongly marked in several unusual words and phrases.

They all agree in the citation, ὅς κατασκευασει την ὁδον σου εμπροσθεν σου, Matt. xi. 10, Mark i. 2, Luke vii. 27, which differs from Mal. iii. 1, both in the Hebrew and in the Sept. Diss. p. 133.

They all use the same phrase, and only once, ου μη γενσωνται

He had, therefore, abundant leisure and opportunity to acquire the fullest and most authentic information, at the fountain head, from the Apostles themselves.

θανατου, though they differ from each other in the remainder of the sentence, Matt. xvi. 22, Mark ix. 1, Luke ix. 27. This expression is not found in the Old Testament; it occurs only in the Chaldee Paraphrase. Dissert. p. 69.

They all use the verb απαροθη, once only, and that unusually, in the passive voice, Matt. ix. 15, Mark ii. 20, Luke v. 35. p. 55.

They all use the adverb δυσκολως, once only, and in the earlier sense of δυσχερως, or χαλεπως, "hardly" or "difficultly," with Thales; which in classical usage signifies "morosely," Matt. xix. 13, Mark x. 23, Luke xviii. 24. It is remarkable that this adverb occurs no where else, neither in the New Test. nor in the Sept. nor in the Greek Apocrypha, p. 75.

To these curious and critical instances, selected from the copious and valuable Tables of parallel and coincident passages in the first three Evangelists, given in the Dissertation, p. 44—147, we may add,

4. That two or more independent Translators of the same common Hebrew document, who had not seen each other's translations, would not be likely to agree so often, critically, in expression. Dr. Marsh himself, p. 167, has produced the following instances of verbal disagreement in three distinct translators of Luke's foregoing introduction, ver. 1. to which a fourth is here adjoined.

1. ENGLISH BIBLE.

"Forasmuch as many have taken in hand to set forth in order a declaration of those things which are most surely believed among us."

2. DODDRIDGE'S VERSION.

"Whereas many have undertaken to compose the history of those facts which have been confirmed among us."

3. CAMPBELL'S VERSION.

"Forasmuch as many have undertaken to compose a narrative of those things which have been accomplished among us."

4. WAKEFIELD'S VERSION.

"Forasmuch as many have taken in hand to write an account of those things about which we have been fully satisfied."

The foregoing translation, the fifth and latest, differs from them all. And yet all had the advantage of the common document of the English Bible; without which, we may be assured, their verbal disagreement would have been still greater.

Even in the English Bible, the same Greek text, as Dr. *Marsh himself observes, p. 169, 170, is rendered differently in several places. Thus, CHRIST'S censure of the Pharisees, related nearly in the same words by Mark, xii. 38—40, and by Luke, xx. 45—47, exhibits the following variations in the translation.

GREEK in both .	ENGLISH, Mark .	ENGLISH, Luke .
— των θελοντων.....	— “which love	— “which desire
περιπατειν.....	to go	to walk
εν στολαις,	in long clothing ,	in long robes ,
— ασπασμους	— salutations	— greetings
ενταις αγοραις.....	in the market places ,	in the markets, και πρωτοκαθεδριας	and the chief seats ,	and the highest seats ,
και πρωτοκλισιας	and the uppermost rooms .”	and the chief rooms .”

“ In the compass of one short sentence, (says he) we have here, not less than seven easy Greek expressions, all of which are rendered differently in two places of the same Version. Is it credible then, if our first three Gospels contained three independent translations of the same original, that they would resemble each other in the manner in which they do? The numerous and long examples of verbal coincidence, which have been produced in the preceding table, are surely proofs to the contrary.

“ In translating [also] from Hebrew into Greek, there is still less probability of agreeing by mere accident, than in translating from Greek into English; because the Greek language admits of much greater variety both in the choice and in the position of the words, than the English language.” Dissert. p. 170.

Thus are we indebted to the learned and ingenious author of this Dissertation, for a plain and simple refutation of his own abstruse and complicated hypothesis, in all its parts; satisfactory, as it should seem, to every unprejudiced and unbiassed critic. And we are persuaded, that should it attract his notice, it will so appear, on mature consideration, to himself, from the candour evidently pervading his Translation and Notes, which form a valuable and important accession to Biblical Literature.

* Dr. Townson had before produced the same passage, and for the same purpose. Vol. I. p. 62.

The remarkable coincidence of expression between the Evangelists, especially in OUR LORD'S discourses, in which it prevails most, may rather be ascribed to the uncommon attention with which his sayings were treasured up in the memories of his hearers, and to the supernatural aid promised, "to bring all things to their remembrance, whatsoever he had said unto them," John xiv. 26, while they all exercised the freedom of original historians, in the use and arrangement of their common materials, as they judged fit, to follow or to vary from their predecessors.

ORDER.

Of the three Evangelists, Matthew is generally allowed to have written the first. His Gospel, in all the codes or volumes of the Gospels, and most ancient manuscripts, is placed first; and the priority is given thereto in the citations of the primitive Fathers, and of the early heretics. Its precedence therefore is unquestionable.

Whether he wrote in Hebrew or in Greek, is a point one of the most litigated among critics. The presumption is strongly in favour of the latter. Greek, at that time, was the prevailing language*. And as not only the rest of the Evangelists, but also the Apostles, Peter, James, John, Jude, and Paul, wrote all their Epistles in Greek, to Christians, Jews, and Gentiles, throughout the known world; and as Matthew's Gospel was designed for universal dissemination, not less than theirs, (Matt. xxvi. 13, xxviii. 19,) it is unlikely that it was originally written in any other language than that employed by all the other writers of the New Testament.

And this is strongly confirmed by the foregoing numerous and remarkable instances of verbal agreement between him and the other Evangelists; which, on the supposition that he wrote in Hebrew, or the vernacular Syro-Chaldaic dialect, would not be credible. Even they who maintain that opinion, are forced to confess, that an early Greek translation of his Gospels, existed before Luke and Mark wrote theirs; which they saw and consulted.

* This is vouched by Cicero. Græca leguntur in omnibus fere gentibus: Latina suis finibus, exiguis sane, continentur. "Greek authors are read in almost all countries: Latin are confined to their own narrow boundaries."

The main point in dispute, after all, is, whether the present Greek copy is entitled to the authority of an original or not. And as this is a question of real and serious importance, the principal arguments on both sides deserve and require to be considered in this place.

The advocates of the Hebrew Gospel, Campbell, Michaelis, Marsh, &c. lay most stress on the testimonies of Papias, Bishop of Hierapolis, in Phrygia, A.D. 116, Irenæus, A.D. 178, and the learned Origen, A.D. 230, which have been followed by several of the Fathers, Jerom, &c.

1. Papias, as cited by Eusebius, says, “Matthew composed the [sacred] oracles in the Hebrew dialect, and each interpreted them as he was able *.”

2. Irenæus, as cited by Eusebius, says, “Matthew published also a Scripture of the Gospel among the Hebrews, in their own dialect †.”

3. Origen, as cited by Eusebius, says, “As I have learned by tradition concerning the four Gospels, which alone are received, without dispute, by the whole Church of God under heaven: The first was written by Matthew, once a publican, afterwards an Apostle of JESUS CHRIST; who published it for the believers from Judaism, composed in Hebrew letters ‡.”

On the other hand, their opponents, Whitby, Lardner, Jones, Jortin, &c. contend,

1. That the testimony of Papias is vague and indecisive; that he had not seen the Hebrew Gospel itself; that it could not have been intended for universal circulation by his own account, because every one was not able to interpret it; and that the Greek Gospel was published before his time, as appears from the express or tacit references thereto, of Barnabas the Apostle, A.D. 71; Clemens Romanus, A.D. 96; Hermas, A.D. 100; Ignatius, A.D. 107, and Polycarp, A.D. 108, who were all prior to Papias, who all wrote in Greek, and who, unquestionably, referred to the Greek Gospels. See those references collected by Lardner, Vol. II. p. 15—93.

* Ματθαίος μὲν οὖν Ἑβραϊδὶ διαλεκτῷ τὰ λόγια συνεγραψάτο· ἠρμηνεύσει δ' αὐτὰ ὡς ἠδύνατο ἕκαστος.

† Ὁ μὲν δὴ Ματθαίος ἐν τοῖς Ἑβραίοις, ἐν τῇ ἰδίᾳ αὐτῶν διαλεκτῷ, καὶ γραφὴν ἐξηνεγκεν εὐαγγελίου.

‡ Ματθαίου, ἐκδεδωκότα τοῖς ἀπὸ Ἰουδαϊσμοῦ πιστεῦσαι γραμμασί· Ἑβραϊκοῖς συντεταγμένον [εὐαγγελίου].

2. Irenæus, more critically translated, may well be understood to signify, that in addition to his Greek Gospel, Matthew published also a Hebrew Gospel for the benefit of the Hebrews, or converts from Judaism, who used the vernacular language of Palestine. This surely is the unstrained import of the particle καί, in the original καί γραφήν ἐξηνεγκεν εὐαγγελίου. And this was most probably the fact *. This was the original basis of the Gospel of the Nazarenes, the Gospel of the Ebionites, the Gospel according to the Hebrews, cited by Origen, Epiphanius, and Jerom, which, in process of time, became so adulterated by these Judaizing converts, as to lose all authority in the Church, and to be reckoned spurious.

3. The testimony of Origen perfectly corresponds therewith ; for surely when he cited tradition for the existence of a Hebrew Gospel written by Matthew, for the converts from Judaism, he by no means denied, but rather presupposed his Greek Gospel, written for all classes of Christians, composing the whole Church of God under heaven ; for whose use the Hebrew Gospel would be utterly inadequate.

And that Origen himself considered the Greek as the only authentic original in his time, is evident for the following reasons.

1. Origen, in his Hexapla, was accustomed to correct the Greek versions of the Old Testament by the Hebrew original ; but he virtually confesses that he had none such by which he could correct the Greek text of Matthew's Gospel. See his own words, Tom. III. 671, edit. Delarue, or Marsh's citation and explanation of their meaning, in his Notes on Michaelis, Vol. III. p. 114, 115.

2. Origen expressly cites “ a certain Gospel, according to the Hebrews, if any one, (says he) chuses to receive it, not as of authority, but for illustration of the present question : “ A certain rich man,” says that Gospel, “ said to him, Master, what good thing shall I do, and live ? He said unto him, Man, keep the law and the prophets. He answered him, I have done so.

* This derives additional weight even from the incorrect reports of Eutychius and Theophylact ; that Matthew wrote his Hebrew Gospel at Jerusalem, which John the Evangelist translated into Greek. Matthew probably wrote first indeed in Greek, and afterwards translated into Hebrew himself.

He said unto him, Go, sell all that thou hast, and distribute to the poor, and come, follow me. But the rich man began to scratch his head, and it displeased him. And the Lord said unto him, How sayest thou, I have kept the law and the prophets? seeing it is written in the law, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself; and behold many of thy brethren, sons of Abraham, are clothed with filthy rags, dying for hunger, whilst thy house is filled with many good things, and nothing of it goes out of it unto them. And turning about he said to his disciple Simon, who was sitting by him, Simon son of Joanna, it is easier for a camel to pass through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of heaven." See the original, Lardner, Vol. II. p. 505.

Who does not see that this is an incongruous parody of the genuine Gospel, Matt. xix. 16—24, and a medley of the parable of the rich man and Lazarus, Luke xvi. 20—25, with some detached texts of Scripture interspersed, which are irrelevant: For, "thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself," is but a bad substitute for "If thou desirest to be perfect." The question being now, not about the observance of the moral commandments, but about Christian perfection, to which the young man aspired. Michaelis has mistaken this: and also asserted, without foundation, that "Jerom was inclined to believe that the Hebrew Gospel used by the Nazarenes, was the original of Matthew's Gospel." Introduction, Vol. III. p. 137, 138. Jerom believed no such thing; he only stated a current report of the ignorant many:—*In evangelio juxta Hebræos, quod Chaldaïco quidem Syroque sermone, sed Hebraicis literis scriptum est, quo utuntur usque hodie Nazareni, secundum Apostolos, sive ut plerique autumant, juxta Matthæum, &c. See Marsh's Notes, Vol. III. p. 115, 116.

II. Whether of the twain, Mark or Luke, wrote first, is a matter of more difficult determination.

It was long the received opinion, that the Gospels were written exactly in the order in which they are placed in our Canon, from the testimonies of Irenæus, Origen, Jerom, Augustine, Chrysostom, &c. who so cite the Evangelists. Hence Grotius, Mill, Wetstein, Townson, &c. entertained no doubt of the priority of Mark's Gospel to Luke's. But later critics have found reason to question the validity of this assumption, Owen, Busching, &c. And the critical penetration of that skilful editor and collator, Griesbach, by an elaborate process, has furnished internal evidence of the priority of Luke's Gospel; shewing that Mark copied both from Matthew and Luke; that his Gospel is a compilation from both; the whole of it being contained in their Gospels, with the exception of about four and twenty verses, which contain facts not recorded by either of his predecessors, but illustrative of the general subject.

* Origen, we have seen before, when speaking of the four canonical Gospels, considered this, according to the twelve Apostles, to be spurious.

To render this investigation more perspicuous to those who have not access to the Commentationes Theologicae, Lipsiæ, 1794, Vol. I. p. 374—384, in which Griesbach published it, we shall copy here, from Marsh's Dissertation, p. 14, his Table of the contents of Mark's Gospel, compared with those of Matthew and Luke. The middle column contains the whole of Mark's Gospel: and those to the left and right, the corresponding portions of Matthew's and Luke's.

TABLE OF PARALLEL PASSAGES.

MATTHEW.	MARK.	LUKE.
iii. 1—4. 22.	i. 1—20.
	21—39.	iv. 31—44.
	40—iii. 6. ..	v. 12—vi. 11.
xii. 15, 16.	iii. 7—12.
	13—19.	vi. 12—16.
22, 23.	20—21.
24—32.	22—30.
46—50.	31—35.
xiii. 1—23.	iv. 12—20
	21—25.	viii. 16—18.
24—30.	26—29.
31, 32.	30—32.
34, 35.	33, 34.
	35—41.	22—25.
	v. 1—43.	26—56.
53—58.	vi. 1—6.
	7—13.	ix. 1—6.
xiv. 1, 2.	14—16.	7—9.
3—12.	17—29.
	30, 31.	10.
13—21.	32—44.	11—17.
22—xvi. 12. ..	45—viii. 21.

MATTHEW.	MARK.	LUKE.
	viii. 22—26.
xvi. 13—xviii. 9. . .	27—ix. 50. . .	18—51.
xix. 1—12.	x. 1—12.
13—xxiii. 1. . .	13—xii. 38. . .	xviii. 5—xx. 45.
	xii. 38—44. . . .	xx. 45—xxi. 4.
xxiv. 1—36.	xiii. 1—32. . . .	xxi. 5, &c.
	• 33—36.
xxvi. 1—xxviii. 8 . .	xiv. 1—xvi. 8.
	xvi. 9.
	10—13.	xxiv. 10—35.
	14.	36—43.
xxviii. 18—20.	15—18.
	19.	50, 51.
	20.

In the Commentationes Theologicæ, “this Table is accompanied with Notes, in which the learned and ingenious author endeavours to explain why Mark copied this portion from Matthew, and that portion from Luke; why he sometimes attended to both, and why at other times certain portions of their Gospels were wholly omitted by him;” as we learn from Dr. Marsh, p. 15. And we regret that these notes, or rather the substance of them, was not given in the Dissertation. I shall endeavour, in some measure, to supply the defect.

1. In general, it appears that Mark rather adopted the language of Matthew, but the order of Luke in their joint sections, but neither implicitly.

2. He is usually more circumstantial and correct than they are in the relation of joint facts. Compare, for instances, their accounts of the death of John the Baptist with his, Mark vi. 17—29. His masterly description of the storm on the lake of Galilee, quelled by CHRIST, iv. 36—41; his account of the barren fig-tree cursed, and of the temple purged, xi. 12—26, in which he has judiciously separated those two transactions, as happening on two successive days, which Matthew had concisely blended together, on the day of OUR LORD’S triumphal entrance. In the joint parable of the vineyard, he has critically corrected a verbal inaccuracy of Matthew, ωρουξεν ληνον, “he dug a wine-press,” Matt. xxi. 23, into ωρουξεν υποληνιον, “he dug a wine-vat,” Mark xii. 1. It being the usage, in hot countries, in order to prevent too great a fermentation, and souring of the must, or new wine, that issues from the press, to dig a vat for its reception under ground, lined with mason’s work, or hewn out of a rock, for coolness ; as remarked in Michaelis's Introduction, Vol. III. p. 157, from Lowth's Isaiah, v. 1. Note. And in the conclusion of the parable, the sentence against the rebellious tenants, “He will miserably destroy them, and let out the vineyard to others,” which Matthew has put in the mouths of the chief priests and elders, xxi. 41 *, is restored by Mark to its true owner, CHRIST, xii. 9, while Luke has recorded their true answer, perceiving the drift of the parable against themselves, “God forbid!” xx. 16. Matthew's expression, therefore, λεγουσιν αυτω, “they say unto him,” must be rejected as an interpolation, injurious to the sense, upon their joint authority, and yet to its genuineness, all the ancient versions, all the printed editions, and all the ancient manuscripts, with the single exception of the Codex Leicestrensis, bear witness. We must, therefore, either suppose it to be an inaccuracy of the Evangelist himself, or rather, that it glided into some of the earliest transcripts of his autograph, or original copy.

In their joint accounts of blind Bartimæus restored to sight, he follows Luke, in preference to Matthew, who notices two blind men ; while he follows the order of Matthew in preference to that of Luke, in representing the miracle as having been performed after our Lord left Jericho in his way to Jerusalem, Matt. xx. 29, 30, Mark x. 46, which Luke had represented as before his entrance into Jericho, Luke xviii. 35, xix. 1 ; and yet Luke himself allows that CHRIST at the time was attended by a “multitude,” (collected, we may suppose, at Jericho,) Luke xviii. 36—39. Whereas, Matthew and Mark both agree that he came to Jericho, attended only by the twelve. Here, therefore, Mark has receded from Matthew in one point, and corrected Luke in another, and noticed the leading blind man's name, omitted by both.

3. Indeed, to the accurate fidelity of this well informed Evangelist, Mark, we owe several important facts and illustrations, omitted by his predecessors. Thus, he alone mentions that CHRIST was with the wild beasts in the wilderness during his temptation, i. 13. That additional circumstance in our Lord's first preaching, “the time is fulfilled,” foretold by the prophets, i. 15. David's eating the shew bread in the days of

* Michaelis, upon his hypothesis, that Matthew wrote in Hebrew, supposes that his Greek translator mistook ויאמר, “And he said,” for ויאמרו, “And they said,” p. 158, but he does not depend upon it, and the account in the text seems preferable.

Abiathar, ii. 16. Boanerges, the emphatic surname of the Apostles James and John, signifying "sons of thunder," iii. 17. Our Lord's anger and grief at the obduracy of the Jews, iii. 5. The expression of his unbelieving friends, he is beside himself, iii. 21. The beautiful parable of the spontaneous growth of the seed, iv. 26—29. The number of the herd of swine, 2000, v. 13. CHRIST'S expression, Talitha kumi, "Damsel arise," v. 41, and Epphatha, "Be opened," vii. 34. The 5000 fed on the "green grass," characterizing the spring of the year, vi. 39. This circumstance is noticed by his successor, John. The distribution of the two fishes as well as the loaves of bread, vi. 41. This also is noticed by John. The first cock crowing, during Peter's denial of CHRIST, xiv. 68. The addition of Salome to Matthew's party of women who went to visit the holy sepulchre, xv. 40. CHRIST'S resurrection about sun rise, xvi. 2. The vision of the second angel at the holy sepulchre, xvi. 5. The silence of the women respecting his message to Peter, xvi. 7, 8. Christ's appearance after his resurrection to Mary Magdalen first, xvi. 9. His appearance under another form to the disciples in the way to Emmaus, xvi. 12. The disbelief of their report by the rest, and OUR LORD'S censure, xvi. 13, 14. His commission to the Apostles to preach and work miracles, xvi. 15—18. Their discharge of the commission, xvi. 20. All these important facts and circumstances were judiciously added to the conciser accounts of his predecessors, Matthew and Luke. Whereas had Luke followed him, it is not credible that he would have omitted them all, since we see that John noticed those of Mark that coincided with his scheme, or came within the range of his Gospel.

Hence we seem to be fully warranted by the internal evidence, to conclude that Mark wrote after Luke, and not before. Indeed, the hypothesis, that Luke was the first Evangelist of all, and wrote even before Matthew, has been patronized by Busching, in the preface to his German Harmony of the four Gospels, Hamburg, 1766, 8vo. p. 109—119. As we learn from Marsh's Dissertation, p. 6. It was also the opinion of the learned Basnage, Beza, Macknight, &c. and Lardner cites it rather with approbation. "For any thing that I know, St. Luke's Gospel may have been written first," Vol. II. p. 65, and so does Michaelis, Introd. Vol. III. p. 243.

To this internal evidence in favour of the priority of Luke's Gospel to Mark's at least, we may add some early testimonies of considerable weight.

1. The learned Clemens Alexandrinus, A.D. 194, explicitly asserts, that the Gospels containing the genealogies were first written. Lardner, II. p. 194. This gives the precedence to Luke before Mark. Tertullian, A.D. 200, enumerates the Evangelists, Matthew and John, Luke and Mark, ibid. p. 282. And the same order is followed by Dionysius Alexandrinus, A.D. 274*. And Lardner remarks that "this was very probably the order of many codes or volumes of the four Gospels," ibid. p. 101. And that intelligent adversary of Christian faith, the Emperor Julian, the Apostate, A.D. 361, expressly cites the Evangelists Matthew, Luke, Mark, and John, in order. Lardner, VIII. p. 400.

And if to these ancient authorities we add the modern of Basnage, Büsching, Griesbach, and Marsh, founded on the internal evidence, and of Lardner and Michaelis, founded on the testimonies, the proposed order will be found much better supported than the received.

We can also rationally account for the introduction of the present canonical order. From the time the notion prevailed that Mark's Gospel was merely an abridgement of Matthew's, as it did in the days of Augustine, A.D. 395, who speaking of Matthew, says, "Marcus eum subsecutus, tanquam pedisequus, et breviator ejus, videtur;" De consensu Evangelistarum, Lib. I. cap. 4, it was natural to change the order of his Gospel, and place it next to Matthew's, with which it was supposed to have the closest connection.

This, however, was an unfair representation of Mark, for though he was an "abridger," he was by no means a "foot-man," or servile copier, as the foregoing analysis abundantly proves. He selected most judiciously, and sometimes enlarged, as we have seen, the most important parts of Matthew's and Luke's Gospels, adapted to his peculiar plan; which was "to give a succinct history of OUR LORD'S ministry, commencing from the preaching of the Baptist, Mark i. 1, 2, to his ascension, xvi. 19, and concluding with the preaching of the Apostles every where, throughout the world, ver. 20, thus comprising, in a short compass, the substance of Matthew's, and also of Luke's Gospel, and Acts of the Apostles.

* This is also in general the order of the ancient Latin manuscripts. Marsh's Notes, Vol. III. p. 156.

3. Hence also, we can satisfactorily account for his omission of certain portions of their Gospels entirely : such as the introductions of both ; the Sermon on the Mount, which had been given collectively, or in detail, by both, &c. precisely on the same principle, that John coming after him, omits considerably more than Mark, so as to form nearly a distinct Gospel, which may be considered as a supplement to the rest, only inserting so much common matter as was necessary to connect his Gospel with theirs, and to give a short, but masterly outline of the chronology of the whole ; which had been so vague and undetermined before ; by recording the four passovers that included our Lord's public ministry. Respecting the omission of the Evangelists in general, Augustine has the following judicious remark : "The Evangelists mutually bear witness to each other, even in some things which they themselves do not relate, but yet shew that they knew them to have been related [by others *."] Indeed, that the omissions of the Evangelists were designed, not less than their correspondences, incontestibly appears from critical comparison of their Gospels : both concurring to promote their common design, which was to collect, in their admirable memoirs of CHRIST, (as their Gospels were originally termed,) the most authentic and important materials from the common mass of original or traditional evidence, well known to them all, and to condense, or rather concentrate them into the smallest compass possible, for the edification of the Church of CHRIST ; with a simplicity of style and manner peculiar to themselves ; adapted to all ranks, from the highest to the lowest ; and "they were written" for the highest and noblest of all purposes, to instruct the world how to attain everlasting happiness in the mansions of bliss ; "that mankind might believe," upon reasonable evidence, "that JESUS is the CHRIST, the SON OF GOD ; and that believing, they might have life in his name," John xx. 31.

These observations on Mark's Gospel, some may think

* Meminerimus quemadmodum Evangelistæ invicem attestantur de quibusdam etiam quæ ipsi non dicunt, et tamen dicta noverunt. Index Augustin. No. 515. See the Omissions of John, ably considered by Michaelis, Introduct. Vol. III. p. 305—310, as a presumptive proof that the facts he has left unnoticed, which are recorded by the other Evangelists, are true, otherwise he would have corrected them in his later Gospel.

rather drawn out to a length greater than a mere matter of curiosity required. But they have a further and a higher object, to raise to its proper level the character of this Evangelist, from that of an humble compiler, to that of an original historian. And also to lower the undue preference of Luke's Gospel above the rest, which it has been the fashion of the Unitarian school, Wakefield, Evanson, &c. to represent as the only genuine Gospel: reviving an ancient error of the Manicheans, and other early heretics. Thus Marcion received Luke's Gospel only, and curtailed even that. See Lardner, II. p. 261, III. p. 502, 514, 515.

The authenticity, indeed, of all the canonical Gospels, is vouched by the high estimation in which they have ever been held in the Christian Church, since the days of the Apostles, and by the concessions of early Heretics. Their general integrity, purity, or freedom from corruption also, either by alteration, mutilation, or interpolation, is supported by a cloud of witnesses; 1. By the wide dissemination of the Greek copies, through the whole Church of God under heaven, in the language of Origen. 2. By the ancient versions, made into all languages, the Italic, Syriac, Ethiopic, Armenian, Persic, Coptic, &c. All these, however they may differ in minuter points, various readings, &c. yet retain all the essential members and compartments of the originals, entire and unadulterated. For instance, the two introductions of Matthew's and Luke's Gospels, are found in all the *unmutilated Greek manuscripts extant; and in all the

* Some of the oldest Greek manuscripts, in uncials, or capital letters, the Alexandrine, &c. are imperfect, and want the two introductory chapters of Matthew. But fortunately, a manuscript, equal at least, if not superior in antiquity, to the Alexandrine, was discovered some years ago, in the library of Trinity College, Dublin, by the Rev. Dr. Barret, containing a fragment of Matthew's Gospel, beginning with the 17th verse of the 1st chapter, οὐν αἱ γενεα Αβρααμ ἕως Δαδ, and containing the greater part of the 2nd chapter. A fac-simile engraving of the whole, reaching (with lacunæ) to Matt. xxvi. 71, was published at the University press, 1801, quarto, by the learned Doctor; furnishing some valuable various readings, not to be found elsewhere.

The Rev. Dr. Bell, Prebendary of Westminster, in his able Arguments, &c. prefixed to the second edition of Enquiries into the divine Missions of John the Baptist and Jesus Christ, 1795, 8vo. has fully and satisfactorily proved the authenticity of these chapters: 1. From the internal evidence; or their essential connexion with the sequel, in the plans of both Gospels. 2. From the references thereto of the early Fathers, Justin Martyr, Tertullian, &c. 3. From the objections of the first heretics and infidels, the Ebionites, Cerinthians, Marcion, Julian the apostate, Porphyry, &c. And 4. From the absurdity of interpolation by enemies, and impossibility of interpolation by friends, without detection, during the life-time of the Evangelists and Apostles; and a fortiori afterwards, when copies and versions were multiplied.

versions without exception. They have, therefore, withstood the attacks of Manicheans, Socinians, Unitarians, &c. wishing to expunge them, as militating against their favourite tenets; and they will continue to do so, until the end of time, with increasing evidence. Attacks upon the authority of the Holy Scriptures, have only contributed to strengthen it, by calling forth able vindications of the orthodox, from the earliest days.

The sufficiency of the canonical Scriptures to satisfy, in every respect, the most scrupulous enquirers into the validity of their evidence, by an appeal to the primitive Churches every where founded by the Apostles, is thus stated by the eloquent Tertullian.

“Come now, ye who may wish to exercise your curiosity profitably in the business of your salvation, traverse the apostolical Churches, where the very chairs of the Apostles still preside, where their own *authentic Scriptures are recited, resounding the voice, and representing the countenance of each. Is Achaia nearest to you? consult the Corinthians: if you are not far from Macedonia, consult the Philippians, consult the Thessalonians: if you can go to Asia, consult the Ephesians: if you are adjacent to Italy, consult the Romans; where also their authority is ready [to be vouched] to us.” See the original passage, Lardner, II. p. 268.

TIME.

Still more various are the opinions of critics respecting the time of the composition of each Gospel; as may be seen in Jones, Lardner, Michaelis, Owen, Marsh, &c. We here shall confine ourselves to the earliest and the fullest testimony of the venerable Irenæus, Bishop of Lyons, in Gaul, A.D. 178, both respecting the time and order of the Evangelists.

“Matthew then, (says he,) published also a Scripture of the Gospel among the Hebrews, in their own dialect; while Peter and Paul were preaching the Gospel, and establishing the Church at Rome. And after their decease, Mark, the disciple and interpreter of Peter, also delivered to us in writing, the things preached by Peter. And Luke, the follower of

* The original expression, ipsæ authenticæ literæ eorum, does not signify “authentic letters,” or epistles, in the hand-writing of the Apostles; but rather well attested copies of the Scriptures of the New Testament. Tertullian uses Literæ Divinæ, Literæ nostræ, in this sense, as remarked by Lardner.

Paul, set down in a book the Gospel preached by him. Afterwards, John, the disciple of THE LORD, who leaned upon his breast, also published a Gospel, while he dwelt at Ephesus, in Asia." Lardner, Vol. II. p. 158. Marsh's Notes to Michaelis, Vol. III. p. 95—107. On which we may observe,

1. Epiphanius states, that the Apostles Peter and Paul were put to death at Rome, in the twelfth year of Nero, or A.D. 65, according to the Pascal Chronicle, Pagi, Basnage, and Lardner, Vol. VI. p. 300, 301. We are warranted, therefore, to date Matthew's Hebrew Gospel about A.D. 64, or A.D. 65. For Paul's second visit to Rome could not have been earlier than A. D. 64; and Peter, who joined him there, must have written his second Epistle from thence, shortly before his death, in which he says, "I think it right, as long as I am in this tabernacle, to awaken your recollection; knowing that shortly I must put off this my tabernacle; according as our LORD JESUS CHRIST signified to me. Moreover I will endeavour, that after my decease, ye may be enabled to have these things always in remembrance," 2 Pet. i. 13—15. At the same time also, Paul seems to have written his second Epistle to Timothy; in which he says, "I am now ready to be offered as a libation, and the time of my dissolution is at hand," 2 Tim. i. 6. These passages determine the meaning of the expressions of Irenæus, ἐξοδον, "decease," and θεμελιουντων, "establishing," the former being actually used by Peter; and the latter, corresponding to his expression, εστηριγμενους εν τη παρουση αληθεια, "confirmed in the present truth," in the preceding verse, 12*.

Matthew's Greek Gospel was probably written during the two years Paul spent at Rome, on his first visit; in consequence of his appeal to Cæsar, from Portius Festus, who was appointed governor, A.D. 62, Acts xxv. 1—12, xxviii. 30. That it was not published before, is highly probable, from the ingenious conjecture of Marsh. Notes, Vol. III. p. 107. "If St. Matthew's Gospel had existed at the time when St. Luke was in Judea, during the two years of Paul's imprisonment by Felix, Acts xxiv. 27, it would hardly have escaped the notice of a writer, who professedly made such diligent enquiries. But Luke accompanied Paul to Rome." We are warranted, therefore, to date Matthew's Greek Gospel about A.D. 63*.

* Ὁ μὲν δὴ Ματθαῖος, ἐν τοῖς Ἑβραίοις, τῇ ἰδίᾳ διαλεκτῷ αὐτῶν, καὶ γραφὴν ἐξενεγκὲν εὐαγγέλιον, τοῦ Πέτρου καὶ τοῦ Παύλου ἐν Ῥώμῃ εὐαγγελιζομένων, καὶ θεμελιουντων τὴν ἐκκλησίαν. Μετὰ δὲ τὴν τούτων ἐξοδον, Μαρκοῦ ὁ μαθητῆς καὶ ἑρμηνευτῆς Πέτρου, καὶ αὐτὸς τὰ ὑπὸ Πέτρου κηρυσσομένα ἐγγραφῶς ἡμῖν παραδεδωκε. κ. τ. λ.

And this date, A.D. 63, above thirty years after the resurrection, is more credible than the earlier dates of A.D. 49, according to the Pascal Chronicle, or A.D. 41, according to Theophylact. Because a writer of the second century, and such as Irenæus, Bishop of Lyons, and the friend of Polycarp, had surely better means of historical information, in respect to a recent fact of the first century, than those subsequent writers of the seventh and eleventh centuries. Internal evidence also supports the first date: Matthew observes, that "the potter's field was called the field of blood, unto this day," xxvii. 8; that "the report of the Roman soldiers, that the disciples had stolen the body of JESUS, was circulated among the Jews, until this day," xxviii. 15; both intimating a considerable interval of time between these facts and the publication of his Gospel.

This also was the fittest time of all. For while the eye-witnesses and "ministers of THE ORACLE" were performing their arduous and important commission of "disciplining all nations," by "preaching the Gospel every where," they had scarcely leisure for writing; but when they were "finishing their course," to supply the place of their oral instructions, after their decease, the written became necessary. This it was which induced Peter to write his Epistles to the Jewish converts of "the dispersion," 1 Pet. i. 1; Paul, his Epistle to the Hebrews; and James and John their general Epistles; and likewise the Evangelists.

2. Though Irenæus names Luke before Mark, it is not decisive to confirm the received order, because he had named Peter before Paul, and therefore, in the order of composition, "the disciple of Peter" should precede "the follower of Paul." All that we can fairly collect from his account is, that neither of them wrote until after the death of those Apostles, whose doctrines they communicated to the world. Hence then, we cannot assign an earlier date than A.D. 65, to either of their Gospels; and we are warranted to assume, that Luke wrote his Gospel and Acts about A.D. 66, and Mark about A.D. 67. Both are allowed to have written before the destruction of Je- rusalem, A.D. 70, the signs of which, the three first Evangelists so minutely described, as a warning to the faithful to quit that devoted city betimes, Matt. xxiv. 15, 16, Mark xiii. 14, Luke xxi. 20, 21.

* We may add, that Paul himself, in the whole course of his Epistles, takes no notice of any written Gospel.

3. Whether John wrote his Gospel before or after that catastrophe, does not appear from this passage of Irenæus. All that can be collected from it is, that he followed the other Evangelists. But there is another passage of Irenæus, which intimates that it was a long time after the destruction of Jerusalem. He states, that "John, the disciple of OUR LORD, announcing this [true] faith, and designing, by the annunciation of the Gospel, to remove the error which had been sown among men by Cerinthus, and much earlier, by those called Nicolaitans,—began thus, in that doctrine which is according to the Gospel, In the beginning was the Word." Lardner, VI. p. 187*.

Here, Irenæus observes, that the doctrine of the Cerinthians was taught much earlier by the Nicolaitans. Cerinthus, therefore, must have flourished in the latter days of the Apostle; and this is confirmed by Theodoret, A.D. 340, who says, that "according to report, Cerinthus sowed the tares of his peculiar heresy, while the celebrated John, who wrote the divine Gospel, was still living." Lardner, IX. p. 323, Note. And that Theodoret alluded to the testimony of Irenæus, may be collected from the expression, παρασπειραι ζιζανια, "sowed the tares," corresponding to "the error sown."

Epiphanius, A.D. 368, says, that "John also, moved by the Spirit, wrote a Gospel, after he had long declined it through humility, when he was more than ninety years of age, and when he had lived many years in Asia; after his return thither [to Ephesus] from Patmos." Lardner, IV. p. 314.

Jerom, A.D. 392, also states, that John was banished to the Isle of Patmos by Domitian, (raising the second persecution after Nero,) in the fourteenth year of his reign, [A.D. 95,] where he wrote the Apocalypse; which Justin Martyr and Irenæus interpreted, [respecting the Millennium,] that when Domitian

* Lardner has cited a contrary passage in appearance of Irenæus, stating that "John wrote his Gospel for the reason mentioned, xx. 30, foreseeing (providens) those blasphemous notions that divide the Lord, as far as in their power," p. 187. But as Michaelis justly remarks, providens should be rendered, not "foreseeing," but "guarding against." St. Paul also speaks of Gnostic errors, long before John wrote his Gospel. 1 Tim.

had been killed, and his edicts repealed by the senate, because of their excessive cruelty, he returned to Ephesus, in the reign of Nerva, [A.D. 96,] and living there to the reign of Trajan, [A.D. 97,] he established and governed all the Churches of Asia; dying at a great age, in the sixty-eighth year of our Lord's passion, [A.D. 31 + 68 =] A.D. 99.

Jerom also observes, that "last of all the Evangelists, John wrote a Gospel, at the desire of the Bishops of Asia, against Cerinthus, and other heretics, and especially against the dogma of the Ebionites, then springing up, who affirmed that CHRIST did not exist before his birth of Mary: whence he was compelled to declare his divine nativity." Lardner, V. p. 40. And in another passage more fully, "When he was in Asia, and the seeds sown by the heretics, Cerinthus, Ebion, and others, who denied CHRIST to have come in the flesh, were now springing up, (whom also in his Epistle he calls Antichrists,) he was compelled, by almost all the Bishops of Asia, and by deputations from many Churches, to write more fully of OUR SAVIOUR'S Divinity; and ecclesiastical history informs us, that when he was thus urged by the brethren to write, he answered that he would, provided that they would all join in prayer and fasting to God; which being done, and he being fully inspired, he burst forth into that divine preface, "In the beginning was THE ORACLE," &c. p. 35.

From this concurrent testimony of Irenæus, Theodoret, Epiphanius, and Jerom, we may collect, that John wrote his Gospel about A.D. 97, and not earlier, about two years before his death; which is the date adopted by Mill, Fabricius, Le Clerc, and Jones, Lardner, VI. 190, and seems greatly preferable to A.D. 68, adopted by Lardner himself, upon two considerations, which appear to be very weak: 1. That it is likely St. John wrote a short time after the other Evangelists, either to confirm them, or to supply omissions; and so to complete the history of CHRIST; 2. That at a very great age, (supposing that John was born about the same time with CHRIST,) he could have been scarcely fit for such a work as this, p. 191.

For, 1. It is rather unlikely that John wrote soon after the other Evangelists. He waited until the doctrine of CHRIST'S human nature was sufficiently established, by means of the preceding Gospels; before the world could be prepared for that higher and more mysterious doctrine of his divine nature, as observed by Clemens Alexandrinus, A.D. 194, whose testimony critically concurs with the preceding. See Lardner, IV. p. 512. 2. Lardner followed the modern opinion of a Socinian, Wetstein, in the latter objection, rather than these respectable ancient testimonies, which himself furnished. And if John's life was prolonged to "a very great age," of near a century, by his divine Master, for the wise and gracious purpose of remaining a pillar and a bulwark of the Church of CHRIST against heresies; can we question whether his faculties were not also continued unimpaired? Can it be a question, whether the sublime writer of the Apocalypse, in A.D. 95, was competent or not to write a *Gospel in A.D. 97? Was not Moses' Song the most brilliant of all his compositions, written at the age of 120, shortly before his death? And if John, in his Epistle, warned the faithful of the "many Antichrists" that sprung up towards the close of the first century, in his Epistle, 1 John ii. 18; if he warned the Asiatic Churches, by the divine command, of the errors of the Nicolaitans, twice, in his Apocalypse, ii. 6—15, can it be questioned, at the present day, whether he might not also have designed to combat the errors of Cerinthus and others, in his Gospel? Michaelis has endeavoured to prove, and with much appearance of probability, that his Gospel was also designed to confute the errors of the Gnostics and of the Sabeans (or Baptists,) who acknowledged John the Baptist as their founder; and ascribed to him a greater authority than to CHRIST; and he ingeniously remarks, that unless it had been asserted, it would have been unnecessary for the Evangelist to remark, i. 8, that "John was not the light, itself, but only bore witness to the Light." See his Introduction, Vol. III. p. 285—302.

Lardner adduces a specious argument from the Gospel itself, to prove that it was written before the destruction of Jerusalem. "Now there is ($\epsilon\sigma\tau\iota$) at Jerusalem, by the sheep market, a pool, which is called in the Hebrew tongue, Bethesda, having ($\epsilon\chi\omicron\nu\sigma\alpha$) five porches," v. 2. "St. John," says he, "does not say there was, but there is; and though the pool might remain, it could not be said, after the ruin of the city, that the five porches subsisted. Vol. VI. p. 204. But, as Michaelis justly remarks, "Authors do not always weigh their words with such exactness as to warrant this inference." And we may add, that John frequently uses the present participle in the past sense; ων, for "was," iii. 13, ix. 25, xii. 7, and εχων, for "had," Rev. iv. 7, viii. 9, ix. 17, xiii. 17, &c. with the most correct writers, ancient and modern.

* The publication of the Apocalypse, naturally led to that of the Gospel. In the former, Christ's leading character of "THE LAMB that was sacrificed from the foundation of the world," though intimated incidentally, was not expressly noticed in the three first Gospels. It was necessary, therefore, to describe "THE LAMB OF GOD, that (by his sacrifice of himself) taketh away the sins of the world," John i. 29, in his mediatorial capacity more fully.

Hence we are warranted to conclude, that the most probable dates of the canonical Gospels are,

	A. D.
1. Matthew's , about	63
2. Luke's	66
3. Mark's	67
4. John's	97

INSPIRATION.

The prevailing opinion of the primitive Fathers of the Church, as we have seen, was the plenary inspiration of all the Evangelists. Hence originated that high authority and veneration, in which they have ever been held by the orthodox, from the beginning. The doctrine of their inspiration, therefore, must not be hastily surrendered to ancient or modern infidels and heretics, making unfounded distinctions, and questioning what they cannot conceive; idly presuming to measure the depths of revelation by the scanty plummet of reason: while it equally concerns the interests of sober and rational religion, that the genuine nature, and scriptural limits of inspiration, should be carefully explained and correctly ascertained.

Its necessity in general is thus ably stated by Bishop Warburton, in his Doctrine of Grace, B. I. Ch. 5.

"The Apostles [and Evangelists] were fully gifted for the business of their mission: they worked miracles, they spake with tongues, they explained mysteries, they interpreted prophecies, they discerned the true from the false pretences to the Spirit: and all this for the temporary and occasional discharge of their ministry. Is it possible then, to suppose them to be deserted by their DIVINE ENLIGHTENER, when they sat down to the other and more important part of their work, to frame an [infallible] rule [of faith] for the lasting service of the Church? Can we believe, that THE SAME SPIRIT, who so bountifully assisted them in their assemblies, had withdrawn himself when they retired to their private oratories [or closets ?] or that when their “speech was with all power,” their writings should convey no more than the weak and fallible dictates of human knowledge?—No candid man, therefore, will be backward to conclude, that whatever powers the Apostles [and Evangelists] had, for the temporary use of their ministry, they had, in at least as large a measure, for the perpetual service of the Church.” B. I. Ch. 5.

And he represents the HOLY SPIRIT as having operated on the sacred writers, by “watching over them incessantly, but with so suspended a hand, as permitted the use, and left them to the guidance of their own faculties, while they kept clear of error; and then only interposing, when, without the Divine assistance, they would have been in danger of falling,” Ch. 7.

The sacred writers, indeed, had various sources of information besides. They had their own experience and observation for many facts which they record; and the testimony of others, who were eye-witnesses and attendants of THE ORACLE, CHRIST; and they had authentic documents of history for many more; such as the genealogies, the Roman Census, the dates of John the Baptist's ministry, &c.

In such cases inspiration would have been superfluous. Nor is it by any means necessary to suppose, that the sacred writers were, on every occasion, favoured with immediate revelations, or direct communications with heaven; but rather, that acting under the same energetic influence which guided their preaching, (“we cannot but speak what we have seen and heard,” Acts iv. 20,) they at “sundry times,” and in “divers degrees” of illumination, committed to writing, the mysterious truths of the Gospel, which had been previously revealed to them; and of which they either retained, or were gifted with an accurate recollection. Such was the Apostle John's commission to write the Apocalypse, Rev. i. 1—19, and his Gospel also, as we learn from ecclesiastical history: and such, we may presume, from analogy, was that of the other Evangelists likewise; not making a difference, in the inspiration of the Apostles, Matthew and John, and of the Disciples, Luke and Mark; their Gospels being all equally dictated by ONE and THE SAME SPIRIT, dividing severally their allotted tasks to each, according to his own good pleasure, 1 Cor. xii. 11.

Even in cases of immediate revelation, we are warranted to conclude, that the plenary inspiration, for which we contend, with the primitive Church, related rather to the substance than to the language in which it was to be delivered to the world. The great object of Divine instruction, is things, not words. The subject-matter, or whatever concerned the thoughts, was most fully communicated to them; the expression or enunciation, was left, in great measure, to themselves. This was the grand distinction between the Jewish and Christian, and the Pagan Prophets; “the spirits,” or “spiritual gifts” of the former, were “subject to the Prophets” themselves, or amenable to their controul, 1 Cor. xiv. 32; they had free agency, they might speak, or forbear, begin, or desist, when they pleased; they might even decline the task, like Jonah, and disobey the divine command*; while the latter were usually entranced, and underwent a temporary suspension of their faculties. Even the celebrated prophecies of the heathen diviner, Balaam, were delivered, contrary to his usual mode of “vision and trance, when he sought for enchantments ;” to mark their superior authority, as coming immediately from GOD himself, Numb. xxiv. 1—23.

In extraordinary cases, however, we may be assured, that the words were communicated by inspiration, as well as the matter: wherever the revelation was of such a sublime and abstruse nature, that it could not be understood by the Prophet himself; and that an improper expression might defeat the very design of the revelation, and convey an idea different from what was intended. Such were Jacob's prophecy of SHILOH; Moses' Song, or Divine Ode; Daniel's Seventy Weeks; CHRIST'S Prophecies, the Apocalyptic Prophecies, &c. Ezek. xx. 49, Dan. viii. 27, 1 Pet. i. 11.

But in ordinary cases THE SPIRIT seems to have left them at liberty to use their own expressions; this is both reasonable in itself, and conformable to the divine procedure in the whole economy of grace, which is to assist, not to supersede our natural powers; and it is rendered unquestionable by the writings themselves, which have the same characteristic differences of style that we find in other literary compositions. Sometimes also, for greater clearness, the succeeding Evangelists were allowed even to alter the original terms of prophecy. A very remarkable instance of this kind occurs in our Lord's prophecies respecting the destruction of Jerusalem; the last sign, or prognostic of which, was "when they should see the abomination of desolation, foretold by Daniel the Prophet, standing in the Holy Place," Matt. xxiv. 15. But for the benefit of those who might "read," but could not "understand" that mysterious expression, denoting the "idolatrous and desolating standards" of the Romans; the next Evangelist clearly explained its meaning—"when they should see Jerusalem surrounded by encampments," (στρατοπεδοις,) Luke xxi. 20. This deviation from OUR LORD'S prophetic expression, furnishes a sufficient voucher for Luke's inspiration: for surely otherwise he would not have dared, not only to alter the terms of the prophecy, but even to put the alteration in CHRIST'S mouth, without "the guidance" of the HOLY SPIRIT into "all the truth," or meaning thereof.

* When Samuel the Prophet communicated to Saul that he should be inspired, and turned into another man, still he advised him to act as occasion should serve, or to use his own discretion, which Saul accordingly did, 1 Sam. x. 6—16.

While we hold fast, however, the plenary inspiration of the Apostles and Evangelists, respecting the matter of their compositions, we are not bound to contend for that of every word and particle, like the superstitious Jews, for every "jot and tittle" of their Masorete Hebrew Bible; because such scrupulousness is neither reasonable nor necessary. For example, when Paul directed Timothy "to take a little wine for his stomach's sake," 1 Tim. v. 23, and "to bring the letter-case *, books, and parchments, from Troas," 2 Tim. iv. 13, we see no occasion, in such ordinary cases, for a special interposition of THE HOLY SPIRIT. And indeed, this great Apostle, elsewhere is careful to distinguish what "he spake" or wrote of himself, by "permission," from what, "by command" of the HOLY SPIRIT, 1 Cor. vi. 6. Yet even such passages, though not of equal importance with the mysterious truths, or moral and religious precepts of the Gospel, may be occasionally instructive and useful, for the regulation of our diet, and of our studies. The former recommending a prudent attention to our health, in opposition to the abstinences and mortifications of hermits and fanatics; the latter teaching us, by the example even of this most highly gifted Apostle, to whom was "expressly revealed the mystery of the Gospel" in its fullest extent, Eph. iii. 3, not to undervalue nor despise, with some illiterate enthusiasts, the adventitious aids of human learning; and who also, in addition to his masterly instructions, advised his favourite pupil, Timothy, "to attend to reading" as well as "to exhortation and doctrine," for his own improvement, as well as that of his hearers, 1 Tim. iv. 13—16.

* Φελονην, here, is improperly rendered "cloke," (as if it were corruptly put for the Latin φαινολη, Pænula.) Hesychius explains it by ἡλατηριον, (i. e. εἰλατηριον) μεμβραινον, ἢ γλωσσοκομον, "a parchment covering, or a letter-case." And Lex. Reg. MS. explains γλωσσοκομον—ενθα τα βιβλια εκειντο, "where the small books (or papers) lay."

The spiritual gifts of the writers of the NEW TESTAMENT, appear to have been higher in general than those of the OLD. To the former, inspiration is attributed, to the latter, that fuller measure of it also, called illumination. Πασα γραφη θεοπνευστος*, may more closely be rendered, "every scripture-prophecy is divinely inspired," 2 Tim. iii. 16, for this is the usual acceptance of γραφη, by OUR LORD and his Apostles, applying it to the OLD TESTAMENT, before the publication of the written GOSPEL, Luke iv. 21, xxiv. 27, John xix. 36, 37, Rom. i. 1, 2, &c. whereas, the Apostles and Evangelists were not only "inspired," Rom. viii. 23, 1 Cor. ii. 16, vii. 40, 1 Thess. iv. 8, 1 John iii. 24, Rev. i. 10, Acts ii. 4, v. 31, &c. but also "illuminated," Eph. i. 18. with "the illumination of the Gospel," 2 Cor. iv. 4—6, or 2 Tim. i. 10, "with the word of wisdom," as distinguished from "the word of knowledge," 1 Cor. xii. 8.

The curious reader may see much useful information collected on this mysterious but important subject, in Van Mildert's excellent Sermons at Boyle's Lecture, and learned Notes, Vol. II. Serm. XXIII. and Appendix, p. 85, &c. and also in Campbell's Preliminary Dissertations on the Gospels, Vol. I. p. 24, &c.

STYLE.

Though the Evangelists were "unlettered and private persons," neither trained in the schools of the synagogue, nor "scribes, doctors, nor Pharisees, who sat in Moses' seat," as public and authorized teachers, Acts iv. 13, they were by no means grossly ignorant or illiterate, as they have been misrepresented. They were well read in the OLD TESTAMENT, and well acquainted with that dialect of the Greek language in which they wrote, the Alexandrine, which was that of the Version of the Seventy Interpreters, the most generally circulated among the Hellenists, or Grecizing Jews, as distinguished from the Hebrews, who used the vernacular Syro-chaldaic dialect, Acts vi. 1. And their style, though frequently blended with Hebraisms, as was natural, bears a remarkable affinity to that of the Seven Sages, in the earliest ages of Grecian literature, which is much simpler, and less ornamented, than the polished periods of Xenophon and Plato, Æschines, and Demosthenes; as may appear from a few specimens.

* This expression is well explained by πασα προφητεια γραφης, "every prophecy of Scripture" in the excellent commentary of Peter, 2 Pet. 20, 21, who declared that in the Epistles of his brother Paul were "some things hard to be understood," which the unlearned and unstable, wrested (as they did also the other Scripture-prophecies), "to their own destruction," 2 Pet. iii. 16.

Ερωτησεις τι ο Ζευς ειη ποιων; τα μεν υψηλα ταπεινοι, τα δε ταπεινα υψοι, εφη.

“Chilo having been asked, what Jove was doing? answered, He is humbling the proud, and exalting the humble.”

Ερωτησεις ει λαθοι Θεον ανθρωπος αδικων; αλλ' ουδε διανοου-μενος, εφη.

“Thales having been asked, whether a man, while doing wrong, could escape the notice of GOD? No, said he, not even in thought.”

Ερωτησεις τι το Θειον; το μητε αρχην εχον, μητε τελευτην, εφη.

“The same having been asked, What is THE DEITY? answered, What hath neither beginning nor end.”

Ερωτησεις τι δυσκολον; εφη, το εαυτον γνωμαι· τι δε ευκολον; το αλλω υποτιθισθαι.

“The same having been asked, What is difficult? answered, To know one's-self: What is easy?—To advise another.”

Ερωτησεις τις ευδαιμων; ο το μεν σωμα υγιης, εφη, την δε ψυχην ευπαιδευτος.

“The same having been asked, Who is happy? answered, He that has a sound body, and a well educated mind.”

Ερωτησεις τι αν ποιη τον βιον αφοβον, ειπεν, ορθη συνειδησις.

“Bias having been asked, What would make life fearless? said, an upright conscience.”

Θεωρει ωσπερ εν κατοπτρω τας σαντου πραξεις, ινα τας καλας επικοσμησ, τας δε αισχρας καλυπτησ.

“Contemplate,” said he, “as in a mirror, your own actions; that you may adorn the good, and hide the bad,” &c.

These admirable sayings, in a primer size, contain a fund of curious, useful, and pleasant information, respecting the religion, morality, and politics, of the earlier and purer age of Greece, about B.C. 600, before they were spoiled and corrupted by lying oracles, vain philosophy, and democratic rage; free from the grovelling polytheism, the abandoned licentiousness, and the revolutionary principles of latter times*. It is much to be regretted, that they are not introduced into our public schools and seminaries, as an elementary class-book: they would teach, not only words, but things; and furnish an excellent preparation for the Greek Testament; and a desirable antidote against the gilded, but deleterious poison of the most admired classics, Virgil, Homer, Horace, &c.

Nor are the Hebraisms, or Oriental phrases, interspersed through the gospels, to be considered as solecisms, or barbarous modes of speech; they are equally grammatical, and much more energetic, than the feebler phrases of classic lore. You will seek in vain among them for such a magnificent amplification as this, εχαρησαν [κατα] χαραν μεγαλην σφοδρα, "They rejoiced with exceeding† great joy," Matt. ii. 10.

The genuine excellences of style are acknowledged to consist in simplicity, perspicuity and precision, brevity, energy and gravity, joined to variety and copiousness of expression; and in the combination of all these, the Evangelists will not shrink from a comparison with the most finished models of Grecian and Roman composition:

" Though deep, yet clear, though gentle, yet not dull, Strong, without rage, without o'erflowing full."

The distinguishing feature of their style, and in which they

* See the Heathen vices described in glowing colours by St. Paul, in the first chapter of his Epistle to the Romans; on which the following exhortatory address to the Greeks, of Clemens Alexandrinus, may furnish an excellent comment. Edit. 1616, p. 30.

Ταυτα ὑμων της ἡδοναζειας τα αρχετυπα, αὐται της ὑβρεως αἱ θεολογιαι, αὐται των συμπορνεουτων ὑμιν Θεων αἱ διδασκαλιαι.—Πανισκοι, και γυμναι κοραι, και μωριων εντασεις ταις γραφαις απογυμνουμενοι.—Ἡταιρικεν ὑμιν τα ωτα, πεπορνευκασιν οἱ οφθαλμοι, αἱ οφεις μεμοιχενκασι! Ω βιασαμενοι τον ανθρωπον, και το ενθεον του πλασματος ελεγχει απαρξαντες!

"These are the symbols of your voluptuousness! These your insulting theologies! These the instructions of your co-fornicating gods! your fawns and naked nymphs, and contests of satyrs, exposed in your scriptures!—Your ears are defiled, your eyes incontinent, your looks adulterous, ye debasers of manhood; devoting to disgrace the first fruits of the divine part of your frame."

† Our Bible translators consulting euphony, or the harmony of their periods, often use adjectives adverbially, as here, "exceeding," for "exceedingly," judiciously imitating the majestic compound epithets of the Greek language, in which the English is too deficient.

excel all others, is simplicity both of expression and sentiment. Simplex munditiis, "plain in neatness," is their modest garb: the sacred writers disdaining the meretricious ornaments of heathen elocution. They "spoke, and they wrote, the words of truth and soberness," not "the enticing words of man's wisdom;" that the faith of believers might stand, not "in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God." And the astonishing success of the preaching, and the writings of these unlettered and despised "Galileans," illustrated that idiomatic phrase, οὐκ ἀδυνατήσει παρὰ τῷ Θεῷ παν ῥημα. "No word, or thing, shall be impossible with GOD," Luke i. 37, borrowed from the Hebrew, Gen. xviii. 14, which would probably have puzzled Xenophon or Demosthenes. The word of GOD, though contained in "earthen vessels," was "lively and powerful," sufficient to "confound the wise and the mighty," with a heaven-taught "wisdom and mouth (or eloquence) which none of their adversaries were, or ever will be, able to gainsay or resist," fulfilling their Master's promise, Luke xxi. 15. Of all the evangelists, John is the most simple, because he was the most highly gifted.

There is, however, a marked diversity in their styles, which appears much more plainly in the originals, than as melted down and amalgamated in the menstruum of a common translation; confirming the foregoing position, that their language was in great measure their own. Thus, the phrase, denoting the reign of THE MESSIAH upon earth, "the kingdom of heaven," is peculiar to Matthew, the rest preferring "the kingdom of God." The verb ῥεω, "to say," is used by Matthew often, by Mark once, but never by either Luke or John; the synonyme, εῖρω, is used by all except Mark; and εἶρω, by all except John; ἀνακλινω, "to recline," occurs in all the gospels except John's; κατακειμαι, "to lie down," in all except Matthew's. Matthew alone applies the title Καθηγητης, "Leader," or "Teacher," to CHRIST; Luke alone, the title Δεσποτης, "Sovereign," to GOD, and Επιστατης, "President," or "Master," to CHRIST. Indeed, every one of the evangelists has many words not to be found in the rest; and that, not only where he relates new things, but also the same things, actions, or circumstances, in common with the rest.

Not only the peculiarities of their style, but the precision and copiousness of their language, are either imperfectly represented, or totally lost, in the English Bible; and that, frequently of necessity, on account of the poverty of the English, and indeed of every modern language, compared with the Greek; that most critical and philosophical of all languages, for accurately expressing the various modes of sensation and reflection.

Thus these six verbs, in the gospels, expressing various modes of speech, or conversation, λεγω, επω, φημι, ρεω, ερεω, ειρω, are all vaguely rendered in the English Testament, "to say." Three of them are so rendered in one short passage, Matt. v. 21, 22, and four of them in another, Matt. xxi. 25—27; whereas, in the original, they not only serve to diversify the style, but to give it a precision which poorer languages cannot supply.

Take another example: the word ἑταυρος, used only by Matthew, and φιλος, used by all but Mark, are indiscriminately rendered "friend;" yet there is but little affinity between their radical significations. The former properly signifies "companion," and is a term of civility addressed to indifferent persons, and even to strangers: the latter, which properly signifies "friend," implies the affection and regard due to an intimate, or a near relation. The former is correctly addressed to the envious and dissatisfied labourers in the vineyard, Matt. xx. 13; to the guest who wore not the wedding garment, Matt. xxii. 12; and by OUR LORD to the traitor Judas, in the very act of apprehending him, Matt. xxvi. 50. It is to be regretted that the respectable name of "friend," belonging to φιλος, should ever be prostituted to unworthy objects, though common use permits us to employ it in this latitude; and it may be questioned, whether the corrector rendering of ἑταυρος, "companion," in English, or "mon compagnon," would be tolerated by the usage of either language; since the former is not adopted by any English translator, and the latter only by the Geneva French. This remark may remove the surprise that some unlearned readers have expressed, how OUR LORD could condescend to adopt the insincere modes of worldly fashion, and denominate a man "friend," whom he knew to harbour the basest and most hostile intentions.

Other curious instances may be found in Campbell's excellent preliminary Dissertations on the four Gospels, Vol. I. p. 594—610.

These observations may tend to repel the charge of ambiguities of expression, objected to the evangelists, by writers of the Socinian and Unitarian schools. Many such are to be set down to the translators, as we have seen, for which the evan- gelists are not accountable. And even granting that some real ambiguities are to be found in their gospels, arising from the various senses of the same word, or the various constructions of the same sentence, this is no more than what takes place in all languages, ancient and modern; all equally tolerating and licensing, primary and secondary, literal and figurative significations of words*. And who can question, that many seeming ambiguities and difficulties, which perplex the profoundest scholars of the present day, were perfectly plain and intelligible to their countrymen and contemporaries, who were familiarized to the idiom, and well acquainted with all the oriental and foreign customs and manners to which the gospels either openly refer, or tacitly allude.

Another source of ambiguities and dissonances, in the sacred text, may and must have arisen from literal errors, that have glided occasionally into the multiplied copies of the original autographs of the evangelists, in the course of so many ages, during their wide dissemination throughout all lands. Our enemies, who deny the inspiration of the evangelists themselves, will not surely contend for the inspiration of all the successive copiers, even from one single manuscript. This, however, we may venture to assert, that the multiplicity of manuscripts from widely different quarters, and of ancient versions, furnish, by careful collation of their various readings, more abundant critical helps for forming a correct text of the sacred writers, both of the Old and New Testament, than of any other ancient writers whatsoever throughout the world. And we may assert with confidence, that the verbal inaccuracies, which, after all our pains, will and must remain in the original text, without a second inspiration of the editors, (which is not to be expected by the warmest high churchman) are trivial in themselves, not affecting any material point of faith, doctrine, or practice. They resemble motes mingling in the sun-beams.

And further, if we candidly and impartially compare the evangelists with any other writers of memoirs, or histories of a given person, or period of time, the superiority of the former, in point of consistency, will be found immense. Take, for instance, the parallel accounts of the trial of Socrates, furnished by his two favourite pupils, Plato and Xenophon. The former states, "when Socrates was commanded by the Judges to estimate his fine, [to prevent sentence of death from being passed on him] he did so, and rated it at a mina of silver; adding, that if it were thirty minæ, his friends there present, Plato, Crito, Critobulus, and Apollodorus, had engaged to be his sureties." And Eubulides agrees with Plato as to the amount, while Diogenes Laertius reckons it only five and twenty drachmæ, or a quarter of a mina. But what says Xenophon?—"Socrates neither rated it himself, nor would he suffer his friends to rate it; on the contrary, he said, that to rate it would imply a confession of guilt."

* Let the reader look into Johnson's Dictionary, and he will find, to the full, as many meanings attached to English words, as in any Lexicon to Greek.

Again, according to Plato, "Socrates declared, that he was always attended, from his youth, by a demon (or god) whose divine voice, when it came, always dissuaded him from what he was going to do, [if wrong] but never persuaded [or advised him to do what was right." Whereas Xenophon asserts, that "it signified to him beforehand, both what he ought, and what he ought not, to do. And he even urged this inspiration, as an answer to the charge of introducing strange gods." See the original passages, Newcome's Harmony, Pref. p. 4. Here are serious and irreconcilable contradictions, affecting both the character and doctrine of Socrates, equally well attested.

Take, in like manner, the four Roman historians, Polybius, Livy, Dionysius of Halicarnassus, and Dion Cassius, or four English historians, Rapin, Hume, Macaulay, and Henry; and they will be found to exhibit contradictions, glaring and irreconcilable, respecting the most important facts, institutions, and dates, within the very same periods of history.

CREDIBILITY.

The foregoing observations have, in great measure, anticipated this last head; for what can be wanting to the credibility of historians so well informed of all the facts and doctrines which they relate, from the purest sources of human and divine testimony? What other historians could ever presume to say, "We are Christ's witnesses of these things, and so is also the HOLY SPIRIT, whom GOD hath given to them that obey him;" which equally applies to their preaching, and to their writings, Acts v. 32.

And the gospels themselves furnish internal evidence of their credibility throughout, the most convincing and satisfactory, in the fairness and impartiality of their relations, respecting friends and enemies; they “nothing extenuate” respecting the former, but disclose the frailties, the imperfections, and the faults, even of the first and greatest of the apostles, Peter, James, and John, Thomas, &c.; “nor do they set down aught in malice” respecting the latter. Of all those who were concerned in the prosecution and death of CHRIST, they name only the high-priest Caiaphas, and his coadjutor Annas, the Roman procurator Pilate, and the treacherous disciple Judas, because the suppression of their names would have impaired the evidence of their history to posterity. And even these are barely mentioned without censure, and without resentment. The epithet attached to Judas, ὁ παραδους αυτον, by all the evangelists, is expressive of the simple fact, “who delivered him up,” rather than of its criminality; which would more aptly be signified by ὁ προδους αυτον, “who betrayed him,” or by προδοτης, “traitor,” as he is styled on one solitary occasion by Luke, vi. 16. Compare John xviii. 36, 37, where the verb παραδιδωμι signifies merely to “deliver up,” and is so rendered in the English Testament.

Our Lord’s biographers, while they were ready to do justice to distinguished merit, to signalize the exemplary faith of a Roman centurion, or of a Syrophenician woman, carefully avoided naming any one without necessity, of whom they had nothing to say that was not to his discredit. They direct our admiration, and our hatred, to virtues and vices, not to persons. They do nothing, they assume nothing, in their own character. In the OLD TESTAMENT, indeed, the sacred penmen were the voice of GOD to the people, and they not only exhorted and rebuked with all authority, but even delivered their own opinions without restraint or reserve. But the evangelists, like the Baptist, acted merely as deputed heralds * of CHRIST; and deeply impressed with a sense of his pre-eminence as the ORACLE and SON OF GOD, and of their own insignificance, they sink themselves in the shade, to place him in the foreground, in the most conspicuous light; they even, as it were, annihilate themselves, that JESUS may be all in all. Never could it be more truly said of any historians, that “they published not themselves, but CHRIST THE LORD ;” reporting, in singleness of heart, what was said and done by Him, and to Him, throughout the whole course of his ministry, and nothing else, without partiality or prejudice, and without disguise, “SACRIFICING TO THE TRUTH ALONE,” according to Lucian’s precept for writing history, ΜΟΝῆ ὈΥΤΕΟΝ Τῆ ΑΛΗΘΕΙΑ.

* “AS THE FATHER delegated (απεσταλκε) me [to be his representative,] (the visible IMAGE OF THE INVISIBLE GOD, Col. i. 15.) so send I (πεμπω) you [to be my heralds,]” John xx. 21. “Go ye into all the world, publish (κηρυξατε) THE GOSPEL to all the creation,” Mark xvi. 15. Such sameness of sentiment in the different Gospels, which evaporates in our translation, is truly admirable.

It now remains to trace the connection, and shew the consistency, of their memoirs in detail, by a careful comparison, and critical harmony, of the four gospels in the originals, not depending upon loose translations.

JOHN THE BAPTIST.

“THE LAW and THE PROPHETS subsisted till John,” with whom commenced THE GOSPEL dispensation, Matt. xi. 13, Luke xvi. 16, Acts i. 21, 22. With his history, therefore, Luke properly begins his gospel, as introductory to the history of CHRIST, with which Matthew had begun, supplying the chasm of his predecessor.

After a long intermission for upwards of four centuries, from Malachi, the last of the Jewish prophets, the age of miracles and prophecy revived, as was foretold by the prophets, especially Joel, ii. 28. And the annunciation of the Baptist’s birth was made from heaven to “Zechariah, a venerable priest, who, with his wife Elizabeth, were both righteous before GOD, and walked in all the ordinances of THE LORD blameless; and they had no child, because Elizabeth was barren, and they were both advanced in years,” Luke i. 5—7.

It is remarkable that this annunciation was made by the same archangel, Gabriel, who had formerly appeared to the prophet Daniel, viii. 16, ix. 21, and probably to the prophet Zechariah, ii. 1—4, and described to both so circumstantially the coming of CHRIST, his rejection by the Jews, and the final establishment of his kingdom.

While Zechariah was officiating as a priest in the temple, and offering incense upon the altar in the sanctuary, during the time of the [evening] oblation*, and the people were praying without in the temple court, the angel appeared to him, and said, "Fear not, Zechariah, thy supplication [for thy people] is heard, and thy wife Elizabeth shall bear thee a son, and thou shalt call his name John," [the grace of THE LORD] expressive of the gracious purposes of his mission, namely, 1. "to go before THE LORD in the power and spirit of Elijah," foretold by Malachi, iv. 5, resembling that illustrious prophet in his power of conversion and spirit of reproof †; 2. "to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the disobedient to the wisdom of the just," by promoting peace and harmony among his countrymen; and 3. "to make ready a people prepared for THE LORD," or prepared for the reception of THE GOSPEL, ver. 8—17.

Zechariah, however, for distrusting the performance of this gracious promise, on account of his own and his wife's advanced age, whereas the case of Abraham and Sarah, to whom a son Isaac was promised in similar circumstances, ought to have assured him, was punished in the sign that he required, and struck dumb by the angel, until the accomplishment of the promise, and the circumcision of his son, when his speech was restored to him at the naming of the child, as appointed by the angel, and he was moreover inspired to utter that admirable hymn, "praising God for the promised redemption of Israel by that Horn of Salvation, CHRIST, of the house of David, foretold by the mouth of God's holy prophets from the beginning of the world," in the blessed seed of the woman, Gen. iii. 15, and styling John a prophet of THE MOST HIGH, and a harbinger of CHRIST, ver. 18—79.

In the sixth month of the conception of Elizabeth, the same angel Gabriel was sent by God to the virgin Mary, of the house of David, who then dwelt at Nazareth, in Galilee, and was betrothed, but not yet married, to Joseph, a man of the same tribe, and he hailed, or saluted her, as "blessed among women," "the virgin" foretold by the prophet Isaiah "to conceive and bear a son, called IMMANUEL," expressive of his divinity, signifying

* This was precisely the hour, "the ninth, or third afternoon," when Gabriel formerly appeared to Daniel, ix. 24.

† See his conversion of the people of Israel from Baal, 1 Kings xviii. 21—40; his reproofs of Ahab, 1 Kings xviii. 17, 18, xxi. 20—29; of Ahaziah, 2 Kings i. 16, 17.

“GOD WITH US,” Isaiah vii. 13, 14, ix. 6, 7, whom therefore she should call by a synonymous name, JESUS (SAVIOUR).

A case so wholly unprecedented, in the providential history of mankind, as a pure virgin’s conceiving, who knew not a man, naturally excited her modest doubt. The angel, therefore, not offended thereat, as he had been with Zechariah, gave her a sign in point, namely, the conception of her heretofore barren and aged cousin Elizabeth, who was now advanced in the sixth month of her pregnancy, assuring her, in the language of THE LORD formerly to Sarah, Gen. xviii. 14, that nothing is impossible with God.

Accordingly, the pious and holy virgin believed, and expressed her belief. “Lo, the handmaid of the Lord, be it unto me according to thy oracular word (οηµα.)”

Anxious to learn the accomplishment of the sign, “she arose in those days, and went with haste to the hill country of Judea, in order to visit her cousin Elizabeth,” who lived at *Hebron, according to tradition, where she received full confirmation of her faith; for Elizabeth, to whom the mystery of Mary’s conception had been revealed likewise, immediately greeted her, by inspiration, with the angel’s salutation, as “blessed among women,” and “blessed the fruit of her womb,” with an acknowledgment of her own inferiority; since the mother of HER LORD (CHRIST) had thus condescended to visit her, and giving the fullest proof of her own pregnancy, by declaring that no sooner had the voice of Mary’s salutation sounded in her ears, than “the babe leaped in her womb for joy.”

On this decisive evidence, the enraptured Mary also gave full expression to all her mingled emotions of joy, gratitude, humility, and reliance on God’s mercies, not only to herself, but unto all those that fear him, “to generations of generations,” or to the remotest ages, in that admirable hymn, which so strongly resembles, and furnishes the finest commentary on Hannah’s Hymn, 1 Sam. ii. 1—10, in which the BLESSED SEED was first celebrated, and by a woman, under the title of THE MESSIAH, CHRIST, (“ANOINTED,”) or “KING OF ISRAEL,” or king of those “true Israelites, in whom there is no guile,” John i. 48—50; Matt. ii. 6; for “all are not Israel, that are of [or called] Israel," Rom. ix. 6, but only "the Israel of GOD," Gal. vi. 16.

* Hebron was allotted to Aaron’s family in Joshua’s days, xxi. 11. It was near four-score miles from Nazareth.

And Mary abode there about three months, till near the time of Elizabeth's delivery, and then returned to her own house, Luke i. 26—56.

Mary, on her return, "being found with child of THE HOLY GHOST," perhaps, communicated the cause to Joseph, who could not easily give credence to such an improbable account; but "being a just man," and therefore not willing to marry an unchaste woman, and, at the same time, a good-natured man, "and not willing to expose her, was minded to divorce her" upon the former account, but "privily" upon the latter. "But while he thought of these things," doing nothing rashly in so extraordinary a case, "an angel of THE LORD (probably the same Gabriel,) appeared to him in a dream, and said, Joseph, son of David, fear not to take unto thee Mary, thy [betrothed] wife, for what is conceived in her is of the HOLY GHOST, and she shall bear a son, and thou shalt call his name JESUS, for he shall save his people from their sins;" thus repeating the substance of his annunciation to Mary, and plainly alluding to the same prophecy of Isaiah, vii. 13, 14, which the evangelist declares was expressly fulfilled on this occasion.

In obedience to the divine command, the pious Joseph now "took home his wife, but knew her not until she had borne her first-born son, and he called his name JESUS," Matt. i. 18—25.

Thus, by the mysterious dispensation of Heaven, and fulfilment of primæval prophecy, was JESUS born solely of a woman, "not abhorring the virgin's womb," and yet born in wedlock, not to give occasion to the enemies of the Lord to blaspheme, or injure her fair character by the tongue of slander. The mystery, however, seems to have been confined to Mary herself, her husband, and two chosen friends, until the time that it was necessary to be divulged, after OUR LORD'S resurrection, and the foundation of his Church, when he had approved himself "the SON OF GOD with power," by his stupendous and appropriate miracles as the MESSIAH, which, therefore, reflected back again full credit upon the miraculous circumstances of his conception and birth as THE SON OF MAN also.

Wishing to enhance the sanctity of the blessed virgin, the Church of Rome, and several protestant divines, maintain that she never cohabited with her husband, but the reverse seems to be more agreeable to the particle ἕως οὗ, “until,” and to the natural construction of the passage, “he knew her not,” whilst she was with child, out of reverence to the sacred burden, “until,” &c. That JESUS, however, was her “first-born,” and her only child, is the prevailing opinion. OUR LORD’S brothers and sisters, indeed, are noticed in Scripture, Matt. xiii. 55, 56, but they were his cousin-germans, the children of Mary, his mother’s sister, the wife of Cleophas, and the mother of James and Joses, John xix. 25, Matt. xxvii. 5, for James, the first bishop of Jerusalem, is called “the LORD’S brother,” Gal. i. 19, and also by *Josephus, according to the usual latitude of signification attached to this word in the OLD TESTAMENT, including nephews, cousin-germans, and even remoter relatives. Thus Lot, “Abraham’s brother,” was his nephew, Gen. xiii. 8, as being the son of his brother, Gen. xii. 5, “the brethren of Ahaziah” were his cousin-germans, 2 Kings x. 13, &c. And when OUR LORD, on the cross, recommended his mother to the care and protection of his beloved disciple John, and said to her, “behold thy son,” John xix. 25, we may reasonably collect that she had no other children of her own to support her.

THE GENEALOGIES OF CHRIST.

There are two distinct genealogies given in the introductions of Matthew’s and Luke’s Gospels: the former, principally designed for the Jews, traces his pedigree as the promised seed, downwards, from Abraham to David; and from him, through Solomon’s line, to Jacob, the father of Joseph, who was the reputed or legal father of CHRIST, Matt. i. 1—16. The latter, designed for the Gentiles also, traces it upwards, from Heli, the father of Mary, to David, through his son Nathan’s line, and from David to Abraham, concurring with the former, and from Abraham up to Adam, who was the immediate “Son of God,” born without father or mother †, Luke iii. 23—38.

That Luke gives the pedigree of Mary, the real mother of CHRIST, may be collected from the following reasons:—

* Josephus calls him, τον αδελφον Ιησου του λεγομενου Χριστου, Ιακωβος ονομα αυτου. “The brother of Jesus who was called Christ, his name was James.” Antiq. XX, 8, 1.

† Ego illis potius assentio qui “filium Dei,” dici putant “Adamum,” creationis jure, atque eo gradu attolli animos ad credendam Christi genituram. Nam qui ex terra, sine patre, hominem primum potuit producere, idem efficere potuit ut CHRISTUS ex virgine sine patre nasceretur. Grot.

1. The angel Gabriel, at the annunciation, told the virgin, that "GOD would give her divine Son the throne of his father David," Luke i. 32; and this was necessary to be proved, by her genealogy, afterwards.

2. Mary is called by the Jews, בת עלי, "the daughter of Eli," Lightfoot on Luke iii. 23; and by the early Christian writers, "the daughter of Joakim and Anna." But Joakim and Eliakim (as being derived from the names of God, יהוה, Iahoh, and אל, Æl,) are sometimes interchanged, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 4. Eli, therefore, or Heli, is the abridgment of Eliakim. Nor is it of any consequence that the Rabbins call him עלי, instead of אלי, the aspirates Aleph and Ain being frequently interchanged.

3. A similar case in point occurs elsewhere in the genealogy. After the Babylonish captivity, the two lines of Solomon and Nathan, the sons of David, unite in the generations of Salathiel and Zorobabel, and thence diverge again in the sons of the latter, Abiud and Resa. Hence, as Salathiel in Matthew, was the son of Jechoniah, or Jehoiachin, who was carried away into captivity by Nebuchadnezzar, so in Luke Salathiel must have been the grandson of Neri, by his mother's side*.

4. The evangelist himself has critically distinguished the real from the legal genealogy, by a parenthetical remark: Ἰησους—ων (ὡς νομιζετο, υἱος Ἰωσηφ, [ἀλλ' οὐτως]) υἱος του Ἡλι. "JESUS—being (as was reputed, the son of Joseph, [but in reality]) the son of Heli," or his grandson by the mother's side; for so should the ellipsis involved in the parenthesis be supplied.

5. It has been objected, that Elizabeth being "of the daughters of Aaron," Luke i. 5, "Mary, her cousin," verse 36, must have been so too. And so Gregory Nazianzen states:

— εκ Μαρίας
 Δημιδης. Μαριαμ γαρ ἀφ' αἵματος ηεν Ααρων, Μαρτυς δ' αγγελος ἀμμιν.

— " [CHRIST was born] of Mary,
 A daughter of Levi. For the angel is our witness,
 That she was of the blood of Aaron."

* Doctor Barret, in his curious fac-simile of a most ancient fragment of Matthew's Gospel, found in the library of Trinity College, Dublin, published 1801, has brought some satisfactory arguments to prove, that the wife of Jechoniah, and the mother of Salathiel, was the celebrated Susanna, the subject of the apocryphal book. See his Prolegomena, p. 38, 39.

But the families of Levi and Judah were early intermixed, for Aaron himself married Elishaba, the daughter of Amminadab, and sister of Naashon, prince of Judah, Exod. vi. 20; Numb. i. 7; and Jeremiah, foretelling the coming of CHRIST, connects him with "the seed of David, and the Levites," as king and priest, by descent from both, Jer. xxxiii. 17—24. So it was understood by the Testament of the twelve patriarchs; "FOR THE LORD shall raise up out of Levi a high-priest, and out of Judah a king, GOD AND MAN," Simeon, § 7. "Honour Judah and Levi, for out of them shall arise to you THE LAMB OF GOD, by grace, saving all the Gentiles and Israel," Joseph, § 19. See Barret, Proleg. p. 42, and Lardner, Vol. II. p. 330, 331. Mary, therefore, was "the virgin" chosen by GOD out of both tribes, Isa. vii. 14; Mal. ii. 4, iii. 3.

It is remarkable, that in the whole pedigree, only four women are named, and these either heathen, or of bad character: "Thamar," who had an incestuous commerce with her father-in-law, Judah; "Rahab, the harlot," married to Salmon, prince of Judah; "Ruth, the Moabitess," who enticed Boaz to marry her; and "Bathsheba," the adulteress, the wife of David. These women seem to have been designedly introduced, to repress the pride and arrogance of the *Jews, boasting that they were "Abraham's seed," "not born of fornication," or impure heathen mixture, John viii. 33—41, and deriving their descent from the four celebrated matrons, Sarah, Rebecca, Rachel, and Leah, as may be seen in the Jerusalem Targum, on Gen. xlix. 26; Numb. xxiii. 9; Deut. xxxiii. 15; and in Isa. li. 2.

It may also be observed, that in three instances, the "brethren" are mentioned, of Judah, of Pharez, and of Jechoniah, or Jehoiachin; to signify, that the younger are often preferred to the elder in the divine counsels. See Wetstein's Notes.

These ancient genealogies have been handed down to us in rather an imperfect state; and from the collations of Wetstein and Griesbach, it appears, that there is a wonderful diversity, both in the names of the several generations, and in the order of some, occurring in the manuscripts now extant. Neither do the numbers of the generations in our present editions correspond to those recorded by the early Christian writers, Irenæus, Africanus, Ambrosius, Augustin, &c. who reckon the amount of Luke's, seventy-two or seventy; whereas the present amount is seventy-seven; proving, that there must have been some interpolations since their time. That of the second Cainan we know to be such, Luke iii. 36. See Vol. I. p. 289, &c.

* Ezekiel formerly repressed this arrogance: "Thy birth and nativity is of the land of Canaan; thy father was an Amorite, and thy mother a Hittite," xvi. 3. See Cruden's Concordance, voce "birth."

Hence the learned Grotius, Newcome, Barret, &c. have laboured to correct the two genealogies, and to harmonize them together, by supplying deficiencies in the one, and retrenching interpolations in the other, by the help of philological criticism, founded upon similitudes, or different descriptions of names, in the manuscripts, and in the first book of Chronicles.

Indeed, we have reason to think, with Wetstein, that of the two evangelists, Matthew did not propose to give a full pedigree of OUR LORD, but only the most remarkable among his ancestors. This is evident, from his three series of fourteen generations each, which certainly are each of them deficient*.

1. From Abraham to David inclusively, both evangelists agree, in reckoning only fourteen generations, whereas there must have been eighteen at least. For, from the birth of Abraham, B.C. 2153, to the birth of Salmon, the son of Naashon by Rahab, which, at the earliest, we may date B.C. 1607, (the year after the destruction of Jericho,) there was an interval of 546 years, which, divided by nine, the number of intermediate generations, gives near sixty-one years, the average length of a generation. Again, from the birth of Salmon, B.C. 1607, to the birth of Solomon, about B.C. 1048, was a still greater interval of 559 years, which, divided by five, the recorded number of intermediate generations, gives near 112 years for the enormous average; but if divided by nine, (the same number as before) gives an average of sixty-two years. We may then be confident, that there were not less than nine generations also in the latter part, or than eighteen generations in the whole.

And this is confirmed by the pedigrees of Heman, Asaph, and Ethan, the singers, and Zadok, the priest, of the tribe of Levi, compared with the synchronizing or collateral pedigree of David, their contemporary, of the tribe of Judah, which consisted of fifteen generations from *Levi, and consequently of eighteen generations from Abraham, inclusively.

* That Matthew took his genealogy from some public document, or record, has been ingeniously collected by Michaelis, from the expression Ἰησοῦς, ὁ λεγομενος Χριστος, "JESUS, who is called CHRIST," i. 16, which is not likely to have been the evangelist's. Townson, before him, made the same remark, Vol. I. p. lv.

The four deficient generations should be introduced between Obed, with whom the book of Ruth ends, and Jesse, the father of David, iv. 17.

2. From Solomon to Jechoniah, or Jehoiachin, and the Babylonish captivity, are counted only fourteen generations, inclusively, in Matthew, whereas there were eighteen; for Ahaziah, Joash, and Amaziah, ought to be inserted after Joram, and Jehoiakim after Josiah. These seem to have been omitted designedly.

In Luke's genealogy there are twenty generations from Nathan to Neri, inclusively. Doctor Barret reduces them to eighteen, by rejecting, as interpolations, the third and fourth, Mainan and Melea, which are omitted in some ancient manuscripts. This would equalize both.

3. From Salathiel to JESUS, inclusively, are fourteen gene-

* These pedigrees may be collected thus:—

I.	II.	III.	IV.	V.
1. Levi .	1. Levi .	1. Levi .	1. Levi .	1. Judah .
2. Gershom .	2. Merari .	2. Kohath .	2. Kohath .	2. Pharez .
3. Jahath .	3. Mushi .	3. Izhar .	3. Amram .	3. Hezron .
4. Shimei .	4. Mahli .	4. Korah .	4. Aaron .	4. Ram or Aram .
5. Zimmah .	5. Shamar .	5. Ebiasaph .	5. Eleazar .	5. Aminadab .
6. Ethan .	6. Bani .	6. Assir .	6. Phineas .	6. Naashon .
7. Adaiah .	7. Amzi .	7. Elkanah .	7. Abishua .	7. Salmon .
8. Zerah .	8. Ililkiah .	8. Zuph .	8. Bukki .	8. Boaz .
9. Ethni .	9. Amaziah .	9. Toah .	9. Uzzi .	9. Obed .
10. Malchiah .	10. Hashabiah .	10. Eliel .	10. Zeraiah .	10. —
11. Baaseiah .	11. Malluch .	11. Jeroham .	11. Meraioth .	11. —
12. Michael .	12. Abdi .	12. Elkanah .	12. [Azariah]	12. —
13. Shimea .	13. Kishi .	13. Samuel .	13. Amariah .	13. —
14. Barachiah .	14. Ethan .	14. Joel .	14. Ahitub .	14. Jesse .
15. Asaph .		15. Heman .	15. Zadok .	15. David .
1 Chron. vi. 39—43.	1 Chron. vi. 44—47.	1 Chron. vi. 33—38.	1 Chron. vi. 4—8.	Ruth iv. 18—22.
		1 Sam. viii. 2.	Ezra vii. 2—5.	Matt. i. 3—6. Luke iii. 31—33.

We are warranted, therefore, from the three pedigrees of Asaph, Heman, and Zadok, to reckon fifteen generations in that of David, which, added to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, gives eighteen in all. In Heman's, some manifest interpolations are omitted, between 6. Assir and 7. Elkanah, which are retrenched, as intimating repetitions, and as greatly enhancing the number of generations beyond those of the parallel lists. These interpolations, however, rather strengthen the opinion, commonly received, by reckoning more than fifteen.

rations in Matthew, and twenty-two in Luke. The former are too few, the latter too many; for if we suppose Salathiel (the first of the third class in both pedigrees) to have been born B.C. 595, two years after the captivity of his father Jechoniah, or Jehoiachin, who was then eighteen years old, and married at the time, 2 Kings xxiv. 8—15, and subtract therefrom, B.C. 5, the date of the Nativity, and divide the difference, 590 years, by the intermediate number of generations, thirteen in Matthew, and twenty-one in Luke, the former will give the average of generations, above forty-five years, too high for that period, the latter, twenty-eight years, rather too low. But if we assume eighteen generations in both, the quotient, near thirty-three years, approximates to the regular standard of generations. See Vol. I. p. 80. So that we are warranted, by the laws of nature, to add five generations to Matthew's numbers, and subtract three from Luke's, which will bring both to eighteen. This correction is independent of any precarious philological criticism, which we leave to determine, where the five generations are to be inserted in Matthew, and the three to be subtracted in Luke, for we have no scriptural data to assist us in this third series, as in the two foregoing.

4. The three joint series, therefore, so corrected, at eighteen generations a-piece, give fifty-four generations; to which, if we add the first nineteen in Luke's genealogy, from Adam to Abraham, exclusively, the sum seventy-three will give the number of generations from Adam to CHRIST, or seventy-two between Adam and CHRIST, which harmonizes sufficiently with the primitive statement of Irenæus, &c.

If it be asked why the interpolations are confined to Luke's genealogy? it may be answered, that in Matthew's, the whole number of generations being limited to forty-two, any interpolation could be easily detected; whereas in Luke's, the whole number not being specified, interpolations could not be detected, but by comparison with more correct copies. And perhaps some of the early Christians might have wished to include their own ancestors in the genealogy of CHRIST.

THE ROMAN ENROLLMENT, AND TAXING.

About the birth of John the Baptist, Augustus Cæsar issued a decree, that *all the land [of Judea and Galilee, under Herod's dominion] should be enrolled, [preparatory to a census, assessment, or taxing] Luke ii. 1. The occasion of this decree may be thus collected from Josephus.

In the latter end of Herod's reign, some time before he put his sons Alexander and Aristobulus to death, he had a quarrel with Obodas, king of Arabia, and Syllæus, his prime minister. He had lent Obodas sixty talents, for a limited time, and was disappointed of the stipulated payment; and Syllæus had harboured some banditti, who had fled to him for shelter, from Herod's province of Trachonitis, having been offended with Herod for refusing to let his sister Salome marry him, as her third husband, some time before. Herod complained of both these wrongs to the Roman presidents of Syria, Saturninus, and Volumnius, who decreed that the money should be repaid to Herod in a month's time, and the banditti that should be found in Arabia given up to him.

Before the expiration of the month, Syllæus went to Rome, without troubling himself about the performance. Herod, therefore, by the permission of Saturninus and Volumnius, marched an army into Arabia, to redress himself; defeated the banditti, and also a party of Arabs, under Nasebus, who came to their assistance, in which Nasebus, and about five and twenty of his men, were killed.

Intelligence of these proceedings having quickly reached Rome, Syllæus made his complaint to the emperor, drest in mourning, alleging that Herod had destroyed Nasebus, with 2500 of the chief of the Arabs, and plundered the country. Provoked at this, Augustus only enquired of his own, and Herod's

* Απογραφεσθαι πασαν την οικουμενην. Here, ἡ οικουμενη, does not signify "the world," as it is rendered in the English Bible, or "the Roman empire," as generally understood, but "the inhabited land" of Palestine, as contrasted with the uninhabited land, or desert, Exod. xvi. 35, which is there called, την οικουμενην, by the Septuagint; and this was its proper signification in the earlier Greek classics, though in the later, Plutarch, &c. it was applied to the Roman empire. Thus Xenophon observes, Οικουμενη μεν γαρ χωρα πολλου αξιον κτημα· ερημη δ' ανθρωπων ουσα, ερημη και αγαθων γιγνεται. "For an inhabited country, indeed, is an acquisition worth much; but when destitute of inhabitants, it is destitute of value also." Cyropæd. 4.

friends who were then at Rome, whether Herod had marched an army into Arabia? And when they could not deny the fact, without further enquiry why he had done so, or for what provocation, the emperor wrote Herod a very angry letter, of which the substance was, that “having hitherto treated him as a friend, he would now treat him as a subject.” And when Herod sent an embassy to clear himself, the emperor repeatedly refused to hear them, and so Herod was forced to submit to all the injuries (παράνομιαι) offered to him. Ant. xvi. 9.

The chief of these was the degrading his kingdom to a Roman province. For soon after, Josephus incidentally mentions, that “the whole nation of the Jews took an oath of fidelity to Cæsar and the king jointly, except six thousand of the Pharisees, who, through their hostility to the regal government, refused to take it, and were fined for their refusal by the king; but that the wife of his brother, Pheroras, paid the fine for them.” Ant. xvii. 2, 6. This was shortly before the death of Pheroras, and coincides therefore with the time of this decree of enrollment; and the oath was administered at the same time, according to the usage of the Roman Census, in which a return of persons, ages, and properties, was required to be made upon oath, under penalty of confiscation of the goods of the delinquents, as we learn from Ulpian. And the reason for registering ages was, that among the Syrians, males from fourteen years of age, and females from twelve, until their sixty-fifth year, were subject to a capitation, or poll-tax, by the Roman law. This was two drachmas a head, half a stater, or about fifteen pence of our currency. See the case of OUR LORD and Peter afterwards, where “a stater,” the amount of both, was procured by a miracle, Matt. xvii. 24—27.

Cyrenius, a Roman senator and procurator, or collector of the emperor’s revenue, was employed to make the enrollment. This we learn from the joint testimony of Justin Martyr, Julian the apostate, and Eusebius; when Saturninus was president of Syria, to whom it is attributed by Tertullian, and in the thirty-third year of Herod’s reign, or B.C. 5, the year of Christ’s birth, according to *Eusebius.

* Κωμη (Βηθλεεμ) τις εστιν εν τη χωρα Ιουδαιων, απεχουσα σταδιους τριακοντα πεντε Ιεροσολυμων, εν η εγεννηθη Ιησους Χριστος, ως και μαθειν δυνασθε εκ των απογραφων των γενομενων επι Κυρηνιου του υμετερου εν Ιουδαια πρωτου γενομενου επιτροπου. Justin Martyr.

Cyrenius, whom Tacitus calls Quirinius, and describes as impiger militiæ et acribus ministeriis, “an active soldier and a rigid commissioner,” was well qualified for an employment so odious to Herod, and his subjects; and probably came to execute the decree with an armed force. Without delay, therefore, “all (the inhabitants) went to be enrolled (απογραφεισθαι) each to his own city. And Joseph also went up out of Galilee, from the city of Nazareth, into Judea, to Bethlehem, David’s city, (because he was of the house and lineage of David) to enroll himself (απογραφασθαι) with Mary, his betrothed wife, being great with child. And it came to pass, while they were there, the days of her delivery were accomplished, and she bore her first-born son, and swathed him, and laid him in a manger, because there was no room for them in the inn,” Luke ii. 3—7.

By the wary policy of Roman jurisprudence, to prevent insurrections, and to expedite the business, all were required to repair to their own cities. Even in Italy, the consular edict commanded the Latin citizens “not to be enrolled at Rome, but all in their own cities.” And this precaution was still more necessary in turbulent provinces, like Judea and Galilee. And the decree was peremptory, and admitted of no delay. Joseph therefore was obliged to go with Mary, notwithstanding her advanced state of pregnancy, to his family town, Bethlehem, where the SAVIOUR OF THE WORLD was born in a stable, and laid in a manger!

Thus did “the fierceness of man,” or the anger of Augustus towards Herod, “turn to the praise of GOD,” and to the fulfilment of prophecy, that CHRIST should be born at Bethlehem, (Micah v. 2.) so far from his mother’s residence; and that as SHILOH (the APOSTLE) he should come into the world when “the sceptre had departed from Judah,” (Gen. xlix. 10.) for Judea was made a Roman province by the introduction of a Roman enrollment therein. Julian, the apostate, unwittingly objected this to CHRIST’S claim:

“This JESUS, proclaimed by you [Christians] was one of Cæsar’s subjects. If ye disbelieve, I will prove it presently; or rather let it be told now; ye say then yourselves that he was enrolled, with his father and mother, in the time of Cyrenius *.”

* ‘Ο παρ’ ἡμιν κηρυττομενος Ἰησους εἰς ἡν των Καισαρος ὑπηκων· εἰ δε ἀπιστεῖτε, μικρον ὕστερον ἀποδειξω, μαλλον δὴ ἤδη λεγεσθω· φατε μεν τοι αὐτον ἀπο-

At the present juncture, however, the Census proceeded no farther than the first act of the enrollment of persons in the Roman registers, (called tabulæ in Latin, and απογραφαι in Greek.) And to these registers Tertullian, and the early Fathers, often appeal for evidence of the lineal descent of JESUS from David, as foretold of CHRIST. For Herod sent his trusty minister, Nicholas of Damascus, to Rome; who, by his address and presents, found means to undeceive and mollify the emperor, by stating the matter truly. Augustus, therefore, was reconciled to Herod, and stopped the assessment or taxing, (αποτιμησις or απογραφη.) and punished Syllæus with death, for this and other misdemeanors, as we collect from Josephus, Ant. XVI. 9, 4, x. 8, 9.

Although the Census was now suspended, it was afterwards carried into effect, upon the deposal and banishment of Archelaus, the son and successor of Herod, for mal-administration, by Augustus, upon the complaint of the Jews, weary of the tyranny of Herod's family, and requesting that Judea might be made a Roman province. Upon that occasion, the trusty Cyrenius was sent again, as president of Syria, with an armed force, to confiscate the property of Archelaus, and to complete the Census; which was submitted to by the nation, now, without hesitation, as formerly they had submitted to the enrollment, principally by the advice and authority of Joazar, the high priest, whose sister, the second Mariamne, Herod had married, some time before his appointment. Joazar, indeed, was deposed on Herod's death, by Archelaus, as inimical to his interest; and, therefore, he again recommended the measure of the assessment, with a view, perhaps, to his own restoration, in which he was not disappointed, for Cyrenius made him high priest again; though soon after he was obliged to depose him, on account of the odium he had incurred, as a partizan of the Romans, when the insurrection of Judas of Galilee broke out, in “the days of the taxing,” Acts v. 37, in which, though “Judas γραψασθαι, μετα του πατρος και της μητρος, επι Κυρηνιου. Julian. apud Cyri. Lib. VI. p. 213, ed. Spanhem.

Εν τῷ λγ Ἡρωδου Κυρηνιος, απο της συγκλητου βουλης απεσταλμενος εις την Ιουδαιαν απογραφας εποιησατο των ουσιων και των οικητηρων. Euseb. Hist. Eccl.

Sed et census, constat, actos sub Augusto, nunc in Judea, per Sentium Saturninum: apud quas genus ejus (CHRISTI) inquirere potuissent. Tertullian de Carne Christi, et advers. Marcion. Here Tertullian ascribes to the principal, Saturninus, what was done by the deputy, Cyrenius.

was slain, and his adherents dispersed," of whom the chief was Sadok, a Pharisee, yet his principles took root among "the zealots *," as they called themselves; namely, that payment of tribute to the Romans, was downright slavery, and unlawful in itself, as repugnant to the theocracy, since GOD was their only king. Hence, the doubt expressed by the tax gatherers in Galilee, whether JESUS, as the reputed CHRIST, or true king of Israel, would pay the Roman tax; which he did, by a miracle; and the insidious question proposed to CHRIST afterwards, by the Pharisees and Herodians conjointly, "whether it was lawful, or not, to pay tribute to Cæsar?" which he evaded with such admirable address, and retorted on the hypocritical proposers.

The establishment of the assessment, or taxing, afterwards, which was necessary to complete the Roman Census, when Archelaus was deposed and banished, and his property confiscated, is stated by the Evangelist in the following parenthetical remark, which may be more correctly written, and rendered thus:

(Αυτη ἡ απογραφή πρώτη εγενετο ἡγεμονευοντος της Συριας Κυρηνιου.)

("The taxing itself was first made while Cyrenius was president of Syria.")

In all the printed editions the first word is aspirated, αὐτη, "this," as if it were the feminine of οὗτος. But this materially injures the sense, as if the enrollment decreed in the first verse, was the same as this taxing in the second; whereas there was an interval of eleven years, as we have seen, between the two. But in the most ancient manuscripts, written in uncials, or in capitals, without points or accents, the word is ambiguous; and may also be unaspirated, αυτη, "self," the feminine of αυτος. And both occur together in this same chapter, where the Evangelist, speaking of Anna the prophetess, says και αυτη, αυτη τη ωρα επιστασα, "And this [woman] coming in at the instant itself," or at "the self same hour," &c. Luke ii. 38, where the phraseology is precisely the same; and repeatedly occurs elsewhere. Nor can it justly be objected, that the singular, απογραφή, "assessment," or "taxing," is used in a different sense from the plural, απογραφαι, "Registers," or "Tables:" a similar distinction was noticed before, between ανατολη, “the rising” of a star, and ανατολαι, “the east,” Matt. ii. 1, 2. See Vol. I. p. 73.

* Among OUR LORD'S disciples was "Simon the Zealot," Luke vi. 15, Acts i. 13.

The ordinal πρωτη, “first,” is here understood adverbially*, and connected with the verb εγενετο, “was made,” or “took effect †,” signifying that the taxing itself first took effect, or was carried into execution, under the presidency of Cyrenius, or Quirinius; which had been suspended from the time of his procuratorship.

By this easy and obvious emendation and construction, the Evangelist is critically reconciled with the varying accounts of Josephus, Justin Martyr, and Tertullian; and an historical difficulty, satisfactorily solved, which has hitherto set criticism at defiance. See Lardner's elaborate dissertation on the subject, considerably longer than Luke's whole Gospel, which offers only a choice of difficulties to the reader. Vol. I. p. 248—329.

VISITS OF THE JEWISH SHEPHERDS, AND OF THE PARTHIAN MAGI, TO CHRIST.

These are classed together, because they probably originated from a divine annunciation to both at the same time, to render homage to the New Born MESSIAH; who was destined, indeed, to be “a light to lighten the Gentiles, and a glory to his people Israel.”

On the night of the Nativity, as some pious shepherds near Bethlehem were keeping watch over their flocks by night, in the field, Lo, an Angel of THE LORD [suddenly] came upon them, and a glory of the Lord shone round about them, and they were sore afraid. And the Angel said unto them, Be not afraid, for lo, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all the people [of Israel:] for unto you, is born this day, in [Bethlehem,] the city of David, a SAVIOUR, which is CHRIST THE LORD. And this shall be a sign unto you: ye shall find the Babe swathed, lying in the manger [of the inn.] And suddenly, there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host, praising GOD and saying, Glory in the highest [heavens] to GOD: and on earth peace, good will toward men *

* That πρωτη cannot be understood as an adjective, connected with απογραφη, as rendered by Campbell, Newcome, Wakefield, “this first register,” appears from the want of the article, as in the usual form, αυτη η αναστασις η πρωτη. This is “the first resurrection,” Rev. xx. 5, as acutely observed by Middleton. On the Greek Article, p. 304, 305.

† The verb γινομαι bears this sense in several places, Matt. v. 18, vi. 10, xviii. 19, xxii. 42, 1 Cor. xv. 54, &c. See Campbell's Note.

“And it came to pass, as the angels were departing from them into the heaven, [or sky,] the shepherds said to each other, Let us now go even unto Bethlehem, and see this thing that hath been done, which THE LORD hath made known unto us. And they went, with haste, and found Mary and Joseph, and the Babe lying in the manger,” Luke ii. 8—16.

Bethlehem, about six miles south of Jerusalem, is seated on the utmost ridge of a hill, stretching east and west, in a happy soil, and most delicate prospect. At the east side of the city is shewn a grotto, hewn out of the living rock, which was em-

* The concise and simple sublimity of this circumstantial and picturesque narrative, in which nothing is redundant, nothing deficient, is above all praise. It furnishes a perfect model of historical composition. Here the whole solemn scene is, in a manner, represented to our view, by the liveliness and natural grandeur of the description. We see the terror of the shepherds accounted for, by the suddenness and the manner of the angel's approach, επιστη, “he came upon them,” by surprise, and the effect of this apparition is expressed, by one of those oriental amplifications, too bold and forcible for the tameness of European language, εφοβηθησαν φοβον μεγαν, “they were afraid with great fear,” or, as rendered in the English Bible, “they were sore afraid.” And then, after the angel had done speaking, the sudden manifestation of the celestial choir, (which might have amazed the shepherds too much, and distracted their attention before,) completes the grandeur of the scene; ending with that inimitable doxology of “Glory to God,” for this gracious dispensation of divine love, or good will to mankind; in which “God's mercy, and his truth or justice, met together” in unison; “His righteousness and the peace of fallen man, which seemed to be at variance, kissed each other,” in token of the fondest reconciliation, by the all-sufficient atonement of CHRIST, “becoming flesh,” to die for our sakes, and in our stead! A mystery, worthy to be celebrated by the tongues of angels and men, in and throughout the universe.

Its consummate excellence, indeed, will more strikingly appear, by comparison with the following paraphrase of the eloquent Bossuet, under the equal disadvantage of a literal translation:

“Some shepherds, who passed the night with their flocks in the fields adjacent, saw, at the same time, an angel who affrighted them, at first, by a very extraordinary light, with which he environed them; but he reassured them incontinently, by informing them of the news which was the occasion of this prodigy. He even told them by what marks they might know THE SAVIOUR that was born to them. And, at that instant, they heard in the air, a concert of many voices, like that of the angel, celebrating the glory of GOD in the heavens, and the peace which he had now given to men upon earth.” La vie de Jesus Christ. Tom. I. p. 28. Paris, 1757.

This is full as long as the original, and independently of its tameness and insipidity, omitting the angel's speech entirely, it omits several of the most important and characteristic circumstances; as the mode of the angel's appearance, the true Israelites who were to be saved, the reference to Micah's prophecy of Bethlehem, as the birth place of the MESSIAH, &c.

ployed for a stable at that time, and on the south side you descend, by three steps, into a lesser grotto, on the west side of which is a manger, hewn out in a concave, about two feet high from the floor, and a little way hollowed within, wherein they say that our new-born SAVIOUR was laid by the Virgin. In the bottom of this manger, and just in the middle, a round serpentine is set, to denote the place where he lay. On the opposite side of the grotto there is a bench in the rocks, not unlike an altar, where the Magi of the east, that were conducted hither by the star, disposed, as they say, of their presents. The empress Helena, the mother of Constantine the Great, erected a magnificent temple here, called St. Mary's of Bethlehem, now gone to decay. See Sandys, p. 136—141, who gives drawings of the temple, &c.

II. This same “glory of THE LORD,” or miraculous light, which “shone round about the shepherds,” and was therefore probably of a globular form, and of considerable diameter, might have appeared on the same night, and at the same time, to some pious *Magi of the Parthian empire, diminished, at the distance of several hundred miles, to the size of a star, or uncommonly bright meteor, and rising in its ascent from the shepherds, in the south-west quarter of the horizon, an unusual region, which must have strongly attracted their notice, and excited their attention. From its situation, they might have been led to conceive, that this was “the star to rise out of Jacob, and the sceptre from Israel,” foretold by the celebrated Chaldean diviner, and probably their ancestor, Balaam, Numb. xxiv. 17, and that it denoted THE MESSIAH, whose coming was foretold in the famous prophecy of the seventy weeks, by Daniel their archimagus, Dan. ii. 48, ix. 25. See Vol. I. p. 74. And besides these prophetical inducements, we have reason to think that GOD, who never left himself unwitnessed in the heathen world, in a dream, or vision, induced these pious sages “from the east,” (απο ανατολων,) to go to Jerusalem for further intelligence respecting the birth-place, or residence, of “the true born” (ὁ τεχθεις) KING OF THE JEWS, whose star they saw at its rising (εν τη ανατολη), “and whom they came to worship,” with royal and religious adoration, Matt. ii. 2. This may fairly be collected from the oracular warning they afterwards received in a dream (χορηματισθεντες), not to return to Herod on their way home, Matt. ii. 12.

* The Magi (Μαγοι), signifying in Persic “Diviners,” were the established priesthood of the Persian, or Parthian empire; persons of the highest rank and consequence in the state. Their original founder, in times very remote, even before Abraham's days, in the time of Nahor, (see Vol. II. p. 51,) is supposed to have been the first Zerdusht, or Zoroaster. The second of that name afterwards, and the great reformer of the Magian religion, flourished in the reign of Gushtasp, or Darius Hystaspes, and is represented by the Persian historians as having been a servant, or disciple, of one of the Jewish prophets, supposed to be Elijah, but most probably Daniel. Abulfaragi relates, (what has much the air of a legend, invented after Christianity,) that he instructed the Persians concerning the manifestation of CHRIST THE LORD; ordering them to bring Him gifts, and foretelling that, in the last times, a virgin should conceive a child without the knowledge of man, and that at his birth a star should shine, in the midst of which should be seen the figure of the virgin: “My sons,” said he, “ye shall perceive its rising before all other nations; as soon, therefore, as ye shall see the star, go, follow its direction, adore Him, offer Him your gifts, since this is He, THE ORACLE, who created the heavens,” p. 54. And he represents them afterwards, p. 70, as telling Herod that a person, formerly of great name among them, in a book that he left, warned them of the future birth of a heavenly child in Palestine; that the sign of his appearance should be an extraordinary star, and that when they saw it, they should follow its guidance to the place of its residence, and offer it gifts, gold, and myrrh, and frankincense, and adore him, and then return home, lest some grievous calamity should befall them.

Such a respectable deputation, and interesting enquiry, from a hostile region especially, occasioned a great and universal sensation: “Herod was alarmed, and all Jerusalem with him;” they were affected with a variety of mingled passions and emotions thereat, fear, joy, hope, &c. The jealous tyrant himself dreaded a formidable rival to himself and his family in the throne; the Herodians apprehended the downfall of their party; the Pharisees were rejoiced at the prospect of a revolution; and the pious and devout few, who looked forward to “the consolation and redemption of Israel,” by a spiritual Saviour, and also a mighty temporal prince, were cheered at the news of the birth of their long expected deliverer, Matt. ii. 3.

Herod, therefore, convened a general ecclesiastical council at Jerusalem, and enquired of them where the MESSIAH, or CHRIST, (whom he rightly understood by THE KING OF THE JEWS,) was to be born, according to prophecy? And they answered, at Bethlehem, citing Micah’s famous prophecy, v. 2, explained before.

The Magi, therefore, having received this answer, proceeded to Bethlehem, in quest of the heaven-born Prince, and about two miles from thence, according to tradition, “lo, the star which they had seen, at its rising, re-appeared, and conducted them, until it came and stood over where the young child was.

And when they saw the star, they rejoiced with exceeding great joy. And when they went into the house, they saw the young child, with Mary his mother, and prostrating themselves, they worshipped him, and having opened their treasures, they offered unto him gifts, "gold, frankincense, and myrrh," ii. 9—11.

The circumstance of the star's going before them as a guide, and standing still over the house in which the infant JESUS was, decides the point that it could not have been an ordinary star, but a supernatural meteor, moving at no great height, or divine glory, like that which formerly conducted the Israelites in the desert. Indeed, the remarkably amplified expression of the joy which these pious sages felt at its re-appearance, is the surest test of its preternatural manifestation at the first time. And we may reasonably believe, that of all the Gentile world, their minds were best prepared for the reception of the GOSPEL, to whom it was first communicated, who first took a long and hazardous journey to visit its divine author, and to spread the glad tidings of his birth in their own country. It is truly remarkable, and in perfect conformity herewith, that among the first fruits of the Christian Church, founded on the day of Pentecost, by another visible appearance of the divine glory, resting on the heads of the Apostles, the fore-ground is occupied by "Parthians, Medes, Elamites, and dwellers in Mesopotamia," from whence the Magi came, Acts ii. 9.

Thus was the knowledge of our Saviour's birth communicated to a few chosen witnesses, both Jews and Gentiles; it was revealed to "babes" in simplicity, innocency, and docility, while it was hidden from the great and mighty, "the wise and prudent" of his own nation, Herod, and the chief priests, the Scribes and Pharisees, who only "sought the young child to destroy him." Herod, by a strange, but not unusual inconsistency, attempted "to fight against God," and to counteract those very prophecies, which he appears to have believed respecting CHRIST.

To protect him from Herod's rage, probably, the same night, after the departure of the Magi homewards, by a different way, the same angel, who had warned them, appeared to Joseph, and directed him to fly to Egypt, with the holy family, from Bethlehem, and to remain there until further notice. It has been observed, that the rich offerings of the Magi, furnished a providential supply for their journey and residence in Egypt, till Herod's death.

We may date this visit of the Magi, and flight of the holy family to Egypt, B.C. 4, on the 6th of January, the day on which the feast of the Epiphany was celebrated by the primitive Greek, and still by the Latin Church. And this agrees remarkably well with the foregoing hypothesis of the Nativity of CHRIST, on the great day of atonement, in the preceding year, about the autumnal equinox; which would give full time for the journey of the Magi to Jerusalem; whereas, the winter solstice, (December 25,) pitched on by the Church of Rome for the day of the Nativity, only twelve days before, is too short for such a journey, which might require three months at least; since it employed Ezra and his party four months, vii. 9.

The Evangelist Luke observes, that when "they had performed all things, according to the law of THE LORD, the holy family returned to Nazareth, in the land of Galilee," ii. 39. This could not have been immediately after the purification, but after Herod's death, on their return from Egypt, during the reign of Archelaus, in obedience to the angel's last warning, Matt. ii. 19—23. Thus, both Evangelists are easily and naturally reconciled, Luke omitting what had been already noticed by Matthew.

MASSACRE OF THE INNOCENTS.

The jealous tyrant, who spared neither old nor young in his rage, when he found that "he was mocked," or disappointed by the Magi, "sent and slew all the male children in Bethlehem, and in all its borders, from two years old and under, according to the time which he had accurately enquired of the Magi." The extending of the massacre to children of two years old, when infants of the last year only might have suffered, seemed to have arisen from excess of precaution, to compass more surely the destruction of CHRIST within this wider limit, by including all that were under it.

Josephus has not noticed this massacre. It might, perhaps, have been not considerable enough to have attracted his attention; Bethlehem being but a small village, and its environs not extensive. It is noticed, however, in a Rabbinical work, called Toldoth Jeshu, in the following passage: "And the king gave orders for putting to death every infant to be found in Bethle- hem ; and the king's messengers killed every infant, according to the royal order." Sharpe's First Defence of Christianity, &c. p. 40. Cedrenus, too, says that Herod was distinguished by the title of Παιδοκτονος, "Slayer of Children." And Macrobius furnishes heathen testimony of the fact: "When Augustus had heard, that among the children whom Herod, king of the Jews, ordered to be slain in Syria, his own son also was put to death, he said, It is better to be Herod's swine than his son*." Saturnal. Lib. II. cap. 4.

Herod had no son of that age. The son meant must have been his eldest, Antipater, whom he first imprisoned, and then put to death "among them," or about the same time, for conspiring to poison him; and for having, by false accusations, compassed the destruction of his two brothers, Alexander and Aristobulus, sons of Mariamne; and for tampering with his keeper to release him from his imprisonment, during his father's last sickness; which last circumstance, when Herod heard, he ordered him instantly to be put to death, and died himself five days after: only a few days after a lunar eclipse, March 13, B.C. 4, incidentally noticed by Josephus. See Vol. I. p. 85.

ARCHELAUS.

Herod had nine wives, and by them several children. Joseph. Bell. Jud. I. 28, 4. By his will he bequeathed his dominions to be divided among three of his sons, Archelaus and Antipas, by Malthace of Samaria, and Philip, by Cleopatra of Jerusalem; but subject to the ratification of the emperor. Augustus confirmed the will, and appointed Archelaus, the eldest, ethnarch of Judea, promising him the title of king, if he should deserve it by his conduct. He was, therefore, considered as such by the Jews, and assumed the title of Herod †, and the Evangelist applies to him the term βασιλευει, "reigned," Matt. ii. 22. Antipas was appointed tetrarch of Galilee, and Philip of Iturea, Luke iii. 1. See Vol. I. p. 88.

The reign of Archelaus commenced inauspiciously. At the ensuing passover, April 12, after celebrating his father's funeral

* If Augustus expressed himself in Greek, which was the polished language of that age, there might have been a play upon the words, ὕν, "swine," and υἱόν, "son." obsequies with great magnificence, Archelaus gave several grants and donations to the people, to conciliate their favour; but the seditious demanded that his father's ministers should be put to death for the execution of the rioters, who pulled down the golden eagle on the night of the eclipse; and assaulted his guards; so that he was forced to order his troops to quell the insurrection, and to prohibit the celebration of the passover. On which occasion 3000 of the citizens were slain. This, probably, deterred the holy family from settling in Judea, on their return from Egypt; and induced them, by the divine admonition, to return to their former residence at Nazareth, in Galilee, under Herod Antipas. Indeed, the whole reign of Archelaus was turbulent, and disgraced by insurrections of the Jews against the Romans; in one of which, Varus, the president of Syria, crucified two thousand of the insurgents; and also, by banditti, and pretenders to the crown; of this last class were Theudas, Acts v. 36; (whom Josephus calls Judas *. Ant. XVII. 12, 5,) afterwards, Simon, Athronges, and others. For during this disastrous season of anarchy, the Jews, having no native king to restrain the multitude by his virtue and authority, and detesting Herod's family, as Idumean usurpers, and the Romans also, who, in quelling these disturbances, exasperated the people by their insolence and rapacity; the whole country was infested with banditti, every troop of them electing a king of their own; who did but trifling injury to the Romans, while they were widely calamitous to their own countrymen. Such was the miserable state of Judea at this period, as described by Josephus, Ant. XVII. 12, 6—8.

† Hence Dio calls Archelaus Ἡρωδης Παλαιστινος, "Herod of Palestine;" and Spanheim has noticed a coin of his, with the inscription ἩΡΩΔΟΥ on one side, and ΕΘΝΑΡΧΟΥ on the reverse. De præstantia et usu numismatum, p. 521, Lond. edit.

At length, after repeated complaints of the tyranny and maladministration of Archelaus, by the chiefs of the Jews and Samaritans, joined by his own brothers, to the emperor Augustus, he was deposed, and banished to Vienne, in Gaul, in the tenth year of his reign, A.D. 6, when M. Æmilius Lepidus and L. Arruntius Nepos, were consuls, according to Dio Cassius. His territory was annexed to the province of Syria, and Cyrenius was sent by Augustus to make an assessment of properties in Syria, (ἀποτιμησομενος τα εν Συρια,) and to confiscate the goods of Archelaus. Ant. XVII. 15, 5. At this time the assessment was made, and the tax levied in Judea also. Ant. XVIII. 1, 1. Josephus dates it in the thirty-seventh year after the battle of Actium; 37—B.C. 31=A.D. 6. Ant. XVIII. 2, 1. It was, therefore, carried into effect the same year, by this trusty and active commissioner.

* Thus, Thaddeus, one of the Apostles, (which is the same as Theudas,) Mark iii. 18, was called Judas, or Jude, Luke vi. 16.

CHRIST VISITS THE TEMPLE.

During the government of Coponius, the first procurator of Judea appointed by Cyrenius, CHRIST, when he was twelve years of age, went with his mother and reputed father, at the feast of the passover, to Jerusalem, to be made “a disciple of the Law,” or examined in his proficiency therein; a ceremonial corresponding to confirmation in the Christian Church. On this occasion, it was both lawful and customary for the disciples to enquire of the president of the Sanhedrim, or of the doctors, about any matter of doubt or difficulty in the law. And “the Child JESUS” availed himself of this privilege, to stay behind his parents in the temple, to hear the expositions of the doctors, and to ask them questions. And all that heard him “were astonished at his understanding and answers.” When his parents, after a search of some days, found him there, they were amazed, and his mother said unto him, Son, why hast thou thus dealt with us? Lo, thy father and I have sought thee sorrowing. But he said unto her, How is it that ye sought me? Know ye not, that I ought to be in MY FATHER’S house?* Thus gently rebuking her for calling Joseph “his father,” and disclaiming the connexion, by calling the temple “MY FATHER’S house,” as expressly afterwards, at his first passover, when he purged it by an act of authority, appropriated to him as the SON OF GOD, Luke ii. 41—49; John ii. 13—16.

Thus CHRIST, a true “Nazarite,” (Matt. ii. 23,) “separated” from the womb, like the prophet Samuel, and consecrated unto the LORD, 1 Sam. i. 28, resembled him in his early call, at the same age, 1 Sam. iii. 4—19, and “came suddenly,” or unexpectedly, “to his temple, as THE ANGEL OF THE COVENANT,” fulfilling prophecy, Mal. iii. 1; and also, after the appointment of the first Roman procurator, Coponius, in Judea, “when the sceptre of civil government had departed from Judah," as the true SHILOH or "APOSTLE," Gen. xlix. 10, fulfilling the times, Gal. iv. 4.

* “In MY FATHER’S house.” This is the rendering of the Syriac, Arabic, and Armenian Versions. “In Haman’s house,” Esther vii. 9, the Septuagint renders εἰς τοὺς Ἀμάν.

This early assertion of his divine parentage, was not then understood by Joseph and his mother. JESUS, however, though conscious of it himself, returned with them to Nazareth, and was "subject unto them" in all filial duty and obedience: and appears to have followed his reputed father's trade, of a carpenter; from the reproach of the Jews, considering the meanness of the employment as inconsistent with his claims to be the MESSIAH. "Is not this the carpenter?" Mark vi. 3. In this humble occupation "He advanced in wisdom and stature, and in favour with GOD and man," Luke ii. 52. His human understanding, like that of any other son of Adam, however mysteriously united with his divine nature, increasing in wisdom, as his human body in stature, until he was "immeasurably endued with the HOLY SPIRIT" after his baptism, John iii. 34; so that at length in him "dwelt all the fulness of the GODHEAD bodily," Col. ii. 9. In what favour he was with GOD, his Baptism and Transfiguration declared, "THIS IS MY BELOVED SON, IN WHOM I AM WELL PLEASSED." And in what favour with man, the rapture of his friends evinced, "Blessed is the womb that bare thee, and the paps which thou hast sucked!" and "all," even his most prejudiced enemies, "wondered at the gracious words which issued from his mouth," and declared, that "Never man spake like this man!" Luke xi. 27, iv. 22, John vii. 46.

THE MINISTRY OF JOHN THE BAPTIST.

From CHRIST's first visit to the temple, to the commencement of the Baptist's ministry, there is a chasm of seventeen years in the evangelical history, which properly begins with the latter; all the preceding part being only introductory thereto. This is filled up chronologically from Josephus, by the administrations of the intervening procurators after Coponius, namely, Marcus Ambivius, Annius Rufus, Valerius Gratus, and Pontius Pilate. The last was appointed A.D. 25, the year before John's ministry, as shewn Vol. I. p. 87. and confirmed by Eusebius, who dates his appointment in the twelfth year of the sole reign of Tiberius, which began A.D. 14. But A.D. 14 + 11 = A.D. 25.

John's ministry began next year, A.D. 26, probably about the great day of atonement, Matt. iii. 1—4, Mark i. 1—41, Luke iii. 1—3, John i. 6, 7. The time, therefore, is sedulously ascertained by the Evangelist Luke; supplying deficiencies in the concise accounts of his predecessor, Matthew. See Vol. I. p. 88, &c.

The ministry of John excited universal attention, upon various accounts. 1. The miraculous circumstances of his birth and circumcision, “were noised abroad throughout the hill country of Judea; and all that heard them laid them up in their hearts, saying, What manner of child shall this be?” Luke i. 65, 66. 2. The manner of his education, in the desert; in the simplicity and austerity of the ancient Prophets, living on “locusts and wild honey,” and wearing “raiment of camel’s hair,” or sack-cloth, and “a leathern girdle about his loins,” like another Elijah, 2 Kings i. 8. 3. The style of his “proclaiming the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins,” “Repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand,” by which they generally understood the kingdom of the GOD OF HEAVEN, to be erected by the MESSIAH upon earth, as foretold by the Prophet Daniel, ii. 44, vii. 27; (thence indiscriminately styled the kingdom of GOD, and the kingdom of HEAVEN, in the Gospels,) and of which, “all the people were in expectation” at that time, Luke iii. 15, and thought that “it would immediately appear,” Luke xix. 11, from the expiration of the chronological prophecies respecting the successions of temporal kingdoms, destined to precede it; noticed especially by the Prophet Daniel. 4. He represented himself as the forerunner of the expected MESSIAH, foretold by ancient prophecy, especially by Isaiah and Malachi.

[“I am] the voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of THE LORD, make straight his paths. Every valley shall be filled up, and every mountain and hillock shall be levelled; and the crooked ways be made straight, and the rough smooth. And all flesh shall see the salvation of GOD*,” Isai. xl. 3—5, Luke iii. 4—6, John i. 23. “Lo, I send my angel, (or messenger,) before thy face, who shall prepare thy way before thee †,” Mal. iii. 1, Mark i. 2.

* This conclusion differs from that of Isaiah: “And all flesh shall see together” [the glory of the Lord.] Instead of יַחְדָּו, “together;” the Sept. (which is followed by the Evangelist Luke,) seems to have read יְשׁוּעָה, “the salvation,” as in the parallel prophecy, “And all the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of OUR GOD,” Isai. lii. 10.

† See the variation of expression in the citation from the original, accounted for in the foregoing remarks on Malachi.

In these magnificent prophecies, with which John opened and described his divine commission, as “sent by GOD,” (John i. 6, Luke iii. 2,) to be the harbinger of CHRIST, to proclaim his approach, and call upon the whole world to attend to HIM; (a distinction peculiarly honourable and appropriate to CHRIST, of which neither Moses nor any of the Prophets could boast,) there is a plain allusion to the practice of the eastern monarchs, to send pioneers to prepare the roads, open the passes, and remove impediments, in the rough and desert countries through which they were to pass with their pompous retinues. Thus Semiramis, queen of Assyria, in her royal expeditions into Media and Persia, and the other countries of Asia subject to her dominions, wherever she went, ordered mountains and precipices to be levelled, raised causeways in the low countries; and by great cost and trouble, made straight, short, and commodious high-ways, through places impassable before. Diodorus, B. II. In like manner, GOD sent the Baptist as a spiritual pioneer, to prepare and smooth the way before the MESSIAH; by clearing and removing the various impediments and obstructions that impeded the march of THE GOSPEL, arising from the prejudices, passions, and VICES of mankind.

John not only resembled Elijah in his sackcloth dress, spare diet, and retired mode of life, but also in his character: in his power of conversion, and spirit of reproof. Both, indeed, were raised up by PROVIDENCE, in times of general apostacy from the true faith, and corruption of morals, to reclaim and reform their countrymen. Both were commissioned to denounce vengeance from heaven, unless the nation repented, and were converted to the Lord their God; both were actuated by the same ardent and undaunted zeal, in the discharge of their commission; both were persecuted for their labour of love; yet nothing deterred Elijah from boldly rebuking Ahab, Jezebel, and the idolatrous Israelites; nor John from rebuking Herod, Herodias, and that “wicked and adulterous generation” of the Jews, who flocked to his baptism.

Baptism, “immersion in water,” or ablution, was a symbol of purification among the Jews and other ancient nations. It was solemnly prescribed to the Israelites after their departure from the pollutions of Egypt, in the desert of Sinai, preparatory to their entering into covenant with God, as his chosen people.

“Sanctify the people to day, and to morrow, and let them wash their clothes,” Exod. xix. 10.

This precept is understood to denote baptism, both here and in 1 Sam. xvi. 5, by Maimonides, the great interpreter of the Jewish law. Issureh Biah, cap. 13. And this rite was also required of heathen proselytes, along with circumcision, according to the maxim of their schools: “No man is a proselyte until he be circumcised and baptized.” Female proselytes were only to be baptized. See Lightfoot on Matt. iii. 6*.

This ancient rite, therefore, was with great propriety renewed to the Jews themselves, preparatory to the new covenant of the GOSPEL, analogous to the former, of the LAW.

The important objects of John’s baptism were, 1. To proclaim, as a herald, the approach of CHRIST to all the people; for “He was sent by GOD to bear witness to THE LIGHT [of the world] that all men through HIM might believe,” John i. 6—8. And 2. To point out JESUS personally as the CHRIST, to some true Israelites; for, “to manifest him unto Israel, came he baptizing with water,” John i. 31—49.

John held his baptism at Bethabara, “the ford” of Jordan, where the miraculous passage of the Israelites, under Joshua, took place. And his general testimony to the people who attended him, was, “I, indeed, baptize you with water, unto repentance; but He that cometh after me, is mightier than I, whose shoes I am not worthy to carry; (nor even to stoop down and untie the latchet of his shoes.) He shall baptize you with THE HOLY SPIRIT, and with fire,” [unto regeneration; on the memorable day of Pentecost; as explained by OUR LORD, and by the event, John iii. 5, Acts i. 5, ii. 3,] Matt. iii. 11, Mark i. 7, 8, Luke iii. 16.

He afterwards explained, more particularly, in what respects CHRIST was mightier: “John testified of him and cried, saying, This was He of whom I spake; He that cometh after me,

* Among the heathens also, from ancient times, ablution, or sprinkling with water, was practised as an initiatory rite of admission to the mysteries of Mithras, among the Persians; of Isis among the Egyptians; and of Ceres among the Greeks and Romans.

Nationes extraneæ—sacris quibusdam initiantur Isidis alicujus, aut Mitræ per lavacrum. Tertull.—Apuleius thus describes those of Isis.—“Sacerdos, stipatum me religiosâ cohorte, deducit ad proximas balneas; et prius sueto lavacro traditum, præfatus Deûm veniam, purissimè circumrorans abluit.” Metam. Lib. IX.

hath been, [or existed,] before me, for he was MY CHIEF*,” John i. 15. Thus marking, 1. the pre-existence of CHRIST; 2. his antecedent dignity, as THE LEADER, Micah v. 2, Matt. ii. 6, Dan. ix. 25; or PRINCE, Dan. x. 21.

These two important articles are more fully explained in the sublime Introduction of John's Gospel, which was immediately and primarily designed as a commentary on the Baptist's testi-

* Ἰωαννης μαρτυρεῖ περὶ αὐτοῦ καὶ κερραγε λεγων· Οὗτος ἦν ὃν εἶπον· Ὁ ὀπισω μου ἐρχομενος, ἐμπροσθεν μου γεγονεν· ὅτι πρῶτος μου ἦν.

The Bible translation of this passage, though not altogether unfaithful, yet seems to be inaccurate, in transposing the meaning of the two last clauses: “He that cometh after me, is [preferred] before me; for He was before me.”

1. ἐμπροσθεν, ambiguously denotes “before,” either in point of time or place; and its appropriate sense is to be learned only from the context. Thus, it indicates the former, in such passages as these, ἡμερας τας ἐμπροσθεν, “the former days,” Micah vii. 20. Sept. οἱ ἐμπροσθεν λογοι, “the former discourses;” Æschines: but the latter, in the following, ἐμπροσθεν αὐτων πορευεται, “He, (the good Shepherd,) goeth before them, and the sheep follow him,” John x. 4. In the present case, however, since the antecedent ὀπισω, “after,” in strictness, refers to the later mission of CHRIST, the consequent ἐμπροσθεν, contrasted therewith, to preserve the propriety of the figure, must denote his earlier existence. And it may also be remarked, that where ἐμπροσθεν denotes place, as “before and behind,” Rev. iv. 6, it is contrasted, not with ὀπισω, but ὀπισθεν. Nor does it any where, merely by itself, appear to signify precedence of rank or dignity: even in the supposed parallel passage, ἐθηκε τον Εφραιμ ἐμπροσθεν του Μανασσου, “He set Ephraim before Manasseh,” Gen. xlviii. 20, Sept. the precedence is marked by the verb conjointly: “He set before,” or “preferred.”

2. Γεγονεν, the definite perfect tense middle, is rather inaccurately rendered “is,” for it properly denotes time past, terminating before, at, or in, the present; and should be rendered “hath been,” corresponding to the Latin, fuit: for it is contrasted with the present, “is,” and the future, “shall be,” Matt. xxiv. 21. That it terminates, however, at, or in, the present time, appears from the phrases τι γεγονεν, “how is it?” &c. or, “what hath been, and now is,” the reason? John xiv. 22; and, γεγονε, “it is done,” or “the mystery of GOD hath been, and is now finished,” Rev. xvi. 16. And so, fuit Ilium, fuimus Troes, intimates, that Troy hath been in existence, but is now no more. Hence, γεγονε is distinguished from the indefinite tenses, εγενετο, “was made,” “became,” or “came to pass,” John i. 3, or ἦν, “was,” which contain no reference to present time.

3. Πρῶτος μου ἦν is inaccurately rendered, “he was before me,” confounding πρῶτος with προτερος, “before,” in point of time; whereas, in strictness, it relates to precedence of rank, as ὅς αν θελη ὑμων γενεσθαι πρῶτος, εσται παντων δουλος. “Whosoever among you is desirous to become chief, shall be servant of all,” Mark x. 44; as exemplified by OUR LORD in washing his disciples’ feet, John xiii. 3—17, who called himself their chief, John xv. 18. And St. Paul, speaking of his former persecution of the Church, ranks himself among *sinner*s, ὃν πρῶτος εἰμι ἐγω, “of whom I am chief,” 1 Tim. i. 15. Compare Luke i. 43, 44.

4. Κερραγε—ὃν εἶπον. This relates to his first testimony, ἐγω φωνη βωντος, “I am the voice of one crying,” &c. for κερραγε, and βωντος, signify a public crier or herald.

mony, introduced into the midst of it, as essentially connected therewith.

INTRODUCTION OF JOHN'S GOSPEL*.

1. "In the beginning was THE ORACLE, and the Oracle was with

2. "THE GOD, and the Oracle was GOD. This same was in the beginning with THE GOD.

* The translation of this sublime Introduction, differing from the received, especially in the first and most important verse, attesting the proper divinity of THE ORACLE (CHRIST) but still distinguishing him personally from THE FATHER, "neither confounding the persons, nor dividing the substance," according to the judicious canon of the Athanasian creed, requires to be supported by a critical analysis of the terms of the original, upon the logical principles established by Middleton, in his profound Doctrine of the Greek Alphabet.

The definite article, ὁ, ἡ, το, usually rendered "the," he has clearly proved to be, in fact, a relative pronoun, signifying "who," "which," or "that," as Πατερ ἡμων ὁ [ων] εν τοις ουρανοις, "Our Father, who [art] in the Heavens," Matt. vi. 9. Here the substantive participle, ων, is understood: it is expressed in the following passage from Aristotle, οἱ μαλιστα αξιοι οντες ἡκιστα πλουτουσι, "They who are most worthy are least apt to be rich," p. 39. Εγω ειμι παν το γεγονος, και ον, και εσομενον, "I am all that hath been, and is, and will be," p. 43.

The article is chiefly used to express eminence, κατ' εξοχην, as "the Lord, he is THE GOD! the Lord, he is THE GOD!" and not Baal, 1 Kings xviii. 39, and is so marked in the Hebrew, by the ה, or emphatic prefix, ה'אלהה, and in the Septuagint, by Ὁ Θεος. Signifying, He, who is GOD, in the highest sense of the word, or invested with supreme power and dominion. In this sense it is used in the first clause. Εν αρχη ην Ὁ λογος, "In the beginning was THE ORACLE, or personified WORD." Εν αρχη, should be rendered, not "In a beginning," because the preposition often excludes the article, which is understood, as Middleton has shewn in many instances.

The next clause, και ὁ λογος ην προς τον Θεον, "THE ORACLE was with THE GOD," or THE FATHER; and the third, και Θεος ην ὁ λογος, "And THE ORACLE was GOD," as personally distinguished from "THE GOD;" for otherwise it would be a reciprocating proposition, of which the reciprocal would not be true, that "THE GOD was THE ORACLE," which is evidently incongruous.

Still Θεος, without the article, frequently denotes "THE GOD," when ὁ Πατηρ, "THE FATHER," [of all] is understood, as Θεον ουδεις εωρακε πωποσε, ὁ μονογενης υιος, ὁ ων εις τον κολπον του πατρος, εκεινος εξηγησατο, "GOD [THE FATHER] none ever saw, THE ONLY BEGOTTEN SON, who is on his bosom, that same expounded him," verse 18. Here is an elegant and a usual Atticism, where the genitive του πατρος is expressed instead of τον πατερα, understood after Θεον. Thus Virgil, "Urbem quam statuo vestra est," "The city that I am building is your's," put for Urbs quam statuo vestra est, Æn. i. 576. So in the phrases, παρα Θεου, "from God;" εκ Θεου "of God;" τεκνα Θεου, "children of God;" occurring also ver. 6, 12, 13, of this Introduction. Θεον, without the article, evidently denotes THE FATHER; for whom, it is used indiscriminately, both with, and without the article, in the following parallel passages: "Nothing shall be impossible with GOD," (παρα τω Θεω) Luke i. 37; "For, with GOD, (παρα Θεω) all things are possible," Matt. xix. 26.

Θεος also, without the article, denotes THE SON, where either ὁ λογος, or ὁ υιος, are understood. As "Great is the mystery of godliness," "GOD [THE SON, or THE WORD] was manifested in flesh," &c. 1 Tim. iii. 16. And Philo, the Jew, styled ὁ λογος, THE ORACLE, ὁ δευτερος Θεος, "THE SECOND GOD."

3. "All things were made by Him, and without Him was not any thing made that hath been. [Ps. xxxiii. 6, Heb. i. 2, xi. 3, Col. i. 16, 17, Ephes. iii. 9.

2. The article is sometimes used simply to express reference. Thus 'Ο Θεος του Ισραηλ, "the God of Israel," Ο Θεος του αιωνος τουτου, "the God of this world," in which latter case it denotes Satan, 2 Cor. iv. 4. Sometimes it is used relatively, even where the reference is not expressed, but understood; and so ὁ Θεος is applied to CHRIST, in that much disputed passage, "to feed the Church of GOD, (του Θεου) which he purchased with his own blood," Acts xx. 28; and also to the HOLY GHOST, "Thou hast not lied unto men, but unto GOD," (τω Θεω) Acts v. 4, namely, THE GOD who was mentioned in the preceding verse, το πνευμα το ἅγιον, "THE HOLY SPIRIT."

Verse 3. Παντα δι' αυτου εγενετο. Here the preposition δια, "by," or "through," marks the agency of the SON of GOD in the creation of the world, which is ultimately ascribed to THE FATHER, in the preposition εκ, "of," or "originating from;" "of whom, and through whom, and to whom are all things, to whom be glory for evermore. Amen."

Verse 4. It is not a little remarkable, that in the Orphic Mythology, the supreme principle of creation was, το φως, το ὑπερτατον παντων, και απροσιτον, το παντα περιεχον, ὁπερ ωνομασε Βουλην, Φως, Ζωην. ταυτα τα τρια ονοματα μιαν δυναμιν απεφηνατο, και ἐν κρατος του Δημιουργου παντων Θεου, του παντα εκ του μη οντος παραγαγοντος εις το ειναι, ὄρατα τε και αορατα.

"THE LIGHT supreme of all and inaccessible, containing the universe, which he named COUNSEL, LIGHT, LIFE. These three names he made to represent one power, and one dominion, of GOD THE CREATOR OF ALL, who produced all things into being from nothing, both visible and invisible." See Suidas voce Ορφευς. And we find these three names or titles noticed in John's Introduction, and applied to CHRIST as the ORACLE, which is synonymous with THE COUNSEL OF GOD, as Christ is also styled, Luke vii. 30. And that epithet of the SUPREME BEING, "light inaccessible," is also recorded by Paul, 1 Tim. vi. 16.

9. For the true light, CHRIST, "the Sun of Righteousness," coming into the world, (John xi. 27, xii. 46, xviii. 37,) enlighteneth "every man," who is willing to receive his illumination, John iii. 19—21. But the heathen world knew him not, as THEIR CREATOR; and the Jews, his own peculiar people, entertained him not, (ου παρελαβον,) as THEIR LORD, but rejected Him. As many, however, as received Him, (ελαβον,) whether Jews or Gentiles, and believed in his name, or divine mission and authority, were admitted into covenant by Him, as "children of GOD;" whose adoption and regeneration, (εγεννηθησαν,) was owing, not to any respect of persons, Acts x. 34, 35, prerogatives or merits of their own, as proceeding "from bloods," (εξ αιματων,) from chosen stocks, or races, highly favoured casts, as Hebrews, children of Abraham, or children of Israel, &c. 2 Cor. xi. 22, 23, or from natural instinct, (εκ θεληματος σαρκος,) or from the moral principle of reason or conscience, (εκ θεληματος ανδρος,) Rom. ii. 14, 15, but from the free grace and sole will of GOD, (εκ Θεου,) 1 Pet. i. 3, Eph. ii. 8, 9, Rom. vi. 23.

14. And THE ORACLE became flesh, [or man,] 1 Tim. iii. 16, Phil. ii. 6, 8, and tabernacled (εσκηνωσε,) among us; "the temple of his body, containing all the fulness of the Godhead, corporeally," John ii. 21, Col. ii. 9. And He manifested his glory, to his chosen witnesses, the Apostles, by his miracles, John ii. 11; by his transfiguration, Matt.

4. "In Him was LIFE, and the life was THE LIGHT of men. [John viii. 12, xii. 46, &c.]

5. And the light shineth in the dusk, but the dusk comprehended it not. [Acts xiv. 17, xvii. 27, Rom. i. 19, 20, Ephes. iii, 18.]

9. He was THE TRUE LIGHT, which coming into the world enlighteneth every man.

10. He was in the world, and the world was made by Him, but the world [the Gentiles] knew Him not. [Exod. v. 2, Isa. lv. 5, 1 John iii. 1.]

11. He came unto his own home, but his own household [the Jews] entertained him not. [John iv. 44, Matt. xii. 38—42, Luke x. 13, &c.]

12. But as many as received Him, [whether Jews or Gentiles, Rom. ii. 10, 11, &c.] to them gave He authority to become children of GOD, even to them that believe in His name :

13. Who were born [again, John iii. 3, 1 Pet. i. 3—5, Tit. iii. 4—7, &c.] neither of bloods, [peculiar races, or favoured stocks, as of Abraham, Matt. iii. 9, John viii. 39—41, &c.] nor of the will of flesh, [suggestion of natural instinct] nor of the will of man, [suggestion of reason, or conscience] but of [the gracious will of] GOD. [James i. 18, &c.]

