THE

BANNER OF ISRAEL.

A Weekly Journal

ADVOCATING THE

IDENTITY OF THE BRITISH NATION

WITH THE

LOST TEN TRIBES OF ISRAEL.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

VOLUME X., 1886

London:
ROBERT BANKS & SON, RACQUET COURT, FLEET STREET, E.C.
F. W. PARRY & CO., 29, PATERNOSTER ROW, E.C.

Digitized by Google

THE N. Y. PUBLIC LIBRARY
82742
ASTOR, LENOX AND TILDEN FOUNDATIONS
1903

INDEX.

Leading Articles by the Editor.

	PAGE
Afghanistan, British Policy in	447
Africa, New Protectorate in South ...	461
An Error Which Seems Ineradicable ...	385
Anglo-Israelite Mother to Her Son, An ...	46
Anglo-Phobia	414
Another Troubler of Israel	298
Bath Opponent, Our	159
Beaconsfield, England on Lord	254
Bible and Its Testimony to Our Identity With Israel, The	438
Birth of Israel's New African State ...	445
"Blessed Shalt Thou be in the City" ...	178
"Blindness in Part is Happened to Israel"	217
Blind Led by Paths They Have Not Known, The	277
Blood of the Martyrs is the Seed of the Church, The	479
Book of Common Prayer, The	392
Britain's Hope	49
Britain, Smaller and Greater	253
British Annexation, Fresh	429
British Influence in India, The Spread of	422
British Empire, The Decline and Fall of the	272
British Law in Ireland, Clothed in a Foreign Garb	157
British Protestant Answers the "BANNER OF ISRAEL" 199, 216, 286, 296, 339,	401
British Power in the East	493
British Nation an Idolatrous People? Is the	216
British Nation Starved and Therefore Conquered, The	497
Burmah Annexed, Upper	37
Burmah Annexed? Why Was Upper ...	77
Canadian Pacific Railway	311
Church of Christ, The Claims of the Heathen and Mohammedan World Upon the ...	50
Church of England, A Nonconformist Minister on the	58
Church of the Firstborn	88
Church Missionary Society, Meetings of the	22
Chain of Fortifications that Secure India to Us	494
Chosen, Chastened, Crowned	258
Clerical Objections 90, 110, 180, 199, 216, 446,	464
Col-Indies and their Lessons in Geography	358
Colonial and Indian Empire, How We Got Them	413
Colonials at the Exhibition...	383
Colonial Possessions, Our	219
"Come and See the Place Where the Lord Lay"	270
Comfort Under National Troubles ...	226
Coming Family Show, The	174
Coming "Mighty tempest" in Europe, The	381
Correction and a Challenge, A	458
Conclusion of the First Decade of the BANNER OF ISRAEL, The	509
Constantinople, The Destiny of	421
Constantinople Must Be British When the Turk Vacates	430
Constantinople, British Policy Respecting	447
Cry of Heathendom, The Urgent	96
Cui Bono? 78, 91,	138
Cyprus	390
Daniel's Image, The Ten Toes of	215
Daniel's Vision of the Four Beasts 339,	395
Disturber of the Peace of the World, The Chief	365
Defect of Gladstone's Government ...	261
Domination of the World by the English People	63
Early British Church, The 127,	144
Eastern "Conflagration" Impending, The	62
East, The Inevitable Struggle in the ...	430
Egypt and India	431
Egypt, British Policy Respecting	447
Egyptian Trouble Should Be Settled, How the	462
Elections, The Coming	261
Empire in the World, The Mightiest 14,	405
England and France	453
England's Greatness, American View of ...	417
English Language in India, The Spread of	422
English Language in Japan, The Spread of	486
Ephraim	393
Esquimault and Egypt	406
"Eureka," The English Churchman and ...	80
Exhibitions	174
Family Herald, The 193,	200
Favourites of Fortune	38
Federation, Anglo-Saxon and Greco-Latin	478
Federation, Colonial and Indian Exhibition Points to	207
Federation, Duke of Cambridge on ...	342
Federation—Is It a Prophetic necessity?	317
Federation Must Be Universal and Mandatory	333
Federation, Professor Seely on	325
Federation—Testimony from the Cape ...	271
Field for British Emigration	109
Fifty Years' Progress	343
Five-and-Thirty Years Ago	273
French Treaty with Madagascar	117
Frenchman's Lament, A	198
Froude, J. A., Explains Why Races Die Out, &c, ...	475
Gate, New Pacific	326
"Gate" of the Colonies of France, The ...	485
Girdle Round the Earth, The	153
God's Covenant With Abraham, and Its Breach	121
God's England	211
Gospel Introduced into Britain, The—When, and By Whom?	181
Grand Old Book, The	73
Great Britain's Answer to Mr. Gladstone	301
Grouping of the Nations for War, The ...	496
"Haters of the Lord Without a Cause, The"	296
"He Hath Not Dealt So With Any Nation"	280
Her Majesty's Dominions	334
Home Rule for Ireland	133
Home Rule Bill Must Lead to Separation	229
House of Joseph, The	375
"I Have Given Them Thy Word" 166,	167
"I Was in Prison, and Ye Came Unto Me"	166
Idle Speculation, The (Christian Leader)	391
Idolatry	211
Imperial Consolidation or Disruption ...	189
Imperial Democracy in the Throes of the General Election	337
Imperial Inheritance, Our	205
Imperial Question, the Great	325
India, Mr. B. St. Hilaire on	471
India's Chain of Fortifications	494
Inevitable Struggle in the East, The ...	430
Ireland, Two Nations in	221
Irish Foreigners? Are the	197
Irish Trouble, The End of	21
Irish Trouble—Ulster Will Fight	214
Israel and the "Porte"	390
Israel Hiding Herself	453
Israel in South Africa	213
Israel to be a Powerful Nation During Exile	190
Israel's Daughter Lands	220
Israel's Empire Grows, How	29
Israel's Empire Advances in South Africa, How 238,	415
Israel's Influence on the Continent ...	165
Israel's Mercantile Marine	118
Israel's Missionary Work	138
Israel's Navy, Strength of	477
Israel's Ocean Empire	245
Israel's Rule in India	230
Israel's Safety in Her Present Troubles ...	237
Israel's Wealth	415
Israel's Witnessing Function	173
Jewish Opinion in Respect to the Present Condition of the Ten Tribes	52
Judah Desiring to Return to Their Land From Russia and Roumania	396
Leaven	137
Legislative Union of the Three Kingdoms	125
Literal or Spiritual Interpretations? ...	414
"Look Here, Upon This Picture and On This"	416
Lord's Day, The	57
Lost Ten Tribes, The	182
Love, Trust, and Prayer	74
Master of Egypt and the Master of the Mediterranean, The	501
"Men's Hearts Failing Them for Fear" ...	449
Modern England Compared With Ancient Israel	359
Mother Country, The	344
Mother Country and Self-Governing Communities, The	357
National Transgression	51
New Hebrides, Sir H. Parkes on the ...	302
"Not Peace, But Respite from War" ...	470
Optimism	103
Orientation of British Churches, The ...	423
Palestine, The Capital of the Earth ...	472
Perplexity	69
Personal Iniquities	51
Pessimists Rebuked	118
Port Hamilton and Port Lazareff ... 341,	498
Prayer of His Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury	220
Prayer of His Grace the Archbishop of York	218
Protestantism in Danger? Is Our... ...	149
Queen Victoria's Eleventh Parliament ...	61
Queen Victoria's Empire	278
Rapture of the Saints, The	150
Real Presence, The	487
Religious Tract Society's Testimony ...	151
"Reviewer" Reviewed	30
Revolution in Bulgaria	373
Righteous Nation, The	101
Riots in London	85
Russia and the Coming Universal War ...	469
Russia and France Against Germany ...	389
Sabbath Sign, The (Isa. lviii.)	268
Salonica and Constantinople, Neutral and Free...	45
Scattered Children of the Mother Country	206
Sick Man's Capital, and the Strong Man's Empire, The	475
Signature of the Death Warrant of the Porte	390
Silver Morn, The—An Opponent ... 79,	170
Temperance Congress, The	417
Tenth Volume, Our	5
Teutonic Theory, The	110
Tithes	48
"That Speculation" Again	111
"The Lord Both of the Dead and Living"	130
"The Lord Hath Need of Him"	270
"Thine Exactors I Will Make Righteousness"	294
"To Whom Were the Promises Spoken?"	418
Two Great Rising Powers in the East ...	168
Transfers of Land	96
"Union Jack" Everywhere, The ... 198,	241
Uzzah	476
Vast Society for Propagating Christian Knowledge Amongst the Nations, The...	312
Victorian Era, The	285
Warder of the Balkans, The	293
Wilkinson Again, John	126
Withington Manuscript Magazine, The ...	496
Why Must Israel Be Redeemed?	414
World's Carriers	411
Y Cymry Fo Am Byth	454
Zaphnath Paaneah	167

Digitized by Google

General Articles.

PAGE

Administration of Justice in Morocco ... 294
All Europe Stiff With Armour 516
"Anglo-Israelite" on the validity of our Evidences 468
Anglo-Israel Free Distribution Fund 59, 83, 99, 147, 187, 227, 275, 315, 355, 402, 442, 480
Anglo-Israel Associations:—
Bristol and Clifton 59, 83
British Guiana 282
Cape Town... 295
Leamington 479
Liverpool 123
Manchester and Salford 427, 483
Metropolitan 232, 246, 451, 481
Morton 458
Sheffield 451
Anglo-Israel's Geographical Position(Blore) 161
Anthropology of the British Islands (A. B. Prowse, M.D.) 42
Appeal for Workers (Horner) 355
Archbishop of Canterbury on Assyria, Egypt and Palestine 384
Area of the Empire... 343
Army, Distribution of the British... ... 451
Armies of Native States in India (Sir S. Jung) 186
Badges for Anglo-Israelites ... 123, 443
Bible Studies... 435
Bishop Titcomb, President of the Metropolitan Anglo-Israel Association ... 246, 451
Black Ingratitude (Shaw) 463
Blind Evidence:—
Bishop Ryle's Testimony... 224
Bishop of Carlisle, The 289
Personal Recollections (Rugg) 442
"Record," The 279
Sydney, From 40
Wilson, The Rev. J. M., Clifton College 495
Wright, The Rev. M. (S. London) ... 221
Boycotting foretold in the Bible 123
"Britain," not "England" 41
Britain's Greatness (Blore)... 145
Britain, Greater 194, 200
Britain, The name of a Syrian village ... 212
British Empire & Foreign Affairs (Cowen) 54. 66
British Empire, Archbishop of Canterbury on the 281, 312
British Policy in the East, Colonel R. D. Osborn on... 447
Christian Deals Another Blow, The ... 518
Church of Christ 89, 118, 139
Church of England, A German's view ... 400
Church of England. Testimony of a Jew 43
Church of God 87, 155, 439
Church, Early British 127, 144
Church and State and Disestablishment 169, 175, 193, 201
Church of Israel, The 142
Colonial Possessions, Our 219
Coronation Stone, The 419
Difficulties Answered 78, 180, 182, 199, 368, 465
Disestablishment 105
Earthquakes shall be in divers places, Great 407
Eastern Question According to the Rev. W. Frith, M.A., The 513
Edom 339
Egypt and the Soudan 38
Egypt Exploration Fund (Petrie's Discoveries) 262
Egypt, The Revd. A. C. Macdonald on ... 160
Egypt's value to Israel (Bismarck) ... 187
Emigration to Australia 355
England's Sea Kings... 65
Family Show, The (D. T.) 274
Federation, Considerations & Suggestions on 209
Federation, Froude's Oceana and 143
Federation, Imperial (Tupper) 443
Federation, Military steps towards ... 119
Federation, Postal 93
Gate, New, Port Hamilton... 457
Gates and their defences 399

PAGE

Germany not of Israel 20
German Lack of Reverence for the Lord's Day 514
Gleanings from Darjeeling 19
God-given Pastors After His Own Heart, The 504
Gold Fields in South Africa, New... ... 464
Goshen, Situation of 451
Gospel Carried by Israel has Benefited the Heathen, How the 502
Great and Mighty Nation, A (Cavill) ... 416
Great March of the Kimbri 420
Growth of Glasgow 451
Home Rule and the Bible 348
Identity Discussion (Northampton) ... 183
Israel and Greece (Cavill) 70
Israelitish Custon (throwing old shoes after a bride) 58, 107
Israel Dwelling Alone (Prof. Seeley) 70, 128
Israel Grows, How 443
Israel Keepeth the Sabbath, &c. 480
Israel in Britain 455
Israel the Church of God (Wishart) ... 439
Israel's "Hope and Destiny" 275
Israel's Scripture and Prayer Union 59, 99 147, 187, 227, 275, 315, 355, 403, 442, 481, 500
Israel's Scripture-Readers 514
"Japhetic" March of the Anglo-Saxon Race, The 506
"Jesus" 122
Jews and Israelites 353
Jewish Population in the World ... 43, 171
Jubilee of 1810 451
Judah Walking to Israel 154
Kingsley on the Spanish Armada... ... 451
Lectures and Sermons:—
Adam to Victoria (Hammond) 115
British and American Israelites (Dr. Forrest) 374
British Nation Identified as Lost Israel (Boyd) 432
Colonies of the Anglo-Saxons, The (Roe) 263
Debtor to the Greeks and Barbarians (Dr. Maclaren) 67
Federation of the British Races (De Ridder) 456
Israel and the Fifth or Stone Kingdom (Admiral Dunn) 291, 473, 488
Israel's Church and State, &c. (Philo-Israel) 169, 175, 193, 201
John Bull (Max O'Rell) 242
Losing and the Winning Side, The ... 471
New Zealand (Clayden) 491
Our Identity (Dr. Grant) 283
Political Sermon (Anglo-Indian) 81, 86
Proof of O. I. Deduced from Scriptural and Current Events (Osborne) ... 154
Propagation of the Gospel (Canon Macdonnell) 370
Titcomb Bishop (Speech) 246
Russian Question, The 349
Scriptural Objections (Dr. Grant ... 92
Secret of England's Greatness, The (J. G. Taylor) 203
Ten Tribes of Israel, The (Dr. Weaver) 53
Testimony of Opponents (Pettigrew)... 49
Testimony of Philology (Pearson) ... 49
Testimony of Recent Events (McIntosh) 49
The Lost Ten Tribes (Rev. R. Douglas) 140
"Why are ye Fearful &c.," (Rev. C. G. Ashwin) 94
Letter to an American Shepherd 407
Light Illustrating the Trinity 243
London 225
Lord's Incompleted Work, The 503
Maories, The 155
Massey on War, Gerald 65
Mission Work, Fruits of 275
Missionary Nation, England the 120
Dr. Wild Replies 397
Our Identity, Brighton Grammar School... 235
Our Identity, A German's Views on ... 269
Our Place in History, &c. 113
Poetry:—
A Peep into the Future (Crosthwait) ... 472
Britain's Hope 49

PAGE

Britannia's Birthplace (S. T. A.) ... 203
Federation 143
Lay of the Primrose (T. W. B.)... ... 164
Plea for Israel, A 385
Rule Britannia (Omega)... 363
The Lily and the Rose 315
Political Idolatry 164
Population in European States 144
Progress:—
Canada and the United States 436
Charleston, U.S. 331
Epiphany Sunday Offerings (Bowden)... 283
Germany 147
Lincolnshire 291
New Zealand (T. M. Gee)... ...25, 58, 424
New Zealand (A. Hay) 74
North Devon 436
North India ...' 384
Port Hope, Ontario, Canada 98
Reported by a Clergyman 374
South Africa (Bombardier) 98
Surbiton-hill (Palmer) 283
Tunbridge Wells 459
Protestants of Great Britain 211
Pyramid:—
Symbolical Use of Numericals and Measures (Wood) 398
Church, and the Great 450
Queen Victoria and the Coronation Stone 419
Queen Victoria's Empire 278
Rapture of the Saints (Crosthwait) ... 240
Rev. C. W. Hickson, M.A., on the Promises to the Ten Tribes, The 512
Rev. Eliezer Bassin on Gen. xlix. 22—25 519
Rock-cut Statues of Bahmian 483
Roe, the Rev. Henry... ... 329, 371, 384
"Rome Triumphs," Pessimist View ... 129
Royal Naval Protestant Reformation Society, The 490
Russia and Abyssinia (Horner) 353
Russian Advance in Central Asia 115
Russian Question, The (Anglo-Israel, Brisbane) 349
"Sabbath, A World's" 83
Sabbath-Day in Italy 243
Scriptural Enquiries (Gee)... ... 25, 424
Shadowy Imitations of the British Empire, The 517
Shemitic or Japhetic. Which? (Osborne) 227
"Shiloh" 267
Sovereign—an International Coin... ... 267
Spiritual Benefit Derived from O. I. 114, 455
Stanley, The late Dean 353
Stone of Bethel, The 154
Tahphanes, Pharaoh's House in 262
Tarshish (Griffiths) 113
Testimony:—
Blackwood, S. A. 71
British and Foreign Bible Society ... 106
British India, Baron V. Hubner on ... 266
Cape Town... 295
Foreign Aid Society 305
Goe, F. F. Bishop 71
Hatter, By a 212
Law v. License 410
Lloyd's Register 254
Port Elizabeth Telegraph 271
Propagation of the Gospel 370
"The English as Rulers of Other Races," Sir Charles Warren on 505
Tract Distribution in India 151
Turkey, The Territorial Losses of 443
Unity of the Empire (Cavill) ... 130, 346
War Clouds 449
What's in a Name? 40, 153
When was the Gospel Introduced in Britain? 181
Zululand Again 233

Reviews.

Ancestry or Origin of Our East Indian Emigrants (Bronkhurst)... 467
Anglo-Israelism Examined in the Light of the More Sure Word of Prophecy (F. H. White) 163

Digitized by Google

PAGE

Anglo-Israel Almanack and Diary for 1887 507
Answer to the Eastern Question, &c. ... 195
British Church, the Oldest Christian Church in the World, The (J. Ball) ... 378, 387
Conquest's, Dr., Translation of the Scriptures (Greig) 483
Ephraim-England (Rev. R. Douglas) 298, 314
Great Pyramid and Freemasonry (Chapman) 440
History of the House of Joseph 440
Jehovah Triumphant (J. Leechman) 20, 27
Lost Israel Found (Ingersol) 331
Messenger, the Church, the Throne, the Empire, The 420
Metric System, The (Giles)... ... 107, 115
New Light (A. E. I.) 106
New Revelation; or, Daniel and John Revealed (Crossthwait) 481
New Testament Truth (J. G. Taylor) ... 171
Present-day Problems (Cox) 315
Re-appearing of the Ark of the Covenant (Denny) 440
Sea-life Twenty Years Ago (Bayley) ... 440

Correspondence.

Apocryphal Books of the Bible (Stuart) ... 131
Billington, The Rev. J. 420
Bella Coola Indians (German) 99
Casiphia (Hanan) 147
Caughey and the Identity, The Rev. J. (Chapman)... 427
Col. Hadfield on Zech. xii. 7 123
Col. Hadfield on Church Disestablishment 459
Convert on Board the Liguria (Anderson) 123
Constantinople (Camp) 482
Disestablishment (Col. Hadfield)... ... 468
"Documentary and Monumental Proofs" Wanted 131
Edom (Christopher)... 339
Edinburgh Exhibition (Colquhoun) ... 371
Egypt's Place in the Bible 67
Empire of the Queen, The (Wells) ... 482
English, the Universal Language 227
Ephraim-England (St. George Priaulx) 354, 468
Extract from Yeast 402
Feature of Colonial Life, A 468
Glaze of Pottery, The 371
Historical Error (Goodman v. Ballard) ... 75
Home Rule and Federation (Armour) ... 300
India 441
Israel (C. Pearse v. the Rev. A. Isaacs) ... 35
International Postage Stamp (Dr. Forrest) 300
"Jacob's Trouble" (A. E. I.) 212
Jeremiah xxx. 6, 7 (A. Hay) 75
Jews and Israelites (Thomas) ... 353, 354
Locusts 482, 519
Lost Tribes, The (W. A. C.) 283
Loyalty in Canada... 379
Maori Race in New Zealand (H. S.) 131, 155
Messenger, The 441
Metric System (Dr. Forrest) 43
Mogul Architecture (Barnes) 226
Nestorians (C. E. P.) 459
Port St. John, South Africa (J. S. Anderson) 420
Queen of Ireland, The (McLaughlan) 146, 147
Re The Rev. H. Roe (Osborne) 371
Sects, New (Dr. Hanan) 75
Secretary Wanted for the F. D. Fund ... 131
Tithes (Denny) 83
Tudor, Stuart and Guelph Dynasties (Camp) 468
What the Bible has Done for Britain (Wells) 300

Obituary.

Banks, Robert 35
Brebber, Captain John 491
Cooke, Miss E. (Simla) 362
Dunn, Rear Admiral M. B.... 427
Tredwen, R. 362

Anderson, John S.

Emigration to Hokianga, New Zealand ... 122
England and Her Colonies... 112

PAGE

Gentiles' Opinion of Great Britain (19th Century) 177
Gog v. Israel 274
Literal v. Spiritual Israel 114

Barnes, Geo. O.

True Apostolic Succession 97, 102

Bassin, The Rev. E.

Signification of the Name Britain ... 98

Boyce, B.A., The Rev. T. W.

Britannia's Privilege... ... ... 15, 25
The Name of the Beast and the Number of His Name 313

Cachemaille, M.A., The Rev. A. J.

"Ye Are A Holy Nation"... 18

Cox, V. M.

Beecher as a Blind Witness, The Rev. H. W. 409
God's Ancient People 335
Present Day Problems and how Anglo-Israel Truth Explains and Solves Them 203, 221, 231, 239, 251, 255, 315
The Gradual Development of Israel ... 13

Fead, Lucy.

Until the Day Dawn and the Shadows Flee Away 518

Gass, F.

Church and Great Pyramid, The 450
Great Interior Angle, The 257
Interior of the Great Pyramid and the Earthly Lifetime of Christ 104
Israel's Church and State 35
King's Chamber and Base Line, The 360, 369
Israel's Evangelising Mission 467
Upper Horizontal Flooring and the Quadrature of the Circle 24

Gott, John T.

A Stirring Scene in the Camp of Israel ... 366
Testimony from Shakespeare 194
The River Euphrates 203
The Valley of Dry Bones 10

Grant, M.D., Surgeon-General J. M.

A Sanctuary for a little while 115
Ancient of days, The 327
"But that He should be made manifest to Israel," &c.... 274
Church and State 203
Did the Ten Tribes or a representative portion of them return with the Jews from Babylon under the Edict of Cyrus? 344, 368
Kingdom of God & the Church of God, The 118, 155
Leaven 195
Rudimentary Notes 192
The Church and Disestablishment... ... 32
The Two Houses of Israel 6
The Word of God and Anglo-Israelism ... 134
The Thorns and Pricks 437
"Until Shiloh Comes" 267
What was the position of Benjamin in the Kingdom of Judah? 382

Hanan, B. D., The Rev. Denis.

Appointed Place, The 511
Collect, Epistle and Gospel for the Second Sunday before Advent 490
Celt and Saxon 351
Eastern position, The 483
Extract from reflections in "Brown's Bible," printed in 1815 446
Kingdom of God and Church of God 87, 155
Metaphorical Gog 394
Nile Campaign 82
Over-ruled 378
"Rex Judœorum hic est" 14
The Eastward position 423
Vestiges of Lost Israel 371
Visit to Tara 207

PAGE

Hickson, M.A., The Rev. C. W.

Hosea II. 23, 34
The "Two Sticks 308, 321

Lamb, R.

Naked Savages 47

L. P.

"Sweet Singers of Israel"... 83
Thoughts and opinions 490

Onslow, D. A.

Israel's blessings, national and individual 8

Pearse, Caroline.

Greater Britain and the Bible ... 306, 319

Rush, E. M.

Sowing the Seed 72, 168, 234, 323, 330, 425, 448
The Church in Israel 142

Smyth, Professor C. P.

England and Ireland 162
Indian Mahommedan on England and Constantinople, An 338
James Fergusson's Death Reflected from India 311
The G. P. v. The Cabbala 9

Taylor, J. G.

Israel in Exile 318
A Canon's Canon 347
New Testament Notes 17, 26, 31, 41, 56, 63

Thomson, J.

Ancient British Laws 145
Blind Witness in the "Record," A ... 303
Dean Stanley on the Christian Church, The Late 426
Drunkards of Ephraim, and Israel's Poverty and Wealth 515
Extent, Trade, and Population of the British Empire 152
Federation, Considerations and Suggestions Respecting... 209
Irish Question, The 287
Military Powers of the British 191
Military Character and Weapons of the Ancient Britons 264
Nation-making, People-giving Race, The 434
"Old Moore" Prophesies Concerning Palestine and the Jews 480
Ornaments, Clothing, and Habits of the Ancient Britons 499
Some Evidence of the Phœnician Origin of the Irish 352, 362, 367, 376

Watcher, A.

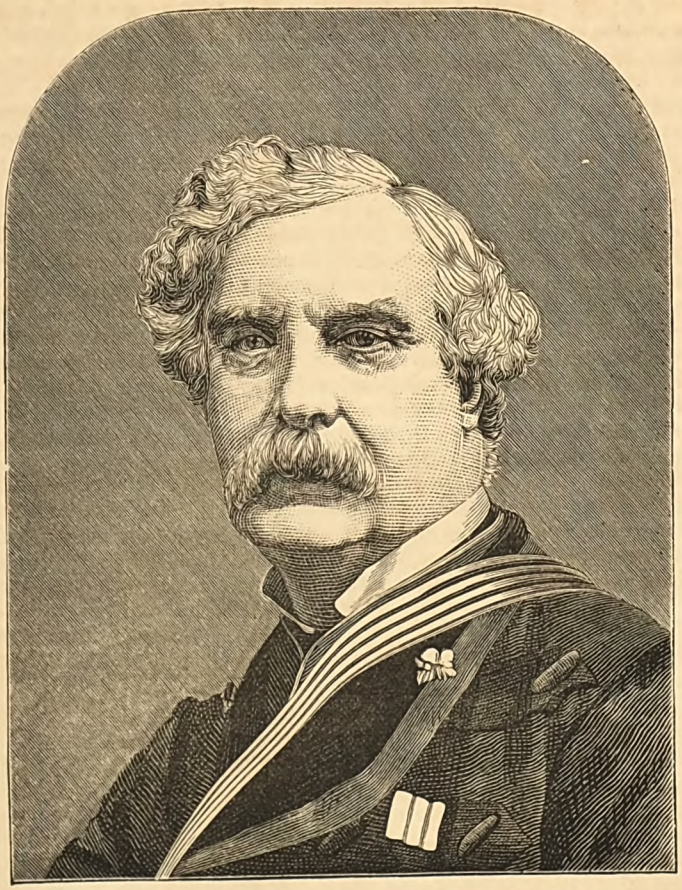
Assyrian Church, The 177
In the Promised Land 185
Lebanon District, The 283

Wilmshurst, E.

"Persia, Ethiophia and Libya with Them," etc. 386
The World Language of the Future 11, 24, 33, 39
Vestiges of Lost Israel in America 329, 335, 345. 361

Texts.

Gen. xviii. 18 ... 416
Gen. xlviii. ... 446
Gen. xlix. ... 451
Deut. xxviii. 3 ... 178
Deut. xxxii. 21 ... 162
Psa. xviii. 1—3... 74
Psa. cxlvii. 19, 20 280
Isa. v. 6, 7 ... 359
Isa. xlii. 16 ... 277
Isa. lviii. 13, 14... 268
Isa. lx. 17 ... 294
Jer. xxx. 67 ... 75
Jer. xxxi. 35, 36... 451
Ezek. xxxvii. 16 308, 321
Ezek. xxxviii. 5... 386
Hosea ii. .. 23, 24
Amos iv. 3 ... 483
Zech. xii. 7 ... 123
Matt. i. 21 ... 122
Matt. viii. 26 ... 94
Matt. xxi. 1 ... 270
Matt. xxiv. 14 ... 212
Matt. xxv. 36 ... 166
Matt. xxviii. 6 ... 270
Mark xi. 3 ... 270
Luke xix. 29 ... 270
Luke xxi. 2 ... 407
Luke xxi. 26 ... 449
John i. 31 ... 274
John xii. 14 ... 270
John xv. 24, 25... 290
Acts xiii. 46 ... 17
Acts xvi. 9 ... 96
Rom. xi. 25 ... 317
Rom. xiv. 9 ... 130
Gal. iii. 16 ... 418
1 Pet. ii. 9 ... 18
Rev. ii, 17, 18 ... 313



Digitized by Google

Kelsey / Vol. as 2

29

93

Digitized by Google

SURGEON-GENERAL J. M. GRANT, M.D.

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."

(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India.)

"And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the Forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS of the EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. X., NO. 471. Entered at Stationers' Hall.] WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 6, 1886 [DOUBLE NUMBER WITH PORTRAIT, 2*d*.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
Our Tenth Volume	5
The Two Houses of Israel. By Surgeon-General J. M. Grant, M.D.	6
Israel's Blessings, National and Individual. By Douglas A. Onslow	8
The Great Pyramid Versus the Cabbala. By Professor C. Piazzi Smyth, F.R.A.S.	9
The Valley of Dry Bones (Ezek. xxxvii.). By John T. Gott	10
The World Language of the Future. By E. Wilmshurst, Retford	11
The Gradual Development of Israel. By V. M. Cox	13
"Rex Judæorum Hic Est." By Rev. Denis Hanan, B.D.	14
Britannia's Privilege. By Rev. T. W. Boyce, B.A.	15
New Testament Notes. By J. G. Taylor.—Part XII.	17
"Ye Are . . An Holy Nation" (1 Pet. ii. 9). By Rev. A. J. J. Caehemaille, M.A.	18
Gleanings from Darjeeling	19
Review	20

OUR TENTH VOLUME.

WITH this number we commence a New Year, and enter on the tenth volume of THE BANNER OF ISRAEL. Ten years ago a friend who could not accept our views then, but now has nothing to say by way of opposition to them, remarked to us that he thought our ideas were a mere temporary whim on our part, and that if we were spared to meet him after ten years had elapsed, we should be the first to admit how erroneous had been our theories regarding the Ten Tribes, and how completely we had renounced "the craze." Ten years have gone by since that memorable conversation took place, and we desire to place on record in this, our first number of THE BANNER for 1886, that we are more satisfied to-day than we ever were before that the British nation, with its Colonies, is in very truth the Ten-Tribed House of Ephraim-Israel, and that ten years ago we had not the mass of fresh evidence to rely upon that we have now, to fortify us in our firm convictions. Surely our opponents must see how time has worked in our favour. Here is a subject which has withstood the opposition and ridicule of the best and wisest of our contemporaries for full ten years, and yet, in spite of all disadvantages, it has held its ground, it has won its way, it has constantly and earnestly enforced its views, and up to this hour, the arguments have never been fairly met by the opposition, which is now all but hushed and silent. And why is this? Because facts and current history are working in favour of Our Identity, and men cannot reasonably deny in face of them that we have the events of the day on our side! And what are these? There is the portentous, unceasing increase of our home population, calling for some outlet for its vast numbers outside its straitened house in these islands of the West. To meet the want, there is the ever-advancing Colonial Empire of the Queen in Australasia, Canada, South and Central Africa, inviting emigrants to occupy their boundless prairies, and mountain regions, where temperate climates, suited to the Anglo-Saxon race, welcome the British settler. There is, again, the Heathen Empire in India, Africa, Australia, New Zealand, and Canada testifying, like all the rest, that we British have the gift God gave to Israel, since the heathen are our heritage, and the uttermost parts of the earth our possession. The Gates, too, as a never-failing indication of our Israelitish origin, tell of our Identity with the Ten Lost Tribes; and our wealth, exceeding that of all the nations, enabling us to lend to many nations but forbidding us to borrow of them, is another sign none may deny, proving to demonstration that we are the favoured people. We possess, too, the oracles of God, the British, Hebrew, and Greek Bible; God's own blessed Book. This ever accompanies the British missionary in his labour of love among all the nations, all the families, and all the kindreds of the earth; proving, as does the possession of the Sabbath also, that we have the spiritual gifts, especially, and exclusively, which God gave to Israel, His inheritance.

The evidence of our origin then, based on the Scriptures and on the past history and present condition of this race, seems conclusive as to our claim to be the remnant of Ephraim or Israel. How do the current events of the day support our contention? They are distinctly pointing to Our Identity. Larger and larger portions of the earth are falling to us, and in spite of our desires to contract our Empire, we are acquiring, or have secured, Upper Burmah, large tracts of Central and South Africa, a magnificent territory in North Borneo, Lower Egypt, the basin of the Niger, in New Guinea, and many new islands in the South Pacific. Our language is filling the earth. Our commerce is occupying all the harbours and inlets of the seas, and oceans of the world. The maritime Gates of the world are ours already. Our wealth is abnormal. Our missionary operations are ever increasing; our Bibles, tracts, and religious publications are carried by our missionaries to all lands; and our free institutions are the envy of the world. Such is the position of our nation at the opening of this our New Year, the tenth of our literary existence.

The result of the late Elections can hardly yet be estimated, or predicted. They will be far-reaching and important, as none may doubt. The Elections leave the parties in an extraordinary position. The Conservatives muster about 251, the so-called Liberals 333, and the Parnellites or Nationalists 86. The Liberals, therefore, can be outvoted by Conservatives and Nationalists combined; and considering how the Liberals include Whigs, Radicals, Crofters, and Labour Members, it is not probable the Liberal party can venture to take the reins of Government. The foreign policy will thus still continue in Lord Salisbury's hands, which is matter for congratulation; but both Liberals and Conservatives will live from day to day on the mere sufferance of the Parnellites, unless both can patriotically unite, to defeat the enemies of the union between Great Britain and Ireland.

Digitized by Google

We introduce to our readers, with the present number, an excellent likeness of our literary fellow-helper, and true and able Anglo-Israelite friend, Surgeon-General J. M. Grant, M.D. He is, so to speak, a personal acquaintance, no doubt, of every reader of THE BANNER, and we know that wherever this our New Year's issue reaches, in the four quarters of the globe, there the friends of Our Identity will rejoice that we have given them an opportunity of seeing their long-known acquaintance face to face, as far as a speaking portrait will enable them to do so.

We believe a crisis is fast approaching in the history of our people, and that the present year is likely to prove an important one in its development. It will be our duty to note the events as they occur, and point out their bearing upon the great fact of Our Identity, as attested by the prophecies of the living God. Whether, during the coming year, matters will so shape themselves, that the approach of the Eastern Question may be realised, and the settlement of "the last word" in it, respecting Constantinople, foreseen, we cannot yet declare. But the signs of the times lead us to believe that the end is not far off, and that those now living may probably witness events which will usher in the coming of the Son of God, to take possession of His kingdom upon earth, according to the prophecies (Isa. xlvi. 13). That kingdom is His people, British-Israel, or the House of Joseph. For all the benefits and blessings God has graciously vouchsafed to us as His people, we desire to be grateful and thankful ourselves, while we call on all our readers, at home and abroad, "to praise the Lord!"

THE TWO HOUSES OF ISRAEL.

By SURGEON-GENERAL J. M. GRANT, M.D.

To us who possess the key to God's purpose in the separation of Israel it seems strange that there should have been any difficulty regarding it; and we learn from the arguments which have been brought against us, as well as from the writings of our accredited theologians, that all the misconception on this subject, or much of it, arises from neglect, or the want of intelligent study of the Old Testament Scriptures. Dean Alford, in an able sermon "on the practical use of the Old Testament," shows its importance as a guide to the right understanding of the New; but he speaks of it, at the same time, in these terms:—"About two-thirds, in bulk, of our Bible is distinguished from the other one-third, as belonging to a dispensation and a system of things which has now passed away;" and he shows, too, plainly in another sermon, entitled, "Gentile Christianity," that he follows the multitude of the commentators in teaching that the mission of Israel is at an end; that God's purpose with regard to His chosen people has failed, or been otherwise abandoned, and that the promulgation of the Gospel has been committed to the Gentiles; whereas the testimony of Scripture is that the promise to Abraham was Christ, and to Abraham's seed, that they should be a separated people; that is, a people consecrated to the office of proclaiming His salvation over all the world; and the Old Testament writings contain the record of the education of the people for that mission, and for their undertaking the work for which they were set apart in "the dispensation" and "system of things" under which we are now living, and that which is to follow it. In examining this question by the light of the Bible we must travel over much beaten ground; but it is well to state our argument from time to time in a connected form; and there is one point which has not been insisted upon so strongly as it might have been—I mean the necessity that existed for the separation of Israel into two distinct houses.

The promise made to Abraham, and repeated to Jacob, was, "In thee, and in thy seed, shall all the families of the earth be blessed;" and a moment's reflection should convince us that Israel could not possibly be a blessing to all nations while she remained shut up in Palestine, and that the promise must therefore refer to some period of her history which was then future; or if we are told, as we too generally are, that the promise refers to Christ alone, the same difficulty presents itself, for it is equally obvious that His influence could not have extended beyond the immediate sphere of His own ministry, unless His teaching had been repeated by others. "How can they hear without a preacher? and how can they preach except they be sent?" are the questions of St. Paul; and the answer which he gives from the prophet Isaiah is fatal to the supposition that the teaching of Christ was ever intended, or destined to be carried over the world by any but His own chosen and specially educated people. When we speak of a preacher we mean a person thoroughly trained, educated, and consecrated as a minister of religion. We should regard it as folly to employ as a missionary any person not so qualified, and why should we attribute such a want of wisdom to God? The early Christian Church was an Israelitish body, and although Gentiles were freely admitted into its fold, we do not read that they were ordained as its ministers, or "sent" to preach the Gospel in foreign lands; at all events, such was not the general rule. "Ye are My witnesses" is the testimony of the prophet to the House of Jacob, while Christ says to His disciples, who were all Israelites, "Ye shall be witnesses for Me in Jerusalem, and in all Judæa, and in Samaria, and to the uttermost parts of the earth;" and St. Peter tells us that the resurrection of Jesus was not shown openly to all the people, but to the apostles as "witnesses chosen before of God," who were commanded to preach it to all the world; so that, according to the teaching of the Old Testament and the New, it is God's unchangeable purpose that the salvation of Christ shall be preached by Israel to the Gentiles, not by the Gentiles or heathen, collectively to Israel, or to themselves. We may blind ourselves as much as we please by groping in the mist of philosophy, and state as the result of our exploration of the arcana of science that because Japheth is said to have rooted himself like an oak in one part of the world, while Shem, like a hyssop, became a more humble fixture in another; therefore the nation which is, and has been for centuries proclaiming Christianity, and bears all the other distinguishing marks of God's chosen people, cannot be Israel. But the Word of God is sure, and it will be established long after "the wisdom of men," of which this is one of the most recent examples, shall have been proved to be foolishness.

It is necessary for us to remember that Israel entered upon possession of the promised land under a covenant made with themselves, and not under that made with Abraham, the promises of which regarding them reached forward, as we have seen, to a far distant future, so that their having broken the covenant which had been made with them by the hand of Moses did not in the smallest degree affect the glorious future for which they had been separated as a people. God fore-knew and declared to Moses (Deut. xxxi. 16) that they would forsake Him and break His covenant, and it was to provide against their backsliding that He determined in the very infancy of the nation, "when the people came up out of Egypt," to separate them into two distinct houses. If the people as a whole had rebelled, and been divorced from the covenant of Moses, God's promise to Abraham must have failed because He could not bless and make a blessing of a people which He had removed from covenant relationship with Himself; but having separated them into two houses, He was able to divorce one from the covenant which it had broken while he retained the other under it; and this is what the Bible tells us that He did. Israel was divorced from the covenant of Moses, but not of Abraham, 720 years B.C., and during all that time—that is, till the end of the Mosaic dispensation—she remained Lo Ammi, not His people, and Judah was the only witnessing nation for God, although more guilty in His sight than the sister kingdom, because she had seen her punishment, but exceeded her in idolatry. At last the time for her own punishment came. She was not removed from the covenant, and broken, so as to cease from being a people, as Israel had been, but she was banished into Babylon for seventy years, after which she was restored to her own land cured of her idolatry, and serving God according to His own appointed ordinances, although latterly more in the letter than in the spirit. The Jews remained under the covenant of the law until it was abolished in Christ; and the reason why God was more long-suffering with them, why He had compassion on the House of Judah, but not on the House of Israel during the Mosaic dispensation, as we read in Hosea i. 6, 7, evidently was that of them the Messiah was to come. But when they rejected Christ, and broke the covenant of grace, as Israel had broken the covenant of the law, they too were scattered amongst the nations, and will remain in that dispersion until it pleases God to bring them, as He has already brought Israel, into the bond of the covenant. Compare Zech. xii. 10 with Ezek. xx. 37. This is where the commentators and the Church stumble over what they term "the call of the Gentiles" by failing to perceive that the call was to Israel mixed amongst the Gentiles, and themselves Gentiles, as being divorced from the covenant of Moses—compare Acts xv. 14—17 with Amos ix. 11, 12. They have seen clearly what the most superficial reader of prophecy must see, that a community is spoken of as Israel, quite distinct from Judah; but not understanding God's purpose concerning His people, and failing to recognise any Israel except the Jews, they have appropriated all the blessings to the Church, while making over all the curses to Israel.

Digitized by Google

The Rev. Dr. Walker, late Rector of Cheltenham, sees this error, and comments upon it in one of his published sermons as follows:—"Two mountains of strange significance stand in the Holy Land—Ebal and Gerizim—the one for cursing, the other for blessing. And there are Christian men with a false and unintelligent faith so strong that they say to Gerizim, 'Be thou plucked up, and be thou removed to some Gentile land. Ebal is for Israel; thou art for the Church.' Brethren, it is a proceeding too like Jehoiakim's" (cutting up and burning the roll) "to be free from guilt. The curse has been Israel's, the blessing shall be hers; Gerizim as well as Ebal stands on her sacred soil. But the blessing is far from her now." . . . "THE BLESSING IS FAR FROM HER NOW." Such is the commentary of the Rev. Dr. Walker; but how different are the utterances of Moses as soon as the people had ceased from invoking on themselves the curse and the blessing? He says (Deut. xxx. 1), "And it shall come to pass that when all these things are come upon thee, the blessing and the curse which I have set before thee, and thou shalt call them to mind among all the nations whither the Lord thy God hath driven thee, that there the Lord thy God will turn thy captivity, and have mercy upon thee." Here we have pardon and blessing promised on repentance; and in Jer. xxxi. 18—20, and Ezek. xx. 30—37, we have the record of Ephraim—that is, Israel as distinct from Judah—calling to mind the curse, and the blessing and returning to the Lord, coupled with the assurance that the Lord would have mercy upon him, and bring him into the bond of the covenant, which cannot possibly mean anything else than the "new covenant" in Christ spoken of in the Epistle to the Hebrews. Again, in the 65th chapter of Isaiah we have a sharp contrast drawn between Israel and Judah. The Lord is sought and found by the former, "a nation not called by His name;" compare with Hosea i. 9, while the latter is described as a rebellious people, and the blessing and cursing are pronounced upon them respectively in verses 9 to 15.

It is evident that the prophecy and promise of Deut. xxx. 1 do not apply to the Jews, because they were never scattered among the nations till after they had rejected Christ; and we know from Zech. xii. 10 that they will not repent during their dispersion, but after their return to their own land, when they shall look upon Him whom they have pierced.

All the prophecies regarding Israel refer to the Christian dispensation. Moses speaks of Jeshurun waxing fat, and provoking the Lord so that He provokes her with "those who are not a people;" and St. Paul interprets that prophecy as referring to the acceptance of repentant Israel, "the election" according to grace, and the rejection of unrepentant Israel—that is, the Jews in his day. When Jacob blesses his sons (Gen. xlix.), he calls them together to tell them what shall befall them "in the last days;" and Balaam, blessing Israel (Numb. xxiv. 14), uses the same expression, and fixes the time indicated as that when "a star shall come out of Jacob, and a sceptre shall arise out of Israel." There can be no greater mistake than that of confounding the education, moral and political, of the people in Egypt and Palestine with the destiny for which they were reserved in the later history of the world, for which that education was intended to fit them; and unless we keep this distinction in view, the whole Bible, Old Testament and New, is unintelligible, and we cannot be either able or ready to give a reason of the hope that is in us.

The prophets declare that Christ would "raise up the Tribes of Jacob," and that He would build again the tabernacle of David which had fallen down, and repair the breaches thereof;" or, in other words, that he would restore the kingdom of David, or Israel, which was His own kingdom, the kingdom of God so constantly referred to in the New Testament, as we read in 1 Chron. xxix. 23 that "Solomon sat on the throne of THE LORD instead of David, his father." It was this kingdom that our Lord told the Jews should be taken from them, or from which they were to be excluded—this great temporal kingdom which He was about to establish in the other house, "the lost sheep of the house of Israel," for it would be monstrous to suppose that they were to be excluded from the "spiritual kingdom," and so to perish everlastingly! And we know from other parts of Scripture that they are to have a place in the restored kingdom in Palestine.

