

THEODORE TILTON

VS.

HENRY WARD BEECHER,

ACTION FOR CRIM. CON.

TRIED IN THE CITY COURT OF BROOKLYN,

CHIEF JUSTICE JOSEPH NEILSON, PRESIDING.

Verbatim Report by the Official Stenographer.

WITH PORTRAITS OF

Chief Justice JOSEPH NEILSON,

Ex-Judge S. D. MORRIS,

Mrs. ELIZABETH R. TILTON,

FRANCIS D. MOULTON,

Hon. ROGER A. PRYOR,

Ex-Judge WILLIAM FULLERTON, THEODORE TILTON.

75773

V O L . I .

NEW YORK:

McDIVITT, CAMPBELL & CO., LAW PUBLISHERS,

No. 79 NASSAU STREET,

1875.

BX
7260
.B31
T35
1875x

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year 1875, by McDIVITT, CAMPBELL & CO., in the Office of the Librarian of Congress, Washington, D. C.

CHAMBERS, THE CITY COURT OF BROOKLYN.

BROOKLYN, February 22d, 1875.

"TILTON VS. BEECHER."

The numbers of your report have been of great use to me. The testimony is given, as in the N Y. Tribune, with substantial correctness. In thanking you for your courtesy, I beg to express my respect for your enterprise.

Very truly yours,

J. NEILSON, Ch. J.

To McDIVITT, CAMPBELL & Co., Nassau St., N. Y.

J. Nelson

THEODORE TILTON AGAINST HENRY WARD BEECHER,

IN THE CITY COURT OF BROOKLYN.

JOSEPH NEILSON, CHIEF JUSTICE, PRESIDING.

SAMUEL D. MORRIS,
THOMAS E. PEARSALL,
ROGER A. PRYOR,
WILLIAM FULLERTON,
WILLIAM A. BEACH.

{ Plff's Att'y's.

{ Of Counsel.

THOMAS G. SHEARMAN,
JOHN W. STERLING,
JOHN L. HILL,
JOHN K. PORTER,
BENJAMIN F. TRACY,
WILLIAM M. EVARTS.

{ Deft's Att'ys.

{ Of Counsel.

THE JURY:

CHESTER CARPENTER, Foreman.

HENRY THYER,
GEORGE HULL,
CHRISTOPHER FITTER,
SAMUEL FLATE,

A. R. CASE,
EDWARD WHELAN,
WILLIAM H. DAVIS,
JOHN F. TAYLOR,

WILLIAM T. JEFFREY,
GRIFFIN B. HALSTEAD,
JOHN McMURN.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

PRELIMINARY PAPERS AND PROCEEDINGS.

Mr. Tilton's Complaint.....	8	Appeal to the General Term.....	8
Mr. Beecher's Answer.....	8	Judge Reynolds' Opinions Denying the Bill of Particulars.....	8, 15
Judge Neilson Stays Proceedings.....	8	Judge McCue's Opinions Granting Bill of Particulars.....	7, 19
Mr. Beecher's Affidavit.....	4	The Court of Appeals Permits a Bill of Particulars.....	19
Mr. Tilton's Affidavit.....	4	The Order of Reversal.....	15
Judge Neilson Denies the Bill of Particulars.....	5, 14	The Selection of the Jury.....	15

THE TRIAL.

MORRIS, S. D., Esq.—OPENING ARGUMENT FOR THE PLAINTIFF.....	Pages 19-59	Moulton's First Statement Excluded.....	128
Importance in Law of the Issue.....	19	Beecher's Contribution to Tilton's Paper.....	133
Logic of the Apology.....	21	CROSS-EXAMINATION.....	142-324
Theories of the Defense Analyzed.....	23	Beecher Wrongs Moulton.....	145
Mr. Beecher's Language Interpreted.....	25	Moulton's Advocacy of Woman's Rights.....	154
Inference from Mr. Beecher's Acts.....	26	Tilton's Relations with Woodhull.....	158
The Scandal Correspondence.....	28	Tilton and Moulton Disagree.....	160
The Clandestine Correspondence.....	31	Gen. Butler Serving without Fee.....	161
Interview at Moulton's House.....	34	Rupture of Beecher's and Moulton's Friendship.....	163
Another Alleged Confession.....	36	Tilton's and Beecher's Accounts with Moulton's Firm.....	167
Mr. Beecher's Bravery.....	39	Curious Way of Starting a Paper.....	169
The Woodhull-Claffin Story.....	40	Moulton's First Connection with the Scandal.....	171
The First of the Committees.....	41	Tilton's First Charge against Beecher.....	173
Beecher's Letter of Resignation.....	43	Gen. Tracy's Conduct Criticised.....	177
Beecher's Letter Exonerating Tilton.....	45	Letter of Contrition a Simple Apology.....	179
Tilton's Challenge to Beecher.....	47	Moulton Declaims against Bowen.....	183
Dr. Bacon's Letter.....	48	Tilton's Alleged Improprieties.....	184
The Letter of Contrition.....	53	Beecher's Hard Alternative.....	190
Impeachment of the Church Committee.....	53	The Retraction and the Recantation.....	195
Closing Appeal to the Jury.....	58	Moulton's Statements.....	196
AUGUSTUS MAVERICK.		Bessie Turner's Stories.....	204
DIRECT EXAMINATION.....	59	The Letter of Contrition.....	205
FRANCIS D. MOULTON.		Beecher's Prayer for Help.....	217
DIRECT EXAMINATION.....	60-142	Bessie Turner's School Bills.....	218
Beecher's Alleged Confession.....	61	Tilton's Newspaper Again.....	222
Tilton Dropped by the Church.....	85	The Woodhull Biography.....	226
First Woodhull Publication.....	87	Tilton's Trouble with Bowen.....	228
First Proposed Statement.....	91	Moulton's Interviews with Woodhull.....	245
The Tripartite Covenant.....	93	Moulton's Loans to Tilton.....	249
Letter of Resignation.....	94	Woodhull Scandal Literature.....	259
Efforts for Concealment.....	99	Suggestions of a Blackmailing Scheme.....	269
Bowen and Claffin Seeking Evidence.....	101	Moulton's Pictures of Tilton and Beecher.....	272
The West Charges.....	102	Tilton's Separation from his Wife.....	275
The Church Council.....	104	Dr. Storrs Criticised.....	291
The Bacon Letter.....	106	RE-DIRECT EXAMINATION.....	297-317
Mutual Approval of Moulton's Statement.....	121	RE-CROSS-EXAMINATION.....	317-322
		RE-RE-DIRECT EXAMINATION.....	322-328
		RE-RE-CROSS-EXAMINATION.....	328-324

Mrs. MARTHA A. BRADSHAW.
DIRECT EXAMINATION.....	324-328
CROSS-EXAMINATION.....	328-329
WILLIAM F. WEST.
DIRECT EXAMINATION.....	329-336
CROSS-EXAMINATION.....	336-338
FRANKLIN WOODRUFF.
DIRECT EXAMINATION.....	338
WILLIAM M. EVARTS. Argument on Mr. Tilton's Competency as a Witness.....	350-359
ROGER A. PRYOR. Reply to Mr. Evarts.....	359-370
William A. Beach. Argument Sustaining Mr. Tilton's Competency.....	370-371
WILLIAM M. EVARTS. Reply to Mr. Beach.....	378-385
JUDGE NEILSON ADMITS MR. TILTON'S EVIDENCE.....	387
THEODORE TILTON.
DIRECT EXAMINATION.....	387-453
Tilton's Financial Interests.....	389
First Hostile Meeting at Moulton's.....	390
Mrs. Tilton's Confession.....	395
Mrs. Tilton's Intercession for Beecher.....	396
The Written Confession Excluded.....	401
Transactions with Mrs. Woodhull.....	412
Tilton Assailed in Plymouth Church.....	416
The Tilton-Bowen Arbitration.....	417
Tilton Suggests Resignation.....	421
The Policy of Silence Abandoned.....	426
The Tripartite Covenant.....	430
Tilton's Last Visit to Plymouth Church.....	434
Tilton's Last Words with Mr. Beecher.....	438
History of Besse Turner.....	443
Gen. Tracy as a Peacemaker.....	446
Mrs. Tilton's Letters to her Husband.....	448
Tilton's Letters to his Wife.....	450
CROSS-EXAMINATION.....	453
Separation of Husband and Wife.....	453
Mrs. Tilton's Character.....	455
Tilton's Religions.....	456
Tilton's First Disputes with Mr. Beecher.....	458
Tilton's Opinions about Divorce.....	463
Tilton's Free-love Discussions.....	468
Mr. Beecher's Cleveland Letter.....	476
Tilton's Estimate of Beecher.....	478
The Tilton-Moulton Friendship.....	482
Letters between Mr. and Mrs. Tilton.....	487-504
Tilton's Relations with Oliver Johnson.....	505
The Independent under Tilton.....	506
Tilton's Wealth.....	508
Tilton's Rupture with Bowen.....	509
Bowen's Denunciation of Beecher.....	514
Tilton's Insinuations against Mr. Beecher's Morality.....	518
First Hostile Interview with Mr. Beecher.....	521
Mrs. Tilton's Confession.....	524
Tilton Appeals to Moulton.....	528
Who Gave Mrs. Woodhull the Story?.....	532
The Tilton-Woodhull Intimacy.....	537
Tilton Defends the Commune.....	538
The Catherine Gaunt Letter.....	539
The Woodhull Biography.....	545
The Steinway Hall Speech.....	549
The Winsted Scandal.....	553
General Butler and Mr. Tilton Visit Mrs. Woodhull.....	557
Mrs. Tilton's First Desertion of her Husband.....	558
Mr. Tilton's Answers to the Committee.....	560
Mr. Beecher's Letters about Mrs. Woodhull's Story.....	566
The Writing of the "True Story".....	568
Stories that caused the Bowen Letters.....	574
Changes in the Tripartite Covenant.....	575
The Bowen Letter.....	585
Fragments of the "True Story" Produced and Read.....	591
The Webster Difficulty with Mr. Beecher.....	596
Cause of Mr. Bowen's Enmity.....	597
Tilton's Defense in the "True Story".....	600
Tilton's Threat to Shoot Mr. Beecher.....	606
Mr. Moulton's Generosity.....	610
Sale of The Golden Age .....	611
Mr. Tilton's Purpose in the Bacon Letter.....	613
Mr. Tilton's Distrust of the Committee.....	617
Surprising Publication of Mr. Tilton's Sworn Testimony.....	616
More of Mr. Tilton's Letters to His Wife.....	617
(RE-DIRECT EXAMINATION.)
Mrs. Tilton's First Desertion.....	618
Mrs. Tilton's Second Desertion.....	619
Mrs. Tilton's Religious Sentiments Her Fatal Enemy.....	619
Differences Caused by the Cleveland Letter.....	620
Mr. Tilton's Views of Marriage and Divorce.....	621
The Poll-tale Articles Left by Mrs. Tilton.....	624
Photographs of Mr. Beecher.....	625
The Revolution in Mr. Tilton's Religious Views.....	628
Advice of Rev. Dr. Storrs.....	636
Mr. Tilton's Statement of the Confession Admitted.....	640
Argument on the Admission of Mr. Tilton's Sworn Statement.....	642-649
MRS. KATE CAREY.
DIRECT EXAMINATION.....	650
CROSS-EXAMINATION.....	651
THEODORE TILTON.
RE-DIRECT EXAMINATION (Resumed).
Tilton's Praise of his Wife's Goodness.....	653
Mr. Bowen's Forfeit Just.....	650
How the Catherine Gaunt Story Came Out.....	651
Mr. Tilton's Views on the Commune.....	651
The Winsted Scandal.....	651
Mr. Tilton's Story to Mrs. Bradshaw.....	653
Mrs. Tilton's Trip to Monticello.....	653
RE-CROSS-EXAMINATION.....	654
Mr. Tilton on the Laws of Divorce.....	654
Mr. Tilton's Doctrines of Morality and Divorce.....	654
Mr. Bowen's Payment to Mr. Tilton.....	654
Mrs. Tilton's Photographs.....	655
The Closet with the Beecher Gifts.....	656
Mr. Beecher's Presents of Flowers.....	657
A Small Picture Gallery put in Evidence.....	659
RE-RE-DIRECT EXAMINATION.....
The Prints of each Set of Photographs Identical.....	662
RE-RE-CROSS-EXAMINATION.....
Where the Published Correspondence was Found.....	663
GEORGE A. BELL.
DIRECT EXAMINATION.....
The Tilton-Halliday Interview Described.....	663
Mr. Beecher Anxious to Put Off the Teacher's Meeting.....	665
CROSS-EXAMINATION.....
Sentiment in Plymouth Church about the Woodhull Scandal.....	667
What Mr. Shearman Thought should be Done.....	668
Mr. Beecher's Counsel Discussed.....	700
RE-DIRECT EXAMINATION.....	706
JOSEPH H. RICHARDS.
DIRECT EXAMINATION.....
The Tilton Home a Model One.....	707
The Witness's Acquaintance with Mr. Beecher.....	707
Suspicious Position of Mr. Beecher and Mrs. Tilton.....	708
CROSS-EXAMINATION.....	708
RE-DIRECT EXAMINATION.....	708
JEEREMIAH P. ROBINSON.
DIRECT EXAMINATION.....
Mr. Beecher's Intercourse with Mr. Moulton Described.....	710
Mr. Beecher's Regard for Mr. Moulton.....	711
CROSS-EXAMINATION.....	711
WILLIAM M. BRASHER.
DIRECT EXAMINATION.....	712
CROSS-EXAMINATION.....	713
MRS. EMMA C. MOULTON.
DIRECT EXAMINATION.....
Mr. Beecher's Intimacy with the Moultons.....	720
Mr. Beecher Hopeless and Desperate.....	721
Mrs. Tilton Takes all the Blame on Herself.....	722
Mr. Beecher Begs Mrs. Moulton to Return to Plymouth Church.....	723
The First Coldness Between Mr. Beecher and Mr. Moulton.....	724
Mr. Beecher Hopeful and Desperate.....	725
CROSS-EXAMINATION of Mrs. Moulton.....	726
Mrs. Moulton's Calls on Mrs. Woodhull.....	727
Mrs. Moulton's Memory of the Interviews with Mr. Beecher.....	728
Mrs. Woodhull's Way of Salutation.....	729
Mrs. Moulton's Sympathy with Mr. Beecher's Woe.....	730
What Mrs. Moulton said to Mr. Halliday.....	731
The Interviews Rehearsed.....	732
Mr. Beecher Refuses to Confess Before the Church.....	733
Mrs. Moulton no Sympathizer with Woman's Rights.....	734
The Intercourse Between the Moultons and the Tiltons.....	735
Mrs. Tilton's Unflinching Devotion to Mr. Beecher Again Described.....	736
The Moultons' Portrait of Mr. Beecher.....	737
The Frequency of Mr. Beecher's Calls.....	738
The Interview Again Minutely Detailed.....	739
What the Confession should be, not Suggested.....	741
Mr. Beecher's Messages to Mrs. Tilton.....	742
The Tracy Interview at Mr. Moulton's.....	744
Mrs. Moulton's Memory Assailed.....	746
The Interview with Mrs. Tilton.....	747
The Beecher-Tilton-Woodhull Dinner at the Moultons.....	749
How Mrs. Moulton Came to Kiss Mr. Beecher.....	750
Why Mrs. Moulton Advised a Short Statement.....	752
MRS. KATE CAREY.
RE-CROSS-EXAMINATION.....
The Witness's CHARACTER.....	756

THEODORE TILTON

against

HENRY WARD BEECHER.

THE SUMMONS.

THE CITY COURT OF BROOKLYN—THEODORE TILTON, Plaintiff, against HENRY WARD BEECHER, Defendant—Summons, for Relief.

To the Defendant: You are hereby summoned and required to answer the complaint in this action, of which a copy is herewith served upon you, and to serve a copy of your answer to the said complaint on the Subscribers, at their office, No. 193 Montague street, in the city of Brooklyn, within twenty days after the service hereof, exclusive of the day of such service; and if you fail to answer the complaint within the time aforesaid, the plaintiff in this action will apply to the Court for the relief demanded in the complaint.

Dated August 19th, 1874.

MORRIS & PEARSALL.
Plaintiff's Attorneys.

MR. TILTON'S COMPLAINT.

THE CITY COURT OF BROOKLYN—THEODORE TILTON against HENRY WARD BEECHER.

The plaintiff, complaining of the defendant, alleges:

I.—That on the 2d day of October, 1855, in the City of Brooklyn, plaintiff intermarried with Elizabeth M. Richards, since named and known as Elizabeth R. Tilton, and that at the time of the commission of the wrongs hereinafter mentioned the plaintiff and his said wife were living together as man and wife in the said City of Brooklyn.

II.—That the defendant contriving and wilfully intending to injure the plaintiff and deprive him of the comfort, society, aid and assistance of the said Elizabeth, the wife of the plaintiff, and to alienate and destroy her affection for him, heretofore on or about the tenth day of October, 1868, and on divers other days and times after that day and before the commencement of this action, at the house of the defendant, No. 124 Columbia street, City of Brooklyn, and at the house of the plaintiff, No. 174 Livingston street, City of Brooklyn, wrongfully and wickedly and without the privity or connivance of plaintiff, debauched and carnally knew the said Elizabeth, then and ever since the wife of the plaintiff, by means whereof the affection of the said Elizabeth for the said plaintiff was wholly alienated and destroyed; and by reason of the premises the plaintiff has wholly lost the comfort, society, aid and assistance of his said wife, which during all the time aforesaid he otherwise might and ought to have had and enjoyed.

And has suffered great distress in body and mind, to the damage of the plaintiff one hundred thousand dollars.

Wherefore the plaintiff demands judgment against the defendant for the said sum of one hundred thousand dollars for the wrongs and injuries hereinbefore set forth, besides the cost of this action.

MORRIS & PEARSALL,
Plaintiff's Attorneys.

City of Brooklyn, County of Kings, ss:

THEODORE TILTON, being duly sworn, says that he is the plaintiff in the foregoing entitled action; that he has read the foregoing complaint, and knows the contents thereof, and that the same is true of his own knowledge, except as to the matters therein stated on information and belief, and as to those matters he believes it to be true.

THEODORE TILTON.

Sworn to before me, this 20th day of August, 1874.

GEO. W. RODERICK,
Notary Public,
Kings County.

MR. BEECHER'S ANSWER.

THE CITY COURT OF BROOKLYN—THEODORE TILTON, Plaintiff, against HENRY WARD BEECHER, Defendant—Answer.

The defendant answers to the complaint:

I.—That each and every allegation in the said complaint contained (except that the plaintiff and Miss Elizabeth M. Richards were married on October 2d, 1855, and lived together as husband and wife up to 1874) is utterly false.

II.—That this defendant never had, at any time or at any place, any unchaste or improper relations with the wife of the plaintiff, and never attempted or sought to have any such relations.

SHEARMAN & STERLING,
Attorneys for Defendant.

STATE OF NEW HAMPSHIRE, }
County of Grafton, } ss:

HENRY WARD BEECHER, being duly sworn, says:

1. That he is the defendant herein, and resides in the City of Brooklyn, Kings County, New York, but is temporarily residing at the Twin Mountain House, Coos County, New Hampshire.

2. That he is sixty-one years of age, and his occupation is that of a clergyman.

3. That the foregoing answer is true of his own knowledge.

HENRY WARD BEECHER.

Sworn and subscribed before me, }
this 29th day of August, 1874. }

HARRY BINGHAM,
Justice of the Peace.

JUDGE NEILSON STAYS PROCEEDINGS.

On the 17th day of October, 1874, Judge Neilson, Chief Justice of the City Court of Brooklyn, granted an order requiring the plaintiff to deliver to the defendant's attorneys a statement in writing of the particular times and places at which he expected or intended to prove that any acts of adultery or criminal intercourse had taken place between the defendant and wife of the plaintiff, and of the particular times and places at which he expected or intended to prove that the defendant confessed any such act of adultery or criminal intercourse, by the 22d day of October, 1874, or show cause why such Bill of Particulars should not be delivered, and why the plaintiff should not be precluded from giving evidence on the trial of any such acts or confessions not specified in such Bill of Particulars. In the meantime the proceedings in the case were stayed by order of Judge Neilson.

MR. BEECHER'S AFFIDAVIT.

In connection with the motion for a Bill of Particulars, the following affidavits were submitted :

CITY OF BROOKLYN, {
County of Kings. }

HENRY WARD BEECHER, the defendant above-named, being duly sworn, says :

I.—This is an action brought for alleged criminal conversation with the wife of the plaintiff.

II.—The complaint was served upon my attorneys on the 21st day of August, 1874, and my answer thereto was served upon the plaintiff's attorneys on the 7th day of September, 1874.

III.—The complaint specifies only one date at which any act of improper conduct on my part is alleged to have occurred, to wit : on the 10th day of October, 1868 ; and, although it alleges in general terms that such conduct was repeated on divers other days after that time, it does not mention any other specific date, nor does it mention any place, except the residence of the plaintiff and my own residence.

IV.—Since the service of the complaint and answer herein, and on or about September 18th, 1874, the plaintiff, as I am informed and believe, published a statement over his own signature, asserting that his wife and I had both confessed to him in detail specific times and places at which we had maintained improper relations with each other, which times and places, however, other than October 10th, 1858, and the Saturday following, the plaintiff carefully refrains from mentioning, but professes to have within his own knowledge.

V.—The assertion that I ever made any such confession to him is utterly false ; but I am advised by my counsel, and believe, that such a statement indicates the intention of the plaintiff to produce manufactured evidence in support of his allegation, and by means of false testimony to surprise my counsel, at the trial, with evidence which they and I cannot be prepared to meet otherwise than by my own simple denial, on the trial of this cause.

VI.—I have no knowledge, information, belief or suspicion as to the times or places (other than those specifically mentioned in the complaint and the published statement aforesaid) at which the plaintiff intends or expects to prove, or even to assert, that any improper conduct on my part took place, and as I never did, in fact, have any improper or immoral relations with his wife, I am entirely at a loss to form any surmise concerning the probable line of proof which will be adopted by the plaintiff on the trial of this cause.

VII.—I have fully and fairly stated the case in this cause to my counsel, Thomas G. Shearman, who resides at No. 81 Hicks Street, Brooklyn, and I have a good and substantial defence to this action upon the merits thereof, as I am advised by my said counsel and verily believe ; and I am further advised by my said counsel, and believe, that I cannot safely proceed to the trial of this action without receiving a statement of the particulars of the plaintiff's charge against me, and especially of the times and places at which any and every act of adultery or improper intercourse on my part is alleged to have taken place, and of the times and places at which it is to be alleged that I made any confession to the plaintiff.

HENRY WARD BEECHER.

Sworn to this 17th day of October, 1874, before me. }

LUDOVIC BENNET,
Notary Public,

In and for the State of New York.

MR. TILTON'S AFFIDAVIT.

CITY OF BROOKLYN, { ss :
County of Kings. }

THEODORE TILTON, the plaintiff in the above action, being duly sworn, declares :

I.—I published on the 18th of September last, over my own signature, a careful, candid and truthful statement, in reply to previous false and calumnious publications made against me by the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, and by a committee composed of six of his partisans, whom he had previously instigated to give him a one-sided trial for adultery, and to acquit him in defiance of his manifest guilt, freely confessed by him to many persons.

II.—My published statement, above named, contained a recital of these facts, honestly and moderately narrated, with careful intent not to overdraw, but rather to understate the actual extent and enormity of the crime of the said Beecher against me by the seduction of my wife and the ruin of my home, together, also, with his subsequent accumulation of base and dastardly acts, constituting his desperate defence against his original crime.

III.—The affidavit of said Beecher, in so far as it denies or impugns the truth of my aforesaid published statement, is utterly false, with intent to deceive the Court and the public.

IV.—The insinuation in the aforesaid affidavit of the said Beecher that I intend to produce "manufactured evidence" and "false testimony" in support of my charge of adultery against him is unfounded and malicious.

On the contrary, I believe, and so charge, that the real object and purport of said motion is to apprise said Beecher, in advance, of my evidence and witnesses, to the end that said evidence may be deceptively met by false and fabricated testimony on behalf of said Beecher, and that said witnesses may be tampered with or eligned. My belief that such is the crafty design of my opponents is based on the fact that the greater part of the evidence which has been heretofore advanced in defence of said Beecher, has been false and fabricated ; for example, the palpable falsifying of his own church records, by his recent Committee of Investigation, as pointed out in my published statement ; also, by a false and calumnious charge against Francis D. Moulton, F. B. Carpenter and myself, as blackmailers and conspirators ; also, by a pretended validity given to the silly fictions of the girl Bessie ; also, by inciting Mrs. Elizabeth R. Tilton to testify falsely that I had subjected her to imprisonment under lock and key, and had, in an inclement winter, deprived her of fire and food ; also, by the false pretence that I used the said Beecher as an instrument to extort $7,000 from Henry C. Bowen ; also, by the despicable attempt to connect me criminally with certain honorable women, both living and dead ; also, by variously misrepresenting me to the public in false lights, for example, sometimes as a forger, and at other times as a lunatic ; also, by repeated false oaths of denial by the said Beecher to the true charge which I have made against him, of sexual commerce with Mrs. Elizabeth R. Tilton, carrying his perjury to the extent of procuring against me, on his own oath, a criminal indictment by a Grand Jury, whereas he himself was and is the real criminal.

V.—I further believe, and so charge, that the said Beecher is maintained and upheld in his present determination to evade, by false testimony, the true charge of adultery, through the strong support of powerful friends, some of whom have a direct pecuniary interest in maintaining his name before the public at its former marketable value ; and I am informed, and believe, that certain of these persons declare their purpose to sustain the said Beecher at all hazards, whether innocent or guilty.

VI.—I further believe, and so charge, that the said Beecher and his interested champions in Plymouth Church, have plentiful and opulent means at their disposal to purchase and procure false evidence in the coming trial, and intend so to do.

VII.—I further believe, and so charge, that the said Beecher's percent demand for a bill of particulars, unusual in such actions (as I am informed), and in this instance wholly unwarranted by justice, and purposely intended for a perversion of the truth, is further designed by the defendant to procure the postponement of a trial which the ends of justice, and also the universal public opinion, demand shall be pressed to issue without technical delays.

VIII.—I reply, finally and specifically, to the said Beecher's demand for a bill of the particular times and places at which he committed his adulteries, that these times and places are already within his own knowledge.

THEO. TILTON.

Sworn to before me, this 24th {
day of October, 1874.

RUFUS M. WILLIAMS,
Notary Public.

THE BILL OF PARTICULARS DENIED.

The motion for a Bill of Particulars was argued at a special term of the City Court of Brooklyn, October 30th, 1874, before Chief Justice Neilson, Messrs. Shearman and Tracy appearing for the motion and Ex-Judge S. D. Morris against it. Judge Neilson denied the motion without costs. His opinion in the case was as follows:

The complaint charges that the defendant committed the wrongful acts stated "on or about the 10th day of October, 1868, and on divers other days and times after that day and before the commencement of this action, at the house of the defendant, No. 124 Columbia street, City of Brooklyn, and at the house of the plaintiff, No. 174 Livingston street," in said city.

An answer, denying the charges, has been put in, and the issue of fact thus joined noticed for trial. An application is now made for an order requiring the plaintiff to deliver to the defendant's attorney a statement in writing of the times and places at which he expects and intends to prove that the defendant committed and confessed any such acts.

As to the places where the plaintiff may expect or intend to prove that the acts were committed, the complaint is specific; the houses and streets are designated. The information on that point, sought by this application, has been fully given.

As to the supposed confessions the complaint is silent, and properly so. Under our system of pleadings the facts are to be set forth, not the evidence of those facts. This distinction must be observed; it is expressly enjoined by the Code; has been enforced by an unbroken chain of decisions. When, therefore, the plaintiff's case is stated in the complaint, the claim or wrong being one of which the law takes cognizance, the pleader is not allowed to add averments disclosing the oral proof by which he expects or intends to support or establish his case on the trial.

But it is shown by affidavits that the plaintiff, who could not have alleged in his complaint that such confessions had been made, and might have been prudently reticent on the subject, has stated in a newspaper article that such proof existed. In view of that, the defendant's counsel claims that the plaintiff should be required to state when and where these confessions, if any, were made. The question is not simply whether it would be well for the defendant to have that additional information, but whether the Court has the power to make such a requisition. I am satisfied that we have not the power. It would be a dangerous innovation, an anomaly in practice, if every defendant who learns that there may be an attempt to prove admissions could, by motion before the Court, compel further disclosures. So far as I am advised, such an order has never been granted.

The only remaining ground of the application is as to the times when the plaintiff expects and intends to prove that the acts took place.

The complaint has it thus: "On or about the 10th day of October, 1868, and on divers other days and times after that day, &c." That is good and correct pleading. Chitty gives that form for this action, and in a note, it is said, "the injury may be stated to have been committed on divers days and times," &c. (2 Chitty Pl., 642.) But if any question could be raised in respect to that form, the defendant should have applied to have the complaint made more definite and certain.

In a case of this precise nature the complaint did not specify the places, not even the county, and Judge Reynolds, at Special Term, granted such an application before answer. That is the practice prescribed by the Code.

Under the common law system of pleading, especially where the common counts were used, a defendant might be taken by surprise as to matters touching which he had the right to be informed, and some remedial practice for the suitor's protection was necessary. Courts of equity, in the exercise of inherent powers, inaugurated a practice of the nature now invoked, and, under legislative directions, the courts of law acquired the right to order a discovery and inspection of papers, but with special limitations (14 and 15 Vict., c. 99, § 6; Wigram on Discovery, 19; 3 Rev. St., 5th ed., 292), and to require bills of particulars in certain cases, especially as to the items of an account (Code, § 158.)

The elaborate brief handed in by the learned counsel for the defendant has a large collection of the cases in which such power has been exercised, with interesting analogies and illustrations. But none of the cases apply to the legal question involved.

In his treatise on practice, Mr. Shearman says:

"As a general rule, a bill of particulars will not be ordered in an action for a tort. (See Pyle v. Stephens, 6 Mees. and W., 818; Stannard v. Ullithorne, 3 Bing., N. C., 328; Snelling v. Chennels, 5 Dowl., P. C., 80.) Thus it will not be ordered in an action for injuries causing death (Murphy v. Kipp, 1 Duer, 659), nor usually in any action for personal injuries (Semble, Derry v. Lloyd, 1 Chit. Rep., 726, per Best, J.)"

The learned writer proceeds to state the reason why such bills are not granted in an action for tort, to wit: that the cause of action must almost always appear with sufficient distinctness in the complaint to enable the defendant to prepare his defense, and refers to 4 Cowen R., 54, where a bill of particulars was ordered in an action for the conversion of personal property, "as avoiding great detail in the pleading," and to 5 Dowl., P. C., 80, and 6 Exch., 696, to the point that, in actions of tort, the application should be accompanied with an affidavit that the defendant does not know what the plaintiff is suing for."

This last proposition accords with several late cases in which it has been held that such bills will not be furnished if the defendant already has, or from the nature of the case, must have the best or fullest knowledge of the facts. Indeed, there are many exceptions (7 M. W., 236; 6 C. B., N. S., 678; 8 How. Pr. R., 288), and as to the general theory, a late learned and prudent Judge has said: "The law has always considered sacred the rights of both parties to keep secret their preparations and means of attack and defence." (1 Abb. Pr., N. S., 233.) As indicating the theory that the right of discovery at law has been regarded as matter proper for legislative direction, rather than for such direction as the Court, in the exercise of its supposed inherent powers, might in each case choose to grant, our statutes as to compelling discovery in respect to betting and gaming (2 R. S., 926) and illegal brokerage (2 R. S., 979), usurious transactions (3 R. S., 73), and in respect to attorneys (3 R. S., 478, 479) might well be referred to.

Moreover, as rules of practice must be general, not changed materially to conform to particular cases, a plaintiff may so shape his case as to meet exigencies, as where witnesses are hostile and refuse to disclose the facts until compelled to do so on the trial.

But, as I have said, the question is as to the power of the Court, a power to be exercised with special reference to the system of practice established by the Legislature. The Code, in creating a new system of procedure, has prescribed the manner in which a cause of action shall be stated in the complaint, and how a pleading, if defective, may be perfected. It gives to a defendant not satisfied with the frame or terms of the complaint, remedies much more full and adequate than given under the old system. He may move to have the complaint made more definite and certain, and where the claim can be itemized, may also have a bill of particulars. To all this the Code adds the right to examine the adversary on oath before trial, and even at the trial.

But the Code allows a bill of particulars of the claim. If the wrong be the conversation of personal property, the enumeration or description of it would be as to the particulars of the claim. But an action of this peculiar class, like that for assault and battery, is sufficiently stated and described in the general allegation necessarily contained in the complaint. Extraneous incidents there may be, enhancing or diminishing the grievance, but nothing further could be said as to the claim itself. When we are treating of claims in respect to property, or contracts, or accounts, a different rule applies.

In this case the right to make that the complaint be made more definite and certain has been waived. In several cases the Courts have held that such waiver was a confession that the pleading was sufficient. Such motion was a simple and the appropriate remedy, and this application cannot be accepted, though intended as a substitute. But the question is not of much moment to the defendant, as the information to which he could have been entitled may yet be obtained by examining the plaintiff before the trial.

I think that the practice established by the Code should be followed, as thus and only thus can certainty and consistency be obtained; and that an attempt by the Court to evade that practice and substitute other modes of procedure would be unwise, if not reprehensible.

The application is denied, but without cost.

J. NEILSON,
J. C. C.

THE DEFENDANT APPEALS TO THE GENERAL TERM.

On the next day the defendant's attorneys appealed from this order of Judge Neilson to the General Term of the City Court. The appeal was heard in the General Term, October 19th, 1874, by Judges Reynolds and McCue, and after argument by Mr. Shearman for the defendant, and Messrs. Morris and Beach for the plaintiff, the order denying the Bill of Particulars, was affirmed without costs, Judge Reynolds writing the opinion. A dissenting opinion was written by Judge McCue.

OPINION OF JUDGE REYNOLDS.

The defendant, upon this appeal, asks that the plaintiff be compelled to specify the particular times "at which he expects or intends to prove any acts of adultery," and that the plaintiff be precluded from giving evidence upon the trial of any acts not so specified. The order to show cause asked for a like specification of places. And also of the particular times and places at which alleged confessions were made.

Upon the argument before us, however, it was not claimed that the places were not sufficiently specified, and that part of the order relating to confessions was expressly waived. Even if it had not been so waived, it would obviously be beyond the province of the Court to make any such requisition.

The question before us on this appeal then is, ought the plaintiff, upon the trial, to be confined to those particular acts, the exact date of which he may be able to fix in advance; for it would be idle to compel him to name the precise time of any alleged acts, except for the purpose of excluding all others from his claim. That is the very object of the motion.

The complaint alleges the wrongful acts to have been committed "on or about the 10th day of October, 1868, and on divers other days and times after that day, and before the commencement of this action," specifying as the places two houses in the city of Brooklyn. It is admitted that this is sufficiently definite and certain for the purpose of a pleading. If not, the remedy was by motion, to be made before the service of the answer. I understand this application to be based upon the ground that the Court has power to order a bill of particulars, as incident to the general administration of justice, as well as by § 158 of the Code.

Without discussing at length and separately the question whether the Court possesses the power to restrict the plaintiff by a bill of particulars in such an action as this, I propose to rest my conclusion mainly upon the ground that this is not a proper case for the exercise of such power.

The defendant is entitled, as matter of right, to a copy of the plaintiff's account when a demand for it is applicable to the nature of the case; but the "bill of particulars of the claim" which the Court may order "in all cases," is to be required only in the exercise of a sound discretion. Upon examining the authorities cited by the defendant's counsel, it will be found that the Court in each instance has evidently had reference to the particular circumstances of the case, and the supposed ability of the party to give the information asked for.

The decisions which are relied upon as having the most direct bearing upon this application, are those cited from the English Divorce Court, where the petition for divorce is joined with an action for damages against the alleged paramour.

In these cases it seems to be common to order particulars to be given. It is worth while to observe the manner in which the cause of action is stated in the petition (corresponding to our complaint) under their practice. Take, for instance, the cases cited upon the very able brief of defendant's counsel. In Hunt vs. Hunt and Duke, 2 Swabey & Tristram, the petitioner was charged, by way of recrimination, with having committed adultery with three persons named, without stating time or place. In Codrington vs. Codrington and Anderson, 3 Swa. & Tris., the charge was that the respondent had committed adultery on divers occasions since April, 1839, with divers persons. Particulars were ordered, and the petitioner then alleged frequent acts of guilt between 1839 and 1862, with a person named at Malta, and during a journey to Switzerland, Savoy, Sardinia and Italy. Further particulars were ordered, it appearing that the information on which the charge was founded was contained in a diary and certain letters of the respondent.

In another case, Winscom vs. Winscom & Plowden, 8 Swa. & Tris., the allegation was of adultery in or about the year 1853, at Jubulpoor, with some man other than the petitioner. Particulars were demanded, and the order seems to have been satisfied by stating the offenses as committed with Edward Clark, at Jubulpoor, in February or March, 1853. In a Massachusetts case, Adams vs. Adams, 16 Pick., 254, the libel (or complaint) charged that the defendant had committed various acts of adultery, at various times, with persons unknown, during a period of eight years. It would be difficult to imagine a charge much more general and indefinite than this.

Under a system which tolerates such pleading in an action for divorce, as is instanced by the foregoing references, the complaint must of course be supplemented by a statement of particulars.

In our State the complaining party in actions for divorce has always been compelled, by the pleading, to specify the circumstances of the offence alleged, as to time and place, with as great particularity as under the system of orders adopted elsewhere. We are not referred to a divorce case in this State where an order for particulars was applied for or made. I think, too, the learned counsel was mistaken in supposing that the setting of issues in a divorce suit ever served the purpose which is sought to be attained by an order. The issues were framed upon the pleadings; these were required to allege the offence with reasonable certainty of time and place, and if the charge was too vague, the defect was not remedied by supplying an issue containing the particulars; but the issue would not be awarded. [Codd vs. Codd, 2 John. Ch., 224; Wood vs. Wood, 2 Paige, 106.]

The practice of ordering particulars in such cases seems never to have obtained here.

Of course, bills of particulars may be ordered in certain cases and sometimes in actions of tort. We have been referred to two cases, decided by our Supreme Court. Humphrey vs. Cotteroy, 4 Cow., 55; was an action of trover for the conversion of a quantity of timber. A bill of particulars was ordered, and the plaintiff delivered an account, specifying so many stacks of different kinds, without giving dates or mentioning any time within which the several items arose. The Court say the date of the items should be given with as much particularity as possible. If the day cannot be stated, then the month or year. That was a case where the claim was susceptible of being resolved into particulars, or itemized, with approximate dates, as much so as an account for goods sold. The difference between such a case and this has been sufficiently discussed by Chief Justice Neilson in the Opinion at Special Term.

The other case was an action for dower, Vischer vs. Conant, 4 Cow., 380. "The count was in the (then) usual general form, without showing any land in certain." The Court say the proper course was the same as in ejectment, where the declaration was equally general, that is, to ascertain, by a bill of particulars for what particular land the plaintiff was proceeding.

"This proceeding to obtain a bill of particulars seems applicable to all actions in which the plaintiff declares generally without specifying particularly his cause of action."

Surely, an order requiring the plaintiff to specify what land he is claiming in a suit, does not go far as a precedent, for requiring a party to state the exact date of a secret wrongful act, alleged to have been committed against him.

The case of Early vs. Smith, cited from the Appendix to 12 Irish Com. Law R., comes much nearer to the matter before us.

The action was for slander, and the complaint set out the words spoken without stating time or place. The Court made an order which was modified on appeal. The prevailing opinions say, "We do not compel the plaintiff to state the specific times at which he charges the words to have been spoken, and bind him by them, or the names of the parties to whom the words were spoken, but the occasions on which the words were spoken."

One of the Judges says he had concluded to go so far, not without difficulty, and another dissented; but the decision plainly falls short of the point attempted to be reached in this case. The Court refused to bind the plaintiff to specific times.

There is a vast difference, too, between the nature of that section and of this.

It was of the essence of slander, that the words had been spoken in the presence and hearing of other people, and the plaintiff might well be presumed to have the means, easily accessible, of fixing the occasion, and with some certainty, the time, of the wrong. No such presumption naturally arises here; indeed, the contrary, to some extent appears.

So far as civil actions are concerned, the great particularity in stating time and place, in suits for divorce, seems, with us, to be peculiar to that action. Our attention has not been directed to any case in this State, and I am not at this moment aware of any, holding in an action for damages for a wrong committed, when the time of the commission of the act is not material to constitute the cause of action, that the particular time must be stated, and proved according to the allegation.

The dissenting opinion in Early v. Smith very forcibly says: "Hitherto the law, although it has required the plaintiff, in point of form, to allege time and place for the charge which he makes, has been perfectly settled that he is not tied up as to his proof, either as to time or place. It has been no objection that at the trial he proves the slander at one place, though he has laid it at another, or that he proves it at one time, though he has laid it at another."

This is true as to other torts, including the offences charged in this complaint, as well as in reference to an action for slander. I quote again from the same opinion: "It is said; Oh, it is a great hardship to the defendant to go to trial without knowing the precise times and places on which the plaintiff means to rely. But that is a hardship to which plaintiffs and defendants have been subject for hundreds of years—for as long as we have records of law."

I think such is the state of the law with us to-day; unavoidably so, and that it should be inconsistent with well settled and reasonable rules, to "tie up" the plaintiff, in such an action as this, to any particular date or dates, to be stated in advance.

With all the uncertainties of human testimony no man can foresee the chances and accidents of a trial; and, as to immaterial circumstances, great latitude should be allowed.

This will be still more apparent from a consideration of the nature of the proof upon which, so far as disclosed, this plaintiff must mainly rely.

The moving affidavits make extracts from a published statement of the plaintiff, in which he speaks of confessions alleged to have been made to him by his wife and by the defendant.

It is not at present apparent how his confession can be made use of as evidence on the trial; as to those of the defendant, it does not appear from plaintiff's statement, as quoted, that such confessions furnished him with the information as to dates, which would enable him to comply with the order sought for, nor is it quite clear that a plaintiff in such an action ought to be compelled to rest his case upon the accuracy or reliability of data so obtained, even if the particulars were given to him.

Now, suppose the plaintiff came into court and upon the trial swears to confessions of guilt, as made to him by defendant, broad enough to sustain the complaint, if credited by the jury; suppose he succeeds in producing other witnesses who shall swear to similar confessions and to circumstances pointing in the same direction; and also introduces papers, written and signed by the defendant, which are claimed by plaintiff to be substantially confessions of the offence charged; but that any array of proof of this sort should fail to point out specific days or times of the alleged wrongs, what would be the consequence should the jury be satisfied, upon such evidence, of the defendant's guilt?

In accordance with the general rules applicable to the trial of issues—rules which I conceive to be fair and just—the plaintiff would in that case be entitled to a verdict. He would have made out (supposing the jury to have found as stated) the substance of his allegations and it would matter not whether the wrongs were committed on this day or that, within the general period covered by the complaint. But if we should make the order which is now asked for, the defendant might, in the first place, with great plausibility object to all proof which does not point to some specific time, and in the next demand a verdict of acquittal, even if the jury should believe the evidence against him, because he had not been shown to have committed the offences at the particular times to which the plaintiff had been confined by the order and the bill of particulars.

If this result would not follow upon such a state of facts, I see no object in asking for the order; and if such a result should follow, it seems to me it would be a reproach upon the administration of justice.

I think the parties can have a perfectly fair trial of the issues in the ordinary way, and I am therefore in favor of affirming the order made at Special Term, but without costs.

GEO. G. REYNOLDS, Judge.

OPINION OF JUDGE McCUE.

Appeal from an order made at Special Term, denying the defendant's application to compel the plaintiff to furnish a statement or bill of particulars of the times and places when the several acts of adultery charged in the complaint were committed.

The action is for crim. con. The complaint alleges that the adultery was committed at the house of the plaintiff, also at the house of the defendant, both situate in the City of Brooklyn, "on or about the 10th day of October, 1863, and on divers other days and times after that day and before the commencement of this action." The answer is a full denial of each and every act of adultery.

The defendant's application was to compel the plaintiff to show cause why he should not deliver to the defendant's attorneys a statement, in writing, of the particular times and places at which he expects or intends to prove that any acts of adultery or criminal intercourse took place between the defendant and the wife of the plaintiff, and of the particular times and places at which he expects or intends to prove that the defendant confessed any such acts of adultery, or criminal intercourse, or be precluded from giving evidence upon the trial of any such act or confessions not specified in such bill of particulars.

Before passing to the examination of the questions presented on this appeal, we think it proper to notice two objections raised to the defendant's application, since the early disposition of them will very much simplify our labor.

The objections referred to are: 1st, That the defendant desires a bill of particulars of the confessions made by plaintiff's wife, which it is claimed could not be introduced against the defendant; and 2nd, That the claim of the plaintiff "is for the loss of the affections, comforts, society and assistance of his wife; and that if the defendant had accomplished this without seduction, his liability would have been the same." (See point 14, respondent's printed points).

An examination of the order to show cause disposes of the first objection; the bill of particulars desired does not call for the confessions of the wife, only for those made by the defendant himself.

The second objection is not well taken. The loss of the affection, comfort, society and assistance of the wife are elements of damage, it is true, but the plaintiff's right of action rests alone upon the fact of the seduction of the wife, and if the plaintiff fails to prove that fact, notwithstanding that he may have lost her affections, &c., he must fail in this action. A special action on the case might give him relief, but, in this action, failing to prove that the defendant debauched the plaintiff's wife, the plaintiff has no standing in Court. It would not, therefore, follow, as stated in the 14th point referred to, that, if the defendant was entitled to have the bill of particulars applied for, he would be equally entitled to have the items of proofs, proposed to be introduced on the trial, touching the defendant's frequent visits, his presents, and the various arts by which the defendant won the affections of the plaintiff's wife.

These objections disposed of, we propose to consider the single question presented on this appeal, viz.:

Has this Court power, after issue joined in an action of crim. con., to order a bill of particulars "of the divers other days and times" after the one particular day named in the complaint when the criminal conversation is claimed to have taken place, and of the particular guilty acts which, it is claimed, the defendant has confessed?

No objection is raised to the power of this Court at General Term to review the order appealed from. The order is sought to be sustained on the grounds—First:

That Section 158 of the Code, which provides for the delivery to either party on demand, or on the order of the Court, if "the items of an account" set up in a pleading, or "a bill of particulars of the claim" of either party, does not apply in the case of a claim such as that which forms the subject of this action; and, Second:

That the defendant's application should have been made under Section 160 of the Code: "When the allegations of a pleading are so indefinite and uncertain that the precise nature of the charge or defense is not apparent, the Court may require the pleading to be made definite and certain by amendment," and that, having omitted to make the application before answering, the defendant has thereby accepted the complaint as sufficient, and has waived the right to require any amendment of the complaint.

I understand the defendant's application to have been denied by his Honor the Chief Judge, not because there were no merits in the application, but because "of want of power to grant the same, as well as for other grounds stated" in the opinion of the Court. The main consideration suggested by the learned Chief Judge for refusing the application seems based upon the assumption, that if any question could be raised in relation to the form of the complaint, the defendant should have applied to have the complaint made more definite and certain; and that to compel the plaintiff to give the particulars called for, is in effect to compel him to disclose the evidence upon which the plaintiff relies to establish his cause of action on the trial.

With great respect we think this position erroneous.

The complaint as a pleading is good, and follows the established forms. There is no indefiniteness or uncertainty in the nature of the charge. It is distinctly alleged that the defendant debauched the plaintiff's wife. This act is declared to have been committed on the 10th day of October, 1863, thus bringing it within the Statute of Limitations; except for this purpose the allegation of time would have been immaterial. Proof of the adultery, therefore, on or about the date particularly alleged would establish the right of the plaintiff to recover.

That fact established, the plaintiff has a perfect cause of action, and the other matters alleged in the complaint, as to the loss of the wife's affections, society and services, enter into the cause only as bearing upon the question of damages.

The defendant could not obtain the information he asks, under this section, because it is only when the charge which he is called on to meet is not apparent in the complaint, that the Court has power to make that pleading more definite and certain.

It matters not whether the defendant did or did not debauch the plaintiff's wife at divers other days and times between the 10th day of October, 1863, and the time of the commencement of the action.

If guilty on the one day alleged, he is guilty of the wrong complained of, and the plaintiff is entitled to recover damages.

Even if the plaintiff should fail to establish the commission of an act of adultery on the 10th day of October, 1863, the charge is still definite and distinct against him; and if the plaintiff can establish the commission of a single act of criminal conversation between the said 10th day of October, 1863, and the time of the commencement of this action, his cause of action is fully established.

The Court, therefore, can give him no relief under section 160, because the nature of the charge against him is apparent on the face of the complaint, and the time immaterial, except to the defendant, to enable him to prepare for trial.

It does not follow that because the plaintiff is compelled to designate, with some reasonable particularity, those other days and times, that he is necessarily obliged to disclose the evidence by which his cause of action is to be sustained, and thus expose his preparation and means of attack. On the contrary, let us assume that one of these other days and times is the 10th day of October, 1863, and is so assigned by the plaintiff. What light is furnished to the defendant by which he can foresee, in any way, the proof by which the plaintiff, on the trial, proposes to establish the defendant's guilt?

The plaintiff has now undoubtedly the proofs within his reach by which he hopes to establish the fact, but the names of the witnesses who saw the guilty act committed, or the circumstantial evidence by which the plaintiff, in the absence of direct proof, will endeavor to establish the defendant's guilt, are not disclosed. How can it be said that to give this date, either absolutely or with reasonable approximation, affords the defendant any opportunity to tamper with or elude an unwilling witness, or enables him to manufacture testimony to meet facts and circumstances known only to the plaintiff, and not disclosed under the order applied for, and against which it seems to me impossible that he should be able to manufacture any available testimony?

I have dwelt thus at length upon this branch of the case because the decision of the Court below seems to rest mainly upon the point that the defendant had a full and ample remedy under section 160, which he has voluntarily abandoned, and that the application of the defendant called for the disclosure of the evidence upon which the plaintiff relies to establish his claim for damages.

I do not concur with the learned Chief Judge, "that the question is not of much moment to the defendant, as the information to which he could have been entitled" (that is, under Section 160) "may yet be obtained by examining the plaintiff before the trial."

Undoubtedly the plaintiff might be examined before trial, but it is difficult to imagine any line of examination, which would be permissible, which would give the defendant any information as to the days and times on which it is proposed to prove any guilty acts between the defendant and the plaintiff's wife.

If we assume, for example, as we probably should, that the plaintiff is innocent of any collusion with the alleged guilty parties; that the defendant wrongfully and wickedly, and without his privity or consent, committed this great wrong against him, and that to make out the case he relies upon statements made to him by parties who themselves have witnessed the guilty acts, or upon circumstantial evidence, or upon both, can the plaintiff be compelled to disclose either these statements or these circumstances? The statements of other parties are incompetent as evidence. The witnesses must be produced and examined upon the trial. We submit, therefore, that the examination of the plaintiff before trial does not give him the particulars he desires.

It is, however, of vital importance to the defendant that he should know, in advance of the trial, with reasonable particularity, when it is claimed that he has committed any wrong against the plaintiff, non constat, but that if advised of the times and occasions, he might be able to establish that he was absent from the city when it is alleged the adultery was committed, or that, because of some other facts or circumstances, the charge is equally untrue.

The plaintiff was undoubtedly prepared, at the time his action was commenced, to bring forward the necessary proofs; the complaint is sworn to, and we must assume, for the present purpose, that the plaintiff believes the matters alleged by him to be true, and that this belief is based upon facts, circumstances and information in his possession, and they ought to be very full and clear to warrant the grave charges therein made.

The answer is verified, and, as before observed, contains a full and unequivocal denial of the charges made in the complaint. We have no right to presume the defendant guilty; the burden of proof rests upon the plaintiff. The defendant may not be put upon his defense until the plaintiff has established, at least, a prima facie case against him, and it is therefore begging the whole question to say that the defendant, if guilty, knows, of course, all the facts which can possibly be introduced against him.

We have no right to presume that either party will attempt the manufacture of false testimony, but certainly the opportunity to do so is as free to the plaintiff as to the defendant.

It is no injustice, therefore, to ask the plaintiff to designate the times when the acts of which he complains were committed. It cannot in any way disclose his line of attack. It is fair, to the defendant, that he should be pointed with some degree of certainty to the times and occasions to enable him to meet these charges fairly. I am satisfied that this course, and this course alone, will aid the cause of justice and lead to the ascertainment of the truth.

Secondly, as to the power of the Court to grant the order. The authorities cited by the learned counsel for the defendant leave, I think, no room to doubt that in England, and in some of our sister States, the practice is well established to the full extent claimed. It is insisted, however, that this practice has never prevailed in this State, and that the only powers possessed by our courts are under Sections 158 and 160 of the Code. I have already endeavored to show that Section 160 has no application.

The first paragraph of Section 158, referring to the items of an account, clearly refers to an account stated, and has no application to the statement which the defendant seeks. (Johnson vs. Mallory, 2 Rob., 681.)

The concluding portion of the section has, however, a very important bearing upon the question under review.

It was undoubtedly the object of the Code to simplify the practice and proceeding in the courts of our State, and to the extent, and in the cases in which the Code undertook to lay down rules and regulations, all other statutory provisions inconsistent therewith were repealed (Sec. 468); but the rules and practice of the courts in civil actions, which were not inconsistent with the Code, were specially declared to be in force, subject to the power of the respective courts to modify and alter the same (Sec. 469).

It is declared that the distinction between legal and equitable remedies should no longer continue, and that a uniform course of proceeding should apply in all cases.

As originally framed, Sec. 158 bore this heading: "How to state an account in a pleading," and provided only for furnishing of the items of an account therein alleged. The title, so to speak, of the section, clearly indicated and limited its office. In 1851, the section was amended by providing for the delivery of a further account when the one delivered is defective, and further provided, "and the Court may in all cases order a bill of particulars of the claim of either party to be furnished."

It is evident that the Legislature meant, in this one section, to simplify and condense in the shortest possible form, but with the most enlarged application, such rules of practice as in its judgment were best calculated to bring about a furtherance of justice; and to the end that a party to the action, plaintiff as well as defendant, might be fully apprised of the full and particular claim made against him, the courts were authorized in all cases to order a bill of particulars of the claims of either party to be furnished. This provision does not apply to the nature of the charge, but rather to its extent. The precise nature of the charge, as already seen, is covered by Section 158, as well as by Section 142, which specifies that the complaint shall contain a plain and concise statement of the facts constituting the cause of action.

The charge is fully stated when the complaint alleges that the defendant debauched the plaintiff's wife, but the plaintiff's claim is that the defendant not only committed this act on one occasion, to wit: October 10, 1868, but on divers other days and times. It certainly will not be contended that the word claim can have any reference to the items of damage.

Under Section 158, then, we are of opinion that this Court has power to order the plaintiff to furnish such further particulars as the circumstances of the case require.

I have not been able to find an adjudicated case in our reports where such particulars have been ordered in a civil action, but the practice is not an unfamiliar one in criminal cases, even in our State, and in actions for divorce before the Code.

See Lambert vs. The People, 9 Cow., 586. Senator Spencer, who delivered the opinion of the Court, referring to the rule in criminal cases that the indictment must not only contain a description of the crime, but also a statement of the facts by which it is constituted, so as to identify the accusation, and to the rule in indictments for barratry, requiring the prosecutor to furnish a bill of particulars which should specify the particular instances, says: "This simple and plain rule is so agreeable to common sense and common justice, that it needs not any authority to support it."

In the case of Wood vs. Wood, an action for divorce, 2 Paige, 113, the Chancellor held "that the only safe and prudent course is to require the charge, whether of crimination or recrimination, to be stated in the pleadings, and in the issues, in such a manner that the adverse party may be prepared to meet it on the trial," and that "neither party has a right to make such a charge against the other, on mere suspicion, relying upon being able to flesh up testimony before the trial to support the allegation."

In the case of Early vs. Smith, 12 Irish C. L., XXXV., which was an action of slander, the defendant applied to the court for an order compelling the plaintiff to furnish the names, descriptions and addresses of the persons in whose presence the slanderous words were spoken, as well as the time when and the places where they were spoken.

The application seemed a novel one, no precedent for such an order was cited; but the court, after full examination, granted the order in a modified form, "though for the first time applied for."

It was claimed in that case, as it is in this, that such an order would enable the defendant to tamper with the plaintiff's witnesses, to which the court replied:

"That is an objection to which we should not yield; it may be raised to almost every application for a bill of particulars. The object of this application is to enable the defendant to go down to trial, knowing the case which he has to meet, and to prevent him from being taken by surprise."

The court directed the plaintiff to furnish a statement of the occasions on which the words were spoken, but not of the names descriptions and addresses of the persons present.

The power of the court under Section 158 is without limitation. The court may in all cases order a bill of particulars of the claim of either party to be furnished. This language is broad enough to cover this case, and the reason for the rule, which has obtained in our State in criminal actions and actions for divorce, applies with equal force to an action for crim. con. We are justified in saying that it applies with greater force in the case at bar, for the effect of a verdict against the defendant is practically to stamp, as an adulteress, a person not a party to the action, and therefore unable to make any defense in court.

We think the effect of this section is to incorporate into our practice the most liberal rules which have prevailed in other countries and States, which recognize, with us, the common law, in so far as such rules tend to bring about the more perfect administration of justice.

To recapitulate the conclusions to which we have come:

First—The precise nature of the charge being apparent in the complaint, the defendant could not obtain the particulars sought under the provisions of Section 160.

Second—The court below had power, under Section 158, to order the particulars asked for by the defendant, to the extent of compelling the plaintiff to designate with all possible particularity the times and occasions when the guilty acts were committed, whether the plaintiff was possessed of the information from the confessions of the defendant or otherwise.

Third—That the discretion given to the court to order such bill of particulars is a legal discretion to be exercised according to the well-established rules and practice of the court, and

Lastly—That the order appealed from should be reversed, without costs, however.

Dated, November 18, 1874.

A. McCUE,

Judge C. C. B.

APPEAL TO THE COURT OF APPEALS.

From this decision of the General Term the defendants appealed to the Court of Appeals, which having heard the arguments in the case on the 1st of December, 1874, on the 7th of December, 1874, rendered a decision reversing that of the General Term of the City Court, in the following opinion:

OPINION OF THE COURT OF APPEALS.

THEODORE TILTON, Respondent, vs. HENRY WARD BEECHER, Appellant.—William M. Everts for Appellant; Roger A. Pryor, for Respondent. Rapallo, J.

The only question arising upon the present appeal which is reviewable in this court, is whether or not the court below had power to grant the application of the defendant. If it possessed that power, and, under the mistaken impression that the power did not exist, denied the application on that ground, we have jurisdiction, and it is our duty to correct that error of law, and remit the case to the court below, with a direction that the motion be heard at Special Term, on the merits. (People vs. New-York Central Railroad Company, 29 New York, 418; Brown vs. Brown, Court of Appeals, November 1874; not reported.) This is the extent to which we interfere with orders made upon applications which do not rest upon strict legal right, but involve an exercise of discretion on the part of the courts below. It is not contended on the part of the appellant, and it would have been useless to contend, that the present application was founded upon legal right, or that it did not rest in the discretion of the court, nor that if the order appealed from was the result of fair exercise of that discretion we should be asked to review it. The ground of the appeal is that the Judge to whom the application was originally made at Special Term decided that he had no power to grant the relief sought; that he erroneously held that such relief could have been applied for under section 160 of the Code of Procedure, and could be obtained by no other proceeding, and that the defendant is entitled to have this error of law corrected, and his application duly considered without being embarrassed by the legal difficulties supposed to stand in the way.

The first point for our consideration is whether in fact the case was disposed of in the court below on the question of power. If it was we are then called upon to decide whether or not the power existed, and if we find that it did, the defendant is entitled to the unembarrassed exercise of the discretion of the court in which his cause is pending upon the question whether or not justice demands that his application be granted.

The best evidence on the first point is the order of the court denying the defendant's motion. This order recites, among other things, that an order had before been granted requiring the plaintiff to show cause why he should not deliver to the defendant's attorney "a statement in writing of the particular times and places at which he expects or intends to prove that any acts of adultery or criminal intercourse took place between the defendant and the wife of the plaintiff." It denies the motion, on the ground that the court has no power to grant the same, and on other grounds stated. If the words "and on the other grounds stated," had been omitted, it is very clear that the order would conclusively establish that the motion was denied solely on the ground of a supposed want of power to grant it. What qualification, then, was intended for the insertion of these words? We must suppose that the learned Judge referred to the grounds stated by himself in the opinion which he delivered contemporaneously with the order, and in which he set forth the reasons for his decision. Any other supposition would be unreasonable. This opinion presents with much force the reasons for holding that he had no power to grant the motion. But in no part of it does he say that he has exercised his discretion as to the merits of the application, and determined that it should be denied upon the merits. The learned Judge, after commenting on the subject of bills of particulars in actions of tort, and showing that ordinarily they will not be granted in that class of actions, says: "But as I have said, the question is as to the power of the court," and he proceeds to sustain his position that the court has no such power by arguing that the defendant could have obtained an adequate remedy by a motion under section 160 of the Code to make the complaint more definite and certain, and that that was the appropriate and sole remedy.

After a careful examination of the opinion we are satisfied that it does not in any substantial respect qualify the statement in the order that the motion was denied on the ground of want of power, and that the other grounds stated are that a different remedy is provided by the Code, and the party is confined to the one thus provided. This being the shape in which the case comes before us, we think it presents a question of law, and is therefore appealable to this court. It may not be absolutely essential to consider the question whether the particulars sought could have been obtained under section 160, by an application to make the complaint more definite and certain. If the power to order particulars existed before the enactment of that section it is not thereby abrogated. The most that could be said upon the subject is, that, if section 160 affords an appropriate remedy the court might require the party to resort to that remedy. Both remedies might consistently exist together, but so much stress has been laid on the assertion that a remedy could have been obtained under section 160, that it is proper to ascertain whether or not that position is sound.

The language of the section is: "When the allegations of a pleading are so indefinite or uncertain that the precise nature of the charge or defense is not apparent, the court may require the pleading to be made definite and certain." It will be observed that it is only where the precise nature of the charge is not apparent that an application can be made under this section. It enables a party to obtain a definite statement in the pleading of the nature of the charge intended to be made against him, but not of the particulars or circumstances, of time or place. For this purpose a different proceeding is pointed out, viz., an application under section 158, which provides, among other things, that "the court may in all cases order a bill of particulars of the claims of either party to be furnished." It is evident that in the present case there was no occasion for an application under section 160 to make the complaint more definite and certain. There is no uncertainty or indefiniteness in respect to the nature of the charge made against the defendant. The difficulty under which he claims to be laboring is that the complaint does not point out the times or occasions when the alleged offences are claimed to have been committed, but avers simply that they were committed on the 10th of October, 1888, and divers other days and times after that day, and before the commencement of this action, thus covering a period of very nearly six years, the action having been commenced in August, 1874. He denies that the acts charged were ever committed, but claims that for the purpose of preparing his defense it is necessary that he should be furnished with the particulars of the time and place in order that he may summon witnesses to rebut such evidence as may be brought against him, or explain the circumstances which may be proved, and upon which the plaintiff may rely to establish the charges.

In action upon money demand, consisting of various items, a bill of particulars of the dates and description of the transactions out of which the indebtedness is claimed to have arisen is granted almost as a matter of course; and this proceeding is so common and familiar that when a bill of particulars is spoken of it is ordinarily understood as referring to particulars of that character. But it is an error to suppose that bills of particulars are confined to actions involving an account, or to actions for the recovery of money demands arising upon contract. A bill of particulars is appropriate in all descriptions of actions when the circumstances are such that justice demands that a party should be apprised of the matters for which he is to be put on trial with greater particularity than is required by the rule of pleading. They have been ordered in actions of libel. (Keefe v. Davis & Chapman, 10 Pick., 767, 7; Dowl & R., 774; trespass—Johnson v. Birley, 5 Barn. and Ald., 540; trover—Humphrey v. Cottleton, 4 Cowan, 54, and in ejectment—Viecher v. Conant, 4 Cowan, 386.) Even in criminal cases the instances in which the courts have by analogy to the practice in civil actions ordered bills of particulars, are frequent, viz.: On an indictment for being a common barrator, where a general form of pleading is allowed, (Hawkins v. P. C. B., C. 83, sec. 13; Goddard v. Smith, 6 Med. R., 261; Commonwealth v. Davis, 11 Pick., 482.) On an indictment for nuisance the prosecutor has been required to specify particulars of the separate acts of nuisance which he intended to prove, (Rex v. Carwood 8d, and Ell. 815, Regina v. Flower, 3 Jurist, 538, and in a prosecution of embezzlement, Rex v. Hodgson, 3 Carv. and Payne, 302.) And in England there is nothing more common at the present day than to order particulars to be filed in an action for divorce, either on the ground of cruelty or adultery, and this is done on the application either of the defendant, or in cases where the wife is the defendant, of the person with whom she is alleged to have committed adultery, and who under the statutes 20 and 21, Vict., chapter 85, is joined with her as co-respondent for the purpose of being mulcted in damages. These cases show very clearly the opinion of the English courts, that a bill of particulars can be ordered in an action of crim. con., because section 32 of the statute last referred to expressly provides that where the alleged adulterer is named in the petition as co-respondent, the claim made by every such petition shall be heard and tried on the same principles, in the same manner, and subject to the same or the like rules and regulations as actions for criminal conversation are now tried and decided in courts of common law. Under this provision particulars have been ordered on the application of the co-respondent as well as of the respondent. (Higgs v. Higgs, 11 Weekly, Rex, 154, and see Hunt v. Hunt, and Duke, 2 Sw. and Trist, 574.)

The cases in which the complainant has been required to furnish particulars on the application of the respondent, are too numerous to justify their citation here. There are nearly a dozen of them in volumes 2 and 3 of Swaby and Tristram's Probate and Divorce Court Reports, which we have examined, and a similar order was made by the Supreme Court of Massachusetts, in 1834, in the case of Adams v. Adams, 16 Pick., 254. In this State, Chancellor Walworth, in the case of Wood v. Wood, 3, page 103, laid down the rules which have since governed in actions between husband and wife for divorce, and rendered applications for bills of particulars unnecessary. It must be remembered that here, when the charge of adultery is denied, the issue must be tried by jury, unless the parties consent to a different mode of trial, and it is even doubtful whether they should be permitted so to consent; but in a contested case the Chancellor laid down the rule as follows:

"The only safe and prudent course is to require the charge, whether of crimination or recrimination, to be stated on the pleadings and in the issues, in such a manner that the adverse party may be prepared to meet it on the trial. If the persons with whom the adultery was committed are known, they must be named in the defendant's answer, and the adultery must be charged with reasonable certainty as to time and place. If they are unknown, that fact should be stated in the answer and in the issue, and the time and circumstances under which the adultery was committed should be set forth. Neither party has a right to make such a charge against the other on mere suspicion, relying upon being able to fish up testimony before the trial to support the allegation."

The Chancellor here speaks of setting forth the particulars in the answer, because the case then before him was one of recrimination. In the case of the Commonwealth v. Snelling, 13th Pick., 321, Chief Justice Shaw gave a very thorough examination to the subject of the practice of the courts of common law in requiring bills of particulars, and the principle upon which it is founded, and, after an extensive review of the authorities, came to the conclusion that the general rule to be extracted from them was that where, in the course of a suit, from any cause, a party was placed in such a situation that justice could not be done at the trial without the aid of the information to be obtained by means of a specification or bill of particulars, the court, in virtue of its general authority to regulate the conduct of trials, had power to direct such information to be seasonably furnished. The authorities cited by him are decisions in civil cases, but by analogy he applied the principle to a criminal prosecution for libel, and sustained an order requiring the prisoner to furnish particulars of his justification of a general libelous charge against the magistrate.

The same rule is laid down in a recent case in the Court of Queen's Bench, in Ireland (Early vs. Smith, Cysse Com. Law. R., Appendix 35), where it was held, and on the authority of many of the same decisions which are cited by Chief Justice Shaw, that the rule which governs the courts in ordering particulars to be given, is that in all cases, whether trespass, trover, or on the case, the court has a general superintending power and control, no matter what the form of the action may be. If the complaint or declaration is conceived in vague and general terms, without specifying the circumstances under or the occasions on which the plaintiff relies, and the defendant satisfies the court, by affidavit, that either for the purpose of pleading or of defense at the trial, it is necessary that the plaintiff be more specific, and more clearly define his cause of action, the court has a general jurisdiction to order the plaintiff to give a more precise and specific description of that upon which he relies. In the case last cited a bill of particulars was ordered in a case of oral slander. Although no precedent could be found for an order for particulars in such a case, the court determined that the circumstances presented to them brought the case by analogy within the reasons of those in which particulars had been ordered, and that, therefore, they were authorized to afford the relief required.

A reference to a few of the authorities upon which these decisions were founded, will show that in almost every case in which defendant can satisfy the court that it is necessary to a fair trial that he should be apprized beforehand of the particulars of the charge which he is expected to meet, the court has authority to compel the adverse party to specify these particulars so far as in his power.

For instance, in Doe vs. Phillips (6 Term Rep., 597), an act of ejectment was brought. It was made to appear to the court that the action was founded upon the alleged forfeiture of a term of a lease by the breach of covenants contained in the lease. The court ordered the plaintiffs to furnish particulars of the breaches of the covenants, of the times when, &c., he meant to insist that the defendant had forfeited the lease. To the same effect was the case of Doe vs. Brood (2 Man. and Gr., 523, see in Davies vs. Chapman, 6 Adol. and Ell., 767), it was held that in an action for an escape, the plaintiff might properly be ordered by a Judge to give a particular of the alleged escape, specifying the time and place, and that the plaintiff is bound to specify them precisely, if he could, and if not, as well as he was able.

Analogous cases are to be found throughout the books in this State. It was long since recognized that in actions of ejectment, to ascertain the precise premises for which the plaintiff was proceeding, the constant course was to obtain a bill of particulars. (Viecher vs. Conant, 4 Cow., 396, and so in actions of trover, Humphrey, 50; Cottlegan, 4; Cow., 54). As I have already shown, there is no class of cases in which, in England, even at the present day, it is more common to order particulars to be furnished than in actions in which adultery is charged. If the charge is general and vague, particulars are always ordered. As early as the year 1692, in the case of the proceeding for divorce against the Duchess of Norfolk, before the House of Lords of England (reported in 8 Hargrave's State Trials, 85, and Howell's State Trials, vol. 12, p. 833), the Duchess demanded particulars of the charge against her. They were ordered. The complainant furnished a statement that the person charged to have committed the crime with the Duchess was John Gormaine, of, &c., and that the times were between the months of June and December, 1685, and several times since, specifying places. The petition of her husband was presented in 1692. To this charge, covering six years, she answered that the charge as to time and place was too general, and did not answer the end of the order of the House of Lords. A further and more definite bill of particulars was then furnished, affording the complainant an extensive field for proof, but at the same time indicating to defendant the periods and occasions in respect to which she was called upon to defend herself.

Without following the line of English decisions, I come at once to those of our courts in Pennsylvania as early as 1784. In the case of Steele vs. Steele (1 Dall., 49), after issue was joined in an action for a divorce for cruelty, the court held that notice ought to be given of the facts intended to be proved under the general allegations of the libel. In 1803, in Garry vs. Garry (4 Yates, 244), the libel charged that the respondent, on the 10th of June, 1799, at the county aforesaid, and at other times and places, committed adultery with Esther Palmer and other lewd women to the plaintiff unknown, and the court held that unless the complainant, before trial, specified in a written notice the time, and places, and attendant circumstances, she should be confined in the evidence to acts of adultery committed with Esther Palmer.

In Massachusetts, in 1834, in the case of Adams vs. Adams, 16 Pick., 254, the libel for divorce charged acts of adultery generally, and a bill of particulars was ordered.

Most of the authorities which I have mentioned, consist of adjudications prior to the amendment of 1849 to Section 150 of the Code of Procedure, which is in these words: "And the Court may, in all cases, order a bill of particulars of the claim of either party to be furnished."

It must be borne in mind that we are discussing simply a question of power, whether in the case before us the Court below had power to order particulars to be furnished; not whether, upon the facts disclosed by the affidavits, the Court below ought or ought not to have ordered particulars, but whether it had the power to do so. If it made a mistake in that respect we must correct it. If the Code had been silent upon the subject of bills of particulars, the 489th section would probably have sufficed to preserve the authority of the Court to order particulars in all cases before accustomed. But the express authority conferred by section 158 to order particulars in all cases, especially when read in view of cases which have been, and in which particulars had been ordered, would seem to place the question beyond doubt. Many of the arguments on the part of the plaintiff are more proper to be addressed to the Court of original jurisdiction on the question of the exercise of its discretion than to this tribunal.

It is claimed that an important element in the plaintiff's case consists of confessions made by the defendant, and that, if particulars are ordered, it will be necessary to prove that he confessed the acts to have been committed at the dates specified in the bill of particulars. This is an imaginary difficulty. It would be absurd to suppose that any tribunal of ordinary intelligence would order a bill of particulars in such form as to exclude evidence of general confessions.

The same argument was used in case of Codrington vs. Codrington, Andrews 2, Swab and Twist, 308. After an order for particulars had been granted, the complainant delivered particulars in which he alleged that the respondent had committed frequent acts of adultery between 1859 and 1862 with one Lieut. Mildmay, at Malta, and during a Journey in Switzerland, Savoy, Sardinia and Italy. Application was made for further particulars, and it appearing that the charge was founded upon the contents of a diary and letters of the respondent which had come to the petitioner's hands, it was ordered that unless the petitioner gave further particulars he should be confined in his proof to the confessions contained in the diary and letters.

It is further urged that the defendant in such a case needs no specification of particulars, because he knows better than any other but one the details about which he seeks information. This is petitio principii; it assumes that the defendant has committed the acts with which he is charged, while the very question to be tried is whether or not he has committed them.

A further argument is, that to make the disclosures sought will afford the defendant an opportunity to tamper with the plaintiff's witnesses. This argument has been used in many of the cases to which I have referred, and has been uniformly rejected. The principle upon which orders for particulars are granted is the advancement of justice and the preventing of surprise at the trial. The court must see that both parties are fairly dealt with, and it cannot be presumed that it will make any order which shall shield the defendant from just responsibility.

Whether in the exercise of its discretion it should grant or refuse the order applied for we are not to decide. All that we decide is that it has the power. If it sees fit, to order particulars to be furnished, and that in deciding that it had not such power it committed an error in law which requires us to reverse its decision.

A point is made on the part of the plaintiff which requires notice. It is contended that the General Term, in affirming the order of the Special Term, must be presumed to have passed upon the merits on the facts as well as upon the law of the case, and the decision in Tracy vs. Altemeyer, 46 N. Y., 593, is cited in support of this point. The answer is that in the present case, it appears that the orders of the Special Term were reviewed by only two Judges of the court; that they were divided in opinion, and that it was only by force of the statute specially applicable to the City Court of the Brooklyn Laws of 1870, page 1,047, section 8, that the order stood as affirmed, the two Judges disagreeing.

Our conclusion is that the orders of the special General Term of the City Court of Brooklyn be reversed without costs, and the case remitted, to be heard at Special Term; that its discretion may be exercised upon the merits.

Chief Justice Church, Justices Folger, Rapallo, and Andrews.

JUDGE ALLEN'S DISSENTING OPINION.

Here follows the opinion of Judge Allen :

TILTON vs. BEECHER—ALLEN J.

If the court below had not the power to grant the motion, the order should be affirmed. If the power existed, its exercise was in the discretion of the City Court of Brooklyn, and the action of that court in the exercise of that discretion is not the subject of review in the court. In one or more cases in which we have thought the court of original jurisdiction had erred in refusing to act by reason of a supposed want of power, and have reversed the orders and remitted the proceedings to the end that the proper court might exercise the discretion the law had vested in it. In these cases it appeared by the order and record of the court that the decision of the Court below was placed exclusively on the ground of a want of power. Here we have not the record evidence. The motion at Special Term was denied for want of power, and for other reasons stated, showing conclusively that the relief was not denied solely upon the ground that the court had no power to grant it. The clear inference from the terms of the order is, that the Judge doubted whether the court had power to order the information to be furnished; but if it had the power, a proper case had not been made for the exercise of the power. If the opinion is referred to, the same conclusion will be arrived at. The Judge had evidently great doubts, and inclined to the opinion that there was a want of power, but was also of opinion that it was not a proper case for the relief if the power existed. The order at the General Term surely affirms the order without assigning or declaring the reasons, and we must assume that it was affirmed on the merits, it not appearing that it was affirmed for any other reason. If the fact that it was affirmed under the statute by a divided court, which is not stated in the order, the result would be the same. The facts giving this Court jurisdiction of the appeal must appear by the record. They do not so appear in the case. I am for the dismissal of the appeal.

Judge Grover doubts the existence of the power, but concurs in the opinion of Judge Allen.

JUDGE McCUE GRANTS THE BILL OF PARTICULARS

Sustained by this decision of the Court of Appeals, the counsel for the defendant renewed their application for a bill of particulars before Judge McCue, at a Special Term of the City Court, December 10, 1874. The application was granted, Judge McCue writing the following opinion :

Motion for a bill of particulars:

The court of last resort has decided that this court has power to order a bill of particulars in all descriptions of actions when the circumstances are such that justice demands that a party shall be apprised of the matters for which he is to be put on trial, with greater particularity than is required by the rules of pleading.

Application is now made by the defendant for a statement in writing, verified by the plaintiff, of the particular times and places at which he expects or intends to prove the commission of any criminal acts between the defendant and the plaintiff's wife.

After a careful examination of the papers submitted on the motion, and after deliberating upon the able and suggestive arguments of counsel, I am of opinion that the present case is a proper one for the exercise of judicial discretion, and that the plaintiff can without any injustice to himself, give the defendant the information desired by him, so as to enable him to prepare fully to meet the plaintiff's charges.

The law imposes no impossibility, and does not require from the plaintiff the designation of a precise day, at the hazard of failure of justice if he fail to prove the act upon the precise day named. It is sufficient if he designates the day with such reasonable approximation as that the defendant is fairly apprised of the charges.

In view of the affidavit of the plaintiff read on this motion, it will be sufficient for him to state in the bill of particulars to be furnished that the two acts of criminal intimacy alleged to have taken place 'on the 10th and 17th days of October, 1868, were committed on or about those days, and at either one or the other of the places mentioned in the affidavit; or, as suggested by one of the counsel for the defendant, it may be regarded as sufficient to say that these acts were committed during the month of October, 1868. Such a statement fairly acquaints the defendant with the charge he is to meet. I think it not improper to remark here, that the frankness with which the defendant's counsel concede that such a statement may be regarded as a reasonable compliance with the rule proper to be applied in such case as this renders this application more easy of disposition than it seemed to be when the motion was first made at Special Term.

The objection to giving a statement of particulars seems to rest mainly upon the ground that the designation of particular acts of adultery necessarily excludes proof of confessions made by the defendant, going to establish acts of adultery, when no time or place was named in the confession. The general confessions of the defendant may be given in evidence against himself, and they may be sufficient, if accepted in full force by the jury, to convict the defendant, and it is clear that all declarations, writings and documents which are properly admissible as evidence, may be used with all the force and effect they deserve against the defendant to establish the main issue.

The radical difference in the proposed orders submitted by the respective counsel seems to be this: The plaintiff insists that he shall not be precluded from giving evidence of acts of the defendant, by which the adulterous intercourse, charged in the complaint, may be established, "although it may not thereby appear to have been committed on any particular day, or at any particular place;" while, on the other hand, the defendant insists that if by acts it is intended to prove specific acts of adultery, the bill of particulars should state these acts with the same fairness with reference to time, place, and circumstances, as is suggested in relation to the two acts alleged to have been committed in the month of October, 1868. I cannot well understand how any act of the defendant can be offered as proving directly and specifically the adulterous intercourse charged in the complaint, "although it may not thereby appear to have been committed on any particular day or at any particular time." Such seems to be the plaintiff's proposition. Such proof would necessarily not only establish the commission of the adultery, but also, with some degree of certainty, both the time and place.

There is no practical difficulty in reconciling this apparent antagonism, as declared by the court of last resort in the decision made in this case. "The court must see to it that both parties are fairly dealt with." If the plaintiff proposes to prove any specific acts of adultery, other than those alleged to have taken place in October, 1868, it should be so stated. If the plaintiff does not propose this, it is no hardship to limit him to proof of the specific charges which he intends to press.

The plaintiff's proposition that if he be thus limited and fail in his proofs as to the acts alleged to have taken place in October, 1868, the defendant, "though confessing his guilt as to other times and places," must necessarily be acquitted, seems to be entirely untenable.

In the shape in which the former motion was made, there was force in the objection, for it was then asked that the plaintiff should be confined in his proofs to the times mentioned in the bill of particulars. On the present application, however, it is not sought to deprive the plaintiff of the benefit of the general confessions of the defendant. Such a rule might indeed "shield a defendant from just responsibility." We propose no such restraint.

As to the specific acts of crime charged against the defendant, he should be advised of them with reasonable precision. As to the results which may follow the proofs of acts (other than specific acts of adultery), documents, confessions and any other circumstances properly admissible in evidence, they must be left to the determination of the jury under the rules laid down by the court on the trial.

I am of the opinion, therefore, first, that the plaintiff should be limited as to his proof of specific acts of adultery to those named by him in his bill of particulars; second, that this order is not to be construed as prohibiting the plaintiff from introducing on the trial of this action testimony which may be admissible under the general rules of evidence as to any acts (other than the specific acts of adultery), declarations, writings, documents and confessions, in which alleged confessions no particular time or place shall have been referred to.

No costs of this motion.

A. McCUE,
Judge.

JUDGE McCUE OVERRULED.

From this decision the plaintiff's attorney took an appeal to the General Term, which, having been heard before Judges Neilson and Reynolds, an order was entered on the 29th day of December, reversing Judge McCue's order. Judges Neilson and Reynolds concurred in this decision and wrote the following opinions:

JUDGE NEILSON'S OPINION.

CITY COURT OF BROOKLYN—GENERAL TERM.—
Theodore Tilton, plaintiff and appellant, vs. Henry Ward Beecher, defendant and respondent.

This is an appeal from an order of the Special Term requiring the plaintiff to furnish a bill of particulars.

The application for the particulars was made before me in the first instance, and was denied "for want of power, and on the other grounds stated." The opinion filed with that order did expressly put that denial of one branch of the application on the want of power. That was as to confessions imputed to and denied by the defendant. It was shown that the plaintiff had stated in a newspaper article that the defendant had confessed the wrongful acts charged, and the application was to compel the plaintiff to state when and where those alleged confessions had been made. The views expressed in the opinion as to the untenable character of that part of the application, and as to the want of power to grant it, were accepted by the defendant's counsel, and that claim had since been abandoned.

The Court of Appeals, Judges Allen and Grover, dissenting, reversed my order as to the other claims to discovery, on the ground that the particulars had been denied because of a supposed want of power. The closing words of the order were not, it seems, well chosen; the expression, "for want of power and on the other grounds stated," having been taken to refer not to the two modes of treatment, but the one under restraint for want of authority, and the other having regard to the merits and the discretion which should have been exercised, but to one and the same ground of rejection, namely, the mere want of authority.

It appears, therefore, that the Court of Appeals reversed the order because of that disavowal of authority; that the doctrine of the court of last resort is that the court of first resort may, in the exercise of a wise discretion, order particulars to be furnished in actions for tests, including cases of this character. That is the extent of the decision.

But that court did not and could not determine that the application which had been denied should have been granted, but left the discretion to be exercised by this court in granting or refusing such application untrammelled and untouched.

In many of the cases cited in the elaborate opinion of Judge Rapallo, the bill or narration was so vague and general that something supplemental was necessary to enable the defendant to know what the real character of the charge was. When the particulars ordered in such cases in aid of the pleading were furnished, that pleading and the particulars combined became as definite and certain as the bill or complaint presented. Such cases do not, therefore, touch the question whether the complaint before us should be supplemented by the particulars, nor were they cited with a view to that question, but simply to show that the court may, as occasions arise, order the particulars.

If this practice can be conveniently and usefully applied to most actions for torts, it is not to be assumed that it can be well applied to such a case as this.

The nature of the offense, the secrecy and studied concealment attending its perpetration, constitute an objection. A good cause of action may exist for such a wrong, to be proved only by circumstantial evidence, and the plaintiff be utterly unable to comply with an order to give particulars as to time and place. It would, we apprehend, be so in most instances, the cases in which the particulars could be safely given being quite exceptional.

The particulars, when furnished, perform a double office. First, to advise the defendant; secondly, to limit the plaintiff. It may be a shield; it may be a sword. Before they are ordered it should appear that the applicant needs the information, and that the other party can give the particulars, to be held by them as in a firm grasp in the prescribed circle, without materially impairing his rights. If the subject-matter be such as in its nature admits of general or reliable information, a thing open as the day, the particulars may be ordered without hesitation. On the contrary, if from the nature of the subject the act or offense and the circumstances are not to be thus seen, known or resolved, the order should be granted with great hesitation, or withheld.

It was therefore material to consider whether the defendant needed the information claimed and in this form. He shows by affidavit that he had no knowledge or suspicion as to the times or places at which the plaintiff expects to prove the case; was entirely at a loss to form any surmise concerning the probable line of proof which may be adopted by the plaintiff on the trial. That being so, he stood in the attitude common to suitors pressed by what they deem an artificial or unjust claim; the field of combat opened to him as it has been to litigants for generations. He will recognize the fact; his learned counsel will accept the suggestion that a defendant cannot by an interlocutory order be put in the position he will be, given the light he will have when on the trial the plaintiff's proofs are in and his case closed. But still the inquiry is whether or not, within a due course of procedure, the information can or should be furnished. If he did need that information, when the application was first made at Special Term, does that count rest on him still? I learn from the arguments and illustrations of counsel speaking to the case in court on this and former occasions, and from the affidavits, and generally from the press, that there had been examinations before a committee, the plaintiff present as a witness, that several statements have, from time to time, been given to the public, in each the plaintiff seeking to make out his case, and in his zeal setting forth and supplying his proofs. The details of the case have thus obtained a large publicity. In addition to that we have before us the plaintiff's affidavit, used at the Special Term in resisting the last motion, in which he states what proof he has and what he has not. If not otherwise obtained, this affidavit on file gives to the defendant the desired information. This the counsel concedes by his offer to accept that affidavit as the bill of particulars.

It must be gratifying to the learned counsel for the defendant to contrast the position of his client as thus advised with the position he would have occupied had the plaintiff, according to the general course, brought his action, studiously withholding all statements of the proofs he proposes to have at his command. The application for particulars would then have had much greater support.

But it does not appear from the proofs that the plaintiff has any actual personal knowledge which could with safety be put in the form of particulars. He had at best certain information by which he may have been enlightened or may have been misled; if not misled as to the substantive fact, he may have been as to the times and places to be designated under the order.

As the defendant has thus all the information which could be extorted by the orders of the court, should he be content, or should that as to time and place be put in the form of particulars? The change in form will not add one jot or tittle to the information as given. The advantage gained might be one which the defendant, as to the exercise of his own judgment would reject, one which might operate oppressively upon the plaintiff on the trial.

A special and theoretical suggestion in favor of the particulars remains to be noticed. It is said that, as the defendant is innocent, he may be surprised on the trial, may be confronted by fabricated testimony, as to acts never dreamed of by him; that if a statement of the times and places be given, he might be prepared to prove that at such times he was absent from the State. Such apprehensions, peculiar to a nervous suitor, do not deserve much attention. The statements that plaintiff intends to introduce fabricated testimony were fully met by his affidavit, and we must respect that denial. The case is not in this respect peculiar; the like suggestion, for aught that we can see, might be made in half the cases on our calendar. I have too much faith in the ordeal to which unknown witnesses may be subjected on the trial to accept such a suggestion. In few cases could a defendant be as free from a chance of being taken by surprise. As the case is expected to last some weeks in its trial, there would be ample time for the defendant to recover from any casual surprise and meet any unexpected testimony.

On the hearing of the Special Term, Judge McCue granted the order from which this appeal is taken. After his usual method he wrote an opinion, an opinion entitled to great respect.

But the order as framed does not in terms or in the sense and spirit conform to the opinion. It is much less liberal than the opinion, and is in several respects objectionable.

First—The plaintiff is required to state the particular times and places at which he expects and intends to offer proof of specific acts of adultery.

The requisition is somewhat in contrast with the opinion; from which it would appear that the very day need not be stated. Yet, more strongly to be contrasted with the more liberal rule stated in the case in 4th of Cowen's R., p. 55: "In a bill of particulars the date of the items should always be given with as much particularity as possible. If the precise day cannot be stated, the month or year probably can."

On the trial the order would be of binding force and would control. Secondly, the next clause in the order precludes plaintiff from offering any evidence at the trial to prove any specific act of adultery at any other time or place than stated in the particulars.

We think this improper, not only because proof otherwise admissible and somewhat circumstantial in its character would be excluded, but because an order of non pros, or for such preclusion should not be made until after a previous order to furnish the particulars had been disobeyed. The deprivation should follow some offense.

The residue of the order provides that the plaintiff shall not be prohibited from introducing testimony, confessions, and so forth, other than as to specific acts of adultery, though no specific time be referred to. That relates to the mere introduction of such proof, not to the effect of it when received.

At the close of the argument yesterday morning I entertained the hope that we could modify the order and in a sense affirm it, but on further examination and reflection we find that, according to our convictions, impossible, and after much deliberation are constrained to reverse the order.

J. NEILSON,

Chief Justice.

OPINION OF JUDGE REYNOLDS.

The Court of Appeals has decided that this Court "has the power, if it sees fit, to order particulars to be furnished," and has remitted the case to this Court to decide "whether, in the exercise of its discretion, it should grant or refuse the order applied for."

Upon the former appeal, I considered the question carefully, and came to the conclusion that this is not a proper case for the exercise of that power. With great respect for the views of my brother McCue to the contrary, I still think that the order ought not to be made, and for reasons given in the opinion then filed by me.

After all the statements and affidavits that have been made in this matter, I think there is more danger that an order so exacting as to be at all effectual would work hardship and injustice to the plaintiff, than that the defendant, without it, would suffer from surprise, upon a trial, which, as the counsel on both sides suppose, is to last for weeks.

The usual course of procedure, and the rules of evidence will, I think, conserve the rights of both parties.

I am therefore in favor of reversing the order appealed from.

GEORGE G. REYNOLDS,

J. U. C.

THE ORDER OF REVERSAL.

In pursuance of the above opinions, the following order was drawn by Thomas E. Pearsall, Esq., of counsel for Mr. Tilton, approved by Chief Judge Neilson, and entered on record in the Clerk's office of the City Court:

At a General Term of the City Court of Brooklyn, held at the Court House, City of Brooklyn, on the 29th day of December, 1874, present, Hon. Joseph Nellson and George G. Reynolds, Judges:

Theodore Tilton, plaintiff and appellant, against Henry Ward Beecher, defendant and respondent.

The appeal from the order entered in this action on the 11th day of December, 1874, requiring the plaintiff to furnish "a statement of particulars, setting forth the particular times and places at which he expects or intends to offer proof that any specific acts of adultery occurred between the defendant and the wife of the plaintiff, and that plaintiff be precluded from offering evidence at the trial of this action to prove the occurrence of any specific act of adultery at any other time or place than such as shall be set forth in the said statement of particulars," having been heard at the General Term of this court—

It is now on motion of Morris & Pearsall, attorneys for the appellant, after hearing Roger A. Pryor and William A. Beach, Esqs., of counsel for appellant, Thomas G. Shearman and B. F. Tracy, Esqs., of counsel for respondent, ordered that the said order appealed from be and at the same time is hereby reversed, without costs.

(A Copy.)

GEORGE W. KNAEBEL,

Acting Clerk.

The order for a Bill of Particulars having been finally refused, the suit went to trial upon Mr. Tilton's original complaint, on August 21, 1874.

The cause was called on Monday, January 4, 1875, by Judge McCue, in the Brooklyn City Court, Part I. Mr. Beecher and his counsel were present, but as the case was called two hours before the time understood by the plaintiff's counsel, Mr. Tilton was not represented, except by Mr. Pearsall, whose attendance was accidental. He answered "Ready" to the call, however, but insisted on an adjournment to the next day. Judge McCue, by right of assignment, should have held the term, but there had been an implied understanding that the case should be sent to Judge Neilson. In the preliminary contests in which Judge McCue had granted a bill of particulars, and Judge Neilson had denied it, the opinion of both Judges as to the nature of the evidence to be admitted on this particular case was foreshadowed. Naturally, Mr. Beecher's counsel were anxious that the case should be tried before Judge McCue, while the plaintiff preferred Judge Neilson. It was thought on this first day that Judge McCue would preside, but in accordance with Mr. Pearsall's desire the case was adjourned till 11 a. m. the next day, and the matter left undecided. During the afternoon the special panel of jurors was called and sworn in Part II. of the City Court over seventy being excused, however. On the same day the testimony of James H. Drake of Staten Island, summoned for Mr. Beecher's side, was taken de bene esse, the witness being about to sail for Europe. His testimony was solely regarding declarations of Mr. Moulton denying the truth of the reports published in Woodhull & Claflin's Weekly.

On Tuesday, January 5, the question as to whether the case should be tried before Judge McCue or Judge Neilson was argued. The counsel for Mr. Beecher strenuously objected to its being sent to Judge Neilson, Mr. Evarts denying the power of the Court to dispose of the case in this way. Mr. Beach, however, insisted that an agreement made to try the case before Judge Neilson was binding. Judge McCue, after consulting with his associates, decided to send the case to the other part of the Court. Mr. Evarts took an exception, and Judge Neilson began impanelling a jury. Three jurors had been selected at the close of this day's work.

On Wednesday, eight jurymen had been obtained, and on Thursday the twelve jurors had been secured, all of whom, however, were subject to peremptory challenges. Each man was subjected to the closest scrutiny, and lawyers unite in saying that such an inspection of jurors has never before been known in this country, except, perhaps, in the case of Wm. M. Tweed.

On Friday, January 8, three of the jurors were peremptorily challenged—two by Mr. Tilton's counsel and one by the defense. Two others were excused by the mutual consent of the counsel on both sides. The places of the five thus dismissed were filled on that day, and when finally completed the jury stood as follows:

Griffin B. Halstead,
Henry Thyer,
George Hull,
Christopher Fitter,
Samuel Flate,
A. R. Case,

Edward Whelan,
W. H. Davis,
John F. Taylor,
Wm. T. Jeffrey,
Chester Carpenter,
John McMunn.

The relative positions of Griffin B. Halstead, the first juror, and Chester Carpenter, the eleventh, were changed by Judge Neilson, Mr. Carpenter thus becoming the foreman.

FIRST DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

SCENE IN THE COURT-ROOM.

After the dull recitative of the examination of jurors, the real action of the Brooklyn scandal suit opened on Jan. 11 with the address of ex-Judge Morris. Inasmuch as the prosecution had admitted, during the argument on the bill of particulars, that no testimony had been kept in reserve, and that the evidence in the trial by jury would be the same as in the "trial by newspaper," the interest manifested in the opening appeal was not intense. It was, in fact, a review of the salient features of the case, and if the phrase "we will show" had been changed to "we have shown," it would have passed for a "summing up." As the case was opened, there are to be no surprises for the court-room or the jury during the trial, so far as the prosecution is concerned. The alleged confessions of Mr. Beecher and Mrs. Tilton to Mr. Tilton, Mr. Moulton, and others, the correspondence of Mr. Beecher, the letters of Mrs. Tilton and Mrs. Morse, the alleged clandestine correspondence between Mr. Beecher and Mrs. Tilton, which was quoted by Mr. Moulton in his first statement, and the circumstantial evidence of guilt in the efforts which Mr. Beecher made for concealment, the mortgaging of his house, the payment of Bessie Turner's school bill, etc., are the main points of the prosecution, and not one of them has the faintest flavor of novelty. The apology intrusted to Mr. Moulton seems to be the pivot of Mr. Tilton's case, around which everything else turns.

For two hours before the proceedings were opened the long corridors of the court-house were thronged, and the services of a large number of police were required. Ticket-holders alone were admitted, and long before the Judge's gavel had been heard every seat was occupied. Mr. Tilton and his group of counsel appeared promptly at 11 o'clock, and were soon followed by Mr. Beecher's body of defenders. In a moment every eye was turned to the doorway as Mr. Beecher, accompanied by Mrs. Beecher, entered the court-room. Friends near the court alley shook hands with Mr. Beecher with heartiness as he advanced. It was a small triumph as such things go, and there was a pleased expression on his face when he took his seat. A buzz of talk followed their entrance, and comments were exchanged on the propriety of Mrs. Beecher's presence. If her critics, however, expected that there were to be passages in the opening address which would be offensive to the ear, they were doomed to disappointment, for the language was chaste and in good taste.

The jury-box was now full, and after words of caution to the audience from the bench and a few remarks by Mr. Evarts, the proceedings opened. Ex-Judge Morris began his address soon after 11 o'clock and closed at 4 o'clock, an hour having been spent at lunch. He is a man of medium height, with black hair and side-whiskers, a ruddy face, a keen glance, a sympathetic smile, and an expression which is calm without being cold. His movements are easy and graceful, his manner is cool and deliberate, and his gestures are strong and full of force, being made with the full arm in long curves. His delivery is rather monotonous, for there are no changes of tone to vibrate through an audience. In the upper register his voice has a metallic ring, and is surcharged with force and earnestness. When he is speaking calmly, without emotion, his tones are clear and incisive. After a few sentences uttered in a grave, cautious manner, a forceful gesture is made, and he breaks out with ringing tones of indignation and accusation, which in a moment are muffled and hushed to whispers too low to be heard save by the jurymen. This method is repeated with few variations, and the effect of these whispered passages is very annoying to the audience, however they may impress a jury. After a quiet narrative passage he sums up the inferences in a passionate interrogation in a high key, as for instance, "Who was the transgressor?" Then after a long pause comes the reply in a whisper, "Her forgiveness I have." The repetition of this method rendered his delivery rather tedious. His invective in regard to the letter to Mrs. Tilton, in which Mr. Beecher intimated that a meeting would be safe, was marred by this alternation of high tones and whispers.

Mr. Morris appreciated the fact that his business lay wholly with the jury, and they were rarely out of his sight. He stood a few feet in front of them, with Mr. Tilton and Mr. Moulton directly behind him, and Mr. and Mrs. Beecher facing him to his left. Occasionally, in framing an accusation, he turned toward Mr. Beecher with a sweep of the left hand, and twice, when a reference was made to Mrs. Beecher, he cast a quick glance in her direction. With these few exceptions his eyes never left the jurors, and they in turn followed him with close attention. While there were few passages of heated denunciation, there was much keen, hard analysis.

Probably the most effective sentences were those in which he took to pieces Mr. Beecher's apology and clandestine letters. The expressions, "I humble myself before you as I do before my God," "Her forgiveness I have," "Bearing the transgressions of another," and many more were held before the lens of his own interpretation until their significance seemed to enlarge under such searching analysis. The apology which was delivered to Mr. Moulton in confidence was read in a deep voice with great intensity of manner, as if he wished the words to sink deep in the memory of every juror; and when every expression had been analyzed he assumed an attitude of triumph, and vehemently striking the table declared that it was not necessary to go one step further, for that letter condemned Mr. Beecher, unless the English language could be blotted out. Mr. Morris apparently was not in very good health when he began, but he warmed to his work, and his delivery was much better later in the day.

Probably the closest listener in the court-room was Mrs. Beecher. Her eyes were fixed on the speaker's face from first to last as if there was a magic spell in his voice. Her face was strangely colorless and impassive, and her self-possession was perfect. Her forehead is high and abnormal, and is crowned with hair which is as white as snow. Her features are large, commanding and positive, and her eyes are keen and piercing. She was dressed in black with a blue woolen wrap. As she sat there, motionless, with a strange calm on her features and a peculiar glitter in her eyes, her dignity seemed to assert itself and to set at defiance the critics who judged that her right place was not beside her husband in his hour of trial.

Mr. Beecher seemed to be quite as self-possessed as his wife. At first his eyes were directed toward the jury-box, but soon they were staring vaguely at the frescoed ceiling. Subsequently he seemed to be taking notes in a small account-book, which he occasionally handed to Mr. Shearman.

Theodore Tilton's features were as impassive as Mrs. Beecher's. He faced the jury, and his eyes seldom strayed to the right or the left. He manifested not a spark of emotion, save a smile when he bent forward and whispered to Francis D. Moulton, who sat his elbow.

The counsel on both sides employed themselves variously, sometimes making a memorandum, sometimes exchanging whispers, but generally paying close attention to the speaker. Back of the lawyers were the upturned faces of the spectators. The few words which Judge Neilson had addressed to the audience had insured good order and silence, and even the pauses of the speaker as he referred to his notes before him were not signals for the small, rustling movements which generally cause confusion in a court-room. Many members of Plymouth Church were present. Among those who occupied seats near Mr. Beecher were Augustus Storrs, Horatio King, Edward J. Ovington, United States Assessor Freeland, Col. Beecher, the Hon. John Oakey, Moses S. Beach, Prof. Raymond, Alderman Whitney, and the leader of Plymouth choir. Scattered throughout the court-room were prominent residents, including Col. A. C. Davis, Sheriff Williams, Harvey Farrington, Judge Moore, ex-Senator Jas. Pearce, Col. Keeney, ex-Senator John C. Perry, Judge Troy, Corporation Counsel DeWitt, and ex-Judge Garrison. At the intermission and at the close of the proceedings Mr. and Mrs. Beecher were surrounded by their friends.

MAIN POINTS OF THE ADDRESS.

After a quiet introduction, in which ex-Judge Morris referred to the importance of the duty which the jury had to perform, and after reading extracts from legal authorities to show that adultery was a crime of darkness and secrecy, ex-Judge Morris cast a glance down the vista of the narrative until he reached the point of Mrs. Tilton's alleged confession to her husband on July 3, 1870. After that time Mr. Tilton ceased to attend Plymouth Church. There was an arrow through his heart, but he bore the wound in silence, rising to the level of higher Christian doctrine. On Dec. 30, 1870, he confronted the man who had wronged him. Mr. Tilton accused Mr. Beecher of the crime. The charge was made and not denied, and Mr. Beecher returned after seeing Mrs. Tilton with these words on his lips: "This will kill me!" The interviews with Mr. Moulton were described, and the functions of the "Mutual Friend" were next analyzed. The letter of apology was dissected, and great stress was laid on the fact that Mr. Beecher had made no denials. Mr. Moulton's mission was to conceal something. He was in the possession of a secret that could not be intrusted to any one else. This explained why Mr. Beecher went to Mr. Moulton's house every day to plan and plot. Take out the word "adultery" and there is no sense in Mr. Moulton's connection with the case.

Here a digression was made, and the explanations offered by Mr. Beecher in his statement were considered. There were two elements, the defense claimed—the grief of the defendant and the honor of Mrs. Tilton. An analysis was here made of the grounds of defense, that injudicious advice had been given to Mrs. Tilton, and that Mr. Bowen had been urged to dismiss Mr. Tilton. The point made by Mr. Tilton in his last statement, that the interview at Mr. Moulton's house preceded the dismissal of Mr. Tilton, was here repeated, and the claims of the defense were denounced as a "juggle of words and phrases." The letter of apology was then taken up, sentence by sentence, and it was urged that adultery furnished the only possible explanation. The fact that Mr. Moulton, a comparative stranger, was the only one with whom he could converse on the subject, and that Mr. Beecher even held aloof from his wife, was inexplicable under any other supposition. Above all things it could not be said that Mr. Beecher did not know the meaning of the words which he used.

H. J. Morris

The second meeting at Mr. Moulton's house after the apology was written was next described. Bessy Turner, a servant, had been tattling about what she had heard in Mr. Tilton's house, and she was sent out of the way to a boarding-school in Ohio, and her expenses were paid by Mr. Beecher. This was a proof of his guilt. He mortgaged his house for $5,000 and gave the money to Mr. Moulton to aid The Golden Age, without Mr. Tilton's knowledge. This could only be interpreted in one way—Mr. Beecher had wronged Mr. Tilton. The letter from Mrs. Morse to Mr. Beecher, in which she refers to his "cracking jokes" in the pulpit, Mr. Beecher's letters to Mr. Moulton and Mrs. Tilton, and other portions of the scandal correspondence, were reviewed at great length, Mr. Beecher's language being analyzed closely. The so-called clandestine correspondence between Mr. Beecher and Mrs. Tilton was finally subjected to scrutiny, and the address closed with an appeal for a verdict in favor of the man whose home had been debauched and destroyed.

OPENING ADDRESS OF EX-JUDGE MORRIS.

It was a little after 11 o'clock on the morning of Jan. 11, when Judge Neilson demanded silence in the courtroom where he is trying the famous Tilton-Beecher case. Admission could only be gained by tickets bearing the signature of the Judge, and just enough had been issued to fill the room without densely crowding it in any part. The day's work was begun by the Judge directing Chester Carpenter, the eleventh jurymen, to assume the place of foreman.

The Clerk—During the trial, day by day, reporters will occupy such seats as they now have, no reporter intruding on the domain of another.

Judge Neilson—The audience will come to order, and keep perfectly silent.

The Clerk here called over the list of jurors, and all answered to their names.

Judge Neilson—Are counsel prepared to proceed?

Mr. Beach—Yes, Sir, on the part of the plaintiff.

Judge Neilson—I wish it understood by the audience that under no circumstances should there be any indication of approbation or disapprobation as to anything said. The audience is here not to make demonstrations to us to signify to the jury what their views may be, but are here expected to conform to the decencies of the place and keep silence. I trust they will do so.

Mr. Evarts—If your Honor please, the counsel think we ought to have a little more space assigned to us inside the bar. The burden is at present on our learned opponents to be sure, but we are all in the same feeling on that subject, I believe. I think there is more space necessary for the accommodation of the counsel, both of the speaker and those of us who wish to take notes.

Judge Neilson—I am desirous of doing what can be done, if you will indicate what you think.

Mr. Evarts—I do not think we have our share of this trial—of the space within the bar. The very great public interest and the very unusual attendance of reporters, is, of course, a matter that we all appreciate and feel alike about, I suppose. It is clear the dimensions of the room are such that either one interest or the other will have to be a little contracted.

Mr. Beach—I think after the opening we can give you more room at the table.

Mr. Evarts—Yes, Sir; we can change the tables.

IMPORTANCE AND LAW OF THE ISSUE.

MAY IT PLEASE THE COURT—GENTLEMEN OF THE JURY: I congratulate you that we have at last attained a stage in this trial where it becomes our duty to present to you the general features of the case on the part of the plaintiff, and your duty to listen, as I have no doubt you will attentively, to the facts as I shall narrate them to you in what I have to say in my opening address. It is not necessary that I should remind you of the great importance of the case that is now being tried, and the solemn duty that is devolved upon you as jurors in this case. You are now called from your various avocations to discharge one of the most important duties that has ever or will ever devolve upon you as citizens. This is no ordinary case that now engages the attention of this Court, and the attention of the entire community. This is no contest between litigants to determine the right of property, nor is it a contest to determine the right to personal liberty. It is above and beyond that—more far-reaching in its consequences than any case ever tried in this country. There is not a home in this broad land, nay, there is not a home in Christendom that is not interested in the result of your deliberations. This is a trial that involves, as I said, not the right to property or liberty, but it is a trial the consequences of which reach to the very foundations of society. The home, the marriage relation, with all that is dear in that relation, is upon trial in this case. Upon the result of your verdict to a very large extent, also, will depend the integrity of the Christian religion. The plaintiff comes in Court, and, through the ordinary forms of law, says in effect that his home has been destroyed; that his wife's affections have been taken from him; that his children have been scattered; and that a once happy home is now desolate; and that the bright visions that he had in this world of attaining distinction and positions of honor have all been blighted; that he once had a happy family—none more so in the land—but he comes to you this morning, not from that once happy family, but he comes to you this morning from a voiceless home and a cheerless fireside, and he asks you, as fathers and as brothers and as husbands, to consider his case. And against whom is this terrible charge? Is it against some casual acquaintance, some casual friend? No; but he comes here and makes this charge against one of the foremost preachers in the land; against the man who in his youth united him in matrimony, at whose altar he received baptism. His spiritual adviser, his spiritual father, taking advantage of this sacred relation, has become, instead of his protector and his comforter, his destroyer. And who is it that makes the charge? It is no unknown person, no insignificant individual that comes in court and arraigns at the bar of justice the defendant in this case, but he is a man, as well as the defendant, of preëminent abilities; a man who had risen while yet a young man to great distinction in the land as a writer and as an author, whose pen was always upon the side of the oppressed, and whose voice, as did the voice of the defendant, thundered against tyranny and oppression. Four years ago, no man of his age in this land had before him so brilliant a prospect as had Theodore Tilton. Gifted by God as few men are gifted, intellectually and physically, he had before him a most brilliant career; but all at once a cloud settles down upon his household like a pall, the bright visions have faded, and where was sunshine there is now darkness, and misery, and desolation. Before the wife of the plaintiff fell a victim to the wiles of the seducer, no man in this land had a more happy home than he possessed. I will not detain you, gentlemen, at this stage of the case, or, indeed, at all in the opening, in picturing to you the home of Theodore Tilton prior to the 8th of October, 1868. During the progress of the trial you will learn, from the evidence, the nature and the character of the home that has thus been destroyed and desolated. Suffice it to say that, during all their married life, down to the period that I have indicated, they had one of the happiest of homes, a family of children growing up about them, loved by their father and mother as few children are loved. What, gentlemen—what will you say is just retribution for a man who destroys such a home? And in this case there are features which render the crime more heinous than in most cases of this character. Mr. Tilton when a boy, grew up under the eyes of the defendant; when but a child became a member of his church; when but a child, almost before of age, he married the girl that he loved, and from that time henceforth was associated with the defendant in the closest relations, associated with him in the editorship of a religious journal for many years; a frequent visitor at his house looking upon him almost as a father, and admiring him above all men living, placing that implicit confidence in him which can only come from an admiration and absolute confidence. When separated by the ocean before this terrible calamity, before the violation of this friendship and the destruction of this home, the two men spoke of each other and wrote of each other as only men who had mutual confidence and admiration would speak and write of each other.

It has been said that this action has been instigated because of an enmity that the plaintiff had towards the defendant, and yet during all this period prior to the time that I have stated there was the closest friendship, the greatest admiration on the part of the plaintiff for the defendant, as manifested in their mutual letters and correspondence, down to the very time of the discovery of the wrong that had been inflicted upon him. This friendship and this admiration were attested in various ways, by gifts from one to the other, by their mutual and social intercourse, by every manifestation of love and affection, and while, as we say (and we think that we shall be able to convince you twelve men beyond all peradventure)—while, as we say, the defendant was sitting, at the request of the plaintiff, for his portrait to one of the most distinguished artists of our State; while, day after day, he was going there, sitting at the request of the plaintiff, and at the expense of the plaintiff, so great was his admiration of him, the illicit intercourse that we charge against the defendant was being carried on. At the very time, as we shall show you as clear as the sun now shines, when the defendant was sitting to have his portrait painted to be hung up in the house of the plaintiff, he was carrying on his illicit intercourse, and before long—before that portrait was completed and ready to adorn the walls of the once happy home, that home had been debauched, that family had been destroyed. Where shall the portrait be hung? What wall shall it adorn?

Well, gentlemen, this crime, as you are aware, is peculiarly a crime of darkness and of secrecy. We do not expect to bring eye-witnesses here in court to testify to this crime. Of course, that could not be expected; and perhaps I might as well here now, as at any time, call your attention to what one or two of our authorities upon this subject have said, which, probably, will give you a clearer idea of the character of evidence, the nature of it, and the force of it, than I could state to you, and I will detain you but a moment in calling your attention to one or two of those authorities. Says a learned writer upon this subject, the subject of marriage and divorce, and domestic relations:

"Adultery is peculiarly a crime of darkness and secrecy. Parties are rarely surprised in it, and so it not only may, but ordinarily must, be established by circumstantial evidence."

Dr. Lushington, a high authority, observes:

"It is not necessary to prove that the adultery with which a party is charged should have occurred at any particular time and place. The Court must be satisfied that a criminal attachment subsisted between the parties, and that opportunities occurred when the intercourse, in which it is satisfied the party intended to indulge might with ordinary facility have occurred."

Cresswell, J., says:

"Every act of adultery implies three things. First, the opportunity; secondly, the disposition in the mind of the adulterer; thirdly, the same in the mind of the particeps criminis, and the proposition is substantially true that wherever these three are found to concur the criminal fact is committed."

In a celebrated case Dr. Lushington used this language:

"It is, then, in evidence that not merely was there a criminal attachment, but that this attachment was not rejected, that Jeffreys [the alleged particeps criminis] admitted his familiarity, received his correspondence, that opportunities were constant, and there is nothing to show on her [Jeffreys's] part resistance or repudiation, nor that she at all discountenanced his passion. To doubt, from such circumstances, that the consummation followed, would be to presume that the effect was not consequent upon the natural cause, and that this was a case of extraordinary exception and singular innocence."

Lord Stowell, a high authority, used this language in the 2nd of Greenleaf, page 38, from which I will read a paragraph. He observes:

"It is a fundamental rule that it is not necessary to prove the direct fact of adultery, because if it were otherwise there is not one case in a hundred in which that proof would be attainable. It is very rarely indeed that the parties are surprised in the direct fact of adultery. In every case almost the fact is inferred from circumstances that lead to it by fair inference as a necessary conclusion, and unless this were the case, and unless this were so held, no protection whatever could be given to marital rights. What are the circumstances which lead to such a conclusion cannot be laid down universally, though many of them, of a more obvious and of more frequent occurrence, are to be found in the ancient books; at the same time it is impossible to indicate them universally, because they may be infinitely diversified by the situation and character of the parties, by the state of general manners, and by many other incidental circumstances apparently slight and delicate in themselves, but which may have most important bearing in decisions upon the particular case."

As to the nature of circumstantial evidence, I will call your attention to one or two paragraphs. Chief-Justice Whitman of Maine says:

"Circumstantial evidence is often stronger and more satisfactory than direct, because it is not liable to delusion or fraud."

Chief-Justice Gibson says:

"Circumstantial evidence is in the abstract nearly, though, perhaps, not altogether, as strong as positive evidence; in the concrete it may be infinitely stronger. A fact positively sworn to by a single witness of unblemished character is not so satisfactorily proved as a fact which is the necessary consequence of a chain of other facts sworn to by many witnesses of doubtful credibility."

Chief-Justice Shaw of Massachusetts, one of our ablest jurists, in the celebrated case of Webster, said:

"The distinction, then, between direct and circumstantial evidence is this: Direct or positive evidence is where a witness can be called to testify to the precise fact which is the subject of the issue in trial; that is in a case of homicide that the party accused did cause the death of the deceased. Whatever may be the kind or force of evidence, this is the fact to be proved. But suppose no person not present on the occasion of the death and of course no person can be called to testify to it, it is wholly, unsusceptible of legal proof? Experience has shown that circumstantial evidence may be offered in such a case; that is, that a body of facts may be proved of so conclusive a character as to warrant a firm belief of the fact quite as strong and certain as that on which discreet men are accustomed to act in relation to their most important concerns. It would be injurious to the best interests of society if such proof could not avail in judicial proceedings. If it were necessary always to have positive evidence, how many criminal acts committed in the community, destructive of its peace and subversive of its order and security, would go wholly undetected and unpunished. The necessity therefore of resorting to circumstantial evidence, if it be a safe and reliable proceeding, is obvious and absolute. Crimes are secret. Most men, conscious of criminal purposes, and about the execution of criminal acts, seek the security of secrecy and darkness. It is, therefore, necessary to use all other modes of evidence besides that of direct testimony, provided such proof may be relied upon as leading to safe and satisfactory conclusions; and—thanks to a beneficent Providence—the law of nature, and the relations of things to each other, are so linked and combined together that a medium of proof is often furnished, leading to inferences and conclusions as strong as those arising from direct testimony."

There is another class of evidence of the highest importance in the investigation of crime, and that is confessions made by parties. Where a person makes a confession, uninfluenced by fear, a free and voluntary confession of crime, it is considered the highest character of evidence of the fact. Says this author:

"Full confessions of guilt by an accused party are in the nature of direct evidence, and therefore do not properly fall within the scope of the present work. A brief notice, however, of the character, &c., of confessions of this kind when deliberately and voluntarily made, are justly regarded as constituting the highest and most satisfactory species of evidence that can be presented before a tribunal. They combine the statement of the physical facts which form the basis of the charge, and which is substantially the deposition of a witness to those facts, with that other most important species of evidence which can never be directly reached and brought to view by any other means, namely: that which presents the motives and intents which instigated and directed the criminal act, and these avowed by the party, who of all others has the strongest interest to conceal them."

LOGIC OF THE APOLOGY.

Now, I have told to you briefly the general character of our evidence. First, the act of the party accused. Secondly, the confessions of the party accused, and with this very imperfect outline of our case, the nature of our case, the general character of our evidence, I will proceed to call your attention more specifically to the facts by which we propose to establish our case. The case opens on the 3d day of July, 1870, with the confession made by the wife of the plaintiff, though not communicated to the defendant until some time afterwards. On the 3d of July, 1870, the wife of the plaintiff, with an overburdened heart, confesses her guilt to the plaintiff; and here, gentlemen, I would call your attention to a circumstance that seems to me to possess great significance. Up to this date, the relations of the plaintiff and defendant had been most cordial. Nothing had occurred to interrupt the harmony of their friendship and their good feeling toward each other, so far as the plaintiff knew. He and his wife were members of the church of the defendant; but after the 3d day of July, 1870, the plaintiff never crossed the threshold of Plymouth Church, until the 31st of October, 1873, when he appeared there for the purpose of confronting the pastor of that church, and asking him in the presence of his congregation, if he, the plaintiff, had ever spoken falsely concerning him. Why was it, and this is one of the circumstances in this case, that the plaintiff, all at once, without any outward, without any apparent cause, so far as the plaintiff knew, so far as the public knew, so far as any member of the church knew; without any apparent cause, the plaintiff, who was a member of the church, who was an admirer up to that time of the defendant, who admired him beyond all other men, who placed implicit confidence in him, who trusted him, who looked upon him almost as a father; he was his spiritual father, and all at once the plaintiff ceases to attend the ministrations of Plymouth Church—why was it? He had received some wound. Something had occurred that induced him to keep away from Plymouth Church, and he keeps away. He had received a wound. There was a cause. That wound had pierced his heart, but for the sake of his children, whom he loved as he loved his life, he carried that wound in his heart; but he could not listen to the ministrations of the man who had brought this great sorrow, this ruin upon him, and he bears it in silence. He stays away from the church, and he goes to his home and about his avocation with this arrow through his heart. Well, gentlemen, for months he bore in silence this great sorrow and this great wrong, and for that, too, he has been arraigned; for that, too, he has been abused and traduced, because he did not strike down the seducer of his wife; because he rose to a higher Christian plane, and because he could forego revenge; because he carried out the Christian doctrine—for that he is arraigned.

But I will leave those elements of this case to be handled by a man who can do it with more force and power than myself. But he carries this wound until the 30th of December, 1870. On the night of the 30th of December, 1870, the plaintiff confronts the defendant with a renewed confession of his wife, and accuses him of having committed adultery. What did the defendant do? What would an innocent man have done then and there if the charge had not been true. Would he have denied it? Yes. Would he have hurled it back with indignation? Yes. Did he? No. There is no pretense, has never been from that moment until the present, that he attempted to deny it there, or that he did deny it in the most indirect manner. The charge is made; what are the circumstances immediately following the making of that charge? The defendant visits the wife of the plaintiff, then sick in bed. She gives him a paper. He returns to the house of Mr. Moulton where this charge had been made against him. Not a word escapes his lips with reference to it. After he had his interview with Mr. Tilton, in which he was directly accused of this crime, and before he leaves the house, he says to Mr. Moulton, "Have you seen Mrs. Tilton's confession?" "I have." "This will kill me, this will kill me!" No denial either to Mr. Tilton or Mr. Moulton, but this exclamation, "This will kill me, this will kill me!" If a man ever could be called upon to deny so infamous a charge as that was, don't you think that that was the time and there was the place at which to have made that denial? But what is the next step in the history of this case? Why, the following night Moulton goes around to the house of the defendant and accuses him of having taken a mean advantage, of having acted meanly towards Mr.

Tilton in procuring the paper, and asked that it be delivered up to him. He goes there as the avowed friend of Tilton, a comparative stranger to the defendant, and he asks that he deliver up this paper to him. What does he do? Does he show him the door? Oh, no! Does he ask him why he accused him of meanness, and what he means by such talk in his house, he a comparative stranger, coming there as the friend of Tilton? Does he ask him? No. What does he do? Hands him the paper and then invites him to come and see him again. Think of it. And the next night, January 1st, he goes to the house of the defendant. He is invited into his study. What does he do? Does he inquire whether Moulton has brought an apology from the plaintiff to him or not, for his conduct? Oh, no! He writes for the plaintiff, not an apology, but a letter of contrition, and it commences, "My dear friend Moulton:"—the man who was a comparative stranger, the man who the night previous had obtained from him this paper; aye, had obtained it, as it is claimed, by threat. He says to this man, who twenty-four hours prior had accused him of meanness—of taking a mean advantage—who had demanded this paper, and had obtained it from him: "My dear friend Moulton,—I ask, through you, Theodore Tilton's forgiveness, and I humble myself before him as I do before my God. He would have been a better man in my circumstances than I have been. I can ask nothing except that he will remember all the other hearts that would ache. I will not plead for myself; I even wish I were dead. But others must live and suffer. I will die before any one but myself shall be inculpated. All my thoughts are running toward my friends—towards the poor child lying there praying with her folded hands. She is guiltless, sinned against, bearing the transgressions of another. Her forgiveness I have. I humbly pray God that He may put it into the heart of her husband to forgive me. I have trusted this to Moulton in confidence." Gentlemen, might we not stop here? Would it be necessary if we simply wanted to make out our case against the defendant to go one step further, one step beyond that letter to prove his guilt! But we will go further. There are some circumstances which it is necessary, in connection with this part of the case, that I should explain to you. It must be conceded from this letter that the defendant had done some wrong, aye, some terrible wrong to the plaintiff. What was it? The plaintiff says that it was adultery. Mr. Moulton says that it was adultery. Mrs. Morse, in effect, says the same thing, and every act of the defendant, of the plaintiff, and of Moulton, during the three years and a half that followed, are in harmony with the fact of adultery, and utterly irreconcilable with any other theory of the case, and no human ingenuity can devise any other explanation. It is impossible. You have got to blot out the English language and all its meaning. So long as it stands no other explanation can be devised than the meaning we attribute to it. Why, adultery was the one sole fact that accounts for Moulton's connection with this case for the four years that he strove to save the defendant, with a fidelity unparalleled. Take out that word adultery, and what sense or meaning is there in his connection with the case, or was there ever any? It is the whole point, it is the focus, it is the lever upon which, for the four years this whole case worked. Why did Mr. Beecher, the de-defendant here, want to go to Moulton's day after day, twice a day sometimes, to see him to make arrangements to plan and to plot to conceal something, if that something was not adultery? Tell me why. Oh! but it is said that Mr. Moulton has denied that there was any truth in the charge, that Tilton has denied it. Of course Moulton has. What was he there for? Was he employed by Beecher, the defendant, to admit it; was he called in to expose the facts and to give them to the world? Oh! no; his mission was concealment. That is why he was wanted. That is why Moulton was required. He, not a member of the Church, it was to conceal and not to make known. He was the possessor of a secret that could not be trusted by this Christian minister to a single person on earth. There was no man on the globe to whom he could go. There was something so terrible about this secret, whatever it was, that he could not go to his church and ask their counsel and their advice, but he must have Mr. Moulton to manage this great secret; and Mr. Moulton did manage it—and successfully for four years—and saved the defendant to Plymouth Church as certainly as the sun shines in heaven to-day, as I will show you before I get through. Long before this would Plymouth Church have been without a pastor if it had not been for the fidelity of Francis D. Moulton.

THEORIES OF THE DEFENSE ANALYZED.

But, gentlemen, we are not left in the dark altogether about this from another standpoint. We declare that all the acts, and all the letters to which your attention will be called for the four years concerning this subject, represent but two points. First, the grief of the defendant, and, secondly, the honor of Mrs. Tilton—the honor of Mrs. Tilton and the grief growing out of the facts that involved her honor. Well, it is said, gentlemen, that great grief was caused by injudicious advice. Mr. Tilton had lost his editorship of The Independent and of the Union; and the defendant had counseled that—his family had been nearly broken up—and the defendant had advised it, and, beyond that, there was an intimation—that I have never yet been able to solve, and hope the counsel for the defendant will be in this case—of some undefinable cause—at one time; it was that he had been informed that she had conceived an undue affection for him; at another, “that his blind heedlessness and friendship had beguiled her heart;” and, at another, an intimation that she thrust her affections upon him unsought; and all this jumble of phrases and of words without any statement as to what caused this great contrition on the part of the defendant, on the 1st of January, '71. When he says that his blind heedlessness and friendship beguiled her heart, what does he mean? What does that fact import? What is the meaning of it? Blind heedlessness and friendship beguiling the heart of the wife of the plaintiff! How was that manifest—that fact on her part? What was done in consequence of that? What did she do? What did he do? How did it develop itself, and how was it manifested? Does he mean to say, or doesn't he, that the woman tempted and he did fall? I presume that my learned friend upon the other side will have some explanation

—at least, I hope so—but I have never been able yet to discover one. But, at the time that this letter was written, Mr. Tilton's family had not been broken up; he was living with his family; and although his contract with Mr. Bowen was ended, and his loss of the position of editor had taken place, it was entirely without the influence of the defendant, and therefore furnished no cause and no reason for this great grief which was manifested. But there is one singular fact in this case that I will call your attention to right here, as it comes in appropriately at this point. This letter was written on the First of January, '71: and it is claimed, and has been claimed, that the feeling that produced that letter was brought about by the advice which Mr. Beecher had given Mrs. Tilton to separate from her husband. The point that I wish to call your attention to in this connection is this: that the advice, if ever given at all, was not until after the 27th of January, 1871, as the documentary evidence that we shall introduce before you will conclusively establish. Especially, you have the strange anomaly of the defendant's mourning over wrongs not yet committed, if they were wrongs; over acts not yet done. But let us assume that such advice was given at the time, and that he had counseled Bowen to dismiss Tilton and that Bowen had taken the advice, and that he was responsible for the loss of place on the part of the plaintiff, and that he had attempted to cause a separation on the part of Mrs. Tilton from her husband. Upon what facts did he base his action? You must recollect that, up to this time, Tilton was editor of The Independent, a Christian newspaper, a religious paper; that it was the representative Congregational paper of the land; and Mr. Beecher being of that denomination, and a prominent member of it, it was his duty to see, so far as he could—and especially as for many years he himself had been its editor—it was especially his duty to see that no unfit or improper man occupied the position of editor of that paper. And, now, gentlemen, I want you to bear with me while I call your attention to some specific facts right here relative to this point; some of the declarations we shall show you, of the defendant himself. In reference to this matter, he says that the “leaders” that Tilton had written in The Independent had aroused a storm of indignation among the Congregationalists of the North-West; and that he had indignantly himself disclaimed all responsibility for the views expressed by Mr. Tilton; in other words, that Tilton's course in that paper was such that he found it necessary to protest against it, and to disavow all connection and all responsibility for the views contained in that paper as expressed by Tilton. He says that he believed Tilton denied the Divinity of Christ, the inspiration of the Scriptures, and most of the articles of the orthodox faith; while his views as to the sanctity of the marriage relation were undergoing a constant change in the direction of Free Love. He says that Bessie Turner had given him such an account of Tilton's cruelty to his family as to shock him; and, with down-cast look, she said that Tilton had visited her chamber in the night, and sought her consent to his wishes; that he immediately visited Mrs. Tilton at her mother's, and received an account of her home life, and of the despotism of her husband, and of the management of a woman whom he had made housekeeper—it seemed like a nightmare dream to him.

The question was, whether she should go back, or separate forever from her husband. He asked permission to bring his wife to see them—whose judgment in all domestic relations he thought better than his own; and, accordingly, a second visit was made. The result of the interview was that his wife was extremely indignant towards Mr. Tilton, and declared that no consideration on earth would induce her to remain an hour with a man who had treated her with the one hundredth part of the insult and cruelty he had her. Bowen had narrated the affair at Winstead, Connecticut; and, like stories from the North-West, and Chicago, were brought against Tilton, in his own office. "Without doubt," he says, "he believed these allegations; and so did I. The other facts stated seemed to me a full corroboration." He believed, at that time, taking his declarations, that Theodore Tilton had been guilty of promiscuous immoralities. He had declared that he was bankrupt in character and morals; and, add to all this, he knew—assuming his innocence—that on the 30th of December, 1870, he had accused him falsely of one of the most diabolical crimes that he could conceive of, and that he had induced his saintly wife to join in the lie for the destruction of the defendant. And, in view of all these facts before him, he says that he went off into this paroxysm of grief because he had given this advice; and because he had thus counseled Bowen to discharge him from The Independent. I ask you, as fathers and as Christian men, that, if in view of these facts he had not given the advice that he says he did, and an hundredfold more emphatic, that he would not have deserved the condemnation of Christendom? If he did give that advice he did what was his bounden duty as a Christian minister to give. If he did thus counsel Bowen, he did that which it was his bounden duty as a Christian minister to do; and he would have been unfit for his high calling had he omitted to have given such advice—had he permitted, from his standpoint, Mr. Tilton to have remained one hour connected with that religious paper, if he could have prevented it, or his wife living with him one hour, if he could have prevented it. Why, gentlemen, think of it for a moment. The defendant here, the greatest preacher of the land, knowing a man then a member of his church to be a libertine, to be a bankrupt in morals and in character, to be everything that is bad, everything that makes a man despicable—think of his bowing down before such a man simply because he had done his duty and done it but tardily at that; because he had advised a separation and counseled dismissal of this libertine, this bankrupt in character and in morals, this free-lover, this bad man; think of his bowing down before him and asking his forgiveness as he asks the forgiveness of his God. No, gentlemen, no; that is not the reason. You know it, I know it, every man in the land knows it. Yet, in view of all these facts, we hear the explanation that "the case as it then appeared to my eyes was strongly against me." What case? How against him? There was a case at that time, if his theory be correct, but that was a case not against him but against the plaintiff, and that case was made out conclusively from his point of view, if it be correct, by Mrs. Tilton, by Bessie Turner; by Henry C. Bowen, by Mr. Tilton's course in The Independent, and by the false accusation that he had made against the defendant. That was the case, then, if we are to accept these allegations and these facts, that was the case, then made against Tilton, the plaintiff, and not against the defendant. The case was all in favor of the defendant. If he did what he did do, he was deserving of the thanks of every good man and of every good woman, and if he had done it tenfold more strongly, and vigilantly, and determinedly, than he had, he would have been entitled to still greater thanks. No, gentlemen, that is not the course. Let me call your attention to the facts. Here is this terrible letter, written on the 1st of January, 1870. To whom is it entrusted? To Mr. Moulton, a comparative stranger to him at that time; they had had but two interviews, one was on Friday night, the 30th of December, when Mr. Moulton went to Mr. Beecher's house and said: "Mr. Tilton wants to see you." "It is Friday night; I have got my prayer meeting to attend to, and I cannot go." "But Mr. Tilton wants to see you." He calls a person: "Go and tell so and so to take charge of the prayer meeting," and he goes off with no more explanation than in company with this comparative stranger, abandoning his prayer meeting to other parties. Didn't he know, didn't he suspect? That is the first interview Moulton has with him, when he calls at his house and says that Mr. Tilton wants to see him. Without explanation he abandons his prayer meeting, turns it over to some one else, and goes with Moulton and receives the charge of adultery with Mr. Tilton's wife. The other interview was the night following. When Moulton got the paper back from Mr. Beecher. Those were the two interviews with reference to this matter, and then this letter is entrusted to him in confidence. Why entrusted to him in confidence? Why should it be in confidence if it didn't relate to some secret that he didn't want the world to know? If Moulton, by the possession of that had not become the possessor of some terrible secret, why was it entrusted to him? Gentlemen, do you believe for a moment that had this been any less than the charge we bring Mr. Beecher would not have consulted some of his trusted parishioners and asked their advice as to how to act in the emergency, whatever it was, other than the one we charge and shall prove to you to be true—adultery? Why, he says that there was no man on the globe with whom he could talk on this subject. Strange! What terrible subject is this about which he can talk to but a single man on the globe, and that man not a trusted parishioner of his but a comparative stranger who has become possessed of some secret. He was shut up to every human being. He could not go to his wife: he could not go to his children; he could not go to his brothers and sisters; he could not go to his church. Mr. Moulton was the only person to whom he could talk on this subject. With reference to his advice to Moulton, with reference to his advice for separation, he could go to his wife. He did go to her, because, in those matters he relied upon her judgment, only coinciding with her. What was this terrible subject about which he could talk to no human being on the globe except to this comparative stranger outside of his church? Where was the trusty parishioner of 25 years' association then, who should stand by him in his hour of trouble? No man on earth, no one to whom he could talk on this subject but the one man, Moulton. If the other side can conceive of my other secret on earth about which a minister of the gospel can not talk with even his wife, or with his brothers and sisters, or with members of his church, I hope it will be revealed upon this trial. On the 30th of December, 1870, Mr. Beecher went forth from Moulton's with the exclamation, "This will kill me," the charge upon him made by Tilton being adultery with his wife. The first communication you have from the defendant to the plaintiff, or for the plaintiff after this charge is made is, "I humble myself before you as I do before my God." A man comes to you and accuses you falsely of an infamous crime, and the next communication you have with him you say, "I humble myself before you as I do before my God, and hope he will put it in your heart to forgive me, to forgive me!" Gentlemen, it is nonsense to argue that point, and I shall not pursue it further. It was not advice either to Mrs. Tilton or counsel to Mr. Bowen; it was something beyond that. When he asks Theodore Tilton's forgiveness, what does he mean? Forgiveness of what? Forgiveness for having received a false accusation? No, forgiveness for a wrong that he had inflicted upon Mr. Tilton, which called for the deepest humiliation and the most absolute contrition that a man could give. "He would have been a better man in my circumstances than I have been." What does that mean, gentlemen? In what circumstances would Mr. Tilton have been a better man than Mr. Beecher? What does he refer to? What terrible thing had Mr. Beecher done that should lead him to exclaim that Theodore Tilton would "have been a better man in my circumstances than I have been." Why? Theodore Tilton was bankrupt in morals and in character, he had been guilty of promiscuous immorality, he was everything that was bad; he was so brutal to his wife that the bare recital shocked Mr. Beecher; he had attempted a gross outrage upon a person in his house. If their theory be true he had done everything that was bad, and yet he says that this man, this libertine, this infidel, would "have been a better man in my circumstances than I have been."

MR. BEECHER'S LANGUAGE INTERPRETED.

What circumstance does he mean? What had he done that outweighed all those charges that were brought against Theodore Tilton by the defendant? What led him to exclaim that even this bad man would have been a better man in his circumstances than he was? Oh! yes; it was true. There is not a word in that letter, there was not a word uttered by that penitent man on that night that was not true. It was true, and he would have been a better man. What had he done? Why he had debauched the wife of his trusted parishioner, and she a confiding member of his church. He, taking advantage of his position and of his high calling, had debauched that woman. It is true, and he says Theodore Tilton would have been a better man in my circumstances than I have been; he [Tilton] would not have done that—that is what he means. But he will die before anyone else will be inculpated. How was Mrs. Tilton inculpated, and who was it that inculpated her? "She is guiltless, sinned against, bearing the transgressions of another. Her forgiveness I have." Oh! say the counsel, of course she could not have been guilty of the crime of adultery, and yet he guiltless. Well, gentlemen, we shall present to you during the progress of this trial, an authority high upon that subject, an authority no less than the defendant himself, who says that by no means does it happen in all cases that the seduced is an accomplice in the crime, but the sufferer. And so here, she is represented, not as guilty, because of the power that was exercised over this confiding child of the church by a strong and powerful will, because she, having implicit faith in him, yields; she is the sufferer, it is not her fault. Such is the meaning of this, "She is guiltless, sinned against, bearing the transgressions of another. Her forgiveness I have." I have her forgiveness for having thus seduced her, having thus used my high office, having thus used my power and influence over her to get possession of her virtue. I am guilty, she is guiltless, I have asked her forgiveness, I have it to-day. And now I ask that God may put it into the heart of her husband to forgive me as she has forgiven me. Whatever the offense, it is perfectly clear that the defendant is the sinner and that Mrs. Tilton was the sufferer. He says, Mrs. Tilton is "guiltless, sinned against." It was with Mrs. Tilton, not her husband, that the sin was committed. It was some offense in which there was guilt, sin. She was bearing the transgressions of another. Somebody had been guilty of transgressions with her, which she, not her husband, had to bear. The only question is, Who was the transgressor? Hear the answer, "Her forgiveness I have"—I am the transgressor. He declares that he is forgiven for sin and transgression and guilt with Mrs. Tilton. Can there be anything plainer than this? Is it necessary that we should attempt to argue or present a proposition so clear and unmistakable as this? She is guiltless, sinned against—I have sinned against her. She is bearing the transgressions of another. I am the transgressor, and her forgiveness I have. "She has forgiven me for sin, for transgression and for guilt, and now will God put it into the heart of her husband to forgive me also for the sin, for this transgression, of which I have been guilty."

It cannot be said, gentlemen—and that is the only possible explanation which I could see to this—it cannot be said that the defendant in this case does not understand the meaning of the English language, that he did not know what he was talking about when he wrote these words of repentance and contrition—when he was pouring out the honest feelings of his heart and his heart's sorrow for the great wrong that he had done. No, he fully understood the import of every word that he uttered on the first of January, 1871. "I have trusted this to Moulton in confidence." Why give this to Moulton in confidence? Why should this confidence be reposed in him about a matter relating to business or mere advice in regard to family jars? No, it was the secret—the secret that he said would kill him on the night of the 30th of December, when he left the house of Mr. Moulton to go to the sick bed of this woman that he had debauched. Had Mr. Moulton been, on that night, the bearer from Mr. Beecher of a similar letter, had he come to Mr. Beecher and said, "Mr. Beecher, here is a letter I have brought you from Tilton, a letter of regret, a letter of sorrow, a letter of contrition, and he asks your forgiveness for what he did to you on the 30th of December, two nights ago. I have come to ask your pardon?"

Oh ! no, nothing of the kind, but Mr. Beecher falls down upon his knees before this man and commences his letter with an appeal to him, and closes with a prayer to God that he may soften his heart toward the man who has wrought this great ruin in his family.

The Court here took a recess of an hour.

Judge Neilson cautioned the jury as usual. The following are his words :

Gentlemen of the Jury, we are about to adjourn to two o'clock : I need not repeat to you the injunction already given. You will find it difficult perhaps to carry out that direction, but avoid conversing about it, or allowing any one to speak to you on the subject.

Judge Neilson—Those gentlemen behind the jury will please retire, and pass out. I don't wish the jury to hear any incidental conversation.

The men crowded back into the throng around the railing.

Judge Neilson—Mr. Spaulding, will you take this jury down by and by to Parker's, to a lunch. I will write a note. They will have a lunch there in a separate apartment.

Officer Spaulding departed with the jury, as directed, and the Court broke up for the recess.

The Court again convened promptly at 2 o'clock, and Mr. Morris resumed his argument as follows :

GENTLEMEN OF THE JURY : Men usually exhibit various emotions in proportion to the cause that gives rise to those emotions. If fear, the danger that is foreseen ; if grief, the trouble that has produced it ; and so of the various emotions. And I was about, before closing the point to which I called your attention this morning, to call your attention to that phase of this branch of the case in order that you might see what perfect harmony there was between this letter that I have called your attention to, and the condition of the party's mind, as portrayed by himself that time ; and for the further purpose of showing that it was impossible that that condition should have been produced or caused by any slight or trivial matter ; that it had for its foundation some terrible thing, whatever it was ; that the defendant, at the time that that letter was written must have been conscious of having committed some terrible wrong, and it was for that purpose that I was about calling your attention to some declarations, and I now invite your attention to them, so that you may see what perfect unison there is between the condition of the writer's mind and the letter itself.

"Believing that my presence, exclamations and counsels had tended to produce a social catastrophe, I gave expression to my feelings in an interview with a mutual friend, not in bold and incautious words, but eagerly taking the blame upon myself, and pouring out my heart to my friend in the strongest language, overburdened with the exaggeration of impassioned sorrow. It seemed to me that my life-work was to end abruptly and in disaster. I was most intensely excited indeed. I felt that my mind was in danger of giving way. I walked up and down the room pouring forth my heart in the most unrestrained grief and bitterness of self-accusation, heaping all the blame on my own head. I shed tears, and my voice broke and my distress was boundless, and I called upon the man that I had wronged to forgive the great wrong that I had done."

You see, gentlemen, what perfect harmony there is. Take the letter of contrition, break it up into sentences, intersperse it with the language that I have just quoted, and you would not perceive which part was the letter and which part the language that I have quoted. It would sound as one outpouring of the heart, as he says, of "impassioned sorrow and grief." And yet, you are to be told that all this anguish and all this sorrow was the result of some trivial matter. Certainly, gentlemen, after the evidence in this case is in, I apprehend that it will not be claimed. I apprehend that we have heard the last forever of the intimation that all this grew out of a fear of a false accusation. If such had been the case the great grief here expressed would have been somewhat modified by the consciousness that this great wrong had been done the party thus pouring out his heart. But, gentlemen, this letter of the contrition is the one bright spot in this whole sad story. It is the honest expression of sorrow and grief. It is the outpouring of the heart for the wrong that has been done, and the ruin that has been wrought ; and if it could be repudiated, I say no, a thousand times no, it ought not to be. It is the expression of grief and sorrow and contrition for the wrong that had been wrought. Let it stand, as it will stand now and forever, as the honest confession of guilt on the part of this defendant in this case.

INFERENCES FROM MR. BEECHER'S ACTS.

Well, gentlemen, having called your attention very briefly and very imperfectly to the first stage in the history of this extraordinary case, as throwing a light back, reflecting upon the three or four days that had just passed in which was encompassed so much of grief and of sorrow, let us see what the first act of the defendant is in reference to this matter—what is the first thing he does in reference to this matter, after the writing of this letter of contrition, of January 1, 1871?

Let us see whether he acted as a guilty man would naturally act, or whether he acted as an innocent man would naturally have acted under the circumstances. Assuming now for the moment that a false accusation had been made against him, what would he have done ? After reflection would he not have gone to some person of whom he could have taken advice, would not he have sought out some trusty member of his congregation, some legal gentleman of his flock, and have told them, as he might have done in the sacredness of confidence, what wrong had been committed against him, and counseled and advised with them as to what should have been done with such a villain ? And do you think, if he had been innocent, that would not have been the course ? But what does he do ? Why, he acts as naturally he would after having committed the wrong that we charge him with. He says : "I have sent this letter of contrition to Mr. Tilton. I have poured out my soul to him in sorrow and in grief, and I have asked his pardon and forgiveness, but I will do more for him. I have had an interview with Mr. Henry C. Bowen, to whom I have made some statements concerning Mr. Tilton. I will at once undo that." And so, on the 2d of January he writes a letter to Mr. Bowen, in which he says: "I should be unwilling to have anything I said, though it was but little, weigh on your mind in a matter so important to his welfare."

Mr. Beach—What is the date of that?

Mr. Morris—January 2, 1871. The very next day after writing this letter of contrition, two days after they say this false accusation had been made, he is writing to Mr. Bowen, so anxious is he for the welfare of Mr. Theodore Tilton, the man who had made this false charge against him; and although he said but little to Mr. Bowen, "I would be unwilling that that little should weigh on your mind in a matter of such importance to his welfare." With this letter, with the original draft of this letter, he goes around to Mr. Moulton, and there he meets Mr. Tilton, on the 3d of January—the first being on Sunday and the second being observed as the 1st—on Tuesday he goes around to Mr. Moulton with this letter and meets Mr. Tilton there and then he speaks to him about this matter and expresses his sorrow at the wrong that he had done him, and hopes that it may be overlooked and that he may be forgiven. The object of this letter, you will perceive, gentlemen, was to further placate, if possible, Mr. Tilton; to show him that he was willing to aid him and assist him, that he was anxious to do anything that he could for him. He writes this letter and he says, when he wants to give force to the letter of contrition: "I should be unwilling to have anything I said, though it was but little, weigh on your mind," but on another occasion when it is desired that the force of the letter of contrition shall be broken by some wrong done on the part of the defendant, rather than the wrong that we aver, different, entirely different, language is used. Then he conversed for some time with Mr. Bowen. Mr. Bowen wishing his opinion, it was frankly given: "I did not see how he could maintain his relations with Mr. Tilton. The substance of the conversation was, that Tilton's inordinate vanity, his fatal facility for blundering, for which he had a genius, the ostentatious independence of his own opinions, and general impracticableness, would keep The Union at disagreement with the political party for whose service it was published. Now, added to all this, these revelations of these promiscuous immoralities would make his connection with either paper fatal to its interests. I spoke strongly and emphatically. I have no doubt that my influence was decisive and precipitated his overthrow." Then he is accounting for the condition of mind at the time the letter of contrition was written, and when force is to be given to the apology, then "I should be unwilling to have anything I said, though it was but little, weigh on your mind." But a few days after this, Mr. Beecher, through Mr. Moulton, makes the proposition that if Mr. Tilton will go to Europe with his family and spend a couple of years there that he will bear the expense. At this time, also, Bessie Turner, of whom you have heard, a young woman in the house of Mr. Tilton, had overheard conversations between Mr. and Mrs. Tilton with reference to this matter, and it was deemed prudent that she should be gotten out of the way; it was not safe to have her here in Brooklyn; it was feared she might tattle, that she might talk, and thus the secret become known, and so she is sent to a boarding school in Ohio and the expenses of her education are paid there by the defendant in this action. He contributes out of his own money the expenses of Bessie Turner when she is at school in Ohio, and we want them to explain, if they can, why Mr. Beecher paid the expenses of Bessie Turner at school in Ohio. We say, gentlemen, it was because she had overheard conversations, had become possessed of some facts, and there was fear of her tattling; it was dangerous to have her here. That is the reason that it was desired and desirable that she should be removed from this city, and she was sent to Ohio, the defendant paying her expenses.

And right here, gentlemen, I will call your attention to another fact, although it is out of the order of date, but it is connected with the same topic. Mr. Beecher mortgaged his own house, raising the sum of $5,000, which he paid to Mr. Moulton for the purpose of being paid to Mr. Tilton without Mr. Tilton's knowledge of where it came from. Mr. Tilton was the editor of The Golden Age. Mr. Moulton, his friend, was assisting him in raising money, had repeatedly assisted him in moneyed affairs, and Mr. Beecher, feeling the great wrong that he had done Mr. Tilton, and being desirous of having him, at least so far as worldly concerns went, satisfied, and his paper to go along prosperously, desired Mr. Moulton to be the medium of transmitting this money to Mr. Tilton without his knowledge of from whence it came; and this money was paid to Mr. Moulton by Mr. Beecher for Mr. Tilton's benefit. Will you tell me, gentlemen, that an innocent man, possessing the power and the influence that Mr. Beecher possessed in this community, will mortgage his own house to raise money to pay to a man unless he be guilty of some great wrong? No, gentlemen, that money was raised and that money was paid for the express purpose of keeping The Golden Age prosperous. So long, he thought, as Mr. Tilton was prosperous, at least the sharp edge of his anguish would be dulled—that he would not be so likely to expose the matter if he was peculiarly prosperous; but if, added to all his sorrow at home, if, added to this great wrong, poverty should stare him in the face, and he should be peculiarly embarrassed, he might, writhing under the great wrong that he had suffered—he might be more likely to expose the wrong. And thus it was that this money was paid, paid for the express purpose of keeping him along, and as a means of preventing the exposure of this secret to the public. It was one of the means adopted by him as having a tendency to prevent its exposure, to keep Mr. Tilton partially satisfied, so that he might not be entirely and all the time brooding over the wrong that he had suffered, but that he might be engaged in writing for his paper, conducting his paper, carrying his paper along, which he could not do unless he had the means, and when his mind was upon that enterprise it would be to that extent withdrawn from the great sorrow that he was suffering at that time in consequence of this wrong, and that is the reason that this $5,000 was raised upon a mortgage upon his own house. And, gentlemen, men do not mortgage their houses, they do not raise money and give it to parties in this way if they are entirely innocent, nor do they do it for any trivial offense. There may be cases where parties innocent entirely have paid money in this way. I never have heard of one in my experience. I doubt whether any instance can be given where money has been paid under such circumstances where the parties were innocent of all blame. They may not have gone so far as had the defendant in this case, but in every case that I have heard of, the money has been paid because as matter of fact parties were compromised. But, in this case, gentlemen, there will be no insinuation of that character. The evidence upon that point is too full, too clear, and too complete. That suggestion will be dropped here, as it has been by the previous investigation, and you will hear nothing of that in this case, as I will pass from that point.

MRS. MORSE'S LETTER.

On the 27th of this month, January—I am speaking now of the period between January the 1st and February the 7th—Mr. Beecher receives from Mrs. Morse and takes to Mr. Moulton as bearing upon this case and upon the matter in secret which he had in charge, a remarkable letter from Mrs. Morse, and I will call your attention to but one or two passages of it at this time :

"This she could endure and thrive under, but the publicity that he has given to this recent and most crushing of all troubles is what is taking the life out of her. I know of twelve persons whom he has told, and they in turn have told others. Do you know when I hear of you cracking your jokes from Sunday to Sunday, and think of the misery you have brought upon us, I think with the Psalmist, There is no God. He swears as soon as her breath leaves her body he will make this whole thing public, and this prospect, I think, is one thing which keeps her alive."

This letter was received on January 27, and taken to Mrs. Moulton on January the 28th, with Mr. Beecher's indorsement to it, together with another letter which he had received from Mrs. Morse, and which had been written to Mrs. Morse by Mrs. Tilton, and which was also taken there as having reference and relating to a part of this case, and the secret which Mr. Moulton at that time had in charge. I will not stop to read that letter now, gentlemen. I will call your attention to but a few brief passages in the letter in order that you may see to what it has reference:

"When by your threats my mother cried out in agony to me, 'Why what have you done, Elizabeth, my child?' her worst suspicions were aroused, and I laid bare my heart then, that from my lips and not yours she might receive the dagger into her heart. Did not my dear child, Florence, learn enough by insinuation, with her sweet, pure soul agonized in secret until she broke out with the dreadful question? I know not but it hath been her death blow. After this you are her indignant champion, are you? It is now too late. You have blackened my character, and it is for my loved ones that I suffer, yea, for the agony which the revelation has caused you, my cries ascend to Heaven night and day, that upon mine own head the anguish may fall. Once again I implore you for your children's sake, to whom you have a duty in this matter, that my past may be buried. Dear mother, I will now add a line to you. I should mourn greatly if my life was to be made known to father. His head would be bowed indeed to the grave."

And so all through from the beginning to the end is the confession of her guilty relations with the defendant, and he takes this letter to Mr. Moulton, as relating to the secret which he then had in charge. Do you doubt what these parties have been talking about? Do you doubt what the secret is, and what the crime is that has been committed in view of these facts? Mrs. Tilton has confessed her guilt, first to her husband, then to her mother. Mrs. Morse is writing to the defendant about it as though he understood it, and Mr. Beecher has confessed it, as we say, in writing over and over again, and verbally to Mr. Tilton, the plaintiff, to Mr. Moulton, and to another.

THE SCANDAL CORRESPONDENCE.

And now, gentlemen, having called your attention to these facts, occurring subsequent to the 1st of January, when this letter of contrition was written; the fact of the letter to Bowen; his sending away Bessie Turner to boarding-school; his endeavor to have Tilton and his family go to Europe, and he pay his expenses; the letter of Mrs. Morse to him, and of Mrs. Tilton to Mrs. Morse, carried by him to Mr. Moulton, we come now to another period in the history of this case, and about which, gentlemen, there can be no two opinions. Mr. Beecher, as naturally might have been expected, was very anxious to know what the state of Mr. Tilton's feeling toward him was. He had written the letter of contrition, he had written to Bowen, he had received through Mr. Moulton the letter of assurance that Mr. Tilton would not expose his secret, because of the great love that he bore his family, but with this fact pressing upon his mind, with his anxiety lest at any moment Mr. Tilton might break out and expose the guilty secret, he was very anxious to know what was the condition of his mind. To write to him he could not; the wound that he had given was too deep. He must seek the state of his mind by consulting others, and he had chosen Mr. Moulton as his mutual friend; to him he had confided, and to him he must go to ascertain whether he stood upon a precipice or not. And so, upon the 7th of February, Mr. Moulton said to Mr. Tilton, "Mr. Beecher is anxious that I should get from you an expression of your feeling toward him." And Mr. Tilton writes a letter for Mr. Beecher, and I desire to call your attention to the significance of that letter in this place, and to show you that Mr. Tilton was actuated in bearing this wrong and this suffering by the undying love which he bore his children; that they it was that restrained him from inflicting the punishment that was due to his destroyer at the time; for their sakes, for the sake of the innocent who were involved in this matter, not only his own family, but others, yea, the family of the defendant and himself, he forbore to strike; and when appealed to by Mr. Moulton to give some expression of his feeling towards Mr. Beecher, in order that he might reassure him that Mr. Tilton did not intend to expose this secret, that he did not intend to strike, but had consented to spare, he wrote this significant letter, a portion only of which I will read:

"I say, therefore, very cheerfully, that notwithstanding the great suffering which he has caused to Elizabeth and myself, I bear him no malice, shall do him no wrong, shall discountenance every project by whomsoever proposed for any exposure of his secret to the public. I ought to add that your own good offices in this case have led me to a higher moral feeling than I might otherwise have reached. Yours, &c."

Mr. Evarts—That is to Moulton?

Mr. Morris—That is a letter to Moulton written at Mr. Beecher's request, and shown to Mr. Beecher for the purpose of reassuring him that Mr. Tilton did not intend to expose this great secret, and he says there that he will discountenance any project by whomsoever made for the exposure of the secret—of Mr. Beecher's great secret—"notwithstanding the great wrong that he has done to Elizabeth and myself." Well, gentlemen, on the same day the defendant writes two letters, and the writing is as plain and unmistakable as the writing upon the wall. There is no mistake about what the party is writing. There is no mistake as to the wrong of which he speaks. There is no mistake as to the crime which he has committed. February the 7th, mark you, now, gentlemen, while Mr. Tilton had forbore to strike, while he had agreed not to expose the secret of Mr. Beecher, the wrong that had been done his family, there was no reconciliation at this time. There was no forgiveness, as is apparent in Mr. Beecher's letter. Mr. Tilton had simply forbore to strike because in striking he must necessarily strike his own family and bury them in the common ruin.

This is written to Mr. Moulton:

"I am glad to send you a book which you will relish, or which a man on a sick bed ought to relish."

Mr. Moulton at this time was sick, confined to his house, and almost daily Mr. Beecher visited him at his house, sometimes twice a day, counseling him with reference to this matter, endeavoring to take some means, adopt measures, that would secure the burying of this secret from the public.

"I wish I had more like it that I could send you one every day, not as a repayment for your great kindness to me, for that can never be repaid, not even my love, which I give you freely. My trust in you is implicit. You have also proved yourself Theodore's friend and Elizabeth's. Does God look down from Heaven on three unhappy creatures that more need a friend than these? Is it not an intimation of God's intended mercy to all that each one of these has in you a friend? But only in you are we three united. Would to God, who orders all hearts, that by your kind intimation Theodore, Elizabeth and I could be made friends again. Theodore will have the hardest task in such a case, but has he not proved himself capable of the noblest things?"

"Theodore will have the hardest task in that case, but has he not proved himself capable of the noblest things?" Why would Theodore have the hardest task? Why should it be harder for him? So far as Mr. Beecher and Mrs. Tilton were concerned, there was no difficulty. Reconciliation, as between them, was easy. But Theodore would have the hardest task. Why should he have the hardest task? Why, because it was against him and against his household that this great wrong had been committed. "True, he would have the hardest task in such a case, but has he not proved himself capable of the noblest things?" What noble thing had Mr. Tilton done from the 30th of December, 1870, till the 7th of February, 1871? What noble thing had he done that he should call out this encomium upon his nobility? What had he done? Why, he had done a noble thing. He had shown himself capable of the noblest things. In what respect, and why, and how? Why, because knowing of the crime which had been committed against him, knowing the desolation which had been brought upon his household, he forbore to strike down the assassin of his home and of his happiness. Ah! he had forbore more than that, gentlemen. Not only had he forbore to strike down the assassin of his home and his happiness, but, for the sake of his family, for the sake of his children, he had forbore to expose the man to the scorn of the world. I hope they will be able to explain what this language means if it does not mean what I have attributed to it. Certainly thus far no explanation has been vouchsafed, because it was all a muddle, as he could not recall the precise workings of his mind. You, gentlemen, will have no difficulty in recalling the precise workings of his mind when he wrote this letter, and when he wrote in these words: "He will have the hardest task in such a case." Indeed it would be a hard task. It would be rather too much to expect of human nature, a man against whom such a wrong as that had been committed, to expect friendship; but few in the world have been able to rise to that plane of divine forgiveness, and when men do stay the hand against the destroyer of a home, when they do forbear to strike down the seducer who has destroyed that home, they are held up to ignominy because of the exercise of those noble attributes, as has been done in this case; but, thank God, we are in a tribunal where it will not be available any more. "I wonder if Elizabeth knows how generously he has carried himself toward me?" In what had this generosity consisted? I will explain it to you. When he speaks of the generosity with which he had carried himself towards him, he refers to the same facts as when he said: "Has he not proved himself capable of the noblest things?" Of course it means that. It cannot mean anything else, because, prior to the 30th of December, 1870, he had declared him to be bankrupt in character, utterly worthless, but it was no noble act that he had done prior to that of which he speaks, but it was generous, forbearing and noble acts after the 30th of December and prior to the 7th of February, 1871; and I ask you, again, what had he done during that time save to stay his hand and not to cast off his wife, and not to expose the destroyer of his home to the scorn and to the just punishment that would follow such an exposure on the part of a virtuous and Christian community? This man that was everything that was bad on the 30th of December, or on the 27th of December, all at once is transformed into a perfect man, capable of the noblest things, generous beyond expression, and the only one act other than those that I have indicated that he did during that period was to charge the defendant to his face with having seduced his wife, and brought ruin upon his own home. And for this charge of seduction and debauchery of the wife, and the desolation of the home, called a perfect man, generous beyond expression, capable of the noblest things. Explain it, if you can, upon any other theory than that which I have presented. Explain it, if you can. If to falsely charge a man with the most diabolical crime known, the most infamous crime, and that man a minister of the Gospel,—if to accuse such a man, I say, of such a crime falsely, is to transform a man from a brute, a libertine and a bankrupt into a perfect man, capable of the noblest things, generous beyond expression,—if such an act is capable of thus transforming a man, then there is some sense in the language upon the theory of the defense, otherwise not. No, gentlemen, "of course I can never speak to you again without his permission." Why not? Why not? Why not? Why, because at some time or other, at some indefinite period that cannot be stated, in some indefinite way that cannot be explained, Mr. Tilton had sent word to him that he should never enter the house again. If that word had been sent, why should he never enter the house again? What had occurred between these parties, these men who for so many years had loved and admired each other, the devoted friends, pastor and parishioner, what I say had occurred that he should forbid him ever to enter the house again? But, with that explanation, one reads:

"Would to God we three could be made friends again. Theodore would have the hardest task in such a case, but has he not shown himself capable of the noblest things? Yet he has forbidden me ever to enter his house again, and that is the reason I cannot go."

One word, gentlemen, explains all this language; every act of the defendant for the four years; every act of Mr. Moulton in connection with this; every act of all the parties perfectly explain, and all harmonize, by just using this one word—"adultery." Take "adultery" out of it and there is not as much harmony in their letters, in their acts, as you would find in a lunatic asylum.

But he writes another letter on the same day to Mrs. Tilton, and he writes this letter, as he says, by the permission of Mr. Tilton, and he requests the return of this letter by the hands of her husband, Theodore Tilton, the plaintiff. Now mark you, gentlemen, he writes this letter to Mrs. Tilton by permission of her husband, and he requests the return of it by his hands; that is, he asks permission of the man who had made a false accusation against him to write to his wife, and then wrote such a letter, and requests its return by the man who had thus made a false charge.

"When I saw you last I did not expect ever to see you again, to be alive many days. God was kinder to me than were my own thoughts."

When did he see her last? When had he seen her last? On the night of the 30th of December, 1870, he had seen her upon the sick bed; it was the night that this terrible charge was made against him. The fact of its discovery had been for the first time communicated to him, and as he left the house where it was communicated he says: "This will kill me," and he goes forth, as he said, amidst the storm. Then is when he saw her. "I did not expect to see you again, or be alive many days. God was kinder to me than were my own thoughts." What were his thoughts? What were his thoughts, and why did he never expect to see her again? What were his thoughts? Why, when this news, the fact of the discovery of this crime, had been communicated to him, it came upon him like a stroke of lightning. Well might he exclaim: "I was thunderstruck; it came upon me like a stroke of lightning." He saw then the consequences of the discovery of such a crime; he saw an indignant world denouncing the seducer, and that man a Christian minister, and, he supposed, he didn't believe he could endure the agony such a discovery would make, and he had made up his mind to end his sufferings, and to end his misery by taking his own life. Explain it upon any other theory, if you can. God was kinder to him than were his own thoughts.

"The friend whom God sent to me, Mr. Moulton, has proved, above all friends that ever I had, able and willing to help me in this terrible emergency of my life. His hand it was that tied up the storm that was ready to burst upon our heads; his hand it was that tied up the storm that was ready to burst on our heads, on my head, and on the head of my victim."

He had tied up the storm. How had he tied up the storm? Why, he had appealed to Mr. Tilton in consequence, and for the sake of his family, for his children, and for the thousands that would be affected by such an exposure, he had induced him to forbear and not to expose this secret. That was the way the storm had been tied up by the hands of Moulton, whom he says God had sent to him in this terrible emergency of his life. Explain it by any other hypothesis if you can. But if the theory be true, just at that particular time, it was an emergency in Mr. Tilton's life, and not in the defendant's. He had lost his place. All that Mr. Beecher had done was to give a little advice. What was the emergency in his life that was so terrific that he contemplated destroying his life, and would, only for Moulton's interposition, whom God had sent him in this terrible emergency of his life? and you will see in every letter, and in every act during the entire four years of concealment, of planning and of plotting; every successful movement that has been made to keep from the public the truth, is attributed to God, and every step that looks like an exposure or tends to expose the truth to the world, is attributed to the devil. "He" (Moulton) "will be a true friend to your honor. Will you return it to me by his hands? I am very earnest in this wish for all our sakes, as such a letter ought not to be subject to even a chance of miscarriage." What does the letter refer to? What is he talking about in this letter that makes it so important to "all of us" that its contents should not be subject to the chance of miscarriage—that it should not come to the public? What are they talking about? What is the defendant talking about in this letter that makes it of such paramount importance that this statement should be returned to him, and by the hand of Mr. Moulton, so that there should be no possibility of its falling into other hands and its contents becoming known? What is he talking about? What does he refer to? What crime has it reference to? Some terrible thing—something so terrible that it induced him to contemplate the taking of his own life until God sent him Moulton, who tied up the storm that was about to burst on the heads of the seducer and the seduced. In this same letter he says: "You have no friend, Theodore excepted, who can so serve you as Moulton." Why should he thus speak of Theodore? "No friend except Theodore." Theodore is your best friend—the best friend you have in the world; and yet, but a short time before that the story of Theodore's treatment of his wife, as related by Bessie Turner, shocked him, and as related by the wife herself, seemed to him like a nightmare dream. Were there ever such changes in the transposition of opinion with reference to mortal man as this case exhibits in the defendant toward the plaintiff? And all because on the 30th of December, 1870, the plaintiff had falsely accused the defendant of one of the most damnable crimes to be charged against a person! "He will be a true friend to her honor." Her honor was involved, and the fact that involved her honor was known to Moulton. This letter indicates that fact, that Moulton, at that time, knew all about it. She knew that he did. He is writing to her, giving her courage,—“Moulton will be a true friend to her honor.” Her honor was involved, and Mr. Moulton had charge of the secret, the exposure of which would destroy her honor. How had her honor been involved? Who had involved it? “The past is ended, but is there no wiser, higher, holier future? May not Moulton be the priest in the sanctuary of reconciliation?” What does all this mean, gentlemen? Tell me what it means. Take those letters without knowing anything of the case, or without knowing anything of the parties, each letter without signature or date, and what would you say the parties were talking about? Why the one sin of adultery, not to be named in their correspondence, except in the manner in which it is named, and it is named, to common intelligence, as plain as though “adultery” ran through every letter and was incorporated in every sentence of this correspondence for three or four years.

THE CLANDESTINE CORRESPONDENCE.

Now I call your attention to a circumstance, as throwing light upon this transaction that occurred at this period, during this month, that sets at rest forever the fact that Mr. Moulton had in charge facts and secrets relating to the defendant's moral character, that Moulton was intrusted by him with the management of these facts, and that they related to his moral delinquency. On the 18th of February, 1871, Mr. Dana sent a note to Mr. Bonner, including a printed slip, referring to these delinquencies, threatening its publication, and Mr. Bonner immediately transmits them to Mr. Beecher, with a letter marked “strictly confidential,” and they are taken immediately to Moulton, this letter of Mr. Bonner, and the note of Mr. Dana, and the slip, although marked “strictly confidential,” and its return requested; they are taken to Mr. Moulton and put in his hands to manage the case. And Mr. Beecher takes Mr. Moulton over and introduces him to Mr. Bowen, retiring and leaving Mr. Moulton there to explain this matter, and on that occasion Mr. Moulton succeeded again in throwing off, to a certain extent, the suspicion, by denying the truth of the charge, and for that he is to be condemned? It met Mr. Beecher's approval then, and called down upon Moulton's head his blessings for four years, Sundays and week days, and on this occasion it succeeded again. Shall he be condemned because he denied the truth? Or shall you disbelieve him because he denied the truth? Oh! no. When Mr. Moulton was denying the truth of these charges, he was then a messenger sent from God. When he tells, under the solemnity in his obligation, the truth, he is a vicergerent of hell.

Well, gentlemen, I come now to consider another period in this case, running from February 7th to the 2d of April, 1872. As a part of this arrangement to keep the secret from the public, it had been agreed that neither Mr. Beecher should write to Mrs. Tilton, or she to him, without the knowledge of Mr. Moulton; that they should have no communication with each other without his permission, and you will see by the letter of February 7th, Mr. Beecher says that it is written by permission, and that he can never speak to her again without Theodore's permission, and therefore it becomes important to ascertain what relations these parties assume to each other after that period. The matter seemed to have been reasonably settled. Theodore had written this letter of February 7th. Mr. Beecher had written to Moulton, and he had written to Mrs. Tilton, and there seemed to be a prospect that this secret would for ever be buried, and it inspired a feeling of security on the part of the defendant; and, as a consequence of that, a clandestine correspondence ensued between him and the woman whom he had debauched, and the first letter upon that subject was written to him March 8th, in which she says “My dear Friend: Does your heart bound towards all as it used? So does mine.” I will not stop to read the whole of these letters. I will only call your attention to the ideas contained in them. Mr. Beecher replies, and I will read but a sentence or two of this letter:

“If it would be a comfort to you now and then to send me a letter of true inwardness, the outcoming of your inner heart, it would be safe, for I am now at home with my sister, and it is permitted to you.”

Bear in mind, gentlemen, that when this letter was written, this is the first communication, so far as we know, that Mr. Beecher has with Mrs. Tilton after the letter of February 7th, which was written for Mr. Tilton to see, but the first private letter he writes her, or correspondence between him and Mrs. Tilton, and this, bear in mind, is long after Mrs. Tilton has written her confession, after she wrote her retraction, and after she had written the letter and it had been known to Mr. Beecher, in which she speaks of a letter he obtained as having been obtained by his dictation. Not a word. She had falsely accused him of this infamous crime. She had retracted and re-retracted, taken back and re-asserted, and in the first communication that they have upon the subject there is no allusion made to all this that has passed. No reference to it whatever on either side. Think of it, gentlemen, think of it. A woman accuses you falsely, makes a false charge against you, makes a false confession to her husband, reiterates that, and you write her a letter requesting her to communicate with you, giving the reasons why it will be safe for her to do it, and in this first correspondence there is no allusion made to what has transpired; there is no reference made to it; there is no explanation asked from the lady why she had made such a charge; how she could have made such a charge, knowing it to be false; how she could make such a charge, and then, having retracted, how she reiterates it again, and makes the additional false charge that he had extorted it from her. Not a word, no reply; but just such correspondence as you would expect between a married man and a married woman, not his wife, if improper relations existed between them. Bad enough for any married man to write such a letter as that to a married woman not his wife under any circumstances. Bad enough; but think of a minister of the Gospel holding such correspondence, under the circumstances of this letter, and no allusion whatever made to the fact as to what had transpired prior to this! If it is in the power of man to explain it, consistent with innocence, I should be glad to hear the explanation. I want to hear that explanation. If it is in the power of man to explain it, consistent with innocence, I want to hear it; you want to hear it. I aver that it is not. But, gentlemen, if there could be any possibility of misapprehending the meaning of this correspondence, there was a little note accompanying this, which I think leaves no doubt upon the subject:

"MY DEAR MRS. TILTON: If I don't see you to-morrow night, I will next Friday. I will be gone all the forepart of next week.
Truly yours, H. W. B."

Why, I ask, if there was no improper relation between these parties after he took the pains to inform her that she might write him now, because it is safe; and it is safe because he is home alone with his sister? Why was it not safe if he expected a proper correspondence with a Christian woman, one of his own parishioners? Why does he take the trouble to inform her that it is safe to do it then, because then he is home there with his sister! And after the scenes of the few months prior, after the agony that he had gone through on the 30th of December, when he says in his letter of February 7th he never expected to see her again, or be alive many days, that he could never speak with her again without her husband's permission, and he didn't know then whether it would be prudent or proper, or not, without the knowledge of that husband, and without the knowledge of the man whom God had sent him, and to whom he had trusted the secret—he writes such a letter to a woman who had accused him with having improper relations with her, and then, in such a letter, putting in a slip making an appointment for a meeting. Gentlemen, we expect in this case to be judged by the same rules that you judge other men by. We expect in this case that you will judge the defendant by the same rules that you yourselves would be judged by, the same rules that you would judge other men by. We do not expect that in this case you will say that because he is a great man, because he has a great name, and that his fame extends throughout the land, that you will withdraw him in considering this case from the ordinary rules that you would apply to other men. Why, if any one of you should be caught in such a correspondence as that with another man's wife, upon that alone, without anything else, you would be pronounced an adulterer. That would be the judgment of your fellow-man, and it would be a righteous judgment. Mark you, gentlemen, this letter, too, is written by the man who says on the 1st of January, 1871, that he so blamed himself because he believed that his counsels had tended to produce social unhappiness, because he had been the cause of all the ruin and all the desolation. He was then in paroxysms of grief from the ruin that he believed himself, though unconsciously, he says, to have been the cause of, a home well nigh ruined and desolated by his confessed acts; and yet, writing to that woman, the mother, the head of that home, such a letter as that, without asking any explanation, without giving any explanation, without so much as making allusion to all this that had preceded, that had so frenzied him, that had driven him almost mad, in fear of losing his mind—to indite such a letter as that under such circumstances, and he writes it as though nothing had ever occurred between them, on the contrary, she saying, "Does your heart bound towards all as it used? So does mine." "If you want to write it is safe now; you can do it. I am alone here with my sister, and it is permitted to you to do it. If I do not see you to-morrow night, I will on Friday; I am going away and cannot be there before." If that was you, gentlemen, any man on that jury, what do you think would be said of you by your neighbors? The knowledge of this fact alone, stripped of every other consideration, stripped of every other fact, what would be the judgment of mankind upon such acts? Well, gentlemen, the very circumstance and fact that there was this clandestine correspondence, under the circumstances, is strong evidence that there had been an improper intimacy between these parties, because if there had been an improper intimacy between these parties—with a knowledge on his part, as he says, that his counsel, his presence, had tended to produce this sorrow and this grief in the family, he would have been very careful before he would have renewed that intimacy. Certainly. Why, he had been forbidden, you recollect, ever to enter the house again; had been forbidden ever to speak to her again, and could not speak to her, and could not come to the house, and yet he says he will be there. He writes to her and reviews this intimacy clandestinely, without the knowledge of the husband, without the knowledge of the man to whom this secret had been confided. But that is not all; she writes another letter to him, in which she undertakes to frame excuses for having confessed, for having communicated the fact to her husband. The date of this is May 3d, 1871.

Mr. Evarts—What is this other one, Mr. Morris?

Mr. Morris—March 8th, 1871.

Mr. Shearman—There is no date to that.

Mr. Morris—No; but it is dated by other circumstances. We will show the date to be as given.

Mr. Evarts—But there is no date on it.

Mr. Morris—Of course, there is no date on; but we say it is March 8th, 1871.

Mr. Evarts—This one that you are now going to read is May 3, 1871?

Mr. Morris—May 3, 1871. That is the letter from Mrs. Tilton. The letter from Mr. Beecher was later. I bring it in in this connection, because it is upon the same subject. It is dated January 20, 1872, and I will read but a small portion of this.

Mr. Beach—Are you going to read the letter of May 3, 1871? You have read March 8th, but May 3 you alluded to.

Mr. Morris—I read portions of that only.

Mr. Beach—You have not read May 3.

Mr. Morris—Oh, no, [reading]: "My future, either for life or death, would be happier could I but feel that you forgive, while you forget, me. In all the sad complications of the past year my endeavour was to entirely keep from you all suffering, to bear, myself alone, leaving you forever ignorant of it. My weapons were love, a large untiring generosity and nest-hiding. That I failed utterly we both know, but now I ask forgiveness."

As I say, gentlemen, the letter refers, as we claim—and it will, I think, be made manifest—to the fact that she had confessed this crime to her husband, and that she now asks his forgiveness for having made that confession to her husband. In his letter of January, 1872, the latter clause reads as follows. I will not take up your time by reading the whole of the letter :

"I shall be in New Haven next week, to begin my course of lectures to the theological classes on Preaching. My wife takes boat for Havana and Florida on Thursday. I called on Monday, but you were out."

These clandestine letters were discovered after Mrs. Tilton deserted her home on the 11th of July last, and that was the first knowledge the plaintiff had that there had been any communication between the defendant and his wife. I have already, gentlemen, called your attention to the character of these letters, and sufficiently indicated their meaning, but I will pass on to some other topics. I have been speaking, gentlemen, of the facts embraced (with the exception of the one letter to which I have just called your attention), within the period between February 7th and April 2d, 1872. The next letter in the order of these events is written by Mrs. Morse to Mr. Beecher, and by him delivered to Mr. Moulton, as the custodian of his secret, and I will call your attention to a paragraph of it as being to my mind very significant. She commences :

'MY DEAR SON.'—

Mr. Shearman—Is that January, 1871?

Mr. Morris—No; this is October the 21st, the year not given.

Mr. Shearman—1871?

Mr. Morris.—1871. It commences ;

"MY DEAR SON:—Do come and see me; I will promise that the secret of her life"—as she calls it—"shall not be mentioned. I know it is hard to bring it up as you must have suffered intensely, and we will, I fear, until released by death. Do you know, I think it strange you should ask me to call you Son, when I told Darling I felt, if you could in safety to yourself and all concerned, you would, be to me called that endearing name. Am I mistaken?—MOTHER."

"The secret of her life shall not be mentioned if you will call to see me. Come and see me, and the secret of her life which has caused you, and all of us, and will until released by death, such intense sorrow and pain, shall not be mentioned. I will not bring that up; I will not harrow your feelings by alluding to that, so that you need have no apprehension upon that score; I will not allude to the secret of her life." What are these people talking about? What does this mean, Mrs. Morse's writing to Mr. Beecher such a letter as this, in such language as that? What is this secret of her life that is tormenting them, and will, until released by death? He knows about it; she assumes the fact that he knows all about it; she assumes the fact that he knows that she knows all about it, and they talk about it as a matter well understood among them and between them. "The secret of her life shall not be mentioned;" "I know you must have suffered intensely by it, and we all shall hereafter until released by death." What are they talking about, gentlemen? What is this secret of her life that is giving them so much pain and so much anguish, a subject that is not to be talked about among them, which must be buried, which is too piercing, too sharp-pointed, to be talked about? Leave it alone! Bury it up!

Gentlemen, in any ordinary case, where parties are judged by the ordinary rules of evidence, in any case that you might be called upon to try between people of less distinction than one now upon trial, with one half the evidence that I have detailed, to you, you would not hesitate for a moment in putting the seal of your condemnation upon the destroyer. But we dare not stop, even here. It would seem as though the case was proven over and over again by the confession of the defendant, by the confessions of his victim, by the knowledge communicated by her mother, by these letters, which are plain, clear and unmistakable. Yet, I say, we dare not stop, even here, and I propose, from this period onward, to present to you evidence still more conclusive than any that has preceded it; evidence so clear, so conclusive, so convincing, that you will not hesitate for a single moment to give us that justice which we claim at your hands. We come here from a blighted and a desolated home. The children of my client are scattered in different parts. He will return tonight to as cold, as cheerless, and as desolate a home as there is in the land. And from that home he will come in the morning to meet you, fathers, and brothers, and husbands; you coming from your happy homes, he from his desolate one. Until then I will close my remarks.

Mr. Beach—Generally we adjourn at this hour, if your Honor please.

Judge Neilson—Can you close the opening to-day?

Mr. Morris—No, sir.

Mr. Beach—It is impossible for Mr. Morris to do it.

Judge Neilson—The gentlemen will please keep their seats. Gentlemen of the jury, we now adjourn until to-morrow morning at eleven o'clock. I remind you to observe the injunction heretofore given. To enable you to avoid the throng you will please pass out with the officer before the other people leave.

When the jurymen were well away, the doors were opened and the Court room was vacated for the day.

SECOND DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

CONTINUATION OF MR. MORRIS'S ADDRESS.

MRS. TILTON AND MRS. BEECHER IN THE COURT-ROOM—A SCRAP OF NEW EVIDENCE—A LETTER FROM MR. BEECHER TO MR. MOULTON—THE ARGUMENT STILL UNFINISHED.

The opening address of ex-Judge Morris in the Tilton-Beecher suit was continued on Tuesday, Jan. 12, Mrs. Tilton and Mrs. Beecher being among the auditors. His delivery was better than on the preceding day, although he was still laboring under a severe cold. He resumed his review of the letters written by Mr. Beecher to Francis D. Moulton.

Sentence after sentence was taken up and analyzed, the counsel in his anxiety to impress the jury with the significance of the extracts, repeating them again and again. A scrap of new testimony was introduced. This was an alleged letter from Mr. Beecher to Mr. Moulton in which the former resigned his position as pastor of Plymouth Church. The reading of this letter created a marked sensation among the spectators. Those, however, who have followed this case carefully have not forgotten that Mr. Beecher referred to this letter when he was examined by the Plymouth Church Investigating Committee, and explained the circumstances under which it was written. Inasmuch as it was not embodied in either of the elaborate statements presented to the public by Mr. Moulton, the defense probably concluded that it had been lost. Mr. Moulton seems to have taken excellent care of all the scandal literature which was placed in his keeping. Mr. Morris was interrupted once by applause when he paid a glowing tribute to Mr. Beecher's courage, and asserted that a thousand people with false accusations could not frighten him. Mr. Morris's argument was adroit, ingenious, and impressive.

The court-room was crowded an hour before Judge Neilson's gavel was heard. Promptly at 11 o'clock the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, his silver-haired wife, and Col. Beecher entered the court-room and took seats near ex-Judge John K. Porter. Within a few minutes Theodore Tilton and his counsel appeared. They had scarcely taken their seats before a loud buzz ran around the court-room. Mr. Tilton cast a quick, nervous glance toward the door, and saw two ladies and Edward J. Ovington crossing the threshold. One of these ladies was Elizabeth R. Tilton; the other her friend, Anna M. Hicks. Mrs. Tilton was attired in a black silk dress and dark velvet cloak, with a black velvet hat ornamented by an ostrich feather. She removed her veil, and glanced for a moment at her husband. Mr. Tilton returned the look, and then whispered softly to Messrs. Beach and Fullerton. The lawyers simply smiled, and made no answer. Mrs. Tilton for the time was the central figure of attraction. She was very pale, and her manner was that of a timid, shy woman, who felt ill at ease under hundreds of staring eyes. The crowd instinctively instituted a comparison between her and Mrs. Beecher, and the result was not favorable to Mrs. Tilton. It was apparent that they were opposite in character. On one side was a weak, timid, sentimental woman; on the other a positive, determined, and, even in her old age, a handsome woman. Mrs. Beecher was cool and self-possessed throughout the proceedings, notwithstanding the bitter attacks upon her husband's honor. Mrs. Tilton was evidently nervous and embarrassed. Mrs. Beecher has a classical face, full of force and expression; Mrs. Tilton's face is of a commonplace type.

At 4 o'clock ex-Judge Morris announced that he would require about one hour to close his opening remarks, and the court was adjourned. Mrs. Beecher left her seat, and, walking over to Mrs. Tilton, with an unaffected smile of good will upon her face, clasped hands with Theodore Tilton's wife. A whispered conversation, which lasted at least five minutes, followed. Immediately afterward Mrs. Tilton, Mrs. Beecher, the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, and his counsel left the court-room by the rear entrance, followed by a large number of Plymouth Church members.

A curious crowd followed them to the sidewalk and watched every movement with eager eyes. Among the spectators were Gen. H. W. Slocum, the Rev. B. F. Halliday, assistant pastor of Plymouth Church, E. A. Studwell, Under Sheriff Daggett, Ed. J. Ovington, Moses S. Beach, the Rev. Justin D. Fulton, and the Rev. J. S. Bass.

THE PROCEEDINGS.

The abruptness with which the actual work in the case was resumed at the Beecher trial on Jan. 12 indicated that the Court does not intend that any time shall be unnecessarily wasted. Almost instantly on the falling of Judge Neilson's gavel, ex-Judge Morris took up the thread of his address, but not at the precise point where he rested the night previous. First he referred to some points which he had omitted in the subdivisions of his subject already treated.

HISTORY OF THE INTERVIEW AT MOULTON'S HOUSE.

IF THE COURT PLEASE—GENTLEMEN OF THE JURY: You observed, must have observed, yesterday, that I was laboring under a very severe indisposition, which, I regret to say, I am this morning; and in my hurry to get through with my part of the labor in this case I omitted some points to which I should have called your attention; I will briefly call your attention to some of those points now, before pursuing the discussion, at the point I left off at the close, yesterday. I called your attention to the interview had on the 30th of December, 1870, between Mr. Tilton and Mr. Beecher at Mr.

Moulton's house, when Mr. Tilton accused Mr. Beecher of adultery. I omitted to call your attention to the fact as to how that interview was brought about. On the 26th of December Mr. Tilton wrote a letter to Mr. Beecher, at the suggestion of Mr. Bowen, demanding, for reasons which he explicitly knew, his retirement from the pulpit. Prior to this, Mr. Tilton and his wife had agreed that the secret should be buried; they had agreed for the sake—he had for the sake of his family, for the sake of his children, that it should not be exposed, and she, fearing that this action on his part, although in the interest of another, might lead to complications and to disclosures that would involve her own secret; at her own solicitation this interview was sought, and it was a friendly interview. Its purposes were not to expose the secret or the crime which Mr. Beecher had committed, but, on the contrary, to put him upon his guard against another man from whom he feared certain stories that were afloat; and it was in consequence of this understanding and this arrangement that this interview was had; and the letter which Mrs. Tilton wrote the same night, the 30th of December, 1870, shows that it had been understood and agreed between her and her husband that this secret should not be made known. And it was with this letter in his possession, and the letter written the next morning by Mrs. Tilton, that Mr. Moulton had his interview with Mr. Beecher on the night of the 31st December, 1870, and the closing line of this letter is, "You and I both are pledged to do our best to avoid publicity." So that you will perceive that this interview and the statement of these facts to Mr. Beecher was not for the purpose of exposing, but to carry out the pledge that he had made to his wife, that these secrets should not be exposed, and so to put him on his guard against another, that that purpose might be attained. I called your attention briefly from that point to the leading facts and features in this case, and I will not trouble you now by recapitulating those facts, except to call your attention to one fact which I omitted to mention, and that is, that the letter to which I adverted yesterday, containing a clear, explicit, and unequivocal confession of guilt on the part of Mrs. Tilton, was written when her husband was some five or six hundred miles away from her.

THE FIRST GUSTS OF THE TEMPEST.

During the period of which I was speaking at the adjournment of the court, to wit, 1871, trouble began to brew in another quarter. Inquiries began to be made by certain members of Plymouth Church. Some were suggesting that action should be taken with a view of dropping Mr. Tilton's name from the record; and in the Fall of 1871 there was a meeting held by the Examining Committee for the purpose of considering the propriety of dropping his name from the roll of membership of Plymouth Church. Mr. Beecher, at his request, was appointed at that time a Committee to wait upon Mr. Tilton and, as he said, to remonstrate with him and induce his return again to the church, in which he had not entered since the 3d of July, 1870. That was the proper course to have been taken by the Committee and by Mr. Beecher if the object had been, as then stated, to remonstrate with Mr. Tilton and induce his return again to the church; but I shall be able to show you, I think, to your satisfaction, that there was another purpose, another object, another point to be gained by this action, and that was the concealment of the crime that we charge against Mr. Beecher. True, as it is said, if a brother has gone astray you should remonstrate with him: "If thy brother shall trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone. If he shall hear thee thou hast gained thy brother, but if he will not hear thee then take with thee one or two more, that in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word may be established." In this case there were not two or three more taken. The defendant knew when he was appointed on that Committee to remonstrate, as he said, with Mr. Tilton, with a view of inducing his return into the church, he knew that it was as impossible to have him return to that church as it is to move the mountain. He knew that that man had received such a wound in his heart, and at his own hand, that he never again could sit and hear the man who had thus inflicted this wound explain the law as it was thundered from Mount Sinai, or the teachings of the Master from the Mount. Action was delayed for a considerable time. Members were anxious to have a report of this Committee which was to remonstrate with the erring brother, and during the interval, instead of trying to induce him to return again to the church, what does he do? He appeals to his friend Mr. Moulton to induce him to leave the church, to resign his membership from the church, and he writes Mr. Moulton a letter, appealing to him to use his offices to induce Mr. Tilton to resign from the church:

"There are two or three who feel anxious to press action on the case. It will only serve to raise profitless excitement when we need to have quieting. There are already complexities enough. We do not want to run the risk of the complications which in such a body no man can foresee and no one control."

What were the complications of this case that could not be submitted to an investigation of the Committee of his own church, whose duty it was to investigate just such matters?

Mr. Beach—What is the date of that letter?

Mr. Morris—December 3d, 1871.

"Since the connection is really formal, and not vital or sympathetic, why should it continue with all the risk of provoking irritating measures? Every day's reflection satisfies me that this is the course of wisdom, and that he will be the stronger, and B. the weaker for it."

That is, Bowen the weaker for it.

"You said that you meant to effect it. Can't it be done promptly? If a letter is written, it had better be very short, simply announcing withdrawal, and perhaps with an expression of kind wishes, &c."

Do facts like these need any comment? The defendant, the pastor of his church, securing himself to be appointed as the sole Committee for the avowed purpose of inducing Mr. Tilton's return to the church, and at the same time, while delaying the report, planning, plotting, devising means to have him withdrawn from the church. But finally a report is made; that he had seen Theodore, and that he had had great trouble, peculiarly and otherwise, and it would be better for the Committee not to take further action at that time; and the advice was taken, and once more they have succeeded in staving off, preventing an investigation that would reveal the truth. The reason of this action on the part of the church was the publication of the biography of Mrs. Woodhull, and Mr. Beecher. Fearing that if action was taken it would incense Mr. Tilton, and thus lead to an exposure of the whole difficulty, he was anxious to avert the threatened catastrophe and keep off the day of judgment; and the device succeeded, for a time at least. But it was only a temporary success. As were all the devices that were resorted to during the four years succeeding the commission of this crime, it was but temporary.

Foolish man! foolish men! to believe that you could permanently bury up such a crime as that! No; not until the immutable laws of Omniscience are changed! Sooner or later, such a sin will be found out. But no sooner is one difficulty, or threatened difficulty, put aside by some device, than another difficulty, as was natural and to be expected, looms up, and that contingency has to be met in the same way. Mrs. Woodhull had become possessed of some facts, and there was a threatened exposure from that quarter, and in order to prevent that, another device must be resorted to, and that was to try and placate her by kindness, and for a time that device succeeded; but like all others, it was but temporary. Mr. Moulton, Mr. Tilton, Mr. Beecher, all trying to placate her, to keep her quiet, to prevent her from making the exposure or publishing anything concerning the difficulty, because it would lead to complications that would in the end reveal the whole secret. So, when Mrs. Woodhull writes to Mr. Beecher, requesting him to preside at a meeting, he turns it over to Mr. Moulton, his friend, his protector, and asks his judgment upon it, and puts himself wholly and exclusively in his charge.

"Do with me as you think best. I have trusted you heretofore, and have never been mistaken. I trust you now."

As he says in his letter of January 2, 1872:

"If you think it is best that I should preside at the meeting I will do so. I don't want to do it; I would rather not do it, but, if you say so, I must do so. I leave all to your judgment. Though it may involve my reputation in the estimation of many; though it may subject me to criticism, as it undoubtedly will; though it may injure me in public estimation to preside as requested, yet, as you say, as you advise, so will I do."

What do you think, gentlemen, must have been the secret intrusted to Mr. Moulton that would induce Mr. Beecher so completely, so absolutely, to abandon himself to Mr. Moulton, placing his reputation in his hands, laying aside his own judgment as to what was proper in his situation, leaving it all with him, having no mind, no judgment, no will of his own with reference to his action, but leaving it all with Moulton? At this time, bear in mind, gentlemen, it was more than a year after the letter of contrition had been written; it was after the biography had been written that so much has been said about; it was after Tilton had presided at the Steinway Hall meeting—in fact, it was after he had done everything that identified his name with this woman, and all for Mr. Beecher's sake. But that is not all. After this—after Mr. Tilton himself had ceased to have anything to do with Mrs. Woodhull, we find a friendly letter from her to Mr. Beecher, dated June 3d, 1872, in which she calls upon him for aid and assistance in the difficulties with which she was surrounded then in the Gilsey House. The proprietors threatening to turn her out, she calls upon him for aid long and long after Mr. Tilton had ceased to have anything to do with her, and after he says that he had had an interview in which she was angry and threatening, because he had peremptorily refused to preside at the meeting. And yet, notwithstanding this angry talk between them and this peremptory refusal to preside at the meeting, we find an invitation from her, and he turning it over to Mr. Moulton to decide for him long after Mr. Tilton had ceased to have anything to do with her—a friendly communication from her, an appeal to him for aid.

STILL ANOTHER ALLEGED CONFESSION.

And now, gentlemen, as a relief to this planning, and plotting, and devising and scheming for the purpose of covering up this crime, let me call your attention to another frank, full, open, complete and clear confession of his guilt made by himself on the 5th of February, 1872. Prior to the writing of this letter, Mr. Beecher had met Mr. Tilton in the cars going East; he had had a friendly interview with Mr. Tilton, and on his return he received a letter to which allusion is made from Mr. Tilton's wife, which induced him to fear that there was danger of some action being taken with reference to this crime, and he says of his demeanor on that occasion:

"He was kind; we talked much. At the end he told me to go on with my work without the least anxiety in so far as his feelings and actions were the occasion of apprehension."

What does that mean? In 1872—the 3d of February, 1872—over a year after it is alleged that Mr. Tilton had made a false accusation against the Pastor of Plymouth Church, you find them having this friendly conversation, and Mr. Tilton assuring Mr. Beecher that he may go on with his work without apprehensions from him. Gentlemen, was that the language and the assurance of the man who had made such a false accusation? No; it was the language of the man who had been injured and wronged to the man who had thus injured and wronged him, saying to him: "Notwithstanding the great wrong that you have inflicted upon me, I forbear; go on with your work; I shall not expose the crime that you have committed against me." If it don't mean that, gentlemen, pray what does it mean? And then speaking in a desponding mood, expressing his apprehensions that the friendship of Mr. Moulton may be cooling towards him, he says:

"But I see you but seldom, and my personal relations, environments, necessities, limitations, dangers and perplexities you cannot see or imagine. If I had not gone through this great year of sorrow, I would not have believed that any one could pass through my experience and be alive or sane."

What were these dangers? What were these environments? What were these perplexities that had so harassed him during the past year as almost to drive him to madness and to express his astonishment that he could have endured what he had endured, and be either alive or sane at that time.

"During all this time you were literally my stay and comfort. I should have fallen on the way but for the courage which you inspired and the hope which you breathed. I came back hoping that the bitterness of death was passed, but T. T.'s troubles brought back the cloud with even severer suffering. No man can see the difficulties that environ me unless he stands where I do. To say that I have a church on my hands is simple enough, but to have the hundreds and thousands of men pressing me with his keen suspicion or anxiety or zeal, to see tendencies which, if not stopped, would break out into a ruinous deluge of me; to stop them without seeming to do it, to prevent any one questioning me, to meet and allay prejudices against T. which had their beginning years before this, to keep serene as if I was not alarmed or disturbed, to be cheerful at home and among friends when I was suffering the torments of the damned, to pass sleepless nights of en, and yet to come up fresh and full for Sunday—all this may be talked about, but the real thing cannot be understood from the outside, nor its wearying and grinding on the nervous system. God knows that I have put more thought and judgment and earnest desire into my efforts to prepare a way for Theodore and Elizabeth than ever I did for myself a hundred fold. But chronic evils require chronic remedies. If my destruction would place him all right, that shall not stand in the way. I am willing to step down and out; no one can offer more than that. That I do offer. Sacrifice me without hesitation if you can clearly see your way to his safety and happiness thereby. I do not think that anything would be gained by it. I should be destroyed, but he would not be saved. Elizabeth and the children would have their future clouded. Life would be pleasant if I could see that rebuilt which is shattered. But I live on the sharp and ragged edge of anxiety, remorse, fear, despair, and yet to put on all the appearance of serenity and happiness cannot be endured much longer."

Do you believe, gentlemen of the jury, that it was possible for an innocent man to have penned that letter? Do you believe that that letter was written by a man understanding the full force and meaning of every word that he penned. I say, do you believe it possible that an innocent man could write such a letter as that under such or any circumstances? No, gentlemen; he had received the note of warning from Mrs. Tilton, and he was afraid that the difficulties that were then surrounding Mr. Tilton, and the great load that he was then carrying, would break him down, and that he would be unable longer to suffer in secret, as he was suffering, while to all outward appearances the man who had wrought this ruin was prosperous and receiving the plaudits of his fellow man.

It was the note, as he says in the letter, a note of warning, that he had received from Elizabeth, and fearing that there was danger ahead, he pours out again his soul to his friend, hoping thereby that the appeal might be effectual. If he had said in this letter, "I fear Theodore Tilton will expose the fact of my criminal relations with his wife," it would not have been a more clear and conclusive confession of guilt than it is. "If my destruction would place him all right, that shall not stand in the way." Place him all right? What had been done to him? Why, the pretense is that the wrong had been done to the defendant, to Mr. Beecher by Mr. Tilton, yet, with conscious guilt, with the consciousness of having wrought this great ruin, he says "If my destruction will place him all right, that shall not stand in the way." If my destruction will place him all right?—how place him all right? But while he is willing to do this, while he is willing, if his destruction would place him all right to be destroyed, he reminds his mutual friend that that would not remedy the evil; that Mrs. Tilton and the children would be left to a blight; that their future would be clouded; that his destruction would not prevent the exposure of the secret. He would be destroyed—"I would be destroyed, but he would not be saved;" because my destruction would lead to the exposure of the very thing that we seek to avoid. But, "I am willing to step down and out. No man can offer more: this I do offer." A man than whom none in the country possessed greater power in his station, at the head of one of the largest churches, engaged in other enterprises, his name co-extensive with civilization—this man offering to step down and out, to vacate his position and retire into private life, if the man who on the 30th of December, 1870, falsely accused him of an infamous crime, says that he shall do it. Think of it for a moment! An innocent man occupying such an elevated position accused by a member of his own church, falsely, of an infamous crime, and after more than a year of planning and plotting with that member to keep the facts secret, offering to give up everything, church, paper, the "Life of Christ," and every work in which he is engaged, at the bidding of the man who had made this false accusation! If the theory of the other side be true, had Mr. Tilton offered himself up as a sacrifice there would have been some propriety in the offering. But for the man thus injured to offer himself up as a sacrifice to the man who had injured him, I submit, gentlemen, is more than human nature can conceive.

"Sacrifice me without hesitation if you can clearly see your way to his safety and happiness thereby."

I am in the full flush of mental vigor, at the very acme of fame; I have dedicated my life to the cause of religion and morality; I am at the head of a great church; I am editor of a great Christian paper, largely depending upon my influence and my fame; I am writing the "Life of Christ," the delay already in which has well nigh brought ruin upon my friends who are engaged in its publication; yet, notwithstanding all these interests that I have in charge, notwithstanding all the obligations that they impose upon me to go forward in my work, notwithstanding all this—sacrifice me without hesitation, if thereby you can see the safety and happiness of the man who, on the 30th of December, 1870, falsely accused me of an infamous crime. No, gentlemen; there was something beyond that that induced Mr. Beecher on this occasion thus to offer himself up as a sacrifice. He saw before him the possibility of the exposure of this crime. He saw painted in living colors the ruin that he had wrought. He saw the desolation that he had caused; and he saw, further, the still greater, more widespread, desolation that its public knowledge would cause. Anything to prevent that, if it is possible; if it is possible to do it, do it—do it! Don't consider me; I am not worthy to be considered in this case; sacrifice me; do with me as you please. Do with me as you please, if you can thereby see the safety and happiness of the man that I have so wronged—if you can thereby build up that that has been shattered; if you can build up this home again; if you can restore there the happiness which I have destroyed. Do anything, just as you please, just what you think best; I yield myself wholly and entirely to you; I have nothing to say—"sacrifice me without hesitation!" he exclaims:

"Nothing can possibly be so bad as the horror of great darkness in which I spend much of my time."

What does that mean—"this horror of great darkness"—in which he spent most of the time? It was the brooding over of the crime that he had committed; it was the vision, ever present before him, and haunting him day and night; that was the great darkness—the "horror of great darkness"—in which he spent most of his time. He saw children worse than orphaned; he saw a home desolated and those children scattered; he saw the aged parent of these men tottering upon the verge of the grave with dishonor that he had placed upon them; he saw his own high station stained, the robes soiled; and he saw his own family disgraced; and he saw Christendom blush at the crime that he had committed. No wonder that he lived most of the time in the horror of great darkness.

A SHARP ANALYSIS OF SIGNIFICANT WORDS.

"Life would be pleasant if I could see that rebuilt which is shattered." What is it that has been shattered, and what had he to do with the shattering? What does it mean? The answer has already been given in the mind of each one of you gentlemen. It was the home that had been shattered, and it was he who had shattered that home, and "Oh! if I could see that rebuilt, life would be sweet, but as it is, I live in the horror of great darkness." "To live," he exclaims, "on the sharp and ragged edge of anxiety, remorse, fear and despair cannot be endured much longer." Every word penned there so carefully was understood fully by Mr. Beecher when he penned that letter. No man understands the meaning of the English language better than he, and when he used that terrible word "remorse" he confessed his guilt. The word itself is a confession of guilt, and implies a crime behind it to cause or produce the feeling of remorse. The very meaning of the word is "to bite again." Remorse is something which keeps biting its victim, gnawing him, preying upon him. As Crogan says: "When remorse is blended with the fear of punishment, and rises to despair, it constitutes the supreme wretchedness of the mind." This is the remorse that Mr. Beecher felt; a remorse blended with the fear of punishment, that is a constant dread of discovery, for discovery carried with it its own punishment, and no wonder that it should engender in him, as our author describes it, "the supreme wretchedness of the mind." No wonder that it should, as another author describes it, "draw him nigh to the grave." There are many kinds of human wretchedness. There is poverty, sickness, bereavement. There are various types of anguish, agony, heart trouble; but remorse is "the supreme wretchedness of the mind," and that was Mr. Beecher's condition of mind when he used that word "remorse." When he used that word he confessed to all that is contained in it. He confessed to a criminality capable of producing the supreme wretchedness of the mind; a guilt which makes remorse possible; a guilt which bites and gnaws and preys upon him, biting like a serpent, stinging like an adder. What was there at this time and at this period that should place him upon "the ragged edge of anxiety and remorse, fear and despair," so far as the world knew? So far as the world knew, Mr. Beecher was at the acme of his fame. None of these facts which subsequently were made public and so disturbed him had at that time been made public or were known. Bear in mind that at the time he was living in the "horror of great darkness," suffering the torments of the damned," "was upon the ragged edge of despair. fear and remorse," the Woodhull publication had not been given to the world, because that was not published until the 2d of November, 1873. Bear in mind that at this time that he was suffering the torments of the damned, Mr. Tilton's letter to Mr. Bowen, relating charges of moral delinquency made by Mr. Bowen, had not yet been made public, because that did not see the light of day until the 30th of April, 1873. Bear in mind that Mr. West had not at that time notified to Mr. Beecher that he intended to prefer charges against Mr. Tilton and Mr. Bowen, in which was the specification averring that on the 3d of August, 1870, Mr. Tilton had told Mrs. Bradshaw that he had discovered a criminal intimacy between Mr. Beecher and Mrs. Tilton, to which specification her name was attached as a witness. Bear in mind that at this time Mr. Tilton had not appeared at Plymouth Church, and there confronted its pastor with the question whether he had spoken falsely of him or not. Bear in mind that at this time the council that so disturbed the defendant had not yet been called, nor, until November, 1873, were the initiatory steps looking to that council taken. Bear in mind that Mr. Tilton's letter to Dr. Bacon had not been published, because that was not published until the 24th of June, 1874. At the time that he was living in this "horror of great darkness," at the time that he was suffering "the torments of the damned," none of these things had been made public. They had just passed through a successful pew renting of the church. He had delivered a course of lectures to the theological students of New-Haven with great success, which had added greatly to his already great fame. They were thinking of making preparations to celebrate what was known as the "silver wedding," the twenty-fifth year of his ministrations in that church; and at this time when to the world he was at the height of his prosperity, surrounded by powerful friends, with resources unlimited, with fame as broad as Christianity and civilization—at this moment, at this time, thus situated, thus circumstanced in the eyes of the world, standing as the foremost preacher of the age, with nothing, so far as the world knew, to cast a shadow across his pathway, he offers to give it all up; he offers to "step down and out" at the mere suggestion of Mr. Tilton.

Would you require, gentlemen, any other evidence of the guilt of the defendant than he has furnished in the letter to which I have called your attention, taken in connection with the circumstances surrounding him at that time? No; no intelligent man, no intelligent juror, I apprehend, would require any other evidence, and if this language can be explained upon any theory of innocence I shall be for one delighted to hear the explanation. I say to you, gentlemen of the jury, it cannot be explained consistent with innocence. All the sophistry and all the subtleties in the world cannot so gloss and color up the meaning of that letter as to take away the guilt there confessed—as to bury the meaning of those terrible words in that letter.

Oh! but it is said that Mr. Beecher was a coward, and that is what led him to do these foolish things; and that suggestion, gentlemen, calls up another thought in my own mind. Bear in mind that these letters are written by Mr. Beecher voluntarily; they are written to the man who has been entrusted with the secret, whatever it be, and therefore it was at the time an honest expression of Mr. Beecher's feelings. If he had been an innocent man, do you think he would voluntarily have written such a letter as that to Mr. Moulton? If he had been an innocent man do you think that he would have deliberately sat down and written such a letter as that? Why, no; if he had wanted to have seen Moulton he would have seen him; but if innocent he would not have written such a letter as that. And in all the letters he has written during the four years, all the conversations that he has had in writing to Moulton, there is never one intimation that he is fearful of a false accusation being made; no intimation of that. Every letter and every act is based upon the theory of some great wrong committed by him, and not an intimation anywhere in any letter written to a third party, his devoted friend, the man sent to him by God as he says—not an intimation in any of those letters that he was fearful of a false accusation being made against him. Why, gentlemen, is it necessary upon such facts as this to dwell? An innocent man sitting down and writing such a letter as that to a friend, and that friend one in whom he placed implicit, unbounded, unquestioning faith, without ever alluding to the fact. Oh! would he not have said "Frank, this is too bad; you know that this is false—that this charge is false; it is too bad that I should suffer in consequence of that. Stop your friend, stop him." Moulton—he knew that this charge was true, or he knew that it was false—and Mr. Beecher believed that Mr. Moulton knew whether it was false or not. Did Mr. Beecher suppose for a moment that Mr. Moulton did not know whether the charge was true or false? Do you suppose that if his mind was hesitating upon that point, that he didn't know whether Mr. Moulton was aware of the truth or falsity of the charge, and that he would not have informed Mr. Moulton of the fact? It is evident that he supposed that Mr. Moulton knew or believed the charge to be true, and if he supposed that Mr. Moulton believed the charge to be true, and it was false, why didn't he undeceive him? Why didn't he say, "Moulton, you are laboring under a misapprehension here. You believe that this charge is true. It is false; it is false!" No, he says nothing of the kind; but he proceeds upon the assumption that the charge is true and that Mr. Moulton knows it to be true, and he sits down and he writes such a letter as that voluntarily to him. I ask you, gentlemen, again, do you want any further evidence of the truth of the charge that we bring against Mr. Beecher than that letter, with the surrounding circumstances under which it was written?

PRAISE OF MR. BEECHER'S BRAVERY.

Now, gentlemen, I come back to the suggestion that I was about to make a few moments ago. The claim that is made now, that, situated as Mr. Beecher was, fearful of this charge being made, it was his cowardice that induced him to act as he had been acting for four years. Why, gentlemen, if there has been one distinguishing characteristic of Mr. Beecher, it has been his courage, his boldness, his fearlessness. When, in 1863, he faced the mobs of Liverpool and Manchester you recollect how his praises rang throughout this broad land for his bravery, his boldness and his courage; and when he is facing a hostile mob, a hostile crowd, surrounded by strangers, he is as bold as a lion, but when he returns to his City of Brooklyn, where he is all powerful, surrounded by powerful friends, one word from whose lips would have crushed any man who dared utter a false accusation against him, he is a coward. Ah! it is the cowardice of conscious guilt! The bravery he manifested in England was the bravery of truth—conscious truth and the justice of his cause. But here, surrounded by his church, upheld as no man ever has been by his church, in the city where he was all powerful—here he is a coward. What is it that makes him a coward? Conscious guilt. A million of minions, with their false accusations, could not frighten that man. [Murmurs of applause.] But one Tilton, with his truth, appearing before him, and he is a coward. No, gentlemen, I defend to that extent the reputation of the defendant. He is not a coward except when conscious of his guilt, and then we are all cowards. When conscious of his innocence he knows no fear, can face any danger, but his courage all vanishes in sight of the great crime that he has committed. No man can be brave, no man can be courageous when he sees before him a desolated home that he himself has made desolate. No man can be brave when he sees a once happy and loving wife and mother debauched and an outcast. No, in the presence of that man, he exclaims:

"Do with me as you choose; sacrifice me at your will—anything; I deserve it; I merit it. I offer myself up as a sacrifice to the man that I have so wronged."

But, gentlemen, this letter but breathes the spirit of all his letters upon this subject. Every letter, if written to Moulton in pure friendship, contains some allusion to this dark subject. On March 25th, 1873, he writes to Mr. Moulton, in which he says:

"I have been doing ten men's work this Winter, partly to make up lost time, and partly because I live under a cloud, feeling every month that I may be doing my last work."

He is living under a cloud, expecting that every month may be his last, because fearful and apprehensive that at any time this great secret should be made known, and if made known, that that would be the end of his usefulness. That is the way that he talked of this for a long time; and, as I will show you before I get through, was willing at any time to have vacated his pulpit, to have resigned his ministry, to have avoided the exposure of this secret.

During this time of which I am now speaking no other difficulty arose. As I said a little while ago, it has been a succession of difficulties to keep down this fact. They have had to resort, first to one device and another and another, and as one was put away another arose because of the impossibility of concealing permanently such a crime. Mr. Tilton had lost his situation. There was a penalty attached to the contract, and that had not been adjusted or settled; and Mr. Tilton had instructed his lawyers, Judge Reynolds of this Court, and Mr. Ward, to commence suit. That was another cause of alarm. Fearful that that would lead to the exposure of the secret the defendant was anxious that some measures should be taken to prevent a suit between Mr. Tilton and Mr. Bowen, and finally an arbitration was entered into, Mr. Claflin, Mr. Storrs, I think, and Mr. Freeland being the arbitrators. At the conclusion of that arbitration, or after that arbitration, another device was resorted to to keep down the scandal that was being put afloat at this time and others, and a covenant was entered into, signed by Mr. Bowen, by Mr. Beecher, and by Mr. Tilton, and I will call your attention to a sentence of the portion signed by Mr. Beecher.

"If I have said anything injurious to the reputation of either" (that is to Tilton or Mr. Bowen) "or have detracted from their standing and fame as Christian gentlemen and members of my church, I revoke it all, and heartily covenant to repair and reinstate them to the extent of my power."

Mr. Beach—When was that?

Mr. Morris—The 2d of April, 1872. As first prepared, the part of the covenant signed by Mr. Tilton made him deny that there were any charges against Mr. Beecher, so far as he was concerned. That he refused to sign, but did sign the part agreeing not to reiterate charges Mr. Bowen had made against Mr. Beecher, it having no reference to the charge that we are investigating now; but it was one of the devices resorted to to cover up guilt and prevent the exposure of crime. And bear in mind, gentlemen, that this covenant was signed on the 2d of April, 1872, a year and a half after the charge made by Mr. Tilton against Mr. Beecher of adultery, and in that he says:

"If I have said anything injurious to the reputation of Theodore Tilton," (putting it in the singular) "or have detracted from his standing and fame, as a Christian gentleman and member of my church, I revoke it all."