14. And THE ORACLE became flesh, [or man] and tabernacled among us, (and we [the chosen witnesses] beheld his glory, a glory suitable to THE ONLY BEGOTTEN [SON issuing] from THE FATHER) full of grace and truth.

xvii. 1—6; by his resurrection, Luke xxiv. 26; by his ascension, Acts i. 9; and by the miraculous effusion of the HOLY SPIRIT on the day of Pentecost, &c. a glory suitable to the only genuine [Son, issuing] from THE FATHER, (δοξαν ὡς μονογενοῦς, παρὰ Πατρὸς.) During his residence in the flesh, "THE ORACLE was full of, or abounding in grace and truth," or in true grace, or graciousness to mankind. "And of his fulness, or abundance, have we, [believers,] all received, even grace instead of grace;" (καὶ χάριν ἀντὶ χάριτος.) "the grace and the truth," or superior grace of THE GOSPEL, effected by JESUS CHRIST, instead of the grace of "THE LAW given by Moses;" which was only "a shadow of good things to come," or a type of the GOSPEL, Heb. x. 1; and was superseded thereby, 2 Cor. v. 17.

18. The divinity of THE ORACLE, or JESUS CHRIST, is further intimated, 1. by ὁ μονογενῆς υἱός, "the only genuine, or legitimate son," as distinguished from νοθός, a spurious son, Heb. xii. 8. By this epithet, Isaac was distinguished from Ishmael, Heb. xi. 17. It is equivalent to γνησιός, 1 Tim. i. 2. 2. By ὁ ὢν εἰς τὸν κολπὸν τοῦ πατρὸς, "who is reclining on the Father's bosom:" a metaphor taken from ancient usage. So John, the beloved disciple, reclined on Jesus's bosom, John xiii. 23, as he sat next to him at table, in the highest seat. And 3. By oracularly expounding (ἐξηγησατο) the nature of the Invisible FATHER, who only knoweth likewise the nature of THE SON, Matt. xi. 27.

16. And of his fulness, we [believers] all received, even grace instead of grace: [the grace of the GOSPEL, instead of the grace of THE LAW.]

17. For the law was given by Moses, but the grace and the truth [of the Gospel] was effected by JESUS CHRIST. [Heb. iii. 1—6.]

18. No one hath seen GOD THE FATHER at any time; THE ONLY BEGOTTEN SON who is on His bosom, that same expounded Him, [or oracularly explained His spiritual nature and true worship to mankind. John iv. 24, 1 Tim. vi. 16.]

This mysterious Introduction, (here attempted to be more closely and critically rendered, and explained from parallel passages of Scripture) furnishes the fullest evidence to the divine and human nature of JESUS CHRIST, as the original ORACLE of the OLD TESTAMENT, and the peculiar SON OF GOD of the NEW; connecting both together as parts of one grand and comprehensive system of divine economy respecting mankind. Its authenticity is unimpeachable by heretics and infidels. Even the emperor Julian the Apostate, A.D. 361, reluctantly admitted this in his censure: "As to JESUS, neither Paul, nor Matthew, nor Luke, nor Mark, dared to call him 'GOD;' none but the honest [or simple] John *."

THE PREACHING OF JOHN.

This was energetic and powerful, and drew a great concourse of people to him from Jerusalem, all Judea, and the region round about Jordan, who were baptized by him confessing their sins. John, indeed, was "a burning and shining lamp," like Elijah, according to our LORD'S commendation, (corresponding to Gabriel's,) John v. 33, taken perhaps from this following:—

Then arose Elijah the prophet as fire,
And his word burned like a lamp, &c.—Ecclus. xlvi. 1—10.

* Τον γουν Ιησουν, ουτε Παυλος ετολμησε ειπειν ΘΕΟΝ, ουτε Ματθαιος, ουτε Λουκας, ουτε Μαρκος· αλλ' ο χρηστος Ιωαννης. Cyrl. cont. Julian. lib. x. p. 327.

Julian, however, was mistaken concerning the rest, for Paul repeatedly styles him so, Rom. ix. 5, Phil. ii. 6, 1 Tim. iii. 16, Tit. i. 3, ii. 13, Eph. v. 5, Heb. i. 8. Matthew styles him from ancient prophecy, IMMANUEL, "GOD WITH US;" Mark, "THE SON OF GOD," i. 1; Luke, "GOD," Acts xx. 28. And JESUS himself freely accepted the divine titles of MY LORD and MY GOD, from his disciple Thomas, John xx. 28, 29; which surely he would not have done, had he not been fully entitled thereto from "the glory which HE had with THE FATHER before the world was," John xvii. 5.

But when John saw many of the Pharisees and Sadducees, among the higher orders and rulers of the people, coming to his baptism, not in sincerity, but in hypocrisy, (Luke vii. 30, John vii. 48,) he thus boldly rebuked them :

“ O generation of vipers *, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come? Bring forth therefore fruits meet for repentance; and think not to say within yourselves, We have Abraham to [our] father; for I say unto you, that GOD is able of these stones [the Gentiles, whom you despise as stupid and insensible] to raise up children to Abraham, [who shall be adopted as children of GOD in your room,] Matt. iii. 5—9, Luke iii. 7, 8.

And he warned all of the approaching destruction of Jerusalem, threatened at the conclusion of the OLD TESTAMENT, as explained by our Lord's corresponding parable of the barren fig-tree, Luke xiii. 6—9.

“ And now is the axe laid to the root of the trees; every tree, therefore, that beareth not good fruit, is to be hewed down, and cast into the fire,” Matt. iii. 10, Luke iii. 9.

Alarmed by these awful denunciations of divine vengeance, the multitudes enquired, What then shall we do [to be saved?] In answer to which, this great preacher exhorted every class to forsake their ruling vices: he exhorted the hard-hearted and uncharitable Jews in general to be bountiful to the poor; “ he that hath two coats, let him share with him that hath none, and he that hath food, let him do likewise;” the soldiers, on service (στρατευομενοι) prone to rapine, false information, and mutiny, “ Neither plunder, nor inform falsely against any, and be content with your pay;” the publicans, or tax-gatherers, “ Exact no more than what is appointed you,” Luke iii. 10—14. And he did not spare the king himself, but reproved even Herod for his adultery, respecting his brother Philip's wife, Herodias: “ It is not lawful for thee to have her,” and “ for all the wicked things that he had done,” Luke iii. 19.

And he further warned all of the future judgment, at the general resurrection, to be held by CHRIST :

* This expression is equivalent to “ children of the devil,” as being “ the seed of the old serpent,” always ready to calumniate and persecute “ the righteous seed of the woman,” Gen. iii. 15, as they did both John and CHRIST, Luke vii. 31—35. Our Lord adopted it, Matt. xii. 34, xxiii. 33, as equivalent to a “ wicked and adulterous generation,” Matt. xii. 39.

“ Whose [winnowing] fan is in his hand, and he will thoroughly purge his threshing floor, and gather the wheat (or good) into his granary (Heaven) but will burn up the chaff [or bad] with unquenchable fire (in Hell;)” Matt. iii. 12, as explained by the similar parable of the wheat and the tares, Matt. xiii. 24—30; and the scenical representation of the last judgment, Matt. xxv. 31—46.

Thus, when all the people were in expectation of CHRIST’S appearance, did the Baptist endeavour to correct the false notions they entertained of his temporal kingdom, and the worldly prosperity they imagined was to take place among themselves. Luke iii. 15.

JESUS BAPTIZED.

“ While all the people were baptizing, JESUS also came from Galilee to Bethabara, to be baptized; but John, knowing his superior purity and freedom from sin, forbad him, saying, I have need to be baptized by thee, and comest thou to me? But JESUS answering, said unto him, Permit it now; for so it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness. Then he permitted him.” Matt. iii. 13—15, Luke iii. 21.

John indeed could have been no stranger to JESUS, from the relationship and friendship that subsisted between their families, and the frequent opportunities they had of meeting each other at the great festivals thrice a year, at Jerusalem. John, indeed, must have known him personally, and learned, from his righteous and enlightened parents, the miraculous and astonishing circumstances of his birth, the declarations of the angel Gabriel respecting his dignity, and the superior sanctity of his life and conversation; but John knew him not officially, as THE CHRIST, THE SON OF GOD, until it was signified to him by the HOLY SPIRIT, and by the HEAVENLY VOICE, at his baptism, as he informed his confidential disciples afterwards: “ And I knew him not, but that he might be manifested to the Israel [of GOD] for this purpose came I, baptizing with water. And I knew him not; but HE that sent me to baptize with water, that same said unto me, upon whom thou shalt see the Spirit descending and remaining upon him, this is He that baptizeth with the HOLY SPIRIT,” John i. 31—33. So careful was DIVINE WISDOM, that the evidences of the office and divinity of CHRIST, before he entered upon his mission, should rest upon no former hearsay, or secondary testimony, but upon the immediate and original testimony of the Baptist, vouching what he himself saw and heard.

This distinction between knowing the person, and not knowing the office, of JESUS, easily and naturally reconciles an apparent dissonance * between the evangelists Matthew and John, and is supported by the case of the Jews and their rulers. They knew Jesus personally, as the reputed son of Joseph, and whence he was, from Nazareth, but though he was in the midst of them, they knew him not as THE CHRIST †. Compare John i. 26, with John vi. 42, vii. 27, Matt. xiii. 55, Mark vi. 3.

Accordingly, the promised sign took place, for “JESUS having been baptized, and praying, the heavens were opened unto him, and the HOLY SPIRIT descended, and remained upon him, in a bodily form, [probably as of fire, Acts ii. 3,] like a dove, [or with a dove-like motion.] And a voice came from the heavens, saying, Thou art MY SON, THE BELOVED, in whom I am well pleased,” Mark i. 11, Luke iii. 22; or, “This is MY SON,” &c. Matt. iii. 17.

The only witnesses of this stupendous scene appear to have been JESUS and the Baptist. To the former, perhaps, was directed, “Thou art MY SON,” &c. to the latter, “This is MY SON,” &c. And this seems to be confirmed by the Baptist’s testimony: “I beheld THE SPIRIT descending, like a dove, from heaven, and it remained upon him;—and I have seen, and do testify [what I also heard] that This is the SON OF GOD,” John i. 32—34.

This voice from heaven was thrice repeated at different times; first, before JESUS entered upon his ministry, on the present occasion, when the Baptist was the single witness; afterwards more fully, and with more glorious circumstances, at his Transfiguration, before the chosen witnesses, Peter, James, and John: “Thou art MY SON, THE BELOVED, in whom I am well pleased. Hear ye Him,” Matt. xvii. 5, Mark ix. 7, Luke

* Some commentators endeavour to harmonize the Evangelists in this case, by supposing that John did not know JESUS even personally, until pointed out to him by the HOLY SPIRIT, as formerly the wife of Jeroboam, in disguise, was made known to the prophet Ahijah, 1 Kings xiv. 1—6. But this supposition is improbable in itself, and inconsistent with John’s knowing and declining to baptize JESUS at first; after which, it appears, that the sign was proposed to him by THE SPIRIT.

† Thus JESUS himself said afterwards, “Philip, have I been so long a time with thee, and yet hast thou not known me?” John xiv. 9.

ix. 35, as the great prophet of the Church. And lastly, at the close of his ministry, after he had been proclaimed the CHRIST, or king of Israel, by the multitude, when our LORD, “for their sakes,” to confirm their faith, prayed, in their hearing, “FATHER, glorify thy name*,” a voice came from heaven and said, “I have both glorified, and will glorify it again.” And the people who stood by, and heard it, said that it thundered, the articulate voice being probably accompanied with thunder, as at the promulgation of the decalogue from Mount Sinai, Exod. xix. 19, xx. 18, 19. Others said “an angel spake unto him,” John xii. 28—30. These latter occasions, the second more fully attested by three chosen witnesses, and the third by the multitude, reflect credit back again on the first, depending on the single testimony of John, while this, in turn, gives additional weight to them.

Alterius sic

Altera poscit opem res, et conjurat amice. Hor.

The miraculous circumstances of OUR LORD’S baptism were not only marks of Divine favour, the most distinguished, to the great Author and Finisher of our Faith, but they were also signal fulfilments of ancient prophecy, and derive from thence additional importance.

1. CHRIST was styled the peculiar “SON OF GOD,” in Nathan’s famous prophecy, 2 Sam. vii. 14; by David, Ps. ii. 7; by Agur, Prov. xxx. 4; and by Nebuchadnezzar, probably from the instructions of Daniel, Dan. iii. 25.

2. He was styled, דָּוִד, “David,” not the proper name, but the appellative, ὁ ἀγαπητός, “the beloved,” as it is correctly rendered by the Sept. Isa. v. 1, and ought to be rendered in some most important prophecies descriptive of his future reign, Ps. lxxxix. 19, 20, Jer. xxx. 9, Ezek. xxxiv. 23, 24, xxxvii. 24, 25, Hosea iii. 5, &c. which are otherwise obscure or inconsistent, as usually applied to the former king, David.

Hence Ethan’s prophecy, which is a commentary on Nathan’s, and on David’s, should be rendered thus:

“I have exalted THE CHOSEN out of the people; I have found my servant THE BELOVED; with my holy oil have I anointed him, [as THE MESSIAH, or CHRIST."] Ps. lxxxix. 19, 20 *.

* “The name of THE LORD,” signifies “the power of THE LORD,” or his Majesty, Exod. xxxiii. 19, and sometimes perhaps CHRIST, Isa. xxx. 27, &c.

And in the parallel prophecy of Isaiah, "Behold my servant, whom I have CHOSEN; MY BELOVED, in whom I am well pleased; I have made MY SPIRIT rest upon Him," Isa. xlii. 1, as cited by the evangelist, Matt. xii. 18, more correctly † than in the present Hebrew text, or Sept. version, in the two first clauses; the last is the rendering of David Levi, Vol. I. p. 85, corresponding to Isa. xi. 2. In these two last prophecies, the Hebrew term, rendered "servant," is synonymous with "son." The Greek term, παῦς, also ambiguously denotes both, Luke vii. 3—7, &c.

Hence Peter declared, "How GOD anointed JESUS OF NAZARETH with the HOLY GHOST, and with power," at his baptism, Acts x. 38; and Paul, "with oil of gladness above his fellows," [the angels] Heb. i. 9, citing David's prophecy of the MESSIAH, Ps. xlv. 7; and the Baptist, that "GOD gave him THE SPIRIT immeasurably, and all things into his hand, [or power] because THE FATHER loveth THE SON," John iii. 34, 35.

2. The nature and extent of this spiritual unction is finely retold by the prophet Isaiah, concerning "the offspring of Jesse," (the father of David) THE MESSIAH.

- XI. 1. "And a rod shall come forth from the stem of Jesse,
And a branch (Nezer) from his roots shall be fruitful.
2. And THE SPIRIT OF THE LORD shall rest upon Him,
The spirit of wisdom and understanding,
The spirit of counsel and fortitude,
The spirit of the knowledge and fear of THE LORD."

1. Hence OUR LORD was styled "the root of David," Rev. v. 5, "the root and the offspring of David;" Rev. xxii. 16; in his divine nature, "the root," or foundation of "the sure mercies," or salvation "of David;" in his human nature, "the offspring of David."

2. The fulness of THE SPIRIT, permanently granted to Him,

* See the whole of the 89th Psalm, newly translated and explained, in a volume of Dissertations on the prophetic Character of CHRIST. 8vo. 1808. p. 86, &c. Rivingtons.

† The Evangelist's version is supported by the Chaldee paraphrase, "Behold my servant the MESSIAH, I will choose (or adopt) him, my BELOVED, the ORACLE, in whom I am well pleased."

is indicated by the three-fold repetition of the word spirit, or faculty, which is remarkably applied to the gifts or qualities of the HOLY SPIRIT, not singly, but in pairs; not the spirit of wisdom, and the spirit of understanding, &c. but the “spirit of wisdom and understanding,” &c. to denote the union of the speculative and practical virtues*. The speculative are comprehended under “wisdom, counsel, and knowledge of THE LORD;” the practical under “understanding, fortitude, and fear of THE LORD.” He was perfect in the theory and practice of “all righteousness,” Matt. iii. 15.

“For righteousness was the girdle of his loins,
And faithfulness the girdle of his reins.” Verse 5.

Unlike his apostles, to whom the gifts of THE SPIRIT were “divided,” or distributed severally, “to one the word of wisdom, to another the word of knowledge,” &c. 1 Cor. xii. 8—11, but “in CHRIST are deposited all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge,” Col. ii. 3, for He was “the wisdom of GOD,” Luke xi. 49, “the counsel of GOD,” Luke vii. 30, “the knowledge of GOD,” 2 Cor. x. 5, Rom. xi. 33.

Such is the admirable combination of miracles and prophecy, attending and illustrating the mysterious circumstances of OUR LORD’S baptism.

JESUS TEMPTED.

Then, immediately after his baptism, JESUS, full of THE HOLY SPIRIT, returned from Jordan, and was impelled, and led by THE SPIRIT into the wilderness of Judea, to undergo a probation or preparation for his important ministry, like Moses and Elijah, and for the same term of forty days, by prayer and fasting; during which, he was exposed to the temptation of the devil, and was with “the wild beasts,” in a frightful solitude, excluded from all human society, and did not eat any thing.

* This is the ingenious remark of David Levi, Dissert. Vol. I. p. 68—80. But he has egregiously failed in his arguments for rejecting their application to Jesus of Nazareth. 1. Because (says he) his lineal descent from David is not proved, the genealogies of Matthew and Luke both belonging to Joseph, not to Mary. 2. Because he never was endowed with the spirit of prophecy. 3. Because in his agony he betrayed pusillanimity, or want of fortitude, when he sweated drops of blood, and was inferior to Socrates, who met death like a hero, with calmness and resignation. Such was Levi’s partial blindness!

After this long and total fast *, supported miraculously by THE SPIRIT, he was hungry, Matt. iv. 1, 2 ; Mark i. 12, 13 ; Luke iv. 1, 2.

Taking advantage of this symptom of human infirmity, the devil, who probably assailed him under the disguise of an "angel of light," 2 Cor. xi. 14, and in a human form, as appears from his conversation, hoped to overcome "the second Adam," as he had done "the first," by similar temptations, "the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye, and the pride of life," (see p. 13,) not knowing that "CHRIST was to be tempted in all points, like as we are, yet without sin, that he might be able to sympathize (συμπαθεῖσαι) with our infirmities, Heb. iv. 15, that wherein he had suffered himself, when tempted, he might be able to succour them that are tempted, Heb. ii. 17, and point out, by his own example, the dangers to which we are exposed from our spiritual adversary, and also the most effectual mode of resisting him, by vigilance, prayer, and the word of GOD, rightly understood and interpreted," Luke xxii. 31—34 ; Matt. xxvi. 41 ; James iv. 7 ; Eph. vi. 11—17 ; 1 Cor. x. 13.

After a previous conversation on the divine suffrage to JESUS, at his baptism, evidently implied by the sequel, the devil, like the angel who came to feed Elijah in the wilderness of Beer-sheba, might have urged him to relieve his hunger by the miraculous exertion of his own power: "If † thou art THE SON OF GOD, command that these stones be made bread." But JESUS replied, in the authoritative language of Scripture, "It is written, Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of GOD," Deut. viii. 3. For so Moses exhorted the Israelites in the wilderness, to rely patiently on the DIVINE support, encouraged by the miraculous supply of manna, "to cast all our care upon Him who careth for us," 1 Pet. v. 7, "and will sustain us," Ps. lv. 22. And so OUR

* The Socinian commentators, Rosenmuller, Thaddæus, Schulz, &c. among the Germans, labour to do away the miraculous fast of Moses, Elijah, and CHRIST, by arbitrarily supposing that they only fasted from bread, but were sustained by herbs, roots, and wild honey, perverting Deut. ix. 9—18.

† The original term ετι, si, is frequently used for επει, siquidem, or quoniam, "since," "because," intimating not doubtfulness of supposition, but certainly of fact. As in Matt. vi. 30, xxii. 45 ; John viii. 46, xiii. 14—32, xv. 20 ; Acts iv. 9 ; 1 John iv. 11, &c. Thus Horace prays, that Faunus would be propitious to his flocks, Si tener cadit agnus, "Since a tender lamb is sacrificed" to him regularly at the end of the year, Od. III. 18. 5.

LORD afterwards declared to his disciples, "My food is to do the will of Him that sent me, and to accomplish his work," John iv. 34. And the Jews, in like manner, afterwards tempted CHRIST, "What sign doest thou, that we may see, and believe thee? our fathers did eat manna in the wilderness, as it is written, HE gave them bread from heaven," Ps. lxxviii. 24; John vi. 30, 31; evidently requiring a repetition of this miracle.

Foiled in this first temptation of appetite, Satan^r endeavoured to work on his vanity or ostentation. He took JESUS along with him, or led him to Jerusalem, "the holy city," to the temple, and placed him upon the pinnacle of the temple, or went up with him to the verge or battlement of the flat-roofed portico, which formed one of the wings of the temple, and overhung a frightful precipice beneath. See Vol. I. p. 430. And he said,

"If thou art the SON OF GOD, cast thyself down; for it is written, that HE shall give his angels charge concerning thee; and that in their hands they shall uplift thee, lest at any time thou dash thy foot against a stone.*" Ps. xci. 11, 12. This is a prophecy indeed, foretelling the ALMIGHTY'S care and protection of the MESSIAH, in figurative speech, under all dangers and difficulties, which the devil misinterpreting literally, urged him to encounter danger, by casting himself down from the battlement, and perhaps so give all the people that sign from heaven, of appearing in the clouds of heaven, or suspended in the air over the temple, (like the angel of the Lord, we may presume, in David's time, 1 Chron. xxi. 16.) which was expressly predicted of the MESSIAH, as SON OF MAN, by the prophet Daniel, vii. 13, and expected at the temple by the Jews, from the prophecy of Malachi, "THE REGENT whom ye seek will suddenly come to his temple," iii. 1; and which, the Jews, the scribes, and Pharisees, likewise "tempting him," repeatedly required, John ii. 18; Matt. xii. 38, 39, xvi. 1—4; but OUR LORD as often refused; referring them, figuratively, to a sign from earth, his resurrection on the third day after his crucifixion. Although at his iniquitous trial, he foretold the accomplishment of the former, at his second advent in glory, and also of David's prophecy: "Nevertheless [although ye will not now believe] I say unto you, hereafter ye shall see THE SON OF MAN sitting on the right hand of power, [Psalm cx. 1.] and coming in the clouds of heaven," [Matt. xxvi. 64.] He also foretold, that the sign they expected should not take place till their final conversion, the last time that he visited the temple. "Lo, your house [of THE LORD] is about to be left desolate unto you: for I say unto you, ye shall not see ME henceforth, [its brightest glory, Haggai ii. 9.] until ye can say, [with hearty repentance and true faith] blessed is he that cometh in the name of THE LORD," Matt. xxiii. 38, 39.

* "The devil can cite SCRIPTURE for his purpose:
An evil soul producing holy witness,
Is like a villain with a smiling cheek." Shakspeare.

That this was indeed the full drift of this second temptation, may fairly be collected from the scene of it, the temple, rather than the wilderness, the devil thus proposing a public exhibition, in preference to a private, of throwing himself from one of the precipices of the mount of temptation, which was just at hand, and to which they returned, for the last and most powerful, of ambition.

This mountain, called Quarantania by travellers, (from "forty" days,) is represented by Sandys, Maundrell, Mariti, &c. as of most difficult and dangerous ascent, but affording the most charming and extensive prospect imaginable, from its summit, which overlooks the mountains of Arabia, the country of Gilead, the country of the Ammonites, the plains of Moab, the plain of Jericho, the river Jordan, and the whole extent of the Dead Sea. These composed, according to the most natural and unstrained interpretation, "*all the kingdoms of the world ," or of "*the land of promise ," in the midst of which they then stood, "and the glory of them," their cities, villages, corn-fields, &c. "in a moment of time," and from one and the same point of view; and the devil said, "All these will I give thee, if thou wilt fall down and worship me;" adding, according to Luke, "for all this authority is committed unto me, and I give it to whomsoever I will." Thus representing himself as the guardian angel, or protector of the holy land, as the archangel Michael was represented in Daniel, x. 13—21.

This audacious and impious proposal of divine worship, which no true angel of light, except CHRIST himself, ever received, or even tolerated, Rev. xix. 10, xxii. 9, detected the false fiend to be the power of darkness ; and to shew that he was fully known, JESUS called him by his proper name, and banished him from his presence, as his divine superior, and rebuked him in the language of SCRIPTURE :

* Κοσμου, Matt. iv. 8 = οικουμενης, Luke iv. 5. The latter was shewn to denote the land of Judea and Galilee, or Herod's dominions, Luke ii. 1; the former is also frequently used in a limited sense, John xii. 10, xviii. 20, &c. and expressly denotes the promised land, Rom. iv. 13.

“ *Begone from my sight, Satan, for it is written, Thou shalt worship THE LORD THY GOD, and him only shalt thou serve,” Exod. xx. 3, 4 ; Deut. vi. 13 ; 1 Sam. vii. 3.

“ Then the devil left him,” confounded and vanquished at his own weapons. “ And lo, angels came and ministered unto him,” and supplied him, we may presume, with food. These true angels, contrasted with Satan, lead us to think, that the latter “ transformed himself into an angel of light.”

In the order of the three temptations, we have followed Matthew, in preference to Luke, who transposes the second and third, consulting the order of place, and bringing together the two temptations in the wilderness. But Matthew’s order of time is preferable ; for, 1. It is not likely that Satan would have dared to offer another temptation, after his detection and banishment, and the appearance of good angels : and, 2. the distance of Quarantania from Jerusalem was not considerable ; nor is there any time specified by the evangelists for the duration of the temptations, after the expiration of the forty days.

It is remarkable, that JESUS was afterwards twice assailed by the same temptation of ambition or worldly grandeur ; first by his own disciple Peter, deprecating his approaching sufferings and crucifixion, whom our Lord rebuked as an undesigned emissary of Satan on this occasion, “ Begone from my sight, Satan,” Matt. xvi. 23.

Afterwards the same temptation was repeated, when the multitude, in the wilderness, were persuaded by the stupendous miracle of the five thousand, fed with a few loaves and fishes, that JESUS was “ the prophet like Moses, foretold to come into the world,” and contended to take him by force and make him king, or proclaim him as their expected MESSIAH, John vi. 14, 15. But he, knowing their worldly-minded ambitious views of deliverance from the Roman yoke, and universal conquest and dominion, withdrew himself privately out of their reach.

Although the devil quitted JESUS at this time, it was only “ for a season ;” having been foiled in the arts of seduction, he had recourse to open violence. He entered into Judas afterwards, when a fit opportunity offered of working upon his resentment, and his avarice, to betray his Lord, Luke xxii. 3, John xiii. 2, and he worked upon the inveterate malice of the Jewish council, by the agency of Judas, to apprehend him by night, for fear of the people, and by their clamour and importunity to intimidate the pusillanimous Roman governor Pilate to condemn him to death, knowing and declaring him to be innocent.

* This seems to be the import of the phrase, “ Get thee behind me.”

It is remarkable, in the history of the temptation, that OUR LORD did not deny Satan's pretensions to worldly sway. On the contrary, he rather confirmed them. He afterwards styled him "the prince of this world," John xii. 31, xiv. 30, xvi. 11, and "the power of darkness," Luke xxii. 53, Col. i. 13. And he commissioned his apostle Paul, after his resurrection, "to turn the Gentiles from darkness to light, from the power of Satan unto GOD," Acts xxvi. 17, 18, whence Paul styled Satan "the god of this world," 2 Cor. iv. 4; and John remarks for the consolation of believers, "Greater is HE [presiding] in you, than he [presiding] in the world," 1 John iv. 4.

THE DEPUTATION TO JOHN.

The fame of John's baptism at length attracted the notice of the Jewish Sanhedrim, and they sent a formal deputation of priests and Levites, of the sect of the Pharisees, to enquire of him who he was, whether he was "the CHRIST, or Elijah, or the prophet like Moses," whom they severally expected. And when he expressly denied that he was any of these, then they enquired by what authority he baptized? To which he answered, as the herald of CHRIST, foretold by Isaiah, "The voice of one crying in the wilderness," &c. as before, further intimating, that CHRIST was actually come, and "*in the midst of them, though they knew him not," John i. 19—27.

This deputation appears to have taken place after OUR LORD'S baptism, during his absence and temptation, and before he returned to Bethabara, on the day after their departure. John dismissed them with the foregoing general answer, prudently declining to give them any more particular information respecting the person of CHRIST, whom he judged they sought, like Herod, only to destroy, John i. 28, 29.

* Μεσος ὑμῶν, "In the midst of you." So Moses described the future prophet like himself, Deut. xviii. 15.

On the return of JESUS, whom John beheld coming towards him, he said to some of his confidential disciples, who were with him, "See the LAMB OF GOD who taketh away the sins of the world!" thus pointing out JESUS to them as "THE LAMB to be led to the slaughter," or expiatory "sacrifice," as the grand atonement for the sins of mankind, foretold by the prophet Isaiah, in that remarkable description of the rejection and sufferings of CHRIST, in the 53d chapter, when "he was numbered with the transgressors," as applied by OUR LORD to himself, Luke xxii. 37, and by the HOLY SPIRIT, Acts viii. 32—35. For he was the true paschal lamb, typified in the mysterious institution of the passover, who was to be "slain from the foundation of the world," in that "grand charter of God's mercy to mankind," the judgment of the old serpent, Gen. iii. 15, Rev. xiii. 8. See p. 16, &c.

The day following, John again pointed out JESUS, as he was walking about, to two of his disciples, Andrew, Simon's brother, and John the Evangelist, most probably, (who, through modesty, suppresses his own name in his Gospel, see xiii. 23, xx. 2, xxi. 7,) and said, "See the LAMB OF GOD!" alluding evidently to his former conversation, at which therefore they had been present.

This emphatic repetition they considered as a recommendation to follow "THE CHIEF," in preference to the "harbinger," and accordingly they enquired of JESUS where he lodged, and followed him thither, on his gracious invitation, and spent the remainder of the evening with him, from "the tenth hour," or four in the afternoon.

To these two first disciples was added Simon, Andrew's brother, whom OUR LORD afterwards surnamed Cephas, or Peter, (the former in Hebrew, the latter in Greek, signifying "a stone,") and, "on the morrow," Philip and Nathanael, surnamed Bartholomew, who uttered that noble confession of faith, when his prejudices against "Nazareth," were overcome, by our Lord's intimate knowledge of some secret transaction of his under a fig-tree, "Rabbi, thou art THE SON OF GOD! thou art [THE CHRIST] the KING OF ISRAEL!" John i. 35—50.

JESUS returned from Bethabara to Galilee, and on "the third day after," he worked his first miracle at Cana, on the confines of Tyre, where, at a wedding, to which he and his disciples were invited, he turned the water into wine, to confirm the faith of his early disciples. There “he manifested his glory,” or “miraculous power,” (which marked his superiority over John, who did no miracles,) “and his disciples believed on him.”

On this occasion, he, perhaps, communicated his design of working the miracle to his mother before-hand, and when she said, “they have no wine,” he repressed her impatience by a gentle rebuke: “*Woman, what hast thou to do with me * ? my time is not yet come*.” In this she meekly acquiesced, saying to the servants, “whatsoever he may say to you, do,” John ii. 1—11.

Some time after, when Jesus had opened his commission publicly at Jerusalem, and his disciples baptized in Judea, John removed from Bethabara to Ænon, near Salem, or Shalem, northward, in the province of Samaria, Gen. xxxiii. 18, and also “because there was much water there,” convenient for baptizing, in a different part of the country.

While John was employed there, before he was cast into prison, there arose a question between some of his disciples and the Jews concerning purification, or the comparative efficacy of the baptisms of JOHN and of JESUS, which John decided, as before, in favour of the latter, declaring that he was only sent before CHRIST as his harbinger; that CHRIST was “the bridegroom” of his spiritual bride, the Church, as foretold by David, Ps. xlv. 9, Rev. xxi. 2, but that himself was only the bridesman, “the bridegroom’s friend,” or attendant, who heard and obeyed his voice, and shared in his joy upon that occasion. He then foretold CHRIST’s encrease, and his own decrease; that CHRIST came from heaven, and testified heavenly things, himself earthly things; that CHRIST testified what he had seen and heard, but that none received his heavenly testimony, generally speaking; but that whosoever did receive it, sealed, or subscribed to the veracity of GOD, in performing his promises of redemption to mankind by the prophets, in sending HIS SON, THE ORACLE, into the world, that whosoever believed on him should have eternal life, but that whosoever believed not, or disobeyed THE

* “Why dost thou interfere in my concerns?” See this phrase explained, 2 Sam. xix. 22, in the history of David.

SON, should not see life, but was liable to the permanent wrath of GOD, John iii. 23—36.

The amount of John's testimony to CHRIST was considerable, and included the leading doctrines of CHRISTIANITY.

1. He proclaimed to all the people, as his herald, the approach of CHRIST, in the character, though not the person, of Elijah, foretold by Isaiah and Malachi, and interpreted by Gabriel and JESUS.

2. He stated his pre-existence and dignity, as the eternal SON OF GOD, and THE ORACLE, and his own CHIEF.

3. He foretold his atonement for the sins of the world, as the predicted LAMB OF GOD.

4. He foretold the rejection of CHRIST by the Jewish nation, and the adoption of the despised Gentiles in their room.

5. He foretold the judgments to be inflicted on the Jewish nation, for their impenitence and apostacy, and the general judgment of all mankind by CHRIST, and the final separation of the good from the bad.

6. He foretold CHRIST'S encrease and his own decrease.

7. He witnessed CHRIST'S spiritual unction at his baptism, and pointed him out personally to some " true Israelites, without guile."

When he had thus fulfilled the important purposes of his ministry, that it might not interfere, we may presume, with that of CHRIST, by an apparent competition, or rivalry *, though there existed none in reality, " he finished his arduous course," and thankless office of a national reformer, being cast into prison by Herod, at the instigation of his wicked paramour Herodias, within a year after he had baptized, and borne witness to JESUS as THE CHRIST. And after spending near a year longer in prison, this holy man was at length wantonly sacrificed, in the midst of conviviality and mirth, to the licentious fascinations of a young woman, instigated by the implacable vengeance of an old one, her mother, to degrade herself, and to be guilty of a complicated crime of treachery and cruelty, repugnant to youthful simplicity and innocence, and to the rash oath of a worthless and merciless prince, which had better been broken than kept, Matt. xiv. 3—11, Mark vi. 17—28, Luke iii. 19, 20.

* The speedy termination of the Baptist's ministry and life, according to Chrysostom, was designed by Providence, that the people might not be divided in their opinions between both.

JOHN'S MESSAGE TO CHRIST.

During John's imprisonment, having heard of the works of CHRIST, he sent two of his disciples to enquire of him, "*Art thou He that should come, or look we for another?"

This message was delivered in public, while he was employed in the specific works foretold of the MESSIAH by the prophets, his peculiar miracles, Isa. xxxv. 3—6, xlii. 6, 7, Ezek. xxxiv. 16, and his doctrines, Isa. lxi. 1, Ezek. xxxiv. 15, Zech. xi. 7, Luke xix. 10.

And JESUS answered and said unto the messengers, Go and shew John again these things which ye do hear and see; the blind receive their sight, and the lame walk; the lepers are healed, and the deaf hear; the dead are raised up, and the poor have THE GOSPEL preached unto them.

And blessed is he whosoever shall not be offended in me, Matt. xi. 2—6, Luke vii. 18—22.

The design of John's message has been variously represented: some think it was designed to remove the doubts of his disciples respecting CHRIST'S mission, others his own. The latter opinion, which was that of Tertullian, seems to be more probable, for the following reasons:

1. Notwithstanding the ample testimony which John had borne to JESUS as the CHRIST, and which surely his miracles were calculated to confirm, he might have entertained wrong apprehensions respecting the nature of his kingdom, with the generality of the Jews, and even OUR LORD'S own disciples. John might not have thoroughly understood the nature of CHRIST'S kingdom, and therefore expressed a jealous wonder, why JESUS who worked such stupendous miracles, did not deliver him from the hands of his enemies, but suffer his faithful herald to languish in prison. John, too, was not better instructed than the apostles James and John, who applied to be made the prime ministers of CHRIST, "to sit the one on his right hand, the other on his left, in his kingdom," Matt. xx. 21, or than Peter, "Behold we have forsaken all, and followed thee: what shall we have therefore?" Matt. xix. 27. Nor were even they fully instructed in the spiritual nature of his kingdom, until they had been "baptized with the HOLY SPIRIT," on the day of Pentecost, a baptism, therefore, which John could not understand.

* "Blessed be He that cometh in the name of THE LORD," Ps. cxviii. 26, was universally understood of THE MESSIAH, and applied by the multitude to JESUS, Matt. xxi. 9, Heb. x. 37.

2. OUR LORD'S answer was directed not to the messengers, but to John himself, and the conclusion conveyed a gentle, but yet pointed rebuke, for "the offence" he in particular had taken, with a kind admonition not to forfeit that "blessing," by doubt or distrust, which awaited "all that trusted in Him," as THE SON OF GOD, foretold by David, Ps. ii. 12.

3. That John and his disciples were fully satisfied with this answer, and with the triple evidence of miracles, doctrines, and prophecy, to establish CHRIST'S mission, (more especially foretold by that evangelical prophet Isaiah, on whom John rested his own credentials, as CHRIST'S herald) we may conclude, because it was fully sufficient to convince such a wise and good man, and because when John was beheaded, "his disciples, after they had buried the body, went and told JESUS," which was plainly an act of respect and kindness, and the behaviour of men who entertained an honourable opinion of CHRIST, as their master's "chief," and deeply interested in his unworthy fate.

4. And this is confirmed by the testimony of JESUS to JOHN.

To remove any unfavourable impressions the multitude might have entertained of John, in consequence of his message, and OUR LORD'S answer, JESUS took the earliest opportunity, "while the messengers were departing," to delineate

THE CHARACTER OF JOHN.

1. "John was not a reed shaken with the wind." He was no wavering or inconstant teacher, but invariably and steadily preached the same doctrine of repentance to the people throughout, as the only means of averting the divine judgments, and qualifying them for admission into CHRIST'S kingdom.

2. "He was not a man cloathed in soft raiment." He was no courtier, or great man, "cloathed in purple and fine linen," but coarse in his dress, and austere in his deportment; commanding respect and veneration, as a prophet, by the energy of his preaching, and the sanctity of his manners, like another Elijah in character.

3. "He was greater than a prophet," because he was himself the subject of prophecy, as the harbinger of the Messiah; and whereas the prophets of old only foresaw at a distance the expected MESSIAH with the eye of faith, Numb. xxiv. 17, John viii. 56, 1 Pet. i. 11, 12, he had the more glorious privilege and the higher honour of conversing with him face to face, as a man with his friend, and of opening the new dispensation of THE GOSPEL, which dated its commencement from him, as the old dispensation of THE LAW and the prophets terminated in him, Acts i. 21, 22, Matt. xi. 13.

4. His powerful preaching turned many to righteousness, and produced a considerable reformation among the people, inso-much that they eagerly and “violently pressed” for admission into CHRIST’S kingdom, Matt. xi. 12.

However, as a drawback from this high character, OUR LORD observed,

5. “He that is least in the kingdom of heaven is greater than he;” that is, one of my inferior disciples, after the baptism of THE SPIRIT, shall be superior to John, in knowledge of the mystery of THE GOSPEL, in spiritual gifts, and power of working miracles.

Such was the honest and impartial testimony which the Baptist and HIS CHIEF reciprocally bore to each other. The offence taken by John is not disguised, nor his reprehension by CHRIST suppressed, in the memoirs of those most candid of all historians, the Evangelists.

From their combined evidence, we are abundantly warranted to believe, that John and JESUS were neither enthusiasts nor *impostors, but that their testimony to each other was true, and proved by mighty signs, wonders, and prophecies, fulfilled in both.

CHRIST’S PUBLIC MINISTRY.

FIRST PASSOVER †.

After JESUS had worked his first miracle at Cana, he went

* This important question is ably discussed in Doctor Bell’s critical examination of the missions of John the Baptist and of JESUS CHRIST.

† The assumed date of this passover, A.D. 28, is confirmed, 1. By the time that had then been spent in rebuilding Herod’s temple, this year being the forty-sixth from the time he laid its foundations; see the preceding period, Herod’s reign. 2. It was also “the acceptable year of THE LORD,” or a Jubilee, Luke iv. 19, the thirty-third, reckoned from the first general sabbatical year, after the second division of the conquered lands by Joshua, B.C. 1589, as shewn before, under the article of Jubilee.

from thence, with his mother, brethren, (or cousin-germans) who, after Joseph's death, appear to have resided with her, and his five first disciples, to Capernaum, on the lake of Gennesareth, or sea of Galilee, whence, after a sojournment of "not many days," he proceeded with them to the passover at Jerusalem, John ii. 12, 13.

He there first, "coming to his own home," John i. 11, opened his divine commission in the temple, by a significant act of authority, namely, of purging it, or driving out of its courts, all the traders in sacrifices, and the money-changers, who exercised a profane traffic there, for the convenience of foreigners who attended the passover, Deut. xiv. 25, with this rebuke, "Make not MY FATHER'S house a house of merchandize;" repeating in public, what he had before said in private, at his first visit, that GOD was his peculiar FATHER, or that He was their expected MESSIAH, the SON OF GOD; "animated" with that "pious zeal" for the purity of the temple, foretold of him by David, Ps. lxxix. 9.

Upon this occasion, the Jews, or their rulers, required of him a sign from heaven to prove his commission; but he enigmatically referred them to a sign from the earth, his crucifixion by them, and resurrection on the third day: "Destroy this temple, and in three days will I raise it up."

This they misunderstood literally, and expressed their surprise: forty-six years hath this temple been building, [and it is not finished yet] and wilt thou raise it up in three days? But he spoke figuratively, of "the temple of his body," [in which "dwelt all the fulness of THE GODHEAD corporeally," Col. ii. 9.] Hence this was made an article of false accusation against him at his iniquitous trial, three years after, one witness alleging that he said, "I am able to destroy the temple of GOD, and to build it in three days," Matt. xxvi. 61; the other, "I will destroy this temple made with hands, and in three days I will build another, made without hands:" their testimony not being consistent, and the latter confounding the literal and figurative meaning together, Mark xiv. 58, 59.

Neither was the studied obscurity of this enigmatical answer understood by the disciples themselves, until it was explained by the event of his resurrection on the third day; then indeed they remembered this saying, and believed the scripture-pro- phesy, (γραφῆ) [that “he was to rise from the dead,” Ps. xvi. 10, &c. John xx. 9.] and “the oracular word which JESUS spake,” John ii. 12—22.

During this part of the passover, JESUS worked miracles at Jerusalem, and many seeing them, believed in his name as THE CHRIST; but JESUS did not trust himself to them, or openly profess himself to be THE CHRIST, “because he knew all men,” and especially their carnal and worldly minded notions respecting CHRIST and his kingdom; and had no need that “any should testify of man, [whether he were sincere in his belief, or not] for he knew himself what was in man,” as THE SEARCHER OF HEARTS, (Acts i. 24, Rev. ii. 23,) and even “knew from the beginning that Judas would betray him,” John vi. 64, ii. 23—25.

NICODEMUS

was one of these early converts, “a Pharisee and a ruler of the Jews,” or a member of the Sanhedrim, and also styled “the teacher of Israel *,” a distinguished scribe, or expounder of the law, a man of superior rank and information. He came privately to JESUS “by night,” in order, it should seem, to avoid giving offence to the ruling powers, who, in general, did not believe in him, John vii. 48, though several unquestionably did, John xii. 42, such as Joseph of Arimathea, the friend and fellow-disciple of Nicodemus, John xix. 38, 39, and perhaps Gamaliel, the favourer of the apostles, Acts v. 34—40.

Nicodemus seems to have been a hearer of John the Baptist also, who did no miracles, (compare Matt. iii. 7, and John iii. 11,) and came to learn the way of salvation more perfectly from a divine teacher, as he acknowledged CHRIST to be from his miracles, both in his own opinion, and in that of others also.

“Rabbi, we know that thou art a teacher come from GOD, for none can do those miracles that thou doest, unless GOD be with him,” John iii. 1, 2.

To such a respectful and respectable enquirer, JESUS was more explicit. In an interesting conversation, he communicated

* Ὁ διδάσκαλος τοῦ Ἰσραὴλ. The Jews gave their doctors high and sounding titles, like the “Angelic, the Admirable, the Irrefragable,” &c. of the scholastic ages. Nicodemus might have been distinguished as “the teacher of Israel,” by his followers, which makes the reproof of JESUS severer, John iii. 10. Middleton, p. 346.

to him the fundamental doctrines of Christian faith. 1. The necessity of new birth, or regeneration by baptism and the HOLY 'SPIRIT to salvation, verse 3—11. 2. The redemption of mankind by the death of CHRIST through faith, of which the brazen serpent was a type, verse 12—15. 3. The original cause of this mode of redemption, the love of GOD, verse 16—18. 4. The vices of mankind, the leading cause of unbelief, verse 19—21. These will be considered in the ensuing article of the spirit of the gospel.

After he had attended this first passover at Jerusalem, JESUS spent some time in Judea. During his stay there, our Lord's disciples baptized in his name with water unto repentance, following up John's baptism; but JESUS himself baptized not, because his was properly the baptism of THE SPIRIT unto regeneration, and it was not to take place until he was glorified, after his resurrection, John iii. 26, iv. 2, vii. 39, Acts i. 5.

At length, the fame of his baptism (or rather that of his disciples) excited the jealousy of the Pharisees, and gave umbrage to the rulers, who found not in the poor, the meek, and lowly JESUS, the MESSIAH they wanted. "His own household entertained him not," John i. 11, iii. 25, 26, iv. 1—3. As soon, therefore, as he heard of John's imprisonment by Herod, near the end of that year, he determined to leave his own country, where he testified a prophet had no honour, and to return to Galilee, and undauntedly preach the Gospel even in Herod's dominions, John iii. 23, 24, iv. 3, 43, 44.

His stay in Judea this time was probably about eight months, for in his passage through Samaria to Galilee, he reckoned that there were "four months until harvest," John iv. 35, which commenced in that country about the passover.

THE WOMAN OF SAMARIA.

JESUS, on his way through Samaria, stopped at Jacob's well, near Sychar, formerly Sichem, or Sechem, Gen. xxxiii. 19, about the sixth hour, or noon; and while his disciples went to buy provisions in the neighbouring town, JESUS, wearied with his journey, sat down, during the heat of the day; as formerly, perhaps, when THE LORD appeared to Abraham, Gen. xviii. 1—5.

In his remarkable conversation with the Samaritan woman, who came to the well to draw water, he, in answer to her question, decided the controversy between the Jewish mode of worship at Jerusalem, and the rival Samaritan at Mount Gerizim, in favour of the former; at the same time foretelling that both would soon be superseded by the true and spiritual Christian worship throughout the world, more agreeable to the SPIRITUAL nature of the DEITY. And to her he openly avowed himself the MESSIAH, in his two-fold character of a PROPHET, or teacher of religion, and the SAVIOUR OF THE WORLD, according to the true notions which were entertained and expressed by the woman, when he told her all that ever she did, or the private history of her life, and by her countrymen, when they heard his preaching, John iv. 7—42.

The favourable disposition of these Samaritans of Sichem to receive CHRIST and his doctrines, is elegantly expressed in his agricultural comparison to his disciples, when he saw them coming to meet him, on the woman's invitation: "Lift up your eyes, and observe the fields, how they are white already unto the harvest;" the whiteness of the stalk at the top indicating the ripeness of the grain in general*, verse 35. And to this, John's preaching, perhaps at Salem, in that neighbourhood, might have contributed; and OUR LORD predicted the future success of his Apostles, following both himself and John: "One soweth, and another reapeth. I sent you forth to reap what ye laboured not; others have laboured, and ye have entered into [the fruits of] their labours," ver. 37, 38.

CHRIST'S FIRST RETURN TO GALILEE.

After spending two days with these hospitable and well-disposed Samaritans, at their entreaty, he departed and went into Galilee, where he also was favourably received, the Galileans having seen the miracles he did the preceding passover at Jerusalem, which they also attended. Here, at Cana, he worked his second miracle, of healing, at Capernaum, about twenty-three miles distant, the son of a nobleman, or one of Herod's courtiers, who besought him that he would come and heal his son, who was at the point of death. And JESUS said, in his usual concise and authoritative manner, πορευου, ὁ υἱός σου ζῆ, Go thy way, thy son liveth! And the father believed the oracular word, and found his son healed, the fever having left him the day before, precisely at the hour that JESUS spoke, ver. 43—54.

* Molli paulatim flavescet campus aristâ. Virgil.

Here the "yellowness" precedes the "whiteness," or ripeness.

With his return to Galilee, the three first Evangelists begin their accounts of OUR LORD'S public ministry, because it was the principal scene of his preaching and miracles. The substance of his preaching was the same as John's: "Repent, for the kingdom of HEAVEN is at hand," Matt. iv. 17, or, as more fully expressed, "The season is already fulfilled, and the kingdom of GOD is at hand; repent, and believe in the GOSPEL," Mark i. 15.

"When the fulness of time had come, GOD sent forth HIS SON, born of a woman, born* under THE LAW, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons, [promised in THE GOSPEL,]*" Gal. iv. 4, 5.

This fulness of time may appear from the following prophetic and chronological characters :

1. By Jacob's prophecy, SHILOH, "the APOSTLE," was to be sent for the instruction of the Jews, before "the sceptre had departed from Judah," when Judea was made a Roman province, and before the dissolution of their ecclesiastical polity, "before the native scribe, or expounder of the law, had departed," while they were still "under the law †." 2. And the second temple still standing, according to Malachi. And 3. his harbinger, the Baptist, already come in the power and spirit of Elijah.

By Daniel's prophecies :

4. "In the days of the four great temporal kingdoms," of the Babylonians, Medo-Persians, Macedo-Grecians, and Romans, when the three first had been incorporated, as it were, with the fourth, which had now reached the zenith of its power and grandeur, the fifth or spiritual kingdom of the stone was to be founded; and, though small in its beginnings, was to subdue all those kingdoms, to become the kingdom of the mountain, and to fill the whole earth.

5. "After the sixty-two weeks," and during "the one week,"

* The word γενόμενον, in both places, should be rendered "born" (not "made,") as also Rom. i. 3; 1 Cor. i. 30; like Isa. ix. 6; John viii. 58. And so Josephus, "Of Phaleg, the son of Eber, is born (γίνεται) a son Ragau," Ant. I. 6, 5. And Hesiod wishes (ἡ προσθε θανεῖν, ἡ ἐπιετα γενεσθαι) that he had died before, or to be born after, the iron age. See Vol. I. p. 247.

† See the foregoing interpretation of the prophecy, p. 15, &c.

in the midst of which “the MESSIAH was to be cut off.” And accordingly they expired A.D. 14, fourteen years before the commencement of OUR LORD’S public ministry, A.D. 28.

By Isaiah’s prophecies :

6. The precise year of its commencement was foretold to be a Jubilee, or “the acceptable year of THE LORD,” and such was A.D. 28, as shewn before.

7. The chief scene of his ministry is also foretold to be “Galilee of the Gentiles,” the upper or northern Galilee, bordering on Syria, which had formerly been “the land of Naphtali, and the land of Zebulon ;” the first which had been wasted, and the inhabitants carried into captivity by the Assyrians, under Tiglath-pilassar, 2 Kings xv. 29, 1 Chron. v. 26 ; and also the first to be blessed with the marvellous light of the GOSPEL, though held in contempt by the Jews.

- IX. 1. “As [GOD,] in the former time debased
The land of Zebulon, and the land of Naphtali,
So in the future shall He make glorious,
[By] the way of the sea, beside Jordan,
Galilee of the Gentiles.
2. The people that walked in darkness
Have seen a great light ;
The inhabitants in a land the shadow of death,
Upon them hath the light shined.”

This noble prophecy (more closely rendered) is partially cited by the Evangelist Matthew, giving only the substance of the first verse, and a slight variation of the second.

- IV. 15. — “The land of Zebulon and the land of Naphtali, —
[By] the way of the sea, beside Jordan,
Galilee of the Gentiles :
16. The people that sate in darkness
Have seen a great light ;
And to them that sate in the region and shadow of death,
To them hath the light arisen.”

May the concentrated light of these luminous chronological prophecies contribute to remove that “partial blindness which hath still befallen Israel,” and the veil, of ignorance, inattention, and obduracy, which prevents the Jews from understanding the spirit and meaning of their own LAW, and perceiving that “CHRIST is the end of the LAW for righteousness,” “the testifying of JESUS, the spirit or drift of prophecy,” “to whom give all the prophets witness ;” which veil has hitherto been cast over them, as a judicial punishment for their wilful and malicious rejection of GOSPEL LIGHT, as repeatedly foretold by Moses and the prophets, CHRIST and his apostles, and as some of their own Rabbis ingenuously confess. See the remarkable narrative of Solomon Dutch, p. 411.

CHRIST'S FIRST VISIT TO NAZARETH.

JESUS again experienced that “no prophet is acceptable in his own country,” at Nazareth, when he opened his commission there, as SHILOH and CHRIST, on the grand Jubilee, foretold in that other noble prophecy of Isaiah.

- LXI. 1. “The Spirit of THE LORD is upon me, Because He hath anointed me
To preach the Gospel to the poor ;
He hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted,
To proclaim liberty to the captives,
And recovery of sight to the blind * ;
[To set at liberty them that are bruised †.]
2. To proclaim the acceptable year of THE LORD.” Luke iv. 18.

On this occasion, in the synagogue, he read and applied it to himself: “This day is this scripture-prophecy (γραφή) fulfilled in your ears.” But though “all the assembly had their eyes fixed on him, and wondered at the words of grace that proceeded from his mouth,” thus “bearing testimony” undesignedly to another signal prophecy of the MESSIAH :

“Thou art most beautiful among the sons of Adam, Grace is shed forth on thy lips.” Psalm xlv. 2.

yet their prejudices soon recurred, on account of the apparent meanness of his descent, “Is not this Joseph's son?” They also reproached him with not healing any sick persons at Nazareth, as he had done at Capernaum, in the case of the nobleman's

* This line in the Evangelist's citation is supported by the Sept. and Arab. versions and by the parallel prophecy, Isa. xxxv. 5. Instead of it, the present Masorete text, followed by the Vulgate Latin and Syr. gives, “And opening of prison to the bound.” The former seems preferable, as stating one of the specific miracles of the MESSIAH actually performed by JESUS, which might have led the Jews, at an early period, to corrupt the text, in order to weaken the evidence of this signal prophecy.

† This line within brackets, in the Evangelist's citation, is wanting in the Sept. and Arab. as well as in the Hebrew text. It seems therefore to have been a marginal gloss from Isa. lviii. 6, where the Sept. renders also, ἀποστέλλαι τετρασμένους ἐν ἀφῆσει, though not conformable to the present Hebrew text there ; and here it seems to express the substance of the fourth and fifth lines, and therefore to be a mere tautology.

son: "Ye will surely say, or apply to me, this proverb, 'Physician, heal thyself:' whatsoever we have heard done at Capernaum, do here also in thine own country." But JESUS told them they were not worthy, because they did not receive him as a prophet, and justified his conduct by the example of the greatest of their prophets, Elijah and Elisha, who worked miracles for heathens, in preference to their own ungrateful and persecuting countrymen. Provoked at this severe and undaunted reproof, as they justly interpreted his answer, they thrust him out of the city, and led him to the brow of the hill, on which it stood, to throw him down headlong; but, either blinding their eyes, or making himself invisible, he passed through the midst of them, and took up his residence at Capernaum, the metropolis of Galilee, in their neighbourhood, where the people were well affected toward him, and where he was likely to be under the protection of the nobleman whose son he had cured, and also of the Roman Centurion, (Matt. viii. 5,) and of the Ruler of the Synagogue, (Mark v. 22,) for whom he was next to work signal miracles, and in security from the machinations of his enemies at Jerusalem, the chief priests, scribes, and Pharisees, which followed him even into Galilee, (Luke v. 17.) The adjacent sea of Galilee, or lake of Tiberias, surrounded with many towns and populous villages, and where his disciples chiefly resided, afforded him peculiar facilities also for travelling by water from place to place, and for avoiding the importunities of the multitude, when they either incommoded, or intended to make him "King" by force. Upon all these accounts, therefore, Capernaum was peculiarly fitted for his chief residence, Luke iv. 16—32.

His next care was to summon his early disciples, Simon Peter and Andrew, James, and John, to constant attendance on his person, that they might witness his miracles, and be instructed in his doctrines, Mat. iv. 18—22, Mark i. 16—20. Their call, and the miraculous draught of fishes, elegantly signifying that they were hereafter to become fishers of men, is related more fully, Luke v. 1—11. About the time of their call, we may date the cure of Peter's mother-in-law, Mark i. 29, Luke iv. 38, Matt. viii. 14*.

* Matthew places this cure after the sermon on the Mount, but the joint testimony of Mark and Luke, for its earlier date, seems preferable; especially as Matthew does not critically determine the time.

Then JESUS visited all Galilee, teaching in their Synagogues, preaching the Gospel of the kingdom [of heaven,] and healing all manner of sickness and disease among the people ; and was followed by great multitudes from Galilee, Decapolis, Jerusalem, Judea, and from [Perea] beyond Jordan, Matt. iv. 23—25 ; Mark i. 39 ; Luke v. 15.

Among the most remarkable miracles he performed at this time, was the cure of the demoniac, at Capernaum, Mark i. 21—28 ; Luke iv. 31—37.

THE SERMON ON THE MOUNT.

This divine discourse, which forms the finest exposition, and enlargement of the decalogue, (as shall be shewn in the ensuing article of the spirit of the Gospel,) appears to have been delivered, not on, or near, Mount Tabor, as usually supposed ; but further north, according to the ingenious conjecture of Dr. Middleton, drawn from the definite expression of the scene of it, το ορος, the mountain * ; which, as no mountain had been mentioned before, he supposes to represent “ the mountain district * ” of Galilee, in the neighbourhood of Capernaum, which formed part of that great chain of mountains which runs through Palestine, nearly from north to south ; and we may add, as distinguished from τοπος πεδινος, “ a plain,” or “ flat place,” contrasted therewith, which was the scene of an ensuing discourse †, Luke vi. 12—17, probably near the border of the lake of Galilee.

The season of its delivery is usually supposed to have been spring, from our Lord’s illustration of the lilies of the field, Matt. vi. 28, or rather, as Michaelis conjectures, “ the crown imperial,” a beautiful and stately plant, common in the meadows of the east, and which blows early in spring. Middleton,

* Middleton has shewn, p. 186, that το ορος, “ the mountain,” to which Lot was warned to fly, is contrasted with the cities of the plain, Gen. xix. 17 ; and where the spies of Joshua sheltered themselves, Josh. ii. 23, is explained, ἡ ορεινή, “ the mountain district,” ver. 22 ; and we may add, ἡ πέτρα, “ the rock,” in the parable of the Sower, Luke viii. 6, is explained by το πετρωδες, “ the rocky or stoney ground,” Mark iv. 5.

† Several commentators reckon that Luke vi. 20, &c. records the same discourse as Matt. v. 1, &c. And a learned friend, Archdeacon Churton, thus ingeniously reconciles the apparent difference of place in the two Evangelists.

“ The scene in Matthew was a mountain, ορος, as contrasted with the plain, or valley at the foot of it. But it was not on the summit [of the mountain], but on a level place, according to Luke, the first shelf, suppose, on the descent of the hill.”

Greek article, p. 185, 192. See also Vol. I. of this work, p. 26, the month Adar.

MIRACLES.

The sermon was followed, and ratified, by a signal train of miracles.

1. The leper cured, Matt. viii. 1—4; Mark i. 40—44; Luke v. 12, 13.

2. The centurion's servant at Capernaum cured, Matt. viii. 5—13; Luke vii. 1—10.

3. The widow's son at Nain raised to life, Luke vii. 11—16.

4. The storm on the lake quelled, Matt. viii. 23—27; Mark iv. 35—41; Luke viii. 22—25.

5. A legion of demons sent from the two demoniacs into the swine, Matt. viii. 28—34; Mark v. 1—17; Luke viii. 27—37.

6. The bed-ridden paralytic cured, Matt. ix. 2—8; Mark ii. 2—12; Luke v. 18—26.

7. The woman cured of a bloody flux by touching his garment, Matt. ix. 20—22; Mark v. 25—34; Luke viii. 43—48.

8. Jairus' daughter raised to life, Matt. ix. 18—26; Mark v. 22—43; Luke viii. 41—56.

9. Two blind men restored to sight, Matt. ix. 27—31.

10. A dumb demoniac cured, Matt. ix. 32, 33.

Of these miracles, the most remarkable were,

THE LEPER CURED.

This Jewish leper was cured by two authoritative words, $\Theta\epsilon\lambda\omega$, $\kappa\alpha\theta\alpha\rho\iota\sigma\theta\eta\tau\iota$, “I will, be purified;” exactly corresponding to the terms of the supplication, “LORD, if thou wilt, thou art able to purify me.”

Our Lord's injunction of secrecy to this leper and to others, “See thou tell no man,” was founded in consummate prudence. For the purposes of his divine mission, it was necessary that he should perform many miracles, to command attention, and hold many discourses, to instruct the multitude, and discipline or train his Apostles for their future functions. Hence, in the beginning of his ministry, at least, he was obliged to keep himself as private as its nature would admit, in order to avoid giving umbrage to the ruling powers, the chief priests, Herod, and the Roman governor, by a premature celebrity; which might have led them to cut him off before the time. In this particular cure, had “the officiating priests” at Jerusalem known that it was miraculous, they might, when “he shewed himself to them,” as required by OUR LORD, in obedience to the law, Levit. xiv. 1—12, through envy, have refused to give him the certificate of his cure, which was necessary as a testimony unto his family and friends, to readmit him into society.

THE CENTURION’S SERVANT CURED*.

This pious, liberal, and lowly-minded heathen, the Roman centurion, stationed at Capernaum, did not think himself worthy to apply immediately to CHRIST, to cure a favourite servant; but employed the mediation of the elders of the Jewish Church at Capernaum; whose good will he had conciliated by his regard to their nation, and by building them a synagogue, or place of public worship, at his own expense. JESUS approved their intercession, and went with them. But when he was now not far from the house, either the Centurion himself, or some friends whom he deputed, came to spare OUR LORD the trouble of coming to the house; saying, “LORD, I am not worthy that thou shouldest enter under my roof; wherefore neither thought I myself worthy to go unto thee; but command, by a word, and my servant shall be cured: For even I, am a man in a subaltern station, having under me soldiers; and I say to this, Go, and he goeth, and to another, Come, and he cometh; and to my servant, Do this, and he doeth it:—”[But thou art THE LORD of all nature, whose commands thy angels, or ministering spirits, will more implicitly obey.]

Struck with such exalted and sublime conceptions of his almighty power, JESUS marvelled, and said unto the Jews that followed him, “I have not found so great faith, no, not in Israel!”—And he said unto the centurion, or to his deputies, “Go thy way, and as thou hast believed, so be it done unto thee.” And his servant was cured in the self same hour.

* There is some variation between the accounts of Matthew and Luke; in the former he addresses CHRIST in person, in the latter by proxy; both, therefore, are reconcilable on the maxim of the Civilians, Qui facit per alium, facit per se, the proxy representing the person. In the main points both agree, 1. the miracle was wrought at Capernaum; 2. the sick servant of Luke, (δουλος,) is also called (παῖς,) “boy,” vii. 3—7, as well as by Matthew; 3. the speech is the same, LORD, I am not worthy, &c. and, 4. the commendation, I have not found so great faith, &c.

THE WIDOW'S SON RESTORED TO LIFE.

The two preceding miracles were wrought by intercession. This was spontaneous; the sole effect of his "tender compassion, (εσπλαγχνισθη), for the widow," whose only son was carrying out to be interred, at Nain, near Mount Tabor, and much people of the city were with her, attending the funeral; to mark their regard for the deceased, and respect for her. He stopped the procession, he touched the bier, and he uttered two authoritative words, Νεανισκε, εγερθητι, Youth, arise! and immediately he sat up, and began to speak; and CHRIST delivered him to his mother.

JAIRUS' DAUGHTER RESTORED.

She also was instantly raised, by two authoritative words in the Syro-Chaldaic, or vernacular tongue, Talitha Kumi, "Damsel arise!"

THE SECOND PASSOVER*.

As the chief priests and Pharisees had taken umbrage at our Lord's proceedings during the first passover at Jerusalem, and at the progress of his baptism afterwards in Judea; which made it advisable for Him to remove out of their jurisdiction into Galilee, where the three first Evangelists particularly relate his proceedings, omitting those in Judea; So John resumes here the narrative of his proceedings there at the second passover, which OUR LORD attended.

* The chronology of this passover has been embarrassed by the indefinite description of St. John, εορτη των Ιουδαιων, "a feast of the Jews," v. 1, which will equally apply to those of Pentecost, or of Tabernacles. But the correcter reading appears to be η εορτη, "the feast," by way of eminence, as the Passover was styled, Luke ii. 42; John iv. 45, xi. 56, xii. 12; and it is supported by the two Syriac Versions, (the Peshito and Philoxenian,) the Coptic; by twenty-five MSS. including three of the oldest; see Griesbach, edit. 2; and by sixteen MS. of Matthai's collection. By the fragm. edit. Aldin. and by the Fathers Irenæus, Eusebius, Cyrl, Theophylact. See Scaliger, Emend. Temp. p. 555. The present reading, indeed, is the only instance, out of seventeen, in John's Gospel, in which εορτη is anarthrous, or occurs without the article η, which is a strong argument for its insertion here too. It is also required by the context; from the position of this feast, as the second Passover, v. 1, between the first, noticed John ii. 13, iv. 45, and the third, John vi. 4. The phrase καθ' εορτην, is applied to the Passover, Matt. xxvii. 15; compare John xviii. 39. Not a reasonable doubt, therefore, can remain of the propriety of this adjustment of the second Passover, A.D. 29. Middleton, in his valuable work on the Greek article, has shewn, p. 350, that even εορτη, without the article, may denote the Passover, from John xix. 14.

THE CRIPPLE CURED ON THE SABBATH DAY.

This astonishing miracle of restoring to the use of his limbs a cripple, who had continued so for thirty-eight years, excited, more strongly, the indignation of the Pharisees, for the supposed breach of the sabbath; and also because JESUS vindicated it by HIS FATHER'S example, working on all days continually, who "neither slumbers nor sleeps." "MY FATHER worketh hitherto, and I work;" and as he afterwards declared, "THE SON OF MAN is Lord even of the Sabbath." For these complicated crimes, as they imagined, of breaking the sabbath, and of blasphemy, in "calling GOD *his peculiar Father, making himself like GOD," they sought to kill him, John v. 1—18, viii. 54, x. 33—36, Mark ii. 28.

On this occasion our blessed Lord boldly and authoritatively avowed his high dignity as the SON OF GOD, invested by THE FATHER with his own powers, who loved him; and gave him full judicial authority to raise all mankind to life, as Daniel's "Son of Man" at the first, and at the general resurrections; in the last of which, he was to reward or punish them according to their works, ver. 19—30. This may be considered as the continuation of his discourse with Nicodemus; and shall be explained in the last article of the Spirit of the Gospel.

He then proceeded to support these solemn asseverations, that they might not rest merely on his own authority; by stating his credentials, ver. 31.

1. The testimony of John the Baptist in his favour, to whom they had sent a deputation to enquire; and whom, for some time, they respected as a prophet and a righteous man, ver. 32—35. With this testimony he afterwards confounded his enemies, when they questioned by what authority he acted, when he purged the temple a second time, by reducing them to the dilemma of either acknowledging, or denying John's divine mission as a Prophet: the former would unavoidably bind them to admit CHRIST'S authority, the latter would exasperate the multitude. They declined, therefore, to answer his question, and so he refused to answer theirs: "Neither tell I you by what authority I do these things," Matt. xxi. 23—27, Mark xi. 27—33, Luke xx. 1—8.

* Ἴσον τῷ θεῷ is the same as ἰσα θεῷ, Phil. ii. 6, or ἰσοθεος, "godlike," Homer; so ἰσαγγελοι, "like angels," Luke xx. 36.

2. He appealed to the highest of all testimonies, that of God himself; both in the miracles he was commissioned to perform; and also in the voice from heaven at his baptism, ver. 36, 37. This testimony had its due weight with Nicodemus.

3. He referred them to the Scripture prophecies, testifying of Him, delivered to Moses, in whom they trusted, as their teacher, for the attainment of eternal life; such as the prophecies of the “seed of the woman,” the “seed of Abraham,” “Shiloh,” “the star and sceptre to rise out of Jacob and Israel,” the prophet like Moses; all fulfilled in Him, as the true MESSIAH; and warned them that Moses himself would accuse them for their criminal infidelity to THE FATHER, in not believing his writings concerning CHRIST. “Had ye believed Moses, ye would have believed ME, for he wrote of me. But if ye believe not his writings, how shall ye believe my sayings?” ver. 39—47.

4. He stated the true cause of their infidelity, as owing, in a great measure, to their pride and vain prejudices of the temporal grandeur of the MESSIAH’S kingdom. “I have come in MY FATHER’S name, [to found a spiritual kingdom,] and ye receive me not: if another shall come in his own name, [as a false Christ, to found a temporal kingdom,] him ye will receive: How can ye believe, who receive honour from each other, and seek not the honour that cometh from GOD only?” ver. 41—44.

SECOND RETURN TO GALILEE.

After this interesting conversation at Jerusalem, during the feast of the Passover, recorded only by John, our Lord returned with his disciples to Galilee; where his proceedings are continued by the other Evangelists.

The first transaction of moment, and in the order of time, seems to be that of his disciples,

PLUCKING THE EARS OF CORN.

“As JESUS was going through the corn fields, on a sabbath day, his disciples were hungry, and began to pluck, and eat the ears of corn, rubbing them in their hands,” Matt. xii. 1, Mark ii. 23, Luke vi. 1.

This sabbath is marked by Luke, to have been δευτεροπρωτον, or “the first sabbath after the second day of the paschal week;” for “the morrow after the sabbath,” or “the second day of the paschal week,” was “the high day,” on which the Jews were required to offer the wave sheaf of the barley harvest; and also from which they were to begin to reckon the seven weeks, till Pentecost, Levit. xxiii. 15, Matt. xxvii. 62, John xix. 31. See Scaliger de emendatione Temp. p. 559, or Cruden, Concordance, voce, sabbath.

Though THE LAW permitted passengers to pluck the ears of standing corn, and eat them, Deut. xxiii. 25, yet it forbade to reap, or do any manner of work on the sabbath day. But the Pharisees perversely interpreted this action of the disciples to be a kind of reaping; and called upon JESUS, either to justify or condemn his disciples, for “doing what was not lawful for them to do on the sabbath day.”

This was a dilemma of the most serious nature; if He justified them, he involved himself in the punishment due to a sabbath breaker, which was death; if he condemned them, it would ruin his character, for suffering his disciples to transgress the law; and would deter others from joining him, Matt. xii. 2, Mark ii. 23, Luke vi. 2.

With infinite address our Lord extricated himself from this dangerous dilemma, by taking advantage of some particular exceptions, in which the law was broken without blame.

1. The case of David, who, in his flight from Saul, “ate of the shewbread, he and his men, which was not lawful but for the priests to eat; and this, by and with the consent of Abiathar, afterwards *high priest;” whose decisions were considered as oracular by the Jewish doctors; which may account for our Lord’s mentioning him, as a person of greater celebrity than his father, Ahimelech, who was actually high priest at the time, 1 Sam. xxi. 1—6, xxii. 20, 1 Kings ii. 27.

2. The priests profaned the sabbath by the daily sacrifices, which they offered in obedience to the law; and were, therefore, blameless †.

3. The sabbath was made for man, and not man for the sabbath. For man’s convenience, therefore, the law of the sabbath might be dispensed with by THE SON OF MAN, who was “LORD even of the sabbath,” and who had declared by his

* So “Jesse begat David [afterwards] the king,” Matt. i. 6.

† Kimchi has noticed another case: “He who ordained the observance of the sabbath, commanded the sabbath to be broken for the destruction of Jericho,” Josh. vi. 15. And our Lord afterwards mentioned the case of circumcision performed on the sabbath, John vii. 23.

Prophets, “I will have mercy, and not sacrifice,” or I delight in acts of mercy and compassion, more than of ritual sacrifice, (Hos. vi. 6, Prov. xxi. 3, Matt. ix. 13, Mark xii. 33.)

Having left his enemies silenced and confounded, with a rebuke that “they ought not to have condemned the guiltless,” his disciples; he departed thence, and on another sabbath day, entered into one of the synagogues of Galilee. There he cured the man with a withered hand, after he had silenced his adversaries, who had asked him whether it was lawful to cure on the sabbath day? by proposing to them two questions, which they could not answer; 1. Whether it was lawful to do good, or to do evil on the sabbath day? to save life or to destroy? and 2. by an appeal to their own practice: “Which of you shall have a single sheep fallen into a pit on the Sabbath day, that will not lay hold on, and lift it out? How much better then is a man than a sheep. Wherefore, it is lawful to do good on the sabbath day.”

This miracle, and unanswerable argument, in vindication of it, only exasperated them still more to endeavour to destroy him. But JESUS knew it, and withdrew himself from thence, Matt. xii. 9—15, Mark iii. 1—7, Luke vii. 6—11.

THE TWELVE APOSTLES CHOSEN.

Before the choice of his Apostles, OUR LORD retired to the mountain district, to pray, and spent the whole night in prayer unto God, Luke vi. 12. In addition to his six early disciples, chosen before the first passover, and Levi the publican, or Matthew, chosen before the second, Matt. ix. 9, he chose five more, to complete the number of twelve Apostles: in reference, probably, to the twelve tribes of Israel,

Simon Peter, and Andrew his brother,
James, the son of Zebedee, and John his brother,
Philip and Nathaniel, or Bartholomew,
Matthew, and Thomas called Didymus, (a twin,) James, the son of Alpheus, or Cleophas, and Thaddeus, or Jude,

Simon, the Cananite, or Zealot, and Judas Iscariot, the traitor, Matt. x. 2, Mark iii. 16, Luke vi. 14.

Simon Peter is named first in all the lists of the Evangelists, because he was the elder brother of Andrew; and for the same reason, James is put before John. Matthew is put before Thomas, by Mark and Luke; though after, by Matthew himself. James the less, Thaddeus, or Jude, and Simon, were brothers, and the cousin-germans of CHRIST, Matt. xiii. 55; and were among the last that were chosen, probably to repress their presuming upon their kindred; or because they were slower in their faith; as may be collected from the account of the unbelief of our Lord's family and friends, noticed immediately after their appointment, by Mark iii. 20, 21.

THE CURE OF DEMONIACS.

Of all the miraculous cures wrought by OUR LORD, unquestionably the most extraordinary, astonishing, and awakening, are those of Demoniacs, or of patients possessed by wicked or impure spirits, called Demons, (δαίμονες, δαίμονια *.)

It has been the fashion to decry and ridicule the doctrine of demoniacal possessions, and to represent the patients merely as lunatics or madmen. And there is some countenance for it in the calumny of the unbelieving Jews concerning CHRIST, "He hath a demon, and is mad," John x. 20. Both possession and madness often producing the same symptoms with lunacy, of convulsions, &c. Matt. xvii. 15—18. But that they were distinct diseases, may be collected from the following considerations.

1. The Evangelists, enumerating the various description of patients, distinguish demoniacs, (δαίμονιζόμενοι,) lunatics, (σεληνιαζόμενοι,) and paralytically, (παρλυτικοί,) from persons afflicted with other kinds of diseases, Matt. iv. 24, Mark i. 34, Luke vi. 17, 18.

2. That a real dispossession took place, seems to follow from the numbers of these impure inmates; Mary, of Magdala, or the Magdalene, was afflicted with seven demons, Mark xvi. 9, &c. "A legion" besought CHRIST'S permission to enter into a numerous herd of 2000 swine; which they did, and drove the whole herd down a precipice into the sea, where they were all

* These technical terms are improperly rendered "Devils," which is the appropriate rendering of διαβολός. They should not be confounded. According to the primitive Pagan and Jewish notions, demons were "the spirits of deceased men," good or bad, Acts xvii. 18.; and Hesiod's account of the former, Vol. I. p. 243; and of the latter Josephus says that they entered into the living, and often killed them, unless expelled: which they might be, he says, by virtue of a root called baaras. Bel. Jud. VII. 63.

drowned. This remarkable case is noticed by the three Evangelists, Matt. viii. 28, Mark v. 1, Luke viii. 26, most circumstantially.

3. The testimony of the demoniacs to CHRIST, was not that of madmen or idiots. It evinced an intimate knowledge both of his person and character, which was hidden from the wise and prudent of the nation, the chief priests, scribes, and Pharisees *. Their language was, “Ah! what hast thou to do with us, JESUS OF NAZARETH! Art thou come to torment us before the time?—Art thou come to destroy us? I know thee who thou art, the HOLY ONE OF GOD;—thou art THE CHRIST, THE SON OF GOD,—THE SON OF THE MOST HIGH GOD, Matt. viii. 29, Mark i. 24, iii. 11, Luke iv. 34—41. And they repeatedly “besought him, not to torment them, not to order them to depart into the abyss,” Luke viii. 28—31. Thus did “the demons believe and tremble,” James ii. 19. Not surely, the persons possessed, who were merely passive instruments on such occasions, totally ignorant of JESUS OF NAZARETH, or of CHRIST. See Campbell’s excellent observations on Διαβολος, Δαιμων, and Δαιμονιον. Dissertations on the four Gospels, Vol. I. p. 182—206. JESUS himself disdained and abhorred such profane testimony: “He rebuked, and suffered them not to speak, because they knew that he was THE CHRIST,” Mark i. 34, Luke iv. 41. He silenced and expelled them in the strongest and most authoritative terms, φιωθητι, και εξελθε εξ αυτου, “Be muzzled, and come out of him,” Mark i. 25, Luke iv. 25. It is remarkable that OUR LORD used the same term, and in a more energetic form, when he quelled the storm on the lake, raised perhaps by “the prince of the jurisdiction of the air,” to sink the vessel in which he slept:—“And he rebuked the wind, and commanded the sea,” saying to the former, σιωπα, “Hush!” to the latter, πεφιωσο, “Be muzzled instantly!” And immediately, “the wind ceased, and there was a great calm [of the sea,]” Mark iv. 39 †.—This most sublime oracle could scarcely be addressed to

* Cicero uses the same argument, among others, to prove the reality of divination, and of the spirit of prophecy in Cassandra, who foretold the destruction of Troy. Quid deinde causæ est, cur Cassandra furens futura prospiciat? Priamus sapiens hoc idem facere nequeat? De Divin. I. 19.

† The other Evangelists, Matthew and Luke, have also recorded this stupendous miracle; but Mark more circumstantially. He probably had his account from Peter, an eye-witness.

the inanimate elements themselves, but rather to that "potent spirit," who did "ride in the whirlwind, and direct the storm *," Mark iv. 39, Job i. 9.

5. When the damsel at Philippi, possessed by "a spirit of Python," (the old Serpent, or Devil,) who brought great gain to her masters, by divining; for several days followed Paul and his assistants, saying, "These men are servants of THE MOST HIGH GOD, who declare unto us the way of salvation!" Paul, wearied at length, turned and said to the spirit, "I command thee, in the name of JESUS CHRIST, to come out of her!" and it came out the same moment, Acts xvi. 16—18. It is truly remarkable, that all the heathen Oracles at Delphi, &c. were silenced † from the time of CHRIST'S ministry, which gives

* From the variation of the tenses suited to each occasion, we may presume that JESUS spoke, on both, in Greek; as he certainly did to John, "I am Alpha and Omega," &c. Rev. i. 8. How infinitely superior is "the imperial brevity" of this command, to that of Neptune chiding the winds, in Virgil: Quos Ego;—sed motos præstat componere fluctus, as much superior, indeed, as reality is to fiction.

† The following extraordinary relation is furnished by Plutarch, to which he attaches much credit, and endeavours thereby to account for the fact of the cessation of oracles in his time, by supposing that the demons who conducted those oracles, though longer lived than men, were now dead. De defectu oraculorum.

"In the time of Tiberius, [in whose reign CHRIST was crucified,] some persons, embarking from Asia for Italy, towards the evening, sailed by the Echinades, [five little islands in the Ionian sea,] where being becalmed, they heard from thence a loud voice, calling one Thamus, an Egyptian mariner among them, and after the third time, commanding him, when he came to the Palodes, to declare that the Great Pan was dead. With the advice of his company, he resolved, that if they had a quick gale when they came to the Palodes, he would pass by silently, but if they should find themselves becalmed there, he would then perform what the voice had commanded. But when the ship arrived thither, there was neither any breeze of wind, nor any agitation of the water. Whereupon Thamus, looking out of the stern, toward the Palodes, pronounced these words with a loud voice, ὁ μέγας Παν τεθνήκε, "the Great Pan is dead!" which he had no sooner done, than he was answered by a chorus of many voices, making a great howling and lamentation, not without a mixture of admiration." Cudworth's Intellect. Syst. p. 345.

Plutarch says that Tiberius took pains to ascertain the fact, and enquired among his learned men who this Pan could be.

Whether the story be true or not, in the name Pan, and the aerial demon's application to an Egyptian mariner alone of all the crew, there seems to be a marked allusion to the celebrated inscription on the temple of Neith, or the goddess of Wisdom, at Sais, in Egypt.

Εγω ειμι παν το γεγονος, και ον και εσομενον
Και τον εμον πεπλον ουδεις πω θνητος απεκαλυψεν.

"I am all that hath been, and is, and shall be;
And my vail no mortal yet uncovered."

some foundation to the opinion, that they were not entirely impostures. See the foregoing observations on the witch of Endor, 1 Sam. xxviii. 7; and the Appendix to the fourth volume, On the Primitive Theology, and its corruptions.

6. When, soon after this, some Jewish exorcists at Ephesus, attempted to “exorcise a wicked spirit in the name of JESUS, whom Paul preached,” it answered, “JESUS I know, and Paul I am acquainted with, but who are ye ? And the man in whom the wicked spirit was, leaped upon them, and overcame them, and prevailed against them, so that they fled out of that house naked and wounded,” Acts xix. 13—16.

These striking instances, adduced by the sacred historians as plain matters of fact, divested of all allegory, seem to support and establish the unfashionable doctrine of demoniacal possession, at least in OUR SAVIOUR’S days; when it was the prevailing opinion of the Jewish nation, from the highest to the lowest, and indeed of the whole world. What right, then, infidels and philosophizing divines have to explode a doctrine, because they cannot comprehend it at the present day, as visionary, any more than the existence and influence of Satan himself, does not appear*. Strong traces, perhaps, of diabolical influence and agency, in some of the prime actors on the present theatre of the world, seem to be discoverable by those who watch the signs of the times; and who reason, from analogy, from what has been, to what may be; and cannot otherwise account for many extraordinary revolutions, and “passing strange” occurrences, that baffle all political calculation, and set even the spirit of conjecture at defiance!

BLASPHEMY OF THE PHARISEES.

To repel the force of this testimony from the cure of demoniacs, the reality of which was too notorious to be denied, or even questioned; the Pharisees, artfully and malignantly, took advantage of these favourable confessions of the demoniacs to the person and character of JESUS as the CHRIST, to defame

Here Pan, “all,” or “the universe,” appears to have denoted THE SUPREME GOD, or his associate, NEITH, or WISDOM, Prov. viii. 22; THE ORACLE of the Hebrews, John i. 1.

* Beware what spirit rages in your breast :
For ten, inspired, ten thousand are possess! ROSCOMMON.

him to the people ; as if he dispossessed demons by collusion or confederacy with the devil himself!

“ When a demoniac was brought unto him, both blind and dumb, JESUS healed him, so that the blind and dumb both spoke and saw. And all the multitudes were amazed, and said, Is not this THE SON OF DAVID, or THE CHRIST ?

“ But the Pharisees and the Scribes, who came down from Jerusalem,” in order to watch and counteract him, said, repeatedly, “ He casteth out demons through Beelzebub, the chief of the demons,” Matt. ix. 33, 34, xii. 22—24, Mark iii. 22, 23, Luke xi. 14, 15.

OUR LORD, then “ calling to him the Pharisees,” with authority, exposed the absurdity and wickedness of their calumny, in the following masterly argument, Mark iii. 23.

1. “ How can Satan expel Satan ?” By thus acting against himself, he would only promote the downfall of his own kingdom ; for a “ house, or kingdom divided against itself, cannot stand.” Such collusion, therefore, on his part, would be absurd and ruinous.

2. “ Your sons,” the exorcists, profess to expel demons : your argument is equally hostile and injurious to them : therefore, shall they be your judges, or accuse you of slandering them also ; and acquit me, as acting, not by the power of Satan, but by “ the power of GOD ;” thus clearly evincing the sudden arrival of his kingdom among you, by the downfall of Satan’s kingdom, Matt. xii. 27, Luke xi. 19, 20.

3. This victory over Satan, proved CHRIST’S superiority. Though he is strong, a stronger bound him, and ravaged his house and goods ; or rescued those who were under his dominion heretofore, Matt. xii. 29, Mark iii. 27, Luke xi. 21, 22.

4. In CHRIST’S warfare with Satan, none can stand *neuter, “ he that is not with, or for Him †,” as a friend, “ is against him,” as an enemy : he is either “ a child of GOD, or a child of the Devil,” for there is no medium, (1 John iii. 10.) The Pharisees, therefore, by their opposition to CHRIST, proved themselves, as he boldly reproached them, “ a generation of vipers ;”

* Solon, the Athenian, by a wise law, declared neutrality infamous in civil commotions ; in order to compel the well-affected citizens to take an active part ; and thereby to quell the disaffected. PLUTARCH.

† OUR LORD elsewhere expresses the reverse of the proverb : “ He that is not against Us, is for Us,” Mark ix. 40, Luke ix. 50.

(so John the Baptist had described them before,) whose opposition proceeded from an evil heart of unbelief, Matt. xii. 30—34, Mark xi. 23.

5. He warned them of the unpardonable sin of blasphemy against THE HOLY SPIRIT, neither to be forgiven in this world nor the next, but liable to eternal damnation. Such as that of “lying unto the HOLY SPIRIT,” (Acts v. 3.) Or knowingly and wilfully perverting the truth, in ascribing the power of GOD to the power of the Devil; resisting the evidence of their senses, and of their reason, or conscience, by which they could not but be self-condemned, (John viii. 9, Tit. iii. 11.)

And to impress more strongly on them the dangers of such malignant calumnies as this, of which they were now guilty, he warned them that for “*every idle * assertion,*” (πᾶν ῥημα ἀργον) men should be called to account, in the day of judgment. Such was that which they afterwards suborned the guard of Roman soldiers at the holy sepulchre to use, “His disciples came by night, and stole him away while we were asleep,” (Matt. xxviii. 13.) which being propagated among the Jews, occasioned, that “every where Christianity was spoken against,” and CHRIST represented as a deceiver and impostor, (Matt. xxvii. 63, Acts xxviii. 22.) Matt. xii. 36.

* Among the Greek philosophers this was called λογος ἀργος, which Cicero renders Ignava Ratio, “Idle argument ;” and explains, Genus interrogationis ignavum atque iners, quod eadem ratione omnis e vita tollatur actio; “a kind of argumentation idle and indolent: because by the same reasoning, (as was brought to prove an overruling fate or destiny, and an inevitable necessity,) all active exertion would be banished from the world.” De fato, § 12. And the great English philosopher, Bacon, among the grand causes of error, reckons, Nimia et præpropæra mentis festinatio ad conclusiones temere deducendas, “an excessive and over hasty precipitance of mind, to draw conclusions rashly,” from false, imperfect, or insufficient premises: without taking the necessary pains and trouble to examine their validity. The opposite effects of this indolent disposition of mind in producing both dogmatism and scepticism, are well expressed by Pope, Essay on Man.

“ Or indolent, to each extreme they fall,
To trust in every thing, or doubt of all.”

“ The same dread of labour attending the search of TRUTH, which makes the dogmatist presume it to be always at hand, makes the sceptic conclude it is never to be found. The only difference is, that the laziness of the one is sanguine, and the laziness of the other not sanguine.” Warburton’s Note.

Hence our Lord so repeatedly warned the Scribes and Pharisees, to “search THE SCRIPTURES,”—“to judge, not according to appearance, but to judge just judgment,”—“yea, even of yourselves, why judge ye not what is just?” John v. 39, vii. 24, Luke xii. 57.

6. Nearly connected with this crime, was that of requiring further evidence of his divine mission, after sufficient evidence had been afforded them; namely, of repeatedly demanding the sign from heaven, foretold by the Prophet Daniel, “tempting him,” by a distrust of his power to give it; as is evident from their subsequent conduct, when they derided him as he hung upon the cross, and required him to give them the sign of coming down from thence, that they might believe in him, (Matt. xxvii. 42.) Matt. xii. 38, Luke xi. 16.

7. He contrasted their rejection of his superior preaching and authority, with the Ninevites’ attention to Jonah, and the queen of Sheba’s to Solomon; who should rise up against them, as witnesses, in the day of judgment, and convict them of obstinacy and incredulity, in shutting their eyes against the light while the light that was within them, as they supposed, was darkness; mental darkness, the most dreadful and deplorable, because it was incurable, Matt. xii. 41, 42, Luke xi. 32—36, John ix. 40, 41.

8. He concluded with an admonition to the demoniacs, who had been cured, to beware of *relapsing into sin, lest they should be possessed again in a higher degree, so as to render their case desperate, Matt. xii. 43—45, Luke xi. 24—26, according to the excellent comment of Archbishop Cranmer: “Albeit the hous of your conscience be once made clene and the foule spirit be expelled from us in baptisme or penaunce, [repentance;) yet if we wax idle, and take not hede, he will returne, with seven worse spirites, and possesse us agayne.” And OUR LORD extended the admonition to “that wicked generation” in general; whose deplorable catastrophe, for their obstinate impenitence, he had tacitly intimated, in “the sign of the Prophet Jonah ;” which had a two-fold reference, to himself, and to them: and as Jonah’s continuance of three days in the fish’s belly, was prefigurative of his own entombment for the same time, so was Jonah’s denunciation, “ere forty days, shall Nineveh be overthrown;” (which was suspended upon their repentance,) critically fulfilled in the destruction of Jerusalem, “ere forty years were past,” from the date of this sign, when last given by OUR LORD, after the third passover, A.D. 30, Matt. xvi. 4.

* ———— O toties servus! quæ bellua ruptis,

Cum semel effugit, reddit se prava catenis! Hor.

UNBELIEF OF OUR LORD'S FAMILY.

This was still more remarkable and extraordinary than that of the Pharisees, or of the Jews in general. But the same worldly-minded notions of the temporal power and grandeur of the MESSIAH'S kingdom, which infected even his own Apostles, until the regeneration on Whitsunday, infected them also. Hence, they wished to check his exertions to instruct the people, which they conceived to be extravagant and enthusiastic. For when he and his disciples were so thronged by the multitude, that they had not time to take bread, or their ordinary meals, "his friends, when they heard it, went out to lay hold on him; for they said, he is beside himself *," Mark iii. 20, 21. And so again, during his argument with the Pharisees, apprehending, perhaps, that he might commit himself too far with that malignant and powerful sect, and exasperate them by the severity of his reproofs; even "his mother and his brethren," or cousins, wished to interrupt his discourse; and when they could not reach him for the crowd, they sent a message to him that they wanted to speak with him abroad. But he reprimanded the intrusion, and declared, that the connexion of disciples, whom he was then instructing, weighed more with him than the ties of kindred: "Who is my mother, and who are my brethren?"—And looking round on his disciples, who were sitting in a circle about him, and stretching forth his hand to them, he said, "Behold my mother and my brethren! For whosoever shall do the will of MY HEAVENLY FATHER, the same is my brother, and sister, and mother," Matt. xii. 46—50; Mark iii. 31—35; Luke viii. 19—21. And when a woman of the company, transported with delight, during this interesting conversation, lift up her voice, and said, with admiration, "Blessed is the womb that bare thee, and the paps which thou hast sucked!" he answered, "Yea, rather, blessed are they that hear the word of GOD, and keep it," Luke xi. 27, 28, thus equally repressing enthusiastic transports, as religious indifference. Even at a more advanced period, at the feast of Tabernacles, before his crucifixion, he

* Thus when Paul was taxed by Festus, with being mad, he denied the charge; "I am not mad, most noble Festus, but speak the words of truth and soberness," Acts xxvi. 25; and alluding thereto, he says, to the Corinthians, "For whether we be beside ourselves, it is for GOD'S sake; or whether we be sober-minded, it is for your sake," 2 Cor. v. 13.

repressed the ambition of his brethren, wishing that he would shew himself in Judea, and display his miracles there, upon a more public theatre than in Galilee; “The world,” said he, “cannot hate you; but they hate me, because I testify of their works that they are wicked. Go ye up to this feast: I will not go up yet,”—and when he did go, afterwards, it was not openly, as they wanted, but as it were, “in secret,” John vii. 2—10.

PARABLES.

Having thus vindicated his divine mission from the calumny of his enemies, in the foregoing discourse, he quitted the house, and went to the sea side, whither he was followed by the multitude, eager to listen to his divine instructions; and getting into a ship, or boat, that he might not be incommoded by the throng, he taught the people from thence, who stood on the shore, within hearing, ranged as in an amphitheatre. The mode of instruction he confined himself to on this occasion, was by parables, or “similes,” for several wise and benevolent reasons.

1. It was a popular and interesting mode of instruction, adapted to all ranks, from the highest to the lowest; in which the meanest capacity might find entertainment; and the most intelligent information, if not at the very time, yet afterwards, as the application of the parable might happen to be unfolded by succeeding events, Judg. ix. 8—20; Psalm lxxviii. 2, &c; Matt. xiii. 35.

2. It was peculiarly well calculated to veil offensive truths, or “hard sayings,” in figurative language, until, in due season, they should be disclosed with greater evidence and lustre, when they were able to hear and bear them, Mark iv. 22, lest they should revolt at a premature disclosure of the mystery, Mark iv. 33; John xvi. 25.

3. It was a necessary screen from the malice of his inveterate enemies, the chief priests, Scribes, and Pharisees, who would not have failed to take advantage of any express declaration which they might turn to his destruction, John x. 24; but yet could not lay hold on the most pointed parables, which they were clear-sighted enough to perceive were levelled against them, Matt. xxi. 45; Mark xii. 12; Luke xx. 19.

4. It was peculiarly fitted to awaken the curiosity of his disciples, and lead them to apply for more particular information in private, afterwards; when he graciously furnished them with the key to the mysterious parables delivered in public, Matt. xiii. 10—36; Mark iv. 34.

This discourse consists of seven parables; four of them were addressed to his hearers in general; the three last to his disciples in particular.

THE SOWER.

This is the first and preliminary parable; inculcating attention to his divine instructions, as the prophet like Moses, whom they were required to hear, or hearken to, under pain of incurring GOD'S displeasure, Deut. xviii. 15—19, as intimated in its awakening conclusion, "He that hath ears to hear, let him hear," or hearken; an admonition peculiarly necessary for a careless and inattentive, a gross and sensual people, as they were described by Moses and the Prophets, Deut. xxxii. 15; Ezek. ii. 7; Isai. vi. 9, 10; and by OUR LORD himself, citing the last, Matt. xiii. 9—15; and as Isaiah encouraged attentive hearers, "The eyes of them that see, shall not be dim, and the ears of them that hear, shall hearken," Isai. xxxii. 3: so our Lord declares, "Whosoever hath, to him shall be given, and he shall abound: but whosoever hath not, from him shall be taken away, even what he hath *," Matt. xiii. 12, or "what he seemeth to have," Luke viii. 13.

The parable itself, in simple and familiar imagery, exhibits the most profound knowledge of human nature, and the most philosophical survey of the hearts or dispositions of the various classes of hearers, of which the mixed multitude was then, and is always composed. As in ground there is great diversity of soils, some bad, and some good, in different degrees and shades; so in mankind there is an equal diversity of hearts or dispositions, some bad, more or less, some comparatively good. But as the ground cannot produce any thing of itself, without culture, but briars, thorns, and weeds, even in the best soils; so neither can mankind produce, merely by themselves, without divine cultivation, any spiritual fruit*, acceptable to God. All, in the state of nature, are alike barren and unprofitable, until the good seed is sown in the former, by the careful husbandman; and the word of God, in the latter, by CHRIST, his Apostles, and ministers.

* This seeming paradox is explained in the parable of the Talents, Matt. xxv. 28, to denote, that whatever talents or advantages a man hath received from GOD, if he improve them, to him more shall be given; but whosoever hath not improved them, from him shall be taken away the talent he hath received; or seemeth to have in his possession. Juvenal hath a parallel phrase, Nil habuit Codrus:—et tamen illud Perdidit infelix totum nil. Sat. III. 208.

1. The first, and the worst class, are compared to the beaten high way, which is so hard and impenetrable, that the seed, falling alike on all, can make no impression on this, but lies exposed on the surface, and is either trampled by the passengers, or devoured by the birds, so that no trace of it remains. Such is the hard and callous heart of some hearers; they understand not, because they mind not, the word; and it is either trodden down by evil company, or their commerce with the world, or else consumed by their rapacious appetites and lusts, which the wicked one, Satan, or the Devil †, uses as his instruments, to take away the word out of their hearts entirely. Of this irreclaimable class were those Pharisees who blasphemed CHRIST, as casting out demons through Beelzebub; those mockers, who, on the memorable day of Pentecost, represented his Apostles as drunk, Acts ii. 13; and those Epicureans, who derided Paul's preaching at Athens, Acts xvii. 32. And at the present day, those obstinate atheists and infidels, who scoff at all religion, and the CHRISTIAN religion in particular.

2. The next are compared to the stony ground, where the soil is shallow. On this the falling seed makes some impression, and even penetrates below the surface, and it quickly springs up, or vegetates, but is soon scorched by the sun's meridian heat, and "withers away for want of root," or due nourishment, as soon as it reaches the rock at bottom. Such are the light and fair weather converts, who no sooner hear the word, than they receive it with joy and gladness, and for a while believe, so long as circumstances continue favourable for its reception, but "when tribulation or persecution ariseth, because of the word, immediately they are offended," and in "a season of fiery trial, fall away," or apostatize. Of this description there were many in the days of CHRIST and his Apostles: Herod, for a time, "heard the Baptist gladly, and did many things" in obedience to his sage admonitions, until the question of Herodias and his concupiscence arose; then he was instantly offended; he imprisoned, and at length beheaded that "just and holy man," knowing him to be such, Mark vi. 20; and thus the rich ruler, who came to CHRIST eagerly and respectfully, to learn what was necessary for Christian perfection, in addition to keeping all the commandments from his youth, could not bring himself to part with his ruling passion, when he was required to go and sell all that he had, and give to the poor, and follow CHRIST as a disciple, but went away sorrowful, because he had great possessions, and could not prevail on himself to relinquish them, and lead a life of poverty and hardship, contempt and persecution, Matt. xix. 22. Such was a large portion also of the multitude, who at first became CHRIST'S disciples, "for the loaves and fishes" which they had eaten, and expected more abundantly, but who could not bear the idea of a crucified Saviour, but seceded, and walked no more with him, John vi. 66. Such were the fickle multitude, who, in the course of four days, converted their Hosannas to the Son of David! into clamours, "Crucify him! Crucify him!" Such was Felix, that cruel, libidinous, and rapacious Roman governor, who "trembled" at Paul's preaching of righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come, for the time, but put off his conversion for a convenient season, which never arrived, Acts xxiv. 25. And such are those lukewarm Christians of the present day, who are "ashamed of CHRIST and his Gospel," and dare not "hold fast the profession of their faith," amidst the scoffs of infidels, the gainsayings of heretics, the evil example of degenerate and corrupt Christians, and the united opposition of a vain selfish world.

* This is intimated in another beautiful agricultural parable, signifying the spontaneous growth of the seed sown in the ground, the husbandman himself knoweth not how; and its gradual vegetation and increase, first the blade, then the ear, then the full corn in the ear, then the ripeness of the grain, until the harvest, Mark iv. 26—29.

† Matthew xiii. 9, calls him ὁ πονηρός, "the wicked one," by way of bad eminence; as does OUR LORD, in his inimitable form of prayer, Matt. vi. 13, but to guard against ambiguity, Mark iv. 15, ascertains him by his Hebrew title, ὁ Σατανας, "Satan," or "the adversary," and Luke viii. 12, by his Greek title,—ὁ Διαβολος, "the devil," or "calumniator," "the accuser of the brethren," Rev. xii. 10.

3. The third are compared to the thorny ground, in which the seed sown took root in a greater depth of soil, and grew, but was choked gradually by the thorns that sprang up more luxuriantly along with it, so that it bore no fruit. Such are the worldly-minded, who hear indeed the word, and it sinks deeper into their hearts than in those of the preceding class, but the cares of this world, the deceitfulness of riches, and the pleasures of life, choke or stifle the word, so that it becometh unfruitful. In the age of CHRIST, the former class was more numerous; in the present, this persecution, because of the word, is not now so frequent as formerly; rather, perhaps, from the lukewarmness or religious indifference of the rulers, than from increase of genuine liberality of sentiment, and of the mild spirit of Christian toleration. Now, worldly interests of grandeur and ambition, and, above all, increasing luxury, keeping pace with increasing wealth, so weaken and stifle the word every where, that there is abundant cause to dread, that when CHRIST cometh again, he will scarcely find HIS FAITH established in its purity any where upon earth, according to his own foreboding, Luke xviii. 8.

4. The last are compared to the good ground, who in an honest and good heart, having heard the word, keep it, and “bring forth fruit with patience:” and also with the same variety as the bad soils, “some thirty fold, some sixty fold, and some a hundred fold*,” according as they possess, more or less, the foregoing qualifications; first of “hearing the word with an honest and good heart,” or a candid and virtuous disposition, which was wanting in the first class; next of “keeping,” or retaining it, which was wanting in the second; and lastly, of “bringing forth fruit with patience,” or perseverance in well doing, which was wanting in the third †.

From this instructive parable we learn not to vilify or defame human nature in the gross, as bad, totally degenerate, and altogether “devilish,” with some gloomy sectarists. Though unhappily, “the heart of man is deceitful above all things, and

* This is the order of the produce in Mark iv. 7; who judiciously reverses the order of Matthew xiii. 8, to furnish a regular climax from the worst soil to the best.

† This agricultural imagery is frequent in the heathen classics:

*Cultor enim Juvenum, purgatas inseris aures
Frugæ Cleanthæ.*—————

“ ’Tis thine, the soil of youthful minds to weed;
First clear the ground, then sow the stoic seed.”

Brewster's Persius, Sat. V.

Cultura animi PHILOSOPHIA est, quæ extrahit vitia radicitus, et præparat animos ad satus accipiendos; eaque mandat his, et, ut ita dicam, serit, quæ adulta fruges uberrimos ferant.

“ The culture of the mind is PHILOSOPHY, which eradicates the vices, and prepares the heart for receiving seed; and infuses, and, as I may say, sows [seeds,] which, when come to maturity, may bear the most abundant fruits.” Cicero, Tuscul. II. This may more truly be said of THE GOSPEL.

desperately wicked, who can know it?" (Jer. xvii. 9,) in too many instances; yet He who knew it best, and who originally "made it in the image and likeness of GOD," kindly and consolingly admits, that "an honest and good heart" may still be found among "the lost sheep of the house of Israel," amidst the prevailing errors and corruptions of the world, where "the spirit, indeed, may be willing," or disposed to good, though the flesh is weak, or frail, and easily seduced to evil, Matt. xxvi. 41. See the foregoing scriptural account of human nature, p. 3—5.

THE TARES.

In this second parable, according to OUR LORD'S master-key of interpretation, the field is the world, the good seed the sons or heirs of the kingdom of heaven, or "children of GOD;" the sower, the SON OF MAN, or CHRIST; and the servants, the ministers of the GOSPEL: the tares are children of the Devil, who is the enemy of CHRIST, that sows them, or seduces them into sin; the harvest is the general judgment at the end of the world, and the reapers the angels.

The drift of this parable is, 1. to shew, that notwithstanding all the care and vigilance of CHRIST'S ministers, "offences must needs come into the world," through the craft and subtilty of the Devil, working at unseasonable hours, "while men slept," in the dead of night, to sow his mischief in the hearts of his children, or those incorrigible sinner, of whose repentance and amendment there is no hope. For tares, let them grow ever so long, will still be tares; they can never turn to wheat by any care or skill in the cultivation. And 2. to "vindicate the ways of GOD to man," and his long sufferance to such sinners, by furnishing a satisfactory answer to the intemperate zeal of some "sons of thunder" among his servants, who would fain "root up the tares" directly, or "call down fire from heaven to consume them" without delay; "not knowing of what manner of spirit they ought to be," that spirit of "forbearance," which our gracious LORD, and our heavenly FATHER daily exercise toward the wicked, in compassion to the good: "Nay, lest while ye gather the tares, ye root up also the wheat." For, in the field of this world, the righteous and the wicked are so closely connected, united, and intermixed in their interests, like the wheat and the tares, that in the present state the wicked could not be every where extirpated, without involving the righteous in his doom* ; for his children, his family, his relations, and his friends may be innocent, and not partakers of his sins ; and therefore “ the righteous JUDGE OF ALL THE EARTH,” in mercy to them, spares the guilty ; while, 3. to silence the cavils of infidels, “ Why do the wicked prosper in this world ?” which are as old as the days of Job, xxi. 7, Psalm lxxiii. 12, Jer. xii. 1, or, “ There is one event to the righteous and the wicked ! but one event to all !” Eccl. ii. 14, viii. 14, ix. 2, 3, from the days of Solomon to the present ; the parable predicts a future discrimination, at the general judgment, when CHRIST shall say to his reapers, Gather first the tares, and bind them in bundles to be burned, but gather the wheat into my granary ; when he shall send forth his angels to gather out of his kingdom all offences, and cast them into a fiery furnace, where shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth, but shall collect the righteous into the kingdom of their heavenly Father, where “ they shall shine forth as the sun” for evermore.

He that hath ears to hear, let him hear.

THE MUSTARD SEED.

This third parable was designed to represent the wonderful progress of the kingdom of heaven, or Church of CHRIST, from a small and inconsiderable beginning, as the kingdom of the “ stone” in Daniel ; until it shall become the kingdom of the “ mountain,” and fill the whole earth ; so that “ all nations shall finally flow” to “ the mountain of the LORD’S house,” to receive spiritual instruction from the fountain head. The ultimate conversion of the Gentiles to CHRISTIANITY, which was the chief drift of the parable, was a mystery so revolting to the bigotry of the Jews, even of our LORD’S own disciples, (Acts x. 34, 35, xi. 1—3,) that it could not be early proposed to them. It was, therefore, of necessity to be veiled under a parable, of which he then waved the interpretation ; because they could not bear it now, (John xvi. 12.) It was obscurely intimated by “ the birds of the air lodging in the branches of the mustard tree,” when arrived at its full growth ; and finding there shelter, protection, and nourishment. The Talmud mentions a mustard tree so large, that one of its branches covered a tent. See Lightfoot. We should, indeed, be much mistaken, if we judged of the size of vegetables in the east, from those of the same species in our colder climate.

* This was Abraham’s plea for Sodom, “ Far be it from thee to slay the righteous with the wicked !—Shall not THE JUDGE OF ALL THE EARTH do right ?” Gen. xviii. 25.

THE LEAVEN.

This fourth parable expresses the influence of the Gospel upon the minds of mankind, under the imagery of a little leaven, which, by its fermentation, leavened three measures of meal, the usual quantity that was kneaded at once; signifying that “the word of GOD, which is lively and powerful” in its operation, would “leaven,” improve, and meliorate “the whole heap” or mass of which man is composed, his spirit, soul, and body, with the affections, appetites, and passions, (1 Thess. v. 23.)

THE HIDDEN TREASURE, &c.

This and the two following parables are addressed peculiarly to the Apostles, and seem to represent the various dispositions of the converts they would make to the Gospel; some would embrace it with joy, when found as it were by accident, like treasure hidden in a field; others when found after long and diligent search, like the merchant seeking precious pearls, both purchasing the field and the pearl of great price for all their substance. The last represents them (in conformity with their usual occupation of fishermen) as casting a net into the sea, and “catching men” indiscriminately of all sorts, good and bad, to compose the visible Church of CHRIST, or “all who profess and call themselves Christians :” of whom a selection should be made, when “the net should be drawn ashore,” or in the general judgment at “the end of the world,” when “the good should be gathered into vessels,” in heaven, but “the bad cast away,” and thrown into hell-fire. The former parable of the tares seems to describe the final lot of mankind in general, under all the dispensations; this of the net, under the Christian, in particular.

When JESUS had finished these parables, he asked his disciples, “Whether they understood all these?” And upon their answering in the affirmative, “Yea, LORD,” he told them that every “scribe,” or Jewish teacher, who should be “disciplined,” and made a Christian teacher, should bring out of his treasures or stores of knowledge, “fruits new and old,” or the modern mysteries of THE GOSPEL, in addition to the ancient, of THE LAW, Matt. xiii. 51, 52.

And now when our Lord had sufficiently trained or disciplined his Apostles in the rudiments of Christianity, by his public discourses and parables, and by his fuller explanations and interpretations to them in private, he graciously expressed his tender compassion, (εσπλαγχνισθη) for the multitudes, as “sheep without a shepherd,” who were too numerous, and too “scattered,” to receive the benefit of his divine instructions, and were too much neglected by their own teachers, the scribes. Then said he to his disciples, “The harvest indeed is plenteous, but the labourers are few: pray ye therefore THE LORD of the harvest, that he would speedily send forth (εκβαλη) labourers into his harvest,” Matt. ix. 36—38.

MISSION OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES.

Accordingly, Jesus sent forth the twelve Apostles, in pairs, to proclaim the approach of CHRIST'S spiritual kingdom, “The kingdom of heaven is at hand,” at first exclusively to the Jews, or “the lost sheep of the house of Israel,” but neither to the Samaritans, nor to the Gentiles; and to secure credit to their preaching, he invested them with miraculous powers, gratuitously to expel demons, and cure disorders*; and gave them several wise and prudent rules for the regulation of their conduct, as itinerant preachers. 1. Not to provide superfluities, of money or cloathing, but to depend upon the bounty of the city, village, or house, to which they preached, for their support, for the labourer is worthy of his hire. 2. To salute the owners civilly, and depart quietly, if they were not entertained, but to shake off the dust of their feet, in token that they were to be considered in future as heathens, who despised or rejected CHRIST and his Gospel, as practised afterwards by Paul and

* Matthew, x. 8. inserts a clause, νεκρους εγειρετε, “raise the dead,” which is wanting in the parallel places, Matt. x. 1, Mark vi. 7, and Luke ix. 1, 2; and also in the subsequent commission to the seventy disciples, Luke x. 1—17; and which, in fact, the Apostles do not now appear to have exercised, Mark vi. 13, Luke ix. 10, nor until after they had received the baptism of THE SPIRIT at the day of Pentecost. Accordingly, it is omitted by several MSS. and versions. See Griesbach's second edition, and Wetstein. Still, however, it may be retained as an anticipation of their future larger commission, Mark xvi. 15—18, Matt. xxviii. 20, especially as the present commission predicts their future sufferings and persecutions from the Jews, and from kings and rulers, Matt. x. 16—23. But the arguments for its rejection seem stronger.

Barnabas, (Acts xiii. 51.) 3. To unite the wisdom or prudence of the serpent, with the innocence or harmlessness of the dove, and not to expose themselves rashly or unnecessarily to dangers, nor to court persecution, like enthusiasts. 4. When they should be brought to trial before synagogues, rulers, and kings, not to be anxious about their defence, for that they should be inspired with eloquence and wisdom from above, which their adversaries should not be able to gainsay or resist, as our LORD afterwards repeated, Luke xxi. 15. 5. Think not, said he, that I came to sow peace upon earth, at my first coming. I came not to sow peace, but a sword, or “rather division,” Luke xii. 51. Intimating that the profession of Christianity would naturally excite divisions in families, and provoke the unbelieving part to ill-treat and persecute the believing, and excite the general hatred, both of Jews and Heathens, against Christians. 6. But he encouraged them still undauntedly to preach the Gospel, regardless of immediate consequences, from the prospect of a future reward in heaven. For that whosoever should confess him before men, he would also confess as a disciple before his Father in heaven, and the holy angels at the day of judgment, but whosoever should deny him before men, he would deny as a disciple before his Father in heaven; that whosoever should seek to save his life, by denying CHRIST, should lose it hereafter, both soul and body, in hell; but whosoever should lose his life here, for confessing CHRIST, should find it hereafter restored to him in the mansions of bliss, Matt. x. 5—42, Mark vi. 7—11, Luke ix. 1—5.

By a usual historical anticipation, Matthew connects the mission of the twelve Apostles with their former appointment, as if it followed immediately after, just as he connects the death of John the Baptist with his imprisonment by Herod, Matt. xiv. 3—11, although there was a twelvemonth’s interval, if not more, between them in the latter case. In this case, there was probably an interval of half a year, or more, from their appointment, shortly after our Lord’s second return to Galilee, in order to qualify them for their important office; and accordingly, both Mark and Luke, judiciously, though tacitly, correct this ambiguity in Matthew, by separating the two events, and interposing several of the preceding occurrences between them.

CHRIST'S SECOND VISIT TO NAZARETH.

While his Apostles were employed on their mission, JESUS seems to have visited his own town of Nazareth a second time, his regard for his townsmen overcoming their ill-treatment of him before. But though they were astonished at the wisdom of his instructions, and his miraculous powers, they were still offended at him as before, on account of his occupation, and his family: Is not this the carpenter, the son of Mary? &c. And he marvelled at their unbelief, and therefore did not many miracles there, except healing a few sick*, Matt. xiii. 53—58, Mark vi. 1—6.

Matthew places this visit after the discourse on the parables; Mark immediately before the mission of the Apostles. We are warranted, therefore, in following the latter, and supposing it to have been about the time of the mission, toward the close of the second year.

RETURN OF THE APOSTLES.

This took place not long before the third passover, and about the time of John the Baptist's death, Matt. xi. 1, Mark vi. 30, Luke ix. 10, when John's disciples came and told JESUS the fate of their master, Matt. xiv. 12, and probably attached themselves to him in future. After this, he retired by ship to a solitary place, across the lake, in the desert of Bethsaida, not from any apprehension of danger from Herod, as Matt. xiv. 13, might seem to intimate, but in order to get some rest from the multitudes of visitants coming and going, so that they had not even leisure to eat, Mark vi. 31, Luke ix. 10, John vi. 1.

THE FIVE THOUSAND FED.

This grand and important miracle, recorded by all the Evangelists, took place shortly before the Passover, as we learn from John, inserting this valuable, natural as well as chronological character, incidentally, that "there was much grass in the place;" a circumstance that could not have happened at an earlier or a later season than the beginning of Spring, in that

* "It is reasonable to believe that our Saviour never performed a miracle, but where he foresaw it might have a good effect in a religious light, either on the person on whom it was performed, or on the spectators, thus making one act of mercy lead to another." — Gilpin, note, Matt. xiii. 58.

warm climate. It serves also as a middle point of agreement to harmonize the four Gospels before and after it; while it furnishes internal evidence the most satisfactory, that each succeeding Evangelist consulted his predecessors, in order to remove ambiguities, and to supply circumstances omitted by them. The last account, by John, is the most circumstantial. It is indeed the only miracle that he relates, in common with the rest.

Though JESUS had retired from the multitude by sea, his motions could not be concealed: they followed him *by land from the cities, and he graciously received them, and healed their sick, being moved with tender compassion toward them, (εσπλαγχνισθη επ' αυτοις) Matt. xiv. 14, Mark vi. 34, and began to teach them many things concerning the kingdom of GOD, Mark vi. 34, Luke ix. 11.

And "when the [former] evening was come," Matt. xiv. 15, about the ninth hour, or third after noon †, the twelve Apostles came to him, and recommended, that as the place was desert, and the hour late, and the multitude without provisions, he would dismiss them, that they might depart to the surrounding villages and farms, (αγρους) to buy provisions, or find food. But he answered, they have no need to depart, give ye them to eat. And this he said to try them, for he himself knew what he intended to do, when he first saw the great multitude coming to him. And they said, We cannot, except we go to buy provisions for all this people. Philip said, Two hundred denarii worth of bread would not be sufficient for them, that each may take a little. Then he said unto them, How many loaves of bread have ye? Andrew answered, There is a lad here, who hath five barley loaves, and two small fishes, but what are they among so many? And he said, "Bring them hither to me;" then "Make the men sit down on the green grass, by companies," of fifty each ‡. And they sate down in ranks, of a hundred in front, by fifty in depth; five thousand in all, besides women and children. Then Jesus took the loaves, and looked up to heaven, and blessed, and brake and gave to his disciples, and the disciples to the multitude, and likewise of the fishes, as much as they desired; and they all ate, and were satisfied. And when they were filled, he said to his disciples, Gather the remaining fragments, that nothing be lost; so they gathered them, and filled twelve baskets with the fragments that remained of the loaves and fishes.

* This is a more correct rendering of πεζη, than "on foot." A person might travel πεζη, and yet either on horseback, or in a carriage. Ει δ' εθελες πεζος, παρα τοι διφρος,— "If you choose to go by land, a chariot is ready for you." Hom. Odys. iii. 325. And Æschines contrasts an expedition (ναυτικη) "by sea," with (πεζη) "by land." Contr. Ctesiph. § 43.

† To correct the ambiguity of Matthew, who expresses the former and latter evening by the same phrase, οψιας γενομενης, Mark substitutes, "when the hour was far advanced," vi. 35; and Luke, "when the day began to decline." See Vol. I. p. 15.

‡ If each company of fifty sate ten in front by five in depth, there would be a hundred such companies; ten companies in front by ten in depth; and consequently, a hundred men in the whole front line, and fifty men in the whole depth.

Then those men when they had seen the miracle which JESUS did, said, "Truly this is that prophet who was to come into the world," like Moses, struck with the resemblance of this to the manna in the desert, Matt. xiv. 15—21, Mark vi. 35—44, Luke ix. 12—17, John vi. 5—14.

JESUS WALKS ON THE SEA.

The former miracle was finished before the [latter] evening was come, at sun-set. And then JESUS knowing the intentions of the multitude, that they meant to seize and make him king, or proclaim him MESSIAH, probably next day, he sent away his disciples by sea, to make Bethsaida, on their way towards Capernaum, on the further side of the lake, intending to meet them by land at Bethsaida, and embark with them, after he had dismissed the multitude, who were satisfied, since he stayed behind. And having given directions to his disciples, he retired alone to a mountain to pray, Matt. xiv. 22, 23, Mark vi. 45—47, John vi. 14—16.

And when the dusk (or twilight) had already come, and JESUS had not gone toward them, the wind became contrary; the ship, after they had rowed about twenty-five or thirty stadia, was tossed by the waves. And Jesus saw them. And at the fourth watch of the night, or at day-break, he set out to them, walking upon the sea, and came up to them, but seemed disposed to pass by them. And the disciples all saw him walking on the sea, and they were affrighted, saying that it was an apparition, and they cried out for fear. And immediately he spake to them, and said, "Take courage, it is I, be not afraid."

Then Peter answered, and said to him, "LORD, if it be thou, bid me come to thee upon the waters." And he said, "Come." And Peter having descended from the ship, walked upon the waters to go unto JESUS. But seeing the wind strong, he was afraid; and beginning to sink, he cried out, saying, "LORD, save me!" And JESUS immediately stretched out his hand, and took hold of him, and saith unto him, "*O thou of little faith, why didst thou waver ?" And when they had entered into the ship, the wind ceased; and they were greatly amazed in themselves beyond measure, and wondered; for "they considered not," or had not been sufficiently affected by the miracle of "the loaves," which demonstrated a higher, even a creating power, "because their heart was hardened," or slow of understanding. But now they were fully convinced, and came and worshipped him, saying, "Truly thou art THE SON OF GOD!" And immediately the ship came across the lake to the land of Gennesareth, on the western side, whither they were bound, in the neighbourhood of Capernaum.

Here the people of the country, well knowing him, brought unto him all their sick and diseased persons, and these besought him that they might only touch the hem of his garment, and as many as touched were thoroughly cured, Matt. xiv. 24—36, Mark vi. 48—56, John vi. 17—21.

HIS CONVERSATION WITH THE PEOPLE WHOM HE FED.

The next morning after his departure, the multitude, disappointed not to find JESUS, took boat, and followed him to Capernaum, and found him by the sea-side, and expressed their surprise how he got there. Instead of gratifying their curiosity, JESUS told them that they followed him for the sake of the loaves and fishes, the worldly advantages which they expected from him; and exhorted them to labour not for temporal, perishable food, but for that which was spiritual and eternal, which the SON OF MAN would give them, John vi. 22—27.

This they supposed to be the manna which Moses had given them, and required as a sign that he would give them the same. But our Lord undeceived them, intimating, that HIS FATHER, not Moses, gave them manna; and that even manna was greatly inferior to his spiritual food, as affording only a temporary support, whereas his would nourish them for ever, ver. 28—33.

* The verb δισταζω, to "waver," or "hesitate," intimates a slighter degree of doubt, not amounting to positive disbelief. Like some of the five hundred to whom OUR LORD appeared in Galilee, after his resurrection, who "hesitated" whether they did not see a spirit only, Matt. xxviii. 17.

The Jews not yet understanding him, he told them plainly that his divine doctrine was the spiritual food he meant; and that by faith in him as THE SON OF GOD, they should have eternal life, and be raised at the last day, and that he came down from heaven to teach them this doctrine, ver. 34—40.

They now murmured, objecting his earthly parentage, “Is not this JESUS the son of Joseph, whose father and mother we know? how then doth he say, I came down from heaven?” JESUS answered, that he was that divine teacher foretold by the prophets, “They shall all be taught of GOD,” Isa. liv. 13, Jer. xxxi. 33, 34, that he was his FATHER’S representative, to reveal his will to mankind, ver. 41—50.

He then informed them that he was the bread of life, not only on account of his doctrine, which would give eternal life to believers, but also because he would give his flesh, or his life, to procure the life of the world, verse 51.

This gave them greater offence. How can this man give us his flesh to eat? And when JESUS continued to explain himself in the same figurative style, “It is the spirit that quickeneth, the flesh profiteth nothing, the sayings which I speak unto you they are spirit and life,” many of his disciples seceded, and walked no more with him, ver. 53—66.

Then said JESUS to the twelve, Will ye also withdraw? Peter saith unto him, in their name, “Lord, to whom shall we secede? thou hast the sayings of eternal life. And we believe, and know, that thou art THE CHRIST, THE SON OF THE LIVING GOD,” ver. 66—69.

To repress, however, their confidence in the strength of their faith, and attachment to him, he remarked, “Have not I chosen you twelve? and yet one of you is a devil.” He meant Judas Iscariot, who was to betray him, being one of the twelve, ver. 70, 71.

THE THIRD PASSOVER*.

JESUS did not attend this passover at Jerusalem, because the Jewish rulers sought to kill him, but remained in Galilee, John vii. 1. His fame, however, was now so great, that they thought it necessary, if possible, to put a stop to it. They sent therefore a party of Scribes and Pharisees from Jerusalem to to watch him, who first attacked him on the ground of traditions, which they strictly observed themselves, and objected that he encouraged the breach of them in his disciples, in order to diminish his popularity, Matt. xv. 1, Mark vii. 1.

* The year assigned to this passover, A.D. 30, is confirmed by the sign of the prophet Jonah, given in the course of it, respecting the destruction of Jerusalem, 40 years after, A.D. 70. Matt. xvi. 4.

“Why do thy disciples transgress the traditions of the elders, for they wash not their hands before meals?” Matt. xv. 2, Mark vii. 2.

1. But JESUS retorted, “Why do ye also transgress the commandment of GOD by your tradition?” And he instanced a case in point: The fifth commandment required them to honour, and, if necessary, support their parents, under pain of death to those undutiful children, who cursed them, or refused to do so, Exod. xx. 12, xxi. 17, Deut. v. 16, Levit. xx. 9. But their tradition encouraged vows, or consecration of their substance to religious uses, which they called corban, “a gift,” or oblation, vowed to the treasury of the temple. And this vow, of corban, even though it never was executed, was considered as sufficient to supersede the law of honouring their parents with any part of their substance, Matt. xv. 4—6, Mark vii. 10—14.

This was the doctrine of the sect called Rabbanites, who held oral tradition, and supposed that GOD dictated many things by word of mouth to Moses on Mount Sinai, which were propagated by tradition of the elders, and long after were put in writing, lest they should be forgot. Hence those maxims of their school, “the words of the scribes are lovelier than the words of the law, the words of the elders are weightier than the words of the prophets *.”

But there was a different sect of the scribes, called Karaites, or “Scripturians,” who rejected traditions, and adhered strictly to the written law. They also rejected the cabalistical or allegorical interpretations of Scripture, and contended for the literal sense. And if the literal was inadmissible, they endeavoured to discover the figurative meaning, by careful comparison of Scripture with itself in parallel places. See an account of their sound principles, Chandler’s Vindication of his Defence of Christianity, p. 351. To such, our LORD’S doctrine must have been acceptable; and such, we may presume, was that intelligent scribe, who gave credit to JESUS, and was pronounced by Him, “not to be far from the kingdom of GOD,” Mark xii. 28—34.

* The Rabbanites and the Romish doctors were remarkably alike, both “teaching for doctrines the commandments of men;” as OUR SAVIOUR reproached the former, Matt. xv. 9.

2. OUR LORD next reproached them for their hypocrisy; and applied to them Isaiah’s censure, “This people draw nigh unto me with their mouth, and honour me with their lips; but their heart is far from me,” (Isai. xxix. 13,) Matt. xv. 7, 8, Mark vii. 6.

3. He then shewed the multitude, that the heart was the chief seat of impurity, Matt. xv. 11—20, Mark vii. 15—23.

4. He reproached the Pharisees as “blind leaders of the blind,” who would be involved in the same common destruction with their deluded followers, “both shall fall into the ditch :” for “every plantation, or doctrine, which MY HEAVENLY FATHER hath not planted, shall be rooted out,” Matt. xv. 13, 14.

Thus did the insidious attack of the Scribes and Pharisees only turn to their own confusion and disgrace. And “they were offended,” not less at the superiority of his arguments, which silenced them, than at the diminution of their reputation with the multitude, as “blind guides,” who cavilled indeed at trifles, and were zealous for external purity; while, by their captious questions and calumnies, they were plotting against his reputation and his life! In order, therefore, to get rid of such evil-minded visitants, he retired to the regions between Tyre and Sidon, to conceal himself in a heathen country, “not wishing to be known,” until their departure, Matt. xv. 12—21, Mark vii. 24.

THE SYROPHENICIAN WOMAN.

But here he could not conceal himself, though he declined preaching in public, or working miracles, beyond the limits of his mission, as SHILOH, or the peculiar APOSTLE OF THE HEBREWS.

An opportunity, however, immediately offered, of contrasting the exalted faith of a heathen, with the obstinate unbelief of his own household. A Syrophenician woman knew him, who had probably heard of the two signal miracles wrought at Cana, in her neighbourhood, particularly the latter, of healing the nobleman’s son at Capernaum; and was therefore persuaded that JESUS was the promised MESSIAH, or CHRIST, the Son of David, expected by the Jews, Samaritans, and the neighbouring Gentiles.

She addressed him, therefore, as a believer: "Pity me, LORD, thou Son of David, my daughter is grievously possessed with a demon!" But our Lord, wishing to shew the firmness of her faith, under repeated denials, "answered her not a word." Then she followed, and besought his disciples; and even they, to get rid of her importunity, interceded for her: "Dismiss her, or grant her request, for she crieth after us." But he refused, "I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel." My mission is not to the Gentiles. Still the woman persevered with patience, and "came, and threw herself at his feet, and besought him, LORD, help me!" But he refused her again, in stronger terms, "It is not meet to take the children's bread, and cast it to dogs;" it is not right to waste on the unworthy heathens, those miracles appropriated to the Jews. Not even repulsed by this, she calmly and humbly replied, "Truth, LORD, yet the dogs eat of the children's crumbs that fall from their master's table." It is true, we heathens are no better than dogs in comparison of thy children, the Jews; still we are thy servants, and should be considered as an inferior part of thy household; and as such, entitled to a pittance of thy bounty to them: the fragments will suffice for us. Perhaps she might have heard also of "the table which his bounty had spread for the five thousand in the wilderness," and alluded thereto in her pointed reply. Admiring her ingenious answer, and seemingly vanquished by her humble and patient importunity, our LORD commended her faith, and instantly granted her petition: "O woman, great is thy faith! be it unto thee even as thou wilt!" And her daughter was cured from that hour. For when the woman returned, she found the demon expelled, and her daughter laid on the bed," quiet and composed, and in her right mind, Matt. xv. 21—28, Mark vii. 24—30.

THE FOUR THOUSAND FED.

Departing from thence, JESUS visited the region of Decapolis, on the eastern side of the lake of Galilee, formerly the settlement of the half tribe of Manasseh, a country which abounded in Gentiles. There he also wrought several signal miracles; and among others already noticed, that of supplying limbs to the "maimed," by a new creation; which wrought the conversion of many, who glorified the God of Israel. Mark ix. 43, Matt. xv. 31. And here OUR LORD, moved with tender compassion also for this mixed multitude of Jews and Heathens, fed four thousand men, beside women and children, with seven loaves of bread, and a few small fishes, which multiplied, as before, under his creating hands ; and left seven baskets full of the fragments that remained after they were all filled, Matt. xv. 29—38, Mark vii. 31—37, viii. 1—9.

MAGDALA.

Immediately after this signal miracle, he dismissed the multitude, not wishing to attract public notice, and went by sea, southwards, to Magdala, on the confines of Dalmanutha ; where he had cured Mary Magdalene, who had been possessed with seven demons, Matt. xv. 39 ; Mark viii. 10 ; Luke viii. 2 ; Mark xvi. 9.

Here he was again assailed by those troublesome and malignant visitors, the Pharisees, from Jerusalem, reinforced by the Sadducees, who, though at variance, yet cordially conspired to compass his destruction. And tempting him, or disbelieving his power to give it, they required of him the sign from heaven of the prophet Daniel, to prove his Messiahship ; which he refused those hypocrites, as observed before, and gave them, for the last time, the sign of the prophet Jonah. Then he left them, and crossed the lake, and retired northwards into Philip the Tetrarch's territories, and went to Cesarea Philippi, near the springs of the Jordan, formerly called Leshem, Josh. xix. 47, and Laish, Judges xviii. 27, which Philip had rebuilt magnificently, and made it his residence, Matt. xvi. 1—13 ; Mark viii. 11—27.

CÆSAREA PHILIPPI.

While they were crossing the lake in their way thither, Jesus warned his disciples to beware of the leaven, or doctrine of the Pharisees or Sadducees ; as he explained it ; after rebuking them for their slowness of apprehension in understanding it literally, as if he could want to buy bread, after the two stupendous miracles of the loaves and fishes.

When they had reached the villages of Cesarea Philippi, He called on his disciples for an explicit profession of their faith, which they gave him, by their leader, Peter, "Thou art THE CHRIST, THE SON OF THE LIVING GOD," Matt. xvi. 5—16 ; Mark viii. 13—21.

THE APOSTLES' PROFESSION OF FAITH.

In return for this noble and explicit profession, JESUS pronounced Peter "blessed," or "happy," in being favoured with a DIVINE revelation, which flesh and blood, or man, could not give him; and alluding to his surname, Peter, (Πετρος,) as belonging to THE ROCK *, CHRIST, (τη Πετρον,) promised that on "THIS ROCK," (pointing, we may presume, to himself,) He would build his Church; which should endure for ever, and the gates of Hades should not prevail against it, to destroy it. He then promised Peter the keys of heaven, as the first who should open the door of faith to both Jews and Gentiles. As Peter actually did on the day of Pentecost, Acts ii. 14—38; and to Cornelius afterwards, Acts x. 6, xv. 7. He also promised him the power of binding and loosing, or of declaring the terms of salvation; that whatsoever things (ὅσα) he should declare to be lawful or unlawful, on earth, should be ratified in heaven; and this privilege was extended to the rest of the Apostles afterwards, Matt. xviii. 18, and seems to correspond to the power of remitting and retaining sins in general, conferred on them jointly after our Lord's resurrection, John xx. 23, according to the Gospel terms of salvation; by which only, mankind shall be acquitted or condemned at the day of judgment. For the expression, whosoever sins, &c. (αντινων) is plural, relating to men in general; not singular, (αντινος,) as if to guard against absolution of individuals, practised by the Church of Rome. For "who hath power on earth to forgive sins" to individuals, but GOD and CHRIST alone? Mark ii. 5—10. This was a power never assumed by the Apostles: Peter himself exhorted Simon Magus to "repent of his wickedness, and pray to GOD for forgiveness," Acts viii. 22, but did not grant him absolution.

As Peter, on this occasion, was the foremost to give a noble

* Peter could not be the rock meant, according to the misinterpretation of the Romanists, from the difference of the Greek terms which OUR LORD probably used, Πετρος, and Πετρον. Nor his confession of faith, with some Protestant divines. CHRIST himself is THE ROCK, or main foundation, both of the Jewish and Christian Church, Deut. xxxii. 15; Psalm xviii. 31; Isai. xxviii. 16; 1 Cor. x. 4; 1 Cor. iii. 11. "The Prophets and the Apostles" were "the architects," or "master builders," who laid thereon the foundation stones of the edifice of the Church, of which CHRIST was also the chief corner stone, that bound together, and crowned the partition walls of the whole edifice, Ephes. ii. 20; 1 Cor. iii. 10; "the Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end of the whole." See Lightfoot on Matt. xvi. 18.

specimen of his faith, and to gain a distinguished blessing, so was he the first to give a lamentable instance of his frailty, and to draw down on himself the severest censure.

Immediately after the foregoing profession, JESUS took occasion, for the first time, to warn his Apostles openly of his approaching sufferings, death, and resurrection on the third day, at Jerusalem. Shocked at this, Peter, taking him aside, began to rebuke him, saying, GOD forbid! this shall not happen to thee, LORD!* But Jesus turning, said to Peter, before the disciples, "Begone from my sight, Satan, thou art an offence to me, for thou mindest not divine, but human things."

He then took occasion to correct their worldly-minded prejudices respecting the nature of his kingdom, informed them of the necessity of self-denial, and taking up their cross as his followers in this world; but that they must look to their reward in the next, at the general judgment, when he should come in the glory of his Father, with his angels, to repay every one according to his practice. And as an earnest thereof, he promised in the life time of some of the bystanders, to come in judgment on Jerusalem, as foretold by Moses, the Prophets, and John the Baptist, Matt. xvi. 21—28; Mark viii. 31—38, ix. 1; Luke ix. 22—27.

CHRIST'S TRANSFIGURATION.

For the fuller evidence of his Divine mission, and confirmation of their "faith, eight days after," (according to Luke,) or "six entire days," excluding the extremes, (according to Matthew and Mark,) JESUS took with him his three confidential disciples, Peter, James, and John, apart, to a high mountain, to pray; and while he was praying, he was transfigured before them. "His face shone as the sun, his garments became resplendent, white as the light, very white, as snow, such as no fuller on earth can whiten. And lo, two men, Moses and Elijah, appeared to them, conversing with Him; who also appeared in glory, and spoke of his decease, which he was to accomplish at Jerusalem. But Peter and his companions were [at first] oppressed with sleep, but being afterwards thoroughly awake, (διαγρηγορησαντες,) they saw his glory, and the two men standing with him. And it came to pass, while they were departing from Him, Peter said to JESUS, LORD, it is good for us to be here. If thou wilt, let us make three tabernacles, one for thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias; not knowing what he said*, for they were scared. While he was yet speaking, lo a bright cloud overshadowed them, and they were affrighted on entering into the cloud; and a voice came from the cloud, saying, This is MY SON, THE BELOVED, in whom I am well pleased. Hear ye him. And when the disciples heard, they fell on their face, for they were sore affrighted. And JESUS came and touched them, and said, Arise, and be not affrighted. And when they lift up their eyes, they saw none, but JESUS only, with them."

* Ἰλεως σοι, put elliptically for ἰλεως σοι γ ὁ Θεος, "God be merciful to thee," and forbid such an evil!

Such is the collective account of this stupendous scene, furnished by the three Evangelists, Matt. xvii. 1—8, Mark ix. 2—8, Luke ix. 28—36; vouched also by two of the eye witnesses, Peter, 2 Pet. i. 16—18, and John, i. 14.

As they descended from the mountain, JESUS forbade them to mention the vision to any, until after his resurrection from the dead. And they observed his directions, but questioned among themselves, what "the resurrection from the dead meant."

Mount Tabor, in Galilee, is usually supposed to have been the scene of this wondrous transaction, in which JESUS unveiled a portion of his divine glory, even in the flesh, as the ONLY GENUINE SON OF GOD. But there is reason to doubt the correctness of the tradition. It seems rather to have been some mountain near Cesarea Philippi; for JESUS did not re-

* The faith of Peter seems to have been subjected to various paroxysms. On his public profession, it was raised to a great height; when CHRIST foretold his sufferings and death, he was offended, and it sunk. Now it rose again, at the sight of this glorious vision; when he was transported with rapture, and rashly proposed to make three tabernacles, for the worship of him and his two glorified companions, Moses and Elijah, "not knowing what he said," or the infinite superiority of CHRIST, as THE SON OF GOD, above Moses and Elijah, his servants, Heb. iii. 3—6, so signified, indeed, immediately after they had disappeared, by the voice from the cloud. Again it sunk to the lowest when JESUS was apprehended, and tried before the council; so that he even denied his LORD: but was pardoned upon his speedy repentance. Thus the Apostles themselves, as well as meaner Christians, had occasion frequently to cry, LORD, encrease our faith! Luke xvii. 5. Even theirs was not fully established till they received the baptism of THE SPIRIT, and became regenerate, on the day of Pentecost. Happy those believers, whose faith and trust, surmounting all obstacles and trials, is firmly and invariably built and secured upon THE ROCK, CHRIST, "THE ROCK of ages," THE SAME, yesterday, and to-day, and for ever! Matt. vii. 24, 25; Isai. xxvi. 4; John xiv. 1; Heb. i. 12, xiii. 8.

turn to Galilee until some time after this transaction, Matt. xvii. 22, Mark ix. 30. Lightfoot on Mark ix. 2, ingeniously conjectures, that it was the highest mountain of that country, according to Josephus, hanging over the springs of Jordan, at the foot of which Cesarea Philippi was built, which had been the scene of the early idolatry of the Danites, but now of the presence of the eternal Son of God.

CURE OF THE LUNATIC AND DEMONIAK.

During the absence of CHRIST and his three prime Apostles, a patient was brought to the rest, labouring under a complication of disorders, deafness, dumbness, lunacy, and possession, from his infancy, but they could not cure him, for want of faith, to work the miracle; and when he returned from the mountain next day, he saw a great multitude about them, and the Scribes, as usual, questioning with them, and scoffing at them for their failure.

And when the multitude saw him, they were excessively amazed (ἐξεθαμβήθη), probably because his face and raiment still shone after his transfiguration †, like the face of Moses after his descent from Mount Sinai, Exod. xxxiv. 29—35; still they ran to salute him. JESUS then asked the Scribes about what they were questioning his disciples? Upon this, the father of the sick child came out of the crowd, fell at his knees, and besought him to cure his son, whom he had brought during his absence, and applied to his disciples to cure, but they could not.

JESUS answered, “O faithless and perverse generation! how long shall I be with you? how long shall I bear with you?”—or, How long shall I endure your obstinate infidelity?—The edge of this rebuke seems to have been principally levelled against the Scribes, yet the Disciples escaped not altogether untouched. Then said he to the father, “Bring hither thy Son,” and they brought him in the agony of a violent convulsion. The father, considering the case as well nigh desperate, said, If thou art able [to do] any [thing,] assist us, and have tender compassion on us. JESUS said unto him, “If thou art able to believe, [I am able:] all things are possible [to be done] for him that believeth; and immediately the father of the child cried out with tears, I do believe, LORD, help thou mine unbelief!"

* This supposition, Mark ix. 15, is warranted by the application of the same verb to the women who saw the second angel in OUR LORD'S tomb. Mark xvi. 5, ἐκθαμβεομαι marks a higher expression of fear and astonishment than φοβεομαι, Matt. xxviii. 5, when they saw the first angel.

JESUS then seeing the crowd closing together upon him from every part, rebuked the impure spirit, and said, Thou deaf and dumb spirit, I order thee to come out of him, and enter no more into him. And the demoniacal spirit, having screamed, and rent him sorely, came out of him, and left him for dead, so that many said he was dead; but JESUS, taking him by the hand, raised him, and cured the child from that hour, and delivered him to his father. And all were struck with astonishment at the mighty power of GOD, Matt. xvii. 14—21; Mark ix. 14—29, Luke ix. 37—43.

CHRIST RETURNS TO GALILEE.

Immediately after this signal miracle, JESUS left Cesarea Philippi, and returned to Galilee privately, where he appears to have remained till the ensuing feast of tabernacles, about the beginning of autumn. On the way, he took occasion, a second time, to inform his disciples more particularly of his approaching sufferings, death, and resurrection on the third day. And they were greatly grieved, but they understood not the saying of his resurrection, for it was hidden from them, but they feared to enquire of him its meaning, Matt. xvii. 22, 23, Mark ix. 30—32, Luke ix. 43—45.

MIRACULOUS SUPPLY OF THE TRIBUTE MONEY.