Our Lord Himself says that He was not sent but unto the lost sheep of the House of Israel; and His mission to them was to breathe upon their dead bones by His Holy Spirit bringing them into the bond of the covenant, and to raise them up an exceeding great army; a righteous nation—His "dominion," by means of which He would subdue the nations to Himself. That is the destiny of the House of Israel, and it must be in course of fulfilment now unless Christ's mission has failed! The kingdom is a temporal kingdom, righteous as a nation, but containing good and bad, like the net cast into the sea, to which it is compared in the parable. It is precious, like the pearl of great price, because it is the witness for God over all the world; and the divine laws by which it is governed make men wise unto salvation. Small in its beginning, but expanding into power and importance, like the grain of mustard seed becoming a tree, and the stone a mountain. Such is the kingdom of Israel and of God which must exist as a temporal and spiritual power in the world to-day, and which we should be able to identify if we were not what the prophet calls us, "blind people having eyes."

This kingdom is growing, and is destined to grow during this dispensation and the next, until, like the leaven in the meal, it absorbs all other nations. When everything that offends, and they which do iniquity, having been gathered out of it (Matt. xiii. 41), the ransomed race of man will stand under its divine head, sinless and immortal before God. Surely it should be regarded as a glorious privilege to be the kingdom which is to culminate in such a future; and in the days of Moses the people were taught so to regard it, although the contemplation seems to be too carnal for our advanced "spiritual" Christianity nowadays, as if there ever was, or ever could be, any difference between the religion of the Old Testament and the New, however the ritual might vary!

Digitized by Google

It is refreshing to hear an apostle of evangelicism like the Rev. Dr. Walker branding as "guilt" the alienation of the promises to Abraham from Israel to the Gentile Church, and it is to be hoped that his brethren in the ministry may derive much profit from his rebuke, although in his "Sermons on Old Testament Subjects" he himself applies the pen-knife of Jehoiakim much too freely to the Old Testament record. We talk a great deal about the unbelief of the Jews; but our own is the same in kind, and greater in degree, because we reject much more of the Old Testament writings than they do, by our spiritualising interpretation. They looked for the Messiah as a real, literal human king over the literal kingdom of Israel; and, so far, they were right; but they overlooked His office of Redeemer, while we have accepted Him as our Saviour, but have a very imperfect conception of His kingship, and deny Him a temporal kingdom altogether. Fortunately for us, the belief which we have been constrained to adopt by the power of His Holy Spirit is the more essential of the two; but we are far from being in a position to twit them with their unbelief; and the wonder is that they listen to our teaching at all, putting, as it does so completely, "Moses and the PROPHETS" out of view!

ISRAEL'S BLESSINGS, NATIONAL AND INDIVIDUAL.

By Douglas A. Onslow.

It has often appeared to me that there is much confusion in people's minds upon this question of Israel's blessings. I think it is clear from Scripture that there are two classes of blessings promised to Israel as a nation; and there are blessings unconditional, and blessings conditional upon the nation's obedience. The former have been promised by God as the result of Abraham's obedience and faith—"By Myself have I sworn, saith the Lord, for because thou hast done this thing, and hast not withheld thy son, thine only son: that in blessing I will bless thee, and in multiplying I will multiply thy seed as the stars of heaven, and as the sand which is upon the sea shore; and thy seed shall possess the Gate of his enemies" (Gen. xxii. 16, 17); "because thou hast obeyed My voice" (ver. 18). As has been repeatedly pointed out in the pages of the BANNER OF ISRAEL, there is no condition whatever attaching to this glorious promised blessing. The trial had been put upon Abraham, and he had borne the test. The promises of unconditional blessings were repeated by the Lord to Isaac and Jacob, and to this latter was given the spirit of prophecy enabling him to forecast on his death-bed that which should befall his sons' descendants "in the last days." Here it is, and in the blessings of the Tribes pronounced by Moses before he went up to Mount Nebo to die, that we have a broad outline given us of the nature of the blessings to be inherited by the sons of Jacob "in the latter days"—that is, the closing days of this dispensation. The 49th chapter of Genesis and the 33rd of Deuteronomy have only to be read to see that there is no condition attaching to the blessings pronounced therein by Jacob and Moses respectively.

I would further point out that the unconditional national blessings appertain chiefly to the birthright. To Joseph and his two sons, Ephraim and Manasseh, was the birthright given, and, therefore, all that went with it. It seems quite evident to me that this birthright was given not to Joseph individually and to his descendants through Ephraim and Manasseh solely, but to him and them as representative of the divisions into which the Hebrew family were eventually to be separated. This is clearly indicated in 1 Chron. v. 2—"For Judah prevailed above his brethren, and of him came the chief ruler, but the birthright was Joseph's." These two men are spoken of in this passage as representative of the two houses, or nations, of Judah and Joseph (or Israel), for it must be understood that Judah is not the house of Israel, and has no right to claim that title. Joseph having had the birthright conferred upon him, and that right carrying with it a double portion, his two sons, Ephraim and Manasseh, had apportioned to them by their grandfather the privileges and rights belonging to that birthright, though not equally. The one representative man was to develop into a multitude of nations, the other into a great people. The great national prosperity indicated by Jacob and Moses were, however, to be participated in by each. God had marked out their national careers, and no matter what the individuals of the nations might do, the national destinies of the aggregated people were defined by the Spirit of God in the blessings conveyed through Jacob and Moses.

And now as to the conditional blessings. These depended upon the people being nationally obedient to God—that is, that they should continue to honour Him nationally, to nationally respect His laws, and render obedience to His commandments. When about to enter the Promised Land Moses pointed out to the people their duty, and the consequences that would be entailed upon them for their neglect of it. "All the commandments which I shall command thee this day shall ye observe to do, that ye may live and multiply, and go in and possess the Land which the Lord sware unto your fathers," is how Deuteronomy viii. commences; and it concludes with these most terrible words of warning if the people did not nationally remain obedient to God—"And it shall be, if thou do at all forget the Lord thy God, and walk after other gods, and serve them, and worship them, I testify against you this day that ye shall surely perish. As the nations which the Lord destroyeth before your face, so shall ye perish; because ye would not be obedient unto the voice of the Lord your God."

In the first fourteen verses of Deuteronomy xxviii. is given a catalogue of the blessings which depended upon national obedience, and in the remaining fifty-four verses a fearful description of the curses that would befall the people if they should fall away from the worship of the true God, and lapse into idolatry. National apostacy was the great sin the people were continually warned against, and it was the national sin they were most prone to. We know only too well how miserably the two houses of Israel and Judah failed "to observe to do all His commandments and all His statutes" which Moses commanded them. Failing to observe the conditions imposed upon them, the nations met with the punishments threatened, and the blessings were turned into curses.

The individual blessings are, I think, quite apart from those promised to the nation for national obedience. Holiness of life will always meet with its final reward hereafter, though it by no means follows that worldly prosperity will be the portion of the obedient ones here. Our opponents have often made a difficulty that we ought not to expect or look for great national blessings, because they say, and say it rightly, we are guilty of great national sins. But it seems to be forgotten that God's glory depends upon the fulfilment of His Word, and He has unconditionally promised Jacob's sons "in the latter days" certain specific national blessings, and, being unconditional, and therefore in no way dependent upon what the people might do, or leave undone, they must be fulfilled to accomplish the predictions and verify God's Word. And what do we find in this our nation? Great wealth and great worldly prosperity frequently associated with men, of whom it can scarcely be said that they in any sense "observe to do all His commandments and all His statutes." Again, there are many earnest and faithful Christians who do not prosper in a worldly sense, who are certainly not rich in this world's goods. Christ did not promise His disciples and followers earthly prosperity; on the contrary, they were told that it was only through much tribulation that they should enter into the kingdom of heaven. The great national blessings predicted for Israel "in the latter days" were not to be the result and outcome of Israel's obedience, but because Abraham had obeyed God's voice; and their fulfilment would be for God's glory. It is on these grounds that I am able to reconcile the promises made to Israel, and the predictions of our Lord to His disciples, which are apparently at variance. Christ says to His disciples, "In the world ye shall have tribulation," and that, of course, is in the "latter days," the Christian dispensation. Jacob and Moses, moved by the Holy Spirit, promise great worldly blessings for Israel in these same "latter days." There is, apparently, a discrepancy; I think the suggestion I have offered clears it up, and explains the difficulty.

Digitized by Google

THE GREAT PYRAMID VERSUS THE CABBALA.

By C. Piazzi Smyth, Astronomer Royal for Scotland.

From the year 1882 (so marvellously indicated by the Great Pyramid in its prophecies of stone prepared more than four millenniums ago)—from that year, 1882 A.D., let me repeat, up to the present time in 1886, the soldiers of the British army in Egypt have been necessarily seeing a vast deal too much of the idolatrous sculpture and perniciously-adorned architecture of the ancient anti-Israel Pharaohs, from one end of their God-resisting land to the other.

Now as this is an age in which strange fancies are evolving into the air of modern Christendom, as to the exceeding interest of resuscitating the old pantheons of classical peoples, and learning all about their inventions therein—who can say whether the British soldier may not in some cases fall under the same fascinating, anti-Scriptural, Egyptian influences as did the Roman soldiers in Egypt most multitudinously, and then the citizens of Rome itself, in the times of their later emperors. And if a single existing British soul be lost to Christ from this cause, will not the responsibility be heavy for those members of our Government most concerned, who have sent our obedient, simple-minded warriors to the land of Ham, without caring to instruct their minds, or direct their souls to the existence of one better monument in that region of Egypt, not only non-idolatrous, but directly Christian, Messianic also, and Biblically prophetic; the perfect antidote, because divinely furnished of old, against all Pharaonic idolatrous inventions—viz., the Great Pyramid.

But whose road is clear before him in these troublous times! Certainly not that of any statesman who trusts to human diplomacy for his sole guidance. He, on the contrary, who believes practically in the revealed teachings of God in Hebrew Scripture, and when its information may be obscure, has learned within these latter days to read off confirmations of the Biblical past and indications of its future, in the strictly scientific number, weight, and measure language of the Great Pyramid, is founded, like it, on a rock and cannot be moved.

Violence against it may fill the atmosphere for a time, like a sand-storm, but seems always to leave the unique monument more firmly banked about than before. And this general result has just been involuntarily illustrated by a fearsome book recently published in London, which roundly declares that the Great Pyramid is the machination of Satan, and is even a frightful example of the pits of perdition into which the unwary of our day may so easily fall.

A curiosity too about this terrific denunciation is, that it appears in a would-be very religious work on that deeply interesting question to all earnest Christians—viz., the expected rapture of the Church, to occur some years before the Second Advent of our Lord Christ.

From an author of the last twelve months only, dealing favourably and scripturally with so solemn a subject, who could not but have expected the most sympathetic consideration for the Great Pyramid, known for the last twenty years as alluding to and confirming New Testament Scripture on that very point, and the now frequently discussed topic of "The End of the Age." But he reviles it.

In what manner, however, or on what supposed grounds, does this mushroom author in London, without any practical acquaintance with the Great Pyramid, arrive with any justice at his fearful condemnation?

By means of mysterious Cabbalistic arithmetic, which Christ never used, but the Jews who crucified Him, did; and he accomplishes it after this fashion.

Out of all the very numerous measured quantities and computed values of the building, the author picks out two only. These are, or should be, the number of Pyramid-inches from the North Wall of the Grand Gallery Northwards to the fiducial lines in the Entrance Passage; and from the same North Wall Southwards to the South Wall, taken ideally through the Great Step at that end of the gallery.

Although the former has been very abundantly shown by special measures detailed in "Our Inheritance" (pp. 471—477, Edition 4) to be more than 2170 Pyramid-inches, the newly risen writer, to suit his dark purpose, takes the liberty of altering the figures to 2169. And although the latter of the two measured dates has been as irrefragably shown in the same book (pp. 659 to 664) to be at least 1881·6, this very new author on his own ipse dixit declares it to be 1881 even. And then he has got two numbers, 2169 and 1881, with which he proceeds to conjure after the both unchristian and unscientific manner of the Cabbala.

That is, he adds up sideways the apparent figures in these numbers, and finds they each make up 18; and as 18 is divisible into three sixes, there, says he triumphantly, is a proof that the Great Pyramid is of Satan, and to be eschewed as very Anti-Christ.

I have before me at this moment a large book with more than 2,500 pages, numbered consecutively from one to the end. Anyone, therefore, might turn up in it a page marked 1881, and another marked 2169. But would that both annihilate all the other pages, and prove that the book must have been composed in the infernal regions in rebellion against God and for the destruction of the souls of men? If anyone doubts what he ought to think of the case, I may assist him by the information that the book is a new American gazetteer, descriptive chiefly of towns and villages in the United States, by a son of the Pilgrim Fathers.

Moreover, let every devout reader of the revelations of St. John, where the number 666 in a certain concatenation does appear as a very bad symbol, duly remember that that number does not stand for three simple, separate sixes, such as the number 18 may be legitimately divided into, but is expressly written by the divinely inspired and beloved disciple for our guidance as "six hundred, three-score and six;" or, as scientific arithmetic is written in these days, 600 + 60 + 6; and that collects up into a total which, in any honest way of paying one's debts, is very different from 18.

But the Great Pyramid on its rock of ages would seem after all to be still further from the toils of the Cabbala than this last employer of them had fancied. And though he did not scruple to take one digit from a Pyramid number, he may haply quail before, in the presence of God, he removes two or three.

Digitized by Google

This new light, too, is not invented for the present occasion, but appeared between two and three years ago in Mr. Flinders Petrie's hostile, yet able, measures of the Great Pyramid, and was accepted by me in print, in the beginning of 1884, as increasing these two particular lengths over my measures, both larger than 1881 and 2169, by from 1 to 3 inches.

Who then would have thought, when Mr. Flinders Petrie's most designing attack on the sacred and scientific theory of the Great Pyramid was published three years ago, so demonstratively and aggressively in New York and London on the same day, that it would be found to contain a most redoubtable defence of the Great Pyramid against the Cabbalistic mal-practiser who was to appear a year and more afterwards!

But thus it is that God makes even the wrath of man to praise Him, and assist in testifying to the something somehow far above man's limited powers in history, which does exist in the unique and grand building prepared from the beginning of the world of post-diluvial times, in order that it may assuredly become in these latter days a pillar and an altar to the Lord, and even for a sign and for a witness unto the Lord of Hosts in the land of Egypt (Isaiah xix. 19, 20).

THE VALLEY OF DRY BONES.

(EZEK. XXXVII.)

BY JOHN T. GOTT.

Extract from Lecture on "Israel-Britain Portrayed in the History of Daniel."

JEHOVAH said that Ten-Tribed Israel in their cast-out condition should find grace in the wilderness; that He would be to them as a little sanctuary; that their island home should become too strait for them; that they should break forth on the right hand and on the left, and fill the desolate heritages of the earth. This has been done by the British people in a way that goes hand in hand with prophecy. Yet we are not known, we are not recognised, as the Lost House of Israel. How is this? Moses predicted that if Israel persisted in certain iniquities, God would punish them "seven times" for their sins (Levit. xxvi.). Now, seven is the number in the divine law with which the idea of remission is ever linked. Ten-Tribed Israel did persistently and wilfully err in this manner, and were consequently "cast out" for the period named. Seven times = 7 × 360 prophetical days, or 2,520 years, and, according to the most accurate computations, this period expired about A.D. 1840.

Hosea thus predicts the termination of Israel's punishment. "After two days He will revive us; in the third day He will raise us up, and we shall live in His sight." St. Peter, in his epistles addressed to Israel, says, "Beloved, be not ignorant of this one thing, that one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day" (2 Peter iii. 8). The apostle thus explains the meaning of the prophet, and therefore the raising up, identification, or manifestation of Lost Israel must take place between the second and third thousand years, dating from the commencement of their punishment. That is, now is the time when we must anticipate the fulfilment of this marvellous prediction. Now is the time when the Identity of Lost Israel must be proclaimed. Now is the time when we may begin to understand Ezekiel's vision of the "valley of dry bones"—a vision the exposition of which has baffled divines and commentators in all ages. The prophet says he was carried out, or up, "in the Spirit of the Lord." Aeronauts tell us that when they look down upon the earth it appears like an immense valley. Such was the impression made on the mind of the prophet Ezekiel. He was carried up and set down in what seemed a valley, round which he was caused to pass. The valley was full of bones. There were very many, and they were very dry from long exposure. The question is then proposed to the prophet, "Son of man, can these bones live?" And he answered, "O Lord God, Thou knowest."

It was a grim spectacle, and a strange question. If a body be reduced to a skeleton it is past all recognition, but when the bones are severally disconnected and scattered, in that day, it would probably be a human impossibility to say either what the bones had originally formed or what they might become. The prophet acknowledged this in his answer—"O Lord God, Thou knowest." Then said the Lord, "Prophecy unto these bones and say, O ye dry bones, hear the word of the Lord." And as the prophet prophesied, there was a noise and a shaking, bone came to bone, sinews and flesh came upon them, and skin covered them above. But there was no breath in them. Again the Lord said, "Prophesy and say, Come from the four winds, O breath, and breathe upon these slain that they may live. And as he prophesied the breath came into them, and they lived and stood upon their feet, an exceeding great army. Then the Lord said, Son of man, these bones are the whole House of Israel."

It is manifest from this extraordinary vision that the revivifying or manifestation of the Lost House of Israel, buried out of sight for 2,520 years, is to be brought about by human agency. There is first, the voice of prophecy, which has been heard uninterruptedly for forty years or more, declaring the strange, incomprehensible fact that the British people are the Lost House of Israel. Wherever the British people are found that voice has been heard; and, mark, it could not be heard before Israel's seven times punishment was ended. The bones were very many, indicating their multitudinous character, and very dry—i.e., just recognisable as bones.

Side by side with this has come the realisation of another fact, that the power, wealth, and strength of the British Empire are neither perceived nor understood; and this feeling has been increased and intensified by the recent "roar of the young lions of Tarshish." Britain has been utterly unconscious that her colonies have gradually grown stronger and more powerful, and that they are now capable of uttering a roar of terrible import. The British Empire is entirely different from the world-powers we have considered. Their territory was solid and compact. Britain's is severed, disconnected, and scattered, like the bones in the valley of Ezekiel's vision.

The bones coming together, and being bound with sinews, is the symbolic representation of the Federation of the Empire, the welding together of the links of our colonial possessions which belt the hemispheres and girdle the earth; the knitting together in the firm bonds of brotherhood the English-speaking race throughout the whole world.

Federation is undoubtedly indicated by the sinews. Then the flesh came upon the dry bones, symbolising the body corporate of Israel; and as on healthy flesh skin soon grows, so the covering of skin will be speedily accomplished.

The Bible is full of riddles, but this is one of the hardest. Scattered, disconnected bones, we can make nothing of. The Almighty brings the bones together, binds them with sinews, covers them with flesh, and adorns them with skn. This brings about recognition and identification, the identification of the Lost House of Israel in the British people. But there was no breath in them. Then the prophet prophesied, and the Spirit of God breathed upon them, and they lived and stood upon their feet, an exceeding great army. This will be the manifestation of Lost Israel—the British people—as the sons of the living God, for it is predicted, "In the place where it was said unto them, Ye are not My people (as it is said now by many and oft-times in a very unchristian manner) there shall it be said unto them, Ye are the sons of the living God."

Men have ever desired a sign from heaven, and signs have been vouchsafed. The Federation of the British Empire is the most applicable sign of the times. The British people have now formed that "measuring line" round the earth which Moses predicted of God's people Israel. The links simply want gathering up and welding together. Then the "Stone Kingdom" of Revelation will assume another complexion altogether. Israel-Britain will then be, without any shadow of doubt, "Chief of the Nations." The Federation of the Empire will be brought about at a time of world-wide perplexity and trouble—such a time of perplexity and trouble as was experienced when Nebuchadnezzar forgot his dream. Such a time exists now in the Eastern Question. Daniel was divinely brought forward to solve the difficulty in his day; Israel, or Britain, will be brought forward to solve the Eastern difficulty in the same way, for Daniel's history is a mirror of Britain's. In speechless amazement all the wise men of Babylon listened to Daniel! So will it be with the nations of Europe. They could not do what God gave Daniel power to do, and therefore not one voice of protest was raised when Nebuchadnezzar made Daniel a great man, gave him many gifts, made him ruler over the whole province of Babylon (i.e., over the whole world then known), and chief of the governors over all the wise men of the empire. Moreover, he sat in the gate of the king—i.e., he occupied the position of chief counsellor of the world-powers then existing. Keen disappointment bred angry feeling, and bitter jealousy against Daniel, no doubt, but they found no expression.

Digitized by Google

Exactly the same thing and with the same results, must take place with Israel-Britain, with respect to solving the Eastern Question. Napoleon I. tried to take Palestine. Why? Because, with his far-seeing eye and penetrating judgment, he knew that the nation who could command that position would rule the world. Peter the Great, and his successors, for a similar reason, have desired and coveted the Gate of the World—Constantinople—the Sublime Porte. Daniel was not always a prominent figure in the world-powers of his day. He was sometimes very contemptuously spoken of as "that Daniel," &c. So has it been with Israel-Britain. It will be remembered how contemptuously the Russian press spoke of "that worm England," under the premiership of Lord Beaconsfield. Do you think they were aware they were using a Bible term? and applying it, unwittingly to the Israel of God. "Fear not, thou worm Jacob, and ye few men of Israel," says Isaiah. And you will also remember how the Russian bear stealthily crept up to within grasp of the coveted gate. But the "worm" Britain sent her fleet to the great gate, and then it became a question between the "bear" and the "worm." It is well known that the ugly bear dared not put his ungainly paw on the tail of the worm, and that he slunk away, as only a bruin could do, with eyes askance on the prize he thought he was about to gain so easily.

Russia will never get the Great Gate—Constantinople. It is God's gift to Israel-Britain—the last and most important gate in the world. The Turkish power is waning away. Men may well dread a European war, for the Continent is like a huge powder magazine. Jealousy will cause much contention respecting the partition of Turkey. God's charge to Israel at this critical era is—neutrality. The people of Israel are "to hide" themselves a little while. The Federation of our Empire will become a fact at a time when the Eastern Question is coming to a climax. As mistress of the maritime highways of the world, this nation has already plainly indicated her intention respecting Constantinople. Our people hold Turkish bonds, and have never received a farthing of interest or principal for years. We have a national right, therefore, for some equivalent; and when the gate is secured, our Government will be able to see its way to recoup all holders of such bonds.

Just as Daniel, in a time of great perplexity, solved the difficulty existing in his day—sat in the king's gate, the highest point of honour that could be conferred upon him—so will Israel-Britain, under Divine guidance, be called upon to settle the Eastern Question, and as a just reward, in which all the European Powers will acquiesce, will take a prominent seat in the "Sublime Porte"—the Gate of the World.

Pessimists say that this cannot be accomplished without war: that our fleet is useless, our army is scattered; that we have no men (?); and as for coast defences, we are at the mercy of any invading foe! Humanly speaking, we are in a very weak, defenceless state, but we must make the best use of our position, and place implicit faith in the promises God has made to Israel in the latter days, "Fear not, thou worm Jacob and ye few men of Israel. I the Lord thy God will hold thy right hand, saying unto thee, "Fear not, I will help thee."

So, then, it is not Israel's right hand that will cause her to dwell safely, not Israel's right hand that will save and deliver, but the right hand of the Holy One of Israel stretched forth to finish a marvellous work among His people Israel, even a marvellous work and a wonder. "The isles shall wait upon Me," predicts Isaiah, "and on Mine arm shall they trust" (li.).

The British people already hold the protectorate of the lands of the Bible. When the Federation of the Empire is accomplished, and the Great Gate is acquired, we shall have witnessed the fixing and securing of the key-stone of Israel-Briton's World-empire—the stone kingdom of Revelation that grew until it became a great mountain and filled the whole earth.

The Federation of the Empire has become one of the most important signs of the times. It leads directly to the Identification of Lost Israel, and that will be immediately followed by the outpouring of the Holy Spirit, which will be the manifestation of the sons of God. In troublous times will this occur. Then shall the House of Judah walk to the House of Israel, to be re-united, never to be severed again, as the prophet Ezekiel symbolises by the union of the two sticks. Then will follow the re-colonisation of Palestine by the British people (or a representative return of the remnant of Israel and Judah, "one of a city and two of a family"). They shall be one nation, not two, and one king, of David's royal seed, shall be over them. And all this will be the "marvellous work" of God.

"Thy people shall be all righteous:
They shall inherit the land for ever:
The branch of My planting:
The work of My hands,
That I may be glorified." (Isaiah lx.)

Dec. 1st, 1885.

THE WORLD LANGUAGE OF THE FUTURE.

By E. Wilmshurst, Retford.

The marvellous development of the British race has spread the English tongue over the entire world. M. de Candolle, of Geneva, in his recent work, declares that within 100 years it will be spoken by 860 millions, as compared with 124 millions of Germans, and 69½ millions of Frenchmen; and also states that, even now, it not only "pervades Europe," but is compassing the world as an international and as a "unifying" language.

To those who understand that we are living in the end of the "latter days" of Daniel's vision, when the Gentile world-power of Nebuchadnezzar's image has reached its ultimate development of the toes of "iron-clay" which will not mingle (so well symbolising the political state of the present European nations); when "many shall run to and fro," and when "knowledge shall be increased"; when the "times of the Gentiles" have nearly run out, when He shall have accomplished to scatter the power of the holy people—in the sense of dispersing that power all over the world (but not necessarily of minimising it)—it must force itself on observant minds that as God's wrath on mankind was shewn at Babel by the confusion of tongues, and consequent disintegration of kindred races, whether, as the time draws nearer when Israel, lost and found under another name, shall be restored to the land promised to Abraham and his seed for ever, and shall be the dominant world-power of "Fifth Monarchy men," to spread the knowledge of the Lord, and to be a blessing to the heathen Gentile nations—whether, we repeat, the language which restored Israel will then speak in that future day must not now be in existence. For national tongues do not come into use all at once: and as Omniscience provided the facile Greek tongue to be the vehicle for the dissemination of the Gospel—the "new covenant"—so the same Omniscience may now be re-forming a people and a "tongue" for Himself against the "novus ordo sæcularum"—the new dispensation, or "age," which is to succeed the present—as many think, at no long future date.

Digitized by Google

There is one language, and, we believe, one alone, which can trace its pedigree from the earliest to the latest ages, as will be seen at a glance at the following Table, which we have compiled mainly from "An Essay on the Primitive Origin of the English Language," by C. S. Rafinesque." The reader must bear in mind that modern research and antiquarian discoveries have indubitably traced the Cymry, the Saxons, the Danes, and the Normans—in fact, the British allied and kindred races—in their respective migrations across Europe, from ASIA, their birthplace, and, moreover, from that Caucasian plateau of Central Asia which at the date of the Dispersion of Israel was dominated by those ancient monarchies whose peoples spoke the divisions of the venerable Sanscrit tongue known to us as the Pali, the Sacan, and the Yavana.

"THE EARTH WAS OF ONE TONGUE."

(SAN-SCRIOBHTE): OLD SANSCRIT: (HOLY WRIT).

			Dead.	Living.
Whence The YAVANA of Central Asia	Iranic	Zend		Osselhi
				Armenian
		Pehlvi		Bokara
				Kurdistan
Whence The GOMERIAN of W. Asia				Afghanese
		Parsi		Persian
Whence The CYMRIC of Europe	Gadhelic			Isle of Man
				Irish
				Scotch
Whence The KELTIC of W. Europe	Cymric			Brittany Cornish
		Welch
Whence The BRITISH KELTIC

			Dead.	Living.
Whence The SACA, or Celtic of Central Asia	Iranian	Pelvi		Afghanese
		Zend		Kurdistan
		Old Armenian		Armenian
		Parsi		Persian
Whence The TIRAS of W. Asia	Hellenic	Dialects of Greece		Albanian
				Lithuanian
				Greek
Whence The GETIC of E. Europe	Teutonic	Old Dutch		N. German
		Old Frisian		Frisian
Whence The TEUTONIC, or Gothic, of Europe		Old Saxon
Whence The Saccasene or SAXON of Germania	Low German	Gothic		Holland
Whence The ANGLO-SAXON of England		Anglo-Saxon		England

			Dead.	Living.
Whence The PALI of India	India		Pali	Dialects of India
			Prakri
			Modern or Vedic Sanscrit	Gypsy
Whence The PALINGSHA or Pali of C. Asia	Iranic		Old Armenian	Ossethi
				Armenia
			Zena	Bokhara
				Kurdistan
			Pehlvi	Afghanistan
			Parsi	Persia
Whence The PELASGIC of W. Asia and Greece	Hellenic	Dialects of Greece		Greece and Albania
Whence The AUSONIAN of Italy	Latin
Whence The LATIN of Romulus	Umbrian			Italy
			Langue D'oil	France
				Provence
Whence The Celtic Teutonic, or ROMAN LATIN	Oscan			Spain
			Langue D'oc	Portugal
	Italic
Whence The ROMANIC of France	Scandinavian Teutonic		Old Norse	Norway
				Sweden
				Denmark
Whence The NORMAN of France

WHENCE

Old English.

WHENCE

THE WORLD LANGUAGE OF THE FUTURE—THE "UNIFYING" TONGUE OF BRITISH-ISRAEL.

N.B.—Dispersion of the Ten Tribes was circa B.C. 721, when the Yavana, the Saka, and the Pali were living languages spoken by the very peoples among whom Israel was scattered. Historians trace our Scythian ancestors from among the very peoples who spoke the above dialects.

(To be continued.)

Digitized by Google

THE GRADUAL DEVELOPMENT OF ISRAEL.

By V. M. Cox.

AMONG the many foolish objections advanced against our Identity by those who are antagonistic to it, none, perhaps, is more futile than this—that, if our belief were true, it would not have been concealed from human ken during hundreds of years, and only now, near the conclusion of the nineteenth century, have come prominently into notice. We wonder what these clever people expect. Are they looking for a nation, possessed of the unique characteristics of latter-day Israel, to spring suddenly on the platform of history, as the mythical Minerva is reputed to have sprung fully armed from the head of Jupiter? How, in the name of all that is reasonable, could a people bearing the marks of Israel (as she is described in the Word of God) have arrived at that condition otherwise than gradually? Can a population as numerous as the stars of heaven come into existence at a moment's notice? Shall colonial dependencies in every portion of the globe be acquired in a few days or weeks? or can a people not prepared for their mission by a long course of providential training go forth to civilise and to evangelise the nations who sit in darkness, and to win the world for Christ? The answer is self-evident, and if you can once compel your opponent to admit this, you have effectually disposed of him, since the objection he brings to bear on Britain might equally well be applied to any other people for whom an identity with Israel might be in future claimed. The reason why the Anglo-Israel truth was not earlier known is that it could not be discovered till the marks were developed. The reason why the subject is now attracting so much notice is, that the marks are, for the most part, clearly seen, and every day they stand out more clearly still.

What was Britain's state prior to the Reformation? Precisely that described by Ezekiel in chapter xxxvii. 7. The bones in the valley of vision had come together, "bone to his bone," but they were as yet unclothed with flesh. No more could one recognise Israel then than one could discover a lost friend in one of those ghastly skeletons left bleaching on the sands of the Soudan at the close of the late campaign. The march of civilisation, the progress of science and art, and the extension of commerce, did but bring sinews and flesh to the dry bones; it was at the Reformation era that the divine breath recalled Israel to LIFE, and the hitherto motionless corpses "arose, and stood on their feet, an exceeding great army." Almost every mark Israel bears on her has been developed since that era, and by far the greater number during the present century. For example, it is only during the present century—indeed, we may say, during the last twenty years—that British Colonies have assumed sufficient magnitude and importance to merit the appellation of "nations" now universally accorded to them. Still more recent has been that great spontaneous movement in the direction of Imperial Federation, the ultimate outcome of which will be the perfect realisation of the divine scheme communicated to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob respecting their posterity—"A nation and a company of nations shall be of thee." It is this great fact accomplishing under our very eyes that has led many to perceive what some are still too blind or too prejudiced to recognise—that God's purposes towards His chosen ones have in no wise changed, but are destined to receive literal and complete accomplishment in all particulars. Neither could Israel have been known by her multitudinousness till a comparatively recent date, for her population in 1603 scarcely exceeded four millions, whereas her present rate of increase is one of the most remarkable facts of this century.

One prominent mark was developed about 1620 and the years immediately following, when numbers of heroic Englishmen in quest of religious liberty, not then to be enjoyed at home, set sail for the New World, and there laid the foundation of the great Manassite nation spoken about in Gen. xlviii. 19, 20. But this nation must (in harmony with the prophecy) exist in political separation from Ephraim. Accordingly, about the years 1765 to 1776, disputes arose between the Mother Country and the colony, which resulted in the severance of the latter from the Empire of the former, and Manasseh became thenceforward an independent people, answering exactly to the description of the inspired Book in being commercially, politically, and religiously great, yet not on a par with Ten-Tribed Ephraim. Had no such nation existed, our opponents would have pointed triumphantly to that prediction, and challenged us to show its fulfilment, and might have argued with some show of reason that, upon our failing to do so, we had made shipwreck of all our arguments together. But we are not in such case. We can point out Manasseh as well as the Ten-Tribed House of Ephraim. We know, too, on the authority of the Bible, that their separation is not for ever, but that Manasseh shall share with Ephraim and Judah in the grand future described in Ezek. xxxvii. 21—28. Martin Tupper, foreshadowing such a consummation, writes:—

> "Ah! brother, could we both be one, in nation and in name,
> How gladly would the very sun lie basking in our fame!
> In either world to lead the van, and go ahead for good,
> While earth, to John and Jonathan, yields tribute gratitude!"

The last line is very suggestive of the words recorded in Gen. xlviii. 29—"He put Ephraim before Manasseh."

In 1833 A.D. another mark was developed. Prior to that date slavery had existed in our colonies, but in that year, led on by the great and noble Wilberforce, Israel obeyed the divine command to "undo the heavy burdens, and let the oppressed go free," and since that date her territory in every zone has been justly described as—

> "The soil where never a bondman's foot
> Defiles the holy sod;
> But the eye turns up, like a wild flower's cup,
> Free, glad, and light, to God!"

Richly, too, has the contingent promise (Isa. lviii. 8) been fulfilled in our national experience. The closing words of that wonderful chapter are as yet future of fulfilment; but we do not require to be seers in order to forecast one inevitable outcome of the Eastern Question—viz., the occupation of Palestine by Britain; the re-settlement there of Judah by her agency; the cultivation of the waste lands and the rebuilding of the ruined cities, according to the prophetic statement (ver. 12).

The commencement of the present century witnessed the earliest manifestations of that missionary spirit which has so characterised this nation since that time, marking her out as the appointed messenger of God, to carry the news of His salvation to "all the nations, families, and kindreds of the earth." In A.D. 1800 Israel, though possessed of a considerable number of the Abrahamic blessings, had not begun to send the Gospel to the Gentile nations. Indeed, it was not too freely circulated among her own people, and the number of languages into which it had been translated might probably have been counted on one's fingers. But the year 1813 (or thereabouts) saw the rise of that most glorious institution the British and Foreign Bible Society, whose work has now reached such stupendous proportions, and the full results of whose labours can never be known till the great day shall declare it. About the same period numerous missionary societies came into existence, small in their beginnings, but rapidly extending their sphere of action, till to-day there is hardly a spot where their influence has not penetrated; and Israel-Britain at this hour stands confessed the evangeliser of the whole world. It is not Anglo-Israelites alone who claim for her this exalted mission. Let a blind witness, Mr. C. A. Fyffe (the Liberal candidate for the City of Oxford during the late contest), testify what is England's influence abroad, and what her duty as regards foreign nations. In his address to the electors the following remarkable passage occurs, which is worthy the attention of all BANNER readers as an expression of opinion on the part of one who, so far as we can tell, knows nothing about Our Identity. Mr. Fyffe says:—

Digitized by Google

THE EMPIRE.

The affairs of our empire abroad and the welfare of our people at home claim equal attention from one who would effectively take part in public life. I cannot hold with those who, in their just sympathy with the pressing needs of our poorer population, and in just resentment at those wasteful and unnecessary enterprises which have at times discredited our history, would withdraw their attention altogether from foreign affairs and confine their political interest to our social problems at home. The work, the great and humanizing work of England abroad, is one which cannot be surrendered without something like an act of treason to mankind at large. It is a duty, a trust, as clearly imposed upon the nation as any to which an individual can devote himself in conscious recognition of a higher will than his own. And as in common life the just and courageous fulfilment of duties is inextricably involved with the well-being of the individual himself, so in the great order of the world the prosperity of a nation is inseparably bound up with the adequate fulfilment of its call. Power is hallowed when it is directed to the extinction of wrong, and wealth ennobled when it springs from extended equity and peace.

Now even the BANNER itself could scarcely have defined Britain's work in the world more glowingly than this; but we should like to ask Mr. Fyffe to tell us why England cannot abandon this mission of hers without "an act of treason to mankind at large," what constitutes a nation's "call," and where we are to seek the written record of the "trust" imposed on our own nation by a will higher than her own, obviously that of the divine Architect of her destiny? He (Mr. Fyffe) probably does not know, but we can tell him. The words of Israel-Britain's call are recorded in Isa. lx. 1, and they read as follows:—"Arise! shine! for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee." The duty and trust imposed on her are defined by the same prophet in the words, "This people have I formed for Myself. They shall show forth My praise (chap. xliii. 21). Divinely qualified, divinely commissioned, and divinely strengthened, Israel has gone forth to humanise and bless the heathen of every tribe and race, and she has done it with her might. Everywhere her efforts have been crowned with the most signal marks of heavenly blessing. Surely we need seek no other proof that she is God's chosen witness, sent to perform a duty that none other was ever commissioned to do, even that which Isaiah speaks of in chap. lxvi. 19—"I will send those that escape of them unto the nations . . . . that have not heard My fame nor seen My glory; and they shall declare My glory among the Gentiles."

We are constrained then to inquire why, since there is no mistaking the marks, the Identity is still denied, and its advocates contemned by those who (presumably) are best acquainted with the contents of Holy Scripture? The answer is very simple. People do not care to find Israel, therefore they do not seek for her. They do not expect her restoration, therefore they are not on the look out for such an event. A case in point may be quoted from the "Summaries of the Books" at the end of the "Oxford Bible for Teachers." In the summary of the first and second books of Kings we read the following:—"These two books are united in one in the ancient Hebrew copies: the present division is taken from the LXX. and the Vulgate. They give the history of the kingdoms of Israel and Judah from the time of David to the captivity. The history of the two kingdoms is intermingled until the captivity of Israel, when that of Judah only is continued for 130 years longer. . . . Israel declines from God, her kings follow Jeroboam, 'who made Israel to sin.' She becomes outcast, and her record is wiped out of the Book of Life, just as is that of the family of Cain, and the apostate descendants of Noah and Abraham. Judah is stayed by a few faithful kings (as Asa, Hezekiah, Josiah, &c.), repents of her unfaithfulness during her exile in Babylon, and is restored."

So far the Oxford theologian; but surely any thoughtful reader will be driven to conclude that the words just quoted are widely at variance with those of the sacred text. We may take our choice which to believe; both we assuredly cannot. Israel on a par with the family of Cain! Israel's record blotted out from the Book of Life! Then how greatly in error Isaiah must have been when he wrote of her as a budding, blossoming, fruit-bearing nation, and spoke of her latter-day glory. How sadly mistaken was Ezekiel when he described the return of Israel and Judah to their land in company, and their reunion into a single nation subsequently thereto. How misleading are Jeremiah's splendid predictions about Israel's second exodus and the outpouring of the divine Spirit on her offspring, and how fallacious the hopes held out by Hosea respecting the abjuration of idolatry by Ephraim, and his wonderful enlargement and prosperity from that time forward. The testimony of Amos, Micah, and Zechariah must also be rejected if the teachings of the writer of this "Summary" are accepted as truth. Shall it be so? or shall we not rather cling to the teachings of the inspired volume, indignantly repudiating any system of exposition which runs counter to it, and would appear to offer to it a direct and daring contradiction?

We stand on the threshold of a new year—a time specially adapted both for a review of the past and for making resolutions regarding the future. What did we do in 1885 to extend the good news of Our Identity among those who were still living in ignorance of it? God gave us many opportunities. Did we make a good use of them, or did we suffer them to pass unimproved? If so, let us not do so in the present year. All can in some way, if not with gold, then with voice or pen, either in public or private, help this grand cause, and so hasten the day when Israel's "blindness in part" shall be removed, when the "heir of the birthright" shall be gloriously manifested, and when God's faithfulness to His holy covenant shall be universally acknowledged and eternally vindicated.

Abingdon, December, 1885.

"REX JUDÆORUM HIC EST."

BY THE REV. DENIS HANAN, B.D.

PONTIUS PILATE placed this title over the cross of our Blessed Lord in public scorn and indignation, which was directed not so much against Jesus as against the Jews. Very probably it was as Dr. Farrar has written, "With the passionate ill-humour of the Roman governor there probably blended a vein of seriousness. While he was delighted to revenge himself on his detested subjects by an act of public insolence, he probably meant, or half meant, to imply that this was, in one sense, the King of the Jews, the greatest, the noblest, the truest of His race, whom, therefore, His race had crucified." The title thus given would not possess the importance that attaches to it, but that the Lord Himself absolutely claimed to be that which the inscription recorded (Mark xv. 2).

The kingship was terribly real; it was no theoretical or visionary claim. Christ suffered and died claiming to be the King of the people who rejected Him; not King of the few who were His disciples, but King of that frantic multitude who clamoured for His blood.

In what sense and by what right was Jesus Christ King of the Jews?

The claim cannot have been based upon hereditary descent. The genealogies of Joseph, His reputed father, trace back to the branch from the root of David—Nathan—whose family never possessed the royal dignity. If such a thing had happened as that the Roman power had desired to restore the Davidic throne; there is no reason to suppose that Joseph would have been the true or only representative.

Digitized by Google

But the birth of Jesus would have prevented any claim as of human hereditary right.

The genealogy of the Blessed Virgin Mary is not given; we can gather that she also was of the house of David, but no more. A claim to be Rex Judæorum because Jesus was the son of Mary, would have been visionary in the extreme, and is not advanced in the Gospel records.

Christ's assertion of His position was an assertion of His Divinity. "The Holy One of Israel is our King," sang David. "The Lord your God was your King," said Samuel. David ruled under God, the higher right bestowed the lower, the earthly throne was the creation of the eternal throne. The King of Glory never abdicated the royal position which He deigned to form when He made covenant with Abraham and his seed for ever. Thus the answer made by the Lord Jesus to Pilate's question was the only reply to the question which He had himself propounded—"How say the scribes that Christ is the son of David, David himself calleth him Lord, and whence is He then his son?" Christ was David's son and yet David's Lord, because He was God manifest in the flesh, and He was King of the Jews because He was Christ the Lord.

Jesus Christ is the same yesterday, to-day, for ever. And in this same real sense, and by this Divine right, he is now the King of the Jews. He is not acknowledged by them, as He was not acknowledged when He made the claim; but the rebellion of the husbandman did not cause the rights of the Lord of the Vineyard to cease. The day will come when those who pierced Him shall mourn, and recognise at once His Messiahship, His Divinity, and His Kingly rule. Whether they be the descendants of the 42,000 who returned from Babylon, and crucified Him, or whether they be the representatives of the larger and wealthier portion of the people who remained in and about Babylon, and shared her fortunes, but were not implicated in the crucifixion, whether they be under the law or not, the divine right exists. Jesus Christ is King of the Jews.

Consider the dignity of a people whose King is the Lord God of Hosts. They have been and are despised and persecuted; they are, as of old, unbelieving. They may be poor or semi-civilised, or rich and cultivated, but they stand in relationship to God, which no Gentile people can claim. God rules over Gentiles. The Lord Jesus is acknowledged by certain Gentile nations, but the dignity bestowed upon the Jew is this, that He who died, lives, and is their King. Our realization of this is obscured by the knowledge that the Lord is prophet, priest, and King, to all or any of His believing people, teaching, pleading for, ruling His Church, and each member of that Church; but was this what He meant when He said to Pilate that He was King of the Jews? Manifestly it was not; and can any humble believer in the Saviour dare to assume that the claim which He made in that awful hour was one which was not valued by Him, or ought not to be valued by Judah, or that it is a claim which Gentile Christendom is justified in utterly ignoring? Rather should we not know that the Jew, whether under monarchy or republic, whether under the Davidic earthly throne, or persecuted by autocratic power, has shed upon him the glory that rays from the throne of his King.

But as the Lord Jesus is now King of Judah He is necessarily King of Israel (see ver. 32) i.e., King of the ten-tribed house. For the Divinity which is his title to be King of the Jews, requires the further recognition of His right to rule over all-Israel, and the people who are in this relationship to Him must be partakers of the dignity which attaches to Judah. The Holy One of Israel is their King.

Judah then, as now, would fain be regarded as all-Israel, and doubtless in this sense they used the words, "Let Christ the King of Israel, descend now from the cross;" it may have been, and very probably was, that the chief priests in giving this extended sense to the superscription, more fully expressed the wider meaning which Christ Himself attached to the Messiahship, and that they intended to imply the greater overthrow which His death effected, as they fondly imagined; the overthrow, for instance, of that threat concerning the other nation which was to bring forth the fruits of righteousness, and of that Messianic yearning which promised blessing to the other sheep, the lost sheep of the House of Israel. But whatever may have prompted them so to use the words, they were necessarily true.