What, I ask, did he, on the 2d of April, 1872, revoke, as towards Mr. Tilton? And bear in mind, at that time Mr. Tilton had written the Woodhull biography. If Mr. Beecher had for that condemned him, he revoked it all. Bear in mind that before that Mr. Tilton had presided at the Steinway Hall meeting, at which Mrs. Woodhull delivered her lecture. If Mr. Beecher condemned Mr. Tilton for that act, on the 2d of April, 1872, he revoked it all. If Mr. Tilton had excited Mr. Beecher's indignation by proclaiming free love doctrines so that The Advance had to be started to supersede The Independent in the North-West, he revoked it all. Had he said that prior to this Mr. Tilton was bankrupt in character and morals; if so, on the 2d of April, 1872, he revoked it all. Had he charged Mr. Tilton with promiscuous immoralities, if so, he revoked it all. Had he told Mr. Bowen that he was not fit to edit The Independent, because of his free love doctrines, because of his promiscuous immoralities, because of his brutality to his wife, because of his denying the inspiration of the Scriptures and the Divinity of Christ; if so, on the 2d of April, 1872, he revoked it all. Had he accused Mr. Tilton, or charged him with having on the 30th of December, 1870, charged him falsely with an infamous crime:

if so, he revoked it all, and proclaimed solemnly that he was a Christian gentleman. All these things had transpired prior to the 2d of April, 1872, and if Mr. Beecher up to that time knew of or had said anything derogatory to the Christian character of Mr. Tilton, he revoked it all, he was a Christian gentleman. And, but a few days after, in his own paper, he says of him:

"Those who have known him best are the most sure that he is honest in his convictions as he is fearless in their utterance, and that he is manly and straightforward in the ways in which he works for what seems to him best for man and for society."

And this is the testimony of Mr. Beecher, of a man he now declares he then knew to have been bankrupt in morals and in character, to have been guilty of promiscuous immoralities, to have been allbertine! What think you, gentlemen, the defendant means by this conduct? As well may they attempt to argue that I am now talking to you in midnight darkness, rather than in the glare of the noon-day sun, as to attempt to give any other meaning to the conduct of the defendant in this case than that I have attributed to him!

WIDE LATITUDE IN INTERPRETING WORDS.

I will call your attention, gentlemen, here to another circumstance. Mr. Beecher says that when Mrs. Tilton made her confessions, she said that Theodore confessed his alien loves. To Mr. Moulton, Mr. Beecher said that Mrs. Tilton told him, that when she made her confession, her husband had made similar confessions to her. She was then excusing her having confessed to Mr. Beecher, and she makes this statement to him. When they speak of alien loves, so far as Mr. Tilton is concerned, they say it means adultery; when she says to the defendant she made similar confessions to him, it don't mean adultery!

THE WOODHULL-CLAFLIN STORY.

Now, gentlemen, I will proceed to examine some of the facts occurring in a later stage of the history of this case: On the 2d of November, 1872, was published in what is known as The Woodhull & Claflin Weekly, a story in which Mr. Beecher was accused of adultery with Mrs. Elizabeth R. Tilton. At the time that this publication appeared Mr. Tilton was absent from the city and absent from the State. He was in one of the New-England States, engaged in the Presidential campaign, when the story came out accusing his pastor with adultery with his wife. What did Mr. Beecher do in connection with that story, and with that publication; and what, if an innocent man, ought he to have done is the question that now concerns you. Did he, on that occasion, act as an innocent man, or did he on that occasion act as a guilty man? What ought he, as a Christian minister, to have done? Bear in mind, gentlemen, that he was accused of the crime of adultery with the wife of the man he declared but a short time prior to have been a Christian gentleman, and an honored member of his church! And he accused of adultery with the wife of a member of his church—what should he have done? What did he do? He did nothing. He waited until Mrs. Tilton returned. Aye, yes, he did! Because the very night of the publication of that story a meeting of his trusted members, some of whom afterwards figured on the Committee, was called together at the house of Mr. Halliday, and they are there informed that they had best take no notice of the story, but try and live it down—try and live it down—fearful that his church would take some action, would say to him, "This scandal must be investigated. Here you are charged with adultery with the wife of a member of this church, and she a member of this church," therefore, before any steps could be taken in that direction, this other device was resorted to. Another device, and that was to try and live it down. It may be that the church, it may be that the pastor of Plymouth Church, with his power, with a church that would stand by him right or wrong, guilty or innocent; it may be, with all this immense power, he could live it down, they could live it down, but how, I ask you, in the name of a kind heaven, could the woman live it down? You recollect, gentlemen—if you do not, I will state to you the fact—that after the publication of this story, there was a universal demand throughout the land—a universal call upon Mr. Beecher to speak but one reassuring word, and deny this charge. Every appeal that could be made for the cause of morality, for the sake of religion, by all that he held dear on earth, by every consideration that could be addressed to him, he was adjured to deny the truth of the story. But not a word, not a word. While the cause of religion was suffering from this scandal, and while the trusted member of his church was suffering in the estimation of all womanhood, he remained silent, as silent as the grave, and when Mr. Tilton returned, he induced him, or tried to induce him—him, himself—to publish this statement:

"In an unguarded enthusiasm, I hope well and much of one who has proved utterly unprincipled. I shall never again notice her stories, and now utterly repudiate her statement made concerning me and mine."

Was Tilton the man then to deny that story? who knew absolutely, unqualifiedly, whether the story was true or whether it was false? Mr. Beecher, and against him the charge was hurled and against a member of his church—what was his duty? What should an innocent man have done under such circumstances? Why, he would have branded it as false at the earliest possible moment. He would not have said, "I cannot do that because it proceeds from so low an origin." Oh! no. It was in the paper. I care not what paper, or what the character of the paper was; it was in the paper, and it was his duty, being innocent, to have denied the story and not stop to question its authority. But after that, it appeared in many respectable journals of the land, and those in which it did not appear united in the call upon him to say one word, and give one assurance that there was no truth in the story, that his friends in his behalf, and in the behalf of morality, might deny it. But, no; no denial, no denial. Very truly Tilton replied to him:

"You know why he sought Mrs. Woodhull's acquaintance. It was to save my family and yours from the consequences of your act, the facts about which had become known to her. They have now been published, and I will not denounce that woman to save you from the consequences of what you have done."

Why, I ask again, did he allow this pernicious story to go throughout the land, eating into his reputation, sully the cause of religion? Why did he do it? Why did he not deny it? Because a denial would have provoked contest on her part. It would have increased the discussion, it would have led to an investigation on the part of his church, and an investigation would have been ruin, because it is of it that he speaks, when he speaks of the difficulties to prevent the "tendencies which if not stopped would break out into a ruinous defense to me." Anything that tended to investigation—anything and everything that look towards developing the truth—was a ruinous defense to him, and that is what he means in his letter. And the difficulty of preventing that tendency, of stopping those tendencies without seeming to do it. What does that mean, "without seeming to do it"? Why, he could not say anything. If he did it would give it importance, and that would lead to disclosure, and therefore he remained silent. He could not say anything in behalf of Mr. Tilton to relieve him from the unjust odium that he has suffered during these four years, of being the slanderer of the pastor of Plymouth Church, because if he did, it would give point to the charge, and so he remains quiet and allows this story to go on uncontradicted, month after month, for six months, and at last he is compelled to deny it. And only when he is compelled to deny it because of fear of more serious consequences, does he hold his peace and say nothing concerning the publication of the truth or falsity of the story.

If your Honor please, it is four minutes ahead of the time of adjourning, but this is a point at which we can conveniently take a recess.

Judge Neilson—Gentlemen of the Jury, please be in your seats promptly at 2 o'clock, to which time we will now adjourn.

THE FIRST OF THE COMMITTEES.

The Court met exactly at 2 o'clock, pursuant to adjournment.

The Clerk called the roll of the jurors, and they all answered to their names.

Judge Neilson—Proceed, Mr. Morris.

Mr. Morris—GENTLEMEN OF THE JURY: I was calling your attention at the adjournment of the Court to the efforts made by the defendant to prevent an investigation into the facts connected with the Woodhull publication. Although that examination was delayed for a time, yet it was but a little while before a Committee was appointed, of which the defendant was a member. That Committee was appointed in December following the publication of the Woodhull story. Mr. Beecher had made efforts to have a statement made by Mr. Tilton for the purpose of relieving the story, as far as Mr. Tilton was able, of its odious features; and Mr. Tilton prepared a card, which was submitted to Mr. Beecher, which was designed for publication. In that card was quoted the language used by Mrs. Tilton in a letter written to Dr. Storrs. Mr. Beecher objected to the language in that card—the proposed card—which was, in effect, that he had solicited her to become a wife to him, together with all that that word implied, saying that the publication of such a card as that would be just as bad as to publish the entire *acts; and the card was not published, and no publication at the time was made with reference to it. I will not stop to call your attention to the precise language of the letter, that portion of it to which Mr. Beecher interposed his objection, but I have given you, I think, very nearly the exact language. Certainly, I have given you the exact idea, that Mr. Beecher had solicited her to be a wife to him, with all that that word or term implied. This, Mr. Beecher says, would be as bad as publishing the whole truth, the fact that he had not only solicited, but that he had accomplished his purpose; and it was with reference to this negotiation that was going on between these parties that Mr. Beecher referred when he said to his Committee, and as an inducement to have them delay action, that he had seen Mr. Tilton lately and that he would publish a card denouncing the Woodhulls. But the card was not published, and Mr. Beecher, when called upon by Mr. West, a member of that Committee, attempted to dissuade him from taking action with reference to the matter. He said to this Committee, when finally he met with them, that he believed that Theodore was one of his best friends; that he had never intentionally tried to injure him, and that by assuming a prudent course with him, they might yet save him and restore him to his former position of usefulness and influence in the church. This was December, 1872, after the publication of the Woodhull story, and he used this language toward Mr. Tilton more than two years after he had charged him with adultery with his wife; that he was one of his best friends, and that he had never tried to injure him. And as evincing his great anxiety concerning an investigation into the truth of the story that had been published by the Woodhulls, I would call your attention to one or two notes written by him to Mr. Moulton:

"Sunday, December, 1872" (the day of the month not given), "Your interview last night was very beneficial, and gave confidence. This must be looked after" (speaking of his interview with Mr. Halliday). "It is vain to build if the foundations sink under the effort. I shall see you at 10 o'clock to-morrow," etc.

And in another letter dated Monday, the day of the month and the month are not given, but at about that time, he says, in speaking of a conversation he had had with Mr. Claflin:

"I asked him if B. had ever made a statement of the very bottom facts. The real point to avoid is an appeal to the church and then a council. It would be a conflagration, and give every possible chance for parties, for hidings and evasions, and increase an hundred fold this scandal, without healing anything. Meantime I confide everything to your wisdom, as I always have with such success hitherto, that I have full trust for the future."

The real point to be avoided is an investigation on the part of the Church, and then a council. Such a proceeding as this would be a conflagration. What would make the conflagration but the revelation of the fact and the crime which we charge him with? Certainly no advice that he may have given Mrs. Tilton; certainly no counsel that he may have given Mr. Bowen; certainly no false charge would make a conflagration, because no man lived who dared make such a false charge against such a man, situated as he was. No; the conflagration would be the revelation of the truth that has been revealed, and that will be revealed now to you in this trial. Indeed, it has been a conflagration, but it has been a conflagration because the truth has come out. It is because the facts demonstrate beyond cavil the truth of the charge that has been made against Mr. Beecher, of his adultery with the wife of Theodore Tilton.

CARPENTER AND CLEVELAND AS PEACEMAKERS.

And why, I ask again, gentlemen, all this anxiety, all this plotting and planning, not only with Moulton, but with Tilton himself, the very man from whom they pretend they feared a false charge? He is plotting and planning with them in order to prevent the exposure of the secrets. The man who is to make the false charge you find in consultation with Mr. Beecher, you find in consultation with Mr. Moulton, and you find them all in conference together, devising cards, preparing cards, planning this movement and planning that movement to prevent an investigation into these facts, and yet they fear a false charge, and the man who is to make the false charge is busy during all these years and all this time trying to plan and plot how he will prevent himself from making that false charge. Such, gentlemen, is the logic of this case. Such are the extremities to which the defendant is driven, in order to attempt an explanation of his conduct. Shortly after this attempt to have this card arranged for publication, Mr. Carpenter, a man whom you know by reputation, a distinguished artist in the city of New York, who had known Mr. Beecher for many years, had been his friend of twenty years' standing—he called to see him, and he made them a proposition to Mr. Beecher designed to avoid the necessity of a public investigation. He said to Mr. Beecher that they were about starting a new paper in the City of New York, and that if he would take the editorship of that, he would be relieved from the dangers, or much of the dangers that surrounded him in his own church, this one and that one pressing for investigation and for explanation, and so favorably did Mr. Beecher think of that that he went with Mr. Carpenter around to Mr. Moulton's, and there discussed the matter, the feasibility of it, it being an opportune time, as Mr. Carpenter said. He had closed his twenty-fifth year of ministration his silver wedding had been had, and he could retire without exciting comment; and after considering the proposition for some time, he said to Mr. Carpenter: "I cannot accept it now, because it will be said that I have left because of the Woodhull publication—that they have driven me out of the pulpit;" and that was the reason, and that was the only reason given by him why he did not adopt the course suggested by Mr. Carpenter. This negotiation was continued for some time; parties went to see Mr. Beecher upon the subject—those who contemplated starting the enterprise—and the negotiation fell through, simply because Mr. Beecher was afraid of the comment that it would excite in consequence of the Woodhull publication.

And now, gentlemen, I come to a period in the history of this case, if possible more conclusive, more absolutely conclusive, against the defendant than any fact to which I have directed your attention—the period closing with the 23d of June, 1873. Within this period are contained facts and events that leave no possibility of doubt as to the truth of our charge and the guilt of the defendant. The covenant which I have called your attention to had been entered into on the 2d of April, 1873, but notwithstanding this covenant, Mr. Bowen was whispering these stories against Mr. Beecher, and another device had to be resorted to, and this time the device was to find an excuse for publishing the covenant as against Mr. Bowen, to stop his mouth, not as against Mr. Tilton to stop him, and for that purpose a plan was agreed upon, and this was the plan. Mr. Carpenter, to whom Mr. Bowen had repeated these stories, was in company with Mr. Claffin and Mr. Cleveland, and Mr. Moulton, to go and see Mr. Bowen, confront him with these stories, and unless he retracted them, to publish the covenant as against him. In pursuance of this arrangement, Mr. Beecher, on May 25th, 1873—a Sunday—sent Mr. Cleveland with his horse and buggy over to New York to hunt up Carpenter, and that night the interview was held with Mr. Bowen, in the presence of Mr. Carpenter, Mr. Cleveland, and Mr. Claffin; and Mr. Bowen not denying the charges that he had made against Mr. Beecher, the covenant was published. Mr. Beecher, on the same day that he sent his horse and buggy after Carpenter, writes a note to Mr. Moulton, in which he says:

"I sent Cleveland with my horse and buggy over to hunt Carpenter. Will you put Carpenter on his guard about making such statements. From him these bear the force of coming from headquarters."

At another time he says that the first he knew of Carpenter was that he was putting his nose in this business that did not concern him, and on Sunday, May the 25th, he is sending his horse and buggy scouring the City of New-York to find Carpenter, and bring him over here for the very purpose of this interview with Mr. Bowen. And if you look at the letters, the dates of the letters, and the conferences, and the plannings, and the plottings in this case from the beginning, four-fifths of it occurred on Sunday. Before church, after church, at Moulton's, at the church, at Mr. Beecher's, in different places, was this continual planning and plotting in order to prevent an investigation of this secret.

Five days after this conference was had at Mr. Bowen's the covenant is published, May 30, 1873, and the next day the parties came out in denunciation of Mr. Tilton as having been guilty of some great crime toward Mr. Beecher, and as having been magnanimously forgiven by him, and Mr. Beecher chided and blamed because he had not taken the parties into court, and had them punished as their crime deserved. Mr. Tilton said to Mr. Beecher:

"This I cannot, and this I will not stand any longer. You must relieve me of this injustice, or I will relieve myself. I will not, after having suffered this wrong, after having had my family destroyed, my wife debauched, I will not be held up to public odium as having committed a crime against you, and been magnanimously forgiven by you. Relieve me of this or I will relieve myself."

And on a Saturday morning, the day following, Mr. Tilton prepared this card for publication, which was exhibited to Mr. Beecher:

"To the Editor of the Brooklyn Eagle: Samuel Wilkeson, a business partner of Henry Ward Beecher, authorized the publication of a part of a document touching the relations of Mr. Beecher and Henry C. Bowen. This document, without the addition of another of which I presume Mr. Wilkeson had no knowledge, grossly misrepresents Mr. Beecher's relations to myself. The extent of this misrepresentation, even by well meaning journals, is shown by the following extract from the New York Express: 'Something under the circumstances was due to the public, Mr. Beecher should remember, as well as to his peculiar friends, Mr. Bowen and Mr. Tilton; and hence, while it was well enough to forgive them for the great, we had almost said irreparable, injury they have done him, it is to be regretted that he did not bring the alleged slanderer or slanderers into open court, to be dealt with as they deserved.' The above indicates the feeling of many hundred men and women as to my supposed unjust behavior towards Mr. Beecher, and is based on the notion that I slandered a clergyman, that I retracted the slander, that I have been forgiven by him and have been magnanimously restored to his confidence. This is the impression which is now becoming general, and is a grievous wrong to me and my family. No longer can I consent to remain in a false position before the public. I therefore append the following statement by Mr. Beecher."

Mr. Everts—What is the date of that?

Mr. Morris—The date of that is the 31st of May, 1873. Then follows the letter of contrition, with four or five words only stricken out, to which is added:

"The above document will show whether it is I who have wronged Mr. Beecher or Mr. Beecher who has wronged me, THEODORE TILTON."

This card was shown to Mr. Beecher on the same day by Mr. Moulton, and he was informed that unless he published a card relieving Mr. Tilton from the unjust odium cast upon him by the publication of the covenant, that he, Mr. Tilton, would publish this, and at the same time Mr. Moulton submitted to Mr. Beecher for his consideration a card which Mr. Tilton had prepared for him, Mr. Beecher, to publish. He had his choice—publish the card that was proposed or one similar for himself, or Mr. Tilton would publish this card in his own vindication.

MR. BEECHER'S LETTER OF RESIGNATION EXPLAINED.

You will perceive, gentlemen, that in this proposed card of Mr. Tilton, he makes no charge against Mr. Beecher. He accuses Mr. Beecher of no crime whatever. He does not say that Mr. Beecher has been guilty of adultery with his wife. He makes no charge, whatever, but he simply proposed to print the letter of contrition written by Mr. Beecher, on the 1st of January, 1871, that is all. He makes him his own accuser; he holds up before him his own written confession of guilt, and appalled by the prospect, bewildered at the idea of the publication of that letter, what does he do? He writes this:

"May 31, 1873. To the Trustees of Plymouth Church: I tender herewith my resignation of the sacred ministry of Plymouth Church. For two years I have stood with great sorrow amongst you, in order to shield from shame a certain household. Since a recent publication makes this no longer possible, I resign my ministry and retire to private life.

"HENRY WARD BEECHER."

With that he goes to Moulton on Saturday night, May 31st, 1873, and delivers it to him. Moulton then chides him and calls him a coward. He takes this card, Theodore Tilton being present, not in the same part of the house with him, but there at Moulton's—he takes this card, this letter of resignation, and shows it to Mr. Moulton. That is what Mr. Beecher proposed to do to end this.

Theodore Tilton turns to Mr. Moulton and says :

"If he publishes that with such a reason, I will shoot him on the spot. If he resigns his ministry with such a stain as that left upon my family, I will not stand it : I will not permit it. As well might he come out and confess at once, because that is a confession, and it would brand and blast my family.

"Among," says Mr. Beecher, "the last desperate efforts to restrain him from overwhelming himself, his family, myself, the Church, and the whole community with the fetid flood of scandal, which he had by this time accumulated, were those connected with the charges of Mr. West. * * Mr. Moulton insisted that everything must be done to prevent this trial, as the Examining Committee was likely to be equally divided, whether the facts sustained Mr. Tilton's plea, whether he was out of the Church or not. I was so determined to carry out my pledges to Moulton, for him, and do all in human power to save him even from himself, that I was ready to resign, if that would stop the scandal. I wrote a letter of resignation, not referring to the charges. It was not delivered. I considered that it would be a useless sacrifice to do it."

In connection with this fact let me call your attention to the fact that the charges referred to by Mr. Beecher as being the occasion for writing this letter of resignation, on the 30th of May, 1873, to wit, the charges preferred by Mr. West against Mr. Tilton, were not made until the 17th of the following October. The plea to which he referred as being the cause, and concerning which Mr. Moulton thought the Committee would be divided, was not made until the 20th of October following, and at the time that this letter of resignation was written the charges had not been made ; no steps had been taken concerning them. Talk had been had in the church with reference to investigating the facts connected with the Woodhull publication, in reference to Mr. Tilton's connection with the church after the publication of the biography, but the first notification that Mr. Beecher had, or intimation that these charges were to be preferred, was on the 26th of June, 1873, and the charges were made the following October, the plea the 20th of October. No, gentlemen, it was not to save Mr. Tilton from the investigation of these charges that Mr. Beecher wrote his letter of resignation and was willing to resign from Plymouth Church and retire to private life, but it was because Mr. Tilton was going to publish his letter of contrition which he regarded, and which is a confession of guilt; that is all. Mr. Tilton proposed to make no accusation against him; he made no accusation in this card; he made no charge whatever. He let Mr. Beecher be his own accuser. He says :

"I will publish that card, and all that it contains aside from the mere introductory portion of it is the letter of contrition."

Appalled at the prospect, driven to frenzy at the idea of that letter being made public, he writes his resignation, and offers to retire from Plymouth Church, and it was only the course taken by Mr. Moulton and the courage that Mr. Moulton infused in him on that occasion, that saved Mr. Beecher to Plymouth Church. On the 31st of May, 1873, Henry Ward Beecher would have ceased to be the pastor of Plymouth Church had it not been for Francis D. Moulton, of whom that very church subsequently cried out: "Kill him! kill him!" Do you doubt, gentlemen, what this letter of contrition refers to? Do you doubt its meaning and its import when the mere idea of its publication drove the author of that letter to resign from his church, from his position; willing to give up his ministry and retire to private life simply because a recent publication made it no longer possible for him to maintain these secrets? The publication he refers to was the "tripartite covenant," and the comment resulting from that, unfavorable to Mr. Tilton, and Mr. Tilton's administration at last, at last to relieve himself from this unjust odium, or compel Mr. Beecher to relieve him; and when that was brought to his mind, and he could see no way out of it at that time, wearied with his sufferings he determined to put an end to them in this way, by resigning his ministry and retiring to private life.

And on the following morning, June 1st, in utter despair and desolation at the prospect before him, he writes to Mr. Moulton this letter:

"The whole earth is tranquil and the heaven is serene, as befits one who is about to finish his world life. I could do nothing on Saturday; my head was confused." (Saturday was the day that his attention was called to the intended publication of that letter of contrition.) "I have determined to make no more resistance. Theodore's temperament is such that the future, even if temporarily earned, would be absolutely worthless, filled with abrupt changes, rendering me liable at any hour or day to be obliged to stultify all the devices by which we have saved ourselves. It is only fair that he should know that the publication of the card which he proposes would leave him worse off than before."

What is there in this card that was going to so affect Mr. Tilton? What is there in it that is going to leave him worse off than before? What is it that is going to leave him so badly off? Why, because the crime against his family will then be revealed. He now has the knowledge of it, but few know it. The publication of that card will leave him worse off, because that will reveal the fact that a blight has come upon his family, and a blight upon the children to which it attaches. That is why the card would leave him worse off than before. Better suffer now even as you are suffering than publish that card, because, if you do, you reveal the crime; in revealing the crime you blast your own family. "The agreement was made after my letter through you was written." This is the letter which, through him, was written; he had it a year.

"He had condoned his wife's fault. He had enjoined upon me with the utmost earnestness and solemnity not to betray his wife, nor leave his children to a blight. I had honestly and earnestly joined in the purpose, and this has been perverted."

What did he mean when he enjoined upon him with this earnestness not to leave his children to a blight? Why, he implored him not to make a confession, that would reveal the guilt, not to do as another faithful member of his church was advising him to do, make a confession to his church of the crime that he had committed. Mr. Tilton implored him not to make such a confession, because such a confession would leave his children to a blight. And that is what he means when he says that Tilton had enjoined upon him with the utmost earnestness and solemnity, not to betray his wife, nor leave his children to a blight.

"Don't confess your crime; if you do, you leave my children to a blight." He promised not to confess, and but for that promise, or but for that appeal, in all probability, he would have yielded to the appeal of another who counseled him to confess before his church, as he had stated he had confessed before his God, and obtain their forgiveness, as he professed to have obtained the forgiveness of his God.

"I shall write for the public a statement that will bear the light of the judgment day. God will take care of me and mine. But oh! that I could put in golden letters my deep sense of your faithful, earnest, undying fidelity, your disinterested friendship! Your noble wife, too, has been to me one of God's comforters. Therefore, there is no use in further trying. I have a strong feeling upon me, and it brings great peace with it, that I am spending my last Sunday and preaching my last sermon."

"I shall write a statement that will bear the light of the judgment day."

I shall confess before my Church and before the world the sin that I have committed, and end my earthly suffering by taking my own life. If the letter means anything other than this, I should like to hear it explained. "He had condoned his wife's fault." What had his wife done? What had she been charged with doing? What fault had she committed? His advice to her was no fault. Mr. Beecher's advice to his wife, favoring a separation, was no fault of Mrs. Tilton's that required condonement at the hands of her husband. "He had condoned his wife's fault." He had implored him not to leave his children to a blight. What was going to cast a blight upon the children but the one crime that we charge? That is the crime that would cast a blight upon the children, and the only crime that would. But, as I have said, gentlemen, on this occasion, on the 31st of May, 1873, Mr. Moulton saved Mr. Beecher to Plymouth Church. Now, in answer to the letter which was written, to which I have called your attention, on Sunday morning, June 1st, Mr. Moulton immediately sent a letter, from which I will read now but one sentence:

"June 1st.—I don't think it impossible to frame a letter which will cover the case."

On the evening of June the 1st, Mr. Carpenter, to whom I have alluded, attended Plymouth Church. After the service was over, Mr. Beecher called Mr. Carpenter aside and said to him in great anxiety, "Have you seen Theodore?" He replied, "No;" and then Mr. Beecher said, "He is going to publish my letter. Mr. Carpenter replied, "Well, what of it?"

The answer came, "It will be my ruin and his, too, because he cannot rise on my ruin." What, I ask you, in view of these accumulated and accumulating facts, does that letter refer to, the bare publication of which is going to destroy its authors and destroy the man for whom it was written? What does it mean? "It will be my ruin and his too." How will it be his ruin? How will it ruin either Mr. Beecher or Mr. Tilton, except there is but the one inference to be drawn from that letter? And there is but the one inference, and that is the existence of criminal relation between Mr. Beecher and Mrs. Tilton, the knowledge of which would ruin both, would cast a blight upon both, and ruin his family. After church he goes around to Mr. Moulton's in company with Mr. Carpenter, and on his way exclaims:

"I can bear anything but the suffering of others for my fault.

If Theodore will not do this thing, publish that letter, if he will withhold it, I will divide my fame and my fortune with him."

Oh! what terrible thing does this letter allude to that should induce such expressions, that should make him fear that the knowledge of its existence would bring ruin upon him? To suppress its publication he would divide his fortune and divide his fame. What, what I ask you, does it allude to? Need I tell you, as sensible, reasoning, intelligent men, that there is but one crime, but one domestic crime that a man can be guilty of that would lead to such consequences as the publication of this letter would have led, in the estimation of Mr. Beecher at that time? Well, he went around that night, the evening of the 31st of May, 1873, to Moulton's, his faithful friend and true, as Mr. Beecher said as late as the 8th of July last, putting his arms around his neck in the presence of Mr. Robinson—"God never raised up a truer friend to man than he."

BEECHER'S LETTER EXONERATING TILTON.

And this true friend, when he went to him in his sore distress and trouble, not knowing what to do, which way to turn, devised a mode of temporary escape, and instead of writing a statement that, as intimated in the letter of the 1st, would bear the light of the judgment day, this card is prepared:

"To the Editor of The Brooklyn Eagle, June 1, 1873. DEAR SIR: I have maintained silence respecting the slanders which have for some time past followed me. I should not speak now but for the sake of relieving another of unjust imputations. The document that was recently published bearing my name with others, was published without consultation either with me or with Mr. Tilton, nor with any authorisation from us. If that document should lead the public to regard Theodore Tilton as the author of the calumnies to which it alludes, it will do him great injustice. I am unwilling that he should even seem to be responsible for unjust statements whose force was derived wholly from others."

The unjust imputations referred to, in this card were that Mr. Tilton had slandered Mr. Beecher, had accused him falsely of committing crime, and had been forgiven by him. To relieve him from these unjust imputations of having done him a wrong he published this, and he says, in effect, "Mr. Tilton has not slandered me, Mr. Tilton has not wronged me, and I should be very sorry if the public should receive that impression, that he has slandered me, because others and not he, are to blame; he has not slandered me." This, gentlemen, was June 2, 1873. It was the day after the writing of the letter to which I have called your attention. It was two days after the writing of the letter of resignation. With the publication of that, Mr. Tilton was satisfied, and the card that he intended to publish was withheld. All that he asked was that he should not be held up in public as a slanderer against Mr. Beecher, when he had not slandered him; that he should not be put in the attitude of having been magnanimously forgiven by Mr. Beecher, when it was he who had shown the magnanimity towards Mr. Beecher. All that he asked was not that the secret be exposed, but that Mr. Beecher would say some word, however little, to relieve him from this unjust imputation. And when Mr. Beecher spoke the word that he did in that card on Monday, June 2, Mr. Tilton refrained from publishing his card, or rather refrained from publishing Mr. Beecher's own accusation against himself. As might naturally be expected, the publication of such a card from Mr. Beecher at such a time and under such circumstances caused a good deal of anxious inquiry on the part of members of the church. They could not understand why it was that Mr. Beecher should publish a card of that kind, relieving Mr. Tilton from the imputation of having slandered him, of having spoken falsely against him. They could not understand this, because at that time, June 2, 1873, or prior to that time, Mr. Tilton had published the Woodhull biography. Upon the publication of that, steps were taken in the church to have his name dropped from the roll of membership. He had presided at the Steinway Hall meeting, which had subjected him to a good deal of criticism. His letter to Bowen had been published, in which Bowen made certain charges of moral delinquency against Mr. Beecher. His letter to a complaining friend had been published, in which he said :

"So when you prompt me to speak for her, you countervail her more Christian mandate of silence. Moreover, after all, the chief victim of the public displeasure is myself alone, and so long as this is happily the case, I shall try with patience to keep my answer within my own breast, lest it shoot forth like a thunderbolt through other hearts."

His story to Mrs. Bradshaw had been told two years. Mr. Beecher was aware of the fact. Members in his church knew that that story had been told to Mrs. Bradshaw, that he had accused him directly with criminal intimacy with his wife. His criticisms upon Mr. Beecher's course had been published in The Golden Age, containing, among others, the following language

"To think one thing and say another; to hold one philosophy in public and another in private; to offer one morality to the multitude and keep another for one's-self, is a degradation of no man so much as a minister and a blot upon nothing so much as upon religion."

It was after all these things had taken place, it was after Mr. Tilton had done all these things, on the 2d of June, 1873, that Mr. Beecher published this card concerning him, relieving him from all these unjust imputations, giving it to be understood by the world that he had never injured him, never spoken untruthfully of and concerning him, which was the truth. So that you see, gentlemen, that it was the most natural thing in the world that Mr. Beecher's friends should be astonished, knowing the facts, knowing that Mr. Tilton had accused him of adultery with his wife, knowing that he had done these things, I say it was the most natural thing in the world that they should be astonished at such a letter at such a time from Mr. Beecher in regard to Mr. Tilton. But he had no alternative. Better to resort to that device, better bear the criticisms that that letter evoked, better bear the blame that that would call down upon him,—better do anything than have his letter—his own letter—published to the world. It would proclaim his guilt. It was to prevent that catastrophe that he consented to the publication of this card. He had no alternative—"Do that, or I will do this" was the command of

Mr. Tilton upon that occasion. Guided by the wise counsels of Mr. Moulton, he published this card.

THE PERPLEXITIES THICKEN.

For the moment, again, the storm had passed. The friend whom God had sent him in his sore extremity had with his hand again tied up the storm that was about to burst on their heads and on our heads, and again there was partial peace concerning this crime. But, as I have said before, it could not last long. Deeper and deeper was he being involved in difficulty. His extrication from one difficulty involved him in a still greater. Temporarily preventing the publication of this letter induced inquiry concerning its publication on the part of his friends and members of his congregation. So it goes on, step by step, one difficulty coming up after another, and as fast as one device is resorted to, another becomes requisite, until the difficulties at last so accumulate that no power on earth can prevent the storm. The hand that for four years had held the gathering storm, tied up at last, fell powerless by the side of his friend, and the storm came. And when the storm came, all the fury of the gale was attempted to be turned upon the head of this God-sent friend who for so long a period had stayed off the day of reckoning.

BEECHER'S DREAD OF WOMEN'S TONGUES.

Having allayed the excitement in the church, having prevented the investigation there, other difficulties come up. Steps are being taken to initiate a council, and in his anxiety to ward off the threatening dangers that were gathering about him, he again appeals to his friend :

"Sunday night," (no date) : "My dear friend : . The Eagle ought to have nothing to-night. It is that meddling which stirs up our folks. Neither you nor Theodore ought to be troubled by the side which you served so faithfully in public. The Deacons' meeting, I think, is adjourned. I saw Bell. It was a friendly movement. The only next near danger is the women Morrell, Bradshaw, and the poor, dear child."

And what was this danger? Mrs. Morrell knew and Mrs. Bradshaw knew this dread secret, and he was afraid that the poor, dear child, as he calls her, too, might talk ; might confess again. And it was from them that he apprehended danger. How to get rid of that, how to guard against that, he did not know. Always in these extremities, in these difficulties, he turns to his friend Moulton.

"If the papers will hold off a month we can ride out the gale, and make safe anchorage, and then, when once we are in deep, tranquil waters, we will all join hands in a profound and genuine Laus-Deo, for through such a wilderness only a Divine Providence could have led us undevoured by the open-mouthed beasts that lay in wait for our lives."

And all this about nothing ! All this because he had given, not injudicious, but judicious advice—advice that it was his duty to give.

"Sunday A. M.," no date—upon the same point—"Your interview last night was very beneficial ; it gave confidence. This must be looked after. It is vain to build if the foundations sink under every effort."

Your interview gave confidence ; your interview with Halli day last night gave confidence. How did it give confidence Why, by that faithfulness which characterized his course for four years, he had allayed Mr. Halliday's suspicions, and that had given confidence. That is the point that must be looked to. Under no consideration, under no circumstance must the truth be known, and whenever, by any device, whether by an evasive answer, or by a suggestion made by his friend, then he is sent of the Deity to protect and to serve Him! But, as I said, at last the charges came, and one specification of those charges is, that he had stated that he had discovered a criminal intimacy between Mr. Beecher and his wife, and the name of as respectable, as Christian a woman as lives in the City of Brooklyn was given as a witness. And with this fact upon the records of the Church, he has been denounced throughout the land as having preferred a false charge, and never until after the Investigating Committee was appointed, having accused his pastor with the crime of adultery with his wife.

There is the record, known and read of all connected with the church. Well, this charge made by Mr. West, not yielding to the counsels and the persuasions of Mr. Beecher, but actuated by a conscientious sense of his own duty in making the charge; here was another contingency to be met. Other devices must be resorted to to prevent this investigation, because if this investigation goes on, most assuredly the truth must come out. What device can we resort to? Again he turns to his God-sent friend Moulton, and the device is arranged and agreed upon by Mr. Beecher, by Mr. Moulton and by Mr. Tilton. And this is the device. Mr. Tilton is to write a letter stating that four years ago he had withdrawn voluntarily from the church, since which time he had not been a member, and therefore was not amenable to their process. Such a letter was written; and for that device, when Mr. Beecher the next day met him, he clasped him by the hands and exclaimed, "Theodore, God inspired you to write that letter." Well, that was a successful device. It prevented the investigation into the truth of the charge that Mr. West had made against Mr. Tilton of slandering the pastor of the church. But what was to be done in order to prevent, in the conclusion of that matter, any reflection upon Mr. Tilton? A simple preamble reciting the facts of his having voluntarily withdrawn from the Church, and then a resolution that the record be corrected in accordance with the fact was agreed upon.

TILTON'S CHALLENGE TO BEECHER IN PLYMOUTH CHURCH.

But on the 31st day of October, when the Committee were to make their report, Mr. Tilton hearing that a different report was to be made by the Committee and that he was to be placed in the attitude of having shrunk from his duty and of having avoided investigation or trial by this special plea of non-membership, wrote a letter to the Committee which was shown to Mr. Beecher, a sentence of which I will read:

Mr. Beach—What is the date of it?

Mr. Morris—31st of October, 1873. "I therefore say, first, I have never spoken against Mr. Beecher falsely; and second, if either he or the Committee shall request me to waive my non-membership and take my position once again as a member, I will do so long enough to appear this evening at the meeting to answer before the assembled congregation the following question from either Mr. Beecher or the Committee, namely, 'Have you, Theodore Tilton, ever spoken against Henry Ward Beecher falsely?'"

And he did go there that night and attended this meeting of Plymouth Church, and when the report was made reflecting upon him and putting him in the attitude of having slandered Mr. Beecher, and then of having failed to meet the charge by putting in the special plea of non-membership, he went there before the assembled congregation, and he said in the presence of that assembled congregation and in the presence of Mr. Beecher:

"I therefore have come here to-night, not from any obligation of membership, since I am not a member, and not summoned by your Committee, for no Committee has summoned me, (it was a mere notification), but of my own free will, prompted by my self-respect, and as a matter vital to my life and honor, to say in Mr. Beecher's presence, surrounded here by his friends, that if I have slandered him I am ready to answer for it to the man whom I have slandered. If, therefore, the minister of this church has anything whereof to accuse me, let him now speak, and I shall answer, as God is my judge."

What is the answer? What would have been the answer of an innocent man, and what the answer of a guilty man? Hear it:

"I desire to say further," says Mr. Beecher, "that I do not believe that Mr. Tilton has desired in any way whatever to shirk his proper responsibility, or to evade any proper charge that might be made by the Church. He asks if I have any charge to make against him. I have none. Whatever differences have been between us have been amicably adjusted, and, so far as I am concerned, buried. I have no charges."

On the 20th of July, 1874, the defendant declared that he could not delay for an hour to defend the reputation of Mrs. Elizabeth R. Tilton, upon whose name, in connection with his, her husband had attempted to pour shame. And yet, when the publication was made on the 2d of November, 1872, the defendant did not rush to the defense of the honor of this Christian woman. And when Mr. West, in 1873, charged that Mr. Tilton had charged him with having committed adultery with his wife, giving the name of the witness, he then did not rush to the defense of the honor of Elizabeth R. Tilton. She, a member of his church, charged with this crime. He charged with this crime with her, instead of coming to her defense, the defense of her honor, he resorts to every device that he can imagine for the purpose of avoiding the investigation, for the purpose of preventing the opportunity of vindicating her chastity, if he could, to keep the thing buried up, and, in his own language, "thought that the Church had better try and live it down," while her reputation for chastity remained under this cloud. No attempt, then, to defend the honor of Mrs. Elizabeth R. Tilton. And when these charges are made, coming from such a source as they did, the Church, anxious for an investigation, the opportunity then presented him of vindicating the honor of Elizabeth R. Tilton, does he do it? No; but he tries to prevent it by a trick, by a device of words, leaving her to rest under this charge of having been debauched by her own pastor! No attempt then to rush to her rescue. Too late now to say that he could not rest for one hour when her honor was attacked, but must rush to her rescue. Too late now to play that role of the defender of the honor of Elizabeth R. Tilton! The day is past. Years ago the opportunity was presented, because the charge was made against him when her husband was away in a distant State, when it was his duty, when he was called upon by every obligation of honor, of manhood, to defend, then, Elizabeth R. Tilton, and if the infamous charge was false to brand it as false. But he does not come. He is as silent as the grave, and so when opportunity after opportunity presents itself, she all the time resting under these charges and these imputations, instead of rushing to her rescue and defending her honor, he tries to prevent the opportunity, to set aside the opportunity in which he might defend her honor, and leaves her to sink lower and lower in the depths of infamy. Too late, I say, now, to play the role of defender of the honor of Elizabeth R. Tilton.

The following month, during November, 1873, preliminary steps were taken to call the council. On the 9th of November—Sunday—Mr. Beecher met Mr. Tilton at Moulton's, his friend, where he was in the habit of going almost daily, and he said, "Theodore, if you don't turn against me, Dr. Storrs can do me no harm." And during the council a criticism was made upon the conduct of Elizabeth R. Tilton in having accused Mr. Beecher, by a member of his own church, and the very thought of such a criticism at such a time against Mrs. Tilton and Mr. Tilton, filled him with horror; and he writes again to his friend Moulton (for he always turned to him in these hours of sore extremity) and he says—again it is Sunday—"Sunday night"—all these plottings and plannings, pretty much, were the work of the Sabbath:

"My dear Frank, is there to be no end to this trouble? Is wave to follow wave in endless succession? I was cut to the heart when C. showed me the shameful paragraph from The Union. Its cruelty is beyond expression. I felt like lying down and saying, 'I am tired, tired, tired of living or of trying to resist the devil of mischief.'"

Every person who did anything that seemed to point to an investigation or a development of these facts was the devil of mischief.

"I would rather have a javelin launched against me a hundred times than against those that have suffered so much, but there are some slight alleviations. The paragraph came when the public mind was engaged with the council, and with Theodore's letters. I hope it will pass without further notice. I must be again, as I have heretofore been, indebted to you for judicious counsel. On this new and flagrant element my innermost soul longs for peace; if that cannot be, for death."

And so you see, gentlemen, the terrible anxiety and terrible agony that every step, that every movement, that everything that is done tending to bring out the facts in this case, causes Mr. Beecher. I have not read the whole of this letter; I will leave some portions of it, as it is not necessary to do, in presenting my view, until we present it formally in proof.

Still later he writes another letter to Mr. Moulton, in which he says:

"Mr. Storrs has determined to force a conflict, and to use one of us to destroy the other, if possible. I am in hopes that Theodore, who has borne so much, will not consent to be a fiail in Storrs's hands to crush me."

In the Spring of 1874, of the charge of adultery, made the 30th of December, 1870, he writes this letter to Mr. Moulton, and says he hopes that Theodore, "who has borne so much, will not consent to be a fiail in Storrs's hands to crush me." And after the council was ended that had given so much trouble, and so much anxiety and so much fear, then again arose another difficulty—a difficulty this time more formidable than all the others.

THE CULMINATING POINT—DR. BACON'S LETTER.

It was a difficulty that finally culminated in the exposure, and was the means of bringing us here in this Court, and before this jury. After the adjournment of the Council, unfavorable criticisms, as after the publication of the "tripartite covenant," were made against Mr. Tilton, and he was held up to the world as one of the worst of men, the creature of Mr. Beecher's magnanimity, and he (Beecher) the most magnanimous and generous of men. Again Mr. Beecher is appealed to to stop this cry, but again his courage fails him, again he manifests his cowardice, because to say to these men who were thus accusing Mr. Tilton, to say to Dr. Bacon: "Don't say that about Theodore, it is not true, it is not correct;" or, "Don't abuse him, it is not right; he has done nothing that justifies that abuse. I have wronged him; I have given him cause, don't say that; stop, please, stop, please, stop your abuse." He dare not do that; he had not the courage to do it, because Dr. Bacon would then have said: "What has this man done that he now takes blame upon himself, and that he now receives, and after all that has been said, and after all these years that he now comes forward and relieves Mr. Tilton?" He could not do it. You see, gentlemen, he could not do it. No, he had not courage to do it, and he let the thing float along, taking the chances. It could not be worse. To do that would place him in the awful position of having done wrong, and these men, then, would renew their inquiry and their energy to ascertain what the truth was, and he stood paralyzed, appalled at the prospect that was before him, and at last, unwilling to do anything to relieve Mr. Tilton, Mr. Tilton relieved himself. He published the Bacon letter that has now become historic, and ever will be. And what was the point in that letter that rang throughout Christendom? What was it that brought on this consternation? What was it that made the Christian world stand aghast? What was it? Any charge that he had made against him? Oh! no, he simply said he had been guilty of an offense against him and his family some years ago, but the people paid no attention to that. The press made no comments upon that. That they didn't look at. An offense! The word was indefinite, and that was not the thing that caused such a commotion, that caused such excitement, that caused everybody to ask every person he met, "What does this mean? What great crime has Mr. Beecher been guilty of?" What was it? Oh, it was only a quotation from the letter of contrition! A few lines from that letter—a few lines written by Henry Ward

Beecher himself sent dismay throughout the land. People said and people believed that the great preacher of the land had fallen, and that he had sinned against the commandments, that he had sinned against the precepts of our Savior—that he had committed adultery with a member of his own church, that he had debauched the wife of his bosom friend. What was it? What was it that sent this consternation throughout the land? It was Henry Ward Beecher accusing himself, standing before the world as his own accuser. Do you still doubt, gentlemen, to what that letter refers? Do you still doubt, in the face of the facts that I have already presented to you, that our charge is true, and that Henry Ward Beecher did debauch the wife of Theodore Tilton, the plaintiff? Do you doubt it? If you do, still I have hope, because I will yet present to you evidence still more conclusive, still more overwhelming. I don't mean to leave this case until you are convinced. We don't mean to leave this Court until we go out vindicated. We don't mean to leave until justice has been vindicated, and until a proper malediction, by your verdict, shall have been given to this crime, this great crime that has been committed by Henry Ward Beecher against the peace, against the family of Theodore Tilton, and against the morals of the world.

[To the Court.] If your Honor please, I can close at the morning session, I think, without occupying the whole of it. I have been sick and laboring under a great deal of pain for two days, or I should have closed to-day. I will ask about an hour in the morning.

Judge Neilson—I can appreciate the very great labor that rests upon the counsel, of course, still I was very desirous that you should have closed to-day, if you could.

Mr. Morris—I would like to have an hour in the morning. I am not physically able to conclude my opening now.

Judge Neilson—I will say to the counsel that I have handed to the foreman some tickets of entrance for his friends. [To the jury.] Gentlemen, you will remember the injunction I have heretofore given you as to this case, and the importance of your not conversing about it with each other. Please attend to-morrow morning here punctually at 11 o'clock.

THIRD DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

MR. MOULTON UNDER OATH.

CLOSE OF MR. MORRIS'S OPENING ADDRESS—THE COURSE OF PLYMOUTH CHURCH DENOUNCED BEFORE MANY OF THE MEMBERS—MR. CARPENTER'S TESTIMONY TO BE VERY IMPORTANT—AUGUSTUS MAVERICK THE FIRST AND FRANCIS D. MOULTON THE SECOND WITNESS.

Mr. Morris closed the opening address in the Brooklyn scandal suit on the morning of Jan. 13, and two witnesses were called to the stand—Augustus Maverick and Francis D. Moulton. Mr. Morris reviewed the proceedings of the Plymouth Church Investigating Committee after the publication of Mr. Tilton's letter to the Rev. Dr. Bacon, and contended that every act of Mr. Beecher in connection with that inquiry was virtually an admission of guilt. He referred to two of the witnesses for the prosecution—Francis B. Carpenter and Francis D. Moulton. The announcement that Mr. Carpenter would testify that Mr. Beecher had confessed guilt to him was a surprise to every one. After recess Augustus Maverick gave unimportant testimony in relation to Mr. Tilton's marriage; and then Mr. Moulton was examined by ex-Judge Fullerton. His testimony related to the first meeting between Mr. Tilton and Mr. Beecher at his house, the circumstances under which the apology was written, and the subsequent interview between himself and Mr. Beecher. Mr. Moulton will resume his testimony to-day.

ELEMENTS OF THE AUDIENCE.

Mr. Tilton's friends were in the gallery on Wednesday, Jan. 13; Mr. Beecher's in the seats back of the lawyers' tables. One might almost have imagined that it was a Friday night prayer-meeting, so numerous were the representatives of Plymouth Church. Besides Mr. Beecher and Messrs. Shearman and Hill, there were the Rev. S. P. Halliday, Roswell S. Benedict, Abijah Whitney, Elliott C. Davidson, B. G. Carpenter, Wallace E. Caldwell, E. A. Studwell, Moses K. Moody, Wm. B. Smith, George Christensen, Jas. H. Watson, Mr. Bullard and sons, Jacob B. Murray, Edward J. Ovington, Henry M. Cleveland, Capt. Eldredge, Prof. R. W. Raymond, Horatio King, Moses S. Beach, and many more. Mr. and Mrs. Beecher were thus surrounded by their friends, and breathed a Plymouth Church atmosphere. They entered the court-room quietly, and took seats slightly to the left of those which they had occupied on the previous day. A bouquet of flowers was awaiting them on one of the tables, Mrs. George Christensen repeating the attention which she had previously shown. Their two sons were on their left. Henry M. Cleveland, a member of the Investigating Committee, was on the right, and Augustus Storrs, another member, the Rev. S. B. Halliday, Prof. Raymond, and E. J. Ovington were close at hand. Mr. Morris's address was virtually an arraignment of Plymouth Church as well as of its pastor, and this body-guard from the Church seemed to be drawn together by an instinct of self-protection. The denunciations of the policy of the Church, and of the hollowness of the investigation were received with a cynical smile, and when Mr. Moulton faced the audience from the witness-stand, many a brow in the Plymouth section of the house was clouded, and there were fierce glances of hostility, which reminded one of that stormy session in Plymouth Church when the report of the Committee was adopted, and one man was hissed and hissed.

Mrs. Tilton was accompanied by Mrs. Anna M. Field and Mrs. Thomas G. Shearman, and was escorted to the court-room by Edward J. Ovington and ex-Judge Morse. The two ladies and Mrs. Tilton's father-in-law sat apart from Mr. and Mrs. Tilton, nearly in the center of the room. Mrs. Tilton's slight, retiring figure is a foil to the more commanding presence of Mrs. Field. Before the proceedings opened there was a buzz of conversation in this part of the room, and Mrs. Tilton chatted gaily with her friends, now and then glancing timidly in the direction of her husband.

He sat alone some distance off, with his back turned and his eyes riveted upon the jury-box. His attention is absorbed in this case and he wastes no side-glances upon his estranged wife or her pastor. He rarely smiles, and his features are as calm and immutable as Mrs. Beecher's. Ex-Judge Fullerton sat between him and Mr. Moulton during the morning session. In the afternoon Mr. Tilton was the center of the circle of his counsel, and made frequent suggestions to them.

Mr. Tilton's counsel referred several times in a sneering way to the spectators as "Mr. Beecher's audience," and even threatened to bring in their own body of partisans at the next session. During the recess the tables of the counsel were moved, and it was charged that the Plymouth Church body-guard were driving Mr. Tilton's counsel into a corner near the bench. Although Mr. Tilton had only one friend close at hand besides his counsel, it was evident that he had many partisans in the audience, for when Mr. Morris concluded, the applause, although it was instantly checked, was emphatic and hearty. It came mainly from the galleries.

Among the spectators were the Rev. Mr. Maynard, the Rev. Mr. Eddy of Jersey City, the Rev. Mr. Buckley, the Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, Alderman Ripley Ropes, Police Captain McLaughlin, County Treasurer Gardner, Sheriff Williams, ex-Senator Pearce and Senator Murphy. Mr. Talmage shook hands heartily with Mr. Beecher.

The spectators throughout the session stared at the four principal actors in this scandal tragedy. The impression is a very natural one that innocence and guilt cannot look alike, and that the features of Mr. Beecher and Mrs. Tilton on one side, or of Mr. Tilton and Mr. Moulton on the other, will, under the tension of excitement, betray the stifled secret of treason and self-loathing. Every partisan in the court-room—and outside of the bench and jury-box nearly every spectator is a partisan—is confident that he detects, unerringly, the traces of innocence or guilt in the upturned faces of the three men and the one woman. The "Tiltonite" points at Mr. Beecher, and whispers: "That face is flushed with shame; his saddened, careworn features are a confession of guilt. And Mrs. Tilton, too, shrinks back for fear of detection!" The "Beecherite," on the other hand, shakes his head as he glances at Mr. Tilton, and rejoins, in an underbreath: "There is an unrestful spirit beneath that marble calm, and his restless eyes are fired with recklessness. And Mr. Moulton—bah!" The truth is that two of the actors in this dramatic scene wear masks which fit so closely that no one can look behind them. The four faces seem to tell the same story of innocence, weariness, and anxiety. The treason and sin which must breed nightshade in two of those souls are repressed and hidden away. The jury cannot decide this case on the merits of these faces.

There was a crush in the court-room, morning and afternoon. About 3,000 applicants were turned away from the doors, and every foot of space inside was occupied. After running the blockade of the corridors the spectators were unwilling to surrender their places at noon, and the gallery lost its lunch, read newspapers during the intermission, and when the proceedings were resumed listened with unabated interest. One or two near-sighted people had opera-glasses, and used them to the annoyance of the central figures in this court drama. Judge Neilson, who has treated the audience with great indulgence, is evidently losing temper, and has intimated that there will be fewer spectators if his warnings pass unheeded. The morbid curiosity of the spectators and loungers in the corridors was illustrated at the adjournment of the proceedings at noon and at night. Files of people stood in the hall, and when the ladies appeared followed them pell-mell to their carriages. A window leading to a wide balcony in the rear of the Court-house was opened, and men and boys rushed out to take advantage of this coign of vantage until the balcony was black with spectators who were anxious to watch the departure of the ladies. On the sidewalk a small group soon became a restless, vulgar crowd of starers. Such curiosity as this should be tempered with decency.

MR. MORRIS'S PERORATION.

Mr. Morris resumed his address soon after the opening of the court, and spoke for an hour and 20 minutes. His voice was clear and his delivery very effective at the outset, and although his hoarseness increased, his impassioned sentences lost none of their power. His denunciations of the Investigating Committee as constituted and managed with the single aim of stifling investigation, and his passionate accusation that Plymouth Church had falsified and suppressed its records, were delivered in ringing tones which set the teeth of the members of that Church on edge, and brought flushes of anger to their faces. Mr. Cleveland, at Mr. Beecher's elbow, could not control himself, but overcome with excitement moved about restlessly in his chair. Mr. Morris referred in the next breath to the mysterious Redpath negotiations in Boston, in which Mr. Cleveland once took great interest, and the agitation of Mr. Beecher's neighbor was stimulated. As Mr. Morris referred to the crisis in the Tilton household, when Mrs. Tilton deserted her husband and went to live "with the friends of her seducer," the lady's face flushed. But harder things were yet in store for her, such as the passage toward the close: "Let the words 'death and destruction to the seducer' be written over every door in the land."

In reading the statement which Mr. Beecher wished to have Mr. Tilton make before the Committee, the speaker's voice had a soft, sneering tone which contrasted favorably with the passionate invectives which preceded and followed the passage. His brief summary of the strongest points against Mr. Beecher was evidently modeled after the recapitulation in the second statement of Mr. Tilton. He then brushed aside the suspicions that his client could have made a false charge of this nature, and ingeniously quoted passages from Mr. Beecher's correspondence and writings in which a high opinion of Mr. Tilton was expressed. Mr. Moulton was introduced as a witness with similar skill by the citation of portions of Mr. Beecher's letters in which his trust in his mutual friend was warmly acknowledged. The "Plymouth section" smiled satirically when Mr. Moulton was enlogized as one who "had stood between the public and the truth, damming up the truth," until he was charged with blackmail. All this time Mr. Moulton was twirling his mustache, his face betraying some annoyance when an indirect reference was made to the revenue complications of his firm. Mr. Morris made perhaps his most ingenious turn when he quoted a splendid passage from one of Mr. Beecher's sermons, delivered 20 years ago, in which an ideal adulterer and his victim were vividly portrayed. When he announced the author's name, Mr. Beecher made no attempt to conceal his amusement. The peroration was delivered so ably that applause was inevitable, although it was soon checked by the Judge's frown.

MR. MOULTON AS A WITNESS.

At the close of the opening argument a recess was taken until 1:30 o'clock. The common impression was that Theodore Tilton would be the first witness after the intermission, although a few lawyers predicted that the prosecution would steal a march upon the defense by taking Mr. Beecher by surprise. Ex-Judge Fullerton, after an interchange of remarks about the accommodations of the counsel, abruptly called Augustus Maverick to the stand as the first witness. Mr. Fullerton, who conducted the examination, has a full, florid face, with prominent cheek-bones and light hair and mustache. His questions are asked with such directness and simplicity that the witness is encouraged to maintain his self-possession and to answer clearly. He stands erect, with his eyes half-closed and his fingers twirling an eye-glass. An objection from the opposing counsel stirs his blood, and his replies are sharply and quickly made. His work with the first witness was soon ended, for the questions related merely to the marriage and early domestic life of Mr. Tilton.

When the name of Francis D. Moulton was called a buzz of expectation ran through the court-room. There was no response, and the spectators noticed that Mr. Tilton was sitting alone. Ex-Judge Fullerton remarked that Mr. Moulton had been compelled to go to his house to fetch some papers, and would be in the court-room before long. The "Plymouth section" chuckled over this, intimating by their smiles and nods that they had found Mr. Moulton rather uncertain in his movements during the past Summer, and that his tardiness was in keeping with his character. In 10 or 15 minutes he entered the room and quickly took the witness-chair, laying a package of papers on the floor beside him. Mr. Beecher looked him in the face, and during the remainder of the session rarely lost sight of him. Mr. Moulton crossed his legs, folded his arms in the Napoleonic manner, and looked at the audience, but so many eyes met his gaze that his face reddened and he manifested some nervousness. He swung from side to side, took a knife from his pocket and played with it, straightened himself and then drummed with his fingers on the arm of the chair. His voice was clear at the outset, and it was evident that he intended, if he could, to answer the questions with prompt, business-like precision, like a man of the world. The first impression which he made was rather favorable, his answers being frank, unstudied, and unaffected; but the pauses between the words soon became longer, and some of his rejoinders were given in a lisping, careless manner. When he identified the letters he was studiously careful, subjecting every page to rigid scrutiny, and only assenting after he had called them back and glanced at them again.

His testimony was a repetition of certain portions of his second published statement with a few variations, but every word was listened to by the audience as if it was a fresh thing instead of a stale scandal which the world has learned by heart. After an animated passage between the counsel in reference to a section of Mr. Tilton's famous letter to Mr. Bowen concerning Miss Proctor, the court adjourned until this morning, when the witness will be recalled.

No official report of the trial is being made by the court or lawyers on either side, and yesterday, as on every former occasion when reference to the language of jurors or witnesses became necessary, Judge Neilson directed THE TRIBUNE stenographers to read the language called for from their notes. THE TRIBUNE's report is, therefore, the authority for the court and lawyers alike.

A TRUCE TO LEGAL ASPERITIES.

At the close of the proceedings on Wednesday, Jan. 13, neither counsel nor audience were permitted to leave the court until the jury had retired. The jury once outside of the court-room, there was a rush made for the doors by all the crowd except those who occupied seats in the immediate vicinity of Mr. Beecher, who lingered. It was while the crowd was thus hastily dispersing that a remarkable incident took place.

Mr. Beecher, with a good-natured smile and his usual genial manner, left his own counsel and stepped across the room to the table at which Mr.

Tilton's counsel sat, and reaching across it, saluted Mr. Beach, and then shook his hand. Mr. Tilton, with a stern expression upon his face, stood at this moment within two feet of the clergyman, but did not look in his direction, although he must have heard every word that was uttered.

"If," said Mr. Beecher to Judge Beach laughingly, "if I get out from between the paws of two such lions as you and Fullerton, I'll believe I am innocent, and that is what I came here to find out."

"You forget," said Mr. Beach, pointing to Mr. Evarts, "the Daniel standing among the lions, and closing their mouths."

Mr. Beecher placed one hand on Mr. Shearman's shoulder, and the other on Mr. Evarts, and remarked in a jocular way, "my lions are very harmless animals." Then turning to Mr. Morris he said, "Let me present myself to you, Judge Morris."

The ex-Judge very coldly replied, "Mr. Beecher."

The pastor of Plymouth Church was not to be repulsed in this way and continued:

"I notice that you lawyers, like preachers, know how to deliver long sermons."

There was a slight tinge of sarcasm in Mr. Morris's tones as he retorted. "Yes, Sir; I had a long story to tell."

Mr. Evarts joined in the conversation at this moment, and playfully said:

"Mr. Morris, I noticed that you expatiated only on those things which were against our side."

Mr. Morris answered in the same pleasant manner:

"I thought you could attend to the other things much better than I."

By this time the counsel were surrounded by a large crowd of curious listeners, among the number Mrs. Beecher and several members of Plymouth Church. Mr. Morris was on the point of leaving when Mr. Beecher again addressed him:

"Judge Morris, you should have come to me for a point or two. I could have 'put you up' to some things which would have made your speech appear very different."

Mr. Morris made no reply, and Mr. Tilton for the first time shot a quick glance in which mingled hate and scorn were expressed at the speaker, and then turned to Gen. Pryor. That gentleman had been listening to the conversation with an unmistakable look of disgust on his sharply cut features. Addressing Tilton, he made a brief remark in a contemptuous tone of voice, and the two left the court-room together. Mr. Fullerton did not take part in the conversation, but looked on with an amused expression.

In the mean time Mrs. Tilton and her lady friends had left the court-room. It was several minutes, however, before Mr. Beecher and Mrs. Beecher could get away. After shaking hands with several in the crowd, they retired through the rear entrance to the Court-house. They were followed to the sidewalk by an immense crowd of men and boys, who jostled and stumbled over each other in their anxiety to catch a glimpse of the defendant and his wife.

In the crowd were many who, having been denied admission to the court-room, had stood in the cold corridors for hours determined to gratify their curiosity in some way. Mr. Beecher and his wife entered a carriage, and were driven rapidly away; and yet the crowd lingered on the sidewalk for several minutes after. Mr. Tilton and his counsel proceeded to Judge Morris's office for the purpose of arranging the letters to be introduced in Mr. Moulton's testimony.

THE PROCEEDINGS.

At the reassembling of the Court, on Wednesday, in the Tilton-Beecher case,—it being the eighth day of the trial, and the third day of Ex-Judge Morris' opening address for the plaintiff—Mr. Morris began on the last subdivision of his subject, namely, a resume of the events of the last eighteen months in the scandal, which are so familiar to everybody, embracing the doings of the go-betweens and "the mutual friend," the letters to newspapers, and the proceedings of the Church Committee.

THE LETTER OF CONTRITION THE SPARK THAT LIT THE BLAZE.

IF THE COURT PLEASE, GENTLEMEN OF THE JURY, I shall not detain you much longer in what I have to say to you. At the adjournment of the Court yesterday, I was calling your attention to the efforts that had been put forth by the defendant in this case to prevent an investigation, on the part of his church, into the charges of immoralities, which had been made against him, and I had also called your attention to the fact as to how unavailing, during the four years that have passed, have been all the efforts to bury up the fact that we now present to you. As I stated, one difficulty after another presented itself, and no sooner had a threatened investigation been averted by some trick, by some device, than another difficulty arose, and thus they continued to accumulate until at last the dread secret had to be made public: and I had called your attention to the manner in which it was made public, not by a charge against Henry Ward Beecher, but by simply publishing a part of Mr. Beecher's letter of contrition, which was accepted by everybody almost as being a confession of guilt. The publication of that portion of the letter of contrition aroused such a spirit of inquiry both in and out of the Church, that finally Mr.

Beecher was compelled to take action with reference to the matter, and on the 11th day of July, 1874, was published a letter addressed to six gentlemen, three of his congregation and three of the society, requesting them to make a thorough investigation in reference to the letter of apology or contrition; and you must remember that when that letter was published in the papers, with what satisfaction it was received by the friends and advocates of Mr. Beecher. "At last," they say, "we are to have the truth. At last he has taken steps to have a thorough investigation. Now we will know the truth. Now we will know the foundation for these rumors that have been floating about for the last four years. Now we will have a settlement for ever of this matter."

That letter was dated prior to that, on the 27th of June, I think. On the 6th of July Mrs. Tilton, without the knowledge of her husband, without any intimation that a Committee had been appointed, or was contemplated, goes before the Committee and makes a statement. At this time the plaintiff knew nothing about the appointment of a Committee at all, if one was appointed then; and on the morning of the 11th of July Mrs. Tilton abandons her home and seeks shelter with the friends of her seducer; and on that same day this letter is published, and until then, until she had appeared before the Committee, as she stated to her husband, until they had secured her, the letter was not published. Gentlemen, she but followed out the natural course in all such cases. The woman leaves her husband and takes shelter either with, or with the friends of her paramour. But, gentlemen, I call your attention to the very fact and circumstances of the appointing of this Committee as evidence of the guilt of the defendant. Had he been innocent of the charges preferred against him, or had he not been guilty of the crime that we now allege, what would have been his course? What would have been the course of any innocent man seeking a thorough and complete vindication of his character? He would have called upon the regular authorities of the church to have instituted the proceedings. He would have notified the parties who had charges to make to appear before that Committee and attend its investigation; and he would have appeared by the privilege of the party's appearing by counsel if he appeared by counsel.

A SEVERE IMPEACHMENT OF THE CHURCH COMMITTEE.

And yet what do we behold with reference to this investigation? Mr. Beecher naming his own Committee, selected from his own personal friends, the accuser having no voice in it—not even the church, except indirectly, was called upon by him to sanction his action. From that investigation the plaintiff is excluded. Before those six friends of Mr. Beecher appear a number of learned and astute lawyers, Mr. Tilton not being permitted to be there and cross-examine witnesses, or to be present to hear what they had to say; and I say, therefore, that the very fact that this Committee was constituted as it was, managed as it was, shows that a thorough and truthful and honest investigation into the facts was not the purpose of the appointment of that Committee. Had a Committee been appointed as it should have been, had the plaintiff been accorded the rights that should have been accorded to him in that investigation, had he been treated with judicial impartiality, or with any degree of fairness, we would not have been here to-day in this tribunal, you would not have been called upon to discharge the solemn and important duty that you will be called upon to discharge in this case. But with that one-sided and partisan Committee, with their denunciatory report against the plaintiff, in which report the records of the church of which they were members were falsified and suppressed, when he was denounced by this friendly Committee appointed by the defendant to vindicate him at all hazards, and to denounce and convict the plaintiff at all hazards, there was no alternative left but to bring him face to face before an impartial court, before an honest and impartial jury. He did not want this suit brought here. He went to the Committee and he appealed to them to bring him in court. They refused to do it. He did not want to bring this action, because it was necessary that he should claim pecuniary damages. It was the only mode of redress left him. He wanted them to indict him for slander, if he had slandered, and take all the risk and all the chances of a conviction, assuming all the burden upon himself. They declined.

But, after this case was commenced, and in October last, the 1st of October, the defendant goes before the Grand Jury and procures an indictment against Mr. Tilton for libel. From that day until we came in Court here with this case, we have been beseeching them, imploring them, making our appeals to them, making our appeals to the court, to bring on the indictment, but they would not, and there was no alternative left, and we brought our action here, and before you we will bring our evidence, before you we will bring our wrongs, the wrongs that we have suffered, to you we will present our broken home. Before your face we arraign the seducer of our wife. Before you we arraign the man who has brought upon us all this desolation, and from you we expect the justice that has heretofore been denied us. Aye, we know that we shall receive it, because our cause is just, and God is with the right! But, gentlemen, notwithstanding this Committee was appointed by the defendant in this action, it was not the design, it was not the purpose that the facts should be made known to that Committee when it was appointed. As the defendant declared, that was not a step of his own choosing, but he was driven to it by his church. He had to do something, and having to take some step, he had selected the men himself, whom he declared could be managed and controlled; and in his estimation upon that point he was not deceived.

DEFENSIVE PLOTTING.

But, again, as I have said before, in this, his hour of extremity, he turns again to his friend, and another device was hit upon but not successfully carried out. After the Bacon letter, Mr. Moulton prepared a statement for Mr. Beecher to make to his congregation, which he promised to make if he said anything, Mr. Moulton advising silence; and in that proposed statement, he acknowledged that he had committed an offense against Theodore Tilton; but he concludes:

"I have committed no crime, and if this Society believes that it is due to it that I should reopen this already too painful subject, or resign, I will resign."

That statement was not made because of the criticism made by an astute lawyer that adultery was not a crime at common law, and therefore that statement did not fully meet the question and cover the ground; and from the time that this Committee was appointed, from the time that the Bacon letter was published, on the 24th of June, 1874, down to the 16th of July following, we find Mr. Beecher in consultation with Mr. Moulton day after day, time after time, writing him letters with reference to the matter. On the 10th of July he writes him a letter wanting to see him. On the same day he writes another letter requesting him to come around to his house to assist him. On the following Monday he writes another letter, and on July the 18th he writes still another.

"My dear Frank: I will be with you at seven, or a little before. I am ashamed to put a straw more upon you, and have but a single consolation, that this matter cannot distress you long, as it must soon end; that is, there will be no more anxiety about the future, whatever regrets there may be about the past."

Still later Mr. Moulton presented to Mr. Beecher a short statement prepared by Mr. Tilton for the Committee to make: he, as anxious then as ever, as anxious as Mr. Beecher himself, to prevent the exposure of this secret, which must bury his family in ruin, and in this proposed statement for the Committee he said:

"The Committee respectfully report that upon examination they find that an offense of grave character was committed by Mr. Beecher against Mr. and Mrs. Tilton."

Mr. Beecher wanted to know if Mr. Tilton would be satisfied with such a report as that made by the Committee. If Mr. Tilton would be satisfied with such a report, he would be satisfied, and, as this states, settle the matter without having the facts made public. Where, then, at this time, was the anxiety to defend the honor and fair name of Elizabeth R. Tilton? It was universally known and believed that that matter and that letter of contrition had reference to her and that her honor and her character were involved in the matter, whatever it was; and, yet notwithstanding two years prior to that this horrible story had been published by the Woodhulls, and no denial and no defense made by Mr. Beecher of this Christian woman, a member of his church, and when after that Mr. West repeats the charges in a formal manner, devices are resorted to to prevent the defense of this woman's fair name and her honor, and at last when the formality of selecting a committee of known and tried friends was gone through with, he is willing by such a statement as that, on acknowledgement that he had been guilty of an offense against Mr. and Mrs. Tilton of a grave character, to let it rest there, and, as he said before, try on his part and the part of the church to live it down. But what in Heaven's name was to become of the woman? No anxiety then to defend the fair name of Elizabeth R. Tilton; and I repeat again, as I did yesterday, that it is too late to play the role of defender of the fair name and honor of Elizabeth R. Tilton by a defense in this action.

But that is not all. When Mr. Beecher was informed that

Mr. Tilton was preparing a statement to make before the Committee presenting the facts—his letter of contrition—what does he do? Again he turns to his friend Moulton for aid and assistance, and, taking counsel together, another device was hit upon. Mr. Beecher, with his own hand, after the appointment of the Committee, after they had commenced the investigation, when he knew that Mr. Tilton was preparing his statement, with his own hand writes a statement for Mr. Tilton to make before that Committee, based upon a prior statement which he, Mr. Beecher, was to make, exonerating Mr. Tilton and doing him justice.

This is Mr. Beecher's proposed statement for Mr. Tilton to make, which I hold. The statement of Mr. Beecher being read, and if striking favorably, then a word sent substantially thus to the Committee:

"I have been three years acting under conviction that I have been wronged, but was under the imputation of being the injurer. I learn from a friend that Mr. B. in his statement to you has reversed this and has done me justice. I am willing, should he consent, to appear before you with him, and dropping the further statements which I felt it to be my duty to make for my own clearance, to settle this painful domestic difficulty, which never ought to have been made public, finally and amicably."

And that is the disposition that the defendant proposes to make of this case! Is that the disposition that the Christian world expected? Is that the disposition that the Christian world had a right to expect would be made of this case? The name of a minister standing so high, his garments soiled, the most infamous charges made against him, of having seduced the wife of his life-long friend, and a member of his church—she also a member of his church—a child who had grown up under his eye; I say, is that the disposition that a Christian world had a right to expect would be made of that matter? Is it possible to explain that consistently with innocence? Would Mr. Beecher, if an innocent man, have, under any circumstances, submitted to such a disposition of the case as that? Had he been an innocent man, and such a disposition as that had been proposed to him, would he not have hurled the proposition back with indignation and said: "What do you mean by thus insulting me? I am charged with adultery with the wife of my friend; my fair name is sullied; my sacred robes are soiled. I have said to the world that I mean to have a full and complete investigation into this abominable charge, and now you come and propose such a covering up, such a burying up of the fact as that. Away with you!" That would have been the action of any honest man, with the eyes of the world, you may say, turned toward this Committee. No question then was engrossing the attention of this land, at least so much as the investigation and the facts that were expected to be elicited by that Committee. The friends of Christianity were hoping for the vindication of Mr. Beecher. Every well-wisher of his country was hoping and praying for the deliverance of the pastor of Plymouth Church. And had he been innocent, he would have thrown open the doors wide to the world, and he would have said, not only to Tilton, but to others who had insinuated or made charges against his moral character, defying them all, "Bring your proofs; meet me face to face before this Committee." No, no. The very parties who knew the facts, and the very parties who could establish the truth of the charge, were not requested to appear before the Committee.

MR. BEECHER'S ACTS INCONSISTENT WITH THE DEFENSE.

Now, gentlemen, I have, thus far, principally called your attention to the case as made out by the defendant himself, adverting to some oral testimony, but principally to the case as made out by the defendant himself, by his own acts, by his own language, by his own letters and writings and statements. And how stands the case now? Is it necessary that I should go still further in the development of this case in order to convince you of the truth of the charge that we bring against him? If it is, I begin to despair of human testimony. We say that in the facts that I have presented to you he has confessed his guilt; leaving out the verbal testimony; leaving out what he has said to other parties, that he has confessed his guilt as clear as it is possible to make it without using the vulgar words, without clothing the confession in vulgar language, it is made as clear as possible to make it in the English tongue. When he said on the 1st of January, 1871, that he had sinned and transgressed with Mrs. Tilton, he confessed his crime really. And when on the 7th of February he said that it was Moulton's hand that had tied up the storm that was about to burst on their heads in that terrible emergency of his life, he confessed his criminal intimacy with Elizabeth R. Tilton. And when he said that he passed sleepless nights and suffered the torments of the damned, that he spent much of his time in the horror of great darkness, and lived on the sharp and ragged edge of anxiety, remorse, fear and despair, he confessed his criminality with Elizabeth R. Tilton. And when, contemplating suicide for the crime that he had committed, he confessed his criminality, for suicide is confession, and the contemplation of suicide is confession. When he wrote to Moulton that Theodore had enjoined upon him not to betray his wife or leave his children to a blight, it was a confession that he had been guilty of a crime with her, the exposure of which would leave his children to a blight, and that was the crime of adultery. I might prolong this recital, but I will not do it, gentlemen. For the past four years he has been confessing his guilt, if English language means any thing.

INSTRUCTION TO THE JURY.

But, gentlemen, we do not rest our case upon the testimony furnished by Mr. Beecher himself alone. We go further than that; we will put upon the stand Mr. Carpenter, whose veracity I apprehend will not be questioned in this Court, and to him, we may say, Mr. Beecher made his confession. But, gentlemen, we shall not stop there; you will hear Mr. Beecher's story and you will hear the plaintiff's story. They are both interested in this transaction, and you will take that fact into consideration in weighing their testimony. Certainly no man in this case has so deep an interest as has the defendant. These facts you will take into consideration—they are both in-interested parties and you will give their evidence such weight as you think it entitled to. And, gentlemen, let me call your attention in this connection to one fact, that when you weigh the testimony of a witness you will look and see the motive there may be for departing from the truth. You see the motive that the defendant has, that this crime be concealed? What motive can you suggest, what motive will my learned friend suggest? None has been suggested up to this time that I am aware of—none has yet been conceived. What motive will they suggest why Theodore Tilton should have made a false charge against Henry Ward Beecher—Theodore Tilton a man of culture, of education, of refined feelings, poetic temperament, a man bold, a man truthful, a man loving his family as but few men love their families—I ask the other side to give a motive, if they can, why Theodore Tilton, thus situated, would make a false charge against his wife of such infamy that would bequeath to his children that he loved, as only a father can love, a heritage of shame and disgrace, and while added to all that he should drag down his own name in infamy by making a false charge against his life-long friend, his revered pastor?

Out with such miserable presumptions! Let fools thus trifle with human intelligence; it does not belong to reasoning men!

MOULTON THE GUARDIAN ANGEL IN THE CASE.

No, gentlemen, you have seen in the recital that I have made, that, so far from his wanting to make a false accusation, notwithstanding the great wrong that he had suffered, notwithstanding the wound that he had received in his heart, he so loved his children that he was willing to bear his suffering and conceal the wrong that had been done to him and his family; and you have seen the devices that he resorted to in connection with the defendant and with Mr. Moulton, whose mission it was to keep this secret from the public knowledge. No, gentlemen, I will not detain you any longer upon that point; it would be a waste of time. Mr. Beecher has himself given the lie to any such insinuation, and when on the 1st of January, 1871, he humbled himself before Theodore Tilton as he did before his God, and called upon God to put it into his heart to forgive him, it put forever out of the question that he was fearing a false charge. And when he said:

"I wonder if Elizabeth knows how generously Theodore has borne himself towards me. I wish to God that we three could be made friends again. Theodore, in that case, would have the hardest task."

He put for ever out of consideration the idea that it was a false charge that he was afraid of. And when, on the 2d of April, 1872, two years or two years and a half after this accusation was made against him, he said:

"If I have said anything injurious to the reputation of Theodore Tilton, or have detracted from his standing and fame as a Christian gentleman, I revoke it all. God knows that I have put more thought, and judgment, and earnest desire into my efforts to prepare a way for Theodore and Elizabeth than I ever did for myself a hundredfold."

And when he said to her, "Theodore will hide you in his heart of hearts," he forever set at rest the insinuation that he was afraid of a false accusation. "If my destruction would prepare a way for him that shall not stand in the way;" those who know him best are sure that he is honest, that he is manly, that he is straight-forward, that he is generous. He is a Christian gentleman, large hearted, forbearing, long suffering, honest, manly and straight-forward, and that is the introduction that the defendant gives to the plaintiff when he goes upon the stand to tell his sad story to you of the past five years.

But, gentlemen, we go still further than this. We shall put upon the stand, Mr. Moulton, about whom you have heard so much in all this transaction, this friend whom the defendant said God had sent to preserve him, to tie up the storm that was about to burst upon his head—this man who stood by the defendant for four years with a fidelity, with a constancy unparalleled, No sacrifice on his part was too great to make in order that he might save from shame and from disgrace the innocent parties involved in this crime. You must recollect that after the appointment of the Committee, and the Committee wrote Mr. Moulton a note requesting him to present certain facts before them—you must recollect that the press throughout the land said, "Now we will have the truth; here is a man in whom both parties have confided for four years; here is a man who has stood the mutual friend of both parties; all the facts connected with this transaction he knows; he is the friend of both, having no interest to either; let him speak, and as he speaks so will the truth be declared."

He was looked upon and regarded at that time by the whole country as the arbiter in this matter. Had he spoken then, when the public expected him to speak, and when he ought to have spoken, you would not have been here to-day, we would not have been here to-day, Mr. Beecher would not be the pastor of Plymouth Church to-day. But, with a faithfulness, as I said, unparalleled, notwithstanding he would subject himself to the criticism of the whole land by withholding the statement that he had promised to the country, yet he did withhold that statement at the solicitation of the friends of Mr. Beecher. He yielded to their pleadings, "Give him one more chance; give him one more chance"—and Moulton, as the friend, the loyal friend that he was, stepped in the breach again. He stood there between the public and the truth, damming up the truth from the public. He withheld the statement; he did give him one more chance. And then the astute lawyers, seeing their opportunity, and seeing that in the end the truth must come out, the statement must be made, have the defendant make a statement in which they accused him of blackmailing the defendant. And you recollect that that charge was rung from one end of the country to the other. People's attention was diverted from the facts, the investigation of the case, and they cried out, "Blackmail! Blackmail!" They had performed the office of the cuttle fish; they had thrown this cloud over the minds of the people, and under the cover of that they expected to escape the just criticism that the crime deserved. Well, after this charge had performed its office, it was dropped. Not even this friendly committee, selected for the purpose, had hardihood enough to consider that charge. No: it was not true, and as the defendant declared the following October upon the Twin Mountains, "A million times no—a million times no:" Francis D. Moulton is not a blackmailer.

And even then, after the first statement had been made, with all these facts presented, knowing what still remained, knowing in his own heart and soul that Francis D. Moulton told the truth, and would tell the truth with reference to this matter, he opens, even at that late day, a negotiation in order to take Mr. Moulton out of the case, that all the batteries might be turned upon Theodore Tilton, defenseless and powerless as he was, that he might be crushed and go down with the ruin of his family. For that purpose communication is opened with him, and his agent, Mr. Cleveland, is sent to Boston with full documentary power to act conclusively in his behalf in negotiating with Mr. Moulton. Upon what basis was this negotiation to proceed? With the charge of blackmail resting upon him? No. That falsehood was to be retracted. Mr. Moulton was to be set right before the community, and Mr. Tilton was to be left to fight this battle alone. But it failed. It failed. Oh! the efforts that have been made in this case to suppress the truth and to prevent an honest investigation of the facts! But, thank God! we are now before this tribunal, and we will have the facts, and we will have the truth, and we will have an honest verdict, and we will have an honest condemnation of the crime that has been committed against my client.

Why, gentlemen, do you want any additional evidence that Mr. Moulton was intrusted with the secret relating to Mr. Beecher's moral delinquency? I will give it to you, collated in brief form, a small portion of it, and but a small portion of it. He says—

Mr. Beach—Who?

Mr. Morris—Mr. Beecher. On February 7th, 1871, he says:

"I send you a token, not as a repayment for your great kindness to me, for that can never be repaid, not even by love, which I give you freely. Many, many friends has God raised up to me, but to no one of them has he ever given the opportunity and the wisdom so to serve me as you have. My trust in you is implicit."

Same date:

"The friend whom God has sent to me (Moulton) has proved, above all friends that ever I had, able and willing to relieve me in this terrible emergency of my life. His hand it was that tied up the storm that was ready to burst upon our heads."

"Sept. 30, 1871.—My heart warms to you, and you might have known that I should be here, if you loved me as much as I do you. I am, my dear Frank, truly and gratefully yours."

"Feb. 5, 1872.—During all this time you are literally all my stay and comfort. I should have fallen on the way but for the courage you inspired, and the hope which you breathed. I am well nigh discouraged. If you, too, cease to trust, to love me, I am alone. I have not another person in the world to whom I could go. With sincere gratitude for your heroic friendship, and with sincere friendship, even if you love me not, I am yours, though unknown."

"Feb. 16, 1873.—Should any incident befall, remember how deeply I feel your fidelity and friendship, your long continued kindness and your affection. I confide everything to your wisdom, as I always have, with such success hitherto, that I fully trust for the future."

"June 1st, 1873.—The pain of life is but a moment; the glory of everlasting emancipation is wordless, inconceivable, full of beckoning glory. Oh! my beloved Frank, I shall know you there and forever hold fellowship with you, and look back and smile at the past!"

"July 7th, 1873.—My dear Frank: The country is beautiful, the birds as good to me as David's harp. I only need some one to talk to, and that one is you."

"July 14th, 1873.—My dear Frank: For a thousand encouragements, for services that none can appreciate who has not been as sore-hearted as I have been, for your honorable delicacy, for your confidence and affection, I owe you so much that I can neither express nor pay it."

I will not stop to call your attention to all.

"My Dear Frank: I have this morning got back, and want to send my love to you and yours. God bless you, my dear old fellow."

And, referring to him again, he says: "He is worthy of all confidence. He is worthy of all trust."

"December, 1873. This will be handed to you by my friend, Frank D. Moulton, whom I believe to be high minded and honest, and whose statements should be received by all who know him with implicit confidence."

"December 3d, 1873. I believe him to be honest to the core. I would trust him with life and property, without scruple."

"December 30th, 1873. Mr. Frank Moulton I have known for years, and I should as soon believe that I myself had set on foot stealings and cheatings as that he had, or had had the slightest suspicion of it."

"July 16th, 1874. My Dear Frank, I need to see you."

This, gentlemen, is a portion of the testimony of Mr. Beecher with reference to Francis D. Moulton, the man who, on the 31st of December, 1873, saved the defendant to Plymouth Church, made him take back the letter of resignation which he took to Mr. Moulton and delivered to him, retiring from the ministry to private life, because simply he feared the publication of his own letter of confition.

A VIVID PAINTING OF THE CRIME CHARGED.

Oh, well might he stand aghast, at the exposure of such a crime as he had committed! I will not attempt to portray to you the heinousness of that crime, but I will read an extract or two from an author much more capable of judging, and who can draw the picture much more vividly than I can draw it:

"The seducer! Playing upon the most sacred passions, he betrays innocence. How? By its tenderest faculties, by its trust, by its unsuspecting faith, by its honor. The victim often and often is not the accomplice so much as the sufferer, betrayed by an exorcism which bewitched her noblest affections, and became the suicide of her virtue. The betrayer, for the most intense selfishness, without one noble motive, without one pretense of honor—by lies, by a devilish jugglery of fraud, by blinding the eye, confusing the conscience, misleading the judgment, and instilling the dew of sorcery upon every flower of sweet affection—deliberately, heartlessly damns the confiding victim! Is there one shade of good intention, one glimmering trace of light? Not one. There was not the most shadowy, tremulous intention of honor. It was sheer, premeditated, wholesale ruin from beginning to end. The accursed sorcerer opens the door of the world to push her forth. She looks out all shuddering; for there is shame and sharp-toothed hatred, and chattering slander, and malignant envy, and triumphing jealousy, and murderous revenge—these are seen rising before her; clouds full of fire, that burn but will not kill! And there is for her want, poverty and gaunt famine. There is the world spread out. She sees father and mother heartlessly abandoning her; a brother's shame, a sister's anguish. It is a vision of desolation, a plundered home, an altar where honor and purity and virtue and peace have been insidiously sacrificed to the foul Moloch. All is cheerlessness to the eye, and her ear catches the sound of sighing and mourning, walls and laments; and far down, at the horizon of the vision, the murky cloud for a moment lifts, and she sees the very bottom of infamy, the ghastliness of death, the last spasm of horrible departure, the awful thunder of final doom. All this the trembling, betrayed creature sees through the open door of the future, and with a voice that might move the dead, she turns and clasps his knees in awful agony. 'Leave me not! Oh! spare me—save me—cast me not away!' Poor thing—she is dealing with a demon! Spare her? save her? The polished scoundrel betrayed her to abandon her, and walks the street to boast his hellish deed. It becomes him as a reputation. Surely society will crush him! They will smite the wolf and seek out the bleeding lamb. Oh! my soul, believe it not! What sight is that? The drooping victim is worse used than the infernal destroyer! He is fondled, courted, passes from honor to honor, and she is crushed and mangled under the infuriate tramp of public indignation. On her mangled corpse they stand to put the laurels on the murderer's brow! When I see such things as these, I thank God there is a judgment, and that there is a hell."

Twenty years ago, gentlemen, that was the utterance of the defendant in this case; and, oh! how true, how true the judgment is, what a strange, what a striking coincidence! On the 1st of January, 1871, he says of his victim: "She is guiltless, sinned against, bearing the transgressions of another." "The victim often and often is not the accomplice so much as the sufferer." When we see that language in the letter of contrition that she is guiltless, proved that she could not have been guilty of adultery, we turn to the utterance of the defendant himself, which will stand as his condemnation upon that point. And, oh! how true, and how true have been all the prophecies of this prophetic statement, how they have been fulfilled, how the door of the cold world was opened, and how it was said that this poor woman has been so weak, so wholly subject to the strongest outside influence at the moment, that the general public can give but little weight to her testimony either for or against Mr. Beecher. And, again, that her conduct cannot be defended upon any principle of human accountability. She is the sufferer, she is the sufferer, while the seducer is here portrayed as fondled, as courted, as passing from one honor to another, and she is crushed.

"If to be the thrall of love
And faith, too generous to defend Itself from him she loved, be sin,
What hope of grace may the seducer win?"

AN ELOQUENT APPEAL TO THE JURY.

Gentlemen of the jury, I feel that I have detained you already too long; I certainly have detained you too long for my own strength and my own health; but I felt it my duty to present to you the considerations that I have presented to you, and if I have exhibited any warmth in the presenting of them to you, you will pardon me, I am sure, because I come to you with a heart full of grief and full of sympathy for the suffering and the wrong that my client has endured. I thank you, gentlemen, for the strict attention that you have paid to the imperfect presentation I have made of this case. I regret, for the interests of my client, that this duty had not devolved upon one of my abler associates; yet I have the satisfaction of knowing that I have brought to the task a conscientious devotion to the interests of my client, that nothing but a firm conviction of the justness of his case could have inspired. Oh! gentlemen, what a scene is this, what a spectacle we behold here to-day! On the one side you see a man of vast prosperity, surrounded by powerful friends, with unlimited resources. On the other side you see a man powerless and poor, coming to you from a desolate home. Already he has been made the victim of a foul charge, then the victim of a foul slander, and then again the victim of a foul persecution, unparalleled for power and relentlessness. And what has he done? Why, he was the chance possessor of a loving and beloved wife, of a happy and of an innocent home, which his bosom friend, his life-long bosom friend, his pastor, his spiritual adviser, taking advantage of that friendship, taking advantage of his absence and taking advantage of his sacred calling, has dispossessed and despoiled him of. That home is desolated, the hopes of that family blasted, the pillars of that household have been pulled down upon the idols of his worship, and nought but desolation reigns there! Oh, gentlemen, you who have children, you who know what it is to return from your daily labors to the bosom of your happy family, can appreciate the wrong and the suffering that my unhappy client has endured; but it is to you, as fathers, and as brothers, and as husbands, that we come without case, and as you love your homes, as you love your families and your children, as you regard the sacredness of your homes and as you reverence virtue and respect the sanctity of the family altar, I call upon you in the name of all that has been violated, I call upon you in the name of Christianity by the teachings of the Saviour upon the Mount, by the law thundered from Mount Sinai, by every consideration that is near and dear to us on earth, I call upon you to brand the seducer as his crime deserves to be branded.

Let it be written on every door throughout the land: "Death, destruction to the seducer;" and when you have rendered that verdict you will receive the prayers and the blessings of every virtuous mother and of every virtuous daughter in the land, and a peaceful conscience will follow you through life, will be with you in the last solemn scenes of earth, and console you when at last you stand with your life record before the ever-living God. [Applause.]

This closed Mr. Morris's address—the delivery of which took two and a half days—the last words being spoken at 12:20 o'clock.

Mr. Fullerton—May it please your Honor, it will subserve the convenience, I think, of all parties connected with this controversy if your Honor will now take a recess until 2 o'clock. We will, meanwhile, prepare our evidence, and then commence to give it.

Judge Neilson—Whatever time you say.

Mr. Everts—I rose, if your Honor please, with a view of suggesting that, as the business of the trial is now to commence, an arrangement of the tables should be made that would seem to us more suitable for the convenience of the counsel on both sides of the case, and the recess will now give an opportunity to have that arrangement made if we agree upon it.

Judge Neilson—I will leave the arrangement of the tables to yourselves, gentlemen. [To the Jury.] Gentlemen, we will now take a recess until two o'clock.

THE TAKING OF TESTIMONY BEGUN.

At 1:30 o'clock the Court re-assembled pursuant to adjournment.

Mr. Morris—If your Honor please, we will have to make some different arrangements here as to tables. I think that one table fixed, for instance, as it was when we were getting the jury, will be more convenient. Your Honor will see that, with four or five counsel here in this space of about six feet by three, with their clients, it is utterly impossible to proceed with this case. We can't do it; it is simply an impossibility, that is all.

Judge Neilson—I made no order about that. I left it to counsel to arrange, hoping that they would do so and suit themselves mutually on both sides.

Mr. Morris—Judge Porter makes a suggestion which I think would relieve the difficulty.

Mr. Porter—I see that it is utterly unfair to my friends to be compressed within this little circle. We ought to have some arrangement by which we can be within earshot of the witnesses, and by which they can have their friends around them. It seems to me that the suggestion of Judge Morris is the best, just to change that table and put it here. We all want to see and hear. It is very desirable to us that we shall hear your Honor and hear the witnesses.

Judge Neilson—Will you gentlemen arrange that?

Mr. Evarts—If your Honor please, the difficulty is made by the fact that there is not space enough given to the plaintiff's counsel, not at the table, because they have space enough, and not in sufficient proximity to the jury and the witnesses, for they surpass us in that respect in every degree. Their farthest man is nearer than the nearest of ours. It is that they have not space enough about them. I agree that that is the difficulty. That difficulty is made by the presence of the reporters' table, which does not happen to be here and is there. If it were here, we should be cramped just as much as they are. Now, your Honor sees that this plan of giving a line at right angles to two sides to each set of counsel gives more opportunity within convenient space than any other arrangement can do, but it brings us out here into the room, and we need therefore to compress a little the arrangements of the reporters. That is all. I have no tenacity about the arrangements. What we want is the space.

Judge Neilson—I have no doubt the gentlemen will agree among themselves how to arrange it. They can appreciate that better than I can. Mr. Beach, how do you think it would do if that table were turned, leaving a space between the two tables.

Mr. Beach—Well, Sir, I never have been so conveniently situated as when we had the two tables, one for each counsel.

Mr. Evarts—The difficulty there was that the table for the plaintiff was very satisfactory, but the intervention of two rows of counsel, and then our table removed beyond that, threw us quite in the rear.

Judge Neilson—What do you think, Sir, if the table is turned the other way and a space left between the two?

Mr. Beach—That is quite immaterial to me.

Judge Neilson—I think that is Judge Porter's idea, Sir.

Mr. Evarts—I think Judge Porter's idea was to take this table and put it longwise.

Mr. Beach—That brings my back, when I write, to the jury.

Judge Neilson—Supposing that were turned the end this way; you have two or three feet then between the two tables.

Mr. Morris—I would make this suggestion. There are some tables in the other room—narrower tables than these—and I think if two were brought in and one set up close here for one side and the other as near as they are now anyway, and take these two cumbersome tables away—

Judge Neilson—You might do that this afternoon, but we could not do it at this moment.

Mr. Morris—But it is an impossibility. Here we are in a space about four feet by six.

Judge Neilson—That must be remedied. I don't know how to do it now.

Mr. Morris—Could not this gentleman [referring to a reporter] take a seat somewhere else so as to have a little space there? We are willing to do everything for the reporters that we can, but we must have some room.

Judge Neilson—[To the Reporter] See if there is a place where your table can be moved to. If your table were over towards the wall there, you would be quite in hearing, would you not? I think if we should build a gallery perhaps it would be better.

After a few minutes spent in arranging the seats of counsel and reporters, Judge Neilson said:

Judge Neilson—The audience will please come to order.

The clerk called the list of jurors, and all answered to their names.

Mr. Fullerton—Shall I proceed, Sir?

Judge Neilson—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Fullerton—Augustus Maverick.

TESTIMONY OF AUGUSTUS MAVERICK.

Augustus Maverick, called and sworn on behalf of plaintiff:

Q. By Mr. Fullerton—Mr. Maverick, where do you reside?

A. In this city, Sir.

Q. Have you been a resident of Brooklyn long? A. About 15 years, with an intermission of a year, I think.

Q. Are you acquainted with Theodore Tilton? A. I am, Sir.

Q. How long have you been acquainted with him? A. Upwards of 20 years.

Q. Were you present at his marriage? A. I was, Sir.

Q. When did it take place? A. On the 2d of October, 1855.

Q. Where? A. At Mr. Beecher's house.

Q. And who performed the ceremony? A. Mr. Beecher.

Q. The defendant in this case? A. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Evarts—All that is admitted by the pleadings.

Mr. Fullerton—There are some things that I desire to prove that are not admitted there.

[To the witness]—Have you been intimate with his family since his marriage? A. Not for the past six or seven years, not to say intimate. I have been in the habit of going to the house occasionally, but for the last five or six years only very occasionally.

Q. After his marriage were you intimate with him and his family? A. Yes, Sir, for a number of years?

Q. Do you know how many children there were or are of that marriage? A. I don't know the present number, Sir.

Q. Do you know they have children? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Where did Mr. Tilton reside first after his marriage when he commenced keeping house? A. I cannot say where he first resided on going to keeping house, but the first that I visited him after he began to keep house to my knowledge was at his present residence—that is, 174 Livingston-st. That is the first of my actual knowledge of his housekeeping.

Q. You did not visit him at any other place where he kept house? A. Not while they were housekeeping; no, sir.

Q. How frequently did you visit him after his marriage? A. Very seldom; I made an occasional visit; I cannot say that I was upon visiting terms, that is, to be in the habit of frequent and intimate visits; it is not my custom with any one, and he was in the same position.

Q. State, if you please, who he married? A. Elizabeth Richards.

Q. Was she a resident of Brooklyn? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Fullerton—That is all.

Mr. Shearman—Wait a moment, if your Honor please.

Mr. Evarts [after consulting with his associates]—We have nothing to ask.

Mr. Fullerton—That is all, Mr. Maverick. Francis D. Moulton.

Mr. Morris—He has gone after some papers, and is not present.

Mr. Fullerton—Mr. Moulton forgot to bring some papers with him, Sir, that he was directed to bring, and returned to his house for them. I suppose he will be here very shortly.

Judge Nelson—Very well, Sir.

After a delay of about 15 minutes, Mr. Moulton appeared in Court, and took the stand.

TESTIMONY OF FRANCIS D. MOULTON.

Frank D. Moulton, called and sworn on behalf of plaintiff:

Q. By Mr. Fullerton—Mr. Moulton, where do you reside? A. 49 Remsen-st.

Q. In the City of Brooklyn? A. In the City of Brooklyn.

Q. How long have you been a resident of the City of Brooklyn? A. About ten years, Sir, I think; perhaps longer.

Q. Before you became a resident of the City of Brooklyn, where did you reside? A. In New-York, Sir—Forty-ninth-st.

Q. And how long did you reside there? A. Well, Sir, in that neighborhood ever since I had been born.

Q. Were you born in the City of New-York? A. I was born in the City of New-York.

Q. Are you engaged in business in Brooklyn? A. I am engaged in business in Brooklyn and in New-York.

Q. And a member of what firm? A. A member of the firm of Woodruff & Robinson.

Q. How long have you been a member of that firm? A. A member of the firm, Sir, since 1864.

Q. Connected with it before that? A. Yes, Sir, since 1854.

Q. In what capacity prior to your becoming a partner? A. As clerk, Sir, for six years, and then I had an interest in the business, and then a copartner, dating 1854.

Q. Are you a married man? A. I am.

Q. When were you married? A. I was married in 1861, I believe, Sir.

Q. And what is your wife's name? A. Emma Moulton.

Q. Are you acquainted with Theodore Tilton? A. I am.

Q. When did you become acquainted with him? A. In 1849 or 1850.

Q. Where was he then residing? A. I don't know where he was residing. He was a student at the Free Academy when I first became acquainted with him.

Q. In New-York? A. In New-York; yes, Sir.

Q. Were you a schoolmate of his? A. I was.

Q. State whether you have been on intimate terms with him from that time to the present? A. Yes, Sir; with an intermission, perhaps, of a few years of intimacy, not of estrangement, though we lived apart. I lived in New-York and he lived in Brooklyn.

Q. And are you acquainted with his family? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. How many children has he? A. Four or five.

Q. Will you give us their names? A. Florence.

Q. How old is she? A. I believe she is sixteen years of age.

Q. Is she the oldest? A. She is the oldest.

Q. The next, please. A. Carroll, a boy.

Q. How old is he? A. About, I guess, eleven years old. And Alice.

Q. Her age, please, as near as you can recollect. A. I think Carroll is younger than Alice; Alice, I guess, is about thirteen years of age, thirteen or fourteen.

Q. There is still another, I believe? A. Yes; I don't know the name of that child, Sir; it was called Frank at one time; I understand that the name of the child has been changed since then.

By Mr. Evarts—You knew it as Frank? A. I knew it as Ralph and Frank; it was Ralph at first, and then it was changed to Frank, as an expression of the sense of its mother of my fidelity to her and its interests.

Mr. Evarts—That is immaterial. A. Certainly; I knew the child as well by the name of Frank.

By Mr. Fullerton—Have they lost any children? A. I believe one, Sir.

Q. Do you recollect when that occurred? A. I do not remember precisely the date, Sir; somewhere in 1869, I think, or 1868.

Q. The youngest child that you have spoken of, Ralph or Frank, what is its age, as near as you can tell? A. Five or six years of age; six years I should say; five years of age.

Q. Have you been upon terms of intimacy with the family of Mr. Tilton? A. I have; yes.

Q. What was the relation existing between Theodore Tilton and his wife up to the year 1870, so far as affection is concerned? A. Well, Sir, I never knew of any difference in the family up to that time.

Francis D. Moulton

Mr. Evarts—Up to when?

Mr. Fullerton—Up to 1870.

Q. You knew of no estrangements? A. None, Sir; no.

Q. Do you know Henry Ward Beecher? A. I do.

Q. How long have you been acquainted with him? A. Intimately, Sir, since the 30th of December, 1870.

Q. And before that did you know him? A. Not very well; no, Sir.

Q. Did you have a speaking acquaintance with him before that? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. For how long a time? A. I think that the first time I met him to speak to him was in 1868, in his church.

Q. Under what circumstances? A. In his church; I was in church with Mr. Tilton and his wife. Mr. Tilton and myself had just returned from an excursion into the country, and Mr. Beecher came to the pew to greet us. That, I think, was the first time.

Q. After that, and up to 1870, when your intimate acquaintance commenced, were you on speaking terms with him? Had you met him in the mean time? A. I met him at Page's studio.

Q. Under what circumstances? A. He was having his portrait painted and I was having mine; I met him casually.

Q. How frequently did you meet him there? A. I met him not to exceed three or four times.

Q. Where did Mr. Beecher reside? A. Mr. Evarts is speaking to you, Sir.

Q. You may state the time when you met him at Page's, if you please? A. I think it was in 1869; I think that is the year.

Q. Do you know where Mr. Beecher resided at that time? A. I understand that he resided in Brooklyn.

Q. I want to call your attention to the month of December, 1870. Did you meet Mr. Beecher during the latter part of that month, the latter part of the month of December, 1870? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Where? A. At his house.

Q. Did you have any conversation with him? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. State, if you please, what that conversation was? A. I said to him—; I met him in his parlor—

Q. Do you recollect the day of the month? A. Yes, Sir; December the 30th.

Q. Now, you may narrate the conversation between you? A. Any of the incidents preceding it, to tell how I met him?

Q. No, Sir; just narrate the conversation first, and then I will ask you what induced the conversation.

Mr. Evarts—Mr. Moulton, will you be so good as to give it in the person of the speaker, what you said, and what he said, so far as you can? A. Thank you, I will.

Mr. Beach—No, Sir; that is not so unless you undertake to repeat his precise language. You may give the substance of it if you do not recollect the precise words. A. Yes, Sir; I said to Mr. Beecher in his parlor, "Mr. Beecher, Mr. Theodore Tilton is at my house and wishes to see you."

By Mr. Fullerton—Now, let us have it fairly understood. Do you give the substance now as nearly as you recollect it, or he words? A. I am giving it as nearly to the words as I can remember it. I certainly am giving the substance.

Q. And do not profess to give the exact words? A. No, Sir.

Q. Very well. Now go on with the narration. A. I said, "Theodore Tilton is at my house and wishes to see you to-night."

Judge Neilson—Mr. Fullerton, I am the bearer of a request that you speak a little louder. It is here in writing, Sir.

Mr. Fullerton—Well, Sir, I will conform to that request.

Mr. Morris—He has hardly room here to speak at all.

Q. Go on with the narrative, Mr. Moulton. A. He said, "This is Friday night; this is prayer-meeting night; I cannot go to see him." "Well," I said, "he wants to see you with regard to your relations with his family, and with regard to the letter that he has sent to you through Mr. Bowen. I think you better go to see him." I said: "You better send somebody down to your prayer-meeting for you," and he did.

Q. State what occurred in reference to that? A. He called to somebody in the room adjoining and told them; he sent some message to his prayer-meeting; I don't remember what it was, but he went out of the house with me, at my request.

Q. And where did you go? A. Went down to my house, Sir, where Mr. Tilton was.

Q. Where did he go after he entered your house? A. He went into the front chamber up stairs where Mr. Tilton was.

Q. And where did you go? A. I remained in the parlor.

Q. Now, Mr. Moulton, state whether that request of yours of Mr. Beecher to go to your house was in consequence of anything that had occurred between yourself and Mr. Tilton prior to your going there?

Mr. Evarts—If your Honor please.

Judge Neilson, to the witness—Say yes or no, Sir.

A. Yes.

Q. Was any conversation had between you on your way from Mr. Beecher's house to your own? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. State what that conversation was as near as you can? A. As we were going down the steps Mr. Beecher says, "What can I do? What can I do?" And I said, "I don't know. I am not a Christian; I am a heathen; but I will try to show you how well a heathen can serve you; I will try to do you some good; I will try to help you;" and we walked along together, and I told him what Mr. Bowen had said to Mr. Tilton concerning his adulteries; I told him that Mr. Bowen had charged him with adulteries in the presence of Mr. Tilton and Oliver Johnson, and—

Q. What reply? Go on with the narration. A. Yes, I will; and he said that was singular; when Bowen brought to him that letter he pledged his friendship to him; he did not inform him that he had told Tilton any such thing; and he told me furthermore that he had sympathized with Bowen in the stories told him against Tilton; that Bowen told him some stories against Tilton, and that he had sympathized with them; another remark that he made was, "This is a terrible night; there is an appropriateness in this storm;" we reached the house.

Q. You spoke of a letter which Mr. Tilton had written to him through Mr. Bowen? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Did you ever see that letter. A. Did I ever see it?

Q. Yes, Sir. A. Yes, Sir; I have seen it; I had not seen it at that time—the original letter that was delivered.

Q. Did you ever have it in your possession? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Have you it in your possession now? A. Yes.

Q. Just select it for me, please [handing witness a bundle of papers]. A. I don't know that I can. If you will hand me my overcoat I think I have got the document there that will enable me to do it. [Mr. Fullerton hands him his overcoat.] Have you any book with my statement in it?

Q. I can omit if you cannot find it directly.

Mr. Beach—I can give you a book, if you want a book.

The Witness—Yes; if you will let me have one of those books I think I can find it.

Mr. Fullerton—I want the original.

The Witness—I know you do. I want to find it by the mark. They are all marked.

Mr. Beach—Do you want a book?

The Witness—Yes; I would like to have one, Sir, if it is convenient.

The witness referred to a newspaper.

Mr. Fullerton—[Handing the witness a book.] That is what you wished to see?

The Witness—Yes.

Mr. Beach—At 2.15 it begins.

Mr. Fullerton—The book is not paged.

Mr. Beach—I have paged it.

Mr. Evarts—You have used that copy, I suppose?

Mr. Beach—Yes; I think it is correctly paged.

The Witness—[Examining the book.] I do not see it referred to here; I cannot tell the number; they are all marked in the exhibits.

Mr. Morris—It is marked "A," I think.

The Witness—Is it in either of those? Just see [handing Mr. Fullerton two packages of papers].

Mr. Fullerton—I will see.

The Witness—Just see if it is in your list of papers.

Mr. Morris took the packages to make a search for the paper referred to, and Mr. Fullerton continued the examination.

Q. How long was Mr. Beecher up in this front room of which you have spoken, with Mr. Tilton, on that occasion? A. Well, I should judge, about an hour, Sir.

Q. Was there any other person present that you know of? A. With him and Mr. Tilton?

Q. Yes, Sir? A. No one that I know of, Sir.

Q. And during that interview where were you? A. Down in the parlor.

Q. Was any one with you? A. No, Sir.

Q. Did you remain in the parlor until Mr. Beecher came from the front room? A. Yes, Sir.

Judge Neilson—The upper room?

Mr. Fullerton—The upper room—the upper front room. [To the witness.] And where did he go when he left the upper front room? A. I went out with him to Theodore Tilton's house, Sir.

Q. Where did you meet him after he first left the room? A. I met him at the foot of the stairs.

Q. In the hall? A. In the hall, yes, Sir.

Q. Did anything pass between you? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. State what he said? A. He asked me if I had seen the letter of confession of Elizabeth, and I told him I had, and he said, "This will kill me."

Q. Anything else said before you left the house? A. No; we walked out together.

Q. And where did you go in company with him, if anywhere? A. Went down to Theodore Tilton's house, Sir.

Q. What did you say on the way there after you left the house? A. He said to me, "This comes upon me as if struck by lightning," and I talked with him again about what Bowen had said.

Q. Repeat it? A. I told him again—I told him that I thought it very strange that Mr. Bowen should have made such charges against him to Mr. Tilton and not have told him anything about it. I said I thought it was very treacherous on Bowen's part toward Tilton. I told him that Bowen had promised to sustain the charges that he had made, and that is the substance of what was said. Neither of us, I think, were disposed to talk much, Sir.

Mr. Evarts to the witness—All observations of that kind—

The Witness—I beg pardon, Sir; I stand corrected.

Q. Have you related all that was said that you now remember before you left Mr. Tilton's house? A. Yes.

Q. Let me ask you, was anything said as to the substance of the interview between Mr. Beecher and Mr. Tilton, when you were not present? A. Why, he told me that Mr. Tilton had told him of the confession of his wife to him.

Q. Just repeat now what he said upon that subject. A. Mr. Beecher told me that Mr. Tilton had told him that Elizabeth had confessed, and had read to him what either was a confession or a copy of a confession of Elizabeth of sexual intercourse between them; and he told me that Theodore had told him of the reasons for sending to him the letter through Mr. Bowen. That is all that I remember just now.

Q. When you went to see Mr. Beecher that night, had you any paper in your possession that had been given to you by Mr. Tilton? A. By Mr. Tilton? Yes, a letter from Mrs. Tilton.

Q. Did you give it to Mr. Beecher? A. No, Sir.

Q. Did you show it to him? A. No, Sir; I didn't.

Q. Do you know whether Mr. Tilton kept a copy of that paper of which you now speak, which he gave to you? A. He made a copy of it, I think; he made a copy of it.

Q. Where did he make it? A. He made it at my house.

Q. At the time that he gave the original to you? A. Yes, Sir; he took a copy of it.

Q. And what did you do with that paper which you took from him, and of which he made a copy? A. I kept it until after the "tripartite covenant," and returned it to Mr. Tilton.

Q. And when you arrived at Mr. Tilton's house did you go in? A. No, Sir; I did not go in.

Q. Did Mr. Beecher go in? A. He did; yes, Sir.

Q. And where did you then go? A. I went home.

Q. Did he tell you of his object in going there? A. He told me that Theodore had given him permission to go to Elizabeth for confirmation of the story; nothing further than that.

Q. After leaving him there, where did you go? A. After leaving him at Mr. Tilton's?

Q. Yes, Sir? A. I said that I went to my house.

Q. You went back to your house? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Did you see Mr. Beecher again that night? A. I did; yes, Sir.

Q. How long after you left him at Mr. Tilton's house? A. Within an hour, I should think.

Q. And where did you see him? A. In my parlor.

Q. He returned to your house, did he? A. Yes, Sir, he did.

Q. Tell me what occurred then between you? A. I went into the parlor with him, and I said to him: "Well, have you seen Elizabeth?" and he said he had. That was all he said.

Q. No further conversation? A. No.

Q. How long did he remain there with you? A. Long enough to say that, and go to the front door, and go out again; I don't know; a very short time, Sir.

Q. And where did you go with him then? A. I went with him to his house.

Q. Did you go in? A. No, Sir.

Q. What conversation, if any, did you have on the way to his house? A. Well, it was nothing but a repetition of the other conversation about Bowen, and he asked me to be friendly to him. I said I would be.

Q. Do you recollect his words when he asked you to be friendly with him? As near as you can repeat them I wish you would do so. A. He said he wanted me to be a friend to him in his terrible business.

Q. And did you part with him at his own house? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. When did you next see him? A. On the evening of December 31.

Q. That was the next day? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. After these interviews of which you have spoken? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Now, Mr. Moulton, up to that period did Mr. Beecher say anything upon the subject of having given any advice in reference to any domestic difficulty between Tilton and his wife, or in reference to any dismissal from an editorship, or any other relation to a newspaper? A. No, Sir; no.

Q. He said nothing upon either of those subjects up to that time? A. No, Sir.

Q. Now we come to the 31st, and where did you first see him then? A. At his house.

Q. How did it happen that you went to his house? A. Well, I received a note from Theodore Tilton on the morning of the 31st of December, asking me to return to him the confession of Elizabeth which I had.

Mr. Evarts—Well, we don't want the contents of the paper.

By Mr. Fullerton—No, I only want to know how it happened that you went to Mr. Beecher's house on the morning of the 31st? A. On the 31st, not on the morning of the 31st.

Q. Well, on the 31st? A. I went there because I had been informed by Mr. Tilton—

Mr. Evarts—No matter what you had been informed.

Judge Neilson—You went there in consequence of information.

By Mr. Fullerton—Did you go there in consequence of something that occurred between you and Mr. Tilton? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. What occurred whilst you were there? A. I saw Mr. Beecher, and I said to him: "I think that before we terminate this interview, your judgment will be that it is a very strange one." And I said to him: "Do you remember that I asked you last night if anybody had seen the letter that Mr. Tilton sent to you through Mr. Bowen, and your answer was that nobody save myself had seen it;" and he remembered that. I said: "Mr. Beecher, I want to read to you a letter from Elizabeth Tilton, asking for the return of the paper which I have and the paper which she gave to you last night at your dictation," and I did read that paper to him, and I said to him, "I will read to you also another letter, in which Mrs. Tilton has informed her husband—"

Mr. Evarts—No, no; if he read the letter—

Mr. Fullerton—He is telling what he said to Mr. Beecher.

Mr. Evarts—No.

Mr. Fullerton—Yes, Sir; I beg your pardon! He is stating just what he said to Mr. Beecher. He said: "I will read to you another letter."

The witness resuming—Yes, Sir. "I will read to you a letter in which Mrs. Tilton informs her husband that she has given you a letter of retraction," and I read that also to him.

Q. You read that also to him? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. What did he reply to that? A. He said he was surprised. I said to him "Mr. Beecher, I think you have been guilty of a great meanness in getting the permission of a husband to visit his house and then going there to his wife and procuring from her what you know to be a lie. Now, I said to Mr. Beecher, "that won't save you." I said to him: "I did not see this morning much of the guidance of God in what you did, but perhaps it will all turn out for the best, for I hold the confession of Elizabeth Tilton, and if you will return that retraction to me I will burn both in your presence, or I will preserve both," and he said to me: "In case of my death this would be the only defense that my family would have against such a charge." And I said to him: "Mr. Beecher, I do not think that now you ought to take merely selfish counsel of yourself. The truth is the truth; you have got to abide by that. Where is the retraction." I said to him, "I want it." He went to the closet and got the retraction, the paper that he got from Elizabeth Tilton the night before, as he said, and handed it to me. I told him I would protect the confession—I would not give that up to Tilton—and I would protect this paper that he gave me with my life; and sitting there, Sir, I felt my pistol in my pocket, and I said: "To this extent, with my life." [Placing his hand upon his pocket].

By Mr. Evarts—You mean you took it out? A. Yes, Sir; I took it out; I felt it in my coat pocket, and I put it on my knee.

By Mr. Fullerton—Go on with the narrative. A. He said, "Of course, if this charge is made against me, if Theodore should make any charge against me, my defense would be the technical one of general denial; but with you, since you know the truth, I would throw myself upon your friendship, and what I believe to be your desire to save me." And he told me there, he said to me, in addition, that he considered his sexual intercourse with Mrs. Tilton was natural—an expression of his love for her, as the words he used; and he said he felt justified in it on account of the love he held for her and which he knew she held for him; and said, at the close of the conversation, "my life is ended. When to me there should now come honor and rest, I find myself upon the brink of a moral Niagara, with no power to save myself, and I call upon you to save me."

Q. State, if you please, what degree of emotion he manifested, if any? A. A very great degree of emotion.

Q. How did it manifest itself? A. In excited conversation.

Q. In any other way? A. Not that I know of.

Q. I did not know but that he wept upon that occasion.

Mr. Evarts—Well—

The Witness—Well, yes, he did weep.

Q. Look at the paper which I show you, and say whether it is one of the three of which you have spoken in your testimony. [Handing witness a letter.] A. Yes, sir, that is one of them.

Q. In whose handwriting is that letter? A. Elizabeth Tilton's.

Mr. Fullerton—I propose to read it in evidence (reading):

"Saturday Morning.

"MY DEAR FRIEND FRANK:

"I want you to do me the greatest possible favor. My letter which you have and the one I gave Mr. Beecher, at his dictation, last evening, ought both to be destroyed. Please bring both to me, and I will burn them. Show this note to Theodore and Mr. Beecher; they will see the propriety of this request. Yours truly,

"E. R. TILTON."

[Letter marked Exhibit No. 1.]

Mr. Evarts, to Mr. Fullerton—Did he say how he received it?

Q. By Mr. Fullerton—How did you receive that note from her? A. I think from Elizabeth Tilton direct.

Q. From whom? A. From Elizabeth Tilton directly.

By Mr. Evarts—Not personally, do you mean? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. At her house? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. That is your recollection of it? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Received it at her house from her? A. Yes, Sir.

By Mr. Fullerton—What else occurred during this interview at Mr. Beecher's house on the 31st? A. What is the question?

Q. What else occurred, if anything, at Mr. Beecher's house on the morning of the 31st? A. There was not anything occurred on the morning of the 31st; it was in the evening.

Q. Well, what occurred on the 31st? A. Nothing that I remember, further than that.

Q. Did you go away and leave him at his house? A. I did; yes, Sir.

Q. And where did you go? A. Went home to my house.

Q. Did you take with you the letter which Mr. Beecher gave you, called the retraction? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. And what did you do with it? A. Read it to Theodore Tilton, whom I found there.

Q. And after that what did you do with it? A. Kept it.

Q. When did you next see Mr. Beecher after that interview? A. I think it was January the 1st, Sir—the evening of January the 1st. I don't remember seeing him before that—the afternoon or evening of January the 1st.

Q. Where did you see him? A. At his house.

Q. How did it happen that you went there on January the 1st? A. By his invitation.

Q. And when was that invitation extended to you? A. December the 31st.

Q. When you were there on the occasion you have already spoken of? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. He invited you to come the following day? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. And what time in the day, as near as you can remember, was it when you went there? A. It was toward evening, Sir, I think.

Q. Did you have an interview with him? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. In what part of his house? A. In his study.

Q. Is that on the first or second floor? A. It is on the second or third floor, Sir—I believe second floor or third.

Q. State, if you please, what that interview was? A. I told Mr. Beecher that I had taken the retraction to Mr. Tilton, and that I had told Mr. Tilton that it would have been very foolish for him to have carried his threat of the morning into execution. I told him that Mr. Tilton was pleased with my having procured the retraction, and that I told Mr. Beecher that Mr. Tilton seemed to me to be—

[Mr. Evarts objected.]

Mr. Fullerton—No, Sir, not at all; it is what he narrated to Mr. Beecher. A. I told him that I thought that—I told him that Tilton told me that he had made up his mind that, no matter what came to himself, he would undertake to protect the reputation of his wife at all hazards. Then Mr. Beecher said to me that he was in misery on account of the crime that he had committed against Theodore Tilton and his wife and family; he said that he would be willing to make any reparation that was within his power; he said that Mr. Tilton, he thought, would have been a better man under the circumstances in which he had been placed than he had been; that he felt that he had done a great wrong, because he was Theodore Tilton's friend, he was his pastor, he was his wife's friend and pastor, and he wept bitterly; and I said to him, "Mr. Beecher, why don't you say that to Mr. Tilton, why don't you express to him the grief you feel, and the contrition for it. You can do no more than that, and I think I know Theodore Tilton well enough to know that he would be satisfied with that, for I know he loves his wife." Mr. Beecher told me to take pen and paper and to write at his dictation, and I did write at his dictation the letter of January 1, 1871.

Q. What was done after you wrote that letter? A. I read the letter to him, and he read it, and then he signed—

Q. Never mind, we will show that in a moment. You say you read it to him? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Did you read it as it was? Yes, Sir, and as it is.

Q. Did he take it and read it? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Do you mean to be understood that you read it to him, and that he read it afterward for himself? A. Yes, certainly.

Q. And did he write anything himself upon that paper or those—add anything to that letter? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Is that the letter of which you speak? A. Yes, Sir, that is it.

Q. What part of it is in the handwriting, if any, of Mr. Beecher; the words at the foot of the last page? A. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Fullerton—I propose to read it in evidence.

[Letter submitted to Mr. Evarts.]

Q. Before reading the letter I want to ask you if you wrote it down as he dictated it? A. Word for word.

Mr. Fullerton (reading): "BROOKLYN, January 1, 1871.

"In trust with F. D. Moulton.

"MY DEAR FRIEND MOULTON:

"I ask through you Theodore Tilton's forgiveness, and I humble myself before him as I do before my God. He would have been a better man in my circumstances than I have been. I can ask nothing except that he will remember all the other hearts that would ache. I will not plead for myself; I even wish that I were dead. But others must live and suffer. I will die before any one but myself shall be inculpated. All my thoughts are running towards my friends, toward the poor child lying there and praying with her folded hands. She is guiltless, sinned against, bearing the transgressions of another. Her forgiveness I have. I humbly pray to God that he may put it in the heart of her husband to forgive me. I have trusted this to Moulton in confidence.

"H. W. BEECHER."

Q. Now, let me ask you, if those words which I read last, to wit: "I have trusted this to Moulton in confidence. H. W. Beecher," is what he wrote upon that paper? A. Yes, sir.

Q. In your conversation with Mr. Beecher, before the writing of that letter, you spoke something of a threat having been made: what threat did you refer to?

Q. Mr. Evarts—Did he repeat it to Mr. Beecher?

Mr. Fullerton—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Evarts—If he repeated it to Mr. Beecher, he may testify to it; otherwise, not.

Mr. Fullerton—I should not attempt to prove it, if he had not.

Mr. Evarts—Yes, but I want the witness to understand that.

A. I told Mr. Beecher that Mr. Tilton had said that for the offense of having gone to his wife and procured that retraction, he would smite him.

Q. By Mr. Fullerton—And in your narration to Mr. Beecher, I understood you to say that you told him that you had said to Theodore that it was better that he had not put that threat in execution? A. Yes, certainly.

Mr. Evarts—That it would have been foolish.

Mr. Fullerton—Yes, whatever it was. [To the witness]. Now what was done after this paper was signed? A. Well, I left the house after having bid Mr. Beecher good-bye at the head of the stairs. The last thing that he said to me was this, that he wanted me to do my utmost for peace.

Q. And then did you separate? A. Yes, Sir; that is all that I at present remember that he said.

Q. Now, up to this time, did Mr. Beecher say anything upon the subject of having given advice in regard to any domestic difficulty between Mr. and Mrs. Tilton, or in respect of Tilton's dismissal from The Independent and The Brooklyn Union? A. Not that I remember, Sir.

Q. Did anything more occur on January the 1st than you have now related? A. No, not that I at present remember.

Q. When, if at all, did you show this letter of January 1st to Mr. Tilton? A. On the same evening.

Q. And when did you see Mr. Beecher next again? A. I think on January 2. I called at his house.

Q. A little louder? A. I called at his house on January the 2d, in the afternoon.

Q. And how did it happen that you went there January 2d? A. By invitation.

Q. Oh I well, state? A. Mr. Beecher invited me on January 1st to come January 2d.

Q. And in pursuance of that invitation you went? Yes, Sir.

Q. What occurred on the 2d of January? A. I told Mr. Beecher that Mr. Tilton's disposition seemed to me to be one that would insure the keeping down of the story; that I thought he had nothing to apprehend from Mr. ——. I told him that I thought he had nothing to apprehend from Mr. Tilton, because Mr. Tilton seemed still intent upon protecting his family.

Q. Well, what else, if anything? A. That is the substance of what I remember.

Q. Where did that interview take place? A. Up in his study or chamber, I forget which; in his study, I think.

Q. When did you next see him after January 2d? A. Ah! January the 2d Mr. Beecher asked me if I thought that it would be safe to have the sale of Plymouth pews go on.

Q. And when did he ask you that question? A. Asked it of me at the head of the stairs, on the evening of January the 2d.

Q. Well, tell us all he said upon that subject, if there was anything more? A. There was nothing more.

Q. What reply did you make? A. I told him that I thought it would be perfectly safe to have the sale of Plymouth pews go on; I felt perfectly assured that Mr. Tilton would do nothing against him or against his family.

Q. Did you learn from him, or did you then know, of your own knowledge, when the sale was to take place? A. No; I don't remember that I did know: it was to take place sometime during the next week.

Q. Up to this time had Mr. Beecher told you when these relations existing between himself and Mrs. Tilton ceased?

Mr. Evarts—Well, we would like to have the conversations, if there are any.

Mr. Fullerton—Well, there are some, and we will go on and give them.

A. He told me that, Sir, on January the first.

Q. Now what was said upon that subject? A. He said that Elizabeth Tilton had sent for him to come to her house, and told him that she believed that their relations were wrong, and he told me that he said to her, "If you believe these relations wrong, then they shall be terminated;" and he told me that he prayed with her, prayed to God with her, for help to discontinue their sexual relations.

Q. Anything else said at that time? A. And that he had from that time discontinued his intercourse with her.

Q. Did he say when that occurred? A. I think in July, 1870.

Q. Now, in any of these interviews was a letter which Mr. Tilton had written, or proposed to write, to Mr. Bowen, the subject of conversation? A. I told Mr. Beecher on January the second that Mr. Tilton was writing a letter to Mr. Bowen.

Q. Did you tell him the substance of that letter as you understood it? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. What did you say upon that subject? A. I told him that I should try to control that letter; that I should not only do that, but do everything else that was in my power, according to my best judgment, to prevent any outbreak.

Q. Well, if you stated what you understood the contents of that letter to be, or what they were to be to Mr. Beecher, I want you to give the conversation. A. Why, I told him that Mr. Tilton intended to write to Mr. Bowen the substance of the interview between himself and Oliver Johnson, and that he intended to publish the letter, in order to give to the public an exact account of the severance of his relations with Mr. Bowen, and I told him (Mr. Beecher) that I should undertake to keep out of that letter anything that concerned Mr. Tilton and his family and Mr. Beecher.

Q. Now, what were the relations existing between Mr. Bowen and Mr. Tilton before they were severed?

[Objected to by defendant's counsel.]

Mr. Fullerton—I suppose that is proper, as spoken of in this conversation?

Mr. Evarts—Anything that he said to Mr. Beecher on that subject.

Mr. Fullerton—Well, I can prove something else besides that; I can prove the outside fact of those relations.

Mr. Evarts—I don't know that you can.

Mr. Fullerton—It does not follow that I cannot prove it because you don't know it. If you have any objection why we will hear it, of course.

Mr. Evarts—Whatever he saw, whatever he heard, is good evidence, provided the subject itself is admissible. But to ask his general statement about what the relations of Mr. Bowen and Mr. Tilton were is not evidence. How is he to find out what the honest relations were between Mr. Bowen and Mr. Tilton. Whatever he saw or heard between raises the question then whether the subject is admissible. But his judgment loses not.

Mr. Fullerton—I do not ask his judgment; I ask the fact as to the relations existing between Mr. Bowen and Mr. Tilton. They now come in question.

Judge Neilson—Well, I think you ought to be content with his general statement that they were friendly, or not; if you go beyond that it ought to be communicated to the defendant—the conversation.

Mr. Fullerton—Why, Sir, I suppose it is competent for me to show that Mr. Bowen was the proprietor of The Independent.

Judge Neilson—Certainly.

Mr. Fullerton—And that Mr. Tilton was in his employ as an editor. I propose to show, also, that he had a relation to The Brooklyn Union, and another newspaper in this city.

Mr. Evarts—I have no objection to that—their relations.

Judge Neilson—Well, go on.

Mr. Evarts—You can prove them by him or by any body else.

Mr. Fullerton—Well, that is what I propose to do. I suppose the gentleman understands some things without my saying much about them. He spoke of severed relations with Mr. Bowen. [To the witness]. Now, I want to know what those relations were. A. He was associated with Mr. Bowen as editor of The Union.

Q. By Mr. Hill.—Was then, or had been? A. He had been, Sir.

Q. Now, as to The Independent? A. He had been editor of The Independent and had made a contract as contributor to The Independent.

Q. Now repeat, if you please, what you said to Mr. Beecher in regard to this proposed letter of Mr. Tilton to Mr. Bowen, respecting what had theretofore taken place between them? A. I told him that he intended to publish that letter to make clear the reason for the severance of their relations.

Q. And it was that letter, that I understand you, you were going to try to control? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. So as to keep out of it anything of the personal matters between Mr. Beecher and Mr. Tilton—is that it? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Very well, now, what else occurred at that time, if you remember anything else? A. I don't remember just at present anything else.

Q. Do you know anything, or did you learn anything from Mr. Beecher in regard to a letter which he had written to Mr. Bowen? A. He told me that he had written a letter to Mr. Bowen explaining—taking back something that he had said about a lady to Mr. Bowen. He had told me previously—I omitted that, Sir—he had told me previously that he had insinuated—as I told him before, the interview of December 31st, and then he told me on January 1st that he had mentioned a lady's name to Mr. Bowen, and I told him that that was very unjust, and he said he would take it back, and on January 2 he told me that he had written to Mr. Bowen taking it back.

Q. By Mr. Evarts—Unjust to whom? A. Unjust to the woman, Sir,

Q. Well, did he show you the letter? A. Yes, Sir, he showed me the rough draft of the letter, either on that occasion, or a day or two afterward.

Q. Look at the paper now shown you, and say whether that is the rough draft he showed you? A. Yes, Sir; that is it.

[Paper shown to defendant's counsel.]

Mr. Fullerton—[Reading] “Brooklyn, January 2d, 1871.

“MY DEAR MR. BOWEN: Since I saw you last Tuesday I have reason to think that the only cases of which I spoke to you in regard to Mr. Tilton were exaggerated in being reported to me, and I should be unwilling to have anything I said, though it was but little, weigh on your mind in a matter so important to his welfare. I am informed, by one on whose judgment and integrity I greatly rely, and who has the means of forming an opinion better than any of us, that he knows of the whole matter about Mrs. B.” Shall I—

Judge Neilson—No; do not give the name at length.

Mr. Evarts—What does your Honor say?

Judge Neilson—Not to give the name at length; there is no occasion for it.

Mr. Evarts—Well, they must have the responsibility of reading letters or not reading them.

Mr. Beach—We take the responsibility, Sir, of giving the initials of the name.

Mr. Evarts—Will your Honor let the letter be imperfectly read?

Mr. Beach—If you want it, read it.

Mr. Evarts—Not at all: we don't read the letter, or offer it.

The responsibility is with the counsel to read the letter or omit the letter.

Judge Neilson—It does not follow, however, that the letter is to be omitted because it may contain the name of a third person, which name ought not to be given publicly. A letter might contain matter material and proper to be given, and contain the name of a third person not proper to be given. So, for the present, I make the suggestion to the counsel.

Mr. Evarts—Your Honor does not intend to rule that letters can be imperfectly read?

Judge Neilson—No.

Mr. Fullerton—It is not an imperfect reading of the letter; it is a withholding of the whole name in the interest of decency and propriety, not to arraign a person here who ought not to be arraigned.

Mr. Evarts—Your Honor does not now rule that they have a right to read the letter imperfectly?

Judge Neilson—I rule that, if the letter be at all material, they may read it, omitting the name of the third person referred to.

Mr. Evarts—To that we except.

Judge Neilson—The name of the third person referred to not being at all material.

Mr. Evarts—That we don't know.

Mr. Beach—We give the letter in evidence, and we read such part as we choose.

Mr. Fullerton—Yes, Sir; and the gentlemen can read the whole name if it subserves their purpose.

Judge Neilson—If you put in a paper, and read a few lines of it, it is all put in by you. The other side, if they desire, can read the rest of it, because you have put it in.

Mr. Evarts—Your Honor will allow us either to except, or else have it understood that the whole letter is considered as read.

Judge Neilson—Oh! the whole letter is in.

Mr. Evarts—And considered as read?

Judge Neilson—But they read such portion now as they chose, and if you read any portion of it you will be reading the document which they put in.

Mr. Evarts—I understand we will consider it all in.

Judge Neilson—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Fullerton—(Resuming the reading.) "I am informed by one on whose judgment and integrity I greatly rely, and who has the means of forming an opinion better than any of us, that he knows the whole matter about Mrs. B——, and that the stories are not true, and that the same is the case with other stories. To this I do not wish any reply. I thought it only due to justice that I should say so much. Yours,

"H. W. BEECHER."

Q. Now, when did you next have an interview with Mr. Beecher, and where? A. Within the next—within that week; I do not remember the day; I think it was the third or fourth.

Q. And where? A. At my house.

Q. Under what circumstances? A. Mr. Beecher came to the house to see me; I was at home, and Mr. Tilton was there, and they met in my presence.

Q. State whether, as far as you know, that meeting was accidental or not between those two gentlemen? A. It was accidental.

Q. Now, what occurred? A. Well, Mr. Tilton was not cordial, Sir.

Q. Now, what occurred? A. Well, Mr. Tilton was not cordial.

By Mr. Evarts—What occurred? A. Do you mean what was said?

Q. No; we want the facts first. I do not want what took place.

Mr. Fullerton—Well, I will submit that the witness has stated there was a want of cordiality between these parties on that occasion, and I want to ask him now how that was manifested.

Mr. Evarts—Not in the first place. We are certainly entitled to the facts first. I will ask the Court to decide between us.

Mr. Fullerton—I am proceeding in the proper way, and I very much dislike these interruptions, without cause, on the part of counsel.

Mr. Evarts—If your Honor please, the counsel gets a construction, and then proceeds to give the facts. Since an issue has been made, I submit that counsel cannot give a construction of what occurred, and then proceed to give the facts. He may give the construction, and then, possibly, not give the facts. We will have the facts first, as the law requires, and then we will put our construction on them, and the jury will put theirs.

Mr. Fullerton—It is a fact in this case whether upon this occasion these parties met cordially or not. It is a fact whether Mr. Tilton greeted Mr. Beecher cordially or not. That is a fact in this case.

Judge Neilson—Well, that is a fact depending on the opinion of the witness, and it would be more proper to ask, therefore, what the indications of a want of cordiality were.

Mr. Fullerton—I was asking him this very thing.

Judge Neilson—Very well, go on.

By Mr. Fullerton—How was that want of cordiality manifested? A. In Mr. Tilton not recognizing Mr. Beecher.

Q. Go on with the narration, please. A. I said to Mr. Tilton, in Mr. Beecher's presence: "Mr. Tilton, I think that your conduct here is wrong; that you have no business in my house to treat with such absolute discourtesy Mr. Beecher, until you have read his letter of contrition. He has, in my opinion, done everything that a man could do, up to the point of making a public statement of the facts. You cannot require any more. I think that, having received such an explanation from him of his feelings towards you, you should greet him at least civilly." And Mr. Beecher said, "Theodore, I hope that my expression of feeling towards you in my letter you will feel to be a sincere expression. I will do anything within reason that you may ask me to do to make reparation for the wrong I have done you. I don't see what I can do, but if there is anything proper that I can do, I should like you to indicate it." That was the substance of the conversation between Mr. Beecher and Mr. Tilton and myself, and the result of that conversation between Mr. Beecher and Mr. Tilton was that Mr. Tilton told Mr. Beecher that he certainly intended to protect his family, and that was the substance of it.

Q. What degree, if any, of emotion was manifested on that occasion? A. There was emotion manifested by Mr. Tilton, for he turned upon me very fiercely, and said, "How can you expect me to greet this man cordially?"

Q. What was the state of Mr. Beecher's mind, as indicated by any outward emotion? A. Sorrowful, Sir. He was in tears.

Q. Have you now related all that occurred at that time, as you remember it? A. As far as I at present remember; yes, Sir.

Q. Did you see Mr. Beecher after that, and if so, when and where? A. I saw him very frequently at my house.

Q. Give us the next meeting that you recollect of? A. It was before the 10th of January.

Q. What occurred then? A. I read to Mr. Beecher the letter which Mr. Tilton had written to Mr. Bowen.

[Letter handed to witness.]

Q. Look at the paper I now show you, and say whether that is the letter you then read to him? A. Yes, Sir, that is it. This letter recalls the fact, that I don't know whether I mentioned or not, that Mr. Beecher returned to me the letter that Mr. Bowen gave to him.

Q. Repeat that. A. Mr. Beecher returned to me the letter that Mr. Bowen gave him—the letter written to Mrs. Tilton on December 26.

By Mr. Evarts—Do you mean he did at this time? A. No, Sir; January 1, I think it was.

Mr. Fullerton—I offer this letter in evidence.

Mr. Evarts—He means to say that is the very paper he showed to Mr. Beecher.

The Witness—Yes, Sir.

By Mr. Fullerton—In whose handwriting is the paper? A. Theodore Tilton's.

Mr. Fullerton—I will now read the letter from Mr. Tilton to Mr. Bowen, dated Brooklyn, Jan. 1, 1871:

"BROOKLYN, Jan. 1, 1871.

MR. HENRY O. BOWEN—

SIR: I received last evening your sudden notices breaking my two contracts—one with The Independent, and the other with The Brooklyn Union.

With reference to this act of yours I will make a plain statement of facts.

It was during the early part of the Rebellion (if I recollect aright) when you first intimated to me that the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher had committed acts of adultery for which, if you should expose him, he would be driven from his pulpit. From that time onward your references to this subject were frequent, and always accompanied with the exhibition of a deep-seated injury to your heart.

In a letter which you addressed to me from Woodstock, June 16, 1873, referring to this subject, you said: "I sometimes feel that I must break silence, that I must no longer suffer as a dumb man, and be made to bear a load of grief most unjustly. One word from me would make a revolution throughout Christendom, I had almost said—and you know it. * * * * You have just a little of the evidence from the great volume in my possession * * * I am not pursuing a phantom, but solemnly boding over an awful reality."

The underscorings in this extract are your own. Subsequently to the date of this letter and at frequent intervals from then till now, you have repeated the statement that you could, at any moment, expel Henry Ward Beecher from Brooklyn. You have reiterated the same thing not only to me, but to others.

Moreover, during the year just closed, your allusions to the subject were uttered with more feeling than heretofore, and were not unfrequently couched with your emphatic declaration that Mr. Beecher ought not to be allowed to occupy a public position as a Christian preacher and teacher.

On the 26th of December, 1870, at an interview in your house at which Mr. Oliver Johnson and I were present, you spoke freely and indignantly against Mr. Beecher as an unsafe visitor among the families of his congregation. You alluded by name to a woman, now a widow, whose husband's death you had no doubt was hastened by his knowledge that Mr. Beecher had maintained with her an improper intimacy. You avowed your knowledge of several other cases of Mr. Beecher's adulteries. Moreover, as if to leave no doubt on the mind of either Mr. Johnson or myself, you informed us that Mr. Beecher had made to you a confession of his guilt, and had with tears implored your forgiveness."

I propose not to read a part of that letter, gentlemen. I shall omit, commencing with the words, "after Mr. Johnson retired from this interview." * * * * [The letter then continues.]

"During your recital of the tale you were full of anger towards Mr. Beecher; you said with terrible emphasis that he ought not to remain a week longer in his pulpit. You immediately suggested that a demand should be made upon him to quit his sacred office. You volunteered to bear to him such a demand in the form of an open letter, which you would present to him with your own hand; and you pledged yourself to sustain the demand which this letter should make—namely, that he should, for reasons which he explicitly knew, immediately cease from his ministry of Plymouth Church and retire from Brooklyn.

The first draft of the letter did not contain the phrase 'for reasons which he explicitly knew,' and these words, (or words to this effect), were incorporated in a second, at your motion. You urged, furthermore (and very emphatically), that the letter should demand not only Mr. Beecher's abdication of his pulpit, but cessation of his writing for The Christian Union, a point on which you were overruled. This letter you presented to Mr. Beecher, at Mr. Freeland's house. Shortly after its presentation, you sought an interview with me in the editorial office of The Brooklyn Union, during which, with unaccountable emotion in your manner, your face livid with rage, you threatened with a loud voice that if I ever should inform Mr. Beecher of the statements which you had made concerning his adultery, or should compel you to adduce the evidence on which you agreed to sustain the demand for Mr. Beecher's withdrawal from Brooklyn, you would immediately deprive me of my engagement to write for The Independent and to edit The Brooklyn Union, and that in case I should ever attempt to enter the offices of these journals you would have me ejected by force. I told you that I should inform Mr. Beecher or anybody else, according to the dictates of my judgment, uninfluenced by any threat from my employer. You then excitedly retired from my presence. Hardly had your violent words ceased ringing in my ears, when I received your summary notice breaking my contracts with The Independent and The Brooklyn Union. To the foregoing narrative of facts I have only to add my surprise and regret at the sudden interruption, by your own act, of what has been, on my part towards you, a faithful friendship of fifteen years.

Truly yours,

[Signed.] THEODORE TILTON.

Q. Did you state to Mr. Beecher what Mr. Tilton proposed to do with that letter? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. What did you say to him upon that subject? A. I told him Mr. Tilton intended to publish it.

Q. What did Mr. Beecher say? A. Mr. Beecher said that the statement that he had ever confessed to Mr. Bowen, was entirely untrue; he said that he had differences with Mr. Bowen, and a settlement with Mr. Bowen, and that Mr. Bowen had never raised with him, at any such settlement, any question of adultery; he said that he presumed that he knew what one portion of the letter referred to; I said to him, "Now, I have a business matter under the contracts to settle with Mr. Bowen of Mr. Tilton's, and I don't want to proceed to court with that claim, if taking it into court is going to rip up your relations with Mr. Tilton's family; I don't want to do that; I would rather pay him what Mr. Bowen owes him than to do that, but, Mr. Tilton," I said, "feels that he wants to publish this letter. He feels that he has taken out of it all that concerns you and your relations with his family. He wants to leave, and he is willing to leave you and Mr. Bowen in conflict," but told him that I did not approve of that. I told Mr. Beecher that I wanted to settle all matters peacefully—the Bowen question peacefully—that Mr. Bowen had acted, in my opinion, I told him, treacherously towards him, and treacherously towards Mr. Tilton. He then told me that he thought it would be necessary for him, in order that I might be guided properly in the transaction between Mr. Tilton and Mr. Bowen—that it would be necessary to tell me the truth about a certain charge made by Mr. Bowen.

Judge Neilson—Is that part of the conversation necessary?

Mr. Fullerton—I don't propose to have it.

Judge Neilson—Omit it.

Mr. Fullerton—Let him go a little further.

Mr. Everts—What is that?

Judge Neilson—Part of this conversation which may be material for us here, may be given without introducing that part of it which relates to a third person, and which, perhaps, may not be material.

Mr. Everts—We know nothing about it. We would like to have the conversation.

Judge Neilson—All that relates to these parties is proper. I think that what relates to a third party ought to be omitted. I think the part that is germane to the question may be given, and that the part that is not should be left out.

Mr. Fullerton—That was my view, if your Honor please. [To the witness.] Go on now, please, and I will tell you when to stop. A. He said he thought it would be necessary to tell me the truth with regard to himself, and to what he supposed Mr. Bowen referred in the letter in the language that he used to Mr. Tilton and recited in the letter.

Q. What language did he call your attention to? A. Give me the letter and I will show it you; I cannot repeat it.

Q. [Handing letter to witness.] Point out the part that he called your attention to. What part of the letter did Mr. Beecher call your attention to by way of explaining it? A. He said he presumed he knew to what Mr. Bowen referred in this part of the letter: "After Mr. Johnson retired from this interview you related to me the case of a woman whom you said (as nearly as I can recall your words) that Mr. Beecher took in his arms by force and accomplished upon her his deviltry."

Q. Did he then go on to explain that? A. Yes, Sir.

ARGUMENT ON THE PROCTOR PASSAGE.

Mr. Fullerton—I will not ask what the explanation was.

Mr. Everts—Well, if your Honor please, is that the way in which it is to be left?

Mr. Fullerton—No, not necessarily, if the other side will take the responsibility of calling it out on cross-examination.

Judge Neilson—You can call it out now, what you think is material.

Mr. Fullerton—I have called out what I think is material.

Mr. Everts—We don't understand that to be right, to characterize a conversation as an explanation, and there leave the matter. What we are entitled to is proof of what occurred between this party and Mr. Beecher on that subject.

Judge Neilson—On this subject.

Mr. Everts—On that passage in this letter.

Judge Neilson—On the subject that we have to deal with!

Mr. Everts—On that passage in that letter which they have introduced as giving a conversation between Mr. Beecher and Mr. Moulton on that subject, to wit: that it was a conversation in which Mr. Beecher explained that.

Judge Neilson—If the word "explained" was used, that justifies you in taking the view you do.

Mr. Everts—Now, they can omit calling the witness's attention to that clause in that letter, and omit interrogating him whether there was a conversation between them; but they cannot introduce it and introduce the fact that they went on to converse about it, and then dispose of it as a conversation or explanation on Mr. Bowen's part.

Judge Neilson—No, it should not appear as a matter of explanation.

Mr. Everts—They must give the evidence, or omit it. [Applause.]

Judge Neilson—Wait a moment, gentlemen. I am very much afraid there will be fewer of us here to-morrow—many fewer, for I will not permit this, and the learned counsel ought not to be interrupted in this way. The word "explanation" is used as giving a coloring you don't intend, perhaps, but which, at any rate, is not just.

Mr. Fullerton—I am quite willing it should be eliminated from the testimony, and I want it distinctly understood by your Honor that this is omitted out of consideration to a third person, who ought not to be dragged into this controversy, and if she is dragged in it will not be by me. I propose the Court should understand my object in omitting that part of the narration. I don't mean it shall be said of me that I am afraid of its effect on my client by any means, but it is in the interest of propriety that no third person should be brought into this controversy, unless it is actually necessary to elucidate the truth between these parties.

Mr. Everts—If you will state that all that relates to the Proctor matter, that will be the end of it. That has been considered by another Court.

Judge Neilson—We don't propose to receive Miss Proctor here.

Mr. Everts—I don't want, if your Honor please, a mutilation of evidence. If this witness has to be judged by this jury, he is to be judged by what he states, without the suppression of anything.

Mr. Beach—Your Honor will permit me to say, unless this should be adopted as a precedent establishing a principle in which I do not concur, that I should say a word in regard to it.

I insist that we have a right to give the whole or any part of any statement or declaration that may have been made by Mr. Beecher which we deem material to the particular matter under investigation; that it is not a rule of evidence that we should give all of what may have been said in a confession to which we have directed the attention of a witness. The material part—that which we consider essential to the interests of the party we represent—we may call out upon our examination, and if there be any part of it omitted appearing to the other side to be essential to their interests, it is entirely competent for them to give it in evidence; but it is not the rule of evidence that we shall give the whole of what Mr. Beecher may have said upon any particular occasion, material or immaterial, to the particular issue under investigation.

Judge Neilson—I understand it to be so, and to be a fundamental principle of law.

Mr. Evarts—I agree to that; but that is not the point of the inquiry.

Judge Neilson—No; that is not it.

Mr. Evarts—They may ask him what he did say, and then take what he said and stop at a certain point, and then, if we choose, to call out the rest of the conversation, it comes to us.

Mr. Beach—Mr. Evarts, will you permit me to suggest to you (as I do not wish to say anything further) that we may ask if Mr. Beecher made an explanation in regard to a given fact, and refrain from calling out that explanation?

Mr. Evarts—No, Sir.

Mr. Beach—I insist upon that proposition. We are not bound to call it out unless we choose. We may say he acted in regard to a particular matter without calling out what that action was. It may be we opened the subject as far as to permit the opposite party to give it in evidence, but we are not compelled to produce it; we are not compelled to give them any part of the declaration or any part of the acts of Mr. Beecher further than we may choose to go.

Judge Neilson—Undoubtedly, and yet it would be unsafe if you are allowed to ask witness whether the defendant made an explanation, because, in truth, what he might understand to be an explanation might not be so.

Mr. Beach—Suppose I ask if he made a declaration in regard to it, am I bound to call out that declaration?

Judge Neilson—That would be better, doubtless; but what has disturbed your opponents, I think, is the word "explanation," which has gone on the minutes, that he has made an explanation which permits of an inference adverse to him.

Mr. Fullerton—I have already stated that that might be struck out.

Judge Neilson—The clause in which that word occurs must be struck out.

Mr. Fullerton—No, Sir; not the clause, but the explanation. What we wish to omit has no bearing upon the issue in this case.

Mr. Evarts—Ah, ah, that will depend.

Mr. Fullerton—That depends on the facts we will adduce in evidence.

Mr. Evarts—It will depend on the truth or falsity of your testimony.

Mr. Fullerton—And the truth or falsity of our testimony you may test to the uttermost.

Mr. Evarts—And we will test it by facts, but not by explanation.

Mr. Fullerton—Test it in your own way, without heralding what you are going to do so vociferously.

Judge Neilson—With my permission neither of you will test anything that is not material to the issue we are trying. I don't intend to admit anything that is not material to the trial now before me.

Mr. Evarts—Is not the truth or falsity of the testimony material?

Judge Neilson—Yes, Sir, undoubtedly, but not evidence affecting third persons. I don't desire to decide a question as to third persons, or to have third persons names implicated beyond what is necessary.

Mr. Evarts—That we agree to. We have no desire to mention their names, or to have anything to do with third persons. Let them omit calling his attention to any conversation of Mr. Beecher on that subject. Leave out, or else bring it in.

Mr. Fullerton—No, I wish to have it appear his attention was called to it, and that he said something, and that something we don't deem important to the general issue, and we omit it.

Mr. Evarts—Then we ask, if his attention was called to it, if it is not material?

Mr. Fullerton—Because I think it is proper to do so.

Judge Neilson—To THE TRIBUNE stenographer—Strike out from and after, "What did he call your attention to?" You may take an exception, Mr. Fullerton, if you desire to do so.

Mr. Evarts—That phrase ought to be struck out.

Judge Neilson—Yes, from and after that. After all, you have what comes within the rule as stated by yourselves.

Mr. Fullerton—I think not, Sir.

Judge Neilson—I think we had better rule that out.

Mr. Fullerton—If your Honor please, I don't mean, if any effort of mine can prevent it, that this witness shall be placed in a false attitude, and that is what my adversaries are seeking to accomplish, in my judgment.

Judge Neilson—I don't see it in that light.

Mr. Fullerton—It may be very fair for them in the conduct of their cause; I shall not criticise their course: I am only saying I don't mean Mr. Moulton shall be placed in an attitude he ought not to occupy with reference to this branch of the case.

Judge Neilson—Certainly; but we can look at that afterwards.

Mr. Fullerton—I don't mean that it shall lie in their power, when we are through with this case, to say that he has, on any occasion heretofore, made a statement of this interview in which he has related something that took place which he has omitted here, unless it appears here that he omitted it because he was requested to do so.

Judge Neilson—That appears now, and it saves your right.

Mr. Fullerton—I don't think so; I don't think it clearly appears.

Judge Neilson—Really, as the case now appears, it does not seem to me to be material. If it becomes material hereafter to protect the witness, we can consider that.

Mr. Evarts—Requested by whom, your Honor?

Judge Neilson—Requested by the Court. I desire to leave this third person out altogether.

Mr. Evarts—Does your Honor undertake to say I requested this witness to leave a part of that out?

Judge Neilson—No; it appears on the minutes that it was left out at my suggestion. It appears, also, that the learned counsel, out of consideration to the witness, thinks that it ought to come in in some degree, and apprehends that if it does not it might operate hardly on the witness, and I have suggested to him that hereafter, if the case should call for any such protection of the witness as claimed now, even though it is now ruled out at my instance, the witness should be protected to that extent.

Mr. Fullerton—What is it?

Judge Neilson—The clause in question.

Mr. Fullerton—It don't appear on the minutes. If your Honor will allow the reporter to read it we can tell better whether our object is accomplished or not.

Judge Neilson—It is all there, and we can refer to it.

The Court here directed THE TRIBUNE stenographer to read the testimony referred to and to strike out the clause objected to. This was done.

Mr. Evarts—Do I understand your Honor to say that it appears at a certain stage of the examination of this witness that the Court requested him not to proceed further with his statement.

Judge Neilson—Yes, Sir; because it relates to a third person.

Mr. Evarts—Will your Honor be so good as to note our exception?

Judge Neilson—Yes, Sir; and because it is not material to the very question we are inquiring into.

Mr. Evarts—Will your Honor please note our exception to that direction of the Court in respect to that order of the evidence?

Judge Neilson—Yes, Sir; and also the exception of the plaintiff's counsel to the order I have made striking it out.

Messrs. Beach, Morris and Pryor (speaking together)—We don't want any exception.

RESUMPTION OF MOULTON'S EXAMINATION.

By Mr. Fullerton—Now, have you given us all that was said by Mr. Beecher at that interview when this letter of Mr. Tilton to Mr. Bowen was read, with the exception of what has been omitted by request? A. No, Sir.

Q. Go on with the narration? A. He said he thought the publication of the letter would result in mischief, and I told him that I would undertake to prevent its publication; that I thought I could induce Mr. Bowen without a suit to pay that money, and I would endeavor to do it, and he said he hoped I could, or words to that effect.

Q. What money was it? A. Money under the contracts due Mr. Tilton. I told Mr. Beecher that I had waited upon Mr.

Bowen at The Union office with reference to that money, and Mr. Bowen told me he didn't owe Mr. Tilton any money.

Q. Anything more at that time? A. Not that I remember just at present.

Q. Then we will proceed to the next interview between yourself and Mr. Beecher, if there was one, and state when it was and where? A. There were frequent interviews; I don't remember the next one particularly.

Q. At any one of these interviews that you have spoken of, or at any subsequent interview, was the girl Bessie Turner spoken of. A. Yes, Sir; there was a girl named Bessie Turner spoken of.

Q. When—in what interview? A. I think the interview was subsequent to the one we have just narrated.

Q. And when was it, as near as you can tell? A. I should think it was before the 15th of January.

Q. And where did it take place? A. It took place in my house.

Q. State what it was, if you please? A. I told Mr. Beecher, or rather in an interview between Mr. Beecher and myself, he had told me something that Bessie Turner—I don't remember what it was he told me—he told me Bessie Turner had said something to him concerning Mr. and Mrs. Tilton, and I told Mr. Beecher that Mr. Tilton thought Bessie Turner was a dangerous person to have about; that she was what Mr. Tilton termed—I remember his term—"a prattler," and knew (so Mr. Tilton told me) of the facts as between Mr. Beecher and Mrs. Tilton, and I said to Mr. Beecher, I thought she was better out of the way than here, and Mr. Beecher said he thought so too, and Mrs. Tilton then told Mr. Tilton (so Mr. Tilton told me) that the best place for her was out West at school, and I told Mr. Beecher that Mr. Tilton could not afford to pay her expenses, and he said to me, "Well, I will pay the expenses, or I will do anything that is necessary to keep this story down," and he approved; he said that he thought it was a good plan to send her to school, and he would pay the bills.

Q. You may state whether she was afterwards sent away to school? A. Yes, Sir; she was, to Ohio.

Q. Who superintended that? A. Who superintended the sending of her to school?

Q. Yes, Sir. A. I suppose Mr. Tilton did; I didn't.

Q. Did you superintend or have anything to do with it? A. No, Sir.

Q. What connection had you with the payment of the expense of it afterwards, if any? A. I paid the expenses.

Q. Of her schooling? A. Yes, Sir; and Mr. Beecher paid me.

Q. How many different payments did you make, do you recollect? A. I don't remember; I paid all the bills that were presented.

Q. Afterwards how did you receive your money from Mr. Beecher? A. By check and currency.

Q. How did you receive the bills? A. I think generally from Mrs. Tilton.

Q. Did you ever receive them any other way than through Mrs. Tilton; if so, state them? A. No, Sir, I don't think so.

Q. State whether you forwarded the money or your check on o Ohio in payment of it; state how it was done? A. I generally forwarded the checks to the order of the principal of the school.

Q. Then what did you do afterwards towards reimbursement? A. Mr. Beecher reimbursed me.

Q. What did you do? Did Mr. Beecher come without any elicitation on your part, or did you send him word or write him a note? A. Sent him word.

Q. How did he make the payments to you? A. Generally in checks.

Q. Sometimes otherwise? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. How otherwise? A. In currency.

Q. And how long did that continue? A. For two or three years, I think.

The Court here adjourned until Thursday.

FOURTH DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

MR. MOULTON'S EXPLANATIONS OF THE LETTERS.

THE DIRECT EXAMINATION OF THE WITNESS NOT OVER YET—MR. EVARTS AND MR. MOULTON FACE TO FACE—HEATED DISCUSSIONS BETWEEN COUNSEL—WHY MR. MOULTON WAS CALLED BEFORE MR. TILTON.

Francis D. Moulton resumed the witness-chair with the same briskness and self-confidence which he had displayed on the previous afternoon. There was less color in his face and his demeanor was more collected, although he still lacked the art of concealing his efforts to appear at ease. Self-consciousness is betrayed by hands, feet, and figure. He is constantly changing his position, alternately bending forward and straightening himself, his hands straying nervously from pocket to coat-lapel, and then toying with his hair, mustache, handkerchief, watch-chain, or the arm of the chair. His mild eyes are not quite so restless, although a quick sidelong glance is more natural than a steady gaze. His dress has a conscious air of studied carelessness. His manner is open and frank and his utterance is always distinct, although the tones are soft and measured, sometimes degenerating into an effeminate lisp. His manner varies somewhat; at times he speaks quickly, with business-like directness; then again he weighs his words and replies cautiously and carefully, like a man feeling his way over dangerous ground. There is a painful lack of earnestness in the man, if his bearing does him no injustice. When the gravity of the issue is considered, his replies to the most vital questions often seem flippant. He asserts that the greatest preacher in America confessed adultery to him, and his manner is that of a listless gentleman giving his verdict upon a novel brand of champagne. He talks and acts like a man who is slightly bored with the whole subject, his mustache concealing a sneer as if this scandal-tragedy after all, to "a man of the world," is a sort of low comedy or broad farce.

Inasmuch as Mr. Moulton's main office yesterday was to identify the correspondence which had been placed in his keeping, his testimony was not, on the whole, so important as it was on the preceding day. The ordeal through which he passed was not so trying save at the close, when a foretaste of the manner in which the cross-examination would be conducted was afforded. He identified the various letters which were handed to him with great caution, reading them through and inspecting the indorsements with a business-like air. When the letter in which Mr. Beecher referred to him as a possible "priest in a new sanctuary," was read, a flushed face and downcast eyes betrayed his annoyance. After recess there was a change in his manner—the words coming faster, and less hesitation being manifested. Once he forgot himself. He was asked to describe Mr. Beecher's manner, and replied, with a coarse sneer, "Oh, he wept as usual!" When he repeated his words to Mr. Beecher in reference to Mrs. Woodhull, that he thought that she was amenable to moral influences, there was a ripple of amusement in the court-room. His advice to Mr. Beecher not to notice the Woodhull publication, as "silence would kill that story," was repeated in a harsh, grating tone, and in admitting that he had made false replies to several persons, denying that Mr. Beecher was an impure man, his voice lost none of its strength and fullness. In quoting Mr. Beecher's alleged remarks to him involving the disgrace of soliciting favors from a woman and being rejected, as a man of the world he expressed his approval of the sentiment so candidly and unservedly that the spectators laughed heartily until the Judge rebuked their indiscretion.

When a copy of Mr. Beecher's resignation, embodied in a memorandum which Mr. Moulton dictated from memory to Mr. Tilton, was introduced, the prosecution called upon the defense for the original, and Mr. Evarts, irritated by ex-Judge Fullerton's remarks, drawled out, "We—have—no—such—paper." Mr. Evarts was then permitted to ask Mr. Moulton a few questions. As a foretaste of the rigor with which the cross-examination will be conducted, this was perhaps the most exciting incident of the day. Mr. Moulton braced himself in his seat and answered in a high key and a rapid manner. Mr. Evarts was not long in ferreting out the fact that Mr. Beecher was in an upper room at the time, and that there was no reason why Mr. Moulton could not have gone up stairs and procured the original instead of trusting to his memory in the dictation. Mr. Moulton was intensely excited, but made a violent effort to control himself and to meet Mr. Evarts's searching eye without flinching. The questions came quick and fast, and Mr. Evarts showed that he was master of the art of cross-examination.

PASSAGES AT ARMS BETWEEN COUNSEL.

One of the most interesting features in this case is the fine fencing between the counsel. As the testimony of the morning related mainly to the introduction and identification of the scandal literature, the proceedings would have been dull and monotonous if it had not been for the passages at arms between the contending camps. The intense earnestness of the senior counsel on each side, and the bristling manner of ex-Judge Fullerton, combined to render this legal skirmishing intensely exciting.

Ex-Judge Fullerton conducts the examination of a witness with consummate ability. His manner is so smooth and his questions are so direct and clear that even the most nervous of witnesses takes heart and recovers composure. He is exceedingly quick in retort, resents interruptions and interference from the other side, gives blow for blow, and, when he is defeated, opens a way for his retreat and retires in good order. He is exceedingly adroit at times, and when his opponents expose his sharp practice his assumption of dignity is so well timed that the edge is taken from his discomfiture. He bristles up at a single word from Mr. Evarts, fights hard, and only abandons the ground when he is compelled by the judge's decision. He brooks neither dictation nor criticism, and clings tenaciously to his own method of presenting the evidence. An incident will illustrate his shrewdness and coolness under defeat. Mrs. Morse's rambling letter to Mr. Beecher had been read and Mr. Moulton had repeated Mr. Tilton's admission that the skeleton in the closet of the Livingston-st. household had been exhibited, not to twelve people, but to Mrs. Bradshaw and Oliver Johnson. The lawyer was anxious to bring out another name, but the witness was evidently unwilling to drag it in. Others might have been mentioned, but he could not remember. After vainly endeavoring to arouse Mr. Moulton's memory from a state of coma the counsel dropped the subject only to return to it unexpectedly with the innocent question, "When Mr. Tilton referred to Mr. Robinson, did Mr. Beecher?" &c. Mr. Evarts burst out laughing, and made a scornful gesture which would have disconcerted any one else, but ex-Judge Fullerton made a dignified retort and passed on as if nothing had happened.

Mr. Evarts is always on the alert, and his speeches are marvels of clearness and compactness. He sits in front of Mr. Beecher's other defenders and directly behind Mr. Tilton's lawyers. His position is typical, for he is the head and front of the defense, and presses the prosecution very closely. He is a thorough master of the art of worrying a witness and the opposing counsel. Whenever Mr. Moulton becomes indirect in his testimony, a dry hint from Mr. Evarts, such as "State what took place," or, "What was said to him, and what did he say?" holds him in check with a tight rein. On the preceding day the counsel's peculiar dryness was finely illustrated when Mr. Moulton was describing in an airy way the pistol scene, and conveying the impression that he had merely touched his pistol to emphasize his promise to protect the retraction with his life. The effect of Mr. Moulton's ingenious device was utterly spoiled by the interruption, "You took it out?" the words being so dry as almost to crackle. "Yes," said the witness, utterly disconcerted. Mr. Evarts is a thorn in ex-Judge Fullerton's side, for his interruptions are frequent, and he is not a man to be easily shaken off. He will have the evidence presented with the precision which the law demands, and he will have nothing else. In the smallest details he is persistent and tenacious, and his mastery of the principles of evidence enables him to worry his adversaries without taking an untenable position himself. His gravity, dignity, earnestness, and self-command were manifested in the sharp argument over the manner in which Mrs. Morse's letter should be presented in evidence. When he speaks, there are changes of tone which vibrate through an audience with electrical effect. His earnestness is something terrible, and, although his eyes flash and the tension of his voice is so full that it seems as if it must break, his self-command is perfect. He never wastes a word, and in his clearness of statement and grasp of the subject seems to have an advantage over his opponents. The sharp passage of arms over the introduction of Mr. Tilton's "true statement," in which Mr. Evarts was compelled to content himself with an exception, was the most exciting of the day. "He had a written statement from which he read, and we want that paper. We want it according to the rules of evidence. I have a right to the points of law." Mr. Evarts's sentences are as direct, incisive, and clear as these.

Mr. Beach sprang to the rescue of ex-Judge Fullerton yesterday two or three times. He, too, is thoroughly in earnest, and his delivery has many elements of power. The elaborate appeal which he made in reference to Mrs. Morse's letter was delivered with splendid power and emphasis, his command of language being remarkable and his gestures direct and forcible. He had not comprehended his opponent's point, however, and Mr. Evarts in two or three quiet sentences at the close dashed cold water upon his misplaced eloquence. Mr. Beach can be as dry as Mr. Evarts. When the latter asked if he was to have an opportunity for reply, Mr. Beach quietly remarked that Mr. Evarts had already taken advantage of abundant opportunities. Again, when Mr. Evarts had called for an envelope of one of the so-called clandestine letters, and ex-Judge Fullerton had introduced first an envelope and then a letter and had then admitted reluctantly that he could not connect them, Mr. Beach by a caustic reply took the edge from Mr. Evarts's indignant protest against the tactics of the prosecution.

THE DAY'S TESTIMONY.

There was little in the testimony of the day that was novel. It began with the introduction of Mrs. Morse's anomalous letter to Mr. Bowen and the so-called "clandestine correspondence," and included the three letters which were exchanged between Mr. Tilton, Mr. Beecher, and Mrs. Tilton, those which passed between Mr. Beecher and Mr. Moulton in reference to the investigation of Mr. West's charges, the Woodhull scandal, and other elements of the controversy. An important hint was thrown out in regard to Mr. Carpenter's interview with Mr. Beecher in which, as alleged by ex-Judge Morris in his opening remarks, a confession of guilt was made. It now appears that this interview was the one in which Mr. Beecher's prospects in journalism were discussed and the substance of which was given to the public last Summer. In regard to Mr. Beecher's resignation, documentary evidence was offered, but it was not so direct as the public had been led to expect.

Ex-Judge Fullerton's talents as a reader were frequently called into play, for in addition to the voluminous scandal literature which had to be read to the jury as fast as Mr. Moulton could identify the letters, there was a poem to tax his powers of elocution. This was Mr. Tilton's "Sir Marmaduke's Musings," in which, as the prosecution claim, the author told the sad story of his own domestic life. Lawyers generally talk better than they read, but this was a musical poem which required very little elocution. Ex-Judge Fullerton in reading the poem without strain or effort succeeded admirably. His deep tones rang through the court-room, and a buzz of satisfaction followed the closing lines. Mr. Tilton meanwhile sat with closed eyes, probably regretting with an author's instinct that he could not read it himself to the audience.

Ex-Judge Fullerton did ample justice to Mr. Beecher's flowing sentences. Many of the letters which the public have learned by heart have fine rhetorical passages, and their effect upon an audience is marked. The oft-quoted letters to Mr. Moulton, in which Mr. Beecher describes the varied work of his life and expresses a desire for death, was read with deep feeling, and some of Mr. Beecher's friends manifested emotion. The elocutionary exercises of the day were happily varied in character, the selections having a wide range so as to include Mrs. Morse's spiteful, incongruous letter to Mr. Beecher, the ambiguous sentences of Mrs. Tilton, Mr. Tilton's review of his interview with Mr. Bowen, and Mr. Beecher's "love letters" to Mr. Moulton.

COURT-ROOM CURIOSITY.

The audience was composed of about the same class of people that have appeared in court on previous days of the trial. Residents of prominence were less conspicuous. In the afternoon, however, two new visitors, ex-Police Commissioner Thomas C. Acton and Jackson S. Schultz, occupied seats near Mr. Beecher. After shaking hands with him they listened very attentively to Mr. Moulton's examination. The members of Plymouth Church who sat near the defendant on the opening of the case were in the same places yesterday. It was noticeable that they appeared more attentive, and indulged in fewer smiles than on the preceding day.

Frequently during the examination ex-Judge Fullerton was interrupted by the noise of the rabble in the corridors. Three policemen guarded the entrance to the court-room, and other officers endeavored to place in line the multitude which clamored for admission. All sorts of devices to obtain entrance were resorted to, and the officers at the door were kept very busy in rejecting bogus passes, counterfeit reporters, and illegal lawyers. In many instances $5 and even more was offered for a single ticket of admission, yet none who were willing to sell could be found.

When the Court announced that it was time to take the regular recess, the crowd within the railings concentrated in the vicinity of Mr. Beecher. Mrs. Beecher was evidently annoyed at the rude stare of several bores who jostled about her with elongated necks and bulging eyes. Her husband, however, seemed self-possessed and good-tempered. Taking his wife gently by the arm, he led her over to Mrs. Tilton. Mrs. Beecher extended her hand, which was warmly pressed by Mrs. Tilton. The two held a short, subdued conversation, Mr. Beecher joining in it only once, with a remark that brought a smile to the faces of the ladies. There was an apparent disposition on the part of the preacher to continue the conversation, but he terminated the interview somewhat abruptly, with a stately bow to Mrs. Tilton. While the conversation was proceeding, several well-dressed but ill-mannered individuals literally shoved themselves between Mr. and Mrs. Beecher, for the purpose of hearing what was being said. When he demonstrated by leaving the courtroom in company with his wife that he was not disposed to take the public into his confidence in regard to any private conversations he might have the crowd still hung to his heels and followed him to the sidewalk.

THE PROCEEDINGS.

The direct examination of Francis D. Moulton, by Mr. Fullerton, was resumed instantly on the formal opening of the court on Thursday. All the principals and their counsel were in their places, except Mr. Tilton and Mr. Evarts; these came in, nearly together, at 11:15 o'clock. The crowd around the doors with tickets, for whom there was no room inside, was greater than usual, and was more demonstrative, the officers having to use much force to prevent a rush in whenever any one left the court.

SOME OF THE WRITTEN EVIDENCE.

Mr. Fullerton—Shall I proceed, Sir?

Judge Neilson—Judge Porter, shall we proceed?

Mr. Porter—Yes, Sir.

Francis D. Moulton recalled, and the direct examination resumed.

Mr. Fullerton—In your letter yesterday you spoke of a letter—December 26, 1870—written by Mr. Tilton to Mr. Beecher, and of which Mr. Bowen was the carrier; look at the paper I now show you, and say whether it is the letter to which you then referred [handing witness a letter]? A. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Fullerton—I propose to read it.

TILTON'S DEMAND THAT BEECHER LEAVE THE MINISTRY.

DECEMBER 26, 1870, BROOKLYN.

HENRY WARD BEECHER:

SIR: I demand that, for reasons which you explicitly understand, you immediately cease from the ministry of Plymouth Church, and that you quit the City of Brooklyn as a residence.

(Signed)

THEODORE TILTON.

[Letter marked "Exhibit No. 4."]

Q. You also spoke of a letter written by Mrs. Tilton to her husband on the night of the 30th of December, which you showed to Mr. Beecher, or read to Mr. Beecher. Look at that letter and say whether it is the one to which you refer [handing witness a letter.] A. Yes, Sir. [Letter marked "Exhibit No. 6."]

Q. You also spoke of a letter yesterday which you obtained from Mr. Beecher, and which he, the night before, had got from Mrs. Tilton. Look at the paper I now show you, and say whether that is the paper to which you then referred [handing witness a letter]. A. That is the paper, Sir. [Letter marked "Exhibit No. 5."]

Mr. Fullerton—"Exhibit No. 5" is as follows

MRS. TILTON'S RETRACTION.

DECEMBER 30, 1870.

Wearied with importunity and weakened by sickness, I gave a letter inculcating my friend Henry Ward Beecher, under assurances that that would remove all difficulties between me and my husband. That letter I now revoke. I was persuaded to it—almost forced—when I was in a weakened state of mind. I regret it, and recall all its statements.

(Signed)

E. R. TILTON.

I desire to say explicitly, Mr. Beecher has never offered any improper solicitations, but has always treated me in a manner becoming a Christian and a gentleman.

(Signed)

ELIZABETH R. TILTON.

Mr. Fullerton—"No. 6" is as follows:

MRS. TILTON EXPLAINS HER RETRACTION.

DECEMBER 30, 1870—Midnight.

MY DEAR HUSBAND: I desire to leave with you before going to sleep a statement that Mr. Henry Ward Beecher called upon me this evening, asked me if I would defend him against any accusation in a council of ministers, and I replied solemnly that I would in case the accuser was any other but my husband. He (H. W. B.) dictated a letter, which I copied as my own, to be used by him as against any other accuser except my husband. This letter was designed to vindicate Mr. Beecher against all other persons save only yourself. I was ready to give him this letter because he said with pain that my letter in your hands addressed to him, dated December 29, "had struck him dead and ended his usefulness."

You and I both are pledged to do our best to avoid publicity. God grant a speedy end to all further anxieties. Affectionately,

(Signed)

ELIZABETH.

Q. Do you remember now anything that occurred when you read to Mr. Beecher that last letter? A. He seemed surprised. Sir; that was all.

Q. Did he say anything? A. He thought it strange that Mrs. Tilton should have imparted such information to her husband. He said that.

Q. I now show you "Exhibit No. 1," which was put in evidence yesterday, and ask whether that was read at the same time of the reading of the last letter which was handed to you [handing witness "Exhibit No. 1"]? A. It was.

Q. "Exhibit No. 1," you say, was read to him at the same time of reading the last letter? A. The letter which I just saw was read to him, if that is "Exhibit No. 1."

Q. It is.

Mr. Evarts—What is that?

MRS. TILTON WANTS THE CONTRADICTORY LETTERS DESTROYED.

Mr. Fullerton—

SATURDAY MORNING.

MY DEAR FRIEND FRANK: I want you to do me the greatest possible favor. My letter which you have and the one I gave Mr. Beecher at his dictation last evening, ought both to be destroyed. Please bring both to me and I will burn them. Show this note to Theodore and Mr. Beecher; they will see the propriety of this request. Yours truly, E. R. TILTON.

Q. Your attention was called yesterday, at the close of your examination, to the interview with Mr. Beecher at your house some time in January, 1871; was there another meeting of the same parties at your house during that month? A. I do not remember, Sir, just at the present moment; I think there were several; I think there were two meetings in that month between them.

Q. Are you able now to state what occurred at the next one in order; I refer to one particularly when Mr. Beecher brought some letters and delivered them to you? A. There was—I will try and recall the date; I think about January 27.

Q. Of 1871? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. What occurred then? A. There was a consultation between Mr. Beecher and Mr. Tilton and myself with regard to a letter of Mrs. Morse, which Mrs. Morse had sent to Mr. Beecher; it was after January the 27th.

Q. Where was that meeting? A. It was at my house, Sir, in Clinton-st.

Q. And how was it brought about? A. Brought about by a statement in the letter itself. The letter was brought to me first by Mr. Beecher, and it contained a statement that Theodore had—

Mr. Evarts—No matter. It will speak for itself.

Q. If in consequence of anything—? A. In consequence of a statement in the letter, I thought it was necessary to have Mr. Beecher see Mr. Tilton, and they did meet, and the statement of the letter—the statement that the letter contained—was read to Mr. Tilton, and he indignantly denied—

Mr. Evarts—What took place?

Mr. Fullerton—He is telling what took place.

Mr. Evarts—No.

Mr. Fullerton—He certainly is.

Judge Neilson—Omit the word "indignantly."

Mr. Fullerton—I don't think the statement was read to Mr. Tilton when he was not there.

The Witness—Mr. Tilton denied the statement that the letter contained.

Q. Was this while Mr. Beecher was there? A. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Evarts—Now, if your Honor please, if he is speaking of that interview, we are entitled to have a statement of what each party said.

Mr. Fullerton—It is not worth while, Mr. Evarts, to take that, because I am going to give it. It is my branch of the case.

Mr. Evarts—I understand it. It is a part that is not your branch of the case that I do not like.

Mr. Fullerton—I can't help whether you like it or not. I shall give it in evidence if I am permitted.

Mr. Evarts—I want the rules of evidence to be observed, and whatever the matter of evidence shall be I will not interrupt.

Judge Neilson—Now, the conversation when Mr. Tilton and Mr. Beecher were both present the plaintiffs can give.

Mr. Evarts—I want it given as a conversation, and not characterized by the witness.

Mr. Fullerton—It has not been characterized by the witness at all.

Judge Neilson—Yes; by the word "indignant."

Mr. Fullerton—Yes, Sir; that he has a right to use under the authorities.

Judge Neilson—Let him give the conversation first.

Mr. Evarts—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Beach—Let us see if we are in error, Sir.

Judge Neilson—I don't think you are.

MR. BEACH OBJECTS TO REFLECTIONS ON MOULTON.

Mr. Beach—Well, if your Honor please, these interruptions, these reflections upon the propriety and accuracy of the statements made by the witness, and our examinations, may, perhaps, have an unfortunate influence, and I do not wish any such impression to be entertained. The witness stated that there was a letter produced, that an extract was read from that letter in the presence of Tilton and Beecher, and this witness, and that Mr. Tilton denied the truth of that extract. Now, does your Honor hold that that is not competent and regular evidence?

Judge Neilson—Oh! no.

Mr. Beach—Very well, Sir.

Judge Neilson—The primary duty, of course, is to give the conversation. It naturally may appear, and perhaps should appear, whether it was a gentle, friendly conversation, or otherwise.

Mr. Beach—Undoubtedly, Sir. We intend to give all that conversation; but that fact, Sir, that a paragraph was read from that letter, and was denied by Mr. Tilton, is competent to be given in evidence.

Judge Neilson—I do not think that was objected to.

Mr. Beach—Yes, Sir; it was objected to.

Mr. Evarts—We will see, if your Honor please. It is perfectly competent for them to say: "This extract which I now read was read to Mr. Tilton, and he denied it." It is not competent to say that an unnamed extract of the letter was read, and he denied it. What occurred in the actual collision of minds between these parties is to be spread before the jury as it occurred; and the occurrence was not the reading of an unnamed part of a letter, but the reading of an actual part of a letter, and which we want now read, and then we will see what Mr. Tilton said about it.

Judge Neilson—It is a question then as to the order of proof. There is really no disagreement between you.

Mr. Evarts—There is no disagreement that the occurrence between the parties is to be given.

Judge Neilson—Yes.

Mr. Evarts—And it is no answer, when I object to their giving something that is short of and different from that, that they intend afterwards to give what they have a right to give.

Judge Neilson—Well, the extracts denied may come in.

Mr. Fullerton—Certainly, but I cannot put them all in evidence at once.

Mr. Evarts—Well, we have heard that a great many times.

Mr. Fullerton—You will hear it a great many times more.

Mr. Evarts—I presume we shall.

Mr. Fullerton—Your interruptions will not deter me from giving my evidence.

Mr. Evarts—I am afraid not.

Mr. Fullerton—I have given now what took place between the parties, and my friend on the other side knows full well that I intend to give the whole letter in evidence and call his attention to the extracts.

Mr. Evarts—Why didn't you do it at first?

Mr. Fullerton—Because I didn't choose to. I will select my own way of giving evidence, provided I am within the rules of evidence.

Mr. Evarts—But you are not.

Mr. Fullerton—If my evidence will have more force by being put in in my particular order I do not mean to be deterred from doing it in my own way. [Laughter.]

Judge Neilson—I want to say a word to the audience. There seems to be a little disposition to interrupt the proceedings this morning. I don't think it is called for. I think the reporters set the example. They had better not.

Mr. Fullerton—See whether the paper I now hand you is the paper to which you refer. [Handing witness a letter.] A. That is the letter, Sir.

ARGUMENT ON THE ADMISSION OF THE MORSE LETTER.

Mr. Evarts—If your Honor please, this is a letter—I take it for granted that it is in the handwriting of Mrs. Morse—this is a letter from Mrs. Morse, the mother of Mrs. Tilton, to Mr. Beecher, which, as I understand it, was brought by Mr. Beecher, and was presented at this interview, and some portion of it was read to Mr. Tilton. That is the point of the present examination. Now this letter of Mrs. Morse's is not evidence against Mr. Beecher. That, I take it, we understand; but so far as it furnishes a part of the interview between the parties, why, it forms a part of what is evidence—that is, what passed between Mr. Tilton and Mr. Beecher—and I do not understand that it is now offered in any other way.

Mr. Fullerton—Well, I offer it in evidence to be used for any purpose. It is proper when it is in—

Judge Neilson—It can only be proper if it was talked of in that interview and conversation. In and of itself it is not evidence.

Mr. Fullerton—It is quite impossible, if your Honor please, for me to see the propriety of this letter without referring to its contents. I will state in general terms, however, that it refers to this difficulty between these parties, and consequently becomes a part of the res gestæ.

Mr. Evarts—We agree that it is pertinent.

Mr. Fullerton—Well, I agree that you will not interrupt me. I am talking. It becomes important, therefore, as being a production of Mrs. Morse, sent to Mr. Beecher, referring to this difficulty, the letter having been handed by him to Mr. Moulton, and the conversation which ensued, and which I shall proceed to give in evidence, shows the propriety of introducing the whole letter in evidence in this case.

Judge Neilson—I think when your examination closes we can reconsider the question.

Mr. Evarts—Yes. I reserve my point, if your Honor please.

Judge Neilson—Certainly.

MRS. MORSE MAKES TROUBLE.

Mr. Fullerton—In the first place, then, Mr. Moulton, I will ask you to point out to me that part of the letter. A. The whole of the letter was read, you understand.

Q. I understand the whole of the letter was read, but point out that paragraph in the letter which made it necessary in your judgment, as you state, to send for Mr. Tilton, in order that his attention might be called to it.

Judge Neilson—Or rather which Mr. Tilton denied.

Mr. Fullerton—Well, Sir, it is the same thing.

Mr. Evarts—The part that was read?

Mr. Fullerton—He did not deny anything that was not read to him.

The Witness—You wish me to mark it, Sir, or read it?

Q. Just mark it, so that I can read it in evidence. A. [Marking the letter] Between the first two marks there.

Q. Have you now marked that paragraph in red. A. I have.

Mr. Evarts—I will look at it.

Mr. Fullerton—Yes, Sir [handing the letter to Mr. Evarts].

Q. I want you to state all the conversation that occurred between you and Mr. Beecher before you sent for Mr. Tilton, and also that which occurred after Mr. Tilton arrived there? A. Mr. Beecher brought me that letter from Mrs. Morse, and he said to me, "Here is a letter from Mrs. Morse which I would like to have you read," and I read it, and read the statement which I have marked, as well as the balance of the letter, and I said to Mr. Beecher, "I am sure that this cannot be true; in my own mind I am sure it cannot be true."

Q. What did you refer to then? A. The letter, or statement; with regard to Theodore Tilton.

Q. The statement that you have marked? A. Yes, Sir; I said, "There is a sentence in the letter which I know to be untrue; it contains an untrue statement, and I judge that the statement with regard to Mr. Tilton is quite as untruthful as that; but we can see Theodore, and find out from him directly; if he has done that he has done wrong," and I sent for Theodore, either that day or at some subsequent day; at all events, he came to an interview between Mr. Beecher and myself, and he did there deny—

Mr. Evarts—Well!

The Witness—He said, "Pardon me."

Q. He there made the denial that you referred to? A. Yes, Sir; he said it was not true that he had told twelve persons, and he said who he had told.

Mr. Evarts—They have not read the letter yet.

The Witness—I beg pardon!

Mr. Fullerton—It is proper for him to state that, whether it was read or not.

Mr. Evarts—I think not.

Q. What did Mr. Tilton say? A. He said he had not told twelve persons, and he told Mr. Beecher who he did tell—who he had told.

Mr. Fullerton—I read the extract marked, "I know of twelve persons whom he was told." Now, your Honor will perceive that without the context that has no meaning.

Mr. Evarts—Well, read the rest.

Mr. Fullerton—That Mr. Tilton could not deny but it was all read.

Mr. Evarts—Well, why didn't he mark it?

Mr. Fullerton—That was marked in the first instance

Mr. Evarts—If your Honor please, what we would like to have is, distinctly, the passage of this letter that was read to Mr. Tilton and that he denied.

Mr. Fullerton—I have read it.

Judge Neilson—I understand that is the passage just read. Then we have the conversation and you have the clause.

Mr. Fullerton—Yes, Sir; and I have read the clause in evidence.

Mr. Evarts—But, I do not understand; I have not heard the witness say that was the clause.

Judge Neilson [to the witness]—The clause which was read—is that the one marked, and that you say was denied? A. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Evarts—If the witness will take the letter and read what was denied, then we shall know.

Judge Neilson—Very well; pass the witness the letter. [Letter handed to witness.]

The Witness [reading]—

"I know the publicity that was given to this recent and most crushing of all troubles is what has taken the life out of her. I know twelve persons whom he has told."

That—"I know of twelve persons whom he has told"—was the statement which Mr. Tilton denied.

Mr. Evarts—That is all that was said? A. The whole of the letter was read.

Mr. Evarts—Your Honor understands us to say distinctly that we are entitled to the passage of the letter that was read to Mr. Tilton before he denied it.

Judge Neilson—Well, you have the denial, and you have the clause of the letter; you have them taken together.

Mr. Evarts—Yes, Sir. Now, I have not the clause of the letter yet.

Mr. Fullerton—Well, that's not my fault.

Judge Neilson—I understood the witness to read the clause in question.

Mr. Evarts—I have not so understood it. He says that is the clause that he denied; I want the clause that was read to him before he made his denial,

Mr. Fullerton—He has stated that that is the clause that he read to him, and the clause which he denied.

Judge Neilson [to the witness]—Now, restate that, so that we may understand you perfectly. A. If you will give me the letter again.

Mr. Evarts—We want what was read before his denial.

The Witness—The whole letter was read before his denial; the specific allegation of the letter that he denied was, "I know of twelve persons whom he has told."

Mr. Fullerton—Now, in making that denial what did he say? A. He told Mr. Beecher that it was not true; said that it was not true that he had told twelve persons, and he mentioned to Mr. Beecher the names of the parties whom he had told, and I remember that Oliver Johnson's name was one mentioned.

Q. Any one else? A. I think Mrs. Bradshaw.

Q. Any one else? A. Don't remember, Sir.

Q. What other conversation was had at that time? A. Mr. Tilton said to Mr. Beecher that Mrs. Morse was a dangerous woman—a woman liable to come down to Plymouth Church at any time and denounce his relations with her daughter, and that that letter ought to be carefully answered; the answer ought to be well considered, and that it ought to be kind—kind as it could possibly be made; and the answer was written by Mr. Beecher and submitted to Mr. Tilton, at that interview, I think—at all events, it was submitted to Mr. Tilton and to me.

Q. Anything else occur? A. Not that I remember particularly.

Mr. Fullerton—I now offer the letter in evidence.

Mr. Evarts—We object to it as evidence against Mr. Beecher otherwise than as it formed part of this interview.

Judge Neilson—Why, isn't that so, Mr. Fullerton?

Mr. Fullerton—Why, Sir, we hold that the bringing of that letter to Mr. Moulton, and sending for Mr. Tilton, and the conversation which followed, render the letter evidence in the cause as a part of the res gestæ. I want to go on and prove that there was no denial of the allegations in that letter.

Judge Neilson—Well, why don't you go through with that proof before you offer it?

Mr. Fullerton—I am through.

Judge Neilson—Nothing that Mrs. Morse could write would be evidence in this case, of course. The question is whether what occurred at this interview was sufficient to make it evidence. It is so as to the clause in question. I think that is the extent of it.

Mr. Fullerton—I will take a further question. [To the witness.] In that conversation was there a denial by Mr. Beecher of any of the allegations in that letter? A. No, Sir; there was no denial.

LEGAL QUIBBLING.

Mr. Evarts—I object to that form of asking.

Judge Neilson—We will take it.

Mr. Evarts—"What took place?" should be the question.

Mr. Fullerton—Well, that is what did not take place.

Mr. Everts—If he said anything about the letter, or anything was said to him about the letter, we have a right to it.

Judge Neilson—Yes; it ought to be given.

Mr. Fullerton—What reply, if any, did Mr. Beecher make to the suggestion of Mr. Tilton or yourself that Mrs. Morse was a dangerous person—that this letter ought to be answered kindly? A. He agreed with it.

Q. What did he say? A. He said that he knew Mrs. Morse was a dangerous woman; he had told me so before.

Q. He had told you so before? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. In one of your interviews with him? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Subsequent to the 30th of December, 1870? A. I don't remember; I think not, Sir—yes, subsequent to the 30th.

Mr. Fullerton—I think if your Honor will read this letter you will see that it is evidence in this cause.

Mr. Beach—I don't suppose, Sir, the question arises here, as to the extent or effect of this paper as evidence. That it is made evidence in the cause by the testimony of the witness seems to me perfectly clear. Mr. Beecher brings this paper to Mr. Moulton, consults with him about it; Mr. Tilton is called in to the consultation; Mr. Beecher, through Mr. Moulton, submits this letter to the consultation of Mr. Tilton; they confer about it, about all its terms and statements; they consult as to the proper mode of answering—prepare and agree upon an answer. Can there be any doubt, Sir, that that is, so far, an adoption of the letter; a part of the transaction in which these parties were then engaged as to render it admissible in evidence for the purpose of explaining their acts and declarations—submitting to the Court and jury the subject matter of that interview under the consultation then had between them? It is true, Sir, that the statements of Mrs. Morse, uncorroborated and unadopted either by the specific admission or by the equally clear and conclusive acts of Mr. Beecher, would not be evidence against him; but he brings this paper, submits all that it contains to the consideration of the two parties who were engaged in consultation with him; and, without a word of dissent or denial, adopts it in toto, and prepares an answer which I suppose we may submit to your Honor. Now, that is one transaction in regard to one subject matter, closely linking with the issue between these parties—bearing directly upon the subject matter of the controversy between them. Suppose, Sir, that instead of the written letter, Mrs. Morse had been present at that interview and made these declarations in the presence of Mr. Beecher, and he heard them, without a word of denial; and he then made an answer, such as is contained in the responsive letter which he wrote to Mr. Morse; would there be any doubt, if Mrs. Morse had been there speaking, instead of writing, that everything she said to Mr. Beecher bearing upon the subject matter of this controversy would be competent in evidence?

Judge Neilson—No doubt of it, at all.

Mr. Beach—Well, Sir, this is precisely the same.

Judge Neilson—Not quite. Besides, the responsive letter you speak of is not before us yet.

Mr. Beach—Ah! your Honor, but the statements in the letter are produced by Mr. Beecher, read in his presence, and submitted in silence without any denial. Suppose, Sir, that that letter had contained an allegation against Mr. Beecher that he had had sexual intercourse with the wife of Mr. Tilton, and he does not deny it; isn't that statement evidence, Sir? And upon what principle of law would it be excluded, if a party hear an allegation to his prejudice in regard to a matter in controversy in Court and fails to resist the allegation, is it to be said that it is not competent evidence against him? Isn't it a clear and unequivocal admission? Silence, Sir, under such circumstances is confession. Silence is an adoption of the allegation made when the party is called upon by every interest due to him to speak. And that is just the condition, Sir, of this evidence. I assume for the moment, Sir, that in that letter there is a clear imputation of guilt as against Mr. Beecher? If that be so, and under the evidence of the witness, he failed to deny or explain, submitted silently to that imputation, is it to be said that that is not evidence? And does it make any difference that the charge is presented against him in the form of a writing and recorded, instead of a parol accusation? Surely no distinction in principle can be drawn from the two examples. And it is upon that theory, Sir, that in this letter are contained material statements by Mrs. Morse, which, if untrue, it was for the interest of Mr. Beecher then to deny and to resent, and if he failed to do it the law implies an acknowledgment of its truth. At any rate, it is a question, Sir, to be submitted to the jury under all the circumstances of the event. And I am told, Sir, and, if your Honor will be kind enough to send for the authority if you are in any doubt about it, the case of the People against Kelly, in the 55th of New York, is said to be an analogous case.

Judge Neilson—I can well understand the principle that you invoke; I can well understand that if Mrs. Morse were present at the speaking, and made such a charge in the conversation, it would be the defendant's interest to deny it.

Mr. Beach—Then it seems to me that, your Honor, that you concede the principle.

Mr. Everts—I have not been heard yet.

Mr. Beach—Well, I haven't perceived that you failed to take abundant opportunity to be heard. I was suggesting to his Honor that if he conceded that Mr. Beecher would be called upon to answer a parol declaration in regard to a matter material to himself, that no distinction can be drawn as between a parol and a written statement or accusation. I am entirely at a loss to see the discrimination in principle between the two examples.

The reason of the rule is that a matter is brought to the attention of a party interested which demands from him an answer under circumstances calling upon him either to assent to or to deny the truth of that matter. Well, Sir, this was presented to Mr. Beecher under circumstances which certainly called upon him for an explanation or denial, if any of the allegations contained in the letter of Mrs. Morse were untrue. It was a matter, Sir, of common interest to the parties then assembled—two of them at least. It was a matter about which they were consulting. It was a matter about which they mutually devised an answer; and if Mr. Beecher failed upon that occasion to make any proper explanation or denial, or if he did qualify or affect, by anything which he said upon that occasion, any of the declarations in that letter—why, of course, they must be evidence; and, with the letter and the explanation or denial, they must be evidence, either in his favor or against him.

Judge Neilson—The obligation to make, on the spot, an oral denial or explanation is perhaps quite modified by the general purpose of making a written answer, the conference being had, about the spirit and tone and care with which that answer should be framed; and I learn from the argument, generally, that some answer was made.

Mr. Beach—Yes, Sir.

Judge Neilson—And when you purpose to make a written answer to a letter, I think it supersedes in a great degree the duty of making a present answer orally.

Mr. Beach—Well, Sir, we propose to give the answer; cannot give them, as my associate says, both at once.

Mr. Evarts—My objection was not such as to preclude the letter. I simply said that the letter was not evidence against Mr. Beecher, except so far as it was made evidence by what occurred with him in regard to it.

Mr. Beach—Well, I agree to that.

Mr. Evarts—That's all I said.

Mr. Beach—The difficulty is, that the Court went much further.

Mr. Fullerton—I will read it in evidence then.

Mr. Evarts—Your Honor then notes that it is admitted only for that purpose.

Mr. Fullerton [reading]:

MRS. MORSE'S LETTER TO BEECHER.

TO MR. BEECHER: As you have not seen fit to pay any attention to the request I left at your house, now over two weeks since, I will take this method to inform you of the state of things in Livingston street. The remark you made to me at your own door was an enigma at the time, and every day adds to the mystery. "Mrs. Beecher has adopted the child." "What child?" I asked. You replied, "Elizabeth."

Now, I ask, what earthly sense was there in that remark? Neither Mrs. Beecher, yourself, nor I can, or have, done anything to ameliorate her condition. She has been for the last three weeks with one very indifferent girl. T. has sent Bessie, with the others, away, leaving my sick and distracted child to care for all four children night and day, without fire in the furnace, or anything like comfort or nourishment in the house. She has not seen any one. He says: "She is mourning for her sin." If this be so, one twenty-four hours under his shot, I think, is enough to atone for a lifelong sin, however heinous. I know that any change in his affairs would bring more trouble upon her, and more suffering. I did not think for a moment when I asked Mrs. B. as to you call there, supposing she knew it, of course, as she said you would not go there without her.

I was innocent of making any misunderstanding if there was any; you say, keep quiet. I have all through her married life done so, and we now see our error. It has brought him to destruction, made me utterly miserable, turned me from a comfortable home, and brought his own family to beggary. I don't believe if his honest debts were paid he would have enough to buy their breakfast. This she could endure and thrive under, but the publicity he has given to this recent and most crushing of all trouble is what is taking the life out of her. I know of twelve persons whom he has told, and they in turn have told others. I had thought we had as much as we could live under from his neglect and ungovernable temper. But this is the death-blow to us both, and I doubt not Florence has hers. Do you know when I hear of your cracking your jokes from Sunday to Sunday, and think of the misery you have brought upon us, I think with the Psalmist, "There is no God." Admitting all he says to be the invention of his half drunken brain, still the effect upon us is the same, for all he has told believe it. Now he has nothing to do, he makes a target of her night and day. I am driven to this extremity: to pray for her release from all suffering by God's taking her to himself, for if there's a heaven I know she'll go there.

The last time she was in this house she said: "Here I feel I have no home, but on the other side I know she would be more than welcome." Oh! my precious child! How my heart bleeds over you in thinking of your sufferings. Can you do anything in the matter?

Must she live in this suffering condition of mind and body with no alleviation? You or anyone else who advises her to live with him, when he is doing all he can to kill her by slow torture, is anything but a friend.

I don't know if you can understand the sentence I've written, but I'm relieved somewhat by writing. The children are kept from me, and I haven't seen my darling child but once since her return from this house.

I thought the least you could do was to put your name to the paper to help to reinstate my brother. Elizabeth was as disappointed as myself. He is still without employment, with a sick wife and five children to feed; behind with the rent, and everything else behind hand.

If your wife has adopted Lib, or you sympathize with her, I pray you to do something for our relief before it is too late. He swears, so soon as the breath leaves her body he will make this whole thing public; and this prospect, I think, is one thing which keeps her alive. I know of no other. She's without nourishment for one in her state; and in want—actual want. They would both deny it, no doubt; but it's true.

THE SCENES CONNECTED WITH THE MORSE LETTER

Mr. Fullerton—Now, is that all of the letter—I see there is no signature to it? A. All that I had of it, Sir.

Q. It is all Mr. Beecher brought to you? A. I believe it to be all that he brought; yes, Sir.

Q. Now, was there any other or further conversation at that time in reference to the contents of this letter? A. Yes, Sir; I said to Mr. Beecher, when he brought me the letter—at the time that he brought me the letter—that I knew that the allegation with regard to their being in want was untrue; I said to him, "I know that Mr. Tilton has a balance with our firm."

Q. Mr. Evarts—This is not the interview with Mr. Tilton? A. No; the interview with Mr. Beecher; Mr. Beecher said it was useless for him to undertake to live if this story was going from mouth to mouth, and he wanted to be satisfied—he said he wanted to be satisfied that Mr. Tilton had not stated, as that letter says he did, the fact to twelve persons, and I tried to comfort him—and I said to him: "Mr. Beecher, you may rest assured that it is untrue; I know that Mr. Tilton would not do it. I know that he has told me to whom he has told the story, and that is all there is of it, and you need not be anxious about it, in my opinion." And then I sent for Mr. Tilton—it was either that day or a day or two afterwards; at all events, he came—

Mr. Fullerton—Well, at the meeting between yourself, Mr. Tilton and Mr. Beecher, what else was said in regard to the contents of this letter—in regard to the charge brought by Mrs. Morse, if any? A. There was nothing said about the charges brought by Mrs. Morse.

Q. What conversation was there? A. Mr. Tilton said that he certainly had not said that to twelve persons—not mentioned the fact to twelve persons.

Q. And then he went on and stated to whom he had told the story? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. And you have mentioned the names of two persons? A. Two parties; yes, Sir.

Q. Do you recollect whether he named any other person to whom he had told it? A. I do not remember now.

Q. And what did Mr. Beecher say when he was informed that it had been communicated to Mr. Robinson and Mrs. Bradshaw; what did Mr. Beecher reply when he was informed of the names of the two persons to whom Mr. Tilton said he had communicated this story? A. I do not remember his reply, sir; it was an expression of regret that it had been told to anybody.

Q. Who is Oliver Johnson? A. Oliver Johnson is now one of the editors of The Christian Union.

Q. What was his position at that time? A. At that time, I think that he had resigned The Independent; he had been one of the editors of The Independent, managing editor of The Independent; at the time that Mr. Tilton told Mr. Beecher that he had told Oliver Johnson, Oliver Johnson was on The Independent.

Q. And Mrs. Bradshaw, who was named, did she reside in Brooklyn? A. She did; yes, Sir.

Q. In that conversation was anything said by Mr. Tilton with reference to the charges of neglect to his family? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. What was said upon that subject? A. Mr. Tilton denied that he had neglected his family.

Mr. Evarts—What was said to him and what did he say? A. Well, Sir, as nearly as I could remember his words, he said that he had not neglected his family; that his family were not in want; and he said to Mr. Beecher, I remember, "You know that they are not"—turning to me, "You know that I am not in want."

Q. Meaning you? A. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Fullerton—I have understood you to say that at that time another letter was produced there by Mr. Beecher? A. There was a letter, Sir, produced, I think, at that interview.

Q. What letter was that? A. I do not remember, Sir, distinctly enough about that letter to speak of it.

Q. Look at the letter.

Q. [Handing letter to witness.] Look at the paper I now show you and say whether it is the reply to the letter of Mrs. Morse to Mr. Beecher? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. In whose handwriting is it? A. Mr. Beecher's.

Q. Is that the original draft? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. As amended? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. When was that prepared—at that time—that meeting? A. At that time; yes, Sir.

Q. While you were together? A. I believe so; yes, Sir.

Mr. Fullerton—I offer it in evidence.

BEECHER REPLIES TO MRS. MORSE.

Mrs. Judge MORSE:

MY DEAR MADAM: I should be very sorry to have you think I have no interest in your trouble. My course towards you hitherto should satisfy you that I have sympathized with your distress. But Mrs. Beecher and I, after full consideration.

are of one mind—that, under present circumstances, the greatest kindness to you and to all will be, in so far as we are concerned, to leave to time the rectification of all the wrongs, whether they be real or imaginary.

Mr. Evarts—Is that the draft?

Mr. Fullerton—That is the original draft as amended.

(Letter marked "Exhibit No. 8.")

The Witness—I remember at that interview Mr. Tilton specifically said to Mr. Beecher, "It will be necessary in writing that letter to so write it that if it should be lost, or come into anybody else's possession, it would not disclose the fact of any sin on your part."

Q. I understand you to say that this occurred about the last of January, 1871? A. Yes, Sir; somewhere about that time. My recollection is that the letter was brought to me, and that then some time elapsed between that and the interview.

Q. The interview between the three? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. When did you next see Mr. Beecher? A. I don't remember when I next saw him, I saw him so frequently.

Q. I call your attention to February 7, 1871. Did anything occur on that day; I refer to the day when three letters were written? A. I received a letter from Mr. Beecher on February 7; I had an interview with him before February 7.

Q. State what took place before February 7, intermediate to this last interview when the Morse letters were produced on February 7, state what occurred between you and Mr. Beecher. A. Mr. Beecher said that he wanted to be satisfied of Theodore's spirit towards him; that he was in a state of uncertainty about it, and I said to him, "I want to have Tilton in writing on this question; I want him to commit himself somewhere;" and I had, even anterior to the 27th of January, spoken to Mr. Tilton about it.

Mr. Beach [to the witness]—Unless you told that to Mr. Beecher you need not state it. A. Yes, Sir; I said to him, "I have repeatedly asked Theodore to give me a paper stating what his views were. Mr. Beecher said he would like that, too, and that explains the letter of February 7 of Theodore Tilton to me. That is what I remember about that letter."

Mr. Fullerton—Is that the letter which he wrote to you and of which you have last spoken? A. Yes, Sir; that is it, and just previous to February 7 I had a conversation with Mr. Beecher. I don't remember the date, with regard to the necessity of having matters go on properly at Livingston-st., and Mr. Beecher said, "I think that as Elizabeth is not admitted to consultations, inasmuch as she does not hear from us directly, that she ought to be assured that the spirit of Theodore toward her is kind" and he said, "But I will write a letter to Elizabeth placing the situation before her." That is the substance of the conversation which led to the letter of February 7 by Mr. Beecher to Mrs. Tilton.

Q. This letter written to you by Mr. Tilton on the 7th of February—did you show it to Mr. Beecher? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. When was it shown to him? A. Shortly after; about as soon as I received it; I don't remember the date.

Mr. Fullerton—I offer it in evidence.

TILTON BEARS BEECHER NO ENMITY.

BROOKLYN, February 7, 1871.

MY VERY DEAR FRIEND: In several conversations with me.

you have asked about my feelings towards Mr. Beecher, and yesterday you said the time had come when you would like to receive from me an expression of them in writing. I say, therefore, very cheerfully, that notwithstanding the great suffering which he has caused to Elizabeth and myself, I bear him no malice, shall do him no wrong, shall discountenance every project by whomsoever proposed for any exposure of his secret to the public, and, if I know myself at all, shall endeavor to act toward Mr. Beecher as I would have him, in similar circumstances, act toward me. I ought to add that your own good offices in this case have led me to a higher moral feeling than I might otherwise have reached. Ever yours affectionately,

THEODORE TILTON.

To FRANK MOULTON.

(Letter marked "Exhibit No. 9.")

You have spoken of a letter written to you by Mrs. Beecher on that same 7th of February, 1871. [Handing letter to witness.] Please look at that and say whether it is the letter referred to by you? A. Yes, Sir; that is the letter.

Mr. Evarts—There is no date to this letter.

Mr. Fullerton—No; I offer it in evidence, and read it.

BEECHER'S TESTIMONY TO MOULTON'S FRIENDSHIP.

FEBRUARY 7, 1871.

MY DEAR MR. MOULTON: I am glad to send you a book which you will relish, or which a man on a sick bed ought to relish. I wish I had more like it, and that I could send you one every day, not as a repayment of your great kindness to me, for that can never be repaid—not even by love, which I give you freely.

Many, many friends has God raised up to me, but to no one of them has he ever given the opportunity and the wisdom so to serve me as you have. My trust in you is implicit. You have also proved yourself Theodore's friend and Elizabeth's. Does God look down from Heaven on three unhappy creatures that more need a friend than these?

Is it not an intimation of God's intent of mercy to all, that each one of these has in you a tried and proved friend? But only in you are we three united. Would to God, who orders all hearts, that by your kind mediation, Theodore, Elizabeth and I, could be made friends again. Theodore will have the hardest task in such a case; but has he not proved himself capable of the noblest things?

I wonder if Elizabeth knows how generously he has carried himself towards me? Of course, I can never speak with her again, except with his permission, and I do not know that even then it would be best. My earnest longing is to see her in the full sympathy of her nature arrest in him, and to see him once more trusting her, and loving her with even a better than the old love. I am always sad in such thoughts. Is there any way out of this night? May not a day star arise?

Truly yours always, with trust and love,

(Signed)

HENRY WARD BEECHER.

(Letter marked "Exhibit No. 10.")

Q. You have also spoken of a letter written on that same day by Mr. Beecher to Mrs. Tilton. [Handing letter to witness.] Look at the paper now handed to you and say whether that is the letter that he wrote on that day to that lady? A. That is the letter.

Q. That is the one, you say? A. That is the one.

Mr. Fullerton—I put in evidence the letter of February 7, from Mr. Beecher to Mrs. Tilton:

BEECHER TO MRS. TILTON.

BROOKLYN, February 7, 1871.

MY DEAR MRS. TILTON: When I saw you last I did not expect ever to see you again or to be alive many days. God was kinder to me than were my own thoughts. The friend whom God sent to me (Mr. Moulton) has proved, above all friends that ever I had, able and willing to help me in this terrible emergency of my life. His hand it was that tied up the storm that was ready to burst upon our head. I am not the less disposed to trust him from finding that he has your welfare most deeply and tenderly at heart. You have no friend (Theodore excepted) who has it in his power to serve you so vitally, and who will do it with so much delicacy and honor. I beseech of you, if my wishes have yet any influence, let my deliberate judgment in this matter weigh with you. It does my sore heart good to see in Mr. Moulton an unfeigned respect and honor for you. It would kill me if he thought otherwise. He will be as true a friend to your honor and happiness as a brother could be to a sister's. In him we have a common ground. You and I may meet in him. The past is ended. But is there is no future?—no wiser, higher, holier future? May not this friend stand as a priest in the new sanctuary of reconciliation, and mediate, and bless you, Theodore, and my most unhappy self? Do not let my earnestness fail of its end; you believe in my judgment. I have put myself wholly and gladly in Moulton's hands, and there I must meet you. This is sent with Theodore's consent, but he has not read it. Will you return it to me by his hands? I am very earnest in this wish for all our sakes, as such a letter ought not to be subject to even a chance of miscarriage.

Your unhappy friend,

(Signed)

H. W. BEECHER.

Q. What was said, if anything, to you with reference to a permission to write that letter? A. Mr. Beecher wanted me to get Theodore's permission to write it.

Q. And did you? A. I did; yes, Sir.

Q. And when you conveyed to Mr. Beecher the knowledge that Theodore had consented, what was said between you A. He said he would write the letter.

Q. How did it get into your possession, if it got there? A. It was sent to me by Mr. Beecher, or delivered to me personally by Mr. Beecher; I don't remember. Do you mean at first how did it get into my hands, or how last?

Q. How first you have answered? A. Yes, Sir; certainly.

Q. Now, Mr. Moulton, prior to that time, had anything been said about any intercourse between Mr. Beecher and Mr. Tilton or Mrs. Tilton, and how it was to be brought about, if at all? A. Oh! yes, Sir.

Q. State, if you please, what that was? A. Sir?

Q. What arrangement was made with Mr. Beecher, if any, upon that subject? A. The arrangement between Mr. Beecher and myself was this, that there was to be no interchange.

Mr. Evarts—State what took place.

Mr. Fullerton—Yes, state what took place.

The Witness—I told Mr. Beecher that I thought he had better not hold any correspondence with Mrs. Tilton without Theodore's consent, and he said he thought that would be right. That is what there was about that.

Q. When was that arrangement made? A. Some time anterior to February 7th, in the early part of the controversy.

Q. I asked you how you obtained that letter—from whom? How came it afterwards in your possession? A. It was returned by Theodore Tilton to me.

Q. Do you know whether Mrs. Tilton received it? A. I don't know; Theodore Tilton said he delivered it to her.

Q. What did you do with the letter? A. I gave it to Theodore Tilton.

Q. For delivery? A. For delivery.

Mr. Evarts—It was open, I suppose?

Mr. Fullerton—Sealed ?

The Witness—It was an open letter.

(Letter marked "Exhibit No. 7.")

Q. I am requested to ask you when Mr. Tilton returned to you the letter addressed by Mr. Beecher to Mrs. Tilton ? A. Shortly after the date of it.

Q. [Handing letter to witness.] Look at the paper now shown you, and say from whom you received it ? A. From Mr. Beecher.

Q. When ? A. After my return from the—after April the 15th some time ; I think that was the date I returned from the South. It was after my return.

Q. You may state when you left for the South and when you returned from the South ? A. I think the date of my departure was March 2d, 1871, and I returned April 15th.

Q. During that period, where were you ? A. In Florida and Georgia—generally South.

Q. How long after your return was it that this letter now in your hand was given to you by Mr. Beecher ? A. Not very long. I don't remember the date.

Q. What did he state when he gave it to you ? A. He said he had received it from Elizabeth.

Q. Did you make any observation at the time ? A. No, I don't remember that I did ; I think I made an observation like this, that it was an act of good faith on his part to give it to me.