When they had reached Capernaum, the tax-gatherers of Herod and of Pontius Pilate, the Roman governor, (the former for Galilee, the latter for Judea and Samaria,) came to enquire before hand from his disciples, whether their master was disposed to pay the capitation tax of two drachmas *? suspecting

* The exact frugality of this miracle and prophecy combined, still more surprizing than the superfluity of the loaves and fishes, has been greatly obscured by our translators, for want of retaining, or paraphrasing the technical terms of the original, and mistaken by most commentators, supposing that it was the capitation tax of half a shekel for each of the congregation of Israel, above twenty years old, prescribed by the law of Moses, for sacred uses, Exod. xxx. 13. Two Greek drachmas, or two Roman denarii, equal to half a shekel, (about fifteen pence of our currency,) was the "census" here mentioned, or the capitation tax paid to Cæsar, Matt. xxii. 17. And the sameness of the amount probably occasions this confusion of the Roman with the sacred tax. The stater was an Attic silver coin, equal in value to the sacred shekel, four drachmas, or four that, as the reputed MESSIAH, he would revolt against it, like Judas of Galilee, and the zealots of his party, in the days of the taxing, Acts v. 37. Peter, knowing his Master's principles of obedience to the ruling powers, answered "yes," and went into the house to inform him. But JESUS prevented, or anticipated him, by a pertinent question: "What thinkest thou, Simon? From whom do the kings of the land take tribute, or census? From their own children, or from strangers?" Peter answered, From strangers. JESUS saith unto him, Then are the children free. Thus intimating that as THE CHRIST, the SON OF GOD, the true sovereign of the land under the THEOCRACY, He and his disciples were exempt. "Nevertheless," proceeded he, "that we may not offend them, (Herod and Pontius Pilate,) Go thou to the sea, cast a hook, and take up the fish that riseth first, open his mouth, and thou shalt find a stater. That take, and give them (the publicans), for me and thee." This miracle is recorded only by Matthew, the publican, xvii. 24—27.

AMBITION OF THE DISCIPLES.

The distinguished favour which JESUS had lately shewn to Peter, James, and John, and the glorious scene of the Transfiguration, which they only had witnessed, seems to have awakened their ambition. This produced a debate among them, in the way to Capernaum, which of them should be greatest in the glorious kingdom, which they expected CHRIST would shortly establish, in which Peter, the most forward, and the bro-denarii, and the precise amount, therefore, of the tax for two persons, OUR LORD and Peter.

Why JESUS chose to pay it rather in this coin than in the Jewish or Roman, may perhaps be conjectured to have arisen from the description of "the stater, which on one side had Minerva's face, on the other her owl." See Hesychius, Art. Παλλαδος προσωπον. But Pallas, or Minerva, was the heathen goddess of WISDOM, the spurious representative of OUR LORD himself. The stater, therefore, bore "his image," and He reclaimed it as his own coin.

It is strange how so respectable a commentator as Gilpin, in his New Testament, could so greatly undervalue this signal and most astonishing miracle, evincing that CHRIST was LORD of the creation, as to "rank it among those of the lowest class.—A miracle adapted to fishermen, which might tend greatly to increase their faith!"—Or thus fancifully and irreverently account for it: "It would be difficult to say how JESUS could with more propriety have obtained a supply; if he had created it on the spot, it might have had the appearance of a sort of legerdemain; or it might have laid him open to the accusation of counterfeiting the current coin of the country!" "The kings of the land" were "Herod and Pontius Pilate," Acts iv. 26, 27.

thers James and John, the most violent of the disciples, appear to have taken the lead, and from the ensuing application of their mother, that they should sit the one on his right hand, and the other on his left, in his kingdom, or be made his prime ministers, which excited the indignation of the rest, Matt. xx. 20—24, it is likely the contest was chiefly between them and Peter, for he was foremost to state the claims of the Disciples in general, and certainly did not undervalue his own in particular, Matt. xix. 17.

At first they had confined the dispute to themselves, and were silent, or ashamed to avow it, when JESUS enquired into the subject, and checked it, by saying, “If any of you wish to be chief, let him be last of all, and minister of all,” Mark ix. 33—35, Luke ix. 46, 47.

Soon after it broke out afresh, and the whole set came to JESUS to decide the point, which of them should be greatest in the kingdom of heaven?

To correct their ambitious views in general, and instruct them by example, JESUS called to him a little child, and set him in the midst, beside himself, and said, “Unless ye be converted, and become as little children, [in their leading characteristics of humility, simplicity, innocency, and docility,] ye shall by no means enter into the kingdom of heaven.” Thus sensibly illustrating to them the figurative nature of that “new birth,” which he had more briefly stated to Nicodemus, as an indispensable requisite for admission; of which the principal ingredient was humility. “Whosoever, therefore, shall humble himself as this little child, he shall be greatest in the kingdom of heaven,” Matt. xviii. 1—5, Mark ix. 36, 37, Luke ix. 47, 48.

He then repressed the officious zeal of John, who had forbidden an exorcist to cast out demons in the name of JESUS, because he was not of their company; by observing, that such a person must be a friend, and not an enemy. He that is not against us, is for us, Mark ix. 38—40, Luke ix. 49, 50.

This led him to warn them against offending one of the least of his disciples, by despising or ill-treating them. For 1. It would draw down on them the heaviest doom. 2. That the least were objects of God’s care and compassion. 3. That his Apostles especially, were required to be converted, and to cast away their ruling passions, though dear to them as a right hand or a right eye, under pain of hell fire; because they were to be the salt of the world, ordained to season it with their sound doctrines, and discipline it by their good examples, Matt. xviii. 6—14, Mark ix. 42—50.

He then proceeded to give them rules for their conduct towards offenders. 1. To admonish the offender prudently, in private; not to expose him. 2. If he would not listen to reason, to state the offence between two or three witnesses, and call on him for reparation. 3. If these gentle methods failed of converting him, then to complain to the church or congregation to which they belonged; and 4. If he refused to submit to the authority of the Church, then to hold no intercourse with him. Let him be unto thee as a heathen and a publican, Matt. xviii. 15—17.

But if the offender repented, they were bound to forgive him heartily his trifling offences towards them, as they hoped for forgiveness of their heinous offences towards GOD, upon their sincere repentance; as illustrated in the parable of the debtors, the one who owed his lord the immense sum of ten thousand talents, the other, who owed his fellow-servant one hundred denarii, with which this interesting conversation concludes, Matt. xviii. 21—35.

In the parable of the Labourers in the Vineyard, hired at different hours of the day, and all paid alike their stated wages, our LORD appears to have resumed the subject, and to have given a further check to the pride of the first-called disciples, setting themselves above, and undervaluing the last-called; after he had informed the claimant, Peter, that the “twelve Apostles in the regeneration, should sit on twelve thrones, judging, or instructing, the twelve tribes of Israel,” Matt. xix. 28—30, xx. 1—16. This seems to be the chief drift of the parable; which is usually applied to the Jews, murmuring at the admission of the Gentiles into the Gospel covenant, but rather, perhaps, irrelevantly.

THE FEAST OF TABERNACLES.

Not yet believing the spiritual nature of his kingdom, his brethren, or kinsmen, who had, at the last, become his disciples, and expected promotion, not less than the rest, advised him to exhibit his miracles in Judea, as a more public theatre than the despised Galilee; but he rebuked them for their worldly mind-edness and ostentation, and refused to accompany them to the feast; but he afterwards followed them privately, and came to Jerusalem, in the middle of the festival week, and taught openly in the temple, John vii. 1—14.

Astonished at his doctrine, the unbelieving Jews said, "How understandeth this man learning, not having been educated?" JESUS answered, "My doctrine is not my own," or acquired by human education, "but HIS that sent me;" for it is immediately inspired by GOD. "Whosoever is desirous to do his will," with an honest and good heart, "shall understand concerning my doctrine, whether it be from GOD, or whether I speak from myself;" for GOD will enlighten his mind to form a right judgment of its divine origin; as he had signified to them before, (John vi. 44, 45,) ver. 15, 18.

He then entered into a further vindication of the miracle of curing the cripple at Bethesda, on the Sabbath, which had given them so much "surprise," or offence, that they sought to kill him, at the second passover; by stating the case of circumcision, which they themselves performed on the sabbath day, in obedience to the law. "Why then," said he, "are ye angry with me, for healing a man on the sabbath day? Judge not according to appearance, judge upright judgment," ver. 19—24.

Still the old objection returned, "We know this man whence he is, his birth-place and parentage; but when CHRIST cometh, none knoweth whence he is."

JESUS replied, "Do ye know me, and whence I am?" intimating the reverse. "Yet I am not come of myself, but HE that sent me is TRUE; whom ye know not. But I know HIM, because I am from Him; and He hath sent me.—Many then of the multitude believed on him, and said, When THE CHRIST cometh, will he do more miracles than this man hath done?" ver. 27—31.

Alarmed at his encreasing popularity, the Pharisees and chief priests sent officers to apprehend him. JESUS knowing this, intimated his approaching decease: "Yet a little while and I am with you; but I am about to withdraw unto the FATHER. Ye shall seek me, but shall not find me; for whither I go ye cannot come."

The Jews, not understanding this, said among themselves, "Whither is he going to depart, that we shall not find him? Is he going to depart to the dispersion of the Greeks, to teach the Greeks?"—or the Jewish colonies, settled in Pontus, Gala- tia, Cappadocia, Asia Minor, and Bithynia, by the kings of Syria, 1 Pet. i. 1. See the foregoing period, ver. 32—36.

On the last, and the great day of the feast, JESUS avowed himself to be THE CHRIST more explicitly, by applying to himself the prophetic invitation of CHRIST in Isaiah, “Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters;” lv. 1, which was usually repeated by the priests on that day, when they drew water from the fountain of Shiloh, or with a Greek termination, Siloam, to be poured out as a libation to GOD, in the temple, for a memorial of the miraculous supply of water in the wilderness: for he said, “If any thirst, let him come unto me, [the true fountain of Siloam, Isai. viii. 6,] and drink;” adding, “He that believeth on me, out of his belly shall flow [streams] of living water; as saith the Scripture.” This he said in allusion to the copious effusion of the HOLY SPIRIT on the first fruits of the Christian Church, at the ensuing Pentecost, after his ascension in glory, foretold by the Prophets, especially Joel, ii. 28, 29, and cited by Peter, Acts ii. 16, 18. Ver. 37—39.

The grace and dignity of his discourse, persuaded many of the people that He was indeed the prophet like Moses, whom they expected. Even the officers sent to apprehend him, were charmed; they could not execute their commission, and pleaded in excuse, before the council, never man spake like this man! ver. 40—49.

There was a schism, however, among the people, because he came from Galilee, and was supposed to have been born at Nazareth, whereas they contended that CHRIST was to be of the house of David, and born at Bethlehem, according to Micah's prophecy, ver. 2. Nor were they unanimous even in their council. Nicodemus boldly censured their proceedings, in condemning JESUS without trial, as illegal. But they reproached him with being a disciple of the Galilean, and even asserted that no prophet had arisen from Galilee; blinded by passion, and not recollecting Jonah. At this time, however, they broke up, without coming to any determination against him, ver. 43—53.

THE WOMAN TAKEN IN ADULTERY.

JESUS retired that evening to Bethany, where he lodged, and returned early next morning to the temple, and taught the people, who all assembled early to hear him. But he was soon interrupted by the Scribes and Pharisees, who “tempting him,” brought a guilty adulteress before him, taken in the fact; and not improbably, in the courts of the temple itself, which were usually converted into a scene of revelry, the last night of the feast of Tabernacles; respectfully in appearance, requesting his decision as “a teacher,” whether she should be stoned, in obedience to the law of Moses, or not? Deut. xxii. 22—24; designing, if he condemned her, to accuse him to the Roman government, for invading their prerogative of inflicting capital punishment, which was now taken away from the Jews, John xviii. 31; or if he declined, to injure his character with the people, as encouraging a breach of the law.

From this dangerous dilemma, our Saviour extricated himself with wonderful address, and to the utter confusion of his adversaries. Giving them no answer, He stooped down, and wrote with his finger on the ground; and when they pressed him for a decision, he raised himself up, and pronounced, Let him that is guiltless among you cast the first stone at her. And again he stooped down and wrote on the ground; but they, when they heard, being convicted by their own consciences, withdrew one by one, beginning from the eldest to the last; until JESUS was left alone, and the woman standing in the midst. When JESUS had raised himself up, and saw none but the woman, he said unto her, Woman, where are those thine accusers? Hath no one [legally] condemned thee? She said, No one, LORD. He saith unto her, Neither do I [legally] condemn thee. Go, and sin no more, John viii. 1—11.

This mysterious action of OUR LORD, twice repeated, was designed, perhaps, the first time, to record the sins of the woman, and afterwards, the sins of her accusers, in the symbolical language of prophecy:

“O LORD, all that forsake THEE shall be ashamed,
They that depart from THEE * shall be written in the earth;
Because they have forsaken THE LORD,
The fountain of living waters,” Jer. xvii. 13.

To be “written in the earth,” denotes, not to be registered in heaven, nor in the book of life, like his true disciples, Luke x. 20. Nothing, surely, could be more apposite to both, than such an awful prophecy; which, like the hand writing on the wall, if traced in the dust, might well confound and appal the guilty readers. The former writing on the ground, might have recorded the woman's guilt, as explained by our Lord's decision, Let him that is without sin, &c. while the latter writing might have recorded that of the informers themselves; as interpreted by their conduct in retiring. Indeed, if we suppose that the writing, in the latter case, especially, was legible to them, which is not improbable, no wonder that "they were ashamed," and "convicted by their own consciences," when thus probed to the quick, and standing in the presence of HIM who had declared himself, the day before, "the fountain of living waters;" whom they had so grievously and notoriously "forsaken" and apostatized from. Our gracious LORD, however, finding that the woman had not been legally condemned, did not assume the office of a judge, which he elsewhere declined, Luke xii. 14; "Neither do I condemn thee;" but he recognized her crime in her dismissal; "Go, and sin no more." Never was there a triumph more complete; these sanctified sinners and hypocrites were self-convicted, confounded, and disgraced before the multitude.

* This reading, instead of “Me,” and the rendering of the whole passage, is supported by all the ancient versions, and required by the context.

It is truly remarkable, that at this period adulterers were become so numerous, that by the advice of Rabban Johanan ben Zaccai, the practice of trying women suspected of adultery, by the waters of jealousy, according to the law, Numb. v. 12—31, was abolished; the trial being only effectual when the husband was guiltless himself; according to the rabbinical comment*. And the abolition was grounded upon a perversion of prophecy: "I will not punish your daughters when they commit whoredom, nor your spouses when they commit adultery," Hos. iv. 14. See Lightfoot's Works, Vol. II. p. 563, 1080. When our Lord, therefore, styled the Jews of his age "an adulterous generation," it was true both carnally and spiritually.

In a subsequent conversation in the temple, OUR LORD asserted still more plainly, 1. His descent from heaven, and return to GOD, his Father, after they should set up, or crucify him. 2. His spotless purity, in doing always those things that please GOD; and indignant appeal to his innocence, and defiance of his accusers, which of you convicteth me of sin? 3. That they were of their father the Devil, whose works they did and would do, as murderers, liars, and unbelievers; and unlike Abraham, in whom they boasted as their father, who believed in CHRIST, longed to see his day, and saw it in prophetic vision, and was glad. 4. He stated his own pre-existence as "THE GOD of Abraham," Exod. iii. 14—16, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, Before Abraham was born, I AM." Then they attempted to stone him for his supposed blasphemy; but he made himself invisible, and went out of the temple, passing through the midst of them, John viii. 12—59.

* "If ye be adulterers yourselves, the bitter waters will not try your wives." Bemidbar Rabba, p. 235.

SIGHT GIVEN TO THE MAN BORN BLIND.

This most significant and characteristic miracle, and the most fully examined and authenticated by his enemies, the Jewish council, demonstrated their blindness and infatuation, in the strongest light, and left them without excuse for their obstinate rejection of CHRIST. It is therefore detailed most circumstantially by the Evangelist, chap. ix.

1. The inquiry of the disciples, "Rabbi, which sinned, this man, or his parents, that he was born blind?" was founded on their prejudices, that disease of every kind was intended as a punishment of sin: which indeed, OUR LORD himself seemed to have supported, in remitting the sins of the cripple at Bethesda, John v. 14; he might, they thought, have been punished either for the sins of "his parents," or for "his own," in a former body; for that they held the transmigration of souls, is evident from Herod's supposition, that John the Baptist, whom he slew, might have revived in JESUS, Matt. xiv. 2. But OUR LORD corrected their mistake, by stating that this man's malady was not designed as a punishment for either, but as an instrument of God's glory in the hands of CHRIST, who was sent into the world for that purpose, during the short period of his mission, ver. 1—5. And the giving sight to the blind, was one of the characteristic miracles of CHRIST, Isai. xxxv. 5, which made the Pharisees so desirous of disproving it, and denying its consequence.

2. The circumstances of the miracle were also remarkably significant; 1. the anointing his eyes with clay, of the MESSEAH, or CHRIST, (signifying "anointed;") 2. sending him to the Pool of Siloam, signifying "sent," which was emblematical also of CHRIST, as the SHILOH of Jacob's prophecy, the peculiar "APOSTLE of the Hebrews;" and "the fountain of living waters," Gen. xlix. 10, Heb. iii. 1, Isai. ix. 6, Jer. xvii. 13. The account of the cure is remarkable for its energetic brevity. "He departed, and washed, and returned, seeing*," ver. 6, 7.

2. This miracle was performed on the sabbath day. And the supposed breach of the sabbath, counteracting the natural operation of the stupendous miracle, produced a schism among the Pharisees respecting JESUS; some believing his divine mission, others not. But the latter party, the bigots, prevailed in the council. So after they had repeatedly examined the man himself respecting his cure, and also his parents, to prove his identity; when the man would not "glorify God," as they required him, by ingenuously confessing the truth, (like Achan, Josh. vii. 18, 19,) and admitting that JESUS was a sinner, for this supposed breach of the sabbath; but full of that noble and undaunted spirit, which truth and gratitude inspire, boldly answered, "Herein is a marvellous thing, that ye know not whence he is; and yet he opened mine eyes! we know that GOD heareth not sinners; but if any one be a worshipper of God, and do his will, him he heareth. From the beginning of the world was it not heard, that any one opened the eyes of one born blind. If this person was not from GOD, he could do nothing."

What answer did the council make to this honest and spirited reply? That which bigotry and prejudice always oppose when confuted; "Thou wast altogether born in sin †, and dost thou teach us! and they excommunicated him," ver. 13—34.

JESUS hearing this, found the man, and asked him, Dost thou believe in the SON of GOD? He answered, Who is he, LORD, that I might believe in Him? Jesus said, I, your benefactor, am he ‡. Then he answered, I do believe, LORD, and he worshipped him. Here was a remarkable instance of religious worship, given to, and accepted by CHRIST, ver. 35—38.

In a subsequent conversation with the Jews, JESUS said,

* The man's description of the rapidity of his cure, in the original, απελθων δε και νψαμενος, ανεβλεψα, ver. 11, rivals Cæsar's, of the rapidity of his victory, so admired by classical readers, veni, vidi, vici.

† This reproach proceeded from the same general principle that occasioned the enquiry of the disciples before, ver. 2.

‡ So Gilpin excellently explains our Lord's answer: "Thou hast both seen him, and the person speaking with thee is he," John ix. 37.

evidently alluding to this miracle, and its different effects on the people, and on their rulers; "For discrimination (κριμα), am I come into this world, that they who see not, [through ignorance,] might see; and that they who see, [or think they see, through pride or prejudice,] might become blind." Some of the Pharisees who heard these words, immediately applied them to themselves, and said, Are we blind also? JESUS answered, "If ye were blind, [through ignorance,] ye would not have sin; but now ye say, We see, [blinded by your pride and prejudice,] therefore your sin remaineth," because ye wilfully shut your eyes against the light of Truth, ver. 39—41.

OUR LORD then proceeded, with severity, to contrast his teaching with former pretenders, Judas of Galilee, &c. calling himself the good Shepherd, the true door of admittance into the sheepfold, or the only way to salvation; while they were no better than false shepherds, hirelings, thieves, and robbers, who neglected, or pillaged the flock, or basely left it to be destroyed by wolves. 2. That he came freely to lay down his life for the sheep*, [and to resume it again, by the divine grant,] and 3. not only for this fold, but also for other folds, the Gentiles; that all, in the fulness of time, might become one fold, under one Shepherd, Himself, John x. 1—18.

This enigmatical speech was not understood at that time by the people, among whom the schism respecting him still continued, ver. 19—21.

Shortly after this feast of Tabernacles, JESUS returned again to Galilee, about autumn.

THIRD RETURN TO GALILEE.

JESUS did not long remain in Galilee after his return. Having completed his ministry there, when the days of his ascension drew nigh, he devoted the remainder of his time to the instruction of Samaria and Judea, and the rest of the Holy Land; and steadily set his face to quit Galilee, where he had

* This passage may be more closely rendered thus: "I am the good shepherd: I both know my own, and am known by them: (even as the Father knoweth me, and I know the Father,) and I lay down my life for the sheep," John x. 14, 15. The English Testament has given an incorrect and disjointed rendering: separating the illustration from the 14th verse, to which it belonged, and attaching it to the 15th. Perperam antea distinctus fuit hic versiculus. Beza. The translators should here have followed him.

so many friends, and go towards Jerusalem, to encounter enemies, Luke ix. 51, Matt. xix. 1, Mark x. 1.

And now laying aside all reserve, he proceeded thither, not as before, in private, at the feast of Tabernacles, but in public, unto the ensuing feast of Dedication, in winter, which he meant to attend openly, John x. 22.

CHRIST VISITS SAMARIA.

On his former visit, CHRIST only spent two days with the hospitable Samaritans of Sychar, but now designing to make some stay among them, he sent messengers before his face to a Samaritan village, to make preparation for him. But when they understood that he was on his way to Jerusalem, they refused to entertain him. Provoked at this inhospitality, James and John demanded permission to call down fire from heaven, like Elijah, to destroy them. But JESUS turned and rebuked them, saying, "Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of;"—yours is hostile to the spirit of the GOSPEL;—"for THE SON OF MAN came not to destroy men's lives, but to save. And they [meekly] departed to another village." In his progress through Samaria, OUR LORD probably made disciples; as we may collect from two instances noticed by Luke, ix. 52—62, to whom we owe this short account of his ministry in Samaria.

SEVENTY DISCIPLES SENT TO PREACH.

During our Lord's stay in Samaria, he sent forth seventy disciples, in succession to the Apostles, as his immediate harbingers, to proclaim, in pairs, his approach, unto the several cities and places which he meant to visit in his way to Jerusalem. This was a special notification to those cities, "The KINGDOM OF GOD is approaching unto you," more confined in its range, than the former, by the Apostles. And the disciples were required to make no delay, "Salute no one by the way," see 2 Kings iv. 29, because the Jewish salutations were remarkably tedious. In other respects, the two commissions were nearly the same; and this began with a similar exhortation to the disciples:

"The harvest indeed is plenteous, but the labourers few; pray ye therefore THE LORD OF THE HARVEST, that he would speedily send forth, (εκβαλλη,) labourers into his harvest." This second commission we learn only from the Evangelist

Luke, x. 1—16. This number was probably chosen in imitation of the seventy elders of Israel, Exod. xxiv. 9.

After executing their commission, which required no long time, distributed among so many, the seventy returned again, with joy, and said, "LORD, even the demons are subject to us, in thy name," Luke x. 17.

Here OUR LORD, anticipating the future triumph of the GOSPEL over the powers of darkness, said, "I beheld Satan fallen *, (πεσοντα), like lightning, from heaven." This interpretation seems to be confirmed by OUR LORD'S subsequent declaration, "Now is the judgment of this world; now shall the ruler of this world be utterly expelled," (εκβληθησεται εξω), John xii. 31, and also by the enlargement of their commission:

"Lo, I give you authority to trample upon serpents and scorpions, and upon all the power of the enemy †, (Satan), and nothing shall by any means hurt you. Notwithstanding, in this rejoice not, that the spirits are subject unto you; but rejoice, rather, that your names are written in heaven;"—by a glorious contrast with those that are "written on earth," ver. 18—20.

In the same hour JESUS exulted in spirit, and said, "I thank thee, O FATHER ‡, LORD OF HEAVEN AND EARTH, that thou hast hid these [mysteries] from the wise [in their own eyes,] and prudent [in their own sight, Isai. v. 21,] and hast revealed them to babes [in humility, and docility:] yea, because [thou art] THE FATHER ‡, thus was it well-pleasing in thy sight," (Matt. xi. 25, 26, Luke x. 21.)

These mysteries, respecting the nature of THE FATHER and of THE SON, and the universal authority committed to THE SON, and revealed to his disciples only, are next stated:

"All things were committed to me by MY FATHER: and

* The participle πεσων, is properly future, Matt. iv. 9, xxi. 44, Luke xx. 18, 1 Cor. xiv. 25, &c. but here, by an elegant anticipation, is considered as past; like Mark ix. 20, Luke v. 12, viii. 14—41, as distinguished from the present, πιπτων, Luke xvi. 21.

† This was a prophetic privilege of the MESSIAH. "Thou shalt tread upon the lion and adder, the young lion and dragon shalt thou trample under thy feet," Psalms xci. 13, derived from the first covenant, Gen. iii. 15.

‡ Πατερ is the vocative case, "O FATHER;" but ὁ Πατηρ, afterwards, the nominative, "THE FATHER;" which surely is not to be confounded with the preceding. The latter seems to be elliptical, put for ὁ Πατηρ οτι [σου ει] οὕτως εγενετο ευδοκια εμπροσθεν σου; assigning as a reason, that "such was his good pleasure," "because He was THE FATHER OF ALL;" and would distinguish his worthy from his unworthy children. The same ellipsis occurs John xx. 28, [Συ ει] ὁ κυριως μου, και ὁ θεος μου, "[Thou art] MY LORD and MY GOD."

none knoweth who THE SON is, but the Father; and who THE FATHER is, but the Son; and he, to whom THE SON may be willing to reveal [both,] ver. 21, 22. Then turning aside to his disciples, he said, "Blessed are the eyes which behold what ye behold: for I say unto you, that many prophets and kings wished to see what ye behold, and did not see, and to hear what ye hear, and did not hear," ver. 23, 24,—to see the miracles, and hear the doctrine of CHRIST.

It is remarkable that our blessed LORD broke forth into the same rapturous expression of praise and thanksgiving to GOD, upon the former occasion also of the return of the twelve Apostles from executing their commission, Matt. xi. 25—27*. And well may Christians of the present day, "blessed" with the glorious light of THE GOSPEL, who "have not seen, yet have believed" in CHRIST, as "THEIR LORD and THEIR GOD," (John xx. 29,) express their exultation and gratitude to GOD and CHRIST, in the similar language of the great Apostle of the Gentiles:

"O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of GOD [THE FATHER:] How unsearchable his judgments, and untraceable his ways!" Rom. xi. 33. "Who, now, hath revealed to his saints, the mystery which was hid from the ages, and from the generations [past,]" Col. i. 26—"of GOD in CHRIST, reconciling the world unto Himself," 2 Cor. v. 19; that "great mystery of Godliness: GOD [THE SON] manifested in the flesh, justified by THE SPIRIT, seen by angels, preached among Gentiles, believed in by the world, taken up in glory!" 1 Tim. iii. 16. "In whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge!" Col. ii. 2, 3. To WHOM, with the FATHER, be glory and dominion, for ever and ever. Amen!

CHRIST VISITS JUDEA.

This interesting conversation appears to have taken place after JESUS had left Samaria, and gone into Judea, where the seventy found him on their return, proceeding on his way to Bethany, Luke x. 38. But a Jewish scribe, or doctor of the law, who was present thereat, having heard OUR LORD'S reply

* The only difference between the two Evangelists is, that Matthew says οὐδεὶς ἐπιγινώσκει τὸν υἱόν, &c. "None intimately knoweth THE SON," &c. (the compound verb being intensitive, 2 Cor. vi. 9,) and Luke, in explanation thereof, οὐδεὶς γινώσκει τίς ἐστιν ὁ υἱός, &c. "None knoweth the nature of THE SON," &c.

to the seventy, and his thanksgiving, and ranking himself probably among "the wise and prudent," whose ignorance of the divine mysteries had been noticed, took offence thereat, and "tempting him," determined to try his knowledge of the law, with the insidious design, perhaps, to accuse him of heresy, if he should answer contrary to the decision of the doctors. He proposed, therefore, as a leading question, "Teacher, what shall I do to inherit eternal life?" JESUS, alluding to his profession, said, "What is written in the law, how readest thou?" He answered by repeating the first great commandments of the law, the love of God, and the love of our neighbour. Our Lord commended him for answering rightly, and told him that the observance of these would procure him eternal life. "But he wishing to justify himself," in a narrow interpretation of the word "neighbour," which the Scribes confined to their own countrymen, the Jews, in exclusion of the Samaritans and of heathens; again asked, "And who is my neighbour?"—This was a nice and delicate question; a direct answer to which might have committed our Lord with the Scribes and Pharisees. He therefore veiled his answer in the

PARABLE OF THE HUMANE SAMARITAN.

This most instructive parable might have been founded in fact. It represents a Jewish traveller who was robbed and wounded by banditti, on the road from Jerusalem to Jericho, through the desert, which, from the frequency of the murders committed thereon, was called the bloody way. This Jew was left half dead on the road, and was passed by unheeded, first by a priest, and then by a Levite, (many of whom resided at Jericho,) until a Samaritan passenger took compassion on him, dressed his wounds with oil and wine, set him on his beast, brought him to an inn, and took care of him, and even left money with the host for his support, with a promise of repaying any further expense that might be incurred, on his return. Our Lord then left the Scribe to decide which of the three, the priest, the Levite, or the Samaritan, was neighbour to the wounded Jew? and when he could not avoid deciding in favour of the last, "He that shewed mercy on him," JESUS directly pointed the application to himself, "Go, and do thou likewise," and for the future, count the despised Samaritan your neighbour, which hitherto you have not done. He departed, therefore, censured rather than justified.

From this admirable parable we learn the true, enlarged, and Christian import of the word "neighbour;" any person with whom we have any concern or dealings, in the usual intercourse of society, however different he may be from us in country or tribe, religion, or *sect. This also is in the true spirit of the Mosaical law, (see the foregoing article,) and also of the patriarchal, as expressed in the Latin aphorism, Homo sum ; nihil humani a me alienum puto.

"I am a man ; I count no human being an alien."

Such too was the Hindu ; "Whether this person be of my tribe or of another, is a consideration of the narrow-minded, but that of the noble-minded is to hold all the world related to them." See Pancha Tantra, or "five explanations of their morality."

MARTHA AND MARY.

In his progress through Judea, our Lord was entertained at the village of Bethany, near Jerusalem, by the sisters of Lazarus. Martha, the elder, as mistress of the house, was cumbered with much serving, or busied in preparing for the entertainment of their illustrious guest, while Mary, the younger, was sitting at the feet of JESUS, in the posture of a disciple, listening to his heavenly conversation. Jealous at this, Martha said, LORD carest thou not that my sister hath left me to serve alone ; bid her then to assist me. But he repressed her domestic cares with a gentle and affectionate rebuke ; "Martha, Martha, thou art careful, and troubled about many things, but one thing is needful, [the care of the soul ;] and Mary hath chosen that good part, which shall not be taken away from her," Luke x. 38—42. This pious and hospitable family were honoured with the friendship of OUR LORD, John xi. 5.

The Evangelist Luke has recorded several of OUR LORD'S sayings, doctrines, parables, and miracles, in the course of this

* Thus our evangelical Liturgy prays, that "God would have mercy upon all Jews, Turks, Infidels, and Heretics, and take from them all ignorance, hardness of heart, and contempt of his word, and so fetch them home to his flock, that they may be saved among the remnant of the true Israelites, and be made one fold under one Shepherd, JESUS CHRIST OUR LORD." Easter Collect.

circuit from Galilee and Samaria through Judea, xiii. 22, xvii. 11, to Jerusalem, xiii. 34, omitted by the other Evangelists, in a miscellaneous form, without exact attention to time or place, from chap. xi. to xviii. 14*. If inserted here, these chapters harmonize most easily and naturally with the rest.

THE FEAST OF DEDICATION.

This festival was instituted by Judas Maccabæus, to record the new dedication (εγκαίνια) of the temple, after he had purged it from the profanation of Antiochus Epiphanes, on the 25th of the ninth month, Casleu, near the winter solstice, 1 Mac. iv. 59, John x. 22. JESUS, all whose actions were significant, closed his circuit, by honouring this festival, though of human institution, with his presence, as typical, perhaps, of that

* The principal contents of these chapters, unnoticed by other Evangelists, are

CHAP.	VER.
XI. Perseverance in prayer recommended	5—13
Woes to the Pharisees and Scribes	37—54
XII. Warning against hypocrisy	1, 2
———— against covetousness	15—21
XIII. Repentance recommended to the Jews, and parable of the barren fig tree	1—9
The bent woman cured on the Sabbath day	11—17
Answer to the enquiry, are there few to be saved?	23—30
Apostrophe to the ingratitude of Jerusalem	31—35
XIV. The dropsical man cured on the Sabbath day	1—6
Recommendation of humility	7—11
———— gratuitous benevolence	12—15
Parable of the supper refused by the guests.....	16—24
XV. Parable of the lost sheep	1—7
Parable of the lost piece of silver	8—10
Parable of the prodigal son	11—32
XVI. Parable of the unjust steward	1—12
Parable of the rich man and Lazarus	19—31
XVII. Ten lepers cured	11—19
Predictions of our Lord's second coming	20—37
XVIII. Perseverance in prayer again recommended	1
Parable of the unjust judge	2—8
Pharisee and Publican in the Temple	9—14

There are also some sections in common with Matthew, but in different order and expression.

Luke.	Matthew.
XI. 39—52	XXIII. 4—7, 23—36
XII. 1—9	x. 26—33
XIV. 16—24	XXII. 1—14
XV. 3—7	XVIII. 12—14

higher purification of the temple, and of its service, which he came to introduce, and which the sure word of prophecy informs us will be established in the regeneration of all things, at his next coming in glory. In order to avoid the inclemency of the weather at this season, we may presume he was walking in Solomon's porch, or the royal portico of the temple, built by that prince, over a part of the valley, between the temple mount and Sion, on the south-east side, which Solomon had filled up to enlarge the area of the temple. On the flat roof of this was probably the scene of our Lord's second temptation by Satan. See Vol. I. p. 430, and the preceding article.

Here our Lord underwent a similar temptation from the unbelieving Jews, resuming their former conversation in the temple, at the feast of Tabernacles, for "they flocked round him, and said, How long dost thou torture us [with suspense?] If thou be THE CHRIST, tell us expressly.*" They wanted an open acknowledgment from him, in order that they might accuse him to the ruling powers. JESUS answered them, "I told you before, [in effect,] by the miracles which I do in MY FATHER'S name; [and by styling myself "the good Shepherd," which was a title of CHRIST, Gen. xlix. 24, Psalm lxxx. 1,] "but ye believe not, for ye are not of my sheep." On the contrary, "My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me, as I told you," (ix. 14,) and I give them eternal life, and they shall by no means perish for ever, and no one shall wrest them from my hand: For MY FATHER who gave them to me IS GREATER THAN ALL, and none is able to wrest them out of MY FATHER'S hand: THE FATHER and I are ONE †, John x. 22—30.

* Έως ποτε την ψυχην ήμων αιρεις; "How long dost thou take away our life," or "kill us," torturing us with ambiguous and enigmatical speeches. The same phrase occurs in Terence, Cur me enecas? and in Horace, Candide Mecenas, occidis, sæpe rogando.

† Εγω και ο Πατηρ εν εσμεν. According to the ancient idiom of Hebrew, Greek, and Latin, the speaker ranks himself first, but according to the courtesy of modern languages, English, French, &c. ranks himself last. This most important passage, therefore, should be rendered, "THE FATHER and I are ONE." Not εις, "one person," but εν, "one thing:" or supplying the ellipsis, εν πνευμα, "one spirit," or disposition; as supported by several parallel passages, ο κολλωμενος τω κυριω, εν πνευμα εστι, ["the disciple] united to THE LORD is one spirit [with him,"] 1 Cor. vii. 17; and so OUR LORD prays THE FATHER for his disciples, ινα ωσι εν, καθως ήμεις εν εσμεν. "That they may be one, according as WE are one;" ινα ωσι τετελειωμενοι εις εν. "That they may be perfected into one," John xvii. 22, 23. And so prays Paul, εν ενι πνευματι, μια ψυχη συναθλουντες τη πιστει του ευαγγελιου, "with one spirit, one soul,

This is an admirable description of the good sheep, of their reward, and of their security against all assaults of the Devil or man, working against them, while under the providential care of CHRIST and of GOD, united for their preservation. CHRIST'S flock hear his voice by faith; He knows, or approves them, and they follow him, or keep his commandments. And in return, He gives them eternal life, as heirs of salvation, and they shall not perish for ever, at the general judgment, if they continue faithful and obedient unto the end; and no one, not even the Devil himself, shall rob him of them; because he is supported by THE FATHER, who is ALL POWERFUL, and united in spirit, or sentiment, with THE SON.

Then the Jews took up stones again, as they had done before, at the feast of Tabernacles, to stone him. JESUS said, "Many good works have I shewed you from MY FATHER, for which of these do ye stone me?" The Jews answered, For a good work we stone thee not, but for blasphemy, even because thou, being a man, makest thyself a *God, ver. 31—33.

This charge of blasphemy OUR LORD refuted, by shewing the latitude in which the term "God" was taken, even in the law itself; where it is applied to the Jewish judges, as sitting in the tribunal of GOD, and administering justice as his vicegerents; jointly contending for the faith of the Gospel," Phil. i. 27; συνψυχοι, το εν φρονουντες, "joint souled, one minded," Phil. ii. 2; σπουδαζοντες τηρειν την εννοτητα του πνευματος εν τω συνδεσμω της ειρηνης, "earnestly endeavouring to keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace," Eph. iv. 3, ο φυτευων δε και ο ποτιζων εν ειση, "but the planter and the waterer are one," 1 Cor. iii. 8.

And this was the interpretation of the earliest and most learned fathers of the Church. Justin Martyr says—Ιησους Χριστος—ετερος του Πατρος αριθμω ου γνωμη, "JESUS CHRIST—different from THE FATHER, in number [or person,] not in sentiment." And Origen, more fully, Θρησκενομεν ονν τον Πατερα της αληθειας, και τον Υιον την αληθειαν οντα δυο εν υποστασει πραγματα, εν δε, τη ομονοια, τη συμφωνια, και τη ταυτοτητι του βουλευματος, "We, then, worship THE FATHER of the Truth, and THE SON the Truth: being two things in subsistence, but one in unanimity and concord, and sameness of the will."

This is also, "the Trinity in Unity," or in unanimity," which is both the scriptural and orthodox doctrine of the Christian Church. And the English word "unity," which in later times has been used in a metaphysical sense, as denoting "unity of person," formerly meant union of sentiment, or unanimity, throughout the Liturgy and the English Bible, Psalm cxxxiii. 1; Ephes. iv. 3—13.

* Θεος here, should be rendered "A God," as contrasted with ανθρωπος, "a man," Acts xii. 22. The Jews evidently did not mean "GOD [THE FATHER,] which would be absurd; but ο δευτερος Θεος, the second God," as Philo the Jew styled THE LOGOS, or "THE ORACLE." They meant the same before, John v. 18. Compare John i. 1; 1 Cor. vii. 5.

“ I said, ye are gods,” Psalm lxxxii. 6. “ If then,” said he, “ the Scripture named them gods, to whom the word of GOD was addressed, and the Scripture cannot be set aside, [as exceptionable,] How say ye to Him whom THE FATHER sanctified, [or ordained,] and sent forth into the world, Thou blasphemest : because I said, I am THE SON OF GOD ?” ver. 34—36.

Our Lord then appealed again to his miracles, as affording full proof of the intimate union subsisting between him and the Father. “ If I do not the works of my Father, believe me not ; but if I do, though ye believe not me, believe the works : that ye may know and believe, that THE FATHER is in me, and I in Him.”

Then the Jews sought again to seize him, but he passed out of their hand, (probably rendering himself invisible, as before, John viii. 59,) and departed again from Judea to Bethabara, beyond Jordan, where John at first baptized ; and in the neighbourhood of which, he himself had spent some time before, on the western side, in Judea, when his disciples baptized in his name, John iii. 22—26 ; and in that neighbourhood he remained, probably near two months, until the death of Lazarus recalled him to Judea, ver. 37—40 ; Matt. xix. 1 ; Mark x. 1*.

CHRIST VISITS PEREA.

This country, (so called by Josephus, Jewish War, III. 3, 3,) on the confines of Judea, eastward of Jordan, was the original settlement of the tribes of Gad and Reuben. JESUS, therefore, having visited all the rest of the holy land, namely, the two Galilees, upper and lower, Cæsarea Philippi, Decapolis, and Dalmanutha, Samaria, and Judea, occupied formerly by the ten tribes, reserved this for the last ; that this also might have the benefit of his divine instructions. And great multitudes came to him, and followed him, and believed on him, when they saw his miracles of healing, confirming John's testimony to him as THE CHRIST, John ix. 41, 42 ; Matt. xix. 2 ; Mark x. 1.

* Matthew and John state expressly, that JESUS, after he had finished his ministry in Galilee and Judea, visited the country beyond Jordan eastwards ; but the present text of Mark intimates the reverse, that he came from the latter to Judea westwards, which could not be the case. There appears to be an interpolation in Mark : ερχεται εις ορια της Ιουδαϊας [δια του] περαν του Ιορδανου. And omitting δια του, (which injures the construction) with the Latin, Syriac, and Gothic versions, Mark perfectly harmonizes with the others.

QUESTION OF DIVORCE.

Here OUR LORD was again “tempted,” or assailed by his inveterate and persevering foes, the Pharisees, with a nice legal case for his decision, as a teacher of the law; “whether it was lawful for a man to divorce his wife for any cause?” or, at discretion. This case he had before decided in Galilee, Matt. v. 31, and in Judea, Luke xvi. 18, expressly in the negative; and they now hoped, either to ruin his popularity in Peræa, if he adhered to his decision, or to charge him with inconsistency if he did not. Aware of their malice, JESUS referred them to the primitive institution of marriage in Paradise, after God had made the first pair, male and female; and by the law of wedlock declared that they twain should be one flesh. Therefore, said he, “what GOD joined together, let not man put asunder.” To this authoritative decision, the Pharisees opposed the law of divorce, commanded, as they said, by Moses, Deut. xxiv. 1. But our Lord replied, that Moses did not command, that he only suffered, or tolerated divorces, because of the hardness of their hearts, to prevent worse consequences. And he authoritatively decided against the law of Moses, that dislike alone, was not a sufficient ground; that nothing short of fornication or adultery, on her part, warranted divorce: and that otherwise, if she married again, which was permitted by the law, Deut. xxiv. 2, she and her second husband were guilty of adultery, Matt. xix. 3—9; Mark x. 2—12*.

This was, indeed, an unpalatable doctrine to a sensual, libidinous people. Even our Lord’s disciples expressed dissatisfaction thereat: “If the case of a man be so with his wife, that he must bear with all her infirmities or imperfections short of fornication, it is not good to marry” at all, said they, or it is better to remain single. But OUR LORD disapproved of their reasoning, from the abuse of the sacred institution, against its use, as required both by GOD and nature; by observing, 1. that all men are not able to receive this saying of celibacy, or to live continently in a single state; whence the Apostle observes, “it is better to marry than burn,” 1 Cor. vii. 9; and, 2. that celibacy was to be tolerated only in the three following cases; 1. of natural coldness of constitution; 2. of deprivation of virility; or, 3. of a firm resolution of living continently in a single state*, in order more effectually to promote the interests of religion, as in St. Paul’s case, 1 Cor. vii. 7, 8. In such cases, says OUR LORD, he that is able to receive, let him receive the saying of celibacy, which in times of distress and persecution, might not be unadvisable, (as he afterwards remarked, Matt. xxiv. 19, and St. Paul, 1 Cor. vii. 26;) Matt. xix. 10—12.

* Mark states the conversation with a slight variation, representing Jesus as first asking the Pharisees, when they proposed the case, how the law of Moses stood? and then referring them to the more ancient law in Paradise; this gives more weight to their objection, after JESUS himself had appealed to the law of Moses. Mark also notices a case omitted by Matthew, of a woman divorcing her husband, which was not permitted by the Mosaic law; but was practised at that time by Salome, the sister of Herod the Great; and by Herodias, the wife of Philip, who married Herod Antipas, &c.

CHRIST BLESSES LITTLE CHILDREN.

Then, some persons, through a high opinion of his sanctity, brought little children to JESUS, intreating that he would lay his hands upon them, and bless them; his disciples, however, rebuked them that brought them, for their unseasonable intrusion. But our Lord reprimanded his disciples, and said, “Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven [attainable:] Verily, verily, I say unto you, whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child, shall by no means enter therein.” And he took them up in his arms, laid his hands upon them, and blessed them,” Matt. xix. 13—15; Mark x. 13—16; Luke xviii. 15—17. Here Luke resumes the common narrative, with this interesting reprehension, by example, of the ambition and prejudices of the disciples, in public, which our Lord had done before in private.

THE RICH YOUNG RULER.

This “forward” young man, who seems to have “trusted in himself that he was righteous,” and professed that “he had kept all the commandments, (of the second table,) from his youth,” seems to have addressed JESUS with faith, acknowledging him to be THE CHRIST, both by his respectful manner of “kneeling to him,” and by the high title he gave him of “Good Teacher,” which is scarcely to be found elsewhere in the Scriptures. To check his self-complacency, it seems, OUR LORD observed,

* Origen, understanding it literally, “made himself a eunuch,” but afterwards confessed his error. Lardner, Vol. II. p. 445.

“Why callest thou me good? there is none good but GOD alone;” there is none else, in whom goodness is an original, essential, and underived principle. That he was sincere, however, in his profession of obedience from his childhood, may be collected from our Lord’s “loving him,” or being pleased with his behaviour, which would not have been the case, had not his conduct corresponded with his profession. He possessed, therefore, the two main requisites for “eternal life,” namely, faith and obedience. But he aimed at Christian perfection, as appears from his next question, “What lack I yet?” JESUS said, “If thou desirest to be perfect, Go, and sell all that thou hast, and distribute to the poor; and thou shalt have treasure in heaven; and come, follow me, [as a disciple,] taking up the cross. But he was sad at that saying, and went away grieved, for he was very rich.” His attachment to Mammon overcoming his attachment to CHRIST, Matt. xix. 16—22, Mark x. 17—22, Luke xviii. 18—23. Compare Matt. vi. 24.

And JESUS, seeing that he was grieved, looked round on his disciples, and said, How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of God! And his disciples were amazed at his words. But he again said unto them, in explanation, Children, how hard is it for them that trust in riches, to enter into the kingdom of God! For it is easier that *a camel should go through the eye of a needle, than that a rich man should enter into the kingdom of God. And they were exceedingly astonished, saying, Who then can be saved? And JESUS, looking upon them, said, With men this is impossible, but with GOD all things are possible, Matt. xix. 23—36, Mark x. 23—27, Luke xviii. 24—27. For, even the rich, who repent, and trust in GOD, will be enabled, by the divine aid, to overcome the world, if they watch and pray against the temptation, and dangerous “snare” of Mammon, or riches. Such was the penitent Zaccheus, Luke xix. 9, and such those rich and respectable disciples of OUR LORD, we may presume, Nicodemus, Joseph of Arimathea, Lazarus, and his sisters, Mary Magdalene, Joanna, the wife of Chuza, Herod’s steward, &c. who either ministered to OUR LORD’S necessities of their substance, or anointed and embalmed him with costly ointments and spices, to shew their veneration for him, living and dead. Happy they who were so circumstanced, and who made such a desirable use of their "good things!" Luke viii. 2, 3, John xi. 3, xix. 39—42, Luke xxiii. 56.

* The camel was the largest animal known in the holy land, Matt. xxiii. 24. A similar expression occurs in the Talmud. “No Elephant passes through the eye of a needle.”

CHRIST RETURNS TO JUDEA.

While OUR LORD was employed on his ministry in Peræa, a message was sent to him from the sisters of Lazarus, that their brother, his friend, was sick. To which he returned for answer, that "this sickness should not be unto death, (irrecoverably,) but for the glory of GOD, to the end that THE SON OF GOD might be glorified thereby," John xi. 1—4.

After this, he remained two days longer in the same place, till Lazarus died. Then he proposed to his disciples to return again to Judea. But they said, with surprise, "Rabbi, the Jews lately sought to stone thee, and art thou going thither again!" JESUS answered figuratively, that during the day, a person is not apt to stumble, while he walks in the light, until the darkness of night arrives; intimating, that during the allotted period of his ministry he was safe, until its close, when the appointed time of his sufferings should come. After this, which they understood not, he said unto them, Lazarus, our friend, is asleep. Then said his disciples, still ignorant, "Lord, if he sleep, he shall recover." Then said He plainly to them, "Lazarus is dead! and I am pleased, for your sakes, that I was not there, in order that ye might believe. Nevertheless, let us go unto him." Then said Thomas, apart, to his fellow disciples, "Let us go also, that we may die with him," (CHRIST,) or share his fate! John xi. 6—16.

LAZARUS RAISED TO LIFE.

JESUS, therefore, went to Bethany, where he found that Lazarus had been interred four days. His interview with the sisters of Lazarus, is inimitably interesting and affecting.

"When Martha heard that JESUS was coming, she went to meet him, and [plaintively] said, LORD, if thou hadst been here, my brother would not have died; but now I know that whatsoever thou shalt ask of GOD, GOD will give thee.

"JESUS saith unto her, Thy brother shall rise again:" She, not understanding that he meant "immediately," said, "I know that he shall rise again in the resurrection, at the last day."

“JESUS saith unto her, I am [the author of] the resurrection and the life: He that believeth on Me, though he die [here,] yet shall live [hereafter;] and every one that liveth [hereafter,] and believeth in Me, shall die no [more] for ever *. Believest thou this? She saith unto Him, Yea, LORD, I do believe that thou art THE CHRIST, THE SON OF GOD, who should come into the world.”

After this noble and explicit confession of faith, referring, in part, perhaps, to his former answer to her message, John xi. 4, she went to call her sister Mary, privately;—who, when she came where JESUS was, and saw him, fell at his feet, repeating, LORD, if thou hadst been here, my brother would not have died! [and she wept.]

When JESUS, therefore, saw her weeping, and the Jews that accompanied her, also weeping, he groaned in the spirit, and troubled himself †; and he said, Where have ye laid him? They say unto him, LORD, come and see.

JESUS wept †.

Then said the Jews, See how He loved him!

But some of them said, [disparagingly,] Could not this person, who opened the eyes of the blind man, (John ix. 6,) have caused that this man also should not have died?

Jesus, then groaning again in himself, cometh to the sepulchre. It was a cave, and a stone lay upon it. JESUS said, Remove the stone ‡. Martha, still weak in faith, and struggling with doubt, thought that the body would be too offensive to be approached by CHRIST, being now in a state of putrefaction, after an interment of four days; which in that hot climate usually took place sooner. “LORD, said she, he now smelleth, for he is the fourth day buried.”

JESUS, gently rebuking her, answered, “Said I not unto thee, that if thou believedst, thou shouldst see the glory of GOD? (ver. 4.) Then, after they had removed the stone ‡, JESUS lift up his eyes, with thanksgiving to his Father, for hearing him always, and giving proof of his divine mission to the people;

* See the foregoing article of Job, for this correcter translation of the passage, p. 79.

† εραξαζεν εαυρον. From this remarkable expression, it appears that OUR LORD'S affections were in his own power. He voluntarily sustained sorrow now, as he voluntarily embraced death afterwards.

‡ JESUS could as easily have removed the stone, as he raised Lazarus. This seems to be done to ascertain the fact of the putrefaction of Lazarus, by those who descended to the vault.

and cried with a loud voice, Lazarus, come forth! Then he that had been dead, came forth, whose feet and hands had been bound with grave-clothes; and his face was still bound about with a napkin. JESUS said unto them, Loose him, and let him go!—His feet and hands had been miraculously loosed; and JESUS desired his friends to loose the napkin also from his face. If the Jews buried like the Egyptians, the napkin did not entirely cover the face of Lazarus, but only went round his forehead, and over his chin, so that he might easily see his way out of the sepulchre*.

Thus, by a closer translation of the original, and by reference to the Jewish mode of interment, is the deistical objection removed, “How could Lazarus, either walk or see, when bound in his grave-clothes and napkin?” for as ὁ τεθνηκως, must signify “he that had been dead,” so must δεδεμενος, by the same analogy, signify “he that had been bound,” John xi. 17—44.

Many then of the [principal] Jews, who came to condole with Mary, and beheld what JESUS did, believed on Him. But some of the unbelievers went off to the Pharisees, and informed them of what JESUS had done. The chief priests and Pharisees therefore, assembled a council, and said, What shall we do, for this man doeth many miracles. If we let him thus alone, all will believe on him; and the Romans will come and take away our [Holy] place and nation.—And from that day forth, they conspired together to kill Him.

On this occasion, Caiaphas, who was high priest that memorable year, to quiet the scruples of several of the rulers, who privately believed on CHRIST, (John xii. 42,) and were not consenting to his death, (Luke xxiii. 51.) on the score of his miracles and his innocence, (John vii. 51,) treated them with contempt, as ignorant politicians, who did not understand, that regard to the public safety warranted private injustice. “Ye know nothing at all; nor do ye consider, that it is expedient

* The sepulchre is thus described by Maundrell, p. 78. “At the bottom of a small descent, not far from the castle of Lazarus, (supposed to have been the mansion house of that favourite of our Lord,) is shewn the sepulchre out of which he was raised to a second mortality, by that enlivening voice of CHRIST, Lazarus, come forth! You descend into the sepulchre by twenty-five steep stairs; at the bottom of which you arrive, first in a small square room; and from thence you creep into another lesser room, about a yard and half deeper, in which the body is said to have been laid. This place is held in great veneration by the Turks, who use it for an oratory, and demand of all Christians a small caphar for their admission into it.”

for us, that one man should die for the people, and that the whole nation perish not." Thus, he unwittingly uttered a prophecy, that JESUS should be sacrificed for the Jewish nation; and of much wider import than he imagined; not only for them, but for "the children of GOD" in general, or the faithful "scattered" throughout the world, who were to be collected into one [fold] by Him, John xi. 45—53.

CHRIST RETIRES TO EPHRAIM.

Knowing their machinations against him, JESUS no longer walked openly among the Jews; but departed thence into a city called Ephraim, in the mountainous country near the wilderness of Judea, on the borders of Benjamin, in the tribe of Ephraim, about fifteen miles north from Jerusalem; where he abode with his disciples, John xi. 54.

HIS LAST JOURNEY TOWARDS JERUSALEM.

His stay at Ephraim was but short. The fourth passover approached; and his time was come. He departed from thence, leading the way, with firmness, and followed by his dejected and dismayed Apostles. On the way, he foretold to the twelve, still more minutely, his prophetic sufferings at Jerusalem: "1. That he should be betrayed unto the chief priests and Scribes; 2. that they should condemn him to death; and 3. deliver him up to the Gentiles, [Romans,] to mock, to scourge, spit upon him, and crucify him; but 4. that he should rise again the third day. But they understood none of these things, and the saying was hidden from them, and they knew not the meaning of what he said," Matt. xx. 17—19, Mark x. 32—34, Luke xviii. 31—34.

CHRIST PASSES THROUGH JERICHO.

OUR LORD did not go the direct way to Jerusalem, he took a circuit eastwards, through Jericho, then a considerable city, which he does not appear to have visited before. There he probably staid a few days.

On his departure from Jericho, he performed that remarkable miracle of giving sight to two blind beggars by the way side, one of whom was Bartimæus, who petitioned him, with faith, as the Son of David, or CHRIST, that he would have mercy on them, and open their eyes, Matt. xx. 29—34, Mark x. 46—52, Luke xviii. 35—43*.

ZACCHEUS.

This was a rich chief publican, or collector of taxes, who, anxious to see JESUS as he passed by, had climbed up into a sycamore tree, because he was of small stature. OUR LORD, when he came to the place, looked up and said, Zaccheus, hasten down, for I must lodge in thy house to-day. So he hastened down, and entertained him joyfully. This gave great offence to all our Lord's attendants, that he should invite himself to be the guest of such a notorious "sinner." Zaccheus, who probably heard their murmurs, "stood forth," and made a public profession of his conversion: "LORD, I am about to give half my goods to the poor; and if I have wronged any man in any respect, to restore it four fold." This was a most ample restitution of his exactions; the law requiring only the principal, and a fifth part over, Levit. vi. 2—5; and where he could not make restitution, he promised to make amends, by giving half his goods, or substance, to the poor. Thus furnishing a remarkable contrast to the rich young ruler; and enabling OUR LORD to extend salvation to a rich man, in return for his repentance, his attachment to CHRIST, and a rejection of Mammon. For he said to the by-standers, concerning him †, openly, "This day is salvation come to this house; forasmuch as he also is a son of Abraham," or admitted into covenant with CHRIST. And to silence their murmurs for going uninvited to his house, He represented the grand design of his divine

* There is a considerable variation in the accounts of this miracle by the three Evangelists. Mark and Luke notice only one blind man, Matthew two; Luke represents the miracle as performed "when JESUS was drawing nigh to Jericho," before he entered it; Matthew and Mark, after he had left Jericho. The joint testimony, however, of Matthew and Mark, as to the time, seems to outweigh that of Luke; who is not so observant of chronological order; and as all agree, that CHRIST was then attended by a "multitude," who "led the way," and who "followed him" towards Jerusalem, it is more probable, that the incident took place after he left Jericho, where this multitude seems to have been collected. For He came privately from Ephraim to Jericho, attended only by the twelve.

† προς αυτον, must be rendered "concerning him," as in Luke xx. 19, Heb. i. 7, &c. it could not be "to him," because he is spoken of in the third person—"He also is a son of Abraham." mission—"to seek and to save lost sinners," Luke xix. 1—10.

And in order to correct the error of his followers in supposing that "the kingdom of God would immediately appear," in all its glory, and that He was now actually on his way to "Jerusalem which was nigh," to assume it openly as THE MESSIAH in that royal city; "he added" the following mysterious parable, Luke xix. 11—27.

PARABLE OF THE NOBLEMAN.

The "nobleman" represented CHRIST; who leaving this world at his ascension, "travelled to a far country," heaven, "in order to receive a kingdom" from HIS FATHER; "and to return" to this world after a good while. "The ten servants," among whom he distributed ten minæ, (or pounds,) to be put to interest against his return, represented the Apostles and preachers of the Gospel. "His citizens, who hated him, and rejected him for their king," were the Jewish and other apostate nations. On his second appearance in glory, to establish his kingdom upon earth, He is to reward or punish his servants according to their deserts, and to slaughter his enemies.

This awful prophecy, which was necessarily veiled in a parable, not then to be understood, began to be fulfilled at the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, and will be concluded "in the days of vengeance," destined to precede his next approaching appearance. As explained more fully in our Lord's prophecies to his disciples, in the sequel.

HE ARRIVES AT BETHANY.

*Six days before the passover, our Lord reached Bethany, John xii. 1.

The day of his arrival, is generally supposed by Harmonists, to have been the Saturday before his crucifixion; but it seems rather to have been Sunday, the first day of the Passion, or "suffering" week; which was *the sixth, before his crucifixion on Friday.

* Cardinals, "six," &c. are frequently put for ordinals, "sixth," &c. in sacred and profane history. See Vol. I. p. 20, 21.

HARMONY OF THE PASSION WEEK.

	Matt.	Mark.	Luke.	John.
1 Sund. JESUS arrives at Bethany	—	—	—	xii. 1.
Mary anoints his feet at supper	—	—	—	— 3.
2. Mond. His public procession to Jerusalem	xxi. 1.	xi. 1.	xix. 29.	— 12.
He teaches the people	—	—	—	— 23.
3. Tues. He curses the barren fig-tree ..	— 18.	— 12.
He purges the Temple again....	— 12.*	— 15.	— 45.
He returns to Bethany	—	—	19.
4. Wed. The fig-tree withered	—	—	20.
The Pharisees question his authority	— 23.	— 28.	xx. 1.
His discourses and parables	— 28.	xii. 1.	— 9.
Question of tribute to Cæsar	xxii. 15.	— 13.	— 20.
He silences the Sadducees ...	— 23.	— 18.	— 27.
———— the Pharisees	— 41.	— 35.	— 41.
He censures the Scribes and Pharisees	xxiii. 2.	— 38.	— 45.
His prophecies on Mount Olivet	xxiv. 1.	xiii. 1.	xxi. 5.
He foretells his crucifixion two days after	xxvi. 2.	xiv. 1.	xxii. 1.
The chief priests conspire against him	— 3	— 2.	— 2
He returns to Bethany , to Simon the leper, at supper	— 6.	— 3.	— 3.
A woman anoints his head	—	—	—
Judas sells HIS LORD	— 14.	— 10.	— 4.
5. Thurs. Preparation of the passover	— 17.	— 12.	— 7.	xiii. 1.
He eats it with his Apostles	— 20.	— 18.	— 14.
He washes their feet	—	—	—	— 2.
He inculcates humility	—	—	— 24.*	— 12.
He detects the traitor Judas	— 21.	— 20.	— 21.*	— 26.
Judas departs at night	—	—	—	— 30.
Institution of the Lord's Supper	— 26.	— 22.	— 19*
His subsequent discourse.....	—	—	—	— 31.
He goes to Mount Olivet	— 30.	— 26.	— 39.	xiv. 31.
His last discourse.....	—	—	—	xv. 1.
His Intercession	—	—	—	xvii. 1.
He goes to Gethsemane	— 36.	— 32.	— 40.	xviii. 1.*
His agony	— 37.	— 33.	— 41.
Judas betrays HIS LORD.....	— 47.	— 43.	— 47.	— 2.
JESUS taken to Annas	—	—	—	— 13.
———— Caiaphas	— 57.	— 53.	— 54.	— 14.
Peter denies HIS LORD	— 69.	— 66.	— 55.	— 17.
6. Frid. JESUS taken to Pilate , at day-break	xxvii. 1.	xv. 1.	xxiii. 1.	xviii. 28.
Pilate sends him to Herod	—	—	—	6.
Judas hangs himself.....	— 3.	—	—	—

	Matt.	Mark.	Luke.	John.
JESUS sentenced by Pilate	xxvi. 26.	xv. 15.	xxiii. 25.	xix. 1.
— crucified at the third hour	— —	— 25.	— —	— 14.*
Darkness from the sixth to ninth } hour	— 45.	— 33.	— 44.
The body granted to Joseph of } Arimathea	— 57.	— 42.	— 50.	— 38.
Interred after sun-set	— 59.	— 46.	— 54	— 39.
7. Satur. The sepulchre secured with a } seal and Roman guard	— 62.	— —	— —

The Harmony of this short, but most interesting period of the Gospel history, and therefore most circumstantially detailed by all the Evangelists, has been considerably embarrassed and perplexed hitherto, partly by the mistakes of Harmonists, in arranging events; partly by some remarkable inversions of chronological order in the narratives of Matthew and Luke; and partly from some apparent differences of place and time, between John and the other Evangelists.

1. The Harmonists in general, Newcome, &c. assume, that Christ foretold his approaching crucifixion two days after, (Matt. xxvi. 2; Mark xiv. 1,) on Wednesday morning; whereas the context evidently shews that he foretold it on Wednesday evening, immediately after his prophecies on Mount Olivet, and before he went to sup at Bethany with Simon the leper. By tracing backwards, therefore, the series of events, he necessarily came first to the house of Lazarus at Bethany, on Sunday, instead of Saturday, as generally imagined, on the former supposition*. It is re-

* The received hypothesis, however, that CHRIST came to Bethany, on Saturday, is thus supported by a learned friend.

“Your objections to the old opinion, are principally drawn, 1. From the time of our Lord’s foretelling his death; and, 2. From our having no account of any thing that passed in the course of Wednesday. With respect to the time when the prediction was delivered, μετα δυο ημερας, I readily join with you, that it should be rendered, “two days after,” or, “two days hence;” i. e. “the day after to-morrow. Now, what was then to take place? Ὁ υἱος του ανθρωπου παραδιδουται εις το σταυρωθηναι. The circumstance, therefore, foretold, was not his crucifixion, but his being delivered up to be crucified. But this was on the Thursday: the words must, therefore, have been spoken on Tuesday.”

“But you will say, What occurred on the Wednesday? The Evangelists are altogether silent on that head. May I then be allowed to conjecture, that our blessed Lord spent the day in retirement, preparing to meet his approaching fate.—This conjecture is countenanced by the προ της εορτης του πασχα of St. John (xiii. 1,) ‘the day before the passover;’ which, by the bye, shews what that Evangelist meant by πασχα.”

Specious as this argument may seem, its conclusiveness may be questioned :

1. The phrase, η εορτη του πασχα, is not confined to “the day of sacrificing the passover,” but includes the whole “feast of the passover,” which lasted a week, corres-markable also, that Sunday was the tenth day of the month, the legal day on which the paschal lamb was to be chosen and set apart for sacrifice, until the fourteenth, Thursday, the correct day, Exod. xii. 3—6. CHRIST our passover, in this circumstance also, minutely “fulfilling all legal righteousness,” as he professed, Matt. iii. 15.

2. If we look only to Matthew, the purging of the temple happened on Monday, the day of public procession thither, xxi. 12, and preceded the cursing of the barren fig-tree, on the same day, xxi. 18. Whereas Mark, more critically, states, that CHRIST only surveyed the temple on Monday, and purged it on Tuesday; and that the fig-tree which had been cursed on Tuesday morning, was found withered on Wednesday morning; Matthew concisely connecting both together, the sentence with its execution.

3. If we look only to Luke, it should seem that the paschal supper, which he alone records, xxii. 15—18, was followed by the institution of the Lord's Supper, ver. 19, 20; and this, by the detection of the traitor Judas, ver. 21—23; and this again, by the ambitious contest for precedence between the disciples, and our Lord's ensuing exhortation to humility, ver. 24—30;

ponding to ἡ ἑορτὴ τῶν ἀζύμων, “the feast of unleavened bread,” Luke xxiv. 1. And, accordingly, the Jewish council, when plotting against JESUS, objected to putting him to death, ἐν τῇ ἑορτῇ, “during the feast,” or paschal week, if they apprehended him on any day of that week, “lest there should be a disturbance among the people,” Matt. xxvi. 5; Mark xiv. 2. The English Bible, in both passages, incorrectly renders ἐν τῇ ἑορτῇ, “on the feast day.” The preposition πρὸ may signify “shortly before,” in the course of Thursday.

2. The expression παραδίδοται, is not to be separated from εἰς τὸ σταυρωθῆναι. The treachery of Judas on Thursday evening, was another, and a subordinate consideration. JESUS was first delivered up by the High Priest and Jewish Council to Pilate, on Friday morning, John xix. 11; Matt. xxvii. 2; Mark xv. 1; Luke xix. 16; John xviii. 30; and after sentence passed, “delivered up,” by Pilate, “to be crucified,” Matt. xxvii. 26; Mark xv. 15; Luke xxiii. 25; John xix. 16. Thus was the prophecy literally fulfilled; and the fulfilment most carefully recorded by all the Evangelists.

3. As the Evangelists are so remarkably particular, and even minute, in recording the occurrences of the passion week, their total silence renders the conjecture highly improbable, that our Lord spent Wednesday in retirement; (and the conjecture has been anticipated by Bishop Newcome, in the Harmony, Notes, p. 43.) The apparent continuity also of their narratives, without a break, seems to leave no room for it; and our Lord's zeal “to work his HEAVENLY FATHER's work, while it was called to-day;” and his active employments on the three days before his crucifixion, as announced in his prophetic message to that fox, Herod, Luke xiii. 32, (which seems to have been delivered on Wednesday morning, (see this vol. p. 176): all together tend to invalidate the conjecture, and incline me to adhere still to the proposed harmony of the passion week.

whereas, by comparing the accounts of the other Evangelists, this last event of the contest, must have happened first, in order of time; and probably took place while the two favourite Apostles, Peter and John, xxii. 13, were preparing the passover. And if so, the passage should be rendered, "Now there had been * an ambitious contest between them, which of them should be accounted greater," ver. 24. For surely, it could not possibly have happened after they were all perplexed and sorrowful at the disclosure of the treachery of one of their company, and of their master's impending death, as we learn from the other Evangelists, Matt. xxvi. 21—24; Mark xiv. 18—21; John xiii. 22. And the detection of Judas actually preceded the institution of the Lord's Supper; because it happened at the second course of the Paschal Supper, when he dipped his hand with JESUS in the dish of salad; and when JESUS pointed him out to John, by giving him a morsel dipped in the sauce, after which he immediately departed, as we learn from John himself, xiii. 23—30. And the Lord's Supper was then instituted, in the place of the third course of the Paschal Supper.

4. John differs from the rest, in representing Peter's second denial, as happening in the judgment-hall, at the fire, John xviii. 25; which, according to them, happened in the porch; but the difference is only apparent; for he concisely omits the circumstance of Peter's quitting the hall, after the first denial, noticed by the rest.

5. The present text of John xix. 14, states that JESUS was led away to crucifixion at the sixth hour, in contradiction to Mark xv. 25, saying, that he was actually crucified at the third hour; as confirmed by the whole tenor of the narrative before and after; and in contradiction also to the præternatural darkness, which only began at the sixth hour, according to the joint testimony of the rest. The present reading, therefore, appears to be corrupt †. The original autograph of John's Gospel read τριτη, "third," according to the Chronicon Alexandrinum;

* See a similar transposition in John xviii. 24, which is rightly rendered, "Now Annas had sent him bound to Caiaphas, the high-priest;" properly following ver. 13, and another, Matt. xxviii. 2.

† In support of the present reading, "the sixth hour," it has been conjectured, that John reckoned, according to the Roman usage, the hours from midnight. But this is incorrect; for the Jews and Romans both reckoned the hours of the natural day, from sun-rise; and John reckoned like the rest of the Evangelists.

which is followed by some ancient manuscripts of Griesbach's collation. And Eusebius, Theophylact, and others, satisfactorily account for the error, by supposing that the symbol ϵ' , (6) was substituted for γ' , (3) by mistake, in some early copies. Nonnus, the poet, renders, rightly, the text, Ην δε τριτανομενη τριτατη θανατηφορος ωρα. "It was the third deadly hour after sunrise."

CHRIST'S FEET ANOINTED.

On Sunday, while he was at supper, the pious, virtuous, and grateful Mary, the sister of Lazarus, anointed his feet with costly and fragrant spikenard, and wiped them with the tresses of her hair, in token of the profoundest veneration. The same homage was formerly paid to CHRIST at the beginning of his ministry, at Capernaum, when he supped with Simon the Pharisee, by a penitent sinner, (a harlot, perhaps,) whose sins OUR LORD graciously forgave, because she loved much, Luke vii. 36—49. Both, indeed, were tokens of extraordinary love and humility; as if they did not think themselves worthy to anoint his head, which was a customary ceremony to kings, priests, and other distinguished personages, Psalm xlv. 7, cxxxiii. 2, cxli. 5, civ. 15, Luke vii. 44—46.

But Judas Iscariot censured this pious act of Mary, as misplaced and wasteful, Why was not this ointment sold for three hundred denarii, and given to the poor? This he did, not from regard to the poor, but because he was a thief, and carried the stockpurse. JESUS therefore openly rebuked him, and others of the disciples who seemed also to approve of his conduct: "*Let her alone, she hath kept it for the day of my embalmment: for ye have the poor with you always, but ME ye have not always," John xii. 1—8. This gave the first offence to that sordid disciple.

PUBLIC PROCESSION TO JERUSALEM.

When the multitudes who came from all parts to celebrate the passover, found that JESUS was at Bethany, they went thither on Monday morning, both to see Lazarus, the fame of whose restoration to life was divulged by the Jews who had witnessed the miracle, and to attend JESUS in public procession to Jerusalem, and proclaim him as their undoubted MESSIAH, or CHRIST the king of Israel, John xii. 12—18.

* This is the proper rendering of ενταφιασμος, as distinguished from ordinary "burial," with which it is confounded in our public translation. See Vol. I. p. 435 of this work.

Nor did JESUS any longer decline their proffered homage, we may presume, from the following reasons: 1. It was necessary that he should be solemnly inaugurated by the voice of the people, to fulfil the ancient prophecies of Jacob, David, Zechariah, &c. 2. To awe and curb the malice of the high-priests for a while; who not only had issued a proclamation against himself, John xi. 57, but had plotted to put Lazarus to death, because many of the people forsook them on his account, and believed on JESUS, John xii. 10, 11; and, 3. To enable him to act with all due authority, in purging the temple, in publicly instructing the multitudes, and in their hearing, and under their protection, openly rebuking, confounding, and censuring those haughty and arrogant rulers, the chief priests, Scribes, and Pharisees, the Sadducees, and Herodians, Matt. xxi. 45, 46; xxvi. 3—5.

As soon, therefore, as he had reached Bethphage, a village midway, on the eastern side of Mount Olivet, he sent forward two of his disciples to the village of *Gethsemane, perhaps, near the city, to bring him from thence an ass' colt, which they should find tied there, and, probably, to a vine, as in Jacob's prophecy of SHILOH, Gen. xlix. 11, (see Vol. II. p. 151—156.) On this, though unbroken, he rode, in the style of the ancient judges and prophets, as “the meek and lowly KING OF ISRAEL,” described by Zechariah, ix. 9, (see Vol. II. p. 476.) On the descent, fronting the city, he was met by the palm-bearing multitude, emblematical of the MESSIAH'S tabernacling in flesh, Levit. xxiii. 40, 2 Mac. x. 7, Rev. vii. 9, many of them spread their garments in the way, and strewed branches, as a carpet, which was customary at the coronation of a prince, 2 Kings ix. 13, while the whole multitude of disciples, before and behind, shouted Hosannas to the Son of David. Blessed be he that cometh in the name of the Lord, &c. repeating the grand Halleluiahs, Psalm cxviii. 26.

Some of the Pharisees, from among the crowd, then said, Teacher, rebuke thy disciples, but he refused, “If these, said he, were silent, the stones would cry out," or even the inanimate creation proclaim it, in the language of prophecy, (Habak. ii. 11,) Luke xix. 39, John xii. 19. And now, while his followers rejoiced, JESUS wept over the approaching calamities of the city, "which he beheld; saying, *O that thou hadst known, even thou, [ungrateful as thou art,] at least, in this thy day [of merciful respite,] the things that belong to thy peace, but now are they hidden from thine eyes! For days [of vengeance] shall come upon thee, when [the Romans,] thine enemies, shall cast a trench around thee, and shall encompass thee, and hem thee in on every side, and raze and thy children within thee to the ground, and shall not leave in thee one stone upon another, in return for thy not knowing the season of thy visitation !" Luke xix. 41—44.

* See the site of these two villages in the map of Jerusalem and its environs, Vol. I. p. 437.

In this tender and pathetic mourning of the Tutelar God of Israel over his rebellious city, there seems to be an elegant allusion to its name, JERUSALEM, signifying "they shall see peace," which, on the contrary, was now "hidden" from their eyes, not to be "seen" any more, until after "the long continued" period of desolation, foretold by the prophets, Moses, Isaiah, Daniel, &c. because they obstinately and wilfully shut their eyes against THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD, John xii. 40.

On his arrival, "the whole city was agitated, saying, Who is this? And the multitude said, This is JESUS, the prophet, from Nazareth of Galilee †," or the expected prophet like Moses, whom the prejudiced, and his enemies, denied could

* See this explained, Vol. I. p. 426. Tertullian has well explained "the season of visitation:" Cum tempus medium a Tiberio usque ad Vespasianum non pœnitentiam intellexissent; facta est terra eorum deserta, civitates eorum exustæ igni.

† The following eloquent passage occurs in Bishop Hall's Contemplations, p. 133, on Christ's procession to the Temple, Matt. xxi.

"The attending disciples could be at no loss for an answer. Which of the Prophets have not put it into their mouths?—Who is this?—Ask Moses, and he shall tell you, the seed of the woman who shall bruise the serpent's head. Ask your father Jacob, and he shall tell you, the Shiloh, of the tribe of Judah. Ask David, and he shall tell you, the King of Glory. Ask Isaiah, and he shall tell you, Inmanuel—Wonderful, Counsellor, mighty God, Father of the age to come, the Prince of Peace! Ask Jeremiah, and he shall tell you, the righteous branch. Ask Daniel, and he shall tell you, the Messiah. Ask John the Baptist, he shall tell you, THE LAMB OF GOD. If you ask the GOD of the Prophets, He hath told you, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. Yea, if all these be too good for you to consult with, the very Devils themselves have been forced to confess, I know thee who thou art, the Holy One of God. On no side hath CHRIST left himself without a testimony."

come from that despised quarter, (John i. 47, vii. 41,) Matt. xxi. 10, 11.

The king of glory's first visit was to his temple, fulfilling prophecy, Psalm xxiv. 7—10. There he wrought his signal and appropriate miracles of curing the blind and the lame, which excited the admiration even of the children, who joined in the general acclamation of Hosanna to the Son of David; thus hailing him as the MESSIAH. And when the chief priests, blind to such evidence, but not daring to stop them for fear of the multitude, insinuated that JESUS ought to do so, he approved their action in the language of prophecy, "Out of the mouths of babes and sucklings hast thou perfected praise," (Psalm viii. 2,) Matt. xxi. 14—16.

And now some Greeks, or "Jews of the dispersion," (John vii. 35,) who attended the feast, expressed to Philip of Bethsaida, one of his disciples, a wish to see and hear JESUS, which He probably granted, from his gracious invitation, (Matt. xi. 28,) John xii. 20—22.

He then obscurely signified to the assembled multitude his approaching sufferings and ensuing glory, under the imagery of a grain of corn, sown in the ground, which dies before it vegetates, and produces much fruit. And he warned his disciples likewise of the sufferings they were to expect in his service, and their future reward in heaven. And struck with a lively sense of his approaching death, he said, "Now is my soul troubled, and what shall I say? [Shall I say] FATHER save me from this hour! [By no means;] but [rather] for this cause came I unto this hour," John xii. 23—27.

And now, for the last confirmation of his disciples' faith, he said openly, "FATHER glorify thy name;" then there came a voice from heaven, in the hearing of the multitude, saying, "I have glorified it already, and will glorify it again." Some present, probably the Greeks, who knew not the language, said it thundered, but others, the Jews perhaps, who knew it, that an angel had spoken to him. John xii. 28—30.

After this last solemn attestation from heaven, which was verified at his resurrection, our Lord figuratively intimated the conversion of the whole world, in consequence of his crucifixion. "And I, when I shall be lifted up from the earth, [on the cross,] will draw all men to myself."

Perplexed at this doctrine of a suffering MESSIAH, the multitude answered, "We have heard out of the law, that CHRIST endureth for ever." And so they might have collected from 2 Sam. vii. 13; Psalm lxxxix. 30—37, cx. 4; Isa. ix. 6, 7; Ezek. xxxvii. 25; Dan. ii. 44, vii. 14—27. How then sayest thou, [as before, John viii, 28.] that THE SON OF MAN must be lifted up? Who is the Son of Man? or what sort of a suffering, mortal Messiah, do you profess yourself? John xii. 32—34.

This indeed was a real difficulty which they were not prepared to conceive or relish at the present. He therefore declined answering it, and only exhorted them in general, to believe in the light, during the short time of his continuance among them, that they might become children of light, or heirs of his kingdom. With this saying, He disappeared from them, leaving them greatly disappointed at his description of THE SON OF MAN, or MESSIAH, and his refusal to accept the temporal dominion, which they expected, and offered to him; and therefore, in a fit temper of mind to be worked upon to his prejudice, as an impostor, by his inveterate and insidious foes, the chief priests and rulers of the Jews, John xii. 35, 36.

THE BARREN FIG-TREE CURSED.

Early on Tuesday morning, JESUS, going from Bethany, where he lodged, to Jerusalem, according to tradition, by the lower road, saw, at a distance, a fig-tree in leaf, now in the spring season, (Matt. xxiv. 32,) and being hungry, he went to it, if perhaps, he might find some fruit thereon, (but when he came to it he found nothing but leaves,) for it was not fig season. And he answered, and said unto it, "Let none eat fruit of thee henceforth for ever! And his disciples heard," Matt. xxi. 18; Mark xi. 12—14.

The Palestine fig-tree regularly bears two crops in the year, and occasionally a third: the boccore, or early fig, (noticed by Isaiah, xxviii. 4.) which comes to perfection in the middle or end of June; then the kermes, or summer fig, begins to be formed, though it rarely ripens before August. About the beginning of autumn, the same tree not seldom throws out a third crop, of a longer shape and darker complexion than the kermes, called the winter fig, which hangs upon the tree after the leaves are shed, and ripens, provided the winter proves mild; and is gathered, as a delicious morsel, in spring. This natural history of the fig-tree in Judea, taken from the accurate Shaw's Travels, p. 370, happily removes the ambiguity of the foregoing passage in our English Bible, by the help of the parenthesis, judiciously introduced by Archbishop Newcome. JESUS being hungry, and seeing leaves thereon, which shewed that the tree was alive, though it was not a regular fig season, either for early or summer figs, yet went to it, in a reasonable expectation of finding, perhaps, some winter fruit thereon; but when he came he was disappointed, for he found nothing thereon but leaves. Whereupon he doomed it to perpetual barrenness, in the hearing of the disciples. This curse instantly took place; for when they passed by again, on Wednesday morning, they saw the fig-tree, not only stript of its leaves, “but withered from the roots.” And Peter remarked it, Mark xi. 20, 21.

This was the awful sequel, and significant interpretation of the foregoing parable of the barren fig-tree, Luke xiii. 6—9. The fig-tree represented the Jewish nation, which was barren, or unproductive of good works, during the foregoing dispensations of the Law and the Prophets, and the Baptist, expressed, perhaps, by “the three years ;” and when sentenced to be cut down, as cumbering the ground *, was spared, on the intercession of the Gardener, CHRIST, for a further season of trial and respite, during his own and his Apostles’ ministry; but when they continued irreclaimable, and failed of producing even the last crop, after his resurrection, and during the ministry of his Apostles, to the whole world, beginning with them; then the sentence, which had been suspended, was carried into execution by those ministers of divine vengeance, the Romans.

THE TEMPLE PURGED AGAIN.

This second significant act of authority, as the Reformer of their religious worship, was accompanied by a severer rebuke than the first, and in the language of prophecy; it is written, “MY HOUSE shall be called the house of prayer,” (Isa. lvi. 7,) “But ye have made it a den of thieves,” (Jer. vii. 11,) Matt. xxi. 13; Luke xix. 46.

PHARISEES AND HERODIANS SILENCED.

This dignified and just censure, delivered in public, joined to our Lord’s open declaration of the Gospel, or glad tidings of his coming, and his teaching the people, without reserve, that he was “the light of the world,” and that he came at present, not to judge the world, but to save the world, [by the sacrifice of himself,] Luke xx. 1 : John xii. 44—50; so exasperated the chief priests, Scribes, and elders of the Sanhedrim, that they sent a deputation of Pharisees and Herodians, to entangle him in his talk; who, though at variance between themselves, cordially conspired to work his destruction, the former with the Jewish people, the latter with the Romans. Accosting him with a hypocritical semblance of respect and deference to his opinion, as a firm and undaunted teacher of the law, they proposed, as a case of conscience, at that time much litigated between the different parties, whether it was lawful to give tribute to Cæsar, or not? But our Lord completely baffled the malignant proposers of this dangerous dilemma, affecting his reputation, or his life, if he either authorized or denied the payment of the Roman tribute, by taking advantage of their own concession, that “the denarius bore the emperor’s image and superscription,” and also of their own tradition, that wherever any king’s coin was current it was a proof of that country’s subjection to his government; for he significantly warned these turbulent and seditious demagogues, the Pharisees, “to render unto Cæsar the dues of Cæsar,” which they resisted; and these licentious and irreligious courtiers, the Herodians, “to render unto GOD the dues of GOD,” which they neglected; thus publicly reproofing both, but obliquely, in a way that they could not take any hold of. “And they marvelled at his answer, and were silent, and departed,” Matt. xxii. 15—22; Mark xii. 13—17; Luke xx. 20—26.

* ερωσιον αχθος αρουρης, “a useless burthen of the ground.” Homer.

SADDUCEES SILENCED.

The same day he was encountered also by the atheistical Sadducees, who denied a resurrection. They attempted, in mockery of the resurrection, to puzzle him with a common-place objection, found in the old Jewish writers, of a woman, married successively to seven husbands, who were brothers, in default of issue by the preceding, according to the law of Moses, Deut. xxv. 5, enquiring whose wife of the seven she should be reckoned at the resurrection? But our Lord reproofed their ignorance on a double account:—“Ye do err, not knowing the Scriptures, nor the power of GOD.” Their first error consisted in denying the existence of the soul after death, though it was clearly implied in the books of Moses, which they held to be canonical; when God declared, "I am THE GOD of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob," not I was the GOD, &c. intimating that they were still living, and that He was still their God, in their separate state of existence, in Hades; and their second, in their sensual and carnal notions of a resurrection; for that in the regeneration, the just shall neither marry nor be given in marriage, as males and females, in this life; but shall be immortal, like angels of Heaven, when they become children of the resurrection, by the power of GOD. Thus were the Sadducees also silenced, and the multitude, astonished at the clearness and cogency of his doctrine, Matt. xxii. 23—33; Mark xii. 18—24; Luke xx. 27—38.

Hearing the discomfiture of their rivals, the Sadducees, the Pharisees assembled together, and perhaps, not insidiously, but as a further trial of his skill, proposed to him a question that was much litigated at that time among themselves, which was the great commandment of the law? Some of their doctors held it to be the law of sacrifices; others the law of circumcision, or of the sabbath, or of meats and purifications, peculiar to the Jews. But JESUS decided in favour of the LOVE OF GOD, as the great commandment of the law, and the second, the love of our neighbour, as like it in the principle, and derived therefrom; that "on these depended all the law and the prophets," or their whole religious and moral code. (See Vol. II. p. 233—237.)

Struck with the profound wisdom of this answer, the proposer of the question, who seems to have been a Karaite, commended JESUS, and agreed with him, that these were indeed preferable to any sacrifices, or external ordinances whatsoever. And our Lord, in return, commended him, as being not far from the kingdom of Heaven, or almost a Christian, Matt. xxii. 34—40; Mark xii. 28—34.

And now, JESUS, in his turn, proposed a difficulty to the assembled Pharisees, to try their knowledge of the law; why the inspired David, Psalm cx. 1, called THE MESSIAH "his Lord," whom they themselves acknowledged to be his son? This they were unable to solve*; and from that day forth none

* Yet the Son of Sirach, if they had understood, furnished them with the true solution, in the divine as well as human nature of CHRIST, from David's second Psalm. "I called upon THE LORD, THE FATHER OF MY LORD, not to leave me in the day of my trouble," &c. Eccus. li. 13.

durst question him any more, Matt. xxii. 41—46, Mark xii. 35—37, Luke xx. 41—44.

Here we seem warranted to introduce a conversation, introduced earlier in Luke's miscellaneous gospel.

“ The same day, (Wednesday,) some Pharisees came to him, saying, Depart, and go hence, for Herod desireth to kill thee. But he said unto them, Go ye, and tell that [crafty] fox, [in my name,] Lo, I expel demons, and I do cures to-day, and to-morrow; and the third day I shall be perfected [by sufferings, Heb. ii. 10.] Nevertheless, I must [work] to-day, and to-morrow, and depart on the [day] following: for it cannot be, that a prophet should perish out of Jerusalem!” Luke xiii. 31—33; and this was followed by that inimitably tender and passionate apostrophe in Luke, which is appropriated by Matthew to this very day, (Wednesday.)

“ O Jerusalem! Jerusalem! Thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them that are sent forth unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a bird gathereth its brood together under its wings, but ye would not!” Luke xiii. 34, Matt. xxiii. 37.

This malignant advice of these Pharisees, who might naturally wish to get rid of one whom they feared and hated, after he had baffled, silenced, and exposed them before the multitude to scorn and disgrace, furnished a proper occasion and introduction to that finished model of divine eloquence, his last most animated, dignified, and severe censure; in which, no longer acting on the reserve, when his hour was come, he boldly and authoritatively denounced repeated “woes” to the Scribes and Pharisees, for their complicated vices, their hypocrisy, ostentation, pride, arrogance, extortion, rapacity, and long continued persecution of the prophets, from the earliest times to the sacrilegious murder of one of the last and greatest, Zechariah; (see Vol. II. p. 480,) concluding with the prediction of the desolation of their temple, and the withdrawing of his presence, till their final conversion, Matt. xxiii. 1—38, Luke xiii. 35.

OUR LORD'S PROPHECIES ON MOUNT OLIVET.

After this formal close of his public ministry, our Lord communicated to his confidential disciples, Peter, James, John, and Andrew, the signs, or prognostics of, 1. the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans; 2. his next personal appearance in glory ; and 3. his last, at the end of the world, Matt. xxiv. xxv ; the consideration of these most important prophecies is postponed till the close of the period, not to interrupt the course of the history.

Immediately after, our Lord formally announced to his disciples the precise day of his death. “Ye know that two days after, [Friday,] the passover is to be kept [by the chief priests,] and THE SON OF MAN is [then] to be delivered up [to the Romans,] to be crucified *,” Matt. xxvi. 1, 2. At this very time, it seems, the chief priests and scribes, and elders of the people, were actually assembled in privy council, at the high priest’s palace, plotting his destruction ! ver. 3—5.

From Mount Olivet our Lord proceeded to Bethany, that evening, to the house of Simon the leper, (whom he probably had cured,) and there he took his last supper with his friends.

CHRIST’S HEAD ANOINTED.

On this occasion, during the entertainment, he received his last unction ; when another woman, whose name is not mentioned, poured costly and fragrant spikenard upon his head, completing that of Mary the sister of Lazarus, on the preceding Sunday, ver. 6, 7. If we may be allowed to hazard a conjecture, where the Evangelists are silent, this woman was no other than the rich and respectable Mary Magdalene, who had been indebted to JESUS for the cure of a most grievous malady, Luke viii. 2. and who, according to some commentators, Lightfoot, &c. was the first of the three women that anointed him at Caper-naum, the first year of his ministry, at the house of Simon the Pharisee, Luke vii. 36—40. probably confounding Simon the leper with him, and the first unction with the last : whereas they differed in several respects ; for the first woman was a notorious sinner, and only anointed the feet of CHRIST. The tradition, therefore, might have been incorrect only in these respects ; and if we substitute Mary Magdalene as the last woman instead of the first, we offer no disgrace to her memory, which was so highly honoured by our Lord himself, on this occasion, with the encomium, that “she had wrought a good work upon him, in preparing for his embalment ; and that it should be recorded to her honour, wheresoever his gospel should be preached throughout the whole world," ver. 10—13.

* This annunciation was evidently made on Wednesday evening. The generality of Harmonists, Newcome, &c. arbitrarily transfer it to Wednesday morning ; and thereby derange the harmony of the Passion week ; leaving the supper of Simon the leper as the only occurrence of Wednesday, after it.

That Mary Magdalene, indeed, was a woman of the highest rank and respectability, and of the most affectionate attachment to CHRIST, and therefore the most likely to give this public testimony of her veneration, so grateful to Him, we collect from the sequel : for she is named the first of all the women who attended his funeral, before Joanna, the wife of Chuzar, Herod's steward, and our Lord's own relations ; and on the morning of the resurrection he appeared to her, the first of all his disciples, Mark xvi. 9, as if to signalize her superior worth and attachment, by this distinguished honour. And as it was customary for the Jews to entertain their friends who came to celebrate the pass-over, more sumptuously on the four preceding days of preparation, or purification, from the tenth to the thirteenth of the month, there is reason to think that Mary Magdalene was among the guests at Bethany, both in the houses of Lazarus and of Simon ; and might now have been led to complete the pious unction on the last day, begun by Mary, the sister of Lazarus, on the first, to which she had been witness.

This additional costly tribute of veneration, again excited the indignation of his disciples in general, as before chiefly of Judas, "To what purpose is this waste ? for this ointment might have been sold for much, and given to the poor." And our Lord's repeated rebuke, involving Judas among the rest, completed the traitor's resentment, whereby Satan led him (Luke xxii. 3, John xiii. 2.) to retire immediately from the company, and bargain with the chief priests, (whom he probably found still sitting in council,) to deliver up his master to them for thirty pieces of silver, or thirty shekels, the paltry price of a slave, gored by an ox, Exod. xxi. 32, unwittingly fulfilling, on both sides, Zechariah's prophecy, xi. 12, 13. (See Vol. II. p. 478.)

This unexpected treachery, offered by one of his own disciples, made the chief priests alter their resolution of not seizing and putting him to death during the Paschal feast, for fear of exciting a tumult among the people ; " and from that time Judas sought opportunity to deliver him up," in the absence of the multitude *, ver. 14, 15, Luke xxii. 1—6.

* On this occasion the chief priests probably settled the plan with Judas, upon which

CHRIST CELEBRATES THE PASSOVER.

The next morning, (Thursday,) JESUS sent his two favourite disciples, Peter and John, to prepare the passover, on this, the proper day, to a particular householder in the city, whom he knew to be a correct observer of the Paschal law, on the fourteenth day of the month, which the high priest incorrectly appointed for the fifteenth. (See Vol. I. p. 65, &c.) And he gave them a sign whereby they might find him. Ye shall meet a man carrying a pitcher of water, &c. Matt. xxvi. 17, 18, Mark xiv. 12, 13, Luke xxii. 7—12.

It was customary with the citizens of Jerusalem, on this occasion, to accommodate strangers with the free use of their houses and furniture. Our Lord, therefore, availed himself of the ancient hospitality. And we learn from tradition, that the cœnaculum, or “guest chamber,” of which he made use on this occasion, was situate in the city of David, and near his sepulchre. See the map of Jerusalem, and its explanation, Vol. I. p. 425, 437.

The Jewish mode of celebrating the passover was as follows.

1. The males of the family or company met together in the evening to eat the passover; then the master of the family, or of the company, who acted as priest on that occasion, according to patriarchal usage, after the company had first washed their feet, and placed themselves at table in a reclining posture*, on couches, first distributed to them pieces of the paschal lamb, and unleavened bread, and cups of red wine, until it was all eaten.

2. After this first repast, they washed their feet again, and placed themselves at table, to eat the second course, consisting of a dish of sallad, or bitter herbs, seasoned with a kind of sauce made of bruised palm branches, berries, or raisins, mixed with vinegar. This sauce was called haroseth, (from haras, “a brick,”) to represent the tempered clay of which their forefathers made bricks during the Egyptian bondage. Then the master of the they afterwards acted; namely, to seize JESUS privately, at night, to have him condemned by the high priest and Sanhedrim; and then sentenced by the Roman governor, early in the morning, before the people could be assembled: concluding, that if they could put him into the hands of the Roman soldiery, there could be no further fear of rescue. As proved by the event.

* At the original institution they ate the passover “standing, with their staff in their hands, in haste,” like pilgrims setting out on a journey to the promised land, Exod. xii. 11.

family divided the bread into two parts, and laying one part aside, he covered it with a napkin, but he blessed the other part with the following grace, "Blessed be thou, O Lord, our God, the king of the whole world, in the eating of unleavened bread."

3. Then he took the covered bread, reserved for the third course, and dividing it into as many parts as there were guests, he gave to each a part. And one of the youngest of the company, or a child, asking the meaning of this mysterious rite, according to Exod. xii. 6, he answered by repeating the hagadah, or "shewing forth," "This is the bread of affliction, which our fathers ate in the land of affliction. Let him that is hungry, come and eat the passover; let him that hath need, come and eat the passover; for this passover is our saviour and our refuge." Then taking the cup, he first tasted it himself, and presented it to each of them, saying, "Blessed be thou, O Lord, our God, king of the world, who hast created the fruit of the vine." This last cup, therefore, was usually called "the cup of blessing," 1 Cor. x. 6, or "the cup of salvation," Psalm cxvi. 13.

4. The whole ceremony ended with singing the 113th and the five following psalms of praise and thanksgiving, for all God's mercies; of which the last, the 118th, was peculiarly significant of the coming of CHRIST. This they called the great Halleluiah.

This account, collected from Lightfoot and Dodd's Commentaries on Matt. xxvi. 20, Calmet's Dictionary of the Bible, and Scaliger de emendat. Temp. p. 573, throws considerable light on the concise and intricate accounts of the Evangelists, and tends to detect that remarkable inversion of the historical order of time in Luke's narrative, noticed before.

1. When the disciples had prepared the passover, or dressed the paschal lamb, in the evening, at the appointed time, Exod. xii. 6, (see Vol. I. p. 15,) JESUS reclined, or placed himself at table, with the twelve, and said unto them, "I have earnestly desired to eat this passover with you before I suffer; for I say unto you, that I will not any more eat thereof, until it be fulfilled in the kingdom of GOD. And He took the cup, and blessed, and said, Take, and divide this among yourselves; for I say unto you, I will not drink of the fruit of the vine, until the kingdom of God shall come," Luke xxii. 13—18.

It has been imagined, that this prediction was fulfilled when "JESUS ate and drank with his Apostles after his resurrec- tion," Acts x. 41. But it is no where said that he drank wine; but rather water, their ordinary beverage at meals*; for this was sufficient to establish the reality of his corporeal presence. It remains therefore to be fulfilled at his second coming in glory, as more explicitly stated in the sequel.

"After the paschal supper," (δειπνου γενομενου,) or when the first course was ended, JESUS arose from table, and departing from the usage, prepared to wash the Apostles' feet himself, to set them an example of humility to their inferiors; that as He, whom they justly and emphatically styled "THE TEACHER," and "THE LORD †," washed their feet, so should they likewise wash each other's feet.

Offended at what he deemed a degradation of his LORD, Peter at first refused to let JESUS wash his feet, until JESUS declared that otherwise he should be rejected as a disciple. After this ceremony, our Lord said that "they were pure, but not all," alluding to the traitor Judas, whose intention to deliver him up he knew; and in reference to him, he cited a Scripture prophecy, He that eateth bread with me, hath lifted up his heel against me, Psalm xli. 10, as an aggravation of his treachery; stating further, that he foretold this, before it happened, for the confirmation of their faith afterwards, John xiii. 2—19.

This significant lesson of humility, might have been suggested by the recent ambitious contest between the disciples for precedence; in reference to which, he warned them not to imitate the pride and arrogance of the kings of the Gentiles, who lorded it over their subjects, and assumed the pompous title of benefactors; but rather to imitate his example, who, though their LEADER, now acted as their attendant at table, Luke xxii. 24—27.

To encourage them for their perseverance in adhering to him during his trials, he promised them a glorious future reward: "As my Father hath granted unto me a kingdom, even so, I grant unto you, to eat and drink at my table, in my kingdom; and to sit on thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel;" (as this important passage may be more correctly translated,) Luke

* See Judg. iv. 19, 1 Kings xiii. 9—19, xvii. 6, xix. 6, Amos viii. 11, Matt. x. 42, &c.

† Ὁ διδασκαλος, και, ὁ Κυριος, distinct titles of CHRIST. Middleton, p. 369. The articles are therefore injudiciously omitted in the English Bible, John xiii. 13.

xxii. 28—30. This was foretold to be “in the regeneration,” Matt. xix. 28.

But to correct the worldly-minded notions of them all, and especially of Peter, he addressed this emphatic warning to them, through him: “Simon, Simon, Lo Satan hath sought to sift you, (δμας,) as wheat; but I prayed for thee in particular, (περι σου,) that thy faith fail not; and thou, when converted, confirm thy brethren.” But he replied, “Lord, I am ready to go with thee both to prison and to death.” To check his over confidence, our Lord foretold, “this night the cock shall not crow twice, until thou shalt deny Me thrice,” Matt. xxvi. 34, Mark xiv. 30, Luke xxii. 31—34, John xiii. 36—38*.

2. After they had placed themselves again at table, to eat the second course, JESUS was troubled in spirit, and again testified more plainly than before, “Verily, verily I say unto you, that one of you shall deliver me up. Lo, the hand of him that is to deliver me up, is with me at the table. And they were greatly grieved, and began each of them to say unto him, one by one, Is it I, Lord? and another, Is it I? And he answered and said unto them, He that dippeth his hand with me in the dish [of sallad,] the same shall deliver me up. The SON OF MAN indeed departeth, as it is written of Him, but woe unto that man by whom the Son of Man is delivered up: it had been well for that man if he had not been born,” Matt. xxvi. 21—24, Mark xviii. 21, Luke xxii. 21, 22.

Judas now asked, in turn, Is it I, Rabbi? and Jesus answered in the affirmative, Thou hast said †. But this was in a low voice, unheard by the rest, Matt. xxvi. 25.

Meanwhile the disciples looked at each other, doubting of whom he spake. Then Peter, the most inquisitive, nodded to John, who reclined on Jesus' bosom, next to him at table, to enquire whom he meant; and Jesus answered John in a low

* It is not easy to harmonise the four Evangelists in the precise time of this transaction. From Matthew and Mark, we should conclude, that Peter was forewarned, on the way to Mount Olivet, after they had left the Coenaculum, or supper room, Matt. xxvi. 30—33, Mark xiv. 26—29. But Luke gives the warning in the room, and before the institution of the Lord's Supper, Luke xxii. 14—31; whereas John, although he gives it in the room, yet places it before the institution of the Lord's Supper, and the ensuing discourses; and long before he went out to Mount Olivet, xviii. 1. I have followed John therefore, the latest, and, as to the order of time, most exact of the Evangelists.

† This phrase implied a decided affirmation. See Matt. xxvii. 64.

voice, He it is, to whom I shall give the morsel, after dipping it [in the sauce.] And when he had dipped it, He gave it to Judas Iscariot. And after the morsel, *Satan entered into him again, and took full possession of his heart: for finding that he was now detected by JESUS, and marked out to the whole company, by that significant act, rage and fear prompted him to put his premeditated treachery into instant execution, lest he should be prevented from “earning the wages of iniquity.” So he rose from table, as we may collect from our Lord’s saying aloud to him, “What thou doest, do quickly.” Thereupon he immediately went out, and it was night. But none of the company knew why JESUS spake thus unto him: for some thought, because Judas held the purse, that JESUS had commissioned him to purchase necessaries for the feast, or to give somewhat to the poor, John xiii. 23—30.

The departure of the traitor at this stage of the entertainment not only gave him full time to concert matters for apprehending his Lord with the chief priests; but also excluded him from the Eucharist, of which he was unworthy to partake.

INSTITUTION OF THE LORD’S SUPPER.

3. When Judas had departed, (John xiii. 31 †,) instead of the third course of the entertainment, OUR LORD substituted his supper, as it is styled by St. Paul, 1 Cor. xi. 20, of which, indeed, that third course was typical, as the shadow of “a new,” and “a better covenant,” Jer. xxxi. 31; Heb. viii. 6—13.

* The following is the substance of Bishop Hall’s awakening contemplation hereon.

“Favours ill used make the heart more guilty, and capable of further evil; that wicked Spirit commonly takes occasion, by any of GOD’S gifts, to assault us the more eagerly: after our sacramental morsel, if we be not the better, we are surely the worse. Thus Satan took advantage by the sop, of a further possession, who had twice before made a palpable entry into his false heart; first in his covetousness and theft, and next in his damnable plot of conspiracy against CHRIST: as in every gross sin which we entertain, we give harbour to that evil one, so at every growth in wickedness, new hold is taken by him of the heart. At first Satan entered, to make ‘the house’ of Judas’ heart ‘his own:’ now he enters it as being ‘his.’ The first purpose of sin opens the gates to Satan; consent admits him into the entry; full resolution of sin gives up the keys into his hands, and puts him into absolute possession. What an awakening consideration to every serious heart. ‘Let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall.’”

† John entirely omits the institution of the Lord’s Supper, as being already detailed by the other Evangelists, and proceeds immediately to the discourses that followed it at the Cænaculum and at the Mount of Olives.

The form of the institution is thus collected from the joint accounts of the Evangelists and St. Paul.

After the [Pâschal] supper *, JESUS took the bread [that had been reserved at the second course, and covered with a napkin,] and blessed, and brake, and gave to the disciples, saying, Take, eat, this is my body, which is to be broken † and given † for you. Do this in remembrance of me.

Likewise, he took the cup, and blessed, and gave to them, saying, Drink ye all of it, for this is my blood of the New Covenant, or the New Covenant [ratified] in my blood, which is to be shed † for you, and for many, for the remission of sins. Do this,

* Μετα το δειπνησαι. This character of the time of the institution is attached by Luke, xxii. 20, to the administration of the cup, but it "likewise" applies to the administration of the bread in the preceding verse 19, as signified by ὡσαυτως, connected with μετα το δειπνησαι. And indeed it appears, from the whole tenor of the history, (as recorded also by Matthew, Mark, and Paul,) that both were administered, in uninterrupted continuation, at the same time; like the bread and wine at the third and last course of the Jewish passover, on which this rite was founded.

Not sufficiently advertent to this apparent transposition of the time, Archbishop Newcome, in his Harmony, has separated the institution of the cup from that of the bread; and arbitrarily inserted between them OUR LORD'S consolatory discourse, John xiv. 1—30, cutting off its conclusion, ver. 31, essentially connected therewith, by the particle αλλα, which was spoken, after all was over, in quitting the Cœnaculum.

† These participles, κλωμενον, διδομενον, εκχυνομενον, though in the present tense, are to be understood in the future, for μελλον κλασθαι, διδοσθαι, εκχυνεσθαι, according to the frequent usage of the Evangelists, and the best classic authors. The propriety of this reasoning is confirmed by the Romish Antwerp Missal of 1626, "published according to the decree of the Council of Trent, by command of Pius V. and revised by authority of Clement VII.," which thus renders the words of consecration of the elements into Latin:

Hoc est enim corpus meum——et hic est enim calix sanguinis mei, novi [et æterni] testamenti, [mysterium Fidei] qui, pro vobis et pro multis, effundetur, in remissionem peccatorum.

Here the expression qui effundetur, "which shall be shed," critically renders the Greek of St. Paul, το εκχυνομενον, incorrectly rendered in our English Bible, "which is shed."

This authority, the very highest in the Church of Rome, is decisive against the monstrous tenet of transubstantiation, or "change" of the elements "into the substance" of the body and blood of CHRIST, by the priest, in the sacrifice of the mass, by virtue of the words of consecration. For surely these words, uttered by the priest, can signify no more than when uttered by CHRIST; and He evidently alluded to the approaching sacrifice of himself on the cross; on which his body was to be broken, or pierced, and his blood shed by the nails and by the spear.

Her sacrament of the mass is also contrary to Scripture, and to primitive usage, in withholding the cup from the laity, which she inconsistently grants to the priest. This innovation, introduced by the Council of Constance, and sanctioned by the Council of Trent, was early censured by Pope Leo, in 440, as "a deviation from primitive usage, borrowed from the Manichean Heretics." And by Pope Gelasius in 492, who prohibas oft as ye drink it, in remembrance of me, [after my departure.] For I say unto you, that I will not drink henceforth of this fruit of the vine, until that day when I shall drink it with you, new, in my Father's kingdom; or in the regeneration, as observed before, Matt. xxvi. 26—29; Mark xiv. 22—25; Luke xxii. 19, 20; 1 Cor. xi. 23—25.

The Lord's Supper, therefore, was instituted for a solemn memorial of "the sacrifice of the death of CHRIST, and of the benefits we receive thereby," if we participate worthily, with hearty repentance and true faith. "Do this in remembrance of me." And it was to subsist until his next advent in glory, at the regeneration. "For as oft as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do shew forth the LORD'S death, till He come," 1 Cor. xi. 26.

4. To mark the analogy between the two institutions, the Jewish and the Christian, more strongly, OUR LORD concluded this by singing a hymn with his disciples, (ὕμνησαντες,) Matt. xxvi. 30; Mark xiv. 26. And the same expression for the Great Halleluiah, is used in the Midrash Tillim, הַיְיָנוּן, Himnum. Lightfoot.

When the whole was ended, JESUS said, "Now is the SON OF MAN glorified," (εδοξασθη) [by the discharge of his ministry.] And GOD is glorified in Him. If God is glorified in Him, GOD shall also glorify Him in himself, and shall glorify him speedily, [at his resurrection, Psalm ii. 7, cx. 1; Rom. i. 4; Phil. ii. 8, 9;] John xiii. 31, 32.

This speedy glorification and exaltation in heaven, at God's right hand, he thus more fully expressed.

Dear children *, I am to be with you but a little longer: ye bited it as "a sacrilegious communion," violating our Lord's positive command, "Drink ye all of it;" and he thus well explained the true nature and design of the institution: "The sacraments of the body and blood of CHRIST are a divine thing, because by them we become partakers of the Divine nature, (2 Pet. i. 4,) and yet, the substance of bread and wine does not cease to exist: and the image and resemblance of the body and blood of CHRIST are celebrated in holy mysteries." De duabus naturis Christi.

N. B. The Antwerp Missal, by the explanatory clause, mysterium Fidei, like Pope Gelasius, evidently considered the mysterious words of consecration to be meant figuratively; as they were also understood by the primitive fathers of the Church, especially Origen and Augustine, the latter, the oracle of the Romish Church. See the Doctrine of Transubstantiation examined, in the Ninth of my Letters to Dr. Troy, published in the Antijacobin Review, September, 1807.

* The diminutive τρυφια is expressive of fondness. So Paul calls the Galatians, iv. 19; and John the Christians, to whom he wrote, 1 John ii. 12, iii. 17, iv. 4, v. 21, &c.

shall seek me, but as I said to the Jews, “Whither I go ye cannot come, so now say I unto you;” or as he explains himself to Peter, “Whither I go thou canst not follow me now, but thou shalt follow me hereafter,” ver. 33—36.

He now enacted, as the means of following him,

THE NEW COMMANDMENT.

“A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another. Hereby shall all know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love among each other,” ver. 34, 35. In what respects this commandment of mutual love was new, will be shewn in the ensuing article of THE SPIRIT OF THE GOSPEL.

These solemn institutions of the peculiar and fundamental laws of CHRISTIANITY were followed by an admirable discourse to his afflicted disciples, breathing consolation, comfort, and encouragement to “trust in God and in HIM also,” for protection, support, and final reward; concluding with this benediction.

“Peace I bequeath unto you, my peace I give unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, nor afraid. Ye have heard that I said unto you, I go away, and come again unto you; if ye loved me ye would rejoice, because I said I go to the FATHER; for MY FATHER is greater than I,” [with whom there is fulness of joy, and pleasure for evermore, Psalm xvi. 11.]

He again referred them to the accomplishment of these his prophecies, for full proof that He was THE CHRIST, the SON OF GOD: and now I tell you before they happen, that when they happen, ye may believe, ver. 27—29.

And he concluded his discourse by indirectly obviating an objection, drawn from the seeming superiority of the powers of darkness, who were speedily to apprehend, and put him to death.

“I will not speak with you much longer; for the ruler of this world, [the Devil,] is coming, though he hath no claim on me, [because of my innocence.] But [I submit, and lay down my life, of my own accord, x. 17, 18,] that the world may know that I love the FATHER, and [that] as THE FATHER enjoined me, even so I do. Arise, let us go hence,” ver. 30, 31.

The company now arose from table, but did not immediately quit the room*. They still remained there, in the more solemn posture of standing, which was customary at prayer, (Luke xviii. 11.) while they listened with reverence to our Lord's continuation of his divine discourse and intercession, recorded alone by John, in the xvth, xvith, and xviith, most precious chapters of his Gospel.

HIS LAST DISCOURSE.

In this parting discourse, he resumes and enlarges on his former topics of comfort and consolation, with a calmness and composure, and a tenderness of affection, worthy indeed of THE SON OF GOD.

1. He begins with the parable of the vine. The Jewish Church had often been symbolized in the Old Testament, by a choice vine, planted in the hill country of Judea, after their deliverance from Egyptian bondage, by GOD himself, as "the husbandman," Gen. xlix. 11, Psalm lxxx. 8—11, Isa. v. 1—7, Jer. ii. 21. But when this highly favoured vine degenerated,

* There is a considerable difficulty in harmonizing St. John with the other Evangelists in this place. The rest state, that our Lord, when he left the cœnaculum, went to the Mount of Olives, Matt. xxvi. 30; Mark xiv. 26; Luke xxii. 39; and afterwards, to the Garden of Gethsemane, Matt. xxvi. 36; Mark xiv. 32; Luke xxii. 40. Whereas, John takes no notice of the Mount of Olives, but only of Gethsemane, John xviii. 1. The usual mode of solving the difficulty is, that our Lord and his disciples went first to the Mount of Olives, as he proposed, John xiv. 31, where he delivered his last discourse and intercession; and afterwards, to the Garden. But to this Archdeacon Churton, in his valuable communications, has opposed insuperable objections: 1. that the word ἐξήλθον, "they went out," is properly applied by the three Evangelists, to mark departure from the cœnaculum; but would be improperly implied by John to mark departure from the Mount. 2. That in his way from the Mount to the Garden, Christ could not "cross the brook Kedron," (as John asserts expressly that he did,) because the Garden was "beyond the brook," or further from the city, and therefore nearer to the mountain. But he has satisfactorily solved the difficulty, by observing, 1. That the expression ἐξήλθον εἰς τὸ ὄρος τῶν ἐλαιῶν should rather be rendered "they went out toward the Mount of Olives;" for the preposition εἰς is frequently taken in the sense of toward a place, or in that direction, Luke xiii. 22, where it is so rendered, &c. 2. That the Garden of Gethsemane was within the precincts of the Mount of Olives; and, therefore, that they went to the district of the Mount of Olives in their way to the Garden. To which may be added, 3. That there was no stop or delay at the Mount of Olives; as is evident from Luke's account, exactly corresponding with John's. Compare Luke xxii. 39, 40, with John xviii. 1, 2.

Hence it appears, that our Lord and his disciples did not leave the cœnaculum after the first discourse; and may not his proposal, εγείρεσθε, ἀγωμεν ἐντευθεν, (upon which the supposition of quitting the room is founded) be more correctly rendered, "Rise, let us remove from hence," i. e. from the supper table, at which they had been sitting. John xiv. 31.

and “brought forth wild grapes and poisonous berries,” or the Jewish Church became corrupt in faith and practice, it was threatened to be rooted up, and to be superseded by the Christian Church, founded in CHRIST himself, as “the true vine,” of which his disciples were to be “the branches,” or members. But he warns them that the Christian Church was still subject to the same discipline and culture as the Jewish; for that GOD would cut off every barren branch in CHRIST, and prune every bearing branch, in order that it may produce more fruit; while they, by his instructions, were now become “pure,” or bearing branches, but must expect to be pruned, xv. 1—3.

2. He warns them against spiritual pride, or self-sufficiency, and reliance on their own strength, and recommends a steady adherence to Him and to his doctrines, as the only means of their “producing much fruit, for without Him they could do nothing.” That this only would prevent their rejection, and secure his Father’s favour, ver. 4—8.

3. He repeats his new commandment, founded on his own example, to love one another, as he had loved them, and gratuitously chosen them to be his disciples, and that as he was ready to lay down his life for them, whom he condescended to style his friends, so long as they observed his commands, so should they do likewise for his sake and the Gospel’s. And he forewarns them of the persecutions they must expect from the world; that it had persecuted him, their chief, without cause, and would persecute them his servants, ver. 9—25.

4. He also repeats his promise of sending them “*another Advocate from the Father,” even the HOLY SPIRIT, (xiv. 16, 17,) That as he himself was “their Advocate with the Father,” (1 John ii. 1,) so he would send them an Advocate also with the world, who should testify of him, by the spiritual gifts and graces miraculously conferred upon them, by the gift of tongues, by guiding them into all the truth of the Christian dispensation necessary for them to know, by bringing all his conversations to their remembrance, and by shewing them things to come, or the future fortunes of his Church. That when the HOLY SPIRIT was come (as on the day of Pentecost), He should, by their ministry, convince the world of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment. 1. Of sin, for not believing in CHRIST, after he had done among them the works which no man did, (Matt. ix. 33, John ix. 32.) 2. Of righteousness, or justification through CHRIST, as proved by his resurrection and ascension to the Father, to be the ADVOCATE of mankind, by the imputation of his own righteousness to them*, (Rom. iii. 26, v. 18, 2 Cor. v. 21.) And 3. Of judgment, or the future general judgment, in which Satan, the ruler of this world, is to be judged, with the world itself, (2 Cor. iv. 4, Rev. xx. 10, Acts xvii. 31,) ver. 26, 27. xvi. 1—15.

* The word παρακλητος is used in this forensic sense of an “advocate,” who pleads the cause of another, in opposition to κατηγορος, “an accuser,” by Demosthenes, Barnabas, Philo, the Targumists, and Talmudists. See Wetstein, N.T. Vol. I. p. 934, and Schleusner’s Lexicon.

5. He next reminds them, enigmatically, of his approaching departure. A little while, and ye shall not see me; and again, a little while, and ye shall see me, because I go to the FATHER; intimating, as explained by the event, that he would disappear from them at his death, during three days, and again appear to them after his resurrection, at intervals, during forty days, until his ascension, when they should see him no more on earth. Not understanding this, they debated among themselves what could be its meaning, and wished for an explanation. Our Lord then told them, that he knew their wishes, but waved the explanation, as unnecessary to be given them at that time. Satisfied with this proof of Divinity,—knowing their thoughts,—they declared their belief that He knew all things, and therefore must have come from GOD. To check over confidence, however, in their faith, he forewarned them of their approaching desertion of him, when each of them should be scattered, and leave him alone in the hands of his enemies; though even then he would not be alone, since THE FATHER was with him. And he thus concluded his consolatory discourse.

“These things have I spoken unto you, that in ME ye might have peace; in the world ye shall have tribulation; but be of good cheer, I have overcome the world, [and will enable you to overcome the world also,” 1 John v. 5, Rom. viii. 37,] ver. 16—23.

* This interpretation seems preferable to the received, that CHRIST's righteousness, or innocence, was proved to the world, by his ascension to THE FATHER. It was modestly and diffidently suggested by Gilpin, in his N.T. on the place.

HIS INTERCESSION.

Our blessed, and ever to be blessed HIGH PRIEST, “fulfilled all legal righteousness,” from the beginning to the end of his sacred function, Matt. iii. 15. As Aaron, the first Jewish high-priest, at his consecration, was required to be washed in water, and to have his head anointed with oil, Exod. xxix. 4—7, so CHRIST was consecrated to be the world’s High-Priest at his BAPTISM, when he was washed in water, and anointed with THE HOLY SPIRIT, descending from heaven, and resting visibly on his head, Psalm xlv. 7, Heb. i. 9, Acts x. 38. During the course of it, he preached the GOSPEL to the poor—to the poor in spirit, Isaiah lxi. 1, Matt. v. 3—10, xi. 5. And as the Jewish high-priest, on the day of atonement, was required to make annual intercession for himself, for his household, the Priests and Levites, and for the whole nation, Levit. xvi. 17, (see Vol. II. p. 250,) so our all-sufficient High-Priest, once for all, Heb. ix. 26, Rom. vi. 10, on this his great day of atonement, solemnly interceded with GOD HIS FATHER for himself, that he might be received into glory, his original glory in heaven, xvii. 1—5, for his household, the Apostles and Disciples, that GOD would preserve them in his name, or in the true religion; give them a spirit of unity and concord, and protect them in, and from the wicked world, ver. 6—19; and that, finally, they might partake of his glory in heaven, and also be supported by his love and presence on earth, ver. 24—26; and also for all future believers, through their preaching, that they might be endued with the same spirit of unity and concord, and for the conversion of the whole world, ver. 20—23.

This seventeenth chapter, thus briefly analyzed, as has been observed by commentators, contains the “easiest words, but the deepest sense of any in all the Scriptures.” It unfolds, indeed, in a short compass, that grand mystery of the Gospel, the instituted means of the salvation of mankind, by THE FATHER and THE SON, conjointly, from their love to the world.

“Then JESUS lifted up his eyes to heaven, and said, FATHER, the hour is come [of my passing from this world to Thee, xiii. 1.] Glorify THY SON, [with the Glory which I had with thee, before the world was, ver. 5, Phil. ii. 6,] that thy Son may glorify Thee, [or promote thy glory in his preparatory kingdom, Phil. ii. 9—11, that GOD may be all in all, 1 Cor. xv. 28,] according as thou hast given him authority over all flesh, [or mankind, to raise them from the dead, John v. 27—29, and] to give eternal life to all [the disciples] that thou hast given Him,” John xvii. 2.

“And this is [their way of attaining] eternal life: To know Thee THE ONLY TRUE GOD, and JESUS CHRIST, whom Thou didst send forth,” [to shew them the true way to eternal life, John xiv. 6; to instruct and save mankind, as “the APOSTLE and HIGH-PRIEST of our profession,” Heb. iii. 1,] John xvii. 1—5.

This saving knowledge of THE FATHER and THE SON, which we owe entirely to THE SON, John i. 18, Matt. xi. 27, is not merely speculative, but practical, producing obedience. For “CHRIST became the author of eternal salvation to all that obey Him,” [and to them only,] Heb. v. 9.

When THE FATHER is styled “THE ONLY TRUE GOD,” it is not to be understood by way of exclusion of the Son, as if the Son also was not truly God; but only by way of eminence or precedence, κατ’ ἐξοχην. For the Son, in a parallel passage, is expressly styled “THE TRUE GOD, and ETERNAL LIFE,” or, the God who is the true author of eternal life, 1 John v. 20. And in reference to both passages, it seems, the Nicene Creed styles CHRIST, “TRUE GOD of TRUE GOD,” or in old English, “VERY GOD, OF VERY GOD.” And the epithet Μονος, “only,” is frequently used in this latitude of signification, to denote “pre-eminent *.” Thus, when the Father is styled

* The terms μονος and εἷς, Solus and unicus, are frequently used in the Greek and Latin Classics, to denote “excellent,” “pre-eminent,” “extraordinary,” “singular,” &c. as may be seen in the copious collection of examples, furnished by Wetstein, N. T. in his valuable Note on John xvii. 3, from which these are selected.

1. Ὑπερφυλον τον Λευκομηδην, και μονον ανδρα ηγονντο.

“They extolled Leucomedes, and reckoned him the only hero.” Xenophon Res. Græc. VII.

2. Εφειροντο—προς τον Μαρκιον, ένα στρατηγον και μονον αρχοντα εαυτων γινωσκειν εκεινον λεγοντες.

“They burst forth into praises of Marcius Coriolanus, saying, that they acknowledged him for their sole general and only ruler.” Plutarch. Coriolanus.

3. Του δε μηκετι των αλλων επεφανη τινα και λαμπρον εξω του ενος τουδε ανδρωθεντος γενεσθαι, ταυτην παραστηναι τοις πολλοις την δοξαν, οτι μονος εκεινος εκ του Φαβιων γενουε εστι λοιπος, ουχ ως μηδενος αλλου οντος, αλλ’ ως μηδενος εκεινοε ομοιου, αρετη τεκμαιρομενοε το συγγενεε, ου φυσει.

“Since there was no longer any of the rest of the Fabian family that did any thing remarkable or splendid, except this single person, after he had arrived at manhood, the generality were induced to be of opinion, that he alone was left of his family; not that there was no other, but that there was none like them; the people judging of kindred by merit, not by birth." Dionysius Hal. ix. 22.

Μονῷ σοφῷ Θεῷ, "THE ONLY WISE GOD," Rom. xvi. 27, Jude 25; τον μονον δεσποτην Θεον, "THE ONLY SOVEREIGN GOD," Jude 4*; 'Ο μακαριος και μονος Δυναστης, "THE

4. Τον Δημητριον οἱ Αθηναιοι εδεχοντο — ηδον ορχουμενοι και επαδοντες, ὡς ειη μονος θεος αληθινος, οἱ δε αλλοι καθευδουσιν, η αποδημουσιν, η ουκ εισιν· γεγωνως δε ειη εκ Ποσειδωνος και Αφροδιτης.

"The Athenians received Demetrius with songs and dances, celebrating him as their only true God, while the rest were either asleep, or travelling, or not in being; and that he was the son of Neptune and Venus." Demochares ap. Athen. vi. 253.

5. O omnium quantum est qui vivunt homo hominum ornatissime, Nam sine controversia, a Diis solus diligere.

"O most excellent of all men living, for unquestionably you are the only favourite of the gods." Ter. Phormio. v. 6.

6. An Deus immensi venias maris, ac tua nautæ Numina sola colant. Virg. Georg. i. 30, where Servius explains sola, by "magna, præcipua, id est, supra alios deos marinos."

7. Archimedes is erat unicus spectator cœli et siderum. Here Archimedes is celebrated as a consummate astronomer. Livius xxiv. 34.

8. Mirati sumus unicum magistrum, sumum grammaticum, optimum poetam, omnes solvere posse quæstiones. Suetonius. Grammat. II. Here unicum is ascertained to have the same meaning, by its synonymes.

9. Vulgus et cæteri unum virum ducemque, spretâ aliorum segnitia, laudibus ferunt. Tacitus H. iii. 3. Here unus is taken in the same sense as unicus.

These instances seem sufficient to shew the popular use of the word μονος in the sense of excellent, &c. as expressly stated, No. 3; and of the phrase in question, μονος Θεος αληθινος, No. 4, which evidently was not applied to Demetrius Poliorcetes by the Athenians, in exclusion of their other gods, especially his supposed parents, Neptune and Venus, but only denoted his pre-eminence, as their tutelar god and protector, according to their blasphemous adulation.

* This is the received application of the passage to THE FATHER. But those learned and ingenious critics, Mr. Granville Sharpe, and Dr. Middleton, apply it to CHRIST, and render the whole passage thus: "And denying the only Sovereign God and Lord of us, JESUS CHRIST," or "our only Sovereign God and Lord, JESUS CHRIST." See Sharpe's Remarks upon the Definitive Article, p. 46, second edit and Middleton's Doctrine, &c. p. 658.

The rule upon which their construction is founded, is the following: "When two personal nouns of the same case are connected by the copulative και, if both have the definitive article, they relate to different persons; if only the former has the definitive article, they relate to the same person." And the accuracy of this general rule, as it respects both diversity and identity, is fully established by Middleton, p. 79, &c. p. 571, from the usage of the sacred and profane classics.

But Sharpe himself allows, that "the rule may sometimes prove rather too much; and, in this instance especially, may be liable to favour the Sabellian heresy, followed by the Swedenborgians, that Jesus Christ is the only God," p. 51. And Middleton too, has proved that the rule requires limitations, especially in the case of proper names, which often form an exception to its latter part. Thus τον Αλεξανδρον και Φιλιππον, (Æsch. cont. Ctesiph. § 81,) "Alexander and Philip" are clearly distinct persons; and the article τον, is applied to the former only, by way of eminence, as "the (well known) Alexander;" while it is understood in the latter, but not expressed; for "the Philip" meant, is sufficiently ascertained, as the father of Alexander, by being thus associated with him. Compare Middleton, p. 82, 83, 86, 109, 112, 117, 118. This exception is precisely in point, and warrants the received interpretation of the passage.

BLESSED AND ONLY POTENTATE," Ὁ μόνος ἐχὼν ἀθάνασιαν, "WHO ONLY HATH IMMORTALITY," 1 Tim. vi. 15, 16. And when OUR LORD, modestly disclaiming the title of "Good

2. The context confirms it also. The Apostle Jude addresses his Epistle to the "called," or elect Christians, "who are sanctified in GOD THE FATHER, (Θεῷ πατρὶ,) and preserved in JESUS CHRIST;" (Ἰησοῦ Χριστῷ) he exhorts them to contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints; and he warns them against reprobate Infidels, who perverted the grace of OUR GOD into licentiousness; "denying both THE ONLY SOVEREIGN GOD, and OUR LORD JESUS CHRIST." (Καὶ τὸν μόνον δεσποτὴν Θεοῦ, καὶ κυριὸν ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦν Χριστὸν ἀρνούμενοι,) ver. 1—4.

Here the last clause, "OUR LORD JESUS CHRIST," is in apposition, not with the second, "THE ONLY SOVEREIGN GOD," but with the first, τον Θεοῦ ἡμῶν, "OUR GOD," whose "grace" these Infidels perverted*. And Jude's doctrine critically corresponds with John's,—"Who is the liar, but he that denieth that JESUS is THE CHRIST? this is the Antichrist that denieth THE FATHER and THE SON," (ὁ ἀρνούμενος τὸν πατέρα καὶ τὸν υἱόν,) 1 John ii. 22. The speculative Antichrist of John, and the practical of Jude, equally denying both THE FATHER and THE SON.

The second clause, "THE ONLY SOVEREIGN GOD," is rather in apposition with "THE ONLY WISE GOD OUR SAVIOUR," ver. 25; but this relates to GOD THE FATHER, (Θεῷ πατρὶ,) ver. 1, for "THE ONLY WISE GOD," is appropriated to Him, Rom. xvi. 27; and He is expressly styled "GOD OUR SAVIOUR," in the first instance, as distinguished from "JESUS CHRIST OUR SAVIOUR," in the second, Tit. iii. 4—7. Middleton's conjecture is unfounded, that this expression, "GOD OUR SAVIOUR," Tit. iii. 4, should be understood rather of CHRIST, p. 573.

And in every other instance, μόνος "only," indicating pre-eminence, (as shewn in the foregoing note,) is applied to THE FATHER, as "THE ONLY TRUE GOD," "THE BLESSED AND ONLY POTENTATE," &c. which last is plainly parallel with this.

3. The epithet δεσποτῆς ὁ Θεός, is applied to THE FATHER, Acts iv. 24, and also by Justin Martyr, in the following express passages: ὁ ἡμέτερος διδάσκαλος, καὶ τοῦ πατρὸς παντῶν καὶ δεσποτοῦ Θεοῦ υἱὸς καὶ ἀποστολὸς ὢν, Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ. "JESUS CHRIST, who is our Teacher, and Son and Apostle of THE FATHER OF ALL, and SOVEREIGN GOD." And again, describing the Trinity; ἐπ' ὀνοματι τοῦ πατρὸς τῶν ὄλων καὶ δεσποτοῦ Θεοῦ, καὶ τοῦ Σωτῆρος ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, καὶ Πνεύματος ἁγίου. "In the name of THE FATHER OF ALL, and SOVEREIGN GOD, and of OUR SAVIOUR JESUS CHRIST, and of [THE] HOLY SPIRIT." In this last clause, the article is understood, though not expressed, as being unnecessary, on account of the notoriety of the association of these three proper names.

N.B. The necessity of rectifying the mistakes of eminent critics, and acquiring clear, distinct, and correct ideas, on a subject of such high theological importance, must apologize for the length and minuteness of these and the following philological notes.

* Thus Paul has combined them, κατὰ τὴν χάριν τοῦ Θεοῦ ἡμῶν καὶ κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, "According to the grace of OUR GOD AND LORD, JESUS CHRIST," 2 Thess. i. 12, whom Thomas styled, ὁ κυριὸς μου καὶ ὁ Θεός μου, "MY LORD AND MY GOD," John xx. 28.

Teacher,” given him by the self-sufficient Pharisee, answered, “Why callest thou Me good? there is none Good, but GOD ONLY*,” Matt. xix. 17, we are to understand, that THE FATHER is pre-eminently “the fountain of all wisdom,” sovereignty, power, and immortality, the source of all goodness; which, in all other beings, even THE SON himself, are derived from Him, according to the whole tenour of OUR LORD’S doctrine. In this sense, CHRIST also is styled “THE WISDOM OF GOD,” “GOD,” “LORD,” “KING OF KINGS, AND LORD OF LORDS,” &c. as being “THE ONLY BEGOTTEN SON OF GOD,” “THE EFFULGENCE OF HIS GLORY, THE IMPRESS OF HIS SUBSISTENCE, UPHOLDING THE UNIVERSE BY THE WORD OF HIS POWER,” Heb. i. 3, &c. Therefore, “To HIM that sitteth upon the throne, and to THE LAMB, be ascribed THE BLESSING, and THE HONOUR, and THE GLORY, and THE DOMINION, for ever and ever. Amen.” Rev. v. 13. That all may HONOUR THE SON, according as they HONOUR THE FATHER: “Whosoever honoureth not THE SON, honoureth not THE FATHER who sent him †,” John v. 23, which was also

* This is the correct translation; for the same phrase, εἰ μὴ εἰς ὁ Θεός, is so rendered, Mark ii. 7, “Who can forgive sins but God only?” corresponding to the varied phrase, εἰ μὴ μόνος ὁ Θεός, speaking of the same thing, Luke v. 21; in both cases, the synonymous terms εἰς and μόνος, (as shewn before,) though adjectives of the masculine gender, as agreeing with the substantive Θεός, are to be taken adverbially. This is an important correction; for the received translation of Matt. xix. 17, and of the parallel passages, Mark x. 18, Luke xviii. 19, namely, “There is none good but one, [that is] God,” besides its inaccuracy, has been produced, and strongly urged, by Arians, Socinians, and Unitarians, (running into the opposite extreme from the Sabellians and Swedenborgians,) to support their heresy, denying the divinity of CHRIST, and degrading him to a mere man; falsely supposing, that the term εἰς, here, denotes “one person.” But this interpretation proves too much, and therefore confutes itself; for it would undeify both THE SON and THE HOLY SPIRIT; because if there be only “one person” who is GOD, the rest have no right to the title, contrary to the whole tenor of Scripture, which communicates the divine titles of GOD, LORD, &c. equally to them with THE FATHER.

† From this strong declaration of OUR SAVIOUR, expressed both positively and negatively, combined with the explanation of John and Jude, in the preceding note, p. 193, we may collect the heinousness of the crime of infidelity, or denial of the divinity of JESUS as GOD THE SON; because it involves the crime of atheism also, denying God’s PROVIDENCE, or superintendance of the universe, and making Him out a “liar,” by disbelieving the testimony He hath so abundantly given of HIS SON, 1 John v. 10. It is also downright rebellion against GOD Himself, upon the same principle, that He formerly considered the Jews’ rejection of Samuel for their judge, as rather a rejection of the THEOCRACY; because Samuel was chosen and appointed by GOD, as their chief magistrate. “They have not rejected thee, but they have rejected ME, that I should not reign over them,” 1 Sam. viii. 7. This furnishes an awful subject of consideration to the doctrine of the OLD TESTAMENT, Psalm ii. 10—12, l. 22, 23.

The true criterion of the knowledge of THE FATHER and of THE SON, is obedience to the NEW COMMANDMENT. This is finely expressed in our LORD's intercession for his present and future disciples, as their Advocate with the Father :

“ HOLY FATHER, preserve them in thy name, [or religion,] whom Thou hast given me, that they may be one, even as we are [one, in concord and unanimity.]”

I pray not that thou wouldest take them out of the world, [in which they are to remain, in order to fulfil their commission,] but that thou wouldest preserve them from the wicked [world, Gal. i. 4.] They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world.

“ Sanctify them [as my Apostles] in thy truth : (thy word, [or doctrine,] is truth.) As Thou sentest me forth into the world, even so I sent them into the world, [to preach it.] And for their sake, I sanctify myself, [as their High Priest,] that they also may be sanctified in truth, [or purified, to preach thy word.]

“ Neither pray I for these only, but also for those who shall believe on me through their word, [or doctrine ;] that they all may be one, [in concord and unanimity :] that as Thou, FATHER, art in ME, and I in THEE, even so, they also may be one in us,” [or agree together, following our concord and unanimity.]

And this unity or unanimity of the first converts, who were “ all of one heart and soul,” Acts iv. 32, was to be the most effectual means of converting the world to the faith of CHRIST : “ That the world may believe that Thou didst send me forth,” ver. 11—21.

The more effectually to promote this general conversion, he promised to impart his own glory, or the power of working miracles, to the Apostles, and first preachers of Christianity.

“ And the glory which Thou hast given me, (John ii. 11,) I have given them, that they may be one, even as we are one ; (I in them, and Thou in Me,) that they may be perfected into one, and that the world [may also be perfected in faith, and]

Deists, who are indeed pitiable subjects of OUR LORD's prayer and apology on the cross, for crucifying him afresh, and putting him to open shame——“ FATHER, forgive them, for they know not what they do !”

may know, that Thou didst send me forth; and that Thou didst love them, as Thou didst love me," ver. 22, 23.

Hence it appears, that the meaning of our Lord's previous declaration, "I pray for them, [the Apostles,] I pray not for the world," (ver. 9,) is not to be understood of the former, in exclusion, but only in preference of the latter. I pray for them, rather than for the world; by a usual phraseology, Matt. ix. 13, &c.

It was the decided opinion of the primitive Church, before the Council of Nice, A.D. 325, that the phrases ἵνα ἐν ᾧσι, "that they may be one;" τετελειωμένοι εἰς ἓν, "perfected into one;" John xvii. 22, 23 : το ἐν φρονουντες, "one-minded;" Phil. ii. 2 : ἐν ἑνὶ πνευματι, μίᾳ ψυχῇ συναδλουντες τῇ πιστεὶ τοῦ εὐαγγελίου, "with one spirit, one soul, labouring together for the faith of the Gospel;" Phil. i. 27 : all denoted unanimity or concord. And the fatal discords introduced along with the abstruseness of heathen metaphysics, into the original simplicity of Gospel Theology, are well expressed by Cyprian, Bishop of Carthage, A.D. 248, in these terms :

Nostra et IPSIUS conjunctio nec 'miscet personas,' nec 'unit substantias,' sed affectus consociat et confœderat voluntatem. "Our union with CHRIST neither 'confounds persons' nor 'unites substances,' but associates our affections, and confederates our wills." De Cœna Domini, Cap. 6. Thus admirably distinguishing the moral union from the metaphysical unity of the schoolmen, and preferring the former, as more congenial to the spirit of the Gospel. See Vol. III. p. 152, note.

Our Lord concludes his intercession with a prayer for the future admission of his disciples into heaven, and a promise of continuing his Divine instructions to them on earth.

"FATHER, I wish that they whom Thou hast given me, may also be with me, where I am going; that they may behold my glory which Thou gavest me: because thou lovedst me before the foundation of the world.

"O RIGHTEOUS FATHER, the world indeed knew Thee not, but I knew Thee, And these knew that Thou didst send me forth. And I make known to them thy name, [or religion,] and will make known, that the love wherewith Thou lovedst Me, may be in them, and I, [or my Spirit] in them," [to guide and support them continually, Matt. xxviii. 20,] ver. 24—26.

This divine intercession, from its extreme conciseness, producing some obscurity, required dilatation, in order to shew the connexion of the parts throughout. It comprises, in a short compass, the substance of our Saviour's whole doctrine. 1. The mystery of the GODHEAD; His own divine nature as the ETERNAL SON, and his antecedent glory, and intimate union with THE FATHER, before the world was, before the foundation of the world, in the clearest and most explicit terms. 2. The religion of the GOSPEL, to know THE FATHER and THE SON conjointly, as the essential requisite for the attainment of eternal life, or happiness in heaven. 3. It furnishes the first fruits of our gracious ADVOCATE'S mediation with THE FATHER, even here upon earth, as our great HIGH PRIEST also, worthy indeed of such an office, holy, innocent, undefiled, separate from sinners, and now exalted above the heavens; who, [as our REDEEMER, Job xix. 25,] is everliving, to intercede for those who have access to GOD through Him; and by his eternal and unchangeable PRIESTHOOD, is able to save them to the uttermost; who are united in spirit with HIM and THE FATHER; intimating their joint LOVE to mankind, Heb. vii. 24—26; Ephes. ii. 18; John iii. 16; 2 Tim. i. 9; Ephes. ii. 4, v. 2. See the ensuing article of The Spirit of the Gospel.

HE GOES TO GETHSEMANE.

When he had finished those inimitable effusions of piety, friendship, and charity, JESUS departed with his disciples from the Cœnaculum, to a place called Gethsemane, lying beyond the brook Kedron, where was a garden, to which he was accustomed to resort; 'into this he entered, and his disciples, at an advanced period of the night, if reckoned from the dismissal of Judas, when night had commenced,' (John xiii. 30,) Matt. xxvi. 36; Mark xiv. 32; Luke xxii. 40; John xviii. 1*.

HIS AGONY.

It has been remarked, that as the scene of temptation of the first Adam was the garden of Eden, so was the garden of Gethsemane that of the second Adam likewise. The Devil, after having been foiled in his first series of seductive trials in the wilderness, then, we are told, “departed from him, for a season,” (Luke iv. 13,) and OUR LORD, early in this night, predicted his approach, (John xiv. 30,) to renew his last series of terrific temptations, with all the power of darkness, (Luke xxii. 53,) assailing him both inwardly and outwardly, first himself, and then by his emissaries, Judas, the chief priests, Jews, and Romans, in dreadful succession.

* The garden of Gethsemane, according to tradition, is a plot of ground not above fifty-seven yards square, situate on the eastern side of the brook Kedron, near the bridge, between it and the foot of Mount Olivet. See Sandys's Travels, p. 148, Maundrell, p. 105, and the map of Jerusalem and its environs, with the explanation, in the first volume of this work.

As soon as they had entered the garden, conscious of his influence, though invisible to mortal eye, JESUS said to the disciples, Sit ye here, while I go, and pray yonder: pray ye also, not to enter into temptation.

Then he took with him his confidential disciples, Peter, James, and John, apart from the rest, about a stone’s throw; and he fell into great agony, or perturbation of mind, which is described in the most forcible terms of amplification: He began to be grieved, (λυπεισθαι,) and afflicted, (αδημονειν,) and exceedingly amazed (εκθαμβεισθαι.) And he said, “My soul is excessively grieved, unto death, (περιλυπος εως θανατου.) Stay ye here, and watch with me,” Matt. xxvi. 36—38, Mark xiv. 32—34, Luke xxii. 40.

Every word and action of our blessed Lord, on this awful occasion, was significant. His first directions to the disciples, resembled Abraham’s to his servants, when going to encounter his sorest temptation, “Stay ye here, with the ass, while I and the lad (Isaac,) go yonder and worship,” Gen. xxii. 5; and how natural was his warning to them, when undergoing his own trial, Pray ye, &c.

His extraordinary agony might have proceeded from various suggestions.