The King of Israel died upon the cross; died for the nation. The King of Israel rose from the dead and ascended up on high, and the glory of His throne is the glory that shines upon all Israel; it secures Ephraim's birthright, Levi's portion, Judah's royal family. It is the cause of the growth of the stone kingdom, and the pledge of the blessing with which that kingdom will yet bless the world. Redemption was procured for the world by its creator, for Israel by her creator and King. It was the King of Israel who died for the sin of the world; but Gentile Christendom seems to have adopted the notion that because He died for the world He ceased to be King of Israel!!

He is not King in this highest sense, of any non-Abrahamic people. Such do not share and cannot claim the dignity of being His subjects. How then can the Church, the body called out from all peoples, justify herself in ignoring the royalty for claiming which Christ died, and in appropriating to herself a monarchical position which her Lord did not bestow upon her?

She could only be placed in this position if Israel was altogether Christian, and if she embraced Israel only. Their relationships to Christ as King and Head would be co-existent although distinct; but this never has been, and in this age cannot be. It is therefore most presumptuous to assume that it is so.

Jesus Christ the King of Glory is King of Israel. He is this, not in virtue of her worthiness, but because of His covenant with her forefathers; not because she is Christian, and witnessing: for her faith, where it does exist, is but a grace received from her King. Christian England and English Christians, is it right or wise that you should be so absorbed in the thought that Christ died and atoned for the sins of the world, that you ignore the fact that He died, that He lives as King of Israel? Can you recognise the dignity conferred upon unbelieving Judah, and not see the value of the national glory which belongs to "all-Israel?" If the Lord Jesus so valued His royal right in that awful hour, can you say, Cui bono? when evidence of your own position as Israel is brought before you? Rather should we not, as did Israel of old in her brief golden age, exclaim, "We have ten parts in the King," for although He is nearer of kin to Judah, yet ours is the birthright share in all that must be the outcome of the fact that the King of Kings deigns to be Rex Israel.

BRITANNIA'S PRIVILEGE.

By the Rev. T. W. Boyce, B.A.

A highly beautiful picture by Brett (R.A.), which may be seen at the South Kensington Museum, bears the title of "Britannia's Realm." It represents (apparently) the English Channel sparkling with sunlit sails, up to the very horizon. A word-painting no less exquisite in its way has recently appeared in the Daily Telegraph newspaper of the first stage of a rapid voyage to India, in an article entitled "The Queen's Highway." It vividly depicts to the reader's imagination the receding shores of our island home till after Dover and Shakespeare's cliff and the chalk-bound shores of Albion have successively disappeared below the horizon, and the Bay of Biscay has been traversed, the sunshine is again reflected from the impregnable Rock of Gibraltar, and the swift and powerful steamship enters the blue Mediterranean and drops anchor at the British Empire's ocean-fortress of Malta. Leaving the one picture, which presents not an inch of land, and the other, which leaves an ocean wake of 2,000 miles towards "the land of the sunrising," let us pass in review Britannia's privileges, or rather that unique group of now recognised advantages which collectively indicate the wholly unmerited favour enjoyed by her under the providence of God.

Digitized by Google

1. The privilege of a locality appointed by God Himself for His people banished 2,600 years ago. The saying is attributed to one of our monarchs that "There was no country in which one could go out of doors with comfort on so many days in the year as England." Two of the most salubrious climates in the world are those of Britain and her antipodal dependency of New Zealand, in respect both of universal fertility and conducement to physical hardihood. Actual experiment has long since shown that in point of physical strength the British bear the palm over all other nations, and their well-known power of enduring excessive heat or cold is attributable not only to peculiarity of race, but perhaps to the exceptional circumstance that these islands are lapped round by the yet warm gulf stream on its return flow from higher latitudes; so that whilst other nations on the same northern latitude with ourselves are suffering from intense cold (Russia for instance), the inhabitants of these "islands of the sea" lying far to the North and West of our nation's cradle in Syria, not only enjoy (uniquely) the same kind and duration of twilight as Palestine itself, but are often in mid-winter able to follow agricultural pursuits and enjoy field sports, which are impracticable within the ice-bound continents of the same zone. And the land foretold (Isa. xviii. 1) as "shadowing with sails," or wings, needed in order to fulfil the predictions of her vast commerce and world-wide colonization, both her 2,000 miles of sea-board, and the security afforded by the "streak of silver sea" in order that her mariners and colonists might reach and occupy the vast continental islands lying yet more Westward and Northward across the Atlantic ocean, as well as Eastward to the extremities of India, and Southward even to Africa's furthest point, and to antipodal Australasia.

2. But this could be enabled only by the privilege of overflowing multitudinousness. Next to the promise of the Messiah, a seed even as the stars of heaven and the sand of the sea for multitude, was assured to Abraham; and in a comparative sense was acknowledged as a literal seed both by David and by Nehemiah, when the numbers of Judah were known—as they are known still. But the tribes of Israel who had been carried Northward by Assyria were far more numerous than the Jews, and centuries afterwards were known as Scüths (Scythians), or Wanderers, though called by some Gothei (Goths), or people of God, and became, as Josephus recorded, eight centuries afterwards, a great multitude who could not be numbered. These, migrating Westward, appear, after some three centuries more, to have descended to the South of Europe, and to have overran the Roman Empire and broken up its power; while in their myriads they also travelled yet further Westward and Northward to Scandinavia and the regions around the Baltic, and at length, under the names of Saxons, Jutes, Danes (mainly in a state of paganism notwithstanding their Eastern traditions), and finally Normans or Northmen, mingled in our own islands with much earlier emigrants from the same Abrahamic race; when, after subsequent ages of subjection to Romish superstition, it pleased the God of Israel both to rescue the nation from the spiritual darkness of Popery, and to increase them very greatly, till from a population of only five millions in the time of Queen Elizabeth, the metropolis alone now exceeds that number, while that of the British Isles reaches 36,000,000; and the whole British race, including North America and our colonies and dependencies, having become "a company of nations," are computed at 100,000,000 souls. This population, still doubling three times in each hundred years, would thus a century hence reach the amazing number of 800 millions, or considerably more than half the computed present population of the earth. No other nation is increasing in nearly the same ratio, as ethnological statisticians have shown, while some (as the French during a recent decade), were annually decreasing one per cent. in number. Such relative increase, since "population is empire," we cannot but regard as a privilege for yet higher and the highest national destiny.

3. Unprecedented extension of empire is by some timidly held to be the reverse of an advantage, in view of its enormous responsibilities. But had the all-wise God deemed empire otherwise than a privilege, we could not conceive Him promising that after the decline and fall of the fourth of the old-world empires predicted in the book of Daniel (chap. ii.), His saints should "possess the kingdom and dominion." The successive empires of Babylon, Media, Greece, and Rome, have each perished, mighty and extensive as they were; and when the imperial power of Rome ceased, the day of Britain's ascendancy had begun to dawn. Her maritime naval power increased, till under Elizabeth it already inspired dread; and since then her commerce has carried her overflowing population to all parts of the world, till her present dependencies girdle the earth, and occupy one-fifth of its habitable surface, and the subjects of her Queen's dominions number nearly one-fourth of the world's computed population. In extent, not all the four great empires of antiquity taken together nearly equal the empire which our promise-keeping God has already bestowed upon the unworthy descendants of His Ten-tribed Israel. Our wisdom and duty are accordingly the humble and prayerful trust that He will both raise up and guide statesmen to govern aright.

4. In order to this, we possess the privilege of a Christian code of laws. Not that our legislature can claim perfection—how far from it we must all acknowledge; but from our gracious Queen as the head of the body politic to the most inexperienced legislator and administrator, the sanctity of a public oath or a Christian affirmation at the least, lies between every man's conscience and his action. And though conscience is doubtless sometimes strained under the evil pressure of faction, yet the collective sense of a people whose minds are for the most part formed upon the scriptural standard of honesty and truth, will ultimately combine to restrain false and unpatriotic courses which experience has proved to be injurious. To how many fanatical schemes of chartists and communists against law and order in our land has not the foundation of that law upon the moral commandments of God been unconsciously fatal? Let us learn to praise Him that the national mind and the national legislation are still imbued with a divine and plain-spoken standard of moral principle, notwithstanding the traitorous efforts now too often made to banish the tables of the Divine law even from the walls of our churches.

5. A fifth privilege is that the nation which represents the House of Israel possesses a National Church; a Church as fully now in connection with the State as it was when Abraham our progenitor was first called of God, and set apart as a prince and father of his household, to erect altars to Jehovah, and under Him to institute religious rites. For though since the Patriarchs and the Mosaic ritual, the shadows have been succeeded by the substance in respect of the only medium of all true worship, the world-wide Altar of the Atonement; and though the people of God are not imperatively bound by any humanly devised ritual whatsoever, yet may godly men still use their Christian liberty, and for the sake of national welfare set in order under the guidance of the Spirit a code of scriptural doctrine and a form of comprehensive worship. That this reasonable liberty has been exercised (notwithstanding many serious departures), and that by national agreement the pure worship of God and the preaching of Divine Truth have been appointed, and His word publicly and plainly and impartially read from end to end of the land for now at least three hundred years, is surely a proper ground of praise and thanksgiving, and a proof that even through centuries of pagan and popish darkness, when the truth of Christ's Gospel was well nigh utterly extinguished in a great part of the British Isles, the Lord had not forsaken the people whom He had, by unconditional covenant, set apart as His nation; and that as He had once with a mighty hand brought them out from Egyptian captivity, and afterwards redeemed them by the death of His Son, so had He given to them this world-wide token that He would yet again manifest His continuous presence and blessing even to the end.

Digitized by Google

6. As an express earnest of such unmerited favour, have we not also the privilege of a Christian Sabbath?—that Lord's-day which the disciples of the infidel Voltaire ridiculed and endeavoured to abolish; that Sabbath rest which even the rampant infidelity of the French nation found to be still necessary, but which, in common with other continental nations, they spend for the most part in earthly business or soul-dissipating frivolity. In contradistinction to the well-known fact that they regard our English Sunday as a burden and a weariness, how dearly is it prized by the British race generally, both here and in America, and our colonies. In spite of anti-Sabbath leagues and persistent efforts to promote its desecration by procuring some relaxation of our Sabbath laws, the British still venerate this divinely appointed ordinance, nor forget what God has spoken of it as a special sign (Ezek. xx. 12) between Him and Israel that they are His people. All praise to Jehovah for this special signet of His Day of Rest and spiritual refreshment.

7. For the further great privilege which renders this day so precious to God's people Israel, is their possession of the Holy Scriptures, the Bible, the Book of books, which contains "the oracles of God"; for to Israel especially are His oracles entrusted. While Judah, spurning the New Covenant in Jesus Christ, have thereby forfeited and relinquished the very essence of this trust, it is Israel's especial privilege to hold and jealously conserve it, and for the noblest use. By the Bible she is made a blessing to many nations. Not to mention the well-known statistics of one society alone, which circulates copies of the Scriptures by the million, and has effected translations of them into hundreds of distinct languages, be it remembered how far such results may be attributable to the affinity between the Hebrew and English tongues. From the time of Tyndale downwards it has been found that the English language is that in which, on account of its similar idiomatic texture, the Hebrew Scriptures can be most easily and correctly rendered. Nor is any other land so permeated by the sacred writings; not only by their presence in nearly every household and their entrance into the current phraseology of the people, but from the diligence with which the Scriptures are taught in our homes, and in the tens of thousands of our daily and Sunday schools; and their consequent gravure into the heart's best memories of the vast majority of the population. And hence, as suggested by the author of a talented work, "The Eclipse of Faith," even could every Bible in the whole earth in some sudden and miraculous way become a perfect blank, and every quotation from it in print or writing at the same time disappear, mental recollection could supply every essential syllable: and the collation of the nation's memory could again supply THE BOOK. If such in all probability be our nation's collective grasp of the Holy Scriptures, because of "the love of the truth," let us bless our covenant God that He hath thus far fulfilled His promise to Israel (Jer. xxxi. 33), "I will put My law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts."

8. Another and consequent privilege is indicated by the prophetic words to Israel, "Ye are My witnesses, saith the Lord." For what other nation upon earth is specially invested with this office? From our father Abraham and onward to the very eve of our Lord's ascension this most honourable commission (necessarily forfeited by Judah on their obstinate rejection of the Saviour's atoning mission, and intermitted to the Ten Tribes during their state of paganism), has yet through the tribes of Benjamin and Levi and their believing kindred been continuous throughout the ages, till it has again devolved on Ephraim-Israel at large. For the Lord has declared that the kingdom of God (the Gospel) should be taken away from the Jews and be given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof; and His ensuing command is still stamped upon the hearts of His people among the British race as upon none other; "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature." Other nations have indeed sent forth witnesses to testify to their own traditions, withholding the Scriptures, or have propagated their own intensely anti-Christian systems by fire and sword, during a space of 1,260 years; but in our own day what race of men do you find, and to whom can you point, except British-Israel, as sending forth into all lands, from her several denominational communions, an open Bible; by her hundreds of missionaries and teachers, both male and female, to bear testimony to Jesus Christ and His redeeming love?

(To be continued.)

NEW TESTAMENT NOTES.

By J. G. TAYLOR.

(Continued fom page 361, vol. ix.).

PART XII.

"LO, WE TURN TO THE GENTILES."

NOT without apparent relish, we are told that the doom of the chosen race was wrapped up in this declaration. The Gentiles heard the Gospel gladly; the Jews would not listen to it. "The heart of this people is waxed gross, and their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes have they closed, lest they should see with their eyes and hear with their ears, and understand with their heart, and should be converted;" and this speech, it is said, sounded the kneli of Israel. If so, it not only sounded the knell of Israel, but the knell of inspiration. One of the most powerful arguments employed by controversialists in defending the inspiration of the Pentateuch, is in Deut. xviii. 15: "The Lord will raise up unto thee a prophet from the midst of thee, like unto Me: unto him ye shall hearken." This prophet was the Saviour, and the striking analogy between the lives of Jesus and Moses is duly emphasised by Christian apologists. But this is dealing with merely half of the prophecy. They are obliged to ignore the prediction, that Israel would hearken to the Gospel message, for the reason that stereotyped theology flatly contradicts it, and, thus, what might be a sharp weapon in the hands of the Christian, becomes pabulum for the Atheist. To contend that Paul renounced his attempt to convert Judah in favour of non-Israelites, is a repudiation of Scripture, and a voluntary contribution to sceptical funds. The apostle states that the law was Israel's tutor, to bring them to Christ, but we are to believe that this tutor was a despicable failure, and that, therefore, God committed an error of judgment. We are to believe that centuries of assiduous training was worse than useless—a positive hindrance—and that the people who flocked into the Church were people who had never received a moment's discipline, mental or moral. We have sufficient respect for God's wisdom, and sufficient confidence in His administration, to resist such an idea.

When Paul turned to the Gentiles, he did not necessarily turn from Israel. On the contrary, he turned to them, for the Ten Tribes were "among the Gentiles." More than that, they were, in New Testament language, Gentiles themselves. Those Jews who resided outside of Palestine, and conformed to Greek civilisation, were not styled Jews, but Greeks; and the Israelites scattered through Asia Minor, were as truly termed Gentiles (1 Cor. xii. 2, R. V.; 1 Peter ii. 12). The Jews were justified in speaking of them as Gentiles. They were Gentiles by birth and association, but above all, they were Gentiles spiritually, having been severed from the Mosaic system, and reduced, by God's own fiat, to the position of Gentiles. Our opponents say they cannot understand how Israelites can be Gentiles in even a spiritual sense. No, but they can understand how Gentiles may be Israelites in a spiritual sense. And they can understand how a motley agglomeration of individuals, picked from every tribe and corner of the earth, may be spiritual Israel, with clearer title to the emoluments of the Abrahamic covenant than the Hebrew nation itself. It is certainly peculiar that they should be so keen-witted in matters affecting the Gentiles, and so obtuse on all that relates to Israel.

Digitized by Google

The popular methods of interpretation are incapable of reconciling Deut. xviii. 15 with Isa. vi. 10, for the latter certifies that Israel should not hearken, the former, that they should; but when it is remembered that Moses treats of Israel as a whole, while Isaiah concerns Judah alone, the difficulty disappears. The verse following, "Lo, we turn to the Gentiles," is a stronghold of the enemy, but like all their strongholds, it is easily captured. "For so hath the Lord commanded us, saying, I have set thee for a light to the Gentiles, that thou shouldest be for salvation unto the uttermost parts of the earth" (Acts xiii. 47). This is taken from Isa. xlix. 6, and we will go back to the prophecy, and see if it does not dash their theory to the ground. "It is too light a thing that thou shouldest be My servant, to raise up the Tribes of Jacob, and to restore the preserved of Israel: I will also give thee for a light to the Gentiles, that thou mayest be My salvation unto the end of the earth." Consequently, the "raising-up" of Israel, and the calling of the Gentiles, are contemporary events, so that to preach the one, and denounce the other, is folly. If the calling of the Gentiles were not a palpable fact, it might be objected that the prophecy, in its entirety, still awaited fulfilment; but it is an incomprehensible and insensate policy, for those who rely implicitly on inspiration, to glory over the accomplishment of the subsidiary purpose of the Advent, and yet fly into a fit of indignation at the bare hint that its main purpose has been attained as well.

(To be continued.)

"YE ARE . . . AN HOLY NATION."

(1 Peter ii. 9.)

By the Rev. A. J. J. Cachemaille, M.A.

In his account of the progress of the Christian religion, Gibbon enumerates (chap. xv.) some of the secondary causes of the rapid growth of the Christian Church, and of these, the first he describes as "the inflexible zeal of the Christians, derived, it is true, from the Jewish religion, but purified from the narrow and unsocial spirit, which, instead of inviting, had deterred the Gentiles from embracing the law of Moses." He then goes on to explain what he means by this, in these words: "We have already described the religious harmony of the ancient world, and the facility with which the most different and even hostile nations embraced, or, at least, respected each other's superstitions. A single people refused to join in the common intercourse of mankind. The Jews, who, under the Assyrian and Persian monarchies had languished for many ages, the most despised portion of their slaves, emerged from obscurity under the successors of Alexander; and as they multiplied to a surprising degree in the East, and afterwards in the West, they soon excited the curiosity and wonder of other nations. The obstinacy with which they maintained their peculiar rites and unsocial manners, seemed to mark them out a distinct species of men, who faintly disguised their implacable hatred to the rest of mankind. Neither the violence of Antiochus, nor the arts of Herod, nor the example of the circumjacent nations, could ever persuade the Jews to associate with the institutions of Moses the elegant mythology of the Greeks. . . . The mad attempt of Caligula to place his own statue in the temple of Jerusalem, was defeated by the unanimous resolution of a people who dreaded death much less than such an idolatrous profanation."

This is a remarkable testimony to a fact which has always been a characteristic, not of the Jews only, but, as I suppose Gibbon meant, of the Hebrew nation. It still holds good, in a very striking manner, with respect to the Jews, but it is not less remarkable in the other portions of the Sons of Isaac. There is an isolation which, in his national life, political, civil, and religious, separates the Saxon from the other portions of the human family. This separation has been intended by God from the first, and it helps us to understand a great deal in the history of Great Britain, and that of other nations, which, without it, is perfectly unaccountable. This feature alone ought to compel the thoughtful minds amongst us and abroad, to find a solution for a peculiarity, which frets and disturbs us, until we recognise it as a mark of distinction, and of destiny so noble, that we are afraid at first to grasp it. It is scarcely my intention to show this isolation just now, except, so far as it serves as the reason for a hope of the most exalted character, and one which ought to clear the advocates of our Identity with the House of Israel from the charge of being furnished by the devil with the theory, and kept alive in it by an insufferable pride, which is incompatible with the spirit of Christianity.

In the first place, I wish to state, that I never like to quarrel with facts. They may be troublesome, unwelcome, bitter, or quite the reverse; but still, they are facts, and no adjective will qualify them out of existence. I find it, therefore, stated by God repeatedly, throughout the Old and New Testament, that He had chosen a man, a family, a people, to occupy a certain position of peculiarity, of separation, of consecration. This is so repeatedly stated, and so clearly, that I accept it as an absolute fact to be dealt with. It may be very difficult for man to conceive either its possibility or the means by which it would be carried out; but, then, that is not man's part, it is God's part, and must therefore be a most possible thing. What I do then is to try to adapt myself to a thing which I cannot alter or avoid. All through history, and at this day before my eyes, I see this fact standing out as a difficulty, a puzzle, or a noble distinction. And to-day I see it taking a shape of beauty and of excellence which makes me feel even more glad than ever I was, and that is saying a great deal, that this great nation of England is identical with the House of Israel, and, therefore, the possessor of an heritage of surpassing glory.

This feature which claims my admiration is that which St. Peter describes, amongst others, that we should be "an holy nation"; and I quote St. Peter because it is evident that he is writing to the people I mean—viz., "the strangers" of Israel, who are strangers no more, but, having been as sheep going astray, are now returned unto the shepherd and bishop of their souls.

It must be plain to anyone who has read the Bible with any care, and plainer still to all who have been able to see Israel in our nation, that the purpose of God has been not only a magnificent one, but one which He has gradually unfolded, and portions of which could not be unfolded until certain times and conditions had been reached. Because, then, some features in the text of God's promise have not hitherto been reached, it is no argument either that they cannot or will not be reached.

Digitized by Google

This, it seems to me, is the case with regard to that glorious promise and hope of Israel, that we should be "an holy nation." That is the goal to which we are tending—that is the ultimate expectation of our hope, of which we shall not be ashamed. And when this is reached all the complaints of selfishness, pride, ambition, and every other hitherto incomprehensible hope of the Anglo-Israelite, will be swallowed up in the mightiness of the truth which we hold, and to which we clung with a tenacity which came not from below but from above.

It will be admitted, not by Anglo-Israelites alone, but by all Bible students, that God did promise this characteristic as the chief and crowning glory of His people. Whether we or they have ever believed it possible or that it would come, the fact stands written on every folio of our title-deeds. And the very separation from other people with which God has branded the Hebrew nation in all time, has been the visible sign that what He did for the physical character He could and would do for the whole character, physical, moral, and spiritual.

St. Peter is but quoting language which Moses had used in Deuteronomy (e.g., Deut. xiv. 1, 2), and which the prophets used after him down to the latest of those who spoke under the first dispensation. And, under every figure available, opened out this expectation, if perhaps a people with such a divine destiny might be spurred to a nobler present.

Yet a careful observation of the Scripture shows us that this was to be the glory and consummation of the latter days. Speaking the language of experience, it could not take place till after the incarnation of our Lord, nor yet till after the coming of the Holy Ghost, nor even then till after the witness had been given "unto the uttermost parts of the earth," in which dwell, and from which should return, the dispersion of Israel and Judah.

But it was to come, and what makes one's Israelite heart rejoice is to see the signs of its arrival. For a long while we have been seeking this, and yet with blind eyes, asking it of God in our national worship. It would perhaps make some of our clergy and our laity awake to a sense of what they might have and would have if only they "saw their signs" and prayed their petitions in faith—if we could go seriatim through the Prayer-book. We take our Book of Common Prayer, and from its earliest to its latest office, we note the words upon our lips which tell a truth which we do not, many of us, yet accept, but which faith could and ought to claim; and, if claimed, the words of St. Peter and of all the prophets which have been since the world began would have an experimental and actual fulfilment.

In the office of baptism of infants we thank God that "the infant being dead unto sin, and living unto righteousness, and being buried with Christ in His death may abolish the whole body of sin," &c. Whatever be our views of regeneration and baptismal grace, my purpose is to call attention to the fact that we are accepting and working upon, at least professedly, St. Peter's description of "a holy nation" from the cradle to the grave. We note that our daily prayer in the national Church is that "God will grant that this day we fall into no sin, neither run into any kind of danger," &c.; and this either means a real possibility, or it is a vain petition and repetition which God hates. It either implies that God can so keep us, or that He might yet does not; which is a contradiction of His very nature and purpose.

We are daily saying, "O God, make clean our hearts within us," which means really, make us perfectly pure at the fountain of our life, and therefore "an holy nation." We say at the solemn service of the Holy Communion to God, "Cleanse the thoughts of our hearts . . . that we may perfectly love Thee and worthily magnify Thy holy name;" and we close that service with the oblation, "Here we present ourselves . . . souls and bodies, to be a reasonable, holy, and lively (living) sacrifice unto Thee."

It would take up all the BANNER room were I to enumerate all the passages in the Prayer-book which give an equal testimony, they are continual as soon as our eyes are open to see them. It would astonish most people if they thought for a moment of the favourite hymns they sing, where there are words as emphatic as these from the Prayer-book and from St. Peter, and which either mean what they say, or else are a mockery to be abhorred.

All these are evidence that His nation in her national worship is seeking the fulfilment of St. Peter's words; and it is also an evidence that this fulfilment must and will come! But when? All these years we who hold Anglo-Israel views are looked upon as holding views which are sordid, material, beneath the Christian hope. But what if our real hope is a great deal in advance of our judges—indeed so much ahead of them that they condemn us afresh for being impossible enthusiasts? When shall we come to the resolution of this difficulty? We shall come to it, no doubt, nationally, in due time, because such is God's purpose. But we shall come to it individually, to an extent little dreamt of, when we stand by faith and with faith upon the promise itself. Just as individually we rest upon Christ for the redemption of the soul, and are absolutely assured that this redemption is become ours. So this further promise is realised after we have accepted it by faith. And as individuals make up the nation, so shall we hasten the nation's glory in the same measure as we individually claim and enjoy all that is in the title-deed of our inheritance.

It might be a somewhat bold thing, perhaps, to state as much as I have thus done, had I the mere promise of the Word to advance; it is still true that "except we see signs and wonders we will not believe;" it is therefore a strong confirmation to us, to see this fact growing every week under our very eyes. Not long since, and still now to some extent, this confession of holiness was repudiated as little short of blasphemy, and as the evidence of a disordered faith; but now there is nothing which strikes us with so much thankfulness as this very growth of the desire for holiness, this acceptance of it; and the multiplied forms under which it is taught and received. People are seeking to day what David asked for in Psalm li.—"a clean heart." They are to-day claiming that God should do in them what he promised in Ezekiel xxxvi. 25-31. And it shall be done. It is one of the noblest, one of the highest Identifications of Israel, one which in its fulfilment will end the charges which are so freely launched against the BANNER and its adherents, and end them in the happiest way; for our opponents will cease to complain and we shall forget to retaliate for charges which both will forget in the glorious work now equally shared by both.

Dec. 2, 1885.

GLEANINGS FROM DARJEELING.

"The people of the 'company of nations' (Gen. xxxv. 11) are busily preparing for 'the day whereof God has spoken' (Ezek. xxxix. 8)—the day when they will have to assist their old mother in maintaining the integrity of her Empire; when they will have to protect her maritime commerce and their own 'gates' (Isa. lx. 11) from the cruisers of the 'Prince of Rosh;' when for Imperial purposes they will be actually banded with the mother, 'a nation and a company of nations' (Gen. xxxv. 11), 'called in Isaac's name' (Rom. ix. 7); when the world shall acknowledge that 'God has not cast away His people' (Rom. xi. 1), but has kept His covenant (Heb. ix. 15), and has saved 'all-Israel' (Rom. xi. 26) 'with an everlasting salvation' (Isa. xlv. 17);; and when the official title, 'Victoria, by the grace of God (2 Sam. vii. 10—29), Defender of the Faith (Isa. xliii. 21), Queen of Great Britain and Ireland, and of the Colonies and Dependencies thereof,' &c., shall show that

Digitized by Google

God's covenant with David did not end with Zedekiah (Jer. xxxiii. 17—26). In that day they shall say that 'there is a God that giveth strength and power unto Israel.' Let us bless the Lord, O Israel, who daily loadeth us with benefits; and let us bow our heads with shame and humiliation for the glories that He is pressing upon our sinful nation.

"GERMANY NOT OF ISRAEL.

"Writers on philology have long spoken of the English and German languages as two dialects of a common 'Teutonic' tongue, and of the Anglo-Saxons and Germans as being similarly allied in race. They are now, however, grasping the truth—that language is not a certain test of race. And what is more, they now find that the English language differs essentially from the German in grammatic structure and idiomatic texture, which are the true tests of close affinity. Thus the evidence of language points to a radical ethnic difference between Anglo-Saxons and Germans; and historical research confirms this conclusion. Latham (in his Germania of Tacitus, p. 116) tells us that 'the mother tongue of the present English—Anglo-Saxon—is extinct on the Continent, wholly replaced by high German as the literary language, and by Platt-Deutsch as the speech of the country people.' And Sharon Turner (in his History of the Anglo-Saxons, i. p. 312) states that 'Bede affirms the complete emigration of the Anglo-Saxons; he says their country, ab eo tempore usque hodie manere desertus.' The Israelite origin of the Anglo-Saxons does not, therefore, carry with it the Israelite origin of the Germans. So writes 'Oxonian' on p. 115 of Israel's Wanderings.

"The Anglo-Saxons and their language left the Continent for the British 'Isles.' Is it not more than 'chance' that Ephraim is called Engel, an 'heifer' (Hosea iv. 16, x. 11), and the House of Israel Beth I-tsahak (Amos vii. 9, 16)? Is not Anglo-Saxon (Engel I-tsahak) the 'new name' (Isa. lxv. 15) under which Ephraim-Israel has to be found by Judah-Israel? 'Who is blind as the Lord's servant?' 'This people have I formed for Myself; they shall show forth My praise.' Therefore 'let them give glory unto the Lord, and declare His praise in the islands.'"

Review.

Jehovah Triumphant. By John Leechman, Victoria, Australia. Price 10s. 6d. Robert Banks and Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

THIS is a remarkable work, written by an Australian author residing in the Colony of Victoria, and published in their best style by Robert Banks and Son, as a volume of 541 pages, in London. The book was issued by the writer as a supplement to Mr. Hine's work, "Lost Israel Found," and two-thirds of it were written, it appears, before the author had any idea that "the subject had already enlisted the efforts of numerous pamphleteers and organised associations, and that THE BANNER OF ISRAEL had reached its fourth volume." It was doubtful, therefore, to Mr. Leechman whether in 1884, his book was wanted. But he resolved to issue it because "the plan and arrangement of his work was a new and a complete one, giving it the character of a handbook for enquirers who desire to become acquainted with our Scriptural arguments." Our labours in the British Islands seemed necessarily to be "brief, condensed, and fragmentary," and he believed that he had introduced "many lines of revelation which do not appear yet to have been traced out by others, some of them most marvellous in description."

The volume was heralded in the General Preface with a flourish of trumpets, because it seemed to the author that we earlier writers "were in respect to knowledge in the position of him who 'look up and said, I see men; for I behold them as trees walking'" (sic, p. xi.), and that Providence had raised him up that "by his feeble instrumentality the duty of instructing his contemporaries on the subject" might be carried out. Whether the object the author has in view will be carried out, and whether his volume will effect what we have here failed to perform, will be seen in time. Meanwhile we must observe that Mr. Leechman in the body of his work addresses himself only to the Scriptural argument, but relegates the historical and ethnic proofs to the Appendix, his authorities being Glover's "Remnant of Judah," "Dan, the Pioneer of Israel," by Gawler, "Are We Israelites?" by the Rev. B. W. Savile, and "Lost Israel: Where Are They To Be Found?" by H. L. It was a mistake, of course, to quote Mr. Savile's work, as our readers well know; but probably the fact of the Vicar of Shillingford's defection had not reached Mr. J. Leechman, in Victoria, in Oct., 1882, when the Appendices were added to the work.

In regard to the book itself, we consider that our author has given us a very useful and carefully worked-out summary of the Scriptural arguments, for which Anglo-Israelites will be grateful. He has taken infinite pains to bring it before us in a compendious, complete form, and with the exception of one or two points where we are constrained to differ from him, we are sure that he will carry the majority of Anglo-Israelites in this country with him. The author's Indices are very full and very useful, both as regards the texts quoted and the subjects discussed. In these respects he has placed his readers under a great obligation. The volume, after its excellent introductory chapters, deals first with "The Ecclesiastical Error," which, of course, is the mistake of the clergy in giving the whole of Israel's blessings to the Church, while poor Judah has the curses in full complement. This chapter contains a sentiment in sec. 32 which we are glad to transfer to our pages.

"There is," says the author, "but one kingdom of God, and it must have a visible character and organization and an all-subduing influence before it leaves this world; and there is but one authenticated Church and congregation in the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ. It is a great and glorious fact that under Divine control, the British Protestant Church Ecclesiastical is the Church of God in the veritable Israelitish Kingdom of God." We are glad to see thus that our antipodean fellow believer endorses our own view that the Church of England is the Church of God, and both are Israelitish in their origin and character. The scope of this important work is well described by Mr. Leechman himself on p. 35 and sec. 34, where he says:—"Of the ultimate supremacy throughout the whole political world of the Twelve-Tribed Israel, literal, racial, and original, the declarations of Scripture are, as we shall see, numerous, oft repeated, and more or less interspersed through all the books of the Bible. We shall find this divine determination to be the political cosmos of the Pentateuch, the animating spirit of the books of Joshua and Judges; it flows like a clear stream through the turbid waters of Kings and Chronicles; is literally, as well as figuratively, the alpha and omega of the book of Job, and fills the Psalms with anthems of gladness and triumph; it is the brilliant regalia of Israel in the Proverbs of her illustrious king and the raison d'être of that priceless book; it is the constant theme of the prophets, the cypher to Gospel enigmas, and the only key that will fully interpret the epistles, and unlock the mysteries of Revelation." The book deals with the subject thus described, and more or less fully succeeds in the object aimed at. After fully discussing "The Everlasting Covenant" made by God with Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and Israel, and noticing that the Church of England has taken all the spiritual blessings under the name of Israel and applied them to herself (Sec. 44), the author, in Chap. iii. and the following ones, enters on the subject of "God's design of an immortal nation," "The Great Nation created—its perpetuity declared," and then describes "the features of the great nation" by showing they are those of the British We are sorry to see that our author dismisses "The Gates" in three lines (Sec. 106, p. 79), sending his readers for information to Philo-Israel's "Geography of the Gates," not following in this respect, we suppose, Mr. Ed. Hine's lead, who thinks nothing of the Gates and interprets Gen. xxii. 17 in a manner quite different from that adopted in Mr. Leechman's volume. From Chap. vi. the author's consideration of God's entire dealings with His people Israel is entered on at great length. He follows in general Mr. Hine's views, but amplifies the argument from Scripture to an extent which we fear will tire the ordinary reader, and repel instead of attracting those we want to win.

(To be continued.)

THE articles by Rev. C. W. Hickson, F. Gass, and others, promised for this number, we are compelled to hold over to our next issue, our space being fully occupied.

ERRATUM.—Vol. IX., p. 512, col. i., last line of leader, read Num. vi. 24—26.

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."

(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India.)

"And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the Forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS of the EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. X., No. 472. Entered at Stationers' Hall.] WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 13, 1886. [PRICE ONE PENNY.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
The End of the Irish Trouble	21
The February Simultaneous Meetings of the Church Missionary Society	22
Hosea II. By the Rev. C. W. Hickson, M.A.—Part I.	23
The World Language of the Future. By E. Wilmshurst, Retford. Part II.	24
The Upper Horizontal Flooring and the Quadrature of the Circle. By F. Gass	24
Britannia's Privilege. By the Rev. T. W. Boyce, B.A.—Part II.	25
New Testament Notes. By J. G. Taylor.—Part XIII.	26
Review	27

THE END OF THE IRISH TROUBLE.

THE solution which the late Prime Minister, Mr. Gladstone, contemplates for our Irish troubles, and, doubtless, will apply, should he once more obtain power, is to give Ireland all that her rebellious populace want and to let her go free. Home Rule in the widest sense, with an independent Parliament, is the sort of liberty he would give to a people who ignorantly and unjustly hate us: his policy being "peace at any price," even the price of the disruption of the British Empire! His plan, we suppose (for such has been the announcement), embraces the wildly-impracticable, terribly-dangerous policy of allowing Irish rebels still to send members to the Imperial Parliament, to secure thus, we presume, the advantage of their votes on crucial divisions in matters of foreign politics. It seems almost incredible that Mr. Gladstone should have even conceived, much more that he should have promulgated and intend to carry out, ideas such as these, which only have to be stated to be rejected by the rest of the United Kingdom.

The mere publication of these proposals, however, has done infinite harm to the people of Ireland, raising among the disaffected wild hopes destined to be disappointed, and bringing them, therefore, in desperation, to the verge of civil war or desperate acts which must lead to it at last. The entanglement now in affairs has come to such a pass that there seems no possible solution but civil war, and the re-conquest of the turbulent Southern and Western Irish, to be followed by their banishment from the House of Commons. The Empire must not be put in danger for the sake of a mere fraction of its inhabitants; and if the Irish, from ignorant hatred of the Anglo-Saxon majority, cannot be trusted with the franchise, they must be content, till they learn what is good for them, with a form of Government which is found needful for the Indian races or other conquered peoples not yet eligible to govern themselves. The problem is this: Ireland is so excited with sullen, ignorant enmity against their British fellow subjects that they have elected eighty-six nationalists to Parliament with the avowed purpose of making government by Parliament impossible, no matter which party be in power, until, worn out by sheer disgust, one or other of the great parties in the State can persuade the nation to let Ireland become independent of the larger island of Great Britain.

But the Government of the Queen must be carried on, and if the Irish Nationalists and Separatists will not permit it they must be excluded from the House. How can that be done? Not by the act of the Nation or the Ministry of the day. It can be brought about, it seems to us, by one method only, and that means such an outbreak in Ireland as will compel the Government to conquer the rebels once for all, and govern Ireland for the time by a paternal despotism like India's polity, thus ridding the House of Commons of what is now an intolerable nuisance. This solution was plainly stated by a correspondent of the St. James's Gazette on Dec. 19th, 1885, and his words will bear repetition in the BANNER. He wrote thus regarding—

THE ULTIMATE SOLUTION.

To the Editor of "The St. James's Gazette."

SIR,—About three years ago I asked a friend of mine, an eminent Liberal peer, for an explanation of a certain vote which he had given upon an important Irish question, in direct opposition, as it appeared to me, to what I knew to be his views of what was expedient for Ireland and the Empire. His reply was, that he did it because he foresaw that a civil war was the only possible solution of the Irish Question, and that the sooner it came, bringing with it, as it must, a new mode of government more adapted for the control of the Irish race than the present, the better.

I entertain the old-fashioned belief that God has a hand in politics; and it does not seem to me improbable that the "traitor" so powerfully apostrophised in the verses of your yesterday's paper may turn out to be the "sword of the Lord" that shall sweep away the ruinous Irish factor from our imperial legislation, without releasing Ireland either from her union with us, or from the wholesome necessity of submitting to a government in which she refuses to take her share and which she avowedly strives to render impossible.—I am, sir, your obedient servant,

C. P.

December 18.

We do not know if C. P. be an Anglo-Israelite, but he has put forward a "solution" of our nation's difficulty which has long been revolving in our own mind. It seems "the only possible one," as the Liberal peer declared, and Mr. Gladstone's action lately seems to have brought civil war within "measurable distance of practical politics," by reason of the inflammable material into the midst of which he has just wantonly thrown his most dangerous proposals. But we ask ourselves, is this mode of getting rid of the Irish difficulty and of the South and West Irish members of the Imperial Parliament one which falls in with our Israelitish doctrine and the teachings of Our Identity? We think it does. It has been shown by a writer in the BANNER (L. P.) so far back as December, 1879, vol. iii., page 511, that before the promise to Israel contained in Isa. i. 26, can be fulfilled the Canaanite must be removed from the Councils of Israel. He has rightfully no place there and must go hence. For the counsellors of the Lord's chosen people are to be as at the beginning alone provided "out of all the people" (Exod. xviii. 21). L. P. believed there might be "tremendous difficulties to be overcome before the Canaanite would be expelled from the Imperial Councils;" but a civil war, provoked by these turbulent Canaanites is now close before us apparently, and a Liberal deems it the only possible solution of just the very difficulty before us and precisely the thing L. P. desired to see effected.

Digitized by Google

"We distinctly confess our belief," wrote L. P., "that the time is at hand when the councils of this nation shall be purged from this foreign element; and then, and not till then, can we expect it shall become as 'at the beginning.'"

The Times on Dec. 24th, 1885, had some ominous sentences on this subject, published after the above had been written. The sentiments are exactly those we have placed before our readers, and are remarkable as showing that what we have stated is rapidly becoming the conviction of our own people on this side the Irish Channel. The journalist wrote thus:—

> The whole strength of the Separatists, whether in the Legislature or the field, depends absolutely upon our own reluctance, under the most extreme provocation, to admit that the methods which prove adequate for the government of Englishmen are not always necessarily adequate for the government of Irishmen. So long as we retain the legislative control of Ireland and command of the forces which make it efficacious in the last resort we have a limit beyond which Mr. Parnell and his party cannot pass. At any moment this country can terminate the whole situation which terrifies some people so much by excluding the Irish members from the House of Commons and proclaiming martial law in Ireland. In three months the island would be cleared of the hired ruffians who now terrorize and mislead the population, and the establishment, amid a general sigh of relief, of any orderly administration we might choose to appoint would be secured. Industry would revive, confidence would return, and the present ruinous dissipation of wealth would cease as by magic.
>
> This will appear to some a very dreadful thing to contemplate, and we need hardly say that we are not advocating any such course. But there are much greater calamities than the interposition of a beneficent despotism to save a nation from its worst enemies.

We are clearly on the eve of very serious events, and we shall be surprised if they do not tend to bring about the times when the Identity of the British races with the Lost Ten Tribes will be established before the nations of the world to God's glory. Israel, praise ye the Lord!

THE FEBRUARY SIMULTANEOUS MEETINGS OF THE CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

THE Church Missionary Society is going to make a very praiseworthy effort. In February next simultaneous meetings are going to be held throughout this country in at least one hundred cities and towns of England, in order to set forth the claims of the heathen and Mohammedan world upon the Church of Christ. As this is a Church of England Society, we recognise here that this grand missionary body claims for the Church of England that it is the Church of Christ, or, at least, an important branch thereof. But why is this effort made just now? The Church Missionary Society have put forth four papers, described as the "February Simultaneous Meetings—No. 1, No. 2, No. 3, and No. 4." The first, or "F. S. M. No. 1," tells us "why these meetings are to be held." In reference to the reasons given we desire to say a word.

The chief reason given is that "the evangelisation of the world is the great primary work of the Church of Christ—its first and foremost and central duty." We have no fault to find with this if the Church Missionary Society will also admit that the Church of England is the Church of Israel, established "to blossom and bud, and to fill the face of the world with fruit," and destined as its special function to carry the Gospel to, and thus "bless all the nations, all the families, and all the kindreds of the earth." The Church of Christ is established in the British nation, and, because the latter is Israel, it carries on the work of world-wide evangelisation. But if the Church of Christ were in France or Germany, Sweden, Norway, India, China, or elsewhere, we beg leave to tell the Church Missionary Society that it could not, and, in fact, does not, in those lands perform its "first and foremost and central duty" of evangelising the world! The reason is this. The work of world-wide evangelisation is tied up in God's Word to Israel, and to her Church alone. We may search the Scriptures in vain for any hint that the Gospel is to be preached "to all the nations" by any but the Hebrew race.

The F. S. M. No. 1 leaflet, on page 2, proves very clearly that our Lord's last command to His Hebrew infant Church was to prosecute foreign missions. But on page 1 of F. S. M. No. 4 we have the Society proving to us, by the use of some of our chief Identity texts, that the subject of missions holds a prominent place in the Bible, because it is so described in Gen. xii. 3; Acts iii. 25; and Gal. iii. 8. Now Gen. xii. 3 is a promise to Abraham and his afterseed for ever (Luke i. 55), and how the Church Missionary Society intends to make it applicable to the British nation and the Church of England—such being Gentile non-Israelite, as they suppose—we have no idea. The writer quotes Acts iii. 25 and Gal. iii. 8, thereby distinctly showing that the promise was made by God to Abraham and his seed, but could have no application to any other race than the Hebrew. The Church Missionary Society does not, of course, accept Our Identity, but on the supposition that this nation and its Church are Gentile non-Israelite in character and race, we should like to know how the Society explains the fact (which it must allow to be one), that no foreign Church outside that of the Anglo-Saxon race undertakes the "Church's first and greatest work"—the "evangelisation of the world?" and how also the circumstance is to be explained that the British Church and nation alone, of all the Churches and nations, perform this greatest of all works, according to the prophecies, assigned to be done exclusively by Abraham and his seed for ever?

The evangelisation of the world was distinctly the duty allotted in God's Word to the after seed of Abraham exclusively. This is clearly proved by our favourite texts, of which the following are only samples:—Gen. xii. 3; xviii. 18; xxii. 18; xxvi. 4; xxviii. 14; Isa. xliii. 1, 7, 21; xxvii. 6; Acts iii. 25; Gal. iii. 8; Matt. xxviii. 19, 20; and others like them. Instead, therefore, of the words used by the author of F. S. M. No. 1, page 7, that "The February Simultaneous Meetings ought to be held—1. Because the evangelisation of the world is the Church's first and greatest work," we should say the proper formula should be—"1. Because the evangelisation of the world is Israel's first and greatest work; and the Church and nation of the British races are identical with the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel." We have felt on these grounds that anyone who is privileged to take part in the "February Simultaneous Meetings," as friends of the Church Missionary Society, ought, as in duty bound, to take his stand on Our Identity, and insist on that as the reason why the Church and nation of the "English people" (meaning the British) should, as a duty, go forth to evangelise the world. We stated this in our reply to the Secretary of the Church Missionary Society when he lately called on us to do our part in the glorious work in February next, as one of their "Honorary District Secretaries." We told him that if we were to stand up to press the duty on our fellow-countrymen we felt bound to tell them the duty was their's, because of Our Identity with Israel, but not otherwise; and, under the circumstances, we doubted if the Church Missionary Society wished for our services. We need not say that to that letter there has been as yet no response, because the Church Missionary Society does not believe in Our Identity, but does believe, without reference to God's promises to Abraham, and the Bible in general, that the Church of England is bound to do this greatest of all work (in Israel's stead), taking Israel's place without any sanction from above, and distinctly in presumption and defiance of the God of Israel! We cannot support such action, and, therefore, greatly to our regret, shall be only able to take a passive part in the meetings fixed for February in the West of England.