Mr. Fullerton—I offer the letter in evidence.

ONE OF THE CLANDESTINE LETTERS.

Wednesday.—MY DEAR FRIEND : Does your heart bound towards all as it used ? So does mine ! I am myself again. I did not dare to tell you until I was sure ; but the bird has sung in my heart these four weeks, and he has covenanted with me never again to leave. "Spring has come." Because I thought it would gladden you to know this and not to trouble or embarrass you in any way, I now write. Of course I should like to share with you my joy, but can wait for the Beyond !

When dear Frank says I may once again go to old Plymouth, I will thank the dear Father.

Mr. Evarts—There is no date to that letter ?

Mr. Fullerton—There is no date to it.

Mr. Fullerton—In whose handwriting is that letter ? A. Elizabeth Tilton's.

Q. And do you observe there the words at the head of it, "Received March 8th ?" A. Yes, Sir.

Q. In whose handwriting is that ? A. Mr. Beecher's.

Q. Was that on the letter when he handed it to you ? A. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Evarts—Is the letter signed ?

Mr. Fullerton—The letter is not signed.

Mr. Evarts—If your Honor please, all these letters that we have seen are obviously letters that were contained in envelopes, as you can see by their shape that they are not complete sheets that were folded and addressed, and as yet no envelopes have been introduced. I call attention to it, and of course I would like to have the envelopes.

Mr. Morris—We have them.

Mr. Evarts—Well, we would like to have them.

Mr. Fullerton [handing envelope to witness]—Look at the envelope I now show you, and say in whose hand the superscription is ? A. In Mr. Beecher's.

Q. [handing letter to witness]—Look at the letter I now show you, and say in whose handwriting it is ? A. Mr. Beecher's.

Mr. Fullerton—I offer this in evidence. I read the letter.

Mr. Evarts—We understand this letter is now offered to be read as having been inclosed in that envelope.

Mr. Fullerton—I don't offer it as having been inclosed in that envelope now. I have proved the envelope to be in the handwriting of Mr. Beecher, and I have proved the letter to be in his handwriting also.

Judge Neilson—You didn't interrogate him as to the connection of the two papers.

Mr. Fullerton—No, sir ; because he does not know.

Mr. Evarts—I asked for envelopes that accompanied the letters to the parties, and I want the envelopes and the letters to go together.

Mr. Fullerton—Whenever the time comes for me to prove that letter was sent in that envelope, I shall do so ; I cannot do it with the present witness.

Mr. Evarts—You proposed it.

Mr. Fullerton—No ; I proposed it so far as to put it in evidence, and have them marked for identification, so as to be ready to go a step further and put them in evidence.

Judge Neilson—On the assumption that you will connect them hereafter, it is proper.

Mr. Evarts—I want them connected.

Judge Neilson—On the assumption that you will do that it is proper.

Mr. Beach—If the gentleman wants them connected, let him connect them.

Mr. Evarts—You bring new papers and put them in the witness's hands. After I have asked for the envelopes and letters then you produce this letter and that envelope and put them in this witness's hands. I observe there is no such relation between the two papers as necessarily connects them, and then I ask you if you put them together as one letter, as they are, as I suppose, and I don't want you to separate them hereafter.

Mr. Fullerton—I don't propose to separate them hereafter.

Mr. Evarts—Then go on.

Mr. Fullerton—I will go on when it suits me to go on ; I don't propose to take orders from you in that spirit. I think you have a little forgotten yourself to-day.

Mr. Evarts—Go on ; I waive my objection.

Mr. Fullerton—Judge Neilson, I have proceeded, if your Honor please, in an orderly course. I put the envelope in the hands of the witness, and I proved the superscription to be in the handwriting of Mr. Beecher. I then proposed to have it marked for identification. I proved by the same witness a letter in the handwriting of Mr. Beecher, which I propose to read in evidence now, and if it subserves our purpose hereafter, and not without, we shall prove by another witness that that letter was in that envelope.

Judge Neilson—Meantime this envelope is marked for identification.

Mr. Fullerton—That is all we propose to do with it now, except either on our own motion or on the dictation of my adversary.

Judge Neilson—Counsel don't intend to dictate.

Mr. Fullerton—It looks very much like it [reading].

ANOTHER OF THE CLANDESTINE LETTERS.

The blessing of God rest upon you. Every spark of life and warmth in your own house will be a star and a sun in my dwelling. Your note broke like Spring upon Winter, and gave me an inward rebound to life. No one can ever know, none but God, through what a dreary wilderness I have wandered. There was Mt. Sinai, there was the barren sand, and there was the alternation of hope and despair that marked the pilgrimage of old. If only it might lead to the Promised Land—or, like Moses, shall I die on the border. Your hope and courage are like medicine. Should God inspire you to restore and rebuild at home, and while doing it to cheer and sustain outside of it another who sorely needs help in heart and spirit, it will prove a life so noble as few are able to live, and in another world the emancipated soul may utter thanks!

If it would be of comfort to you, now and then, to send me a letter of true inwardness—the outcome of your inner life—it would be safe, for I am now at home here with my sister; and it is permitted to you and will be an exceeding refreshment to me, for your heart experiences are often like bread from heaven to the hungry. God has enriched your moral nature. May not others partake?

Mr. Fullerton—That letter, if the Court please, is also without signature.

Q. Do you know anything of the writing of that letter?
A. No, Sir.

Q. Your permission, then, was not obtained, nor so far as you know, was Theodore's obtained for the writing of that letter?
A. No, Sir.

(Letter marked "Exhibit No. 13.")

Mr. Fullerton—I desire to have the envelope marked for identification.

(Envelope marked "No. 13" for identification.)

Q. [Handing paper to witness.] I now show you another paper and ask you whose handwriting it is?
A. Elizabeth Tilton's.

Q. Did it come into your possession at any time?
A. Yes, Sir. Did it what, Sir?

Q. Did it come to you in your possession?
A. It came into my possession; yes, Sir.

Q. From whom did you receive it?
A. From Mr. Beecher.

Mr. Fullerton—I offer the letter in evidence.

Mr. Evarts—If your Honor please, Mr. Fullerton suggests that the air is somewhat close here.

Judge Neilson—Will the officer open that window? Pull down the upper part further, please.

Mr. Fullerton—(Reading.)

MR. BEECHER: FRIDAY, April 21, 1871.

A. Mr. Moulton has returned, will you not use your influence to have the papers in his possession destroyed? My heart bleeds night and day at the injustice of their existence

Mr. Fullerton—No signature.

Letter marked "Exhibit No. 14."

Q. [Handing letter to witness:] I hand you still another letter, and state to me, if you please, in whose handwriting it is?
A. Elizabeth Tilton's.

Q. From whom did you receive it if any one?
A. From Mr. Beecher.

Q. When?
A. Does it bear date? I did not look to see whether it bore date.

Q. May 3d, 1871?
A. About that time, Sir,

Mr. Fullerton—I offer it in evidence.

MR. BEECHER:

MAY 3, 1871.

My future either for life or death would be happier could I but feel that you forgave me while you forget me. In all the sad complications of the past years, my endeavor was entirely to keep from you all suffering, to bear myself alone, leaving you forever ignorant of it. My weapons were love, a larger untiring generosity and nest-hiding!

[To Mr. Shearman:] Nest-hiding is underscored, I believe, Mr. Shearman?

Mr. Shearman—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Fullerton—And an exclamation marked after it?

Mr. Shearman—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Fullerton—[Continuing the reading of the letter.]

"That I failed utterly, we both know, but I now ask forgiveness."

Letter marked "Exhibit No. 15."

Q. Do you remember, some time after the receipt of this letter that has been shown to you, of a poem that was published in The Golden Age, Theodore Tilton being the author?
A. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Evarts—How is that relevant, if your Honor please—a poem by Mr. Tilton?

Mr. Fullerton—His Honor don't know as well as I do how it is relevant.

Mr. Evarts—Of course not.

Mr. Fullerton—Perhaps I had better tell I have not got to that point yet. I will state to your Honor, when it is proposed to be read, what the pertinency of it is.

Q. Do you recollect that poem?
A. Very well, indeed, Sir.

Q. State what followed between you and Mr. Beecher, if anything, after the publication of that poem?
A. I saw Mr. Beecher.

Q. Where?
A. Walking over to New York with him—I had crossed from the Brooklyn shore with him.

Q. What did he say in regard to that poem?
A. He said that he was very sorry that it had been published: that it almost broke his heart to read it; that he thought that Theodore Tilton ought not to have published it; that he considered it virtually a telling of the story of himself and Elizabeth. He said he thought it was indelicate for Theodore to have done it. I guess I said that, by the way, myself; yes, Sir, I said that.

Q. That it was indelicate?
A. Yes, Sir; I said it.

Q. Was there anything said about it being a breach of the understanding about keeping the matter secret?
A. No, Sir; not that I remember.

Mr. Fullerton—I now offer the poem in evidence.

Judge Neilson—Go on and read it.

THE SIGNIFICANT POEM.

Mr. Fullerton—It is entitled, "Sir Marmaduke's Musings. By Theodore Tilton:"

I won a noble fame,
But, with a sudden frown,
The people snatched my crown,
And in the mire trod down
My lofty name.

I bore a bounteous purse,
And beggars by the way
Then blessed me day by day,
But I, grown poor as they,
Have now their curse.

I gained what men called friends,
But now their love is hate,
And I have learned too late
How mated minds unmated,
And friendship ends.

I clasped a woman's breast,
As if her heart I knew,
Or fancied, would be true,
Who proved—alas, she too
False like the rest.

I am now all bereft—
As when some tower doth fall,
With battlements and wall,
And gate and bridge and all—
And nothing left.

But I account it worth
All pangs of fair Love crossed—
All loves and honors lost—
To gain the heavens, at cost
Of losing earth.

So, lest I be inclined
To render ill for ill,
Henceforth in me instill,
Oh! God, a sweet good will
To all mankind.

Sleepy Hollow, November 1st., 1871.

The poem was marked Exhibit No. 16.

Mr. Fullerton—If your Honor please, I could not finish another topic if I commenced it, and it would break the continuity of it. I, therefore, ask your Honor to adjourn.

Judge Nielson, to the Jury—Return to your places, Gentlemen, at 2 o'clock.

The Witness—May I "step down," your Honor?

Judge Nielson—Yes, sir.

Mr. Mallison—(the Clerk)—The Court will now take a recess until two o'clock.

TILTON DROPPED BY THE CHURCH.

The Court met at 2 p. m., pursuant to adjournment.

FRANCIS D. MOULTON's direct examination was resumed.

Mr. Fullerton [handing witness a paper]—The paper being shown you, I ask whether you ever saw it before? A. Yes, Sir; I have seen it before.

Q. Where? A. It was sent to me by Mr. Beecher.

Q. In whose handwriting is it? A. Henry Ward Beecher's.

Q. Did you have any conversation at the time? A. About that time we had conversation; yes, Sir.

Q. Anything to which the letter may relate? A. Yes, Sir; with reference to dropping Theodore Tilton's name from the roll of the church.

Q. State what that conversation was, if it were prior to the writing of the letter in question. A. Mr. Beecher said he was exceedingly anxious that Mr. Tilton should take some action by which his name should be dropped from the roll—voluntary action on his part. The conversation that I had with him on that subject was sometime prior to this note.

Mr. Fullerton—I offer it in evidence [handing the letter to defendant's counsel].

Q. In that conversation did Mr. Beecher give any reasons why he thought that course was advisable; if so, state what they were? A. Mr. Beecher said he thought it would save trouble in the Church if they were free from responsibility for him. He said that if he was no longer a member of the Church, why, then, they could not investigate him as a church. He said he thought there would not be any safety unless he did have his name dropped from the roll of the Church by letter, in keeping the scandal down—the facts in regard to Mr. Beecher and Mrs. Tilton.

Mr. Fullerton [reading the letter]—

THE LETTER EXPLAINING THE POLICY OF DROPPING TILTON'S NAME.

DECEMBER 3, 1871.

MY DEAR FRIEND: There are two or three who will feel anxious to press action on the case. It will only serve to raise profitless excitement where we need to have quieting.

There are already complexities enough. We do not want to run the risk of the complications which, in such a body, no man can foresee, and no one control. Once free from a sense of responsibility for him, and there would be a strong tendency for a kindly feeling to set in, which is now checked by the membership, without attendance, sympathy or doctrinal agreement.

Since the connection is really formal and not vital or sympathetic, why should it continue with all the risk of provoking irritating measures. Every day's reflection satisfies me that this is the course of wisdom, and that T. will be the stronger and B. the weaker for it.

You said that you meant to effect it. Can't it be done promptly? If a letter is written it had better be very short, simply announcing withdrawal, and, perhaps, with an expression of kind wishes, &c.

You will know. I shall be in town Monday and part of Tuesday. Shall I hear from you?

Dec. 3, 1871.

(Letter marked "Exhibit No. 17.")

Q. What occurred after the writing of that letter, if anything? A. I think I met Mr. Beecher after the letter, and told him that I would try to effect his wishes in that matter with Theodore Tilton.

Q. Was anything done? A. I think that it was subsequent to the letter. Yes, sir; something was done. Theodore Tilton wrote a letter—I don't remember to whom, whether it was to the Trustees of the Church or not—but wrote a letter disavowing connection with it.

Mr. Everts—No matter about the letter, it will speak for itself.

The Witness—Yes.

Q. There is still another letter, Mr. Moulton [handing witness a letter]. State whether you know anything of it? A. It is in Henry Ward Beecher's handwriting.

Q. The envelope also [handing witness the envelope]? A. Yes, sir; the envelope also.

Mr. Fullerton—I offer it in evidence.

THE WRITTEN PRAYER FOR MRS. TILTON.

20TH JANUARY, 1873.

Now may the God of peace that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant, make you perfect in every good work to do His will, working in you that which is well-pleasing in His sight, through Jesus Christ.

This is my prayer day and night. This world ceases to hold me as it did. I live in the thought and hope of the coming immortality, and seem to myself most of the time to be standing on the edge of the other life, wondering whether I may not at any hour hear the call to "Come up hither." I shall be in New Haven next week to begin my course of lectures to the theological class on preaching. My wife takes boat for Havana and Florida on Thursday. I called on Wednesday, but you were out. I hope you are growing stronger and happier. May the dear Lord and Savior abide with you. Very truly yours,

H. W. BEECHER.

(Letter marked "Exhibit No. 18.")

Mr. Fullerton—I also read on envelope:

Brooklyn, January 20, 8 P.M. New-York, Mrs. Elizabeth Tilton, Livingston-st., Brooklyn.

(Marked "Exhibit 18.")

Q. Still another letter, Mr. Moulton, and state in whose handwriting it is [handing witness a letter]. A. In the handwriting of Henry Ward Beecher.

Q. To whom was that letter written? A. Written to me.

Q. Did you receive it? A. I did.

Q. From him? A. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Fullerton—I offer it in evidence.

MR. BEECHER'S MELANCHOLY LETTER TO MOULTON.

MONDAY, February 5, 1872.

MY DEAR FRIEND: I leave town to-day and expect to pass through from Philadelphia to New-Haven. I shall not be here till Friday.

About two weeks ago I met T. in the cars going to B. He was kind. We talked much. At the end he told me to go on with my work without the least anxiety, in so far as his feelings and actions were the occasion of apprehension.

On returning home from New-Haven (where I am three days in the week, delivering a course of lectures to the theological students), I found a note from E. saying that T. felt hard towards me, and was going to see or write me before leaving for the West.

She kindly added, "Do not be cast down. I bear this almost always, but the God in whom we trust will deliver us all safely. I know you do and are willing abundantly to help him, and I also know your embarrassments." These were words of warning, but also of consolation, for I believe E. is beloved of God, and that her prayers for me are sooner heard than mine for myself or for her. But it seems that a change has come to T. since I saw him in the cars. Indeed, ever since he has felt more intensely the force of the feeling in society and the humiliations which environ his enterprise; he has growingly felt that I had a power to help which I did not develop, and I believe that you have participated in this feeling. It is natural you should. T. is dearer to you than I can be. He is with you. All his trials lie open to your eye daily. But I see you but seldom, and my personal relations, environments, necessities, limitations, dangers, and perplexities you cannot see or imagine. If I had not gone through this great year of sorrow, I would not have believed that anyone could pass through my experience, and be alive or sane. I have been the centre of three distinct circles, each one of which required clear-mindedness and peculiarly inventive or origination powers, viz.:

1. The great church.
2. The newspaper.
3. The book.

The first I could neither get out of nor elight. The sensitiveness of so many of my people would have made any appearance of trouble or any remission of force an occasion of alarm and notice, and have excited, when it was important that rumors should die and everything be quieted.

The newspaper I did roll off, doing but little except give general directions, and in so doing I was continually spurred and exhorted by those in interest. It could not be helped.

The "Life of Christ," long delayed, had locked up the capital of the firm, and was likely to sink them—finished it must be. Was ever book born of such sorrow as that was? The interior history of it will never be written.

During all this time you, literally, were all my stay and comfort. I should have fallen on the way but for the courage which you inspired and the hope which you breathed.

My vacation was profitable. I came back, hoping that the bitterness of death was passed. But T.'s troubles brought back the cloud, with even severer suffering. For all this Fall and Winter I have felt that you did not feel satisfied with me, and that I seemed, both to you and T., as contenting myself with a cautious or sluggish policy, willing to save myself but not to risk anything for T. I have again and again probed my heart to see whether I was truly liable to such feeling, and the response is unequivocal that I am not. No man can see the difficulties that environ me, unless he stands where I do.

To say that I have a church on my hands is simple enough—but to have the hundreds and thousands of men pressing me, each one with his keen suspicion, or anxiety, or zeal; to see tendencies which, if not stopped, would break out into ruinous defense of me; to stop them without seeming to do it; to prevent any one questioning me; to meet and allay prejudices against T. which had their beginning years before this; to keep serene, as if I was not alarmed or disturbed; to be cheerful at home and among friends when I was suffering the torments of the damned; to pass sleepless nights often, and yet to come up fresh and full for Sunday;—all this may be talked about, but the real thing cannot be understood from the outside, nor its wearing and grinding on the nervous system.

God knows that I have put more thought and judgment and earnest desire into my efforts to prepare a way for T. and E. than ever I did for myself a hundred fold. As to the outside public, I have never lost an opportunity to soften prejudices or refute falsehoods, and to excite kindly feeling among all whom I met. I am thrown among clergymen, public men, and generally the makers of public opinion, and I have used every rational endeavor to repair the evils which have been visited upon T., and with increasing success.

But the roots of this prejudice are long. The catastrophe which precipitated him from his place only disclosed feelings that had existed long. Neither he nor you can be aware of the feelings of classes in society, on other grounds than late rumors. I mention this to explain why I know with absolute certainty that no mere statement, letter, testimony or affirmation will reach the root of affairs and reinstate them. TIME and WORK WILL.

But chronic evil requires chronic remedies. If my destruction would place him all right, that shall not stand in the way. I am willing to step down and out. No one can offer more than that. That I do offer. Sacrifice me without hesitation if you can clearly see your way to his safety and happiness thereby. I do not think that anything would be gained by it. I should be destroyed, but he would not be saved. E. and the children would have their future clouded. In one point of view I could desire the sacrifice on my part. Nothing can possibly be so bad as the horror of great darkness in which I spend much of my time. I look upon death as sweeter-faced than any friend I have in the world. Life would be pleasant if I could see that rebuilt which is shattered. But to live on the sharp and ragged edge of anxiety, remorse, fear, despair, and yet to put on all the appearance of serenity and happiness, cannot be endured much longer.

I am well-high discouraged. If you, too, cease to trust me—to love me—I am alone; I have not another person in the world to whom I could go.

Well, to God I commit all. Whatever it may be here, it shall be well there. With sincere gratitude for your heroic friendship, and with sincere affection, even though you love me not, I am yours (though unknown to you).

(Signed)

H. W. B.

Q. I omitted to ask you a question in reference to the last letter but one which I read in evidence, which is marked "Exhibit 18," in which occurs this sentence: "My wife takes boat for Havana and Florida on Thursday." Was that letter written with your knowledge or approbation? A. No, sir; I didn't know anything about the letter.

Q. In whose handwriting is the paper I now hand you [handing witness a paper]? A. Henry Ward Beecher's.

Mr. Fullerton [reading the paper]—

MY DEAR MRS. TILTON: If I don't see you to-morrow night, I will next Friday, for I shall be gone all the fore part of the next week. Truly yours,

H. W. B.

(Letter marked "Exhibit No. 20.")

Q. Again, in whose handwriting is the paper that I now show you [handing witness a paper]? A. In the handwriting of Mr. Beecher.

Mr. Fullerton [reading the letter]—

BEECHER MORE BANGUINE.

MONDAY.

MY DEAR FRIEND: I called last evening as agreed, but you had stepped out. On the way to church last evening I met Claflin. He says that F. denies any such treacherous whisperings, and is in a right state.

I mentioned my proposed letter. He likes the idea. I read him the draft of it (in lecture-room). He drew back and said, better send it. I asked if B. had ever made him statement of the very bottom facts; if there were any charges I did not know. He evaded and intimated that if he had he hardly would be right in telling me. I think he would be right in telling you—ought to. I have not sent any note, and have destroyed that prepared.

The real point to avoid is an appeal to church and then a council.

It would be a conflagration, and give each possible chance for parties, for hidings and evasions, and increase an hundred-fold their scandal, without healing anything.

I shall see you as soon as I return.

Meantime I confide everything to your wisdom, as I always have, and with such success hitherto that I have full trust for future.

Don't fail to see C. and have a full and confidential talk.

Yours, ever,

Q. That letter was addressed to you, I believe? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. When was it received, as near as you can tell? A. I don't remember, Sir. If you will let me look at the letter, perhaps I can tell you something about it. [Looking at the letter.] It was received before May 25th, 1873. I fix the date by this fact, that Mr. Bowen was reported to be reiterating the charges against Mr. Beecher, and I had a conference with him, shortly after this letter, I think.

Q. Do you know, from anything that occurred between you and Mr. Beecher, who Mr. B. is in that letter? A. Yes, Sir; Mr. Bowen.

Q. And who is C. named in that letter. A. Mr. Claflin.

Q. Do you know what proposed letter there was at that time, which is spoken of in this communication? A. There was a proposed letter to Mr. Bowen.

Mr. Evarts—Q. Well, what passed between you and Mr. Beecher? A. Mr. Beecher and myself had a conference, and he said he thought he should write a letter to Mr. Bowen with regard to his stories against him.

Mr. Fullerton—Is that what is referred to in the letter?

Mr. Evarts—Well, let us hear the conversation.

THE FIRST WOODHULL PUBLICATION AND ITS RESULTS.

Mr. Fullerton—You understand it. We will come right to it. [To the witness.] Now I want to call your attention to a publication of Mrs. Victoria Woodhull sometime in 1872. Do you remember it? A. I remember there was a publication from Victoria Woodhull in one of the New York papers, or in two of them—The World.

Q. Do you recollect the date of it? A. No; I don't remember the date just now. In 1872.

Mr. Shearman—The 23d of May, 1871.

Mr. Fullerton—Yes. [To the witness.] Did you read that publication? A. Yes, Sir. Are you talking now about the publication of 1871 or 1873?

Q. I am talking about the card. A. Yes, Sir, I read it.

Q. May 23, 1871, as my attention was called to the date? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Look at the paper I now show you and say whether it is a correct copy from the newspaper as you recollect it. [Handing witness a paper.] A. Yes, Sir; I remember that.

Mr. Fullerton—I offer that in evidence. It is from The World, Monday, May 22, 1871.

THE WOODHULL CARD.

A Card from Mrs. Woodhull.

To the Editor of the World:

SIR: Because I am a woman, and because I conscientiously hold opinions somewhat different from the self-elected orthodoxy which men find their profit in supporting, and because I think it my bounden duty and my absolute right to put forward my opinions, and to advocate them with my whole strength, self-elected orthodoxy assails me, vilifies me, and endeavors to cover my life with ridicule and dishonor. This has been particularly the case in reference to certain law proceedings into which I was recently drawn by the weakness of one very near relative, and the profligate selfishness of other relations. One of the charges made against me is that I live in the same house with my former husband, Dr. Woodhull, and my present husband, Col. Blood. The fact is a fact. Dr. Woodhull being sick, ailing and incapable of self-support, I felt it my duty to myself and to human nature, that he should be cared for, although his incapacity were in no wise attributable to me. My present husband, Col. Blood, not only approves of this charity, but co-operates in it. I esteem it one of the most virtuous acts of my life: but various editors have stigmatized me as a living example of immorality and unchastity. My opinions and principles are subjects of just criticism. I put myself before the public voluntarily. I know full well that the public will criticise me, my motives and actions in their own way and at their own time. I accept the position. I except to no fair analysis and examination, even if the scalpel be a little merciless. But let him that be without sin, cast the stone. I do not intend to be made the scapegoat of sacrifice to be offered up as a victim to society, by those who cover over the foulness of their lives and the feculence of their thoughts with a hypocritical mantle of fair professions, and by diverting public attention from their own iniquity in pointing the finger at me. I know that many of my self-appointed judges and critics are deeply tainted with the vices they condemn; I live in the house with one who was my husband. I live as a wife with one who is my husband. I believe in spiritualism. I advocate free love in its highest, purest sense as the only cure for the immorality, the deep damnation by which men corrupt and disfigure God's most holy institution of sexual relation. My judges preach against "free love" openly, and practice it secretly; their outward seeming is fair, inwardly they are full of "dead men's bones and all manner of uncleanness." For example, I know of one man, a public teacher of eminence, who lives in concubinage with the wife of another public teacher of almost equal eminence. All three concur in denouncing offenses against morality. "Hypocrisy is the tribute paid by vice to virtue." So be it: but I decline to stand up as the "frightful example." I shall make it my business to analyze some of these lives, and will take my chances in the matter of libel suits.

I have no faith in critics, but I believe in justice.

VICTORIA C. WOODHULL.

(Dated) NEW-YORK, May 27, 1871.

Marked "Ex. No. 22."

Q. After the publication of that card I ask you what occurred with reference to yourself, Mr. Tilton and Mr. Beecher? A. Mr. Tilton came to me and said that he had been sent for by Victoria Woodhull, that he had gone to see her, and that she had poured out upon him stories derogatory to the character of Mr. Beecher, and had connected his (Mr. Tilton's) wife's name with Mr. Beecher as it was connected in this article. I saw Mr. Beecher about it. I told him that I thought it would be necessary in some way to influence that woman against the publication of the stories; that I thought I ought to see her, and he said he hoped I would, and I did see her in consequence of my consultation with Mr. Beecher.

Q. Up to that time had you ever seen her? A. I saw her once before I saw Mr. Beecher, once or twice.

Q. Well, go on and state what occurred? A. With Mr. Beecher?

Q. Yes, Sir. A. I have stated what occurred.

Q. After seeing her did you see Mr. Beecher? A. Yes, Sir; I saw her after Mr. Beecher, and I saw Mr. Beecher after I saw her.

Q. That is what I wanted to call your attention to. What did you state to Mr. Beecher as having occurred between yourself and Mrs. Woodhull? A. I told him that I had said to Mrs. Woodhull that the stories against Mr. Beecher had their original foundation in stories told by Mr. Bowen; that when Mr. Bowen was asked to present the evidence upon which he based his stories, he did not present that evidence, and I told him I had worked a fair influence upon the woman, that I had undertaken to show her how wrong it would be to be vindictive; there was nothing to be gained by that, and said to him that I thought that I found her amenable to moral influence, which I undertook to use upon her, and he expressed his gratification.

Q. What did he say? A. He said that he was gratified that I had had the interview with her, and thanked me for it.

Q. Nothing was published, I believe, after that, for some time at least? A. No, Sir. I believe there was, Sir, a kindly article published in Woodhull & Claflin's paper concerning Mr. Beecher.

Mr. Evarts—Well, unless the article is to be produced, we don't care for it.

(Paper to which witness last testified, marked "Exhibit No. 23.")

Mr. Fullerton—I ask you if you recollect of anything else that occurred after your interview with Mr. Beecher, and that you have last spoken of in regard to this matter before the publication of Mrs. Woodhull in the Autumn of 1872? A. I don't at the present moment remember.

Q. Then, Sir, what occurred in November, 1872, with reference to Mrs. Woodhull? A. There was a publication in Woodhull & Claflin's paper.

Q. In regard to this? A. Yes, Sir; in regard to Mr. Beecher, Mrs. Tilton and Mr. Tilton.

Q. Now, what occurred upon that publication? A. I saw Mr. Beecher shortly after the publication.

Q. State what occurred between you? A. Mr. Beecher said that he had come to consult with me as to what it was best to do with reference to that publication; what reply could be made to it, if any reply could be made. He said he saw no hope for him since that story had been published. I told him that I thought silence would kill that story; and that if he kept silent with regard to it, simply pointing to his past life as an answer to it, and saying that if that was not an answer he did not choose to make any, that it would kill that story, in my opinion so far as any evil effect of it upon him was concerned. We consulted frequently concerning it, and did not arrive at any other conclusion than that silence was best. I said to Mr. Beecher, "If I say anything about it I think this will be the best thing for me to say uniformly; that if the story is true, it was infamous to tell; and if it was false, it was diabolical to have told it; and that if his life was not an answer to it, I could not choose to make any—I should not choose to make any to anybody." Mr. Beecher said to me that he thought it would be judicious for me to make such a reply as that; and I met him after this conversation, and I told him that I had made such a reply as that to several parties, and it appeared to satisfy them. I told him that I had been pressed close by one or two people, and I had denied that he was an impure man—had denied that outright, I did.

Q. Well, I want to ask you whether in this article published by Mrs. Woodhull, illicit intercourse between Mr. Beecher and Mrs. Tilton was charged?

Mr. Evarts—Oh! the article should be produced.

Mr. Fullerton—Well, if you want the article—

Mr. Evarts—We don't want the article.

Mr. Fullerton—You can have the whole of it in, or have that part in. I propose to leave it out if you will admit an answer to that question, and pay no further attention to it.

Mr. Evarts—I cannot agree to any substitute for evidence.

Mr. Fullerton—I propose to give that in evidence, Sir, whether that was charged in that paper. It is not necessary that we should produce it here.

Judge Neilson—Does the learned counsel stand upon the objection that the paper would best show ?

Mr. Evarts—Yes, Sir.

Judge Neilson—Then you cannot do it. You must produce the paper ; if you produce the paper, and identify it, you can eliminate that one sentence.

Mr. Fullerton—Well, Sir, we will go on then with the evidence, and introduce the paper to-morrow.

Q. I want to ask you what reply Mr. Beecher made, if any, when you informed him that you had denied flatly to two or three persons that he was an impure man ? A. He thanked me for the pains I had taken.

Q. Now, during these interviews between you and Mr. Beecher with reference to that publication, where was Mr. Tilton ? A. Mr. Tilton, I believe, in the beginning, was in New Hampshire.

Q. And when he returned did he participate in any way ? A. Yes; he was present at an interview between Mr. Beecher and myself.

Q. What took place at that interview ? A. Mr. Tilton said to Mr. Beecher that he was not at all responsible for that story. Mr. Beecher said he did not believe he was. Mr. Tilton asked Mr. Beecher how he thought it was best to meet that story. Mr. Beecher told him he did not see exactly how to meet it, at that interview—that is what was said there. I told Mr. Tilton that I thought it was best to be silent, not to attempt any reply to the story. That is the substance of what occurred there.

Q. Do you recollect whether there was a proposed card to publish in reference to it ? A. There was, subsequent to that interview.

Q. When was this interview that you now speak of ? A. Sometime subsequent to that—some time during that month, of the first part of December.

Q. When was the interview at which the proposed card—?

Mr. Beach—That is the one he has given the date of, isn't it ? Witness—I say it was some time in the latter part of November or December.

Q. Subsequent ? A. Yes; subsequent to this interview; yes, Sir.

Q. When was the interview at which the card appeared, or was proposed ? A. Some time after this interview, Sir—the first interview, of which we have spoken, between Mr. Tilton and Mr. Beecher, the latter part of November or December.

Mr. Beach—Well, which was the latter part of November ? A. The last, Sir.

Mr. Evarts—When was the other ? A. On election day, I think, Sir.

Q. That would be earlier ? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Mr. Fullerton—What occurred when the card was proposed. A. Mr. Tilton declined to publish any card; he declined to consider such a card, and he said it would only lead to further controversy, and he could not denounce those women to save Mr. Beecher from the result of his crime.

Q. What did Mr. Beecher reply to that ? A. Don't remember his reply.

Q. What paper is that that is now handed you ? A. It is the handwriting of Henry Ward Beecher with regard to the proposed card for Theodore Tilton to make. Mr. Tilton told Mr. Beecher at that interview that he knew perfectly well the circumstances under which he (Mr. Tilton) had come in contact with Mrs. Woodhull, and he said that Mr. Beecher must understand that such a card as that would be a very unjust card, and an untrue card for him to publish.

Mr. Fullerton—I shall offer it in evidence.

THE PROPOSED DENUNCIATION OF WOODHULL BY TILTON.

"In an unguarded enthusiasm, I hoped well and much of one who has proved utterly unprincipled. I shall never again notice her stories, and now utterly repudiate her statements made concerning me and mine."

By Mr. Evarts—That was the proposed card for Mr. Tilton to publish ? A. Mr. Beecher's proposed card ? yes, Sir.

Q. For Mr. Tilton to publish ? A. Yes, Sir; he recommended, certainly, Mr. Tilton to publish it.

Q. It was not to be signed by Mr. Beecher, it was to be signed by Mr. Tilton ? A. To be signed by Mr. Tilton : yes, Sir.

Card marked "Exhibit A—No. 23."

Mr. Fullerton—When Mr. Tilton said to Mr. Beecher, "You know the circumstances under which my acquaintance with Mrs. Woodhull commenced," did he state these circumstances ? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. What did he say ? A. He said that he had formed the acquaintance of Victoria Woodhull in the beginning in consequence of the card which originally appeared in The World and that from that time onward up to the Spring of 1872, he had undertaken to use his utmost influence upon her, in a kindly way, for the purpose of suppressing the story concerning Mr. Beecher and his wife, and an unguarded enthusiasm, and that Mr. Beecher knew it was not an unguarded enthusiasm that led him to Mrs. Woodhull, but that he went to her for the purpose of protecting his family, and himself and Mr. Beecher, from the result of a story which she originally threatened.

Q. Did anything else occur at that interview, which you have not related, that you remember ? A. Nothing, but that Mr. Beecher was deeply affected at the interview.

Q. How was he affected ? A. Did not see any hope, did not see how the story was to be suppressed, he said, and he wept as usual.

Q. I now call your attention to December, 1872, about the 20th, a consultation between yourself and Mr. Tilton and Mr. Beecher in regard to a statement ? A. What is the date, Sir ?

Q. About December 20 ? A. 1872 ?

Q. Yes; about a proposed statement that was — A. Oh yes, I remember it.

Q. Where did that interview take place ? A. Took place at my house in Remsen street.

Q. State, if you please, what occurred. A. There were present Mr. Tilton, Mrs. Tilton, Mr. Beecher and myself. Mr. Tilton had communicated to me his intention of publishing what he had written, which was a story of the whole affair—the account of the whole affair. He had made one alteration in it, of statement from the exact truth or had stated the exact truth in language that was delicate, and he wanted Mr. Beecher to hear it read before it publication, and Mr. Beecher, at my invitation, came to hear it read, and Mr. Tilton said to Mr. Beecher, "I will read to you one passage from this statement, and, if you can stand that, you can stand any part of it," and he read to him a passage from that statement, which was about as follows as nearly as I can recollect.

Mr. Evarts—The statement will speak for itself.

Mr. Fullerton—What did he read?

Mr. Evarts—The statement will state.

Mr. Fullerton—No, what did he read?

Mr. Evarts—Exactly let us have the statement.

Mr. Fullerton—No, but he read from something. What did he say when he read?

Judge Neilson—I think it is a verbal communication directly to Mr. Beecher, and therefore it is admissible.

Mr. Evarts—No, I do not understand it so. He had a written paper from which he read. We want that written paper.

The Witness—Well, Mr. Tilton stated—

Mr. Evarts—Don't argue the question.

The Witness—I beg pardon.

Mr. Evarts—We think we are entitled to the written paper, and that parole evidence of its contents cannot be given.

Mr. Fullerton—I am asking what Mr. Tilton said, or read to Mr. Beecher on that occasion.

Judge Neilson—Well, ask him what he said.

By Mr. Fullerton—Well, what did he say when he read? Objected to.

Judge Neilson—Can you tell what he said, independently of the paper? A. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Evarts—Independently of reading from a paper, what did he say; that is, what other than what he read—

Mr. Fullerton—No, that is not my proposition.

Mr. Evarts—Well, I know that is not your proposition. It would not be extraordinary, if you did know it, because I have stated it very plainly.

Mr. Evarts—But his Honor has said—

Mr. Fullerton—I know his Honor has said, and you have said, and now I have a right to say, without interruption. We all have rights here.

Mr. Evarts—Of course you have rights here.

Mr. Fullerton—Well, it don't seem to be of course, from the way you addressed me now. Now, I propose to give in evidence what occurred between the parties on that occasion, and, if Mr. Tilton said or read anything, I want the witness to repeat what he said and what he read. I am not giving in evidence the document by any means. I do not propose that, and, even if I did, it is not such a document as it is necessary to produce here, in order to give it in evidence. What I desire to know is this; what communication was made, in any possible form, by Mr. Tilton to Mr. Beecher, that called from him a reply.

A SHARP BOUT OVER THE ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

Judge Neilson—Now, let us see what the answer to that is.

Mr. Evarts—The only answer on our part is that we want it according to the rules of evidence. It is stated that Mr. Tilton had written what is characteristic as a full statement, or true statement, or something of this matter which he proposed to publish. That I understand the witness has said, and he had it then there, and the conversation was concerning that paper and its publication. Thereupon Mr. Tilton undertook to read to Mr. Beecher a part of that paper, saying, "If you can stand that part of the paper, you can stand the next." That is what this witness has testified to. Now, we want that paper and the part of it that was read as it appeared in that paper, and it is not competent to recite out of a written paper by oral proposition what the written paper is the best evidence of. Both Mr. Tilton's statement and this witness's hearing, was a statement by the one and a hearing by the other of what was written on a paper, and was not an independent statement, nor so proposed. Now, my learned friends either are going to give that statement in evidence, or not, or that part of that statement in evidence, or not. When they produce that paper we will examine it and consider the question whether the whole or the part is admissible, if the whole or the part shall be proposed. But now our objection is that the oral statement of this written paper cannot be given in evidence unless the foundation for it is shown by showing also the destruction of the paper.

Mr. Fullerton—My proposition, Sir, is embraced in these few words: I propose to show what communication was made by Mr. Tilton on that occasion to Mr. Beecher. I do not care whether it originated in his own mind or whether it was read from the paper, printed or written. It makes no difference. What it was he said to him is what I have a right to and what I propose to prove.

Judge Neilson—I think the witness can state what was said to Mr. Beecher, although the stated matter had been incorporated in writing, if he needs it as a statement—what was read.

Mr. Evarts—But, if your Honor please, he stated that he read from the paper.

Judge Neilson—Well, it was a paper which was proposed. It does not appear to have been adopted or acted upon—an imperfect thing.

Mr. Evarts—I do not know that, Sir. If your Honor knows more of it than me—

Judge Neilson—I say it does not appear.

Mr. Fullerton—You knew it at the time—

Mr. Evarts—That he had written a paper which was a true statement, and which he proposed to publish. How your Honor knows it was an imperfect paper, I am sure I do not understand.

Judge Neilson—I did not say I knew it was. I said it did not appear to have been perfected. I think this witness can state anything which Mr. Tilton said to the defendant on that occasion.

Mr. Evarts—Although it was writing from a paper?

Judge Neilson—Although part of it had been written on a paper; yes, Sir.

Mr. Evarts—We except.

Mr. Fullerton—Now go on.

Mr. Evarts—Let me understand what your exception is—to a repetition by this witness of anything that was read as a part of that paper?

Judge Neilson—That is your objection. My ruling is that he may state anything that was stated by the plaintiff to the defendant on that occasion.

Mr. Evarts—Although it includes the recital of what was written from the paper?

Judge Neilson—Although it may include the recital of what had been written.

Mr. Evarts—What was read from the paper, if your Honor please, is what our point is. Our point, and we certainly are entitled to it, is that if this witness testifies that Mr. Tilton read from a paper, that that paper, as evidence of what he read, must be produced, and not the witness's memory.

Judge Neilson—Suppose that, prior to a conversation upon any question in interest, the witness makes a memorandum to assist him in the conversation. Is it to be doubted that he may go on with that conversation and use this paper, if need be, and afterwards prove what the conversation was without the production of the paper?

Mr. Evarts—The point is to take your Honor's ruling. I understand your Honor to have decided; but my objection is to the recital by this witness of a part of a paper that was read without the production of the paper.

Judge Neilson—My ruling is simply that he may state, if he can, all that the plaintiff said to the defendant on that occasion. That is all.

Mr. Fullerton—That is my question.

Mr. Evarts—Certainly your Honor proposes I shall either have the evidence excluded or my exception?

Judge Neilson—You take my ruling, of course.

Mr. Evarts—Ah! but your Honor refuses to rule upon my point, and states to me that you only rule upon something else. Now, I make an objection, and I bow to your Honor's ruling upon it, but I am entitled to one or the other.

Judge Neilson—I rule simply that he may state if he can all that the plaintiff said to the defendant on that occasion.

Mr. Evarts—And you don't rule that he may state any part of what was in that paper?

Judge Neilson—That is not involved in the proposition.

Mr. Evarts—Very well, then, I shall object to his reciting anything that was in that paper under your Honor's present ruling.

Judge Neilson—It is not a question of reading; it is a conversation between the parties.

Mr. Fullerton—What communication did Mr. Tilton make to Mr. Beecher at that interview? A. Mr. Tilton said to Mr. Beecher—

Mr. Evarts—Wait a moment. Did he read from a paper?

Mr. Beach—Wait one moment.

Judge Neilson—I think he may put that.

Mr. Fullerton—You have no right to interfere with my witness.

Mr. Evarts—I have a right to.

Mr. Fullerton—No; he is going on to state what Mr. Tilton said.

Mr. Evarts—Now, I have a right to the points of law, and I propose to have it.

Mr. Fullerton—I propose you shall not interrogate my witness while he is in my hands.

Mr. Evarts—Well, I propose to interrogate your witness while he is in your hands, to raise that question whether he is repeating from what is written, and it is the every day check of a witness who is proceeding to make a statement to ask whether that was in writing.

Judge Neilson—Undoubtedly where a writing exists affecting the interest of the parties.

Mr. Evarts—So I shall interrupt any witness with that ruling.

Mr. Fullerton—Well, you have done it; now, we will go on.

Mr. Evarts—Now, just answer the question.

Mr. Fullerton—State what Mr. Tilton said?

Mr. Evarts—No; answer the question whether it was in writing. [Laughter.]

Judge Neilson—I don't see why you should take such an interest in this question; it seems too simple to talk about.

Mr. Evarts—Does your Honor rule that I have no right to ask whether it was in writing?

Judge Neilson—Not with that view; your question has been taken down and exception.

Mr. Evarts—Well, if the witness now states anything that was in writing, I object to it.

Judge Neilson—Well, that saves your rights, perhaps.

THE FIRST PROPOSED STATEMENT.

Mr. Fullerton—Go on and state what communication—what did Mr. Tilton say to Mr. Beecher upon that occasion? A. Mr. Tilton said to Mr. Beecher: "Mr. Beecher, there is one thing in this statement which if you can stand, you can stand any part of it. Elizabeth has stated that you solicited her to become a wife to you, together with all that that implies, and I will read to you that part of the statement," and he did read to Mr. Beecher that part of the statement.

Q. Now, what did Mr. Beecher reply? A. And Mr. Beecher said, "Theodore you might just as well state the fact as to put it in that way;" and Mr. Beecher said to me after that interview that he would not stand in the position of a man who had solicited favors from a woman, and be put in the position of one who had been rejected by her, and I told him I sympathized with that view of the case. [Laughter and applause.]

Judge Neilson [to the audience]—You have the advantage to-day because of your numbers, but I certainly have the power to protect myself to-morrow morning. The audience has behaved very well to this moment. I want you to be still. I do not want your opinion upon this subject in any form.

Q. What reason, if any, did he give for making that? A. He gave the reason to me, Sir, subsequent to the interview; he went on at that interview and said to Mr. Tilton, "Mr. Tilton, of course you can do just as you please, but I think you ought not to publish that; it will kill me if you publish it."

Mr. Fullerton—I shall have to put in the original, perhaps at some future time.

Mr. Beach—Did I understand that Mr. Tilton was present at this time? A. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Fullerton—I call your attention to a still further interview in the month of December, 1872, when Mr. Carpenter was present. Do you recollect such a meeting? A. When, what, Sir?

Q. Do you recollect such a meeting—when Mr. Carpenter was present? A. In the latter part of December, 1872?

Q. Yes? A. The meeting with reference to a paper, do you mean?

Q. Yes? A. Yes.

Q. Before I go to that, however, let me ask you what reason Mr. Tilton assigned for writing this statement referred to in your last interview? A. Mr. Tilton said he thought it would be necessary to give the public some information concerning the story of Victoria Woodhull, that was the reason he gave.

Q. Now go to the interview where— A. I had a further conversation with Mr. Beecher on that subject.

Q. Well, state it? A. Yes; I had a further conversation with Mr. Beecher on the subject of that document, and I told him that I had said to Theodore Tilton that he must not publish it, that it would be cruel to publish it as against his family and as against Mr. Beecher; and that I had received from Theodore Tilton a promise that he would not publish it, and I had him put it—I told Mr. Beecher I had him put it—into a certain spot, and agree not to take it from that spot without my consent, and Mr. Beecher thanked me for this interference in his behalf.

Q. It was not published, was it? A. No, Sir.

Q. Now, the other interview in 1872, at which Mr. Carpenter was present—what occurred then?

Mr. Beach—The latter part of December, 1872? A. Mr. Carpenter spoke with Mr. Beecher about the establishment of—

Q. First tell us how you got together? A. I do not know; I believe Mr. Carpenter and Mr. Beecher came together to my house.

Q. What Mr. Carpenter [was it? A. Mr. Carpenter the artist—Frank Carpenter.

Q. Now, state what occurred. A. He wanted Mr. Beecher—he said to Mr. Beecher: “Will you entertain the idea of going into a newspaper? Wouldn’t it save all trouble if you should resign your ministry and go into a paper?” And Mr. Beecher said he was willing to take such a subject as that into consideration; and that was the substance of what occurred at that interview.

Q. Well, what was said about the paper? Give us the interview at length, as well as you can recollect it? A. I don’t remember much more about it than that.

Q. Do you recollect what time in December this was? A. The latter part of December.

Q. What, if anything, was said at that time about the length of time that Mr. Beecher had been pastor of the Church? A. I think something was said about the 25 years that he had been a pastor.

Mr. Evarts—By whom? A. By Mr. Carpenter. Mr. Carpenter referred to his illustrious career—said to Mr. Beecher: “You have had an illustrious career as a preacher; and now it seems to me that you could step from the pulpit into a journal, and save all these stories against yourself from being told”—put it in that view—in some such way as that; I forget the substance of it.

Mr. Fullerton—Did you hear anything more about that proposition afterward? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. From whom? A. From Mr. Beecher and from Mr. Carpenter.

Q. When they were together? A. No; I do not remember that they were together.

Q. What did Mr. Beecher say in regard to it at any subsequent time? A. I had an interview with Mr. Beecher in regard to it myself. I discountenanced the proposition; told him he had not better accept any such proposition; the place for him to work was in the pulpit—there is where he belonged, and to go out of the pulpit would be a virtual confession of the Woodhull story and the rumors against him.

Q. What did he reply to that, if anything? A. Well, that is what he told Mr. Carpenter—that is what he said he would tell Mr. Carpenter, and I believe he did tell Mr. Carpenter.

Mr. Evarts—That you do not know anything about? A. I do not know anything about that—whether he told Mr. Carpenter or not.

Mr. Fullerton—Do you recollect what was termed as “The Letter to My Complaining Friend,” which was published in December, 1872? A. Yes, Sir; I remember something about it.

Q. Did you have any conversation with Mr. Beecher afterward about it? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Did you see the letter in the newspaper? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. See if you recognize that as a reproduction of it?

Mr. Evarts—What is the date of that?

Mr. Fullerton—That is December, 1872.

Q. Do you recognize that as the letter? A. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Fullerton—I offer it in evidence (reading).

Mr. Fullerton read a few lines and then stumbled in the reading, and at the suggestion of Mr. Beach that he had better read it over again, began again as follows:

THE LETTER TO THE COMPLAINING FRIEND.

NO. 174 LIVINGSTON STREET,
BROOKLYN, December 27, 1872. }

MY COMPLAINING FRIEND:

Thanks for your good letter of bad advice. You say, “How easy to give the lie to the wicked story, and thus end it forever.” But stop and consider. The story is a whole library of statements—a hundred or more—and it would be strange if some of them were not correct, though I doubt if any are. To give a general denial to such an encyclopædia of assertions would be as vague and irrelevant as to take up The Police Gazette, with its twenty-four pages of illustrations, and say, “This is a lie.” So extensive a libel requires, if answered at all, a special denial of its several parts; and, furthermore, it requires, in this particular case, not only a denial of things misstated, but a truthful explanation of the things that remain unstated and in mystery. In other words, the false story, if met at all, should be confronted and confounded by the true one. Now, my friend, you urge me to speak; but when the truth is a sword, God’s mercy sometimes commands it sheathed. If you think I do not burn to defend my wife and little ones, you know not the fiery spirit within me. But my wife’s heart is more a fountain of charity, and quenches all resentments. She says, “Let there be no suffering, save to ourselves alone,” and forbids a vindication to the injury of others. From the beginning she has stood with her hand on my lips, saying, “Hush!” So, when you prompt me to speak for her, you countervail her more Christian mandate of silence. Moreover, after all, the chief victim of the public displeasure is myself alone, and, so long as this is happily the case, I shall try with patience to keep my answer within my own breast, lest it shoot forth like a thunder-bolt through other hearts.

Yours truly,

THEODORE TILTON.

By Mr. Fullerton—What occurred between yourself and Mr. Beecher with reference to that letter? What newspaper was it published in? A. In one of the Brooklyn papers.

Q. Do you recollect which one? A. I think I saw it in The Eagle, Sir.

Mr. Fullerton—The Brooklyn Eagle?

[Copy of letter marked "Exhibit No. 24."]

Q. What occurred between yourself and Mr. Beecher after the publication of that letter? I saw Mr. Beecher and he said that he regretted the publication of it very much—he thought that the letter might lead to further inquiry; he said he thought it might lead to further inquiry in the matter—might lead to the telling of the whole story. I told him that I considered the letter a very injudicious one for Theodore Tilton to write; agreed with him that he ought not to have written it in the interests of peace.

Q. Is that all of that interview that you recollect. A. That is the substance of it.

CIRCUMSTANCES OF THE TRIPARTITE COVENANT.

Q. Do you recollect the publication of what is termed the tripartite agreement? A. Yes, Sir; I do.

Q. What occurred, if anything, between yourself and Mr. Beecher in regard to it? A. With reference to the publication of the tripartite—

Q. What occurred between you after the publication of the tripartite agreement? A. After the publication of the tripartite covenant?

Q. Yes, Sir. A. Mr. Beecher was at my house, came to my house on Saturday morning, May 31, I think it was—I think the publication of the tripartite covenant was on May the 30th—came there, I believe, because I sent for him. I sent for him because Theodore Tilton had said to me that the publication of the "tripartite covenant" placed him in the position of a man forgiven for some crime by Mr. Beecher, and that he would not stand in that position.

Q. Did you state so to Mr. Beecher? A. I told Mr. Beecher at the house—Mr. Tilton told Mr. Beecher that at the house.

Q. When Mr. Tilton told Mr. Beecher this he was present? A. Yes.

Q. Just explain again. A. Certainly, Sir.

Q. Now, you and Mr. Tilton and Mr. Beecher met there together? A. Yes, Sir. I think I sent for Mr. Beecher in consequence of Mr. Tilton having told me that this "tripartite covenant"—the publication of it—put him in the position of a man forgiven by Mr. Beecher for some crime; he was not content to stand in such a position; that that was not the truth, and he would not stand in that position.

By Judge Nelson—Then Mr. Beecher came? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. And you had an interview? A. Yes, Sir.

By Mr. Fullerton—Now what occurred?

Mr. Evarts—The question is whether Mr. Tilton was there? A. Yes, Sir.

By Mr. Fullerton—After you told him what Mr. Tilton said with regard to the effect of that tripartite agreement? A. I was giving the reasons for sending for Mr. Beecher. Now Mr. Beecher comes, or has come to the house and he is present with Mr. Tilton, and Mr. Tilton said to Mr. Beecher: "Mr. Beecher, the publication of this 'tripartite covenant' puts me in the position of a man having been forgiven by you for some crime. Now you know that is not true; I can not stand in any such position as that, nor I won't stand in any such position as that. Now I want you to set that right or I will publish this card." And he had a card for publication, into which was incorporated apart or the whole of the letter of contrition, part of it, I think, of January the 1st, 1870.

Q. The letter that has been put in evidence of Jan. 1, 1870? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Mr. Beecher said: "Theodore, I don't see what can be done—what I can do? If you will indicate anything that I can do, I'm willing to do it; but, really, I don't see how I can. I don't think that you are right about it; I don't think that it puts you in that position." And Theodore said: "Well, it does put me in that position; and that's precisely what I shall do, unless—I shall publish this document unless you set the matter right; you ought to do it; I won't stand in that position." And Mr. Tilton, I believe, left that interview, and left me alone with Mr. Beecher, or else Mr. Beecher and myself went up into my study from the room in which we originally were; and Mr. Beecher said to me, that there seemed to be no end of complications; that as fast as we got out of one thing we seemed to get into another; that he had not been a party to the publication of the tripartite convention—that he had not been a party to it; and, if Theodore Tilton published that letter, it would simply be his death.

Q. Whose death? A. Mr. Beecher's death; I beg pardon, Sir; and I told him that I did not think it was worth while to give way to his feelings; that was what he generally did whenever an emergency came; and that if I had followed his advice, followed his fears, I should have given up the case long ago. I told him not to be distressed about it, for I thought we would find some way out; we had met difficulties before, and I told him that I thought it was not any more difficult to meet this matter than it was the Woodhull story; and if we meant to do right, one toward the other, I thought we could find a way that would settle the difficulty. If my recollection serves me right, Mr. Beecher came that Saturday night and said to me, with great despondency, that he had made up his mind to resign from Plymouth Church, and he showed to me a copy of the letter of resignation, showed to me a draft of a letter of resignation which he had prepared to be presented to the Trustees or some parties in the Church, proper parties; and I said to him that that would not do at all, that that was a virtual confession of the crime, and said that it was an act of cowardice on his part to do it—he ought to stand and undertake to prepare some sort of document that would meet the necessities of the case, and I told him that I thought such a card as that could be prepared. I think that Theodore Tilton was in the house on Saturday night, and I told him of Mr. Beecher's proposed action. I went down stairs; I think he was in my front room, and Mr. Tilton objected to the resignation, particularly to that part of it which said that Mr. Beecher—

Mr. Evarts—Well, it was a written paper, you know.

Witness—Yes, Sir. Can I say what Mr. Tilton said?

Judge Neilson—Not unless there is consent.

Mr. Fullerton—Before we go any further, state whether that is the proposed card of Mr. Tilton.

Mr. Morris—That is a copy that I made myself from the—

Mr. Fullerton—I will substitute the original for it.

Mr. Evarts—Well, we will not quarrel about it; go on. This copy is allowed to be used for the moment in place of the original which is not at hand, but the original is to be produced, otherwise it goes for nothing.

Judge Neilson—Yes, Sir. [Paper handed to witness.]

The Witness—That is what I remember, Sir, about it.

TILTON'S CARD OF EXPLANATION.

To the Editor of the Brooklyn Eagle:

Samuel Wilkeson, a business partner of Henry Ward Beecher, authorized the publication of a part of a document touching the relations of Mr. Beecher and Henry C. Bowen. This document, without the addition of another, of which I presume Mr. Wilkeson had no knowledge, grossly misrepresents Mr. Beecher's relation to myself. The extent of this misrepresentation, even by well meaning journalists, is shown by the following extract from The New York Express:

"Something, under the circumstances, was due to the public, Mr. Beecher should remember, as well as to his peculiar friends, Mr. Bowen and Mr. Tilton, and hence, while it was well enough to forgive them for the great,—we had almost said the irreparable injury, they have done him, it is to be regretted that he did not bring the alleged slanderer or slanderers into open court, to be dealt with there as they deserved."

The above indicates the feeling of a great many good men and women as to my supposed unjust behavior towards Mr. Beecher, and is based on the notion that I have slandered a clergyman, that I have retracted the slander, and that I have been forgiven by him and magnanimously restored to his confidence. This impression, which is now becoming general, is a grievous wrong to me and my family. No longer can I consent to remain in a false position before the public. I, therefore, append the following statement by Mr. Beecher:

"BROOKLYN, January 1st, 1871.

In trust with F. D. Moulton.

MY DEAR FRIEND MOULTON: I ask through you Theodore Tilton's forgiveness, and I humble myself before him as I do before my God. He would have been a better man in my circumstances than I have been. I can ask nothing except that he will remember all the other hearts that would ache. I will not plead for myself. I even wish that I were dead; but others must live and suffer.

I will die before any one but myself shall be implicated. All my thoughts are running towards my friends, towards the poor child lying there and praying with her folded hands. She is guiltless—sinned against; bearing the transgression of another. Her forgiveness I have. I humbly pray God that he may put it into the heart of her husband to forgive me.

I have trusted this to Moulton in confidence.

(Signed)

H. W. BEECHER."

The above document will show whether it is I who have wronged Mr. Beecher, or Mr. Beecher who has wronged me.

THEODORE TILTON.

174 Livingston street, June 7th, 1873.

Q. [Handing paper to witness.] Do you recollect whether anything was said about the erasure in that letter of January 1st, 1870, which appears there? A. Yes, Sir; Mr. Theodore Tilton said that the introduction of that clause, if I remember rightly, would be a virtual confession, or statement of adultery between Mr. Beecher and his wife, and, therefore, it was stricken out.

Q. The words: "Bearing the transgression of another" were stricken out—erased. The whole sentence is as follows: "She is guiltless, sinned against, bearing the transgression of another. Her forgiveness I have." The words, "Bearing the transgression of another," are erased.

Mr. Evarts—Are they erased there?

Mr. Fullerton—Yes, Sir. I asked him if anything was said at that interview about the reason why those words were erased.

Mr. Evarts—Erased in that supposed publication?

Mr. Fullerton—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Fullerton—They were erased in that supposed publication, were they not, Mr. Moulton? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. What followed that interview? A. The next thing that followed was the letter of June 1st, from Mr. Beecher.

THE LETTER OF RESIGNATION.

Q. No; I ask your attention to the same night. Was there not a proposed resignation on the part of Mr. Beecher? A. I have said so, have I not?

Q. Well, I believe you have. Who prepared that proposed resignation? A. Mr. Beecher himself.

Q. Where did you see it first? A. In his hands.

Q. What did he say at the time? A. He said he had made up his mind that he would not try any longer to stand up against this story; that if Theodore Tilton was going to publish that, he might as well resign.

Q. [Handing paper to witness.] Look at the paper now shown you, and tell me what it is? A. This is a copy which I dictated in order that Theodore Tilton might consider exactly what the document was.

Q. From what did you dictate it? A. I dictated it from my memory of the document itself.

Mr. Fullerton, (to defendant's counsel)—Now, gentlemen, we have noticed you, I believe, to produce the original.

The original was not produced.

Mr. Fullerton—We will read from it. It is the reproduction of the original from his memory.

Paper marked "Exhibit No. 25."

Q. What became of the original? A. Mr. Beecher kept it.

Q. You did not keep it? A. No, Sir, I did not.

Mr. Evarts—I understand Mr. Moulton to have spoken of a resignation which was there before him.

Mr. Fullerton—Yes, Sir, and which he took away.

Mr. Evarts—Yes, Sir, and which he took away, and that became the subject of comment. What do you propose to do with this?

Mr. Fullerton—I propose, in the first place, to read from the original, if you produce it in obedience to the notice given to you for that purpose; and, if you do not produce it, I propose to read from this copy.

Mr. Evarts—We have no such paper.

Mr. Fullerton—No such paper as what?

Mr. Evarts—No such paper as your witness speaks of.

Mr. Fullerton—Where is the notice to produce? I call for the production of the paper described in our notice?

Mr. Evarts—We have no such paper.

Judge Neilson—Has notice been given?

Mr. Beach—The notice to produce is admitted.

Mr. Fullerton—Can you state the contents of that resignation which was proposed by Mr. Beecher on that occasion? A. Yes, Sir, I can, substantially.

Q. Do it as nearly as you can.

Mr. Evarts—Wait one moment. He can recite from memory, if he can, of course, the best way he can; but when you put a paper into his hands, we want to inquire where that was made, and when.

Mr. Beach—That is right; let him examine the witness.

Mr. Evarts—You have a memorandum now put into your hands? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Where do you produce that from? A. I produce it from my possession.

Q. How long have you had it in your possession? A. I have had it since May 31, 1873.

Q. How came you to make that paper? A. I made it in order to submit to Mr. Tilton what Mr. Beecher proposed to do, at Mr. Tilton's solicitation.

Q. Was not Mr. Tilton present when this paper, as you call it, of Mr. Beecher was read? A. No, Sir, he was not.

Q. It was not at that meeting then? A. No, Sir; it was not at the meeting between Mr. Beecher, Mr. Tilton and myself.

Q. When did you write that? A. May 31, 1873, I think—Saturday evening, if my recollection serves me.

Q. Why didn't you send for the original? A. I didn't write it; I dictated it from memory to Mr. Tilton.

Q. It is in Mr. Tilton's handwriting? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Written down by him by your dictation? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Why didn't you send for the original? A. Because I went down stairs to see Mr. Tilton to tell him what it was. Mr. Beecher said he didn't want to see Mr. Tilton, and I went down stairs, knowing about this letter of resignation, wanting to tell Mr. Tilton what it was. Mr. Tilton said, "Tell me what it is; let me look at it." That is as near as I can recollect the circumstances under which this was dictated to him.

Q. Mr. Bowen, Mr. Tilton, and yourself were in the house together? A. Yes, Sir; Mr. Beecher was up stairs.

Q. And the paper you have spoken of, was that there? A. Yes.

Q. Why didn't you have it brought down, and show it to Mr. Tilton? A. Because I didn't think it necessary.

Q. You thought it better to dictate it to him. A. I didn't go down for the purpose of dictating it.

Q. You didn't send up stairs for the original? A. No, Sir, I didn't.

Q. That is the memorandum that you now speak by, is it? A. Yes, Sir; this is the memorandum I speak by.

Mr. Evarts—That is not a copy of the paper. It is a mere question of the witness' memory.

By Mr. Fullerton—I think you misunderstood a question put by the counsel on the other side. The question he put to you was this: "You, Mr. Tilton and Mr. Beecher were in the house together," to which you replied, "Yes, Sir."

Q. You don't mean you were in the same room? A. No, Sir.

Q. Give us a copy of the proposed resignation of Mr. Beecher produced there?

Mr. Evarts—Your memory of it.

Judge Neilson—State your recollection of its contents.

Mr. Beach—He can refer to the memorandum.

The Witness—It is this:

"I tender herewith my resignation of Plymouth Church. I have stood among you in sorrow for two years in order to save from shame a certain household; but since a recent publication makes this no longer possible, I now resign my ministry and retire to private life."

Q. That is as near as you can recollect the original resignation of Mr. Beecher? A. Yes, Sir; and that states substantially what was in the original paper. (To Judge Neilson.) May I state your Honor, how I came to find this?

Mr. Evarts—Not unless you are asked, I think.

Mr. Beach—I don't know.

The Witness—I would like to state it.

Mr. Fullerton—No objection to it. State it, Mr. Moulton.

The Witness—I read in Mr. Beecher's statement—

Mr. Evarts—Does your Honor say he has a right to state that?

Judge Neilson—I think the counsel had better interrogate him. He will come to it presently.

The Witness—I want to state precisely how I got it. I would like to do that. I want to state how I found this copy.

Mr. Fullerton—Where did you find it? A. I found it in this—

Mr. Porter—That paper is not in evidence.

Judge Neilson—It is not in evidence, but it is here produced among his papers.

Mr. Evarts—He wants to show how he came to find it. It is enough that he has got it.

Mr. Fullerton—I don't care for it. Just omit it, Mr. Moulton. (To Judge Neilson): I think we had better adjourn now, your Honor.

Judge Neilson—I want to appeal to the counsel. The hours of 11 and 4 have been very unusual to us. We always begin our work earlier and continue later, and to-morrow being Friday—understanding you decline to work on Saturday—I wish to know if counsel won't make it convenient to commence at 10 o'clock and end at 5?

Mr. Morris—This air will kill us all.

Judge Neilson—You would have Saturday and Sunday to recover after it, our sessions are so short.

Mr. Fullerton—I think that would be a greater tax on our strength than we could endure.

Judge Neilson—I only submit it to you.

Mr. Fullerton—Your Honor must understand that some of my associates make it an every-day business to spend their lives in such an atmosphere as this.

Judge Neilson—And, therefore, get used to it.

Mr. Fullerton—And, therefore, don't get used to it. I think it would be going beyond what human nature could endure.

The Court then adjourned until 11 o'clock Friday morning.

FIFTH DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

THE DIRECT EXAMINATION UNFINISHED.

THE LATER SCENES IN THE PLYMOUTH CONTROVERSY
REVIEWED—EFFECT OF THE PUBLICATION OF THE BACON LETTER—A NEW LETTER FROM MR.
BEECHER TO MRS. MOULTON.

A vulgar, noisy, and impatient crowd hung around the court-room doors more than hour before the proceedings were opened. At least two-thirds of these loungers were not supplied with tickets of admission, and no opportunity for effecting an entrance offered itself to them. One of the peculiar features of this gathering was the presence of a number of feeble, gray-haired old men. Despite the currents of biting, frosty air which swept through the corridors, these thin-blooded old men lingered in the crowd, and gazed with envious eyes upon those who passed in without annoyance. Just before 11 o'clock some one shouted, "Here they come," and immediately there was a race to the rear of the Court-house. Mrs. Tilton, her face covered with a heavy lace veil, appeared with her escort, and Mrs. Shearman and Mrs. Anna M. Field, each with a gentleman. As the party made their way toward the court-room the conduct of the crowd was simply outrageous. Audible comments upon the appearance of Mrs. Tilton, coarse jibes about the plaintiff and the defendant as well, passed freely. With considerable difficulty the party threaded their way through the files of rude spectators into the court-room.

Opera glasses were numerous in the gallery on Friday, and in almost constant use during the day's proceedings. Mrs. Tilton, Mrs. Shearman, and Mrs. Field were subjected to much annoyance from this quarter. Fortunately for Mrs. Beecher, she was so seated that the back of her head alone was visible from the gallery. Two ladies whose faces had not previously been descried and stared at in the court-room, appeared early in the morning. They seemed to be quite at home, and listened with composure to all that was said. Mr. Beecher and his wife left the court-room at recess and did not return. Mrs. Tilton remained during the afternoon.

Judge Reynolds and Judge Morse occupied seats beside Judge Neilson. The Hon. Henry C. Murphy and several clergymen took seats behind the defendant's counsel.

Just before the court adjourned Judge Neilson admonished the jury to be careful and abstain from conversation with any one concerning the merits of the case. The jury had hardly reached the sidewalk before a prominent member of Plymouth Church accosted a jurymen, and engaged with him in an earnest and at times noisy conversation. A crowd gathered around them immediately, supposing that the Beecher-Tilton suit was under discussion. Finally some one in the crowd shouted to the jurymen, "Don't talk to that man; he is a Beecher man." The conversation terminated abruptly, and the gentleman from Plymouth Church walked hurriedly away. The incident gave rise to varied discussion. It is believed that Judge Neilson will have something to say on the subject next Monday. Mr. Beecher's friend is the gentleman who on the night of Moulton's giving the lie to Prof. R. W. Raymond vociferously urged his ejection from the church.

BY-PLAY OF THE PROCEEDINGS.

One of the earliest incidents of the day was the introduction of Mr. Beecher's letter to Mr. Moulton in which Mr. Tilton's character is analyzed and the writer's aspirations after immortality with its "beckoning glory" are breathed in glowing language. Ex-Judge Fullerton did full justice to Mr. Beecher's rhetoric, and Mr. Shearman, who kept his eyes upon the manuscript while his opponent used a printed copy, took pains not to interrupt him with corrections. When the letter in which Dr. Storrs is denounced was read Mr. Shearman adopted a different policy.

Two scraps of new testimony were here brought to light. According to Mr. Moulton's version Mr. Tilton threatened to shoot Mr. Beecher, if the resignation of the pastorate should be given to the world, because it would disgrace the Livingston-st. household. It was also hinted that Mrs. Moulton received a letter from Mr. Beecher on the day when her husband first read the "beckoning glory" letter. This letter has never been printed, and when it is offered will be one of the small surprises of the prosecution.

After Mr. Beecher's short cards, vindicating Mr.

Tilton after the publication of the "tripartite agreement," and challenging Mrs. Woodhull and any one else who had letters of his to bring them forward, had been introduced, the "West specifications," were read, special emphasis being laid upon the third clause, which, as Mr. Tilton's counsel claim, brings to naught the logic of Mr. Winslow in the report of the Investigating Committee. Mr. Evarts, with his usual precision and inflexibility, demanded the production of a document, and was referred by ex-Judge Fullerton to the archives of Plymouth Church. Mr. Evarts seemed nettled for a moment, but the cutting rejoinder came in the next breath: "I have never thought that Plymouth Church or the Christian religion was a party in this case." "I think so too," broke in Judge Neilson, in his genial, hearty way. "Subpena the clerk of the church!" cried Mr. Evarts, with an impatient gesture, as his opponent made an exasperating comment. Ex-Judge Fullerton may be in the right or he may be in the wrong, but one thing he always insists upon having—the last word. "There is some way, I suppose, of bringing in these things," was his closing comment.

Two expressions which fell from Mr. Moulton's lips about this time pleased the circle of Mr. Beecher's friends in the body of the house. One of them was the declaration which he made to Mr. Beecher that in his opinion Mr. Bowen had no evidence whatever against the pastor of Plymouth Church. The other was Mr. Beecher's comment upon his own speech at Plymouth Church when he declared that he had no charges to make against Mr. Tilton. "I made," said Mr. Beecher, according to the witness, "as full and generous a reply to Mr. Tilton as I could."

The witness's anxiety to play his best cards was painfully evident. He dragged in Dr. Storrs's name before it was time and strove to anticipate the purposes of his counsel. The letter in which Mr. Beecher denounced the course of Dr. Storrs was probably the most unwholesome thing which the members of Plymouth Church had to swallow during the day. There is neither religious fervor, generous thought, nor fine imagery here; the expressions are dry and harsh, and the effect of them was intensified by ex-Judge Fullerton's hard, metallic tones.

Then came Mr. Moulton's trump-card, and he played it well. Mr. Shearman and Mr. Moulton evidently detest each other, and neither of them attempts to disguise the fact. Mr. Moulton's satisfaction, in recounting the circumstances under which Mr. Shearman's apology was sent to Mr. Tilton, shone from every feature. Mr. Shearman and he fairly glared at each other, the lawyer's face wearing a grim smile at intervals, and the witness's testimony being delivered so fluently and earnestly as to seem like a declamation. The witness, in repeating his words to Mr. Beecher, "I am not surprised at anything coming from Mr. Shearman; I don't think he is above such things," was very emphatic, almost vindictive, in tone, and the next moment came the sneering words, "Mr. Beecher went over it and said to me that in his opinion Mr. Shearman was a mischief-maker." Mr. Evarts had a word to say about the cause of the misunderstanding, which was a reporter's version of an interview with Mr. Shearman, and the matter was finally dropped.

Ex-Judge Fullerton had an unpleasant task at the close of the morning session. It took him 40 minutes to read the elaborate letter of Theodore Tilton to the Rev. Dr. Bacon, and the recital was exceedingly uninteresting.

Gen. Tracy had to take his turn after the recess, and the witness returned with vigor to the assault upon Mr. Beecher's legal advisers. The remark of Gen. Tracy to Messrs. Woodruff & Robinson that "in the present case lying was justifiable," called forth a laugh from the audience. The intimation that Gen. Tracy had violated the principles of professional etiquette in serving as Mr. Beecher's counsel after he had given Mr. Tilton legal advice, was made in the same declamatory style as his arraignment of Mr. Shearman. Gen. Tracy, however, was imperturbable, and only evinced amusement.

A keen passage of repartee between ex-Judge Fullerton and Mr. Evarts relieved the tedium of the afternoon's work. The prosecution had attempted to introduce testimony without connecting it with Mr. Beecher, as they were legally bound to do. Mr. Evarts protested against this irregularity, and the Judge promptly sustained him. Ex-Judge Fullerton consented to amend his method, but complained that his opponents were compelling him to put the cart before the horse. "Ah!" broke in Mr. Evarts, "You may put the cart, and never bring the horse!" Everybody smiled, but in the next breath ex-Judge Fullerton brought back the laugh to his side with the retort, "You want neither cart nor horse. You will see what the horse draws into the case."

Beyond the admission that Mr. Moulton had told his partners as early as 1871 the secret of Mr. Tilton's household and the recital of Mr. Beecher's comment on Gen. Butler's character, the closing passages of the examination were dull and spiritless. The assistance of ex-Judge Morris, who was confined to his house by illness, was sorely missed by the prosecution in the presentation of evidence. His familiarity with the correspondence and the minutest details of the case enables him to control the order of testimony, and to put his fingers on the documentary evidence without a moment of delay. His partner, Mr. Pearsall, had charge of the papers, but was so awkward at one time in finding what was wanted that Mr. Tilton nervously seized the package and worried over it himself.

SCANDAL BLOSSOMS.

The court-room, or rather that part of it reserved for counsel, was fragrant with the odors of hot-house plants. The violet vied with the lily, and the chaste camellia was in contrast with the petals of the "red, red rose." For several days past the table near Mr. Beecher's seat has been decorated with choice flowers from the conservatory of a friend. A beautiful bouquet of violets was placed in the vase yesterday morning, and a similar bouquet was presented to Mrs. Beecher. The wife of Theodore Tilton had no sooner taken her seat and removed the heavy lace veil which covered her face, than a member of Plymouth Church handed her a delicate cluster of violets and white rose-buds. The flowers were presented with a graceful compliment. That little bunch of flowers had a significance to her which few in the court-room appreciated. It was an intimation that she was still kindly remembered in Plymouth Church. Her thanks were expressed very unaffectedly. It is true that there were many present who smiled sardonically, and saw in the presentation an attempt to produce a dramatic effect, but such were evidently not her thoughts.

The display of flowers on "the Plymouth side of the house," as it is designated by the spectators, was very marked, and gave rise to many complimentary and uncomplimentary criticisms. Quite naturally, under the circumstances, when a magnificent and showy bouquet of roses, violets, lilies, and arbutus was brought to Mr. Tilton, it attracted the attention of the entire audience, counsel not excepted. The plaintiff blushed like an innocent school-boy as he detached the card attached to the floral tribute, and read the inscription, "To Theodore Tilton, with the compliments of his friends." Immediately afterward a hat-box was handed to Mr. Tilton, and removing the cover, he drew forth a bouquet, if anything more conspicuous than the first. By this time the counsel and the witness on the stand ceased to attract the attention of the spectators, and Mr. Tilton and his group of counsel were under every eye. The plaintiff had scarcely deposited his gifts upon the table at which he was sitting, before two additional bouquets were passed over to him, the larger one being for ex-Judge Morris. Mr. Tilton's face turned crimson, and a smile ran around the court-room. Gen. Pryor moved uneasily in his seat, Mr. Shearman appeared much amused, ex-Judge Beach looked solemn, and Mr. Fullerton, although busily examining Moulton, stopped for a moment, and cast a quizzical glance at the sentimental offerings which seemed so strangely out of place in a court room. From one of the bouquets Mr. Tilton drew a note written on tinted paper. He read the contents with an appearance of gratification, and then placed it in his pocket.

The effect produced by the floral display indulged in by the friends of the plaintiff and the defendant was not calculated to draw out compliments for either. If the jury and spectators were romantic young ladies of poetical fancies, the floral tributes might have touched some tender chords, but the majority of the spectators in the court-room were of a practical turn of mind, and so—they simply smiled. As for Mr. Tilton, while he no doubt had a keen appreciation of the compliments bestowed, he was without question greatly embarrassed. It is safe to say that the great question at issue will not be settled in favor of the man who can show the greater number of bouquets. "Rosemary and rue" may be in order, but roses and violets are out of place just now.

LEGAL ASPECTS OF THE CASE.

The presentment of the evidence for the plaintiff is regarded by many lawyers as exceedingly able. The burden of his case was the documentary evidence, and it was essential that this should be introduced as early as possible. Every letter, however, had to be connected with Mr. Beecher, and Mr. Moulton was the only witness who could do this. Those letters which Mr. Beecher did not write himself were either intrusted to Mr. Moulton or the substance of them was referred to during the interviews between them. In this way the bulk of the scandal literature which was incorporated in Mr. Moulton's statement last Summer has been set before the jury. In other respects, however, the prosecution displayed great acuteness in calling Mr. Moulton in preference to Mr. Tilton. In the first place, as the intimate associate of Mr. Beecher, from that stormy night in the closing hours of 1870 to the early sessions of the Investigating Committee in the Summer of 1874, he was able to present the case in the natural order of time from beginning to end. He began when the controversy opened, on the night when Mr. Tilton confronted Mr. Beecher and made the first charge, and he has gone on from stage to stage of the controversy until the Investigating Committee met and the rupture between himself and Mr. Beecher occurred. In so complicated a case it was exceedingly difficult to bring the details of the evidence in their natural order before the jury, but ex-Judge Fullerton has been equal to the occasion, and the jury have been spared needless confusion. Another advantage of their method was this: The first version of the whole case has been furnished, not by the plaintiff, who is most vitally interested, but by his friend, the associate of the defendant.

The cross-examination of this witness will undoubtedly be an extremely rigorous one. It will be conducted by ex-Judge Porter, who has had very little to do with the proceedings thus far. The opening address for the defendant will probably be made by Gen. Tracy, although the trust may be confided to Mr. Shearman. Mr. Evarts and ex-Judge Porter will probably sum up jointly for the defense, and Mr. Beach and Gen. Pryor for the prosecution.

THE PROCEEDINGS.

Ex-Judge Morris was the only one of the counsel absent when the Court opened on Friday morning. After the customary formalities, Judge Neilson asked if the counsel were ready. Then Mr. Fullerton explained that Mr. Morris was kept at home and in bed by sickness, and that his absence would greatly embarrass their actions, for he was most familiar with the voluminous documents which form so large a part of the plaintiff's case. The direct examination of Francis D. Moulton was then resumed at the point reached when the Court adjourned the previous day—with reference to what is known as the "tripartite agreement."

MUTUAL EFFORTS FOR CONCEALMENT.

Judge Neilson—Are the counsel ready to proceed?

Mr. Fullerton—May it please your Honor, we are somewhat embarrassed this morning on our side, by the absence of Judge

Morris—who is quite ill and unable to leave his bed—in the presentation of our documents, Judge Morris having been very familiar with them, having put his marks upon them so that he could manipulate them with convenience, and we shall have to ask your Honor's indulgence a little, probably, from time to time, on account of that embarrassment.

Judge Neilson—I very much regret his illness.

Francis D. Moulton was recalled, and the direct examination resumed:

Mr. Fullerton—Mr. Moulton, at the adjournment last night, you were detailing what occurred after the publication of the tripartite agreement, and had spoken of the proposed resignation from Plymouth Church, and of an interview which you had with Mr. Tilton in your house. I want to ask you, first, whether you reported the substance of that interview with Mr. Tilton to Mr. Beecher? A. I did; yes, Sir.

Q. And what did you say to him? A. I said that Mr. Tilton strongly objected to the publication of the resignation on the ground that it was a clear statement, in his opinion, of the shame of his wife.

Q. What did Mr. Beecher reply to that? A. The reply of Mr. Beecher to that, Sir, I do not remember; but I said to Mr. Beecher, "Clearly that is the case, Sir; clearly, if the resignation should be published, it would be a virtual confession of the fact of your relations with Mrs. Tilton, and it ought not to be done."

Q. Did you communicate to Mr. Beecher anything else that Mr. Tilton said in regard to that proposed publication? A. I told Mr. Beecher that Mr. Tilton was quite violent; Mr. Tilton said that he would shoot Mr. Beecher if he did it. I think that I mentioned that to Mr. Beecher. That is what Mr. Tilton told me, at all events.

Q. The publication did not follow, I believe? A. It did not follow.

Q. What was said about a counter-statement of any kind? A. I said to Mr. Beecher that I thought it would be possible to frame a card that would cover the case, and at all events there was between that time and Monday to consider it, and we had better consider it.

Q. Was a card proposed? A. There was, on Sunday—I think it was Sunday afternoon—Sunday evening.

Q. Who proposed the card? A. I had told Mr. Tilton, Sir, that I thought it would be wrong for him to publish the letter which he threatened to publish.

Q. Which I read in evidence yesterday? A. Yes, Sir; I told him I thought he ought not to do it. I thought he ought to undertake to find a different way, and he promised me at last that he would try, and he did; and he did prepare a card which would be satisfactory to him, which I submitted to Mr. Beecher on Sunday night; and I said to Mr. Beecher, "I think that will cover the case." In the meantime I had received a letter from Mr. Beecher.

Q. Is the letter now shown you the one that you speak of [handing witness a letter]? A. Yes, Sir; that is the letter.

Mr. Fullerton—I propose to read it.

Mr. Evarts—Is that from Mr. Beecher?

Mr. Fullerton—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Evarts—This is the one you say you received in the meantime? A. I received it on the morning of June the 1st, Sunday morning, while I was in bed.

Q. Before the interview with Mr. Beecher? A. Of Sunday—yes, Sir.

Mr. Fullerton [reading the letter]:

SUNDAY MORNING, June 1, 1873.

MY DEAR FRANK: The whole earth is tranquil and the heaven is serene, as befits one who has about finished his world-life. I could do nothing on Saturday—my head was confused, but a good sleep has made it like crystal. I have determined to make no more resistance. Theodore's temperament is such that the future, even if temporarily earned, would be absolutely worthless, filled with abrupt charges, and rendering me liable at any hour or day to be obliged to stultify all the devices by which we have saved ourselves. It is only fair that he should know that the publication of the card which he proposes would leave him far worse off than before.

The agreement was made after my letter through you was written. He had it a year. He had condoned his wife's fault. He had enjoined upon me with the utmost earnestness and solemnity not to betray his wife or leave his children to a blight. I had honestly and earnestly joined in the purpose. Then this settlement was made and signed by him. It was not my making. He revised his part so it should wholly suit him, and signed it. It stood unquestioned and unblamed for more than a year. Then it was published. Nothing but that. That which he did in private when made public excited him to fury, and he charges me with making him appear as one graciously pardoned by me! It was his own deliberate act, with which he was perfectly content if others saw it, and then he charges a grievous wrong home on me.

My mind is clear. I am not in haste. I shall write for the public a statement that will bear the light of the judgment day. God will take care of me and mine. When I look on earth it is a deep night. When I look to the heavens above I see the morning breaking. But, oh! that I could put in golden letters my deep sense of your faithful, earnest, undying fidelity, your disinterested friendship. Your noble wife, too, has been to me one of God's comforters. It is such as she that renews a waning faith in womanhood. Now, Frank, I would not have you waste any more energy on a hopeless task. With such a man as T. T. there is no possible salvation for any that depend upon him. With a strong nature, he does not know how to govern it. With generous impulses, the undercurrent that rules him is self. With ardent affections, he cannot love long that which does not repay him with admiration and praise. With a strong theatric nature, he is constantly imposed upon with the idea that a position, a great stroke, a coup d'état is the way to success.

Besides these, he has a hundred good things about him; but these named traits make him absolutely unreliable.

Therefore, there is no use in further trying. I have a strong feeling upon me, and it brings great peace with it, that I am spending my last Sunday and preaching my last sermon.

Dear, good God, I thank thee I am indeed beginning to see rest and triumph. The pain of life is but a moment; the glory of everlasting emancipation is wordless, inconceivable, full of beckoning glory. Oh! my beloved Frank, I shall know you there, and forever hold fellowship with you, and look back and smile at the past. Your loving

H. W. B.

(Letter marked "Exhibit No. 28.")

Q. What time in the day did you receive that letter? A. In the morning, Sir.

Q. Did you see another letter written on that day by Mr. Beecher? A. This letter was inclosed in a letter to my wife, I believe.

Q. Did you see the letter addressed to your wife? A. Yes, Sir; I have seen it. I saw it then, I believe.

Mr. Fullerton—I will not produce it now. You have spoken of a card which was prepared at the time. Look at the paper now shown you and say whether it is the one. [Handing witness a card.] Was the card published? A. There was a card published; yes, Sir; substantially the card which we considered that night; some alteration from it—some alteration of it, rather.

Q. Under what circumstances did the alteration take place? A. Mr. Beecher said to me that he thought there were some words or phrases that might be left out judiciously, and they were left out.

Q. And then published? A. Yes.

Q. After the emendations that you speak of? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Look at that paper, and say whether that is the card? [Handing witness a printed paper.]

Mr. Evarts—Is that the printed paper?

Mr. Fullerton—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Evarts—Haven't you the original?

Mr. Fullerton—That is the original.

Mr. Evarts—No; I understand Mr. Tilton wrote a card.

By Mr. Fullerton—Q. Where is the card that was written, do you know? A. I saw it a few days ago in Mr. Tilton's possession.

Mr. Fullerton—To Mr. Tilton—Well, let me have that.

Mr. Tilton—I think Mr. Moulton has it.

Mr. Fullerton—That is one of the embarrassments growing out of Judge Morris's unfortunate illness. I will produce it before I get through.

Mr. Evarts—Well, I would like it now.

Mr. Fullerton—Perhaps you would like it because we haven't got it.

Mr. Evarts—No, you have got it; the witness says you have.

The Witness—I say I saw it.

Mr. Evarts—We would not like to have this evidence go on without that paper.

Mr. Fullerton—I can read it from the newspaper and substitute the original, if that will answer your purpose.

Judge Neilson—You can do that by consent, Sir, if the counsel consent to it.

Mr. Fullerton—This is the original of the card that was published.

Mr. Evarts—Oh, well, you have not proved that.

Mr. Beach—I think we have.

Mr. Evarts—It is a part of the matter no doubt, but Mr. Tilton wrote a card which was the very matter that was proposed to Mr. Beecher's consideration, and was the topic of conversation, and some changes being made between the parties there, it was afterwards published. Now, we want the transaction as it occurred.

Mr. Beach—We proposed just now to produce the card as amended by Mr. Beecher and published. When we find the other we will produce that.

Judge Neilson—Won't that be satisfactory, Sir? If the other is not found it is to be stricken out, or reconsidered.

Mr. Evarts—Well, I do not want to accumulate too many instances of that kind. We have one lying over.

Judge Neilson—Will you hold that in reserve ?

Mr. Beach—We are under no obligation to produce the one that was originally drawn and amended by Mr. Beecher ; still, we are willing, and intend to do it.

Mr. Evarts—That is another matter.

Judge Neilson—It is proper that it should be produced, undoubtedly.

Mr. Evarts—Yes, Sir, I think so.

Mr. Fullerton—Shall I read the one that was published ?

Mr. Evarts—Are we to have the other ?

Mr. Fullerton—It is not here.

The Witness—It was not published from the manuscript that Mr. Tilton furnished, Sir.

Mr. Evarts—No ; I understand that.

Judge Neilson—There was a copy sent to the printer ?

The Witness—Mr. Beecher made a letter himself, Sir, acting upon the idea of Mr. Tilton's proposed card.

Judge Neilson—That paper you will produce when you can find it ?

Mr. Fullerton—Yes, Sir. [Reading the card.]

To the Editor of the Brooklyn Eagle.

June 3, 1873.

DEAR SIR :—I have maintained silence respecting the slanders which have for some time past followed me. I should not speak now, but for the sake of relieving another of unjust imputation. The document that was recently published, bearing my name, with others, was published without consultation, either with me or with Mr. Tilton, or with any authorization from us. If that document should lead the public to regard Theodore Tilton as the author of the calumnies to which it alludes, it will do him great injustice. I am unwilling that he should even seem to be responsible for injurious statements whose force was derived wholly from others.

H. W. BEECHER.

Marked "Exhibit No. 27."

Q. What was the document recently published ? A. The "Tripartite Covenant."

BOWEN AND CLAFLIN SEEKING EVIDENCE.

Q. This card that you now speak of, as I understand you, was prepared and published after the proposed resignation from the ministry ? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. The next day, was it not ? A. Published on June the 2d, Sir—Monday, June the 2d.

Q. Now, was there another card published soon after that ? A. Yes, Sir : there was a card published after that.

Q. State the circumstances under which that card was prepared ? A. What card do you refer to, Sir ?

Q. The second card of Mr. Beecher, following June 2d ? A. There was the card that I have in mind now, Sir, that I am referring to, if you will allow me to speak of that.

Q. Yes, Sir. A. It was the card with reference to the visit of Mr. Bowen to Mrs. Woodhull.

Q. That is the one, Sir ; you are right. Now, tell the circumstances under which it was prepared, and the circumstances which led to its preparation, as you learned them from Mr. Beecher ? A. There was an account in the paper of Mr. Bowen and Mr. Claflin visiting Mrs. Woodhull together, for the purpose of getting evidence.

Mr. Evarts—What is the object of this ?

Mr. Fullerton—It is only introductory, Sir, to the meeting with Mr. Beecher.

The Witness—And this account in the paper of the visit of Mr. Bowen and Mr. Claflin to Mrs. Woodhull's, for the sake of getting evidence against Mr. Beecher, I thought rather serious ; and I saw Mr. Beecher in regard to it, and I said to him, "I think, Mr. Beecher, we can make very short work of such business ; I think, and you think, that Mr. Bowen has not any evidence in his possession against you, and we better publish a card in The Eagle, calling upon anybody with any papers or evidences against you to produce them ;" and Mr. Beecher prepared a card with reference to that matter, which met with my approval, and I took it down to The Eagle office.

Q. Look at the paper now shown you and say if it is the card that you speak of ? [Handing witness a card.] A. This is the card as it was prepared ; yes, Sir.

Mr. Fullerton—I propose to read it. Go on and finish the narration ? A. Mr. Beecher was out of town, or was going out of town, upon the day that I saw Mr. Kinsella, of the Brooklyn Eagle, and Mr. Kinsella himself altered the phraseology somewhat, and we jointly took the responsibility of printing it with the alterations ; and I saw Mr. Beecher subsequently, and he said that he approved of the alterations, and thanked me for my kind offices in the matter ; and Mr. Beecher said to me, furthermore, "Of course Mr. Tilton will not produce any documents." "Well," I said, "of course he won't ; he hasn't got any that I know of—original documents—to produce, and of course I won't."

By Mr. Evarts—What conversation is this ? A. The conversation with Mr. Beecher, Mr. Evarts.

Q. At what interview ? A. At the interview at the preparation of this card.

Q. When that paper was there ? A. Yes ; certainly.

Mr. Fullerton—The proposed card reads as follows ;

Brooklyn, June, 1873.

I have seen in the morning papers that application has been made to Mrs. Victoria Woodhull, for certain letters of mine supposed to contain information respecting certain infamous stories against me. She has two business letters, one declining an invitation to a suffrage meeting, and the other declining to give the assistance solicited. These and all letters of mine in the hands of any other persons, they have my cordial consent to publish. I will only add, in this connection, that the stories and rumors which have, for a time, been circulated about me, are grossly untrue, and I stamp them, in general and in particular, as utterly false.

(Marked "Exhibit No. 28.")

Q. In whose handwriting is the interlineation in that card that I have just read, or proposed card ? A. Mr. Beecher's.

Q. The erasures—do you know anything of them ? A. They were made by Mr. Beecher.

By Mr. Evarts—I understand, Mr. Moulton, that that paper as it reads, omitting what is erased and reading that pencil interlineation, is as it came from Mr. Beecher ? A. Yes, Sir ; that is precisely the paper which I took to The Brooklyn Eagle office.

Q. And the alterations there made were not made in this paper ? A. No, Sir ; I have a copy of the article as Mr. Kinsella changed it, and wrote it in pencil.

By Mr. Fullerton—It has just been shown to you, has it not, in print? A. Yee, Sir; that is the article.

Mr. Fullerton—I now read the card as amended and published.

The Witness—There is omitted, Sir, from that lead pencil memoranda of mine some of the sentences that occur in the original letter. I did it to save time.

Mr. Fullerton—[Reading.]

To the Editor of The Brooklyn Eagle :

SIR : In a long and active life in Brooklyn it has rarely happened that The Eagle and myself have been in accord on questions of common concern to our fellow-citizens. I am for this reason compelled to acknowledge the unsolicited confidence and regard of which the columns of The Eagle of late bear testimony. I have just returned to the city to learn that application has been made to Mrs. Victoria Woodhull for letters of mine supposed to contain information respecting certain infamous stories against me.

Mr. Fullerton—I think there is some misapprehension about this. I shall have to ask the witness whether that part of it in parenthesis was published. [Handing witness the book]. A. No, Sir.

Q. That was not published? A. No, Sir.

Q. Then I am to read it without the parenthesis? A. Without the parenthesis.

Mr. Evarts—Haven't you got the very publication?

Mr. Fullerton—It does not seem to be here.

Mr. Evarts—The newspaper itself; that will show.

Mr. Fullerton—It is not here.

The Witness—I can tell you for what purpose those parenthesis were introduced.

Mr. Evarts—Well, that is no matter.

Mr. Fullerton—Not at present.

Mr. Evarts—If your Honor please, there is some danger of getting into a little confusion and doing injustice, perhaps, to one side or the other. The direct and satisfactory evidence of what was published in The Eagle would be, of course, the production of the newspapers, and then we could all see for ourselves what it was. I had supposed this printed letter or note, which we are all familiar with, was what was published in The Eagle, but it seems that we cannot trust it for that—that as Mr. Moulton says it is not the same; therefore, if they could give us the copy of The Eagle, we should be glad, and then we could see.

Judge Neilson—It would be better, no doubt, Sir.

Mr. Evarts—Otherwise there may be some confusion.

Mr. Fullerton—I will defer this branch of the case until we get a copy of The Brooklyn Eagle. Probably it would be well to strike out what was read from the card.

Judge Neilson—From the printed card?

Mr. Fullerton—From the printed card; when it is published it will all go in together

Judge Neilson—Yes, Sir; we may as well.

THE WEST CHARGES AGAINST TILTON.

Mr. Fullerton—I call your attention now to the 25th of June, or to an occurrence that took place about that time. Do you recollect anything that occurred in reference to Mr. West? A. I believe Mr. West preferred charges against Mr. Tilton.

Mr. Evarts—Well, what occurred, if you please? A. Mr. Tilton brought around to my house the charges of Mr. West about that time.

Mr. Fullerton—Look at the paper now shown you, and say whether it contains the charges thus produced to you by Mr. Tilton?

Mr. Evarts—Does he name that as the paper that was produced?

Mr. Fullerton—I say that.

Mr. Evarts—I assume you are going to correct it.

Mr. Fullerton—Oh! certainly.

The Witness—Yes, Sir; that is the paper.

Q. State whether you showed those charges to Mr. Beecher?

A. I don't remember that I did.

Q. How? A. I don't remember that I showed them to Mr. Beecher.

Q. Did you have any conversation with him in regard to it?

A. Yes, Sir; I had conversation with him in regard to it.

Q. What was that conversation? A. He said that the whole matter had better go over until Fall, and in the meantime, during the vacation, I thought we could get along with that subject—try to find a way. I told him I should recommend—

Mr. Evarts—I understand that this is one of the papers that Mr. Tilton brought you; these very papers? A. Those are the papers, that is, as I remember.

Q. You showed them to Mr. Beecher? A. I don't know that I showed them to him; no, Sir.

Q. But you spoke to him about the paper Mr. Tilton had brought you? A. I spoke to him about Mr. West's charges.

Q. Mr. Fullerton—Did you state to him the substance of the charges? A. Yes, Sir; I told him I had a full conversation with Mr. Beecher about it.

Mr. Evarts—They don't seem to have been shown to Mr. Beecher?

Mr. Fullerton—Did you state the substance of the charges to Mr. Beecher? A. Yes, Sir, I did, certainly; I have answered that.

Q. And what was said by him in reply? A. Why, he hoped that he would be able to find a way to get over that matter during the Summer.

Q. And what was proposed? A. I proposed that Mr. Tilton should—or I said that Mr. Tilton proposed to me that he should—write a letter saying that he declined, on the ground of non-membership.

Q. Of Plymouth Church? A. Yes, Sir, non-membership—that he would decline, on the ground of non-membership, an investigation; I thought that was the way out.

Mr. Evarts—Well, I understood you to say that it was Mr. Tilton suggested—did I understand you to say that Mr. Tilton suggested that as a way of escape from the dilemma? A. Yes, Sir, Mr. Tilton said so.

Mr. Beach—That he should write a letter declining? A. Yes, Sir; he was willing to do that. I told Mr. Beecher that Mr. Tilton would be willing to write a letter stating that he would decline an investigation on the ground of non-membership.

Mr. Evarts—You said that because Mr. Tilton had told you so?
A. Yes, Sir; certainly.

Mr. Fullerton—I read the charges in evidence :

BROOKLYN, Oct. 16, 1873.

MR. THEODORE TILTON.

DEAR SIR: At a meeting of the Examining Committee of Plymouth Church, held this evening, the Clerk of the Committee was instructed to forward to you a copy of the complaint and specifications made against you by Mr. Wm. F. West; and was requested to notify you that any answer to the charges that you might desire to offer to the Committee should be sent to the Clerk of the Committee on or before Thursday, Oct. 23, 1873. Inclosed I hand you a copy of the charges and specifications referred to.

Yours, very respectfully, D. W. TALLMADGE.
393 Bridge-st.

Copy of the Charges and Specifications made by Wm. F. West against Theodore Tilton.

I charge Theodore Tilton, a member of this church, with having circulated and promoted scandals derogatory to the Christian integrity of our pastor, and injurious to the reputation of this church.

SPECIFICATIONS.

First: In an interview between Theodore Tilton and Rev. E. L. L. Taylor, D. D., at the office of The Brooklyn Union, in the Spring of 1871, the said Theodore Tilton stated that Rev. Henry Ward Beecher preached to several—seven or eight—of his mistresses every Sunday evening. Upon being rebuked by Dr. Taylor, he repeated the charge, and said that he would make it in Mr. Beecher's presence, if desired.

Witness: Rev. E. L. L. TAYLOR, D. D.

Second: In a conversation with Mr. Andrew Bradshaw, in the latter part of November, 1873, Theodore Tilton requested Mr. Bradshaw not to repeat certain statements which had previously been made to him by Mr. Tilton, adding that he retracted none of the accusations which he had formerly made against Mr. Beecher, but that he wished to hush the scandal on Mr. Beecher's account; that Mr. Beecher was a bad man, and not a safe person to be allowed to enter the families of his church; that if this scandal ever were cleared up, he (Mr. Tilton) would be the only one of the three involved who would be unhurt for it, and that he was silently suffering for Mr. Beecher's sin.

Witness: ANDREW BRADSHAW.

Third: At an interview with Mrs. Andrew Bradshaw, in Thompson's dining rooms, in Clinton-street, on or about the 3d of August, 1870, Theodore Tilton stated that he had discovered that a criminal intimacy existed between his wife and Mr. Beecher. Afterwards, in November, 1872, referring to the above conversation, Mr. Tilton said to Mrs. Bradshaw that he retracted none of the accusations which he had formerly made against Mr. Beecher.

Witness: MRS. ANDREW BRADSHAW.

(Two papers attached and marked each as "Exhibit No. 29.")

Mr. Fullerton—State whether any reply to this letter of Mr. Tallmadge was prepared? A. I think there was, Sir.

Q. Now, by whom? A. I think that the letter was prepared by Mr. Tilton.

Q. Was Mr. Beecher consulted in regard to it? A. I think I saw Mr. Beecher with regard to it; yes, Sir.

Q. It was published, wasn't it? A. It was published; yes, Sir.

Mr. Evarts—You mean to say that you did see Mr. Beecher? A. Yes, Sir; that is my recollection, that I saw Mr. Beecher.

Mr. Fullerton [addressing defendant's counsel]—Gentlemen, that is embraced in our notice to produce [showing Mr. Evarts a paper]. Plymouth Church had it.

Mr. Evarts—Yes, but Plymouth Church is not the defendant. Mr. Fullerton—I thought it was so considered, by the church at all events.

Mr. Evarts—No; we have never thought Plymouth Church or the Christian religion was defendant here.

Judge Neilson—That has been my view of the case.

Mr. Fullerton—Well, perhaps not.

Mr. Evarts—A notice to produce papers that belonged to Mr. Beecher, to have, of course we shall meet. But a notice to produce papers that, on the very face of them, are in the archives of Plymouth Church is not a notice to the defendant to produce papers in his possession.

Judge Neilson—It has no force or effect.

Mr. Fullerton—Well, Sir, we shall produce—get the paper in Court some way.

Mr. Evarts—You can very easily. Mr. Tallmadge can be subpoenaed.

Mr. Fullerton—I call your attention to something that occurred in October, 1873, growing out of a publication in The New-York Sun, without stating what it was. A. Growing out of a publication in The New-York Sun?

Q. Yes, Sir; on the subject of expelling Mr. Tilton from Plymouth Church. Do you recollect an interview in regard to that subject? A. I don't remember that.

Q. Do you recollect that Mr. Beecher was sent for, and considered at your house, in connection with Mr. Tilton, this proposed action of Plymouth Church in regard to the membership of Mr. Tilton? A. I remember that there was to be a meeting at Plymouth Church in October. I don't remember the extract from The Sun, whether it was in October, 1873, or not; I don't remember; but there was to be a meeting at Plymouth Church, in which the charges against Mr. Beecher were to be considered.

Q. Against Mr. Beecher? A. Against Mr. Tilton, that is, were to be considered; I had an interview with Mr. Beecher in the presence of Mr. Tilton, I think, concerning what was to be done at that meeting.

Q. Now state what that interview was, please? A. An understanding—I said to Mr. Beecher, that I thought that the proper way out of it was simply to drop Mr. Tilton's name from the roll of the Church, and Mr. Beecher agreed to that; that is as I remember the—

Q. Well, how would that prevent any action?

Mr. Evarts—Oh! well, that is not proper.

Mr. Fullerton—What was said upon that subject? A. That his not being a member of the church—I said if he was not a member of the church the charges against him could not be investigated, and consequently there could not be any exposure of the facts in the case as between himself and Mrs. Tilton.

Q. A few moments ago you spoke of a proposed letter by Mr. Tilton, in which he should decline the trial at Plymouth Church, on the ground of non-membership? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Do you know whether such a letter was written, or not? A. I think it was written; yes, Sir.

Q. Did you go to Plymouth Church that night? A. I did not, but I had a conversation with Mr. Tilton.

Q. Did you have a conversation with Mr. Beecher in regard to the action of Plymouth Church that night? A. I had a conversation, I have repeated it; yes, and agreed with Mr. Beecher as to what the course should be, in the presence of Mr. Tilton.

Q. No, I am speaking of what occurred at Plymouth Church that night? A. Oh! no; I was not at Plymouth Church that night.

Q. Did you have a conversation with Mr. Beecher as to what did occur? A. Afterwards, yes, Sir; with Mr. Beecher afterwards.

Q. Now, let us see what that conversation was? A. He said that Mr. Tilton had come down there—told me the circumstances; he said that Mr. Tilton had come down to the church and had said in the presence of the congregation that if he had slandered his pastor, he was there to answer for it, and Mr. Beecher said, "I made to him as full and generous a reply as I knew how to make." That is the substance of what—

Q. How long was that after the meeting at Plymouth Church? A. Not very long after; I don't remember how long.

Q. Well, was it within a few days? A. Within a few days; I should say within a day or two.

THE CHURCH COUNCIL AND DR. STORRS.

Q. Now the next event in the order of time that I want to call your attention to was the proposed Council of the Church. Do you recollect that? A. I recollect that there was to be a Council of Churches.

Q. And did you have an interview with Mr. Beecher in regard to it? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. State what occurred? A. Mr. Beecher did not want—Mr. Beecher said he did not want Theodore to take any part in that Council; that if he could maintain silence—not utter a word—until after the dissolution of the Council—that if that could be bridged over, he thought everything would be safe; that is substantially what I remember about it.

Q. Did he speak of Dr. Storrs in that conversation? A. After Dr. Storrs had made a speech before the Council, I received from him a letter concerning Dr. Storrs's speech; I had said to Mr. Beecher, Sir, that I understood that Dr. Storrs would consider it necessary to be severe—

Mr. Evarts—Well, this is not drawn out by any question.

Mr. Fullerton—Yes; it is drawn out by the question. I asked him whether, in that interview, he said anything in regard to Dr. Storrs.

Mr. Evarts—Whether Mr. Beecher did?

Mr. Fullerton—Yes.

Mr. Evarts—Well, how is that material?

Mr. Fullerton—That will appear after it comes in evidence.

Mr. Evarts—Oh! yes; but on the face of the matter it is immaterial.

Mr. Fullerton—It is in connection with this Church Council. Judge Neilson—'I think we will have to take it, and see whether it is.

Mr. Fullerton—Go on and state, if you please, what he said in regard to it. A. Yes, Sir; that Dr. Storrs intended to be severe on Mr. Tilton, and I told Mr. Beecher that I did not think that would be the proper course for Dr. Storrs to pursue, that I thought it was not ingenuous for him to do it.

Q. Go on and finish the conversation. A. And he said he thought it would not be right for Dr. Storrs to do it; that is before the speech of Dr. Storrs was made, Sir, now that I am speaking of; then Dr. Storrs made his speech, and followed the letter.

Q. Look at the letter which I show you now and see in whose handwriting it is? A. Mr. Beecher's handwriting; is that all that you want to know?

Q. Letter written to you? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Did you receive it about the time of its date? A. I did.

[Letter submitted to defendant's counsel.]

Mr. Fullerton—Have you any objection to it, gentlemen?

Mr. Evarts—I suppose not.

[Confidential.]

MY DEAR FRANK: I am indignant beyond expression. Storrs's course has been an unspeakable outrage. After his pretended sympathy and friendship for Theodore he has turned against him in the most venomous manner—and it is not sincere. His professions of faith and affection for me are hollow and faithless. They are merely tactical. His object is plain. He is determined to force a conflict and to use one of us to destroy the other if possible. That is his game. By stinging Theodore he believes that he will be driven into a course which he hopes will ruin me. If ever a man betrayed another he has. I am in hopes that Theodore, who has borne so much, will be unwilling to be a flail in Storrs's hand to strike at a friend. There are one or two reasons, emphatic, for waiting until the end of the Council before taking any action.

1. That the attack on Plymouth Church and the threats against Congregationalism were so violent that the public mind is likely to be absorbed in the ecclesiastical elements and not in the personal.

2. If Plymouth Church is disfellowshipped it will constitute a blow at me and the church, far severer than at him.

3. That if Council does not disfellowship Plymouth Church, then, undoubtedly Storrs will go off into Presbyterianism, as he almost, without disguise, threatened in his speech, and, in that case, the emphasis will be there.

4. At any rate, while the fury rages in Council, it is not wise to make any more that would be one among so many, as to lose effect in a degree, and after the battle is over one can more exactly see what ought to be done. Meantime I am patient, as I know how to be, but pretty nearly used up with inward excitement, and must run away for a day or two and hide and sleep, or there will be a funeral.

Cordially and trustingly yours,

W. W. B.

March 25, 1874.

No one can tell under first impressions what the effect of such a speech will be. It ought to damn Storrs.

[Letter marked "Exhibit No. 30."]

Q. [Handing letter to witness.] There is another letter, Mr. Moulton, which you will please look at and say in whose handwriting it is? A. In the handwriting of Mr. Beecher.

Q. To whom is it addressed? A. To me.

Q. Did you receive it about the time of its date? A. I did; yes, Sir.

Mr. Fullerton—I read it in evidence:

Sunday Night, March 29, 1874.

MY DEAR FRANK: Is there to be no end of trouble? Is wave to follow wave in endless succession? I was cut to the heart when C. showed me that shameful paragraph from The Union. Its cruelty is beyond description. I felt like lying down and saying, "I am tired—tired of living, or of trying to resist the devil of mischief." I would rather have had a javelin launched against me a hundred times than against those that have suffered so much. The shameful indelicacy of bringing the most sacred relations into such publicity, fills me with horror.

But there are some slight alleviations. The paragraph came when the public mind was engaged with the Council and with Theodore's letters. I hope it will pass without further notice. If it is not taken up by other papers it will sink out of sight and be forgotten; whereas, if it be assailed, it may give it a conspicuity that it never would have had. But I shall write Shearman a letter, and give him my full feeling about it. I must again [be], as I have heretofore been, indebted to you for a judicial counsel on this new and flagrant element. My innermost soul longs for peace; and if that cannot be, for death—that will bring peace. My fervent hope is that this drop of gall may sink through out of sight, and not prove a mortal poison. Yours ever,

H. W. BEECHER.

I have written strongly to Shearman, and hope that he will send a letter to T., unsolicited. I am sick, head, heart and body, but must move on! I feel this morning like letting things go by the run!

[Copy of letter marked "Exhibit No. 81."]

Q. Now, Mr. Moulton, state if you please, whether you saw the paragraph in The Union, to which reference is there made? A. I did.

Q. State the substance of it?

Mr. Everts—We would rather have the paragraph.

Mr. Fullerton—It is not necessary, if your Honor please, we should produce those newspapers that are incidentally referred to. That is not the rule. I only wanted to know the subject matter of the article.

Judge Neilson—The subject matter we have got; I think the paper ought to be produced. You can produce it hereafter.

Mr. Fullerton—It is referred to as a collateral matter.

Judge Neilson—It is not remotely collateral. I think the paper should be produced. You can introduce it hereafter.

Q. After receiving that letter did you see Mr. Beecher? A. Yes, Sir; I saw him.

Mr. Everts—The paper is in the letter.

Mr. Fullerton—The paragraph from The Union is as follows—

Mr. Everts—We consent to this being read as if the paper was here. We only want to object to memory as to accuracy. We understand that to be the same.

Mr. Fullerton [reading]:

At the close of the service, a Union reporter approached Mr. Beecher, for the purpose of getting his views as to the Council, but he declined to be interviewed. Mr. Shearman, the Clerk of the Church, however, was communicative. He said he had received no intimation, as yet, what course the Council would pursue. In regard to the scandal on Mr. Beecher, he said, so far as Tilton was concerned, he (Tilton) was out of his mind, off his balance, and did not act reasonably. As for Mrs. Tilton, she had occasioned the whole trouble while in a half-crazed condition. She had mediumistic fits, and while under the strange power that possessed her, often spoke of the most incredible things, declared things possible that were impossible, and among the rest had slandered Mr. Beecher. Mr. Tilton himself had acknowledged that all the other things she had told him in her mediumistic trance were false and impossible; then why, asked Mr. Shearman, should the scandal on Mr. Beecher be the only truth in her crazy words?

Q. What, if anything, did Mr. Beecher say to you in regard to that publication? A. He thought it was outrageous—he said it was.

Q. If you can recollect anything else he told you, please state it? A. He said he would write; I don't remember whether I saw him before he wrote the letter or not, but I had a conversation with him concerning that paragraph—whether it was before or after the receipt of this letter I don't remember; and I said to him: "Mr. Beecher, you know that that statement is false with regard to Theodore, and you know that it is false with regard to Elizabeth Tilton, and Theodore Tilton, unless it is corrected, will make trouble about it. It is an outrage; I am not surprised at it as coming from Mr. Shearman at all; I don't think he is above such matters." That is what I told Mr. Beecher, and Mr. Beecher said to me that he thought it was an outrage; that he thought it was a cruelty; that it caused him an almost unspeakable agony, and he wept over it, and I told him that I should go to see Mr. Shearman about it, and I did go to see Mr. Shearman about it.

Mr. Everts—No matter about what passed between you and Mr. Shearman.

The Witness—I am not going to say anything about that, Sir; I saw Mr. Beecher after I had seen Mr. Shearman, and I told Mr. Beecher that Mr. Shearman refused to read the paragraph when I placed it before him on his desk, and I told Mr. Beecher that I had subsequently taken Mr. Tilton to see Mr. Shearman, and that Mr. Shearman had made an explanation to Mr. Tilton, which Mr. Tilton denounced as false; and I saw Mr. Beecher subsequently, and I told him of a letter which Mr. Shearman had given to me to give to Mr. Tilton, which Mr. Tilton had refused to receive, on the ground that it contained a deliberate falsehood, and that unless Mr. Shearman did write another letter taking it back, as it should be retracted, that Mr. Tilton would make trouble about it; and I told Mr. Beecher subsequently that Mr. Shearman had written a letter of retraction, and had received back from me the letter which he wrote at first, and which Mr. Tilton stigmatized as a falsehood; and Mr. Beecher said to me also that it was his opinion that Mr. Shearman was a mischief-maker. [Laughter.]

Q. By Mr. Everts—You have not stated when this was? A. In an interview I had with him concerning this paragraph in The Union.

Q. When? A. Shortly after the paragraph in The Union appeared.

Mr. Beach—I suppose we have that correspondence, if it is desired to fix the date.

The Witness—The date of Mr. Shearman's letter would fix it.

Q. By Mr. Fullerton—[Handing a book to witness.] Look at that and see if it will fix the date of Mr. Shearman's letter?

Mr. Everts—The date of the conversation is all that is necessary.

Mr. Fullerton—That will enable him to fix the date of the conversation.

The Witness—It is dated April 2, 1874.

Q. Does that enable you to state when the conversation of which you have spoken took place? A. The conversation was before Mr. Beecher's letter a short time, or after Mr. Beecher's letter a short time.

Mr. Evarts—It was all one conversation, was it? A. No, Sir; there were several conversations.

Mr. Fullerton—His statement is directly contrary to that.

Mr. Evarts—I would like to have the line drawn between what is in one and what is in the other.

Mr. Beach—That is sufficiently indicated by his examination so far.

Q. By Mr. Fullerton—Can you give the dates of these several conversations of which you speak? A. I cannot; but they were quite near together.

Q. Were you present when either of Mr. Shearman's letters were delivered? A. Present when Mr. Shearman's letter was delivered to Mr. Tilton?

Q. Yes, Sir. A. Mr. Shearman gave to me that letter of April 2.

Mr. Evarts—I suppose this is all irrelevant?

Judge Neilson—It is a mere incident in the order of dates. I think he may answer what he knows about this case, because it connects the chain.

The Witness—Mr. Shearman gave me the letter to deliver to Mr. Tilton.

Q. Who was present when you delivered the letter of April 2 to Mr. Tilton?

Mr. Evarts—Your Honor will see that it is all immaterial, and I would like to state my views in regard to it. All this matter arises out of a reporter's paragraph in The Union; it is not a paragraph printed by Mr. Shearman or by anybody; it is a reporter's statement of an interview with Mr. Shearman, as I understand it, in The Brooklyn Union, which is a paper here—The Christian Union, is it?

Mr. Fullerton—The Brooklyn Union.

Mr. Evarts—The Brooklyn Union, a political paper—a secular paper. What Mr. Beecher says about that is good evidence of course, and that we have; but what passes between Mr. Tilton and Mr. Moulton and Mr. Shearman afterwards, getting before the public what, it was complained, was improperly represented in that paragraph of the report of the interview, we suppose is wholly immaterial.

Mr. Beach—Undoubtedly. We don't offer anything of the kind.

Mr. Evarts—All this seems to me to be of that kind of character.

Mr. Beach—Oh! no.

Mr. Fullerton—The gentleman will see the propriety of this evidence when I inform him that I expect to prove by the witness that Mr. Beecher was present when the letter was delivered. My question, to which Mr. Evarts objected, was when this letter was delivered.

Judge Neilson—I think he can answer that, yet the general view presented by the counsel is correct, unless it is connected.

Mr. Evarts—We think it is all wholly immaterial.

Mr. Fullerton—Who was present when this letter of April 2 was delivered? A. I think Mr. Beecher was present.

Mr. Evarts—You mean to say he was present? A. I think he was present; my recollection is that he was present.

Mr. Evarts—I cannot chase after these interviews—a mere notion that a man was present.

Mr. Fullerton—You can make objections beyond all doubt. (Laughter.) The witness is not willing to say he (Beecher) was present.

Judge Neilson—The witness says he thinks he (Beecher) was present. [To the witness]. State your best recollection in regard to it? A. My best recollection is that he was present. I remember the conversation when Mr. Beecher, Mr. Tilton, Mr. Shearman and myself were present.

Q. Was that when this letter was delivered? A. I am not clear as to that. I am quite clear as to Mr. Beecher being present when the letter was delivered.

Mr. Fullerton—[Handing a letter to witness].—Look at the letter and state? A. My impression is, I showed this letter to Mr. Beecher before it was delivered to Mr. Tilton, and not that he was present when it was delivered.

Mr. Fullerton—Now, I propose to read it in evidence.

BROOKLYN, April 2, 1874.

DEAR SIR; Having seen a paragraph in The Brooklyn Union of Saturday last, containing a report of a statement alleged to have been made by me concerning your family and myself, I desire to assure you that this report is seriously incorrect, and that I have never authorized such a statement.

It is unnecessary to repeat here what I have actually said upon these subjects, because I am now satisfied that what I did say was erroneous, and that the rumors to which I gave some credit were without foundation. I deeply regret having been misled into an act of unintentional injustice, and am glad to take the earliest occasion to rectify it.

I beg, therefore, to withdraw all that I said upon the occasion referred to as incorrect (although then believed by me), and to repudiate entirely the statement imputed to me as untrue and unjust to all parties concerned.

Yours obediently,

Theodore Tilton, Esq.

T. G. SHEARMAN.

[Copy of letter marked "Exhibit No. 32."]

INSIDE HISTORY OF THE BACON LETTER.

Q. Do you recollect what is known in this controversy as "the Bacon letter?" A. Yes, Sir.

Q. When was that letter written, in point of time? A. In June of 1874.

Q. When did you first become acquainted with its existence? A. The day after its publication.

Q. From whom did you receive your information? A. From Theodore Tilton.

Q. By the Bacon letter, are we to understand it as a letter written by Theodore Tilton to Dr. Bacon? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you have any interview with Mr. Beecher upon that subject? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. State, if you please, what that interview was, and when it was? A. I remember an interview in my study, at which Mr. Shearman, Mr. Tilton, Mr. Beecher and myself were present. Mr. Tilton said to Mr. Beecher that he knew perfectly well that he (Tilton) was not the creature of his magnanimity, as Dr. Bacon alleged; that he was not a dog and a knave—had not been in his treatment of Mr. Beecher; and that he could not rest under that imputation, and wanted Mr. Beecher to set the matter right with Dr. Bacon; and that if he did not, he (Theodore Tilton) should. That is substantially the conversation that I remember. That is the first conference, and then I saw Mr. Beecher afterward about it.

Q. Don't you recollect anything else that took place at that first interview; if there was any reply to the observation, I want you to state it? A. Mr. Beecher said that he didn't see what reply he could make; that the case was full of embarrassments; that, if he should make a reply to Dr. Bacon, it would be considered as something like a confession; he made some reply of that sort; I don't remember the exact language he used, but he pleaded his embarrassments; the general impression in my mind is that he was surrounded by embarrassments which made it difficult for him to do it.

Q. What was referred to when he spoke of not being the creature of Mr. Beecher's magnanimity; that he wasn't a dog or a knave? A. His own action in regard to Mr. Tilton's family; Mr. Tilton referred specifically to his action with reference to his family.

Q. Did he not refer to Dr. Bacon's articles that had appeared in The Independent from time to time? A. Yes, Sir; that was the subject of the conversation; but the direct reference that was made in regard to Mr. Tilton's not being the creature of his magnanimity was, that he (Mr. Beecher) knew that he (Tilton) was not the creature of his magnanimity, on account of his knowledge of Mr. Tilton's relations with his family.

Q. This proposed letter of Mr. Tilton, called the Bacon letter, was in reply to these various articles in The Independent? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Was the Bacon letter there then under consideration? A. I don't remember that it was.

Q. Was it afterward produced, what Mr. Tilton proposed to publish? A. No, Sir; it was not produced at that time.

Q. At any subsequent time was it produced? A. I don't think it was to Mr. Beecher.

Q. Did you have any conversation with Mr. Beecher in regard to the contents of it? A. I had an interview with Mr. Beecher, more than one interview, in which I said I would undertake to prevent the writing of it.

Q. State what you said to him in that conversation? A. I said I would undertake to prevent the reply to the Bacon letter; that I did not think Mr. Tilton should reply to it.

Q. You said, "reply to the Bacon letter?" A. I said to Mr. Beecher, I would undertake to prevent Mr. Tilton making any reply to the Bacon letter—to Dr. Bacon.

Q. Tell us all that occurred on that subject in that interview, when you proposed to prevent the reply to Dr. Bacon? A. I told Mr. Beecher that Mr. Tilton had said to me that if he replied to Dr. Bacon, he should tell the whole truth with regard to Mr. Beecher's relations with his family; that I considered that would be an outrage, if Theodore Tilton did it upon his family; that he ought not to do it, and that feeling that way I should undertake to prevent the writing of it, and that if I could not prevent the writing of it, that I would try to prevent the publication of it; and Mr. Beecher said to me, he hoped that I would prevent the writing of that letter.

Q. What occurred then in regard to it? A. After that I saw Mr. Tilton, and I told him I thought he ought not to think of writing a reply to Dr. Bacon, that it was better for him to undertake to live it down, that I did not think the effect of Dr. Bacon's letter in The Independent and his speech at the college would have such an effect on him in New-England as he expected it would have, and I communicated what I had said to Mr. Tilton to Mr. Beecher, and Mr. Beecher said that he agreed with me, that he thought it would not have the effect upon Theodore Tilton in New-England that he thought it would have, that Dr. Bacon did not have such an extensive influence as he, Theodore, thought he had. Then I saw Mr. Tilton after the letter had been fully prepared; I had not seen it during its publication, and he said to me, "I think that I ought to read to you the letter." I said, "Well, if you have written it, then I would like to hear it read."

Mr. Everts—We don't want anything stated that is not connected with Mr. Beecher.

The Witness—I am going to connect it with Mr. Beecher.

Judge Nelson—Pass over your conversation with Mr. Beecher and tell the rest; that will cover the whole ground.

The Witness—I said to Mr. Beecher that I had heard the Bacon letter read before its publication; that I had undertaken, and did succeed, in having taken from that letter the phrase, "He has committed against my family a revolting crime," and of having substituted in its place a statement that instead of that he had committed an offense. I told him that that was as much as I had been able to do with Mr. Tilton, and that is the substance of what occurred.

Mr. Everts—That was after the publication? A. After the publication; I told Mr. Beecher that the letter, as originally read to me, contained the words, "has committed against me and my family a revolting crime," and I told Mr. Beecher the reason for my having substituted the words "offense" or "crime."

Mr. Fullerton—In the Bacon letter? A. In the Bacon letter.

Mr. Beach—What did you tell him? A. I said that I had an idea that if he stated that he, Beecher, had committed against him and his family a revolting crime, that as that was the truth there would be no escape from that; but if the word "offense" was used, and the apology followed the charge of offense in the words of the Bacon letter, seeing that would be considered honorable but for the attack on him by Mr. Beecher in his church, I thought that might afford a basis for reconciliation—that the use of that word "offense" would.

Q. [Handing paper to witness.] State whether you recognize the paper now shown you—whether you recognize the Bacon letter so-called? A. Yes, Sir; that is it, I think.

Mr. Fullerton—I propose to read that letter in evidence. [Reading.]

SIR: I have carefully read your New-Haven address concerning the late Council, and also your five essays on the same subject, just concluded in The Independent.

The numerous and extraordinary misrepresentations of my position which these writings of yours will perpetuate to my injury, if not corrected, compel me to lay before you the data for their correction—misrepresentations which, on your part, are of course wholly unintentional, for you are incapable of doing any man a willful wrong.

In producing to your inspection some hitherto unpublished papers and documents in this case, I need first to state a few facts in chronological sequence, sufficient to explain the documentary evidence which follows.

I. After I had been for fifteen years a member of Plymouth Church, and had become meanwhile an intimate friend of the pastor, knowledge came to me in 1870 that he had committed against me an offense which I forbear to name or characterize. Prompted by my self-respect, I immediately and forever ceased my attendance on his ministry. I informed him of this determination as early as January, 1871, in the presence of a mutual friend, Mr. Francis D. Moulton.

The rules of Plymouth Church afforded me a choice between two methods of retirement: one to ask for a formal letter of dismissal; the other, to dismiss myself less formally by prolonged absence. I chose the latter. In so doing, my chief desire was to avoid giving rise to curious inquiries into the reasons for my abandoning a church in which I had been brought up from boyhood; and therefore I did not invite attention to the subject by asking for a dismissory letter, but adopted the alternative of silently staying away—relying on the rule that a prolonged absence would finally secure to me a dismissal involving no publicity to the case.

Several powerful reasons prompted me to the adoption of this alternative, among which were the following: The pastor communicated to me in writing an apology signed by his name. He also appealed to me to protect him from bringing reproach to the cause of religion. He alleged that an exposure would forbid him to re-ascend his pulpit. These, and other similar reasons, I had no right or disposition to disregard; and I acted upon them with a conscious desire to see Mr. Beecher protected rather than harmed.

II. At length my absence from the church—an absence of which not three members of the congregation, beside the pastor, knew the cause—began to excite comment in private circles.

Some of the members hinted that I had lapsed into a lamentable change of religious views—whereas my views continued to be the same as they had been for many years previous; and though they had long before ceased to find their honest expression in the formal creed which I had professed in my childhood at the altar of Plymouth Church, yet my religious faith had not changed from that early original more than the views of some of the most honored members and officers of the same church had changed within the same time.

Other persons insinuated that I had adopted un-Christian tenets concerning marriage and divorce;—whereas, touching marriage, I have always held, and still hold, with ever-increasing firmness, the one and only view common to all Christendom; and touching divorce, the substance of what I held was, and still is, the needful abrogation of our unjust New-York code, and the substitution of the more humane legislation of New-England and the West.

Other persons fancied that I had become a Spiritualist of an extravagant type;—whereas, I have never yet seen my way clear to be a Spiritualist at all—certainly not to be so much a Spiritualist as some of the most prominent members of Plymouth Church are known to be.

All these suppositions, and many others, but never the right one, became current in the church (and still are) to explain my suddenly surrendered membership; the true reason for which has been understood always by the pastor, but never by his flock.

III. At length, after many calumnious whisperings, near and far (since evil tales magnify as they travel), a weekly paper in New-York, in November, 1873, published a wicked and horrible scandal—a publication which some persons in the church ignorantly attributed in its origin and animus to me; whereas I had previously spent many months of constant and unremitting endeavor to suppress it: an endeavor in which, with an earnest motive, but a foolish judgment, I made many ill-directed sacrifices of my reputation, position, money, and fair prospects in life; for all which losses of things precious, since mine alone was the folly, let mine alone be the blame.

IV. In May, 1873, occurred the surreptitious publication of a tripartite agreement signed by H. C. Bowen, H. W. Beecher and myself—an agreement which, so far as I was concerned, had for its object to pledge me to silence against using or circulating charges which Mr. Bowen had made against Mr. Beecher. This covenant, as originally written, would have bound me never to speak, not only of Mr. Bowen's, but also of my own personal grievances against Mr. Beecher. I refused to sign the original paper. My position in the amended paper was this: Mr. Bowen had made grave charges against Mr. Beecher. These charges Mr. Bowen had been induced to recall in writing. I cheerfully agreed never to circulate the charges which Mr. Bowen had recalled.

V. In August, 1873, Mr. William F. West, a member of Plymouth Church, hitherto a stranger to me, came to my residence, accompanied (at his request) by my friend Mr. F. B. Carpenter, and told me that when the summer vacation was over, he (Mr. W.) meant to cite me before the church on the charge of circulating scandals against the pastor; declaring, in Mr. C.'s presence, that Mr. Beecher had acted as if the reported scandalous tales were true rather than false, and urging that I owed it to myself and the truth to go forward and become a willing witness in an investigation. I peremptorily declined to join Mr. West in his proposed investigation, and declared that as I had not been a member of Plymouth Church for several years, I could not be induced to return to that church for any purpose whatever, least of all for so distasteful a purpose as to participate in a scandal. Mr. West had meanwhile discovered that my name still remained on the church roll; from which circumstance he determined to assume that I was still a member, and to force me to trial. Accordingly, a few weeks later, he brought forward charges which were nominally made against myself, but really against the pastor—charges which, if I may characterize them by the recently published language of the present clerk of Plymouth Church, were "an indirect and insincere method of investigating one man under the false pretence of investigating another."

Some leading members, including especially the pastor, desired my co-operation in defeating Mr. West, and I cheerfully gave it. To this end, I wrote—with their pre-knowledge and at their urgent desire—a letter declining to accept a copy of the charges addressed to me as a member, on the ground that I had, four years previously, ceased my connection with the church. For this letter, I received, on the next day after sending it, the pastor's prompt and hearty thanks. An understanding was then had between Mr. Beecher and myself, in an interview at the residence of Mr. Moulton, that Mr. West's indictment against me was to be disposed of in the following way, namely: by a simple resolution to the effect that, whereas I had, four years previously, terminated my membership; and whereas, by inadvertence my name still remained on the roll; therefore resolved that the roll be amended in accordance with the fact. This was to put Mr. West's case quietly out of court without bringing up the scandal.

To my surprise and indignation, I learned on the morning of October 31, 1873, that the report which was to be presented at the church meeting to be held on that evening would not be in the simple form already indicated, but would declare that whereas I had been charged with slandering the pastor; and whereas I had been cited before the church to meet the charge; and whereas I had pleaded non-membership as an excuse for not appearing for trial; therefore resolved that I should be dropped, etc.

This gross imputation, thus foreshadowed to me, led me to appear in person at the church on that evening, there to await the reading of the forthcoming report. This report, when it came to be read, brought me the following novel intelligence, namely, "Whereas a copy of the charges was put into the hands of the said Tilton on the 17th of October, and a request made of him that he should answer the same by the 3d of October," etc.

I do not know to this day whose hand it was that drew the above report, and therefore I am happily saved from an offensive personality when I say that the statement which I have here quoted is diametrically the opposite of the truth; for instead of my having been requested to answer the charges, I had been requested not to answer them.

After the public reading of the above report I arose in the meeting and said, in Mr. Beecher's presence, that if I had slandered him I would answer for it to his face; to which he replied, in an equally public manner, that he had no charge whatever to make against me.

VI. Next, growing out of the church's singular proceedings in this case, came the Congregational Council of which you were Moderator.

The above facts and events—which I have mentioned as briefly as possible, omitting their details—will serve as a sufficient groundwork whereon to base the correction of the unjust and injurious statements which you have unwittingly given of my participation and responsibility in the case. With the Congregational theories and usages which you have so ably discussed, I have no concern—you are probably right about them. But as to all the essential facts growing out of my relationship to Plymouth Church, you have been wholly misinformed—as you will see by the following proofs:

I. You say that I retired from the church, giving no announcement of my so doing to any proper officer; in other words, that I stole out secretly, letting no one in authority know of my purpose. Your language concerning me is as follows:

"His position was that he had terminated his membership four years previously—not by requesting the church (as by its rules he might have done) to drop his name from its roll," etc.

You then ask:

"Is this the beautiful non-stringency of the covenant which connects the members of that church with the body, and with each other? What sort of a covenant is that which can be dissolved at any moment, not merely by mutual consent, nor by either party giving notice to the other, but by a silent volition in the mind of either?"

The above is a thorough misstatement of the manner in which I left Plymouth Church.

On the very first occasion of my meeting the chief officer of the church, after my retirement from it, I gave notice to him of that retirement. At a later period I repeated this notice to other officers of that body. In evidence of this fact I adduce the following extract from a recent card by Mr. Thomas S. Shearman, Clerk of Plymouth Church, published in The Independent, June 18, 1874. He says:

"Long before any charges were preferred against him, Mr. Tilton distinctly informed the clerk of the church and various other officers and members (myself included) that he had withdrawn and that his name ought to be taken off the roll."

II. You say that I have either "a malicious heart," or "a crazy brain." I know the fountain-head of this opinion. While the Council was in session in Brooklyn, the following startling paragraph appeared in The Brooklyn Union of Saturday, March 28, 1874:

Mr. Fullerton—I need not read the article from The Brooklyn Union, which was read awhile ago.

Mr. Evarts—No, Sir.

My attention was not called to the above paragraph until after the Council had adjourned, and its members had gone to their homes. At first, I was not willing to believe that the Clerk of Plymouth Church—the same officer whose name had been officially signed to all the documents which the church had just been sending to the Council—could have been guilty of such an outrage against truth and decency as the above paragraph contained—particularly against a lady whose devout religious faith and life are at the farthest possible remove from spiritualism or fanaticism of any kind. Accordingly I procured the following sworn statement by the reporter certifying to the accuracy of his report:

Mr. Fullerton—I don't propose to read the report.

Mr. Beach—I don't know why you should not read it.

Mr. Fullerton—With the consent of my learned opponents, I leave out part of this letter, only stating that the correspondence resulted in the letter of Mr. Sherman, which I have heretofore read.

Mr. Evarts—There is no object in reading it.

III. You ask, "when did Mr. Tilton cease to be responsible to the Plymouth Church?" I answer that I first ceased my responsibility to that church when I terminated my membership four years ago. I afterwards voluntarily renewed my responsibility to the church on the evening of Oct. 31, 1873, by appearing in person at one of its public meetings, and offering to answer, then and there, in the pastor's presence, the charge that I slandered him. Less than two months ago, I still further renewed my responsibility to Plymouth Church, as will appear by the following correspondence:

BROOKLYN, May 4, 1874.

REV. HENRY WARD BEECHER, Pastor of Plymouth Church;
REV. S. B. HALLIDAY, Associate Pastor; and Mr. THOMAS
G. SHEARMAN, Clerk.

GENTLEMEN:—I address, through you, to the church of which you are officers, the following statement, which you are at liberty to communicate to the church through the Examining Committee, or in any other mode, private or public:

The Rev. Leonard Bacon, D.D., L.L.D., Moderator of the recent Congregational Council, has seen fit, since the adjournment of that body, to proclaim, publish and reiterate, with signal emphasis, and with the weight of something like official authority, a grave declaration which I here quote, namely:

"It was for the Plymouth Church," he says, "to vindicate its pastor against a damaging imputation from one of its members. But with great alacrity—the pastor himself consenting—IT THREW AWAY THE OPPORTUNITY OF VINDICATION." . . . "That act," he continued, "in which the PLYMOUTH CHURCH THREW AWAY THE OPPORTUNITY OF VINDICATING ITS PASTOR, was what gave occasion for remonstrances from neighboring churches."

. . . "There are many," he says also, "not only in Brooklyn, but elsewhere, who felt that the church had not fairly met the question, and by evading the issue had THROWN AWAY THE OPPORTUNITY OF VINDICATING ITS PASTOR."

The Moderator's declaration is thus made three times over that the Plymouth Church, in dealing with my case, THREW AWAY ITS OPPORTUNITY OF VINDICATING THE PASTOR.

This declaration so emphatically repeated by the chief mouth-piece of the Council, and put forth by him apparently as an exposition of the Council's views, compels me, as the third party to the controversy, to choose between two alternatives.

One of these is to remain contentedly in the dishonorable position of a man who denies to his former pastor an opportunity for the vindication of that pastor's character—an offense the more heinous because an unsullied character and reputation are requisite to his sacred office.

The other alternative is for me to restore to his church their lost opportunity for his vindication by presenting myself voluntarily for the same trial to which the church would have power to summon me if I were a member—a suggestion which (judging from my past experience) will subject me afresh to the unjust imputation of reviving a scandal for the suppression of which I have made more sacrifices than all other persons.

Between these two alternatives—which are all that the Moderator leaves to me—and which are both equally repugnant to my feelings—duty requires me to choose the second.

I therefore give you notice that if the Pastor, or the Examining Committee, or the church as a body, desire to repossess the opportunity which the Moderator laments that you have thrown away. I hereby restore to you this lost opportunity as freely as if you had never parted with it.

I authorize you (if such be your pleasure) to cite me at any time within the next thirty days to appear at the bar of Plymouth Church for trial on the charge heretofore made against me, namely, that of "circulating and promoting scandal derogatory to the Christian integrity of the pastor and injurious to the reputation of the church."

My only stipulation concerning the trial is that it shall not be held with closed doors, nor in the absence of the pastor.

I regret keenly that the Moderator has imposed on me the necessity for making this communication, for nothing but necessity would exhort it.

The practical good which I seek to achieve by this proposition is that, whether accepted or declined, it will in either case effectually put an end forever to the Moderator's grave charge that Plymouth Church has been deprived through me of an opportunity to vindicate its pastor, or that its pastor has been by any act of mine deprived of an opportunity to vindicate himself.

Truly yours, THEODORE TILTON.

To the above communication I received the following reply from the clerk of the church :

BROOKLYN, May 18, 1874.

DEAR SIR: Your note of the 4th inst., inclosing a letter addressed to Mr. Beecher, Mr. Halliday, and myself, was duly received.

This letter has been read by Mr. Halliday, with whose concurrence it has been submitted to the Examining Committee; and we all deem its contents to present a question which should be decided by that Committee, and which should not be submitted to the pastor of the church, to whom, therefore, the letter has not been shown, though he has been advised of its substance.

Having consulted the members of the Committee, I am informed by them that they see no reason for accepting your proposition, or even laying it before the church.

Whatever view may be taken of the case by others, the Examining Committee and the church have seen no necessity for vindicating any member of the church from charges which no one has made, and the church has never in the twenty-seven years of its history adopted such a course. No one can, therefore, hold you responsible for the loss of an opportunity to the church to do that which it never yet has done, and probably never will do.

We do not understand your letter as implying that you have any charges to make, but to the contrary. If the Committee had so understood it, they would have readily entertained and fully investigated them.

It is proper to add that your name was dropped from the roll, not simply because of the statements made by you after charges had been preferred against you, but because months, if not years, before any charges were made you distinctly stated to various officers and members of the church that you had permanently abandoned your connection with it, thus bringing yourself expressly within the terms of our rule upon the subject.

Yours truly,

THOMAS G. SHEARMAN.

Mr. Theodore Tilton.

As the above communication by Mr. Shearman seemed to bear no official, but only a private signature, I addressed to him the following note :

174 LIVINGSTON-ST., BROOKLYN, May 23, 1874.

MR. THOMAS G. SHEARMAN, Clerk of Plymouth Church.

SIR: My recent communication addressed to the pastor, the associate pastor and the Clerk of Plymouth Church is acknowledged by you in a note which you seem to have signed merely as a private individual, and not as an officer of the church.

I call your attention to the fact that I did not address you in your private capacity, but solely as the Clerk of Plymouth Church.

I therefore respectfully request to be informed by you definitely and in writing, whether or not I am at liberty to regard your letter as an official reply to mine.

Yours truly,

THEODORE TILTON.

Mr. Shearman's reply was as follows :

81 HICKS-ST., BROOKLYN, May 29, 1874.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your inquiry whether my letter of 18th inst. was an official answer to yours of the 4th inst., I beg to say that I did not feel at liberty, without the express authority of the church itself, to sign that letter as its clerk.

In so far as the letter stated that your proposition of May 4 was declined, it was official; since as clerk of the church I declined then, and decline now, to lay the proposal before the church itself, holding myself responsible to the church for so doing.

The remainder of the letter of 18th inst. must be regarded as my individual statement of what I believe to be the unanimous opinion of the officers of the church.

Your obedient servant, THOMAS G. SHEARMAN.

Mr. Theodore Tilton.

It will thus be seen that Mr. Shearman, in answer to my inquiry, characterizes his previous letter to me as partly official and partly unofficial, though how he could originally have expected me to draw the dividing line between its two parts without this subsequent explanation I am at a loss to understand. But the official portion of his letter (now that it has been pointed out to me) is sufficient to answer your query, "When did Mr. Tilton cease to be responsible to the Plymouth Church?" I respectfully submit that, setting aside all previous cavils and technicalities concerning the church roll, I may be fairly said to have ceased my responsibility to Plymouth Church when the clerk of that church officially informed me that my voluntary offer to return and be tried was officially declined.

IV. In your five essays you were led, through ignorance of the facts, to make several other erroneous and injurious statements concerning my case; but the corrections and explanations which I have already given will of themselves correct the others.

It now remains for me to give you some reasons why I have been prompted, after years of reticence, to lay before you the grave matters contained in this communication. Nothing could induce me to make my present use of the foregoing facts, except the conviction which the events of the last year, and particularly of the last half year, have forced upon my mind that Mr. Beecher, or his legal and other agents acting in his interest and by his consent, have shown themselves willing to sacrifice my good name for the maintenance of his. I have come slowly to this judgment—more slowly than my personal friends have done; but that I am not mistaken in it, you shall see by a few illustrative instances:

1. I have already shown you how the church, at a public meeting, on Friday evening, October 31, 1873, by an official document which was published the next morning in every leading journal in New York, gave the public falsely to understand that I had been cited to answer charges, when I had really been requested not to answer them:—a piece of ecclesiastical misrepresentation which was the more grievous to me because it was subsequently accepted by the Council as authentic, and because it is still widely believed by the public.

2. Mr. Beecher's journal, The Christian Union, published this official falsehood to a wide circle of readers, and took no notice of the correction which I addressed at the time in a brief note to the Council. Let me ask you to weigh the peculiar gravity of this omission by that journal. My case, as presented to the Council by the two protesting churches, was based by them, not on any private or accurate knowledge of the facts, but solely on the published misstatements of those facts by Plymouth Church. I was described by the two churches to the Council as follows :

"Specific charges of grossly un-Christian conduct are presented against him by a brother in the church, to which charges he declines to answer," etc.

You will remember that I promptly addressed to you a reply to the above, in which I used the following explicit words:

"Gentlemen of the Council, every man among you knows that I did not decline to answer."

You, as Moderator of the Council, courteously gave me the ecclesiastical reasons why my letters could not be officially laid before that body; but can you give me any honorable reason why my defense should not have been published in The Christian Union? If every other American journal should be destroyed, and only the files of The Christian Union should remain, that journal's report of my case would represent me as a culprit, first, who had slandered a clergyman; next, who had been summoned before the church to answer for this calumny; next, who had evaded this summons by resorting to the safe shelter of non-membership; and last, who on account of this moral poltroonery, had been dropped from the roll. Such is the record which Mr. Beecher's journal contains of my case, up to date.

3. During the Council, and when there seemed a probability that Plymouth Church would receive condemnation and be disestablished by the neighboring churches, Mr. Beecher inspired a message from his church to the Council, closing with these words:

"We hold that it is our right, and may be our duty, to avoid the evils incident to a public explanation or a public trial; and that such an exercise of our discretion furnishes us no good ground for the interference of other churches, provided we neither retain within our fellowship, nor dismiss by letter, as in regular standing, persons who bring open dishonor upon the Christian name."

This adroit insinuation against me is what you, as Moderator of the Council, know to have been the turning point in the fortunes of Plymouth Church before that tribunal. The Council's verdict borrows almost these identical words. It says: "The accused person has not been retained in the church, nor commended to any other church." You, too, quote these words—borrowed thus doubly from the church's plea and from the Council's verdict—and you then logically say, "Therefore the abnormal method in which the charges against him (me) were disposed of was overlooked."

In other words, the Council, on reading the above excusatory petition sent up to it by Plymouth Church, found in it the one and only ground for retaining that church within the Congregational fellowship; and this one and only ground was because Mr. Beecher's final appeal to the Council represented me as a person who had neither been retained in his church, nor been recommended to any other, but who was dropped from the roll for bringing "dishonor upon the Christian name." This document—constituting Plymouth Church's ungenerous defense before the Council—was accepted by you in good faith, and has since led you to point against me the following cruel words:

"The Plymouth Church," you say, "made it known that they were no longer responsible for the dishonor which he has brought or may bring on the name of Christ. They dropped him from the roll of the church. In one word, they excommunicated him, for such a dropping from the roll was excommunication from the church."

You never could have uttered the preceding injurious words against me had not Mr. Beecher and his church-agents given you the materials for so doing by ingeniously putting before the Council a document which you, as Moderator, interpreted as being only another way of Plymouth Church's saying that I had brought dishonor on the Christian name, and had therefore been excommunicated.

Do not misunderstand me. I will not say that, in my unsuccessful management of this unhappy scandal, I have brought no "dishonor on the Christian name:" the one name which, of all others, I most seek to honor. With infinite sorrow I look back through the last few years, and see instances in which, by the fatality of my false position, I have brought peculiar "dishonor on the Christian name:"—all which I freely acknowledge, and hope yet to repair. But I solemnly aver—and no man shall gainsay me—that the reason why Plymouth Church avoided an investigation into the scandal with which I was charged, was not because I, but another man, had "brought dishonor on the 'Christian name.'" And yet this other person, a clergyman, permitted his church to brand me before the Council with an accusation which, had I been in his place and he in mine, I would have voluntarily borne for myself in stead of casting on another.

4. I will adduce a further instance by a quotation from a letter which I had occasion to address to Mr. Beecher, dated May 1, 1874:

HENRY WARD BEECHER.

SIR: Mr. F. B. Carpenter mentions to me your saying to him that under certain conditions, involving certain disavowals by me, a sum of money would or could be raised to send me, with my family to Europe, for a term of years.

The occasion compels me to state explicitly that so long as life and self-respect continue to exist together in my breast, I shall be debarred from receiving, either directly or indirectly, any pecuniary or other favor at your hands.

The reason for this feeling on my part you know so well, that I will spare you the statement of it.

Yours truly,

THEODORE TILTON.

5. Take another instance. You will perceive that in Mr. Shearman's letter, given above—the letter officially declining my offer to return to the church to be tried—he says, under date, May 18, 1874:

"Your note of 4th inst., inclosing a letter addressed to Mr. Beecher, Mr. Halliday and myself was duly received. This letter has been read by Mr. Halliday, with whose concurrence it has been submitted to the Examining Committee.

And yet, a month and a half after Mr. Halliday saw this letter, and a month after Mr. Shearman had officially replied to it, The Brooklyn Union of June 19th, contained the following singular statement, by a reporter who visited Mr. Halliday:

"In an extract," says The Union, "from a letter written to The Chicago Tribune, it is stated that Mr. Tilton had addressed a note to the 'Trustees of Plymouth Church.' The Tribune's correspondent declares that Mr. Tilton 'not only expresses his willingness, but desires to answer any summons, as a witness, during the next thirty days.' A Union reporter (Mr. Tilton not being accessible) called on Rev. Mr. Halliday to-day, and, upon presenting the extract to him, was assured that the person who corresponded with the Chicago Tribune must have been misinformed. The very fact of his stating that the letter was addressed 'to the Trustees of the Church,' he said, 'was an absurdity.' The Trustees only attended to temporariness of the church. If Mr. Tilton had written such a letter, of which, however, he had no knowledge, it would have been either addressed to the Church, to its pastor, or to some member or members. At the last Friday evening meeting no such letter had been presented for consideration, and he was certain none had since been received, although he must say he had been absent in Massachusetts about a week. He added that he had reason for believing that Mr. Tilton felt a little sore about what Rev. Mr. Bacon had said of him. But whether he would take to writing letters about it he couldn't say.

And yet Mr. Halliday, according to Mr. Shearman's testimony above given, had read my letter forty days before thus denying that he had ever seen or heard of it.

A similar statement to the above appeared in the Brooklyn Eagle, at the same time (June 20), as follows:

"The Trustees of Plymouth Church deny that Theodore Tilton has addressed a letter to them, offering himself as a witness, and expressing a desire to answer certain charges against Mr.

Beecher, during the next thirty days. They say that the whole story is false from beginning to end."

The above are recent specimens—not solitary or unique—of the manner in which Mr. Beecher's agents have not hesitated to use the Brooklyn press, on numerous occasions, to misrepresent and pervert my case to the community in which I reside, and to the public at large.

VI. Furthermore, I regret to point to you the evidence that Plymouth Church, or rather the attorney who now acts as its clerk, is attempting to make up a false but plausible record concerning this case, for the purpose of appealing to it in future to my disadvantage. It was to this end that Mr. Shearman ingeniously incorporated in his letter to me dated May 18, 1874, the following words:

"We do not understand your letter as implying that you have any charges to make, but the contrary. If the Committee had so understood it, they would have readily entertained and fully investigated them."

The manifest object of the above record is to enable the church to say, a year or five years hence, that if I ever had any charges to make against Mr. Beecher, the church had long ago given me an abundant opportunity to make them. Mr. Shearman is still more bold in his communication to The Independent, dated June 18, 1874. He therein says of the church:

"Its officers have, in the proper way, without parade, given every facility for investigation that could reasonably be desired, even by the most captious critics."

The above statement by Mr. Shearman is made in a letter which was put forth by him ostensibly in my interest, and which I am already accused of having inspired. This leads me to disavow the declaration which I have last quoted as insincere and at variance with the truth.

VII.—Not to multiply instances needlessly, there is one other to which my self-respect compels me to allude with painful explicitness. In your New Haven speech you characterized Mr. Beecher as the most magnanimous of men, and in the context referred to me as a knave and dog. You left the public to infer that I had become in some deplorable way the creature of Mr. Beecher's magnanimity. Early in April last I called Mr. Beecher's attention to the offensiveness and injuriousness of your statement, and informed him that I should insist on its correction either by him or me. In order to provide him with an easy way to correct it, involving no humiliation to his feelings, I addressed to you the following letter:

BROOKLYN, April 3, 1874.

Rev. Leonard Bacon, D.D.:

MY DEAR SIR: I have just been reading THE TRIBUNE's report of your Yale speech on the Brooklyn Council, in which occurs the following paragraph:

"Another part of my theory is that Mr. Beecher's magnanimity is unspeakable. I never knew a man of a larger and more generous mind. One who was in relations to him the most intimate possible, said to me, 'If I wanted to secure his highest love, I would go into a church meeting and accuse him of crimes.' This is his spirit. But I think he may carry it too far. A man whose life is a treasure to the Church Universal, to his country, to his age, has no right to subject the faith in it to such a strain. Some one has said that Plymouth Church's dealing with offenders is like Dogberry's. The comparison is apt: 'If any one will not stand, let him go, and gather the guard, and thank God you are rid of such a knave.' So of Lance, who went into the stocks and the pillory to save his dog from execution for stealing puddings and geese. I think he would have done better to let the dog die. And I think Mr. Beecher would have done better to have let vengeance come on the heads of his slanderers." * * *

Setting aside the satire and mirth, if there be any criticism directed toward me in these words in sobriety and earnestness, then I beg you to do me the following act of justice:

Please forward to Mr. Beecher the letter I am now writing, and ask him to inform you, on his word of honor, whether I have been his slanderer—whether I have spoken against him falsely—whether I have evaded my just responsibility to Plymouth Church—whether I have treated him other than with the highest possible fairness—and whether he has not acknowledged to me, in large and ample terms, that my course towards him in this sorrowful business has been marked by the magnanimity which you apparently intimate has characterized his towards me.

If you write to Mr. Beecher as I have indicated, I will thank you for a line as the words or substance of his reply. With great respect I am truly yours,
THEODORE TILTON.

In reply to the above letter you sent me the following:

NEW HAVEN, April 10, 1874.

Theodore Tilton, Esq.:

DEAR SIR: Not being in Mr. Beecher's confidence, I have doubted what I ought to do with your letter written a week ago. I was not—and am not—willing to demand of him that he shall admit me to his confidence in a matter on which he chooses to be reticent. But as the letter seems to have been written for him quite as much as for me, I have now sent it to him without asking or expecting any reply.

* * * * *
With the best wishes for your welfare, I am, yours, truly,
LEONARD BACON.

It is now between two and three months since I received from you the foregoing letter, and, as I have not heard that Mr. Beecher has made a reply, either to you or me, I am at last forced to the disagreeable necessity of borrowing a reply in his own words, as follows:

BROOKLYN, Jan. 1, 1871.

I ask Theodore Tilton's forgiveness, and humble myself before him as I do before my God. He would have been a better man in my circumstances than I have been. I can ask nothing except that he will remember all the other breaths that would ache. I will not plead for myself. I even wish that I were dead.

* * * * *

H. W. BEECHER.

The above brief extract from Mr. Beecher's own testimony will be sufficient, without adducing the remainder of the document, to show that I have just ground to resist the imputation that I am the creature of his magnanimity.

In conclusion, the common impression that I have circulated and promoted scandals against Mr. Beecher is not true. I doubt if any other man in Brooklyn, during the whole extent of the last four years, has spoken to so few persons on this subject as I have done. A mere handful of my intimate friends—who had a right to understand the case—are the only persons to whom I have ever communicated the facts. To all other persons, I have been dumb—resisting all questions, and refusing all explanations.

If the public have heretofore considered my silence as inexplicable, let my sufficient motive be now seen in the just forbearance which I felt morally bound to show to a man who had sent me a written and absolute apology.

But my duty to continue this forbearance ceased when the spirit of that apology was violated to my injury by its author or his agents. These violations have been multitudinous already, and they threaten to multiply in the future—forcing me to protect myself against them in advance;—particularly against the cunning devices of the Clerk of the church who, acting as an attorney, appears to be conducting this business against me as if it were a case at law.

Had the fair spirit which I had a right to expect from Plymouth Church—at least for its pastor's sake—been shown toward me, I would have continued to rest in silence on Mr. Beecher's apology, and never during the remainder of my life would I have permitted any public word of mine to allude to the offense or the offender.

But the injurious measures which the author of this apology has since permitted his church to take against me with-outprotest on his part—measures leading to the misrepresentation of my case and character by the Church to the Council, and by the Council to the general public—involving gross injuries to me which have been greatly aggravated by your writings—all these indictments, conjoining to one end, have put me before my countrymen in the character of a base and bad man:—a character which, I trust, is foreign to my nature and life. Under the accumulating weight of this odium—unjustly bestowed on me—neither patience nor charity can demand that I keep silent.

In your capacity as ex-Moderator of the Council, and as its chief expositor, you have labeled the theme of your animadversions “the celebrated case of Theodore Tilton.” You have declared that “the transaction with all its consequences belongs to history, and is in every way a legitimate subject for public criticism.” If, therefore, your estimate of the historic importance of the case is true (though I hope it is not) I now finally appeal to you as its chief historian not to represent me as playing an unmanly or dishonorable part in a case in which, so far as I can yet see, I have failed in no duty save to myself.

Truly yours, THEODORE TILTON.

Mr. Evarts—Before we adjourn will you allow me to suggest to the counsel that we would like to see, on the termination of the recess, the original papers which are substitutes for those just read?

Mr. Fullerton—That will be done unless the illness of Mr. Morris continues.

Mr. Evarts—If your Honor please, the jury, perhaps, will not like to have their dinner hour curtailed quite as much as by the extension of this reading.

Judge Neilson—Will you say a quarter after two o'clock?

Mr. Evarts—A quarter after two o'clock.

Judge Neilson, to the jury—Please be in your seats, gentlemen, at a quarter after two o'clock.

SUPPRESSION OF THE BACON LETTER SOUGHT.

The Court met at 2.15 p. m., pursuant to adjournment. Francis D. Moulton's direct examination was resumed.

Mr. Fullerton—Before the recess you stated that you promised Mr. Beecher, if possible, to prevent the publication of the Bacon letter. If you used any efforts in that direction, you will please now state them? A. I went to The Golden Age office after the—

Mr. Evarts—We don't understand that to be admissible.

Q. Did you make efforts in pursuance of your promise to Mr. Beecher to prevent the publication of that letter? A. I did.

Mr. Evarts—That we object to.

Mr. Beach—Did you apprise Mr. Beecher of the efforts you made? A. Yes, Sir, I told him what I had done.

Mr. Fullerton—What did you report to Mr. Beecher that you had done in that direction?

Mr. Evarts—We want to get it right.

Mr. Fullerton—We want to get it right.

Mr. Evarts—Yes, but we don't want to get wrong first.

Mr. Fullerton—I have a right to show what he did and what he reported.

The Witness—I said to Mr. Beecher that I went to The Golden Age office the day after the letter had been read to me to suggest further alterations to Mr. Tilton—charges that I deemed necessary; and I said to him that after I had made these suggestions to Mr. Tilton, he told me that the paper had gone to press.

I told Theodore that I thought—I said to Theodore that the letter ought not to be published, that I had told him that the night that he had read the letter to me in the presence of witnesses, and that I had said that to him in the presence of witnesses, and that I had said the same thing to him the day after I had heard the letter read; that he insisted on its publication; and I said to Mr. Beecher, “I have done the best I could. I have procured the introduction in this letter of the word ‘offense’ in place of the words ‘that he has committed against me and my family a revolting crime.’”

Q. Had you done, previous to that conversation with Mr. Beecher, what you reported him to have done? A. Certainly.

Q. Take the Bacon letter and point out specifically the alterations which you suggested and which were made in pursuance of your suggestion? A. [Reading from the Bacon letter.] “In producing to your inspection some hitherto unpublished papers and documents in this case, I need first to state a few facts in chronological sequence, sufficient to explain the documentary evidence which follows: 1. After I had been for fifteen years a member of Plymouth Church, and had become, meanwhile, an intimate friend of the pastor, knowledge came to me in 1870 that he had committed against me an offense which I forbear to name or characterize.” It read, Sir, in the original manuscript, if I remember correctly—the substance of it I do remember correctly—“knowledge came to me in 1870 that he had committed against me and my family a revolting crime.”

Mr. Evarts—Is the original manuscript in existence? A. I don't know, Sir, whether it is or not.

Mr. Evarts—We would like to have that, if it is.

Mr. Fullerton—Now, if any other alteration was made, please state it. A. Well, sir, I forget the alterations. Perhaps if I should read the letter carefully—

Mr. Evarts—He has not testified to any but this one.

Mr. Fullerton—Well, Mr. Evarts, I did not say he had. I only asked him, if any other alterations were made, now to state them.

Mr. Evarts—No, this is the point: This matter he has stated as having been a subject talked about between him and Mr. Beecher, but this is the only alteration that he has spoken of as being the subject between him and Mr. Beecher.

Mr. Fullerton—I still do not see the occasion of the interruption.

Judge Neilson—You might avoid the objection by asking him whether he reported any other alteration to Mr. Beecher, and, if so, what?

Mr. Evarts—Exactly.

Mr. Fullerton—That is true. I might incorporate two questions into one, but I do not know that that is absolutely necessary in the trial of a cause.

Judge Neilson—I think the testimony must be limited to the alterations that he reported to Mr. Beecher.

Mr. Fullerton—I propose to hmit it.

Mr. Evarts—One he has testified to.

Mr. Fullerton—I am aware of that. It is not worth while to indicate to me what he has testified to. I understand it perfectly well. I don't want interruption for the sake of interruptions.

Mr. Evarts—No.

Mr. Fullerton—Now, if there was any other alteration made in that document before it was printed, I want you to point it out? A. I did tell Mr. Beecher that I had suggested other alterations. I don't remember what they are now, but I told him what they were.

Q. What occurred subsequently to that in reference to the Bacon letter? Any conversation you may have had with Mr. Beecher in regard to it, you may now detail, if you please? A. Mr. Beecher said that the Bacon letter was a dead shot; I remember that expression.

Q. In what conversation did he make use of that term? A. When he came to talk to me about—when he came and said to me—asked me what reply I thought it was best to make to the Bacon letter, if any.

Q. And what reply did you counsel? A. I said to Mr. Beecher, "I recommend the same policy that we pursued in regard to the Victoria Woodhull letter or document—silence."

Q. Was any other course proposed? A. Yes, Sir; I submitted to him a paper which I had dictated to Frank Carpenter, and I said: "Mr. Beecher, if anything is said I deem it most judicious that this should be said," and I read to him that which I had dictated to Mr. Carpenter.

Q. In whose handwriting was that paper? A. That paper was in Carpenter's handwriting. Mr. Beecher asked me for a copy of it.

Q. Did you give him a copy of it? A. I did give him a copy of it.

Q. In whose handwriting was the copy? A. It was in my handwriting.

Q. Look at the paper now shown you and say whether it is the original of that paper? A. Yes, Sir; that is the original.

Q. What occurred between you and Mr. Beecher with reference to this proposed card after the interview of which you have just spoken? A. Well, I have not finished that interview.

Q. Well, please finish it? A. I said Mr. Beecher asked me for a copy of it. I gave him a copy of it, with an alteration or two in it, and he said that he would make a copy of it in his own handwriting—make a copy of that copy in his own handwriting, and submit it to some of his friends.

Q. Did he afterwards state whether he had submitted it to his friends? A. I don't remember whether he did or not, Sir.

Q. What occurred with reference to that card at any time after that? A. I met Mr. Beecher on July the 5th, I think, and I said, "Well, Mr. Beecher, you have not uttered from your pulpit, or anywhere given utterance to the words that I prepared for you; at least I have not seen any such expressions;" and he said, "No, you advised silence particularly." "Yes," I said, "I advised silence, but I think you have had a good opportunity to make that expression;" and I said, "At the Friday evening prayer-meeting your church seemed to be in entire sympathy with you, and I think you might have availed yourself of that occasion to have made that expression." And he said, "Well, I am not to blame for that. You advised silence, and I have followed the course you advised."

Mr. Fullerton—I now offer the paper in evidence.

The Witness—I had a subsequent conversation with Mr. Beecher about it, and I told him that I had seen Gen. Tracy concerning a reply to the Bacon letter, and that I had asked Gen. Tracy if he had submitted the paper to him, and I said to Mr. Beecher that Mr. Tracy's reply was that he had seen a paper in which he thought he detected my handiwork, and that Gen. Tracy had said to me that the words "I have committed no crime," really said nothing in denial of the fact as alleged by Mr. Beecher against—or as to the fact between Mr. Tilton and Mr. Beecher—or Mr. Beecher and Mrs. Tilton's relations; that as nearly as I could remember the words he said, "I have committed no crime," did not mean anything, because adultery was no crime under the common law. That is as nearly as I could repeat it, and I said to him that I had told Gen. Tracy that I did not think that was a good objection; that I thought the community would accept that card as a distinct denial—that utterance, rather; that that utterance would be accepted by the community as a distinct denial, and that it ought to be made, or some such utterance should be made, since Beecher assented—since Mr. Tilton assented to peace, since that utterance was made, or if silence was kept.

Q. You are now relating the conversation that you had with Mr. Beecher, in which you repeated the conversation that you had with Mr. Tracy? A. Precisely.

Q. And did you have that conversation with Mr. Tracy as you repeated it to Mr. Beecher? A. I did.

Mr. Fullerton—I will now read this.

Mr. Tracy—There has been an alteration in this.

The Witness—Two unessential changes.

Mr. Tracy—The one he gave to Mr. Beecher ought to be the one produced.

Mr. Evarts—Let us understand about it. I hold in my hand what is considered as an original paper, in a certain sense. [To the witness.] It is a paper in the handwriting of Mr. Carpenter, as I understand it? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. It was written by him from your dictation? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. That is, he wrote it down from what you said to him? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. This was shown to Mr. Beecher? A. I read it to him.

Q. Well, read it to him? A. Yes, sir; and I made a copy of it.

Q. And made a copy of it which was an exact copy of it? A. No; it was with one or two unessential alterations in the grammatical construction; that is all the words.

Q. That we don't know much about? A. No.

Mr. Evarts—This paper was shown to Mr. Beecher, and this paper can be read. Whenever the paper given to Mr. Beecher is to be read, why, that will have to be produced. It was changed.

Mr. Fullerton—I read as follows:

This church and community are unquestionably and justly interested through the recent publication by Theodore Tilton in answer to Dr. Leonard Bacon, of New-Haven.

It is true that I have committed an offense against Theodore Tilton, and, giving to that offense the force of his construction, I made an apology and reparation such as both he and I declared full and necessary. I am convinced that Mr. Tilton has been goaded to his defense by misrepresentations or misunderstandings of my position towards him. I shall never be a party to the reopening of this question, which has been honorably settled as between Theodore Tilton and myself. I have committed no crime; and if this society believes that it is due to it that I should reopen this already too painful subject, or resign, I will resign. I know, as God gives me the power to judge of myself, that I am better fitted to-day, through trials and chastening, to do good, than I have ever been.

[Marked "Exhibit No. 34."]

Q. At whose suggestion, if at any one's, did you submit that paper to Mr. Tracy? A. What is the question?

Q. At whose suggestion, if at any one's, did you submit that paper to the consideration of Mr. Tracy? A. My own.

Q. And what was said by Mr. Beecher in regard to that act? A. He approved of it.

Q. What did he say, and what did you say to him? A. I said to him that I had submitted the paper to Mr. Tracy, and he said nothing further with regard to it; I don't remember that he made any reply.

Mr. Evarts—One moment, Mr. Fullerton. Isn't there some misunderstanding? I understand Mr. Moulton as testifying that he asked Mr. Tracy if Mr. Beecher had submitted it to him.

Judge Neilson—Mr. Tracy told him that he had seen the paper.

Mr. Fullerton—That is not inconsistent.

Mr. Evarts—I am only asking to get at the fact. Now I understand him to say that he submitted the paper? A. That I submitted the paper to Mr. Tracy?

Q. Yes, Sir. A. I asked him if he had seen any paper.

Mr. Evarts—Your Honor sees that I am correct about it.

Judge Neilson—The counsel accept your correction.

Mr. Fullerton—Go on and state what further was said, if anything, to Mr. Beecher in regard to that paper? A. I said that I had asked Mr. Tracy whether—I repeated the exact conversation as nearly as I could to Mr. Beecher that I had had with Mr. Tracy, and I told him what Mr. Tracy had said, and that I did not consider his objection was a good one, that was all.

Q. Had Mr. Tracy been in any way connected with this controversy prior to that time? A. He had; yes, Sir.

Q. And is that a reason why you suggested Mr. Tracy's name in that connection? A. That is the reason that I went to Mr. Tracy; yes, Sir; one of the reasons.

Q. When did Mr. Tracy's connection with the case first commence? A. After the Victoria Woodhull publication.

Q. The Autumn of 1873, that was, I think? A. Yes, Sir, November, 1873.

Q. Under what circumstances did he become connected with it? A. My partner, Mr. Woodruff, after the publication of the Victoria Woodhull story, came to me and said that I was severely criticised for my position with regard to it, and that several of his friends and of my friends thought that I should say something, make some statement with regard to it, and I said I didn't want to do it.

Mr. Evarts—That has nothing to do with this, if your Honor please.

Mr. Fullerton—I shall connect them all with Mr. Beecher.

Mr. Evarts—The Judge has indicated several times that the best way is to begin with Mr. Beecher's connection.

Judge Neilson—I think so. I think you could have him state what he reported to Mr. Beecher that occurred between him and Mr. Woodruff without repeating the conversation.

Mr. Fullerton—I can do it in that way, and I certainly will do it in that way if your Honor so instructs me, but it is not the natural order of events, and I think we are entitled, on our side, to all the force and effect growing out of the natural statement of the events as they took place.

Judge Neilson—You expect to connect him?

Mr. Fullerton—I think your Honor will give me the credit for intending in good faith to connect Mr. Beecher with all that I prove by Mr. Moulton with reference to this matter.

Judge Neilson—If you are so advised you can go on.

Mr. Fullerton—I do not want you, Mr. Moulton, to state anything that was said to you that you did not communicate to Mr. Beecher.

Mr. Evarts—If he is asked the question what he did communicate to Mr. Beecher we will take it.

Mr. Fullerton—You may take it, I think, in another way.

Mr. Evarts—I think not.

Mr. Fullerton—You may.

Mr. Evarts—We will except to any other way.

Mr. Fullerton—I don't want to put the cart before the horse.

Mr. Evarts—You may put the cart and never bring the horse, and that we don't want. [Laughter.]

Mr. Fullerton—You don't want either cart or horse. [Laughter.]

Mr. Evarts—I want both, or not have either.

Mr. Fullerton—We mean to have our horse go first if possible, and you will see what he draws into the case.

Judge Neilson—You see, gentlemen, how much a little wit costs—a very little wit. [Laughter.]

Mr. Fullerton—Well, my friend has not exhausted his store yet. I want to prove by this witness what was said to him which he afterwards communicated to Mr. Beecher, and I think there will be no misapprehension about it all. I do not design to prove anything that was said to him that was not communicated to Mr. Beecher.

Judge Neilson—Well, in the mean time, it is just as well, and of course it is more correct, to ask him what he communicated to Mr. Beecher in respect to his conversation with Mr. Woodruff, and there you have the whole matter.

Mr. Fullerton—I have the whole matter also, if your Honor please, in the question: "State what was said to you which you afterwards communicated to Mr. Beecher?"

Judge Neilson—I think you should take the other course.

FUN AT GEN. TRACY'S EXPENSE.

Mr. Fullerton—I will; I will acquiesce very cheerfully. [To the witness.] Now what did you state to Mr. Beecher which had been stated to you?

A. I said to Mr. Beecher that my partner, Mr. Woodruff, was very anxious that I should make some statement with regard to the Victoria Woodhull publication, inasmuch as many of his friends and many of mine, or several of his friends and several of mine, had criticised my position in reference to the story, that they not only criticised me but they criticised the firm, for my relations to the story: and I said to Mr. Beecher that Mr. Woodruff recommended me, under the circumstances, to take counsel in the matter; and I said to Mr. Beecher that I had asked Mr. Woodruff whom he could recommend, and he said that he would recommend Mr. Tracy; and I said to Mr. Beecher that I thought Mr. Tracy was a good man to consult on the subject; that he had a good cool head on his shoulders, and I thought would give good advice; and I said to Mr. Beecher, "If you have no objection, I will consult with Gen. Tracy, but to consult with Gen. Tracy, and to get his best advice upon the subject, it will be necessary to tell Gen. Tracy the truth. If you have no objection, then, I will assent to my partner's wish, and consult with Gen. Tracy," and he said that he had no objection if I thought it was best, and I said that I did not see that I had any other course to pursue; my partner wanted me to do it, and I thought it was necessary to take advice, and that I did not know any better man to consult on the subject than Gen. Tracy. I informed Mr. Beecher afterwards; I said to Mr. Beecher afterwards that I had told my partner that I was willing to consult with Gen. Tracy, and that he had made an appointment with Gen. Tracy, and I had seen Gen. Tracy on the subject of the Victoria Woodhull story.

Q. In company with your partner? A. With my partner, yes, Sir; and I told him what transpired at that interview between Mr. Woodruff, Gen. Tracy and myself.

Q. Now, relate what you told him. A. I said to Mr. Beecher, "I told Mr. Tracy the truth of the matter; I told him the fact in the case as it was, that you had been guilty of sexual intercourse with Mrs. Elizabeth Tilton, and he said, in the presence of my partner, that if that was true it must be concealed at all hazards," and I said that Mr. Tracy said that although he did not recommend lying, this was one of the cases in which lying was justifiable. [Laughter.] And I said that my partner replied to that that he would not consent that I should publish a card with my name affixed to it denying that which was the truth; he would not allow that; and that Mr. Tracy had said, "Why can't Moulton and Tilton go to Europe for a couple of years?" I also informed Mr. Beecher afterwards, and said to him that we had had a consultation at our house—at my house—in my study, between Gen. Tracy, Mr. Woodruff and myself, and between Gen. Tracy, Mr. Woodruff, Mr. Tilton and myself, and that at that interview I told Mr. Tracy again the truth, and had laid before Mr. Tracy the letter of contrition.

Q. Of January, 1, 1870? A. January 1, 1870, yes, Sir; that I had laid before Mr. Tracy that letter.

Q. 1872? A. 1871, I mean; January 1, 1871; I said that I had told him the truth with regard to the whole matter, and that no conclusion at that interview was arrived at; that we had tried to devise a reply to the Victoria Woodhull story, but had not at that interview succeeded; and I told him that I had communicated the fact to Mr. Tilton, that I had told Gen. Tracy the fact in the case, and that Theodore

Tilton had denounced me for so doing, and had said to me that I had no business to reveal the guilt of Elizabeth to Mr. Tracy without his consent, and that I had pacified Mr. Tilton by telling him that I had considered it my duty to take the best advice I could on the question, not only for Mr. Beecher's sake—that I did not consult Mr. Tracy as Mr. Beecher's friend at all, particularly, but as the friend of all the parties, as a man capable of advising with reference to that which had better be done. I told him that after a while Theodore was willing to see Gen. Tracy, and that he went up a stair and did see Gen. Tracy in the presence of Mr. Woodruff and myself; and I told him that the first question that Mr. Tilton—the first sentence that Mr. Tilton, or about the first sentence that Mr. Tilton uttered, after the usual salutations between gentlemen was, "Mr. Tracy, I do not understand the etiquette of your profession, but as I understand it since these facts are to be laid before you, a part of which have been laid before you—or all the fact and part of the papers have been laid before you—I understand that you will not under any circumstances, in case Mr. Beecher and myself come into collision, act as his counsel;" and that Mr. Tracy had said, "Certainly not."

Q. What reply, if any, did Mr. Beecher say to this? A. Mr. Beecher said to me that he was glad that Theodore had assented to that conference, that he hoped some good would come out of it, but that he did not see himself what reply could be made, and that he considered, perhaps, that the policy of silence was the best for all concerned.

Q. Is that all that took place that you can now remember with reference to that branch of the case? A. I told Mr. Beecher that Mr. Tracy had said to Mr. Tilton in the presence of Mr. Woodruff and myself at that interview that the interest of all concerned demanded the denial of that story. That is all that I remember.

Mr. Evans—You mean of the Woodhull story? A. Of the Woodhull story; yes, Sir.

Mr. Fullerton—Then we will return to 1874 again and take up the narrative where we left it off. Do you recollect a meeting in the month of July of that year, where Mr. Beecher and yourself and Mr. Robinson were parties? A. You have reference to July the 5th?

Q. July the 5th? A. Yes; I remember that.

Q. State where that meeting occurred. A. Between Mr. Robinson, Mr. Beecher and myself?

Q. Yes, Sir. A. After Mr. Beecher and myself had left the house we walked through Remsen-st. around into Montague Terrace, and there met Mr. Robinson, and after some remarks which I do not distinctly remember, between Mr. Robinson and Mr. Beecher, Mr. Beecher put his hand over my shoulder and said, "Mr. Robinson, this is the best friend God ever raised up to a man. If it had not been for him I do not think I would be alive to-day."

Q. Which of the Mr. Robinsons? A. Mr. Jeremiah P. Robinson.

Q. State whether Mr. Beecher knew from you at that time that Mr. Robinson had been put in possession of these secrets?

A. Yes, Sir. I had told him that I had told both Mr. Woodruff and Mr. Robinson.

Q. Your two partners? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Which Woodruff? A. Franklin Woodruff.

Q. Which Robinson? Jeremiah P. Robinson.

Q. When did you tell Mr. Beecher that you had thus communicated the secret to those two gentlemen? A. Oh! It was quite early, Sir; I don't remember.

Mr. Evarts—He did not use the word "secret."

The Witness—It was 1870, I think, I told him—1871, rather.

Q. That you told Mr. Beecher? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. And what did you tell him? A. I told him that my partners were very anxious to know what was going on; I told him that I had consulted with Mr. Robinson in the very beginning in regard to the letter of January 1, 1871, to Mr. Bowen.

Mr. Evarts—Tilton's letter? A. Yes, Sir; and that Mr. Robinson had advised very kindly that Mr. Tilton carry his own case entirely out of that letter, and not appear in it.

Mr. Fullerton—What did you tell Mr. Beecher you had told Robinson? A. I told him that I had told him the fact concerning his relation between Elizabeth Tilton and himself.

Q. What did you tell him that you had told Mr. Woodruff, your other partner? A. The same.

Q. Look at the letter now shown you and say in whose handwriting it is [handing witness a letter]? A. Mr. Beecher's, Sir.

Q. Was it received by you? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. And about its date? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Before reading that letter I want to ask you whether at any time up to its receipt Mr. Beecher had said anything to the effect that you had failed to serve him faithfully or properly? A. No, Sir.

Q. Had he criticised in any way your conduct in the management of the affair in his behalf? A. No, Sir.

Mr. Fullerton [reading the letter]:

PRESKILL, July 7, 1872—Monday, 7 p. m.

MY DEAR FRANK: I have just arrived. I called Saturday evening to learn that you would not return till Monday. Can you come up Tuesday, or Wednesday, or Thursday? Let me know by letter or telegram. The trains are—a. m., 8, 9:10, 10, 10:45; p. m., 2, 4, 4:15, 5:30, 6:20, and 7. The 4 p. m. is express and good train; if you come in the afternoon you should allow 45 minutes from City Hall to reach Forty-second-st. station, and about one hour from your store.

I have not seen you since the card. I will take good care of you, and even if others don't think so much of you as I do I will try and make up. My vacation is begun; and am I not glad? Next week we expect company.

The drouth is severe—no real soaking since the last of May, and things are suffering; but yet the country is beautiful. The birds are as good to me as David's harp. I only need some one to talk to, and that one is you.

Come when you can, and, coming or going, believe me, faithfully and affectionately yours,
H. W. B."

(Marked "Exhibit No. 35.")

Q. I want to ask you what card Mr. Beecher referred to in that last letter: "I have not seen you since the card?" A. The card in The Brooklyn Eagle, I think it refers to.

Q. That letter bears date July 7th, 1873? A. The card in The Brooklyn Eagle of June the 2d, I think it refers to.

Mr. Fullerton—I want to get at the number of that so as to connect it with that letter. Mr. Pearsall can give you the number of that. It has been read in evidence.

Mr. Pearsall—A card in The Eagle of June, 1873?

Mr. Fullerton—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Pearsall—"No. 25," The Eagle card, June, 1873.

Mr. Evarts—June 7, 1873. It has not been read yet.

Mr. Fullerton—A copy of it has been read.

Mr. Evarts—The proposed card has not been read. You commenced reading one, apparently from The Eagle, and then a question arose.

Mr. Beach—The card as published was read.—June 2, 1873.

Q. Was that card proposed by any one, that you now hold in your hand? A. Yes, Sir; by Theodore Tilton.

Q. Did it come into your possession at the time? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Under what circumstances? A. From Theodore Tilton.

Q. Did you show it to Mr. Beecher? A. Yes, Sir; I showed it to Mr. Beecher.

Q. And what did he say in regard to it? A. This was the card that he said would kill him if it was published.

Q. Was there any card published just prior to July, 1873, when he wrote you the letter, in which he says, "I have not seen you since the card?" A. Yes, Sir; it was a card with reference to Mr. Bowen's visit to Victoria Woodhull with Mr. Claflin.

Mr. Fullerton—That connects it; that's what I want.

The Witness—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Evarts—We do not understand the card of July 7th, '73, published in The Eagle has been read; you commenced reading it.

Mr. Fullerton—Certainly; that is right.

Mr. Fullerton—Look at the paper now shown you, and say in whose handwriting it is? A. Mr. Beecher's.

Q. Addressed to you? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. And did you receive it about the time of its date? A. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Evarts—Is this the letter of July 9?

Mr. Fullerton—Yes, Sir; the letter of July 9, I propose to read.

Mr. Evarts—Try to get the number of July 7.

Mr. Shearman—The stenographer has either omitted some paper which we have entered as an exhibit, or we have put something in as an exhibit which the stenographer has not.

CALMING INFLUENCE OF A VACATION.

Mr. Evarts—Well; we will have to correct that somehow.

Mr. Fullerton—[Reading].

THURSDAY EVENING, 9th July, 1873.

MY DEAR FRANK: Why not come on Saturday and spend Sunday? You must get your comfort out of nature and me, and not notice any withholding of countenance elsewhere. I preach in the village in the morning, but you can lie on the hillside—in peace.

The afternoon and evening will be open for all gracious influences which forests hide or heavens distill. The birds are not yet silent, though their pipes are somewhat feebler. Flowers are burnt, grass withered, grain reapt, grapes not ripe, strawberries gone, blackberries not come, raspberries in good condition and abundant, also water-melons, and, besides, a demi-john of—water!

I want to see you and show you a letter, etc. Do you hear what Bowen is doing? Will he publish? Find out if anything is on hand. Truly yours,
H. W. B.

Send me a line Friday if you shall come, so that I may meet the train; otherwise pay your own hack hire."

[Letter marked "Exhibit No. 36.]"

Q. [Another paper handed to witness.] In whose handwriting is the letter now in your hand? A. Mr. Beecher's.

Q. Addressed to you? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Did you receive it about the time of its date? A. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Fullerton—I offer it in evidence. [Reading:]

MY DEAR FRANK: I looked for you on Saturday and received your note this morning—Monday.

Howard writes that T. T. has sent to Mr. Halliday a note announcing that he did not consider himself for two years a member of the church.

There is also a movement to let the other party go to trial, and also to give him an avoidance of trial by some form of letter, I don't know what. I have not been consulted. I do not mean to meddle. It is vacation. Governor Claflin and wife, of Massachusetts, will be here this week. I am getting at my writing again—at work on my book. I despaired of finishing it. I am more encouraged now. For a thousand encouragements—for services that no one can appreciate who has not been as sore-hearted as I have been, for your honorable delicacy, for confidence and affection—I owe you so much that I can neither express nor pay it. Not the least has been the great-hearted kindness and trust which your noble wife has shown, and which have lifted me out of despondencies often, though sometimes her clear truthfulness has laid me pretty flat.

I mean to run down some day. Will let you know beforehand, that I may not miss you, for, to tell the truth I am a little heart-hungry to see you: not now, because I am pressed, but because I love you, and will ever be faithfully yours,
HENRY WARD BEECHER.

Peekskill, July 14, 1873.

[Marked "Exhibit No. 37.]"

Q. [Paper handed to witness.] In whose handwriting is the paper you now have? A. Mr. Beecher's.

Q. To whom is it addressed? A. To me.

Q. Did you receive it about the time of its date? A. I did.

Mr. Fullerton—I offer it in evidence. [Reading.]

FRIDAY NOON, October 3, 1873.

MY DEAR FRANK: I have this morning got back sound and fresh, and want to send my love to you and yours. I should see you to-morrow, and shall be out of town till evening. God bless you, my dear old fellow!
H. W. B.

[Letter marked Exhibit No. 38.]

Q. [A paper being handed to witness.] In whose handwriting is that letter? A. Mr. Beecher's.

Q. Well, I won't ask to whom it is addressed. Did you receive it from him? A. I did. Yes, sir.

Mr. Fullerton [reading]—25, '73.

MY DEAR VON MOLTKE: I have seen Howard again. He says that it was not "fr." [an abbreviation for "from," I suppose,] from Theodore that Glukison got the statement, but from Carpenter. Is he reporting that view? I have told Claflin that you would come with Carpenter if he could be found, and at any rate by 9 to-night (to see Storrs), but I did not say anything about Storrs. I sent Mr. Cleveland with my horse and buggy over to hunt Carpenter. Will you put Carpenter on guard about making such statements. From him these bear the force of coming from headquarters. Yours truly and ever.

H. W. BEECHER.

(Marked "Exhibit No. 39.")

Mr. Beach—It is "25, '73"—marked "May 25th, 1873!" A That is the date of it, Sir.

Mr. Fullerton—Can you tell when the Von Moltke letter was received? A. May 25th, 1873.

Q. Did you ever see the paper before which you now have in your hand? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. From whom did you receive it? A. From Mr. Beecher.

Q. When? A. About the time that it was written; I forge the date. The date is October 24. I fixed the date of it at on time. I think it was in 1872 or '3, somewhere there. I can fix the date after.

Q. Where were you when he delivered it to you? A. In my house.

Q. What did he say at the time that he delivered that letter to you, in regard to it? A. He said I had better take it: he didn't want any such letter around him.

Q. Did he give any reason? A. It was a dangerous letter to have around.

Q. Do you know the handwriting? A. The handwriting of Mrs. Morse.

Mr. Evarts—Well, this is a letter from Mrs. Morse, addressed to Mr. Beecher, and handed by him to Mr. Moulton. Of course it goes no further in evidence than the fact that such a letter was written by her and received by him.

Mr. Fullerton—Yes, Sir. It is as follows:

"October 21st, 1871.

"MY DEAR SON: You must pardon me for the request I now make. Can you help me in any way by the 1st of November? I am still alone, with no prospect of any one, with a rent of $1,500 and an income of a thousand; the consequence is, with other expenses, I shall be by the 1st of the month terribly behind hand, as I agreed to pay in monthly installments. I know full well I have no claim upon you in any way, excepting your sympathy for my lonely and isolated condition. If I could be released from the house, I should gladly do so, for I am convinced it is too far out; all who have been to see my rooms say so. My darling spent most of yesterday with me. She said all she had in the way of money was $40 per week, which was for food and all other household expenses aside from rent, and this was given her by the hands of Annie Tilton every Saturday. If you know anything of the amount it takes to find food for eight people, you must know there is little left for clothing. She told me, he (T.) didn't take any meals home, from the fact she could not get such food as he liked, to nourish his brain, and so he took his meals at Moulton's. Just think of that. I am almost crazy with the thought. Do come and see me. I will promise that the secret of her life as she calls it, shall not be mentioned. I know it is hard to bring it up, as you must have suffered intensely and we all will I fear, till released by death. Do you pray for me? If not, pray do. I never felt more rebellious than now, more in need of God's and human help. Do you know I think it strange you should ask me to call you son? When I have told, darling, I felt if you could in safety to yourself and all concerned, you would be to me all this endearing name. Am I mistaken?—Mother."

[Marked "Exhibit No. 40.]"

Mr. Evarts—Is there a date on that last letter—a date by the writer?

Mr. Fullerton—I don't know; if there is, I read it. Yes, Sir, October 24, '71, is written.

Mr. Beach—No, not on the letter itself.

Mr. Everts—How do you fix the 1871?

Mr. Fullerton—Do you know when you received that letter? A. I fix the date of the letter, Sir—I cannot fix it in any other way than by referring to the time when Annie Tilton—when Mr. Tilton was giving through Annie Tilton to his wife, an allowance of $40 a week. I think it was 1871, Sir. I can fix the date before I get through with my testimony, positively.

Q. [Another paper handed to witness]: Where did Mr. Tilton reside in October, 1871? A. Livingston street.

Q. One-hundred-and-seventy-four? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. And where did Mrs. Morse reside at that time? A. I don't remember the number of the house, nor where.

Q. How? A. I don't remember just at present. Sir, where.

Q. Did she reside with him? A. I don't think she did; no, she did not reside with him.

Q. What paper have you in your hand now? A. A letter from Mr. Beecher, Sir.

Q. To whom? A. To me.

Mr. Fullerton—[Reading] Saturday, September, 20th, 1871. [It is out of order, and I am sorry it was not put in its order.] My Dear Friend: I feel bad not to meet you. My heart warms to you and you might have known that I should be here if you love me as much as I do you. Well, it is an inconstant world. Soberly, I should be glad to have you see how hearty I am; ready for work and hoping for a bright year. I have literally done nothing for three months, but have gone to grass, and things seem almost strange to come back among men and see business going on in earnest. I will be here on Monday at 10.

I am, my dear Frank, truly and gratefully yours,

HENRY WARD BEECHER.

[Letter marked "Exhibit No. 41.]"

Q. (A paper handed to witness.) In whose handwriting is that letter? A. Mr. Beecher's.

Q. Was it addressed to and received by you? A. It was.

Mr. Fullerton (reading):

BROOKLYN, Tuesday evening,
2d January, 1872. }

MY DEAR MOULTON: 1. I send you V. W.'s letter to me, and a reply, which I submit to your judgment. Tell me what you think. Is it too long? Will she use it for publishing? I do not wish to have it so used. I do not mean to speak on the platform of either of the two suffrage societies. What influence I exert I prefer to do on my own hook, and I do not mean to train with either party, and it will not be fair to press me in where I do not wish to go. But I leave it for you. Judge for me. I have leaned on you hitherto, and never been sorry for it.

2. I was mistaken about the Ch. Union coming out so early that I could not get a notice of G. Age in it. It was just the other way, to be delayed, and I send you a rough proof of the first page and the Star article.

In the paper to-morrow a line or so will be inserted to soften a little the touch about The Liberal Christian.

3. Do you think I ought to keep a copy of any letters to V. W.? Do you think it would be better to write it again and not say so much? Will you keep the letter to me and send the other if you judge it wise? Will you send a line to my house in the morning, saying what you conclude? I am full of company. Yours truly and affectionately,

H. W. B.

Q. Now, what letter was it that was inclosed to you when that was received? A. A reply to Victoria Woodhull's letter asking that he preside.

Q. "I send you V. W.'s letter to me," What letter was that? A. Victoria Woodhull's letter asking him to preside at a meeting, or to be present at a meeting.

Q. And he inclosed to you, as I understand it here, his reply to that letter? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. What did you do with the letter and the reply? A. I replied to the letter.

Q. How long was that prior to the meeting? A. To the Saturday meeting?

Q. Yes. A. I forget how long it was prior.

Q. Well, was it a long or short time? A. Not a very long time.

Q. Some days or weeks? A. A few days, I think, or weeks; a few weeks. Will you let me look at the letter, Sir, please? I received with this letter also the rough proof of the first page of The Christian Union.

Q. The proof of the article? A. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Everts—What is the number of this letter of January 2, 1872, just read?

Mr. Pearsall—I have not had it marked.

[Letter marked Exhibit No. 42.]

Mr. Fullerton (paper handed to witness)—In whose handwriting is that letter? A. Mr. Beecher's.

Q. Addressed to you? A. It is, Sir.

[Letter submitted to Mr. Everts.]

Mr. Fullerton (reading):

SUNDAY MORNING February 16, 1873.

MY DEAR FRANK: I have tried three times to see you this week, but the fates were against me. I wanted to store up a little courage and hopefulness before my three weeks' absence. I revisit my old home and haunts, and shall meet great cordiality. I inclose check subject to your discretion. Should any accident befall me, remember how deeply I feel your fidelity and friendship, your long-continued kindness and your affection. With kindest remembrance to Mrs. M., I remain, yours always,
H. W. BEECHER.

Q. What check is therein referred to? A. What is the date of it, Sir?

Q. February 16, 1873? A. I do not have any record of it here, Sir; there was a check inclosed in it; I thought I had it on this memorandum. I have not.

Q. Do you recollect what check it was? A. No, I don't; no just now.

Q. Well, do you know what the check was for? A. I suppose it was for Bessie Turner's school bill; I don't remember what it was for; I can find out.

Q. [Paper handed to witness.] In whose handwriting is that letter? A. Mr. Beecher's.

Mr. Fullerton (reading)—

MY DEAR FRANK: My papers are all here; and it would be far more convenient to have you here, if you are not too tired.

Yours, H. W. BEECHER.

[Marked "Exhibit No. 44."]

Q. [Paper handed to witness.] In whose handwriting is that letter? A. Mr. Beecher's.

Mr. Fullerton—[Reading]:

FRIDAY MORNING, July 10, 1874.

MY DEAR FRANK: Can you be seen this morning, and if so, when and where? Any time after 10 would suit me best; but any other hour I will make do. I came into town last night. Yours ever,
H. W. B.
[Marked—"Exhibit No. 45."]

Q. [Pass him No. 35.] In whose handwriting is that letter? A. Mr. Beecher's.

MR. HALLIDAY INQUISITIVE.

Mr. Fullerton—[Reading:]

SUNDAY, a. m.

MY DEAR FRIEND: Halliday called last night. T's interview with him didn't satisfy, but disturbed. It was the same with Bell, who was present. It tended directly to unsettling. Your interview last night was very beneficial and gave confidence. This must be looked after. It is vain to build if the foundation sinks under every effort. I shall see you at 10:30 to-morrow, if you return by way of No. 49 Remsen-st.

Q. Now, who was Mr. Halliday, there spoken of? A. The assistant pastor of Plymouth Church.

Q. Do you know anything about this interview with Mr. Tilton, spoken of there? A. I knew that Mr. Tilton had had an interview with Mr. Halliday.

Q. And who is the Bell that is spoken of in this letter? A. He was either then or formerly superintendent of the Bethel School, a member of Plymouth Church.

Q. The letter states, "your interview last night was very beneficial and gave confidence." With whom did you have an interview? A. With Mr. Halliday.

Q. Mr. Halliday called upon you? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. What was the subject of the interview? A. The subject of the interview was—

Mr. Evarts—Did you report it to Mr. Beecher? A. Oh yes, Sir; I talked with Mr. Beecher about it afterward (laughing).

Mr. Fullerton—Answer my question now. What was the subject of the interview between you and Mr. Halliday? A. I had a conversation, Sir, previous to that—previous to my conversation with Halliday—with Mr. Beecher, in which he said that he would like to have me see Mr. Halliday, and that he would probably send Mr. Halliday to me with reference to some trouble in the church among the deacons—with reference to the stories that were going around about him and which were being considered there; and I told him that he had better send Halliday; and Halliday did come and I saw him.

Q. And that was the subject of your interview? A. Yes, Sir. Do you want to know what I said to Mr. Halliday and repeated to Mr. Beecher?

Q. Well, tell what that interview was. A. Tell it in the exact words, Sir?

Q. As near as you can recollect, give us the substance of it. A. Yes. I said to Mr. Halliday that I thought the deacons were in pretty poor business, digging up differences that had been settled as between Mr. Beecher and Mr. Tilton; that I thought they ought to be in better business than digging out scandals. I told Mr. Halliday, in substance, and repeated it afterward to Mr. Beecher, that the stories had originated with Bowen, and that when he had been asked for the truth—when he had been asked for the evidence to support the stories he had—had n't been forthcoming with the truth; and, I believe, I told him that Mr. Beecher was guiltless; and, I told Mr. Beecher, before I saw Halliday, that I would satisfy Halliday if he would send him to me; and it was distinctly understood between Mr. Beecher and me—

By Mr. Evarts—Well, what passed?

Mr. Fullerton—Yes; what passed? A. What passed between Mr. Beecher—

Q. Yes, Sir; so that it was distinctly understood? A. I said I certainly should not tell the facts to Mr. Halliday, and the conversation that I had with Mr. Halliday I repeated to Mr. Beecher, and Mr. Beecher thanked me for it.

[Letter marked "Exhibit No. 46."]

Q. [Paper handed to witness.] In whose handwriting is that paper? A. Mr. Beecher's.

Q. (Handing paper to witness) In whose handwriting is that paper? A. Mr. Beecher's.

Mr. Fullerton—I will read it.

Sunday Night.

MY DEAR FRIEND: 1. The Eagle ought to have nothing to-night. It is that meddling which stirs up our folks. Neither you nor Theodore ought to be troubled by the side which you served so faithfully in public.

2. The deacons' meeting, I think, is adjourned. I saw Bell. It was a friendly movement.

3. The only near next danger is the women—Morrill, Bradshaw, and the poor, dear child.

If papers will hold off a month we can ride out the gale and make safe anchorage, and then when once we are in deep, tranquil waters, we will all join hands in a profound and genuine Laus Deo, for through such a wilderness only a Divine Providence could have led us undevoured by the open-mouthed beasts that lay in wait for our lives.

I go on the 12 train after a sleepless night. I am anxious about Theodore's interview with Halliday. Will you send me a line Monday night or Tuesday morning, care of H. P. Kennard, Boston, Mass.?

I shall get mails there thl Friday.

[Copy letter marked "Exhibit No. 47."] [Handing letter to witness.] In whose handwriting is that letter? A. Mr. Beecher's.

Mr. Fullerton—I will read it.

July 13, 1874.

MY DEAR FRANK: I will be with you at 7, or a little before. I am ashamed to put a straw more upon you, and have but a single consolation—that the matter cannot distress you long, as it must soon end; that is, there will be no more anxiety about the future, whatever regrets there may be for the past. Truly yours and ever,
H. W. BEECHER.

[Copy letter marked "Exhibit No. 48."]

A MUTUAL APPROVAL OF MOULTON'S STATEMENT.

Q. Was there any new trouble threatened at any time? A. Any what?

Q. Any new trouble threatened at that time? A. What is the date?

Q. July 13, 1874. He says: "I am ashamed to put a straw more on you." Do you know what that straw was? A. We were consulting in regard to the reply he should make to the Bacon letter before the Investigating Committee.

Q. When was that Investigating Committee appointed, or, rather, when did you first hear of it? A. July 5 was the first day I heard of it, Sir.

Q. Did you hear of it from Mr. Beecher? A. Yes, Sir; he told me it was to be appointed, that there was an investigating Committee to be appointed, and he would have the naming of the members of it.

Q. Go on and state what was said on that subject.

Mr. Evans—Give us the date again.

The Witness—July 5, 1874.

Mr. Fullerton—Give us the whole of that interview, as well as you can? A. On July 5, after he had told me at my house that he intended to follow the policy of silence, or that he did follow the policy of silence I indicated; I walked out with him and he told me that the matter had to come before an investigating Committee, and I asked him if he could tell me the names and he said he could, and he mentioned over some of the names. I told him I thought it was a mistake to have an investigating Committee, but that we would try to get along with even that, and I told him that I thought I should take, or probably I should have further counsel in the matter, and he said, "Who do you mean?" I said: "Gen. Butler: I have received a letter from him asking that there be silence." He said: "Yes, I have heard something about that. A friend of him, or a Mr. Bowen in Washington, saw Gen. Butler, and he advised silence, and this Mr. Bowen told his father, and his father told me." He said he did not believe much in the moral sense of Gen. Butler but he might be a good counsellor, because he considered him a wise man, and that at all events his advice was good for silence, and that is all that transpired at that interview.

Q. You omitted to state what he said upon the subject of naming the Committee? A. I did state that he said he would have the naming of the Committee; did I not so state.

Mr. Pryor—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Fullerton—Do you recollect anything farther at that interview? A. No, Sir; he didn't tell me at that interview. I was going to say he told me at that interview that he sent Gen. Tracy to see Gen. Butler, or that he had been to see Gen. Butler, but it was not at that interview.

Q. Did he state anything at that time, or at any time previous, in regard to the origin of the Committee, how it came about that the Committee was appointed, who suggested it, and for what purpose? A. He said that some of his people in the church granted a committee. That is all that was said about it, I believe, and that he thought it could be got along with very well. He said that, I remember.

Q. How soon after the receipt of this letter, expressing regret that another straw was to be added to your load was it that you saw Mr. Beecher? A. On July 13.

Q. On the same day? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. What occurred at that interview? A. On July 13 I had replied to his letter that I was going down to his Committee on July 13 to make a statement in accordance with their invitation, and that I should be at home until a certain hour; my letter that I wrote to him will state what that hour was; I think it was 7 o'clock; and he came around, and I read to him a statement of what I intended to make to the Committee.

Q. Who were present when that was read to him? A. I read my statement to him alone in my study.

Q. Was that statement afterward read to the Committee? A. That statement was afterward read to the Committee; before I went down to the Committee I read the statement to Theodore Tilton, who was at the house also.

Q. What did Mr. Beecher say in regard to the statement when you read it to him? A. I am about to connect Theodore Tilton with Mr. Beecher in that matter: Mr. Beecher went into the room over the parlor, where my wife was, and I said to him, "Mr. Beecher, you consider this statement honorable for me to make?" and he said, "Yes, I do;" and I told him that I had read the statement to Theodore Tilton, and he also concurred in it, and the reason that Mr. Beecher and Mr. Tilton did not meet on that day was because Mr. Beecher said to me that he did not want to see Mr. Tilton.

Q. Now, if you will point out that statement? A. That his presence was always a rebuke to him, and unnerved him, and it was useless for him to attempt to reply to him when he spoke to him as against the facts—he could not do it—he didn't want to see him.

Q. (Handing book to witness.) See if that is the statement you refer to? A. This says August 5.

Q. That is not it, then? A. No, Sir.

Q. It was July 13? A. It was July the 13th. [Addressing Mr. Tilton.] Can you find it in there, Theodore—July 13?

Mr. Fullerton—If your Honor please, I cannot find in this unpagged book the statement which I desire to put in next, and the hour of adjournment having arrived, I propose to adjourn now.

Mr. Evart.—If your Honor please, we had a substituted paper yesterday which we might as well have now.

Judge Neilson—Has he the original of the paper?

Mr. Fullerton—I have it.

Mr. Evart.—It is the proposed card Mr. Tilton was going to publish, embodying what is now called the letter of contrition.

Judge Neilson—And also The Union newspaper?

Mr. Evarts—Yes, Sir.

Judge Neilson—They can bring it in on Monday morning.

Mr. Fullerton—I have found this statement, if your Honor please.

Judge Neilson—Well, we will perfect that the first thing on Monday morning.

Mr. Evarts—We will go on with that on Monday, if your Honor please. We have got through, and put up our papers.

Judge Neilson to the Jury—Gentlemen, you recollect the admonition made to you, and repeated with the concurrence of the counsel on both sides, requesting you not to read about the case, or converse with any person about it, or about the details of it; also my request that if any person should approach you to attempt to speak upon the subject in your hearing with a view to influence you it is your duty to name that person to me. We will now adjourn to Monday morning, inasmuch as the engagements of the learned counsel prevent their attending to-morrow, and it will need great circumspection and prudence upon your part to avoid being communicated with. That prudence will, perhaps, be stimulated by a becoming sense of the responsibility which rests on you. I trust you will not be wanting in attention to it. There seems to be an incongruity, however, in asking the jury not to read about the case, if the newspapers, which happily find their way everywhere, like leaves in Autumn, and go into every household, and are read by the members of the household, comment on the case and discuss it in editorials and expressed opinions, and in view of that I have thought proper to suggest to the gentlemen present connected with the press to convey my expression of hope to the editors that they will not, during the progress of the trial, discuss the merits of it or of any particular phase of it. There seems to be a propriety in it and a necessity for it. I want to say to the audience, which is so large to-day, that it has been very agreeable to me indeed to observe the order and the patience with which the proceedings have been allowed to proceed. The jury will now pass out with the officer. Return, gentlemen, and be in your places on Monday morning at 11 o'clock.

The Court then broke up for the day.

SIXTH DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

OPENING OF THE CROSS-EXAMINATION.

CLOSING PARTS OF THE DIRECT EXAMINATION—THE PROPOSED STATEMENTS WHICH WERE FINALLY WITHHELD—WHAT WAS SHOWN TO DR. STORRS—EX-JUDGE PORTER'S FIRST QUESTIONS.

The direct examination of Francis D. Moulton in the Tilton-Beecher suit was closed on Monday, Jan. 18, and the cross-examination was begun by ex-Judge Porter. The concluding portions of his direct testimony related mainly to the proposed statements which were prepared prior to Mr. Tilton's appearance before the Committee. Mr. Tilton's counsel contended that Mr. Beecher's disposition to smother an investigation and to compromise the case by the substitution of an equivocal for a full statement of facts was a proof of his guilt. The statement which Mr. Tilton made for presentation to the Rev. Dr. Storrs was read, the defense suddenly withdrawing an objection by which they might have excluded it.

MR. MOULTON UNDER FIRE.

If Mr. Moulton had been dreading the ordeal of cross-examination through which he was to pass, the simplicity of the first questions must have reassured him, for they related to his age and business. Ex-Judge Porter has an erect, soldier-like figure, black hair and mustache, ruddy cheeks and pleasant though positive features. His spectacles are rarely off his face, although he has a habit of pushing them from their normal position to the higher plane of the forehead. When he rises he folds his arms across his breast, and with a sidelong glance at the witness puts the question in a tone which is as soft as it is deep. His manner soon puts a witness off his guard. His courtesy is never lost for an instant. Even when his voice swells with emotion or with repressed indignation there is a return to the measured tones of civility before the interrogation point is reached. The contrast between him and Mr. Evarts in cross-examination is very marked. Mr. Evarts had an opportunity last week for disconcerting Mr. Moulton and his method was very different from his colleague's. The questions dropped from his lips thick and fast, and the intensity of his manner, the earnestness of his mien, and the undertone of scorn in his voice combined to heat and agitate the witness. Ex-Judge Porter carries the manners of the drawing-room into court. He neither browbeats nor worries his witness. His manner, though earnest and impressive, does not strike terror into the soul. But the witness who fancies that he is to escape from the rack because the inquisitor's voice is soft and caressing, and his manner smooth and cordial, soon finds that there is a grip of iron under the velvet paw.

Mr. Moulton, through protracted experience in the witness chair, has lost much of the nervousness which characterized his first appearance before the audience; but some of it returned when the fine irony of ex-Judge Porter's first reference to the functions of a "mutual friend" drew a smile to the faces of the auditors. Ex-Judge Porter's method of cross-examination may be termed cumulative in its effect. He leads up to a vital point through a long series of minor questions. His first point was reached after a hundred questions had been asked. The vital question was substantially this: "The inception of your friendship for the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher was on that stormy night when you heard that he debauched your friend's wife, and its termination was at the time when you refused him access to the letters by which he wished to defend himself against a foul charge?" This was the last round in a long ladder, and when it was reached every one in court saw how effective was the climax.

Mr. Moulton insisted at the outset that he had never denied to Mr. Beecher or to his agent, Gen. Tracy, access to the scandal literature during the early stages of the Plymouth Church investigation. "Be kind enough to refresh your recollection," said the counsel in his blindest manner, handing to the witness a book containing the statements of the various actors in the controversy. Mr. Moulton then described an interview which he had last Summer with Gen. Tracy, his voice rising as it always does when he refers to Mr. Beecher's counsel. Ex-Judge Porter referred to the second demand for the papers intrusted to Mr. Moulton, and the reply to Mr. Beecher's letter was read with splendid emphasis, sidelong glances at the witness accompanying the fine irony of the counsel's manner. Mr. Moulton evidently was nettled by the manner in which the business-like communication which he dashed off last Summer on his return from Narragansett Pier was interpreted, and his irritability soon manifested itself. The question was asked: "Were you the mutual friend of both these men at that time?" "As friendly to one as to the other," he rejoined. "Had he ever wronged you?" "Except when he asked me to lie for him." "You did lie for him?"

"Yes." "We have your word for it," said ex-Judge Porter, with freezing sarcasm.

Mr. Moulton's next reply was that he had furnished no copies of any of the documentary evidence to Mr. Tilton prior to the hour when Mr. Beecher demanded the letters. The retraction which Mr. Beecher surrendered to him was not dictated to Mr. Tilton, and he did not know that Mr. Tilton had copies. "Did you ever dictate to Mr. Tilton?" asked the counsel in his smooth manner. "I swear that I did not," was the quick reply. Mr. Tilton and his counsel glanced at each other uneasily at this point, for Mr. Moulton was on dangerous ground, inasmuch as Mr. Tilton, in his examination before the Investigating Committee, had admitted that he had taken shorthand notes of all the letters which appeared in his first statement, and which, he said, Mr. Moulton read to him. Then again, Mr. Moulton himself on Thursday last, had, in answer to Mr. Evarts's questions, acknowledged that he had dictated from memory to Mr. Tilton the letter of resignation which Mr. Beecher had shown to him. Mr. Beach soon sprang to his feet to object to the reception of Mr. Beecher's challenge to Mr. Moulton to produce the letters which had been intrusted to him in confidence. The debate which followed between him and Mr. Evarts was a keen, polished argument on each side, Mr. Evarts claiming that this letter marked the date of Mr. Moulton's hostility to Mr. Beecher. Mr. Evarts was finally compelled to content himself with an exception. This debate gave Mr. Moulton breathing space, and he answered the next questions relating to his slight acquaintance with Mr. Beecher before Dec. 30, 1870, with much composure and even with a smile. The rounds of the ladder were now all in place save the last. This was the question quoted earlier in this recital, and when it was asked his auditors perceived the outlines of a perfect climax, and significant glances were exchanged in many parts of the court-room. Mr. Moulton's tone changed in an instant, and during the remainder of the session his manner was quiet and subdued.

There were only a few minutes in reserve, and ex-Judge Porter contented himself with the point which he had made, although he filled up the hour with unimportant questions in relation to Mr. Moulton's intimate friendship for Mr. Tilton.

THE LEGAL BY-PLAY.

Ex-Judge Fullerton opened the day's proceedings with a brilliant stroke. Mr. Moulton testified that the short statement which he made before the In-investigating Committee was regarded by Mr. Beecher as perfectly honorable. Mr. Evarts objected to the reception of the statement, and after a sharp passage of argument, in which Mr. Beach, ex-Judge Fullerton, and Mr. Evarts took part, the Judge ruled it out. Mr. Evarts was perfectly willing to admit so harmless a document if its pertinence could be shown, and ex-Judge Fullerton claimed that Mr. Beecher had expressed approval of Mr. Moulton's action, and by discountenancing the investigation which he was calling for in public had admitted in private his own guilt. When the Judge's decision was rendered, Mr. Beach in a whisper to his associate advised the introduction of certain parts of the statement. Mr. Evarts protested vigorously against the reading of parts of the statement without discrimination, and when the tactics of his opponents proved successful he made no effort to conceal his disgust.

A quick retort which Mr. Evarts made to ex-Judge Fullerton was an incident of the session. Mr. Moulton had been saying that Mr. Beecher, immediately after the appointment of the Committee, had agreed to postpone its sessions in the hope that his friend would induce Mr. Tilton to keep back the truth. Mr. Moulton had said to him, "You can do nothing more unless you confess the crime." Mr. Beecher said, "It will ruin me and kill Mr. Tilton." Mr. Evarts here raised a technical objection in his methodical way, and ex-Judge Fullerton, with a sigh which seemed to indicate that his opponent was altogether too "fussy" about some things, exclaimed, "Oh! well, we'll gratify you!" "No," said Mr. Evarts, with dignity, "you will satisfy the law."

The proposed statement which Mr. Beecher wrote Mr. Tilton would not make because, as he told Mr. Moulton, he did not care to appear the victim of a hallucination. Mr. Beecher said that it would kill him to tell the whole truth to Mr. Sage or to any member of the Committee. After Mrs. Tilton appeared before the Committee, Gen. Tracy described her manner with so much pathos that Mr. Tilton's rage cooled, and he consented to write a new statement, which he showed to Gen. Tracy.

Mr. Moulton's recital of the circumstances under which Mr. Beecher paid him $5,000 for The Golden Age without the knowledge of Mr. Tilton was given very cautiously and quietly until he came to the interview with Gen. Tracy, in which he was advised to tell Mr. Tilton that the paper had been kept alive by Mr. Beecher. Gen. Tracy had attempted to intimidate the witness, and Mr. Moulton's tone again became declamatory in resenting such a liberty.