1. The unprofitableness of his ministry, and the ingratitude of his country; which he pathetically lamented in his farewell discourse, “O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets,” &c. Matt. xxiii. 37. And Isaiah has finely represented the MESSIAH’S despondency on this account, and his FATHER’S encouragement.

XLIX. 4. “Then I said, I have laboured in vain,
I have spent my strength for nought, even for vanity:
Nevertheless, my cause is with THE LORD,
And my work is with MY GOD.”

5. “And now, thus saith THE LORD: —

6. Is it little for thee, to be appointed MY SERVANT,

To raise up the tribes of Jacob,
 And to restore the dispersed of Israel?
 Moreover, I have given thee for a light to the Gentiles,
 To be my salvation to the end of the earth."

2. The priests were required by the law, "to afflict their souls," on the great day of atonement, for the sins of the nation, Levit. xvi. 29. And THE LORD "added sorrow to the grief" of our Great HIGH PRIEST; as foretold also by Isaiah: He was appointed "a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief*," Isa. liii. 3—6.

"Then going a little further, he kneeled down, and fell on his face, and prayed, FATHER, all things are possible unto Thee; If it be possible, let this cup [of affliction] pass away from Me! Nevertheless, not as I will, but as Thou wilt; not my will, but Thine be done.

And there appeared unto him an angel from heaven, strengthening Him; as after his former temptations, Matt. iv. 11.

And being in an agony, he prayed more intensely; and his sweat was like great drops of blood† falling on the ground.

* Bishop Hall has well expressed this, in his pious and eloquent Contemplation, thus abridged:

—"What human soul is capable of conceiving the least of those sorrows that oppressed THINE! Thou didst not only say, 'My soul is troubled!' so it often was, even to tears:—but 'my soul is sorrowful;'—changes, [or degrees] of passion are inherent to every human soul; but thine is exceeding sorrowful:—the most vehement may be capable of remedy, or at least of relaxation; but thine was past all these hopes; exceeding sorrowful, even unto death.

"What was it, what could it be, O thou SAVIOUR OF MEN, that lay thus heavy upon thy DIVINE SOUL? Was it the fear of death? Was it the forefelt pain, shame, torment of thy ensuing crucifixion?—O poor and base thoughts of the narrow hearts of cowardly and impotent mortals! How many thousands of thy blessed martyrs have welcomed no less tortures with smiles and gratulations? If their weakness was thus undaunted and prevalent, what was thy POWER? O, no; it was the sad weight of the sins of mankind, it was the heavy burden of THY FATHER'S wrath for our sin, that thus pressed down thy soul, and wrung from thee these bitter expressions of sorrow.

—"If every sin deserve eternal death, what, O what was it for thy soul, in this short time of thy bitter passion, to answer those millions of eternal deaths, which all the sins of all mankind had deserved!—

"O FATHER OF MERCIES, Thou mayest bring Thine into agonies, but Thou wilt never leave them there. In the midst of the sorrows of my heart, thy comforts shall refresh my soul; and whatsoever be the means of my support, I know and I adore the Author. —Our blessed Saviour's cup did not pass, yet was it sweetened: And THOU wilt not suffer us to be tried above what we are able; but wilt with the trial, also make a way to escape, that we may be able to bear it."

† Several instances of such, arising from agonizing conflicts, are recorded by historians. Aristotle and Diodorus both mention bloody sweats as attending some extraordinary

Then He arose from prayer, and coming to his [three] disciples, He found them sleeping, for grief. And he saith unto Peter, Simon, sleepest thou! And to the rest, Why sleep ye? Were ye not able to watch with me one hour? Watch and pray, lest ye enter into temptation. The spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh, weak, Matt. xxvi. 39—41, Mark xiv. 35—38, Luke xxii. 41—46.

OUR LORD'S profound devotion was remarkable. In his humiliation he prostrated himself. He prayed, if possible, to be excused from drinking the bitter "cup" of unmerited affliction that awaited him, in the unparalleled sufferings that preceded and attended his cruel and ignominious death; that second "baptism," which he foretold to the ambitious sons of Zebedee, "Are ye able to drink the cup that I am to drink, and to be baptized with the baptism that I am to be baptized with?" Matt. xx. 22. And again, "I have a baptism to be baptized with, and how am I straitened until it be performed!" Luke xii. 50. And how aptly did these precious drops of blood falling on the ground, resemble the sprinkling of the mercy seat, on the day of atonement? Heb. xii. 24. See Vol. II. p. 250.

The sleepiness of the disciples, worn out with fatigue and anxiety, was perfectly natural*; his gentle rebuke therefore was agony of mind. Thuanus mentions a gentleman under the apprehension of being hanged, who was so vehemently agitated in mind, with the dread of such an infamous death, that a bloody sweat burst forth from his whole body. And Voltaire observes, that Charles IX. of France, (who ordered the massacre of St. Bartholomew's day, and took an active part therein himself,) died in his five and twentieth year, of a most extraordinary malady, the blood gushing out of all his pores. "This accident," says the infidel historian, "was owing either to excessive fear, to violent passion, or to a warm and melancholy constitution;" stating the secondary causes, but omitting the primary. Dr. Mead thus accounts for it. Contingere interdum poros, ex multo aut fervido spiritu, usque adeo dilatari, ut etiam exeat sanguis per eos, fiatque sudor sanguineus. Medica Sacra, cap. 13. And we cannot wonder "at the dilatation of the pores" of our Lord's body, after the astonishing fatigues he must have undergone during the Passion week, and the anguish of his soul: for never grief was like his grief!

* Alexander the Great, on the eve of the decisive battle of Arbela, when his body was exhausted by the anxiety of his mind, fell into a profound sleep,—tandem, gravatum animi anxietate corpus altior somnus oppressit, Curtius, iv. 13, 17—and slept so long, contrary to his usual custom, that Parmenio was obliged to go to wake him, when they were ready to engage the Persians, and called him two or three times before he awoke. And when Parmenio expressed his surprise, how he could sleep like one that had already conquered, when he had the greatest battle to fight that the world had ever heard of? he answered, that he considered himself as conqueror, since Darius no longer declined the combat. Plutarch.

How different the vigilance of a greater than Alexander, THE CAPTAIN OF OUR SAL-mixed with a gracious apology for the weakness and infirmity of the animal part of human nature. See Vol. II. p. 3, &c. And he affectionately recommended vigilance and prayer, as the only safeguards against temptation: His special address to Peter, indicating surprise, that he, in particular, could be found remiss, after the forwardness of his professions of zeal and attachment.

“Departing again, he prayed a second time, saying, ‘MY FATHER, if this cup cannot pass away from me, unless I drink it, Thy will be done!’

“Then coming, he findeth them again sleeping; for their eyes were oppressed [with sleep] and they knew not what to answer him, embarrassed and ashamed. And leaving them, he departed again, and prayed a third time, saying the same words.

“Then cometh he, the third time, to his disciples, and saith unto them, Do ye sleep on, and take your rest?*—Lo, the hour is at hand; and THE SON OF MAN is to be delivered up into the hands of sinners.—Rise, let us go, to join the rest; lo, he that is to deliver me up is at hand.” Matt. xxvi. 42—46, Mark xiv. 39—42.

Our Lord’s second prayer breathes a firmer tone of acquiescence in his decided doom. And after the third, his serenity and composure of mind was perfectly restored.

“And while he was yet speaking, lo, Judas came to the Garden, (for the traitor knew the place to which JESUS was accustomed to resort with his disciples,) accompanied by the cohort † of Roman soldiers, and a party of attendants of the chief priests, Pharisees, and elders, armed with swords and staves, and carrying torches and lamps, to dispel the darkness, we may presume, that hid the moon, and overspread the land, during the awful scene of our Lord’s agony, as the next day, the sun at noon, VATION, who went forth, “conquering by sufferings, and to conquer,” till the end of time.

* This judicious rendering interrogatively, proposed by Mr. Moore, (and before him by Bowyer) seems to be warranted by the corresponding phrase in the parallel passage, τι καθευθετε; Why sleep ye? Luke xxii. 46. And it entirely removes the weighty objection of Archdeacon Churton, “that any appearance of irony ill comported with the state of our blessed and affectionate Saviour’s mind at that sad hour.”

† την σπειραν. “This is spoken of definitely, as being the particular cohort, which by order of the procurator attended on the Sanhedrim, at the great festivals, to preserve tranquillity.” Middleton, p. 374. A cohort consisted of nearly 500 men, and ten cohorts made a legion. See Vol. I. p. 430.

during the crucifixion. Matt. xxvi. 47, Mark xiv. 43, Luke xxii. 47, John xviii. 2, 3.

Then JESUS, knowing beforehand all the sufferings that were coming upon him, went forth boldly, of his own accord, and enquired of them, Whom seek ye? They answered, Jesus of Nazareth. JESUS said, I am he. And when he had so said, struck with the commanding dignity of his presence and voice, they drew back, and fell to the ground. Such was the power and spirit of a far greater than Elijah; who could with infinitely more ease have called down fire from heaven to consume them all, than that prophet in similar circumstances. Again, he calmly enquired, Whom seek ye? And they said, Jesus of Nazareth. He answered, I told you that I am he; if then ye seek me, let these [my disciples] withdraw. (This he said to fulfil the saying in his Intercession, Of those whom Thou gavest me, have I lost none, xvii. 12.) John xviii. 4—9.

Then, that "son of perdition," seeing the irresolution of the wavering band, who, as on a former occasion, could not bring themselves to arrest him who spake as never man spake, in order to quicken their resolves, and urge them to execute their commission, immediately gave them the preconcerted signal of seizure; for quitting them with whom he had hitherto stood, he went up to JESUS, and said, Hail Rabbi, and kissed him. But JESUS reprov'd his hypocrisy with this mild rebuke, *Friend, wherefore art thou come? Judas, deliverest thou up the SON OF MAN with a kiss! In the term "friend" there seems to be a tacit reprobation of his treachery, as foretold, Psalm xli. 9, and in the "SON OF MAN," a reference to his own dignity, which required to be truly revered as the SON OF GOD also. "Kiss THE SON," &c. Psalm ii. 12; Matt. xxi. 37; Matt. xxvi. 48—50; Mark xiv. 44, 45; Luke xxii. 47, 48.

CHRIST APPREHENDED.

And now the Roman cohort, and their commander, and the Jewish attendants came up, and laid hands on JESUS, and apprehended him. But when the disciples about him saw what would follow, they said, Lord, shall we smite with the sword?

* ἑταίρε, "companion," as distinguished from φιλε, "friend." The former intimating only association, the latter affection. In English, the word friend ambiguously denotes both. See the foregoing article on the style of the Gospels.

and, not waiting for permission, one of them Simon Peter, drew his sword, and smote Malchus, a servant of the high-priest, and cut off his right ear. But JESUS checked this intemperance of zeal, and desired Peter to sheath his sword again, for that all who used the sword to maintain his cause should perish by the sword, and that so far from wanting the assistance of twelve puny Apostles, his FATHER, at his desire, could presently send more than twelve legions of angels to his assistance, but that this would be to counteract the Scripture prophecies, foretelling his sufferings, and to prevent him from drinking the cup appointed him by HIS FATHER. Then he said to them that held him, Suffer ye thus far *, or permit me so far as to touch the wounded person, and he touched his ear, and healed him. Then JESUS freely expostulated with the chief priests, captains of the temple, and elders, who had come along with the armed force; Are ye come forth as against a robber, with swords and staves, thus in the dead of the night! Why did ye not apprehend me in the day? I was with you daily in the temple, appearing openly among you, but then ye laid no hands on me. But this is your hour of persecution, and the authority of the [Ruler of] darkness prevails over innocence. When he thus meekly surrendered himself to his foes, all the disciples forsook him and fled †; for all were offended at him, as he foretold, this disastrous night, Matt. xxvi. 31, because he refused the aid of the sword, and declined to extricate himself by a miracle; fulfilling prophecy also, I will smite THE SHEPHERD, and the sheep of the fold shall be scattered. (Zech. xiii. 7.) Matt. xxvi. 55, 56; Mark xiv. 48—50.

Then his enemies, without reply, seized him, and, perhaps, to prevent his escape, as on former occasions, by rendering himself

* Some commentators, following the Syriac version, think that this was addressed to the disciples, to restrain them from further violence, but it was rather addressed to the soldiers, εατε [με] εως τουτου, Let me alone, so far. The phrase occurs elsewhere, εως τινος ουκ εγς με; Job vii. 18, Sept. εασατε αυτους, Acts v. 38; Exod. xxxii. 9; Judg. xi. 37.

† Mark alone records, that after the flight of the Apostles, some young man followed him, having only a wrapper on his body, who perhaps might have been rouzed from sleep in the village of Gethsemane, and led on by curiosity to see what was the matter. But the attendants seized him, and he leaving his wrapper with them fled away naked. This young man evidently was not an Apostle, and least of all, St. John, as imagined, from some of the ancients, by Wells, Gilpin, &c. For John attended the examination and trial.

invisible, at the suggestion of Judas ("hold him fast,") they bound him, and led him away prisoner, and brought him first to Annas, who was the coadjutor and father-in-law of the high-priest Caiaphas, and a person of the highest rank and authority in the state; probably for his advice how to act in this juncture. See Vol. I. p. 89, 90. But Annas sent him bound to Caiaphas, the high-priest, to be examined by him, and tried before the whole council, as soon as they could be collected and assembled, at the judgment-hall, in his palace, John xviii. 13, 14; Matt. xxvi. 57; Mark xiv. 53; Luke xxii. 54.

What became of the rest of the panic-struck Apostles we are not informed by these most candid and impartial of all historians, recording their own disgrace. Two, however, of the number, and two only, John and Peter, soon recovering from their fright, returned to see the issue. Peter followed him afar off, but "the other disciple *," (as John, who never mentions his own name, modestly styles himself, and who was the intimate friend of Peter, see John xx. 2, 3, 4, 8, xxi. 20, 21,) being known to the high-priest, entered into the hall † of his palace along with JESUS, while Peter stood without at the door. Then John went out, and spoke to the maid that kept the door, and brought in Peter. And the servants of the high-priest, and the attendants, made a fire of charcoal, at the lower end of the hall, because it was cold, at this advanced hour of the night, (near three in the morning;) especially so early in spring as about the twenty-fifth of March, A.D. 31. (See this proved, Vol. I. p. 67—70.) And Peter stood with them, and warmed himself. Matt. xxvi. 57, 58; Mark xiv. 53, 54; Luke xxii. 54, 55; John xviii. 15—18.

The return of these two favourite disciples was not only a

* ὁ ἄλλος μαθητής. The authenticity of the article, here, is ably proved by Middleton, p. 374—378. Various have been the guesses of commentators, who this other disciple could be. Some suppose him to have been a disciple of higher rank; others, the master of the Cœnaculum; others, even Judas himself! They idly object to John, as a fisherman, and therefore not likely to be acquainted with the high-priest; forgetting that John was a man of property, who had a house in the city, as well as substance in Galilee.

† Luke critically distinguishes between ἡ αὐλή, "the hall," and ὁ οἶκος, "the house," or palace of the high-priest, xxii. 54, 55. The hall was divided into two parts, the upper and the lower, Mark xiv. 66; of which, the lower was the larger, Luke xxii. 55; and it had a porch (πυλῶν), Matt. xxvi. 71, or vestibule (προαυλιον), Mark xiv. 68.

proof of their stronger attachment to their adored Lord, of whom it has been remarked, that Peter revered him in his public character as the MESSIAH, John loved him in his private, as JESUS, with stronger personal affection; but it was also providentially ordained to furnish eye-witnesses among the Apostles of this iniquitous, but most interesting trial, of which John attended the whole throughout, while the return of Peter, especially, was further necessary for the minute accomplishment of his predicted denials.

PETER'S FIRST DENIAL.

While JESUS stood before the high-priest, at the upper end of the spacious hall of judgment, and Peter was standing, and afterwards sitting among the servants and attendants, at the fire in the lower, the maid who kept the door, coming up to the fire, and looking attentively at Peter, said, Thou also wast with Jesus the Galilean; art thou one of his disciples? But he denied, before them all, saying, Woman, I neither know, nor understand what thou sayest. I know him not. I am not. Then, to avoid further questions, he went out into the porch, and the cock crew. This circumstance marks the course of the third night watch, or the cock crowing. (Mark xiv. 40. See Vol I. p. 14.) Matt. xxvi. 69—71; Mark xiv. 66—68; Luke xii. 56, 57; John xviii. 7.

PETER'S SECOND DENIAL.

Shortly after, while Peter remained without, in the porch, the same maid, seeing him again, began to say to the bystanders, This is one of them; another maid said, This man also was with Jesus of Nazareth; but he denied again. Another man seeing him, said, Thou also art one of them; but Peter said, Man, I am not. Others then said to him, Art not thou also one of his disciples? He denied, with an oath, and said, I am not. Matt. xxvi. 71, 72; Mark xiv. 69, 70; Luke xxii. 58; John xviii. 25.

In enumerating these different accounts of the four Evangelists, shewing how closely Peter was questioned by several of the bystanders, we have assigned the first place to Mark, who wrote from the information of Peter himself, whose attention naturally was most strongly excited by the door-keeper renewing the attack, and thereby producing the rest. He alone noticed the first cock-crowing.

There is also an apparent variation between the two first Evangelists and the last, in the scene of this denial; they expressly state it to have happened outside, in the porch; John seems to place it inside, in the hall. But he evidently meant to connect both denials, separated by the intervening examination of CHRIST by Caiaphas, and therefore he repeated the leading circumstance of the first, that it happened at the fire, ver. 18, to mark the renewal of the subject, ver. 25, before he proceeded to relate the second denial; which he does, omitting the previous circumstance of Peter's quitting the hall, already recorded by the other Evangelists, in order to avoid unnecessary repetition of their narratives, according to his supplemental plan. Thus the apparent dissonance is satisfactorily reconciled; and, indeed, the exact correspondence of the Evangelists, in such minute and seemingly trivial particulars, could only arise from the accuracy of the information of each, and from their joint inspiration by the SPIRIT OF TRUTH.

PETER'S THIRD DENIAL.

About an hour after the second, Peter having returned again into the hall, and approached the place of trial at the upper end, so as to be within view of JESUS, (as we learn from the sequel, though unnoticed by the Evangelists,) was again more strongly charged by the bystanders. One said, Truly thou art a Galilean, for even thy speech bewrayeth thee; another, a servant of the high-priest, and kinsman to Malchus, whose ear Peter had cut off, said, Did not I see thee in the garden with him? This occasioned a third and most vehement denial; for Peter not only denied that he knew JESUS, but began to curse and swear, in order to confirm it. At this the cock crew a second time. Then JESUS turning, looked at Peter significantly; and Peter, reflecting on * his crime, and the minute accomplishment of the

* The unusual word, επιβαλων, used by Mark xiv. 72, is variously interpreted. See Gilpin, &c. But the most approved meaning seems to be that of the English Bible, "when he thought thereon," or "reflected on" his offence; used elliptically for επιβαλων τουτψ, as the phrase occurs in M. Antoninus. τουτψ γαρ επιβαλων, επιληση της οργης. "Reflecting on this, you will forget your anger." Cicero renders it, injiciens, or intendens, in the following sentence; Si immensam, et interminatam in omnes partes magnitudinem regionum videretis, in quam se injiciens animus et intendens, ita late prophecy, went out of the hall, to a solitary place, on the brow of the hill, according to tradition *, and wept bitterly †, overwhelmed with grief and remorse. Matt. xxvi. 73—75; Mark xiv. 70—72; Luke xxii. 59—62; John xviii. 26, 27. The second cock-crowing marks the close of the third night-watch, shortly before the fourth, or the early watch, which began at day-break.

CHRIST'S EXAMINATION BEFORE THE HIGH-PRIEST.

During Peter's denials, JESUS stood before Caiaphas, who questioned him about his disciples and about his doctrine. With all the dignity of conscious innocence, and with a thorough knowledge of the law, which required no man to criminate himself, JESUS objected to this mode of examination. I spake openly to the world, I always taught in the synagogue, and in the temple, where the Jews from all parts resort. And in secret spake I nothing. Why examinest thou me? Examine the hearers as to what I spake unto them: lo, they know what I said.

And when he had thus said, one of the attendants, who stood by, smote JESUS on the cheek, saying, Answerest thou the high-priest so? JESUS meekly resented the insult: "If I spake ill, testify of the ill; but if well, why smitest thou me?" John xviii. 19—23.—How admirably did he thus illustrate, by his own example, the divine precepts of Christian forbearance, in his longeque peregrinatur, ut nullam omnino oram ultimam videat, in quâ possit insistere. N. D. 1, 20.

See other instances, in Wetstein, Vol. I. p. 633, from whence these are selected.

* See the map of Jerusalem, Vol. I.

† The sudden repentance of Peter, is no less remarkable and surprising than his fall. While he was even abjuring HIS LORD with oaths and imprecations, and "Satan sifting him as wheat," one pitying and compassionate look of his now doubly suffering master, mingled with regret, pierced him through, and suddenly laid all the storm then raging in his soul, and melted him into tears of contrition, and godly sorrow that worketh repentance. The same minute saw him an audacious and pertinacious sinner, and an humble heart-broken penitent. His "fall" furnishes a melancholy instance of Natural Infirmity, even in the best men, who dare to presume upon their own strength, and "sufficiency" to resist temptation; while his speedy "rising again," sets before us an encouraging example of the invigorating power of GRACE, triumphing over the Tempter, and rescuing from that "Fisher of men," his weak, silly, and unresisting prey! How are we bound to "work out our own salvation with fear and trembling," whenever we attempt it, since "it is GOD only, that worketh in us both to will and to do, effectually, of his own good pleasure," Phil. ii. 12, 13.

Sermon on the Mount; and how different was his calmness from the intemperance of the Apostle Paul, under a similar provocation, saying to the high-priest, "GOD shall smite thee, thou whited wall! for sittest thou to judge me according to the law, and commandest me to be smitten contrary to the law!" which indeed required, and produced on his part, an immediate apology. Acts xxiii. 2—5.

After the high-priest's examination, noticed only by John, during which time had been given to assemble the Sanhedrim at his palace, and to collect witnesses, as day was coming, they brought him back to their council, to be tried. Luke xxii. 66.

There is great difficulty in reconciling Luke's time of this transaction, ὡς εγενετο ἡμερα, "as soon as it was day," according to the authorized translation, with the confessedly later transaction of CHRIST'S being led away from the council to Pilate, πρωιας γενομενης, "when the morning was come," Matt. xxvii. 1; Mark xv. 1, 2; Luke xxiii. 28. We have, therefore, adopted Dr. Townson's translation of the former phrase, which he has furnished good reasons to prove, began at the commencement of the early watch, or about the third hour before sun-rise*.

HIS TRIAL BEFORE THE COUNCIL.

Wishing to preserve the semblance of justice in their proceedings, the chief priests, the elders, and the whole council † sought

* Grotius, on the place, renders the phrase ὡς εγενετο ἡμερα, cum dies adventaret, "when day was approaching." Its meaning here, may fairly be collected, from a similar phrase, γενομενης δε ἡμερας, Luke iv. 42, which must be so understood, from the explanation of the accurate Mark, recording the very same transaction, και πρωι, εννυχον λιαν, "and early, far advanced in the night," Mark i. 35; which is paraphrased by the English Bible, "a great while before day." The two limits of time, coalescing about three in the morning, the point of equal distance between midnight, and sun-rise, or full day. Acts ii. 1.

Gilpin perceived the difficulty, and awkwardly attempted to remedy it, by supposing that, according to the Jewish reckoning, "day commenced as soon as midnight was passed," and accordingly rendered the phrase, "about midnight." He erred only in assigning too early a time, not warranted by the Jewish mode of reckoning.

Luke carefully distinguishes between ηγαγον, they brought him to the high priest's palace, xxii. 54; and ανηγαγον, they brought him back to the council, xxii. 66. These niceties of construction, overlooked in our English Bible, are absolutely necessary to harmonize the Evangelists critically.

† Here the "whole council" is put for a great majority. For Joseph of Arimathea, Nicodemus, and others, we may presume, of "the rulers who believed on Him," were not consenting to this iniquitous procedure. Luke xxiii. 51; John vii. 50, 51; xii. 42.

*false witnesses against JESUS, upon whose testimony they might condemn him to death. But they found none that would answer their purpose, though many were produced. At the last, came two false witnesses, of whom, one said, This [man] declared, I am able to destroy the temple of God, and to build it in three days; the other, We heard him say, I will destroy this temple, made with hands, and in three days I will build another made without hands; both of them misrepresenting his declaration at the first passover, John ii. 19, where "this temple" meant "the temple of his body;" and disagreeing from each other: fulfilling prophecy. Psalm xxxv. 11. To this inconsistent testimony, refuting itself, JESUS made no answer.

The high priest then urging him to an explanation, which they might lay hold of, arising with warmth, said, Answerest thou nothing? What do those witness against thee? But Jesus, knowing his malicious design, was silent, and made no answer.

To cut the trial short, therefore, and supply the want of evidence, the high priest compelled him to criminate himself by the most solemn oath: I adjure thee by THE LIVING GOD, tell us whether thou art THE CHRIST, THE SON OF THE BLESSED GOD?

This produced its effect. First, prefacing that his acknowledgment would not avail to convince them, and liberate himself, "If I tell you [truth] ye will not believe; and if I ask you [why?] ye will not answer me, [or assign a reason,] nor let me go:"—he then boldly avowed himself THE CHRIST: Thou sayest [true;] I am. And now, adhering to his former declarations, * Buxtorf, in his Talmudic Lexicon, col. 1458, cites a Rabbinical testimony, admitting the subornation of false witnesses against CHRIST before his crucifixion, and describing the mode.

"Against none of those guilty of death by the law are snares to be laid, except against one that has endeavoured to pervert another to idolatry and strange worship. And it is thus performed: they light a candle in an inner room, and place the witnesses in an outer, so that they may see him and hear his voice without his seeing them.

"And so they did to the Son of Satda (Mary): they placed men privately in the next room to witness against him, in *Lud, and hanged him upon the cross on the evening of the Passover."

This testimony is curious and valuable; it shews the plea upon which the Jewish council endeavoured to justify themselves, for subornation of perjury, to the nation.

* Lud might perhaps be a literal error for Jud or Judea.

from the beginning of his ministry, John i. 52, to the end, Matt. xxiii. 39, he referred them to the ensuing fulfilment of two famous prophecies of Daniel, vii. 13, 14; and of David, Psalm cx. 1, which they themselves applied to THE MESSIAH:

“Henceforth*, ye shall see THE SON OF MAN, sitting on the right hand of THE POWER OF GOD [or ALMIGHTY GOD;] and coming with the clouds of heaven,”—no longer in humiliation, but invested with glory. Of this early glory the martyr Stephen (Acts vii. 56,) and the bigot Paul (Acts xxii. 6—14,) were eye-witnesses, not long after; and the performance of this furnishes an infallible proof of the later glory, foretold also by two angels at the ascension (Acts i. 10, 11,) and by St. John, and CHRIST himself in the Apocalypse, (Rev. i. 7, xxii. 20.)

“Then said they all, Art thou the SON OF GOD? and he undauntedly asserted it: Ye say [true:] for I am †.

“Then the high priest rent his clothes, in semblance of the utmost horror ‡, saying, He hath spoken blasphemy; what further need have we of witnesses! lo ye have heard his blasphemy. And they said, We have heard it from his own mouth.—What think ye? And they all condemned him to be guilty of death.”

His unjust condemnation was now aggravated by every insult and injury that diabolical rage and malice could devise. For they spit on, blindfolded, buffeted and smote him; they ridiculed him as a false Christ and false prophet; and “many other blasphemies did they really utter against THE SON OF GOD;” Matt. xxvi. 57—68; Mark xiv. 53—65; Luke xxii. 63—71, blaspheming thereby “THE BLESSED” FATHER also. All these injuries and indignities the meek and lowly JESUS bore in passive silence, without a murmur, fulfilling prophecy: “He gave his back to the smiters, and his cheeks to them that plucked off the hair; he hid not his face from shame and spitting,” Isa. l. 5, 6. “He was accounted stricken, smitten, and afflicted by GOD.”——“He was brought [to trial] and questioned, but he opened not his mouth.”——“The wickedness of His generation who can describe!” Isa. liii. 4—8.

* The word ἀπ’ ἀρτι, “from now,” which is likewise used in the two former declarations, intimates future events, not remote, but near.

† ὑμεῖς λεγετέ· ὅτι ἐγὼ εἶμι. It should be so pointed, to mark the asseveration. ἐγὼ is emphatic, and ὅτι frequently put for the causal, διότι, “for,” “because.” See Matt. v. 3—5, xi. 26; Luke xxiii. 40, &c.

‡ Caiaphas was of the atheistical sect of the Sadducees, Acts. v. 17.

JUDAS HANGS HIMSELF.

The treachery of Judas Iscariot, his remorse and suicide, are occurrences altogether so strange and extraordinary, that the motives which swayed him thereto require to be developed, as far as may be done, where the Evangelists are, in a great measure, silent concerning them, from the circumstances of the history itself, and from the feelings of human nature.

Judas, the leading trait of whose character was covetousness, was probably induced to follow JESUS at first, with a view to the riches, honours, and other temporal advantages which he, in common with the rest, expected the MESSIAH'S friends would enjoy. The astonishing miracles he saw him perform left him no room to doubt of the reality of his master's pretensions, who had indeed, himself, in private, actually accepted the title from his Apostles; and Judas must have been much disappointed when JESUS repeatedly refused the proffered royalty from the people in Galilee, after the miracle of feeding the five thousand, and again after his public procession to Jerusalem. He might naturally have grown impatient under the delay, and dissatisfied also with JESUS for openly discouraging all ambitious views among his disciples, and therefore might have devised the scheme for delivering him up to the Sanhedrim, or great council of the nation, (composed of the chief priests, scribes, and elders,) in order to compel him to avow himself openly as THE MESSIAH before them, and to work such miracles, or to give them the sign which they so often required, as would convince and induce them to elect him in due form, and thereby enable Him to reward his followers. And even the rebukes of JESUS, for his covetousness, and detection of his treacherous scheme, although they unquestionably offended Judas, might only have served to stimulate him to the speedier execution of his plot, during the feast of the passover, while the great concourse of Jews from all parts assembled thereat, might powerfully support the Sanhedrim and their MESSIAH against the Romans. And the success of this measure, though against his master's will, would be likely to procure him pardon, and even to recommend him to favour afterwards. Such might have been the plausible suggestions by which Satan tempted him to the commission of this crime.

But "when Judas," who attended the whole trial, "saw" that it turned out quite contrary to his expectations, that JESUS was capitally condemned by the council, as a false Christ and false prophet, notwithstanding he had openly avowed himself; and that he wrought no miracle, either for their conviction, or for his own deliverance, as Judas well knew he could, even from the circumstance of his healing Malchus, after he was apprehended; when he further reflected, like Peter, on his master's merciful forewarnings of his treachery, and mild and gentle rebuke at the commission of it, he was seized with remorse *, and offered to return (ἀπεστρέψε) the paltry bribe of thirty pieces of silver to the chief priests and elders, instantly on the spot, saying, I sinned in delivering up innocent blood. To return what he had unjustly gotten, affording a momentary relief to his harassed mind. But they were obstinate, and not only would not relent, but threw the whole load of guilt upon him, refusing to take their own share: for they said, "What is that to us? see thou to that;" thus, according to the aphorism, "loving the treason, but hating the traitor," after he had served their wicked turn.

Stung to the quick at their refusal to take back the money, while they condemned himself, he went to the temple, cast down the whole sum in the treasury, or place for receiving the offerings of the people; and after he had thus returned the wages of iniquity, he retired to some lonely place, not far, perhaps, from the scene of Peter's repentance, and in the phrenzy of despair, and at the instigation of the devil, hanged himself †, crowning with suicide the murder of his master, and his friend; rejecting his compassionate Saviour, and plunging his own soul into perdition!

The scrupulousness of the chief priests, to employ the price of blood, for religious uses; and their purchase of the potters

* This is the proper signification of μεταμεληθεῖς, as distinguished from μετανοήσας, "having repented." For μεταμελεῖα signifies "regret for what has been done," δυσ-ἀρεστησις ἐπὶ πεπραγμένοις. Phavorinus. It is opposed to that "godly sorrow which worketh repentance." 2 Cor. viii. 10.

† It is elsewhere said, that "falling headlong, he burst asunder, and all his bowels gushed out," Acts i. 18. Both accounts might be true: he might first have hanged himself from some tree on the edge of the precipice; and the rope or branch breaking, he might have been dashed to pieces by the fall.

Matthew, xxvii. 3. places it after CHRIST was led away to Pilate, but it must have happened before, for it followed the condemnation by his own account.

field therewith, unwittingly fulfilling Zechariah's prophecy, xi. 13, as explained before, Vol. II. p. 478, 479; we owe to Matthew, xxvii. 3—10.

HE IS BROUGHT TO PILATE.

After the tumultuous and disgraceful scene in the judgment hall, that succeeded the condemnation of CHRIST, and their rejection of the testimony of Judas to his innocence; the whole council, to give weight to their application, led him away, bound, to Pilate, in order to get him to confirm their act, and sentence JESUS to be executed. This procession took place in the course of the early, or morning watch, and probably near sun-rise, Matt. xxvii. 1, 2, 3; Mark xv. 1; Luke xxiii. 1; John xviii. 28.

Before we proceed to the trial before Pilate, for the better understanding this, the most important, and the most minutely detailed by all the Evangelists, it will be necessary to premise some account of the Jewish government, at this time, and of the Roman governor himself.

1. When Judea was made a Roman province, at the request of the Jews themselves, weary of the tyranny of Archelaus, who was deposed on their complaint by Augustus, A. D. 7, Coponius was appointed their first procurator, or deputy governor, in subordination to the president of Syria, and invested by Augustus with supreme authority. The Jews, however, were allowed the free exercise of their religion, and to live according to their own laws; but the power of life and death in capital cases, was reserved solely to the Roman procurator; as we learn from the Jewish historian Josephus, Antiq. 18, 1, 1; Bell. Jud. 2, 8, 1.

And this was agreeable to the general maxims of Roman policy, as we learn from the Roman lawyer Ulpian.

“The municipal magistrates are not allowed to inflict capital punishment on a slave, (and a fortiori, on a freeman;) but they are not to be denied the power of moderate correction,” such as the lesser penalties, of fines, imprisonment, scourging, &c. See Lardner, Vol. I. p. 75.

This prerogative was uniformly exercised by all the succeeding Roman procurators, as we learn from sacred and Jewish history. The Jewish council themselves admitted it, before Pilate, John xviii. 31; Pilate asserted it to CHRIST, John xix. 10. And the Jerusalem Talmud, recites a tradition, that “forty years before the destruction of the temple, judgment in capital cases, was *taken away from Israel." This tradition, though inaccurate in point of time, yet establishes the fact, at our Lord's trial, only thirty-nine years before; and is therefore an additional voucher to the Jews at present, of more weight perhaps than the former, that then, "the sceptre of civil government, had fully departed from Israel;" and therefore that "SHILOH was then come," according to Jacob's prophecy, Gen. xlix. 10.

2. Pontius Pilate was appointed procurator, by Tiberius, A. D. 25, six years before this. (See Vol. I. p. 87, 96.) Valerius Gratus, his predecessor, had been allowed by the emperor to remain in office, for eleven years till his death; and he suffered Pilate to continue for ten years in Judea, though he was displeased at him; because, as he said himself, the presidents and procurators of the provinces were all avaricious; and he found by experience, that when they were suffered to stay but a short time in office, they were only the more eager for rapine, to make the best use of their time; whereas, if their stay was prolonged, when they had once enriched themselves, they would become slower, and less apt to plunder the people. And he humourously illustrated this, by an example, borrowed from Æsop's Fables †. Thus proving himself to be "the king of fierce countenance, understanding dark sentences, or parables," of Dan. viii. 23. Joseph. Ant. 18, 7, 5.

It became a practice with the governors to carry their wives along with them, for the convenience of bribery. This grew so notorious, that a motion was made in the Roman senate, by Severus Cæsina, A. D. 21, only four years before Pilate's appointment, that no magistrate to whom a province was allotted, should be accompanied by his wife. Which though approved of by a few, was rejected by the corrupt majority, with indig-

* Lightfoot, who relates this tradition, in his Hebrew and Talmudic Exercitations, Matt. xxvi. 3, John xviii. 31, contends, in opposition to the express terms of it, that this privilege was not taken away, but that they lost or relinquished it, by their own oscitancy, supine, and unreasonable lenity to murderers and homicides.

† Josephus thus relates the parable, or apologue. A wounded man once, lying on the ground, a swarm of flies from all parts around, settled on his wounds. A traveller, passing by, pitied his helplessness to relieve himself, and offered to drive away the flies. But the man, to his surprise, declined the offer; alleging that he would only suffer a greater injury thereby: for that these were now, nearly glutted with his blood, and sucked more gently; whereas, if they were driven away, a fresh and hungry swarm would succeed, who finding him exhausted, would suck him to death.

nation, for his presumption in censuring the practice. Tacit. Annal. 3, 33, 34.

Pilate's administration was very unpopular. At the outset, when he quartered his troops in Jerusalem, he, by an audacious innovation, first set up the Roman ensigns, bearing the images of the Cæsars, in the city, privately, in the night time. As soon as the people discovered this "abomination," they repaired to Cæsarea, his residence, in a great body, entreating for several days, that the images might be removed. But he peremptorily refused, thinking it would be dishonourable to the emperor. On the sixth day, when the Jews renewed their petition, with great clamour, at his tribunal, upon a signal given, he suddenly surrounded them with his soldiers, whom he had privately stationed with their arms in readiness, and threatened the petitioners with instant death unless they desisted, and returned home. But they, on the contrary, threw themselves flat on the ground, and baring their necks, said, that they would cheerfully submit to death, rather than dare transgress the wisdom of their laws. So Pilate wondering at their firmness in the observance of their laws, immediately ordered the images to be brought back from Jerusalem to Cæsarea. Ant. 18, 4, 1.

Next year, he attempted to bring a supply of water into the city, from a spring 200 stadia distant, at the expence of the sacred treasury. But this displeased the Jews; and several thousands of them assembled, crying out, that he ought to desist from the undertaking; and some, as usual in a mob, insulted him with abusive language. Upon which, he surrounded them privily with his soldiers, whom he had disguised in the dress of citizens, carrying daggers under their clothes, and ordered them to disperse; but they refusing, and persisting in their abuse, he gave the signal of attack, and the soldiers, exceeding his orders, fell upon the peaceable, as well as the seditions, so that many of them were killed and wounded. Ant. 18, 4, 2.

After this, and probably, at the third passover, A.D. 30, which OUR LORD did not attend, because the Jews sought to kill him, John vii. 1, Pilate attacked some Galileans, who were probably of the party of Judas the Gaulonite, that resisted the payment of the Roman tribute, and were called Zealots; and "mingled their blood with their sacrifices;" as incidentally noticed by Luke, xiii. 1. Compare Matt. xvii. 24—27; Acts v. 37.

Philo, the Jew, also, in his embassy to Caligula, p. 799, 780, states a further aggression, similar to the first.

“Pilate, not so much in honour of Tiberius, as to vex the people, dedicated some *gilt shields to him, without any figures or other forbidden emblems, but only a dedicatory inscription, from himself to the emperor, and placed them in Herod's palace, within the holy city. As soon as the people perceived it, and the matter was noised abroad, they sent a deputation, consisting of [Herod] the king's four sons, (Matt. xiv. 2,) of royal rank and consequence, attended by the other relations of the family, and their own chief magistrates, to entreat Pilate, that this innovation of the shields might be removed, and that he would not infringe their native customs, of the earliest date, which had been preserved inviolate both by kings and governors. But he sternly refused, for he was unbending, haughty and implacable, in his disposition. Then they exclaimed, Do not raise a sedition, do not excite war, do not break the peace! the dishonour of our ancient laws cannot redound to the honour of the emperor; therefore let not this be a pretext for your outrage to the nation: It surely was not the wish of Tiberius to violate any of our laws. If you say it was, produce either his decree, or letter, or any other document, that we may cease to importune you, and send an embassy to supplicate your master. This last circumstance disconcerted him very much, fearing, that if they should actually send an embassy, they would charge him with the other misdemeanors of his administration, his briberies, his injuries, his extortions, his insults, his outrages, his indiscriminate and successive † massacres, and his unbounded and most grievous cruelty, in detail; and this wrathful and vindictive man was reduced to the utmost perplexity; on the one hand, not daring to remove the shields after they had been once dedicated, and unwilling to gratify his subjects in any shape; but

* The dedication of shields to THE LORD, in the temple, as emblematical of the divine defence and protection against their enemies, Gen. xv. 1, was customary. 1 Kings x. 17; xiv. 26, 27, &c. It was adopted by the heathens also to their tutelar gods, 1 Mac. vi. 1, 2; and by the Romans, Livy, i. 20. To whom Simon the Maccabee sent a present of a golden shield of great size and value, 1 Mac. xiv. 24, which was graciously received, xv. 20.

† The original, επαλληλους, is remarkably strong and expressive. It signifies, “succeeding each other, without intermission,” like the waves of the sea; αλληπαλληλοις κυμασι. Basil. This, therefore, is rightly placed after the preceding outrages.

on the other, well knowing the steady severity of Tiberius, on such occasions. The chief magistrates seeing this, and perceiving his concern for what he had done, though he wished to hide it, wrote the most supplicatory letter to Tiberius; who, when he was informed of Pilate's speeches and threats, though not prone to anger, was greatly incensed, and immediately wrote without further delay, most sharply reproaching and reprimanding him for his audacious innovation, and ordering him to take down the shields directly: accordingly, they were removed from the metropolis to Cæsarea, and there dedicated to the emperor."

This curious and important passage, (here translated at length) furnishes the fullest and most authentic account extant, of the true character of Pilate, drawn by the hand of a most intelligent contemporary. It furnishes also the most satisfactory solution of "the enmity that had subsisted for some time between Pilate and Herod," who are not reconciled until this very day of the crucifixion; as we learn from the concise Scripture account, Luke xxiii. 21.; stating the fact, but not assigning the grounds of it. Herod was probably offended by the massacre of his subjects, the Galileans, at the preceding passover; but surely, it was a heinous insult to himself, to hang up the dedicated shields in his palace, without his permission; which, as a Jew, he could not have given; and which would only tend to render him odious and unpopular, to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and to the whole nation. Accordingly, his four sons headed the deputation to Pilate; furnishing full proof of their father's indignation, and an open expression of his resentment. And it is highly probable, that Herod himself joined in the complaint of the Jews to the emperor against Pilate. No wonder then, that the Roman governor, when severely reprimanded, and openly disgraced as he must have been by the removal of the shields, in the eyes of the nation, was thoroughly mortified and humbled, and reduced to the necessity of suing for reconciliation with Herod, and of endeavouring to ingratiate himself with the people. This satisfactorily accounts for his anxiety not to give Herod umbrage, as before, by interfering with his "jurisdiction, as soon as he found that JESUS was a Galilean;" and for his repeated endeavours to sooth the Jews, and prevail on them, by entreaties and remonstrances, to be content with a milder punishment; and for his being at length, basely intimidated, by their implied threat of another complaint to Cæsar, to surrender an innocent and just person, against his own repeated declarations, and against his conscience, and co-operate with their "envy" and lawless rage; fulfilling prophecy. Ps. ii. 1—3; Acts iv. 25—28.

HIS TRIAL BEFORE PILATE.

When "the whole council," came to the prætorium, or Roman court of justice, where Pilate was prepared to receive them, they delivered up their divine prisoner to him. But they themselves entered not into the heathen prætorium, lest they should be polluted thereby*, and prevented from eating the passover, on that their appointed day, Friday. Matt. xxvii. 1, 2; Mark xv. 1; Luke xxiii. 1; John xviii. 28. Pilate therefore went out to them, and said, What accusation bring ye against this man? maintaining thus his own prerogative, of bringing JESUS, to a fresh trial; not relying upon their proceedings. They answered, If he were not a malefactor worthy of death, we would not have delivered him up to thee.

Then Pilate said unto them, Take ye him and judge him according to your law, intimating that the crime laid to his charge was not of a capital nature. But they asserted that it was, and urged their own inability to inflict capital punishment, without his sentence. It is not lawful for us to put any man to death; thus unwittingly fulfilling OUR LORD'S own predictions, signifying that he should die, but not by a Jewish death, stoning, but by a Roman, crucifixion, John xviii. 29—32.

Then upon this rehearing of the cause, quitting the ground of blasphemy, on which they had condemned him in council, and to which Pilate had evidently referred, as an offence against their law; they brought a fresh accusation against him, more suitable to the Roman: We have found him, 1. perverting the nation, or stirring them up to insurrection against the Romans; 2. forbidding to give tribute to Cæsar; like the faction of Judas Gaulonites, called Zealots; and 3. saying that he himself is CHRIST THE KING * [of the Jews,] in downright rebellion against the Roman emperor. Luke xxiii. 2.

* How exactly did the "Scribes and Pharisees" on this occasion verify OUR LORD'S censure; "Ye blind guides, who strain at a gnat and swallow a camel!" Matt. xxiii. 24. who scrupled external pollution, while they were committing murder, heightened by hypocrisy, treachery, and ingratitude!

Pilate then entered into the prætorium again, to examine JESUS as to these capital charges. And knowing, probably from the inoffensive life and conversation of JESUS, that the two former were unfounded and malicious, both from his actual payment of the tribute himself, Matt. xvii. 24—27; and from his recommendation in public to the Pharisees and Herodians, to render unto Cæsar the dues of Cæsar, Matt. xxii. 21, he confined himself to the last and most important charge, Art thou the king of the Jews? Matt. xxvii. 11, Mark xv. 2, Luke xxiii. 3, John xviii. 23.

JESUS, who was not present at the charges brought against him, wished to know whether this was one of them; otherwise, modestly, but indirectly objecting to it, as a question originally put by the governor, as tending to make him criminate himself; for so he had before objected to the questions of Caiaphas;—“Askest thou this of thyself? or did others bring it in charge against me? Pilate said, Am I a Jew? or thinkest thou that I, a Roman, concern myself about such matters; I speak not of myself: Thine own nation, and the chief priests, have delivered thee up to me, for trial; what hast thou done to deserve this? JESUS then answered, by admitting, but explaining the alleged fact: My kingdom is not of this world: and can therefore create no jealousy or alarm to the Romans; If my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants have anxiously exerted themselves, (ηγωνιζοντο) that I should not be delivered up to the Jews: (and Pilate himself must indeed have known, that they all forsook him and fled, from the Chiliarch's report.) But now their desertion is decisive evidence that my kingdom is not from hence. Pilate then said unto him, Art thou a king then? JESUS answered, Thou sayest [true;] for I am a king. For this end have I been born, and for this end have I come into the world, to testify unto THE TRUTH*."—To attest his Messiahship, was indeed the grand design of his incarnation and mission. And this, accordingly, was "the good confession which JESUS witnessed before Pontius Pilate," (1 Tim. vi. 13.) John xviii. 34—37.

* Χριστον βασιλεα, Luke xxiii. 2. This title, on account of its celebrity, is anathrous, or without the definitive article; put for ὁ Χριστος ὁ βασιλευς, Mark xv. 32, like Ἰησουν Χριστον, John xvii. 3, put for Ἰησους ὁ Χριστος, Matt. xvi. 20; or like υἱος Θεου, Matt. xiv. 33, put for υἱος του Θεου, Matt. iv. 3, or ὁ υἱος του Θεου, Matt. xvi. 16; or like Θεος πατηρ, Jude, ver. 1, put for Θεος ὁ πατηρ, John i. 13; or ὁ Θεος ὁ πατηρ. This indiscriminate use of all the divine titles, with and without the article, is fully shewn by Middleton; and cuts up the Socinian and Unitarian heresies by the roots.

Pilate then, having carelessly asked him, What is truth †? without receiving, or without waiting for an answer, went out again to the chief priests and multitudes, saying, I find no fault in this man. But they persisted in their accusation, and proceeded to establish their first charge; For he stirreth up the people throughout all Judea; beginning from Galilee, unto this place. JESUS then was brought out, to answer this and many other charges of the chief priests and elders; but he answered nothing. Pilate, therefore, questioned him again, Answerest thou nothing? See how many charges they bring against thee. But JESUS answered him not a word more; so that Pilate wondered, Matt. xxvii. 12—14, Mark xv. 3—5, Luke xxiii. 4, 5, John xviii. 38.

HE IS SENT TO HEROD.

But when Pilate had heard Galilee mentioned, he enquired whether the man was a Galilean; and when he was informed that he was one of Herod's jurisdiction, he sent him back to Herod, (who, during these days of unleavened bread, was also at Jerusalem himself.) But Herod, seeing JESUS, was greatly rejoiced, for he was desirous to see him a good while, because he had heard much of him, and hoped to see some miracle done by him ‡. Then he questioned him in many words, but he an-

* Τῆ ἀληθείᾳ, may denote "the truth of his divine mission," John xvii. 3; or Himself "THE WAY, and THE TRUTH, and THE LIFE," John xiv. 6. The "king of fierce countenance" was remarkably foretold "to cast down THE TRUTH to the ground," Dan. viii. 12. See Vol. II. p. 509.

† Cowper, the poet, in his Task, has furnished an excellent comment on this verse.

"What is truth? 'Twas Pilate's question, put
To TRUTH itself; that deigned him no reply:
And wherefore? Will not God impart His light
To them that ask it?—Freely: 'tis His joy
His glory and His nature to impart:
But to the proud, uncandid, insincere,
Or negligent enquirer; not a spark."

‡ Herod suspected that JESUS was John the Baptist, whom he had beheaded, raised from the dead, and indued with miraculous powers, Matt. xiv. 2. The message of Jesus to that "fox," seemed to promise the performance of miracles, Luke xiii. 32.

swered him nothing. And the chief priests and Scribes, who had accompanied him to Herod, stood by, vehemently accusing him. But Jesus, knowing their incorrigible prejudices, and that all he could say would avail nothing, maintained his dignified silence; still fulfilling prophecy.

Then Herod, finding his curiosity disappointed by the persevering silence of JESUS, set him at nought with his guards, and in mockery arrayed him in a splendid robe, in order to ridicule his pretensions to royalty; and afterwards sent him back again to Pilate, to dispose of as he pleased. The deference shewn to Herod on this occasion, by the Roman governor, probably contributed to their reconciliation, Luke xxiii. 6—12.

HE IS SENT BACK AGAIN TO PILATE.

Pilate then summoned the chief priests, and the rulers, and the people, again to the prætorium, and declared, that upon examination he was satisfied of the prisoner's innocence of the charges they had brought against him, and Herod also, and therefore proposed to chastize and then to release him; for, according to the custom, he was under a necessity of releasing one prisoner to them at the feast of the passover.

But the multitudes, instigated by the chief priests and elders, clamorously demanded the release of Barabbas, a notorious robber, who had been imprisoned for sedition and murder, in preference to JESUS, "Not this man, but Barabbas," Matt. xxvii. 15—20; Mark xv. 6—11; Luke xxiii. 13—19; John xviii. 39, 40.

While Pilate was sitting on the tribunal, his wife sent a message to him, Have nothing to do with that just person, for I have suffered much in a dream this day on his account, Matt. xxvii. 19. It is by no means improbable that she had some vision of the disasters that awaited Pilate and his family. This must greatly have increased his reluctance to sentence CHRIST, knowing already that they had delivered him up through envy and malice.

He therefore made a second attempt to save him, and said, What then will ye have me do unto JESUS, called CHRIST, THE KING OF THE JEWS? But they were clamorous, saying, Crucify him! crucify him! Matt. xxvii. 21, 22; Mark xv. 12, 13; Luke xxiii. 20, 21.

Again he made a third attempt, saying unto them, Why, what evil hath he done? I have found no cause of death in him, I will therefore chastise him, and discharge him. But they were urgent, with loud voices, requiring that he should be crucified, Matt. xxvii. 23; Mark xv. 14; Luke xxiii. 22, 23.

Still Pilate would not consent, but inflicted the milder punishment which he had proposed, hoping this would satisfy them; and treated him as a poor, weak, but inoffensive visionary, possessed with enthusiastic notions of an ideal kingdom; for he first scourged him, and then left him to the derision and mockery of his guard, and of the whole cohort, who platted a crown of thorns, adding cruelty to insult, and set it on his head*; dressed him in a purple robe, put a reed in his right hand, by way of sceptre, and bending the knee, adored him, and saluted him, Hail king of the Jews! then they spit on him, and struck him on the head with the reed, and smote him, Matt. xxvii. 27—30; Mark xv. 15—19; John xix. 1—3.

Pilate then, when the soldiers had finished their impious mockeries, went out to the people again, and said unto them, I am going to bring him out to you, that ye may know that I find no fault in him; (then came JESUS forth, wearing the crown of thorns and the purple robe.) And he said unto them, Behold the man!—he said no more, thinking that this pitiable spectacle would move their compassion, and disarm their rage. Unwittingly, perhaps, adopting the language of prophecy, Zech. vi. 12, derived from Balaam's famous prophecy restored, Numb. xxiv. 7 †. (See Vol. II. p. 475, 205.)

But when the chief priests and their attendants saw him, fearing that the fickle populace might relent, they cried out (κραυγασαν,) Crucify him! crucify him! Pilate then said,

* Hasselquist, speaking of the naba or nabka of the Arabs, says, “In all probability this is the tree which afforded the crown of thorns put on the head of CHRIST. It grows very common in the East, and the plant is extremely fit for the purpose, for it has many small and most sharp spines, which are well adapted to give great pain.” The crown might be easily made of these soft, round, and pliant branches; and the leaves much resemble ivy, being of a very deep green. It was like those, therefore, with which they crowned their emperors and generals.

† Pilate was a man of some literature; he was acquainted with Hebrew and Greek, as appears from his inscription on the cross: he had also spent six years in Judea. Is it then incredible that he might have read those famous prophecies, at least in the Septuagint version, and even designedly adopted their language to refute them thus, by example? See Dissertation the first of my Dissertations on the prophetic character of CHRIST.

Take ye him, and crucify him; I will not, for I find no fault in him.

This, however, they considered as an indignant irony, to do it at their own peril; for which he might inflict a severe revenge, or accuse them to the emperor, of taking the law into their own hands. They therefore would not accept the concession, but at length recurred to the original ground of blasphemy, upon which they had condemned him in their council: they answered him, “We have a law, (Levit. xxiv. 16,) and according to our law he ought to die, because he made himself THE SON OF GOD,” John xix. 4—7.

When Pilate then heard this argument, he was more afraid than before; and this, we may presume, both on a political and religious account. He feared now that the Jews might plausibly accuse him of superseding their law; and he dreaded also to injure some divinity, or demigod, for the Heathens universally believed that “the gods sometimes came down upon earth, in the likeness of men,” Acts xiv. 11, 12. And surely the stupendous miracles performed by CHRIST, of which he could not be ignorant, justified this apprehension, joined to his wife’s dream; for the Romans were remarkably superstitious about dreams. He entered therefore again into the prætorium, to re-examine JESUS apart from the Jews, and said unto him, Whence art thou? But JESUS gave him no answer, lest, perhaps, a direct answer might have decided the wavering governor to acquit him, in spite of the Jews, and so defeat the great end of his mission, to die for the sins of the world. That this, indeed, was the noble and magnanimous cause of his silence upon this occasion, contrary to his former frankness, we may collect from Pilate’s answer, intimating the conflict in his own breast: Speakest thou not unto me? Knowest thou not that I have authority to crucify thee, and have authority to release thee? Jesus then immediately answered, meekly acknowledging his authority, as founded on the divine permission, and considerably apologizing in some measure for his abuse of that boasted authority, through intimidation, “Thou couldest have no authority at all over me, unless it were given thee from above. Wherefore he that delivered me up to thee for crucifixion, Caiaphas and his abettors, hath greater sin than thou hast in yielding to their importunities; especially as they have better means of knowing whence I am.”

This modest and gentle answer so satisfied Pilate, that from thenceforth he sought to release him; but when he attempted it, the Jews exclaimed, “If thou release this man, thou art not Cæsar’s friend: Whosoever maketh himself a king speaketh against Cæsar.” thus intimating a threat of accusing him to the jealous and suspicious Tiberius, of encouraging and abetting a rival against his imperial authority, which might complete his disgrace and ruin, John xix. 8—12.

This last argument vanquished Pilate’s constancy. When he heard it, he removed his tribunal (about the *third hour) to a place in the open air, called the pavement, where the Jews might hear him pronounce the sentence. And sitting down thereon, and bringing forth Jesus again from the prætorium, in order still to expose the folly and absurdity of the fear they pretended to entertain of this rival of Tiberius, in such a wretched plight, he compassionately said, “Behold your king!” again adopting the language of prophecy, Zech. ix. 10. But they cried out, Away with him! Away with him! Crucify him! Pilate, however, expostulated with the people, Shall I crucify your king? The chief priests answered, “We have no king but Cæsar.” Thus publicly renouncing their national faith and hope of THE MESSIAH to restore again the kingdom to Israel, Acts i. 6; and unwittingly incurring also the denunciations of the same prophecy, for their rebellion:—“For I will no longer spare the inhabitants of the land, but will deliver up every man into the hand of his fellow, and into the hand of his king,” Zech. xi. 6, (Vol. II. p. 478,) when “the Romans,” whom they now basely preferred, and whom they sought to conciliate by this wicked sacrifice of the innocent, for the sins of the nation, “came to take away both their holy place and their nation,” as they justly dreaded; yielding to the Machiavelian policy of Caiaphas, in council, (John xi. 48, 49, xviii. 14,) John xix. 13, 14.

Pilate then, seeing that he availed nothing, but that rather a tumult was made, addressed his last solemn appeal to their religious feelings, by transferring the guilt of the compulsory sentence he was going to pronounce from himself to them; for, according to their own usage of “washing their hands, in token of innocency," Psalm xxvi. 6,) when suspected of murder, according to the law, Deut. xxi. 6—9, and which also was a customary rite among the Romans; "he took water and washed his hands before the multitude, and said, *I am innocent of the blood of this just person: See ye to it."

* See the reasons for this correction of the sixth hour, in the present text of John xix. 14, in the foregoing explanation of the chronology of the passion week.

Then all the people answered, and said, His blood be upon us, and upon our children! Thus absolving Pilate, and taking the guilt upon themselves and their posterity, by the most awful and general imprecation; so literally, and so dreadfully fulfilled, ever since the Roman captivity, for seventeen hundred years, unto the present day! as confessed by themselves †. See David Levi's remarkable explanation of Daniel's prophecy of the seventy weeks, (in Vol. II. page 514, note,) where he represents "murder" as the last of the crying sins of his nation, under the "second temple," Matt. xxvii. 24, 25, Luke xxiii. 23.

The extreme reluctance of Pilate to sentence CHRIST, considering his merciless character, is signally remarkable, and still more his repeated protestations of the innocence of his prisoner, although, on occasions of massacre, he made no scruple of confounding the innocent with the guilty. But he was unquestionably influenced by the overruling providence of GOD, to make the righteousness of HIS SON appear as clear as the noon day, even when condemned and executed as a "malefactor," by the fullest, the most authentic, and the most public evidence: 1. By the testimony even of his judges, Pilate and Herod. 2. By the message of Pilate's wife, delivered to him on the tribunal. 3. By the testimony of the traitor Judas, who hanged himself in despair, for betraying the innocent blood. 4. By the testimony of the Roman centurion and guard, at his crucifixion, to his divinity and righteousness. And 5. Of his fellow sufferer on the cross. Never was innocence so attested as his innocence.

Then Pilate discharged Barabbas, and delivered up JESUS to their will to be crucified. And the Roman soldiers, who

* Alas! the superstitious Pilate ought to have known, that no water could wash away the guilt of an unjust sentence of death, even from Ovid:

Ah, nimum faciles, qui, tristia crimina cædis,
Flumineâ tolli posse, putetis, aquâ!

† Maimonides, de Christo, § 4. "And He, [Jesus,] was the cause that Israel perished by the sword; that the remnant of them were dispersed and oppressed, the law changed, and the greater part of the world perverted."

acted as guards and executioners, after they had mocked him, took off the purple robe, and put on him his own raiment, and led him away to crucify him. It is not said that they took off the crown of thorns: he probably wore that to the last, as explanatory of his title on the cross, Matt. xxvii. 26, Mark xv. 20, Luke xxiii. 25, John xix. 16.

Matthew, on this occasion, and Mark also, say that they scourged him; but as only one scourging is mentioned by each of the Evangelists, and the rest agree in assigning to it an earlier date, and a second, at this later, would be wantonly cruel, when he was going to suffer the most dreadful punishment of crucifixion, and that also against Pilate's will, it is highly probable that Matthew and Mark meant the same; connecting the two punishments together, though not in immediate succession.

THE CRUCIFIXION.

And now JESUS was led through the city, by the *dolorous way towards Calvary, bearing his cross, according to the Roman custom; not the whole cross, but only that transverse part to which the arms were fastened, called furca, (whence the criminal was called furcifer,) as distinguished from the upright beam, called stipes, fixed in the ground.

As he went, (like Isaac, his type, bearing the wood for his own sacrifice, Gen. xxii. 6,) exhausted with fatigue and fasting, Psalm cix. 24, and fainting under the burden, the soldiers pressed into their service Simon, the Cyrenian, as he came out of the country, opposite the gate of Ephraim, (by tradition,) and compelled him to relieve JESUS, by carrying the cross after him. Matt. xxvii. 32; Mark xv. 21; Luke xxiii. 26; John xix. 17.

And there followed him a great number of the people, and also of women, who beat their breasts and bewailed him, but JESUS turning to them, said, Daughters of Jerusalem, weep not for me, but weep rather for yourselves and for your children, upon whom my blood was imprecated: for lo, days of vengeance are coming, in which people shall say, Blessed are the barren, and the wombs that never bare, and the paps that never gave suck! when they shall see the infants massacred by the Romans. Then shall they begin to say to the mountains, Fall on us, and to the hills, Cover us, from the divine wrath, Hosea x. 8, Rev. vi. 16, for if they (the Romans) do such cruel things in green wood, or to the righteous, *what shall be done in the dry, or to the wicked? as foretold by Ezekiel, (xx. 47,) Luke xxiii. 27—31.

* See the map of Jerusalem, and its explanation, Vol. I. p. 437.

To increase the infamy of his punishment, there were also two others, malefactors, led with him to be put to death, who were probably associates of Barabbas, Luke xxiii. 22. And when they had gone out of the city, by the ancient gate of judgment, or gate of the valley (which is still standing), into the place called in Hebrew Golgotha, or the place of a skull, at the foot of Calvary †, they offered him a stupifying potion of vinegar mixed with myrrh and wormwood, which it was usual to give criminals, but when he tasted, he would not drink it, Matt. xxvii. 33, 34; Mark xv. 22, 23.

And when they had reached the top of Calvary, the soldiers crucified him there, in the midst, and the two malefactors on each side; thus fulfilling the prophecy of Isaiah, “and he was numbered with the transgressors,” liii. 12. And it was the third hour when they crucified him. Then JESUS said, FATHER forgive them, for they know not what they do! Thus, in the midst of his own excruciating agony, our adorable HIGH PRIEST “interceded for the transgressors” also, Isa. liii. 12, who surely, if they had known, would not have crucified the LORD OF GLORY, neither the Jews nor the Romans, Acts iii. 17; 1 Cor. ii. 8; 1 Tim. i. 13.

After they had crucified JESUS, the executioners divided his garments among them into four parts, one for each, but they cast lots for his vest, or tunic, because it was woven without seam, from the top throughout, and therefore did not chuse to rend it, fulfilling prophecy in this minute distinction, (Psalm xxii. 19,) Matt. xxvii. 35; Mark xv. 24, 25; Luke xxiii. 32—34; John xix. 18—24.

They also set up an inscription, written by Pilate, in Hebrew, Greek, and Latin, over his head:

* In several passages of Scripture, green trees represent good men, and dry trees, bad. See Psalm i. 3, v. 2—10, Jer. xvii. 8, Hosea xiv. 8, Job xv. 30.

† See Vol. I. p. 432.

JESUS OF NAZARETH, THE KING OF THE JEWS*.

Matt. xxvii. 37, Mark xv. 26, Luke xxiii. 38, John xix. 19.

This inscription, which was read by many of the Jews, because the place of crucifixion was near the city, offended the chief priests, who applied to Pilate to alter it, into "who called himself the king of the Jews." But Pilate peremptorily refused, What I have written, I have written, and it shall remain; wishing to mortify them, and insult the whole nation, while he unwittingly gave the despised JESUS OF NAZARETH, (John i. 47,) his true scriptural title, THE KING OF THE JEWS, or CHRIST, John xix. 20—22. And sitting down, the Roman soldiers watched him there, that none might take him down from the cross, Matt. xxvii. 36.

And the people stood in silence †, beholding the spectacle; while the passengers blasphemed him, wagging their heads, and repeating his own words, "Thou that destroyest the temple, and buildest it in three days, save thyself! If thou be THE SON OF GOD, come down from the cross! Likewise the chief priests, with the scribes and elders, said, mocking, He saved others, cannot he save himself? If he be THE CHRIST, the KING OF ISRAEL, THE ELECT OF GOD, let him now come down from the cross, that we may see, and believe on him! He trusted in GOD, Let Him deliver Him now, if He chuse to adopt him: for he said, I am THE SON OF GOD," Matt. xxvii. 39—43, Mark xv. 29—32, Luke xxiii. 35. How critically did these impious mockers unintentionally fulfil prophecy, Psalm xxii. 8, 9, lxix. 21, lxxxix. 19, cix. 25—28, Wisd. ii. 18.

The soldiers also insulted him, offering him vinegar to drink, (their common beverage,) and saying, If thou be the king of the Jews, save thyself! Luke xxiii. 36, 37. And to crown all, even one of the malefactors upbraided him likewise, If thou be THE CHRIST, save thyself and us! But the other rebuked his fellow, saying, Dost not thou fear GOD? how then darest thou to follow the example of those impious mockers, and insult a dying person? seeing that thou art also dying thyself in the same punishment with him; and shouldst rather, therefore, pity a fellow

* This was the actual inscription, recorded by the eye witness, John; the other Evangelists give only the purport, "This is," &c. as Matthew and Luke; or "the king of the Jews," only, as Mark.

† The people seem to have been affected with compassion; they afterwards "smote their breasts and returned," Luke xxiii. 48.

sufferer: especially since we suffer justly, receiving the deserved recompense of our deeds; but this man did nothing amiss. Then he said to JESUS, LORD, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom! JESUS authoritatively replied, Verily, I say unto thee, this day shalt thou be with me in paradise! Luke xxiii. 39—43.

This penitent seems to have been one of those worldly minded disciples, who forsook their master when he refused the proffered royalty, and predicted his own sufferings and crucifixion, John vi. 66, xii. 34—37. He was now fully converted by the extraordinary accomplishment, and “drawn to CHRIST when hanging on the cross!” John xii. 32; now convinced that his kingdom was not of this world. With hearty repentance, therefore, and true faith, he besought admittance into his MASTER’S spiritual kingdom, at the regeneration, in future; and was graciously accepted by Him, who exercised an act of sovereignty, even on the cross; in all the fullness of assurance, promising him an immediate reward, even admittance, that very day, with himself, after death, into paradise, or that region of hades, appropriated for good souls; according to the popular belief, as expressed by OUR LORD in the parable of the rich man and Lazarus, Luke xvi. 20. See Vol. II. p. 84, note.

The next, and the most affecting occurrence, was our blessed Lord’s display of filial piety and friendship, in the midst of his tortures. Mary, his mother, with astonishing fortitude and resignation to the mysterious will of heaven, (little inferior to Abraham himself, the intentional sacrificer of his darling son Isaac, now stood beside the cross, in speechless woe*, paying the last sad duty of maternal tenderness to her DIVINE SON; and now experiencing herself the full accomplishment of Simon’s paradoxical prediction, delivered in the fulness of her joy at his nativity, “Yea, a sword shall pierce even through thine own soul!” as it must have done, with the keenest edge, when she saw him set up as “a sign,” or spectacle of public ignominy; and heard him “spoken against,” and blasphemed, as a false Christ and false prophet; and shortly after beheld him pierced to the heart with a spear!——Among the faithful friends who attended her in her distress on this most trying occasion, was Mary, the wife of Cleophas, her own sister, or cousin, and Mary Magdalene, and John, the beloved disciple.

* This circumstance is expressive of the deepest affliction. Curæ leves loquuntur, ingentes stupent, “Slight griefs do speak, but the profound are dumb.”

JESUS, from his dreadful elevation, seeing his mother, and pitying her now desolate and disconsolate state of widowhood and childlessness, looked significantly first on her, and then on John, saying at the same time, Woman, behold thy son! to supply my place, and then bequeathing her, as a dying legacy, to his dearest and worthiest friend on earth, Behold thy mother! Words few and simple, indeed, but full of meaning; easily and equally understood, and obeyed by both: for, from that hour, the disciple took her to his own home; and assuredly, beheld, or treated her with all the respect and tenderness due to such a mother, so recommended. This precious anecdote, where every look, as well as every word, conveys a volume, (John xxi. 25,) we owe to John himself, xix. 25—27.

And now, when JESUS had hung on the cross near three hours, at the sixth, or noon, the sun was darkened, and darkness overspread the whole land for three hours more, until the ninth hour. This obscuration of the sun, must have been preternatural, in its extent, duration, and opposition of the moon, at full, to the sun. It was observed at Heliopolis in Egypt, by Dionysius, the Areopagite, afterwards the illustrious convert of Paul at Athens, Acts xvii. 34, who, in a letter to the martyr Polycarp, describes his own and his companion, the sophist Apollophanes' astonishment at the phænomenon, when they saw the darkness commence at the eastern limb of the sun, and proceed to the western, till the whole was eclipsed; and then regrade backwards, from the western to the eastern, till his light was fully restored; which they attributed to the miraculous passage of the moon across the sun's disk. Apollophanes exclaimed, as if divining the cause, "These, O good Dionysius, are the vicissitudes of divine events!" Dionysius answered, "Either THE DEITY suffers, or He sympathises with THE SUFFERER!" And that Sufferer, according to tradition, record by Michael Syncellus, of Jerusalem, he declared to be "THE UNKNOWN GOD, for whose sufferings all nature was darkened and convulsed."

This most curious and valuable testimony* to the fact, and

* This testimony is infinitely more important than that of Phlegon's Eclipse, which is usually adduced; but which happened the next year, A.D. 32, April 28, by Pingré's tables, which state only one solar eclipse, this year of the passion, a lunation and half reasoning thereon, by heathen philosophers, at the very time, we owe to Suidas, in the two articles, Διονυσιος ὁ Ἀρεωπαγίτας. See Vol. I. p. 65—71. Matt. xxvii. 45, Mark xv. 33, Luke xxiii. 44, 45.

About, or at the ninth hour, JESUS exclaimed with a loud voice, ἘΛΙ, ἘΛΙ, lama sabaktani, “MY GOD, MY GOD, why hast thou forsaken me!” Matt. xxvii. 46, Mark xv. 34.

This exclamation, in its three first words, exhibits the original Hebrew of the beginning of the twenty-second Psalm, descriptive of the Messiah's persecution and sufferings; and these were probably recited to mark the application of the entire Psalm to himself, according to the usual mode of citation at that time. See John xii. 38. where the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah is perhaps so cited. The fourth term, sabaktani, is Syriac, or the vernacular dialect, put for the Hebrew, azabthani. That this was designed for a citation, indeed, and not for any expression of despondency, (as several commentators* have after this obscuration, May 10, at two in the morning, visible in Asia, and there central.

* Though the plan of this work does not permit a review of the mistakes of commentators in general, which would be endless and unprofitable; yet there is one on this subject, fraught with the most extravagant and revolting Hutchinsonian mysticism, and that in useful, elementary works, of general circulation, Parkhurst's Hebrew and Greek Lexicons, under the roots אלה, in the former, and Ελωι, in the latter; which, therefore, it would be ill discharging the functions of a sacred critic, to pass over in silence, without warning younger students to beware of such.

The pious, but fanciful Parkhurst supposes,

1. That there were two similar exclamations uttered by CHRIST, one “about the ninth hour,” (περι την εννατην ὥραν,) recorded by Matthew; the other, “at the ninth hour,” (τη ὥρα τη εννατη,) recorded by Mark, when he was in the very jaws of death.—But this is a hypercritical distinction without a difference.

2. That the former was addressed to THE DIVINITY, as אלי, ηλι, (my powerful), GOD, referring to his power; but the latter, as אלוהי, Ελωι, [my accursed.] bound to bear together with my humanity, the curse due to man for sin!! thus, strangely misrepresenting אלוה, as a participle passive, like επικαταρατος, “one accursed, or subject to a curse;” as if it were derived from the verb אלה, to *curse. Whereas it does not once occur in this sense throughout the whole range of the Hebrew Scriptures; but every where as “the BLESSED and only POTENTATE;” which last, indeed, is its proper signification: nor does the form אלוהי, occur any where except in two erroneous passages, Psalm xviii. 47, and cxlv. 1, of Leusden's and Foster's editions, which are correctly written אלהי, (excluding the Vau), in the London Polyglott Bible, as Park-

* Parkhurst, in his Hebrew Lexicon, Edit. 3. p. 24. omits indeed our Lord's exclamation on the cross; but he represents אלוה as a title of CHRIST, signifying “accursed,” or “subject to a curse.”

imagined, uttered in Christ's human nature,) we may fairly collect from his express reference to the same Psalm, immediately after, in saying, "I thirst," alluding to ver. 15. "My tongue cleaveth to my jaws *; and also from his last ejaculation, expressive of the highest trust and confidence, immediately before he expired, "FATHER, into thy hands I commit my spirit!" alluding to another, Psalm xxxi. 5.

Some of the bystanders, mistaking the meaning of the first Hebrew word, Eli, said, Lo, he calleth Elias, or "Elijah the prophet;" and they might naturally conceive, from the darkness, that this was indeed "the great and dreadful day of THE LORD," which was foretold to follow his coming, (Mal. iv. 5.) Matt. xxvii. 47; Mark xv. 35.

After this, JESUS, knowing that all his predestined sufferings were now ready to be perfected, that the Scripture might be fulfilled, saith, I thirst. And immediately one of them, running to a vessel full of vinegar, which lay there for the use of the soldiers, steeped a sponge in the vinegar mixed with hyssop, and put it on the end of a reed, and reached it to his mouth, pitying his distress, while the rest, more hardened, said, Let him alone, let us see whether Elias is coming to take him down, and save him," John xix. 28; Matt. xxvii. 48, 49; Mark xv. 36.

When JESUS had received the vinegar, thereby fulfilling also another signal prophecy, in my thirst they gave me vinegar to drink, Psalm lxix. 21, he said, it is perfected! and with a loud voice he added, FATHER, into thy hands I commit my spirit!

hurst himself admits, overturning his criticism founded thereon. אלה, "THE POTENTATE" is derived from אל, ÆL, the primitive name of God, signifying "POWER."

3. But (אלהי,) Ελωι, in the present text of Mark, is now considered by the ablest editors, Wetstein and Griesbach, as faulty, who substitute Ηλι, as in Matthew, or Ηλει, supported by Eusebius, the Cambridge MS., and several additional vouchers. And Ελωι, the Syriac, might have been easily substituted for Ηλι, the Hebrew, by the unskilfulness of some early copier, hastily concluding, that because the last word, Sabaktani, was Syriac, the first ought to be so too.

4. The last ejaculation, when JESUS was "in the very jaws of Death,"—(here represented as going to devour him, whereas he dismissed his spirit of his own accord,) was widely different: FATHER, into thy hands I commit my spirit!

See a fuller discussion of this mischievous and revolting hypercriticism, in my Dissertations, &c. p. 131—135.

* Parching thirst, here expressed by the Psalmist, is one of the usual concomitants of extreme grief of mind, or torture of body:—Sorrow is dry, is a proverbial expression, founded on long experience.

and so saying, he inclined his head, delivered up his spirit, and expired, Matt. xxvii. 48—50; Mark xv. 36, 37; Luke xxiii. 46; John xix. 28—30.

It is remarkable that the original expressions, αφηκε το πνευμα, παρεδωκε το πνευμα, and εξεπνευσε, here, are appropriated by the Evangelists to the death of CHRIST, and are not used elsewhere in the NEW TESTAMENT. The deaths of other persons are expressed by the verbs, απεθανε, Luke xvi. 22; ετελευτησε, Matt. xxii. 25, &c.; εκοιμηθη, Acts vii. 60, &c.; εξεψυξε, Acts v. 5—10. &c. The distinction in this place plainly intimates that CHRIST had the power of resigning his own life, and of resuming it again, consigned to him by the FATHER, as he expressly told his disciples, foretelling his voluntary death, John x. 18.

And most awful were the signs that ensued; for lo, the veil of the temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom, aptly signifying the dissolution of the Jewish ecclesiastical economy, and that the separation heretofore subsisting between them and the Gentiles was now rescinded. And this happened exactly at the commencement of the evening sacrifice, while the priest was offering incense in the holy place, Luke i. 10, and while the high priests were celebrating their unhallowed pass-over.

And the earth did quake, and the rocks rent. (See 1 Kings xix. 11.) And we learn from Maundrel, p. 73, that “about a yard and a half from the hole in which the foot of the cross was fixed, is seen that memorable cleft in the rock, which happened at the suffering of the GOD OF NATURE. It is about a span wide at its upper part, as to what now appears of it, and two deep; after which it closes, but opens again below, (as you may see in another chapel contiguous to the side of Calvary,) and runs down to an unknown depth in the earth. That this rent was made by the earthquake that happened at our Lord’s passion there is only tradition to prove: but that it is a natural and genuine breach, and not counterfeited by any art, the sense and reason of every one that sees it may convince him, for the sides of it fit like two tallies to each other, and yet it runs in such intricate windings, as could not well be counterfeited by art, nor arrived at by any instrument.”

It is also mentioned by Fleming, in his Christology, p. 97, that a Deist, lately travelling through Palestine, was converted by viewing one of these rocks, which still remains, torn asunder, not in the weakest place, but across the veins; a plain proof that it was done in a supernatural manner.

And such a conversion was actually wrought at the time on the centurion and Roman soldiers, who guarded the cross, and witnessed the awful scene; they who had joined in the insults and mockeries of the whole cohort against JESUS, in the prætorium, so lately: For when the centurion who stood opposite to JESUS heard that he so cried and expired, with his last breath calling on God as HIS FATHER, he was fully persuaded that JESUS was indeed what he professed himself to be before the council, and said, This man was truly THE SON OF GOD, Mark xv. 39.

The soldiers also, when they saw the earthquake, and the prodigies that happened, feared greatly, and joined in the same declaration with the centurion, "This was truly THE SON OF GOD," Matt. xxvii. 54.

And again, the centurion, when he saw the prodigy that happened, (perhaps the cleft in the rock, which was just beside him, and, according to tradition, separated the cross of JESUS from that of the impenitent malefactor on the left hand, Sandys, p. 127,) he glorified GOD, like a true convert, for this wondrous attestation to his Son's innocence, and said, "This man was really THE JUST ONE," Luke xxiii. 47.

Thus did these strongly prejudiced heathens, who had ridiculed the idea of JESUS being a king, with the governor himself at first, now condemn the high priest and council for representing JESUS as guilty of blasphemy, by recognizing him in that higher character previously ascribed to him, THE SON OF GOD, as intimated by "truly;" and also bear testimony to the truth of Pilate's previous declaration of his justice or innocence, as intimated by "really *."

* The original phrases, Αληθως Θεου υιος ην ουτος, and οντως ο ανθρωπος ουτος δικαιος ην, are rather incorrectly rendered in our English Bible, "Truly, this was the Son of God," and "Certainly, this was a righteous man." For the adverbs "truly and certainly," when beginning a sentence, in colloquial discourse, rather imply a casual opinion than a solemn and decided asseveration. On this occasion, therefore, they should be connected with the predicates, to strengthen them. Thus the similar phrase, αληθως Θεου υιος ει, should be rendered "Thou art truly THE SON OF GOD," Matt. xiv. 33, where, though the phrase Θεου υιος is entirely anarthrous, there cannot be a doubt that it is to be understood in the highest sense; from the worship (προσεκυνησαν) then actually paid to CHRIST by the disciples. This anomaly was noticed in a

Not less remarkable was the revolution produced thereby in the public mind; for all the multitudes who assembled together to this spectacle, when they saw the prodigies that happened, smiting their breasts, in token of grief and remorse for their guilt and imprecations, and with a melancholy presage of their own punishment, returned, Luke xxiii. 48. The conviction of the divinity and of the innocence of the sufferer, thus miraculously attested, unquestionably prepared the way for the conver-foregoing note; and Townson also observes, that the Divine Titles frequently want the article in confessions of faith. That αληθως and οντως should properly be so connected may appear from some other instances: ουτος εστιν αληθως ο προφητης, "This is truly the prophet," John vi. 14; and again, vii. 40, οντως προφητης ην, "John was really a prophet," Mark xi. 32; ηγερθη ο κυριος οντως, "THE LORD is really risen," Luke xxiv. 34; οντως χηρας, "really widows," 1 Tim. v. 3—5.

By analogy, δικαιος, though anarthrous here, should also be rendered "the just one," in the highest sense also*. For this was a title of the MESSIAH in the Old Testament, as may appear from the following passages:

"Many are the afflictions of THE JUST ONE, but THE LORD delivereth him out of them all. He preserveth all his bones; not one of them shall be broken. Evil shall slay the wicked one, [Judas,] and the haters [Jews] of THE JUST ONE shall be desolate," Psalm xxxiv. 19—24. (Instead of רשע, "wicked," the singular number of the Masorete text, the Sept. followed by the Syr. Arab. and Lat. read רשעים, in the plural; but surely the Jews had no temptation to forge the singular reading, which is supported by the Chaldee Targum, in the London Polyglott.)

"Behold THY KING cometh unto thee; He is just, and a Saviour," Zech. ix. 10.

Hence this title was assumed in the New Testament also. Thus Peter reproached the Jews, "Ye denied THE HOLY and JUST ONE," Acts iii. 14; and the martyr Stephen, "Which of the prophets did not your fathers persecute? they even slew those (Isaiah, Zechariah, &c.) that prophesied of the coming (του δικαιου) of the JUST ONE; of whom ye have been the betrayers and murderers!" Acts vii. 52; and James likewise, "Ye condemned, ye murdered THE JUST ONE! Will he not resist you, [ye proud?]" James v. 6, referring to iv. 6. His violent persecutor, Saul, afterwards his most zealous Apostle, Paul, was fore-ordained "to see THE JUST ONE, and to hear the voice of his mouth," Acts xxii. 14.

This Jewish title of the MESSIAH, was naturally adopted by Pilate's wife, who styled JESUS τῷ δικαίῳ ἐκείνῳ, "THAT JUST ONE," Matt. xxvii. 19; and by Pilate himself, του δικαιου τουτου, "THIS JUST ONE," Matt. xxvii. 24. Is it then to be wondered, that the centurion adopted their phraseology, which he heard shortly before?

Nor was this title unknown to the Heathen philosophers. Plato, in the second book of his Republic, describes a perfect character with the same epithet, ο δίκαιος, "the just;" who, for attempting to reform the world, should encounter persecution and crucifixion. See the passage, in the note near the end of this volume.

* The observations in this note are chiefly taken from "Observations on the words which the centurion uttered at the crucifixion of our Lord, 1808, Oxford, by a Layman," who is generally supposed to be that learned and intelligent physician, Dr. Falconer, of Bath. Such observations are peculiarly valuable.

sion of the three thousand on the ensuing day of Pentecost, only fifty-two days after.

Among the spectators on this occasion, besides those that stood near the cross, there stood afar off, all his acquaintances, both men and women, from Galilee especially, and among the latter, Salome, the mother of the Apostles James and John, Matt. xxvii. 55, 56, Mark xv. 40, 41, Luke xxiii. 49. These probably contributed to soften the multitude by their grief.

As soon as the first evening was come, (which began at the third hour, afternoon, see Vol. I. p. 15,) because it was Friday, the eve of the Sabbath, and preparation day, the day before the first and great day of the feast also; the chiefs of the Jews besought Pilate that the criminals might be dispatched and taken away, before their high Sabbath began; according to the law, which required that the bodies should be taken down at sunset, Deut. xxi. 23, Josh. x. 27. The soldiers, therefore, came, and according to their cruel custom, broke the legs of the two malefactors, who were still alive, before they dispatched them; but when they came to JESUS, and saw that he was already dead, they brake not his legs; one of the soldiers, however, to ensure his death, with a spear pierced his side, and forthwith came thereout "blood and water," John xix. 31, 34.

This was indeed the most decisive proof of his death. For either the spear pierced the *pericardium, or bag in which the heart swims in a small quantity of water, to prevent adhesion; which therefore was let out along with his heart's blood; or else the blood was now chilled, and the cruor, or red particles, separated from the serum, or watery part. On the former supposition, he must have been instantly killed, if not dead before; on the latter, he must have been dead some time. These two most important facts, therefore, are attested with the utmost solemnity by the eye witness, John, and further, that they were designed as the fulfilment of the types and prophecies of the OLD TESTAMENT, for the conviction of believers.

"And he that saw, hath testified, (and his testimony is true, and JESUS himself knoweth that he speaketh the truth!) that ye might believe. These were done that the Scripture might be fulfilled, a bone of Him shall not be broken, (Psalm xxxiv. 20.) And again, another Scripture saith, "They shall look on Him whom they pierced," (Zech. xii. 10,) John xix. 35—37.

* The following curious, incidental observation of a skilful anatomist, is given in the Yverdon Encyclopedie, art. Pericardè. "I have constantly found water in the pericardium of the quadrupeds that I have dissected alive.—And I have found it constantly in the case of criminals capitally punished."

The parenthetical observation, virtually includes the testimony of two witnesses; first of the eye witness, John, vouching the truth of the fact; and an animated appeal to the sufferer himself, as THE SEARCHER OF HEARTS, to vouch it also*. Unfortunately, our English Bible, ambiguously renders εκεινος, the emphatic pronoun, "that person," referring to JESUS, ver. 33, foregoing, by "HE;" which is liable to be confounded with the former, "he," the rendering of the article ο, prefixed to εωρακως, "the eye witness." The merit of this correcter translation is due to Wakefield. May this noble attestation to the divinity of CHRIST, "cover a multitude of sins" in the translation of this strenuous Unitarian!

This "greater testimony" of THE SPIRIT OF PROPHECY †, (which is the SPIRIT OF GOD,) seems to be confirmed, by its analogy to the former passage in the Gospel; for the prophecy, (Psalm xxxiv. 20,) referred to in the expression, "a bone of Him shall not be broken," was evidently founded on that typical rite, that not a bone of the paschal lamb should be broken, (Exod. xii. 46, repeated Numb. ix. 12,) which was so exactly fulfilled in CHRIST, our passover, the true antitype; and the water and blood, shed from his side, and sprinkling perhaps the people, as well as the ground, is represented by Paul, as the ratification of that new and better covenant, corresponding to the typical ceremony of sprinkling the people, the tabernacle, and the holy vessels, with the blood of the victims, mixed with water, under the first covenant, Heb. ix. 18—24; referring to Exod. xxiv. 5, 6, and to Levit. xvi. 14—18. In these passages of the O. T. it must be allowed, there is no mention, at present, of water mixed with the blood of the victims; but that it was usual, may be inferred from another, and a parallel rite, Levit. xiv. 4—7, which was explained before, Vol. II. p. 247.

* This also is conformable to John's style elsewhere: "And we testify, and ye know that our testimony is true," 3 John 12.

† This is what Peter calls "the prophetic argument," and which he holds to be "firmer" than the testimony of the senses, even at CHRIST'S transfiguration, which he witnessed, 2 Pet. i. 19.

CHRIST'S INTERMENT.

After Pilate had given permission to the chiefs of the Jews to remove the bodies of the crucified, CHRIST, by a signal Providence, fulfilling prophecy, though "numbered with the transgressors in his death," was distinguished from them in his interment; for while they were buried ignominiously at the foot of the cross, he was interred in "the tomb of a rich" man, and embalmed like the rich, Isa. liii. 9. See the foregoing explanation, Vol. II. p. 408—409. For Joseph of Arimathea, a rich man, good and just, and an honourable counsellor, who had not been consenting to the act of the Jewish council, and was himself a disciple of JESUS, but secretly, hitherto, for fear of the Jews, now nobly avowed himself, and went boldly to Pilate, and asked permission to take away the body, which was at this time dead, he having probably attended the crucifixion. Pilate wondered if JESUS was dead already, and sent for the centurion to know how long it was since he died; who having informed him, he granted the body to *Joseph, Matt. xxvii. 57, 58; Mark xv. 42—45; Luke xxiii. 50—52; John xix. 38.

When the second evening, therefore, was come, at sun-set, Joseph took down the body from the cross, assisted by Nicodemus, another rich and respectable disciple, (the same that came to JESUS by night, at the first passover,) who likewise nobly avowed his faith in a crucified Redeemer, bringing with him a costly mixture of myrrh and aloes, about a hundred pounds weight, to embalm the body; and they wrapped it in a clean linen shroud, which Joseph had bought, with the aromatic spices †, and laid it in a new tomb, designed for Joseph himself, in which no one had ever been laid, hewn out of the rock in his garden, which was near the place of execution, (only an hundred and eight feet distant, according to Sandys, p. 129,) because the sabbath drew nigh, or [the moon] was beginning to shine

* Joseph afterwards was interred himself in another tomb, under the former, on the slope of the hill, hewed into the rock, which is shewn to travellers. See Vol. II. p. 410.

† These were probably dry spices, with which the body was wound in the linen shroud, to perfume it, as distinguished from the liquid, with which the women intended to anoint it. The largeness of the quantity, a hundred pounds weight, might be necessary to fill the tomb with a part of them, as was customary in Scripture funerals, and to burn the rest, to excite a fragrant odour at the time of interment. See 2 Chron. xvi. 14. Thus was CHRIST interred like a prince.

(επεφωσκε) shortly before sun-set, or the commencement of the Sabbath day, allowing only time for a hasty interment before the Sabbath day commenced. And after they had finished the interment, they rolled a great stone to the door of the tomb, in order to secure it from intrusion, and departed, Matt. xxvii. 59, 60; Mark xv. 45, 46; Luke xxiii. 53, 54.

Of all our Lord's Galilean friends and acquaintances who attended the crucifixion, Matt. xxvii. 55, Mark xv. 40, 41, Luke xxiii. 49, only Mary Magdalene and the other Mary, the mother of James the less and Joses, attended the interment also, and sat down opposite the tomb, and beheld where and how the body was laid, Matt. xxvii. 61; Mark xv. 47; Luke xxiii. 55. And they seem to have lingered there, after the interment, in pensive mourning, until respect for the sabbath compelled them to retire.

The rest of the women seem to have returned to the city from the crucifixion, where they prepared aromatic spices and ointments, to finish the embalmment of the body, after the sabbath. But they religiously rested during the Sabbath, according to the [fourth] commandment, Luke xxiii. 56*.

* There is here a considerable ambiguity in Luke's narrative, which has principally contributed to embarrass the harmony of the resurrection hitherto.

At first sight, the same Galilean women who attended the crucifixion, in general, seem also to have attended the interment, ver. 55, and afterwards to have returned to the city, and prepared the aromatic spices and ointments before the Sabbath began, ver. 56. But these must have been distinct parties, for the former consisted only of Mary Magdalene and the other Mary, as we learn from the express testimony of Matthew xxvii. 61, and of Mark xv. 47; and they staid so late at the tomb, till the Sabbath was going to dawn, by Luke's own account in the preceding ver. 54, that it was impossible they could prepare the embalming materials before it commenced. And accordingly, we learn from Mark, xvi. 1, that they actually purchased them after the Sabbath was fully passed, on Sunday morning. It must, therefore, have been the rest of the Galilean women who prepared the materials on Friday evening, and went to embalm the body on Sunday morning, according to Luke's continuation, xxiv. 1.

And this is confirmed by Luke's phraseology in the former ver. 55, where the anathous term, γυναικες, is indefinite; signifying, that "some women of those that had come with him from Galilee, attending [the interment,] beheld the tomb, and how his body was laid, while [others] returning, prepared aromatic spices and ointments," &c. ὑποστρεψασαι δε [αλλαι, or λοιπαι,] ἡτοιμασαν, &c.

And the necessity of supplying this ellipsis in ver. 56 is confirmed by Luke's subsequent enumeration of the Galilean women in general, xxiv. 10, as distinguished from the second party, whose visit to the tomb he notices in the preceding part of the chapter, ver. 1—9.

This distinction is judiciously remarked by Townson, in his Harmony, p. 131, &c. and will be more fully explained in the sequel.

THE SEPULCHRE GUARDED BY ROMAN SOLDIERS.

Far otherwise were the ceremonious high priests and scrupulous Pharisees employed on the Sabbath day! As soon as it arrived, at night-fall, they went to Pilate, to entreat him that he would station a guard there, until the third day of that deceiver's predicted rising from the dead, lest his disciples should steal away the body on this or the following night, and pretend that it was risen. So the last error would be worst than the first, Matt. xxvii. 62—64.

Pilate consenting, they took with them a part of the temple guard, and we may be assured, after previously examining whether the body was in the tomb, they sealed the stone, to secure it against the soldiers themselves, and set the watch to guard it against the disciples, Matt. xxvii. 65, 66.

Thus did these whited sepulchres “fair without and foul within,” as our Lord significantly upbraided them, “strain at a gnat, but swallow a camel.” They scrupled indeed to enter the Roman prætorium on Friday, for fear of being polluted, but on Saturday, that high and holy day, they dared not only to profane the Sabbath by unhallowed work, but even to incur the highest pollution, of entering a sepulchre and approaching a dead body!—What a strange inconsistency was this!

All this uncommon care and caution on their part only contributed to defeat its own end. It was permitted, but overruled by PROVIDENCE, in order to furnish the strongest proofs of the miraculous resurrection of HIS SON, and to confute these wicked men, and their calumny, which they suggested to Pilate, and afterwards propagated, that the disciples stole away his body by night, although they had used every human precaution to prevent its being taken away out of a “new tomb,” where there was “no other corpse,” and that tomb “hewn out of a rock,” inaccessible behind, and its mouth secured by a “great stone,” under “a seal,” and “a guard of soldiers!”—“to make assurance doubly sure.” In vain did they fight against GOD! and kick against the pricks! sorely to their own confusion and destruction.

HARMONY OF THE RESURRECTION, AND OF OUR LORD'S APPEARANCE AFTERWARDS.

A. D.	EASTER DAY.	Matt.	Mark.	Luke.	John. Paul.
31.	EARLY WATCH. A great earthquake, descent of two angels, removal of the stone, terror and trance of the guards, resurrection of Christ early	xxviii. 2*.	xvi. —	5. 9.
	First party of women, Mary Magdalene , the other Mary , and Salome , set out to view the tomb, about day break	—	1. —	2. xxiv. 1.	xx. 1.
	SUNRISE. Mary Magdalene , near the sepulchre, seeing the stone removed, hastily runs back to tell Peter and John , that the body was taken away somewhere.		—	4. —	— 2.
	The two others proceed, and reach the sepulchre, after sun rise		—	2.
	They see the first angel, and soldiers, in the porch.	—	5.	—
	They see the second in the tomb.		—	5.
	They fly from the sepulchre, amazed and transported.	—	8.	—	8.
	The guards departed.	—	11*.
	Peter and John come running to the sepulchre; and return, without seeing the angels.				— 3. — 10.
	Mary Magdalene , slowly following them, sees the two angels in the tomb, and				— 11. — 17.
	I. Presently after, Jesus himself. His first appearance to her.		—	9.
	She goes to tell the Disciples.		—	10.	— 18.
	II. CHRIST'S second appearance to the two other women, as they were returning.	—	9.
	Second party of women, Joanna and her company visit the sepulchre, and see the two angels.			— 1. — 8.
	They return, and tell the disciples, who disbelieve their report.			— 9. — 11.
	Peter goes a second time to the sepulchre, but sees no more than before.			— 12.
	NOON. Cleophas , and another disciple, go towards Emmaus	—	12.	— 13.
	III. CHRIST appears to them on the way.	—	12.	— 15.
	I. EVENING. He discovers himself to them at Emmaus , and vanishes.			— 29.
	They return, to tell the disciples.	—	13.	— 33.	1 Cor.
	CHRIST appears to Peter singly.			— 34.	xv. 5.
	SUNSET. II. CHRIST appears to ten Apostles and others after supper; while Cleophas was conversing with them. They are affrighted . He shews them his hands and feet , pierced.			xxiv. 35—40.	xx. 19.
	He eats and drinks with them.			— 41.
				Acts.
				x. 41.
	EIGHTH DAY.
	III. CHRIST appears to Thomas , and all the rest, shews him his hands and his side		xvi. 14.		— 24. 1 Cor.
	Thomas's confession of faith				— 27. xv. 5. — 28.
	TWENTY-SECOND DAY.
	IV. CHRIST appears in Galilee , at the appointed mountain, to all the Apostles , and to 500 brethren at once.	xxviii. 16.			— 6.
	The spectators worshipped, but some doubted.	—	17.

A. D.	TWENTY-NINTH DAY.	Matt.	Mark.	Luke.	John	Paul.
31.						1 Cor. xv.
	v. CHRIST appears at the sea of Tiberias , or } Galilee , to James and six more, fishing..... }				xxi. 1.	— 7.
	THIRTY-SIXTH DAY.
	vi. CHRIST appears at Jerusalem , on their } return, to all the Apostles }	1 Cor.
	Commissions them to publish the Gospel to } all the world..... }	xv. 7.	xxviii. 18.	xvi. 15.
			— 19, 20.	— 18.
	FORTIETH DAY.
	vii. CHRIST meets his Apostles again, at Jeru- } salem . Renews the promise of the HOLY } SPIRIT..... }	Acts.
	He leads them forth to Bethany	i. 4.			xxiv. 49.
	viii. His ascension into Heaven.....	— 9.		— 19.	— 50.
	Two angels foretel his second appearance in } glory , at the regeneration }	— 10.			— 51.
	— 11.
	CHRIST'S SUCCEEDING APPEARANCES.
34. I.	To Stephen , the martyr, at Jerusalem	vii. 56.
35. II.	To Saul , on the way to Damascus	ix. 3.			1 Cor.
		xxii. 7.			xv. 7.
35. III.	To Ananias , at Damascus	xxvi. 14.
38. IV.	To Saul , or Paul , at Jerusalem	ix. 10.
54. V.	To him, at Corinth	— 18.			2 Cor.
66. VI.	To him, at Jerusalem again.....	xviii. 9.			xii. 7.
62. VII.	To him, on his voyage to Rome	xxiii. 11.
97. VIII.	To John , in the Isle of Patmos	xxvii. 23.				Rev. i. 10.

“ If CHRIST be not risen from the dead, your faith is vain ;—
 But now is CHRIST risen from the dead ;—
 [Therefore, your faith is not vain * :] 1 Cor. xv. 17—58.
 Nor your labour in vain in THE LORD.”

The evidences of this main pillar of Christian faith, hope, and charity—The bodily resurrection of OUR LORD JESUS CHRIST, as being “ the first fruits,” the earnest and the pledge of our own future resurrection likewise ; and the grand incentive to “ labour in THE LORD,” with “ labour of love,”—have not been fully illustrated, even by the best Harmonists hitherto,

* This is the Apostle’s inference from his detail of the chosen witnesses, to whom OUR LORD shewed himself alive, bodily, after his passion and resurrection, by many infallible proofs. He only states the premises, leaving the reader to draw the first conclusion ; which is drawn according to a mode of hypothetic syllogism, usually reckoned fallacious, namely, from the removal of the antecedent to the removal of the consequent ; the legitimate mode, on the contrary, proceeding from the position of the antecedent to the position of the consequent. But where the parts are essentially connected, so that they must both stand, or both fall together, as in this instance, the two modes are equally valid. We owe this judicious correction of the received rules of syllogisms, to that mighty master of logic, or the art of reasoning, Paul, trained in the schools of Alexandria, Greece, and Rome, and illuminated with THE HOLY SPIRIT, by the ORACLE, or REASON in the original. The conclusion with which the Apostle finishes the argument, expressly, follows immediately from the first, understood.

on account of the difficulties, either real or adventitious, that occur in the concise accounts of the Evangelists.

1. The first and chief difficulty has arisen from the confined plans, and *studied brevity of the Evangelists; each pursuing his own plan, with little apparent attention, and no express reference to the rest; which has produced some obscurity in their separate accounts, and some ambiguity, when compared with each other.

Matthew's report may be considered as the ground-work of the whole. His leading object seems to have been to counteract the foul and malignant calumny propagated by the chief priests and rulers of the Jews, and current in Palestine when he wrote his Gospel; namely, that the disciples came by night, and stole the body of JESUS away, while the guards were asleep. A calumny, indeed, which carried its own refutation along with it; for what credit could be due to witnesses who attested a fact which they were incompetent to judge of, by their own confession, while they were asleep!—To refute this, in every particular, the Evangelist states, 1. that the body was not stolen away by the disciples, but raised by the power of God. 2. That this was effected, not by night, but in the morning; and 3. that the guards were not asleep, but terrified, and in a trance, as if dead, by the tremendous apparition of an angel arrayed in terrors, descending from heaven with an earthquake, rolling away the great stone, and sitting upon it close beside them; in which state the two women who went first to the sepulchre, actually beheld them.

Luke took up the narrative on the day of the resurrection, where Matthew ends, and without any express reference to his party, introduces another party, who came later to the sepulchre, in order to finish the embalmmnt; and he notices the appearance of two angels to these women. He then proceeds to relate the succeeding appearances of that eventful day, which Matthew had omitted, as inconsistent with his confined plan. He relates the incredulity of the disciples in general, to the testimony of the women, and shews the grounds of it, their distrust of the bodily resurrection of CHRIST, which Matthew had only hinted.

Mark coming after both, endeavoured to supply chasms in their concise accounts. With this view he adds a third woman, and a second angel to Matthew's account; and he supplies the important circumstances, of the arrival of the first party at the tomb after sun rise; of OUR LORD'S resurrection early; of his first appearance to Mary Magdalene; and of his appearance under another form, to the two disciples going to Emmaus; all omitted by Matthew and Luke.

* Brevis esse laboro, obscurus fio.— Hor.

John closed the narrative by supplying some important chasms in the rest. He states Mary Magdalene's hasty report to himself and Peter, which led to his own conviction of our Lord's resurrection, upon prophetic grounds; he states the particulars of the first appearance to Mary Magdalene, slightly noticed by Mark; and the chief ground of the distrust of the disciples, because our Lord appeared to them after the doors had been shut; and the incredulity of Thomas in particular; important circumstances unnoticed by Luke.

2. The second difficulty, and the principal rock indeed upon which the ablest harmonists and commentators have hitherto split, is, whether the angel of Matthew and the angel of Mark were the same or different. That they were the same is generally* supposed, from the similitude that runs through their speeches to the women; but they were really two different angels, noticed by Luke and John.

3. The third difficulty has arisen from the peculiar technical and elliptical phraseology of the Evangelists; such as, 1. the different phrases by which they all express the time of day break on the morning of the resurrection, at the outseting of the women to go to the sepulchre; 2. the different acts of going and coming, confounded in the English Bible, but critically distinguished by the aorist ἦλθον, and the present tense ερχομαι, of the same verb. (See both explained, Vol. I. p. 16—18. 3. The omission of the act of coming to the sepulchre, though understood by Matthew and Luke; and the omission of the act of going from the city by Mark and John, though equally understood †.

* Bishop Watson is an honourable exception: "From the first there might have been two angels, one on the outside, rolling away the stone, and the other within." Apology for the Bible, p. 101.

† These ellipses may be supplied, and the whole passages more closely rendered, thus:

1. Ὁψε ἐε σαββατων. τη επιφωσκουση εις μιαν σαββατων, [εκ της πολεως]

4. The fourth difficulty is local, and has arisen from want of sufficient attention to the particular structure of the holy sepulchre, consisting of two parts, the porch, or antichamber, which is a room about nine feet square, capable of holding about a dozen persons, from which a narrow passage, not exceeding three feet in height and two in breadth at present*, leads into the inner vault, or tomb, which is eight feet long and seven wide at present. They were both originally larger in their dimensions before they were cased, as well as floored, with white marble, by the empress Helena, mother of Constantine the Great, when she built the late magnificent church of the holy sepulchre, and hewed out the sepulchre itself into the smaller chapel, which now stands above ground. See Vol. I. p. 433—436, where both are described; and see also the plans there given of the latter, and by Townson in his Harmony, p. 80. Matthew critically distinguishes ταφος, “the tomb,” from μνημειον, “the sepulchre,” in general. The other Evangelists use μνημα and μνημειον indiscriminately, to denote both.

After these preliminary remarks, let us proceed to the detail of the circumstances of

THE RESURRECTION.

On Sunday, the first day of the week, about day break, there ηλθε Μαρια ἡ Μαγδαληνη και ἡ αλλη Μαρια θεωρησαι τον ταφον [και ερχονται εις το μνημειον.]

“Late after the sabbath, at the dawning, on the first day of the week, went Mary Magdalene, and the other Mary, [from the city,] to view the tomb; [and they come to the sepulchre.] Matthew.

2. Τη δε μια των σαββατων, ορθρου βαθεος, ηλθον [εκ της πολεως, και ερχονται] επι το μνημα.

“On the first day of the week, while the rising [sun] was deep, they went [from the city, and come] to the sepulchre.” Luke.

3. Και λιαν πρωι της μιας σαββατων [εκ της πολεως ελθουσαι] ερχονται επι το μνημειον ανατειλαντος του ηλιου.

“And very early on the first day of the week, [going from the city,] they come to the sepulchre, after sun-rise.” Mark.

4. Τη δε μια των σαββατων, Μαρια ἡ Μαγδαληνη ερχεται ([ελθουσα εκ της πολεως] πρωι, σκοτίας ετι ουσης) εις το μνημειον.

“On the first day of the week, Mary Magdalene, ([going from the city] early, while it was still dusk,) cometh to the sepulchre.” John.

* Originally the passage was three feet wide, but a foot has been taken off by the projection of the marble tomb and railing, at the right side where the body lay, which occupies more than half the vault, and now leaves room for only three or four persons to kneel thereat.

was* a great earthquake at the sepulchre, and two angels of THE LORD descended from heaven, of whom one rolled away the great stone from the door of the tomb, and sat upon it, in the porch at the left or south side, according to tradition, while the other entered the tomb, and ministered to the resurrection; (and, we may presume, folded the linen swathes in which the body had been wrapt, and the napkin about his head, seen afterwards by Peter and John.) And CHRIST arose bodily. At the tremendous apparition of the outside angel, continuing close beside them, whose visage was like lightning, and his raiment white as snow, the guards were convulsed with fear, and became as dead, or fell into a trance, Matt. xxviii. 2—4; John xx. 6, 7.

About day break also, Mary Magdalene, and the other Mary, the wife of Alpheus, or Cleophas, the mother of James the Less, and Joses, went from the southern quarter of the city, and were joined by Salome, the wife † of Zebedee, and mother of James and John, who lived in their neighbourhood, in order to view the tomb, before the larger assembly of the Galilean women came, bringing also their proportion of aromatic spices for embalming, which they had purchased after the sabbath was thoroughly passed, that morning. They did not, therefore, come to the sepulchre till after sun-rise, Matt. xxviii. 1; Mark xvi. 1, 2.

While they were going, they said to each other, Who shall roll away for us the stone from the door of the sepulchre? for it was very great †, but when they came near the sepulchre, and looked up from the ascent of the hill, they observed that the stone was rolled away already; for the entrance fronted the east, and the rising sun was probably shining into it, Mark xvi. 3, 4.

* The second verse is parenthetical, and should be rendered "And lo, there had been a great earthquake," &c. prior to the arrival of the women, as in John xviii. 24.

† Archdeacon Churton remarks, that the designation of Salome, as "the mother of Zebedee's children," Matt. xxvii. 56, does not necessarily imply that Zebedee was dead.

" ————Where is Œdipus?

Here, and this is the mother of his children."

(Γυνή δέ, μητήρ, ἡδὲ, τῶν κεινῶν τέκνων.)

Œdipus Tyrannus, ver. 947.

‡ This stone is about two yards and a quarter long, a yard broad, and a yard thick. See Vol. I. p. 435. The question of the women is equivalent to a wish, O that some one would roll away the stone for us! as being beyond their strength to remove. (See Psalm xiv. 7.) This proves, further, that they came without any attendants, and thereby distinguishes them from the other party.

Alarmed at this, Mary Magdalene, leaving her companions there, ran back, and came to Peter and John, the most attached of the disciples to CHRIST, and said unto them, They have taken away THE LORD out of the sepulchre, and we know not where they have laid him! John xx. 1, 2. Here John, though he takes no notice of the rest of the party, tacitly alludes thereto; Mary Magdalene delivering their surmise as well as her own: We know not, &c. They hastily concluded, perhaps, from seeing the door open, that Joseph of Arimathea and his attendants had removed the body from the temporary sepulchre to some other.

Mark, in like manner, though he takes no notice of this incident, yet, by his judicious addition of Salome to the party, leaves two women behind, after Mary Magdalene had departed; thus supplying an important chasm in Matthew's account, if compared with John's. All shewing an intimate knowledge of the subject, even in their omissions.

The two women left behind, now proceeded by themselves to the sepulchre, to see what was the matter. And when they came to the porch, they beheld the angel sitting on the stone, and the guards lying in a trance, and they were affrighted. But the angel encouraged them, answering to their fears, and said, Be not ye affrighted, like these guards, for I know that as friends ye seek JESUS who was crucified. He is not here, for he is risen, as he foretold. Come hither, see the place where THE LORD lay. And then, Go quickly, and tell his disciples that he is risen from the dead. And lo, he goeth before you into Galilee. Lo, I have told you, Matt. xxviii. 5—7.

Accepting his gracious invitation, the women followed him, and entered into the tomb; there they saw another angel, in the form of a youth, clad in a white robe, sitting on the right side, where the body had been laid. And they were excessively amazed. But he also encouraged them, and said, Be not excessively amazed; Ye seek JESUS OF NAZARETH, who was crucified; He is risen, he is not here; see the place where they laid him. But withdraw, tell his disciples, especially Peter, that He goeth before you into Galilee; there shall ye see Him, as he foretold to you *, (Matt. xxvii. 32,) Mark xvi. 5—7.

* The distinctness of Matthew's and Mark's angels, which have been hitherto generally confounded together, may appear from the following considerations:

1. The women found Matthew's angel outside, in the porch, with a shining visage; but Mark's, inside in the tomb, under a milder form.

And the women, going out of the sepulchre, ran quickly, and fled from it, with fear and great joy, to tell his disciples; but during their flight, they were so possessed with trembling and ecstasy, that *they told nothing to any of them at first, whom they met, Matt. xxviii. 8, Mark xvi. 8.

The departure of the women was followed by that of the guards, recovering from their trance, and no longer seeing the tremendous apparition in the porch, which had rivetted them to the spot. Some of them went into the city, and related to the chief priests all that had happened. And when they had assembled the elders, they took counsel, and gave money sufficient to

2. Notwithstanding the general likeness of their speeches to the women, on which their sameness has been grounded, but which naturally resulted from the occasion, they are clearly discriminated from each other. 1. The former said, He is not here, he is risen; the other inverts the sentence, He is risen, he is not here; probably to prevent their mistaking him for CHRIST. 2. In addition to the first angel's encouraging message to the disciples, to meet CHRIST in Galilee; the second names Peter in particular, for his encouragement, who wanted it most, after denying his LORD; and further declares, that this meeting was according to CHRIST'S own appointment before he suffered.

3. The impression made by the two angels on the women, was different. At seeing the former, εφοβηθησαν, "they were affrighted," or startled; at seeing the latter, they were overpowered: εξεθαμβηθησαν, "they were excessively amazed," or almost scared out of their wits.

4. The mingled emotions produced by the repetition of such stupendous apparitions, accompanied with encouraging speeches of glad tidings, are admirably and appropriately described by the two Evangelists, uniting their narratives together, at their egress from the sepulchre, εξελθουσαι απο του μνημειου, (which may also, perhaps, have contributed to the notion of the angels' sameness,) Matthew describing the mental, Mark the corporeal effects, which are usually associated on such occasions of unexpected and surprising events; and are so represented in the profane, as well as sacred classics:

1. Isaiah, describing the sensations of the Jews, on their final restoration, at the rising of THE SUN OF RIGHTEOUSNESS, to dispel their former gloom, says,

Then shalt thou fear,
And overflow with joy! Isa. lx. 5.

2. Pindar also, thus finely describes the attitude of Amphitryon on his infant son, Hercules' exploit of strangling the two serpents that attacked him in his cradle:

Εστα δε θαμβει δυσφορῳ,
Τερπνῳ τε μιχθεις.

"He stood, oppressed,
With mingled terror and delight," Nem. i. 85.

"Terror" at the child's danger, and "delight" at his victory, altogether so overpowered him, that he stood motionless. See West's translation of the entire passage, p. 289.

* This silence of the women is judiciously added by Mark, to account, perhaps, for their omitting to deliver the angel's message to Peter in particular, whom they probably met on the way back, running with John to the sepulchre, on Mary Magdalene's hasty report.

bribe the soldiers, saying, Tell ye, that the Disciples came by night, and stole him away while we were asleep. And if the matter come to the governor's hearing, we will persuade him, and bear you harmless. So they took the money, and did as they were instructed. And this report was circulated among the Jews, until this day, or the time Matthew wrote his Gospel, Matt. xxviii. 11—15.

After the departure of the guards, and probably by a different way*, through the valley gate, and the dolorous way, to the prætorium, came Peter and John, running from their houses, in the southern quarter, towards the sepulchre, in consequence of Mary Magdalene's hasty report; and probably they met, and passed by, in their hurry, the two women flying from the sepulchre in their transport, without speaking to each other. At first they ran both together, but the eagerness and activity of John, outrunning Peter, he came first to the sepulchre. Then stooping down, in the porch, and looking into the tomb, through the door, he saw the linen swathes lying, without the body; but did not go in. Peter arrived quickly after, and with more curiosity, entered into the tomb, and saw the linen swathes lying in one place; and the napkin that had been wrapped about his head, folded carefully, and laid by itself in another place. Then John also went into the tomb, and when he saw the orderly disposition of the funeral habiliments, which was utterly inconsistent with Mary Magdalene's report, for why should they be left behind? he was convinced that it was false; and believed that JESUS was not taken away, but risen from the dead, according to the Scriptures; which the disciples in general, and he among the rest, had not hitherto known or understood. Then they both went home again, without seeing the angels; who would not shew themselves where it was not necessary, John xx. 3—10.

When they were gone, Mary Magdalene came back again to the sepulchre more slowly; not able to keep pace with Peter and John. Whether she met them or not, returning, does not appear. At all events, she went thither to vent her sorrows at the tomb, in solitude. And as she stood outside, in the porch, weeping, she stooped, and looked with fond regret into the tomb; and there she beheld the two angels, in white, sitting, one at the head, and the other at the feet, where the body of JESUS had lain: for she had seen, and knew the place. And they said unto her, Woman, why weepest thou? Whom seekest thou? She not knowing them, saith, Because they have taken away MY LORD, and I know not where they have laid him. And when she had so said, she turned backward to go away, not wishing to have strangers witness her grief, and beheld JESUS standing by; He then repeated the same question, Woman, why weepest thou? But she likewise knew not JESUS, and supposing him to be the gardener, saith unto him, Sir, if thou hast carried him away, tell me where thou hast laid him, and I will remove him. JESUS then said unto her, in his usual tone of voice, Mary! She turning toward him said, Rabboni, “my great Rabbi!*” and then threw herself down to embrace his feet. JESUS said unto her, Touch me not, or detain me not, at present; thou shalt see me again, for the time of my ascension to my Father is not yet. But go and tell my brethren, (as he now kindly denominates his disciples, in token of full reconciliation, after all their backslidings,) that it will soon take place; and that I am going to ascend to MY FATHER, and YOUR FATHER, and to MY GOD, and YOUR GOD. Thus distinguishing HIS FATHER and GOD from THEIR FATHER and GOD; as he had informed them in his last discourse with them, (John xiv. 28, xvi. 28,) xx. 11—17.

* The patrols of Roman soldiers, at the feast of the passover, would not have been extraordinary, even supposing the two Apostles had met them.

After shewing himself first to Mary Magdalene, the most attached and affectionate of the women, who then went to tell the disciples what passed, ver. 18, OUR LORD proceeded to shew himself next to her two companions, as they were going to tell the disciples, having recovered from their agitation of spirits; and he met them, and said, Hail. And coming up to him, they embraced his feet, and worshipped him, though still under the impression of fear. Then he said unto them, Be not affrighted; withdraw, tell my brethren to depart into Galilee; there shall they see me. Thus confirming himself the angel’s message, Matt. xxviii. 9, 10.

Luke now continues the narrative, and relates the proceedings of the second and larger party of “Galilean women,” of whom the chief was "Joanna," wife of Chuza, Herod's steward; whom, therefore, in the enumeration of the women, he names next after "Mary Magdalene," the head of the former party; then he names "the other Mary," the companion of Mary Magdalene; and after her, the rest of the women that accompanied Joanna, Luke xxiv. 10. His arrangement remarkably corresponds here to the two different parties, whom he indirectly noticed, on the evening of the crucifixion, Luke xxiii. 55, 56, as shewn in a foregoing note.

* Rabban, in Syriac, signifies “a great, or eminent Rabbi,” and with the affix of the first person, accommodated to the Jewish pronunciation, became Rabboni, Mark x. 51, or Rabbouni, as here, “My great Rabbi.”

The later arrival of Joanna's party at the sepulchre, though they set out about the same time with the former, may naturally be accounted for, by the delay incident to collecting a large party of women, in different quarters of the city, who were to compose the public procession, probably from Herod's palace*, in the northern quarter, which was at least twice as far from the holy sepulchre as the houses of Peter and John, in the southern quarter, and of procuring some assistants for rolling away the stone, embalming the body, &c. Luke xxiv. 1. We may, therefore, safely conclude, that they did not reach the sepulchre before the third hour, or nine in the morning.

When they arrived, they found the stone rolled away from the tomb, but they expressed no surprise thereat, concluding, probably, that it had been done by the earlier party, of whose intentions of going before them they might have been apprised, Luke xxiv. 2.

But when they entered into the tomb, they found not the body of the Lord Jesus, nor any of their friends there to explain the matter, and were much perplexed thereat. During their perplexity, lo, the two angels, who at first had held themselves invisible, now suddenly stood in human form beside them, in shining apparel. And when they were afraid, and bowed down their face to the earth, the angels said to them, Why seek ye THE LIVING One among the dead? thus gently reproving them †. He is not here, but is risen, according to his own predictions. Remember how he told you, while he was yet in Galilee, saying, THE SON OF MAN must needs be delivered

* Pilate's palace, according to Sandys, p. 152, was eight hundred paces from Mount Calvary; Herod's, which was further off, might be about a thousand paces, or nine hundred yards.

† Non tam mansuete, ut prius; sed objurgandi modo. Euthymius.

into the hands of sinners, and be crucified, and the third day rise again. And they remembered his sayings, (Matt. xvi. 21, xx. 18, 19,) Luke xxiv. 3—8.

Then withdrawing, in perfect composure, from the sepulchre, unlike the former party in this respect also, they related “all these things” to the eleven Apostles, and to all the rest of the disciples, Luke xxiv. 9.

This seems to have been the first general report of “Joanna’s” party to the Apostles and disciples, and prior in point of time to the second, by the two women, the other “Mary” and Salome; and to the third, by “Mary Magdalene” singly; each growing more full and circumstantial than the preceding; but notwithstanding this, the joint reports of the women stating “these things” appeared, even to the Apostles, as idle tales, and they disbelieved them*, Luke xxiv. 10, Mark xvi. 10, 11.

This incredulity, however, of the Apostles is not to be understood too rigidly, as if it included all, without exception; John we know believed, and Peter rather distrusted than disbelieved; for upon the report of Joanna’s party, as we may collect from Luke, Peter arose and ran back again to the sepulchre, hoping to see the angels at least, but he was disappointed; for stooping down to look into the tomb, he saw only the linen swathes lying as before. And he went home wondering what had happened to the body, Luke xxiv. 12. And then, probably, received the angel’s message by the two women, to lessen his wonder, and afterwards Mary Magdalene’s report. Luke now proceeds, according to his plan, to record the succeeding occurrences of the day.

About noon, we may suppose, two of the disciples, Cleophas or Alpheus, the husband of the other Mary, as generally supposed, and another disciple, whose name is not mentioned, set out for Emmaus, a village about threescore stadia, or seven miles from Jerusalem, westwards, by a very mountainous and rocky road †,

* The sagacity of Townson, one of the latest and best Harmonists of the resurrection, discovered a distinction between ταυτα παντα, of the 9th verse, and ταυτα singly, of the 10th. Luke, by the former, intimating “all the circumstances” related by Joanna’s party; by the latter, “the circumstances” related by the women in general. See his Harmony, p. 153—157. For the latter, citing John xxi. 24, Luke x. 21, as similar.

† See Sandys’ account, p. 135, and Lieutenant Hillier’s, of the Tigre, Journal of an Excursion from Acre to Jerusalem, in June 1800, who represents the road from the en-after they had heard Joanna's report, and Peter's, on his second return. Cleophas was, by affinity, a kinsman of CHRIST, and therefore deeply interested in his death and resurrection, which therefore naturally formed the subject of their discourse, Luke xxiv. 13, 14.

While they were conversing and debating together on all these late occurrences, slowly, by the way, JESUS himself, soon after they left the city, drew near, and overtook them, but he appeared to them under another form, and their eyes also were withholden from knowing him. Then he asked, What arguments are these which ye are debating with each other, as ye walk? and [why] are your countenances sad? Then Cleophas answered, Art thou only a stranger in Jerusalem, and knowest not what happened there, during these days? And he said unto them, Of what kind? They answered, Concerning Jesus of Nazareth, who [like Moses] was a Prophet, mighty in deed and in word, before GOD and all the people; and how, [notwithstanding] our chief priests and rulers delivered him up to capital punishment, and crucified him: But we hoped that it was He who was to redeem the Israel [of GOD.] No wonder then that our countenances are sad. And beside all these, this is the third day now passing since these things happened, and we have been moreover amazed by the report of some women of our company, who went early to the sepulchre, and not finding his body there, returned, saying also, that they had seen a vision of angels, who said that He was living. Whereupon, some men of our company went to the sepulchre, and found as the women had said, [that his body was not there,] but himself they saw not, as they might have expected from the angels' report to the women. You will not wonder then at our perplexity and debates about what credit is due to the women's testimony. For that this was the chief subject of debate between these disciples, we may infer from the reception it met from the Apostles themselves, Luke xxiv. 15—24.

Then JESUS blamed them for their disbelief. O ye inconsiderate and slow hearted to believe in all the sayings of the Prophets on this subject! Ought not THE CHRIST to have suffered thus, and then to enter into his glory? After this gentle rebuke, in order to inform their ignorance, beginning from Moses and all the succeeding Prophets, to whom they had tacitly referred in their character of himself, as “mighty in deed and in word,” in miracles and doctrine, he thoroughly expounded to them, in all the Scripture prophecies, the circumstances concerning himself, Luke xxiv. 25—27.

trance of the mountains to Jerusalem as bad beyond description, and rocky, and so narrow, that only one horse could pass at a time—"a most dreadful road" in the neighbourhood of the city.

During this most interesting conversation, while their heart was burning within them, glowing with rapture and delight, as he spake unto them by the way, and as he thoroughly opened to them the Scripture prophecies, (so they afterwards declared, wondering at their own stupidity in not knowing Him sooner, who spake as never man spake,) they drew nigh to Emmaus, about the third hour after noon, or the first evening, when the sun had declined. Compare Luke ix. 12, with Mark vi. 35, Matt. xiv. 15. And he made a shew of going further, but they pressed him to stay with them, and take some refreshment, on account of the lateness of the day; so he consented. And as they reclined at table, he resumed his own appearance and manner, at the institution of the Lord's Supper, for he took the bread and blessed, and brake, and distributed to them. This significant action thoroughly opened their eyes, and they knew him, but he became invisible to them.

And they arose, the same hour, and returned towards Jerusalem, to communicate the joyful intelligence to the Apostles and Disciples, Luke xxiv. 28—33.

JESUS kindly shewed himself to Peter, singly, the first of all his Apostles, to assure him of perfect reconciliation and restoration to favour, by this mark of regard and distinction; and considerately, also, after Peter had been properly prepared for an interview, which he must have dreaded as much as he desired, by the reports of the women, growing successively stronger, and perhaps, by conversation with his friend John, to whom CHRIST'S appearance was unnecessary. The appearance only, without any particulars, is noticed by Luke, xxiv. 34, and by Paul, 1 Cor. xv. 5.

It is remarkable, that the first credence of the resurrection, given by the Apostles and the rest of the disciples, was to Peter's testimony: declaring to Cleophas and his companion on their return, “THE LORD is really risen, and hath appeared unto Simon!” They thought he had risen spiritually indeed, but they disbelieved his bodily resurrection, Luke xxiii. 33, 34, Mark xvi. 13.

Cleophas did not return till after supper, to the assembled company of the Apostles and Disciples, and while he and his companion were relating to them the transactions on the way, and at Emmaus, where THE LORD had discovered himself; during the conversation, JESUS himself stood suddenly in the midst of them, although the doors had been shut for fear of the Jews, and said unto them, Peace be unto you! his usual mode of salutation. But they were terrified and affrighted, supposing that they saw a spirit, and not his bodily presence; for they could not conceive how he entered *, Luke xxiv. 35—37, John xx. 19.

Then he kindly condescended to remove their prejudices; and said to them, Why are ye alarmed, and why do doubts arise in your hearts? See my hands and my feet, that it is I myself; handle me and see †, for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye behold me have. And when he had so said, he shewed them his hands and his feet, and his side, in which were the marks of the nails, and of the spear, Luke xxiv. 38—40, John xx. 20.

Still further to remove their doubts, while they distrusted for joy ‡, and wondered, he said unto them, Have ye any eatable

* The doors might have opened and shut again of their own accord, as on other occasions of celestial apparitions, Acts v. 19, xii. 10, xvi. 26, &c. But it is not for puny and presumptuous mortals to limit OMNIPOTENCE, Psalm lxxviii. 41.

† It appears from the stupendous occurrences of this day, that OUR LORD and his holy angels can assume to themselves bodily organs, and vary their forms at pleasure; that they can perform animal functions, eat and drink, &c. But all these were nothing more than occur in THE OLD TESTAMENT. THE LORD and his two angels appeared in human form to Abraham, and ate and drank with him, and with Lot, Gen. xviii. 1—8, xix. 1—3. The incredulity, therefore, of the disciples, shewed ignorance or disbelief of their own Scriptures, in which such instances were familiar. How Peter, in particular, who had witnessed the raising of Lazarus, and others, from the dead, could doubt what became of his body at the tomb, is really surprising, especially after CHRIST'S declaration that he had authority from THE FATHER, to lay down his life, and to resume it again, of his own accord. The disciples certainly were exceedingly dull of apprehension, all except John, who shewed another instance of his sagacity, John xxi. 7.

‡ The disciples distrusting for joy, is an admirable trait of human nature. Nothing is more common than to doubt an intelligence that we most earnestly desire and long for. When Jacob was told that his darling son Joseph was not only "alive," but "governor over all the land of Egypt," or a mighty prince, "his heart fainted, for he believed it not." And it was not until he was told of his conversation with his brethren, and that he actually "saw the waggons which Joseph had sent to carry him, that "the spirit of here? and they gave him a piece of broiled fish, and of a honey comb, the remains of their supper; which ascertains the time of this appearance. And he took, and ate before them; and probably, on this occasion also, he drank before them, (Acts x. 41,) to give them the fullest information of their senses*. Then were the disciples rejoiced, when they were satisfied that they saw THE LORD himself, Luke xxiv. 41—43, John xx. 20.

And now our gracious LORD proceeded to convince their reason also; resuming the conversation which he had with the two disciples going to Emmaus, as a further proof of his identity; and he addressed it to them in common with the disciples.

“These are the sayings which I spake unto you, while I was still with you [in the flesh,] namely, that all things written concerning Me in the law of Moses and the Prophets, and the Psalms, [or in the OLD TESTAMENT, of which these were the three divisions,] must needs be fulfilled, (Luke xxii. 37, Matt. xxvi. 53, 54.) Then he thoroughly opened their mind also, [as he did before of the two disciples, ver. 32,] to understand the Scripture prophecies †. And He said unto them, Thus it is Jacob their father revived;” and with transport and delight: “And Israel said, it is proof enough: Joseph my son is still alive; I will go and see him before I die;” anxious to set off instantly, lest death should arrest him! Gen. xlv. 26—28. There is no history, indeed, equal to the BIBLE, for portraying, in their native colours, and just dimensions, the various passions and emotions of the human heart, adapted to all the vicissitudes of human life. It furnishes the most philosophical history of “man, the proper study of mankind.” Pope.

* The Apostles had the fullest evidence of all their senses for the personal appearance of CHRIST among them. And the complete conviction thereof, is thus expressed by the beloved disciple, 1 John i. 1—4, more closely rendered.

“What occurred from the beginning, concerning the ORACLE OF LIFE, what we have seen with our eyes, what we beheld, and our hands have handled; — what we have seen and heard, declare we unto you, that ye may participate with us: — and these write we unto you, that your joy may be completed.”

Hence it appears, that the Apostles actually handled the body of CHRIST: — “they saw and handled,” — they touched, and were convinced.

† The Scripture prophecies thoroughly expounded, or thoroughly interpreted by OUR LORD, on this occasion, probably related, 1. to his passion, 2. to his resurrection, 3. on the third day after his death.

I. The principal prophecies, relating to his passion, including his death and burial, in the LAW, or PENTATEUCH, were,

1. The bruising of the heel of the blessed Seed of the woman, by the old Serpent, Gen. iii. 15, fulfilled on the cross.

2. The intended sacrifice of Isaac, that type of CHRIST, Gen. xxii. 2. And in the same place, Calvary, Gen. xxii. 14.

written, and thus it behoved CHRIST to suffer, and to rise again from the dead the third day. And also, that repentance and remission of sins should be preached unto all the Gentiles, beginning from Jerusalem, with the Jews. And ye are witnesses of these things—the chosen witnesses of my resurrection to the world, Luke xxiv. 44—48, 1 Cor. xv. 3, 4, Acts x. 41.

Then said JESUS to them again, Peace be with you! And now, by the authority vested in him, he also commissioned them to proclaim, or publish THE GOSPEL. As THE FATHER sent me forth, or delegated me as his REPRESENTATIVE, even so send I you, or depute you as my heralds, or ambassadors. And as at the creation, “He had breathed into the nostrils of the first

3. The suspension of the Christian sacrifice, during the Jewish economy; intimated by the ram offered up in the stead of Isaac, Gen. xxii. 13.

4. The institution of the rite of the passover, typical of CHRIST our passover, Exod. xii. 14—17.

5. The brazen serpent in the wilderness, Numb. xxi. 6—9; applied, John iii. 14.

IN THE PROPHETS.

1. Isaiah's prediction of CHRIST's passion, death, and burial, chap. liii. throughout, applied, John xii. 38, Acts viii. 30—35.

2. Daniel's prediction of CHRIST's cutting off, by a violent death, Dan. ix. 26.

3. Zechariah's prediction, that he should be pierced with the spear on the cross, Zech. xii. 10. Applied, John xix. 37, Rev. i. 7.

IN THE PSALMS.

1. The description of CHRIST's rejection and sufferings, by the Jews, Pilate, and Herod, Psalm ii. 1—3. Applied, Acts iv. 25—28.

2. The circumstances of his crucifixion, Psalm xxii. 1—18. Applied by OUR LORD himself on the cross.

3. His death and interment, Psalm xvi. 10. Applied, Acts ii. 26, xiii. 35.

II. His resurrection on the third day.

IN THE LAW.

1. Isaac's figurative restoration to life, was on the third day, after his sacrifice was appointed, Gen. xxii. 2—4. Applied, Heb. xi. 17—19.

2. The law requiring the voluntary offerings to be eaten before the third day; on the third day they were to be burnt or destroyed, Levit. vii. 15—18.

IN THE PROPHETS.

1. Jonah's entombment in the great fish's belly for three days, Jonah i. 17. Applied by OUR LORD to himself, Matt. xii. 40, xvi. 4, compare John ii. 19.

IN THE PSALMS.

1. His resurrection without seeing corruption, and therefore, not later than the third day, Psalm xvi. 10, as collected from the state of Lazarus, on the fourth day, John xi. 39.

Hence in apoplexies, persons are not allowed to be buried till seventy-two hours be past, lest they should revive within that time; of which there have been instances. It was within forty hours from OUR LORD's death, on Friday, at the first afternoon, till his resurrection, before sun rise, on Sunday; not two entire days. See Mede's excellent Discourse, 13th, p. 49.

man the breath, or spirit of life," Gen. ii. 7, (see Vol. II. p. 2, &c.) so now, at the new creation, as it were, or regeneration of his disciples, he made them "new men" in disposition, or in "the spirit of their mind," for He breathed on them, (ενεφυσησε), and said, Receive ye a holy spirit! This was the prelude of that fuller baptism of THE HOLY SPIRIT, which was repeatedly promised them before, from the days of John's ministry, Matt. iii. 11, Luke xii. 12, xxi. 15, John vii. 38, 39, xiv. 26, xv. 26, and again, Acts i. 5. The Holy Spirit now conferred on them, as distinguished from that fuller effusion on the day of Pentecost, seems to correspond to "the Spirit of THE LORD," which animated the worthies of the OLD TESTAMENT, Gideon, Jephtha, Samson, Saul, David, &c.*, namely, an uncommon and præternatural spirit of boldness or fortitude, and fervent zeal for THE LORD, and all the other qualifications of a moral nature, necessary for the discharge of their arduous and perilous mission, to enable them "to speak the word with boldness," regardless of the consequences to themselves, John xx. 21, 22.

Our Lord also, on this occasion, formally confirmed the privilege of binding and loosing, which he had promised before, Matt. xvi. 19, xviii. 18, by granting them authority to remit sins to the penitent, and to retain sins to the impenitent, John xx. 23.

Such were the amazing and important occurrences that occupied the whole of this eventful day of the resurrection, here, we trust, arranged in a simple, natural, and consistent order of time and place; sufficient, by the harmonious symmetry of the outline with the detail, even in the minutest parts, to solve all those "variations," or "inconsistencies," hitherto complained of, which surely are neither "trifling" nor "unimportant†" to believers, and have actually proved a "stumbling block" to sceptics, and "foolishness" or absurdity to infidels; all attributing to the inspired Evangelists, the faults of their own error, or unskilfulness, or precipitation, or presumption.

THE SUNDAY FOLLOWING.

At the foregoing manifestation on Easter evening, Thomas, one of the Apostles, happened to be absent. When the rest

* See Vol. II. pages, 281, 287, 293, 310, 315, &c.

† See Gilpin, Notes on Matt. xxviii. 1, John xx. 11, &c. stating them as "trifling," &c.

told him that they had seen THE LORD, he remained incredulous, and said, "Except I see in his hands the print of the nails, and put my finger into the print of the nails, and put my hand into his side, I shall not believe," John xx. 24, 25.

Eight days after, the disciples were assembled again, and Thomas with them. Then cometh JESUS, the door having been shut, and stood in the midst, and said, Peace be unto you! Then said he to Thomas, repeating his own expressions, Reach hither thy finger, and see, [or examine,] my hands, and reach [hither] thy hand, and put it into my side, and be not a disbeliever, but a believer," John xx. 26, 27.

Overpowered by this unmerited condescension, and thoroughly convinced by CHRIST'S knowledge of the very words he had spoken, that he must be the Divine SEARCHER OF HEARTS, from whom no secrets are hid, he instantly exclaimed, with the fullest confession of faith, *MY LORD, AND MY GOD !

* This is indeed the most signal and important confession of faith in CHRIST, to be found in the Gospels. It clearly and distinctly recognizes his proper Sovereignty and Divinity, as OUR immediate LORD or GOVERNOR, Psalm xxii. 28, and OUR future JUDGE, or MIGHTY GOD, the Arbiter of the destinies of Mankind, Psalm l. 1—4, as OUR LORD himself asserted, John v. 22, Matt. xxv. 31.

It is also the most satisfactory and convincing, for it was extorted from "a disbeliever," or obstinate unbeliever, after he had, for an entire week, resisted the most authentic and credible human testimony of a "cloud of witnesses" of the resurrection, and was only borne down irresistibly, by "many infallible proofs," addressed both to his senses and to his understanding.

Any idle argument, therefore, designed to evade, or explain away its evidence, is criminal and unpardonable. It ranks, perhaps, with that blasphemy against THE HOLY SPIRIT, which shall not be forgiven, neither in this world nor in the next; and most justly, because it sets at defiance all testimony, human and divine, by a reprobate or undiscerning mind, incapable of conviction.

Such appears to be that early heretical gloss of Theodore Mopsuesta, which was condemned in the fifth general council of Constantinople, held under Justinian, A.D. 553, but has been revived, unfortunately, in modern times, by the Socinians and Unitarians; idly supposing that the words of Thomas contained two distinct exclamations, ὁ Κύριός μου, καὶ, ὁ Θεός μου, "O MY LORD, and O MY GOD!" either expressive of thanks to GOD for this miraculous resurrection of CHRIST, or else that they were mere expressions of astonishment or surprise, unmeaning and irreverent ejaculations to heaven; such as are too frequent in the modern languages of our own times.

"It is much to be lamented, (as Middleton justly observes,) that the [Socinian] bias of Wetstein's mind inclined him to countenance such "absurdity," adopting the former (Theodore's exposition), in his note on the place." But it is more extraordinary, that Middleton himself, that judicious critic in general, should partially adopt it, and suppose that "these words were spoken by way of exclamation; the nominative case, with the article prefixed, being put for the vocative, (ὁ Θεός μου, for Ἐε μου,) rather than by way of assertion of Christ's divinity, with the ellipsis συ εἶ, understood; of such ellipsis,"

His earnestness and emotion, unequivocally supplying the ellipsis, "I believe that thou art MY LORD AND MY GOD!" John xx. 28.

says he, "I have not noticed any example." And yet, he rather inconsistently states afterwards, "Our Saviour's reply makes it absolutely certain, that the words of Thomas, though in the form of an exclamation, amount to a confession of faith, and were equivalent to a direct assertion of our Saviour's Divinity. CHRIST commends Thomas's acknowledgment, while he condemns the tardiness with which it is made." Middleton's Doctrine, p. 381, 382.

It may be shewn, however, 1. that the words are not in the form of an exclamation; 2. that of such an ellipsis, there are examples to be found:

1. The cases he has adduced from Psalm v. 3, and from Psalm xxxv. 3, seem to be irrelevant, for the Septuagint renderings of the former, ὁ βασιλευς μου και ὁ κυριος μου, and of the latter, ὁ Θεος μου και ὁ κυριος μου, are not necessarily vocative cases; they may fairly be understood as nominatives, supplying an easy ellipsis, [Συ, ὁ ων] ὁ βασιλευς μου, &c. [Thou, who art] my king, &c. And though in some cases the Septuagint Version unquestionably uses such phrases vocatively, as in OUR LORD'S exclamation on the cross, My God! MY GOD! which it renders Ο Θεος μου, ὁ Θεος μου; yet for this, the Evangelist Matthew substituted the vocative, Θεε μου, Θεε μου, xxvii. 46. And Wetstein has ably shewn (in the very note in question), that though the Attic writers frequently used the nominative for the vocative case, yet they never confounded ὁ and ὦ, their respective articles; as in the instances, ὦ φιλος for φιλε, Odys. III. 375; ὦ φιλταρ' Αιας, Sophocles, Ajax, 992, &c. A grammatical nicety, which ought not to have escaped Wakefield; grounding his mistranslation, as he says, upon the Attic usage. It is still more extraordinary that it is unnoticed in the Doctrine of the Greek Article.

2. Such an ellipsis as συ ει is frequently understood in the Gospels. Thus, in that remarkable thanksgiving of OUR LORD to his FATHER, Ναι, ὁ Πατηρ ὅτι [συ ει] οὕτως εγενετο ευδοκια εμπροσθεν σου, adduced by Matthew, xi. 26, and repeated by Luke, x. 21, it seems absolutely necessary to introduce it, in order to discriminate the nominative, ὁ Πατηρ, from the vocative, at the beginning, Πατερ.

Again, at the celebration of the passover, CHRIST, recommending humility by his own example to his disciples, says "Ye call me THE TEACHER, and THE LORD, [emphatically,] (ὁ διδασκαλος, και ὁ Κυριος,) and ye say well, for I am: if then I, THE LORD, and THE TEACHER (εγω, ὁ Κυριος, και ὁ διδασκαλος,) washed your feet, ye also ought to wash each others feet," John xiii. 13; where our Lord's acceptance of these exclusive titles, in εγω ειμι, "I am," demonstrates that συ ει, "thou art," must be understood, at least, if not expressed, by the disciples, [Thou art] "THE TEACHER," and "THE LORD." "These titles are not to be supposed to be given him at one and the same time, but distinctly and independently, as if our Saviour had said, One of you calls me ὁ διδασκαλος, another ὁ Κυριος," as judiciously remarked by Middleton himself, who vindicates, in this place, the propriety of the article, p. 369, and has well explained the title given by our Lord to Nicodemus, ὁ διδασκαλος του Ισραηλ, "The teacher of Israel;" as being "the appellation which the followers of Nicodemus gave him, by way of distinction; in conformity with the high and sounding titles which the Jews gave their doctors," p. 346.