Digitized by Google

HOSEA II.

A Paper read at a Meeting of the Bristol Clerical Association

By the Rev. C. W. Hickson, M.A.,
Vicar of St. Bartholomew's, Bristol.

PART I.

I do not myself feel disposed to adopt the connection of chapter ii. with the end of the last chapter, as made in the Revised Version. If that connection be sustained, then the words of verse 1 are prophetical of a time when Judah should welcome their brethren of Israel, who had been cast out of their covenant relationship to God as His people and rejected from His mercy, as again restored to the position they had lost. Such an interpretation undoubtedly yields a true sense; but still I prefer the division as made in the English Authorised Version. The "say ye" seems naturally to go with the "plead ye," the imrû with the rîbhû, as part of one and the same exhortation. I take it, therefore, that the prophet is calling upon the people of Ten-Tribed Israel (not Judah) to remind one another of their covenant relationship to Jehovah, and of the mercies they had received and still were receiving at His hands; to remind one another that they were as yet still Ammi, "My people," Jehovah's chosen nation, and that as yet they were not Lo-Ruhamah, but were the recipients of the Lord's goodness. On this ground, therefore, they should plead with their nation, and remind Israel that she was not acting as a people married to the Lord, and consequently that He could not fulfil His loving purposes towards her as her Husband. It is a part of God's unchangeable character to do nothing through arbitrary caprice, but to deal goodness to the penitent, and wrath to the impenitent. Therefore, however positively He may have denounced evil against a people, there is always left a place for repentance (refer to Jer. xviii. 7, 8). "The change is not in God, when He acts as He did with Nineveh, but in the circumstances which regulate His dealings. We say the land recedes from us when we sail forth, whereas it is we who recede from the land" (Fausset on Jer. xviii. 8).

So verses 1 and 2 are an earnest call to repentance which the people of Israel are exhorted to address to one another and to the nation at large—their mother—in order that the evils denounced in chap. i. 4—9, and further threatened in this chapter (ver. 3, 4, 6, 7, 9—13), might be averted. With these introductory remarks it does not seem necessary to explain in much detail the expressions used in ver. 1—13.

The "whoredoms" in ver. 2 mean, of course, worshipping of false gods. "Out of her sight" is rather, as in Revised Version, from her face. Israel's idolatry is open. She is like a public barefaced prostitute who displays her profession in her face and breasts. The Lord threatens (ver. 3) to take from her everything that He had given her, and reduce her to her first condition. Israel in Egypt was naked, and dwelt as an oppressed nation of slaves without a country. Her deliverance from the bondage of Egypt was the day of her political birth. "Make her as a wilderness," rather "the" wilderness, referring to the wilderness through which Israel came from Egypt, and which itself had neither food nor drink, as Israel felt only too keenly. Reduction to a situation where the necessaries of life should be wanting is what is meant. That Israel could have regarded the idols she worshipped as supplying her with food, clothing, and luxuries (ver. 5), would be incredible if ver. 8 did not show that to be the meaning, and such a passage as Jer. xliv. 17—19 reveal that Judah was capable of equal stupidity.* The heathen nations round about were rich and mighty, and attributed this to their gods, and Israel was foolish enough to be deluded into believing it. Ver. 6 points to the privations and distress and suffering which would result from the deprivation of corn, wine, wool, and flax, spoken of in ver. 9. Israel's suffering in their exile would be the inward obstacle to further apostasy, even though outwardly they would be exposed to stronger temptations to idolatry than in their native land. The realised impotence of the idols to help them in time of distress would be a further hedge or fence (ver. 7). The idols prove to be nonentities just when Israel most earnestly turns to them for help.

The latter part of ver. 7 seems to be anticipatory of and connected with ver. 14 and what follows; ver. 8—13 continuing the Lord's complaint against His people, and His threatenings of what He would do to her. It was a great aggravation of her sins that she not only had become ignorant of who was the true Giver of her corn, wine, and oil, but actually used these gifts of God for the service of Baal, as well as their silver and gold, which they employed partly in making idol images, partly in serving idols.

The antithesis of ver. 9 to ver. 5 is striking and instructive. Israel said the idols gave her her bread, her water, &c., thus asserting that not only were the idols the givers of these things, but that in giving them they recognised her right to them. God asserts that all these things were His own absolutely, that they were the free gifts of His grace, and that as they were not recognised as His gifts, and were so grossly misapplied, he would, as it were, resume possession of them to such an extent that utter destitution would befall her, and thus should she be in the sight of her idol lovers, who, however, though having eyes, would have no power to see it, still less to help her in her hour of desolation. This whole threatening (ver. 3—13) was fulfilled by the results of the Assyrian invasion. On the last words of ver. 13, Henderson remarks, their entirely abandoning themselves to the service of idols, and their dereliction from the God of their fathers are brought forward at the conclusion of this description of their conduct in order to heighten the aggravation of their guilt, and render the announcement of the kindly disposition of Jehovah toward them, at the beginning of the following verse, the more surprising.

In the remainder of the chapter God announces His gracious and merciful intentions towards the same people against whom all the previous threatenings are directed, and who are symbolised by the names Gomer, Jezreel, Lo-ruhamah, and Lo-ammi in the first chapter—viz., the Ten Tribes of the kingdom of Israel or Ephraim. Whilst fully admitting that Gentiles pure and simple participate in Christ in the spiritual blessings promised to Israel, reduced themselves, as the result of the fulfilment of the previous threatenings, to the condition of Gentiles, and the words of chapter i. 10, are thus legitimately used by St. Paul as proving that God has a called people from among the Gentiles as well as from among the Jews, yet it appears to me of primary importance to insist on the identity of the people to whom

* "Israel's ignorance of God was the fault of her will, which corrupted her understanding" (see Rom. i. 24—28).

Digitized by Google

the promises are made with the people against whom the threatenings are denounced. Primarily, the people interested in the promises of ver.14-23 are identical with the people threatened in chap. i. and in ver. 1-13 of this chapter. Nothing can be more close than the connection between ver. 14 and what goes before, as marked by the "therefore," and the same "her" as in the verse before. What is sometimes called "the spiritual" Israel never came up out of Egypt: this Israel did (ver. 15). It is the same Ephraim in whose mouth were the names of Baalim who shall no more call Jehovah Baali but Ishi (ver. 16, 17). The Jezreel of ver. 22 is identical with the Jezreel of chap. i. 4.

(To be continued.)

THE WORLD-LANGUAGE OF THE FUTURE.

By E. Wilmshurst, Retford.

(Continued from page 12.)

PART II.

In tracing the first stream of the three columns of languages given on page 12, which have mingled in these islands, and have together formed the British tongue, we must go back to Asia, their birthplace, and the reader will observe that the Welsh, or Keltic, element of our national language derives its origin from the Keltic of West Europe (the Cimbric of the Romans), which was from the Cimric of East Europe (Crimea, &c.), which in turn was from the Gomerim of West Asia, which came from the Yavana, the common source of the tongues of Persia (Zeud and Parsi), and of the Afghans (Pelvi) of Bokhara, Armenia, &c.

Sharon Turner records (vol. 2, p. 292) that he found 162 words in Persian, 57 in Zeud, and 43 in Pehlvi, so similar to British in sound as to confirm his deduction of our progenitors from West Asia, and from those very countries and nations among which the Ten Tribes were dispersed.

At a meeting at Dover (London News, April 20, 1883) the Persian Ambassador enumerated 70 Welch words which were also Persian words expressing the same signification. Professor Rawlinson states that "the Cimmerii attained to considerable power in West Asia and East Europe, circa B.C. 600," or almost 100 years after Israel (Beth-Khumri in the Assyrian inscriptions) had been deported to the cities of the Medes.

But who were the Gomerim to whom we are so remotely indebted for many of our words? The historian Ptolemy places the land of the Chomari, or sons of Gomer, in the neighbourhood of the Caspian Sea, close to the Sambatæ, or dwellers on the Sambatioun River—the Rabinnical "River of Rest"—probably the Gozan of Scripture to which cast-out Israel was deported, and in which same country (see Forster's "Antiquities") Ptolemy marks the Tos (far-banished) Manassa, and which Eldad, the Danite, gives as the seat in exile of Simeon, Ephraim, and Manassa, and of the city of Asher (the seat of the Aorsa of Ptolemy).

The prophet Hosea, who chiefly announced to Israel its coming fate, in his own person acted the drama which he was commissioned to foretell; in his own person, representing the House of Israel, he married Gomer (daughter of Diblain), representing the Scythian Gomerin, and so foretold the mingling of Israel—the seed of Shem among the descendants of Gomer, the seed of Japhet; and it is a remarkable fact that the genealogies of Nennius, the earliest British historian, and also the Welch records, trace descent through Gomer from Japhet, and that in Wales one county is yet Mount-Gomer-yshire; and "Serryn Gomer," "The Star of Gomer," is no uncommon sign outside a Welch inn. Note also that "Diblaim" is a dual word, and signifies two (peoples) brought together by outward pressure. And as Dr. Moore so well writes: "The whole scheme of the prophecy of Hosea is in the first chapter; the result of this symbolic marriage of Israel (as distinct from Judah) with a people of whoredoms (false religions) is, first, Jezreel, the 'seed of God,' to signify the cessation of the kingdom of Israel, but yet the preservation of a godly and blessed race; then, after a time, Lo-ruhamah, 'not having obtained mercy,' is born, because in exile the people did not trust in Jehovah; later on, Lo-ammi, 'not My people,' no longer even recognised as Israel; yet, still further on in the ages, we read that Israel is to be in number numberless, and that where it was said 'not My people,' there they are to receive the 'new covenant' (the Gospel), and then 'they are called the sons of the living God.' To find Israel, the descendants of the rebel Tribes—the Lo-ammi—in the 'latter day,' we must look for a people which most readily and willingly received the Gospel;" and, we may add, which, in "another tongue," is the one nation which disseminates the "new covenant" and the knowledge of Israel's God over the face of the habitable globe.

God said, "I will sow them in the earth" among "many nations;" but as in "the survival of the fittest" the strong race will absorb or survive the weak, so, although Israel was "sown" among the Gentile Gomerim of Japhetic race, and learned their tongue, and worshipped their gods, yet the race of Israel ("Thou worm Jacob") would in course of time so permeate and improve the breed of the Scythian Asiatic nomadic hordes among which it was "sown," that after "many days," and though retaining the name, the language, and the habits of the Gomeric races to which it was "married," it would, during the long emigrations from Asia, viâ Europe, to these isles (where they were to "recover their strength"), become de facto the supreme head of the "Diblaim," or two peoples joined by outward pressure, and would completely absorb, digest, and assimilate the Gomeric element, as Israel in Egypt absorbed the mixed multitude which went out with them, and became Israel by owning Israel's God.

The reader will see that in tracing the origin of our British tongue through the five stages, as shown in the first column on page 12, he has at the same time traced one branch of the people of the Beth-Khumri, or "House of Omri," King of Israel, from the Gomerim of Asia to the Cymry of Wales, and has followed the destinies of one division, or "fold," of Israel, from Samaria to Britain.

(To be continued.)

THE UPPER HORIZONTAL FLOORING AND THE QUADRATURE OF THE CIRCLE.

By F. Gass.

It is well known that the floor of the Ante-Chamber is composed of two kinds of stone, granite and limestone, and that the whole length of this floor, 116·26, equals the diameter of a circle with the same area as a square with a side equal to the length of the granite portion only, 103·033. Hitherto, so far as I am aware, this has stood on record without another similar example to support it, and our opponents have taken advantage of this to declare it a mere adventitious coincidence, without meaning. Grand and true as it is, notwithstanding these objections, that this division of the Ante-Chamber floor into two parts solves accurately the quadrature of the circle, its value will be enhanced by the discovery of another equally accurate solution of this celebrated problem in the horizontal flooring of which the Ante-Chamber floor is a part. I am glad to be able to bring forward this additional proof as follows:—

The whole distance from the North edge of the Great Step to the South wall of the King's Chamber, 536, is to the distance from the South wall of the Grand Gallery to the same terminus, 475, as the diameter of a circle is to a side of its equal square. This solution is exact! The commencement of the length representing the side of the square is strongly marked by the South wall of the Grand Gallery, and the diameter of the circle is equally well shown by its being the whole length of the horizontal flooring. The difference between the two lengths is the length of the Great Step, 61 inches, the symbol of British-Israel's yard, and sacred cubit, measure, 36 + 25. Two sides of the square are distinctly formed by the meeting of the horizontal floor-line and the vertical South-east corner of the King's Chamber.

Digitized by Google

This practical demonstration of the quadrature of the circle is not confined to the level flooring, the dimensions of the two Chambers take their part in the proof of the thorough geometrical knowledge of the architect. This will be seen by the following:—

(1) The distance from the South wall of the Grand Gallery to the South wall of the Ante-Chamber, 168·625 _, equals the diameter of a circle with the same area as a square with a side equal to the height of the Ante-Chamber, 149·44 (the measured height of the Ante-Chamber is from 149·22 to 149·44, with a mean height of about 149·3).

(2) Ten times the mean height of the Ante-Chamber, 149·3 × 10, equals the diameter of a circle with the same area as a square with a side equal to the twelve bounding lines of the Chamber, 1,323·136. This in connection with the circle-squaring properties of the floor, and its special division into two lengths of 103·03, and 13·23, or 1-100th of the bounding lines, shows a wonderful intelligence and remarkable architectural ingenuity on the part of the designer. It gives an explanation of the geometrical design of the Chamber (well supported in other directions), which is immeasurably above the common-place theory of Mr. Petrie, that the squares of the dimensions are even numbers of square Egyptian cubits. One can easily understand that the Egyptian-working builders would be quite satisfied with this comparatively poor theory, while the supreme architect rose to infinitely higher things, and reasoning, known only to himself.

(3) The whole length of the granite flooring, from the North side of the Northernmost granite-stone to the South wall of the King's Chamber, 409·5 ±, equals the diameter of a circle with the same area as a square with a side equal to the horizontal circuit of the Ante-Chamber, 362·92.

(4) A circle with diameter equal to the length and height of the Ante-Chamber, 265·564 (= 116·26 + 149·304) has the same area as a square with a side equal to the height of the granite walls of the King's Chamber, 235·35.

In the face of these facts I suppose our most determined opponents will no longer attempt to deny that the designer of the Pyramid was conversant with the perfect scientific method of squaring the circle as understood at the present day. It is difficult to understand how these "trained scholars" will reconcile this with their own teaching, as scientists and Egyptologists, that the ancient Egyptians had but very crude notions of the best method of solving the problem.

The horizontal distance from the commencement of the First Ascending Passage to the South wall of the King's Chamber, equals the diameter of a circle with the same area as a square with a side equal to the horizontal distance from the South wall of the Grand Gallery, at the level of the upper end of the produced floor-line, to the South side of the Pyramid. This latter measure is founded on Mr. Petrie's measures of the base at the pavement-level, with a vertical height above that base, as given in my papers on the geometry of the interior passage system. Both distances are remarkable; the first, the diameter of the circle $= 2{,}000\sqrt{\pi} = 3{,}544{\cdot}9$, and the second, the side of the square $= 1{,}000\pi = 3{,}141{\cdot}6$. Thus squaring the circle by the direct use of the true π quantities. The length of the diameter of the circle includes, at its South end, the whole length of the upper horizontal flooring, and the length of the side of the square includes at its North end the horizontal distance between the South wall of the King's Chamber and the South wall of the Grand Gallery—that is, as shown in the opening equation, the diameter of a circle and a side of its equal square. Hence it follows, as will be readily seen, that the horizontal distance from the commencement of the First Ascending Passage to the North edge of the Great Step, gives the diameter of a circle with the same area as a square with a side equal to the horizontal distance from the South wall of the King's Chamber to the South side of the building, taken at the same level as before. Thus there is an interdependent three-fold quadrature of the circle between the commencement of the First Ascending Passage and the South-inclined side of the Pyramid.

BRITANNIA'S PRIVILEGE.

By the Rev. T. W. Boyce, B.A.

(Continued from page 17.)

PART II.

9. In this relation, above all others, were it proportionably so applied, is Britannia's Enormous Wealth a privilege. To His own nation the promise or command is still a mark of identification, "Thou shalt lend to many nations, but shalt not borrow" (Deut. xv. 6), and the added words, "Thou shalt rule over many nations, but they shall not rule over thee," at once makes this twofold promise distinctively that of the tribes of Ephraim-Israel rather than of Judah, because neither are the Jews now a nation at all, nor have they any domination or "rule," but are everywhere a subject people; whereas, on the contrary, it is known to every mind of average information that the British race excel all others in the world's history, in the vast extent of their dominion and the enormous amount of their commerce; and in their position as being "the head and not the tail," and the nation to whom the Lord hath said (Deut. xxviii. 13), "Thou shalt be above only, and thou shalt not be beneath." In direct contrast with the still oppressed and persecuted Jews, it is the privilege of the sons and daughters of Ephraim-Israel "never to be slaves."

10. Hence, according to divine promise (Gen. xxii. 15), Britannia possesses, and may soon still more strikingly possess, "The Gates of her enemies." Was France once her determined foe in Canada, Britain holds her former gate of Quebec; or in India, Britain there reigns in Calcutta; did her enemy Spain once attempt to conquer and subdue her, God gave to His nation Gibraltar. Would opposing powers impede the traffic of "The kings of the East" through the Mediterranean and the Eastern seas to their vast possessions in India and Australasia, the Most High has placed in their hands Malta and Cyprus and the keys of the Suez Canal and the Persian Gulf. Has Burmah for some half century been as a thorn in the side of our Eastern Empire, Britain has held the mouths of the Irrawaddy with fully a thousand miles of coast line; and just recently at comparatively no cost the capital and country itself have been delivered to her keeping.

11. And how importantly does not the possession of "the Queen's highway" and an Eastern Empire conduce to the further privilege of mainly promoting and accompanying the promised restoration of the Royal Tribe of Judah to their own land. Is it difficult to recognise the naval power addressed so emphatically in Isaiah xviii. 1, &c.? Is it not to the British nation as the predicted Israel that the Jews are notoriously resorting as their best friend? "The House of Judah shall walk to (Jer. iii. 18, see margin) the House of Israel, and they shall come together out of the land of the North to the land which I gave for an inheritance to your fathers." It is the British who to all appearance, from an exact similarity of prophetic designation, are to be employed as bringing Judah as a present to the Lord of hosts (Isaiah xviii. 2 and 7); and from whom, together with the Jews, will be constituted that representative "remnant" whom in a "second" instance (Isa. xi. 11)

Digitized by Google

Jehovah has pledged Himself to recover from many lands, and from the islands of the sea, that they may dwell together in the land of their inheritance (Ezek. xxxvii. 22), and that Judah may there at length gratefully acknowledge their crucified Redeemer (Zech. xii. 10). Already are multitudes of oppressed Jews in Northern Europe anticipating British aid in their fast approaching restoration. Already, full a generation since, has this been suggested to foreign Powers by a celebrated British statesman as an effectual solution of political complications in the East.

12. And thus may Britain be used as the chief instrument of vindicating the faithfulness and veracity of her covenant God. Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you that God, as of old, should literally fulfil His word of secular promise? It is true many sincere Christians are apprehensive that to understand His promises as of secular blessing to His deeply erring people, the literal seed of Ten-tribed Israel, involves lack of spirituality. But it is for the spiritual mind to compare ancient prophecies with their recorded fulfilments, and thus both to ascertain and acknowledge the mind of God, whatever by the plain and collective sense of Holy Scripture that mind may appear to be. Has the God of truth thousands of years ago pledged His eternal word that the exiled tribes of Ephraim-Israel should for ages be lost to all recognition, and that from those exiles a people should be gathered in the islands of the North-West, there to be converted to Him and to receive His special blessing as a "Great Nation;" what a call and occasion is this for the only country which answers to this description, to own and magnify His faithfulness and truth! When by the most striking imagery that the world of nature can supply He has declared the exceeding multiplication of His now resuscitated nation, and fulfilled His pledge that they should possess an empire of wholly unprecedented nature and extent, should not this excite the liveliest praise to the God of truth, in the consequent assurance that He will no less certainly fulfil the whole of His word, and the exceeding great and precious promises connected with eternal life and glory? Would we as heirs of life find His law of love effectually written in our hearts, then while we are reconciled to Him by faithfully receiving the tidings of His redeeming love, will it not tend to draw more closely round our hearts the sweet bond of grateful and responsive love, if we remember that even the earthly laws which surround and protect us, and which are the admiration of the civilized world, were given in direct fulfilment of His purpose to bless us, and to make us a blessing. And amid the sometimes distracting variety of outward Christian communion in our land, well may they whose harps HE has attuned strike a fervent note of praise and adoration, that through the continuance of His word in these islands for nearly twenty-five centuries (commencing from its propagation in Ireland), He had established His Church through that very faith by which our father Abraham, in his yet more ancient pre-vision, rejoiced to see the day of Christ.

Hence the long and deeply rooted regard of the British for the Lord's-day, the jealous reverence even to a martyr's death for the pure teaching of the Holy Scriptures; and hence, in addition to their extensive circulation of the Bible, the increasing desire of faithful men and women to band themselves together to promote the healing knowledge of Christ among the heathen by missions to every land; characteristics foretold only of Israel, and efforts assigned to them alone, that all who are truly "of Israel," whether by natural descent and belief in the Son of God, or by adoption of grace from among the Gentiles, may discern in these and other outstanding marks a cumulative token of the perfect Veracity of that God and Saviour to whom, on the faith of His promise in Jesus Christ they have committed the keeping of their souls.

What but this Unchangeable Veracity constitutes also our certainty of welfare as believers, whether now numbered among the wealthy or the poor of the land? What else than the perfect reliability of God's covenant promises and oath has been and is our security against enemies on every side, and traitors and Satanic agencies in our very midst? What but the absolute certainty that He will fulfil His word is the one sure ground of our confidence that during the imminent "distress of nations with perplexity," when "men's hearts are failing them for fear, and for looking after those things that are coming on the earth, His true and faithful people may "look up, and know that their redemption draweth nigh." For then shall both the houses of Israel triumph together in the possession of their own land, no more to be driven out from thence: and then will follow the supreme triumph, when they "shall see the Son of Man coming in a cloud with power and great glory;" and when their song of welcome to Him who is "faithful and true" shall be, "Lo, this is our God; we have waited for Him, and He will save us; this is Jehovah; we have waited for Him; we will be glad and rejoice in His salvation."

NEW TESTAMENT NOTES.

By J. G. TAYLOR.

(Continued fom page 18.)

PART XIII.

THE SEED OF ABRAHAM.

ANOTHER of those passages which are supposed to blow the Identity to the four winds is Gal. iii. 7:—"Know ye, therefore, that they which are of faith, the same are the children of Abraham." From this it is deduced that Abraham's genuine children are spiritual children, and that his lawful heirs are of a spiritual texture. But, at the outset, let it be observed that the Revised Version of the New Testament rectifies an interpolation which, it must be confessed, was a clever stroke on the part of the previous translators: "Know, therefore, that they which are of faith, the same are sons of Abraham." Not "the" sons, or "the" children. A similar correction is made in Rom. ix. 8: "In Isaac shall thy seed be called. That is, they which are the children of the flesh, these are not the children of God: but the children of the promise are counted for a seed." Not "reckoned for the seed." Gentile Christians may be "a seed," but nowhere in the New Testament are they substituted for "the seed."

There is a wide difference between "a" and "the," and this difference is precisely the difference for which we have been contending. We admit, as frankly as the most furious anti-Anglo-Israelite, that they who are of the faith of Abraham are children of Abraham; but they are not children in any strained or abnormal signification. Men and women are children of Abraham if they imitate Abraham's character, just as they are children of God or children of the devil, according as to whether they lean to the character of God or the devil; but this spiritual affinity does not interfere with their being of French, or German, or Israelite extraction. The lot of the individual Christian is blended for good and evil with the lot of his country, and it is crude theology that would cause the spiritual to impinge on the earthly. "There is a natural body and there is a spiritual body"; so, too, there is a natural domain and a spiritual domain. Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of heaven; and, inversely, mind and soul cannot inherit the kingdom of Israel, or perform the functions of a flesh and blood community. Gentiles in every clime may swell the dimensions of the Church and assume spiritual kindred with "the father of all them that believe"; but they do not thereby shift, insomuch as one hairsbreadth, the pre-ordained disposition of nations. The greatness and decay of the Roman Empire were themes of prophecy, and the unrolling of prophecy was not modified or influenced to the slightest extent by the introduction of Christianity. Rome finished her own rôle, not Carthage, or Gaul. Christian "barbarians" did not participate in its renown, nor were Roman Christians exempt from the horrors of its dissolution. The Hebrew nation, also, has a prophetic destiny, which believing Gentiles cannot share and unbelieving Israelites cannot compromise.

Digitized by Google

In John viii., Christ tells the Jews: "If ye were Abraham's children, ye would do the works of Abraham. Ye are of your father the devil." This is an intimation that they were not the seed of Abraham, and is parallel with Paul's sentiment in Rom. ix. 7. But the fact of their having given birth to the Saviour shows irrefragably that, in spite of their gross wickedness, they were in God's sight the legitimate heirs of Abraham. The promise of Messiah was the pearl of promises, and the one most cherished by the Hebrew. If, therefore, the chief honour of all was realised by literal Israel, and realised at a period when their depravity was proverbial, we see nothing excessively idiotic in expecting a bestowal of the lesser honours on literal Israel during these more propitious years of grace.

"But he is not a Jew which is one outwardly. What do you make of that?" it is asked. We might reply by saying that an "Israelite indeed" is an Israelite in heart, as well as in pedigree; but we may also reply by enquiring what they make of it? Do they think we ought to gather from it that lineal descent is now of no regard—that Jews and Gentiles are exactly on a footing? If so, how is it that the Jews are groaning under disabilities from which the Gentiles are free? If Israel after the flesh is no longer the rightful inheritor of the Old Testament promises, how is it that Israel after the flesh is being visited with the Old Testament curses? If the contract is at an end, why are the Jews suffering from the penalties of the contract? Deut. xxviii. 37 is unremittingly applied to the Jews—people have no hesitation in doing this, so far as we are aware. But when we have the audacity to suggest that Israel is in the felicitous enjoyment of verse 12, they are shocked, and exclaim, "Why! you ignoramus, that is all done away with!" If it is all done away with, it is high time the Jews were released from the blight and oppression it is bringing upon them. Our censors pride themselves on the notion that their views present the Almighty to us in an attitude of unswerving impartiality; but we can perceive no impartiality and no glimmering of justice, in loading Israelites with the judgments of Mount Ebal, except on the supposition that the blessings of Mount Gerizim may likewise be theirs, should they comply with the requisite conditions. To deny the Jews this possibility is to violate the simplest instincts of equity: to grant it, is to concede the whole matter in dispute.

(To be continued.)

Review.

Jehovah Triumphant. By John Leechman, Victoria, Australia. Price 10s. 6d. Robert Banks and Son, Fleet-street, London.

SECOND NOTICE.

THERE is no doubt that the weak point in Mr. Leechman's book is chap. xxii., on Behemoth and Leviathan (p. 356). But perhaps the author deems this portion of his work the best effort of the whole. Of course it is perfectly new and original, but we wish, for all that, he had not made it public; for such extravagancies as those he deals with here suffice with most persons to throw discredit on the whole work, and perhaps on the entire subject of Our Identity besides. The author believes that the divine allegory of Job "presents us with a complete view of the theology of the Bible, and therefore a full outline of the destiny of Israel, and of the function that race and nation perform in God's plan of salvation." He considers there is a parallelism between our Lord Jesus Christ on the one side and Elihu, one of Job's four advisers, on the other, also between the Ten Tribes and Job's seven sons and three daughters! The portion of Israel which lives in antagonism to God, answers, he declares, to Job's wife! But the culmination is reached on p. 363, where he announces the "great truth" that Behemoth of Job xl. and Leviathan of chap. xli. represent respectively the Republic of America and the Empire of Great Britain! He says justly (see p. 473) that this great truth is "one to be apprehended rather than explained." We leave his explanation for our readers' benefit; but confess we have not yet apprehended the "great truth" which is said to underlie God's appeal to these mighty creatures He called into being. We fail to see the parallelisms between Leviathan's strength and the condition of the British Empire.

We cannot follow our author when he tells us that Job xli. 19, 20, 21, refer to British "locomotive power," "their manufacturies," and "the furnace blasts of their smelting works;" nor can we see that "burning lamps" and "sparks of fire leaping out," smoke out of a seething pot or caldron, and the coal-kindling breath, with the flame going out of the creature's mouth, represent these three British manufacturing possessions. Putting this weak chapter on one side we have much pleasure in commending almost the whole of the remainder of the book.

On p. 379 and 380 we have a system of sacred chronology which appears to us to be simple, complete, and true. It was published, it seems, by a Victorian litterateur, and depends on the following data. "The sacred number is 7. The human (or world) number is 10." All divine chronology depends on these two. "In the astronomy of heaven a year of earthly time counts but for a day. Starting with these elements, our author points out that $1,260 = 180 \times 7$; whereas 180×10 is in world notation 1,800. Using these figures, A.D. 70 was the date when the abomination of desolation was set up by Titus; $1800 + 70 = 1870$ (A.D.), when the Pope's temporal power fell. The Turkish Power, mentioned in Rev. ix. 12—19 as risen, is foretold to become extinct in an hour, a day, a month, and a year $= 360 + 30 + 1 + \frac{1}{12} = 391{\cdot}1$ days. But as 7 is to 10, so is 391·1 to 559 within a fraction. The Turkish scourge fell on Christendom in A.D. 1323, to which, adding 559, we reach 1882, the date of the beginning of the end of Turkey. If we add 1260 to A.D. 622 (the Hegira date) we get A.D. 1882, the virtual downfall of Mahometanism. The final end of Mahometanism we obtain by noting that Daniel's date for the consummation is 1290. But 7 is to 10, as 1290 is to 1842. Adding 70 we get 1912 (A.D.), which our author assigns to the final extinction of the Western apostacy. Great Pyramid authorities will note the significance of this number.

In regard to the question of British possession of abnormal wealth, our author stated on p. 275 (sec. 370) that we "find the wealth of India, Canada, Australia, and Africa" "where Moses and the prophets said it would be, in the hands of His chosen servant, 'righteous' by the blood of Jesus Christ." "Britain's possessions, held by virtue of their relationship to Christ, are held in trust for the purpose of evangelising the world, and thereby justifying many, as He Himself was justified." These are sentiments we heartily approve, and they have the true Identity and BANNER ring about them.

Our author upholds the principle we so often insist on—namely, that God blesses those who bless and benefit His people. On p. 201 we have some instances of this narrated which our readers should consult. This principle, on which the Lord of all confers His benefits, is summed up in these words addressed to His people Israel, "He that receiveth you receiveth Me. And whosoever shall give to drink unto one of these little ones a cup of cold water only in the name of a disciple shall in nowise lose his reward."

We have space for only one more quotation from our author—one to be found on p. 33, to which we give our full adhesion. He wrote thus regarding the error of spiritualising the Scriptures, common with our Clergy:—"The time has now arrived when there must be a distinction between the Church and the congregations of Israel and all other Churches. And the pastors of Great Britain have but one alternative—to amend their views or stand outside the kingdom of God. . . . Let the Clergy of the Churches of Great Britain remember that their traditional divinity came to them through the medium of a Church against whose errors, with the exception of this one, which they have held in common, they have been protesting for over two centuries, and that the admission and exposure of this, the sediment of ecclesiastical error, will sound the death-knell of Romish, Greek, Mahommedan hierarchies, and of all other systems of priestcraft and superstition under the sun."

There is no doubt the author of this book is a painstaking, careful, and laborious writer. His work is not faultless, but it deals very clearly and well with the Scriptural argument in support of our contention. We fear the size of the book will interfere with its large circulation, but we suppose that as the author meant to make his work a complete vade mecum for the subject, this was unavoidable under the circumstances.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed: — "Philo-Israel," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

SUBSCRIPTIONS £ s. d.

Annual Subscription for one copy weekly (including the Twelve Double Numbers) postfree - 0 7 6
Two Copies (including Double Numbers) - - 0 13 0
Three Copies " " " " - 1 0 4
Four Copies " " " " - 1 5 6
Six Copies " " " " - 1 16 4

Post Office Orders to be made payable at the head office, St. Martin's-le-grand. London, to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C., and W. H. GUEST & Co. 29, Paternoster-row, London.

The Editor cannot undertake to return rejected MSS. unless stamps for the purpose be sent. Parties requiring an answer should enclose a stamp.

Contents Bills and Show Cards may be obtained on application to the Publishers.

Advertisements should be sent to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

Prepaid Advertisements are inserted at the rate of 30 words for 1s. 4d.

Now ready, price 8s., carriage paid to any part of the United Kingdom, and all countries in the Postal Union, for 8s. 6d.

THE NINTH VOLUME
OF
"THE BANNER OF ISRAEL."
Edited by PHILO-ISRAEL.

The Volumes are strongly bound in handsome blue cloth, gilt lettered, and form a most attractive present for a Library, Working Men's Institute, or Young Men's Christian Association.

Volumes of "The Banner of Israel"

May be had, bound in specially-designed dark blue cloth covers, handsome gilt side and back, at the following prices:—

VOL. I. (Out of print.)
VOL. II. ... ... 7s.
VOLS. III. to VIII. ... ... each 8s.

A complete set (including Volume I.) sent to any address in the United Kingdom, securely packed, on receipt of remittance for £3 5s. A single volume (except Vol. I.) will also be sent free to any address on receipt of published price.

BANNER OF ISRAEL READING CASES,

For holding the weekly Numbers or Monthly Parts of the BANNER OF ISRAEL, may now be had, price 2s., post free 2s. 1d.

These Cases are in handsome blue cloth, with Elastic Band, and will be found exceedingly useful for holding the numbers for reading, of use in Libraries or Reading Rooms.

—:o:—

CASES FOR BINDING VOL. IX.,
1s. 6d. each.

ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

PRICE FIVE SHILLINGS.

"Freemasonry from the Great Pyramid of Ancient Times."

How formed among the rulers and skilled craftsmen to perpetuate an order of succession, passed along by the ancient Khadem Khesed. Trustworthy (or modern Freemasonry) through the land of Media by the Chaldæs to the chosen people of Israel, and travelled as they travelled, dispensing their usages and customs among the earlier Anglo-Saxons. With illustrations shewing the parts of the interior of the Pyramid to be removed, disclosing the long-hidden chambers, developing further research.

To be had of the Author, T. Holland, 2, Charles-street, Rutland Gate; Robert Banks & Son, Racquet court, Fleet-st., E.C; and Guest, Haywortb & Co., 29, Paternoster-row.

EUREKA!
The Church of My Fathers,
By G. O. BARNES.

This extraordinary Identity pamphlet is now published at cost price in a cheaper form for distribution. Price 2½d., post free.

Guest, Haywortb & Co., 29, Paternoster-row, E.C.; S. Standring, 8 and 9, Finsbury-street.

Printed for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C. PUBLISHED BY GUEST, HAYWORTH, & Co., 29, PATERNOSTER-ROW. WEDNESDAY, JAN. 13, 1886. [All rights reserved.

NEW & IMPORTANT IDENTITY WORK.

Just issued, 550 Pages, Crown 8vo., Cloth gilt, price 10/6, post free for Postal Order or Cheque.

JEHOVAH TRIUMPHANT

The New and Complete Theology and Electric Light of the Bible, containing the History of British-Israel, compiled from the Sacred Scriptures,

And traced down chronologically through the Pentateuch, the Historical Books, the Prophets, the Evangelists, Apostolic Writings, the Book of Job, and Revelation of John, and proving that Great Britain is a Development of the Monarchy of David, and has been established by eternal law the kingdom of God, and that the Anglo-Saxon race, together with the Jews, are the lineal descendants of the great Hebrew Race, and the heirs to the substantialities of the Abrahamic Covenant. Together with the key to future Prophecy, and a sketch of events looming on the Prophetic Horizon, and ending in the Coming of our Lord.

Introduction. 1.—The Ecclesiastical Error. 2.—The Everlasting Covenant. 3.—The Design of an Immortal Nation. 4.—The Great Nation Created, its Perpetuity declared. 5.—The Features of the Great Nation. 6.—Meridian and Sunset, the Burning Bush. 7.—Light out of Darkness. 8.—The Hidden Counsel of Jehovah. 9.—The Separation of the Houses and Doom of Judah. 10.—The Permanent Distinction: Jews are Israelites, but Israelites are not Jews. 11.—"The Sceptre shall not depart from Judah, nor a Lawgiver from between his feet, until Shiloh come." 12.—The Intermediate National Tribe. 13.—The Building and the planting, the throne of David. 14.—"Unto Him shall the gathering of the people be." 15.—The Valley of the Shadow of Death. 16.—The Shepherd of Israel with the People prepared. 17.—The Valley of dry bones and mighty revival. 18.—"The Twelve Tribes who are of the Dispersion." 19.—"The Elect who are sojourners of the Dispersion." 20.—The Intermediate Ecclesiastical Tribe. 21.—Migration and Settlement. 22.—Behemoth and Leviathan. 23.—The Signs of the Times. 24.—The Last Great Revolution. 25.—The Judgment of the Nations—Edom, Moab. 26.—The Coming of the Lord. 27.—"Tekel." 28.—Reveille.

See Review in Banner of Israel, January 6 and 13.

ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-st., London

A Resume of the Scriptural Argument, proving the Identity of the British Race with the Lost Ten Tribes. Price 1d.; 6s. per 100. New edition now ready. London: Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street.

Health Aids | Health Aids | Health Aids | Health Aids

Write for this valuable little Book.

50 YEARS RECORD of Facts, Principles, and Discoveries Relating to the Improvement and Preservation of Human Life on Earth. By Dr. Samuel Birley, M.D. Ph.D. Articles 1, 2, 3, and 4. complete in book form, post free 2 stamps—

GORDON I. MURRAY & Co.,
33, CASTLE ST., HOLBORN, LONDON

LUNG TONIC
LUNG OWBRIDGE'S TONIC
LUNG TONIC
LUNG LUNG TONIC, TONIC
LUNG TONIC
LUNG THE MIGHTY HEALER. TONIC
LUNG Save Your Lives by Taking TONIC
LUNG OWBRIDGE'S LUNG TONIC. TONIC
LUNG It has a power over diseases hitherto un- TONIC
LUNG known in Medicine. TONIC
LUNG Are you at all Weak-chested, or inclined TONIC
LUNG to be Consumptive, with just a touch of TONIC
LUNG Cough now and then? TONIC
LUNG "Try this Wonderful Medicine." The TONIC
LUNG Cough and Weakness will disappear as if by TONIC
LUNG magic, and you will feel a strength and TONIC
LUNG power you never had before. TONIC
LUNG HAVE YOU A COUGH? TONIC
LUNG A DOSE WILL RELIEVE IT. TONIC
LUNG HAVE YOU A COLD? TONIC
LUNG A DOSE AT BEDTIME WILL TONIC
LUNG REMOVE IT. TONIC
LUNG Bronchitis and Asthma it relieves instantly TONIC
LUNG The Spasms of Coughing so dreadful in TONIC
LUNG Whooping Cough become less with each dose TONIC
LUNG of the medicine. — TONIC
LUNG Prepared by W. T. OWBRIDGE, Chemist, Hull TONIC
LUNG Sold in Bottles 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d. & TONIC
LUNG 11s. by all Chemists and Patent Medicine TONIC
LUNG Vendors. Wholesale all London and Provin- TONIC
LUNG cial Houses.

OVER THE SUNSHINE OF EXISTENCE HANGS A BLACK CLOUD.

WITH the uncertainty of Life is mingled the dark mystery of Death! While, on the one hand, we catch the welcome sound of a new breath of life that tells of an addition to our species, on the other we shudder as we hear the rushing wings of the Destroying Angel! The mighty voice of the Great Influence which rules the Universe has pronounced our fate; the dread fiat has gone forth, and every mortal man is doomed to die! But though we cannot prevent, can we postpone Death? The question is momentous, even if it concern the prolongation of Life but by a single hour, inasmuch as every instinct prompts us to fight the boldest battle we can for this glorious boon of Existence. The promptings of Instinct are but the spontaneous voice of Nature, and it is our duty to obey. But there still remains the question, can Death be postponed by a single hour? Yes, for the world works in obedience to certain laws, and a study of these proves that those who have the judgment and the will to buckle on the shield which Nature places ready to their grasp, may ward off the insidious attacks of the implacable enemy to Life, until, in a ripe old age, the vital faculties gradually decay, and the Angel of Peace glides softly into our presence, leading us, as it were, in a gentle slumber to the regions beyond the shadow of the Tomb.

The Fell Destroyer makes his first approaches in many forms, but none are more favoured by him than that of a deadly foe now preying upon the very vitals of Modern Society. What is this foe? There are few among us who have not been or are not now to some extent its victims Would the reader know if he, too, is under the ban of this frightful scourge! Let him ask himself whether he experiences any of the following symptoms:—

There are pains about the chest and sides, and some times in the back. The mouth has a bad taste, especially in the morning; and there are feelings of dulness and drowsiness. The appetite is poor, a sort of sticky slime collects about the teeth, there is a feeling as of a heavy load on the stomach, and sometimes a faint, all-gone sensation at the pit of the stomach, which food does not satisfy. The eyes are sunken, the hands and feet become cold and feel clammy. After a while a cough sets in, at first dry, but attended in the course of a few months with expectoration of a greenish colour. The sufferer feels constantly tired, and sleep seems to afford him no rest Nervousness, irritability, and evil forbodings follow. When rising suddenly there is a giddiness, a sort of whirling sensation in the head. The bowels become costive; the skin is dry and hot at times; the blood becomes thick and stagnant; the whites of the eyes are tinged with yellow, the urine is scanty and high coloured, depositing a sediment after standing. There is frequently a spitting up of the food—at times with a sour taste, and at others with a sweetish taste. This is often attended with palpitation of the heart, or impaired vision with spots before the eyes, accompanied by great prostration and weakness. All of these symptoms are in turn present. It is thought that nearly one-third of our population has this disease in some of its varied forms. Medical men have mistaken the nature of the malady. Its true name is Dyspepsia or Indigestion, for which a certain remedy is to be found in Mother Seigel's Curative Syrup, a medicine which has won in both hemispheres a confidence founded only on its great virtues. The Syrup can be obtained from any Chemist or Medicine Vendor, or from the Proprietors, A. J. White, Limited, 35 Farringdon road, London, E.C.

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."

(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India.)

"And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the Forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS of the EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. X., No. 473. Entered at Stationers' Hall.] WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 20, 1886. [PRICE ONE PENNY.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
How Israel's Empire Grows	29
"Your Reviewer" Reviewed	30
New Testament Notes. By J. G. Taylor.—Part XIV.	31
The Church and Disestablishment. By Surgeon-General J. M. Grant, M.D.	32
The World Language of the Future. By E. Wilmshurst, Retford. Part III.	33
Hosea II. By the Rev. C. W. Hickson, M.A.—Part II.	34
Correspondence	35

HOW ISRAEL'S EMPIRE GROWS.

JANUARY 1st, 1886, was inaugurated, both in the United Kingdom and in the dominions of the Empress of Hindostan, by the proclamation of the Viceroy of India, announcing the annexation of Upper Burmah to the dominions of the Queen of Israel. The proclamation, which occupied but seven lines and a-half of print, was surely the shortest ever published dealing with a country as large as France! It called to mind the days of Lord Dalhousie, who was the instrument in God's hands to give Lower Burmah to the Empire of the Queen, already then the largest which has ever existed in the world since history began. The document was couched in the following remarkable words, and was issued by the Viceroy and Governor-General of India, on New Year's Day, 1886:—

By command of the Queen-Empress it is hereby notified that the territories formerly governed by King Thebaw will no longer be under his rule, but have become part of Her Majesty's dominions, and will, during Her Majesty's pleasure, be administered by such officers as the Viceroy and Governor-General of India may from time to time appoint. (Signed) DUFFERIN.