The admission of the statement that was shown to Dr. Storrs by Mr. Carpenter and Mr. Tilton surprised every one. The defense had a ruling in their favor and could have kept out Mrs. Tilton's short statement, but for reasons the force of which will appear when their own evidence is offered, suddenly withdrew their objections.

Mr. Moulton in correcting his own testimony gave Mr. Evarts a rare opportunity for annoying his opponents and confusing the witness just as the cross-examination was opening. Mr. Evarts had altogether the best of this passage at arms, and ex-Judge Fullerton had recourse to repartee to conceal his discomfiture. Mr. Evarts had used the expression, "exploded conversation," and his opponent rejoined, "Mr. Moulton did not explode so frequently as you do!"

Mr. and Mrs. Beecher were absent morning and afternoon. Mrs. Tilton and her Quaker friend, Mrs. Field, were present. The audience was smaller than on previous days. There were few members of Plymouth Church in attendance, and there were no bouquets in the room.

THE PROCEEDINGS.

All the principals in the great scandal suit were in their places on the opening of the court on Monday, which was the eleventh day of the trial. Ex-Judge Morris has so far recovered his health as to be able to resume his duties in the case. The direct examination of Mr. Moulton was resumed, the first part being in reference to his appearance before the Investigating Committee.

BEECHER INSINCERE IN APPROVING INVESTIGATION.

Francis D. Moulton was recalled, and the direct examination resumed.

Mr. Fullerton—Look at the paper now shown you, and see whether that is your first statement to the Committee of Investigation [handing witness a paper]? A. It is, Sir.

Q. When was it prepared? A. Prepared for reading to the Investigating Committee of Plymouth Church, July the 18th.

Mr. Evarts—If your Honor please, how is this material? This is no part of any res gesta that I know of. The paper was introduced to the attention of the witness as we were about adjourning. Now his attention is called to it. It is what is called the first statement?

Mr. Fullerton—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Evarts—It is called the first statement, not the long one.

Mr. Fullerton—The first statement.

Mr. Evarts—The first statement which Mr. Moulton prepared, as he has just now stated, in reference to some pending investigation that was in progress. Of course that is not evidence on its face. It has nothing to do with this issue.

Judge Neilson—The only possible suggestion that occurs to me in favor of its being evidence is that Mr. Beecher approved its use of it.

Mr. Evarts—That will appear afterwards, I suppose. If it is intended to show that it is Mr. Beecher's statement, then we can understand that it is evidence against Mr. Beecher.

Mr. Fullerton—The gentleman's objection is premature. I have not offered the statement yet in evidence, nor have I given all the preliminary proof which I design to give before I offer it in evidence. If that preliminary proof is insufficient when the offer is made, then of course the gentleman can properly object.

Judge Neilson—It appeared that you were about to offer it; I thought you were and so did the counsel, I suppose.

Mr. Fullerton—I am about to offer it, Sir, but I have not yet offered it.

Judge Neilson—If I see an opportunity to narrow the circle of proof I should be very glad to do it, if I can do it properly.

Mr. Fullerton—Yes, Sir; but I don't want to close the circle until the proof is in, so as to shut it out.

Q. What did you do with the statement before you went before the Committee with it? A. Read it to Mr. Beecher.

Q. Where? A. At my house in Remsen-st.

Q. Any one else present besides yourself and Mr. Beecher? A. Not when I read it to him; no, Sir.

Q. When was it read to him? A. Read to him on the afternoon of the 13th, toward evening.

Q. State the conversation between you and Mr. Beecher at the time of reading it? A. I said to him, "Mr. Beecher, I have an invitation to appear before your Committee to-night, and I will read to you the statement which I intend to make there, and if it meets with your approval I should like to have you say so." I read it to him, and he said he thought it an honorable statement, and it met with his approval; he concurred in it—in the propriety of it, so far as I was concerned. After reading it to him I went down stairs with him, into the room where my wife was, and my wife said to Mr. Beecher, "What do you think of Frank's statement?" And I said, "Mr. Beecher has said it is an honorable one;" and my wife said, "You consider it honorable?" And he said, "Yes." I said then to him that I had also read it to Mr. Tilton, and he also concurred in it.

Mr. Fullerton—I now offer it in evidence.

Mr. Evarts—How is it evidence on any issue here? Here is a statement in the nature of an argument or proposition of Mr. Moulton's relation or attitude towards an investigation going on; and Mr. Beecher who is a party interested in that inquiry—and Mr. Tilton, if you please, also interested in that inquiry as the accuser—say in respect to a statement that Mr. Moulton proposes to make that it is an honorable statement for him to make. I don't know whether the statement contains any facts or not. It is a short statement, and rather in the nature of a reason for not going on any further, isn't it?

Mr. Fullerton—That is one view to be taken of it.

Mr. Evarts—It is not any evidence on any issue in this case, and if it is admitted it must be admitted against our objection and exception.

Mr. Fullerton—I am somewhat surprised that the learned counsel should object to the reading of the statement and at the same breath confess that he does not know what is stated in it, because what is stated in it makes it proper to be read in evidence. If the learned counsel had perused it, he would see at once that it becomes an important piece of evidence in this controversy, and I can state very briefly how it becomes important. In the first place, it does state facts which have a bearing upon this issue. In the next place, it discloses a disposition upon the part of Mr. Beecher to throw obstacles in the way of this investigation which he himself had set on foot; and we suppose that it is a material fact in this case to show that while he was pretending that he wanted an investigation, in point of fact he wanted no such thing, and tried to smother it. Those two facts become very apparent by the reading of this paper.

Judge Neilson—Very well; the last fact, if it be such—the suggestion that Mr. Beecher wished to smother the investigation—is not at all material here, and I think on the whole it is my duty to rule out that paper.

Mr. Fullerton—Will your Honor hear us upon that subject?

Mr. Evarts—You have just been heard.

Mr. Fullerton—I propose to be heard again. That is for the Court and not the counsel to determine.

Judge Neilson—I cannot conceive how anything that the witness could have written, any statement of facts—we have the facts otherwise—any argument, how that could be material in any point of view in this case.

Mr. Fullerton—Why, Sir, one strong argument to be made upon the other side in this case is this, that Mr. Beecher courted this investigation; he appointed a committee for the purpose of going to the bottom of this scandal, and developing every fact that could possibly throw any light upon the subject, and hence they say he was innocent of this charge; that the scandal had no foundation in fact. Doesn't it become important for us to show while, upon the one hand he was pretending that he wanted an examination, that he was secretly trying to suppress it? Why, certainly, Sir, it turns away the edge of that instrument which they use against us in this case. It becomes very important that we should show that fact. Then, upon the other hand, I think, even if your Honor should conclude to shut it out for that reason, it must be admitted for another reason, and that is that he stated facts, and that Mr. Beecher acquiesced in those facts—said that it was a proper statement to be made; that it was an honorable statement upon the part of Mr. Moulton, and truthful.

Mr. Evarts—He has not said that.

Mr. Beach—Yes, Sir; he has said it was a true statement. Let us see from the stenographer's notes whether he said it.

Mr. Fullerton—I want to show that up to that hour Mr. Moulton was in the confidence of Mr. Beecher, and acted as he wanted him to act.

Judge Neilson—That appears. The real question is whether it does state facts, and whether Mr. Beecher assented to the correctness of the statement of facts. Has counsel looked at the paper?

Mr. Everts—I have looked at it heretofore, generally. I haven't it before me at this moment.

Mr. Fullerton—Why, Sir, the paper acknowledges the offense.

Mr. Everts—Your Honor can look at the paper if it is desired.

Mr. Beach—There is, first, Sir, a dispute to be settled in regard to what is the evidence of the witness in regard to the recognition by Mr. Beecher of the accuracy of this statement, and [to THE TRIBUNE reporter] I therefore ask the stenographer to read the evidence of Mr. Moulton as to what Mr. Beecher said upon that subject.

[THE TRIBUNE stenographer read the testimony referred to.]

Mr. Beach—The evidence then is that when the statement was read to Mr. Beecher he concurred in it. If, therefore, the statement contains any fact material to this issue it certainly is competent to be given; and, although it is true, as your Honor says, that Mr. Moulton can make no statement that shall be conclusive upon Mr. Beecher, your Honor will recognize the truth of the proposition that when a statement of a fact is made to a party and he concurs in that statement of fact, it is an adoption of the statement and it becomes evidence against him. And, if your Honor please, that question was before you upon an earlier interlocutory question, and the case in the 55th New York was referred to, and was at that time acquiesced in by your Honor's decision, and it is a too familiar principle to be disputed. But, if your Honor please, will you regard the suggestion which is made by my associate upon the other aspect in which this evidence is important. Is it not a material fact for us to show that whenever this subject was presented or discussed, whenever upon any occasion it was advanced for investigation, whatever was the public attitude of Mr. Beecher with reference to that inquiry, yet he in secret repressed and discountenanced all investigation into the subject? Is it not a substantial fact to be given in evidence against any person, accused either of crime or of offense, that he labors at concealment, avoids investigation, endeavors to escape from all agitation of the subject? Is not concealment everywhere an evidence of guilt, and may we not in that aspect alone present this evidence, with other evidence which your Honor has received tending to the same issue and leading to the same result?

MOULTON'S FIRST STATEMENT EXCLUDED.

Judge Neilson—The various papers that have been put in have been read without objection. I do not recall a single one—not even Mrs. Morse's letter—that was objected to. The effect of the paper was spoken to by counsel, and that held in reserve by him, but the reading of the paper was not objected to. This is the first one, I think, that has been thus objected to. The simple question is, Mr. Everts, whether it is admissible as having been approved by Mr. Beecher.

Mr. Everts—Exactly.

Judge Neilson—There is this to be said about it at the same time. An approval by the defendant—an unqualified approval would be one thing. An approval of it as proper to be put in by the witness would be perhaps another thing.

Mr. Everts—Whenever this paper shall be read, if your Honor shall think that it is admissible, its entire harmlessness as affecting the case of this defendant will be apparent; but, nevertheless, the question arises for counsel whether matters not pertinent to an issue which includes the range and scope of what is pertinent, and enough, and an adequate variety of evidence—whether evidence not pertinent should be admitted because it is not injurious is not a question with which counsel have properly nothing to do. Here is a statement of Mr. Moulton, who occupied the position of a witness notified to attend before a church examination which had no compulsory power over him. He did not go there as a witness, but he prepared a statement which was to be for the present at least an answer for his not testifying, and he read it to Mr. Beecher and asked him if he thought it was an honorable statement for him (Mr. Moulton) to make in that behalf, and for that purpose; and then he asked Mr. Tilton the same thing, and then Mrs. Moulton, it seems, had an interest in asking the question, and the result of it is, no doubt, as it stands—that Mr. Beecher had this little short statement of half a page, which I hold in my hand, read to him, and said that it was an honorable statement for him to make, and, if you please, concurred in the propriety of his making it; that is all.

Judge Neilson—That had reference, of course, to the attitude of Mr. Moulton.

Mr. Everts—No doubt—the propriety of his making it.

Mr. Fullerton—He states some facts which bear upon this issue.

Mr. Everts—Who?

Mr. Fullerton—Mr. Moulton; in that statement.

Mr. Everts—Whatever is in that conversation that bears on the issue is not what we are now discussing. The question is whether this statement bears on the issue?

Mr. Fullerton—My reply is—

Mr. Everts—I believe I have the floor. My learned friend undertakes to say, and he is supported by his learned associate, that whatever indicates an aversion on Mr. Beecher's part to a promulgation of scandal, and an examination into scandal, is to be produced as evidence that he is guilty of a crime. There is no principle of human nature, and no rule of law, that imputes any such consequences to any such efforts. There is one simple issue to be tried in this cause, the burden of which has been assumed by this plaintiff, and that is to prove the adultery of his wife; and I would like to know how these conversations as to the latitude and mode of meeting an inquiry into that matter, and the aversion of one party to the alleged fault—the alleged guilt, being in isposed to have the inquiry made, bears upon the question, which is the real question that your Honor or the jury are occupied with—the existence of the fact.

Mr. Fullerton—I agree entirely with the learned counsel as to the issue between these parties, and as to who has taken the affirmative of that issue, and I assert again that there are facts stated in this statement which bear upon that issue. It was a statement read to Mr. Beecher, Mr. Beecher understanding perfectly well that that was to be promulgated before the Committee. Doesn't it become important, therefore, to look into this statement and see what was there said with reference to this crime charged upon Mr. Beecher? Suppose that Mr. Moulton in that proposed statement had acknowledged Mr. Beecher's guilt, but did not think that it was a subject for investigation, that it ought to be suppressed; would not that become evidence? Why, it seems to me, if the Court please, that the proposition is too plain for argument, and if your Honor will take the statement and examine it, you will see that Mr. Moulton came directly to the point in that statement and gave his reasons why he should not testify, and those reasons bear upon this question now before the jury. There can be nothing plainer, Sir. I beg your Honor to look at this statement.

Mr. Everts—Your Honor can look at the paper.

Mr. Beach—I have sent for an authority, Sir, that I wish your Honor to see.

Judge Neilson—I do not think it will help me any to look at the paper [taking the paper].

Mr. Everts—It is a very short paper.

Mr. Fullerton—And a very significant one. There in another point of view, already presented to your Honor, this paper becomes exceedingly important. I repeat what I said before, that when Mr. Beecher makes efforts to suppress investigation, he certainly is doing something from which his guilt may be inferred. I cannot see any other inference to be drawn from it. He says to the public: "I want investigation." He says to his church: "Appoint a Committee for the purpose of investigating," but in private and in secret he is attempting in every possible way to prevent it. As a matter of course, the testimony of Mr. Moulton before that Investigating Committee was of the first importance. He had been connected with this unhappy matter from the beginning up to the time of the meeting of the Investigating Committee. He had within his knowledge facts which would enable him to determine whether the slander was groundless or well-founded. Now, if Mr. Beecher prevented or attempted to prevent him from going before that Committee, organized by himself, so as to shut out all these facts within that gentleman's knowledge, doesn't it become important? Doesn't it bear upon this question, and in connection with the flood of evidence in this case is not the jury warranted in drawing an inference from it? Does it not add to the force and to the effect of the other testimony in this cause? It cannot be said to be irrelevant. It is always competent to prove against an individual on trial for an offense that he endeavored to suppress testimony, that he got a witness to go out of the jurisdiction of a court and beyond its process, that he undertook for a compensation to withhold the truth; anything of that kind is competent in the trial of an individual for an offense. The suppression of the truth is always evidence of guilt on the part of an individual who is on trial.

Mr. Beach—I read to your Honor from the case of Kelley v. The People, in the 55th of New York, page 565. I read from page 577. It was a criminal case:

"When an individual is charged with an offense, or declarations are made in his presence and hearing touching the fact of the guilt or innocence of an alleged crime, and he remains silent when it would be proper for him to speak, it is the province of the jury to interpret such a silence and determine whether his silence was, under the circumstances, excused or explained.

At most, silence, under such circumstances, is but an implied acquiescence in the truth of the statements made by others, and thus presumptive evidence of guilt, and, in some cases, it may be slight, except as confirmed and corroborated by other circumstances."

In this case, your Honor perceives, it was not simple silence; it was an explicit concurrence.

"But it is some evidence, and therefore I except in those cases where the statements are made upon an occasion and under circumstances in which the individual sought to be affected could not with propriety speak, as in the progress of a judicial investigation, or in a discussion between third persons not addressed to or intended to affect the accused or induce any action in respect to him, so that for him to speak would be a manifest intrusion into a discourse to which he was not a party, the evidence is competent and should be admitted."

Your Honor will also observe that this was not a conversation between third parties. It was an appeal addressed directly to this defendant himself. It was in relation to an investigation of an offense charged against him, in which the truth of that accusation was to be investigated by a Committee selected by himself. Therefore it was proper for him to speak; the occasion demanded utterance upon his part. He knew that this statement was to be presented to that Committee, and he knew in what degree and to what extent that statement would affect that investigation. The Court proceed to say:

"Any declaration of the individual in response to a statement so made would be admissible in evidence, and an omission to make an answer to it, or notice it like other acts of the party, is to be interpreted, and such effect given to it, as evidence, in connection with the other circumstances of the case, as the Jury in their discretion shall think it entitled to. The implication of assent to a statement affecting the guilt or innocence of an individual from an omission to controvert, qualify or explain it, arises from the fact that a person knowing the truth or falsity of a statement affecting his rights made by another in his presence, will, naturally under circumstances calling for a reply, deny it if he be at liberty to do so, if he do not intend to admit it. It is no objection to the admission of the declarations of the accused as evidence, that they are made while he is under arrest; and his admission, either expressed or implied, of the truth of a statement made by others under the same circumstances, is equally admissible. His conduct and acts, as well in custody as when at large, may be given in evidence against him; and their cogency as evidence will be determined by the Jury."

Now, Sir, I do not think that argument can illustrate the application of that principle to this case.

Judge Neilson—I still think that in this instance it was understood that the witness was to make a statement to the Committee. It appears his statement had been prepared, had been submitted to Mr. Tilton. It was, in a friendly spirit no doubt, submitted to Mr. Beecher, and he had in view the fact that Mr. Moulton was making a statement—and, of course, a statement from his standpoint of view. I think the case is very much as an instance would be where a witness testifies, testifies adversely to you; and yet you admit that, differing from your view, it was honorable in him to testify as he did. The paper did not call, it seems to me, for a contradiction on the part of this defendant; and I still think I must rule it out, Sir. Take an exception.

Mr. Beach—We except. [To Mr. Fullerton.] We want it to appear upon the record; that is all. That does not put it upon the record.

Mr. Fullerton—I want to offer parts of this, Sir, if the whole is not admitted.

Judge Neilson—Well, you can frame the offer in such form hereafter as need be.

Mr. Beach—No, Sir; we want it on the record.

Judge Neilson—Frame it in your own way.

Mr. Fullerton—Then I offer this part in evidence.

Mr. Evarts—If they are to offer any parts in evidence, they should be marked and handed to the Court for the Court to pass upon. Your Honor has held that the paper itself shall not be offered to the Jury. I ask that they be handed up to your Honor.

Judge Neilson—He has a right to say he offers to prove one clause after another.

Mr. Evarts—Yes, but the point is this, if your Honor please: he proposes to your Honor that certain parts of a written paper, notwithstanding the paper itself is not admissible (which your Honor has ruled), are admissible. Now, how he expects to make that lodgement and distinction, I don't know.

Judge Neilson—Well, the counsel can mark the parts.

Mr. Evarts—Yes, Sir, and hand it to your Honor.

Mr. Beach—That does not bring it upon the record. I do not see much difficulty in supposing that a whole instrument may not be admissible; as a whole, there may be some immaterial matter in it which would be sufficient to exclude it when offered as a whole, and yet there may be parts of it, statements of fact which we say were admitted by Mr. Beecher on that occasion, which may be admissible.

Judge Neilson—Your rights ought to be saved in respect to it, of course; any form that will do that.

Mr. Fullerton—Then I offer in evidence—

Mr. Evarts—We object.

A LAWYER'S SHREWD FLANK MOVEMENT.

Judge Neilson [to Mr. Fullerton]—The counsel objects to your reading it in the hearing of the Jury.

Mr. Fullerton—Well, your Honor, I can't get it on the record without reading it. Your Honor don't put it on the record by reading it.

Mr. Evarts—Why, certainly; he marks it.

Mr. Fullerton—Not at all. If it is shut out it will do no harm to the defendant. If it is let in, why then it has its natural effect.

Mr. Evarts—Of course it is always more interesting to counsel to have the evidence both in, and have an exception for ruling it out; that we understand. Now, he has got an exception to its being ruled out, and now he would like to have it in.

Judge Neilson—How does it get in when it is not admitted?

Mr. Evarts—By reading it.

Mr. Beach—Does reading a proposition make it evidence?

Mr. Evarts—It answers the purpose.

Mr. Beach—Answers the purpose? How? Does the gentleman distrust the gentlemen of the Jury that they will not obey your Honor in ruling out evidence? And does your Honor mean to deny us the privilege of making a proposal of proof?

Judge Neilson—No, Sir.

Mr. Evarts—In the ordinary mode.

Mr. Fullerton—I offer in evidence this part of the statement to wit [reading:] :

"I regret for your sakes the responsibility imposed on me of appearing there to-night. If I say anything, I must speak the truth. I do not believe that the simple curiosity of the world at large or, even of this Committee, ought to be gratified through any recitation by me of the facts which are in my possession, necessarily in confidence, through my relation to the parties. The personal differences of which I am aware, as the chosen arbitrator, have once been settled honorably between the parties, and would never have been revived except on account of recent attacks, both in and out of Plymouth Church, made upon the character of Theodore Tilton, to which he thought a reply necessary. If the present issue is to be settled, it must be, in my opinion, by the parties themselves, either together or separately, before your Committee, each taking the responsibility of his own utterance. As I am fully conversant with the facts and evidences, I shall, as between those parties, if necessary, deem it my duty to state the truth, in order to final settlement, and that the world may be well informed before pronouncing its judgment with reference to either. I therefore suggest to you that the parties first be heard, that if then you deem it necessary that I should appear before you, I will do so, to speak the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth."

Judge Neilson—Well, that is ruled out. You take an exception specially to that. Now the next.

Mr. Fullerton—I also offer this, to wit:

"I hold to-night, as I have held hitherto, the opinion that Mr. Beecher should frankly state that he had committed an offense against Mr. Tilton, for which it was necessary to apologize, and for which he did apologize in the language of the letter, part of which has been quoted."

Judge Neilson—Same ruling as to that, and same exception.

Mr. Fullerton—I also offer this:

"That he [referring to Mr. Beecher] should have stated frankly that he deemed it necessary for Mr. Tilton to have made the defense against Dr. Leonard Bacon, which he did make, and that he (Mr. Beecher) should refuse to be a party to the reopening of this painful subject."

Judge Neilson—Same ruling.

Mr. Fullerton—[Reading:] :

"If he had made this statement he would have stated no more than the truth, and it would have saved him and you the responsibility of a further inquiry. It is better now that the Committee should not report; and, in place of a report, Mr. Beecher himself should make the statement which I have suggested, or that if the Committee does report, the report should be a recommendation to Mr. Beecher to make such a statement."

Judge Neilson—Same ruling as to that.

Mr. Evarts [excitedly]—Now, if your Honor please, my learned friend has read every particle of this paper except mere surplusage. [Violently throwing a book on the table.]

Judge Neilson—He gets it on the record in that way; I think it is proper.

Mr. Evarts—He has done it, as I told you.

Mr. Fullerton—And I have read it because I want to offer it in evidence, except the surplusage.

Judge Neilson—I think you have done properly.

Mr. Fullerton—Is the complaint that I have not offered the surplusage?

Mr. Evarts—The situation is a very plain one. You offered a paper which was ruled out. There should have been an end of it. You then offered parts of it, as you said, on some particular discrimination, and in that respect. You read the whole paper except a mere formality.

Mr. Fullerton—And the whole paper is ruled out and all its parts?

Mr. Evarts—That was the first ruling.

Mr. Fullerton—Undoubtedly it was.

Mr. Evarts.—You said you would make the discrimination.

Mr. Fullerton.—I have discriminated.

Mr. Evarts.—Well, I don't see it. [Laughter.]

Mr. Fullerton.—The gentleman says I have not offered the surplusage. I have discriminated between the wheat and the chaff. He wants the chaff also, if I understand him right. [Laughter.] I left out just what I chose to leave out. The gentleman cannot preclude me from making my offer of testimony.

Judge Neilson—That is right. The audience don't begin well this Monday morning. This is a bad beginning. Please not to repeat that again.

By Mr. Fullerton—Now, had the Bacon letter then been published? A. Yes, Sir; the Bacon letter was published, had been published—the Bacon letter had been published.

Q. Do you know how long it had been published?

Mr. Beach—We take exception to each of those rulings.

Judge Neilson—Yes, Sir.

The Witness—June previous.

Q. State whether that Bacon letter had been the subject of conversation between yourself and Mr. Beecher? A. It had been; yes, Sir.

Q. Prior to the reading of the statement of which you have spoken? A. Yes, Sir; and was the subject of conversation at the time I spoke to him with reference to this statement.

Q. And what did Mr. Beecher say at the time you read that statement to him, if anything, with reference to the apology, so called; I refer to the letter of January 1st, 1871, in that conversation? A. I said to him, I said to Mr. Beecher—

Q. Go on? A. I said to Mr. Beecher, "I have recommended from the first—have said from the first, rather, that this Bacon letter, in my opinion, offered a basis for reconciliation on account of the introduction of the word 'offence,' and the reason that I have followed the line of them in this statement is, that I want to carry that view into the Committee, and don't want to go any further than that;" and then he said, "I concur in the propriety of that statement." After hearing my reasons he said, "I concur in the propriety of that statement," and I said to Mr. Beecher, "You consider it honorable, do you not?" and he said, "Yes, I do." That was the conversation between Mr. Beecher and myself. There was a further conversation with regard to the publication of the correspondence between Mr. Beecher and the Committee subsequently to that time.

Q. That I am coming to in a moment; when did you first learn that the Committee had been appointed? A. From Mr. Beecher, on July the 5th.

MOULTON'S LAST OFFICES AS MUTUAL FRIEND.

Q. Was there any talk between you and Mr. Beecher in regard to the composition of that Committee before it was ordered or appointed? A. He said he should have the naming of the—

Q. How? A. He said he should have the naming of the people upon it.

Q. When was that conversation? A. On July 5th.

Q. What occurred, now, immediately subsequent to July 5th in reference to the proceedings before that Committee between yourself and Mr. Beecher? A. What occurred when—on July 5th?

Q. Yes, after you learned the Committee was appointed what occurred between you and Mr. Beecher with reference to any proceedings before it?

Mr. Evarts—That has already been gone into.

Mr. Fullerton—No, Sir, it has not.

Mr. Evarts—What he has lately stated was mere repetition of what he said before.

Mr. Fullerton—I will show the gentleman that there is something that has not been developed.

Judge Neilson—Go on.

The Witness—He consulted—I saw Mr. Beecher at his house, Sir, with regard to the report which he was to make to the Committee.

Q. Now, state when that was? A. It was during the week of the 12th of July, commencing the 12th of July, between the 12th and the 20th. I saw him several times, Sir, at his house.

Q. At his house? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. With regard to what? A. With regard to the report which he should make to the Investigating Committee of his church.

Q. State whether he had it prepared? He read to me, Sir, from a paper what he proposed to say with regard to Theodore Tilton.

Q. And what was it? A. The substance of it was that he took upon himself great blame for his conduct toward Theodore Tilton and his family, and exonerated Theodore Tilton from all blame so far as concerned Tilton's action towards himself; and I said to him: "Mr. Beecher, I think that I may be able to induce Theodore Tilton not to write the statement which he is writing, if I express to him fully the ground that you take with regard to him; because I cannot see that you can do anything more, unless you confess absolutely to the Committee the crime which you have committed against him and his family. And I will try to influence Mr. Tilton upon the basis of what you have told me." And he said: "I hope you will succeed in doing that; if Theodore publishes the fact, as he has threatened to, of my relations with Mrs. Tilton, it will ruin me, but it will kill him;" and he wept in expression—in expressing to me at that time his sorrow for the crime that he had committed; and I, Sir, was deeply affected myself with his presentation of his contrition; and I went to Theodore Tilton and I told him that I thought he should not write the document which he was preparing, if he intended in that document to state, as he said he had in The Argus newspaper, the facts; that he ought not to do it.

Q. Well, was anything said in that conversation in reference to a proposed report or statement? A. Not in that conversation. Sir; I am going to give you the conversation.

Q. Just come to that, please? A. Yes, Sir; certainly. I saw Mr. Beecher again, and I told him that Theodore—

Mr. Evarts—Give us the date of this? A. I'm giving the date as near as I can.

Mr. Beach—He has said there were several interviews.

The Witness—In the week—within the week, Mr. Evarts, of the 12th and 20th.

BEECHER SEEKS A COMPROMISE.

Mr. Evarts—When was this? A. Within that week; between the 12th and 20th I saw Mr. Beecher, and I told him that Theodore seemed to be obdurate, that I thought I would have to treat him about as I treated him before—let him work himself out, and try to prevent publication if I could, or change the form, if I could, of the presentation; and I said to him, "Mr. Beecher, isn't there any member—" I said to him, "Mr. Beecher, can't we get an adjournment; can't we get an adjournment of the Committee of Investigation?" Said I, "Time is worth more than anything else in this business with Tilton;" and he said he would try to get a postponement of the meeting which was called for the succeeding Monday; said he would write to Mr. Sage and procure a postponement, and then I asked him if anything new had occurred to him since my last interview with him; and he said, "No;" and I said to him: "Mr. Beecher, I do not—I cannot recommend you to make any report to that Investigating Committee until I can get Theodore Tilton to commit himself to what you shall say;" and he was lying on his bed at the time, and he rose from it and went to a bureau and took a piece of paper and wrote a form of proceeding something like this: "Mr. Beecher having made a statement, and that being satisfactory, the paper——"

Mr. Evarts asked that the paper be produced.

Mr. Fullerton—Well, Sir, I will gratify you.

Mr. Evarts—You will satisfy the law.

Mr. Fullerton—Well, it is easier to do that than to satisfy you. [Laughter.]

[Paper handed to witness.]

The Witness [reading]: "The statement of Mr. B. being read and, if striking favorably, a word sent substantially thus to Committee."

Q. Is that the paper that he prepared? A. Precisely, Sir; I beg pardon.

Q. I understand you that this interview, when this paper was prepared that I have now produced, was at Mr. Beecher's house? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. And he got up from his bed to write it? A. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Fullerton—I offer it in evidence.

Q. It is in Mr. Beecher's handwriting, isn't it? A. It is.

Mr. Fullerton [reading]:

"The statement of Mr. B. being read and, if striking favorably, then a word sent, substantially thus, to Committee: [Extract.] 'I have been through years acting under conviction that I had been wronged, but was under the imputation of being the injurer. I learn from a friend that Mr. B., in his statement to you, has reversed this, and has done me justice.

I am willing, should he consent, to appear before you with him, and dropping the further statements which I felt it to be my duty to make for my own clearance, to settle this painful domestic difficulty, which never ought to have been made public, finally and amicably.'"

[Paper marked "Exhibit No. 49."]

Q. What, if anything, did Mr. Beecher propose when he handed you that paper? A. The substance of the paper itself—to make a statement to the Committee exonerating Mr. Tilton from all blame—from any injustice toward him from Mr. Beecher, and taking great blame upon himself on account of his conduct toward Mr. Tilton's family, and I said to Mr. Beecher, "Mr. Beecher, isn't there any member of your Committee beside Mr. Tracy, or isn't there any one in that Committee beside Mr. Tracy, to whom you can tell the truth; to whom I could tell it, or to whom Mr. Tracy could tell it, in order that they might guide the action of that Committee properly with reference to the fact itself? Couldn't you tell Mr. Sage?" and he said no, it would kill him. He said it almost killed him when he told him that he had been guilty of an offense; when he made the explanation that he did to him of that.

Mr. Evarts—That is Mr. Sage's? A. Yes, Sir. "Well," I said, "that is too bad; if you have not got one friend in that Committee to whom you can tell the truth, what is the use of your friends?" and that is the substance of what occurred.

Mr. Fullerton—Well, what did he wish you to do with this paper that I have just read? A. Wanted me to take it to Theodore Tilton.

Mr. Evarts—What did he say?

Mr. Fullerton—Yes, what did he say? That is the way he manifested what he wanted you to do, I suppose. Tell us what he said? A. Yes, Sir; he asked me to show that to Theodore Tilton, and I did show it to Theodore.

Q. And did you report to Mr. Beecher what Theodore said? A. I did; yes.

Q. And what did you report to him? A. I said to him that Theodore refused to consent to make himself out the victim of a hallucination; I think that was all.

Q. When was the next interview between yourself and Mr. Beecher? A. When was the next?

Q. Yes? A. I don't remember.

Mr. Beach—If he don't remember dates, refer him to the subject.

Q. Well, did Mr. Tilton publish his card? A. Yes, Sir; he published it on the 20th.

Q. On the 20th? A. I believe—no; he did not publish it on the 20th; he presented it to the Committee on the 20th.

Mr. Beach—You mean he presented his statement to the Committee on the 20th? A. He presented his report.

Q. His statement? A. Yes, Sir; he presented his statement.

By Mr. Fullerton—Before the publication or the presentation of Mr. Tilton's statement to the Committee, did he prepare a proposed report to the Committee? A. Did who?

Q. Did Mr. Tilton present a proposed report for the Committee to make? A. Yes, Sir; Mr. Tilton did, and I submitted it on the first interview of the week of the 12th to Mr. Beecher, when I told him I thought I could induce or I would try and induce Theodore to withhold the statement he was preparing from the Committee.

Q. And you showed him then, as I understand you, Mr. Tilton's proposed report for the Committee to make? A. Yes, Sir; I submitted to him a paper which Mr. Tilton had prepared, and had expressed his willingness to abide by it before the Committee.

Q. Was this report to be made without statement by either party, or after this statement?

Mr. Evarts—What was said about it between you and Mr. Beecher?

The Witness—Mr. Beecher said to me, "Will Theodore stand by that?" I said that is what he would have done; I hope he will still be willing to do it."

By Mr. Fullerton—What was the subject of conversation then when he used that language? A. The very report which I showed to him of Mr. Tilton; I read it to him and handed it to him.

Q. A report for the Committee to make? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. [Handing paper to witness.] Look at that paper. Is that the paper you refer to? A. Yes, Sir; that is it.

TILTON TEMPORARILY MOLLIFIED.

Q. Now, then, in that conversation what was said in reference to the proposed statements of the respective parties? A. That they were to go before the Committee and make their statements.

Q. What statements? A. Statements of offense.

Q. Have you reference now to the proposed statement by Mr. Beecher just read in evidence, and the reply which he prepared to it? A. I have not any reference to that. That which I have just handed you was a report prepared by Theodore Tilton. I saw Mr. Beecher on that day, and I said to Mr. Beecher: "This will show you the mind Theodore has had upon this subject, and if it had not been for the publication of your correspondence, and the desertion of Theodore by his wife, he would not have been in the angry mood he is to-day, insisting upon the publication of the facts."

Q. By Judge Neilson—Was that before or after Mr. Tilton's statement had been given to the Committee? A. It was before, Sir.

Q. By Mr. Fullerton—I want you to state whether at the time of this conversation the statements which the respective parties were to make before the Committee were the subject of conversation; and if their character was then fixed, to state what they were to be? A. State that over again, if you please.

Q. You have now identified a proposed report that Mr. Tilton prepared for the Committee to make? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. And you showed it to Mr. Beecher? A. I did.

Q. And he asked you if Mr. Tilton would be satisfied with that? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Upon what, or of what, was that proposed report to be predicated—in the shape of statements of the parties?

Mr. Evarts (to the witness)—What passed between Mr. Beecher and you?

Mr. Fullerton—I asked that; in that conversation what was said on that subject between you? A. I said to Mr. Beecher that after Mrs. Tilton had made her statement to the Committee, Mr. Tilton was very much incensed, and that Mr. Tracy in a subsequent interview with him—in an interview subsequent to Mrs. Tilton's report to the Committee, or statement to the Committee, had so presented to him the influence which her statement had had upon the Committee that it melted the anger all out of Theodore Tilton, and he was perfectly willing to make a statement to the Committee which should not contain the fact of adultery between Mr. Beecher and Mrs. Tilton; that he was perfectly willing, if Mr. Beecher would take great blame upon himself, and exonerate Theodore Tilton from dishonorable conduct towards him—from any injustice towards him—that he, Theodore Tilton, was perfectly willing to settle the matter without making any accusation before that Committee, and that he had prepared such a report for the Committee to make, and that he had shown it to General Tracy, and General Tracy had said to him, on the night of the conversation to which I refer, that the Committee seemed now to be of opinion that there was an offense, and that he thought it would not be hard to get from that Committee a report (unfavorable, it is true, to Mr. Beecher) on the ground of the offense, but which would really settle the whole business, and save all the parties concerned from dishonor in consequence of crime; that is all.

Q. And this report that you have identified is the one that you now speak of? A. That was one of them, Sir. There were two. One was a long one, and that was a short one.

By Mr. Evarts—Made at the same time? A. Yes, Sir; two. The short one was not submitted to Mr. Tracy.

[Paper marked for identification "No. 50."]

By Mr. Fullerton—[Handing paper to witness]—Look at the paper now shown you and say whether it is the other report prepared by Mr. Tilton at that time? A. This is the paper, if it is all here.

Mr. Fullerton—I offer the first report in evidence:

"Report. The Committee appointed to inquire into the offense and apology by Mr. Beecher, alluded to in Mr. Tilton's letter to Dr. Bacon, respectfully report that, after examination, they find that an offense of grave character was committed by Mr. Beecher against Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Tilton, for which he made a suitable apology to both parties, receiving in return their forgiveness and good-will. The Committee further report that this seems to them a most eminently Christian way for the settlement of difficulties, and reflects honor on all the parties concerned."

[The paper heretofore marked for identification No. 50 was here marked "Exhibit No. 50."]

Q. For fear we may not distinguish between those two reports, I want you to repeat what Mr. Beecher said when you showed to him, or read to him, the report I have just put in evidence? A. I said to him that Theodore had been in that frame of mind, and I hoped—

By Mr. Beach—What frame of mind? A. The frame of mind in which he wrote that.

Q. Well, state it? A. I said to him that that was what Theodore had been willing to do, as expressed in the statement, and I hoped that he would still consent to act in that way, and Mr.

Beecher said: "Well, do you think he will? I hope he will;" he said. That is all.

By Mr. Fullerton—Now, this frame of mind of which you have spoken on the part of Mr. Tilton I understand was superinduced by a report made to him of the effect of Mrs. Tilton's statement to the Committee? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. What statement was that? A. All that I know of that statement was what Mr. Tracy read—the statement made to the Committee by Mrs. Tilton, a statement in which she had spoken highly, General Tracy said, of her husband.

Q. Not the long statement that was published? A. I don't know that it was.

Q. What was the result of all that? A. The result of it was nothing.

Q. That report was not made, as I understand you?

Mr. Evarts—The witness has said there was another statement also there.

The Witness—Another statement also where?

Mr. Evarts—Before you at this time.

The Witness—No, Sir; I don't say there was another statement also before me at this time. I spoke to Mr. Beecher of a report which Theodore Tilton had been willing to make, and I didn't show that report to Mr. Beecher; I did not have it with me. I happened to have this in my pocket, which I submitted to him.

Mr. Evarts—I misunderstood you.

By Judge Neilson—You didn't have it with you? A. No, Sir; I didn't have it with me.

By Mr. Evarts—I think the stenographer's notes will show that there were two reports. [To the witness.] You spoke to Mr. Beecher about the long statement? A. I did speak to Mr. Beecher about it at that time.

By Judge Neilson—But you hadn't it with you? No, Sir.

Q. The paper you had with you was the one that has been read? A. Yes, Sir.

By Mr. Evarts—This short one was not shown to Gen. Tracy? A. I don't remember that it was; I could not swear that it was.

Q. You said something about some paper having been shown to Mr. Tracy? A. Yes, Sir; it was the long statement.

Q. And not the short one? A. I don't think the short one was shown. The short one was the substance of the long one, but I don't think it was shown.

[The long statement referred to by the witness was marked for identification "No. 51."]

By Mr. Fullerton—You have spoken of a card in The Argus published by Mr. Tilton. [Handing witness a paper.] Look at the paper now shown you and say whether that is the card referred to. A. Yes, that is the one.

Mr. Fullerton—I offer it in evidence.

Mr. Evarts—We object to this, if your Honor please. We have had no evidence from this witness connecting Mr. Beecher with this article.

Judge Neilson—This is the long statement.

Mr. Evarts—No, Sir; it is a newspaper article from Mr. Tilton, published in a newspaper; whether it had any other authenticity than that I don't know, but nothing has been said by the witness which connects Mr. Beecher with it.

Judge Neilson—[To Mr. Fullerton]—How have you connected Mr. Beecher with it?

TILTON AGAIN ANGERED.

Mr. Fullerton—Something has been said by the witness with reference to it, and to make it clear, I will ask the witness a question in regard to it. [To the witness]:

Q. Between the 13th and the 20th of July, 1874, when these proposed statements were suggested to you, was anything said, and if so, what, about Theodore Tilton's card in The Argus? A. Yes, Sir; I told Mr. Beecher that Mr. Tilton never would have written that card if it had not been for the publication of his correspondence with the Committee and the desertion of his wife, and I said to Mr. Beecher at that interview, "Don't you know that you are doing yourself, or are liable to do yourself, a great hurt by keeping Elizabeth away from Theodore? Don't you know perfectly well the influence that that woman has had over him? If you keep her away from him it will only incense him, and you ought to send her back to him," and he said, "That can be arranged if this other matter is fixed up properly."

Mr. Evarts—I still don't see any connection between it and Mr. Beecher.

Mr. Fullerton—What other matter? A. The statements.

Mr. Evarts—I don't see any relevancy to that.

Mr. Fullerton—Why, Sir, this paper which was published on the 13th of July, 1874, caused this action on the part of Mr. Beecher in reference to those statements, the one he proposed to make, and the one he prepared for Theodore Tilton to make. It was to avert this blow, threatened in this card, and hence it becomes material in this case.

Judge Neilson—I don't see it so; I don't think it is.

Mr. Fullerton—Well, I must offer it in another point of view, so that it will appear as a part of the record, because it makes the first statement of Mr. Montton which your Honor has ruled out all the more important and significant. The reporter will please enter an exception to that last ruling.

[Paper marked for identification "No. 52.":]

Q. [Handing paper to witness]: Tell me whether the paper now shown you was received by you? A. Yes, Sir; it was.

Q. About the time of its date. A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Did you show it to Mr. Beecher? A. I did; yes, Sir.

Q. Did you read it to him, or did he read it— which? A. I don't know whether he read it, or whether I read it to him. It was either read to him, or he read it himself.

Q. When did you read it to him—how soon after its receipt? A. I don't remember, Sir, how soon after its receipt; some time after.

Q. Within what time? A. I should think within a month. I remember the conversation—something of the conversation on that subject.

Q. I want you to tell the conversation you had with Mr. Beecher with reference to that letter? A. It was with regard to the difficulty of The Golden Age. [To Mr. Fullerton]—Will you let me look at the letter again?

Mr. Fullerton—Certainly.

The Witness [after examining the letter]—I am not sufficiently clear about that to swear in regard to it.

Mr. Evarts—What is this? A. I am not sufficiently clear that is the letter, I showed to Mr. Beecher. I have several letters from Mr. Clarke.

Q. You are not clear this was shown to Mr. Beecher? A. No, Sir; I am not clear in regard to that. I want to correct my statement in regard to that. That the letter was a subject of conversation I am sure, but that I showed it to him I am not sure.

Mr. Fullerton—You are not sure you showed it to him? A. No, Sir.

Mr. Evarts, to Mr. Fullerton—Well, read it?

Mr. Beach—Well, I don't know.

Mr. Fullerton—I will not read it.

Mr. Evarts—Very well, say so.

Mr. Fullerton—I have said so; if I read it, it would be because it was proper evidence, and not because you commanded it. [To the witness]—Did you receive several letters from Mr. Clarke? A. I received several letters from him.

Q. And you are not able to state whether this is the one you showed Mr. Beecher? A. No, Sir; I am not able to say this is the one I showed Mr. Beecher.

Mr. Evarts—I desire that this statement should be marked for identification.

Mr. Fullerton—I don't desire that it shall be marked for identification.

Mr. Evarts—It has been shown the witness.

Judge Neilson—If he cannot identify it, counsel has a right to withdraw it.

Mr. Evarts—He has identified it originally as a letter shown to Mr. Beecher, and he now says he is in doubt whether it was shown to Mr. Beecher, but it was made the subject of conversation with Mr. Beecher. I want it marked for identification.

Judge Neilson—That leaves it to the counsel to withdraw the paper.

Mr. Evarts—He withdraws the evidence. It should be in evidence that this letter was the subject of conversation between Mr. Beecher and this witness.

Judge Neilson—And the conversation not being given, as yet, I think he may withdraw the letter.

Mr. Evarts—If your Honor will note my exception.

Judge Neilson—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Evarts—I ask that it be marked for identification, as a letter placed in witness's hands, and concerning which he has testified. Your Honor rules it out, and we except, of course, to your ruling.

BEECHER'S CONTRIBUTION TO TILTON'S PAPER.

Mr. Fullerton—Who was this Mr. Clarke, of whom you have spoken? A. Mr. Clarke was associated with Mr. Tilton in The Golden Age.

Q. State, if you please, what you mean by The Golden Age? A. The Golden Age newspaper.

Q. Published where? A. Published in New-York.

Q. By whom? A. By Theodore Tilton.

Q. And when was it started? A. It was started in 1871.

Q. About what time in that year? A. In March.

Q. How long did it continue to be published? A. It is being published now, I think, but not with Theodore Tilton as publisher and proprietor. It changed hands some time ago.

Q. Did you ever have any conversation with Mr. Beecher about The Golden Age? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. When was the first conversation? A. The first conversation about The Golden Age was in the beginning of 1871, I think, before the establishment of it.

Q. What was that conversation?

Mr. Evarts—How is that material, if your Honor please? It may be material, of course, by what was said.

Judge Neilson [to Mr. Fullerton]—Did you ask what was said?

Mr. Fullerton—Yes, Sir. [To Mr. Evarts.] That is the way to learn how it becomes material, to listen.

Judge Neilson—Go on.

The Witness—He said he hoped Theodore would be successful in the enterprise, and he said he would like to aid, if he could, in establishing the paper, and I told Theodore of that, and Theodore said to me he could not receive any aid from Mr. Beecher in establishing the paper, and so I told Mr. Beecher. I said to Mr. Beecher that was what Mr. Tilton said. That is the first conversation I remember about it.

Q. At any subsequent interview did you have a further conversation with Mr. Beecher about The Golden Age? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. When was that other interview? A. The other interview was in 1873—the beginning of 1873, I think.

Q. State what it was? A. The paper was dragging—I said to Mr. Beecher that the paper was dragging, and that Mr. Clarke was trying to manage something about its purchase, that Theodore felt bitter about the paper, about its condition; that it was not prosperous as it should be, and that he wanted to write a book, and then Mr. Beecher said that he would like to help the paper, and I said to him: "Mr. Beecher, I don't see how you can help the paper; I don't see how you can subscribe any money to The Golden Age, and I told him that Mr. Tilton would not take any money from him—would not allow me to take any money from him, directly or indirectly, and I didn't see how it was possible for him to do anything; that that matter had better be dismissed; and then I saw him subsequently, and the talk was renewed from time to time, and as far down as to May the 3d.

Q. What year? A. 1873, I think was the year, and Mr. Beecher said to me, between January 4th and May, 1873, that he thought I could take some money and give it to Theodore Tilton as my own, and that he would not know where it came from, and he would like to have me do it. I told him I didn't want to do it; I could not do it honorably, in my opinion. Well, he said, that certainly bread ought to be kept in Theodore's mouth, that I ought to take some money from him (Beecher), and feed it out to him; that he (Beecher) could get a mortgage very readily, and give me $5,000, and I said: "Well, I don't want to take it;" but afterwards I did take it, and I did feed it out to

The Golden Age and to Theodore. I told Mr. Beecher that Mr. Tilton was at work upon his book, and very much interested in that, that I was very glad of it. He said he was very glad too, and he would be glad to assist him in keeping him to work at it. Finally I took the money.

Q. When did you receive it? A. May 2d, 1873, I think it was.

Q. What was the amount? A. $5,000.

Q. And how was it given to you? A. In bills.

Q. Did you give it to him all at once? A. No, Sir.

Q. Where did you deposit it? A. With Woodruff & Robinson, the firm of which I am a member.

Q. State whether Theodore Tilton knew that you had received that money from Mr. Beecher? A. No, Sir; he never knew it.

Q. When did he learn it first? A. He learned it after the publication of my first statement, in which the fact was stated.

Q. You never communicated it to him before? A. No, Sir; never. I told Mr. Beecher that Mr. Tracy wanted me to communicate it to him in order to prevent the publication of his statement.

Q. I am coming to that. Go on and state what that was? A. Before the publication of Mr. Tilton's statement of July 20th Mr. Tracy was at my house—

Mr. Evarts—Well, we object to that—a conversation between him and Mr. Tracy.

Mr. Fullerton—Was Mr. Beecher there? A. No, Sir; I communicated the facts to Mr. Beecher.

Mr. Evarts [to the witness]—What passed between you and Mr. Beecher?

Judge Neilson—Yes, Sir; but preliminary to that is it proper to say he saw Mr. Tracy at his house, and that he had the communication afterwards?

Mr. Fullerton—Did something take place between you and Mr. Tracy? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Did you communicate that, whatever it was, to Mr. Beecher? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. What did you communicate to Mr. Beecher? A. I told Mr. Beecher that Mr. Tracy wanted me to communicate the fact that I had received $5,000 from Mr. Beecher to give Mr. Tilton, in order to stop him from the publication of his statement. I said, when Mr. Tracy wanted me to tell Mr. Tilton that, that that would be a serious embarrassment to me personally, in consequence of my having received that money, and I said to Mr. Beecher that I told Mr. Tracy that I was perfectly willing to be guided by him with sound advice—with any moral, good reason—with any good reason, and I would co-operate with him to induce Theodore Tilton not to publish his statement, but I would not, on any such ground as that, undertake to stop its publication. Mr. Tracy told me that would cause me trouble if it was published, and I told him if it caused me trouble, it must cause me trouble; that I had done no wrong and I didn't fear any trouble that would come from that.

Mr. Evarts—You told that to Mr. Beecher? A. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Fullerton—What reply did Mr. Beecher make to that when you told it to him? A. I don't remember any reply that he made particularly; I don't remember any reply that he made.

POINTS PREVIOUSLY TOUCHED REVIEWED.

Mr. Fullerton [addressing Judge Neilson]—In the course of the communication we had to omit some papers because we hadn't them present. I now show those papers thus submitted to the witness for the purpose of having them identified.

Q. [Handing paper to witness.] What is that paper you hold in your hand? A. This is Mr. West's letter to Mr. Beecher, of June 25th.

Q. From whom did you receive it? A. I received it from Mr. Beecher.

Q. [Handing another paper to witness.] Now, pray tell me what that paper is? I need not ask that question, however. The copy has been put in evidence, and I agreed to supply the original.

Judge Neilson—He may say if that is the original.

The Witness—That is in Henry Ward Beecher's handwriting.

Mr. Evarts—The card to The Eagle?

The Witness—Mr. Beecher sent the card to The Eagle without my knowledge of it afterwards, after it had been agreed upon. That is his handwriting.

Mr. Fullerton—I now offer the first paper in evidence. [Reading].

NEW YORK, June 25th, 1873.

REV. H. W. BEECHER:

DEAR SIR: Moved by a sense of duty, as a member of Plymouth Church, I have decided to prefer charges against Henry C. Bowen and Theodore Tilton, and have requested Brother Halliday to call a meeting of the Examining Committee in order that I may make the charge before them.

Thinking that you would, perhaps, like to be made acquainted with these facts, I called last evening at Mr. Beach's house, where I was informed that you had returned to Peekskill. I therefore write you by early mail to-day.

Yours, very truly,

WM. F. WEST.

(Copy letter marked "Exhibit No. 53.")

Mr. Fullerton—If the Court please, I now offer the original of Mr. Beecher's card to The Brooklyn Eagle.

Judge Neilson—Which we had reference to the other day?

Mr. Fullerton—Which was read the other day, and which I did not produce.

Mr. Evarts—As we understand that card which was undertaken to be read from The Eagle, it appeared in the evidence that it was altered by the editor, if your Honor will remember; therefore it was not really Mr. Beecher's card, and they had not the original of that, but my recollection is that that had relation to the Woodhull matter, and this has nothing to do with that.

Mr. Fullerton—No, Sir, this is the one.

Mr. Evarts—It has not anything to do with the other. It is not the matter that was referred to there.

Mr. Fullerton—It is the original, as far as there is any original.

Mr. Evarts—It has not anything to do with it. It is an original paper, and may be proper evidence, and may be now offered for aught I know, but this is not the paper, as I understand it.

Judge Neilson—You have in mind that it was a paper that related to something else—the Woodhull paper?

Mr. Evarts—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Fullerton—Having got the paper from The Brooklyn Eagle, in evidence and having produced the original, so far as there is one, I have discharged my duty and fulfilled my obligation, and if you (Mr. Evarts) don't want it read, leave it out.

Mr. Evarts—This is another card, and has been in evidence.

Mr. Fullerton—Yes; but I promised to produce the original of Mr. Beecher's. If you complain that I have fulfilled my promise, then I am sorry I made it. I now produce the original of the article as printed in The Eagle, which the gentlemen from the other side desired. You (Mr. Evarts) called for the paper itself in which it was published.

Judge Neilson—The card which you read in reference to The Eagle commenced with the fact that The Eagle had not been in accordance with Mr. Beecher?

Mr. Evarts—We waived that when you [Mr. Fullerton] showed us in the paper what was a copy. We didn't care for the original Eagle article. Then you began to read what was supposed generally was prepared by Mr. Beecher, but it appeared it was not.

Judge Neilson—There were some alterations made in it.

Mr. Fullerton—And hence I now produce that one prepared by Mr. Beecher.

Mr. Evarts—Not a bit of it. That is what was in The Eagle, just as what you read was from The Eagle.

Mr. Fullerton—And you called for the original of the Beecher article, and I have produced that.

Mr. Evarts—No, you are mistaken in thinking this original paper you have brought here has anything to do with that.

Judge Neilson—We understand that.

Mr. Fullerton—I will forgive my friend on the other side, and we won't go any further with that. I offer now in evidence the article as published in The Brooklyn Eagle.

Mr. Evarts—That we object to. It has been ruled out once.

Judge Neilson—Mr. Fullerton, how do you connect Mr. Beecher with it?

Mr. Fullerton—I think it is in evidence already.

Judge Neilson—Does not that card commence with reference to the fact that The Eagle had not been in accord with Mr. Beecher?

Mr. Fullerton—Yes, Sir.

Judge Neilson—That is the one you read.

Mr. Beach—It was partly read, I recollect, and then objected to on the ground that it had been altered after preparation by Mr. Beecher. It was then withdrawn, and the original, as prepared by Mr. Beecher, was read.

Judge Neilson, to Mr. Beach—You think, then, it was not all read.

Mr. Beach—It was not all read, as I recollect the course of the evidence, and now we propose this as it was published and afterward submitted to Mr. Beecher on his return from a temporary absence, and adopted by him.

Mr. Evarts—That may be, and that is new evidence.

Judge Neilson—Very well, we will take it in that view.

Mr. Evarts—He has not said that yet.

Judge Neilson—We will come to that.

Mr. Fullerton, [Beginning to read]—"To the Editor of the Brooklyn Eagle—

Mr. Evarts—We don't understand that this is material.

Judge Neilson—Counsel suggests he will connect Mr. Beecher with it.

Mr. Fullerton—He has already connected him with it, but I will do it over again.

Q. What did Mr. Beecher say to you in reference to the article published in The Brooklyn Eagle? A. He thanked me for it.

Mr. Beach—He said that before.

Mr. Fullerton—He said that emphatically and distinctly.

Judge Neilson—This article? A. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Fullerton—[Reading.]

To the Editor of the Brooklyn Eagle:

In a long and active life, it has rarely happened that The Eagle and myself have been in accord on questions of common concern to our fellow-citizens. I am, for this reason, impelled to acknowledge the unsolicited confidence and regard of which the columns of The Eagle of late bear testimony. I have just returned to the city to learn that application has been made to Mrs. Victoria Woodhull for letters of mine supposed to contain information respecting certain infamous stories against me. I have no objection to have The Eagle state, in any way it deems fit, that Mrs. Woodhull, or any other person or persons who may have letters of mine in their possession, have my cordial consent to publish them. In this connection, and at this time, I will only add that the stories and rumors which have for some time past been circulated about me are grossly untrue, and I stamp them in general and in particular as utterly false.

Respectfully,

HENRY WARD BEECHER

[Paper marked "Exhibit No. 55."]

Q. In one part of your testimony you speak of a statement read to Mr. Beecher and used this observation: "I will read one clause from it, and if you can stand that you can stand the whole of it, or any part of it," or words to that effect. You stated it referred to a letter of Mrs. Tilton, or a statement of Mrs. Tilton to Dr. Storrs. [Handing paper to witness.] Look at the paper which I now show you, and say whether that is the paper to which you referred? [To Judge Neilson.] The presentation of this paper was deferred, because it was not present at the time. As I stated to your Honor, we have been a little embarrassed by the unfortunate and serious illness of Judge Morris.

The Witness—Yes, Sir, that is the letter.

Mr. Evarts—If your Honor please, we can look at this paper during the recess.

Judge Neilson—Yes, Sir. [To the jury.] Gentlemen, you can retire, and please be in your seats at 2 o'clock.

MRS. TILTON'S TRUE STORY.

The day's session was resumed at 2 p.m., pursuant to adjournment.

Mr. Fullerton—I now offer in evidence the paper which was shown the witness before the recess.

Mr. Evarts—What has he testified to about that?

Mr. Fullerton—He referred to it, and I called his attention to that reference and asked if this was the paper to which he made that reference.

Mr. Evarts—This is a paper concerning which all that appears from its face is that under the date of December 16, 1873—or the 15th; I don't know which it is—it is signed by Mrs. Tilton and is, I suppose, in her handwriting, isn't it?

Mr. Fullerton—Yes.

Mr. Evarts—It is not addressed to any person, and I do not understand any present state of the testimony that connects it with Mr. Beecher. I may perhaps be inadvertent to something that has been said by this witness, but nothing has been presently said on the subject.

Judge Neilson—What is your view about it, Mr. Fullerton?

Mr. Fullerton—In one stage of Mr. Moulton's testimony, he related an interview between himself and Mr. Beecher and Mr. Tilton, when Mr. Tilton read to him a statement, or a part of a statement, that he proposed to make, saying, "I will read you one extract from it, and if you can stand that you can stand the whole." And I think the language was made use of as having been quoted from the statement of Mrs. Tilton, made to Dr. Storrs, and my friend upon the other side called for that statement because a quotation was made from it. I now produce the original statement from which the language was borrowed, namely, the statement of Mrs. Tilton to Dr. Storrs, or which was used in that conversation with Dr. Storrs.

Judge Neilson—I do not think that is sufficient.

Mr. Evarts—Your Honor, we will consider upon it. [To Mr. Fullerton.] Can you turn to that part of the evidence?

Mr. Fullerton—I could not now. I will ask the witness, then, a further question.

Mr. Evarts—Your Honor will remember, as my learned friend has stated, that there was a long statement—what has sometimes been called the "true story"—which it was said was read to Mr. Beecher.

Judge Neilson—And it was finally allowed to be given as a conversation.

Mr. Evarts—Yes, Sir; your Honor finally allowed a certain passage out of it. The paper we did not have here, you remember.

Judge Neilson—No.

Mr. Evarts—A certain passage out of it was permitted to be given in evidence.

Judge Neilson—As a conversation merely.

Mr. Evarts—As a conversation.

Judge Neilson—I said to Mr. Fullerton, I do not think that draws his letter in. If you adhere to your objection, I will rule it out.

Mr. Evarts—Yes, I am going to see how we stand.

Mr. Fullerton—It is ruled out.

Mr. Evarts—No; it is not ruled out.

Judge Neilson—I say, if he stands upon the objection I will rule it out.

Mr. Evarts—And I have asked, for the sake of information, what he stated in the evidence. [Referring to the stenographer's minutes.] Mr. Fullerton says, after the discussion between us, "Go on and state the communication. What did Mr. Tilton say to Mr. Beecher upon that occasion? A. Mr. Tilton said to Mr. Beecher, 'Mr. Beecher, there is one thing in this statement, which, if you can stand, you can stand any part of it. Elizabeth has stated that you solicited her to become a wife to you, together with all that that implies, and I will read to you that part of the statement.'"

And he did read to Mr. Beecher that part of the statement. Now, where does this letter come in, to that?

Mr. Morris—That is from this statement.

Mr. Evarts—Where is the witness' statement that it is from this?

Mr. Fullerton—I don't know where it is. I know it is there somewhere.

Mr. Evarts—I don't see it.

Mr. Fullerton—I will withdraw it then; it takes so much time.

Mr. Evarts—No, if your Honor please. You will hear what I have to say about it.

Mr. Fullerton—I withdraw it.

Mr. Evarts—Well, you don't withdraw it on my objection unless you hear what I have to say.

Mr. Fullerton—I withdraw it on your objection, and on the delay which follows it.

Mr. Evarts—My delay is my own affair.

Mr. Fullerton—And partly mine.

Mr. Evarts—Now, if your Honor please—

Mr. Beach—What is the gentlemen speaking to? We have withdrawn the offer.

Mr. Evarts—Perhaps I shall speak to that.

Mr. Beach—To our withdrawal of the offer?

Mr. Evarts—Yes, Sir. Now, if your Honor please, the counsel has informed us that there was some connection of this paper with what was legitimately in evidence, and that that connection was found in the examination of this witness concerning the "true story" that was read, and that it was stated that the passage in the "true story" which was called to Mr. Beecher's notice and concerning which he was told if he could stand that he could stand anything that there was in the proposed publication—that that passage was an extract from this letter. That is the statement as you make it.

Mr. Beach—Oh! no.

Mr. Fullerton—And which you deny.

Mr. Evarts—Now, if that be so in the evidence, then the paper may be admissible. I have turned to this passage of the examination of the witness, and I do not find anything of the kind.

Judge Neilson—I do not recollect any statement referring to this letter in that conversation.

Mr. Evarts—Now, of course the counsel has a right to withdraw the paper entirely.

Mr. Beach—There is a slight mistake in the statement of the counsel which I think should be corrected. Your Honor did not permit any part of that statement to be read, merely ruling that the witness could state the conversation that occurred between him and Mr. Beecher without reference to the statement. You ruled it all out.

Judge Neilson—I do not recollect that this letter was referred to in that connection. You will withdraw it, then, for the present.

Mr. Fullerton—We withdraw it, yes, Sir, on the objection being made upon the other side.

Mr. Evarts—No.

Mr. Fullerton—I know my reason for withdrawing it better than you do, and that is because you object and spend a good deal of time about it. Now, do you withdraw your objection to this paper?

Mr. Evarts—I do.

Mr. Fullerton—Then we will consider whether we put it in; and having another paper in the hands of the witness I will go on with the testimony upon that point.

Q. What paper have you in your hand now? A. A letter from Mr. Beecher, Sir.

Q. Addressed to whom? A. To me.

Q. Was it received by you? A. It was; yes, Sir.

Q. About the time of its date? A. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Fullerton—I offer it in evidence. It is one of those letters, Sir, which was mislaid and was not put in in its proper order. Shall I read it, Mr. Evarts?

Mr. Evarts—I think so.

Mr. Fullerton (reading)—

MY DEAR FRIEND: I sent on Friday or Saturday the portrait of Titian to the store for you. I hope it may suit you.

I have been doing ten men's work this Winter—partly to make up lost time, partly because I live under a cloud, feeling every month that I may be doing my last work, and anxious to make the most of it. When Esau sold his birthright he found "no place for repentance, though he sought it carefully with tears." But I have one abiding comfort. I have known you, and found in you one who has given a new meaning to friendship. As soon as warm days come I want you to go to Peekskill with me.

I am off in an hour for Massachusetts, to be gone all the week.

I am urging forward my second volume of "Life of Christ," for "the night cometh when no man can work."

With much affection and admiration, yours truly,
March 25, 1872, Monday morning. H. W. B.

[Marked "Exhibit No. 56."]

Mr. Fullerton—The objection being withdrawn to this paper, which I offered a moment since, I now read the paper in evidence. [Reading.]

DECEMBER 16, 1872.

In July, 1870, prompted by my duty, I informed my husband that H. W. Beecher, my friend and pastor, had solicited me to be a wife to him, together with all that this implied. Six months afterward my husband felt impelled by the circumstances of a conspiracy against him, in which Mrs. Beecher had taken part, to have an interview with Mr. Beecher.

In order that Mr. B. might know exactly what I had said to my husband, I wrote a brief statement (I have forgotten in what form) which my husband showed to Mr. Beecher. Late the same evening Mr. B. came to me (lying very sick at that time) and filled me with distress, saying I had ruined him, and wanting to know if I meant to appear against him. This I certainly did not mean to do, and the thought was agonizing to me. I then signed a paper which he wrote, to clear him in case of a trial. In this instance, as in most others, when absorbed by one great interest or feeling, the harmony of my mind is entirely disturbed, and I found on reflection that this paper was so drawn as to place me most unjustly against my husband, and on the side of Mr. Beecher. So, in order to repair so cruel a blow to my long-suffering husband, I wrote an explanation of the first paper and my signature. Mr. Moulton procured from Mr. B. the statement which I gave to him in my agitation and excitement, and now holds it.

This ends my connection with the case.

ELIZABETH R. TILTON.

P. S.—This statement is made at the request of Mr. Carpenter, that it may be shown confidentially to Dr. Storrs and other friends with whom my husband and I am consulting.

[Marked "Exhibit No. 57."]

Mr. Beach—Is there any date to it?

Mr. Fullerton—Yes; I gave the date.

Mr. Beach—What was it?

Mr. Fullerton—Dec. 16, 1872.

Mr. Shearman—You give it as Dec. 16?

Mr. Fullerton—Yes, Sir; it is so printed.

Mr. Evarts—I ask your Honor's and the Jury's attention to the change of date there.

Mr. Shearman—It was originally written "15th," but is altered to "16th."

Mr. Evarts—It is a question of the inspection of the paper.

Mr. Fullerton—I may say, with as much propriety, that it was written the 15th, and remains the 15th still.

Mr. Evarts—Which way do you put it?

Mr. Fullerton—I don't put it any way.

Mr. Evarts—Then the paper will speak for itself, if you don't speak for it.

Mr. Fullerton—I don't speak for it.

Mr. Evarts—I suppose the paper will speak for itself.

Mr. Fullerton—Then you should not say anything more about it.

Mr. Evarts—Well, we want to understand it.

Mr. Fullerton—Well, if you think there is a point there, you are entitled to all the advantage of it. I don't see, myself, that it makes any difference whether it is the 15th or 16th. It looks like either.

Mr. Evarts—Well, we will see.

Mr. Fullerton—Commencing on Dec. 26, 1870, and ending with the investigation before the Committee of Plymouth Church, how frequently did Mr. Beecher, as near as you can now state, visit you at your house? A. Very many times, Sir; he was the most frequent visitor with the exception of my partner, who came every morning to the house.

Q. Well, give the jury some idea of the frequency of his visits when he was in the city? A. In the first part of 1871 he was at my house about every day, Sir, and sometimes twice a day; and after I returned from the South, March 2, he came there frequently when he was in town; it is very hard for me to express how frequently; sometimes once a day and sometimes twice a day, and in 1872 the same.

Q. And at what hours during the day? A. No particular hours; he would come in the morning and come in the evening, and come on Sundays.

Q. How early in the morning? A. He would come sometimes before I was out of bed, Sir.

Q. And how late at night? A. After his Sunday service, and very late during the evenings of the week.

Q. At how late an hour in the evening have you known him to call? A. I have known him to come after church service, between 9 and 10 o'clock.

Q. If he visited you at your place of business in New-York, state the fact? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. How frequently did he visit you there? A. Not very frequently, Sir; he was not a regular visitor at the office; he would come when an emergency demanded it; as, for instance, during the sessions of the Council, he came to see me after the Storrs speech.

Q. When did his visits cease, either at the house or store? A. I think, Sir, that he did not come to my house after the 18th of July, 1874; I think that was the last date.

MOULTON OFFERS AN EXPLANATION.

Q. You called my attention during the recess to a correction that you wanted to make in your testimony; you are at liberty to do that now. A. Yes, Sir; it is with regard to the West charges; I seem to have confused the letter of Mr. West of June 25 with the charges that Theodore Tilton brought to my house in the Fall; I don't know that it amounts to very much, yet I thought it best to correct it; I say that I talked with Mr. Beecher about the charges of West; it was about the letter of West of June 25.

Q. The one that has been put in evidence to-day? A. Yee, Sir.

Q. And what was it that he wanted to go over until after vacation? A. The investigation that West had notified him of.

Q. And when did you see the charges? A. In the Fall, I believe.

Q. The Fall subsequent to this letter of the 25th of June? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. And it was then in the Fall that you called Mr. Beecher's attention to the charges? A. Yes, Sir; I had a conversation with him about the charges. I didn't show him that paper.

Mr. Fullerton—If your Honor please, that closes the direct examination of Mr. Moulton, but at the same time I desire to say to your Honor that in the great number of exhibits that we have been compelled to handle, and the great number of subjects to which we have been compelled to call the attention of the witness, we may have omitted something, and I wish it understood now that there is nothing reserved upon our part at all intentionally, and if anything is omitted it is entirely unintentional.

Judge Neilson—If it appears to be inadvertent you will be able to correct it.

Mr. Evarts—I now ask you to produce the original of the paper that we asked from you which was read from Mr. Morris's notes, as I remember.

Mr. Fullerton—If you will indicate what that is.

Mr. Evarts—The proposed card by Mr. Tilton, which embodied some part of what is called by your witness a letter of contrition. We allowed you to read from Mr. Morris's copy that he has made for the purpose of his opening, I suppose.

Mr. Fullerton—I read the original of that letter.

Mr. Evarts—No, you didn't.

Mr. Fullerton—I did, certainly.

Mr. Evarts—We understand—the card.

Mr. Fullerton—If you will turn to the testimony.

Mr. Evarts—We all remember perfectly about it. Mr. Morris handed over some paper that was in his hand, writing, and I said, "To save time we will let you read that, you undertaking to bring the original." We have asked for it three times.

Mr. Fullerton—Well, you are certainly entitled to it, if that is the condition of things, and shall have it.

Mr. Evarts—As you are now resting, of course we want it.

Mr. Fullerton—There is the paper you called for [handing a paper to Mr. Evarts].

Q. Mr. Moulton, look at that paper which is now shown you, and say whether it is the original proposed card of Mr. Tilton to be published in The Brooklyn Eagle [handing witness the paper]? A. Yes, Sir; I have seen this before on the stand; yes, that is it.

Judge Neilson—Has it been marked?

Mr. Evarts—The substitute was marked.

Mr. Morris—It is "Exhibit 25."

Mr. Evarts—The witness states that this is Mr. Tilton's handwriting.

Mr. Morris—That is Mr. Tilton's handwriting? Yes Sir.

Mr. Evarts—This is to be substituted for that.

[The paper now produced is marked "Exhibit No. 25," in place of the copy heretofore marked "Exhibit No. 25."]

Mr. Evarts—Now, I ask your Honor's attention to this correction that the witness has made. Certain papers were produced, to wit, a summons and a copy of the proposed charges or actual charges made by Mr. West and the witness testified to a conversation which he had with Mr. Beecher concerning those charges as there set down, and that one part of the conversation—no matter for any of the rest of it for the purpose, at present—is that Mr. Beecher wanted the consideration of them postponed until after the vacation. Well, now, upon his correction, there was no such paper in existence before the vacation, and there was therefore no conversation between him and Mr. Beecher about that paper as of the date which he has given for it; and if the correction that he makes is allowed, takes place—of course it is allowable for the witness to correct himself—why, all the evidence on the subject of a conversation concerning those papers with Mr. Beecher, on which alone the making them evidence was permissible, falls through. Now, whether my learned friend is able or expects to recall the matter as evidence by conversations concerning them at a later date I do not know; it is for him and his witness between them to determine; but at present the correction, as it seems to me, strikes out all the evidence concerning a supposed conversation with Mr. Beecher regarding those papers.

Judge Neilson—And applies it to the letter.

Mr. Evarts—That is for him to say, whether he applies it.

Mr. Beach—He has said it.

Mr. Evarts—Well, but the letter does not contain the charges. How can he talk about it? It is not in existence.

Mr. Fullerton—It certainly must relieve the embarrassment of the witness, having fallen into such an error, when he finds that the learned counsel have fallen into a still greater one about a very recent transaction, because he misapprehends the testimony as originally given as well as the correction now made. The correction is this, that in speaking of the West charges, he spoke of them as having been sent to him at about the same time, whereas he says now the letter of Mr. West addressed to Mr. Beecher, saying that he was going to make charges, was the first one that was sent to him, and that it was with reference to it, and to it alone, that he had the conversation with Mr. Beecher in the first instance, when Mr. Beecher wished the examination which was then threatened to go over until after the vacation—until the Autumn. Now, so far as the conversation which he related as having taken place in the Summer, it relates to that paper, the witness says, and not to the charges.

Judge Neilson—So I understand now.

Mr. Fullerton—And that the charges came the following Autumn, and that he then showed them to Mr. Beecher, and that the conversation which refers to the charges did not take place then, but took place in the Autumn.

Mr. Evarts—That is what he has not said.

Mr. Fullerton—Yes, he has said just that.

Mr. Evarts—That is, I think, what he may say some time or other, but he has not said it yet. Your Honor will see what the examination was. [Reading from the testimony of Jan. 15]

Mr. Evarts—Well, what occurred, if you please? A. Mr. Tilton brought around to my house the charges of Mr. West about that time.

Mr. Fullerton—Look at the paper now shown you, and say whether it contains the charges thus produced to you by Mr. Tilton.

Mr. Evarts—Does he name that as the paper that was produced?

Mr. Fullerton—I say that.

Mr. Evarts—I assume you are going to correct it.

Mr. Fullerton—Oh! certainly.

The Witness—Yes, Sir; that is the paper.

To the Court—He had an actual paper.

Q. State whether you showed those charges to Mr. Beecher? A. I don't remember that I did.

Q. How? A. I don't remember that I showed them to Mr. Beecher.

Q. Did you have any conversation with him in regard to it? A. Yes, Sir, I had conversation with him in regard to it.

Q. What was that conversation? A. He said that the whole matter had better go over until Fall, and in the mean time during the vacation I thought we could get along with that subject—try to find a way. I told him I should recommend—

Mr. Evarts—I understand that this is one of the papers that Mr. Tilton brought you; these very papers? A. Those are the papers—that is, as I remember.

Q. You showed them to Mr. Beecher? A. I don't know that I showed them to him. No, Sir.

Q. But you spoke to him about the paper Mr. Tilton had brought you? A. I spoke to him about Mr. West's charges.

Mr. Fullerton—Did you state to him the substance of the charges? A. Yes, Sir; I told him I had a full conversation with Mr. Beecher about it.

Mr. Evarts—They don't seem to have been shown to Mr. Beecher?

Mr. Fullerton—Did you state the substance of the charges to Mr. Beecher? A. Yes, Sir; I did, certainly; I have answered that.

Q. And what was said by him in reply? A. Why, he hoped that he would be able to find a way to get over that matter during the Summer.

Q. And what was proposed? A. I proposed that Mr. Tilton should—or I said that Mr. Tilton proposed to me that he should—write a letter saying that he declined, on the ground of non-membership.

Mr. Evarts—Now, I am not objecting to the witness correcting a statement that is made, the correction being that there never was any such conversation concerning Mr. West's charges as brought to him by Mr. Tilton.

Mr. Beach—That is not his correction.

Mr. Evarts—At that time.

Judge Neilson—At that time.

Mr. Evarts—Therefore I say what you have got here goes out.

Mr. Fullerton—No, No.

Mr. Evarts—Well, that is my statement—it goes out. If you admit that a conversation concerning the charges, which were concerning a paper which is presently before them, brought by Mr. Tilton, now that there was no such paper before them, that no such paper was brought by Mr. Tilton, and that instead of that there is a letter, not containing the charges, but a letter written by Mr.

West to Mr. Beecher, which Mr. Beecher brought to Mr. Moulton, now how are you going to put those two conversations together? You may take the witness up and examine him as to what occurred when Mr. Beecher brought that letter, and you may take him up and examine him as to what occurred in the Fall when the charges were brought—if Mr. Beecher was present, for it does not appear—but we cannot have a substitution of this testimony as it stands, as being in evidence that has been given by this witness in regard either to the letter of West to Beecher in the early Summer—because it does not profess to be—nor in regard to the charges of West in the Fall, because he has testified that he had no such conversation in the Fall.

Judge Neilson—I think this misapprehension had better be cleared up, Mr. Fullerton.

Mr. Fullerton—I will, to gratify the counsel upon the other side, and solely for that purpose.

Q. Now, state what occurred between you before the Summer vacation, in regard to anything with which Mr. West was connected. A. I received the letter of June the 25th, from Mr. West to Mr. Beecher, from Mr. Beecher, and we talked about those charges, and he wanted it to go over the Summer vacation—he wanted that matter to go over the Summer vacation.

Mr. Evarts—What was said we are entitled to.

Mr. Fullerton—Yes; what was said? A. Mr. Beecher said that he hoped the matter could go over the Summer vacation, and that then we could find a way to deal with it; I saw him in the Fall.

Judge Neilson—That was with reference to the letter? A. Yes, Sir, with reference to the letter of June 25.

Mr. Fullerton—The letter threatening the charges? A. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Evarts—Well, the letter.

Q. And did you approve of this—having it go over till Fall? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. What occurred then in the Fall with reference to the charges, when they came? A. In the Fall, the charges of Mr. West were made and the paper that I have seen here in court was brought to me by Mr. Tilton, and I saw Mr. Beecher and Mr. Tilton together, and it was decided what should be the reply; and Mr. Tilton said to Mr. Beecher, "I will claim my non-membership and thus will prevent my being cited before the church." And he did write a letter and send it to Mr. Tallmadge, I think—if I am correct about that—and then Mr. Beecher said to him, in my presence, afterwards, "Theodore, God inspired you to write that letter."

Q. Now, in this conversation that you have last spoken of between yourself, Mr. Beecher and Mr. Tilton, state whether the West charges were then and there present? A. I don't remember that they were.

Q. They were the subject, however, of the conversation? A. They were the subject of the conversation. I think that Mr. Tilton had them in his possession there; I think so; I did not have them in my possession.

Q. Were they taken out and exhibited, do you remember? A. Mr. Tilton had them in his possession. I don't remember whether he exhibited them or not. My impression is that he did—I could not swear that he did. They were the subject of conversation, however.

Mr. Evarts—Those West charges, as they now stand on the evidence, are not entitled to be read. We ask that they be struck out. The foundation upon which he rested them as evidence has disappeared.

Judge Neilson—He said before that he could not say that Mr. Beecher saw them.

Mr. Evarts—Well, but he said that he had them there and that he stated them to him. I submit to your Honor that that exhibit must be struck out as not supported by any evidence.

Judge Neilson—I will look at the evidence as it stands. If it is not supported, it will be struck out.

Mr. Evarts—Your Honor understands our point.

Judge Neilson—Yes, Sir; I cannot recall it all now.

Mr. Evarts—No, we will not interrupt your Honor at present. We make the point, and if your Honor rules against us we shall except.

Judge Neilson—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Beach—My friend has read from the previous testimony of Mr. Moulton that at some time Mr. Moulton stated those West charges to Mr. Beecher.

Mr. Evarts—Yes, Sir, in the Summer, which happened to be some months before they were in existence.

Judge Neilson—But that same evidence now applies to a later interview.

Mr. Morris—He corrects it.

Mr. Evarts—He corrects it. When he is asked whether the charges were there or exhibited or produced, he does not know.

Mr. Fullerton—I will ask him about it.

Mr. Evarts—He cannot know any better now—better than he knew three months ago.

Mr. Fullerton—What was said in regard to the West charges at this interview between yourself, Mr. Beecher, and Mr. Tilton? Let us have it again. A. Mr. Tilton said he was going to plead his non-membership of the church, and therefore could not be cited down—to prevent his being cited before the church for trial.

Judge Neilson—He asked you what was said about the charges.

Mr. Beach—The question put to you is whether anything was said to you there, and if so, what, in regard to the nature or character of the West charges.

Mr. Evarts—Yes, that is the question put now; it has not been before.

Mr. Fullerton—Yes, it was before—the previous question.

Mr. Evarts—Well!

Mr. Beach—We propose to put it again.

Mr. Evarts—That could never happen—that conversation.

Mr. Fullerton—It did happen. It did not happen in the Summer.

Judge Neilson—One at a time.

The Witness—What is the question?

Mr. Fullerton—What was said in the conversation between yourself, Mr. Beecher, and Mr. Tilton in regard to the West charges against Mr. Beecher?

Mr. Beach—The nature of them.

Mr. Evarts—That is a leading question. This witness has made three answers that he don't remember. He has been asked three times what was said, and the answer was that Tilton would write a card declining.

Mr. Beach—Now, the witness should not be put in a false position. I think the witness has been misled by the form of the question that was put to him concerning what was said on the subject of the West charges. Now, I propose to have the question put to him, what if anything was there said in regard to the nature or character of the West charges?

Judge Neilson—In the Fall?

Mr. Beach—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Fullerton—State, Mr. Moulton, if you please! A. In regard to the nature or character of the West charges?

Q. Yes.

Judge Neilson—After they had been put in.

Mr. Evarts—After what?

Judge Neilson—After they had been put in.

Mr. Evarts—They were not put in. After they had been sent in to the church, your Honor.

Judge Neilson—That is what I mean, of course.

Mr. Fullerton—And after they had been served upon Mr. Beecher.

The Witness—There was nothing that I remember at this conversation except the fact that Mr. West had made his charges at the church, and Mr. Beecher was at the house and consulted with Mr. Tilton and myself in regard to what the answer should be to those charges.

By Judge Neilson—Was anything said as to what those charges of Mr. West were? A. We all seemed to know. There wasn't any discussion.

Judge Neilson—Well, that answers the question then.

Mr. Evarts—I think this ends the matter.

Mr. Beach—We will see.

Mr. Fullerton—You are very anxious to have it ended, but it will not be ended until it is done.

Mr. Evarts—Well, we will see.

Mr. Fullerton—Well, just wait and we will see. [To the witness.] On your former testimony—the former examination—I understood you to say that in that interview at your house between Mr. Beecher, Mr. Tilton and yourself you stated the nature and character of the West charges?

Mr. Evarts—That I object to. There is no such thing in the evidence.

Mr. Fullerton—There is such a thing in the evidence.

Mr. Evarts—That is in the Summer, and the West charges had not been made then.

Mr. Fullerton—I don't care when it was that the conversation took place, and if the witness has made a mistake in saying that it took place in the Summer rather than in the Fall, I do not mean to be deprived of the benefit of that testimony.

Mr. Evarts—That I agree to. Now prove what took place in the Fall. Don't endeavor to call him to an exploded conversation in the Summer as evidence that he has given about what took place in the Fall.

Mr. Fullerton—Well, he didn't explode as frequently as you do, to no effect.

Judge Neilson—Put your question.

Mr. Fullerton—I say, if the conversation took place, it is immaterial when it took place. It was with reference to the charges, and of course—

Mr. Evarts—We will discuss this at some other time.

Mr. Fullerton—You are discussing it now.

Mr. Evarts—I am not.

Mr. Fullerton—You are trying to.

Judge Neilson—Be as quiet as you can, gentlemen. You interrupt the order.

Mr. Fullerton—Now I will read this over again, [reading from testimony of Jan. 15].

Q. You showed them to Mr. Beecher? A. A. I don't know that I showed them to him; no, Sir.

Q. But you spoke to him about the paper Mr. Tilton had brought you? A. I spoke to him about Mr. West's charges.

Q. Did you state to him the substance of the charges? A. Yes, Sir; I told him I had a full conversation with Mr. Beecher about it.

That is what I referred to.

Mr. Evarts—That is before the charges were made.

Mr. Fullerton—[Reading]—

Mr. Evarts—They don't seem to have been shown to Mr. Beecher

Mr. Fullerton—Did you state the substance of the charge to Mr. Beecher? A. Yes, Sir; I did, certainly; I have answered that.

Mr. Evarts—Now—

Mr. Fullerton—One moment! I have a question to put, and then you may object if you please. [To the witness.] I call your attention to that part of the evidence in this case, and ask you now whether in the Fall after the charges were made you had this conversation which I have just read?

Mr. Evarts—That I object to. That is entirely a leading question. He asks this witness whether he had in the Fall a conversation that he testified that he had in the Spring, and which he never did have in the Spring. Now we will get what the Fall conversation was, but not in that method.

Judge Neilson—The counsel should ask him what the Fall conversation was. Ask him what was said to Mr. Beecher in regard to the West charges, or, if anything, in regard to their contents and terms.

Mr. Fullerton—Now, will you state what conversation you had with Mr. Beecher in the presence of Mr. Tilton in the Fall, with reference to the West charges? A. Yes, Sir; Mr. Beecher was at the house with Mr. Tilton, and Mr. Tilton said to Mr. Beecher, "I shall plead non-membership with reference to these charges of Mr. West, so that I shall not be cited—so that I cannot be cited before the church"—or words to that effect; that is the substance of it; and Mr. Beecher thought that that was the proper course for him to pursue, and said that he would like to have him pursue that course; that was the substance of what Mr. Beecher said. And Mr. Tilton did write a letter to the church; and Mr. Beecher subsequently met Mr. Tilton and myself, and said, "Theodore, God inspired you to write that letter."

Q. Now, is that all that you remember? A. That is all that I remember.

Q. At any time when Mr. Beecher was present, was the nature of these charges—the character of these charges—discussed and mentioned? A. Mr. Beecher said to me, on one occasion—let me see; I think it was in the Fall—I told Mr. Beecher that Mr. Tilton had come to me and said to me that Mr. West seemed to him more friendly disposed toward him (Mr. Tilton) in the Fall than he had been; and that he had been to see Mr. Tilton with reference to coming down to the church and testifying—testifying on that subject; and I said to Mr. Beecher, "I do not like it; it seems to me that with reference to his charges against you, his undertaking, nominally, to defend you is but really to ruin you." Mr. Beecher said he thought so too. That is the only conversation that I remember in reference to the church.

Q. Did you ever hear of but one set of charges made by Mr. West? A. No; I never heard of but one set of charges. I remember the conversation that I have detailed to you specifically.

Mr. Evarts—Your Honor reserves your decision upon my motion to strike out?

Judge Nelson—Yes, Sir; I will look at the evidence. Now, will the audience be as quiet as possible?

MR. PORTER BEGINS THE CROSS-EXAMINATION.

Mr. Moulton cross-examined by John K. Porter:

Q. What is your age? A. Thirty-eight; I was thirty-eight years of age last July—the 11th.

Q. You mentioned that you were a member of the firm of Woodruff & Robinson? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. What is the business of that firm? A. The business of that firm, Sir, is—was, when I was a member of the concern, in both of its branches, a merchandise and storage business. I am a member of the concern of Woodruff & Robinson, now, in the merchandise business.

Q. You were a general partner? A. I was a general partner in the concern in the storage and merchandise business.

Q. When did you cease to be a general partner? A. I ceased to be a general partner, Sir, on the 1st day of January, if by general partner you mean in the merchandise and storage business; yes, Sir.

Q. What is your present partnership—one of definite or indefinite duration? A. Well, Sir, so far as I know, it is of indefinite duration; it is not a limited partnership.

Q. The time of its termination is not fixed? A. The time of its termination is not fixed; it has been talked about, Sir.

Q. And is still undetermined? A. And it is still undetermined.

Q. Mr. Tilton, I observe, takes frequent occasion to speak of you as the mutual friend of himself and Mr. Beecher. That was the relation you occupied, was n't it? A. I was a friend of Mr. Tilton's and a friend of Mr. Beecher's.

Q. At what era did your friendship to Mr. Beecher have its inception? A. Well, Sir, about Dec. 30, an intimate personal friendship, 18—not an intimate personal friendship before Dec. 30, 1870, Sir.

Q. It had its termination at the time you refused to furnish him with copies of his own papers in your hands? A. No, Sir; I think not.

Q. How long after that did it continue? A. Can you give me the date, Sir, of the communication that he addressed to me? He addressed to me a communication, if I remember—perhaps I can state it to you from memory.

Mr. Beach—I think that question improperly assumes, Sir, that Mr. Moulton declined to furnish him with copies of papers. There is no such evidence, as yet.

Mr. Porter—You did decline to furnish him with copies of papers? A. I did not decline to furnish him with copies of papers.

Q. Did you decline to furnish him access to papers? A. By advice of counsel, Sir, I wrote a note to Mr. Beecher relative—in answer to a letter brought to me by Mr. Benjamin F. Tracy, at my office, Sir.

Q. You do not understand that you ever did deny to Mr. Beecher access to his papers in your hands? A. To his papers in my hands? No, Sir; I do not understand that I ever denied him access to his papers in my hands.

Q. You are not aware that he desired to obtain access to them? A. I am aware that he desired to have me furnish, if I remember correctly, Sir, the phraseology of his note; I am aware that he desired to have me furnish him—the letter will state, if you will allow me to look at it, Sir. Perhaps you know it yourself.

Mr. Porter—Well, you have the letter.

Mr. Beach—It is printed.

Mr. Evarts—Well, it is the letter to Mr. Moulton that we want.

The Witness—There was a letter brought by Mr. Tracy to me.

Mr. Evarts—You have got it, have 'nt you? A. I have not—I do not—it may be among the papers here, Sir; I think it was dated July 24, if I remember correctly.

Mr. Evarts—If we want that letter you will have to find it, I suppose. We want the original.

Mr. Beach—He can refresh his recollection by looking at the copy, if he wants. [Book handed to witness.]

Mr. Porter—Have you the original letter addressed to you on the 24th of July, '74? A. I really do not know, Sir, whether I have or not; if I have I will produce it; I do not know whether I have or not.

Q. You were subpoenaed to produce that among other papers, were you not? A. Yes, Sir; I have a subpoena to produce papers; I shall produce them—all, Sir, that I have; I judge that I must have it; it is marked here "D."

Q. Paper marked "L," is 'nt it? A. "L;" you are correct, Sir, marked "L." Now, the reply to that letter, Sir, was made by my counsel, as I stated to you; and if you will allow me to look at that I will see whether—[Book handed back to witness.]

Q. Just identify this letter first; do you identify that letter? A. Yes, Sir; I think this is the letter.

Mr. Porter—I will read it as printed now, and will subsequently introduce the other when it is produced.

Judge Neilson—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Porter—[Reading.]—

JULY 24, 1874.

MY DEAR MR. MOULTON: I am making out a statement and I need the letters and papers in your hands. Will you send me by Tracy all the originals of my papers? Let them be numbered and an inventory taken, and I will return them to you as soon as I can see and compare, get dates, make extracts or copies, as the case may be.

Will you also send me Bowen's "Heads of Difficulty," and all letters of my sister, if any are with you?

I heard you were sick—are you about again? God grant you to see peaceful times. Yours gratefully,

F. D. MOULTON.

H. W. BEECHER.

Q. When that letter was presented what reply did you make to Mr. Tracy? A. I think I told him I was going out of town that evening.

Q. Was that all? A. Well, it is about all that I distinctly remember.

Q. Perhaps by reading what immediately follows that letter you may be able to refresh your recollection. A. I said to Mr. Tracy that he had better take—

Q. No, no, not aloud; you can refresh your recollection? A. I think I said something of that sort to him.

Q. Something of what sort? A. That I could not honorably give Mr. Beecher documents for conflict when I had not given them to Mr. Tilton.

Q. Did Mr. Tracy request you to give copies? A. He wrote a letter to me, Sir, asking me to give copies, and put the letter in his pocket—would not give that to me; he put it in his pocket and took it away with him, Sir; I recollect that.

Q. Be kind enough to refresh your recollection by looking again at the paper you have in your hand? A. "I suggested that perhaps—"

Q. No, you need not read, except for your own information? A. He said something about copies, Sir.

Q. He did? A. Yes, Sir; and he wrote a letter.

Q. One moment. A. Pardon me, Sir.

Q. Did he ask for copies? A. He said to me that Mr. Cunningham, a friend of both parties, might be trusted to make copies, and I said I didn't think that I could furnish copies any more than I could furnish the originals; that I was going away, and I did go away, Sir.

Q. Before going away, suppose we finish the conversation—will you look once more? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Did you state to Mr. Tracy that it would seem to you the same breach of honorable obligation as to send the originals? A. I think I said something of that sort to him, Sir; I may not have used that phraseology exactly.

Q. You say Gen. Tracy wrote a letter at that time and on that subject? A. Yes.

Q. Did you refuse to receive it? A. I did not refuse to receive it.

Q. He did not offer it? A. I don't remember that he offered it to me, Sir; he put it in his pocket, and I asked him to take the other letter back with it.

Q. Did he read it to you? A. I don't remember that he read it to me.

Q. Did he write it in your presence? A. He wrote it sitting at the desk, Sir.

Q. In your presence? A. I was present in the office when he wrote it; I didn't look over his shoulder to see what he was writing.

Q. He wrote it to you? A. I don't know whether he did or not; I could not swear to that; he wrote a letter and put it in his pocket.

Q. You did not at the time understand that it was a letter to you? A. I had no reason for understanding anything about it.

Q. Why, a few minutes since, did you say he did write you a letter, but didn't deliver it? A. He wrote a letter, Sir; if I said he wrote me a letter I could not know that he wrote me the letter, because I didn't receive a letter from him,

Q. You didn't understand it to be a letter to you? A. Mr. Tracy said, "I will write a letter asking for copies;" and he put that letter in his pocket, and I never saw that letter, nor do I remember that that letter was read to me.

Q. Was the letter from Mr. Beecher a sealed letter? A. I don't remember, Sir, whether it was or not.

Q. When you read the letter of Mr. Beecher, didn't Gen. Tracy say to you that if you would not let him have the originals, copies would serve as well? A. I think Mr. Tracy said copies might serve as well.

Q. You didn't consent to show the original, nor to furnish copies, nor to permit them to be made? A. I didn't deny the original, nor did I deny copies.

Q. And gave neither? A. I gave neither because I was going out of town, Sir.

Q. And consented to give neither? A. And consented at that time to give neither.

Q. And affirmed that you could not honorably give either? A. That I didn't think I could.

Q. When did you next hear from Mr. Beecher on that subject? A. On what subject, Sir. On the subject of producing the document?

Q. Of access to those letters? A. I don't remember the date, Sir, I don't remember.

Q. If you will just look, you will see that there was a letter dated 28th of July. When did you receive that? A. I think, Sir, that I didn't receive that letter until the 4th of August, until my return. I went away.

Q. Were your letters forwarded during your absence? A. My letters were forwarded, Sir, to Narragansett; a messenger, I believe, went with the letter to Narragansett. Some letters came to me at Boston, but this letter Sir, I did not receive.

Q. Until your return? A. I think not, Sir, to the best of my recollection.

Q. You use the phrase "you think not." Do you mean to affirm, as matter of knowledge, that you did not? A. I did not.

Q. You left on what day? A. I think on the 24th; it was the date of this letter, I believe, that I left.

Q. You returned on what day? A. I think Aug. 4, Sir.

Q. On that day did you receive this letter? A. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Porter—I will read that. I don't know whether the last letter was marked.

Mr. Pearsall—No, it was not marked.

Mr. Porter—The better way will be to mark ours "D 1," "D 2," &c.

Judge Neilson—Mr. Pearsall, will you attend to that?

Mr. Morris—I would prefer that Mr. Shearman would do that.

Mr. Shearman—It is marked "D 1."

Mr. Porter—I read now the letter of July 28:

BROOKLYN, July 28, 1874.

MY DEAR FRIEND: The Committee of Investigation are waiting mainly for you before closing their labors. I too, earnestly wish that you would come and clear your mind and memory of everything that can bear on my case. I pray you also to bring all letters and papers relating to it, which will throw any light upon it, and bring to a result this protracted case. I trust that Mrs. Moulton has been reinvigorated, and that her need of your care will not be so great as to detain you.

Mr. Porter—Did you take offense at that letter? A. Did I take offense at it? No, I think not, Sir; I don't remember of the date.

Q. Did you regard that as an indication of unfriendliness to you? A. I don't think I did, Sir.

Q. Will you look at your statement for one moment, and refresh your recollection on that subject? A. Yes, Sir; what part of it, Sir?

Q. Immediately below the last letter? A. The letter of Mr. Beecher of August the 4th, heretofore published?

Q. Just refer to it, and then answer me? A. August 4, yes, Sir.

Q. How is it? A. I did not consider the other a letter of unfriendliness; no, Sir.

Q. Nor an indication from Henry Ward Beecher of unfriendliness? A. No, Sir; the letter of June 28 you are referring to now; July 28 you are asking.

Q. July 28? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. The letter of Aug. 4 you did, didn't you? A. Where is the letter of August the 4th?

Mr. Beach—I have not heard of any of August the 4th. Mr. Evarts—He received this letter of the 28th of July on the 4th of August.

Mr. Beach—Well, that don't make the letter of the 4th of August.

The Witness—I think I can find it right away.

Mr. Pearsall—You will find it, Mr. Moulton, at page, 41.

Mr. Porter—The letter of August 4 was one in reply to yours, I think. On the 4th of August, upon receiving the letter of July 28, you wrote to Mr. Beecher? A. Note of July 24.

Q. July 24; 28th I think it is? A. You said 28th; 24th you mean?

Q. On the 4th of August you wrote a letter to him? A. On the 4th of August, yes, Sir.

Mr. Porter—I will read that letter, your Honor, and then will follow it up with the letter of Mr. Beecher.

No. 49 REMSEN-ST., BROOKLYN, AUG. 4, 1874.

MY DEAR MR. BEECHER: I received your note of July 24, informing me that you are making a statement and need the letters and papers in my hands, and asking me to send them to you for the purpose of having extracts or copies made from them, as the case may be, that you may use them in your controversy with Mr. Tilton. I should be very glad to do anything that I may do, consistent with my sense of what is due to justice and right, to aid you; but if you will reflect that I hold all the important papers intrusted to me at the desire and request and in the confidence of both parties to this unhappy affair, you will see that I cannot in honor give them, or any of them, to either party to aid him as against the other. I have not given or shown to Mr. Tilton any documents or papers relating to your affairs since the renewal of your controversy which had been once adjusted. I need not tell you how deeply I regret your position as foes each to the other. After my long and as you, I have no doubt, fully believe, honest and faithful, effort to have you otherwise. I will sacredly hold all the papers and information I have until both parties shall request me to make them public, or to deliver them into the hands of either or both, or to lay them before the Committee, or I am compelled in a court of justice to produce them, if I can be so compelled. My regret that I am compelled to this course is softened by my belief that you will not be substantially injured by it in this regard, for all the facts are, of course, known to you, and I am bound to believe and assume that in the statement you are preparing you will only set forth the exact fact; and, if so, the documents, when produced, will only confirm and cannot contradict what you may state, so that you will suffer no loss. If, on the contrary—which I cannot presume—you desire the possession of the documents in order that you may prove your statement in a manner not to be contravened by the facts set forth in them to the disadvantage of Mr. Tilton, I should be then aiding you in doing that which I cannot believe the strictest and firmest friendship for you calls upon me to do. With grateful recollections of your kind confidence and trust in me.

I am, very truly, yours,

F. D. MOULTON.

Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Mr. Porter—At that time you were a mutual friend of these parties, were you? A. Up to August 4.

Q. At that time were you the mutual friend of these parties? A. I had been as friendly to one as the other, Sir.

Q. Had what? A. Had been as friendly to one as the other.

Q. My question was not as to the past, but as to that present. A. As to what?

Q. My question was, whether, when you wrote that letter, you were the mutual friend of these parties? A. I was a friend of Mr. Beecher's and a friend of Mr. Tilton's at that time that I wrote the letter, Sir.

BEECHER WRONGS MOULTON.

Q. At that time you cherished for him the strictest and firmest friendship, did you? A. I did.

Q. Down to that time had he ever wronged you? A. I don't think that he had, except in asking me to lie for him. [Laughter.]

Q. Do you think that was a wrong? A. Now, I do; yes, Sir.

Q. Did you then? A. I did not; I thought I was saving a man who was repentant.

Q. Did you lie for him? A. I did.

Mr. Porter—We have your word. [Laughter.]

Judge Nelson—One moment; the counsel ought not to comment upon what the witness says.

Mr. Porter—Not now, perhaps. [To the witness.] Did you mean to intimate to Mr. Beecher that Theodore Tilton had not copies of these papers of which you denied copies to him? A. I meant to say, Sir, that I had never given him a copy for the controversy.

Q. Will you now oblige me by answering my question? A. Pardon me; I thought I had answered it.

Q. Did you mean to intimate to him that Theodore Tilton had not copies of the papers of which you refused copies to him? A. Did I mean to intimate; let me understand; I wish to answer the question; if you will ask the question again I will try to.

Q. When you wrote these words did you mean to be understood by him that, as you had furnished no copies to Mr. Tilton, you would furnish none to him? A. I had furnished none to Mr. Tilton, and would furnish none to him; that is what I meant to say.

Q. And you meant so to be understood? A. I meant so to be understood.

Q. Did you furnish—well, you answered my question? A. I did, Sir.

Q. Did you hand to Theodore Tilton the retraction which you procured from Mr. Beecher the evening you visited him with a pistol? A. Did I hand it to him?

Q. Yes. A. I read it to him, and may have handed it to him; I do not remember whether I handed it to him or not; I think I did, perhaps.

Q. You don't know, then, but what you did hand it? A. I don't know but what I did.

Q. You think you did? A. I may have handed it to him to read.

Q. To copy? A. No, Sir.

Q. Did he copy it? A. I don't remember that he did.

Q. And did you dictate to him while he copied? A. No, Sir.

Q. Did Mr. Tilton afterwards send you that paper?

A. Did he afterwards send me the letter of recantation?

Q. Yes. A. My impression was that I kept it, Sir.

Q. Do you mean to deny his statement that he afterwards sent it to you?

Mr. Fullerton—One moment; I object to that.

Judge Nelson—It is objectionable, as assuming—

Mr. Fullerton—There is no statement of that kind.

Judge Nelson—Yes.

Mr. Porter—Have you read Mr. Tilton's successive statements? A. Not all of them, Sir; no; I don't remember having read the statement that you speak of.

Q. How? A. I don't remember having read the statement that you speak of, and I would not be guided by it if I had.

Q. Do you mean, then, to swear that Theodore Tilton never had that in his possession? A. No, Sir; I do not mean to swear to that.

Q. Do you mean to swear that he never had it before this controversy began? A. I don't mean to swear to that; no, Sir.

Q. You don't know but he did? A. I don't know but what I handed it to him that night; it would have been quite natural, Sir, if I had.

Q. Do you know whether he had copies of other papers, copies of which you had denied to Mr. Beecher?

A. Do I know whether he had copies of other papers—

Q. Yes; of which you denied copies to Mr. Beecher?

A. He told me that he had made a memorandum of the letter of contrition, part of which he quoted in the Bacon letter.

Q. I was not inquiring what he told you? A. Ah! I beg pardon.

Q. I was inquiring of your knowledge of the fact that he had copies. A. I don't know that he had copies, Sir.

Q. You never knew? A. No, Sir; I had not seen any copies in his possession.

Q. Do you remember his sending that with other papers, saying that they would be more secure in your safe than in his? A. remember sending what, Sir?

Q. A retraction by Mrs. Tilton? A. I do not remember that, Sir.

Q. You do not? A. I do not remember that.

Q. Did you ever read Mr. Tilton's examination? A. Not all through; no, Sir.

Q. Did you ever dictate to him while he made copies of papers connected with this controversy? A. I do not remember that I ever did.

Q. Do you remember that you did not? A. I should swear that I did not, Sir, if I swore at all.

Q. Well, that is what I ask you, whether you do so swear? A. I should swear that I did not.

Q. You do? A. Yes, Sir; for I do not remember that I ever did.

MOULTON UNINTERESTED IN TILTON'S LATER STATEMENTS.

Q. Did you read Tilton's first statement?

A. Not all of it.

Q. Did you hear it read? A. No, Sir; he would not read it to me.

Q. Did you hear his second statement? A. Did I hear his second statement?—no, Sir.

Q. Nor did you read it? A. No, Sir; he would not—he would not let me read it.

Q. Well, the better way is to find yourself the questions. A. Pardon me, I forget the—

Q. You do not now know what it contained? A. I do not now know what it contained; I could not repeat it, Sir; I read it after it was published—a portion of it.

Q. Why did you stop with a portion of it? A. I don't know, Sir; I was not very much interested in it.

Q. But you remember distinctly the fact that you did not read it through? A. I remember that I did not read it through.

Q. And that you never have read it through? A. No, Sir; not all of it.

Q. You remember distinctly the fact that you have never read his examination through? A. I remember that, Sir.

Q. You remember distinctly that you have never read his last statement through? A. I remember that.

Q. Nor heard it read? A. Nor heard it read.

Q. We will return to Mr. Beecher's letter; will you turn to page 142? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. In reply to your letter of the 4th of August you received this, did you? A. In reply to what, Sir?

Q. To your letter of the 4th of August. A. Received which one, Sir? where is it?

Q. The one which you find on page 142. A. Oh! I see; yes, Sir; yes, Sir.

Mr. Beach—I do not see upon what principle these letters from Mr. Beecher are receivable.

Mr. Evarts—To show the relations of the witness with the party against whom he has testified.

Mr. Beach—Yes, Sir; but I object to these communications from Mr. Beecher to Mr. Moulton. It is intimated by counsel that they are offered in evidence for the purpose of showing the relations or the feelings between Mr. Beecher and the witness. I understood it to be abundantly settled by the authorities that for that object it is not competent to show the particulars of any one, or of any transaction as between the witness and the party; but only to ask as to the state of feeling; and if your Honor has any doubt in regard to that proposition, I shall ask you to look at the authorities upon the subject. Now, here is a series of letters proposed to be introduced, written by Mr. Beecher to Mr. Moulton. I cannot see, Sir, upon what principle they are admissible. They contain declarations upon the part of Mr. Beecher which may, perhaps, affect the merits of this controversy. They may contain allegations of fact which Mr. Moulton, for aught I know, may have admitted or failed to deny. But how those assertions upon the part of Mr. Beecher whether written or oral, can be produced upon this issue I am at a loss to perceive. It is not pretended that Mr. Tilton was present. It is not pretended that they were shown or stated to Mr. Tilton. No possible connection upon the part of Mr. Tilton, we think, is proposed to be shown; certainly none has been shown, and until that connection is proven, I submit to your Honor that they are not admissible, and I object to them.

Mr. Evarts—Certainly, these letters have nothing to do with Mr. Tilton. Mr. Moulton has shown himself by his direct examination as the depositary in the confidence of friendship of certain papers as well as a good many oral communications, if we are to trust to his remembrance of such conversations that were confidential. Now, a controversy arises in which these papers confided to him are pertinent, and made in behalf of Mr. Beecher, who had confided them to him.

and it was necessary and proper that Mr. Beecher should have the papers in reference to the inquiry that concerned the subject in respect to which those papers came into existence, and that go to show the attitude and conduct of this witness from the moment that the confidence in which the papers had been reposed required that for the purpose of the man who had reposed that confidence in him, he should have access to them, he took the attitude of denying and of excluding. And as we could have shown the conversation between them on the subject to mark the attitude, and mark the sentiments, and mark the conduct from that time forth of this witness in this controversy, so we can show the correspondence between them and the letters from Mr. Beecher to Mr. Moulton and from Mr. Moulton to Mr. Beecher on the subject matter of the attitude, or a statement of the attitude, as a conversation would be. And it is our purpose to show by this correspondence that from that time forward this witness has been hostile, active in opposition to Mr. Beecher; and this great act of refusal and exclusion, the applications made by Mr. Beecher, and the manner in which they were met by Mr. Moulton, is the initial step of that exploration and exposure of this witness's attitude.

Judge Neilson—Well, we have received the correspondence down to the point of refusal—that appears—on application for the papers or for copies, obtaining neither—that appears. Now, unless the remaining correspondence is for some other purpose than to show hostile feeling, I think it is not admissible. That fact can be shown by a general question or proved by anybody else.

Mr. Porter—But the correspondence on that day is itself conclusive evidence of hostility on the part of Mr. Moulton. Besides, in this letter from Mr. Beecher, he replies to the allegations made by Mr. Moulton in the letter addressed to him, renews his application, limits it, makes it more specific, and that reply by Mr. Moulton I propose to read as a part of the res gestæ in reference to the very papers in controversy.

Judge Neilson—Those two remaining letters going to the question of application and refusal?

Mr. Porter—Yes, Sir.

ATTEMPT TO PROVE MOULTON HOSTILE TO BEECHER.

Mr. Beach—We do not deny the proposition that it is entirely competent to show hostility, if it can be shown, on the part of Mr. Moulton against Mr. Beecher—ill feeling, malice—nor do we deny the right, in the language of the first counsel who addressed your Honor, to show that there was an active and persevering hostility on the part of Mr. Moulton toward Mr. Beecher. The question is one that has to be shown. The counsel says, and he assumes that is an established proposition, which I deny, that he can show it by proving conversations, the details of quarrels, the details of imitations, if you please, or any other declarations upon any subject as between the two parties. I assert, Sir, that the settled doctrine of the law is that for the purpose of proving that condition of feeling between assumed parties, you cannot give the details of transactions between them from which that hostility may be inferred; that you can only ask in regard to the actual state of feeling or to acts upon the part of the witness which go to indicate a hostile sentiment. Now, this letter which is proposed to be introduced—Aug. 4, of Mr. Beecher's—if your Honor will look at it, you will see that there is an expression in the last part of it of reproach, of indignation, if you please, for refusing these originals or these copies, as the case may be. Upon what principle is that received? The fact of refusal is already established, and, so far as that is proper or improper, so far as it is indicative of any ill-sentiment on the part of Mr. Moulton towards Mr. Beecher, why your Honor will see it, and the jury may consider it, but expressions of resentment or anger, condemnation on the part of Mr. Beecher, are not to be received as evidence of that condition of feeling as between the parties. It is enough that the parties admit or deny that that feeling exists. I wish your Honor would look at this proposed letter.

Judge Neilson—It is not necessary. I think the correspondence already in clearly amounts to an application for papers or copies, and a refusal; that covers that part of it.

Mr. Evarts—Now, if you leave it there it will stand upon this letter; but that was not the end of the application. Mr. Beecher renews and enforces his applications, and is met with persistent resistance.

Judge Neilson—That is not necessary to our purpose. It is sufficient that an application was made.

Mr. Evarts—Have we not a right, if your Honor please, to show what applications we made, and how they were refused?

Judge Neilson—Here is the application made.

Mr. Evarts—We can show one application made in a certain matter. If that were the end of the matter, very well; but we persist in our application, and then we are met in the manner that we are met. It is not a repetition of the response, as before. Our application is, in the shape presented to him, an earnest of our necessity and of justice, and replied to by him in the manner that it is replied to, and we offer that evidence as in itself the most direct and most trustworthy evidence of the hostility of this witness at that stage of the matter, not by any general state of feeling, but by an espoused side, and maintenance of the opposing litigation from that time forward, and those letters are the evidence of it.

Judge Neilson—I think we have sufficient of the correspondence. I rule out this letter.

Mr. Evarts—Your Honor will note our exception.

Judge Neilson—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Porter—I offer first those letters from Mr. Moulton to Mr. Beecher on the 4th of August, 1874, renewing and limiting his application for that paper, and stating the specific grounds on which he claims them. Your Honor excludes it, and we except.

Judge Neilson—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Porter—I offer then the letter from Mr. Moulton in reply, on the following day, in which he declines the proposition, and states the specific grounds on which he declines. We except to your Honor's exclusion of the letters.

Mr. Porter—It was not until you received the answer on the 4th of August to your letter of that day that your friendly relations with Mr. Beecher terminated? A. Not until that time.

Q. And that letter was the commencement of their termination? A. One of the false statements in the letter was.

Judge Neilson, to the witness—Answer yes.

Mr. Porter—I now renew the offer.

Judge Neilson—I strike out the expression "false statements."

Mr. Porter—I do not object to it. I renew the offer now, that I have proved that this letter was the occasion of the termination of their relations. I now offer to read it, that your Honor may see, and that the jury may know.

Judge Neilson—It is sufficient that they did terminate friendly relations. We have sufficient evidence.

Mr. Evarts—How is that proved, if your Honor excludes that letter?

Mr. Fullerton—By the answer of the witness.

Mr. Evarts—How are the form and manner and degree of the hostility proved except by the expressions.

Judge Neilson—He has stated the fact that those relations terminated at that time.

Mr. Evarts—We are not obliged to take his answer, if your Honor please.

Q. After that did you ever enter the house of Henry Ward Beecher? A. After August 4?

Q. Yes, Sir. A. No, Sir.

Q. Did he ever enter yours? A. I don't think he has, Sir.

Q. Before the 30th of December, 1870, did you ever enter his house? A. I may have gone there with my partner on a New Year's Day to make a call.

Q. Do you remember that you ever did before that date? A. I don't distinctly remember that I did.

Q. Did he ever enter your house to your knowledge before that date? A. I don't think he did.

Q. As I understand you, the inception of your friendship for Mr. Beecher was on that stormy night when, as you claim, you learned that he had debauched the wife of your most intimate friend? A. It was not previous to that.

Q. And its termination was at the time you refused to allow him access to the papers upon which you relied for the vindication of that charge? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. What was the inception of your friendship for Theodore Tilton? A. My early acquaintance with him, Sir.

Q. In what year did you become acquainted with him? A. In 1850, I think—1849 or 1850.

Q. Where? A. At the New-York Free Academy.

Q. What academy? A. The New-York Free Academy.

Q. Were you with him at any other institution? A. No, Sir.

Q. How long were you together there? A. Till 1854, I think.

Q. Were you classmates? A. Part of the time.

Q. Were you then on terms of the closest intimacy? A. I was intimate with him, friendly with him; he was my friend.

Q. Did he do you favors there? A. I don't remember that he did me favors.

Q. Nor any favor? A. I don't know that he did, any more than one student—

Q. You received a prize at that institution on one occasion, did you not? A. I think so; Yes, Sir, I believe I did.

Q. Was he a competitor? A. I don't remember that he was.

Q. Do you remember that he withdrew from competition in order to enable you to get that prize? A. No, Sir, I don't.

Q. Nor that he did it at your request? A. No, Sir.

Q. Who left the Academy first, you or he? A. I think he did.

Q. Where did he go? A. I believe he went into business as a reporter, or went into some newspaper office.

Q. When did he leave the Academy? A. In 1854.

Q. What did you do after that? A. On August 17, 1854, I went with Woodruff & Robinson, as a boy in their office.

Q. You remained with them in that capacity how long? A. I think six or seven years.

Q. During that time did you from time to time see Theodore Tilton? A. From 1854 to 1861 do you mean?

Q. Yes, Sir. A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Your kindly relations continued? A. Yes, Sir; they were kindly.

Q. Were you then living, in New-York or in Brooklyn? A. I lived in New-York, Sir.

Q. When did you remove to Brooklyn? A. I think it was in 1862 or 1863, somewhere along there—1863.

Q. At that time had you become a clerk in the office with the firm? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. When did you first acquire an interest in the firm? A. I think it was in 1861.

Q. When did you and Mr. Tilton come to meet more frequently? A. We came to meet more frequently after I came to Brooklyn.

Q. When was it? A. In 1863, I think.

Q. Was he residing here at that time? A. He was residing in Brooklyn, I believe.

Q. From that time were you quite intimate with him? A. Well, Sir, I didn't have time to be very intimate with anybody; I was friendly. I didn't visit his house very frequently at that time; I didn't visit anywhere.

Q. When did you begin to visit at his house? A. I think in 1863 or 1867, somewhere along there.

Q. When did he begin to visit yours? A. About that time when I moved into Clinton-st., when we became nearer neighbors.

Q. Were your families intimate? A. They were never very intimate; no, Sir.

Q. Your intimacy with Mr. Tilton was much greater than with Mrs. Tilton, of course? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. When did you first become his banker? A. He deposited money with Woodruff & Robinson in the beginning of 1871, if I recollect correctly.

Q. Were they engaged in business as bankers? A. No, Sir, he deposited money with Woodruff & Robinson—he wanted me to take it for him.

Q. In 1871? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Was that the first occasion in which your firm had been his banker? A. I think he never had any money with us before that, Sir.

Q. Had you ever lent him money before? A. No, Sir.

Q. Never? A. Never that I know of.

Q. Had you ever engaged in any enterprise with him before that? A. Not that I now remember, Sir.

Q. Can you say that you had not? A. I think I could say so truthfully, Sir.

Q. You had before that been in the habit of visiting him frequently? A. I had been at his house quite frequently, yes, Sir.

Q. And he at yours quite frequently? A. He had been there, yes, Sir.

Q. Did he often sleep at your house? A. I don't think he did ever sleep there.

Q. Never? A. I don't remember that he ever stayed all night.

Q. Did he often take meals at your house? A. He did take meals there quite often.

Q. Breakfast? A. Sometimes.

Q. Frequently? A. I think not.

Q. Dinner? A. Dinner.

Q. Frequently? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Did he ever take his meals at your house day after day? A. I don't remember that he was in the habit of taking them there, day after day; no, Sir.

Q. I did not inquire if it was his habit; I asked you if he ever did? A. He used to come for several days in succession; yes, Sir.

Q. Was it the subject of complaint by Mrs. Tilton? A. I never heard of it, Sir.

Q. Were you ever at his house over night? A. Never that I remember, Sir.

Q. Had you any pecuniary transaction with him prior to 1874? A. No, Sir.

Q. Did you afterward? A. Yes, Sir; after the date of this $4,000 you mean.

Q. When first did you have any pecuniary transactions with him? A. The first was the $4,000—the deposit of the $4,000 with the concern.

Q. What time was that in 1871? A. It was in the beginning of 1871; in January, I think.

Q. That was at his instance? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Not at your suggestion? A. I don't think it was.

Q. Was it for any special purpose? A. Not that I know of.

Q. Did it have any connection with any newspaper transaction? A. Not at the time it was made—not at the time it was deposited.

Q. Did he draw checks against it? A. He drew it out from time to time, by drafts I think; I don't remember now how he drew it out, whether he went to get the currency for it or drafts; I don't know now; I don't remember now.

Q. Did you bring with you your account of your transactions with him? A. I have told our bookkeeper to have it taken off.

Q. It is not yet ready? A. No, Sir.

Q. Will you be kind enough to remember to have it ready? A. Yes, Sir, certainly. Will you (Mr. Porter) be kind enough to tell me what was the last document you asked me to produce? I will make a memorandum of them now as I go along.

Mr. Porter—I don't now recall it.

The Witness—It was the letter of July 24, I think.

Mr. Pearsall—Yes, Sir.

The Witness—Yes, Sir, and now the account of Mr. Tilton. Make a memorandum for me, Mr. Pearsall, will you?

Mr. Pearsall—Yes, Sir.

Judge Neilson, to counsel—What do you propose further, gentlemen?

Mr. Morris—The hour of adjournment has arrived.

Judge Neilson—Judge Porter, do you suspend your cross-examination?

Mr. Porter—Yes, Sir.

The Court thereupon adjourned until 11 o'clock on Tuesday.

SEVENTH DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

AN INDIRECT OPENING OF THE DEFENSE.

TESTIMONY RELATING TO MR. MOULTON'S ACQUAINTANCE WITH MRS. WOODHULL, HIS ACCOUNTS WITH MR. BEECHER, HIS STOCK IN THE GOLDEN AGE AND OTHER MATTERS—IMPORTANT TESTIMONY EXCLUDED.

The cross-examination of Francis D. Moulton was continued on Tuesday, Jan. 19, by ex-Judge Porter, and seemed in some respects as an indirect opening of the defense. It related mainly to his acquaintance with Mrs. Woodhull, his intimate relations with Mr. Tilton, his accounts with Mr. Beecher and his financial interest in The Golden Age. Evidence concerning the indictment against him and the settlement of Miss Proctor's suit was ruled out.

SIDE-LIGHTS ON THE EVIDENCE.

If the object of a cross-examination is to drive a witness into a corner and worry him until his words are turned against himself, the defense were singularly unsuccessful on Jan. 19, and ex-Judge Porter had his time for his pains. If, however, the object of a cross-examination is to let in side lights and to change the aspects of the salient points of the controversy, the defense were singularly successful, and ex-Judge Porter had a new atmosphere for his pains. Zealous admirers of Mr. Beecher, who expected to see the witness flinch and his testimony shrivel and crack under a hot fire of cross-examination, went to lunch and subsequently to supper with impaired appetite and temper. Mr. Moulton smiled when he took his seat, smiled all the way through, and when he rose to get his overcoat, smiled again as he whispered to a friend that it was easy to tell the truth. He was not disconcerted at any stage of the proceedings, but played with his handkerchief with an expression of amusement on his face, was entirely at his ease, and, as many of Mr. Tilton's friends claimed, was "the best witness ever seen in court." But it was a cross-examination in name rather than in kind. Ex-Judge Porter made no effort to confuse him; questions were put to him in a pleasant voice and in a courteous manner; and from beginning to end there was an utter absence of the vulgar arts and cunning devices by which a lawyer aggravates the torture of the victim in the chair and casts suspicion upon his words and acts. The scope of the defense was much more comprehensive.

The jury and the auditors since the opening of this case have been breathing the atmosphere of the plaintiff. Ex-Judge Morris, in his opening address, presented the whole case in sharp outlines, and placed Mr. Beecher's correspondence and the other documentary evidence in the case under the lens of his interpretation. All the negotiations which Mr. Moulton conducted, and all the devices by which silence was maintained, and by which the main facts of the controversy were kept beneath the surface, were analyzed in detail, and the inference was drawn again and again that every effort at compromise and concealment implied the defendant's guilt. Mr. Moulton in his testimony has strengthened these impressions. Mr. Beecher's letters have been identified and read to the jury, and the witness has himself interpreted them as confessions of guilt. The negotiations in which he took so active a part have been rehearsed by him, and Mr. Morris's construction has again been placed upon them. The jury-box has become saturated with the theories and inferences of the plaintiff's side. Obviously the defense wanted to turn on the side lights and change the color and relations of the evidence.

Mr. Moulton, in effect, was used as a witness to prepare the way for the presentation of the defendant's case, and the cross-examination was conducted, therefore, after the manner of a direct examination. This will readily be illustrated.

Mr. Moulton hitherto in this case has appeared in the light of Mr. Beecher's friend, devoting himself with untiring zeal to his service from Dec. 30, 1870, to midsummer, 1874. He has been introduced to the jury as Mr. Beecher's confidential friend, who remained true to him until the charges of blackmail were made. The defense, on the other hand, introduced Mr. Moulton as the schoolmate and life-long friend of Mr. Tilton, going fishing with him in the Summer, taking him to Narragansett Pier during several seasons, visiting him frequently, dining with him, acting as his banker, helping him when The Golden Age was started, lending him money, conducting the negotiations for the award of $7,000 to him for the abrogation of the Bowen contracts, sympathizing with his views in regard to woman suffrage, and joining him in his attentions to Mrs. Woodhull.

Again, Mr. Tilton has appeared as a man who could have crushed Mr. Beecher but who was unwilling to expose him. The letter of Mr. Tilton to a friend in the West was called out by the defense to show that he had denounced Mr. Bowen as drawing an assassinating dagger upon Mr. Beecher, and that he had regarded the Woodhull publication as a wrong and an insult to his wife. The reply which Mr. Tilton wrote to Mr. Bowen's notice of dismissal, it was shown, was put in type in the office of The Golden Age, and sent to Mr. Bowen and Mr. Beecher.

Again, the prosecution have introduced Mr. Moulton as the advocate of the policy of silence at every stage of the controversy. The defense questioned him closely in regard to his intimacy with Mrs. Woodhull, in order that the jury might infer that the first public accuser of Mr. Beecher had derived hints from him. He admitted that he had talked with her upon the subject of the scandal, but denied that he had described the pistol scene to her as she subsequently represented. He described his early visits at Mrs. Woodhull's house, and acknowledged that he had met her at Mr. Tilton's and at his own house. He did not know how Mrs. Woodhull ascertained the facts about the pistol. After the publication of her story Mr. Beecher had called his attention to the reference to a pistol, and had told him that he remembered nothing of that kind. Mr. Moulton had replied that it was not strange that he did not remember it, as no threat was made on the evening when the retraction was returned. Mr. Moulton was closely questioned during this portion of the examination, but was not disconcerted.

Mr. Moulton has hitherto appeared as the agent of Mr. Beecher in paying $5,000 to Mr. Tilton without the knowledge of the latter. Ex-Judge Porter questioned him concerning his own financial connection with that paper and concerning its increasing expenditures.

The meeting between Mr. Tilton and Mr. Beecher on Dec. 30, 1870, had been described to the jury as relating wholly to the main cause of this action. The dismissal of Mr. Tilton from The Independent and The Brooklyn Union had nothing whatever to do with this meeting. Ex-Judge Porter elicited the fact that prior to that meeting Mr. Tilton had informed him that Mr. Bowen had threatened to dismiss him, and had described an angry interview between them in relation to Mr. Bowen's charges against Mr. Beecher. Mr. Tilton had then told him that he had no doubt that Mr. Bowen's charges against Mr. Beecher were true.

Mr. Beecher, according to the plaintiff's side, invariably shrank from making a public denial of the truth of the charges. The defense intimated that Mr. Beecher had favored a public reply to the Woodhull publication, but that Mr. Moulton had counseled silence. Mr. Beecher's letter challenging Mr. Moulton to produce the letters which had been intrusted to him was read in evidence, although it had been excluded on the previous day. Mr. Moulton admitted that Mr. Tilton had assisted him in preparing a reply to this letter.

In these and other respects the cross-examination was an indirect opening of the defense. Strictly as a cross-examination, however, it was not effective, and ex-Judge Porter disappointed all who listened to him. He was too deliberate in his manner, too indirect in his questions, and too courteous in his tone. He asked three questions when one would have served as well, and he did not seem to be master of the case. Mr. Evarts suggested many questions to him at the close, and did not seem to be satisfied with the manner in which his colleague was conducting the case. Whenever Mr. Evarts rose to argue a question of law or to answer Mr. Beach's objections, the contrast between his earnestness and vigor and his colleague's caution and suavity was so strongly marked that Mr. Beecher's admirers were disposed to question the wisdom of the assignments of the counsel.

Mr. Moulton made light of the whole examination. When the argument over the admission of evidence in relation to the indictment against him and the Proctor suit was proceeding, he evinced some nervousness, but except in this instance he was cool, self-possessed, and good-humored.

When he was questioned in regard to his attendance at the Woman's Suffrage Convention in Richmond, Va., he smiled and said that his wife and son went with him, and that he introduced Mrs. Hooker as one of the speakers. Two or three times he volunteered information, and when encouraged to proceed edified Mr. Tilton's group of counsel rather than his opponents. He was asked when he had last attended a Plymouth Church meeting, and his hesitation occasioned considerable amusement until the question was modified so as to exclude the session at which he was hissed. His answers in all cases were clear and direct, and his friends were undoubtedly warranted in awarding him high praise as a witness.

COURT-ROOM INCIDENTS.

The court-room presented the same crowded appearance on the 19th as on the preceding days of the trial. Very few who enter in the morning leave the room before the hour of adjournment arrives. Many of the spectators come provided with lunches, notably those who occupy seats in the gallery. Between 1 and 2 o'clock in the afternoon, ham sandwiches and mince pies are in great demand, and when the supply of these articles of indigestion fails, the hungry spectator is obliged to satisfy his appetite with a measure of roasted peanuts. After the principal characters in the great suit, the ancient vender of pies, who haunts the Court-house, ranks next in importance. He, too, appreciates his power, and bestows his favors accordingly. And his demeanor has grown cold, and haughty, and stately. This high-strung pie-man has become a part of the trial now, and he brooks no familiarity. He administered yesterday to a prominent member of Plymouth Church a crushing rebuke. "These mince pies are very bad," remarked the church member in question. "Werry bad, Sir," replied the pie-man; "but they're not half as bad as the langwidge as you've been a listunin' to all day." This pie-man on the first day of the trial was the meekest man in the court-room.

There were ten ladies in court on the 19th. Mrs. Beecher, as usual, sat beside her husband, and on her left was the wife of Colonel Beecher. Mrs. Tilton occupied her old seat by Mrs. Shearman, Mrs. Field, and Mrs. Ovington. In the rear of the court-room were two elegantly-attired ladies, who attracted considerable attention, owing to the fact that their names could not be ascertained by the other spectators. In the gallery were two ladies, one with a young and rather pretty face, the other an elderly person, fashionably dressed. They did not seem in the least embarrassed. On each side and behind them were red-shirted men who expectorated tobacco juice, and during the recess crunched peanuts and commented on the trial in coarse language. The ladies were evidently animated by feelings of curiosity quite as strong as those of their neighbors, and so they sat in their seats without leaving them once from 11 o'clock in the morning until 4 o'clock in the afternoon. Their powers of endurance must have been sadly taxed, for the air in the gallery was freighted with impurity, and besides, the ladies partook of no refreshments, despite the reproachful glances of the ancient pie-man.

Franklin Woodruff during the examination in the morning, sat beside Mr. Tilton. He entered the court-room with Mr. Moulton. In the afternoon Mayor Hunter occupied a seat beside Judge Neilson.

Scattered around the court-room were several prominent residents of Brooklyn, among the number, the Rev. Justin D. Fulton, who sat next to Mr. Beecher, the Rev. Mr. Hodge, Judge Reynolds, Gen. Dakin, Gen. Catlin, Col. Keeney, Rositer Raymond, Charity Commissioner Norris, and the Rev. Mr. Halliday.

MOVEMENTS OF COUNSEL.

The counsel in the case attract quite as much attention now as the plaintiff and the defendant. Every consultation is narrowly watched by the spectators, and is often invested with a significance that it does not possess. The counsel on each side drew together, and their consultations were frequent. Mr. Evarts sat by ex-Judge Porter, and right behind him were Mr. Beecher, Gen. Tracy, Mr. Shearman, and John J. Hill. Mr. Beecher made numerous suggestions to Mr. Evarts during the day, and once or twice he said something which kept his counsel smiling for several minutes. Mr. Beecher himself joined in the merriment excited by his remark. Mr. Tilton seemed in a serious mood, and paid more attention to Mr. Moulton's answers than to his counsel. Messrs. Fullerton and Beach occasionally exchanged jokes, but Mr. Morris was moody and stern throughout the day. Under his table was a valise containing two immense rolls of manuscript. These were the long statements printed by Messrs. Moulton and Tilton.

The recess was marked by an incident which removes all doubt concerning ex-Judge Morris's feeling in regard to Mr. Beecher. As soon as Judge Neilson announced that the regular intermission would be taken, Mr. Morris stepped over to Mr. Porter and called his attention to one of the answers made by the witness. Mr. Beecher, observing Mr. Morris in conversation with his counsel, addressed a jocular remark to him, but Mr. Tilton's counsel deliberately continued his conversation with ex-Judge Porter. Mr. Beecher withdrew with heightened color. Ex-Judge Morris does not hesitate to denounce the pastor of Plymouth Church, in private as well as in public.

THE PROCEEDINGS.

At the opening of the Court on Tuesday, Jan. 19, in the Tilton-Beecher suit, ex-Judge Porter continued the cross-examination of Francis D. Moulton. The witness was held in the same hazardous path he was drawn into the previous day, with a continuous line of ambush on either hand in the shrewd lawyer's excessive suavity. He was first questioned concerning his views on the question of Woman's Rights.

MOULTON'S ADVOCACY OF WOMAN'S RIGHTS.

Mr. Porter—You have not been able to produce the account, I believe, as yet? A. I had the account, Sir, with me yesterday, and handed it to my bookkeeper this morning to put it in such shape as would make it perfectly intelligible to you, Sir; and it will be here at one o'clock. And Mr. Tilton's account, Sir, he has himself, I understand from my bookkeeper, who furnished him an account from the book which I think is in shape for you to examine if you choose.

Q. I can do it either now or at that time.

Judge Neilson—Perhaps you had better take up both together at one o'clock then.

Q. I will proceed, then, to ask you a few questions about the extent of your intimacy with Mr. Tilton. You have mentioned that Mr. Beecher was in the habit of being at your house sometimes as often as twice a day? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Which did you see most frequently, Mr. Tilton or Mr. Beecher, during the years of your intimacy? A. I should say I saw one about as much as the other. When Mr. Beecher was in town, I saw him almost as frequently as I did Mr. Tilton—perhaps more frequently Mr. Tilton than Mr. Beecher, Sir.

Q. Which was most at your house? A. Mr. Tilton was more frequently at my house, Sir.

Q. Were you in the habit of traveling together at times? A. We had made excursions into the country, Sir, during vacation time, together. I don't remember any other traveling we did together.

Q. Excursions of what duration? A. Well, we went fishing together sometimes, perhaps for a week.

Q. Frequently? A. Not very frequently; no, Sir.

Q. Every Summer? A. No, Sir; not every Summer.

Q. Did you ever visit watering-places together? A. Yes; I have been at Narragansett with Mr. Tilton.

Q. Through how many years was this habit of intercourse in vacations extended? A. I think the first time that I went to Narragansett with Mr. Tilton was in 1868, and we may have gone together in 1869. I do not think to exceed three times—three seasons in all, Sir—fishing.

Q. Did you travel elsewhere with him at any time. A. I don't remember now, Sir, that I did.

Q. Were you West together at any time? A. Out West?

Q. Were you at the West together at any time? A. No, Sir; I don't remember that I ever went West with him.

Q. Did you meet him at the West? A. No, Sir; I think not.

Q. Were you at Washington together at any time? A. No, Sir; I think not.

Q. Did Mr. Tilton ever go to Washington for you? A. No, Sir, I think not.

Q. Where else were you in the habit of meeting Mr. Tilton besides your own house? A. Well, Sir, he generally came to my house, and at The Golden Age office. I used to go to The Golden Age office to see him some.

Q. Were you frequently there? A. Yes, I used to go there pretty frequently during the first year of The Golden Age.

Q. And afterwards? A. While he was editor, Sir, I was frequently at The Golden Age office; yes, Sir.

Q. Were you associated in any matters connected with Woman's Rights? A. I was in sympathy, Sir, with the Woman's Rights movement, as was Mr. Tilton.

Q. Did you meet at conventions or assemblages in that regard? A. I do not remember, Sir, that I was ever in a Woman's Rights convention with Mr. Tilton. Yes, I was once—in Newport, Sir.

Q. Did you go together? A. I think we did; yes, Sir.

Q. Did you ever meet him in Richmond? A. In Richmond? I think not, Sir; no.

Q. Passing over those matters which relate to the account, I desire to ask you two or three questions as to the general result. You acted as his attorney in the matter with Mr. Bowen? A. I went down to see Mr. Bowen, taking a letter of authorization from Mr. Tilton to Mr. Bowen, to settle his accounts with him.

Q. Then you did act as his attorney? A. If that be an attorneyship, Sir. I think the letter of authorization is quoted in my statement.

Q. Yes, I think it is. Have you the original here? A. I think, Sir, I have, if it is in my statement. It has been among my papers, and unquestionably is now.

Mr. Evarts—Have you that, Mr. Fullerton?

Mr. Fullerton—No.

The Witness—It is among my papers, Mr. Evarts.

Mr. Evarts—Who has charge of your papers?

The Witness—I gave them to Mr. Morris—Morris and Pear-

Mr. Morris—What is it?

Mr. Evarts—The authority from Mr. Tilton to Mr. Moulton to represent him in the Bowen controversy. I would like to see it.

Mr. Morris—They are all here. The subpoena duces tecum did not specify any particular paper.

The Witness [to Mr. Morris]—It was among the papers that I handed to you.

Mr. Fullerton—It is correctly quoted in that printed book, if that will serve you.

Mr. Porter—It perhaps will.

Mr. Morris—As it was not indicated which one was wanted we have brought them all here.

The Witness—If you will allow me to take a memorandum here, Mr. Porter, of the documents you want, I will have them search for them for you.

Mr. Porter—It is marked "I." If it will be convenient to you to refer to the book, then you may do so. [Handing witness the book.]

The Witness—I will remember the phraseology of that letter without the book, I think.

Mr. Morris—We could not arrange them under the subpoena. Your subpoena called for about half a bushel of papers. We have brought them here.

Mr. Evarts—What is the reason we don't have it?

Mr. Morris—We have them here.

Mr. Evarts—Well, let us have this one.

Mr. Morris—Well, here are the papers; they are not arranged and could not be.

Mr. Evarts—They have all been classified and marked, every one.

Mr. Morris—Your subpoena does not specify anything.

Mr. Evarts—No, but they are all classified and published.

Mr. Fullerton—We will look it out for you. You can read from the book and then substitute this one when it is found.

Mr. Evarts—If you cannot find it now you cannot find it at any time, I suppose.

Mr. Morris—We can find it now, Mr. Evarts, if you want to wait for an hour to do it.

Mr. Evarts—Well, that is your affair, not ours.

Mr. Morris—No, Sir; it is not our affair; we have brought the papers you called for.

Mr. Evarts—They seem to be very well arranged there, all in envelopes.

Mr. Fullerton—Those that we introduced are arranged in envelopes; if this paper is deemed of importance, I suggest to the other side that they use the printed copy, and we will substitute the original whenever it is found.

Mr. Evarts—If you will continue your search just the same, why we will go on.

Mr. Fullerton—Of course we will.

Mr. Porter—You say you remember the terms of this instrument; well, I can read it just as it is. [Reading.]

BROOKLYN, Jan. 2, 1871.

MR. H. C. BOWEN.

SIR:—I hereby authorize Mr. Francis D. Moulton to act in my behalf in full settlement with you of all my accounts growing out of my contracts for services to The Independent and The Brooklyn Daily Union.

THEO. TILTON.

[Marked "Exhibit D 4."]

Q. That was the day after he received the formal notice of dismissal? A. It was two days after he received it.

Q. Acting under that you secured how much for Mr. Tilton from Mr. Bowen?

Mr. Beach—We object to that, Sir.

Mr. Porter—On what ground?

Mr. Beach—That it is totally immaterial.

Mr. Porter—It is immaterial, except as it shows the friendly service on the part of the witness.

Mr. Morris—The amount does not.

Judge Neilson—Well, if it is a large amount it is a large service. I think it well enough to take it.

Mr. Beach—If your Honor will be kind enough to note our exception?

Q. About what amount? A. The account under the contract was finally settled by arbitration, and $7,000—

Mr. Beach—The question was what you secured, not what was settled by arbitration.

Judge Neilson—He means to say secured in that way.

Q. What amount in all did you receive from Mr. Beecher? A. What amount in all did I receive from who?

Q. From Mr. Beecher?

Mr. Beach—For what purpose?

Mr. Porter—For any purpose.

Mr. Beach—Well, I object to that—what amount he received from Mr. Beecher for any purpose.

Judge Neilson—Well, for the purposes he mentioned.

Mr. Porter—Did you ever receive anything from Mr. Beecher except for the purposes you mentioned? A. For the tuition of Bessie Turner and for the purpose of assisting Mr. Tilton; for no other purpose—and his family.

Q. What amount in all did you receive from Mr. Beecher? A. I have not the figures with me to state the exact amount that I received. There was $5,000 in one amount that I received from Mr. Beecher. That was received, I believe, May 2d, 1873; and the other amounts were received from about June, 1873, down to May, 1873—various sums.

Q. Have you no idea of about the aggregate? A. I don't remember, Sir.

Mr. Beach—June, 1873, to May, 1873? A. No, Sir; not June, 1873; June, 1871, I meant. Somewhere between $6,000 and $7,000.

Q. In all? A. Yes, Sir.

MOULTON AND THE LADIES IN THE CASE.

Mr. Porter—Have you ever been on friendly terms with Mrs. Beecher? A. I think I have met her three or four times; that is all, Sir.

Q. Did you ever visit her? A. I never did visit her.

Q. Your intercourse with her has been very slight, I think? A. Very slight, Sir.

Q. Were you ever on friendly terms with Mrs. Morse, the mother of Mrs. Tilton? A. I have met Mrs. Morse several times, very pleasantly when I have met her, Sir.

Q. Were your relations those of friends? A. We were not unfriendly. There was no particular friendship, I think—what could be called friendship.

Q. Mere acquaintance? A. Acquaintance.

Q. Where did you meet her? A. I think I have met her at Mr. Tilton's house, and, I believe, once in Schermerhorn-st.

Q. You mean you met her in the street? A. No, Sir; in the house where she was living, at Schermerhorn-st.

Mr. Evarts—At her own house? A. She was living in a house in Schermerhorn-st.; yes, Sir.

Mr. Porter—Did you go there to see her? A. I went there to see her; yes, Sir.

Q. When was that? A. I don't remember what year that was.

Q. I would like the time as near as you can fix it? A. I will try and fix it before I get through with my testimony.

Q. Very well. You know Mrs. Hooker? A. I have met Mrs. Hooker two or three times, Sir.

Q. Where? A. I met her once in Richmond, and I have—

Q. On what occasion? A. She was there and addressed a Woman's Rights meeting—a Woman's Suffrage meeting in Richmond, in 1871.

Q. Did you take any part in the meeting? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. What time in 1871? A. I think it was in March, 1871.

Q. Do you remember the particular day of March? A. I really do not, Sir.

Q. What was your part in the meeting? A. I either introduced Mrs. Hooker or Paulina Wright Davis to the audience, upon the solicitation, I think, of Mrs. Hooker or of Mrs. Paulina Wright Davis; I don't remember.

Q. You were not the presiding officer? A. I was not the presiding officer; no.

Q. And did not at any time preside? A. No, I did not preside. They were there alone, unattended, and they desired me to introduce them.

Q. You did not go with them? A. I did not, Sir.

Q. Nor with either of them? A. No, Sir.

Q. Nor with any other lady? A. With my wife and a friend, Mrs. Sarah Sutherland Eddy and her daughter.

Q. I did not hear. A. Mrs. Sarah Sutherland Eddy and her daughter, and my wife and son.

Q. Were they delegates to the convention? A. They were not, Sir.

Q. This is the extent of your intercourse—acquaintance with Mrs. Hooker? A. Yes; I think that is about the extent of it.

Q. Had you any interview with her in the year 1874? A. No, Sir.

Q. You mentioned something in relation to Mrs. Beecher in connection with an inquiry as to whether the family difficulties were alluded to in one of your interviews at the house. Will you at this point state what was said in regard to her? A. I mentioned what, Sir?

Q. On Judge Fullerton's examination you mentioned that something was said of Mrs. Beecher in connection with the family difficulties at one of your interviews at Mr. Beecher's house. Will you state what was said on that subject? A. I think on the evening of December the 31st, when I went to Mr. Beecher's house, I said to him, "I understand that Mrs. Beecher is saying—is repeating stories against Mr. Tilton. Now, such stories ought to be stopped; they only tend to incense." And he said to me that Mrs. Beecher knew Mrs. Morse was a dangerous woman—or that is the substance of what he said—and yet her enmity to Theodore Tilton induced her to listen, or might induce her to listen, to Mrs. Morse; but he would try to control that. That is as near as I can remember.

Q. Was the name of any person connected with those stories mentioned, except the name of Mr. Tilton? A. Not, I think, at that interview, Sir. There may have been at that interview.

Q. Did you state what was the nature of the stories? A. I don't think I did, Sir: I don't remember now that I did.

Q. Do you remember whether you did or did not? A. Whether I stated the nature of the stories that Mr. Beecher was repeating—is that the question?

Q. My question is, whether you remember either that you did or that you did not? A. Well, will you state, then, the question exactly, so that I can understand it; let me say what I mean.

Q. Do you remember whether you did or did not refer to the nature of those stories? A. My impression is that I did.

Q. You don't remember in what terms? A. I do not remember the terms; no, Sir, just at the present moment.

Q. While you were acting as the mutual friend of these parties, Mr. Beecher very generally acted upon your advice, didn't he? A. He sometimes did, Sir.

Q. My question was whether he did very generally. A. I should say that he did very generally.

Q. Did Mr. Tilton quite frequently act contrary to your advice? A. Yes, Sir; he did sometimes act contrary to my advice.

Q. You disapproved of his sending to Mr. Beecher by the hand of Mr. Bowen the letter requiring him to resign and leave town, and so told him, did you not? A. Without the signature of Mr. Bowen I disapproved of it.

Q. It was only of that omission that you disapproved? A. That is all that I remember having disapproved.

Q. When was the letter to Mr. Bowen written—on what day? A. On December 26th, I believe, Sir, 1870.

Q. It purports to bear date on the first of January, '71; when was it in fact—

Mr. Morris—No, no; you are mistaken; 26th December.

Mr. Porter—You and I are referring to two different letters. [To the witness.] When was the letter purporting to bear date January 1st, 1871, written? A. The preparation of that letter was commenced either the night of the 31st—commenced either the night of the 31st December, '70, or the night of January 1st, or the day of January 1st, 1871.

Q. When was the letter completed in the form which it finally assumed? A. Well, Sir, very shortly; it was either completed January 1st or 2d, I think.

Q. Was it sent to Mr. Bowen? A. No, Sir; it was not sent to Mr. Bowen.

Q. When did you first see it before—when did you first see what he was writing, before or after its completion? A. During the writing of the letter, Sir, I consulted with him as to the writing.

Mr. Fullerton—Judge Porter, there are two letters of that date.

Mr. Porter—He knows the one of which I am inquiring.

Mr. Evans—The letter from Tilton to Bowen.

Mr. Porter—Did you disapprove of that letter? A. Did I disapprove of his writing it?

Q. Yes. A. No, Sir; I don't think I did at the time that he was writing it.

Q. Did you condemn it afterwards? A. I told him I thought he ought not to publish it, Sir, afterwards.

Q. Did you advise against its publication? A. I did.

Q. He published it, notwithstanding your advice? A. When did he publish it, Sir; what publication do you refer to?

Q. I think it was on the 1st.

Mr. Morris—No; you are mistaken, Judge Porter; he never published it.

Mr. Porter—When did you first see it in print, as nearly as you now remember?

Mr. Beach—There were two letters, Sir, bearing the date inquired of by counsel; it seems to me there ought to be some discrimination between them.

Q. Do you remember if there is the least doubt—you understand me as alluding to the letter, of course, in which he repeated the charges he imputed to Mr. Bowen against Mr. Beecher? A. That's the letter that I am addressing myself to.

Mr. Evans—Were there two letters to Mr. Bowen on that date?

Mr. Beach—No, Sir; there are two letters of Jan. 1, '71.

Q. Well; but I think I stated the letter to Mr. Bowen. When did you first see that letter to Mr. Bowen published? A. I think, Sir, it was published April 20th, 1873, in The Brooklyn Sunday Sun, and then quoted into The Brooklyn Eagle, if I am correct as to date.

Q. Had you advised him against its publication? A. I did not know anything about that publication, Sir, nor did Mr. Tilton, as he told me afterwards.

Q. Had you advised against its publication before that time?

A. In January, '70; certainly, Sir.

Q. How is that? A. In January, '71; certainly, Sir.

Q. You had advised him? A. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Evarts—If your Honor please, the observation of the witness that it was published without Mr. Tilton's knowledge, as he told him afterwards—

Judge Neilson—It will be stricken out.

Mr. Evarts—It will be stricken out; and, although it may be natural enough to the witness, yet he will be so good as to refrain—

The Witness—I saw my mistake immediately after I made it, Mr. Evarts. I thank you for emphasizing it.

Q. When was it printed by Mr. Tilton? A. When was it printed by Mr. Tilton? I do not remember, Sir, that it was ever printed by Mr. Tilton. If you will call my attention to the dates of publication—

Q. Was it printed in his paper, The Golden Age? A. I do not remember, Sir, that it was printed in his paper, The Golden Age.

Q. Were proofs set up for the purpose of publication in The Golden Age, and did you see those proofs?

Mr. Fullerton—Well, one moment; that's a double question. I object to it, unless he testifies of his own knowledge.

Mr. Porter [to the Witness]—You hear Judge Fullerton's suggestion?

The Witness—Now, Sir, if you will repeat the question, I will try to answer it. Mr. Fullerton's objection put the question out of my mind.

Q. Were proofs prepared for publication in The Golden Age, and did you see those proofs? A. I saw proofs of an article which was prepared by Mr. Tilton, into which was incorporated this letter of Mr. Bowen's.

Q. Did you then advise against its publication? A. I did then advise against its publication.

Q. Who showed you those proofs? A. I think Mr. Tilton brought them to me, Sir.

Q. Did you see the poem entitled "Sir Marmaduke's Musings" indited by Mr. Tilton? A. Did I see that poem?—after it was printed, I believe, Sir.

Q. You hadn't seen it before? A. No, Sir.

Q. Heard nothing of it before? A. I don't think I ever heard anything of it before.

Q. You disapproved of its publication? A. I thought it ought not to have been published, Sir.

Q. And so told him? A. I did tell him so.

Q. Did you see the biography—did you know of his preparation of the biography of Woodhull before it appeared? A. I never heard it read, Sir, before it appeared.

Q. Did you hear of it, is my question? A. I don't remember,

Sir, that I heard of the biography of Victoria Woodhull before it appeared; I don't remember that I did.

Q. You did afterwards? A. I did afterwards; yes, Sir.

Q. Did you approve of it?

Mr. Beach—I object to that question.

Judge Neilson—Oh! I think I will admit it; it has a bearing upon the mind of the witness perhaps.

Mr. Beach—I except, Sir.

Mr. Porter—Did you approve or condemn it? A. I didn't approve of the publication of it, Sir.

TILTON'S OBSCURE FRIENDS.

Q. Do you remember the letter to his friend in the West? A. I remember a letter; yes, Sir.

Q. I will ask you to produce the letter.

Mr. Fullerton—What is the letter?

Mr. Porter—From Tilton to a friend in the West.

Mr. Fullerton—Well, we are not the custodian of that letter.

Mr. Evarts—It is one of the letters we have given notice to produce.

Mr. Fullerton—Produce a letter written to somebody out West?

Mr. Evarts—We don't know that—whether there was anybody out West; there is a letter called "a letter to a friend in the West." There is a variety of friends; there is a "Complaining Friend," that is one of them; then there is a letter to a "Friend in the West," which is another, and it is dated December 31st, 1873. Now, if you have got that letter we should like to have it.

The Witness—What page is it on, Mr. Evarts?

Mr. Evarts—It is page 273 of this book. We have given notice to the plaintiff, and we have subpoenaed the witness to have the letter.

Mr. Shearman—Mr. Moulton says in his statement, "it is here produced."

Mr. Fullerton—Mr. Moulton's statement is not in the case. [A paper handed to witness]

Q. I ask if that is a letter written by Mr. Tilton? A. This is in Mr. Tilton's handwriting; yes, Sir.

Mr. Evarts—Is this produced by the plaintiff or by the witness?

Mr. Beach—I don't know where it came from.

Mr. Evarts—Nor I; I only ask for information. It came from some one.

Mr. Morris—Well, produced by me from my office. Where it came from, I don't know.

Mr. Beach—It is produced by Mr. Morris.

Mr. Evarts—Then you don't say whether you produce it from the plaintiff or from the witness?

Mr. Morris—I don't know; I have got papers here from both parties.

Mr. Evarts—We can't find it out from one who don't know.

Mr. Morris—No, Sir.

Mr. Porter—I read that letter in evidence.

174 LIVINGSTON STREET,
BROOKLYN, December 31, 1873.

MY DEAR FRIEND: I owe you a long letter. I am unwell, and a prisoner in the house, leaning back in leather-cushioned

Idleness, and writing on my chair-board before the fire. Perhaps you wonder that I have a fire, or anything but a hearth-stone, broken and crumbled, since the world has been told that my household is in ruins. And yet it is more like your last letter—brimful of love and wit, and sparkling like a fountain in midwinter.

Nevertheless you are right. I am in trouble, and I hardly see a path out of it.

It is just two years ago to-day—this very day—the last of the year—that Mr. Bowen lifted his hammer, and with an unjust blow smote asunder my two contracts, one with The Independent and the other with The Brooklyn Union. The public little suspects that this act of his turned on his fear to meet the consequences of horrible charges which he made against Henry Ward Beecher. I have kept quiet on the subject for two years through an unwillingness to harm others even for the sake of righting myself before the public. But having trusted to time for my vindication, I find that time has only thickened my difficulties until these now buffet me like a storm.

You know that Bowen long ago paid to me the assessed pecuniary damages which grew out of his breaking of the contracts, and gave me a written vindication of my course, and something like an apology for his. This settlement, so far as I am concerned, is final.

But Bowen's assassinating dagger drawn against Beecher has proved as unable as Macbeth's to "trammel up the consequence." And the consequence is that the air of Brooklyn is rife with stories against its chief clergyman, not growing out of the Woodhull scandal merely, but exhaled with ever-fresh foulness, like mephitic vapors, from Bowen's own charge against Beecher.

Verily, the tongue is a wild beast that no man can tame, and, like a wolf, it is now seeking to devour the chief shepherd of the flock, together, also, with my own pretty lambs.

For the last four or five weeks, or ever since I saw the Woodhull libel, I have hardly had a restful day, and I frequently dream the whole thing over at night, waking the next morning unfit for work.

Have you any conception of what it is to suffer the keenest possible injustice? If not, come and learn of me.

To say nothing of the wrong and insult to my wife, in whose sorrow I have greater sorrow, I have to bear the additional indignity of being misconstrued by half the public and by many friends.

For instance, it is supposed that I had a conspirator's hand in this unholy business, whereas I am as innocent of it as of the Nathan murder.

It is hinted that the 'Jbelous article was actually written by me; whereas (being in the north of New Hampshire), I did not know of its existence till a week after it had convulsed my own city and family. My wife never named it in her letters to me lest it should spoil my mood for public speaking. (You know I was then toiling day and night for Mr. Greeley's sake).

Then, too, it is the sneer of the clubs that I have degenerated into an apostle of free-love; whereas the whole body of my writings stands like a monument against this execrable theory.

Moreover, it is charged that I am in financial and other relations with Mrs. Woodhull; whereas I have not spoken to, nor met, nor seen her for nearly a year.

The history of my acquaintance with her is this: In the Spring of 1871, a few months after Bowen charged Beecher with the most hideous crime known to human nature, and had slammed the door of The Independent in my face, and when I was tolling like Hercules to keep the scandal from the public, then it was that Mrs. Woodhull, hitherto a total stranger to me, suddenly sent for me and poured into my ears, not the Bowen scandal, but a new one of her own—namely, almost the same identical tale which she printed a few weeks ago. Think of it! When I was doing my best to suppress one earthquake, Mrs. Woodhull suddenly stood before me portentous with another. What was I to do? I resolved at all hazards to keep back the new avalanche until I could securely tie up the original storm. My fear was that she would publish what she told to me, and, to prevent this catastrophe, I resolved (and, as the result proves, like a fool, and yet with a fool's innocent and pure motive) to make her such a friend of mine that she would never think of doing me such a harm. So I rendered her some important services (including especially some labors of pen and ink), all with a view to put and hold her under an obligation to me and mine.

In so acting towards her I found, to my glad surprise and astonishment, that she rose almost as high in my estimation as she had done with Lucretia Mott, Mrs. H. B. Stanton, Isabella Beecher Hooker, and other excellent women. Nobody who has not met Mrs. Woodhull can have an adequate idea of the admirable impression which she is capable of producing on serious persons. Moreover, I felt that the current denunciations against her were outrageously unjust, and that, like myself, she had been put in a false position before the public, and I sympathized keenly with the aggravation of spirit which this produces. This fact lent a zeal to all I said in her defense.

Nor was it till after I had known her for a number of months, and when I discovered her purpose to libel a dozen representative women of the suffrage movement, that I suddenly opened my eyes to her real tendencies to mischief, and then it was that I indignantly repudiated her acquaintance, and have never seen her since.

Hence her late tirade.

Well, it is over, and I am left to be the chief sufferer in the public estimation.

What to do in the emergency (which is not clearing, but clouding itself daily) I have not yet decided. What I could do would be to take from my writing-desk, and publish to-morrow morning, the prepared narrative and vindication, which with facts and documents, my legal advisers pronounce complete.

This would explain and clarify everything, both great and small (including the Woodhull episode, which is but a minor part of the whole case), but if I publish it, I must not only violate a kind of honorable objection to be silent, which I had voluntarily imposed upon myself, but I must put my old friend Bowen to a serious risk of being smitten dead by Beecher's hand.

How far Bowen would deserve his fate I cannot say, but I know that all Plymouth Church would hunt him as a rat.

Well, perhaps the future will unravel my skein for me without my own hand; but whatever happens to my weather-beaten self, I wish to you, O prosperous comrade, a happy New Year.

Fraternally yours.

THEODORE TILTON.

P. S.—Before sending this long letter (which pays my debt to you) I have read it to my wife, who desires to supplement it by sending her love and good will to the little white cottage and its little red cheeks.

Q. From whom did you receive that letter? A. From Mr. Tilton.

[Copy of letter marked Exhibit D 5].

Q. At its date? A. I don't remember whether at its date or not.

Q. Do you remember whether it was at or about its date? A. I don't remember that.

Q. To whom is it addressed? A. I don't remember.

Q. Do you remember that it is addressed to any one.

Mr. Fullerton—One moment. The letter itself is here, and speaks for itself.

Mr. Porter—I have not seen the original.

Mr. Fullerton—I think you can tell yourself whether it is addressed to any one.

Mr. Everts—We cannot see it is addressed to any one.

Q. Do you know to whom that letter was written? A. No, Sir; I do not.

Q. You did not hear from Mr. Tilton? A. I don't know but what I might have heard that it was his intention to send it to a party; I don't know that it was ever sent to a party.

Q. You have no knowledge of its being sent? A. No, Sir.

Q. It was deposited with you among the papers in this case? A. It was given to me.

Q. You have held it ever since? A. I suppose I have; yes, Sir.

TILTON'S RELATIONS WITH WOODHULL.

Q. You know Mrs. Woodhull? A. I have known her; yes, Sir.

Q. When did you first see her? A. I think in the Spring of 1871.

Q. At what time in the Spring? A. I think it was somewhere in April, 1871.

Q. Do you remember what time in April? A. I do not remember distinctly the time in April, Sir.

Q. Where did you first see her? A. I think I met her first at her house.

Q. In New-York? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Where did you next meet her? A. I think the next meeting was at Mr. Theodore Tilton's house.

Q. When was that? A. Shortly afterwards. I can fix the date by the card in The World. It was somewhere about the time of that card.

Mr. Porter [To the Witness:—] You will find the date of that card at page 48 of the book.

The Witness—The date of the card in The World? Does it bear date, Sir?

Mr. Shearman—May 22d, 1871.

Q. By Mr. Porter—You had not met her nor seen her in the meantime? A. No, Sir; the time I met her was in consequence of that card in The World—it was after the card in The World that I saw her.

Q. Shortly after? A. Yes, Sir; shortly after.

Q. You have no means of fixing the precise date? A. It was after that; I cannot fix the exact date; it was within a few days I think.

Q. Before that interview you had never seen her but once? A. I don't think I had ever seen her at all; I had never seen her before the interview at all.

Q. That was the occasion of the first interview? A. Yes Sir; the letter was the occasion of the first interview, and then I saw her at Theodore Tilton's house.

Mr. Beach—Afterwards? A. Yes, Sir; afterwards.

Q. By Mr. Porter—How long after the first interview, should you say? A. I should say within a day or two.

Q. Who was present at that interview? A. Mr. Tilton.

Q. No one else? A. I don't remember at present whether there was anybody else or not present at that interview.

Q. You had a conversation with her at that time? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. After that time did you meet her frequently? A. I met her—well I saw her whenever there was occasion for it; I should not say frequently.

Q. But from time to time? A. From time to time.

Q. When did you last see her? A. The last time I saw her I think was in the Spring before the publication of the Woodhull story. It was in April, 1872, I think—in the Spring of 1872, I should think.

Q. Where did you see her then? A. I don't remember. It was at a house where she was living—16th street, I think; I don't remember the street.

Q. In her own house? A. It was in her own house; yes, Sir.

Q. You visited her with others? A. I was with Theodore Tilton that evening, Sir; the last time I saw her.

Q. Had you visited her with him before? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Several times before? A. Several times before. At that house do you mean?

Q. At her residence? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Where was it at that time—in 16th street? A. I won't be sure. I don't remember the street definitely enough to say.

Q. Do you remember where it was? A. It was in 16th or 23d street, or somewhere around there. She lived in 38th street.

Q. Were you ever there in the evening? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Usually? A. Usually in the evening.

Q. Did you ever meet her elsewhere than at her residence and at your residence and at Mr. Tilton's?

Mr. Beach—He didn't say he met her at his house.

By Mr. Porter—Did you ever meet her elsewhere than at her own residence and at Mr. Tilton's? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Where? A. At my own house in Remsen-st.

Q. Did you ever meet her at any other place? A. I don't remember at present.

Q. Were you ever in the same house in which she was staying over night? A. I don't remember that I ever was.

Q. You have a good memory? A. Tolerably good memory; yes, Sir.

Q. Did you ever travel with her? A. No, Sir.

Q. Did you ever meet her at any place outside of New York and Brooklyn? A. I don't remember at present that I ever did.

Q. Do you remember that you did not? A. If you could jog my memory by asking me if I met her at a certain place. I don't remember now that I ever met her at any other place than Brooklyn.

Q. Do you now remember that you did not? A. I should say I now remember that I did not.

Q. How long were your interviews usually when you went to her house? A. Some of them were an hour long, and some two hours.

Q. Was your intercourse with her confined to the subject matter of Mr. Tilton and Mr. Beecher? A. Not always; no, Sir.

Q. Did you make statements to her in regard to that matter? A. I did; I have made statements to her with regard to it—with regard to the stories against Mr. Beecher.

Q. Did you in regard to Mr. Tilton? A. Did I make statements to her with regard to Mr. Tilton?

Q. Yes, Sir? A. I have made statements to her with regard to Mr. Tilton; yes, Sir.

Q. And with regard to particular ladies in connection with Mr. Tilton? A. I don't know that I ever mentioned the names of any ladies in connection with Mr. Tilton's name.

Q. Nor she? A. I don't remember that she did.

Q. Do you remember a conversation with her in relation to the interview of the 31st of December, 1870? A. Will you please put that question again?

Q. A conversation with her in reference to what transpired with Mr. Beecher on the 31st of December, 1870? A. No, Sir.

Q. Were you present at a conversation between her and Mr. Tilton in regard to what took place in that interview? A. No, Sir; I don't remember that I ever was.

Q. Did you read her published statement? A. I don't know that I read all of it.

Q. Do you know that you did not? A. I think I did not read all of it; I think I never have read all of it.

Q. What part was it you omitted? A. Well, I don't really remember what part I did omit; I knew the general drift of it.

Q. Did you state to her that you took a pistol, and went to Mr. Beecher and demanded the letter of Mrs. Tilton under penalty of instant death. A. No, Sir; I did not.

Q. Did you state anything to that effect? A. No, Sir.

Q. Did you, in that or in any other conversation, describe to her the piteous and abject beseeching of Mr. Beecher not to be exposed to the public? A. No, Sir.

Q. Nothing of that kind occurred? A. No, Sir. You asked me a moment ago, Judge Porter, if you allow me, whether I had read any part of that statement, or whether I had read the whole of it. I can tell you I did read the part of the pistol scene, and I can tell you something that would be of interest to you in regard to that. Shall I say so?

Q. If you please. A. Mr. Beecher asked me about that part of it that referred to the pistol scene, and asked me if I remembered anything about the pistol part. He said he didn't. It didn't make enough impression on him.

Q. Is that all? A. Yes, that is all—that is about all of it.

Q. You told him you did not? A. I said to Mr. Beecher, "I remember about the pistol scene; I remember precisely what there was about it; of course, there was no threat, and I don't wonder that you don't remember it."

Q. Did you ever ride with Mrs. Woodhull? A. I don't remember at present that I ever rode with Mrs. Woodhull; I don't recall it.

Q. Do you remember bringing her to your house in a carriage? A. I don't remember bringing her to my house in a carriage; I may have done so, but I don't think so.

Q. Do you remember a conversation with her in reference to procuring Mr. Beecher to preside at her meeting? A. Do I remember a conversation with her of my own?

Q. Yes, Sir. A. Or a conversation of Mr. Beecher with her?

Q. A conversation with her? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Between yourself and her? A. Yes, Sir; we held a conversation at my house concerning it. She came there to see Mr. Beecher.

Q. Had you no conversation with her concerning it before? A. I don't remember that I had any conversation with her before. That letter was the cause of that interview.

Q. Had you heard of that letter before you heard of it from him? A. Before I heard of it from Mr. Beecher? I don't remember whether the letter was brought to me by Mr. Beecher or not; I think it was brought to me by Mr. Beecher. My statement will tell that if you will refer to it. I don't remember now how the letter was addressed.

Q. Had you heard of the project of her procuring him to preside before that letter was sent to you? A. No, Sir; I don't think I had.

Q. Do you know that you had not? A. I shall say now that I had not.

Q. Had you had any conversation with Mr. Tilton in regard to his presiding there? A. In regard to Mr. Tilton presiding there?

Q. In regard to Mr. Beecher presiding there? A. I had a conversation with Mr. Tilton the same day that Mrs. Woodhull and Mr. Beecher were at my house.

Q. Had you had any conversation with him before that? A. I don't remember that I had.

Q. Do you remember that you had not? A. I do now remember that I had not. If I should make any statement about it, I should make that statement.

Q. Do you mean that you remember now that you had no such conversation? A. I put it in the other way. I don't remember that I had any such conversation, and I don't think I did have. That is the best of my recollection.

Q. You do not remember that you did not have. Am I right? A. I cannot state it in that way, Sir, and state the truth; I say that I don't remember, and if I were undertaking to make a truthful statement to any one, I should say I had not, and deem it a truthful statement.

Q. Did you tell Mrs. Woodhull that you and Mrs. Tilton did not want Mr. Beecher to know that that letter had come at your instance? A. Did I tell Mrs. Woodhull that—ask that question again, please.

Q. Did you tell Mrs. Woodhull that you did not want Mr. Beecher to know that that letter to him came at your instance? A. No, Sir; I didn't tell Mrs. Woodhull that.

Q. Nor anything to that effect? A. No, Sir; I did not.

Q. Or at Mr. Tilton's instance? A. No, Sir.

Q. With whom did Mrs. Woodhull leave your house on that occasion? A. I don't remember.

Q. She did not remain that night? A. No, Sir; I don't think she remained that night.

Q. She never remained a night at your house? A. I don't remember that she ever did.

Q. Do you remember that she did not? A. I think I am stating the truth—I know I am stating what I believe to be the truth when I state that she did not.

Q. Did you on different occasions meet her at Theodore Tilton's? A. I think I met her at Theodore Tilton's—was at Theodore Tilton's with her twice.

Q. Only twice? A. Twice.

Q. You never met her except on those two occasions at his house? A. At his house; those are the only two I remember.

Q. When you visited her house did you ever find Mr. Tilton there when you did not go there in company with him? A. When I visited her house—please put that question again?

Q. When you visited her residence did you ever find Mr. Tilton there when you had not gone there together? A. I think not.

Q. Did he always leave when you left? A. I think he did; yes, Sir. we left together.

Q. Do you remember that you did? A. I should state, when I state what I believe to be the truth, that we left together.

Q. You were not aware of his being there on any other occasions except when you were there? A. No, Sir.

Q. No allusion was made in their conversation to interviews they had had when you were not present? A. I don't remember of any.

Q. You disapproved also of the Bacon Letter? A. Yes, Sir; I did.

Q. Advised against its publication? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Did you advise against Mr. Tilton's first statement to the Committee? A. Well, which do you consider his first statement? He made three. There is a first statement, a second statement, and a third statement. One was verbal, if I remember right.

Q. They were not to the Committee? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. All three? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. The sworn statement. You remember the one which he called the sworn statement? A. Yes, Sir; that is the second statement.

Q. Did you advise him against presenting that statement to the Committee? A. I did; yes, Sir.

Q. Do you know how Mrs. Woodhull found out about that pistol affair? A. I do not.

Q. You only know it was not from you? A. I know that.

Q. And that it was never the subject of conversation between you and her? A. Never to my recollection.

Q. Do you remember that it was not? A. Never, Sir; never.

Q. Prior to your breach with Mr. Beecher had you told the pistol affair to any one else? A. No, Sir; not that I know of, except to my—; no, Sir; I don't think I did.

Q. To no one but Mr. Tilton? A. I don't think I ever did.

Q. I assume you did not? A. Not to Mr. Tilton.

Q. You reported the fact of the interview and the result of it to Mr. Tilton? A. I reported the interview, exactly what occurred there.

WHERE TILTON AND MOULTON DISAGREED.

Q. I have reference now to several points in which you disapproved of the course of Mr. Tilton. Did he propose to publish the true statement, as it was called? A. He talked about publishing the true statement; yes, Sir.

Q. Did you advise against it? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. He finally abandoned it? A. Yes, Sir; it never was published.

Q. It never was published? A. No, sir.

Q. Now, in regard to your advice to Mr. Beecher, did you condemn Mr. Beecher for obtaining the retraction from Mrs. Tilton? A. I did, Sir.

Q. Did you condemn him for wishing to have it preserved for the protection of his family and his memory, in case of his death? A. I condemned? I don't remember having condemned him for that.

Q. Did you advise him never to see Mr. Tilton? A. Did I advise him never to see Mr. Tilton?

Q. Yes, Sir? A. On that occasion?

Q. Personally? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. At the interview on the 31st of December? A. Did I advise Mr. Beecher not to see Mr. Tilton?

Q. Not to see him in Mr. Tilton's present exasperated mood? A. I don't think I did.

Q. Did you on the 1st of January? A. Advise him not to see Mr. Tilton?

Q. Not to see him? A. I don't think I did.

Q. Did you at any time? A. I don't remember that I have.

Q. Did you advise him to communicate with him through you, rather than personally? A. I don't think I ever did.

Q. Did you advise him not to publish a card denying the Woodhull calumny? A. Did I advise Mr. Beecher not to?

Q. Not to? A. I advised silence, if that is what you mean.

Q. The policy of silence? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. He spoke of publishing a denial of the libel shortly after its publication, did he not? A. We discussed whether that could be done or not, I think.

Q. You advised against it? A. I did not see how it could be done.

Q. And when you gave that advice you had not read the Woodhull libel? A. Not all of it; I understood it very well, what it charged.

Q. Have you read it down to this hour? A. I don't think I have read all of it to this hour.

Q. How do you understand its contents without reading it? A. Well, I had had conversations with people who had read it, Sir.

Q. And you inferred that you had a full report of its contents? A. I knew the charge against Mr. Beecher that that article contained.

Q. You knew it was to come before it appeared, did you not? A. Oh, no, Sir. No, Sir; I did not.

Q. You didn't need to read it in order to find out what they did charge? A. I needed to read a portion of it to find out what they did charge.

Q. How by reading a portion relating to yourself could you find out what they charged against Mr. Beecher? A. I read more than that, Sir.

Q. Did you read all that portion of the article which was prejudicial to Mr. Beecher? A. I think I did; yes, Sir.

Q. All that related to yourself? A. I think I did; yes, Sir.

Q. What else did the article contain? A. I don't know. (Laughter.)

Q. When, finally, Mr. Beecher insisted upon publishing a card in The Eagle, you exercised the power he gave you to correct it? A. When what, Sir?

Q. Please refer to page 247, and you will more readily understand my question. Were the changes in the form of the card, any of them, made by you? A. Mr. Kinsella of The Eagle wrote the article as it appeared in The Eagle, and the alterations were made by him, therefore, from the card.

Q. At your suggestion and with your concurrence? A. No, Sir; with my concurrence afterwards.

Q. Mr. Beecher's card was short. Allow me to call your attention to the language, and give your reason for the change? [Reading.]

"I have seen in the morning papers that application has been made to Mrs. Victoria Woodhull for certain letters of mine supposed to contain information respecting certain infamous stories against me. She has two business letters, one declining an invitation to a suffrage meeting, and the other declining to give her assistance solicited.

These, and all letters of mine in the hands of any other persons, they have my cordial consent to publish. I will only add, in this connection, that the stories and rumors which have, for a time, been circulated about me, are grossly untrue, and I stamp them, in general and in particular, as utterly false."

Q. Do you remember why you concurred in striking out the word "false," and substituting a repetition of the word "untrue" in the same sentence? A. Do I remember what?

Q. Do you remember why you concurred in striking out the word "false," and inserting in lieu of it a repetition in the same sentence of the word "untrue?" A. I don't remember the reason why. The phraseology was made by Mr. Kinsella, of The Eagle.

Mr. Fullerton (to Mr. Porter)—Judge Porter, I think this a misprint in the book.

Mr. Porter—You read it yesterday, "utterly false."

Mr. Morris—We will produce the original.

Mr. Evans—It is "Exhibit 28."

Mr. Porter—I see the report yesterday was erroneous in accordance with the book, and not the Exhibit. The word should be "false."

GEN. BUTLER SERVING WITHOUT FEE.

Q. You disapproved and condemned Mr. Beecher calling a Committee of Investigation, did you not? A. I told him I thought it might prove a mistake.

Q. And you refused his application to give him access to the documents? A. By advice of counsel I wrote him the letter which I did on August 4th.

Q. By advice of counsel? A. Yes, Sir; I submitted his letter of July 24th, which Mr. Tracy brought to me, to my counsel.

Q. Were you in litigation at that time? A. No, Sir.

Q. Did you expect to be? A. No, Sir.

Q. Perhaps you mean, then, your adviser? A. Adviser, if you choose; that's what I mean by my adviser. I had not retained anybody as counsel; I had not paid anybody a counsel fee as a lawyer.

Q. Who was it that advised you in that way? A. Gen. Butler.

Q. When did you first confer with him? A. He wrote me a letter on July 29th or 30th, advising—

Judge Neilson—Don't state what he said.

Mr. Porter—Was that the first of your seeing him? A. That was the first I had heard from him.

Q. Had you written to him before? A. No, Sir; I had not written to him or communicated with him in any way before about it.

Q. Had he been your counsel in other matters? A. He had been a friend and adviser in the same sense as he was in this matter.

Q. He had never been your counsel? A. I never paid him a fee as a lawyer—never employed him as a lawyer.

Q. Neither you nor your firm? A. No, Sir.

Q. Had he been actively engaged with your affairs at Washington? A. No, Sir; I don't think he was actively engaged with our affairs at Washington.

Q. With your affairs at the Custom-House? A. He had been counsel for Mr. Jayne against us in that business.

Q. That was the previous relation between you and him? A. That was not the relation between him and me. I did not understand the question in that way. That was not the relation between Mr. Butler and myself.

Q. He had been counsel against you? A. He was counsel for Mr. Jayne; yes, Sir. Mr. Jayne was the special agent of the Treasury Department.

Q. He never was counsel for you? A. No, Sir; except in the sense of adviser.

Q. And his friendly advice was while he was counsel against you? A. No, Sir; there was no friendly advice when he was counsel against us.

Q. When did the friendly advice begin? A. The friendly advice was on this business between Mr. Beecher and Mr. Tilton in this controversy—personal advice to me.

Q. General Butler is a personal friend of yours, is he not? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Was he so at the time he acted as counsel against you for Mr. Jayne? A. No, Sir; Mr. Tilton introduced me to Mr. Butler; I never knew him before that, personally, closely.

Q. He became your friend? A. He became friendly to me, certainly.

Q. Had you a controversy with the Government at that time? A. Yes, Sir; we did have.

Q. Was he instrumental in effecting an arrangement of that matter? A. Not that I ever knew of, Sir.

Q. Nor Mr. Jayne? A. Nor Mr. Jayne instrumental in effecting—?

Q. Was he instrumental in effecting it? A. We settled with the Government; we could not have settled except through Mr. Jayne.

Q. Then he was? A. Not for us; he was not instrumental.

Q. Have you known Mr. Jayne ever since that time? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Are you and he friends also?

Mr. Beach—Wait a moment. We object to that.

Judge Neilson—I will rule it out for the present. I don't see that it is material at all.

Mr. Porter—Have you conferred with Mr. Jayne on the subject of Mr. Beecher's affairs? A. I have not conferred with Mr. Jayne on the subject of Mr. Beecher's affairs.

Judge Neilson [to the witness]—Say no.

Q. You and he have had no conversation about it? A. Yes, Sir; we have had conversation about it.

Q. Here? A. In New York.

Q. Did you send for him with regard to it? A. No, Sir; I don't think I sent for him.

Q. Do you know whether you did or not? A. I don't think I ever sent for Mr. Jayne. I saw him at the Fifth Avenue Hotel one day.

Q. Was that the only occasion on which you conversed with him about it? A. I think I saw him at the Fifth Avenue Hotel since, and conversed with him about it, within a week, or two weeks, or three weeks, recently.

Q. Will you be good enough to repeat the date when General Butler volunteered in the matter? A. I have got the exact date I think it was June 29th or 30th, the letter I received from him.

Q. Has he since acted as your counsel through the matter? A. Yes, Sir; as my adviser in the matter: there's a distinction between "counsel" and "adviser," I believe.

Q. You said that your letter of Aug. 4th was written by his advice? A. Yes, Sir; written by him.

Q. And by him? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Was the subsequent letter of Aug. 5th written by him? A. What was the subsequent letter of August 5th?

Q. In reply to Mr. Beecher's of August 4th, which was excluded? A. No, Sir; that was written by myself, in conjunction with Theodore Tilton.

Q. Was Mr. Tilton present when General Butler wrote the letter of August 4th? A. No, Sir.

Q. Had he been conferred with on that subject? A. No, Sir.

Q. You have at no time paid any fee to General Butler? A. I have not.

MOULTON'S IMPARTIALITY IMPEACHED.

Q. Nor to any counsel in connection with this litigation? A. Yes, I have. Between Mr. Tilton and Mr. Beecher?

Q. Yes, Sir? A. No, Sir; I have not paid any fee to any counsel in any litigation between Mr. Tilton and Mr. Beecher.

Q. You have paid fees to counsel who are acting for Mr. Tilton, have you not? A. I have on business of my own.

Q. Have you engaged to pay any fees in this case? A. I have not.

Q. Have you contributed to the expense of this litigation in any form, directly or indirectly? A. I don't think I have.

Q. Have you contributed to the expense of the publications which have been made from time to time in regard to it, or any of them? A. No, Sir.

Q. Or any of them? A. No, Sir; I don't think I have; I do not recall any such contribution now.

Q. Nor any payment for that purpose? A. No, Sir.

Q. You have contributed nothing? A. I have contributed nothing.

Q. Paid nothing and promised nothing? A. Paid nothing and promised nothing.

Q. All was in your branch of the litigation? A. All was what?

Q. All that you paid was in your branch of the litigation? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. In connection, I suppose, with the indictments and the civil suits?

Mr. Beach—Wait a moment.

Judge Neilson—You ought not to ask that question.

Mr. Porter—I wish to show his relation to the controversy.

Judge Neilson—I will rule it out. It is immaterial.

Mr. Evarts—Does your Honor understand it is immaterial, in regard to the witness's relation to this case, that he is under indictment, and that he is pursued in a civil suit?

Judge Neilson—It is immaterial.

Mr. Evarts—And that he has been forced to judgment in the libel suit?

Judge Neilson—All that I shall rule out.

Mr. Evarts—And that that does not bear upon the attitude of this witness in the weighing of his testimony by the Court and the Jury, your Honor understands?

Judge Neilson—No, Sir.

Mr. Beach—These proceedings are not had on the part of Mr. Beecher.

Judge Neilson—Not at all.

Mr. Evarts—We know what part they are on. I understand that your Honor says, when we offer to show the attitude of this witness under the public indictment, and in the civil suits for libels in his statements concerning this case, that that does not constitute evidence to go to his credit with the Jury for his statements in this case.

Judge Neilson—I so rule, and it has been decided more than once in this case, that the existence of an indictment don't tend to impair a witness.

Mr. Evarts—I have not said that.

Judge Neilson—I am saying it.

Mr. Evarts—I don't offer in that connection, or in the least relation to it.

Judge Neilson—I think it is immaterial.

Mr. Evarts—But it is that he is made a party defendant to the case in the same side of the controversy in which he now appears as a witness for the plaintiff here.

Judge Neilson—So made by some other person, or party.

Mr. Evarts—Well, no matter; he is in that condition.

Judge Neilson—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Evarts—Of prosecution, if you please. I don't know whether it is prosecution, or how.

Judge Neilson—I don't know.

Mr. Evarts—Nor I don't suppose we do, but that he holds that position in regard to those suits forced against him, justly or unjustly.

Judge Neilson—In regard to other parties.

Mr. Evarts—Justly or unjustly. He is indicted for a libel against Mr. Beecher in this very statement.

Judge Neilson—That would not be admissible here.

Mr. Evarts—Your Honor will so rule, of course.

Judge Neilson—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Evarts—But I wish to bring to your Honor's notice the aspect of the matter in which it is presented. Now, anything that goes to show the animosity or the repugnance or opposition between a witness and the party against whom he is testifying, is primary evidence to show that he is not a disinterested and impartial witness, but is himself an active party in a controversy; and now we offer this witness's position in all these suits as evidence that he is not an impartial witness, but is a party to the controversy.

Judge Neilson—I am ruling on the assumption that some third person not named has had, or has some, litigation with the witness, a case in which that third person is the mover and this witness here may assume the position of a defendant, and resisting also, and more immediately connected with this, there is an indictment, upon the complaint of this defendant, against the witness in respect to this same matter, in all of which the witness stands, it would seem, upon the defensive, is not an actor, and does not appear to be aggressive, even on your own statement.

Mr. Evarts—But is not indicative of feeling against him that he had been pursued by Mr. Beecher?

Judge Neilson—That would not be sufficient to strike out the testimony.

Mr. Evarts—Does your Honor say that to show that the party against whom he is testifying here has pursued him, is not evidence that he does not stand impartial?

Judge Neilson—We have it already on record that this witness is hostile to the defendant,

Mr. Evarts—How have we that?

Judge Neilson—Avowed by himself yesterday. That fact sufficiently appears. There can be no suggestion of friendliness.

Mr. Evarts—Have we it down on the evidence?

Judge Neilson—Certainly.

Mr. Evarts—That he has said he is a hostile witness?

Judge Neilson—Not in that way; that their friendly relations ceased.

Mr. Evarts—That friendly relations ceased. That is not an avowal that he is hostile—bitterly hostile to the defendant.

Judge Neilson—Would your indictment, if put in evidence, make him appear hostile?

Mr. Evarts—That the Jury will be the judge of.

Judge Neilson—I think you must be content with an exception.

Mr. Evarts—But you say you exclude it on one ground, that it is the subject of transactions with third persons.

Judge Neilson—In part.

Mr. Evarts—On the part that has not interest with persons. How is it with third persons?

Judge Neilson—I understood from your statement that some third person had brought suit against this witness, and that he has been indicted on complaint of the defendant.

Mr. Evarts—Yes, Sir.

Judge Neilson—An indictment not yet tried.

Mr. Evarts—I don't offer the indictment as proving its truth. I offer it as a prosecution against him upon the complaint of Mr. Beecher, and your Honor excludes that as not bearing on the question whether the witness stands impartial here.

Judge Neilson—It is very clear that if A claims an immense estate against B, and B can pursue the principal witness and indict him in many indictments, that he don't ruin the witness whose testimony may be brought in support of the case against him.

Mr. Evarts—I have not offered it in that light.

Judge Neilson—I rule it out in such light.

Mr. Evarts—I offer it as affecting the animus of the witness, and certainly those things are quite extinguishable, if your Honor please.

Judge Neilson—I am very clear about this; I have not any doubt about it. I don't wish any general argument on it.

Mr. Evarts—I don't wish to argue it any further, but I wish to take your Honor's ruling.

Judge Neilson—Certainly.

Mr. Evarts—We offer to prove by this witness the position in which he stands in regard both to the public executions and the civil suits that have grown out since this controversy between Mr. Tilton and Mr. Beecher arose.

Judge Neilson—Other than this suit?

Mr. Evarts—Other than this suit. It is not necessary to particularize. Your Honor rules out the whole?

Judge Neilson—A. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Evarts—We except.

Mr. Morris—We have found the letter of authorization.

Mr. Evarts—Now your Honor has ruled upon the whole. I now offer each of the matters separately.

Judge Neilson—Let it be so framed.

Mr. Evarts—It is so understood. I except.

Judge Neilson—Certainly. [To the Jury.] Gentlemen, you will please now retire to your dinner and be in your seats at 2 o'clock.

Mr. Mallison—[The Clerk.] The Court will now take a recess until two o'clock.

RUPTURE OF BEECHER'S AND MOULTON'S FRIENDSHIP.

The Court met at 2 p. m., pursuant to adjournment. Francis D. Moulton recalled, and cross-examination resumed by Mr. Porter.

Q. You mentioned that your letter of August 5th was the one in which Gen. Butler did not assist you, and in which Mr. Tilton did. Where was that letter written? A. In my study at home, Sir.

Q. When? A. August the 5th. I think; the date of it. Is that the date? A. I don't remember.

Q. The date is August 5th, but you remember it was in reply to Mr. Beecher's of August the 4th? A. That is the letter. The letter in reply to Mr. Beecher's letter was prepared at my house—whether it bears date August 5th or not—in my study.

Q. At the time it was prepared was any one present except you and Mr. Tilton? A. I do not remember that there was anybody present.

Q. Who did the writing? A. Theodore Tilton.

Q. And did you engross it? A. I don't remember whether I did or not, Sir.

Q. You do not remember whether it was in his handwriting or yours? A. I do not remember whether it was or not; I think it was in Mr. Eddy's handwriting.

Q. How is that? A. I think it was in my accountant's handwriting.

Q. Ah, yes, a copy? A. I don't remember whether it was in my handwriting or in his.

Q. That was in reply to Mr. Beecher's letter of the previous day? A. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Evarts—Is that the letter [handing witness a letter]? A. Yes, Sir; this is the letter.

Mr. Evarts—We offer this letter now in evidence, if your Honor please, with the letter to which it was an answer, which I have asked them to hand me.

Mr. Morris—The one which was ruled out yesterday?

Mr. Evarts—Yes, Sir. Your Honor then thought that those letters were not admissible, or were unnecessary—that clearly was the point of your Honor's ruling—because the testimony already given showed that the friendly relations between Mr. Moulton and Mr. Beecher had then been terminated by the letters of the 28th of July; but, really, if you look at those letters it will be found that those letters do not show the termination, but it is these letters that show the termination. But it is not in that view that—

Judge Neilson—The witness stated it.

Mr. Evarts—Well, he said that they were terminated, but the form and manner and precise way in which they were terminated could not be gathered from those letters, as there was nothing hostile in them; but the evidence now shows that a letter of Mr. Beecher to Mr. Moulton became the subject of consultation and conference between Mr. Moulton and Mr. Tilton, and that they then prepared this answer, which Mr. Tilton drafted and Mr. Moulton signed, and they sent it forth. It is, therefore, an act in which this plaintiff participated, and is a part of the transaction and relations between the two parties in reference to the investigation, or the suppression of investigation, as the case may be, concerning this controversy between them, which have formed, as your Honor knows, the staple of so much of the evidence that has been introduced. The letters formerly stood, in your Honor's appreciation of them, as merely letters between the witness and Mr. Beecher, bearing upon the question of whether or not they broke off their relations, and your Honor did not consider them important or useful to further prove that fact, as I understand it. Now, your Honor will see by these letters that when this comes to be the act of Mr. Tilton in withholding from Mr. Beecher access to these papers, it is an immediate and direct significance of the dealing by Mr. Tilton and Mr. Beecher in regard to this conference.

Judge Neilson—Mr. Beach, what do you think of this?

Mr. Beach—Your Honor will recollect that there was a letter introduced, addressed by Mr. Beecher to Mr. Moulton, bearing date July 24, 1874, making a request for the letters and papers in the hands of Mr. Moulton, relating to this controversy, and that the letter of Mr. Moulton, without our objection, in answer to that bearing date August 4th, was read in evidence. I believe also that the letter of July 28, 1874, from Mr. Beecher to Mr. Moulton, was also given in evidence. Mr. Porter then proposed to read the reply of Mr. Beecher, bearing date August 4th, 1874, to which I objected, and that was ruled out upon the ground that the statements made by Mr. Beecher to Mr. Moulton upon this subject, detailing the particulars of what was supposed to be the origin of a breach of their friendship, was not admissible; that under the pretense of a controversy between himself and Mr. Beecher, Mr. Beecher could not fabricate declarations or introduce conversations between himself and the witness, which would bear upon the main issue in the controversy. I am not aware that the letter to which reference is now made, of August 5, 1874, was then presented for discussion or consideration. I am not aware that any offer was made of that letter or any objection taken to it on our behalf. The only objection which we made, and the only objection which I care now to make, is to the letter of August 4th, written by Mr. Beecher to Mr. Moulton, and if the object of the introduction of the letter of August 5th is to introduce in evidence, or to lay the foundation for a presentation in evidence, of the letter of Mr. Beecher of August 4th, why, then we object. So far as it is now offered for the purpose of proving declarations made or assented to upon the part of Mr. Tilton, in so far as those declarations are material to the issue, I perceive no objection to its introduction. It seems to me competent upon that ground; but I desire to preserve the objection which was made on the 18th, and upon which your Honor ruled, to the introduction in evidence of the letter of Mr. Beecher, of August 4th. I stated on the 18th Sir, what I supposed to be the rule of law, without any specific examination of the question, in regard to the admissibility of the details of controversies between a witness and the party against whom he is introduced, for the purpose of proving the presence of malice or ill-will. I have just sent, Sir—I have not looked at the authority furnished by the case of Boynton against Boynton, decided in the Court of Appeals, which appears in the 43rd of New York, at page 380:

"In an action of slander, the plaintiff, as a witness on his own behalf, stated, on cross-examination, that he had had litigation with the defendant. He was then asked how many suits he had with him, and for what cause of action. Held, that the Court below properly excluded so much of the inquiry as related to the causes of action; it was in no way material or pertinent to the issue. Its materiality consisted solely in its bearing upon the credit due to the plaintiff as a witness, and was therefore collateral in its nature. The end of such an inquiry would result in an unlimited examination of the previous litigation, and in attempts to indicate the different positions occupied by the parties engaged in it."

The authority seems to me, Sir, particularly applicable to the present question. Here the difficulties which are supposed to exist, causing estrangement and ill feeling between the witness and Mr. Beecher, were connected with the very subject of litigation in this action; and if, in a controversy between the witness and Mr. Beecher, Mr. Beecher is permitted to make declarations which are material to the main issue, which directly affect the interests of Mr. Tilton in this litigation, why, your Honor will perceive that by that mode of inquiry upon a collateral question Mr. Beecher is permitted to introduce his own declarations to a third party against us when we were not present. If necessary, Sir, if you will permit me, I will look a moment to the opinion, which may be fuller than the marginal notes. The opinion says, Sir :

"The evidence proposed to be given by the answer to so much of the question as was excluded, was in no way material or pertinent to the issue found between the parties, and which formed the subject of the trial. Its materiality consisted solely in its bearing upon the credit due to the plaintiff, as a witness, and was, therefore, collateral in its nature. Inquiries of this character must necessarily be limited and restricted in their nature, otherwise the trial of issues upon pleadings would be often so far extended by them as to obscure the real point involved in the controversy, and obscure the mind of the jurors called upon to decide them. The object of such inquiries is to show that the witness may be giving his testimony under some feeling or impulse, inconsistent with an impartial disclosure of the truth. It is not material to inquire after the particular process or the detail of circumstances by means of which that feeling may have been produced, for the fact itself is all that the case can require to be proved, and all that the law will permit to be shown. The discovery of the motive under which the witness may, at the time, be giving his evidence, is the end and object to be attained, and that can always be accomplished by the direct inquiry concerning its existence or concerning the facts themselves ordinarily indicating the existence of improper motives. It is sufficient to show that the difficulty affecting his feelings and likely to influence his evidence, exists between the witness and the party it may be given against, and that can always be done without pursuing a detailed inquiry into the circumstances attending its development."

That authority, Sir, very abundantly sustains the proposition which I submitted to your Honor on the 18th, and which will be at once recognized as law. Now, it may be said, Sir, that this letter of Mr. Beecher, of August 4th, necessarily came under the observation of Mr. Tilton, at the time he was engaged mutually with Mr. Moulton in preparing the reply to that instrument. It will be for your Honor's consideration how far the presentation of that letter to Mr. Tilton—if it was submitted to him, which does not yet appear—and how far his acceptance or repudiation of the statements of that letter may be admissible. Certainly, sufficient yet has not been given to allow the production of that letter under that aspect of the question.

Mr. Evarts—This letter, as I understand it, is not objected to?

Judge Neilson—The letter written jointly?

Mr. Evarts—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Beach—I object to that letter, Sir, or any part of that letter which in your Honor's opinion—if you will be kind enough to scrutinize it—will lay any foundation for the introduction of Mr. Beecher's letter.

Judge Neilson—So I understand, Sir.

Mr. Evarts—May I read the letter?

Judge Neilson—You are at liberty to read the letter which was written jointly.

THE FIRST HOSTILE WORDS BETWEEN THE FRIENDS.

Mr. Evarts—[reading]:

40 REMSEN STREET, BROOKLYN, August 5, 1874.

Rev. HENRY WARD BEECHER:

MY DEAR SIR: In all our acquaintance and friendship I have never received from you a letter of the tone of yours of August 4th. It seems unlike yourself, and to have been inspired by the same ill-advisers who had so lamentably carried your private affairs before a committee of your church, and thence before the public.

In reply, let me remind you that during the whole of the past four years all the documents, notes and memoranda which you and Mr. Tilton have intrusted to me to have been so intrusted because they had a reference to your mutual differences. I hold no papers, either of yours or his, except such as bear on this case. You speak of "memoranda of affairs not immediately connected with Mr. Tilton's matter." You probably allude here to the memoranda of your difficulties with Mr. Bowen, but these have a direct reference to your present case with Mr. Tilton, and were deposited with me by you because of such reference. You speak also of a letter or two from your brother and sister and I am sure you have not forgotten the apprehension which we entertained, lest Mrs. Hooker should fulfill a design which she foreshadowed, to invade your pulpit and read to your congregation a confession of your intimacy with Mrs. Tilton.

You speak of other papers which I hold "subject to your wishes." I hold none such, nor do I hold any subject to Mr. Tilton's wishes. The papers which I hold, both yours and his, were not given to me to be subject to the wishes of either of the parties. But the very object of my holding them has been, and still is, to prevent the wish of one party from being injuriously exercised against the other.

You are incorrect in saying that Mr. Tilton has had access to my "depository of materials;" on the contrary, I have refused Mr. Tilton such access.

During the preparation of his sworn statement he came to me and said his case would be incomplete unless I permitted him the use of all the documents, but I refused; and all he could rely upon were such notes as he had made from time to time from writings of yours, which you had written to me to be read to him, and passages of which he caught from my lips in short hand. Mr. Tilton has seen only a part of the papers in my possession, and would be more surprised to learn the entire facts of the case than you can possibly be.

What idle rumors may have existed in newspaper offices I know not; but they have not come from me.

In closing your letter you say, "I do not ask you to place before the Committee any papers which Mr. Tilton may have given you; but I do demand that you forthwith place before the Committee every paper which I have written or deposited with you." In reply I can only say that I cannot justly place before the Committee the papers of one of the parties without doing the same with the papers of the other, and I cannot do this honorably except either by legal process compelling me or else by consent in writing, not only of yourself but of Mr. Tilton, with whom I shall confer on the subject as speedily as possible.

You will, I trust, see a greater spirit of justice in this reply than you have infused into your unusual letter of August 4th.

Very respectfully,

FRANCIS D. MOULTON.

[Marked "Exhibit D 6."]

Mr. Evarts—Now, we offer the letter to which that is an answer, it having been communicated to Mr. Tilton, read by him, and quoted from by him as parts of his (Mr. Tilton's) written reply, to be signed by Moulton.

Mr. Beach—That statement may probably be assumed to be true, Sir, from what has already appeared; but still it is not evidence, and I think it should appear by the direct examination of the witness before we withdraw our objection to its introduction. Whether the contents were brought to his observation—submitted to him—I don't know. It will be easy to prove it if it is a fact.

Judge Neilson—Suppose you interrogate him upon that subject.

Mr. Evarts—I dare say, your Honor, that it is proper that it should be done, but I make this suggestion: as there is no pretense that there was any other letter of the 4th of August from Mr. Beecher, and as this letter which I have read, every word of which was written by Mr. Tilton, is in answer in terms referring to the date of Mr. Beecher's letter—his unusual letter—and making three separate quotations from it, on every principle of evidence that has ever been practiced upon in a civil or criminal suit, the writer of an answer to a letter is affected with a knowledge of the letter which he is answering. Now, I submit to your Honor that it is but an idle form to proceed any further.

Mr. Beach—That would be true, Sir, if the letter to which the reply is made was addressed to the party making the reply, or if the whole of the letter had been quoted in the reply. Here are two parties engaged in preparing this answer. It does not appear that Mr. Tilton wrote the whole of the answer, or that he did not write portions of it at the dictation of Mr. Moulton. It does not appear, but the quotations in the answer were given by Mr. Moulton to Mr. Tilton to be incorporated in it; and it is those, perhaps somewhat technical matters, which, I insist, ought to appear before the whole of Mr. Beecher's letter is permitted to be read.

Judge Neilson—I think it is proper to interrogate the witness upon that subject.

Mr. Evarts—Does your Honor rule that this letter is not admissible without an interrogation?

Judge Neilson—I expressed a wish, Sir, that he should be asked that question.

By Mr. Porter—Did Mr. Tilton see the letter from which he quoted these passages in the reply? A. I think he did, Sir.

Mr. Beach—Wait one moment, Sir. I object to that question as assuming that Mr. Tilton quoted these passages in the reply.

Q. Did Mr. Tilton quote these passages in the reply? A. They were quoted in the reply which was made by Mr. Tilton and myself. The reply was jointly Mr. Tilton's and my own.

Q. And the letter was before you from which the extracts were taken? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. And the reply to the letter was made with reference to the letter to which it was a reply? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. By you and by Mr. Tilton? A. By Mr. Tilton and myself.

Judge Neilson—Now, I think the letter may come in.

Mr. Beach—Yes, Sir; I think it is competent.

Mr. Evarts—Have you the original?

Mr. Morris—I cannot find it. You may read from the copy.

Mr. Evarts—We will read it, but still we want to see all these original papers.

Mr. Morris—I will find it at my leisure.

Mr. Evarts—We have not seen these papers. The other side have seen them all. I would like to see them.

Mr. Morris—All the papers that we have we will furnish.

Mr. Beach—You saw this one—your own letter, I suppose.

Mr. Morris—They have served a subpoena upon us, and I have requested them to make a list of the papers that they want, and I give them notice again, or they will have to wait until we can find it.

Judge Neilson—I think it will be well, Mr. Shearman, to make a list.

Mr. Porter—(Reading):—

BROOKLYN, Aug. 4, 1874.

F. D. MOULTON, Esq.

Sir: Your letter, bearing date Aug. 4, 1874, is this moment received. Allow me to express my regret and astonishment that you refuse me permission even to see certain letters and papers in your possession, relating to the charges made against me by Theodore Tilton, and at the reasons given for the refusal.

On your solemn and repeated assurances of personal friendship, and in the unquestioning confidence with which you inspired me of your honor and fidelity, I placed in your hands for safe-keeping, various letters addressed to me from my brother, my sister, and various other parties; also, memoranda of affairs not immediately connected with Mr. Tilton's matters. I also, from time to time, addressed you confidential notes, relating to my own self, as one friend would write to another. These papers were never placed in your hands to be held for two parties, nor to be used in any way. They were to be held for me. I did not wish them to be subject to risk of loss or scattering, from my careless habits in the manner of preserving documents. They were to be held for me. In so far as these papers were concerned, you were only a friendly trustee, holding papers subject to my wishes.

Mr. Tilton has made a deadly assault upon me, and has used letters and fragments of letters, purporting to be copies of these papers. Are these extracts genuine? Are they garbled? What are their dates? What, if anything, has been left out, and what put in?

You refuse my demand for these papers on the various pleas that if I speak the truth in my statement, I do not need them; that if I make a successful use of them it will be an injury to Mr. Tilton, and that you, as a friend of both parties, are bound not to aid either in any act that shall injure the other.

But I do not desire to injure any one, but to repel an injury attempted upon me by the use of papers committed sacredly to your care. These documents have been seen and copied; they have been hawked for sale in New York newspaper offices; what purport to be my confidential notes to you are on the market. But when I demand a sight of the originals of papers of which you are only a trustee, that I may defend myself, you refuse, because you are the friend of both parties!

Mr. Tilton has access to your depository for materials with which to strike me, but I am not permitted to use them in defending myself!

I do not ask you to place before the Committee any papers which Mr. Tilton may have given you. But I do demand that you forthwith place before the Committee every paper which I have written or deposited with you.

Yours truly,

H. W. BEECHER.

[Marked "Exhibit D. 7."] ]

TILTON'S ACCOUNT WITH MOULTON'S FIRM.

Mr. Porter—Have you the account, Mr. Moulton?

A. Yes, Sir. Which one, Sir?

Q. Both, if you please. A. There is the first one—Mr. Tilton's—and there is the other [producing papers].

Q. This is a transcript of the account of your firm with Theodore Tilton? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. It is a correct transcript of that account, and of the whole of it? A. I believe it to be so, Sir; our accountant made it.

Mr. Porter—I will introduce in evidence first the account of Theodore Tilton with Woodruff & Robinson. I will ask Mr. Hill to read it.

Mr. Hill [reading].

THEO. TILTON in acct. with WOODRUFF &amp; ROBINSON.

		(DEBIT.)
1871.	Feb. 3—To Cash	.....	$500 00
	18—do	.....	500 00
	24—do	.....	500 00
Mar.	4—do	.....	500 00
	8—do	.....	1,500 00
	1—do	.....	500 00
Nov.	15—do	.....	1,113 63
	25—do	.....	250 00
1872.	Jan. 20—do	.....	1,000 00
	Apl. 26—do	.....	15 00
	May 27—do	.....	100 00
	" 27—do	.....	100 00
	" 27—do	.....	500 00
June	8—do	.....	500 00
	11—F. Woodruff guard int. on B. & M.	.....	240 63
July	8—Cash	.....	250 00
Aug.	12—do	.....	1,300 00
	22—do	.....	300 00
Sept.	1—do	.....	1,813 91
Nov.	8—F. Woodruff guard. int. on B. & M.	.....	297 60
	8—Cash	.....	500 00
Dec.	27—do	.....	600 00
1873.	Apl. 21—do	.....	170 48
			$12,981 15

		(CREDIT.)
1871.	Jan. 7—By Cash	.....	$4,004 08
May	1—By bal. Interest on acc't	.....	45 21
Nov.	13—By Cash	.....	500 00
Nov.	20—do	.....	250 00
1872.	Jan. 24—do	.....	1,000 00
	Apl. 5—do	.....	7,000 00
	May 28—do	.....	100 00
Nov.	8—By bal. Interest on acc't	.....	71 28
Apl.	21—do	.....	10 65
			$12,981 15

Mr. Fullerton—Balancing the account?

Mr. Hill—They balance.

MOULTON'S STEWARDSHIP.

Q. The other paper which you produce purports to be a statement of receipts and disbursements of money received from H. W. Beecher by F. D. Moulton; is this a correct statement of those? A. It is a correct statement, Sir, as far as our books are concerned; I think that there are one or two checks left out; I cannot say that there are, but my impression—not checks, but currency; currency; I think there were two payments to me in currency besides that account.

Mr. Porter—This I offer in evidence.

(Marked "D, No. 9.")

Mr. Hill [reading]—This is a statement of moneys received and disbursed from H. W. Beecher by F. D. Moulton;

		On the Debit Side.
1872.	July 19—Paid Rev. C. C. Beatty, check	.....	$155 87
Aug.	19— " Mrs. Theo. Tilton "	.....	150 00
1873.	Jan. 19— " " "	.....	50 00
May	28— " Rev. A. M. Read, check	.....	219 75
	28— " Mrs. T. Tilton "	.....	25 00
July	8— " Rev. A. M. Read	.....	118 12
Oct.	24—Paid Mrs. T. Tilton	.....	50 60
1873.	Mar. 7— " Rev. C. C. Beatty, check	.....	245 00
April	5— " Mrs. T. Tilton, bal'ce of $500	.....	255 00
May	3— " Theo. Tilton, check	.....	1,600 00
July	11— " Tilton, indorsed by W. Ruland, attorney, check	.....	650 00
Aug.	15—Paid to Theo. Tilton, check	.....	250 00
Sept.	12— " " " "	.....	500 00
	30— " " " "	.....	500 00
Dec.	9— " " " "	.....	260 00
	16— " A. M. Read, check	.....	200 00

1874.	Feb. 24— " Theodore Tilton, Mrs. T. T., cashed for check	.....	500 00
M'ch	30—Paid Theodore Tilton, O. W. Ruland, check	.....	$400 00
May	2—Paid Theodore Tilton, indorsed Golden Age , by O. W. Ruland, attorney	.....	250 00
	" 26—Paid Theodore Tilton, check	.....	300 00

Footling, in pencil ..... $6,078 15

		The Credit Side.
1871.	June 26—Received check, H. W. Beecher	.....	$155 85
Nov.	14— " " of "	.....	150 00
1872.	May 31— " " " "	.....	294 76
1873.	Feb. 18— " " " "	.....	500 00
May	2— " cash	.....	5,000 00

In pencil, footing ..... $6,100 61

Mr. Beach (smiling)—So it seems Mr. Beecher has a balance there yet?

Mr. Porter—From what is this statement taken—I refer to the one last introduced in evidence? A. From the ledger of Woodruff & Robinson.

Q. The entries were made at the time of the respective dates in the books of your firm? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Is the title of the account in the book that which appears in the paper? A. What is the title there, Sir? I don't—

Q. "Statement of accounts," etc.? A. No, Sir; it is taken from my account on the ledger, "Francis D. Moulton," I judge—from my account; from my own individual account, Sir.

Q. Could you bring the book and explain, or will it be necessary? A. The accountant will come, Sir, or the books.

Q. If you will do that, be kind enough to do so to-morrow; it will take less time to explain. A. Have the accountant or the books, Sir? You need the cash book and the ledger, then—you will need several cash books—cash books and the ledger.

Mr. Porter—Oh! I guess we won't want anything but the ledger; just the ledger, in order to show how it appeared.

Mr. Beach—I understand the witness to say that this is extracted from his account with the firm. I understand that; but we would like to see how it entered into his account. It is only a matter of explanation; it is much more simply done by having the book here than it is by taking the pen and—

The Witness—I can't tell you exactly how it—

Mr. Porter—How does it happen that all the sums which were received from Mr. Beecher don't appear? A. My impression is, Sir, that I received some currency from him that I immediately paid out, and which I did not deposit there and draw from.

Mr. Beach—That you did not deposit? A. That I did not deposit.

Mr. Porter—There were several instances of that kind? A. I don't know that there were several; I think there were one or two; I won't be certain about it.

Q. Have you any means of ascertaining the amounts? A. No, Sir; nothing but an impression that I have.

Q. Have you kept no memorandum? A. No, Sir; that is the memorandum as far as I have any, Sir; I have no other.

Q. This, then, is not in your books a continuous account in respect to the five thousand dollars, as well as the other matters which you say were an account of these? A. It is not in what?

Q. It is not a continuous and intermingled account? A. It is an intermingled account; yes, Sir. As I received the checks, I had the money deposited to my credit. The dates there will show. The dates and the checks will show when the amounts are placed to my credit.

By Judge Neilson—I understand there were these intermediate deposits in other matters? A. Yes, Sir; there might have been.

Judge Porter—If the books were kept as an account between you and the firm, how was it indicated that the transactions related to Mr. Beecher? A. A memorandum was put down there, Sir.

Q. And is that memorandum transcribed in full? A. I presume it is, Sir.

Mr. Beach—Oh! no; I guess not.

The Witness—I received the account with a letter from Mr. Eddy, our accountant, stating that he had taken off the account; I have not examined it.

Q. If you would be kind enough to look at it between now and to-morrow—you have one copy of this, I suppose? A. No, Sir; I have not.

Q. I thought Mr. Tilton had one in pencil? A. Mr. Tilton has one, in pencil, of his own; this is another matter; Mr. Tilton has a memorandum of the account with me.

Mr. Beach—This cannot be an account from the book. For instance, the first charge, "Paid by Rev. C. C. Beatty, check —"

Mr. Evarts—We shall have to have the books; we need not detain them.

Mr. Beach—There is nothing here to show that the checks which you paid to Beatty, or to the Rev. Mr. Read, were on behalf of Mr. Beecher? A. Yes, Sir; you will find corresponding amounts to the credit of the account there—to my credit; the checks that I paid were paid to C. C.—

Q. What is there on the books to show that the checks paid to the Rev. Mr. Beatty or Mr. Read, were paid on behalf of Mr. Beecher, or out of the Beecher account? A. What was there on the book to show that?

Mr. Porter—Yea.

The Witness—There's no other money for it to come from but Mr. Beecher's money. That account was paid from no other money but the money that Mr. Beecher gave me.

Mr. Evarts—The books do not show that.

The Witness—The books show, I think, that the entry on the book is, "Paid C. C. Beatty." Now, then, what is—

Mr. Evarts—But, what is there on the books to show that that is from Mr. Beecher? A. The credit on the book to me is a check from Mr. Beecher, Sir; you will find it on the credit account.

Q. Corresponding in amount? A. Yes, Sir; corresponding in amount.

Q. In that way? A. Yes, Sir; if you will allow me, Mr. Porter, I will try and indicate what I mean from the paper itself. For instance, to my credit there is placed a check June 26th, $155 85; paid Rev. C. C. Beatty, $155 27. Then there is received a check from H. W. Beecher, $150; paid Mrs. Theodore Tilton, $150. Then there is paid Mrs. Theodore Tilton, $50; paid Rev. A. M. Read, $219 76; paid Mrs. Theodore Tilton $25, and received from Mr. Beecher $294 76 to offset that. Then there is received different sums credited to me $500, and that is paid to C. C. Beatty $245, and to Mrs. Theodore Tilton $255, which offsets that $500, and the account balances. Then you come to the $5,000; paid Theodore Tilton, May 3d, $1,000 on that; July 11th, $650, paid Theodore Tilton, "indorsed O. W. Ruland, attorney," $650—and August 15th paid $250—all that comes out of the $5,000. Then $500, $260; A. M. Read, $260; Theodore Tilton, cash for Mrs. T., $500; Theodore Tilton, indorsed by Ruland, $400, and so on down, so that it leaves a balance in Mr. Beecher's favor here of—I don't know how much it was, Sir, to balance.

Mr. Beach—$22? A. $22.

Mr. Porter—Is there in the accounts of your firm, in any part, anything to show the transactions between you and Mr. Tilton not embraced in these two papers? A. Between myself personally and Mr. Tilton? No, Sir.

Q. If I understand you there was no account between your firm and Mr. Beecher? A. No, Sir.

Q. At any time? A. No, Sir.

Q. Nor between you and Mr. Beecher on the books of the firm? A. No, Sir.

Mr. Beach—Yes, Sir; but not in Mr. Beecher's name? A. Not in Mr. Beecher's name.