The high importance of the subject, and the deserved celebrity of the Doctrine of the Greek Article, must apologize for the length and minuteness of this note. It is only the mistakes of Master Critics that this work can afford to notice, and even these with regret, merely to counteract any undue weight of their authority. To such eminent scholars as

The necessity of supplying this ellipsis is demonstrated by OUR LORD'S gentle rebuke: Thomas, because thou hast seen me, thou hast believed [that I am THY LORD AND THY GOD,] and then, we may presume, with an approving look, or kind glance, directed to the beloved disciple, John, the meaning of which he only could understand, he contrasted his quickness of belief at the tomb, with the slowness of the rest; including him chiefly in the general commendation, Blessed are they that did not see, yet did believe! which, in fact, was confined to John himself, John xx. 29. And this appropriation of the commendation seems to be confirmed by Mark's account of the preceding rebuke to Thomas in particular, which he represents as general likewise. "Afterwards he appeared to the eleven, at supper, and reproached them with their disbelief and hardness of heart, because they did not believe them that beheld him after he was risen;" even the Apostles that witnessed the resurrection, Mark xvi. 14. That this reproach was not uttered at the former meeting is evident from two circumstances, 1. The eleven were not all there, Thomas being absent; 2. CHRIST then kindly soothed their fears, and convinced their senses and their reason, without any reproach, which then they were unable to bear, dejected as they were at the time. Our blessed LORD then graciously imitating, to the Apostles, the mildness of his angels to the timorous women at the tomb; and at the present meeting, how gently did he reproach other disbelievers through Thomas.

And the Apostle Paul confirms this, by omitting the preceding manifestation, and ranking the present to "the twelve," next to the single manifestation to Peter. Mark reckons only "eleven" before the election of Matthias in the room of the traitor Judas; but Paul states the full number, because Matthias was present at the meeting, Acts i. 21—26. Thus do the Evangelists and Apostles, even in their omissions and dissonances, attest their intimate knowledge of the whole subject.

To the beloved disciple we are indebted for the detail of this

Michaelis, Dathe, Parkhurst, &c. Wetstein, Marsh, Lardner, Middleton, &c. "whom I have withstood to the face where they were blameable," as in duty bound, "I consign" my own mistakes, "in turn," for detection and for correction, ready to kiss the rod:

Hanc veniam petimusque, damusque vicissim.—HOK.

"Petimus," ut Critici; "damus," ut Scriptores hallucinantes.

manifestation, only slightly intimated by Mark, and obscurely by Paul. His invincible modesty, so conspicuous throughout his Gospel, in which he never expressly names himself, has suppressed the obvious allusion to himself, in the blessing pronounced by his adored LORD, on the rational believers of his resurrection, of which class he was the solitary instance among the aggregate of the disciples; even of the Apostles themselves, who ought to have known better things.

With this precious and most interesting anecdote John closes the detail of our Lord's manifestations at Jerusalem.

Next to these public manifestations we rank, with the Apostle Paul, (who derived his information from immediate revelation of CHRIST himself, 1 Cor. xv. 3; Gal. i. 12.) the most public of all, according to appointment, at

THE MOUNTAIN IN GALILEE.

What time elapsed from the last manifestation to this we are not told. But if we suppose, as is probable, 1. That the disciples returned to Galilee immediately after the last appearance; and 2. That this grand appearance took place, like the two preceding, on a Sunday, we cannot be much mistaken, in dating it three weeks, or the twenty-second day from Easter, inclusively; which will give full time for collecting his friends from various quarters of that district, in which he had spent the greater part of his ministry, and where he was best known.

The Evangelist comprizes this in the following short account.

“ And the eleven disciples departed into Galilee, unto the mountain where JESUS had appointed [to meet them.] And when they saw him they [in general] worshipped Him; but some distrusted,” [doubting his bodily presence,] Matt. xxviii. 16, 17.

This assembly was numerous, according to Paul; it consisted of more than five hundred brethren, or disciples, of whom the majority were still alive when he wrote his first Epistle to the Corinthians, about A. D. 57, or twenty-six years after. To all these surviving witnesses he appeals, with confidence, to vouch his own testimony.

THE SEA OF TIBERIAS, OR GALILEE.

This we conceive to be the scene of the ensuing manifestation to “James,” mentioned by Paul; as the head of the fishing party noticed by John in the last chapter, or appendix to his Gospel; consisting of James and his brother John, “the sons of Zebedee, Peter, Thomas, and Nathaniel, and two others of the disciples.” The proposal to fish was made by Peter, and agreed to by the rest; and we may naturally place it on the ensuing Sunday, or twenty-ninth day. The day after the sabbath was a likely day to want provisions, John xxi. 1, 2.

They fished during the night of Saturday, after Sunday began, but took nothing. When the morning dawn had commenced, and they were near the shore, JESUS stood there, and said, *Dear children, have ye any thing to eat? They answered No; then said he, Cast your net on the right side of the ship, and ye shall find. They did so, and now they were not able to draw up the net, for the multitude of fishes inclosed therein. Struck with the resemblance of this to OUR LORD'S former miracle, when he called them to his service, and promised to make them fishers of men, (Luke v. 3—11,) John sagaciously observed to Peter, It is THE LORD! Whereupon Peter, in his eagerness to meet him, put on his fisher's coat, that he might not appear naked or undressed, and threw himself into the sea, and swam to land, while the rest came after him in their boat, (πλοιαριω,) drawing the net to shore; from which they were distant two hundred cubits, or about a hundred yards, John xxi. 3—8.

As soon as they landed, they saw a charcoal fire, and a small fish, (οψαριον,) laid thereon to broil, and bread, provided miraculously, for their entertainment. Then said JESUS, as if this was apparently too small for the company, Bring hither now some of the small fishes that ye have taken. Simon then, with the rest, went up into the boat, and dragged the net to shore, full of an hundred and fifty-three great fishes †; and although there were so many, yet the net was not broken, John xxi. 9—11.

It has been observed by Oppian, in his Halieutics, or Poem on Fishing, and by able naturalists, that the different known species of fishes amount to that number, of an hundred and fifty-three; whence it might be inferred, that persons of all nations, ranks, and conditions were to be included within the pale of the Christian Church.

* The diminutive παιδια is expressive of fondness, like τεκνια, John xiii. 33. It is so used by John himself, 1 John ii. 14—18.

† Hasselquist, speaking of the fish found in the lake of Galilee, says, that one species, the charmud or karmud, often weighs thirty pounds.

JESUS said to them, Come hither, and breakfast. But none of the disciples durst ask him, Who art thou? knowing that it was THE LORD. JESUS then cometh up to them, and taketh the bread, and giveth to them, and the small fish likewise. And probably on this occasion also he ate and drank with them, as implied in his hospitable invitation. He did not, perhaps, use any of their fish, that the entertainment might be solely his own; and to signify, perhaps, from small beginnings, like the little fish, assisted by his grace, how great would be their future success. The great fishes taken on this occasion might also be designed as a providential supply for their families during the absence of the Apostles themselves, who were immediately to return to Jerusalem, and wait there till the day of Pentecost, and then to enter upon their public functions, destined to return home to domestic life no more, John xxi. 12, 13.

This was the third public appearance of CHRIST to his disciples, noticed by John, xxi. 14; but the fourth, noticed by Paul, including the first to Peter singly, 1 Cor. xv. 5—7: the former omitting the appearance in Galilee, and the latter the appearance to the ten Apostles on the evening of the resurrection. The authority of Paul is sufficient for the present arrangement, by which all the seeming variations are satisfactorily reconciled.

The ensuing interesting conversation of OUR LORD with Peter was founded on his forwardness to meet him, in the ardour of his zeal. It seems to have been graciously designed to reinstate Peter, publicly, in that Apostleship which he had abdicated by his denials; to the number of which, the question thrice repeated, *Simon, son of Jonah, lovest thou me? obviously alluded. Peter's humility now was as conspicuous as his presumption before. He modestly disclaimed any pretensions to superior attachment, "more than these," or above the rest of the company; and appealed to CHRIST himself, as the SEARCHER OF HEARTS, only for the truth of his attachment, LORD, thou knowest all things, thou knowest that I love thee, when grieved by the repetition of the question, as if intimating some distrust of his sincerity. CHRIST'S triple commission to him, first to "feed my lambs," or the weakest of the flock, and twice, "pasture and feed my sheep," significantly shewed that the pastoral care of the whole flock intrusted to his charge, was the surest testimony of loving Himself, the GREAT SHEPHERD, John xxi. 15—17.

* Though Simon was really the son of Jonah, there might be, perhaps, a remote allusion to his predecessor Jonah the prophet's fall and repentance, who was of Gath-hepher, in Galilee, and perhaps might have been the ancestor of the Apostle.

And now when Peter was thus formally restored to his rank and dignity, as the first of the Apostles, OUR LORD forewarned him of the future trials and persecutions to which he should be exposed, in his old age, beautifully contrasted with the recent instance of strength and activity he had shewn in stretching forth his arms to swim to shore. Verily, verily, I say unto thee, when thou wast younger, thou didst gird thyself with thy fisher's coat, and go freely at large, but when thou shalt grow old, thou shalt stretch forth thy hands on the cross, and another shall gird thee, and carry thee to the place of crucifixion against thy will. Thus signifying by what death he should glorify God. And when he had thus spoken, He said, "Follow me," as a true disciple, in imitation both of my life and death; evidently alluding to his former injunction, after rebuking him for his worldly-mindedness, "Whosoever is willing to go after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me," Matt. xvi. 23, 24. "For whosoever doth not carry his cross, and come after me, cannot be my disciple," (Luke xiv. 27;) John xxi. 18, 19.

John, without waiting for a call, followed JESUS as he walked, by this action signifying his prompt love and zeal for his adored LORD. Peter, turning about and seeing this, was led, by curiosity, to enquire also the fate of this favourite disciple, and his own particular friend; and said, What shall become of him? JESUS chid him, with this ambiguous answer, If I chuse that he shall remain in the flesh until I come in judgment on Jerusalem, what is that to thee? Follow thou me; mind thy own concerns. This was misunderstood by the brethren, and a report prevailed among them that John would not die. It was explained by the event of his long outliving the destruction of Jerusalem, John xxi. 20—24.

JERUSALEM.

Immediately after this manifestation, at the Lake of Galilee, we may conclude, the Apostles returned to Jerusalem; and on the following Sunday, the thirty-sixth day, were favoured with another appearance, which Paul describes to "all the Apostles," 1 Cor. xv. 7, immediately preceding the last, at the ascension, on the fortieth day, or Thursday following. We do not, indeed, presume to erect this arrangement of the several public appearances into a theory, but it may be allowed, surely, to rate as an hypothesis, approximating nearer to the truth than any that has been hitherto proposed; founded upon the probable assumption that THE LORD'S day was so denominated from the frequency of his appearances thereon. His last manifestation to the beloved disciple, and not long before his death, was made at Patmos, during his exile there, A.D. 97, certainly on THE LORD'S day.

At this important general meeting of the Apostles, our Lord renewed to them, in their collective capacity, the commissions given to their leaders before; and coming up to them, in close conference, he stated his own authority, and their Apostolic functions and powers, more fully and explicitly than heretofore.

All authority is given me in heaven and upon earth. Go ye, therefore, into all the world, publish THE GOSPEL to all the [human] creation. Discipline all the nations, baptizing them in the name of THE FATHER, and of THE SON, and of THE HOLY SPIRIT; and teaching them to keep all my commandments delivered unto you. He that believeth, and is baptized, shall be saved; but he that disbelieveth, shall be damned.

And these signs shall accompany the believers; they shall expel demons, in my name; they shall speak in new tongues; they shall take up serpents, and if they drink any deadly potion, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover.

And lo, I am with you all the days [of the Church,] until the consummation of the world. Amen. Matt. xxviii. 18—20, Mark xvi. 15—18.

He now appointed the last meeting for the following Thursday, the fortieth day from the resurrection, at Jerusalem; and there being associated with them he instructed them not to leave Jerusalem immediately, but to wait for the fulfilment of the promise of THE FATHER, which they had heard from him: And lo, I am going to send forth the promise of my Father upon you; but remain ye in the city of Jerusalem until ye shall be endued with power from on high: for John indeed baptized with water, but ye shall be baptized with THE HOLY SPIRIT, not many days hence, Acts i. 4, 5; Luke xxiv. 49.

THE ASCENSION.

Then he led them forth from the city to the Mount of Olives, as far as the district of Bethany, which began a sabbath day's journey, or six hundred paces from the city; and, according to tradition, he went up to the middle summit of the mountain, Luke xxiv. 50; Acts i. 12.

And when they were come together there, they enquired of Him, LORD, wilt thou, at this time, restore again the kingdom to Israel? or establish the spiritual kingdom of THE MESSIAH upon earth, at the regeneration foretold by the prophets, and confirmed by his own repeated predictions. But admitting its future certainty, he gently checked their unseasonable curiosity, respecting the particular time: It is not your concern, to know times and seasons, which THE FATHER reserved in his own power, and which he had told them before, in his prophecies on Mount Olivet, none but THE FATHER himself then knew, (Matt. xxiv. 36; Mark xiii. 32.) He further admonished them that their only concern was what related to their ministry, for which they should be endued with suitable powers to exercise it in the appointed places, again renewing his promise; But ye shall receive power when THE HOLY SPIRIT shall come upon you, and ye shall be witnesses for Me in Jerusalem, and in all Judea and Samaria, the scenes of my ministry, and unto the extremity of the earth, or habitable world.

'Then lifting up his hands he blessed them, and while he was blessing them he was taken up while they were looking on, and a cloud withdrew him from their sight, into the heaven, and he sate on the right hand of God, Acts i. 6—9; Luke xxiv. 51; Mark xvi. 19.

And while they were gazing into the heaven, as he was departing, with anxiety and grief; to comfort them for his loss, with the hope of a similar return, to restore that kingdom at the regeneration, about which they had so earnestly enquired; two angels in human form, and white apparel, (probably the same who had ministered to the resurrection, and now to the ascension,) stood suddenly beside them, and said, Ye Galileans, why stand ye looking into the heaven? This same JESUS, who is taken up from you into the heaven, shall so come, as ye have seen him going into the heaven, or with the same splendour and glory in the clouds, Acts i. 10, 11.

Then they worshipped him, and returned to Jerusalem with great joy; and were continually in the temple, praising and blessing God. And they went forth and preached every where, THE LORD co-operating and confirming the word, by means of the signal miracles accompanying it, Acts i. 12; Luke xxiv. 52, 53; Mark xvi. 20.

CHARACTER OF CHRIST.

Having now finished the foregoing survey, and comparison of the FOUR GOSPELS, humbly endeavouring to establish the credibility and consistency of these incomparable MEMOIRS throughout, by a close examination and critical harmony of their contents; we are naturally led to enquire, what was the concurrent design of the Evangelists in writing their respective Gospels? and this we learn from the conclusion of the last:

“These are written that ye might believe that JESUS is THE CHRIST, THE SON OF GOD; and that believing, ye might have [eternal] life in his name, [or religion,]” John xx. 31.

This benevolent design, so signified, and addressed to the Asiatic churches, at whose entreaty John wrote his Gospel, is to be extended to the world at large, who are invited to the perusal of these memoirs of the life and ministry of the GREAT AUTHOR and FINISHER of OUR FAITH, and the CAPTAIN of OUR SALVATION; proving him, by the most unexceptionable testimony, divine and human, to be THE CHRIST, or KING OF ISRAEL, THE SON OF GOD, in his human and divine prophetic character; and also THE AUTHOR of eternal life and happiness to all those that believe in and obey him, as peculiarly THEIR LORD and THEIR GOD.

That these memoirs, indeed, were “written” for the benefit of the whole world we learn, 1. From the incidental observation of our Lord, foretelling that the circumstance of anointing his head preparatory to his embalment, should be recorded to the woman’s honour, wheresoever this Gospel should be preached in the whole world, Matt. xxvi. 13. 2. From his general commission to his Apostles, “to discipline all the nations of the world,” &c. Matt. xxviii. 19. And 3. From his prophecy, that “the end," or destruction of Jerusalem, should not "come, until this Gospel of the kingdom [of Christ] should be preached in the whole world, for a testimony to all the nations," Matt. xxiv. 14. And accordingly, THE GOSPEL was published, in writing, as well as orally, by Matthew, Luke, and Mark, by Peter, James, and Paul, some years before that event. And we may conclude, in obedience to OUR LORD'S injunctions, under the guidance and assistance of his HOLY SPIRIT, for an everlasting possession to future ages, in order to supply the place of their transient preaching, most perfectly, Luke i. 4; 2 Pet. i. 13—15; 2 Tim. iv. 5, 6.

I. If we recapitulate the evangelical evidences of CHRIST'S character, they may be reduced to the following heads, as appealed to by OUR LORD himself, in his debates with the Jewish teachers, and discourses with his disciples.

1. The first, upon which he plainly lays the greatest stress, was taken from the stupendous miracles which he wrought, exceeding in number, variety, and magnitude, those of all his predecessors, the prophets. "The works which I do, bear witness of me, that THE FATHER hath sent me."—"If I had not done among them the works which no other man did, they had not incurred sin." And this was confessed by the astonished multitudes,—"It was never so seen in Israel!"—"When THE CHRIST cometh, will he do greater miracles than these?"

2. The second was taken from the wondrous chain of prophecies, of which he was the subject, both in his Divine and human nature, as THE SON OF GOD, and THE SON OF MAN conjointly; his mission, his sufferings, and his glories, which were all together fulfilled in him, and in no other person. "Search the Scriptures, for they testify of Me." "If ye had believed Moses, ye would have believed ME, for he wrote of Me."—"O inconsiderate and slow-hearted to believe all that the prophets have spoken! Ought not THE CHRIST to suffer such things, and afterwards to enter into his glory?"

This prophetic argument is justly considered as "firmer" than the argument from miracles, by Peter; because it is a growing evidence to believers, as it shall be better understood in all its branches*.

* See the first and second classes of Prophecies respecting CHRIST, in the Appendix to this volume.

3. The third, particularly addressed to his disciples, was his exact and minute foreknowledge of future events, respecting himself and them; and also his astonishing Scheme of Historical Prophecy, reaching to the end of the world, and consummation of all things, and stretching even into eternity; with a clearness and precision infinitely surpassing those of Moses and the Prophets, which he came to complete, unfold, and explain to future ages, both in those delivered personally by HIMSELF, and afterwards by his Apostles, and finally, in the *Apocalypse.

“ Now I tell you, before it come to pass, that when it is come to pass, ye may believe that I AM [THE CHRIST.]”—“ And they remembered his sayings.” This also is a growing evidence, becoming, daily, clearer and brighter with the fulfilment, until the end.

4. The fourth was peculiarly addressed to the Jewish unbelievers, as an argumentum ad hominem, calculated to silence and confound such; namely, the testimony of John the Baptist, whom the multitude revered as a Prophet, and the Scribes and Pharisees durst not deny, or dispute his claim. “ If I bear witness of myself, without further evidence of my Divine mission than my own assertion, my witness is not true, and deserves no credit; but there is another, that beareth witness of me, namely, John the Baptist; for ye sent unto John, and he bare witness of THE TRUTH. He was, by your own acknowledgment, a burning and shining lamp, and, for a season, ye were willing to rejoice in his light. I therefore insist upon his testimony, as that of a Prophet and a righteous man; hoping it will not be rejected by you, to your shame, and because it is founded upon the ancient prophecies concerning THE MESSIAH, or CHRIST †.

OUR LORD, however, intimates the inferiority of John's testimony, compared with his own miracles. “ But I have greater witness than John; for the works which THE FATHER hath given me to finish, and which I do, bear witness of me, that THE FATHER hath sent me.”

5. The fifth was the legislative capacity, in which he came, “ not to destroy the law and the prophets,” as the Scribes and Pharisees idly imagined, but “ to fulfil,” to complete them by

* See the third and fourth classes of Historical Prophecies, in the Appendix.

† The amount of John's testimony to JESUS as the CHRIST, is considerable, as may be seen under the foregoing article respecting him.

more refined and spiritual precepts and ordinances, and to sanction them, not by temporal, but by eternal rewards and punishments; as in his divine Sermon on the Mount; in which he enlarged and spiritualized the commandments of the Decalogue. Intimately connected therewith, was

6. His conscious dignity, and commanding authority; delivering his divine precepts and ordinances in his own name, and not like Moses and the Prophets, subordinately, in the name of God, "Thus saith the Lord;" whereas his usual style was, "Verily, verily, I say unto you." Insomuch, that the multitudes were struck with astonishment at his doctrine; for he taught them as having authority, and not as "the Scribes," servilely adhering to the corrupt traditions of the elders; as he repeatedly and publicly reproached them. And he failed not frequently to rebuke and to censure these "blind guides," and "whited sepulchres," "hypocrites," with all frankness, and without reserve.

7. The pure sanctity of his life, and uniform propriety of his conduct, affording the finest illustration of his doctrines, and the most perfect example of perfect and unerring obedience, in fulfilling all righteousness, and doing always what was well pleasing to his HEAVENLY FATHER—who therefore loved Him, is surely the most decisive and unequivocal proof of genuine DIVINE NATURE. The most highly gifted Prophets, and workers of miracles, were not exempt from the frailties and infirmities of human nature, and some were even guilty of crying sins; of which Noah, Job, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Moses, Balaam, David, Solomon, &c. furnish striking and instructive instances.

But in this respect, OUR LORD, with all the boldness of conscious innocence and native worth, set his enemies at defiance. Which of you convicteth me of sin? He was, indeed, pre-eminently, "the HOLY ONE," and "THE JUST," "THE RIGHTEOUS," "THE SAINT OF SAINTS," to whose spotless innocence, and transcendent virtue, even his inveterate foes bore witness, his treacherous disciple, and his pusillanimous judge. Though tempted in all respects as other men, yet was he without sin. He overcame the world, the flesh, and the Devil; neither was guile found in his mouth; who, when he was reviled, reviled not again, but answered nothing, and commended his spirit to Him that judgeth righteously. Neither popular applause, of which, at times, he had an abundant share, lifted him up, nor popular insult, or persecution, cast him down; nothing disturbed the even tenor of his mind. He led a life of trouble and of rebuke, and of blasphemy, still he went about doing good to the souls and bodies of men, by instructing their ignorance, correcting their prejudices and vices, improving their hearts, and healing their diseases. All his miracles, two excepted, the possession of the swine, and the cursing the barren fig tree, were beneficent; and even for these satisfactory reasons have been assigned, as intended for correction and for admonition. The imaginary "wise man" of the Stoics, and the "Just man" of the Platonists, possessed of all possible virtues, were more than realized in JESUS CHRIST, who left his followers a real pattern of consummate piety, virtue, and temperance, in all things*. No wonder then, that such unparalleled excellence extorted the admiration and applause of his most prejudiced enemies: Never man spake as this man spake! He doeth all things well! This was truly THE SON OF GOD! This was really THE JUST ONE!

2. To this ancient homage of contemporaries, we cannot refrain from adding a curious and valuable eulogy on his transcendant moral character, by the inconsistent and eccentric Sceptic, Rousseau; literally translated from one of the most mischievous of his eloquent publications †.

"I confess to you also, that the majesty of the Scriptures, and the holiness of the Gospel, touches my heart. View the books of the philosophers, with all their pomp; how little do they appear placed beside this! Is it possible, that a Book at once so sublime and simple, can be the work of men? Is it possible, that He whose history it records, can be but a mere man? Does he speak in the tone of an enthusiast, or of an ambitious sectary? What mildness, what purity in his manners! what persuasive grace in his instructions! what elevation in his maxims! what profound wisdom in his discourses! what presence of mind, what ingenuity and what justness in his answers!

* The necessity of a perfect standard, or pattern of virtue, in their imaginary wise man, was well explained by Cicero, declaring that the reputed wise, such as the seven Sages, Cato, Lælius, &c. only bore some similitude and appearance of the truly wise, who alone observed the perfect duties. That such a standard was necessary to maintain a progressive improvement in virtue. De Offic. III. 4.

† Emile, Tom. II. p. 85. This same work inveighs against the Christian religion with acrimony and rancour!

what empire over his passions? Where is the man, where is the sage, who knows how to act, to suffer, and to die, without weakness, and without ostentation?

“When Plato paints his imaginary just man, covered with all the infamy of vice, though worthy of all the rewards of virtue, he paints the exact traits of JESUS CHRIST: the resemblance is so striking, that all the Fathers perceived it; and indeed, it is not possible to be deceived therein. And what prejudices, what blindness, must possess the man that dares to compare the son of Sophoniscus, with the Son of Mary? What an immense distance between them! Socrates, dying without pain, without ignominy, easily supported to the last his character; and if this easy death had not cast a lustre on his life, it might have been doubted, whether Socrates, with all his genius, was any thing more than a Sophist. It may be said, he invented morality: but before him others had practised it; he only said, what they had done, and reduced to lessons their examples. Aristides had been just, before Socrates had said what justice was. Leonidas had died for his country, before Socrates had made love of country a duty. Sparta was sober before Socrates had praised sobriety, before he had defined virtue, Greece abounded with virtuous men.

“But where did JESUS, among his countrymen, take the pattern of this elevated and pure morality, of which he alone has given both the precepts and the example? From the bosom of the most furious fanaticism, the highest WISDOM made herself be heard; and the simplicity of the most HEROIC VIRTUES honoured the vilest of all the people of the earth.

“The death of Socrates philosophizing tranquilly with his friends, is the mildest one could wish for: that of JESUS, expiring in torments, blasphemed, reviled, and execrated by a whole people, is the most horrible one could dread. Socrates, taking the cup of poison, blessed him who presented it, and who wept: Jesus, in the midst of a frightful punishment, prayed for his blood-thirsty executioners. Yes, if the life and death of Socrates be that of a Sage, the life and death of JESUS is that of A GOD.”

The following argument also for the veracity of the Gospels, drawn from the impossibility of inventing such a perfect character, of such complete uniformity and consistency throughout, is borrowed from Rousseau, and improved by Wakefield.

“No forgers of the Gospel narratives in question, (whose motives, in the first instance, of such an imposition, could not easily be ascertained,) could have discovered any inducement, either from an acquaintance with human manners, or the operations of the human mind, to deliver such an extraordinary relation of the conduct of their hero. For my own part, I am able to devise no other tolerable solution of this difficulty, but this obvious supposition; That the Gospel History is in reality an accurate transcript from a TRUE ORIGINAL; that such a personage as Jesus of Nazareth, ACTUALLY APPEARED in the world; a genuine likeness of the picture which is presented of him.—That he came with the express intention of publishing such a system of religion, of executing that unprecedented project, of founding a universal empire over the affections and consciences of men, by the gentle constraints of TRUTH, and the soothing captivations of PURITY and LOVE*.”

The argument for the veracity of the Gospel, drawn from the number of the Evangelists, enhancing the difficulty of such a joint fabrication, is excellently expressed by Rousseau.

“It would be more inconceivable, that several men should have agreed to fabricate such a book, than that a single personage should have furnished its subject. Never could Jewish authors have invented, neither this tone of character, nor this morality. And the Gospel has marks of veracity, so great, so striking, and so perfectly inimitable, that the inventor of it would be more astonishing than the hero.”

And yet, the very next passage furnishes a deplorable instance of inconsistency, the most surprizing and unexpected in this Sceptic, as he professed himself:——“Granting all this, this same Gospel is full of things incredible, things that are repugnant to Reason, and which it is impossible for any man in his senses to conceive, or to admit †. What is to be done in the midst of all these contradictions? We should be always modest and circumspect, my child; we should respect, in silence, what we can neither reject nor comprehend, and humble ourselves before that GREAT BEING, who alone knows the truth."

* Wakefield's Evidences of Christianity, second edition, 1793, or British Critic, July, 1794, p. 28.

† Rousseau principally objects to the Gospel miracles, and especially to the cure of Demoniacs, as impossible and incredible; not considering, in the blindness of his scepticism, that such were necessary for CHRIST and his Apostles, to prove their divine commission, like Moses. The doctrine of Demoniacs, though decried at the present day, is by no means disproved, or exploded. And the case of the man, and afterwards the herd of swine, possessed by a legion, which Rousseau so much ridicules, bears a frightful analogy to himself and the swinish multitude, “whose God is their belly, who glory in their shame, who mind earthly things.”

How any man in his senses could hazard such a conclusion, so repugnant to his premises, is only for professed Sceptics to conceive. There cannot, perhaps, in the wide field of human absurdities, be adduced a more striking, and a more frightful instance of inconclusive reasoning, deduced from fair premises, by a "reprobate" and "undiscerning mind." Surely the former "good confession," which cannot fail to win the admiration and applause of all sober minded readers, although they detest the principles and the practices of this libertine and sensualist, (for such Rousseau appears, from his profligate confessions,) intimates, that "the Spirit of THE LORD" is seldom totally "quenched," even in the worst men: even these, possessed by an evil spirit, as Pharaoh, Saul, Judas, Simon Magus, &c. have had their lucid intervals!

Priestley also, in his parallel of Mahomet with CHRIST, has skilfully drawn the leading features of both*.

"If we consider the characters of the two men, the great superiority of that of JESUS is manifest.

"Mahomet, though not without religion, had nothing of that rational and humble piety, which eminently distinguished JESUS; nor did he discover any marks of that ardent and disinterested love of mankind in general, or of his own disciples in particular, which led JESUS to suffer and to die for them. Mahomet's passions of lust and revenge, the suspicion of which never fell on JESUS, render him a very improper object of imitation; whereas JESUS exhibited in his life a perfect pattern of every human virtue. Whence then could arise this great difference in the character and conduct of these two men, equally the founders of new systems of religion? The only hypothesis that can account for the facts is, that the consciousness which JESUS had of his peculiar and near relation to GOD, gave him that spirit of habitual devotion, which is the genuine parent of every other virtue; and the sure prospect of a great future reward, (Heb. xii. 2,) gave him a great superiority over all lower gratifications and pursuits. On the contrary, Mahomet, conscious that he was an Impostor, could have no other object than worldly power and sensual indulgence; and whatever might have been his devotion at his outset, he afterwards retained no more of it than was subservient to his schemes; and at length, (as was probably the case with Oliver Cromwell,) his religion was certainly swallowed up in his ambition."

* Priestley's Discourses relating to the Evidences of Revealed Religion, delivered in Philadelphia, Vol. II. See Monthly Review, August 1798, p. 428.

3. To these valuable and important testimonies, deduced from THE GOSPEL, either by open enemies or doubtful friends, we shall add that of the great Jewish historian, Josephus. Antiq. xviii. 4, 3, p. 798. Hudson.

This character of JESUS is naturally introduced in the account of Pilate's administration, during which he suffered.

"Moreover, at this time, lived JESUS, a wise man, if it be meet to call him man: for he was a worker of wonderful works, a teacher of men, who gladly received the truth, (John iii. 2, Matt. viii. 27.) And many of the Jews, many also of the Gentiles, he drew over to himself, (Matt. iv. 25, John xii. 42.) THIS WAS THE CHRIST*, [usually so called; and by Pilate himself, Matt. xxvii. 17.] And when Pilate, on the information of the chief men among us, had punished him by crucifixion, yet his first admirers did not cease: for, [as they said,] during the third day [after his crucifixion,] he appeared to them alive again; the inspired Prophets having predicted these, and numberless other wonders concerning HIM, [as THE CHRIST, Luke xxiv. 26—46.] And still, until now, the community† of the Christians, [denominated from him as their leader,] has not failed," (Acts v. 35—39.)

The genuineness and credibility of this testimony have been questioned, as if it were too favourable from a Jew to CHRIST ‡ but apparently on insufficient grounds; for,

* Ὁ Χριστος οὗτος ἦν. Josephus did not acknowledge JESUS AS THE MESSIAH. He only states, that he was the reputed Christ; as well explained by Jerom. Et credebatur esse Christus. Josephus afterwards explains his meaning, Ἰησου, του λεγομενου Χριστου. Ant. xx. 8, 1.

† Χριστιανων φυλον, corresponds to the phrase, Χριστιανων εθνος, afterwards, denoting "the community," or "people of the Christians," on account of the extensive propagation of the Gospel, at the time Josephus wrote his Antiquities, A.D. 94. It is distinguished thereby from "a sect," as Lardner mistranslates it.

‡ The learned and laborious collector, Lardner, whose judgment did not always keep pace with his diligence, and whose Socinian bias, it is much to be lamented, sometimes led him, (undesignedly, we are persuaded,) to "make the worse appear the better reason," has brought forward several objections against the authority and credibility of

1. It is found in all the copies of Josephus's works now extant, both printed and manuscript, in a Hebrew translation, kept in the Vatican library, and in an Arabic translation, preserved by the Maronites of Mount Libanus.

2. It is cited by Eusebius, Jerom, Rufinus, Isidore of Pelusium, Sozomen, Cassiodorus, Nicephorus, and by many others, who had all indisputably seen various manuscripts, and of considerable antiquity.

3. Josephus, in two other passages, (whose authenticity has never been suspected,) mentions, with much respect, John the Baptist, and James, the Bishop of Jerusalem, describing the former as a good man, who exhorted the Jews to come to his baptism, first practising virtue, and exercising justice toward each other, and piety toward GOD; for by such preparations only would "the ceremony of baptism (την βαπτισιν) be acceptable unto GOD." And he says that "the Jews considered the destruction of Herod's army as a Divine judgment on him for putting the Baptist to death." Ant. XVIII. 6, 2, p. 805.

And also James, Bishop of Jerusalem, whom he represents as put to death, A.D. 62, by an irregular Jewish council, summoned by the high-priest Ananus the younger, a haughty and overbearing man, a Sadducee, and like that sect, remarkably this celebrated testimony, Vol. VII. p. 120, which do not seem to merit the weight he attaches to them.

OBJ. 1. This passage was not cited by any early Christians before Eusebius; such as Justin Martyr, Clemens of Alexandria, Tertullian, or Origen; and Chrysostom and Photius afterwards.

ANSWER. This negative argument, drawn from the silence of the Fathers, is unsatisfactory. It might, perhaps, have been foreign to their purpose; or it might have had little weight with the Jews, who hated Josephus, to cite his testimony. The positive argument from Eusebius, &c. is more than a counterbalance.

OBJ. 2. This passage interrupts the course of the narration, and is unlike the style of Josephus.

ANSWER. It is introduced naturally, in the course of Pilate's administration, and between two circumstances which occasioned disturbances. And was not the foolish and unfounded expectation of the false Christs, who should deliver them from the Roman yoke, the source of the greatest disturbances, and of that Roman war which ended in the destruction of the state, as Josephus himself often declares? And Huetius observes, one egg is not more like another, than the style of this passage to the general style of his writings. Objections from style are often fanciful.

OBJ. 3. It is unlikely that Josephus, who did not acknowledge CHRIST, and was hostile to him and his religion, would speak favourably of him.

ANSWER. This is accounted for in the text, and the supposed hostility denied upon strong grounds. See the valuable Appendix to Lardner's Life, Vol. I. No. ix. x. for further answers.

severe in their judicial sentences, who thinking this a convenient opportunity, during the interregnum, when Festus was dead, before the arrival of his successor, Albinus, brought to trial before the judges, James, the brother of Jesus, who is called CHRIST, and some others [of the Christians,] accusing them of transgressing the law, and delivered them up to be stoned. But those who were reckoned the most moderate citizens, and skilful in the law, [the Pharisees,] were greatly displeased thereat, and sent privily to the king, Agrippa, [who had appointed Ananus high-priest,] intreating him to order Ananus not to do such things any more, for that this first act was not rightly done. Ant. XX. 8, 1.

4. Josephus himself was a Pharisee, and that sect was much more favourable to the Christians than the Sadducees; a circumstance of which Paul adroitly availed himself, at his trial, before this same haughty and insolent Ananus, or Ananias, for his own protection against the Sadducees, two years before, A.D. 60. Ant. XXIII. 6. Josephus also was the intimate friend of this king Agrippa, before whom Paul was tried, and who said, "Almost thou persuadest me to become a Christian!" Ant. XXVI. 28. And can we wonder that the same worldly-minded policy which prevented Agrippa, his patron, from professing himself the follower of a crucified Saviour, notwithstanding all "his knowledge and belief of the Prophets," on which Paul complimented him, Acts xxvi. 2—27, should weigh with the time-serving dependent likewise? who, to make his court to the Romans, in defiance of those Hebrew Scriptures, which he so well understood*, represented Vespasian, a heathen and a foreigner, as the predicted MESSIAH!

Still, however, we are not to consider Josephus as hostile to CHRIST, or the Christians, but rather a favourer of both, though secretly, for fear of the Jews, and afterwards of the Romans. And it is remarkable that his account of JESUS coincides with the declaration of Nicodemus, with the Evangelists, and with the sage advice of Gamaliel, who was probably the preceptor of Josephus as well as of Paul, from his great ability. And certainly Josephus could neither entirely pass over, in his history of Jewish affairs, so remarkable a personage as JESUS CHRIST, nor say less of him than he has done, without forfeiting his character as a well informed and candid historian, of which he makes such frequent professions; especially as he has taken notice, like Gamaliel, of several impostors, or false Christs, who appeared about that time, such as Judas of Galilee, or Gaulonitis, Theudas, the Egyptian, the pretended magician, &c. all of whom were far inferior in fame to JESUS.

* Josephus was probably well acquainted with the Gospels and the Epistle of Paul, especially to the Romans and Hebrews. He spent two years at Rome, about the time Paul was a prisoner there, and might have been one of the learned Jews with whom Paul disputed, Acts xxviii. 22—29. And some remarkable coincidences of expression with the New Testament may be detected in his works.

5. Tacitus and Suetonius, the Roman historians, to whom the Christians, as a sect, were a much less interesting object than to a Jew, like Josephus, noticed the rise and establishment of Christianity, as being of sufficient magnitude to rank among the greatest events transmitted by them to posterity.

The account of Tacitus, in particular, was evidently taken in substance from Josephus, whose works he had read, and may furnish a strong additional voucher for the genuineness of the passage in question.

“The author of the Christian name was CHRIST, who, in the reign of Tiberius, was executed by Pontius Pilate, the Procurator, and that pernicious superstition was repressed for the present; but it broke out again, not only in Judea, the origin of that evil, but even in the city [of Rome,] whither all atrocious or shameful rites flock from every quarter, and are celebrated.” Annal. XV. 44.

Superstition was the term of reproach attached to the Christian religion, by the intolerant bigotry of the Romans; as we see also, Acts xxv. 19. And the Christian rites of Baptism and the Lord's Supper, were branded with the foulest calumnies by these Pagans, until the reign of Constantine the Great.

But Josephus evidently changed his mind respecting his former hasty adulation of Vespasian as THE MESSIAH, in his Jewish war; for, in his Antiquities, written twenty years after, he wavered the explanation of “the kingdom of the Stone,” in Daniel, considering the coming of THE MESSIAH as a future event. Ant. X. 10, 4. And, indeed, after he had asserted of Moses, that “his legislation appearing to be from GOD, made the man to be reckoned superior to his own nature,” (Antiq. III. 15, 3,) is it unlikely that he might really hesitate respecting JESUS, whether he were not more than man, “a Teacher sent from GOD,” as Nicodemus had formerly inferred from his “stupendous miracles,” surpassing those of Moses, which were notorious to all the people, and even the prejudiced Jewish council could not deny, John xi. 47. And when he further reflected, that a lapse of threescore years after CHRIST’s crucifixion had not put an end to his sect, but that it was rapidly increasing, and grown into a considerable “community,” even in the heart of the Roman empire, while all the other sects of Judas of Galilee, Theudas, the Egyptian, &c. had perished with those ephemeral meteors; might he not scruple to disparage the Christian Religion, or its wonderful Author, “conquering by sufferings,” lest haply he might be found to fight against GOD, according to the sage observations of Gamaliel, Acts v. 39.

The studied reserve, therefore, of Josephus, and his obstinate silence respecting the brazen serpent, (see Vol. II. p. 190,) the stupendous scenes which attended the rise and progress of the Christian Church, to which he could be no stranger; for they were not done in a corner, as Paul pleaded before king Agrippa, the patron of Josephus, Acts xxvi. 26, furnish unequivocal evidence, that he did not behold Christianity with indifference, much less hatred. Like many of “the rulers and crowd of priests that believed,” both before and after our Lord’s resurrection, John xii. 42, Acts vi. 7, he might not confess him, for fear of the Jews and of the Romans, loving the praise of men more than the praise of GOD,” John xii. 43.

We have been the more solicitous to reclaim and vindicate this valuable and important testimony of the most intelligent Jewish historian that ever wrote, next to the Sacred Writers, because its authenticity and credibility have been hastily and unjustly depreciated by sceptical divines * and hypercritics, without calmly and skilfully weighing the evidences in its favour.

IV. We shall close this article with the singular testimony of a Roman emperor, even Tiberius himself, to the divinity of CHRIST.

The learned Tertullian, in his Apology for Christianity, about the year A.D. 200, after speaking of our Saviour’s crucifixion

* The late Bishop Horsley, though as far removed from a Sceptic as the Zenith from the Nadir, dogmatically pronounced this passage, “a rank forgery, and a stupid one too;” misunderstanding its drift, as if “Josephus therein acknowledged Jesus as the Christ, in as strong terms as words could do it.” Lardner, VII. p. 129.

and resurrection, and his appearances to the disciples, and ascension into heaven, in the sight of the same disciples, who were ordained by him to publish the Gospel over the world; proceeds, “Of all these things relating to CHRIST, Pilate himself, already in his conscience a Christian, sent an account to Tiberius, then emperor.” Apol. c. 21. p. 22.

Justin Martyr, also an early writer, in his first Apology, about A.D. 140, twice appealed for proof of these facts to “the acts made in the times of Pontius Pilate,” p. 65, 72. edit. Benedict. which surely he would not have ventured to do in a public apology, addressed to Antoninus Pius, and the whole Roman senate, if such had not been really extant at the time*. And Eusebius confirms their authenticity.

Tertullian, in the same Apology, relates the proceedings of Tiberius, on this information.

“Tiberius, in whose time the Christian name, [or religion,] had its rise, having received from Palestine, in Syria, information of the truth of CHRIST’S divinity, proposed to the senate, that he should be enrolled among the Roman gods, and gave his own prerogative vote in favour of the motion. But the senate, (without whose consent no deification could take place,) rejected it, because the emperor himself had declined the same honour. Notwithstanding, Cæsar persisted in his opinion, and threatened punishment to the accusers of the Christians. Search your own commentaries, [or public acts,] there you will find that Nero was the first that raged with the imperial sword against this sect, when rising most at Rome.” Apol. c. v. p. 6.

This is a curious and valuable testimony, confirmed also by Eusebius; and it is highly probable in itself.

Tiberius was superstitious, like the Romans in general, and if he received from Pilate, in justification of his unwillingness to gratify the envy and malice of the Jewish rulers, by sacrificing an innocent and a just man, the account of the stupendous circumstances of the crucifixion, the earthquake and darkness, and the wonders of his resurrection and ascension into heaven, which he must have learned from the Roman centurion and guard;

* About the year A.D. 307, during Maximin’s persecution, the Heathens forged Acts of Pilate, injurious to CHRIST and the Christian faith, which were industriously circulated to discourage Christians, and unsettle their faith, as we learn from Eusebius, Eccles. Hist. I. 9. and IX. 5. These spurious acts prove the prior existence of the genuine.

and from the testimony of CHRIST'S disciples, Joseph of Arimathea and Nicodemus, men of the first rank and consideration, who had free access to him; surely Tiberius might, from a principle of state policy, endeavour to conciliate this SON OF GOD by associating him with the Roman divinities; and although he acquiesced in the adulatory refusal of the senate to enact his motion, yet he might naturally publish an imperial edict, prohibiting, under the severest penalties, the persecution of the followers of this New God; upon the same principle that other Heathen emperors, Nebuchadnezzar and Darius the Mede, passed similar decrees; in consequence of the miracles wrought by the GOD OF ISRAEL in favour of his servants, Daniel, and Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego.

Tiberius, by Plutarch's account, was very inquisitive about the truth of the story of the death of the great god Pan, declared by some aerial demon to the Egyptian mariner Thamus, at sea, noticed before*; probably suspecting that it might relate to CHRIST. Lardner, indeed, with his usual diffidence, rejects it altogether as a fiction; but it has been countenanced by the profound Cudworth, and others. And what could induce Plutarch, however credulous he might be, to relate so extravagant a tale without some real foundation, however distorted, is not easy to conceive; especially as he had not the remotest suspicion of its reference to CHRIST: if he had, that would have been a sufficient reason with him for passing it over in silence.

To Tertullian's account Eusebius adds, that Tiberius threatened the accusers of the Christians with the punishment of death. And he considers this interference of the Roman emperor as PROVIDENTIALLY designed to promote the publication of the Gospel, in its infancy, without molestation; while he and Chrysostom both consider the remarkable refusal of the Roman senate to deify CHRIST as equally owing to the controul of PROVIDENCE; that the DIVINITY of CHRIST might be established, not by human authority, but by the power of GOD; and that the HOLY JESUS might not be ranked or associated among the infamous characters that were found among "the gods many, and lords many," of the superstitious and idolatrous Romans. For what fellowship hath CHRIST with Belial? See the original passages, Lardner, VII. p. 241—247.

* See the foregoing article of the cure of demoniacs, Vol. III. p. 106, note.

THE SPIRIT OF THE GOSPEL.

THIS may be extracted from our blessed Lord's last and fullest commission to his Apostles, containing, in a very small compass, the whole substance of THE GOSPEL; or the quintessence of the peculiar doctrines, precepts, sanctions, and aids of the CHRISTIAN RELIGION, Vol. III. p. 266.

- I. " *All authority is given ME in heaven and upon earth,
Go ye, therefore, into all the world,
Publish the Gospel to all the creation.*
- II. " *Discipline all the nations :
Baptizing them in the name
Of THE FATHER, and of THE SON, and of THE HOLY SPIRIT ;
And teaching them to keep all my commandments,
Delivered unto you.*
- III. " *He that believeth, and is baptized,
Shall be saved ;
But he that disbelieveth,
Shall be damned.*
- IV. " *And these signs shall accompany the believers :
They shall expel Demons, in my name,
They shall speak in new tongues,
They shall take up serpents,
And if they drink any deadly potion,
It shall not hurt them.
They shall lay hands on the sick,
And they shall recover.*
- V. " *And lo, I am with you, all the days [of the Church,] Until the consummation of the world. Amen ."

* This grand commission, worthy indeed of THE ORACLE who delivered it, and not more distinguished for sublimity of composition, than for simplicity of expression, has not been rendered throughout, with sufficient accuracy, in the English Bible.

Κηρυξατε, "preach," had better be rendered "publish," as elsewhere, Mark i. 45. For as John the Baptist was the harbinger, or herald of CHRIST, to proclaim his first

This most comprehensive commission, opens with a preamble in the first clause, stating the plenary authority, and universal dominion, vested in CHRIST, as "THE IMAGE," or visible representative of THE FATHER, to found his spiritual coming in the flesh, so were the Apostles ordained to be his ambassadors, 2 Cor. v. 20. Πασῇ τῇ κτίσει, "to every creature," this should rather be rendered, "to all the creation," meaning the rational creation, or ἀνθρωπίνη κτίσις, mankind, 1 Pet. ii. 13; κτίσις is so rendered elsewhere, Mark x. 6, xiii. 19, Rom. i. 20; and should also be so rendered, Rom. viii. 19, 20. Μαθητεύσατε, "teach," Μαθήτεω, in strictness signifies, to "disciple," or "make disciples," by baptism, as in John iv. 1. But the verb disciple, is now obsolete; and its prevailing substitute, to discipline, (by a usual metonymy of the effect for the cause,) should be adopted, in order to distinguish it from διδασκοντες, "teaching," afterwards: discipline being a more general term, signifying training, or the process of education, as well expressed by Horace :

DOCTRINA sed vim promovet insitam,

RECTIQUE CULTUS pectora roborant.

" Learning improves the implanted power [of mind,]

And culture right invigorates the heart." Od. iv. 4, 33.

And still more finely and circumstantially, in the apocryphal book of Wisdom.

" The truest beginning of WISDOM is the desire of education, (παιδείας,)

And the study of education is love,

And love is the keeping of her laws,

And attention to her laws, confirmation of incorruption,

And incorruption bringeth nigh unto GOD." Wisd. vi. 17—19.

Ο δὲ ἀπιστήσας κατακριθήσεται. Here ἀπιστήσας should be rendered, "He that disbelieveth," which is a stronger term than (οὐ πιστεύσας,) "he that believeth not," (incorrectly substituted in the English Bible,) because it implies wilful and obstinate rejection of the truth; as intimated in the term ἀπιστος, "a disbeliever," or "faithless," applied by OUR LORD to Thomas, John xx. 27. Κατακριθήσεται, however, is rightly rendered, "shall be damned," intimating eternal condemnation, as contrasted with eternal salvation to believers; and as the verb is elsewhere understood and rendered in parallel passages, Matt. xii. 41, 1 Cor. xi. 32, James v. 9, at the day of judgment; corresponding to the punishment of hell fire, or destruction of both soul and body in hell, Matt. x. 28, Mark ix. 43, 44, Matt. xiii. 41, 42, xxv. 41—46, Rev. xx. 14, 15. Most mischievous and delusive, therefore, are those glosses of disbelievers, who deny the scriptural doctrine of eternal condemnation, and fritter it away into annihilation, &c. to the extreme hazard of their own, and their followers' souls, as "blind leaders of the blind," Matt. xv. 14, vi. 23.

Πασας τας ἡμερας, "always," should rather be rendered "all the days" of the Christian dispensation, or duration of the Church upon earth; in continuation of OUR LORD's fostering care of his Church in the wilderness, when, as "THE ANGEL OF GOD'S PRESENCE, he saved them, and in his love and pity, redeemed them [from Egyptian bondage,] and bare them, and carried them [on eagles' wings,] all the days of old," Isa. lxiii. 9; intimating his continual and unremitting care of his Church, while militant here upon earth, as implied in his former promise, Matt. xv. 20, "Wheresoever, [and whenssoever] two or three are assembled together in my name, [or worship,] there am I in the midst of them," [to grant their requests,] as in the excellent comment of Chrysostom's prayer to CHRIST, at the conclusion of our morning and evening service.

kingdom, or universal Church upon earth, and to depute the Apostles, and their successors, as his heralds or ambassadors, to publish the GOSPEL, or glad tidings of salvation, to all the human creation. This includes the constitution of the primitive Church.

The second clause states, more particularly, the nature of their commission, and the conditions of salvation: 1. to discipline all the nations of the world, or train them up to religion and virtue, more perfectly and efficaciously than any former dispensation preparatory thereto.

“ THE LAW appeared imperfect, and best given
With purpose to resign them *, in full time,
Up to a BETTER COVENANT; disciplined
From shadowy types to TRUTH, from flesh to SPIRIT.” Milton.

2. To teach them the mysterious doctrines, the peculiar rites, the important precepts and duties of the GOSPEL, immediately communicated by CHRIST to his Apostles.

The third clause states the encouraging, the awful, and the eternal sanctions of the GOSPEL, salvation to believers that are baptized, and obey his commandments; but damnation to disbelievers, who reject and disobey them.

The fourth clause states the miraculous powers and extraordinary gifts of THE SPIRIT, conferred on the Apostles and first professors of CHRISTIANITY, in order to qualify and enable them to execute and accomplish their arduous commission to a careless, a prejudiced, and a wicked world, immersed in ignorance, superstition, idolatry, and vice.

The fifth clause states the ordinary aids or fruits of THE SPIRIT, promised by CHRIST to his Church, during its continuance upon earth, unto the end of the world, and consummation of all things.

Reserving for the last, the profound constitution and discipline of the Church, to be collected from the Acts and Epistles; we shall proceed, in the first place, to analyze and explain the mysterious doctrines and sacraments of the GOSPEL, THE TRINITY, regeneration, justification by faith, baptism, and THE LORD'S Supper, which are intimately connected together, and best explained by OUR LORD himself in the Gospels.

* The Jews.

I. THE MYSTERIES OF THE GOSPEL.

The first, the most mysterious, and the most awful of those things which eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, nor hath entered into the heart of man to conceive, a subject utterly undiscoverable and unfathomable by human reason, is the distinction of the persons of the GODHEAD, intimated in

THE TRINITY.

This word was first introduced by Theophilus, Bishop of Antioch, about A.D. 170, into Christian Theology, Ad Autoly-cum, Lib. ii. p. 94, et 100, as noticed by Dupin; and adopted by the learned Origen, &c.; and does not occur in the NEW TESTAMENT. It was borrowed from the Heathen philosophy, the Grecian, especially the Platonic, which was borrowed from the Orphic, and that from the Egyptian, and ultimately, from the Jewish, or Hebrew Theology. And the doctrine itself was gradually corrupted in its progress from the pure spring of ORIGINAL REVELATION, by the heterogeneous admixture of fabulous mythology, and vain philosophy. An account of the ancient Trinities may be seen in those copious repositories of ancient wisdom and foolishness, the learned works of Cudworth, Gale, Stillingfleet, Brucker, and the Asiatic Researches. They shall be briefly noticed, please God, in the Appendix to the fourth volume, on the Primitive Theology and its Corruptions. It is only to the profound and sublime philosophy of SCRIPTURE, derived from Revelation, that we owe any rational and consistent notions on this most abstruse and mysterious subject.

The most ancient Book of Job recognizes THE DEITY under different conceptions, THE MOST HIGH, or ALMIGHTY GOD, THE REDEEMER or INTERCESSOR, the SPIRIT OF GOD, or the HOLY ONE. And it speaks of the Privy Council of GOD *, xv. 8. See the foregoing Analysis of that Book.

* The Hebrew term, סוּד, (Sod), is variously rendered in our English Bible, “secret,” Job xv. 8; “assembly,” Psalm lxxxix. 7, and “counsel,” Jer. xxiii. 18; it ought to be uniformly rendered “privy council,” in all.

Of this “privy council of God,” Job seems to speak in the beginning; in that “day, when the sons of GOD, or the holy angels, came to present themselves before THE LORD,” Job i. 6, (see Vol. II. p. 60,) and the Prophet Micah, to Ahab, “I saw THE LORD

In the Book of Genesis, compiled, perhaps, partly from ancient records, Moses, the inspired historian, represents the world as the production of two or more Divine Beings, "THE GOD who created the heavens and earth; THE SPIRIT OF GOD, who quickened the chaotic mass, and THE GOD who spake," or the ORACLE OF THE LORD, who conducted the process of the visible creation, Gen. i. 1—3. He distinguishes A visible LORD from THE invisible LORD in heaven, xix. 24; and he alludes to Job's privy council of GOD, iii. 22, xi. 7.

David, that inspired Prophet, likewise distinguishes THE LORD from THE MESSIAH, REGENT, or SON OF GOD, Psalm ii. and cx, (See Vol. II. p. 366,) and notices THE HOLY SPIRIT OF GOD, Psalm li. And Etham, his contemporary, notices the privy council of the saints, Psalm lxxxix. 7.

The wise Agar asks, "What is GOD'S name, and what is HIS SON'S name?" Prov. xxx. 4.

Daniel notices THE SON OF GOD, iii. 25; and Jeremiah speaks of the privy council of THE LORD, xxiii. 18.

The doctrine, indeed, of the three persons of the Godhead, sitting on his throne, and all the host of heaven standing by Him, on his right hand, and on his left," 1 Kings xxii. 19; the Prophet Daniel also, in that sublime vision of the ANCIENT OF DAYS, seated in judgment, where "the thrones were placed, and thousands of thousands of angels ministered unto Him, and myriads of myriads stood before Him," Dan. vii. 9, 10. The Prophet Zechariah describes "the seven [angels] that are the eyes of the LORD, which run to and fro through the whole earth," Zech. iv. 10; the angel Raphael says, "I am one of the seven holy angels which present the prayers of the saints, and which go in and out before the glory of THE HOLY ONE," Tobit xvi. 15; and in similar language the angel who appeared to Zechariah the priest, says, "I am Gabriel, that stand in the presence of GOD," Luke i. 19. John, in the Apocalypse, greets the seven Churches of Asia Minor, "Grace be unto you, and peace from [GOD THE FATHER,] who is, and who was, and who is to come; and from the seven spirits, who are before his throne; and from JESUS CHRIST, the faithful witness," &c. i. 4, iv. 1—5, "who hath the seven spirits of GOD" at his command, Rev. iii. 1. And Paul, by the most solemn adjuration to Timothy, says, "I strictly charge thee, before GOD, and THE LORD JESUS CHRIST, and the elect angels, that thou observe these directions," &c. 1 Tim. v. 21, where the anarthrous term, Κυριον, is equivalent to τοῦ Κυριου, in the parallel passage, 2 Tim. iv. 1, and is therefore rightly rendered, "THE LORD," in the English; contrary to Mr. Sharp's rendering, "before JESUS CHRIST, THE GOD and LORD, and before the elect angels," &c. Remarks on the Definite Article, p. 38, 39, which is also rejected by Middleton, p. 544, 563, 567, who adheres to the common translation.

The "seven holy angels" or "elect angels," are generally understood by commentators to denote THE HOLY SPIRIT, of whose "seven fold gifts," they are the representatives, 1 Cor. xii. 7—11: 1. Because they occupy the place of the HOLY SPIRIT, or third person of THE GODHEAD, in the foregoing greeting and adjuration; and 2. From the prohibition of invocation of angels, Matt. iv. 10, Rev. xix. 10, xxii. 8, 9.

seems to have been fully established in the Jewish Church, at the coming of CHRIST. John evidently recorded it, as the received doctrine, when he testified that THE FATHER declared JESUS, by a voice from heaven, to be HIS BELOVED SON, and THE HOLY SPIRIT rested upon him at baptism. The doctrine is found in the Chaldee Paraphrast, and in Philo. The Jews only doubted, or denied, that JESUS was that SON.

The latter Rabbins* acknowledge that there is a remarkable mystery, couched in the various pointing of the divine name, in the Masorete text, where it is thrice repeated in the solemn blessing ordained to be pronounced upon the congregation of Israel, by Aaron and the priest, Numb. vi. 24—26.

1. " THE LORD (יהוה) bless thee and keep thee ;
2. THE LORD (יהוה) make his face shine upon thee, and be gracious unto thee ;
3. THE LORD (יהוה) lift up his face upon thee, and give thee peace."

The mystery concealed in these repetitions of the sacred name, is best, perhaps, explained by that mighty master of Hebrew learning, bred at the feet of the sage Gamaliel, the Apostle Paul, in the evangelical blessing, 2 Cor. xiii. 14.

1. " The grace of OUR LORD JESUS CHRIST,
 2. And the love of GOD,
 3. And the fellowship of THE HOLY GHOST,
- Be with you all. Amen."

And the pious Christian will thus gratefully combine both together, according to the analogy of faith.

- " GOD THE FATHER bless and keep us through his love ; GOD THE SON make his face shine upon us, and be gracious unto us through his grace ;
 GOD the HOLY GHOST lift up his face upon us, and give us peace, through his fellowship."

In the Jewish and Christian blessings, the order of the first and second clauses, we see, is reversed ; the latter, beginning

* " The Mosaic records brought down the notion of a TRINITY from the earliest ages. The modern Jews contend against this fact, that they may not seem to countenance an argument for the truth of Christianity ; but if they read their own Targums, they will see that their forefathers confessed it ; as in the following instance : " Come and see the mystery of the word ELOHIM. There are THREE DEGREES, and each degree is sole : Notwithstanding, they are ONE ; and are united into one ; nor is one of them divided from another." R. Simeon ben Jochai, in Zohar, ad 6 section. Levit. cited by Buchanan in his Christian Researches in Asia, p. 247, Edit. 2.

with THE SON; perhaps to intimate that it is by JESUS CHRIST OUR LORD, or Spiritual Sovereign, that we, sinful mortals, have “access unto THE FATHER,” or “boldness to approach Him with confidence,” “by ONE SPIRIT,” Eph. ii. 18, iii. 12. For there is but “ONE GOD [SUPREME,] and ONE MEDIATOR between GOD and man, THE MAN CHRIST JESUS, who gave himself as a ransom in the stead of all mankind,” 1 Tim. ii. 5.

The benefits we owe to the EVER BLESSED TRINITY, are distinctly intimated in the several operations of creating, redeeming, sanctifying LOVE. “Every good gift, and every perfect grace, is from above, coming down from THE FATHER OF LIGHTS [and PERFECTIONS,] (Urim and Thummim, Exod. xxviii. 30,) James i. 17. And these gifts are distributed by their joint agency. CHRIST “received gifts” from THE FATHER, which “He gave unto men,” through the HOLY SPIRIT; compare Psalm lxxviii. 18, 19, with Eph. iv. 7—10, they are thus classed, 1 Cor. xii. 4—11.

Vers. 4. For there are differences of gifts [of healings *], but THE SAME SPIRIT;

* In the first class, χαρισματα, here, (1 Cor. xii. 4,) are afterwards explained, χαρισματα ιαματων, “Gifts of healings,” ver. 28, 30, and these seem to include the cure of Demoniacs, and of all manner of diseases, by laying hands on the sick, according to the general commission; clause the fourth. These are attributed to the HOLY SPIRIT: as the infliction of diseases, for correction or punishment, was called, “to deliver up to Satan,” or the wicked spirit, 1 Cor. v. 5, Acts xiii. 9—11.

In the second class, διακονιαι, “ministries,” include the different orders and degrees of ministers in the Church; which are noticed afterwards, as “members, composing, in part, the body of CHRIST,” or the corporation of His Church.

1. Apostles, 2. Prophets, 3. Teachers, 4. Helpers, or Helpers, 5. Governments, or Governors, the abstract being put for the concrete terms, ver. 27—29. The institution of these, therefore, is attributed to CHRIST.

In the third class, ενεργηματα, are afterwards explained, ενεργηματα δυναμεων, “workings of miracles,” ver. 10, and they to whom these were distributed, are afterwards called δυναμεις, “workers of miracles,” the abstract put for the concrete, ver. 29, and the word ενεργηματα, seems to intimate, that they were impelled to the exercise of these miracles, by an inward operation of THE SPIRIT. And these, as distinguished from the other gifts, may denote those extraordinary miracles wrought by the chief Apostles, Peter and Paul, such as curing diseases by the shadow of the former, or by handkerchiefs taken from the latter, raising the dead, handling serpents, drinking deadly potions, unhurt, &c. These, therefore, are attributed to GOD.

The other gifts of the Spirit, enumerated here by the Apostle, 1. The word of wisdom, 2. The word of knowledge, 3. Faith, 4. Prophecy, 5. Discernings of spirits, 6. Different kinds of tongues, 7. Interpretation of tongues, were peculiarly necessary for the different orders and degrees of the ministry, from the highest to the lowest, in order to qualify

5. And differences of ministries [in the Church,] but THE SAME LORD.

6. And differences of workings [of miracles,] but it is THE SAME GOD who worketh all in all.

7. But to each is given the manifestation of [the gifts of] the Spirit, for the [common] advantage.

11. But all these [various gifts] worketh THE ONE AND THE SAME SPIRIT, distributing severally to each, according as HE willeth, 1 Cor. xii. 4—11. In this most mysterious passage, diversities of gifts are ascribed to the three Beings, which are all ultimately attributed to the one Being, who is called το ἐν και το αυτο Πνευμα, “THE ONE AND THE SAME SPIRIT,” and who seems to coincide with “THE FATHER OF LIGHTS, WITH WHOM IS NO VARIABLENESS NOR SHADOW OF CHANGE,” according to James i. 17, whose Hebrew name, IAH, signified “ONE AND THE SAME,” Isa. xxvi. 4, and who was described as “UNCHANGEABLE,” Mal. iii. 6. But in a subject so profound and unfathomable, how HE is solely the cause of effects, above severally ascribed to THE SPIRIT, THE LORD, and THE GOD, we know not, we understand not. See Middleton's excellent note, p. 481—483.

“The world by wisdom knew not GOD,” 1 Cor. i. 21. “Such knowledge is too wonderful and excellent for mortals; they cannot attain to it,” Psalm cxxxix. 6. It is to revelation only that we are indebted for any clear and distinct ideas of THE GODHEAD. Not affecting, therefore, to be wise above what is written, we shall proceed, with awful reverence, to sketch what THE HOLY SCRIPTURES have unfolded respecting the several Beings, (or Persons, as they are commonly styled,) who compose the “TRINITY in UNITY;” not presuming to enter into their metaphysical nature, which is alto-them for the due discharge of their respective offices and functions in the Church. And all these various gifts were distributed severally to each person, as fitted to his station, for the public good.

Lord Barrington, in his Miscellanea Sacra, has given an elaborate essay on the teaching and witness of the SPIRIT, Vol. I. p. 101—341, which contains much valuable matter; and in p. 166, a table, harmonizing the several gifts of the Spirit, scattered throughout this twelfth chapter. But it is rather perplexed and embarrassed, and in some places inaccurate; as where he supposes that “helps” answer to “prophecy,” and “governments” to “discerning of spirits.” The above attempt, it is humbly hoped, will be found clearer and plainer, and more consistent with the context, in this most abstruse and difficult part, perhaps, of the abstruse and difficult writings of St. Paul.

gether “incomprehensible * to mortals,” Matt. xi. 27, Luke x. 22.

* The creed, commonly called the Athanasian, justly declares “THE FATHER incomprehensible, THE SON incomprehensible, and the HOLY GHOST incomprehensible.” There it should have stopped, and not have plunged into the ensuing contradiction; “and yet there are not three incomprehensibles, &c. but one incomprehensible!” thus defining what was allowed to be undefineable; adopting the metaphysical subtleties and distinctions of the schoolmen, (by some of whom it was probably composed;) introducing unscriptural terms, “Trinity, coeternal, coequal,” &c. and perverting the scriptural term, “unity,” signifying union, or unanimity, (see this Vol. p. 152, note, and p. 196.) into a personal sense, and even denying the express declarations of Scripture, “and in THIS TRINITY, none is afore or after other; none is greater or less than another;” whereas, THE FATHER is “afore” the SON, in order of precedence, (Mal. i. 6,) and THE SON himself declares, “THE FATHER is greater than I,”—“is greater than all,” (John x. 29, xiv. 28;) the creed, also, inconsistently admitting afterwards, that “THE SON is inferior to THE FATHER, as touching his manhood.”

We cannot, therefore, but regret its admission from the Romish into our reformed, and truly evangelical Liturgy, and express our wish, with the honest and candid Archbishop Tillotson, that “the Church were well rid of it,” as a stumbling-block to those that are within its pale, and a scandal to those that are without, and as furnishing a specious pretext for those deplorable schisms which are now, alas, rending the vitals of the Established Church.—Unitas irrationaliter collecta hæresin facit; Trinitas rationaliter expensa veritatem constituit.—Veritatem male accipit idiotæ quisque aut perversus.—Tertull.

How widely different was the caution of that illustrious philosopher, Newton, in his admirable description of THE DEITY, in the Scholium generale of his immortal Principia, p. 528, concluding with this reflection:

“As a blind man has no idea of colours, so we have no idea of the modes in which GOD MOST WISE perceives and understands all things. He is totally void of all body, and bodily figure, and therefore can neither be seen, nor heard, nor touched; neither ought HE to be worshipped under the appearance of any thing corporeal. We have ideas of His attributes, but we know nothing at all of the substance of any thing.—We know not their intimate substances by any act of sensation or reflexion; and much less have we the remotest idea of the SUBSTANCE OF GOD. We know Him only by his properties and attributes, by the wisest and best structures of things, and by final causes. We admire him for his perfections, and we worship Him for his PROVIDENTIAL DOMINION”——“He rules all, not as the [material] soul of the world, but as [the spiritual] LORD OF THE UNIVERSE, and on account of his [universal] DOMINION, is called Παντοκράτωρ.—And from his true dominion it follows, that the TRUE GOD is [EVER-] LIVING, INTELLIGENT, and POWERFUL; from his other perfections, that He is SUPREME, or SUPREMELY PERFECT,” &c.

The following is the admirable philosophical reflexion of his illustrious predecessor, Lord Bacon.

“In the entrance of philosophy, when the second causes, most obvious to the senses, offer to the mind, we are apt to cleave unto them, and dwell too much upon them, so as to forget what is superior in nature; but when we pass further, and behold the dependency and confederacy of causes, and the works of PROVIDENCE, then, according to the poets, we easily perceive that the highest link of nature’s chain must be tied to the foot of JUPITER’S chair; that PHILOSOPHY, like Jacob’s vision, discovers to us a ladder, whose top reaches up to the footstool of the throne of GOD.”

HINC OMNE PRINCIPIUM, HUC REFER EXITUM.—Hor.

1. THE SUPREME BEING is described throughout, in the most awful, sublime, and magnificent terms our puny intellects are able to conceive. He is represented as pervading and upholding the universe, as "filling heaven and earth with his presence; the heaven of heavens cannot contain," or confine HIM, Job xi. 7—9; xxiii. 3—9; Psalm cxxxix. 1—9; 1 Kings viii. 27; Jer. xxiii. 24. He is more particularly described as being "SPIRIT," John iv. 23; "THE ONE AND THE SAME SPIRIT," 1 Cor. xii. 11; and THE FATHER of Spirits, Heb. xii. 9; He is LIGHT, and in him is no darkness at all, 1 John i. 5; THE FATHER of lights, James i. 17; He is LOVE, 1 John iv. 8, the infinite and inexhaustible source of all that is good, and fair, and lovely, throughout the universe; to whom the SON OF HIS LOVE, Col. i. 13, with the profoundest modesty and humility, ascribed all his own goodness and greatness, Matt. xix. 17, John v. 30, xiv. 28, as HIS FATHER and HIS GOD, no less than OUR FATHER and OUR GOD, John xx. 17: for we are all HIS offspring, in whom we live, and move ourselves, and are, Acts xvii. 28; THE GOD, and FATHER of OUR LORD JESUS CHRIST, 2 Cor. xi. 31, the ONE GOD and FATHER OF ALL, who is above all, and through all, and in us all, Eph. iv. 6, who is greater than all, John x. 29; The ONLY TRUE GOD, John xvii. 3; the ONLY WISE GOD, Rom. xvi. 27; the ONLY GOOD GOD, Matt. xix. 17; THE BLESSED and ONLY POTENTATE, THE KING OF THE REIGNING KINGS, and LORD OF THE RULING LORDS*, who ONLY HATH IMMORTALITY, inhabiting light inaccessible; THE KING ETERNAL, INVISIBLE, whom none of mankind saw, at any time, nor is able to see; To HIM be honour and glory for evermore. Amen. 1 Tim. i. 17; vi. 15, 16; John i. 18.

2. THE SON OF GOD is described in terms of equal grandeur and magnificence, as "THE IMAGE, or visible representative OF THE INVISIBLE GOD, the effulgence of HIS glory, the impress of HIS subsistence, upholding the universe by the dictate of HIS POWER; THE ORACLE, who was in the beginning—before the world was,—with GOD THE FATHER, and had glory with HIM before the foundation of the world, as GOD THE SON, by whom were all things made, and without whom was not any thing made that hath been; the FIRST BORN of all creation, by whom GOD made the worlds; for by Him were all things made, both in the heavens and upon the earth, visible and invisible, whether thrones, or lordships, or principalities, or authorities; all things were made by Him, and for Him; and HE is before all things, and in Him all things consist, John i. 1—18; Col. i. 15—17; Heb. i. 1—3; John xvii. 5—24.

* This is a closer rendering of the original, ὁ βασιλευς των βασιλευοντων και κυριος των κυριεοντων. The received, "THE KING OF KINGS and LORD OF LORDS," does not sufficiently discriminate this title of THE FATHER, 1 Tim. vi. 15, from "KING OF KINGS, AND LORD OF LORDS," the proper rendering of βασιλευς βασιλεων και κυριος κυριων, the title of CHRIST, Rev. xix. 16, conferred on Him by THE FATHER, Phil. ii. 9, who is "THE LORD GOD OMNIPOTENT," κυριος ὁ Θεος ὁ Παντοκρατωρ, Rev. xix. 6.

This ONLY BEGOTTEN SON OF GOD, full of grace and truth, “subsisting in form of God, reckoned to be GODLIKE, not a matter of usurpation [to be seized*, but rather of reward to be earned, and therefore] exhausted himself [of his divine form,] assuming a servile form, being born in the likeness of men. And having been found in figure as a man, HE HUMBLED HIMSELF, becoming obedient unto death, even the death of the

* Ουκ ἀρπαγμα ἡγήσατο το ειναι ισα Θεω. The phrase ισα Θεω was shewn before to be equivalent to ισοθεως, “Godlike,” (see this Vol. p. 100, note,) to which we may add these examples, τιμην δε λελογχασι ισα θεοισι. “They were allotted Godlike honour,” Odys. XI. 304. τον νυν ισα θεω Ιθακησιοι εισορωσι, “whom now the Ithacans respect as Godlike,” Odys. xv. 519.

The expression ἀρπαγμα signifies hasty “seizure” of honours or rewards, without waiting till they be duly earned, and conferred for services performed. Thus Plutarch says of Alexander the Great, ου γαρ ληστρικως την Ασιαν καταδραμων, ουδε ωσπερ ἀρπαγμα και λαφυρον ευτυχιας ανελπιστου σπαραζαι και ανασυρασθαι διανοηθεις. “For he did not, robber like, overrun Asia, nor did he design to ravage and plunder it, as a booty and spoil of unexpected good fortune.” So Æschines, μη ἀρπαζε την φιλοτιμιαν, “Seize not the meed of honour;” and Cicero, Sapiens Virtutis honorem præmium haud prædam petit. “The wise seeks the honour of virtue as a reward, and not a prey.” And so Vopiscus, Discant qui regna cupiunt, non raptum ire imperia, sed mereri; “Let the ambitious learn, not hastily to seize empires, but to deserve them.”

Horace has a remarkable passage in his praise of Pallas, the goddess of wisdom, the immediate offspring of Jove.

Unde nil majus generatur IPSO (PARENTE)
Proximos ILLI tamen occupavit
PALLAS honores.

Here Pallas is said to “occupy” as an heritage, not by usurpation, “the honours next to THE FATHER,” by a striking resemblance to her prototype, the true ORACLE, or WISDOM.

cross*. Wherefore, GOD also transcendantly exalted Him, and bestowed on Him THE NAME ABOVE EVERY NAME; that at the name of JESUS every knee should bow, of celestial, terrestrial, and infernal beings, and every tongue profess that JESUS CHRIST is LORD, to GOD THE FATHER'S glory," Phil. ii. 6—11; Rev. xix. 16.

"Though he were a SON, yet learned he obedience from his sufferings; and having been perfected [thereby] became author of eternal salvation to all that obey Him,—that look up to the author and finisher of their faith, JESUS: who, for the joy proposed to Him, endured the cross*, despising shame, and sate down on the right hand of GOD,—when HE was ordained SON OF GOD, in power, by THE SPIRIT, on his resurrection from the dead; who Himself is THE HEAD of the corporation of the Church, THE BEGINNING, THE FIRST-BORN OF THE DEAD; that he might become PRESIDENT in all; as THE FIRST, and THE LAST, and THE LIVING; who became dead, and lo! he is LIVING FOR EVERMORE, Amen, and holds the keys of Hades and of Death.—To HIM, who loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood, and made us kings and priests unto GOD HIS FATHER, be glory and dominion for evermore, Amen," Heb. v. 8, 9, xii. 2, Rom. i. 4, Col. i. 18, Rev. i. 5—18.

3. The personality of the HOLY SPIRIT, and his functions, are clearly described in the NEW TESTAMENT. He is plainly distinguished from THE FATHER and from THE SON, in the instituted form of Baptism, in the general benediction, and in the spiritual gifts and graces which He jointly confers with them, on the faithful, as we have seen. And his functions, 1. To be another advocate for us with THE FATHER, in addition to CHRIST our advocate; for HE jointly assisteth our infirmities, and intercedeth for us, with groanings unutterable, John xiv. 16, xvi. 7, 1 John ii. 1, Rom. viii. 26. 2. To be a powerful advocate with the Apostles, with the world, convincing the world, by their preaching, of sin, and righteousness, and judgment, and thereby making numerous proselytes to the

* In both these passages, Phil. ii. 8, and Heb. xii. 2, σταυρος, without the article, does not signify "a cross," or the individual cross on which Christ suffered; as imagined by Bishop Middleton, on the Greek article, p. 607, but rather that particular mode of punishment, crucifixion, as distinguished from all others.

Christian faith, John xvi. 8—11. 3. To bring all CHRIST'S sayings to their recollection, and guide them into all the truth, guarding their preaching and writings from error; and to shew them things to come, John xvi. 13; and 4. To regenerate and sanctify the faithful to the end of the world, John iii. 5, Tit. iii. 5, 1 Cor. vi. 11.

REGENERATION BY BAPTISM AND THE SPIRIT.

In steering our course through this mysterious, but most important subject, so as to avoid the opposite extremes of enthusiasm and scepticism, by which it has been either disgraced or denied, we shall be guided by the pole star of OUR LORD'S discourse with Nicodemus; which contains the fundamental doctrines of regeneration, justification, and sanctification, so important to all Christians rightly to know and understand.

This profound discourse, the occasion of which was noticed before, (see this Vol. p. 89,) opens with a respectful enquiry, on the part of Nicodemus, concerning the true way to salvation, from a divine teacher, as he acknowledged JESUS to be, from his signal miracles, both in his own opinion, and in that of others, we may suppose, the best informed.

“Rabbi, we know that thou art a teacher come from GOD; for none can do these miracles that thou doest, except GOD be with him,” John iii. 1, 2.

JESUS answered, “Verily, verily I say unto thee, except *any one be born anew, he cannot see the kingdom of GOD,” ver. 3.

This figurative new birth, OUR LORD afterwards expressed more plainly to his disciples.

“Verily, verily I say unto you, except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall by no means enter into the kingdom of heaven,” Matt. xviii. 3, for “of such is the kingdom of heaven” attainable, Matt. xix. 14; such only as resemble babes in their leading characters of humility, simplicity, innocency, and docility, John i. 48, Matt. xviii. 4, xi. 25, Luke xii. 36, Matt. xxi. 16, 1 Pet. ii. 2. So David described the MESIAH, Psalm cxxxix. 1, 2.

* The original term ανωθεν, here should be rendered “anew,” corresponding to δευτερον, “a second time,” in the next verse. The full phrase, παλιν ανωθεν, “again anew,” Gal. iv. 9, is equivalent to παλιν εκ δευτερου, “again a second time,” Matt. xxvi. 42.

Understanding this new birth literally, Nicodemus expressed his surprise: "How can a man be born when he is old? Can he enter a second time into his mother's womb, and be born?" ver. 4.

Our Lord then, in reply, explained more fully its true figurative nature, by stating the means of procuring it, and its absolute necessity to salvation, from the infirmity and corruption of human nature, or of mankind in their natural state.

"Verily, verily I say unto thee, except any one be born [anew] of water and THE SPIRIT, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God," ver. 5, 6.

By water, in this place, we understand, with the liturgy, articles, and ablest divines of the Church of England*, water-baptism, and not merely with some sectaries, symbolical purification in general, for the following reasons.

1. OUR LORD here states the necessity of a higher baptism than that of John, with which Nicodemus must have been acquainted; and the insufficiency of which, John himself acknowledged, as ministering only to repentance; whereas the ensuing baptism of CHRIST was to be more efficacious, as being the baptism of the HOLY SPIRIT, unto regeneration, as shewn before, in the foregoing article of John the Baptist. See this Vol. p. 65.

2. And this is confirmed by the analogy between our Lord's doctrine here, and in his last commission to his Apostles; in which they were expressly required to baptize all nations with water, in the name of the HOLY TRINITY, to entitle them to initiation into the kingdom of heaven, or to the privileges of the Christian covenant, of which this peculiar mode of baptism, was to be the instrument, or stipulated condition, on GOD'S part, of granting salvation; as faith is required on our part, as the indispensable condition of receiving it.

3. And if we look to the practice of the Apostles, as the best explanation of the precept in question, we shall find, that all the converts who professed their faith or belief in the efficacy of CHRIST'S atonement for the sins of mankind, were invariably baptized in token of their conversion. Such as the first fruits of the Christian Church on the day of Pentecost, who witnessed the baptism of THE SPIRIT, in the form of fire, on the Apostles and their company, as foretold by John, Acts ii. 41; Saul, or Paul, Acts xxii. 16; Simon Magus, Acts viii. 13; the Ethiopian Chamberlain, Acts viii. 25—28; Cornelius and his friends, Acts xx. 44—48; the jailor at Philippi, Acts xvi. 30—34; the twelve disciples of John the Baptist, Acts xix. 2—7, &c.

* See especially, Waterland's masterly Sermons on Regeneration and Justification by Faith, for the scriptural and orthodox doctrines of the primitive Church on these important articles. They are now scarce, and have lately been reprinted in the Churchman's Remembrancer, Vol. I. p. 1807. 8vo. Rivingtons.

4. The universality of the practice, satisfactorily explains also, the meaning of the indefinite term, τις, “any one,” in our Lord’s answer; by shewing that it must be understood universally, as equivalent to πας, “every one,” corresponding to his last commission to the Apostles, “to publish the Gospel to all the creation:—He that believeth, and is baptized, shall be saved; but he that disbelieveth, shall be damned; for “He” here signifies “whosoever,” or “every one.”

Though baptism is here considered as a necessary condition of salvation, in addition to belief; yet it is remarkable, that damnation is threatened only to disbelief, or obstinate unbelief without including the omission of baptism. This, Waterland remarks, may perhaps be a reserved case, in which GOD may dispense with the general rule of baptism, in favour of such as may not have the means or opportunity of performing this rite; as in the case of the penitent malefactor on the cross; or in sudden emergencies. At the same time, since the Christian covenant holds forth no engagement to save mankind, or make them heirs of eternal life, without the performance of this rite; baptism must be considered as the ordinary standing instrument, or conveyance of Gospel salvation on GOD’S part; and therefore, no person who neglects or despises it, can properly be entitled to those privileges. Hence Quakers, who explain away one part of the institution, water baptism, and hold only the other, the baptism of THE SPIRIT *, as if the former were only symbolical of the latter, seem to run a great risk of their salvation, by disobeying a positive rite prescribed by CHRIST, not only in his own name, but in that of the whole TRINITY, and practised by his Apostles.

The necessity of this initiatory sacrament, further appears from its symbolical nature.

Baptism, (βαπτισμα,) “dipping,” or “immersion” in water,

* As the Quakers have curtailed one part of the sacrament of baptism, so have the Romanists one part of the sacrament of the Lord’s supper, by denying the cup to the laity.

is a figurative death and burial, and “rising again,” or “emersion,” out of the water, is a figurative resurrection, Rom. vi. 3, 4, and well represents, in the scriptural language of our Church Catechism, “a death unto sin, and a new birth unto righteousness. For being by [our fleshly] nature born in sin, [or prone to sinning, and thereby] children of wrath, [or obnoxious to Divine punishment,] we are hereby [invested with a spiritual nature, ‘putting off the old man, and putting on the new,’ and] made children of grace,” [or heirs of eternal salvation, through CHRIST.] Compare Ephes. ii. 3—6, Col. iii. 1—10, Ephes. ii. 8.

Our Church, therefore, rightly considers the baptized, whether infants or adult, immediately after the ceremony is performed, as “regenerate, and grafted into the body of Christ’s Church.” See the Offices of Baptism for both.

Though no instances but of adult baptism are noticed in the NEW TESTAMENT, yet, that infant baptism was also practised from the beginning, may fairly be inferred from the analogy of this rite to that of circumcision in the patriarchal and Jewish Church, which it superseded in the Christian. And it was usually admitted within the eighth day, by the primitive Christians. Hence that admonition in our Rubrick, that “The people defer not the baptism of their children longer than the first or second Sunday, or holy day, after their birth; unless upon a great and reasonable cause.”

It was the opinion of several early Fathers of the Church, Irenæus, Tertullian, Cyril, Nazianzen, Hilary, Ammonius, Damascen, &c. that the water applied in baptism, secured, or sealed, as it were, the body to a happy resurrection; while THE SPIRIT more immediately sealed the soul; and so the whole man was understood to be cleansed, sanctified, and accepted by GOD in baptism. Which seems to be countenanced by the following texts, Titus iii. 5, Ephes. v. 25, 26, Rom. xv. 16, 1 Thess. v. 23.

Baptism once administered, is effectual unto regeneration, on GOD’s part, and need not be repeated. As there is but ONE LORD, and one faith, so there is but “one baptism” once performed, Eph. iv. 5. For as the natural birth happens but once, so does the spiritual. The grant of regeneration subsists in force after baptism, though its efficacy depends upon performance of the conditions of the covenant then made, (namely, repentance, faith, and obedience,) for the privileges may be vacated, or forfeited, unless we walk in newness of life. And lapsed converts, in Scripture, such as Simon Magus, Acts viii. 22; the revolting Churches of Asia Minor, Rev. ii. 5—16, iii. 3—19; the wicked prophetess, Jezebel, Rev. ii. 20, 21, &c. are no where exhorted to be born anew, or regenerated, after they had been once baptized; but frequently to repent, to be converted, to be renewed in the spirit of their mind, or transformed by the renewing of their mind, Acts iii. 19, Ephes. iv. 23, Rom. xii. 2, upon which they may be reinstated in their former privileges.

Hence the Anabaptists and General Baptists, who re-baptize infants after they become adult, seem to perform a work of supererogation, running into the opposite extreme from the Quakers.

RENOVATION AND SANCTIFICATION BY THE LORD'S SUPPER, AND THE SPIRIT.

Renovation, or reformation of life, is not to be confounded with regeneration. We can be born anew but once, because we can live but once in this present world. But we can rise and recover often, we can grow, and be nourished often with spiritual food, because we can fall often, and offend often, (Prov. xxiv. 16. The distinction is noticed expressly in the NEW TESTAMENT.) “We are saved by the washing, [or baptism,] of regeneration, and by the renovation of THE HOLY SPIRIT,” Tit. iii. 5; we are exhorted, as Christians, after admission into the Church, or regeneration, “to present our bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is our reasonable service: not to be conformed to this world, but to be transformed by the renewing of our mind, to approve what is the good, and acceptable, and perfect will of GOD,” Rom. xii. 1, 2. And accordingly, the reasonable service of the Church of England prays, “That we being regenerate, and made GOD’S children by adoption and grace, may daily be renewed by his HOLY SPIRIT.” Collect for Christmas day.

And this necessity of renovation after regeneration, results from the fleshly part of man’s nature: “CHRIST, indeed, in the truth of our nature, was made like unto us in all things, sin only except; from which he was clearly void, both in his flesh and in his spirit.”——“ But all we, the rest, although baptized, and born again in CHRIST, yet offend in many things.” Article XV.—“ And this infection of nature doth remain, yea in them that are regenerated; whereby the lust of the flesh, always contrary to the Spirit, (Rom. viii. 6, 7,) is not subject to the LAW OF GOD.” Article IX*.

Hence the baptismal prayer before the ceremony, “ That all carnal affections may die in him, and that all things belonging to the Spirit, may live and grow in him;” and again, after, “ that we who are [already] baptized, may continually mortify all our evil and corrupt affections, and daily proceed in all virtue and godliness of living.”

Thus does the cautious wisdom of our Church, guard against two dangerous errors of enthusiasm.

1. That regeneration is a state of sinless perfection †.

* When it is said in this ninth article, that “ original, or birth sin,”——“ in every person born into this world, deserveth GOD’s wrath and damnation ;”——to deserve, must signify “ to be liable or subject to,” as formerly “ to merit,” signified “ to obtain ;” as in the Wittenberg confession, “ We teach that good works are necessary to be done, and by the free kindness of GOD, they merit their certain rewards.” So Hooker observes of that latter, p. 25.

† Nothing can be more express, than the whole tenor of SCRIPTURE, both OLD and NEW, against this presumptuous doctrine of sinless perfection, so contrary to our just sense of the present imperfection of human nature, even in its most improved state.—“ Behold I was shapen in iniquity, and in sin did my mother conceive me,” Psalm li. 5. “ Enter not into judgment with thy servant, O LORD, for in thy sight shall no man living be justified,” Psalm cxliii. 2. “ If thou, LORD, shouldst mark iniquities, O LORD, who shall stand!” Psalm cxxx. 3. For “ there is no man that sinneth not,” either in thought, word, or deed, 1 Kings viii. 46. “ There is no just man upon earth, that doeth good, and sinneth not,” Eccles. vii. 20; “ In many things we all slip,” James iii. 2. “ If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us,” we deceive others also, 1 John i. 8. ART. XV.

When, therefore, we meet with such counter-declarations in Scripture, as that “ Noah was perfect in his generation,” Gen. vi. 9, that “ David followed GOD with all his heart, to do only what was right in His eyes,” 1 Kings xiv. 8, that “ Zecharias and his wife Elizabeth, were both righteous before GOD, walking in all the commandments and ordinances of THE LORD, blameless,” Luke i. 6, &c. we know, from their history, that they were far from “ perfect,” or absolutely “ sinless.” Such declarations, therefore, to preserve truth and consistency, must be understood in a qualified sense, as if such persons were, comparatively, perfect or blameless in their generation, though not absolutely. And when it is said, “ Every one that is born of GOD, committeth not sin, because HIS seed remaineth in him; and he cannot sin, because he is born of GOD,” 1 John iii. 9, if we suppose the Apostle to write consistently with his former declaration, he must mean that whosoever is born of GOD, by spiritual regeneration, at baptism, neither doth nor can live in the allowed commission of sin; that he cannot sin with allowance, continuance, and satisfaction to himself. For as Dr. Doddridge justly observes, “ unless the words be understood in a qualified sense, they would prove not only the sinless perfection of every regenerate person, but the impossibility of his sinning any more; contrary to reason, Scripture, and experience."

2. That the work of conversion, or renovation, (which they confound with regeneration,) is instantaneous, and produced by a sudden and irresistible *impulse of the HOLY SPIRIT upon the mind; and that it is sensible, or perceptible by the individual himself, at some particular place, and particular time †.

"The perfect Christian, indeed, according to the representation of Holy Writ, is he, who, as far as the infirmity of his nature will admit, aspires to universal holiness of life; uniformly and habitually endeavouring to stand perfect and complete in all the will of God, and to fulfil all righteousness, in humble imitation of HIS REDEEMER;—who daily and fervently prays for 'increase of faith,' like the Apostles themselves; and strenuously labours to 'add to his faith virtue, and to virtue knowledge, and to knowledge temperance, and to temperance godliness, and to godliness brotherly kindness, and to brotherly kindness charity.' Such is the assemblage of virtues necessary to constitute the character of the perfect Christian; ever aiming at, though never attaining to absolute or sinless perfection, in this present state of trial, probation, and preparation for a better; and meekly resting all his hopes of favour and acceptance with God, not on his own defective or imperfect righteousness, but on the free grace of GOD, through the redemption that is in CHRIST JESUS; for 'by grace we are saved through faith;' and this, not of ourselves, 'it is the gift of GOD;' not of works, lest any one should boast.' See my Methodism Inspected, part I. p. 30. And Dr. Magee's learned and elaborate work on Atonement, second edit. in which this question is fully and ably discussed.

* Dr. Whitehead, in his Life of Mr. John Wesley, has the following excellent remark on the pretensions "to instantaneous deliverance from all sin; giving credit to which, on the testimony of several of his followers, Mr. Wesley seems to have built thereon his doctrine of an instantaneous attainment of Christian perfection."

"This instantaneous manner of attaining perfection in the Christian temper seems to have no foundation in SCRIPTURE; it even appears contrary to reason, and to the constitution and order which God has established throughout all animated nature, where we see no instance of any thing arriving at perfection in a moment." Whitehead's Life, Vol. II. p. 291.

† Waterland, in his sermon on Regeneration, has the following profound observations.

"The setting up of a private spirit, on imaginary inspiration, as a rule of conduct, has been one of the subtlest engines of Satan in all past ages. GOD has permitted it, probably for the trial of his faithful servants, that they may be proved and exercised every way, I Cor. xi. 19, and may learn to be as much on their guard against any surprize of their understandings, as against any seduction of their wills.

"There are strong temptations inclining forward men to set up their pretensions to a private spirit. It flatters the pride, laziness, and vanity of corrupt human nature. Most men love to indulge their own way and lumour, and to get from under the sober standing rules of order, decency, and regularity. They would be their own masters and law-givers, and even make laws for others; and if they can but once persuade themselves, (and what will not blind self-love persuade a man into?) that they are full of the Spirit, Job xxii. 18, they soon grow regardless of the open laws of GOD and man, affecting to conduct both themselves and others by some secret rule of their own breasts. This is a very dangerous self-deceit, and not more dangerous than it has been common, in all ages and countries. If none but hypocrites, or ill designing men were to be drawn into this

To guard, we may presume, against such, our LORD next remarked to Nicodemus ;

“Marvel not that I said unto you, ye must needs be born anew : [as] the wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but knowest not whence it cometh, and whither it goeth ; so is every one that is born [anew] of THE SPIRIT,” ver. 7, 8.

This beautiful and apposite illustration of the mysterious nature of the agency of THE SPIRIT in regeneration, seems to have been borrowed from Solomon's illustration of the mystery of natural generation.

“As thou knowest not what is the way of the wind,
Nor [how] the bones [grow] in the womb of the pregnant ;
So thou knowest not the work of GOD,
Who maketh all things.” Eccles. xi. 5.

And the gradual growth of the spiritual life in the regenerate, as well as its imperceptibility by the individual himself, is most happily illustrated in the following parable of OUR LORD.

“So is the [preparation for the] kingdom of heaven, as if a man should cast seed into the ground ; and though he sleep by night and rise by day, [following his ordinary occupation,] yet the seed should spring and grow up, himself knoweth not how. For the ground spontaneously beareth fruit ; first the blade, then the ear, then the full corn in the ear. But when the fruit, [or grain,] is produced, immediately he sendeth the [reapers] sickle, because the harvest is ready,” Mark iv. 26—29.

In this beautiful agricultural imagery, the seed of grace and holiness is sown in the heart at baptism, by the HOLY SPIRIT ; it vegetates and grows imperceptibly, the man himself knows not how, he being utterly unconscious of the way of THE snare, the temptation would be but coarsely laid, and be less apt to deceive ; but the well-meaning pretenders to the Spirit, who through a secret unperceived self-flattery, or a complexional melancholy, first deceive themselves, they are of all men the fittest to deceive others, 2 Tim. iii. 13. Their artless simplicity, their strong and endearing professions, are very apt to win upon some of the best natured, and best disposed, though unguarded Christians ; which the Tempter knows full well, and he never exercises a deeper, or more refined policy, Rev. ii. 24, than when he can thus decoy some very sincere and devout Christians in a pious way ; turning their very graces into snares, and, as it were, foiling them with their own artillery.”

What fine painting, and intimate knowledge of the recesses of the human heart, is displayed in this masterly picture of the popular founders of schisms and leaders of sects !

SPIRIT, or his mode of operation, and can only judge by the fruits, or by his spiritual improvement, until the harvest, or general resurrection.

But although the regenerate be utterly unconscious* of the manner of his spiritual growth, he is not to be idle or inactive, as if the HOLY SPIRIT is to do every thing, and himself nothing. “Giving all diligence, he must add to his faith virtue,” or morality, and all the Christian graces, noticed as requisite to attain “a divine nature,” 2 Pet. i. 4—8: he must work out his own salvation with fear and trembling, mindful of his own inability and insufficiency without the Divine aid, and humbly acknowledging that “it is GOD who worketh in us, by HIS SPIRIT, both to will and do what is right of his own good pleasure,” Phil. ii. 12, 13.

As the sacrament of baptism is the prescribed mode of regeneration, or initiation into the privileges of the Christian covenant, so is the sacrament of the Lord’s supper, the instituted mode of renovation, sanctification, and gradual perfection of the Christian life, in the opinion of the foregoing primitive Fathers, and also of the Church of England, which, in her Catechism, states the benefits of communicating worthily to be “the strengthening and refreshing of our souls, by the body and blood of CHRIST, as our bodies are by the bread and wine.” The Lord’s supper is indeed the Christian tree of life, replanted by our gracious REDEEMER, and watered by his blood, “for the healing of the nations,” in the spiritual paradise, Rev. xxii. 1, 2.

In the primitive Church, the Lord’s supper was administered every Sunday, as intimated by the phrase of breaking bread, Acts ii. 42—46; xx. 7—11; 1 Cor. x. 6, &c. And Justin Martyr informs us, that “after they had read a portion of Scripture, sung a hymn, preached and prayed, then they proceeded to the administration of the Eucharist.” Apol. II. p. 27. In

* Some pious divines maintain a sensible witness of THE SPIRIT, or experience of his operations, from Rom. viii. 16. “THE SPIRIT itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are children of GOD.” This, perhaps, should rather be limited to the Apostle, and Roman converts, who had the first fruits of THE SPIRIT, or spiritual gifts, ver. 23. We will not, however, presume to deny, that the HOLY SPIRIT may furnish suitable consolations after a well spent life, and an assurance of God’s favour at the hour of death. But the surest criterion of “being sons of God,” is “being led by the SPIRIT OF GOD” in their conduct, ver. 14.

Cyprian's days they celebrated it both morning and evening. "That as CHRIST instituted the sacrament in the evening, to signify the evening and end of the world, so they celebrated it in the morning, to denote the resurrection of their Lord and Master." Epist. LXIII. p. 177. And so necessary did they hold the early, as well as the frequent participation of this holy rite, that at Carthage it was usual to administer it even to children. Cyprian relates, that when a nursing child disliked and refused to taste the sacramental wine, the deacon who administered it, compelled her to swallow it, notwithstanding her resistance, p. 284. This indeed was proceeding to a superstitious excess. In the present age, professing Christians run into the opposite error of omission; and, perhaps, one of the leading causes of the prevailing lukewarmness of the times, and decay of vital religion among Churchmen, is to be ascribed to the prevailing neglect and disuse of this most holy rite, by old and young, rich and poor, to their great loss and spiritual detriment.

Æque pauperibus prodest, locupletibus æque,
Æque neglectum pueris senibusque nocebit.

Nicodemus, however, still objected to this mysterious doctrine of spiritual regeneration by baptism as incomprehensible. "How can these things be?" ver. 9.

JESUS, in his turn, expressed surprise at his slowness of apprehension, mixed with a gentle reproof of his ignorance; alledging, that it was taught by the Baptist as well as by himself, and contained in the Scriptures of the OLD TESTAMENT, and with which he, as a celebrated teacher, ought to have been better acquainted.

"Art thou the teacher of Israel, and knowest not these things? Verily, verily, I say unto thee, we speak what we know, and testify what we have seen, but ye receive not our testimony," ver. 10, 11.

The rudiments, indeed, of the doctrine of regeneration are to be found scattered through the prophetic Scriptures, the substance of which was extracted by our Divine Teacher.

1. The opening of our Lord's discourse bears a remarkable analogy to the miraculous change of the elements of nature in the plagues of the Egyptians, noticed in the Apocryphal Wisdom of Solomon, xix. 6.

"For all the creation, in its proper kind, was fashioned again anew, (παλιν ανωθεν διευπουτο,) ministering to THY commands, that THY children might be preserved unhurt." But in our Lord's application, the change of the human creation is equally possible with GOD, as the change of the inanimate.

2. The fallen David, after the matter of Uriah, supplicates for a regeneration of his corrupt nature, by the influence of the HOLY SPIRIT, and explicitly states the doctrine of original sin, founded in the fleshly nature of man, even from his birth, in his penitential Psalm li. See Vol. II. p. 343.

" Wash me thoroughly from mine iniquity,
And cleanse me from my sin.—
Lo, I was shapen-in iniquity,
And in sin did my mother conceive me," &c.

Our Office of baptism, therefore, adopting this language, begins, "Forasmuch as all men are conceived and born in sin; and that our Saviour CHRIST saith, None can enter into the kingdom of heaven, except he be regenerate, and *born anew of water, and of the HOLY GHOST," &c.

3. The Prophet Jeremiah thus describes the NEW COVENANT in the regeneration of all things.

" This shall be the NEW COVENANT, which I (THE LORD)
Will make with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah.
After these days, saith THE LORD,
I will put MY LAW into their inmost parts,
And will write it upon their heart ;
And I will be their God,
And they shall be my people." Jer. xxxi. 33.

4. Ezekiel, also, more particularly describes the process of their regeneration, and their final conversion.

" Then will I sprinkle pure water upon you,
And ye shall be cleansed from all your defilements,
And I will cleanse you from all your idols.
I will also give you a new heart,
And will put into you a new spirit ;
And I will remove from your body the stony † heart,
And will give you a fleshly ‡ heart:
And I will put MY SPIRIT within you,
And will cause you to walk in My statutes,

* It is to be regretted, that our last Bible translators receded from this earlier and more correct version of John iii. 3—5.

† Hard, or obdurate.

‡ Soft, or tender.

And to keep My commandments,
 And to practise them.
 And ye shall be My people,
 And I will be your God." Ezek. xxxvi. 25—28.

This noble prophecy foretels, in explicit terms, the usage of baptism by sprinkling, that was to prevail in the Christian Church. It was practised probably in the Jewish Church, as well as immersion, on the admission of proselytes. And it is likely, that the first fruits of the Christian Church, on Whit-sunday, were rather baptized by sprinkling than by immersion, on account of the known scarcity of water at Jerusalem at that season, when the brook Kedron was dry; and of the number, three thousand, baptized in one day, Acts ii. 41. The primitive fathers founded the practice of sprinkling on this prophecy, among others*.

* The practice of infant baptism, and by sprinkling as well as by immersion, in the primitive Church, is explicitly recorded by the early Fathers.

Origen declares, " Infants are baptized for the remission of sins. Of what sins? or committed at what time? or how can there subsist any reason for the laver, in the case of infants, except according to the scriptural expressions aforesaid, ' What is man that he should be clean; and one born of a woman that he should be righteous?' Job xv. 14; and, ' When THE LORD shall have washed away the filth of the daughter of Sion, and shall have purged the blood from the midst of Jerusalem,' Isa. iv. 4. None is clean from the filth, not even if he lived but one day upon the earth. Wherefore, because through the sacrament of baptism, the impurities of childbirth are purged away, therefore are infants baptized," in Lucam, Homil. 14. And he reckons them little children (παιδια,) or infants, (νηπια,) under three or four years old. Comment. on Matt. Vol. I. p. 321.

When a scruple was raised about the time of their baptism, whether they might be baptized before the second or third day after their birth, or before the eighth day, as observed with respect to circumcision under the Mosaical economy; it was decreed at an African synod of threescore and six bishops, held A. D. 254, that " as GOD is no respecter of persons, so neither of years, since He equally offers himself as a FATHER to all, for the attainment of his heavenly grace.— An infant, therefore, newly born, is not to be prohibited, who is guilty of no sin but of original, which he contracted in his carnal descent from Adam.—And new born infants, especially, still more deserve our aid, and the Divine mercy, because at the very instant of their birth, they implore it, as it were, by their cries and tears." See the decree at length, in Lord Chancellor King's learned Worship, Ceremonies, &c. of the primitive Church, p. 47—53.

This valuable work informs us, that " baptism by immersion was reckoned more solemn, and that they dipped the person to be baptized thrice under water, once at the naming of each person of the HOLY TRINITY; that as Clemens Alexandrinus saith, by this dedication to the BLESSED TRINITY, the person baptized might be delivered from the corrupt trinity, the Devil, the world, and the flesh, and be sealed through THE FATHER, SON, and HOLY GHOST," p. 72, 78.

But in cases of necessity, immersion was dispensed with, and sprinkling used, such as sickness, approaching death, and we may presume, the weakness of infancy. And such baptism, by sprinkling, was reckoned equally valid as by immersion, as Cyprian proves,

St. Paul evidently alludes to these prophecies of Jeremiah and Ezekiel, in the following beautiful imagery, addressed to his Corinthian converts.

“Ye, through our ministry, are manifested to be an epistle of CHRIST, written, not with ink, but with THE SPIRIT OF THE LIVING GOD; not on tables of stone, [like the law at Sinai] but on the fleshly tables of the heart.” 2 Cor. iii. 3.

5. Joel, in a signal prophecy, foretold the copious and general effusion of THE HOLY SPIRIT, in the Christian dispensation; which was so applied by the Apostle Peter, on the day of Pentecost.

“And it shall come to pass, in the last days, saith THE LORD, I will pour out MY SPIRIT upon all flesh,” &c. Joel ii. 28, Acts ii. 17, &c.

Thus were the elements of the mysterious doctrine of spiritual regeneration by baptism, taught in the Scriptures of the OLD TESTAMENT; and we make no doubt, that this argument from prophecy, to which our Lord referred Nicodemus, with this honest and candid enquirer, when afterwards considered at leisure, had no less weight in confirming his faith, than the argument from miracles had in producing it originally.

The world in general, however, our Lord declared, did not receive his testimony respecting these lower mysteries, much less would they receive it respecting the higher, such as the atonement of CHRIST, justification by faith, and the general judgment to be held by Him, to which He proceeds in the sequel.

“If I told you earthly things and ye believe not, how shall ye believe if I tell you heavenly?” ver. 12.

And it is remarkable, that John the Baptist, without any personal intercourse with CHRIST, foretold the same, shortly after: “What HE hath seen and heard, [from heaven,] this He testifieth, and none receiveth His testimony,” John iii. 32.

II. But why did not the Jewish and Gentile world receive because it was never to be repeated. And he shews its validity from Ezek. xxxvi. 25, 26, Numb. xix. 19, 20, viii. 6, 7. “From whence,” says he, it appears, “that sprinkling is sufficient instead of immersion; and whenever it is performed with entire faith, both of the giver and receiver, is perfect and complete, ratified by the majesty of THE LORD, and by the truth of THE FAITH,” p. 75—77.

These considerations are well worthy of the serious attention of Quakers, Baptists, and Anabaptists.

OUR LORD'S testimony, supported as it was by John's testimony, and by such credentials of miracles and prophecy from heaven?

The question is interesting and important. And though OUR LORD, in this concise discourse, did not stop to answer it, the answer may be collected from his general testimony; namely, on account of their prejudices and their passions; to overcome which, was the great use of spiritual regeneration *.

The principal of these were spiritual pride and self-sufficiency, on the one hand, which were the grand obstacles to the reception of the GOSPEL among both Jews and Gentiles, 1 Cor. i. 23, and an affected humility on the other, which impeded its progress, after it had been received among enthusiasts and fanatics, ascribing every thing to faith, and nothing to works, in the business of salvation, and trusting to other mediators with GOD beside CHRIST, Col. ii. 18.

1. The Jews, in general, were remarkable for their pride. They boasted that they were "Abraham's children" exclusively, the sole heirs of the temporal and spiritual promises made to him and his seed; this made them despise the Gentiles, as "born in fornication," or a spurious seed, and like "dogs" or "stones," either unworthy or incapable of admission into the land of promise and the kingdom of heaven. Among the Jews themselves, the sect of the Pharisees, were remarkable for their self-sufficiency and superciliousness, "they trusted in themselves that they were righteous, and despised others," even of their own nation, as "holier than they," and more knowing in the law. "This people, who know not the law, are accursed †!"—"Thou wast altogether born in sin †, and dost thou presume to teach

* OUR LORD happily illustrated this in the following parable. "Men do not put new wine into old leathern bottles; otherwise, the bottles are burst, [by the fermentation,] and the wine is spilled, and the bottles will be spoiled: but they put new wine into new leathern bottles, and both are preserved," Matt. ix. 17.

† The Pharisees seem to have been the first broachers of the revolting doctrine of absolute predestination, or of the unconditional election of some individuals to happiness, and reprobation of others to misery, in the Divine decrees; without any regard to their obedience or disobedience.

This horrible doctrine is repugnant to the all-embracing goodness and benevolence of THE DEITY, whose tender mercies are over all his works; who is no respector of persons, bloods, or favoured classes of men, but in every nation, who-oever feareth HIM, and worketh righteousness, according to their lights, or means of information, is acceptable unto HIM; and it is equally injurious to mankind, ingendering either vain presumption us!" and they excommunicated, without mercy, those that dared to dissent from their dogmas and decisions, as heretics. And on the one hand, or groundless despair on the other; which sets aside the atonement of CHRIST for all men, and the necessity of a REDEEMER for any, and is equally adverse to reason and Scripture, rightly understood. It appears to have originated from the misinterpretation of some particular passages in the Scriptures of the OLD TESTAMENT.

I. When GOD entered into covenant with the Jews, he promised that "they should be a peculiar treasure unto him, above all people," as "the repositories of his oracles," destined to preserve the knowledge and worship of the TRUE GOD, amidst the reigning corruptions of polytheism and idolatry; "though all the earth be his," Exod. xix. 5, 6, xx. 2—6; Acts vii. 38; Rom. iii. 2. Not adverting to this last clause, representing GOD as THE FATHER OF ALL, "the GOD of the spirits of all flesh," Numb. xvi. 22, xxvii. 16, the pharisaical Church considered the Gentiles as aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, reprobate, and rejected from their peculiar privileges. And the association of the Gentiles into the Church of CHRIST, was the most revolting doctrine to the Judicizing Christians of all others; forgetting that "in Abraham's seed, (which was CHRIST,) all the nations of the earth were promised to be blessed," Gen. xxii. 18.

2. This decree of election and reprobation they extended even to individuals of their own nation, from the following text of Malachi, i. 1, 2. "Jacob I have loved, but Esau have I hated;" which was not meant of the individuals themselves, but of their respective families or nations; of whom it was foretold by the Oracle, that "the elder should serve the younger," Gen. xxv. 23, which, though true of the nations, was the reverse of the individuals; for "Jacob" served, or paid homage to "Esau," Gen. xxxiii. 3—11.

This doctrine of absolute predestination nearly corresponded to the absolute fate or necessity of the Stoics, which, according to their degrading notion, controuled even the DEITY himself.

It was afterwards embraced by the Manichean Heretics, in the East, and by Augustine in the West. From the former, it was adopted by the Mahometans, and retained till the present day. From the latter, it was adopted by the Romanists; though several of their Doctors, especially among the Jesuits, either deny Augustine's doctrine, or contend that it is not rightly interpreted.

From the Church of Rome it was borrowed by the first Reformers, Luther and Calvin; but Luther afterwards changed his sentiments, by the arguments of Melancthon; and the moderate Calvinists at present, as well as the Lutherans in general, nearly subscribe to the five Arminian articles, submitted to the decision of the Synod at Dort, though rejected by that council, through the influence of the Calvinist party, in 1618 and 1619.

These five articles are as follows.

I. "That GOD, from all eternity, has elected to eternal life, those that believe in CHRIST, and continue in faith and obedience; and on the contrary, that He resolved to reject unbelievers and impenitent sinners," [Matt. xxv. 34—41, Acts xiii. 48, Rom. viii. 29, 30, Eph. i. 4—6, 2 Tim. i. 9, 1 Thess. v. 9, &c.]

II. "That consequently, JESUS CHRIST, the SAVIOUR OF THE WORLD, died for all men, so that he has obtained by his death, their reconciliation, and the forgiveness of their sins; but in such a manner, that none but the faithful actually enjoy those benefits," [John iii. 16, 2 Tim. ii. 4, 2 Cor. v. 15—19, Col. i. 20, 1 John iii. 9, 10, &c. John iii. 36, Ephes. ii. 3, Mark xvi. 16, John xii. 48.]

III. "That man cannot acquire saving faith of himself, or by the strength of his free will; but he wants, for that purpose the grace of GOD, through JESUS CHRIST," [John i. 13, iii. 5, Ephes. ii. 8, 9, Phil. i. 29, ii. 12, 13, 2 Cor. iii. 5, ix. 8, John xv. 5.]

so high did they stand in the popular estimation for extraordinary sanctity, that the saying was proverbial, "If only two men should enter into the kingdom of heaven, the one would be a Scribe, and the other a Pharisee."

The Sadducees, who formed a powerful party among the rulers, were downright Infidels, and ridiculed the doctrine of the resurrection, and a future state of retribution, which were the chief points insisted on in the Gospel. Caiaphas, the high Priest, and several of the chief Priests also, at that time, were Sadducees.

2. Among the Gentiles, the Stoic philosophers strongly resembled the Pharisees, and the Epicureans the Sadducees; and they were still more hostile to the reception of a Gospel founded on the resurrection of a crucified Saviour, and that Saviour a Jew, a nation at that time held in general odium and contempt. The Stoics, in particular, were so high-minded, maintaining not only the dignity of man, but even the divinity of *human nature, as a part of their material Deity, the Æther, or soul of the world,

IV. "That this grace is the cause of the beginning, progress, and completion of man's salvation; so that nobody can believe, nor persevere in the faith, without that co-operating grace; and consequently, that all good works are to be ascribed to the grace of God, in JESUS CHRIST. But that grace is not irresistible," [Matt. xxiv. 13, Luke xxi. 19, 1 Cor. ii. 3, Phil. iv. 13, 2 Cor. xii. 9, 1 Cor. ix. 27, Heb. ii. 1, 2 Pet. ii. 21, James iv. 17, Heb. x. 26, Matt. xii. 45, v. 13, &c.]

V. "That the faithful have a sufficient strength, through the Divine grace, to oppose Satan, sin, the world, and their own flesh, and to overcome them," [John xvi. 33, 1 John v. 5, iv. 4, James iv. 7, 1 Pet. v. 8, 9, Rom. viii. 13, Col. iii. 5.]

As for this question, "Whether men through their negligence can renounce true faith, lose a good conscience, and deprive themselves of the grace of God," the authors of that Remonstrance, (Episcopius, &c.) said, it was a matter to be further examined; but afterwards they declared, "Those who have a true faith, may, nevertheless, fall, by their own fault, and lose faith, wholly and for ever." See the cases of Judas, Ananias and Sapphira, Simon Magus, Felix, &c.

They who would wish to see a summary of the rigid Calvinist doctrine of predestination, may find it in Brandt's History of the Reformation in the Netherlands, abridged by De La Roche, along with these Articles, Vol. I. p. 306—308.

The seventeenth Article of the Church of England seems to be drawn up, nearly in the spirit of these Arminian Articles of the Remonstrants, which was also the doctrine of the Reformatio Legum Ecclesiasticarum, published in Edward VI's reign. De Prædestinatione, cap. xxii. p. 20. edit. 1640.

* Among the arguments adduced by the Stoics to prove the immortality of the soul, the principal, according to Cicero was its supposed divine nature: he thus states it in his Tusculan Questions, I. 25. Ergo animus, ut ego dico, divinus est; ut Euripides audet dicere, deus. Et quidem si Deus, aut anima, (air) aut ignis (fire) est, idem est animus hominum. Their supreme God was the Æther; as shewn in my Analysis Fluxionum, Appendix, 11.

and the sufficiency of reason to discover the whole of their duty, and plumed themselves so much on their *good morals, that they could not easily relish the notion of a Divine Teacher, or the necessity of a REDEEMER.

Nearly allied to the Stoics, were the Pelagians, and the modern Deists †, undervaluing Revelation, as superfluous and unnecessary, and alledging that Christianity was as old as the creation; and boasting of their morality in opposition to Gospel faith and Gospel obedience.

The Schoolmen and Romanists going beyond these, maintained a grace of congruity in works before justification, and a merit of condignity after; and even held works of supererogation, or more than were necessary to salvation. Whence the doctrine of justification by faith alone, that is to say, “by the alone merits and cross of CHRIST,” as Bishop Jewell interprets it, came to be a distinguishing principle of the REFORMATION. See our Articles, XI, XII, XIII, XV.

This important doctrine OUR LORD next proceeds to explain.

JUSTIFICATION BY FAITH.

It is introduced with much solemnity, as of heavenly origin, which no human teacher could discover. “And none hath ascended into heaven, to learn it, but he that descended from heaven to teach it, THE SON OF MAN, who was † in heaven,” ver. 13.

* Augustine thus represents the reasonings of these Pagan philosophers, nearly in the strain of the Pharisee praying in the temple.

“Many of them boast of their works. And I have found many who did not chuse to become Christians, because they deemed themselves sufficient to lead a good life. It is requisite, say they, to live well, why then should CHRIST enjoin me to live well? I live well already. What need have I of CHRIST? I commit no murder, no theft, no robbery: I covet not another’s goods; I am polluted by no adultery. Whosoever can discover any thing blameable in my life, let him make me a Christian.” Tom. iv. p. 171.

† The leading principle of the Deists, is comprized by Lord Herbert, in his Religio Gentilium, in this distich,

Haud crucient animum quæ circa Religionem
Vexantur lites: Sit modo vita proba.

Which Pope adopted, and thus translated in his Moral Essays,

“For modes of faith, let graceless Bigots fight:
His can’t be wrong, whose life is in the right.”

‡ Here the participle was, is indefinite, and to be rendered “was.” It is so rendered John ix. 25, xii. 17; and in a parallel passage afterwards, OUR LORD declares, “If,

The title of THE SON OF MAN, here assumed the second time by our Lord, and first after his own baptism, John i. 51, referring to the signal prophecy of Daniel, vii. 13, was appropriated to CHRIST, the SON OF GOD.

He then proceeds to lay the foundation of the doctrine, in the fulfilment of that remarkable type of the Jewish law, the Brazen Serpent, prefigurative of his own crucifixion, as the instituted means of the salvation of mankind; to which he had mysteriously alluded at the foregoing passover, “Destroy this temple,” &c. John ii. 19.

“For as Moses set up the [brazen] serpent [upon a pole,] in the wilderness, [that every one of the people, mortally bitten by the flying serpents, who looked thereon with the eye of faith, might be healed, Numb. xxi. 6—9.] So the SON OF MAN, [before he shall enter into his glory, Dan. vii. 14, Luke xxiv. 26,] must needs be set up, [on the cross,] to the end that every one, [Jew or Gentile,] that believeth on Him, should not perish, [by the snare of the old Serpent, the Devil, who brought death into the world,] but might have eternal life,” ver. 14, 15.

And Nicodemus might have so interpreted this designedly mysterious passage from the Scriptures, and the Jewish comments.

The Book of Wisdom calls the brazen serpent “a sign or symbol of salvation, to put them in mind of the commandment of the law; for he that turned himself toward it was not saved then, ye shall see THE SON OF MAN ascending where he was before, (ὅπου ἦν το προτερον,) [will ye then believe?] John vi. 62.

This usage of the participle may also be defended by classical authority :

Ὅς ἦδει τα τ' εοντα, τα τ' εσσομενα, ΠΡΟ τ' ΕΟΝΤΑ.

“Who knew both the present, and the future, and the past.”—HOMER.

“This example,” as Dr. Middleton judiciously observes, “tends to confirm the opinion of those grammarians, who make εων to have been originally a participle of a past tense; though even so early as in Homer's time, this acceptance seems not to have been sufficiently intelligible without the aid of the preposition προ; that τα τ' εοντα, by itself, would be understood of things present, is evident from this very passage, and from many others of Homer.” Doctrine of the Greek Article, p. 43, note.

And nothing is more common in the sacred and profane historians, than the enallage of the present tense for the past; Thus φαινεται signifies “appeared,” Matt. ii. 13; επιλαμβανεται, “he assumed,” Heb. ii. 16, &c. See Glassii Philologia sacra. Canon XLVIII. p. 432.

We hesitate not, therefore, to render ων, “was,” in this important text, even though recommended by Socinus, as Dr. Middleton observes, p. 699.

by the thing that he saw, but by THEE, who art the SAVIOUR OF ALL," Wisd. xvi. 6, 7. And the Paraphrase of Jonathan on Numb. xvi. 6—9, thus explains, "It came to pass, that if a serpent had bitten any man, when he beheld the brazen serpent, he lived, provided he directed his heart to THE ORACLE OF GOD." Hence arose the tradition of the Jews, "that as the bites of the fiery serpents were cured by the Israelites looking up to the brazen serpent, so shall the bites of the old Serpent, inflicted on Adam and his posterity, be cured in the time of THE MESSIAH."

This illustration of OUR LORD leads us to the true nature of that saving faith, which it was designed to recommend. As the faith of the Israelites was a full trust that their bites should be healed, only by looking attentively on the brazen serpent, so the faith of Christians is a full trust, or firm persuasion, that their sins shall be forgiven, by looking to the atonement of CHRIST on the cross.

It is, therefore, a pure act of the mind, independent of works performed, either before or after.

Such was also the primitive patriarchal faith of Enoch, Noah, Job, Abraham, Moses, &c. which was counted to them for righteousness or justification in the sight of God; namely, a firm trust and belief in a future REDEEMER; by which they were not only acquitted, or absolved from their sins past, but, moreover, were accepted by God, as if they had been actually righteous, and never had offended, and made heirs of eternal life, to which no obedience of their own could have entitled them.

It is concisely, but critically defined by Paul, Heb. xi. 1. "Faith is a subsistence of things hoped for, a conviction of things not [yet] seen."

It is, indeed, a pure act of the mind, which, by anticipation, gives "a subsistence" to future blessings, as if they were already existing; "a conviction," or firm persuasion of their certainty, as if they were actually seen. See Chrysostom's admirable commentary thereon, p. 145, note.

In the Apostle's definition, the two last words, ου βλεπομενων, are understood in the sense of ουπω βλεπομενων, "not yet seen," as in the case of Noah afterwards, who, when oracularly warned of the ensuing deluge, though not yet seen, (μηδεπω βλεπομενων), being moved with fear, built an ark for the preservation of his family, ver. 7.

And that this is a correct explanation of the Apostle's definition may further appear from some remarkable cases, both of the OLD and NEW TESTAMENT.

Job declared, "I know that my REDEEMER is living, and that at the last day he will arise in judgment upon dust, or mankind," (see Vol. II. p. 76.) Thus expressing the fulness of his assurance of the certainty of the future general judgment."

"The Patriarchs all died in faith, not having received the promises, [temporal and spiritual,] but having been persuaded [of their certainty,] and embracing them [as true,]" Heb. xi. 13, (see Vol. II. p. 29.)

Thus Abraham longed to see CHRIST'S day, [or his appearance in the flesh, as the blessed Seed, in whom all the nations of the earth should be blessed,] and he saw it [with the eye of faith, or in prophetic vision,] and was glad," John viii. 56, (see Vol. II. p. 25.)

Balaam also, the Heathen diviner, "saw, but not now, he beheld, but not nigh, the star and sceptre," of the blessed Seed, CHRIST, in prophetic vision; which his posterity, the pious Parthian Magi, actually saw long after, and rejoiced with exceeding great joy; collecting also, we may presume, from the partial accomplishment of the prophecy, that the whole of the gracious promise would be fulfilled in due season, (see Vol. II. p. 207, Vol. III. p. 56.)

Such also, in particular cases, was the nature of the faith of the Roman centurion and Syrophenician woman, extolled by CHRIST himself; namely, a firm belief or persuasion that CHRIST was fully able, by his divine power and authority, to cure the sick, though absent and at a distance, by a word or command, before they saw the cure actually performed. (See this Vol. p. 98, 128.)

Justifying or saving faith, therefore, is a simple act of the mind, or assent of the understanding, to the redemption through CHRIST. It is a single Christian virtue, and the basis of the rest, as distinguished from hope and charity, 1 Cor. xiii. 13; and as distinguished also from THE FAITH in general, or the Christian religion, including the belief and profession of the GOSPEL. These different acceptations of the word are material and the neglect of them has produced much confusion and perplexity in mystical * writers on the subject. For the general sense of the word faith see Acts xxiv. 24, 25; Rom. i. 8; Gal. i. 23; 1 Tim. v. 8; Jude 20, &c.

OUR LORD next informed Nicodemus that this justifying faith originated from the sole and gratuitous benevolence of THE DEITY to mankind, and also its absolute necessity to salvation on their part.

“ For GOD so loved † the world that he gave his ONLY BEGOTTEN SON, to the end that every one who believeth on him, [whether Jew or Gentile,] should not perish, but have eternal life,” ver. 16.

“ For GOD sent not HIS SON into the world, [at first, in the flesh,] to judge the world, but that the world through him, [or his death,] might be saved. He that believeth on him is not to be judged, [at the last day,] but he that believeth not, hath been

* Take the following sample from Madan's translation of Witsius's Treatise of Faith.

“ Faith is not any single habit or act of the soul, nor ought it to be restrained to one faculty thereof only, but it is something made up of various acts, which, though not in a confused manner, may interfere one with the other, and in a kind of delightful fellowship and union, promote and help each other, and this constantly. It imports a change of the whole man, is the spring of the whole spiritual life; and, lastly, it denotes a holy diligence and energy of the whole soul towards GOD in CHRIST; so that its full compass can scarcely be comprehended in a distinct manner under any one single idea.”

This is called “ a plain account of faith! ”

† The finest comment, perhaps, on this noble expression of all the benevolence of Divine goodness toward mankind, 2 Thess. i. 11, and the fullest refutation of the gloomy and revolting doctrine of absolute reprobation, is furnished by the following argument against it, drawn from the infinite POWER of the CREATOR OF ALL, which could have no inducement to will the misery of His creatures, by the sage author of the wisdom of Solomon, probably to counteract this doctrine at its rise, in the reformed Jewish Church.
Wisd. XI. 23—26.

“ For THOU pitiest all men,
Because Thou art ALL POWERFUL ;
And overlookest their sins,
Upon their repentance.
For Thou lovest all things that exist,
And abhorrest nothing that Thou hast made.
For hadst thou hated,
Thou wouldst not have formed any thing :
And how could any thing have endured,
Had it not been THY WILL ?
Or how could it have been preserved,
Unless called by THEE ?
But THOU sparest all, because all things are Thine, O LORD, THOU LOVER OF SOULS.”

judged already, (ἡδὴ κερκεται.) because he hath not believed on the name of the ONLY BEGOTTEN SON OF GOD," ver. 17, 18.

Here, by a usual anticipation, the future event of the general judgment, is represented as already come, to mark its absolute and infallible certainty, in the fulness of time. See John v. 24 ; Heb. xii. 22 ; Rom. viii. 28—30.

And our Lord concludes this interesting and awakening discourse, with stating "the grounds of the general judgment," in the vices of mankind ; which led, and would lead them, to hate and avoid the light of THE GOSPEL ; whereas the well doer readily came to seek it, and to shew that his works were wrought in GOD, ver. 19—21. Thus ending, probably, with an oblique commendation of Nicodemus himself, as a well doer, in thus seeking the light at the fountain head, and afterwards shewing the soundness and sincerity of his faith, by his labour of love in the LORD.

OUR LORD'S concise doctrine of justification by faith, is thus explained and illustrated by his Apostles.

Paul declares, "We are justified freely by GOD'S grace, through the redemption in JESUS CHRIST," Rom. iii. 21 ; for "GOD approved his love towards us, that while we were yet *sinner*s, CHRIST died for us," Rom. v. 8 ; and this, by his own gracious act ; for "CHRIST loved us also, and gave up himself for us, an offering and sacrifice to GOD, for a fragrant savour," Eph. v. 2 ; "while we were enemies we were reconciled to GOD by the death of HIS SON," Rom. v. 10.

It is truly remarkable, that GOD is no where in Scripture said to be reconciled to us ; but we, every where, to be reconciled to GOD, "when we were dead in trespasses and sins," 2 Cor. v. 18—20 ; Eph. ii. 1 ; Col. ii. 13. OUR HEAVENLY FATHER, indeed, is always ready and willing to receive with tenderness and joy, every prodigal son, who shall "come to himself," and with hearty repentance, and true faith, return to him, and humbly entreat to be restored to his household, of his true bounty, not our deserts. "For by grace we are saved, through faith ; and this, not of ourselves : it is the gift of GOD, not [the reward] of works ; that none should boast," Ephes. ii. 8, 9. "We reckon, therefore, that a man is justified by faith, without the works of the Law," Rom. iii. 28.

In this last passage, the Apostle is usually understood to mean the ceremonial works of the law of Moses, circumcision, sacrifices *, &c. but that he meant to include the moral works, both of the law of Moses, and of the law of nature, is evident from his reckoning “all under sin, both Jews and Greeks,” for their gross violations of moral and religious duties ; “not having the fear of GOD before their eyes ;” that “every mouth might be stopped” [from boasting,] “and all the world be made liable to punishment from GOD,” Rom. iii. 9—19. Compare Ephes. ii. 3.

And the tenor of his argument necessarily includes evangelical works also ; “for, if justification could come even of such, without taking in faith in the meritorious sufferings and satisfaction of a MEDIATOR, then might we have whereof to boast, or to glory, (Eph. ii. 9 ; Rom. iv. 2.) And then it might be justly said, that CHRIST died in vain,” (Gal. ii. 21.)

And this judicious exposition of Waterland, p. 44, is confirmed by the high authority of Clemens Romanus, the intimate friend of the Apostle Paul, (Phil. iv. 3,) one of the most eminent of the “saints at Rome,” to whom this Epistle was addressed, (Rom. i. 17,) in the following passage, which he cites in the original.

“The ancient Patriarchs, [Abraham, &c.] were all, therefore, greatly glorified and magnified ; not for their own sake, or for their own works, or for the righteousness which they themselves wrought, but through HIS good pleasure. And we [Christians] also, being called, through his good pleasure in CHRIST JESUS, are not justified by ourselves, neither by our own wisdom, or knowledge, or piety, or the works which we have done in holiness of heart, but by that faith by which THE ALMIGHTY GOD justified all, from the beginning of the world.” Epist. I. c. 32.

The profound Hooker gives a similar explanation of the doctrine, in his Discourse on Justification by Faith.

“GOD doth justify the believing man, yet not for the worthiness of his belief, but for the worthiness of HIM which is believed ; GOD rewardeth abundantly every one which worketh, yet not for any meritorious dignity which is, or can be in the work, but through HIS mercy, by whose commandment he worketh.”——“The best things which we can do, have some- thing in them to be pardoned. How then can we do any thing meritorious, or worthy to be rewarded? Indeed, God doth liberally promise whatsoever appertaineth to a blessed life, to as many as sincerely keep His law, though they be not exactly able to keep it. Wherefore, we acknowledge a dutiful necessity of doing well, but the meritorious dignity of doing well, we utterly renounce.”——“ Our doctrine, in truth, is no other than we have learned at the feet of CHRIST,” p. 21, 34. And we may add, it is also the doctrine of our Articles, XI. XIII.

* See Bishop Bull's Harmonia Apostolica, or its abridgment in Wells' New Testament, preface to the Epistles.

The shortest, plainest, and fullest account, perhaps any where to be found, of this abstruse but most important doctrine, is furnished by the pious and learned Bishop *Hopkins, in the following passages.

“ Justification is a gracious act of GOD, whereby, through the righteousness of CHRIST’S satisfaction imputed, He freely remits to the believing sinner, the guilt and punishment of his sins : and, [moreover,] through the righteousness of CHRIST’S perfect obedience, imputed, He accounts him righteous, and accepts him into love and favour, and unto eternal life.”

“ This is justification, which is the very sum and faith of the whole GOSPEL, and the only end of the COVENANT OF GRACE.” For wherefore was there such a covenant made with us, through CHRIST, but as St. Paul tells us, Acts xiii. 39, “ that by HIM, all that believe might be justified from all things, which they could not be justified from by the law of Moses.”——And he proves that justification is equivalent to salvation, by the following syllogism.

If the righteousness of CHRIST be made thine, thou shalt be saved ; If thou believest, the righteousness of Christ shall be made thine ; therefore, If thou believest, (from first to last,) thou shalt be saved.——“ When, therefore, a sinner, being on one hand thoroughly convinced of his sins, of the wrath of GOD due to him for them, (Rom. ii. 8, 9,) of his utter inability either to escape, or bear this wrath, (Rom. vii. 24,) and on the other hand, being likewise convinced of the sufficiency, willingness, and designation of CHRIST to satisfy justice, and to reconcile and save sinners, (Rom. vii. 25,) doth hereby yield a firm assent unto these truths revealed in THE SCRIPTURES ; and doth also accept and receive JESUS CHRIST in all his offices, as his PRO-

* See a new edition of his works, lately published, Vol. II. p. 382—386.

PHET, resolving to attend to his teaching, as his LORD and KING, resolving to obey his commands, and as his PRIEST, resolving to rely upon his sacrifice alone, and doth accordingly submit to him, and confide in Him sincerely and perseveringly; this is that faith which doth justify, and will certainly save all those in whom it is wrought."

This is indeed a plain, rational, and Scriptural account of a doctrine which is the corner-stone of CHRISTIANITY, and the foundation of the REFORMATION.

II. The strong and emphatic expressions of SCRIPTURE, and of the primitive Fathers, stating the utter inability of works to justify us, as a meritorious cause; that "whatsoever is not from faith, is sin," Rom. xiv. 23, which our Article XIII. understands of works before justification; and the slanderous misrepresentation of the Apostle's doctrine, as if he affirmed that GOD permitted the Gentiles "to do evil, that good may come," or that his "grace may abound to sinners," which he deprecates, "GOD forbid!" Rom. iii. 8, vi. 1, gave rise, even in the Apostle's days, to the opposite error of an affected humility, resolving the whole business of justification into "faith alone, not only without works," but even exclusive of works; for "that all our righteousnesses are as filthy rags," not only not acceptable, but even offensive to GOD; and equally unnecessary and insufficient to cover our nakedness in his sight, before whom "no man living shall be justified" by his own righteousness, Psalm cxliii. 2.

Hence "sprung up" early in the Church, "the tares," the licentious and immoral sects of the Solifidians and Antinomians, as they were called, from "resting solely in faith," and "reprobating the law of works;" and the Libertines, who were guilty of the most scandalous excesses, "abusing their gospel liberty as a cloak of licentiousness *," "through the ignorance of senseless men," enthusiasts and fanatics, 1 Pet. ii. 15, 16.

It is also remarkable that the same mischievous sect sprouted up again at the revival of pure Christianity, at the auspicious era of the REFORMATION, as will be shewn hereafter. The same mischievous errors are still to be found among the schismatical sects that disgrace our land of liberty.

Hence it became expedient, both for correction of reigning errors, and anticipation of future, to state in HOLY WRIT the sacred and indissoluble union of faith and works as jointly necessary to salvation.

* Libertati præsidia quærentes, non licentia, ad impugnandum alios. Livii III. 53.

JUSTIFICATION BY FAITH AND WORKS.

1. OUR LORD declares, "By thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned," Matt. xii. 37; words intimating the thoughts and intentions of the heart, and forming no inconsiderable branch of actions, Matt. xv. 19, whence "words" and "things" were considered as synonymous in the Hebrew language, and are both expressed by the word dabar. And that OUR LORD meant both is evident from the following: "Why call ye me LORD, LORD, [expressive of your faith,] and do not the things that I say?" Luke vi. 46. "Many shall say to me in that day [of judgment,] LORD, LORD, have we not prophesied in thy name? and expelled demons in thy name? and done many mighty works in thy name? Then will I profess to them, I never knew you, [or acknowledged you as my disciples,] depart from me all ye that work iniquity," Matt. vii. 21—23. This is an awful and awakening declaration, intimating the insufficiency of the highest degrees of faith, even the miraculous, without good works, to procure salvation.

In like manner Paul declares, and evidently in allusion thereto, "Though I have the gift of prophecy, and know all mysteries and all knowledge, and though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains figuratively, or work the greatest miracles, (Matt. xi. 23,) and have not charity, I am nothing," or of no value in the sight of God, 1 Cor. xiii. 2. "This is a faithful saying, and I desire thee firmly to maintain (διαβεβαιωσθαι,) that they who have believed in GOD be careful to practise good works," Tit. iii. 8.

This illustrious Apostle seems to have been aware of the false construction that had been or might be put upon his earlier epistles, especially to the Romans and Galatians, which were rather of a controversial nature, designed to remove the leaven of Judaism, that principally prevailed in those "high minded" Churches, (Rom. xi. 20, Gal. iii. 1.) Hence he so strongly insists on the indispensable necessity of good works to salvation. "Follow holiness, without which no man shall see THE LORD," Heb. xii. 14; "Being freed from [the punishment and dominion of] sin, and made servants to GOD, [by faith] ye have your fruit in holiness, and the end everlasting life," Rom. vi. 22. Here the first requisite for the final attainment of salvation, or everlasting life, is the righteousness of justification; the second, the righteousness of sanctification, as critically remarked by Hooker, p. 20.

And to guard the faithful from these dangerous errors of the Solifidians and Antinomians, seems to have been a leading design of the practical epistles of Peter and James, of whom the former may refer to his doctrine of justification, among the things hard to be understood in Paul's Epistles, 2 Pet. iii. 16, and the latter expressly combats its abuse, James ii. 24.

3. Peter thus enumerates the good works that are the necessary appendages of faith.

“ Giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue or morality, or probity of manners, (Phil. iv. 8; 1 Cor. xv. 33,) and to virtue knowledge or discretion (Col. iv. 5; Matt. x. 16,) and to knowledge temperance, or moderation in prosperity, (Gal. v. 23,) and to temperance patience in tribulation, or resignation in adversity, (Rom. xii. 12, v. 3,) and to patience godliness, or piety toward GOD, (Acts iii. 12; Tit. ii. 12,) and to godliness brotherly love toward fellow Christians, (John xiii. 35; Rom. xii. 10,) and to brotherly love charity toward all mankind, for GOD and CHRIST'S sake, which is the end or completion of the law, and the bond of perfectness, (1 Tim. i. 5; Rom. xiii. 10; Col. iii. 14;) 2 Pet. i. 5—7.

It is the just and ingenious remark of Paley, in his Moral Philosophy, (Art. Virtue,) that the Apostle here enumerates the virtues collectively, the practice of all being necessary to salvation; but that vices are enumerated disjunctively, as separately and severally excluding the habitual sinner from heaven.

“ Neither fornicators, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor abusers of themselves with mankind, nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor extortioners, shall inherit the kingdom of GOD,” 1 Cor. vi. 9, 10.

4. James also teaches the same doctrine. He carefully distinguishes mere speculative or dead faith from operative and lively. The former even “ the demons profess,” for “ they believe and tremble ;” and he considers good works as the proper evidence of faith; “ shew me thy faith without thy works, and I will shew thee my faith by my works,” and insists on the necessity of complete and perfect obedience. “ Whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one [point,] is guilty of all," that is, he is equally obnoxious to punishment, (ενοχος,) though not in so high a degree, as if he had broken the whole law; for every command of God is equally binding, and therefore the wilful breach of any one, even the least, is a violation of the authority that enacted the whole, and shall be punished accordingly, as our Lord himself declares, Matt. v. 19. Hence he infers the joint necessity of faith and obedience, "Ye see then that a man is justified by works, and not by faith only," James ii. 10—24.

And the inseparable connexion of faith and works was sedulously inculcated by our early divines, one of whom thus quaintly expounds the doctrine, Justificamur per fidem solam, sed non per fidem solitariam, or according to his own translation, "We are justified by faith alone, but not by that faith which is alone," or exclusive of good works.

And Burkitt well observes, "What GOD hath joined none must divide; and what GOD hath divided none must join: he hath separated faith and works in the business of justification; and he hath joined them in the lives of justified persons," or in the business of sanctification. Indeed, as well expressed in our XIIth Article, "Good works do spring necessarily out of a true and lively faith, insomuch that by them a lively faith may be as evidently known, as a tree discerned by the fruit;" according to OUR LORD'S illustration, Matt. vii. 16—20, adopted by James, iii. 12.

We next proceed to analyze the duties of the Gospel, respecting GOD and man; which naturally follow the consideration of its mysteries.

II. THE DUTIES OF THE GOSPEL.

"The LAW was our school-master [to discipline us] unto CHRIST; but THE FAITH being come, [or the Christian religion once established,] we are no longer under a school-master," Gal. iii. 24, 25.

The LAW, therefore, was only preparatory to the higher dispensation of the GOSPEL, and was not of perpetual obligation. It was designed to be superseded by the Gospel as "the shadow" by the "substantial good" which it indicated, Heb. x. 1.

Hence OUR LORD, in the beginning of his public ministry, laboured to remove the prejudices of his hearers in favour of the propriety of the Mosaical dispensation, and to correct the vulgar error, that he came to subvert it; whereas, "He came, not to destroy the law and the prophets, but to fulfil;" 1. to accomplish, in his own person, the types and prophecies respecting THE MESSIAH and his kingdom; 2. to enlarge and spiritualize the religious and moral law; 3. to perfect its sanctions from temporal to eternal; and 4. to grant more powerful aids by the promise of the HOLY SPIRIT; and also 5. to accomplish all these minutely, critically, and permanently, until the dissolution of the world. "One iota or one *tittle shall not pass away from THE LAW, [so improved,] until all things come to an end," Matt. v. 17, 18.

The duties of the Gospel are all comprized in that most concise and comprehensive summary, which enlarges and spiritualizes the Decalogue, or summary of the religious and moral law of Moses. And the finest commentary on both is furnished by the Sermon on the Mount.

THE LORD'S PRAYER;

The prayer itself may thus be more closely rendered.

- I. OUR FATHER, who [art] in the heavens :
- II. 1. Thy name be hallowed,
 2. Thy kingdom come,
 3. Thy will be done,
 4. As in heaven, even [so] upon the earth.
- III. 1. Give us this day our sufficient bread,
 2. And forgive us our debts,
 3. As we also forgive our debtors ;
 4. And bring us not into temptation,
 5. But deliver us from the wicked one :
- IV. For THINE is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory,
For evermore. Amen.

Some of his disciples having requested our blessed Lord to teach them to pray, He was pleased to give them this perfect model of prayer, as an improvement upon the forms used by the Baptist, the Rabbis, and the Heathen philosophers, both in conciseness of manner, and comprehensiveness of matter †," Luke

* "Iota" denoted the smallest Chaldee letter Iod, י. And a "tittle," or rather "curl," the distinction between similar letters, a Resh ר from a Daleth ד, or a Thau ת from a Heth ח.

† The eloquent Tertullian delivers this encomium on the Lord's Prayer.

"In this compendium of few words, how many declarations of Prophets, Evangelists, and Apostles are contained! How many discourses, parables, examples, precepts of

xi. 1, Matt. vi. 5—8, xxiii. 14; compare Eccl. v. 7, Ecclus. vii. 14.

