Issue Ability® 93

TO: ALL AUDITORS

We get out of touch with you from time to time and wonder how you're doing and what you're doing. We know we have not always been such responsible communication terminals as we should be, but reports of your activities are a vital help to us and we appreciate your letters.

We'd like to hear more about your group activities, too. Have you been doing group processing? If not, what are some of the barriers that stand in your way? Have your groups been increasing or decreasing?

Perhaps, like most auditors, there are some people in your files who were once active members of your group but have not been coming around. This is the old story of ARC breaks. But there's a way for you to handle this and get those people back on the road to clear. By letter, phone or direct communication this procedure works. Remember, every person is an individual case so never generalize. Consider each person as he is right now.

Up the R in ARC by getting him to talk and find out his reality. Get him to tell you what you have done wrong, from his reality. Keep the Auditor's Code here and do not evaluate or invalidate his reality by explanations or justifications. Just acknowledge it and get him to tell you when it happened and how it is now. These two questions only, will clear up the motivator side of an ARC break. Don't forget, however, that there is always an overt of some kind connected with an ARC break. It's very important to get the overt act side by asking your group member what he has done wrong in Scientology. He may consider that he has committed an overt act against you and has been holding that against you more than anything you have done. Again ask him only two things about it: "What was that" and "How is it now?"

GROUP PROCESSING

(Editorial Note: In view of the fact that this P.A.B. is very short could we invite you to read it twice?)

Group Auditing is as effective as we can continue control over the group.

Control can be of attention, person (body) and thinkingness. Should any of these break down, auditing value stops.

Attention is the easiest - thinkingness is the hardest.

Order of control factors available to auditor-group or individual auditor - is:

1. ATTENTION
2. PERSON
3. THINKINGNESS

Thus the group auditor has only available to him in any group which contains new or unclear people

1. ATTENTION
2. PERSON

We see thus at once that a significant process aimed at thinkingness in a new or rugged group or one which contains any rough case must NOT BE run.

Let's audit the WHOLE group always - not just the disciplined ones. So we must delete all thinkingness processes from group auditing - and that is quite a trick.

Here are some Model Processes in Order:

1. "Look at (indicated wall, etc.)"
2. "Take your right hand and touch your head (chair, right foot, left hand, right knee, etc.)"
3. "Feel your chair."
   "Look at the front wall."
   Run one command then the other one time each - alternating.
4. Put up two objects, right and left sides of the room, in view of the group. Command: "Look at object one. Look at object two."
5. Hand mimicry session (IMAGE) from Group Auditor.
6. Hand each of the group members an object. The auditor also takes one. Then the group is made to do a simple mimicry motion of his object by the auditor. The auditor repeats his motion with the object until the WHOLE group has done it right.
7. Group standing mimics the auditor.
8. Verbal mimics. Beware of the "repeater technique."

As each one of these could be itself a total of group auditing, the length of time it is to be run is long. You would be surprised how a group's interest stays up. (The reason group auditors vary commands is that they are afraid that interest will flag.)

The institution of the Assistant Group Auditor must here come into his own. Group chairs are widely spaced so that the assistant group auditor can walk through. Anyone not doing the command is manually guided into doing it by the assistant group auditor.

The auditor asks only "did he do the command", not "Did the command have an effect upon his health." If the former persists, the latter follows.

The use of significance in a command puts auditor's thinkingness beyond control.

Hence "See that wall, put it there" is wrong with the "put it there." The preclear has to THINK that. The auditor cannot be sure he did and cannot enforce it easily.

All group auditing is done from Tone 40.0.

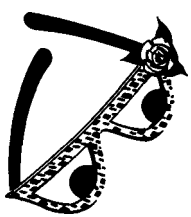

I have never written a book about group auditing. Now that we have found that from control proceeds communication ability I can.