Mr. Porter—Well, there is this which is in his own name. The occasion for its appearing upon the books of the firm arose only when the moneys you received were deposited by you with the firm? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. And when the moneys paid out were paid by checks of the firm? A. Yes, Sir; or by currency of the firm.

Q. Or by currency? A. Or by currency.

Q. Of the firm? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Where they were paid out of the currency from Mr. Beecher, they did not appear in the books of the firm—where you made a payment from funds received from Mr. Beecher which had not gone to the firm, there is no entry anywhere with regard to them? A. No, Sir; when I received currency—let me see if I understand your question by my answer, Sir—if I received currency from Mr. Beecher and paid it out immediately and did not deposit it with the firm, then there would be no account of it.

Q. So that there is no complete account in existence, so far as you are aware? A. Unless that be a complete account.

Q. And this, you think, is incomplete? A. I stated, Sir, that there is an impression in my mind that I received from Mr. Beecher twice money that is not there.

Q. Are you able to say that you did not do so three times? A. Oh! if I should undertake to state the truth I should state it in that way that I did not three times.

Q. Well, are you able to? You put it hypothetically? A. Yes, Sir; I should say that I had not three times.

Q. Can you state the amounts on those two occasions? A. I cannot, Sir. I think on one of the occasions there was $300—no, Sir.

Q. And the other a larger or less sum, should you think? A. I should think it was much about the same; perhaps $500; and I think there was one of $500.

Q. Making the total amount received from Mr. Beecher $6,878 15? A. Whatever makes the total amount, Sir.

Q. $6,900. I will now ask you a few questions in regard to the other account, returning to this at a later stage of the examination. You received from Mr. Tilton, I perceive by this account, on the 7th of January, 1871, $4,000?

Mr. Fullerton—That is the other account.

Mr. Porter—Yes, Sir, $4,004 08. [To the witness]: The first draft made upon that was on the 23d of February, $500; did the $5,000 received from Mr. Beecher enter into this account in any form? A. I don't think it did, Sir; if you will allow me, I will see whether it did or not on that paper.

Q. I assume it did not. A. I don't think it is in there, Sir; it is not there.

Q. Do you know how Mr. Tilton had before transacted his financial matters, whether with banks or bankers? A. I think he had money in bank and money with individuals.

Q. But never with your firm until then? A. No, Sir.

Q. How was this $4,000 deposited? A. It was money which Mr. Tilton gave to me to be deposited.

Q. Was it in currency or in checks? A. I think very likely it was in checks, Sir; I don't remember.

Q. On the 6th of April, I observe, there was a deposit with your firm of $7,000; do you remember whether that was by check or in currency? A. Mr. Henry C. Bowen's check; it was either Henry C. Bowen's check or currency drawn on Henry C. Bowen's check and deposited.

CURIOUS WAY OF STARTING A PAPER.

Q. When was The Golden Age established? A. In March, I think, Sir, of 1871.

Q. Who was the proprietor and editor of that paper? A. Mr. Tilton was the editor of the paper.

Q. Was he publisher? A. He was the publisher.

Q. The proprietor? A. Well, the proprietor—I hardly know how to answer that question; Mr. Tilton's notes were given, payable, if the paper was made a success, to the parties who contributed to the paper; I suppose he might be called the proprietor of the paper.

Q. Were you one of those who gave notes for that purpose? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Or received his note, I should say, for that purpose? A. Yes, Sir, I received his note.

Q. To what extent were you a contributor? A. I think I contributed $1,500 at that time; subscribed $3,000.

Q. How is that, Sir? A. I subscribed $3,000.

Q. You paid $1,500? A. Yes, Sir; $1,500 was paid at that time.

Q. When did you subscribe? A. I don't remember the date—in the beginning, when subscriptions were made.

Q. Probably shortly before the paper began; before the publication of the paper? A. I should think it was; yes, Sir.

Q. When did you pay that $1,500? A. I don't remember, Sir, when I paid it; I haven't any means of stating just now; I will find out for you, Sir.

Q. The books show? A. Yes, Sir; the books—

Q. You have no idea about the time? A. No; I haven't.

Q. Nor whether it was that year? A. Oh! it was that year.

Q. Have you an idea whether it was that Spring? A. I think it was.

Q. Paid it in cash? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. You received from Mr. Tilton a note for the amount? A. Subsequently; yes, Sir, which I returned to him.

Q. When did you receive it? A. When did I receive the note?

Q. When did you receive it? A. I cannot tell the date of it, Sir; I have no means of telling just now.

Q. The note came immediately after you had sent the amount I suppose? A. The notes were arranged by my partner, Mr. Woodruff, Sir; I don't know when they came; they were arranged for me as for all the rest, as for himself.

Q. Was the other $1,500 ever paid? A. I think not, Sir; we gave back the notes to Mr. Tilton, and made the whole thing a gift, so that he became the sole proprietor of The Golden Age.

Q. That was after he had published the Life of Victoria Woodhull? A. I think it was; I would not be certain about that, though.

Q. You will not? A. No, Sir.

Mr. Fullerton—Well, it does not appear that he published the Life of Victoria Woodhull at all yet. If you want to prove that you must prove it in some other way.

Q. What interval do you think occurred between the receipt of those notes and their surrender? A. I think that the notes were surrendered the latter part of the year. I think I can ascertain positively, though, for you.

Q. Of the year 1871? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Were they surrendered at the same time with the notes of other contributors? A. I believe they were.

Q. What was the aggregate of the contribution? A. I do not remember what the aggregate was.

Q. About how much?

Mr. Beach—I don't perceive the materiality of this inquiry, if your Honor please.

Mr. Porter—Its materiality will appear hereafter.

Mr. Beach—Well, wait one moment. The gentlemen say they will make it material. It should be shown to be material now. How much Mr. Tilton was aided in the business enterprise of publishing The Golden Age, by his friends, does not seem to me to be material.

Mr. Ryarts—Not of itself, it is not, but it is a necessary part of material evidence.

Judge Neilson—I think the counsel has that subject about exhausted; perhaps he had better finish it.

Mr. Porter—Just that point; it is all I desire. A. About $6,000 I should think.

Q. Of the whole? A. About $6,000; yes, Sir.

Q. If I understand you, these were payable only in case it should be proved a success? A. I think—

Mr. Beach—One moment.

Mr. Porter—Did it prove a success?

Judge Neilson—He said that.

Mr. Porter—I wanted to see if it was a success.

Mr. Beach—You wanted to see whether you understood his answer by putting another question.

Mr. Porter—Well, I put that now. [To the Witness]: Did it prove a success?

Judge Neilson—I think he may answer that.

Mr. Porter—Did the paper prove a success? A. The paper was carried on. I don't know whether you call it a success or not; it didn't—the payment back—the giving back of these notes was not in accordance with the provision; it was in accordance with the idea of my partner, Mr. Woodruff, that Mr. Tilton had better be the sole proprietor, and instead of running it upon obligation any longer than the amount he had already incurred, that he had better undertake to run the paper on what he had, and own it himself, so that the property was given—that the money was given outright to him; that is the—

Q. The further obligation of the subscription was given up? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Did any other members of your firm separately contribute? A. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Fullerton—Well, we object to that, if the Court please.

Judge Neilson—He has answered it.

Mr. Porter—Well, we waive that, Sir.

To the Witness—Did you lend anything to him individually?

A. I have from time to time let him have money; yes, I think.

Q. Is there an account of it in the books? A. No, Sir.

Q. Is there an account of it in writing, anywhere? A. No, Sir; I don't think there is; when I found he wanted money, I let him have money if I had it.

Q. In currency? A. Sometimes, and sometimes in checks; generally in currency.

Q. Sometimes in checks? A. I don't remember that I—I don't remember whether—I suppose very likely there is some in checks; that is, may be.

Q. Have you those checks? A. I should suppose I ought to have them. Yes, Sir, they will be in the concern; if I paid him any money in checks, they would appear.

Q. I ask you to look for that. A. I will.

Mr. Fullerton—That we shall object to. We shall object to that.

Mr. Morrison—The checks for 30 or 40 millions of money; it would take about four months.

Mr. Beach—If he chooses to look for you, of course we shall not object to it.

Mr. Fullerton—But we shall object to the evidence if the checks are produced.

Judge Neilson—Well, as matter of courtesy, the witness may look.

Mr. Fullerton—Well, to go into the details of their transaction here, seems to me to be out of place entirely.

By Mr. Porter—Have all those loans been repaid? A. No, Sir.

Q. Have any of them? A. No, Sir.

Q. During what period were they made? A. From 1871 down.

Q. To what period; down to the present time? A. Yes, Sir; down to the present time; not very much lately.

Q. How much in the aggregate? A. I really could not tell you, Sir.

Q. Have you no idea? A. No, Sir; I have not.

Q. Not within a few thousand dollars? A. No, Sir; they don't amount to a few thousand dollars; they don't amount to over a few thousand dollars; I should not think, in all, over $2,000; I don't think.

Q. You can say that they didn't amount to over $10,000? A. I know they didn't amount to over $10,000.

Q. Nor over five? A. Nor over five.

Q. Have you indorsed for him? A. No, Sir.

Q. Nor become responsible for him? A. No, Sir.

Q. At the time this $5,000 was paid by Mr. Beecher, can you tell what was the amount that Mr. Tilton owed to your firm?

A. What was the amount that Mr. Tilton owed to our firm?

Q. Yes, Sir. A. I don't think he owed anything to our firm.

Q. Can you tell what was the amount he owed to you? A. I cannot.

Q. Nor approximately? A. No.

Q. I now refer to the subject of your relations with these parties briefly—did Mr. Tilton draw checks on your firm? A. Draw checks; no.

Q. Did Mr. Tilton draw checks on your firm? A. No; I think he came down for the money when he wanted it, or else drew a draft. I don't know precisely how he did draw it out.

Q. Drew a draft? A. I think very likely; or came himself for our check.

Q. Will you be kind enough to see how that was, if these are the drafts?

Mr. Beach—I think you had better give him a memorandum of what you want, or let him take it, for he certainly wont remember all those requests.

Mr. Porter—I come now to the incidents of the evening of December the 30th; had you seen Mr. Tilton that day, previous to your interview with him in the evening? A. My impression is that I had not, Sir.

Q. He came to your house? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. At his request you went to the house of Mr. Beecher? A. I did, Sir.

Q. On your arrival there, did you meet Mr. Beecher at the door? A. I don't remember that I met him at the door.

Q. Did you, when you met him, meet him in a kindly spirit? A. I saluted him, Sir, as one gentleman should another.

Q. How is that? A. I saluted him as one gentleman should another, at the time, in his own house.

Q. Were you peremptory in your manner? A. I told him Mr. Tilton wanted him to come to my house.

Q. I ask if you were peremptory in your manner? A. I was polite, Sir, in my manner. I don't—

Q. Will you repeat the first words you used after greeting him? A. I said, "Mr. Beecher, Mr. Tilton wants you to come down to my house."

Q. What else? A. And he said then, that it was prayer meeting night and he didn't think he could come, and I then said: "Mr. Tilton wants to see you with regard to your relations with his family, and with regard to the letter which he sent to you through Mr. Bowen, and you had better make arrangements to let the prayer meeting go and come down with me."

Q. You had heard of that letter before? A. What letter; the letter of—

Q. Bowen? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. From whom? A. From Mr. Tilton.

Q. When? A. December 26th.

Q. Where? A. At Mr. Tilton's house.

Q. Did Mr. Tilton come to see you about it, or did you go to see him about it? A. About that letter?

Q. Yes, sir? A. No, Sir.

Q. Did he send for you? A. No, Sir.

MOULTON'S FIRST CONNECTION WITH THE SCANDAL.

Q. You were there casually? A. I think I was there casually; yes, Sir.

Q. He showed you the draft of that letter? A. He told me that he had sent a letter; he didn't show me a draft of a letter; told me what it was: what the substance of it was.

Q. What was said about it by Mr. Tilton. He said that he had written—that Bowen had told him of Mr. Beecher's adulteries, and he had told Mr. Bowen that Mr. Beecher had been guilty of unhandsome advances toward his wife, and that had Mr. Bowen's challenge; he had written such a letter, and he told me what the letter was.

Q. Did he tell you no more particularly what adulteries Mr. Bowen had charged upon Mr. Beecher? A. I think he told me that Mr. Bowen had charged various adulteries upon Mr. Beecher, and that Mr. Beecher had made confession to him of adulteries.

By Mr. Evarts—That is, Mr. Bowen said so? A. Yes; Mr. Bowen said so.

By Mr. Porter—Did he specify those adulteries? A. No; he did not specify them.

Q. Did he specify any of the parties who were connected with those charges? A. No, Sir.

Q. Well, what did you say to that? A. I asked him if Mr. Bowen had signed the letter with him. I asked him what unhandsome advances Mr. Beecher had made. He told me not to ask him, he didn't want to tell me. Well, I said "Why did you send the letter through Bowen; if he was a party to that demand, why didn't you get his signature." I told him he was a fool for sending such a letter without the signature of Mr. Bowen.

Q. Was that your conversation: that he was a fool for sending it? A. Yes, Sir; without Bowen's signature.

Q. Go on. A. And he said that Mr. Bowen had promised to furnish him the evidences.

Q. On that occasion? A. No, Sir; whenever it was necessary to enforce the demand of the letter.

Q. He did then; he told you that Mr. Bowen in that interview had promised to furnish him with the evidences? A. Yes, Sir; he gave that to me as an excuse for not having had Mr. Bowen's signature when I—that is it.

Q. All that occurred at the interview? A. And I took a memorandum of what he told me. I believe the memorandum was published in my statement concerning—

Mr. Fullerton—Never mind that statement.

The Witness—Pardon me.

Q. Was that the day on which you noted the precise hour of your entering upon—of your becoming connected with this controversy? A. I noted the precise hour at which Mr. Tilton gave me the information that he gave me at that interview.

Q. What did you note it in? A. Put it on a piece of paper.

Q. Have you that paper? A. It is here.

Q. Was it a detached slip of paper? A. I don't remember; the paper will show for itself; I wrote it down.

Q. Have you it here? A. Yes, Sir; it is amongst my papers I think.

Mr. Porter—I ask for that paper.

Mr. Beach—Well, you are not entitled to see it unless you want it for evidence.

Mr. Evarts—We have a right to see it to determine whether we want it for evidence.

Mr. Beach—I submit not.

Mr. Evarts—Well, go on.

Mr. Beach—Yes; it is here.

Mr. Porter—Is it at hand?

Mr. Morris—It may take me half an hour to look through here. Unless it is for some purpose I don't propose to do it; I don't wish to.

Judge Neilson—Mr. Morris desires that a memorandum should be made of the particular dates of the documents desired, so as to look for them.

Mr. Beach—No, this presents another question. If they call for this paper as evidence, why that is one thing, and if they merely want it from curiosity to look at it, that is quite another, and we shall not furnish it.

Mr. Evarts—We shall not raise the question until the paper is here.

Mr. Beach—Well, the paper is here, and when you call for it as evidence we will look for it; and if not, we shall not.

Judge Neilson—Well, I think if you would give a memorandum of the dates of the papers to be produced it would save time.

Mr. Beach—It won't save any time, it is likely.

Mr. Fullerton—Well, all suggestion upon that subject has been wasted so far.

Judge Nelson—What could be done if the paper were brought here is quite another thing.

Mr. Fullerton—Well, the rule of evidence is very clear. If they call for it it comes.

Mr. Evarts—It would seem to be very clear from the witness that he made a memorandum at the time: that we have a right to look at it for the purpose of testing his evidence, if nothing else.

Judge Nelson—I don't need to pass upon that now.

Mr. Evarts—The paper is not here, so that we cannot raise these questions.

Mr. Porter—What was the day and the hour of the day when this communication was made? A. It was December the 26th, Sir, I think, in the afternoon.

Q. What was the hour? A. Somewhere around three o'clock, I think.

Q. When did you note the hour? A. Well, it was a pretty important communication, and I made a memorandum of it on that account.

Q. Important to you? A. No; important to Mr. Tilton.

Q. The memorandum was made for his convenience? A. I made a memorandum of it because I thought it was worth while to make a memorandum of so important an occurrence, and as his friend I made it.

Q. Did he ask you to make one? A. No, he did not; it was my own thought.

Q. You have given all the conversation that occurred between you on that occasion? A. As I at present remember the conversation; yes, Sir.

Q. Did you see him afterwards before the 30th? A. Yes, Sir, I did.

Q. Several times? A. Yes; I think I saw him two or three times.

Q. At your house and at his? A. Yes, Sir, I think at my house and at his.

Q. Did you see him on the 27th? A. I think I saw him on the 27th; yes, Sir.

Q. What occurred between you on that occasion? Where was that, first? A. I don't know whether it was the 27th or not, but the next interview that I remember with him I can give you.

Q. Where was it? A. I think it was at my house—I think so—I think it was at my house.

Q. Did he come voluntarily? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Not in pursuance of any agreement between you? A. No, Sir.

Q. Nor at your request? A. No, Sir.

Q. What took place; state fully? A. At the interview I am speaking of now, he told me he had sent word to Mr. Bowen that he was going to see Mr. Beecher within a short time, and wanted him (Bowen) to furnish him with the evidences he promised him to furnish him with, and that Mr. Bowen had come into his presence and told Mr. Tilton that he told Mr. Beecher that he (Bowen) said he would dismiss him from the papers

Q. What papers? A. Dismiss him from his employ, rather.

Q. What did he say to that? A. He said he would not be influenced by any threat; he would do whatever in his judgment he thought was best.

Q. Did he represent that at an interview? A. Between himself and Mr. Bowen?

Q. Yes, Sir. A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Was anything said in connection with the presentation of the letter by Mr. Bowen to Mr. Beecher? A. No, Sir.

Q. Did you understand that the interview was after that had been done? A. I did not understand whether it was before or after. It was in reference to the subject I have here spoken of.

Q. You did not then know whether it had or had not been there? A. No, Sir.

Q. Had he said anything to you about it on the 26th?

Mr. Fullerton—About what?

Mr. Porter—About the sending of that letter to Mr. Bowen. [To the Witness.] My associate and I don't understand you right. Was this angry interview before or after you understand the note had been sent to Mr. Beecher? A. I didn't understand anything about the note having been delivered to Mr. Beecher at that interview.

Q. Was anything further said upon that subject then, or upon any subject? A. No, Sir; not that I remember of.

Q. What was said on that occasion at that interview? A. That is the substance of it.

Q. Do you mean to say that you have already told all that was said? A. Yes, Sir; all that was said with Mr. Tilton.

Q. Did he consult you as to his relations with Mr. Bowen? A. Did he consult me then as to his relations with Mr. Bowen? No; there was no consultation as to his relations with Mr. Bowen.

Q. Was there any conversation about the probability of the termination of their relations? A. No, Sir.

Q. And about the probable dismissal of Mr. Tilton? A. Nothing further than I have narrated.

Q. Was this a short interview with Mr. Tilton? A. It was not a very long one; I don't know how long it lasted.

Q. Only long enough for that to transpire? A. I would not say it was only long enough for that.

Q. Was anything at that time proposed to be done either by him or by you? A. No, Sir; I think not.

Q. Was anything said at that time about Mrs. Tilton? A. I don't think there was at that interview.

Q. When was the next interview that you remember? A. The next interview was on the evening of December 30th, or the afternoon or evening of December 30th, that I remember.

Q. I understood you to say there were several interviews between the 26th? A. The next interview that I remembered, I said.

Q. Had there been any conversation between you and him in regard to procuring a statement from Mrs. Tilton? A. No, Sir.

Q. None before the 29th, nor on the 30th? A. None before the 29th—if you will put the question so that I can clearly understand it

Q. Nor on the 30th? A. Will you put the question in full, please?

Q. None before the evening of the 30th? A. I don't exactly understand you.

Q. Any conversation between you and him about Mrs. Tilton before the evening of the 30th? A. No, Sir; I think not.

Q. When Mr. Tilton came to your house that evening, were you aware that Mr. Bowen failed to sustain that demand for Mr. Beecher's retirement? A. I had no conversation with Mr. Tilton about that.

Q. And hadn't heard of it? A. Hadn't heard whether he had failed or not, Sir, that I remember now.

Q. You say that Mr. Tilton's letter of the 1st of January, 1871, to Mr. Bowen, gives, in substance, and more in detail, what Mr. Tilton had said to you in the conversations of December 26th, and that of a day or two after? The conversation of a day or two after is the one referring to the excited interview? A. He gives in the letter to Mr. Bowen, bearing date January 1st, 1871, the substance of the interviews which he had with Mr. Bowen.

Q. Did Mr. Tilton, in these preceding interviews, or either of them, avow his belief in the truth of Mr. Bowen's statement in regard to Mr. Beecher? A. He said he had no doubt of the truth of Mr. Bowen's statement. On December 26th I think he said that.

Q. Did he add any statement of his own? A. Yes, Sir; he said he had no doubt, on account of the unhandsome advances which he knew Mr. Beecher had made to his wife; that, I think, he said on December 26th.

Q. Did he mention any rumors that had come to himself in regard to Mr. Beecher's moral character? A. I don't remember that he did.

TILTON'S FIRST CHARGE AGAINST BEECHER.

Q. Had Mr. Tilton ever said anything to you before, in regard to the moral character of Mr. Beecher, except on the occasion to which you adverted? A. With regard to the moral character of Mr. Beecher?

Q. Against the moral character of Mr. Beecher? A. I think Mr. Tilton, anterior to December 26th, had said that Mr. Beecher preached to his mistresses in Plymouth Church.

Q. When was that? A. I don't remember the date, but it was previous to December 26th.

Q. Years previous? A. No, Sir; not years.

Q. Who was present on any occasion when he used that precise language? A. I don't remember that anybody was.

Q. Are you able to say whether it was in, or before, 1870? A. It was in 1870.

Q. Are you able to say whether it was in the beginning or the latter part of that year? A. I should think it was the latter part—the last half of the year.

Q. Did he name those mistresses? A. No, Sir; he didn't.

Q. Did you make any inquiry about it? A. I did not.

Q. Prior to that, had he ever said anything to you to the detriment of Mr. Beecher's moral character? A. I think that he never said anything to the detriment of his moral character previous to 1870. He talked with me about his courage—his lack of political courage.

Q. When first, in 1870, had he spoken against his moral character otherwise? A. When what?

Q. When first, in 1870, had he spoken against his moral character otherwise? A. I thought I had answered the question.

Q. No; you answered that he did in the latter part of the year. I inquired had he before, in 1870, spoken against his moral character? A. I don't remember distinctly, Sir, that he had.

Q. You are unable to say either way upon that subject? A. Yes, Sir; I am unable to answer.

Q. When was it he had spoken in respect to his want of political courage? A. I think about the time of the Cleveland letter, whenever that was.

Q. Do you remember about what year that was? A. No, Sir; I don't. Whether it was about the time of the Cleveland letter that he spoke to him—it was certainly concerning the Cleveland letter.

Q. When he told you that Mr. Beecher preached to several of his mistresses, did you believe it?

Mr. Beach—Wait one moment.

Mr. Porter—I submit it to your Honor.

Judge Neilson—Please repeat the question.

Mr. Porter—My question was when Mr. Tilton, in 1870, told you that Mr. Beecher preached to a dozen of his mistresses, did you believe it?

Mr. Morris—He didn't say that; he didn't use that language.

Mr. Porter—To several of his mistresses.

Mr. Morris—I am not sure that he used the word "several."

Judge Neilson—Can you state it outside?

Mr. Fullerton—No; the question is, did he believe it?

Mr. Porter—I ask if the witness believed it when Mr. Tilton told him?

Judge Neilson—How is it material?

Mr. Porter—I think it is material to show the state of mind in which he went to the interview with Mr. Beecher, of which Mr. Tilton was aware, and which he had produced.

Judge Neilson—Well, the witness may answer.

Q. [By Mr. Porter]: Did you believe it? A. I couldn't believe it, Sir.

Q. And didn't? A. And didn't.

Q. Was your wife at that time a member of Mr. Beecher's church? A. She was.

Q. Does she continue to be so? A. Her name is still on the roll of Plymouth Church. She has not taken communion there since 1870. She has not partaken of communion in that church since 1870.

Q. Or attended church? A. I won't say since 1870; since she came into possession of the facts in the case.

Mr. Evarts—The date is all we ask—the time.

The Witness—I cannot state the exact date.

Mr. Porter—My inquiry was not about communion. My inquiry was when she ceased to attend Plymouth Church? A. I cannot answer that question, Sir, when she ceased to attend Plymouth Church.

Q. You do not know? A. I do not know.

Q. Did she continue to attend that church after January 1871. A. I think she did for some little time after January, 1871.

Q. Did you attend any church? A. I did not regularly attend any church at that time.

Q. Did you pay for her pew-sitting up to 1874? A. I think we had a pew in the church, and I paid for it. I don't remember whether it was up to 1873, or not. Up to 1873?

Q. Did your wife become an attendant of any other church? A. No, Sir; not that I know of.

Q. Down to the present time? A. Down to the present time.

Q. Had you, prior to 1871, been a regular attendant of Plymouth Church? A. No, Sir.

Q. Nor since? A. Nor since.

Q. When did you last attend Plymouth Church? When were you last there—I mean on the occasion of a religious service? A. On the evening of the report of the Committee, I believe, was the last time that I was there. [Laughter.]

Q. You understood that to be a religious service, did you? A. No, Sir, not very. I understood it to be a meeting in Plymouth Church. I beg pardon for answering your question, Mr. Porter, without understanding it.

Q. My inquiry was when you last attended a religious service at Plymouth Church? A. I didn't understand the question in that way, when I last attended a religious service in Plymouth Church. I don't remember.

Q. Can you remember within a year? A. I think I have been at Plymouth Church within two years, certainly, two or three times.

Q. Do you remember the occasion of your going? A. Within the last two years? No, Sir; I don't remember the occasion particularly.

Q. Was it with your wife? A. I don't remember that.

Q. Have you a distinct recollection of being at all at Plymouth Church since the occasion when you went and sat in Mr. Tilton's pew, and Mr. Beecher came and spoke to you? A. Oh! yes, Sir.

Q. What year was that? A. That was in the year 1868, I think.

Q. Was your wife's uncle, George C. Robinson—were his wife and family attendants and communicants at that church? A. They were.

Q. He was a member of the late firm of Woodruff & Robinson? A. He is a member of the firm of Woodruff & Robinson to-day.

Q. And of the late firm also? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Were you in the habit of contributing to the funds of Plymouth Church? A. If I was ever there when there was a subscription taken up, very likely I subscribed; I don't remember.

Q. But not otherwise, except in the payment of pew rent? A. I think not.

Mr. Evarts—It is now four o'clock, the hour of adjournment, if your Honor please.

Judge Neilson—The audience will wait one moment. I wish the Jury to pass out first. [To the Jury.] Gentlemen, be in your places at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. Mallison—[The Clerk.] The Court stands adjourned until to-morrow morning at eleven o'clock.

The Court thereupon adjourned until 11 o'clock, Wednesday.

EIGHTH DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

MR. TRACY CONDUCTS THE CROSS-EXAMINATION.

THE EVENTS OF THE NIGHT OF MR. BEECHER'S ALLEGED CONFESSION TOLD WITH ADDITIONS—FURTHER CONSIDERATION OF MR. BOWEN'S ALLEGED STORIES ABOUT MR. BEECHER—THE AUTHORSHIP OF MR. MOULTON'S STATEMENTS.

Those who were present at the great Brooklyn trial and complained on Tuesday that the cross-examination of Mr. Moulton by ex-Judge Porter was tedious and wearisome, had no cause for fault-finding on Wednesday. Upon the opening of the Court, Mr. Evarts took occasion to announce the fact that Mr. Porter was suffering severely from a cold, and would be unable to appear in court for at least a day or two. Counsel for the plaintiff were evidently not at all pleased by this announcement, and when Mr. Evarts remarked that the defense might have to divide between two of the counsel the labor of cross-examining Moulton, Messrs. Beach and Fullerton protested vigorously. They held that it was the practice to limit the examination of a witness to one lawyer, and Mr. Fullerton made the suggestion that if the ordinary custom in such matters were not adhered to, it might be advisable to discontinue the trial until Mr. Porter should be able to appear. While the lawyers were earnestly discussing the question, Mr. Moulton appeared entirely cool and unconcerned. He leaned back in his chair, smiled occasionally with a complacent expression, and seemed to derive considerable satisfaction from the sharp tilts between counsel. Mr. Evarts adhered to his proposition with characteristic tenacity. When it became apparent that he would carry his point, Mr. Beach took occasion to refer to the testimony of Mr. Moulton concerning Mr. Tracy's alleged dealings with him. His remarks were very pointed, and his hostility to Mr. Tracy was thinly disguised by the gravity of his manner. When Mr. Evarts remarked that Gen. Tracy needed no vindication there was a murmur of approval from the spectators. Gen. Tracy repelled the imputations made against him in a short but effective speech which closed with the remark: "And for the responsibility I now take I am prepared to answer to my conscience and my God." His dignified and impressive delivery of these words drew out applause which was promptly repressed.

Just before the hour for recess, Gen. Tracy asked

Mr. Moulton to relate the conversation which took place between Mr. Beecher and himself on the night when the defendant is alleged to have confessed that he committed adultery with Mrs. Tilton. Moulton, in the course of his narrative, stated that Mr. Beecher said to him that "he had loved Elizabeth Tilton very much, that the expression—the sexual expression of that love—was just as natural in his opinion, he had thought, as the language he had used to her." Gen. Tracy, with considerable emphasis, asked the witness how it was that in his answer he had paused to add the word "sexual," just as he had done in a similar connection in his direct examination by Mr. Fullerton. This query led to a long and sharp dispute between counsel concerning the correctness and official character of THE TRIBUNE's report of the direct examination. Mr. Beach, in sonorous tones, insisted that Mr. Moulton had not made the correction referred to by Gen. Tracy. Reference to the stenographer's notes disclosed the fact that the witness, when questioned by Mr. Fullerton, said that Mr. Beecher "considered his sexual intercourse with Mrs. Tilton was natural—an expression of his love for her." It appears that in transcribing his notes the stenographer omitted the word "as," and consequently the testimony should have read, "his sexual intercourse with Mrs. Tilton was as natural an expression," &c.

THE MANNER OF EXAMINATION.

The cross-examination was begun in a bland and courteous way, but there was immediately noticeable a wide diversity of manner and object between the examiner of Wednesday and the man by whom the questions of the preceding day were propounded. The answers of the witness were not given without deliberation, but he had the appearance of perfect self-possession. The contrast between Judge Porter's style of examination and Gen. Tracy's became very sharp and clear after the first few questions were put. The General's queries were announced in a manner and with an emphasis which placed the witness on his guard immediately, whereas Mr. Porter, in his quiet and persuasive way, inspired Mr. Moulton with a degree of confidence which led him more than once into unwary admissions. It was developed that the memory of the witness was defective in regard to several important events which came under his observation. He could not recall whether Mrs. Tilton were ill or not when he called upon her at the plaintiff's house to get her letter to Mr. Beecher; he did not know whether Mr. Tilton called at the house with him, and he did not remember whether Mr. Tilton was in the house or not when he called. "I don't remember" was an expression which he used frequently. Messrs. Beach, Fullerton, and Morris came to Mr. Moulton's aid whenever opportunity offered, and their spirited objections to the questions of counsel on the other side helped the witness greatly in his efforts to appear entirely unembarrassed.

Gen. Tracy's interrogatories followed each other very rapidly, but the witness was not equally quick in his answers, and declined to reply until he comprehended their meaning thoroughly. When he admitted that he would have destroyed Mrs. Tilton's alleged confessions, if Mr. Beecher had insisted on it, after giving up Mrs. Tilton's letter of retraction, counsel for the defense exchanged smiles. Without hesitation Mr. Moulton said that he would have assumed the responsibility of destroying the letters independent of Mr. Tilton.

During the afternoon session Mr. Moulton showed less self-possession than in the morning. His answers were given more sharply, and indicated something akin to anger. He testified with apparent reluctance that Gen. Benjamin F. Butler was the author of his celebrated statement, and from that time to the hour of adjournment his answers to Gen. Tracy's interrogatories were given in a sullen kind of way which contrasted strongly with his amiable replies in the morning. Mr. Beecher and his counsel were much gratified with the day's developments, and made no attempt to conceal their satisfaction. Messrs. Beach, Fullerton, and Morris, on the contrary, were quite nervous in their movements, and neglected no chance to make an objection. They were on their feet constantly, and hotly contested every advance of the opposite side against their position.

MINOR MATTERS OF THE TRIAL.

"A good, contented, well-breakfasted juryman is a capital thing to get hold of," said Counselor Perker in a burst of confidence to his client, Mr. Pickwick. Mr. Perker, growing more confiding, added, "and a discontented or hungry juryman always finds for the plaintiff." This remarkable opinion does not appear in Blackstone or Coke, and for this reason the counsel for Mr. Beecher may not attach much importance to it. Yet it is a notable fact that Mr. Evarts daily insists that the court shall adjourn as soon as the hour for recess arrives. The jury, as a consequence, have come to look upon him in a very grateful way. With but one or two exceptions the jurymen are very attentive, and their manner indicates a determination to weigh all the evidence presented fairly. On Tuesday afternoon one of the jurors indulged in a short nap, but on Wednesday they were all awake and careful listeners.

Frank B. Carpenter, the artist, whose name has had so prominent a place in connection with the scandal, made his first appearance in court on Wednesday morning. He entered with Mr. Tilton, and took a seat just behind Mr. Fullerton, in a position where he could look straight into Moulton's face. Mr. Carpenter was quite pale, and had the appearance of one who was recovering from a severe attack of illness.

The defendant and his wife listened throughout the proceedings with the utmost attention. Occasionally Mr. Beecher gave a whispered suggestion to Mr. Shearman, which was promptly acted upon. There were no ladies in court on Wednesday, except the four interested in the case. Among the spectators were two or three clergymen, Judge Tibbitts of California, Gen. Henry W. Slocum, Judge Moore, Col. Beecher, the Rev. Edward Beecher, and Francis D. Moulton's old antagonist from Plymouth Church, Prof. Rossiter R. Raymond.

A bill authorizing the continuation of the trial for another term has been forwarded to Albany. On Wednesday morning ex-Judge Fullerton called Judge Neilson's attention to the fact, and remarked that the trial might last longer than one additional term. "The bill is defective in that respect, and should provide for the continuation of the trial until it is concluded," said Judge Neilson. "That is the amendment which I was about to suggest," replied Mr. Fullerton. A short conversation concerning the matter took place between the two, and it was decided by the Judge to have the bill amended.

THE PROCEEDINGS.

Ex-Judge Porter has been suffering for several days from influenza, and the difficulty was so much worse on the 20th that he could not appear in Court. He hopes to take his place again in two or three days. Mr. Evarts explained these facts at the opening of the morning session. The work of Mr. Moulton's cross-examination, which Mr. Porter had been assuming, fell on Gen. Tracy. Mr. Evarts put a few questions. The intense enmity known to exist between Gen. Tracy and

Mr. Moulton led all present to anticipate a lively and interesting day, and they were not disappointed.

THE RULES OF CROSS-EXAMINATION.

Francis D. Moulton recalled, and cross-examination resumed:

Mr. Evarts—If your Honor please, I am sorry to announce to the Court that our associate, Judge Porter, is not well enough to be in Court. He has been laboring under a very severe influenza for four or five days, and nothing but his sense of professional obligation to continue as far as he could an examination which he had commenced on Monday—your Honor is aware the rule is that the same counsel should proceed—brought him to court on Tuesday. He was then suffering so much that he could not speak at the tone that would have been more desirable without great pain, or even as he did speak; and on Wednesday morning, as I was coming over, I received a note from him saying that he is unable to be out. He hopes, with medical aid, to be able to be with us on Thursday or Friday.

Judge Neilson—I am very sorry indeed to learn that he is ill. I knew that he was not very well on Tuesday. Will you take his place, Sir, in the cross-examination?

Mr. Evarts—Well, we shall be obliged, if your Honor please, if that is the direction of the Court, to divide the matter of the cross-examination, probably, between Gen. Tracy and myself. It is wholly unexpected to both of us that we should be called upon to act at all.

Mr. Beach—I hope an order of that kind, Sir, in regard to the course of the cross-examination will not be made. I was aware on Tuesday that my friend Judge Porter was suffering under a severe indisposition, which in a great degree incapacitated him for the performance of his duty in conducting the cross-examination, and I mentioned to him in a private remark that I thought he was in that condition and should surrender the duty to some other person; and I very much regret to see, Sir, that that incapacity has been the subject of several ungracious remarks in regard to my friend, which I do not think would have been indulged in if the cause of dissatisfaction had been known to the gentlemen who made those remarks. We quite readily consent, Sir, that any other of the counsel on the part of the defense should continue the cross-examination, but to divide that duty among several counsel I think would be such an infraction of the practice and such an injustice to us that we cannot consent to that. We would far rather that the trial should be suspended, or that the cross-examination of Mr. Moulton should be suspended until Judge Porter is able to continue it; but to give to three or four counsel upon the other side that part of the cross-examination of the witness, it seems to me will be apparent to your Honor as an impropriety in practice and as an injustice to us.

Judge Neilson—Perhaps it would, and very likely will, be unnecessary. I think the gentlemen can conform to your suggestion.

Mr. Evarts—The difficulty, as your Honor understands, and as my learned opponents well understand, of the sudden re moval from the discharge of a responsible part of a duty in a trial of this kind, that has been assigned to one counsel, and for which preparation has been made by him, is not a trivial difficulty; nor does the fact that I am informed at 10 o'clock at my house that Judge Porter will not be here on account of illness, enable me, in passing from my house to the court-room, to be prepared to conduct the cross-examination of the witness, in regard to whom I had expected to take no part whatever; and so with my learned associate, Mr. Tracy, whose greater familiarity with the cause may enable him, no doubt, more readily to prepare himself for the conduct of the cross-examination; and it may be necessary, therefore, that as my learned friends have suggested, they should withdraw this witness and proceed with the examination of some other witness.

Judge Neilson—I think it would be better, Sir, to proceed with him now. I think you are master of the subject.

Mr. Evarts—We thought we should be allowed to conduct the cross-examination as we find it necessary in this emergency.

Judge Neilson—You can overcome the difficulty by consultation with Gen. Tracy.

Mr. Evarts—That will create delay.

Mr. Beach—Delay is better than injustice.

Mr. Evarts—It is not a question of injustice, if your Honor please. It is a mere question of the regularity of the conduct of cross-examination. The old practice used to be for two or three counsel to conduct a cross-examination.

Judge Neilson—We will endeavor to conform to the necessities of the case as they may appear, Sir.

Mr. Evarts—We suggest to your Honor that that may be necessary, and if we understand that if we think it necessary we shall have that privilege, why, then—

Judge Neilson—I don't deny it, Sir. We will see if there is any occasion for it, and I will endeavor to consult your interests in regard to it.

Mr. Fullerton—If your Honor please, we do not wish to deprive our learned adversaries of any advantage to which they are properly and legally entitled. We, of course, appreciate the disadvantage under which any one of their number will now take up the cross-examination, and so far as we are concerned, in order that they may have every possible opportunity for preparation, and keep themselves within the limit of the rule, confining the cross-examination to a single counsel, we are quite willing to take any course that your Honor may think fit and proper, under the circumstances, to relieve them from their embarrassment. We should not object to the postponement of the trial of the cause until Judge Porter should be able to return and resume his duty, nor should we object to taking up some other witness and leaving Mr. Moulton's further cross examination until they were in a state of preparation, as they are not now. We do not want it understood that we urge any course that should deprive them of any legal advantage to which they are justly entitled; but we do think that when the further cross-examination of Mr. Moulton is resumed, it should be confined to a single counsel. That is due to us, and that is nothing more than justice to the witness. Although the rule was once that a witness might be attacked by a number of counsel upon cross-examination, yet that rule has given way to a more enlightened consideration of the subject. It is no longer the rule; it has not been the rule for many years in this State, and I trust it will never be the rule again. It is due, I say, to the witness, and it is due to our side of the case, that a single counsel should cross-examine the witness.

Judge Neilson—I appreciate what you say. I have no doubt that Mr. Evarts, who has been constantly in attendance, will find himself quite able to proceed with the cross-examination, and we will give him all the facilities we can. I think it is better to proceed that way now than to defer it, or let the proceedings stand over.

Mr. Evarts—Then the further cross-examination will be conducted by my associate, Gen. Tracy.

Judge Neilson—Very well.

GEN. TRACY'S CONDUCT CRITICISED.

Mr. Beach—I think, Sir, a single remark should be made in regard to that proposition on the part of the plaintiff. Your Honor is aware that in the testimony of this witness, circumstances have been disclosed which, if they are entirely accurate, would incapacitate Mr. Tracy from appearing at all in this case on the part of the defendant. I do not care, Sir, to relate testimony upon that particular subject; it is undoubtedly within the recollection of your Honor. It has been to us a subject of very embarrassing and painful consideration, Sir, whether any steps should be taken upon the part of the plaintiff in a formal application to this Court, presenting that subject for its deliberation and determination. If it be true, Sir, that in an interview between this plaintiff and Mr. Tracy a revelation of his case, to a considerable extent, was made, and an assurance given by Gen. Tracy, upon the faith of that revelation, that in case of any difficulty between Mr. Tilton and Mr. Beecher, Mr. Tracy would not appear as an adversary counsel to him, the impropriety, the indelicacy, the unprofessional act of Mr. Tracy's appearing in this trial in opposition to the plaintiff would not be countenanced by this Court. I am quite willing, Sir, to a very considerable extent, to leave that question to the consideration of the counsel himself; and it is only in consequence of this extraordinary and accidental condition of things that I am led to suggest to your Honor, and to the counsel upon the other side, that perhaps the action of Gen. Tracy in continuing the cross-examination of this witness would be unprofessional and inadmissible.

Judge Neilson—I think I must leave it to the defendant's counsel to arrange which shall cross-examine.

Mr. Evarts—Since these observations have been made, if your Honor please, perhaps I may be permitted to make a few. It is not in any vindication of Gen. Tracy, for I do not think he needs any, but it is in reference to the observations of my learned friend on a matter extraneous to the conduct of the trial in respect to the issue between these parties, to wit, in respect to a fragment of evidence that has been given by this witness, and that my learned friend thinks should disable the defendant's counsel. We have not had any verdict of this jury on this gentleman's testimony. We have not heard what is to be said upon that subject, and on his testimony it is very difficult for me to see anything in his manner of stating it even, that does not disclose, what is apparent, as I think, otherwise, that Mr. Moulton regards himself as a party to this transaction, and that whatever passed between himself, though acting only as a friend of Mr. Beecher, and with a wise head called in to confer in the same interest—how that should be converted into a disability to continued fidelity to Mr. Beecher on Mr. Tracy's part, when a change of attitude has arisen on the part of the witness. Now, that is the way I look at that matter.

Mr. Beach—If your Honor will permit me to say, Sir, that so far as the counsel has made reference to the relation which Mr. Moulton bears to this case, to use his own phrase, it is extremely extraneous to this discussion, and is a consideration which would have been more professionally and properly addressed to the jury than intimated in this inter-lucutory debate. The counsel also forget, Sir, that by the statement of the witness, the matter upon which we rely in the remarks which we have made, arose out of an interview—not between the witness and Mr. Tracy alone, but between the plaintiff in this case and Mr. Tracy, in which the plaintiff was reluctant to have the communication of his papers and matters made to Mr. Tracy, and consented to it only upon the express assurance upon the part of Mr. Tracy that in any antagonistic difficulty between Mr. Tilton and Mr. Beecher, he would not appear as the adversary counsel against Mr. Tilton.

Judge Neilson—I understand the spirit in which you make the suggestion. It is, perhaps, not one calling for argument really; and as I said before, I must leave the counsel for the defendant to proceed and supply Judge Porter's place as they think best this morning.

Mr. Beach—Your Honor will please note our objection to the action of Mr. Tracy, and exception to your Honor's ruling.

Judge Neilson—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Evarts—Well !—

Judge Neilson—Regulate it as you please, gentlemen; that is all I want to say about it; you are quite at liberty.

Mr. Evarts—I thought that our learned friends agreed that some one might take Judge Porter's place.

Judge Neilson—Yes, Sir; I leave it to you.

Mr. Evarts—But it is not for them to pick out the person to do it; and now, when the apparent greater fitness, from acquaintance with the part of the case now suddenly to be taken up, suggests Gen. Tracy's intervention; that intervention is made the subject of these remarks, and of our exception to your Honor's permission. Now, we say to our learned friends that Judge Porter's absence is a great injury to us, as well as a great regret in respect of him personally, and we are either to go on or not to go on.

Judge Neilson—You will go on, Sir, and regulate it in your own way.

Mr. Evarts—And if it is to be made the subject of an exception, why, then, it becomes a matter of deliberation with us, if your Honor please, as to how the arrangements shall be made.

Judge Neilson—I have left you at liberty to arrange it as you think best.

Mr. Evarts—Oh! yes; but your Honor sees that we cannot arrange in five minutes the preparations. We are ready to proceed in that way, but our learned friends make an objection to that; they make an objection to that, even to the point of an exception, and under that aspect of the case we desire to be able to determine freely which course shall be taken, and if it is necessary that I now suddenly should undertake to complete this cross-examination, why, then, it is necessary that I should be prepared for it, and not prepare myself in the presence of the Court, and the public, and the newspapers. And, under that view, our learned friends are entitled to their choice, whether they would rather this matter should stand until Judge Porter comes out, and the rest of the testimony go on, or stand until to-morrow morning, with the alternative of Judge Porter then being able to be out, or of some other counsel, to whom they have no objection of any kind, proceeding.

Judge Neilson—I think it would be more orderly to proceed with this witness now and close his examination, and I have intended to say that the defendant's counsel may, either of them, as they may elect, proceed with the cross-examination; and if it requires consultation, of course you will have it.

Mr. Evarts—May we reserve the right to apply to your Honor to divide the labor?

Judge Neilson—Well.

Mr. Tracy—Before proceeding to discharge the duty devolved upon me, the remarkable statement that has been made by counsel, and the evidence that has been given by the witness, call upon me, I think, for a brief statement of my connection with this case.

Judge Neilson—I don't think it does, Mr. Tracy; it will only lead to further debate. The mere act of your proceeding is a sufficient indication to me of your view of your duty, and that is enough for me.

Mr. Tracy—I am happy that your Honor takes that view of my position. I would say, however, that I have taken no step in this case without conferring freely not only with my associates as to my duty here, but with the most eminent members of the bar not connected with this case; and every step in it I have taken, I have taken on their judgment as to what I might professionally do with honor. I understand very well the position in which this prosecution has sought to place me in this case. But I came into this case as the friend of this defendant. However others may have changed, I have never; no act of mine has ever been inconsistent with that friendship, and I have performed every duty by the witness and the plaintiff that honor and justice called upon me to do. As for the responsibility which I now take, I am not only prepared to answer that to my conscience, but to my God.

Judge Neilson—That is sufficient.

[Cross-examination of Moulton continued.]

THE LETTER OF CONTRITION ONCE A SIMPLE APOLOGY.

Mr. Tracy—I find in your statement which you prepared for Mr. Beecher to make after the publication of the Bacon letter, which is "Exhibit 34," you refer to an apology which he had made to Theodore Tilton in that statement; do you refer to any written paper—any writing as that apology?

A. The apology part which is quoted?

Q. Yes. A. To the paper, part of which is quoted; I think that is called an apology.

Q. In Mr. Tilton's letter to Dr. Bacon? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. That was the apology to which you refer. A. Yes, Sir.

Q. And that is the paper writing to which you understood Mr. Tilton to refer so often in the Bacon letter as Mr. Beecher's apology? A. That which is quoted in the Bacon letter—the writing?

Q. Yes, the writing? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Will you tell us, Mr. Moulton, in what publication the name of that writing was changed from an "apology" to a "letter of contrition," first? A. In what public document—in what publication?

Q. In what publication was that first changed from an apology to a letter of contrition which you first saw?

Mr. Fullerton—One moment. That question is predicated on the assumption of a fact which is not in the case.

Judge Neilson—It appears so.

Mr. Tracy—Did you ever see it spoken of anywhere as a letter of contrition? A. I do not remember in what particular place I first heard it called—

Q. I do not ask you that; I think we will get on better if you answer my question. A. I will endeavor with the utmost courtesy.

Q. Did you ever see it in any publication as a letter of contrition until after you had had the benefit of the professional services of Gen. Butler?

Mr. Beach—That is assuming that he did see it somewhere as a letter of contrition, which does not appear.

Mr. Evarts—We can inquire if he ever did see it.

The Witness—Put the question again.

Q. Did you ever see it as a letter of contrition prior to the time when you availed yourself of the professional services of Gen. Butler?

Mr. Beach—In what form? In a publication or instrument?

Judge Neilson—He means that.

Mr. Beach—We do not know what he means—he must express it. Now if he is asking for the name applied to the instrument in some newspaper, it is immaterial and improper.

Judge Neilson—It is utterly immaterial at what time it was changed, unless the witness changed it.

Mr. Tracy—I mean any newspaper or any printed publication. When I use the word publication, I mean a printed publication. Did you see it anywhere printed as a letter of contrition before you availed yourself of the professional services of Gen. Butler?

Mr. Beach—We object.

The Witness—I don't think I ever—

Mr. Beach—Wait a moment when you hear an objection.

Judge Neilson—He answers that he does not think he did.

The Witness—I did not answer in that way.

Mr. Tracy—When had you last seen Mr. Tilton prior to your meeting him at his house on the 26th of December, '70? A. When had I last seen him?

Judge Neilson—Allow me to suggest that you should not repeat the questions.

The Witness—I shall not. Please to repeat that question again.

Q. When had you last seen Mr. Tilton prior to the interview with him at his house on the 26th December? A. I don't know when.

Q. Do you remember what day of the week the 26th was? A. I do not remember the day of the week.

Q. Was it on Monday? A. I don't remember.

Q. Had you seen him the day before? A. I don't remember that I had.

Q. Do you know that he was at your house on Sunday? A. I don't remember that.

Q. Did you know that he had published his valedictory as editor of The Independent, prior to that? A. I read his valedictory.

Q. I did not ask you that. I ask if you knew he had published it previous?

Mr. Beach—I think the witness is entitled to say that he knew it by reading it.

Mr. Tracy—That he says. I ask him as to his knowledge; I don't ask him what he read. I ask if he knew he had published his valedictory in The Independent prior to that meeting.

Judge Neilson—The only way, of course, that he can answer that is that he saw it in the paper; unless he was present and saw him write it.

Mr. Tracy—I do not object to his answering in that way; but he was proceeding to say he read it.

Judge Neilson—He could not read it without seeing it.

Mr. Evarts—It is very immaterial, perhaps; he says he did know of it and read it; and I have no objection to this form of answer. But, your Honor will see that it is quite precipitate to allege that he cannot answer any other way than that he had read it.

Mr. Tracy—I repeat. Did you know that his valedictory had been published in The Independent prior to Dec. 26th?

Judge Neilson—Answer, yes or no.

The Witness—I cannot answer the question, without explaining, yes or no; I do not remember now the day when it was published; but when it was published I read it.

Q. Then you knew of it at the time of publication?

Mr. Fullerton—That does not appear.

Mr. Evarts—Let us understand; I understand the witness to say that it came to his knowledge at the time it was published.

Judge Neilson—The time that he saw it in the paper.

Mr. Beach—That would be the day that he saw the paper; it may have been a week after.

Mr. Evarts—I understand his answer to be (and we are now talking of what it is, and not what it ought to be), that when it was published he then saw it.

Mr. Fullerton—I don't so understand his answer at all.

[THE TRIBUNE stenographer was here called upon to read the answer of witness.]

Mr. Tracy—Now, had you read it prior to Dec. 26th? A. If you give me the date of the editorial, I can tell you.

Q. The 22d. A. That was the date The Independent was issued?

Q. Yes. A. I think I read it on the first day The Independent was issued.

Q. Had you been, on the 26th December, informed that Mr. Tilton had made two contracts with Mr. Bowen at $5,000 a year—one as editor of The Union and the other as contributor to The Independent? A. I have been informed that he had made contracts. I do not know whether I was informed before Dec. 26th or not.

Q. Had you been informed of that on the 26th December, prior to this interview with him? A. I don't know whether it was prior to this interview with him on the 26th or not, at the present moment; I think it was, however.

Q. Did you know that he was to have an interview on the 26th December with Mr. Bowen and Mr. Oliver Johnson before the interview occurred? A. I cannot swear now that I did know that, positively.

THE INTERVIEW ABOUT THE BOWEN CHARGES.

Q. Was it a week day or a Sunday, Dec. 26, when you were at his house? A. I don't remember whether a week day or Sunday.

Q. Do you remember what time of the day you went to his house on that day? A. I remember from a memorandum that I made at the time.

Q. I don't ask that; I ask if you remember the time? A. It was in the afternoon of Dec. 26th.

Q. Do you remember the time that you went there? A. Somewhere in the neighborhood of three o'clock.

Q. Was he at home when you went there? A. That I can't say, positively.

Q. Did you see Mr. Tilton on that day? A. I don't think I did.

Q. Did you wait for Mr. Tilton's return on that day? A. I don't think I waited for his return.

Q. Did you know where he was? A. I don't know that I did.

Q. Did you know what time he was to return? A. I did not.

Q. How long did you wait for him before he came? A. I do not know that I waited for him at all.

Mr. Beach—This question is on the assumption that he did wait?

Mr. Tracy—I understood him to say that he did wait, on his direct examination. But I will ask him. [To the Witness.] Was Mr. Tilton at home when you went there that day? A. I do not remember now.

Q. Do you know what took you to Mr. Tilton's house that day? A. I went there as I usually went to his house.

Q. Do you usually go to his house on week days at 3 o'clock in the afternoon? A. I go there almost any hour of the day when it is convenient.

Q. Do you go every day at 3 o'clock in the afternoon? A. No, Sir.

Q. Do you usually go every day at 3 o'clock in the afternoon? A. No, Sir; there was no usual hour for going.

Q. Are you there usually every day at his house? A. There have been times when I have been there every day.

Q. At this time were you? A. I don't think I was at that time.

Q. How often do you think at this time that you were in the habit of visiting the house on week days, during business hours? A. Well, I certainly do not remember.

Judge Neilson—State as near as you can tell?

Witness—Not very frequently.

Mr. Tracy—On informing you of the letter he had sent to Mr. Beecher by the hands of Mr. Bowen, did he tell you when he supposed that letter was to be delivered to Mr. Beecher? A. I don't think he told me when he supposed it was to be delivered.

Q. Did you make any other remark to him about his sending the letter without Bowen's signing it, except that he was a fool? Did you say to him that he was a ruined man? A. I don't think I did.

Q. Do you recollect that you did not? A. I am trying to state the truth as near as I can remember.

Judge Neilson—Say yes or no.

Mr. Evarts—We might as well say, once for all, that is covered by the oath he has taken—that he is to tell the truth. It is not necessary to repeat that.

Judge Neilson—Yes; answer yes or no?

Mr. Fullerton—We might as well say that the last question was covered by the former answer.

Mr. Tracy—That would be a ground of objection.

Mr. Fullerton—Well, perhaps so; but we will make our own form of objection.

The Witness—Now, if you will ask me the question again I will try and answer it.

Mr. Tracy—My question is, did you not so state, or do you recollect that you did not say to him that he was a ruined man? A. To the best of my recollection, I should say no.

Q. How long was that interview between you and Mr. Tilton on that occasion? A. It may have lasted half an hour or an hour.

Q. Did you learn from him at that time the object of the interview that he had with Mr. Bowen?

Mr. Fullerton—We object to that. How can his opinion be asked of the object that Mr. Tilton had?

Mr. Evarts—Your Honor has ruled that the witness may answer the preliminary question, yes or no.

Judge Neilson—The objection is, that this question asks for a deduction, and not what was said.

Mr. Tracy—I will change the form of my question. [To the Witness:] Was anything said by Mr. Tilton on that day as to the object of the interview he had with Mr. Bowen? A. I think there was, Sir.

Q. Did he tell you on that occasion that rumors affecting his moral character had come to Mr. Bowen, which led Mr. Bowen to think of breaking the contract with him which he had just made, and that the object of the interview was to enable him to explain these rumors which had reached Mr. Bowen? A. I cannot answer the question without explaining it.

Judge Neilson—Go on, Sir, and answer.

The Witness—Mr. Tilton, as I remember, said to me what he had done at the interview.

Q. I do not ask what Mr. Tilton said to you.

The Witness—May I explain, your Honor? I cannot answer the question without explaining.

Judge Neilson—The common practice is to answer and then explain afterwards.

Mr. Morris—It would be difficult to answer a speech the counsel makes to the witness.

Mr. Evarts—If there is any objection to the question that is one thing, but if the question is proper, then we are entitled to an answer.

Mr. Fullerton—Our objection is not that you are not entitled to an answer.

Judge Neilson—But then you must take the answer as it is given.

Mr. Fullerton—The question is so framed that a categorical answer may not convey the whole truth.

Mr. Beach—The question does not ask the witness to state whether Tilton did, in substance, or not say so; but it calls for him to state if Tilton said so in the precise language of the question. If the very words were not used, I ask your Honor to instruct the witness that he can answer one way or the other.

Mr. Evarts—It is not the province of the Court to instruct a witness how he can evade answering a question; and yet my learned friend asks your Honor to instruct the witness that if one word is left out he can refuse to answer such a question as that. We have asked the question, and if it is objectionable it must be objected to. If it is not objectionable then the witness should answer, and his answer will be just what his sense of the oath and his conscience dictates; but it is his answer that we are entitled to.

Judge Neilson—I want to say to Mr. Evarts that he was in error in using the word "evade," as applied to the witness on the stand.

Mr. Evarts—I submit to your Honor's correction; but this was an extraordinary proposition.

Judge Neilson—It is a proposition raised by counsel.

[THE TRIBUNE stenographer was called upon to repeat the question.]

Q. Did he tell you on that occasion that rumors affecting his moral character had come to Mr. Bowen, which led Mr. Bowen to think of breaking the contract with him which he had just made, and that the object of that interview was to enable him to explain these rumors which had reached Mr. Bowen? A. I answer that question, no.

Q. Did he tell you that that interview had been brought about by Oliver Johnson, to whom Mr. Bowen had conveyed certain rumors which he had heard about Mr. Tilton? A. No.

Q. Did he tell you at that interview that Mr. Bowen had repeated the rumors and stories which he had heard about Mr. Tilton? A. No.

Q. Did he tell you at that interview that he had attacked Mr. Beecher to Mr. Bowen, by saying that Mr. Beecher had made unhandsome proposals to his wife? A. He did say that.

Q. Did he say in that interview that he offered to join Mr. Bowen in a war upon Mr. Beecher? A. No; he did not say that.

Q. Did he say that he offered Mr. Bowen to draft the letter which he read? A. Put that question again.

Q. Did he say that he offered to Mr. Bowen to draft the letter which he had read, and which Mr. Bowen agreed to prepare to Mr. Beecher? A. No, Sir.

Q. Did he say that he did draft the letter? A. No.

Q. Did he say he wrote it? A. Yes; he wrote it.

Q. He said he wrote it? A. Yes.

Q. Now, when did you see Mr. Tilton after that interview? A. I saw him between that time and December 30th some time; I cannot remember the date now.

Q. Did you know, at the time of the second interview with Tilton, that his letter to Beecher had been delivered by Bowen? A. I did not.

Mr. Beach—What do you call the second interview?

Mr. Tracy—The first interview that occurred after the 26th of December.

Q. You did not know it had been delivered to Bowen? A. To Mr. Beecher, you mean?

Q. Yes; did you inquire whether it had? A. I did not.

Q. And you did not know then that Mr. Beecher had that letter? A. I did not.

Q. At the time of the second interview did you know that this angry interview between Bowen and Tilton had occurred? A. I did; I knew that an angry interview had occurred.

Q. An angry interview had occurred? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Subsequently to the 26th? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Did you know whether that interview occurred after or before Bowen had delivered the letter to Beecher. A. I did not know anything about it.

Q. You did not know anything about it? A. No, Sir.

Q. And did not ask anything about it? A. I did not.

Q. Did you at any time between the 27th or 28th and the 30th ever ask Tilton whether his letter to Beecher had been presented? A. I did not.

Q. And you did not know? A. I did not know.

Q. And you did not know prior to the 30th that the letter had been received by Beecher, or what answer Beecher had made to it? A. No, Sir.

Q. And the conversation which you thought so important, on the 26th, as to make a memorandum of, you never had asked about since? A. No, Sir.

Q. What time on the 30th did you see Mr. Tilton—what time of day? A. Towards—in the evening, I think, Sir.

Q. Where? A. At my house.

Q. Do you know about what time? A. Think before—about 6 o'clock, I should think.

Q. About 6 o'clock? A. I think so.

Q. Did he take tea at your house that night? A. I don't remember whether he did or not.

Q. Whereabouts did the interview between you and him take place? A. I think in my front chamber, up stairs.

Q. How long was that interview? A. Not very long.

Q. Well, about how long? A. Oh, I should not think it was half an hour long.

Q. Was it half an hour long? A. I should not think it was.

Q. Was it 20 minutes? A. I should say it was.

Q. Then you went from his presence to the house of Mr. Beecher? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. And you said to Mr. Beecher what you have repeated on your direct examination? A. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Morris—He repeated that in his cross-examination.

Mr. Everts—That is not a necessary interruption. Who made that interruption?

Mr. Morris—I made that interruption.

Mr. Everts—It was not a necessary interruption. We had a right to ask the witness if he did in his direct examination say so.

Mr. Morris—I object to the question, on the ground that it has been all gone over on the cross-examination minutely, and they have no right to examine the witness to-day upon the same point upon which he was minutely examined yesterday.

Judge Neilson—That is so, if your recollection is right of what took place.

Mr. Morris—I am right in my recollection.

Mr. Tracy—Your Honor will observe that the cross-examination yesterday was general—referring generally to the various aspects of the case, with Judge Porter's plan of cross-examination, to come back and take up each interview separately and distinctly by itself, in the order in which it had been testified to.

Judge Neilson—I think, as a general rule, you should take up the examination where you left off.

Mr. Tracy—That is what I am doing.

Mr. Morris—No, Sir; and I appeal to the stenographer's minutes; he has been minutely cross-examined as to this.

Mr. Tracy—The cross-examination of Judge Porter at the close of the day, yesterday, had reached in order the point that I have now stated; and I am now going on with the witness in the order in which he stated the facts on his direct examination.

Mr. Beach—Well, that maintains our proposition that hitherto it has been a mere repetition of Judge Porter's cross-examination.

Mr. Tracy—No, Sir; I have gone through one interview and exhausted it, and now I propose to go to another, and I propose to go step after step.

Judge Neilson—Do you propose to go over the same ground Judge Porter went over?

Mr. Tracy—Oh! no; Judge Porter did not go over it.

Mr. Morris—Well, we say he did.

Mr. Tracy—I can't help your saying he did.

Mr. Morris—But the stenographer's minutes will settle it.

Judge Neilson—Well, it would be burdensome to look at the minutes as we pass from one subject to another. I think the counsel should act from recollection.

Mr. Beach—Your Honor will remember that Mr. Porter cross-examined this witness specially as to the interviews of the 26th and 30th of December, and with great minuteness inquiring into interviews as between those two dates, and carried the witness through the details of this very occurrence. Now, Sir, under the embarrassment in which my friends are situated, I do not care to be very particular upon that subject, and I think they are entitled to some degree of indulgence and license in that respect, but that this is but a repetition of the examination of Judge Porter, I think, must occur very readily to my learned friends.

Mr. Tracy—Judge Porter had just reached and entered upon this branch of the case in the order in which he had arranged it, and had talked about the first interviews of Dec. 26th, 27th and 30th.

Judge Neilson—Well, proceed, and keep within the rule; don't go over the ground—

Mr. Tracy—I shall endeavor to do so. I am pursuing precisely the plan of examination marked out by Judge Porter, precisely.

Mr. Tracy—You said on your direct examination, as I understood you, that on coming down the stoop Mr. Beecher said, "What shall I do?" A. "What can I do?" I think.

Q. "What can I do?"—and your reply to that was what; please repeat it? A. "I am not a Christian, but I will try and show you how well a heathen can serve you."

Q. Did you intend that as a proffer of friendship and service to Mr. Beecher? A. I did; yes.

Q. Then at that time you intended to proffer to Mr. Beecher your friendship and your friendly aid in this matter? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. On your way up you talked, you say, about the charges—you told him the charges which Bowen had made against him and Mr. Tilton? A. Yes, Sir; something of them.

Q. And you repeated those charges to him? A. Some of them; yes, Sir.

Q. And he expressed surprise at that? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Saying that Bowen had said nothing of that kind to him? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Did he also add, at that interview, that Bowen had not only not said anything of that kind to him, but that he had repeated stories to him about Tilton? A. I think not at that interview, Sir.

Q. Not at that interview? A. I think not at that—not on the evening of December 30th.

Q. Well, you say you think not. Are you willing to swear that he did not? A. He did; yes, Sir.

Q. He did? A. He did; yes, on the evening of December the 30th.

Q. Then repeat what he said on that subject, please—the subject of the stories which Mr. Bowen had told him about Tilton? A. He said that Mr. Bowen had said to him that he had heard certain stories against Mr. Tilton, and Mr. Beecher said that upon the basis of rumors that he had heard, he had sympathized with Mr. Bowen.

Q. And did he say that he had expressed that sympathy to Mr. Bowen that night? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Now, what were the stories that he said Mr. Bowen had heard about Mr. Tilton? A. He did not mention them.

Q. He didn't mention them? A. No.

Q. At all? A. No, Sir.

Q. Can you state more fully Mr. Beecher's language when he repeated that part of your interview with him? A. No, Sir; not more fully—not now.

Q. What reply did you make to that? A. To the stories?

Q. Yes, to his reference to the Bowen stories about Mr. Tilton in which Mr. Beecher had sympathized? A. I expressed surprise—I don't remember exactly what I said.

MOULTON DECLAINS AGAINST BOWEN.

Q. Can't you recollect the substance of your language? A. I think I said to Mr. Beecher that Bowen was treacherous to both of them.

Q. And was the friend of neither? A. I don't think I said that.

Q. Don't think you said that, but said he was treacherous to both? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Did you at that time express any opinion to Mr. Beecher concerning the truth of the stories which Bowen had told about Tilton? A. No; I don't think I did.

Q. What? A. I don't think I did at that interview.

Q. Are you certain of that? A. Yes, Sir; quite certain.

Q. Quite certain? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Did you say anything to Mr. Beecher to remove from him the impression that you believed the stories true about Mr. Tilton?

Mr. Beach—That is objected to.

Q. Did you say anything to him on the subject of whether you believed that true or false? A. I don't think I did, Sir; I don't remember that I did.

Q. Well, did you intend by your reply that Bowen was treacherous to both of them to leave the impression upon Mr. Beecher's mind that you thought the stories about Tilton true?

Mr. Morris—The question is objected to. What he intended I submit is not material; state what he said.

Judge Neilson—I think his intent must be gathered from what he said.

Mr. Evarts—Well, if your Honor please, the witness has made a reply which, on one view of it, and perhaps the correct view, carries the impression in comparing that statement with the rest of his testimony, that he meant to say that Bowen had been treacherous in telling these true stories about Tilton, or that he had been treacherous to Tilton in the matter of friendship by telling false stories; we want to know which of those views he did present to Mr. Beecher.

Judge Neilson—Doesn't that appear by his conversation on the occasion?

Mr. Evarts—He did not answer that. We are cross-examining him to get at the actual drift and purport of his conversation as it was suited to produce an impression on Mr. Beecher's mind.

Judge Neilson—You have a right to that.

Mr. Tracy—That is what we ask the question for—what he intended by his answer that he made to Mr. Beecher.

Judge Neilson—That is a different question altogether. I agree with Mr. Evarts that you are entitled to the conversation—all of it.

The Witness—I will give the conversation, shall I?

Mr. Tracy—We are cross-examining this witness. He says that he made a certain answer to Mr. Beecher which is ambiguous. Now, we ask him what he intended by that answer; what he intended to convey, because the manner of speech, the accent, the intonation of voice, all carry with them their impression, which it is impossible for the witness to repeat to the jury, and we ask him what was your intention?

Judge Neilson—Now, the weakness of that point is this, that Mr. Beecher might understand that intention one way, and the witness, as he now recollects it, might have understood it in another way, and it don't help you a bit.

Mr. Evarts—Well, we will ask him what Mr. Beecher said.

Judge Neilson—You will get the conversation, of course.

Mr. Evarts—This is a part of it.

Mr. Tracy—Does your Honor exclude the question?

Judge Neilson—With that view, the mere intent, the mental reservation.

Mr. Tracy—Does your Honor exclude the question?

Judge Neilson—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Tracy—I will take an exception, and we will pass on?

Mr. Tracy—Did Mr. Beecher make any reply to that answer of yours about the treachery of Mr. Bowen? A. I said—Yes, Sir; he made a reply.

Q. What was it? A. He thought he was treacherous.

Q. And did you then renew to him your friendship—proffer of your friendship—that you would be his friend, and serve him? A. I don't remember that that followed, Sir.

Q. Don't remember that that followed again? A. No.

Q. That you again repeated it? A. No, I don't think I did.

Q. Where was your house in Clinton-st. A. 148 Clinton.

Q. Between what streets is that? A. That is between Livingston and the street below it—what is that?—Schermhorn.

Q. Well, on entering your house that night, Mr. Beecher passed upstairs, by your direction, to the second story, front room? A. I passed him into the second story and the front room; yes, Sir.

Q. And you remained in the parlor below? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Did you lock the front door after he went in that night? A. I don't remember that I locked the front door.

Q. You don't remember that you did? A. No; very likely I did.

Q. Don't you remember that you did? A. No, I don't remember that I did.

Q. Why, then, do you say it is very likely you did? A. Why, I usually locked the front door when I went into the house.

Q. You did? A. It is my habit; yes, Sir.

Q. When you have friends in, it is your habit to lock the front door? A. Yes, Sir, or latch.

Q. To latch or lock, which? A. Yes, Sir; latch it or lock it, just as you choose.

Q. You don't know whether you did it that night or not? A. No; I rather think I did though.

Q. After Mr. Beecher came down did you take the key out and put it in your pocket? A. No, Sir; I did not.

Q. You did not do that? A. No, Sir.

Q. After Mr. Beecher came down and you went with him to Mr. Tilton's house, on the way there, did you again talk about Mr. Bowen? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. What was the substance of your conversation in regard to Mr. Bowen on your way to Tilton's house? A. Told him again that I thought Mr. Bowen was a treacherous man. I said to Mr. Beecher "Bowen promised to sustain Mr. Tilton in those charges, and he goes to you, according to what you have said to me, and promised to be your friend. Now, I think he is treacherous toward both of you, in having repeated the stories that he did to Tilton, and in having said what he did to you after he made those—he is treacherous to Tilton."

Q. Were the stories further talked of then about Mr. Tilton?
A. No; reference was made to them, that is all.

Q. Did Mr. Beecher go into detail at all about the stories that Mr. Bowen had talked about Mr. Tilton? A. No, Sir, not on that occasion.

Q. Then when you were going from your house back to his house again, did you then again talk about the stories of Bowen?
A. Yes, Sir; the talk was substantially the same, Sir.

Q. And no advance made whatever; did you simply repeat, for the third time, Mr. Moulton, the stories about Bowen without adding anything, any new feature to the conversation?

Mr. Beach—No stories about Bowen that I know of.

Q. I mean about Mr. Beecher. A. He may have altered the phraseology, but I don't think anything was added to the substance; there was nothing to add that I know of.

Q. Was there anything said in that interview about the stories in regard to Mr. Tilton? A. No.

Q. What? A. No, Sir. You are talking now about on the way from Clinton-st. to Mr. Beecher's house?

Mr. Tracy—Yes, the last time you saw him. A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Now, did you leave Mr. Beecher after having had three interviews with him on that night? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Did you leave him without expressing any opinion as to the truth or falsity of the stories which Mr. Bowen had told Mr. Beecher about Mr. Tilton? A. I don't think I expressed any opinion as to the truth or falsity that night, Sir.

Q. Do you remember that you did not? A. I should say that I remembered that I did not.

Q. No? A. That is the best of my recollection, Sir.

Q. Did you know what the stories were? A. No, I did not know what stories Mr. Bowen had told Mr. Beecher.

Q. Did you know what stories had been told Bowen about Tilton? A. No; I did not know.

Q. You did not know? A. No; I did not know.

Q. Didn't know any of the stories that had reached Mr. Bowen's ear about Mr. Tilton? A. No.

Q. From any source? A. No; except in a general way; no names.

Q. Well, did you know; in a general way, did you know? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. What did you know in a general way?

Mr. Beach—That is objected to.

Mr. Evarts—The witness said that he didn't know names.

Mr. Beach—What if he did know the stories; are they by this witness to prove stories against Mr. Tilton that he has heard from other parties?

Judge Neilson—No; the only ground of this being admissible would be that it is part of a conversation into which you may have inquired.

Mr. Evarts—It is the subject of future evidence concerning it which we cannot give at the same breath.

Judge Neilson—I don't know about that. I think he may answer this question as further illustrating what had been said.

[Question read by TAYLOR stenographer.]

Mr. Beach—Does your Honor permit him, under that question, to repeat stories?

Judge Neilson—I don't think they ask him to repeat stories.

Mr. Beach—Why, they ask what they were; I suppose that is asking to repeat them; and they are stories that he may have heard from John, Dick or Tom in the street.

Judge Neilson—Well, the question should be amended so as not to include that.

Mr. Evarts—If your Honor please, it is the state of knowledge in the witness's mind as to what the stories were concerning which he talked to Mr. Beecher.

Judge Neilson—Now, this is the point concerning which the objection is made; that the question may call for stories, not those, perhaps, referred to in the conversation with Mr. Beecher, but stories repeated or mentioned by other people outside. The question is, Did he know what the stories were, to which reference was made in his conversation with Mr. Beecher?

Mr. Evarts—One moment; because we do not wish to transcend any of the rules of evidence; nor do we wish to bring in unnecessarily the talk of other people. This witness has testified that, during the conversation with Mr. Beecher on that night of the 30th, Mr. Beecher referred to stories that Bowen had told him to the prejudice of Tilton, in which he, Beecher, had sympathized; and this witness had expressed his views that Mr. Bowen was treacherous to both of them, etc., we won't repeat that. Now we have endeavored to learn from this witness, whether or no the character of those stories, or the details of those stories, were made the subject of conversation with Mr. Beecher, which he has satisfied us about, or recollects only what he has stated. Now we ask him whether he knew, at the time that he was talking, what those stories were.

Judge Neilson—This is admissible, if he learned it in that conversation; otherwise, not.

Mr. Evarts—Why, he did not learn it from Mr. Beecher.

Judge Neilson—Well, then, it is not admissible.

Mr. Evarts—But they talked about the stories that had passed through Mr. Bowen to the prejudice of Mr. Tilton. Now, we ask him whether he knew what these stories were at the time that he was talking with Mr. Beecher. They were talking about those stories; we ask him whether he knew what the stories were.

Judge Neilson—As disclosed in that conversation?

Mr. Evarts—Well, we don't ask him that.

TILTON'S ALLEGED IMPROPRIETIES.

Mr. Tracy—I will ask the question and take your Honor's ruling upon it. [To the Witness]—Did you know from any source, at the time you were talking with Mr. Beecher about the stories that Bowen had told him, what those stories—told him about Tilton—what those stories were?

(Objected to.)

Judge Neilson—That is ruled out if it is derived from other sources; admitted if it is derived from his conversation with Mr. Beecher.

Mr. Evarts—We except to your Honor's ruling.

By Mr. Tracy—Didn't you know from Mr. Tilton what the nature of the stories were that had reached Bowen? A. I had heard from Mr. Tilton something about it; yes, Sir, I think I had.

Q. Now, answer my question. Didn't you know from Mr. Tilton what the nature of the stories were that had reached Mr. Bowen concerning him?

Mr. Fullerton—Now, if the Court please, your Honor will see that it is quite impossible for him to answer that question. He might guess it out, or surmise it, but he has no positive knowledge upon that subject, because Mr. Tilton did not know what communication Bowen had made to Mr. Beecher.

Mr. Tracy—I will ask him that.

Mr. Fullerton—You are interrupting me improperly, however, that is what you are doing; and your Honor will perceive that this witness could not learn a fact from Mr. Tilton which Mr. Tilton himself did not know; and, therefore, he cannot answer the question, except by mere guesswork.

Judge Neilson—He is not to answer by guesswork; if he answers at all he must answer in reference to what Mr. Tilton told him.

Mr. Fullerton—Your Honor will perceive, from the attitude of the case at present, that it is impossible for him to know; he had not learned it.

Mr. Tracy—My question—

Mr. Fullerton—Interrupting again improperly.

Mr. Tracy—I have a right—

Mr. Fullerton—Your Honor will perceive that Mr. Beecher did not convey the information to him. Mr. Tilton did not know what Bowen had said to Beecher. He therefore could not learn it from Tilton. Therefore the witness cannot answer the question, your Honor will see.

Mr. Beach—Will you allow me to add, Sir, the question is, "What stories did Mr. Tilton tell you had been communicated to Mr. Bowen, or were known to Mr. Bowen, concerning him, Mr. Tilton?" Now, the witness has already sworn that he did not know what stories Mr. Beecher referred to as having been told by Mr. Bowen to Mr. Beecher. Where is the evidence that the stories to which Mr. Tilton referred in his communication to Mr. Moulton were the stories which Mr. Bowen communicated to Mr. Beecher, and which Mr. Beecher referred to in the conversation with Mr. Moulton? There is an entire disconnection between them; the stories are not the same—do not appear to be the same. Now, it may be possible, Sir, it may be possible that this, as a declaration of Mr. Tilton, a party to the action, may be admissible in another connection and for another purpose, but not as throwing any light at all upon the stories which were referred to in the conversation between the witness and Mr. Beecher.

Mr. Evans—Now, if your Honor please, Mr. Tilton is the party plaintiff in this suit, and we propose to show, if we are permitted to do so, and we have no doubt your Honor will permit us—under the rules of evidence—the relations of Mr. Tilton and of Mr. Moulton in this matter to the affairs of Mr. Tilton, so far as they are pertinent to this issue. We are now asking him whether Mr. Tilton informed him what the stories were that had been told to Mr. Bowen about him, Tilton. Now my learned friend says that that don't prove that they were the same stories that were told to Mr. Beecher. It does not, of course; but it proves what the stories were; and then, when we prove by another witness what the stories were that were told to Mr. Beecher, then we shall have seen whether they are the same stories or not.

Judge Neilson—Repeat that question to the witness.

[Question read by THE TRIBUNE stenographer.]

Judge Neilson—Now, he can answer that—that he did know, or did not, I think. How is that?

The Witness—I was not paying attention to the question.

[Question again read.] A. I think Mr. Tilton told me, Sir, something about it himself.

Q. What did he tell you? A. He told me, as near as I can remember. Sir, that Mr. Bowen had mentioned a story concerning a transaction at Winstead, Connecticut.

Q. What did he say about it—what did Bowen tell him about it? A. I don't remember the details of it.

Q. What did Tilton tell you that Bowen said about that Winstead transaction? A. That he was at Winstead with a lady, and had acted improperly with her, and that—I can't clearly separate between two stories; one that Bowen told me—whether Bowen told me, or whether Tilton: that is all that I distinctly remember that Mr. Tilton told me—which Mr. Bowen told me afterward, Sir, himself, I think.

Q. Is this all that Mr. Bowen told you about the Winstead matter? A. Yes, that is all; all I remember.

Q. You say that Mr. Tilton told you that the story was, he acted improperly toward a lady; how improperly? A. I don't know. Stopped at the—

Q. What was said? A. I don't remember anything more, Sir, than what I have said.

Q. You don't think Mr. Tilton specified? A. No.

Q. How his conduct was improper—supposed to be improper—toward the lady at Winstead? A. No.

Q. Did he name the lady? A. No, Sir.

Q. Did he name the occasion? A. I think he said that Bowen told him when he went up there lecturing.

Q. Now, didn't Mr. Tilton tell you that the story was circulated about him that he took a lady there not his wife; took a room at the hotel and took bedrooms that were adjoining and communicating? A. No.

Q. He didn't tell you that? A. No.

Q. He didn't tell you that that was the story? A. No.

Q. Well, what other story did Mr. Tilton tell you had reached Bowen? A. I don't remember any other distinctly.

Q. Don't remember any other? A. No; the language which he used to me, as nearly as I can recollect, was this—

Q. Well, we have not asked you—well, let us have it. A. That Bowen had said that stories had come to him concerning Mr. Tilton's conduct with women, and that he cited this Winstead story. That is the story, as I remember it, that Tilton told me.

Q. And didn't he cite others? A. No, sir.

Q. About his conduct with women—now, when was it that Tilton told you that? A. I think, sir, that it was anterior to December 30th.

Q. Was it anterior to December 26th?

A. No, Sir; I don't think it was.

Q. Was it on the 26th? A. No, Sir.

Q. Was it on the 27th or 28th? A. Don't remember; it was between December 26th and 30th, somewhere.

Q. Do you know where he told you that? A. No, Sir; I don't remember.

Q. Nor when? A. No.

Q. Did he tell you that the interview at Bowen's house on the 26th was concerning those stories which Mr. Bowen had heard? A. He told me those stories as having been told to him by Bowen at that interview.

Q. And did he also tell you that the object of that interview was to enable him to explain those stories to Mr. Bowen, if he could? A. I think he told me that that was the purpose of that interview, Sir.

Q. And didn't he also tell you that his contracts with Bowen were threatened unless he could explain those stories? A. No.

Q. He did not—what did you understand, then, that he was to explain them for, if it was not to save his contracts with Bowen?

Mr. Beach—Well, what he understood is not important.

Mr. Tracy—I think we are entitled to that on cross-examination, what this witness understood.

Judge Neilson—No.

Mr. Tracy—Your Honor will note an exception.

Mr. Tracy—Now, when Mr. Beecher told you, on the 30th, that Mr. Bowen had repeated to him certain stories concerning Mr. Tilton, in which he, Mr. Beecher, sympathized, didn't you understand that those were the same stories that Mr. Tilton had, previously to that night, told you had come to the ear of Mr. Bowen?

Mr. Beach—Objected to.

Judge Neilson—I think we will take that answer. Say yes or no, Sir.

[Exception by plaintiff.]

A. Yes; I supposed they referred to the same.

Q. You suppose they referred to the same? A. Didn't know any other.

Judge Neilson—To Mr. Tracy—To a gentleman of such large experience as yourself, I feel it hardly necessary to suggest that you do not repeat what the witness says; it adds to the volume of the testimony.

Mr. Tracy—And yet you made no explanation to Mr. Beecher concerning those stories on that night? A. No.

Q. So far as you know, did you leave Mr. Beecher with the impression that you believed those stories to be true?

Mr. Beach—Objected to, Sir.

Judge Neilson—I think he may answer that.

Mr. Beach—Why, Sir—well, I won't argue against your Honor's decision.

A. No, I don't think I left him with that impression,

Q. Did you say anything to remove that impression? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. What? A. That Bowen was a treacherous man, and on account of his treachery he ought not to be believed.

Q. Ought not to be believed? A. Yes. I didn't say that he ought not to be believed on account of his treachery—it was through the use of that language that I left the impression.

Q. That you meant to leave that impression? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Then, when you told Mr. Beecher that you thought Bowen a treacherous man, you did intend that he should understand that you thought he should not believe against Tilton the stories which Bowen had told him? A. Yes; I did not think that they were—

Q. And you said it for that purpose? A. Not wholly for that.

Q. Well, that is one of the purposes for which you said it? A. Part of it.

Q. Now, how did you understand Mr. Beecher's reply, that he thought so too, as assenting to that view?

Mr. Beach—Are we to have the witness's construction of language?

Judge Neilson—No.

Mr. Evarts—On the cross-examination, if your Honor please, as I suppose by well-settled rules of examination we are not obliged to take a witness's words as ending an inquiry. We have now got, at the end of half an hour, at the very truth that we tried to get at by a simple question half an hour ago.

Mr. Beach—Well, that proposition I dispute.

Mr. Evarts—Well, if your Honor will recur to the question your Honor ruled out, it was exactly to that point, whether what he said to Mr. Beecher was intended to convey to his mind the idea that the stories that had come to Bowen about Tilton were true or untrue.

Mr. Beach—The gentleman has got at it, then, by a change in your Honor's ruling, because you certainly ruled out that question and if you have admitted it now you have admitted it contrary to that decision.

Judge Neilson—I think the matter came in a little different aspect.

Mr. Evarts—That shows what a cross-examination is for and what its license is.

Judge Neilson—I think I will rule out this question.

Mr. Tracy—Your Honor will note our exception.

MR. MOULTON'S CAPACITY FOR FRIENDSHIPS.

Mr. Tracy—Mr. Moulton, when you left your own house on the night of the 30th to go to the house of Mr. Beecher, you left it as the friend of Mr. Tilton, did you not? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Called into this controversy by him? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. To aid him? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. You were not at that time the friend of Mr. Beecher? A. I was not his enemy; I was not his personal—

Q. I didn't ask you that? A. What do you mean by "friend" then?

Q. Don't you understand? A. I don't exactly in the way that you put the question.

Q. Well, I put the question again, Sir, and I shall leave you to answer it as you understand it. Were you, at the time that you left your own house, on the night of the 30th, the friend of Mr. Beecher?

Mr. Beach—Now, I submit that the answer is perfectly proper.

Mr. Everts—We haven't heard it yet.

Mr. Beach—Yes; you have had it.

Judge Neilson—State how the fact was in your own way.

A. I had known—I had met Mr. Beecher, Sir; I was not his enemy; I was not his close, personal, intimate friend.

Judge Neilson—That answers it sufficiently.

Q. You went from your own house as the friend of Tilton, and as soon as Mr. Beecher got into the street, as I understand you, you proffered your friendship to him in this matter? A. I did.

Q. And services? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Did you do that with Mr. Tilton's consent and knowledge?

A. I had not conferred with him about it.

Q. I didn't ask you that; I asked you whether you did it with his consent or knowledge? A. No, neither.

A SHARP CROSS-QUESTIONING.

Q. You did it without his knowledge; the letter that you carried to Mr. Beecher on that night, was it in an envelope?

A. I didn't carry a letter to Mr. Beecher, Sir.

Q. On the night of the 30th? A. I had a letter in my pocket.

Q. Well, you had a letter in your pocket? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Was that letter in an envelope? A. I don't remember whether it was or not.

Q. Do you know whether it was addressed—there was an address on it directed to the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher? A. I know there was not.

Q. There was not? A. No.

Q. Did you deliver that letter to Mr. Beecher that night? A. No, Sir.

Q. Did he ever see it, to your knowledge? A. No, Sir.

Q. Now we will come to the night of the 31st. What time of night did Mr. Tilton leave your house on the night of the 30th?

A. I think he left quite late, Sir.

Q. When did you see him again? A. I saw him on the morning of the 31st.

Q. On the morning of the 31st? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. What time in the morning? A. Before I left for my business, Sir; somewhere between seven and nine o'clock, I should think.

Q. Where; at your own house? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Did you go to your business that morning? A. I did; yes.

Q. What time? A. Between seven and nine.

Q. From your own house? A. I don't remember, Sir, whether I went to Mr. Tilton's house before I went to my business, or afterward.

Q. Don't remember that? A. No; sometimes I went to the docks and returned.

Q. I didn't ask you what your habit was; I was inquiring what you did that morning. Now, you did go there sometime during that day? A. Did go where?

Q. To Mr. Tilton's house? A. My impression is that I did; yes, Sir; and my recollection, to the best of my recollection, is that I went there that morning.

Q. Either before or after you went to the docks? A. My recollection is that I did.

Q. Who went with you? A. I don't remember.

Q. Did you see Mrs. Tilton? A. I think I did; yes, Sir. My recollection is that I went to the house and saw Mrs. Tilton.

Q. Where did you see her? A. In her room, I think, Sir.

Q. In her room? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Sick room? A. Yes, Sir; I don't know whether it was a sick room or not. I saw her.

Q. Was she in bed or not? A. I don't remember.

Q. Don't remember whether she was in bed or not? A. No.

Q. Do you know whether she was sick or not? A. I think she was ill.

Q. Well, was she in bed ill? A. I don't remember.

Q. Do you mean to say that you don't know whether she was sick or well? A. She was ill, I think, Sir.

Q. You say she was ill? A. She was ill—

Mr. Fullerton—"She was ill, I think."

Q. Do you mean to say whether she was ill or not? A. She was ill, I think, Sir.

Judge Neilson—That is the third or fourth time he has answered it.

Mr. Beach—Well, he is not a physician.

Mr. Everts—If your Honor please, cannot you tell whether a man or woman is sick, without being a physician?

Judge Neilson—Not always.

Mr. Everts—Not always, but sometimes you can.

Judge Neilson—He says: "She was ill, I think."

Mr. Everts—We know how sick she was, and how she was disposed at the time; and if this witness cannot tell us whether he knows or remembers whether this woman was sick or well at that time, then he may not remember other things.

Judge Neilson—Well, Sir, my own judgment is, that when a layman says of the lady he visited, that "she was ill, I think," it is a fair answer and a full answer. You may ask the witness, undoubtedly, why he thinks she was ill, what was the appearance—

Q. Who was with you in her room? A. I don't remember.

Q. Do you mean to say that you don't remember whether anybody at all was with you, or whether you were alone? A. I don't remember, Sir.

Q. Was her husband with you? A. I don't remember that he was.

Q. Do you remember that he was not? A. I don't remember that he was not.

Q. Did he go to the house with you? A. I don't remember that.

Q. Do you know how you went to that house? A. If I went to the house I rode.

Q. Did Mr. Tilton ride with you? A. I don't think he did.

Q. Do you remember that he did not? A. To the best—the best of my recollection is that he did not.

Q. Was he in the house when you went there? A. I don't recollect.

Q. Whether he was or not? A. No.

Q. From the time you went in, until the time you came away, you don't recollect of seeing Mr. Tilton there? A. I do not.

Q. And don't know that he was there? A. Don't recollect that he was.

Q. Or that he was not? A. Don't recollect that he was there.

Q. Well, do you recollect that he was not? A. I don't recollect that he was there.

Q. Was that letter written in your presence? A. Don't remember whether it was or not.

Q. Don't remember whether it was or not? A. No, Sir.

Judge Neilson—Why repeat that, General, you are burdening the case.

Mr. Tracy—Excuse me [to the witness]. From whose hand did you receive that letter? A. I think I received it from the hand of Elizabeth directly.

Q. Do you know whether you did or not? A. It was either given to me directly by Elizabeth Tilton, or it was sent to me by a messenger to my house. My recollection is that I went to the house that morning—I am undertaking to give my recollection.

Q. Now, I understand you to say that you don't know whether you went to the house and got this letter from Mrs. Tilton, or whether it was sent to you by a messenger to your house? A. I am giving my recollection, Sir; I think I went to the house; to the best of my recollection I went to the house, Gen. Tracy.

Q. Will you say that that letter was not delivered to you by the hand of Theodore Tilton? A. I don't recollect that it was.

Q. Will you say that it was not? A. I won't say that it was not.

Q. What time of evening was it when you left your house to go to Mr. Beecher's on the 31st? A. It was after seven o'clock in the evening.

Q. After seven o'clock? A. Yes, Sir, I should think it was. The best of my recollection is it was after seven o'clock.

Q. You found Mr. Beecher on the evening of the 31st? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Where? A. He was not at home, Sir, when I called at the house?

Q. Well? A. And a messenger from his house, somebody from his house, came after me and said that his mother, I think, knew where he was; I think it was one of Mr. Beecher's sons, and I went back and waited for him. He came.

Q. Where did you have your interview with him? A. Upstairs in the back room, Sir, I think.

Q. Second or third story? A. I should think it was the second story, Sir. I won't be certain about that.

Q. In the study? A. Don't remember that it was the study.

Q. In the bedroom? A. My impression is, Sir, that it was; my recollection is that it was.

Q. Now, how did you commence that interview with Mr. Beecher that night? A. Well, I said to him that I thought that he would consider the subject of it a strange one; that his judgment would say that it was rather a strange interview; and I recalled something of the conversation, I think, of the previous evening to him, and I said to him, "You got Theodore's permission last night to go down and see his wife, and you procured from her a retraction of her confession, and you procured what I must term a lie, and I think you are guilty of great meanness in doing that; I think you are." I told him that I had received a note from Theodore in the morning, asking back the confession of his wife, and that I had seen Theodore, and that he was very angry about Mr. Beecher's conduct—about his conduct—and I said: "Mr. Beecher, I didn't see much of the guidance of God in what you did, but at the same time, there may be a Providence in it after all. I have come for that retraction. I think you had better give it up to me. I will burn both the confession and the retraction in your presence, if you choose, or I will hold both;" and I read to him the letter which Elizabeth Tilton had either sent or given to me, and I read also a letter which Theodore Tilton had given to me, dated "Midnight," in which his wife informed him of the, whatever you call it, recantation.

Mr. Evarts—Those letters are in evidence.

The Witness—I believe so, yes; and he said to me that this recantation would be his only, would be the only defense of his family—I am giving his language as nearly as I recollect it, Sir—would be the only defense of his family, in case he was attacked; and I said to him: "Mr. Beecher, I don't see how you have erred as you have; I don't understand it; you have had criminal connection with Mrs. Tilton, and you go down and you get this paper; I don't see how you could have performed two such acts. Mr. Tilton's disposition last night, when I went home, or when I saw him after going home, was peaceful. He said that no matter what might come to himself, he would protect his wife and family, intended to do that." And Mr. Beecher then said to me with great sorrow, weeping, that he had loved Elizabeth Tilton very much; that through his love for her, if he had fallen at all, he had fallen; that the expression, the sexual expression of that love, was just as natural in his opinion—he had thought so—as the language that he used to her; that if he had fallen at all, he had fallen in that way, through love and not through lust, or words to that effect, and he said—

Mr. Tracy—Now, witness, excuse me.

The Witness—And he said, "This will be my defense; my only defense, in case I was attacked, but with you I throw myself upon your friendship and upon what I really believe to be your desire to do the best for all parties;" and as I was leaving him, he said, as nearly as I can recollect—afterward the language made great impression upon me—that he felt that he was upon the brink of a moral Niagara, with no power to save himself, and he wanted me to save him, and that is the substance of the interview as nearly as—

Mr. Morris—Wanted you to save him? A. Yes, Sir; and he gave me back the retraction.

Q. Now, will you explain to the Court and Jury how it happened that in repeating Mr. Beecher's remarks, you first said that he said his expression toward Mrs. Tilton—correcting yourself, you said his sexual expression toward Mrs. Tilton—will you tell us how it happened—intercourse. I mean; intercourse—expression. Will you explain to the Court and Jury how it was that you made the slip? A. I don't understand the slip. If you will explain it, Sir?

Q. In repeating Mr. Beecher's language on this occasion, you first said that—

Mr. Shearman—He considered his expression—then he stopped and said, his "sexual expression of his love for Elizabeth." Those were the exact words.

Mr. Tracy—Can you tell how that happened—why you repeated it in that way? A. Here, in this—?

Mr. Tracy—Yes, Sir. A. Well, I dropped a word; that's all, Sir.

Q. That is your answer; you dropped the word? A. I meant to say precisely what I did say—his sexual expression—that his sexual intercourse—

Q. Are you aware that you made exactly the same mistake on your direct examination? A. No.

Q. You are not aware of that fact? A. No, Sir. [Book produced and referred to by Mr. Tracy.]

A PRECISIAN CORRECTED.

Mr. Morris—Now, if that is to be read, I ask that it be read from the original stenographic notes, because they are incorrectly printed; and that is not the only inaccuracy.

Judge Neilson—Errors will creep into the press, where they are—

Mr. Morris—There is one in this case.

Mr. Evarts—Does anybody say there is an error here?

Mr. Morris—Yes, Sir, I do; in the printing of it.

Mr. Evarts—Well, where is your proof of it?

Mr. Morris—Well, I do say so.

Mr. Evarts—Show us the proof.

Mr. Morris—I call then for the original stenographic notes. The stenographer called my attention to it himself, and I saw that it was incorrect, and he said that the mistake had been made in the THE TRIBUNE office; that his manuscript was correct, and the production of the notes will show that that was incorrectly printed.

Mr. Evarts—It is certainly quite competent for counsel on either side to appeal to the original stenographic notes.

Judge Neilson—This correction is one that can be made in the re-direct examination.

Mr. Evarts—Or the stenographer can be produced.

Mr. Morris—But we object to their assuming that the printing is correct in reference to this testimony of the witness, because it is not.

Mr. Tracy—Well, it is very clear he made the same mistake now.

Mr. Beach—This may as well be understood. We say there is an incorrect report in THE TRIBUNE on that point. Now, I wish to say, Sir, as this subject has been suggested now, that at the commencement of this trial it was named to me by one of the counsel on the other side that the report of THE TRIBUNE should be adopted as the official report of the trial; and I see that THE TRIBUNE stenographer, as I understand—or that a stenographer—

Judge Neilson—The one who is assisting THE TRIBUNE stenographers is the official stenographer of this Court, and is now acting as far as he can in connection with them.

Mr. Beach—Yes, Sir; we certainly intended to make no reflection upon them, Sir, or their accuracy. But I wish to state to your Honor, that some reporters, whether the official or not the official stenographers, have mentioned to the counsel for the plaintiff that there are several inaccuracies in THE TRIBUNE report of the testimony. And it is through that representation made by the stenographers that we have raised the question which is now presented to your Honor; and I continue observations upon it for another purpose. It seems, Sir, upon both sides the report in THE TRIBUNE has been adopted as the official report of the proceedings upon this trial. When we find that the report in THE TRIBUNE, in matters which we deem essential to a true representation of this trial, varies from the stenographer's notes, and, when that is brought to our attention by the official stenographer, we wish to enter a protest to your Honor against accepting THE TRIBUNE report as the official report of this trial, that we may not be under any misapprehension afterwards. And, I may be permitted to say, Sir, in addition, that, having studied with some care the report of the trial as it has appeared in THE TRIBUNE, knowing that it had been designated in this way by mutual consent as the official report of this trial, I have been very much dissatisfied by the fact that there are comments prefixed to the report of the trial in THE TRIBUNE which are unfair and unjust towards the plaintiff and which make, I think, false inferences and false statements in regard to the course of the trial. Your Honor will observe that to every report of the evidence in this case in THE TRIBUNE there is prefixed a sort of summary or syllabus giving representations in regard to the object of counsel, the results accomplished by counsel, and representations in regard to the character of the evidence and the effect of the evidence, whether prejudicial to one side or the other. I am unwilling, Sir, that these comments should be presented in what is accepted as an official report of the trial, and attached to the statement of the evidence, incorrect in many of its particulars.

Judge Neilson—That forms no part of the report of the case, of course.

Mr. Beach—No, Sir; but your Honor requested, with great propriety (and we supposed that the courtesy, at least, of the official paper reporting this trial would accede to that request), that the report should not be accompanied by editorial comments; and, if so, Sir, I insist that they shall be at least partial, and not tinctured and poisoned by the prejudice of the editorial department of that paper.

Mr. Evarts—Impartial.

Mr. Beach—Impartial, Sir, I mean.

Mr. Evarts—So that, we may make errors even ourselves. I wish to say one word, if your Honor please. The general discussion about reports of newspapers does not seem to be very pertinent, unless some application is to be made to your Honor in the matter.

Mr. Beach—Why, it is an application, or a statement, that we do not accept the report of that paper as the official report.

Mr. Evarts—No one has ever asked THE TRIBUNE report to be accepted as an authority superseding the official report.

Mr. Beach—Well, you are mistaken.

Mr. Evarts—I have not heard it.

Mr. Beach—Well, there are some things about which you have never heard.

Mr. Evarts—Now, some inquiry has arisen here as to whether, in our dealing with this witness in our legitimate manner, we may not have adopted a report in THE TRIBUNE, as a report (as it would presumptively be accepted by all of us) correct in this very matter in question. If the objection is made that the report in THE TRIBUNE is not such as we assumed, not having been the testimony in fact, then let the stenographic report that is official be produced before us. We never shall arrive at a conclusion whether there is a discrepancy between the official report and THE TRIBUNE report, much less as to which is the more correct, unless we have the two things before us. Now, I think my learned friends, if they pursue the matter further, will find that the official report gives the facts as we have assumed them in our cross-examination of the witness.

Judge Neilson—That may be, Sir, but that particular subject has been exhausted by the examiner, and if there be an error in the use of a word, as assumed by General Tracy, on his cross-examination, that can be corrected on the re-direct, rather than now.

Mr. Evarts—And by producing the official report?

Judge Neilson—Yes, Sir.

The Court here took the usual recess.

The Court met at 2 p. m., pursuant to adjournment. Francis D. Moulton recalled, and cross-examination resumed.

[The last question and answer of the morning session read by THE TRIBUNE's reporter to the witness.]

Mr. Tracy—At what stage of that conversation did you read Mrs. Tilton's letter requesting a return of the retraction?

Mr. Morris—The Exhibits are not here; they are over at the office.

Mr. Tracy—We cannot get along without them.

Mr. Morris—They will be here in a few minutes.

Mr. Tracy—Do you remember whether that letter was in an envelope? A. I think it was in an envelope, addressed to me, Sir.

Q. Have you got the envelope? A. I don't know, Sir, whether it is among the papers or not. All the papers that I have got I have handed to Judge Morris.

Q. Do you know whether the direction of that envelope was in Mrs. Tilton's handwriting? Well, have you got the envelope? Can you get it? We would like it if you have it.

Mr. Morris—We haven't the envelope; I have never seen it.

Q. Do you know what became of it? A. I suppose it was torn off and destroyed, Sir.

Q. Do you say it was; have you any recollection on that subject? A. No distinct recollection; if the envelope is not there it was destroyed—if it is not among the papers.

Q. You don't know whether it is among the papers or not? A. I don't know, Sir; I don't recollect whether it is or not; I have handed Judge Morris all the papers that I have got.

Mr. Evarts—Your Honor will remember that we referred to the fact that all these notes and letters were produced without envelopes, and yet they showed that they must have been in envelopes, that is, they were not complete sealed or closed papers, and we were told that the envelopes were all in hand and we could have access to them.

Mr. Beach—Oh! no.

Mr. Evarts—I mean those which you had.

Mr. Beach—Yes.

Mr. Evarts—I don't mean to say that you said they had all been preserved, but that you had some envelopes, and whatever you had you had here.

Mr. Morris—Yes.

Mr. Evarts—Now, we would like to see if there is this envelope.

Mr. Beach—We tell you that there is none.

Mr. Evarts—Has it been searched for?

Mr. Morris—Yes, it has; and we have not got it.

Mr. Evarts—Have you searched for this? We never asked you for it before.

Mr. Beach—You are cross-examining Mr. Morris now.

Mr. Evarts—No.

Mr. Morris—I say we have; and we have not got it.

Mr. Evarts—Very well.

Mr. Morris—I have never seen it.

Q. At what stage of the interview with Mr. Beecher on that night did you read to him that letter? A. I think I read it to him after I read to him the letter of Mrs. Tilton to her husband informing him of the fact.

Q. You read, then, what we call the explanation of the retraction, first? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. And then read her letter requesting its return? A. Yes, Sir, after that, I think; that is the best of my recollection.

Mr. Tracy—I want that letter.

Mr. Morris—I can give the printed one; there it is [handing Mr. Tracy the book.]

Mr. Evarts—Well, you will have the original here?

Mr. Morris—Yes, Sir.

MR. BEECHER'S HARD ALTERNATIVE.

Q. I understand you to say that you told Mr. Beecher that if he would surrender that retraction you would destroy the accusation—what I call an accusation and that you call Mrs. Tilton's confession—you would destroy that paper and the retraction in his presence.

Mr. Beach—No, that was not the statement.

Judge Neilson—He says so.

Mr. Fullerton—No. I beg your Honor's pardon!

Mr. Evarts—We understand him to have said so.

The Witness—I said to Mr. Beecher that if Mr. Beecher desired—

Q. You would destroy it? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. What did Mr. Beecher say to that? A. He said that if any accusation was made against him that this retraction would be the only defense which his family would have—words to that effect.

Q. And then did you tell him that if you did not destroy you would keep them both together? A. I told him I would keep the retraction and keep the confession; yes, Sir.

Q. So that one should never be seen without the other? A. So that one should never be seen without the other.

Q. You said you would keep them together? A. I told him I would keep both; I did not use the word "together."

Q. Preserve both? A. Preserve both.

Q. Didn't you mean by that to be understood that they should not be separated? A. I meant that I should keep them both in my possession.

Q. Didn't you mean by that to be understood by Mr. Beecher that those two papers should never be separated?

Mr. Beach—Why, Sir, that does not convey any intimation to the witness of what the counsel desires to be answered. They were separate papers. Does he mean that they should be annexed together and never detached, the one from the other, or that the one should never be shown without the other? It is impossible to answer a question of that character without more discrimination.

Mr. Evarts—We understand all that. This witness has said, "I said to Mr. Beecher, I will destroy them both or keep them both," and Mr. Beecher said, "This retraction will be the only evidence against the charge." Now the question is, "Did you mean by saying that you would keep them both that you would keep them so that one did not appear without the other?"

Mr. Beach—Well, that is well enough.

Judge Neilson—How is that, Mr. Moulton? Say yes or no to that? A. I cannot answer yes or no without an explanation to that. That I would keep them both—I said that I would destroy them both in his presence if he desired, or I would keep them both; I would keep both papers; not necessarily together, but keep them both safe, not to be made public, either of them. That is my understanding, Sir.

Mr. Tracy—Did you intend to be understood that you would keep those papers, so that one should not be shown without the other, or should not appear without the other?

Mr. Beach—The question is, Sir, what the witness meant at that time?

Mr. Tracy—Yes, Sir.

Judge Neilson—Answer that.

A. I meant to keep both of those papers sacredly; the recantation for Mr. Beecher's sake, and the confession for Mr. Tilton's sake, who had given them to me. That is what I meant. My idea was, when I said that—my idea was that this confession never should be made against Mr. Beecher without his having the recantation to meet it with. That is what I meant.

Q. And that they should not be shown and separated, so that one should appear without the other?

Mr. Beach—That is not a question.

Mr. Tracy—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Beach—No, that is not a question; that is a declaration of the counsel.

Q. Did you so mean to be understood that one of these papers should not be shown or appear before the public without the other? A. I meant that Mr. Beecher's recantation which he handed me should be used by him in his defense in case an attack was made upon him upon the basis of the other paper. That is it, Sir; if the other paper was used he should have his to use against it. I try to explain it, Sir.

Q. Didn't you also mean that that paper should be preserved so that if any attack was made upon him the recantation should appear to be a retraction of the accusation.

Mr. Beach—That is arguing, Sir, in regard to the effect of the paper.

Mr. Tracy—No, Sir.

Mr. Beach—Yes, Sir. I object to that question.

Judge Neilson—Let the stenographer read the question.

THE TRIBUNE stenographer read the question, as follows: "Didn't you also mean that that paper should be preserved, so that if any attack was made upon him, the recantation should appear to be a retraction of the accusation."

Mr. Tracy—Answer the question.

Mr. Fullerton—That is objected to.

Judge Neilson—Let him answer that.

The Witness—I can answer it with an explanation. I meant that they should both be presented together or both be destroyed together.

Judge Neilson—I understood you virtually to say that before, some time ago. [To Mr. Tracy.] Go on, now.

Q. When you offered to destroy those papers in Mr. Beecher's presence had you the authority of Theodore Tilton to make that offer? A. I don't remember that I had.

Q. You had not? A. According to the best of my recollection, I had not.

Q. Do you mean to say that you had not? A. According to the best of my recollection, Sir, I had not.

Q. Then do you mean to be understood as saying that you received from the hands of Theodore Tilton that accusation of his wife against Mr. Beecher, and, having pledged your friendship to Mr. Beecher the night before, you took it to him and offered to destroy it without the authority or permission of Theodore Tilton? A. On my own responsibility I did think that, Sir.

Q. And you would have destroyed it that night? A. Yes, Sir, I would.

Q. Would that have bound Mr. Tilton to any course on the subject?

Mr. Beach—I object to that.

Q. Did you so understand?

Mr. Fullerton—I object to that.

Judge Neilson—I rule that out.

Mr. Evarts—We except, if your Honor please.

Judge Neilson—The witness gives a certain answer, the words of which convey a certain meaning, and it is our business to interpret the meaning of the words used; and you do not need his interpretation.

Mr. Evarts—He has said, if your Honor please, that he did it on his own responsibility.

Judge Neilson—Yes; and in the same connection that he had no authority from Mr. Tilton.

Mr. Evarts—Now, I want to get that distinctly.

Judge Neilson—He has given it. There is nothing gained by repeating it.

Mr. Evarts—If your Honor will allow me, I want to have no escape from the act that had been done. There was nothing in that act that would have bound Mr. Tilton to any suppression, whatever.

Judge Neilson—The paper would have been destroyed; that is all.

Mr. Evarts—I am not discussing what the effect of the thing is. There was nothing in that act, of which he assumed the responsibility, that, by reason of anything that had passed between Mr. Tilton and himself, would have bound Mr. Tilton not to renew it immediately.

Mr. Beach—That is it. It was for somebody else besides the witness to determine that.

Mr. Evarts—Oh! no.

Judge Neilson—Well, we have got this down distinctly and in such a way that it cannot be evaded.

Mr. Tracy—I will put another question, your Honor.

Mr. Evarts—The question is asked and ruled out, and an exception is taken.

Judge Neilson—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Tracy—Did Mr. Tilton know that you bore the letter to Mr. Beecher from Mrs. Tilton? A. My best recollection is that I showed the letter to Theodore, in accordance—

Q. Before going? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. And that letter called for the return of the papers, that they might be burned, did it not?

Mr. Beach—The paper will show for itself.

Mr. Tracy—Well, I am waiting for it.

Mr. Beach—You have got it in print before you.

Mr. Evarts—We want the original.

Q. Now, Sir, did you say to Mr. Beecher that Mr. Tilton knew of this letter from Mrs. Tilton, and knew that you came with it to request the return of that paper? A. I do not remember saying any such thing; to the best of my recollection I did not.

Q. What? A. To the best of my recollection, I did not say that.

Q. Did you tell Mr. Beecher that the object that Mrs. Tilton had in procuring the return of those papers was that they might be burned? A. I read the letter to Mr. Beecher; I do not remember saying anything further than the letter itself.

Q. And you did not tell him whether Mr. Tilton knew of that letter or not? A. I do not remember that I did, to my recollection.

Q. Didn't he ask you? A. I don't recollect that he did.

Q. And yet you say that, on the authority of this letter, you would have taken the responsibility of not only burning the retraction but burning a paper which you had received from the hands of Mr. Tilton that night in the presence of Mr. Beecher?

Mr. Fullerton—I object to that.

Judge Neilson—He does not say upon the authority of that letter.

Mr. Beach—No, Sir.

Judge Neilson—He said he would have done it.

Q. Would you have done it upon the authority of that letter?

Mr. Fullerton—I object to that.

Judge Neilson—He has said he would have done it.

Mr. Tracy—There was no authority in the letter in respect to the burning of it—nothing upon that subject.

Judge Neilson—I think he may answer. Answer, Mr. Moulton; would you have done it under the authority of that letter?

Mr. Beach—What letter do you refer to?

Mr. Tracy—I refer to the letter of Mrs. Tilton asking for the return of these papers, that they might be destroyed, which letter the witness says was shown to Theodore Tilton before he went to Mr. Beecher's house that night.

Judge Neilson—Now, if Mr. Beecher had consented to the destruction of both papers, the question is, whether you would have destroyed them upon the authority of that letter which you had taken there with you, or upon your own individual responsibility? A. That letter would have influenced me somewhat with regard to it.

Mr. Tracy—And the fact that Tilton had seen it, would not that have influenced you also? A. I think my own thought in regard to the transaction would have influenced me more than either.

Q. Now, do you say that you made this assurance to Mr. Beecher, that if he would surrender that retraction to you, and permit it to be destroyed, you would destroy it with the accusation, without having any authority from Theodore Tilton, or knowing from Theodore in any manner whether, if that was done, it was to end both the accusation and the retraction? A. I would have destroyed the papers on the spot, Sir.

Q. I didn't ask you that, Sir. That is not an answer to my question. Will the stenographer read my question?

THE TRIBUNE stenographer read the last question.

A. Yes; I should have done it on the spot without any authority from Theodore Tilton.

Judge Neilson—Your answer "Yes," then, answers the question?

Mr. Tracy—No, Sir.

Mr. Fullerton—No; that would be wrong.

Mr. Beach—The question is not very perspicuous.

Judge Neilson—[To THE TRIBUNE stenographer.] Read the answer.

THE TRIBUNE stenographer read the last answer.

Judge Neilson—Do you wish to add anything to that answer? A. No, Sir; that covers it.

Mr. Tracy—I put the question, whether you made that representation to Mr. Beecher without having any authority from Theodore Tilton? A. I don't recollect that I had any authority from Theodore Tilton.

Q. Then you mean to say that you did make that representation to him without authority?

Mr. Fullerton—He has said over and over again that he had no authority.

Q. Then you mean to say that you did make that representation to him without having any authority? A. Without having any authority.

Q. Then did you know of anything, in case that retraction had been destroyed, that night, which would have prevented Mr. Tilton from renewing the charge the next day? A. Yes.

Q. You did? A. Yes.

Q. What? A. Mr. Tilton's expression to me that he was going to save his family—that he did not want any harm to come to his family. That was my thought.

Q. And that you understood as a declaration from Theodore Tilton that he did not intend to make public this accusation against Mr. Tilton? A. Precisely.

Q. And that you understood from Tilton for the first, when?
A. On the night of the 30th.

Q. Before you went to Beecher? A. No, Sir.

Mr. Tracy—This is the letter. [Reading the letter marked "Exhibit 1."]

SATURDAY MORNING.

MY DEAR FRIEND FRANK: I want you to do me the greatest possible favor. My letter which you have, and the one I gave Mr. Beecher at his dictation last evening, ought both to be destroyed.

Please bring both to me and I will burn them. Show this note to Theodore and Mrs. Beecher. They will see the propriety of this request.

Yours truly,

E. R. TILTON.

Q. Now, did Mr. Beecher on that same evening have any talk with you in regard to the stories which Bowen had told against Mr. Tilton? A. On the evening of December 31st?

Q. Yes. A. Not on the evening of December 31st, I recollect now, Sir.

Q. Is that the way you have always recollected it? A. I think it is.

Q. Please look at the book where I have marked it, and see if that will refresh your memory. [Handing witness the book.]

Mr. Fullerton—What page is that, Mr. Moulton?

The Witness—It is on this book, the 239th page.

Q. Turn over the page also, please, and look at that. [Witness refers to the page indicated.] I will ask you, did not Mr. Beecher tell you on that occasion that he had sympathized with Bowen and had taken sides with him against Tilton? A. He told me—not on this occasion; it was on the evening of December the 30th; that is my recollection now. I think this is a misstatement.

Q. He told you that? A. Yes, Sir; I think this is in error in that respect.

Q. As to the date only? A. Yes.

Q. That it occurred on the evening of the 30th? A. Well, perhaps, I don't understand all of your question. With regard to Bowen he spoke.

Q. Yes; let me have no misunderstanding about it. You now say that you think on the evening of the 30th Mr. Beecher said that he had sympathized with Bowen and had taken sides with him as against Tilton? A. He had taken sides with him as against Tilton?

Q. Yes? A. Yes; that he had taken sides with him as against Tilton, and sympathized with Mr. Bowen's story.

Q. In consequence of the stories which were in circulation in regard to him, and especially the one specific case where he had been informed that Mr. Tilton had had improper relations with a woman whom he named? A. Yes, Sir; that did not occur on the evening of December the 30th; that occurred on the evening of January 1st, if my memory serves me right now.

Q. That part of it occurred on the evening of Jan. 1st? A. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Evarts—The whole of it? A. No, Sir; "And especially of one specific case." My recollection tells me—

Mr. Evarts—It is only a question to get it right.

Mr. Tracy—Your recollection now is that, recurring to what he had told you on the evening of the 30th about having sympathized with Bowen and taken sides as against Tilton, he added that he did it on account of these stories in regard to a certain woman? A. No; that on Jan. 1st he spoke of this "one specific case;" he spoke of "one specific case" or Jan. 1st.

Q. Now, didn't he on the evening of the 31st, in speaking of that same thing, offer to write a letter to Mr. Bower taking back what he had said in regard to him? A. On the evening of December 31st?

Q. Yes. A. No, Sir.

Q. That occurred, you say, on the 1st? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. When was it that he showed you the draft of letter for that purpose—that he proposed to write Bowen to correct what he had said about that? A. It was either at his house on January the 2d or at my house after January the 2d.

Q. Now, do you mean to say that this letter, a rough draft of it, was not shown you either on the evening of the 31st or on the evening of the 1st of January? A. Yes, Sir; I don't mean to say it was not on the evening—yes, it was not on the evening of the 1st; it was either at his house on the 2d of January or at my house after the 2d of January.

Q. Then that is a part of another conversation that has got mixed here, is it? A. What is a part?

Mr. Beach—Got mixed where?

Mr. Evarts—No matter—

Mr. Beach—Yes, it is matter.

Mr. Evarts—Let him refresh himself before you ask him. We want the facts as they are.

Q. Did he tell you on that evening at any time?

Mr. Beach—What evening?

Mr. Tracy—Either on the 31st or the 1st, and if so, which—or the 30th, that Mrs. Beecher and himself had been expressing great sympathy towards Mrs. Tilton, and taking an active interest with her against her husband? A. Where is that, Sir?

Q. That is on the next page right over, after the signature to the letter? A. I spoke to him on the evening of December 31st, about certain stories that Theodore Tilton had told me that Mrs. Beecher was circulating against him, and to the best of my recollection, Mr. Beecher said to me that Mrs. Beecher received her information from Mrs. Morse, who she believed to be a dangerous woman, and yet her enmity to Theodore Tilton was such that she entered into sympathy, and he sympathized himself with those stories.

Q. When do you say that was—the 31st? A. Yes.

Q. Now, what were those stories which Mrs. Beecher had received, and with which she and Mr. Beecher sympathized? A. I don't remember, Sir, what they were.

Q. Don't remember anything about them? A. I don't remember, Sir, now; no, Sir, I don't recollect what they were.

Q. They were mentioned, were they not? A. I think they were mentioned subsequently; I do not think they were mentioned on that night fully.

Q. Was the nature of them spoken of? A. I do not remember that the nature of them was spoken of on the night of Dec. 31st, Sir.

Q. How were they referred to? A. As stories injurious. I told Mr. Beecher the stories that Tilton had told me that Mrs. Beecher was circulating against him.

Q. How did you describe them? A. I think as infidelities. I think I may have used the word "infidelity."

Q. What else did you say? A. That is all that I recollect now.

Q. The infidelities of whom? A. Of Mr. Tilton.

Q. Were the names of the persons mentioned? A. No; no names were mentioned that night.

Q. No names mentioned that night at all? A. No, Sir.

Q. What did you say to Mr. Beecher about those stories? A. I told him those stories ought to be stopped.

Q. What else did you say about them? A. I don't remember saying anything else.

Q. Did you tell him that they ought to be stopped because they were false? A. I don't think I said that they were false.

Q. Did you say anything about their truth or falsity? A. I don't think I did.

Q. Did you mean that Mr. Beecher should understand you as saying that these stories should be stopped even if they were true and you believed them to be true? A. No.

Q. Well, then, didn't you say that the stories were untrue and should be stopped? A. No, I did not on that occasion; I don't remember saying that they were untrue.

Q. Did you say anything on the subject, whether they were true, or not? A. I told him that those stories ought to be stopped. That is all that I remember having said. I am giving all that I remember.

Q. And gave no reason whatever why they should be stopped? A. I don't remember that I did, Sir.

Q. Did you intend to leave an impression on Mr. Beecher's mind that those stories were true? A. No, Sir.

Mr. Fullerton—I object to that.

Q. You did not? A. No, Sir.

Mr. Fullerton—That is a form of question very frequently put, and it is improper.

Q. Did you intend to leave upon his mind an impression that you believed them to be untrue?

Mr. Fullerton—I object to that.

Judge Neilson—If he said anything on the subject he can speak; otherwise not.

Mr. Tracy—Then I understand your Honor as excluding the question.

Judge Neilson—Yes, in that way. If he said anything on the subject he can speak about it.

Mr. Evarts—We have had, I think, if your Honor please, this question answered before. You will observe that a witness speaking of a conversation that took place four years ago, begins by saying that he doesn't profess to give every word—of course we understand that—but to give the entire purport of it. Very well. Now, as it is the purport that he undertakes to give, we cannot exhaust the testimony by saying: "Did you use these words," or "those words," but, "Was the purport of what you said to him such as to leave an impression on his mind that the stories concerning which you were talking to him were true or false?"

Judge Neilson—That would be proper as calling for something more than mere intent and construction, because it would cover words that were used or might have been used.

Mr. Evarts—Was the purport of what you said to him such as to leave on his mind the impression that you thought those stories were true, or that you thought they were not?

Mr. Fullerton—He has already given the purport.

Judge Neilson—I think he has; but I think he may answer it.

Mr. Fullerton—Is not the jury to be the judge of the intent from the purport?

Judge Neilson—I think so.

Mr. Fullerton—It seems extraordinary if they have a right to go through with a long cross-examination of this witness as to what the purport of his language was, and after that go through with it and ask what intent he had in using it, and whether it was to produce such a result upon the mind of the listener. Why, if your Honor please, the jury are to judge of the intent from the language itself, or the purport of it, as given by the witness. It is a great waste of time, in my judgment, as well as a violation of the legal rule.

Mr. Beach—It is more than a waste of time, your Honor.

Mr. Fullerton—Yes, it is an evil example.

Mr. Beach—Your Honor will permit me to add this observation: Where this witness is unable to give the language of a conversation to which his attention is directed, it is proper to ask him what was the substance of what was said upon the occasion. This question goes further. It asks not only what was the substance or the purport of the conversation, but it asks the witness also to give his judgment or opinion whether that purport had the effect of leaving upon the mind of Mr. Beecher a certain impression. Now, that is usurping the office of the Court and the jury, Sir. It is not for this witness to say what would be the impression or the effect of the language, or the substance of the language as given, upon the hearer. That is for the jury to say, and it is to that part, that feature of the question, that we respectfully submit the objection lies.

Judge Neilson—Now repeat this question. I think many of these interrogatories are very extreme, especially when they require the witness to state what impression he intends to convey or what his intent was. [To THE TRIBUNE stenographer.] Just repeat the question, please.

THE TRIBUNE stenographer read the question as follows: "Was the purport of what you said to him such as to leave on his mind the impression that you thought those stories were true, or that you thought they were not?"

Judge Neilson—Answer that.

Mr. Beach—We except, if your Honor overrules our objection.

Judge Neilson—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Tracy—Just answer? A. Repeat the question, again, please?

THE TRIBUNE stenographer read the question again.

The Witness—No, Sir; the purport was not to leave upon his mind the impression that they were untrue, rather than that they were true.

HISTORY OF THE RETRACTION AND THE RECAN-TATION.

Q. Now, the two papers that you received that night and had with you at Mr. Beecher's, the accusation and the retraction—will you give the history of them from that time forward?

Mr. Beach—No, the accusation and the request.

Mr. Tracy—No, Sir; the accusation and the retraction. Beecher gave him the retraction and Tilton gave him the accusation.

Mr. Evarts—And he had them both.

Mr. Tracy—He had them both there. [To the witness] Now, when you got that from Beecher, and they were together in your possession; now will you give the history of those two papers from that time forward? A. I will give that, Sir, as nearly as I can. I took the recantation back to Theodore Tilton—back to my house and found Theodore Tilton there, and read it to him, and may have handed it to him to read, for aught I know, and then I put the papers, the confession and the retraction, into my bureau drawer, and then had it locked up in my safe after that, over in New-York. After the tripartite covenant was signed, Mr. Tilton wanted the confession, as he said, as an act of good faith toward his wife, and I gave it to him and it was destroyed; at least he told me that his wife destroyed it.

Q. That he gave it to her and he saw her destroy it? A. Yes, Sir; so I understood it.

Q. When was that? A. I think the "tripartite covenant" was in April, 1872; I think so; and it was a day or two after that, perhaps two days after that, that I gave to him the confession.

Q. From that time to the present where has the retraction been?

Mr. Fullerton—One moment. That other question is not answered.

Mr. Evarts—He didn't ask it.

Judge Neilson—We asked for the history of both papers; he has given the history of one.

Mr. Tracy—Yes, he says they were both together in his safe up to that time. Now, my question is, what became of the retraction afterward? A. I locked it up in my tin box, Sir, and kept it.

Q. Where? A. In my house.

Q. Until when? A. I think until I published this statement, Sir; I used it in this statement—in the first statement.

Q. After that what was done with it? A. I think before that I showed it to you at my house one night after the publication of the Woodhull story.

Q. Yes. A. And then I put it back into the box and kept it.

Q. Kept it? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. You say you kept it in a box until about the time that you published this statement on the 4th of August, and now where has it been since? A. Been in my possession—been in the box.

Q. Been in the box? A. Been in the box.

Q. Well, is it in your possession now? A. It was handed to Judge Morris among the other papers.

Q. When was it handed to Judge Morris? A. It was handed to Judge Morris since this suit was commenced.

Q. Is it in your possession now, or Mr. Tilton's, which? A. In Judge Morris's.

Q. Well, Judge Morris is Mr. Tilton's counsel, isn't he, in this suit? A. Yes, Sir; he is Mr. Tilton's counsel.

Q. Then you meant to say that you kept this retraction until Theodore Tilton brought a suit against Mr. Beecher, and then you surrendered it to his counsel, did you?

Judge Neilson—That question is quite unnecessary. The fact appears distinctly without that question.

Mr. Evarts—If your Honor please, there are a variety of papers in the hands of these gentlemen, and very properly. We do not know whether they are in their hands as counsel for Mr. Tilton—

Judge Neilson—Well, the witness has answered as to this paper all he can say, I suppose.

Mr. Evarts—We do not know, if your Honor please, until we learn from people who can speak on the subject, whether these papers that are now here and produced and handed to this witness are in the possession of this plaintiff, or only in the possession of these gentlemen for this witness.

Judge Neilson—The inquiry is as to this one paper which he states he took at a certain time and then he gave it to Judge Morris, and the fact appears that Mr. Morris is one of the attorneys—engaged as one of the counsel for the plaintiff.

Mr. Evarts—Yes, Sir; that is so.

Judge Neilson—This witness gave him that paper. That covers the whole ground. I merely meant to say that it covered all that the question called for.

Mr. Evarts—Are we to understand, then, that all these papers that belong to this witness and were placed in his hands by either party, and are being produced here by the counsel, are in Mr. Tilton's hands?

Mr. Fullerton—The gentleman can understand what he likes.

Mr. Evarts—We want to ask the question about it.

Mr. Fullerton—You have asked it and he has answered it. The question is whether you will learn a thing by its being said once or twice, or whether he will repeat a thing until you understand it.

Mr. Evarts—If your Honor please, this is not the question. If he answered once that he put it in Mr. Morris's hands as Mr. Tilton's counsel, that is enough, but if he merely answered, "I put it in Mr. Morris's hand," why, then, we have no other evidence about this paper than we have about all these papers, that they came—and very properly—from Mr. Morris's hands. The question is whether Mr. Morris holds them for him or for Mr. Tilton, by his authority.

Mr. Beach—Why don't you ask him that?

Mr. Evarts—Well, that is our question.

Mr. Beach—No, that is not the question.

Judge Neilson—I thought when I interrupted you—I am sorry I did for it is a waste of time—that you were putting a question that has been distinctly answered.

Mr. Tracy—I was not intending to put a question that had been answered. I did intend to put a question to the witness which would call for an answer, that is, "Did you place these papers in the hands of Mr. Morris as Mr. Tilton's counsel in this case?"

Mr. Fullerton—That is not the question that was asked.

Judge Neilson—The question asked would emphasize what has been said before as to his intention.

Mr. Fullerton—And it is a re-hash of the whole testimony on that subject.

Mr. Tracy—Whether you placed this paper in the hands of Mr. Morris as the attorney of Mr. Tilton in this case? A. No, Sir; I did not place it in Mr. Morris's hands as the attorney of Mr. Tilton in this case; I received a subpoena from your office, and have consulted with Judge Morris about the terms of the subpoena, and have handed him my papers, and among others this paper.

Q. And you never put it in his hands before? A. I do not recollect that I ever did, Sir.

Q. Do you remember that you did not? A. To the best of my recollection, I did not.

Q. Then you mean to say that the paper is still in your hands, under this subpoena? A. I understand it to be so. I understand that that paper is for production in this Court.

Q. What was the exact date when you delivered this to Mr. Morris? A. I don't remember, Sir.

Mr. Evarts—Since the trial commenced? A. Yes, Sir; I have undertaken to give Judge Morris all the papers called for by your subpoena. I have undertaken to do that.

Mr. Tracy—Mr. Tilton asked for this accusation, that it might be destroyed, and you surrendered it to him for that purpose? A. Yes, Sir; Mr. Tilton asked for it that it might be destroyed.

Q. And you surrendered it to him for that purpose? A. Yes, Sir, after the tripartite covenant in April, 1872.

AUTHORSHIP OF MOULTON'S STATEMENTS.

Q. Now, Mr. Moulton, you have made and published two public statements, have you not, touching this matter? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Both made after the publication of Mr. Beecher's statement? A. Both made after the publication of Mr. Beecher's statement.

Q. Where were those statements prepared? A. Those statements were prepared by Gen. Butler—

Q. I didn't ask by whom they were prepared; I asked where they were prepared? A. They were prepared, Sir, at Bay View and at Lowell; the first was prepared at Bay View and the other at Lowell.

Q. Were you present during the preparation of the first statement? A. I was.

Q. And directed its preparation? A. I gave to Gen. Butler, as my friend, the papers, and he made out the statement, himself, Sir.

Q. How about the other? A. The second statement was in about the same way, Sir.

Q. Do you know the manner in which these statements were made out? I will put a more direct question. Did you dictate to a stenographer who took down your dictation? A. Did I dictate to a stenographer?

Q. Yes? A. No, I think not; I dictated a portion of the second statement, I think, to a stenographer—a portion of it only.

Q. Were you present when Gen. Butler dictated to a stenographer? A. Not all of the time; no, Sir.

Q. Most of the time? A. Which one are you talking about now, Sir?

Q. The first statement, we will say. A. Yes; most of the time, I think.

Q. How did Gen. Butler get possession of the facts except from your dictation or statement, aside from what were contained in the writings? Wasn't it from your statement that Gen. Butler got possession of the facts that were incorporated into these statements? A. I gave to him the facts, Sir, as I recollected them at the time.

Q. Verbally? A. Verbally.

Q. How many days was that first statement in preparation? A. I don't remember how many days.

Q. Was it several? A. It was part of several days, Sir.

Q. Did you bring it back with you here on your return to the city on the 4th of August. A. I think I did; yes, Sir; I will correct an answer that I made a few moments ago with regard to Judge Morris; I had that recantation with me there with Gen. Butler.

Q. Did you have also with you there the letter of Mrs. Tilton requesting the return of these papers that they might be burned? A. Yes, sir; I think I did; if that is in my statement I had it there.

Q. Well, supposing it is not; I don't care about that; did you have it there? A. I recollect that I had it there, I think, Sir, to the best of my recollection.

Q. We will not say anything about what is in your statement, or what is not? A. Yes; you offered me the statement, Sir, to guide my memory.

Q. Certainly. We don't object to your refreshing your mind by the statement. How many days was the second statement in preparation? A. I forget, Sir, how many days it was; several days.

Q. And what length of time intervened between the preparation of the first and second statements? A. I don't remember, Sir.

Q. About how long? Can't you refresh your mind by the book there? A. The second statement was prepared after Mr. Beecher's statement was made to your Committee, Sir, whatever date that was. I don't remember the date.

Q. I have understood you to say—perhaps I have misunderstood you—that they were both prepared after Mr. Beecher's statement? A. The first one was prepared before Mr. Beecher's statement—was prepared before Mr. Beecher's statement was made, I think; yes, Sir; before. It was prepared before; the second one was prepared after. I understood your question to be whether they were not both published after. Did I misunderstand you, Sir?

Q. I am not certain, Sir. A. I don't think I did.

Q. I am not certain, Sir. It is all right now, any way? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. What time intervened between the publication of the first statement and the preparation of the second? A. What time intervened between the publication of the first statement and the preparation of the second?

Q. Yes, Sir. You may just look at the date. A. I don't think this book furnishes the date.

Mr. Shearman—The first was published August 21st, and the second was published September 11th.

The Witness—I commenced to prepare—to make preparations for the second statement immediately after the first one—a short time after the first one.

Mr. Tracy—And you published it as soon as it was completed?

Judge Nellson—What do you mean by publishing? A. Gave it to the newspapers, Sir, to publish.

Q. They were both published in The Graphic, were they not? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. And your first statement was widely circulated before your second statement was completed?

Mr. Fullerton—I don't think that is important, Sir, in this case.

Judge Nellson—Whether it was published; that covers it, perhaps.

Mr. Fullerton—The publisher can tell better about that.

Mr. Tracy—I suppose the witness knows that it was widely circulated.

Mr. Fullerton—What difference does it make in this case whether it was widely circulated or not?

Mr. Evarts—That we will sum up on.

Mr. Fullerton—We will sum it up now. I object to it. Now sum it up.

Judge Nellson—It was published, and if he knows it was widely circulated, I think he can say so.

Mr. Fullerton—It seems to me that it is quite immaterial.

Mr. Tracy—It may be.

Judge Nellson—Do you know whether it was widely circulated, Sir? A. I don't know how widely it was circulated.

Mr. Tracy—Don't you know that it was widely circulated? A. I know that it was published in The Graphic. That is all I know about it.

Q. Don't you know it was published in other papers? A. I read it in The Graphic, Sir; I don't remember having read it in the other papers.

Q. You don't know that it was published, for instance, in The New-York Herald or TRIBUNE? A. In full, I do not.

Q. Was the larger portion of it published? A. I don't know that.

Q. Don't know that? A. No.

Q. Was any of it published in THE TRIBUNE, or The Herald, or The Sun, or T'is World, to your knowledge? A. I don't recollect.

Q. You don't remember? A. No.

Q. Do you know the fact whether your statement was published in any other paper except The Graphic?

Mr. Fullerton—Now, does the Court permit this long investigation about the different papers in which that statement was published? I do not see how it adds to its force at all, that it was widely circulated.

Mr. Tracy—I will show you.

Mr. Fullerton—I am not asking you to show me, I am objecting to your question.

Judge Nellson—I think we will let him answer.

Mr. Fullerton—Well, Sir, if your Honor sees fit to let it in I have nothing to say.

Mr. Tracy—What is the answer? A. What is the question?

THE TRIBUNE stenographer read the question as follows: "Do you know the fact whether your statement was published in any other paper except The Graphic?" A. I don't know the fact, Sir, that it was.

Mr. Beach—I am perfectly willing he should give his supposition or his presumption, if they want it.

Mr. Evarts—We don't want his supposition; we want the state of his knowledge.

Mr. Tracy—Now, do you know this fact, whether the statements and omissions of statements—what your first statement stated, and what it omitted to state—were subjects of criticism by the public press before your second statement was completed? Do you know that? A. Whether the statements of what it omitted—

Mr. Evarts—What was in, or what was out.

Q. Whether it was a subject of criticism by the public press before your second statement was completed? A. I was told, I think, by Gen. Butler, that it was.

Q. I didn't ask what you were told. I ask you, Sir, whether you know the fact. I don't propose to go into declarations and conversations. A. I don't recollect the fact now, Sir. What I do recollect is that Gen. Butler told me that I was criticised for something that the first statement omitted.

Q. I don't ask you what he told you. A. Well, I don't know that you do.

Q. Did you show either of these statements before their publication to Theodore Tilton? A. I think I read a portion of the first one.

Q. I did not ask you whether you read it; I asked you whether you showed it to him, and whether it was the subject of conversation? A. It was the subject of conversation before publication; yes, Sir.

Q. And did you make Mr. Tilton acquainted with the contents of that statement before its publication?

Mr. Evarts—Which one are you speaking of?

Mr. Tracy—The first one now?

A. I think I did; yes, Sir.

Q. Did he have it in his possession? A. It was either read by him or read to him, Sir.

Q. You don't know which? How long before it was published? A. Just before it was published.

THE PURPOSE OF MOULTON'S STATEMENTS.

Q. Did he also see your second statement before it was published? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Did he have that in his possession? A. I don't know that he had it in his possession. I had it in mine.

Q. Did you read it to him, or did he read it? A. He read it.

Q. Before its publication? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Previous to that Mr. Tilton had also published a statement in regard to this matter, had he not? A. He published his sworn statement, I believe.

Q. And his cross-examination to his sworn statement had also been published, had it not, previous to that? A. I don't recollect whether his cross-examination had been published or not; I think his sworn statement was published.

Q. Did you read the first statement to any one else besides Tilton before publishing it? A. I did not read the first statement to any one besides before publishing it.

Q. Besides Mr. Tilton? A. No, Sir.

Q. Did you the second? A. No; I did not read the second statement to any one else.

Q. Then Theodore Tilton was the only party saw your legal friend and adviser, who knew or was permitted to know the contents of this statement before publication? A. No; I did not answer in that way.

Q. I asked whether you had read or permitted to be read either of these statements by any one else besides Theodore Tilton. I understood you to say you had not? A. I understood you to say, "had read."

Q. Read or permitted to be read?

Mr. Beach—No; that was not the question.

Mr. Tracy—Now I put the question: Had you permitted any other person to read either of these statements before publication? A. I think Mr. Morris read the second statement, or a portion of it.

Q. Any one else? A. Not that I remember.

Judge Neilson—Bear in mind, General Tracy, that you are inquiring as to collateral matter, and that the answers of the witness will be conclusive upon you.

Mr. Tracy—So I understand.

Mr. Evarts—Not only conclusive, but quite satisfactory.

Mr. Fullerton—Then they are content with trifles.

Mr. Evarts—We are asking for the very thing that we are getting, and we are content with that.

Mr. Beach—We would have given you a stipulation to this same thing.

Mr. Tracy—We would rather have it in before the Jury as evidence. We have too many papers already.

Mr. Beach—I think you have had too many papers for your satisfaction.

Mr. Tracy—Well, we are content. [To the witness.] Now, Mr. Tilton and Mr. Morris were the only two persons who had been permitted to become acquainted with the contents of these statements before publication? A. Yes; according to my best recollection that is so.

Q. Was this suit pending at the time you showed the second statement to Mr. Morris? A. I don't remember.

Q. Do you remember whether it was or not? A. No; I do not remember the time when the suit was commenced.

Q. Did you show the paper to Mr. Morris, as the attorney and counsel of Theodore Tilton? A. No, Sir.

Q. And you made these publications, did you not, because you deemed yourself a party to this controversy? A. No, Sir.

Mr. Beach—What controversy?

Mr. Tracy—This controversy. [To the witness.] You did not? A. No, Sir.

Q. Let me refresh your memory by referring to the book, at page 234. Please to refresh your memory. A. Yes, Sir; where is it?

Q. Look at the fourth paragraph from the end of your statement? A. That is the sentence commencing, "I do not know."

Q. We do not call for the contents; that is the sentence, and I want you to look at it and refresh your memory? A. "Not to aid either party to the controversy."

Q. I only want you to refresh your memory? A. I think that is a correct statement.

Q. Does it refresh your memory on this subject? A. I do not think it does.

Q. As to the point of view in which you published this statement? A. I don't think it refreshes my memory.

Q. You think, after reading that, you did not publish these statements as a party to this controversy, or to protect yourself?

Mr. Beach—That is quite a different question.

Mr. Tracy—Ah!

Mr. Beach—It is, ah!

Mr. Tracy—When I say to this controversy, I do not mean this suit, but to the controversy between Mr. Beecher and Mr. Tilton. If you understand me as referring to this suit by the word "controversy" you misunderstand me.

The Witness—What is the question now?

Q. I repeat the question whether you published either of these statements in the point of view of your own relation to the controversy then before the public?

Mr. Morris—That is the first time you have asked that question instead of repeating it.

The Witness—I would like to have the question read.

(THE TRIBUNE stenographer read the question.) A. I would like to explain the reason why; I cannot answer the question, yes or no.

Q. I want you to answer the question, if you please? A. I cannot answer it fully without saying more than yes or no.

Judge Neilson—Then proceed.

The Witness—I published the statement because of the attack of Mr. Beecher upon me.

Q. And you considered that as raising a controversy before the public in which you were a party, did you not? A. I considered it as something of a controversy between Mr. Beecher and myself.

Q. Before the public; and as a party to that controversy you published these statements? A. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Tracy—Now, we have got it.

Mr. Fullerton—Yes, you have got it, and you had it before.

Mr. Evarts—We have got his sworn statement.

Mr. Fullerton—You have, and that is not a thing for you to boast of.

Mr. Evarts—It is what we wanted anyhow.

Mr. Fullerton—A great many men get what they want, and don't think it satisfactory.

Judge Neilson—Now, gentlemen, proceed with the examination.

SOME FACTS OMITTED IN THE STATEMENTS.

Mr. Tracy—Now, Mr. Moulton, coming back—at the time that you were giving Gen. Butler the facts, for either of these statements, did you communicate to him the fact that you have sworn to on this trial in answer to this question: "Let me ask you, was anything said as to the substance of the interview between Mr. Beecher and Mr. Tilton, when you were not present" (that is the interview of the 30th; I read from your direct examination); and you in your answer say: "Why, he told me that Mr. Tilton had told him of the confession of his wife to him." Now, Sir, did you state that fact to Gen. Butler when he prepared your statements? A. Let me see the question on the direct examination [Book handed to the witness.] What interview is that, Gen. Tracy? Mr. Tracy—The evening of the 30th—the night that you went to Mr. Beecher's.

The Witness—I don't think I told that. You refer now to my answer where he told me that Mr. Tilton had told him of the confession of his wife to him. That is what you ask.

Mr. Tracy—Yes.

The Witness—I don't recollect that I told Mr. Butler that.

Q. You don't recollect that you told Gen. Butler? A. No; I don't recollect that.

Q. Then you were asked: "Just repeat now, what he said upon that subject." "A. Mr. Beecher told me that Mr. Tilton had told him that Elizabeth had confessed, and had read to him what either was a confession or a copy of a confession of Elizabeth, of sexual intercourse between them; and he told me that Theodore had told him of the reasons of sending to him the letter through Mr. Bowen. That is all that I remember just now." Now, you told Gen. Butler that? A. I don't remember that I did.

Q. Don't you remember that you did not? A. To the best of my recollection, I did not.

Q. In either of these statements? A. No, Sir,

Q. Did you state to Gen. Butler this: "Do you know whether Mr. Tilton kept a copy of that paper of which you now speak, which he gave to you?" "A. He made a copy of it, I think; he made a copy of it." Did you tell that to Gen. Butler? A. That is with reference to the confession itself?

Q. Yes. A. I think I told him that.

Q. You think you told him that? A. I think so.

Q. I will ask you hereafter to point it out to me in which statement. A. All I told Gen. Butler is not in the statement.

Q. No matter. I ask now what you told Gen. Butler?

Mr. Fullerton—And the counsel will ask you to point out in the statement what was not there.

Mr. Tracy—I will ask him to point out whether it was there. I didn't understand the witness to say that it was not there. [To the Witness.] Q. Then, did you tell him this: "Did he tell you of his object in going there?" "A. He told me that Theodore had given him permission to go to Elizabeth for confirmation of the story; nothing further than that." A. I think I told Gen. Butler that,

Q. You think you did? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. On your direct examination, you say, speaking of the interview of December 31st: "He [that is Mr. Beecher] said, of course if this charge is made against me, if Theodore should make any charge against me, my defense would be the technical one of general denial; but with you, since you know the truth, I would throw myself upon your friendship and what I believe to be your desire to save me." A. Where is that?

Q. That is on page 109 of my book, down toward the bottom of the column. A. I think I told him the substance of that, Sir. I tried to give him as near as I could.

Q. I did not ask what you tried to do, but what you recollect that you did. Do you recollect that you told Gen. Butler that? A. My recollection is that I told him the substance of it—yes, Sir.

Q. Did you also give to Gen. Butler the letter of Mrs. Tilton calling for that paper? A. I took the paper to Gen. Butler.

Q. Did you give him that paper and call his attention to it? A. I think that paper was among them.

Q. You did? A. Yes; I think that paper was among them.

Q. Has the statement, that you read that letter to Mr. Beecher, on the night of obtaining that retraction, ever been publicly stated by you, before you stated it as a witness upon this stand. A. Publicly stated? No, I think not.

Q. You think not? A. I do not think it has.

Q. You presented that letter in one of your statements, did you not? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. In which? A. I think in the first.

Q. But you did not state that. That interview with Mr. Beecher has always been published as if he surrendered that retraction on your demand, and on yours alone, until this trial, has it not?

Mr. Fullerton—We object, unless the counsel explains what he means by "has always been published."

Mr. Tracy—I will amend my question. [To the Witness.] That interview with Mr. Beecher has always been published as if he surrendered that retraction on your demand, and yours alone, until this trial, so far as you know, has it not? A. Yes, I think it has.

Q. You always knew that representation of that interview between yourself and Mr. Beecher to be false, did you not? A. What representation?

Q. The representation of that interview; that that retraction was surrendered by him to you, and upon your demand alone? A. No, Sir.

Q. You did not know it to be false? A. No; I gave my recollection of it.

Q. Did you know it to be untrue? A. It did not correctly state it; it did not fully state it.

Q. Then you knew it did not fully state the truth, did you not?

Mr. Fullerton—What?

Mr. Tracy—The one in which that interview has been published.

Mr. Fullerton—Published where?

Mr. Tracy—Anywhere.

The Witness—I gave my recollection of it at the time; that is all I could do.

Q. Answer my question. Did you not always know the true account of that interview would have included the letter of Mrs. Tilton? A. No; I did not remember it at the time that I made that statement.

Q. You mean to say, then, that while you had possession of this letter of Mrs. Tilton, during the two years and upwards of this controversy, you never remembered the fact that you obtained that retraction from Mr. Beecher, by presenting Mrs. Tilton's letter, requesting its return that it might be destroyed?

Mr. Morris—We object to the assumption that there has been two years of this controversy.

Mr. Beach—Worse than that. The question assumes as true that this retraction was obtained by the presentation of Mrs. Tilton's letter, which is in direct contravention of the evidence.

Mr. Evarts—The question does not say that it was obtained by means of that.

Mr. Fullerton—It does so assume.

Mr. Evarts—It should not. That is not the point. The point of the inquiry is that the surrender of the retraction which Mr. Beecher had, was obtained by the use of this letter at the time that it was obtained. The contrary has always been published, as he states. Now General Tracy asks if the gentlemen knew during this time that this letter had been presented to Mr. Beecher.

Mr. Beach—The contrary has not been the universal statement. The fact simply is that Mr. Moulton now reveals in his evidence that when the application was made to Mr. Beecher for this retraction, he read the letter of request from Mrs. Tilton, and the additional fact now appears that the circumstance of reading that letter to Mr. Beecher had been omitted in the statement that has been given by Mr. Moulton.

Mr. Evarts—The existence of the letter—the presentation of the letter?

Mr. Beach—Not the existence of the letter, for it had been published.

Judge Neilson—In other words, the letter is not referred to in the statement.

Mr. Beach—Not only has it been referred to, but was published.

Mr. Tracy—Published without any connection with this interview.

Mr. Beach—No; the question is as to the omission of the witness in his statement to reveal that, on the application to Mr. Beecher, this letter was presented to him at the time. Now the question assumes that the retraction on that occasion was obtained on the presentation solely of that letter.

Mr. Evarts—No, it does not.

Mr. Beach—It was a mere omission of the letter from the statement.

Mr. Tracy—A very remarkable omission. I characterize it a willful omission.

Judge Neilson—I don't think that that expression is called for.

Mr. Tracy—I don't think that either expression is. The gentleman had no right to say it was a "mere omission."

[The witness calls for a reading of the question, which is read by THE TRIBUNE stenographer.]

Mr. Beach—Now that assumes two or three facts.

Mr. Tracy—I will change the form of the question.

Mr. Beach—To an intelligible question, that the witness can understand.

Mr. Fullerton—One that you can understand yourself.

Mr. Tracy—I will try to understand it myself.

Q. Do you mean to say that it never occurred to you that you presented and read that letter of Mrs. Tilton to Mr. Beecher on this night of obtaining this retraction, until after you had made both of your statements? A. Yes, Sir; I did mean to say that. Let me explain my answer to that question.

Q. Do you mean to say that it never occurred to you that you presented and read that letter of Mrs. Tilton to Mr. Beecher, on this night of obtaining this retraction, until after you had made both of your statements? A. No, I do not mean to say that. My answer to that question was wrong. I will explain the answer. I mean to say it did not occur to me at the time that I made the statement. That is the way that I want to answer the question. I want to strike out of my answer the part that it never occurred to me; it did occur to me.

Mr. Evarts—The answer of the witness is no; and now he makes an explanation.

Mr. Fullerton—The answer "no," simply, was wrong when he understood the question.

Mr. Beach—Will your Honor permit me to suggest: The witness answered the question first in the affirmative, and then upon the explanation answered it no, and answered it correctly no. He then asked your Honor for permission to explain, which was accorded him, and he has done so.

Mr. Evarts—That is exactly what we have just stated. [Applause.]

Judge Neilson—Gentlemen, do you think that it promotes the business of the Court to reward counsel by your applause? I think not, and you had better refrain. The counsel here are gentlemen who do not require to be encouraged or applauded.

Mr. Tracy—I wish to see how the record stands, with the view of putting another question.

[THE TRIBUNE stenographer was directed to read the question and answer again, and did so.]

Q. How long, prior to your making these two statements, did you recollect the fact of your having presented this letter to Mr. Beecher and read it to him on the night of obtaining this retraction? A. I cannot say, Sir; it had not been in my mind on this subject for a long time; there had not been anything in my mind for a long time.

Q. You cannot say how long? A. For a good while; I do not think I charged my mind with the interview particularly after it occurred.

Q. Until when? A. Until I commenced to make the statement—until I was with Gen. Butler; and at that time I undertook to tell Gen. Butler—

Q. No matter about that—the time is what we want, and that we have got. Now, your attention was first called to this interview between yourself and Mr. Beecher by the publication of the statement in what is known as the Woodhull statement? A. Called to what?

Q. To this interview between yourself and Mr. Beecher—by any public statement, first in the Woodhull statement? A. By any public statement? I think that was it.

Q. Did you at the time of that statement remember that you presented to Mr. Beecher this letter on the night that you obtained that retraction, and read it? A. I do not recollect that I remembered it then. I do not recollect now that I remembered it then.

Q. Did you recollect it at any time intermediate to the publication of the Woodhull statement and the making of this last publication? A. I don't know that I did; I don't know that I tried to recollect the circumstance.

Q. Explain your answer that you have already made, by telling us what you mean when you say that it had occurred to you, and your answer saying that it never had occurred to you was erroneous?

Mr. Beach—That is not so. He always remembered it. There is quite a difference between having it in the memory and having it occur to a party at different times, or at a series of times.

Mr. Everts—That is the question—had it never occurred to him?

Mr. Tracy—Now, I ask you, beginning with the first publication; let me see if I understand you correctly; I understand you to say, now, that when you read the Woodhull publication, with its account of that interview, the fact that you did present to Mr. Beecher that letter on that night did not occur to you?

Mr. Beach—That question improperly assumes the Woodhull statement refers to that interview, and contains an account of it.

Mr. Tracy—The witness has already sworn to that in the pistol scene.

Mr. Beach—He has not.

Mr. Tracy—I take it that when he referred to the pistol scene he has already sworn to it.

Judge Neilson—What the counsel suggests is that it did not appear that the fact was in the Woodhull statement.

Mr. Tracy—The fact was not in the Woodhull statement; that is just the point.

Mr. Beach—For the purpose of this discussion, I deny that.

Mr. Everts—Are you arguing it now?

Mr. Beach—I am arguing against your question.

Judge Neilson—What is your present question?

Mr. Tracy—The question is: Did you read that part of the Woodhull statement which referred to the interview between yourself and Mr. Beecher on the night this retraction was obtained? Did you read it?

Mr. Beach—I object to that as assuming that something appeared in the Woodhull statement.

Judge Neilson—That is a good objection.

Mr. Tracy—Does your Honor decide that the paper being in evidence collaterally, the witness cannot be asked whether he read it?

Judge Neilson—The Woodhull paper is not in evidence collaterally, or in any other way, and I decide that in putting the question you cannot assume a fact that has not been proved.

Mr. Tracy—I asked him whether he read it.

Mr. Fullerton—No, you did not ask him that.

[Mr. Fullerton asked THE TRIBUNE stenographer to read the question, and it was done.]

Mr. Tracy—I understand the counsel to say that he talked about the Woodhull statement.

Mr. Tracy then read from the witness's testimony of yesterday, published in THE TRIBUNE, as follows:

Q. Did you read her published statement? A. I don't know that I read all of it.

Q. Do you know that you did not? A. I think I did not read all of it; I think I never have read all of it.

Q. What part was it you omitted? A. Well, I don't really remember what part I did omit; I knew the general drift of it.

Q. Did you state to her that you took a pistol, and went to Mr. Beecher and demanded the letter of Mrs. Tilton under penalty of instant death? A. No, Sir; I did not.

Q. Did you state anything to that effect? A. No, Sir.

Q. Did you, in that or in any other conversation, describe to her the piteous and abject beseeching of Mr. Beecher not to be exposed to the public? A. No, Sir.

Q. Nothing of that kind occurred? A. No, Sir. You asked me a moment ago, Judge Porter, if you allow me, whether I had read any part of that statement, or whether I had read the whole of it. I can tell you I did read the part of the pistol scene, and I can tell you something that would be of interest to you in regard to that. Shall I say so?

Q. If you please. A. Mr. Beecher asked me about that part of it that referred to the pistol scene, and asked me if I remembered anything about the pistol part. He said he didn't. It didn't make enough impression on him.

Q. Is that all? A. Yes; that is all—that is about all of it."

Mr. Tracy—Now, the pistol scene is this interview.

Mr. Beach—The counsel has succeeded in throwing utter darkness upon this matter.

Mr. Tracy—Now I ask you whether the Woodhull publication recalled the fact to you that you presented this letter to Mr. Beecher, on the night that you obtained the retraction?

Mr. Beach—That question is proper. I have no objection to that.

The Witness—I don't remember whether it did or not.

Q. Then if that did not bring it to your mind, tell us when and where it was that you did remember the fact that you presented that letter to Mr. Beecher on that night? A. Yes, I will.

Q. When did you remember it? A. Well Sir, a few days ago—say a few days ago—perhaps two or three weeks ago—two or three weeks ago Theodore Tilton told me—

Q. I don't ask what he told you; I asked when you remembered it? A. I think two or three weeks ago.

Q. That answers the question. That is the first that you recollect the fact? A. I did not say so.

Q. Well, is it? A. Since when?

Q. Since it occurred? A. No, I don't think it was.

Q. How long do you remember that fact? A. I don't know how long I remember it.

Q. That is enough on that subject. Now, after the night of the 31st of December, when did you next see Mr. Tilton? A. After the night of the 31st of December, when did I next see Mr. Tilton?

Q. Yes, Sir. A. I saw him January 1st, I think.

Q. What time of day? A. I cannot remember the time of day.

Q. Where? A. I think at my house in Clinton-st.

Q. Did he come by appointment? A. I don't remember that he did.

Q. What day of the week was January 1st that year? A. I think it was Sunday.

Q. Did you know on that day that he had been discharged by Mr. Bowen from The Union and as contributor to The Independent—on the 1st day of January? A. I think I learned it for the first time on the night of the 31st of December.

Q. What time of night? A. Very late, when I got home.

Q. After you returned from Mr. Beecher? A. Yes, Sir. I say "very late;" not very late—somewhere between nine and twelve o'clock.

Q. But it was after you returned from Mr. Beecher, and after you had obtained this retraction? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. That was the first you knew of it? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. That is, the discharge? A. Yes; That was the first I knew of it?

Q. What time of day did you visit Mr. Beecher on the 1st of January? A. I think it was about—it was in the afternoon, some time toward evening.

Q. What time? A. I don't remember the time exactly. It was between four and seven o'clock, I think.

Q. Can you approximate any nearer than that? A. I don't think I can now; somewhere between four and seven.

Q. Do you recollect whether it was before or after dark when you went there? A. It was before dark, I think.

Q. Was it after dark when you left? A. I think the gas was lighted when I left.

Q. And where was that interview? A. In his study, Sir; I think it was in his study.

Q. Was the gas lighted when you went in? A. I don't think it was.

Q. Did you find him in the study, or did he go there with you? A. I think we went into the study together.

Q. How long had you been there, do you think, before the gas was lighted? A. Oh! I suppose an hour or more.

Q. How long did you remain at that interview with him? A. I guess I may have remained an hour and a half or two hours.

Q. You remember distinctly his lighting the gas that night, do you?

Mr. Beach—He has not said so. The counsel assumes that the gas was lighted.

Mr. Tracy—I understand him to say that the gas was lighted.

Judge Neilson—He said the gas was not lit when he went there and it was lit when he left.

Mr. Morris—He said that he thought that the gas was lit when he left.

Judge Neilson—Now he is asked if he remembers distinctly Mr. Beecher lighting the gas.

Mr. Beach—The question assumes that the gas was lighted in the study.

Mr. Tracy—The witness says the gas was not lit when he went in, and that it was lit when he came away. He says that the interview was in the study; and now I ask him if he saw Mr. Beecher light the gas?

Mr. Morris—The witness did not say that the gas was lighted when he left; he said that he thought it was: that was the testimony.

Mr. Tracy—Did you see Mr. Beecher light the gas? A. I don't remember that Mr. Beecher lit the gas.

Q. Did you light it? A. I don't know whether I did or not.

Q. Did any third party come in to light the gas? A. I don't remember.

Q. Was it lit when you came away? A. In the study?

Q. Yes? A. I don't remember that it was in the study.

Q. Where was it lit, if not in the study? A. I don't know that it was lit anywhere; I think the gas was lit when I went away.

Q. Do you mean to say that the gas was lit in the street when you went away? A. I think it was.

Mr. Tracy—It is now four o'clock, if your Honor please, the hour of adjournment.

Judge Neilson—I suppose you think it is time the gas were lit.

Mr. Tracy—No, Sir; I think it is time to extinguish it. [Laughter.]

The Clerk—The Court stands adjourned until eleven o'clock, on Friday.

NINTH DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

THE FIRST WITNESS FURTHER EXAMINED.
THE FOURTH DAY OF THE CROSS-EXAMINATION OF FRANCIS D. MOULTON—CONTINUED ABSENCE OF EX-JUDGE PORTER—THE LETTER OF CONTRITION ANALYZED—ITS AUTHENTICITY QUESTIONED.

Thursday, Jan. 21, Gen. Tracy took up the cross-questioning of Mr. Moulton at the point where it terminated on Wednesday, and after a few unimportant queries, the questioner came to the consideration of the celebrated letter of "contrition," alleged to have been written at Mr. Beecher's dictation. During the examination upon this theme there was profound silence in the courtroom, and every eye was turned on the witness. He seemed entirely at ease, and display no hesitancy in replying to Gen. Tracy's significant inquiries. The first admission made by him was that he could not remember any letter in which Mr. Beecher addressed him as "My dear Frank," except the one which was asserted to have been written at the defendant's dictation. The witness was examined carefully and at length concerning the manner in which the letter was written. The sensation of the day followed. Mr. Shearman read the letter, as he said, for the purpose of having its construction well understood. Immediately after the reading Mr. Shearman said a "t" had been added to the word "can," and the words "for myself" placed after the word "plead," so as to make the sentence read: "I will not plead for myself."

The remarks of counsel aroused excited interest among the spectators, for it was the first attack upon the authenticity of the celebrated letter on which so much depends in the great trial. The jury looked eagerly from witness to counsel and from counsel to witness. To add to the impression he had produced, Mr. Shearman then stated that two different kinds of ink were used on the letter. Another ripple of excitement ran through the court-room. Some of the jurymen looked sharply first at the plaintiff and then at Mr. Moulton, as if expecting an explanation from one or the other. Mr. Moulton smiled complacently. Mr. Morris was greatly excited. Jumping to his feet, he asked for the letter. Upon receiving it, he, with Judge Fullerton, went over it hastily. Then Mr. Morris accused Mr. Shearman of having tried to create a false impression. He declared with warmth that it was plain that the pen used in writing the letter did not deliver the ink freely, and in this way he accounted for the difference in the appearance of the several parts. An attempt to make a further explanation was cut short by a prompt objection from Mr. Evarts. The assertions made by counsel for the defense plainly annoyed Mr. Tilton's lawyers. Nothing of particular importance was developed during the rest of the session except the introduction of two letters written by Bessie Turner. Her statements in these letters would seem to show that she left Mr. Tilton's house for a seminary because she knew of the alleged relations between Mrs. Tilton and Mr. Beecher.

LEGAL ASPERITIES.

There were several unusually lively controversies between counsel on Thursday, which added greatly to the interest of the proceedings. Encounters of this character relieve the monotony of the examination, and never fail to attract the close attention of even the dullest-minded spectator. In the art of repartee Mr. Fullerton, Mr. Beach, and Mr. Evarts overtop the remaining counsel. Gen. Tracy, on one or two occasions, stung by the rapier-like thrusts of ex-Judge Fullerton, has tried to meet his adversary with similar weapons, but could hardly have been altogether pleased with the result.

Mr. Beach, in the course of Moulton's examination, made a statement in regard to the testimony of the witness which he found to be incorrect. He therefore apologized. Gen. Tracy smiled somewhat sardonically, and remarked dryly that he was glad that counsel had made at least one correction. "You will always find me correcting myself when I am wrong," replied Mr. Beach. "Yes, I am glad that you do," retorted Gen. Tracy, as he glanced at Mr. Fullerton, meaningly. The latter flamed up in an instant; then, in his peculiarly sarcastic way, said to Gen. Tracy, "We hope that you will not attempt to correct all your mistakes, for it will take up all your time. We want to go on with this trial." On another occasion Gen. Tracy told the witness that he was "reasoning" and not answering the question put to him. Mr. Fullerton broke in, in an undertone, "Yes, reasoning, and that is where we have the advantage of you."

Mr. Shearman also came in for a share of Mr. Fullerton's criticisms on Thursday, but he received them good-naturedly, and with apparent unconcern. While preparing to read the alleged letter of contrition, he remarked that he should read the punctuation just as it was in the paper he held. "You cannot read punctuation, but you may observe it," said Mr. Fullerton sharply, and the trivial criticism brought a grim smile to Mr. Evarts's features. Mr. Fullerton made another thrust at Gen. Tracy in the afternoon. This was when the latter asked Mr. Moulton if he could tell him how to punctuate. Mr. Fullerton, in a very bland way, objected to the question: "If counsel is asking for his own information I don't object, otherwise I do." The spectators smiled, and there was just the faintest twinkle of mirth in Judge Neilson's eyes as he rapped for order. Mr. Fullerton remained quiet for the remainder of the day, but Judge Beach availed himself of every opportunity to take Gen. Tracy to task. The cross-examiner, in exhibiting the letter of "contrition" to Mr. Moulton, asked him if he generally spread so little matter over so large a space.

"It strikes me," remarked Judge Beach in an undertone audible only to counsel and a few reporters; "it strikes me that the learned counsel is spreading much smaller matter over as much space."

An incident occurred during the afternoon session which seemed to afford no little satisfaction to Mr.

Tilton's adherents. Mr. Evarts, on rising to address the Court, was told rather sharply by Judge Neilson that his efforts to instruct the Court were uncalled for, but the lawyer addressed did not appear at all disconcerted, and blandly disavowed the intention attributed to him.

NOTES IN THE COURT-ROOM.

The continued composure of the first witness for the prosecution under the severe cross-examination which he has been subjected to is remarkable. With the exception of two or three slight breaks, Mr. Moulton has appeared quite as self-possessed as the counsel examining him. Truthful or untruthful as a witness may be, it is no easy matter to preserve one's temper under the attacks of a cross-examiner, even if he is not a thorough master of his art. At one moment addressed as if a criminal, the next sneered at, and again confused with a series of puzzling interrogatories put in quick succession, many an honest witness has been forced into embarrassments suggestive of guilt. Not so with Mr. Moulton. He answers just when he pleases and appears at times to take pleasure in replying in such a way as to require the putting of another question. His remarkable memory excited admiration at the opening of the trial. When he repeated, word for word, from recollection, Mr. Beecher's alleged letter of resignation, he was applauded, but on Thursday his memory seemed defective.

It is seldom that Mr. Moulton's answers are such as the cross-examiner expects. One striking case in point was noticeable in Thursday's examination. "You write and compose well, do you not?" asked Gen. Tracy. (An affirmative answer was plainly expected.) "No, I think not," replied the witness with a smile, and Gen. Tracy pursued that line of investigation no further.

Francis B. Carpenter, the artist, was in court again during the sessions of Thursday, and listened with the utmost attention to the proceedings. There were only a few prominent citizens of Brooklyn present, but among the number were the Hon. H. W. Slocum, the Hon. Henry C. Murphy, Wm. Marshall, and Judge Reynolds.

THE PROCEEDINGS.

Mr. Porter's indisposition continues, and so Gen. Tracy went on with Mr. Moulton's cross-examination on Thursday. The unwholesome stories about Tilton's improprieties with Bessie Turner and others were the subject of the first question. Then a heavy cross-fire was brought to bear upon the witness with reference to the paper known as "the letter of contrition." The wit of all of Mr. Beecher's lawyers actively engaged in the case was in the field in this attack, Mr. Evarts and Mr. Shearman stepping to Gen. Tracy's side almost every alternate minute with advice or hints, and themselves taking part in the questioning.

BESSIE TURNER'S STORIES.

Francis D. Moulton recalled, and the cross-examination continued:

Judge Neilson—Will the counsel proceed?

Mr. Evarts—There is one point, if your Honor please, that was reserved for your Honor's consideration and determination, which perhaps it may be proper now to call up, if your Honor has considered it, or, if not, to ask your attention to it.

Judge Neilson—As to the admission of a paper?

Mr. Evarts—As to the admission of what is called the West charges on the evidence as it stood after the witness's correction.

Judge Neilson—I think I will let it stand, Sir, and you may take an exception to it; Judge Porter is still ill.

Mr. Evarts—Yes, Sir; Judge Porter is still ill, though his physician hopes he may be able to be out to-morrow, though that is not certain; it is necessary for us, of course, to know whether the paper is in or not.

Judge Neilson—Consider it in.

Mr. Evarts—Your Honor will note our exception.

Judge Neilson—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Tracy—Mr. Moulton, how long was the interview which you had with Mr. Beecher on January 1st? A. My impression is, Sir, that it may have lasted an hour or two.

Q. Can't you approximate more nearly than that? A. No, Sir; not more nearly than that.

Q. At what point of the interview did you begin to write the letter—the paper that was written on that day? A. Shortly after the termination of the first expressions of Mr. Beecher. Call it the beginning, if you please; not the first thing, but the beginning, after he had expressed to me his sorrow for what he had done.

Q. Was Mr. Beecher moved with deep feeling on that day? A. He was, Sir.

Q. Was he walking the floor most of the time during that interview? A. I don't think he was, Sir; my recollection is that he was not.

Q. Was he sitting or standing? A. I think he was sitting, Sir, by the table.

Q. By the table? A. Yes, Sir; I think so.

Q. What was your position? A. I was sitting.

Q. Where? A. By a table, I think; I think there was a table there.

Q. At the same table? A. I should think it was the same table; yes, Sir.

Q. On different sides of the table? A. My recollection is that Mr. Beecher was at the end; I was in the front of it; as if one should be seated as Mr. Beach is, Sir.

Q. Was it some remark that Mr. Beecher had made expressing his feeling towards Theodore Tilton that led you to suggest the writing of that paper, or a paper? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Then you suggested it, did you? A. I said to him that he better put that—

Q. Answer my question. Are you the one who, at that interview, suggested the preparation of a paper?

Judge Neilson [to the Witness]—You were proceeding to answer. Go on, Sir.

A. Yes, I suppose I might have been considered the person that suggested it.

Mr. Tracy—Were you the person? A. If your Honor will allow me to explain—

Judge Neilson—State what you said. You were proceeding a minute ago. That is the way to answer. State what you said.

A. Yes, Sir. I said, "Mr. Beecher, if you feel in this way towards Mr. Tilton, it seems to me that if you should so express yourself to him it would make an end of this trouble. It seems to me that it would be the best thing that you could do to so state to him." And then he said to me, "Take pen and paper, and I will."

Q. How long had that interview continued between you before that began? A. Not very long, Sir.

Q. Before you took pen and paper? A. Not very long—not half an hour—I should not think it was half an hour.

Q. Upon how many different subjects had you conversed before you began to write? A. Only on one or two. As near as my recollection serves me, I told him about taking back—I said to him, "Mr. Beecher, I took back that recantation to Theodore last night," and I said to Mr. Beecher, "He seems to me to be in the spirit of saving his family, no matter what comes to himself," and then Mr. Beecher proceeded to say that he felt great sorrow.

Q. I did not ask you what either party said; I asked you for the subjects that you conversed on? A. Well, that was it.

Q. That was one subject? A. Yes, Sir, the recantation, and then his expression of sorrow followed it.

Q. Was anything said about Mr. Tilton's condition financially and his prospects now that he had been discharged from the employment of Mr. Bowen? A. No, Sir.

Q. Nothing at all? A. No, Sir.

Q. At no part of that interview? A. No, Sir.

Q. Either before or after the writing of the letter—of the paper? A. No, Sir.

Q. Did you tell Mr. Beecher that Mr. Tilton had received letters dismissing him from Bowen's service? A. I don't remember that I did, Sir, at that stage of the conversation.

Q. At any stage of the conversation? A. Very likely I did, Sir; I don't remember that I did.

Q. What? A. Very likely I did, Sir; I don't remember that I did.

Q. Well, did you? A. I don't recollect now that I did, Sir.

Q. Do you recollect that you did not? A. I haven't any recollection upon that subject.

Q. You had learned it for the first the night before? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. This was the first interview you had had with Mr. Beecher after learning that fact? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. And you don't recollect of having mentioned it? A. I don't recollect that now, Sir; no.

Q. Did you have any further talk about the stories that Bowen had circulated in regard to Tilton, at that interview before the writing of the paper? A. No, Sir; I think not.

Q. You think not? A. No, Sir; not before the writing of the paper.

Q. Did you, at any time during that interview? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. After the writing of the paper? A. My recollection is that it was after the writing of the paper; yes, Sir.

Q. How long after? A. Well, I should say shortly after.

Q. What did Mr. Beecher say at that interview about these stories? A. He said that he had mentioned in his interview with Mr. Bowen when Bowen brought him the letter demanding his retirement—he said that he had told Bowen—I think that Mr. Bowen had mentioned the name of a woman, and Mr. Beecher said that he had heard the same story, and had rather joined Mr. Bowen in that story, and he said he would take it back.

Q. He mentioned the name of a woman? A. He said that he had heard the name of a woman. He said that he had heard the same story.

Q. Was her name mentioned there between you and Mr. Beecher? A. Yes, Sir; her name was mentioned.

Q. What was said about the woman? A. He said that Mr. Bowen had told him of Mr. Tilton's intimacy with this woman, or of the stories concerning his intimacy with this woman; that he, Mr. Beecher, had told Mr. Bowen that he had heard the same stories concerning her; and I said to Mr. Beecher—is that right, Sir?

Q. Go on. A. And I said to Mr. Beecher that I thought it was very unjust towards the woman and very unjust towards Theodore; that I knew both parties and I did not think that there was anything wrong between them at all, and from my acquaintance with Theodore Tilton I had the highest confidence in him, and from my knowledge of the woman, and from my acquaintance with her, I had the highest confidence in her, and I didn't think any such story was true. That is the substance.

Q. You pronounced it untrue, didn't you? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Didn't you say you knew all about their relations and you knew they were untrue? A. No, Sir; I didn't say that.

Q. Didn't you say you knew enough about their relations to know that they were untrue? A. No, Sir; I said from what I knew of their relations—from what I knew I should judge it to be untrue and unjust.

Q. Did you say you should judge it to be? A. Sir.

Q. Did you say that you should judge it to be untrue? A. The substance of what I said, Sir, was the word "judge."

Q. Didn't you say that, from what you knew of their relations, you knew that that story was untrue? A. From what I knew of the parties, Sir; not of their relations.

A. Well, of the parties? A. Yes, Sir; I believed the stories were untrue.

Q. What did Mr. Beecher say in answer to that? A. He said he was very glad to hear it.

Q. Did Mr. Bowen state the particulars of what he knew of their relations?

Mr. Beach—Bowen? Bowen was not there.

Q. When Mr. Beecher told you that he was glad to hear that it was untrue, did he express any sorrow for having repeated that story to Mr. Bowen? A. Yes, Sir; he said he was sorry.

Q. That he had repeated it? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. How did he say, and what on that subject? A. He said he was very sorry if he had done an injustice to the woman and to Theodore.

Q. And to Theodore? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Didn't he express himself warmly on that subject of the injustice that he had done them? A. He expressed himself sincerely, Sir, I should say, and he said he would write a note to Mr. Bowen taking it back.

Q. Did he draft a note there? A. No, Sir.

Q. Well, did he write it there? A. No, Sir.

Mr. Evarts—I think there is a question before this that is not answered.

Mr. Beach—No, it was not answered, because I said Mr. Bowen was not there.

Mr. Evarts—[To THE TRIBUNE stenographer]. Read the question.

THE TRIBUNE stenographer read the question referred to, as follows: "Did Mr. Bowen state the particulars of what he knew of their relations?"

Mr. Tracy—We will pass that. [To the Witness.]

Q. Did Mr. Beecher at that interview state anything about Bessie Turner? A. I don't think he did at that interview, Sir.

Q. Had he, at any of the interviews previous to that, said anything about Bessie Turner? A. I don't remember that he had, Sir, said anything about Bessie Turner.

Q. Her name had not transpired? A. Not up to that time.

Q. Up to that time? A. No, Sir.

Q. When do you remember its transpiring between Mr. Beecher and yourself first? A. Some time after the first of January.

Q. Well, that is quite indefinite. Can't you be more definite than that? A. I should think, Sir, it was between January 1st and January 10th.

Q. Didn't Mr. Beecher tell you at that interview that the girl Bessie Turner had come to him along in the last days of December, and reported to him one or two scenes as having transpired between her and Theodore Tilton? A. No, Sir.

Q. You knew the girl Bessie Turner at that time, did you not? A. I had seen her at Mr. Tilton's house.

Q. She was a girl living in Mr. Tilton's family—a young girl was she not? A. I saw her at Mr. Tilton's house; I believe she was living there.

Q. Don't you know she was living there? A. I believe she was; I think she was living there, Sir.

Mr. Tracy—[To the Court.] Your Honor made a suggestion that I did not hear.

Judge Neilson—He had answered that she was living there.

Mr. Tracy—I understood the witness to say that he saw her at the house.

Q. How long a time had she been living there? A. I don't really know.

Q. When Mr. Beecher spoke to you about Bessie Turner, whether it was on this day or some subsequent day, did he tell you the particulars of what Bessie Turner had told him? A. Of what she had told him personally?

Q. Yes, Sir; concerning Theodore Tilton? A. I don't know whether he told me what she had told him personally. He certainly mentioned Bessie Turner's name, and said that the information came from her; whether from her directly or not, Sir, I don't remember. I think it did.

Q. What was the information that he stated as coming from Bessie Turner concerning her relations with Theodore Tilton? A. That the story was that Theodore Tilton had carried her from her bed to his own; some such story as that.

Q. In the night? A. I don't remember whether it was in the night, Sir. I suppose it was in the night.

Q. Well, didn't you understand it to have been in the night? A. I suppose I did; yes, Sir.

Q. And didn't you understand that he had attempted to detain her in bed for some little time? A. I didn't understand anything, except that he had taken her from her bed, Sir; that is all.

Q. And carried her to his own? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. In the night time? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Did you understand whether he had got in bed with her? A. I didn't understand that, Sir.

Q. Did you understand that there was only one instance of that? A. That is all, Sir.

Q. Did you understand that she had represented him as on another occasion coming to her bed in the night? A. No.

Q. You never heard of but one transaction? A. That is all, Sir.

Q. In regard to Bessie Turner? A. That is all.

Q. When that was told to you what did you say about it? A. Well, I said I could not believe that story, it seemed to me entirely improbable.

Q. What did Mr. Beecher say? A. He said that was the story; that is all.

Q. Did he speak of that as one of the stories that he had mentioned to Bowen? A. No, Sir.

Q. He did not? A. No, Sir.

Q. What other stories did he say that he had mentioned to Bowen? A. That is the only one that I call to mind—the Bullard story.

Q. That is the only one of which he gave you details? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. But did he say that he had mentioned to Mr. Bowen other stories concerning Theodore Tilton? A. No, Sir; I think that is the only one—the Bullard story.

Q. Do you mean to say that Mr. Beecher did not mention any other names? A. That is all that I recollect, Sir; that he told me that he had mentioned Mrs. Bullard's name to Mr. Bowen.

Q. Did he say or not that he had told Bowen of other stories concerning Tilton, without mentioning names? A. I don't remember that he did.

Q. You don't remember that he did? A. No, Sir.

Q. Now, when he told you about Bessie Turner, didn't you express yourself concerning that story to me more strongly than you do now? A. I don't know whether—I don't remember whether I did or not, Sir; the substance of what I have said to you I stated to him.

Q. Did he tell you at the time that Bessie Turner had told other people of this story besides yourself? A. I think that he may have told me that, Sir.

Q. You learned the fact either from Mr. Beecher or some one else that she had told this story to other people, did you not?

Mr. Beach—Wait one moment. What he learned from other people I object to.

Mr. Evarts—That was not the question, if your Honor please; that he heard it either from Mr. Beecher or other people.

Judge Neilson—If he heard it from other people, it is immaterial.

Mr. Evarts—That is not our question, if your Honor will allow me. We are trying to find out whether he heard it from Mr. Beecher.

Judge Neilson—Yes.

Mr. Evarts—That the story had been told to other people. The witness is not certain about that, as I understand. Now we ask him whether, either from Mr. Beecher or from some one else, he had heard that she had told the story to others—as a part of the further examination. "Now don't you remember that you heard it from Mr. Beecher?"

Judge Neilson—Whatever Mr. Beecher said is to be received, not beyond that.

Mr. Evarts—That is our point, of course, to get at what he said, and to probe him to get at it.

Mr. Tracy—Your Honor rules out the question as it stands?

Judge Neilson—So far as it relates to other people.

Mr. Tracy—Your Honor will note our exception.

Judge Neilson—The current rumors of the town I do not wish to hear.

Q. At the time you were having this interview with Mr. Beecher about Bessie Turner, did you know at that time that Bessie Turner—had you heard or did you know at that time that Bessie Turner had told the story to other people besides Mr. Beecher? A. No; I did not know at that time.

Q. Now, at this interview on the first of January was the Winstead matter again talked about between yourself and Mr. Beecher? A. No, Sir; I think not, Sir; no.

Q. Was anything further said about the stories that Bowen had told concerning Beecher at that time—or Tilton, I mean? A. I think not.

Q. That Bowen had told concerning Tilton? A. No; I think not.

Q. Was not the subject of Mr. Tilton's relations with another lady a matter of conversation between you and Mr. Beecher? A. No, Sir.

Q. Did you never hear from Mr. Beecher at any time that Mr. Bowen had reported to him the name of another woman with whom Mr. Tilton was connected? A. No, no.

Q. Had you heard at the time you were talking with Mr. Beecher, that Mr. Bowen had charged Mr. Tilton with having made an improper proposition to another lady, and that— A. No, Sir.

Mr. Beach—[To the witness.] Wait one moment; please do not answer; his question was not finished; and I do not get an opportunity to object.

The Witness—Pardon me, Sir.

Q. Did you never hear that?

Mr. Beach—That is objected to.

Judge Neilson—Ruled out.

Q. Did you never hear it from Mr. Tilton or from Mr. Beecher?

Mr. Beach—Hear what?

Mr. Tracy—That Bowen had charged Mr. Tilton, prior to discharging him, with improper relations, or with an improper attempt in respect to another woman? A. Did I ever hear it?

Q. From either Tilton or from Mr. Beecher?

Judge Neilson—That Bowen had so charged?

Mr. Tracy—That Bowen so charged? A. I don't recollect that I did; I don't recollect that.

Q. Are you sure that you did not? A. I haven't any recollection about it now, Sir.

Q. At that interview of Jan. 1st, did Mr. Beecher mention to you that his wife had taken an active interest in behalf of Mrs. Tilton as against her husband? A. Not at that interview; my recollection is, that it was not at that interview, Sir; it was the interview of Dec. 31st; I spoke to him about it myself.

Q. You think that that subject was not referred to again in this conversation at Jan. 1st? A. My recollection is that it was not.

Q. Well, what subjects did you and Mr. Beecher converse about on that day; just name the topics of conversation so far as you can remember? A. The effect of the recantation upon Theodore Tilton; Mr. Beecher's expression of contrition for the crime that he had committed against Elizabeth Tilton and Theodore Tilton, and his expression of regret that he had mentioned Mrs. Bullard's name to Mr. Bowen; those are the three distinct subjects that I now recollect.

Q. And the only three that you recollect? A. Those are the three, Sir.

Q. I understand you now to say that it was on Dec. 31st that Mr. Beecher told you that Mrs. Beecher and himself had been taking an active part with Mrs. Tilton against her husband? A. My recollection is that way; yes, Sir.

MISSION OF THE LETTER OF CONTRITION.

Q. Now, when you began to write this letter, you say Mr. Beecher dictated it? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Did he dictate all of it? A. Yes, Sir; he dictated all of it.

Q. Every word that you wrote on that paper was dictated by Mr. Beecher? A. My recollection is, Sir, that I put over the top of it, "In Trust with F. D. Moulton," myself, either before or after the letter was finished.

Q. Can you tell which? A. I think it was put over before, Sir.

Q. And that part of it was not dictated by Mr. Beecher? A. That part of it was not dictated by Mr. Beecher; my recollection.

Q. Was everything else on the paper dictated by Mr. Beecher? A. Every word, Sir, with the exception of that that he wrote himself.

Q. Did he dictate it, sentence by sentence? A. He did.

Q. And you wrote it down, sentence by sentence, as he dictated it? A. I did.

Q. Will you produce that? [Letter produced.] Did he dictate the words, "My Dear Friend Moulton?" A. He did.

Q. Have you, from Mr. Beecher, during the four years of correspondence, any other communication from him that commences, "My Dear Friend Moulton?" A. I am sure I don't know, Sir, whether I have or not.

Q. Don't you know whether you have or not? A. I do not.

Q. Can you recall a single one which he ever commenced, addressed to you in that way? A. I cannot, Sir; I cannot recollect the way in which any of them commences.

Q. He has written you a great many letters, has he not? A. He has.

Q. You put the words, "In Trust with F. D. Moulton," at the head of the paper, and Mr. Beecher at the bottom of it? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Did you have any conversation about what that meant—what it was—

Mr. Fullerton—One moment; that is a mistake. It is a misstatement of what is there; it is an incorrect quotation from the paper.

Mr. Tracy—Well, it is, in one sense, that it is not literal—literally repeating both phrases; but, with that exception, it is as near literal as one-expression can make the two; and it is a declaration of trust at the bottom and foot of the letter.

Q. Now, did you have a conversation with Mr. Beecher as to the nature of this trust? A. I think I did; yes, Sir.

Q. What was to be the nature of the trust in which you took that letter—that paper? A. I was to do with that paper, as a friend of Mr. Beecher, what I thought it was judicious to do with it—was to show it to Theodore Tilton—was to show it to Theodore Tilton.

Q. Judicious with reference to what object? A. With reference to the reconciliation of the differences between Mr. Tilton and Mr. Beecher.

Q. You were to show it to Mr. Tilton? A. Show it to him, or hand it to him, and let him read it through.

Q. Which? A. Anything that I chose to do with it; it was an absolute trust with me, to do with it as I saw fit.

Q. To use for that object? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What else were you to do with it? A. What else was I to do with it?

Q. Yes. A. Anything that I chose, in accordance with that purpose.

Q. Were you to part with it? A. Was I to part with it? No, Sir; I was to keep it; not to part with it, Sir, to anybody but Theodore Tilton.

Q. Were you to part with it to Theodore Tilton? A. To do anything with it with regard to Theodore Tilton that I chose for the purpose of reconciliation.

Q. Were you to give it to Theodore Tilton? A. Give it to him, if I saw fit.

Q. What was said about it? A. That is the purport of what was said about it.

Q. Was it said that you could deliver this paper to Theodore

Tilton, and leave it with him if you saw fit? A. There was no restriction whatever put upon my action with regard to it.

Judge Neilson—Then that was not said, as I understand? A. No, Sir.

Q. That was not said? A. No, Sir.

Q. Was anything said except what would be implied by the phrase, "in trust"? A. I told Mr. Beecher that I thought it better—that these words better be put over the top of it: "In Trust with F. D. Moulton," in order that that letter might be under my control; that was the point, Sir.

Q. And it was put there for that purpose? A. Yes; by me.

Q. Now, was there anything further said than what you have now stated in regard to the nature and object of this trust? A. I don't recollect, Sir, at present, that there was.

Q. When I say, "by what you have now stated," I mean what you have last repeated. A. Yes, Sir.

Q. You understand the question? A. Well, Sir; will you repeat it, so that I may understand it fully; perhaps I do not.

Q. Was there anything else said as to the nature and object of this trust, except that it was put there to show that this letter was to remain in your custody and under your control? A. Under my control; I don't think there was anything else.

Q. Nothing else said about that? A. I do not remember that there was.

Q. Now, what did you do with this paper when you got it? A. I took it to Theodore Tilton after I left the house and read it to him.

Q. Same night? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Did you give it to him? A. I don't know whether I handed it to him or not to read, or whether I read it to him; my impression was—is, that I read it to him.

Q. Will you say that you did not deliver this paper to Theodore Tilton and leave it with him for a time? A. I did not leave it with him for any time that night, Sir; I don't think I did.

Q. That night? A. He did not take it away from the house, if that is what you mean.

HOW MOULTON DISCHARGED THE TRUST.

Q. No, that is not my question. Didn't you deliver this paper to Theodore Tilton and leave it with him for a time? A. Well, Sir, I don't recollect whether I did or not.

Q. Do you recollect that you did not? A. I haven't any recollection, Sir, as to whether I read it to him; as to whether I read it to him, or whether he took it from my hands to read, my recollection is not specific as to either point.

Q. If he took it from your hands to read, have you any recollection as to how long he kept it? A. I have not.

Q. Can you say that Theodore Tilton did not have this paper in his possession for at least one hour on the night you obtained it? A. I could not say that he had not, Sir.

Q. No, Sir. Can you say that he did not have it for two hours in his possession? A. Well, my recollection, Sir, would be that he had not. If I was to state my recollection—that he hadn't it for two hours.

Q. He didn't have it for so long as two hours? A. No, Sir.

Q. What did you do on receiving it back from Mr. Tilton?

Mr. Morris—He has not said he received it back, yet.

Q. Did you come in possession of the paper?

Mr. Morris—He has not said he parted with it, yet.

Mr. Tracy—We know what he said. When do you next recollect being in possession of this paper?

Mr. Morris—Now, I submit that he has not said that he recollects being out of possession of it yet. The question assumes a fact that has not yet been proven.

Mr. Tracy—I assume the fact that he has been in possession of it. Now, I ask when he next remembers definitely of being in possession of this paper?

Mr. Morris—The point is that he has not stated yet that he was ever out of the possession of it.

Mr. Evans—[Earnestly.] The point is this: that he don't recollect. Now, we want him to recollect when he knows he had it. [Laughter.]

Mr. Morris—Well, that is another question. The question is not a proper question, and I object to it.

Judge Neilson—If you handed this to Mr. Tilton at all, did he hand it back to you? A. I think he did, Sir.

Mr. Tracy—Don't you know whether he handed it back to you that same evening or not, if he had it? A. If he had it?

Q. Yes. A. My recollection is that the paper was not out of my possession all that night; that I had it.

Q. Then you remember definitely of having had it the next morning, do you? A. I don't remember definitely having had it the next morning.

Q. What did you do with it that night or the next day? A. I put it in my bureau drawer.

Q. When did you put it in your bureau drawer? A. That night.

Q. Sure? A. I think so, stating to the best of my recollection.

Q. What time of night? A. After I got through with Theodore Tilton.

Q. What time of night was it? A. I don't remember.

Q. You don't remember? A. No.

Q. When did you next see this paper? A. I don't remember when I next saw it, Sir.

Q. Well, when do you next remember of having seen it? A. Distinctly, Sir, after the Victoria Woodhull publication, I remember, in your presence.

Q. Do you mean to say that you have no recollection of having seen this paper from the time you put it in your bureau drawer in December, 1870, until after the Woodhull publication? A. I don't remember anything about it, Sir, definitely, up to that time.

Q. Now, which publication was that of the Woodhull's that you refer to? A. The publication of the Victoria Woodhull story.

Q. 1872? A. Yes, Sir; 1872, I think.

Q. Well, when you wanted this paper after that publication, did you find it in your bureau drawer? A. No, Sir; found it in a tin box.

Q. In a tin box? A. I must have taken it from the bureau drawer and put it in the tin box, I suppose.

Q. Where was the tin box? A. The tin box was in my house.

Q. Was that paper never in your safe? A. I don't think that the confession—that that paper was ever in my safe, Sir; I don't remember that it was.

Q. In New-York? A. I don't think it was.

Q. And where was the tin box kept in your house? A. Kept in the closet in my front chamber, I think.

Q. Locked? A. Yes, Sir; locked.

Q. With what sort of a lock? A. Little padlock.

Q. One of those little cheap padlocks? A. Locked with a small lock, Sir, about so—

Q. Do you remember of ever having had that tin box out in presence of Theodore Tilton from the time of receiving this letter of December, 1870, until after the Woodhull publication? A. I don't recollect distinctly the occasion; I may have had it out, Sir.

Q. Don't you know you had it out frequently in his presence? A. No, I don't remember that I had it out frequently in his presence, Sir.

Q. Well, then, at the next time that you remember of having seen this paper, do you also remember that Theodore Tilton had a copy of it? A. No, I don't remember that he had a copy of it.

Q. When did you first know that Theodore Tilton had a copy of it? A. It was either—I think that the Bacon letter, Sir, or else the "True Story" letter, if the thing was in that; it was in one or the other, but I don't think it—

Q. Well, those two transactions or stories are some ways apart, are they not? When was the "True Story" prepared? A. I don't know; I believe it was prepared in the latter part of December, 1872.

Q. And when the Bacon letter? A. The Bacon letter was in eighteen hundred and—this year, wasn't it—last year, 1874.

Q. And now do you mean to say that you can't tell on which occasion it was that you found Mr. Tilton had—do you mean to say that you can't tell at which date it was you first knew that Theodore Tilton had a copy of this paper? A. I can't, no; not to swear to it now; I don't remember, Sir, whether it was in the "True Story" or not; that is the reason that I can't swear here.

Q. You never remember to have seen the paper until after the Woodhull publication, and you never remember to have known that Tilton had a copy of it until one day that you speak of? A. No; that is the best of my recollection now?

Q. How did you find out that he had a copy of it then? A. The Bacon letter?

Q. This—when you did know it—when you learned that he had a copy, how did you learn it? A. Learned it from him.

Q. From him? A. From the publication of the Bacon letter, when he read it to me.

Q. Do you mean then to say that that was the first time that you knew that he had a copy? A. That is the first time, to my recollection.

Q. Now, Sir; didn't he make a copy of this letter in your presence the very night you read it to him, and the first night you received it from Mr. Beecher? A. No, Sir; I don't recollect that he did.

Q. Do you recollect whether he did or not? A. My recollection is that he did not, Sir.

Q. And will you swear that you did not know that he made a copy of that letter that night before you put it in your bureau drawer? A. Yes, Sir; I should swear to that, Sir.

Q. Didn't Mr. Tilton write that letter down, this letter down, in shorthand or otherwise, at the time you read it? A. I don't recollect that he did; my recollection is that he did not.

Q. Your recollection is that he did not? A. My recollection is that he did not, Sir.

Q. Now, we will come back to the composition of the letter. Well, I will ask this question before I come back to the composition of the letter: If he didn't do it on that night, did you ever give him any other opportunity to make a copy? A. I may have shown him the letter, Sir; if he asked me for it, very likely I did.

Q. Will you say whether you did not? A. I cannot say whether I did or not. I say that if he had asked me for it, I very likely should.

Q. That is not an answer, Sir. I am not asking what you very likely should, but I am trying to ask what you remember that you did? A. I don't remember that I did, Sir.

Q. Then, so far as you know, up to the publication of the Bacon letter, Tilton had no other opportunity to make a copy?

Mr. Beach—The witness has said that he was uncertain whether it was at the time of the Bacon letter or at the time of the true statement.

Mr. Evarts—We understand it not. In the later answer of the witness he fixed the Bacon letter as the date when he first knew it.

Mr. Beach—He did not.

Mr. Evarts—I will refer to the stenographer.

Mr. Beach—The witness was carried to that result by a leading question assuming that fact, and in the face of his direct explanation that he was uncertain which of those periods was the time when he obtained that information.

Mr. Evarts—We have our views of the testimony, Sir, and we do not like to be interrupted in the cross-examination. If there is any question of it, the stenographer's note can be appealed to.

Mr. Beach—Well, Sir, although the counsel may not like to be interrupted, when I object to a question it seems to be a necessity that he should be.

Mr. Evarts—You stated in the previous testimony.

Mr. Beach—My objection to the question was, Sir, that it improperly assumes that the first knowledge of the witness that Mr. Tilton had a copy of this letter was at the publication of the Bacon letter.

Judge Neilson—I understand him that he got to know the fact certainly when he saw it in the Bacon letter, but he cannot say when he got the copy.

Mr. Evarts—That we understand.

Mr. Beach—Well, your Honor is under a wrong impression. I submit in regard to the testimony of the witness upon that subject, for the witness explicitly stated that he could not say when he first received that information whether at one time or the other.

Judge Neilson—Well, then, it is qualified in that way.

Mr. Evarts—Afterwards corrected.

Judge Neilson—But he got to a certainty of it when he saw the Bacon letter.

Mr. Beach—I insist that he did not afterward correct it.

Mr. Evarts—That is for the stenographer to decide.

Mr. Beach—That is for us to decide when the question is based upon an improper assumption of fact.

[Question read by THE TRIBUNE stenographer.]

Judge Neilson—"So far as you know or recollect;" please to qualify it in that way.

The Witness—Will you read the question again, Mr. Stenographer?

[Question re-read by TRIBUNE stenographer.]

Judge Neilson—Insert "or remember" after the word "known."

Mr. Evarts [to the witness]—There is no objection. A. I don't recollect, Sir, that he had.

Mr. Tracy—Now, do you know how Mr. Tilton got the copy that he made—that he had—when you read the Bacon letter? A. I don't know specifically; no, Sir.

Q. You say you don't know specifically? A. No, Sir.

Q. Do you know? A. No, Sir.

Q. That is an answer? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Did you ever give him a copy? A. No, Sir.

Q. Did he ever take a copy with your knowledge? A. Not that I remember, Sir.

Q. Don't you remember whether he did or not? A. No.

Q. Do you mean to say now that you don't remember whether you gave him a copy of this letter?

Mr. Fullerton—That has been answered over and over again.

Judge Neilson—He said he had not given him a copy; I think he has answered that point clearly; he did not furnish a copy, and he don't remember how he got the copy.

Q. Did you give him an opportunity to make or take a copy of it?

Mr. Beach—Now, I submit to your Honor that the witness has stated upon the previous examination that he might have handed that letter to Mr. Tilton, and that, undoubtedly, if Tilton applied to him for it, he did so.

Mr. Tracy—Now, that is reasoning; we want to get facts.

Mr. Fullerton—There we have the advantage of you.

Judge Neilson—I think the witness has answered fully.

Mr. Evarts—Well, if your Honor please, we regard this testimony as important, as subsequent testimony will show, and we do not want to be retarded in our cross-examination by the objections of our learned friends if our questions are proper.

Judge Neilson—Do you think it proper to repeat a question again and again?

Mr. Evarts—No, Sir. We do think it proper, and fair to the witness also, to have his answers explicit, he understanding what the question is. Now, he says he don't know how Mr. Tilton got the copy. That is answered; we do not repeat that question. We ask him now, did you ever give, in fact, Mr. Tilton an opportunity to take or make a copy of that paper?

Judge Neilson—Hasn't he answered that?

Mr. Evarts—Let him answer it if he can.

Judge Neilson—Well, what is the answer to that question?

The Witness—To me or to the stenographer, Sir?

Judge Neilson—To you? A. I don't recollect, Sir, that I ever gave him an opportunity.

Judge Neilson—Well, so I understood before.

Q. Now, Mr. Moulton, you were educated at the New-York Academy, now called the New-York College, were you not? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Since you have been in the firm, you have carried on very much of the correspondence of your firm, have you not? A. Not very much of it.

Q. Not very much of it? A. No, Sir.

Q. Whose department is that? A. Mr. Woodruff's and Mr. Macley's.

Q. You write well, or compose well, do you not?

Mr. Fullerton—Well, I don't suppose that that is—

The Witness—I don't think I do, Sir.

Judge Neilson—He has made the same answer I would make.

The Witness—I don't think I do; thank your Honor.

Q. Well, you carry on a large correspondence, do you not? A. No, Sir.

Q. You do not? A. No, Sir; I do not.

Q. A large correspondence? A. No, Sir.

Q. You write many letters every week, do you not? A. No, Sir.

Q. Do not? A. No, Sir.

Q. Do you not carry on a correspondence with literary people? A. No, Sir.

Q. Have you never? A. Yes—slightly.

Q. You understand the rules of composition and punctuation, do you not?

Mr. Fullerton—I object to this—just one moment.

The Witness—[Answering.] Not very well.

Mr. Fullerton—It is trifling with the time of the Court.

Mr. Tracy—It may be.

Mr. Fullerton—It not only may be, but it is.

Mr. Tracy—Well, that is for the Court.

Judge Neilson—He has answered that question.

Q. Do you understand, after a period, how you should commence the next sentence—whether with a capital or a small letter? A. Yes, I do. [Laughter.]

Judge Neilson—Will the audience keep quiet, please.

Mr. Fullerton—Well, if the counsel are asking these questions for their own information, I won't object. [Renewed laughter.] It seems to me to be trifling.

Judge Neilson—Will the audience please be— [To Mr. Evarts, who was rising.] If you say a word, it will be something that will excite commotion among the audience. Will you please be quiet? Proceed, Mr. Tracy.

THE LETTER OF CONTRITION ANALYZED.

Q. Now, Mr. Moulton, I understand you to say that Mr. Beecher dictated this letter sentence by sentence? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. And you wrote it down, sentence by sentence, as he dictated? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. And he dictated it deliberately? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. And you wrote it deliberately? A. Wrote it as he dictated it.

Q. Did you write all that Mr. Beecher said? A. Every word.

Q. And you say that this letter was not written hastily and as rapidly as you could write it? A. It was written as rapidly as I could write it.

Q. Was it written hastily? A. Written rapidly; I don't know what you mean by hastily.

Q. Written rapidly; very well. Was it written by you in the effort to catch the sentences as Mr. Beecher was speaking them? A. As he uttered them for me to write down—as fast as it was necessary to write for that purpose I wrote.

Q. And you wrote after a man who was dictating, rather than after a man who was talking and whose sentences you were seeking to catch as he talked? A. Yes, Sir; a man dictating.

Q. [Handing paper to witness.] Is that your usual handwriting? A. It is a little more distinct than usual. I usually write with a steel pen? This looks as though it was written with a quill.

Q. Do you remember whether you wrote with a steel pen, a gold pen, or a quill? A. I cannot recollect. This looks as though I wrote with a quill pen.

Q. As matter of recollection, do you recollect what sort of a pen you wrote with? A. I cannot recollect whether it was a quill pen or a steel pen.

Q. Was it one or the other? A. My impression is that it was a quill pen.

Mr. Evarts—You mean steel or gold pen?

Mr. Fullerton—No; he means quill pen.

Mr. Evarts—You mean quill, or steel, or gold?

Mr. Fullerton—He says it is his impression he wrote it with a quill pen.

Mr. Tracy—I desire now to read this letter with the punctuation and the writing. I want it read as it is written.

Mr. Shearman—I will read this exactly as it is written here.

Mr. Fullerton—Of course you will.

Mr. Shearman—It never has been read as it is written.

Mr. Fullerton—I beg your pardon, Sir, it has been.

Mr. Evarts—No, Sir, not read with the punctuation. He didn't read the punctuation.

Mr. Fullerton—You don't read punctuation; you observe it.

Mr. Shearman [reading]:

BROOKLYN, January 1, '71.

In trust with F. D. Moulton.

I ask through you Theodore Tilton's forgiveness, and I humble myself before him as I do before my God, he would have been a better man, in my circumstances than I have been. I can ask nothing except that he will remember all the other hearts that would ache. I will not plead. I even wish that I were dead, but others must live and suffer. I will die before any one but myself shall be inculpated. All my thoughts are running toward my friends toward the poor child lying there and praying with her folded hands; She is guiltless. Sinned against bearing the transgressions of another Her forgiveness I have, I humbly pray to God that he may put it into the heart of her husband to forgive me.

I have trusted this to Moulton in confidence.

H. W. BEECHER.

The Witness—That is correct.

Mr. Shearman—I have read this as it was written. The word

"I can't" is corrected by striking out the "t." After the words "I will not plead," there are subsequently inserted the words "for myself," but the color of the ink is different where the "t" is crossed and where the words "for myself" are inserted.

Mr. Beach—Now the question rises whether the gentleman has read it according to the punctuation.

Mr. Evarts—That will be for the jury.

Mr. Fullerton—The gentleman promised to read it as it was, and when he got through he confessed he read it as it was not.

Judge Neilson—I thought he read it very well.

Mr. Fullerton—Oh! he read it very well.

Mr. Evarts—He read it according to the original edition, but not according to the revised edition.

Mr. Tracy—You say Mr. Beecher dictated all that first sentence as a single sentence, do you?

Mr. Fullerton—He didn't say that.

The Witness—I said he dictated every word of it.

Mr. Tracy—I ask you whether Mr. Beecher on that occasion dictated everything, down to the first period marked in that letter, as a single sentence?

Mr. Morris—There is one point, if your Honor please, I desire to say a word in reference to. The counsel attempted to give a false impression with reference to this letter, and spoke about the different colored ink. Now, the whole letter makes it manifest that the pen did not deliver the ink freely, and a part of many of the words, sometimes the middle of a word, will be pale. For instance, the beginning of that word is one color and the two letters "g" "h" are pale and the "t" is black, showing the pen did not deliver the ink regularly and uniformly.

Mr. Evarts—If you please, we object to all this. It is quite competent for our learned friends to comment on this manuscript. It does not falsify our comments that they can make others.

Mr. Beach—It does answer their comments when they are incorrect.

Mr. Evarts—We call the witness's attention to it, and it is the honest way, before he leaves the stand, and we intend to do it.

Judge Neilson—Some impressions are created on your part in reference to the letter or the ink of the letter in this writing, which perhaps justifies the counsel on the other side making a remark on the subject.

Mr. Tracy—I ask you whether Mr. Beecher on that occasion dictated everything down to the first period marked in that letter as a single sentence.

Mr. Beach—The witness has said no such thing.

Mr. Tracy—I know that, and that is the reason I ask him.

THE TRIBUNE stenographer was here directed by the Court to read the last question to the witness, which he did.

Mr. Beach—I was mistaken.

Mr. Tracy—I am glad you acknowledge for once you are mistaken.

Mr. Beach—You will find me always ready to acknowledge my mistakes. They are very frequent and common.

Mr. Fullerton—You are consuming a great deal of time. We want you to go on with the case.

The Witness—What is the close of the sentence?

Q. Did Mr. Beecher dictate the letter down to the word "been," in the language I have read as a single sentence? A. He dictated every word. If your Honor will allow me to explain—

Mr. Tracy—Answer my question first.

The Witness—I cannot answer it yes or no without an explanation.

Judge Neilson—[To Mr. Tracy.] That answers your question yes or no.

The Witness—I want to explain that answer, if your Honor will allow me.

Mr. Tracy—No; if you cannot answer that question, that is all.

The Witness—Very well.

Judge Neilson—Put another question.

Q. Can you remember what the first sentence was that Mr. Beecher dictated in that letter? A. Every word of the letter he dictated.

Q. I didn't ask you that. I ask you what the first sentence was that he dictated? A. I wrote the words just as they came from his lips, and I cannot tell you the first sentence that he dictated.

Judge Neilson—Did he dictate it in the order in which it is there? A. Yes, Sir; that is what I wanted to explain.

Mr. Tracy—You cannot tell the first sentence that he dictated; do you say that? A. The words in the first sentence of this letter, he dictated every word of it.

Q. You have said that he dictated it sentence by sentence, and that you wrote it sentence by sentence as he dictated it. Now, I ask you if you can tell us what the first sentence was that he dictated as a sentence and that you wrote as a sentence? A. I can tell you what I understand about it; my understanding is, the first sentence he dictated was, "I ask through you Theodore Tilton's forgiveness, and I humble myself before him as I do before my God. He would have been a better man in my circumstances than I have been." That is my recollection of the first sentence he dictated.

Mr. Fullerton—It is proper here that I should call attention to one fact.

Mr. Tracy—I submit it is not.

Mr. Fullerton—I ask the permission of the Court to do it.

Mr. Evarts—I object.

Mr. Fullerton—I understand you object, but notwithstanding that objection I call the attention of the Court to one thing in connection with the writing of this paper just at that point.

Mr. Evarts—I object to it, and don't go on until his Honor rules on my objection.

Mr. Fullerton—I shall go on.

Mr. Evarts—I object to his calling any attention to any fact while we are cross-examining this witness on this paper. Let him call attention to it afterwards.

Mr. Fullerton—I think it ought to be stated now because it is a misreading of the letter.

Judge Neilson—Then you can correct it on the re-direct.

Mr. Everts—We have a right to cross-examine this witness.

Judge Neilson—I don't need to be told that. The learned counsel on both sides are so anxious to argue that I quite understand it. [To Mr. Fullerton.] I think you had better reserve it for your re-direct; it may be a serious matter.

Mr. Fullerton—I will reserve it, and it will be a serious matter.

Mr. Tracy—We are as serious as a pickle here.

Mr. Fullerton—Yes, and you grow more and more so.

Mr. Tracy—Yes, Sir; my nature is very serious.

Judge Neilson—The only objection now to what Mr. Fullerton thought himself called upon to say is that some suggestion on his part might put the witness on his guard.

Mr. Fullerton—Nothing of that kind was in my mind.

Judge Neilson—That might be in your mind.

Mr. Beach—We cannot know that until we hear the suggestion. It may be entirely proper, but you won't hear it. There is no reason it should be given if the other side object.

Mr. Tracy—I don't think there is any delay on account of my putting questions.

Judge Neilson—I don't know.

Mr. Tracy—Will you tell us the next sentence that Mr. Beecher dictated as such that you wrote as such in that letter? A. I can tell you the next sentence that I wrote as such.

Q. Can you tell us the next sentence that he dictated as such and that you wrote as such? A. I can give you every word he dictated in the sense that I understand it.

Mr. Tracy—That will be satisfactory.

The Witness—"I can ask nothing except that he will remember all the other hearts that would ache. I will not plead for myself. I even wish that I were dead but others must live and suffer."

Q. What was the next sentence? A. "I will die before any one but myself shall be inculpated," is the next sentence.

Q. What next? A. "All my thoughts are turning toward my friends."

Q. Turning? A. Running.

Q. Which is it? A. I think it is running.

Q. Have you any doubt about that? A. No, Sir; I don't think I have.

Q. Go on. A. "Running toward my friends, toward the poor child lying there praying with her folded hands; she 's guiltless."

Q. Is there a full stop after the word "hands"? A. No, Sir; a semi-colon. "She is guiltless, sinned against, bearing the transgression of another;" that is the sentence—the next sentence that Mr. Beecher dictated to me, as I recollect it.

Q. Is there a period after the word "guiltless," or not? A. No, Sir; a comma.

Q. What is the next? A. "Her forgiveness I have. I humbly pray to God that he may put it into the heart of her husband to forgive me." That is the next sentence which I recollect that Mr. Beecher dictated.

Q. How long were you writing that paper? A. Not very long.

Q. About how long should you say? A. Long enough to write it; I don't know. It was dictated right straight along.

Q. Do you write rapidly, or otherwise? A. Oh! fairly, Sir; not very rapidly, nor very slow.

Q. Now, do you not write with a good deal of difficulty, mechanically, Mr. Moulton? A. I don't think I write with a great deal of difficulty.

Q. When you are with either Mr. Beecher or Mr. Tilton, are you in the habit of having them dictate to you and you write, or is it your habit to have them write and submit to your criticism? A. I cannot say that there is a habit either way.

Q. Of the numerous letters and correspondence that have passed between you and Mr. Beecher, that have been written by Mr. Beecher, can you name a single instance where he dictated any other paper than this, and you wrote it? A. I don't recollect any such instance.

Q. Any such instance? A. No, Sir.

Q. During the four years? A. I don't recollect any such instance.

Q. Now, Mr. Moulton, is that in your ordinary handwriting in respect to the size of the letter, and the matter on a page—the smallness of the matter on a page? A. Is that in my ordinary handwriting?

Q. Yes, Sir. A. No, Sir, I don't ordinarily write with a quill pen.

Q. Is it your ordinary style to spread so little matter over so great a space? A. Well, to spread a very little matter over a very great space?

Q. Is it your ordinary style to spread so little matter over so great a space as you have here? A. I don't know that I can answer that without an explanation. I write a very irregular hand, if your Honor will allow me to say so; I write sometimes one way, and sometimes another.

Q. You mean to say you cannot answer the question whether you ordinarily spread as little matter over so great a space or not? A. I think I have often done it, Sir.

Mr. Beach—I think the counsel has given us an example of spreading very little matter on a very great space.

Q. When did you next see Mr. Beecher after you left on the 1st of January? A. On the 2d, I think.

Q. Where? A. At his house.

Q. What room in his house? A. I think I met him, Sir, in the parlor or back parlor, and went up stairs with him from the parlor?