It opens with an invocation to THE DEITY, under the endearing title of "OUR FATHER," the common parent of the human race, Christians, Jews, and Gentiles. For "we are all HIS offspring," Acts xvii. 28, who is "no respecter of persons," but in "every nation, whosoever feareth HIM, and worketh righteousness, is acceptable unto Him," Acts x. 34, 35. This is a more enlarged idea of his general providence, as "THE ONE GOD and FATHER OF ALL," Ephes. iv. 6, than was furnished by the preamble and first commandment of the Decalogue, representing Him rather in a partial light, as the TUTORIAL GOD OF ISRAEL, who delivered them from Egyptian bondage; whom therefore, they were required to hold for their ONLY GOD, in exclusion of all others, Exod. xx. 2, 3.

This is further intimated by the plural, "OUR," signifying that we should pray, not for ourselves singly, like the Pharisee in the temple, "GOD, I thank thee, that I am not as other men are," &c. Luke xviii. 11; nor to GOD in the confined terms of the Decalogue, "I am THE LORD THY GOD, who brought thee," Israel, &c. but for all mankind.

The foundation of all prayer whatsoever, is a persuasion that THE BEING, whom we address, both hears us, and is also able to grant our petitions. And both these are implied in the sequel, "*who art in the heavens," signifying "the heaven of heavens, which cannot contain or confine THE DEITY," 1 Kings viii. 26.

OUR LORD! How many duties toward GOD are briefly expressed! Honour to THE FATHER, faith, profession in his name, offering of obedience in his will, expression of hope in his kingdom; petition for the necessaries of life in the bread, confession of sins in the supplication, solicitude against temptations, in the asking of protection. What wonder! GOD alone could teach how He chose to be prayed to." De Oratione, p. 659.

The practice of the primitive Church, as we collect from Tertullian, was to begin their public service with this divine prayer, as the ground and foundation of all others; and then to offer up their own prayers to GOD, according to the variety of their circumstances and conditions, provided they agreed with the precepts of this lawful and ordinary prayer. "For as far as we recede from its precepts, so far are we from GOD's ears: our remembrance of the precepts, prepares the way for our prayers to heaven, of which this is the chief." Ibid.

* Ὦν ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς. The article ὁ, has the import of the pronoun who, ὦν, "art," being understood. See the note on the introduction of John's Gospel, in this Vol. p. 67. Ἐν οὐρανοῖς, signifies in the heavens, or highest heavens, or the universe, as distinguished from ἐν οὐρανῷ, afterwards, "in heaven," or the throne of GOD's glory, and residence of the holy angels.

This most sublime and amazing idea of the omnipresence or ubiquity of OUR HEAVENLY FATHER, exposes the gross absurdity, and the utter impossibility of representing him under any finite or corporeal image of man, beast, bird, or fish, prohibited by the second commandment.

His willingness also to listen to our prayers, implied in his paternal relation, and our encouragement to apply to Him repeatedly for relief, is stated by OUR LORD: “Ask, and it shall be given unto you, seek, and ye shall find, knock, and it shall be opened unto you.—For what man is there of you, who if his son ask bread, will give him a stone, [which cannot nourish him ;] and if he ask fish, will give him a serpent, [which will poison him.] If ye then, being evil, [or imperfect in your nature,] know how to give good things to your children, how much more shall your HEAVENLY FATHER, [who is all perfection,] give good things, (even his HOLY SPIRIT,) to them that ask him? Matt. vii. 11, Luke xi. 13.

Though perseverance in prayer is here recommended, and in several other places, as in the parable of the unjust judge, Luke xviii. 1—8, &c. yet in our private devotions, long prayers and vain repetitions, are censured as superfluous and unnecessary; because our HEAVENLY FATHER knoweth whereof we have need, before we ask him, Matt. vi. 8. And several efficacious prayers that we read of in Scripture, were short: such as of Abraham's steward, Gen. xxiv. 12—15; Hezekiah, 2 Kings xx. 1—6; the publican in the temple, Luke xviii. 13—14; the penitent thief on the cross, Luke xxiii. 42, &c. In public worship, however, or upon important national concerns, long prayers are admissible, as in Solomon's sublime prayer at the dedication of the temple, 1 Kings viii. 12—61; the Levites' thanksgiving for all God's mercies and forbearances to the people of Israel, after the captivity, Nehem. ix. 5—38; Daniel's pathetic supplication for the sins of his people, Dan. ix. 3—19, &c. which are of considerable length; and OUR LORD himself sometimes continued all night in prayer unto GOD, Luke vi. 12.

The second clause contains general petitions for all mankind.

1. That GOD'S name may be hallowed, or his Divine Majesty held in due honour and veneration throughout the world, (Malachi i. 6.) This is a positive precept, and a considerable improvement of the third commandment, which is negative, prohibiting the profanation of the name of GOD.

2. That His kingdom may come; or that spiritual kingdom founded by CHRIST at his first coming, may prevail or be established at his second, in the regeneration; when the spiritual worship of GOD and the LAMB shall sanctify the Lord's day, under the New Dispensation; as the legal worship did the sabbath day, according to the fourth commandment.

3. That His will may be done, or universally obeyed, in the exact performance of all the moral duties of the second table of the Decalogue, which it is the will of GOD that we should exercise toward mankind.

4. "As in heaven, even so upon the earth," expresses the measure or standard of obedience in all the foregoing petitions, as well as the last. For we pray that GOD'S name may be hallowed on earth, as it is in heaven; that his kingdom may come, on earth as in heaven; his will be done on earth, as it is in heaven; or that in all these cases, the example of the *holy angels in heaven, in the pure and spiritual observance of all religious and moral duties, "who do GOD'S will and pleasure with alacrity and delight," (Psalm ciii. 21,) may be imitated by mankind on earth.

This is a higher and nobler standard of obedience, than was furnished by the Mosaical law; which, in the religious duties of the first table, totally wanted a standard or model, and in the moral duties of the second, furnished rather an insufficient and precarious standard in self-love; "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself," Levit. xix. 18.

Self-love, indeed, is sometimes a faulty standard; because men do not always love themselves as they ought; they are too often led by the flesh, rather than by the Spirit, to sacrifice their true interest and happiness in this life, and the glorious prospects of the next, to the vanities of this world; which prove, sooner or later, vexation of spirit. Such "lovers of themselves," or rather haters of themselves, and of the noblest part of their nature, which they debase and degrade †, are ill qualified to love others as they ought, and to consult their true interests.

* The love and services of the holy angels to mankind, are intimated in several passages of Scripture, Job xxxviii. 7, Gen. xix. 15, 16, xxviii. 12, xxxii. 1, Psa. xxxiv. 7, 2 Kings vi. 16, 17, Isai. vi. 6, 7, Dan ix. 21, Zech. ii. 3, 4, Tobit xii. 15, Luke i. 19, ii. 13, 14, Matt. xviii. 10, xvi. 9—22, &c.

† Atque humo affigunt DIVINÆ particulam AURÆ.

"And chain to the dust, their particle of THE DIVINE SPIRIT." Hor.

The drunkard, for instance, entices his friend to wallow in the mire of drunkenness, till shameful spewing be upon his glory, (Habbak. ii. 15, 16, 2 Pct. ii. 22.) And the misguided zeal of the Scribes and Pharisees of old, compassed sea and land to make one proselyte, and then, to render him two-fold more the child of hell than themselves, Matt. xxiii. 15. Such spirit of proselytism is not yet extinct.

Proper self-love, however, is an useful standard in general, and was re-enacted by OUR LORD; “All things whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, even so do ye unto them. For this is [the substance of] the LAW and the PROPHETS,” Matt. vii. 12. And we may add, of the LAW of NATURE also, in the Heathen world, derived from primitive Revelation to Noah and his family, Gen. ix. 5. Ὁ σὺ μισεῖς, ἐτέρῳ μὴ ποιήσης. “What thou hatest thyself, do not to another,” was thence recommended by Cleobulus, one of the seven sages of Greece.

To remedy this precarious and uncertain standard of self-love, and the ideal standard of the obedience of angelic spirits, which does not fall within human observation, our blessed Lord condescended to furnish an imitable pattern of obedience to the will of God, in all its branches, by taking our nature upon him*, to furnish a real and a perfect standard of the most consummate piety toward GOD, and love toward man, in his own brightest example. “Learn of ME, for I am meek and lowly of heart,” Matt. xi. 29. Infinitely meeker and lowlier than Moses, who, though the meekest of men, yet spake unadvisedly with his lips; (see Vol. II. pp. 164, 198.) And accordingly, his new Commandment was, “Love each other, as I have loved you;” and He made their observance of this commandment, the characteristic of his religion: “Hereby shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love among each other,” John xiii. 34, 35.

This commandment, though not absolutely new in its precept, was 1. new in its extent and degree; 2. in its standard or model; 3. in its motives, and 4. in its sanction.

* The pure and spiritual devotion of CHRIST, and his obedience in the flesh, is finely foretold, Psalm xl. 6—8, as interpreted Heb. x. 5—9. “When (CHRIST) cometh into the world, he saith, Sacrifice and oblation thou wouldest not, but a [human] body hast Thou prepared for me. Burnt offerings and sin offerings, thou desiredst not. Then said I, Lo I come [into the world,] (in the volume of the [Sacred] Book, it is written of me,) to do thy will, O MY GOD, I wished it; yea, thy law is within my heart!”

1. By a considerable enlargement of the Mosaical law, Christians are required to love each other, not as "neighbours" only, but as "brethren," a nearer and tenderer connexion, Heb. ii. 11, 1 Pet. iii. 8, meaning by the word "brethren," not merely fellow Christians, but strangers, aliens, and the whole human race, by the most enlarged philanthropy, as explained in the parable of the humane Samaritan, (see Vol. II. p. 234. Vol. III. p. 150.)

The degree of Christian love, or charity, is also prescribed by OUR LORD, and taught by his example. "Ye have heard that it was said [in the LAW,] *Thou shalt love thy neighbour, and hate thine enemy; But I say unto you, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them that despitefully use you, and persecute you, Matt. v. 43, 44, Luke vi. 27, 28. And He thus illustrates its propriety,

For if ye love them [only] that love you, what merit have ye? do not even the publicans the same? [whom ye despise as sinners and heathens, Matt. xi. 19, xviii. 17.] And if ye salute your brethren only, what do ye more [than they?] do not even the publicans so? Matt. v. 46, 47.

He elsewhere also describes its extent; "Greater love hath no one than this, that one (τις) lay down his life for his friends," John xv. 13.

2. And how strictly did He practise his own precepts? "CHRIST suffered for us, leaving behind a pattern to us, that we should tread in his steps, who did no sin, nor was guile found in his mouth: who, when he was reviled, reviled not in turn, when he suffered, he threatened not, but committed [himself] to Him that judgeth justly," 1 Pet. ii. 21, 22; "He laid down his life for the sheep," John x. 15; and "died for us when we were yet sinners," Rom. v. 8, and "poured out his soul to death on the cross," Isai. liii. 12, breathing out a prayer and an apology for his murderers; "FATHER, forgive them, for they know not what they do!" Luke xxiii. 34.

3. The noble motives thereto, are the imitation of GOD and CHRIST, as far as the frailty and infirmity of our nature will permit us (Phil. iii. 12,) to copy these all perfect standards of love and mercy, towards not only the good and the just, but even towards the wicked, the unjust, and the unthankful, in “their creation, preservation, and all the blessings of this life.” “Be ye therefore perfect, even as your HEAVENLY FATHER is perfect,” Matt. v. 45—48: “Be ye therefore merciful, even as your FATHER is merciful,” Luke vi. 35, 36. And the inference is, “If GOD so loved us, we ought also to love each other,” 1 John iv. 11. “Walk in love, as CHRIST also loved us, and gave himself for us, an offering and sacrifice to GOD for a fragrant savour,” Ephes. v. 2; and “we ought also to lay down our lives for the brethren,” 1 John iii. 16.

* This latter clause is no where found in the law, and is contrary to its spirit, Deut. xxxiii. 7. See Vol. II. p. 234. It was a gloss of the Scribes, founded, perhaps, on the prescribed extermination of the devoted nations, Deut. xxxiii. 7; to which David seems to allude, Psalm cxxxix. 21, 22.

4. The higher sanctions of reward are, to be called “children of GOD,” “brethren” and “friends” of CHRIST, and “joint heirs” with CHRIST, or inheritors of the kingdom of heaven: and the more awful sanctions of punishment, to be called “children of the devil,” “enemies of GOD and CHRIST,” and to be doomed to everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, with the Devil and his angels in hell. Both infinitely more awakening and alarming, than the temporal sanctions of the Mosaical law, Matt. v. 45, Luke xx. 36, Gal. iii. 26, Rom. viii. 17, Tit. iii. 7, 1 John iii. 10. Compare Exod. xx. 5, 6—12, Levit. xxvi. 3—46, Deut. xxviii. 1—68.

Christian love, or charity, therefore, as inculcated in OUR LORD’S new commandment, and improved and enlarged thereby, may now be defined more fully *, “That Divine virtue, by which we love GOD and CHRIST above all things, because they first loved us; and our brethren as ourselves, for the love of GOD, and for the sake of CHRIST.”

II. Having now considered the exordium and general petitions of the Lord’s Prayer, and shewn that they contain, enlarge, and spiritualize the ten Commandments; before we proceed to the ensuing special petitions, we shall endeavour to shew that the Sermon on the Mount was designed for a critical commentary and improvement of the Decalogue.

Following, therefore, our LORD’S order, we shall begin with the moral duties of the second table, which were all included in the general petition, Thy will be done; and which, therefore, the summary proceeds to specify and explain, upon the principles of the GOSPEL.

* See the definition of Mosaical love, or benevolence, Vol. II. p. 237.

The sixth commandment, “delivered oracularly to the ancients,” (ερρεθη τοις αρχαιοις,) prohibited the actual commission of *murder, Exod. xx. 13, Deut. v. 17; and under the penalty of death, Exod. xxi. 12, Deut. xix. 11—13, but as re-enacted by CHRIST to his disciples, (εγω δε λεγω υμιν,) it is extended to prohibit every incitement or provocation thereto.

1. Causeless anger, breaking out into
2. Contemptuous expressions, Raca, “Rascal,” &c.
3. Slandorous epithets, Fool, i. e. “Atheist,” or “Apostate,” under the penalties of divine judgment for the first, a higher, corresponding to the Sanhedrim, for the second, and hell fire for the last.

To this commandment, so enlarged and fortified, several collateral duties are attached by OUR LORD.

1. Reconciliation to an offended Brother. This is required as absolutely necessary to make our devotions and voluntary sacrifices acceptable unto God.

“If thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there remember that thy brother hath any [complaint] against thee, leave there thy gift, [to ensure thy return,] before the altar, [not upon the altar, for it would pollute the altar,] and withdraw; first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift,” Matt. v. 21—24.

2. Speedy compromise with a plaintiff in a law suit, whilst on the way with him to the courts of justice; in order to prevent rigorous costs and damages †, ver. 25, 26.

* There seems here to be some allowance for “anger with cause,” or well founded. And OUR LORD himself has given countenance thereto, by his conduct. For he was sometimes angry and indignant, in the course of his ministry, at the perverseness and malignity of the chief priests, Scribes, Pharisees, Sadducees, Herod, and the Herodians, whom He did not scruple to rebuke and censure with all authority, as “fools and blind,” “hypocrites,” “whited sepulchres,” “a generation of vipers,” “children of the devil,” as well as “that fox,” Herod. We, however, sinful and short-sighted mortals, should be exceedingly cautious how we plead the prescription of his example. He was THE SEARCHER OF HEARTS, and “knew what was in man,” but if we, “be angry,” we cannot be sure that we “sin not,” through ignorance, passion, or prejudice. Our wiser and safer course, therefore, is to follow that Apostle’s precept, who furnished some instances of his own frailty, in his violent contention with Barnabas, Acts xv. 39; and his abusive language to the high priest, Acts xxiii. 3.—“Let all anger, and clamour, and evil speaking, be put away from you,” Ephes. iv. 31; and for the reason he assigns elsewhere, “Vengeance, is MY prerogative, I will repay, saith THE LORD,” Rom. xii. 19. The archangel Michael durst not rail against the Devil, but only said, THE LORD rebuke thee! Jude 9.

† This also was recommended in the laws of the twelve tables at Rome. In via, rem

3. A repeal of the law of retaliation, “an eye for an eye,” &c. ver. 38, which was tolerated, though not encouraged by Moses, Exod. xxi. 24, &c. Levit. xix. 18. In its stead, CHRIST recommended the following prudential maxims.

1. Patience under insults. “Resist not the wicked man, but whosoever shall smite thee on the left cheek, turn to him the right also,” rather than hastily or angrily resent it, ver. 39. That it was not designed for a law, appears from our Lord’s remonstrating himself against this insult, John xviii. 23. It was proverbial for patient endurance of insult, Lam. iii. 30.

2. Patience under small injuries. “If a man be litigious, and take away thy vest, let him have thy mantle also,” rather than go to law with him, ver. 40.

3. Patience under personal grievances, “When pressed into the public service, by any public officer, to go with him one mile, voluntarily go with him twain, rather than resist the ruling powers to your further detriment,” ver. 41.

4. Compassion to the distressed. “Give to him that asketh thee [alms ;] and from him that would borrow from thee, turn not thou away,” ver. 42.

This precept requires limitations, according to the ability of the giver, and the comparative merits of the petitioners. For the idle or vicious are not entitled to relief, Acts xi. 29, 2 Cor. viii. 13, Luke xv. 16, 2 Thess. iii. 10. But “never turn away thy face from any poor man, carelessly, or scornfully, and then the face of the LORD shall not be turned away from thee,” Tobit iv. 11, Luke xvi. 19—25.

Thus, even those precepts reckoned paradoxical, and impracticable, by gainsayers, when fairly interpreted, not according to the letter, but the spirit, as explained by our Lord’s conduct, and by parallel passages, exhibit useful lessons of prudence and discretion.

The seventh commandment prohibited the actual crime of adultery, and under the penalty of stoning to death, Exod. xx. 14, Levit. xx. 10, Deut. xxii. 22, John viii. 5.

But OUR LORD combines it with the tenth commandment, “Thou shalt not covet thy neighbour’s wife,” and extends the guilt to “the lust of the eye,” in looking lewdly upon a maruti pacent, orato. “On the way, pray that they may compromise the matter.” Blackstone’s Com. III. B. III. c. 20.

ried woman, as committing “adultery in the heart;” and denounces against even the intentional offender *, the dreadful punishment of hell fire, unless the offending member, “the right eye,” or the ruling passion, of which it is the instrument, be “plucked out,” and “cast away” with abhorrence, by a timely repentance, to save his soul alive in the day of judgment, Matt. v. 27—29, Ezek. xviii. 27.

Divorces, which were tolerated by the law of Moses, for the hardness of their hearts, to prevent worse consequences, and carried to a scandalous excess in that age, as we have seen, p. 141. are confined by OUR LORD, to the sole cause of adultery. And if any man married a woman divorced upon any other account, both are represented as guilty of adultery †, Deut. xxiv. 1, Matt. v. 31, 32.

The eighth commandment is also coupled with the remainder of the tenth; and the same punishment of hell fire is denounced against it, unless the offending member, “the right hand,” or the ruling passion of which it is the instrument, be “cut off” and “cast away” with abhorrence likewise, Matt. v. 30.

The ninth commandment is considered by OUR LORD, not merely in a moral, but rather in a religious light, as an offence against the third commandment. Whosoever invokes the awful

* ————— Patitur pœnas peccandi sola voluntas :
Nam scelus intra se tacitum qui cogitat ullum,
Facti crimen habet——. Juv. Sat. XIII. 207.

†. The law of England, however excellent, and superior, perhaps, on the whole, to any other system of human legislation upon earth, has still its blemishes and imperfections. Such may well be accounted its deviations from the DIVINE LAW in the following cases; which, it will not, I hope, be deemed irrelevant nor presumptuous to notice, from an honest wish for their emendation, whenever the wisdom and piety of our legislature shall think fit.

Our laws seem to be unreasonably severe against the breach of the eighth commandment, and criminally lenient toward the breach of the seventh. Shall the horse stealer, the cow stealer, the sheep stealer, &c. be punished with death, while the wife stealer, the daughter stealer, &c. the abandoned adulterer and fornicator, who violates all the laws of hospitality and friendship, and destroys the peace of families, escape with a pecuniary fine, or damages!—And shall our legislature still continue to hold forth encouragement and reward to adultery, by tolerating and licensing the marriages of the offending parties convicted of adultery, after divorce!

Hoc fonte derivata clades
In patriam populumque fluxit.
Pudet hæc nobis opprobria dici,
Et non potuisse refelli!

name of GOD to witness any untruth, knowing it to be such, is guilty of taking it in vain, even though that untruth or lie be harmless in itself, or a "white lie," as it is sometimes improperly and profanely styled; but if it be a "black lie," solemnly uttered in a court of justice, to the injury of another's life, liberty, property, or reputation, by a heinous aggravation of complicated guilt against GOD and man; it becomes the most heinous and atrocious of all the crimes that can enter into the heart of man to conceive or commit. Accordingly, GOD himself threatened, that He would not hold the offender guiltless, that profaned his name, even in the slightest degree; and blasphemy, swearing, and cursing, was, by the express command of THE ORACLE, punished with stoning to death *, Levit. xxiv. 10—16.

OUR LORD, however, did not mean to preclude solemn appeals to heaven, whether oaths or vows, in courts of justice, or in important compacts. For an oath, or appeal to THE GREATEST of all beings, as THE SEARCHER OF HEARTS, to witness a transaction, and to punish falsehood or perjury, is necessary, for putting an end to all strife or controversy among men, to promote confirmation or security of property, Heb. vi. 16. And it was sanctioned by the example of GOD, swearing by HIMSELF, Gen. xxii. 15, Heb. vi. 17, 18. And by the example of the Patriarchs and saints of old; thus Abraham swore

* Wilful and deliberate perjury, before a magistrate, or in a public court of justice, and in the presence of ALMIGHTY GOD, is the most heinous crime that it is possible for mortal man to commit. It is high treason against the SUPREME MAJESTY OF HEAVEN AND EARTH. And shall high treason against the lord of the land, or against the state, be punished with the penalty of death, and confiscation of honours, emoluments, and property, not merely to the children's children, or to the fourth generation, but to ages yet unborn, involved in the parents' crime; while the blasted perjurer, who braves eternal infamy, and bursts the strongest barriers of civil society, shall escape with the loss of his ears, and with the transient disgrace of the pillory, on a market day !!

Tell it not in Gath!

Publish it not in Askelon!

2. The multiplication of perjury, by the revenue and election laws, is an evil of the first magnitude, and the most serious and alarming national consideration, which calls loudly for reformation; as does also the negligent and irreverent mode of administering oaths in our courts of justice, which has excited the horror of Mahometans, *Gentoo*s, and Chinese spectators, who never profane the names of their gods.

3. But even these shrink into nothing, and are lost, in the infinitely greater crime of licensing perjury, as practised by the See of Rome, in her absolutions for the violation of oaths and vows, the most solemn; and her pecuniary dispensations for crimes the most atrocious, according to the stated and decreed impositions of the chancery court of Rome, as shall be shewn in the following notes.

by THE MOST HIGH GOD, CREATOR OF HEAVEN AND EARTH, Gen. xiv. 22; the Transjordanite tribes, by THE GOD OF GODS THE LORD, Josh. xxii. 22. And the LAW prescribed, "Thou shalt fear THE LORD THY GOD, and serve him, and shalt swear by his name," Deut. vi. 13. And afterwards, "all Judah rejoiced at the oath, for they had sworn [unto the LORD with a loud voice,] with all their heart, and sought him with their whole desire: and He was found of them; and the Lord gave them rest round about," 2 Chron. xv. 14, 15. And a highly gifted Apostle uses the following most solemn asseveration, "THE GOD AND FATHER OF OUR LORD JESUS CHRIST, who is BLESSED FOR EVERMORE, *knoweth that I lye not," 2 Cor. xi. 31.

Vows also were licensed by the law of Moses. "If a man vow a vow unto THE LORD, or swear an oath, to bind his soul with a bond; he shall not break his word; he shall do according to all that proceedeth out of his mouth," Numb. xxx. 2, Deut. xxiii. 31, Eccl. v. 4. See the cases of Jephtha and his daughter, Judges xi. 30, Hannah, and her son Samuel, 1 Sam. i. 11, The Priests and Levites, to put away strange wives, Ezra x. 5; and to take no usury from their brethren, Neh. x. 29. Paul also vowed a vow, which he performed, Acts xviii. 18, xxi. 23. Our LORD, therefore, reenacted the law, while he guarded against the abuse of it, by prohibiting all oaths in common conversation, as a profanation either of GOD'S name, where that was irreverently used, or where any of his works was substituted instead of the awful and terrible name of [THE LORD, which the Jews, through superstitious dread, at length ceased to use, from misinterpretation of Deut. xxviii. 58.

"Again, ye have heard that it was oracularly spoken to the ancients, Thou shalt not forswear thyself, but shalt perform unto THE LORD thine oaths.

"But I say unto you, Swear not at all, [in common conversation, by any of your usual oaths,] neither by heaven, for it is GOD'S throne; nor by the earth, for it is his footstool; neither by Jerusalem, for it is the city of THE GREAT KING, as styled by David, Psalm xlvi. 2; neither shalt thou swear by thy head, for thou canst not make one black hair white, or one

* The Apostle Paul swore, as he lived, in simplicity, as well as sincerity, (2 Cor. i. 12.) by THE GOD AND FATHER OF OUR LORD JESUS CHRIST; than which a more awful name is not to be uttered by the voice of man. Ogden's Sermons, Vol. II. Sermon 5.

white hair black. But let your conversation, if affirmative, be yea; if negative, *nay; for whatsoever is over and above these, is of the wicked one," who instigates men to this vice, in order to lessen their reverence for GOD, and to lead them to perjury, Matt. v. 33—37.

For, by the detestable casuistry of the Scribes and Pharisees, some oaths were reckoned binding, others not, as we learn from the sequel; thus, to swear by the temple, the altar, heaven, &c. they considered as not binding: but to swear by the gold of the temple, by the gift on the altar, &c. they considered as binding; the absurdity and impiety of which practice is well exposed by OUR LORD elsewhere, Matt. xxiii. 16—22.

There is no immediate reference to the fifth commandment in the Sermon on the Mount; but it also is virtually included under the first table. For the fifth commandment is remarkably sanctioned by Moses, with the same reward and punishment. The long and happy possession of the land of Canaan was equally the reward promised to obedience in both cases, Exod. xx. 12, Deut. v. 16—33. The breach of this law also was equally capital, "He that curseth father or mother shall die the death," or shall assuredly be put to death, Exod. xxi. 17. And the legal punishment of an incorrigible and rebellious son, was stoning to death, Deut. xxi. 18—21, precisely in the same terms as for idolatry, Deut. xvii. 2—7, or for blasphemy, Levit. xxiv. 16. The similitude of the punishment resulting from the similitude of the offences against OUR HEAVENLY FATHER and earthly parents, "He that forsaketh his father is a blasphemer," Ecclus. iii. 16; and Paul ranks "blasphemers, disobedient to parents," in immediate succession, 2 Tim. iii. 2. Indeed, disobedience to parents is the prelude to the greatest crimes, and to the most dreadful punishments, even in this world; "The eye that mocketh his father, and despiseth to obey his mother, the ravens of the valley shall pick it out, and the young eagles shall eat it," Prov. xxx. 17.

And as the duty of children to parents is most clearly enjoined and sanctioned by the LAW OF GOD, so it is also by the

* Bowyer ingeniously corrects the pointing of this passage thus, ὁ λογος ὑμων ναι; ναι' ου; ου. "Is your conversation yea? let it be yea: is it nay? let it be nay." A Jewish proverb: "The yea of the just is yea; and their nay, nay;" or they are sincere, and perform what they promise.

LAW OF NATURE, or by the voice of natural affection, reason, and humanity, which is equally the law of God, as being implanted in us by our Creator. And to this the Apostle appeals, in his exhortations to the Gentiles, “Children, obey your parents in THE LORD, for this is right,” Ephes. vi. 1.

Accordingly, our BLESSED LORD, who recommended his precepts by his own example, paid the most marked attention to his earthly and reputed parents; living in subjection to them from his childhood, Luke ii. 51; and his last moments on the cross, even in the midst of his own agonies, were spent in honouring his desolate mother, and in providing for her support, by recommending her to the care of his bosom friend, John xix. 26.

The high importance of this first commandment of the second table, “with promise,” or an express sanction annexed, and which includes duty to all our superiors, who exercise a parental care and authority over us*, appears from our Lord’s censure of the Scribes and Pharisees, for annulling the law of Moses, by their vain traditions, which He illustrates by their breach of this commandment, as the prominent example. “Ye say, or teach, if a man say to his father or mother in want, It is corban, (or ‘a gift,’ dedicated to sacred uses,) whatever support thou mightest receive from me; ye no longer suffer him to do any thing for his father or mother,”—“and many such things do ye,” Mark vii. 8—13.

And we learn from Lightfoot, that they made no scruple of violating this vow of Corban. For though it prohibited the party from relieving the wants of his father or mother, he was not at all bound to dedicate his property to sacred uses; and he was at liberty to relieve any others, except his parents, who were not included in the vow.

We learn also from Josephus, that these corrupt teachers of the law were accustomed to grant pecuniary dispensations from the vow of Corban, where it related to personal services; fifty shekels for a man’s discharge, and thirty for a woman’s. And if they were not able to pay so much, the priests were allowed

* Our Church Catechism, in that admirable summary of duty to our neighbour, has thus enlarged the fifth commandment:—“To love, honour, and succour my father and mother; to honour and obey the king, and all [magistrates] that are put in authority under him; to submit myself to all my governors, teachers, spiritual pastors, and masters; to order myself lowly and reverently to all my betters.” to rate them at discretion, according to their ability. Ant. IV. 4, 4. It is truly remarkable, that both these usages were adopted by the See of Rome, in the table of rates for dispensations from vows, in their court of chancery, and exceeded in indulgences for crimes *.

* The decreed impositions of the chancery court of Rome, that “great custom-house for sin,” were first published to the world by Anthony Egane, a Franciscan friar, who had been for some years the pope’s apostolical penitentiary, or confessor-general, in Ireland, and revealed this mystery of iniquity, after his conversion to the Church of England. The original pamphlet, in 1673, went through a fifth edition in 1715; but having now grown very scarce, has been lately republished by the learned and public spirited Francis Maseres, Esq. Cursitor Baron of the Exchequer, in his last volume of Occasional Essays, 1809, 8vo. “thinking it can never be unseasonable to expose a religion so destructive to the peace and happiness of societies, so derogatory to the glory of GOD, so contrary to the main end and design of CHRISTIANITY, and that persecutes with such an unrelenting barbarity, (where it can,) those that have the courage and honesty to oppose its innovations,” p. 558.

This table of impositions, we learn from Egane, was carefully concealed among the arcana imperii of the court of Rome. “Of the ordinary priests,” says he, “hundreds knew nothing of the matter,” it being entrusted only to the apostolical penitentiaries, vested by the Pope with the power of absolving sins in the reserved cases, under an oath of secrecy, not only to conceal the mysteries of the Church from the laity, but even from the ordinary priests and friars, and especially from any of them suspected of such acute parts, or so much learning or honesty, as might make him scruple their authority. The ordinary priest can only inform persons who confess themselves guilty of the reserved sins, where the pope’s banker resides, (of whom there are one or two appointed in every county and diocese in Ireland,) who only can absolve them, and grant them a bull of indulgence from the pope, on paying the fees.

And this account of Egane is confirmed by Father O’Leary, in his “Caution to the common people against PERJURY, so frequent at assizes and elections,” published at Cork, 1783, after a general election.

“In this diocese,” says he, “and several others, their crime is considered as a reserved case, from which no man but the Bishop can absolve, let them be ever so penitent. This restraint shews the enormity of the guilt; whereas the inferior clergy can reconcile ordinary sinners, upon sincere repentance, and a firm resolution of amendment. But the perjurer, having exceeded the ordinary bounds, let his repentance be ever so sincere, must have recourse to an extraordinary power,” p. 18.

The reserved cases, from which none but the pope or his penitentiary can absolve, are, 1. the vow of absolute and perpetual chastity; 2. of the religious order; 3. of pilgrimages to Jerusalem, Rome, and Compostella; and oaths in general.

We shall now proceed to select from the tables themselves, some of the most remarkable cases of dispensations of vows and oaths, and also of indulgences for crimes, omitting some that are too horrid to be named.

I. DISPENSATIONS OF VOWS.

	s. d.
I. If a man has vowed, but not solemnly , to take the habit of some religious order , for changing his vow made, in conscience only, he is to pay	15 4 0

No wonder then, that OUR LORD, in his divine Sermon on the Mount, gave this warning to his disciples: "Except your

	£.	s.	d.
2. If a man has taken a vow of chastity, solemnly , he may have a dispensation, if necessary, for not keeping his vow, paying the prelate	15	4	0
3. For prolonging the term of vows to go to the Holy Sepulchre , or to St. Peter's , at Rome , upon a lawful cause assigned	9	2	9
4. If the dispensation be only for two years	4	0	1
For changing the pilgrimage to the Holy Sepulchre into another	12	3	6
5. For changing one vow into another for a perpetuity , in the case of a chapter, convent, or great college	100	0	0

II. DISPENSATIONS OF OATHS.

6. For the breach of an oath or contract respecting civil employments or concerns	7	2	3
7. For a bull containing both the inhibitory clauses , and absolution from infamy , in such cases	56	9	6
8. And if several persons are included in the same act or contract , each must pay	3	0	0
9. For the breach of an oath that cannot be kept without incurring everlasting damnation ; as for example, a dishonest vow , or a wicked promise	6	2	0

N.B. You are to take notice, that there is a difference to be made between the tax of a bishop, abbot, or general of an order, and of an ordinary person. The prelates are to be left to the discretion of their confessors, [who best know their incomes.]

III. DISPENSATIONS OF CRIMES.

10. For a marriage contracted in the first degree of affinity , and in conscience only, to be paid, or according to the ability of the party ..	1000	2	6
11. For a marriage in the second degree , beside a gratification to the prelate, the pope, or his missionary , is to be paid	100	15	6
12. For erecting a public Jewish Synagogue	603	15	0
13. For a private Synagogue in a Jew's house	300	1	6
14. For [a crusader, or] soldier in the Catholic cause , who neither kills nor wounds any [Heretic] in war , nor [as an officer] causes another to do so	36	9	0
15. For pardon and rehabilitation , [or readmission into the bosom of the Church] of a heretic , in an ample form , with the inhibitory clause , before abjuration [of his heresy]	36	9	0
16. For simony, or for fornication of priests, friars, or nuns , each	36	9	6
17. For incest in a layman	4	6	0
18. For adultery in the same	4	0	0
19. For adultery and incest together	6	2	0
20. For the adulterer and adulteress jointly	6	6	0
21. For absolution to keep a concubine at bed and board, with a dispensation to hold a benefice	4	5	6
22. For striking a clerk or priest	6	2	2 righteousness, [or observance of the law,] shall exceed that of the Scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no wise enter the kingdom of heaven," Matt. v. 20.

	£.	s.	d.
23. For striking an abbot or prelate	12	6	3
24. For striking a bishop or archbishop	24	6	0
25. For wounding a priest in any of his members	18	4	9
26. For wounding a layman.....	0	0	6
27. For murder committed by a bishop, abbot, chief of an order, or knight, each	50	12	6
28. For murder, by a friar, or guardian of a monastery	40	9	0
29. For murder, by an ordinary person, to be rated according to circumstances, at the discretion of the prelates	—	—	—
30. For the murder of a priest by a layman	6	2	0
31. And for commutation of public penance to private, for the same	18	4	6
32. For the murder of a layman by a layman	3	2	4
33. For the murder of a father, mother, brother, sister, or wife, each....	4	1	8
34. For marrying another wife, after murdering the former	8	2	9
&c. &c.

“ The Papists, without doubt, will disown it,” says Mr. Egane, “ and say that this is mere fiction, and that such things are not practised in their church: but I am ready to prove, by my own knowledge and experience, all I here alledge to be true;”——“ and if you will but examine, and seriously consider the particulars, you will easily be convinced, that none but the popish clergy themselves could be the authors of it.”

Of this, indeed, the Articles themselves furnish internal evidence.

The sole object of these horrible impositions upon the understandings and purses of the deluded followers of these “merchants of souls,” evidently appears to be the unrighteous mammon. In all the cases, the rates are higher for the rich than for the poor; and the highest of all, No. 10, 11, 12, 13, for what are no crimes in foro conscientiæ, nor the Divine law. The marriages of first and second cousins, were prohibited by the see of Rome, from political motives, to levy a tax upon the sovereigns of Europe, who necessarily intermarried among each other. And the refusal of the court of Rome to gratify the haughty and imperious Henry VIII. with a divorce, and dispensation to marry Ann Bullen, brought about the Reformation in England; as the scandalous sale of indulgences in general, to recruit the coffers of the profuse and unprincipled pope Leo X. who uttered that profane speech, Quantum nobis lucri attulit hæc de CHRISTO fabula! roused the indignation of Luther, to protest against them, and to lay the foundation of the REFORMATION.

When the infamous Tetzel, a Dominican monk, and the pope's agent, was retailing indulgences in Germany, A.D. 1518, and had collected a great sum of money by the sale of them, at Leipsic; a gentleman of that city applied to Tetzel for an indulgence to commit a certain crime, without specifying what it was. Tetzel consented, received his fee, and granted the indulgence in due form. Soon after, the gentleman way-laid Tetzel, on his departure from the city, cudgelled him soundly, and robbed him of all his money, telling him at parting, that this was the crime for which he had purchased absolution. George, duke of Saxony, a zealous friend of the see of Rome, when he heard of the robbery, was very angry at first, but when he learned all the circumstances, he laughed heartily, and pardoned the offender. Seckendorf, I. 26, cited by Jortin, in his life of Erasmus, Vol. I. p. 117.

To confirm and support the veracity of his publication, Mr. Egane annexed the form of absolution, used by these missionaries, or *penitentiaries, after the penitent had confessed his sins.

Their prevailing sins, therefore, are detailed for a warning to the faithful. 1. Their ostentatious righteousness, Matt. vi. 1.

ABSOLUTIO GRATIALIS.

Misereatur tui OMNIPOTENS DEUS, et dimissis omnibus peccatis tuis, perducat te ad vitam æternam. Amen.

Indulgentiam, absolutionem et remissionem omnium peccatorum tuorum tribuat tibi OMNIPOTENS et MISERICORS DOMINUS. Amen.

(Deinde, injungit penitentiam sicut ipsi videbitur conveniens, et postea dicit.)

DOMINUS NOSTER JESUS CHRISTUS te absolvat, et ego, AUCTORITATE IPSIUS qua fungor, te absolvo, Imprimis, ab omni vinculo excommunicationis majoris et minoris, (Si fuerit Clericus, dicet, “suspensionis aut interdicti,” si forte incurrit:) et deinde, absolvo te ab omnibus peccatis tuis, et ab omnibus pœnis tibi in purgatorio debitis pro peccatis et delictis: et restituo te unitati et participationi Ecclesiæ: et virtute et autoritate mihi in hac parte commissa, restituo te illi innocentiae, in qua eras, quando baptizatus fuisti; et si hac vice non moriaris, reservo tibi hanc gratiam pro extremo mortis articulo, in nomine PATRIS et FILII et SPIRITUS SANCTI. Amen. Jesus.

Passio DOMINI NOSTRI JESU CHRISTI, et Merita Beatæ Mariæ Semper-virginis, et Omnium Sanctorum et Sanctarum [conferant] ut quicquid boni feceris, vel mali patienter sustinueris, sint tibi in remissionem peccatorum, augmentum gratiæ, et præmium vitæ æternæ. Amen. Pax tecum.

TRANSLATION.

“The absolution of grace.

“The ALMIGHTY GOD have mercy on thee, and remitting all thy sins, lead thee to eternal life. Amen.

“THE ALMIGHTY and MERCIFUL LORD, grant thee indulgence, absolution, and remission of all thy sins. Amen.

(Then he enjoins penance, as he shall judge fit; and afterwards says,)

“OUR LORD JESUS CHRIST absolve thee: and, by virtue of HIS AUTHORITY, which I hold, I do absolve thee, First, from all restraint of excommunication, greater and lesser, (if the penitent be a priest, he shall say, “of suspension or interdict,” if either happen to be incurred;) and next, I do absolve thee from all thy sins, and from all pains due to thee in purgatory, for thy sins and transgressions; and restore thee to the unity and communion of the Church. And by virtue of the special authority committed to me in this case, [by the pope,] I do restore thee to that innocency in which thou wast when thou wert baptized. And if thou die not at this time, I do reserve unto thee this grace for the extreme article of death, in the name of THE FATHER, and of THE SON, and of THE HOLY GHOST. Amen. JESUS.

“The passion of OUR LORD JESUS CHRIST, and the merits of the blessed Mary, ever Virgin, and of all the Saints and Saintesses, [contribute] that whatever good thou mightest have done, or whatever evil thou mightest have patiently endured, may be unto thee for

* These names are synonymous: there is, however, this distinction between them; the penitentiaries, properly speaking, reside at the court of Rome; the missionaries are sent abroad, vested with the same powers to absolve, a casibus reservatis, “from the reserved cases.”

2. Their public almsgivings, ver. 2—4; 3. Their frequent devotions at their synagogues, and crowded corners of the streets, ver. 5, 6, in addition to the ordinary temple service, Luke xviii. 10. 4. Their long prayers and vain repetitions, ver. 7, Matt. xxiii.

*remission of sins, encrease of grace, and reward of eternal life. Amen. Peace be with thee ."

With this plenary absolution we shall contrast the tremendous form of the greater excommunication, as given by Boxhornius, in his History of the Low Countries, p. 111, and cited in Brandt's Abridgment, Vol. I. p. 6 †.

"By the command of THE FATHER, THE SON, and THE HOLY GHOST, of the blessed Mary, mother of our Lord Jesus Christ, of St. Michael, John the Baptist, and Peter and Paul, princes of the Apostles, of St. Stephen and all the martyrs, St. Sylvester, and all the confessors, St. Aldegonde, and all the Virgins, and all the other saints whatsoever, both in heaven and upon earth:

"We curse and cut off from Holy Mother Church, those who have done (such or such a thing,) or knew of it, or advised it, or had a hand therein. Let them be cursed in their houses, their beds, their fields, their lands, and their ways, and in towns and villages. Let them be cursed in woods, rivers, and churches; cursed in their law-suits and in their quarrels; cursed in their prayers, in speaking and in silence; in eating, drinking, and sleeping; in watching, walking, standing, running, resting, and riding; cursed in hearing, seeing, and tasting; cursed in all their actions. Let this curse strike their heads, their eyes, and their whole body, from the crown of the head to the sole of the feet.

"I adjure thee, Satan, and all thy agents, by the FATHER, SON, and HOLY GHOST, to take no rest, neither in the day, nor in the night, till you have brought a temporal and eternal confusion upon them, by contriving the matter so, that they may be drowned, or hanged, or devoured by wild beasts, or torn by vultures or eagles, or consumed by fire, or killed by their enemies. Make them odious to all living creatures. Let their children be fatherless, and their wives widows. Let nobody, for the time to come, help them, or take pity on their fatherless children. And as Lucifer was expelled from heaven, and Adam banished from paradise, let them likewise be expelled and banished from this world, being deprived of their estates; and let them be buried with the burial of an ass. Let them be partakers of the punishment of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, of Judas and Pontius Pilate, and of all those, who say to the Lord their God, Get thee gone, we will have no knowledge of thy paths."

(Afterwards, he who pronounced these imprecations, put out two lighted candles, which he held in his hand, and added these dreadful words,)

"I adjure thee, Satan, and all thy agents, to extinguish the light of their eyes, as these candles are extinguished, unless they repent, and make full satisfaction. Amen, let it be so. Amen."

* * * The corruptions and abominations of the see of Rome, detailed in these notes, are not dictated by a controversial spirit, but introduced, principally, to illustrate and explain the wonderful prophecies of Daniel, respecting the little horn, and of the Apocalypse, respecting the mystical Babylon, from original and scarce documents.

* This translation is closer and correcter than Egane's. His mistakes furnish internal evidence that he did not compose the Latin form, which he did not critically understand.

† The Latin original of this horrible and blasphemous excommunication, is given, (if we rightly recollect,) in Sterne's eccentric rhapsody, Tristram Shandy.

14, to which the Lord's prayer is given as a striking contrast, ver. 8—15; 5. Their rigid fasts and mortifications, ver. 16—18, Luke xviii. 12; 6. Their covetousness and extortions, ver. 19, 20, Matt. xxiii. 14; 7. Their ensoriousness and uncharitableness in judging and damning all out of their own pale, Matt. vii. 1, 2, Luke xviii. 11, John ix. 34, Rom. ii. 1; 8. Their quicksightedness to the minute faults of others, and blindness to their own enormous crimes, ver. 3—5, vi. 22, 23, John ix. 39, 41; 9. Their brutal rejection of the pure and holy doctrines, and precious promises of the Gospel; and their virulent persecution of CHRIST and his *Apostles, Matt. vii. 6, Luke vii. 30, xvii. 25, Matt. xxi. 42, 2 Pet. ii. 22.

* It is impossible not to be forcibly struck with the close resemblance in all these particulars between the Romish Church, and its prototype the Pharisaical.

1. The pageantry of their public worship; 2. Their ostentatious alms; 3. Their religious processions in Romish countries, and adoration of the Host in the principal streets; 4. Their bead roll of ten Ave Marias, or prayers to the Virgin, for one Pater noster, or prayer to God; and their tedious litanies to all the male and female saints of their *kalendar; 5. Their stated fasts, ordinary and extraordinary, and their abstinences from meat, eggs, and other mortifications; 6. Their covetousness and extortions, shewn by their pecuniary impositions for masses, &c. and their dispensations for all manner of sins and irregularities: the greatest crimes being rated the lowest, and the least, or none at all, the highest. See the foregoing note; 7. Their ensoriousness and uncharitableness in reckoning all other sects of Christians heretics and schismatics, and excommunicating and excluding them from salvation; 8. Their intolerant and persecuting principles, which are thus openly avowed and defended by the celebrated Bossuet, Bishop of Meaux, in his controversy with Jurieu, a reformed clergyman.

“The Church of Rome is only excluded from this pretended society [of tolerating Christians,] because she is, and ever will be opposed to religious indifference, by her essential constitutions: in a word, because, as M. Jurieu says, she is the most INTOLERANT of all Christian societies.”

“Thus we see that what renders this Church so odious to Protestants, is principally, and more than all other tenets, her holy and inflexible incompatibility, if I may so speak; it is because she will stand alone, [Isa. lxxv. 5; Luke xi. 18,] because she conceives herself to be the spouse, [Psalm xlv. 9; Cant. iv. 8; Rev. xxi. 2,] a title which admits no division, [Gen. xxi. 10; Gal. iv. 30,] it is because she cannot suffer her doctrines to be questioned, [John ix. 34,] because she confides in the promises and perpetual assistance of the HOLY GHOST. For in reality this it is that renders her so severe, so unsociable, and consequently so odious to all sects separated from her: which, for the most part, desired nothing more than to be tolerated by her, and not to be fulminated with her anathemas. But her holy severity, and the holy delicacy of her sentiments forbad such indulgence, or rather such weakness: and her inflexibility, which renders

* See a list of these saints and saintesses, in that curious and malignant document, the Litany of Intercession for England, republished by Baron Maseres, in the Occasional Essays, p. 548.

The second commandment, beside prohibiting the idolatrous worship of THE LORD, contained the temporal rewards of obedience, and punishments of disobedience, as we have seen, Vol. II. p. 232. OUR LORD, therefore, opens his sermon with stating that spiritual worship, and those dispositions of mind that would be truly acceptable to our HEAVENLY FATHER, with their appropriate future rewards in heaven. To "the poor in spirit," or lowly minded, "the mourners" for their sins, "the meeke," the "aspirants after righteousness," the "merciful," the "pure in heart," the "peace makers," and "the persecuted for righteousness sake," v. 3—10, while he denounced appropriate woes on another occasion, to the "rich," who trust in their riches, the "owners" of worldly gratifications, the "merry," the "popular teachers," who preached smooth things, like the false prophets of old, Luke vi. 24—26; Jer. xxiii. 31.

To mark also more strongly the analogy between the LAW and the GOSPEL, these correspond to the blessings and curses pronounced on Mount Gerizim and Mount Ebal, Deut. xi. 26—29, xxvii. 12; Josh. viii. 33.

Next to these general blessings our Lord warns his disciples, and particularly his Apostles, of the persecutions they would necessarily experience in the course of their ministry, and of their great future reward, Matt. v. 11, 12. And he reminds the latter of their peculiar functions, as "the salt of the earth," designed to season the world with pure and uncorrupt doctrines; who were more strictly bound to attend to the purity of their own lives, because if they relapsed into sin, and became corrupt, there was no chance of their regeneration, like native or rock salt, which, when it has lost its savour, or saline particles, can never recover them again, but is left a mere caput mortuum, good for nothing but to be cast out on the dunghill, ver. 13.

As the light of the world, designed to illuminate it, also, they were peculiarly bound not to hide their talent, but to let the her hated by schismatical sects, renders her dear and venerable to the children of God." Avertissemens, &c. p. 301.

This is perhaps the most faithful picture of the intolerant and persecuting spirit of the Church of Rome, drawn by a masterly hand; and the most correct comment on the persecuting clause in the Romish prelate's consecration oath. Hæreticos, Schismaticos, et Rebelles contra Dominum nostrum Papam N. pro posse, persequar et impugnabo. "Hæretics, Schismatics, and Rebels against our Lord the Pope, I will, with all my might, persecute and impugn." See also No. 14. in the foregoing note.

light of their good works shine before men, that seeing them, the world might glorify, (not them, but) their HEAVENLY FATHER, for giving such gifts unto men, and for the blessings dispensed to the world through their ministry, ver. 14—16.

The first commandment prohibited polytheism, and prescribed the worship of the ONLY TRUE GOD. In our Saviour's time the Jews, indeed, had been cured of that leaven of idolatry and polytheism, which they imported from Egypt, Phœnicia, &c. by the Babylonish captivity, such as the golden calves, Baal and Ashtaroth, and the host of heaven; but they fell into another species of idolatry; they were remarkably covetous or worldly minded, intent on gain, wealth, or money, called in Syriac mammon. This OUR LORD elegantly personifies, and erects into that golden idol set up by the world in opposition to GOD; which all the peoples, the nations and languages fall down and worship. To correct this ruling passion, our Lord declares, "No man can serve two masters [together,] for either he will hate the one, and love the other, or else he will cleave to the one, and despise the other: ye cannot serve GOD and Mammon" at the same time, or render to both a divided worship, Matt. vi. 24. For "covetousness is justly styled idolatry," as alienating the heart and affections from GOD, Col. iii. 5; "if any man love the world, the love of the FATHER is not in him," 1 John ii. 15.

OUR LORD, therefore, recommends the pursuit of heavenly treasures in preference to earthly, stating that the latter are corruptible by rust and moth, and liable to be plundered by thieves and robbers; whereas the former are imperishable and secure. And that the heavenly will then engage and engross the heart and affections of those who are illuminated with true wisdom; who will look down with contempt on the earthly, that engross the hearts of those whom the god of this world hath so blinded that they cannot discern the glorious light of THE GOSPEL; whose case is truly deplorable, "since the light that is in them is darkness," so that they cannot discover their error, misled by an infatuation the most incurable, Matt. vi. 19—24. Compare John ix. 39—41.

III. Having traced the analogy between the entire decalogue, or summary of the law of Moses, and the Sermon on the Mount, the summary of our Lord's religious and moral doctrine, we shall proceed to consider the particular petitions of our Lord's prayer, as explained by the remainder of the sermon, and by other parallel passages of Scripture.

The particular petitions, though adapted to individuals, are still carried on in the plural number, to signify that we are bound to pray not for ourselves singly, but for our families, our friends, and our connexions.

1. The first of this class prays for the supply of our temporal wants.

“ Give us this day our sufficient bread.”

The basis of this petition seems to be the following prayer of the wise Agur, in Proverbs, stating the respective temptations and dangers of riches and poverty.

“ Give me neither poverty nor riches,
Feed me with bread sufficient for me * ;

* The original Hebrew, לחם חקי, (lehem hoki), is rendered in the Syriac version, “ the bread of my sufficiency,” or “ necessity ;” and in the Septuagint, more freely, μοι τα δεοντα και αυταρκη, “ the things necessary and sufficient for me.” Our Lord, in his prayer, probably used the Syriac, or vernacular phrase, which is found in the Syriac version of the New Testament, in both the citations of the Lord's prayer, Matt. vi. 11 ; Luke xi. 3. But in these the Evangelists closely rendered it τον επιουσιον *, a word coined by them for the purpose, and no where else to be found, neither in the Greek Testament nor in classic authors, as observed formerly by Origen. Which has given birth to a variety of interpretations thereof, (as may be seen in the commentators, Wetstein, and Schleusner's Lexicon.) But the most probable is that which represents it as compounded of επι, ad, and ουσια, essentia ; as understood by Theophylact, who explained it επι τη ουσια και συστασει ημων αυταρκη, “ sufficient for our existence and sustenance :” in the last word, αυταρκη, evidently copying the foregoing rendering of the Alex. Septuagint : and it was so understood by Suidas, επι τη ουσια ημων αρμοζων, “ suitable for our existence,” In this sense of επιουσιος, (which is perfectly agreeable to the analogy of Greek composition, as in επιταφιον, “ what relates to burial ;” επιληνιον, “ what relates to the wine vat,” &c.) it is contrasted with περιουσιος, from περι, super, and ουσια, essentia, which is frequent in the New Testament and in classic authors, signifying “ redundant,” “ superfluous,” “ more than sufficient for support,” &c. And that this, indeed, is the true sense of this scarce word, we may further collect from the interpretation of the Apostle James, who freely renders it τα επιτηδεια του σωματος, “ the necessaries of the body,” ii. 16, where the Syriac version, to mark the sameness of signification, uses the same phrase as in the foregoing instances.

In addition to these cogent arguments for the sense proposed, we may observe, that “ daily,” adopted in our English Bible, is rather tautologous ; scarcely, if at all, differing from the preceding, σημερον, “ this day,” which is inadmissible in so very concise a

* In addition to the foregoing critical remarks, Vol. III. p. 9, &c. this unusual word, επιουσιος, seems conclusive to prove that Matthew wrote in Greek, and that Luke copied it from him.

Lest I be full, and deny Thee,
 And say, Who is THE LORD?
 Or lest I be poor and steal,
 And take the name of MY GOD [in vain,] Prov. xxx. 8, 9.

Affluence, indeed, is apt to produce unmindfulness of the Divine bounties, Deut. viii. 10, Job i. 5, Exod. v. 2, Dan. v. 20—23. Poverty, on the other hand, often leads to theft; and thence to oaths, imprecations, and perjury, in order to hide the fact, when challenged therewith, Josh. vii. 11—19. Agur, therefore, deprecating both extremes, wisely and moderately prayed for a competency, “bread to eat, and raiment to put on,” as expressed more fully in Jacob’s modest prayer and vow, Gen. xxviii. 20, 21.

“Bread,” that “staff of life,” (Levit. xxvi. 6,) is put for food in general; and so much is prayed for, as may “suffice,” for the supply of our wants, not for the superfluities or luxuries of life. OUR LORD improves Agur’s petition, by adding “this day,” or “day by day,” Luke xi. 3, to mark our continual and uninterrupted dependance on that bountiful PROVIDENCE, “which giveth to all his offspring, life and breath, and all things” necessary for their support, Acts xvii. 25, xiv. 17, Matt. v. 45.

In the Sermon on the Mount, OUR LORD censures a criminal distrust of GOD’S providence, as among those unbelieving Heathens who exclaim, What shall we eat? or what shall we drink?—or wherewithal shall we be clothed? We should learn wisdom from HIS usual operations in animated and even inanimate nature. The common FATHER OF ALL, whose mercy is over all his works, feeds the birds of the air, and “clothes the lilies of the field.” He helps the industry of the former to find their daily food, though “they neither sow nor reap, nor gather into barns;” and the latter, “which neither work nor spin,” unable to do any thing at all of themselves to promote their “growth,” He clothes in greater glory and beauty, than even Solomon in all his magnificence of apparel. But man ranks higher in the scale of creation, and in the sight of God, composition, every word almost of which is equivalent to a sentence. Others render it crastinus, “to-morrow’s bread;” (as if derived from the participle of the verb επειμι, like περιουσιος, say they, from that of the verb περιειμι.) but this sense seems contradictory to our Lord’s exhortation, “Be not anxious for the morrow,” &c. Matt. vi. 34, and therefore is inadmissible, even if the grammatical derivation was correct, which does not appear to be the case.

than the birds, and much higher than the fleeting lily, which to-day is in bloom, and to-morrow is cast into the oven, when withered, for fuel; how much more then is He disposed to feed and clothe us? For these are necessary for that life and body which we owe solely to him, and to promote the growth of our stature, over which we have no power or concern at all. If we seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, the "bread of life," or our spiritual growth and improvement, he will give us, in addition, our necessary food and raiment, Matt. vi. 25—33. And OUR LORD warns us not to anticipate and aggravate the natural and necessary ills of life, by over carefulness about our future support. "Therefore be not ye anxious about the morrow, for the morrow shall be anxious about its own concerns: sufficient to the [present] day is the evil thereof," Matt. vi. 34. What a world of artificial ills, and adventitious misery and uneasiness, would this new commandment respecting ourselves save to discontented and repining mortals, if strictly adhered to! "O taste and see that THE LORD is good: happy is the man that trusteth in Him!" Psalm xxxiv. 8. "Casting all your anxiety upon Him, for HE careth for you," O ye of little faith! 1 Pet. v. 7.

The second of the particular petitions, relates to the relief of our spiritual wants.

" And forgive us our debts,
As we also forgive our debtors."

Here debts (οφειλήματα,) primarily denote omission of duties. This appears from the interesting parable of the debtors, of whom the one owed his master the immense sum of ten thousand talents; the other, his fellow-servant, the comparatively trifling sum of one hundred denarii, Matt. xviii. 23—34; and these, perhaps, form the most formidable article in the catalogue of our offences, supplying, in the number of our "negligences and ignorances," what may be deficient in the weight of our positive sins.—For, "in many things we all slip," James iii. 2; and "there is no man living that sinneth not," in thought, word, or deed, 1 Kings viii. 46. "If thou, LORD, be severe to mark what we have done amiss, O Lord, who may abide it!" Psalm cxxx. 3.

Debts, also, denote positive sins, (ἁμαρτίας,) as in the parallel copy of the Lord's Prayer, Luke xi. 4; or actual trespasses, (παράπτωματα), as in the following comment on this article, immediately subjoined, Matt. vi. 15, 16.

“ For if ye forgive men their trespasses,
Your HEAVENLY FATHER will also forgive you ;
But if ye forgive not men their trespasses,
Neither will YOUR FATHER forgive your trespasses.”

And this is repeated, Mark xi. 25. Compare Ecclus. xxviii. 1—6, in which this precept is strongly recommended.

Repentance, however, on the part of the offender, is an indispensable condition of forgiveness, both with GOD and man ; because, if he continue impenitent, he is unworthy to receive it ; and on man's part, it would be often unsafe to grant it. This is strongly illustrated in the parable of the two debtors, in which the master remitted one servant's debt, when he fell at his feet, and besought him, “ LORD, have patience with me, and I will pay thee all,” which indeed was promising more than he could possibly perform, were not another ransom found for his deficiency, in the great INTERCESSOR, or ADVOCATE, JESUS CHRIST, Job xxxiii. 23, 24. (See Vol. II. p. 87.)

This servant, for refusing his fellow servant's supplication, precisely in the same terms, lost the benefit of the former grant of forgiveness, and was sentenced to be imprisoned and tormented till he should pay the whole debt : intimating that his punishment would be endless.

And OUR LORD prescribed repentance, as absolutely necessary to procure forgiveness, even from man.

“ Take heed to yourselves, [or beware of a spirit of revenge,] if thy brother sin against thee, rebuke him ; and if he repent, forgive him. And if he sin against thee seven times in the day, and seven times in the day turn himself to thee, saying, I repent, thou shalt forgive him,” Luke xvii. 3, 4. The nature of true repentance, is finely explained and illustrated in the exquisite parable of the prodigal son ; who, when he came to himself, or to his right mind, instantly arose and returned to his kind father, with the most humble declaration of his sin against heaven and against his father, and of his utter unworthiness to be reinstated in his former privileges as a son, and only fit to be received as a hired servant, the lowest station in his father's household, Luke xv. 11—21.

Nor is forgiveness to be limited : when Peter, evidently following up the former conversation, enquired, LORD, how oft shall my brother sin against me, and I forgive him? until seven times? JESUS saith unto him, I say not unto thee, until seven times, but until seventy times seven *, Matt. xviii. 27. And the nature of true forgiveness is thus expressed, "So likewise shall MY HEAVENLY FATHER do also unto you, if ye from your hearts forgive not each his brother their trespasses," Matt. xviii. 21—35.

The petition, therefore, may be thus explained;

"Forgive us our offences, upon our repentance,
As we forgive our offenders upon their repentance."

This is perfectly consonant to the dictates of reason, as well as of revelation.

The last petition prays for divine aid and support in our spiritual dangers.

"And bring us not into temptation,
But deliver us from the wicked one."

The word πειρασμον, is ambiguous; it is used both in a good, and a bad sense. It either denotes "trial," or "proof," which we may bear and surmount, or under which we may fall, and be overcome. In the latter case, it should appropriately be rendered "temptation."

GOD often brings the best men into trial, to prove the sincerity of their faith and obedience, by tribulations and persecutions; to correct them in kindness for their faults, to humble their pride and self-sufficiency, and to perfect them by sufferings in this life, in order to prepare them for a better. Thus THE LORD tried Job, v. 17, Heb. xii. 5—11; and Abraham, Gen. xxii. 1—18; and Joseph, Psalm cv. 19; and Moses, Exod. iv. 19, Heb. iii. 5, xi. 25; and the Israelites, Deut. viii. 2—5, Judges ii. 22, &c. &c. and by the highest of all examples, THE SON OF GOD himself, after his baptism; who was led, or impelled by THE HOLY SPIRIT, of which he was full, into the wilderness, to be tried, or proved by the Devil, that wicked one †, against whose wiles he has taught us, by his own experience, to pray for deliverance: "That GOD would not bring us into any trial that may exceed our strength to bear, but along with the trial, may make also an outlet, that we may be able to support it," 1 Cor. x. 13.

* It is remarkable, that seventy times seven, or 490 years, critically expressed the long-suffering of GOD for the crimes of the Jews, from the restoration of their polity in Church and State, after the Babylonian captivity, B.C. 420, to its destruction again by the Romans, A.D. 70, as foretold in Daniel's prophecy of the seventy weeks, and noticed by David Levi. See Vol. II. p. 514, note.

† See the last note, p. 114.

It is in the former sense of the word, that the Apostle James says, "My brethren, count it all joy when ye fall into various trials, [like the Apostles themselves, Acts v. 41,] knowing that the proof of your faith worketh patience, but let patience have her wcrk perfect; that ye may be perfect and complete, deficient in nothing," James i. 2—4; compare Rom. v. 3—5. "Happy is the man that endureth trial, for when he is proved, he shall receive the crown of glory, which THE LORD hath promised to them that love him," James i. 12; see the promise, Luke xxii. 28—30; and compare 1 Pet. v. 4; 2 Tim. iv. 8.

But "let none say, when tempted, [in excuse for his sinning,] I am tempted by GOD: for GOD cannot be tempted by evils, neither tempteth He any one HIMSELF," James i. 13. The actual tempter, by Divine permission, is Satan, as in the temptations of Eve, Job, David, Ahab, and his false Prophets; Peter, Judas, and the false Apostles of CHRIST, 2 Cor. xi. 3—13. See Cruden's Concordance, voce Satan.

"The snare of the Devil," 1 Tim. iii. 7; 2 Tim. ii. 26, or the means he used to tempt, or to "bring them into temptation," and its fatal progress, are critically described, with the most profound knowledge of human nature, by the Apostle James, in continuation.

"But every man is tempted, when he is drawn out, by means of his peculiar appetite, and ensnared: then, the appetite having conceived, produceth sin, and sin, when perfected, bringeth forth Death *," James i. 14, 15.

The various baits of "appetite," with which the Devil, that wicked fisher of men, "ensnares" his unwary prey, and "draws them out" of their proper element of religion and virtue, are "the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye, and the pride of life," as illustrated in the cases of Eve, Vol. II. p. 13, of David, Vol. II. p. 351, and of CHRIST, Vol. III. p. 77, &c.

It is to the NEW TESTAMENT that we owe the fullest and clearest information of the personal existence and agency of this most inveterate enemy of GOD and man; whose deepest device has been to ridicule and to allegorize the idea of his own reality, in order to throw an unsuspecting world off their guard, (see this Vol. p. 11,) that he may find their hearts “empty, swept, and garnished,” fitted and prepared for the reception of himself and his wicked spirits, “to enter in, and dwell there,” by the most dreadful and alarming possession. The danger and extent of our spiritual warfare, indeed, is well expressed by Paul, his powerful opponent, in his own kingdom, the Gentile world, who was commissioned by CHRIST “to open their eyes, to convert them from darkness to LIGHT, from the power of Satan unto GOD,” Acts xxvi. 18.

* See Shakspeare's admirable commentary on this passage, Vol. II. p. 100, foregoing; which also seems to have furnished Milton with his sublime allegory of Sin, the daughter, and Death, the incestuous offspring of Satan, P. L. 1.

“For, our wrestling is not merely with flesh and blood, [mankind,] but with the principalities, with the powers, with the mundane rulers of the darkness of this world, with the wicked spirits among the celestial beings,” Ephes. vi. 12. Here the Apostle’s imagery seems to be borrowed from the mysterious transaction of Jacob’s wrestling with the angel of light, Gen. xxxii. 24.

The most effectual means of defence, we learn from our Lord’s precept, “watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation ;” by over security, or self-confidence, “the spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh is weak,” Matt. xxvi. 41.

The most mischievous instrument employed by Satan for the destruction of souls, is THE WORD OF GOD itself, “adulterated” and perverted, according to “his methodism of error,” or erroneous modelling of HOLY WRIT*, as we have actually seen in the foregoing cases of Eve, Vol. II. p. 13, and of CHRIST, Vol. III. p. 78, 2 Cor. ii. 17, Ephes. iv. 14. For, by the confession of the inspired Apostles themselves, “There are some parts of SCRIPTURE, (especially Paul’s Epistles,) hard to be understood, and hard to be interpreted,” respecting “the mystery of THE GOSPEL,” which the unlearned and unstable, tossed to and fro, and veering about with every wind of doctrine, wrest to their own, and their hearers’ destruction ; deceiving others, and deceived themselves ; whilst false apostles, and false teachers, like the false prophets of old, foist in pernicious heresies, even denying THE LORD that bought them, (with his precious blood,) bringing on themselves speedy destruction : the old Serpent, by

* ————— “in Religion,
 What darned error but some sober brow
 Will bless it, and approve it with a text ?” Shakspeare.

his subtilty, corrupting their minds from the simplicity of the GOSPEL respecting CHRIST. Compare, in the originals, 2 Pet. iii. 16, Heb. v. 11, 2 Pet. ii. 1, 2, Gal. ii. 4, 2 Cor. xi. 3, 1 Cor. xi. 19, Ephes. vi. 19, Col. i. 26, 27, iv. 3, 2 Tim. iii. 13.

“ To withstand the Devil,” and his emissaries, namely, “ false apostles, deceitful workers, transforming themselves into apostles” of CHRIST, we are exhorted “ to put on the divine panoply, to gird our loins with truth or sincerity, in opposition to guile or falsehood, to wear the breast-plate of righteousness, or a conscience void of offence toward GOD and toward men, and to be shod with the preparation, (or sandals), of the Gospel of peace,” in a meek and quiet spirit, a peaceable and inoffensive demeanor; “ above all, to assume the shield of faith, whereby we may be enabled to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked one, and to take the helmet of salvation, or the blessed hope of everlasting life. And in addition to this complete defensive armour, to take the sword of the Spirit, which is THE WORD OF GOD,” carefully compared, and critically expounded, so as to vanquish the enemy at his own weapons, like the great CAPTAIN OF OUR SALVATION, who permitted no other offensive weapon to be employed in his cause. But it is “ two edged,” and unless it be cautiously handled, and skilfully used, may recoil and cleave asunder the wretched victim of his own indiscretion, who dares to wield it, without due preparation and discipline.

To guard, therefore, against this danger of handling THE WORD OF GOD deceitfully, or unskilfully, we are further recommended “ to pray with all prayer and supplication in spirit, at every season, (especially of emergency,) and to be vigilant thereunto, with all perseverance.” Compare also in the originals, 2 Cor. xi. 13, 14, iv. 2, Ephes. vi. 10—18, 2 Cor. x. 4, 5, 1 Pet. v. 9, James iv. 7.

And for our encouragement and support during this arduous and perilous warfare, we are assured, that “ Greater is HE presiding in us, than he presiding in the world,” 1 John iv. 4, as implied also in the doxology, or conclusion of the Lord's Prayer.

“ For THINE is the kingdom, and the power,
And the glory, for evermore. Amen.”

“ THINE,” and not Satan's, as he boasted even to THE SON OF GOD himself, Luke iv. 6. (See p. 79.) THE FATHER, indeed, is greater than all," John x. 29. And though, in his infinite wisdom, He permits Satan to exercise a considerable sway in this world, for the punishment of the bad, and the trial of the good, yet it is but for a season. The time is approaching, when, in the regeneration, the whole world, convinced and converted, shall exclaim, THE LORD, HE IS THE GOD! THE LORD, HE IS THE GOD! and not Satan, nor his prime auxiliaries, Baal and Mammon, (idolatry and worldly-mindedness,) which now rule with divided sway; when the kingdoms of this world, from the rising to the setting sun, shall become the willing subjects of THE LORD and HIS CHRIST; and THE LORD GOD OMNIPOTENT shall be all in all; and reign for evermore, throughout all eternity. Amen.

And as OUR LORD began his Sermon on the Mount with an impressive warning to his disciples of that age, against "the leaven," or doctrine of the Scribes and Pharisees, so he concludes with a similar warning against false teachers, to the end of the world; with an infallible criterion for detecting such by their fruits or works; and he excludes from the happiness of heaven all workers of iniquity, however eminently gifted as teachers, in prophesying or preaching, expelling demons, and working miracles, in the name of CHRIST, Matt. vii. 21—24.

Thus does this divine discourse critically harmonize throughout with the Decalogue and the Lord's prayer, while it furnishes the finest comment and improvement of the whole religious and moral law of Moses.

The whole "mystery of THE GOSPEL" is summed up and comprized in one single text, furnished by that most highly gifted Apostle Paul, "according to the wisdom given to him," which he taught as a "father in Christ, worth ten thousand school-masters."

This most comprehensive text is given in his Epistle to Titus, ii. 11—14.

"For the saving grace of GOD hath appeared to all men, teaching us, that denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world, expecting the blessed hope and glorious appearance of OUR GREAT GOD AND SAVIOUR JESUS CHRIST *, who gave

* This rendering is ably vindicated by Sharp, Wordsworth, and Middleton. 1. From the grammatical construction of the Greek article, according to the rule noticed before, himself [a ransom] for us, to redeem us from all iniquity, and to purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works."

On this passage, more closely translated, we may remark, 1. THE GOD whose saving grace hath been manifested to all men in the Gospel, is "THE FATHER OF MERCIES, and GOD of all consolation, 2 Cor. i. 3, who willeth all men to be saved, and come unto information of the truth," 1 Cor. ii. 3, 4. 2. The epithet "THE SAVIOUR" is applied both to THE FATHER and to THE SON in the sequel.

"For when the kindness and philanthropy of GOD OUR SAVIOUR, [THE FATHER,] appeared, He saved us, not by works which we ourselves had done in righteousness, but according to his mercy, by the baptism of regeneration, and by renovation of the HOLY SPIRIT, whose influence He shed forth richly upon us, through JESUS CHRIST OUR SAVIOUR, to the end that, having been justified by HIS [THE FATHER'S] grace, we might be made heirs of eternal life, according to hope," Tit. iii. 4—7.

This noble passage, apparently designed for the illustration of the former, intimates, that "the grace" there noticed originated from "OUR SAVIOUR GOD," THE FATHER, and was effected by "OUR SAVIOUR GOD likewise, JESUS CHRIST," through the instrumentality of the HOLY GHOST, regenerating and sanctifying us, by his influence, in baptism, and afterwards in the course of our lives.

(note on John xvii. 3,) in the article of CHRIST'S intercession. 2. From the concurrent testimony of Clemens Alexandrinus and all the early Fathers, in favour of this rendering. 3. The Geneva Bible translators, 1593, so explain it in their note, "CHRIST here, most plainly called 'THAT MIGHTIE GOD,' and his appearance and coming is called by the figure metonymic 'our hope.' 4. The Assembly of Divines, 1651, observe in their annotations, "To the confutation and confusion of all that deny the deity of CHRIST, the Apostle here calleth him, not only GOD, but THE GREAT GOD. 5. The parallel passage, του Θεου ημων και Σωτηρος Ιησου Χριστου, "of OUR GOD and SAVIOUR, JESUS CHRIST," 2 Pet. i. 1, (which differs only in the position of ημων before or after Σωτηρος, without affecting the sense; for the pronoun, in fact, understood, ought to be repeated twice, namely, του Θεου ημων και Σωτηρος ημων, after each noun, as judiciously remarked by Middleton, p. 622,) is so rendered, and understood of CHRIST alone, by the versions of Wickliffe, Coverdale, Matthews, Cranmer, the Bishops' Bible, the Geneva, the Rhemish, and also by Wells, Dodd, Doddridge, Wesley, &c. 6. Hence we may conclude that this passage was also so understood by our Bible translators in 1609, "of the great God, and our Saviour, JESUS CHRIST." For had they meant two distinct persons they should have repeated the pronoun, "and (of) our Saviour." The ambiguity, however, ought to be removed, in order to establish this most powerful text for CHRIST'S divinity in its full lustre; plucking up Unitarianism by the roots.

2. But while the Apostle is thus careful to “ ascribe unto THE FATHER the honour due unto his name,” in the great work of our salvation, he is equally zealous to glorify the SON for his kindness and gracious condescension in becoming OUR GREAT GOD and SAVIOUR also, or THE TUTELAR GOD of his peculiar people, the Christians, as well as SAVIOUR, which seems to be the most correct interpretation of that important phrase. Compare Acts xix. 28; Luke i. 32; Isaiah ix. 6.

3. The evidence of our regeneration, as a holy people, separated as “ a peculiar treasure to CHRIST, above all people, though all the earth be his,” Exod. xix. 5, is to be shewn by “ denying ungodliness and worldly lusts,” by a sincere reformation in religion and morals; for the former must precede the latter: and the evidence of our sanctification, by “ living soberly with respect to ourselves, righteously toward men, and piously toward GOD, in our progress toward Christian perfection; the highest duty, as most difficult of attainment, being here placed last, by this consummate Teacher of the Gospel *.

* Of all the various confessions of faith, or articles of religion, that have been published since the Apostles' creed, by the several Christian Churches of the East and West, the simplest, and most comprehensive, and most scriptural, perhaps, is furnished by the Albigensian confession, about A.D. 1200, for which, alas! this small primitive Christian Church, (called Albigenses or Albigeois, from Albi, their principal town, in France,) was nearly extirpated in the home crusade stirred up against them by the see of Rome, about A.D. 1096, which lasted a century; and also by the inquisition, expressly instituted to take cognizance of their heresies. It had been fortunately preserved among their surviving remains, the Merindolians and Caprarians, who presented it A.D. 1544 to Francis I. king of France. Molinæus published it from the French original, in his Monarchia Francorum, whence it was copied by Sands, in his Historia Ecclesiastica, p. 425, and thence by Jortin, in his Life of Erasmus, Vol. I. p. 611, of which the following is a literal translation.

ALBIGEOIS CONFESSION OF FAITH, A.D. 1200.

I. “ We believe that there is ONLY ONE GOD, who is SPIRIT, CREATOR OF ALL THINGS, FATHER OF ALL, ABOVE ALL, and THROUGH ALL, and IN US ALL, to be worshipped in spirit and truth; to WHOM alone we look up, as THE GIVER of life, food, and raiment, of health and sickness, of prosperity and adversity: and WHOM we love, as THE AUTHOR OF ALL GOODNESS, and fear as THE SEARCHER OF HEARTS.

II. “ We believe that JESUS CHRIST is THE SON OF GOD, and HIS IMAGE; in whom dwelleth all the fulness of the GODHEAD; through whom we know THE FATHER, who is both OUR MEDIATOR and OUR ADVOCATE; nor is there ANY OTHER NAME given to man whereby we can be saved; in whose NAME alone we invoke THE FATHER. Nor do we utter any PRAYERS before GOD, except those that are contained in HOLY SCRIPTURE, or are plainly conformable to the sense thereof.

III. “ We believe that we have a COMFORTER, THE HOLY SPIRIT, proceeding from THE FATHER and THE SON; by whose inspiration we pray, and by whose efficacy we are

III. THE SANCTIONS OF THE GOSPEL.

This momentous article is distinctly stated by OUR LORD, in his discourse with the unbelieving Jews, at the second passregenerated; who worketh in us all good works; and through whom we are led into all THE TRUTH.

IV. "We believe that there is ONE HOLY CHURCH, the congregation of GOD'S ELECT, from the foundation to the end of the world, whose HEAD is JESUS CHRIST OUR LORD; which is governed by THE ORACLE OF GOD, and led by THE HOLY GHOST; in which ALL sincere Christians are bound to converse: for she prayeth without ceasing for ALL; she is acceptable unto GOD, to whom she flieth for succour, and out of which there is no salvation.

V. "It is ordained among us, that THE MINISTERS OF THE CHURCH, both bishops and pastors, ought to be blameless in morals and doctrine, otherwise that they are to be deposed, and others to be substituted, to fill their place and office; but that none should assume this honour to himself, unless called by GOD, like Aaron; feeding God's flock, not greedy of filthy lucre, or as domineering over the clergy, but with a ready mind, setting an example to the godly, in speech, conduct, charity, faith, and chastity.

VI. "We confess that KINGS, PRINCES, and MAGISTRATES are MINISTERS appointed by GOD, who ought to be obeyed, for they bear the sword [of justice] to protect the innocent, and to punish the bad: and for this cause we are bound to render unto them honour, and to pay tribute. Nor can any one exempt himself from this obedience, if so be that he desire to be called A CHRISTIAN, following the example of our Lord and Saviour, JESUS CHRIST; for He paid tribute, and did not usurp jurisdiction, nor any temporal domination, in that his state of humiliation, exercising only the sword of the heavenly word.

VII. "We believe that WATER in the sacrament of BAPTISM is a visible and outward sign, representing unto us that which is inwardly wrought in us by the DIVINE VIRTUE, namely, the renovation of our spirit, and mortification of our flesh, in CHRIST JESUS, through whom, CHRIST, we are also made members of GOD'S HOLY CHURCH, in which we do shew forth the profession of our faith, and amendment of our life.

VIII. "We believe that the sacrament of the HOLY TABLE, or SUPPER OF OUR LORD JESUS CHRIST, is a sacred memorial and thanksgiving for the benefits conferred upon us by CHRIST'S death; to be celebrated in the assembly of the godly, with faith, charity, and self-approving conscience: and that by so taking the bread and cup we do communicate with CHRIST'S flesh and blood, according as we are taught in THE HOLY SCRIPTURES.

IX. "We profess that marriage is good, honorable, holy, and ordained by GOD; to be forbidden to none, unless GOD'S WORD do interpose.

X. "We believe that THE PIOUS, and they that FEAR GOD, will approve themselves unto GOD, so as to have leisure for GOOD WORKS, which He hath prepared to walk therein: and these works are, charity, joy, peace, patience, kindness, goodness, modesty, temperance, and other works recommended in SCRIPTURE.

XI. "On the contrary, we acknowledge that we ought to beware of FALSE PROPHETS, whose aim is to draw off the people from the religious worship due to THE ONE GOD and LORD, to cleave unto the creatures, and to trust in them; to forsake the good works recommended in SCRIPTURE, and to follow HUMAN INVENTIONS.

XII. "We retain THE OLD and NEW TESTAMENT as the rule of our faith, and we follow the APOSTLES' CEEED.

"Whosoever shall say that we profess other doctrine, we will prove that he is widely over, which may be considered as the continuation of his discourse with Nicodemus. (See this Vol. p. 100.)

The plenary power, and judicial authority conferred on Him by THE FATHER, is thus represented.

“ Verily, verily I say unto you, THE SON cannot do any thing of himself, except what he seeth THE FATHER doing; for what things soever HE doeth, these also THE SON doeth likewise. For THE FATHER loveth THE SON, and sheweth him all things that Himself doeth; and will shew him greater works than these [now wrought before you,] that ye may marvel.

For as THE FATHER raiseth and quickeneth the dead, even so THE SON quickeneth whom he willeth. “ For THE FATHER judgeth no one, but hath given the whole judgment to THE SON; to the end that all should honour THE SON, according as they honour THE FATHER: he that honoureth not THE SON, honoureth not THE FATHER who sent him,” John v. 19—23.

Here OUR LORD declares, in the plainest and most express terms, his association with THE FATHER, in power and worship, both positively and negatively, to give it more weight and impressiveness; and in the language of prophecy also, as spoken of the MESSIAH, who is styled “ MY ASSOCIATE” by THE FATHER, Zech. xiii. 7, and who declared of himself, “ *The sacrifice of praise shall honour me; and thereby will I shew him, [my worshipper] the way to the salvation of GOD,” Psalm l. 23. Compare Psalm ii. 12.

Our gracious LORD, the righteous JUDGE of all the earth, in his conversation with Nicodemus, had briefly stated the certainty of the future judgment, by one of those bold figures of rhetoric, prolepsis, or anticipation, (John iii. 18,) which he here repeats.

deceived himself, and deceiving others; provided we may be allowed, by the ordinary judges, [or civil magistrates, not the inquisition.”]

For these incomparable articles, striking at the root of the papal idolatry and superstition throughout, in the most guarded and cautious scriptural terms, were the professors persecuted unto death; and for his fiery zeal against them, was Dominick, the first inquisitor general, canonized by the Church of Rome! And even still, at the present day, and in this enlightened age, (as it is called) Romish malignity, with “ conscience seared with a hot iron,” unblushingly dares to insult the memory of these faithful witnesses of evangelical truth, styling them “ THE INFAMOUS ALBIGENSES”!!!

* This rendering is warranted by the Sept. Vulg. Syr. and Arab. versions; which, instead of the participle ֹשֶׁר , (Sam.) “ offering,” evidently read the adverb, ֹשֶׁר , (Sham.) “ there.”

“ Verily, verily I say unto you, he that heareth my word, and believeth on HIM that sent me, hath eternal life, and is not to come into judgment, but hath passed over (μεταβέβηκεν,) from death into life,” ver. 24.

He now enters more minutely into the subject of

THE TWO RESURRECTIONS.

It is the peculiar glory of THE GOSPEL, to have unfolded this most awful and awakening doctrine, more clearly, distinctly, and explicitly than the OLD TESTAMENT.

The first resurrection is thus described by OUR LORD.

“ Verily, verily I say unto you, the hour is coming, and is now [at hand,] when the dead shall hear the voice of THE SON OF GOD, and they that hear shall live *,” ver. 25.

* Lightfoot is the single commentator, perhaps, who rightly interprets this very important verse (25,) of the first resurrection; supposing it equivalent to Rev. xx. 5. All the rest refer it, either to the miracles of raising the dead, in the course of our Lord’s ministry, the daughter of Jairus, the widow’s son at Nain, and Lazarus; or else, to the saints that arose after our Lord’s resurrection, and appeared to many in the holy city, Matt. xxvii. 53.

But neither of these supposed cases seem of sufficient importance for the occasion, nor suitable to the context. 1. They were but few; and the persons restored to life, died again, and saw corruption. 2. The apparitions were transient, and not generally seen; but the resurrection here meant, is to eternal life; as plainly intimated by ver. 26; and by its contrast with the general resurrection afterwards, ver. 28, corresponding with Rev. xx. 11—13. 2. The stated time on which the prevailing opinion is founded, και νυν εστιν, “and is now [at hand,]” admits of considerable latitude. OUR LORD, shortly before, expressed that blessed season of the regeneration, when the pure and spiritual worship of GOD should universally prevail throughout the earth, exactly by the same phrase, as Lightfoot remarks, “the hour is coming and is now [at hand,] when the true worshippers shall worship THE FATHER in spirit and truth,” John iv. 23. For the interval, however considerable it may seem to men, is nothing in the sight of GOD, to whom “a thousand years are but as one day,” Psalm xc. 4, 2 Pet. iii. 8.

3. Where OUR LORD meant to express a near event, such as the approaching desertion of his disciples, previous to his crucifixion, he clearly marks it by a definite sense, ερχεται ωρα και νυν εληλυθεν, “the hour is coming, and hath now come, when ye shall be scattered,” &c. John xvi. 32.

4. The foregoing expression, και νυν εστιν, is explained by Paul, εγγυς εστιν, “THE LORD is nigh,” or “at hand,” Phil. iv. 5; yet he denies that “the day of THE LORD, ενεστηκεν, is actually impending, or ready to come upon us, until after the appearance and removal of the man of sin, or the lawless one,” 2 Thess. ii. 1—8, which was confessedly a distant event. James also, thus exhorts the faithful, μακροθυμησατε, “wait patiently, until the presence of THE LORD, because his presence, ηγγικε, draweth nigh,” James v. 7, 8; and so Peter says, “the end of all things, ηγγικε, draweth nigh, be sober therefore, and vigilant unto prayers,” 1 Pet. iv. 7, and yet he represents CHRIST’s presence as rather a distant event, in his description of the “new heavens and new earth,” 2 Pet. iii. 4—13.

For as THE FATHER hath life in Himself, so gave He also to THE SON to have life in himself; and gave him authority also to exercise judgment, because he is THE SON OF MAN," ver. 26.

The second follows.

"Marvel not at this, [the first resurrection,] for the hour is coming, in which all that are in the tombs, shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation," ver. 28, 29.

The analogy and the contrast in these mysterious passages, is remarkable. In both resurrections, the hour, or season of judgment, is said to be coming, or drawing on; but in the former, is now at hand, or nigh, compared with the latter, which is indefinite. In the former, only some of the dead shall hear, and live, or rise to eternal life, in consequence of the principle of eternal life, vested in THE SON by THE FATHER, and communicated to them, "the just," or eminently righteous dead; "who shall then live by their faith," in CHRIST as their REDEEMER, Habak. ii. 3, 4. as explained Rom. i. 17, Gal. iii. 11, Heb. x. 36—39. Whence, perhaps, OUR LORD styles it, the resurrection of the just, Luke xiv. 14, and calls them the children of the resurrection, who shall die no more for ever, but shall be like angels, immediate sons of God, Luke xx. 36, John xi. 26, Job i. 6.

In this account of the first resurrection, OUR LORD seems particularly to allude to that famous prophecy of Daniel, in which he was styled THE SON OF MAN, and invested with universal and everlasting dominion, by THE ANCIENT OF DAYS, THE FATHER; when he shall come, a second time, with glory, in the clouds of heaven, to establish the kingdom of the saints upon earth, at the regeneration, or restitution of all things; and to gather his elect from the four quarters of the world; when his Apostles, according to promise, shall sit on twelve thrones, judging, or instructing, the twelve tribes of Israel; when Daniel also, written in the book of life, shall stand in his lot, or proper order, at the end of the [1260] days [of persecution.] Compare Dan. vii. 13, 14—27, and xii. 1—13, with Matt. xix. 28, Luke xxii. 28—30, Matt. xxiv. 30, 31, Acts i. 6, 7, iii. 21, Heb. ix. 28, 1 Cor. xv. 23.

The fullest comment on Daniel's prophecy, and its duration, is furnished in the visions of the Apocalypse.

“And I saw thrones, and some [the Apostles,] sate thereon, and judgment was given to them. [I saw] also, the souls of the [two faithful witnesses of THE LAW and THE GOSPEL,] that were beheaded for the testimony of JESUS, [under the latter,] and for THE ORACLE OF GOD, [under the former, Rev. xi. 3—12.]——And they lived and reigned with CHRIST a thousand years. (But the rest of the dead revived not until the thousand years were finished.) This is the first resurrection. Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; upon such the second death hath no power: but they shall be priests of GOD and of CHRIST, a thousand years,” Rev. xx. 4—6.

And this clear and explicit commentary of John, is fully supported by the other Apostles.

Paul calls this first resurrection, “the extraordinary resurrection * of the dead,” to which he himself aspired, Phil. iii. 11; he states that it is to take place at CHRIST'S second appearance, 1 Cor. xv. 23, Heb. ix. 28; who is to reign until he has put all enemies under his feet, as foretold by David, Psalm cx. 1, 1 Cor. xv. 25; and he critically distinguishes this, from the end of the world, and translation of his kingdom from earth to heaven, ver. 24.

Peter also, in a highly figurative passage, (which shall be considered hereafter,) expressly states the expectation of the apostolic age; “for, according to CHRIST'S promise, we do expect a new heaven and a new earth, wherein righteousness shall reside,” 2 Pet. iii. 13. Compare Acts iii. 21.

The second resurrection, and general judgment of all mankind, is fully explained by OUR LORD himself, in a most awful representation of his coming at the end of the world, with all his holy angels, sitting as KING upon his throne, summoning all nations before Him, separating the sheep from the goats, or

* Την εξαναστασιν. This compound is used only in this passage; the lexicographers reckon it of the same import as the simple, αναστασις, “resurrection,” but εκ is often intensitive in composition, as εκθαμβειω, “to terrify exceedingly.” And surely, St. Paul must have aimed at something higher for himself, than the ordinary resurrection at the end of the world, common to all; he who had the first fruits of the Spirit, and waited for the adoption, Rom. viii. 23.

the good from the wicked, and consigning the former to heaven, and the latter to hell, Matt. xxv. 31—46.

The fullest comment on this also is furnished by the Apocalypse.

“And I saw a great white throne, and Him that sate thereon, [CHRIST,] from whose face the earth and the heaven fled, [or disappeared,] and there was found no place for them. And I saw the dead, small and great, standing before the *throne; and books were opened, and another was opened, which is the book of life; and the dead were judged from the registers in the books, according to their works. (And the sea gave up the dead therein, [the Antediluvians † especially,] and Death and Hades gave up the dead [bodies and souls] that were in them, and they were judged each (ἐκάστος,) according to their works.) —And whosoever (εἰ τις) was not found registered in the book of life, was cast into the lake of fire, along with Death and Hades. This is the second death,” Rev. xx. 11—15, xxi. 8.

We may trace here a likeness also, and an enlargement of the Psalmist's description of the throne of CHRIST, Psalm xlv. 6, 7, and of the general judgment by him, Psalm l. 1—5; noticed also by Solomon, Eccles. xii. 14.

The Apostle Paul has furnished some further most interesting particulars of the general resurrection and judgment.

* Ἐνωπιον τοῦ θρόνου. This reading is supported by all the ancient versions, and by the earliest editions, the Complutensian, Plantin, Genevan, and several MSS., and is restored to the text by Bengelius and Griesbach. The present reading, however, τοῦ Θεοῦ, is admissible, as referring to CHRIST, by the grammatical principles laid down, see this Vol. p. 67, note. But the former seems preferable from Rom. xiv. 10, 2 Cor. v. 10.

† The destiny of the Antediluvians, who perished in the general deluge, reserved in chains of darkness unto the judgment of the great day, in Tartarus, or the lower Hades, is noticed by the Apostle Jude, 6—15; 1 Pet. iii. 19, 20; 2 Pet. ii. 4, 5. See those difficult passages explained before, Vol. II pp. 36, 40.

From these texts, and from the parable of the rich man and Lazarus, explained also, Vol. II. p. 84, note, and afterwards, is sufficiently refuted the Popish and Pagan doctrine of purgatory, that supposed intermediate state for purifying the souls of sinners, before the general resurrection, by fire; from which state of torment they may be relieved, sooner or later, by masses and prayers, to be performed by the priests, for money, given them by the friends and relations of the deceased, and sent directly to Heaven! For,

1. Good souls are not tormented, but “comforted” in Paradise, or the upper Hades, Luke xvi. 25.

2. Bad souls are confined in Tartarus, or the lower Hades, by an “impassable gulph,” which precludes all intercourse with the blessed, Luke xvi. 26.

3. No mortal ever yet went to heaven nor to hell, till the general judgment, Acts ii. 34, Rev. xx. 14.

For this I say unto you, by the [revealed] word of THE LORD, that we, the quick, (οἱ ζῶντες), who shall remain until the [final] presence of THE LORD, shall not anticipate them that are asleep [in THE LORD, or the faithful dead, Heb. xi. 13.] For THE LORD himself shall descend from heaven with a shout [of the angelic host,] with the voice of the archangel, and with the trumpet of God. And the dead in CHRIST shall rise first. Then we, the quick, who shall remain, shall be caught together with them, to meet THE LORD in the air. And so we shall be always with THE LORD [in heaven,] 1 Thess. iv. 15—17, according to his promise to his disciples, John xiv. 2, 3.

The process of their resurrection he thus describes: “Lo, I shew you a mystery: all we, [the faithful quick,] shall not sleep, [or die,] but shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trumpet, (for it shall sound again,) and the [faithful] dead shall be raised [first,] incorruptible, and we shall be changed [from corruptible to incorruptible bodies, and from mortal to immortal spirits;] for this corruptible [body] must needs put on incorruption, and this mortal [spirit] put on immortality.—For this I say, brethren, that flesh and blood, [or mankind in their natural state,] cannot inherit the kingdom of God [in heaven,] neither shall corruption inherit incorruption, 1 Cor. xv. 50—53, as OUR LORD stated before to Nicodemus, John iii. 6.

The resurrection and destruction of the infidels and wicked is also thus described.

“When the LORD JESUS, [as the SON OF GOD, and the JUDGE of the world,] shall be revealed from heaven in flaming fire, attended with the angels, the ministers of his power, and shall inflict exemplary punishment (εκδικησιν) upon those that know not God, [the infidels,] and upon those that obey not the Gospel of our LORD JESUS CHRIST, [the wicked,] who shall suffer punishment, namely, everlasting destruction, [far] from the face of THE LORD, and from the glory of his strength, [in hell, Psalm ix. 17 ;] when he shall come to be glorified by his saints, and to be admired by all the believers, [contrasting their own reward with the punishment of the others,] in that day [of final retribution,] 2 Thess. i. 7—10.

“Then shall the righteous shine forth like the sun in the kingdom of their Father,” Matt. xiii. 43, where “they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, [the sun and the moon,] and the justified of the many, as the stars for evermore," Dan. xii. 3. "As one star differeth from another star in glory," 1 Cor. xv. 40, 41. For in their Father's house, heaven, there are "many mansions," appropriated to each class, John xiv. 2.

The bodies of the wicked are not described in Scripture; but that they will be different in their nature from those of the righteous, may be inferred from the different forms of the sheep and the goats, to which both are compared by our Lord himself. They "whose God was their belly, who gloried in their shame," who "mined earthly things," will probably "wake to everlasting shame and infamy," in earthly bodies, like those in which they died; while the wicked quick will retain their bodies unchanged, and both "shall be destroyed, soul and body, in hell;" while "CHRIST shall transform the body of the humiliation of the righteous, or their earthly bodies, to become similar in form to the body of his glory, according to that energy, by which he is able even to subdue all things unto himself," Phil. iii. 19, 21; Dan. xii. 2; Matt. x. 28.

May the knowledge of these most awful mysteries, disclosed to us by CHRIST and his inspired Prophets and Apostles, sink deep into our hearts, and produce in us the fruit of good living, to the honour and glory of GOD, and of our LORD JESUS CHRIST, and for the preservation of our spirit, soul, and body, which compose our whole frame, in that great and terrible day of the Lord, Amen! 1 Thess. v. 23.

II. This distinction of the two resurrections was also the doctrine of the primitive Church.

Justin Martyr, A.D. 140, "a man not far removed from the Apostles, in time and virtue," a Samaritan, who had the best opportunity of conversing with the disciples of Apostles, a philosopher by education, and a convert * to Christianity, who sealed the sincerity of his faith with his blood, thus states it.

"I, however, and such Christians as are orthodox in all respects, do know (επισταμεθα) that there will be a resurrection of the flesh, and a thousand years in Jerusalem, rebuilt, adorned,

* Justin Martyr, among the reasons for his conversion, assigned, that in the Grecian rites, he found nothing holy, or that could recommend man to GOD; whereas, in the Christian Baptism, repentance and amendment of life was required, without which, the mere act of washing was of no effect. Ad Græcos Orat.

and enlarged, according to the joint declarations of Ezekiel, Isaiah, and the other Prophets. And since a certain person from among us, whose name was John, in a revelation made to him, did prophesy, that the believers in OUR CHRIST shall spend a thousand years in the [New] Jerusalem. And that after these shall be expired, the universal, and (in a word,) eternal resurrection of all, without exception, shall come to pass." See the original passage, Justin Martyr's Works, p. 313—315. Thirlby: or Bishop Newton's Prophecies, Vol. III. p. 338.

To this prime testimony we may add that of Tertullian, A.D. 200, the most learned of the Latin Fathers.

"For we, (Christians,) also profess, that we are promised a kingdom upon earth again, but in another state, antecedent to the kingdom in heaven; which is to take place after the [first] resurrection for the thousand years, in a city of Divine workmanship, Jerusalem, brought down from heaven, (Rev. xx. 4, xxi. 2,) which the Apostle describes as our mother above, (Gal. iv. 26,) and our municipality, as being in heaven, (Phil. iii. 20,) namely, comparing it to some heavenly city. This both Ezekiel knew, (xl. 44,) and John the Apostle saw:—This we mean, which GOD hath provided for the reception of the saints on their resurrection, and for refreshing them with abundance of all goods, namely, spiritual, (Acts iii. 19,) as a compensation for those which we have either disregarded or lost in this world, (Mark x. 30:) inasmuch, as it is both just and meet of God, that even there should his servants rejoice, where they were afflicted for his name' sake, (Heb. xi. 13—16.) This is the nature of the kingdom of heaven."

"After the duration of this kingdom [upon earth,] during a thousand years, (within which period is included the resurrection of the saints, reviving sooner or later, according to their deserts, 1 Cor. xv. 23,) then shall the destruction of the world, and the judicial conflagration take place; when we shall be changed in a moment into an angelic substance, namely, by the putting on of incorruption, (1 Cor. xv. 53,) and then be translated into the kingdom of heaven," (Matt. xv. 34.) See the original passage, Mede's Works, p. 815.

This was also the doctrine of Irenæus, Bishop of Lyons, A.D. 178; Theophilus, Bishop of Antioch, A.D. 181, and of the early Fathers in general, both of the Greek and Latin Church, until Jerom, A. D. 392. And so prevalent was the doctrine, that in the Gothic Missals, it was customary to insert a clause in the prayers for the dead, ut partem haberent in resurrectione primá, that they might partake of the first resurrection." See Mede's Works, p. 841.

III. It was also the primitive doctrine of the Church of England, at the commencement of the Reformation; as may appear from the following extract from King Edward VI. Catechism, in 1553*.

"Master. The end of the world Holi Scripture calleth the fulfyllinge and parformance of the kyngdome and mystery of CHRIST, and the renewing of all things: for, (sayth the Apostle Peter, in his second Epistle, the third chapter,) 'We loke for a new heaven and a new earth, according to the promise of GOD, wherein dwelleth ryghteousnesse.' And it seemeth reason, that corruption, unstedfaste change and synne, whereunto the whole world is subject, should, at length, have an end. Now bi what way, and what fashiou circumstances, these things shal come to passe, I would fayne hear thee tell.

"Scholer. I will tell you as well as I can, accordynge to the wytnesse of the same Apostle. 'The heavens shall passe away like a storm: the elements shall melt awaye: the earth and all the workes therein shal bee consumed wyth fire:' as though he should say, 'as gould is wont to be fined, so shal the whole world be purified with fire,' and be brought to his full perfection. The lesser world, which is man, followynge the same, shal lykewyse be delyvered from corruption and chaunge. And so for man, this greater worlde, which for hys sake was first created, shal at length be renewed, and be clad wyth another hew, much more pleasaunte and beautiful."

This is an able explanation of the Apostle's figurative language on this occasion, in conformity with his speech to the Jews, of the continuance of CHRIST in heaven, "until the times of the restitution of all things, of which GOD spake by the mouth of all his holy Prophets, from the beginning of the world," Acts iii. 21, or his second advent. From which the Catechism proceeds to distinguish and explain his third and last advent, at the end of the world.

* This most excellent Catechism, the last work of the first Reformers, Cranmer, Ridley, &c. at the close of his reign, was published both in English and Latin, in the same year, 1553, by the King's authority. The English is republished in the Enchiridion Theologicum, by Dr. Randolph, 5 vols. duodecimo, 1792, Oxford, and is the first Tract in that useful collection.

“Master. What then remaineth?”

“Scholer. The general dome. For CHRIST shal come, at whose voice al the dead shal ryse agayne, perfecte and sound both in bodi and soul. The whole world shal beholde Hym sittynge in the royal throne of hys majestie; and after the examination of everye man’s conscience, the laste sentence shal be pronounced. Then the chyldren of GOD shall bee in perfecte possession of that kyngdom of freedom from death, and everlasting life, ‘whych was prepared for them before the foundacyons of the world were layd,’ (Matt. xxv. 24,) and ‘they shal reygne with CHRISTE for ever,’ (Rev. xii. 5.) But the ungodlye that believed not, shall be throwen from thence into everlastynge fyre, appointed for the Devil and his angelles,” (Matt. xxv. 41—46, Rev. xx. 15.) P. 38—40.

And with what earnest expectation and joyful hope, indeed, our pious forefathers of the Reformation looked forward to the speedy establishment of GOD’S kingdom upon earth, at the regeneration, may appear from the following admirable comment in the same Catechism, upon the second general article of the Lord’s Prayer.

“Scholer. In the seconde part we require, that ‘Hys kingdome come.’ For we see not yet ‘all things in subjection to CHRIST,’ (Psalm cx. 1, 2, 1 Cor. xv. 25—27, Eph. i. 22, Heb. ii. 8.) We see not the stone hewed off from the mountayne wythout work of man, which also brosed, [bruised] and brought to nought the image, which Daniel descryveth, (ii. 34—41,) that the onlye rock, CHRIST, may obtainye and possesse the dominion of the whole world, graunted hym of his FATHER, (Dan. vii. 13—27, 1 Cor. x. 4, Matt. xvi. 18.) Antichrist is not yet slayne, (Dan. vii. 10, 2 Thess. ii. 8—10, Rev. xix. 20.)

“For thys cause do we long for and praye, that it may at length ‘come to passe,’ and that CHRIST may reigne with his saintes, according to God’s promises, (Rev. xx. 4, &c.) that He may lyre and be LORDE in the world, accordynge to the decrees of the HOLY GOSPEL, (Phil. ii. 11, Rom. xiv. 8, 9, Rev. xix. 6, &c.) not after the tradition and laws of men, nor pleasure of worldly tyrants.

“Master. GOD graunte hys kyngdom may come: and that spedilye !” (Rev. xxii. 20.) P. 59.

But most unfortunately, the sound scriptural and orthodox doctrine of the two resurrections, so well understood, and so clearly explained by our first Reformers, soon fell into disrepute and disgrace, however unjustly, by the reveries of some ignorant enthusiasts, and the excesses of some frantic fanatics, who sprung up, like tares among the wheat of the Reformation, in Germany; such as the Anabaptists, who sprouted up, headed by Nicholas Storch, at Zwickaw in Saxony, A.D. 1521, and for some years committed dreadful outrages in Munster and through Germany, whence they spread to the Netherlands, Holland, France, England, &c.

This turbulent sect derived their name, Anabaptists, "Rebaptizers," from rejecting infant baptism, and rebaptizing adults. They boasted of inspirations and revelations, and pretended to be the only true Church, and that there was no salvation out of their communion. They were accordingly most intolerant and tyrannical, excommunicating, without mercy, not only aliens, but each other, when they split, as they soon did, into schisms and divisions. They condemned all the liberal arts, destroyed all books but the Bible, pulled down all magistracies and civil government, wherever they prevailed*. And to complete their levelling principles, they abolished private property, and held all things in common; alleging the example of the first Christians. Their professed object was to root out all the ungodly, and to set up the fifth monarchy, or kingdom of the saints, foretold by Daniel; or the kingdom of Sion, and the new Jerusalem, in the Apocalypse. But their new kingdom of Munster was destroyed in 1524, and their ringleaders all perished by the sword or the halter.

These were followed in 1538 by the vile and profligate set of the Antinomians, or "enemies of the law of works," headed by John Agricola, who held that it mattered not how wicked a man was, if he had but faith, misinterpreting Paul's doctrine, Rom. iii. 28, vi. 1.

All these mischievous enthusiasts and fanatics, who were violent enemies of popery, and hated the whore of Babylon,

* A favourite text with these fanatics, and their successors in England, during the Grand Rebellion, was Psalm cxlix. 6—9, "Let the saints be joyful in glory, let them sing aloud upon their beds; let the praises of GOD be in their mouths, and a two-edged sword in their hands; to execute judgment upon the heathen, and punishment upon the people; to bind their kings in chains, and their nobles with links of iron," &c.

while they loved or practised her lusts and abominations, brought great scandal and odium upon the Reformation, and prevented Erasmus and others, from embracing it, who were friends to its principles. Luther vigorously opposed them, and had the merit of reclaiming their leader, Agricola, and bringing him back to his senses and his duty. "This poisonous Antinomian doctrine," said he, "proceedeth mildly, and is palatable to flesh and blood, but it will produce much mischief." Collect. Mens. p. 429. And when he found that the Anabaptists could not be reclaimed by reason or argument, he exhorted the magistrates to draw the sword against them, and destroy them; not for their opinions as Heretics, but for their misdemeanors, as perjured and seditious rebels.

And such was the general odium raised against them, that the refugees of these fanatical sects who fled to England, found no toleration there. Jane Bocker and Van Pere, Anabaptists, were burnt in Smithfield, in the reign of Edward VI. by Cranmer and Ridley's instigation, as blasphemers; and two more, Henry Terwert and John Peterson, who had been driven out of Holland, suffered in like manner, 22d July 1575, in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, who was prejudiced against them as Atheists, that condemned all governments, and taught seditious doctrines. These executions, however, were considered as unreasonably severe*. The young King, Edward, signed the death warrant of the former with great reluctance and many tears; and in the latter case, several English and Flemish, eminent for their piety and learning, strongly interceded with the Queen to prevent their execution, but in vain.

* "There were also divines in Lower Germany," says Bishop Taylor, "who with reason spake against the Inquisition, and the restraining prophesying, [or liberty of preaching,] who yet, when they had shaken off the Spanish yoke, began to persecute their brethren." Liberty of Proph. p. 208. Thus, Valentine Gentilis was burnt at Bern, and Servetus at Geneva, by Calvin. And the Calvinist Synod, held at Dort, was no less arbitrary and overbearing against the Remonstrants of the Arminian sect, than the Popish Council of Trent against reputed Heretics.

There is, however, this wide difference between Popish and Protestant persecutions for religion; persecution is a fundamental principle of the Romish Church, and accordingly has been sanctioned by the Popes, councils, and Divines, and openly justified by Bossuet. But it is diametrically opposite to the principles of Protestantism, disclaiming all religious tyranny, and maintaining the rights of private judgment; and when the turbulence of those unsettled times had subsided, which carried away such excellent men as Cranmer and Ridley, (who repented of their error at the stake,) it was condemned by the Reformed Churches in general.

How great, indeed, was the general prejudice against such fanatical enthusiasts, we may judge from Milton, not long after, who, though rather a Republican in his political principles, and no friend to arbitrary power under any existing government, thus characterizes the Puritans, their successors :

“ They bawl for Freedom in their frantic mood,
 Yet still revolt when TRUTH would set them free ;
Licence they mean, when they cry Liberty !——
 For who loves that, must be first wise and good.”

Along with this scum of the Reformation, sprung up the atheistical set of the Libertines, in the Church of Rome, who flourished chiefly in Italy and France. These equally disregarded all religious establishments, as no better than priestcraft, though they attended the Churches of the Romanists, and the conventicles of the Reformed, through policy, dissembling their own opinions, and following the strongest party. Calvin attacked, with great severity, these “ cabinet philosophers, acting under the papacy,” as its secret emissaries, to confound the Reformation. “ These conceited villains,” says he, “ who pay no regard to all these things, public worship, sermons, &c. plainly shew, by this, that they have not a drop of Christianity in them *.”

The spawn of these Libertines, or Freethinkers, were the French Scavans, Voltaire, D'Alembert, Diderot, Rousseau, Condorcet, &c., who, like the frogs in the Apocalypse, xvi. 13, by their continual croakings against Religion and Government, produced the tremendous explosion of the French Revolution, in 1793. There is a fanaticism in philosophy, no less than in Religion, and still more dangerous, as Atheism is worse than Superstition.

Hence, the Apocalypse, from its abuse, grew into disrepute, even among the Reformed, from which such licentious and revolutionary practices were ignorantly deduced. Insomuch that Calvin, who wrote so largely on the Scriptures, omitted the Book of Revelation, as too mysterious and unintelligible for that age ; while the partizans of the See of Rome artfully decried its authenticity, because it too plainly predicted the abominations and final downfal of that corrupt and apostate Church.

* See a curious account of the opinions and excesses of the Anabaptists, and of the Libertines, in Brandt's History of the Reformation of the Netherlands, abridged by De la Roche, Vol. I. 38, 78, 204, &c., and in Jortin's Life of Erasmus, Vol. I. p. 355, &c. which affords the most authentic information on these subjects.

It is, therefore, more to be regretted than wondered at, that the framers of our present Liturgy confined themselves entirely to the second, or general resurrection, excluding the first; as may appear from the collects for the first and third Sundays after Advent, and for the sixth Sunday after the *Epiphany, &c. which mention our Lord's coming again, or "second coming to judge the world at the last day," as contrasted with his "first coming in humility," or in the flesh. They should rather have said, "at his last coming to judge the world," which would not have interfered with the express declaration of Scripture, reckoning our Lord's appearance in glory, at the regeneration, "the second," Heb. ix. 28, nor with the primitive doctrine of King Edward's Catechism, as we have seen; even supposing that they wished chiefly to inculcate the doctrine of the general resurrection, as most important to all, both good and bad, who compose the visible Church of CHRIST, or "profess, and call themselves Christians."

Under this interdict lay the doctrine of the first resurrection, till A.D. 1627, when the learned and enlightened Joseph Mede, in his masterly Clavis Apocalyptica, opened the door to a rational and critical interpretation of the Apocalypse, and indicated and revived the important and momentous doctrine.

Mede plainly and firmly states his opinion respecting the misapplication of the Prophecies that relate only to the first resurrection, in the following terms.

"They (the interpreters) are absolutely proceeding to overturn the pillar of evangelical truth concerning the glorious advent of CHRIST, who, neglecting the ancient tradition of the Church, endeavour to transfer to another subject the parallel prophecies of Dan. vii. 9—22, and Rev. xx. 4 †."

Since his time, the doctrine has been gradually reviving, and must continue to gain ground with the skilful study of the chronological Prophecies. It is now openly maintained by the

* This Collect is framed from the Gospel of the Sunday, Matt. xxiv. 23—31, relating to the destruction of Jerusalem, and to the ensuing first resurrection, rather than to the second, as will be shewn in the sequel.

† Omnino Fidei Evangelicæ de glorioso CHRISTI adventu columnam subductum eunt, qui, vetustâ Ecclesiæ traditione neglectâ, prophetiam istam, (Dan. vii. 9—22=Rev. xx. 4,) aliò transferre conantur. Mede's Works, p. 532.

most learned and sagacious critics and commentators of the present age, not only in England, such as Wood, Whitaker, King, Henry Taylor, Faber, &c. but throughout Europe. In-somuch, that David Levi does not hesitate to appeal to the general expectation: "All the nations, Christians as well as Jews, seem to talk with confidence of the speedy restoration of the Jewish nation, and of the sudden appearance of the TRUE MESSIAH*." Dissert. Vol. I. p. 286.

* David Levi, by a glaring inconsistency, (the natural result of his partial blindness,) contradicts the foregoing assertion by the following, in the same volume, p. 131.

"Several Christian writers contend, that these glorious promises (respecting THE MESSIAH,) are to be fulfilled at the second coming of Jesus, when he is to reign a thousand years with the Saints upon earth: I must observe, that they have no authority for this from the prophecies of the OLD TESTAMENT. Nay, I am confident that they cannot produce one single, clear, unequivocal prophecy from the Old Testament, which foretels a two-fold coming of one and the same person, as the MESSIAH; and that too at the distance of such a number of years as have elapsed from the supposed period of his being on earth. Whence it is manifest, that the whole scheme of the Millennium is a mere chimera, an ignis fatuus, notwithstanding all the noise and pother that has been made about it."

What thanks David Levi may gain from his own people, for thus overturning "the hope and consolation of Israel," warranted by their oldest tradition, of the seven millenary ages of the world, which even forms the basis of their chronology, is not for us to decide. But he has made those positive assertions here, which are refuted by the whole tenor of the OLD TESTAMENT.

1. The reign of the MESSIAH upon earth with his Saints for a thousand years, or a long portion of time, intimated by Dan. vii. 14, is confirmed by the following prophecies, as understood and interpreted by their most learned Rabbis, ancient and modern; Jacob's prophecy of SHILOH, Gen. xlix. 10—12. Balaam's prophecy of the star and sceptre, at a considerable distance of time, Numb. xxiv. 17, which gave rise to Barchocab's rebellion, under the auspices of Rabbi Akiba. Nathan's prophecy of the spiritual Son of David, 2 Sam. vii. 12—16. David's prophecies of the glorious reign of THE MESSIAH, Psalm xlv. 1—17, lxii. 1—19. To which we may add those of Isaiah, Micah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Daniel, Zechariah, &c., noticed in the course of this work. In Moses, Psalm xc. 4, "The thousand years" are reckoned, by R. Eliezar, to denote the days of the MESSIAH in the seventh millenary age.

2. Some remarkable single prophecies intimate, figuratively, a two-fold character of THE MESSIAH. Such as the grand charter of mercy at the fall, in which the blessed seed of the woman was to suffer, before his triumph over the old Serpent, Gen. iii. 15. It is intimated plainly, and without any figure, in the rejection of the MESSIAH by the Jews, and the subsequent glory of his reign as THE SON OF GOD, Psalm ii. 1—12, in his remarkable sufferings at his crucifixion, which are followed by his thanksgiving in glory, Psalm xxii. 1—22—31, noticed also Psalm lxxxix. 19—46, and Isa. liii. 10, 11, &c.

3. The interval before his second coming, is foretold to be of very long continuance, by Moses, Deut. xxviii. 59, xxx. 1—3, Isa. vi. 11, 12, Hosea ii. 4, 5, Dan. viii. 13, 14. And the 2300 days or years of Daniel's grand prophetic period, will probably not expire sooner than A.D. 1880, according to the foregoing computation, Vol. II. p. 511, 521.

The revival of this important and momentous doctrine of the first resurrection, will, under GOD, be productive of several advantages.

1. It will contribute to prepare the way for the conversion of the Jews, by confirming their expectations of the approaching restoration of Israel to the land of promise; and help to reconcile them to those Christians, who hold the same doctrine in common with them. This advantage was noticed by Mede: “While we Christians, wrest those prophecies to the first advent of Christ (in the flesh,) which most clearly relate to the second (in glory,) the Jews hold us in derision, and are more strongly confirmed in their infidelity.” Mede, p. 537.

2. It will rescue a most salutary and awakening doctrine, from the wild reveries of ignorant enthusiasts, and mischievous fanatics, treading in the steps of the old Anabaptists and Puritans, with which the country is again infested; these impose not only on the credulity of the vulgar, but even upon some in the upper ranks, who from their education and station, ought to know better things. Witness the prophecies of a crazy Brothers, credulously swallowed even by the orientalist Halhed; and “the seals” of Joanna Southcott, vindicated by the Rev. Philip Foley, a beneficed clergyman of the established Church*.

* The following singular advertisement, by the Rev. Philip Foley, Rector of Old Swinford, near Stourbridge, Worcestershire, appeared in the Salisbury Journal, April, 1809.

“ TO THE PUBLIC.

“ Nothing is fairer or more desirable than TRUTH, and it is from this principle alone, that I am induced to put the following into the Salisbury Journal, to vindicate and clear a character, who has been most wantonly and wickedly traduced.—I mean the character of JOANNA SOUTHCOTT. She has been accused of three heavy charges, which, if substantiated against her, she ought to suffer every severity which the law of the land could inflict upon her: but happily, there is not the least shadow of truth in any one of the accusations.

“ The first charge made against her is, that Mary Bateman’s wicked and infamous conduct (and who has lately suffered the just sentence of the law at Leeds,) is to be ascribed to Joanna Southcott, because she happened to have one of her seals.

“ The second charge brought against her, is her having predicted the destruction of Bath, on Good Friday last.

“ The third charge brought against her, is her having sold her seals at half-a-crown each.

“ To the first:—— It is true, Mary Bateman had a seal; but her wicked and diabolical conduct can be no more, in justice, ascribed to Joanna Southcott, than the wicked and diabolical conduct of Judas, could, in justice, be ascribed to our BLESSED LORD, because he was one of his disciples. And this, ‘the wise will understand, though the wicked will not.’ [Dan. xii. 10.]

3. "The terrors of the Lord," during the last woe, and the effusion of the seven last vials of wrath, destined to precede the second advent of CHRIST in glory, may tend to rouse a thoughtless and a lukewarm world of the ungodly from their lethargy, to repentance and reformation; while the expectation of "a new heavens and new earth, wherein righteousness shall re-

"To the second: This is a direct falsehood, and can be proved by many witnesses. For when it was told Joanna Southcott, that some woman had predicted the destruction of Bath, on Good Friday last, she immediately answered that she would be found a false prophetess. And so, many people of that city discovered, when they experienced, upon their return, the mockery and ridicule of their neighbours.

"To the third:—This is as unfounded as the second, that Joanna Southcott sold her seals for half-a-crown each. Now it happens, that there are more than fifteen thousand people, who can prove she never sold a seal in her life, or ever suffered one to be sold; for her seals were given 'without money and without price,' [Isa. li. 1,] a free gift to all that had FAITH to believe in her inspired writings; as well to the poor as to the rich.

"[II.] Having thus cleared up the charges against Joanna Southcott, I shall give a sketch of her divine mission; which is to warn the world of the second coming of our LORD JESUS CHRIST, to destroy Satan's kingdom of misery and woe; and to establish his own glorious kingdom of love and peace upon earth for a thousand years; as promised Rev. xx. when He will reign, in spirit, among the children of men, during that period, before the general judgment.

"Her writings only lead those who will follow their directions to the SCRIPTURES OF TRUTH, [Dan. x. 21, xi. 2,] and point out HOW the promises and prophecies of that golden book, THE BIBLE, will be fulfilled and accomplished; and demonstrate, irresistibly, that 'the kingdoms of this world will soon become the kingdoms of THE LIVING GOD, and He will reign for ever.' Rev. ii. 15.

"Illustrious era! Thine it is to close the long series of preparation which PROVIDENCE has been carrying on from the first of time! Thine, to fulfil the wishes of the worthy and devout of every age and every clime! Thine, to recover man from depredation and dishonour! Thine, to consummate the mission, and to adorn with its brightest honour the crown of the SAVIOUR OF THE WORLD! Thine, to vindicate the government, glorify the perfections, and illustrate the all-bounteous character of the GOD OF LOVE! Thy approach, glad period, will be hailed by myriads of intelligent beings, who, animated by THEE, with a celestial glow of devotion, will give expression to their raptures, in the long suspended song of angels, GLORY BE TO GOD IN THE HIGHEST—ON EARTH, PEACE—GOOD WILL TOWARDS MEN."

"Philip Foley."

What sober and rational Christian, can avoid deeply regretting, that talents like these, qualified to join the angelic choir in hymning the praises of the GOD OF LOVE, and of the SAVIOUR OF MANKIND, with a seraphic glow of piety and devotion, could possibly be perverted, and even prostituted to prove the divine mission of a Joanna Southcott!!! Alas, we need not wonder at the currency of her seals, in blasphemous imitation of the 144,000, sealed in their foreheads, as the true disciples of the LAMB OF GOD, (Rev. vii. 3, xiv. 1,) when fifteen thousand sealed disciples may easily increase to the apocalyptic number, when they have such a champion as the pious, but deluded Rector of Old Swinford, at their head! Alas! when will false Christs, and false prophets, and false prophetesses, cease to unsettle and disturb the world!

"All the foundations of the earth are out of course!"

side," at the regeneration, will tend to comfort and support the faithful in the present hour of trial, and render them more serious, more sober and vigilant, to work out their salvation, according to the Apostle's exhortation: "The end of all things, [or of the present dispensation,] is at hand: be ye therefore sober, and watch unto prayer," 1 Pet. iv. 7; "wherefore, expecting these, study to be found by Him, [CHRIST,] spotless and blameless, in peace; and account the long suffering of the Lord for salvation," 2 Pet. iii. 14.

May the light of these wondrous mysteries, kindle in the hearts of the humble and diligent enquirers, a warmth to which they were before strangers*; and may the DIVINE BLESSING attend these honest and zealous, but sober and deliberate endeavours to revive, illustrate, and enforce this awful and awakening doctrine! Amen.

* Such was the effect of his apocalyptic studies, upon that illustrious reformer of the Church of England, in the momentous doctrine of the Millennium, the "sober minded" Joseph Mede, as noticed in one of his confidential letters.

"I find more true contentment in the contemplation of those things which GOD hath been pleased to reveal unto me, than the greatest dignities which ambition so hunteth after, could ever afford me.—And I give thanks to ALMIGHTY GOD, who hath made the light of these His wonderful mysteries to kindle that warmth in my heart, which I felt not till I began to see them, and which have made me that which they found me not."

His modesty and humility, caution and deliberation, in publishing his discoveries, were still more praiseworthy than his uncommon erudition and sagacity.

In a letter to a friend, giving an account of the leisurely and deliberate progress he made in his Exposition of the Apocalypse, he observes, "I am by nature cunctabundus (dilatatory) in all things, but in this let no man blame me if I take more pause than ordinary." And he gives this reason for it: "Altius enim hoc animo meo insedit, [for this hath been most deeply impressed on my mind,] that rashly to be the author of a false interpretation of SCRIPTURE, is TO TAKE GOD'S NAME IN VAIN, in a high degree."—"Words," says his excellent biographer, Worthington, "worthy to be written (to use Jeremy's expression, XVII. 1,) with a pen of iron, or with the point of a diamond upon the table of the heart, in the most legible and lasting characters; words arguing the author's most serious and pious spirit, full of reverence for the WORD OF GOD, and most sadly to be considered by the over confident and superficial expositors of the DIVINE ORACLES and MYSTERIES." General Preface to Mede's Works, p. 22.

And he concludes his Clavis Apocalyptica with this modest remark:

Hæc ita disserui, Lector, non temere asserui. Rem vero totam Ecclesiæ, ex VERBO DEI arbitrandam, defero: cujus judicio, ut par est, meam de his mysteriis sententiam, lubens submitto.

And his Clavis Apocalyptica ends thus devoutly, p. 432.

Id extremum te volo, Lector, qui in hæc incidetis, ut si mihi assidenti, quid forte revelatum esse perspexeris, aut tibi ipsi, aut aliis, ad hæc MYSTERIA [intelligenda] profuturum, id totum DEI in me misericordiæ acceptum referas; CUI, et ego, ob tantillum sapientiæ Ejus radiolum, grates persolvere nunquam desinam: Sin quid aberratum sit, id

IV. THE EXTRAORDINARY AIDS OF THE GOSPEL.

These are thus detailed in the fourth clause of the commission.

1. The expulsion of demons.
2. The gift of tongues.
3. The handling serpents.
4. The drinking deadly potions, unhurt.
5. The miraculous cure of diseases.

I. THE EXPULSION OF DEMONS.

This is noticed first, perhaps, as an earnest and pledge of the final downfall of Satan, their prince. This stupendous power was originally granted to the Apostles in their first commission, Matt. x. 1; afterwards to the seventy, Luke x. 17; and was now formally renewed. Instances of it are found in the Acts of the Apostles. See the cases of the damsel at Philippi, Acts xvi. 16—18; and of the Jewish exorcists at Ephesus, Acts xix. 13—16, noticed before, p. 106, 107.

The apostolical fathers, next in succession to the Apostles, notice this as common in their age.

Clemens Romanus, about A.D. 96, says, in his Recognitions, cap. 32, 33, “Every faithful Christian has power over demons.” “Be baptized in the name of the most HOLY TRINITY, and then if ye believe with entire faith, and true purity of mind, ye also shall expel wicked spirits and demons out of others, and free men from diseases. For the demons know and acknowledge them that have devoted themselves to GOD, and are sometimes expelled even at their presence. We therefore exhort you to become of our religion; and we assure you, that when ye advance to the same faith and innocency of life with us, ye also shall have equal and the same power against demons.”—This agrees with our Lord’s requisites of faith, prayer, and fasting, in the more difficult cases, Matt. xvii. 20, 21. See this Vol. p. 134, 135.

solum meum [mei] esse memineris, hominis quantillarum virium et nullatenus ad hæc (quod probè mihi conscius sum) ex meipso idonei.

Benedictio et Honor, et Gloria

EI

Qui insidet Throno et

AGNO

In sæcula sæculorum.

Justin Martyr, A.D. 140, also vouches the same in his Apolo- gies, p. 45, 302. “Even now, we who believe in JESUS, ex- orcising all the demons and wicked spirits, have them subject to us;” and this, he adds, “throughout the world.”

Heathen testimony also confirms their report.

Strabo, that judicious historian, contemporary with CHRIST, says, “Divination and oracles were more in estimation among the ancients, but are now held in much indifference: wherefore the oracle at Ammon, which was formerly esteemed, has almost ceased. And the sacred oracle at Delphi is neglected, which before was exceedingly esteemed,” p. 818, 419.

Plutarch also, who died A.D. 119, says, “It is needless to enquire or debate here about the cessation of oracles, since we see a failure of them all, except one or two; the rest being silent or wholly deserted,” p. 411.

These are curious and valuable testimonies. They go to establish the former prevalence of demoniacal possession and oracular divination; to distinguish that from ordinary diseases, and this from mere priestcraft.

2. THE GIFT OF TONGUES.

This amazing and astonishing gift was peculiar to the last commission. It was a miracle new and unheard of in former ages; and “greater,” or more decisive, than any wrought by OUR LORD himself during his ministry. Possessions or diseases might be counterfeited; even death might be only apparent; the reality, therefore, of such cures, and restorations to life, might be questioned by gainsayers, and denied by infidels*: but to inspire a company of “unlettered Galileans,” who knew only their mother tongue, and whose dialect was proverbial for its vulgarity, suddenly and instantaneously with the knowledge and expression of sixteen or eighteen different languages or dialects; when in the ordinary course of things, the acquisition of a single new language is a work of so much time and pains to understand, and still more to speak it with fluency and correctness, was indeed a miracle of the most stupendous size, carrying with it the most overpowering and irresistible conviction, the simplest and plainest in itself, and the most impossible to be counterfeited. No wonder then that the effect was so prodigious, as the conversion of three thousand prejudiced Jews in one day to the faith of a CRUCIFIED SAVIOUR, at Jerusalem, the scene of his disgrace, and only fifty-two days after, on the memorable day of Pentecost, Acts ii.

* See Lord Barrington's excellent observations on this head, Miscellan. Sacra. Vol. I. p. 318.

As the confusion of tongues at Babel was produced by the agency of the HOLY SPIRIT, to perplex and punish the rebellion of the first colonizers of the earth after the flood, by defeating their impious project, and hiding from them that primal language in which the knowledge and worship of the TRUE GOD, and the mysterious dispensations of his providence, had been till then conveyed to righteous Noah and his family; so was the SAME SPIRIT graciously pleased to rescind that curse, in the fulness of time, 2500 years afterwards, and once more bring the benighted Gentile world from darkness to light, from the power of Satan unto GOD; by enabling his chosen instruments, the Apostles, to publish "the wonderful dispensations of GOD" to all these nations, in their own languages and dialects, to their infinite amazement; not only for the manner, but also for the matter of these extraordinary communications.

The gift of tongues, conferred on the Apostles, and probably also on their original company of 120 persons, assembled with them on the day of Pentecost, and afterwards on Paul, &c. was various and manifold. To some was granted the faculty of speaking in several languages to foreigners, more or fewer; to others the faculty of interpreting what was so spoken to natives, as remarked by Paul, who spoke a greater variety of languages than any of the Apostles, as he had intercourse with a greater variety of foreign nations, 1 Cor. xii. 10, xiv. 18.

This is the only gift noticed in our Lord's commission, as being the principal and the most brilliant of all the gifts of the SPIRIT, and the most necessary to convince unbelievers, 1 Cor. xiv. 22, but it was accompanied with others no less necessary for the discharge of their arduous ministry; 1. "the word of wisdom," 1 Cor. xii. 8, or revelation of the scheme of the Christian dispensation and future fortunes of the Church, conferred on the Apostles, fulfilling our Lord's promise to them, John xiv. 26, xvi. 13; Luke xxi. 15. 2. The word of knowledge, 1 Cor. xii. 8, which, as distinguished from the preceding, may denote an extraordinary insight into the meaning and drift of the prophecies of the OLD TESTAMENT, relating to the Christian dispensation; respecting which OUR LORD himself began to open their minds, on the day of the resurrection, Luke xxiv. 27—45, and with these was connected, 3. an extraordinary spirit of boldness or courage, to publish the Gospel, in defiance of all dangers or persecutions, so different from that spirit of fear which had possessed them before. And an earnest of it was that "Holy Spirit" with which CHRIST inspired them on the evening of the resurrection, John xx. 22, the immediate effect of which appeared in their first act of calmly and deliberately filling up the vacancy made in their number by the treason and death of Judas, Acts i. 15—26; and more plainly, when filled with the Spirit, on their subsequent conduct. And these were crowned, 4. by the discerning of spirits, 1 Cor. xii. 10, or the faculty of distinguishing impostors and false brethren from the faithful, so necessary to guard the infant Church from imposition and ruin; and in order to punish such, 5. the Apostles were empowered to deliver offenders to Satan, and to smite them with diseases, and even with death, as exercised by Peter in the death of Ananias and Sapphira, Acts v. 1—13, and by Paul in the blindness of Elymas, the sorcerer, Acts xiii. 8—12, and disease of the incestuous person at Corinth, 1 Cor. v. 1—5.

These extraordinary gifts of the Spirit, were shed or poured forth most abundantly on the Apostles and original disciples, on whom the HOLY SPIRIT visibly descended and rested, on the day of Pentecost; and they were not only permanent, or lasted during their lives, but the Apostles had the further astonishing privilege of conferring the gifts of the Spirit on baptized converts, by the imposition of their hands, as on the first fruits of the Church at Jerusalem, Acts ii. 38; in Samaria, Acts viii. 17, and at Ephesus, Acts xix. 1—7.

These gifts of the Spirit were exercised, not in obscure corners, but in the capital, and most populous cities of the world, Rome, Corinth, Thessalonica, Philippi, Antioch, Ephesus, &c. in which the Gospel was first preached. Of their frequency, therefore, and notoriety, there cannot be a doubt. Paul enquired of the Ephesian converts, who had been disciples of the Baptist, as a matter of course, "Received ye the HOLY SPIRIT since ye believed?" Acts xix. 2. And we may collect from his Epistles, that the two greatest Gentile Churches, of Rome and Corinth, abounded most in spiritual gifts, Rom. i. 11, viii. 16, xii. 3, 1 Cor. i. 5—7, xiv. 1—22. Clemens Romanus, A.D. 97, in his Epistle to the Corinthians, asserts, that “there was a full effusion of the HOLY SPIRIT upon them all;” Ignatius, A.D. 107, declares, that “the Church of Smyrna was favoured with every gift, and was deficient in none. See the original passages in Grotius on Mark xvi. 18; and Whitby’s excellent preface to the Epistles.

3. HANDLING SERPENTS.

Of this we have a remarkable instance in the viper that fastened on St. Paul’s hand, after his shipwreck, on the island of Melita, which he shook off again, without receiving any harm, to the amazement of the natives, who then looked upon him as a god, Acts xxvii. 3—6.

The Jerusalem Talmud, Avoda Sara, relates a remarkable tradition of R. Eleazer, the son of Dama. When he had been bitten by a serpent, James, a man of Cepharsama, came to him, and offered to cure him, in the name of Jesus, the son of Pandira. But his uncle, R. Ismael, forbid it, saying, Son of Dama, it is not lawful for thee to do so. The son of Dama answered, I will prove out of the law, that it is lawful. But R. Ismael would not permit him to prove it, until he died. Then R. Ismael rejoiced and said, Blessed art thou, son of Dama, because thy soul departed in purity, and thou didst not break through the fence of the sages; for whosoever breaketh the fence, the Serpent shall bite him; and he was bitten [in this world,] to the end that the Serpent might not bite him in the world to come. And what text is in his favour, that he should not die therein?—Levit. xviii. 5. “Ye shall therefore keep my statutes, and my judgments, and keep my ordinances; which if a man do, he shall live by them: I am THE LORD.”

This instance is curious and valuable; it is a concession from a hostile quarter, of our Lord’s enabling his disciples “to trample upon serpents and scorpions, and upon all the power of the enemy,” the old Serpent, as foretold of CHRIST, Psalm xci. 13, Luke x. 18. See this Vol. p. 147. While it proves, that by the old Serpent, the Jewish Church understood the Devil; and that they held the eternal as well as the temporal sanctions of the Mosaical law, in its genuine spirit. See the foregoing articles, Vol. II. p. 219, 255.

4. DRINKING DEADLY POTIONS.

The NEW TESTAMENT affords no example of this. But we learn from ecclesiastical tradition, that in the Heathen persecutions, the Apostle John drank a cup of poison unhurt. Eusebius, in his History, mentions other instances, of Barsabas, Sabinus, &c. p. 112.

The Jerusalem Talmud has also preserved a remarkable tradition of the son of R. Joshua ben Levi. This boy drank a deadly potion, but was cured by an incantation in the name of Jesus, the son of Panthera. "When he had escaped [death,] his father enquired what the enchanter had said? Who answered, that he had invoked the name of Jesus of Nazareth. Then his father said, it would have been better that he had died, rather than heard this name. And immediately it happened so," [the boy died.] See Wetstein on Mark xvi. 18, for these and other Talmudic legends.

This instance also, is extremely curious; it vouches the custom of invoking the name of JESUS among Jewish exorcists and enchanters, noticed in Scripture, Mark ix. 38, Acts xix. 13; and records the punishment of an unbelieving father in the death of his son.

5. CURING DISEASES.

It is remarkable that our LORD places this the last in the list, as if thereby, the more clearly to distinguish it from the first, the dispossession of Demoniacs. Of this, several signal instances occur in the Acts, and their frequency is intimated in the Epistles. The most remarkable are the following.

1. Peter cured a cripple at the temple gate....Acts iii. 1—9.
— acknowledged by the Jewish council — iv. 14—16.
2. His shadow cured many — v. 15.
3. He restored Dorcas to life..... — ix. 36—40.
4. Paul cured a cripple at Lystra..... — xiv. 8—11.
5. Handkerchiefs from his body performed distant cures — xix. 11, 12.
6. He restored Eutychus to life — xx. 12.
7. The prayer of faith healed the sickJames v. 14—16.

The power of raising the dead was probably confined to the Apostles. Nor do they, at all times, appear to have possessed the gift of healing. Otherwise Paul would not probably have left behind him his friend Trophimus, sick at Miletus, 2 Tim. iv. 20, nor prescribed "wine" for his favourite pupil, Timothy's "many infirmities," 1 Tim. v. 23, if it rested solely on his own option to cure them, any more than himself, 2 Cor. xii. 8.

THEIR DURATION.

How long these miraculous gifts and powers lasted in the Church, is not ascertained in ecclesiastical history. We have strong grounds, however, to think, that they did not extend, in general, beyond the end of the first century.

1. Their continuance longer was unnecessary after THE GOSPEL had been preached and received throughout the known world. They naturally ceased with their uses, 1. "to confirm the word by signs co-operating," Mark xvi. 20; 2. to arrest the attention of unbelievers, Acts xiv. 11, and 3. to overcome their prejudices, 1 Cor. xiv. 24, 25.

2. OUR LORD and his Apostles frequently forewarn the faithful, by the spirit of prophecy, against false prophets, and false teachers, who should propose great signs and wonders, so specious, that if it were possible, they should deceive even the elect, Matt. xxiv. 24. That an apostate power should appear in the Church itself, according to the energy of Satan, with all false power, and signs, and wonders, whose deluded followers should believe a lie, 2 Thess. ii. 3—9. That many false prophets, and many Antichrists had gone forth, even in the Apostle John's days, 1 John ii. 18, iv. 1—3.

This leads us to infer the cessation of the true gifts and powers at an early period, which during their continuance had extinguished the false.

The Fathers of the second and third centuries, frequently report their continuance, but apparently from hearsay, and not from actual knowledge or observation. Thus Irenæus, A.D. 178, says, "We hear (ακουομεν) of many brethren in the Church, having many prophetic gifts, and speaking all sorts of tongues by THE SPIRIT, and exposing the secret intentions of men for the [public] good, and expounding the mysteries of GOD." Euseb. Hist. Eccl. v. 7. And Theophilus, Bishop of Antioch, A.D. 181, declined the proposal of a noble Greek, to embrace Christianity, if the Bishop would shew him a single person raised from the dead. When it was objected to Chrysostom, A.D. 398, "Why are not miracles performed at this day?" he evidently admitted the fact in his answer, “for want of faith, and virtue, and piety in these times.” Middleton’s Enquiry, p. 130—137. And yet this same Father was a zealous advocate for the Monkish miracles. “There is no region, says he, where new and unthought of miracles are not famous; which, if they were forgeries, could never have gained such admiration.” And he gravely relates, that “the coffins and bones of the martyrs had great virtue and power;” that “even Devils were tormented by the bones of the martyrs.” He, and the rest of the Monkish Fathers, even the most celebrated, Athanasius, Augustine, Tertullian, Hilary, Cyprian, &c. first attested these lying wonders, to support the credit of their own inventions and innovations, concerning the worship of saints and veneration of reliques; and then, when brought into repute, upon the credit of their testimony, as holy and religious men, they urge this very repute as an argument of their truth! Such lying wonders being implicitly swallowed by their superstitious and credulous followers.

The natural and necessary consequence of these pious frauds, to uphold the corruptions of Christianity, was the revival of the “doctrine of Demons,” and admission of the reality of Pagan miracles, and miraculous cure of diseases wrought by Demons in confirmation of Paganism. These same Fathers of the Church all admit, that the Heathen magicians and jugglers performed many wonderful things, surpassing human powers, by the assistance of Demons; thus betraying the cause of CHRISTIANITY, and degrading the true miracles wrought in its support, to a level with “lying wonders,” and thereby lessening their credibility.

Hence we are warranted to conclude, that the true miracles ceased, before the false ones sprouted up in the Church; because their continuance would even have been prejudicial to the cause of Christianity, by the mistaken and mischievous zeal of the Fathers, confounding both together, and thereby, as far as in them lay, setting the seal of GOD to false doctrines, and the worship of false mediators, and introducing that grand apostacy, expressly foretold by THE SPIRIT, 1 Tim. iv. 1. And we scruple not to agree with Mr. Gibbon, in “limiting the gift of supernatural powers to that happy period, exempt from error and deceit,” the age of the Apostles, and of the first succession of apostolical Fathers, to whom the gifts of the Spirit had been imparted by the Apostles. See Henry Taylor's Thoughts on the grand Apostacy, p. 92—95.

V. THE ORDINARY AIDS OF THE GOSPEL.

Though the extraordinary aids of Christianity, or the gifts of the SPIRIT, and other miraculous powers, were not probably of long duration, CHRIST, “the Father of the everlasting age,” did not leave his faithful disciples “orphans,” (John xiv. 18,) after they were withdrawn; He solemnly promised them his sufficient aid, “all the days” of their ministry, “to the end of the world,” in the last clause of his commission; in continuation of his former promises, that “where two or three should meet together in his name, there would he be present with them,” to grant their requests; that “he would pray THE FATHER to send them ANOTHER ADVOCATE, who should remain with them for ever,” John xiv. 16—18, Matt. xviii. 20. Thus putting them under the joint protection of the FATHER, SON, and HOLY SPIRIT, to whose service they were jointly dedicated in baptism.

THE FRUITS OF THE SPIRIT.

These also are the gift of GOD no less than the extraordinary, but given, like our food and raiment, as the encouragements and rewards of our own industry. “*In his ordinary operations THE SPIRIT works with us, not for us, offers his assistance, but forces it not upon us; accompanies, not excludes our endeavours.” And the genuine fruits of the SPIRIT are these, pious and virtuous dispositions of mind, and settled habits, which the HOLY SPIRIT gradually produces in the regenerate, together with those good works which spring and grow out of them, as naturally as the tree produces its proper fruit. They are thus enumerated by the Apostle Paul.