The act is irrevocably done! The Liberal statesman, who is the Viceroy of Mr. Gladstone's nomination, with the concurrence of Lord Salisbury, the head of the Tory administration of the day, and with the support of the whole British nation besides, declares that a vast territory, which has fallen to our possession without expenditure of treasure and with an insignificant amount of bloodshed, shall henceforth remain, as it has become by conquest, a part of Her Majesty the Queen-Empress's dominions. We have, in this great event, one of the most striking proofs of Our Identity, and of the truth of the prophecy which conferred on Abraham's seed the power of the Gate. "Thy seed shall possess the Gate of his enemies," was the promise of Gen. xxii. 17 to "the afterseed" of the patriarch; and with "the Gate" there passed all that "the Gate" was calculated to give, in the way of power over "the enemies" of His people. In this case, the Gate of Theebaw's dominions, as anyone with an atlas before him may see, was the city of Rangoon, situated upon the Irrawaddy River. This city, and the river it commands, fell into our hands, finally, in April, 1852, when General Godwin carried the town by assault. It has ever since been in British possession, and anyone with God's Word in his hand, and a belief in Our Identity in his heart, must be satisfied that it was only a question of time when the Gate would begin to operate, by subduing the ruler of Upper Burmah, and placing his territories under British rule. Thirty-three years elapsed in this case, before the Gate, Rangoon, and the river it commands, gave us the territory to the North of it, which has, with the New Year, lapsed to the British Raj. "The thin red line" has passed round the whole of Burmah, because we are God's people Israel, and because, being Israel, God gave us "the Gate of our enemies," when, in 1852, He placed Rangoon and the mouths of the Irrawaddy in our charge.

The event we rejoice to record to-day, contrasts wonderfully with the failing efforts of the French, who being Gentiles, have no promise of the Gate, and therefore, have done nothing to acquire their coveted territory and power in Tonquin and Siam. Their efforts have been ruinously expensive, and must evidently be abandoned. Ours have cost us but little, and will result in the acquisition of the power to get wealth, which is God-given, and therefore will have His blessing (Deut. viii. 18). The annexation of Upper Burmah opens up to us the trade of South-east China. "The Irrawaddy is the outlet, not merely of the trade of Burmah, but of that of still more fruitful districts beyond, hitherto inaccessible to European commerce. Burmah, in fact, is one of the natural highways of trade and intercourse between India and China." With this in our hands, and railways constructed over the whole country to foster this commerce, the prospects before us in this time of our nation's depression, are boundless for good. We have, besides, another and a more important duty to perform in the land which God has so wonderfully placed in our charge to-day. We have to cover it with the Gospel, to pour out over it floods of the Word of God, and to send the living missionary to preach the good tidings to every creature, that is, to every man, and woman, and child, throughout the country, according to our Lord's injunctions in Mark xvi. 15.

A monograph, on "East Indiamen of the Olden Days," appeared in The Daily Telegraph of December 26 last, which throws some light on the wondrous spectacle our Indian Empire presents to-day to our public journalists, wholly uninstructed as they are as to the true reason of our Eastern supremacy The language they use to describe the Queen's oriental dominions, and the way in which they were acquired, is very remarkable, because replete with "blind evidence" of Our Identity. It begins as follows:—

Digitized by Google

It will be exactly two hundred and eighty-five years next Thursday since good Queen Bess granted a charter to "The Governor and Company of Merchants of London trading to the East Indies." The date was December 31, 1600—just the time when William Shakespeare was at his best—the year when he wrote, "The Chronicle History of Henry the Fifth," "As You Like It," and "Much Ado About Nothing," and printed the second part of "Henrie the Fourth," "The Excellent History of the Merchant of Venice," and "Midsummer Night's Dreame." The granting of that charter is perhaps the greatest event in the commercial history of Britain. It was the birth of the East India Company, and it gave us our Indian possessions. It was a maxim with General Gordon that the British Empire was made by adventurers, and to this company of adventurers British supremacy in Asia, at this moment, is due. An Eastern diplomatist, when questioned recently as to the influence of England in the Oriental world, observed: "It is not by your material, but by your moral power that you govern in Asia. The mass of our Eastern people can hardly understand how you conquered India, nor how you retain it; but we all admit that there is a prestige about your name altogether beyond your visible armies and fleets." A striking illustration of this dictum is at this moment before the eyes of the world. France has spent three years of the nation's time, thrown away thousands of her soldiers' and sailors' lives, and expended millions of money, in the utterly vain and fruitless attempt to annex a swampy delta on the Southern frontier of China; and now, after narrowly escaping a colossal war with the most populous empire on the globe, a Committee of the Chamber of Deputies urgently recommends as speedy a withdrawal as possible from the hopeless adventure. England, after a fortnight's campaign, almost costless and bloodless, has virtually increased her Empire by a country nearly as large as France, populous, full of resources, and there is reason to believe, easily governed. A mere handful of men represents at Mandalay the power of an empire which the Burmese, like every other Oriental people, regard as irresistible. A hostile German criticism of the naval and military power of the British Empire, concluded recently with the remark: "But, after all, in reckoning the resources of England, a good deal must be allowed for the moral energy of the English people." We are to-day about to rescue from oblivion some old but by no means musty records, which will give point to these testimonies. They will show to what an extent, in one of the greatest crises of the world's annals, the irrepressible energy of the English folk and the individual moral character of the Anglo-Saxon race, helped to determine history, and the fate of a continent.

We acquired India by prestige, and we hold it by the same mysterious power which God promised that Israel should possess in Deut. ii. 25; xi. 25; Josh. ii. 9, 10. To this same power we owe our conquest of India at the first, our recovery of North India after the outburst of the mutiny, and the conquest of Burmah, both in 1851-52, as well as in 1885. To God's blessing and promised help to Israel we shall owe our power to conciliate, pacify, Christianise, and civilize our latest acquisition, Upper Burmah, and we have no doubt, that before long, we shall find that, in its turn, Upper Burmah will become the Gate of countries far beyond, so that at last, the prophecy of Daniel will be fulfilled by the operation of the Gates, and "the kingdom, and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven will be given" (let us mark that!), "given to the people of the saints of "the Most High;" and "the saints" are "the children of Israel," God's favoured nation, the British people! Israel, praise ye the Lord! and bless Him for His recent mercies to our race in Theebaw's dominions, in the higher reaches of the Irrawaddy, and throughout Upper Burmah.

MR. HUGH OWEN, of the Barmouth Bazaar, sends us a copy of a paper bag used in his business. It contains a number of texts bearing on Our Identity, the Royal Arms, and the mottos as on the front page of the BANNER. A capital method of bringing the subject before the attention of the public.

"YOUR REVIEWER" REVIEWED.

A LETTER appeared in the English Churchman and St. James' Chronicle of December 24, 1885, from "Your Reviewer," on the subject of "Eureka," by Mr. Barnes, with which work our readers are well acquainted. The object of the letter is to answer one Pars altera, who had taken the side of Our Identity in a previous correspondence, and generally to depreciate and throw discredit on the views for which the BANNER does battle. Accordingly "Your Reviewer" quotes some bitter words from Miss E. Wilson, denying that her late respected father was the originator of the present Anglo-Israel school.

Those responsible for that school, it seems, are Messrs. Hine and Bird (the editor of the BANNER OF ISRAEL). Miss Wilson has our acknowledgments for her mention of the editor of this journal, whose name we had supposed was "Philo-Israel."

"Your Reviewer," however, to make sure (and certainly if any one knows the facts in that respect, he does), quotes the editor and gives him his proper name. We allude to this episode because we feel that opponents who can descend to personalities of this kind must have very little to urge against the great truths we discuss. "Your Reviewer" concluded his letter thus:—

> Others take a different view of Mr. Hine's qualification. All schools of religious thought in the present day, whether Churchmen or Nonconformists, reject his theory. The High Church newspapers, like the Church Times and Guardian, ridicule and laugh it to scorn; the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol, a true representative of the very learned and moderate school has well said in a letter to one of his clergy, "I never heard of a professed scholar or ethnologist, who entertained the Anglo-Israel theory even for a single moment." And, as for the Evangelical school, with which your reviewer has had the happiness to have been connected for nearly half a century, Canon Bell, the Rector of Cheltenham, has well expressed the unanimous verdict of this school. "The unscriptural theory of Anglo-Israelism appears to me 'a profane,' as well as 'an old wives' fable.' I think their distortion of some texts shocking; our Lord is robbed of His glory that it may be given to Great Britain."

This is the old argument with which the Rev. Bourchier Wrey Savile was at one time so accustomed to deal, and which he believed so convincing. "The Identity cannot be true, because the schools of religious thought, of the present day, won't hear of it." The Evangelical "reviewer" first appeals to the High Church party, and says the Church Times and Guardian" will not accept Our Identity, and therefore it must be false.

But will the reviewer accept any other view that those journals put forward, and pin his faith upon the High Church dictum? We doubt it! The Nonconformists, too, frown on the Identity it seems. Not all, we can tell him! For we know of Baptists, and Primitive Methodist ministers who believe and preach these doctrines. But, we allow that the majority of these ministers are on the side of the enemy. But this is not all. The Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol, a very learned and it seems a moderate school man, is reported to have said (it was several years ago), "that he never heard of a professed scholar or ethnologist who entertained the Anglo-Israel theory even for a single moment." This is strong! But we submit that Professor Piazzi Smyth, and Professor Joseph Baxendell, F.R.A.S., are professed scholars, and that Bishop Titcomb is a learned man, with some knowledge of ethnic science; also that Bishop Helmuth, late of Canada, and Bishop Bond, now Bishop of Montreal, are men of parts. All these entertain Anglo-Israel views, and have done so for years.

Perhaps the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol has not heard of these men of piety and learning? If not, the test proposed seems a fallacious one, for it does not depend upon "scholars and ethnologists accepting Our Identity for a single moment," but upon the bishop of a particular English diocese, learned in Greek, having given five minutes thought to the subject, and having striven to find out the opinions of such scholarly men on the matter. But then there is the evangelical school, and that school is "Your Reviewer's." They all pronounce against it by a unanimous verdict, and what that verdict is Canon Bell, D.D., of Cheltenham, has, it seems, declared—viz., that Our Identity is—(1) unscriptural; (2) profane; (3) an old wives' fable; (4) a shocking distortion of some texts; (5) and a robber of the Lord's glory, giving it to Great Britain instead. These be severe words! but, they are not true words; and they are founded on error. It is not true that the evangelical party in the Church has given a unanimous verdict against Our Identity. It is not true that Canon Bell has expressed the verdict of the said party correctly, and Canon Bell's attack has been answered and refuted by Surgeon-General J. M. Grant, by Philo-Israel and others, leaving the learned Doctor of Divinity absolutely without a leg to stand on in the argument.

Digitized by Google

We do not say this to revive and provoke a fresh argument with the rector of Cheltenham. The contention between ourselves and Dr. Bell is dead and buried, and we have no wish to produce it again to our readers. But we do think it proper to raise a protest against the worthy rector of Cheltenham being produced again as the conquering champion, contra the Identity; when the fact is that he has been fully answered and silenced.

But we have something more to say in reply to "Your Reviewer," and it is this:—Suppose it were true that the whole of the Clergy of the Church of England, the Bench of Archbishops and Bishops, the priests, deacons, and curates, were as one man decidedly of opinion that the Identity is, as a system of belief, untrue, unscriptural, and profane, of what avail would that be, without reasonable evidence to support their rejection of what we know and have proved, during the last nine years, to be God's truth?

Let us take the Rev. B. Wrey Savile's case. So plausible were our arguments to him that he, a man of learning and experience, embraced them, became our champion for two or three years, wrote many long and learned articles in the BANNER to endeavour to persuade the Right Hon. Mr. Gladstone that the thing was true, and he was mighty in the Scriptural argument to prove the facts. In the course of time Mr. Savile saw reasons to change his opinions, and because of a point of ethnographical difficulty he recanted all his published views, cried peccavi! in respect to all his Identity writings, but never once, from that day to this, has fairly met his own admirable arguments from Scripture, or shown us wherein they were wrong, or misleading. Where Mr. Savile has failed what cleric or nonconforming minister has succeeded? We know of no writer from their ranks who has told us in what respect the Identity case is Scripturally weak, but we have seen some treatises, like those of Dr. Bell, which we have shown to be without force to resist and withstand opinions which are gaining ground in all directions, chiefly in consequence of the weakness of the clergy's position in respect to them, and of their clerical failure to prove our views false from the stand-point of the Bible.

The argument which counts heads and asks like the Pharisees of old, "Have any of the rulers or of the Pharisees believed on Him?" was discredited 1850 years ago (John vii. 48). He, regarding whom the Pharisees were doubtful, was the Christ after all! The nation, regarding whom the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol, and the great ones of the High and Low Church party in the Establishment are so scornful, may be after all the House of Israel, in spite of their disdainful remarks. Our case cannot fall merely because men like "Your Reviewer" laugh it to scorn, without giving us a better reason for so doing, than that the great men of the earth, "the rulers and Pharisees," have not accepted it as true!

The blessed Jesus was rejected by these great ones, and His case was in such a poor minority on one occasion, much to be remembered, that they "all forsook Him and fled!" But He was the Christ for all that! So in respect to Our Identity, men may forsake these views and our company after open profession, and then take to the cheap plan of reviling the subject and disdaining its professors. But men of sense will not accept such tactics. "Your Reviewer" must show us where the Identity is wrong, and how we have misapplied the Scriptural argument, before we can admit that he has made out his case, or proved us to be in error. The Identity has stood its ground firmly against all comers for ten years, and it will not yield to such champions as "Your Reviewer," unless we have something better to persuade us than the reference to sceptical bishops, who have made no personal inquiries into the arguments, and to journalists of the High and Low Church parties, whose sole reasons to show us to be in error are already triumphantly answered.

NEW TESTAMENT NOTES.

By J. G. TAYLOR.

(Continued from page 27).

PART XIV.

"HEIRS ACCORDING TO THE PROMISE."

BUT, it is demurred, are we not taught that Abraham's spiritual children are heirs according to the promise? Yes, heirs according to the promise, or, as it is rendered by the R. V., "heirs according to promise," but not "heirs of the promises." The doctrine that Gentiles are heirs according to promise is infinitely removed from the postulation that they are heirs of the promises. The two statements are as unlike as black and white, which is not surprising, since one is the utterance of inspiration and the other is a fabrication of the schoolmen, an invention of Gentiles, or presumptive Gentiles, for their own particular benefit. The Gentiles are never once designated heirs of the "promises," but it is undoubtedly a leading tenet of the New Testament that they are heirs to some specific "promise;" and if we are in the dark as to the nature of this promise it is not for lack of information. Paul mentions it on various occasions. "In thee shall all nations be blessed" (Gal. iii. 8). "In thy seed shall all the kindreds of the earth be blessed. Unto you (Israel) first, God having raised up His Son Jesus, sent Him to bless you"—how?—"in turning away every one of you from his iniquities." This is the promise in which the Gentiles have an interest, and by which they are constituted "fellow-heirs and fellow-members of the body and fellow-partakers of the promise in Christ Jesus through the Gospel" (Eph. iii. 6). That the privileges flowing from Christianity to the Gentile world are of a purely spiritual character is vouched for by the apostle in Rom. xv. 27, where he solicits alms on behalf of the poor among the Jews at Jerusalem, and says, "Their debtors they are, for if the Gentiles have been made partakers of their spiritual things they owed it to them to minister unto them in carnal things."

The opponents of Anglo-Israelism are adepts in the art of inferential exposition. They "infer" from this and "infer" from that, but here is a text which needs no inductive reasoning and allows of none. It is an unambiguous verdict that the advantages reaped by Gentiles through the promulgation of the Gospel were of a spiritual character. The blessings of saving religion, formerly in the exclusive possession of Israel, became the heritage of the Church universal; but the Church is not and cannot be heir to the land, the wealth, the colonies, and the several attributes of national Israel. The spiritualisers wax disdainful at this and remark, "These are very secondary things, the Church has a vastly superior inheritance to that." This is true, and makes the conduct of the Church less respectable than ever; for if it has a vastly superior inheritance to Israel, why in the name of benevolence does not the Church keep its hands off Israel's inferior inheritance? One might imagine that the more surpassingly excellent were the privileges and hopes of the Church, the less it would grudge Israel her meaner portion. But the reverse is the case; for we generally find that the more ecstatically spiritual a person happens to be, the more enamoured he is of harps, and crowns, and wings, the more strenuously will he deny the right of Israel to even her own desolate strip of territory on the Mediterranean, 135 miles by 60. It is the story of the ewe lamb over again. It should be clearly understood that the Church did not devour Israel, and has received no mandate to do so. The Church has not the least authority for encroaching on the estate political of Israel, and it is a sheer delusion to suppose that there is any rivalry or enmity between them; the world is large enough for both. The Church existed in the time of Moses—so did Israel, and they existed without friction. Each has its distinctive work to accomplish, and it is as irrational for the Church to claim the patrimony of Israel as it would be for Israel to claim the patrimony of the Church.

Digitized by Google

(To be continued.)

THE CHURCH AND DISESTABLISHMENT.

By Surgeon-General J. M. Grant, M.D.

It is naturally to be expected that considerable diversity of opinion should exist on the comparatively new question, whether the union between Church and State is indissoluble; and as it is important that the subject should be fully examined, I hope that you will allow me a further expression of my views upon it, which do not quite correspond with those advanced by yourself and the Rev. D. Hanan in to-day's Banner.

First, then, "What is and was the Church of Israel?" We may narrow the meaning of the word "Church" and confine it to the ministers of religion and the more devout of the people who attended their ministrations, and then the answer to your question would be as you have stated it; but the real question before us is not what was and is the Church of Israel? but what was and is the Church of this world? and I quite agree with your correspondent who says that Israel in its entirety was the Church of the Old Testament, to which I would add that Israel as a nation is the Church of the New. Great Britain is the nation specially separated, ecclesia, or called out, and chosen by God to proclaim His salvation to the world; and therefore Israel, being Britain, is the Church in the world now, as she was the Church in the wilderness under Moses.

There is no such thing as a conjunction of Church and State in Israel, because the two are as inseparable as the heart is from the other members of the body—that is, two forming one perfect whole; and the nation derives its life and daily sustenance from the Church as the body does from the heart, by means of nourishment supplied from without—that is, by aliment in the one case and endowment in the other. Of course the Church is divided into the visible and true; and it is in the former or more general sense only that I apply the term to Israel, because the true Church has no nationality; and there never has been a true Church incorporated in any part of the world. Judas was associated with Christ; Ananias and Sapphira with Peter; Elymas with Paul, and we have representatives of them all amongst ourselves, so that it is no valid argument against Israel being the Church that she contained many reprobates, or came up out of Egypt a mixed multitude. How that admixture took place we are not told, but probably it was by marriage; at all events, in later days, the bond of union with the stranger was circumcision; and so our mixed multitude have joined themselves to us in the profession of a common faith by the equally Israelitish rite of baptism.

The word "church" is derived from the Greek Kyriakos, belonging to the Lord; and God says of Israel, "This people have I formed for Myself;" so that in the original meaning of the word, Israel is the Church. It is true, as we have already seen, that in Old Testament times, as now, there were appointed ministers to conduct the religious services; but neither the priests under the law, nor the clergy under the Gospel, with their immediate followers, can be exclusively considered as the Church, and although the religion established by the law of the land must be the religion of Christ, the nation being Israel, it does not follow that the religion of Christ is confined to the body known as the Church of England. The true apostolic succession, about which there has been so much dispute, is national, not sectarian; and this is where I differ from the Rev. D. Hanan, and agree with "A Constant Reader," that if we are the Church of God we never can be disestablished, not simply because we are the Church of God, but because God has been pleased to establish the religion of Christ, not of any particular sect, in the throne of David for ever, so that the matter is not one of opinion, or likelihood of what may or may not happen, but a clear and unalterable decree of God distinctly stated in many passages of Scripture, and especially so in Psa. lxxviii. 67—71, which evidently refers to the Christian dispensation. "Moreover, he refused the tabernacle of Joseph and chose not the Tribe of Ephraim; but chose the Tribe of Judah and Mount Zion, which He loved. And He built His sanctuary like high palaces, like the earth which He hath established for ever. He chose David also His servant . . . from following the ewes great with young He brought Him to feed Jacob His people and Israel His inheritance."

And now, with regard to the question which you append to the Rev. Mr. Hanan's letter, I agree with you that the Church of God, true or visible, has never existed apart from the Church of Israel, or rather apart from Israel—that is, of course, since Israel became a nation, because there were saints, and consequently a Church, although a small one, before the flood; and if we trace the record, I think we shall find that as trade has followed the flag, so the State has been built upon the Church, not the Church upon the State. I use the word Church as that generally employed to denote the religious belief of the country; but the word "religion" or "faith" would better express my meaning; and my proposition would then be that the State has been established, and is maintained upon the acceptance by the people of the revealed law of God, and their continued support of that law. Thus when the tender twig was transplanted, and the sceptre of David removed from Palestine to Ireland, the chieftain of the Tribe of Dan was not allowed to rule in right of his wife, or to continue through her, the line of David, until he had forsaken the worship of Baal, and adopted for himself, and his people, that of the true God; and so, as we come down to later times, we find that the lamp of Christianity was first lighted in Britain, and that afterwards the Tribes of Israel were brought to it in the thick darkness which the Sun of righteousness came to dispel. The present state or realm cannot be said to have been fully established until after the union of the crowns of England and Scotland; and that was not until long after Christianity had been established by law as the religion of both countries. It is, alas! true that the pure Christianity, planted in these islands in apostolic times, became corrupt under the withering influence of Rome, but this does not effect the question in any way. God interposed on behalf of his people, or His Church in those days, and He will assuredly do so now.

It has been remarked by some of the writers on disestablishment in the religious journals, that no Act of Parliament establishing the national Church can be found. They consider this a very remarkable fact, but they refuse the explanation which we offer, and which alone accounts for the omission—that the Church, or rather the religion of Christ, is the foundation, and the State the superstructure of our power.

Digitized by Google

The question which Christ put to His disciples was, "Whom do men say that I, the Son of Man, am?" and when they had answered Him according to the knowledge of the schools, He put the further question, "But whom say YE that I am?" to which Peter as the bold and eager spokesman of his fellows replied, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God"; and our Lord's rejoinder was, "Blessed art thou, Simon Barjona, for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but My Father which is in heaven." And, He continues, "Thou art Peter, thy name signifies a rock, and upon this rock, this confession of faith of yours, as on a rock, I will build My Church—that is, establish My witnessing people Israel; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." Thus fulfilling the prophetic promise of Isaiah to Israel as a nation, that no weapon formed against her should prosper. And why so? Because she was good or righteous in herself? Certainly not; but because she was the appointed witnessing nation; the custodian as well as the proclaimer, or preacher of the Gospel; or, in other words, THE CHURCH OF GOD, against which no weapon formed by HELL, or its confederate MAN, has prospered, or ever can prevail!

Matt. xxi. 43, "The kingdom of God shall be taken from you," does not appear to me to refer to the Church, or religion of Christ, because that was never taken from the Jews. They deliberately refused it; and for refusing it they were debarred, or deprived of the temporal privileges, and advantages of the kingdom of Israel, or of God, the tabernacle of David which Christ came to build up (Acts xv. 16, and Amos ix. 11, 12); and there they stand to this day, a living witness of what disestablishment really means, because, having rejected THE CHURCH, they have neither part nor lot in THE STATE. Let the other House of Israel follow their example, and "the kingdom" will very speedily be taken from them also! Thank God, that can never be; and we crazy Anglo-Israelites KNOW that it never can!!

Cheltenham, December 16, 1885

THE WORLD-LANGUAGE OF THE FUTURE.

By E. WILMSHURST, RETFORD.

(Continued from page 21).

PART III.

BY reference to the table on page 12, the reader will see that the central and most important column of languages, which is the main of the three streams, which, together, form the British tongue, commences with the SACAN of Central Asia. Dr. Moore says, "The title SACÆ is not vernacular, but foreign to the Babylonians, and as used by them, simply meant "the Tribes," traces of whom are found among the Scythians East of the Caspian Sea, in Bokhara, Bactriana, and Tartary, and, indeed, among all people shown by history or language to have had any connexion with that part of Asia." The tongue spoken by Israel at the dispersion was not that now known as "Hebrew," but was Chaldaic, or a dialect of that language; and as spoken by a people called, at that time, in prophecy (Amos vii. 16), "the House of Isăăc," Beth Isăăc, or Isăca by themselves (in distinction to the Davidians of Judah), would be known in history as I'saccan, or Sacan—the root of the world-wide Saxon tongue. Coins of the various Sacan peoples found in Asia, from India to the Caspian, have our own emblems of the white HORSE; and their other emblems were the trident, the wheel (or shield of Britannia), the Lion and the Unicorn.

Ptolemy places the Sacæ next to the Massa-Getæ, or Goths, with whom the Sacæ blended, in the same manner as the Cymry did with the Gomerim, as Hosea had predicted they should do, by his symbolic act of marriage with Gomer, daughter of Diblain; which "marriage" of two peoples is here repeated in this second and more important emigrant body of dispersed Israel. It is even probable that the Massa-Getæ were themselves a mixed people, containing many of the "escaped of Israel," who had previously gone off to a nomadic life before the general dispersion, perhaps from the tribes on the East of Jordan, Manassa-Gad, who would be the first to be disturbed by the Assyrian conquerors.

It was at this date that Herodotus records the eruption of the Scythians over Asia, which they dominated for twenty-eight years, probably led on by the restless spirits of nomadic Israel among them, if, indeed, the great body of them were not Israel themselves, now increased in exile, and inured to fighting and hardships like their forefathers in Sinai; and by the Persians (now rising into power), these nomades are called Sacæ, a name first implying "the Tribes," but ultimately signifying Bowmen, because (as the Ephraimites and the English) they were famous for the use of the bow.

Certain it is that the Sacan tongue merges next in order into the TIRAS of Western Asia; yet afterwards, still advancing West, into the Thracian of East Europe, which gave to Greece in part, and to Albania, names and localities of the Gothic race, and yet later in time, developed into the Gothic of Europe. But by this time, some ten or eleven centuries after the dispersion, and when the Redeemer of Israel had ransomed the lost sheep of the "House of Isăăc," we may expect to find the fulfilment of the prophecies of mercy: "I will give them an heart of flesh, that they may walk in My statutes, and keep Mine ordinances; and they shall be My people, and I will be their God;" and we must see if the first Christian missionaries made converts among the Goths, or Getæ, of Europe.

The great transcriber of the New Testament into the Mæso-Gothic language, and the most ardent missionary of his time, was Ulphilas, the apostle of the Goths; his Testament contains an aggregation of Hebrew, Sanscrit, Tartar, and Greek words, and although language cannot safely be asserted to be a criterion of race, yet it is a clue to the history of a people, and the Gothic translation of Ulphilas contains a mingled tongue, composed of words adopted from the very peoples among whom Israel was dispersed. And we must not forget, that not only the Gothic tongue, but Gothic architecture is interwoven with the Christian ideas, and that the genius of the people enabled them to accept the religion of Israel's Redeemer and God. These Goths were the descendants of those Getæ whom Herodotus (iv. 94) tells us that they thought themselves immortal, not dying, but going on their departure from this earth to ZALMOXIS—a word which Dr. Moore remarks is only the Greek spelling of the Hebrew word Zalmoth—"the shadow of death."

The next step takes us from the Gothic, when it merges into the Saxon of Ancient Germany, when the Westward march of the nations pushes the great body of the Sacæ into Germany, under Woden. The Getæ are mixed up with the Sacæ in European history, as the Massa-Getæ were with Israel in Asian records, and the "married" peoples spoke a gradually changing tongue, at one time called Gothic, at another, Saxon. And in following their migrations from their province of Sacasina, in Armenia, to Saxonia, in Europe, we can understand the prevalence of Persian words in the Saxon language, for they must have come into Armenia from the Northern regions of Media and Persia. Dr. Moore acutely remarks that "the fact that we have six or seven hundred words in our language of Persian origin, agrees with our own national origin, amongst the Persians, but not of them. It must be noticed that we do not state that all the Goths were Israel, which is improbable, but that the Goths and Sacan-Israel were mixed or "married," as Hosea foretold.

One step more from the Saxon of Germany, brings us to the Anglo-Saxon of our own land, a tongue which is also identified with the spread of the knowledge of Christianity, and with the writings of Alfred, of Ælfric, and the venerable Bede, and which, in turn, has assimilated with it the British-Celtic, and the Norman-French, and with them formed that English language which promises to become the universal medium for "unifying" the scattered races of mankind; and (as the natural instinct of every people, speaking the same language, is towards unity of government) which also promises to be the main factor in the development of the fifth great monarchy, when the people of the saints (or "holy race"—i.e., Israel) of the Most High shall take the kingdom which shall last, and shall have no successor.

Digitized by Google

In conclusion, we may remark on the Providence which has caused this nation and their language to be, in the councils of the Most High, the means of disseminating the Hebrew Scriptures over the known world. In a leader, in May last, The Times, speaking of the late Revision of the Bible, describes it as "The Literary Heirloom of the English People." And it is so. But why? Because, as Tyndal said, "The properties of the Hebrew tongue agree a thousand times more with the English than with the Latin" (of the Vulgate). The idiomatic identity between the two tongues is exact, and as has been well expressed by "Philo-Israel" in "An Enquiry," &c. (Guest): "Ours is a Semitic tongue, which has long been in contact with Aryan tongues, and has, therefore, suffered a large transfusion of verbal roots and forms of dialect; it exhibits just such a transformation as one would expect the language of Lost Israel to have sustained by subjection to the contact and domination of Aryan tongues for over thirteen centuries, during which, the Kimbri and the Sacæ were slowly migrating Westward across the Aryan territories of Europe; and while it tenaciously retains its Hebrew grammatic, and idiomatic structure, has adopted the Aryan verbal and dialectic forms we know to exist in it." In short, we may add, it has been "lost," and has now re-appeared from among the tongues of the Gentiles as the tongue of Israel in Britain.

(To be continued.)

HOSEA II.

A Paper read at a Meeting of the Bristol Clerical Association

By the Rev. C. W. Hickson, M.A.,
Vicar of St. Bartholomew's, Bristol.

PART III.

The kingdom of the House of Israel were to be expatriated, cast out from God's mercy, as His covenant people; no longer regarded as in marriage union with Jehovah, and no longer called His people; and so, in fact, reduced to the same condition as the Gentile nations of the world—of whom, indeed, I believe Scripture henceforth regards them as forming a part—and this promise, made to them in their Gentile state, became capable of application to all Gentiles: but for all that, it is primarily the same Israel against whom the punishments are threatened, who, when she had received of the Lord's hand her meed of chastisement, shall come in for the blessings promised here and in other Scriptures. To argue that because these promises have not—to the fallible and imperfect sight of men—found their fulfilment in the literal interpretation of what is said of Israel that therefore it is clear that it is not a literal fulfilment of their contents that is to be expected, is, in the first place, to make too sure that our conception of what the language means is correct; and, secondly, to limit God's power to bring about the fulfilment yet of what He has so plainly promised.

The "therefore" in ver. 14 is on any interpretation a striking word, suggestive of the great difference between God's thoughts and man's. After all that has gone before we should expect something very different from that which this "therefore" introduces. At the same time, while it strongly impresses us with a sense of God's "grace abounding," it intimates to us that that grace is not arbitrary: there is a "therefore" in all God's merciful dealings. I incline to Dr. Schmoller's interpretation. God's allurement* was to be effected by means of the process referred to in ver. 6, 7, which is anticipatory of and parallel with ver. 14, an allurement by means of deprivations, trials, and hardships comparable to and typified by those endured by Israel in the wilderness on their first coming out of Egypt.

As regards locality, the places to which Israel was carried captive are spoken of figuratively as Egypt. The literal Egypt is not the locus of his captivity, but Assyria (xi. 5); yet figuratively it is called Egypt, in ix. 3 and 6. And it is remarkable how frequently their promised blessedness is compared to the coming up out of Egypt. All the countries from which the promised gathering of Israel is to take place are compared to the Egypt from which Israel was first brought out of captivity. And as in that case, so in this, there is an intervening wilderness, but it is "a wilderness of the peoples." Ezekiel xx. 33-38 seems parallel to this passage. As regards circumstances, this wilderness denotes circumstances of trial, deprivation, and distress; as regards locality it is neither the lands into which Israel were at first carried nor their own land, but those parts of the world where they should be prior to their being gathered into some land of the North, whence ultimately a representative body of them shall return with Judah to their own land (Jer. iii. 18; Hosea i. 11; Jer. xxiii. 7-8). At the risk of being laughed at, I honestly avow my belief, as one who holds the Anglo-Israel theory, that this North country is Great Britain; and that the "wilderness of the peoples" denotes those countries intervening between Assyria and our own land in which Israel were wandering, and through which they migrated from the East until their ultimate collection as a Christian people in these islands. We are not in a position to trace out in detail God's dealings with the peoples who ultimately amalgamated in this island about 1100 years ago, during the previous 1400 years of their history: but reading the chapter in the light of the views whice I have been led to embrace, I have a strong conviction that ver. 14, 15 have already received their fulfilment, that the countries out of which our forefathers were gathered were "the wilderness of the peoples," the valley of Achor, or trouble; and that in Christian England, especially as she ultimately became at the Reformation, you have the fulfilment of the predictions in Isa. x., "Ye are the sons of the living God;" and here in ver. 16, "Thou shalt call me Ishi." That there will yet be fuller and more literal fulfilment of ver. 14-23 still to that representative part of Ten-tribed Israel who shall eventually return with Judah to Palestine, I doubt not: but I see a striking correspondence in something more than a mere general way between the condition of the British in this island and the words of this portion of God's Word. And I would call your attention to the fact that these predictions do not end with any prophecy of return to Palestine. On the contrary, that

* The expression "I will allure her" might certainly form a contrast to the words "she forgot Me"—"while she forgets Me I am mindful of her, and recall her to My thoughts." But the whole can hardly be merely an inference from what is said at the close of ver. 15, for the reference to sin is there only incidental and subordinate to the description of the punishment. Lachen therefore draws an inferencen ot from Israel's sin itself, but from that sin as being punished, and punished not without severity, as was before plainly stated. Hence we find that Lachen introduces a conclusion drawn from the whole contents of the preceding section—"because Israel has been punished for her sin and forgetfulness of Me, and has been so reduced to a condition of distress that she longs after happiness in communion with Me, I will allure her," &c. If this is the sense of Lachen the conclusion which is drawn is an exhibition of love, and yet such a display as is virtually determined by the sin that is punished, and which is connected—immediately connected—with the punishment, in order to foster those first motions of longing into a steadfast resolution to return."

Digitized by Google

same Jezreel which was as a punishment to be sown in the sense of scattered in different lands is in the end also to be still Jezreel, the people sown, but sown unto God, in the earth, a people who, having their own land as a nucleus, are yet to be spread abroad in all lands, and in that sown condition to be the recipients of God's mercy, and acknowledged as pre-eminently amongst the nations of the earth, God's people (Isa. liv. 3). If the Ten Tribes are ever to fulfil the promise of multitudinousness made to Abraham's seed, and repeated in chap. i. 10, they can never all return to Palestine. Zech. x. 10 says place shall not be found for them. And whilst a representative body will return with Judah in fulfilment of Jer. iii. 18 and chap. i. 11, it seems to me that these verses describe rather the condition of the great mass of them still remaining in their North—and withal Western (xi. 10)—land, and in all the countries where the Lord has sown His Christianised Israel to be unto Him a name and a praise and a seed of righteousness in all the earth.

Correspondence.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—Your correspondent, the Rev. A. A. Isaacs, does not appear to me to be very correct in his assertions touching "Israel" in his letter (BANNER, December 9, 1885). He says:—

1. "The Edict of Cyrus allowed all Israelites to return" (Ezra i. 2). On referring to the passage I do not find any mention of "Israel," or of "Israelites." But, in Ezra ii. 1, 2, I find the people to whom the decree of Cyrus refers, described as "those which had been carried away, whom Nebuchadnezzar the King of Babylon had carried away into Babylon, and came again unto Jerusalem and Judah, every one unto his city." There is no reference to those of the previous captivity from Galilee and Samaria.

Mr. Isaacs builds also on Ezra ii. 70, where it is said "the Levites, some of the people, and the singers," &c., &c., dwelt in their cities, and all Israel dwelt in their cities. Then they did not dwell together. It seems to me that the simple explanation is to be found in 1 Kings xii. 16, 17, 19 to 24.

A certain number of individuals and families, at the time of the rupture of Israel from Judah, having made homes in Judah, preferred to remain where they were, and continued to "dwell in the cities of Judah." Doubtless they went into captivity with the Jews to Babylon (Ezek. xii. 10).

2. These Israelite settlers in Judah are like English families scattered over the European continent in the present day. They are all "English," but, they are not "England," and do not represent their country in any way.

There was again another remnant of people out of "Israel"—those who were escaped from the captivity of Galilee (before that of Samaria)—and who were invited from Galilee, to which they had returned, to keep the passover by Hezekiah (2 Chron. xxx. 6). But these, although truly a part of "all Israel," were not more than a part, were not the "nation"—the "House of Israel." We find the expressions "all Israel" and the "House of Israel" fully defined in 1 Kings xii. 19, 20, 21, as well as those opposite titles of the "House of David," and the "House of Judah," and the "House of Judah and Benjamin." The same distinction is prominent in Ezek. xxxvii. 11, 16, and the preceding chap. xxxvi. 10, 21, 22; Hos. vi. 10, 11.

Mr. Isaacs does not seem to realise the absolute separation of "all Israel" from "Judah," and their different destinies in the providence of God—viz., that Judah would give birth to the Messiah and crucify Him, but that Israel was separated, in order to be Christ's "witnesses," His "messengers," to preach Him to all nations.

CAROLINE PEARSE.

Launceston, Cornwall.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—In your excellent article on "Israel's Church and Israel's State," in BANNER, No. 467 (pp. 488, 489) you state that the Church of England "was founded and built in these islands in the apostolic age, in A.D. 61, as history informs us."

This is a very important statement from a Great Pyramid point of view. The Christian head-stone, at the head of the Christian Grand Gallery, universally known as the Great Step, or the Great Step-stone, has a horizontal length between its North edge and the South wall of the Gallery, of 61 inches, which at an inch to a year may be taken to represent the date of the foundation of British-Israel's beloved representative Church. That there are certain historical and prophetical dates connected with the Great Step-stone I have good reasons for believing. This is not the place to enlarge upon them, but I will give one as proof. The captivity of the Ten Tribes of Israel took place B.C. 721, and the sum of the arris lines of the Great Step-stone, in its full length of 62·3 inches, and visible height of 36 inches, is 721 inches; which taken as years, gives the exact date. The captivity of the Ten Tribes was a blessing in disguise, as it saved them from any participation in the death of our Lord, and, by God's will, was the means of bringing Christ to Israel in Great Britain.

I believe that it is impossible to disestablish or disendow the Church of Israel by God established. It is a general opinion among us that Gen. xlix. 10 contains a promise that a descendant of the royal line of King David shall continue to reign over Israel until the era of the new dispensation. "The sceptre shall not depart from Judah, nor a lawgiver from between his feet, until Shiloh come." Dr. Adam Clarke, in his Commentary, translates this verse thus:—

"From Judah the sceptre shall not depart,
Nor a teacher from his offspring,
Until that Shiloh shall come,
And to Him shall be assembled the peoples."

Now, if the first line of this prophecy declares a perpetual reign of one of King David's descendants over Israel until the coming of Shiloh, does not the second line equally prophesy and promise a continuance of God's "Established Church" among His people Israel, until the same, yet future, event takes place?

Dr. Hales, quoted and approved by Dr. Adam Clarke, explains this remarkable prophecy thus: "The 'sceptre of dominion' was not to cease or depart from Judah, nor was the native lawgiver, or expounder of the law, teacher, or scribe, intimating their ecclesiastical polity, to cease until the coming of SHILOH" (the italics are his). What more can be wanted in the way of exposition? It is true that Dr. Hales and Dr. Clarke supposed that the coming of Shiloh was fulfilled in the advent of Christ, but in this they were manifestly wrong. The sceptre was removed from the Tribe of Judah nearly six hundred years before Christ was born. The sceptre was the symbol of the king of a people, in its true sense (see Esther viii. 4), and is the same at the present day. The word does not apply to dominion only, such as the Jews had, to a limited extent, when Christ came, but to the power and authority of a king.

Yours truly, F. GASS.

Deaths.

ON December 20, at his residence, Ingleside, Crowhurst Road, Brixton, after a long and painful illness, Robert Banks peacefully passed to his heavenly rest. The funeral took place at Nunhead, S.E., Saturday, December 26, and was attended by a large number of friends.—City Press.

On December 21, 1885, at 6, Marine Parade, Brighton, Isabella Anderson, widow of Thomas Anderson, of Jesmond House, Northumberland. aged 78 years. (Her end was peace.)—Also, on December 28, 1885, at Selville, Portobello, N.B., Henry Simpson, elder brother of the above.

THE ANGLO-ISRAEL ALMANACK.—In our notices of this favourite annual we have said nothing of one of the best papers in the collection, "A Portrait and its Original," by V. M. Cox. This article cleverly deals with one of our strong points—namely, the exact resemblance that exists between the British nation and the description God's Word gives us of the House of Israel as it is destined to appear in the "last days," or our times. After tracing the points of Identity the authoress meets those who tell us "the resemblance is very great but the identity untrue," by asking them "where Israel is to be found if the only modern race which has the least resemblance to her is thus to be put out of the reckoning?" To this question there never is any satisfactory answer, and the opponent is consequently left in a very false and foolish position. "Our Identity" is, as Miss Cox observes, slowly but surely gaining ground, and that "in the face of all that opposition, ridicule, and indifference have done to repress it." We regard this, therefore, as a sign from God, that it is destined at last to prevail and convince the world.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed: — "Philo-Israel," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

SUBSCRIPTIONS £ s. d.

Annual Subscription for one copy weekly (including the Twelve Double Numbers) post free - 0 7 6
Two Copies (including Double Numbers) - - 0 13 6
Three Copies " " " " - 1 0 4
Four Copies " " " " - 1 5 6
Six Copies " " " " - 1 16 4

Post Office Orders to be made payable at the head office, St. Martin's-le-grand, London, to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C., and W. H. GUEST & Co. 29, Paternoster-row, London.

The Editor cannot undertake to return rejected MSS. unless stamps for the purpose be sent. Parties requiring an answer should enclose a stamp.

Contents Bills and Show Cards may be obtained on application to the Publishers.

Advertisements should be sent to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

Prepaid Advertisements are inserted at the rate of 30 words for 1s. 4d.

WHO will help Widow Lady and Children, urgently needing £10, immediately. Loss through ill-health. Comfortable Apartments, Education, or Work if desired. An Identity believer. Clerical reference and Particulars. Mrs. Kemp, Mrs. Algar's, Silchester Road, St. Leonards-on-Sea.

Now ready, price 8s., carriage paid to any part of the United Kingdom, and all countries in the Postal Union, for 8s. 6d.

THE NINTH VOLUME
OF
"THE BANNER OF ISRAEL."
Edited by PHILO-ISRAEL.

The Volumes are strongly bound in handsome blue cloth, gilt lettered, and form a most attractive present for a Library, Working Men's Institute, or Young Men's Christian Association.

CASES FOR BINDING VOL. IX.
1s. 6d. each.

—:o:—

Volumes of "The Banner of Israel"

May be had, bound in specially-designed dark blue cloth covers, handsome gilt side and back, at the following prices:—

VOL. I. (Out of print.)
VOL. II. ... ... 7s.
VOLS. III. to IX. ... ... each 8s.

A complete set (including Volume I.) sent to any address in the United Kingdom, securely packed, on receipt of remittance for £3 13s. A single volume (except Vol. I.) will also be sent free to any address on receipt of published price.

BANNER OF ISRAEL READING CASES,

For holding the weekly Numbers or Monthly Parts of the BANNER OF ISRAEL, may now be had, price 2s., post free 2s. 1d.

ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

PRICE FIVE SHILLINGS.

"Freemasonry from the Great Pyramid of Ancient Times."

How formed among the rulers and skilled craftsmen to perpetuate an order of succession, passed along by the ancient Khaedim, Khesed, Trustworthy (or modern Freemasonry) through the land of Media by the Chaldees to the chosen people of Israel, and travelled as they travelled, dispensing their usages and customs among the earlier Anglo-Saxons. With Illustrations shewing the parts of the interior of the Pyramid to be removed, disclosing the long-hidden chambers, developing further research.

To be had of the Author, T. Holland, 2, Charles-street, Rutland Gate; Robert Banks & Son, Racquet court, Fleet-st., E.C.; and Guest, Haysworth & Co., 29, Paternoster-row.

EUREKA!
The Church of My Fathers.

By G. O. BARNES.

This extraordinary Identity pamphlet is now published at cost price in a cheaper form for distribution. Price 2½d., post free.

Guest, Haysworth & Co., 29, Paternoster-row, E.C.; S. Standring, 8 and 9, Finsbury-street.

Printed for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C. PUBLISHED BY GUEST, HAYWORTH, & Co., 29, PATERNOSTER-ROW. WEDNESDAY, JAN. 20, 1886. All rights reserved.

NEW & IMPORTANT IDENTITY WORK.

Just issued, 550 Pages, Crown 8vo., Cloth gilt, price 10/6, post free for Postal Order or Cheque.

JEHOVAH TRIUMPHANT

The New and Complete Theology and Electric Light of the Bible, containing the History of British-Israel, compiled from the Sacred Scriptures,

And traced down chronologically through the Pentateuch, the Historical Books, the Prophets, the Evangelists, Apostolic Writings, the Book of Job, and Revelation of John, and proving that Great Britain is a Development of the Monarchy of David, and has been established by eternal law the kingdom of God, and that the Anglo-Saxon race, together with the Jews, are the lineal descendants of the great Hebrew Race, and the heirs to the substantialities of the Abrahamic Covenant. Together with the key to future Prophecy, and a sketch of events looming on the Prophetic Horizon, and ending in the Coming of our Lord.