Q. Into what room? A. I don't remember what room.

Q. Do you remember whether your interview was in the study or not? A. I don't remember distinctly whether it was in the study or not.

Q. Do you remember who let you into that room on that occasion? A. On January 2d?

Q. Yes, Sir? A. No, Sir; I don't remember now. January 2d, I mean.

Q. What time of day did you go there? A. I think in the afternoon, somewhere about five or six o'clock.

Q. Five or six o'clock? A. Somewhere about that; between four and six o'clock.

Q. How long did you remain? A. Not very long.

Q. About how long? A. I don't recollect. I think perhaps an hour, perhaps half an hour or an hour; it may be two hours. I cannot remember it, it is so far back.

Q. Was your interview with him on that occasion alone? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Was it on that day that he showed you the draft of this letter that he had prepared to send to Mr. Bowen? A. Either that day, or a day or two after; I think it was on that day.

Q. Did he read it to you on that day?

Mr. Tracy—[To plaintiff's counsel.] Gentlemen, will you give me that Exhibit?

Mr. Morris—What one?

Mr. Tracy—The letter of January 2d.

Mr. Morris—You must call for them by the numbers. We cannot furnish them unless you call for them by the numbers.

Mr. Tracy—Did you understand the last question that I put to you? A. I don't know really that I do.

Q. Did he read it to you on that day? A. Either that day or the day after.

Q. What did you say on his reading that letter to you? A. I don't recollect precisely what I did say; substantially that it was just.

Q. It was just and truthful, as far as you understood it? A. Yes, Sir; very likely that.

Q. And did you understand yourself to be the party of whom he spoke when he said, "On the assurances of one," so-and-so, "I am satisfied that my statement did him justice?" A. Yes, Sir.

Q. You were the party? A. I think so; yes, Sir.

Q. And so understood yourself? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. On whose assurances he wrote that letter? A. Yes, Sir.

TILTON'S UPBRAIDING OF BOWEN.

Q. Now, I understood you to say, on your direct examination, that on January 2d it was that you told Mr. Beecher that Mr. Tilton was writing a letter to Mr. Bowen? A. I think it was on that day—yes, Sir. Mr. Tilton was writing a letter on January 1st, and I think I told Mr. Beecher on that day.

Q. Is it your recollection you told him on that day? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. On January 2d? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. I understand you to say, then, that you had four different interviews with Mr. Beecher on four successive days—Dec. 30th, Dec. 31st, Jan. 1st and Jan. 2d—at the house of Mr. Beecher? A. Dec. 30th, Dec. 31st, Jan. 1st and Jan. 2d—yes, Sir.

Q. On four successive days, then, you distinctly recollect the fact of having those interviews with Mr. Beecher? A. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Fullerton—That is repeating it right over for the third time.

Q. Now, it was at that interview of January 2d that you spoke to him about Mr. Tilton preparing a letter. What did you say to him about it? A. I said Mr. Tilton was preparing a letter for Mr. Bowen, in which he was going to state substantially what Mr. Bowen had said to him (Tilton) concerning Mr. Beecher, and that I should strive to keep out of it all allusion to Mr. Beecher and to Mr. Tilton and his wife—have the letter simply express what Mr. Bowen had said to him (Tilton) concerning Mr. Beecher.

Q. Well? A. And that after Mr. Tilton had written it, I undertook to get possession of it, and hold it.

Q. For what purpose would you hold it? A. For what purpose? For the purpose of negotiating with Mr. Bowen, among others, and for the purpose of saving the families of all interested—saving all exposure of facts. I didn't approve of that letter.

Mr. Tracy—I didn't ask you that.

The Witness—Pardon me, Sir.

Mr. Evarts—Strike that out.

Q. Did you repeat that to Mr. Beecher—the substance of the stories that Mr. Bowen had told Mr. Tilton concerning him, and which Mr. Tilton was to write Mr. Bowen about? A. Did I tell him that?

Q. Yes, Sir; on that day? A. No, Sir; I don't think I told him the substance.

Q. Didn't he ask you what they were? A. No, Sir; I don't think I did.

Q. He didn't ask at all? A. I don't recollect either, to my recollection.

Q. You simply told him Mr. Tilton was writing a letter in which he was going to state what slanders or stories Mr. Bowen had told about Mr. Beecher, and Mr. Beecher did not ask you if you knew what they were? A. I don't remember that he did; a general charge—

Q. Well, what was it? A. Nothing but the general charge of adultery. I have said that before.

Q. Did you talk about that then? A. Not the specific charge of adultery; it was only charges of adultery.

Q. Did you say to Mr. Beecher on that occasion it was in regard to Mr. Bowen's charges of adultery against him? A. I think I did; yes, Sir.

Q. And you were going to get possession of that letter if you could, and use it in negotiating with Mr. Bowen?

Mr. Fullerton—He did not state that.

Mr. Evarts—He did.

Judge Neilson—Ask if he was. Your question assumes he was.

Mr. Beach—The question states but part of the purpose which the witness stated.

Mr. Tracy—The object will be accomplished. [To the Witness.] What do you say? You were going to get possession of that letter, if you could, and use it in negotiating with Mr. Bowen?

Mr. Beach—That is a statement.

Judge Neilson—Yes; that is a statement. [To Mr. Tracy.] Put your question again.

Q. Did you tell Mr. Beecher that you would get possession of that letter, if you could, in order to use it in negotiating with Mr. Bowen? A. I told him I would get possession of that letter if I could.

Q. Did you tell him the purpose for which you would get possession of it? A. Yes, Sir; I did.

Q. What was it? A. For the purpose of letting Mr. Bowen know exactly what he did to Mr. Tilton, and for the purpose of keeping peace between all the parties.

Q. Did you tell him you would use it for the purpose of negotiating with Bowen? A. Substantially that, yes.

Q. What did you tell Mr. Beecher was the object of having this letter written? A. Mr. Tilton wanted to publish it.

Q. For what purpose? A. To make clear by the publication the reasons for the severance of his relations with Mr. Bowen.

Q. And you told that to Mr. Beecher? A. Yes, Sir; I believe I did.

Q. And that you should prevent the publication of that letter? A. I told him I would try to do it.

Q. How did you know that Mr. Tilton was going to publish it? A. How did I know?

Q. Yes, Sir. A. He stated to me that he thought he should.

Q. Before it was written, he stated that? A. Sir?

Q. Before it was written, he stated that? A. When he first commenced to write it, the evening of Jan. 1st.

Q. Where did he begin to write it? A. At my house, I believe.

Q. At your house? A. I think so.

Q. Did he finish it on that evening? A. On the evening of Jan. 1st.

Q. Yes, Sir. A. I don't think he did finish it all.

Q. How far did it proceed? A. I do not recollect.

Q. Do you know that he did not write the whole of it on that night? A. A rough draft of it was finished at my house that night.

Q. The draft of it was finished at your house on that night? A. I think so.

Q. Jan. 1st? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. That was after you had brought the paper that you had got from Mr. Beecher on that day, to Mr. Tilton, and showed it to him? A. He was writing when I got there.

Q. And he finished it that same evening? A. I think he did—the rough draft of it.

Q. And was going to publish it? A. Yes, Sir; he thought of publishing it.

Q. He so expressed himself? A. I recollect that subject.

Q. How did you come to meet Mr. Beecher on the 2d of January. A. By his invitation.

Q. Given on the 1st? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Was Mr. Beecher at home on the 2d, when you called? A. I think he was; yes, Sir.

Q. Now, if your statement to General Butler—
The Witness—Which one?

Mr. Tracy—Well, either. Did you say to him that Mr. Beecher asked him if he thought it would be safe for the sale of the Plymouth pews to go on? A. I think I did.

Q. And that was asked at the head of the stairs on Jan. 2d? A. I think I did; yes, Sir.

Q. And that you told him: "I told him I thought it would be perfectly safe to have the sale of Plymouth pews go on. I felt perfectly sure Mr. Tilton would do nothing against him or his family?" A. Yes, Sir.

Q. You told that to General Butler? A. Yes, Sir.

TERMS OF BEECHER'S PRAYER FOR HELP.

Q. Did you also tell this to General Butler: "He said that Elizabeth Tilton had sent for him to come to her house, and told him she believed her relations were wrong. And he told me he said to her: 'If you believe these relations wrong, then they should be terminated.' And he told me that he prayed with her—prayed to God with her for help to discontinue their sexual relations." A. I think I told him that.

Q. You told General Butler that? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. As a part of this same interview?
Mr. Beach—What same interview?

Mr. Tracy—The interview I have been speaking of. [To the Witness.] At what interview did you tell General Butler that?

A. I think that was the interview of Jan. 1st.

Q. At what interview with General Butler did you communicate that fact to him? A. My recollection is, it was at Bay View.

Q. At Bay View? A. I think so.

Q. Did General Butler advise you to expunge that from your statement?

Mr. Beach—That I object to.

Q. Did I understand you to say you thought this interview between yourself and Mr. Beecher in regard to prayer was on Jan. 1st? A. I had that impression when I spoke.

Q. When do you say, as a matter of fact, it was? A. I should think it was Jan. 1st.

Q. Jan. 1st that he spoke of prayer? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. And not Jan. 2d? A. That would be my impression.

Q. Do you mean to say that, on Jan. 1st, in that interview that Mr. Beecher told you he had prayed to God for help to discontinue his sexual relations with Mrs. Tilton? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Using the word "sexual" in that connection? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Did he say that he had used that word in his prayer? A. Did he say that he had used that word in his prayer?

Q. Yes, Sir. A. He said that he had prayed to God for help to discontinue their sexual relations. That was substantially what he said to me, as I remember it.

Q. Did he say the word "sexual" in that connection? A. He used the word "sexual," yes, Sir.

Q. Did he say that that was a part of his prayer, that he wanted help to discontinue his sexual relations? A. Will you allow me to state what he said?

Q. I asked you if he said that was part of his prayer? A. He said he prayed to God for help to discontinue their sexual relations. That is what he told me.

Q. The words "sexual relation" were the words that Mr. Beecher always used to characterize the relation between himself and Mrs. Tilton, were they? A. I don't recollect that, Sir, whether they were always.

Q. Have you repeated any other phrase, or any other word, than the word "sexual"? A. I don't know whether I have or not.

Q. Do you know whether that is a word that Mr. Beecher is in the habit of using to characterize the sexual act out of wedlock?

Mr. Beach—That I object to.
The Witness—I have heard him use a worse term.

Mr. Tracy—I did not ask you that. I ask you this, whether the word "sexual," to characterize that act out of wedlock, is not an unusual word to use?

Mr. Fullerton—That I object to.

Judge Neilson—We all know that as well as the witness does.

Mr. Beach—Perhaps not as familiarly as some others.

Judge Neilson—We are expected to know the use of that word as well as the witness.

Mr. Tracy—Now, Mr. Moulton, did you at any time come into possession of papers written by Bessie Turner? [To plaintiff's counsel.] Will you, gentlemen, produce the Bessie Turner documents?

Mr. Morris—I don't know that I have them here; but I say to the counsel again, as I have repeatedly, all along, that if they will give a list of what they want, we will endeavor to arrange them.

Mr. Everts—We may have to ask the witness to bring those papers, and to put them in our hands, that we may find them, or in the hands of the Court.

Judge Neilson—You can call for them from time to time as you wish them. They are safe enough where they are.

Mr. Everts—They are safe, but we don't get them.

Judge Neilson—I suggested, the day before yesterday, that a list should be made of what letters you wanted.

Mr. Everts—There is not any such multitude of them. They have been all through the mill, and stamped and numbered, and that is known to the public, and you can count them all. Fifty of them have already been given in evidence, and it is others that we ask for.

Judge Neilson—You must have them.

Mr. Everts—And we are entitled to them.

Judge Neilson—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Morris—I give them notice now, again, that I am not going to spend time unnecessarily for the accommodation of counsel on the other side, when I have made so reasonable a request as I have made. They may call for papers in this way, and I will take my time to find them.

Mr. Everts—We have that distinct notice, now, and therefore I would like to have the papers put in my hands.

Judge Neilson—It is well enough as it is. I suggested the day before yesterday that a list should be made of those you wanted.

Mr. Everts—They are the witness's papers, brought in under my subpoena.

Judge Neilson—Well, he will produce them when wanted.

Mr. Morris—And we have a good many papers brought in under subpoena that they have no right to.

Mr. Everts—Will the witness keep his own papers?

Judge Neilson [to Mr. Everts]: As you want a paper call for it, and it must be produced.

Mr. Morris—I will look over my package to find the paper.

Mr. Everts—That you can do.

Mr. Morris—That I propose to do without your permission.

Mr. Fullerton—If the Court please, if the counsel on the other side will indicate what other papers they will probably want during the present day, we will select them out from the papers in our possession.

Mr. Everts—If my friends desire to assist us, if they will separate the papers which have not been given in evidence, and that have been brought here under subpoena, from those that have been given in evidence, it will be easy to find the few papers we want.

Mr. Morris—I understand that better than the counsel. There is a large package here, and we will have to go over them all.

Judge Neilson—Mr. Morris, do the best you can; we shall have to wait.

BESSIE TURNER'S LETTERS EXCLUDED.

Mr. Tracy—I will try and occupy the time of your Honor until one o'clock with another matter; I will have to pass over this matter and refer to it again. Q. Now, Mr. Moulton, was there anything said at any time in the first days of January about the future of Mr. Tilton between yourself and Mr. Beecher? A. About the future of Mr. Tilton?

Q. Yes, Sir. A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Was it talked, and in pursuance of that talk, did you try to have him reinstated upon The Independent and Union? A. No, Sir.

Q. Did you never have any talk with Mr. Bowen on that subject? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. When was that talk with Mr. Bowen on the subject of reinstating Mr. Tilton? A. Well, Sir, it was previous to the 15th of January; shall I tell you what I said?

Mr. Tracy—When I ask it.

The Witness—I beg pardon, Sir.

Mr. Everts—It is not necessary for you to cross-examine us.

The Witness—I beg pardon, Sir, I did not do it discourteously.

Mr. Tracy—Previous to that, in conversation with Mr. Bowen, had Mr. Beecher sent his letter retracting the stories that he told you about Mr. Tilton.

Mr. Fullerton—I object to that. It is not fair to characterize the letter.

Judge Neilson—Previous to that time he sent the letter?

Mr. Tracy—The letter has been in evidence.

Mr. Fullerton—There is no reason why you should characterize it in that way.

Mr. Tracy—The objection to characterizing it is introducing the evidence. It is referred to as a letter.

Judge Neilson—Refer to it as a letter, or by a mark or date.

Mr. Tracy—I don't know which number. [To the Witness]—It is a letter which you say you saw the draft of on the second of January?

Mr. Fullerton—It is the letter of the 2d of January. It is the only letter of that kind in evidence.

Mr. Tracy—It is the letter of the 2d of January. Had Mr. Beecher sent that letter to Mr. Bowen before your conversation with Mr. Bowen? A. Yes, Sir; he told me he had; I don't know whether he did or not.

Q. Had you obtained, previous to that time, also a letter from Mrs. Tilton, denying she had ever desired a separation from her husband?

Mr. Fullerton—I object to that.

Mr. Tracy—Then I call for that letter also.

Q. I ask if you obtained a letter upon that subject from Mrs. Tilton?

Mr. Fullerton—I object to that.

Mr. Tracy—What is the objection?

Mr. Fullerton—That you cannot ask the contents of a letter that is in evidence.

Judge Neilson—It savors somewhat of that.

Mr. Tracy—I asked if he had got a letter on that subject. I am merely doing it to determine the letter; I am not asking for the contents of the letter.

Mr. Beach—Well, we will hand you the letter.

Mr. Fullerton—You would not tell us five minutes ago that you wanted that letter.

Mr. Tracy—I didn't want it then; I didn't know then that I would want your letter. It is only to fill up the time until one o'clock that I want it. I will try and pass on for a moment to something else.

Mr. Morris [handing Mr. Tracy two letters]—Here are the Bessie Turner letters.

Mr. Tracy [handing letters to witness]—Did you ever see those two letters, which I now hand to you, before? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Did you bring them here under a subpoena? A. I handed them to Judge Morris to be brought here.

Q. When did they first come into your possession? A. About the time of their dates. What are their dates, General, please? Q. One is January 12th and the other January 10th, 1871.

You have had them continuously from that time until the time of delivering them to Judge Morris? A. Were they not in my statement? I think they were in my first statement.

Judge Neilson—[To the witness]: You think you have had them ever since? A. Yes, Sir; I have had them ever since.

Mr. Tracy—Do you know how you received them? A. I don't remember, Sir, exactly how I received them, whether by a messenger or by mail.

Q. What time did you receive them? A. About that time.

Q. About this time. Where was Bessie Turner living at the time? A. I think she was at Mr. Tilton's house; I won't be certain about that.

Q. What did you do with the papers on receiving them? A. Put them away.

Q. Did you ever talk with Mr. Tilton about them? A. About the letters?

Q. About these letters? A. No, Sir; not until after I got them.

Q. Until after you got them. Did Mr. Tilton bring those letters to you? A. I don't remember whether he did or not.

Q. You remember talking to him about them? A. Yes, Sir; after I got them,

Q. Did you show them to him? A. I guess I read them to him; yes, Sir, or he read them himself.

Q. And you have kept them ever since? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. And you don't know whether you received them from him or in some other way? A. No, Sir; I don't remember.

Mr. Tracy—We offer them in evidence.

Mr. Fullerton—We object to them.

Mr. Tracy—Are those the only letters that you received from Bessie Turner, or papers signed by Bessie Turner? A. They are all that I recollect now; yes, Sir.

Q. How long after getting these papers was the arrangement made about Bessie Turner going away? A. I think it was made before I got them.

Q. Before you got them? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Were those obtained before she went away in pursuance of the arrangement? A. In pursuance of the arrangement? I don't remember whether it was in pursuance of that arrangement or not.

Q. Perhaps you misunderstand my question. Had she gone away in pursuance of the arrangement before you received the letters, or did she go away after? A. I don't know whether she went away before or after.

Q. In other words, you don't remember when she went away? A. No, Sir; I don't remember when she went away.

Q. Did she not go away along in January, about the 15th? A. I don't recollect, Sir, when she went away. My bill will show, General, when she went away. The bill and papers I have got will show.

Q. Have you got anything which will show you when she left? A. I think it will show when she entered the seminary.

Q. Will it show when she left Brooklyn? A. I don't think I have got anything to show when she left Brooklyn.

Q. Do you remember if it was about February 7? A. No, Sir; I don't remember that.

Mr. Tracy—I offer the letters in evidence.

Judge Neilson—State to me why you think they are admissible. They are letters by a third person, Bessie Turner.

Mr. Tracy—We think they are admissible for this reason: This witness has already testified that the girl, Bessie Turner, was sent away because she had got information concerning Mr. Beecher and Mrs. Tilton, and that Mr. Beecher paid her board for that reason, because of that information. Now we propose to show that at the very time, or before she went away, this witness was in possession of the documents which show the reason why she went away, and that reason was because she reported strange words concerning Mr. Tilton and herself.

Judge Neilson—In other words, you offer a statement written by Bessie Turner, going to the question of why she went away, as evidence. I don't think it is.

Mr. Evarts—If your Honor please, this is the point: It has been made a subject of evidence here, as bearing upon the guilt of Mr. Beecher, that he cooperated with this witness and with Mr. Tilton in having Bessie Turner sent away from here, because she was in possession of, and would be in danger of, stating things prejudicial to Mr. Beecher in respect of his relations with Mrs. Tilton. Now, we prove, as a matter of fact, that she was sent away, as has already been stated, and as the only preliminary of sealing her mouth or correcting any prattle, as it is called, that she had been or might be induced to indulge in; that it was her written corrections, not of stories to the prejudice of Mrs. Tilton and Mr. Beecher, or either of them, but of stories to the prejudice of Mr. Tilton in respect to herself.

Judge Neilson—I must rule them out.

Mr. Evarts—If your Honor please, we desire to read the letters in order that your Honor's ruling may be applied to the actual facts of this case.

Mr. Beach—We object to their reading them.

Judge Neilson—Avowing the fact; to illustrate it, I must apply the same ruling as I did the other day. He may read the letters.

Mr. Beach—We follow the principle of our learned friends in objecting.

Mr. Evarts—I offer those letters?

Judge Neilson—Yes.

Mr. Evarts [reading]:

JANUARY 12.

MY DEAR MRS. TILTON:

The story that Mr. Tilton once lifted me from my bed and carried me screaming to his own, and attempted to violate my person, is a wicked lie.

Yours truly, BESSIE TURNER.

That was the document that was taken from her before sending her away. I offer it in evidence.

Judge Neilson—I rule it out.

Mr. Beach—We withdraw our objection.

Judge Neilson—Mark it.

[Copy letter marked "Exhibit D 10."]

Mr. Evarts [reading]:

BROOKLYN, January 10, 1871.

MY DEAR MRS. TILTON: I want to tell you something. Your mother, Mrs. Morse, has repeatedly attempted to hire me, by offering me dresses and presents, to go to certain persons and tell them stories injurious to the character of your husband. I have been persuaded that the kind attentions shown me by Mr. Tilton for years were dishonorable demonstrations. I never at the time thought that Mr. Tilton's caresses were for such a purpose. I do not want to be made use of by Mrs. Morse, or any one else, to bring trouble on my two best friends, you and your husband. Bye-bye,

BESSIE TURNER.

Mr. Beach—We withdraw our objection to that.

[Copy letter marked "Exhibit D. 11."]

Judge Neilson—The audience will please remain seated until the jury pass out. [To the jury.] Gentlemen, please be in your seats at 2 o'clock.

Mr. Mallison (the Clerk)—This Court will now take a recess until 2 o'clock.

BESSIE TURNER'S SCHOOL BILLS.

The Court met at 2 p. m., pursuant to adjournment. Francis D. Moulton was recalled, and the cross-examination resumed.

Mr. Tracy—I call your attention to the writing on that envelope containing exhibits. [Handing witness an envelope.] Do you know that handwriting? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. In whose handwriting is it? A. I think it is Theodore Tilton's.

Mr. Tracy—I desire to put that envelope in evidence.

Judge Neilson—Yes, Sir.

[Marked "Exhibit D 12."]

Q. Do you know when it was you received the first money from Mr. Beecher, after receiving—the first money you received from Mr. Beecher? Do you know when it was? A. The first money that I received?

Q. Yes, Sir. A. I think it is in the statement which I have handed to you, Sir. I think that was the first money that I received.

Q. Do you desire the account? A. Yes, I would like to see it, please [taking the account]. June 26.

Q. What year? A. 1871.

Q. What amount? A. $155 85.

Q. Do you know how you received that? A. By check.

Q. Is the check presented to you the check by which that was paid? A. How is that, Sir?

Q. Is that the check received from Mr. Beecher for that amount? A. Yes, Sir; I think that is the check.

Q. How did you receive it? A. I suppose I received it inclosed in an envelope.

Q. Do you know anything about how Mr. Beecher came to send you that check? A. How he came to send it to me?

Q. Yes, Sir. A. Through information from me, I presume, Sir.

Q. Have you any recollection on the subject? A. I recollect that I informed him of the bill for Bessie Turner's schooling, Sir, and I got that check for it.

[Check marked "Exhibit D 13."]

Q. Have you got the bill? A. I think I have; yes, Sir.

Q. Let us have it, please.

The Witness—I think you have those papers, Judge Morris.

Mr. Morris—I will look for it.

Q. Was that the first bill that you have received or known of, for Bessie Turner's schooling? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. From whom was that bill received? A. I think from either Mrs. Tilton directly or the Principal of the school. Mrs. Tilton, I think, sent it to me.

Q. Who is the Principal of the school?

A. C. C. Beatty, I think, is the name. The bills will show, Sir, that are there.

Q. You don't know whether you wrote Mr. Beecher, informing him of that bill, or whether you saw him and told him of it? A. I communicated the fact to him, in some way, Sir.

Q. When did you get the next check? A. The next check seems to be November 15, Sir.

Q. Of what year? A. 1871.

Q. What amount is that? A. November 19, 1871, $150.

Mr. Beach—What was the date of the first? A. The date of the first was June 26, 1871, $155 85.

Mr. Tracy—On that day you received $150 from Mr. Beecher? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Do you know how you received it? A. By check.

Q. Do you know how you communicated the fact to Mr. Beecher that that amount was required? A. I don't remember, Sir, how. Mrs. Tilton, I think, sent me word that she wanted it for Bessie Turner.

Q. Is that the check that you received from Mr. Beecher for that amount? [Handing witness a check.] A. Yes, Sir.

[Marked, "Exhibit D 14."]

Q. When did you receive the next money from Mr. Beecher? A. According to this account, May 31.

Q. What year? A. 1872.

Q. For what amount? A. $294 76.

Q. Have you got the bill of that? A. I have got the bill of Elizabeth C. Tilton.

$219 76 for that, and $35 I paid to Mrs. Tilton upon her request—I think the note is among my papers—and $50 I paid to Mrs. Tilton at her request, which makes $294 76, which was a reimbursement for that amount.

Q. A reimbursement of money which you had previously paid for Mrs. Tilton? A. Yes, Sir, to the order of Rev. A. M. Reid. I got the bills from Mrs. Tilton, I think.

Q. You got those bills from Mrs. Tilton. [To plaintiff's counsel.] Will you give them to us, gentlemen?

Mr. Morris—We will take a memorandum of them and find them as soon as we can. What is it you want now?

Mr. Tracy—All the bills; the bills of Mrs. Tilton, and the bill for $219.

A. Did you have a bill also for the $150? A. I don't think there is any bill for $150. I don't remember that there is. All the bills I have got, Mr. Tracy, on the subject, are there.

Q. And are you able to say that the $150 in November, 1871, was applied by you to the payment of —, for Bessie Turner? I received from Mrs. Tilton a request for $150 in August, and paid it.

Q. In August? A. In August, I paid her $150, and did not get the check to reimburse me for it until November.

Q. Then you mean to say that the $150 in November was to reimburse you for $150 advanced to Mrs. Tilton in August? A. That I gave Mrs. Tilton, yes, Sir; my impression is that there is a bill for $150 there; I won't be certain of it though.

Q. And have you any note or memorandum by which you requested the payment of that $150 of Mr. Beecher? A. No, Sir.

Q. You don't know how you communicated that request to him? A. No, I do not; I don't recollect.

Q. Is the check now presented to you the check by which you received payment for the $294 [handing witness a check]? A. I believe it to be; yes, Sir.

Q. What is the date of that, please? A. The date of this check is May 29, 1872; the date that it went on deposit with Woodruff & Robinson was May 31.

[Marked "Exhibit D 15."]

Q. Do you know when you received the next money from Mr. Beecher? A. According to this account, Sir, February 18, 1873.

Q. How much was that? A. $500.

Q. What was it for? A. It appears here, Sir, that it was paid March the 7th, $245, to Mr. Beatty, and April 5, Mrs. Tilton the balance of the $500—$255.

Q. Have you got the bills of those? A. I have got the bills of $245, I think.

Q. No bill from Mrs. Tilton? A. For the $255? No.

Q. Or any note requesting payment? A. No, I don't think I have.

Q. How did you make that payment to Mrs. Tilton? A. I think I made it to her directly.

Q. By check or in currency? A. I think in currency.

Q. Do you recollect? A. It does not state here, so that I don't recollect, Sir.

Q. Have you any recollection—as a matter of recollection have you any recollection on the subject? A. My recollection is that I paid it to Mrs. Tilton directly, in currency, Sir.

Q. Where? A. At her house, I think.

Q. Did you go to her house for that purpose? A. Think I did; yes, Sir.

Q. In pursuance of a note requesting you to call? A. I don't think I received any note, Sir.

Q. How was the fact communicated to you that she wanted money? A. I don't remember, Sir.

Q. Was it by Mr. Tilton? A. I think not, Sir.

Q. Why do you think not? A. Because he did not communicate any such things to me.

Q. Do you know that fact? A. I know that fact.

Q. Then will you tell us how you came to go to the house of Mrs. Tilton to pay that $255? A. I should say by request of Mrs. Tilton.

Q. Have you any recollection on the subject? A. That is the only recollection I have, Sir. I don't know how I could have done it in any other way.

Q. You have no note? A. No, Sir; I don't think I have. If I have, it is in the—

Q. When did you pay the next money? A. The next money was paid—the next money was received, according to this account, $5,000—

Q. The next? A. According to this account?

Q. That is another matter. We will not open that at present. Is the note now presented to you in your handwriting [handing witness a paper]? A. Yes Sir.

Q. Did you send it to Mr. Beecher? A. I judge I did, Sir, from this. [Handing the paper back to Mr. Tracy.]

Q. Did he send you— A. Will you let me see the note again. What is the date of it, Mr. Tracy, if you please?

Q. Oct. 21, 1872, I read it. I will hand it back to you, to make sure of that, Sir. A. [Taking the note]. Oct. 21, 1872.

Q. Did you receive the amount from Mr. Tracy therein requested? A. It appears so; yes, Sir.

Q. Allow me to read it. [Taking the note from the witness.] A. I do not see it down so on the account here, and I see a check May 31, 1872, $294 76.

Mr. Tracy [reading]:

New-York, October 21, 1872.

DEAR SIR: Will you be kind enough to send me your check for $294 76. Very truly, yours,

FRANCIS D. MOULTON.

May 23, $219.76, $25, $50.

October 21, $274.71.

[Marked "Exhibit D., 16."]

The Witness—I do not see anything here, Sir, [referring to the account] to correspond with that.

Q. Do you know to what use you applied this money? A. I do not, Sir, except as it is here, $219 76 to Mr. Reid, and $25 and $50 to Mrs. Tilton; that is the way it says on that paper.

Q. That was paid when? A. This was paid May 28th and Oct. 26th.

Mr. Tracy—[To Mr. Morris]—Have you found the bills and accounts?

Mr. Morris—No, Sir; I am looking for them. I have found some of them.

Q. Had you any business transaction yourself with Mr. Beecher which would call for that amount of money? A. I don't recollect that I had Sir, any other.

Q. Can you explain in any way how you came to call on him for that amount of money in October, 1872? A. I can, Sir, from that account. That account is the only guide that I have, Sir. It is a mistake of the bookkeeper, or my own mistake, Sir, if it is a mistake. I don't know anything about it.

Q. Is the paper now handed you the first bill that you received for the expenses of Bessie Turner? [Handing witness a paper.] A. I believe it is; yes, Sir.

Q. And you paid it as above stated? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. How did you pay it? A. Paid it by check.

Q. Whose check? A. Woodruff & Robinson's—$155 27. There is a note on the inside of this, Mr. Tracy, to Mrs. Tilton. Did you notice it?

Q. I did not. A. There is.

Mr. Fullerton—I ask that those papers be now put in evidence.

Mr. Tracy—I ask to put in the bill at present. We will see what the note is.

The Witness—The note is a part of it.

Mr. Tracy—That may be, but we offer the bill now, and the check by which it was paid. What is the date of that bill? A. It says June, 1871.

Q. What was the time of payment? A. July 19th.

Q. I will pass to the next that seems to be in the order of date. Can you tell whether that is the next bill you received? [Handing witness a paper.] A. No; here is another prior to that.

Mr. Fullerton—Do we understand that the letter accompanying the first bill is—

Mr. Tracy—I will see, Sir, in a moment.

Mr. Evarts—It is not yet in evidence.

Mr. Fullerton—You are bound to put it in evidence.

Mr. Evarts—I think not.

Mr. Tracy—That is a question for the Court.

The Witness—$219 76, Mr. Tracy, seems to be the next one.

Q. What date is that? A. The date of the bill is January 24th, 1872.

Q. And how is that paid? A. Paid by check, Sir, Woodruff & Robinson's—paid by Woodruff & Robinson's check.

Q. Do you know how you got your pay for that? A. I presume from Mr. Beecher, Sir.

Q. Well, I mean by check, or how was the pay for that bill included in—what Exhibit is it? A. It was intended to be included in the bill for $294 76, I think.

Q. Then it is included in Mr. Beecher's check, Exhibit No. — what, Mr. Moulton, please? A. This one.

Q. Yes; what is that number? A. "D. 15, F. M. A."

Q. Yes; that is it? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Now what is the next bill? A. The one that I hold in my hand here, Sir, is June 27th, 1872.

Q. Was that the next bill that you received in order of time? A. I presume it was, Sir.

Q. What was the amount of that bill? A. $118 12.

Q. And the next one? A. Where is the next one?

[Mr. Tracy passes a paper to the witness.]

The Witness—June, 1873; yes, Sir.

Q. Was that the next bill in order of time? A. I don't remember, Sir, whether it was the next; I think the account will show, won't it, Sir?

Q. I have passed you up now, I believe, all the bills that have been handed up?

Mr. Beach—I guess not.

The Witness—There was one that was sent, like this, and settled the balance for $300, I think; this is $245.

Q. What date is that bill? A. This bill is January, 1873.

Q. Was that the next bill that you received in order of time? A. That was the next bill, I suppose, Sir; all I know is by the date, Sir; this is January, 1873, the date of this.

Mr. Beach—You have got one there June, 1873?

The Witness—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Tracy—I will put them in in the order of time. [To the witness]: Do those constitute all the bills that you received for Bessie Turner's schooling? A. They are all that I am in possession of.

Q. Are they all that you know of? A. Yes, Sir; they are all that I know of.

Q. Are they all that you have paid, to your knowledge? A. The account shows all the bills that I paid, Sir; yes, Sir. All the bills that I paid are on that account, if the account is correct.

Q. Are those all the bills you have? A. These are all the bills I have, Sir.

Mr. Shearman [reading]:

Statement of Account.

STEUBENVILLE FEMALE SEMINARY.

Miss BESSIE TURNER, To A. M. REID, Dr.

Advanced Items.	For Boarding 9-10 S.....	$76 50
Books & Sta.....	4 14 Tuition, Prin. Class.....	10 80
Music.....	5 10 Washing.....	7 23
Phys. & Med.....	6 00 Fire (2 mos.).....	4 00
	26 4.50
Seat in Ch.....	1 00 Music (doub. les.) use Piano.	40 50
	$16 24

"Adv. Item"..... 16 24

Am't.....$155 27

June, 1871.

STEUBENVILLE, June 8th, 1871.

Mrs. TILTON: I send you with this a statement of Miss Turner's bill for the past half-school year.

Bessie is doing very well in her studies, and is quite a favorite with us.

Sometimes she is not very well, but I think, on the whole, her health is improving.

Could you not come and make us a visit and bring Mr. Tilton with you? A little rest would do you both good. Very respectfully yours,
A. M. REID.

Bessie is making very good progress in music and in some of her common branches, as Arithmetic, Geography and Spelling.

No. 20996.

NEW-YORK, July 19, 1871.

Metropolitan National Bank.—Pay to the order of Rev. C. C. Beatty, one hundred and fifty-five dollars and twenty-seven cents.

$155 27.

WOODRUFF & ROBINSON.

Indorsed "Charles C. Beatty," "A. M. Reid" and the bank indorsements.

The above bill, accompanying letters and check each marked "Ex. D 17."

TESTIMONY OF FRANCIS D. MOULTON.

221

Steuenville Female Seminary.—Rev. C. C. Beatty, D. D.,
LL.D., Superintendent; Rev. A. M. Reid, Ph. D., Principal.
Miss BESSIE TURNER, Dr.

Music.....	$5 75	For boarding 7-10 session.....	$59 50
Stores.....	5 85	Tuition, Middle Class.....	9 80
Music.....	4 50	Washing.....	5 70
Stationery.....	77	(35 ded. 5)
		Music and use of piano, doub..	80 00
		Heated air.....	2 00
	$16 87	Advanced as per account on margin.....	16 87
Amount.....			$123 87
Cr. Received in advance.....			$123 87
Balance due.....			5 75
Cr. Mistake in pieces of music.....			$118 12
Am't due.....

June 27, 1872.

Rec'd Payment, A. M. REID.

Steuenville Female Seminary, July 9, 1872.

Francis D. Moulton, Esq., 49 Remsen-st., Brooklyn.

DEAR SIR:—Yours containing draft $118 12 for am't of Bessie Turner's bill is received. Please send bill receipted.

Bessie is a good and studious girl and is making good progress in her various studies. Very truly yours, A. M. REID.

Mechanics' National Bank,

83 Wall Street, New-York, July 8, 1872. }

Pay to Rev. A. M. Reid or order, One Hundred Eighteen 12-100 Dollars.

$118 12.

WOODRUFF & ROBINSON.

Indorsed—"A. M. Reid," and the Bank indorsements.

The above Bill, the accompanying letter and check, each marked "Ex. D. 18."

STEUENVILLE FEMALE SEMINARY. Rev. C. C. BEATTY, D.D.,
LL.D., Superintendent. Rev. A. M. REID, Ph. D., Principal.
Miss BESSIE TURNER,

To A. M. REID.

Dr.
Physicians.....	$4 00	For boarding two quarters.....	$85 00
Express.....	1 08	Tuition Pri. and Mld. classes...	12 00
Cash, Store, &c. 18 00		Washing.....	5 78
Books and Sta. 5 10		Music and use of Piano extra.	47 00
Music.....	1 55	Heated air.....	2 00
Seat in church.. 1 50		Boarding, vaca. 9 weeks @ $4 1/4.	38 25
Reading R.....	50	Advanced as per account on margin.....	29 73
	$29 73
Amount.....			$219 76

Amount.....

Received in advance.....

Balance due.....

Received payment,

January 24, 1874. A. M. REID.

No. 22311. NEW-YORK, May 28, 1872.

Metropolitan National Bank,

Pay to the order of Rev. A. M. Reid Two Hundred Nineteen 76-100 Dollars.

$219 76.

WOODRUFF & ROBINSON.

Indorsed—"A. M. Reid," and the Bank indorsements.

The above bill and check each marked "Exhibit D. 19."

STEUENVILLE FEMALE SEMINARY, Rev. C. C. Beatty, D.D.
LL.D., Superintendent. Rev. A. M. Reid, Ph. D., Principal.
Miss BESSIE TURNER, Dr.

Adv. Rems:		For boarding, two quarters...	$87 50
Store account....	27 09	Tuition, primary class.....	12 00
Books and sta'ry. 5 50		Washing.....	4 50
Pieces music.....	3 40	Music and use of piano (5 l. a w.).....	62 50
Seat in church....	1 50	Heated air.....	8 50
Reading-room....	50	German.....	10 00
Cash.....	5 00	Vacation, five weeks.....	20 00
	$43 99	Trip to Frankfort Springs..	7 87
		Advanced as per account on margin.....	42 99
Amount.....			$250 86
Deduct for loss.....			5 86
Balance due.....			$245 00

Received payment in full, by check, March 6, 1873,

CHARLES C. BEATTY,

Jan. '73. Per A. M. REID.

Session ends Feb. 3d.

No. 23386.

New-York, March 6, 1873.

Metropolitan National Bank.

Pay to the order of Rev. C. C. Beatty, Two Hundred and Forty-five Dollars.

WOODRUFF & ROBINSON.

Indorsed—"Charles C. Beatty," and the Bank indorsements.

The above bill and check each marked "Ex. D 20."

Miss BESSIE TURNER,

To A. M. REID, Dr.

Advanced.		For Boarding, one session.....	$87 50
For pew rent....	$1 50	Tuition, mid. cl.....	14 00
Reading R.....	0 50	Washing.....	4 70
Music.....	4 75	German, one session.....	10 00
Store.....	52 08	Heated air.....	2 50
Sewing.....	5 40	Room alone.....	5 00
Physician.....	0 90	Music M. P. (2 1/4 l.).....	62 50
	$65 13

Books and stat'y. 4 75 Advanced Items..... 69 88

Amount..... $256 08

Cr. by deduction one quarter school bill ($186.20)..... 46 55

Balance due..... $209 53

June, 1873,

New-York, December 16, 1873.

Mechanics National Bank.

Pay to the order of A. M. Reid, Two hundred dollars. ($200.)

WOODRUFF & ROBINSON.

Indorsed—"A. M. Reid," and the Bank indorsements.

The above bill and check each marked "Ex. D. 21."

STEUENVILLE FEMALE SEMINARY, Dec. 6, 1873.

MRS. E. R. TILTON:

Dear Friend: If you could send me the balance due on Bessie Turner's bill for last year before the first of January, it would confer a great favor. A number of large bills will be due at that time which must be met. The balance of the bill was $209 53. Call the balance $200.

The Bill was..... $256 08

Deduct X School bill..... 46 55

Amount..... $209 53

If you can send me the amount due, it will be a great favor at the present time.

Bessie is now visiting friends in Pittsburgh.

I have tried to get her a place.

I doubt whether she is willing to do such things as she is fitted to do. I do hope she will get along well, and yet I feel anxious about her. I asked her to come back to school awhile if she could not get any other place. With great consideration,

Yours, A. M. REID.

[Marked "Ex. D 22."]

STEUENVILLE SEMINARY, Dec. 18—"73.

F. D. MOULTON, Esq.:

Dear Sir: Yours, containing check for $200 in full for school bill is rec'd. This pays all her indebtedness to this date.

Very truly yours, A. M. REID.

[Marked "Ex. D 23."]

Mr. Tracy—That terminated the transaction of Bessie Turner's school bills, didn't it? A. I believe it did.

Q. After that you had nothing more to do with her? A. Not after she got through with her schooling.

Mr. Shearman—[Reading.]

TUESDAY, January 18th, 1873.

DEAR FRANCIS: Be kind enough to send me $50 for Bessie. I want to inclose it in to-morrow's mail.

Yours gratefully,

ELIZABETH.

The Witness—What date is that?

Mr. Shearman—January 18th, 1873.

[Marked "Exhibit D, No. 24."]

Mr. Everts—We ask for any notes that covered these payments that Mr. Moulton mentioned as having been made to Mrs. Tilton. This last note has been read as one of them. It is the only one which has been handed to us as far as I know.

Mr. Morris—I have handed all that I have found yet.

The Witness—I handed to Judge Morris all that I had, Sir. I don't know whether there are any more or not. If there are, I will try and find them.

Mr. Morris—There is the letter you called for.

Mr. Tracy—Now, you have spoken of three letters, all dated 7th of February, 1871; two by Mr. Beecher, one by Mr. Tilton? A. Two by what, Sir?

Q. Two by Mr. Beecher and one by Mr. Tilton, 7th February, 1871, the three letters? A. That is the letter from Mr. Beecher to me?

Q. Yes, Sir? A. And the letter from Mr. Tilton to me?

Q. Yes, Sir? A. And the letter from Mr. Beecher to Mrs. Tilton?

Q. Those I infer were all written by prearrangement, were they not? A. I don't know of any prearrangement particularly about it.

Mr. Evarts—They are all in evidence.

Mr. Tracy—They are all dated the same day, are they not? A. They are all dated the same day.

Q. Well, they were written in pursuance of a conversation that preceded their writing, were they not? A. I suppose they were written in consequence of conversation that preceded their writing.

Q. And their object was the reconciliation of the parties, the more perfect reconciliation of the parties, was it not? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Now, after those—the date of those letters, the relations of the parties were friendly, were they not? A. After Feb. 7th?

Q. Yes, Sir. A. Yes, Sir; they were friendly for some time.

Q. For some time? A. Yes, Sir.

STORY OF TILTON'S NEWSPAPER REHEARSED.

Q. Soon after that The Golden Age was founded, was it not? A. I believe, Sir, in March. March 2d, 1872—1871. March 2d, 1871.

Q. And it had been determined on for some time before—before the first number was issued? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Now, how long after the separation of Tilton from Bowen was the starting of The Golden Age determined on or discussed? A. Well, Sir, I think in the beginning of January—I should think it was January it was talked about.

Q. It began to be talked about in January? A. Either in January or February, Sir; I don't remember which.

Q. And arrangements were set on foot and prosecuted, until it was started and the first number issued? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Now, will you explain in detail just how that paper was started, and what was its financial basis? A. Financial basis of The Golden Age?

Q. Yes, Sir. A. The paper was started from a conversation between Mr. Woodruff and Mr. Tilton.

Q. I don't care to go into the details of that conversation. I want you to go on and show how the money was raised for it, and who owned it. A. Well, Mr. Woodruff arranged for the money for it, Sir. Mr. Woodruff and Mr. Tilton coöperated in regard to that.

Q. Well, what was done? I don't care what was said, but what was done? A. Certain subscriptions were made—certain subscriptions were made by different parties for the paper.

Q. Well, who were the subscribers for the paper—I mean—subscribers to this fund? A. Theodore Tilton embarked in it all the means that he had—$4,000, I think—at that time.

Q. How much? A. $4,000, I think he had at that time—$4,000 or $5,000.

Q. Was that money that was deposited with your firm? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Then who else subscribed? A. Mr. Mason, I think, Mr. Woodruff—

Q. How much did Mr. Mason subscribe? A. I really don't remember, Sir. I think it was $3,000; $1,500 or $3,000.

Q. What Mason? A. John W. Mason.

Q. What is his business? A. With the firm of Samuel Thompson's Nephew.

Q. Who else subscribed? A. Jackson S. Schultz, and a Mr. Southwick.

Q. How much did they respectively subscribe? A. Well, I forget really how much. I don't know at the time—I think it was $1,500 apiece, or $750 apiece.

Q. One or the other. This Mr. Southwick is Mr. Schultz's partner? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who else subscribed? A. Mr. Woodruff.

Q. How much did he subscribe? A. Mr. Robinson—Mr. Woodruff subscribed $3,000, if I remember rightly, and I subscribed $3,000, and Mr. Robinson subscribed a thousand.

Q. Well? A. I believe those were all, all that I recollect at present.

Q. Can you state here the aggregate of those subscriptions if you can? A. I have not got it with me—

Q. Now, what were the terms of those subscriptions; it was not a stock enterprise was it? A. It was not an incorporation as I understood it; no, it was not an incorporation.

Q. What were the terms of that subscription? A. The terms of the subscription were, that the subscription should be paid and Mr. Tilton should give his notes, I believe, for the amount.

Q. Payable to these subscribers? A. Payable to those subscribers.

Q. Payable when and out of what fund? A. Payable out of—payable by Theodore Tilton.

Q. Well, absolutely? A. I cannot give you the facts about that, Mr. Tracy, because I don't know them exactly enough to give them, but Mr. Woodruff can give them for you. If I knew all about it, Sir, I would.

Q. Did Mr. Tilton give his notes for the subscriptions? A. Mr. Tilton drew the money in proportion.

Q. Did he give the subscribers his notes? A. Yes, Sir, he gave—I believe he did.

Q. And then took from them their subscriptions as they were paid in? Now, how were those subscriptions to be paid in? A. Paid in when they were wanted—paid in when they were wanted by Theodore Tilton.

Q. By yourself as one—yes, Sir. Now, after the 2d of March, Tilton was engaged, I suppose, continuously on The Golden Age, wasn't he, for some considerable period of time? A. I think he was; yes, Sir.

Q. Giving all his time and thought to that paper? A. Yes, I suppose so.

Q. And did you meet Mr. Beecher frequently after that? A. I met Mr. Beecher during 1871, after the establishment of The Golden Age.

Q. Frequently, did you not? A. Yes, Sir, frequently.

Q. And did you see Mr. Beecher and Tilton together frequently? A. Not very frequently; no, Sir.

Q. Well, did you occasionally? A. Once in awhile.

Q. Where, and under what circumstances? A. I think they generally met at my house, Sir.

Q. How often did they meet at your house, should you say? A. Not very often, Sir.

Q. What was your habit about going to Mr. Beecher's house? Mr. Beach—At that time?

Mr. Tracy—Yes, Sir.

The Witness—Going to whose house?

Q. Mr. Beecher's? A. I didn't go there very frequently.

Q. In 1871? A. No, Sir.

Q. How often was Mr. Beecher at your house? A. Well, he was there quite frequently, Sir.

Q. Did he see your family? A. He saw my wife sometimes.

Q. Well, frequently dine with you or take a meal with you? A. No, Sir, not very.

Q. Not very? A. No, Sir.

Q. But sometimes? A. I don't remember that he ever took any; I don't think that he took meals with us over three or four times.

Q. Well, was Tilton present on those occasions? A. I remember one occasion when Tilton was present.

Q. Not more than one? A. Not at the table; no, Sir.

Q. Was it at dinner? A. It was at dinner, yes, Sir.

Q. Did you have other company present? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Did you ever see Mr. Beecher at Tilton's house after that?

Mr. Beach—After what?

Mr. Tracy—After the starting of The Golden Age; that is the period of which I am now inquiring? A. Yes, Sir; I was at Tilton's house with Mr. Beecher and Mrs. Woodhull after that.

Q. Yes; when was that? A. It was in 1871, I think.

Q. What time? A. I don't remember what time it was in 1871.

Q. Well, about what time? A. It was before the publication, I think, of the Woodhull biography.

Q. Before that? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. What time of day did you see them there? A. My recollection is that it was in the afternoon.

Q. How long did they stay there? A. I guess, perhaps, they were there half an hour or an hour.

Q. Tilton present? A. I believe he was.

Q. Well, is that the only occasion you ever saw Mr. Beecher at Tilton's house, after the starting of The Golden Age?

A. Yes, Sir. I think it is the only occasion. I think that was the only occasion, Sir.

Q. Where else have you seen them together? A. I have seen them together at my house in—

Q. In 1871, I mean? A. In the year 1871?

Q. Yes, Sir; I will confine it prior to the writing and publishing of the life, the biography, of Mrs. Woodhull, in 1871; before that publication did you see them together at your house?

Mr. Morris—When was that publication?

Mr. Tracy—The witness will tell us.

Q. When was it? [To the witness.] A. My impression is, Sir, it was in the latter part of 1871.

Q. Wasn't it in September, 1870? A. Not 1870—1871 you mean.

Q. In 1871? A. I don't remember whether it was in September or not. I think it was though.

Q. September? A. I think it was.

Q. Wasn't it issued on the 14th of September? A. I don't recollect.

Q. Well, it was about that time, anyway? A. It was about that time, I should think.

Q. Now, between the starting of The Golden Age and that period, how often should you say you had seen Mr. Beecher and Mr. Tilton at your house together? A. Oh, not often, Sir; I don't think over three or four times.

Q. Had you seen them elsewhere together besides at your house and Tilton's house? A. I think on February 27th—somewhere around that—I went over with Mr. Beecher to New York, to Mr. Bonner's office, on some business, and Mr. Beecher then went to The Golden Age office, and my impression is that I went from Mr. Bonner's to The Golden Age office, and found Mr. Tilton there, Mr. Beecher there.

Q. With Tilton? A. For a moment; just for a moment, yes, Sir.

Q. With Tilton? A. Yes, sir, I think he was there for a moment with him.

Q. Did you ever see him at The Golden Age office on any other occasion? A. No, not that I remember.

Q. Did you ever see them walking together in the street on any occasion? A. No.

Q. What is the answer? A. No, Sir.

Q. Do you remember of being in company with Mr. Tilton and Mr. Beecher at a yacht race—regatta? A. Yes, Sir; I don't think that was in 1871. I think there is a letter, Sir, among the papers that will fix the date.

Q. Well, when was it? Now that I am on that transaction I will fix the date of it. When was it? A. Well, I really don't remember, Sir; it was not in 1871.

Q. Well, was it after 1871? A. I think so. I can fix the date precisely, Sir, by the paper.

Q. If you can, we would rather have it fixed now. A. I cannot fix it from my memory.

Q. No; if you have got any paper in your possession that will enable you to fix the date of it, fix it right here. A. I think I remember reading, among those papers, a letter from Mr. Beecher accepting an invitation to go with Horace Greeley; it was during Horace Greeley's life.

Mr. Evarts—Have you got a letter from Mr. Beecher accepting an invitation to go on this yacht race?

Mr. Morris—I don't remember ever seeing that letter.

Mr. Evarts—Mr. Moulton says it is among your papers.

Mr. Morris—I think not; I will look.

Q. Well, what was the regatta—that was Ashbury's yacht race, wasn't it; the English regatta? A. I think it was; I think it was between the Sappho and the Livonia.

Mr. Evarts—The English yacht? A. Yes, I believe so.

Q. Now, can't you fix the year of that?

Mr. Morris—We have found the letter. [Letter handed to witness.]

Mr. Evarts—That is to you, Mr. Moulton?

Mr. Beach—I do not perceive the materiality of that letter.

Mr. Tracy—Only to fix the date? A. Yes, October 30th, '71, this seems to be dated, Sir.

Mr. Evarts—That is the paper? A. I think this is it.

Q. That is the paper you referred to that fixes the date? A. I think this is the one, Sir; that is the one I referred to.

Q. Well, that refreshes your recollection as to the time? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Of the yacht race? A. Yes, Sir; I think that was the yacht race referred to.

Q. And that date is Oct. 30th, 1871? A. That was either the—Mr. Tilton was along, I believe, that day; we either went to a yacht race, or went down to look at the warehouses along the shore; I think it was a yacht race.

Mr. Tracy—Now, who went? Were you three on that yacht race? A. I believe we were; yes, Sir.

Q. And companions together on that day? A. Well, I believe that Mr. Tilton talked. I think Oliver Johnson was along that day, if it is the day that I remember, and Mr. Tilton talked with Oliver Johnson chiefly that day, and Mr. Beecher and myself were together a good deal.

Q. Well, were not you all four together? A. I don't recollect whether we were all four together or not; I guess very likely we were.

Q. Do you know how you went to the yacht? A. How we went to the yacht?

Mr. Tracy—Yes. A. Went on a steam-tug.

Q. How did you go to the steam-tug? Go in a carriage together? A. No; I think not; I think we went separately; I went for some of the guests; I believe I stopped for Horace Greeley, and did not find him that day. On the whole I guess Mr. Greeley was not along, after all.

Q. Who invited Mr. Beecher and Mr. Tilton to go on that race? A. I did.

Q. You invited them both? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. And did you invite Mr. Greeley also? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Did Mr. Greeley go? A. My impression is, Sir, that I missed him by a minute, and he did not go.

Q. And he did not go? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Was not long? A. I believe not.

Q. How long were you on that regatta? A. May be three or four hours.

Q. Did you dine on board the yacht? A. On board the yacht? No, Sir.

Q. On board the steamer? A. I don't know; I don't remember whether we had any refreshments on board or not, Sir; I think not.

Q. Well, now, I call your attention to another occasion when you went down on some vessel viewing the warehouses; do you remember that? A. I may confound the two, Sir; I do not know:

Q. How? A. I may confound the two; I think it was on the same occasion; there may have been two occasions, and there may have been only one.

Q. If there were two occasions, were Beecher and Tilton together on the two occasions? A. I do not recollect, really, Sir, whether they were or not.

Q. Were they together on the warehouse occasion? A. I really do not recollect; they were together on one occasion that I remember; that is all that I can recollect about.

Q. That is all you remember about? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Well, The Golden Age started prosperously, didn't it?

Judge Neilson—State your impression, as far as you could judge? A. My impression is that it was prosperous. I have a letter from Moses Colt Tyler that I found among my papers—

Q. Well, we are asking you now—

Judge Neilson—He answered that he thought it started prosperously.

The Witness—I am giving my authority for the thought.

Mr. Tracy—Well, we will be contented with your thought.

The Witness—Thank you, Sir.

Q. Well, I will recur to that letter. Now, can you say, on reading that, whether it was the warehouse or the yacht race that it refers to? A. Well, I really cannot—My impression is that it was the yacht race.

Q. It was one or the other, or else both were included at the same time? A. It was one or the other; at all events, there was one occasion, I believe, when Mr. Tilton and Mr. Beecher were together on a—

Q. Do you remember that on coming from the warehouse excursion Mr. Beecher and Mr. Tilton went to your house and dined together? A. I do not recollect that.

Q. Don't recollect whether they did or not? A. No; haven't any recollection about it.

Q. You have no recollection as to how you returned from that excursion—you don't remember whether they did or not? A. I remember that, after the yacht race—I recollect that, after the yacht race, Mr. Beecher and myself were at our house together.

Q. Beecher and yourself? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Wasn't Tilton along? A. I don't recollect.

Q. Don't recollect whether he was or not? A. I do not; no, Sir.

Q. Now, the publication of the life of Victoria Woodhull by Theodore Tilton was in September, '70? A. No; I did not say that.

Q. '71—Was that published in The Golden Age? A. In The Golden Age? I think not, Sir.

Q. Wasn't it published in the supplement to The Golden Age? A. No, Sir.

Q. And then put into a tract—one of The Golden Age tracts?

A. I don't think it was ever published in The Golden Age, Sir.

Q. Have you got a copy of that life? A. I do not think I have.

Mr. Evarts—[to plaintiff's counsel]—We gave you notice to produce it, if you had any such copy.

Mr. Morris—It does not appear that the plaintiff has it.

Mr. Evarts—We would like to have it, if you have got it.

Mr. Morris—We have not got it.

Mr. Evarts—We gave them notice to produce the composition of that life, and they say that they have not got it, so we may have to have a copy of it.

Judge Neilson—The manuscript, I suppose, passed to the printer; it is not often reclaimed.

Mr. Evarts—Very likely; of course.

Mr. Tracy—How large a pamphlet was that? A. A small pamphlet, as I recollect; but I did not read it all.

Q. You read the most of it? A. No, I don't think I did.

Judge Neilson—He answered the other day, I think,

Mr. Tracy—No, not the "Life;" that was another composition.

The Witness—Is there anything to be done with this letter that I hold?

Mr. Tracy—No; I think not. Now, was it after the publication of the "Life of Victoria Woodhull" that this change, that you have already spoken of in your evidence, was made in the subscription to The Golden Age? A. I think it was after the publication of the "Life of Victoria Woodhull."

Q. How long after? A. I don't exactly recollect. Sir.

Q. Well, can't you approximate to it? A. No, I cannot; I shall be able to, I think, before I finish my evidence; I had a letter that fixed the date for which I have made a search and have not found.

Q. Now state in detail what that change was that occurred in The Golden Age after the publication of that Life? A. Mr. Woodruff thought best that Mr.—

Q. Just state what was done; I don't care what you thought, or—

Judge Neilson—So far as you know what was done. You told us the other day as to your own. A. When it came to payment of the subscription—of the last half of the subscription. Mr. Woodruff thought it better that Mr. Woodruff—that Mr. Tilton should have The Golden Age as his own property—become sole proprietor of it; and so the notes were surrendered to Mr. Tilton. When that was, Sir, I don't remember.

Q. And what was received by the subscribers for the half of the subscription already paid in? A. Their notes, I believe—What was received, what?

Q. What did the subscribers receive from Mr. Tilton for the half of the subscription which they had already paid in? A. Nothing that I know of.

Q. They gave that to him? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. In other words, they gave him what they had already paid in, in consideration of his releasing them from the other half of their subscriptions; that was it, was it not? A. He did release them from the other half of their subscriptions.

Q. Well, the one was the consideration for the other, wasn't it? A. I suppose it was.

Q. And that was done by all the subscribers, including yourself? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Now, are you not able to approximate to the time when that occurred? A. I really am not, Mr. Tracy; I hope to fix it for you before my testimony is concluded.

Q. About how soon after the publication was it? A. I really don't remember, Sir; if I recollected anything about it I would state it freely.

Q. Can you tell whether it was before or after the Steinway Hall meeting? A. I don't recollect that.

Q. You say you got a letter that will enable you to fix that date? A. I have had such a letter; yes, Sir.

Mr. Tracy—We will thank you to refresh your memory.

The Witness—Or I have been informed of such a letter—I have seen such a letter.

Mr. Shearman—We have subpoenaed the plaintiff in this case (duces tecum), to produce the original manuscript of the Life of Mrs. Woodhull, and also a printed copy. We have also given him notice to produce—

Judge Neilson—I don't think you can compel him to bring a printed copy. You can buy that, perhaps, at the store. [Laughter.]

Mr. Tracy—Unfortunately, we cannot, your Honor.

Mr. Evarts—It is not a question arising as to whether we can or cannot, at present. We have taken the proper steps to have him do it, and the question is whether he brings it or not.

Mr. Fullerton—He cannot—

Mr. Evarts—Not the printed copy.

Mr. Fullerton—We haven't got any copy.

Mr. Evarts—Then we shall have to refer to other evidence.

Mr. Tracy—Well, you remember that such a Life was issued as one of The Golden Age tracts, do you not?

Mr. Morris—He has not said so.

Judge Neilson—He has said he does not remember that it was.

Mr. Tracy—That it was.

Mr. Pryor—That it was not.

Judge Neilson—Well, what did you say? A. He asked me if it was—

Mr. Beach—Well, I don't see the materiality of that inquiry.

Mr. Tracy—Was, or was not the Life of Victoria Woodhull, written by Theodore Tilton, issued as one of The Golden Age tracts?

Mr. Beach—I object to that question.

Judge Neilson—I think he has answered. Let him answer. Do you know whether it was or not? A. It was issued in a tract, Sir. I don't recollect whether it was one of The Golden Age Tracts or not.

Q. There was a series called "Golden Age Tracts," was there not? A. I don't know that there was a series. There were some Golden Age tracts.

Q. Numbered "Tract 1," "2," "3," and so on? A. I don't recollect that.

Q. Don't recollect that? A. No, Sir.

Q. Well, that was a Golden Age tract, wasn't it; and issued from The Golden Age office. A. I don't know that it was.

Q. The Life of Victoria Woodhull?

Mr. Fullerton—He has said that.

Judge Neilson—He has said that he knows that it was issued in The Golden Age office; he does not know that it was one of The Golden Age tracts.

Mr. Tracy—Now, wasn't the fact of the issuing of that tract—the publication of the Life of Victoria Woodhull—very injurious to The Golden Age?

[Objected to.]

Judge Neilson—Ruled out, Sir.

Q. Wasn't it the occasion of this transaction by which the subscribers asked, or were relieved from their subscription, in consideration of their surrendering the notes.

Mr. Fullerton—That is objected to.

Judge Neilson—I think he can answer that, so far as he himself is concerned, but not as to the others.

Mr. Morris—That is not the question.

Judge Neilson—How was it as to you personally?

Mr. Beach—Well, that is immaterial. How is it material?

Judge Neilson—I don't know. I only assume that it is possibly material in some view.

Mr. Beach—Well, when the question is objected to, your Honor should see the materiality of it.

Judge Neilson—I don't see the materiality of it.

Mr. Beach—Or see the mode in which it can be connected with the trial as material. What the publication of the Life of Victoria Woodhull has to do with the inquiry now before your Honor, we are not able to perceive.

Mr. Tracy—I will ask you one other question.

Mr. Evarts—The Judge says he may answer this question.

Judge Neilson—I rule that he may answer as far as he is personally concerned, assuming that he cannot answer as to the motives of the other persons. I take an exception to that.

Mr. Evarts—Well, let us have your answer? A. It did not have any effect upon me, Sir.

Mr. Tracy—That was not the occasion of it, then, so far as you were concerned? A. No, Sir.

Judge Neilson—You lose time by repeating; that don't help it.

Mr. Tracy—His answer was that it did not have any effect upon him.

Judge Neilson—Well, that is conclusive; that ends the inquiry; go on.

Mr. Tracy—I ask another question. What was the cause of your retiring or surrendering your subscription and giving back the note?

Mr. Fullerton—I object to it.

Mr. Evarts—Why?

Mr. Fullerton—Why, because it is not of importance.

Judge Neilson—I think he may answer it.

Mr. Fullerton—It does seem to me there ought to be some appearance—

Judge Neilson—I think there ought to be some limit, but still I think he may answer that.

Mr. Fullerton—Would your Honor ask the counsel to point out some application that can be made of that testimony to his case, if they know: if they don't know, why that will excuse them. It certainly seems to me as irrelevant as anything can possibly be.

Judge Neilson—Mr. Tracy, in view of the objection, state how you deem it material, please?

Mr. Tracy—I deem it material to show, first, the relations of this witness to the plaintiff; to show his knowledge of the disaster that came upon the plaintiff at this time, and to show the materiality of this fact in regard to another piece of evidence which the plaintiff has introduced here preliminary to a question which I am about to ask the witness.

Judge Neilson—Well, pass to that question, perhaps that will enlighten us.

Mr. Evarts—Does your Honor rule out the question?

Judge Neilson—At present, as immaterial.

Mr. Evarts—Then, your Honor, we except to the ruling.

Mr. Tracy—Do you remember the publication of Mr. Tilton, called "Sir Marmaduke's Musings?" A. Yes, Sir.

Q. When was that published—the poem? A. I forget the date, just at the moment.

Q. Can't you fix about the time? A. It is in evidence, the paper, Sir; I don't remember the date; there are too many dates.

Mr. Evarts—Perhaps the date has been given in evidence already.

The Witness—Yes, the date is there.

Judge Neilson—The paper—but the most difficult thing, of course, for the witness to remember, is dates.

Mr. Tracy—It is November 1st, I believe.

Judge Neilson—It is in the book, isn't it?

Mr. Tracy—November 1st, 1871.

Mr. Tracy—Now, was it published about that time, according to your recollection? A. I don't remember the date; I saw it about the time it was published, whatever that date was.

Q. Well, do you recollect now that it was in the Fall of 1871, about November? A. I don't recollect that, Sir; but I assume that to be the date.

MORE ABOUT THE WOODHULL BIOGRAPHY.

Q. Well, was it after the publication of the Life of Victoria Woodhull? A. I don't recollect that.

Q. Was it after this settlement that was made in regard to the subscriptions for The Golden Age? A. I don't recollect that.

Q. Now, Mr. Moulton, don't you know the fact from Mr. Tilton that the publication of the Life of Victoria Woodhull was disastrous to him and his enterprise—his newspaper enterprise? A. Will you repeat the question?

Q. Don't you know from Mr. Tilton that the publication of the Life of Victoria Woodhull, in September, 1871, was disastrous to him and his newspaper enterprise? A. He has never told me that.

Q. He has never told you that? A. No, Sir.

Q. Has he ever talked with you on the subject of the effect that the publication of that Life had upon the prosperity of The Golden Age? A. I talked with him about it; he didn't with me at the time.

Q. You talked with him but he did not with you? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Tell us what you talked to him? A. I told him that I thought he ought not to have published it.

Q. Well, why? A. Well, I told him that it seemed—so many statements in it seemed extravagant to me—many statements in it seemed extravagant; I did not think it was a necessary work to do; and his reply to that—his reply to that—when I said that he didn't talk to me, I mean that he didn't open the subject; I opened the subject of the conversation; his reply to me was, that he did it as a friendly act to Mrs. Woodruff from the manuscripts furnished him by her husband; that it was simply a revision by him, but that—

Mr. Tracy—Well, now, Mr. Moulton—

Mr. Beach (to Mr. Tracy)—Wait! wait! wait!

Judge Neilson—Let him state the conversation, please.

Mr. Tracy—I did not ask him for the conversation.

Judge Neilson—Go on, Sir.

Mr. Evarts—Let us get it.

The Witness—That it was simply a revision of the manuscript of—of her husband, and that he thought that people would detect his handiwork in it, and therefore he thought he would put his name to it, and I told him that I didn't think that that was a very good reason. He said he would take the responsibility of it, and that was the sum and substance of it, with the exception—and he said it was a friendly act; he said it was a friendly act, and right, in the interest of the repression of the scandal against Mr. Beecher, his wife, and himself; it was in the interest of his family and Mr. Beecher that he had done it, and if he had made a mistake, why that was all there was of it.

Q. Anything more? A. No; I don't remember anything more.

Q. Well now, do you recollect that he ever talked to you about it? A. I have just given—

Q. Do you now? A. I have just given the conversation.

Q. You now do recollect that he talked with you on the subject of that life? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Now, did he talk to you about the effect that it had on him and the effect that it had on his newspaper? A. No.

Q. He did not? A. No.

Q. Did you talk to him on that subject? A. I told him that I thought the effect of it would be disastrous upon the paper.

Q. What did he say to that? A. I don't recollect his reply to that.

Q. Did he make any at all? A. He may have made it, but I do not recollect it, Sir.

Q. Do you know, as a matter of fact, what the effect was upon the paper?

Mr. Beach—No, as a matter of fact?

Mr. Tracy—Yes, sir; that is the question. Do you know, as a matter of fact, what the effect of that publication was upon the paper?

Mr. Beach—I understand this question, if your Honor please, not as calling for a judgment or opinion of the witness, but that he is asked personal knowledge of a fact of that character.

Mr. Evarts—It is not necessary to explain; we would like to have an answer.

Mr. Beach—It is; yes, Sir. I want the witness to understand what it calls for. I am regular and I am in order; and I am not to be subdued by this objection. I submit that it is the duty of the Court to instruct a witness when requested by counsel that the interrogatory put calls for his personal knowledge of the fact as to the effect produced by that publication on The Golden Age.

Judge Neilson—I think that is so.

Mr. Evarts—I submit, if your Honor please, it is time enough to appeal to the Court to take a witness from the hands of the cross-examining counsel to explain to him when the witness feels the need of explanation, and not when the counsel does. [Laughter.]

Mr. Beach—It is not when the counsel feels or the witness feels. If the question was intended, or is understood, as calling for the opinion or judgment of the witness, then, of course, we shall object to it, and it is only for the purpose of having the question understood by your Honor and the witness that the suggestion is made.

Mr. Evarts—Now we would like to have an answer.

[Question read by THE TRIBUNE stenographer.] The Witness—Of what? That was not all the question, was it?

Mr. Tracy—It seems so. That is what he has read to you.

Judge Neilson—It is a peculiar question and requires some consideration.

The Witness—Will you read the question again, Mr. Stenographer?

[Question again read.]

The Witness—Of what?

Mr. Tracy—Of the publication? A. Of the publication? I don't know, as a matter of fact.

Q. What it was? A. No.

Q. You were a subscriber at the time? A. I took the paper at the time.

Q. I mean a subscriber to the fund at that time? A. Subscriber to the fund? Yes, Sir.

Q. Interested in that enterprise? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. By your subscription? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. And how long did you remain so interested after that publication? A. I don't recollect, Sir.

Judge Neilson—We have had that; we have been over that.

Mr. Tracy—I beg your Honor's pardon, we have not had the time.

Mr. Beach—He told you repeatedly that he could not tell you the time.

Q. Did you remain a week after that? A. I don't recollect, Sir, how long I remained.

Q. Will you swear that you remained a week after that publication? A. I cannot fix the date at all; I cannot recollect anything about it.

Q. Did you go out at the same time the other people did? A. I did.

Q. Now, what was the occasion of your going out? A. To give to Mr. Tilton, in accordance with Mr. Woodruff's view of the case, the sole proprietorship of the paper. As far as I am concerned, that was the reason.

Q. And upon what was that resolution taken to give to Mr.

Tilton the amount of subscription already paid into that paper?
A. Will you ask the question again?

Q. Upon what was that resolution to give to Mr. Tilton the amount of subscriptions already paid in in that paper taken?

Mr. Morris—He has answered that question two or three times.

Mr. Tracy—The question has not been put before. He may have answered it.

Mr. Morris—Yes, he has. He said it was the suggestion—

Mr. Evarts—Now, we don't want that.

Judge Neilson—Will the audience please be quiet one moment. Excuse me, Mr. Evarts, I understand this perfectly. I don't need any instructions about it.

Mr. Evarts—If your Honor please—

Judge Neilson—You generally rise for the purpose of instructing the Court. I don't happen just now to need that.

Mr. Evarts—I don't rise for that purpose now, and I don't know that I ever did, except to call the Court's attention to what I supposed—

Judge Neilson—I have had the pleasure to so understand it when you did arise before; I think the answer to this question may be given, although it has been answered already.

[Question read by THE TRIBUNE stenographer.]

The Witness—Mr. Woodruff said that he thought it would be better for Theodore Tilton to be sole proprietor of the paper; so I—

Q. Upon what occasion did he say that? What was the occasion of his saying that, do you know? A. I suppose it was at a time when the paper needed the further subscriptions that were called for.

Q. Called for the further subscription? A. I think it was.

Q. And the subscribers were not going to pay them? A. I don't know anything about that.

Q. How would it have been with yours? A. I should have paid mine.

Q. If the others had not? A. If the others had not.

Q. Why didn't you? A. For the reason that I have stated.

Q. Was it not the suggestion of Mr. Woodruff that the subscribers should not pay any more to that enterprise? A. I didn't so understand it.

Q. You did not so understand it? A. No, Sir; not to me.

Q. That was the effect of the suggestion when it was carried out.

Judge Neilson—That we know. We don't need to illustrate that.

Q. You say the object of this was to make Mr. Tilton sole proprietor of that paper. Was he not the sole proprietor of it already? A. I didn't consider him the sole proprietor of it.

Q. You did not? A. No, Sir.

Q. In whose name was that property? A. Theodore Tilton's, I suppose.

Q. Who else had any interest in its profits but Theodore Tilton? A. I don't know that anybody did.

Q. Or its losses? A. I should think that the subscribers did. If The Golden Age was a success I had that interest in it, as far as I was concerned.

Q. Had you had the success of Mr. Tilton's ability to pay? A. No, Sir, the success of the paper.

Q. Do you say that your subscription—that Theodore Tilton's notes were payable on condition that the paper was a success? A. Yes, sir; I think that was the phraseology, as far as I recollect.

Judge Neilson—That fact you stated before.

Mr. Tracy—I had reference to my cross-examination.

Judge Neilson—The comment was unnecessary. Interrogate the witness, but don't make observations. I take it that you, as a lawyer, would very likely think, in equity, that persons who did contribute to this fund would have an equitable interest in that establishment—could some day close it up—and upon this frame a bill to that effect, but this witness could not tell you how it is.

Mr. Evarts—It is purely a question of fact; and not of law. The question is whether they had any participation in the profits of this enterprise or its losses.

Judge Neilson—They had none except their money.

Mr. Evarts—I believe it is very clear that if the affair was not prosperous Mr. Tilton would not be able to pay them. I suppose it is very clear. The Court, I think, has got it wrong.

Judge Neilson—Go on, Mr. Tracy.

Q. Will you tell us on what conditions those notes were payable, or to be payable? A. Notes that Mr. Tilton gave to the subscribers, you mean?

Q. Yes, Sir. A. I think payable on the success of The Golden Age.

Q. Who was to determine that question?

Mr. Beach—I object to the form of that question.

Judge Neilson—[To the witness.]—Is the form of the note expressed?

The Witness—I don't recollect the precise expression, your Honor.

Mr. Tracy—That was the substance of it? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. These notes were not to be paid except in case The Golden Age was a success?

Mr. Beach—That is a matter of reason.

Q. Was not that the fact?

Mr. Fullerton—That has been stated over and over again.

Judge Neilson—[To the witness.] Is that so, that the notes were not to be paid except in case The Golden Age was a success? A. Unless The Golden Age was a success they were not to be payable.

Q. That you so understood? A. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Tracy—Now, he has answered the question.

Mr. Morris—He answered it before four or five times.

Mr. Tracy—Did you ever talk with Theodore Tilton about the publication of the poem entitled "Sir Marmaduke's Musings," before it was published? Did you know it until you read it in the publication? A. I think not.

Q. How long after the publication of this Life was the Steinway Hall meeting? A. I don't recollect the date of the Steinway Hall meeting.

Q. It is said to be November 20th. Do you recollect it was in November? A. November 24th of what year?

Q. 1871? A. I think it was in November, 1871.

Q. You had made the acquaintance of Victoria Woodhull some time in the Spring previous, you say? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. How often had you seen her from the Spring until the Steinway Hall meeting?

Mr. Beach—I think Judge Porter went over that question.

Judge Neilson—I think he did, too.

Mr. Tracy—If he asked that question, I will not ask it again.

Mr. Beach—He asked numerous questions on that subject.

Mr. Tracy—He did ask some questions on that subject—some general questions.

Mr. Beach—They were very specific questions. I think you are incorrect. If you are going to abandon that line of examination, very well; but if not, I insist it is a mere repetition.

Judge Neilson—Counsel ought not to repeat, and I trust he will not repeat, if he can avoid it.

Q. How often was Victoria Woodhull at your house during the year 1871? A. Well, perhaps four or five times.

Q. How often did she dine at your house?

Mr. Fullerton—This has all been gone over.

Judge Neilson—Not as to dining, I guess.

Mr. Fullerton—Yes, your Honor; it has been fully gone over.

By Judge Neilson—Do you recollect how often she dined with you, presuming she did dine with you?

Mr. Tracy—I think he said once to me that she did dine with him.

Judge Neilson—How often did she dine with you? A. I don't recollect how many times; I guess two or three times.

Mr. Tracy—Can you state more definitely than that? A. No, Sir.

Q. Did she meet your wife when she came there? A. Yes, she did.

Q. Did you urge your wife to make her acquaintance and become a friend of hers? A. I did become friendly to her.

Q. How often was she there in 1872 before you parted company with her? A. I don't recollect.

Q. Well, can you approximate to it? A. No, Sir.

Q. Can you not tell about how often she was there in 1872?

A. No, Sir, I don't recollect that she was there in 1872.

Q. Do you mean to say you don't recollect whether she was there at all? A. In 1872?

Q. I am content with that answer if that is your answer. When did you see her last? A. I forget the date exactly. It was in the Spring of 1872, I think.

Q. The Spring of 1872? A. I think so; yes, Sir.

Q. Can you fix about the date? A. I think it was in April; I won't be certain about that. I answered Judge Porter that question.

Q. Did you see her last in company with Theodore Tilton? A. I think Theodore Tilton was with me on that occasion.

Mr. Morris—Judge Porter went minutely over all this.

The Witness—Yes, Sir, he did.

Mr. Morris—All these questions were asked over and over again. Is it in order that they may come in to-morrow and go over this again, and so continue it?

Mr. Tracy—I am not repeating questions I asked.

Mr. Morris—Yes, but you are repeating questions your associate asked; the same questions and the same subject were gone over minutely by Judge Porter.

Judge Neilson—[To Mr. Tracy]: You are about through with that?

Mr. Tracy—I am not, Sir.

Mr. Morris—We object. We say this subject was gone over minutely by Judge Porter, and exhausted by him.

Mr. Beach—Not only that, but there was an offensive particularity in the questions put by Judge Porter on this subject, conveying the most indecorous implication.

Mr. Evarts—That does not bear on this question.

Mr. Beach—Yes, Sir; it does.

Mr. Fullerton—You ought to have a suggestion on this subject, whether you are reexamining him on the subject Judge Porter went over.

Mr. Morris—We appeal to the stenographer's minutes, and say he is going over the same ground that has been gone over already.

Judge Neilson—Mr. Shearman, have you the book here?

Mr. Evarts—Yes, Sir; we will look.

Mr. Tracy—The question is whether he parted with her in company with Theodore Tilton.

Judge Neilson—That mere circumstance would not prevent you from reiterating on the general subject.

Mr. Tracy—Judge Porter didn't examine in detail on this subject any more than he did on any other that I am aware of.

Judge Neilson—You have the report before you. Can you find it?

Mr. Shearman—It will take some time?

Mr. Beach—Yes, Sir, it will take some time; it is quite protracted.

Mr. Shearman—We will state the substance of it.

Mr. Fullerton—I can state it from memory.

Mr. Evarts—We will look at it to see?

Judge Neilson—Gen. Tracy, pass that subject, and we will look at that in the mean time.

Mr. Beach—Well, perhaps the next question will not be objectionable.

Mr. Shearman—Mr. Tracy suggests to me it was not covered by Judge Porter's examination.

Mr. Tracy—My last question was preliminary to the question I am now about to put. Did you and Mr. Tilton have any difficulty with her at the time you last saw her? A. I don't recollect that we did.

Q. Was it the occasion of the article known as "Tit for Tat" that you saw her at that time? A. I don't recollect any such article at that time.

Q. You don't recollect any such article at that time? A. No, Sir, not at that time.

Q. Do you recollect that article called "Tit for Tat?" A. I never saw such an article.

Q. You never were present at any interview between Mr. Tilton and Mrs. Victoria Woodhull when that was the subject of conversation? A. No, Sir; not that I recollect of.

Mr. Tracy—Then that answers this question on that subject.

Mr. Fullerton—I suppose so.

Q. Did you ever see that article called "Tit for Tat?"

Mr. Fullerton—He said twice he never did.

Mr. Tracy—I don't remember that.

Mr. Fullerton—Then I understand we adjourn, if you don't remember that.

Judge Neilson—No, we have half an hour yet; we lost half an hour this morning.

Mr. Fullerton—We lost a great deal since.

Mr. Tracy—I have reference to an article called "Tit for Tat."

Mr. Evarts—It is 4 o'clock.

Mr. Tracy—I will ask this question now. [To the witness]: Did you ever hear of an article from Mr. Tilton, which Mrs. Victoria Woodhull proposed to publish, called "Tit for Tat?" A. I don't recollect of ever having heard of it from Mr. Tilton.

Q. Did you ever hear from Mr. Tilton of an article proposed to be published by Mrs. Woodhull, which she sent around for private circulation, threatening to publish in it the names of certain ladies that were mentioned? A. Did I ever hear of that article?

Q. Yes, Sir, from Mr. Tilton? A. I don't recollect that I ever heard of it from Mr. Tilton.

Q. And you never had any interview with Mrs. Woodhull on the subject of such an article? A. I don't recollect that I ever did.

Q. Was the last interview that you had with her friendly? A. It was, as far as I was concerned, a friendly interview.

Q. Was it, as far as she was concerned? A. Yes, Sir; I think it was.

Q. Was it also friendly on the part of Mr. Tilton? A. I don't recollect that it was unfriendly.

Judge Neilson [addressing the Jury]—Gentlemen, we will now adjourn. Please be in your places by eleven o'clock to-morrow morning.

The Witness—Can I step down, your Honor?

Judge Neilson—Yes, Sir. I wish the witnesses and counsel would be here punctually at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. Mallison—The Court now stands adjourned until to-morrow morning. The counsel and witnesses are respectfully requested to be punctual at that hour.

The Court thereupon adjourned until 11 o'clock Friday.

TENTH DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

MORE QUESTIONS TO THE FIRST WITNESS.

NUMEROUS WRANGLES BETWEEN THE LAWYERS—

THE ARBITRATION PROCEEDINGS BETWEEN MR.

TILTON AND MR. BOWEN SIFTED—ATTEMPT TO #### CONNECT THE PLAINTIFF WITH FREE LOVE DOC-

TRINES—THE TRIPARTITE COVENANT TAKEN UP

—THE CROSS-EXAMINATION NOT CONCLUDED.

Friday, Jan. 23, was perhaps the least eventful day of the great trial. There was no sensation for the entertainment of the audience, and there were no opportunities for brilliant and effective repartee by counsel on either side. The proceedings of four hours bristled with technicalities, and the war of words was almost entirely waged in side issues.

The arguments of the lawyers occupied most of the time of the Court, and the success seemed equally divided. The subject upon which Mr. Moulton was first questioned was the business connection between Mr. Tilton and Henry C. Bowen, principally in regard to the disruption of their relations, and the settlement of the controversy by arbitration. During his examination regarding the latter point the witness seemed anxious to offer some bit of evidence which Mr. Tracy, with equal anxiety, tried to suppress. However, when Mr. Moulton was finally asked what the result of the arbitration was, he replied, "The payment of $7,000 by Mr. Bowen; but," he added quickly, and before Mr. Tracy could check him, "Mr. Bowen had offered $5,000 before the decision of the arbitrators." By the amused glances exchanged by the counsel of Mr. Tilton, it was apparent that they believed that Mr. Moulton's gratuitous information had dulled the point of their opponents' weapon.

The tripartite agreement was introduced as evidence by Mr. Evarts, who read the document with great seriousness and emphasis, and invested the covenant with a solemnity which a casual reading would not discover. This is the first time that the original agreement has appeared in court. It is written on ordinary legal-cap, and the name of Mr. Tilton is so blotted as to be almost unrecognizable.

The biography of Victoria Woodhull was shown by Mr. Evarts, who desired to place it in evidence. He held it up and with a voice slightly touched by sarcasm he read the title page from the beginning to the end, taking pains to show that it was one of "The Golden Age Tracts." Judge Neilson ruled it out immediately, and Mr. Evarts in an address of nearly 10 minutes endeavored to show that the book identified Mr. Tilton with Mrs. Woodhull's doctrines regarding the marriage relation. But Judge Beach repudiated that idea, and said, moreover, that no proof had been presented that Mrs. Woodhull was a believer in free love. Mr. Evarts effectually demolished the latter argument by producing a newspaper article put in evidence by Mr. Beach himself, in which Mrs. Woodhull avowed herself to be a free lover. But Judge Neilson would not change his original decision, saying that the matter was not pertinent, and adding, "Suppose Mr. Tilton had written a life of Mr. Bowen?" Mr. Tilton, with an involuntary shake of the head, expressed his opinion of such a supposition.

At the afternoon session the witness was examined regarding Mr. Tilton's sources of income.

Mr. Moulton was asked at this point to give the name of a person who had given money to him for Mr. Tilton. The witness appealed to the Court that he be not obliged to answer, and a long contest followed as to the propriety and justice of the admission of the names of outside persons. Judge Neilson left it to the judgment of the defendant's counsel whether they would demand the name, but he so couched his language that it would have been exceedingly discourteous had the counsel insisted on revealing the name, and accordingly it was not brought out. A sharp cross-examination of an hour followed the last argument, in which at times Mr. Tracy became very aggressive in his questions, and the witness rather aggravating in his replies. A vigorous attempt was made to cause a part of the statement of the scandal in Woodhull and Claflin's Weekly to be read in evidence, but so strongly was the motion opposed by Messrs. Beach and Fullerton, and so tenaciously did they contest every point, that that part of the examination was temporarily abandoned by the defense.

At 10 minutes after 4 o'clock Mr. Tracy paused and suggested that it was time to adjourn. Judge Neilson was quick in expressing his disapproval of continuing the cross-examination of Mr. Moulton next week. Professional and judicial reputation was at stake, he said. The witness had already been on the stand four and a half days. Mr. Moulton smiled, and said he was willing to continue all night, if necessary. The lawyers carried their point, and the Court adjourned until 11 a. m. on Monday.

TRIAL SCENES.

If there were anything which would be likely to diminish the number of spectators attendant daily upon the Brooklyn suit, the disagreeable condition of the weather on Friday might have been expected to have that result. Slippery, sloppy sidewalks and a drizzling rain-storm, varied at intervals by a fall of hail, were made matters of minor import by those who determined to witness for themselves the progress of the great trial. Considerations of personal comfort, wet feet, the risks of all the ills that flesh might fall heir to through exposure to the weather, were overborne by the strained eagerness of curiosity. Hence the court-room was crowded as usual for a full half hour before the opening of the proceedings. The corridor running by the door of the room was jammed with the same noisy crowd noticed upon previous days. Why they were there is one of those things past finding out. There was nothing for them to see but the closed doors of the court-room and two stalwart but shivering officers standing guard. There was nothing for them to hear but occasionally the faint murmur of lawyers' voices. Yet the crowd stood for hours upon the cold pavement, waiting Micawber-like for something to turn up. Many of these people came from distant parts of the city, and some from other States. One old man, apparently over three score and ten, was very much depressed in spirits because he was unable to obtain admission. Taking by the hand a reporter who was about to enter the court-room, the aged man said with tears in his eyes that he had come all the way from Elizabeth, New-Jersey, to see the trial. "And," he added, "if I don't get in thar and get one look at Henry Ward Beecher, my wife Sairy will fret and scold dreadfully."

The examination on Friday was rather tedious, and the only thing which relieved the dullness of the proceedings was an occasional wrangle between counsel. At times Mr. Beecher leaned back in his chair with a weary expression upon his ruddy countenance, and from 3 o'clock until 4 he appeared to sleep soundly. Mrs. Beecher seemed tired too, and as for Moulton he yawned frequently, and moved about uneasily in his chair. Shortly after the recess a juror left the court-room for a few moments, and the witness drew a sigh of relief. The air in the room was foul and heavy, and this may account for the sleepy appearance of the jurymen. Indeed, the counsel themselves seemed under some soporific influence. In the gallery, several individuals who followed the opening of proceedings with interest, slumbered sweetly in the afternoon. The Judge himself seemed drowsy. At recess, Mr. Moulton and Mr. Evarts held a brief conversation. That it was entirely of a friendly character was apparent from the smiling way in which they addressed each other. This incident for a time prevented the spectators from falling into dreamy unconsciousness, and they were accordingly grateful.

Since Monday several extravagantly dressed women have applied for seats in court without success, and even on Friday, disagreeable as the day was, two or three women tried to obtain entrance. Mrs. Shearman, Mrs. Tilton, Mrs. Beecher, and Mrs. Field were the only ladies admitted.

Judge Henry M. Moore occupied a seat beside Judge Neilson in the afternoon. Francis B. Carpenter sat near Theodore Tilton, and Henry M. Cleveland, a member of the Plymouth Church Investigating Committee, was seated by the side of Mrs. Beecher during the morning session. The Hon. Henry C. Murphy, the Hon. H. W. Slocum, and the Hon. John Oakey were in their accustomed places.

THE PROCEEDINGS.

Ex-Judge Porter is still absent from the Court. Gen. Tracy took up the cross-examination of Mr. Moulton on Friday, Jan. 22, with reference to Woodhull's relations with Mr. Beecher and Mr. Tilton. The next subject touched in the cross-questioning, was Tilton's contracts with Bowen. The day was about the duldest of the trial thus far.

WOODHULL'S STEINWAY HALL LECTURE.

Francis D. Moulton was recalled, and the cross-examination resumed.

Judge Neilson—I wish, before we commence, to ask the audience to be quiet. This one request made now, well understood, will save the necessity of saying anything about it all day. Our time is very precious; every interruption wastes time.

Mr. Tracy—Mr. Moulton, did you advise the defendant to preside for Mrs. Woodhull at the Steinway Hall meeting? A. I don't think I did, Sir.

Q. Were you furnished with her speech in print before the meeting? A. I was not, Sir.

Q. Did you have it in your possession before that time? A. I did not, Sir.

Q. Did you ever see it before that? A. I did not, Sir.

Q. Was Mr. Tilton furnished with it in your presence? A. Never.

Q. Did you see it in manuscript? A. Never.

Q. Was it furnished to Mr. Tilton in your presence in manuscript? A. Never.

Q. Was any paper furnished him which was said to be her speech that she was to deliver at the Steinway Hall meeting? A. In my presence, Sir?

Q. Yes, Sir. A. Never.

Q. Did you ever see it in Mr. Tilton's presence? A. I never did.

Q. In Mr. Tilton's possession? A. I never did.

Q. Were you ever present when Mrs. Woodhull and yourself and Tilton were present, when Mr. Tilton urged Mr. Beecher to preside at the Steinway Hall meeting? A. I don't recollect, Sir, that I ever heard Mr. Tilton urge Mr. Beecher to preside. I think I have a letter, Gen. Tracy, from Mrs. Woodhull to Mr. Beecher on that subject.

Q. That has been introduced, hasn't it? A. I don't know whether it has or not.

Mr. Tracy—I think it has; has it not, Mr. Beach?

Mr. Beach—The letter of Mr. Beecher in answer to it, or proposed letter, has been introduced.

The Witness—It is a proposed answer to another letter, Mr. Beach.

Q. Did you and Mr. Tilton ever take Mrs. Woodhull into the presence of Mr. Beecher and attempt—undertake to persuade him to preside at that meeting? A. Will you ask the question again, Gen. Tracy?

Mr. Tracy—Will the stenographer read the question?

THE TRIBUNE stenographer repeated the question.

A. No, Sir; I don't remember any such occasion as that.

Q. Did you ever go into his presence together, you three, for that purpose? A. I don't recollect whether we three went, Mr. Tracy, but I recollect that Mrs. Woodhull and myself were in Mr. Beecher's presence.

Q. Well, I am talking about you and Mr. Tilton and Mrs. Woodhull. Did you ever hear Mr. Tilton, in the presence of yourself and Mrs. Woodhull, say to Mr. Beecher, "Mr. Beecher, some day you have got to fall. Go and introduce this woman and win the radicals of the country and it will break your fall?" A. I don't remember ever having heard that, Sir.

A. You were never present at any such interview, to your knowledge? A. No, Sir.

Q. Were you present at the Steinway Hall meeting? A. I was; yes, Sir.

Q. Did you go there in company with Mrs. Tilton? A. I did.

Q. Did Mr. Tilton preside? A. He introduced Mrs. Woodhull.

Q. Well, did he preside? A. To that extent.

Q. Who occupied the chair? A. I think he did, Sir. Is that what you mean by presiding?

Q. I leave that for you to determine what you mean by presiding. A. I want to answer your question properly, that is all. I beg pardon, Sir.

Q. Did he occupy the chair and introduce Mrs. Woodhull on that occasion? A. He introduced Mrs. Woodhull and then occupied the chair afterwards. [Laughter.]

Q. Well, he did not take the chair before introducing Mrs. Woodhull? A. I remember his walking to the front of the platform with his overcoat in his hand, and introducing her. That is my recollection of it. I am giving it as I remember it.

Q. Did you listen to her speech that night? A. To almost all of it. I don't know that I heard the whole of it.

Q. What was the subject of that speech? A. I don't recollect, Sir, what the subject was. I don't recollect what she called the title of her speech.

Q. Well, you heard it? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Don't you remember on what subject it was, what subject she discussed in that speech? A. Well, I cannot recollect, Sir, definitely enough to state it accurately.

Q. Can't you state the point of the speech. A. It was the relation of man to woman, I guess, and woman to man, as near as I can state it, and woman to society.

Q. Wasn't it on the marriage relation? A. I really don't recollect, Sir, whether that was the title or not.

Q. I didn't ask you about the title. A. You asked me what the speech was on, whether it was on the marriage relation.

Q. Yes; I asked you whether the subject of her speech was not the marriage relation? A. That, I say, I cannot tell you.

Q. You can't tell that? A. No, Sir.

Judge Neilson—I think you have gone far enough with that, Mr. Tracy.

Q. Was it not what is called the doctrines of free love?

Judge Neilson—General, do you wish to go into that?

Mr. Tracy—I do.

Judge Neilson—If you do, I will spend all day, but I don't think it is pertinent.

Mr. Tracy—We would not have asked the question unless we had thought it pertinent.

Judge Neilson—I think it is not, Sir.

Mr. Tracy—We bow to the opinion of the Court.

Judge Neilson—My view is simply this: if Mr. Tilton, before he introduced this speaker, knew what the speech was, had seen it, and had been furnished with it, and then introduced her, he would be responsible for what was said; but if he did not know what the subject was, the mere fact of his introducing the speaker does not make him responsible for what followed; it does not affect it. That is my view of it.

Mr. Tracy—We can only show one fact at a time, your Honor. We show that he introduced her, and heard the speech. Then we may show by other witnesses that he knew what the speech was to be before it was delivered.

Judge Neilson—When you can do that, resume this subject.

Mr. Tracy—And recall this witness?

Judge Neilson—Any way you please.

Mr. Tracy—We desire to have this question answered now.

Judge Neilson—I rule it out.

Mr. Tracy—Your Honor will note our exception.

Mr. Evarts—Will the stenographer read the question?

THE TRIBUNE stenographer read the question as follows:

"Q. Was it not on what is called the doctrines of free love?"

Mr. Evarts—Is that objected to on the other side?

Judge Neilson—I do not understand it is. I objected to it.

Mr. Evarts—Your Honor will note our exception.

Judge Neilson—I will

Mr. Evarts—Your Honor directs it not to be answered?

Judge Neilson—I do.

Mr. Evarts—And we except.

Mr. Tracy—Do you know whether the friendly relations between Mr. Tilton and Mrs. Woodhull continued after that speech? A. I think they did, Sir. What was the date of the speech, Sir? What was the date of the Woodhull speech, if you please?

Q. Nov. 20th, 1871? A. Yes.

Q. Did your friendly relations with Mrs. Woodhull continue after that speech? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Did you have her at your house after that speech? A. I don't recollect.

Q. You don't recollect? A. No.

Q. Don't you recollect that you did not? A. I have not any recollection about it, Sir.

Q. You speak of a day when Mrs. Woodhull was at your house, when the subject of her speech was talked of. Was Mr. Tilton present at your house on that day? A. He was there, I think, Sir.

Q. With her? A. I don't remember whether he was with her or not, Sir.

Q. Was he in the house and in her presence that day? A. I think he saw her on that day; yes, Sir?

Q. And conversed with her? A. I think he did; yes, Sir.

Q. Do you know whether he went away with her? A. I don't recollect that, Sir.

Mr. Tracy—Now I renew the question that I put before.

Judge Neilson—He may answer it now. [To the stenographer.] Read the question.

THE TRIBUNE stenographer read the question, as follows: "Was it not on what was called the doctrines of free love?" A. I don't know precisely the doctrines of free love, and therefore I cannot answer that question. I should suppose that the public construed it so, Sir, if you will allow that.

Q. Yes; that is enough. You mean by the public, the people who heard it, don't you?

Mr. Beach—Well, we don't want his supposition as to what others construed it.

Mr. Evarts—Well, that is enough.

Judge Neilson—That will answer.

TILTON'S TROUBLE WITH BOWEN.

Q. You have stated that you was Mrs. Moulton's attorney for the collection of the Bowen claim.

Mr. Beach—Mr. Tilton's attorney, I suppose you mean?

Mr. Tracy—Mr. Tilton's attorney for the collection of the Bowen claim.

Mr. Beach—He didn't state that. He said he had that authority.

Mr. Morris—The authority has been introduced, and he said that he had the authority.

Mr. Tracy—And the power of attorney is in evidence, isn't it?

The Witness—No, Sir.

Mr. Morris—He said he didn't know whether you would consider it an attorney or not.

Mr. Tracy—I mean the attorney in fact.

Judge Neilson—The very question was put to him before and he was troubled about the word "attorney."

Mr. Tracy—Well, agent, then.

The Witness—Mr. Tilton authorized me—which is the fact—generally to settle his claim with Mr. Bowen.

Q. Did you undertake the charge? A. Yes, Sir; I did.

Q. To collect that claim of Mr. Bowen? A. Yes, Sir; I did.

Q. When did he authorize you first? A. About January 1st or 2d; January 1st, I think. The letter will show, Sir.

Q. And in pursuance of that authority did you see and have an interview with Mr. Bowen? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Did you present Mr. Tilton's claim to him? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. What amount did you demand of him? A. I think it was something like $7,000.

Q. What was his answer to the claim when you presented it?

Mr. Fullerton—I don't think that is material, Sir.

Judge Neilson—As they have a right to ask whether it was presented, I think they may take the answer that Mr. Bowen made as a part of the same thing. It is, I believe, very immaterial.

Mr. Fullerton—Of course, and we may follow it up by showing that it was a good claim and all paid for.

Mr. Evarts—The materiality, your Honor will see, will depend upon what the answer was.

Mr. Tracy—What was his answer to the claim? A. He said he didn't think he owed Mr. Tilton any money, and that he would arbitrate if I thought he did.

Q. Why?

Mr. Evarts—Did he say?

Mr. Tracy—Did he say why he didn't think he owed Mr. Tilton any money?

Mr. Beach—Are those declarations to be permitted, Sir?

Judge Neilson—We took them the other day, and this same answer.

Mr. Beach—What if we did, Sir? That is another reason why it should not be received to-day. But I submit to your Honor that it is entirely immaterial what Mr. Bowen may have said in regard to the reasons why he resisted that claim.

Judge Neilson—I think so, too.

Mr. Evarts—Our view, if your Honor please, is simply this: that Mr. Tilton, having put Mr. Moulton as his representative in the prosecution—presentation, prosecution, negotiation and settlement of that claim, what passed between Mr. Bowen and the other side and this witness is as if it passed between Mr. Bowen and Mr. Tilton; and that we have the same right to show it as if the conversation was between Mr. Bowen and Mr. Tilton.

Judge Neilson—So far as it relates —

Mr. Evarts—So far as it relates to the subject. That is our view, and if your Honor excludes that view as suitable, then it comes under some other rule of law; but that is our proposition.

Judge Neilson—I think you may answer that.

Mr. Fullerton—Are we to try the merits of that controversy? The validity of that claim did not depend at all upon what Mr. Bowen said of it. Are we to go into the trial of that claim over again?

Judge Neilson—Of course it is going to the extreme. Mr. Bowen might say many things that a gentleman ought not to say on being presented with that claim.

Mr. Fullerton—Well, your Honor, they will contend upon the other side that this claim was unfounded, because Mr. Bowen probably said at that time it was unfounded.

Judge Neilson—He has not said that. He said he didn't owe him any money, the other day.

Mr. Fullerton—Now, if that is proved in this case, why, it is necessary for us to disprove it by showing it was a legitimate claim, and introduce these contracts in evidence for the purpose of determining that question. Your Honor will perceive that Mr. Bowen could not create a defense on that occasion to this claim. Suppose he had alleged that Mr. Tilton had broken his contracts, it would not establish the fact. Suppose he had alleged the contracts were forgeries, it would not have established the fact. We certainly cannot go into that side issue here, although we have not any apprehension as to the result, but we have got enough on our hands here without trying that cause over again, which has been settled by arbitration, as we all very well know.

Mr. Evarts—It will be time to question our right to try that cause over again when we attempt to do so. It is not likely that we shall; we have no occasion to try it over again. Your Honor has ruled on the question.

Judge Neilson—You will answer, Mr. Moulton, with especial care to the question of the claim and its validity, and not extraneous matters. What answer do you make? A. What is the question?

THE TRIBUNE stenographer read the question as follows: "Did he say why he did not think he owed Mr. Tilton any money?" A. No; he did not say why, Sir. He said he did not think he owed Mr. Tilton any money, and if I thought he did he would be willing to arbitrate.

Q. When was that interview? A. It was in the first part of January, between January 1st and January 10th, Sir.

Q. What was the next step you took after that in the collection of this claim? A. I saw Mr. Bowen at my house; he came there; he came to the house and said again that he was willing to arbitrate, and although Mr. Tilton had told me, in the meantime, that he was perfectly willing to arbitrate, I said that I did not want to arbitrate, and I said, "Mr. Bowen, this is my reason. The contract provides—there is a specific provision in the contract with regard to the termination of it in the way that you have terminated it. The contract has a plain provision—has several plain provisions alluding to its termination; that is, it can be terminated at the end of six months by notice without the payment of any penalty; or it can be terminated by death, or it can be terminated at once by the payment of a certain sum of money." I forget what that was now; I think it is $2,500 or $3,000. Whatever it was, I mentioned it to him; it was mentioned in the contract. He said that he thought the contract required arbitration; that there was a provision in the contract that if there was any difference between the editor of the paper and the publisher, that then the contract provided that the interpretation of the contract with reference to that difference should be submitted to arbitration; and I said to him: "Mr. Bowen that provision—that section of the contract is with regard to the interpretation of Mr. Tilton's duties towards you as publisher—his duties as editor towards you as publisher—and of your duties as publisher towards him as editor. There is a difference between that clause and the one following it which is a plain provision for the payment of so much money on the breaking of the contract. Now on that ground I don't want to arbitrate." And there is another ground that was expressed to him, which, if you want me to tell you, I will.

Q. You may state what you expressed to him, now? A. That is about it.

Q. What did he say to that? A. He objected again; he said he was perfectly willing to arbitrate.

Q. Did he say that he owed Mr. Tilton no money at that time? A. No, Sir; I don't think he said he owed Mr. Tilton no money. He was willing to leave the matter to arbitration.

Q. He was not willing to pay, however, without arbitration, was he? A. No.

Q. Did you bring a suit against him for the claim? A. No; Mr. Tilton did, I believe, subsequently.

Q. Well, did you direct the bringing of the suit? A. No; Mr. Tilton, I believe, commenced the suit.

Q. You did not confer with counsel on that subject? A. I don't think I conferred with counsel on that subject.

Q. Or employed them yourself? A. No; I didn't employ them or pay them.

Q. Then Tilton afterwards commenced the suit against Bowen? A. Yes, Sir,

Q. Do you know about what time? A. I forget the exact time. I think I have got a letter.

Q. Approximate to the time as nearly as you can? A. It was in the latter part of 1871 or beginning of 1872, I think.

Q. How many interviews have you had with Mr. Bowen on the subject of this claim, between the time of the last interview mentioned by you and the commencement of this suit? A. I don't know; several, Sir; I do not know how many.

Q. A good many had you not? A. Not a very great many; so, Sir.

Q. Didn't he ever say to you, in any of those conversations, that he thought he had good cause for breaking his contracts with Tilton? A. He said that he thought—on the first morning that I saw him, that was the conversation—he said, I think, the first morning that I saw him, that he thought he didn't owe Tilton any money.

Q. The question is not that—the question I put to you? A. Well, I will explain the answer, if you please.

Mr. Everts—Go on. A. I have explained it, Sir.

Q. I will put you this question; Didn't Mr. Bowen, at any interview that you had with him, say that he thought he had good cause for breaking his contract with Mr. Tilton?

Mr. Everts—That is already answered.

Q. Now, did he ever state to you in any of those conversations why he thought he had cause for breaking Mr. Tilton's contract? A. I do not recollect, Sir, that he stated to me the cause.

Q. Do you recollect that he did not? A. I haven't any recollection on the subject, Sir; whether he told me the causes, now or not; I do not think he did.

Q. Was there a period, when, after the suit was brought, you and Mr. Bowen ceased to have conversation in regard to the settlement of the claim? A. After the suit was brought, Sir, I think I did not see Mr. Bowen at all.

Q. Did not see him at all? A. I do not think I did, Sir; I do not remember of ever having seen him.

Q. Do you remember of seeing, at any time prior to this settlement of this claim, an article known as the "Golden Age Article," which had been prepared for print, embodying the letter of Mr. Tilton to Mr. Bowen, dated Jan. 1st, 1871? A. It is rather a long question.

[Question repeated by THE TRIBUNE stenographer.] A. I remember having seen a proof of an article for The Golden Age, corrected by Oliver Johnson, Sir, I think, with that letter in it; yes, Sir.

Q. Incorporating that letter in it? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Was that article ever published in The Golden Age? A. No. I think not; don't recollect that it ever was.

Q. [Paper handed to witness]. I call your attention, Mr. Moulton, to the article on that paper, headed: "A Personal Statement." Will you look at it, and see if that is the article you refer to? A. I have the article that I refer to in the papers here; I would like to refer to it and compare them; I can tell then positively.

Q. Look at that. [Another paper handed to witness.]

The Witness—Do you only want me to look at the first part of it?

Mr. Tracy—I want you to satisfy yourself whether it is the article you saw.

Mr. Fullerton—Whether it is the paper you saw—that is the question.

Mr. Tracy—No.

Mr. Beach—Well, Mr. Pearsall, you had better read one.

Mr. Morris—Yes; go on and compare. [Mr. Pearsall here read a paper to the witness in an undertone, while the witness examined the paper in his hand.]

The Witness—There seems to be a disagreement between these—between the first paragraph.

Mr. Fullerton—Well, then, you can answer the question without explaining it.

The Witness—What is the question?

Mr. Tracy—Now, will you answer the question, whether you ever saw the article that is in print—the printed article that is attached to the paper I handed you. A. May I look at the whole paper?

Q. If you want to, yes; if it is necessary in order to tell whether you ever saw that article? A. Yes; I think I saw the article that was appended to the tripartite covenant. That is the reason I asked you if I could look at the whole paper, Mr. Tracy. Now, Mr. Pearsall, will you follow the reading.

Mr. Pearsall—I will read it. [Reading and comparison resumed by Mr. Pearsall and the witness.]

The Witness—Now, what is the question? Do you want this back, Mr. Tracy?

Mr. Tracy—Now, are you able to say whether you ever saw this printed article that is attached to this paper before? A. I can't swear, Sir, specifically, whether I ever saw that or not; I saw something like it.

PEACE DECLARED BUT NOT PRESERVED.

Q. The paper that I have presented to you is what is known as the tripartite agreement, isn't it? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Were you present at that arbitration? A. I believe I was present at that arbitration; yes, Sir.

Q. Were you present when this paper was signed? A. I was not present when it was signed.

Q. Did you ever see it before? A. I think I have seen the paper before—yes, Sir; Mr. Beecher was not there, Sir, at that interview; so, therefore, I did not see it signed.

Q. I did not ask why you did not see it? A. Well, I was only telling you why.

Q. When did you see it first, do you think? A. When did I see it first?

Q. Yes? A. That paper I think I saw for the first time that night, Sir.

Q. Was the printed paper attached to it at that time? A. I don't remember whether it was or not, distinctly.

Q. Didn't you examine it that night as carefully as you have here to-day? A. My impression is that the printed paper was attached to it; I can't swear whether I examined it specifically or not.

Q. Don't you know it was attached to it? A. No; I could not swear that it was.

Q. Didn't you furnish it? A. Didn't I furnish it?

A. Yes? A. I don't remember that I did.

Q. Do you remember that you did not? A. I haven't any recollection as to whether I did or not.

Q. Do you know where that article came from, that printed paper that is attached to the tripartite agreement? A. I could not swear, Sir, as to where it came from.

Q. Do you know whether the plaintiff furnished it? A. Whether Mr. Tilton furnished it?

Q. Yes? A. I don't know whether he did or not.

Q. Did you ever see this printed article in anybody else's hands besides Mr. Tilton or yourself unattached to this paper? A. That printed article?

Q. Yes? A. I can't swear that I ever saw that printed article.

Q. Did you ever see what is known as the "Golden Age Article"? A. Yes, and I have just had the—I have just produced the one that I saw.

Q. In anybody else's hands besides yours and Theodore Tilton's? A. Yes; in Mr. Beecher's hands.

Q. In Mr. Beecher's hands? A. In Mr. Beecher's hands; yes, Sir.

Q. With the exception of the three that you have named, did you ever see it in any one else's hands? A. I can't swear whether it was ever in anybody else's hands or not.

Q. I did not ask you that; I asked you whether you ever saw it? A. In anybody else's hands?

Q. Yes? A. I can't swear that I ever saw it in anybody else's hands.

Q. You have no recollection of ever seeing it in any one else's hands? A. Except in Mr. Beecher's, Mr. Tilton's and myself?

Q. Yes? A. I think in Mr. Claflin's.

Q. In your presence? A. Yes; in my presence.

Q. During the arbitration? A. No; I don't think during the arbitration—before the arbitration.

Q. Before the arbitration? A. Yes, Sir; I think Mr. Claflin was given an article by somebody.

Q. How long before the arbitration. A. Oh! some time before the arbitration.

Q. By whom was he given the article? A. I don't recollect by whom it was given to him.

Q. Don't you recollect whether you gave it to him? A. I don't recollect whether Mr. Beecher handed him a copy of it, or whether Mr. Tilton handed him a copy of it, or whether I did.

Q. Were there two different articles printed from the office of The Golden Age, embodying this letter of January 1st? A. The article, Sir, that I remember to have seen is this proof which I produce here.

Q. Answer my question? A. I will try to; I am endeavoring to; I want to answer you courteously.

Q. Now, I ask you if there were two different articles printed from The Golden Age office embodying this letter of January 1st? A. I don't know of any two different articles except this one that you have in your possession and this one here, which seems to be different. I cannot answer the question, Sir, without answering it in that way, intelligently. I submit to the Court.

Q. Will you pass up that paper? A. Yes, Sir; Mr. Morris has it. Is there any other way, your Honor, in which I can answer the question?

Judge Neilson—I don't think there is, Sir.

Mr. Tracy—Now, Mr. Tilton's signature is to this paper, isn't it? A. I will see, Sir. [Paper handed to witness.]

Mr. Tracy—You connect this paper with the arbitration, I understand, in all your questions to me?

Q. Yes? A. Well, the arbitration was before this paper was submitted—I would like to make that correction—it was the evening of the arbitration that this paper was submitted, but the arbitration was before this paper was signed on money matters.

Mr. Evarts—The paper was present at the arbitration? A. Not at the arbitration; no, Sir.

Mr. Tracy—The arbitration was one evening and— A. No, Sir; it was the evening of the arbitration. It was after the arbitration, on the evening of the arbitration.

Q. But after the arbitration? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. That this paper was submitted? A. Yes, Sir; by Mr. Claflin?

Q. Yes, and signed? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Now did you show this "Golden Age Article" to Mr. Beecher at any time prior to that arbitration? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Where? A. At my house.

Q. At your house? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Do you know whether it was shown to Mr. Bowen by anyone prior to that arbitration? A. I think Mr. Claflin told me that he had shown it to Mr. Bowen; I won't be certain about that.

Mr. Evarts—Well, that is hearsay.

The Witness—I don't.

Q. Well, was Mr. Claflin Bowen's arbitrator? A. I don't know whether he was or not; he was one of the arbitrators; I think he was, however.

Q. You think he was? A. I think so.

Q. Do you know whether the article was also shown to Mr. Wilkinson before the arbitration by Mr. Tilton? A. I don't know that, Sir; could not swear that it was.

Q. What? A. I could not swear that it was; I don't recollect having seen it shown to him.

Q. How long before this arbitration was this shown to Mr. Beecher and given to Mr. Claflin? A. How long before the arbitration?

Q. Yes. A. It was some time before the arbitration.

Q. Well, can't you approximate the time? A. I don't remember, Sir, how long.

Q. Wasn't it in March, 1872? A. It was after Mr. Tilton's return from the West, whenever that was.

Q. Well, what time did he return from the West? A. I don't recollect the month, Sir; I don't recollect the month.

Q. How soon after you showed that article to Mr. Beecher and gave a copy of it to Mr. Claflin was the arbitration agreed upon? A. It was some time before we consented to the arbitration; we consulted the lawyers first about it.

Q. Did you give the article to Mr. Claflin with a view of having it shown to Mr. Bowen? A. I don't remember whether I gave it to Mr. Claflin or not.

Q. How many talks did you have with Mr. Claflin prior to the arbitration? A. That, really, I don't recollect.

Q. You had some? A. Had one or two I guess.

Mr. Tracy—Now we offer the agreement in evidence.

Mr. Fullerton—No objection.

Mr. Evarts—No objection to my relieving Mr. Tracy?

Mr. Fullerton—Oh! I think you all need that.

Mr. Evarts [reading the tripartite agreement]:

We three men, earnestly desiring to remove all causes of offense existing between us, real or fancied, and to make Christian reparation for injuries done or supposed to be done, and to efface the disturbed past, and to provide concord, goodwill and love for the future, do declare and covenant each to the others, as follows:

I.—I, Henry C. Bowen, having given credit, perhaps without due consideration, to tales and innuendoes affecting Henry Ward Beecher, and being influenced by them, as was natural to a man who receives impressions suddenly, to the extent of repeating them (guardedly, however, and within limitations, and not for the purpose of injuring him, but strictly in the confidence of consultation), now feel that therein I did him wrong. Therefore I disavow all the charges and imputations that have been attributed to me as having been by me made against Henry Ward Beecher; and I declare, fully and without reserve, that I know nothing which should prevent me from extending to him my most cordial friendship, confidence, and Christian fellowship. And I expressly withdraw all the charges, imputations, and innuendoes imputed as having been made and uttered by me, and set forth in a letter written by me to Theodore Tilton, on the 1st of January, 1831 (a copy of which letter is hereto annexed), and I sincerely regret having made any imputations, charges, or innuendoes unfavorable to the Christian character of Mr. Beecher. And I covenant and promise that for all future time I will never, by word or deed, recur to, repeat, or allude to any or either of said charges, imputations, and innuendoes.

II.—And I, Theodore Tilton, do, of my free will and friendly spirit towards Henry C. Bowen and Henry Ward Beecher, hereby covenant and agree that I will never again repeat, by word of mouth or otherwise, any of the allegations or imputations or innuendoes contained in my letters hereunto annexed, or any other injurious imputations or allegations suggested by or growing out of these, and that I will never again bring up or hint at any cause of difference or ground of complaint heretofore existing between the said Henry C. Bowen and myself, or the said Henry Ward Beecher.

III.—And I, Henry Ward Beecher, put the past forever out of sight and out of memory. I deeply regret the causes for suspicion, jealousy and estrangement which have come between us. It is a joy to me to have my old regard for Henry C. Bowen and Theodore Tilton restored, and a happiness to me to resume the old relations of love, respect and reliance, to each and both of them. If I have said anything injurious to the reputation of either, or have detracted from their standing and fame as Christian gentlemen and members of my church, I revoke it all and heartily covenant to repair and reinstate them to the extent of my power.

H. C. BOWEN.
THEODORE TILTON.
H. W. BEECHER.

Brooklyn, April 2, 1872.

Annexed to this is a paper called "A Personal Statement." It is headed thus in writing: "Theodore Tilton's letter to Mr. Bowen above mentioned," and then begins the printed matter; "A Personal Statement" being the heading of the article. [Again reading]:

The editor of The Golden Age has been many times solicited by friends and encouraged by enemies to explain the sudden sundering of his relations with Mr. Henry C. Bowen. For a long time his only answer to such requests and innuendoes, was the silence which ought to shield one's private matters from public gossip. But, during a recent journey of some thousands of miles through the North-West, among people whose familiar acquaintance he had made in former years, and whose good opinion he is unwilling to lose, he became convinced that a proper sense of self-respect required on his return the publication of the appended letter. It was written within a few hours after the severance of his business associations with Mr. Bowen and was confided to the care of a friend, by whom its contents were laid before the person to whom it was addressed. As so many false stories had been told of the occurrence to which it refers, the writer has finally determined to confront these fictions with the facts. After many months of ever-increasing misrepresentation, not to say slander, this course is now imperative."

And the rest of the article is, if your Honor please, the letter from Mr. Tilton to Mr. Bowen, of the date of "Brooklyn, Jan. 1st, 1871," which is already in evidence.

Mr. Fullerton called Mr. Evarts's attention to the fact that the article was continued on another page.

Mr. Evarts—I beg pardon. I see another page. After that letter the article proceeds:

As a sequel to the above letter, it should be added that Mr. Bowen, after charging Mr. Beecher with extraordinary criminality after declaring that the accused had made to him a confession of guilt, imploring forgiveness with tears; after investigating a demand that Mr. Beecher should forthwith vacate his ministry; after protesting that he could and would sustain this demand with complete evidence for its enforcement; after acting as the bearer of this demand in person—after all this, he went immediately to Beecher in the guise not of accuser, but of champion, and pledged to him the protection of his friendship and counsel against the very indictment which he himself had inspired, incited and presented. In other words, while secretly arranging Mr. Beecher's destruction he openly presented himself to his victim as his safeguard and refuge. In the whole history of treason there is no darker instance of shameless duplicity and malicious craft. The writer, wholly unsuspecting of the double part which Mr. Bowen was dexterously playing, was first made aware of this villainy by the excited conversation above described, followed immediately by the termination of his engagement as a special contributor of The Independent and as editor of The Union, the contracts having been just newly made and the ink with which they were signed being hardly dry. When a copy of the above letter was laid before Mr. Beecher he indignantly denied Mr. Bowen's charges, each and all, and with peculiar anger pronounced the alleged confession of guilt the most diabolical of lies. With the issue between these two contestants the editor of The Golden Age has nothing to do, except to regret the painful necessity which now at last compels the above publication involving their names.

[Paper marked "Exhibit D, 25."]

THE TILTON-BOWEN ARBITRATORS.

Mr. Tracy—This paper, as I understand you to say, was present at the arbitration, or the same evening of the arbitration, but after the arbitration was concluded? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Who were the arbitrators on that occasion? A. Charles Storrs, Horace B. Claflin and James Freelan.

Q. Who was Mr. Tilton's arbitrator? A. I really don't know.

Q. Was it not understood that each party chose one? A. I don't know how they were chosen; they were agreed upon between Mr. Claflin, Mr. Tilton and myself in some way; I don't recollect exactly how they were chosen.

Q. Don't you know who named Charles Storrs? A. I don't know.

Q. Don't you know he was named as the friend of Mr. Tilton on that arbitration? A. I don't remember that.

Q. What was the result of the arbitration? A. The result of the arbitration was—I might mention an instance, Gen. Tracy, before the arbitration, if you desire it.

Mr. Tracy—Please answer my question. We will get on more rapidly if you do. A. The result of the arbitration was that Mr. Tilton was awarded $7,000.

Q. To be paid by Mr. Bowen? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Was that payment made? A. Yes, Sir; he drew his check for it there.

Q. And that is the $7,000 that was subsequently deposited with your firm? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Mentioned in the accounts here? A. Yes, Sir; I believe it is mentioned in the accounts.

Mr. Evarts—Yes, it is so mentioned.

The Witness—Yes, Sir; Mr. Bowen offered to pay $5,000 before the arbitration, Mr. Tracy.

Mr. Tracy—Well, we will pass that. [To Judge Neilson.] That I take is stricken out, your Honor.

Judge Neilson—Well, it is not a falsehood.

Mr. Tracy—Did you witness any reconciliation between Mr. Tilton and Mr. Beecher after that contract was signed? A. I don't recollect witnessing any reconciliation.

Q. Did you witness any friendly act between them immediately after the signing of that contract? A. No more friendly than before—nothing to distinguish the previous action.

Q. Did you see them together after that frequently? A. No, Sir; I have not seen them together after that frequently; I have not seen them frequently together; I have not ever seen them frequently together.

Q. Did you see them after that together occasionally? A. Not very often, Sir.

Q. Occasionally? A. I remember one occasion.

Q. Not more than one? A. It was at my house; perhaps two or three; I don't know; I don't recall them now. If you can recall them to me I can answer.

Mr. Evarts [to plaintiff's counsel]—Will you give us "Exhibit No. 42?"

Mr. Morris [handing paper to Mr. Tracy]—There it is.

Q. Do you remember your letter to Mr. Beecher of Jan. 8d, 1872?

Mr. Morris—Jan. 2d, is it not?

Mr. Evarts [handing paper to witness]—Look at that "Exhibit." That is already in evidence—your letter answering that; don't you remember that letter? A. I remember it; I am looking over it to see all that is in it.

Mr. Tracy—I am not asking you that. [Handing paper to witness.] I call your attention to the printed letter now shown you, and ask if it is your reply to "Exhibit No. 42?"

Mr. Shearman—Marked in pencil Jan. 8d, 1872.

The Witness—I think I wrote such a letter as that; I could tell if I saw the original.

Mr. Tracy—And sent it to Mr. Beecher? A. I think so.

Q. Do you know whether you have the original letter, or a copy of it, in your possession? A. I think I have a copy of it if it was in my statement.

Q. In manuscript? A. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Shearman—It is marked "Exhibit 66."

The Witness—It is quoted in my first statement, Mr. Shearman, is it not?

Mr. Shearman—Yes, Sir; I think so.

Mr. Morris—What is the date of it?

Mr. Shearman—It has no date. It is marked in pencil January 3d, 1872.

Mr. Tracy—I understand you to say you wrote Mr. Beecher such a letter. Was it in reply to "Exhibit No. 42"? A. I think it was; yes, Sir.

Mr. Shearman [reading]:

MY DEAR SIR: First with reference to Mrs. Woodhull's letter and your answer. I think that you would have done better to accept the invitation to speak in Washington, but if lecture interferes your letter in reply is good enough, and will bear publication.

With relation to your notice of The Golden Age, I tell you frankly, as your friend, that I am ashamed of it, and would rather you would have written nothing. Your early associations with, and your present knowledge of the man who edits that paper, are grounds upon which you might have so written that no reader would have doubted that, in your opinion, Theodore Tilton's public and private integrity was unquestionable. If the article had been written to compliment The Independent, it would receive my unqualified approval.

Mr. Fullerton—Is that marked?

Mr. Shearman—The stenographer will have to mark a copy of it.

[Copy of letter marked "Exhibit D, 26."]

Mr. Moulton—[Aside to a reporter.] This is dreadful; wake me up if I go to sleep.

Mr. Tracy—[Handing a paper to witness]: Is that The Golden Age tract, known as the Life of Victoria Woodhull by Theodore Tilton? A. I do not know whether it is or not.

Q. I understood you to say you read that?

Mr. Fullerton—No, you did not understand him so; you could not have understood him so.

Q. Did I ask you that question last night? A. I think you asked me something like that.

Q. Did you ever see that tract before? A. I think I have seen such a tract as this.

Q. Did you read what is known as the Life of Victoria Woodhull, when it was published? A. No, Sir.

Q. Did you read any part of it? A. I think I read some portion of it.

Mr. Fullerton—That has been gone over.

Mr. Tracy—You admit that is the Life as published?

Mr. Beach—I believe this is the first occasion when you have called for any admission.

ARGUMENT ON THE ADMISSION OF THE WOODHULL BIOGRAPHY.

Q. Mr. Evarts—We offer this in evidence as The Golden Age tract.

Mr. Beach—We object to it.

Mr. Evarts—It is headed: "Golden Age Tract, No. 3; Victoria C. Woodhull, Biographical Sketch by Theodore Tilton. 'He that uttereth a slander is a fool.'—Solomon, Prov. x., 18

"Published at the office of The Golden Age, 9 Spruce-st., New-York, 1871.

"Entered according to act of Congress, in the year 1871, by Theodore Tilton, in the office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington."

We offer to read that.

Judge Neilson—It is offered, and I rule it out.

Mr. Evarts—On the subject of identification, or as not being admissible evidence.

Judge Neilson—Not being admissible evidence.

Mr. Evarts—It is necessary, perhaps, if your Honor please, to recall—

Judge Neilson—[To Mr. Evarts]—I will be happy to hear you.

Mr. Evarts—It is necessary to call your Honor's attention to some preceding testimony, which we think connects this with the matter. The time of this transaction, as I will point it out by testimony, was September, 1871, and it was after that that the Steinway Hall meeting was held, concerning which the evidence has now been given here and admitted. This was brought up yesterday, and there was then no copy in court that we could use at the moment. I did not then understand that there was any doubt or difficulty about the testimony. This writing of Theodore Tilton, if it be pertinent to this controversy, is, of course, an act of his, and of the consequences of which he cannot complain. It comes within the general rule of evidence that the acts of a party may be given in evidence against him. Now, it was this Life of Victoria Woodhull that produced the impression upon the public mind which was disastrous to Mr. Tilton's position as an editor, and of his newspaper as a public print. It was a most definite, authentic, deliberate form of allying himself in the view of a religious and general public with these doctrines of free love, and with this lady as one of its advocates and champions. It will speak for itself in that regard, and I will not further characterize it. Thereupon, in the disaster that followed from it, in culmination of a process that had been going on, the effort was made by Mr. Tilton, and by Mr. Moulton in coöperation with him, to compel Mr. Beecher to take no attitude in reference to these free love doctrines and in reference to this lady, one of the champions of such doctrines, that should indorse Mr. Tilton's relation to them, and indorse, to some extent at least (and presiding at a public meeting is a very general and definite extent for a public man to do) the doctrine of that school and of its champions; and the operations that were brought to bear upon Mr. Beecher in reference to these subjects of complaint and discussion, to produce that benefit, than which none could be more important. No mere pecuniary measure or aid could equal it. That was to reconstruct the ruin of the public position Mr. Tilton was thus placed in, by softening or correcting it by the powerful influence of Mr. Beecher, and, as we have shown, this next step following about the Steinway Hall meeting, so we shall proceed, showing that all these efforts, as they are called, at suppression of facts, whatever they were, whichever side has the correct view of what the facts were, seem to have been easy enough in the control of the only parties who knew anything of them, if there were an honest and sincere co-operation in keeping what was a private grief, in whatever form it was, from the public notice. But, as this witness has detailed, every now and then there was coming out some publication—some discussion. There was the card of Mrs. Woodhull, in the Spring of 1871; there was later on afterwards the full publication of an article in the Fall of 1872; and so on, until finally, in the Bacon letter, there are constant introductions of the subject to the public notice, which we suppose, in the nature of facts and evidence and in direct proof to be introduced—partly introduced already—are connected with the movements of Mr. Tilton and knowledge and co-operation of Mr. Moulton, the witness, and that there was no sincerity, no action of a sincere nature, towards suppression, but the constantly keeping alive a condition more or less obscure, of scandal and reproach in reference to Mr. Beecher, made the occasions of the interview and the transactions which this witness has detailed with Mr. Beecher, and this Life of Victoria Woodhull, is the definite evidence of Mr. Tilton's prostration in fortune and in reputation in respect to his credit and vocation of an editor, and accounts for "Sir Marmaduke's Musings," which have been put in evidence by our learned friends.

Mr. Tracy—Published six weeks after this was written.

Mr. Evarts—Published six weeks after this catastrophe, by this extraordinary folly, if you please, of this publication. Now, in the poem of "Sir Marmaduke's Musings"—very eloquent and very beautiful, but very general, the course of ruin in which he finally came to succumb, contains the evidence of that destruction of worldly prosperity and of public repute as having relation to these matters of his public credit and of his commercial prosperity in regard to these matters of his editorship, and his connection and public influence as a lecturer. With that view, if your Honor please, we offer this evidence.

Mr. Beach—The argument which has been submitted by the counsel, it seems to me, your Honor, would be more appropriate in another and subsequent stage of these proceedings. It consists of assumptions of facts which I submit do not appear from the evidence, and of a system of reasoning which is simply argument, and, as we maintain, unfounded in the evidence. That the fortunes of Mr. Theodore Tilton, at the period spoken of, were prostrated, we do not propose to deny. That he was suffering pecuniary embarrassments and was enduring to a very considerable extent, for some reason or other, the disapprobation of a portion of the community, is certainly very distinctly apparent. If I understand the argument of the learned counsel, he proposes, by the introduction of this biography of Mrs. Woodhull, to attribute that decline in condition to its publication. In the first place, Sir, there is no evidence before your Honor creating any connection between the fortunes of Mr. Tilton and the publication of this article. The proof of that fact would in itself be very difficult and necessarily indefinite unless the counsel were permitted to prove, by the opinions or declarations of others, the specific effect which it produced upon the community. But assuming that there are any legitimate means of evidence by which that assumption could be demonstrated, there is nothing yet in the evidence to show any relation between the two things. My friend, Mr. Evarts, gives very proper credit to the poetical effusion of this plaintiff, entitled: "Sir Marmaduke's Musings," and he assumes to say that that is but a poetical and pathetic description of the injury to his prospects and conditions produced by his connection with Mrs. Woodhull. Pray, your Honor, where is the evidence of that? It certainly has not yet been revealed, and is purely a matter of argument upon the part of the learned counsel. But, Sir, I do not propose here to answer this argument. As I said before, at the proper time, and I trust, in a proper manner, this whole theory of the defense will be examined upon the evidence and the facts revealed by that evidence. And it may be possible, Sir, that upon that occasion it will be easy to show that the misfortunes which fell upon this plaintiff originated from altogether a different and more efficient cause—a cause clearly and abundantly recognized by the defendant. Now, the specific objection to the introduction of this tract is, first, that there is not evidence sufficient to justify your Honor in attributing the authorship of this article to Mr. Tilton. It may be a technical objection to the nature of the proof, but yet, may it please your Honor, in the course of our evidence we have been driven by that sort of objection to a great deal of difficulty so far in the presentation of our evidence; as, for instance, driving us to the production of the archives of Plymouth Church, entirely under the command of the officers of this defense. We do not, therefore, choose to aid an objection of this character. The printing or professed printing of this paper at the office of The Golden Age attributing upon its title-page its authorship to Theodore Tilton, or the printing of an entry of the copyright in the proper office of the Government, by no means identifies or concludes Mr. Tilton upon the question of authorship, and therefore submit that until they make more clear and definite proof upon that subject that expression of itself is abundant. Now, I do not understand, Sir, that this paper is offered for any other object than to demonstrate the proposition of the counsel that this was the origin of the difficulties which at the time or subsequently embarrassed Mr. Tilton. Well, your Honor must necessarily look at the nature of the article itself for the purpose of determining whether it could have legitimately any such effect, whether it is material to establish that fact, and unless you see in the substance and character of the production a cause efficient to produce the results which are attached to it, of course in that view it is not receivable. Well, Sir, it is said that this lady, Mrs. Woodhull, at this time was a professor of what is called the free love doctrine. It is said that she was an advocate of the movement in favor of Women's Rights. Where is the evidence of that, Sir? The legitimate and proper evidence of the fact? A. True, in the lecture at Steinway

Hall, as this witness says, this lady lectured upon the relations existing and proposed as between man and woman, but where is the evidence that in that lecture there was any license, any improper theory advanced, any document of free love which would shock the moral and social sentiment of the community? As yet we have no proof upon that subject, and, from the information I have, at the time when these gentlemen were associated with this lady she by no means had promulgated any such tenets, or avowed any such opinions in regard to these relations, and your Honor will perceive, I think, that in all the elements to render this document essential or to associate the sentiments of Mrs. Woodhull and the connection of Theodore Tilton with those sentiments here concerned, the case so far is as barren of that sort of evidence which would permit the introduction of that argument, and upon these grounds, without pursuing this discussion, may it please your Honor, both in regard to the materiality of this paper and to its authenticity, we submit it is objectionable.

Mr. Evarts—I didn't understand your Honor as ruling this out on any question of identification of the paper.

Mr. Beach—I ask his Honor now to rule upon it.

Judge Nelson—Simply my opinion that it was not evidence; nevertheless I wished to hear you on that.

Mr. Evarts—I didn't make any observation, your Honor will remember, for I didn't understand it was necessary. Now my learned friends complain that, in raising this question of evidence, I have exposed a theory concerning this case, in regard to which evidence has been produced and is to be produced, and that I have assumed facts and then have connected those facts with reasoning, which he calls argument, as bearing upon that theory, and he says that he shall, at the proper time, comment upon that theory and also enforce his own. That he will do and that we shall do. But the intermediate questions that arise are that the law shall furnish appropriate and pertinent evidence that may be invoked by the one side and the other properly in support of their theories, and the burden no doubt is upon us when asked by your Honor to show how a paper that in many suits might be wholly immaterial becomes material in this. And I attempted to do so, and it is no answer to say that the theory may not be supported finally by adequate evidence to sustain it, because that you cannot tell until you get to the end of the case. Step by step each party proposes what is itself irrelevant, but what may, if united by me, form a part of a material web of testimony when the whole is completed. Now, this publication, as is shown already by this witness, took place before, although he could not say that it was the cause of the new basis upon which the contributors and supporters of the pecuniary aid to The Golden Age withdrew their further payment under that contribution, and preferred that Mr. Tilton should be the sole responsible owner of that concern, and as to the question, as this witness has also testified, upon their showing that Mr. Tilton wrote this Life and the reason he wrote it, and the degree of composition that he furnished to it, in the revisal, if you please, of some rough material that were supplied to him by this lady and her husband. My learned friends have forgotten also that they put in evidence this card of Mrs. Woodhull's in The World dated May 30th, 1871, in which she states, and states with eloquence and with force, and without the doctrines on this subject of free love between the sexes, that she regards as important to the welfare of society and as destined to overthrow the corrupting influences of marriage.

Mr. Fullerton—She gives a definition to the term there, however.

Mr. Evarts—She does, and she put it in, and I say she has done it with eloquence as well; and those are the doctrines which this witness has testified she avowed in the lecture and which he says are what the public popularly regard as the doctrines of free love. Now, the philosophy, the morality, the utility and the promise of improvement of society in respect to those doctrines, or their opposite, we don't at present discuss. It is a plain practical matter whether in the present state of feeling in this wide community of ours, of this country, the connection of an editor of the importance and credit of Mr. Tilton had heretofore had in connection with which his publications and newspapers did or did not furnish the occasion, and was the operative cause of the destruction of his prosperity. My learned friend means to argue from the proof that its date is wrong, and as it is caused by another adequate reason in which he implies, doubtless, from the relation of Mr. Beecher, the very subject of this dispute. Very well. That is legitimate for him. My point is to have the proofs in. He may argue, and I may argue, in support of the various propositions that we rightfully present to your Honor and to the jury, upon evidence justly proved under the rules of evidence for that purpose. Now, in regard to the identification.

THE WOODHULL BIOGRAPHY EXCLUDED.

Judge Neilson—I assume it as identified.

Mr. Evarts—Yes, Sir. I suppose it is not necessary for me to say anything with regard to that. That is all that it is necessary for me to say.

Judge Neilson—Still regarding it as the life of Mrs. Woodhull, I think it is not evidence before us, and I shall therefore exclude it.

Mr. Evarts—Does your Honor recall, what I have already alluded to—the testimony of this witness concerning it being written by Theodore Tilton and the manner in which he wrote it?

Judge Neilson—He said a draft had been prepared by her husband and he revised it and re-wrote it and put his name to it.

Mr. Evarts—We propose to put that very thing concerning which he testified in evidence.

Mr. Beach—That they brought out on their cross-examination. They cannot get in evidence in that way.

Mr. Evarts—How much it will turn out, on further explanation, that Mr. Tilton contributed to the authorship—how much he received from others, why, that of course we cannot anticipate now.

Judge Neilson—I cannot conceive how the biography of this lady, assuming that it represents her life truly or untruly, is material to us.

Mr. Evarts—That we agree to. It is only on Mr. Tilton's presentation of it that we consider it pertinent.

Judge Neilson—Suppose he had written the life of Mr. Bowen.

Mr. Evarts—It might or not be evidence according to whether, as an act of his, it was evidence. We all agree that the biography of this lady is not a matter in itself at issue here; but the connection of this party, Mr. Tilton, as the specific author of that biography, is the point of view in which we offer it.

Judge Neilson—I shall have to exclude it.

Mr. Evarts—Will your Honor be so good as to note our exception?

Judge Neilson—Yes, Sir.

THE CROSS-EXAMINATION RESUMED.

Mr. Tracy—Do you remember what was known as the Woodhull scandal: I think it has been referred to once or twice during the examination? A. Yes, Sir, it has been referred to.

Q. That was published on the 28th of October, 1872, I believe. A. I don't recollect distinctly now the date. It was some time in October or November—the early part of November, 1872.

Q. From the date of the tripartite agreement down to the publication of that scandal, what had been Mr. Tilton's occupation, as a whole? What had he been employed at during the Summer? A. I think on the paper, if I recollect right.

Q. On The Golden Age? Yes, I think so.

Q. Had he not also been engaged in the political campaign that year? A. The almanacs are running wild in my head. Yes, he had been on the political campaign, I believe, for Mr. Greeley.

Q. He went, soon after the tripartite agreement, to Cincinnati? A. I don't remember when he went to Cincinnati; at the time of the Convention, whatever date that was.

Q. Nothing occurred of importance between these parties, that you recollect, during the Summer of 1872? A. No, Sir; I think not; nothing that I know of.

Q. There was a term of quiet and peace? A. Is that a question?

Q. Yes, Sir; was there not? A. Mr. Tilton was away and Mr. Beecher was here.

Q. You recall nothing about it? A. No, Sir; I don't recall anything.

Q. After the Woodhull publication, I understand you to say that you had frequent interviews with Mr. Bowen? A. Yes, Sir, I did.

Q. On the subject of what answer should be made to him? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. I understand you also to say that you advised silence? A. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Evarts—That paper, if your Honor please, was brought into evidence by your learned friends in the way of testimony concerning it; and, as we understand it, they are to produce and put it in evidence.

Mr. Fullerton—I do not know how the gentleman came to understand that.

Mr. Evarts—By the testimony, if you want to look at it, that you, when being allowed to talk concerning it, were so allowed upon the ground that you were going to produce it in proof.

Mr. Fullerton—I don't recall anything of that kind in the evidence—anything from which a promise could be implied.

Judge Neilson—No promise; we had general evidence on the subject.

Mr. Evarts—Well, we'll see. [Reading from testimony of Jan. 14.]

Q. Well, I want to ask you whether in this article published by Mrs. Woodhull, illicit intercourse between Mr. Beecher and Mrs. Tilton was charged?

Mr. Evarts—Oh! the article should be produced.

Mr. Fullerton—Well, if you want the article—

Mr. Evarts—We don't want the article.

Mr. Fullerton—You can have the whole of it in, or have that part in. I propose to leave it out if you will admit an answer to that question, and pay no further attention to it.

Mr. Evarts—I cannot agree to any substitute for evidence.

Mr. Fullerton—I propose to give that in evidence, Sir; whether that was charged in that paper. It is not necessary that we should produce it here.

Judge Neilson—Does the learned counsel stand upon the objection that the paper would best show it?

Mr. Evarts—Yes, Sir.

Judge Neilson—Then you cannot do it. You must produce the paper; if you produce the paper, and identify it, you can eliminate that one sentence.

Mr. Fullerton—Well, Sir, we will go on then with the evidence, and introduce the paper to-morrow.

Judge Neilson—Which he didn't do.

Mr. Evarts—It was overlooked, of course.

Mr. Fullerton—Now, he calls upon me to produce it.

Mr. Evarts—Now, it is in evidence; it is regarded, by arrangement between counsel, as if it were in evidence, or else the further examination would not have been allowed to go on.

Judge Neilson—In other words, they wished to show a certain clause in it; and it was ruled they could not do that without producing the paper, and counsel might have thought he would have to refer to the subject, and did not do it.

Mr. Evarts—We called upon them, and we say to them to put it in evidence.

Judge Neilson—[To plaintiff's counsel]—Have you got the paper?

Mr. Fullerton—No, Sir.

Judge Neilson—How anything this woman could say, could possibly affect the issue here, I cannot conceive.

Mr. Evarts—It is a subject of concealment with Mr. Beecher. That article is the basis of voluminous testimony on the part of this witness as to what took place between him and Mr. Beecher concerning it. It is one of the charges against Beecher—his action towards the suppression of what this article charged—as evidence of his guilt in concealing it. Now, the best evidence, as I then insisted as to what the article did charge, was that the article should be produced; and your Honor so ruled, and the counsel said he would produce it “to-morrow.” It passed over.

Mr. Fullerton—If I had produced it as I promised, it would have been evidence only of the fact that there was such a charge in the paper.

Mr. Evarts—That is all.

Mr. Beach—There was no effort to produce it.

Mr. Fullerton—No, not at all.

Mr. Beach—It was only an avowal of the purpose, that the plaintiff would feel bound to abide by it, if we chose.

Mr. Evarts—You went on with the examination of the paper.

Mr. Beach—Not as to that.

Judge Neilson—Not as to the contents of it.

Mr. Evarts—Your Honor sees my learned friend is quoted right, that that article don't prove its truth, but the article proves the charge it makes and don't prove any other charges; and the way to prove the charges it makes is to read the article; and then the existence of these articles and their communication to Mr. Beecher, affect him with a knowledge of them; and then comes the statements of suppression.

Judge Neilson—Or answering.

Mr. Evarts—Or answering; and the argument is that Mr. Beecher is guilty, because he wanted to suppress it or aid in suppressing it. Let us see what it was.

Judge Neilson—I think you are right. [To the plaintiff's counsel.] Gentlemen, do you produce the paper?

I do not now; I have not got it.

Judge Neilson—Counsel calls for it.

Mr. Beach—If we have not got the paper, that is an answer to it. They do not trace it to our possession.

Mr. Morris—We have not got it, and never had it.

Mr. Evarts—Counsel say, in the conduct of their cause, “Well, we will produce it.” Now, if they say they have not been able to find it, and didn't have it—

Judge Neilson—Is that paper in print anywhere in any of the documents?

Mr. Evarts—It is for these gentlemen to say. They said they would produce it to-morrow.

Mr. Fullerton—Yes, Sir, I think I have seen a copy of it in the hands of my learned friends to-day.

Judge Neilson—Why not admit that, and let it pass? Why not accept that as if it were the original? Would it not save time?

Mr. Evarts—Your Honor will remember there was a long cross-examination of the witness as to whether he had furnished the information.

Judge Neilson—I think in as much as they refer to the article, and the conversation with Mr. Beecher was given in respect to it, and the advice about answering or suppressing was the subject of discussion and consideration, you therefore have the right to produce the article and see what it was.

Mr. Beach—We did not refer to the article. We referred to a precise and definite subject—a charge in the article.

Judge Neilson—Supposed to be embraced in the paper?

Mr. Beach—Yes, Sir; it is embraced in the paper, but I understood your Honor to say, in consequence of that reference to that publication, we were under obligations to produce and give in evidence the whole article, or that it was admissible on the one side, or the other. Now, as I am informed in regard to that article, it contains a good deal of extraneous matter, not bearing upon that question of the particular accusation, which was considered detrimental, and which it was the purpose of the parties to avoid or suppress, and therefore I hope your Honor will look at the article before you shall rule that the whole of it can be introduced.

Judge Neilson—I think they should be allowed to produce so much of it as will enable us to consider the evidence which has been given.

Mr. Beach—That we have no objection to.

Judge Neilson—Counsel will exercise his judgment on that subject.

Mr. Evarts—My learned friend must produce that article. Your Honor continues as follows [reading]:

Judge Neilson—Then you cannot do it. You must produce the paper; if you produce the paper, and identify it, you can eliminate that one sentence.

Mr. Fullerton—Well, Sir, we will go on then with the evidence, and introduce the paper to-morrow.

Q. I want to ask you what reply Mr. Beecher made, if anything, when you informed him that you had denied flatly to two or three persons that he was an impure man? A. He thanked me for the pains I had taken.

Q. Now, during these interviews between you and Mr. Beecher with reference to that publication, where was Mr. Tilton? A. Mr. Tilton, I believe, in the beginning was in New Hampshire.

Q. And when he returned did he participate in any way? A. Yes; he was present at an interview between Mr. Beecher and myself.

Q. What took place at that interview? A. Mr. Tilton said to Mr. Beecher that he was not at all responsible for that story. Mr. Beecher said he did not believe he was. Mr. Tilton asked Mr. Beecher how he thought it was best to meet that story. Mr. Beecher told him he did not see exactly how to meet it, at that interview—that is what was said there. I told Mr. Tilton that I thought it was best to be silent, not to attempt any reply to the story.

Judge Neilson—And you must be allowed to know what story it was.

Mr. Evarts [reading]:

Mr. Beecher said he did not believe he was. Mr. Tilton asked Mr. Beecher how he thought it was best to meet that story. Mr. Beecher told him he did not see exactly how to meet it, at that interview—that is what was said there. I told Mr. Tilton that I thought it was best to be silent, not to attempt any reply to the story. That is the substance of what occurred there.

Then they went on to talk about a card which was proposed as an answer to this paper, and all this course of examination that I have read would have been excluded upon your Honor's ruling and my objection, but for the statement that they were going to produce the paper as a part of their evidence.

Mr. Morris—That is a mistake.

Mr. Evarts—I have read it.

Mr. Morris—No doubt, but your statement is incorrect.

Mr. Beach—The gentleman misapprehends, and, I think, misconstrues the evidence.

Judge Neilson—The only point is whether you can find and produce the paper, under the obligation that it is to be put in evidence, and whether you are not bound to put the paper in evidence in view of the special circumstances—can supply the paper and put it in itself.

Mr. Beach—The precise question presented by the counsel is that we assumed an obligation to put in evidence the paper.

Mr. Evarts—I did, and that the examination went on only upon that examination.

Mr. Beach—And I assert that every particle of that examination is admissible in evidence in the absence of the paper, and without producing it.

Mr. Morris—And the specific question was abandoned upon which that understanding was had.

Judge Neilson—Having given all that evidence in respect to the paper after producing it, assuming you could do so, not having given the contents, they are at liberty to produce the paper and show it contained no charges, but, on the contrary, is a mere advertisement of a house for sale.

Mr. Beach—Oh! certainly, that I accede to, if that is your Honor's view.

Judge Neilson—Then it is a mere matter of form whether you read it or they, under the circumstances.

Mr. Evarts—It is by no means a matter of form, if your Honor please. It is a part of their proofs. Not one word was allowed to proceed by your Honor, in that inquiry which I read to you, except upon the statement of the counsel that they would produce the paper, and it went on, therefore, as if the paper were here.

Judge Neilson—Assuming any way they cannot produce it.

Mr. Evarts—I have not any such evidence. I must have some affidavit of that.

Mr. Morris—Well, make your affidavits: we don't want to make any.

Mr. Evarts—I don't know about this. We were very yielding about it, and said "Very well, if you are going to produce the paper, go on," and they go on, and make all the inquiries after your Honor had closed their mouths, except upon the paper being produced. They talked —

Judge Neilson—As to the contents.

Mr. Evarts—Talked about that story, it being the subject that Mr. Beecher talked about.

Judge Neilson—That requires an answer in some form, that we should know what it was.

Mr. Evarts—You can not say what it was.

Judge Neilson—I give you liberty to read that, on your assurance to read it from the printed paper, they declining to read it.

Mr. Evarts—I shall read it as their evidence.

Mr. Beach—No, Sir.

Mr. Fullerton—No, you won't,

Mr. Evarts—You will object, I suppose.

Mr. Fullerton—We don't require any assistance from the other side at all in producing our evidence; we will try to take care of that matter ourselves. If that is to be read on our side, I want to say something about it.

Mr. Beach—I don't want any misapprehension in regard to this. I repeat the gentleman's inception of attitude of this question, as arising upon the evidence, is under an entire misapprehension—unintentional, of course—and an entire misrepresentation of the manner in which this question arose before your Honor. You must allow me to read a little:

Q. Now, what occurred upon that publication? A. I saw Mr. Beecher shortly after the publication.

Q. State what occurred between you? A. Mr. Beecher said that he had come to consult with me as to what it was best to do with reference to that publication; what reply could be made to it, if any reply could be made. He said he saw no hope for him since that story had been published. I told him that I thought silence would kill that story; and that if he kept silent with regard to it, simply pointing to his past life as an answer to it, and saying that if that was not an answer he did not choose to make any; that it would kill that story, in my opinion, so far as any evil effects of it upon him was concerned. We consulted frequently concerning it, and did not arrive at any other conclusion than that silence was best. I said to Mr. Beecher, 'If I say anything about it I think this will be the best thing for me to say uniformly; that if the story is true, it was infamous to tell; and if it was false, it was diabolical to have told it; and that if his life was not an answer to it I could not choose to make any—I should not choose to make any to anybody.' Mr. Beecher said to me that he thought it would be judicious for me to make such a reply as that; and I met him after this conversation, and I told him that I had made such a reply as that to several parties, and it appeared to satisfy them. I told him that I had been pressed close by one or two people, and I had denied that he was an impure man—had denied that outright, I did.

Q. Well, I want to ask you whether in this article published by Mrs. Woodhull, illicit intercourse between Mr. Beecher and Mrs. Tilton was charged?

Now, that raised Mr. Evarts to an objection that they wanted the paper, but all that preceded that, in regard to the interview between this witness and Mr. Beecher, was entirely competent and proper in the absence of the article itself. It was the declaration of Mr. Beecher, in that conversation, that characterized it, by asserting the probable effect it would produce. Then, sir, Mr. Evarts says the article should be produced:

Mr. Fullerton—Well, if you want the article——

Mr. Evarts—We don't want the article.

Yet the counsel says we undertook to produce it to them, and are bound now to produce it when they disclaimed all desire for the article. [Reading]—

Mr. Fullerton—You can have the whole of it in, or have that part in. I propose to leave it out if you will admit an answer to that question, and pay no further attention to it.

Mr. Evarts—I cannot agree to any substitute for evidence.

Mr. Fullerton—I propose to give that in evidence, Sir; whether that was charged in that paper. It is not necessary that we should produce it here.

Judge Neilson—Does the learned counsel stand upon the objection that the paper would best show?

Mr. Evarts—Yes, Sir.

Judge Neilson—Then you cannot do it. You must produce the paper.

Then Mr. Fullerton says "we must go on with the evidence." What was the precise question before your Honor? That which was put by Mr. Fullerton whether the particular matter he drew attention to was published in that article. The objection was to that evidence. Mr. Fullerton then says, "I will go on with the evidence," and he did go on with their evidence, not as to what the article contained, but as to the transactions between this witness and Mr. Beecher in regard to it, which were entirely competent in the absence of the article.

Judge Neilson—Still it is not to be denied, in view of that evidence, that they would have a right to put it in.

Mr. Beach—I did not object to that, but when this gentleman (Mr. Evarts) rises and says he reads this as our evidence, and asserts that we assumed an obligation, legal or honorable, to produce that paper, I deny it, and the whole effort of the gentleman is to throw upon us the theory of producing this article, or this extract from the article.

Mr. Evarts—That I argue, to hold you to your promise. This is my purpose.

Judge Neilson—You can read the article.

Mr. Beach—Will you permit me to say to the counsel that I think I have the support of an objection to this question, and while it is always a very great delight to me to listen to the gentleman, it is difficult for me to reply to him, and I do not want to be called upon to reply to another argument except as a matter of courtesy.

Mr. Evarts—Now, I will make a proposition of my own. I have read to your Honor this evidence which followed what my learned friend has said. When I said, "We don't want the article," I meant to say, "We are not putting in proof here; if you continue to put in that proof here, we want the article you were after putting in proof." Now, Sir, as I understand, this plaintiff and his counsel refuse to produce that paper according to that promise, I move to strike out every particle of this witness's evidence that relates to the subject of the Woodhull scandal, from beginning to end.

Mr. Beach—In other words, if your Honor please, when we prove, upon an allusion made to that article, the declaration of Mr. Beecher—"that will ruin me"—and when he enters into devices with this witness for the purpose of avoiding that ruinous effect upon himself, that must be stricken out unless we produce that paper.

Mr. Evarts—That was my motion.

Judge Neilson—I could not grant that motion without selecting the particular passages which, perhaps, in the paper ought to be stricken out; but, under all the circumstances, regarding this as a misapprehension, the paper will be regarded as before the Court; and you (Mr. Evarts) can read it; and, if they do not produce it, then you can read it from the printed paper.

Mr. Fullerton—I hope your Honor will draw a distinction between the article in the paper and that part of it to which reference was made by me in this examination.

Judge Neilson—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Fullerton—It don't follow that a volume shall come in evidence because a paragraph was alluded to.

Judge Neilson—Well, he will first read that paragraph that points to your evidence; and he shall exercise his judgment in regard to reading the whole of it.

Mr. Evarts—We shall read all that which relates to your story of Mr. Beecher, in regard to the conversation.

Mr. Fullerton—You propose to do it! I don't understand the counsel on the other side shall determine what he shall do.

Mr. Evarts—Of course.

Judge Neilson—As the paper was referred to—a story was referred to—he may read so much of it as covers those two considerations. I think it would be very pleasant to hear that before we adjourn.

Mr. Evarts—If your Honor please, I am reminded by some of the jurors that their hour of adjournment has arrived.

Judge Neilson—[To the jurors.] The jury will return at a quarter after two o'clock punctually.

Mr. Mallison (the Clerk)—The Court will now take a recess until fifteen minutes after two o'clock.

MOULTON'S INTERVIEWS WITH WOODHULL.

The Court met at 2:15 pursuant to adjournment.

Francis D. Moulton was recalled, and the cross-examination resumed.

Mr. Tracy—Do you know when it was that you had your first interview with Mr. Beecher, after the publication of the Woodhull scandal? A. Not precisely the date, Sir, no; shortly after.

Q. Can you tell about how long? A. I don't remember.

Q. Whether it was a week or a month, or two weeks or ten days? A. It was not a month, Sir, I think.

Q. Was it two weeks? A. I had an interview with him I think preceding the interview that I had between Tilton and Mr. Beecher and myself.

Q. Of which you have spoken? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Can you state with any definiteness when you had your first interview? A. I cannot state precisely, Sir; no.

Q. Was it the same day that the scandal was first published? A. I don't remember that. It was after the scandal was published.

Q. I know; now, was it a week or ten days or what? A. Mr. Tracy, I would tell you if I recollected, but I don't.

Q. Can't you approximate within a time—from one to two weeks? A. I think it was within a week. I don't remember the day that it appeared.

Q. Can you fix the time when the interview to which you have referred on your direct examination as occurring at your house, between yourself and Tilton and Beecher—can you tell when that was? A. It was on election day, I think, Sir.

Q. Between yourself and Beecher and Mr. Tilton? A. Yes, Sir, I think it was on election day.

Q. Did I understand you to say that at that interview Mr. Tilton had a statement written and which he asked Mr. Beecher if he could stand that he could stand anything? A. Oh! no.

Q. That is another. Now I read an extract from what is known as the Woodhull scandal. "My friend"—meaning you, for they have used your name before—"My friend took a pistol"—

Mr. Beach—One moment, Sir.

Mr. Tracy—Well, I read the passage. "My friend took the pistol."

Mr. Beach—One moment, Sir. I do not think that it should be asserted that the gentleman reads from what is called the Woodhull scandal.

Mr. Tracy—The paper is before the Court. The Court will take judicial notice whether it is or not.

Judge Neilson—The gentlemen can say whether they know that is the paper. If they do, I think we can take that to save time.

Mr. Evarts—Mr. Morris, just look at that newspaper and see.

Mr. Morris—Well, I cannot tell.

Mr. Evarts—Well, then we will go on. They say they cannot tell anything about it.

Mr. Fullerton—No; we don't say that.

Mr. Evarts—We read from Woodhull and Claflin's Weekly of May 17, 1873, a paper which is a republication of the issue of that date, of the publication of November, 1872.

Mr. Shearman—I have here the original paper of November 2d, 1872, although it is a little more convenient to read from the other one.

Mr. Evarts—"New York, December 2d, 1872."

Mr. Shearman—That is the original paper.

Judge Neilson—There seems to be no doubt about that.

Mr. Evarts—This is more convenient to take to the witness, I suppose. This purports to be a republication of the whole article. It is not resumé of any kind.

Mr. Tracy—I begin to read the extract again: "I went to him and stated the case fully. We were both members of Plymouth Church. My friend took a pistol and went to Mr. Beecher, and demanded the letter of Mrs. Tilton's under penalty of instant death." [To the witness.] Did you do that? A. Did I do what, Sir?

Q. What is stated—what I just read? A. Demanding—

Q. Yes; is that statement true?

Mr. Morris—Is that to be gone over again?

Mr. Fullerton—That very question was put to him.

Judge Neilson—He has given all the particulars; I think you can ask him this question, though, although he has sworn that it is not so.

Mr. Morris—Yes, Sir; he has been asked the very question.

Mr. Tracy—I did not understand your Honor.

Judge Neilson—He has gone over that ground fully and particularly, and given us word for word all about it.

Mr. Evarts—We will see, if your Honor please.

Mr. Tracy—He has said that he never had any such transaction. Now, I am reading from the paper itself, and asking him if it is true.

Judge Neilson—What I mean to say is this, that he has stated that interview circumstantially and in detail, the conversation, the circumstance of the pistol, and how he recollects it.

Mr. Evarts—We do not propose to renew that.

Mr. Morris—And beyond that, he denies that very fact in his testimony. He has been asked in regard to that very fact.

Mr. Evarts—We do not propose to renew that matter. We have now got the paper before him, and we read that statement from the paper as it is, and ask him if it is true.

Judge Neilson—Well, I say I think we can ask him that.

Mr. Beach—No, Sir. The peculiarity of this proceeding on the part of the counsel is that they do not ask the witness simply whether that fact is true, but they are attempting to draw in this paper, this publication, by assuming to read from the publication—from the paper of Woodhull & Claflin.

Mr. Evarts—Precisely.

Mr. Beach—Now, Sir, we do not want our silence to be assumed as approving that statement of the counsel.

Judge Neilson—The form of the question is unnecessarily hostile. This witness should be treated as every other witness, and there may be witnesses about whom I shall have a good deal of solicitude. It is a question that bristles with hostility. Can't you put it in a different form?

Mr. Tracy—I don't know how I can put it in a different form, except to read the extract and ask him if it is true.

Mr. Beach—I object to their reading the extract from anything.

Judge Neilson—You can ask him if he did that.

Mr. Fullerton—That they have asked him.

Mr. Beach—Let them ask it again.

Mr. Tracy—I ask then, witness, if you did what is there stated?

Mr. Morris—We object to that. You may ask what he did, but what is there stated I don't care anything about.

Mr. Beach—The counsel does not follow the instructions of your Honor in putting the question.

Judge Neilson—He gave us to understand that he could not.

Mr. Morris—Well, he can.

Judge Neilson—I do not think on a cross-examination he is bound by the simple form of asking what he did, because he has told that on the direct.

Mr. Morris—He may ask if he did so and so, not what is there stated.

Mr. Evarts—That is exactly what we are asking, if he did what is there stated?

Mr. Fullerton—How does it appear that it is there stated?

Mr. Evarts—We have just read it.

Mr. Fullerton—You have no right to read it. It is not in evidence.

Mr. Evarts—Yes, your Honor has said that it is before the Court.

Mr. Fullerton—Who brings it before the Court? We have it before the Court, it is true, but it is not in evidence.

Judge Neilson—One at a time, gentlemen. The paper is brought before the Court under very peculiar circumstances owing to the evidence that has been received and some misapprehension as to the duty of putting it in, and therefore it was that I thought it proper to regard it as before the Court and allow them to read it.

Mr. Fullerton—Now, if your Honor please, let us have a proper understanding in regard to it.

Judge Neilson—That is just the point.

Mr. Fullerton—Can it be pretended by the other side that they can put the whole of that publication in evidence because a specific charge in it was alluded to in the direct examination of the witness a few days since.

Judge Neilson—No.

Mr. Fullerton—That being so, let us proceed a step further then. This part that they now pretend to read is not in evidence under that ruling. If anything is in evidence which is contained in that paper it is the charge against Mr. Beecher, and that alone, and now they do not propose to read that charge against Mr. Beecher, but they propose to read something else, which something else is not in evidence, because the whole paper, as a production, is not in evidence. It is very clear, Sir, it seems to me.

Judge Neilson—Then the orderly way, you think, would be for them to read first, under this permission given, what is supposed to be applicable, and then to interrogate the witness.

Mr. Fullerton—They should read that which is within your Honor's ruling, whatever that may be, and nothing beyond it, because there is nothing plainer than a single paragraph having been read from a paper it does not follow that the whole production is in evidence.

Mr. Morris—That question was not answered.

Mr. Fullerton—I know it was not answered.

Judge Neilson—What constrained the Court to let in that paper was the suggestion that it revealed the scandal and contained a story, which story had been referred to by the witness in his previous examination.

Mr. Fullerton—The question put to the witness was whether in that production there was a charge of illicit intercourse on the part of Mr. Beecher with a lady therein named. That was the question?

Mr. Evarts—By us?

Mr. Fullerton—No, by us.

Mr. Evarts—We are not putting your question over again.

Mr. Fullerton—I know it, but I am, for the purpose of illustrating my argument.

Judge Neilson—I propose that you read such part of the paper as you deem material, and then interrogate him.

Mr. Fullerton—Such part of the paper as they deem material?

Judge Neilson—Well, within the sense that we are acting, as to the story and the charge.

Mr. Fullerton—The charge against Mr. Beecher?

Mr. Evarts—As to the story that this witness has spoken of as the subject of conversation between him and Mr. Beecher.

Judge Neilson—Yes, Sir; now, read such part of it as you understand covers that.

Mr. Fullerton—I supposed Sir, that they were to read such parts as the Court understands cover it.

Judge Neilson—I say the story and the charge.

Mr. Fullerton—Your Honor's understanding and my friends' understanding on the other side would be two things.

Mr. Evarts—How are we to come together?

Mr. Beach—I ask that you submit to us what you propose to read.

Judge Neilson—Yes, that, I think, would be a wise step.

Mr. Tracy—I propose to read: "I had one friend"—that [handing the paper to Mr. Beach.]

Judge Neilson—Well, proceed and read it, gentlemen.

Mr. Beach—I think it more proper, Sir, that your Honor should look at this than I should. I have marked, Sir, the point.

Judge Neilson—Have you marked the point that they propose to read?

Mr. Beach—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Evarts—It is Mr. Beach's marking.

Mr. Beach—What? Mr. Beach's marking? It is marked under the direction of Mr. Tracy.

Mr. Evarts—Well, I say—

Mr. Beach—It purports to be an interview between a reporter and Mrs. Woodhull, commencing there and ending the third page from there, [indicating the portion referred to], and I object to it as incompetent and immaterial.

Judge Neilson—Mr. Tracy, you have it before you; what part do you propose to read?

Mr. Tracy—The part beginning with "Reporter."

Judge Neilson—On the second page?

Mr. Tracy—I don't know what page it is on.

Judge Neilson—Well, the second page in this book. Down to what point?

Mr. Tracy—Down to the end of that interview.

Mr. Beach—The third page from that.

Judge Neilson—including the letter of a third person here?

Mr. Beach—including everything, Sir.

Mr. Tracy—We don't care about the third person's name, your Honor. It will take some little time to go over that and select out, perhaps, the names of third parties. We want the story simply as it relates to Mr. Beecher and the witness and Mr. Tilton, as told there.

Mr. Evarts—We want what formed the basis of the conversation, which this witness has detailed, between him and Mr. Beecher.

Mr. Beach—The difficulty is to ascertain what that is.

Judge Neilson—That is the difficulty. Here is a reference in the third column of the fourth page—a reference to Mrs. Tilton. I cannot conceive that any evidence we have had would justify the reading of that. I cannot conceive that it is material, what this writer says about Mrs. Tilton. That was not the subject of discussion between the witness and the defendant.

Mr. Tracy—It will take so long, your Honor, to go over that and pick out the different paragraphs, perhaps, that relate strictly to the parties here, that I had better move to another part of the cross-examination, and renew this.

Judge Neilson—I think so, and mark the specific passages, in brief.

Mr. Tracy—My plan of examination was to read now the paragraphs that related strictly to the parties and to this witness. I did not propose to read anything that did not relate to their witness, and finish my cross-examination of him on that subject, and then at our leisure put in such parts of the paper as we desired to have in. That was the plan that I originally marked out for myself.

Judge Neilson—Haven't you the examination of the witness before you already on these very points?

Mr. Evarts—Not with this paper before us. We can proceed with something else.

Judge Neilson—Well, supposing you do that.

Mr. Tracy—That is the way I originally proposed to do it.

Judge Neilson—Proceed to some other subject and dissect this at your leisure.

MOULTON'S LOANS TO TILTON.

Mr. Tracy—We can renew this just as well.

Judge Neilson—And use as little of it as you can help. It is like medicine. Don't take too much of it; it is unpleasant. [Laughter.] Go on, Mr. Tracy.

Mr. Fullerton—We object that the medicine don't suit the disease at all.

Mr. Tracy—That you can only tell by trying. That is the way the doctors do.

Mr. Fullerton—That is the way lawyers do sometimes; but I guess doctors don't, who understand themselves.

Mr. Tracy—Now, Mr. Moulton, will you tell us what source of revenue Mr. Tilton had, to your knowledge, from January 1st, 1871, down to May 1st, 1874? A. What source of revenue?

Q. What source or sources of revenue he had, to your knowledge, from January 1st, 1871, to May 1st, 1874? A. He had on deposit with Woodruff & Robinson some money, Sir. He had the subscriptions to The Golden Age, and he had—when I speak of subscriptions, I mean to the capital stock of The Golden Age.

Mr. Evarts—Contributions? A. Yes, Sir; contributions, that is a better word; and then the subscriptions to The Golden Age, an income from the paper, Sir, and he had also $7,000 from Mr. Bowen; and from May 3d, 1873, I think that was the date, May 3d, 1873, or May 2d, 1873, the $5,000 which he didn't know anything about, however.

Mr. Beach—He is giving the capital instead of sources of revenue.

Mr. Tracy—He is not giving the sources of income. I move that the last answer of the witness be stricken out.

Judge Neilson—The words "he did not know anything about it" are stricken out.

Mr. Tracy—That $5,000—you refer to the $5,000 which came from Mr. Beecher? A. I refer to the $5,000 that Mr. Beecher gave to me for him; yes, Sir.

Q. Have you named now all the sources of revenue that he had, to your knowledge? A. I don't know whether the book, Sir, was issued—"Tempest Tossed" was issued before May 1st 1874, or not—whether he had finished it.

Q. Well, do you know whether he had received any income from it before May 1st, 1874. A. I don't know whether he had received any income from that or not.

Q. Do you know whether he received any income from The Golden Age, or whether it failed to pay expenses? A. I don't know that of my own knowledge, Sir.

Q. Have you now named all the sources of income that Mr. Tilton had, to your knowledge? A. Of income—I think I have; yes, Sir.

Q. Does that include borrowed money? A. From me?

Q. From anybody? Does it include your borrowed money that you loaned him? A. I don't know; I have not mentioned that, Sir; there was not so much of that, I find.

Q. In addition to what you have mentioned, were your loans to him? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Had he any other source of income to your knowledge? A. Not that I know of.

Q. No other loans? A. From anybody else?

Q. Yes, Sir. A. Not that I know of.

Q. No other funds applied to the support of The Golden Age? A. None that I know of.

Q. What amount of income did he receive from your loans? A. I have had it examined, Sir, and I cannot determine that. I had our accountant—I told Mr. Porter that I would have him look over the books, but there is nothing by which I could be guided, Sir.

Q. Have you brought your books here? A. No, I have not brought the books here.

Q. I thought you were to bring the books here of Woodruff & Robinson. Do you know of his having any income from lectures during that period? A. Yes, he did, I believe, have income from lectures, which I did not recall when I answered your question.

Q. How much? A. I don't know.

Q. What years? A. My impression is that he lectured in the beginning of 1871, Sir, and in the Winter of 1871 and the Spring of 1872; I think so; I won't be certain about that.

Q. Now, do you know whether his lecture seasons did or did not produce any income? A. They did produce some, Sir; I don't know how much.

Q. You do not know how much? A. No.

Q. Now, have you named all? A. I think I have, Sir, as far as I recollect.

Q. Were your firm his bankers during this time? A. He had money on deposit, Sir with our firm.

Q. Had he any other bank account to your knowledge? A. I don't know that he had.

Q. How did that account stand in April—2d or 5th, is it, when he received and deposited with you $7,000?

Mr. Fullerton—That appears by the account itself, Sir.

Judge Neilson—There are both accounts there.

The Witness—I cannot state from memory, Sir.

Mr. Tracy—I will show you the account. How often had you loaned him money; should you say, during this time? A. Not very often, Sir.

Q. Loaned it on his application? A. Sometimes I asked him if he wanted any money.

Q. And if he said he did you loaned it to him, did you? A. Yes, Sir; generally.

Q. What amounts have you loaned him?

Mr. Fullerton—That is all gone over, Sir.

Judge Neilson—Yes, Sir; "When he wanted money I gave it to him," he said, "and generally in currency."

The Witness—Mr. Porter asked me if it exceeded $5,000, and I answered him no, Mr. Tracy.

Q. Mr. Tracy—In the aggregate? A. Yes, Sir, he asked me if it exceeded $5,000 in the aggregate.

Q. Now, I ask you what is the largest amount you loaned him at any one time? A. I don't recollect.

Q. Were these loans independent of your contribution? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. How large is the largest amount you recollect of loaning him at any one time? A. I don't recollect, Sir, anything about it—what was the largest amount.

Q. Do you recollect of loaning him as high as $500 at any one time?

Mr. Morris—Your Honor, is this to be gone over again? It has all been gone over with particularity.

Mr. Tracy—It has been gone over just as every other subject has been gone over.

Mr. Fullerton—That is so.

Mr. Tracy—Judge Porter asked one or two questions about the fact whether he had loaned him money.

Judge Neilson—Oh! more than one or two questions; he examined him as much I think as in his judgment the point called for.

Mr. Tracy—Our recollection is that he only asked him as to the aggregate amount and nothing as to the details. That is our recollection on our side.

Mr. Morris—It is a mistake.

Judge Neilson—He asked him as to loans.

Mr. Tracy—So Judge Porter touched on every point generally.

Judge Neilson—I said you could ask him this question. Perhaps that will satisfy you.

Q. Can you state whether you ever loaned him as high as $500 at any one time? A. I cannot, Sir; but I can state that I never loaned him to exceed $500, I think, at any one time.

Q. Will you look at the account, and tell us whether his account with Woodruff & Robinson was overdrawn at the time he received the money from Bowen? A. It would appear from this, Sir, that the account was overdrawn $584 39.

Q. At the time he received the $7,000 of Bowen? A. It would appear so from this, Sir.

Q. Now, Sir, from the account when was that $7,000 exhausted, and the entire amount in your firm's hands belonging to him exhausted?

Mr. Fullerton—I dislike to trouble your Honor with objections, but it does seem to me that this is a waste of time. There are the figures which prove whatever they do prove, and there is no necessity for any one's swearing to them.

Mr. Morris—The account has been read in evidence, Mr. Tracy.

Mr. Tracy—Well, but the balances.

Mr. Morris—Yes, the balances, every item of the account, both sides.

Judge Neilson—You might substitute the word "withdrawn" for "exhausted."

Mr. Tracy—Yes, the stenographer may change the question.

The Witness—Shall I add it up to answer your last question?

Mr. Tracy—Yes, if it will not take too long. Don't it show readily?

The witness—What is the last question, General?

Mr. Tracy—When the whole amount was withdrawn? A. The account seems to be closed on April 21st.

Q. When was the last item withdrawn; when did he draw the last item of that account? A. $170 48 seems to have been drawn here on April 21st, 1873.

Q. When was the next to the last item drawn? A. December 21st—December 27th, according to this account—$6.

Q. Now, will you tell us whether that did not withdraw the entire account? A. The account seems to have been balanced on April 21st, 1873.

Q. I ask you to tell us whether, when he drew on the 27th of December, the draft, he had anything remaining, and, if so how much? A. When he drew the draft on the 27th of December?

Q. Yes, Sir? A. I wish Mr. Shearman would add this up; I cannot see; my eyesight is not good enough.

Mr. Evarts—We will verify it.

The Witness—I can hardly see, Sir.

Mr. Tracy—Very well, Sir, pass it back; we will do that. [Taking the account from the witness.]

The Witness—The account is as it stands. I don't know anything about it further than that.

Q. What source of income had Mr. Tilton from January 1st, 1873, to the receipt of the $5,000 by you from Mr. Beecher in May, 1873? A. I don't know that he had any, Sir, except from The Golden Age—whether that paid or not—the receipts from that.

Q. That you don't know? A. No; I don't know.

Q. Did you loan him any money during that time? A. I don't recollect that I did, Sir.

Q. Did any one else contribute any money to him during that time to your knowledge—during that period? A. Not to my knowledge; no, Sir.

Q. You had an interview with Mr. Beecher on the subject of this $5,000 before you received it from him? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Do you remember where that interview was? A. Well, there were interviews at my house about it.

Q. You say interviews? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. More than one? A. I think there was more than one; yes, Sir.

Q. Having reference to this $5,000? A. Having reference to help for The Golden Age.

Q. Well, I am talking about the $5,000 now. A. Yes; I think there was more than one with reference to the $5,000.

Q. At either of those interviews did you present to Mr. Beecher drafts or checks of any person, saying to him in substance, "This is friendship;" "This is what I call friendship?" A. I don't remember that phraseology, Sir.

Q. Well, did you show him drafts from any person which you had received as a contribution to The Golden Age, or to Theodore Tilton, either? A. If you will allow me, Sir, I will tell you as nearly as I recollect what I did show him.

Q. Yes, Sir. A. There was a friend of mine, and of Mr. Tilton, who sent me either a check or two checks, and in addition to it a note, I forget for how much, which the person wanted me to discount and use as I saw fit for The Golden Age. I didn't think it was best to do it, and returned it.

Mr. Evarts—What you told Mr. Beecher, not what you thought? A. I told Mr. Beecher that Mr. Tilton would not take that money.

Mr. Tracy—What was the aggregate? A. That I don't remember, Sir.

Q. Don't you remember anything about it? A. No; I don't recollect about it; I have asked about it since to find out.

Judge Neilson—You showed him these papers, did you? A. Yes, Sir, that is all; I don't remember anything about the amount.

Mr. Tracy—Do you remember whether it was as high as $5,000? A. I don't recollect, Sir.

Q. Do you remember whether it was as high as $3,000? A. I don't recollect.

Q. Was there more than one draft or check to make up the gross amount? A. I think, Sir, that there were two pieces of paper; I think there was one check and one note.

Q. Whose was it? A. Shall I answer that question, your Honor?

Judge Neilson—It don't seem to be material.

Mr. Evarts—We think it is material, if your Honor please.

Mr. Morris—We object

Mr. Evarts—It is a part of the conversation with Beecher.

Judge Neilson—No name was mentioned.

Mr. Evarts—He does not say that.

Judge Neilson—It does not appear in the evidence that any name was mentioned.

Mr. Evarts—Well, we ask him if it was, and if the name was mentioned to Mr. Beecher?

Mr. Morris—We object.

Mr. Evarts—We infer from the fact that Mr. Tilton said he would not accept it from that source.

Judge Neilson—I do not think the name is material.

Mr. Tracy—We desire to hear all the conversation.

Judge Neilson—You can have all the conversation, and I will allow you to get it. Go on with the examination. I think his name ought not to be mentioned. That is all, I think.

Mr. Tracy—You say you showed Mr. Beecher those drafts? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Did he see the name? A. I think he did.

Q. Was the name mentioned? A. I think it was.

Judge Neilson—Then you can give it, if it was mentioned in the conversation?

The Witness—Shall I give it, your Honor?

Judge Neilson—Yes, if it was mentioned in the conversation, you can give it.

Mr. Beach—One moment. I was busy and I have not particularly understood this question, but do not think it follows, because immaterial, impertinent, or scandalous or offensive matter may have been mentioned in that conversation which has no connection with the subsequent matter of this controversy, it necessarily comes in evidence. If needful I will send for authorities to satisfy your Honor, that where one party calls for a conversation and it is given, the other party may give the remainder of the conversation, so far as it is material to explain that which has been put in evidence, but it does not make the whole matter which Mr. Beecher may have asserted in that conversation material.

Mr. Evarts—We have not asked him about Mr. Beecher.

Mr. Beach—I don't know what the conversation was, that was particularly referred to. I understand, Sir, that this was a conversation between Tilton, Moulton and Beecher in regard to a contribution.

Judge Neilson—No; Tilton was not present.

Mr. Beach—Moulton and Beecher.

Judge Neilson—Tilton was not present.

Mr. Beach—Tilton was not then present. Well, even if he had been present it would make no difference. A declaration by Mr. Beecher in regard to a third person—

Mr. Evarts—We have not asked for Mr. Beecher's declaration; we are not asking for Mr. Beecher's declaration.

Mr. Beach—What is it you are asking?

Mr. Evarts—We are asking what this witness said to Mr. Beecher.

Mr. Beach—That don't make any difference, Sir, whether it was said by one party or the other; it is totally immaterial.

Judge Neilson—It appears that a third person, acting, perhaps in the interest of The Golden Age, sent a check and note, suggesting that the note be discounted and the money applied.

It was not thought wise to discount the note. Those papers were shown to Mr. Beecher, and some conversation had in respect to it. The question was whether the witness did not say to Mr. Beecher, in reference to those papers, "that is friendship indeed," or something of that kind.

Mr. Evarts—Yes, Sir.

Judge Neilson—The whole thing is collateral.

Mr. Beach—That is what I was going to remark.

Judge Neilson—It don't touch the issue we are trying at all, although it may have some bearing upon the other matter, whether Mr. Tilton had any means or not,

Mr. Evarts—We do not regard it as collateral. If your Honor will allow us to state how it comes in.

Judge Neilson—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Evarts—This witness has undertaken to give the interview between him and Mr. Beecher which led to Mr. Beecher's contribution of $5,000, and the instructions concerning it, all which is adduced here as evidence, in the shape which he has presented it especially, of crimination against Mr. Beecher in that contribution. Now, we propose to show what did pass between this witness and Mr. Beecher antecedent to his payment of the $5,000, and the witness has told us that there was more than one interview. Now we are getting at those interviews. That is the way it comes in, and we propose to show exactly what did pass between this witness and Mr. Beecher, and then we will see whether the construction that has been put upon it in what has already been given is the true one.

Mr. Beach—The witness has given no construction to it; he has merely related interviews which have been called for by the counsel upon the other side, none of which have been introduced by us on that subject.

Mr. Evarts—In a previous interview. On your own evidence he gave one of the interviews that preceded the $5,000.

Judge Neilson—Now, you can have all the rest of that interview, if all of the conversation was not given.

Mr. Evarts—We can have the preceding interview also. The res to be proved is what passed between this witness and Mr. Beecher that bears upon Mr. Beecher's contribution. It is just as much part of the res if it happened in a conversation prior to the one that he has detailed. I submit to your Honor that that is very clear.

Mr. Beach—We have not given an interview, Sir, upon that subject, I mean the subject of contributions to The Golden Age, or the revenues of The Golden Age and its fortunes in any particular, Sir. We gave in evidence the interview at which Mr. Beecher contributed $5,000 for some purpose. Now all of that interview relating to the subject concerning which we inquired, of course is evidence. We gave the whole of it, I suppose, so that the gentlemen are satisfied with it.

Judge Neilson—Also a prior interview when it was stated that $5,000 on mortgage could easily be got.

Mr. Beach—Yes, Sir. Now the proposition is upon their part to prove another interview between Mr. Moulton and Mr. Beecher in regard to a contribution of a third person toward The Golden Age, which was rejected.

Mr. Morris—And as to who that person was.

Mr. Beach—That interview is not competent evidence against us. What Moulton and Beecher may have declared in the interview to which we have not directed our attention is competent to be proven against us.

Judge Neilson—Everybody will agree to that. Counsel will agree to that, of course.

Mr. Beach—Well, if they concede that, they concede the principle which excludes all the evidence in regard to this interview.

Judge Neilson—Unless it occurred in one of the interviews as to which you inquired.

Mr. Beach—Certainly; they don't propose that.

Mr. Evarts—Does your Honor say we cannot show interviews between this witness, in reference to this transaction which he undertook to carry on and conduct with Mr. Beecher, and that they can pick out which they please, and we cannot prove the others?

Judge Neilson—I mean to say that when they have inquired into any conversation, you can inquire as to the rest of it.

Mr. Evarts—That we understand.

MORE ABOUT THE GOLDEN AGE MONEY.

Judge Neilson—I mean to say, also, that as to this $5,000 or the raising of it, if Mr. Beecher gave any instructions, you can go into that; as to the person who was appointed to distribute or apply the money—that is, as to the act of a third person. That is before us already. This discussion came up in regard to the name of that third person, which I think is not material. I don't see why it is material.

Mr. Evarts—Yes, your Honor cannot see why it is material until it appears and until the conversation is given. Our difficulty is this, if your Honor please: the witness is sworn to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, and we undertake to examine him concerning what was actually said and done between him and Mr. Beecher. Now, there is no authority that I know of that can absolve him from telling the truth as it occurred.

Judge Neilson—He don't ask to be absolved, counselor, and it is not necessary to reiterate the form of his oath; of course we know that.

Mr. Evarts—I submit to your Honor's rebuke, but submit that I am not aware of any rule of evidence—

Judge Neilson—It does not follow that because the witness swears to tell the truth, the whole truth, that he is therefore to tell everything.

Mr. Evarts—Everything that is pertinently inquired of.

Judge Neilson—Exactly.

Mr. Evarts—And, therefore, as it was. How can it be predicted, if the interview is pertinent, that this or that should be omitted from it?

Judge Neilson—We really have this interview, excepting the name of a third person.

Mr. Evarts—We haven't the whole of the interview.

Judge Neilson—Well, I think we will take the rest of it; yet I appeal to you whether you think it proper that this third person should be named. If you say, as counsel, that he should be, the witness may name him.

Mr. Evarts—Very well; it establishes the rule of evidence.

Judge Neilson—Suppose it should be one of your learned associates, would you like to have his name brought in here?

Mr. Evarts—Your Honor is assuming that there is something discreditable. There is not that I know of.

Judge Neilson—Well, I am assuming that gentlemen may have private transactions or gifts which they don't wish to have made public.

Mr. Fullerton—Especially if they were rejected.

Judge Neilson—Do you say it is material?

Mr. Evarts—I will consult with my associates. Your Honor sees the difficulty that where we are dealing with material and important interests of people in litigation we cannot, of course, always exercise that degree of courtesy and consideration that we would be glad to do in reference to third persons; that your Honor understands as well as any one of us that have any experience in the profession. Of course, your Honor has had experience both at the bench and at the bar, and I think your Honor knows that the bar never do desire to press inquiries that they do not regard as material; I mean as affecting third persons. We are not satisfied with the condition of the matter as passing between this witness and Mr. Beecher, as it stands now.

Judge Neilson—I purpose to allow you to take the rest of the interview, because so much of it has been given, suggesting to your own consideration the propriety of leaving out the name of that third person.

Mr. Evarts—Well, perhaps we may do that.

Judge Neilson—You can come to an end in that way, you know.

Mr. Fullerton—Well, I don't know about referring the propriety of that course to the counsel upon the other side. If it is improper in your Honor's judgment, then I would respectfully ask that your Honor's judgment should be carried into effect.

Judge Neilson—I generally try to do that.

Mr. Fullerton—I am aware that your Honor generally tries to do that, and that your Honor generally succeeds also; and if it be improper to give the name of the third person, then it ought to be shut out, because it would not make it any less improper that it was referred to counsel on the other side for their judgment in regard to it. Your Honor will perceive this conversation, a part of which they have called out, was not referred to by the witness upon his direct examination. It is not, therefore, within the rule which your Honor has suggested, that where a part of a conversation was called for by ourselves, they have a right to the balance of it. It is not that case.

Judge Neilson—No.

Mr. Fullerton—But it is a question where they call for another conversation upon their own responsibility, and hence it is collateral, and they cannot dispute it hereafter or disprove it hereafter.

Judge Neilson—It is collateral unless it took the form of instruction in regard to the use of this money.

Mr. Fullerton—Well, Sir, it does not take that form. Let us see just how the thing stands: they say, or they prove by Mr. Moulton, that on a certain occasion he received from some third person, whose name has not been made known, a letter containing a draft and a check, with instructions to use it for the benefit of The Golden Age, and that Mr. Tilton said he would not have it used for The Golden Age.

Mr. Evarts—He has not said that.

Mr. Fullerton—And he has been asked whether or not he showed these papers to Mr. Beecher, and he says that he did. Then he was further asked, was the name of the person attached to this letter used in that conversation? His answer was in the affirmative, and they call for that name. Now, that is the question before the Court, and can anybody see that that becomes material in this controversy? It is collateral matter, and they cannot contradict it. Even if the name should be given, they could not produce the person for the purpose of showing that it was untrue.

Mr. Evarts—That is not our object.

Mr. Fullerton—It is purely collateral, and therefore they have no right to it. They may have a right to the other part of the conversation inasmuch as a part of it has been given, as your Honor has suggested; but when giving evidence of collateral matter, your Honor has a right to stop them, especially in a question of this kind, where they seek to give the name of a third person who has no earthly connection with this controversy, and who ought not to be drawn into it at all.

Judge Neilson—I think the learned counsel was accepting my suggestion not to exact the name.

Mr. Evarts—There is nothing collateral about this. It is not brought in to impeach the witness—not in the least; it is a part of the direct subject of the inquiry, just as what you gave in evidence was the subject of inquiry.

Mr. Beach—That we deny, your Honor.

Mr. Evarts—I know you deny it; it is not collateral. How a conversation one day is collateral and next day specific, I can not understand.

Judge Neilson—Well, now, you can exact this name. Do you ask him to give the name or not?

Mr. Tracy—Not at present.

The Witness—Shall I give the conversation?

Judge Neilson—Everything except the name of the person who sent the papers.

Mr. Beach—Does your Honor rule that the declarations Mr. Beecher may have made in that conversation as to other matters than the $500 is admissible?

Mr. Evarts—When we come to that, it will be time enough to consider it.

Judge Neilson—The inquiry relates to the $5,000.

Mr. Evarts—Of course it does.

Judge Neilson—Meantime you take an exception. Go on, witness.

The Witness—Shall I give the conversation?

Mr. Tracy—Yes; omitting the name.

Judge Neilson—From the point where you dropped it.

Q. You recollect when you left it off; you say that you told Mr. Beecher Mr. Tilton would not accept that money; you said you would not discount that draft; you showed him these papers; now what did you say? Was there a letter accompanying those papers? A. I think there was a letter, Sir, accompanying those papers.

Q. Was there currency also inclosed? A. I don't think there was, Sir.

Q. Now, go on and state what occurred—what was said? A. I said to Mr. Beecher that I had spoken to Mr. Tilton about this gift, and that Mr. Tilton said he could not accept it; that he had no way of returning the money that he knew about; and I said also to Mr. Beecher that I could not honorably take this money from this person and apply it to Mr. Tilton's use without informing him about it, and I did not see how that money could be used therefore. That is the substance of the conversation, Sir, as nearly as I remember it.

Judge Neilson—Now, he asked you whether in that connection you said to Mr. Beecher, in showing him the papers, "This is friendship, indeed." or something of that kind.

Mr. Tracy—Did you make any remark characteristic of the mode of tendering such a fund? A. I think I said something about its being an expression of friendship; yes, Sir.

Q. Can you repeat the language that you used? A. I can't repeat the language that I used; no, Sir.

Q. Wasn't it, in substance, "This is friendship, indeed?" A. No, it was not in that shape.

Q. Repeat the substance of it, as near as you can? A. I have, Sir.

Q. You can't do it? Well, now, was that money received and used, or was it returned? A. No, Sir; it was not—it was not.

Q. No part of it received?

Mr. Fullerton—Just one moment.

Judge Neilson—I think we have gone far enough with that.

Mr. Fullerton—The answer was not full—"Was the money received or was it returned?" His answer is, "It was not."

The Witness—I mean it was not used for The Golden Age.

Q. It was not received; was it returned? A. Yes, Sir; I returned it myself.

Q. Had you any talk with Mr. Tilton about it? A. Yes, Sir; I had.

Q. What was it? A. I told him of the offer of this party, the request of this party to let him have this money, and my recollection is that there was a caution in the note itself not to say anything about it—not to say anything about it to Mr. Tilton, but I could not give it to him, in my opinion, without telling him about it, and I told him frankly who the party was and what the amount was, and he said he certainly could not take it; he had no way of returning the money that was loaned to him, or given to him, and he could not do it in that way.

Q. Was the party known to Mr. Tilton? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Known to Mr. Beecher also? A. Known to Mr. Beecher; yes, Sir.

Q. And a friend of Mr. Tilton. A. A friend of Mr. Tilton; yes, Sir.

Q. Now, do you say that Mr. Tilton said that he had no way of returning it—repaying it—and therefore he could not take it? A. Yes, Sir; he said something substantially like that, Sir.

Q. Was it tendered to him as a loan, or a gift? A. Well; I think it was intended to be either one or the other: it was to be used for The Golden Age.

Q. How did you present it to him—how did you present it to Mr. Tilton; as a loan, or a gift? A. I guess as a gift.

Q. Now, how soon after that was the money received from Mr. Beecher? A. I don't recollect the date of that conversation, Sir; I don't recollect the date of this transaction.

Q. How soon after? About how soon? A. Well, I can tell you the date that the money was received from Mr. Beecher; I cannot tell you how soon after.

Q. I don't care when that was; I want to know what time.

Mr. Evarts—He said this was before.

Question, by Mr. Tracy—How near were they together? A. I don't recollect.

Q. Well, can't you approximate? A. No; I cannot approximate; I don't recollect.

Q. Was there anything said by Mr. Beecher at this time about raising the five thousand dollars himself? A. I don't recollect that there was, at that interview, Sir.

Q. Now, how soon after that did Mr. Beecher come to you and talk about raising five thousand dollars? A. I do not recollect, Sir.

Q. Can you tell whether it was three days or two days, or one week or three weeks? A. No, I cannot.

Q. Cannot tell anything about it? A. No.

Q. Was it a month? A. I do not know.

Q. Was it six months? A. I don't know.

Q. You say you don't know whether it was six months. A. No; I do not know.

Mr. Fullerton—He has said so; and you heard him say so distinctly.

Judge Neilson—Now, I ask the witness, can't you give the date? A. I cannot; I have tried to ascertain the date, your Honor; I saw the reference, your Honor, in the—

Mr. Evarts—It is not a question of date; it's a question of proximity of the transaction, no matter what the dates were.

Judge Neilson—Well, the witness must be allowed to answer.

The Witness—If your Honor please, I should like to make this explanation; I saw the notice in Mr. Beecher's statement that this examination has reference to, and I have tried in good faith to find out the amounts and the dates, and I have not been able to.

Q. Can you tell the season of the year when you had this conversation and exhibited these papers? A. No, Sir; I cannot swear what it was.

Q. Can you tell what season of the year it was? A. No, I cannot.

Q. Whether it was Winter or Spring? A. No, I cannot; whether Winter or Spring.

Q. Where was this interview between you and Mr. Beecher? A. I think it was at my house.

Q. Mr. Beecher came to you and spoke about the $5,000; now, how soon after that interview, where he spoke of the five thousand dollars, did you receive the money from him?

Mr. Beach—Spoke of what five thousand dollars?

Mr. Tracy—Spoke of raising five thousand dollars, I understood him; he has already said that on your examination.

Q. Now, how soon after that was it that you received the money from Mr. Beecher? A. I don't remember that either.

Q. Can't you approximate to the time? A. No; I cannot approximate to the time; it wasn't a very great while.

Q. Was it a week? A. I don't know whether it was a week or not, Sir; it may have been a month.

Q. Well; do you know the time when you received it? A. I know the time when I received it precisely.

Q. On receiving it, what did you do with it? A. Took it over to New York and deposited it with the firm of Woodruff & Robinson, to my credit.

Q. Did you send any part of it to Tilton? A. I think I sent him a thousand dollars—the account will show—on the next day, Sir.

Q. What happened between you and Tilton when you sent him that thousand dollars? A. I sent him the thousand dollars with a demand note, Sir; with a note for him to sign.

Q. In whose favor? A. "On demand I promise to pay to the order of Theodore Tilton," I think the way it was drawn; I think it was; and he returned the money to me, saying that he could not—that he could not borrow any money on demand and give that note for it, because he had no means of answering to that responsibility.

Q. Of repaying? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Well, what did you do then? A. Then I sent him the check for a thousand dollars as a gift.

Q. What did you do? A. What did I do? I sent him a check for a thousand dollars.

Q. Did you accompany it with a note? A. I don't think I did; don't remember whether I did or not.

Q. Or any note to be given for the thousand dollars? A. No.

Q. No communication accompanied the check? A. I don't recollect that there was.

Q. Well, what became of that? A. He used it, I suppose; I don't know what became of it.

Q. What occurred between you and Mr. Tilton after that about that thousand dollars? A. I do not recollect what did occur.

Q. Anything? A. Not that I recollect of particularly; we may have had some conversation about it; I don't remember what it was.

Q. Didn't Mr. Tilton ever introduce the subject? A. He may have done so.

Q. Did he? A. I do not recollect whether he did or not; I don't recollect any specific interview at which it was done.

Q. Did you ever introduce the subject to him? A. I don't remember whether I ever did or not; very likely I did.

Q. Was it ever the subject of conversation, directly or indirectly, between you and Tilton, so far as you know? A. I think it was; yes, Sir.

Q. Then what was said? A. I will try to recollect the substance of it.

Q. When was the conversation? A. I don't remember how shortly after the giving of the thousand dollars it was; I don't remember how shortly after that or how long after that it was.

Q. Cannot you approximate to the time? A. Well, it was not but a few days; I guess not to exceed a few days.

Q. Well, then, what occurred? A. I don't recollect distinctly enough to state, I think, what did occur. There was an allusion made to the fact that I had sent him a note, substantially that for him to sign, and he reiterated what he had said in the note, in reply to the first note that I sent to him, and I said then. "Very well, take this money and you can have the money and return it when you are able to return it;" that is all; that is the substance of what was said; I don't recollect the conversation accurately.

Q. What do you mean by saying, "Take the money?" A. Use it.

Q. Hadn't he used it already? A. I don't know whether he had or not.

Q. You don't know how long this interview was after the sending of the check? A. Oh! it was within a few days, Sir; the natural time of such a conversation. I don't recollect when I saw him after it, Sir; I am trying to answer your question as well as I can.

Q. But you don't know whether he made use of the check at that time or not? A. I really do not.

Q. When did you send him the next amount of money? A. I don't know; the account will show.

Q. I pass you the account? A. It would appear to be, Sir, by this account, July 11th, 1873.

Q. How much? A. $650.

Q. How came you to send him that? A. I heard, either from him or Mr. Ruland, I don't remember which, that the paper wanted that money or something about his wants; I don't know what.

Q. Was there any note sent with it? A. Don't recollect, Sir; don't know whether there is or not. All the papers I have got with reference to it are produced here under your subpoena.

Q. Have you any note or memorandum written to him at the time of paying over that money, or sending that money? A. I think not, Sir.

Mr. Fullerton—What money? A. $650.

Mr. Tracy—Have you got any application from either Mr. Ruland or Mr. Tilton for that $650? A. I don't know, Sir, that I have; all the applications are in the papers here.

Mr. Evarts—We would like them.

Mr. Tracy—We would like all of them.

Mr. Fullerton—All of what?

Mr. Tracy—All the applications from either Tilton or Ruland for this—for money.

Mr. Beach—I don't understand the witness to say that he has any.

Mr. Tracy—Then we want that fact stated, that he has not.

Mr. Evarts—The witness said that there were applications.

Mr. Beach—No; I beg your pardon.

Judge Neilson—He said all the applications, assuming that there might be some, were among the papers. Better pass to some other subject; you only have about an hour to finish your cross-examination. In the meantime, Judge Morris will look.

The Witness—I remember one note, I think, from Mr. Ruland, that I put in there, Mr. Tracy; the check is there, Sir, for the $1,000 that you just called for, if you will look at it.

THE TILTON-BEECHER TRIAL.

Mr. Tracy—We would like to put it in. What number will that be?

[Paper marked "D, 27."]

Mr. Morris—Have you got the date of that?

The Witness—This is May 3d. Shall I mark it off here as delivered to the stenographer?

Mr. Morris—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Tracy—Now the second? A. The second is $650, Sir. That check is also there.

Q. Now, I pass up the application that has been handed us. Will you say whether you have any application from either Ruland or Moulton for the payment of $650 in July?

Judge Nelson—From either Ruland or Tilton?

Mr. Tracy—Ruland or Tilton, I thank your Honor.

The Witness—I had either a verbal or written communication from either one or the other, but I haven't it here. If this be all that is in the papers, this is all I have got.

Q. Well, you have no written application? A. It appears not —

Mr. Evarts—No application that has been found? A. No, Sir. I have made a diligent search for the papers, and have undertaken to comply with your subpoena, as far as possible.

Mr. Tracy—Is that the letter which accompanied the first offer of the thousand dollars of May 3d [handing paper to witness]? A. Yes, Sir; Mr. Tilton's answer is: "I cannot borrow any money, for I see no way of returning it." That is his answer.

[Paper marked "D, 28."]

Mr. Tracy [reading]:

NEW-YORK, May 3d, 1873.

DEAR THEODORE: I inclose to you check for $1,000, for which please sign the inclosed.

Yours,

F. D. MOULTON.

Mr. Tracy—Now, was that letter returned to you with the note of Mr. Tilton on it at the time? A. Yes, Sir, precisely; and the check too.

Q. And the check also? A. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Tracy [reading]:

DEAR FRANK: I cannot borrow any money, for I see no way of returning it.

Hastily,

T. T.

The Witness—That is it, Sir. The next check is August 15th. Did you have that, Sir?

Mr. Tracy—Yes. When did you send him the next sum of money? A. July the 11th—I made a mistake in July the 11th.

Q. For how much? A. $650.

Q. Well, is that the second or third? A. That is the second, Sir, and indorsed by O. W. Ruland. I think, Sir; isn't it? [Check handed to witness.] Yes, Sir.

Mr. Tracy—I omitted to read the first check in evidence. [Reading.]

NEW-YORK, May 3d, 1873.

Mechanics' National Bank:

WOODRUFF & ROBINSON.

Pay to the order of F. D. Moulton, $1,000.

Indorsed: Pay to the order of Theodore Tilton.

Indorsed: "Theodore Tilton."

F. D. MOULTON.

I read now the second check:

NEW-YORK, July 11th, 1873.

Metropolitan National Bank:

Pay to the order of F. D. Moulton, $650.

WOODRUFF & ROBINSON.

Indorsed: Pay to the order of Theodore Tilton.

F. D. MOULTON.

Indorsed: Theodore Tilton.

O. W. RULAND, Attorney.

Mr. Tracy—Now, when did you pay the next money? A. August 15th, according to this account.

Q. Did anything pass between you and Mr. Tilton that you recollect of with regard to the payment of the last amount, $650? A. Nothing that I recollect of, Sir, except that there must have passed a request.

Q. State what you recollect. We will take what you recollect, and not what you reason on the subject. Do you recollect any communication passing between you and Theodore Tilton on the subject?

Mr. Evarts—Conversation of any kind passing between you? A. I don't recollect any conversation, Sir.

Mr. Tracy—You recollect no conversation? A. No.

Q. How came you to send it? A. Upon some verbal or written application from Theodore; some verbal communication from him in conversation with him. I never sent it without such—

Q. Was it for a loan? A. Was it for a loan?

Q. Yes? A. Well, he has probably told me that he was short of money; that is generally the form of the conversation.

Q. Yes; short of money? A. The next one is Aug. 15th, according to this account, $250.

Q. [Paper handed to witness.] Is the check presented, the check by which that amount was paid? A. Aug. 15th; yes, Sir.

[Check marked "D, 30."]

The Witness—This makes the third—this one.

Mr. Tracy [reading]:

NEW-YORK, August 15th, 1873.

Metropolitan National Bank:

Pay to the order of Theodore Tilton, $250.

WOODRUFF & ROBINSON."

Indorsed: Pay to bearer. Theodore Tilton.

Q. Now, what communication passed between you and Mr. Tilton in regard to that $250? A. Substantially the same, Sir; I don't suppose —

Q. When did you send him the next amount? A. The next amount, Sir, seems to be September 12th, 1873.

Q. How much? A. $500.

Q. I hand you the check; see if that is the check by which he paid that amount? A. September 12th; it is, Sir.

[Check marked "D 31."]

Mr. Tracy, [reading]:

NEW-YORK, September 12th, 1873.

Mechanics' National Bank.

Pay to the order of F. D. Moulton Five Hundred Dollars.

WOODRUFF & ROBINSON.

Pay to the order of Theodore Tilton.

F. D. MOULTON.

Indorsed—Theodore Tilton.

Q. What communication passed between you and Mr. Tilton at the time you sent him that check? A. Substantially the same, Sir.

Q. As before? A. As before; yes, Sir.

Q. When did you send him the next money? A. September 30th, 1873, $500. Do you want these papers? [Check handed to witness.] September 30th, $500, appears to be the check, Sir.

[Check marked "D. 32."]

Mr. Tracy—[Reading.]

NEW-YORK, September 30th, 1873.

Mechanics' National Bank.

Pay to the order of Theodore Tilton Five Hundred Dollars.

WOODRUFF & ROBINSON.

Indorsed—Theodore Tilton.

Q. Next. A. Next one is December 9th, $260.

Q. What communication passed between you and Mr. Tilton when you sent him the amount last named? A. Substantially the same; I don't remember anything different.

Q. Exhibit 32: what is the answer? A. Substantially the same; I don't remember any—

Q. Is the check presented the check for the last amount? A. Yes, Sir.

[Check marked "D 33."]

Mr. Tracy, [Reading.]

NEW-YORK, December 9th, 1873.

Mechanics' National Bank.

Pay to the order of F. D. Moulton $260.

WOODRUFF & ROBINSON.

Indorsed—Pay to the order of Theodore Tilton.

F. D. MOULTON.

Indorsed—Theodore Tilton.

Q. Now, the next amount? A. The next amount seems to be a check to A. W. Reid, for Bessie Turner's school-bill, out of that $5,000; I think you did not take that check, yesterday, Mr. Tracy? Or, you did take it yesterday, I think; I think you had it among your checks yesterday; it was a check for $300, December 16th. That is in.

Mr. Tracy—Pass from that, then.

The Witness—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Tracy—Did Theodore Tilton make any application for you to pay that bill at that time? A. The A. M. Reid bill? No, Sir; he had nothing to do with the payment of those bills.

Q. Pass to the next one? A. The next one appears to be Feb. 24th, 1874, $300.

Q. Was the check presented by which it was paid? A. Yes, Sir.

[Check marked "Exhibit D, 34."]

Mr. Tracy—[Reading:]

NEW-YORK, Feb. 24th, 1874.

Metropolitan National Bank.

Pay to the order of F. D. Moulton, Five Hundred Dollars.

WOODRUFF & ROBINSON.

$300.

Indorsed—Pay to the order of Theodore Tilton.

F. D. MOULTON.

THEODORE TILTON.

"Cash'd for Mrs. Theodore Tilton," it reads.

Q. Whose handwriting is that?

A. It is the cashier's, I suppose: not our cashier, the cashier of the bank.

Q. "Cashier for Mrs. Theodore Tilton?" A. That is it.

Q. What application was made to you for that amount of money? A. Substantially the same.

Q. As before? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. When did you pay the next? A. The next was paid March 30th, $400. That is under the letter you had of Mr. Ruland.

Q. [Handing check to witness] Have you the check for the last payment? A. $400. Yes, Sir.

[Check marked "Exhibit D 35."]

Mr. Tracy—[Reading:]

NEW-YORK, March 30th, 1874.

Mechanics' National Bank.

Pay to the order of F. D. Moulton, Four Hundred Dollars.

WOODRUFF & ROBINSON.

$400.

Indorsed—Pay to the order of O. W. Ruland.

F. D. MOULTON.

O. W. RULAND.

JOHN J. MURPHY.

The Witness—I don't know who John J. Murphy is.

Q. What application did you have for that sum of money? A. A letter.

Q. [Handing letter to witness.] Is the letter presented Mr. Ruland's application for that sum of money? A. Yes, Sir; that is it.

[“Letter marked,” Exhibit D 36.”]

Mr. Tracy—[Reading:]

The Golden Age.

Private.

NEW-YORK, March 30, 1874.

Dear Mr. Moulton: We are in a tight spot. Mr. St. John is away, and we have no money and no paper. Can't get the latter without the former. We owe about four hundred dollars for paper, and the firm we have been ordering from refuse to let us have any more without money. Haven't any paper for this week's issue.

Truly yours,

O. W. RULAND.

If you can do anything for us I trust you will, to help tide over this chasm.

The Witness—There is a reply to it.

Q. The last check was sent in pursuance of that request? A. Yes, Sir, and the acknowledgement of it.

Q. [Handing letter to witness.] Is that the acknowledgement of the receipt of it? A. Yes, Sir, that is it.

[Letter marked Exhibit D, 37.]

Mr. Tracy [reading:]

The Golden Age.

NEW-YORK, March 30th, 1874.

DEAR MR. MOULTON: I am more grateful than I can tell you for the noble and generous way you came to the rescue of The Golden Age this afternoon. Truly your friend,

O. W. RULAND.

Q. Did that check of $400 exhaust the $5,000 in your hands? A. I will add it up and see, Sir; I think not; the next check paid is May 2d, $250.

Q. [Handing check to witness.] Is the check now presented the check by which you paid the last amount? A. Yes, Sir.

[Check marked "Exhibit D, 38."]

Mr. Tracy [reading:]

NEW-YORK, May 2d, 1874.

The Mechanic's National Bank:

Pay to the order of F. D. Moulton, two hundred and fifty dollars.

$250.

WOODRUFF & ROBINSON.

Indorsed: F. D. Moulton,
Golden Age,
O. W. RULAND, Att'y."

Q. What application did you receive for that amount of money?
A. Substantially the same.

Q. Substantially the same as the verbal applications which you have heretofore stated? A. Verbal or written.

Q. Not the same as the written? A. All the applications were verbal or written from either Mr. Tilton or Mr. Kuland.

Q. When you have named a written application you say the verbal application was substantially the same as you have stated? A. That is not what I mean to say. I have not any further written communications here, but the applications that were made for this money to me were substantially the same.

Mr. Evarts—They were short, and wanted money? A. Yes, Sir; that is about it, Mr. Evarts.

Mr. Tracy—When did you pay the next amount? A. May 26th.
Q. [Handing check to witness.] Is the check presented the check by which you paid that amount? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Tracy [reading]:

NEW-YORK, May 26th, 1874.

The Mechanics' National Bank:

Pay to the order of F. D. Moulton, Esq., three hundred dollars.

$300.

WOODRUFF & ROBINSON.

Indorsed: "Pay to the order of Theodore Tilton.

F. D. MOULTON,
THEODORE TILTON.

Q. When did you pay the next? A. That seems to be all, Sir.

Mr. Morris—[To defendant's counsel.] Here is a check of $150 to Mrs. Tilton. I suppose you want that also?

Mr. Tracy—If it is from the $5,000 we do. This is August, 1869.

Mr. Morris—We hadn't it yesterday. You called for it then, and we produce it now.

Mr. Beach—[To the witness.] Those items which you have given don't exhaust the $5,000.

Mr. Tracy—That is what we want to know.

The Witness—The whole amount, as it stands, seems to be $4 and $10 since the receipt of that $5,000, paid out according to the check you have got; the account, as it stands here, is $6,100 66 received from Mr. Beecher, and paid out $6,078 15.

Mr. Beach—I think the witness is erroneous; I made those checks amount to $4,916.

The Witness—It may be that I am mistaken.

Mr. Tracy—We will not stand for a few dollars.

Mr. Beach—Stand for a few dollars! I don't know but that you are standing for any number of dollars.

The Witness—I think you made a mistake, Mr. Beach, if you will pardon me.

Mr. Tracy—You have given the last payment you made on account of that $5,000? A. I have given the last payment I made to the concern of Woodruff & Robinson, and this is the total account as it stands.

Q. Do you desire to see this check of $150? A. I don't desire to see it.

Q. Do you know about it? A. Yes, Sir, I know about it. It is dated August 19th, $150, on a request from Mrs. Tilton, I believe.

Q. Was that on account of Mrs. Tilton's bills? A. It was used by Mrs. Tilton on that account, I suppose; I don't know. It was paid to her by her request, I suppose; it is entered in the account.

Q. To Bessie Turner? A. No, Sir, to Mrs. Tilton, just as the check is. Are all the checks, Mr. Tracy, in the account?

[Check marked "Exhibit D, 40."]

Mr. Tracy—This is indorsed by Mrs. Tilton, indorsed by Elijah Lovejoy. Pay to G. F. Baker, esq., or order, J. H. Brouck, I think it is, Cashier.

Q. From the time you received this money until you had paid out the whole amount, did nothing pass between you and Mr. Tilton by which he knew whether this was your loan to him, or gift to him, or how he came by that amount of money? A. He never knew it as money, except from me; the money was from me, if I understand your question.

Q. Nothing passed between you on the subject? A. Nothing passed between us on the subject.

Q. Whether it was a gift or a loan? A. Nothing except that first letter. I tried to make it a loan, and he so understands it, as a loan.

Mr. Tracy—We won't talk about how he understands it. The question is, what passed. I move that that be struck out, how he understood it.

Judge Neilson—Strike that out.

The Witness—I will tell you what I said to Mr. Tilton; perhaps that will do.

Mr. Tracy—I understand you to say nothing passed except the note. Do I understand you correctly? A. Not entirely. I sent the note to Mr. Tilton, as I said before, and he returned it to me, and then a few days afterwards I saw him, and he stated to me substantially what was in his note, and then I said to him, substantially, "Well, then, this need not be returned until you are able to return it"—something of that sort. He didn't want to give me a note on demand.

Mr. Tracy—Tell what he said.