“But the fruit of the Spirit is love” toward God and our neighbour; “joy,” or delight in God, arising from a cheering sense of our interest in Him and His love to us, shed abroad in our hearts; “peace,” or tranquillity of mind, springing from a conscience void of offence toward God and man ; “ long suffering,” or patient endurance and forgiveness of provocations and injuries ; “ kindness,” or readiness to assist and serve others ; “ goodness,” or benevolence of disposition, liberality of mind ; “ fidelity,” or faithfulness in adhering to truth, and performing our engagements, even to our own loss ; “ meekness,” or mildness of disposition ; “ temperance,” or self government, continence with regard to sensual pleasures of every kind, the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye, and the pride of life. “ For they that are CHRIST’S have crucified the flesh, with the affections and lusts,” Gal. v. 22—24.

* For THE SPIRIT co-operating, helpeth our infirmities,” or feeble endeavours of obedience, (συναντιλαμβανεται ταις ασθενειαις ημων,) — “for we know that HE co-operateth [in] all things, for good, with them that love GOD, who are called, according to His purpose,” (τοις αγαπωσι τον Θεον [κατα] παντα συνεργει εις αγαθον,) Rom. viii. 26—28.

This gracious “ fruit of the light *,” or illumination of the HOLY SPIRIT, shining forth in the hearts and lives of the faithful, who walk as children of light, and have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather abhor and reprove them,—constitutes that “ wisdom from above,” descending ultimately from THE FATHER OF LIGHTS, which “ first, is pure,” or free from all pollution of flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God ; “ then peaceable,” disposed to promote peace and good will among men ; “ gentle,” or accommodating to others in things not sinful ; “ easy to be persuaded,” or ready to admit a reasonable excuse ; “ full of mercy and of good fruits” springing from mercy, such as beneficence, liberality, &c. “ impartial,” not unduly respecting persons, parties, or sects ; “ without hypocrisy,” free from all affectation of superior sanctity, purity, or orthodoxy. James iii. 17.

This heavenly wisdom, as contrasted with “ the earthly,” which is “ carnal, demoniacal, abounding in bitter zeal and contention, subversive of order, and productive of every evil work,” James iii. 14—16, coincides with that first and choicest fruit of the Spirit, Christian love, or charity, which was defined before ; and which is thus described by its distinguishing properties †.

* Instead of the received reading, Ephes. v. 9, ὁ καρπὸς τοῦ πνεύματος, Griesbach has restored ὁ καρπὸς τοῦ φωτός, which is required by the context, and supported by several ancient MSS.

† In this admired description of Christian love, or charity, (ἀγάπη,) denoting, according to Sir Thomas More, “ a good, virtuous, well ordered love,” as distinguished from the passion of sensual love, (ἔρως *,) so frequent in the Heathen classics, and deified in

* It is remarkable, that the classic noun, ἔρως, amor, and the verb ἔραω, amo, do not occur in the NEW TESTAMENT ; their places are supplied by ἐπιθυμία, cupido, and ἐπιθυμῶ, cupio.

“ *Charity is long suffering, is kind ;
Charity envieth not, is not puffed up,* their mythology as Cupid, the Apostle, so well versed in Pagan philosophy, seems tacitly to correct their reigning vices, in his address to the Grecian philosophers of Corinth ; as he had before exposed those of the Roman philosophers, Rom. i. 29—32.

I. μακροθυμει, is “ long suffering,” or “ slow to anger.” This was recommended by the Stoic philosophy ; the sum of which was comprised by Epictetus, in two words, ανεχου και απεχου, “ bear and forbear.” And some of the Sages and Philosophers shewed themselves remarkably patient of injuries, Lycurgus, Solon, Socrates, &c.

II. χρηστευεται is “ kind” or “ beneficent.” The Stoics placed “ all the praise of virtue, in action,” or active benevolence ; as the best means of acquiring popularity, which is principally gained by conferring benefits, and next, by shewing a wish to serve others, even if the ability be wanting. Ciceró de Officiis, ii. 5—9. But the Apostle, rejecting the motive of self interest, shews that charity is disposed to “ serve” others “ of her own accord,” which seems to be the import of the middle verb, χρηστευεται.

These form the general outline of charity.

The particulars are as follow.

1. ου ζηλοι, “ envieth not” the superior endowments or prosperity of others. The Roman philosophers were represented as “ full of envy,” Rom. i. 29, and the Grecian, of “ emulations,” (ζηλοι) and “ envyings,” (φθονοι), Gal. v. 20, 21, 1 Cor. iii. 3.

2. ου περπερευεται, “ vaunteth not herself” in all the pompous figures of heathen oratory, or “ enticing words of man’s wisdom,” 1 Cor. ii. 4. This scarce word is well defined by Basil, τι εστι περπερευεσθαι ; παν ο μη δια χρειαν, αλλα δια καλλωπισμον παραλαμβάνεται, “ all that is adventitiously introduced, not for use, but for ornament.” And Cicero, who uses the word, has well illustrated its meaning by his own example, stating how he played the orator in a public speech before Pompey. Ego autem ipse, Dii boni ! quo modo ενεπερπερευσαμην novo auditori Pompeio ! si unquam mihi περιοδοι, η καμπαι, η ενθυμηματα, η κατασκευαι, suppeditaverunt, illo tempore. Quid multa ? clamores [plaudentium]—intellexi hominem [Pompeium] moveri. Epist. ad Atticum, i. 14. Here the verb, in a compound state, evidently signifies, “ to make an ostentatious display of oratory,” as well explained by Casaubon, Me ostentari, res meas augendo, ornando, amplificando.

3. ου φυσουται, “ is not puffed up” with spiritual pride, on account of superior knowledge, eloquence, or spiritual gifts, like his factious opponents at Corinth, who were so puffed up, 1 Cor. iv. 6—18, 19, v. 2 ; and at Colosse, Col. ii. 18.

4. ουκ ασχημονει, “ is not disorderly,” violating decorum or decency, like the incetuous person at Corinth, 1 Cor. v. 1—13 ; women praying with their heads uncovered, 1 Cor. xi. 13 ; the disorderly celebration of the Lord’s Supper, 1 Cor. xi. 17—34 ; the irregular display of spiritual gifts in their assemblies, 1 Cor. xiv. 26—33 ; the preaching of women, 1 Cor. xiv. 34.—“ Let all things be done decently, (ευσχημονως), and according to order,” (κατα ταξιν), 1 Cor. xiv. 40.

5. ου ζητει τα εαυτης, “ seeketh not her own” gain, but rather the gain of others, 1 Cor. x. 24 ; Rom. xv. 2, most ready to spend and be spent in the service of her friends, with perfect disinterestedness, 2 Cor. xii. 15.

6. ου παροξυνεται, “ is not highly provoked,” or wrathful, for παροξυσμος signifies “ a sharp contention” or violent quarrel, as between Paul himself and Barnabas, so that they were separated, Acts xv. 39. Compare Acts xxiii. 3 ; Ephes. iv. 31 ; James i. 19.

7. ου λογιζεται το κακον, “ imputeth not the evil,” or reckoneth not the mischief offered to her, intending to retaliate, rather imitating the generosity of Joseph to his brethren, Gen. xlv. 4—8, l. 20 ; and the goodness of GOD to sinners, Rom. iv. 8 ;

Is not disorderly, seeketh not her own [gain,]
 Is not highly provoked, imputeth not the evil [done to her,] Rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth with the truth,
 Covereth all things, believeth all things,
 Hopeth all things, endureth all things."—1 Cor. xiii. 4—7.

The permanence of this choicest fruit of the Spirit is finely contrasted by the Apostle, with the occasional and temporary gifts of the Spirit, in the sequel.

“Charity never faileth; but whether there be prophecies, they shall end” when they come to be fulfilled; “whether there be tongues, they shall cease” with their necessity; “whether there be knowledge, it shall end” with the mystery of the Gospel, in the full establishment of THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN.

“For now we know in part, and we prophesy in part,” or imperfectly; “but when the perfect [revelation of THE LORD] is come, then the partial knowledge shall end.” Thus, “When I was a child, (νηπιος,) I spake as a child, I understood as a child, I reasoned as a child; but when I became a man, (ανηρ,) I left off the things of a child. For now we behold [THE LORD] in a mirror enigmatically, or obscurely; but then face to face, or clearly; now I know in part, but then shall I myself know intimately, (επιγνωσομαι,) even as I am known intimately, [by the SEARCHER OF HEARTS.]”

“And now remaineth FAITH, HOPE, CHARITY, these three,

2 Cor. v. 19; Tit. iii. 4—7: Quære, Did Paul himself strictly observe this rule to Alexander the copper-smith? 2 Tim. iv. 14.

8. οὐ χαίρει ἐπὶ τῇ ἀδικίᾳ, “rejoiceth not in iniquity,” or at the success of the unjust, Psalm x. 3; Rom. i. 32.

9. συγχαίρει δὲ τῇ ἀληθείᾳ, “but rejoiceth with the truth,” “rejoiceth with them that rejoice,” Rom. xii. 15, or shares in the joy of the righteous at their prosperity, Job xlii. 11; Luke i. 58, x. 21, xv. 6—9—32; 2 John iv.

10. πάντα σκεπτεῖ, “covereth all things, concealeth the frailties and infirmities of others, Gen. ix. 23; Prov. x. 12, xvii. 9; Eccles. xxviii. 7; Matt. i. 19; 2 Pet. iv. 8. Pope, in his Universal Prayer, has well expressed this:

“Teach me to feel another’s woe,
 To hide the fault I see,
 That mercy I to others shew,
 That mercy shew to me.”

11. πάντα πιστεύει, “believeth all things,” is disposed to credit reports favourable to the character and conduct of others, Matt. i. 20; James iii. 17; Rom. i. 8.

12. πάντα ἐλπίζει, “hopeth all things” for the best, as to the intentions of others, or for their reformation or improvement, Acts xxvi. 27; 2 Cor. x. 15.

13. πάντα ὑπομένει, “endureth all things” with patience and resignation to the will of GOD, Matt. xxiv. 13; Rev. xiii. 10, xiv. 12.

but the greatest of these is CHARITY:” for FAITH shall end in sight, when GOD shall be seen as he is, unveiled in all his glory; HOPE shall expire in fruition, or “fulness of joy in HIS presence, and pleasures for evermore;” but CHARITY shall then attain that “perfect love which casteth out fear,” and proceeding from strength to strength, and from glory to glory, shall contemplate and adore, with ever increasing ardour and delight, and interest, the inexhaustible FOUNTAIN OF ALL GOODNESS, the infinite ESSENCE OF ALL PERFECTION, ver. 8—13.

Such is the decided superiority of the fruits of the Spirit over the gifts of the Spirit, in the judgment of a most highly gifted Apostle. May we, following his advice, “earnestly covet the best gifts, and that most excellent way of CHARITY,” which he represents as infinitely preferable to all kinds of tongues, prophecy, wisdom, knowledge, miraculous faith, liberality to the poor, and even to religious zeal, 1 Cor. xii. 31, xiii. 1—3.

“O LORD, who hast taught us that all our doings without charity are nothing worth, send thy HOLY GHOST, and pour into our hearts that most excellent gift of charity, the very bond of peace, and of all virtues; without which, whosoever liveth, is counted dead before Thee. Grant this, for thine only Son JESUS CHRIST’S sake. Amen.” Quinquagesima S. Collect.

SKETCH OF THE CONSTITUTION

OF THE

PRIMITIVE CHURCH.

OUR BLESSED LORD declared to his Apostles, "Upon THIS ROCK will I build my Church, and the gates of Hades shall not prevail against it," Matt. xvi. 18, thus intimating its genuine foundation and perpetual duration; that when built upon HIMSELF and upon HIS DOCTRINE, as upon a rock, it should resist all the efforts and brave all the storms and tempests of the powers of darkness to overthrow it, Matt. vii. 24, 25; Acts xx. 28; for it should be supported by his continual presence and protection to the end of the world, Matt. xxviii. 20.

The Church of CHRIST, in this place, evidently signifies the Catholic or universal Church, comprizing the united congregation of the faithful throughout the whole world, wheresoever His Gospel should be published and embraced, Matt. xxvi. 13, in pursuance of his last commission to his Apostles, Matt. xxviii. 19; Mark xvi. 15.

At first, however, the word Church was necessarily taken in a particular sense to denote the Mother Church at Jerusalem, Matt. xviii. 17; Acts ii. 47, viii. 1, &c. and her offspring, the particular Churches of Antioch, Ephesus, Philippi, Corinth, Rome, &c. It was also sometimes taken for the building or edifice where they assembled, 1 Cor. xi. 18.

The constitution of these several Churches, which composed the primitive Church, was framed from the constitution of the Mother Church; and this was evidently framed upon the model of the Jewish Church, founded at Mount Sinai, Gal. iv. 25, 26.

The Jewish Church was a THEOCRACY, and so was the Christian. See Vol. II. p. 238. In the Jewish the ORACLE presided, and delivered responses, either with an audible voice, or by Urim and Thummim, or by prophets. In the Christian "CHRIST was the head" of the corporation, "in all things presiding therein," Col. i. 18, appointed by THE FATHER, Eph. i. 22, 23; and also the chief corner stone, binding together the partition walls of the Jewish and Christian edifice, Eph. ii. 20—22, as foretold Psalm xviii. 43. And as the Jewish Church was administered under THE ORACLE by different orders of ecclesiastics, the prophets, Moses, &c. the high priest, the priests, chief and inferior, and the Levites; so was the Christian by THE SPIRIT, and under Him the Apostles, the bishops, priests, higher or lower, and deacons.

"The twelve Apostles of THE LAMB were the twelve foundations of the Church," Eph. ii. 20; Rev. xxi. 14. Their peculiar function was to publish THE GOSPEL to all nations, as the heralds and ambassadors of CHRIST, to plant and confirm particular Churches, and to ordain the several orders of ministers therein; and to exercise a general episcopacy, or superintendance at large over the several Churches within their respective districts, to which they were ordained or appointed by the HOLY SPIRIT, as John over the seven Churches of Asia Minor, Paul over the foreign Gentile Churches of Rome, Corinth, &c. Peter over the Churches of the circumcision, or Jewish converts at Antioch, Bithynia, &c. of the dispersion; Matthew over the Churches in Parthia, Andrew in Scythia, Bartholomew in India, &c. Each, for the sake of order, confining themselves, after their separation from the Mother Church, to their allotted districts or provinces, Gal. ii. 7; Acts xiii. 2; 1 Pet. i. 1; Rom. xv. 20, &c.

Before their separation, while they were all assembled together at Jerusalem, Peter acted as "first of the Apostles," or president, and by the express appointment of CHRIST himself, Luke xxii. 32; John xxi. 15. This appeared, in the first instance, at the election of a successor into "the episcopal office and apostleship" of the traitor Judas, in which he took the lead, Acts i. 15—26; and also in addressing the multitudes on the day of Pentecost, and afterwards before the Jewish council, and in the case of Ananias and Sapphira, &c.

The Apostles ordained the several orders of ministers, with the consent and approbation of the Church, namely, the orders of Bishops, Priests, and Deacons, by prayer and imposition of hands. The order of Deacons was first instituted to serve at tables, or assist the Apostles in dispensing the contributions of the Church to the poor, Acts vi. 1—6; their office afterwards was to prepare the elements for the Lord's Supper, &c. corresponding to the Levites in the Jewish Church. Some of the first Evangelists also, that acted as coadjutors to the Apostles in preaching the Gospel, and planting Churches under their direction, were of the order of Deacons, as Stephen, Philip, &c. When the Church was increased and multiplied, Presbyters, Elders, or Priests, were recommended by the brethren, and ordained by the Apostles, with prayer, fasting and imposition of their hands, Acts xiv. 23. Of these there were different orders, "Prophets, or inspired preachers and teachers," &c. Acts xiii. 1, 1 Cor. xii. 5—29, designed to assist the Apostles in the sacred offices of the ministry; corresponding to the different orders of Priests in the Jewish Church, the chief Priests, or heads of the twenty-four courses; and the ordinary Priests, 1 Chron. xxiv. 7—19, Luke i. 8. To the former correspond the four and twenty Presbyters or elders, in the symbolical Church of the Apocalypse, Rev. iv. 4.

At first the Apostles acted as bishops at large; they administered the concerns of the Churches which they founded, by the Presbyters their coadjutors; whence it was customary with them to assume, out of modesty, the title of Presbyters themselves, and to give them in turn the title of Bishops. Thus Peter, the first president of the Mother Church, in his exhortation to the Presbyters of the dispersion, styles himself their "fellow Presbyter," (συμπρεσβυτερος,) 1 Pet. v. 1; John also called himself "the Presbyter," (ὁ πρεσβυτερος,) 2 John 1.

The contributions of the Church of Antioch were brought to "the presbyters at Jerusalem, of whom James was head," Acts xi. 30, xii. 17; the Presbyters of the Church of Ephesus, are also styled "Bishops thereof" by Paul, Acts xx. 17—28. And he salutes the Church at Philippi by the title of "all the Saints, Bishops, and Deacons," Phil. i. 1, where the "*Bishops" evidently denote Presbyters, and “the Saints,” the brethren or *Laitie.

* It is remarkable, the Syriac vulgate Version, the Peshito, renders επισκοποις, in this place, (Phil. i. 1,) "with the elders," and επισκοπη, 1 Tim. iii. 1, "the office of an elder;" the distinction between the offices of Bishops and Elders being not yet established at that time. See Michaelis' Introduction, &c. Vol. II. p. 32, Marsh's Translation.

The Apostles all remained at Jerusalem during Stephen's persecution, Acts viii. 1, and probably did not begin to separate from thence to their respective districts, till the second persecution by Herod the King, A.D. 44, ten years after the first; when the death of the elder James, and the apprehension, and miraculous deliverance of Peter, the two prime leaders, or “PILLARS of the Mother Church,” probably obliged the rest to quit the city, as well as Peter, who “went to another place,” Acts xii. 1—17, probably to Antioch, Gal. ii. 11, where he chiefly resided until he went to Rome, as we learn from Chrysostom.

At this time, probably A.D. 44, the other James, styled “THE LORD'S brother,” Gal. i. 19, was elected, (we may presume from his merit and his kindred to CHRIST,) the first resident Bishop of Jerusalem, by the HOLY SPIRIT, to superintend the affairs of the Mother Church, “which it was not meet should be left void of some Apostle.” And to fill up the vacancy thus made in the original number of the itinerant Apostles, by his appointment, and by the death of the other James, the two supernumerary Apostles, Barnabas and Saul, of the Church of Antioch, (the first of the Gentile Churches, Acts xi. 19—26,)

* Lord Chancellor King, in his learned Enquiry into the Constitution, &c. of the primitive Church, within the first 300 years after Christ, has confounded the orders of Bishop and Priest, alledging that they were equal in order, though different in degree or rank. And that as there was but one Bishop to one Church, so there was but one Church to one Bishop; considering the word Church, or Diocese, as equivalent to a Parish: and reckoning the three orders of Bishops, Priests, and Deacons, as corresponding to Rectors, Vicars, and Deacons in our Church, pp. 14—54.

But this is obviously a mistake, for

1. From the foregoing instances, it appears that there were several Presbyters in one Church, as at Ephesus and Philippi.

2. His argument would tend to equal Presbyters to Apostles also, who called themselves Presbyters, as Peter and John.

3. He has adduced himself a multitude of examples from Ignatius and the primitive Fathers, representing the ministry of a Church as composed of the Bishop, Presbyters, and Deacons, p. 21, 30, 42, &c.

Slater's original Draught of the Primitive Church, in answer to Lord King's Enquiry, though now little read, is a work of such merit, that it is said to have converted Lord King himself, who certainly preferred its author in the Church, highly to his own honour.

It is rather surprizing, that Lord King does not refer to the seventh Book of Hooker's Ecclesiastical Polity, in which the subject is fully and ably discussed, in answer to the Presbyterian and Puritan writers, who maintained Lord King's doctrine, before the Grand Rebellion.

were elected, immediately by the HOLY SPIRIT himself, and “separated for the apostleship to the Gentiles; and after fasting and prayer, and imposition of hands of the Presbytery there, they directly proceeded, under the guidance of the HOLY SPIRIT, to Seleucia, Cyprus,” &c. Acts xiii. 2—4, Gal. ii. 9. Here we may observe, that the “imposition of the hands of the Presbytery,” was by no means necessary to constitute them Apostles; for their apostolic commission was immediately from “GOD, CHRIST, and THE HOLY SPIRIT,” as Paul frequently asserted, Rom. i. 1, 1 Cor. i. 1, ix. 1, 2 Cor. i. 1, 1 Tim. ii. 7, “not of men, nor by man,” Gal. i. 1, &c. but rather as a solemn recommendation of them to the Divine grace and protection; as afterwards, a second time, by the same Church of Antioch. Comp. Acts xiv. 26, xv. 40.

This sagacious conjecture of the deeply learned Hooker, respecting the time of the election of James to be Bishop of Jerusalem; and of Barnabas and Saul, to supply the deficiency in the original number of the Apostles, Eccles. Polity, VII. 4, p. 337, appears to be supported by Peter's message, on leaving Jerusalem, “to James and the brethren,” Acts xii. 17, plainly intimating that James then presided in that Church; and also from his vindication of his conduct before the Church there, in baptizing Cornelius; in which debate James took a lead, though other Apostles were also present, Acts xv. 13—23, who might have returned thither again, after the death of their persecutor, Herod, for some time before they took their final departure.

It was not until Churches had multiplied in their respective districts or provinces, that the Apostles appointed *Bishops, to whom they delegated their own authority for the regimen of those Churches, and for ordaining Bishops, Presbyters, and Deacons therein. A prerogative which distinguished Bishops from Presbyters or Priests, who never presumed to ordain in the primitive Church. “No man,” says Hooker, “is able to shew either Deacon or Presbyter ordained by Presbyters only,

* According to Ignatius, the office of a Bishop was twofold, ἱερατεῖν καὶ ἀρχεῖν, to “exercise the sacerdotal functions and to rule.” When he was going to suffer martyrdom, he wrote to the Presbyters and Pastors under him, “Let the Presbyters guide the flock, until God shall shew who shall rule over you, for I am going to be offered up.” See Hooker's Eccles. Polity, B. VII, p. 343.

and his ordination lawful in any ancient part of the Church; every where examples being found, both of Deacons and Presbyters, ordained by Bishops alone, oftentimes; neither [being] ever, in that respect, thought insufficient," p. 342. The association of Presbyters also, in the consecration of Bishops, which was practised from the beginning of the Church, was not necessary to their consecration, for that was the peculiar prerogative of the Apostles, and their successors, the *Bishops. Thus Paul consecrated Timothy to be his coadjutor, who was afterwards

* Soon after the Reformation, a controversy was carried on by the partizans of the See of Rome, against the validity of English ordination of Bishops, Priests, and Deacons, as if they were not truly consecrated nor ordained by lawful Bishops, in regular succession from the Apostles. The learned and impartial Father Courayer, has fully discussed the question, in his Treatise on the validity, &c. and in his defence of that Treatise, in answer to the Romish writers who attempted to reply thereto.

Among the Romish writers in this controversy, was Ward, whose book was first printed in London, 1719, after the author's death; and was refuted by Courayer. It has been recently raked up from the dust, in which it had lain quietly for near a century, and republished in Dublin, 1807, with his Errata of the Protestant Bible, and has drawn forth an able vindication from Doctor Elrington, late Senior Fellow of Trinity College, Dublin, 1808, who has critically analyzed the work, and exposed its misrepresentations. "Do the Roman Catholics," (says Dr. E.) "hope to conciliate those whom they style their Protestant brethren, by telling them that they are not Christians?—that, as often as they communicate or co-operate with these, who are neither Priests nor Bishops, in any act belonging to those offices, so often are they involved, with them, in the damnable sin of sacrilege!" Preface, p. vi. vii.

Dr. Elrington has cited some eminent Romish authorities, admitting the validity of English ordination. Among them,

1. The celebrated Bossuet, Bishop of Meaux, in his letter to Mabillon, says, "The English pretend that there is no difficulty as to the succession of their Bishops, in the beginning of the schism; and it appears that they have reason on their side." And for proof of Bossuet's continuance in this opinion, see Courayer's Defence, Vol. I. p. 35, Lond. Edit. 1728.

2. The learned and candid Father Walsh, author of the Irish Remonstrance, in 1674, says, that "The ordination of the Protestant Church of England is valid, according to both the public doctrines of the Roman Catholic Schools themselves, and the ancient rituals of all the Catholic Churches, Latin and Greek."

And again: "In that place where I seem somewhat too severe on Matthew Parker, the first Protestant Archbishop of Canterbury, under Queen Elizabeth, you must not persuade yourself that I do at all reflect upon his ordination, as if indeed, that had not been only uncanonical or unlawful, but really void and null, or, as the Schoolmen speak, invalid. Were I to deliver my opinion of this matter, or were it my purpose to speak thereof, I should certainly hold myself obliged, in conscience, (for any thing I know yet,) to concur with them, who doubt not the ordination of Bishops, Priests, and Deacons in the Protestant Church of England, to be, at least, valid: and yet, I have read all, whatever hath been to the contrary objected by Roman Catholic writers, whether against the matter or form, or want of power in the first consecrators, by reason of their schism and heresy, or of their being deposed formerly from their Sees," &c.

first Bishop of Ephesus, (1 Tim. i. 3, and superscription to his Epistles to Timothy,) (δια,) “by the imposition of his hands,” 2 Tim. i. 6, but with the approbation of the Presbyters, commending him to the Divine grace and protection, (μετα,) “with the imposition of the hands of the presbytery,” 1 Tim. iv. 14. The Apostle, by these different prepositions, δια, implying agency, and μετα, association only, critically distinguishing both. He also consecrated Titus to be his coadjutor, and afterwards first Bishop of Crete, (Tit. i. 5, and superscription to this Epistle,) without any mention of the concurrence of the presbytery, who probably were not consulted; and commissioned him “to ordain Presbyters in every city,” Tit. i. 5, appointing both Timothy and Titus to act as Bishops, when he himself was no longer able to take “care of all the Churches” that he had planted, on account of their number, and his long imprisonments at Jerusalem, Cæsarea, and Rome, which pressed heavily upon his mind, 2 Cor. xi. 28.

In like manner, the Angels, or Bishops of the seven Churches of Asia Minor, seem to have been appointed by the Apostle John, to supply his place, previous to his banishment in the Isle of Patmos.

In such circumstances, the appointment of Bishops, or Superintendants, to supply the place of the Apostles, and to watch over the concerns of the Church, became a matter of imperious necessity. For Paul predicted, that in his absence, many “grievous wolves in sheep’s cloathing, or false apostles and false teachers, would break into the Christian fold, not sparing the flock,” Acts xx. 29, 2 Cor. xi. 3—15; who should not only clandestinely introduce false doctrines, subversive of Gospel faith, 1 Cor. xi. 19, Gal. i. 8, but also split the Church into parties and factions, 1 Cor. i. 12, 13, Col. ii. 19, as John likewise complained, at a later period. 2 John 7, 1 John ii. 18, 3 John 9, 10.

And that the episcopal order, indeed, was introduced into the Church for the better maintenance of ecclesiastical discipline, we learn from the primitive Fathers.

The apostolical martyr, Ignatius, bishop of Antioch, A.D. 107, in his Epistle to the Church of Smyrna, soon after the death of St. John, thus exhorts them.

“Follow ye all, the Bishop, as JESUS CHRIST THE FATHER; and the Presbytery, as the Apostles; and respect the Deacons, according to GOD'S command. Let none do any ecclesiastical services without the Bishop: let that Eucharist, only, be accounted valid which is performed by the Bishop, or by the person whom he may appoint. Wherever the Bishop is seen, let there the multitude be; as wheresoever JESUS CHRIST is, there is the Catholic Church, (Matt. xviii. 20.) It is not lawful, without the Bishop, neither to baptize, nor to celebrate the Lord's Supper; but only for him whom the Bishop may approve. This is well pleasing to GOD, in order that every thing that is done may be correct and valid.—“Whosoever officiates, in any respect, unknown to the Bishop, serveth the Devil!”

In his Epistle to the Ephesians,

“Resist not the Bishop, that we may be servants of GOD.”

In his Epistle to the Philadelphians,

“Attend to the Bishop, and the Presbytery, and Deacons; without the Bishop, do nothing. Keep your flesh [body] as the temple of GOD. Love unity, fly divisions; become imitators of JESUS CHRIST, as he also was of HIS FATHER. For where division and anger is, there GOD dwelleth not. THE LORD, therefore, pardoneth all penitents, if they penitentially return to the unity of GOD, and the assembly of the Bishop.”——“Be not deceived, my brethren, if any one follow a schismatic, he shall not inherit the ‘kingdom of heaven,’” (Gal. v. 20. 21, 1 Cor. xi. 18.)

In his Epistle to the Magnesians,

“I exhort you, strive to do all things in the unanimity of GOD, the Bishop presiding in the place of GOD, and the Presbyters in the place of the assembly of the Apostles, and the Deacons, as intrusted with the ministry of JESUS CHRIST. Let there be nothing among you that shall be able to divide you; but be ye united to the Bishop and to the Presidents. As, therefore, THE LORD did nothing without THE FATHER, being united with Him, neither by Himself, nor by the Apostles; so likewise, do ye nothing without the Bishop and the Presbyters; nor, shall ye attempt what may seem to you fit worship, apart from them, but assemble together at the same place, having one prayer, one supplication, one mind, one hope *,” (1 Cor. i. 10, Ephes. iv. 3.)

* See the original passages of these and the following Epistles, cited by Lord King,

Irenæus also, the Bishop of Lyons in Gaul, A.D. 178, declares, "CHRIST, at the last day, shall judge those that fabricate schisms, who are lawless, not having the love of GOD, but preferring their own interest before the unity of the Church, for slight and trivial causes, rent and divide the great and glorious body of CHRIST, and, as much as in them lieth, slay it. Speaking peace, but waging war, straining at a gnat, but swallowing a camel."

Cyprian, Bishop of Carthage, in Africa, A.D. 248, says, "From no other source do schisms spring up, than that the Bishop is not obeyed, nor is it considered that there ought to be but one Priest in a Church for a time, and one Judge for a time, in CHRIST'S stead."——Such are the vices and endeavours of schismatics, idly imagining to please themselves, that through swelling pride contemn their president. Thus they secede from the Church, they erect a profane altar without; thus they rebel against the ordination and unity of GOD.——From thence have arisen, and do still arise, schisms and heresies; while the Bishop, who is one, and presides in the Church, is contemned by the proud presumption of certain persons, and the man honoured with the approbation of GOD, is judged unworthy by men.——The Church is the people united to their Bishop, and the flock adhering to their Pastor. Whence you ought to know, that the Bishop is in the Church, and the Church in the Bishop, and that if there be any who are not with the Bishop, they are not in the Church; and that they flatter themselves in vain, who not having peace with GOD'S Priests, creep about, and privily communicate with some persons, as they believe; although the Catholic Church is but one, neither rent nor divided, and is made, connected together, and coupled, by the cement of the Bishops [of the several Churches,] cohering together with each other." And he calls them schismatics, who set up a particular Church, in a particular Church, and acting in opposition to the lawful Bishop thereof, draw away the inhabitants of a parish from the communion of their legal minister, setting up separate conventicles for themselves, (Conventicula sibi diversa constituunt.) And he further declares, that the

and more correctly translated than by him, p. 169—171. They are abundantly sufficient to refute his error, and to prove the distinctness of the three orders of Bishops, Priests, and Deacons in the primitive Church, so early, at least, as the days of Ignatius.

Devil invented heresies and schisms to subvert the faith, corrupt the truth, and divide the unity *.”

Jerom also, A.D. 392, thus states the cause of the institution of the episcopal order.

“ It was for a remedy against schism, that one was afterwards chosen to be placed above the rest ; lest every one pulling unto himself, should rend asunder the Church of CHRIST.— For until, through the instigation of the Devil, factions grew up in the Church, and it began to be professed among the people, I am of Paul, I of Apollos, and I of Cephas, Churches were governed by the common advice of Presbyters ; but when every one began to reckon those whom himself had baptized, his own, and not CHRIST’S, it was decreed in the whole world, that one chosen out of the Presbyters, should be placed above the rest, to whom all care of the Church should belong, and so the seeds of schism be removed.” And writing against the Heretics called Luciferians, “ The very safety of the Church,” says he, “ depends on the dignity of the chief Priest ; to whom unless an exceeding and pre-eminent power be granted, there will grow in Churches as many schisms as there are persons who have authority.

And the authority of Jerom on this subject carries with it the greater weight, not only because he was a Presbyter, not a Bishop, like the rest, who might naturally be suspected of partiality to their own order, but also because the pride of insolent Bishops had not a sharper enemy than this Father, who often took occasion to inveigh against them most severely, for contempt of their clergy, for not suffering themselves to be told of their faults, or admonished of their duty by inferiors, for not conferring with them, &c.

Calvin himself, though no friend to episcopal regimen, yet confesses that in old time the teaching ministers in every city chose one out of their company, to whom they appropriated the title of Bishop, lest equality should breed dissension. And he compares the power of the Bishop, in the assembly of Ministers, to that of the Roman Consuls in the Senate, namely, to propose matters to them, to ask their opinions, to direct their proceedings by advice, admonition, and exhortation, and to carry their resolutions into execution. Instit. IV. 4, 2.

* See Lord King’s Enquiry, p. 160—163.

It is deeply to be regretted, indeed, that, at the auspicious era of the Reformation, and of our forefathers' emancipation from the spiritual tyranny of the See of Rome, the Protestant Churches of the Continent did not follow the wise example of the Church of England, in retaining the episcopal regimen of the primitive Church. At the Synod of Dort, held in 1619, the Bishop of Llandaff, one of the English Divines who attended it, openly controverted a proposition inserted in the Calvinist confession of faith of the Low Countries, that CHRIST established an equality among ministers of the Gospel *. He said, that CHRIST chose twelve Apostles and seventy Disciples; that the Apostles had authority and inspection over all the other ministers of the Gospel; and that the Church had preserved the same subordination, constantly and without interruption; for which he appealed to all antiquity, and to all the learned at present, and challenged the Synod to prove the contrary. And it was very remarkable, that not one member of the Synod undertook to answer him. Afterwards, conversing on the subject, in private, with some of the most learned divines of that assembly, "I told them," said he, "that the troubles of Holland proceeded from their want of Bishops, who might have curbed factious men by their power and authority; that every body in that country was at liberty to say and write whatever he pleased; and that the

* The learned Hooker has well explained the origin of this notion, promulgated by the Presbyterian and Puritan writers of his day, and adopted by Lord King.

"The first, whom we read to have bent themselves against the superiority of Bishops, were Aerius and his followers. Aerius, seeking to be made a Bishop, could not brook that Eustathius was thereunto preferred before him, [about A.D. 320.] Whenas, therefore, he saw himself unable to rise to that greatness, which his ambitious pride did affect, his way of revenge was to try what wit, sharpened by envy and malice, could do, in raising a new seditious opinion, that the superiority which Bishops had was a thing which they should not have, that a Bishop might not ordain, and that a Bishop ought not any way to be distinguished from a Presbyterian."—The former he inferred from 1 Tim. iv. 14, where Timothy is said to have been elected Bishop, with the imposition of the hands of the Presbytery; the latter from the title of Bishops given to Presbyters, Acts xx. 17—23, explained above, upon Hooker's principles. Eccl. Pol. VII. 9, p. 361.

The Presbyterian schism, founded thereon, he thus explains also, in the words of Lactantius, A.D. 306.

"Men of a slippery faith they were, who feigned that they knew and worshipped GOD, but seeking only that they might grow in wealth and honour, affected the highest priesthood; whereunto when their bettors were chosen before them, they thought it better to leave the Church, and to draw their favourers with them, than to endure those men as their governors, whom themselves desired to govern," p. 381.

Churches of those provinces would never be quiet, unless Bishops were appointed to govern the clergy."

They answered, "that they highly esteemed the good order and discipline of the Church of England, and heartily wished the same order was established in their country, but they could not hope for it in the present posture of affairs. They added, that they hoped God would assist them with his grace, and that they would contribute, with all their might, to the establishment of that good order."—"They groan," says he, "under the government of [a democratic, or] popular constitution, without authority, and would free themselves from it if they knew how." See his book, entitled Appello ad Cæsarem, cited in Brandt's Abridgment, Vol. II. p. 509.

As the order of Bishops was originally instituted for the better government of the inferior orders of Priests and Deacons, in the particular Churches, so were Archbishops appointed to preside over their suffragan Bishops in their respective Sees, and Primates to preside over Archbishops within their respective provinces, by a regular and useful gradation. The chief Primates of the Christian Church were the Prelates of the three principal Sees of Rome, Antioch, and Alexandria *, to which afterwards was added a fourth, Constantinople, when that city became the residence of the Christian Emperors. Chrysostom had under his care and charge the city of Constantinople, all Thrace, divided into six Bishopricks, and all Asia Minor, divided into eleven. The rest of the east was under Antioch, the south under Alexandria, and the west under Rome.

To correct abuses, and to maintain unity of doctrine, and conformity of discipline in the Church, provincial Synods were held, usually every year, in each province, wherein the Arch-

* When John, the Bishop of Jerusalem, was charged with heresy, and wrote an apology for himself to Theophilus, Bishop of Alexandria, Jerom censured him for a breach of ecclesiastical order, saying, "You that seek the rules of the Church, and follow the canons of the Nicene council, (A.D. 325,) tell me what relation has Palestine to the Bishop of Alexandria? If I am not mistaken, it was there determined, that Cæsarea should be the metropolitan See of Palestine, and Antioch of all the rest. You ought, therefore, to have referred your cause to the Bishop of Cæsarea, or if you determined to go further, you should rather have directed your letter to Antioch." See the original, Hooker's Eccl. Pol. B. vii. p. 351.

Hence clearly appears how unfounded were the pretensions of the Bishop of Rome to universal primacy, in the primitive Church, even upon the authority of her oracle, Jerom.

bishop presided, and occasionally, from time to time, General Councils, composed of representatives from the Catholic, or Universal Church, consisting of Archbishops, Bishops, Presbyters, Deacons, and lay deputies, chosen in behalf of the several Churches. One of the four Primates, or some Bishop of distinguished learning and worth, presided in these, and acted as moderator, whose business was to regulate the proceedings, sum up the heads of debate, take the votes, and give his own last of all.

MAINTENANCE OF THE CHURCH.

The best account of this we have any where seen, is furnished by the judicious Hooker, in his masterly Vindication of the Discipline of the Church of England, as founded upon the model of primitive *ecclesiastical polity, Book VII. p. 380.

“In the prime of the Christian world, that [voluntary contribution] which was brought and laid down at the Apostles’ feet, Acts iv. 35, they disposed of by distribution, according to the exigence of each man’s need. Neither can we think that they, who out of CHRIST’S treasury made provision for all others, were careless to furnish the clergy with all things fit and convenient for their state. And as the Apostles themselves were chiefest in place of authority and calling, so no man doubteth but that, proportionally, they had power to use the same for their own decent maintenance †. The Apostles, with the rest of the clergy in Jerusalem, lived at that time, according to the

* The highest eulogy ever pronounced upon this great champion of Protestantism, and pillar of the Church of England, was by Pope Clement VIII., on hearing the first book of his Ecclesiastical Polity read in Latin to him, by Dr. Stapleton: There is no learning that this man hath not searcht into; nothing too hard for his understanding. This man, indeed, deserves the name of an author; his books will get reverence by age, for there is in them such seeds of eternity, that if the rest be like this, they will last till the last fire shall consume all learning.” This eulogy was equally honourable to the Pope himself.

† The poverty of the Apostles was emphatically expressed by Peter; “Lo we have forsaken all, and followed Thee,” (CHRIST,) Matt. xix. 27; “Silver and gold have I none,” Acts iii. 6. They were therefore bound to be maintained by the congregation of the faithful. “For the labourer is worthy of his hire,” Luke x. 7; and how much more the spiritual labourer?—“Who feedeth a flock, and eateth not of the milk of the flock?” If, says Paul, we have sown unto you spiritual things, is it a great matter if we shall reap your worldly things? Do ye not know, that they who minister about holy things, live by the sacrifice? and they who wait at the altar, are partakers of the altar? Even so THE LORD also ordained, that they who preach THE GOSPEL, should live by THE GOSPEL,” 1 Cor. iv. 9—14.

manner of a fellowship, or collegiate society, maintaining themselves, and the poor of the Church, with a common purse; the rest of the faithful keeping that purse continually stored. And in this sense it is that the SACRED HISTORY saith, ‘All which believed were in one place, and had all things common,’ Acts ii. 44.

“In the histories of the Church, and in the writings of the ancient Fathers for centuries after, we find no other way for the maintenance of the clergy, but only this, the treasury of JESUS CHRIST, furnished through men’s devotion, bestowing sometimes goods, sometimes lands, that way; and out of His treasury, the charge of the service of GOD was defrayed, the Bishop, and the clergy under him, maintained; the poor, in their necessity, ministered unto. For which purpose, every Bishop had some one of the Presbyters under him, to be treasurer of the Church, to receive, keep, and deliver all, which office, in Churches Cathedral, remaineth even till this day, albeit the use thereof, be not altogether so large now as heretofore. The disposition [disposal] of their goods was by the appointment of the Bishop. Wherefore Prosper, speaking of the Bishops’ care therein, saith, “It was necessary for one to be troubled therewith, to the end

The Levitical priesthood was amply provided for by THE LAW OF GOD. Hooker, p. 379, 380, reckons, that if the quality of the tythes and offerings assigned to the Jewish clergy, the priests and Levites, and their manner of receiving them without labour, expence, or charge, be taken into consideration, the tribe of Levi had four-twelfths of the produce of the Holy Land, or four times as much as any of the other tribes. They had also a considerable landed property, for GOD was pleased to appoint them forty-eight cities, scattered through the twelve tribes, with territories of land or glebes adjoining, to hold as their own free inheritance for ever, both to enable them to discharge, and reward them for discharging duly, their sacred functions of instructing and educating the people in religion and morality. Barnabas, the Levite, was one of the foremost contributors to the maintenance of the Christian Church, “who sold the land in his possession, and brought the money, and laid it at the Apostles’ feet,” Acts iv. 36, 37. And his example was followed by several of the primitive Fathers of the Church, Paulinus, Hilary, Cyprian, &c. who, before they were made bishops, having been owners of ample possessions, sold them, and gave them away to the poor.

When, therefore, the Apostle judged that “Presbyters, who ruled well in the Church of CHRIST, should be accounted worthy of double honour,” 1 Tim. v. 17, he meant double the stipend which the priests of the law received, as is evident from the parallel passage, “For if that ministry which was of the letter were so glorious, how shall not the ministry of the Spirit be more glorious?” 2 Cor. iii. 7, 8. That is, if the ministers of the LAW, which was only “the letter,” or contained the rudiments or elements of the GOSPEL, was so honourably maintained, how much more the ministers of the Spirit, or higher evangelical dispensation? “If the labourer was worthy of his hire” under THE LAW, how much more under THE GOSPEL? 1 Tim. v. 18.

that the rest under him might be freer to attend quietly their spiritual businesses.

“Touching the Bishop, as his place and estate was higher, so [was] likewise the proportion of his charges about himself: [they] being for that cause, in all equity and reason, greater. Yet forasmuch as his stint herein was no other than it pleased himself to set, the rest [of the clergy] (as the manner of inferiors is, to think that they which are over them have always too much,) grudged many times at the measure of the Bishop’s private expense; perhaps not without cause. Howsoever [that might be,] by this occasion, there grew amongst them great heart burning, quarrel, and strife. Wheresoever the Bishops were found culpable, as eating too much beyond their tether, and drawing more to their own private maintenance than the proportion of CHRIST’S patrimony, being not greatly abundant, could bear; sundry constitutions [of councils] hereupon were made to moderate the same, according to the Church’s condition, [or revenue,] in those times.

“Of contentions about these matters there was no end, neither appeared there any possible way for quietness, otherwise than by making partition of the Church revenues, according to the several ends and uses for which they did serve; so that the Bishop’s part might be certain [or fixed.] Such partition being agreed upon, and made, and the whole yearly rents and revenues of the Church divided into four equal parts or quarters:

“ 1. The Bishop was allotted one part, and enjoyed his portion several [or separate] to himself; 2. the rest of the clergy another; 3. a third was severed [or set aside] to the furnishing and upholding the Church [or place of public worship;] 4. and a fourth to the erection and maintenance of [alms] houses, wherein the poor might have relief*.

* This ancient division of the revenues of the Church, for sacred uses, was founded in consummate wisdom and policy. One quarter was allotted to the Bishop, in order to enable him the better to support his rank, and to exercise hospitality; for it was usual for the Bishop to keep a public table, at which a certain number of the dignitaries and most respectable of the clergy lived or commoned with him, such as the Dean and Chapter, whose prebendal houses, therefore, were usually built near the Bishop’s palace and the Cathedral, in the collegiate style.

This proportion was also warranted by the revenues of the High Priest under THE LAW. To him was allotted the tenth or tythe of all the Priests’ and Levites’ tythes, offerings, and incomes, consisting of the choice or best part thereof. And Phineas, the High Priest, had, moreover, lands allotted to him by the state, in Mount Ephraim, for his public services in the Moabite idolatry, &c. Numb. xxv. 11; Josh. xxiv. 33. See

“ After this separation [was] made, lands and livings began to be dedicated every day unto each use severally, by means the foregoing articles of the Priest's maintenance, Vol. II. p. 243, and division of lands, Vol. II. p. 267, &c. We are, therefore, warranted to reckon that the High Priest's revenue was a fourth part at least of what all the Priests and Levites together enjoyed, whose number was large in proportion to the extent of the Holy Land, 22000 in the time of Moses, Numb. iii. 34; iv. 3, and 30000 in the time of David, 1 Chron. xxiii. 3. Hooker rates it too low, at a seventh or eighth part, p. 379, for he did not take into account the landed property of the High Priest. And if we consider that the clergy, in the infancy of the Church, were not near so numerous in proportion as afterwards, we must allow that the Jewish hierarchy and clergy were amply and liberally maintained, and the Christian, even at first, not deficiently.

The other half of the ecclesiastical revenue, was divided between the building and repairs of churches and alms houses; and the support of the honest and industrious poor, when unable to work, 2 Thess. iii. 10.

Much as we are bound to praise and extol the blessed REFORMATION, which emancipated our forefathers from the spiritual tyranny of papal despotism, to the glorious liberty of the GOSPEL, we cannot too deeply lament and deplore that iniquitous and sacrilegious spoliation of Church property that accompanied it; and the lay impropriations, so profusely and unwisely granted at the suppression of the monasteries and religious orders, and the confiscation of their revenues, both in lands and tythes. These ought to have been religiously restored to sacred uses, as the patrimony of CHRIST; and the present generation has to rue the impolicy of the misapplication. The poor rates, which are now so grievous a burden upon the industry of the community, were created thereby; for before the suppression they did not exist, they were unnecessary; and it is now, indeed, difficult for the curtailed revenues of the Church even to keep in repair those splendid churches and cathedrals formerly built out of the sacred funds, much less to build new churches for the increased population of the land. The consequences of this inability are truly calamitous already, and threaten still greater evils.

Nor was the warning voice of the first and greatest luminaries of the Reformation, and firmest pillars and bulwarks of the Church of England, wanting to deprecate and expose the evil tendency of these abuses.

1. The learned Bishop Jewel, whose Apology for the Church of England is so deservedly admired by the soundest divines, in one of his sermons, preached before Q. Elizabeth, (who, it is well known, gave at first but too much encouragement thereto,) had the boldness to notice these abuses, and to foretel their fatal consequences.

“ In other countries, (said he,) the receiving of THE GOSPEL hath always been the cause that LEARNING was more set by; and learning hath ever been THE FURTHERANCE OF THE GOSPEL: in England, I know not how, it cometh otherwise to pass, for since THE GOSPEL hath been received, the maintenance of LEARNING hath been decayed; and the lack of LEARNING will be the decay of THE GOSPEL.”——“ You,” said he, addressing himself to her rapacious courtiers and favourites, “ you enriched them which mocked, and blinded, and devoured you! Spoil not them now that feed, and instruct, and comfort you!”

2. The intelligent Hooker reckoned that what had been taken in his time, from the Church, in lay appropriations, was known to amount to one hundred and twenty thousand pounds yearly. “ We rest,” says he, “ contentedly and quietly without it, till it shall please GOD to touch the hearts of men, of their own voluntary accord, to restore it to HIM again.”——“ What hath been taken away, as dedicated unto uses superstitious, and consequently, not given to GOD, or at the leastwise not so rightly given, we whereof every one of them became in a short time much greater than they had been for worldly maintenance; the fervent devo-

repine not thereat: that which hath gone, by means secret and indirect, through corrupt compositions or compacts, we cannot help: what the hardness of men's hearts doth make them loth to have exacted, though being due by law, even thereof the want we do also bear.— All that we have to sustain our miserable life with is but a remnant of God's own treasure; so far already diminished and clipt, that if there were any sense of common humanity left in this hard-hearted world, the impoverished estate of the clergy of God would, at the length, even of very commiseration, be spared!" p. 389. "Surely, wheresoever this wicked intendment of overthrowing cathedral churches, or of taking away those livings, lands, and possessions which Bishops hitherto have enjoyed, shall once prevail, the handmaids attending thereupon will be paganism and extreme barbarity [or barbarism,"] p. 387. And he thus remarkably predicted the ensuing Grand Rebellion *.

"We have just cause exceedingly to fear, that those miserable times of confusion are drawing on, wherein 'the people shall be oppressed one of another,' (Isa. iii. 5,) inasmuch as already, that which prepareth the way thereunto, is come to pass: 'Children presume against the ancient, and the vile against the honourable,' (Isa. iii. 5.) Prelacy, the temperature of excesses in all estates, the glew and soder of the public wealth, the ligament which tieth and connecteth the limbs of this body politic together, hath instead of deserved honour, all extremity of disgrace: the foolish every where plead, that unto the wise in heart they owe neither service, subjection, nor honour," p. 373.

Bishop Jewel died A.D. 1571, and Hooker A.D. 1600.

3. The chief stay and support of the tottering Church at that time, under God, was Whitgift, Archbishop of Canterbury; who devoutly consecrated both his whole life to God, and his painful labours to the good of the Church, in the language of Cambden. He was in great favour with Queen Elizabeth, and induced her to put a stop to the breach that had been already made in the lands and immunities of the Church, and to maintain, with more care than she had done before, its remaining rights. Her prime favourite, the earl of Leicester, having abused his power, as one of the trustees of an act designed for the better preservation of Church lands, by preventing their alienation, the Archbishop withstood him openly to his face, before the Queen; and they both quitted the room, not friends in appearance. But Whitgift made a sudden and seasonable return to her Majesty, whom he found alone, and addressed her with great humility and reverence indeed, but with the spirit and frankness of an Apostle, in the following terms.

"I beseech your Majesty to hear me with patience, and to believe that yours and the Churches safety are dearer to me than my life, but my conscience dearer than both; and therefore, give me leave to do my duty, and tell you, that princes are deputed nursing fathers of the Church, and owe it a protection: and therefore, God forbid, that you should be so much as passive in her ruins, when you may prevent it; or that I should behold it, without horror and detestation; or should forbear to tell your Majesty of the sin and danger. And though you and myself are born in an age of frailties, when the primitive piety and care of the Church lands and immunities are much decayed, yet, Mation of men being glad that this new opportunity was given them of shewing zeal to the house of GOD in more certain order.”

* How highly Hooker's Ecclesiastical Polity was admired by Charles I. appears from his advice to his children, a few days before he suffered, to read it diligently, even next to THE BIBLE, as an excellent means to settle them in the truth of religion, and in the peace of the Church.

dam, let me beg that you will but first consider, and then you will believe, there are such sins as profaneness and sacrilege; for if there were not, they could not have names in HOLY WRIT, and particularly in the NEW TESTAMENT.

“ And I beseech you to consider, that though OUR SAVIOUR said, He judged no man, and to testify it, would not judge nor divide the inheritance betwixt the two brethren, nor would judge the woman taken in adultery, yet in this point of the Churches rights, he was so zealous, that he made himself both the accuser and the judge, and the executioner to punish these sins, witnessed, in that He himself made the whip to drive the profaners out of the Temple, overthrew the tables of the money-changers, and drove them out of it. And consider, that it was St. Paul that said to these Christians of his time, that were offended at idolatry, ‘ yet thou that abhorrest idols, dost thou commit sacrilege?’ supposing, I think, sacrilege to be the greater sin: this may occasion your Majesty to consider, that there is such a sin as sacrilege. And to incline you to prevent the curse that will follow it, I beseech you also to consider, that Constantine, the first Christian Emperor, and Helena, his mother, that King Edgar, and Edward the Confessor, and indeed, many others of your predecessors, and many private Christians, have also given to GOD and his Church much land, and many immunities, which they might have given to those of their own families, and did not, but gave them as an absolute right and sacrifice to GOD; and with these immunities and lands, they have entailed a curse upon the alienators of them; GOD prevent your Majesty from being liable to that curse.

“ And to make you that are trusted with their preservation, the better to understand the danger of it, I beseech you forget not, that besides these curses, the Church land and power have been also endeavoured to be preserved, (as far as human reason, and the law of this nation have been able to preserve them,) by an immediate and most sacred obligation on the consciences of the princes of this realm. For they that consult Magna Charta shall find, that as all your predecessors, at their coronation, so you also, were sworn before all the Nobility and Bishops, then present, and in the presence of GOD, and in his stead, to him that anointed you, to maintain the Church lands, and the rights belonging to it; and this, testified openly at the Holy Altar, by laying your hand upon the BIBLE, then lying upon it. And not only Magna Charta, but many modern statutes have denounced a curse upon those that break Magna Charta. And now what account can be given for the breach of this oath at the last great day, either by your Majesty or by me, if it be wilfully or but negligently violated, I know not.

“ And therefore, good Madam, let not the late Lord (Leicester's) exceptions against the failings of some few Clergymen, prevail with you to punish posterity for the errors of this present age: let particular men suffer for their particular errors, but let GOD and His Church have their rights. And though I pretend not to prophecy, yet I beg posterity to take notice of what is already become visible in many families; That Church land, added to an ancient inheritance, hath proved like a moth fretting a garment, and secretly consumed both! or like the eagle that stole a coal from the altar, and thereby set her nest on fire, which consumed both her young eagles, and herself that stole it. And though I shall forbear to speak reproachfully of your father, (Henry VIII.) yet I beg you to take notice, that a part of the Churches rights, added to the vast treasure left him by his Father, hath been conceived to bring an unavoidable consumption upon both, notwithstanding all his diligence to preserve it.

“ And consider, that after the violation of those laws to which he had sworn in Magna

HERESY AND SCHISM.

The foregoing complaints of the primitive Fathers, shew how soon these “tares” sprung up in the Church of CHRIST; at-Charta, GOD did so far deny him His restraining grace, that he fell into greater sins than I am willing to mention.

“Madam, RELIGION is the foundation and cement of human societies, and when they that serve at GOD’s altar shall be exposed to poverty, then RELIGION itself will be exposed to scorn, and become contemptible; as you may already observe in too many poor vicarages in this nation. And therefore, as you are by a late act, or acts [of Parliament,] entrusted with a great power to preserve, or [to] waste the Churches lands, yet dispose of them, for JESUS’s sake, as the donors intended. Let neither falsehood nor flattery beguile you to do otherwise, and put a stop, I beseech you, to the approaching ruin of GOD’s Church, as you expect comfort at the last great day; for Kings must be judged.

“Pardon this affectionate plainness, my most dear Sovereign, and let me beg to be still continued in your favour, and THE LORD continue you in Hts.”

This animated speech, (impossible to be abridged,) to which the Queen listened patiently, produced its full effect; and her future care to preserve the Church’s rights, which till then had been neglected, proved that it sunk deep into her heart. Notwithstanding all the flowings and ebbings of her favour towards his opposers, (and the latter especially, to the Earl of Leicester,) he still maintained a uniform ascendancy in her esteem, for his piety, and in her councils for his wisdom, during twenty years, in those dangerous and unsettled times, in which he had to cope with the most powerful and active enemies of the Church, both open and concealed, the Nonconformists and the Courtiers. And he made good his motto, Vincit qui patitur.

See Walton’s Life of Hooker, p. 9, 10. Whitgift died A.D. 1604, two years after his royal mistress.

4. To these curious, valuable, and interesting testimonies of the eye-witnesses, we cannot refrain from adding the awakening testimony of the pious and sagacious, but cautious Mede, who died in A.D. 1638, ten years before his royal master, Charles I.

Alluding to the foregoing spoliation of Church property, he says, “Moreover there is a sin of which the whole body of the reformation is notoriously guilty, which nevertheless is accounted no sin; and yet such an one, as I know not whether GOD ever passed by, without some visible and remarkable judgment. This seems to call for a scourge before Antichrist shall go down, and that may be, as far as I know, this feared clades testium, [“slaughter of the witnesses,” foretold Rev. xi. 7,] I will not name it, because it is invidious; and I am not willing to say so much for the probability thereof, in this case, as perhaps I could,” p. 760.

But he speaks of it elsewhere thus more unreservedly, in his Latin writings, “Who knows whether the reformed Church may not suffer for the insult offered to CHRIST in this respect, by the temporary suppression of the witnesses: because they held them not in due honour, as His ambassadors, while they enjoyed the benefit of their testimony? It is too notorious, how much the reformed Churches have offended in this way: for while CHRIST’s Prophets strenuously applied themselves to purge the temple of GOD, others, meantime, the robbers, by plundering its treasures, and alienating its oblations, fixed an indelible stain upon that most holy work, to the great disgrace of true religion; tributing such, as we have seen, to the instigation of the Devil, working upon the overweening pride, ambition, and worldliness of the inferior ecclesiastics, aspiring to make themselves a name, and to set themselves above their betters.

But their seeds were sown in human nature itself, and not easily eradicated, even in the regenerate. Witness the contentions among OUR LORD'S favourite Apostles, who should be greatest in his kingdom. And St. Paul, writing to the Church of Corinth, the metropolis of Achaia, that great commercial city, corrupted by wealth, and the influx of strangers, and spoiled by luxury and licentiousness, their usual concomitants, seems to consider heresies and schisms as matters of course :

“ I hear, that when ye assemble together in the Church, there are schisms among you, and I believe it, in part ; for there must needs be even heresies among you ; to the end that the approved among you may become manifest,” [by rejecting and avoiding such,] 1 Cor. xi. 18, 19.

The Apostle does not here mean, that schisms and heresies are essential to the Church ; for he ranks such among “ the works of the flesh,” Gal. v. 20, but only, that GOD permits Satan to sow those tares ; both that ungodly and pestilent disciples might shew forth the innate pride and naughtiness of in some places, not leaving even adequate supplies for the decent support of his Ministers, according to the dignity of their order ; much less a redundancy for the promotion of the Reformation, the necessities of the sacred warfare, the relief of the distressed brethren, and other pious uses.—But I will not fret this sore,” p. 487.

“ I conceive not this clades to be such as should extinguish the persons, or whole materials, (as I may so speak,) of the reformed Churches ; but the public fabric of the Reformation,” p. 761, namely, “ an extermination of the reformed Pastors out of their places and Churches ; and not a general extermination of the body of the reformed people, which are too many to be dealt with according to former violence ; and shall remain to terrify the beast, and revenge the clades of their Prophets, before almost they shall have done rejoicing over them,” (Rev. xi. 10,) p. 766.

“ Either I am mistaken, or the Apocalypse too plainly intimates, that a little before the destruction of the Beast, (Rev. xix. 20,) the whole reformed world shall be oppressed, (though but for a very short time,) and I shudder to say, entirely subverted ! (Rev. xi. 11.) Whether those miserable clades of the reformed Churches and unsettlements, may prepare the way for this last catastrophe, I cannot say, GOD only knoweth, in whose hand are the times and seasons. But this I will not hesitate to say, that if any one shall attentively consider the present aspect of affairs, there will occur to him no slight causes of dread.” p. ult.

Such faithful witnesses as Jewel, Hooker, Whitgift, and Mede, are not to be despised by those that have ears to hear, at the present crisis of the Established Church, and of the BRITISH EMPIRE. (1811.)

their hearts, by countenancing and propagating such; and the faithful on the other hand, prove the purity of their doctrine, and stedfastness of their discipline, by opposing and exposing innovations and irregularities. Bishop Pearce has judiciously remarked, "It is observable of the earlier and purser ages of the Church, that when Heretics arose, and carried some doctrines to an extreme, it commonly was, when the Church seemed inclinable to lean too much toward the other extreme. Thus Heresies then, under the guidance of PROVIDENCE, caused a revulsion of humours in the ecclesiastical body: it brought men back again into the right channel, and made them stick more closely to THE TRUTH, than they would probably have done if no opposition had been made. So that disputes about THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION seem to have contributed as much to the preserving it pure, as the constant motion of the waters does to the keeping them sweet: and if so, that can be no argument against believing CHRISTIANITY, which has been one great cause of continuing it a thing worthy to be believed." Pearce's Sermons, Vol. I. p. 387. And this exactly corresponds with the same Apostle's advice, "Prove all things: hold fast what is right," 1 Thess. v. 21.

The foregoing observations may lead us to the true Scriptural meaning of heresy and schism; which it is of so much religious and civil importance clearly to ascertain and define.

The word αἵρεσις, is used both in a good and a bad sense in Scripture, and by Paul himself. He styled himself of the strictest Sect of the Pharisees, (αἵρεσιν,) Acts xxvi. 5. Here it evidently signifies a sect or party; but, "In the way that they call heresy, so serve I THE PATRIARCHAL GOD," (αἵρεσιν—τῷ πατρῷῳ Θεῷ,) xxiv. 14. Here it is evidently used as a term of reproach.

Heresy, therefore, is ambiguous, and may subsist in a true Church as well as in a false. The followers of it in the former, are usually termed Sectaries. Thus, the disciples in the Church of Corinth, of whom "one said, I am of Paul, another, I am of Apollos, another, I am of Cephas or Peter;" (under which names, the Apostle adumbrated the leaders of those Sects), 1 Cor. i. 12, 13, iii. 5, iv. 6, are censured by him for not sufficiently "maintaining the head CHRIST;" for paying too much deference to the peculiar opinions of their teachers; although those teachers, perhaps, might not differ from each other, nor from the Gospel in fundamentals, but only in external ordinances, &c. And may not this censure equally involve Lutherans, Calvinists, Arminians, Wesleians, *Whitfieldites, &c. at the present day?

But heresy is by St. Paul decidedly reprobated, where it signifies, ἑτεροδιδασκαλία, "Heterodox Doctrine," repugnant to THE GOSPEL, as taught by CHRIST and his Apostles, and plainly and critically expounded, in conformity with the whole tenor of Scripture, 1 Tim. i. 3, vi. 3, &c.

Hence it follows, that every erroneous opinion is not heresy,

* The following admirable reflexion on the propensity of mankind to erect their favourite teachers into Apostles, we owe to Hooker; addressing himself thus to the Sectaries of his day, p. 41.

"Loth ye are to think that they whom ye judge to have attained as sound knowledge in all points of doctrine as any since the Apostles time, [such as Calvin, in his admired Institutes and Expositions of Holy Scripture] should mistake in discipline. Such is naturally our affection [or disposition] that whom, in great things, we mightily admire; in them, we are not persuaded willingly, that any thing should be amiss. The reason whereof is, that 'as dead flies putrify the ointment of the apothecary, so, a little folly, him that is in estimation for wisdom,' (Eccl. x. 1.) This, in every profession, hath too much authorized the judgment of a few [leaders]: this, with Germans, hath caused Luther, and with many other Churches, Calvin, to prevail in all things. Yet, we are not able to define [or determine] whether THE WISDOM of that GOD (who setteth before us in Holy Scripture so many admirable patterns of virtue, and no one of them without something noted wherein they were culpable; to the end that to HIM ALONE it might always be acknowledged, 'THOU only art HOLY, THOU only art JUST;') might not permit these worthy vessels of his glory to be in some things blemished with the stain of human frailty; even for this cause: lest we should esteem any man above that which becometh."

It were much to be wished, that the invaluable Preface to Hooker's Ecclesiastical Polity, in which this fine observation is found, with many others, was reprinted separately, and disseminated widely. It contains, in the moderate compass of 18 pages folio, the substance, and unfolds the design, and application of the whole eight books of that prolix work. And it is written with the most affectionate earnestness, the soundest and most impressive reasoning, religious and political, the soberest, yet the most pointed wit and humour, and the greatest fairness and candour to his opponents; commending most cheerfully Calvin's great piety and learning, though disapproving his New Ecclesiastical Discipline, as receding from the usage of the primitive Church, and little inferior in Spiritual tyranny to that of Rome herself; and contrasting the original professions with the subsequent practices of the would be Reformists of the ecclesiastical regimen of the Church of England; wishing to new model it upon the plan of the Churches of Geneva and Scotland, by abolishing the episcopal order, and imparting a share of its government to Lay-presbyters, vested with power of ordination, excommunication, &c.

It is, indeed, a finished model of religious and political controversy without acrimony. — "There will come a time," says he, "when three words uttered with charity and mekness, shall receive a far more blessed reward than three thousand volumes written with disdainful sharpness of wit." P. 36.

according to Augustine's * judicious distinction, Errare possum, Hæreticus esse nolo. "I may err, but I will not be a Heretic," intimating that he would not knowingly or wilfully embrace an error, though he might involuntarily fall into such, on account of the difficulty of finding out the true meaning of Scripture. Such error is surely venial, or pardonable. Thus, GOD pardoned the friends of Job, though they did not speak rightly of HIM, because they were good and pious men, and spoke according to the best of their skill and knowledge, in sincerity, though but in error. And the Apostle Paul evidently included wilful rejection of Gospel truth in his notion of heresy, or Heterodoxy; as may appear from the following texts :

"A Heretical person, after one or two admonitions, avoid † ;

* Augustine thus explains his sentiments, in his controversy with the Manichæans.

"Those persons who maintain an opinion, though false and perverse, without pertinacious animosity, and who seek THE TRUTH with cautious solicitude, when they have found it, ready to be corrected, are by no means to be classed among Heretics," xxiv. 9—3.

Hales of Eton, calls "heresy an act of the will, and not of reason; a lye, and not a mistake."

Bishop Taylor, says, "If a man's error be not voluntary, and part of an ill life, then, because he leads a good life, he is a good man, and therefore no Heretic."—"A bad life is the worst heresy," said one of the Fathers.

"It it be an error," says Hooker, "to think, that GOD may be merciful to save men even when they err; my greatest comfort is my error. Were it not for the love I bear to this error, I would never wish to speak or to live." And he strenuously maintained the possibility of salvation in the Romish Church against the Presbyterian and Puritanical factions; resembling the Church of Rome herself in their uncharitableness.

From that Church, the following definition of heresy was copied in the Reformatio Legum, carried on under Henry VIII. and Edward VI. pursuant to act of parliament :

"Hæresis errore falsas opiniones suscipit, et inscienter."

"Heresy takes up false opinions, through error, even unwittingly."

Under the dreadful latitude of this definition, several wretched enthusiasts were condemned to the flames in the reigns of the Reformists, Henry VIII., Edward VI., and Queen Elizabeth, as we have seen; before the Church of England was sufficiently purged from the persecuting leaven of popery.

† The Greek, ἀρετικὸν ἀνθρώπου παραιτοῦ, is rendered by the Vulgate, Hæreticum hominem devita, which gave rise to the following mistake. An old and rigid Theologian having been once asked in council, whether there was any canonical authority for the capital punishments of Heretics, immediately cited this passage in support of it; de vitâ! said he, de vitâ!—ignorantly splitting the Latin verb, devita, "avoid," into two, de vitâ, "out of life." This anecdote Erasmus reports, on the authority of John Colet, a man of approved integrity, who acted as president of that council, Jortin's Erasmus, Vol. II. p. 225.

Here, ignorance was the parent of persecution!—Many such "methodisms of error," are to be found in the persecuting annals of the Church. The council here alluded to knowing that such is perverted, and sinneth, being self condemned," Tit. iii. 10, 11.

"If any one teach other doctrine [than this] and attendeth not to the wholesome words of OUR LORD JESUS CHRIST, and to the doctrine according to Godliness, he hath been puffed up, knowing nothing, and is distempered about questions and logomachies, from whence proceed envy, strife, contention, blasphemies; evil surmises, perverse disputations of men of corrupt mind, and devoid of the truth, reckoning Godliness a traffic; withdraw thyself from such," 1 Tim. vi. 3—5.

And he censures the Church of Galatia in the following strong terms :

"I wonder that ye are so soon removed from [me] who called you by the grace of CHRIST, unto a different Gospel [of the Judaizing teachers]; which, indeed, is not another Gospel, [but in reality, no Gospel at all; preached only] by some who disturb you, and wish to subvert the Gospel of CHRIST. But if even we, [the Apostles] or an Angel from Heaven, should preach to you any Gospel beside * that which we have [already] preached to you, let him be accursed."

"As we [the Apostles] said before, so now I [Paul] say again, if any one preaches among you a Gospel beside * what ye have received, let him be accursed," Gal. i. 6—9.

Peter also foretels "heresies of perdition" to be foisted clandestinely into the Christian Church, by false teachers, as formerly into the Jewish, by false prophets; denying even THE LORD that purchased them [by his blood,] bringing on themselves and their numerous followers, speedy perdition; by means of whom, "the way of the truth shall be blasphemed," 2 Pet. ii. 1. Comp. Heb. vi. 6.

He seems here to comment on Paul, and both perhaps, to glance at Popery, "a religion taken up, and believed from the traditions of men, and additions to the word of GOD;" as skilseems to have been Protestant. And certainly, several Calvinist Divines of the Synod of Dort would have seconded the Old Theologian. The Remonstrants maintained the unlawfulness of religious persecution upon SCRIPTURAL grounds; yet, they were censured by the Synod.

* * παρα' ὅ. Here, the preposition παρα, "beside" marks those additional doctrines grafted upon the GOSPEL by the Judaizing teachers; which he compares to "the wood, hay, stubble, built upon the gold, silver, and precious stones of the Apostolic foundation," 1 Cor. iii. 12. Peter has given a fine comment on it in the compound verb, παρεισαζουσιν, "they shall clandestinely introduce," 2 Pet. ii. 1.

fully defined by Milton; whence also it follows clearly, says Milton, “that of all known Sects, or pretended Religions at this day in Christendom, Popery is the only, or the greatest Heresy: and he who is so forward to brand all others for Heretics, the obstinate Papist, the only Heretic.” Hence, one of their own famous writers found just cause to style the Romish Church, “*Mother of Error, School of Heresy.”

Schism (σχίσμα) is a “division,” or “rent” in the Church. It is either partial or total. Partial, as in the disorderly mode of celebrating the Eucharist among the Corinthians; reprehended by Paul, 1 Cor. xi. 20—34. or Total, where it comes to the separating of congregations from the common rites and ordinances of religious worship; as of the Reformed Churches from the Romish.

Schisms, therefore, may subsist in a true Church as well as in a false; where they only involve secondary points of doctrine or discipline, without subverting the foundations of the Christian Faith. Hence, Lutherans, Calvinists, Arminians, &c. and Churchmen, ought not to separate from each other, nor break off communion, since they agree in fundamentals; no more than the different sects or parties in the Church of Rome, Dominicans, Franciscans, Carthusians, Thomists, Molinists, Jansenists, Jesuits, &c. who, notwithstanding the diversity of their tenets, and their mutual controversies, all live in communion with each other.

Protestant Sects, however, were, and are, imperiously required to separate from the Church of Rome, because she erred, and still errs in fundamentals, respecting Faith and Works; and this, in obedience to SCRIPTURE:—“to avoid Heresies and Heretics,” subversive of the Gospel, and “to secede” from such, and “withdraw” from them for fear of contamination; “to come out of” the mystical and devoted “Babylon,” the mother of “Harlots,” idolatries and heresies, “that they might not be partakers of her sins and of her punishment,” Rom. xvi. 17, 2 Thess. iii. 6—14; 1 Tim. vi. 3—5; 2 Tim. iii. 5; Tit. iii. 10; Rev. xiv. 6—11, xviii. 4, &c. &c.

“Grace be with all that love OUR LORD JESUS CHRIST

* See Milton's excellent Tract on true religion, heresy, schism, and toleration, &c. first printed in the year 1673; and lately republished in Baron Maseres' Occasional Essays, p. 418.

incorruptly *. Amen," Eph. vi. 24.—“ If any love not the LORD CHRIST [incorruptly] let him be anathema, maran atha [accursed, or excommunicated] 1 Cor. xvi. 22 †.

But the mild Spirit of Christianity abhors all manner of Religious persecution for conscience sake. “ THE SON of MAN came not to destroy men's lives but to save,” Luke ix. 55, 56. And the prudential and tolerant wisdom of the Gospel, suffers “ the wheat and the tares” of pure and of corrupt Churches, “ to grow both together” in the field of this world, “ till the harvest,” or general resurrection at the end of it; when a final separation shall be made between them by “ OUR LORD and his reapers,” the Holy Angels. See the foregoing explanation of this parable, this Vol. p. 117.

While the Gospel earnestly recommends the “ divine panoply,” for our defensive armour, so beautifully described by St. Paul; the only offensive weapon it permits, is the “ sword of the Spirit, which is THE WORD OF GOD,” (Eph. vi. 10—17.) cautiously and skilfully handled, in humble imitation of CHRIST himself in his controversy with Satan; and of Michael the Archangel, his representative, contending with the Devil. He declares, that “ all they that use the temporal sword, to maintain his cause, shall perish by the sword,” Matt. xxvi. 52. A most awful warning to all persecuting Churches. And is not the Church of Rome, in particular, now drinking the bitter cup of all her former persecutions, in fulfilment of prophecy? While those reformed Churches are sharing in her potion, who were infected by her example, more or less.

The spirit of Antichrist is not exclusively confined to the Church of Rome; for we are told, there are “ many Antichrists” among the Laity as well as the Clergy every where. Who can read, without amazement, the resolutions of the Whig parliament in 1689, to charge the Earls of Salisbury and Peterborough, Sir Edward Hales and Mr. Walker, with high treason for their conversion to popery!—How infinitely wiser was the declaration of that great lawyer, Lord Mansfield: “ Nothing is more unreasonable, more inconsistent with the rights of human nature, more contrary to the precepts and spirit of the CHRIS-

* Ev αθαρσια, “ in incorruption or purity ;” put for αθαρτως, “ incorruptly or purely.” Schleusn.

† Αναθεμα, is the Greek rendering of the Syro-Chaldaic, μαραν αθα (מָרַן אֲתָא) “ accursed be thou,” which was the Jewish form of excommunication, Galat. i. 8.

TIAN RELIGION, more unjust and iniquitous, more impolitic, than persecution: it is against natural Religion, revealed Religion and Polity." Taylor's Thoughts on the Grand Apostacy, p. 67—70.

THE HISTORY OF THE CHURCH.

Τα μὲν οὖν Εὐαγγέλια ὧν ὁ Χριστὸς ἐποίησε καὶ εἶπεν ἱστορία τις ἐστὶν αἱ δὲ Πράξεις, ὧν ὁ ἕτερος Παρακλητὸς εἶπε καὶ ἐποίησε.

"The Gospels, are a History of what CHRIST did and said ;
The Acts, of what THE OTHER ADVOCATE said and did.—Chrysostom.

THE latter portion of the HISTORY, to which we are now arrived, is comprized in the sequel of the

IX. CHRONOLOGICAL PERIOD, reaching from OUR LORD'S ascension, A. D. 31, to the destruction of Jerusalem, A. D. 70. See this Vol. p. 1, 2. During which, "beginning from Jerusalem, the GOSPEL was published among all nations, until the end" of that devoted city, Matt. xxiv. 14 ; Acts i. 8.

Before we proceed thereto, it will be necessary, 1. to verify its chronology, as assumed in the foregoing outline ; and 2. to establish the canonical authority of the Acts and Epistles, in which the history is principally contained.

THE CHRONOLOGY VERIFIED.

The first leading date therein is that of the martyrdom of Stephen, and ensuing persecution of the Church, A. D. 34, according to Syncellus, Usher, and Pearson. This closed the latter half of the single week of Daniel's famous prophecy of the 70 weeks, in the midst of which, "THE MESSIAH was cut off," A. D. 31. which began, therefore, A. D. 28. See the explanation of that prophecy, Vol. II. p. 514.

The next is the conversion of Saul, afterwards the Apostle Paul, A. D. 35. This introduced a new era in the History of the Church ; corresponding to the beginning of Daniel's five last weeks, or 35 years, ending with the destruction of Jerusalem, A. D. 70. In this assigned date A. D. 35, agree Syncellus, Usher, Pearson, Barrington, and the *Bible Chronology, corrected from Usher's, by Bishop Lloyd.

* Petavius and Cave, date Paul's conversion A. D. 33.
Lenfant, Beausobre, and Lardner 36.
Michaelis, about 38.
Spanheim, Witsius and Fabrics 40.

Pontius Pilate, the fifth procurator of Judea, was deposed by Vitellius, governor of Syria, upon a complaint of mal-administration by the Samaritans, A. D. 35, as shewn in the first volume of this work, p. 87. And the same date is thus verified from Eusebius. Pilate, according to him, was appointed procurator in the twelfth year of the reign of Tiberius, A. D. 14 + 11 = A. D. 25; but he governed ten years, according to Josephus, Ant. xviii. 5, 2. And therefore was deposed A. D. 35, as before. This fixes the time of the appointment of his successor Marcellus, to the year A. D. 35, noticed by Josephus, in that place; who observes, that Tiberius was dead before the arrival of Pilate at Rome. But Tiberius died A. D. 36. This fixes Pilate's deposal in the year A. D. 35, beyond a doubt, after he had witnessed and winked at the outrageous massacre of Stephen. Soon after his disgrace, he put an end to his life, like his accomplice, Judas, for "betraying the innocent blood."

The embassy of the Jews to Caius Caligula, deprecating the erection of the emperor's statue at Jerusalem, described by the intelligent Philo, who was employed therein, took place A. D. 40, in the last year of his reign, not long before he was assassinated, as we learn from *Tacitus. He was succeeded by the emperor Claudius.

Soon after the accession of Claudius he appointed Herod Agrippa his friend king of Judea, and restored to him all the dominions of Herod the Great, his grandfather, Ant. XIX. 5, 1. We are warranted, therefore, to date Herod's reign A. D. 41. He reigned three years, and died of an extraordinary disease A. D. 44, which Josephus has caricatured from the Acts, xxii. 20—23; Ant. XIX. 8, 2.

This fixes the year of famine in Judea in the [fifth of] Claudius Cæsar, Acts xi. 28, and the second Jewish persecution by Herod, shortly before his death, A. D. 44.

After Herod's death Cuspius Fadus was appointed procurator, about A. D. 44, Joseph. Ant. XIX. 9, 2.

Tiberius Alexander succeeded him, and died in office, when Ventidius Cumanus was appointed procurator in the eighth year of Claudius, A. D. 47, Ant. XX. 4, 2.

The first Apostolic Council, held at Jerusalem to decide the question whether the Gentile Church was bound to submit to circumcision and the law of Moses, Acts xv. 1, 2, is reckoned to have been held fourteen years after the Apostle Paul's conversion, A.D. 35 + 14 = A.D. 49. Compare Gal. ii. 1—4. This fundamental date has been adopted by Petavius, Pearson, Barrington, Lardner, Paley, and Michaelis *.

* Judæi jussi a Caio Cæsare effigiem ejus in templo locare, arma potius sumpsere: quem motum Cæsaris mors diremit, Hist. V. 9.

* This important date, however, has been much disputed upon the grounds of the ambiguity of the original expression, επειτα, δια δεκατεσσαρων ετων, παλιν ανεβην εις Ιεροσολυμα, Gal. i. 1.

1. It has been contended that these “fourteen years” are rather to be counted from Paul's first visit to Jerusalem, three years after his conversion, A.D. 35 + 3 = A.D. 38, Gal. i. 18; which would give the date of the council, A.D. 38 + 14 = A.D. 52, three years later. And this has been adopted by Jerom, Usher, &c. and A.D. 51, by the Bible Chronology.

But it is more natural to refer them to the fundamental date of his conversion; especially as another επειτα intervenes, Gal. i. 21, to break the connexion with the first visit to Jerusalem, Gal. i. 18.

Lardner observes that the expression δια signifies “about,” or “during,” and that the fourteen years are current, not complete. If so, the date of the council should be A.D. 35 + 13 = A.D. 48; which, perhaps, is rather more correct.

2. But Paley doubts whether the visit to Jerusalem might not have been different from that at the time of the council, from the following differences in the circumstances of both, Horæ Paulinæ, p. 195—207.

1. Titus is mentioned as accompanying Paul and Barnabas in the Epistle, but not in the Acts.

But Titus is plainly included in the definite expression of their attendants, and “some others of them,” Acts xv. 2. The name of Titus is no where found in the Acts.

2. Paul is said to have gone up to Jerusalem by “revelation,” Gal. ii. 2; whereas he is represented as deputed by the Church of Antioch in the Acts.

Both these accounts are consistent. Thus Peter was sent for by Cornelius, but the HOLY SPIRIT directed him to go with the messengers, Acts x. 20.

3. Paul communicated his Gospel to the Gentiles, “privately to them which were of reputation,” or the Pillars of the Church, Peter, James, and John, (Gal. ii. 2—9;) for which there seemed to be no occasion, since this formed the subject of his public mission, (Acts xv. 4.)

But Paul's peculiar mission as an extraordinary Apostle to the remote Gentiles, Acts xxii. 21, (μακραν εξαποστειλω,) would have been offensive to the Mother Church in general. The public avowal of it afterwards at Jerusalem occasioned great offence to the Jewish zealots, and much persecution of the Apostle, Acts xxii. 21—22, xxvi. 21.

4. The last and chief difficulty is, that in the Epistle no notice is taken of the deliberation and decree of the Council of Jerusalem, which formed the business, for the sake of which they were sent thither from Antioch.

But Paley himself has furnished satisfactory answers to this:

1. It was not agreeable to St. Paul's manner to defer much to the authority of the Apostles, with the chief of whom he reckoned himself equal, as receiving his commission not from man, but immediately from CHRIST himself, Gal. i. 1.

2. The authority of the council of Jerusalem would have had little weight with the Gentile Galatians. He, therefore, argues the point with them upon principle.

Cumanus was banished for mal-administration, and Felix, the brother of Pallas, the favourite freedman of Claudius, was appointed procurator in the twelfth year of his reign complete, A.D. 40 + 12 = A.D. 52, Ant. XX. 6, 1; Bell. Jud. II, 12—8*.

Josephus has not noticed the length of Felix's administration,

3. The decree did not go the length of the Epistle, for the latter abrogated the Mosaic institution even to the Jews themselves, in the case of justification by faith.

* This date also is confirmed by Tacitus, who, in his Annals of the year U.C. 805, or A.D. 52, (Faustus Sylla and Salvius Otho, Coss.) after relating the shameful adulation of the Senate to Pallas, the favourite freedman of Claudius, and his mock moderation in refusing a more elevated station, when he had accumulated no less than three millions of Sesterces; proceeds thus: "But his brother, surnamed Felix, did not act with equal moderation; having been lately appointed governor of Judea, and thinking that he had an impunity for all manner of misdemeanors, relying upon so powerful a support," Annal. XII. 53, 54.

Here the phrase, jam pridem Judææ impositus, intimates recent preferment. For jam pridem signifies a short time back, which is still subsisting, as Istud jampridem scio, Plaut. jam dudum ausculto, Hor. Jampridem equidem audivi cepisse odium tui Philumenam, Ter. where jam pridem audivi, is explained by Valla, jam aliquanto abhinc tempore audivi. See other instances, Stephens's Lat. Thesaurus.

Not adverting to this earlier meaning of the word, which was afterwards ambiguously used to denote remoter time, as, quod majores nostros jampridem fecisse manifestum est, Pliny; that great chronologer Petavius unfortunately mistook the word in the foregoing passage of Tacitus in the latter sense; and thence antedated the appointment of Felix about the eighth year of Claudius, A.D. 48, which has deranged the ensuing part of his chronology, De doctrinâ temporum, Lib. XI. 11. p. 174, Vol. II. And Pearson has supposed two appointments of Felix, one in A.D. 48, in conjunction with Cumanus, and another A.D. 53, after his condemnation; preferring the authority of Tacitus to Josephus, a Jewish historian, and certainly more conversant in Jewish affairs, especially those of his own times; who might as well say,

————— Quæque ipse miserrima vidi,
Et quorum pars magna fui. —————

For Tacitus, quitting his surer guide in the sequel of the foregoing chapter, supposes that Cumanus and Felix were governors at the same time, the former of Galilee, the latter of Judea and Samaria; that both fomented the public disorders and quarrels between these neighbouring states for their own emolument, for which they were called to account by the emperor, who had them tried by Quadratus, president of Syria, and he, to curry favour with Pallas, brought Felix into the tribunal among the judges, when he should have been tried as a delinquent; and so Cumanus was condemned alone for the crimes of both, and Felix continued in office.

Josephus much more consistently relates the trial of Cumanus alone, who was condemned to banishment by Claudius on a hearing of the cause, and Felix appointed procurator in his room, Ant. XX. 5, 3, 6, 1. This part of his excellent history appears to be written with peculiar accuracy of information. Brotier, the learned editor of Tacitus, in his Notæ et Emendationes ad Annal. XII. 54. Vol. II. p. 392, 4to. gives the preference to Tacitus; but he did not consider the subject as an historian and chronologer, but merely as a commentator prejudiced in favour of his author.

nor when he was succeeded by Portius Festus, Ant. XX. 7, 9; but it may be collected from the following curious circumstances of the life of Josephus, written by himself, 1—3.

Josephus states that himself was born in the first year of the Emperor Caius, (A.D. 36;) that when he was twenty-six years old, (A.D. 62,) he undertook a hazardous voyage to Rome, (in which he was shipwrecked, and out of six hundred souls in the vessel only eighty were saved,) in order to solicit the release of some priests, his friends, honest and good men, whom Felix, during his administration, had sent prisoners to Rome, for some trivial and ordinary offence, where they lived in penury, subsisting on figs and nuts; and that when he arrived there, he procured their release by the interest of the Empress Poppæa, to whom he had been introduced by Aliturus, a Jewish stage-player, in great favour with Nero. She kindly granted his request and dismissed him with presents.

While Felix was in office, and his brother Pallas in power at the Roman court, Josephus would not have ventured to set aside his arbitrary proceedings. Felix, therefore, must have been deposed the year before, A.D. 61, and though he escaped the punishment due to his crimes, by the interest of his brother Pallas, Ant. XX. 7, 9; yet Pallas himself next year, A.D. 62, was put to death by Nero for his immense wealth*.

Hence, we may collect, with a considerable degree of precision, the important fundamental date of Paul's last visit to Jerusalem, and imprisonment there, A.D. 59, two years before the expiration of Felix's government, and the succession of Pontius Festus, in A.D. 61, as we learn from the Acts xxiv. 27. And the length of his administration, which began seven years before the Apostle's visit, corresponds with the declarations of the Orator Tertullus, in his speech against Paul, that the country had enjoyed much peace under his government; and of Paul's, in his defence, that Felix had been Governor of the Jewish nation for many years, Acts xxiv. 3—10, which was true, in part, by his clearing the country of the brigands, or robbers, who had long infested it.

Paul, on his appeal to Cæsar, was sent prisoner by Festus to

* Eodem anno, (U.C. 815 = A.D. 62,) libertorum potissimos veneno interfecisse creditus est [Nero.]—Pallantem, quòd immensam pecuniam longâ senectâ detineret, Annal. XIV. 65.

Rome, A.D. 61, shortly before "the fast," or great day of atonement, about the autumnal equinox, Acts xxvii. 9. He was shipwrecked on the island of Melite, in the Adriatic, and wintered there for three months, Acts xxviii. 1, and so proceeded to Rome early in A.D. 62, Acts xxviii. 14.

Festus died in office, and was succeeded by Albinus, about A.D. 63, the date adopted by Usher. Ant. XX. 8, 1.

Albinus was removed for mal-administration, and succeeded by Gessius Florus, in the eleventh year of Nero, A.D. 64; Ant. XX. 8, 5; XX. 10, 1.

The imprisonment of Paul at Rome lasted two years, Acts xxviii. 30, therefore he was liberated about the spring of A.D. 64, and then visited Greece, Macedon, and Asia Minor, and returned again to Rome towards the close of A.D. 64, where he was imprisoned, 2 Tim. iv. 9—21. Soon after, Peter visited Rome, 1 Pet. v. 13.

In the next year, A.D. 65, we are warranted to date the martyrdom of Paul and Peter at *Rome; commencing the first Roman persecution of the Christians by Nero, in the twelfth year of his reign, according to Epiphanius, followed by Orosius, from Tacitus, Ant. XVI. 13, and by the moderns, Dupin, Pagi, Basnage, and Lardner. The last of these judiciously infers, from the silence of the Apostles Paul and Peter respecting this persecution, in their Epistles, written shortly before their death, that it did not happen till after. Lardner, vi. p. 300, 301.

In this ominous year, A.D. 65, the second of the administration of Florus, the Jewish war broke out, which Josephus attributed to his cruelty, rapacity, and corruption.

The destruction of Jerusalem by Titus, A.D. 70, is critically ascertained by the lunar eclipse of the year before, Oct. 18, A.D. 69, the night of the battle of Cremona. See Vol. I. p. 76, of this work.

THE CANONICAL ACTS AND EPISTLES OF THE APOSTLES.

The Acts of the Apostles form a truly valuable supplement to the Gospels. They were written by the Evangelist Luke in * Petavius, Usher, and the Bible Chronology date it .. A.D. 67.

Fearson 68.

continuation of his Gospel, about the same year, A.D. 66, to the same Theophilus, probably president of Achaia, and at Corinth, the capital city of that province, and the residence of his predecessor Gallio, Acts xviii. 12.

The early fathers, Clemens Romanus, Polycarp, Irenæus, Origen, Eusebius, &c. all agree in ascribing this work to him. Its authenticity, therefore, is unquestionable, both from the external and internal evidence, Acts i. 1.

The design of the book appears from its divisions. The first states the rise and progress of the mother Church at Jerusalem, from the time of OUR LORD'S ascension to the first Jewish persecution, A.D. 34, chap. i.—viii.

The second relates the dispersion of the disciples, (all but the Apostles,) in consequence of this persecution. Their planting the Gospel in Judea and Samaría, and probably in Ethiopia; the miraculous conversion of Saul; the miraculous conversion of Cornelius, the first fruits of the home Gentiles; and the foundation of the first Gentile Church at Antioch, in Syria, until the second Jewish persecution, A.D. 44, chap. viii.—xii.

The third relates the conversion of the remoter Gentiles, and the planting of their several Churches in Asia Minor or Natolia, Macedonia, Greece, Illyricum, &c. by the supernumerary Apostles Barnabas and Paul; and, after their separation, by Paul and his associates, among whom was Luke himself during the latter part of Paul's travels, until his first visit to Rome; ending with his liberation there, A.D. 63, chap. xiii.—xxviii.

The Epistles form a most excellent commentary, both on the Gospels and the Acts. They help to unfold the grand mysteries and leading doctrines of THE GOSPEL, as we have already seen in the foregoing articles of THE SPIRIT OF THE GOSPEL, &c. and they continue the history of the Church beyond the period of the Acts; while OUR LORD'S prophecies in the Gospels, and those of his Apostles, Peter, Paul, and John in the Epistles, pursue the general outline of its history, militant and triumphant, to the end of the world.

Such being the high importance of the Epistles in general, we shall enquire into their authenticity, design, order, time, and plan of composition, style, inspiration, and credibility. And this enquiry is rendered more necessary, by the mischievous industry of many ancient and modern Heretics and Sceptics labouring to impeach their canonical authority, and by the real difficulties of adjusting their chronology, occasioned, 1. By the want of formal references in the Epistles and Acts to each other ; 2. By reason of the few distinguishing characters of time, thinly and incidentally scattered through both ; insomuch that 3. Even the fundamental dates of Paul's conversion, his first voyage to Rome, and his martyrdom, are undecided among chronologers and critics hitherto, even the most eminent : Usher, Lloyd, Peta-vius, Pearson, Wells, Whitby, Barrington, Benson, Lardner, Paley, Michaelis, &c. &c. Quot homines, tot sententiæ ; furnishing a choice of difficulties to Biblical students, and of objections to Sceptics.

THE EPISTLES OF PAUL.

These, in the canon, are not ranged in chronological order, but according to the rank and importance of the several Churches to which they were addressed, the Romans, Corinthians, &c. then follow the private Epistles to Timothy, Titus, &c. and lastly, the Epistle to the Hebrews, or converted Jews of Pales-tine, probably because it is anonymous.

Paul's Epistles, in former times, were rejected by the Juda-izing Christians, the Ebionites, who called him an Apostate from THE LAW. Lardner, Vol. VII. p. 20.

And treading in their steps, (if we recollect right,) some lead-ing writers of the Unitarian school, Evanson, &c. have ques-tioned their genuineness ; but there are none whose canonical authority is better ascertained, both by external, or historical, and by internal evidence, than his inimitable writings (in the strictest sense of the word), which it would be impossible to forge, or counterfeit.

THE EPISTLE TO THE GALATIANS.

This may rank among the earliest of Paul's Epistles. It was reckoned the first by the primitive heretic, Marcion, (whose heresy does not invalidate his testimony as to a matter of fact,) and also by his opponent, Tertullian.

The Galatians were originally a tribe of Gauls, who had in-vaded Greece, and afterwards settled in the upper, or northern part of Asia Minor. They were among the Apostle's earliest converts, and had been converted probably during his ministry at Antioch, for a whole year, Acts xi. 26, Gal. i. 6.

This Epistle must have been written soon after their conversion: for he complains in it of their speedy apostacy from his doctrine, Gal. i. 6. And he warns them, in the strongest and most forcible terms, against the Judaizing teachers, with which Syria and Asia then swarmed, who wished to subject the Gentile Churches to circumcision and the yoke of the Law, i. 7—9. And he reproaches them, O foolish Galatians, &c. iii. 1. The warmth of this Epistle, indeed, led Tertullian to conclude that Paul was then a “Neophyte,” or a novice in Christianity himself, Cont. Marcion. I. 20. He thus reproaches them for their Judaizing spirit.

“Formerly, when ye knew not GOD, [in your pagan state,] ye served them, which, by nature, are not Gods, [idols,] and now, after ye have known GOD, (or rather have been known by HIM,) how can ye turn again to those weak and beggarly elements [of the Levitical law] which ye desire to serve again anew? Ye keep days and months, and seasons and years. I fear for you, lest somehow I have laboured as to you in vain,” Gal. iv. 8—11.

By a very ingenious conjecture, Michaelis reckons that these years meant Jewish Sabbatical years; and that the Galatians were then on the point of keeping such a year, by leaving their lands uncultivated, though the Mosaical law designed for the Holy Land certainly did not extend to Galatia. But the year A.D. 49, the year of the first Apostolical council held at Jerusalem, on the question whether the Gentile Church was bound to observe the law of Moses, he suspected was a Sabbatical year, and the same in which the Epistle itself was written. Michaelis' Introduction to New Test. Vol. IV. p. 11. Marsh's Translation.

What Michaelis conjectured, but was not able to establish from the discordant systems of chronology in his time, may be proved by the present. The first year of our Lord's public ministry, A.D. 28, was a Sabbatical year, and also a jubilee. (See note, p. 87.) Therefore, A.D. 49, which was $3 \times 7 = 12$ years after, was also a Sabbatical year.

It is more probable, however, that the Epistle was not written during the Sabbatical year itself in which Paul attended the council at Jerusalem, Gal. ii. 1, but rather the year after, A.D. 50 *, during the Apostle's circuit through the Churches of Syria and Cilicia, to confirm them in the faith, and to communicate to them the Apostolical decree, Acts xvi. 36—41, xvi. 4.

The superscription at the end of this epistle represents it as written from Rome. But this is a mistake, for Paul did not visit Rome till A.D. 62, twelve years after. The superscriptions, indeed, are of no authority, unless so far as they are supported by internal evidence.

THE EPISTLES TO THE THESSALONIANS.

Thessalonica was the capital of one of the four districts into which Macedonia was divided by the Romans, after the conquest of that country. The Jews were extremely numerous here, and their synagogue was called by way of eminence ἡ συναγωγή, "the Synagogue," Acts xvii. 1.

During his first circuit Paul formed a Church here, composed of Jews and Gentiles, of whom the latter were most numerous, Acts xvii. 2—4. But the unbelieving Jews stirred up a persecution against him and his company, and they were forced to fly to Berea, and from thence to Athens, Acts xvii. 5—15. These persecutions prevented the Apostle from visiting them again, as he had intended, 1 Thess. ii. 17, 18; so he sent Silas and Timothy to visit them in his stead, 1 Thess. iii. 6. On their return to him at Corinth, Acts xvii. 14, 15, xviii. 5, he wrote, in conjunction with Silas and Timothy, his two Epistles to them, 1 Thess. i. 1; 2 Thess. i. 1, to correct some errors they entertained respecting the speedy approach of the general judgment, which they expected in that age; and to rectify some misconceptions of the meaning of his first letter.

We may rank the first Epistle next to that to the Galatians, written most probably about A.D. 51; and the second soon after, about the beginning of A.D. 52, with Whitby and Michaelis †.

* Barrington, Benson and Lardner date it.....A.D. 53.
Pearson..... 57.
Bible Chronology 58.

† Pearson, Barrington, Benson, Lardner, date bothA.D. 52.
The Bible Chronology 54.

THE EPISTLE TO TITUS.

Titus was a Greek, and one of Paul's early converts, who attended him and Barnabas to the first council of Jerusalem, A.D. 49, and afterwards on his ensuing circuit, Gal. ii. 1—3; Acts xv. 2.

During Paul's stay at Corinth for a year and a half, the first time about A.D. 51 and A.D. 52, it is most likely that he made a voyage to the island of Crete, in order to preach the Gospel there, and took with him Titus as an assistant, whom he left behind him to regulate the concerns of that Church, Tit. i. 5. Shortly after his return, probably to Corinth, he wrote this letter of instructions to Titus how to conduct himself in his episcopal office, with directions to come back to him at Nicopolis, where he meant to winter, Tit. iii. 12. The superscription supposes that this was "Nicopolis, a city of Macedonia;" and Michaelis has shewn that there were several of the name both in Asia and Europe; but it was more probably the city of that name in the neighbourhood of Corinth, built by Augustus, in Epirus, near the promontory of Actium, in honour of his victory over Anthony and Cleopatra.

The Acts of the Apostles are totally silent respecting Titus and this voyage to Crete. Whence we may collect with Michaelis that it took place in the early part of Paul's ministry, which is very briefly noticed in the Acts. This is much more probable than the later period assigned by Lardner *, namely, during Paul's second visit to Greece; or the latest, by Paley, (following the Bible Chronology,) during Paul's third visit, between the time of his leaving Rome the first time until his return and martyrdom there. For the second circuit is described so

* Lardner, as usual, states his opinion with diffidence. "It appears to me very probable, that at this time Paul was in Illyricum and Crete. But I cannot digest the order of his journeys, since St. Luke has not related them," vi. p. 287. And Michaelis has well described the gradual change of his own opinion from the received, till the last, in which he rested.

"In the first edition of the Introduction I described the Epistle to Titus, as written after St. Paul's imprisonment at Rome. In the second edition I wavered in this opinion. When I published the third edition, I thought it highly probable that the epistle was written long before St. Paul's voyage as a prisoner to Italy, [when he only touched at Crete, and the Centurion rejected his advice of wintering there, Acts xxvii. 7—21,] and at present [in the fourth edition, 1780.] I have no doubt that this Epistle was written long before St. Paul's voyage as a prisoner to Italy," iv. p. 32. Marsh's Translation.

particularly in the Acts, that there does not seem to be time or place for this voyage and wintering at Nicopolis; and still less in the last circuit, as we may collect from the incidental account of it in the second Epistle to Timothy, written by Paul during his second imprisonment at Rome, shortly before his death,*.

* Paley, in his admired Horæ Paulinæ, gives the following “hypothetic route,” as he terms it, of the Apostle’s last journey.

“If we may be allowed to suppose that St. Paul, after his liberation at Rome, sailed into Asia, taking Crete in his way; and that from Asia, and from Ephesus, the capital of that country, he proceeded into Macedonia; and crossing this peninsula in his progress, came into the neighbourhood of Nicopolis; we have a route which falls in with every thing. It executes the intention expressed by the Apostle of visiting Colosse, (Philemon, ver. 22.) and Philippi, (Phil. ii. 24,) as soon as he should be set at liberty at Rome. It allows him to leave ‘Titus at Crete,’ (Tit. i. 5,) and ‘Timothy at Ephesus, as he went into Macedonia,’ (1 Tim. i. 3;) and to write to both not long after from the peninsula of Greece, and probably the neighbourhood of Nicopolis: thus bringing together the dates of these two letters, and thereby accounting for that affinity between them both in subject and language, which our remarks have pointed at,” p. 366, 367.

It is really a pity that so simple and consistent an hypothesis throughout, “including a great number of independent circumstances without contradiction,” should be destitute of solid foundation.

The second Epistle to Timothy, (which Paley acknowledges was written during Paul’s second imprisonment,) in the last chapter, completely overturns his hypothesis.

1. There is no notice taken therein of any voyage by sea to Asia. But not to rest on this negative argument, let us trace the actual route through Corinth, Troas and Miletus, and probably through Colosse and Philippi.

2. Titus could not then be left in Crete, for he was actually in Dalmatia, near Illyricum, ver. 10.

3. Timothy was not left at Ephesus, because the Apostle did not visit Ephesus; he sailed by it on his last journey to Jerusalem, Acts xx. 16, though he stopped at Miletus, in its neighbourhood, and there told the Presbyters of Ephesus, whom he sent for, that they should see his face no more, which afflicted them with great grief, Acts xx. 17—38. Paley supposes that the Apostle said this rather “despondingly,” than “by the Spirit,” p. 326. But we can see good reason for the contrary; for what inducement could he have to revisit a city where he had been already so ill treated and persecuted, only to provoke fresh persecution? When he was forced to quit Ephesus in the uproar raised by the shrine makers of Diana, Acts xix. 23—40, he seems to have taken a final farewell of the disciples there, (ασπασαμενος,) Acts xx. 1.

Paul, it is true, left Trophimus sick at Miletus, the last time, ver. 20. But why should he communicate this intelligence, if Timothy was now at Ephesus, in that neighbourhood? especially as Trophimus himself was an Ephesian, Acts xxi. 29, and must have had intercourse with his friends there. But Timothy was not at Ephesus, he was rather in the northern part of Asia, in Pontus perhaps, with Aquila and Priscilla, ver. 11, who were of that country, Acts xviii. 21. And from Pontus, Timothy’s route to Corinth, where Paul left Erastus, ver. 20, lay directly through Troas, whence he was commissioned to bring with him the letter case or trunk, the books, and especially the parchments which the Apostle had left behind him there, ver. 13.

4. Nicopolis, near Actium, was quite out of the route to Rome from Corinth; therefore the Apostle did not visit it, and certainly had not time to winter there on his last journey.

Hence, there is no date so controverted as that of this Epistle, according to the different hypotheses of Paul's voyage to Crete. Michaelis reckons, that "in the chronological arrangement of St. Paul's Epistles it should be placed between the second Epistle to the Thessalonians (A.D. 52,) and the first Epistle to the Corinthians (A.D. 57.) Accordingly it is here dated about the autumn of A.D. 52: supposing that Paul adhered to his intention of wintering that year at Nicopolis, whence he might have visited the regions of Epirus, Dalmatia, &c. bordering on Illyricum, which he notices Rom. xv. 19.

They are unnoticed in the Acts, and may, therefore, best be assigned to this early part of Paul's ministry, where there is full room for them.

Lardner dates this Epistle A.D. 56; Barrington A.D. 57; Whitby, Pearson, Paley, and the Bible Chronology, A.D. 65.

THE EPISTLES TO THE CORINTHIANS.

During his first visit to Corinth, the capital city of Achaia, or of the ancient Greece, the Apostle had founded Churches there, and at Cenchrea, in its neighbourhood; the Lord having promised him much success, Acts xviii. 1—11. But after his departure, sects or factions sprung up, headed by Judaizing teachers and false Apostles, who undervalued Paul's authority; they tolerated the incestuous marriage of a man with his father's wife, or his step-mother; various irregularities and disorders crept in, both in their mode of preaching, and celebrating the Lord's Supper, and the philosophizing Greeks openly denied the doctrine of the corporeal resurrection of the dead.

To support his apostolical authority, to correct these abuses, and to restore the genuine doctrine of the resurrection, the first

5. The resemblance between the Epistles to Titus and Timothy, which Paley, indeed, has ingeniously and skilfully traced, does not require that they should be written about the same time. It may naturally be ascribed to the sameness of their situations and circumstances, in the discharge of their respective episcopal functions.

From this review, it clearly appears, that no chronological hypothesis, however plausible or ingenious, is to be admitted merely on the score of its simplicity and consistency throughout, upon which Dr. Paley rested the validity of this; unless it be moreover "true," or well founded, and "sufficient" for explaining all the circumstances connected therewith, not only before, but after. His failure in this instance, (which should not have been noticed, were it not necessary to remove from error the sanction of his name or authority,) may serve to illustrate the necessity of the rules of chronologizing, laid down early in this work, as the basis of the whole, Vol. I. p. 265.

Epistle was written; in which he threatened them soon with an apostolical visit, and rod of correction, especially for the incestuous offender, by delivering him up to Satan, for the mortifica- tion of his flesh, that the spirit might be saved in the day of THE LORD, 1 Cor. iv. 19—21, v. 1—5.

But he purposely postponed his visit, and sent Timothy at first, to instruct them in the Gospel; hoping that they would repent and reform their ways, as he afterwards, in his second Epistle, explained the kind motive of his delay, that he might not visit them in grief and anger; and also for trial or proof of their obedience to his mandatory Epistle, 1 Cor. iv. 17, 2 Cor. ii.
1—4, ii. 9.

Impatient to learn the result, he afterwards sent Titus to them, with directions to bring him word at Troas, but was disappointed of finding him there, 2 Cor. ii. 12. Titus afterwards joined him in Macedonia, and brought a favourable report of their penitence and submission to his authority; which the Apostle relates with delight, in the most lively and affecting terms of Christian oratory, 2 Cor. vii. 6—13, in which, indeed, these beautiful and animated Epistles abound.

The first Epistle was written from Ephesus, in Asia, 1 Cor.
xvi. 8—19, soon after he had sent Timothy to them, 1 Cor.
iv. 17. It was designed as a circular letter, not only for the Church of Corinth, but for all the Christians throughout Achaia, 1 Cor. i. 1, 2, &c. 2 Cor. i. 1; we are, therefore, warranted to date it about A.D. 57, with Pearson, Whitby, Benson, and Michaelis.

The superscription of this Epistle, therefore, is erroneous, which represents it as sent by Timothy and others, from Philippi, a city of Macedonia.

The second Epistle was written after the uproar at Ephesus, Acts xix. 23—40, alluded to by the Apostle, 2 Cor. i. 8; and during the Apostle's second visit to Greece, Acts xx. 2, about a year after the first, in A.D. 58. Of this it furnishes internal evidence; for the public contributions for the poor of the Mother Church in Jerusalem, which, by desire of the Apostles, he was then soliciting in Macedonia, to excite their emulation, and quicken their proceedings, he says, had been already raised the year before in Achaia, Gal. ii. 10; 1 Cor. xvi. 2; 2 Cor. ix.
1—4.

The supposition, therefore, is probable, that it was written from "Philippi, a city of Macedonia," but not carried by "Titus," who had returned from them before the Epistle was written, 2 Cor. vii. 6, 7, viii. 16: it might have been by Luke, "the brother whose praise is in the Gospel," who was sent along with Titus, 2 Cor. viii. 18, but whose return is not noticed.

A considerable chronological difficulty occurs in two passages, 2 Cor. xii. 14, xiii. 1, 2, in which the Apostle mentions his intention of visiting Corinth "a third time;" whereas, only one visit, before the date of this Epistle, is noticed in the Acts, as we have seen, xviii. 1, about A.D. 51; and the next time that he visited Greece, Acts xx. 2, about A.D. 57, no mention is made of his going to Corinth. And, indeed, for the reasons already given, he purposely avoided that city. It has been conjectured by Hammond, Grotius, and Paley, that his first Epistle, virtually supplied the place of his presence, and that it is so represented by the Apostle in a corresponding passage also, 1 Cor. v. 3. It may be so: but the solution seems rather far-fetched, and is not satisfactory as a matter of fact. Michaelis has produced another, that is much more simple and natural; that Paul, on his return from Crete, visited Corinth, a second time, before he went to winter at Nicopolis. This second visit is unnoticed in the Acts, because the voyage itself to Crete is unnoticed, Michaelis, IV. p. 37. The third visit here promised was actually paid on the Apostle's second return to Rome, when he took Corinth in his way, 2 Tim. iv. 20. Thus critically does the book of the Acts harmonize, even in its omissions, with the Epistles, and they with each other, in this minute incidental circumstance of the third visit.

FIRST EPISTLE TO TIMOTHY.

After Timothy had discharged his commission at Corinth, as we have seen, 1 Cor. iv. 17, he returned to the Apostle at Ephesus, and joined him in the second Epistle to the Corinthians from thence, 2 Cor. i. 1. He was there also with Paul, at the time of the uproar raised by the shrine makers of Diana. And when the Apostle quitted that city, thereupon, in order to go into Macedonia, Acts xx. 1, Timothy, and others, attended him to the confines of Asia, as far as Troas, Acts xx. 4, 5. And then the Apostle sent him back to stay at Ephesus, and wrote to him to maintain the genuine doctrine of the GOSPEL against the Judaizing zealots and Heathen philosophers, and their various errors, 1 Tim. i. 3, vi. 3—5; and gave him instructions for the due discharge of his episcopal functions, 1 Tim. iii. 1, &c. similar to those to Titus in Crete, and more particular, as he was younger, 1 Tim. iv. 12.

We may date this Epistle A.D. 58, the same year as the foregoing, and rather after it, if we may judge from his being with Paul, when the second Epistle to the Corinthians was written, 2 Cor. i. 1.

The superscription from Laodicea, the metropolis of Phrygia, is evidently erroneous.

THE EPISTLE TO THE ROMANS.

The design of this abstruse Epistle seems to be nearly the same as of that to the Galatians. Judaizing teachers equally abounded at Rome, and were zealous for the law of Moses; while the Roman philosophers, (as we may judge from Cicero,) equally contended for the perfection and sufficiency of the law of Nature. To correct their respective errors, without offence, and to reform their lives, was the difficult and delicate task of the Apostle; especially as he had never personally visited Rome as yet. But he appears to have had some relations, and many friends among them, from his salutations at the close.

1. To prove the insufficiency of both these boasted laws, he gives a frightful catalogue of the vices of the age, and thence concludes all under sin, or liable to its punishment, both Jews and Gentiles, i. 16—iii. 19.

2. He teaches the doctrine of justification by faith in CHRIST alone, without works, either of the law of Moses or the law of Nature, through the free grace of GOD, iii. 20—v. 1.

3. He discloses the mysterious doctrines of the present rejection of the Jews, the adoption of the Gentiles in their room, the vengeance to be inflicted upon the oppressors of the Jews, and upon apostate Christians; and the final restoration and conversion of the remnant of both, Rom. x. 19—xi. 36.

4. He subjoins a practical exhortation to obedience to GOD, to the ruling powers in being; to brotherly love, and to abstinence from the ruling vices of the age, xii. 1, xv. 33.

5. In the salutations he commends particularly those who were patterns to the Church; and warns them against Schis- matics and Heretics, whose society was to be avoided, xvi. 3—23.

As Timothy was with the Apostle, and joined in the greeting, xvi. 21, we may date this Epistle later than the foregoing, after they had met again, about the end of A.D. 58*, or beginning of A.D. 59, when the Apostle was returning to Asia, in order to take the contributions from Achaia and Macedonia to Jerusalem, Rom. xv. 25, 26. It was sent from Cenchrea probably, and by Phœbe the deaconess, xvi. 1.

II. The remaining Epistles were written during the Apostle's confinement at Rome; their chronology, therefore, is more easily ascertained and adjusted. Being composed with more leisure, longer experience, and increasing illumination, as the time of his decease, or departure to CHRIST, for which he so ardently "longed," drew nigher, they shine with a clearer, brighter, and steadier flame; and are more uniformly sublime and beautiful in subject, sentiment, and language, than the preceding; which, however, are interspersed with many splendid passages, especially those addressed to the Romans, Corinthians, and Timothy.

THE EPISTLE TO THE EPHESIANS.

This was probably written in the second year of his confinement, A.D. 63 †.

Like the Epistles to the Corinthians, designed for the general use of the Christians in Achaia, as we have seen; this to the Ephesians seems to have been designed for that district of Asia, of which Ephesus was the capital, "for the saints at Ephesus, and the faithful in CHRIST JESUS," i. 1, which may also be inferred from the omission of salutations to individuals, at the conclusion, as in the Epistles addressed to particular Churches, as Rome, Colosse, &c.

Ephesus was Satan's chief seat in Asia, on account of the celebrity of Diana's temple there; as Corinth in Europe; and it is remarkable, that in none of his Epistles, are Satan, and his

* Barrington, Lardner, and Michaelis, date it A.D. 58.
Pearson and Whitby 57.
Bible Chronology 60.

† Barrington, Lardner, and Michaelis, date it A.D. 61.
The Bible Chronology 64.

emissaries, "false apostles," "his methodisms of error," or new modelling and perversion of HOLY WRIT, and the "divine panoply," or celestial armour, defensive and offensive, necessary in our Christian warfare, more clearly and distinctly noticed and recommended, than in these two Epistles.

THE EPISTLE TO THE COLOSSIANS.

This is the epitome of the former. The intimate resemblance between them, in sentiment and expression, has been judiciously traced by Paley, in his Horæ Paulinæ, the most ingenious, perhaps, of all his compositions.

Hence it has been conjectured by Michaelis and others, that the longer and more circumstantial Epistle to the Ephesians, was that which was sent or communicated to the Church of Laodicea, in that neighbourhood; and which the Apostle recommended to the perusal of the Church at Colosse, in Phrygia. "When this Epistle is read by you, take care that it be read in the Church of the Laodiceans; and that ye read also that from Laodicea," Col. iv. 16.

The leading doctrine of both Epistles, is the future union of Jews and Gentiles under the Christian dispensation. Compare those admirable passages, Eph. iii. 14—21, and Col. i. 16—23, ii. 6, 7.

Both Epistles were written at the same time, and sent by the same messenger, Tychicus, as noticed in their superscriptions, and may be dated in the same year, A.D. 63.

THE EPISTLE TO PHILEMON.

Philemon was a respectable inhabitant of Colosse, a deacon of the Church, whom Paul therefore styles his "fellow-labourer," i. 1. His servant, Onesimus, a native also of Colosse, Col. iv. 9, had robbed his master, and fled to Rome, where the Apostle met, and converted him, and now sent him back to his master with Tychicus, Col. iv. 7—9, and gave him this letter of intercession, entreating Philemon to be reconciled to him, and receive him again into favour, both upon his own, and Paul's account.

The tenderness and delicacy of this familiar letter, have long been admired by the learned, and must indeed be felt by every reader of taste, even in the translation, which is much beneath the original. As a classical model of epistolary composition, it stands unrivalled. Horace's letter to Tiberius Nero, recommending Septimius for admission to his household, though celebrated, is greatly inferior in sentiment. Epist. i. 9.

This Epistle is to be dated in the same year, A.D. 63, or rather beginning of A.D. 64.

THE EPISTLE TO THE PHILIPPIANS.

Of all the Epistles, this perhaps is the most interesting. It was written, con amore, to his favourite Church at Philippi, the chief city of the first district of Macedonia, and a Roman colony, Acts xvi. 12, which he had founded with much tribulation, and suffering, and persecution, as related in the history, during his first circuit through Macedonia and Achaia, Acts xvi. 14—40, and his friends there, Lydia, the jailor, &c. sincerely sympathized with him, and also shared in his sufferings and persecutions, as he reminds them, i. 29, 30.

Of all the Churches, this of Philippi, though rather “a poor community,” (as he told the rich and opulent Church of Corinth, 2 Cor. viii. 1, 2,) was the only one which contributed to the Apostle's support. Not only when he was present with them, but even in his absence, their contributions followed him, from the beginning to the end of his mission, i. 5—7, iv. 15—17; and the immediate occasion of this Epistle, was to thank them for their generous supply, sent to him by Epaphroditus, in his bonds at Rome; which had been delayed, or intermitted, for some time before, during his imprisonment at Cæsarea, and voyage to Rome, probably for want of opportunity. In this kind service, Epaphroditus had incurred a “sickness near to death,” whom therefore the Apostle sent home, because he longed to return, in order to relieve, by his presence, the anxiety of his friends upon his account, ii. 25—30. And in this letter by him, the Apostle addresses the whole community, “the saints in CHRIST JESUS, the Bishops and Deacons,” whose joint bounty he had received, i. 1, in the fondest terms of affection and tenderness.—“My brethren, beloved and desired; my joy, and my crown [of glory,] who jointly laboured with me, whose names are entered in the book of life,” iv. 1—3.

In this fine Epistle, he exhorts them to concord and co-operation in the work of the Gospel, from the highest of all examples; to imitate the lowly mindedness of JESUS CHRIST, who condescended so low, and who suffered so much for our sakes, “exhausting himself of his original glory” in heaven, to suffer death upon a cross on earth! in the most pathetic, most sublime, and most luminous passage, unquestionably, to be found in all his Epistles, i. 27, ii. 11; the beauties of which, no translation can equal, and even the best can but faintly represent.

2. He warns them to beware of Judaizing teachers, “who preached CHRIST through envy and strife ;” to beware of the dogs, (who barked against the GOSPEL, Matt. vii. 6,) to beware of bad workmen, [or deceitful labourers,] to beware of the circumcision, [or spurious circumcision,] i. 15, iii. 2.

This Epistle was probably written not long before he was liberated at Rome, for “he trusted in THE LORD to come to them shortly,” ii. 24. We are warranted, therefore, to date it about the end of A.D. 63; with Pearson, Whitby, Barrington, Benson, and Lardner, or rather, the beginning of A.D. 64, with Michaelis and the Bible Chronology.

THE EPISTLE TO THE HEBREWS.

This was the last of all the public Epistles, and the most highly wrought in composition and polished in language, affording a finished model of didactic writing. It is a masterly supplement to the Epistles to the Galatians and to the Romans, which are so obscure and involved; and also a luminous commentary thereon; shewing that the LEGAL dispensation was originally designed to be superseded by the new and better covenant of the CHRISTIAN, in a connected chain of argument, evincing the profoundest knowledge of both. This work, indeed, has extorted the admiration of the most learned Rabbins, as worthy of a pupil of Gamaliel.

It was addressed to the Hebrew, or Jewish converts, of Palestine, to keep them stedfast in the faith, that they might not swerve, under the persecutions they had already incurred from their unbelieving brethren; and the still heavier, they were to expect in the impending Jewish war, and destruction of Jerusalem, and desolation of Judea, by the Romans, ii. 1, x. 32—37, xii. 4—29, xiii. 14, and it concludes, like the rest, with a practical exhortation to cultivate brotherly love, to avoid covetousness, to beware of diverse and strange doctrines, or heresies; to do good, &c. peculiarly applicable to the Jewish nation, chap. xiii.

From the omission of Paul's name and apostolical functions, throughout the Epistle, which is anonymous, and not directed from any place, nor sent by any special messenger, some commentators have doubted its authenticity. But these omissions are satisfactorily accounted for by Clemens Alexandrinus and Jerom, intimating that as JESUS CHRIST himself was the peculiar APOSTLE TO THE HEBREWS, (as acknowledged in this Epistle, iii. 1,) Paul declined, through humility, to assume the title of an Apostle. See Lardner, II. 211, VI. 411, 412. To which, Theodoret adds, that Paul, being peculiarly the Apostle of the uncircumcision, as the rest were of the circumcision, (Gal. ii. 9, Rom. xi. 13.) he scrupled to assume any public character when writing to their department; that he might not be thought forward or obtrusive, as if wishing “to build upon another’s foundation,” which he always disclaimed, Rom. xv. 20, ibid. p. 412.

He did not mention his name, messenger, or particular persons to whom it was sent, because, as Lardner judiciously remarks, such a long letter might give umbrage to the ruling powers, at this crisis, when the Jews were most turbulent, and might endanger himself, the messenger, and those to whom it was directed. But they might know the author easily, by the style and writing, and also from the messenger, without any formal notice or superscription.

That the Apostle, however, did not mean to conceal himself, we learn from the Epistle itself: “Know ye, that our brother Timothy hath been sent abroad; with whom, if he come shortly, I will see you. Salute all your leaders, and all the saints [in Judea *.] Those of Italy salute you. Grace be with you all. Amen,” Heb. xiii. 23—25.

Instead of the received translation, “set at liberty,” Mills and Lardner judiciously render ἀπολευμενον, “sent abroad,” (as above,) namely, by the Apostle, confirmed by the comment of Euthalius, ἀελευσεν εις διακονιαν Τιμοθεον—Παυλος. “Paul sent Timothy abroad, on a ministry.” And we may collect from the Epistle to the Philippians, that Timothy was now actually at Philippi, because he did intend to send Timothy thither to enquire about their concerns, Phil. ii. 19, whose speedy return the Apostle expected, Heb. xiii. 23. This decides, that the Epistle to the Hebrews was later than that to the Philippians.

* Michaelis thinks it highly improbable, that Paul would visit Jerusalem again, and expose his life to the Zealots there. But surely he might revisit Judea, without incurring that danger.

The beginning of the year A.D. 64, in which it was written, appears to be determined by another incidental circumstance. It is remarkable, that the Apostle thrice recommends their leaders to their imitation and respect, ver. 7, 17, 24, and in the plural number, (ἡγουμενοι.) Hence it should seem, that the Apostle James, the LORD'S brother, and first Bishop of Jerusalem, had been previously put to death, in the persecution raised by Ananus, the high priest, and Jewish council, in the interregnum, between the death of Festus and the arrival of his successor, Albinus, as related by the Jewish historian, Josephus, and adopted by the early Christians, Hegesippus, Eusebius, Origen, Jerom, &c. See Lardner VI. p. 480.

II. The learned Michaelis, to whom we have been hitherto so much indebted in the course of this critical discussion, has strangely turned recreant on this occasion, and in an elaborate dissertation, Vol. IV. p. 186—268, endeavoured to set aside the authenticity of this Epistle, by the following positions.

1. That its style is so very different from that of St. Paul in his genuine Epistles, that he could not possibly have been the author of this Greek Epistle, p. 252.

2. That it was originally written in Hebrew, but whether by St. Paul, or not, is doubtful, p. 257.

3. That it was early translated into Greek, but by whom is unknown, p. 247.

An hypothesis, at once so dogmatical and sceptical, calculated to pull down, not to build up, or edify; to unsettle the faith of wavering Christians, and to rob this most learned and most highly illuminated Apostle, of his right and title to the noblest and most finished of all his compositions; and this too, upon the paradoxical plea of its acknowledged excellence, both of style and subject, (which none assents to more cheerfully than Michaelis, p. 242, 243, 247,) imperiously demands our consideration*. Fortunately, this copious writer has furnished materials in abundance for his own refutation; from which we shall select a few.

* See Owen, Whitby, Wetstein, and Lardner, who have ably vindicated the originality of the present Epistle, as written in Greek, the universal language of the age, like all the other Gospels and Epistles of the NEW TESTAMENT; and its authenticity proved from the internal evidence in my Dissertations, p. 38, &c. 287, &c.

1. Objections drawn from dissimilarity of style, are often fanciful and fallacious; as we have seen already in the remarkable attestation of Josephus to CHRIST, this Vol. p. 276. On the contrary, a striking analogy may be traced between this and the rest of Paul's Epistles, in the use of singular and remarkable words and compound terms; in the mode of constructing the sentences, by long and involved parentheses, &c. with this difference however, that this being more leisurely written, and better digested in his confinement, is more compressed in its argument, and more polished in its style than the rest, which were written with all the ease and freedom of epistolary correspondence, often in haste, and on the spur of the occasion, during his travels.

The following remarkable instances of analogy, we owe to Michaelis.

“ Ch. x. 33. θεατριζόμενοι is an expression perfectly agreeable to St. Paul's mode of writing: as appears from 1 Cor. iv. 8.
But since other writers may likewise have used the same metaphor, the application of it in the present instance, shews only that St. Paul might have written the Epistle to the Hebrews, not that he really did write it,” p. 256.

But there is a propriety in its use here, that fits no other writer but St. Paul; and this, by Michaelis's own confession.
It is here applied to the Apostle's public persecutions: “ exposed on a theatre to public revilings and afflictions,” exactly corresponding to his complaint to the Corinthians, in the parallel text, θεατρον εγεννηθημεν τω κοσμω, “ We were made a theatre to the world ;” and how? the same Epistle will inform us afterwards; “ after the [barbarous] custom of men, I fought with wild beasts at Ephesus,” in the public theatre, 1 Cor. xv.
32, literally, not figuratively; if the remark of Benson be true, supported by Michaelis himself, who assures us, that Paul's “ deliverance from the Lion's mouth” at Rome, afterwards, 2 Tim. iv. 17, was “ not from suffering death by the sword, but from being exposed in the amphitheatre to wild beasts, as several Christians had already been, and in a very cruel manner,” for which he refers to Tacitus, Annal. XV. 44, in his note,
p. 176.

“ Ch. x. 30. Εμοι εκδικησις, Εγω ανταποδωσω, is a quotation from Deut. xxxii. 35, which differs both from the Hebrew text, and from the Septuagint: and this passage is again quoted in the very same words, Rom. xii. 19.——This agreement in a reading which has hitherto been discovered in no other place, (see the New Orient. Bibl. Vol. V. p. 231—236,) might form a presumptive argument, that both quotations were made by the same person; and consequently, that the Epistle to the Hebrews was written by St. Paul. But the argument is not decisive: for it is very possible, that in the first century, there were manuscripts with this reading in Deut. xxxii. 35, from which St. Paul might have copied, in Rom. xii. 19, and the translator of this Epistle in Heb. x. 38,” same page, 256.

A more decided instance of scepticism, is rarely to be found. To any other, the “presumptive argument” would appear irresistible, not to be overturned by a bare possibility, but a very high improbability; since this remarkable rendering is to be found in “no other place,” but in these two passages, as he himself acknowledges. The present Septuagint reading, εὐ ἡμέρα ἐκδικήσεως ἀνταποδώσω, “In the day of vengeance, I will repay,” is found in both texts, the Vatican and Alexandrine, and therefore bids fair to have been the original reading of the first century. The Apostle’s rendering, in both places, is more correct and critical than the Septuagint, in the first clause, εὐ ἡμέρα ἐκδικήσεως, which is only a paraphrase, not a translation, like his ἐμοὶ ἐκδικήσεις, of the Hebrew, לִי נָקָם, and in the second, the joint rendering, ἀνταποδώσω, is founded on a various reading, אָשַׁלְם, supported by a parallel verse, Deut. xxxii. 41, and followed, not only by the Sept. but by the Syriac, Vulgate, and Chaldee. It is, therefore, greatly superior to the present Masorete, וְשָׁלַם, “and recompence,” supported only by the Arabic version, and followed by the English Bible, evidently for the worse. And the Apostle has further improved upon the Septuagint, in the common term, ἀνταποδώσω, by the emphatic prefix Ἐγὼ, which makes it stronger, as appropriated to the ALMIGHTY, than even the original Hebrew, which wants the personal pronoun.

2. Michaelis asks, “Why did the author of the Syriac version translate this Epistle from the Greek, if the original was in Hebrew * ?” p. 231.

* The hypothesis of the Hebrew original, was first broached by Clemens Alexandrinus, according to Eusebius. But Michaelis himself admits, that this Father did not pretend to assert it as a fact, but only to obviate the objection drawn from the difference of style,

The Syriac version was the earliest of all, written in the apostolic age, and in the days of the Apostle Adæus, Thaddæus, or Jude, according to the judicious Abulfaragi; and near the end of the first century, according to Michaelis, Vol. II. p. 30. If then, this most ancient version was translated immediately from the Greek, surely the presumption is infinitely strong, that there was then no Hebrew original. This argument, indeed, furnished by himself, seems decisive also to prove the canonical authority of the Greek Epistle, in the judgment of the Syriac translator; for why should he adopt the Epistle, unless written by the Apostle to whom the voice of the Church had assigned it? Surely John or Jude, the Apostles, would not have suffered it otherwise to have been admitted into the sacred Canon, either of the Greek or Syriac Testament.

Assuming it, however, to have been written in Hebrew, Michaelis draws the following objection from a supposed blunder of the translator into Greek, to shew that he could not possibly be St. Paul; which most completely recoils upon himself, and proves irrefragably that the Greek was the original, and written by the Apostle.

“ Ch. xii. 18. ου γαρ προσεληλυθατε ψηλαφωμενω ορει——
——— 22. αλλα προσεληλυθατε Σιων ορει.———

“ Here,” (says he,) “ the expression ορει ψηλαφωμενω, monti palpabili, which is opposed to Σιων ορει, is certainly a very extraordinary one: and I am wholly unable to give a satisfactory account of it, except on the supposition that the Epistle was written in Hebrew. But on this supposition the inaccuracy may be easily assigned. Sinai, or the mountain of Moses, is that which is here opposed to Mount Sion. Now the expression ‘to the mountain of Moses,’ is in Hebrew לְהַר מֹשֶׁה (lehar Mosseh.) This latter word the translator misunderstood; and instead of reading, and taking it for a proper name, he either read, by mistake, מַשֵּׁ, palpatio, or pronounced, by mistake, מַשָּׁה, (Mashah,) palpatio. Hence, instead of rendering, ‘to the mountain of Moses,’ he rendered, ‘to the tangible mountain.’”

But this “mountain of Moses” is a creation of his own brain. For “Sinai in Arabia,” the mountain here meant by the Apostle, p. 245, 246. It was, therefore, of no intrinsic weight, and ought not to have been revived, as being suggested by an unfounded objection.

pursuing his former "allegory," Gal. iv. 24—26, is no where so styled in Scripture, but rather "the mountain of GOD," Exod. iii. 1, &c. "the mountain of THE LORD," Numb. x. 33, or "the Holy mountain," Psalm lxxviii. 17, because it was honoured with the presence of the GOD OF ISRAEL. To call it, therefore, by the name of Moses, or indeed of any mortal, would have been sacrilege.

To what then, did the Apostle refer, in the remarkable term ψηλαφωμενω? Evidently to the divine injunction to the people and their cattle, not to ascend or touch it, beyond the prescribed limits near its foot, under pain of death, Exod. xix. 12—24. Alluding to this awful command, the Apostle beautifully contrasts the terrors of the LAW, delivered on the earthly Sinai, not to be touched under pain of death; with the superabundant grace of THE GOSPEL, promising to the faithful eternal life in the Heavenly Zion: to which, by an admirable anticipation, he represents them as already come, (προσεληλυθατε.)

Michaelis was rather too fond of displaying his oriental learning; and never, surely, was there a more unfortunate specimen than this!

3. He is not less unfortunate in his last position.

He rested this principally on the testimony of Origen; who, according to Eusebius, Hist. Ecclesiast. B. VI. ch. 25, "held that the matter of the Epistle was from St. Paul, but the construction of the words from another, who recorded the thoughts of the Apostle, and made notes, as it were, or commentaries, of what was said by his master," p. 246.

— "Having delivered his own opinion, Origen adds: ει τις ουν εκκλησια εχει ταυτην την επιστολην ως Παυλου, αυτη ευδοκιμειτω και επι τουτω, ου γαρ εικη οι αρχαιοι ανδρες ως Παυλου παραδεδωκασι. Τις δε ο γραφας την επιστολην, το μεν αληθες Θεος οιδεν. Η δε εις ημας φθασασα ιστορια, υπο τινων λεγοντων μεν οτι Κλημησ, ο γενομενος επισκοπος Ρωμαιων, εγραψε την επιστολην υπο τινων δε, οτι Δουκας, ο γραφας το ευαγγελιον και τας πραξεις."

The following is a literal translation of this, (which Michaelis ought not to have omitted.)

"If then, any Church [or, whatsoever Church,] holds this Epistle as Paul's, it should be commended, even upon this account; for it was not without reason, the primitive worthies have handed it down as Paul's. But who wrote the Epistle, [in its present form*,] truly God indeed knows. The historical account that has reached us [is various and uncertain,] some saying that Clemens, who was Bishop of Rome, wrote the Epistle, others Luke, who wrote the Gospel, and the Acts," p. 247.

Michaelis here thinks, that by ἱστορία εἰς ἡμᾶς φθασασα, Origen meant "oral accounts;" and he contends, that "neither of these contradictory accounts can be true: for the style of the Epistle to the Hebrews, is neither that of St. Luke, nor that of Clement of Rome: and the latter especially, if we may judge from what is now extant of his works, had it not even in his power to write an Epistle so replete with Jewish learning." p. 247.

What now is the force of Origen's evidence, supposing that his opinion is fairly and fully related by Eusebius, which may be doubted †? Why surely, that Paul was the original author of the Epistle, as confirmed by primitive tradition. The oral account, upon which he founded his conjecture was vague; and Michaelis has satisfactorily shewn, that it could not be true in either case: what then remains by all the rules of right reasoning? Unquestionably, that rejecting the oral account as false, we should embrace the primitive tradition as true. And consequently admit, that no one but the Apostle himself could be the author of an Epistle so replete with Jewish learning, who was educated at the feet of Gamaliel himself, (Acts xxii. 3,) and disputed with the first Jewish Rabbis of the age, in Asia, Greece, and Rome.

By the failure, therefore, of the paradoxical hypothesis of Michaelis, in all its branches, the positive evidence is still further strengthened: we may now rest assured, that the Epistle was written in Greek, not in Hebrew, by St. Paul himself, not by any one else. The celebrity of Michaelis, as a sacred critic, and the deference paid to his authority, especially in Germany, combined with the high Biblical importance of the enquiry, * Origen says nothing of Hebrew; and Paul's usual conversation was in Greek, his mother tongue. We may reckon, therefore, that he rejected the hypothesis of Clemens Alexandrinus, his master.

† Origen, in his writings still extant, expressly and repeatedly attributes this Epistle to St. Paul as the author. See Lardner's testimonies, II. p. 440, 472, 473, who thinks that Origen changed his former opinion with his riper years.

must apologize for this minute discussion of a few leading points of his prolix argument.

The style of this mighty master of Grecian eloquence, like his own magnificent compounds, πολυμερως, πολυτροπως, (Heb. i. 1,) πολυποικιλος, Eph. iii. 10, (which were evidently forged on the same anvil,) is “abundantly variegated and diversified;” animated with all the energy and vehemence and abruptness of Demosthenes; and enriched and adorned with all the amplifications, tropes, and figures of Cicero; while he excelled them both in the sublime, the beautiful, and the pathetic, on account of the greater dignity, importance, and variety of the subjects that engaged his highly furnished, ardent, and versatile mind, making himself all things to all men, if by any means he might win some.

Still it must be confessed, that there is much obscurity in his writings, arising from various sources.

1. Several of his Epistles were answers to questions put to him, on doctrinal or ceremonial points that were then contested between the Jewish and Gentile Churches; we therefore want, in many cases, the key to his arguments, in answer thereto.

2. The abrupt change of person, from Paul to his correspondents, or opponents, without notice given, often occasions perplexity; speaking of them in the first person, and of himself in the third, 2 Cor. xii. 2, &c. Rom. vii. 21—25, &c.

3. The involution of his flowing sentences, including parentheses, and digressions without number, often renders it extremely difficult to follow the thread of his argument*, through the labyrinth of his language. Even Peter complained that he was “hard to be understood,” and James intimated, that he was liable to be misunderstood †.

THE SECOND EPISTLE TO TIMOTHY.

“*I am now ready to be offered up as a libation,
And the season of my dissolution is at hand,*” iv. 6.

From this passage, Eusebius, Jerom, Chrysostom, and the ancient tradition, held, that this was the last of Paul's Epistles,

* See several ingenious and judicious remarks on the peculiarities of Paul's style, in Paley's Horæ Paulinæ, Michaelis, and Gilpin, &c.

† Compare Jam. ii. 24, with Rom. iii. 28.

written not long before his predicted martyrdom ; and this opinion is generally followed by learned moderns.

Whether Paul visited Rome once only, or twice, has been much contested by critics ; at the head of the former class ranks Lardner ; at the head of the latter, Michaelis *. The latter opinion is better founded.

1. In the foregoing Epistles to the Colossians, Philemon, and the Philippians, the Apostle expressed, as we have seen, a confident hope of seeing them soon ; and we learn from the last chapter of this Epistle, that his expectation was realized ; describing his route, shortly before he wrote it, through Corinth, Philippi, Troas, Miletus, and Colosse ; as traced in a foregoing note, on the Epistle to Titus.

2. This route is not to be confounded with that described in the two last chapters of the Acts ; for Paul could neither visit Corinth, Troas, nor Miletus, on his first voyage to Rome, which lay considerably to the north of his course ; as Michaelis has acutely observed, p. 173—175.

3. That the Apostle was now at Rome, and in prison, when he wrote this Epistle, is plain, from i. 8—17, &c. ; therefore he visited Rome a second time, according to the received tradition.

4. His treatment was different both times. During the first visit, he was confined, indeed, according to the Roman usage, until both he and his accusers could be heard together before Cæsar, to whom he had appealed from the provincial tribunal at Cæsarea, as we may judge from the conduct of Felix, Acts xxiii. 35. But he was confined only to his own house, and treated with much indulgence ; probably in consequence of the favourable representations of his case by Festus, xxv. 24—27, and of his exemplary good conduct, and prediction, and miraculous powers, during the voyage, by his friend Julius, the centurion, Acts xxvii. 3—43 ; insomuch, that he made many converts at Rome, and even in Cæsar's household, Phil. i. 13, iv. 22 ; and at the end of two years, when either his accusers had failed to appear, or to substantiate their charges at Cæsar's tribunal,

* Michaelis has here again redeemed his character as a sacred critic. Though not to be implicitly trusted, as we have seen, he is sometimes excellent ; and no where more so than in his remarks on this Epistle ; in which, following a skilful guide, the learned Mosheim, he has ably and fully exposed the mistakes of Lardner and his party.

(before which he seems to have been brought to a hearing, Phil. i. 7,) he was honourably acquitted, and dismissed, Acts xxviii. 30, 31, as he expected, Phil. ii. 24; Philemon 22.

But on the second visit, his former success in proselytizing Cæsar's household, (Phil. iv. 22,) and probably among the rest, the Empress Poppæa * herself, as we may collect from Josephus, who remarkably styles her $\theta\epsilon\omicron\sigma\epsilon\beta\eta\varsigma$, “devout,” or a “proselyte,” and represents her as a friend to the Jews, Ant. XX. 7, 11, Vita. 3, probably gave umbrage to Nero. He was now “imprisoned, as a malefactor,” or a mover of sedition, 2 Tim. ii. 9, perhaps on account of the uproar at Ephesus, which the recorder might have reported to the Emperor, Acts xix. 40, and for which the Apostle was brought to a first hearing before Nero, when “all the Christians of Asia, or Ephesus, then at Rome, deserted him;” and “Alexander the coppersmith did him much harm,” by witnessing against him maliciously; so that he with difficulty was then “saved from the mouth of the lion,” or the cruelty of Nero †, iv. 14—17, i. 15. Sentence, indeed, was not passed at this first hearing, or apology; for, according to the forms of Roman judicature, a nondum liquet was declared, or the cause was put off to a second hearing, and his prosecutors still bound over to prosecute, and perhaps enjoined to procure fuller evi-

* Poppæa Sabina was remarkable for her beauty, and not less for her lust and cruelty, according to Tacitus; whereas Josephus celebrates her for piety, humanity in pleading for his friends the priests, and personal kindness to himself, whom she dismissed with presents.

† In a foregoing note on the Epistle to the Hebrews, we stated the opinion of Michaelis, that this expression was to be understood literally, as according with the description Tacitus gives of the sufferings of the Christians in Nero's persecution, “who were clothed in the skins of wild beasts, and exposed to be torn in pieces by dogs, with the most cruel mockery.” Annal. XV. 44. But the figurative application of the “lion,” to Nero himself, and the most generally received, is preferable. Nero had all the Roman “fierceness of countenance,” as appeared from the description of an impostor that resembled him, given in a foregoing note. Vol. II. p. 212. And his tutor Seneca, who for some time had, by dint of instruction, softened the native cruelty and ferocity of his disposition, used to say, among his intimate friends, non fore sævo illi Leoni, quin gustato semel hominis sanguine, ingenua redeat sævitia, “that surely when once that fierce lion had tasted human blood, his innate cruelty would break out again.” Lipsius Not. Tacit. An. XII. 9. A prediction soon verified by the event. Seneca himself did not long survive Paul, being put to death in the same year, A.D. 65. On that emergency, he thus consoled his weeping friends: “Who can be ignorant of Nero's cruelty? Nothing can be wanting to fill up the measure of it, after the murder of his mother, (Agrippina,) and his brother, (Britannicus,) but the death of his tutor and preceptor!” Annal. XV. 62.

dence. But in the interim, as it seems, “Paul converted Nero’s cup-bearer,” which so provoked the jealous tyrant, that “he cut off” or beheaded the Apostle, as we learn from Chrysostom *.

That the Apostle, indeed, had no further hope of deliverance from his present bonds, is evident from his prediction, iv. 6, and from the sequel: “And THE LORD will deliver me [not from death, but] from every wicked work, [with which I am charged as a malefactor,] and will save me unto his heavenly kingdom. To whom be glory for evermore. Amen,” iv. 18.

Here the Apostle is clearly resigned to his fate.