Introduction. 1.—The Ecclesiastical Error. 2.—The Everlasting Covenant. 3.—The Design of an Immortal Nation. 4.—The Great Nation Created, its Perpetuity declared. 5.—The Features of the Great Nation. 6.—Meridian and Sunset, the Burning Bush. 7.—Light out of Darkness. 8.—The Hidden Counsel of Jehovah. 9.—The Separation of the Houses and Doom of Judah. 10.—The Permanent Distinction: Jews are Israelites, but Israelites are not Jews. 11.—"The Sceptre shall not depart from Judah, nor a Lawgiver from between his feet, until Shiloh come." 12.—The Intermediate National Tribe. 13.—The Building and the planting, the throne of David. 14.—"Unto Him shall the gathering of the people be." 15.—The Valley of the Shadow of Death. 16.—The Shepherd of Israel with the People prepared. 17.—The Valley of dry bones and mighty revival. 18.—"The Twelve Tribes who are of the Dispersion." 19.—"The Elect who are sojourners of the Dispersion." 20.—The Intermediate Ecclesiastical Tribe. 21.—Migration and Settlement, 22.—Behemoth and Leviathan. 23.—The Signs of the Times 24.—The Last Great Revolution. 25.—The Judgment of the Nations—Edom, Moab. 26.—The Coming of the Lord. 27.—"Tekel." 28.—Reveille.

See Review in Banner of Israel, January 6 and 13.

ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-st., London

A Resume of the Scriptural Argument, proving the Identity of the British Race with the Lost Ten Tribes. Price 1d.; 6s. per 100. New edition now ready. London: Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street.

LUNG OWBRIDGE'S TONIC
LUNG LUNG TONIC, TONIC
LUNG TONIC
LUNG THE MIGHTY HEALER. TONIC
LUNG Save Your Lives by Taking TONIC
LUNG OWBRIDGE'S LUNG TONIC. TONIC
LUNG It has a power over diseases hitherto un- TONIC
LUNG known in Medicine. TONIC
LUNG Are you at all Weak-chested, or Inclined TONIC
LUNG to be Consumptive, with just a touch of TONIC
LUNG Cough now and then? TONIC
LUNG "Try this Wonderful Medicine." The TONIC
LUNG Cough and Weakness will disappear as if by TONIC
LUNG magic, and you will feel a strength and TONIC
LUNG power you never had before. TONIC
LUNG TONIC
LUNG HAVE YOU A COUGH? TONIC
LUNG A DOSE WILL RELIEVE IT. TONIC
LUNG HAVE YOU A COLD? TONIC
LUNG A DOSE AT BEDTIME WILL TONIC
LUNG REMOVE IT. TONIC
LUNG Bronchitis and Asthma it relieves instantly TONIC
LUNG The Spasms of Coughing so dreadful in TONIC
LUNG Whooping Cough become less with each dose TONIC
LUNG of the Medicine. — TONIC
LUNG Prepared by W. T. OWBRIDGE, Chemist, Hull TONIC
LUNG TONIC
LUNG Sold in Bottles 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d. & TONIC
LUNG 11s. by all Chemists and Patent Medicine TONIC
LUNG Vendors. Wholesale all London and Provin- TONIC
LUNG cial Houses. TONIC

Dr. JOSEPH WILD'S WORKS
THE LOST TEN TRIBES

Price 3s., post free 3s. 2d.

The FUTURE of ISRAEL and JUDAH.

Price 2s., post free 2s. 2d.

The Special Commissioner of the Christian World, writing of Dr. Wild, says:—"On Sunday evening I had to fight my way into the Congregational Church of which Dr. Wild is the minister. He hails from America, and is quite the sensation of the hour. There was no standing room anywhere, and as I made to the door I met many coming away However, I had made up my mind to hear the Doctor, and hear him I did. It seems that the subscribers have a door to themselves; I made for it, and luckily found a chair which I wedged in under the platform. The Doctor prayed, and then we had a sermon about Revelation, containing much that was very effective, if not about his text, at any rate about that mysterious part of Scripture from which the text was taken."

PUBLISHED BY ROBT. BANKS & SON,
RACQUET COURT, FLEET STREET, E.C.

WORKS BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

The Geography of the Gates. With Map and six full page, and one double-page, Illustrations, printed on plate paper. 208 pages, in handsome cloth, gilt Price 3s. 6d., post free 3s. 10d.

An Elementary Digest or Sketch of the Chief Facts and Teachings of the Great Pyramid of Egypt. Adapted to the Unlearned and Unscientific. 56 pages, Illustrated with Diagrams, price 4d., post free 5d. 10th Thousand.

The History of the House of Israel; How they were Lost, and How they were Found, Told for the Children. Price 6d., cloth 1s.; post free 7d. and 1s. 1d. Fourth Edition. Eleventh thousand

Our Identity with the House of Israel. Price 4d. Reprinted from "Clifton Chronicle Letters"

Philo-Israel's Leaflets. Four pages Crown 8vo. Price 1s. 6d. per 100, postage 2d. No. 1.—"The Identity of the British with Lost Israel." 2.—"The Glory of God." 3.—An Address to British Seamen. 4.—An Address to British Soldiers. No. 5.—The Communion of the Body and Blood of Our Lord Jesus Christ Viewed in the Light of Our Identity. 6.—The Bible and the Jew. 7.—The Jewish People. 8.—Lo-Ammi; or, the Gentilisation of Ten-Tribed Israel. 9.—The Atonement. 10.—Is Our Identity Evangelical, or Non-Evangelical in its Tendency? No. 11.—Cui Bono? No. 12.—The "Thoughts" of God Towards Israel, Judah, and the Gentile Nations. 13.—The Teutonic Theory—Is It True? 14.—An Address to the Police Force of Great Britain. 15.—An Address to Israel's Missionaries and Their Supporters. 16.—The One Seed, Christ. 17.—An Address to Israel's Electors. Price 1s. 6d. per 100.

"Banner" Series of Leaflets No. 1.—"For Thine is the Kingdom, the Power, and the Glory." By Philo-Israel. No. 2.—The Spirit of Truth. By Philo-Israel. Price 1s. 3d. per 100, post free.

Identity Leaflets. No. 1.—ISRAEL'S MISSION (Psa. cxlvii. 19; Mark xvi. 15; John iii. 16). By V. M Cox. No. 2.—HOPE FOR EGYPT (Isaiah xix. 20-25) By V. M. Cox. 100 copies post free for 1s.; 9s. 6d. per 1000

EDWARD HINE'S PUBLICATIONS.

FORTY-SEVEN IDENTIFICATIONS, 6d.
COMING GLORIES, 6d.
FLASHES OF LIGHT, 6d.
OXFORD WRONG, 4d.
ANGLO-SAXON RIDDLE, 2d.

Penny extra per post. Above bound in handsome vol., LOST ISRAEL FOUND, 3s. 6d. POST FREE, 3s. 9d.

LEAFLET No. 1, 1s. per 100, of ISAAC LOVELAND, Shoreham, Sevenoaks; GUEST, HAYWORTH, & Co., 29, Paternoster Row, E.C.

Health Aids — Write for this valuable little Book.
Health Aids — 50 YEARS RECORD of Facts, Principles, and Discoveries Relating to the Improvement and Preservation of Human Life on Earth. By Dr. Samuel Birley, M.D. Ph.D. Articles 1, 2, 3, and 4, complete in book form, post free 2 stamps—
Health Aids — GORDON I. MURRAY & Co., 33, CASTLE ST., HOLBORN, LONDON

THE BRITISH ISRAELITES;

Or, Evidences of our Hebrew Origin, gathered from History, Genealogy, Philology, and Heathen Customs. To which is added the Scriptural Testimony of Prophecy Compared with Existing Facts, Answers to Objections, and a Lecture on the Great Pyramid.

By LIEUT.-COLONEL H. W. J. SENIOR, 1st Bengal Infantry.

"We can safely recommend it as an excellent guide to the learned and an invaluable mine of wealth to the Anglo-Israelite controversialist. We hope all our readers will secure a copy, and have it often in their hands.—Banner of Israel

With Illustrations, cloth gilt, 178 pp., 3s. 6d BAGSTER & SONS, LMTD., 15, PATERNOSTER ROW, E.C

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."

(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India.)

"And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the Forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS of the EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. X., No. 474. Entered at Stationers' Hall.] WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 27, 1886. [PRICE ONE PENNY.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
Upper Burmah Annexed	37
"The Favourites of Fortune"	38
The World Language of the Future. By E. Wilmshurst, Retford.—Part IV.	39
Blind Evidence from Sydney	40
What's in a Name?	40
New Testament Notes. By J. G. Taylor.—Part XV.	41
John Beddoe, M.D., F.R.S., on the Anthropology of the British Islands. By Arthur R. Prowse, M.D.	42
The Testimony of a Jew to the Value of the Church of England	43
Correspondence	43

UPPER BURMAH ANNEXED.

IF there was one point better settled than another in the late foreign policy of this nation, especially in the East, one which it was agreed on all sides should be immutable, it was that of British annexations of alien territory, there should be absolutely no more. In the case of Upper Burmah we adhered to the principle for a long time, and bore affronts and insults from the wretched madman, Theebaw, which no strong civilised State ever bore before, simply to avoid the necessity of quarrelling with him, and taking away his dominion. We were in the end obliged to interfere, and the resistance of Theebaw collapsed at once. His country fell into our hands, and instantly was annexed. The act of Lord Dufferin was an exact parallel to that of Lord Dalhousie on March 29, 1849, when, after the battle of Goojerat, the latter forthwith annexed the Panjab, with that happy result with which we are all acquainted.

The annexation of the territory known as Upper Burmah is like that of the Panjab, the appropriation by the Israelite nation of an enormous province. It is the largest in point of extent which the British Crown has acquired during the last 30 or 40 years. It includes over 190,000 square miles, and a population of about three or four millions of an industrious, quiet, yet energetic race, who are keen traders and ready to embrace every opening by which fresh avenues for commerce may be acquired. There is one point connected with our peaceful conquest of Upper Burmah that must strike the most careless of observers. It is that the Burmese have welcomed us as friends from end to end of the new territory. Mandalay has been perfectly quiet from the moment our authority was established there. General Prendergast's expedition to Bhamo, on the confines of China, resulted in the peaceful submission of that town and of the surrounding country. The Chief Commissioner at Mandalay telegraphed on January 4, 1886, "that Prendergast had reached Bhamo, was cordially received by the Burmese officials, who had kept the place quiet, and also by the Chinese merchants. There was no opposition by the river." A garrison was to be left at Bhamo, as at the other towns summoned and occupied up the river.

Why was this remarkable result in our case, when the French in Annam and Tonquin have never advanced an inch without fighting for it, or maintained their conquests without experiencing the deadly hostility of the people who surround them?

The reason is that our mode of governing British Burmah and India in general has long been known and highly appreciated by the Burmese of the late Theebaw's dominions, and their cry has been, like that of the inhabitants of Syria, Palestine, and Egypt, "When are the British coming to take possession?" The fact is, British rule in India is essentially a "righteous rule," such as Israel's was to be, according to the prophecies. In Isa. xxvi. 2, Israel is described as the "righteous nation," "keeping the truths;" and that quality of righteousness and strict impartial justice belongs to the British race because they are Israel. The Burmese recognise it, and therefore are glad to come under our Queen-Empress' sceptre, because they know her reign brings peace, and commerce, and wealth, and God's blessing in its train.

In the case of Upper Burmah there is no doubt that the annexation of it to the territories administered by the Viceroy for the Empress will open up the trade of India with the virgin soil of China. The Chinese are a civilised race, keenly alive to the advantages of commerce, and ready, it is said, to meet our advances for the establishment of gigantic trade relations at and beyond Bhamo and along the frontiers of Yunnan. Our character for justice in the East has been earned by a hundred years of administration amongst 300 millions of Asiatics, speaking 16 or 20 different languages, following many different forms of religion, and with every variety of manners, customs, and pursuits. We have pacified them all, considered them all, given all a strong, paternal, and satisfactory government, under which the masses have flourished and greatly multiplied, liberty, property, and religion being safeguarded throughout the length and breadth of the land.

This reputation or prestige (God-given to Israel, and therefore our own British possession) has made the Burmese willing and anxious to accept our rule. While the absence of these qualities in the French, because they are not Israel, has made the Chinese, Annamese, and Tonquinese resent the conquests of France, and resolve to get rid of them on all occasions. But why has God so favoured our race and refused to favour France? Is it because of our superior excellence as a people?

Digitized by Google

Nay, not so! We are no better than our neighbours, but rather worse in some respects. But God has blessed us and given us the power and the might and the honour and the conquering prestige, because He loved us originally, and would keep His oath which He hath sworn unto our fathers, as it is this day, according to the prophecies (Deut. vii. 6—8). But we form a very imperfect idea of the objects God had in view when He gave us Upper Burmah if we imagine it was to glorify us as His people, and to show us to the world as a righteous nation. These qualifications were but the means to the end, and that end is, and always will be, the propagation of the Gospel in foreign parts. God has given us Burmah, and made our acquisition of it easy and rapid, that we may cover the land so cheaply acquired, by our missionaries, with our Bibles, prayer-books, and tracts, that the earth may be filled "with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord as the waters cover the sea" (Hab. ii. 14). "The glory of the Lord" is seen in the face of the Lord Jesus Christ (2 Cor. iv. 6), and therefore when "the earth shall be filled with the knowledge" in question, it will be by the full acceptation and publication of the Gospel of Christ by and among "all nations," "families," and "kindreds of the earth." We believe this will be the result in Upper as in Lower Burmah, and to the Lord shall be all the glory. Israel, praise ye the Lord!

"THE FAVOURITES OF FORTUNE."

WHO are "the favourites of fortune?" and who describes them in those singular terms? A foreign diplomatist, it appears, has come to this conclusion, and he regards the British people as "the favourites of fortune." He describes our political parties by the work they have done, and he finds the Liberals have for six years continually "blundered," while the Conservatives who have succeeded them have in six weeks turned failure into success merely by the force of negotiations! He cannot but see how God has favoured our nation as well as the Government which now rules it; and not knowing or recognising God himself, he calls the power that has favoured us "some occult influence."

We think the wonderful steps by which our nation has recently been led by the God of Israel, and crooked things made straight, as well as darkness light, have been excellently described by this distinguished foreign diplomatist, whose words were flashed to the Times from Cairo on November 4, and appeared in the telegraphic columns of its latest intelligence on the fifth of that month. A friend who drew our attention to the report tells us that so important is this communication that "its last four paragraphs ought to be quoted in the BANNER in big print." We ask our readers now to peruse it:—

EGYPT AND THE SOUDAN.

Cairo, November 4.

In one sense it is difficult, in another it is easy to exaggerate the importance of the Convention. It certainly in no way resolves the difficulties of the Egyptian Question, which still remain untouched. On the other hand, it places you British for the first time in a position in which you may hope for success. I would illustrate it thus:—You were like an athlete, bound hand and foot, who had undertaken to lift a given weight. Voluntarily you placed yourself on a tight rope, swayed violently by all the Powers, and, pelted at by Turkey, you tried thence to accomplish the feat. The Convention not only places you on terra firma, but gives you the help of Turkey, and renders more difficult the obstruction of the Powers. You have still, however, to cut your bonds, and lift the weight. Yet when all is said, it is idle to deny Sir H. D. Wolff's diplomatic triumph.

Whether Dieu protège la France I do not know; but certainly some occult influence not only protects England from her blunders, but turns them to her benefit. You will pardon my remarking, en passant, that the Egyptians believe people irresponsible for their actions to be under the special protection of the Almighty.

That six years' continual blunders towards Turkey should be appeased by six weeks' negotiations would alone be wonderful. But note that one Ministry alone could have effected this, that Ministry being in a minority, yet placed in power for a few months, certainly by no forethought of the country. Next, observe that that Ministry itself could not have succeeded, but for the Roumelian revolution, which precisely during those few months also played into your hands.

Turkey, confronted by war, is not unwilling temporarily to secure Egypt by your troops. Austria and Russia, occupied with the Balkan Peninsula, are compelled to acquiesce tacitly. One power, France, might object, but at the nick of time comes the result of the elections, frightening her from foreign interference.

Regard these several coincidences, from all parts of the world, playing in your favour, and then deny if you can that you are the favourites of fortune. I will only add that if you wish to preserve your English character for consistency you must now commit some ridiculous blunder, and throw away what the gods have given you. I am not without hopes that the Liberal party will justify my prevision.

Let our readers note here the singular way in which God has interfered on our behalf. And surely when a foreigner, who knows only of "occult influence" and "favourites of fortune," is perforce struck with the singular position this nation occupies, we who know that God is the God of this nation Israel, must be the first to recognise His dealings with us, and how He has at every step arranged the events of the surrounding nations of Europe, so that the results are always in our favour and turn our mistakes and errors into success and prosperity.

The Roumelian Revolution came at the nick of time to give success to a discredited Ministry like that of Lord Salisbury; and the war in the Balkans lately imminent made Turkey, Russia, and Austria willing as well as anxious that the British should stand fast in Egypt. The inveterate hostility of France has been set aside by the result of their elections, which prove that that nation is sick of foreign complications, and desires to be rid of them. Thus literally has Isaiah xlii. 16 been fulfilled, and God has been perfectly and literally true to His solemn promises to His people—His blind ones—Israel! He has done for us all He declared He would do, but He has never, no never, forsaken us! And we may certainly add, "He never will."

The Lord has brought us in all that has taken place by a way we knew not, as indeed the foreigner notices. For he remarks that "it was by no forethought of the country Lord Salisbury came to power!" The Lord is leading us by paths we have not known hitherto, for surely such a series of defeats and blunders, lasting for six years, this nation never experienced before; and the desire so many express that the same bungling and the like blundering may be our experience again is new to a race who usually are "a wise and understanding people." Now, however, darkness is becoming light before us, and our crooked paths are being ruled straight, let us as Israelites recognise whose hand is dealing with us, and that the Lord our God is at the helm steering our state bark for us, into the harbour of safety and of rest.

The foreign diplomatist calls our nation the "favourites of fortune." We are not that, but we are "the chosen of our God," an honour incomparably greater. God chose us for His oath's sake to Abraham our forefather. He has put on record why He chose us and the reasons of His choice, as any one may read in Deut. vii. 6 to 8, when He said, "Thou art an holy people unto the Lord thy God; the Lord thy God hath chosen thee to be a special people unto Himself above all people that are upon the face of the earth. The Lord did not set His love upon you, nor choose you because you were more in number than any people, for ye were the fewest of all people: but because the Lord loved you and because He would keep the oath which He had sworn unto your fathers, hath the Lord brought you out with a mighty hand and redeemed you out of the house of bondmen, from the hand of Pharaoh, king of Egypt."

Digitized by Google

THE WORLD-LANGUAGE OF THE FUTURE.

By E. Wilmshurst, Retford.

(Concluded from page 34.)

PART IV.

The third and last column (page 12) of the tongues which have combined to form our language commences with the Pali, one of the most important and venerable tongues of the ancient world, and used by those races who were descended from Heber (and therefore Hebrews), but not of the line of Abraham. For Peleg, son of Heber, had other sons besides Reu, the ancestor of Israel, and who, as Hebrews, would inherit the Semitic promise of the Messiah; a connection may be observed between the Hebrew "Pelegim" division and the name "Pelasgic," as applied to the first Asiatic colonisers of Greece, via Phœnicia. Mr. Gladstone ("Studies on Homer") connects the Celts with the Pelasgi and Media, and the people and language are, in their origin, connected with the shepherd kings, with Pali-stan (Palestine) and with Macedonia, or Maghadania, whose ruler was the Pali—"pos" (or chief)—in Latin Philippus.

In the Indian branch, the Pali-Buddhistic annals are written in its daughter tongue, Prâcrit, the dialect of Oude; whose people are also "*Mag*adhim"—that is, noble. The word Prâcrit (see Moore) is literally "the fruit of separation," or "division," and is of Hebrew origin: the "Mags," Magi, or Druids, who came from the Saxon or Sacan country, Dwipa-saca—from the West to India.

In those early ages, when Asia was beginning to people Southern and Eastern Europe, these Pelegite, or Pelasgic peoples who colonised from the Indus in the Persian Gulf and the Red Sea into the lands washed by the Mediterranean (and also by land up the valley of the Euphrates to Palistan and the Troad), would form great emigrant streams, which could not but attract some of those restless and nomadic bands of dispersed Israel, who would find in them a congenial Hebraic element: and in the Pelasgic language of Greece, in the Oscan and Umbrian of Italy, their Indo-European influence may be traced when blended into the Latin, which was the parent tongue of the Romanic of France.

And as if to blend into one all the different and diverse tongues which Israel in exile had learnt to speak when "sown among the Gentiles," Divine Providence has arranged that the numerically small but ruling Tribe of the Normans, who fought at Hastings, under the banner of the Wolf—for little Benjamin, "the ruler," shall "ravin as a wolf," and who, as the "beloved of the Lord," were to be the pillars of Church and State in the isles of the West, as they were supporters and "a light" to David's kingdom of Judah—should not arrive in Britain as a Norse-speaking Tribe of Scandinavians, but should, in a few generations spent in Romanic France—in it, but not of it—acquire the Romanic tongue, and the Byzantine culture, which had survived the fall of the Roman Empire; and should be the instrument of the divine will to complete, to systematise, and to consolidate the language, the kingdom, and the peoples of these isles, as our Norman aristocracy. And this language bids fair to pervade the entire world by reason of the multitudinousness of the people who carry it everywhere, and who alone fulfil the rôle predicted of Israel by Balaam in the Asian home of our Scythian ancestors, in his vision of Israel in the latter days; and, above all the tongues of the world, has been selected by Providence to be the honoured vehicle for circulating the Hebrew Scriptures among the nations.

About a century ago, the greatest author of revolutionary, Gentile, and, therefore, anti-English ideas, expressed his contemptuous opinion of the value and of the future of the English language, its Hebrew idiom and its Asiatic ideas. The passage occurs in "Letters Concerning the English Nation," translated from the French of M. de Voltaire, 1804. In his criticism on the greatest master of the English tongue, Shakespeare, he says:—"It is in these detached passages that the English have hitherto excelled; their dramatic pieces, most of which are barbarous and without decorum, order, or verisimilitude, dart such resplendent flashes through this gleam, as to amaze and astonish; the style is too much inflated, too unnatural, too closely copied from the Hebrew writers, who abound so much with the Asiatic fustian; . . . one would think that the English had been hitherto formed to produce irregular beauties only: the poetical genius of the English resembles a tufted tree planted by the hand of nature, that throws out a thousand branches at random and spreads unequally, but with great vigour; it dies if you attempt to force its nature and to lop and dress it, like the trees in the Jardin de Marli."

The irony of fate offers the following comment. Voltaire, writing about the middle of the last century, prophesied that in less than a hundred years the Bible—the Word of God—would be "relegated to the superstitions of the past," and that the said "Hebrew fustian" records would have passed into oblivion.

The prophecy has been reversed. On June 8, 1885, a sumptuous copy of the "Works of Voltaire," in 70 royal octavo vols., handsomely bound—being of that edition of his works published by the Revolutionary French Government as a national work in 1785-89, at enormous cost—fetched by public auction in an English county city, in a good assembly of book-purchasers, sixpence per pound, or about one half the value of the paper on which it was printed.

Meanwhile the Sacred Records, in their English tongue, pursue their majestic course, "snapping asunder twice ten thousand bands more than shall appear in his impediment;" and Shakespeare, the greatest British copyist of the "Hebrew fustian," "knows no returning ebb, but keeps on still;" and Shakespeare's mastery of that tongue, which is destined to be syllabled over the whole world, has been recognised by the learned revisers of the Old Testament in their interesting preface.

In conclusion, both spiritually and literally, the prophecies concerning the chosen Tribes of Israel, as distinct from the Jews of Judah, are fulfilled in us; we hold and disseminate the oracles and the Word of God; we are, with all our troubles, nationally blessed with the gifts of heaven and the fatness of the earth; nations serve us and are bettered by it. "Saxon, and Norman, and Dane are we;" by our commerce and our scientific discoveries bringing the ends of the world together and uniting the nations into one community under the ever-spreading branches of the national cedar-tree of Ezekiel's prophecy. The Hebrew Bible is to us our national epic, and what the Homeric poems were to ancient Greece. We are the heirs of the world—the fifth great monarchy of Daniel, the Great Western central stock of those other Sacans who, by the teaching of their greatest of the Magi, "the Light of Asia," Sakhya Muni, or Gautama Buddha, destroyed idolatry and revolutionised India twenty-three centuries ago; and if we could but realise our unbroken descent from the House of Isăăc, and believe the prophets, with what additional interest should we regard the magnificent future promised to Israel obedient in the latter days, and realise our own future in our open Bibles. But whether we can believe this or not we are, de facto, the depositaries of the Asian Mystery, and of the Hebrew Bible; our language the vehicle of its preservation; we disseminate its sacred truths over the world, and nolens volens are becoming the residuary legatees of the effete despotisms of Asia—the heirs of the world, and the unworthy instruments of Providence for working out the fulfilment of prophecy and the unerring decrees of Israel's God.

"Laus Deo."

Twenty-four of "Philo-Israel's Leaflets to the British Folk" have now been issued. For list of titles see Messrs. Banks' Catalogue of Works on Our Identity, which may be had on application.

Digitized by Google

BLIND EVIDENCE FROM SYDNEY.

In the Sydney Morning Herald of August 29, 1885, we find a remarkable sub-leader on the subject of Anglo-Saxon expansion throughout the world, and the rapid way in which the race is multiplying and filling the earth. Some extracts from this article will be interesting to our readers as showing from a totally independent source that our constantly repeated arguments on this subject are matters of notoriety in the scientific and statistical world, proving that if the present rates of increase are maintained the British race must at last fill the whole planet and subdue all its other inhabitants. The writer stated what follows:—

A recent address of Mr. R. Giffen, the well-known statistician, delivered before the Statistical Society, contains a number of exceedingly interesting and suggestive facts. The outcome of Mr. Giffen's calculations goes unmistakably to prove the marvellous rapidity with which the white races are occupying the four corners of the earth. There are now 420 millions of white men in the world; that is to say, one-third of the whole population are white—and this number is constantly and rapidly increasing. From these figures the Spectator draws the natural and only deduction that it will be simply a question of time ere the white man dominates the whole world. But we would go a step further than this. We think there are manifest signs in contemporary history, signs that are yearly increasing in number and significance, that not only the white man, but the Anglo-Saxon white man, by which we mean all English-speaking peoples, is to be one day the sole possessor of the earth and the fulness thereof. We wish to make good this position in no vain-glorious spirit of racial pride. We are simply trying to read the signs of the times, and to draw legitimate deductions from them. And the signs, we think, are not hard to interpret, but so plain that any man may willingly run and read them.

First, we have the great and important fact that the Anglo-Saxon may be said to be the one only colonising race. Compared with the energy and peculiar adaptability for colonisation which Great Britain has displayed during the past three centuries, the Frenchman, the German, the Spaniard, and the Scandinavian may almost be taken no account of. The Frenchman is not naturally a coloniser. His ambition seems to be, when he has made a competency abroad, to get back as fast as possible to la Belle France and the amenities of his native city; and if he be a Parisian this desire is especially vital in his heart. He does not take root in new soil with the facility and tenacity of the Anglo-Saxon, and it can be proved by facts and figures—which after all are not such fallacious things as the humourists would have us believe—that the French are not increasing in the world. Neither have the Germans shown any signal capacity for colony-making. They have been recently attempting some small experiment in this direction, but there are symptoms that their zeal in the matter is already cooling. The individual German makes an excellent colonist, but hitherto he has shown himself more content to follow where the Englishman leads than to initiate any important pioneering enterprise of his own. And one result of this is that the German fuses and becomes assimilated with his Anglo-Saxon environment, rather than makes any appreciable impression upon it; loses his mother-tongue, many of his national habits, and even his national characteristics of mind and thought. He intermarries with English women, and becomes English in sympathy and tastes; while in his children all this is doubly emphasised. This is what is happening in America and Australia. As with the French and German, so with the Spanish, Italian, and Scandinavian races—they are either increasing slowly or at an absolute standstill. It is too venturous to prophesy that the whole of the Western world will one day be, to all intents and purposes, Anglo-Saxon. Certainly in North America everything points in that direction; while as regards South America, the Spanish race is not making its footing any firmer there. As the Spectator points out, the Spaniards in Mexico and further South look as if they were ultimately "to suffer absorption with a dark people," and if this takes place the darker people will in turn inevitably give place to the Anglo-Saxon, as other dark men have done and are doing. Then, as to Australia, there can surely be no question. All the great Austrslian continent, and, it may be added, Polynesia, must one day be dominated by the Anglo-Saxon race. Thus it may be said we have two continents destined to become the heritage of the English-speaking people. Turning to the dark races of the world, what are the influences to be seen at work? Is not the Anglo-Saxon penetrating to the earth's remotest limits, and making his footing firm wherever he places it?

The nation which, at the present moment, seems to possess the greatest energising faculty after England, the strongest desire to widen its borders and to stretch forth eager prehensile arms in various directions, is Russia. "If the Teuton and the Slav," says the Spectator, still commenting on Mr. Giffen's figures, "can keep friends, the world is theirs; and if not, there will be the most terrible struggle recorded in history since the white barbarians fought the white Romans and their darker allies." Possibly such a struggle may be awaiting the Anglo-Saxon race in the far future, and it may be that the Slav is the only rival we have to fear in the work of peopling the world. But it must be remembered that at present, at any rate, the English-speaking races are carrying on what would seem to be their destiny of colony-making under far more favourable circumstances than the Russian Empire by reason of their ample financial resources. Mere racial energy and the desire for empire will not do everything; there must be material wealth behind, and until Russia shall strengthen her credit and her monetary resources, she must continue to contend with the Anglo-Saxon race in annexation and occupation at an immense disadvantage.

If any feel inclined to say that all this fine fabric we have been building up is a mere dream, with the most insufficient basis of fact and historical evidence, we would ask, In what direction, then, do the signs, which we have here only rapidly indicated, point, if not in this? What solution have you to offer for such tendencies in past and present history as we have set forth, and which are supported by facts and figures undoubted and incontrovertible?

So far the Sydney Morning Herald. In the facts thus laid before us by our blind witness we see how fully Our Identity and the evidence which supports it are confirmed. There is first the inconceivable multitudinousness of the British described, fulfilling God's promises in them made "to Abraham and his seed for ever" in such passages as Gen. xviii. 18; xxii. 17; xxviii. 14; Hosea i. 10; Zech. x. 8—10, &c.

Next follows the increase of British population, developing into great Anglo-Saxon Colonial nations such as no other race has or ever has had at any time, fulfilling Israel's promise of a "nation and a company of nations shall be of thee" (Gen. xxxv. 11). The Anglo-Saxon outland empire is termed by the writer, "their heritage," thus pointing to Israel's "desolate heritages" promised them in Isa. xlix. 8.

The probability is next hinted at that the Anglo-Saxon race has a terrible enemy preparing to contest with it the right to dominate the world. That enemy is Russia. Here we find our journalist following (blindly) on the lines of Scripture, and pointing to Gog and Magog's frightful coming attack on Israel for the dominion of the world, declaring at the same time that the advantage will be British-Israel's by reason of our superior wealth, which provides the "sinews of war." In short, the Sydney journalist, writing apparently in total ignorance of Our Identity, gives us, in epitome, a full tale of Israelitish identifications—multitudes, colonies, wealth, the nation and company of nations, and the last fight with Gog-Magog for the empire of the world.

These arguments and coincidences prove to us that our facts are true, and we know also that our Scriptural references are accurately quoted. As the latter corresponds with the former, we declare with confidence that Our Identity with Israel is an established fact; and who can with fairness or justice assert that the evidence adduced fails to amount to proof?

WHAT'S IN A NAME?

The conclusion that Surgeon-General J. M. Grant lately arrived at in his excellent article, "The Spiritual Seed," was that "there exists at this time a believing or Christian nation of the seed of Abraham to which God has fulfilled and is fulfilling the promise of blessing spiritual and temporal, which he swore to their fathers Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; . . . . and that nation is ENGLAND."

Digitized by Google

When we read this sentence we asked ourselves how it occurred that a writer who hails from the North of the Tweed could select for the name of the honoured race he described one belonging not to his own fatherland, nor to Ireland, or Wales, but to "England?" Also why he had not designated the God-honoured race he wrote about as the "British," or "Great Britain"—not "England?" We had always imagined that the Scots were particularly sensitive on this subject, and deprecated the application to the whole race of the name of "England," which belongs really to one, though the major, part of the nation.

We concluded that Scotchmen were becoming less touchy on the subject of their separate nationality, and were more willing than they used to be to allow the entire nation in its corporate capacity to be designated by the name of its larger portion, England. For ourselves, however, we have always felt that, quite apart from our domestic jealousies in regard to Irish, Scotch, Welsh, and English preferences, there was and is a decided objection to our using the words "England" or "English" to represent the whole British nation. We feel that it injures our case and leads to confusion with outsiders, to call the whole British Empire by the name of one section only of its component parts. The same confusion arises in the mind when we call the nation "England" or the "English," as cannot but be felt when we speak of the whole Hebrew race as "The Jews," or "Jewish People," instead of giving them the comprehensive name which includes both the House of Israel and the House of Judah—namely, that of "The Israelites," or "Children of Israel."

It appears, however, that all the Scots are not so liberally inclined as our friend, Dr. Grant. A Scotch divine, the Rev. D. Macrae, is reported in a Scotch newspaper quoted by the Tasmanian of Sept. 15th, 1885, to have made a "spirited protest" against the very mistake which we have been noticing as singular in Dr. Grant's paper, published on page 438 of the BANNER, vol. ix. What the Rev. D. Macrae said was this:—

"BRITAIN" NOT "ENGLAND."

Speaking at a public meeting held in Dundee lately, "to protest against the insulting misuse of our national names, the Rev. D. Macrae said, We are met to-night to protest against the growing practice of using the terms "England" and "English" instead of "Britain" and "British"—to protest against as an outrage on our national honour and self-respect, and a direct violation of the Treaty of Union with England. What does that Treaty provide? The very first article provides as follows:—"That the two kingdoms of Scotland and England shall, upon the first day of May next ensuing the date hereof, and for ever after, be united into one kingdom, by the name of Great Britain." That stipulation stands on the forefront of the Treaty. The separate names of England and Scotland were to be reserved for separate countries, but the name of the new state formed by their union was to be Great Britain. There was no longer to be an English Parliament and a Scottish Parliament, but one British Parliament. In the Treaty of Union with Ireland also the adjective applied to the whole three kingdoms in their Union is "British"—never "English." And from time immemorial Ireland and our own island were known as the British Isles. England and Scotland formed "Britannia Magna," and Ireland "Britannia Parva." The union, therefore, was a union of both Britains into one, and the Treaty of Union with Ireland expressly uses the adjective "British" all through. Yet, what have we now? Turn where you like, especially in the English papers, and what have we in the description of imperial affairs? We read of an English Parliament which has never had any existence since the Union. We hear of the "English Army," which existed in the days of Bannockburn, but has no existence now. We read of the "English Fleet," the "English Premier," the "English Government," the "English policy," and so forth, as if Scotland were a mere English county, and Ireland was not worth considering. And after the battles in Egypt, where the Scottish and Irish troops had the heaviest part of the fighting, what does the commander do? He compliments his troops on maintaining the honour of England! For the past month or so you can hardly take up a paper without seeing headings, "England and Russia," and reference to the impending war between "England and Russia" If the question is one between England and Russia no one in Scotland would have anything to do with it. But had there been war—which, thank God, seems now less probable—Scotland and Ireland would have to pay their full share of the cost; Irish and Scottish regiments would have their full share of the fighting; and the victories would have been called "English victories;" and we should have been complimented once more on maintaining "the honour of England." But if there had been defeats, they would have been called the "British defeats." I cannot believe that the English people and the Anglofied Scotchmen who speak and write thus know or believe what mischief they are doing. They do not believe that Scotchmen and Irishmen have national feelings and self-respect, and sentiments of national honour and pride as Englishmen, or else they have little idea of the vast power of the forces they are trifling with and insulting. Scotland is to have an opportunity soon such as she never had before of dealing with this question in a practical way. We shall in a few months now have multitudes of the Scottish people who never had votes before electing members of parliament. Let them tackle every candidate with this question, and let them send up members pledged to the assertion of Scottish rights, pledged to call attention to the present insult to Scotland if it be offered, and have it stopped, and in the meantime encourage the newspapers that are doing justice and respecting public sentiments in the matter; and at public meetings, if any man gets up—even if he be a Cabinet Minister, poet, historian, or lecturer—and insults our nation by speaking of the Empire as England, and Imperial affairs as English, stop him, and interrupt him again and again, until he learns the lesson that Scotland is not a part of England, that we are Britons, not Englishmen, that while loyal British subjects we owe no loyalty to England, never did, and never will.

Here are the tribes of Israel rebelling against Ephraim their Head. But we feel, that there is after all some justice in the Rev. D. Macrae's energetic protest: for "Ephraim and his fellows" are to be known, not by the name of their chief tribesmen, "the men of Ephraim," but by the name which points to them, it is said, as a "Covenant People," the "British People," the Sons of Isaac, the Anglo-Saxon Race.

For ourselves we have as far as possible avoided the use of the words "English" or "England." as descriptive of the inhabitants of these Isles of the West, not only because we were aware that the Scots feel naturally jealous on the subject, but because it is a positive misnomer to speak of the nation as "the English," and not the British, as far as the Identity is concerned. The Queen's title, officially, is "Victoria Regina, Dei Gratiâ; fidei defensor Britanniarum." She is by God's grace Queen and defender of the faith of the British Islands, and by that title we desire to know her and the British folks whom she governs.

We hope our fellow helpers and correspondents will henceforth adopt our suggestion and conform thereto in their allusions to the ten-tribed Hebrew race occupying these two "Islands of the West," according to the prophecies.

NEW TESTAMENT NOTES.

By J. G. TAYLOR.

(Continued from page 32.)

XV.—THE PROMISES.

THERE is virtually no defence to the system of wholesale appropriation indulged in by the Church, except that the promises were intended to be fulfilled and enjoyed spiritually. This is not an argument, but an assertion; and an assertion that can boast of no Scriptural support. If the advocates of the spiritualising method were content with holding that the promises may have a spiritual as well as a literal fulfilment, we would be in accord; but great numbers go beyond this, and scout the literal purport altogether. Most people, however, have struck on a middle course, and believe that although the promises may have, or may have had, a literal meaning in a secondary sense, they ought in reality to be contemplated from a spiritual standpoint. We just reverse this process, and firmly maintain that while they may be devoted to spiritualities in a symbolical manner, they have primarily a plain, literal design, and must have a plain, literal development. Indeed, many of them, as already shown, can be carried out in a literal shape only. It was said of Israel, for instance, that she should "rule over many nations." Do Christians, as such, rule over nations? It is foretold that she would "lend to many nations," but not borrow. Do Christians never borrow? or are they particularly fond of lending? She has to colonise the waste continents. Do Christians, in their individual capacity, make any pretence at achieving this? She has to increase like fishes in the midst of the earth. Do Christians perform this feat when they embrace the Gospel? It is clear that for these predictions, and others of the same kind, a literal fulfilment, or none, is imperative. In addition to this, a spiritual fulfilment is repugnant to experience, for all prophecy has in the past met with a rigidly literal accomplishment. The predictions respecting the Saviour were fulfilled literally and to the letter. Those relating to Babylon, Assyria, and Rome were also fulfilled literally. The maledictions on the Jews have been effectuated literally, and the prophecies concerning Israel, in so far as they are acknowledged to have been fulfilled, were fulfilled literally. Why, then, are we commanded to change the rule at this juncture, and spiritualise the remainder of prophecy? The plea is that a mundane realisation would be too sordid and carnal for a dispensation of grace. It must, therefore, be elevated to a loftier plane—to wit, the spiritual.

Digitized by Google

To speak of "elevating" God's words above their original intent is rather presumptuous, and savours of impertinence. Painting the lily is nothing in comparison to this. We know that in these days men have a rage for improvements; but when they begin to improve on God's covenants, as if it were a piece of antiquated mechanism which required to be touched up and brought abreast of the times, they are on the wrong road to perfection. To meddle with God's plans is to mar them, and to improve them in the direction that the spiritualisers would have us do is simply to improve them in the way that David improved Goliath.

They must be spiritual to a superlative degree who cannot accept an earthly benefit without branding it as "sordid," and to treat in this fashion what God bestows is an insult to the Bestower. But a great deal of such talk is fictitious. We are not so fastidious in private affairs. We seldom throw diamonds to the hogs because they happen to be carnal—in fact, we have been admonished not to do so. The fat things of this life may be carnal, but they are certainly not disliked. The most ethereal Christian has no compunction in pocketing the plums of comfort which alleviate his pilgrimage, and the only fault he has to find with them is, not that they are so carnal, but that they are so scarce. What is good for the unit cannot be injurious to a nation which is composed of units; so that if this outcry against the "earthiness" of Israel's inheritance is not artificial it is extremely illogical. We would strongly advise our opponents not to be more spiritual than God Himself, and would further recommend them to abstain from preaching what they do not practise.

(To be continued.)

THE QUEEN opened Parliament on January 21, 1886.—Mr. R. T. Booth, of the Blue Ribbon Mission, is conducting successful services in Australia.—A statue of Pharaoh, which had lain buried in the Egyptian desert over 3,000 years, has just been unearthed. It represents Pharaoh who was responsible for all the Egyptian plagues, and on one side of it statue of a little baby, said to be that of the Monarch

JOHN BEDDOE, M.D., F.R.S., ON THE ANTHROPOLOGY OF THE BRITISH ISLANDS.

BY ARTHUR B. PROWSE, M.D.

WE Anglo-Israelites are quite accustomed to be told we know nothing of ethnology and the kindred sciences, because we claim a Semitic, and not an Aryan descent. But when we turn to ethnological authorities, do we find that they agree among themselves even on some questions of great importance? Emphatically, no. The fact is, an immense amount of their teaching has been pure theory, too often raised upon the weakest foundations: and so contradictions abound. Nevertheless, we are always eager to learn the latest developments of these infant sciences in the hope of getting some facts. The most recent work on the anthropology of these islands is by John Beddoe, M.D., F.R.S., one of the most talented of modern writers on this subject. His final chapter is entitled, "General Conclusions and Inconclusions," and the last sentences in it are these:—

"But a truce with speculation! It has been the writer's aim rather to lay a sure foundation; rather to test and reject unsound material; rather to prepare some small part of a solid platform, whereon insight and genius may ultimately build, than himself to erect an edifice of wood and stubble, which may make a fair show for a day, and then be consumed by the testing fire. If these remaining questions are worthy and capable of solution, they will be solved only by much patient labour, and by the co-operation of anthropologists with antiquarians and philologists, so that so much of the blurred and defaced prehistoric inscription as is left in shadow by one light may be brought into prominence and illumination by another."

The author is laudably cautious of propounding theories. Would that other writers on the subject were equally so. The following extracts from his book may prove interesting to readers of the BANNER, partly in reference to the subject of a letter by Rev. Denis Hanan in to-day's issue (Dec. 16):—

"On the whole, however, we cannot be far wrong in describing the British skulls of the bronze period, as distinctly brachycephalic; and this seems to have been the case in Scotland, as well as in England. Whether it was so in Ireland also we have not material for forming a judgment; but it is probable that the bronze race did not settle numerously in Ireland, though MacFirbis's traditional account of the Tuatha de Danaan, the large, fair, vengeful race, skilled in music and in magical arts (i.e., bringing with them a higher civilisation), may, perhaps, point to them" (page 16).

"Whencesoever they came, the men of the British bronze race were richly endowed physically. They were, as a rule, tall and stalwart; their brains were large, and their features, if somewhat harsh and coarse, must have been manly, and even commanding" (page 17).

In speaking of one of the tribes living in Britain at the time of the Roman invasion, the author remarks:—

"The Coranied ('the Coritavi or Coritani of the Romans') are said in the Triads to have been one of the races who came into Britain in a hostile manner, and to have come from the land of Pwyl, which is by some interpreted to mean the marshy lands (pools) at the mouths of the Rhine, but by Lord Strangford, who discredited the whole story, to have been some mediæval Welshman's notion of Poland. They are also said to have treacherously made common cause with the Saxons in their invasions. In the tale of Lludd and Llewelys, in the Mabinogion, are some fantastic stories about them, in which they are represented as a race of magicians (reminding one somewhat of the Tuatha de Danaan of Ireland), who were destroyed by King Lludd" (page 23).

On page 25 occurs the following:—

"The Irish traditions indicate that there, as in Great Britain and in France, successive swarms of fair-haired invaders overlaid the dark-complexioned aborigines; but that any of them were German, in the strict sense, is improbable. It may be worthy of remark that the inhabitants of the Arran isles, in Galway Bay, are reputed to be descended from the Firbolg, who were masters of Ireland before the advent of the Tuatha de Danaan, and that they have nearly the same long-featured, long-headed type already spoken of as common in the Belgic region of Northern France."