Judge Neilson—He is trying to.

Mr. Tracy—After that did nothing pass about all these other payments?

Mr. Beach—No payments.

Mr. Tracy—Loans?

Mr. Beach—No loans.

Mr. Tracy—Well, loans, payments, or anything you like.

Judge Neilson—Did anything else pass between you as to those other sums afterwards? A. No, Sir; I don't think so.

Mr. Tracy—Did he ever thank you for them? A. Yes, Sir; he thanked me for them.

Q. Tell us what he said? A. I don't remember what he said; I cannot recollect now what he said.

Q. Can you not recollect the substance of what he said? A. He didn't thank me for every amount; I don't recollect that he thanked me for every amount, but he frequently expressed his thanks to me.

Q. What did he thank you for? A. For my kindness to him.

Q. When? A. At his house. I remember one night after I made the loan to Mr. Ruland, I showed him Mr. Ruland's grateful expression to me, and he thanked me.

Q. What did he say? A. He said he thanked me for my kindness.

Q. On any other occasion did you call his attention to any specific advance, and have a conversation with him about it? A. I don't recollect that I did.

Q. You remember that same occasion? A. That is all I recollect at this present moment; that is all that occurs to me at this present moment.

Q. Did you leave this matter between you and Mr. Tilton with the impression to Mr. Tilton that this was a gift of yours—all of this amount of money? A. The impression, I think, upon his mind was that it was a gift, if he was never able to return it; but if he was able to return it, he should return it.

Q. How did that impression arise? A. From what I said to him in the first conversation. You are asking me about my impression?

Q. That related to the $1,000? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. And to nothing else? A. That is what it related to.

Q. Was the subject ever alluded to again after that? A. I don't recollect at the present moment, except on the occasion I had referred to.

Q. What limit was there understood to be then, and why did it stop at this time? A. Why did it stop? I was out of funds, and I didn't give him any more.

Q. Were further applications made? A. I don't recollect that any further applications were made.

Q. No further applications were made?

Mr. Beach—[To the witness.] Finish your answer, if there is any qualification to it.

The Witness—The last conversation that I had with him, that I recollect, was that he wanted to be rid of The Golden Age, that he could not—that he wanted to dispose of The Golden Age, and he did dispose of it.

Q. When was that? A. I don't recollect the date.

Q. Can you not tell about when it was? A. No, Sir; I cannot tell about when it was, even. It was told to Mr. Carpenter. The date Mr. Carpenter can fix when he comes on the stand, if he does come on it.

Mr. Evarts—I don't know anything about Mr. Carpenter.

The Witness—I am trying to find the date.

Mr. Tracy—Can you fix the season of the year it was, or the year? A. I don't recollect when it was; it was in the early part of 1874, I think; I won't be certain about it.

Q. Was it not immediately after your last advance from this fund? A. No, Sir. What was the date of my last advance? I will try to fix it, if I can, for you.

Mr. Beach—May 26th, 1874.

Mr. Tracy—May 26, it is stated to be, 1874. Now, Sir, was not that transfer of The Golden Age made on the exhaustion of the last payment from this fund? A. I don't think it was. That is my recollection of it. I don't think it was. I will try to fix it for you.

Q. Cannot you tell whether it was two weeks, or three weeks, or three months after that? A. I cannot.

Q. You cannot tell anything about it? A. No, Sir.

Q. Now, from the time you received this money, in May, 1873, until it was exhausted, had Mr. Tilton no source of revenue to your knowledge except this fund? A. I don't know that he had, Sir.

Q. Did this account stop of itself, or were applications made to you, and refused by you, because there was no money? A. They were stopped by me when the account was out.

Q. Were there applications renewed? A. I don't recollect.

Judge Neilson—He answered that before, that there were none.

Mr. Tracy—Has any of this money been returned to you. A. No, Sir; not yet. [Laughter.]

Mr. Evarts—It is now four o'clock.

Judge Neilson—I want you to close the examination of this witness, gentlemen. Our reputation, professionally and morally, is involved.

The Witness—I will stay all night, Judge, as far as I am concerned.

Judge Neilson—I wish, as a matter of economy, gentlemen, you would finish the examination of this witness this evening.

Mr. Tracy—It is impossible to finish it this evening.

Judge Neilson—How many days will it take you to finish it?

Mr. Tracy—I hoped to close it to-day when I came in Court this morning, if your Honor please; but it now looks as if it will take Monday to close it.

Judge Neilson—It ought not to.

Mr. Evarts—We don't think it ought to; but it takes a great deal of time to get through with this matter.

Judge Neilson—I think, gentlemen, you ought to commence earlier and sit later to dispose of the witness. I do not wish to be oppressive to you, but considering the value of your time now, you ought to go on and close the examination.

Mr. Evarts—We feel that pressure very much, no doubt; but the feeling on both sides has been that we make no real gain by attempting to prolong the session.

Mr. Beach [to Mr. Evarts]—I quite agree with you.

Mr. Evarts—That is our feeling. It is no pleasure to us to prolong the matter, as your Honor suggests. On the contrary, it is very burdensome to us professionally.

Judge Neilson—I wish the audience to keep perfectly silent, and keep their seats until the jury retire.

Mr. Evarts—We are through with this branch, and we shall try not to take much longer.

Judge Neilson [to the Jury]—Gentlemen, please be in your seats punctually at 11 o'clock on Monday morning.

The Court thereupon adjourned to Monday morning, at 11 o'clock.

ELEVENTH DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

THE CROSS-QUESTIONING CONTINUED.
THE FORMER STATEMENTS OF THE WITNESS BROUGHT UP—HIS PAST FRIENDSHIP AND RECENT HOSTILITY TO THE DEFENDANT—THE BEARING OF THE WOODHULL STATEMENT.

Mr. Tracy pressed Mr. Moulton more closely on Monday than he has done before. The questioning was severe and searching, and the witness was more on the alert than he usually appears to be. At the opening his demeanor was characterized by the most imperturbable coolness, but as the questions were put by Mr. Tracy with increased severity, Mr. Moulton buttoned his coat closely to the throat and his face became slightly flushed as though he were somewhat out of temper. Perhaps the highest point to which the evident though stifled excitement arose was when the fact of the publication of an article unfavorable to Mr. Beecher, printed in a Brooklyn Sunday newspaper, was broached. Having shown that the article was printed from The Golden Age proofs, Mr. Tracy drew himself up to his full height, advanced toward the witness, and, stretching his arm above Mr. Beach's head and pointing his finger straight at Mr. Moulton, he asked in loud, grating tones, "Now, Sir, how long after that publication did you receive the $5,000 from Mr. Beecher?" There was a breathless pause for a moment, during which the witness was twirling about in his revolving chair and stroking his mustache with one hand, while the other was in his pocket. Then, with the utmost placidity of manner, the witness replied that he could not recollect.

Mr. Moulton seemed to delight in bringing Mr. Tracy's name within the pale of the scandal. Thus, when Mr. Tracy asked him to fix the time when he (Mr. Moulton) heard Mr. Tilton's "true story" read, the witness said: "It was in the Winter of 1872. You'll remember it, Mr. Tracy; you were there and went to sleep." Also, when Mr. Tracy wished to know how thick a certain roll of manuscript was, he said: "I can't remember; you saw it, General, and perhaps can tell."

The first step toward the impeachment of Mr. Moulton's testimony was taken at the afternoon session by the aid of affidavits of many prominent members of the Produce Exchange and others, who had sworn that Mr. Moulton, after the Woodhull publication, had said that the story was false, and also that since the Plymouth investigation he had shown violent hostility toward Mr. Beecher. With those affidavits in his hand Mr. Tracy put his questions. Among the first queries was this:

"Did you say to Mr. Wallace Caldwell that Mr. Beecher was a liar and a libertine, and that if personal violence would do any good that you would cut him down?" "No, Sir!" emphatically replied Mr. Moulton.

The witness was asked if he had made similar statements to Mr. Storrs, Mr. Tenney, and many other gentlemen, and although he remembered having talked with those persons, he seemed to have forgotten entirely what he said. In one case, when asked whether he had said to W. D. Barbour that Mr. Beecher was a perjurer and a libertine, he answered, "I may have said that Mr. Beecher was a libertine and a perjurer—as he is."

Mrs. Woodhull's notorious paper, which has been dragged into the controversy, has been the cause of serious dispute. The crevice through which it crawled will show the ingenious character of the warfare carried on by the lawyers. Mr. Fullerton last week introduced the Woodhull statement of Jan. 2, 1872, to show that Mr. Beecher was accused and did not deny the crime therein charged. Mr. Beecher's lawyers thought they saw a weak spot there, and on Friday tried to introduce various parts of the same article giving Mrs. Woodhull's views regarding the marriage relation, and further asserted that Messrs. Moulton and Tilton were also charged with heinous crimes by the same paper, which they had not denied. This step immediately aroused all of Mr. Tilton's lawyers, and they fought the motion so fiercely that the matter had to be adjourned until Monday, when the engagement was resumed. Mr. Beach ridiculed the idea advanced by his opponents, but Mr. Evarts neatly turned the point by saying that the argument of Mr. Beach was a satire on the old proverb that "what is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander." That thrust gave Mr. Fullerton an opportunity to say to Judge Neilson that "the fact that the decalogue contains the commandment, 'Thou shalt not commit adultery,' does not justify their reading the story of Ananias and Sapphira."

The result of the contest was that Judge Neilson ruled out nearly all the parts read, exceptions being taken to those portions admitted.

OPENING SCENES OF THE WEEK.

The court-room was uncomfortably cool on Monday morning, but every one and everything looked bright and fresh within it. The sunlight streaming into the tall windows and filtered through the yellow curtains tinged everything with its hue from the bald head of the first jurymen and the forms in the audience to Judge Neilson's bench and the tables and chairs. Faces that on Friday told of weariness and loss of vitality had grown younger, and the work of the new week seemed at least not to be dreaded. Judge Neilson was as usual in court before the lawyers of the plaintiff and defendant; and as the latter entered he greeted them cheerily with a smile and a nod. Mr. Evarts first threaded his way through the crowd, his slight form a little bent, and with his tall hat carelessly upon the back of his head. He carried a large valise, which he placed under the table, remarking to the jury, with a laugh as he did so, that he had yet to learn that his retainer paid him for "walking across the river on loose ice." Messrs. Pryor, Shearman, Beach, and Tracy, came in a few moments after, and at precisely 11 o'clock Mr. Moulton appeared. He bowed to the Judge and the lawyers, and immediately took the witness chair, in which he had already sat seven days and a half. Mr. Morris bustled in on the heels of Mr. Moulton, with his ponderous packets of envelopes containing the scandal literature, which he placed before him upon his table in consecutive order, as if they were chessmen, and needed to be upon a certain square. Mr. Tilton strode in alone and took his accustomed position, and Mr. Fullerton, who followed him, carried a copy of Woodhull and Claflin's Weekly, over which hostilities were to be opened.

THOSE WHO LISTENED ON MONDAY.

The spectators in the court-room had little to talk about in the morning except the absence of Mr. and Mrs. Beecher. It was finally ascertained that the defendant was suffering from a severe cold, and the curiosity of the crowd on that subject was appeased. But when it was noticed that Mrs. Tilton and her lady friends did not make their appearance, the crowd had a fresh subject for speculation and discussion. The cause of Mrs. Tilton's absence could not be certainly ascertained, but various reasons were given by persons in the court-room who professed to know whereof they were talking. One said she was absent because counsel for defense thought her presence might be unfavorably commented on; another insisted that she was ill, and a third claimed to have learned from one of the lady's friends that she was too sensitive to listen to the testimony given against her by Mr. Moulton. The statement that she was suffering from indisposition received the most credence. Throughout the day's proceedings there were no ladies in court. The Plymouth Church seats were filled by the regular attendants on the trial, Mr. Beecher's youngest son, and the Rev. Mr. Halliday, the assistant pastor of Plymouth Church, being seated in the front row, near Mr. Shearman.

Mr. Tilton was in court promptly at 11 o'clock, and appeared to be in excellent spirits. Upon taking his seat he glanced over at the chair usually occupied by Mr. Beecher, and then turned around and looked at that part of the house where Mrs. Tilton is accustomed to sit while in court. He looked that way frequently during the day, as if expecting Mrs. Tilton's appearance on the scene.

THE PROCEEDINGS.

Ex-Judge Porter was expected to be in Court on Monday, Jan 25, but the gentleman thought it unwise to expose himself out of doors to the cutting March-like wind in the present state of his health. After an apology from Mr. Evarts for his associate's continued absence, the cross-examination of Mr. Moulton was resumed. The various publications which, taken together, make up what is known as "the Woodhull scandal," were read in whole or in part by Mr. Shearman, and the witness was questioned about them.

THE WOODHULL SCANDAL LITERATURE.

Francis D. Moulton was recalled, and the cross-examination continued:

Mr. Evarts—If your Honor please, we had hoped that our associate, Judge Porter, would be able to be in Court to-day, but the severity of the weather yesterday was such, of course, as to prevent him from for the first time taking the air, and he will not be in Court to-day, but I hope that he will be able to-morrow. He has not left his room since he was taken sick.

Mr. Shearman—I have now got the original copy of this paper.

Judge Neilson—Have you marked the portions that ought to come in under this ruling?

Mr. Shearman—We have, Sir; and we have made them just as few as possible, for the purpose of showing what the charge was to be denied by these three parties.

Judge Neilson—Then you will please to read it.

Mr. Shearman—The following are extracts from the publication of Mrs. Victoria C. Woodhull, November 2, 1872. It was actually issued October 28, 1872:

Subsequently I published a letter in The World, in which was the following sentence: "I know a clergyman of eminence in Brooklyn who lives in concubinage with the wife of another clergyman of equal eminence."

It was generally and well understood, among the people of the press especially, that both of these references were to this case of Mr. Beecher's, and it came to be generally suspected that I was better informed regarding the facts of the case than others, and was reserving publicity of my knowledge for a more convenient season. This suspicion—

Mr. Fullerton—No; that is as far as you can read under the rule.

Mr. Shearman—Well, we propose to offer the following as part of the evidence which these gentlemen have produced.

Judge Neilson—Now, read that separately under the ruling.

Mr. Fullerton—Your Honor will understand that so far as he read we do not object. I do object however—

Judge Neilson—Now, he reads under the rule what it may be necessary to read in order to fix his exception, provided it is not admissible.

Mr. Fullerton—Yes, Sir.

Judge Neilson—Read that portion, if you please.

Mr. Shearman [reading]:

This suspicion was heightened nearly into conviction when it transpired that Theodore Tilton was an earnest and apparently conscientious advocate of many of my radical theories, as appeared in his far-famed biography of me, and in numerous other publications in The Golden Age and elsewhere. Mr. Tilton's warmest friends were shocked at his course, and when he added to his remarkable proceedings, his brilliant advocacy of my Fourteenth Amendment theory, in his letters to Horace Greeley, Chas. Sumner and Matt Carpenter, they considered him irremediably committed to the most radical of all radicals.

Mr. Fullerton—That part, Sir, is objected to.

Judge Neilson—Mr. Shearman, it seems to me that there is no prior evidence that would call for that particular clause.

Mr. Shearman—Our theory in regard to that is that this was a charge made against all three of these gentlemen, and they met—so Mr. Moulton has testified—to consult about the charge that was made in effect against all of them.

Judge Neilson—And with a view—

Mr. Shearman—With a view to a common answer or a separate answer, or to no answer.

Judge Neilson—With a view to a common answer.

Mr. Shearman—With a view to an answer or silence.

Mr. Fullerton—It was not a charge against three.

Judge Neilson—That is ruled out and you take an exception.

Mr. Shearman—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Evans—Your Honor will not overlook our general proposition that they having introduced the story as being in mass the subject of conversation with Mr. Beecher we have a right to read it as so introduced by them; and upon the further proposition that we regard it as in upon their side. It is proper, of course, that we should state the views that your Honor may see them.

Judge Neilson—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Fullerton—Well, the more frequently they are stated the better it will appear for us, because the objection grows out of the statement itself without any reply.

Judge Neilson—I understand that the story was referred to in the evidence upon the part of the plaintiff as injurious to the defendant, and calling for some answer from him, or perhaps to be met with entire silence, that the course to be pursued was uncertain in regard to that. So much of the article as has a bearing upon that is received. You have an exception to the other.

Mr. Shearman—Let me call your attention to this fact. In Judge Morris's opening he dwelt very largely upon the fact that no answer was made to this article by Mr. Beecher, and that consultations were held between Mr. Beecher, Mr. Tilton and Mr. Moulton in regard to what was to be done; and it was agreed, as Mr. Moulton says, that none of them should answer. Now, it has been argued from that already before the jury, that that is evidence of guilt upon the part of Mr. Beecher, that the fact that he did not answer these charges against him was evidence to go to the jury that they were true, and very strong evidence. Now, if we show your Honor upon their own evidence, upon a paper which they introduce, that here were charges not only against Mr. Beecher, but against Mr. Moulton and against Mr. Tilton—charges which we presume they will not deem to be true—charges of a vile and odious nature against those persons as well as against Mr. Beecher, is it not part of the proper evidence to be brought in at once in this case for the jury to look at collectively, so that they may say, "Why, charges were made against all of these three men; one was accused of as bad an act as another. One was accused of adultery, it is true, but the husband was accused of connivance with the adultery, of a positive re-introduction of the adulterer into his family. The husband was accused of that more odious crime than adultery, the recommendation to his wife to commit adultery again, and the Mutual Friend was accused of the vile crime of going with a pistol and presenting it at the head of the defendant and demanding a paper." Now, the counsel may say of the witness now on the stand that that charge against him was not true. We presume that Mr. Tilton will say when on the stand that the charge against him was not true. We assume that, and have we not a right to show that those charges were made in conjunction with the other charge against Mr. Beecher, that they were all inseparably mixed together, and that there was no more reason why Mr. Beecher should be deemed guilty for not answering, than why Mr. Moulton should be deemed guilty of taking a pistol and threatening murder, and Mr. Tilton be deemed guilty of the worse crime of reintroducing the adulterer to his wife and asking him over again to commit adultery as often as he pleased.

Judge Neilson—I feel the force of your explanation.

Mr. Morris—The counsel has misstated a portion of my opening.

Judge Neilson—So I was going to say. I will read that and will perhaps correct this ruling, or let the exception stand as it is.

Mr. Morris—But the counsel, Sir, has made a misstatement in reference to my opening, which I have a right to correct right here, and I propose to do it. In speaking of the reference that I made to the fact that Mr. Beecher did not deny—made no denial to the publication of this article, I said that it remained without any denial for the space of about six months. In the following Spring, after the publication of the tripartite covenant, and after Mr. Bowen and Mr. Claffin had visited Mrs. Woodhull to ascertain what evidence she might have in her possession, it was then in connection with those facts and circumstances that Mr. Beecher did publish a short card in The Brooklyn Eagle, and that was six months after the publication of this article, and that was my statement to the jury.

Judge Neilson—I will read that part of the opening, Mr. Morris.

Mr. Shearman—The difference then, Sir, which Mr. Morris now makes between the attitude of these three gentlemen that are charged with this atrocious crime is that Mr. Beecher is presumptively guilty, because he did not deny it for six months, but that others are presumptively innocent because they never denied it at all.

Mr. Morris—Your Honor understands very well that this is a specious statement. Your Honor knows, and every man in this community knows, that Mr. Beecher was the man, and the sole man, called upon to deny them.

Mr. Shearman—We will see.

Mr. Morris—There was no call on the part of the press that Mr. Moulton or Mr. Tilton should deny. Mr. Beecher was the man charged, and he was the man called upon to deny, and he was silent.

Judge Neilson—All that will, perhaps, be governed by the jury in the end. I will hear what further portion you wish to read.

Mr. Shearman—I am not aware that the calls of the newspapers are evidence at all. Here are the facts, and what they call for we are to give.

Mr. Morris—You are making a misstatement of the evidence.

Mr. Shearman—The next paragraph we propose to read is on the third column. [Reading:]

Reporter—Now, Mrs. Woodhull, would you state, in the most condensed way, your opinions on this subject as they differ from those avowed and ostensibly believed by the public at large?

Mrs. Woodhull—

Mr. Fullerton—One moment. That I object to.

Mr. Shearman—Very good. Let us state it first and see what his Honor's ruling is.

Mr. Fullerton—Does the gentleman offer that as a part of the charge against Mr. Beecher?

Mr. Shearman—I offer it as a part of the charge made against these three gentlemen collectively. I say, if your Honor please, that it is impossible to separate the charges made by Mrs. Woodhull into three distinct, unconnected charges against these three gentlemen respectively. That cannot be done. It was a single charge, a charge that Mr. Beecher had committed adultery with the wife of Mr. Tilton; that Mr. Tilton, first indignant about that, not only became, through the influence of Mrs. Woodhull, reconciled to it, but approved of it and rejoiced in it; and she charges Mr. Moulton, the mutual friend, with going with a pistol to extort, by putting it at the head of Mr. Beecher, a paper, and afterwards standing by, a mutual friend, and approving of the whole thing. It is all one transaction.

Judge Neilson—This paper is brought before us first because in the evidence of the plaintiff—this witness's—reference was made to a specific article—a specific charge, a single clause, which therefore ought to be read. There is in that same evidence a reference to the Woodhull story and it became desirable to have what the story was. It was, of course, simply referred to by the witness as a story prejudicial to Mr. Beecher and annoying to him.

Mr. Fullerton—Referred to only as that, and all the object we had in view in calling attention to the publication by Mrs. Woodhull was to show that there was a charge therein made against Mr. Beecher which he did not deny, and which under the advice of his friends he refused to deny. Now, the counsel upon the other side constantly drags in the allegation that there is a charge here against these three persons, that all were alike charged with infamous offenses. There is no occasion to do that except to illustrate the old adage that misery loves company. There is no reason at all, so far as the trial of this issue is concerned, why any charges against Mr. Tilton or any charges against Mr. Moulton contained in that publication should be alluded to for a single moment. It has no bearing whatever upon the issues between these parties. There may be charges there against these gentlemen, but they were not called upon to deny those charges. Whenever they are put upon trial for any offense and the charge in that publication has any bearing upon the issue, then they will be judged for having kept silent, if they did keep silent. I object, therefore, to the reading of that part of this paper under the ruling of your Honor, and if the counsel on the other side takes the responsibility of offering this part, which he now proposes to read, as referring to the charges made by Mrs. Woodhull against Mr. Beecher, why then let it be so understood; but the object of offering it is very apparent. Here is a promulgation of Mrs. Woodhull's peculiar doctrines upon the subject of marriage. I don't know what that has to do with this case. The gentleman may offer it if he chooses, but I wish to know in what view he offers it, whether he offers it with reference to the charges against Mr. Beecher, and if not, then under what ruling of your Honor does he offer it?

Mr. Shearman—If your Honor please—

Judge Neilson—If you will read now—I understand it.

Mr. Shearman—Allow me to say, however, your Honor, that it was the whole Woodhull story that was made the subject of conversation, and that the witness did not say simply that it was the charge against Mr. Beecher contained in that story that was made the subject of conversation, but the Woodhull story, and they consulted as to what answer they should make to it, and the question was raised as to what Mr. Tilton could say in reply, as well as what Mr. Beecher could say in reply.

Mr. Morris—Let the counsel call our attention to the evidence.

Mr. Shearman—I read from the evidence:

Then, Sir [says Mr. Fullerton], what occurred in November, 1872, with reference to Mrs. Woodhull? A. There was a publication in Woodhull and Claflin's paper.

Q. In regard to that? A. Yes, in regard to Mr. Beecher, Mrs. Woodhull and Mr. Tilton.

Q. Now, what occurred upon that publication? A. I saw Mr. Beecher shortly after the publication.

Then goes on the conversation all about the story. Mr. Tilton asked Mr. Beecher how he thought it was best to meet that story. There is not a single case, your Honor, in which it was said that there was a consultation how they had better meet the charge against Mr. Beecher contained in that story; not an instance of it.

Judge Neilson—But the story—we are very glad to learn it is a story.

Mr. Beach—Your Honor will remark from the reading of the evidence that it was the story in regard to this—that is, in regard to this matter, this accusation, the subject of this trial.

Mr. Shearman—I do not see that.

Mr. Beach—You have just read it.

Mr. Shearman—I have read it just as it is written. They consulted for that purpose.

Mr. Beach—Now, Sir, the question of Mr. Fullerton calling for a portion of the Woodhull story, was in regard to this transaction, that is, the charge against Mr. Beecher. Now, Sir, for what was that offered? For the purpose of showing a specific charge of adultery against Mr. Beecher, and the manner in which he met that accusation, the policy which he adopted and the advice of his friends in regard to it. What do they now propose to read? A portion of this publication, not in regard to the charge against Mr. Beecher, but in regard to the charge against Tilton and Moulton, having no connection whatever with the issue before your Honor. And what will be the result, your Honor, if it is read, publishing charges against Mr. Moulton and Mr. Tilton? Why, that we have side issues raised in regard to the truth of those charges, and they must be investigated. If they are permitted to be read, Sir, promulgating false charges on this trial against Mr. Tilton and against Mr. Moulton, the whole merits of those accusations must be opened before your Honor and this jury for investigation, and we are led at once into collateral issues which will exhaust the time of this Court most unprofitably and needlessly. Now, I submit to your Honor, that the only object of the reading of this portion of this publication of Mrs. Woodhull, is to insinuate an accusation against the plaintiff in this case and the witness upon the stand, drawing in issue their connection with Mrs. Woodhull, which connection may be shown by legitimate evidence, if you please, but not by the declarations of that lady herself. The effect is to introduce, as evidence against these gentlemen the charges, the insinuations, the inculpations of Mrs. Woodhull as against these parties, unverified by any sanction whatever of a court of justice. I submit to your Honor it would be a gross injustice to permit that sort of evidence to be introduced.

Mr. Evarts—We are entitled, I think, to close the argument.

Mr. Beach—I think not, Sir, when we make an objection.

Mr. Evarts—Now, my learned friend's last proposition seems to me but a somewhat refined and elegant proposition of the old maxim, that what is sauce for goose is sauce for gander. The argument here is, that when this story came out, which is an entire novel, if you please, narrative, it became the subject of conversation, and the conversation has been detailed, so far as it has been detailed, as applying to the whole story. "That story" is what it is called. It was not in Court, and it was to be produced the next day. It is now here. Now, the argument for which it was introduced was this: that there being a proposition of a charge therein against Mr. Beecher in connection with this matter of Mr. Tilton and himself, that the consultations and the desires to have it answered ending in not answering it, indicate an inability to answer it or an inclination not to tell the truth. But when the substantive matters that bear to the prejudice of Mr. Tilton and Mr. Moulton in this argument are offered to be read, my learned friend says that though the facts may be learned by judicial evidence, yet Mrs. Woodhull cannot be heard to make the imputation. Hasn't she been heard to make the imputation against Mr. Beecher, the non-answer of which is the argument against Mr. Beecher, and, by the same proposition, when her statements against Moulton and Tilton are known to them, and form the subject of consultation for a joint answer against a joint libel, is not the same argument that if they did not answer, then they admit the truth against them? The argument may be worth nothing or worth much; and it is the same argument, it is the same course of evidence, it is the same legitimate evidence that a charge was made known to them, made the subject of conversation, the propriety and duty of an answer to it was made the subject of consultation in the same light and in the same sense, and the concurring judgments were that silence was the best course. Now, if that is sound as an imputation against Mr. Beecher, it is sound as an imputation against Mr. Tilton and against Mr. Moulton. And my learned friend understands that when a husband brings an action of this kind, involving the question of the adultery of his wife, why all the topics that bear upon that issue as between husband and wife necessarily come into play. They are not collateral questions. We have not introduced the Woodhull story; it has been introduced on the other side to bear heavily against our client for his omission to answer, or the manner in which he did answer.

Mr. Beach—The only answer necessary to that argument is, that it is founded entirely upon a false assumption that there was a mutual consultation as to the manner in which the charges of Mrs. Woodhull against Tilton and Moulton should be met.

Judge Neilson—I understand; the question was how Mr. Beecher should meet it, whether by silence or some kind of an answer.

Mr. Fullerton—I beg your Honor to bear in mind that the paragraph which they now propose to read has no reference to the charge against Mr. Tilton or against Mr. Moulton or Mr. Beecher. They propose to read now the atrocious sentiments of this woman in regard to the marital relation. That is all they propose, and if your Honor will take the paper and read the paragraph which the gentlemen now offer to read you will see that I am strictly right.

Judge Neilson—Yes, I think you are right; he would have a right to read it, however, in order to form his exception.

Mr. Fullerton—Well, I only want to know whether the gentleman reads it as coming within your Honor's ruling that he might read everything that related to the charge.

Mr. Shearman—I do read it.

Mr. Fullerton—I do not see what relation there is between her sentiments in regard to marriage and the charge against Mr. Beecher, Mr. Tilton and Mr. Moulton. Because we have alluded in our evidence to this story inculpating Mr. Beecher does not give them the right to prove everything else in the story by any means. If we could prove, or have occasion to prove on this trial that the Decalogue contained the words, "Thou shalt not commit adultery," it does not give them the right to read in evidence the story of Ananias and Sapphira in another part of the same volume.

Mr. Shearman [Reading]:

Now, Mrs. Woodhull, would you state in the most condensed way your opinions on this subject, as they differ from those avowed and ostensibly loved by the public at large?

Mrs. Woodhull—I believe that the marriage institution, like slavery and monarchy, and many other things which have been good and necessary in their day, is now effete, and in a general sense injurious, instead of being beneficial to the community, although, of course, it must continue to linger until better institutions can be formed. I mean by marriage, in this connection, any forced or obligatory tie between the sexes, any legal intervention or constraint to prevent people from adjusting their love relations precisely as they do their religious affairs in this country, in complete personal freedom; changing and improving them from time to time, and according to circumstances.

Judge Neilson—Now, as to that clause, it is merely an atrocious sentiment stated by that writer, and stated as her opinion simply. I rule that out, and allow you to take an exception.

Mr. Shearman—Will your Honor allow me to read the paragraph?

Judge Neilson—The last paragraph may be proper; but, as to this, take an exception.

Mr. Shearman—The next paragraph we propose to read is from the second column:

Reporter—Is it possible that Mr. Tilton confided this story to you? It seems too monstrous to be believed.

Mrs. Woodhull—He certainly did, and what is more, I am persuaded that in his inmost mind he will not be otherwise than glad when the skeleton in his closet is revealed to the world, if thereby the abuses which lurk like vipers under the cloak of social conservatism may be exposed and the causes removed. Mr. Tilton looks deeper into the soul of things than most men, and is braver than most.

Mr. Beach—That is objected to.

Judge Neilson—Same ruling as to that, of course.

Mr. Shearman—What is your ruling?

Judge Neilson—That it is not germane to the matter before us, and that you can read it simply for the purpose of pointing your exception.

Mr. Shearman—Then we will take an exception. The next paragraph is as follows:

His revelations were made subsequently, at sundry times, and during months of friendly intercourse, as occasion brought the subject up. I will, however, condense his statements to me, and state the facts as he related them, as consecutively as possible. I kept notes of the conversations, as they occurred from time to time; and the matter is so much impressed upon my mind that I have no hesitation in relating them from memory.

Reporter—Do not you fear that, by taking the responsibility of this exposé, you may involve yourself in trouble. Even if all you relate should be true, may not those involved deny it in toto, even the fact of their having made the statements?

Mrs. Woodhull—I do not fear anything of the sort. I know this thing must come out; and the statement of the plain unvarnished truth will outweigh all the perjuries that can be invented, if it come to that pass. I have been charged with attempts at blackmailing, but I tell you, Sir, there is not money enough in these two cities to purchase my silence in this matter.

I believe it is my duty and my mission to carry the torch to light up and destroy the heap of rottenness, which, in the name of religion, marital sanctity and social purity, now passes as the social system. I know there are other churches just as false, other pastors just as recreant to their professed ideas of morality—by their immorality you know I mean their hypocrisy. I am glad that just this one case comes to me to be exposed. This is a great congregation. He is a most eminent man. When a beacon is fired on the mountain, the little hills are lighted up. This exposition will send inquisition through all the churches and what is termed conservative society.

Judge Neilson—Same ruling as to that; you will take an exception.

Mr. Shearman—The next paragraph which we offer is the following—words put into the mouth of Mr. Tilton; and the gentleman will pardon me if I do not read literally to show that it is what Mr. Tilton said, because I could not do that without putting—

Mr. Fullerton—Where is that?

Mr. Shearman—I am endeavoring—we are all endeavoring to put as little of this as is possible in.

Judge Neilson—Some of those atrocious sentiments ought to be omitted, I think.

Mr. Shearman—It is this paragraph that I propose to read now, as put by Mrs. Woodhull in the mouth of Mr. Tilton.

I had one friend who was like a brother, Mr. Frank Moulton. I went to him and stated the case fully. We were both members of Plymouth Church. My friend took a pistol, went to Mr. Beecher, and demanded the letter of Mrs. Tilton, under penalty of instant death.

Judge Neilson—That will remain in, although it already appears that Mr. Moulton was not a member of Plymouth Church.

Mr. Fullerton—And that he did not take a pistol and demand the paper.

Judge Neilson—Well, that is the clause referred to in your evidence?

Mr. Fullerton—No, Sir; we did not refer to it at all. They have referred to it upon the cross-examination, and asked if it were true, and they have proved themselves that it was untrue.

Mr. Shearman—That is precisely what we wanted to prove; the next paragraph—turn over the page.

Mr. Beach—We except, Sir, to that ruling.

Mr. Shearman—I propose to read a short paragraph, and to state that, although no name is mentioned in this particular paragraph, it refers to Mr. Tilton.

Mr. Beach—Well, that statement we move to have—

Mr. Shearman—I am offering this to the gentlemen because they object to having a great deal of this come in; and your Honor, as I think very properly, objects to having too much of this matter in. If I were to read enough of the article to show that it referred to Mr. Tilton, I should have to read the whole paragraph. If they object to my statement, I shall have to read the whole paragraph.

Judge Neilson—Well, you can read the passage that you have in mind just now.

Mr. Shearman—[Showing paper to Mr. Fullerton.] If you object to my stating that it refers to Mr. Tilton—

Mr. Fullerton—One moment.

Mr. Shearman—Well, your Honor, I offer, if the gentlemen on the other side do not object, to have it understood and assumed that the paragraph which I now read relates to Mr. Tilton. If they object, I shall then read the whole of a long paragraph, to show that it does.

Judge Neilson—Well, read that paragraph; let us see what it is.

Mr. Shearman—This paragraph is as follows, Mrs. Woodhull, speaking of Mr. Tilton :

I assumed at once, and got a sufficient admission, as I always do in such cases, that he was not exactly a vestal virgin himself; that his real life was something very different from the awful virtue he was preaching.

Judge Neilson—The awful virtue he was preaching?

Mr. Shearman—Yes, Sir; "the awful virtue he was preaching."

Mr. Pryor—So we preach virtue?

Mr. Shearman—The next paragraph which I—

Mr. Fullerton—One moment. Does your Honor admit that? That is, the offer to read?

Judge Neilson—I think we will admit that; we will let that stand.

Mr. Fullerton—We except.

Mr. Shearman—The next paragraph is as follows:

Reporter—Then Mr. Tilton became, as it were, your pupil, and you instructed him in your theories?

Mrs. Woodhull—Yes, I suppose that is a correct statement.

We offer that; and now, if your Honor please, we renew our former offer of the exposition of Mrs. Woodhull's views.

Judge Neilson—That last clause is not received. You take an exception. She says, "I suppose." It is a remarkable degree of modesty on her part, particularly in speaking of a fact which she knows.

Mr. Fullerton—It is not so remarkable as the offer in evidence.

Mr. Shearman—We also offer the paragraph formerly excluded, in which Mrs. Woodhull states her views concerning the marriage institution, and her belief that it is effete and ought to be superseded. We offer it in connection with this last paragraph, in which she says that she supposes Mr. Tilton became her pupil and was instructed in her theories.

Judge Neilson—Yes, it will stand on the former ruling.

Mr. Shearman—And also with the paragraph last admitted with reference to his not being exactly a vestal virgin. Your Honor rules it out?

Judge Neilson—Yes, I will hold to the ruling before made.

Mr. Shearman—We offer it, as you understand, as being one of the charges made against Mr. Tilton, in connection with charges against Mr. Beecher, and we take an exception.

Mr. Fullerton—In other words, Mr. Tilton was charged with not being a virgin, and you believed it.

Mr. Shearman—I don't see the point. As Judge Fullerton's remarks are always brilliant, if I do not see the point, I suppose it is my fault, not his. The next paragraph I shall offer is the following:

I was then contemplating my Steinway Hall speech on social freedom, and prepared it in the hope of being able to persuade Mr. Beecher to preside for me, and thus make a way for himself into a consistent life on the radical platform. I made my speech as soft as I conscientiously could. I toned it down in order that it might not frighten him. When it was in type, I went to his study and gave him a copy, and asked him to read it carefully, and give me his candid opinion concerning it. Meantime, I had told Mr. Tilton and Mr. Moulton that I was going to ask Mr. Beecher to preside, and they agreed to press the matter with him.

I also offer the following paragraph to accompany that:

A few days before the lecture I sent a note to Mr. Beecher asking him to preside for me. This alarmed him. He went with it to Messrs. Tilton and Moulton, asking advice. They gave it to him in the affirmative, telling him they considered it eminently fitting that he should pursue the course indicated by me as his only safety; but it was not urged in such a way as to indicate that they had known the request was to have been made.

THE WOODHULL PUBLICATION EXCLUDED.

Mr. Fullerton—Well, Sir, they are objected to upon the same ground.

Mr. Shearman—This should be connected with what I last read, "They then took me again with them and endeavored to persuade him." We offer that your Honor.

Judge Neilson—Those are ruled out. You take an exception as to the whole or any part of it.

Mr. Evarts—Perhaps your Honor might remember that these also bear upon the question of the efforts charged upon Mr. Beecher of trying to conciliate this lady and to temporize concerning this story by showing that these gentlemen, Mr. Tilton and Mr. Moulton, were acting in her interest to accomplish the result, to wit, the benefit to the school of morals and philosophy of which she was an advocate. We have had a great deal about that, and this bears upon that.

Mr. Fullerton—Yes, Sir; and your Honor will not forget, after that observation, that Mr. Moulton's connection with this woman, from first to last, was simply for the purpose of saving Mr. Beecher from exposure; that his acquaintance commenced when he undertook to save him, and ended when he found that he could not accomplish his object.

Mr. Evarts—That is your view?

Mr. Fullerton—Yes; that is my view; that is the reason I mention it.

Mr. Evarts—We offer this as bearing on that view and contradicting it.

Judge Neilson—I cannot receive it, I think, Sir; Mr. Shearman, that exhausts the argument?

Mr. Evarts—Our exceptions have been noted. I think.

Judge Neilson—Yes, Sir; generally they are. I say generally, if there is any omission of an exception where an objection has been made. I wish to say generally that, if there is any casual omission of the exception in connection with any objection, it can be entered hereafter.

Mr. Beach—I hope not. I trust your Honor will not give the party an exception which he does not take. I am seriously opposed to that rule in the settlement of cases, and I think the party should take his exception on the trial.

Mr. Evarts—His Honor means where the line of exception is already indicated, I suppose.

Mr. Beach—I don't know what he means, but I object to that rule.

Mr. Evarts—Now, have we your Honor's ruling upon this general proposition of ours—that the introduction which the plaintiffs had given to this story this publication, entitles us to read such parts of it, irrespective of the question, whether they, by themselves, are admissible. I understand your Honor necessarily to rule against us on that view.

Mr. Beach—I understand his Honor to have ruled that you are at liberty to give in evidence any part of this publication which tends to qualify or explain the portion of it to which we referred in our evidence. That is the rule, at any rate, for which we contend, and we ask no other rule.

Judge Neilson—Well, I ruled at first, that this statement was brought in in a sense, to a certain degree, by the evidence which has been given on the part of the plaintiff with reference to the pistol scene, and with reference to the story, and we have heard so much of the story as we supposed applied to the matter referred to by that evidence. I think that is all the ruling that is called for.

Mr. Morris—We have heard just the portion that does not apply to that.

Mr. Fullerton—Your Honor forgets that everything in relation to the pistol scene was called out in the cross-examination, and not upon the direct at all.

Judge Neilson—It may be so. I think we will proceed now.

Mr. Evarts—Now, my learned friend has just laid down a rule that, I think, would have admitted all the evidence that your Honor has excluded; that is to say, that we have a right to read any part of this that qualifies or affects the part that they have introduced in evidence.

Judge Neilson—My intention was to let you read any part of this which would point the evidence given on the part of the plaintiff, and show what it was that was referred to—statements, story, or whatever.

Mr. Evarts—That we understand, and we submit to your Honor's ruling, that, in your Honor's disposition of the matter, the parts that you have included do, and the parts that you have excluded do not, come within that rule. Now, I wish to preserve the exception on the question of our right to read all parts of this statement, by reason of the plaintiff's introduction of the part already given.

Judge Neilson—I could not hold that, and you take an exception on that.

Mr. Evarts—We take an exception.

DETAILS ABOUT THE TRUE STORY.

Mr. Tracy—Did you ever read or hear read a paper which Tilton prepared, which he calls his "True Story"? A. I don't know that I heard the whole of it, Sir, read—that I read the whole of it or heard the whole of it read. I don't recollect; read portions of it, at all events.

Q. Well, did you hear the most of it read? A. Perhaps I did—I don't—

Q. Well, did you? Perhaps you did, is no answer at all. A. I am trying to give a correct answer.

Mr. Tracy—I submit that the witness ought to answer the question that I put to him.

Judge Neilson—What is your best recollection about it? A. Well, will you put the question? I am trying to give—
[Question read by THE TRIBUNE stenographer.]

A. My recollection is that I either read or heard the most of it.

Q. Now, will you say that you did not either read or hear read the whole of it? A. I should say that my recollection—my best recollection is that I did not read or hear read the whole of it, Sir.

Q. When was that story prepared—that statement prepared? A. My impression was, Sir, in the latter part of December, '73. If you will allow me to state when I think I heard the most of it read, it was one evening when you were present in my study, when you went to sleep and was not quite interested—

Mr. Evarts—That is not an answer to any question.

The Witness—Well, I am only trying—

Mr. Fullerton—It gives the time, however.

Mr. Beach—It is a very proper way to fix it by reference to an event.

Mr. Evarts—The difficulty is that he had not been asked to fix it.

Mr. Fullerton—Yes, he had been asked to fix the time.

Mr. Tracy—Was that story prepared and read as Mr. Tilton's answer to the Woodhull publication? A. Was it prepared—may the stenographer read the question?

Judge Neilson—Was it prepared and read as an answer to the Woodhull publication?

Mr. Fullerton—That we object to; he is asking for the operation of some mind other than his own.

Judge Neilson—Was it said whether or not it was prepared as an answer to the Woodhull statement?

Mr. Tracy—I accept the amendment.

The Witness—I do not think that that was said.

Mr. Tracy—What do you say? A. I don't remember that that was said.

Q. Wasn't the statement presented to you by Mr. Tilton as his proposed answer to that publication? A. I don't recollect its being presented as an answer to that publication, Sir.

Q. Wasn't it presented to you as a statement which he had prepared, and which he proposed to publish in consequence of the Woodhull publication? A. My recollection is something like that was said, Sir, in consequence of it.

Q. Do you remember what were the subjects of which that story treated? A. There is only one part of it, Sir, that I distinctly recollect; one incident, which I described here; I don't remember what it distinctly treated of.

Q. Well, answer my question. Do you remember the subjects of which that story treated? A. Not all of them; no, Sir.

Q. Not all of them? A. No, Sir.

Q. What subjects do you remember that it did treat of?

Mr. Fullerton—That is objected to.

Mr. Tracy—That is what was called "The True Story" by Mr. Tilton.

Mr. Fullerton—We object to it.

Judge Neilson—Have you the paper in court?

Mr. Tracy—We have not; we have given them notice to produce it.

Judge Neilson—Was the thing published? A. No, Sir; it was not published.

Judge Neilson—Well, unless you produce it, they have a right to inquire into the contents, of course. Do you call for the paper?

Mr. Tracy—We do, and they fail to produce it.

Judge Neilson—If they fail to produce it, or account for it, you have a right to give the contents of it.

Mr. Fullerton—We have already avowed the fact that the paper was destroyed. It is not in existence.

Mr. Evarts—Avowed it here in the trial?

Mr. Fullerton—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Evarts—Very well, that gives us a right to go into its contents.

Mr. Tracy—Now, will you answer my question? I will repeat it. What were the subjects of which that story treated? A. I don't recollect all, Sir, of the subjects.

Q. What subjects do you recollect of which it treated? A. The relation between Mrs. Tilton and Mr. Beecher.

Q. Did it also treat of Mr. Tilton's relation with Mr. Bowen and the causes which led to his dismissal? A. I don't recollect, Sir, whether it did or not. I have a distinct recollection of the incident which I narrated before from this stand, and that is all.

Q. Did it treat of Mr. Tilton's relations to the Woodhulls and their publications? A. I don't recollect that.

Q. Do you recollect whether or not it referred to the publication of the Woodhulls? A. I don't recollect that, Sir. I will tell you exactly what I do recollect—

Q. How long a paper was it? A. Quite long; I forget how long.

Q. Very long, wasn't it? A. What do you mean by very long?

Q. Well, wasn't it more than one hundred foolscap pages? A. I don't recollect whether it was or not.

Q. Didn't it make as thick a manuscript as that? [Showing a manuscript to witness]. A. As thick as that, no.

Q. That? A. No.

Q. That? A. No; I don't think it did.

Q. How thick was it? A. Well, I don't think it was one hundred pages. You heard it read. I don't know how much.

Mr. Evarts—I ask that that be struck out; the conversations of the witness with the counsel are not admissible.

Judge Neilson—Yes.

The Witness—Excuse me.

Q. Did he carry it in a black cover? A. It was wound up—rolled up; yes, Sir.

Q. Well, Sir, what did it say—did it contain any statement from Mrs. Tilton concerning her relation with Mr. Beecher? A. My impression, Sir, is that the letter which she wrote to Dr. Storrs, or the purport of that letter, was in the statement.

Q. Yes, Sir; that is, it stated in substance, then, that, "prompted by my duty, I informed my husband that Mr. H. W. Beecher, my friend and pastor, had solicited me to be a wife to him, together with all that implied." A. I think that is it, Sir.

Q. That was the substance of the statement; did that paper contain any other statement of her relations with Mr. Beecher than contained in that paragraph? A. I don't recollect that it did, Sir.

Q. Did the paper also contain a copy of what you now call the letter of contrition? A. I don't recollect that; I don't think it did; my impression is that it did not—not all of it.

Q. Did it contain any part of it? A. I think very likely it contained some part of it.

Q. Did it? A. I don't recollect; I am trying to answer the question truthfully.

Q. Don't you remember that that true statement contained a copy of all or of a part of what you call the letter of contrition? A. I don't really recollect.

Q. And that it was introduced into that paper as proof of the charge which Mrs. Tilton made against Mr. Beecher? A. I don't recollect that, Sir; no; I have stated all that I recollect.

Q. Was there any charge of adultery between Mr. Beecher and Mrs. Tilton set forth in that paper? A. There is nothing, Sir, except what I have narrated; that is all that I recollect of.

Q. Do you not remember that, after quoting this charge of Mr. Tilton against Mr. Beecher, that Mr. Tilton, in that statement, proceeded to eulogize his wife for the delicate manner in which she had resisted the advances of her pastor? A. I don't recollect that, Sir.

Q. You don't? A. No.

Q. Do you remember whether he said anything on the subject? A. I really don't, Sir.

Q. It may have contained it then, for aught you remember? A. If I had any recollection about it, Sir, I should state it. I haven't.

Q. You have no recollection on that subject. On Mr. Tilton's meeting Mr. Beecher first after the publication of the Woodhull scandal, were you present at that meeting? A. I believe I was, Sir, on the election day. I recollect that as the first, that is what I mean to say, General.

Q. First you saw them? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Do you remember that Mr. Tilton grasped Mr. Beecher with both his hands—grasped Mr. Beecher's hand with both his, and shook it heartily, and expressed his sympathy with Mr. Beecher for this publication? A. I recollect that he shook hands with Mr. Beecher, Sir.

Q. Didn't he grasp Mr. Beecher's hand with both his and shake it earnestly, and express his profound sympathy with him on account of this scandalous publication? A. He shook his hand and expressed his profound regret for the publication.

Q. Didn't he shake Mr. Beecher's hand with both of his? A. Well, I don't remember whether he used both hands or not, Mr. Tracy.

Q. You remember that he shook hands? A. Yes, I remember that.

Q. Haven't you said that he took Mr. Beecher's hand in both of his, and shook it heartily and expressed his profound regret and sympathy? A. I don't know that I ever did.

Q. Didn't you tell the Rev. Mr. Halliday so at your house soon after this Woodhull publication? A. I don't recollect that I did.

Q. Will you say that you did not? A. If I had any recollection about it I would make the statement according to my recollection, but I have not.

Q. You mean by that that you have no recollection on the subject? A. As to whether I told Mr. Halliday or not, as to whether your question:—that is it, Sir.

Mr. Fullerton—That is it! A. Yes, Sir; that is the way.

Q. Now, do you not know that Mr. Tilton was unwilling to make any other reply to the Woodhull statement than that which was contained in the "True Story?" A. That he was unwilling to make any other reply?

Q. Yes. A. No; if you will allow me to explain—

Q. No, answer my question; do you not know that fact? That he was unwilling? I could not say that I did know that he was unwilling to make any other statement, Sir.

TILTON ALWAYS READY TO EXONERATE HIS WIFE.

Q. Was he not willing to make a statement which should exonerate his wife from the charge of adultery, but which should, at the same time, put Mr. Beecher in the position of having solicited it?

The Witness—Will the stenographer read that question?

[Question read by THE TRIBUNE stenographer.]

A. I don't think I could say yes or no to that question, and answer it positively. He was willing to clear his wife, but I don't remember that he was willing to put Mr. Beecher in the position of having solicited. I don't think—

Q. You remember that he was willing to make a statement which should exonerate his wife from the charge of adultery? A. He seemed to be always willing to do that at any time.

Q. Make a public statement which should declare that she was not guilty of adultery? A. I don't know whether a public statement or not; he was willing to make a statement.

Q. Well, do you know that that statement of his called the "True Story;" do you not know that it was prepared by him with a view to publication? A. Yes, Sir; I think, Mr. Tracy, if you will allow me, I think I can answer your—

Mr. Tracy—You have answered my question; at least, I accept it as a full answer.

Mr. Beach—No, Sir; if he wants to add anything to it to qualify it or explain it—

Mr. Tracy—That depends on what it is.

Mr. Beach—Then you had better hear it.

The Witness—I have a recollection of an interview—

Mr. Tracy—Now, I have not called on you for an interview; I have asked a simple question, whether that statement was prepared by Mr. Tilton with a view to publication. He says it was. I submit that is an answer to the question.

Mr. Beach—If the witness wishes to change that question, or correct an answer which he has made inaccurately to a previous question, he has a right to correct it.

Mr. Tracy—Oh! if he has made a mistake—

The Witness—My only purpose was to give a full statement of the truth. My only purpose was to tell the truth fully about it; that is all the thought that was in my mind.

Judge Neilson—The objection which the counsel made was that you seemed to be proceeding to refer to some other occasion about which he had not inquired.

The Witness—I will tell your Honor precisely what I wanted to do—

Mr. Evarts—Well, I submit that our first duty is with this question. The point is this: not that it is permissible for the witness to explain; that we understand; but it does not form a part of our cross-examination. When he has fully answered the question put to him, it is for the other side to take up the examination.

Mr. Beach—Suppose he wishes to correct a matter—

Mr. Evarts—That is another matter.

Judge Neilson—He could correct, but he could not refer to another and independent occasion.

The Witness—No, Sir. Mr. Tracy asks me whether Mr. Tilton was not willing to make a statement which should clear his wife and yet leave Mr. Beecher subject to the imputation of having improperly solicited. Now, I answered that question as well as I could; but I remember an interview between Mr. Beecher and Tilton in which Mr. Tilton was perfectly willing that Mr. Beecher should take the responsibility of denying, and the cards were prepared for that purpose.

Judge Neilson—That is an occasion as to which he had inquired.

The Witness—I understood his question to cover all occasions that I knew about.

Mr. Tracy—Oh! no.

The Witness—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Tracy—There is no question about what Mr. Tilton was willing to do. He is answering to what Mr. Tilton was willing Mr. Beecher should do. My question was, what statement Tilton was willing to make.

The Witness—If you will allow the stenographer to read the question.

THE TRIBUNE stenographer [reading]:

Was he not willing to make a statement which should exonerate his wife from the charge of adultery, and which should at the same time put Mr. Beecher in the position of having solicited it?

The Witness—Now, your Honor, at the time that the publication of the statement was talked about, there was this interview that I have a recollection of, or an impression concerning, and at which Mr. Tilton was perfectly willing that his wife—

Mr. Tracy—I object. I have not asked him what he was willing Mr. Beecher should do. I have asked the simple question, whether Mr. Tilton was unwilling to make any statement himself except one, which, while it exonerated his wife, put Mr. Beecher in the position of having solicited her.

Judge Neilson—But your question does not point to any particular occasion; and, therefore, I think we will take the answer, and see what it is.

Mr. Tracy—Excuse me a moment; the witness is not proceeding to answer my question as to what statement Mr. Tilton was willing to make; but he is proceeding to state what Mr. Tilton said he was willing Mr. Beecher should do.

The Witness—They were then discussing the publication of the statement, your Honor.

Mr. Tracy—My question is this: What statement was Mr. Tilton willing to make?

Judge Neilson—Now, can you answer that more fully than you have—what statement Mr. Tilton was willing to make? A. Mr. Tilton had prepared the statement to which I have referred, called the "True Story," I think that was; and he was perfectly willing to forego the publication of it, and leave Mr. Beecher and Mrs. Tilton to deny. Your Honor, that is what I want—

Mr. Tracy—I did not ask that.

Judge Neilson—I think that is embraced in the question.

Mr. Tracy—Your Honor will note my objection. I object to the last part of the answer, what he was willing Mr. Beecher and Mrs. Tilton should do, as not responsive to my question.

Judge Neilson—I don't think that bears upon it.

THE COMPLAINING FRIEND LETTER.

Q. Do you remember the publication of Mr. Tilton's letter to "A Complaining Friend?" A. I remember of such a publication; yes, Sir.

Q. Did you know of it before it was published? A. No, Sir.

Mr. Morris—That has all been gone over before.

Mr. Tracy—I don't remember that it has.

Q. He published that without your knowledge? A. Yes, Sir; he published it without my knowledge.

Q. Did not that bring out what was known as another emergency in this case—the publication of that card? A. I don't recollect now whether it did or not; I don't think it did bring on another emergency.

Q. Did you see Mr. Beecher about it? A. Yes, Sir; I had an interview with him about it.

Q. A consultation? A. It was an interview; it was talked about.

Q. Did you still advise silence, notwithstanding that publication? A. I thought no reply was necessary.

Q. Didn't Mr. Beecher think that a reply was necessary—that Tilton having spoken in this letter to "A Complaining Friend," didn't Mr. Beecher then think that a reply was necessary? A. I think not.

Q. You think not? A. I think not.

Q. You know you advised against it? A. I adhered to the policy of silence, after a full consideration of all the interests that were involved.

Q. Don't you remember that you and Mr. Beecher had an interview on the subject of that publication, when Mr. Beecher told you that he thought that letter made it necessary for him to deny that statement? A. No, Sir.

Q. You don't remember that? A. No, Sir.

Q. And that you advised silence? A. No, Sir.

Q. Do you remember of having seen in Mr. Beecher's hands, about that time, a note addressed to you containing a denial of the Woodhull charge, for publication? A. No, Sir.

Q. You do not remember it? A. No, Sir.

Q. Never saw it? A. I don't recollect that I ever saw such a paper.

Q. Did Mr. Beecher tell you he had prepared one? A. I don't recollect that he ever did; I don't think he did.

Q. [Handing paper to witness.] Now, Sir, I hand you that, and ask you if, after the publication of the letter to a "Complaining Friend," Mr. Beecher did not present you that and consult with you in regard to the propriety of its publication? A. No, Sir; I don't think I ever saw that letter in my life; I don't think I ever did.

Q. Turn over and see the card? A. No, Sir; I think this is the card that Mr. Tilton—I never saw it—I think that is the card Mr. Tilton was willing—

Mr. Evarts—You say you never saw it; that is enough.

The Witness—I beg your pardon.

Mr. Evarts—Did you see it? A. Never saw it.

[Paper marked for identification "Exhibit D, 41."]

Mr. Fullerton—Let me see that paper.

Mr. Evarts—It is not in evidence.

Mr. Fullerton—I ask to see that paper.

Judge Neilson—You will have to wait until it is put in evidence.

Mr. Fullerton—I beg your pardon; I am not compelled to wait until that time; we are entitled to see it now; it has been placed in the hands of the witness, and he has been asked a question in regard to it. That entitles us to look at it.

Judge Neilson—[To Mr. Evarts.] Is there any objection to show it to them?

Mr. Evarts—As a matter of private gratification to the counsel we will permit him to look at it; we will be very courteous. But, in the regular course of proceedings, it seems to us plain, it is a paper they are not entitled to see until we put it in evidence.

Judge Neilson—I think you can hold it until you offer it in evidence, the witness not having said as yet that he saw it.

Mr. Evarts—We therefore have no right to offer it in evidence?

Judge Neilson—No, Sir.

Mr. Fullerton—But I have a right, on the re-direct examination, to call the attention of the witness to the paper.

Mr. Evarts—No doubt.

Mr. Fullerton—Then I have a right to look at it.

Mr. Evarts—Then you will have.

Judge Neilson—Then you agree, gentlemen.

Mr. Fullerton—We do not agree, if your Honor please. We agree that I have a right to see it before I re-examine the witness. I claim that I have a right to see it now. They say I have a right to see it then.

Judge Neilson—You will have a right to see it, if the witness had made a material answer that he saw it.

Mr. Fullerton—but that they do claim, the answer he made is material, that he never saw it before.

Mr. Evarts—We do not. We would be very glad to put it in evidence, but our difficulty is, we have no right to do so.

Judge Neilson—When he [Mr. Fullerton] calls attention to it on the re-direct, he will have a right to see it.

Mr. Evans—We don't offer to read it. We would be glad to read it now.

Mr. Fullerton—I will show your Honor an authority as proof that I have a right to see it now.

Judge Nellson—It may be that you are right. If it was more material, perhaps I should remember the rule better.

SUGGESTIONS OF A BLACKMAILING SCHEME.

Q. I think you have stated that you remembered the publication of the Tilton letter to Mr. Bowen of January 1st, in which he recites Mr. Bowen's charges of adultery against Mr. Beecher. That was published in a Sunday newspaper of April 20, 1873, was it not? A. I think it was published in The Eagle—yes, Sir, or Sunday Press. I didn't see it in The Sunday Press. My recollection is I saw that letter published in The Eagle. I will see.

Q. It is The Golden Age article, which was published, and the "tripartite agreement," which recited the letter of Mr. Tilton to Mr. Bowen, written January 1st, 1871, in which he recites the charges of adultery which he (Bowen) had made against Beecher at the interview on December 26 at Mr. Bowen's house? A. I don't recollect having seen all this. It may be I was told; my impression is I was told that in The Eagle. It strikes me I was out of town when it appeared, but I was told of the publication of the letter of Mr. Tilton to Mr. Bowen in The Eagle.

Q. Taken from a Sunday newspaper? A. I don't know whether I was told it was taken from a Sunday newspaper.

Q. But didn't you learn it was first published in a Sunday newspaper in Brooklyn? A. I think I learned that subsequently. The point I learned was that this letter of Mr. Tilton to Mr. Bowen was published and I saw Mr. Bowen about it.

Q. That was this first publication? A. I suppose it was.

Q. You know it was? A. I don't recollect of any other now.

Q. As far as you know, it was? A. That is all that I recollect about it now; I don't think it was published.

Q. Do you know how The Press got hold of that letter? A. I do not.

Q. Did you have anything to do with The Press getting possession of that letter to publish it? A. No, Sir.

Q. Don't you know that that Golden Age article as published, when first published in Brooklyn was published from a copy that came from Mr. Tilton? A. I don't know anything about that.

Q. That was given by him to John W. Harman? A. I don't know that; no, Sir.

Q. Did Mr. Tilton ever talk with you about how it came to be published? A. I think I asked him how it came to be published, and he told me he did not know.

Q. I did not ask you that; he told you he did not know? A. Yes, Sir; he told me he did not know.

Q. Did you ask him how it happened that anybody got hold of the proof-sheets of that article that were struck off in The Golden Age? A. I asked him about that.

Q. How did he account for it? A. I don't recollect how he accounted for it; he did not know anything about it, my recollection is; he will probably be able to tell you that.

Q. That publication brought on another emergency in this matter, did it not? A. It was talked of.

Q. And created a good deal of excitement, didn't it? A. I believe it did.

Q. You saw Mr. Beecher at once about it, did you not? A. Yes, Sir; I think I saw Mr. Beecher about it. I think he came to see me about it.

Q. And created a good deal of excitement, you say? This publication of the letter from Mr. Tilton to Mr. Bowen, reciting Mr. Bowen's charges of adultery against Mr. Beecher, preceded the publication of the tripartite agreement, did it not? A. Yes, Sir, it preceded it?

Q. Will you tell us how long it was after you first learned of the publication of this letter to Mr. Beecher, or before Mr. Beecher had promised to give Mr. Tilton $5,000? A. How long it was before that?

Q. Yes, Sir? A. When was the $5,000 given? I think that was May 2d, was it not?

Q. Yes, Sir; May 2d, 1873? A. How long it was before that?

Q. Yes, Sir; how long the publication of this letter of Mr. Tilton's to Mr. Bowen, reciting Mr. Bowen's charges of adultery against Mr. Beecher—how long it was that that was published before Mr. Beecher had agreed to pay you $5,000 for the use of Mr. Tilton? A. That was published April 20th, and he gave me the $5,000 on May 2d.

Q. When did he agree to give it? A. I really do not recollect the day when he agreed to give it.

Q. How long do you think it was after its publication? A. If I recollected it I should have stated it to you. It did not have anything to do with this publication.

Mr. Tracy—I did not ask you that. That we will argue to the jury. I move that that be stricken out.

Judge Nellson—Strike that out. The answer of the witness and your [Mr. Tracy's] observations both go out.

Mr. Tracy—Do you remember how long it was after this publication that you had your first talk with Mr. Beecher about money for Mr. Tilton? A. I don't think it was after it at all; at the present moment I don't remember.

Q. Do you remember whether it was after it? A. I think it was not after it.

Q. You think it was not after it? A. I think not; I cannot fix the date. If you have got anything that will fix the date I will try and tell you, General.

Q. How many talks did you have with Mr. Beecher about the $5,000? A. I had several.

Q. When was the last one before you got the money? A. Immediately before I got it, on the road down to the bank.

Q. Did Mr. Beecher used to say to you at times that he heard that Mr. Tilton was talking privately against him? A. No, Sir; I don't recollect that he did.

Q. You never recollect any such interview as that? A. That Mr. Tilton was talking privately against him?—no, Sir.

Q. Don't you know that you frequently assured Mr. Beecher that the reports that he heard that Mr. Tilton was talking about him were untrue? A. The only recollection I have about it is in the first part of 1871, just before the Mrs. Morse letter was brought to me, that then Mr. Beecher did say something to me about it. Since then I don't recollect about it.

Q. Didn't you often say that you would investigate such rumors, and make reports to Mr. Beecher of what the facts were? A. I don't—such rumors in connection with Mr. Tilton's name, you mean?

Q. Yes, Sir. A. There were rumors that people were talking of.

Q. That Mr. Tilton was talking against Mr. Beecher privately? A. No, Sir; I don't recollect that.

Q. Or that he was talking against him? A. No, Sir; that others were talking against him, he wrote me a letter once.

Q. The question was about Mr. Tilton. A. No, Sir; I don't recollect that at the present moment.

Q. You don't recollect to have ever undertaken to trace up those reports, and afterwards reported to Mr. Beecher that they were unfounded, and that your investigation had shown you Mr. Tilton had not been talking about him? A. There may have been some such thing, but I don't recollect it at present.

Q. [Handing letter to witness.] Will you look at that letter? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Is that your writing? A. Yes, Sir; that is my writing.

Q. Will you fix the date of it? A. I will try to. I will read it and see. [To Mr. Tracy.] Can you read one word here in this letter, Mr. Tracy?

Mr. Tracy—I don't think I could; I would not like to undertake it. It is your handwriting isn't it? A. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Fullerton—But he wrote it for Mr. Beecher to read.

Judge Neilson—Perhaps the stenographer can read it.

Mr. Tracy—Yes, Sir; it begins "Dear Friend;" perhaps we can read it.

The Witness—This was some time, I suppose, in the Greeley campaign?

Mr. Tracy—I suppose so.

The Witness—I cannot read the whole context.

Mr. Shearman [reading]:

T.'s statement out of which Cleveland has tried to make mischief, was passed upon your remark at our table that you would cease to be editor of The Christian Union when it condescended to personal attacks on Mr. Greeley.

His remark was: "Mr. B. will cease to be editor when the paper personally attacks G." C. said, "What do you mean by that?" I replied your chief knows.

You may rest assured that any story hereafter brought to you representing T. in any other than a friendly spirit toward you is a misrepresentation or misapprehension, and I want you to treat it accordingly; then no mischief can be done. Cleveland tried to pump Theodore and also yourself.

I hope you have left no impression unfriendly to T. on C.'s mind.

Now, again, all is right, and I pray God that it may remain so. Right everywhere. Yours, F. D. M.

You can readily understand how C. gave to T.'s statement the coloring of the floating stores.

The Witness—I think I can fix the date of it.

Q. Who are C. and T.? A. Cleveland and Tilton. I will try to fix the date for you as near as I can.

Q. When do you think it was? A. I think it was on the evening Mr. Tilton made his speech at the Academy of Music in favor of Greeley, because Mr. Beecher and Mr. Tilton were both with me dining with some friends, and I think it was about that time

Q. That was the time the conversion of Mr. Beecher occurred? A. Precisely so; it was a short time after that.

Q. That was entirely a friendly dinner, was it not? A. It seemed to be.

Q. The company understood at that dinner that Mr. Beecher was for Mr. Grant and Mr. Tilton was for Mr. Greeley? A. I think they did; yes, Sir.

Q. And it was a friendly dinner and a friendly talk? A. Seemed to be.

Q. But the occasion of writing this letter was some time after that? A. Not a great while; I don't fix it as the beginning of the season for the letter.

Q. Was that the only instance where you had followed up reports that had reached Mr. Beecher of Mr. Tilton's unfriendly remarks, and assured him that his information was entirely a mistake, and that Mr. Tilton was entirely friendly?

Mr. Fullerton—I object to the form of that statement. He asks if that is the only instance of that kind. That is not an instance of that kind.

Mr. Tracy—Certainly it is, if there is anything in the letter.

Judge Neilson—I think he may answer that.

Mr. Fullerton—It is a misconstruction of the letter.

The Witness—Will the stenographer read the question?

[THE TRIBUNE stenographer read the question.]

The Witness—I don't recollect.

Judge Neilson—You mean you don't remember any other occasion? A. I don't remember any other question, and didn't recollect this until it was brought to my attention.

MOULTON'S ANSWER TO THE LETTER OF RESIGNATION.

Mr. Tracy—You have spoken of seeing in Mr. Beecher's hands what you called his resignation on the evening of the 31st of May, in your house? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. That was Saturday evening, was it not? A. I think that was the evening I saw it.

Q. 31st of May, 1873? A. I think that was the evening I saw the resignation.

Q. And it was the next day that you received the letter that has been given in evidence, dated June 1st, 1873? A. I received a letter dated June 1st, 1873.

Q. Did you see Mr. Tilton on that Sunday? A. I think very likely he was at the house; yes, Sir; I believe he was at the house.

Q. What time did he come there? A. In the afternoon, I think.

Q. How late in the afternoon? A. I don't know; somewhere about from twelve to three; about dinner time.

Q. What time of day did you receive this letter from Mr. Beecher, do you know? A. In the morning early.

Q. How early? A. Before I was up.

Q. Does it always follow that is early on Sunday morning? A. Not always; but it was about nine o'clock, I should think, I got the letter; it was before half-past ten; if you want me to fix it, I will be able to fix it accurately.

Q. Did you answer that letter? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. What time of day did you answer it? A. Right away, Sir; in bed.

Q. You answered it in bed, you think? A. Yes, Sir; my wife brought me the paper to answer it with; I think I recollect that.

Mr. Evarts—The details are unimportant, what your wife did or didn't do.

The Witness—Your instructions to me, Mr. Evarts, have seemed to be so peculiar to the truth itself, that I beg pardon for trying to tell all the truth.

Mr. Tracy [handing letter to witness]—Is the letter now presented to you your answer to Mr. Beecher's letter of Sunday morning, June 1st, 1873?

Mr. Shearman—You are satisfied that is your handwriting? A. Yes, Sir; I am satisfied it is my letter, with the exception of the words that are underlined; I don't know that that makes much difference; I don't think I underlined it.

Mr. Evarts—You mean the underscoring? A. Yes, Sir; the underscoring may not be mine; the letter is mine with that exception. Can you tell, Mr. Shearman, whether that underscoring is mine or not?

Mr. Shearman—Yes, if you want me to tell you.

Mr. Beach—He cannot tell you that.

Mr. Evarts—It is presumptively your underscoring, and that erasing is yours, is it not? A. I didn't say that. [The witness refers again to the letter.] Yes, Sir, I think that was the beginning of the letter.

Q. And you yourself crossed it out and wrote the rest? A. I think very likely I did. I don't remember scratching it out.

Mr. Evarts—I will begin the letter, as you did, with the part that is scratched out first.

MY DEAR FRIEND: You know I have never been in sympathy with the mood out of which you have often spoken as you have written this morning. I know you can stand if the whole case was published to-morrow, and in my opinion, it shows a selfish faith in God too—

And then the writer stops and erases and begins again.

Mr. Shearman—I beg your pardon, if your Honor please. As this letter was originally published, it was published correctly, but in re-publishing it in this book, there seems to be an erasure, and I am afraid Mr. Evarts cannot read this writing, and I will therefore read it. [Reading:]

SUNDAY, June 1, 1873.

MY DEAR FRIEND: You know I have never been in sympathy with the mood out of which you have often spoken as you have written this morning. If the truth must be spoken, let it be. I know you can stand if the whole case was published to-morrow, and in my opinion it shows a selfish faith in God—

Mr. Evarts—The rest is right.

Mr. Shearman—The rest is right.

Mr. Evarts—Then he begins:

SUNDAY, June 1st, 1873.

MY DEAR FRIEND: Your letter makes this first Sabbath of Summer dark and cold like a vault. You have never inspired me with courage or hope, and if I had listened to you alone my hands would have dropped helpless long ago. You don't begin to be in the danger to-day that has faced you many times before. If you now look it square in the eyes it will cower and shrink away again. You know that I have never been in sympathy with, but that I absolutely abhor, the unmanly mood out of which your letter of this morning came. This mood is a reservoir of milddew. You can stand it if the whole case were published to-morrow. In my opinion it shows only a selfish faith in God to go whining into heaven, if you could, with a truth that you are not courageous enough, with God's help and faith in God, to try to live on earth. You know that I love you, and because I do I shall try and try and try as in the past. You are mistaken when you say that Theodore charges you with making him appear as one graciously pardoned by you. He said the form in which it was published in some of the papers made it so appear, and it was from this that he asked relief. I do not think it impossible to frame a letter which will cover the case. May God bless you. I know he will protect you. FRANK.

Mr. Tracy—Now, just previous to June 1st, the "tripartite agreement" had been published, had it not? A. Exactly; yes, Sir.

Q. When was it published? A. Published, I think, on the 30th or 29th of May—the 30th of May.

Q. On the next day, June 2d, you got Mr. Beecher to publish the card which has been put in evidence, exonerating Mr. Tilton from the suspicion of being the author of Mr. Bowen's charge, did you not? A. I don't think I said that. On Sunday night I submitted to Mr. Beecher a card, the substance of which he published the next day in The Eagle.

Q. That was June 2d? A. Yes, Sir; that was June 2d; there is the original.

Q. And which has been given in evidence here? A. No, Sir; it has not.

Mr. Morris—No; the one that was admitted was not. Here it is. [Handing a paper to Mr. Tracy.]

Mr. Evarts—We do not allude to anything not in evidence. There was something published.

Q. When was the card that was published agreed upon? A. Sunday night, I believe.

Q. Sunday night? A. Sunday night; yes, Sir.

Q. The card that was published? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Where was that agreed upon? A. In my study, I think.

Q. Mr. Beecher's threat to resign led Mr. Tilton, did it not, to forego the publication of the card which he had threatened to publish on Saturday? A. No, Sir; I don't think it had anything to do with it.

Q. He didn't publish it, did he? A. He was going to publish it on Monday. He was not going to publish it on Saturday.

Q. The card he was going to publish on Saturday, he didn't publish it, did he? A. No, Sir.

Q. When was the interview between you and Mr. Tilton when you first were informed that he intended to publish that card? A. Saturday morning, I think.

Q. When did you learn that he had given up publishing that card? A. I think it was Sunday afternoon; I didn't understand that he had given up publishing the card, if you please.

Q. I ask you when you did learn it? If it was not Sunday afternoon when was it? A. Monday.

Q. You learned on Monday he did not intend to publish that card? A. Yes, Sir, I think it was Monday.

Q. And was not that after Mr. Beecher's threats to resign? A. That was after Mr. Beecher's threats to resign; yes, Sir.

Q. And after you had communicated that threat to Mr. TR-ton? A. I think it was; yes, Sir. I will tell you about the card if you want me to.

[Paper marked Exhibit D. 43.]

Q. Now, I ask you this question: was the card which was published on January 2d prepared by Mr. Tilton? A. I think the original draft of it was; yes, Sir—not as published; it was published with an alteration from that original draft, but the draft which Mr. Tilton prepared I submitted to Mr. Beecher, and he made one to suit himself, which was substantially that card.

Q. Now, the card that you say you dictated to Mr. Carpenter after the Bacon letter, did you dictate that from any paper? A. No, Sir.

Q. Had it been reduced to writing previous to your dictating it? A. Never.

Q. Where did you dictate it? A. I think it was at Delmonico's; in the front room, on the second or third floor of Delmonico's.

Q. Were you dining there together? Which Delmonico? A. Chambers street. No, I did not get there in time to dine, I recollect that.

Q. What time was it? A. It was in the afternoon.

Mr. Evarts—Who were together? A. Mr. Tilton, Mr. Carpenter, and myself were together.

Mr. Tracy—Mr. Tilton, yourself, and Mr. Carpenter were together at the time that card was dictated? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Were you there for the purpose of a meal? A. I came up there to get my dinner. Dinner was over. I promised to go there to dine.

Q. Did the two come with you? A. No, Sir, they were there before me.

Q. They had had their dinner? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Were you to meet them at dinner? A. I believe I was.

Q. You met there in pursuance of an appointment, you being too late for dinner? A. Yes, Sir; I believe so.

Q. And was this card, which you proposed to be published, or this statement which you proposed Mr. Beecher should publish, in reply to the Bacon letter? A. Any answer to the Bacon letter? No, I did not propose he should publish it—to speak it from his platform.

Mr. Tracy—That is what I call publishing.

The Witness—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Tracy—That was prepared at Delmonico's, Mr. Tilton, you and Mr. Carpenter being present? A. Yes, Sir, I dictated it. All the dictation is mine; every word of it.

Q. How many interviews had you had with Mr. Tilton after the publication of the Bacon letter, and before you dictated this card? A. Not many.

Q. How many? A. I don't recollect. What is the date of the publication of the Bacon letter?

Q. June 25th I believe. A. What day of the week was it? This was Friday. I think Mr. Beecher was to have a prayer meeting that night; that is one way I fixed this, and I think it was the week of the publication of the Bacon letter; I think so.

Q. Do you know what day The Golden Age goes to press? A. No, Sir; I don't remember the day; I don't remember that, but my impression is that it was Friday of the week of the publication of the article in The Golden Age.

Q. You saw it in the morning papers on Thursday morning? A. I don't recollect what day it was.

Q. Don't you recollect The Golden Age went to press on Wednesday night? A. I don't know that.

Q. And was distributed on Wednesday night? A. I saw you immediately after, and you can fix— [Laughter.]

Mr. Tracy—I did not ask you that.

The Witness—I only suggest how I can fix the date. I want to fix the date accurately. I didn't mean to make any fun then, Mr. Tracy. I will tell you the thought that was in my mind.

Mr. Tracy—I don't want that. You do very well when you answer my questions.

The Witness—I would like to state exactly what I had in my mind.

Judge Neilson—If it was necessary. We assume it was something proper, of course.

The Witness—He (Mr. Tracy) asked me to fix the date, and I wanted to fix it; and, if your Honor will allow me, I will state how I wanted to fix it.

Judge Neilson—It was an effort on your part to fix the date in that particular way?

The Witness—Precisely, Sir.

Mr. Evarts—This topic we are now through with, and your Honor will observe that it is just one o'clock, our hour for taking recess.

Judge Neilson [to the Jury]—Gentlemen, you will please be in your seats at two o'clock.

The Witness [to Judge Neilson]—May I step down, your Honor?

Judge Neilson—Yes, Sir.

The Court met at 2 p m., pursuant to adjournment. Francis D. Moulton was recalled, and the cross-examination resumed.

Mr. Tracy—Have you seen that letter before, Mr. Moulton? [Handing witness a paper.] A. Yes, Sir.

Q. When did you see it first? A. I think in the latter part of December, 1872.

Q. About the time of its date? A. I don't think it is dated. Somewhere in the neighborhood of the letter of the "Complaining Friend," Sir.

Q. Was it before or after the publication of the letter to the "Complaining Friend?" A. I think it was after, Sir.

Q. Where did you get that letter; how did it come to you? A. I think by Mr. Tilton's hand.

Q. And lest with you? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. By him? A. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Tracy—I propose to offer it in evidence, your Honor. [Handing the letter to plaintiff's counsel.]

Mr. Beach—We have no objection.

Mr. Shearman [reading]:

Mr. Moulton:

MY DEAR FRIEND: For my husband's sake and my children's, I hereby testify, with all my woman's soul, that I am innocent of the crime of impure conduct alleged against me. I have been to my husband a true wife; in his love I wish to live and die. My early affection for him still burns with its maiden flame; all the more for what he has borne for my sake, both public and private wrongs. His plan to keep back scandals long ago threatened against me I never approved, and the result shows it unavailing; but few would have risked so much as he has sacrificed for others ever since the conspiracy began against him two years ago.

Having had power to strike others, he has foreborne to use it, and allowed himself to be injured instead. No wound is so great to me as the imputation that he is among my accusers. I bless him every day for his faith in me, which swerves not, and for standing my champion against all my accusers.

ELIZABETH R. TILTON.

[Marked "Exhibit D, 44."]

Q. You have spoken of what you told Mr. Beecher Mr. Tracy advised you in regard to the Woodhull scandal. Did you tell Mr. Beecher that Mr. Tracy advised you to deny that part of the Woodhull story that related to yourself, so far as it represented you to be an actor or present at any action? A. I don't recollect, Sir, whether I told him that or not.

MOULTON'S PICTURES OF TILTON AND BEECHER.

Q. Mr. Moulton, have you a portrait of Mr. Beecher hanging in your house now? A. No, Sir.

Q. When did you take it down? A. Some little time ago; I forget how long ago; after I got William Paige's portrait; I forget how long ago that was.

Q. About how long ago? A. Within a year, I should think.

Q. Can't you give it nearer than that? A. I don't recollect, Sir; I know distinctly when it was done; that is, I don't remember the date, but I know when it was done, and why.

Q. I don't ask you why; I ask you now for the time? A. I cannot fix the time, Sir.

Q. Do you say you took it down when you got some one else's portrait? A. Yes, Sir; I didn't have any room for William Paige's portrait, and I put William Paige's portrait in Mr. Beecher's place.

Q. William Paige, the artist? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. And Mr. Beecher's portrait was painted by Mr. Paige? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Now, can't you recollect the season of the year when you took that down? A. I really cannot, Mr. Tracy. I would tell you if I could. It is not very long ago, not very long.

Q. Was it three months ago? A. This is —

Q. January? A. January; yes.

Q. The 25th? A. Yes; December, November, October—I should think it was over three months ago. I should think it was.

Q. Is it about three months ago? A. I should think it was more than three months ago.

Q. When was it? A. Within the year some time; I can't tell you.

Q. Oh! yes; when was it? A. I can't recollect.

Q. Don't you know that it is since August? A. No; I don't know that it is since August.

Q. Don't you know that it is since your statement before the Committee of Aug. 5th? A. I don't recollect, Sir, that it was since then.

Q. Don't you know that that portrait hung in your house, Mr. Moulton, after you made your statement before the Committee of Aug. 5th, in your front parlor? A. Now, I don't recollect, Mr. Tracy; very likely it did; I cannot say; if I recollected about it, I would tell you.

Q. You mean to say that you don't recollect? A. I mean to say that I don't; precisely; that is my answer; yes, Sir.

Q. How long had it hung there? A. I think Mr. Tilton gave me that portrait, Sir.

Q. I didn't ask you anything about that, Sir. I asked you how long it had hung there? A. I was trying to fix the date, Sir, by the gift.

Q. Just fix the date in your own mind and announce it. It is not necessary that you should think so everybody can hear you? A. I will try not to, Sir.

Mr. Morris—It is not necessary that counsel should assume the tone he does, quite.

The Witness—I think that portrait was given to me by Theodore Tilton—

Q. I didn't ask you that, Sir. I submit now, your Honor, that that is not a proper answer. A. Well, ask me the question again, General.

Q. I have asked you twice.

Judge Neilson—How long did it hang there in your parlor? He don't ask the precise date; up to about what time? A. Yes, Sir. I understand now. It was hung there in the latter part of 1871, I think, Sir; I think so.

Q. And it continued to hang there from that time until it was removed, as you have now stated? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. And was Mr. Tilton's hanging in your back parlor at the same time? A. Mr. Tilton's picture hung in my back parlor; in the dining-room, Sir, over the mantel-piece.

Q. And Mr. Beecher's portrait and Mr. Tilton's portrait are in the front parlor, and the other in the back parlor—were they the two leading pictures in your house? A. No, Sir; they were two leading pictures. I had three portraits of Mr. Payne, my own besides.

Q. Was your own portrait there too? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. In what room was your own portrait? A. In the front parlor.

Q. In the same room with Mr. Beecher's? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. You have stated in a previous part of your examination that your wife had not attended communion at Plymouth Church recently. That communion is held immediately after the morning service, is it not? A. I don't recollect about that.

Q. You don't know? A. I don't recollect.

Q. Didn't you at one time state that you also was a member of the congregation at Plymouth Church? A. I may have done so; I don't know.

Q. Well, didn't you, just after August 31, the next day after that meeting—didn't you publish a card stating that you were a member of Plymouth congregation, and as such had a right to be there, and that your wife was a member of the church? A. I think very likely I did. I was not a member of any other congregation.

Q. No. That is good reasoning. A. Yes, fair.

Q. And did you state that your wife was a member of that church? A. Yes, I think I did. If you will allow me, Mr. Tracy, I would like to tell you why I think I did.

Q. Well, we are content that you thought so, at present? A. Well, I have reference to a communication that I made after the meeting in Plymouth Church.

Q. So have I. Now, don't you know, Mr. Moulton, that your habit of lying in bed late on Sunday morning, and having company at mid-day at dinner on Sundays, has prevented your wife from attending the morning service at Plymouth Church? A. No, I don't know that.

Q. You don't know that? A. No.

Q. You know that she has not attended the morning service usually, do you not? A. I do not think she has very frequently, Sir, attended it since 1870.

Q. Has she not attended the evening service? A. Not more frequently than the morning, I think, Sir.

Q. Not more frequently than the morning? A. No, Sir; not more frequently.

Q. You have spoken of the letter that you wrote to Mr. Beecher on August 5, in reply to his letter, in regard to his demand for his papers in your possession. Now, I am calling your attention to August 5, at the time that that letter was written? A. Exactly; I understand.

Q. In which you say you will confer with Mr. Tilton as soon as possible? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Did you write Mr. Tilton on the same subject? A. Right immediately there, Sir.

Q. Right there? A. Yes, Sir; put it on record at once.

Q. And Mr. Tilton present at the time you wrote him? A. I do not recollect whether he was or not, Sir, when I wrote the letter.

Q. You say he wrote the letter to Mr. Beecher? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Now, was your letter to him written at the same time? A. Written right away after; shortly after, I mean, by right after.

Q. Was not he present, and did not he answer your letter right there? A. He answered my letter that same day, whether it was right there or not.

Q. Did he draw his answer right in your study? A. I do not recollect whether he drew his answer right in my study, or not. My impression is that he did.

Q. Did he draft your letter to him, or did you draft it? A. I think I drafted it.

Q. Have you got the draft? A. I think I have.

Mr. Tracy—[To plaintiff's counsel.] I would like you to produce that.

Mr. Morris—We have not got it.

Mr. Evarts—Will the witness look among his papers?

The Witness—I will; I will try and find it, Mr. Evarts.

Mr. Tracy—We would like it now.

The Witness—I do not know whether it is amongst those papers now. That is the reason I spoke. I thought Mr. Evarts alluded to my trying to find it elsewhere.

Mr. Tracy—Will you say, as a matter of recollection, that Mr. Tilton did not draft your letter to him, and make his reply to you in the same room and before you separated that evening? A. He did not draft that letter; my recollection is that he did not draft that, Sir; I drafted that.

Mr. Fullerton—This reminds me, if your Honor please, that

I ought to make a correction of something I said before the recess, which I did not learn until the recess, that a part of the "True Story," so called, was preserved; the whole of it was not destroyed. I stated that the "True Story" had been destroyed; I understand that some fragments of it were retained.

AUTHORSHIP OF MOULTON'S FIRST STATEMENT TO THE COMMITTEE.

Mr. Tracy—You made three communications, did you not, to the Committee? A. I made the first one, I think, on July 13. That is the first one I made, I believe.

Q. When was the second? A. The second was when I said that if—

Q. I did not ask you what you said; only give the date that you made it. A. I do not remember the date.

Q. I will refer you to it. A. I think it was August the 6th. I think it was; I don't remember exactly.

[Defendant's counsel here paused in the cross-examination for two or three minutes.]

Mr. Pearsall—Are you waiting for us?

Mr. Tracy—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Morris—What do you wish?

Mr. Tracy—Those papers.

Mr. Morris—There is Moulton's statement to the Committee. [Producing paper.]

The Witness—That is not it at all. I do not believe that there is any original draft of it there—of that first statement.

Judge Neilson—Haven't you it in print?

Mr. Tracy—I am talking about the first statement.

Mr. Morris—I haven't got it.

Judge Neilson—You have it in print, have you not?

Mr. Tracy—We have it in print; yes, Sir.

Judge Neilson—Can't you use that?

Mr. Tracy—It is not the object to use it—my calling for it.

Q. Do you know who drafted that statement? A. My original statement?

Q. Yes, Sir. A. I did myself; I wrote my first statement.

Q. Who was present when you did it? A. I dictated it in the presence—I dictated it to Theodore Tilton; I don't remember who else was present. Is that what you mean by drafting?

Q. Mr. Tilton was present then when it was drafted? A. Yes, Sir; I dictated it to him.

Q. Then Mr. Tilton wrote it, didn't he? A. I don't remember whether he wrote it or not. I copied it from his writing. I guess, myself.

Q. You copied it from his writing? A. I guess so; yes, Sir.

Mr. Morris—He took it in shorthand? A. He took it in shorthand. I think Mr. Carpenter and Mr. Redpath were present, too, at that time. I think so; one or the other of them. I have some recollection of it.

Mr. Tracy—You have spoken of a conversation which occurred at your house between yourself, Mr. Tilton and myself in which you say that his anger was melted. I refer to that conversation for the mere purpose of fixing a date. Did you at any time soon after that see in Mr. Tilton's house a proposed report to the Committee—for the Committee? A. Soon after that conversation with him?

Q. Yes. A. Yes, Sir; I think I did, a long report.

Mr. Tracy. [To plaintiff's counsel]—Gentlemen, will you produce that? [To the witness.] Referring to that report. I ask you the fact whether you know that Mr. Tilton went to the members of the Committee and urged them to accept that report—to one or more members of the Committee? A. I don't know that; no.

Q. You introduced—a short report has been introduced which seems to have been prepared about the same time. Do you know in whose handwriting that report is? A. Yes, Sir: the short one?

Q. Yes, Sir, as it was introduced in evidence? A. Yes, Sir; Robert Eddy's.

Q. He is your bookkeeper? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. From what did he copy it, do you know? A. I think he copied it from an original draft by Mr. Tilton or by myself.

Q. Do you know which? A. Mr. Tilton, I believe.

Q. Do you know whether as a matter of fact that short report was prepared after the long one of which we are now speaking? A. My impression is it was; yes, I think so.

A. Do you know at whose suggestion that short report was prepared? A. No; I do not know at whose suggestion, Mr. Tracy.

Q. Was it at yours or Mr. Tilton's suggestion? A. I think it was Mr. Tilton's idea. It was prepared about the time of the long one.

Q. That is the report that you call the long report, is it not [handing witness a manuscript]? A. I believe that is it, Sir [handing back the paper].

Q. This is the report, is it? A. I think that is it; yes, Sir.

Judge Neilson—The proposed report?

Mr. Tracy—Yes, the proposed report—Mr. Tilton's proposed report for the Committee.

Judge Neilson—Being the second in order.

Mr. Tracy—Being the first in order of time, the second one that was introduced in evidence.

Mr. Shearman—The paper is in the handwriting of Mr. Tilton. [Reading]:

TILTON'S PROPOSED VERDICT FOR THE CHURCH COMMITTEE.

The undersigned, constituting the Committee of Plymouth Church, to whom were referred certain recent publications of Dr. Leonard Bacon and Mr. Theodore Tilton, hereby present their unanimous report.

The Committee sought and obtained a personal interview with each of the three following named persons, to wit: Mr. Tilton, Mrs. Tilton, and the pastor, all of whom responded to the searching questions of the Committee with freedom and candor. Documents, letters, and papers pertaining to the case were carefully considered. A multiplicity of details, needing to be duly weighed, occasioned a somewhat protracted investigation. The Committee hope that the apparent tardiness of their report will be compensated to the parties by rectifying an erroneous public sentiment under which they have all suffered misrepresentation.

I. The Committee's first interview was with Mrs. Elizabeth R. Tilton, whose testimony was given with a modesty and touching sincerity that deeply moved those who listened to it.

Her straightforward narrative was an unconscious vindication of her innocence and purity of character, and confirmed by evidences in the documents. She repelled with warm feeling the idea that her husband was the author of calumnious statements against her, or had ever treated her with other than chivalrous consideration and protection. She paid a high tribute to his character, and also to the fortitude with which he had borne prolonged injustice.

II. The Committee further find that Mr. Tilton, in his relations with the pastor, had a just cause of offense, and had received a voluntary apology. Mr. Tilton declined to characterize the offence for the following reasons: First, because the necessary evidence which should accompany any statement would include the names of persons who had happily escaped thus far the tongue of public gossip; next, that the apology was designed to cover a complicated transaction, its details, difficult of exact or just statements; and last, that no possible good could arise from satisfying the public curiosity on this point. Mr. Tilton, after concluding his testimony, respectfully called the attention of the Committee to the fact that the Clerk of the Church had spoken calumniously of Mr. Tilton during the late council, and had since unqualifiedly contradicted and retracted his statements as untrue and unjust, and he (Mr. T.) requested the Committee to ratify and confirm that apology, making honorable record of the same in their report, which is hereby cheerfully done.

III. The Committee further find that the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher's evidence corroborated the statements of Mr. and Mrs. Tilton. He also said the church action of which Mr. Tilton had complained had not been inspired by the pastor, but had been taken independently by the church; that the popular impression that Mr. Tilton had been in the habit of speaking against him was unjust to Mr. T., and was owing mainly to the unwelcome introduction into the church of charges against Mr. T. by a mere handful of persons, who, in so doing, had received no countenance from the great mass of the congregation or from the pastor. He said that the apology had been invested by the public press with an undue mystery; that, after having been led by his own precipitancy and folly into wrong, he saw no singularity of behavior in a Christian man (particularly a clergyman) acknowledging his offense. He had always preached this doctrine to others, and would not shrink from applying it to himself.

The Committee, after hearing the three witnesses already referred to, felt unanimously that any regrets previously entertained concerning the publication of Mr. Tilton's letter to Dr. Bacon should give way to grateful acknowledgments of the providential opportunity which this publication has unexpectedly afforded, to draw forth the testimony which the Committee have thus reported in brief, but in sufficient fullness, as they believe, to explain and put at rest forever a vexatious scandal. The Committee are likewise of opinion, based on the testimony submitted to them, that no unprejudiced court of inquiry could have reviewed this case, as thus presented in person by its principal figures, without being strikingly impressed with the moral integrity and elevation of character of the parties; and accordingly the Committee cannot forbear to state that the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, Mr. Theodore Tilton, and Mrs. Tilton (and in an especial manner the latter), must and should receive the increased sympathy and respect of Plymouth Church and congregation.

(Signed).

[Marked "Ex. D 45."]

TILTON'S SEPARATION FROM HIS WIFE.

Mr. Tracy—There are two or three mistakes in this, and therefore the copy should be taken from the draft and not from the printed copy. It is not very important, but there are three of them. [To the Witness.]

Now, Mr. Moulton, at that interview, of which you have spoken at your house, between yourself, Mr. Tilton and myself, did you accompany Mr. Tilton to the door that night when he went home? A. I think I did, Sir.

Q. Down stairs? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Did you tell him, while standing on the step or at the door that night, to go home and be reconciled to his wife, that the time had not come to fight her yet? A. No, Sir; I did not use that last expression.

Q. Did you use the first? A. Well, put it in the form of a question and I will answer it, Sir.

Q. D did you tell him that night at the door to go home and be reconciled to his wife? A. I told him something like that, Sir; I did not use precisely that language.

Q. In substance that, did you? A. I advised him to go back to his wife; yes, Sir.

Q. And did you add that the time had not come yet for him to fight his wife? A. No; I don't recollect.

Q. Or words to that effect? A. No, Sir; no.

Q. He had separated from his wife at that time, had he not? A. He told me, I think it was on that morning, that he had left her the night before on learning that she had gone to the—

Q. In consequence of her going before the Committee? A. Yes, Sir, in consequence of her having gone before the Committee. Whatever day that was, he told me on the morning after that, I think.

Mr. Fullerton—Told you what? A. On the morning after that, on the morning after his wife had been before the Committee, Mr. Tilton told me that he had left the house.

Mr. Tracy—That she had come home that night, and told him that she had been before the Committee? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Did he tell you that he was in bed?

Mr. Everts—No matter what passed between them; he said that he had left in consequence.

Q. And you understood that he went back that night to his wife, did you not? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. And the next morning, or the next morning but one—which was it that he presented to you this report? A. I don't recollect whether it was the next morning or the next morning but one. He submitted it to you and me together when he did submit it.

Q. How long did he and his wife remain together after that? A. I don't recollect how long. She left him, I think, on Saturday, if I recollect right—Saturday of that week.

Q. Was it until she left and went to Mr. Ovington's; did they remain together until she left and went to Ovington's? A. Whatever day it was, Sir, she went to Mr. Ovington's; I cannot recollect.

Q. I did not ask you the date. As a matter of fact they remained together, didn't they, until his wife left home? A. I don't know how long they remained together. I understood they did.

Q. Did Mr. Beecher at any time ask you for the return of the paper that you now call the letter of contrition? A. Ask me for it—no.

Q. Never asked you for it? A. No.

Q. Did you at any time ever tell him that you had burned that paper? A. Never.

Q. You never did? A. Never.

Q. His statement that you had so told him had been published in the newspapers before you made either of your statements, had it not?

Mr. Beach—Wait one moment. We object to that.

Mr. Tracy—I will change the question. Had his statement—what is known as Mr. Beecher's statement before the Committee, and his cross-examination, been published before you made either of your statements? As I think that has transpired already. A. Yes, Sir; yes, I think—yes, certainly, before I made either of my statements. No, I made the first—

Q. Before you published either of them? A. No; my statement of July 18 was published before that. The short statement of July 18 was published on July 14, in which that letter was referred to.

Q. I mean either of your long statements.

Judge Neilson—Either of the two last statements? A. No, Sir.

Mr. Tracy—Both of those were published after Mr. Beecher's statement? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. The first long statement of yours was prepared before Beecher's statement was published, was it not? A. Not altogether, I believe.

Q. The first statement that Gen. Butler prepared for you. Well, I don't know whether it was the first that he prepared or not, but the first that was published in The Graphic? A. Before Mr. Beecher prepared his?

Q. Before Mr. Beecher published his? A. Before Mr. Beecher published his?

Q. Before it was published? A. Before Mr. Beecher's was published—that is the question you ask me?

Q. Yes, Sir. A. Whether that statement was published before Mr. Beecher's statement was published?

Q. Yes, Sir. A. I think it was; yes, Sir. What day was Mr. Beecher's published, Mr. Tracy?

Q. Aug. 14. A. What day was my statement made to the Committee, do you remember?

Mr. Shearman—Aug. 5.

THE MOULTON-BEECHER FRIENDSHIP QUICKLY TURNED TO ENMITY.

Mr. Tracy—Have you recently expressed hostility—violent hostility—towards Mr. Beecher? A. I don't recollect that I have. How recently, Sir?

Q. Within three months? A. Within three months?

Q. Yes, Sir. A. I think very likely—

Mr. Beach—A general question of that kind is not admissible. It must be pointed to time and place and some circumstance.

Mr. Tracy—it is—within three months.

Judge Neilson—Well, he has answered it.

The Witness—What is it now?

Mr. Tracy—I say within three months; haven't you since the publication of his statement?

Mr. Beach—To whom?

Mr. Tracy—We will get at it.

Mr. Beach—No, Sir—

Judge Neilson—You must point his attention to time and place, or the persons present.

Mr. Evarts—It is not a question of contradicting him, it is asking him a question.

Judge Neilson—I don't know.

Mr. Evarts—When it becomes a question of contradicting then we are obliged to give time and place.

Judge Neilson—I think it would be fair to the witness to specify time and place.

Mr. Evarts—How do we know anything about it? Your Honor is assuming that the question is asked for the purpose of contradicting him, and that we have the means of contradicting him. Your Honor is entirely right, of course, if that were the case. Whenever you wish to proceed thus to impeach, we do not differ as to what the rules are, but we have a right, as matter of direct evidence of the witness's own mouth, to prove that he has expressed hostility towards Mr. Beecher.

Judge Neilson—Undoubtedly.

Mr. Evarts—It is not with a view of contradicting him; it is with a view of proving it.

THE WITNESS AGGRESSIVE.

Mr. Beach—There is no doubt of that, Sir, that they may prove that the witness has hostility—that he entertains ill feeling; but when they ask for the declaration of the witness, at any time, or for any purpose, the rule is invariable that they must direct the attention of the witness to the time and the place and the person to whom the expression was made.

Mr. Evarts—I think my friend will see that it is only as a foundation to contradict him that we must do that.

Mr. Beach—Well we do not know whether they are making a foundation to contradict or not.

Mr. Evarts—The way would be that when we brought some one up to contradict him, some one would say we had not directed his attention to the time and place.

Judge Neilson—There are two considerations in regard to it; one is as to the question of fairness to the witness, the other of policy. You should direct his attention, if you can, to the occasion.

Mr. Tracy—If he says he is, we may ask him when and where.

Judge Neilson—Let him answer the question. Repeat the question, Mr. Stenographer.

Mr. Fullerton—He has answered.

THE TRIBUNE stenographer [reading]:

Q. Have you recently expressed hostility—violent hostility towards Mr. Beecher? A. I don't recollect that I have. How recently, Sir?

Q. Within three months? A. Within three months?

Q. Yes, Sir. A. I think very likely—

The Witness—What do you mean by violent hostility?

Mr. Tracy—I put that question to you.

Judge Neilson—As you understand the word, have you expressed violent hostility or not? A. Yes, Sir; I have expressed hostility to Mr. Beecher.

Mr. Tracy—Have you expressed violent hostility to him? A. I have expressed hostility violently. [Laughter.]

Q. Have you expressed a determination to do him great violence, or a willingness to do him great violence? A. Not that I remember—not great violence.

Q. Do you know Mr. Caldwell? A. Yes, Sir; I know him.

Q. H. S. Caldwell? A. Yes; Sir; I know him.

Q. Did you say to him, within a month or thereabouts, in your house, "Mr. Beecher is a liar and a libertine, and, damn him, if personal violence would do any good, I would cut him down in a minute?" A. No, sir.

Q. Have you said that within two months to Mr. Caldwell? A. No, Sir.

Q. Did you ever say it to Mr. Caldwell? A. No, Sir.

Q. Or anything like it? A. No, nothing like that. I thought he was a sneak—

Mr. Evarts—What do you say? A. I thought Caldwell was a sneak when he came to the house.

Mr. Evarts—We ask to strike that out.

Judge Neilson—Strike that out.

Mr. Fullerton—He ought to have been struck out when he came to the house—

Judge Neilson—No laughter! Stenographer, strike that out; that was not an answer to the question.

Mr. Tracy—Did you express a similar sentiment to Augustus Storrs within three months at your house?

Mr. Beach—Oh! a similar sentiment—

Mr. Tracy—Well, the same sentiment towards Mr. Beecher? A. To Augustus Storrs?

Q. To Augustus Storrs, in presence of his brother Charles? A. No.

Q. Or did you to Charles, in presence of his brother Augustus? A. No.

Q. Didn't you say in their presence, at your house—since the termination of the libel suit of Miss Proctor against you—didn't you say to them in your house, that Mr. Beecher was a sneak and liar; and that if they said so, damn him, you would shoot him? A. That if what?

Q. If they said so? A. If they said so, I would shoot him?

Q. Yes.

Judge Neilson—Did you say that? A. I don't exactly understand the form of the question. No; I didn't say that.

Mr. Tracy—Did you say anything in substance like that? A. No.

Q. Did you express any willingness to commit violence against Mr. Beecher in their presence? A. No.

Q. Did you say that he was a sneak and liar, in their presence? A. I don't recollect that I said that.

Q. Did you express any willingness or disposition to commit violence against Mr. Beecher? A. No.

Q. Did you express any hostile sentiment toward Mr. Beecher in their presence? A. I think I did, Sir; I will tell you all I said, as near as I recollect, if you would like to have it.

Q. That will be proper when they tell you to tell us what you said? A. All right.

Q. Have you not in conversation with Mr. A. W. Tenney, United States District Attorney of this District, recently expressed yourself in violent terms of hatred towards Mr. Beecher? A. In violent terms of hatred?

Q. Yes. A. Not in violent terms of love; I don't know that I said I hated him.

Q. That is not my question; I don't ask you that. I ask you to answer it—on the ferry-boat on the East River?

Mr. Beach—The expression, or the substance of the expression, should be given, Sir. "Violent terms of hatred" does not call for the declaration of the witness as it was made.

Judge Neilson—Well, the practice is no doubt to ask him if he did not make a certain specific statement, or in substance something like that. The question you do put depends upon the construction—it is somewhat a matter of construction. What one person might understand by violence, another might not.

Mr. Tracy—Certainly, that argument will be in order when we offer to contradict him, if we do not amplify this statement.

Judge Neilson—It is not an argument; it is a suggestion by the Court.

Mr. Evarts—We do not differ as to the basis of contradiction, but we do claim the right to have the witness's first answer which may be sufficient.

Judge Neilson—Now, the question is as to what he said to Mr. Tenney.

The Witness—Well, Sir, what is the question?

Mr. Tracy—The question is, have you not in conversation with Mr. A. W. Tenney expressed yourself in violent terms of hatred towards Mr. Beecher within three months?

Mr. Fullerton—Well, Sir, that is objected to. Suppose they should produce Mr. Tenney, and ask him whether Mr. Moulton—

Judge Neilson—They would not upon that general statement.

Mr. Fullerton—Certainly not; but then they would claim the right to prove by Mr. Tenney what Mr. Moulton said; and then, if we objected, of course we would be subjected to criticism.

Judge Neilson—Before they call the District Attorney they will have to ask this gentleman what he said.

Mr. Fullerton—If the statement is given in evidence, then the jury will judge whether it is violent or not.

Mr. Evarts—If your Honor please, then we do not differ as to the contradiction. The objection is to be made to us when we attempt to contradict that we have not laid the basis. That is the ordinary course of this matter. We are endeavoring to prove by this witness, without contradiction and without support, that he has said these things under the general rule.

Judge Neilson—Now, the question is whether you said that to Mr. Tenney on the boat.

Mr. Beach—That is not the question; your Honor gets the question right, but the counsel do not.

Judge Neilson—I bring the boat in.

[Question read by THE TRIBUNE stenographer.]

A. I expressed myself against Mr. Beecher.

Q. To Mr. Tenney? A. Yes, I think so.

Q. Didn't you express yourself violently? A. Perhaps I did; I don't recollect now the expression that I used distinctly.

Q. Didn't you call him a liar? A. I don't recollect that I did; I might have done so.

Q. Sneak? A. I don't recollect that I did.

Q. And a libertine? A. I don't recollect.

Q. Accompanying each one with an oath? A. I don't recollect that I did, Sir.

Q. Well, you say that you did not? A. If I had any recollection about it I should state my recollection, Sir. I don't remember the language.

Q. Well, that is to say you have no recollection upon the subject? A. I don't recollect the language. I expressed myself, I guess, on two occasions to Mr. Tenney against Mr. Beecher instead of one.

Q. When was the other? A. I don't know. I think in Montague-st., somewhere.

Q. How recently? A. Not very long ago. I don't recollect how long ago.

Q. Have you not repeatedly declared your intention to crush Mr. Beecher at any cost? A. No; I don't think I have said that I would crush him at any cost.

Q. Well, have you avowed your determination to crush him? A. No; I think not; I have not put it in that language, I think.

Q. Have you avowed your intention to drive him out of Brooklyn? A. No, I think not.

Q. Didn't you say to Augustus Storrs, in presence of his brother Charles, or when the two were present, didn't you say that you intended to drive Mr. Beecher out of Brooklyn? A. No, I didn't; I may have said I thought he ought to be driven, but I didn't say that I was going to drive him.

Q. You did say that he ought to be driven out of Brooklyn? A. No, I don't recollect that.

Q. Oh! you don't recollect that? While the Investigating Committee was in session, didn't you send for the brother of a member of that Committee, and have him call upon you—a brother of a member of that Committee, and threaten him that, unless at least one member of the Committee dissented from their report in favor of Mr. Beecher, you would publish, or cause to be published, a scandalous statement about a lady? A. No.

Q. You didn't? A. No; I will tell you what I said to him, if you want to know.

Q. Answer my questions first, and then we will see. A. All right.

Q. Pending the investigation? A. I did send for the brother of a member of that Committee; that part is true.

Q. Pending the investigation and before the report was made did you send for Charles Storrs, and have an interview with him? A. I did; yes, Sir.

Q. Did you tell him that if his brother Augustus hadn't signed the report he must not, or, if he had, he must take his name from it? A. I did not tell him that.

Q. Did you tell him that if he did not do one or the other, that is, if he didn't omit to sign, or take his name from it, if he had signed, you should make a publication concerning a person that would break the heart of Charles Storrs? A. No, I didn't.

Q. You didn't state that? A. No.

Q. And when he asked you if you meant Miss Proctor, didn't you say, "I call no names?" A. I said "I call no names."

Q. But it was "a person that would break your heart?" A. I said I called no names, but I didn't say anything about breaking hearts.

Q. If you did not use that language, didn't you say it was a lady who—a friend of his? A. I don't know whether I said it was a friend of his or not, Sir.

Q. Then did you threaten to make the publication? A. No.

Q. Concerning some person, if Mr. Augustus Storrs didn't either refuse to sign the report, or if he had signed it, to take his name from it? A. No I didn't threaten, Sir.

Q. Did you threaten Charles Storrs that you would make such a publication in any contingency? A. No.

Q. Did you state to him that you would make such a publication, or that you might make such a publication? A. I stated to him that I might make a publication.

Q. About whom? A. It might be necessary to refer to a person in the publication that it would be necessary for me to make.

Q. How did you describe the person? A. I don't think I described her. I think he asked me if I referred to Miss Proctor—

Q. Then what did you say to that? A. I told him that I should not mention any names.

Q. Did you say in any way that it was a person that would break his heart, or that it was a person in whom he was interested, a friend of his? A. Don't recollect that language; no.

Q. Was Miss Proctor an inmate of Mr. Storrs's family at the time?

Judge Neilson—One moment, now. The other day I professed a very earnest solicitude that third persons should remain unnamed—was very emphatic, I think, for me, when Miss Proctor was named by some person: I requested that those names should be omitted, and they might be omitted from your question, I think: I want that omitted out of the answer.

Mr. Fullerton—If your Honor please, it has not been omitted; your Honor's wish has not been complied with, in that respect.

Judge Neilson—I don't know whether that was when Mr. Tracy was here, or before he came in.

Mr. Moulton—He was here.

Judge Neilson—But I certainly did wish, and expressed that wish, that those names of third persons should be left out. I think it is a great pity that you should commit the error of bringing their names in.

Mr. Evarts—The witness brought her name in.

Mr. Fullerton—No, he did not.

Mr. Evarts—He did directly.

Mr. Fullerton—No, he did not, Sir.

Mr. Evarts—He said at this interview Mr. Storrs asked him if he meant Miss Proctor.

Judge Neilson—That is the question put by Gen. Tracy.

Mr. Evarts—It was not a question put by him. There was no question put by us that reached any person. The question was, whether he told him that if he didn't do so and so, he, this witness would publish a statement, concerning a person, that would break his heart. Now, your Honor certainly does not mean to say that, when we are trying this issue between these parties, we haven't a right to prove such statements as that.

Judge Neilson—Said the question would, of course.

Mr. Evarts—No; then the witness says, "I did not. He asked me if I meant Miss Proctor."

Mr. Morris—Now, the name of Miss Proctor was mentioned by counsel first.

Mr. Evarts—Look at the stenographer's notes.

Judge Neilson—I don't think Mr. Tracy was present when I suggested to Judge Porter not to mention the names of third persons.

Mr. Tracy—Oh! I was.

Mr. Beach—Mr. Stenographer, please read the last question.

Mr. Tracy—I do not hesitate to take the responsibility of introducing Miss Proctor's name here to-day.

Judge Neilson—Well, there is a responsibility beyond this.

Mr. Tracy—Very well, I introduce the name of Miss Proctor here to-day in a way that is entirely creditable to the lady.

Judge Neilson—It is not a question of creditability?

Mr. Tracy—It may be, but it is entirely creditable to her. I am showing that this witness attempted to coerce her friends in their action on this Committee as the penalty of his not making a publication concerning her.

Mr. Fullerton—The gentleman will fail in that attempt.

Mr. Tracy—Not much.

Mr. Fullerton—We will see if you don't.

Mr. Evarts—How does that become proper?

Mr. Beach—I believe I have endeavored to get the ear of the Court for a moment, and Gen. Tracy interrupted me, and now the senior counsel interrupts me.

Mr. Evarts—I haven't interrupted. I have asked that the question might be read.

Mr. Beach—So have I. [Last question was read by THE TRIBUNE stenographer.]

Mr. Beach—Yes, Sir; then the name of Miss Proctor was first mentioned in the question put by Gen. Tracy?

Mr. Evarts—Go back to the witness's answer before that, and you will find Miss Proctor's name in the witness's answer.

Mr. Morris—I say it was first mentioned by Mr. Tracy.

THE TRIBUNE stenographer [reading]:

Q. How did you describe the person? A. I don't think I described her; I think he asked me if I referred to Miss Proctor.

Q. Well, what did you say to that? A. I told him that I should not mention any names.

Mr. Beach—Now, your Honor, I submit that this inquiry in regard to what transpired with reference to Mr. Storrs, is not at all material to the inquiry which the counsel are pursuing. The object is to prove ill-will on the part of this witness toward Mr. Beecher; that is the professed object of their inquiry; and this conversation as between Mr. Storrs, so far as it relates to the action of the Committee, or to Miss Proctor, or any other lady, I submit, is not material, and I ask that that whole inquiry be struck out.

Mr. Evarts—We propose to show this witness's hostility; his proceedings indicating hostility; his making himself a party to the procedures against Mr. Beecher; his threats to those who are engaged concerning the inquiry in the mode and form in which the witness showed this attitude and expressed this hostility; and the laws of evidence permit us to do so, and make it the only proper way to do so. Now, upon the inquiry of fact, your Honor sees that we were entirely right. We desired to get from this witness what was pertinent and material, that he had threatened a member of the Committee that unless he took a position of dissent either by abstaining—withholding and withdrawing his name from the report, as the case might be—he (witness) might be forced, or might be led to make a publication that would affect and afflict Mr. Storrs. And we leave it for the witness to say whether he did or not. Well, his course of answers it is not necessary for us to repeat. Then we press him to get out the principal fact, which he will not give in general terms; and, finally, it comes down to this: "How did you describe that person?" He would not say that it was anybody that would break his heart; he would not say that it was anybody that was connected with Mr. Storrs in any such general relation as would omit a name; and we then say to him, how did you describe the person concerning whom you were talking to Mr. Storrs? Then he says, "I think it was Mr. Storrs who asked me if I referred to Miss Proctor." Now, that shows that the conversation was had; that he did assume this attitude towards Mr. Storrs in dealing with some person; that abstinence from public comment about it would be desirable, and the contrary afflictive to Mr. Storrs. That is what we set out to prove.

Mr. Beach—The examination, Sir, of the testimony of the witness shows that the first intimation that Miss Proctor's name was connected with this conversation, as the person in regard to whom any statement was to be made, or any revelation made, comes from the other side.

Mr. Evarts—Not in the least.

Mr. Beach—It does, Sir. When the witness said that Mr. Storrs asked him if Miss Proctor was referred to, the witness answers, "I mention no names." And, then, they went on with the inquiry, which draws from the witness this fact, that Miss Proctor was the person alluded to; and, so far as the bringing out of her name in connection with this scandal is concerned, the responsibility rests upon the gentleman making this inquiry. Now, Sir, we have avoided that; we have resisted it as far as we can. We make no imputations upon third persons, and would relieve everybody except the immediate parties to this controversy from any reflections which might arise out of connection with this difficulty. If the gentlemen persist in introducing the name of that lady, they must do it upon their own responsibility.

Mr. Fullerton—And it may be necessary for us hereafter, if the other side put us in such an attitude as to make it necessary to prove what did occur with regard to that lady for the purpose of justifying the witness. They take the responsibility of the whole thing.

Mr. Evarts—We have no difficulty in assuming responsibilities if they are cast upon us; we do not venture upon them in the conduct of our side in this case. But we have not any responsibility about what you do in consequence of what we do. You will do as you are advised. We will take care of our own side.

Mr. Beach—It seems to me that you are violating the order of debate, and insisting upon the last word in an argument upon our objection.

Mr. Evarts—But you say always something new.

Mr. Beach—No, we do not; no new ideas.

Mr. Evarts—Now, my friends have undertaken to present an attitude, a sort of defiance upon this subject; certainly no one on our side of the case wishes to make any imputations upon Miss Proctor; we never believe a word of either the threatened publication or the actual publication.

Judge Neilson—Why refer to the actual publication?

Mr. Evarts—Well, because the actual publication is in the matter.

Judge Neilson—No, it is not in; it is not in, and with my consent it won't be in, as far as this case is concerned.

Mr. Evarts—I dare say it may not, but we are not the side that are to be made the subject of imputation of wishing to bring Miss Proctor in.

Judge Neilson—The examination will be as it now stands with the exception that Miss Proctor's name will be stricken out, and it shall be omitted hereafter. Whatever occurs, I should not allow any evidence to vindicate that lady, as I certainly should if the subject were brought up here properly.

Mr. Evarts—Your Honor will note our exception to that direction.

Judge Neilson—Yes, as to the hostility of this witness, whether you characterize it as violent or not; whatever it may be you have a right to show that, of course.

Mr. Tracy—What did you say to Mr. Storrs concerning what you would do? A. I said to Mr. Storrs that I had understood that I was not to be cross-examined by the Committee.

Mr. Tracy—I have reference to the publication.

Mr. Beach—Wait one moment.

Judge Neilson—I think he has answered; go on.

Mr. Evarts—That took place at this interview? A. That I understood that I was not to be cross-examined by the Committee; that I had come from Lowell for the purpose of that cross-examination, and that I did not want his brother to sign that report until I had an opportunity of being cross-examined by the Committee; for if his brother did sign that report without giving me an opportunity to be cross-examined, he could not possibly know the truth, and that if that report was signed, and it was against me, as I understood it should be, I should make a publication of facts in reply, and that publication, as I understood my counsel advised it, would perhaps cross the threshold of his family, and came to see him as a personal friend, telling him that I did not want to do any such thing, and I said to him: "I want you, Mr. Charles Storrs, to put it only upon the ground of my being cross-examined. Tell your brother that I don't want him to sign that report until I have had an opportunity for cross-examination, in order that the facts which I have stated in print may be fully known." That is what I said. I went to see Charles Storrs as a friend, Sir. I have given it as nearly as I recollect it.

Q. Do you know William B. Barber? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Did you have a conversation with him on the floor of the Produce Exchange within two or three months on the subject of Mr. Beecher? A. I don't recollect whether it was within two or three months, or not. I had a conversation with him on the floor of the Exchange about the time of the Victoria Wood hull publication, and I rather think during the time of the Investigating Committee.

Q. Haven't you since the Investigating Committee? A. I may have done so; I don't recollect precisely about it now. I see him every day on 'Change when I am there and he is there.

Q. Didn't you tell him that Mr. Beecher was a damned perjurer and libertine? A. I don't know whether I told him he was a damned perjurer and libertine. I may have told him he was a perjurer and libertine, as he is. [A murmur in the audience.]

Q. Did you tell Mr. Barber so? A. I don't recollect whether I told Mr. Barber so or not, Sir.

Judge Neilson—Will the audience keep quiet!

Mr. Tracy—Have you ever threatened persons with danger to themselves if they should testify on behalf of the defendant? A. No, I have not threatened persons if they should testify on behalf of the defendant.

Q. Have you threatened any person? A. No, I have not threatened any person.

Q. Did you threaten Mr. Armour that you would crush him if he should testify against you on this trial? A. No, I did not threaten Mr. Armour that I would crush him.

Q. Do you know him? A. Yes; he is not the man to be crushed easily.

Q. Have you had any conversation with him on the subject of his testimony? A. I don't recollect having any conversation with him on the subject of his testimony. I had a conversation with him in regard to an interview that purported to come from him in the paper.

Q. Yes; did you state to him that you would crush him? A. No.

Q. Did you ever threaten to crush him for anything? A. No.

Q. Did you have any talk with him about his being a witness on this trial? A. I don't think I said anything to him about his being a witness; no I don't think I did; he is not a man I would use such language to, Mr. Tracy.

Q. [Book produced and handed to witness.] Now, Mr. Moulton, during your interview with Mr. Beecher on the night of 30th of December, '70, was there anything said by Mr. Beecher as to the truth or falsity of Mrs. Tilton's confession? A. Does your Honor permit them to go back for the fifth time to that interview of the 30th?

Judge Neilson—Well, it is on the ground that some question he thinks proper is inadvertently omitted.

Mr. Evarts—This is a question excluded. We ask him whether at that interview, there was anything said by Mr. Beecher concerning the truth or falsity of that confession—the same question—and there is no rule of law that you can't do it for the fifth time, if you can do it the fourth. But this is the first time the question has been asked.

Mr. Fullerton—The first time this question has been asked, but it is the fifth time the transactions of the 30th have been gone over, and my objection is that they cannot return to it again.

Judge Neilson—Who were present?

Mr. Evarts—It is an interview between himself and Mr. Beecher.

Judge Neilson—He has stated the conversation.

Mr. Evarts—The conversation has been given; now we ask him whether there was anything said by Mr. Beecher concerning the truth or falsity, either way, of Mrs. Tilton's accusation.

Judge Neilson—I think we will allow that.

Mr. Beach said—Do you mean in direct terms or do you mean by implication?

Mr. Evarts—We ask the question.

Mr. Beach—It may be necessary to go over the whole interview for the purpose of telling whether anything was said in regard to its truth or its falsity?

Judge Neilson—Now read the question, Mr. Stenographer.

[The last question by Mr. Evarts read by THE TRIBUNE stenographer.]

Mr. Beach—I submit that that question calls upon the witness to give a judgment or construction in regard to the conversation which he has already detailed.

Mr. Evarts—This is a cross-examination.

Mr. Beach—If it is a cross-examination they can't ask him to give a judgment as to the meaning of the language which was used, and it may impose upon the witness the necessity of seeing or referring to the testimony which he has given relating to the details of that conversation.

Mr. Evarts—We are cross-examining this witness, and we do not like to have suggestions made to him as to what may be a necessary answer for him to make.

Judge Neilson—Still, you are sensible of the fact that you are allowed to go back to it after having exhausted the interview.

Mr. Evarts—We have closed our cross-examination in general now, and we are closing up the points that are to be considered.

Mr. Beach—My suggestion was that the question should call for the witness to answer whether anything was directly said by Mr. Beecher in regard to the truth or falsity of that confession.

Mr. Evarts—That is exactly what the question is, whether at that interview anything was said by Mr. Beecher concerning the truth or falsity of the accusation?

Mr. Beach—I think no one but the gentleman will perceive the difference between that question and that construction of it.

Judge Neilson—Take that last down as the question. It may be a modification of the other question.

[Question read by TRIBUNE stenographer.]

Mr. Evarts—That interview of December 13th, 1870, is included in the question of course.

Judge Neilson—The accusation in what, in Mrs. Tilton's letter?

Mr. Evarts—Yes, Sir.

The Witness—The only word that was said to me by Mr. Beecher in regard to Mrs. Tilton's confession, was at the foot of the stairs, when he asked me, "Have you seen the confession?" and I said I had, and he said, "This will kill me."

Q. That is all that was said? A. That is all that was said, Sir. Now whether that is a denial or not I don't know.

Mr. Tracy—After the interview between Mr. Beecher and

Mr. Tilton had closed that night, did Mr. Tilton say to you that all Mr. Beecher said touching the confession of his wife's adulteries was—did Mr. Tilton say to you that all the answer that Mr. Beecher made to him after what he had said to him was: "This is all a dream, Theodore"? A. Mr. Tilton told me that after he had spoken to Mr. Beecher, Mr. Beecher said: "This is all a dream, Theodore;" something like that.

Mr. Evarts—Do you say that that is all the answer that Mr. Beecher made? A. He said that that was the answer that Mr. Beecher made. I remember that Sir; that is all I remember.

HINTS ABOUT THE DEFENSE'S WITNESSES.

Q. Do you know Senator John C. Jacobs of this city? A. Yes, Sir; I know him.

Q. Did you ever have any conversation with him at Albany at any time in regard to the Beecher-Tilton scandal? A. I don't recollect whether I did or not.

Q. Did you at Albany, in the Spring or Winter of 1873, during the session of the Legislature of 1873, in a conversation with Mr. Jacobs, where the Beecher-Tilton scandal was the subject of conversation, say to him that if this matter was ever investigated Mr. Beecher would prove to be all right? A. I don't recollect whether I did or not.

Q. Do you remember that you did not? A. If I had any recollection about it I would tell you.

Q. You mean to say, then, that you have no recollection? A. I have not any recollection about that.

Q. Have you a recollection of conversing with him on that subject? A. I think I did talk with Mr. Jacobs about it; yes, Sir.

Q. In that conversation did you say anything in substance like what I have repeated? A. I think I carried the impression that Mr. Beecher was not a guilty man—I think so.

Q. And didn't you say, in substance, that whenever the truth of this matter was known, Mr. Beecher would prove to be an innocent man? A. I don't recollect that, Sir. My impression with regard to what I have said, I have just given you.

Q. What was it? A. All I recollect—the impression that I gave him was that Mr. Beecher was not a guilty man.

Q. How did you give him that impression? A. I must have given it in words.

Q. Were the substance of the words by which you conveyed that impression to him that when the truth was known, or that when this matter was investigated, Mr. Beecher would prove to be an innocent man? A. I don't recollect those to be the words, or the substance of the words.

Q. Did you say anything on the subject of what the result would be of an investigation? A. I don't recollect that I did.

Q. Do you know Archibald Baxter? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Of this city? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Did you have any conversation with him touching the Woodhull scandal? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. When was it? A. On 'Change; somewhere in the neighborhood of the publication.

Q. Soon after the publication? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. What did you say to him about it? A. I don't recollect the precise language. I had two conversations with him.

Q. Did you say to him, in substance, that Mr. Beecher was not guilty of the charge made against him in the Woodhull publication? A. No, Sir. I think when I was pressed by Mr. Baxter I told him Mr. Beecher was a pure man.

Q. You told him Mr. Beecher was a pure man? A. Yes, Sir; that I thought he was, something of that sort.

Q. You say you were pressed by him. Didn't you volunteer to go to him? A. I volunteered the first time to go to him; the first conversation I had with him when I spoke to him about the Woodhull publication, in that conversation I told him Mr. Bowen was originally the author of the stories, that the stories originated with Mr. Bowen, that when Mr. Bowen had been asked to produce the evidence he had failed to do it, and that the differences between Mr. Bowen and Mr. Tilton had been settled; and about the Woodhull publication I said if it was true it was infamous, and if it was false it was diabolical, and if Mr. Beecher's life was not an answer I did not choose to make any; and the second conversation, I think Mr. Baxter came to me about it, and pressed me concerning it with some questions, and I think I told him in substance—I denied the guilt of Mr. Beecher, and told him he was a pure man—something of that sort.

Q. Did you say this to Mr. Baxter, in substance, "If you will only be patient you will be convinced that Mr. Beecher is as good a man as you (Baxter) ever believed him to be"? A. I really don't recollect the conversation. I didn't give him an opinion adverse to Mr. Beecher.

Q. Do you say you did not use that language to him? A. If I had any means of recalling the language I would do it; but I cannot recall the language.

Q. Will you say that you did not use that language to Mr. Baxter? A. No, Sir; I have not any recollection about it. I gave him a very high opinion about Mr. Beecher, however.

Q. Did Mr. Baxter ask you if you did not mean purity in a special sense? A. I don't recollect that.

Q. Did you make any reply? A. Make any reply to what? Mr. Fullerton—To what you don't recollect?

The Witness—I could not.

Mr. Tracy—Didn't Mr. Baxter say: "There are different meanings to the word pure. Do you mean that Mr. Beecher is pure in the ordinary sense of that word? Was he chaste? Had he broken the seventh commandment?" A. I don't recollect that; I guess I gave him an idea that he had not broken the seventh commandment.

Q. What did you say to him? A. I don't recollect.

Q. Did Mr. Baxter ask you this question? A. I don't recollect whether he did or not, but I gave him a very high opinion of Mr. Beecher.

Q. Will you say he did not? A. If I had any recollection about it I would answer you.

Q. Will you say you have no recollection that he did not ask you this question? A. If I had any recollection about it I should, but I have not. I am giving you the impression I gave Mr. Baxter.

Q. I am asking you what Mr. Baxter asked you? A. If I could tell you I would.

Q. You cannot tell? A. No, Sir; I cannot tell.

Q. What reply did you make to these questions? [Laughter.] What reply did you make to Mr. Baxter? Did you not say in answer to these questions, "He is pure in that sense"? A. I don't recollect.

Q. "Not only is he now, but he always has been, a pure man, as I believe." Did you say that to Mr. Baxter? A. I don't recollect the answer.

Q. Will you swear you did not make that reply to him? A. If I had any recollection about it I would give it to you. I don't understand how I can answer it any more positively than I am answering it.

Judge Neilson—He simply wants you to say whether you recollect or not. A. I have not any recollection of the form of the answer.

Q. Then you cannot say he did not? A. I don't recollect those words, your Honor. The impression I gave him was that Mr. Beecher was a pure man.

Mr. Evarts—We are entitled to have an answer, it seems to us. It is the usual course of examination.

The Witness—If Mr. Baxter should say I did, I should say I did.

Mr. Evarts—He can tell us whether he can say he didn't say it.

Judge Neilson—Can you say you did not use those words? A. I cannot say I did not use those words.

Mr. Tracy—Do you know Edward A. Biden? A. Yes, Sir; I know him. I believe he is an elevator man.

Q. Is he a member of the Produce Exchange? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Have you had conversations with him touching the Woodhull story? A. I believe I have had, once or twice; yes, Sir.

Q. When did you have those conversations? A. I think I have seen him about it about the time of the Woodhull publication.

Q. Where? A. On the Exchange.

Q. Did you speak to him on the subject of this scandal? A. Not at length; I avoided talking with him very long about it.

Q. You spoke to him on the subject? A. I believe so.

Q. Did you say to him: "It is false; there is not a word of truth in it, as far as Mr. Beecher is concerned?" A. I don't recollect that I used those words to him.

Q. Did you use anything in substance like that? A. I may have told him the story was untrue.

Q. Did you say it was untrue as far as Mr. Beecher was concerned? A. I don't recollect that.

Q. Did you say that there was was not a word of truth in that? A. I don't recollect that neither.

Q. Did you use any such language in substance? A. I don't recollect that. I gave that impression to him, I think.

Q. Do you know J. Haynes Drake? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Did you have any conversation with him? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. On the subject of the Woodhull publication? A. I believe I did, a short conversation with him.

Q. Where? A. On the Exchange.

Q. Did you say to him: (speaking of the Woodhull publication, with reference to Mr. Beecher) "It is a damned mess of women's fables?" A. No, Sir; I don't recollect using that language.

Q. Did you use anything in substance like that? A. No, Sir; I will tell you what I did say. I said if the story was true it was infamous, and if it was false it was diabolical, and if Mr. Beecher's life was not an answer to it I didn't choose to make any; and that is the substance of what I said to Mr. Drake.

Q. Do you remember that you did not say to him, "it is a damned mess of women's fables?" A. I think I should swear to the best of my recollection that I did not use that language.

Q. Did you use anything in substance like that? A. Not quite as weak as that; no, Sir.

Q. Did Mr. Drake say: "It would take a good deal of such testimony as that to convince me that Mr. Beecher is criminally guilty?" A. I don't recollect that he did.

Q. And in reply, did you say: "As to the criminality there is not in it a shadow of truth, and if Mr. Beecher's career is not a sufficient refutation to slanders from such a source, you don't deserve to have your mind satisfied?" A. I said the latter part; I don't remember the other part. The impression I gave to him was this, that if Mr. Beecher's life was not an answer to it I didn't choose to make any to him.

Q. Didn't you say, as to the criminality, "there is not a shadow of truth in it?" A. I don't recollect having said that.

Q. Will you swear you did not say that? A. I will swear I have not any recollection about it.

Q. Will you swear you didn't say it? A. How can I swear I didn't say it if I cannot recollect what I said? [To Judge Neilson.] Your Honor, am I answering properly, or not?

Judge Neilson—I think you have answered the question fairly.

Mr. Tracy—Did you say, in substance, so? Did you substantially use the words: "As to the criminality there is not a shadow of truth in it?" A. I don't recollect it.

Q. Anything like that, in substance? A. I can give you the substance of what I recollect, as near as I can recollect it.

Q. Do you know William B. Barber? A. Yes, Sir; I said I did a good while ago.

Q. Is he a member of the Produce Exchange? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Did you have a talk with him on the subject of the Woodhull publication? A. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Morris—You have been all over that, Mr. Tracy.

Mr. Tracy—Oh, no, Sir.

Q. How soon did it occur after the publication? A. I think on the same day it happened.

Q. Did you say to him, speaking of the Woodhull publication, "There is not a particle of truth in the statement as against Mr. Beecher?" A. No, Sir; I did not say that to him; I recollect what I did say.

Q. Didn't you add, "Mr. Beecher is as pure a man as ever lived?" A. No, Sir, I didn't add that to him. Shall I tell you what I said to him? I can give you that conversation.

Mr. Fullerton—No, they don't want you to tell that.

The Witness—[To Judge Neilson]—Can I not tell, your Honor, what I said?

Judge Neilson—By-and-bye you will get a chance.

Q. Do you know A. H. Davis? A. I don't recollect him now.

Q. Of the firm of Barling & Davis? A. Yes, sir; I know him pretty well.

Q. Did you have a talk with him concerning the Woodhull publication? A. I don't recollect whether I did or not.

Q. At the Custom House and at your place of business? A. don't recollect.

Q. Did he ask you "what does this Woodhull scandal mean—Is there any truth in it?" A. I don't recollect speaking to him upon the subject at all.

Q. And did you reply, "There is not a word of truth in it. I think it is a shame, after Mr. Beecher has lived so long, that anybody should believe it?" A. I don't recollect having met Mr. Davis.

Q. Did you have any such conversation with him, in substance? A. I don't recollect having met him on the subject.

Judge Neilson—Or having had such a conversation? A. No, Sir, nor having having had such a conversation.

Mr. Tracy—Do you know Reuben W. Ropes? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Did you have any conversation with him about November, 1873, touching the Woodhull publication? A. I don't recollect whether it was in November, 1873. My impression is that I had a conversation with him coming up Wall-st. Ferry here.

Q. Yes, Sir, that is the place. A. Well?

Q. Did he say to you: "I have never happened to meet you to speak with you since the affair of the Beecher-Woodhull publication. Did you go to Mr. Beecher's house with a pistol and demand a paper, as stated in Woodhull & Claflin's paper?" and did you say in answer to that, "It is a damned infernal lie?" A. I don't recollect whether I swore in his presence or not, but that is substantially what I said to him.

Q. And did you add, "You happen to know more of this case than I do. Now, is there any truth in regard to the scandal in regard to Mr. Beecher?" and did you reply "They are a pack of infernal lies?" A. I don't know whether I used that language or not, but I guess I gave Mr. Ropes the impression that Mr. Beecher was perfectly pure, and that the stories were lies.

Q. You said so, in substance? A. I gave that impression, whether I said it in substance. I don't remember the words.

Q. Do you know Edwin A. Studwell? A. A man that used to live South—a Florida improvement man?

Q. Yes, Sir. A. I don't know him very well. I have met him; I don't recollect having met him on this subject.

Q. Did you see him in Florida when you were there in 1871? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. And talked with him? A. Yes, Sir; that was before the Woodhull story.

Q. Yes, Sir; in 1871? A. Yes, Sir; in March, 1871, was it not? Yes, Sir; I met him in March, 1871, in Jacksonville.

Q. Did you have a talk with him in Florida in the Spring of 1871, in regard to the stories about Mr. Beecher and Mrs. Tilton? A. I don't recollect that I did.

Q. Did you say to him that you had all the papers in the case and letters relating to it, and that it was all a damned slander against Mr. Beecher? A. I don't recollect whether I did or not.

Q. Did you say anything in substance like that? A. I don't recollect having any conversation with Mr. Studwell about it.

Q. Did you say anything to him on that subject, leaving out the oath, with the exceptions I have stated? A. Very likely I had that in if I talked to him. I don't remember having talked to him at all.

Q. Do you know Charles H. Cadwell? A. What is his business; provision man—is that it?

Mr. Shearman—115 Broad-st.? A. I don't know where his office is. I remember Mr. Cadwell, who used to be with Charles Parker. I don't know whether that is the man you refer to or not.

Mr. Tracy—That is the man. A. I don't remember having talked with him about it; I may have done so.

Q. You say you don't remember talking with him on the subject of the Woodhull scandal? A. I don't remember.

Q. Within a short time after its publication? A. I don't recollect.

Q. On a train of cars going to Boston? A. I don't recollect that I did. I recollect going on a train of cars to Boston, but I don't recollect talking with him about it.

Q. Shortly after the Woodhull publication? A. I don't recollect whether shortly after the Woodhull publication or not.

Q. On your way to Boston, speaking of this talk about Mr. Beecher in the Woodhull publication, did you say there was no truth in any of the rumors respecting Mr. Beecher? A. I don't recollect it.

Q. Did you say anything to him in reference to that? A. I don't recollect that I did; I recollect I didn't say anything against Mr. Beecher to him, if that will answer you.

Q. Did you tell him in substance this: that "If Mr. Beecher should the next day tell Plymouth Church all the facts pertaining to his life, there would not be a single person in it, who could impute a single blemish to the purity of their pastor?" A. I don't recollect having used that language.

Q. Did you use anything in substance like that? A. I don't recollect any conversation with Mr. Cadwell at all on the subject.

Q. Are you willing to say you did not say this to him? A. I am not willing to say I did not. I say I have not any recollection of talking with Mr. Cadwell. I would not have any objection to telling exactly what I did say, if I remembered it.

Q. Do you know Mr. Halliday, Assistant Pastor of Plymouth Church? A. Slightly; yes, Sir.

Q. Did you have any talk with him on the subject of the Woodhull publication? A. I don't know whether it was about the Woodhull publication or not. He came to me after the Deacons' meeting, and I talked with him about the stories against Mr. Beecher. Can you give me the date of the conversation?

Q. About Nov. 23d, 1872—December or November. A. Very likely there was some talk about the Victoria Woodhull publication.

Q. At your house? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Did you tell him: "Mr. Halliday, I know all about this affair, if anybody knows?" A. I don't recollect the language. I conveyed to him the impression that Mr. Beecher was guiltless of any charge against him.

Q. I understand that; but I ask you definitely the question? A. I cannot tell you definitely.

Q. Did you tell him: "I know all about this affair; if anybody knows?" A. I don't recollect that.

Q. Do you recollect that you said that to him in substance? A. No, Sir; I don't recollect that I said it in substance.

Q. And did you add, bringing your hand down on the table: "I know he is guiltless?" A. I don't know whether I brought my hand down on the table at that point or not; but I know, when I brought it down, I said "it was a damned shame for the Deacons to be digging into a scandal that had been settled between the parties."

Q. Did you say that he was guiltless? A. I think I did; yes, Sir.

Q. Did you add in that conversation with Mr. Halliday, "I am not a member of your church, but my wife is. Do you suppose that if Mr. Beecher is a bad man I would allow him to sit there at my table with my wife?" A. My impression is that I didn't say that part.

Q. Your impression is that you didn't say that part? A. Yes, Sir, my impression is that I didn't.

Q. Will you swear you didn't? A. Yes, Sir; I will swear that my impression is that I didn't.

Q. Did you or not say it? A. I am telling all I know about it—my impression about it.

Q. Will you say you didn't? A. How can I say that when I don't recollect? I am giving you my best recollection.

Q. Can you say you didn't? A. My recollection is not—that I didn't; that is my best recollection, that I didn't.

Q. Are you ready to swear that you didn't say those words? A. I am ready to swear that to the best of my recollection I didn't say those words. Is that a correct answer, Mr. Evarts?

Mr. Evarts—Answer according to your conscience.

The Witness—My conscience directs the answer, but is the phraseology correct? [Laughter.]

Mr. Tracy—Did you add further: "Why, Mr. Halliday, Mr. Tilton is friendly to Mr. Beecher." Did you say that? A. I don't recollect whether I did or not.

Q. "When he (Tilton) came back from his campaign in New-Hampshire on the morning after election, he sat precisely where you did on the sofa, and when Mr. Beecher came through that door he (Tilton) sprang to his feet and went to him, and, with both hands, shook hands with him in this way (showing how), and expressed his sorrow and intense regret at the appearance of that, and disclaimed all knowledge of it, and offered to do anything he could to repair the mischief?" A. Something of that sort I said to him. I don't remember the two hands part of it.

Q. Did you say anything in substance like it? A. How is that?—taking Mr. Beecher's hands in both of his?

Q. Yes, Sir. A. I don't recollect saying that, but I think very likely I recited to him the substance of the interview between Mr. Beecher and Mr. Tilton in November.

Q. Substantially you stated that? A. Yes, Sir, substantially like that—something like it—and I think I told him that Mr. Tilton was friendly to him; I think so.

Q. Did you also say this [referring to the Woodhull publication]: "I have denied this. Tilton denied it. Mrs. Stanton has denied it," and didn't you name another person who had denied it, and then add, "All have denied but Pauline Davis, and she is in Europe and cannot deny it, because of her absence. Now, what more can be done?" A. I think I said something like that.

Q. Did you, in substance, say that? A. Something like that.

Q. Do you know Mr. Swan, of the firm of R. Moore & Co.? A. I don't recall the name.

Q. You know Mr. Swan? A. I know Mr. Swan of Grinnell, Minturn & Co.

Q. Did you meet him in Armour & Co.'s? A. I don't know the name of Mr. Armour's partner, whether it is Mr. Swan or not.

Q. Do you know Mr. Armour's partner? A. I know him by sight; I don't remember his name.

Q. Did you have a talk with him on the subject of your difficulty in this conversation? A. The difficulty is in recollecting the name of Mr. Swan.

Mr. Tracy—I will try if I can identify him any more.

The Witness—I am almost ashamed to say I don't know that gentleman's name, because I know him so well.

Mr. Tracy—Do you know the man I refer to as Mr. Swan? A. I don't recollect.

Q. Do you know of one of that name? A. I don't know that I know of one of that name.

Q. Do you know a Mr. Swan with whom you have talked about your difficulties? A. I really don't know a Mr. Swan with whom I have talked, and if this partner of Mr. Armour's is the Mr. Swan you mean, I don't remember of having talked with him. Perhaps you will get along with that.

Q. Do you know a Mr. Swan with whom you are on terms of intimacy? A. No, Sir; only an acquaintance of Grinnell, Minturn & Co's. I have known him a great many years.

Q. Did you talk with him about your difficulties with Mr. Beecher? A. No, Sir, not that I recollect. There is no Mr. Swan with whom I have talked that I know of.

Mr. Evarts—We will find out more about Mr. Swan.

The Witness—Well!

Mr. Evarts—It is the hour of adjournment. I am very happy to state to your Honor that we have very few matters to go on with in reference to this witness.

Mr. Fullerton—We think this matter ought to be concluded this afternoon.

Mr. Evarts—We think not. We want to adjourn at the usual hour.

Mr. Beach—I agree with your proposition.

The Witness—I do not.

Mr. Fullerton—That proposition must be mine then, I think.

Mr. Beach—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Fullerton—I think we ought to finish the cross-examination of this witness to-day; I think it ought to be concluded to-day. Your Honor was disposed to conclude it on Friday, and they said they would not probably occupy the whole of to-day.

Judge Nelson—Still, I make a good deal of allowance for the circumstance that Mr. Tracy was called into the cross-examination without preparation, and he might not, therefore, be able to proceed readily as he otherwise would.

The Witness—[To a reporter.] Oh, dear!

Judge Neilson—[To the audience.] I wish gentlemen would keep their seats. [To the Jurors.] The Jury will please be in their places at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. Mallison—[The Clerk.] The Court now stands adjourned until Tuesday morning at 11 o'clock.

TWELFTH DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

MOULTON'S TENTH DAY.

STRONG EFFORTS OF THE COUNSEL OF MR. BEECHER TO GET IN A LETTER PREVIOUSLY RULED OUT—A SHARP CONTACT OF LEGAL WITS.

Mr. Tilton entered the court-room alone, as usual. Mr. Beecher arrived a few moments afterward, followed by his wife and two sons, and the members of the Plymouth delegation, now thinner and less demonstrative than any day before. The reason of Mr. Beecher's absence on the day previous was a severe cold. As the court-room was uncomfortably cool, Mrs. Beecher did not remove her bonnet or shawl during the day. The absence of Mrs. Tilton and her lady friends, who have not been present since Friday, was again the occasion of remark, but the cause was seemingly unknown to any one.

Ex-Judge Porter appeared in Court and was heartily welcomed by the counsel for the plaintiff and defendant. He did not resume the examination but busied himself all day in arranging the papers of the defense. Mr. Porter has not entirely recovered and was looking unwell on Tuesday. One of the pleasing incidents of the day was the courteous inquiry by Judge Neilson from the bench as to the health of ex-Judge Porter. It is hard to say whether Judge Porter was most complimented or confused by the manner in which, in the midst of the proceeding, he was singled out for judicial notice. The counsel on both sides were engaged at the moment in looking up letters which had been called for, and there was perfect stillness in the court, and attention was fixed on no special subject. The minute he arose, therefore, to step toward the bench Mr. Porter became the center of observation and of interest, and, as if recognizing this, he appeared to hesitate and palpably blushed. A smile passed over the features of his associates, who recognized the awkwardness of Mr. Porter's situation, and rather enjoyed his perplexity. The ex-Judge, notwithstanding his frequent prominence in courts of all grades, evidently suffers embarrassment still under too marked public notice, and would shirk rather than seek it.

The most painful incident of the trial occurred on Tuesday morning shortly after Mr. Moulton took the stand, and for the first time, perhaps, during the whole of his long examination Mr. Moulton was regarded with other feelings than those of admiration by his friends and dislike by the friends of Mr. Beecher. He became to all a subject of sympathy, for the greatest bereavement a man can suffer—the loss of a loving mother—was communicated to him while yet a witness. Soon after the first questions had been answered, Mr. Moulton was informed that a messenger with important intelligence awaited him in the chambers of the City Court, adjoining Part II. Mr. Moulton was excused by the Court, and utterly unsuspecting of what he was to be told, (for he was not even aware his mother had been ill), he left the court-room. Ex-Judge Fullerton communicated the intelligence to the Court during the few minutes Mr. Moulton was in the ante-room, so that when Mr. Moulton returned all eyes were fixed upon him, and the momentary buzz of conversation which had followed the announcement suddenly broke off. Mr. Tilton watched anxiously the face of his friend to observe the effect of the news upon him. Mr. Beecher bent forward in his chair, gazing intently at him, while Mrs. Beecher leaned her head upon her right hand, and looked sadly and almost with solicitude upon her husband's enemy. Mr. Moulton exercised his great control over his nerves, and before his counsel could communicate to him the decision of the Court that he could at once retire, and finish his examination at a later day, he loudly announced that he was ready to go on.

Mrs. Moulton died suddenly about 6 o'clock on Tuesday morning at the residence of her husband No. 580 Lexington-ave. She had been ill only a few days with pneumonia, contracted by imprudent exposure to the cold weather. She was 68 years old, and usually enjoyed very good health. By going out of doors in her slippers on Thursday of last week, she caught a severe cold which confined her to her room. She was attended by Dr. Packard, and on Sunday appeared to be much better, although on account of her great age her physician feared a relapse. On Monday she suffered from severe spasms in the breast, and Dr. Packard called in Dr. Flint for consultation. Monday night Mrs. Moulton again appeared to get much better, and during the night she slept lightly at intervals. Toward daylight she grew rapidly worse, and died seemingly without pain at 8:20 a. m. on Tuesday. Naturally Mrs. Moulton felt great interest in the Beecher-Tilton trial in which her son plays so prominent a part, and during her sickness she worried a good deal on account of it. Not more than 12 hours before her death she asked anxiously after the reports of her son's cross-examination in the evening papers, and conversed with her husband in regard to it. It is thought that the strain of her anxiety and worry about the trial, in her weakened condition, may have indirectly hastened her death.

LEGAL PASSAGES AT ARMS.

The evidence brought out in the redirect examination of Mr. Moulton was merely the fringe of the texture of Mr. Moulton's testimony. Mr. Fullerton went according to no almanac, but skipped from the events of 1870 to those of 1874, and back again, as rapidly as the arguments and exceptions of the opposing counsel would allow. Mr. Moulton's remarkable performance on Tuesday of repeating Mr. Tilton's introduction of Mrs. Woodhull at Steinway Hall, several years ago, almost word for word, was regarded with surprise and admiration and a ripple of laughter came from the audience as the closing remarks were recited, viz.: "She may be a fanatic or a fool, but I would rather be considered both in one than to deny to a woman the freedom of speech."

The canceled notes of Mr. Tilton to Jackson S. Schultz, J. C. Southwick, Franklin Woodruff, J. W. Robinson, John W. Mason and Francis D. Moulton, for sums of from $500 to $1,500 were read. Those notes were, it was shown, canceled and returned as a testimonial to Mr. Tilton. The subjects regarding the picture of Mr. Beecher in Mr. Moulton's house, the alleged hostility of the witness toward the defendant, the conference regarding the production of Mr. Beecher's letters before the Plymouth Investigating Committee, and many other familiar topics were referred to. Every step was contested hotly by Mr. Evarts, and more than once the lawyers became so entangled in their exceptions and protests that it engaged all the ingenuity of Judge Neilson to straighten them out.

Tuesday witnessed one of the most adroit pieces of cross-examination which the trial thus far has developed. It was conducted by Mr. Tracy, but directed by Mr. Evarts and aided in by Mr. Shearman. For some reason or other the counsel for the defense were extremely solicitous of getting before the jury a letter of W. T. Clark of The Golden Age, which on the direct examination a too hasty objection on their part had ruled out.

Its importance was not very apparent to the audience, unless the fact that it emphasized the financial embarrassments of Tilton about the time that the policy of "Grace, Mercy and Peace" was abandoned, about a year ago. Whatever the reasons, the counsel appeared determined to get this letter in, and as often as the Judge ruled that it had not been sufficiently identified—and he so ruled three times—Mr. Tracy returned to the attack with a question or two, and Mr. Evarts thereupon based a new argument. At last, evidently abandoning the hope of securing its admission, Mr. Tracy began a series of questions, each of which embodied one of the many declarations contained in Mr. Clark's letter, so that in the end the jury heard the whole letter read. Mr. Tracy took pains to do this as openly as possible, making no effort to conceal from the opposing counsel the fact that he was literally reading the letter; the same tactics had been employed by the counsel of Mr. Tilton, and Mr. Tracy was therefore not afraid of interruption.

The sharpest and most amusing passage of arms that occurred among the lawyers on Tuesday was between Mr. Evarts and Mr. Fullerton, and it illustrates fairly the quickness of thought sometimes displayed in the court-room. Just before the closing of the cross-examination there was a long pause. Its length wearing out at last the patience of Mr. Fullerton, he asked the Court if there was no way to make the other side go on.

"How better can we go on?" asked Mr. Evarts.

"Why, by going on," sharply replied Mr. Fullerton.

"Perhaps you would go on if you were on our side," said the defendant's counsel.

"No," significantly rejoined Mr. Fullerton, "if I were on your side I would not go on."

THE PROCEEDINGS.

Ex-Judge Porter was again in his place among the defendant's counsel, but he took no active part in the morning's proceedings. The closing hours of the cross-examination of Mr. Moulton—conducted as usual by Gen. Tracy—were mainly occupied by the introduction of letters in Mr. Moulton's possession not previously put in evidence. Mr. Shearman read most of these papers. The Perkins letter was the first produced

ANOTHER BATCH OF LETTERS INTRODUCED.

Francis D. Moulton was recalled, and the cross examination continued.

Mr. Tracy—Mr. Moulton, will you hand to us now any letters that you have from Mr. Beecher which have not been given in evidence? A. All letters that I have, Sir?

Q. Yes, Sir; all the letters that you have from Mr. Beecher?

Mr. Morris—I will select them out, those that I have here.

Mr. Tracy—With the envelopes, if you have them, in which they were sent.

Mr. Beach—I think, your Honor, we ought to inquire of the counsel for what purpose they demand the possession of these papers. They are addressed to Mr. Moulton, and some of them we may want to use in the course of the trial.

Mr. Evarts—We will hand them back; we expect to restore them to the hands from which we receive them.

Judge Neilson—They expect to restore them for use.

Mr. Evarts—Yes, Sir. They are papers which do not belong to the plaintiff, but belong to the witness, and which he brings here under subpoena.

Judge Neilson—While you are looking for the papers I would like to say to Judge Porter, whom I am very glad to see with us this morning, that while continuing this cross-examination of Mr. Moulton by Mr. Tracy, on the ostensible ground that to break up the cross-examination would break the continuity of the testimony, the real motive was lest the Judge should find some of his work unfinished, and be tempted to return sooner than he ought to to his labors. Do you find the papers, gentlemen?

Mr. Morris—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Evarts—We have some of them.

Mr. Morris—We are marking them as fast as we can.

Mr. Tracy—I will go on with some other subject. There is one question, your Honor, which I asked last night, to which I did not receive an answer on account of the inability to identify the proposed witness.

The Witness—I have identified the witness.

Mr. Tracy—I should have taken that up this morning, but I have not the book here.

The Witness—Mr. Swan is the one.

Mr. Tracy—Yes, Mr. Swan.

The Witness—I sent over to New-York this morning about it. I found out that the partner of Mr. Armour was Mr. Swan.

Mr. Tracy—We will not talk about that, Mr. Moulton, until I get the book here, so we can close it when we enter upon it.

The Witness—All right, Sir.

Q. I hand you a letter dated Feb. 13th, 1871, which I ask you to examine. [Handing witness a letter.] Did you ever see that letter before, Mr. Moulton? A. Yes, Sir; I think I have.

Q. Where did you first see it? A. It was brought to me by Mr. Beecher, to my house in Clinton-st., I believe.

Q. Was it the subject of conversation between yourself and Mr. Beecher? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Was Mr. Tilton present at that conversation? A. I don't think he was.

Mr. Tracy—I will introduce that letter.

Mr. Shearman—[Reading.]—

Box 44, Station D,
New-York, February 13th, 1871.

MY DEAR UNCLE: After some consideration, I decide to inform you of a matter concerning you.—

Mr. Beach—What is it? Let us see it. [Taking the letter.]

Mr. Shearman—It is a letter written by Mr. F. B. Perkins to Mr. Beecher.

Mr. Tracy—Mr. Perkins is the nephew of Mr. Beecher, is he not? A. Mr. Beecher told me he was.

Box 44, Station D,
New-York, February 13, 1871. }

MY DEAR UNCLE: After some consideration I decide to inform you of a matter concerning you. Tilton has been justifying or excusing his recent intrigues with women by alleging that you have been detected in the like adulteries, the same having been hushed up out of consideration for the parties. This I know.

You may, of course, do what you like with this letter. I suppose such talk dies quickest unanswered. I have thought it best to let you know what is being said about you, and by whom. However, for whether you act in the matter or not, it has been displeasing to me to suppose such things done without your knowledge. I have thought other people base, but Theodore Tilton has in this action dived into the very sub-cellar of the ver back-house of infamy. In case you should choose to let him know of this, I am responsible, and don't seek any concealment.

Very truly yours,

F. B. PARKINS.

To REV. HENRY WARD BEECHER.

P. S.—I can't say Tilton said "adulteries." He was referring to his late intrigues with Mrs. — and others, however he may have described them. What I am informed of is the excuse by implicating you in "similar" affairs.

F. B. P.

[Marked "Exhibit D, 48."]

Mr. Shearman—I will say to your Honor that the name is mentioned in full here, but I have complied with your Honor's direction.

Mr. Tracy—You say that yourself, Mr. Tilton and Mr. Beecher consulted as to the answer that should be made to that letter? A. I didn't say that, Sir.

Q. Ah! I misunderstood you. Was that the fact? A. No, Sir.

Q. Were you present when the subject of what answer should be made to it was discussed and considered? A. Yes, Sir; with Mr. Beecher alone.

Q. Not with Mr. Tilton? A. Not with Mr. Tilton.

Q. Did Mr. Tilton take any part in the discussion of the answer that should be made to it? A. I told Mr. Beecher that I would submit his answer to Mr. Tilton, and he promised to wait until I could consult Tilton about it, but he sent the answer, I found afterwards, before I saw Mr. Tilton.

Q. Did you see Mr. Tilton and consult with him in regard to the answer? A. I believe I did; my recollection is that I did.

Q. Did he dictate an answer for Mr. Beecher to that letter? A. No, Sir, he told me substantially what he wanted to be his answer.

Q. And you took it down? A. Yes, Sir; I wrote it down.

Q. At the time? A. I don't remember whether it was at the time or not. I wrote down substantially what he said.

Q. [Handing a book to the witness]—Look at that book and see if it refreshes your memory on the subject? A. I remember substantially what was in the book. [The witness refers to the book.] It does not particularly refresh my memory.

Q. [Handing letter to witness]—Is that Mr. Beecher's answer to the note of Mr. Perkins? A. Yes, Sir; I believe that is the answer, and there is also a note there that Theodore Tilton—

Mr. Tracy—Dictated to you? A. What he expressed or dictated, I wrote; I do not remember whether he dictated that or not.

Q. You wrote it down from his dictation? A. From what he told me; I don't think I wrote from his dictation.

Q. And that is what he thought the answer should be? A. Yes, Sir; that is substantially what I suppose he thought the answer should be.

Mr. Shearman—The following is the answer which Mr. Beecher wrote:

FEBRUARY 23, 1871.

MY DEAR FRED: Whatever Mr. Tilton formerly said against me—and I know the substance of it—he has withdrawn, and frankly confessed that he had been misled by the statements of one who, when confronted, backed down from his charges.

In some sense I am in part to blame for his indignation, for I lent a credulous ear to the reports about him, which I have reason to believe were exaggerated or wholly false. After a full conference and explanation, there remained between us no misunderstanding, but mutual good will and reconciliation have taken the place of exasperation. Of course, I shall not chase after rumors that will soon run themselves out of breath if left alone. If my friends will put their foot silently on any coal or hot cinders, and crush them out, without talking, the miserable lies will be as dead in New-York in a little time as they are in Brooklyn. But I do not any the less thank you for your affectionate solicitude, and for your loyalty to my good name. I should have replied earlier, but your letter came when I was out of town.

I had to go out again immediately. If the papers do not meddle, this slander will fall still-born—dead as Julius Caesar. If a sensation should be got up, of course there are enough little enemies to fan the matter and create annoyance, though no final damage. I am, your affectionate uncle, H. W. B.

Mr. Shearman—The note which Mr. Tilton prepared as a substitute for this, to be sent to Mr. Perkins, is as follows, indorsed on the back of the same letter in Mr. Moulton's handwriting:

An enemy of mine, as I now learn, poisoned the mind of Theodore Tilton by telling him stories concerning me, T. T. being angered against me because I had quoted similar stories against him, which I had heard from the same party, retaliated. Theodore and I, through a mutual friend, were brought together, and found upon mutual explanations that both were the victims of the same slanderer.

MOULTON APPRISED OF HIS MOTHER'S DEATH.

Mr. Fullerton—Will your Honor permit the witness to step to the door? A messenger wishes to see him.

Judge Neilson—The suggestion is that the witness step to the door.

Mr. Evarts—We ask him to wait for a moment, not for any new subject, but only to see whether we have read the whole of this.

Mr. Shearman—The following additional words, leaving the paper unfinished:

"Theodore has taken pains to say to parties that"—

The Witness—Shall I read it?

[Mr. Shearman hands the letter to the witness.]

The Witness—That is my handwriting.

Judge Neilson—Can you read it?

Mr. Evarts—It has been read.

Mr. Tracy—Do you remember about it now, on looking at it?

A. No, Sir; I don't remember whether that sentence was concluded or not. That is what you are asking me about—the last sentence?

Mr. Tracy—Yes, Sir.

The Witness [To Judge Neilson]—Shall I step to the door now, your Honor?

Judge Neilson—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Fullerton—May it please your Honor, I suppose the witness will not be able to return to complete his cross-examination, or to subject himself to the re-direct examination. The sudden and unexpected death of his mother makes it necessary that he should, I suppose, give attention to his family, which is now afflicted. It occurred a few minutes since.

Judge Neilson—His mother died this morning?

Mr. Fullerton—Yes, Sir.

Judge Neilson—Has he just learned the fact?

Mr. Fullerton—He has not learned it yet.

Judge Neilson—Then, gentlemen, it will have to be deferred.

Mr. Evarts—During the last moment of the witness's examination the intelligence was conveyed to my learned friend, Judge Fullerton, not having yet reached the witness, and he spoke to me on the subject, and the result is this communication to him, which, of course, will require that your Honor and ourselves should accede to whatever his wishes may be in regard to it.

Mr. Fullerton—I suppose it had better be deferred to some future day in the course of this trial, when he can return.

Judge Neilson—Of course that will be very proper.

The Witness—I have just heard of my mother's death, and I will continue this examination if it does not take too long.

Judge Neilson—It is agreed that it shall be deferred.

(The Witness takes the witness stand.)

Judge Neilson—Nothing will be gained by your continuation of the examination now.

Mr. Fullerton—The witness thinks he had rather finish it now, so as not to be under the necessity of returning.

Judge Neilson—It will be necessary that the witness shall return, perhaps, in a day or two. I think this had better be deferred.

Mr. Evarts—Of course, as we suppose, it will be necessary; that the entire exhaustion on one side or the other of this witness cannot be proceeded with; and that being so, we would prefer that it should cease now, rather than at another time.

Mr. Beach—I have made a request to the witness, that he should overcome his private and personal grief, out of regard to a public duty. I think it is desirable that his cross-examination should close, and he has yielded to my request, and will conclude the examination.

Judge Neilson—Have you agreed about the re-direct examination, when that shall be concluded?

Mr. Shearman—Mr. Beach says he will go on with the re-direct examination also.

[Paper heretofore shown witness marked "Exhibit D., 47."]

Mr. Tracy—The witness may not be aware of the length of time that his examination may continue.

The Witness—I will wait, Sir, until it is finished.

THE CROSS-EXAMINATION CONTINUED.

Mr. Tracy—Now, Mr. Moulton, do you know how Mr. Tilton came by the copy of Mr. Beecher's letter of Feb. 5, 1872? A. Do I know how he came by a copy of it?

Q. Yes, Sir. A. I do not. That is the letter of Feb. 5, 1872?

Q. It is the long letter of Feb. 5, 1872? A. I don't know.

Mr. Shearman—It is the one that refers to the church, the newspapers and the book.

The Witness—Let me look at it, and perhaps I can tell you. [Mr. Shearman hands witness the book, which he examines.] I don't know how he came by a copy of it.

Q. Did you give him a copy of it? A. No, Sir; I never gave him a copy of it.

Q. Did you ever permit him to make a copy of it? A. I don't remember of his having taken a copy in my presence; I think I read the letter to him, or may have handed it to him to read.

Q. Could he have made a copy of it in your presence without your knowing it? A. I don't know; I don't recollect that he ever made a copy of it in my presence.

Q. That is not exactly the question that I asked? A. I don't think he could.

Q. Was he not a stenographer and short-hand writer? A. Yes, Sir; a short-hand writer.

Q. Was it not his habit to take a copy of these papers in short-hand? A. No, Sir; I don't recollect that it was.

Q. He could not have taken it in short-hand in your presence, when you were reading it, without your knowing it? A. Not without my knowing; I might not recollect now that he did.

Q. Do you mean to say you never intentionally permitted him to have a copy of that letter of February 5, 1872? A. I never intentionally permitted him to have a copy of it.

Q. Or to take a copy of it? A. Or he to take a copy of it; I may have read it to him, or may have handed him the paper, and if he wanted a copy of it, I might have allowed him to take it.

Q. You think you would have allowed him? A. I might have.

Q. Do you recollect of handing it to him? A. I don't recollect of handing it to him; I may have done so, however, for him to read.

Q. Can you tell us how he obtained a copy of the Beecher letter of June 1, 1873? A. I cannot tell. I read him that letter.

Q. When did you read it to him? A. I don't know. I may have read it to him on Sunday. I don't recollect when I left it with him precisely.

Q. Did you leave it with him? A. I don't think I did.

Q. Do you recollect whether you did or not? A. I don't recollect whether I did or not.

Q. How did he obtain a copy of Mr. Beecher's letter of Feb. 7, 1871, addressed to you? A. What was that letter?

Q. That is the letter where three letters were written all on the same day—two by Mr. Beecher, and one by Mr. Tilton. A. I know there were three letters dated on the same day. Which is the one you refer to?

Q. I refer to Mr. Beecher's letter to you. How did he get a copy of that letter? A. I don't know how he got a copy of it.

Q. You never gave him a copy of it? A. I never recollect doing so.

Q. Nor permitted him to make it? A. I don't know that I did. I was in the habit of showing him letters.

Q. Were you in the habit of leaving them with him? A. No, Sir; I was not in the habit of leaving them with him.

Q. Do you remember of leaving Mr. Beecher's letter with him? A. I don't recollect having left any letter with him; I may have done so though.

Q. Do you know how he obtained a copy of Mrs. Hooker's letter to Mr. Beecher which Mr. Beecher left with you? A. My impression is, Mr. Beecher gave him the letter itself.

Q. Do you know that fact? A. My impression is that he did; my impression, rather, is that he did. We were all in consultation about it together; and that is my impression that Mr. Beecher gave him that letter—showed it to him.

Q. And left it with him? A. And left it with him.

Q. Did you get it from Mr. Tilton or from Mr. Beecher? A. I forget whether I got it from Mr. Tilton or Mr. Beecher; but they were both consulting together about the letter of Mrs. Hooker.

Q. Did Mr. Tilton make a copy of it that day? A. I don't recollect.

Q. Was it left with you that day? A. I don't recollect; I think it was given to Theodore Tilton; I won't be certain, but I think it was.

Q. Mrs. Hooker's letter of Nov. 1st, 1873, I am talking about now. A. The Hooker correspondence, whatever it was, was the subject of discussion between Theodore Tilton, Mr. Beecher and myself, when the letter was read; whether he made a copy of it, I don't know; I certainly was present at part of the interview.

Q. Do you know when that interview was? A. I cannot remember the date. It was about the time that—; it was before Mrs. Hooker came to town.

Q. You don't remember the date? A. No, Sir; I don't remember the date; the date Theodore Tilton went up-town.

Q. I didn't ask you that. A. I am trying to fix it for you.

Q. Was Thomas K. Beecher's letter present at that time? A. My impression is that it was; I won't be certain about it.

Q. And you don't know whether Mr. Beecher left these letters with you that day, or whether he left them with Mr. Tilton, and you got them from Mr. Tilton? A. We were all together; I don't recollect whether he gave them to him or gave them to me.

Q. Who took these papers at the breaking up of the interview, you or Tilton? A. My impression is it was Tilton; I won't be certain about it; Mr. Beecher may have taken some at that interview and brought them back—something of that sort.

Q. Do you mean to say you have no recollection on the subject? A. I have only an impression. My impression is Mr. Tilton had those letters; that is my impression about it. He was certainly as much a party to the Hooker business as I was.

Mr. Tracy—I am not asking that.

The Witness—I am only trying to give you the truth of the matter.

TILTON'S FOOTPRINTS IN ALL THE CORRESPONDENCE.

Q. Now, of the numerous letters and papers that you have written for publication by Mr. Beecher, the letters that you have submitted to him for publication, which have not been published by him—

The Witness—Letters which I have submitted to who for publication?

Mr. Tracy—Letters or statements to Mr. Beecher. During this controversy of four years, will you name any paper or document that was not either written by Mr. Tilton or prepared by you in his immediate presence prior to the time of your consultation with Gen. Butler in 1874?

Mr. Fullerton—We object to that. They have gone over each letter and each statement and each document with great particularity in that respect, and asked questions in regard to the individual documents; so that exhausts the subject.

Mr. Evarts—This question is intended to exhaust that subject undoubtedly. Nothing has been overlooked.

Mr. Fullerton—I object to the subject being exhausted after it is exhausted.

Mr. Evarts—I think not. We want to know if there is any letter that was not written in the manner that this question asks; if so, we would like to see it.

[The Court directed THE TRIBUNE stenographer to read the question, which was done.]

Mr. Beach—That question calls for the witness to give a summary of the testimony already given, and it is not within the recollection or power of any man to do it.

The Witness—I cannot do that.

Mr. Evarts—We asked him to point out another letter.

Judge Neilson—It is a very long question, and has reference to a great number of papers, each paper having been already the subject of examination.

Mr. Tracy—Most of them have been.

Judge Neilson—I do not conceive the witness could well or safely answer it either way. At any rate, upon the ground that you have been over the individual papers, each speaking for itself, and the testimony in connection with each, I rule out the question.

Mr. Evarts—Your Honor will note our exception.

Mr. Tracy—Have you any paper in your possession, Mr. Moulton, draft or copy, which has not been prepared by Tilton, or by you in his immediate presence?

Mr. Fullerton—We make the same objection.

Mr. Tracy—I mean papers that were intended for Mr. Beecher either to publish or sign.

Judge Neilson—And you mean other than those which have been produced?

Mr. Tracy—Yes.

Judge Neilson—He may not understand the question.

The Witness—I have not any paper that I have not sought to produce.

Judge Neilson—He means have you any others than have been produced?

The Witness—I have not that I know of.

Q. Now, Mr. Moulton, I call your attention to this book again, pages 304 and 305. I call your attention to the proposed statement. A. "Moulton's proposed statement for Mr. Beecher." Sir?

Mr. Tracy—Yes, Sir. A. Yes, Sir.

Q. That is the proposed statement that you asked him to make after the Bacon letter, admitting an offense? A. Which I submitted to him for his judgment, Sir, after the Bacon letter.

Q. Now, Sir, did you offer him on that occasion that if he would make that statement, admitting an offense, you would sustain it, and would burn all the papers that you had in your possession? A. I don't think I stated it in that way, Sir. I said that—if you will allow me to tell what I did say to Mr. Beecher, according to the best of my recollection—is that in order?

Mr. Evarts—No.

The Witness—I will undertake to state exactly what I said, to the best of my recollection.

Q. Will you give me the book? I think I can frame a question. Have you read what appears on page 305? A. I have not; no.

Q. Just refresh your memory by that. [Handing book to witness.] A. I think very likely; this suggests to me that I may have said something of that sort, Sir.

Q. Very well; I will ask you—just give me the book and I will frame my question.

The Witness—On July the 5th that was; there are two different interviews; I didn't say that at the first interview, Sir.

Q. After you had presented to him this proposed statement which you asked him to make, which is "Exhibit 94," did you not on July 5th say to Mr. Beecher—

Judge Neilson—Mr. Tracy, he didn't say he asked him to make it; perhaps you had better amend the question.

Mr. Tracy—I understood that he had said that before.

Judge Neilson—No, the witness don't say he asked him to make it.

The Witness—I said I submitted it to his judgment.

Judge Neilson—He said he submitted it to him.

Mr. Tracy—Very well; after you had submitted this proposed statement to Mr. Beecher for him to make? A. I said I thought it was best; I thought it would be a good thing for him to do to make that statement—not for him to make—

Q. Now, I am only calling your attention to the time it was submitted; now, after that I asked you? A. I am only asking that the question be properly framed, Mr. Tracy.

Q. Did you not say to him that Mr. Tilton had committed himself to a settlement if that is said, and "if it is said and he demands anything further, so far as I am concerned, I shall destroy every paper and everything I have bearing on the subject, and if he wants to open the thing he will have to open it without any aid or confirmation from me"? A. I think very likely I said something of that sort to him, Sir.

DR. STORRS CRITICISED.

Q. In the course of your direct examination you have referred—there has been introduced a letter from Mr. Beecher to you, referring to Dr. Storrs and to his action during the councils; did you have a conversation with Mr. Beecher

Just prior to the writing of that letter by him in which you stated to him in substance, that Dr. Storrs had written a letter to Mr. Tilton, advising him in advance of what he was to say in his speech, and saying that he should have to defend Mr. Beecher and appear to criticise him, Tilton, severely? A. I don't think I mentioned any letter, Sir.

Q. Well, did you say that Dr. Storrs had said that to Tilton? A. I said that I had understood so—at least not said it to Mr. Tilton. I beg pardon.

Q. You understood — A. That some such message had been sent.

Q. That Dr. Storrs had said that of Tilton? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Now, didn't Dr. Storrs say, or didn't you report to Mr. Beecher, that Dr. Storrs had said that he had communicated to Mr. Tilton the fact that he should criticise Mr. Tilton in his speech and defend Mr. Beecher in the Council, or appear to defend him? A. I said to Mr. Beecher that some such notice as that had been sent to Tilton; some such message; he had received some such communication from somebody, simply in the nature of hearsay, Sir; I had no authority for that particularly, except the person who told me.

Q. And didn't you say to Mr. Beecher that that was an act of insincerity on the part of Dr. Storrs? A. I think I said if that was true it was insincere; I thought it was.

Q. You said if that was true of Dr. Storrs you thought them insincere? A. Yes, Sir; I did, too.

Q. How long did that conversation between you and Mr. Beecher precede the writing of this letter? A. I really don't recollect.

Q. Well, was it a day or two? A. I don't recollect, Sir; I don't remember that it preceded it even; I don't remember even that it preceded it.

Q. Didn't you, in talking with Mr. Beecher, quote Dr. Storrs as saying that while he should attack Mr. Tilton, that that would be all flummery? A. No; I did not use any such language as that, that that would be all flummery.

Q. What did you say? A. I don't recollect, Sir, precisely what I said; I don't think I said anything like that. I think I have stated substantially what I said to Mr. Beecher—all that I recollect.

Q. Repeat it again, please, consecutively? A. Well, won't the stenographer read it?

Q. Won't you repeat it? A. I will try to.

Judge Neilson—The simple question is what you said to Mr. Beecher about Dr. Storrs? A. All that I remember, your Honor, is that I said to Mr. Beecher that I had heard that Dr. Storrs had sent that communication to Mr. Tilton; that it would be necessary to be severe upon him, or something of that sort; and I said that I thought there was insincerity in that; that is the substance; all that I recollect.

Q. You said that to Mr. Beecher? A. I think I did, Sir, substantially.

Q. By whom did you understand the message had been sent, or the communication had been sent by Dr. Storrs? A. Well, I don't recollect—

Mr. Beach—He does not say that it had been sent.

Mr. Tracy—Well, he says Mr. Tilton had received a communication from Dr. Storrs.

Judge Neilson—He understood he received it?

Mr. Tracy—Yes, Sir.

Q. By whom did you understand that? A. I don't recollect whether I understood the party or not at that time, Sir.

Q. Did you understand that that message was sent through Carpenter? A. I did not understand that it was a message sent through anybody, but I understood that somebody had sent a communication to Mr. Tilton.

Q. Did you understand that it was a communication sent by Mr. Carpenter?

Mr. Beach—You don't let the witness answer questions; you interrupt him.

The Witness—Now, Mr. Tracy, I understood that Dr. Storrs had said it to somebody who had communicated it to Mr. Tilton, that in that speech Dr. Storrs would deem it necessary to be severe upon Mr. Tilton. Now, whether it was a message or not intended to be conveyed to Mr. Tilton, I don't know.

Q. We don't ask that. A. Well, all right then.

Q. What did you say to Mr. Beecher about who had communicated that story? A. I don't recollect, Sir, who.

Q. Didn't you mention the name of Carpenter? A. I don't recollect that I did, Sir, now.

Q. Did you hear the name of Carpenter mentioned in connection with that communication? A. I don't recollect.

Mr. Beach—Well, that is inadmissible, Sir.

Mr. Tracy—I desire to call your attention, now, to an interview to which you have referred as occurring between yourself and Mr. Beecher prior to or on January 10, 1871, where the Bowen letter was the subject of conversation—Tilton's letter to Bowen of the date of January first; have you omitted from that interview anything except what you have omitted at the request of the Court, as referring to a third party? A. I think I have omitted that Tilton was present in my direct-examination.

Q. Well, you stated that. A. I did not state it in my direct examination. In reading over my direct examination I made a note; I think I am correct about it, Sir; it was some time ago I was glancing over my direct examination, and I think that was left out.

Q. The question I asked you is, whether you have omitted from that conversation anything except what you have omitted at the request of the Court, concerning a third party. A. I don't think I have, Sir.

Q. With that exception you have stated the whole of that interview. A. I think I have; yes, Sir.

ANOTHER DISCUSSION ON THE CLARK LETTER.

Q. I hand you this letter, Mr. Moulton, a letter from Mr. Clark; I understood you to say that you had several letters from Mr. Clark, which you showed to Mr. Beecher. A. No; I did not say that I had several which I showed; I don't understand that I said that. I said that I did not recollect distinctly that I had shown this letter to Mr. Beecher.

Q. What did you say on the subject of having shown Mr. Clark's letter to Mr. Beecher? A. I said I was under the impression that I had shown a letter or letters of Mr. Clark to Mr. Beecher.

Q. Then you have other letters of Clark besides that? A. I was under the impression that I had other letters; I have made a search for them and cannot find them, if I had any; that seems to be the only one.

Q. Isn't that the letter you showed to Mr. Beecher? A. I don't think it is, Sir; I don't think it is; I am not clear about it.

Q. You think, now, you never showed any of Mr. Clark's letters to Mr. Beecher? A. My impression is that I did, but I don't recollect distinctly enough about this letter to state it. I told the counsel when I showed this letter originally to them that I was under the impression that I had showed it to Mr. Beecher, but I didn't know it distinctly enough—didn't recollect it distinctly enough when it was submitted to me in Court to say so.

Q. If you showed any letter of Mr. Clark's to Mr. Beecher, that is the one, isn't it? A. I can't say whether it is or not.

Q. I understand you to say that is the only one you find from Mr. Clark? A. It is the only one I find from Mr. Clark; I don't mean to say that it is the only one I had from Mr. Clark.

Q. Do you mean to say that you had any more letters from Mr. Clark? A. Yes, Sir; I had more letters from Mr. Clark; I had before and after.

Q. Where are they? A. I don't know, Sir; I suppose they must have been destroyed.

Q. When and where did you destroy them? A. Well, I suppose at the time, or shortly after.

Q. Do you remember anything about it? A. I do not.

Q. Do you remember of ever receiving a letter from Mr. Clark and destroying it? A. Yes, Sir; I should suppose I had received and destroyed letters from Mr. Clark.

Q. Do you recollect distinctly having torn up or destroyed them? A. No; I don't recollect having torn up and destroyed them.

Q. Isn't that the only letter that you remember having received from Mr. Clark? A. No; it is not the only one I remember having received from Mr. Clark.

Q. Do you remember of having shown any other letter than that to Mr. Beecher?

Mr. Beach—Well that is assuming that he showed that.

Mr. Tracy—No.

The Witness—I have either stated the contents of other letters to Mr. Beecher, and may have stated the contents of this letter to Mr. Beecher; I am only undertaking to give you the truth, Mr. Tracy, as I can recollect it; if you want any more, I cannot give it to you.

Mr. Tracy—Now we offer to read that letter.

Mr. Tracy—Mr. Clark, what capacity did he hold in The Golden Age? What was his position on The Golden Age? A. He was an editor.

Mr. Shearman—He was Mr. Tilton's assistant editor.

Q. Mr. Clark was assistant editor on The Golden Age, wasn't he? A. Yes, Sir; he was employed by Mr. Tilton, I suppose, as assistant editor.

Mr. Shearman—[Reading:]

"Golden Age Office, Jan. 4."—

Mr. Beach—Well, wait. The letter is not identified—it is not admissible.

[Letter handed to plaintiff's counsel.]

Mr. Fullerton—I don't care to read this long letter through. We object to it.

Mr. Evarts—This is the letter that my learned friend produced and presented to the witness on the direct examination and he said that he had shown it to Mr. Beecher. My learned friend then commenced to read it in evidence, when the witness recalled it to his hands, looked it over, and said that he could not be sure, or he could not remember that he had shown this letter to Mr. Beecher; that he had several letters from Mr. Clark, which he showed to Mr. Beecher, and that he talked with Mr. Beecher about them. He could not be sure that he had shown this letter. We have now cross-examined him on the subject of there being any other letters, or of his memory of having shown any other letters, and probed his memory in regard to this letter, and we consider the state of the evidence from him such as entitles us to read this as having been shown to Mr. Beecher, which was the ground on which they were expecting to read it. But the witness recalled the statement and the letter into his hands.

Judge Neilson—The question is now whether it is identified as the letter that was shown.

Mr. Fullerton—I adopt the gentleman's argument as the best one that could possibly be made upon our side of the case, in objection to this document; but I do not adopt his conclusion. The witness did recall the letter, and he recalled what he said in regard to having shown it to Mr. Beecher. That took away my right to read it in evidence, and consequently I did not read it in evidence. They immediately raised an objection on the other side, which objection was well founded, and was acquiesced in by myself. Now they have not added anything to that testimony at all.

Judge Neilson—That is the question.

Mr. Fullerton—Not a jot or tittle. They have simply proved by the witness that he has received other letters from Mr. Clark, and that he thinks that he stated the contents of one or more to him, or read one or more of them to Mr. Beecher; but he cannot identify this letter as one of them which he read to Mr. Beecher, or the contents of which he stated to him. It leaves it exactly where it was before; therefore the letter is not admissible.

Mr. Evarts—It is a question of fact for the jury whether this was shown to Mr. Beecher.

Judge Neilson—I think the question is for the Court whether that is identified as the letter. If you do not identify it now, perhaps you can in the progress of the case.

Mr. Evarts—I, of course, submit to your Honor's correction about the matter as finally disposing of it. But we certainly have changed the situation from what it was before. The witness had distinctly stated—and so it will appear if we recur to his evidence—that he did show some letter of Mr. Clark to Mr. Beecher, but he could not say that he showed this one; but that others he did show, and did have, and did talk about, etc. He said that he talked with Mr. Beecher about this letter, as I understand him. We said, "Why, you are showing a letter from Mr. Clark to Mr. Moulton; it is not a letter which affects Mr. Beecher until you show that it formed the subject of conversation." Then the letter is shown to us, and we now prove by the witness that this is the only letter that he has.

Judge Neilson—That he has?

Mr. Evarts—That he has; that he has no recollection of having destroyed any letter—

Judge Neilson—The simple question is whether he identifies this letter as the one he spoke of to Mr. Beecher.

Mr. Evarts—Exactly. He has no recollection of having destroyed any other letter. I so understand him. He has just given his evidence; of course, I have no object in misstating it. He has no recollection of having destroyed any other letter, but he may have destroyed them. This letter, it seems, he has, and has preserved, and the contents of the letter will show that it was a matter concerning which conversation was had with Mr. Beecher—that is, the affairs of The Golden Age. It has been abundantly proved, and we submit to your Honor that it is sufficiently identified to be permitted to be read in evidence as a part of the dealing between this witness and Mr. Beecher, concerning the affairs of The Golden Age, as communicated in letters of Mr. Clark. It is the only letter that is produced; it is the only letter, in respect to the absolute existence of which there is clear evidence; and there is clear evidence that Clark's letters formed the subject of conversation to Mr. Beecher; and, on the witness's direct examination, he said that he showed him some. We say that, as it now stands, however, putting this as presumptive and on the evidence, the only letter concerning whose existence there is clear proof—and the witness's testimony is distinct that some letter of Mr. Clark's, on this subject, he did show to Mr. Beecher.

Mr. Fullerton—The absurdity of this proposition will be seen at once if you put the gentleman's proposition in the shape of a syllogism. Mr. Clark did write several letters to Mr. Moulton; Mr. Moulton has found only one of those letters, the rest he has destroyed, and therefore the one he has found must be the letter which he showed Mr. Beecher. Now, that is a fair statement of the case. There is not the slightest evidence in the world that this is the letter which he showed to Mr. Beecher. There is not evidence enough from which it can be inferred at all. We regard the letter as quite immaterial in any aspect of the case, for any side of the case; but certainly it has not been identified as the letter which was shown to Mr. Beecher, or the contents of which were stated to Mr. Beecher, to make it evidence in the case.

Judge Neilson—That is a point of doubt with me. I think you will have to identify it further. I think you will have to hold it until you can identify it further, gentlemen. It may have been the letter—probably was—but it does not appear that it was.

Mr. Tracy—Have you searched for any other letters of Mr. Clark? A. Yes, Sir; I have myself, and have asked my wife to. Perhaps she may find some to-day.

Q. This is the only one you find? A. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Evarts—This is the witness's direct examination. [Reading]:

Q. [Handing paper to witness]. Tell me whether the paper now shown you was received by you? A. Yes, Sir; it was.

Q. About the time of its date? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Did you show it to Mr. Beecher? A. I did; yes, Sir.

Q. Did you read it to him, or did he read it, which? A. I don't know whether he read it or whether I read it to him. It was either read to him, or he read it himself.

Q. When did you read it to him, how soon after its receipt? A. I don't remember, Sir, how soon after the receipt; some time after.

Q. Within what time? A. I should think within a month. I remember the conversation—something of the conversation on that subject.

Q. I want you to tell the conversation you had with Mr. Beecher with reference to that letter? A. It was with regard to the difficulties of The Golden Age. [To Mr. Fullerton.] Will you let me look at that letter again.

Mr. Fullerton—Certainly.

The Witness—[After examining the letter.] I am not sufficiently clear about that to swear in regard to it.

Mr. Evarts—What is it?

The Witness—I am not sufficiently clear that this is the letter that I showed to Mr. Beecher. I have several letters from Mr. Clark.

Q. You are not clear this was shown to Mr. Beecher? A. No, Sir; I am clear with regard to that. I want to correct my statement in regard to that. That the letter was a subject of conversation I am sure, but that I showed it to him I am not sure.

Now, it seems he has no other letter now, that he has no recollection of having destroyed any other as a specific act or fact, and it stands very distinctly on his original examination that that letter he did show, and that he talked with him about that letter. Now, if we have exhausted all present existence, all definite evidence that any other letters ever did exist, can we not rely upon their direct evidence and our cross-examination to submit the question that that is the letter concerning which he had conversed with Mr. Beecher. He says he had conversations about that letter. He cannot say that he showed it to him—as it ultimately ends; but the doubt, the whole doubt that withdrew the fact, once testified to, that he had shown it to him, that he either read it, or that it was read to him, &c., that disturbance arose because there were supposed to be other letters which he still had, and the matter was reserved then. Now, there are no other letters, none can be found; and we submit to your Honor that we have sufficiently identified that letter as being shown to Mr. Beecher, if any letter was shown to him, and there is no disturbance of the fact that some letter was shown to him, either read to him or read by him, and the fact that this letter was talked about to Mr. Beecher by Mr. Moulton. We now offer to read it.

Mr. Beach—This question, Sir, when it was presented to your Honor on the original offer of this paper, was decided, deliberately, and after argument by counsel. Your Honor then held that the paper was not sufficiently identified to authorize the defendant's counsel to have it marked for identification. Your Honor said to counsel that the paper was not so identified that it was not within the control of the plaintiff's counsel, who held it, and permitted them, under an exception taken by Mr. Evarts, to withdraw it from marking for identification. Has the evidence now given, Sir, changed the attitude of the question? This witness says he knows that he had other letters from Mr. Clark; that he supposed he had them in his possession; that he has made diligent search for them, and cannot find them, and that he supposes they were destroyed, although he has no distinct present recollection as to the particular act of destruction; but that he had other letters, and that they are lost, is beyond all controversy upon this evidence. He says, Sir, that he cannot recollect whether this letter, or another of the letters which has been destroyed, was shown to Mr. Beecher, or formed the subject of conversation between them. The general topic of the letter in regard to the difficulties connected with The Golden Age, was matter of discourse between this witness and Mr. Beecher, and that, of course, is competent; but how the declarations of Mr. Clark, in a written form to Mr. Moulton, not communicated to either of these parties, can be made evidence by the counsel upon the other side, without a clear identification of the paper, as having been thus submitted, I am unable to perceive; and I submit to your Honor that this question having once been decided, and the counsel taking an exception, that there has been no new evidence given which should re-open the investigation.

Mr. Evarts—I only wish to read a part of the evidence. My learned friend is not right in saying that this witness is uncertain whether this letter or the other was the subject of conversation. He is perfectly clear on that point:

Q. You are not clear this was shown to Mr. Beecher? A. No, Sir, not clear in regard to that. I want to correct my statement in regard to that. That the letter was a subject of conversation I am sure, but that I showed it to him I am not sure.

Mr. Beach [reading]:

I want you to tell the conversation you had with Mr. Beecher with reference to that letter? A. It was with regard to the difficulties of The Golden Age.

Not with reference especially to that letter.

Mr. Evarts—The letter is full of it; that is all there is of it.

Mr. Beach—I don't know about that.

Judge Neilson—I think you will have to identify the letter further. You can do that, doubtless, in the progress of the case.

Mr. Evarts—I don't know how that is. I have got through with this witness on this letter. I don't know any other mode. I have got through with this witness on this letter, Sir.

Judge Neilson—I think it is not sufficiently identified yet.

Mr. Evarts—Your Honor will note our exception.

Judge Neilson—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Evarts—We think that we are entitled to read it, whether it was shown to him or not, on the clear statement that the subject of it—

Mr. Beach—I make, if your Honor please, a suggestion to the discretion of the Court, whether, when we make objection to evidence, we shall not have the ordinary privilege of counsel of closing the discussion upon the point, especially after the decision of the Court has been rendered.

Mr. Tracy—Now, Mr. Moulton, was that letter shown to Mr. Tilton? A. I don't recollect whether it was or not.

Q. Was it ever the subject of conversation between you and Tilton? A. I don't recollect whether the letter was or not. The purpose of Mr. Clark to purchase The Golden Age was, Sir.

Mr. Evarts—We submit that the whole subject of this letter is exactly what this witness, in his direct examination, was asked about—the conversation concerning it—and stated it to be, to wit, he talked to Mr. Beecher about the difficulties of The Golden Age.

Judge Neilson—There may be another letter on the same subject for aught we know.

Mr. Evarts—But are we to take the presumption that there might have been another letter?

Judge Neilson—He has sworn that there were other letters.

Mr. Evarts—I don't understand, if your Honor please, —

Mr. Morris—Is this an appeal from your Honor's decision that they are arguing?

Mr. Evarts—I don't understand that there were other letters.

Judge Neilson—He says he had other letters.

Mr. Evarts—Your Honor, that is exactly the point; that as it stands on his present examination, there is not any clear memory or statement of his that there ever were any other letters.

Judge Neilson—I understand him to say there were other letters.

Mr. Evarts—He has said so at some time in his examination, but we do not so submit the fact to be. Of course we would be very willing, as a matter of evidence, to present such other evidence as there might be, but your Honor sees that this witness, to whom the letter was written, and who was the agent that communicated it, seems to be the only witness to that fact that there is.

Mr. Fullerton—That is no reason why it should be admitted.

Mr. Evarts—No; but his Honor thinks it should be further identified. It is not, therefore, a question of whether we should reserve it, but whether your Honor excludes the letter finally.

Judge Neilson—I exclude it simply because it does not seem to be sufficiently identified as the one that was the subject of conversation.

Mr. Evarts—Well, your Honor, we suppose that there is no doubt on his own testimony of that. He says he is sure of it.

Judge Neilson—Proceed, Mr. Tracy.

Mr. Tracy—Mr. Moulton, what passed between you and Mr. Beecher concerning the difficulties of The Golden Age at that conversation where a letter from Clark was talked of? A. I talked with Mr. Beecher, Sir, about Mr. Clark's purchasing The Golden Age—about his desire to do it.

Q. Did you repeat to Mr. Beecher what Mr. Clark said about it? A. I think I did, Sir, substantially what Mr. Clark said.

Q. Did you repeat to him substantially what Mr. Clark had said to you in a letter? A. I had no other means but that; what he said to me in a letter and verbally. I met Mr. Clark, I think, about the time at The Golden Age office as well. Verbally and by letters.

Q. Did you say to Mr. Beecher that Mr. Clark had told you that he thought at one time that he would get some one who would purchase The Golden Age of Mr. Tilton? A. I told Mr. Beecher that Mr. Clark was trying to purchase The Golden Age—talked of it.

Q. Did you tell him that Mr. Clark had told you that at one time he thought he could get some other person to purchase

The Golden Age, but had tried and failed? A. To get some other person than himself, Sir?

Q. Yes, Sir. A. I don't recollect whether I did or not. I talked with him in a general way about it. I can't remember that precisely, Sir.

Q. Did you tell Mr. Beecher that Mr. Clark's trial to find some one who would purchase The Golden Age had failed? A. I don't recollect that I did, Sir.

Q. That Mr. Clark said so? A. I don't recollect that either.

Q. Did you tell Mr. Beecher that Mr. Clark said that the men he had spoken to had such painful impressions, if not seated prejudice, against Mr. Tilton, that they were unwilling to even seriously consider the matter? A. I don't think I told him that, Sir.

Q. You don't think you did tell him that? A. No, Sir.

Q. Did you tell him that Mr. Clark told you that he, Clark, had been blamed for retaining a connection with such a man and paper? A. I don't recollect that, Sir; no, Sir.

Q. Do you recollect that you did not so tell him? A. If I had any recollection about it, Sir, I would tell you.

Q. Did you tell him that Mr. Clark told you that two or three men who had no prejudice against Mr. Tilton saw no field and no future for the paper and advised its giving up? A. No, I don't recollect having told him that.

Q. Did you tell him anything of that kind? A. I don't remember.

Q. Did you tell him anything of that kind, in substance? A. I don't remember that.

Q. And especially, did Mr. Clark add, the name of the editor was a millstone upon it? A. No, I don't remember that.

Q. Did you tell him anything of that kind? A. I don't recollect that I did, Sir.

Q. Did you tell Mr. Beecher that Mr. Clark had said that the name of the editor, Mr. Tilton, was a millstone upon the paper? A. I don't recollect that I did, Sir.

Q. Do you remember that you did not? A. I have no recollection about it, Sir. If I recollected that I did I should tell you. My impression is that I did not tell him.

Q. Did you tell him that Mr. Clark said the newspaper men with whom he had conversed had advised the starting of a new paper and allowing The Golden Age to sink? A. I don't remember that I did, Sir.

Q. Do you remember that you did not? A. I don't remember that I did not, or that I did, Sir.

Q. Did you tell him that Mr. Clark had informed you that he (Clark) had found on inquiry a much deeper and stronger prejudice against Mr. Tilton than he had imagined, and that he (Clark) had been a good deal depressed by it—by that information? A. My impression is that I did not tell him anything of the kind, Sir.

Q. Nothing in substance that? A. No.

Q. Did you tell him that Mr. Clark had informed you that he wrote this explanation to you because he could not tell it to Mr. Tilton without wounding his already lacerated heart. A. No.

Q. Did you tell Mr. Beecher that Mr. Clark had informed you that he thought Mr. Tilton ought to go abroad into another atmosphere and new scenes? Did you tell Mr. Beecher that? A. I don't recollect that I did, Sir.

Q. Anything of the kind; did you tell him that Mr. Clark had made any suggestion to you about Mr. Tilton going abroad? A. I don't remember that I did, Sir; I don't think I did.

Q. Do you remember that you did not? A. I say I don't think I did, Sir.

Q. Now, can you state what it was in the letter of Mr. Clark—any letter of Mr. Clark—that you did talk to Mr. Beecher about? A. I think it was a letter of Mr. Clark's in which he talked about the purchasing of The Golden Age, and I communicated or showed to Mr. Beecher that letter—communicated the substance of it, namely, that Mr. Clark was going to try to buy The Golden Age.

Q. Now, look at that letter and say if that is not the letter? [Handing witness a letter.] A. I don't think it is, Sir; I don't think it is.

Q. Will you swear that it is not the letter? A. I will swear that my impression is that it is not the letter. My impression is that the letter was a shorter one, which simply communicated to me Mr. Clark's intention of purchasing; I think it was, Sir. I have tried to find all the letters that I had, and probably may find it yet; if I do I will present it to you.

Mr. Tracy—That is all.

Judge Nellson—Are you through?

Mr. Tracy—There are some envelopes.

Mr. Morris—Will you please hand those letters back that you have not used, all of them?

Mr. Tracy—You have produced certain letters from Mr. Beecher this morning which, we understand, are all that you have in your possession. Have you destroyed any of Mr. Beecher's letters to you? A. I should think I had, Sir.

Q. You think you have? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Intentionally? A. Intentionally? I could not have done it unintentionally.

Q. Did you do it intentionally? A. Why, of course I did.

Q. Now, when? A. I suppose when I received them, or about the time.

Q. Do you know when? A. I know I have not since your subpoena, Sir.

Q. When before the subpoena did you destroy them? A. I cannot tell precisely when, Sir.

Q. Can you tell anything about it? A. No; not precisely; no.

Mr. Everts—There was an envelope that was identified and not put in evidence. We will read that.

Mr. Tracy—It is postmarked—"Brooklyn, May 6, 5 p. m., New-York. Mrs. Elizabeth Tilton, Care of Theodore Tilton, Esq., Brooklyn, New-York."

[Marked "Exhibit D 48."]

Q. The handwriting of that envelope—is that Mr. Tilton's handwriting? [Handing witness the envelope.] A. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Fullerton—Well, you mean the whole of it is in his handwriting?

The Witness—No, not the whole. The superscription. The memorandum is not.

Mr. Fullerton—There is no distinction between the superscription and the memorandum, in your answer.

The Witness—I beg pardon.

Judge Neilson—The answer applied to the direction of the letter.

Mr. Fullerton—And therefore was an error.

Mr. Evarts—Give us the letter that was in that envelope. [Handing envelope to plaintiff's counsel.]

Mr. Morris—I don't know what letter you refer to.

Mr. Evarts—If your Honor please, I ask the counsel to produce the letter that was in that envelope.

Mr. Morris—I say I don't know what letter was in it.

Mr. Shearman—We ask you to produce a letter from Mrs. Tilton to Mr. Moulton, written Feb. 10 or 11, 1872.

Mr. Evarts—It is postmarked Lafayette.

Mr. Shearman—Lafayette, Indiana.

Mr. Evarts—Lafayette, Indiana, February 12, and we assume it was 1872. Now, if you will find the letter.

Mr. Morris—A letter from whom?

Mr. Shearman—A letter from Mrs. Tilton to Mr. Moulton. The letter is marked "II" in the original statement.

Mr. Evarts—The Clark letter we ask the stenographer to mark for identification, as being that concerning which your Honor has ruled.

[Letter marked "Exhibit D 49 for identification."]

Mr. Evarts—We wish this paper identified as the letter in that envelope.

Mr. Tracy—Is that the letter that came under that envelope? [Handing witness a letter.] A. I think it is; yes, Sir.

Mr. Evarts—We ask to have them marked for identification. We do not offer them now.

[The letter is marked "Exhibit D 50 for identification."] The envelope is marked "Exhibit D 51 for identification."]

Q. We have called on you for all envelopes in which letters were received by you and you have produced three, two of which have been marked for identification. Have you any other?

Mr. Morris—Oh! we have produced a number more.

Mr. Tracy—Envelopes? Where are they?

Mr. Morris—Over there, with the letters in them.

Mr. Evarts—You mean those that you gave us this morning?

Mr. Morris—Yes, Sir.

Judge Neilson—He can answer whether he has any more than those produced, without stopping to number them.

Mr. Fullerton—Yes. But he cannot answer that question put.

Mr. Tracy—Wait a moment; the question was put under a misapprehension. [To the witness]—Have you any other envelopes that belong to any papers that have been put in evidence on either side? A. None that I know of; no.

Q. What has become of them? A. I suppose they have been destroyed; I haven't got any.

Q. Do you remember destroying them? A. I don't remember precisely when I destroyed them. They must be destroyed. I haven't got them.

Q. Do you remember destroying them? A. I do not remember having destroyed them; I know I haven't got them; that is all.

Q. Do you remember whether in Exhibits 49 and 50 marked for identification—whether in that envelope there was also a letter inclosed for Mrs. Tilton? A. I don't really remember, Sir, whether there was or not; I rather think there was not though.

Q. You don't remember? A. My impression is that there was not.

Mr. Fullerton—I think there ought to be some way of quickening the other side in their movements.

Mr. Evarts—What would you suggest?

Mr. Fullerton—I would suggest that you go on.

Mr. Evarts—That is exactly what we are suggesting now.

Mr. Fullerton—It takes you too long to make the suggestion.

Mr. Evarts—How would you remedy that?

Mr. Fullerton—By going on.

Mr. Evarts—That is, provided you were on our side in the case.

Mr. Fullerton—No; if I was on your side I would not go on. [Laughter.]

THE SUGGESTIONS OF IMPEACHMENT AGAIN.

Q. You say you have identified the gentleman, Mr. Swan, with whom you were supposed to have a conversation? A. I will tell you what I did do; I sent over a young man this morning to find out whether Mr. Armour's partner's name was Swan, and I believe that to be the man.

Q. Did you say to him on any occasion since the publication of Mr. Beecher's statement, that you and Mr. Beecher were in controversy, and that you had got to destroy him, or he would destroy you? A. I don't recollect that.

Q. Did you say anything in substance like that? A. I don't recollect that I did; I have not any recollection of saying any such thing as that.

Q. You remember talking with him about it? A. I don't remember having talked with him about it.

Q. This conversation was in the City of New-York? A. I don't remember any conversation on the subject. I know Mr. Swan.

Judge Neilson—It may be another Swan.

Mr. Evarts—Swans are not so plenty.

Mr. Tracy—Did you say anything to him on the subject of destroying Mr. Beecher? A. I don't recollect that I did.

Mr. Tracy—That is all; we are through.

THE RE-DIRECT EXAMINATION.

Mr. Fullerton—You were asked a moment since in regard to the envelopes which contained Mr. Beecher's letters. How many of them have you produced? A. I produced all I had.

Q. About how many in number? A. The record seems to show you have produced but two or three, in consequence of the form or structures of the questions put to you by the other side? A. I don't remember how many I produced; I produced all I had.

Q. About how many are there? I only want it to go on the records that there are more than three? A. There are more than three.

Q. Do you recollect destroying any of the envelopes? A. Tearing them?

Q. Yes, Sir; or burning them? A. I don't recollect precisely about it. I must have done so.

Q. Do you think you must have done so because you have not got an envelope to match each letter that is produced? A. Yes, Sir; precisely.

Q. You reason it out? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. But you have no positive recollection of destroying any one of them? A. I didn't undertake to keep the envelopes.

Q. In regard to the letters of Mr. Beecher, have you any distinct recollection of destroying any of his letters? A. I remember tearing up some of his letters after reading them, when they didn't interest me very much.

Q. Did they relate to this controversy that is going on in any way? A. No, Sir; I don't think they did.

Q. Did you preserve every letter that related to the controversy? A. Every letter of importance, I think I did; any letter I considered of any importance I preserved.

Q. You have been asked with regard to your conversation on July 5th in respect to the proposed statement made at that time, commencing, "This church and community are unquestionably interested," &c. What did you say to Mr. Beecher at the time that publication was proposed, or was the subject of conversation?

Mr. Evarts—We object to the renewal of the inquiry. The conversation was affirmatively gone into by our learned friends as a part of their direct-examination, and all that we have asked him was what occurred this morning, which was whether he didn't say so and so. That does not give them a right to re-examine him as to the conversation. It is their examination and their conversation, and our cross-examination.

Judge Neilson—Unless there is something that requires explanation, that is all.

Mr. Evarts—He might re-examine him in regard to what he said to us in that conversation, but he has commenced by asking him what that conversation was, which has already been produced as affirmative evidence on their part.

Mr. Fullerton—It is not to be expected, if the Court please, that any witness after the lapse of such a length of time, would be able to state the whole of the conversation which took place between himself and another person. The witness's attention was called to this statement, which is "Exhibit No. 34," and to what he said to Mr. Beecher at the time, and he went on to give that part of the conversation, which was then within his recollection. He has undergone a severe cross-examination in respect to that conversation, and he has been asked if he did not say such and such things, which were incorporated in the question, bringing up to his mind something that he had not theretofore stated; and he stated once or twice during that cross-examination that he was willing to state what he said to Mr. Beecher on that subject—that is to say, the subject incorporated in the question. Now, if there was anything said on that subject which the witness didn't recollect when he was on his direct examination, it is proper for me now to call it out.

Judge Neilson—Especially as he was not allowed to state it when he was cross-examined.

Mr. Fullerton—Yes, Sir; that is the reason why I put the question. Of course, we cannot shut our eyes to the conclusion that these questions were put to him with a view of contradicting him by some other witness, and it is right and proper that he should state what he did say to Mr. Beecher on that subject, at that time, if he did not say the exact things which were incorporated in the question put to him.

Mr. Evarts—My learned friend is altogether out there. We are not going to contradict him. We wanted to prove that he said it and he said he did.

Judge Neilson—I think he may answer the question.

Mr. Evarts—One moment, if your Honor please. This is re-direct examination. It is a very grave matter, if we are to understand that the reproduction of one of these interviews is authorized, or some part of it.

Judge Neilson—My recollection is that the witness, when interrogated on the cross-examination, in answering, said he could state what was said, but was not allowed to, as he had then no right to do, except upon the consent of counsel examining him.

Mr. Evarts—I agree that what pertains to that very point of the conversation that we brought out, may be; I don't argue against that; I only argue against the generality of the conversation—that the whole conversation may be gone into.

Judge Neilson—You are at liberty to read what he said in the re-direct, and then the inquiry might be shortened.

Mr. Tracy—This is a conversation that occurred between the witness and Mr. Beecher one Sunday, on the 5th of July, when they had a walk on Sunday, when the witness introduced Mr. Robinson as one of the parties to the conversation. That will identify the conversation as I understand it. That was the conversation of last July, 1874. He was examined fully on that matter, and on cross-examination we asked him, didn't you in that conversation tell Mr. Beecher thus and so.

Mr. Fullerton—And in reply he said, "I didn't tell him that, but I will tell you what he said if you will let me."

Mr. Tracy—The counsel is mistaken. The witness said, "I did say so." That is the answer of the witness—"I did say so."

Mr. Fullerton—That is not the way the evidence stands in that regard.

Mr. Evarts—We call attention to the direct examination. [Reading]:

Was any other course proposed? A. Yes, Sir; I submitted to him a paper which I had dictated to Frank Carpenter, and I said; "Mr. Beecher, if anything is said I deem it most judicious that this should be said," and I read to him that which I had dictated to Mr. Carpenter.

That is the paper concerning which the examination and cross-examination proceeded. [Again reading]:

Q. In whose handwriting was that paper? A. That paper was in Carpenter's handwriting. Mr. Beecher asked me for a copy of it.

Q. Did you give him a copy of it? A. I did give him a copy of it.

Q. In whose handwriting was the copy? A. It was in my handwriting.

Q. Look at the paper now shown to you, and say whether it is the original of that paper. A. Yes, Sir; that is the original.

Q. What occurred between you and Mr. Beecher with reference to this proposed card after the interview of which you have just spoken? A. Well, I have not finished that interview.

Q. Well, please finish it? A. I said Mr. Beecher asked me for a copy of it. I gave him a copy of it, with an alteration or two in it, and he said that he would make a copy of it in his own handwriting—make a copy of that copy in his own handwriting, and submit it to some of his friends.

Q. Did he afterwards state whether he had submitted it to his friends? A. I don't remember whether he did or not, Sir.

Q. What occurred with reference to that card at any time after that?

That was the subject of the examination.

The Witness—That was not July 5th.

Q. What occurred with reference to that card at any time after that?

Then Mr. Beecher's answer, and then the witness, and then Mr. Beecher, and then Mr. Fullerton said: "I now offer the paper in evidence." Then the witness said: "I had a subsequent conversation with Mr. Beecher about it and I told him that I had seen General Tracy concerning a reply to the Bacon letter." All that was gone into. I don't see that it is proper. All we have said will appear by the evidence to-day.

Mr. Beach—Then he was asked, "when that card was presented or shown to Mr. Beecher, did you not say thus and thus?" Suppose the witness answers that he did say that, on re-examination are we not permitted, his memory having been refreshed by that specific question, he having added to the conversation—may we not ask him, "What else did you say in that connection?"

Judge Neilson—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Evarts—In that connection.

Mr. Beach—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Evarts—We have not objected to that.

Mr. Beach—If he says, he did not answer thus and thus, as inquired of, "but I will tell you what I did say;" are we not permitted to ask him what it was?

Judge Neilson—You are.

Mr. Beach—That is the course we are pursuing.

Judge Neilson—The apprehension of the counsel was, that the question called upon the witness to repeat the entire conversation, including what was given on the direct.

Mr. Fullerton—Your attention was called, on the cross-examination, to the conversation which you had with Mr. Beecher on July 5, in regard to a proposed statement, and you were asked whether you did not say in that conversation certain things to Mr. Beecher. I understood you to say you did not, but that you did say something that you would tell if you were permitted; you were not permitted. I now ask you to state what you did say on that occasion.

Mr. Evarts—That we object to.

Mr. Fullerton—It would have been well to have raised the objection after the question was completed.

Judge Neilson—I think I must allow that.

Mr. Evarts—I beg your honor's pardon. The point is, that the witness has not so answered; he has said that he did say what we asked him, and not that he didn't.

Mr. Fullerton—The decision of the Court is usually the end of argument, but it seems to be the commencement of it in this case. I don't know when my friends will be satisfied with the presentation of their objection to this inquiry.

Mr. Evarts—This is the first time the question has been asked, and the first time I objected to it; and I have given as a reason that it assumes a statement exactly the opposite of the fact.

Mr. Fullerton—The same question was put in substance ten minutes ago, and the intervening time was exhausted in your argument, after the Court had decided the question admissible half a dozen times.

Mr. Evarts—I am always ready to take a reprimand from you, of course.

Mr. Fullerton—But it don't seem to do you any good.

Judge Neilson—I think counsel, instead of repeating the testimony, ought to put his question specifically as to anything that was omitted.

Mr. Fullerton—I have directed the attention of the witness specifically to the question put, and to his answer, and asked him to state what else was said on that subject at that time.

Judge Neilson—He can answer that.

Mr. Evarts—My objection is that you don't state the answer properly, and I object to it.

Mr. Fullerton—The gentleman's objection has been stated half a dozen times.

Judge Neilson—I intimate now, that you can ask him, "What else was said; whether you are correct in your recollection or not?"

Mr. Evarts—The objection to the question is just as good.

Mr. Fullerton—But not better.

Mr. Evarts—If your Honor requires him to modify the question, very well; if not, I wish to object to it, and to have my objection noted.

Mr. Fullerton—The objection is made; we have got the decision and the exception is noted. Is there anything else?

Mr. Evarts—I do not understand that the Court to have so decided.

Judge Neilson—[To Mr. Fullerton.] Does your question call for a repetition of the original evidence?

Mr. Fullerton—No, Sir.

Judge Neilson—Then proceed.

The Witness—Will the stenographer repeat the question?

[THE TRIBUNE stenographer here read the question.]

Mr. Evarts—Your Honor will note my exception to the allowance of the question as it now reads.

Judge Neilson—[To the witness.] What further did you say?

The Witness—My recollection is that I told Mr. Beecher that Mr. Tilton had committed himself in that interview at Delmonico's to peace if Mr. Beecher kept silent, or made the statements which he did make, and my impression is also that I told him that if that course was followed, I should destroy the documents.

Mr. Beach—It is now one o'clock.

The Witness—I think we had better go now; I want to make some arrangements at one o'clock.

Mr. Beach—What do you prefer?

The Witness—I prefer to go on. I will come back here after I make my arrangements at home. I want to finish it to-day.

Judge Neilson—The jurors will be in their seats at two o'clock. (To the audience)—gentlemen will wait until the jury retire.