5. In his disgrace, Paul was deserted by all his acquaintances, and most of his intimates. His Asiatic friends, Phygellus, Hermogenes, &c. forsook him at his first hearing, except Onesiphorus, of whose attentions and kindnesses, both at Ephesus and Rome, he makes honourable mention, i. 15—18, iv. 16; and what was more grievous, of his own disciples, Demas quitted him from worldly motives, and went to Thessalonica, Crescens to Galatia; and even Titus, (who could have expected that!) unto Dalmatia; none remained but the faithful Luke,

————— “ Faithful found Among the faithless; faithful only he.”

The friends who now adhered to him were strangers, unnoticed in his former Epistles, Eubulus, Pudens, Linus, Claudia, &c. who join in the salutation to Timothy. No wonder, then, that he was anxious for the speedy return of his beloved pupil, Timothy, and his old friend Mark, “who was serviceable to him in the ministry,” to bid them farewell, and give them his parting instructions, iv. 9—21.

From Paul’s earnestness to see those two dearest friends, without delay, we may fairly collect, that Nero’s dreadful persecution of the Christians, at Rome, had not yet commenced; for surely if it had, he would not wish to bring them into the lion’s mouth, to inevitable destruction, when the bare confession of Christianity was sufficient for their seizure; according to Tacitus, correpti qui fatebantur. And if this conjecture be well

* Ποιαν δε πρωτην απολογιαν λεγει; παρεστη ηδε τη Νερωνι και διεφυγεν· επειδη δε τον οινοχοον αυτου κατηχησε, τοτε αυτον απετεμεν. Lardner, VI. p. 351. This testimony of Chrysostom carries its own evidence with it, and refutes the perplexed anachronisms of Pearson, respecting this event, which are justly censured by Lardner.

founded, we can determine the date of Paul's martyrdom with considerable precision. For Nero's burning of Rome is placed by Tacitus under the consulate of C. Læcanius and M. Licinius, about the month of July, A.D. 64. This act procured him the hatred and clamours of the people, which having endeavoured several ways to remove and pacify, but in vain, he at last devised the base and wicked expedient of throwing the odium of it upon the Christians. Whom, therefore, to appease the gods, and to please the people, he condemned as guilty of the fact, and caused to be executed with all manner of acute and exquisite tortures. This persecution took place, therefore, in the course of the year A.D. 65, when on June 29th, according to the annals both of the eastern and western Church, noticed by Usher, the Apostle was slain with the sword. Tacit. Annal. XV. 33—34. Usher's Annal. A.D. 67.

Hence we may be morally certain, that this leading date of Paul's martyrdom, could not have been later than A.D. 65*, in the twelfth of Nero, according to Epiphanius, Pagi, and Lardner, VI. p. 300, 301.

An hypothesis similar to that of Doctor Marsh respecting the Gospels, was proposed by Doctor Paley, in his ingenious Horæ Paulinæ; namely, that the Epistles of Paul and the Acts of the Apostles were written without concert on either side, while their undesigned coincidences, and incidental references to each other, mutually attest the truth of the facts as independent vouchers. See pp. 6, 47, 111, 158, 160, 171, 270, 278, 287, 306, &c.

In this work, many curious instances of remote resemblance, and latent coincidence, which have escaped ordinary readers, and even the best commentators, are deduced from minute and critical inspection and comparison of the originals: but the hypothesis itself that they were undesigned, appears to be rather specious than solid, for the following reasons:

1. Paul did not, indeed, consult the Acts, which were not written until after his decease, according to the present chronological adjustment; but it is most highly probable that Luke both saw and consulted Paul's Epistles; because he attended

* Michaelis dates it about A.D. 66.
Usher, Petavius, and Bible Chronology 67.
Pearson, Barrington 68.

him in his travels during the period in which most of them were written; and he remained with the Apostle till his death. And if Paul, as is probable, kept copies of his Epistles, they might naturally be included in those "parchments," he wrote "especially" about to Timothy, and desired him to bring with him, from Troas, iv. 13. These most valuable documents for his history, Luke would be unpardonable to have neglected; a history, which Paul probably commissioned him to write.

2. And that he actually did consult them, we may rather collect from the comparison of both. Even Paley himself concedes, that "the accordancy between both, in many points, is circumstantial and complete," and "the harmony indubitable," p. 297—299. And he also notices a remarkable conformity in the order of the Apostle's persecutions at Antioch, Iconium, and Lystra, as noticed briefly by the Apostle himself, 2 Tim. iii. 11; and more fully by Luke, in the Acts, xiii. 14—50, xiv. 1—19, p. 350—353.

Hence, we may safely conclude, that Luke did actually consult the Epistles; and that he borrowed, varied, or omitted incidents contained therein, at discretion, as best suited his particular plan; and with a thorough knowledge of the whole subject both from his own experience and the information of Paul, as an original and independent Historian: like the succeeding Evangelists, borrowing, varying, or omitting from their predecessors.

THE CATHOLIC EPISTLES.

These are attributed to the Apostles of the circumcision, James, the LORD'S brother or cousin, and first bishop of Jerusalem, and Jude, his brother; and Peter, and John, the Apostles. Like the Epistle to the Hebrews, they seem to have been addressed to the Jewish converts in general, both of Palestine and of the dispersion, to keep them stedfast in the faith, that they might not swerve under their approaching trials, toward the end of the Jewish dispensation; to guard them against Antichrists, or false Christs, and false Apostles or false teachers, which were among the last signs or prognostics of the destruction of Jerusalem; against wars and fightings, which were a further sign of the times, and to exhort them to good works, and the practical duties of the GOSPEL. The style of James,

Peter, and Jude is concise and highly figurative, and has a general resemblance throughout.

THE EPISTLE OF JAMES.

The authenticity of this excellent practical Epistle is supported by the following arguments.

It was translated in the Syriac version made in the Apostolic age, and all along received by the Syrian Church; and acknowledged as canonical by Ephrem Syrus, Eusebius, Chrysostom, Jerom, Theodoret, and in several canons of the Greek and Latin councils. And it is highly rational, and worthy of the president of the Mother Church at Jerusalem. No sober-minded critic therefore can reasonably doubt of its authenticity or canonical authority *.

It was probably written about a year before his death, when the troubles were beginning in Judea, from false teachers, iii. 1; seditions and insurrections, iv. 1; with the benevolent design of vindicating the true faith working by love, and recommending peace and harmony to a distracted world. We may date it, therefore, about A.D. 61, or the beginning of A.D. 62, with Whitby, Lardner, and Michaelis.

THE EPISTLE OF JUDE.

This Epistle was held as genuine by several of the ancient Fathers, Tertullian, Clemens Alexandrinus, Origen, and Epiphanius; and as it coincides in doctrine with the other Catholic Epistles, (see this Vol. note, p. 193,) should be admitted as canonical; especially as there is a marked resemblance between it, vers. 6, and the Epistle of Peter, 1 Pet. iii. 19, 20, 2 Pet. ii. 4, 5, in these abstruse passages, descriptive of the fallen angels, and their punishment; relating most probably to the pious Sethites, who were corrupted by their commerce with the daughters of Cain, and their posterity, who perished in the deluge, (as explained before, Vol. II. p. 36, 39.) These passages of Peter, which are fuller, seem to be designed as a commentary on the conciser account of Jude. We seem warranted, therefore, to date this Epistle before Peter's; and about the same time as his brother's, A.D. 62.

* Both Lardner and Michaelis, however, have expended a great deal of criticism to determine who this James was; and after puzzling themselves, have come to the sceptical conclusion of doubting who he was, and of course, not knowing whether the Epistle be canonical or not.

The Jewish legend or tradition of Michael contending with the Devil about the body of Moses, ver. 9, has given much offence to Michaelis, so that he doubts whether Jude could be "an inspired writer, or an immediate disciple of CHRIST," p. 385. But might not the Apostle have used it merely as a popular illustration (without vouching the fact) of that sober and wholesome doctrine, for the lower classes especially, not to speak evil of dignities? from the example of "the Archangel," who did not venture to rail even at the devil, but meekly said, "THE LORD rebuke thee!" as Michaelis himself has suggested*, p. 392.

THE EPISTLES OF PETER.

The first Epistle is addressed to the converted Jews of "the dispersion, sojourners in Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, provincial Asia, and Bithynia," or the principal provinces of Asia Minor, or Natolia, i. 1, which had also been the chief scenes of the early part of Paul's ministry; and were probably attached to the Mother Church of Antioch in Syria, which seems to have been early under the particular inspection of Peter also, Gal. ii. 11. For, as we learn from Eusebius, "Peter having founded the Church in Antioch, went from thence to Rome preaching the Gospel;" Origen and Jerom agree, that "Simon Peter having had the episcopacy of the Church of Antioch, and preached to the converted Jews of the dispersion in Pontus, and the neighbouring provinces, proceeded to Rome, where he was crucified. And Chrysostom expressly says, "This is one prerogative of our city [Antioch] that at first, we received the chief of the Apostles as our teacher. However, we held him not to the end, but resigned him to the imperial city, Rome." See the original passages, Lardner, VI. p. 544.

* Michaelis has furnished the following curious remark thereon. "To the doctrine which St. Jude inculcates by this quotation, that we ought not to speak evil of dignities, not even of the fallen Angels, but that we should leave judgment to GOD, I have no objection. And I really think that they transgress the bounds of propriety, who make it their business, either in the pulpit, or in their writings, to represent the Devil as an object of detestation: since, notwithstanding his fall, he is still a being of a superior order."—Is this the doctrine of the NEW TESTAMENT? or, the usage of OUR LORD, of Peter, Paul, and John in the Apocalypse? We fancy not. "The old Serpent, &c. deceiving the whole world," as a "roaring lion, going about seeking whom he may devour," is surely an object of terror and detestation.

The arguments in favour of the authenticity of these Epistles are numerous and satisfactory. The first Epistle was universally received, according to Eusebius and Origen, and was referred to as his, by Clemens Romanus, Polycarp, the Martyrs at Lyons, Papias, Theophilus, bishop of Antioch, Irenæus, Clemens Alexandrinus, Tertullian, &c. See Lardner, vi. p. 151, 152; and it is worthy, indeed, of the Apostle, containing, as Ostervald observes, “very weighty instructions written with great strength and majesty; so that it is one of the finest books of the NEW TESTAMENT.” The second, though not so well supported by external authority, is sufficiently established by the internal evidence, by its reference to the foregoing. It was evidently written soon after the former, from the continuation of the subject, and shortly before the Apostle’s martyrdom, which he expressly predicts, 2 Pet. i. 14, (as explained before, p. 21 of this volume.)

The Apostle represents his first Epistle as written from “Babylon, and sent by Silvanus, the faithful brother, to Pontus,” &c. 1 Pet. v. 12, 13.

Whether Babylon is to be understood here, literally, or mystically; as the city of that name in Mesopotamia, or in Egypt; or rather, Rome; or Jerusalem; has been long and warmly contested by the learned. The arguments on both sides are detailed at length by Lardner, who adopts the mystical application to Rome; and by Michaelis, the literal, to Babylon in Mesopotamia, or rather, as he supposes, Seleucia on the Tigris. See Lardner, vi. p. 572—580, Michaelis, iv. p. 328—341.

After a careful examination of both, the evidences in favour of the mystical interpretation seem greatly to preponderate, for the following reasons.

1. This was the primitive tradition adopted by most of the Greek and Latin Fathers, Papias, Eusebius, Jerom, Œcumenius, Cosmas, Bede, &c. and by Valesius, and most of the writers of the Romish Church.

2. It is not probable that Peter ever visited Babylon in Chaldea, from the total silence of Ecclesiastical History. And Babylon in Egypt was too small and insignificant to be the subject of consideration.

3. Silvanus or Silas *, the bearer, was “the faithful brother,”

* Silas, in Hebrew, שלש, signifies, “three,” or “third,” and seems to have been or associate of Paul in most of the Churches which he had planted. And though he was not at Rome with the Apostle when he wrote his last Epistle to Timothy, might naturally have come thither soon after; and have been sent by Paul and Peter jointly, to confirm the Churches in Asia Minor, &c. which he had assisted in planting. But Silvanus, Paul, and Peter had no connection with Babylon, which lay beyond their district; and, therefore, they were not likely at any time to build upon another's foundation. The Gospel was preached in Persia or Parthia, by the Apostle Thaddeus, or Jude, according to Cosmas; and Abulfaragi reckons, that the ancient Syriac version of the New Testament was made in his time, and probably, by his authority, for the use of the Oriental Churches, Lardner, v. p. 172, Michaelis, Vol. II. p. 30.

4. The Jews, to whom the Epistle was written, were fond of mystical appellations, especially in their captivities; Edom was a frequent title for their Heathen oppressors; and as Babylon was the principal scene of their first captivity; it was highly probable, that Rome, the principal scene of their second, and which so strongly resembled the former in her "abominations, her idolatries and persecutions of the Saints," should be denominated by the same title. And this argument is corroborated by the similar usage of the Apocalypse, where the mystical application is unquestionable, Rev. xiv. 8, xvi. 19, xviii. 2, &c. It is highly probable, indeed, that John borrowed it from Peter; or rather, that both took it by inspiration, from the prophecy of Isaiah, xxi. 9.

5. The Syrian hypothesis cited by Michaelis, from Asseman's Bibliotheca Orientalis, T. III. P. II. p. 7; that Peter wrote his first Epistle not only in Jerusalem, but in the very room where the Apostles first received the gifts of the HOLY SPIRIT, (iv. p. 341, note,) though of no weight in itself, is a voucher for the preceding observation.

6. The second Epistle is generally agreed to have been written shortly before Peter's death; but a journey from Babylon to Rome, (where he unquestionably suffered) must have employed latinized by this Amanuensis of St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans; who joins in the salutation with the Apostle and his companion: "I Tertius, who wrote this Epistle, salute you in the Lord." Rom. xvi. 22. Silas, elsewhere called Silvanus, by his Christian name, 1 Thess. i. 1, was a Roman citizen, Acts xvi. 19—37; and as such, might naturally have used the Roman appellation, Tertius.

a long time, even by the shortest route that could be taken. And Peter must have passed through Pontus, &c. in his way to Rome, and, therefore, it would have been unnecessary for him to write. Writing from Rome, indeed, the case was different, as he never expected to see them more.

We are warranted, therefore, to date these Epistles about the beginning of A.D. 65; soon after the second Epistle to Timothy. Whether Paul and Peter suffered at the same time, or separately, is not known; probably the latter: for Jerom relates, that Peter was crucified by Nero for opposing the sorceries of Simon Magus, who had bewitched the Romans, as formerly the Samaritans, Act. viii. 9, 10, Lardner VI. p. 544, Petav. II. p. 379.

THE EPISTLES OF JOHN.

I. The authenticity of these three Epistles, especially of the first, and principal, is unquestionable. It was received as the Apostle's composition every where almost in the eastern and western Churches, and is cited by the early Fathers, Polycarp, Papias, the martyrs of Lyons, Irenæus, Clemens Alexandrinus, Cyprian, Eusebius, Cyril, Epiphanius, Augustine, Chrysostom, venerable Bede, &c. &c. See Lardner, VI. p. 584. And, indeed, the internal evidence in its favour is striking and satisfactory, in the remarkable analogy of sentiment and expression to his Gospel throughout; especially to the beginning and the end of the Gospel in the animated exordium of the Epistle.

“What occurred from the beginning [of the GOSPEL] concerning THE ORACLE OF LIFE; what we have seen with our eyes, what we beheld, and our hands have handled—declare we unto you, that ye may participate with us;—and these, write we unto you, that your joy may be completed,” i. 1—4. (See note, p. 256 of this Volume.)

Whether this Epistle was written, 1. before or after his Gospel; and 2. before or after the destruction of Jerusalem, has been much disputed by commentators and critics. The generality agree, however, that it was written before his Gospel, and are followed herein by Lardner and Michaelis, concurring in this point, indeed; but differing with many commentators on each side, as to the other; Michaelis contending that it was written before the destruction of Jerusalem; Lardner, after.

It was probably written before the destruction of Jerusalem, for the following reasons, not noticed by either.

1. As the other Apostles, James, Jude, Paul, and Peter, had written Catholic Epistles to the Hebrew Christians especially; it is likely that one of the principal “pillars of the Church,” the greatest surely of the Mother Church, the most highly gifted and illuminated of all the Apostles of the circumcision, and the beloved disciple, would not be deficient likewise in this labour of love.

2. Nothing could tend so strongly to establish the faith of the early Jewish converts as the remarkable circumstances of OUR LORD’S crucifixion, exhibiting the accomplishment of the ancient types and prophecies of the Old Testament respecting CHRIST’S passion, or sufferings in the flesh. These, John alone could record, as he was the only eye witness of that last solemn scene among the Apostles. To these, therefore, he alludes in the exordium, as well as to the circumstances of our Lord’s appearances after the Resurrection; and to these he again recalls their attention in that remarkable reference to “the water” at his baptism; to “the water and blood” at his passion, and to the dismissal of “his spirit,” when he commended it to HIS FATHER, and expired, v. 5—9. See the foregoing explanation of this most important and most disputed passage, p. 236, 237 of this Volume.

8. The parallel testimony in the Gospel, John xix. 35—37, p. 236, bears witness also to the priority of the Epistle, in the expression, “He that saw, hath testified,” (μεμαρτυρηκε,) intimating that he had delivered this testimony to the world already; for if now, for the first time, it should rather be expressed by the present tense, μαρτυρει, “testifieth.” And this is strongly confirmed by the Apostle’s same expression, after giving his evidence in the Epistle, “This is the testimony of GOD, which HE hath testified (μεμαρτυρηκε,) concerning HIS SON,” ver. 9, referring to the past transaction, as fulfilling prophecy.

This argument seems decisive for the priority of the Epistle to the Gospel.

Its priority also to the destruction of Jerusalem, may be inferred by analogy, from the dates of the other Catholic Epistles, which were all written not long before the destruction of Jerusalem, when it was most necessary to prepare the minds of the faithful for that catastrophe, and to comfort them under it, with the prospect of future “joy,” or happiness, in reward of their “patience,” and resignation to the will of God.

It was, therefore, probably written the last of the Catholic Epistles, and soon after the publication of the three first Gospels, whose omission of that most material testimony, it was absolutely necessary to supply without delay. And the allusions of this Epistle to the Gospel prognostics of the destruction of Jerusalem, are pointed and express.

The springing up of false Christs and false teachers, and false prophets in the Church, were among the first and last signs of the destruction of Jerusalem, foretold by OUR LORD, Matt. xxiv. 5—25. To these the Epistle evidently alludes :

“ Dear Children, this is the last hour, and as ye have heard, that the Antichrist is coming; even so now there have been (γεγονασι) many Antichrists: whence we know that it is the last hour,” ii. 18.

This word, αντιχριστος, is peculiar to John; it signifies in strictness, a “deputy-Christ,” or one who assumed his authority, see Vol. II. p. 505, corresponding to our Lord’s expression, a false Christ, or impostor; and αντιχριστοι in the plural, false Apostles, or false teachers, who sowed heresies, or erroneous doctrines in the Church. The earliest of these on record were the Judaizing teachers from the Church of Jerusalem, of the Sect of the Pharisees, who attempted to impose circumcision and the observance of the law of Moses on the Gentile Church of Antioch, Acts xv. 1—5; and who were censured by the first Apostolic council at Jerusalem, in A.D. 49; for “disturbing the peace of the Gentile Church without commission from the Apostles,” Acts xv. 23—29. And to these, in the first instance, the Epistle alludes pointedly :

“ They went out from us, (the Apostles) but they were not of us: for if they had been of us, they would have remained with us, [or kept our doctrine] but [they did not] that they might be manifested, that all are not of us,” ii. 19.

“ The last hour,” so emphatically repeated, seems to refer to the approach of the catastrophe, as intimated by OUR LORD, “ When ye see all these [signs] know ye that it is near at the doors. Verily I say unto you, that this generation shall not pass away till all these [woes] shall happen,” Matt. xxiv. 33, 34.

And that this generation was now “passing away,” the Apostle also emphatically repeats :

“ I write, (γραφω) to you fathers, because ye have known HIM that is from the beginning——

“ I wrote (εγραψα) to you fathers, because ye have known HIM that is from the beginning,”——ii. 13, 14.

Here the Fathers, or Elders, are distinguished twice from “ the young men, and the children,” by this circumstance of having known CHRIST, or seen him either during his ministry, or after his resurrection. They were, therefore, passing off the stage of this world, above an entire generation from our Lord’s resurrection, A.D. 31, supposing that this Epistle was written the year after the publication of the three Gospels, about A.D. 68, or two years before the destruction of Jerusalem, as the most seasonable time.

The leading doctrine of this sublime Epistle, is our Lord’s New Commandment of Christian love, or charity. This, it repeatedly inculcates and admirably enforces, ii. 7—11, iii. 16—18, iv. 7—12. And it warns the faithful, especially, against false prophets, worldly-mindedness, and idolatry, iv. 1, ii. 15, 16, v. 4, v. 21.

II. The second Epistle is an epitome of the first, touching, in few words, on the same points. It is addressed “ to the elect Lady and her Children,” ver. 1. The word κυρια is ambiguous, it may literally denote a woman, or figuratively, a Church. And the latter seems preferable; for the Church of CHRIST was styled, “ the Queen,” (ἡ βασιλισσα, Sept.) Ps. xlv. 10, which is a synonymous term. And this imagery is frequent in the New Testament, Matt. xxv. 10; Gal. iv. 25, 26; Eph. v. 25; Rev. xix. 7, xxi. 2.

CHRIST also is styled in prophecy, “ the Father of the future Age,” Isaiah ix. 6; whose “ children should be made princes in all lands,” Ps. xlv. 16; and he styled himself, “ the bridegroom,” Matt. ix. 15, and John Baptist, “ the friend of the bridegroom,” or bride man, John iii. 29.

And in support of the allegorical interpretation, we may observe, that though τεκνα, “ children,” may include daughters, those of the elect lady are plainly sons, (οὓς) “ whom I love,” ver. 1, (περιπατουντας) “ walking in truth,” ver. 4, whom he warns “ to look to themselves,” (ἐαυτους,) ver. 8, &c. the masculine relatives and participle restricting the sense to sons alone. “ Now, in a numerous family, it is very seldom that we find all sons, and no daughters: but when we speak of a Church, the word ‘sons’ includes persons of both sexes,” according to the acute remark of Michaelis, IV. p. 450.

Hence, we may presume, that this was a later brief epistle, referring to the first: "I wrote to you, Fathers," &c. ii. 14.

That some particular Church, indeed, is here meant, may also be collected from the concluding salutation of, "The children of thy elect sister," from which the Apostle wrote. But we know from Ecclesiastical History, that the Church of Ephesus was under his peculiar jurisdiction; therefore, it is highly probable that he wrote to the Mother Church at Jerusalem; according to Whitby, Barrington, and Gilpin.

III. The third Epistle is addressed to an individual, a respectable member of some Church; which, from the Greek names, Gaius, or Caius, Diotrephes, and Demetrius, seems to be Gentile, as intimated, ver. 7. And that this Church was Corinth, may be presumed, from the person addressed, Caius, and on the score of his hospitality; for which he was honourably distinguished by Paul, as "his host, and the host of the whole Church," Rom. xvi. 23; who resided at Corinth, and had been one of his first converts, 1 Cor. i. 14. And this testimony, and the disinterestedness of Paul himself, who took nothing from the Church of Corinth, as he repeatedly told them, 2 Cor. iv. 5, xi. 7—11, xii. 13; working there at his trade as a tent-maker, for his support, Acts xviii. 3, seems to be here elegantly and forcibly alluded to, as a motive to Caius and the Corinthians for hospitality towards strangers of the eastern Churches, on their travels, ver. 6—8.

Nor is it any objection to this, that the Apostle styles Caius, and the Church, "his children," whose "walking in truth, gave him the highest joy," ver. 4; for, after the martyrdom of Peter and Paul, "the care of all the Churches" that they had "planted," necessarily devolved on him, the survivor, the last, and the greatest of the Apostles, "to water." Though not his own converts, therefore, he might reasonably account the Corinthians, "his children," or flock, as being comprized within his jurisdiction of the western Churches.

And the immediate occasion of this Epistle, seems to have been some inattention shewn to a former, which "*he wrote to the Church ," recommending some of the Asiatic brethren to their care and attentions; which was opposed by Diotrephes, an overbearing leader, who not only resisted the Apostle's recommendation, and "prated against him with malicious words," disclaiming his authority; but even proceeded such lengths, as to "*excommunicate the persons who were willing to entertain the strangers." Whom, therefore, the venerable Apostle, with unusual warmth, threatens to correct, at his coming, by his Apostolical authority, ver. 9, 10. This very Diotrephes might have been the leading opponent of Paul, at Corinth; whom he forebore to name out of delicacy, though he censured, 1 Cor. iii. 3—5, iv. 6, &c.

* Lardner renders, εγραψα τη εκκλησια, ver. 9, "I would have written to the Church," (with the Vulgate, Le Clerc, and Grotius,) were it not for the opposition of Diotrephes: wherefore, the Apostle preferred writing to Caius, Lardner VI. p. 601. But the com-

According to this simple and consistent hypothesis, we may date this Epistle still earlier than the second: but about the same year, from the sameness of the doctrinal parts, and of the expressions in both. They all might have been written about A.D. 68 †, three years after the martyrdom of Peter and Paul, and from Ephesus; the two first, to the Mother Church of Judea; the last, to the Mother Church of Achaia. "And since Corinth lay almost opposite to Ephesus; and St. John, from his former occupation, before he became an Apostle, was accustomed to the sea; it is not improbable that the journey which he proposed to take, ver. 14, was a voyage by sea, from Ephesus to Corinth," as ingeniously remarked by Michaelis, IV. p. 456.

THE APOCALYPSE.

The external, or historical evidence in favour of the authenticity of this most sublime, most mysterious, and most important chain of prophetic visions vouchsafed to the Apostle John, has been partly anticipated in the foregoing article of the two resurrections; where the doctrine of the Millennium was immediately deduced from it by the primitive Fathers, Justin Martyr, Irenæus, and Tertullian, and the work itself attributed by them to the Apostle John, who was banished to the Isle of Patmos, (as he himself relates, Rev. i. 9,) in the most clear and explicit terms.

mon rendering is more grammatical, and consistent with the context, and aggravates the offence.

* Εκβαλλει εκ της εκκλησιας, is applicable only to the actual members of the Church: not to the strangers, Michaelis, p. 454.

† Whiston and Lardner date these Epistles between A.D. 80 and A.D. 90.
Mill about 91 or 92.

To these ancient and powerful testimonies a multitude may be added, both from the eastern and western Church; such as *Papias, Bishop of Hierapolis, A.D. 116, one of John's own disciples; Melito, Bishop of Sardis, one of the seven Churches, A.D. 177, who wrote a commentary thereon; Theophilus, Bishop of Antioch, A.D. 181; Clemens Alexandrinus, A.D. 194; Origen, A.D. 230; Hippolytus the martyr, A.D. 210; Bishop of Ader, and metropolitan of the Arabians, who also wrote a commentary thereon †. All these flourished in the course of 120 years after John's death, and were men of the greatest note for learning and information in those times. Soon after Victorinus Pictaviensis, A.D. 290, wrote another commentary on it, who lived in the time of Diocletian. "This may suffice, surely," says Sir Isaac Newton, "to shew how the Apocalypse was received and studied in the first ages: and I do not find, indeed, any other book of the NEW TESTAMENT so strongly attested, or commented upon so early as this." Observations on the Apocalypse, p. 247.

The mass of positive evidence in its favour is ably collected by Lardner, VI. p. 627—637. And the counter-evidence by Michaelis, in a long and elaborate article, IV. p. 457—544, the great preponderance of the former evidence is no less striking than the prepossession of Michaelis, that could set them on a par, or even give a preference to the latter! But, as we observed before, he was a most unequal critic, and here, as usual, has furnished arguments in abundance to overturn his own "suspicion that it is spurious," p. 487.

From Michaelis and Newton we may collect a satisfactory account of the causes that naturally contributed to impair the early reputation of this wondrous Revelation, which were partly noticed before.

1. "When the Apocalypse was first published, the encouragement to study it was strong: 'Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep the things that are written therein,' Rev. i. 3. 'This animated the first Christians to study it so much; but they were soon disheartened and deterred by its insurmountable difficulties and abstruse-nesses." Newton, p. 247.

* See the character of Papias ably vindicated from the misrepresentations of Eusebius, by the learned and acute Henry Taylor, in his Thoughts on the Grand Apostacy, p. 61, 62.

† A statue of Hippolytus was discovered at Rome in 1551, on which are engraved the titles of his writings, and among them περι του κατα Ιωαννην ευαγγελιου και αποκαλυψεως. "Concerning the Gospel and Revelation according to John." This shews his celebrity in Europe. And his authority contributed greatly to the reception of the Apocalypse, Lardner VI. p. 404; Michaelis IV. p. 478.

For it is an unquestionable axiom in sacred criticism, that no historical series of prophecy can be thoroughly understood before its full accomplishment, until it be explained by the event, which is most strictly true of this.

Thus "they wearied themselves to find the door" to the mystery of the two wild beasts, and image of the beast, and the number of the beast, 666; before the great ecclesiastical persecuting powers sprung up in the western and eastern Church, and their genuine offspring, namely, the Papal, Mahometan, and Infidel powers. Nor is the meaning of this mystical number yet ascertained, though the "Man's name," Mahomet, in Greek, Μαομετις, seems to have the fairest claim hitherto, in the amount of its numeral letters, exactly corresponding.

Hence they might, perhaps, have exclaimed with the objectors to the symbolical prophecies of Ezekiel, so finely applied in these visions:

"Ah LORD, doth he not speak parables or riddles!" and so, at length, consider it like Daniel's "sealed book," as not to be realized neither in that nor in any age, but as merely allegorical. Michaelis, IV. p. 475.

2. The natural and necessary results of its mysterious nature, were the mistaken notions that sprung up early in the eastern and western churches respecting the momentous doctrine of the Millennium; which began to be corrupted by gross and mischievous interpretations. A Paradise of delights, or all manner of sensual enjoyments in eating, drinking, marrying, &c. became the prevailing notion of the Millenary state among the western, as well as the Mahometan heretics. This gave great offence, at a time when the opposite errors of celibacy and the mortifying austerities of monks and hermits began to be fashionable in both Churches. No wonder, then, that the succeeding monkish Fathers of the fourth, fifth, and sixth centuries, (on whose evidence Michaelis chiefly relies,) not only neglected the Apocalypse, but began to decry both its authenticity and orthodoxy, as contrary to the purity of the Gospel; and some went so far as to ascribe it even to the heretic Cerinthus, the adversary of the Apostle. Michaelis IV. p. 469.

3. Another, and more mischievous corruption of its genuine doctrines, were the revolutionary notions that began to be entertained of the Kingdom of the Saints, as designed “to smite in pieces and destroy” all subsisting governments, like Daniel’s stone, “the image,” or the four great monarchies that preceded it; which were afterwards carried to such an excess (as we have seen in the foregoing article of the two resurrections) by the Anabaptists of *Munster. This completed the disgrace of the Apocalypse, by the odium which its misinterpretation brought upon the Reformation. This odium was artfully fomented by the advocates of the Church of Rome, in their controversies with the reformed.

To this principally may we attribute the prejudices of Luther himself against it, although it so strongly depicted the abominations of popery, and pointed him out as the third angel of the Reformation, (see Vol. II. page 526.) It was considered, indeed, by several of the reformers, as supporting not merely speculative, but dangerous practical errors. “For the expectation of a kingdom in which pure saints should rule over the unregenerate children of the world, began to excite a spirit of sedition, (as it is very easy for the unruly members of a discontented party to fancy that they themselves are the saints, and their opponents the unregenerate;) and for this very reason, the Augsburg Confession, (Art. XVII. De Reditu Christi ad judicium) condemns the doctrine of the Millennium in express terms.” Michaelis IV. p. 542.

4. This prejudice was supported by the objections drawn from the peculiar style of the Apocalypse. Dionysius, Bishop of Alexandria, in A.D. 247, (whom Michaelis evidently follows) took a middle course between the opposite opinions, either that the Apocalypse was written by John the Apostle, or by Cerintus; he admitted it to be a divinely inspired work, written, perhaps, by some other John; but he contended that it could not be the Apostle, from the difference of the style between this and his genuine writings, the Gospel and Epistles. And his authority had considerable weight with the Greek Fathers after him: though Origen, his much more learned preceptor, admitted the authenticity of the book, notwithstanding his warm opposition to the doctrine of the Millennium; which is more than a counter-balance to the opinion of Dionysius, Michaelis IV. p. 480—486; especially, if we add “the celebrated names of Jerom and Augustine,” who received it after more cautious examination, and appealed, in support of its authenticity, to ancient testimonies, p. 493.

* In addition to the foregoing references, the curious may see their doctrines and practices stated by the judicious Hooker, Preface, p. 47—49, in an excellent abridgment of Guy de Bres, contre l’erreur des Anabaptistes.

This difference of style is reducible to its alleged solecisms and figurative language, if compared with the simple and more classical style of the Gospel, which Dionysius contended was perfectly pure Greek; going too far on the other side, p. 529, 530.

But these alledged solecisms, or “harsh constructions,” are mere Hebraisms, common in the Alexandrine Greek, as we have noticed before, p. 31 of this Volume. Thus απο Ιησου Χριστου, ομαρτυς ο πιστος, Rev. i. 5, in classical language would be του μαρτυρος του πιστου, the latter genitive being in apposition to the former, but the given construction is perfectly grammatical, ο ων, being understood before the nominative, “from JESUS CHRIST [who is] the faithful witness.” The same construction is found in the Alexandrine Sept. ορασις του ενυπνιου αυτου, ο αρχινοχοος και ο αρχισιτοποιος. “The vision of his dream [who was] the chief butler and the chief baker,” Gen. xl. 5, where the Vatican copy alters the nominatives to genitives, according to classical usage, του αρχινοχοου, &c. It is also found in the Gospel: υμεις φωνειτε με, ο διδασκαλος, και, ο κυριος. “Ye call me THE TEACHER, and THE LORD; and ye say rightly, for I am,” John xiii. 13, which, in classical Greek, would be, τον διδασκαλον, in apposition with με, the preceding accusative case; but like the Alexandrine, συ εις, “thou art,” is plainly understood before the nominatives, as remarked in a foregoing note, p. 260 of this Volume.

The figurative language of the Apocalypse is admirably explained by Michaelis himself; and we cannot withhold from the reader the pleasure his remarks must give them, (as they have already given us,) in the words of his excellent translator.

“The language of the Apocalypse is both beautiful and sublime, is affecting and animating; and this, not only in the original, but in every, even the worst translation of it. Who can read, if he reads without prejudice, the following address of JESUS to John, sinking to the ground through fear, and not be affected by the greatness of the thoughts and the expressions: ‘Fear not, I am THE FIRST and THE LAST: I am He that was dead, but now liveth: Behold, I am alive for evermore, Amen, and have the keys of Hades, and of Death;’ i. 17, 18.

“The Apocalypse has something in it which enchants and insensibly inspires the reader with the sublime spirit of the author. When future blessedness is promised (to the righteous), or the New Jerusalem described, a man must be devoid of feeling who is not affected: and when the author denounces ‘judgment to the wicked;’ and represents ‘the smoke of their torment ascending up for ever and ever, before the throne of GOD and his Angels;’ one must be either prejudiced before one reads, or one cannot read without terror.

“A great part of the imagery is borrowed from the ancient Prophets; but the imitation is for the most part more beautiful and more magnificent than the original, which is particularly true of what is borrowed from Ezekiel; and the imagery which is taken from the Theology of the Rabbins, acquires in the Apocalypse a taste and eloquence, of which the Rabbinical writings themselves are wholly destitute.

“St. John’s Gospel has likewise its beauties; but then they are beauties of a very different kind. For while the author of the Apocalypse hurries us away to enchanted ground, and resembles a torrent which carries every thing before it, St. John the Apostle is plainness and gentleness, and is like a clear rivulet which flows without rapidity and violence.—Is it possible, therefore, that St. John the Apostle, and the author of the Apocalypse, called St. John the Divine, were one and the same person?” p. 533, 534.

Yes, we will reply to this most unequal and provoking critic, whom we must praise and censure in the same breath. Yes, the very difference he stumbles at is the surest proof of the identity of both.

“John the Apostle” wrote in his proper character, and in his own language; “John the Divine,” in the language of inspiration, “as THE SPIRIT gave him utterance.” Of course, they differ as much as “the language of the Gods and Men” in Homer. And they ought to differ, that the learned might not idly mistake the Apocalypse for a human composition, the Apostle being only the vehicle of the divine Afflatus, like the Prophet of old,

“ Who saw the vision of THE ALMIGHTY,
*Entranced, but having his (mental) eyes * open.*”

And like his “ most noble compeer †,” so highly favoured with “ abundance of visions and revelations of THE LORD,” who was rapt into Paradise, and even into the third Heaven, (whether in the body, or out of the body, he knew not, GOD only knew,) and heard unutterable expressions, which it was not allowed for man to speak.”

Still we are highly indebted to Michaelis for that candour and fairness of mind, that did not withhold the curious and valuable counter-evidence which his copious stores of general learning supplied; though we cannot but regret, for his own sake, that he did not sufficiently avail himself of that information he has so liberally supplied to others. He had, indeed, more learning than judgment, and too great a deference to authorities of inferior weight.

We shall conclude this article with the valuable testimony of the ancient and learned historian, Sulpitius Severus, A.D. 401.

“ During the reign of Domitian, [about A.D. 95.] John, the Apostle and Evangelist, was banished to the Isle of Patmos, where, after hidden mysteries had been revealed to him, he wrote and published his book of the sacred Apocalypse, which is foolishly or wickedly rejected by many.” See Lardner, v. p. 164.

From the foregoing critical investigation, we may collect the most probable

CHRONOLOGICAL ORDER OF PAUL'S EPISTLES.

	A D.
Galatians	50
I. Thessalonians	51
II. Thessalonians	52
Titus	52
I. Corinthians	57
II. Corinthians	58

* So much the rather, THOU CELESTIAL LIGHT, Shine inward, and the mind through all her powers Irradiate : there, plant eyes, all mists from thence Purge and disperse; that I may see, and tell
 Of things invisible to mortal sight !—Milton.

† Par nobile fratrum, the two most highly illuminated mortals that ever appeared on earth, were John and Paul.

	A. D.
I. Timothy	58
Romans	58
Ephesians	62
Colossians	64
Philemon	64
Philippians	64
Hebrews	64
II. Timothy	65

CATHOLIC EPISTLES.

James	61
Jude	62
I. & II. Peter	65
I. II. & III. John	68
Apocalypse	95

The credibility of the Acts and Epistles may partly be collected from the foregoing enquiry into their authenticity; evincing a remarkable harmony and consistency between them, in a great variety of minute and incidental circumstances scattered throughout, so rarely to be found in miscellaneous historical documents. It will further appear, from the concurring information they afford, collectively, of the history of this period; to which we now proceed, after these preliminary observations.

THE RISE AND PROGRESS OF THE CHURCH.

After OUR LORD'S ascension, (the particulars of which are recorded, as we have seen in the first chapter of the Acts, 1—11,) the infant community of our Lord's disciples, consisting of the "eleven Apostles," and the seventy disciples, (we may presume,) our Lord's mother, "Mary," and the rest of the pious "women," and the brethren, to the amount of 120 persons, (like the grain of mustard seed,) all persevered, with one consent in prayer and supplication, ver. 12—15.

MATTHIAS ELECTED APOSTLE.

To supply the vacancy in "the glorious company of the Apostles," occasioned by the defection and death of Judas; "in those days," and probably on the ensuing Lord's day, when they were assembled together for public worship, and might expect the presence of CHRIST, virtually at least, if not visibly, according to his gracious promise, Matt. xxviii. 20, Peter stood up, and took the lead, as president, and being now “converted himself, confirmed his brethren,” Luke xxii. 32, and proposed this measure. In his speech, after reciting the dreadful catastrophe of Judas, who was “guide to them that apprehended JESUS,” he applied two remarkable prophecies to both. “*Let their abode * be desolate, and let no one dwell therein,*” (Psalm lxxix. 25,) so exactly fulfilled in the ensuing desolation of Jerusalem; and, “Let another take his episcopal office,” (Psalm cix. 8,) now to be fulfilled in the appointment of a successor to the transgressor Judas †.

* Instead of the received reading of the former citation, επαυλις αυτου, we have been induced to substitute επαυλις αυτων, for the following reasons.

1. This is the rendering of the Septuagint version, following the Hebrew, and describing the woes destined to be inflicted upon the Jews, for rejecting and persecuting CHRIST; which is the drift of the former Psalm; and the various reading, αυτων, is also supported by the Vulgate, Ethiopic, and Armenian versions of the New Testament, edit. Cant. and five MSS. including the Lincoln, (33,) and the Vienna, (43.) See Griesbach, edit. secund.

2. The prophecy, as applied to Judas, seems rather irrelevant, for though he was certainly included among our Lord’s persecutors in general, yet his case being particularly described in the latter Psalm, and the latter prophecy brought from thence, to warrant the choice of a successor in his apostolical office; the former prophecy, if applied to him, seems to be rather superfluous; whereas it is peculiarly applicable “to them that apprehended JESUS;” and whose midnight treachery, likewise, deserved to be also censured by the Apostle, as it was by OUR LORD, Matt. xxvi. 55. Another Psalm has combined both.

“Many are the afflictions of the JUST ONE, (CHRIST,)
But THE LORD delivereth him out of them all.
He preserveth all his bones,
Not one of them is broken.
Evil shall slay the wicked one, (Judas,)
And the haters of the JUST ONE (the Jews,)
Shall be desolate.” Psalm xxxiv. 19—21.

3. The learned Dr. Owen, in his vindication of the modes of quotation adopted by the evangelical writers, though he retains the received reading, αυτου, yet, rather inconsistently, is forced to explain it in the same sense of αυτων.—“There is in this quotation, it must be acknowledged, some difficulty. And this difficulty, I know not how otherwise to solve, than by observing, that Judas is not here specified as the only traitor, though the chief and most infamous; but as “the guide of them that took JESUS,” ver. 16. They therefore, plurally, were all concerned and involved in the prophecy. And as the prophecy was now singularly fulfilled in Judas, the head: so with reference to its plural construction, it was a plain presage, that the rest, the body of the Jews, would surely meet with the like fate; which they woefully experienced not long after, p. 68.

This reluctant witness against the received reading, strengthens the foregoing argument.

† Commentators have been greatly divided about the meaning of that expression concerning Judas, πορευθηναι εις τον τοπον τον ιδιον, “to go to his own place,” Acts i. 25.

From this case we learn the qualification of a candidate for the Apostleship, and the mode of election. 1. He was required to be an eye-witness of the resurrection of the LORD JESUS, chosen out of the attendants on him during his ministry, from his baptism till his ascension. 2. Two candidates were selected by the Apostles, (probably out of the seventy disciples.) 3. They were recommended by prayer to THE LORD*, as the

1. The generality understand thereby that region of Hades allotted to the souls of bad men; as in the parable of Lazarus and the rich man, in which the latter "lift up his eyes in Hades, being in torments," &c. Luke xvi. 23; and they ground this on our Lord's declaration, "Woe unto that man by whom THE SON OF MAN is delivered up; it had been good for that man if he had never been born!" Matt. xxvi. 24. This seems to have been also the decided opinion of the primitive Fathers. Polycarp thus speaks of the Apostles and Martyrs, ὅτι εἰς τον οφειλομενον αυτοις τοπον εἰσι παρα τῷ κυριῷ. "That they are in the place due to them, with THE LORD."

Clemens Romanus thus speaks of Peter himself, οὕτω μαρτυρησας ἐπορευθη εἰς τον οφειλομενον τοπον της δοξης. "Having thus testified, he went to the due place of glory." And Ignatius notices both, ἐπικεῖται τα δυο ὁμοι, ὁ τε θανατος και ἡ ζωη και ἕκαστος εἰς τον ἰδιον τοπον μελλει χωρῆν. "Death and life are both impending: and every one is destined to go to his own place."

2. The harshness, however, of Peter's thus passing judgment on an offending brother, who had been himself guilty, and had been recently forgiven, has induced some to look for a different interpretation. And Gilpin, with others, applies the expression to Matthias, who was appointed "to receive the lot of this ministry and apostleship, (from which Judas transgressed,) in order to go into his own place," or to take the station assigned to him. It may, however, be questioned, whether τοπος, here, can be properly taken in the figurative sense of station, combined with the transitive verb πορευθῆναι, to go, or travel.

3. Another interpretation may be offered, which is not liable to that objection, and seems to correspond also with the context. Peter had declared before, that "Judas purchased a place with the wages of iniquity," (χωριον,) ver. 18, or "the potter's field, to bury strangers in;" the purchase being attributed to him, since made with his money. Might it not then be said, with propriety, that when Judas transgressed, and became guilty of suicide, "he went to his own place," the potter's field, to be buried there as a "stranger," alien, or outcast from the congregation of Israel? The words χωριον and τοπος, are used indiscriminately. We propose this, however, with diffidence; for after all, the first interpretation is best supported by ancient authorities.

* Σὺ κυριε, καρδιογνωστα παντων. It is a matter of high importance to the cause of VITAL CHRISTIANITY, to know who is "THE LORD," here addressed as "SEARCHER OF ALL HEARTS." That this title belongs to THE FATHER, is unquestionable; and it is expressly attributed to Him, Psalm vii. 9, xxvi. 2, 1 Sam. xvi. 7, Jer. xi. 20, xvii. 10, xx. 12, &c.

It is also applied to THE SON, John i. 48—50, ii. 24, 25, vi. 64, xvi. 30, xix. 35, xxi. 17.

And that on this occasion it was immediately addressed to "THE LORD JESUS," we may humbly collect from the following reasons.

1. Because He was "THE LORD" specified immediately before this invocation, in Peter's discourse, ver. 21.

SEARCHER OF HEARTS, to chuse the fittest, by directing the lots; 4. when the lot fell upon Matthias, he was voted by the whole community, an associate with the eleven Apostles, (συγκατα-εψηφισθη), Acts i. 15—26.

THE DAY OF PENTECOST, OR WHITSUNDAY.

This auspicious day was memorable for the first fruits of the Church, in the conversion of three thousand prejudiced Jews, to the faith of a crucified Saviour, only fifty-two days after his passion, and at Jerusalem itself, the scene of it!

The following is the short and simple account of the wondrous transaction which led to this conversion.

“ And when the day of Pentecost was fully come, [or about sun rise,] they were all assembled, with one accord, at the same place, [probably the cœnaculum.] And suddenly there was a sound from the heaven, as of a blast of wind, rushing violently, and it filled all the house where they were sitting. And there appeared to them, as it were, tongues on fire, [or tongue-like flames,] distributed* among them; and there sate one upon each of them. And they were all filled with THE HOLY SPIRIT, and began to speak in other tongues, according as THE SPIRIT gave them utterance.

“ And there were Jews sojourning at Jerusalem, devout persons, from every nation under the heaven, [who came to attend

2. In the election of Presbyters afterwards, in the several Churches, “ after prayer and fasting, the Apostles commended them unto THE LORD, on whom they had believed,” Acts xiv. 23. But that LORD was unquestionably CHRIST. This case, precisely in point, determines the question.

3. OUR LORD himself expressly and formally assumed the title, “ And all the Churches shall know that I AM THE SEARCHER OF REINS AND HEARTS, and I will give to each of you according to your works,” Rev. ii. 23. Compare Heb. iv. 12.

This decides the important question at issue hitherto, between Trinitarians and Unitarians, in favour of prayer immediately offered to CHRIST, as foretold Psalm lxxii. 15, and practised on the foregoing occasions; and by Paul also, when “ he besought THE LORD thrice, that he might be relieved from some thorn in the flesh,” who refused him, that “ THE POWER OF CHRIST might be perfected in the infirmity of his Apostle,” 2 Cor. xii. 8—10.

The evangelical Liturgy of the Church of England, therefore, is fully warranted in offering prayer and supplication to CHRIST, jointly with THE FATHER, in the Litany, prayer of Chrysostom, Collect for the first Sunday in Lent, &c.

* The original, διαμεριζομεναι, incorrectly rendered “ cloven,” in the English Bible, Gilpin ingeniously conjectures, gave the idea to the form of the ancient episcopal mitres. The sitting or resting of these lambent flames upon the head of each, signified the permanence of the spiritual gift, now shed forth on the Apostles’ company.

the feast of Pentecost ;] and when this report was spread, the multitude assembled, [at the temple probably, with the disciples, on this most holy day,] and they were confounded, because every one of them heard the disciples speaking in their own dialect. And all were astonished, and wondered, saying to each other, Lo, are not all these that speak, Galileans ? [who were vulgar and illiterate, even to a proverb ;] and how hear we them speaking, to each of us, in our own dialect, in which we were born ? Parthians, and Medes, and Elamites, and inhabitants of Mesopotamia, Judea, [Lydia,] and Cappadocia, Pontus, and Proconsular Asia, Phrygia and Pamphylia ; Egypt, and the regions of Libya, and about Cyrene ; and Roman sojourners, native Jews, and Gentile proselytes ; Cretes and Arabians ; we do hear them speaking in our own tongues, the grand dispensations of GOD ! And all were astonished and perplexed, saying to each other, What portendeth this ?"

" But others, [inhabitants of Jerusalem, probably, who understood not these various languages and dialects,] mocking, said, These men are full of strong wine," or are drunken.

To repel the foul calumny of the latter hearers, and to solve the wonder and astonishment of the former, Peter, who continued to take the lead, addressed the multitude in a masterly discourse, "lifting up his voice," with great readiness and boldness, in " the words of truth and soberness."

1. He exposed the absurdity and malignity of the charge of drunkenness at that early hour, " the third of the day," or nine in the morning, and especially the very hour of the temple service, which the pious and devout attended fasting : as was Peter's own practice in his private devotions, Acts x. 9, 10.

2. He represented this stupendous gift of tongues, and of spiritual illumination, as the fulfilment of that copious effusion of THE SPIRIT OF GOD, upon all ranks and descriptions of the Jews, in the last days of the Mosaical dispensation, foretold by the Prophet Joel, (ii. 28, 29,) ver. 16—18.

3. He next reminded them of the dreadful signs and portents, foretold by the same prophet, (Joel ii. 30—32,) to precede the destruction of the impenitent and unbelieving part of the nation, in the great and terrible day of Divine vengeance. For their consolation, however, these denunciations were tempered with mercy, in the gracious promise of salvation, or deliverance, to whosoever should call upon the name of THE LORD, with hearty repentance and true faith, ver. 19—21.

4. He then proceeds to unfold who that LORD and SAVIOUR was, that was meant in the prophecy; and this was no other than "JESUS OF NAZARETH,"—a person pointed out to them from GOD, by the miracles, and wonders, and signs, which GOD wrought by him in the midst of them, as they themselves knew; whom, notwithstanding, they, with wicked hands, had crucified and slain; unwittingly fulfilling the predetermined counsel and decree of GOD, ver. 22, 23.

5. But that GOD raised him again to life, fulfilling prophecy also, in the Psalms, "having loosed the toils* of death," (Psalm xviii. 5, cxvi. 3,) because he could not possibly be holden thereby, on account of his firm trust and confidence in GOD, his protector, that "HE would not leave his soul in Hades, nor suffer his HOLY ONE to see [fleshly] corruption; but would shew him the paths of life, and fill him with the delight of his countenance," (Psalm xvi. 8—11,) ver. 24—28.

6. He then finely explains to them the true drift of this prophecy, as relating to CHRIST'S resurrection, not to David, the Patriarch, who died, and was buried, and saw corruption, (Acts xiii. 36,) and his sepulchre was still subsisting among them; therefore he could not himself possibly be the subject of that prophecy, which he delivered by inspiration, ver. 29—31.

7. He next states the evidences of CHRIST'S resurrection, and also of his ascension, as inseparably linked and connected together, the former, as proved by the unanimous witness of the spectators, the Apostles and their company; the latter by the copious effusion of spiritual gifts and illuminations, fulfilling CHRIST'S promises, which they now actually beheld and heard, in the diversity of tongues in which they were addressed, and the grand dispensations of GOD, now unfolded to them, which he represented as an infallible proof of CHRIST'S exaltation, foretold also in the Psalms, "THE LORD said unto MY LORD, sit thou at my right hand," &c. (Psalm cx. 1,) which was not applicable to David; and he concludes with the most positive assertion of both these facts.

* The Hebrew term הַבֵּלִי, (Hhebeli,) used in both these Psalms, literally signifies "toils," "snares," or "cords," as "holden in toils of affliction," Job xxxvi. 8, where the Septuagint renders ἐν σχοινοῖς πενίας, "in cords of penury." Hence it was used figuratively, to denote "pains" or "pangs," and rendered ὠδίνες by the Septuagint, in these passages. But the literal signification is more suited to the verb "loosed."

“Let then all the house of Israel know assuredly, that GOD hath made both LORD and CHRIST, [at his resurrection and ascension,] this same JESUS whom ye crucified,” ver. 32—36.

Such a discourse, exhibiting the most profound and intimate knowledge of prophecy, and supported by such credentials, produced an instantaneous conversion of a considerable part of the audience. “They were filled with compunction and remorse, and enquired of Peter and the rest of the Apostles, What shall we do to be saved! And they readily and gladly accepted the proffered conditions of repentance and baptism, and as an assurance of their acceptance, they also received the promised gift of THE HOLY SPIRIT, proved most unequivocally by its regenerating effects; for after their admission into the Church, they persevered in the Apostles’ doctrine, in the participation of the Lord’s Supper, and in the public prayers; and what was still more extraordinary, and the surest proof of their disinterestedness and gratitude to GOD, “all the believers were united together, and held all things common,” fulfilling our LORD’S precept, “freely ye have received, freely give,” (Matt. x. 8,) ver. 37—46.

This voluntary resignation of private property to the public stock, was probably necessary, at that early time, when all charity ceased toward Christians, but among themselves; and when they scrupled to partake of the temple sacrifices, which were a great relief to the poor. It certainly was not meant to be permanent, because, throughout the NEW TESTAMENT, as well as the OLD, there is always a distinction supposed to subsist betwixt rich and poor; nor indeed could the affairs of the world possibly be carried on without such inequality of ranks and stations.

The great signs and wonders wrought by the Apostles, impressed fear on every soul, while the uncommon harmony and concord that reigned in the Christian community, their fervent piety in the public duties of religion, gained them favour with the people. “And THE LORD added to the Church *such as were saved, (σωζομενους), from that untoward generation,” (ver. 40,) by embracing Christianity, (ver. 21.)

* This is improperly rendered in a Calvinistic sense by our translators, “such as should be saved,”——they misunderstood, “by the determined will and foreknowledge of God,”

THE CRIPPLE CURED.

The stupendous miracle, not long after, of healing a cripple from his birth, of more than forty years old, instantaneously, in the name of JESUS OF NAZARETH, and at the public station of the beautiful gate of the temple, at the hour of morning prayer, by Peter, made a prodigious impression upon the assembled multitude; for the man was well known, as an object of charity, Acts iii. 1—10.

Peter, therefore, availed himself of this favourable opportunity to address the inhabitants of Jerusalem, who all flocked to Solomon's porch, to see them and the person cured, in a second discourse, similar to the former, and if possible, more excellent and appropriate.

1. He disclaimed any merit to himself or his companion John, in working this consummate miracle by their own power or piety; for that it was effected on their part, "through the name," and on the cripple's part, "through faith in the name of JESUS," THE SON of the GOD of their fathers, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, THE HOLY ONE and THE JUST, and THE PRINCE OF LIFE, whom they denied before Pilate, and slew, preferring a murderer to be released unto them. But that GOD raised him from the dead, whereof they, (the Apostles,) were witnesses, ver. 12—16.

2. He apologized for their crime, by their ignorance of the real character of CHRIST, both theirs and their rulers: unwittingly fulfilling the prophecies of CHRIST'S sufferings, which GOD foretold by the mouth of all his Prophets, ver. 17, 18.

3. He admonished them to repent and be converted; and to wait for the promises of GOD made by all his holy Prophets, which should be fulfilled in the seasons of refreshment, and times of restitution of all things, at CHRIST'S second coming in glory, to restore again the kingdom to Israel, and establish the kingdom of the saints upon earth; until which times and seasons, CHRIST was to remain in Heaven, ver. 19—21. Compare Acts i. 6, 7.

4. He impressed on them the necessity of immediate repent- whereas that relates to CHRIST'S atonement, ver. 23, as Gilpin has judiciously remarked, σωζομενοι, "the reformed," are contrasted with απολλυμενοι, "the abandoned," 1 Cor. i. 18, 2 Cor. ii. 15.

ance and reformation, for that CHRIST was the Prophet like Moses, to whom they were bound to hearken in all things that he should speak unto them, under the penalty of excision from his people, ver. 22—24.

5. He reminded them of their high privileges as sons of the Prophets, and heirs of the covenant made with the Patriarchs, Abraham, &c. their ancestors; and that GOD raised up a SAVIOUR to them, in the first instance, his Son JESUS, and sent him to bless them that believed in him, by turning away every one from his iniquities, ver. 25, 26.

This most impressive and conciliatory discourse, increased the Church to five thousand souls, by the additional converts it made*, Acts iv. 4.

TRIAL BEFORE THE SANHEDRIM.

For this they were seized and imprisoned by the Priests and captain of the temple, and the party of the Sadducees, and brought next day before the Sanhedrim, to account by what power, or by what name they had acted.

Then Peter, filled with the Holy Spirit, boldly said unto them, “Ye rulers of the people, and elders of Israel, if we are questioned this day respecting the relief of the impotent man, by what means he hath been healed, be it known unto you all, and to all the people of Israel, that by the name of JESUS OF NAZARETH, whom ye crucified, but whom GOD raised from the dead, even by Him doth this man stand here before you sound, Acts iv. 7—10.

“This is THE STONE that was despised by you builders, which is become the head of the corner,” (fulfilling prophecy, Psalm cxviii. 22, Isai. xxviii. 16, applied by CHRIST formerly to Himself and to you, Matt. xxi. 42, Rom. ix. 33, 1 Pet. ii. 4—7,) ver. 11.

“Neither is there salvation in any other; for there is no other name under the heaven given among men, whereby we must needs be saved,” ver. 12.

The frankness of this speech astonished the council, especially when they understood that they were unlettered and private persons, and were informed that they had been with JESUS, and after consulting in private, and admitting that such a notable miracle could not be denied, they ordered the Apostles not to utter a word, nor teach in the name of JESUS. But Peter and John answered, and said unto them, "Whether it is right in the sight of GOD to hearken unto you, rather than unto GOD *, judge ye, for we cannot but speak what we saw and heard," ver. 13—20.

* Jam enim numerus credentium accreverat usque ad quinque virorum millia.—Erasmus.

SECOND EFFUSION OF THE HOLY SPIRIT.

After the Apostles were dismissed, with only further threats, the council, being deterred from proceeding to severities by their popularity, they returned to their own company, and related what had passed. Who all, with one consent, burst forth into an expression of praise and thanksgiving to GOD, for fulfilling his prophecy, by the inspired David, in the second Psalm †, respecting the unavailing persecutions of CHRIST, by Herod, Pontius Pilate, and the Romans and Jews; and praying for further spiritual aid themselves, to encounter persecution likewise, and speak GOD'S word with all frankness, and to strengthen them with further miraculous powers. Much availed the energetic supplication of this pious company: the room was shaken, as before, on the day of Pentecost, and the effects of the Divine grace immediately appeared: 1. They were all filled with the HOLY SPIRIT, and spake the word of GOD with frankness; 2. They were possessed with the spirit of unanimity and disinterestedness; 3. With great power of miracles, they witnessed the resurrection and ascension of CHRIST, and 4. They continued to gain great favour with all the people, (ii. 47,) ver. 32, 33.

CHARITABLE CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE CHURCH.

These were continued with greater spirit than before. For "as many as were possessors of lands or houses, sold them, and brought the prices of the things sold, and laid them at the Apostles' feet: and distribution was made to every one, according as he had need," ver. 34, 35. This sale of the lands and houses is a remarkable circumstance: it was probably dictated by "THE SPIRIT, shewing them things to come," the future state of that country, that there was no permanent settlement of the Church to be expected there, on account of the impending wars and desolations of Judea. The money was fitter for present subsistence. This was the ingenious remark of Melchiades. See Hooker, p. 377.

* Socrates, on his trial, told his judges, πεισομαι τω Θεω, μαλλον η υμιν, "I will obey GOD rather than you," according to Plato's account.

† See the foregoing explanation of the second Psalm, by means of the Apostle's commentary thereon, Vol. II. p. 337.

Among the pious contributors to the maintenance of the infant Church at this time, during the years A.D. 32 and 33, honourable mention is made of a Levite of Cyprus, who was surnamed Barnabas, ("son of exhortation*,") ver. 36, 37, and afterward chosen, (for his zeal and his learning, we may presume,) by the HOLY SPIRIT, as a supernumerary Apostle to the Gentiles, along with Saul, Acts xiii. 2. He was probably, therefore, one of the seventy disciples, or he must have seen CHRIST after his resurrection, in order to be qualified to act as an Apostle, (1 Cor. ix. 1.) Lord Barrington suspects that he was Barsabas, who had been rejected for Matthias, as an Apostle, in the room of Judas, Acts i. 23, but, perhaps, without sufficient foundation.

Thus, even in the infant Church, before its full growth and establishment in the Roman empire, by Constantine the Great, was OUR LORD'S prophecy partly realized in answer to Peter's enquiry, "Lo, we have left all, and followed thee, what shall we have therefore?"——"Verily I say unto you, There is none who hath left house, or brothers, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for MY SAKE and the GOSPEL'S, but shall receive a hundred fold now, at this season, houses, and brothers, and sisters, and mothers, and children, and lands, with persecutions; and in the world to come, eternal life," Matt. xix. 27, Mark x. 28—30. Thus beautifully prefiguring the enlargement of their family connexions, as members of the Christian Church, and the charitable contributions to its support, even in its militant state of persecution, by "the free-will offerings of his people, in the day of his power," as foretold, Psalm cx. 3.

ANANIAS AND SAPPHIRA.

This man and his wife had dedicated their property to the Church, and sold it accordingly, but he purloined part of the price, and gave in the remainder to the Apostles, as if it were the whole. He was guilty, therefore, of a double crime; 1. breach of his vow; and 2. a deliberate lie, in asserting that he had paid all. To deter hypocrites and liars, therefore, from joining the infant Church from mercenary motives, in order to be maintained out of the common stock, THE HOLY SPIRIT, as the protector of the Church, took cognizance of this complicated crime, by means of that faculty of *discerning spirits, with which he endued Peter, and punished himself, both the offenders with death, on the spot. And great fear, as was natural, came upon all the Church, and upon as many, out of the Church, as heard this. And of the rest, durst no one join himself to them fraudulently. But the people magnified them; and the stupendous miracles of healing the sick and the possessed, even by the shadow of Peter passing over them in the streets, contributed greatly to multiply the Church, Acts v. 1—16.

* Παρακλησις, "exhortation," Rom. xii. 8, is distinguished from παραμυθια, "consolation," 1 Cor. xiv. 3. Barnabas was called "son of exhortation," as "a Prophet," or inspired preacher of the Church of Antioch, Acts xiii. 1.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE SANHEDRIM.

Provoked at the rapid progress of the Apostles, the high priest, and all his party of the sect of the Sadducees, laid hands upon them, and put them into the public prison. But the Apostles were miraculously liberated, during the night, by an angel of THE LORD, who brought them forth and said, Go ye, stand, and speak in the temple all the words of this life, or doctrines of the Gospel. Accordingly they went into the temple about day break, and taught the people, ver. 17—21.

The whole council having assembled to try them in the morning, were astonished to hear, first, that they had some how been liberated from prison; and next, that they were teaching in the temple. They sent, therefore, to bring them before the council, but without violence, for fear of being stoned by the people. When they came, the high priest, reprimanded them for teaching in this name, after they had been prohibited; and for bringing public odium upon the council, for this man's blood. But Peter, in the name of the Apostles, vindicated their conduct in his third speech, still more animated than the preceding, ver. 21—28, “We must needs obey the authority of GOD, rather than of men. THE GOD OF OUR FATHERS raised up JESUS, whom ye hanged upon a cross, and slew. But GOD exalted him at his right hand, as a PRIME LEADER and SAVIOUR, to give repentance and remission of sins to the Israel [of GOD.]

* This faculty of discerning spirits, was sometimes granted to the Prophets in the OLD TESTAMENT: as to Elisha, in the case of Gehazi, 2 Kings v. 25—27; to Ahijah, in the case of Jeroboam's wife, 1 Kings xiv. 5, 6.

“And we are his [chosen] witnesses of these things; and so is the HOLY SPIRIT also, whom GOD gave [us] who obey his authority,” (πειθαρχουσι αυτω,) ver. 29—32.

This intrepid answer, stating their credentials most concisely and comprehensively, vouching CHRIST’S ascension by their own witness, and the infallible witness of the HOLY SPIRIT, with which they were endued; and his prophetic functions, as PRIME LEADER, Micah v. 2, (explained by the former Jewish council, Matt. ii. 6,) and SAVIOUR, Isa. vii. 14, lxii. 11, lxiii. 1, (explained Matt. i. 21,) cut to the heart as with a saw, (διεπριοντο) the council, and they consulted to slay them: but they were dissuaded by the sage advice of *Gamaliel, president of the council, and a Pharisee, highly esteemed by all the people, who recommended to do nothing rashly respecting them.

“And now I say unto you, refrain from these men, and let them alone, lest haply ye be found to fight against GOD; for if this council, or this work, be (εαν η) of men, it will come to nought, like the foregoing factions of Theudas and Judas of Galilee, whose heads were slain, and their adherents dispersed; but if it is (ει εστιν) of GOD, ye cannot overthrow it.”

To him they agreed. So they only scourged the Apostles for disobeying their orders, and dismissed them, with fresh injunctions not to speak in the name of Jesus. But they departed from the presence of the council, rejoicing that they were accounted worthy to be disgraced for his name. And they ceased not, every day, in the temple, and at home, (Acts ii. 40,) teaching and preaching JESUS as THE CHRIST, ver. 38—42.

This decided countenance given by the respectable and dignified Gamaliel to the rising sect of Christians, partly we may suppose from conviction, if (according to Prideaux) he was the son of the pious old Simeon, who took CHRIST in his arms, when an infant, and hailed him, by inspiration, as the promised SAVIOUR, Luke ii. 25—32, and partly from opposition to the ruling sect of the Sadducees, produced a considerable revolution in the minds of the upper ranks. And to this we may, in

* Gamaliel was held in such high estimation, that at his funeral, Onkelos, the author of the Targum, is said to have burned seventy pounds weight of perfumes. And the Jews have a saying, that from the time Rabban Gamaliel the old died, the honour of the law, and the purity of Pharisaism failed. See his pedigree, Vol. II. p. 593.

good measure, ascribe the great progress the new religion made among the priests, of whom a great crowd submitted to THE FAITH, (οχλος—ὄηκουον,) soon after, Acts vi. 7, and among the Pharisees likewise, whom we find, A.D. 48, among the Judaizing teachers of the Church, Acts xv. 5; and they further supported Paul, (the pupil of Gamaliel), against the Sadducees in council, A.D. 59, and upon the very plea urged by Gamaliel on this occasion. “If a spirit, or angel, spake to him, let us not fight against GOD,” Acts xxii. 3, xxiii. 2.

THE ELECTION OF DEACONS.

The Apostles, to be relieved from the drudgery of servng at tables, or superintending the daily distributions of the charitable fund, recommended to the Church the appointment of Deacons, to assist them as almoners. And accordingly, seven persons, of approved character, and full of the HOLY SPIRIT, (which was necessary to enable them to distinguish true from false objects of the public charity,) were proposed by the brethren, and after prayer and imposition of hands, appointed* by the Apostles, Acts vi. 1—6, about A.D. 35.

These Deacons acted also as Evangelists, and assisted the Apostles in preaching the Gospel. Stephen, the first of them, full of faith and power, did great signs and wonders among the people, ver. 8. Philip preached the Gospel in Samaria, &c. soon after, Acts viii. 5, xxi. 8. And the last, Nicolas, a proselyte of Antioch, is said to have founded the heresy of the Nicolaitans, censured in the Apocalypse, Rev. ii. 6—15. The HOLY SPIRIT sometimes admitting a false Deacon into the Church, as CHRIST himself a false Apostle among the twelve; that “the approved might be manifested,” by resisting the heresies and schisms of such, 1 Cor. xi. 18, 19. Need we then wonder, or complain, that such subsist at the present day in THE CHURCH?

STEPHEN’S TRIAL AND MARTYRDOM.

There was then in Jerusalem a body of African and Asiatic Jews, who had a synagogue called “the Libertines,” most probably from Libertina, a city of Africa. These zealots for the Mosaical law, disputed with Stephen; and “not being able to resist the wisdom and spirit with which he spake,” when foiled in argument, as was natural*, they formally prosecuted him before the Sanhedrim, having formed a party of the people against him, and suborned false witnesses to charge him with blasphemy against the Holy place, or temple, and against the law of Moses and of GOD; for that “they had heard him say, that this JESUS OF NAZARETH, whom he preached, should destroy the temple, and change the law,” Acts vi. 9—14.

* It is remarked by Gilpin, that, whether by accident or design, in eight or nine editions of the English Bible, between A.D. 1650, and A.D. 1680, the word καταστησομεν, “we appoint,” is mistranslated “ye appoint,” transferring the appointment from the Apostles to the brethren.

When Stephen was brought before the council, to answer these charges, GOD himself was pleased to witness their vanity or falsehood, by shewing the same singular and uncommon sign of his approbation of Stephen, as formerly of Moses, after his second conference with God on Sinai, whose face then shone with great brightness, Numb. xxxiv. 29—35. For all the council, looking stedfastly upon Stephen, saw his face resembling the face of an angel, ver. 8—15. This was a glory which none of the Apostles ever received.

On this occasion, Stephen received also a double portion of the Divine wisdom and spirit; for he most undauntedly retorted their own charges upon the accusers themselves; convicting them of fighting against GOD; and by murdering HIS SON, and breaking HIS LAW, contributing themselves to destroy their temple, and change their law. This he proved, by entering into a copious detail of their rebellions, from the first origin of their race, in a most masterly historical speech, which is a perfect commentary on our Lord’s last speech in the temple, Matt. xxiii.

1. He celebrated the piety and faith of Abraham, their illustrious ancestor, when the GOD OF GLORY was pleased to call him from the idolatry of his fathers, at first from Ur of the Chaldees to Charran †, and again, from thence to Canaan; and to establish with him and his chosen seed, the covenant of circumcision, and the promise of the future inheritance of the land of Canaan, Acts vii. 1—8.

2. The evil spirit of their ancestors first broke out in the case of the renowned patriarch Joseph, whom the envy of his brethren sold as a slave into Egypt; but who afterwards proved the saviour and protector of his family, when he relieved them in the famine, and settled them in Egypt, seventy-five souls*, where they flourished till their subsequent bondage after his death, which continued till the time of Moses; who was wonderfully preserved at his birth, and adopted by Pharaoh's daughter, and educated in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, ver. 9—22.

* Solinus, in his Natural History of the bear, observes, Ursis caput debile est, vis maxima in lumbis. An apt description of disputants, “weak in head, but strong in arms,” to stone those whom they cannot confute.

† See those two calls explained before Vol. I. p. 108, 109.

3. He next shewed the ingratitude of their ancestors, and their rejection of this great deliverer, Moses, at first, when he offered to mediate between them, Who made thee a ruler and a judge over us? and their subsequent rejection of him, and rebellion against their TUTELAR GOD, the angel that appeared to him in the bush, under whose guidance Moses brought them forth out of Egypt, with great signs and wonders, to Mount Sinai, where they received the lively oracles of THE LAW; but during Moses' absence in the Mount, they made the golden calf, to lead them back to Egypt, in his stead, and offered idolatrous sacrifices thereto.

That even Moses himself, at the first promulgation of THE LAW, communicated to the Church, or congregation in the wilderness, GOD'S intention of raising up to them another prophet like Moses, "in word and deed," in legislation and miracles; to whom they should be bound to "hearken," under pain of incurring Divine chastisement.

This Prophet, from the resemblance, he plainly intimated to be JESUS OF NAZARETH, ver. 23—41.

4. That for the rebellion of the golden calf, or worshipping the true God under an Egyptian idolatrous symbol, he gave them up to worship false gods, to serve the host of heaven, during their wanderings of forty years in the wilderness, with which they were punished, when they worshipped the gods of the Moabites and Midianites, "Moloch †," or "Baal peor," the sun, as the procreative power of nature; and "Chiun †," or "Remphan †," the dog-star, the fertilizing power of the

* See this number of seventy-five souls, reconciled with the seventy of the OLD TESTAMENT, Gen. xlvi. 27, before, Vol. I. p. 143, 144.

† See this difficult prophecy of Amos, v. 25—27, explained and reconciled with Stephen's account, Vol. II. p. 405. And compare Deut. iv. 15—19, and Numb. xxv. 3, 2 Kings xxiii. 5.

Nile, described by the Prophet Amos; and that even after their settlement in the promised land, they retained and enlarged their Egyptian idolatries, adding thereto those of the neighbouring nations, the Sidonians, Syrians, &c. on the other side: for which repeated idolatries and rebellions, GOD threatened them with “captivity, beyond Damascus and beyond Babylon,” which was fulfilled in the Assyrian captivity of the ten tribes, and the Babylonian of the two remaining, foretold even from the time of *Moses; which should lead them, as he plainly intimated, to dread the last, or Roman captivity, foretold also by him, which was destined to destroy their holy place and nation, and to change their laws, unless they repented, ver. 42, 43.

5. To lessen their superstitious veneration for their temple, he recounts its origin, whence it appeared,

1. That Abraham and the Patriarchs worshipped GOD acceptably before either tabernacle or temple was built. 2. That the tabernacle was not built till the time of Moses; and that, after a model furnished by GOD himself, and therefore equally venerable as the temple, and that this moveable tabernacle continued all the days of Joshua, and the succeeding judges, till David's reign, without any want of a temple. 3. That David was precluded from building the temple, because he had been a man of blood; which was therefore reserved for his son Solomon, who was a man of peace. 4. That Solomon himself, in his dedication, and the prophets, corrected their gross ideas of THE DEITY, as if THE MOST HIGH, whom the heaven of heavens could not contain, whose throne is heaven, and the earth his footstool, could be confined within the precincts of an earthly temple, built with men's hands; or that He would accept any but a pure and spiritual worship, (1 Kings iii. 27—30; Isa. lxvi. 1, 2,) such as was really inculcated by the law of Moses, ver. 44—50.

From these premises he draws his most severe and pointed conclusion:

“Ye stiff necked, or stubborn generation, boasting of your carnal circumcision, as Abraham's children, but uncircumcised in heart and ears, in spirit and in obedience, ye do always, from the earliest times to the present, struggle against the HOLY SPIRIT, following the example of your fathers.

* See the foregoing explanation of Moses' prophecies, Vol. II. p. 209, &c.

“ Which of the Prophets did not your fathers persecute? and even slay those that foretold of the coming of the JUST ONE? of WHOM ye have now become betrayers and *murderers;” ye who boast that ye received THE LAW through innumerable ranks of angels, with the utmost pomp of Divine majesty, (Deut. xxxiii. 2,) but have not kept it!——It is ye therefore, and not I, that are destroying the temple, and changing the law, ver. 51—53.

“ When they heard these bitter but unanswerable reproaches, they were cut through their hearts, as with a saw, and they gnashed on him with their teeth,” in token of the most ungovernable rage and fury; but still they could not convict him, because his vindication was grounded throughout upon their OWN SCRIPTURES, and they could not deny the historical facts with which he charged them, ver. 54.

But as GOD had attested his innocence at the beginning of the trial, so now THE HOLY SPIRIT, of which he was full, THE FATHER and THE SON, rewarded him at the close of it, with the beatific vision, for his good confession, which he also witnessed as a faithful witness, treading in the steps of his LORD and MASTER; for looking stedfastly into the heaven he saw the glory of GOD, and JESUS standing at the right hand of GOD, and said, “ Lo, I behold the heavens opened, and THE SON OF MAN standing on the right hand of GOD,” thus fulfilling, early, in part, OUR LORD’S prophecy at his iniquitous trial, Matt. xxvi. 64. See p. 210 of this volume.

Without waiting any longer for the deliberation and judgment of the council, or for any formal sentence of death, as in CHRIST’S case, these frantic zealots, exclaiming with a loud voice, that he had spoken blasphemy, and stopping their ears, not to hear a word more in his defence, rushed unanimously upon him, in a tumultuous manner, and hurrying him out of the city, for fear of being prevented by Pilate and the temple guard, they stoned Stephen, calling upon †, and saying, LORD

* How strikingly does this resemble OUR LORD’S reproachful conclusion, Matt. xxiii. 32—38.

† The English Bible supplies “ calling upon GOD;” but the context plainly requires,

JESUS, receive my spirit! And falling on his knees, he exclaimed with a loud voice, LORD, lay not this sin to their charge! And having said this he fell asleep.—His devout friends, however, were suffered to carry his dead body to burial; and they made great lamentations for him, ver. 55—60, viii. 2.

FIRST JEWISH PERSECUTION.

The martyrdom of Stephen was probably one of the last outrages that disgraced Pilate's latter timid administration; who, even if he had time to interpose, and rescue this innocent victim from the rage of the zealots, probably was afraid of incurring the resentment of the Sanhedrim, who certainly were consenting to the deed, though they might not avowedly authorize it. But Pilate was displaced and recalled about this time, upon the complaint of the Samaritan senate to Vitellius, the president of Syria, for putting to death some of the heads of the Samaritans, in a sedition at Mount Gerizim, as we learn from Josephus, Ant. XVIII. 5, 2. Caiaphas, the high priest, his coadjutor, was also deposed by Vitellius soon after, who appointed Jonathan, son of Ananus, or Ananias, in his room. Ant. XVIII. 5, 3.

Availing themselves of this change of government, to Marcellus, and of the favour of Vitellius, who attended the passover of A.D. 35 at Jerusalem, and was entertained with great magnificence by the Jews; in return for which he remitted a part of their tribute, and restored to the temple the sacred robes of the high priest, which had been kept in the tower of Antonia, Ant. XVIII. 5, 3, the Sanhedrim set on foot a great persecution against the Church, in which all but the Apostles were scattered from Jerusalem throughout the regions of Judea and Samaria; which contributed to propagate the Gospel in those parts, Acts viii. 1—4.

In Samaria, Philip the deacon was very successful in preaching the Gospel; and the miraculous cures he wrought converted many, who were baptized; and among them Simon Magus, who for a long time had astonished the Samaritans with his sorceries, professing that he was the great power of God, (either their expected CHRIST, or THE HOLY SPIRIT, according to “calling upon THE LORD JESUS.” This is so express an act of worship addressed to CHRIST, “to receive his spirit,” that it can neither be denied nor evaded by any but such bigots in infidelity, as stopped their ears and stoned Stephen.

Irenæus,) but was himself astonished at the signs and great powers wrought by Philip, ver. 5—13.

Hearing of this early spiritual harvest, (foretold by OUR LORD, John iv. 35,) the Apostles at Jerusalem sent Peter and John to confirm them in the faith, who, by prayer and imposition of their hands, communicated to the converts THE HOLY SPIRIT, enabling them to speak in divers tongues, to prophecy, or preach by inspiration, and work miracles also; which was the sole prerogative of the Apostles. This tempted Simon Magus to offer them money for conferring on him the same privilege. But Peter, with great indignation, rejected the offer, and rebuked him for supposing that the gift of God could be purchased with money; and exhorted him to repent, and to pray to GOD to forgive the wickedness of his heart. Simon seemed penitent, and intreated that they would pray to THE LORD for him, to avert the punishment which they had threatened, ver. 14—24. He might, perhaps, have dreaded the fate of Ananias and Sapphira.

PHILIP THE EVANGELIST.

Meanwhile Philip was sent by THE SPIRIT to join a pious foreigner, the chamberlain of Candace, Queen of Ethiopia, or Abyssinia, at Gaza, on the border of the desert, southward between Palestine and Egypt, who was returning home from Jerusalem, and was reading in his chariot the prophecies of Isaiah; whence he appears to have been a proselyte to Judaism. The passage he was reading was the description of CHRIST'S sufferings, at his iniquitous trial, Isaiah liii. 7, 8. Philip asked him, Understandest thou what thou readest? He modestly answered, How can I without an instructor? whereupon Philip explained to him the prophecy, as relating not to Isaiah, but to CHRIST*; and upon confession of his faith, I believe that JESUS CHRIST is THE SON OF GOD, baptized him, and then suddenly disappeared; being caught away by THE SPIRIT OF THE LORD, northwards to Azotus: perhaps to afford the chamberlain a miraculous attestation of the truth of the new religion he had now gladly embraced. He, therefore, went on his way rejoicing; and we may presume, contributed to plant the Gospel in Ethiopia, ver. 26—40.

* See the foregoing translation and exposition of the 53d chapter of Isaiah, Vol. II. p. 404, &c.

CONVERSION OF SAUL.

THIS forms a remarkable epoch in THE HISTORY OF THE CHURCH, and begins its second chronological division, A.D. 35.

Saul was a Jew, of the tribe of Benjamin, a native of Tarsus in Cilicia, where was a celebrated school of philosophy*. He was educated at Jerusalem, under the famous Gamaliel the Old, and bred a Pharisee; and was excessively zealous for THE LAW, Romans ii. 1, Gal. i. 14, Acts xxii. 3, xxvi. 5. He had been consenting to the martyrdom of Stephen, and actually took care of the clothes of the witnesses who stoned him, Acts vii. 58, viii. 1.

Afterwards, he took an active and violent part in the ensuing persecution of the Christians, Acts viii. 3, xxii. 4, xxvi. 10. And having received authority from the chief priests, he dragged the saints, both men and women, from their houses to prison, and frequently punished them in all the Synagogues; and compelled them to blaspheme or abjure CHRIST throughout Judea, xxvi. 11.

And being excessively enraged against them on account of the progress made by the New Religion in foreign cities, and that, in consequence of the persecution which scattered the disciples; still breathing out threatening and slaughter, he applied to the high priest, and got letters of commission from him and the Presbytery, or Sanhedrim, addressed to the Jewish Synagogue at Damascus, the capital of Syria; that if he found any Christians there, men or women, to bring them prisoners to Jerusalem. He also got letters to the governor of Damascus, we may presume, to permit them to be brought from his jurisdiction, Acts ix. 2, xxii. 5, xxvi. 12, 2 Cor. xi. 32.

* “The Tarsic eloquence” was celebrated for sudden unpremeditated harangues, and prompt and ready replies: in which Paul excelled.

On his journey thither, as he approached to Damascus, at the Syrian town Caucabe, according to tradition, (so named by the people from Cochab, “a star,” or the luminous glory that then appeared to him) suddenly, at mid-day, a great light from the Heaven, exceeding the brightness of the Sun, shone round about* him and his company, at which they all fell to the ground, upon their faces. And Saul heard a voice saying unto him, in the Hebrew dialect, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? And he said, Who art thou, LORD? and the Lord said, “I am JESUS OF NAZARETH whom thou persecutest: It is hard for thee to kick against the goads †.”

Then Saul, trembling and astonished, said, LORD, what wilt thou have me to do? And THE LORD said unto him, Arise, and go into the city; and it shall be told thee what thou oughtest to do.

During this, his fellow-travellers stood astounded and affrighted, seeing the light, and hearing, indeed, the voice, (though not the words, or else, not understanding their meaning, 2 Cor. xiv. 2,) but seeing no one. And Saul arose from the ground, and when he opened his eyes, he saw no one, being blinded by the glory of that light; and his companions, leading him by the hand, conducted him to Damascus, Acts ix. 3—8, xxii. 6—11, xxvi. 13—15.

There he continued three days without seeing; during which he neither ate nor drank. So great was the agony of his mind, and so sharp his compunction. When, probably, he considered his blindness, alone of all the company, as a just judgment upon him for that mental blindness under which he had so long laboured; and for his deafness to the discourse, and to the declarations of the martyred Stephen; and for his utter insensibility to all the signs and wonders wrought in support of the Christian Faith; which even his own preceptor Gamaliel respected. That these were, indeed, the subject of his meditations, we may reasonably collect from the result, “his praying” for pardon with heartfelt sorrow and penitence to that LORD whom he had ignorantly persecuted, in persecuting his disciples, Acts ix. 9—11.

* This celestial light resembled that which appeared to the pious Shepherds near Bethlehem, on the night of the Nativity. See p. 55 of this volume.

† This was a proverbial expression of impotent rage, (like the ox kicking against the goad), which hurts only itself, not those against whom it is levelled. It is used by the ancient Greek writers; προς κεντρα μη λακτιζει τοις κρατουσι σου. “Kick not against the goads, with those who have you in their power.” Æschylus Prometh. 322. And also by Pindar, Isth. ii. 173. And by Terence, Nam quæ inscitia est, adversum stimulos calces. “For what folly is it for you to kick against the goads.” Phormio.

No sooner did that symptom of his conversion take place, though in secret, than that same gracious LORD, who had “separated him as a chosen vessel for the ministry, to which he intended him, even from the womb, (Gal. i. 15,) appeared in vision to Ananias, a pious disciple at Damascus, and sent him to Saul, with commission to restore him to sight; who went accordingly, in obedience to this command, and entering into the house, and laying his hands upon him, said, “Brother Saul, the LORD JESUS, who appeared to thee on the way by which thou camest, hath sent me, that thou mightest recover thy sight, and be filled with THE HOLY SPIRIT. And immediately, there fell from his eyes, as it were scales; and he instantly recovered his sight. And Ananias said, THE GOD of our Fathers chose thee to know his will and to see that JUST ONE, and to hear the voice of his mouth; because thou shalt be his witness unto all men, of what thou hast seen and heard. And now, why delayest thou? Arise, be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling upon the name of THE LORD.” And he arose, and was baptized; and after his baptism, we may presume, was filled with THE HOLY SPIRIT. Then he took food and was strengthened, Acts ix. 11—19, xxii. 12—16.

The blindness with which Saul alone, of all the company, was struck during this astonishing vision, was a significant chastisement; but designed in mercy to bring him to his right mind, and to impress on him, indelibly, a conviction of the reality of the vision; in addition to the evidence of the rest of the party, to which he twice solemnly appealed in public afterwards, at his trials before the Jewish council, and before King Agrippa. Ananias also, though not present at it, proved an additional voucher, by communicating from immediate revelation, that circumstance of CHRIST’S appearance to Paul, which none but himself knew. While Ananias, by his expostulation with THE LORD, deprecating a commission so apparently hazardous to such a notorious persecutor, shewed, that he was calm and collected, in full possession of the powers of his mind during the vision. The miracle also of restoring Saul to sight by the imposition of his hands, was sufficient to satisfy both Ananias and Saul that it was the same LORD JESUS who appeared to both. Nothing, therefore, is wanting to establish the evidence of this stupendous transaction throughout upon the firmest basis.

Saul, indeed, as THE LORD told Ananias, was “His chosen vessel, to bear his name, or propagate his religion before Gentiles and Kings, and sons of Israel; and to suffer greatly for his name’s sake,” Acts ix. 15, 16.

And, for this arduous office, he was eminently qualified and gifted. He was deeply versed in Jewish and Heathen philosophy, and from his education in both, was, perhaps, the most learned man of his own, or of any age: and he spoke, by inspiration, in more tongues, and languages than any, or than all the Apostles, or the most highly gifted converts, 1 Cor. xiv. 18. He was also the most powerful witness of CHRIST; for he saw him in glory, after his ascension, which none of the other Apostles did, until that last, most distinct, and most glorious appearance to the beloved John, in Patmos, A.D. 95, crowning all the preceding manifestations of THE GOD OF GLORY from Abraham’s days, B.C. 2093.

Thus, by a singular and most unexpected and surprizing dispensation of Him, “whose ways are not as our ways, nor HIS thoughts as our thoughts,” was Saul “the blasphemer” of CHRIST, and “persecutor” of his saints, made the first fruits of the dying martyr Stephen’s intercession for his murderers, in the true Spirit of his Divine Master, “LORD lay not this sin to their charge;” as a brand plucked out of the fire! and also, the first voucher to the truth of his testimony of seeing JESUS CHRIST in glory at the right hand of GOD, by what he himself soon after saw and heard on his journey to Damascus. But Saul, as he afterwards candidly and humbly confessed, after he had been the chief of sinners, obtained mercy, for these reasons, 1. Because he sinned ignorantly in disbelief, in disbelief of the GOSPEL, and ignorance of the elementary nature of the LAW, designed as a schoolmaster to bring us to CHRIST; and 2. That in his most striking case, and for the encouragement of the greatest sinners not to despair, JESUS CHRIST might shew forth to the world a pattern of his long sufferance to future believers, unto eternal life; by graciously entrusting, even to this blasphemer and persecutor, THE GLORIOUS GOSPEL of THE BLESSED GOD, and enabling and strengthening him to suffer so greatly for his sake, by undauntedly and perseveringly encountering trials and persecutions, enough to have made him of all men most miserable in this life, if he attested a falsehood in the sight of God, and in the face of the world; were it not for the animating hope of inheriting that crown of righteousness, reserved for him and for the faithful in the great day of retribution, after he had fought a good fight, kept the faith, and finished his course, after he had laboured more abundantly in planting the Gospel of the uncircumcision, than any of the Apostles of the circumcision; and withstood even to his face, Peter, the first of the Apostles, when his practice was inconsistent with his doctrine, 1 Tim. i. 11—16, 2 Tim. iv. 6—8, 1 Cor. xv. 15—19, 2 Cor. xi. 21—31, Gal. ii. 11—14.

Saul, after his baptism, remained some days with the disciples at Damascus; and immediately proclaimed in the Synagogues, JESUS* as THE CHRIST, THE SON OF GOD, Acts ix. 20, xx. 21. Gal. i. 15.

And all that heard him were amazed, and said, Is not this he who persecuted at Jerusalem them that called upon this name? and who came hither on purpose to bring them prisoners to the chief priests? But Saul was strengthened [in spirit] still more, and confuted the Jews residing in Damascus; proving, by comparing the prophecies (συμβιβάζων) that JESUS is THE CHRIST, Acts ix. 19—22.

This, indeed, was his usual mode of debating with the Jews every where, Acts xvii. 2, 3, xviii. 28, xxvi. 22, 23, xxviii. 23.

SUL RETIRES TO ARABIA.

During the persecution of the Church in Judea, Saul went into the heathen country of Arabia Petræa, as a place of security from the Jews. There he probably preached the Gospel also, Gal. i. 16.

Three years after his conversion, he returned to Damascus, A.D. 38, Gal. i. 18, corresponding to Luke's account, when many days had been fulfilled, Acts ix. 23. A phrase used also to express three years precisely, in the Old Testament, 1 Kings xi. 38, 39.

Here, the Jews rejected his testimony, as an Apostate, and conspired to kill him, and watched the city gates day and night

* The insertion of Ἰησοῦν, in the present text, is warranted by the two Syriac versions, the Vulgate, Ethiopic, Arabic, Armenian, Coptic, and several ancient MSS. It is also absolutely required by the context. For the Jews admitted CHRIST to be THE SON OF GOD; they only doubted or denied that Jesus of Nazareth was he.

for that purpose, and procured the Syrian governor's concurrence. But the plot being made known to Saul, the disciples let him down from the city wall in a basket, by night; and so he escaped out of their hands, Acts ix. 23—25, Gal. i. 17, 18, 2 Cor. xi. 32, 33.

Though Luke, in the Acts, passed over in silence Saul's visit to Arabia, he was evidently well acquainted therewith, and with Paul's account of it in the Epistle to the Galatians and Corinthians, with which his own so exactly, though tacitly, harmonizes. He purposely omitted this early part of Paul's history, as he did afterwards his voyage to Crete, as being both inconsiderable, compared with his more public ministry in the populous cities and countries of Asia and Europe; which form the principal part of the Acts; and to which he hastens, after a cursory view of the earlier transactions. Medias in res rapit.

SAUL'S FIRST VISIT TO JERUSALEM.

After his escape from Damascus, Saul went up to Jerusalem, A.D. 38, for the first time since his conversion; chiefly as he says, to get acquainted* (ιστορησαι) with Peter, Gal. i. 18. This, indeed, was a natural wish, from the resemblance of their dispositions and characters†, as marked by similar zeal and similar situations: both had erred, both had been converted; Peter, by a pitying, but penetrating look of his suffering LORD; Saul, by the brightness of his glory; Peter had been restored, upon repentance, to his Apostolic rank; Saul had been also, upon repentance, raised thereto. Both were susceptible of the warmest attachments.

————— *Mihi mens juvenili ardebat amore,
Compellare virum, et dextræ conjungere dextram.*

“ *Great souls, by instinct to each other turn,
Demand alliance, and in friendship burn.*”

We need not, however, be surprized at the shyness of the brethren at Jerusalem to associate with Saul, at first, when he proposed himself. They knew him to have been a most furious bigot and

* Josephus celebrates the uncommon valour of a Roman centurion, Julian, at the siege of Jerusalem, with whom, says he, “ I got acquainted (ιστορησα) during that war.” Bell. Jud. vi. 1, 8.

† Estque ea jucundissima amicitia quam similitudo morum conjugavit.—Disparēs mores, disparia studia sequuntur, quorum dissimilitudo dissociat amicitias. Cicero, De Offic. I. 17. De Amicit. 20.

persecutor; and were probably quite unacquainted with his miraculous conversion; there being then but little intercourse with Damascus, during Herod's war with Aretas; and less between Jerusalem and Arabia, to which he had retired. But Barnabas, who is said to have been his fellow-student under Gamaliel, and knew him early, took him by the hand, and introduced him to the Apostles, Peter and James, the LORD'S brother, who then were at Jerusalem, and recounted all the circumstances of his conversion. Whereupon, they admitted him freely to their society, Acts ix. 26—28, Gal. i. 18, 19.

In Jerusalem, Saul spake boldly in the name of THE LORD JESUS, and debated with the Grecising Jews; but they attempted to kill him, Acts ix. 28, 29.

At this time, while Saul was praying in the Temple, he fell into an ecstasy, or trance, and saw CHRIST, who said unto him, Hasten and depart quickly out of Jerusalem, because they will not favourably receive thy testimony concerning me. But Saul pleaded for a longer stay, alledging that his former persecution of the Saints, and concurrence in the martyrdom of Stephen, contrasted with his present conversion to CHRIST, could not fail to persuade the Jews. THE LORD, however, knew their bigotry better, and that his labour among them would be in vain; and replied, "Go, for I will send thee forth as an extra-Apostle, (ἐξαποστειλω) to the remote Gentiles," Acts xxii. 17—21, "selecting thee (ἐξαιρουμενος σε) from the people of the Jews, and from the Gentiles, to whom [the latter] I am now going to send thee forth, (νυν αποστειλλω) to turn them from darkness to light, and from the jurisdiction of Satan unto GOD; in order that they might receive remission of sins, and an allotment among those that are sanctified by faith toward ME," Acts xxvi. 17, 18*.

Not disobeying therefore the heavenly vision, Saul staid this time only fifteen days in Jerusalem, Gal. i. 18. And the brethren also, well knowing the malice of the Zealots, escorted him to Cæsarea; and sent him away by land through the Churches of Judea, to Tarsus, his native city in Cilicia, Acts ix. 30, Gal. i.

* This is introduced in Paul's apology before King Agrippa, as if it immediately followed the first vision of Christ in the way to Damascus; the Apostle passing over the second vision or trance at Jerusalem, at which it really happened, when CHRIST said, "But arise, and stand upon thy feet: for to this end I appeared unto thee, [at first, ωφθην] to ordain thee a minister and witness of what thou sawest [then, ειδες] and of my future appearances to thee' (ὡν οφθησομαι σοι.) xxvi. 16.

21, 22. There he remained three or four years, till Barnabas summoned him to assist in preaching the Gospel, Acts xi. 25.

REST OF THE CHURCHES IN JUDEA, &c.

After the first persecution had raged about four years, an unexpected persecution of the Jews themselves put a stop to it. Caius Caligula, the Roman Emperor, about A.D. 39, commanded that his statue should be set up in the temple of Jerusalem: and sent Petronius, president of Syria, with a large army from Antioch, into Judea, to enforce obedience to his edict, under pain of death to the opposers, and of slavery to the whole nation unless they submitted thereto.

This was, indeed, a thunderstroke. And the universal consternation produced thereby, absorbed all inferior concerns. They desisted from persecuting the Christians, to deprecate this outrageous contempt of their laws and sacrilegious profanation of their temple. And when Petronius had advanced as far as Ptolemais, they earnestly besought him to suspend the execution of the order until they could send an embassy to Rome, and endeavour to deprecate and prevent this abomination. Petronius, unwilling to proceed to extremities, granted their request, and they sent an embassy accordingly; the history of which has been written by Philo, one of the deputies. But this only provoked the tyrant's rage—he was much displeased with Petronius for his delay, and threatened to go in person to Alexandria to enforce obedience. But fortunately for them, he was assassinated before he could fulfil his intentions, A.D. 40. Josephus has given a circumstantial account of his assassination. See also Lardner, Vol. I. p. 97—100.

During this time the Churches throughout all Judea and Galilee and Samaria, had peace, or respite from persecution; and being edified, or instructed by the Apostles, in the fundamental doctrines of THE GOSPEL, and walking in the fear of the LORD, and in the comfort of the HOLY SPIRIT, were multiplied, Acts ix. 31.

Peter in particular, took a circuit through the home Churches of Judea to confirm them in the faith; and at Lydda, a town between Jerusalem and Joppa, he cured a patient who had been confined eight years to his bed with a palsy. “Æneas, said he, JESUS CHRIST healeth thee, arise, and make thy bed,” and he arose immediately; and all the inhabitants of Lydda, and of the vale of Sharon, saw him, and turned to THE LORD, Acts ix. 32—35.

Proceeding to *Joppa, on the sea coast, about ten miles from Iydda, in compliance with a message brought by two of the disciples there, requesting he would come to them without delay; he restored to life a female disciple, called Tabitha in Hebrew, or Dorcas in Greek, (signifying the Gazel or Antelope, remarkable for its fine eyes) who was laid out in an upper chamber. For, excluding all the mourners, he fell on his knees, and prayed TO THE LORD, (προσηύξατο) and then turning to the body, said, Tabitha, arise! And she opened her eyes, and seeing Peter, sate up. And giving her his hand, he raised her, and then calling the saints and the widows that had been cloathed by her bounty, he presented her alive. And this miracle was made known throughout all the region of Joppa, and many believed ON THE LORD. This spiritual harvest probably induced Peter to spend many days at Joppa, where he lodged with one Simon, a tanner, Acts ix. 36—43; and we may observe, in the neighbourhood of Jabneh or Jamnia, where the Sanhedrim sometimes sate; the very center of Judaism.

CONVERSION OF CORNELIUS.

This also forms a memorable epoch in the History of the Church as the first fruits of the conversion of the Gentiles to CHRIST. We may date it A.D. 41, with the Bible Chronology.

Cornelius was a devout Roman centurion of the Italian band, or cohort, which was probably the life guard of the Roman governor residing at Cæsarea; “who feared GOD with all his house; and gave much alms to the people of the Jews, not confining his bounty to his own countrymen, and prayed to GOD continually †,” Acts x. 1, 2.

* Joppa was the nearest sea port to Jerusalem, and about 40 miles distant. It is now called Jaffa, recovering its ancient name, Japho, belonging to the tribe of Dan, Josh. xix. 46. As it lay between Azotus and Cæsarea, it was probably one of the towns in which Philip preached the Gospel, Acts viii. 40.

† From the admirable character of this Roman, we are strongly inclined to suspect, (though the conjecture is unwarranted by any of the commentators) that this was the centurion who attended CHRIST’s crucifixion; and was evidently converted thereby. See the foregoing remarks, p. 234 of this volume. It was only ten years after. And he might have been permanently stationed at Cæsarea, the seat of the Roman government. If so, we can humbly see an appropriate reason why he should be so highly distinguished and honoured by GOD on this occasion, after having been a blasphemer and

About the ninth hour of the day, or stated hour of evening prayer, he saw in vision plainly, an Angel of God entering into the house to him at his private devotions, and saying unto him, Cornelius! And he looking stedfastly at the Angel, and being possessed with fear, said, What is it, LORD? And he said, Thy prayers and thine alms are ascended like the fragrant incense, for a memorial before GOD, (Levit. ii. 2, Rev. v. 8;) and now send messengers to Joppa, and call for Simon, surnamed Peter; he lodgeth with one Simon, a tanner, whose house is by the sea side. He shall declare unto thee what thou oughtest to do [to attain eternal life] ver. 3—6.

When the Angel had departed, Cornelius accordingly sent two of his servants and a devout soldier of his band*, to Joppa, with the message; about thirty miles southward of Cæsarea; who arrived there next day about noon, ver. 7—9.

While they were approaching to the city, Peter went up on the house top to pray, about the sixth hour of noon, fasting. And after he had finished his devotions, he was hungry and wished to take some refreshment; but while the family were preparing it, he fell into an ecstasy, or trance; and beheld the heaven opened, and a certain vessel or receptacle, resembling a great square sheet, tied with four cords †, let down upon the earth, wherein were all sorts of tame and wild beasts, reptiles, and birds. And there came a voice to him saying, Arise, Peter, sacrifice, and eat. But Peter said, By no means, LORD; for I never did eat any thing common or unclean. And the voice again said to him a second time, What GOD hath purified, count not thou common. This was done thrice. And the vessel was taken up again into the Heaven, ver. 9—16.

While Peter was perplexed in himself, what could be the depersecutor in ignorance, like Saul himself. To him, only, an Angel appeared, perhaps Gabriel, Dan. viii. 16, Luke i. 19.

* The original expression, τῶν προσκατερουνητῶν αὐτοῦ, “of those that adhered to him” in his belief and practice, is very remarkable; and tends to justify the foregoing conjecture, by pointing out this devout soldier also as one of the Roman guard, attendant on the crucifixion, who was then converted, p. 234 of this volume.

† Τεσσαρσιν ἀρχαῖς. Diodorus Siculus uses the phrase, ἀρχὰς στῦπινας, “hempen strings,” or cords, in describing the mode of harpooning the Hippopotamus, εἰθ’ ἐν τῶν ἐμπαγεντῶν ἐναπτοντες ἀρχὰς στῦπινας, ἀφιασι, μέχρις ἀν παραλυθῆ, Edit. Rhod. p. 32, as ingeniously noticed by Wakefield. If ἀρχαῖς signified “corners,” (as in the English Bible) the article ταις should be prefixed, as in Matt. xxiv. 31, τῶν τεσσαρῶν ἀνεμῶν. Middleton, p. 400.

sign of this allegorical vision, and was ruminating thereon, THE HOLY SPIRIT, as soon as the messengers of Cornelius arrived, and enquired for Peter; desired him to arise, descend, and go with the three men that sought him, without hesitation; for that they were sent by HIMSELF. Then Peter descended, and having asked the reason of their coming, and received their message, he entertained them hospitably that day; and went with them the next, accompanied by six of the brethren from Joppa, (Acts xi. 12,) ver. 17—23, a prudent precaution, not only consistent with his apostolic rank, which made it improper that he should go unattended; but also, that they might be joint witnesses of what might happen, and advisers of what ought to be done in such a singular and unprecedented case.

In SACRED HISTORY, no circumstance, even apparently the slightest, is insignificant. “From Joppa, the prophet Jonah was sent to preach to the Gentiles at Nineveh; and from thence the Apostle Peter, (probably his descendant) was sent to preach the Gospel to the Gentiles of Cæsarea,” according to the ingenious analogy noticed by Benson.

When Peter and his attendants, who had stopped by the way on the third night, were entering into Cæsarea, the fourth morning, Cornelius, (having received notice of his approach,) came to meet him, through respect, accompanied by his kinsmen and intimate friends; and falling at his feet, was going to worship him, as more than mortal; a most extraordinary instance of veneration from those proudest of mortals, the Romans; but Peter stopped and raised him, saying, I also myself am a man. He then freely conversed with him, entered into his house, and found many others there assembled, ver. 24—27.

And Peter said unto them, Ye know that it is unlawful for a Jew to associate with a foreigner; but GOD hath shewed me to call no man common or unclean. Therefore, also, without gainsaying, came I, when sent for. I ask, therefore, upon what account ye sent for me? ver. 28, 29. Though Peter knew beforehand, by the messengers, upon what account in general; yet he wished to learn the particulars more fully, both for his own and his companions' information.

Cornelius then recounted all the circumstances of the vision; and concluded with his thanks to Peter for coming, and a solemn request to receive divine instruction from him. “Thou hast well done in coming hither. Now, therefore, are all we here present, ready and desirous to hear all GOD'S commands to thee respecting us," ver. 30—33.

Then Peter opened his mouth with much solemnity, and said, In truth, "I now comprehend, that GOD is no respecter of persons; but in every nation, whosoever feareth HIM, and worketh righteousness, is acceptable unto Him," ver. 34, 35.

This noble declaration of the impartiality of GOD, seems to have been a new light or unexpected illumination suddenly bursting upon his mind, to dispel the mists of his national prejudices. For though CHRIST had commissioned his Apostles to discipline and baptize all nations, in his final instructions; yet, several circumstances had prevented them from comprehending the spirit of the Gospel hitherto.

1. OUR LORD himself had early declared, that "salvation was of the Jews;" and, according to their narrow interpretation, confined to the Jews. 2. He also declared, that "he was not sent, but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel;" to "feed the children, not the dogs;" and 3. He charged his disciples, on their first circuit during his ministry, neither to go into the way of the Gentiles, nor enter into any city of the Samaritans, but rather, to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, and 4. in his last instructions, to be HIS witnesses in Judea and Samaria, and unto the ends of the earth, they might have understood "the earth" in the limited sense of the Holy Land. And that they did, indeed, so understand him, is evident; 1. from the conduct of Peter himself, and of the Apostles at Jerusalem, who preached only to their own nation; 2. and of the Disciples and Evangelists dispersed by the first persecution of Stephen, in Phœnicia, Cyprus, and Antioch, who preached the word to none but Jews only, Acts xi. 19; and 3. from the equal surprize expressed by Peter's company, and the rest of the Apostles, and Mother Church as Jerusalem, at the effusion of the HOLY SPIRIT upon these first fruits of the Gentile converts before their baptism, putting no difference between them and the Jews themselves on the day of Pentecost; for so Peter remarked and pleaded in his apology. "And when they of Jerusalem heard the whole account, they were silent; and glorified GOD, saying, Then (αγα) hath GOD granted to the Gentiles also repentance unto life eternal!" xi. 18, as a matter of surprize and astonishment. The same, indeed, is the purport of Peter's declaration; "I now at length comprehend, what I did not, before I had seen the allegorical vision, as now explained by the application of these Gentiles for information respecting that perfect rule of faith, prescribed in THE GOSPEL; that GOD hath not confined his mercies to a particular nation only, but that all are capable of receiving the higher privileges of the GOSPEL, even eternal life, who are duly prepared, by the fear of GOD, and the practice of righteousness; upon the conditions of repentance toward GOD, faith toward JESUS CHRIST, as THEIR LORD, and baptism in the name of THE TRINITY."

The speech of Peter was worthy of the exordium; but it bears unequivocal marks of unusual agitation of mind in the involution, or embarrassed construction of its first periods, so different from the concise simplicity of his former speeches; this rather resembles Paul's style.

"The word, (τον λογον) or Gospel, which GOD sent forth to the children of Israel, publishing peace, by JESUS CHRIST, (who is LORD OF ALL) ye know; [namely,] the oracular word (το ρημα), (that was [spread] through all Judea, beginning from Galilee; after the baptism which John proclaimed) [concerning] JESUS OF NAZARETH: how GOD anointed him with THE HOLY SPIRIT and with POWER. Who went about doing good, and healing all those that were tyrannized over by the Devil: because GOD was with Him.

"And we are witnesses of all that He did in the country of the Jews [Judea and Galilee,] and in Jerusalem; whom they [of Jerusalem] hanged upon a cross, and slew.

"THIS same GOD raised up, the third day; and shewed Him openly: not to all the people, but to us, the witnesses previously chosen by GOD, who did eat with him and drink with him, after his resurrection from the dead.

"And He commissioned us to proclaim to the people, [of the Jews,] and to testify thoroughly, that it is He himself who is ordained by GOD, JUDGE of quick and dead.

"To HIM, testify all the prophets; that every one who believeth on Him, [whether Jew or Gentile,] shall receive, through his name or religion, remission of sins," ver. 36—43.

1. In this speech, Peter appeals to the general knowledge even of the Gentiles, in the regions through which the GOSPEL was preached, of the active benevolence and miracles of mercy performed by JESUS CHRIST, in the course of his ministry, as the surest test that GOD was with him.

2. He vouches the reality of his miracles, of his crucifixion, and of his resurrection, by the testimony of the Apostles, his chosen witnesses; who, from their number, knowledge, and integrity, were sufficient to satisfy the most scrupulous enquirers; whereas, all the people of Jerusalem were as unfit as unworthy of such a special revelation; as was, indeed, evinced already in the mockery of the vulgar, on the day of Pentecost; and in the subsequent persecutions by the Sanhedrim, after the most stupendous miracles, and the most indisputable by their own confession, wrought in the name of CHRIST.

3. He supports the testimony of the Apostles to these facts, (in which they did not volunteer, but were expressly commissioned by GOD and CHRIST,) by the whole series of ancient prophecy, addressed to the Jews, indeed, but foretelling the universal redemption of mankind through faith in CHRIST.

The stupendous issue of this speech, uttered in all the plenitude of divine inspiration, accorded therewith. While Peter was still speaking these oracular words (σηματα), THE HOLY SPIRIT fell upon all the hearers, (probably with a visible illumination.) And they of the circumcision who accompanied Peter were astonished, because the gift of the HOLY SPIRIT was poured out also upon the Gentiles; for they heard them speaking in tongues, and magnifying GOD, ver. 44—46, as on the day of Pentecost.

Then answered Peter, Can any one object, why water should not be brought, that these might be baptized who have now received the HOLY SPIRIT, as well as we, originally? And he commanded them to be baptized in the name of THE LORD, ver. 47, 48, and he afterwards thus apologized for doing so before the Church at Jerusalem; “Forasmuch then, as GOD gave them the like gift as he did unto us who believed on the LORD JESUS CHRIST; what was I, that I could withstand GOD?” Acts xi. 17.

Cornelius has been represented by Lord Barrington, and several commentators, as a lower proselyte to Judaism, which they call “a proselyte of the gate,” supposed to be uncircumcised, and bound only to the observance of the seven Noachic precepts; as distinguished from a perfect proselyte, or proselyte of justice, who was circumcised, and bound to keep the law of Moses. But there is no foundation for this distinction of proselytes in Scripture; for every uncircumcised person was considered as an "alien from the commonwealth of Israel," Eph. ii. 12; not being entitled to possess land; nor to enjoy the privileges of citizens. The proselyte of the gate was no other than the "stranger within thy gates," who was permitted to sojourn in the land, on submitting to circumcision and the observance of the law of Moses, Exod. xx. 10, Deut. v. 14; and was clearly distinguished from the alien, or foreigner, Deut. xiv. 21. But Cornelius was an alien, or foreigner (αλλοφυλω), with whom, Peter observed, that it was unlawful for a Jew to associate hospitably, as the word κολλασθαι implies; nor even to go into their houses, as implied by προσερχεσθαι, ver. 28, as confirmed by the censure of the Judaizing Christians at Jerusalem, "Thou wentest in to men uncircumcised, and didst eat with them," Acts xi. 3*.

Some freethinkers have grafted a dangerous error upon Peter's declaration of the terms of acceptance with GOD, to undervalue or exclude CHRISTIANITY; as if to fear GOD, and work righteousness, were the only duties every where essentially necessary to salvation; but that these were as old as the creation, inculcated by NATURAL RELIGION, and adopted by the PATRIARCHAL, Heb. xi. 6; Job xix. 25; and by the MOSAICAL, Matt. xxii. 40.

This may be refuted, and it should seem fully and satisfactorily,

1. By the case of Cornelius himself, who, though he possessed these requisites, was further, by a special revelation, required to embrace CHRISTIANITY,

2. By the general commission to the Apostles, to publish the GOSPEL throughout the whole world, or glad tidings of salvation upon the further terms of faith and baptism in the name of THE TRINITY.

3. Upon both accounts, therefore, Peter required Cornelius to be baptized, or admitted into the Christian Church, and entitled thereby to its higher benefits and privileges.

4. Paul has clearly stated the higher privileges of Jews above Gentiles, and of Christians above both, in his doctrinal epistles to the Romans and to the Hebrews.

* See this subject fully discussed by Lardner, VI. p. 522—530; who has satisfactorily shewn that this distinction between the two sorts of Jewish proselytes was not found in any Christian writer before the fourteenth century, or later.

5. NATURAL RELIGION, if opposed to REVEALED, is a mere fiction of false philosophy. “The world by [human] wisdom, knew not GOD,” at any time, from the creation; as we learn from that profound philosopher Paul, expressly asserting the fact to the first philosophers of Greece, 1 Cor. i. 21. Such knowledge being too wonderful and excellent for the attainment of mankind by the confession of the Patriarchs and Prophets, Job xi. 7, xxxvii. 23; Psalm cxxxix. 6; and of the wisest of the Heathen philosophers themselves, Socrates, &c.

6. The Patriarchal and Mosaical dispensations were only “school-masters to the Christian,” designed to train the world gradually for its reception in the fulness of time: as subordinate parts of one grand scheme of REDEMPTION, embracing all mankind; instituted at the creation, Gen. iii. 15, and gradually unfolding to the end of the world, John iii. 16; Rev. i. 18.

“All are but parts of one stupendous whole.”—Pope.

“Parts, like half sentences, confound; the whole
Conveys the sense; and GOD is understood;
Who, not in fragments writes to human race:
Read his whole volume, sceptic, then reply!”—Young.

Thus did Peter first exert the power of “the keys,” granted to him by his gracious Master, Matt. xvi. 19, by being made the foremost of the Apostles, to open the door of faith to the first fruits of the Jews, on the memorable day of Pentecost; and of the Gentiles, on this equally memorable day of their conversion. With whom, on their entreaty, he remained some days, Acts x. 48.

While Peter was thus employed on his circuit through Judea, the disciples dispersed on Stephen's persecution, spread the Gospel to Phœnicia, Cyprus, and Antioch, in Syria, speaking the word to none but Jews only. But hearing of the conversion of Cornelius, some of them, men of Cyprus and of Cyrene, preached the LORD JESUS to the *Greeks, or idolatrous Gentiles, at Antioch; and the hand of THE LORD was with them, and a great number believed, and turned [from their idols] unto THE LORD, Acts xi. 19—21. Compare Acts xv. 19; 1 Thess. i. 9.

* Instead of the received reading, Ἑλληνιστας, Griesbach substitutes Ἕλληνας, upon the authority of several ancient MSS. and most of the ancient versions. Which is also evidently required by the context, because they were idolaters; whereas the Hellenists were Jews.

When the report of their success reached the ears of the Mother Church at Jerusalem, they sent, as usual, Barnabas to confirm the new converts in the faith, who was himself a good man, and full of the HOLY SPIRIT and of faith. Finding a considerable increase in their numbers, he went to Tarsus to seek Saul as an associate in the ministry, and brought him to Antioch. In that capital city they spent an entire year, which became the Mother Church of the Gentile converts; who then were first denominated Christians, ver. 22—26, while they were denominated Nazarenes by the unbelieving Jews, Acts xxiv. 5. We may date this occurrence, A.D. 43.

SAUL'S SECOND VISIT TO JERUSALEM.

During those days, some prophets, or inspired preachers, came down from Jerusalem to Antioch, among whom was Agabus, who predicted a great famine throughout the whole land of Judea, which accordingly took place next year, A.D. 44, in the fifth year of Claudius Cæsar. Josephus has noticed this famine, and the relief which the people of Jerusalem obtained from Helena, queen of Adiabene, and her son Izates, Ant. XX. 2—6, which is recorded also in the Rabbinical Work, Joma, p. 66.

To relieve the suffering brethren in Judea, a collection was made by those of Antioch, each contributing according to his ability, and sent to "the Presbyters," or Church at Jerusalem, by the hand of Barnabas and Saul, ver. 27—30.

SECOND JEWISH PERSECUTION.

Herod Agrippa, the grandson of Herod the Great, by his son Aristobulus, had been appointed king of the Tetrarchies of Philip and Lysanias, by Caius Caligula, upon his accession to the empire, on the death of Tiberius, A.D. 36, at the same time that Marullus was appointed procurator of Judea, Joseph. Ant. XVIII. 7—10. After the assassination of Caligula, and the accession of Claudius, A.D. 40, the new emperor, to reward Agrippa's services on that occasion, granted him all his grandfather's dominions of Judea and Samaria, added to what he possessed before, Ant. XIX. 5—1. We may date this full grant A.D. 41. But he reigned three years after it, Ant. XIX. 8—2. And in the last year of his reign, A.D. 44, soon after the commencement of the famine, in order to please his new subjects the Jews *, “Herod, the king, stretched forth his hands to molest certain [Presbyters] of the Church. And he slew James, the brother of John, with the sword; and seeing that this was acceptable to the Jews, he proceeded further to seize and imprison Peter also, at the time of the passover,” intending to bring him forth to execution after the passover *, Acts xii. 1—4.

The historical accuracy of Luke on this occasion is remarkable. This short interval of Agrippa's reign was the only time from the deposal of Archelaus that the Jews had a king of their own, till the end of their state.

Thus was our Lord's prediction fulfilled respecting James, the elder of the sons of Zebedee, that he should drink of his master's cup, as the first martyr among the Apostles; while he graciously spared Peter, that main pillar of the Mother Church, for further services and sufferings when he should grow old, as he promised. Upon this ground, perhaps, incessant prayer was made by the Church to GOD for his deliverance. And their prayer was heard; for on the very night before Herod intended to have brought him forth to execution, while Peter was sleeping, with all the calmness of conscious innocence, between two soldiers, having each hand bound with a single chain to each soldier, according to the Roman custom, (Acts xxviii. 20; Ephes. vi. 20,) he was suddenly liberated by an Angel of the LORD, who brought him out of the prison, and through the iron gate of the city, and then left him near the house of Mark the Evangelist. After sending an account of his miraculous deliverance to James, (his successor in the superintendance of the Mother Church, as first Bishop of Jerusalem,) and to the brethren, he retired to another place, out of Herod's dominions, to avoid the tyrant's fury; probably to Antioch, (Gal. ii. 11,) to visit that first Gentile Church, whose bounty he had so recently shared, ver. 5—17.

Herod, probably, to counteract the report of this miracle, condemned the guards to be put to death, as if they had betrayed their trust, and soon after was smitten himself by an Angel of THE LORD, because he accepted the acclamation of the Tyrians, It is the voice of a God and not of a man, without giving GOD

* Josephus represents Agrippa as a munificent prince, who courted popularity, resided much at Jerusalem, and was zealous for the law, Ant. XIX. 7—3; which corresponds exactly with the Evangelist's account. Agrippa was, probably, afraid to execute Peter during the passover, for fear of exciting an insurrection in Galilee, where Peter was most popular, or a rescue by the Galileans at the feast.

the glory; and was devoured by vermin, and expired miserably, ver. 18—23, on the fifth day after he was struck, according to Josephus; who states, that for not rejecting this impious adulation, (την κολακειαν ασεβουσαν) he perceived over his head, *an owl, the messenger of ills, and was instantly struck with insupportable pains in his bowels; and exclaimed, weeping to his friends, I your God, am summoned to leave the world; and I, called by you, immortal, am now hurried away to death! Ant. XIX. 8—2. Josephus unquestionably had seen Luke's account, which he thus parodied, and varnished the plain simple narrative in the Acts, with his Heathenish gloss.

SAUL'S VISION AND REVELATIONS.

During Saul's stay at Jerusalem, A.D. 44, “fourteen years before he wrote his second Epistle to the Corinthians,” A.D. 58, he was favoured with some remarkable visions and revelations of THE LORD; when, (whether in the body or out of the body, he knew not, GOD only knew) he was rapt, at one time, into the third Heaven; and at another time, into Paradise; where he heard “unutterable words, which it is not permitted man to speak,” 2 Cor. xii. 1—4.

These different scenes of future glory, the higher, in the highest Heaven, with GOD, and all his holy Angels, after the general resurrection; the lower, in Paradise, or that place of glory † also, set apart in Hades (or the general receptacle of

* Virgil represents a fury in the form of an owl, appearing to Turpinus during his combat with Aeneas, and terrifying him by screaming and flapping his shield with her wings.

Hanc versa in faciem, Turni, se, Pestis, ob ora

Pertque refertque, sonans, clypeumque everberat alis. Æneid. xii. 865.

† See the foregoing note, on “Judas going to his own place,” Acts i. 25, which was considered by the ancient Fathers, Clemens Romanus, Irenæus, Justin Martyr, &c. as a place of “torment,” with Luke xvi. 33. See also bishop Bull's two learned and excellent Sermons, on the intermediate state of the soul after death, Vol. I. p. 39—134. In which he has ably traced the origin of the Popish doctrine of Purgatory, from its embryo, a Platonic notion of Origen, that the faithful, not excepting the Apostles themselves, shall undergo a purgation in the great conflagration to precede the general judgment; but which Augustine doubted might take place earlier, between death and the resurrection, as to the souls of more imperfect Christians; this was adopted by the superstitious Pope Gregory the Great; and at length turned into an article of faith, by the council of Florence, in 1439. And fiercely maintained ever since, more for its gain than its Godliness. A gross imposition, that hath been, I am persuaded, says bishop Bull, the eternal ruin of thousands of souls, for whom our blessed Lord shed his most precious blood: who might have escaped Hell, if they had not trusted to a purgatory!

departed spirits) for the spirits of the good and just; who are there gathered to their Fathers, with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and are there “comforted,” and “live before GOD in a state of joy and felicity ;” awaiting their perfect consummation of bliss, both in body and soul, in Heaven, after the general resurrection ; seem to have been designed for Paul’s comfort, support, and encouragement under his ensuing trials and persecutions, by giving him a foretaste, as it were, of that fullness of joy and pleasures for evermore, at GOD’S right hand in Heaven ; and that antecedent bliss with CHRIST, which eye hath not seen nor ear heard, nor hath entered into the heart of man to conceive, in Paradise, Psalm xvi. 11, Isai. lxiv. 4, 1 Cor. ii. 9, Phil. i. 23, Luke xxiii. 43.

They seem also admirably calculated to instruct the infidel world; refuting by anticipation, that mischievous heresy of the Novellists, about the middle of the third century, mentioned by Eusebius, Eccl. Hist. VI. 37, who held, that the souls of men die with their bodies, but are restored to life together with the same bodies at the resurrection ; nearly analogous to which, is the supposed sleep of the soul during the interval between death and the resurrection. For it is evident, from the Apostle’s doubts, whether he saw these visions in the body, or out of the body, that he clearly held the different natures of the soul and body, and that the former might subsist in a sentient state, totally separate, or detached from the latter; and that it is, indeed, actually separated from the body at death, he asserts elsewhere, “We prefer rather to be absent from the body, and to be present with THE LORD,” or I prefer death to life, 2 Cor. v. 8. “I am desirous to depart [from the body,] and to be with CHRIST ; for this is better for me by far ; but to remain in the flesh, is more necessary for you ;” or for your improvement in the faith, Phil. i. 23, 24. But how would it be far better for the Apostle to die, if his soul was then to be deprived of all sense, and sink into a total lethargy, and utter oblivion of things, as in profound sleep ? or, how could such a state of insensibility gratify his ardent wish to be with CHRIST in Paradise ?

To prevent the Apostle, however, from being over-elated by this excellency of Revelations, vouchsafed to him, and to remind him constantly of the imperfection of his nature, he was tried with a thorn in the flesh, an Angel of Satan permitted to buffet him, through the whole course of his ministry, 2 Cor. xii. 7.

What this "thorn in the flesh" was, the Apostle has nowhere precisely explained, though he has repeatedly alluded thereto. From what he has said, however, we may collect, that it was some remarkable bodily infirmity, which rendered his "presence weak, or sickly, (ασθενης;) or impediment, which rendered his speech contemptible," (εξουθενημενος,) 2 Cor. x. 10.

And this thorn in the flesh goaded him from the beginning of his ministry. "Ye know, says he to the Galatians, how through infirmity of the flesh, I preached the Gospel to you at the first. And my trial in the flesh ye despised not, nor rejected; but received me as an Angel of GOD, even as CHRIST JESUS," Gal. iv. 13, 14. And this bodily infirmity, he represented as a great impediment to his preaching; to the Corinthians especially. "And I was with you, in weakness and in fear, and in much trembling," 1 Cor. ii. 3. Whence some have suspected, that he was subject to the epilepsy, or falling sickness, or to the palsy, which might have affected his speech or utterance*. And, perhaps, might have been occasioned by the glory of those very revelations, proving too mighty for his weak frame; as he was deprived of sight by the first overpowering vision of CHRIST, on the way to Damascus.

This painful "thorn in the flesh," (or "trial in the flesh," or "infirmity of the flesh," which are all synonymous,) is called also "an angel, or messenger of Satan, sent to buffet him," for they are plainly set in apposition to each other, by the want of a copulative particle between them, (which is improperly understood, by some commentators, reckoning the latter to be the false Apostle, who principally opposed Paul at Corinth.) It was therefore denominated a "messenger of Satan," as a disease inflicted on him by Satan, with the Divine permission and appointment, as formerly on Job, or on that "daughter of Abraham, or pious Jewess, whom Satan had bound with a spirit of infirmity for eighteen years, before JESUS compassionately loosed her from her bond," Luke xiii. 11—16.

But when Paul, though one of the most excellent of the sons of Abraham, repeatedly and earnestly "besought THE LORD thrice, that he might be relieved therefrom," he was refused, as

* It seems to be a confirmation of this conjecture, that Paul twice prayed for "utterance," Eph. vi. 19; that "GOD would open to him a door of utterance," Col. iv. 3, as if he laboured under some hesitation or difficulty of speech, like Moses formerly.

he declares, "For THE LORD said unto me, MY GRACE is sufficient for thee; for MY POWER is perfected in infirmity."

"Most willingly then," proceeds the Apostle, "will I rather glory in my infirmities, that the power of CHRIST may reside upon me *," like the Divine glory on the tabernacle in the wilderness, which seems to be the import of επισκηνωση επ' εμε, 2 Cor. xii. 8, 9.

This very important passage, 1. warrants direct prayer to CHRIST; which is acknowledged even by the Socinian, Slichtingius. Nota exemplum precum ad CHRISTUM directarum; —whence, concludes Whitby, "Ergo, say I, here is an instance of HIS DIVINITY."

It teaches, 2. that whom THE LORD loveth, he chasteneth for their good.

3. That even the best men, and the most highly gifted, are liable to pride, or over-elation of mind, in consequence of those very endowments †. "Few men indeed, have such steady heads, as to be able to stand upon the spires and pinnacles of glory, without giddiness." The sin of pride is generally supposed to have ruined Satan himself, and his host of angels; "Those once glorious spirits, walking upon the battlements of heaven, grew dizzy with their own greatness, and fell down into a state of utter darkness and extreme misery." According to the ingenious, but startling imagery of Bishop Bull, p. 210.

But it may be asked, are the best of saints, the most excellent persons, only subject to this worst of vices, pride? No certainly. It flourishes with greater rankness and luxuriance among "many schoolmasters in Christ," founders of sects, and

* The English Bible has injured the force of this short, but very important passage, by variously rendering δυναμις, "power" and "strength," and ασθενεια, "infirmity" and "weakness." See Dr. Myles Smith's awkward Apology in the Preface to the English Bible, for such diversity of translation, embarrassing the sense.

† Calvin, (himself not the humblest of men,) has a very apposite note on this passage. Consideremus diligenter qui hic loquatur, &c. "Let us diligently consider who it is that here speaks. A man that had conquered infinite dangers, torments, and other evils; that had triumphed over all the enemies of CHRIST; that had shaken off the fear of death; and lastly, had renounced the world: and yet this man had not yet wholly subdued his propensity to pride. Nay, he was still engaged in so dreadful a conflict with it, that he could not conquer, without being himself beaten and buffeted!" ————Pride, as it was the first sin of man, so is it his last. It has been called, not unfitly, indusium animæ, "the inner garment of the soul," that sticks most closely, like a shirt; and the last, and hardest to be put off. Whence the frail Peter recommended, "Be clothed with humility!" It is truly remarkable, that pride ranks foremost in the Romish catalogue of mortal sins.

leaders of schisms, (1 Cor. iv. 15, James iii. 1,) who, utterly destitute of the profound learning and illumination of St. Paul, arrogate to themselves his visions and revelations, by the most revolting enthusiasm; and methodize his difficult writings, according to their *private fancies, deceived themselves, and deceiving their blinded followers, (2 Tim. iii. 13, James i. 22,) whom this spirited Apostle, had they subsisted in his time, would, without scruple, have delivered over unto Satan, for the mortification of their flesh, that the spirit might be saved in the day of the LORD. There is still many a "Diotrephes" in the Church, that "loveth to have the pre-eminence, prating against their betters with malicious words," who would provoke the castigation of the meekest of the Apostles.

"The revelations whose excellence" the Apostle here records, (if we may presume to pry into such,) in which "he heard inexpressible words," might perhaps have disclosed to him those future mysteries of the Church militant, and triumphant; which were afterwards revealed to the beloved disciple John, in the Apocalypse. The harmony between the mysterious doctrines of both, seems to warrant this supposition.

To remove the imputation of vain glory from the Apostle, however, for disclosing such to the Corinthians, we must reflect that the disclosure was extorted from him after fourteen years silence, by the great opposition and contempt he, more than all the Apostles, met with from the Judaizing teachers every where, and particularly in that Church. The true reason of their hostility was, that he, first of all, avowedly taught and preached the utter abolition of circumcision and the Mosaic law, to Jews as well as Gentiles. But their pretext was, that he was not one of the twelve original Apostles, called by CHRIST himself when on earth; nor afterwards formally elected an Apostle, in the room of any of that number, and acknowledged by the Mother Church, as Matthias was; but a supernumerary Apostle, thrusting himself into that sacred office, (as they asserted,) clandestinely, they knew not how, nor by what authority.

Against such calumniators, he strenuously asserts and vindicates, as in duty bound, his Divine mission and Apostolical

* 'Ὅς ἀν μεθοδεύη τὰ λόγια τοῦ Κυρίου πρὸς τὰς ἰδίας ἐπιθυμίας, λέγει μὴτε ἀναστασιν μὴτε κρίσιν εἶναι, οὗτος πρωτοτοκος ἐστὶ τοῦ Σατανα. "Whosoever methodizes the Oracles of THE LORD according to his private fancies, and says that there is neither resurrection nor judgment, this is Satan's first born." Polycarp.

authority, in the following animated expostulations and apology, breathing all the vehemence of Demosthenes' oratory, and all the closeness of his reasoning, 1 Cor. ix. 1—23.

“Am not I an Apostle? Am not I a freeman? Have not I seen JESUS CHRIST OUR LORD? Are not ye my work in THE LORD, [as a Christian Church?] Supposing I am not an Apostle to others, [the Jews,] yet surely I am to you, [Gentiles:] for ye are the seal, or ratification of my Apostleship in THE LORD,” ver. 1, 2.—“But, though I preach the Gospel, I have no reason for boasting therein; for a necessity of doing so, is imposed on me [by CHRIST himself, equally with the Apostles of the circumcision, Acts iv. 20;] yea, a woe is due to me, unless I preach the Gospel,” ver. 16.—“Though a freeman in respect of all, [and even a Roman citizen by birth, of no mean city, Tarsus, Acts xxi. 39,] yet made I myself a slave to all, to gain the more [converts,] ver. 19. To the Jews I became as a Jew, to gain Jews, [by complying with their ceremonies ‘under the law,’ as in the circumcision of Timothy, Acts xvi. 3, and the legal performance of his own vow, Acts xxi. 26,] to the Gentiles, not under the law, as not under the law myself, (not being exempt, however, from the law of obedience to GOD, but rather under the law to CHRIST,) to gain them that are not under the law. To the weak, [or scrupulous,] I became as weak, to gain the weak; to all men I became all things; that by all means, I might save some. And this I still do, for the sake of THE GOSPEL; that I may become a joint partaker of its inestimable blessings, along with my converts,” (Dan. xii. 3, 2 Tim. iv. 8,) ver. 20—23.

This is a fair specimen of the Apostle’s energetic mode of reasoning; extremely diffusive and digressive, and yet extremely concise and elliptical, as may appear from comparing the digressions here omitted, and the ellipses here supplied, with the difficult and involved original, in order to exhibit the chain of his argument, unbroken, in succession. His digressions from the main argument, form a subsidiary argument, designed to prove the Apostle’s disinterestedness, that he sought their gain, not his own, in the true spirit of charity; which also may be thus represented, supplying ellipses.

“My apology to my examiners is this:

“1. Have not we, Barnabas and I, the Apostles of the uncircumcision, a right to eat and drink, &c. or to a maintenance for ourselves and our families, (if we have such,) as well as the other Apostles of the circumcision, even James and Jude, THE LORD'S brothers, and Peter? Or have not we an equal right not to work, unless we also be maintained by our flocks? ver. 3—7.

“2. Is this my doctrine only, or is it not warranted by THE LAW? Thou shalt not muzzle the ox, &c. Doth GOD take care of oxen, and not of his Apostles? If we have sown to you spiritual goods, is it a great matter that we reap your temporal goods? —But GOD himself ordained, that the priests that serve at the altar, should partake of the sacrifices of the altar; and even so, that the Apostles who preach the Gospel, should live by the Gospel, ver. 8—14.

“3. If your Judaizing teachers, or false apostles, partake of this right to your goods, [and even devour you, 2 Cor. xi. 20,] shall not we rather, your faithful pastors? But how different is our conduct from theirs? We have not used this right, but rather endure all privations, not to give any hindrance to the GOSPEL OF CHRIST, by affording a pretext to impute our labours for your sake to mercenary motives. I, in particular, have used none of your goods. But I wrote not thus to claim them in my own case: for I would much rather die, than that any one should render void my boasting in my own disinterestedness,” ver. 12—15.

By thus interweaving his apology with the main argument, the Apostle embarrassed both, to ordinary readers. But how natural was it for a generous mind, feeling indignation at an unfounded charge, with all the warmth of conscious innocence, to bring forward a refutation of it, in the foreground, which, on cooler consideration, deserved to be thrown into the background, as distinct, and of inferior moment. But what he lost in method he gained in force, oppressing his opponents with an accumulation of interrogations, not giving them time to breathe*.

And the “pillars of the Mother Church,” or leading Apostles of the circumcision, James, the Bishop of Jerusalem, Peter and John, did allow his and Barnabas' claim as Apostles of the

* Virgil thus represents a veteran pugilist overpowering his younger antagonist, with a shower of blows, as thick as hail.

Nec mora, nec requies: quam multâ grandine nimbi

Culminibus crepitant, sic densis ictibus, Heros,

Creber, utrâque manu, pulsat, versatque Dareta. Æn. v. 458.

uncircumcision, and gave them the right hand of fellowship, at their second visit to Jerusalem, as he asserted to the Galatians, ii. 7—9.

FIRST MISSION OF BARNABAS AND SAUL.

Having discharged their commission, Barnabas and Saul returned from Jerusalem to Antioch, taking with them Mark, the nephew of Barnabas, (afterwards the Evangelist,) as an assistant in their approaching mission to the Gentiles, which took place soon after, by the solemn and express appointment of the HOLY SPIRIT, to the leaders of the Church of Antioch, namely, the prophets and teachers, Barnabas, Simeon, surnamed Niger, Lucius the Cyrenian, Manahen, who had been bred up with Herod the Tetrarch of Galilee, and Saul, the youngest, or last appointed, Acts xii. 25, xiii. 1.

“Separate unto me Barnabas and Saul, for the work whereunto I have now called them.”

Then the leaders, having fasted and prayed, [TO THE LORD,] and having laid their hands upon them, (commending them to his grace,) dismissed them, after they had been first chosen Apostles by THE HOLY SPIRIT himself, ver. 2—4.

Thus the election of these two supernumerary Apostles, in the room of James the elder, who was slain, and James, THE LORD’S brother, who was appointed resident Bishop at Jerusalem, in order to complete the original number of the twelve itinerant Apostles, as observed before; was equally valid with the election of Matthias; and even distinguished above it, by the more immediate appointment of the HOLY SPIRIT himself, signifying his pleasure by declaration, not by lot. We may date this election, A.D. 45, with the Bible chronology.

Under HIS guidance immediately, they went down to the sea-port of Seleucia, fifteen miles below Antioch, (κατηλθον,) near the mouth of the river Orontes; whence they sailed to Cyprus, the native country of Barnabas, and preached the word of GOD at Salamis, the nighest port to Syria, at first in the Jewish Synagogues, according to their custom. Thence they crossed the island to Paphos, the capital, at the western end, where the Roman proconsul, Sergius Paulus, resided. He also, like Cornelius, sent for the Apostles, desirous to hear the word of GOD. But a Jewish false prophet, Barjesus, surnamed Elymas, in Arabic, or Magus, “the Magian,” opposed them, and sought to pervert the proconsul from the faith. But Saul, full of the HOLY SPIRIT, struck the Magian with blindness, for a season, as a punishment for his wicked interference. This astonishing judgment, confirming the doctrine of THE LORD, converted the proconsul to the faith, ver. 4—12.

This signal miracle, resembling Peter's in the case of Ananias and Sapphira, proved that Saul was not a whit inferior to the chief Apostles of the circumcision. And henceforth, in the course of the history, he takes the lead of Barnabas, although junior to him. He here, also, dropped his Jewish name, Saul, and in future adopted his Roman, Paul, as likely to gain him more respect with the Gentiles, ver. 9—13.

From Paphos, “Paul and his party” sailed to Perga, a town of Pamphylia, where Mark separated from them, and returned to Jerusalem, probably through dislike of the fatigues and dangers of the mission, ver. 13.

From Perga they proceeded to Antioch, in Pisidia. Here the Apostles, as usual, went into the Jewish Synagogue, on the sabbath day, and sat down in the seat of the doctors: and when called upon by the rulers of the Synagogue to speak a word of exhortation, or preach to the people, after the reading of the Law and the Prophets was over, Paul made that excellent speech to the Jews and religious proselytes, which is the counterpart of Peter's, at Jerusalem, on the day of Pentecost.

1. Beginning with their deliverance from Egyptian bondage, he recounts GOD'S providential care of their nation, from their settlement in Canaan till the reign of David, ver. 16—22.

2. That CHRIST was foretold to come of David's seed, as a SAVIOUR, implied in the name JESUS, ver. 23.

3. That John the Baptist testified his actual coming, and his high dignity. That the Jews, through ignorance, rejected and crucified him; but that God raised him from the dead, no more to return to corruption like David, his ancestor; whose prophecies respecting Christ, (Psalm ii. 7, xvi. 10,) he explains, as Peter had done before, ver. 24—37.

4. He states the doctrine of justification by faith; that “through Him every believer was justified, or saved from the punishment of all those sins, from which they could not be justified by the LAW OF MOSES,” ver. 38, 39. This forms the basis of his argument in the three Epistles to the Galatians, Romans, and Hebrews.

He warns them of the judgments foretold to be inflicted on the unbelieving nation of the Jews, (Isa. xxviii. 14, Heb. i. 5,) ver. 40, 41.

Here they had much greater success with the proselytes and with the Gentiles, than with the Jews; who filled with envy, or false zeal, contradicted Paul's arguments, and blasphemed CHRIST. Whereupon Paul and Barnabas, speaking freely, said, "It was necessary that the word of GOD should be first spoken to you; but since ye reject it, and judge yourselves unworthy of eternal life, lo, we turn ourselves to the Gentiles," (as enjoined by prophecy, Isa. xlix. 6, xlii. 6.) When the Gentiles heard this, they rejoiced, and glorified THE WORD OF THE LORD, and as many as were *well disposed, or prepared for eternal life, believed. And though the Jewish zealots stirred up a persecution against Paul and Barnabas, and expelled them from their borders, (for which the Apostles gave them up to the judgment of GOD, by the ceremony of shaking off the dust of their feet against them, according to our Lord's injunction, Matt. x. 14,) yet GOD did not desert the Church now planted in Pisidia, for the disciples were filled with joy and with THE HOLY SPIRIT, ver. 42—52.

The Bible chronology dates this departure from Antioch in Pisidia, the same year, A.D. 45. But it is probable that they made some stay there, because the word of THE LORD was spread throughout the whole country, ver. 49, and the considerable progress of the Gospel, at length excited the envy of the Jews to counteract it. We may, therefore, with more propriety, date it A.D. 46, a year later.

After their expulsion the Apostles went to Iconium, a town of Lycaonia, bordering on Pisidia, where, according to their stated custom, they first preached the Gospel in the Jewish Synagogue. And a great multitude of Jews and Greeks believed, in consequence of their freedom of speech, and the signs and wonders wrought by their hands, during a considerable stay there. This success, as before, provoked the infidel Jews to prejudice the minds of the Gentiles against the brethren, as

* τεταγμενοι is unnecessarily rendered in a prædestinarian sense, "ordained," in the English Bible. It is evidently contrasted with the obduracy of the Jews; αποσαντο—ιαντους ονκ αζιους εκριναν—which is represented as their own act and deed. Luke uses the compound, διατεταγμενος, in the sense of disposed, Acts xx. 13. See Mede's Works, p. 21; Whitby, Dodd, Wetstein, Parkhurst, Gilpin, &c.

Christians; so that a schism was produced in the city, one party siding with the Jews, the other with the Apostles: the former, however, having gained over the rulers, intended to ill treat and stone* them; but being aware of it, they fled to the other cities of Lycaonia, namely, Lystra and Derbe, and the surrounding region, where they preached the Gospel, Acts xiv. 1—7.