Digitized by Google

On page 265, the author, in speaking of the present inhabitants of Ireland, says :—

"Though there are in Ulster large districts where the majority of the population is of English or Scottish descent, this is far from being the case in other parts of the province. Donegal, for example, is pretty purely Irish. In the West of Cavan may be found, I think, the breed to which Sir William Wilde referred as the descendants of the Tuatha de Danaan. They are fair, large-limbed, comely, smooth-featured, and appear to have broader heads than other Irishmen."

The author's opinion as to the relationship of the Saxons, Angles, Jutes, and other invading tribes is well expressed in these words (page 47):—

"Spite of any possible shades of difference in language, the evidence of a common national feeling among them, a consciousness of racial identity, was very strong. In Beowulf even the Danes are spoken of as if of the same race. The national traditions and national heroes were common ; the Kings drew, or believed they drew, their origin from the same sacred family; their religion was the same; their laws differed little."

From page 94 comes the following suggestive extract :—

"Scandinavia seems to have exhausted itself and its race by the swarming efforts of the ninth, tenth, and eleventh centuries. Great part of the old kingly race, the sons of Woden, and of Scyrf and Skiold, and so many other mythical heroes, either emigrated or perished ; and kindred, but not identical breeds of men, occupied their ancient seats. The spirit of adventure died out in Norway for generations after Harold Hardrada and Magnus Barefoot, and after Hakon the Good."

This so-called "exhaustion" seems to point rather to the conclusion that the exodus of the "wandering tribes" from North-west continental Europe was then complete, and that in the "isles afar off" "the people" had found a resting-place in which to "renew their strength" before going forth again to "inherit the desolate heritages" of the earth.

THE TESTIMONY OF A JEW TO THE VALUE OF THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The following is an abridgement of the report of a remarkable political speech made at an election meeting by Mr. Saul Isaac, formerly M.P. for Nottingham, who was anxious then to stand for Central Finsbury. The report, taken from the Standard of Oct. 1st, was to the following effect :—

Referring to the question of the depression of trade, he pointed out that they had not free trade—they had a one-sided free trade, as far as the importation of goods into this country was concerned, but it was a very protective trade as far as all our exports went. If they found that free trade as it now existed, and had existed for forty years, was the best thing they could have, there was no necessity to make any alteration in it. He was opposed to anything like a tax upon raw material. He was not a protectionist, and did not want to see a duty placed on corn. As to capital and labour, he felt there should be the best relations between the capitalist and the workman. Only bring them closely together, and they would put on one side the political agitator who came between them, not for the interest of the labourer or the artizan, but in the interest of himself. Referring to education, Mr. Isaac said he was in favour of having all the gutter children educated, but he wanted them to have a religious and not a secular education. It had been asked how he, of the Jewish persuasion, could be, as he was, in favour of Church and State. Why, the Jews were the most Tory people in the world; they were proud of their race and their ancestors, and were proud, indeed, when they found that the same Ten Commandments handed to Moses on the mountain were in every church and chapel throughout the world (cheers). He was an Englishman first and a politician afterwards, and he contended that the Established Church was the best institution which was attached to the Throne, and carried with it honour, integrity, justice, and mercy (cheers).

The best institution which is attached to the Throne is, in the opinion of Mr. Saul Isaac, a Jew, the Established Church of England. It carries with it, he says, "honour, integrity, justice and mercy." No doubt the Jewish speaker was quite right. The Established Church, united to the State, is a divine institution, far from perfect it is true, but Israelitish in its origin and destined to be purified and perfected by the Lord Himself when He comes. There are those who, seeing the declension of many of the clergy of the Church and their Romeward tendencies, are clamouring for the immediate disruption of the Establishment, having, however, nothing to put in its place. The Jewish candidate sees from another standpoint altogether from that of our Church of England pessimists, and he finds that the latter is essential to the safety of the State, there being no better institution belonging to it than this despised Church. It is strange that this should be the verdict of a Jewish gentleman! But it is invaluable on that account, and should teach a lesson to those who have made up their minds that the Church of England shall be disestablished and disendowed like that of Ireland, forgetting that the Establishment is Israel's Church, and cannot be destroyed until the Master Himself comes and renovates it to suit the glorious worship He will institute to His own glory during the Millennial times to be ushered in with His return to reign.

Correspondence.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

Dear Philo-Israel,—I send you, herewith, the American Druggist for December, in which you will see an article by Professor Oscar Olberg, p. 222, renouncing his advocacy of the metric system, for which he has been so long distinguished; also an editorial, p. 235, announcing that, hereafter, the Druggist discards the use of the same system.

As the editor says, "The position held by Professor Olberg and his reputation as the most earnest advocate, heretofore, for the introduction of this system of weights and measures into practical pharmacy, cannot fail to put a stop, for some time at least, to any further increase in the employment of this system outside of laboratory work."

This is indeed a victory and a great one for Israel's standards, and a cause for sincere congratulation and praise. I remain, Yours very truly, John Forrest, M.D.

10, King Street, Charleston, S.C.

The Jewish Population of the World.—The Bulletin of the Geographical Society of Marseilles estimates the total number of Jews in the world at 6,377,602—that is, 5,407,602 in Europe, 245,000 in Asia, 413,000 in Africa, 300,000 in America, and 12,000 in Oceania. The European Jews are distributed as follows:—1,643,708 in Austria-Hungary, 561,612 in Germany, 60,000 in Great Britain, 3,000 in Belgium, 3,946 in Denmark, 1,900 in Spain, 70,000 in France, 2,652 in Greece, 7,373 in Switzerland, 8,693 in Holland, 36,289 in Italy, 600 in Luxemburg, 200 in Portugal 260,000 in Roumania, 2,552,145 in Russia, 3,492 in Servia, 3,000 in Sweden and Norway, and 116,000 in European Turkey. There are about 150,000 in the Asiatic provinces of Turkey, 15,000 in Persia, 47,000 in Asiatic Russia, in India and China 19,000, and 14,000 in Turkestan and Afghanistan. In Africa there are about 35,000 in Algeria, 100,000 in Morocco, 55,000 in Tunis, 6,000 in Tripoli, 200,000 in Abyssinia, 8,000 in Egypt, 8,000 scattered over the desert, and about 1,000 at the Cape of Good Hope.—Times September 30, 1885.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed: — "Philo-Israel," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

SUBSCRIPTIONS

	£ s. d.
Annual Subscription for one copy weekly (including the Twelve Double Numbers) postfree	0 7 6
Two Copies (including Double Numbers)	0 13 6
Three Copies " " " "	1 0 4
Four Copies " " " "	1 5 6
Six Copies " " " "	1 16 4

Post Office Orders to be made payable at the head office, St. Martin's-le-grand. London, to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C., and W. H. GUEST & Co. 29, Paternoster-row, London.

The Editor cannot undertake to return rejected MSS. unless stamps for the purpose be sent. Parties requiring an answer should enclose a stamp.

Contents Bills and Show Cards may be obtained on application to the Publishers.

Advertisements should be sent to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

Prepaid Advertisements are inserted at the rate of 30 words for 1s. 4d.

METROPOLITAN ANGLO-ISRAEL ASSOCIATION, Palace Chambers, 9, Bridge-st., Westminster. President: VISCOUNT FOLKESTONE, M.P.

THE BIBLE READINGS

Will be continued EVERY TUESDAY AFTERNOON at 3 o'clock, and at 7 o'clock in the Evening.

On WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 3, 1886,

A Lecture will be delivered (D.V.) at Seven o'clock, by

DOUGLAS A. ONSLOW, Esq., J.P.

SUBJECT:—ISRAEL HIS DOMINION.

All are earnestly invited to these Meetings.

JOSEPH JAS. SHRUBSOLE, Hon. Secretary.

Now ready, price 8s., carriage paid to any part of the United Kingdom, and all countries in the Postal Union, for 8s. 6d.

THE NINTH VOLUME

OF

"THE BANNER OF ISRAEL."

Edited by PHILO-ISRAEL.

The Volumes are strongly bound in handsome blue cloth, gilt lettered, and form a most attractive present for a Library, Working Men's Institute, or Young Men's Christian Association.

CASES FOR BINDING VOL. IX.

1s. 6d. each.

ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C

A Thousand of the first edition sold in a few weeks for Great Britain, Ireland, Egypt, Natal, India, and America.

ISRAEL'S WORLD:

Origin and Destiny of British Race, Colonies, and Empire; according to Scripture, History, and Signs of Our Times.

BY REV. HENRY ROE.

Price 2d., post free 2½d. R. Banks & Son, Racquet-court

Also by the same Author. "Consecration," 4d.; "Going to Africa," 1s.; "Fernando Po Mission," 1s.; "West African Scenes," 2s. E. Stock, 62, Paternoster-row, London, E.C. Rev. H. Roe, St. Ives, Cornwall.

THE SILVER MORN AND PROPHETIC VOICE. A Monthly Undenominational Magazine, for Testimony in Regard to the Second Advent of Christ, Prophetic Exposition, &c. Price 2d., post free for twelve months for 2s. 6d. R. Banks & Son, Racquet-court, E.C.

PRICE FIVE SHILLINGS.

"Freemasonry from the Great Pyramid of Ancient Times."

How formed among the rulers and skilled craftsmen to perpetuate an order of succession, passed along by the ancient Khaadim, Khesed, Trustworthy (or modern Freemasonry) through the land of Media by the Chaldæs to the chosen people of Israel, and travelled as they travelled, dispensing their usages and customs among the earlier Anglo-Saxons. With illustrations shewing the parts of the interior of the Pyramid to be removed, disclosing the long-hidden chambers, developing further research.

To be had of the Author, T. Holland, 2, Charles-street, Rutland Gate; Robert Banks & Son, Racquet court, Fleet-st., E.C; and Guest, Hayworth & Co., 29, Paternoster-row.

SEE FIFTY REASONS WHY THE ANGLO-SAXONS ARE THE LOST TEN TRIBES. Price 6d., post free 7d.

The Land of Espousals.
The Testimony of Language.
The Transfer of the Kingdom from Judah to Israel.
"Shiloh:" Its Interpretation.

R Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

NEW & IMPORTANT IDENTITY WORK.

Just issued, 550 Pages, Crown 8vo., Cloth gilt, price 10/6, post free for Postal Order or Cheque.

JEHOVAH TRIUMPHANT

The New and Complete Theology and Electric Light of the Bible, containing the History of British-Israel, compiled from the Sacred Scriptures,

And traced down chronologically through the Pentateuch, the Historical Books, the Prophets, the Evangelists, Apostolic Writings, the Book of Job, and Revelation of John, and proving that Great Britain is a Development of the Monarchy of David, and has been established by eternal law the kingdom of God, and that the Anglo-Saxon race, together with the Jews, are the lineal descendants of the great Hebrew Race, and the heirs to the substantialities of the Abrahamic Covenant. Together with the key to future Prophecy, and a sketch of events looming on the Prophetic Horizon, and ending in the Coming of our Lord.

Introduction. 1.—The Ecclesiastical Error. 2.—The Everlasting Covenant. 3.—The Design of an Immortal Nation. 4.—The Great Nation Created, its Perpetuity declared. 5.—The Features of the Great Nation. 6.—Meridian and Sunset, the Burning Bush. 7.—Light out of Darkness. 8.—The Hidden Counsel of Jehovah. 9.—The Separation of the Houses and Doom of Judah. 10.—The Permanent Distinction: Jews are Israelites, but Israelites are not Jews. 11.—"The Sceptre shall not depart from Judah, nor a Lawgiver from between his feet, until Shiloh come." 12.—The Intermediate National Tribe. 13.—The Building and the planting, the throne of David. 14.—"Unto Him shall the gathering of the people be." 15.—The Valley of the Shadow of Death. 16.—The Shepherd of Israel with the People prepared. 17.—The Valley of dry bones and mighty revival. 18.—"The Twelve Tribes who are of the Dispersion." 19.—"The Elect who are sojourners of the Dispersion." 20.—The Intermediate Ecclesiastical Tribe. 21.—Migration and Settlement. 22.—Behemoth and Leviathan. 23.—The Signs of the Times. 24.—The Last Great Revolution. 25.—The Judgment of the Nations—Edom, Moab. 26.—The Coming of the Lord. 27.—"Tekel." 28.—Reveille.

See Review in Banner of Israel, January 6 and 13.

ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-st., London

GENUINE APPROVAL OFFER.

Unequalled in the ANNALS of ADVERTISING. Expressly to the readers of the BANNER OF ISRAEL.

GOVERNMENT HEARTHRUGS

SENT ON APPROVAL to any address in the Kingdom, on production of the Coupon below.

B. of I. Coupon. 27.1.86.

To J. Watts, 113, Brunswick-road, Liverpool. Please supply me ON APPROVAL with one Government Hearthrug, six feet long, three feet wide, in Fern, Oak Leaves, Grape, Flowers, Mosaic, etc., designs, per parcels post. If satisfactory I will remit you 27 stamps per return post, or send back the Hearthrug.

Name .....

Address .....

Town .....

Address all letters

J. WATTS,

113, BRUNSWICK ROAD, LIVERPOOL.

1/3 MUSIC! 1/3

THE

"SIMPLEX MUSIC INSTRUCTOR"

(REGISTERED)

Is an ingenious appliance instantly affixed to either the Piano, Organ, or Harmonium, enabling any person (even the dullest) to at once play tunes, without the slightest knowledge of music, or of the instrument itself. Simple and easy. Thousands are now able to play who did no believe such a thing possible. Post free 15 stamps.

Address—

B. I. CROSTER, 61, Glyn Road, Clapton, London.

PUBLISHED BY ROBT. BANKS & SON,

RACQUET COURT, FLEET STREET, E.C.

WORKS BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

The Geography of the Gates. With Map and six full page, and one double-page, Illustrations, printed on plate paper. 208 pages, in handsome cloth, gilt Price 3s. 6d., post free 3s. 10d.

An Elementary Digest or Sketch of the Chief Facts and Teachings of the Great Pyramid of Egypt. Adapted to the Unlearned and Unscientific. 56 pages, Illustrated with Diagrams,' price 4d., post free 5d. 10th Thousand.

The History of the House of Israel; How they were Lost, and How they were Found, Told for the Children. Price 6d., cloth 1s.; post free 7d. and 1s. 1d. Fourth Edition. Eleventh thousand

Our Identity with the House of Israel. Price 4d. Reprinted from "Clifton Chronicle Letters"

Philo-Israel's Leaflets. Four pages Crown 8vo. Price 1s. 6d. per 100, postage 2d. No. 1.—"The Identity of the British with Lost Israel." 2.—"The Glory of God." 3.—An Address to British Seamen. 4.—An Address to British Soldiers. No. 5.—The Communion of the Body and Blood of Our Lord Jesus Christ Viewed in the Light of Our Identity. 6.—The Bible and the Jew. 7.—The Jewish People. 8.—Lo-Ammi; or, the Gentilisation of Ten-Tribed Israel. 9.—The Atonement. 10.—Is Our Identity Evangelical, or Non-Evangelical in its Tendency? No. 11.—Cui Bono? No. 12.—The "Thoughts" of God Towards Israel, Judah, and the Gentile Nations. 13.—The Teutonic Theory—Is It True? 14.—An Address to the Police Force of Great Britain. 15.—An Address to Israel's Missionaries and Their Supporters. 16.—The One Seed, Christ. 17.—An Address to Israel's Electors. Price 1s. 6d. per 100.

A Resume of the Scriptural Argument, proving the Identity of the British Race with the Lost Ten Tribes. Price 1d.; 6s. per 100. New edition now ready.

London: Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street.

LUNG OWBRIDGE'S TONIC
LUNG LUNG TONIC, TONIC
LUNG THE MIGHTY HEALER. TONIC
LUNG Save Your Lives by Taking TONIC
LUNG OWBRIDGE'S LUNG TONIC. TONIC
LUNG It has a power over diseases hitherto unknown in Medicine. TONIC
LUNG Are you at all Weak-chested, or inclined to be Consumptive, with just a touch of Cough now and then? TONIC
LUNG "Try this Wonderful Medicine." The Cough and Weakness will disappear as if by magic, and you will feel a strength and power you never had before. TONIC
LUNG HAVE YOU A COUGH? TONIC
LUNG A DOSE WILL RELIEVE IT. TONIC
LUNG HAVE YOU A COLD? TONIC
LUNG A DOSE AT BEDTIME WILL TONIC
LUNG REMOVE IT. TONIC
LUNG Bronchitis and Asthma it relieves instantly TONIC
LUNG The Spasms of Coughing so dreadful in TONIC
LUNG Whooping Cough become less with each dose TONIC
LUNG of the medicine. — TONIC
LUNG Prepared by W. T. OWBRIDGE, Chemist, Hull TONIC
LUNG Sold in Bottles 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d. & TONIC
LUNG 11s. by all Chemists and Patent Medicine TONIC
LUNG Vendors. Wholesale all London and Provincial Houses. TONIC

Health Aids Write for this valuable little Book.

Health Aids 50 YEARS RECORD of Facts, Principles, and Discoveries Relating to the Improvement and Preservation of Human Life on Earth. By Dr. Samuel Birley, M.D. Ph.D. Articles 1, 2, 3, and 4, complete in book form, post free 2 stamps—

Health Aids GORDON I. MURRAY & Co.,

Health Aids 33, CASTLE ST., HOLBORN, LONDON

BAD LEGS.

CLARKSON'S CELEBRATED SPECIFIC.—THE ONLY SURE REMEDY. Wonderful Cures throughout England. Testimonials (many from Ministers) sent. Easy Terms. Watch new great cures thought incurable!!! Case:—The Rev. J. B. Lee, late of Halstead, Essex, wrote: "A person at Manton, near Marlborough, Wilts, had a bad leg 30 years. He received immediate relief and a wonderful cure at little expense."—Address:—Dr. Clarkson, Darley, Ripley, Yorks.

Printed for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C. PUBLISHED BY GUEST, HAYWORTH, & Co., 29, PATERNOSTER-ROW. WEDNESDAY, JAN. 27, 1886. All rights reserved.

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."

(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India.)

"And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the Forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS of the EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4

VOL. X., No. 475. Entered at Stationers' Hall.] WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 3, 1886. [DOUBLE NUMBER, TWOPENCE.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
Salonica and Constantinople, Neutral and Free	45
An Anglo-Israelite (Christian) Mother's Letter to her Son at College	46
Naked Savages. By R. Lamb.	47
Tithes.—An Identity	48
Britain's Hope	49
The Claims of the Heathen and Mohammedan World upon the Church of Christ	50
Personal Iniquities and National Transgressions	51
What the Jews say in Respect to the Present Condition of the Lost Ten Tribes	52
The Lost Ten Tribes of Israel. A Lecture by Dr. Weaver	53
The British Empire, Federation, and Foreign Affairs	54
New Testament Notes. By J. G. Taylor.—Part XVI.	56
The Lord's-day	57
Another Nonconformist Minister on the Church of England	58
An Israelitish Custom. By A. S.	58
Correspondence	58
Israel's Scripture and Prayer Union	59
Anglo-Israel Free Distribution Fund	59
Bristol and Clifton Israel's Identification Association	59

SALONICA AND CONSTANTINOPLE, NEUTRAL AND FREE.

WE are not aware who the correspondent of the Times at Paris may be; but on January 3, he sent a remarkable communication to the leading journal, the object of which was to indicate a possible settlement of the Eastern Question, to be reached he did not say how, nor after how much bloodshed and devastation.

That such would intervene before we can possibly reach the end and settlement of this terrible trouble for Europe, he seemed to anticipate, for he used the following significant words in concluding his remarks:—"The East will once more be in flames, until at last a government, or a man, shall arise with a will powerful enough to settle the question once for all, and to deliver Europe and the world from this nightmare that has sat upon and suffocated her for long generations. A dreadful time of warfare and slaughter is at hand, if the question be not now settled in a vigorous, national, and radical manner." We fear God's purposes do not include a settlement of the Eastern Question in a vigorous, rational, or radical manner. They point rather to a coming "great earthquake, such as there was not since men were upon the earth, so mighty an earthquake, so great" (Rev. xvi. 18).

They point to the fall of the Turkish Empire with a mighty ruin, and to a struggle for the division of the spoil among the "eagles," which will be too much for "yonder ill-consolidated Europe." The correspondent of the Times, dealing with the state of things now visible in Greece, in Crete, in Thrace, in Macedonia, and in Turkey (the cause of all the trouble), hits upon the expedient mentioned in the BANNER before (vol. ix., p. 495), and suggests, as he did last year, that Salonica and Constantinople must, when the catastrophe occurs, be placed in the charge, not of Greece, nor of any of the Continental Powers, but of "England," meaning the British nation! His words were these; they are too important to be passed by:—

> Salonica, as a neutralized and free port in the hands of Greece, cannot be regarded as part of a programme of final settlement. The Greeks must not make Salonica what the Russians have made Batoum, where the Muscovite method of complying with the wishes of the Congress of Berlin is so thoroughly justifying Lord Beaconsfield's distrust. Salonica, neutralized and made a free port, should be in the same hands as will protect Constantinople, neutral and free. With a large zone round it, it should serve as a buffer between Greece and Austria, so as to extinguish all hankerings for Constantinople. There is a growing belief that the theory of the Sultan being a purely spiritual Sovereign on this side of the Bosphorus, with Constantinople neutralized and well protected, is one of the solutions of the Eastern Question forcing themselves on the consideration of the Powers; and most disinterested authorities acknowledge that such a protectorate would devolve on England.

How comes it that the fact is more and more taking possession of men's minds, that there never will be peace for Europe until (after the collapse of the Turkish Empire), Constantinople has been neutralised, made a free port, and placed in the powerful protection of a nation strong at sea, unselfish in its designs, and willing to hold the "Gate of Gates" for the good of all the Powers, and thus securing her own position as mistress of the world? Surely none but Anglo-Israelites can give a rational answer to such a question as this! We know; because we have God's Word to instruct us, that He has given the Gate of her enemies, the Russians, to British-Israel, and the gift, we believe, will be made in peace, because "the Lord will ordain peace for us" (Isa. xxvi. 12). Accordingly we find that politicians, who know nothing of Our Identity, and care less, are seriously forecasting the future, and can see no hope of any likely settlement of the coming troubles, consequent upon the "sick man's" death, but the assumption of the protectorate of Constantinople, and Salonica as well, by the only Power in the world which can be trusted to hold these priceless, peerless ports. That Power is the one to which Egypt has fallen, and the Soudan is now opening once more; to which India has been entrusted, and, as by a miracle, the whole of Upper Burmah has lapsed to-day; to which North Borneo was given a few years ago, and the basin of the Niger, with Bechuanaland, and (shall we say?) the whole of Central Africa has been bestowed by the gift of God, in the last few months! This is the "righteous nation," the one with whom God Himself has dwelt, is dwelling, and will always dwell, because they are His separated, chosen, and well-beloved people, His heritage, and inheritance, Israel. To them He has promised "The kingdom, and the dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, as the people of the saints of the Most High," "even the children of Israel, a people near to Jehovah"; for which blessing He calls on them to "praise the Lord" (Dan. vii. 27; Psa. cxlviii. 14).

Digitized by Google

The East will doubtless be ere long in flames, as the correspondent of the Times anticipates. But British-Israel, we perceive, will in fulfilment of the destiny he anticipates for her, be the peaceful occupant, the while, of the world's great Gate, as the trustee of Europe, and of the tormented inhabitants of the earth, what time the great earthquake woe is dealing destruction to "yonder ill-consolidated Europe," leaving two mighty Powers face to face, Gog-magog and Israel, to try conclusions in Palestine, on the mountains of Israel, for the dominion of the world. That contest all men, totally apart from Our Identity, declare, shall be between Russia and Great Britain; but the result no one can predict save those who read the Scriptures with Identity light cast upon them, and thus perceive that Gog shall perish and Israel, by the grace and help of God, shall survive victorious, as the people, the elect, and the chosen ones of the living God, according to the prophecies (Ezek. xxxviii., and xxxix.). Israel, praise ye the Lord.

AN ANGLO-ISRAELITE (CHRISTIAN) MOTHER'S LETTER TO HER SON AT COLLEGE.

My dear Son,—The texts for September 27 in my "Daily Light," which you ask me to read and note, I had already read, wept, and prayed over. "Every one that is proud in heart is an abomination unto the Lord." How dreadful, then, to be proud! And that is the great sin of our day. Young men and women will not be reproved or corrected by their elders, will not "bear the yoke in their youth," which the Holy Scriptures say "it is good for a man to bear." See the very texts in "Daily Light," to which you refer me, and also turn to Ephraim's lamentations in Jer. xxxi. 18: "Thou hast chastised me, and I was chastised as a bullock unaccustomed to the yoke." The incorrigible nation of Ephraim had to suffer for the sins of his youth; but how it hurt God to hurt him, after centuries of love and infinite patience at last having to drive him into captivity—bury him, in fact (Ezek. xxxvii.) in the "Northern wildernesses" of Europe, wandering a heathen amongst heathens, the prodigal son of the Old Testament and of our Lord's parable. And even after he was gathered in the isles, how often has he wandered away from the Father, brought back at the Reformation, the resurrection recorded in Ezek. xxxvii., and being again re-called now by the knowledge of his origin, and the recognition of all God's dealings with him.

Yet such is the history of almost every son of this incorrigible nation. May God, my dearest child, not have to chastise you as He did our nation; may you in your old age not have to bear the sins of your youth, for your mother's heart would break were you to turn out as bad as prodigal Ephraim, whom, notwithstanding God calls "His first-born," His "dear son" (Jer. xxxi. 9—20). You belong to the "first-born nation," whom Christ in a special way came to redeem, to be unto Him a "special people, a holy nation" (see 1 Peter ii. 9). Let such noblesse oblige. I give you my full forgiveness, and cannot write more to-night, but mark well the texts I refer to, and yourself as a member of this erring yet God-loved people.

Italy, Sabbath Evening, Oct. 11, 1885.

Monday evening.—Ere going farther, I return to what I said yesternight. "How it hurt the Father to hurt him, Ephraim." Do you know how much it hurt God? Just pause and think. It is a wonderful story, George, and will be a theme of holy song to all eternity. The Father could not drive Ephraim-Israel into the wilderness without going into the wilderness also. So He took our flesh in the person of His Son; He came into the wilderness of this world, and, for the prodigal's sake, the Father drove His well-beloved Son from His presence; He condemned Him to three hours of darkness, and of complete abandonment on the cross; He let Him die, He buried Him; all processes of anguish and chastisement through which Ephraim had to go. But at last, on the morning of the typical third day, He raised Him up again, just as He raised up Israel on the morning of the Reformation, now 500 years ago. Spiritually, on that glorious morning, the dawn of the third thousandth year, or prophetical day of Israel's burial (Hosea vi. 2), heralded by Wyckliffe's translation of the Scriptures into English, God again secretly recognised Israel as His beloved son and "first-born" on earth. His recognition of us before the nations has not yet taken place, any more than it has of His "only begotten Son," now in heaven. Yet as sure our (viz., Ephraim's) final recognition as Christ our Lord's before men and angels.

Now you see what trouble, what suffering it gave and is giving God "to redeem" (Luke xxiv. 21) Israel. "He hath not dealt so with any other nation," nor, as far as Scripture reveals, ever will (Psa. cxlvii. 20). But, thank God, that while He chooses one nation, and one only, "to redeem," He chooses every son of man of every nation on the earth "to save." Christ is the Saviour of every son of man on the face of this earth that will believe in Him, but He is the Redeemer of but one nation, and that is British-Israel, the "prodigal," "first-born son Ephraim." Yet the history of this one nation is the history of every individual child God chooses, and then deals with for his individual salvation. Therefore, dearest George, see to it that you not only belong to the nation He redeemed, but that you individually be one saved by His blood; for, alas! many amongst the redeemed nation will be cast out, and strangers and foreigners take their place. Say not with our Jewish brethren, "We have Abraham for our Father," for, while for Abraham's sake, God has been faithful to His oaths and promises to our nation, He cannot, for Abraham's sake, save the individual; it is for Christ, His Son's sake, He does that, to those who are in Jesus.

Now, why do you think He redeems and does not save Israel? and why does He save the individual and not redeem him? For the very reason that to redeem and to save are two different things. To redeem is to buy back what once was yours, but has gone into captivity. To be the saviour of anyone does not necessitate their previous connection with you. Redemption-money is what goes to buy back to the liberty he once had a man who has gone into slavery.

Israel had been God's, "His own peculiar people." The redemption-money with which God brought him back was His Son's precious blood. Now, here is salvation, quite another thing. You see a man drowning; he may be a complete stranger, or he may be your own child. You cast yourself into the waters that are overwhelming him, and save him at cost of your own life. In like manner Christ is the Saviour of mankind. He saw Israelites and Gentiles alike all sinking to eternal death. He threw Himself into this awful ocean, and saved all who would and will cling to Him, at the cost of His own life. You will read your Bible, my boy, with much more intelligence when you learn to distinguish between "redemption" and "salvation," and that it is possible for you to belong to the "redeemed nation," and yet not be individually saved. Now, if you are ever in despair because of sin, learn to argue from the greater to the less, as well as from the less to the greater, which you will find Jesus does in Matt. vi. 25. Say to yourself, If the blood of Jesus could redeem my nation, surely it can do the much smaller and easier act of saving my individual soul or life from eternal death. Often has this solidest of logical arguments, that if Jesus can do the greater, He can do the less, saved me from despair; for if He could forgive sinful, backsliding, incorrigible Israel, and take back to His bosom the sinful, adulterous wife of youth in her old age, with such ineffable words as, "My sister, My love, My dove, My undefiled, there is no spot in thee" (Song of Solomon), will He not much more take back me, backsliding and sinful as I am? I believe that in the natural history and final restoration of Israel to God's favour as His bride, "the once-rejected wife of youth," there are hidden secrets regarding man and his individual salvation which the world is not yet able or worthy to bear, or only a very few elect ones in it.

Digitized by Google

You can show this letter to your friend, the Rev. Mr. A. B. It may interest him and lead him to search Scripture and history afresh, for the prodigal son, for faithless Israel, the wife of Jehovah, in the Old Testament, and the bride of Christ in the New Testament (Rev. xix. 7—9). "Blessed are they that are invited to the marriage supper of the Lamb." At every marriage there is a bride, and at every marriage there are guests and witnesses. Christ's will come from the North and the South, the East and the West, to rejoice with Him over His restored bride, Israel, the "Lo-Ammi" of Hosea i. 9, the divorced wife of Jer. iii. 8, and to unite in the glorious festival.

I am glad to learn that you have underlined all Christ's references to the Old Testament in the Gospel of Matthew. Go on and mark throughout the New all references you find to the Old. This you will find wonderfully educative and intelligent work. It will bring you into sympathy with the writers of the New Testament, and also prove to you the bearing and importance of the Old Testament, and how the fulfilment of its prophecies regarding Christ's first coming convinced the world of the apostles' days that Jesus was the Christ. Search, therefore, the Scriptures, like the "noble Bereans," to see whether these things are so.

YOUR LOVING MOTHER.

"NAKED SAVAGES."

BY. R. LAMB.

SOME years ago, Mr. Edward Hine lectured in the Town Hall, in the city of Durham, and at the close was "heckled" by two professors from Durham University.

Said the Professor of History, "How can the ancient Britons be supposed—by anybody who gives the slightest attention to the matter—to have been part of the Hebrew people? The Hebrews were highly civilized; the ancient Britons were naked savages!" Mr. Hine's reply was prompt and crushing, from Hosea ii. 2, 3, "Plead, with your mother plead. . . . Lest I strip her naked and set her as in the day that she was born."

This little incident induced the writer to investigate this phase of the subject, and resulted in BANNER-ing some information lying hidden in obscure and little read books. We find that the ancient Britons, in common with the Anglo-Saxons, were of Asiatic origin—"to the South of the Caspian Sea," the precise locale of Israel's captivity. We find, too, that the ancient monuments, cromlechs, and temples had their counterpart in Palestine. The Druidic worship has been shewn to have been the exact counterpart of the worship instituted by Jereboam, "who made Israel to sin." The sacrificial ritual of the Druids was an exact copy of the Mosaic ritual in Leviticus. The intelligent race who migrated from the land of Israel's exile to Britain, and built Stonehenge, literally fulfilled Hosea's prediction, and sank lower and lower in the social scale, until the dawn of Christianity dispelled the gloom of the Druidic mysteries.

There is one point in the Druidic faith which requires some notice; their belief in the doctrine of "transmigration of souls." Cæsar tells us, "It is a favourite maxim of the Druids that souls do not die, but pass after the death of one body into another." What does this mean? Why, that the priesthood of both the ancient Britons and of Israel believed in the soul's immortality.

A writer, whom we have quoted on previous occasions, says on this subject:—"Upon this point, indeed, the Druidical and Israelitish faith may seem to differ, for this, which was a favourite maxim of the Druids, cannot be found among the Israelites. But the first thing to be discovered is what is meant by transmigration of souls, or metem-psychosis. The Druids, like other priests, had two doctrines, a sacred, and a vulgar. No doubt Cæsar's account of the metem-psychosis belonged to the vulgar religion, while the true meaning involved some mystic knowledge of the natural history of man. That it was allegorical there can be very little doubt. A man of the learning of Pythagoras, who was skilled in all the wisdom of Egypt, could never for a moment suppose that after death the soul of a rational being would pass into a beast; that that fair mind which had told the number of the stars, and penetrated all the dark profundities of nature, was one day to grovel in a grasshopper, or to shine darkling in some glow-worm, as if in emulation of its decayed glories. No! Pythagoras well knew that the soul of man approached too near its Maker ever to fall so low from its splendid exaltation. Could the magi of Persia and the Chaldeans, among whom the doctrine originated according to some—could they who believed the soul of man to be part of the Deity—could they destine that soul to such deep degradation?

"They might—there is a possibility that they might; but how small, how minute the possibility! It is necessary then to seek for some elucidation of this doctrine, which shall exhibit it in a light agreeable to the recognised ideas of the oriental and occidental priesthood. The vulgar notion of metem-psychosis has been shown to be inconsistent with the religions of the priests, by whom it was professed; it is, therefore, more than probable that by the metem-psychosis of Pythagoras, and the Druids, was meant those successive changes through which the human body passes. First it existed as a germ; when the first man drew his breath a variety of changes ensued, till that germ put on the spermatic form it existed like a vegetable, devoid of feeling, without animation.

"A third succession of changes brought it into a fœtal state, in which it lived like an animal; this change was perfected by birth, and time elapsing it merged into another; as reason began to dawn, then, and not before then, man became a living soul.

"For a short period of years the body serves as a habitation for this soul, but, 'there is a time, in which it is appointed unto man to die'—the body decays, the clay building returns to the dust of the earth, while the soul experiences a new change. It does not die, nor does it sleep, but clad in a fresh body, fairer than that which it has left, it experiences new pleasures and sweeter delights. A future resurrection ensues, and a fresh change is the consequence, but the body that is now put on is not what it once was; we shall be changed, this mortal will put on immortality, this corruptible incorruption. This new body will be given to the dust from whence it came, but the spirit will return to God.

"If this elucidation be correct, we are aware that the Israelites must have believed it as they looked for future resurrection. But allowing that it is not, and that the Druids believed that the soul of man can become the soul of a beast, though it is unfair to put that construction on Cæsar's words, yet we may perhaps be able to find traces of this belief among the Jews (? Hebrews). For instance, they thought that the soul of Elias had transmigrated into the body of our Saviour. Josephus expressly states that the Pharisees believed this doctrine. But it may be said that the corrupted Jews borrowed this foolish doctrine from their Gentile neighbours in later times, and to prove that their fathers believed it it is necessary to find it in the Mosaic writings. But it is candidly confessed that no such doctrine is to be found in the Pentateuch, nor even the slightest allusion to it. Yet this is no reason whatever that the Israelites were unacquainted with it.

Digitized by Google

"No one would ever deny that the descendants of Abraham believed the immortality of the soul, yet Moses never made the most distant allusion to it, when he gave the Israelites their dispensation. Moses never mentions the doctrine of resurrection, he never taught a belief in future judgment, nor does his creed exhibit anything relating to rewards and punishments, or to a life to come.

"Yet who would be so rash as to declare that the Jews were entirely ignorant of these points? The case is exactly the same with the doctrine of the metem-psychosis. Moses, indeed, never discourses of it, yet who would say that they knew nothing about it after they had lived four hundred years among the Egyptians, with whom this doctrine was especially cultivated. The Chaldeans had a firm belief in transmigration, yet Daniel the prophet became president of one of their colleges; he therefore must have been acquainted with and could not disapprove of it. The circumstances of Daniel becoming president of a college of Chaldeans, considering his belief as a Jew, and his attainments as a man of learning, is highly favourable to the construction just put upon this doctrine of transmigration."

11, Baxter Street, Middlesbro.

TITHES.—AN IDENTITY.

WHAT are "tithes?" What Anglo-Israelite writer, saving Mr. John Wilson, has given a moment's consideration to this subject, as a matter of Identity evidence? And is there anything to be said about them in connection with Our Identity? To begin with, what do we mean by tithes? The word is derived from the Saxon "teotha," "the tenth part." In Ecclesiastical (British) Law, the thing spoken of is described thus:—"The tenth part of the yearly increase arising and renewing from the profits of lands, from the stock on the land, and from the personal industry of the inhabitants, is said to be the tithes thereof. The first kind is called 'predial tithes,' the second, mixed; as of wool, pigs, milk, and the like (of these the tenth must be paid in gross). The third is personal, as of manual occupations, trades, fisheries, &c. Of these, only the tenth part of the clear gains and profits is due."

The tithes are paid here to the ministers of the Church of England, and it is supposed they first were settled on the Church in the fourth century, A.D.; but they were introduced, we believe, into this country when Augustine, the Roman Monk, came on his mission to convert the Saxons, in A.D. 597. Some have supposed that Ethelwolf, king of the Britons, in A.D. 836—858, first established tithes in England. But Hume, in his "History of England," doubts this (p. 41, Students Ed.), and thinks they were "earlier instituted" here. "Ethelwolf appears" (he adds) "to have established the first poor law, by imposing on every ten hides of land the obligation of maintaining one indigent person."

At first, tithes were paid voluntarily to the ministers of the Church of England, but as the Church grew stronger, it came to be claimed as a right, and the power to enforce the right was conceded by the Sovereigns of the land. At the end of the eighth century, Offa, king of Mercia, gave the Church the right, by civil process, to collect and recover tithes. "By the original law, all the land of the country was titheable, except such as belonged to the Crown, and to the Church itself." At the Reformation, in the sixteenth century, much of the Church lands was transferred to laymen, and ought, henceforth, to have been tithed, but they were expressly freed from the liability by special agreement. Tithes, originally, were paid in kind. No regular attempt had been made to remedy this inconvenience till our own modern days. Now, by Act 6 and 7, Will. IV., ch. 71, a Board of Commissioners for tithes has been appointed, to convert the tithe into a rent charge, payable in money. The amount of tithes was to be calculated on an average of seven years, previous to Christmas, 1835; and thus the Commissioners for the compulsory commutation of tithes were appointed, and the Board exists, as one of our modern British institutions, to this hour. "A voluntary agreement between the owners of the land and of the tithes, is first promoted, failing which, a compulsory commutation is effected by the tithe Commissioners." Such is the bare sketch of the history of tithes past and present, as we find it in our own current and bygone history. We pause to ask, What is the origin of tithes, and whence we, ourselves, have got the idea so early in our history as the fourth or sixth century A.D.? Our readers need scarcely be informed, that the tithes had a Biblical, nay, an Abrahamic and an Israelitish origin. Nor need they doubt, from the fact of our possession of the institution so early built into our body politic, that this is an additional proof of our Identity with Israel. The idea of tithes, whatever may have been the case in the early ages, is foreign to the Continental nations now, as far as we are at present aware. We have made some inquiries on the subject to obtain information, but the result has been, that our informants "do not know of the existence of tithes among foreign nations to-day," similar in character to the institution among our own selves.

Mr. J. Wilson, in his tenth Lecture on "Our Israelitish Origin," quotes "Millar's Historical View of the English Government," where he said "that the modern institution of tithes, and the pretensions of the Roman Pontiff, the Christian High Priest to the tenth of all the revenues of the clergy," was derived from the Mosaic Law. He spoke of the tithes again in Lecture xii., as established after the Israelitish pattern; but he does not tell us whether the German and other nations now pay tithes for the support of their public worship at home, as the British-Israelites do here to-day. The tithes "did not belong," he said, "to the Church of Rome, but to the Church of the Anglo-Saxons. Popery purloined them for a time, but they have been, so far, recovered."

But what was the origin of tithes? Let the Bible tell us! It takes us right back to the early days of Abraham and Melchizedec. Gen. xiv. 18—20 gives us the first idea of tithes, plainly showing us that its origin was even anterior to Abraham, and probably divine in its sanction. Then Melchizedec, king of Salem, "brought forth bread and wine, and he was priest of God Most High. And he blessed him, and said, Blessed be Abram of God Most High, possessor of heaven and earth; and blessed be God Most High, which hath delivered thine enemies into thy hand. And he gave him a tenth of all;" or, as the Authorised Version has it, "He gave him tithes of all." St. Paul comments on the facts in Heb. vii. 4, saying, "Consider how great this man was, unto whom even the patriarch Abraham gave the tenth of the spoils."

The next record of tithes brings our thoughts at once to Luz, and the Coronation Stone in Westminster Abbey, called God's house, "Bethel." In Gen. xxviii. 20, 22 (Rev. Ver.), we have Jacob's memorable reply to the Lord: "If God will be with me, and will keep me in this way that I go, and will give me bread to eat, and raiment to put on, so that I come again in peace, then shall the LORD be my God, and this stone, which I have set up for a pillar, shall be God's House; and of all that Thou shalt give me, I will surely give the tenth unto Thee." The tenth were the tithes, and here is the idea first disclosed in God's Word, that the proper return to Him for all His blessings is the tenth of His material and earthly gifts to Israel. These are God's deodands, the return due to the Divine Giver for earthly benefits received from His gracious hands. After the time of Jacob we find, from the Mosaic record, that "the tenth part" was the Lord's, directed to be given to Him as a regular institution. In Numbers xviii. 21, 24, "all the tenth in Israel was given to Levi for an inheritance, for their service which they serve, even the service of the tabernacle of the congregation." It was the part of Israel's possessions and increase which God claimed for the due performance of His worship. It was the property of the Church in Israel. The practice in Israel is illustrated in 2 Chron. xxxi. 5, 6, 12 (Rev. Ver.), where we read of Israel's and Judah's abundant offerings in good king Hezekiah's days. "They brought the tithe of all things abundantly, of oxen, sheep, and of dedicated things, consecrated unto the Lord their God, and laid them by heaps." In Lev. xxvii. 30—33 (Rev. Ver.), we have God's first distinct commandment to Israel, claiming "all the tithe of the Land, whether of the seed of the land, or the fruit of the tree: it is the Lord's, it is holy unto the Lord;" and it was also unredeemable at the option of the giver. "The tenth shall be holy unto the Lord. It shall not be redeemed." Instruction, as to the distinctly Israelitish character of the tithe, and how strictly God required it of His people, is evident not only from the texts in question, but also from such passages as Nehem. xiii. 12; Mal. iii. 8—10; Matt. xxiii. 23; Luke xviii. 12. The last two texts, and others in the New Testament, show, that in our Lord's times, the Jews paid tithes as a national custom for the service of God, but we read nowhere in the Book that tithes were prescribed or paid by any of the Gentile nations of the earth.

Digitized by Google

Our case, then, is complete. We have shown that tithes were paid so early as the days of Abraham; that they were promised to God by Jacob, speaking for himself, and his afterseed for ever; that they were prescribed by God Himself for His people Israel, who, right down to the times of Christ, were in the habit of paying them for God's service in the Hebrew Temple. We have also shown that it is a custom connected with Christian worship in this our land to-day, having originated so early as the fourth century A.D. And we cannot trace any national custom in foreign lands answering to the gift of tithes, such as the clergy of the Church of England (Israel's Church) demand as a right, and have received from the sons of that Church here, for centuries. We think that, the facts being so, we have indicated another remarkable line of evidence, which leads straight to the glorious conclusion we are always aiming at—namely, that the British nation, which pays tithes to its Established Church to maintain the service of the Lord their God, must be God's people, lost Israel, of the House of Joseph, since they are not Judah or the Jews. We trust our clergy will pay due heed to this new matter, since it is one in which they are deeply interested. We hope they will, by reason of the conclusion which we draw from the premises—(namely, that this nation is God's people Israel), join us in our injunction to our fellow-countrymen everywhere, that they, therefore, will praise the Lord for His distinguishing mercy towards us, His chosen people, His inheritance! We would also draw this practical lesson from our facts —namely, that being Israel, we are under the obligation, as Israelites, to devote to God's service one-tenth of our incomes and profits; the owner of a thousand a year, owing the Lord one hundred pounds; of fifteen hundred a year, one hundred and fifty pounds, and so on in proportion, per annum.

NEWCASTLE ANGLO-ISRAEL ASSOCIATION.—Lectures, &c., at the Bible House:—Jan. 7, "The Testimony of Recent Events," Rev. James McIntosh; Feb. 4, "The Testimony of Philology," Mr. Andrew Pearson; March 4, "The Testimony of Opponents," Mr. J. Pettigrew. Chair taken at 8 o'clock. [We hope our Associations note how Newcastle does the work and will imitate its example.—ED.]