Mr. Mallison (the Clerk)—The court will now take a recess until two o'clock.

HOW MOULTON BECAME BEECHER'S ENEMY.

After the recess Mr. Moulton's direct examination was continued.

Mr. Fullerton—Do you recollect a letter that was put in evidence on your cross-examination, written by Mrs. Tilton to yourself, commencing "for my husband's sake and my children I hereby testify with all my woman's soul, &c.," A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Having now found the letter, I place it in your hands, and ask you the origin of that letter?

Mr. Tracy—Wait a moment. To that question I trust the witness will not be permitted to give conversations between himself and Mr. Tilton on that subject.

Judge Neilson—Well, it would not be proper to give conversations with Mr. Tilton unless it is one that has been called out on their part.

Mr. Beach—Or unless it was communicated to Mr. Beecher.

Judge Neilson—Yes; and in that case you might begin with Mr. Beecher first.

Mr. Fullerton—What was said in reference to that letter in the presence of Mr. Beecher, or which was communicated to Mr. Beecher.

Mr. Tracy—That we object to, your Honor. We have not gone into any such conversation, and if they had any such conversation with Mr. Beecher, in regard to that letter or any other letter, it is affirmative proof which they should have gone into. We have simply proposed the letter in evidence, and proved that Mr. Tilton presented it to the witness. We have gone into no conversation about it.

Judge Neilson—That raises the subject, and allows him to prove what was said to Mr. Beecher, if anything, about the letter. It could not be asked before, because the letter was not produced. I think it is proper.

Mr. Tracy—Your Honor will note our exception.

The Witness—I sent for Mr. Beecher to come to my house, Sir, one morning in the latter part of December, 1872, and he came, and I told him that Mrs. Tilton had said to Mr. Tilton that she thought there better be a denial of the stories, and that she had written a letter to me which Mr. Tilton had handed to me, and so far as Mr. Tilton was concerned, he was perfectly willing that they should take the responsibility of such denial—Mrs. Tilton should, and that he might if he choose; and I left Mr. Beecher and Mr. Tilton together—or rather before that Mrs. Tilton was sent for and Mrs. Tilton came, and I am under the impression, Sir, that I remarked before I left that interview, that I didn't see much good at that late hour of a denial, and that is what I remember about the letter, Sir.

Q. Was that letter present during that conversation? A. Yes, Sir, that letter was present.

Q. Did you show it to Mr. Beecher during that conversation? A. I showed it to Mr. Beecher; yes, Sir.

Q. The letter is "Exhibit D. 44." Did he make any observations in regard to it? A. I left him alone, Sir, after Mrs. Tilton came with Mr. Tilton; the interview I was not present at after that.

Q. The denials were never published, I believe? A. No, Sir; that is the only one I ever saw.

Q. Now, you have been asked in regard to your hostility to Mr. Beecher. I ask you when that hostility, if it may be so termed, commenced? A. When I found, Sir, through his—through having read a portion of his published statement—that in return for my kindness towards him he had sought to ruin me by false charges against me, as I deemed then, and do now.

Q. Up to that time you had felt friendly towards him? A. I was not in hostility to him, Sir, to that time.

Q. Whatever you may have said in regard to him since that time was in consequence of that publication of his? A. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Evarts—That I object to.

Judge Neilson—We will take it.

The Witness—I have answered it, yes, Sir.

Judge Neilson—They go to the quo animo of the witness.

Mr. Evarts—Whether it was in consequence of it we judge by knowing if it is after that. It is right of course to prove facts, and then conclusions are to be drawn by the Court and the jury.

Judge Neilson—I think we will allow the question.

Mr. Evarts—Your Honor will please note my exception.

Q. Was there any other cause of hostility? A. No.

Q. Now, your attention has been called to the letter of Aug. 4th, in reply to one of Mr. Beecher written the latter part of July; what did Mr. Tilton say in regard to that letter when you showed it to him? A. What was that letter, Sir?

Mr. Fullerton—Just hand him the letter of Aug. 4th. You will find it in the first part of Judge Porter's cross-examination. [Book handed to the witness.]

Q. What is it marked? A. Marked "D, 7."

Q. The letter of August 4th, then, marked "D 7," being shown to you, I ask you what Tilton said in regard to it when it was shown to him?

Mr. Evarts—That we object to. What Tilton said to Moulton is not evidence against us.

Judge Neilson—On what ground is it evidence?

Mr. Fullerton—It is a part of the res geste. They prove that the letter was exhibited to Mr. Tilton, and they mean to draw an inference from it.

Mr. Beach—They seek to conclude him by the contents of the letter—his seeing it. Now, what answer did he make?

Mr. Fullerton—They mean to argue that he acquiesced in the sentiments expressed in that letter. Now, they can't foreclose Mr. Tilton in that way.

Mr. Evarts—We can at any time prove what Tilton did, and the plaintiff cannot; that is the principal proposition of evidence. Now, we have proved in regard to this, if I comprehend the subject matter of the present inquiry rightly, to be the letter of Mr. Beecher to Mr. Moulton of the 4th of August, and Mr. Moulton's reply of the 5th. We have proved that this letter of Mr. Beecher's was shown to

Mr. Tilton, and that Mr. Tilton made the answer which was sent. Now, those are acts of Mr. Tilton. That Mr. Tilton said he was doing those acts with Mr. Moulton with whom he was acting is not evidence against us. We got the letter and we prove that it proceeds from Mr. Tilton in the form that he writes it and Mr. Moulton signs it. Now, out of our proof of that action of the plaintiff, all whose acts which are pertinent, we have a right to prove, and none of which they have a right to prove, they seek to bring in the conversation that took place between Mr. Moulton and Mr. Tilton while these acts were being performed. That is, as I understood the evidence, and I know no rule of evidence which permits it.

Mr. Beach—Will the counsel permit me to call his attention to a rule of evidence fundamental, that when an act is given in evidence, any accompanying declarations qualifying or explaining the act are admissible as a part of the res gestæ.

Mr. Evarts—I agree to that.

Mr. Beach—Well, if he agrees to that he proves the act of Mr. Tilton upon the presentation of this letter to him. Now, we propose to prove what Mr. Tilton said in connection with the act of reception or the act of drafting the reply to that letter.

Mr. Evarts—The reason we proved the act is the res gestæ can be proved as between Tilton and Beecher. Now, the reasoning of my learned friends and the proposition of evidence is sound if, when Tilton delivered that letter to Mr. Beecher, supposing he had delivered it, and so there was an act between them in that form, then what Mr. Tilton said when he delivered it if we omitted it, they could prove, no doubt. But the note is Tilton's writing—a letter for Moulton in answer to Mr. Beecher, which letter is sent to Mr. Beecher. That is the action of Tilton that we proved. Now, they prove the conversation between the writer and the amanuensis, the dictator and the man who furnishes the handwriting at the time that it was going on; that is the present proposition.

Mr. Beach—Counsel will please observe that we ask no question as to a declaration of Mr. Tilton in regard to the letter which he drafted and sent to Mr. Beecher; the question is as to the letter from Mr. Beecher which was presented to him.

Judge Neilson—I understand that. What did he say when he saw the letter? I think he can give that, Sir.

Mr. Evarts—Doesn't it transcend any rule as yet considered whereby everything that passed between this witness and third persons, including Mr. Tilton, in order to affect Mr. Beecher, should have been brought home to him. Now, that has not been done.

Judge Neilson—This is part of the act of receiving the letter. I admit it with that view.

Mr. Fullerton—It was a letter which they put in evidence.

Mr. Evarts—If your Honor please, Mr. Moulton receives a letter from Mr. Beecher, he goes and shows it to Tilton, and the conversation between them is to be given in evidence?

Judge Neilson—As a part of the act; yes, Sir.

Mr. Beach—That is what they prove—showing the letter to Mr. Tilton—for without that they could not introduce it at all, and upon the theories that he approved it when it was brought to his attention.

Mr. Evarts—The theory is of proving that he made the answer which we have given in evidence.

Judge Neilson—We will receive what was said in immediate connection of receiving the letter.

Mr. Evarts—Between Mr. Tilton and Mr. Moulton?

Judge Neilson—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Evarts—Your Honor will be so kind as to note our exception.

The Witness—I said to Mr. Tilton that the statement in the letter that Mr. Beecher had placed in my hands for merely safe-keeping, letters addressed to him from his brother and sister and various other parties, and also memoranda of affairs not immediately connected with Mr. Tilton's matters, were untrue—that that statement was untrue—and I asked him to recall the circumstances, and he said he did recall the circumstances, and he did recall them.

Q. Who recalled that? A. Mr. Tilton said he remembered the letters of Mrs. Hooker, and remembered—

Mr. Evarts—What he said, I suppose, is—

Mr. Fullerton—That is what he has stated.

The Witness—Yes, I will tell you what he said before.

Judge Neilson—Please to understand it is what he said in immediate connection with his seeing the letter.

The Witness—Yes, Sir, precisely so.

Judge Neilson—And nothing beyond that.

The Witness—Precisely,

Judge Neilson—Go on.

The Witness—He said to me "Don't you remember in that connection that Mr. Beecher wanted me to go and see Mrs. Hooker, and that I did go to see Mrs. Hooker, and that I did for the purpose of quieting her as against making the charge of adultery against him, charging her with adultery; and don't you remember upon the same authority, I mean that she proposed to charge Mr. Beecher and Mrs. Tilton with adultery, and I came back and told Mr. Beecher that, and he seemed to be satisfied with it, and was delighted with it: don't you remember that?" he said to me, and he recalled it, and I did remember it.

Mr. Evarts—Said what you said? A. I said yes; I remembered it in substance.

Mr. Evarts—Asserting that you did remember it, is not stating what you said.

The Witness—I stated that as—

Mr. Fullerton—Never mind.

The Witness—Pardon me.

Mr. Fullerton—I call your attention—

The Witness—Wait a moment. Mr. Tilton also said—you know I have not had access to your depository of materials, and that is about all, and then he—

Mr. Evarts—Now, if your Honor please, the evidence having been given, I move to strike it out entirely, as no part of the res gestæ whatever, and a mere form of bringing in conversation between these parties concerning some facts in this case.

Judge Neilson—The motion is denied. You take exception.

Mr. Evarts—We except to your Honor's decision.

Mr. Fullerton—I call your attention to the letter of August the 5th, and that to part of it referring to a proposed consent from both Mr. Beecher and Mr. Tilton to use these papers in your hands, and I ask you whether at that time you procured a consent from either party.

The Witness—Almost immediately, Sir, after the writing of the letter from Mr. Tilton—

Mr. Evarts—One moment.

Mr. Fullerton—I ask if he procured a consent to use these papers from any one.

[Book shown to Mr. Evarts with explanations of counsel.]

Mr. Evarts—As I understand this present question, this letter has nothing to do with it except as a suggestion to the mind of the witness. Whenever he undertakes to prove the occurrence of telling him, why then I will object to it. The point of this inquiry, as I understand it, is to prove action between Mr. Tilton and himself, and all such action I object to, as the general rule of evidence entitles me to object to it. That something must occur to take it up—

Judge Neilson—Some arrangement or suggestion procuring consent.

Mr. Evarts—It was not a suggestion. A communication was made to Mr. Beecher in this letter which Mr. Tilton wrote, referring to that subject. But it was not a transaction in which Mr. Beecher took any part or was invited to take any part. Then, therefore, because a man has said in a letter to Mr. Beecher, that he will not do a thing without doing something else first—on that mere statement, which we had nothing to do with except to receive it, they propose to show that he afterwards did the things that he said he would do. The question is whether the things—whether he said he would do them or did not say he would do them, are matters that affect Mr. Beecher—

Judge Neilson—What is your proposition.

Mr. Fullerton—My proposition is this, Sir: To prove that Mr. Moulton obtained consent from Mr. Tilton to use these papers then in Moulton's hands, having in the first place construed Mr. Beecher's letter into a consent on his part. And I do it for this purpose: They intend upon the other side to draw an inference against Mr. Moulton, for the reason that he refused to give either the originals or copies of those papers to Mr. Beecher upon his application. His reply, as your Honor recollects, was that he was the custodian of them for the benefit of both parties, and that he would not give them to either one without the consent of the other.

Judge Neilson—What is the paper that shows Mr. Beecher's assent?

Mr. Fullerton—The letter of Aug. 4th?

The Witness [Reading]: "I do demand that you forthwith place before the Committee every paper which I have written, or deposited with you." My answer reads: "In reply I can only say that I cannot justly place before the Committee the papers of one of the parties without doing the same with the papers of the other, and I cannot do this honorably except either by legal process compelling me or else by consent in writing, not only of yourself, but of Mr. Tilton, with whom I shall confer on the subject as speedily as possible."

Mr. Fullerton—Now, it is proper for me to show consistency in the conduct of this witness, by showing that he procured that consent of Mr. Tilton, and then went before the Committee to give the papers.

Judge Neilson—Well, you must show the acts to be separate. they must be separate.

Mr. Evarts—The difficulty is, that the act does not affect us; it is no act of Mr. Beecher's, or that affects him; it is not so proposed. It is proposed as an act of Mr. Tilton's with this witness.

Judge Neilson—The witness proposes to have the consent; and I rule that he may prove the consent that he obtained from both or either of the parties.

[Exception by Defendant.]

Mr. Fullerton—Now what did you do in that regard? A. Immediately procured the consent of Theodore Tilton, Sir.

Q. And then? A. Went to the Committee.

Q. Then you went to the Committee? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. With the papers? A. Yes, Sir; or, rather, I went to the Committee—

Judge Neilson—That was after the communication from Mr. Beecher? A. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Evarts—We object to all this.

Judge Neilson—Well, Mr. Beecher called for the papers; then he procured Mr. Tilton's consent to use the papers.

Mr. Evarts—He didn't give them to Mr. Beecher after that. The only point with us was that Mr. Beecher applied to him and he made this reply which Mr. Tilton sanctioned and wrote; that is the end of that transaction. Now, they seek to show the consistency of the witness. We have nothing to do with that; we are not trying his consistency, nor the fact of what he did with third persons to make it consistency.

Judge Neilson—No; but I simply rule that it is competent for him to state whether or not he got Mr. Tilton's consent to use the papers.

Mr. Evarts—That has been made the subject of an exception, and that disposes of that. Then he goes on to state, after he got the consent, "I then took the papers and went before the Committee."

The Witness—I made a mistake in saying that I then took the papers.

Mr. Evarts—Well, took the papers afterwards and went before the Committee. We have nothing to do with that.

The Witness—Well, I made a mistake, if you have that impression.

Judge Neilson—Well, that last line may be stricken out.

The Witness—I went before the Committee with a statement after he went, and stated to the Committee that, having had the consent, I would—

Mr. Evarts—We object to this.

Mr. Beach—Well, you listen one moment.

Mr. Evarts—No, for this reason, that I have called his Honor's attention to the additional statement; and his Honor said that that should be stricken out. Now, while that is pending, I object to the witness going on with other matters.

Mr. Beach—Well, I am going on, it is not the witness; I am just now stating to your Honor a proposition. The demand from Mr. Beecher was that these papers should be furnished either to him or the Committee. Mr.

Moulton says: "I cannot do that, Mr. Beecher, without procuring the consent of Mr. Tilton." Mr. Moulton immediately procures the consent of Mr. Tilton, and then complies with the demand of Mr. Beecher. Now, why have they given these letters and this demand? How was the demand permissible except for the purpose of showing an unfriendliness of sentiment on the part of Mr. Moulton—except for the purpose of arguing that when Mr. Beecher demanded from Mr. Moulton that he should produce these papers before the Committee he refused. And as the evidence now stands, Sir, if you strike out the latter part of this witness's testimony, that is the attitude in which this witness is placed.

Judge Neilson—That should be stricken out and should be the subject of a question; so that it can be objected to. It is consistent enough up to that point.

Mr. Fullerton—When you got the consent of Mr. Tilton therefor, did you go before the Committee, and, if so, what did you do?

[Objected to.]

Judge Neilson—No, that is wrong; did you take the papers before the Committee?

Mr. Beach—Did you go before the Committee and tender the papers demanded by Mr. Beecher?

[Objected to.]

A. I did.

Mr. Fullerton—That would be objected to on the ground that it was leading; and, therefore, I ask him what he did when he got there. After you got that consent what did you do with the papers?

Mr. Evarts—That we object to.

A. I withheld the papers at the solicitation of Gen. Tracy, Mr. Beecher's representative, from the Committee, in consultation with my counsel, Gen. Butler.

Q. What, subsequently, did you do with the papers? A. I published my—I published the—I produced the papers quoted. It needs an explanation, your Honor.

Judge Neilson—The question is, whether you took these papers to the Committee or furnished them. A. No, I didn't take them to the Committee.

Mr. Fullerton—Or, furnished them? A. I did not; and I will tell you why.

Mr. Morris—You were going on to state—

The Witness—I went before the Committee, if your Honor will allow me to state: I went before the Committee next day, and stated to the Committee that, having had the consent of both parties, I should, on a certain day, produce the papers; I think that day was to be Saturday, and the meeting of the Committee was postponed until Monday; and, in the meantime, Gen. Tracy was in consultation with Gen. Butler.

Judge Neilson—Leave that out. [Laughter.]

Mr. Evarts—That is all the case, anyhow.

The Witness—No, it is not.

Judge Neilson—I suppose that what occurs between the witness and Mr. Tracy and Gen. Butler is not to be received.

The Witness—Gen. Tracy claimed to be the representative, your Honor, of Mr. Beecher.

Mr. Evarts—Don't argue about this.

The Witness—I don't choose to argue; I am only stating to his Honor what I think I have a right to state.

Mr. Evarts—Now, none of that is in evidence. These statements made to your Honor, they form no part of the record of the evidence.

Judge Neilson—It is competent for the counsel to prove that those papers, in some form, were furnished pursuant to the demand made on one side, or the demand on one side and consent on the other.

Mr. Evarts—That your Honor has ruled, and that is of course received under the ruling.

Judge Neilson—Well, he can interrogate him then with that view.

Mr. Fullerton—I asked him the reason why he did not—

Mr. Evarts—That is objected to.

Mr. Fullerton—One moment, if you please; there is the point that you cannot talk all the while.

Judge Neilson—Well, without asking him his reason, you can ask what he did in that respect.

Mr. Fullerton—Yes, Sir. I wish to know what he did in that respect, and I wish this witness to be fairly understood in regard to this matter; why he did not go before the Committee and take all the papers; if he did not, there is a reason for it.

Mr. Evarts—That I object to.

Mr. Fullerton—After you got the consent of both parties to these papers, did you go before the Committee and offer to produce them? A. I went before the Committee, yes, Sir, and stated that I would produce them. If you will find the communication, Sir (I don't know where it is in this book), that I made to the Committee—I think it was on August 5th or 6th that I made it, promising to go before them on Saturday.

Mr. Evarts—That is the very one that was rejected by your Honor as not being admissible heretofore.

Mr. Beach—It is made admissible now.

Judge Neilson—Go on.

Mr. Evarts—This is under my exception.

Judge Neilson—I don't intend to have you understand that I rule that any communications made by the witness to the Committee are to be received at present. I haven't that view.

Mr. Evarts—Then I ask that to be struck out.

Judge Neilson—The contents of the paper are not given. We have the naked fact that he sent a communication on the subject to the Committee.

Mr. Fullerton—That is an application to strike out something before it goes in.

Mr. Evarts—I did not move to strike that out.

The Witness—I immediately proceeded, your Honor, to comply with the request of both parties, and went before the Committee for that purpose. That is all that I propose to state.

Mr. Evarts—Now that is not evidence.

Mr. Fullerton—It is evidence because the Court has admitted it. [To the Witness]: Did you go before the Committee after that, and did you take any part of those papers, and if so, what part? A. Yes, Sir; I went before the Committee after that, and I took the papers that were quoted by Mr. Tilton in his state.

ment to the Committee, and there is a reason why I did not take any more, if you want that.

Mr. Fullerton—Well, I want to know the reason why he didn't take—

Mr. Evarts—I object to it. Certainly if the acts of the witness are admitted we are not to take the reasons of his not acting otherwise.

Judge Neilson—That is another question.

Mr. Fullerton—But they seek to condemn this witness because he did not give Mr. Beecher an opportunity of seeing these papers, and because he did not take them before the Committee as requested.

Judge Neilson—You have proved he took the papers before the Committee.

Mr. Fullerton—I have proved he took a part. May I not prove the reason he did not take the rest?

Judge Neilson—No matter about the reason.

Mr. Beach—Suppose Mr. Beecher had told him not to produce them?

Mr. Evarts—Well, prove that.

Mr. Fullerton—How will I prove it, unless you permit me to ask the question?

Mr. Evarts—Now, all those papers, what become of them we all know. Their subsequent history has been testified to.

The Witness—No, it has not. The history has not been—

REFLECTIONS ON THE WITNESS RESENTED.

Mr. Evarts—He does not say that he took them before the Committee. The only question is what the reason was he did not take them; that I object to.

Mr. Fullerton—We will see now if we haven't a right to this testimony. I repeat they seek to put this witness in a false attitude, and they mean to keep him there, if they can do so by preventing him from giving the reason why he did not do a certain thing. He had the choice either to give those papers to Mr. Beecher, or to take them before the Committee. He took a part of them before the Committee. I propose to show the reason why he did not take the balance; that it was in harmony with the wish of the other side that they were withheld, as supposed by their suggestion, and at their request.

Judge Neilson—Well, you may prove that.

Mr. Fullerton—Well, I hope I will be able to without a thousand and one interruptions.

Mr. Evarts—I must interrupt when I consider the evidence illegal, your Honor, and I propose to do it.

Judge Neilson—That is understood, and you take an exception to this.

Mr. Fullerton—Well, if the exception is the end of it, I shall be very happy.

Mr. Evarts—Now, I don't propose to be talked to any more. I don't institute any of these observations between counsel, never, and I don't propose to submit to it.

Judge Neilson—You have a right to be heard whenever you think the question calls for it.

Mr. Fullerton—I propose to make just those observations when counsel insist upon arguing a question that has been decided by your Honor over and over again.

Judge Neilson—I don't think the counsel meant to do that. Go on.

Mr. Fullerton—Why did not you take the balance of the papers before the Committee?

Mr. Evarts—That is objected to.

Mr. Fullerton—That we understand, it is objected to.

Mr. Evarts—I propose to have it entered every time.

Judge Neilson—Now, what is the question?

The Witness—Now, what is the question?

Mr. Fullerton—I am afraid to repeat the question because there may be another objection and exception. [Laughter.]

The Witness—What is the question? Read it.

Judge Neilson—Read the question.

THE TRIBUNE stenographer read the question as follows: "Why didn't you take the balance of the papers before the Committee?" A. On Sunday preceding the Monday on which I had agreed to take the papers before the Committee, Gen. Tracy; if I remember the day correctly, I think I do—went with me to the Fifth Avenue Hotel to see Gen. Butler with reference to the suppression of the statement, and I saw Gen. Butler with Gen. Tracy.

Mr. Evarts—Any interview of that kind we object to. Here is a narrative that took place—supposed to have taken place between Gen. Butler and Mr. Tracy. Now, that is not evidence.

Judge Neilson—Now, if upon that conference he refrained, we want the result; that is all; not the conversation. If, in view of that interview on that conversation, he was restrained or not restrained from taking the additional papers, he may state that fact, as going to show the animus of the witness, acting in good faith or bad faith. Now, get him to do that. [To the Witness.] You had a conversation? A I had a conversation, Sir. Shall I give it?

Judge Neilson—With Gen. Tracy and Gen. Butler. I don't ask what the conversation was.

The Witness—Very well, Sir.

Judge Neilson [to Mr. Fullerton]—Now, ask the question.

Mr. Fullerton—Did you refrain from taking those papers before the Committee in consequence of anything that occurred there on the occasion to which you refer? A. Yes.

Judge Neilson—Well, that gives it sufficiently.

Q. Who did Gen. Tracy represent on that occasion?

Mr. Evarts—Well.

The Witness—He said he represented Mr. Beecher. [Laughter.]

Mr. Evarts—Well, I objected.

Judge Neilson—Take it, Sir; let it stand. Take an exception.

Mr. Evarts—Yes, Sir.

Judge Neilson—Go on.

Q. Was it with his approbation that you withheld them? A. With whose approbation, Sir?

Q. Mr. Tracy's? A. It was at his request.

Q. And that is the reason why you did not take the balance before the Committee, is it—the balance of the papers? A.

That is one of the reasons. I will give the balance of the reasons. Shall I?

Mr. Beach—No; we have got enough.

Q. Did you have another meeting the next day? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Where? A. At my house.

Q. Who was present? A. Mr. William C. Kingsley, Mr. Franklin Woodruff, my father and Gen. Butler.

Q. Any one else? A. And my wife.

Q. Was Mr. Tracy there? A. No, I believe not; he came that evening though, after I had been to the Committee.

Q. Did anything occur that evening after you had been to the Committee with regard to these papers that you did not produce?

Mr. Evarts—With whom?

Mr. Fullerton—With General Tracy.

Judge Neilson—I think that is sufficiently accounted for.

Mr. Evarts—Yes, Sir.

The Witness—Yes, Sir; there was something.

Judge Neilson—Well, we will let that stand, then.

Mr. Fullerton—Now, Mr. Moulton, what statement was then under consideration when you thus went to the Fifth Avenue Hotel and had this conversation?

Mr. Evarts—The conversation at the Fifth Avenue Hotel?

Mr. Fullerton—Yes.

Judge Neilson—What statement was under consideration?

Mr. Fullerton—Yes.

The Witness—The first long statement that I prepared, which was preceded in the publication, that I made of it by a card to the public.

Mr. Evarts—You describe it as the first long one? A. Well—

Mr. Fullerton—Never mind! never mind!

The Witness—I can't help minding him.

Mr. Fullerton—I know; this talk back and forth between you and the counsel is out of order, in my judgment.

The Witness—Well, Sir, I beg pardon.

Q. Did you know, or did Mr. Tilton know at any time that he was furnished with money directly or indirectly, from Mr. Beecher? A. No, Sir.

Q. Did Mrs. Tilton know that any money that was furnished to her came directly or indirectly from Mr. Beecher? A. I don't think she did.

Q. You didn't tell her, did you? A. I did not.

Q. Your attention has been called to your intimacy with Mrs. Woodhull? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. And you have stated when it commenced and when it ended, I believe? A. I believe I have; yes.

Q. I want you to state, Sir, now, what caused you to permit or to cultivate that intimacy—acquaintance or intimacy?

Mr. Evarts—The direct examination has gone into that, Sir, and we cross-examined him upon it.

Mr. Fullerton—I have a right to show now, Sir, what object he had in view.

Mr. Evarts—That he showed on his direct examination.

Mr. Fullerton—No, he did not show it.

Judge Neilson—Partially. I think, not wholly.

Mr. Evarts—Just so far as they saw fit. It is their subject, and they were not to leave it unless we have laid a foundation for some inquiry concerning the matters that we brought out; but that is not this inquiry. The question is, what the motives and reasons of his acquaintance with this woman were, which was the very thing which was the subject of direct examination.

Mr. Fullerton—Your Honor will perceive that, since the direct examination, they have put in a portion of this Woodhull scandal, which makes it necessary now that we should account for this gentleman's acquaintance with that woman who promulgated those doctrines.

MOULTON'S SENTIMENTS TOWARDS WOODHULL.

Judge Neilson—I think you may ask him what led to that acquaintance, and what let to its continuance.

Mr. Evarts—I will call your Honor's attention to this.

Judge Neilson—I recollect it generally, Sir. I think he may ask what led to that acquaintance and what let to its continuance. [To Mr. Fullerton.] Now put the question, Sir.

Mr. Fullerton—Now, may I go on, Sir?

Judge Neilson—Go on.

Mr. Fullerton—What led to your acquaintance with Mrs. Woodhull, and to its continuance?

Mr. Evarts—Your Honor will note an objection to that as being a recurrence to a subject already affirmatively introduced by them.

Judge Neilson—Yes, Sir.

The Witness—The desire, Sir, entirely, for the suppression of the stories against Mr. Beecher in connection with Mrs. Tilton, and his adultery with Mrs. Tilton.

Q. Were you acquainted with Mrs. Woodhull until these scandals were abroad? A. I never was acquainted with her, Sir, before; I never became acquainted with her, Sir, until after her card in The World; I stated it already.

Mr. Evarts—That was all stated on the direct.

Q. In which she foreshadowed an intention to publish this scandal? A. Yes.

Q. For what reason was she invited to your house? A. In order that I might use the better my influence upon her for the suppression of the story of Mr. Beecher's adulteries with Mrs. Tilton.

Q. State whether your wife objected to her being brought there? A. My wife did object to her being brought there.

Q. And whom did she consult upon the subject? A. Mr. Beecher.

Q. Were you present when Mr. Beecher gave her some advice on the subject? A. No. Mr. Beecher told me the advice that he gave.

Q. What did he say he advised her to do? A. Mr. Beecher said that my wife had said to him that I had asked that Mrs. Woodhull come to the house; and Mr. Beecher said that my wife had objected; and he said that he told her that he did not think association with Mrs. Woodhull could hurt her, and that he thought it to be her duty to co-operate with me for the suppression of these stories concerning him and Mrs. Tilton.

Q. Had you any sympathy with Mrs. Woodhull in her free-love doctrines?

Mr. Evarts—That I object to.

The Witness—I had not known her, Sir; no, I had not any sympathy with Mrs. Woodhull in her free-love doctrines.

Q. Did you know what her doctrines were before her speech at Steinway Hall upon that subject? A. No, I did not know anything about them.

Q. You were present, I understand you, at that meeting? A. I was—yes, Sir.

Q. You have told us that Mr. Tilton introduced the speaker? A. I have—yes, Sir.

Q. Will you tell us, as near as you can, what words were used in that introduction? A. Yes Sir.

Q. Please to do so?

Mr. Evarts—Well, your Honor.

Judge Neilson—That was proved by you, you know.

Mr. Fullerton—They proved the fact.

Mr. Evarts—Now, can we prove her whole lecture?

Mr. Fullerton—Not by proving what he said, because he did not repeat it.

Mr. Evarts—Can we prove her whole lecture?

Mr. Fullerton—That question does not come up.

Judge Neilson—I think you have it sufficiently; he introduced her.

Mr. Evarts—That is the point of my objection.

Judge Neilson—I think that is sufficient. It don't appear that he commended it.

Mr. Fullerton—They have laid the foundation, as they think, for an argument that Mr. Tilton is to be held responsible for all the doctrines promulgated there that night, because he introduced the speaker.

Judge Neilson—I have decided that he was not, unless it appeared that he knew before what the lecture was to be.

Mr. Fullerton—I may prove what he said when he introduced her, I suppose.

Judge Neilson—I do not see the value of it; it is not suggested that he commended her.

Mr. Fullerton—But it will be argued that he commended her.

Judge Neilson—I hardly think it.

Mr. Evarts—We certainly shall argue that the introduction of a lady to a public audience to deliver a free-love lecture is an assumption of responsibility towards the public for what she has to say.

Mr. Fullerton—Your Honor therefore sees you cannot anticipate what they will argue on the other side.

Mr. Evarts—The measure and extent of it, of course, is a subject of argument.

Judge Neilson—I have already ruled, I think, that unless it appears that Mr. Tilton knew what the lecture was to be—what the subject was to be—he was not responsible for the lecture following the introduction; and not being a prophet, or the son of a prophet, he could not foresee what she was to say.

Mr. Fullerton—Your Honor has been admonished by the counsel on the other side as to the line of argument they design to follow.

Judge Neilson—I think I shall take care that the jury shall not misinterpret it. I think there will be no misconception.

Mr. Fullerton—There will not be, if we are permitted to give this evidence.

Judge Neilson—I have decided that point.

Mr. Beach—It seems to me this question is altogether aside from that. It appears that Mr. Tilton introduced Mrs. Woodhull to the audience. Now is it to be seriously argued, when they prove the result of what Mr. Tilton said and did upon that occasion, that we cannot get at the details, and ask what he said by which he did the act which they prove he did.

Judge Neilson—If you did not introduce her, you could prove it, of course, by way of contradiction, but if all you did do was to introduce her, you can well afford to leave it there.

Mr. Beach—What is an introduction? We may afford to leave it under your Honor's ruling; but, Sir, I submit, when they prove an act done by Mr. Tilton, which must of necessity be accompanied by words, and do not give the words, may we not prove them?

Judge Neilson—I do not think that it is material. He went forward with his coat on his arm, and introduced her. That is all we have.

MINING UNDER THE CROSS-EXAMINATION.

Mr. Beach—He must have said something to introduce her.

Judge Neilson—It cannot be material here.

Mr. Beach—Your Honor will perceive that it may be immensely material to us, Sir. Suppose Mr. Tilton had said in that introduction to the audience, "Ladies and gentlemen: I am requested to present Mrs. Woodhull to you this evening, but I caution you that I am not responsible for anything she may say." Is not that admissible, Sir?

Judge Neilson—You may prove that if you can.

Mr. Beach—It is just what we are going to prove.

Judge Neilson—I hardly think it is to be expected that a gentleman would take such a precaution as that.

Mr. Beach—Very possibly, but I give it as an illustration.

Judge Neilson—We will take it.

Mr. Evarts—Your Honor will note our exception.

Mr. Fullerton—Repeat, as nearly as you can remember them, the words with which he introduced Mrs. Woodhull to the audience at Steinway Hall on that evening? A. Do I need, in the answer to that question, to precede that introduction at all?

Q. No.

Judge Neilson—When he came forward with his coat on his arm, to introduce her, what did he say? A. As nearly as I can remember, Sir, I have not read it.

Mr. Evarts—We ought to know whether he remembers anything about it.

The Witness—I shall give it as nearly as I can recollect it: "Ladies and gentlemen—It is quite unusual for me to be in town during the lecture season, and I unexpectedly find myself here to-night. I find that several representative men have been asked to introduce the lady who will address you, to this audience, and some have refused on the ground that they knew nothing of her character, and others on the ground that they are in doubt as to her views. As to the first, I think I know that, and will therefore take the responsibility of vouching for

It. As to the second point, I do not know what her views are. I have never heard her express them. She may be a fanatic and a fool. I would rather be both in one than to lack the courage to ask from an American audience, for a woman, the right of freedom of speech." [Laughter and applause.]

Q. Was that the substance of it? A. That was the substance of it, except the applause that followed. [Laughter.]

Q. Then followed the lecture? A. Then followed the lecture; yes, Sir.

Q. Now, Mr. Moulton, did you and Mr. Tilton have an engagement that evening at a place other than Steinway Hall? A. Yes, Sir; we did.

Q. Whose proposition was it to go to Steinway Hall that night? A. Mr. Tilton had an engagement to dine with me at my house, and I went to The Golden Age office for him to have him come to my house, and he said—

Judge Neilson—Do not say what he said.

Mr. Fullerton—I propose to show that going to Steinway Hall was merely accidental that night.

Judge Neilson—Prove that; not by conversation.

Mr. Fullerton—I can hardly prove it in any other way.

Mr. Evarts—That is the trouble. The conversation between him and Mr. Tilton does not prove as against Mr. Beecher how he happened to go there.

Judge Neilson—No.

Mr. Evarts—That is the trouble with all of it, that the proof, so far as we are concerned, does not derive any authority from anything that proceeded from us.

Judge Neilson—Mr. Fullerton, go on.

Q. At whose suggestion was it that you went there that night? A. Mr. Tilton said that as we had not—

Judge Neilson—Do not say what was said.

The Witness—I beg pardon.

Mr. Evarts—I object to the question at whose suggestion he went, unless Mr. Beecher is connected with it. Your Honor can see that the whole narrative of these two men's lives can be given under this.

Judge Neilson—We do not propose to take the conversation at all. At whose suggestion?

Mr. Fullerton—At what time in the afternoon or evening was the suggestion made?

Mr. Evarts—That I object to.

Judge Neilson—We will take it.

The Witness—About six o'clock, between five and six.

Mr. Evarts—Why is it at all material, your Honor, and how does it become evidence against us, whether it was accidental or whether the suggestion of third persons, or the suggestion of a newspaper, or what not? It has not the quality of evidence bearing against us in this case.

Judge Neilson—I think it should be received, Sir.

Q. What time in the afternoon was the suggestion made?

Mr. Tracy—Your Honor will note our exception?

Judge Neilson—Yes, Sir.

A. Between five and six o'clock, Sir.

Q. What was your dinner hour? A. Six.

Q. You had no thought then of going to Steinway Hall until that suggestion was made? A. No.

Mr. Evarts—That I object to.

The Witness—No.

Judge Neilson—They certainly have a right to prove that this introduction which you have shown came about casually or accidentally, was not a fixed, set purpose, or whatever the character of it was, not to give conversations. That is the extent of my ruling. Go on, Sir.

Mr. Evarts—Your Honor has my exceptions?

Judge Neilson—Yes, Sir.

Q. You have spoken of the Produce Exchange. That is an institution in New York, I believe? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Are you a member of it? A. I am.

Q. How long have you been a member of it? A. For a good many years. I don't know how many.

Q. How many members are there in that institution? A. I think there are 2,000 or 2,500.

Q. How many are there in daily attendance, generally? A. I should think 1,500 or 2,000, as near as I can estimate it.

Q. How frequently do you attend the Produce Exchange? A. Every day—every business day, when I am in town.

Q. Now, will you state how many different men—give us some kind of an estimate—accosted you in reference to this scandal, after these statements were made? A. A great many, Sir. I don't know how many. A great many.

Q. Give us some idea of the number—the daily number that accosted you concerning it after this scandal broke out?

Mr. Evarts—You mean after the Woodhull publication?

Mr. Fullerton—Yes, Sir.

A. I don't know; 15 or 20 a day, I should think, during the excitement of it, at least.

Q. Sometimes more? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. What was your object in answering them?

Mr. Evarts—That I object to.

The Witness—To mislead.

Mr. Evarts—That I object to, if your Honor please.

Judge Neilson—That is already ruled upon.

Mr. Evarts—I object to it as evidence in itself. Every man is to be judged by his words.

Judge Neilson—I cannot take that.

Mr. Fullerton—It was not objected to at the time he did it.

Mr. Evarts—Certainly.

Mr. Fullerton—No, Sir; it was all right then. I have a right to prove why he did it, and who approbated it.

Mr. Evarts—Then you get the evidence; but your asking him why he did it does not get any evidence.

Mr. Beach—Your Honor, we have not proved that, except in very general terms. They put questions to this witness, and proved his declarations made to specific parties at specific times and places. We now propose to prove by him that those declarations which he admits to have made were made with this same purpose, that he spoke of it generally, and to show that the answers which he gave were dictated by Mr. Beecher.

Judge Neilson—That is a modification of the question put. I think that view is correct. Your question related to all the persons that accosted him.

Mr. Fullerton—Certainly it does.

Judge Neilson—The question, if limited to those whose names have been given by them—

Mr. Fullerton—Well, they are legion, Sir.

Judge Neilson—I think he may answer that, as to all those.

Mr. Evarts—He may answer whatever Mr. Beecher said to him concerning all those.

Judge Neilson—All those, Sir.

Mr. Evarts—But nothing else, of his own movements, of his mind and reasons.

Judge Neilson—He may state his reasons, provided he afterwards communicated it to Mr. Beecher.

Mr. Evarts—Well, but are we to assume that he did? Your Honor has frequently said that the better way is to begin with what he did communicate to Mr. Beecher.

Judge Neilson—Well, we have some evidence on the subject already.

Mr. Evarts—It is already in.

Judge Neilson—Yes; now as applied to these persons.

Mr. Evarts—We don't want more brought in unless it is brought in legitimately.

Judge Neilson—In regard to these persons you have named.

Mr. Evarts—That is, whatever passed between Mr. Beecher and this witness concerning any of these witnesses, separate from what is already introduced, I suppose might be legitimate evidence; but that is not the point of the present inquiry.

Mr. Fullerton—What object had you in view in replying to those people in the Produce Exchange who accosted you and questioned you in reference to this scandal?

Mr. Evarts—That we object to.

The Witness—To give Mr. Beecher a character for purity.

Mr. Beach [To the witness]: They object. You should not answer.

The Witness—I beg pardon.

Mr. Evarts—Your Honor heard the question?

Judge Neilson—Yes, Sir, I admit it, and you take an exception.

Judge Neilson—He has answered.

The Witness—I have answered.

Q. What idea did you mean to convey to these people?

Mr. Beach—I would like to have the answer read.

THE TRIBUNE stenographer read the answer referred to as follows: "To give Mr. Beecher a character for purity."

Q. You used appropriate language for that purpose, did you? A. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Evarts—That I object to. The words he used are the words to be given in evidence.

Judge Neilson—You have got it.

Mr. Evarts—What authority is there to ask a witness to state evidence, and then ask for a statement by the witness himself that he used words appropriate?

Judge Neilson—As he understood it.

Mr. Evarts—I understood that; but, your Honor, how does it become a subject of evidence, when it is what he said that you and the jury must judge of, and not take the witness's construction?

Judge Neilson—We will take it.

Mr. Evarts—I move to strike out the answer.

Judge Neilson—Denied.

Mr. Evarts—We except.

Judge Neilson—Proceed.

Q. What passed between you and Mr. Beecher in regard to what you said, or what you were to say to any persons, who catechized you on the subject?

Mr. Evarts—That we object to, as they have examined him about it.

Judge Neilson—I think that is proper if applied expressly to any of these gentlemen whom you have named.

Mr. Evarts—Undoubtedly. If they will take Mr. Buck or Mr. Swan or Mr. Baxter—

Judge Neilson—You need not name him.

Mr. Evarts—There is the point, if your Honor please.

Judge Neilson—You have named them all and the answer of the witness should be applied to some of those persons.

Mr. Evarts—Now, if your Honor please, it is not permissible for this witness to apply the past evidence argumentatively to these people. That is his affair. What Mr. Beecher said to him he has already testified to. Now, if he has anything more that Mr. Beecher said to him concerning these particular cases, he may now be inquired of undoubtedly upon the particular cases having been brought in by us. But that is not the effort. The effort is not to give any new fact concerning Mr. Beecher, but to apply by the witness's argument or statement some previous statements of Mr. Beecher, to these particular circumstances.

Judge Neilson—I don't know whether they were previous and general or not.

Mr. Evarts—I ask to be guarded against any such consequences. If each of these cases can be put to the witness, and it is said, "What did Mr. Beecher say to you concerning what you said or what you should say to Mr. Swan?"—that is a question, possibly, admissible.

Judge Neilson—It is not to be expected that the witness could have gone to Mr. Beecher and said to him, "I had a conversation with A. and told him so, and with B. and told him so and so."

Mr. Evarts—It is not for us to suppose what could and could not be done.

Judge Neilson—Mr. Fullerton, will you proceed? I think there is a line proper—

Mr. Evarts—There is a limit, if your Honor please.

Judge Neilson—No doubt there is a limit. [To Mr. Fullerton]: You must have an idea.

Mr. Fullerton—I have a distinct idea, and that idea is shadowed forth in my question.

Judge Neilson—Go on, in respect to any of these persons named on the cross-examination.

ADVICE TO NEWSPAPERS.

Mr. Beach—Now, if your Honor please I must interrupt this examination for the purpose of stating to your Honor a fact which has just been communicated to me by a gentleman who acts here as a reporter. He states to me that he has received the points from some of the counsel engaged in this case, and they are not confined upon the part of the plaintiff, in regard to a review which he is writing of the cross-examination of the testimony of Mr. Moulton. That will be, Sir, a commentary upon the proceedings in this trial, which I undertake to say will be a statutory contempt, subjecting the party who writes it to proper dealing on the part of this Court; and I ask your Honor to admonish that gentleman, and any other person who appears here under favor of the Court to report the proceedings of this trial, to abstain from comments of that character. I don't know, Sir, whether they will be favorable or unfavorable. I care not what their character may be. We ask no such favors from the press, and I give the gentlemen notice that if any paper whose reporter is admitted to the floor of this Court upon this trial, publishes comments upon the statement of Mr. Moulton or any other witness, that I shall bring the matter formally before the Court under proceedings for contempt.

Judge Neilson—Of course I can now do no less than make the suggestion that you think I should make, that it would be well for the gentleman to refrain. My source of security all along has been that the Jury do not, pending this trial, read the papers. I am entirely satisfied they do not. Beyond that I have no way—

Mr. Beach—By statute, Sir, it is made a contempt of the Court for the public press to comment upon the proceedings of a public trial, and gentlemen who do it are brought under the jurisdiction of the Court; and, I think, Sir, that our causes have suffered prejudice enough, upon the one side or the other, by what I deem an entirely impertinent and improper interference of the press by those comments.

Judge Neilson—The press should refrain, undoubtedly, from those points. Still, I say the security is with the Jury and in their faithful observance of what has been said to them, because if the New York or Brooklyn papers should refrain from comments we have no assurance that the New-Jersey or Philadelphia papers would do so.

Mr. Beach—They are out of our jurisdiction.

Judge Neilson—They may come to the eyes of the Jury. Proceed.

[THE TRIBUNE stenographer reads the question.]

Q. What passed between you and Mr. Beecher in regard to what you said, or what you were to say to any person who criticised you on the subject?

Mr. Evarts—That we object to as recalling what has been already testified to on the subject.

Witness—Can I answer it?

Judge Neilson—Proceed.

The Witness—I remember, Sir, having said to Mr. Beecher that I had been questioned by Mr. Baxter on the subject, and by others whose names I do not now recollect, and that I had undertaken to mislead them, by stating to them, in the first place, that if the story was true, it was infamous, and if false, it was diabolical; that if his life was not an answer to it, I did not choose to make any, that I did not think it was necessary; that being pressed close I had denied the truth of the criminal intercourse with Mrs. Tilton, and said he was a pure man. And he thanked me; he said he thanked me for doing that; and he said there was only one way, since lying was necessary, and that was to lie sublimely.

Q. Do you recollect the conversation had with Mr. Halliday? A. Yes, I remember that.

Q. What was that conversation? A. The purport of it was that Mr. Beecher was a guiltless man. This I told Mr. Beecher: that I had undertaken to tell Mr. Halliday it was a shameful proceeding for deacons to dig into a scandal that had been already settled amicably between the parties, and Mr. Beecher thanked me.

Q. Do you recollect the letter put in evidence from Mr. Beecher to yourself, wherein he says, in substance, "your conversation with Mr. Halliday was quieting?" A. Yes; I saw him after that letter, too.

Q. What took place after that letter? A. He spoke of the letter, and thanked me for my interview with Mr. Halliday.

Q. Mr. Halliday was the Assistant Minister? A. Yes, Sir. Have you got the letter?

Q. Your interview with Mr. Halliday satisfied him? A. Something of that sort.

Q. What did Mr. Halliday question you about? A. Mr. Halliday asked me about the stories against Mr. Beecher and his alleged intercourse with Mrs. Tilton, &c.

Q. Did he tell you his object in making those inquiries? A. He said something about a Deacons' meeting; I don't know exactly what it was.

Mr. Evarts—This has all been given in evidence before on the direct.

Judge Neilson—You have called out the conversation with Mr. Halliday since.

Mr. Evarts—That is this witness's conversation with Mr. Halliday.

Mr. Beach—You asked for it.

Judge Neilson—The general rule is that counsel shall not have the witness repeat the evidence given on the direct. No doubt that is the rule.

Mr. Beach—Undoubtedly, Sir. We do not seek to do that. After the interview with Mr. Halliday he talked with Mr. Beecher about it.

Mr. Evarts—That is the only reason you got it in before. [Reading]: "What was the subject of the interview? A. The subject of the interview was with Mr. Halliday. Mr. Evarts—Did you repeat it to Mr. Beecher? Witness—Oh, yes, Sir. I talked with Mr. Beecher about it afterwards." Then Mr. Fullerton went on, "Q. What was the subject of the interview between you and Mr. Halliday?" And then he goes on and gives the whole interview.

Judge Neilson—You are correct if what you refer to is this interview.

Mr. Evarts—Undoubtedly. No other.

Judge Neilson—The counsel must accept the admonition.

Mr. Fullerton—From whom do I understand it comes, your Honor? I am entirely correct. I am only proving something that grows out of the cross-examination, referring to this branch of the examination; not elicited on the direct.

Judge Neilson—You have a right to do that.

Mr. Evarts—My objection is, it is not that. It is the direct examination reproduced, out of which the cross-examination grew, that he is now inquiring about.

Mr. Beach—We proved the conversation with Mr. Halliday, and we are proving it was repeated to Mr. Beecher.

Mr. Evarts—That you have proved also. The only reason you proved your conversation with Mr. Halliday was, that you proved it was repeated to Mr. Beecher.

Mr. Beach—Yes, Sir; but we have not proved what Mr. Beecher said. You (Mr. Evarts) did not read that. Mr. Tracy says you have been reading it. You read what passed between Mr. Halliday and the witness.

Judge Neilson—If my memory is correct, I learn now, for the first time, that after this interview with Mr. Halliday, Mr. Beecher approved and thanked him for what he said. I think that is new matter.

Mr. Evarts—That is all here in the direct. May I say just how it was; I have it here: "I repeated it to Mr. Beecher, and Mr. Beecher thanked me for it."

Mr. Fullerton—Look at the letter of June 1st. It is the letter marked "Exhibit D 43," to which I call your attention. Do you recollect that? A. Yes, I recollect it; my letter.

Q. I call your attention to the phrase: "You can stand if the whole case were published to-morrow." What is it you meant by that expression?

Mr. Evarts—That I object to. There is the expression. It is plain English.

Judge Neilson—I think he can tell what it refers to. I do not think he can tell what it means. The question here is whether you can ask the witness to give the construction of a passage which is very good English. I think you cannot.

Mr. Fullerton—You cannot if it is in a contract; but if in a letter written by a witness on the stand, who has no interest in the suit, you can always.

Mr. Evarts—I object to any evidence which goes to interpret this plain language.

Judge Neilson—I so rule.

Mr. Evarts—The question is not allowed.

Judge Neilson—The witness writes with a certain intent, certain words, what the other side understands according to the fair and reasonable interpretation of what is written. I think it must stand in that way.

Mr. Fullerton—This letter is given in evidence, not for its effect upon the case, but for the purpose of affecting the witness on the stand.

Q. Had you any conversation with Mr. Beecher about the time of writing that letter? A. Yes, Sir; on Sunday night.

Q. When was that letter written? A. On Sunday morning.

Q. State, if you please, what that conversation was?

Mr. Evarts—Has not that been gone into before?

Mr. Fullerton—No, Sir.

Mr. Evarts—Was not every interview gone into with Mr. Beecher?

Judge Neilson—He is to take that conversation with special reference to this letter.

Mr. Evarts—If there was any.

Mr. Fullerton—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Beach—Or with reference to that expression, that he could stand if the whole case were known, etc.

Mr. Evarts—Primarily, every interview I have gone into; they have no right to inquire into it except in reference to our inquiries concerning it. The introduction of this letter is not an inquiry of ours concerning the interview, and if everything we introduce is to give a right to additional statements and interviews that have already been passed through and exhausted, why, of course, it is idle for us to give any evidence.

Judge Neilson—Such a thing might happen, as that evidence might be given on your part that would bring something to the mind of the witness not suggested or inquired about before. Go on.

Mr. Fullerton—State the conversation.

Mr. Evarts—I object to this general referring to an interview already given in evidence.

The Witness—Mr. Beecher came to my house on the evening of the Sunday on which this letter was written, and I said to Mr. Beecher, "You never give me any strength at all. If I was to follow you my hands would drop useless. You give me no courage; you give me no hope. Whenever there is an emergency to face in the matter, whether it is easy or whether it is hard to meet, you drop; you don't suggest the way out. Now, if you were to express to your congregation the contrition which you have expressed to me in consequence of your intercourse with Mrs. Tilton, they, in my opinion, would forgive you, and you could stand. I don't see any necessity for the hopelessness of your letter this morning. It is nothing but discouragement, and that is what I meant by the expression, 'You can stand if the whole case were known.'"

Q. What reply did he make to that? A. He considered that the card that was published on the morning of June 2d—

Judge Neilson—Did he make any verbal reply then and there? A. He said he could not feel hope, he was hopeless. He could not help expressing his feeling. That was the substance of what he said, and he said he came to me for strength. That is what he came for, he said.

Mr. Tracy—Did he say that more than once to you? A. Yes, Sir; many times.

Q. Did he ever say that to you of a Sunday evening on his way to church? A. This was Sunday evening; I am talking about this Sunday evening.

Q. What did he say on one occasion, or more than one occasion, of the meeting when he was on his way to church, when he would stop at your house?

Mr. Evarts—Is this not something we have gone into?

Judge Neilson—Counsel ought not to repeat what has been gone into; I hope he won't.

Mr. Evarts—The question is not whether it is a repetition of what was said. The question is whether it is a recurrence to a subject that he went through with, which is not lawful except in connection with something we have shown on cross-examination.

Mr. Fullerton—It is not a recurrence to a subject which has been gone through with.

Judge Neilson—Go on.

WEAKNESS OF MR. BEECHER DWELT UPON.

The Witness—He used that expression or the substance of it to me very often on Friday evenings, before going to his prayer meeting, and on Sundays, and on various days of the week; I don't recollect the particular days.

Q. What was the expression? A. On which evening—on this evening?

Q. No, that we have got; on the other evenings. A. He said he wanted to get help and courage enough to face his people.

Q. Did you relate on your cross-examination all that occurred between you and Charles Storrs, when you went to see him in reference to the report which the Committee contemplated? A. I did not relate the whole of that—the cause of it, and all about it.

Q. I want you to relate all the conversation between yourself and Charles Storrs, if you did not relate it on your cross-examination? A. I told Charles Storrs, as near as I can recollect, that when I was at Lowell Gen. Butler read to me from the Boston papers that the Committee were not going to cross-examine me, and that I then telegraphed my partner, Mr. Woodruff, to see Mr. Sage, and tell him that I should be in New-York the next morning for cross-examination; that I had telegraphed Mr. Woodruff to have him (Charles Storrs) come to see me, and I presumed that he was there in answer to that dispatch, and I said to Mr. Storrs, "Mr. Storrs, Mr. Beecher has confessed to me, in the presence of another, adultery with a woman other than Mrs. Tilton. My counsel deemed it necessary that the papers and statement which I made to him concerning that event should go into the statement which I am about to make. I understand your brother is a member of this Investigating Committee. I want to say to you that I would like to have you see your brother, and not have him sign that report until I have had an opportunity to be cross-examined upon the statement which I have published. I want you to particularly put it upon that ground, namely, that I don't want to have him sign that report until I have had an opportunity to be cross-examined by the Committee;" and Mr. Storrs said to me, "I suppose you refer to a lady," &c., mentioning her name, and I said, "I do not mention any names. My disposition is not to hurt anybody. I have sent for you as a friend to come here for the purpose which I now explain to you," and that is what I said to Charles Storrs, as near as I can remember.

Q. Did you say anything on this subject to this effect, that your cross-examination would do away with the necessity of publishing a statement? A. Yes, Sir; I said something of that sort to him, substantially that; I said to Charles Storrs that Mr. Beecher had mentioned the woman's name, and he did.

Mr. Evarts—That last is not good evidence.

The Witness—I don't know whether it is or not.

Mr. Evarts—It is not without the inquiry, and the witness is not to volunteer evidence.

Judge Neilson—I don't know that he intends to volunteer.

Mr. Evarts—I didn't say he was intending to volunteer.

Judge Neilson—I think that last statement should be struck out.

Mr. Beach—Not the whole of it.

Judge Neilson—The statement that Mr. Beecher mentioned the lady's name.

Mr. Evarts—That is within your Honor's allowance, but the witness went on to state, "and he did state," etc.

Judge Neilson—Strike that out.

Q. Was what you said to Charles Storrs, true?

Mr. Evarts—That I object to.

Judge Neilson—That is ruled out. It is true as far as concerns himself and his examination, and what he said by the advice of counsel.

Mr. Evarts—They cannot give evidence in that way, by asking a man if what he told him on a subject was true.

Judge Neilson—I have ruled on that. Your comprehensive statement would get in that what this witness said to this third person was true.

Mr. Fullerton—No; was it true that Mr. Beecher made that statement to him, not that Mr. Beecher's statement was true.

Judge Neilson—No.

Mr. Fullerton—I would like to show that what the witness said to Mr. Storrs was true.

Judge Neilson—It is not material to us at all.

Mr. Fullerton—In your cross-examination you stated that Mr. Tilton told you his wife had been before the Committee, and had left the house. What else did he state to you in that conversation? A. That his wife had been before the Committee, and that he had left the house.

Q. That he had left the house in consequence of it, I understood you to say. A. Yes, Sir, it was in consequence of his wife having been before the Committee, and he said that he should never go back to it.

Q. Give us the whole conversation.

Mr. Evarts—That depends on whether it relates to this subject.

Judge Neilson—A subject you introduced.

Mr. Evarts—We prove the single fact that he left the house and that he told him so, and that he advised him to go back.

Judge Neilson—Is not the rest of the conversation material?

Mr. Evarts—If it related to other matters.

Judge Neilson—No, if it related to this matter.

Mr. Evarts—If it related to his leaving and going back.

Judge Neilson—If it related to the subject matter of the conversation.

Mr. Evarts—Your Honor sees that if, under cover of that, a narrative of conversations of what passed between Mr. Tilton and his wife, in general relating to this matter of controversy, is to be introduced, it is a very different inquiry.

Judge Neilson—The general proposition is that you, having introduced part of the conversation, he can call for the rest.

Mr. Evarts—All that relates to that subject, I apprehend, and nothing more. If in the same interview, they go on and talk of other matters, I have not introduced anything, of course.

Mr. Beach—We do not differ with the counsel in regard to the rule.

Mr. Fullerton—Not at all. The gentleman is making objections before the questions are asked.

Mr. Evarts—The questions are general, and the disposition of the witness is to answer freely.

Mr. Fullerton—I am glad to hear the gentleman's good opinion of him.

Mr. Evarts—That is so.

Mr. Fullerton—Answer the question.

The Witness—He said he had told his wife that he had not known of the appointment of the Committee, and she had not told him that she was going, and he didn't want her to go to any Committee without consulting him and letting him know she was going, and he didn't like that sort of conduct. That was substantially the point.

Q. Did he state whether or not he was informed of the substance of that statement, or that he was ignorant of it? A. He did not know anything about it.

Q. He did not know anything about it? A. No, Sir.

Q. Did he state in that conversation when he first heard of the appointment of the Committee? A. I think he stated that that was the first he had heard of it. I do not recollect distinctly about that; I think that is what he said—that he had not heard of it before that.

Q. Do you recollect when this conversation took place? A. It took place during the week of the 5th of July, I think; between the 5th and the 12th of July, I think.

Q. Do you know how soon it was after Mrs. Tilton had been before the Committee? A. How soon it was after what?

Q. After Mrs. Tilton had been before the Committee? A. I think she had been before the Committee that day—the evening on which he saw her, if my recollection serves me right.

Q. (Handing paper to witness) I now put in your hand Exhibit D 45, which is the proposed report of Mr. Tilton in his handwriting. From whom did you receive that? A. I think from Mr. Tilton.

Q. What did he say in regard to it at the time he gave it to you?

Mr. Evarts—That we object to, if your Honor please—whatever he said concerning the use of it, or whatever was to be done with it. If that is introduced by us, why, that is all very well. A discussion on the subject between these two gentlemen, because we have proved an act of Mr. Tilton with the paper, does not seem admissible.

Mr. Fullerton—Of course, we have a right to show what Mr. Tilton said when he passed the document over. Your Honor understands perfectly well that in that period of the history of this scandal, they were doing a great many different things for the purpose of concealing from the world the truth, and this was one of the schemes for that purpose that was to patch up and gloss over this whole affair. It was for the purpose of saving his wife and children that this was got up.

Judge Neilson—I think you are confined to any conversation he had with, or in the presence of, or that was brought to the knowledge of Mr. Beecher.

Mr. Fullerton—I don't want to imitate the counsel on the other side, by arguing a question after it is decided; but I ask your Honor to consider, for a single moment, that I am now trying to prove what Mr. Tilton said at the time of the actual handing of that paper to Mr. Moulton.

The Witness—Mr. Tracy was a party to it, and he said he remembered Mr. Beecher.

Mr. Beach—Counsel on the other side conceded we had a right to show what Mr. Tilton said as to the paper, and what was to be done with it.

Judge Neilson—Instructions, of course.

Mr. Evarts—That is, instructions as to that paper; but not conversations concerning its contents.

Mr. Beach—Not concerning its contents. We are not going to ask anything in regard to its contents; but if I hand your Honor a certain paper, with a request to do a certain thing with it, for a certain purpose,—is not that evidence?

Judge Neilson—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Evarts—If I say, "I give you that paper to give it to Mr. Beecher"—But to say, "I give it to you for the purpose of deceiving him,"—that is not an admissible conversation.

Mr. Beach—I say it is. I give you a paper, and I say, "I want you to use that paper in a particular way, for a particular purpose."

Judge Neilson—That you may show.

Mr. Evarts—That is to be shown against them, and not in favor of them.

Judge Neilson—We cannot see how that will be.

Mr. Evarts—We could show that if we saw fit. We proved their action, and then they endeavor to explain, by words that passed between them, their action, which we, by way of cross-examination, can prove, because we affect them with what they say; but they cannot affect themselves as towards us, with what passed between them.

Mr. Beach—Let me put an illustration to your Honor. I consider this rule of some practical importance, and I pledged myself to furnish to your Honor authorities sustaining the proposition which I submitted a while ago, that wherever the act of any party is given in evidence his declaration accompanying that act is admissible to explain or to qualify. It is a general and fundamental proposition of evidence; and, suppose, if the gentleman's doctrine was applied to all the various circumstances which arise in a court of justice—suppose a man was indicted for striking me, Mr. Evarts comes to me and delivers a blow in my face, and at the instant of delivering that blow he accuses me of having injured him in some form. He gives the motive and the purpose with which he delivers that act. Can that act be proved against Mr. Evarts without permitting him to give the declaration accompanying the act, showing the motive and the purpose. Suppose he said to me, "Mr. Beach, you have assaulted me, or you have circulated infamous slanders against me or my family," may not that be given in evidence to characterize the transactions? And whoever heard that declarations accompanying an act given in evidence against a party or a witness cannot be given for the purpose of explaining the circumstance and the motive which is to qualify and characterize the transactions? What is the meaning of the rule of law that what happens upon a particular occasion may be given in evidence as a part of the res gestæ, whether they are acts or declarations. Anything which is material to be proved, may be proved by the accompanying and surrounding circumstances.

Judge Neilson—Material to the act?

Mr. Beach—Certainly, your Honor, material to the act.

Judge Neilson—I think you agree about that. Proceed, Mr. Fullerton.

Mr. Evarts—Let me say this: My learned friend puts to you a case which is within the recognized rules of evidence, although the case otherwise is not a supposable one, either that he should have given me an offense, or that I should have struck him in the face. But I deliver the blow, and at the same time say, as accompanying the act, to the man to whom the blow is given, what is sought is to be affected by the blow. That is a spoken act. That is not hearsay. That is a part of the blow; but here the point is—

Judge Neilson—It goes to the question of malice.

Mr. Evarts—It is a part of the blow. It is a spoken act. Some confusion, no doubt, arises in lawyers' discussions about hearsay, because that comes by word of mouth, but your Honor is familiar with the distinction that our learned friend has given, of a spoken act—of the act of doing; but here we give a paper as used in a certain way, to wit, a paper written by Mr. Tilton, and brought by Mr. Moulton from Mr. Tilton, and proposed in a subsequent conversation to be read before the council. We have a right to show that Mr. Tilton did take the paper. Now, if he gave instructions to take the paper, and lay it before the council, or carry it to Mr. Beecher, that is a part of the act of delivering it to him; it comes within the spoken acts; but this question is large enough to draw out, and so, I suppose, is intended to draw out a larger line of mere hearsay evidence, to wit, conversations between Mr. Moulton and Mr. Tilton with which Mr. Beecher cannot be affected.

Judge Neilson—That distinction must be observed. Go on Mr. Fullerton.

Mr. Fullerton—When anything comes out that is a refraction of the rule counsel can raise his objection.

Mr. Evarts—We have a right to have questions properly framed.

Mr. Fullerton—The Court says the question is proper. I repeat the question.

Mr. Evarts—What is the question?

Judge Neilson—Let the stenographer read it.

[THE TRIBUNE stenographer read the question].

Mr. Evarts—I understand your Honor's instruction is, what is to be done with the paper?

Judge Neilson—What he said in regard to it—the paper.

Mr. Evarts—That will cover its contents. I object to the question, if your Honor please, and you will please note my exception.

The Witness—Mr. Tilton said to me, in accordance with the consultation that had taken place the night before between Gen. Tracy, himself and myself, that he had gone home and that he had dictated in part to Elizabeth a statement for the Committee to sign, which he had copied, and which he handed to me. This was the document: I believe, that he handed to me, and I subsequently—

Judge Neilson—Did he tell you what to do with it?

The Witness—He said it was a report for the Committee in accordance with the consultation, and I saw Mr. Tilton and Mr. Tracy subsequently together, and Mr. Tilton read this to Mr. Tracy, or Mr. Tracy—

Mr. Evarts—We object to this. Mr. Tracy is not Mr. Beecher.

Judge Neilson—The mere act of reading it, I think, is correct.

Mr. Evarts—If read between Mr. Tilton and Mr. Moulton it would not be evidence. If read between Mr. Tilton, Mr. Moulton and a third person it would not be evidence. If it was with Mr. Beecher it would be.

Judge Neilson—He has answered your question. That last should be struck out.

Q. What did you do with that statement you now hold in your hand? A. I kept it.

Q. It was not used? A. No, Sir.

Q. At that time had either Mr. Tilton or Mr. Beecher been before the Committee that you know of? A. No, Sir, I think not at that time, not to my knowledge at all.

Q. Did you have any conversation with Mr. Beecher in regard to that proposed report? A. I don't recollect whether in regard to this one; I think I alluded to this report in the conversation with him in his house.

Q. In what way did you allude to it? A. I think I told Mr. Beecher, during the week of the 12th of July, that Mr. Tilton had prepared a statement.

Mr. Evarts—That is a direct examination that has heretofore been gone into.

Mr. Beach—Not in regard to this witness.

Mr. Fullerton—This report is introduced by the other side. We now learn of it for the first time on cross-examination.

Mr. Evarts—Not at all.

Mr. Fullerton—We learn its contents for the first time.

Mr. Evarts—I think you had the paper in your hand, and that was the long statement, and you put in the short one, and the witness talked about the long one and the short one.

The Witness—I didn't have the long one with me when I went to see Mr. Beecher.

Mr. Fullerton—It was put in evidence on the cross-examination, for the first time.

Judge Neilson—We will take the statement.

Q. In what way did you allude to that statement in your conversation with Mr. Beecher?

Mr. Evarts—I object.

Mr. Beach—Go on.

The Witness—You told me not to go on, Mr. Beach, when there was an objection.

Mr. Beach—I now say you may go on.

The Witness—I told Mr. Beecher, during the week of July 12th, that Mr. Tilton had consultations with Gen. Tracy and myself, in which Gen. Tracy had pictured to Mr. Tilton the interview that his wife had with the Committee; that Mr. Tilton had prepared a statement.

Mr. Evarts—I submit, your Honor, that that precise conversation was given before.

Judge Neilson—It may not have appeared before that it related to this very report.

Mr. Evarts—This very remark—

Judge Neilson—Go on.

The Witness—That he had prepared this report, and that if it had not been for Mrs. Tilton's having left the house, and the publication of his correspondence with the Committee, that this thing would probably have been accepted, because Mr. Tracy had told Mr. Tilton that he thought he could get substantially this adopted by the Committee. That is as near as I can recollect the conversation concerning this statement.

Q. What reply did he make? A. I don't recollect what his reply was. It was at that point that I showed him the short statement which I had in my pocket.

HOW BEECHER'S PORTRAIT WAS PRESERVED.

Q. Some importance has been attached to the portrait of Mr. Beecher that was once hung in your house and has been taken down. I will ask you a single question in regard to it. Where did that portrait hang when you first put it upon the wall—Mr. Beecher's portrait? A. It hung in my parlor in Remsen street on the wall.

Q. Where did it come from? A. It came from Mr. Tilton's.

Q. When? A. I don't recollect the date when.

Q. About what time? A. I should think some time in 1871.

Q. How long did it hang in that place? A. It hung there until Mr. Paige's portrait came there, a few months ago.

Q. Then it was taken down, and Mr. Paige's put in its place? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. What was done with Mr. Beecher's? A. Put up-stairs, on the mantelpiece.

Q. Preserved? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. In good condition? A. Oh! yes, Sir. Standing along side of an engraving of Cupid and Psyche.

Mr. Evarts—I ask that this be stricken out.

Judge Neilson—Yes.

Mr. Evarts—I ask your Honor to state to the witness, who does not yet seem to have learned, that such observations are improper.

The Witness—I understood Mr. Fullerton asked me where it was, and I told him. I didn't mean to be vulgar or abrupt, only to be specific.

A SHARP FINANCIAL POLICY.

Q. You were asked in regard to the notes that were given by Mr. Tilton to the various subscribers to the stock of The Golden Age. [Handing papers to witness.] Look at the four papers which I now show you, and say whether they are the notes which you alluded to? A. Yes, Sir; those are the ones.

Q. Whilst counsel are examining those notes, I will show you a letter, and ask you whether that is the letter accompanying the return of the note? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. [Handing paper to witness.] Look at the other paper now shown you, and say whether that accompanied them or preceded them? A. Yes, Sir; this is the note that accompanied it.

Mr. Fullerton—I offer this in evidence:

NEW-YORK, September 15, 1871.

$1,500. For value received, I promise to pay Francis D. Moulton fifteen hundred dollars, with interest at the rate of seven per cent. per annum; the payment of principal and interest to be contingent upon the success of The Golden Age, of which newspaper I am the sole editor and proprietor.

THEODORE TILTON.

NEW-YORK, September 15th, 1871.

$1,500. For value received, I promise to pay Franklin Woodruff fifteen hundred dollars, with interest at the rate of seven per cent. per annum; the payment of principal and interest to be contingent upon the success of The Golden Age, of which newspaper I am the sole editor and proprietor.

THEODORE TILTON.

NEW-YORK, September 15th, 1871.

$750. For value received, I promise to pay John C. Southwick seven hundred and fifty dollars, with interest at the rate of seven per cent. per annum; the payment of principal and interest to be contingent upon the success of The Golden Age, of which newspaper I am the sole editor and proprietor.

THEODORE TILTON.

NEW-YORK, September 15, 1871.

$750. For value received, I promise to pay Jackson S. Schultz seven hundred and fifty dollars, with interest at the rate of seven per cent. per annum; the payment of principal and interest to be contingent upon the success of The Golden Age, of which newspaper I am the sole editor and proprietor.

THEODORE TILTON.

Mr. Fullerton—They are all signed "Theodore Tilton," and are all marked "canceled."

The notes are put in evidence and marked "Exhibits No. 58," "No. 59," "No. 60" and "No. 61."

Mr. Fullerton—I now offer in evidence this letter.

November 10th, 1872.

DEAR THEODORE:—I have it all fixed. You are free, so be brave. Your notes will all be given up, canceled and returned to you to-morrow. Inclosed find small bill of interest, for which I must ask the money to feed the orphans.

Very truly yours,

F. WOODRUFF.

[Marked "Ex. No. 62."]

Mr. Fullerton—Now, I read this paper.

NEW-YORK, June 11th, 1873.

MR. THEODORE TILTON—

Dear Sir: We, the undersigned, desiring to contribute to the loss sustained by you in establishing The Golden Age, do cheerfully return herewith the notes canceled which you gave for money loaned. Wishing you continued success and prosperity in the years to come, and congratulating you on having so successfully founded the paper, and that you are now free from debt,

We are, dear Sir, yours truly,

F. WOODRUFF, $1,500,

FRANCIS D. MOULTON, $1,500.

JOHN W. MASON, $1,000.

JOHN C. SOUTHWICK, $750.

J. S. SCHULTZ, $750.

J. P. ROBINSON, [by F. WOODRUFF,] $500.

Q. These notes bear date Sept. 15, 1871. I want to know, now, with reference to that date, when the Woodhull biography was written and published? A. It was before that, I believe.

Mr. Evarts—That has been offered in evidence.

Mr. Fullerton—I know it has.

Mr. Evarts—No, but to repeat matter of evidence, for argumentative juxtaposition.

Mr. Fullerton—My friend on the other side made a great point in his case—

Mr. Evarts—That is argument.

Mr. Fullerton—I am glad you think so. I am arguing.

Mr. Evarts—What I object to is your reproducing proof.

Judge Neilson—The precise date is not given.

Mr. Fullerton—No, Sir.

Judge Neilson—The fact that it was published appears.

Mr. Fullerton—I want to know whether the Woodhull biography was published before or after these notes.

Judge Neilson—That he may answer.

The Witness—I think it was before.

Q. How long? A. I don't remember the date; some time before.

Q. The notes were given in 1871, and given up in 1872. A. Was your question, when the notes were given?

Q. When the notes were given with reference to the publication of the Woodhull biography? A. The notes were given after the publication of the Woodhull biography.

Q. Do you remember how long after? A. I don't remember the date; I cannot recall it.

Judge Neilson—It appeared on the cross-examination, the notes were given up after that publication.

Mr. Fullerton—Yes, Sir; and it was argued that it was in consequence of it.

Mr. Morris—Whereas the fact is, they were not given. The notes had no inscription until after the publication of that.

Mr. Evarts—We will see; we object to arguing the matter as we go along.

Mr. Morris—You should not object much to arguing, for you are all the time at it.

Mr. Fullerton—It is suggested that I should ask you whether these notes were given up at the date of the Woodruff letter? A. My recollection is that they were.

Mr. Evarts—It is now four o'clock.

Mr. Beach—We had better go on a little longer. How will you be in the morning, Frank?

The Witness—I don't know, Sir.

Mr. Beach—[After consulting with witness.] Your Honor knows that Mr. Moulton has not been able to go to his residence this day, since he heard of his mother's death, and he tells me he would prefer to have as much of this afternoon as possible. I think he can arrange his affairs so as to be here in the morning at the usual hour.

Judge Neilson—Then we will adjourn.

The Court was then adjourned to 11 o'clock Wednesday.

THIRTEENTH DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

THREE NEW WITNESSES CALLED.

TESTIMONY OF MRS. MARTHA A. BRADSHAW AND WM. F. WEST—FRANKLIN WOODRUFF CALLED.

Anticipations of the appearance of new witnesses and curiosity to know who they were to be as well as to hear what they had to say filled the court-room on Wednesday with the great crowd which on the first days of Mr. Moulton's testimony made the room uncomfortable. On no day has the crowd been greater or more attentive.

Mr. Moulton's ordeal as a witness ended at noon. Mr. Fullerton resigned him to the hands of the opposing counsel 15 minutes after the opening of the court, after having attempted only to gather a few fragmentary bits of testimony. The recross-examination was short, but it was also sharp. Mr. Tracy's questions were precise and delivered rapidly, and Mr. Moulton's replies were equally positive. Only when Mr. Tracy asked whether he (Mr. Tracy) knew what Mr. Moulton's statement to the Committee was to be before Mr. Moulton appeared before the Committee, "No," answered the witness; "but you knew what you wanted it to be." Gen. Tracy asked that the witness be admonished for thus replying, but Judge Neilson unhesitatingly refused, saying that the witness had been tried and tortured for nearly ten days by the counsel on both sides, and he should therefore be excused without any sort of reprimand. When Mr. Tracy asked Mr. Moulton for his views of the marriage relation, there was an evidence of merriment on the part of the audience in apparent anticipation of some singular views on the part of the witness. But he replied unhesitatingly in plain terms. Mr. Moulton was placed in the witness chair two weeks ago on Wednesday, at 2 p. m., and was under examination nearly 11 days, which amounts to saying that he was engaged for very nearly 44 hours in hearing questions and making replies.

The entrance of Mr. Morris by way of the door leading into the ante-room of the court a few moments before noon, with a strange lady at his side, caused marked sensation in the audience, which was manifested by the visible stretching of necks and audible whisperings. She was conducted to the witness chair, and gave her name in a low tone as Mrs. Martha A. Bradshaw. Mrs. Bradshaw is a pleasant-looking lady of about 45 years of age, very quiet and retiring in manner, and evidently felt the embarrassment of her position. She was dressed plainly in black, and enveloped in a black cashmere shawl. According to her testimony, she has been a member of Plymouth Church and has known Mr. Beecher for 23 years, and has been acquainted with Mr. and Mrs. Tilton for nearly as long a time. Of the latter the witness had occasion to say that she was a most refined and sweet-minded woman, whom no one could know without loving. As she spoke these words, the voice of the witness, which had before been scarcely audible, sank to a whisper, and her eyes filled with tears. During her entire examination she sat almost immovable, with downcast and tearful eyes, but she gave her testimony clearly and without hesitation.

In the various statements and in the opening address of Mr. Morris, great stress was laid upon the evidence which Mrs. Bradshaw was expected to give, and it had been hinted that she would add important documentary testimony to the case in favor of Mr. Tilton. Her letter to Mr. Beecher proved to be one asking advice as to what she should do in reply to the summons of the Church Committee which was to try the "West charges" against Mr. Tilton for slandering Mr. Beecher, and asking him to deny Mr. Tilton's story to her, that she might mitigate what she would be compelled to tell the Committee. Throughout the letter there is no intimation that she believed Mr. Tilton's story or doubted Mr. Beecher's and Mrs. Tilton's innocence. Mr. Beecher's reply proved to be another of the many letters counseling silence as the best method of killing slanders.

Wm. F. West, formerly a deacon of Plymouth Church, and the person who made the charges against Theodore Tilton as a member of the church, was the first witness examined after recess. Mr. West is a mild looking gentleman of about 40 years. His examination was mainly regarding the manner of his placing his charges against Mr. Tilton before the church and regarding conversations with Mr. Beecher at which the latter, the witness said, tried to make him withdraw or postpone the charges.

Franklin B. Woodruff, the partner of Mr. Moulton, was called at half-past three o'clock, but after asking him a few formal questions the counsel became engaged in an exciting debate. While that discussion was in progress the hour of 4 arrived, and the Court adjourned.

THE PROCEEDINGS.

At the outset of the morning session on Wednesday, Judge Neilson called attention to what he deemed the unnecessarily prolix arguments of counsel over trivial points in the case, and proposed a means of economizing time spent in this way. The re-direct examination was resumed, the questions being with a view to explaining away the suggestions of a black-malling scheme made in the cross-examination.

THE ACCUSED NEVER DENIED HIS GUILT.

Francis D. Moulton was recalled and the re-direct examination continued.

Judge Neilson—I wish to say to the counsel on each side, before we proceed this morning, that on looking over the report of the proceedings I have been, as perhaps they have been, a little surprised to see how much time is spent on some minor and really unimportant points, and I think we might economize time, and it will suit me better, if the counsel would raise specifically, in clean cut terms, any objection they wish to make, and if it is one that I understand and desire to decide at once, to be content with an exception. If, on the other hand, it is a point that the counsel think is worth discussion, they will indicate that, and then it will be my wish to hear discussion on the subject. I think we might economize time in that way, gentlemen.

Mr. Evarts—If your Honor please, I observe in one of the morning papers some observations in regard to the painful position in which the witness was placed by the great and sudden affliction which overtook him yesterday, and which is made the occasion of some observations reflecting upon counsel, as if they had not appreciated that situation, and had, notwithstanding it, insisted upon prolonging the examination of the witness. Now, as your Honor understands, the Court and the counsel on both sides at once placed the matter wholly at the choice of the witness.

Judge Neilson—That is certainly so.

Mr. Evarts—And I am sure agrees with us in that statement; nor was there any basis for any such imputation.

Judge Neilson—None whatever. I am very sorry it was made.

Mr. Fullerton—And for reasons for which it is not necessary to state here, the witness thought advisable that he should go on and complete his cross-examination and re-direct, if it did not occupy too much time.

Judge Neilson—It was a question properly addressed to the witness, and if he felt the case burdensome, and that he ought to shake it off his hands, it was a question addressed to him.

Mr. Fullerton—Yes, Sir; I was pleased with the alacrity with which the counsel on the other side consented to take just such course as the witness desired. Shall I proceed, Sir?

Judge Neilson—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Fullerton—At the close of the sitting yesterday, Mr. Moulton, I was calling your attention to the article published in The Golden Age, embodying the letter of Mr. Tilton to Mr. Bowen of Jan. 1, 1871. You stated upon your cross-examination that the copy which was appended to the tripartite agreement was not exactly like the one which you had seen. I hand you now the paper and ask you whether that is the copy which you saw [handing witness a paper]? A. Yes, Sir; this is the copy that I saw.

Q. In what respect does it differ from the one attached to the tripartite agreement? A. I indicated what these differences were, and specially also, Sir, that there were some differences in the print; and then, I think, the last clause here in writing by Oliver Johnson was not in the copy that was attached to the tripartite covenant. Is that the answer?

Q. That is it. I understand you to say then these words at the bottom of this proof, namely, "that being the case, this publication which is necessary to my own defense, can do him no injury," was not in the printed slip. A. That was my recollection, Sir, from it the other day when I was looking at it.

Q. These words are in the handwriting of Oliver Johnson, I understand you to say? A. Yes, Sir.

The paper shown to the witness is marked "Exhibit No. 64."

Q. You have been asked upon the cross-examination in reference to the publication of the letter to Mr. Bowen in connection with the payment of the $5,000 by Mr. Beecher; I wish to ask you whether Mr. Beecher mentioned the publication of that letter in connection with the payment of the $5,000, or in connection with whatever was said prior to the payment of the $5,000? A. Never, Sir.

Q. That was not alluded to by him, as I understand you? A. No.

Q. Where did you get the notes which were produced and read in evidence yesterday, and the two letters accompanying them? A. From Mr. Theodore Tilton.

Q. They were not in your possession, were they? A. No. Sir.

Q. You have been asked with respect to Theodore Tilton's valedictory, and as to the time when you first saw it; what valedictory did you refer to? A. The valedictory of Theodore Tilton in The Independent—the valedictory as editor of The Independent.

Q. When he ceased to be editor and became the chief correspondent, was it? A. Contributor.

Q. It was not a valedictory after his connection with the two papers ceased at all, was it? A. No, Sir.

Q. I call your attention for a moment to the letter of Dec. 26, 1870, and ask you this question, whether you knew of the existence of that letter until after it had been sent? A. No, Sir.

Q. Your answer, then, that you disapproved of that letter, had reference to the knowledge that you derived from Mr. Tilton of its contents after it had been sent? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. You disapproved the sending of it. A. After it had been written; yes, Sir.

Q. And your disapproval was founded on the fact that Bowen did not father his own charges by signing the paper? A. I thought he ought to have signed the paper, Sir; that was my objection to it.

Q. There is but one other question, Mr. Moulton, and it is this: In any of the conversations to which your attention has been called upon your cross-examination by the other side with Mr. Beecher, or to which your attention was directed upon the direct examination, did Mr. Beecher ever deny to you his sexual intercourse with Mrs. Tilton? A. Never.

Mr. Fullerton—That is all.

THE RE-CROSS-EXAMINATION.

The re-cross-examination was then begun by Mr. Tracy.

Q. Mr. Moulton, at the time the notes which have been introduced in evidence connected with The Golden Age were given, what proportion of the original subscription had been paid in? A. What proportion? I really don't recollect, Mr. Tracy. I think it was paid in the day that the notes were given, or about that time. Mr. Woodruff can tell you about that better than I can. I don't remember.

Q. What proportion of the subscription had been or was paid in on that day? A. On the day that the notes were given?

Q. Yes, Sir. A. My recollection does not serve me, Sir, on that point, I think. Perhaps the account—

Q. Don't you know how much your original subscription was? A. The original subscription was $3,000.

Q. What? A. The original subscription was $3,000.

Q. Now, how much of that had you paid at the time of receiving this note from Theodore Tilton? A. I don't remember precisely about it, Sir, but my impression is that the one half of that subscription was called for at the time the notes were given, and the notes were given in consequence of the payment of it. I won't be certain about it. I haven't anything to guide my memory about it.

Judge Neilson—The subscription that you paid, however, was $1,500? A. $1,500.

Mr. Tracy—And had all the other subscribers paid one half of their original subscription? A. My impression is that they had, Sir, at the time that the notes were given.

Q. They had made these subscriptions prior to the starting of the paper, had they not? A. Prior to the starting of the paper.

Q. Can you tell us the form of that original subscription; what were its terms? A. I cannot.

Q. Can't you tell anything about it? A. No. I don't remember. We subscribed $3,000—I subscribed $3,000 for The Golden Age.

Q. Now, can't you tell us anything about the terms of that subscription? A. Nothing but that I subscribed $3,000 for The Golden Age.

Q. What was you to have in consideration of that subscription? A. I don't know that I was to have anything. I was to lose it.

Q. Were you to give Theodore Tilton $3,000 in consideration of his starting The Golden Age? A. Well, I thought it was about as good as giving it; I didn't expect to get anything from it.

Q. I didn't ask you that; I only ask you what you agreed to do? A. I agreed to subscribe $3,000 for The Golden Age.

Q. Yes, Sir; and what was you to have in consideration of that subscription? A. I don't think there was any agreement made as to what I was to have, Sir.

Q. Nothing at all? A. I don't think there was.

Q. No understanding about it? A. No, I don't think there was; not that I recollect.

Q. And was there not with the other subscribers so far as you know? A. I don't recollect. Mr. Woodruff conducted it entirely, Mr. Tracy, and so he would be able to inform you; I cannot.

Q. Do you mean to say that the paper which started on this subscription in March, had run until the 15th of September without having any part of that subscription paid in? A. I think Theodore Tilton drew his own money up to that time. My impression is that he had money and he paid it out as long as it lasted. I think so.

Q. Now, don't you know, Mr. Moulton, that the agreement between yourself and the other subscribers and Theodore Tilton, at the time these notes were given, was that they were to pay one-half of their original subscription in consideration of being released from the other half and his giving them his notes for the one-half which they had paid in, payable on The Golden Age becoming a success? A. No, I don't think that was the agreement at the time the notes were given. That was quite subsequent to it.

Q. That was quite subsequent to it? A. I think it was; that is my recollection.

Q. When was that agreement made, then, if it was not made at the time of giving the notes? A. I think it was made in 1872, some time.

Q. What was the agreement in 1872; repeat it? A. Well, I can't repeat it, Sir.

Q. Can't you repeat the substance of it? A. That Theodore Tilton was to have the whole thing—not call for the balance of the subscription, and have the whole subscription as a gift to him, without any obligation to return it.

Q. Do you mean to say, then, that the liability of the original subscribers for the whole subscription continued until 1872, when these notes were surrendered? A. My impression is that it did, Sir.

Q. That is your explanation of it? A. Yes, Sir; that is my explanation of it.

Mr. Tracy—Then, how did it happen that in 1871 he gave his notes for one-half of the subscription instead of the whole of it? A. Because he only got one-half.

Q. Ah! he gave his notes then for the half put in? A. That is all he wanted—that is the amount of money that he wanted, if I recollect correctly; but Mr. Woodruff conducted the whole of that negotiation, and he will be able to tell you.

Q. Now, do you know anything about how much money Tilton received on that subscription at the time of giving these notes in 1871? A. At the time of giving?

Q. Yes? A. My impression is that he received the whole at the time of giving.

Q. You now mean to say that he received the whole? A. Received the whole $1,500.

Q. Do you mean to say that he received it all prior to that time, or that he received it on that day? A. I said that I did not recollect a few moments ago; I haven't anything to guide my memory with regard to it.

Q. Do you mean to say now that you can't tell anything about that? A. My impression is that the money was paid on or about the day that the notes were given. Won't the account explain it, that you got?

Q. Now, do you know what he did with that money? A.

I think he put it on deposit with Woodruff & Robinson, and drew it; I think the account will show what time it was paid.

Q. Now, will you take that account with Woodruff & Robinson and point to his deposit on that day of one-half those moneys, amounting to about $8,000—one-half of them will be that? A. What is the date, September 20th?

Q. September 15th, 1871. A. Don't see it here, Sir.

Q. Is there any deposit on or about the 15th of September 1871, there? A. No; don't appear to be.

Q. Then what time from September 15th, is there a deposit at all on that account? A. On what account, on account of the paper?

Q. On account of Theodore Tilton; a deposit in that account. A. February 3d, $500; February 13th, $500; February 24th, 1871, $500; March 4th, $500; March 8th, $1,500; May 1st, $500, and November 15th, $500.

Q. That is 1872, that last? A. No; November 15th, $500; November 25th, twenty-five—

Q. Then there is no deposit in that account as I understand you, from March to November, 1871? A. Yes; there is a deposit from March to November, 1871.

Q. What is it? A. $500.

Q. When? A. March 4th, $500.

Q. I say from March to November there is no deposit in the account? A. Oh! yes; March 8th, $1,500.

Judge Neilson—He means from the end of March; after March? A. Yes, Sir; there is.

Q. What is it? A. May 1st, $500.

Q. Is there any other? A. To the first of November?

Q. Yes. A. No, Sir; the next one is November 15th.

Q. Now, what do you understand those deposits along in March and May of 1871, to be?

Mr. Fullerton—One moment, I think we must object, Sir.

Mr. Tracy—I don't press the question, Sir.

Mr. Fullerton—I did not object in the first instance, because I thought it would save time to let them ask the question, but your Honor perceives that is not in reply to anything on the subject.

Mr. Tracy—I submit it is directly in reply.

Judge Neilson—If there be any fact in connection with either of the depositions which you deem material, you may ask him.

Mr. Tracy—Well, I won't ask that question; I don't think it worth while taking up time about it. The account shows for itself.

HOW FAR TILTON VOUCHES FOR WOODHULL.

Mr. Tracy—Now, you gave yesterday what purported to be the speech of Theodore Tilton, introducing Victoria C. Woodhull, at the Steinway Hall meeting? A. Ye, Sir.

Q. When had your attention been called to the words that Mr. Tilton used, subsequent to the making of the speech, prior to yesterday? A. They were called, Sir, to the words that he used in the speech on the night that he made the speech.

Q. I say after? A. And then after that they were called to it in the paper, and I had occasion then within almost every day, I guess, for a week afterwards to state Theodore Tilton's connection with that Steinway Hall meeting, and had occasion to speak of his speech. I have not seen it from that time to this.

Q. From what time? A. Well, I should say from a fortnight after the speech.

Q. Until when? A. Until I was asked to produce it from memory, yesterday. I produced it from memory.

Q. Had you talked with Tilton on the subject of what he did? A. Have I talked with him?

Q. Had you prior to your testimony yesterday? A. Had I talked with him? I talked with him prior to that. Oh, yes, Sir; I talked with him prior to that.

Q. How long prior? A. About the time of the meeting.

Q. Well, recently? A. After that.

Q. Recently? A. No, Sir, not recently; no.

Q. Within three months? A. I talked with him, I think, day before yesterday; I dictated the speech to P. B. White at my house, and told Mr. Tilton that I had dictated it.

Q. Was Mr. Tilton present when you dictated it? A. No, Sir, he was not.

Q. I show you a copy of The New-York World of Nov. 21st. Will you look at what purports to be Mr. Tilton's speech, as reported in The World, and tell us whether it is correct or not [paper handed to witness]? A. It was either this or the report of The Herald next day that I saw. Have you got the report of The Herald?

Q. No, Sir; I have not. It is either that or a report in The Herald next day from which you read it? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. And to which you referred, I suppose, for the next two weeks from time to time. Now, what do you say? Is that report in The New-York World a correct report of Mr. Tilton's speech? A. It is something like it, as I remember it.

Q. Now, isn't it substantially like it, as you remember it? A. I think that there was something about freedom of speech, in his speech, Sir.

Q. You think there was? A. Yes.

Q. Well, I will read this speech to you, and ask you if this is not substantially the speech

Mr. Fullerton—One moment, he has read the speech himself and knows whether it is right or not.

Mr. Tracy—I have a right to ask him whether certain things did not occur there, and refresh his memory.

Judge Neilson—I don't think you can read it. You can ask him if it is substantially—and wherein it differs from his recollection.

Q. Now, does it differ, in your recollection, from Mr. Tilton's speech only in the fact that you see nothing here about freedom of speech? A. I think not; if you will let me have it, I will try to point out what I—[Paper handed back to witness] I don't remember, first, that he said that—"I was met at the door by a member of the Committee."

Q. You don't remember that? A. No.

Q. Will you say he did not say it? A. I don't recollect that he said it.

Q. Well, will you say he did not say that? A. How am I to say that? If you will—

Q. I don't know, Sir; I ask you; I am questioning you—not you me. A. My impression is that he did not say it; I cannot— How can I—

Q. Do you mean by that, that that is your recollection? A. That is what I mean.

Q. Yes, Sir; I am content. A. My impression is, also, that this clause, "Now, as to her character, I know it and believe in it and vouch for it—" my recollection of that is that, "Now, as to her character, I think I know it and believe in it;" not "believe in it;" I don't remember "believe in it." I remember the word "vouch;" and I don't remember the hisses; and my memory with regard to the other is, "I would rather be —," "It may be that she is a fanatic; it may be I am a fool." My recollection of that is that he said "It may be that she is a fanatic and a fool." "But before high Heaven I would rather be both fanatic and fool in one than be such a coward as would deny to a woman the sacred right of free speech." My recollection of that was that, "to be such a coward as would refuse to ask from an audience for a woman the right of freedom of speech." "I desire to say that, five minutes ago, I did not expect to appear here;" I do not recollect that. "Allow me the privilege of saying that, with as much pride as ever prompted me to the performance of any act within fifteen or twenty years, I have the honor of introducing to you Victoria Woodhull, who will address you on the subject of social freedom." I don't remember his saying that: "Allow me the privilege of saying that, with as much pride as ever prompted me to the performance of any act within fifteen or twenty years."

Q. You mean to say that you qualify it by putting in fifteen or twenty years? A. No—"allow me the privilege of saying that, with as much pride as ever prompted me to the performance of any act within fifteen or twenty years—" my recollection of the fact is only that, "I have the honor of introducing to you Victoria Woodhull." Then, I don't remember, "who will address you on the subject of social freedom."

Q. You don't remember that clause? A. No, I don't remember that clause; I am giving you my recollection of it.

Q. Now, will you say that he did not say, "now, as to her character, I know it, and believe it, and vouch for it—" ? Will you swear that he did not use that language? A. My impression is, Sir, that he did not say "I believe in it;" I remember his saying "I know it," and I remember the word "vouch"—that I am giving from my recollection of it.

Q. Now, will you say that he did not close his speech by saying: "I have the honor of introducing to you Victoria C. Woodhull, who will address you upon the subject of social freedom?" A. I won't say that he did not say it; I say that I don't recollect that he said that.

Q. Well, that purports to be a stenographic report of his speech, doesn't it?

Mr. Beach—That I object to.

Q. Now, Mr. Moulton, that speech that you dictated to Mr. White, did he write down? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Did you give it to him? A. Did I give it to him? No, I kept it.

Q. Kept it in your possession? A. I kept it; yes, Sir.

Q. Have you ever seen what purported to be a manuscript of Mr. Tilton's speech in his hands within a day or two? A. Never, Sir. There was a party present when I dictated it, Mr. Tracy.

Mr. Tracy—I didn't ask you that.

Judge Neilson—Well, it was proper, because otherwise he would leave us under the impression that Mr. White was the only person there, and presently it would appear as if it were a contradiction, when it appeared somebody else was there. Therefore, I think the suggestion was proper on the part of the witness.

The Witness—Yes, Sir, I thought it was proper.

Mr. Evarts—If your Honor please, as it was not an answer to any question, and as while cross-examining counsel has possession of the witness, they are entitled that he should say nothing that is not an answer to the question, although it is quite immaterial in this particular instance, yet —

Judge Neilson—I don't think that rule would exclude an innocent observation of that kind, which naturally might occur to any witness.

Mr. Evarts—I don't mean that it would call for reproach, but certainly it cannot be the interposition of evidence, at the will of the witness, whether it is important or unimportant, while he is under cross-examination.

Mr. Beach—I think it is proper for the witness, Sir, to relieve himself from misapprehension.

Judge Neilson—I think it was proper; at any rate, it was a very natural thing that any witness might do.

Mr. Evarts—That might be, we have made no animadversion upon it whatever.

MOULTON CONTRADICTS GEN. TRACY.

Q. You referred to an interview at the Fifth Avenue Hotel, where you say I was present and Gen. Butler? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. And you say that you did not present certain papers to the Committee because I requested you not to? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Will you state what papers I requested you not to present? A. What papers you requested me not to present? You requested me not to make my statement.

Q. I will ask you this question. Was not the only papers that I requested you not to present, or spoke to you on the subject of not presenting to the Committee, or to the public, that was in your statement, the letter of Mrs. Hooker to her brother, Mr. John Hooker's letter to his wife, and Thomas K. Beecher's letter to his sister? A. No, Sir; they were not the only letters.

Q. They were not? A. No, Sir; they were not.

Q. Did I not on that occasion and on other occasions say to you, when speaking of those letters, that I did not see how any honorable man could make those letters public? A. No, Sir; you didn't.

Q. I never said that to you? A. No, Sir, you didn't.

Q. Did you not say to me, in answer to that, that those letters had been given to you by Mr. Beecher in connection with his case, and was not my reply that I didn't see how either you or Mr. Beecher could take the responsibility of making the private letters written to him, and the private letter of a husband to his wife, and the private letter of a brother to his sister, public, without the consent of the writers? A. I don't recollect that you ever said anything of the kind, Mr. Tracy. It was not until the Saturday night previous that those letters were to go into the statement, the night before you saw Gen. Butler at the Fifth Avenue Hotel. They were not in the statement, therefore, the night before.

Q. I don't ask you what was in your statement, or what was out of it; I am asking what I said and what reply you made to me? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Now, do you say that it was determined at the Fifth Avenue Hotel, that night, that you should not present your statement to the Committee? A. I say that it was determined —

Mr. Tracy—Please answer my question.

Mr. Beach—He is not bound to answer it yes or no.

The Witness—I cannot answer it, your Honor, yes or no, without an explanation.

Judge Neilson—Go on, I think he may answer it.

Mr. Tracy—What did your Honor say?

Judge Neilson—I think he may proceed.

Mr. Tracy—I ask him a direct question, which I submit admits of a direct answer, yes or no.

The Witness—I cannot answer it yes or no, without an explanation.

Judge Neilson—[To the witness.] That you have a right to give on your re-direct, and we will explain it afterwards.

Mr. Beach—This question calls for precise language, precise words, and the witness may answer the substance without giving the language which was then used as near as he remembers.

Judge Neilson—That is the general rule, no doubt, still [to the witness] let us see what your answer is.

The Witness—What is the question?

Mr. Tracy—Read the question, Mr. Stenographer.

THE TRIBUNE stenographer read the question.

The Witness—It was determined that there should be a consultation with reference to not presenting it at that time.

Q. And that consultation was had the next morning, was it not? A. Yes, Sir; the next day, and at my house.

Q. With people whom you brought there? A. Yes, Sir; with people whom I brought there.

Q. For the purpose of determining your action as to whether you should present your statement to the Committee, or not? A. For the purpose of finally determining it.

Q. Who was present then? A. William C. Kingsley, Franklin Woodruff, my father and my wife.

Q. I was absent? A. You were not there. You didn't come to the house until after the short statement was made.

Q. Was not the subject of what you were to state before the Committee that afternoon, there deliberated upon, and determined in that conversation? A. Yes, Sir; it was.

Q. So far as you know, do you know that I had any knowledge of what your action was to be that afternoon, whether in presenting or withholding that report, until you made your appearance in the presence of the Committee? A. I don't think you knew what the final action was to be. You knew what you wanted it to be, though.

Mr. Tracy—I submit that is a remark—

Judge Neilson—Strike out that last clause. It was not called for in the reply to your question, Mr. Tracy.

Mr. Tracy—Ought it not to be accompanied with an admonition to the witness that he should not volunteer anything?

Judge Neilson—No, Sir, because he has been here six or eight or ten days burdened and tortured by both sides, therefore I shall not admonish him. [To the witness.] Answer the question simply the counsel has put.

Q. Did I ever ask you in the world to withhold from your statement or any statement of yours to the Committee any paper that Henry Ward Beecher had ever written to you on the subject? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Was not my request or suggestion to you on the subject confined entirely to private papers of other people which had not been written by him? A. No, Sir.

Q. You said in answer to counsel yesterday that you were not in sympathy with Mrs. Woodhull's sentiments on the marriage relation. Do you mean by that that you do not agree with her on that subject? A. I don't think I agree with her on that subject; no, Sir.

Q. Will you state to us what your views are? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. On the subject of the marriage relation? A. I believe in fidelity to your wife and in your wife's fidelity to you, and if you are not faithful to your wife, that you do wrong, that you ought to be punished for it severely; and if your wife is not faithful to you she ought to be punished for it severely; that is as near as I can get at it.

Q. What is your belief on the subject of divorce? A. On the subject of divorce?

Mr. Tracy—I don't suppose that properly comes in.

The Witness—I have not reached a conclusion on that subject, the laws are so various in all the States, and there is so much to be said on that subject I really don't—

Q. Have you read The Golden Age on that subject? A. Have I ever read The Golden Age on that subject?

Q. Yes, Sir. A. I think I have; I don't know.

Q. Have you talked to Mr. Tilton on the subject of divorce? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Do you and he agree in sentiment on the subject? A. I don't know that we do exactly. I don't know exactly what his sentiments are. He has not arrived at a conclusion, I guess, in regard to it yet.

Q. Did you ever read his article to Horace Greeley on the subject of divorce? A. I forget whether I ever did or not; I don't remember. If you will point it out to me perhaps I can tell you.

Q. Will you tell wherein you differ with Mr. Tilton on the subject of marriage and divorce?

Mr. Fullerton—He says he does not know Mr. Tilton's sentiments on that subject; therefore he cannot tell the difference between his own sentiments and those he don't know anything about.

The Witness—I could not state to you Mr. Tilton's sentiments. He is a rigid monogamist, that I know; too much so, I think.

Q. Have you not read The Golden Age, and what has appeared on that subject from Mr. Tilton from time to time? A. I don't think I read all of it. I don't read very much; I cannot: my eyes are not good enough.

Q. Did you read his article to Horace Greeley on that subject? A. I cannot say. If you let me look at it I can tell you. [To Mr. Beach.]—Is it right for me to look at it?

Mr. Beach—Yes, gain all the information you can.

The Witness—I read some portion of this, Sir, I think.

Mr. Tracy—You read some portion of that article? A. Yes, Sir, I think I did.

Mr. Tracy—Now, I read and ask you if you agree with this?

Mr. Fullerton—I object to it.

Mr. Evarts—Why?

Mr. Fullerton—Because it is improper.

Judge Neilson [to Mr. Tracy]—Let me hear your views about it, Mr. Tracy, how it is proper.

Mr. Tracy—He has said he did not sympathize with Mrs. Woodhull on the subject of divorce; he says he don't know fully what Mr. Tilton's views are on that subject, and he don't know whether he agrees with him or not. I desire to ask him whether that has not been the subject of conversation between himself and Tilton, and whether they do not agree in that particular.

Judge Neilson—Is that a re-examination?

Mr. Tracy—I think it is, your Honor. They introduced the evidence of what his sentiments were on the subject of marriage and divorce.

Judge Neilson—As to his sympathizing with that woman and her views?

Mr. Tracy—And he said he did not. We are showing he did.

Mr. Fullerton—Those are not her views.

Mr. Tracy—I don't know that.

Mr. Fullerton—Then, if you don't know that, you ought not to ask him.

Mr. Tracy—We will get at that.

Judge Neilson—I think I must rule it out, Mr. Tracy.

Mr. Tracy—I offer to read, for the purpose of taking an exception, and I offer to follow it by showing those are the views of Mr. Tilton and Mrs. Woodhull on the subject of marriage and divorce.

Judge Neilson—It is ruled out as not called for or proper as a re-cross-examination.

Mr. Tracy—We offer to show their views are identical—Mr. Tilton's, Mr. Moulton's and Mrs. Woodhull's—on the subject of marriage and divorce.

Mr. Beach—That is a broad and general offer which, of course, cannot be passed upon on that point.

Mr. Tracy—This is a part of that plan of proof.

Mr. Beach—The Judge says he cannot receive it.

Judge Neilson—I cannot receive it.

Mr. Tracy—Your Honor will note our exception.

Q. Have you ever talked with gentlemen on the subject of free love or the marriage relation, or on the subject of social freedom? A. I talked with you once on it, I know.

Q. Did you ever talk with Mr. Armour or Stephen K. Lane on the subject?

Mr. Fullerton—I object to that.

Q. And in which you expressed your belief in the doctrine of free love as publicly understood?

Judge Neilson—Ruled out for the same reason, as immaterial.

Mr. Everts—This is to contradict the witness. He has stated his views.

Judge Neilson—He has stated he did not sympathize with Mrs. Woodhull in her views on that subject.

Mr. Everts—For all that, he has given his views, which are somewhat rigid.

Judge Neilson—On your cross-examination?

Mr. Everts—I agree; and now we ask him if he has not said the opposite, and named witnesses, by whom we expect to contradict him.

Judge Neilson—It cannot be received.

Mr. Everts—Your Honor will take our offer.

Judge Neilson—[To the stenographer.] Note the offer and exception.

Mr. Everts—We offer to inquire of him concerning his statement to named witnesses at interviews with them, in which he has given his sentiments on the subject of free love, to the contrary of what he has now declared them on the stand, with a view of calling those witnesses to contradict him.

Judge Neilson—It is ruled out, Sir.

Q. You stated on your re-direct something about the number of people who conversed with you on the subject of the Woodhull scandal after its publication, and you said 15 or 20 a day. For how many days do you think that continued? A. I don't know. I should think, perhaps, a fortnight.

Q. Forty days? A. A fortnight.

Judge Neilson—He said that on his former examination; about two weeks, he said.

Mr. Tracy—That is all with this witness, your Honor.

THE RE-RE-DIRECT EXAMINATION.

The re-re-direct examination was begun.

Mr. Fullerton—Your attention has been called to certain conversations between yourself and Mr. Tracy with regard to this matter, and you have been asked whether you did not say certain things. Now, I ask what you did say to Mr. Tracy on this occasion?

Mr. Tracy—That I object to. I have inquired of no interview that they did not go into.

Judge Neilson—Is that the point where it was suggested he should answer and explain afterwards?

Mr. Fullerton—Yes, Sir; that is strictly within your Honor's ruling yesterday on a similar objection. Of course, we are to presume that they are laying the foundation for an attempted contradiction; and while the witness denies having said certain things, we have a right to prove that he said certain other things.

Judge Neilson—Well, you may ask him that question, I think.

Q. What was said upon those occasions?

Judge Neilson—On the occasion pointed out by Mr. Tracy's question?

Mr. Tracy—They examined about that interview at the Fifth Avenue Hotel fully, and went into all they desired to go into about it; and he stated that he withheld these papers at my request. Now, I ask him simply if the only papers I asked him to withhold, or requested him to withhold, were not certain definite papers which I named. It is the only inquiry.

Judge Neilson—... that he says no.

Mr. Fullerton—Now, I wish to know the balance of the conversation.

Mr. Beach—That was not the only inquiry. Certainly counsel examined him as to the point whether or not the statement was settled on at that time, but not on any conversation—asked him in regard to the contents of the statement.

Mr. Tracy—At his own house, at which I was not present?

Mr. Fullerton—At the Fifth Avenue Hotel.

Mr. Tracy—A. No, Sir; except so far as I asked him. The only request I made to him was on the subject of certain definite papers?

Judge Neilson—That is my recollection now; and the question is whether they cannot ask him what he really said. I think they may.

Mr. Tracy—On the subject of this paper.

Judge Neilson—On the subject of this inquiry.

Mr. Tracy—Then it will be limited to the subject of this particular paper.

Judge Neilson—That particular occasion when he says you did not simply ask him to retain certain papers; the inquiry now is what he did say on that occasion.

Mr. Everts—Your Honor will notice we do not introduce that conversation. We cross-examined only in reference to their previous examination of him, and only cross-examined on this particular point. That certainly does not give any right to resume the whole interview as we can see, nor do I understand your Honor so to rule.

Judge Neilson—I still think he may answer the question.

The Witness—What is the question?

(THE TRIBUNE stenographer read the question.)

Mr. Tracy—Confine yourself to the occasion inquired of. That is the occasion of the Fifth Avenue Hotel?

Mr. Fullerton—That is one of them.

Mr. Tracy—Let us take one conversation at a time, and see what reply we will get.

Mr. Fullerton—You are asking about what I know. We will get it out in our own way.

Mr. Tracy—I asked no question which called for that retort. This inquiry relates to the conversation at the hotel. Your Honor will note our exception to the admission of our interview.

The Witness—I said to Gen. Butler at that interview, "I have brought Mr. Tracy to you to determine with regard to this statement. Mr. Tracy has said to me he did not want me to make this statement; I want to do exactly that which is honorable in the premises. I wish you and Mr. Tracy would talk it over. Mr. Tracy sat down and talked it over with Mr. Butler, and said to Gen. Butler, in my presence, that he thought the letters and documents of Mr. Beecher ought not to be produced in my statement; and that is the substance of the conversation as I remember it at that time; and when Gen. Tracy went away I saw Gen. Butler, and he said Gen. Tracy's idea was——"

Mr. Fullerton—You need not state what Mr. Butler said in Mr. Tracy's absence. Now, go to the occasion referred to by Mr. Tracy's examination of you.

Mr. Tracy—What was that occasion?

Judge Neilson—Where was that occasion?

The Witness—Mr. Tracy did not name it.

Mr. Beach—The occasion at Mr. Moulton's house, when Mr. Tracy inquired of him whether it was upon that occasion that the form of statement was finally agreed upon.

Judge Neilson—That was an occasion when he was not present.

Mr. Beach—That makes no difference. The witness says it was finally agreed upon. We want to know why it was agreed upon, and how it was agreed upon.

Judge Neilson—I think we must leave it as it is. Mr. Tracy was not present.

Mr. Fullerton—Do you recollect an interview in the back room when the Committee was sitting in Mr. Storrs's house, when you went to present your statement? A. I remember Mr. Tracy was there when I presented a statement.

Mr. Evarts—We object to that on the ground that it is not any part of our re-cross-examination.

Mr. Fullerton—Mr. Tracy asked the witness whether at any time before the statement was presented to the Committee he (Tracy) knew what the statement was to be.

Mr. Tracy—With his knowledge.

Mr. Fullerton—I know that, and what I now ask him is to try and draw his attention to an interview between him and Mr. Tracy at another place, in the back room where the Committee sat, at which time Mr. Moulton stated to Mr. Tracy what his statement was, and Mr. Tracy approved of it. That is a direct answer to the inquiry which was put by Mr. Tracy.

Mr. Evarts—Then we asked him a general question, and he answered it.

Mr. Beach—We try to show he is mistaken by calling his attention to an interview.

Mr. Evarts—And now they say, having asked him the general question and getting a general negative, that that gives him a right to go into all interviews and conversations that they may wish to explore to prove he has been incorrect in that statement. We don't go into that.

Mr. Tracy—The question stands in this way. The witness testified on his direct examination that it was determined at the Fifth Avenue Hotel, at my request, that his statement should be withheld. On his cross-examination he testified that it was determined at a conversation at his own house, at which I was not present, the ensuing day. Then I asked him the question whether he had any knowledge that I knew, prior to his appearance at Mr. Storrs's, before the Committee on that day, what his statement was to be, and he said he had no such knowledge.

The Witness (to Judge Neilson)—That is just the point on which I wished to make an explanation in my answer, if your Honor please. It was not finally determined; Mr. Tracy did not know what the final determination was to be.

Mr. Beach—The witness has corrected that misstatement of Gen. Tracy. The point is just this: Mr. Tracy has extracted from this witness the answer that he (Tracy) did not know of the statement of Mr. Moulton until after or at the time he appeared before the Committee. We believe that that was a mistaken answer upon the part of the witness; and for the purpose of refreshing his recollection, and enabling him to correct that answer, we, in our re-direct examination, call his attention to an interview between him and Mr. Tracy, in which Mr. Tracy was informed of the very fact which, on cross-examination, the witness has mistakenly answered he did not know. Now, is there any rule——

Judge Neilson—That is a correction the witness has a right to make, of course.

Mr. Beach—Certainly.

Mr. Tracy—According to the question put, it is after his appearance before the Committee.

Mr. Beach—No, it is not.

Judge Neilson—Well, I think we will hear the correction.

Mr. Tracy—Your Honor will note my exception.

The Witness—I saw Mr. Tracy in the Committee room before I made the report to the Committee, and told him I had in my statement only presented the documents quoted by Theodore Tilton in his statement.

Q. What reply did he make to that?

Mr. Tracy—I object to that, your Honor.

Judge Neilson—That covers the point that Mr. Tracy didn't know.

Mr. Fullerton—His reply might indicate very clearly that he knew, and understood and comprehended it, and approbated it.

Judge Neilson—This indicates it clearly enough.

THE RE-RE-CROSS-EXAMINATION.

The re-re-cross-examination then took place.

Mr. Tracy—That was in the Committee room, you say? A. In the Committee room, I think; yes, Sir.

Q. And in the presence of the Committee? A. In the parlor. I forgot they knew it. When I say "the Committee room" I mean Mr. Storrs's house.

Q. In the parlor? A. They were in the back parlor, and I think you came out in the front parlor.

Q. Did you come into the room? A. I think so.

Q. Then you, for the first time, informed me what your report was to be? A. I think so; yes, Sir.

Q. That is your short statement, is it not, that you submitted to the Committee that day? A. The time at which I presented to the Committee the documents quoted by Theodore Tilton in the statement.

Q. What day of the month was that? A. I don't recollect the day of the month.

Q. It was your statement before the Committee, not what is known as your long statement? A. No, Sir; that was not made until after Mr. Beecher made his.

Q. Not either of your long statements? A. It was not either of my long statements.

Judge Neilson—It was not either of those papers you said Gen. Butler prepared? A. No, Sir; it was a modification of the first statement Gen. Butler prepared. The meeting in my house, I would like to explain, was in consequence of the meeting at the Fifth Avenue Hotel between Mr. Tracy and Gen. Butler and myself, and Gen. Butler told Mr. Tracy that there would be a conference at my house the next day, and promised that he would present the views of Mr. Tracy at the meeting next day at my house. Mr. Woodruff was in favor of making the report, and my wife was in favor of withholding it, and it was determined to withhold it.

Mr. Evarts—I move to strike that out.

Judge Neilson—I think not; that is explanation.

Mr. Evarts—This is every conversation between him and General Butler outside of the time Gen. Tracy was there.

Judge Neilson—They don't object to that, of course; it was understood the night before, there was to be conference next morning on this subject. The next morning there was a conference held. What General Butler said and what Mr. Woodruff said ought to be stricken out, of course.

Mr. Evarts—If your Honor will pardon me for being somewhat explicit here, I ask to strike out all that this witness has given not in response to any question, but which is a volunteer statement on the ground that it is not admissible evidence, especially from the fact of its not being drawn out by any question of ours. Now, the parties on the part of the plaintiff sought to introduce a conversation, or the witness sought to introduce before, a conversation between General Butler and himself when Gen. Tracy was not present, which was promptly rejected by my learned friend. I understand what he has now voluntarily said is exactly what he was going to say then.

Mr. Beach—I suggest to Mr. Evarts, Sir, that he is mistaken in regard to what the witness said concerning the declaration of Mr. Butler that there should be a consultation next morning. That was in the presence of Mr. Tracy.

The Witness—That is the point exactly.

Judge Neilson—The general statement is received by way of explanation, to show that the purpose of the night before was carried out, except that Mr. Tracy was not present.

The Witness—That is it exactly, Sir.

Judge Neilson—But the words on that occasion said by Mr. Woodruff and by Mr. Moulton are stricken out. Now, that is all by this witness, I understand.

Mr. Beach—Yes, Sir.

Judge Neilson—Mr. Moulton, you can retire.

Mr. Evarts—Your Honor will note our exception to the motion to strike it all out.

Judge Neilson—Yes, Sir.

TESTIMONY OF MRS. MARTHA A. BRADSHAW

Martha E. Bradshaw, called and sworn on behalf of the plaintiff.

By Mr. Fullerton—Mrs. Bradshaw, where do you reside? A. 485 Henry-st.

Q. In this city? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. How long have you resided in Brooklyn? A. About 23 years.

Q. Please state your husband's name? A. Andrew Bradshaw.

Q. Is he engaged in business? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Where, please? A. I think it is now in—

Q. In what city? A. In New York.

Q. Were you ever connected with Plymouth Church? A. Yes, Sir; I am still.

Q. As a communicant? Yes, Sir; my name is still on the roll on the book.

Mr. Evarts—If your Honor please, we have great difficulty in hearing the witness.

Judge Neilson—Yes, Sir; the lady must speak louder, and will, I hope.

Mr. Fullerton—There is a little disturbance in the room.

Judge Neilson—It is quite necessary that gentlemen should be very quiet, in order to enable the counsel to hear the witness, and the jury to hear the witness, which is the vital thing just now.

Q. How long have you been connected with Plymouth Church? A. I have attended there about 22 years, I think.

Q. How long a communicant of the church? A. Perhaps it was a year or two after I began to attend there before I united with the church. I cannot give the date exactly.

Judge Neilson—Which would make about twenty years?

Mr. Fullerton—That would be it, Sir. If they wish I will repeat the answers of the witness. "Perhaps it was a year or two after I began to attend."

The Witness—I think it was longer than that.

Q. About how much longer? A. I cannot tell exactly.

Q. And I understand you that your name is on the roll still? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. When did you last commune at the church?

Mr. Shearman—To that we object, if your Honor please. I don't see what that has to do with this case.

Judge Neilson—No, I don't see.

Mr. Fullerton—Very well; I will not put it then. [To the witness.] Were you connected with the Sunday-school of the church in any way? A. Yes, Sir; I am still.

Q. In what capacity? A. As teacher.

Q. And how long have you been a teacher of the Sunday school, or connected with that church? A. Eighteen years.

Q. Do you know Theodore Tilton? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. And Elizabeth R. Tilton, his wife? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. How long have you known them? A. About twenty years.

Q. Have the two families exchanged visits? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. What degree of intimacy existed between your family and that of Mr. Tilton? A. Mrs. Tilton, during that time, has been my most intimate friend.

Q. "Mrs. Tilton, during that time, has been my most intimate friend?"

Judge Neilson—You will continue that as far as it agrees—able. Here is a request from some reporter that you will. As far as it is agreeable repeat the answers.

Mr. Fullerton—I will as long as it is agreeable to my learned adversaries.

Q. Were visits exchanged between the two families? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. How frequently? A. Very frequently. I have been there myself generally two or three times a week.

Q. And how often did Mrs. Tilton visit you? A. Not so often.

Q. How long did that intimacy and these friendly visits continue? A. They always have until within a very short time.

Q. Do you know Henry Ward Beecher? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. How long have you known him? A. About 23 years.

Q. Did you become intimately acquainted with him? A. No, Sir; not very intimately.

Q. Did he call at your house ever? A. He has occasionally.

Q. How frequently? A. Very seldom.

Q. Making friendly or pastoral visits? A. Social visits.

Q. And did you call at his house? A. I have been there many times.

Q. Many times? A. No, not many.

THE WEST CHARGES AGAINST TILTON.

Q. Do you know William F. West? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Do you know the fact that he preferred charges against Theodore Tilton for having slandered Henry Ward Beecher?

Mr. Evarts—That we object to, if your Honor please, as an improper question. If there is any fact they wish to ask her about, any paper or document or anything, of course she is competent to speak concerning that identical thing. This description we object to.

Mr. Fullerton—I ask her if she knew the fact that such charges were made?

Judge Neilson—I think you should modify that question. Does she know the fact that the charges were made, without specifying what they are?

Mr. Fullerton—I will do it in that way. [To the witness]: Do you know the fact that charges were made by Mr. West against Mr. Tilton for slandering Henry Ward Beecher?

Mr. Evarts—No; that is the point that we object to.

Mr. Shearman—I desire that this witness should be instructed; this lady has probably never been on the witness stand before; that she should be instructed that she is to speak of her personal knowledge.

Judge Neilson—Yes, Sir.

Mr. Beach—It is an introductory question, as a foundation for a further question.

Judge Neilson—Yes; but the counsel desires you to omit the statement of the contents of the charges.

Mr. Fullerton—I know, Sir, but I am not disposed, unless I am instructed by the Court, to conform to that request.

Judge Neilson—All you want is the fact that she knows that charges were made by Mr. West.

Mr. Fullerton—And because I want to know it I ask the question.

Mr. Beach—Will the stenographer read the question?

THE TRIBUNE stenographer read the question as follows: "Do you know the fact that charges were made by Mr. West against Mr. Tilton for slandering Henry Ward Beecher?"

Judge Neilson—Now, if you will omit "for slandering Henry Ward Beecher" the question is allowed. Strike those words out.

Mr. Fullerton—If I had put the question, leaving those words out, my adversaries would have objected to it for good reason.

Judge Neilson—I don't know.

Mr. Evarts—You certainly give us good reasons now.

Mr. Beach—Well, Sir, we want—

Mr. Evarts—Let it pass.

Mr. Beach—No, Sir; I won't let it pass. We want to know whether the charges which Mr. West preferred against Mr. Tilton were connected with Mr. Beecher, for an introduction to the question to be presented to this lady, whether in consequence of those charges she had a communication with Mr. Beecher in relation to them.

Judge Neilson—Now, I assume that only one set of charges was preferred by Mr. West, and I think the learned counsel can learn whether she remembers or was aware that charges were presented by Mr. West. That opens the door for the subsequent interview between them without inquiring into the contents.

Mr. Fullerton—Did you ever see the charges, or what purported to be the charges, of Mr. West against Mr. Tilton? A. After they were made.

Q. Were you asked to be a witness? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. For the purpose of proving those charges?

Mr. Shearman—To that we object? It does not appear by whom she was asked.

Mr. Fullerton—No, it does not.

Judge Neilson—We will take the general fact. It goes to show that her attention was called to the subject. Will gentlemen be quiet, please?

Q. Would you recognize, do you think—

Mr. Beach—She has answered that.

THE TRIBUNE stenographer read the question and answer as follows:

Q. Were you asked to be a witness? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. For the purpose of proving those charges?

Q. Were you asked to be a witness for the purpose of proving those charges? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Would you recognize the charges if you saw them? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Look at the paper which I now hand you, and after reading it or glancing at it, say whether those are the charges which you saw? [Handing witness a paper.] A. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Evarts—We understand that that paper she saw.

Mr. Fullerton—No.

Mr. Evarts—Well, that is what we want to know.

Mr. Fullerton—I did not ask her that. This is "Exhibit 29."

Judge Neilson—You asked her if she recognized those as the charges.

Mr. Fullerton—Yes, Sir.

Judge Neilson—What does she say to that? I think she may answer that.

Mr. Fullerton—She has answered that; she says that she does recognize it as the charges.

Mr. Evarts—Unless they call her attention to the paper, and the answer has connection with the paper, I think it is objectionable. If this is the paper that she speaks of, then that is another matter.

Mr. Fullerton—I did not ask the lady whether this is the paper that she saw.

Mr. Evarts—Now, if your Honor please, you cannot hand the witness a paper that is not identified by the witness or anybody else, and refresh a witness's recollection by a strange paper and have her say: "Why, those are the charges, I remember." You have a right to ask her whether those charges, to wit, this very statement of them, she recognizes as having known of.

Judge Neilson—She recognized the statement?

Mr. Evarts—Yes, Sir.

Judge Neilson—The vital thing not being whether it is the same paper, or not?

Mr. Evarts—Well, that is the difficulty in the way of evidence.

Judge Neilson—We have been driven to that several times in the course of the case.

Mr. Evarts—That paper has not been identified in any way as ever having been seen by the witness before.

The Witness—[To Mr. Fullerton.] That is what I understood you to mean, Sir, what is there stated.

Mr. Fullerton—That is just what I asked you.

Mr. Evarts—This paper?

Mr. Fullerton—No; what is there stated.

Mr. Evarts—Don't animadvert upon me.

Mr. Fullerton—No; I am not animadverting upon you. I am emphasizing what the witness says.

Mr. Evarts—Emphasize to the Court and jury.

Judge Neilson—You except?

Mr. Evarts—We except, unless it is understood to apply to the paper itself.

Q. Now, Mrs. Bradshaw, after having seen those charges, and after having been requested to become a witness to prove them, did you have any communication with Mr. Beecher? A. Yes, Sir; I did.

Q. Was it a verbal communication, or by letter? A. By letter.

Q. Did you write to Mr. Beecher? A. I did, Sir.

BRISK TILTS BETWEEN COUNSEL.

Mr. Fullerton—Gentlemen, notice has been given to you, I believe, to produce that letter, and I now call upon you to produce it.

Mr. Evarts—The notice was given to me orally, here in Court, since the Court commenced.

Mr. Morris—Not orally—in writing.

Mr. Evarts—I beg your pardon. It was handed to us, and we have not had time to produce that paper.

Judge Neilson—The notice is too short unless it was covered by a prior notice—a former notice.

Mr. Shearman—No, your Honor, it was not.

Mr. Morris—We have been exchanging notices during the trial on both sides.

Judge Neilson—The notice is as good as any paper here, although only made here.

Mr. Evarts—Exactly, as to anything we have it is good, but we have not had any opportunity to examine to see whether we have it.

Mr. Shearman—I will say to your Honor that if I had the paper with me, I think I should know it, and I should produce it immediately. I have not that paper here, and I have not had an opportunity to go to Mr. Beecher's house.

Judge Neilson—I assume that you have not had an opportunity.

Mr. Beach—I think an hour and a half is time enough to send to Mr. Beecher's house.

Mr. Evarts—To look for papers?

Mr. Beach—To look for papers. There is to be no grand examination for the purpose of finding this letter. Mr. Beecher could at once refer to it upon his files if he kept it.

Judge Neilson—Gentlemen, suppose you pass to some other topic. This would be a good notice at two o'clock.

Mr. Evarts—So we understand.

Mr. Fullerton—Did you preserve a copy of the letter which you sent to Mr. Beecher? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Look at the paper now shown you and say whether it is the copy that you preserved? [handing witness a paper.] A. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Fullerton—Shall I read it in evidence or not, subject to having the original substituted?

Judge Neilson—No. Mark it for identification for the present, and hold it until two o'clock.

Mr. Evarts—Then we will make further answer on the subject of the search.

Mr. Shearman—Suppose you admit the printed copy.

Mr. Fullerton—No; you have established the precedent. Those things come home to roost very often.

Mr. Evarts—There is nothing here to roost about.

Mr. Fullerton—You are off of the roost.

Mr. Evarts—We want to look for this paper, and we have a perfect right to say so.

Mr. Fullerton—That is what we did say.

Mr. Evarts—No; you said something about coming home to roost.

Mr. Fullerton—We want to remind our adversaries that the word we now use is one of their own getting up.

Mr. Evarts—There is no difficulty at all.

Judge Neilson—No, Sir.

Mr. Beach—But the counsel referred to the goose and the gander, and it naturally reminds us of the roost, and we therefore say that.

Judge Neilson—The gentleman has been quoting Shakespeare and not choosing the best parts of it. [Laughter.]

Mr. Shearman—I will say that I only did that out of courtesy to the gentlemen on the other side, for the purpose of finding the paper, because the fact is that the description given me is so vague that it is only by some intuition that I can ever find this letter at all.

Mr. Fullerton—I can give the date.

Mr. Shearman—I don't want it.

Mr. Fullerton—But you must have it. It is October 4, 1873.

Mr. Shearman—Their notice does not cover any such letter, your Honor, and it shows how a little courtesy on the part of counsel might be profitable to themselves.

Mr. Fullerton—Ah! that is a lesson you should have learned yesterday.

Mr. Beach—We fear the Greeks, Sir, bearing gifts.

Mr. Fullerton—If the notice is insufficient, we will remedy that by giving—

Mr. Beach—Well, they have got the notice now.

Mr. Evarts—Yes, we have got it now for the first time; we never had it before.

Judge Neilson—Yes, it is so understood.

Mr. Beach—What is the notice?

Mr. Morris—The notice is wrong as to the date, but it refers to the substance.

Mr. Shearman—How do we know but there may be a hundred letters of Mrs. Bradshaw?

Mr. Evarts—They have given a notice to produce a letter of a different date. They would have to correct that notice, which they now have done.

Mr. Fullerton—Their attention has been called to the substance of it. The date, under the circumstances, was very unimportant.

Judge Neilson—You can resume this branch of the subject at two o'clock, when they will probably produce the letter.

Mr. Fullerton—I cannot go any further with the witness.

Mr. Beach—Yes, we can put in the letter of Mr. Beecher, and we can put in the copy if they do not produce the original.

Mr. Fullerton—I don't want to put in the letter of Mr. Beecher first.

Judge Neilson—Could not you save time, gentlemen, by using the copy?

The Witness—It is an exact copy, and was written before the letter was sent.

Mr. Fullerton—Look at the paper now shown you, and say whether it is a reply of Mr. Beecher to the letter which you sent to him? [Handing witness a paper.] A. Yes, Sir.

Letter marked "Ex. 66 for identification."

TILTON'S FAMILY ORDINARILY HAPPY.

Q. Now, Mrs. Bradshaw, you have told us that you were intimate in Mr. Tilton's family. I wish to ask you about the degree of affection which existed in that family between the husband and the wife, as manifested in their daily intercourse, when you were present? A. I always considered them an ordinarily happy family.

Q. "I always considered them an ordinarily happy family." Did I understand you correctly? A. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Evarts—An ordinarily happy family.

Mr. Fullerton—Yes, Sir. [To the witness.] And that judgment was based upon observation while you were there, was it? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. What was the general character and disposition of Mrs. Tilton in her family? A. Most delicate and refined and sweet-minded in every way. No one could know her and not love her.

Q. And up to what time was this degree of affection manifested, in this family, that you have spoken of? A. I never knew of any serious trouble until within three or four years—three years perhaps.

Mr. Fullerton—That is all with the witness.

Judge Neilson—Then you will resume with this witness at two o'clock?

Mr. Beach—No, Sir.

Mr. Fullerton—No, Sir, we are through with her.

Mr. Evarts—We will cross-examine her when the paper is produced.

Judge Neilson—Is this copy of the letter in by consent?

Mr. Beach—No, Sir; the copy of the letter is proven. If they produce the original and furnish it, we will introduce that with the reply; if not, we will introduce the copy. There is no occasion for the suspension of this cross-examination.

Judge Neilson—Then go on.

Mr. Fullerton—There is one other question I will ask. [To the witness.] Is that the envelope in which Mr. Beecher's letter to you was sent? [Handing witness an envelope.] A. Yes, Sir.

Marked "Ex. 63, for identification."

Mr. Evarts—If you will show us that letter we will see about it.

Mr. Fullerton—The copy?

Mr. Evarts—Yes, Sir.

A NEW LETTER OF BEECHER'S, ADVISING SILENCE.

Mr. Evarts—If your Honor please, this copy, this lady gives a very trustworthy account of it—I mean in respect of accuracy; and we shall be able to correct it if there happens to be any discrepancy.

Mr. Beach—You consent then to our reading it, substituting it for the original?

Mr. Evarts—Yes, Sir; referring to the original if we find any occasion to do so.

Mr. Fullerton—I read first the letter of Mrs. Bradshaw:

BROOKLYN, October 4, 1873.

Mr. Beecher:

DEAR FRIEND: I want very much, if you are willing, to have a few words with you in regard to the statement which I, in good faith, consented to make before the Church Committee in your behalf and Elizabeth's, for I felt that my intimacy with her and my love for her and for you gave me a right to speak in her vindication. I could not and would not believe that you had been otherwise than basely calumniated. Now, Mr. and Mrs. Tilton come and warn me not to do it, if I value your welfare; and refer me to you for advice in the matter. I shall be governed entirely by what you say, for I would part with my right hand sooner than to destroy the love and confidence which is reposed in you all over the world. Will you see me for a few moments here or wherever you may appoint. Or, must I accept Theodore's awful story for truth. Do mitigate it, be it ever so little, if you can. Elizabeth has never made any confessions to me. God knows that I do not seek an interview from any motives of morbid curiosity; the subject is too painful for that. Believe me, you have no sincerer friend than

M. A. BRADSHAW.

Please do not send a verbal answer by Mr. Halliday, to whom I intrust this note; because I do not wish to intrude at your house. Of course I do not wish to see you if you prefer otherwise; but send me a line in reply, if you do not come, that I may know what to do, for I cannot take the word of any other person in this matter.
M. A. B.

[Letter marked as read.]

I now read the reply of Mr. Beecher:

Confidential.

OCTOBER 7, 1873.

MY DEAR FRIEND: I thank you for your cordial and sympathizing note, and accept your expressions of confidence and affection; and I need not say to you how sincerely I reciprocate them. In regard to the matter of which you speak, let me say frankly that I think you will do the greatest good to all parties concerned by pursuing the course which I have done from the first, namely, refusing to allow the public to meddle with domestic and private affairs. It is impossible ever to bring domestic matters, complicated by elements which cannot be stated or understood, and without which all explanations will be barren, into public without doing a deal more harm than good. To be left absolutely alone is the sure and safe remedy; and, in this case, whatever difficulties have arisen have been amicably adjusted by those most deeply concerned. I know very well that the impulse of affection leads a generous nature to wish to fly to a friend's succor; and I am sure that you would not spare yourself any pains to help those who need you. But, happily, the best help you can give is to continue to love and trust those whom you have always trusted, and to refuse to have any hand in giving mischievous publicity to private affairs, even by allowing them to be discussed in your presence.

With sincere affection, old and new, I remain,

Very truly yours, HENRY WARD BEECHER.

MRS. MATTIE BRADSHAW.

The envelope is addressed: "Mrs. M. A. Bradshaw, 485 Henry-st., Brooklyn."

[Letter and envelope marked as read.]

Mr. Fullerton—I will ask you this further question: Did you appear before the Committee to give evidence? A. No, Sir.

CROSS-EXAMINATION OF MRS. BRADSHAW.

The cross-examination was then begun.

Mr. Shearman—With reference to this paper, designated as Mr. West's charges, did you ever see that precise paper that was shown you by the counsel? A. No, Sir.

Q. Did you ever see any paper of that kind—a paper of that kind? A. No, Sir; I think not.

Q. No? A. I think after he had made his charges, he read them to me to see if he had them correct.

Q. Mr. West read you something?

Mr. Fullerton—No, no; not something; he read his charges?

Q. About what time did he read those charges to you? A. I cannot recollect, Sir, exactly.

Q. Did he ever read them to you before Sept., '73? I mean the charges as stated in that paper. You will be kind enough to let her look at that paper. [Paper handed to witness.] A. I don't recollect the time exactly.

Q. Will you look at that paper and refresh your memory, and say whether you cannot tell us, certainly, that you never saw or heard those charges before September or October, 1873?

A. I don't recollect the time when the matter was under consideration before the Church; that is, what month it was.

Q. How near was it to the time of your writing that letter that you first heard Mr. West read these charges that are in that paper? A. Within a very short time.

Q. That letter was dated the 4th of October, I believe? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. 1873? Were these charges read to you or brought to your notice by Mr. West, these precise charges I mean, before or after you wrote your letter of Oct. 4th, 1873? A. Before that.

Q. And very shortly before? A. Yes, Sir; I should say so.

Q. I understood you to say that Mr. and Mrs. Tilton's family were an ordinarily happy family until three or four years; can't you fix the date any more definitely than that, Mrs. Bradshaw? A. I never knew of any serious unhappiness until after Mrs. Woodhull's publication.

Q. That was in November, 1872? A. Whenever it was.

Q. You have said that Mrs. Tilton was a delicate, refined and sweet minded lady; was she not also a devoted wife and mother? A. Yes, Sir, eminently.

Q. Eminently so. Did you see any change in Mrs. Tilton's demeanor to her husband, any change in her manifestations of affection and devotion down to the period you have named, 1872? A. No, Sir.

Q. Was she not just as devoted a wife and mother during the years 1869, 1870 and 1871 as you had ever known her to be before? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Did you not frequently converse with Mrs. Tilton about her husband, I mean with reference to her feelings toward him, in '69 and '70? A. Yes, Sir, or rather she did with me.

Q. Did she not uniformly manifest affection and devotion toward her husband in those two years? A. What two years.

Q. 1869 and '70? A. So far as I remember.

Q. How was it in the year 1868, especially in the Fall, the latter part of 1868? A. I have no special remembrance of that time.

Q. There was nothing noticeable or distinguishable from the general course, between Mr. and Mrs. Tilton, down to the period you have named in 1872? A. No, Sir.

Q. Were you acquainted with the religious views of Mr. and Mrs. Tilton during these years? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Did you know of any change taking place in the mind of Mr. Tilton in respect to religious subjects? A. Yes, Sir. His wife has very frequently spoken to me of that.

Mr. Shearman—That I did not ask. If you object to that about the wife—

Mr. Evarts—We do not call for Mrs. Tilton's statements.

Mr. Beach—Well, that will be struck out then.

Mr. Shearman—Yes.

Mr. Shearman—You have said that you knew of no serious troubles between them, but did you know of any trouble or difficulty growing up between them on account of difference in religious opinions?

Mr. Beach—Well, do you call for that from the declarations of Mrs. Tilton?

Mr. Evarts—In just the same sense in which you have called for what she observed in that family. She said she knew of no serious troubles up to a certain time. Now, we ask her if she did know of troubles growing out of the discord in religious opinions between Mr. and Mrs. Tilton.

Mr. Fullerton—We do not ask for what Mrs. Tilton said.

Mr. Evarts—It is the same kind of evidence—the observations she has noticed.

Mr. Beach—Ah! If she gives the declaration of Mrs. Tilton—

Mr. Shearman—Well, we didn't ask for the declarations of Mrs. Tilton.

Mr. Beach—That is just what we asked you. Mr. Evarts refused to answer and you do answer.

Judge Neilson—[To Witness.] You understand that in answering you will speak from your general knowledge, and not from what Mrs. Tilton told you. Now, stenographer, read the question.

[Question read by TRIBUNE stenographer.]

A. No trouble or difficulty, only it made her unhappy.

Q. Mrs. Tilton was an eminently religious woman, wasn't she? A. She was, Sir.

Q. Did you ever meet Mr. Beecher at Mrs. Tilton's house? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Frequently? A. No, Sir.

Q. Did you see him in company with Mrs. Tilton either there or elsewhere frequently? A. No, Sir.

Q. But did you see them together sometimes? A. Very seldom.

Q. What was their demeanor and conduct toward each other when you did see them together? I don't ask what they said, but their demeanor and conduct, was it—

Mr. Fullerton—No, no.

Judge Neilson—He means apparent.

Q. I mean was it proper and decorous, as you observed it? A. Yes, Sir; eminently so.

Mr. Evarts—It might be judicious, both for this witness and any other who may not be able to speak so as to be heard by the jury, that the stenographer himself, when he has written the answer, should read it. Then we should all know what it was. It might save the time of the counsel, too.

Mr. Fullerton—You have, in reply to a question put to you by counsel upon the other side, touching the difference in religious sentiment between Mr. and Mrs. Tilton, observe that it only made Mrs. Tilton unhappy. Did you learn that from what Mrs. Tilton said, or any other way? A. Yes, Sir; from what she said.

Q. You learned it altogether that way, did you not? A. Yes, Sir; I don't remember any other.

This closed the examination of the witness, and the Court took a recess till two o'clock.

Mr. Shearman—If your Honor please, I desire to say that during the recess I made some examination for the letter, but without success; I have no doubt that we will be able to find it, and if we do, to-morrow morning I will be able to present it to your Honor.

Mr. Fullerton—Now, shall I proceed?

Judge Neilson—Yes, Sir.

TESTIMONY OF MR. WILLIAM F. WEST.

William F. West called by the plaintiff and sworn.

Mr. Fullerton—Where do you reside, Mr. West? A. 175 Madison street, in this city.

Q. Where do you carry on business? A. I am cashier for a banking-house in New-York.

Q. Were you ever in any way connected with Plymouth Church? A. Yes, Sir, I was a member of Plymouth Church, and am yet.

Q. When did your membership commence? A. Some eight or nine years ago.

Q. Have you ever been an officer in the church? A. I have, Sir.

Q. What office did you hold? A. I was a member of the Examining Committee for two years, and a deacon of the church for three years.

Q. During what period were you a member of the Examining Committee? A. From 1868 to 1870, I think, Sir.

Q. During what period were you a deacon in the church? A. From 1870 to 1873.

Q. Then you ceased to be a deacon? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. I want to call your attention to what occurred in the Autumn of 1871, after the publication of what is known as the Woodhull biography—if there was any action taken in regard to that matter, and, if so, what was it?

Mr. Evarts—Action by whom?

Mr. Fullerton—I will ask a leading question, if you prefer it.

Mr. Evarts—No.

Mr. Fullerton—It will not introduce any paper.

Mr. Evarts—I have no doubt you think it proper, but we object.

Mr. Fullerton—I withdraw the question.

Mr. Fullerton—What occurred between you and Mr. Beecher, if anything, in reference to the Woodhull biography? A. Mr. Beecher made a request of the Examining Committee, of which I was then a member, that he should be appointed as a Committee of one to confer with Mr. Tilton with regard to it.

Q. What action was taken in pursuance of that request? A. Mr. Beecher reported—

Q. No, what action was taken? A. The Examining Committee appointed Mr. Beecher such a Committee.

Q. Were any instructions given to the Committee after he was appointed, and, if so, what were they?

Mr. Evarts—That is objected to; it is only Mr. Beecher's relation to the subject, we take it, that we are concerned with.

Mr. Fullerton—I suppose we may show what instructions were given by the Examining Committee to Mr. Beecher, as a matter of course.

Mr. Evarts—Were they in writing?

Mr. Fullerton—Were they in writing? A. No, Sir, not that I know of; the Committee requested him to report as soon as possible.

Q. Was the object of appointing a Committee stated at the time of the appointment? A. It was; the Committee was to confer with Mr. Tilton with reference to the severance of his relations with the church. It was thought by the Committee—

Mr. Evarts—No matter what.

Mr. Fullerton—If it was expressed at the time, state it?

The Witness—It was expressed at the meeting of the Committee.

Mr. Evarts—To Mr. Beecher?

The Witness—I don't remember whether Mr. Beecher was present.

Mr. Fullerton—State what occurred in Mr. Beecher's presence in that regard? A. The action which occurred in Mr. Beecher's presence was at a subsequent meeting, when Mr. Beecher made his report. Mr. Beecher reported to the Committee.

Mr. Evarts—Is that in writing? A. No, not that I remember; I think not.

Mr. Fullerton—Go on.

The Witness—Mr. Beecher reported to the Committee that he had seen Mr. Tilton; that he was in a very critical position. I am not repeating Mr. Beecher's words, now. I took no memorandum of that at the time; I am simply giving from memory the substance of the report; if there is anything incorrect with reference to it, the books of the Committee will show where my memory fails me. Mr. Beecher reported that he had seen Mr. Tilton; that Mr. Tilton at that time was in a very critical position; that he had many troubles, pecuniary and otherwise; that he had been surrounded by bad influences, and that he thought it would be better to leave Mr. Tilton to the influence of his friends, and for the church to take no action, or for the Committee, rather, to take no action with reference to severing his relations with the church. That report was adopted and no action taken.

Q. No action taken? A. No, Sir.

Q. Now, was any action taken subsequent to that by the church, through its proper officers, in reference to Mr. Tilton?

Mr. Evarts—Well, in regard to Mr. Beecher, we will insist upon his connection.

Mr. Fullerton—You can answer. A. Yes, Sir.

Q. When? A. In November, 1872, I think.

Q. After what event? A. After the publication of Mrs. Woodhull's statement.

Q. Was it known as the Woodhull scandal? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. What was done after that in reference to Mr. Beecher? A. Mr. Beecher sent a request, or at least Mr. Halliday so stated to the Committee.

Mr. Evarts—We object.

Mr. Fullerton—Did you confer with Mr. Beecher afterwards in reference to it? A. I did confer with Mr. Beecher afterwards.

Q. In reference to this communication from Mr. Halliday? A. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Evarts—Whatever the conference was with Mr. Beecher, that we are entitled to.

Mr. Fullerton—That is just what I ask for.

The Witness—Mr. Halliday stated to the deacons of the church, at a deacons' meeting—

Mr. Evarts—That we object to.

Judge Neilson—Ask what passed with Mr. Beecher.

Mr. Fullerton—If he had a conversation with Mr. Beecher subsequent to that, in which this was repeated, is not that brought within your Honor's ruling?

Judge Neilson—Do you expect to show that?

Mr. Fullerton—The witness has so stated to me.

Mr. Evarts—This very question your Honor has disposed of. The short way is to show what occurred with Mr. Beecher; and if that requires anything antecedent to explain it, it will be time enough to take that up.

Mr. Fullerton—You think the shorter way is to go all round?

Mr. Evarts—We want to proceed in the correct way.

Mr. Fullerton—What did you say to Mr. Beecher in reference to what Halliday had communicated to the Committee? A. I called upon Mr. Beecher at his house; I cannot fix the date exactly; it was in November—the early part of November, 1872—and informed him that he had been appointed by the Examining Committee a member of a Sub-Committee, to confer with Mr. Tilton in regard to his position in relation to the Woodhull scandal.

Q. Did you tell him at whose request the Committee was appointed? A. This Committee was appointed on my motion.

Q. Did you tell him so? A. I told Mr. Beecher so.

Q. What was Mr. Beecher's reply to that information? A. Mr. Beecher told me that he thought it would be better to meet this whole scandal by silence—to make no effort to investigate it; and I replied to him that I thought that was a mistaken policy; that the church was suffering very much from the scandal; that I thought that the only way to meet the scandal was to strike it down and utterly destroy it. I told him that Mr. Tilton was a member of the church, as I understood it; that he was named by Mrs. Woodhull as her authority for the scandal; that I thought Mr. Tilton should be called upon to explain his position in the matter. Mr. Beecher replied that there was some force in what I said, and he said that he would meet with the Committee, but he was very busy at that time; that it would be two or three weeks before he could find time to meet with the Committee. I replied to that that the church was suffering very much, that I thought a meeting should be held at once. We were interrupted at that stage of the conversation and went to the other room. This conversation had taken place in Mr. Beecher's study. We then went into the front parlor, and Mr. Beecher resumed the conversation there by saying that this whole story rested solely upon the assertions of two prostitutes; that if he should pay any attention to it, that no prominent man in the country would be safe from their attacks; but he said that if any person of responsibility would make such an attack upon him, that I would see how quickly he would reply to it. I told him that it seemed to me that Mr. Tilton was a responsible person; that he was named as the author—the originator of the scandal; that I thought it was his duty to deny the assertions made by Mrs. Woodhull; and if he did not do that, that the Church should take the matter up; and if he did not explain his position satisfactorily, that he should be dismissed from the Church; and as the result of this conversation, Mr. Beecher named a day when he would meet with the Committee at his house, some two weeks after that time.

Q. Did he meet the Committee? A. He did meet with the Committee; and the Committee met at his house, either the latter part of November or the early part of December, 1873.

Q. What occurred at that meeting? A. Mr. Beecher told the Committee that he had seen Theodore with regard to this matter; that Theodore had expressed to him his great grief and sorrow at the publication by Mrs. Woodhull, and had offered to do anything in his power to neutralize the effect of it. He spoke of the friendship which existed between Mr. Tilton and himself; and said that he did not think Mr. Tilton had intentionally done anything to injure him; that he thought Mr. Tilton would in a short time—before the first of January succeeding—publish in The Golden Age a card, in which he would denounce Mrs. Woodhull, and in which he would deny the truth of her story; and he advised that the Committee should take no action; that they should await the publication of the card. The Committee decided to do this—that is, to recommend such action to the Examining Committee; but also to recommend at the same time that this sub-committee should be continued, in order that if Mr. Tilton did not publish such a card, he might be waited upon by the Committee afterwards.

Q. Was such a card published? A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Then what action followed on the part of the Committee because of the non-publication of the card? A. No action was taken to my knowledge.

Q. What next occurred in reference to this matter in which Mr. Beecher participated? A. The next interview I had with Mr. Beecher with reference to the matter, as I remember, was on the night that I laid the charges before the Examining Committee against Mr. Tilton.

BEECHER'S POSITION TOWARDS THE WEST CHARGES.

Q. That is what I want to call your attention to. Now, state the history of that, if you please? A. I made charges before the Examining Committee on the night of the 27th of June, 1873—Friday night.

Q. Charges against whom? A. Against Theodore Tilton.

Mr. Evarts—In writing? A. In writing.

Mr. Fullerton—Were they laid before the Committee? A. They were laid before the Committee.

Q. And left with the Committee? A. No; I think not. They were returned to me to be amended, the first time I laid them before the Committee.

Q. Did you amend them? A. I did.

Q. Did you lay the amended charges before the Committee? A. I did.

Q. When were the amended charges put before the Committee? A. On the evening of the first of July, if I remember correctly.

Q. 1873? A. 1873.

Q. Did you leave these charges with the Committee? A. I did; they were accepted by the Committee at the time, and the Clerk was instructed to forward them to Mr. Tilton.

Mr. Fullerton—I call for those charges, under our notice.

Mr. Evarts—You must subpoena the Clerk to bring them.

Mr. Morris—We have subpoenaed him. Mr. Shearman said that we should have them.

Mr. Shearman—The gentleman is in attendance with the papers.

Mr. Fullerton—But you do not produce them on my call.

Mr. Evarts—You have no right to call upon us for papers not in our possession. The clerk is here.

Mr. Beach—We ask the clerk to hand the papers over to us—these charges. It seems to me that it is but a mere form to pass them over through the counsel.

Mr. Fullerton—Before the papers are produced, you may state the interview that you had with Mr. Beecher before laying the amended charges before the Committee? A. I wrote to Mr. Beecher on the twenty-fifth of June, I think it was, stating to him—

Mr. Evarts—No matter what—you wrote a letter.

The Witness—Excuse me.

Mr. Fullerton—That letter is in evidence.

Mr. Evarts—And it speaks for itself.

Mr. Fullerton—Yes, it speaks for itself.

Q. Were you here when your letter was read in evidence? A. I was not.

Q. Look at the paper now shown you, and state whether that is the letter you wrote to Mr. Beecher? I show you "Exhibit 53," already in evidence. A. It is, Sir.

Q. How soon after sending that letter to Mr. Beecher, if at all, did you see him? A. I saw him on Friday evening, the 27th of June.

Q. Where? A. At the lecture room of Plymouth Church.

Q. What occurred between you and him at that time? A. The Examining Committee had just left the lecture room in order to receive my charges.

Mr. Evarts—Never mind that.

The Witness—I speak of that, because our conversation referred to it, and Mr. Beecher came towards me, and told me he had received my letter; that he was glad to hear from me, and he thought I was taking the right course; but he said, "This is not a good time to bring this matter before the church; many members of the church are going into the country soon, and it will be better to postpone the matter, but if you will put it off until the Fall I will then unite with you in having a thorough investigation." I told Mr. Beecher I was opposed to any delay in the matter; that I felt action ought to be taken at once; that the scandal was doing great damage to the church, and that I should proceed in the matter at once—"use every effort in my power." I think these were the words that I used—to bring this matter to an issue with Mr. Tilton. Mr. Beecher said to me, "If you do that, Sir, you will act contrary to my wishes." Our conversation was interrupted at that time by Captain Charles Duncan, who came to the door and said that the Examining Committee wished to see us.

Q. Whom did he address? A. He addressed Mr. Beecher and myself; Mr. Beecher said "to see whom?" Captain Duncan said, "Yourself and Brother West." Mr. Beecher replied, "I have nothing to say to the Committee." Captain Duncan said, "Brother West had a matter to lay before them."

Mr. Beecher then again turned to me and said "Brother West knows very well what my wishes in this matter are." I told Mr. Beecher I was sorry to act contrary to his wishes, but I was compelled to do it by a sense of duty. I followed Capt. Duncan, and went into the vestry room.

Q. When Mr. Beecher made his last remark to you, what was his tone and manner? A. His tone was angry and threatening.

Q. You have stated you went up-stairs before the Committee? A. I did.

Q. Did Mr. Beecher go with you? A. He did not.

Q. Did you lay the charges before the Committee when you went up there? A. I did.

Q. And are these the charges you placed before them? [Handing paper to witness]. A. These are not the charges I placed before them on that evening; these are the amended charges.

Q. Where are the charges you laid before the Committee first that evening? A. I have them in my pocket, I think.

Q. Then produce them, if you please. [Paper shown witness.] I ask you to take a pencil, and mark in red, the charges that were placed before the Committee that evening? A. Do you mean to write in the margin?

Q. No; encircle the part as read—surround it.

The witness does so.

Q. Having marked that part of this paper in red, I ask you when the balance of it was added? A. It was not added; the remainder of the paper contains charges against another person.

Judge Neilson—In connection with Mr. Tilton? A. Not in connection with Mr. Tilton.

Mr. Fullerton—What knowledge had Mr. Beecher of these charges that you have thus marked in the paper before you presented them to the Committee? A. I told Mr. Beecher that I intended to lay the charges before the Committee, and I told him the substance of the charges.

Mr. Fullerton—I now offer them in evidence.

Mr. Evarts—He did not read them.

The Witness—He did not read all of them.

Mr. Fullerton—I now read this paper:

BROOKLYN, June 27, 1873.

To the Examining Committee of Plymouth Church, Brooklyn:

DEAR BRETHREN: Impelled by a sense of duty as a member of this Church, I hereby make before you the following charges and requests:

1st. I charge Theodore Tilton, a member of this church, with having at various times and to different persons, accused the pastor of this Church of conduct derogatory to his christian integrity, and injurious to the reputation of this church, and I request that the said Theodore Tilton be summoned to appear before this Committee, and, in case of failure on his part to retract said accusations or to prove them to be true, to show cause why he should not be expelled from membership with this church.

I name as witnesses who will testify in support of the above charge: Rev. E. L. Taylor, D. D., at No. 150 Nassau street, New-York; Rev. J. L. Hodge, D. D., No. 66 Harrison Place, Brooklyn; Rev. — Fulton, D. D.; and Andrew Bradshaw, No. 485 Henry street.

Paper marked "Exhibit 67."

Q. Were these charges afterwards amended? A. They were;

the Committee returned them to me and requested me to amend them by adding specifications.

Q. Look at the paper now shown you and say whether it contains the amended charges? A. It does down to a certain point.

Mr. Shearman—Indicate with a pencil mark. Please indicate it by a mark [showing witness paper]? A. That is not the whole of the charges they finally accepted; there are two specifications there only.

Q. These are not the charges finally accepted by the Committee? A. These were accepted at the time; the third specification was afterwards added and accepted.

Q. Was afterwards added? A. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Fullerton—I now put them in evidence.

Mr. Evarts—It is not shown that Mr. Beecher saw this.

Mr. Fullerton [showing paper to witness]—Is this the third specification? A. It is.

Mr. Shearman—But that was not put in at the time? A. No, Sir.

Mr. Shearman—Not for months afterwards?

Mr. Fullerton—Never mind, Mr. Shearman.

Mr. Beach—Our object is to ascertain what was finally accepted by the Committee—as finally pending before the Committee. That is all that is important.

Mr. Fullerton—Now, Mr. West, what knowledge had Mr. Beecher of these amended charges—the third specification? A. The same knowledge that he had of those that were made the evening before.

Q. State, if you please, what happened? A. I told Mr. Beecher the substance of the charges.

Q. As they are contained in these amended charges? A. In these amended charges—not with the third specification.

Q. Without the third specification? A. Yes Sir.

Mr. Evarts—We apprehend that does not entitle them to read these charges. The witness says he stated the substance of the charges. The mere fact of stating them to Mr. Beecher would not entitle the reading of this paper. He has given no conversation concerning them on the part of Mr. Beecher which shows that he had any knowledge of what these charges were. And here was a written paper. He puts it before us that he told Mr. Beecher the substance of it, and that leaves a large region of uncertainty whether the whole paper was brought to the attention of Mr. Beecher.

Judge Neilson—I will admit it.

Mr. Evarts—We except.

Mr. Fullerton—[Reading:]

BROOKLYN, July 1st, 1873.

To the Examining Committee of Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, N. Y.:

DEAR BRETHREN: It must be well known to you that a great and terrible scandal has for some time past been publicly proclaimed, to the great injury of the good name of our beloved pastor, and of our church, and, as I believe, to the great injury of the Christian cause wherever our pastor and our church are known.

It is generally understood that this wicked scandal has originated with and been circulated by certain members of our own church, who charge immoral practices of the worst possible character against our pastor.

Now, to the end that justice may be done to all concerned, and that the Christian religion may be speedily relieved from the stain and reproach which this scandal seems to cast upon it, I, a member of this church, respectfully request that you immediately institute a thorough and earnest investigation as to the truth of the following charges and specifications:

1st. I charge Theodore Tilton, a member of this church, with having circulated and promoted scandals derogatory to the Christian integrity of our Pastor, and injurious to the reputation of this church.

SPECIFICATIONS,

1st. In an interview between Theodore Tilton and Rev. E. L. Taylor, D. D. at the office of The Brooklyn Union in the Spring of 1871, the said Theodore Tilton stated that Rev. Henry Ward Beecher preached to several (7 or 8) of his mistresses every Sunday evening. Upon being rebuked by Dr. Taylor, he reiterated the charge, and said that he would make it in Mr. Beecher's presence if desired.

Witness: Rev. E. L. L. TAYLOR, D. D., 150 Nassau-st., New-York City.

In a conversation with Mr. Andrew Bradshaw at his residence, in the latter part of November, 1872, Theodore Tilton requested Mr. Bradshaw not to repeat certain statements which had previously been made to him by Mr. Tilton, adding that he retracted none of the accusations which he had formerly made against Mr. Beecher, but that he wished to hush the scandal on Mr. Beecher's account; that Mr. Beecher was a bad man, and not a safe person to be allowed to enter the families of his church; that if this scandal ever were cleared up, he (Tilton) would be the only one of the three involved who would be unhurt by it, and that he was silently suffering now for Mr. Beecher's sake.

Witness: ANDREW BRADSHAW, 485 Henry-st., Brooklyn, N.Y.

I will only add that I make these charges not from any feeling of ill-will toward the accused, but from a sense of duty as a member of this church, and with the desire and hope that this scandal may cease and that the stain now resting upon our church may be removed.

Yours fraternally,

WM. F. WEST.

[The paper was marked "Exhibit 63."]

BEECHER ABSENT FROM COMMITTEE MEETINGS.

Mr. Fullerton—What, if anything, occurred between yourself and Mr. Beecher in regard to Specification 3d? A. Nothing excepting that Mr. Beecher was a member of the Examining Committee, and as such, that specification was brought before him, the same as before any other member of the Committee.

Q. Where did the Committee meet when this specification was placed before them? A. They met in the parlors of the church.

Q. Who placed it before them? A. I placed it before them.

Q. Was Mr. Beecher on that Committee at that time? A. He was not present at that meeting.

Q. Was he present at any meeting when this specification came up? A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Do you know whether it ever came to Mr. Beecher's knowledge from any conversation you had with him? A. No, Sir.

Q. I now show you "Exhibit 29," consisting of a letter of Mr. Tallmadge and something else. Did you ever see those before or either of them? [Handing witness papers]. A. I never saw this particular paper.

Q. In whose handwriting are the papers? A. In the handwriting of Mr. Tallmadge.

Q. Both of them? A. I should judge so, as far as I can tell.

Q. What office did he hold at that time? A. He was assistant clerk of the church, and clerk of the Examining Committee.

Q. Did this third specification form a part of your charges, as you at length placed them before the Committee? A. It did.

Mr. Evarts—I object that the third specification has utterly failed to be brought to the notice of Mr. Beecher, as it now stands on the evidence.

Judge Neilson—It cannot be read, but I think this question can be answered.

Mr. Evarts—If your Honor please, a single observation. It is of no importance what it constituted, or to whom it was known if it constituted no part of anything that was brought to Mr. Beecher's knowledge, because the argument is not concerning this Committee having before them this, that or the other thing, but concerning Mr. Beecher's knowledge of that fact.

Mr. Fullerton—There is more than one way to show that this third specification was brought home to Mr. Beecher's knowledge.

Judge Neilson—It was not read, but it may have been brought home to his knowledge.

Mr. Beach—Will your Honor please consider one thing, that we have given several interviews between Mr. Moulton and Mr. Beecher in regard to the West charges, which were made before the Committee, in which those charges have been recognized by Mr. Beecher in those conversations, he being one of the Examining Committee, before which they were pending. Now, Sir, it is perfectly competent for me, I submit to you, under that recognition by Mr. Beecher, to show what those charges were as they were finally adopted by that Committee.

Judge Neilson—All that might well occur, and yet this third specification never actually came under his notice; and my opinion is that at present this mere formal question can be answered, showing that it is a part of the proceedings, and it remains to be seen whether it can be brought home to Mr. Beecher.

Mr. Fullerton—That is just the view I take of it, exactly, because I shall supplement this testimony with other upon this subject.

Mr. Evarts—Your Honor will note our exception as it stands at present.

Judge Neilson—Yes, Sir.

Q. Now, the question, Mr. West, is whether this third specification formed a part of your charges, as you finally submitted them to the Committee? A. It did.

Mr. Beach—You had better have that marked for identification.

[Marked "Ex. 66, for identification."]

Q. As near as you can tell, when were these amended charges placed before the Committee? A. I can give you the exact date if you would like it, by referring to a copy that I have of them.

Q. Refer to any memorandum that you have so as to enable you to answer the question. A. [Referring to memorandum.] September 2, 1873.

Q. State, if you please, who composed that Committee. A. Who composed it?

Q. At that time; yes, Sir. A. Do you wish the names?

Q. If you please. A. I don't know that I can do that. There were a large number. The Committee was composed of the Pastor and Assistant Pastor of the church, of the deacons and of the members of the Committee who were elected as such.

Q. Are you speaking now of the Committee before whom you laid the amended charges? A. Yes, Sir; I thought that was what you referred to.

Q. It was? A. The Examining Committee.

Q. Who was the assistant Pastor at that time? A. Rev. S. B. Halliday.

Q. Was any action taken by that Committee that you know of? A. The Committee passed the resolution directing the church to send the charges.

Mr. Shearman—Well?

Mr. Fullerton—Now, gentlemen, will you be kind enough—

Judge Neilson—The answer taken down will simply be that the Committee adopted the resolution.

Mr. Fullerton—Yes, Sir. [To defendant's counsel.] If you will furnish me that resolution now I will put it in—the resolution passed by the Committee on the presentation of the amended charges of Mr. West.

Mr. Tracy—There is no paper here.

Q. What resolution was offered and passed by the Committee in reference to the amended charges which you read before them?

Mr. Shearman—To that we object. It is not shown that Mr. Beecher was present; besides, it is not even shown that this witness was present, or that he was a member of the Committee.

Mr. Beach—It is shown that he was a member of the Committee.

Mr. Shearman—I beg pardon; he was not a member of the Committee at this time, as the witness himself will say, I think.

Mr. Fullerton—He was not a member of the Committee, but he states that he went and presented these amended charges.

Mr. Shearman—I beg pardon, he has not even said that yet. The gentleman—if you will excuse me—confounds the interview of July 1 with that of September 2, or if not, he is asking his question in such shape that the witness will.

Mr. Fullerton—Well, what position do you take about it? you say I am mistaken. [To the witness.] Haven't I asked you if you went and presented these charges, with the 3d specification attached? A. With the 3d specification? yes, Sir; that was in September.

Q. Now, I ask you what action the Committee took when you thus presented those amended charges and specifications? A. They accepted that specification.

Mr. Shearman—One moment. To that we object. There is no evidence that Mr. Beecher was present.

Judge Neilson [to the witness]—The question is whether Mr. Beecher was present.

The Witness—He was not present.

Mr. Fullerton—That does not preclude me from giving the evidence, Sir, in my judgment.

Judge Neilson—I think it does. I think you might put in a record, although he was not present; but not to affect him personally.

Mr. Fullerton—This is a record.

Judge Neilson—No; it seems to have been informal.

Mr. Fullerton—I don't understand the difference between putting in a record and putting in what took place at the time. Suppose we follow this up by showing that Mr. Beecher subsequently became aware of the action of this Committee?

Judge Neilson—We will take it up again, if you wish, when you find that out.

Mr. Fullerton—Then I will say this, that I have already proved that he was aware of it. I propose now to prove that the Committee directed that notice should be given and a copy of these charges should be served. We have already proved that a notice was given, which has been read in evidence. We have proved that the charges were served, and they have been read in evidence. And we have proved various conversations between Mr. Beecher and others in respect to these very charges, containing the third charge.

Mr. Evans—There I think you are mistaken.

Judge Neilson—The last conversation, being to the effect that Mr. West persisted in presenting the charges, adhered to that, although Mr. Beecher advised the contrary; but there is no suggestion that Mr. Beecher knew what action the Committee took, I think, in the way of resolution.

Mr. Beach—You are confining your observations, Sir, to the conversations with Mr. West; we refer to those between Mr. Moulton and Mr. Beecher.

Mr. Evans—We say there was no such conversation with Mr. Moulton.

Judge Neilson—I think Mr. Moulton did not say—

Mr. Fullerton—I can recur to this subject again?

Judge Neilson—You may exercise your judgment. I think it does not yet appear that Mr. Beecher knew that it was adopted by the Committee.

Mr. Fullerton—If I exercised my judgment, Sir, I should go on. Now, I think I have laid the foundation for it. I think it is clearly admissible in evidence. It is not necessary that I should connect Mr. Beecher, step by step, with the action taken by a Committee of that church with reference to this scandal, if in the end we prove that he was aware of what they did. I propose to show what he said with reference to the action of this Committee, what advice he gave with reference to this investigation then set on foot by this witness by the presentation of these charges.

Judge Neilson—You may reserve that point.

Mr. Fullerton—Your Honor will bear in mind that Mr. Moulton gave evidence with respect to these charges, that Mr. Beecher said to him that he must get them over until after vacation—until Fall; and that he did get them passed over until Fall; and then he gave subsequently a conversation between himself and Mr. Beecher in regard to these very charges, in the Autumn of 1873. The question was, how they should be met.

Judge Neilson—The point before us is whether this Commit tee adopted a resolution, a thing that Mr. Moulton does not appear to have known, and a thing which it does not appear that Mr. Beecher knew. Therefore I think the objection is good as far as it goes. At the same time, if it were a record of the Church, I think it might be read as such. It does not appear to be.

Mr. Evarts—Your Honor will understand that we do not agree with this narrative of Mr. Moulton's testimony. On the contrary, it is testimony that was retracted and never was replaced by any substitute; and we objected, your Honor will remember, to have the paper remain evidence, but your Honor decided that it should remain.

Mr. Fullerton—Well, I will go on. [To the Witness.] Were these charges ever tried before that Committee that you are aware of?

Mr. Shearman—We object to that until it is shown that Mr. Beecher was present.

Judge Neilson—I think he may answer that.

The Witness—Not to my knowledge.

Q. Do you know that anything was done by the Committee in regard to it?

Mr. Evarts—He did not continue a member of the Committee.

The Witness—A copy of it was sent to Mr. Tilton in October.

Mr. Shearman—I object to that. He simply asks whether anything was done. I suppose a proper answer is yes or no; that is all Judge Fullerton desires.

Mr. Fullerton—I will make my desires known better than you can. [To the witness.] Was a copy of these charges served upon Mr. Tilton within your knowledge?

Mr. Shearman—To that we object. It has got nothing to do with Mr. Beecher. The fact is, your Honor, as the witness has very properly said, Mr. Beecher was not present on any of the occasions; he had nothing to do with the action; and this is an attempt to make him responsible for what his church did in its own independent government, being a congregational body not subject to the domination of any pastor or priest—doing what the Church saw fit. Now, Mr. Beecher is not answerable for what the Church did or did not do unless he was a part of that transaction.

Judge Neilson—I think a sufficient answer to the question is that it does not appear, and there is no suggestion that Mr. West himself personally served the papers upon Mr. Tilton. He only knows from information.

Mr. Fullerton—My question, Sir, involves actual, personal knowledge upon his part, whether he served them himself or was present when some other person served them.

Judge Neilson—Well, you may ask him that.

Mr. Fullerton—I asked him whether he has any knowledge upon the subject.

Judge Neilson—I misapprehended you. Go on.

Mr. Evarts—If it is limited to an answer of that kind, go on.

Judge Neilson (to the stenographer)—Read the question.

THE TRIBUNE's stenographer read the question as follows:

"Was a copy of those charges served upon Mr. Tilton within your knowledge?" A. I cannot answer that question without an explanation, that I can see, your Honor. It depends upon what you call my knowledge.

Q. Were you present when they were served? A. I was not.

Q. Did you serve them yourself? A. I did not.

Q. Did you have any conversation with Mr. Beecher with reference to their service upon Mr. Tilton? A. I did not.

Q. Now, pass from that, then. What else took place between yourself and Mr. Beecher with reference to this scandal, if anything? A. I don't remember any other interview in regard to it.

Q. Do you recollect an occurrence in Plymouth Church when Mr. Tilton addressed the congregation there? A. I do, Sir.

Q. When was that occurrence? A. I think it was the 31st of October, 1873. It was after the presentation of these charges.

Q. State, if you please, what occurred at that time?

Mr. Evarts—We assume Mr. Beecher was there.

Mr. Fullerton—Yes, that is right.

The Witness—It would be rather difficult for me to do it. It was a long meeting and I think an account of it took up some columns in the papers—two or three columns.

Q. What was before the body at that time—what question? A. Before the Church at that time, the question was a resolution which had been presented or which was brought before the church by the Examining Committee with reference to these charges which had been made against Mr. Beecher.

Mr. Evarts—A written resolution? A. Yes, Sir; I understand it was written. It was read from a paper.

Mr. Fullerton—It went upon the record, did it? A. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Fullerton—Now, gentlemen, if you will produce that I will put it in. [To the Witness.] Give us the date again. A. October 31st, as I remember it, 1873.

Mr. Fullerton—I read. It is under the head of Thursday evening, October 23d, 1873. [To the Witness.] Is that the right date? A. October 23d.

Mr. Beach—That was the resolution? A. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Shearman—The proper date is Friday evening, October 31st. That was when action was taken.

Mr. Fullerton [reading]:

Whereas, Charges were preferred to this Committee by William F. West against Theodore Tilton; and

Whereas, A Special Committee having been appointed by this Committee to wait upon said Tilton in reference to said charges, said Tilton on the evening of the 6th of October instant made answer to that Special Committee in these words: "I have not for nearly four years past been an attendant of Plymouth Church, nor have I considered myself a member of it, and I do not now, nor does the pastor of the church consider me a member, and I do not hold myself amenable to its jurisdiction in any manner whatever;" and

Whereas, Theodore Tilton, in a reply to a communication addressed to him by the Clerk of this Committee, and which communication, with a copy of the charges preferred against him by William F. West, were put into the hands of said Tilton on the 17th day of October inst., and a request made of him that he should answer the same by the 23d day of October inst., says in a letter addressed to the Clerk of this Committee, under date of October 22d, 1873: "It is about four years since I terminated all connection with the Church, and am not now a member thereof; therefore, the document addressed to me in that capacity I cannot receive;" and

Whereas it thus appears that Theodore Tilton, a member of this Church, has abandoned his connection with the Church by prolonged absence from all its services, and ordinances; therefore,

Resolved. That this Committee recommend to the church that the name of Theodore Tilton be dropped from the roll of membership of the church, as provided by Rule No. 7.

Brother White moved to amend the resolution, so as to recommend to the church to excommunicate Mr. Tilton, in place of dropping from the roll. The amendment was lost.

The ayes and noes being called for on the preambles and resolution, the vote stood as follows:

Ayes—Duncan, Moody, Ropes, Garbutt, Hawkins, Howard, Belder, Day and Halliday; and sisters Pratt, Moody, Fitzgerald and Halliday—13.

Noes—Benedict, White, Rush, Tallmadge and Manchester—5. The Committee then adjourned.

D. W. TALLMADGE, Clerk.

Q. Is that the resolution that you speak of? A. That is the resolution; yes, Sir. It was offered on the 31st.

Q. Now, I recall your attention to the scene in church, when Mr. Tilton addressed the body. What occurred then?

Mr. Everts—We understand this report was in before that meeting.

Mr. Fullerton—Certainly.

The Witness—Mr. Tilton asked permission to speak, as I remember it, and the Moderator said that Mr. Tilton did not need to ask permission, as he was a member of the church and had the right to speak. Mr. Tilton then said, in substance, that a report had been spread that he had slandered the pastor of this church; that he had come there to say, in Mr. Beecher's presence, and in the presence of his friends, that if he had slandered him he was there to answer to the man whom he had slandered; that if Beecher had aught to say against him, if he would say it, he would answer him, as God was his judge. Words to that effect. I don't remember that those were the exact words.

Q. What followed that address? A. There was some applause, I believe, that followed.

Q. Well, I had not reference to that; but were any other remarks made by any other person that evening? A. Mr. Beecher made some remarks. There were some remarks made by various members of the church, as I remember.

Q. I call attention particularly to Mr. Beecher's remarks. What did he say in reference to this proposition of Mr. Tilton to meet any accusation against him? A. I remember it; he said that he had nothing—he had no charges to make against Mr. Tilton.

Q. Was that the substance of what he said in reply? A. Yes, Sir, in reply to that.

Q. Did you see Mrs. Bradshaw with reference to giving evidence to sustain these charges? A. I did.

Mr. Everts—That we object to, if your Honor please. Anything passing between this witness and Mrs. Bradshaw we object to.

Judge Neilson—The more fact that he saw her is proper.

Mr. Everts—It is not important.

Q. Did you show her the charges which you had preferred, or any of them? A. I did.

Mr. Everts—We object to it.

Judge Neilson—I think he can state whether he showed her the charges or not.

Mr. Everts—The point is, that it is all irrelevant, as it does not touch Mr. Beecher. Of course, he knows concerning what he speaks, and therefore is a good witness in that regard, but it does not appear to us how anything that passed between him and Mrs. Bradshaw is material in this case. There is no foundation laid for it, as we suppose.

Judge Neilson—None of the conversation can be given. You can prove the naked fact that he showed the charges, if he did, to that lady.

Q. Did you show anything to Mrs. Bradshaw, and if so, what? A. I showed her the third specification of the charges.

Q. When was that done? A. It was in July or August; I cannot fix the date any more definitely than that—1873.

CROSS-EXAMINATION OF MR. WEST.

Mr. Shearman—In regard to Mr. Beecher's remarks at that meeting of October 31, 1873, don't you remember that Mr. Beecher said that, so far as he was concerned, all the difficulties that there had been between Theodore Tilton were buried? A. I remember something of that kind; yes, Sir.

Q. Don't you remember of his saying that he was sure that, as far as Mr. Tilton was concerned, they were all buried? A. Yes, Sir; I think I remember that?

Q. Did Mr. Tilton make any reply to Mr. Beecher's speech? A. No, Sir.

Q. He was present at the time, was he not? A. Yes, Sir; he was present.

Q. Go back to the time when you say that Mr. Beecher was appointed a Sub-Committee by the Examining Committee, when you were a member; will you please refresh your memory and consider whether it is not the fact that Mr. Beecher was actually appointed a Committee and said that he would see Mr. Tilton in an informal way. A. Well, as I remember it, Sir, he was appointed a Committee.

Q. But you are not sure of that are you? A. I remember that he was asked for a report several times; he was to see him, and he did make a report finally to the Committee.

Q. The report which you have described? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Now, Sir, will you go back to that report and say whether you can say with certainty that Mr. Beecher made, himself, that report at all? A. Yes, Sir, I can; I can remember his position when he made it; I remember him perfectly as he sat in the room and made the report; I remember who were present at the time.

Q. Was not the report which Mr. Beecher made, and which you remember, a simple statement that he had been unable to find Mr. Tilton; that he was out of town; and was not this other report, which you have described at such length, a statement at second-hand, purporting to come from Mr. Beecher, but not made by Mr. Beecher in your presence? A. No, Sir.

Q. Of that you are positive? A. That I am as positive of as I can be. It was over three years ago it occurred, but as positive as I can be of anything.

Q. Was this the only committee that was appointed at or about that time—in fact, while you were a member of the Examining Committee in Mr. Tilton's case? A. No, Sir; there was one appointed in 1872—November, 1872.

Q. Was this the only one appointed in 1871? A. The only one that I knew anything about, or that I remember now.

Q. And that was a committee of one only, consisting of Mr. Beecher? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. When was this report made by Mr. Beecher, which you have described at length? A. It was, I think, in the early part of December—November or December of 1871.

Q. Was it not the first of December? A. I could not be positive as to the date.

Q. Just about that time? A. As I say, I made no memorandum of it at the time; it is simply as it exists in my memory I relate it here.

Q. Would your memory be refreshed by looking at the minutes of the Examining Committee? A. I think it would; yes, Sir.

Q. There is the meeting—this is the meeting of Dec. 1st, 1871, [turning book to witness]. Just refresh your memory and state whether Mr. Beecher was present at that meeting of Dec. 1st, 1871? A. That is not the meeting, I think, Mr. Shearman.

Q. Well, Sir, at the meeting of Dec. 1, 1871, the pastor was not present, was he? A. According to the minutes, he was not.

Q. Well, Sir, does not your recollection agree? A. No, Sir, I don't remember that meeting. I don't remember any of these special meetings. I simply remember the fact of Mr. Beecher making such a report as I speak of.

Q. You were present at that meeting of December, 1871? A. It is so stated there.

Q. But you believe you were? A. Yes, Sir, I believe I was.

Q. But you cannot remember anything about it? A. I can't remember anything particularly; no, Sir.

Q. Now, Sir, will you look at the meeting of December 15, 1871, and state in the first place that was not the ordinary meeting of the Examining Committee which was heard in the lecture room in presence of the church—whether this was not an ordinary meeting of the Examining Committee in the presence of all the church in the lecture room? A. Yes, Sir; it seems to be.

Q. Now, Sir, at that meeting was any business transacted with reference to Mr. Tilton? A. No, Sir, there was no business transacted before the church with regard to it. The matter was not brought before the church. I remember that distinctly.

Q. There never was anything done with reference to Mr. Tilton's name in meetings of the Examining Committee which were held in presence of the church, was there? A. No, Sir.

Q. Now, will you look at the meeting of Dec. 22, 1871, and state whether the pastor was not absent from that meeting—whether Mr. Beecher was not absent from that meeting, and Mr. Halliday officiated in his absence? A. It is so stated, yes, Sir.

Q. Well, Sir, is not that correct? A. Yes, Sir; I have no reason to doubt it.

Q. Now, will you look at the meeting of December 29, 1871, and state whether any action was taken upon the matter of Mr. Tilton, at that meeting? A. I see no record of it.

Q. Well, Sir, don't you think, doesn't your recollection agree with that record, that no action was taken at the meeting of December 29, 1871, concerning Mr. Tilton? A. Yes, Sir; I know that it was not as late as that; I am positive of it.

Q. Wasn't it in the early part of December that this action to which you have referred was taken? A. It might have been in October, or it might have been in November; I cannot remember it any nearer than that.

Q. When Mr. Beecher was present? A. When he was present at one of the meetings.

Q. Will you be kind enough, after looking at this book, to look at the meeting of Nov. 3, 1871, and state whether that was not the meeting at which, for the first time, the pastor said anything on the subject of Mr. Tilton's case? A. Yes; I think so.

Q. And, on that occasion, was not all the substance of what he said, that he deemed it best that he should see Mr. Tilton; and that he would do so, and report to the Committee at an early day? A. That is as I remember it.

Q. Now, Sir, can you find any record there of the appointment of Mr. Beecher as a Committee to wait on Mr. Tilton? A. As being—as requesting that he should be permitted to see Mr. Tilton and report to the Committee in regard to it.

Q. That is what you called being appointed a Committee of one to wait upon him; isn't it? A. Yes, that is what I referred to.

Q. And was not that all about it? A. Yes, that was all about it; I think the record is correct.

Q. This was what I corrected in my question a little while ago, when I asked you if the fact was not that Mr. Beecher was never appointed a Committee, but was requested in an informal way, or requested himself in an informal way, an opportunity to confer with Mr. Tilton?

Mr. Morris—That already appears.

Q. And now that your memory is refreshed by looking at the record, are you not prepared to admit that you are entirely mistaken in saying that Mr. Beecher made this report which you have stated, and that the fact is that Mr. Halliday made a report in the absence of Mr. Beecher, and that that is the one which you have in your mind? A. If you will allow me to look at the record of the other meeting a moment, Mr. Shearman, please. After looking at the record I will state what I think were the facts in the case. I think that it was at the meeting of Nov. 3d, that the pastor made the statement with regard to Mr. Tilton in regard to his being in difficulty, and said that he had better see him.

Q. But that was before he was appointed a Committee? A. That was before he was appointed a Committee; yes, I think you are right about that, according to the records.

Q. Will you look at this pamphlet, and say whether that is the Life of Mrs. Woodhull, to which you referred as having been the occasion of the Committee's inquiry into Mr. Tilton's case, in 1871? A. I do not know, Sir; I have never read it; I do not know whether that is the one or not.

Q. Wasn't it in consequence of and upon the ground of a publication having been made by Mr. Tilton or some biography of Victoria C. Woodhull, upon which you urged the Committee to take action

In Mr. Tilton's case in 1871: was not that the ground stated by you to the Committee, or one of the grounds? A. That was one of the grounds; yes; one of the grounds.

Q. Hadn't you even seen the Life of Mrs. Woodhull at all? A. I think I had seen it on the news stands and heard it talked about.

Q. Well, cannot you recollect distinctly, by seeing it on the news stands, that it was substantially that paper? A. Well, as I remember it on the news-stands, it was a larger pamphlet than that; but still, I cannot be positive about it.

Q. Just look at it, and satisfy yourself? A. Well, Sir, I cannot possibly identify it in any way, because I do not remember anything about it.

Judge Neilson—That is all.

TESTIMONY OF FRANKLIN WOODRUFF.

Franklin Woodruff called on behalf of plaintiff, and sworn.

Mr. Fullerton—You are one of the firm of Woodruff & Robinson? A. I am.

Q. And a partner of Francis D. Moulton? A. I am.

Q. Do you recollect an interview between yourself, and Mr. Moulton, and Mr. Benjamin F. Tracy, which occurred at your office in the city of New-York—at Mr. Tracy's office? A. I do.

Q. When did that occur? A. I think it was very shortly after the publication of the Woodhull scandal.

Q. The Autumn of 1872? A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Was there more than one interview at that office? A. One interview between Mr. Moulton, Mr. Tracy and myself; but there was one by myself and Mr. Tracy prior—the evening before—to the interview that I had with Mr. Moulton and Mr. Tracy together.

Q. I want you to relate what occurred at the interview between yourself, Mr. Moulton and Mr. Tracy?

Mr. Evarts—That we object to, if your Honor please, Mr. Beecher not being present.

Mr. Beach—We have already shown by Mr. Moulton that it was communicated to Mr. Beecher.

Judge Neilson—I think we will receive it.

Mr. Evarts—Your Honor will note our exception.

Mr. Fullerton—Now state, if you please. A. Do you want me to state the interview with Mr. Tracy before the —?

Q. No, Sir; the interview with you three gentlemen. A. We met at Mr. Tracy's office; I think it was about half-past eight or nine o'clock, in the morning, in consultation growing out of this scandal that had been published by the Woodhull-Claffin paper.

Mr. Evarts—Excuse me a moment. I think your Honor may be wrong. If I am right in my present recollection, what was communicated to Mr. Beecher was given in evidence, to wit, the witness Moulton was allowed to state what he told Mr. Beecher concerning an interview that had taken place.

Judge Neilson—That refers to this interview.

Mr. Evarts—But Mr. Fullerton was not allowed to state what the interview was. There is a difference between narrating what he told Mr. Beecher, which might have no foundation in fact, as your Honor may see—I, of course, mean it only as an illustration of the difference between telling what happened, and proving what happened. Now, Mr. Moulton was not allowed to prove what took place between Mr. Tracy, and Mr. Beecher, and himself.

Judge Neilson—It was unnecessary, inasmuch as he told Mr. Beecher afterwards.

Mr. Evarts—Well, he was allowed to tell what he told Mr. Beecher; whether it was true or not was not the question then up. But he was not allowed to prove what took place, and this witness cannot be allowed, as we think, to prove what took place. It does not make it evidence as to what took place that Mr. Beecher was told that it took place. In other words, the distinction is between proving what was communicated to Mr. Beecher, which is good evidence, of course, because it comes to his ears, and then proving that what was communicated to him really took place, when it took place without his presence and knowledge.

Mr. Fullerton—Well, it having been communicated to Mr. Beecher, we now propose to prove that it did take place.

Mr. Evarts—Well, that does not give you a right.

Judge Neilson—No; the right comes in, if at all, on the theory that Mr. Tracy some way represented Mr. Beecher, or acted for him.

Mr. Evarts—Yes, Sir, that we understand.

Judge Neilson—And we have some general evidence on that subject.

Mr. Evarts—Your Honor has not admitted any evidence as yet based on that proposition.

Judge Neilson—It was not necessary.

Mr. Evarts—I don't say it was; I only say it is the question now before you. But I submit to your Honor that there is no evidence that affects Mr. Tracy's presence as being the presence of Mr. Beecher, and it is a matter of some considerable importance of course. I am not aware that there is any evidence that Mr. Beecher has sent Mr. Tracy in his place so that conversations with Mr. Tracy can be proved as conversations with Mr. Beecher. That is what is now proposed to be done.

Mr. Fullerton—May I go on?

Judge Neilson—No, I am in doubt about this. I don't wish to be hasty about it; I would like to hear your views.

Mr. Beach—This is the evidence, Sir. Mr. Moulton was asked this question by Mr. Fullerton:

Q. Now, what did you state to Mr. Beecher which had been stated to you? A. I said to Mr. Beecher that my partner, Mr. Woodruff, was very anxious that I should make some statement with regard to the Victoria Woodhull publication, inasmuch as many of his friends and many of mine, or several of his friends and several of mine, had criticised my position in reference to the story, that they not only criticised me but they criticised the firm, for my relations to the story; and I said to Mr. Beecher that Mr. Woodruff recommended me, under the circumstances, to take counsel in the matter; and I said to Mr. Beecher that I had asked Mr. Woodruff whom he could recommend, and he said that he would recommend Mr. Tracy; and I said to Mr. Beecher that I thought Mr. Tracy was a good man to consult on the subject; that he had a good cool head on his shoulders, and I thought would give good advice; and I said to Mr. Beecher, "If you have no objection, I will consult with Gen. Tracy, but as ~~as~~."

Gen. Tracy, and to get his best advice upon the subject, it will be necessary to tell Gen. Tracy the truth. If you have no objection, then, I will assent to my partner's wish, and consult with Gen. Tracy," and he said that he had no objection if I thought it was best, and I said that I did not see that I had any other course to pursue; my partner wanted me to do it, and I thought it was necessary to take advice, and that I did not know any better man to consult on the subject than Gen. Tracy.

It appears sufficiently from that that this interview between Mr. Tracy and Mr. Moulton and Mr. Woodruff was acquiesced in and recommended by Mr. Beecher himself, and that Mr. Moulton went to that interview representing the interests of Mr. Beecher, for whom he was acting, not for himself. Upon what subject was he to take advice? What was the business that led to the consultation of Gen. Tracy? Why, Sir, it was the business of Mr. Beecher. It was for the purpose of getting advice from a wise and sound gentleman, recommended by Mr. Beecher, upon that business; and when Mr. Moulton went to that interview, he went as the accredited agent of Mr. Beecher for that purpose, and consulted with the man recommended by Mr. Woodruff and approved by Mr. Beecher; and whatever occurred in that interview was communicated to Mr. Beecher; and, whether communicated or not, was yet an interview between his authorized agent to hold it with the parties with whom it was held. Independent of that, Sir, we have shown otherwise that Mr. Tracy assumed to represent the interest of Mr. Beecher in his interviews with Mr. Moulton. But, Sir, if Mr. Beecher had been at that interview, why, of course we could prove it as it occurred. Not having been present, so far in this examination, you have admitted the details of that interview as they were communicated to Mr. Beecher, and you have held as matter of law, as it undoubtedly is the law, that that interview having been communicated to Mr. Beecher, it becomes evidence as against him. Well, it is said by my learned friend there is quite a difference between detailing what transpired at an interview to Mr. Beecher and proving the facts which occurred at that interview. Well, that results, if your Honor please, I think, in this very dilemma from the course of proof to which your Honor has restricted us in the proving of those communications. I suppose the ordinary and orderly mode of proof, would have been to have given evidence by Mr. Moulton, of the facts, the details of conversations occurring at that interview, and then proving that they were communicated to Mr. Beecher. Your Honor has directed the subsequent order of proof—

Judge Neilson—As a matter of economy.

Mr. Beach—Yes, Sir, as a matter of economy; but it must not result, when we are endeavoring to economize time, in the reversal of a principal of law and a rule of evidence. Mr. Beecher having been made aware of that interview, and of the facts that transpired there, all that occurred becomes evidence against him. Was it not communicated to him? Mr. Moulton swears it was, and it is precisely the same then as if Mr. Beecher had been transposed to that very interview, and had heard all that occurred, and all that was communicated to him by Mr. Moulton. Now, Sir, if he is charged with the effect of that interview, have we not a right to prove it by the ordinary means and volume of evidence? Is it to be said that we are restricted to the one witness, Mr. Moulton, who made the communication to Mr. Beecher?

Mr. Evarts—I have not said that.

Mr. Beach—Yes, Sir; but certainly that is the effect of the argument of the gentleman.

Mr. Evarts—I said you could not prove it by Mr. Moulton, and you were not allowed to prove it.

Mr. Beach—Could not prove it by Mr. Moulton! Did we not prove it by Mr. Moulton?

Mr. Evarts—Not in the least. You proved what Mr. Moulton told Mr. Beecher.

Mr. Beach—And Mr. Moulton swears that that was what transpired at that interview.

Mr. Evarts—No; what he told Mr. Beecher transpired.

Mr. Tracy [to Mr. Beach]—No; he has not said that.

Mr. Evarts—He was not allowed to swear, Sir.

Judge Neilson—It would have been allowable. The order of proof was at my suggestion. It seemed a waste of time to have the witness state what occurred at the interview, and then that he afterwards repeated it to Mr. Beecher, being a re-statement of the same thing, and simply with that view, to economy, the witness, at my suggestion, proceeded at once to state what occurred with Mr. Beecher on the subject.

Mr. Beach—The question—the answer to which I have read in part, was: "Now what did you state to Mr. Beecher which had been stated to you." That is, at that interview.

Mr. Evarts—Stated to Mr. Beecher?

Judge Neilson—Yes.

Mr. Beach [reading]: "Well I stated to Mr. Beecher what had been stated to me at that interview."

Mr. Evarts—That is what he stated.

Mr. Beach—Certainly it is what he stated, but it contains the affirmation that what he stated was what had been stated to him at that interview. The question is: "In company with your partner? A. With my partner; yes, Sir; and I told him what transpired at that interview between Mr. Woodruff, Gen. Tracy, and myself." Now, can the gentleman say that what Mr. Moulton stated to Mr. Beecher Mr. Moulton did not affirm was stated to him at that interview? Your Honor has held that we could prove what occurred at that interview, because it was stated to Mr. Beecher, and was adopted or rejected by him, as the fact might be. If adopted, then he adopted that interview as it occurred, and as stated by him, and Mr. Moulton having stated it occurred as there stated, I again ask the question, which the gentleman says he did not propound as a proposition, whether it is not possible we may prove the terms of that interview, as stated by Mr. Beecher, by additional evidence.

Mr. Evarts—We have never objected to that evidence. What you can prove by one witness you can prove by two, I suppose; but you cannot prove it by either, as I submit. The whole point, if your Honor please, of a narrative made to Mr. Beecher, is to affect him by his response or answer to it. That response or answer comes as his action upon what is narrated to him. If it is falsely narrated, if no such thing ever took place, nevertheless it answers the purpose of being the communication made to him, upon which his response, which is to affect him, was made. Whenever you undertake to carry into that communication, as affecting him, his hearing it, and responding to it, or being silent, as the case may be, you undertake to prove the fact that did occur in a meeting at which he was not present, to which he was not a party; then you have gained no right to prove a matter which occurs without his being a party to it, simply because you have narrated to him the occurrence. What affects him is his receipt of the narration, and not its truth, or the fact. Then supposing it happened otherwise than as narrated. It is only what passes to Mr. Beecher that becomes the subject of evidence affecting him. Now let us look at the other proposition, that Mr. Tracy stands in this conference of three as if Mr. Beecher was there (for that is what it must come to) and what is the evidence? That Mr. Moulton said those Produce Exchange people had criticised him and his firm in reference to this Woodhull publication, and his (Moulton's) connection with it, and that his partners thought that something ought to be done about it, and some consultation to be had about it; and he told Mr. Beecher that Mr. Tracy would be a good man to consult with, and that in consulting with him he would have to tell him the truth. Very well, this affects Mr. Beecher, and Mr. Beecher says he is a very good man to consult with. Now, when those two gentlemen, in behalf of their relation to the matter, were taking consultation with Mr. Tracy, does that make Mr. Tracy the substitute for Mr. Beecher? Why, he was their own man, picked out by themselves to talk with in reference to their relations to the matter, and Mr. Beecher was told by Mr. Moulton (and that is the pregnancy of it), that he would have to tell Mr. Tracy the truth. Mr. Beecher had no objection to his telling him the truth. That don't follow that what he did tell him affected Mr. Beecher as if it had been told to Mr. Beecher himself, and yet it must come to that, or else Mr. Tracy's presence there does not affect Mr. Beecher at all. It is apparent, on Mr. Moulton's testimony, that Mr. Tracy had no fee paid him; he was not in the relation of a lawyer employed by Mr. Beecher, or a lawyer employed by Mr. Moulton, or Mr. Robinson. He was only the intelligent and experienced lawyer brought into consultation; but in the matter of that consultation, for the interest of Mr. Moulton, and of Mr. Robinson, it might be necessary to tell him the truth concerning Mr. Beecher.

Judge Neilson—And Mr. Beecher was a party to it, because the conference had been agreed upon—adopted upon his approval.

Mr. Evarts—I appeal to your Honor on that point. Consulted with him about this matter, if you please. "He is a good man." Then Mr. Moulton, says: "I may have to tell him the truth about your affairs." Mr. Beecher, says: "I have no objection to that," but that don't affect Mr. Beecher.

Mr. Beach—Gen. Pryor referred me to a case, and I have sent for the book.

Mr. Evarts—There is no pretense that Mr. Beecher ever communicated with Mr. Tracy, or said a word to him, or employed him in the least.

Mr. Beach—It is not necessary that he should. If I authorize a man to have a conference with another in reference to my business, to act as my representative and agent on an occasion, I submit to your Honor that what he says and does in regard to the subject of his agency is competent against me.

Mr. Evarts—The difficulty is, there is not the least scintilla of evidence of that kind. These gentlemen went to talk with Mr. Tracy about their own interest; but Mr. Moulton thought proper to say to Mr. Beecher, "In talking with him for our interest, I may have to tell him the truth about you." Mr. Beecher had no objection to the truth being told by him. That is the only connection Mr. Beecher has with that.

Judge Neilson [to Mr. Fullerton]—Is there any other topic you could go on with while we are waiting?

Mr. Fullerton—No, Sir; there are other interviews of the same character, involving precisely the same question, and therefore it would not be profitable to go on, on account of the same difficulty.

Mr. Evarts—It is near the hour of adjournment.

Mr. Beach [referring to book]—This authority is a distinct recognition of the principle I stated, but it is not so direct and specific that I should be able to state it to your Honor, but I don't understand that our friends on the other side deny the proposition that if Mr. Moulton had authority from Mr. Beecher to hold this interview with Mr. Tracy, why, then, the evidence which we propose is admissible. And it seems to come to the question whether or not the evidence which I have read to your Honor of the preliminary consultation between Mr. Moulton and Mr. Beecher in regard to taking advice from Mr. Tracy constitutes that agency, and I submit to your Honor that it does.

Mr. Tracy—You don't claim that Mr. Beecher would be bound by my advice?

Mr. Fullerton—No; not as bad as that.

Mr. Beach—I don't think that is a misfortune he is held to; but whether good or bad advice was given by Mr. Tracy on that occasion, the fact that Mr. Moulton was sent with the approval and approbation of Mr. Beecher to talk, it at least authenticates the advice as it was subsequently communicated by Mr. Moulton to Mr. Beecher; but unless your Honor wishes to see some authority on the question, I don't care to discuss it any further.

Judge Neilson—The proposition stated is simply economy of time.

Mr. Evarts—Your Honor sees my learned friend has sought to rely on some concurrence I have with him. I don't agree with him in the least.

Mr. Beach—No, I supposed you would concur with me in the point of evidence I have stated.

Mr. Evarts—If Mr. Beecher takes Mr. Tracy and says to him: "Mr. Moulton wishes to talk with you, or Mr. Robinson wishes to talk with you, and I wish to go in my behalf and talk with him," then what passed affects Mr. Beecher. The evidence is simply that Mr. Beecher said "consult with that gentleman, he is as good as any one, about your affairs."

The proposition you make to me, that you will have to tell him the truth, that constitutes no objection in my mind."

Judge Neilson—The question is whether the interview was had with the concurrence of Mr. Beecher or both parties.

Mr. Evarts—The question is whether Mr. Beecher is there present by that representation. Without that no evidence can be given against him, I submit—Whatever your Honor should recognize as a substitution, by an agent sent by Mr. Beecher to represent him in that interview. Now, that evidence is that these gentlemen wanted to talk with him about their relation to the scandal, and the only point upon which Mr. Moulton thought right to speak to Mr. Beecher was that in the consideration about their own affairs they might be able to tell Mr. Tracy concerning Mr. Beecher's affairs, and Mr. Beecher makes no objection to that. I submit there is not a particle of evidence beyond that.

Mr. Beach—Is it necessary for me to read this testimony again to your Honor?

Mr. Evarts—I heard it read before. That is the view I take of it.

Mr. Beach—You heard it read very unprofitably, because if there is anything apparent from the testimony of Mr. Moulton it is that the subject which was to be discussed in the proposed interview with Mr. Tracy was that which related to the interests of Mr. Beecher. There is not a single intimation, not a word in what I have read here in any part of this testimony, to indicate that the subject of the interview or of the advice of Mr. Woodruff to Mr. Moulton to take counsel had any relation whatever to the charges made in the Woodhull publication, or to the remarks made in the Woodhull publication connected either with Mr. Tilton or with Mr. Moulton.

Mr. Evarts—Have you read any word that you think is an authority to Mr. Tracy to act for Mr. Beecher?

Judge Neilson—I don't see the precise point. Any authority to Mr. Tracy? Authority to these persons to have an interview and to confer on this subject; and for that purpose to state the truth to a third person.

Mr. Evarts—But does that prove that it was the truth?

Judge Neilson—Oh! no.

Mr. Evarts—We don't know what took place.

Judge Neilson—That is the point.

Mr. Evarts—The point is that you must get Mr. Beecher there, somehow or other, or else what took place is of no consequence.

Judge Neilson—I see; that is your point. We will now adjourn. [To the jurors.] Please be here punctually to-morrow morning at eleven o'clock.

Mr. Mallison (Clerk)—This Court stands adjourned to Thursday at eleven o'clock.

FOURTEENTH DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

MR. TILTON ON THE STAND.

IMPORTANT SPEECHES BY MR. EVARTS AND MR. PRYOR—IS A HUSBAND INCOMPETENT TO PROVE HIS WIFE'S DISHONOR?—THE MOST INTERESTING AND IMPORTANT QUESTION RAISED DURING THE TRIAL.

It has been known for days that Mr. Tilton would be called as a witness, and it was anticipated that no effort would be left untried to prevent his acceptance as a competent person to testify. The first indication of the approaching contest was the entrance of the lawyers' clerks with arms full of bulky law books, and hostilities were fairly opened soon after noon. Mr. Woodruff had stepped down from the witness chair, and there was a hurried consultation among the plaintiff's counsel. Then suddenly, at a sign from Mr. Fullerton, Mr. Tilton arose from his seat and stepped quickly to the vacant chair, amid the surprised murmurs of the audience. "I offer Mr. Tilton as a witness," said Mr. Fullerton, quietly. "But stop a moment," expostulated Mr. Evarts; "we object to him." Then followed a momentary scene of confusion in the space assigned to the lawyers. The clerks of the counsel sprang up and began the removal of the legal volumes from the floor to the tables upon which they were spread open at selected places; the lawyers on each side consulted among themselves earnestly; the jurymen wearily changed their positions in their chairs, and the audience sat almost breathless, craning their necks and awaiting eagerly the first note of the struggle.

Without formality Mr. Evarts began his argument against the competency of Mr. Tilton as a witness. In the mean time the plaintiff sat in the witness chair squarely facing the audience for the first time since the beginning of the trial, and therefore the object of general observation. He had not removed his overcoat, which he wore thrown open loosely, and he also continued to wear his gloves, as he usually does in the court-room. Mr. Evarts began his argument at 12:10, and had not concluded at recess—1 o'clock. He was earnest and eloquent, and the jury and audience listened with quiet attention. Recess came, and Mr. Evarts was not half done. The interval over, he resumed, but the witness chair was vacant, and Mr. Tilton sat beside his counsel. During the address, which lasted nearly two hours, there were several faint expressions of an inclination to applaud among the spectators, but with that exception perfect quiet reigned, and the last hour of Mr. Evarts's argument was delivered without interruption.

It had been taken for granted that Mr. Beach would reply to Mr. Evarts, and it was therefore a surprise when Gen. Pryor arose, bowed to the Court, and proceeded to speak. Up to this time Gen. Pryor had not taken an active public part in the case, and there was, therefore, considerable curiosity to hear him. It did not take many moments to see that he was an eloquent orator. His declamation is eccentric, his gesticulation earnest and profuse, and his temperament evidently is nervously excitable. At times he bends forward and lowers his voice almost to a whisper. Then, suddenly, as he becomes aroused, his Indian-like figure straightens, his face lights up with intense earnestness, and his voice rings out clearly as a bell. Sometimes he speaks very slowly, long pauses occurring between his sentences, but at other times the words flow from his mouth without effort, and his delivery is wonderfully rapid. Gen. Pryor had not finished speaking at the hour of adjournment.

The last moments of Wednesday's session were occupied by an argument regarding the admission of Franklin Woodruff's testimony relating to a meeting at which Mr. Beecher was not present. The decision was postponed to Thursday morning, when Judge Neilson said that he had decided to admit the testimony objected to by the defense. Mr. Woodruff therefore resumed his seat in the witness chair and Judge Fullerton continued the examination. A part of Mr. Woodruff's testimony which attracted considerable attention was the statement that Mr. Tilton told Mr. Tracy that the crime with which he charged Mr. Beecher was adultery, but the woman was not named. Mr. Tracy conducted the cross-examination, entering fully into events before briefly narrated by Mr. Woodruff. Judge Neilson had explained previously that it might not be best to enter into any explanation of Mr. Tracy's professional conduct, as he was not on trial and needed no vindication; and therefore that subject was not pressed further than was necessary.

THE PROCEEDINGS.

The day's work began on Thursday with a long decision by Judge Neilson on a question, raised the previous evening, as to the admissibility of testimony concerning the interview between Mr. Moulton, Mr. Franklin Woodruff and Gen.

Tracy. The pith of the question—as of several others which have taken much time for their discussion and decision—was whether Mr. Beecher was connected with the conversation. Counsel for the defense objected to the testimony on the ground that Mr. Beecher had nothing to do with the meeting. The Court overruled the objection. Mr. Beach then called attention to what he deemed unnecessary and in some respects unjust newspaper comments on the trial, and wanted them stopped, or at least limited.

THE MOULTON-TRACY-WOODRUFF INTERVIEW ADMITTED.

Judge Neilson—I have given consideration to the question presented last evening and, in the first place, I think all notion of the professional relation on the part of Mr. Tracy is to be dismissed from the question as not necessary to it. I think we cannot recognize that he was there in a professional capacity. In the next place, as to the course of business in view of the decisions which have been made, I have not, at any time, decided, and of course could not, that a witness might not state an interview with another person, and then the fact that he repeated that to the party in interest. That is done every day; and ordinarily the mere suggestion of counsel that he purposes to pursue it and connect it, is deemed sufficient, and that act on the part of counsel, where he has the confidence of the Court, would ordinarily be regarded as sufficient to justify that inquiry, first, as to the conversation between the witness and the third person, and afterward repeating it to the party in interest. What might look as a decision of the Court was simply a direction, acquiesced in by the counsel, and with a view to save time, and so it is that we have saved time by going directly to the question whether a conversation had with a third person was repeated to the defendant, understood by him, and what was said or done by him in that relation; otherwise it would involve a repetition of the same thing. That, as I say, was a mere direction with a view to save time, and it was acquiesced in by counsel. The question now presented is, however, somewhat different. I have gone over the testimony carefully, and the question, of course, must be decided with a view to the proofs now before us, and I gather from those proofs very clearly that the former witness stated to the defendant that he had had conversation with various persons, alluding to his partners, and gave them to understand that there was a sense of unpleasantness and uneasiness in respect to it, and he desired some relief in some way, some conference with some wise person touching the answers he should give to the importunities he met with in respect to the scandal published in the papers. The evidence shows that upon that conference with the defendant it was agreed that Mr. Tracy should be consulted, and I regard that precisely as that the parties might agree that any layman of respectability might be consulted in respect to it. There was an agreement with this the present witness and Mr. Tracy to confer, and they did confer, and further, it appears from the evidence that after that conference it was reported to the defendant, and he approved of it and adopted it; and so, speaking simply with reference to the evidence before us, I find it my duty to overrule this objection and receive the evidence. The counsel will take an exception.

Mr. Everts—Your Honor understands that we except to the decision.

Judge Neilson—Yes, Sir.

MR. MORRIS NOT DISCOURTEOUS TO MR. BEECHER.

Mr. Beach—I am obliged once again to draw your Honor's attention to an ungrateful subject. You will remember that, some days ago, being dissatisfied with the comments which were daily attached in the publication by THE TRIBUNE of the proceedings of this trial, on behalf of the plaintiff I protested against the reports of that paper being received under the official sanction of this Court as an official report.

Judge Neilson—That was rather as to the introductory comments. was it not?

Mr. Beach—Yes, Sir. Now, I am furnished this morning with what purports to be Part 1st of the trial of Henry Ward Beecher, and it is inscribed "An Official Verbatim Report." I have not had time to examine in detail the proceedings contained in this pamphlet, but we have detected on the face of these pages several inaccuracies and omissions, which we think do great injustice to the cause of the plaintiff, and with permission, Sir, very briefly I will present one or two examples of the manner in which this report is prepared and presented to the public under the approval, apparently, of your Honor. First, in regard to counsel—and I refer but to one instance, Sir, in that relation. On page 152 of this pamphlet, speaking of an introduction which occurred between Mr. Beecher and two of the counsel of the plaintiff, of whom Mr. Morris was one, this pamphlet proceeds to say :

The recess was marked by an incident which removes all doubt concerning Ex-Judge Morris's feelings in regard to Mr. Beecher. As soon as Judge Neilson announced that the regular intermission would be taken, Mr. Morris stepped over to Mr. Porter and called his attention to one of the answers made by the witness. Mr. Beecher, observing Mr. Morris in conversation with his counsel, passed a jocular remark to him, but Mr. Tilton's counsel deliberately continued his conversation with Ex-Judge Porter. Mr. Beecher withdrew with heightened color. Ex-Judge Morris does not hesitate to denounce the pastor of Plymouth Church in private as well as in public.

Of course, Sir, I was not an observer of that interview, or if near enough to observe it I did not notice it ; but I am authorized to say upon the part of Judge Morris that it is an entirely inaccurate report of what occurred. Mr. Morris was addressing to Mr. Porter some question of interest, and in the pursuit of the inquiries and the answers, Mr. Beecher approached the gentlemen and made some light and trivial remark which did not require from Mr. Morris immediate attention, and the conversation between him and Mr. Porter was pursued without the slightest intention upon the part of Judge Morris of manifesting any incivility towards Mr. Beecher. And I may be permitted to say, Sir, that I know nothing in the relations of the plaintiff's counsel to the defendant in this case which would call from them for any expression of discourtesy or incivility toward Mr. Beecher. No matter what may be the merits of this trial, Sir; no matter what may be its result, nevertheless we do not belong to that class of the profession how adopt all the vindictiveness and passions which a litigation between parties may happen to excite with others. And, so far as I am concerned, Sir, I am very free to say that upon no occasion, as a gentleman, should I consider myself justified in offering the least rudeness towards the defendant in this action. And as to the allegation, Sir, in the concluding phrase of the quotation I have read, I am authorized by Judge Morris to say that it is utterly untrue that he denounced Mr. Beecher in public or private. He would consider it, Sir, as an unjustifiable course upon his part, whatever may be his views in regard to the truth of this litigation. In regard to witnesses, Sir—

Mr. Shearman—At page 52 there is a similar misstatement.

Mr. Beach—I am asked by Mr. Shearman, upon the part of the defendant, to refer to page 52, and see if it is a similar statement.

Mr. Shearman—Misstatement.

DESCRIPTION OF MOULTON AS A WITNESS.

Mr. Beach—Well, Sir, the report, on page 52, so far as it relates to Mr. Beecher and myself, may be substantially true, but the spirit of it, so far as I am able now to read it, is entirely at variance with the motives and, I think, with the actions both of Mr. Beecher and of myself, to whom he was being introduced. I may say, Sir, perhaps, with propriety here, that the counsel upon the part of the defendant were courteous enough before making that introduction, to myself, and I believe, also, to Judge Morris, to ask if it would be in any sense disagreeable to us, and I never before, Sir, having had the pleasure of an introduction to Mr. Beecher, was quite happy to welcome the occasion for that event. It is a great mistake, Sir, to suppose that the counsel on the part of the plaintiff enter into any of the asperities which may have been created in the bosoms of others, out of this most unfortunate transaction. We are here, Sir, to discharge a professional duty and to discharge it in the ordinary manner, without indicating what may be our personal sentiments and feeling in regard to the whole transaction. On page 72, Sir, in commenting upon the testimony of Mr. Moulton, this pamphlet says, speaking of that gentleman:

There is a painful lack of earnestness in the man if his bearing does him no injustice. When the gravity of the issue is considered his replies to the most vital questions often seem flippant. He asserts that the greatest preacher in America confessed adultery to him, and his manner is that of a listless gentleman giving his verdict upon a novel brand of champagne.

On page 97, Sir, another paragraph fell under my observation :

The witness's anxiety to play his best cards was painfully evident. He dragged in Dr. Storrs's name before it was time, and strove to anticipate the purpose of his counsel.