BRITAIN'S HOPE.

A VERY remarkable piece of poetry appeared about the beginning of December, 1885, in the Christian World, having Marianne Farningham for its authoress. We do not know if the latter is an Anglo-Israelite by belief, but we think many most valuable and precious Israelite gifts are alleged in these seven verses to be the property of the British. These, as we shall presently show, prove beyond all doubt that this nation so blessed is and must be Israel of the Ten Tribes. The following were the lines in question:—

BRITAIN'S HOPE.

"God is in the midst of her; she shall not be moved; God shall help her at the dawn of morning."—Revised Version.

So many years when other lands were sighing,
England has seen her sons and wealth increase;
While other nations were grown weak, and dying,
She has lived on in peace.

Nor storm nor tempest has availed to weaken
The sea-girt island in her steadfast might;
For righteousness has lifted high its beacon,
And men have loved the light.

Brave were her sons, and very fair her daughters,
Their hearts were fearless, and their homes were pure,
And those who breathed her air of hills and waters
Had courage to endure.

But, best of all, God made her rich with blessing,
He made His home within her many walls;
For England, her strong faith in Him confessing,
Has answered to His calls.

And now? There are thick clouds that hide the glory,
And muffled sounds that tell of sin and wrong,
And sighs of pain, and many a heart-sad story
To hush the triumph song.

Yet who shall say that her bright sun is waning?
Her God is in the midst of her to-day;
He is all-merciful, and her complaining
Has reached His ear alway.

So let her people, ne'er His precepts scorning,
Turn aye to Him, nor fear to do His will.
This is not night; it is the dawn of morning,
And God is with her still.

MARIANNE FARNINGHAM.

The leading thought in these stanzas, thrice repeated, and especially pointed out in Psa. xlvi. 5, which is quoted at the head of the poem, is that "God is ever present with the British people!" Now we may search the Bible through, but we shall never find that God promised His presence either as God the Father, as God the Son, or as God the Holy Spirit, to any but the people of Israel. We have that covenant made with His chosen nation, Israel, in Exod. xxix. 45, 46, repeated in Haggai ii. 5, reiterated in Exod. xxv. 8, Levit. xxvi. 12, Zech. ii. 10, 2 Cor. vi. 16, and in Psa. xlvi. 5, besides in many other texts, but never with the Gentile nations.

Now, M. Farningham asserts beyond all doubt that "God has made His home within her many walls" (meaning Britain's many walls); that "God is in the midst of her to-day," even after apparent declension has set in, and while thick clouds are hiding the glory of Britain; as well as when "muffled sounds are heard that tell of sin and wrong." Also that "God is with her still, even while the dawn is breaking" after the darkness of the night. It is remarkable that the text which is held to be the key-note of these verses by the authoress is the Revised Version of Psa. xlvi. 5 (Martin Luther's favourite Psalm), wherein, speaking of Jehovah's tabernacle, David said that "God is in the midst of her, she shall not be moved. God shall help her, at the dawn of morning" (margin).

Britain, thus, according to Marianne Farningham, is possessed of one of Israel's most glorious, gracious promises, made exclusively to God's chosen ones only, but to no other race whatsoever on the face of the earth. God being true, the only conclusion to which the authoress ought to come is that Britain must be the Lost Ten Tribes, since it does not manifestly, represent the House of Judah. These verses speak of Britain, or "England," as the land of increasing wealth, and of increasing population—both Israelitish signs, as Gen. xxii. 17, Deut. xv. 6, and viii. 18 distinctly prove. They declare, too, that in comparison with her, other nations are, as to population, "dying" out (Jer. xxx. 11). The authoress tells us the "sea-girt island" has been ever safe, which was God's promise to Israel (2 Sam. vii. 10), and that righteousness (which is Jehovah's) has been the beacon of the nation. This was Israel's most splendid, God-given heritage, as Isa. liv. 17 declares, "This is the heritage of the servants of Jehovah, and their righteousness is of Me, saith Jehovah."

Digitized by Google

The fourth stanza adds to the proof of Our Identity with Israel, for it tells us that "England" has strong faith, "confessing to the Lord," which was to be Israel's happy lot, as Hosea ii. 20 provides, and that she has "answered to the calls of God," which Isa. lxv. 1 and 24 tell us is just what Israel would do when Jesus seeks and finds them, answering them before they call.

The crowning proof of all, however, is Marianne Farningham's assertion of God's continuing abiding presence with the British people, for she must well know that a people so blest can, according to the testimony of the Word of God, be the people of Israel only, and in this case the House of Israel, but not the House of Judah, since the latter received not Him who came to His own people, but rejected and crucified Him, while the British folk, being His people Israel, received Him gladly, confessed His blessed name, and have inherited, according to the promises and prophecies, not one, but all the blessings the Lord promised "to Abraham and his seed for ever" in the precious pages of the Book.

Marianne Farningham has a clear perception what "the glory of God" upon a nation is, when she tells us, in the fifth stanza, that "the thick clouds now hide the glory." This glory is nothing less than the shekinah of God's presence with His people, making them "rich with blessing," "living and abiding within their many walls." The bright sun of Britain's glory cannot be muffled or extinguished by the nation's sins, her sighs of pain, her heart-sad stories, as our pessimists are ready to complain; for in very truth her "glory" is God's own. His everlasting divine presence is their glory, and that matchless splendour, freely bestowed on them by God Himself, no sins, no wrongs, no pain, no "heart-sad stories" can make dark, "to hush the triumph song!"

"This is not night! it is the dawn of morning,
And GOD is with us still!"

We thank the writer of this splendid, beautiful little ode for a unique piece of blind testimony to Our Identity. So perfect and choice is it, that we incline to the belief that Marianne Farningham is possibly an Anglo-Israelite, and one who sees more clearly than most of us that however wretched and sin-stained our nation's condition may be, God's glory is upon us, as Isa. lx. 1, 2 declare, because His gracious presence goes with and abides upon us, as He promised in Exod. xxxiii. 16 and xxix. 45, 46. Israel, praise ye the Lord!

THE CLAIMS OF THE HEATHEN AND MOHAMMEDAN WORLD UPON THE CHURCH OF CHRIST.

THE Church Missionary Society's project for the special simultaneous meetings, to be held between February 8 and 12, 1886. has our full and unqualified approval. The Church Missionary Society addresses itself to the people of the British Islands, and claims their support as "the Church of Christ." One hundred and fifty cities and towns in England and Wales, we are informed, have now agreed to convene meetings, and enforce upon those who have never yet supported foreign missionary work among Heathen and Mohammedans, the claims of these races to the message of salvation.

The society carries the Gospel to many Eastern and African nations and tribes, and they wish to appeal to the British folks at large to come forward, recognise their duty, and help the society in carrying out the Master's last command to His Church, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature" (Mark xvi. 15). The objects which the Church Missionary Society have at heart are clearly stated in a leaflet they have just put out, and we ask for them the readers special attention. They say, inter alia:—

That their purpose is to set forth, plainly and solemnly, the claims of the unevangelized heathen and Mohammedan world upon the Church of Christ; to emphasise the risen Saviour's one great last command—the only one recorded, in various forms, in all the four Gospels and in the Acts of the Apostles; to describe the world's need of the Gospel; to illustrate the blessings which God has already given to the hitherto poor and inadequate efforts put forth by His Church; and to press home the obligation lying upon all Christians to take a share in the work, some by personal service, some by large and liberal gifts, some by systematic work in making the cause known to others, and all by prayer and influence.

Meetings will be held in the following principal places, among many others: Barrow-in-Furness, Bath, Bedford, Birkenhead, Birmingham, Bournemouth, Bradford, Brighton, Bristol, Cambridge, Canterbury, Carlisle, Chelmsford, Cheltenham, Chester, Colchester, Derby, Doncaster, Dorchester, Dover, Durham, Eastbourne, Exeter, Falmouth, Folkestone, Gloucester, Harrogate, Hereford, Hertford, Huddersfield, Hull, Leeds, Leicester, Lichfield, Lincoln, Liverpool, Macclesfield, Manchester, Margate, Middlesborough, Newcastle, Northampton, Norwich, Nottingham, Oldham, Oxford, Peterborough, Plymouth, Preston, Ramsgate, Salisbury, Scarborough, Sheffield, Shrewsbury, Southampton, Southport, Southsea, Stafford, Stockton, Sunderland, Swansea, Taunton, Torquay, Truro, Tunbridge Wells, Weymouth, Wolverhampton, Yarmouth, York.

More than one hundred and fifty clerical and lay members of the Church Missionary Society have responded to the Committee's invitation to act as special deputations to these meetings; and a much larger number are actively engaged in arranging for the meetings in their various localities.

The effort, it will be seen, is certainly a British one. The society which calls it forth is British, Church of England. It appeals to British, nay, to English towns and cities, and it styles those to whom the appeal is made, "The Church of Christ," "His Church," "All Christians." We are doubtful if the Church Missionary Society include in these terms the Christian Churches of France, Germany, Italy, Spain, Austria, Russia, and the Northern Scandinavian races. At any rate we know these nations, and their Churches do not actively take the Gospel to all the nations, families, and kindreds of the earth, and therefore do not as a practical fact see their obligation to take God's Word, and Christ's Gospel, to "the unevangelized Heathen and Mohammedan world." The British only do that, and herein we maintain they offer a grand proof which the Church Missionary Society blindly endorses, that this nation, the British people, are the Hebrew Ten-Tribed House of Joseph, those destined, in God's providence, to take the Gospel and plant it everywhere. "In the days to come" (said Isa. xxvii. 6, R. V.), shall Jacob take root. "Israel shall blossom and bud, and fill the face of the world with fruit." "Jacob" and "Israel" here are not the Jews, or Judah, for they have not done the thing.

The British folks are attempting it with God's blessing, and the Church Missionary Society are properly calling on them to see their duty in the matter. Hence they are showing proof that they are "the Jacob and Israel" of the prophecy, since God cannot predict of one people, results to arise which He deliberately allows in falsification of His own purposes, to be carried out by quite another race.

Digitized by Google

This is our argument arising out of the Church Missionary Society's laudable and cheering propositions. Our recent article on the subject (vol. x., p. 22), has called forth the very sharp remonstrances of a clergyman of the Church of England, who tells us, to our dismay, that that article "stultifies itself" in many particulars, of which the following are salient points. He styles ours a "craze," and himself one of our most determined opponents, that he knows by experience that it is perfectly hopeless to try to convince any one who has once embraced our views, and that the article in question is absurd, and self-stultifying in these respects:—

1. In deeming our Lord's infant Church "a Hebrew Church." "In Jesus Christ there is neither Jew nor Greek," and "the Church of Christ" (adds our cleric) "was never Hebrew!"

2. That the article speaks of "Abraham and his after-seed." But that the writer forgot that "that seed was Christ," "and had nothing to do, as such, with the Hebrews!" He explains his position by stating that "in this dispensation the Church of Christ is the bride, consisting of all believers, Jews and Gentiles, who are really blind and not seeing, have believed. The Jews on the other hand are the seed of Abraham, who when Jesus comes will look to Him whom they have pierced, and mourn; and will become His faithful people, over whom he will reign, and to whom all His ancient promises will be fulfilled, and who will be the great missionaries in the dispensation which is to culminate in the whole world being full of the glory of the Lord."

Our opponent deems the faultiest part of our article is that in which we said, that "we may search the Scriptures in vain for any hint that the Gospel is to be preached to all the nations by any but the Hebrew race." He herein thinks he makes a point at our expense, because he falls into the error of supposing that we deny that the apostles of our Lord being Jews, were also Israelites of Benjamin! Being Jews, and not Israel, he supposes we deny to Paul, Peter, and the rest, the missionary function, imagining that we tie that duty up to Ephraim-Israel only, and that those apostles being Jews were not Israelites too! A double error, arising from defective reading and information, on part of one who without research has condemned, and without inquiring, has passed adverse judgment! Our mentor sums up his long and cutting condemnation by telling us that the great adversary is impelling us in our course, and that he is working confusion, not only in the direction of "Anglo-Israelism," but of "perfectionism" and the rest. That men in these days want "something new," like the Athenians of old, and that these things (over which he mourns) are doing harm, and creating divisions in the true Church of Christ, preventing His servants serving Him, as in our case.

So far our steadfast opponent. We wish, however, he had read and inquired before he attacked; for in very truth his whole antagonism is founded on a stupendous error of his own, which is, his denial that the Ten Tribes exist at all! He sees in the Jews the whole of the Twelve-Tribed nation, and never stops to inquire or ask himself, what became of Ephraim-Israel, or the House of Joseph? On this point our clergyman has made shipwreck, and being utterly confused as to God's plan, has invented a "parenthetical Church," not Hebrew or Gentile, but "the Church of Christ" of the present day, relegating to the future Millennial times the restoration of the Jews only, and their enjoyment then of all the promises to Abraham; also their operations as world-wide missionaries, from that time forward, "according to the prophecies."

We cannot so read the Scriptures. We see there Ephraim described as well as Judah, and in Hosea, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Amos, and other portions we see that to Ephraim, or the House of Joseph, is allotted a mighty work to do for Christ, "Blossoming and budding, and filling the face of the world with fruit," carrying the Gospel to all nations, families, and kindreds of the earth, as the Lord's messengers and servants to do His will. In regard to this being a "parenthetical" "Church of Christ," cut off from the promises to the patriarchs as "the bride of Christ," we find that those promises were given to "Abraham and his seed for ever," without a hint of abeyance for even five minutes of time, and we find that "Jesus Christ was a minister of the circumcision for the truth of God, to confirm the promises made to the fathers," but in no wise to abolish, contravene, or postpone them for a moment.

While we fully sympathise with the Church Missionary Society in its coming efforts in February, we cannot concur with its advocate, our mistaken clerical friend. He is in very truth altogether in error in deeming ours Satan-taught doctrines, and dishonouring to our blessed Lord and Master. Our mentor lacks information, and we hope he will soon supply his own patent wants.

PERSONAL INIQUITIES AND NATIONAL TRANSGRESSIONS.

In Psalm lxv. 3, the following words, being part of a psalm or song of David, occur:—"Iniquities prevail against me; as for our transgressions, Thou shalt purge them away."

The address of the psalmist is directed to the Lord God in Zion (ver. 1), the hearer of prayer, "He to whom all flesh shall come." In the midst of his ascription of praise David breaks off in ver. 3 to speak of himself, and then of the congregation or Church of the Lord, even of His people Israel, His chosen. "Iniquities prevail against me," he cried, thinking of his own sins and iniquities and his constant and repeated subjection to their power. But in the second clause of the text he says, "As for our transgressions"—that is, as for Israel's, the nation's, "transgressions"—"Thou shalt purge them away."

We may note here the remarkable change in the personal pronoun. It was David in person, who, having destroyed the giant in the name of the Lord, yet was fain to cry aloud to God for mercy, saying, "Iniquities prevail against me." In himself he saw no good thing. Like Paul, he could do nothing but confess: "I am carnal, and sold under sin." "Oh, wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death? I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord!" (Rom. vii. 14-24). But how are we to account for the next clause of the psalm? Looking within, he saw there nothing but imperfection, weakness, wickedness, and sin. "Iniquities" thus prevailed against him; but looking to his people, the Houses of Israel and Judah, very different was the aspect there, "As for our transgressions, Thou shalt purge them away."

At a date long future to that when he wrote the words, David saw that his people were to be greatly blessed by the Lord, by having their sins removed from their consciences as a nation. Here the Psalmist lost his personality in the nation's election. The whole Church of Israel was to have its sins purged away, and he could rejoice in that expected result, since he was part of the body politic of Israel.

The Lord's Church is to be saved, redeemed, and glorified, as a body, and in the mass. The nation of Israel is to be a saved nation; and in that prospect David could rejoice, and did rejoice: "As for our transgressions, Thou shalt purge them away." He could properly glory in that, because the work was to be the Lord's. He, Jehovah, was to purge the House and people of Israel of their transgressions, and to praise Him, for that is to glorify Him.

Men in the present day cannot receive this view. They insist upon the individual aspect of salvation only, and refuse all comfort from what rejoiced David's heart—viz., that there is a national salvation which will include the personal, and the soul of each redeemed one. In that national salvation such a text as the one with which we are dealing bids us rejoice. But is this the solitary passage in God's Word leading us to conclude that the transgressions of Israel are to be nationally purged by the grace of God in Christ? Surely not! There is Jer. xxxi. 33, 34, repeated in Heb. viii. 10-12, which are passages exactly parallel with the Psalmist's statement.

Digitized by Google

Here are two portions of God's Word which the Spirit saw fit to emphasise. He caused it to be written in two languages—Hebrew and Greek—at an interval of 660 years. St. Paul quoted Jeremiah; and in translating the prophecy did so, without paraphrase, exactly. The New Testament version of the promise to the House of Israel is brought by the apostle into close connection with the work of Christ on Calvary, and thus the two prophecies connect the Israelite Church of B.C. 606, with the Christian Israelite Church of St. Paul's address to the Christian Hebrews of A.D. 64; proving thus the continuity of Scripture, and of the House of Israel too; and plainly pointing to a day (not yet come) when, as a nation, that house shall enjoy the Christian blessings therein described. What are they? Let the reader consult St. Paul's version in Heb. viii. 8-12 (R.V.) to see for himself. "Behold the days come, saith the Lord, when I will make a new covenant with the House of Israel, AND with the House of Judah. Not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers in the day when I took them by the hand to lead them forth out of the land of Egypt. For they continued not in my covenant, and I regarded them not, saith the Lord. For this is the covenant that I will make with the House of Israel after those days, saith the Lord: I will put My laws into their mind, and on their heart also will I write them. And they shall be to me a people. And they shall not teach every man his fellow citizen and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord. For all shall know me, from the least to the greatest of them. For I will be merciful to their iniquities, and their sins will I remember no more."

Here is the very blessing David foresaw would be bestowed on his people Israel. Their "transgressions" were to be "purged" by God Himself, according to the Psalmist; they would be forgotten and "remembered by Him no more," according to the prophets Jeremiah and Paul!

We notice with surprise that our clerical friends are able and willing enough to preach on such texts as Psa. lxv. 3; but in illustrating the subject it never occurs to them to refer to the promises contained in Jer. xxxi. or Heb. viii. What the reason can be we are unable to surmise, unless it be that the latter prophecies would confine the promised blessings to the House of Israel as a Christian people, and show that the Church of God is the Israelite nation, whose sins, nationally, are to be purged away by their God and Saviour.

One word more and we have done. It is this. Individual believers have ever David's experience. Their iniquities prevail against them; and the nearer they live to God the more their vileness is manifested to themselves in the dazzling light of the sanctuary of the Holy One of Israel. But there is comfort to such in reflecting on the time David foresaw was coming, when the whole Ten-tribed Christian, yet Israelite, House of Joseph would be saved by the blood of Jesus, and then go forth to its blessed, allotted, and predestined work of world-wide evangelization, according to the prophecies.

J.P.—If you experience any difficulty in obtaining your copy regularly, the publishers will be happy to forward you a form to fill up to hand to the Bookstall Keeper, or Newsman.

Mr. J. J., of Walkley, Sheffield, desires us to thank the person who kindly forwards a copy of the BANNER OF ISRAEL weekly.

WHAT THE JEWS SAY IN RESPECT TO THE PRESENT CONDITION OF THE TEN TRIBES.

ON one point of our contention with opponents we may always count on the support and co-operation of the Jews in the present day. They will always earnestly deny that the captivity of Israel returned with the captivity of Judah, and will as earnestly declare that the history of Israel is a complete blank as far as Scripture is concerned in regard to an alleged fusion of the two Houses, and in respect to the present whereabouts of the Lost Tribes. They admit they are "lost." The Ten Tribes of Israel, they allow, are "missing," that much search has been made for them, but that that search has been quite in vain. "Absolutely nothing is known of them since they were transferred to Halah and Habor, as the Bible states." The educated Jews of the present day do not, of course, admit "Our Identity," or see that the British are their lost brethren. But they do see and acknowledge that they are not now with Judah, did not return with Judah's captivity from Babylon, and that being missing and not yet found they are "lost" for the present. This is certainly great help to our contention with the clergy and ministers of Protestant Christianity who are ready often to close the door against our contention by declaring that (1) Israel was never lost; (2) that the Ten Tribes returned with Judah from Babylon; and, therefore, (3) are with the Jews now, since all Jews are Israelites, and there are no Israelites but the Jews.

In the Jewish World of August 21, 1885, the following appeared under the head of "Enquiries." Our readers should make a note of what follows, and make much use of it in our disputes with opponents:—

A "Constant Reader" writes:—Were the Ten Tribes of Israel reunited with the Two after the captivity, or do they still exist separately? In the ninth century we find the Jews of Keyrawan, in Northern Africa, corresponding with the President of a Babylonian Academy as to the "Lost Tribes."

[If "A Constant Reader" will take the trouble to refer to the Bible he will find that the Ten Tribes, after ther transfer to Assyria by Shalmaneser, are never mentioned again. The books of Nehemiah and Ezra give the genealogies and families of those who returned from the captivity; and our correspondent can see for himself whether there is any mention of such a re-union as he refers to. Others beside the Jews of Kairiwan have tried to get information about the existence of the missing Tribes, about whom, to settle the matter, absolutely nothing is known since they were transferred to Halah and Habor, as the Bible states.—ED. J. W.]

We regret to find that after nine years of the BANNER'S existence and while a perfect library of Identity works is extant, the writer in the Jewish World is still satisfied that "absolutely nothing is known regarding the missing Tribes since they went into captivity to Halah and Habor." This is hardly true, because Josephus, the Jewish historian, vouched for their existence in the locality of their transportation in the first century, A.D. Jerome also mentions them in the fifth as still there.

Our arguments indicate that the missing Tribes exist here to-day in enjoyment of all the blessings and promises God gave to Abraham's after-seed by covenant for ever; and we are not aware that the Jewish World has ever publicly controverted our logical deduction from these facts—namely, that the Ten Tribes not only exist to-day, but are to be found as the British in these "Islands of the West," exactly where God declared they should be found (Isa. xxiv. 15, xlix. 12; Jer. xxxi. 10; Hos. xi. 10).

We have been engaged for ten years past in striving to convince our brethren the Jews that the British are their brethren of Israel. But while we have secured some converts to our belief among the Jews, we cannot say that our success has been very great or very brilliant. The Jews as a body do not deny our claims, and they do not admit them. They cannot fail to see (as a Jew has admitted to us in person) that the Jews have none of the blessings of Abraham, but that we British have most of them, if not all. They cannot understand why this should be; but with jealousy, like the elder son of the parable, they see that the fact is as alleged, and refuse to "come in" to the Father's feast, although the latter is tenderly addressing them in the affecting words, "Son, thou art ever with Me, and all that I have is thine. It was meet that we should make merry, and be glad; for this thy brother was dead, and is alive again; and was lost, and is found" (Luke xv. 31—32).

Digitized by Google

THE LOST TEN TRIBES OF ISRAEL.

A Lecture by Dr. Weaver.

The following appeared in the Southport Visitor, of November 19, 1885:—

"Under the auspices of Christ Church Mutual Improvement and Literary Society, Dr. Weaver, of Hoghton-street, on Tuesday evening delivered a most interesting lecture in Christ Church Girls' Schoolroom, the subject being 'The Lost Ten Tribes of the House of Israel.' The Rev. Canon Clarke occupied the chair, and the room proved too small to accommodate the whole of those who were desirous of gaining admittance.

"Canon Clarke, in a few appropriate remarks, introduced Dr. Weaver, observing that although not himself a believer in the solution of that question, still he was open to conviction upon the subject. He regretted the room was not sufficiently large enough to accommodate all, and wished they had been able to obtain a larger building.

"Dr. Weaver, in commencing his lecture, said he was sorry he could not give them a complete idea of the subject of 'The Lost Ten Tribes of the House of Israel.' It was interesting because there were societies formed in various parts of the country, and especially one in London under the presidency of Lord Folkestone for the discussion and enlightenment of this matter. The question was at all times interesting to Christian people as to what had become of the Lost Ten Tribes. It all remained in obscurity until Mr. Hine, a few years ago, suggested that the Anglo-Saxon race were the people they were in search of. The lecturer went on to say that there were various suggestions upon the point; some seemed to think they were in India, some in China, some said in Afghanistan, and lately a book has been published in which it was stated positively that the Mexicans and Peruvians were the people. They were, however, compelled to reject all those suggestions, because not one of them harmonised with the Bible account of the Lost Tribes. If Englishmen were not the Lost Tribes, then there must be a nation somewhere with all our present qualifications; but as all the world was known to Englishmen, that theory was impossible, because they had no knowledge of such a nation excepting ourselves. The lecturer, speaking of Jacob—who was the grandson of Abraham—said he was called Israel, and had twelve sons, who, as the world grew and increased, and as their followers increased, set up for themselves, as it were, an establishment, and he became lord or ruler over his own people and followers, and they were in time called the Twelve Tribes of Israel, who were once a powerful and united people, ruled over by one king—for instance, Saul, David, and Solomon. The latter was the last king to reign over them as one nation or a united people, because they were told that at the death of Solomon the kingdom was divided into separate and distinct parts, one part being composed of Ten Tribes under King Jeroboam, and the other part composed of Two Tribes, Judah and Levi, under King Rehoboam. At the time of the separation and up to the seige of Jerusalem under Titus, Judah contained the Tribe of Benjamin, but that Tribe separated from Judah before the siege, in accordance with the prophecy in Jeremiah (vi. 1). The historian Josephus also recorded the fact that in accordance with the prophecy although the Tribe of Benjamin went into captivity with the Jews it was not now with the Jews. The Tribe of Levi went over to Judah because King Jeroboam had replaced them by other priests and would not allow them to do duty in the Temple, and that Tribe had remained with them up to the present day. From that time the Tribes were never again a united people; the Ten Tribes passing on under the name of Israelites, and the Two Tribes were henceforth called Jews. In addition to the one Tribe of Judah actually given to Rehoboam, he reigned over the children of Israel which dwelt in cities. The Benjaminites dwelt in cities, as shown in Josh. xviii. 21—28; therefore, after the Levites had joined Rehoboam, he reigned over Three Tribes. A great deal depended upon understanding the matter of Benjamin; much error was in vogue respecting it. Benjamin belonged to Israel and not Judah, and were, therefore, Israelites and not Jews. Christ Himself belonged to the Tribe of Judah and was a Jew. The disciples were Israelites of the Tribe of Benjamin. That was very important to remember, or they would not be able to understand the various promises and denunciations of God given in regard to them. When He spoke of Israel He did not mean the Jews, and when He spoke of the Jews He did not mean Israel. That was a very common mistake which even scholars often fell into, that of confounding the two peoples. The Jews had never been lost; for it was distinctly said that they should always be known. They were governed by nineteen kings and one queen, and existed as a nation for 387 years, when they were taken captive and carried away to Babylon where they remained for seventy years. There were at the present time Austrian, American, English, German, Italian, Polish, and Russian Jews; and yet they were all known by their countenances at first sight and separate and distinct. The Israelites had also nineteen kings, and existed as a nation for 274 years. They were driven into captivity 113 years before the captivity of the Jews, and never returned. After dealing at considerable length with the denunciations upon the Jews and their fulfilment, the lecturer went on to point out that according to prophecy Israel was to become unknown in name—to be a numerous people, a powerful nation. Israel was to wander for many years and then find a home in the West. Israel was to have a kingdom and a national existence, and a perpetual monarchy, and a monarch of David's line; a Christian people taught of God, driven out from their own land among the nations lost to view; sought out and found, and to become the sons of God, and then to be used for the conversion of the world. Israel was to be in honour, and no weapon should prevail against her. After quoting from the various prophets respecting Israel, the lecturer observed that if there was any meaning in the words at all, they must mean that a powerful national existence was guaranteed unto Israel and to the royal House of David. Such being the case, the kingdom of Israel, under some other name, with a descendant of David for its ruler, must be in existence somewhere. It was worthy of remark that the English race, according to our best historians, came from the borders of the Caspian Sea, which was the very neighbourhood in which the Israelites were located by their captors, the Assyrians, and a solid ground existed for the Anglo-Saxon Israelitish hypothesis. Sharon Turner, in his history of the Anglo-Saxons—and he had no conception when he wrote it—stated that the Welsh came from the Kimmerians, who came from the East, and were known by the name of Cimbri or Cymry, the very name to this day of the Welsh. They came to Jutland and the German Ocean, that very ocean from which the passage is direct to England. The earliest inhabitants of our island were called Cymry in all ancient British literature. They were separate from the ancient Britons, of whom the last account was that they inhabited Cambria or Camberland, but they had, in accordance with prophecy, long since died out. It could not be ascertained when the Cymry left Asia, but they were in Europe in Homer's days, because he mentioned them in his writings some 700 years before Christ. Our ancestors, whoever they were, were evidently of a nomadic or wandering character—which was to be the case of the Israelites—but once they reached these islands they settled down. The English were the Cymry, followed by the Anglo-Saxons and Normans, all of them, no doubt, Israelites. It was only among the Anglo-Saxon race that they found a people fulfilling the required conditions of the Bible history as told concerning the Israelites. Touching upon the question of the new name which God would give to the Israelites, the lecturer remarked, that in the earliest times this people were called Hebrews, then they were called the children of Abraham then sons of Jacob and children of Israel, but coming down the stream of time they were called the sons of Isaac. In the closing book of the New Testament they found the new name, Rom. ix. 7; Heb. xi. 18, 'In Isaac shall thy seed be called." If they dropped the first letter 'I'—which was very common in the East to the present day—they had Saac, or sons of Saac, or Saacsons. As we were Saxons, he contended that the first identification was fairly arrived at. With regard to the new language to be given to Israel, he submitted, that according to the results of recent research, there was not that great difference between the Hebrew and Saxon as was generally supposed. He quoted numerous authorities in support of this argument, and went on to trace, by means of historical and Scriptural connections, a lineal descendancy in the formation of England as the new nation referred to in Scripture. He also traced in the emblem of England's standard and the royal coat of arms a strong resemblance to the Biblical quotation in which Israel was called a Lion, in one form or other, no less than nine times. As to the unicorn, it was an un-English animal, but it was in our royal arms, and the only reason for its being there was that it was—like the lion—spoken of in connection with the Israelites. He also adduced other arguments in support of the contention that the English nation were Israelites, or, in other words, the Lost Tribes of the House of Jacob, concluding by expressing a hope that what he had said that evening might have a tendency to show that all the promises of God, as pronounced by His servants, were kept to the very letter, and that it would help to give his hearers such a deep and lasting faith in the Book of books that neither time nor adversity could obliterate, and enable them to read that Book in a much more understandable spirit than they had hitherto done.

Digitized by Google

"The lecture was listened to with the greatest attention.

"The Chairman, at the conclusion, said he never heard a more interesting lecture, and although he could not say that he was entirely converted, yet he had heard much which had deeply interested him, and he hoped Dr. Weaver would give the lecture again. He (the Chairman), if the lecturer would allow him, wished to suggest that he should enlarge some of the points touched upon and divide his one lecture into two or three.

"On the proposition of the Rev. C. Goodhall, seconded by Mr. W. Clarke, a hearty vote of thanks was accorded to Dr. Weaver for his admirable and interesting lecture.

"The proceedings were brought to a close with the benediction."

A SIXTH edition of "The Answer to the Eastern Question," brought down to the present time, will be issued this week. A new pamphlet, entitled, "Why We do not Adopt the French Metrical System in Place of Our Anglo-Saxon Metrology." By Christopher Giles, of the Post Office, Adelaide, Australia. Professor Piazzi Smyth contributes an Introduction. The price will be 6d. Messrs. Banks are the publishers. Messrs. Guest, Hayworth & Co., announce that they will have a new edition of their Catalogue of Identity works ready in a few days.

THE BRITISH EMPIRE, FEDERATION, AND FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

PART I.

MR. J. COWEN, M.P., for Newcastle, lectured at Shieldfield on the subject named above. His speech appeared in the supplement to The Newcastle Weekly Chronicle of November 21, 1885, and deserves a place in THE BANNER. We cannot, for lack of space, quote it all. But we give extracts of its important passages, which will be found to have a true Identity ring about them. He said much about "the Gates," calling them "the coaling stations," and to the remarks of Mr. Cowen on these, we would ask particular attention. He said:—

The British dominions embrace one-seventh of the land-surface of the globe, and nearly one-fourth of its population. They cover three and a-half millions of square miles in America, over a quarter of a million in Africa, over a million and a-half in Asia, and three millions in Australia. The total area is 8,600,000 square miles, or sixty-five times the extent of the United Kingdom—that is, for every square mile of land we have at home, we have sixty-five square miles across the seas. The population is estimated at over 310,000,000, and includes men of all colours—white, black, red, and yellow—(laughter)—and all creeds. The Queen rules over nearly one-third more Mussulmans than the Sultan does, she has over one-third more Mohammedan than Christian subjects, and as many believers in Brahma as in Mahomet and Christ put together. There is not now, and there never has been, an empire which has equalled it in extent and population, in industrial enterprise and wealth, since the world began. (Loud cheers). There has never been one that approximated to it in self-government. It is that faculty and habit of idependence—which has been spun into the staple of our being—that has given such boundless vitality to the English race, and conferred upon them the uttermost parts of the earth as an inheritance. Wherever the tracery of her widely-spread web extends, her responsibility is carried. She is here a citadel, encircled by an admirable line of defence—the ocean. She has not only to mount guard upon it, and all its outworks and dependencies, but she has long and intricate lines of communication to keep open and intact. This involves exceptional responsibilities, and necessitates wariness, energy, and spirit. There are broad distinctions between the British and other empires—ancient and modern. It is more scattered. It has not four, but four thousand frontiers, touching at one or more points nearly every civilized State, and innumerable savage tribes. Such expanded and undulating borders, and such varied and uncertain neighbours, involve us in constantly recurring conflicts, which make less figure in our annals than they do in our estimates. (Hear, hear). Physically, Great Britain is an island; but, strategically, she is a great Continental Power. Other great States are more homogeneous and their frontiers less exposed. This is true of Russia, China, and the United States; and still more so of Germany, France, and Austria. The British Empire combines the trading, colonising, and military characteristics of the Phœnicians, the Greeks, and the Romans. Its citizens have carried into their struggles with the untried and the unknown, in their distant dependencies, the national gifts and political virtues acquired by a long practice of liberty. To keep free and safe our ocean intercourse—on which the Empire depends for its existence—we require to plant numerous arsenals, garrisons, and coaling stations along the routes into which trade has settled. (Hear, hear). There are five such main lines, intersected with naval and military stations. The first, the oldest, and the shortest, but not the least important, route is to Canada. It is 2,000 miles long, between the nearest points in England and Newfoundland. There is one station on it—at Halifax, Nova Scotia—where there is an extensive dockyard and military depôt. The second line is to the West Indies. It is 3,000 miles long between the nearest points. On it there are four stations—Bermuda, the Bahamas (the first point discovered by Columbus), Jamaica, and Antigua. There is an iron dry dock at Bermuda, which was made at Liverpool at a cost of £300,000. The British trade passing over these two routes amounts to upwards of two hundred million pounds a year, and it will increase. When the Canadian inter-colonial railway is developed, and the Panama Canal is opened, it will be the best and quickest route to the North Pacific. The third line is to the East, through the Suez Canal. By this it is 4,000 miles to India, and 9,000 to Australia.

Digitized by Google

On it there are seven stations—Gibraltar, a strongly-fortified place; Malta, where we have a naval establishment at least half the size of that of Sheerness; Aden, Cape Comorin, Singapore, Hong Kong; and King George's Sound, in Western Australia. This long chain of stations gives a good idea of the precautions taken to secure the safety of British commerce. Singapore is not only a great naval, but a great commercial emporium, and is destined in time to govern the whole Malayan peninsula, and give it arts and civilisation; while Cape Comorin and Trincomalee are the keys to the farther East. The fourth line is to the South and East by the Cape of Good Hope, and on it there are six stations—Sierra Leone and St. Simon's Bay on the African mainland, the islands of Ascension and St. Helena off the coast, the Mauritius, and King George's Sound. British trade to the value of £300,000,000 annually passes these two routes. The fifth line is round Cape Horn to the Pacific and Australia. It is 10,000 miles long, and £45,000,000 worth of trade passes over it annually. It utilises two of the Cape line stations—Ascension and Sierra Leone; and it has three others—the Falkland Islands (over our conquest of which Dr. Johnson lavished so much eloquence and philosophy), Sydney, and Fiji. Besides these stations, we have a number of naval outposts capable of storing considerable supplies of all naval and military requisites. We have also a dockyard at Yokohama; Esquimault, a land-locked harbour in Vancouver's Island; Hong Kong, and Fernando Po, in the Bight of Benin. There never was an Empire with more chinks in its armour; and if we were at war with a great Power, it would tax the combined skill and resources of the colonists and the mother country to prevent it being pierced in a vital part. (Hear, hear). Our safety is in our fleet. (Cheers). It is the visible bond which secures the union. But for it we could be denuded of our possessions. England will be the victim of the sea when she shall have ceased to be its queen. It both serves and menaces her. It is the road that will lead our enemies to our hearts when we are unable to patrol it. If our navy dwindled into inefficiency, English workmen would soon find their occupation gone—(hear, hear)—and the price of bread quadrupled at a stroke. The system of defence defined by these routes, fortresses, stations, depôts, and dockyards is the product of ripe experience, and the outcome of generations of observation. It will suffice for ordinary times; but the aggressive designs that other States have latterly developed necessitate its being strengthened and supplemented. We will require more ships, as well as larger arsenals and shipyards, and it is to provide these that an estimated additional expenditure of nearly £10,000,000 has been sanctioned by Parliament. (Hear, hear). It was for that end that Port Hamilton was got, and that a sharp eye is being kept over sundry groups of islands in Polynesia. We will see, in a few years, a naval station, equal to Malta, constructed in the Pacific—possibly at Levuka, in the island of Ovaalu. At present, the most important of these highways are those by Suez and the Cape. They lead not only to India and China, but to our Straits Settlements and Australia, and no money is wasted in providing for their security. Whether, and how far, they may be influenced by the construction of the canal across the Isthmus of Panama—which is to be completed in three years' time—is a question on which authorities differ. But though it may divide the current of trade, and revive our rather languishing dependencies in the West Indies, it is scarcely likely to work such a revolution in the means of transit as the Suez Canal did. By a map, any speaker may make his meaning clearer than he can do by a speech. Doubting my capacity of exposition, and wishing you to grasp at once the scope of my contention, I have presumed to illustrate it by having this chart prepared, and by circulating fac similes amongst those interested in the subject. (Cheers). They give a ready idea of the vastness and variety of the British Empire. It is a noble inheritance, and every Briton should be proud of it. (Hear, hear).

* * * * * *

Our enterprise in the East began in commerce, and ended in an empire which holds in its hands the welfare of millions; while out of that in the West has been evolved a marvellous aggregate of personal enterprise and political courage—the fruition of the struggle for liberty which commenced on the plains of Runnymede, and was crowned at the Appopomax Court House. (Loud cheers). It took well nigh a thousand years to build up the Roman Empire. In a fourth of that time, "England"—to use the words of Mr. Webster—"has dotted over the surface of the whole globe with her possessions and military posts—their morning drumbeat, following the sun, and keeping company with the hours, circles the earth with one continuous and unbroken strain of her martial music." (Loud cheers). Is the Empire worth preserving? (Cries of "Yes," and renewed cheering). Putting the question first on its lowest level, Do we receive value for our money? (A Voice: "Rather," and cheers). It is costly, but not so costly as it once was. A quarter of a century ago, the mother country spent £4,000,000 a year in providing soldiers for the defence of the colonies. The expenditure on this head is now less than half that amount. Our Colonies are divided into three classes. The first class comprises colonies possessing responsible government—in which the Crown has the appointment of the governor, and a veto on the legislation, but in which the Home Government has no control. The second class consists of colonies possessed of representative institutions—in which the Crown has a veto on legislation, and the Home Government has the control of public officers. The third class embraces colonies in which the Crown not only appoints all the officers, but has the entire direction both of legislation and administration. All the larger colonies have responsible government; all the medium sized ones representative institutions; and all the smaller ones—being little more than military and naval stations—are ruled direct from London. Excluding India there are about 10,000,000 colonists living under responsible government; about 4,000,000 under representative institutions; and 2,000,000 in crown colonies. But although the direct colonial expenditure is only £2.000,000—(hear, hear)—the sum indirectly expended on the maintenance of this great organisation, and for enabling our commerce and capital to circulate safely between Great and Greater Britain, is greatly in excess of that amount. Without her colonies, England would want only a small fleet, and a smaller army. She would only have to defend her shores from invasion, her institutions from attack, and that would not absorb half the money now devoted for defensive purposes. Without calculating the cost of constantly recurring wars, the average annual outgoing for sustaining our Imperial possessions cannot be assessed at less than from £10,000,000 to £15,000,000 a year. What do we get in return for this outlay? Much. First, markets for our commerce. Trade, for the last decade, has been a vanishing commodity. (Hear, hear.) In many branches it has been receding, and, in most, it is stationary. Statistics are not required to prove what has been brought home so forcibly to our businesses and bosoms. We have been hit all round. Our production has increased, the demand has decreased, and the prices have fallen. The home markets are overstocked, the foreign markets are closed, and in neutral markets we are being undersold. We can manufacture for the world. (Hear, hear.) We either require increased consumption by our old customers, or a supply of new ones. We cannot get the former, and where can we find the latter but amongst our colonists? (Hear, hear.) Along with India, they now take fully one-third the goods we export, and one-half as many as all our foreign customers together—£68,000,000 out of £200,000,000. Relatively to population, the colonial consumption of British merchandise is greatly in excess of foreign, and it is regularly and rapidly increasing—(hear, hear)—while the foreign consumption is declining. Some of our colonial populations are proportionately better customers than those at home. Each emigrant sent to Canada, represents a customer for England's goods to the extent of £2 10s. per annum; if sent to Australia, of £8 per annum; whereas, if sent to the United States, he would not take more than 15s. worth of English goods in the year. Each Australian consumes £3 4s. worth of textile fabrics per annum, as against a home consumption of £2 per head. The colonial are but an extension of our home markets. Their trade is steadier and safer than foreign trade—(hear, hear)—it is increasing concurrently with the growth of their prosperity, and the development of their almost illimitable resources. It is to the colonies that we must look for purchasers for our capacious and augmenting produce, and for an outlet for our surplus population. We are adding rapidly to our numbers—doubling them in 70 years—but we cannot add to our land, and we are growing no more food. Of the 35,000,000 persons inhabiting these islands, at least 17,000,000 are fed on food which is not produced at home. On an average, each member of the community now consumes to the value of two-and-a-half times as much foreign food as he did 20 years ago. The colonies are an augmentation of the national estate. (Hear, hear.) England has a superabundance, the colonies have a paucity of population. England is unable to raise her own food; the colonies can raise more than they can consume. England has a plethora of wealth; the colonies need all she can give them to develope their prairies. The necessity is mutual. Both will be gainers by it being met and supplied. It is the privilege of honourable trade that, like mercy, it is twice blessed. "It blesseth him that gives and him that takes." (Hear, hear.) . . . There is a positively protectionist panic raging equally in Republican and Autocratic States. Whichever way they turn, our merchants are confronted with a barrier of adverse influences and hostile tariffs, which is daily gaining height and strength. History has demonstrated, beyond dispute, that trade follows the flag—(hear, hear)—and that the markets for our industry, the channels of our trade, and the sources of our food supplies, would be closed against us if our determination to defend them declined. (Hear, hear.) All experience is false if lessened trade does not follow in the footsteps of lessened strength. Sovereignty has often changed its seat, and trade has uniformly followed it. The correctness of this world-old maxim has had recent verification in Central Asia. Twenty years ago, when Professor Vambery —(applause)—was there, Manchester cottons, Birmingham hardware, and Sheffield cutlery, were found at all the fairs, and most of the bazaars. Since then, Russia has penetrated to—or rather over—the borders of Afghanistan, and now Russian goods are sold and British goods are banished from all the markets west of the Heri Rud. In other words, English traders have lost, and Russian traders have gained by the transfer of influence from one empire to the other. This is a modern, permit me to adduce an ancient illustration, of how like causes have produced like results. The Portuguese were once lords of the Indian seas. Their navigators were the Crusaders of commerce. Lisbon was the medieval London—the mart of the world. It is difficult to trace a resemblance between the daring men who first doubled the Cape, and discovered and settled energetic colonies in far Cathay, and the lethargic mariners and languishing dominions of the present Portugal. The Spaniards, delirious with the riches of South American El Doradoes, aspired to play the part of the Romans after the conquest of Carthage. Their galleons, freighted with the precious products of two worlds, plied the Pacific unchallenged, and Madrid was the focus of imperial magnificence. But Spain shone like the child whose parents—to display their wealth—covered it with gold leaf, which closed the pores of its skin, and stifled it. The Dutch moored an immense commercial empire to the piles on which they built their houses and palaces. Their ships swept the ocean, and the Hague became the centre of the world's diplomacy. But its splendour has departed; and so, too, has that of the all potent Hanseatic League, which once commanded the respect, and defied the power, of kings. Venice, who, throned on her hundred isles, held the gorgeous East in fee; Florence, who was as famous in trade as in letters; Genoa the Superb, who shook the thrones of Catacuzen; those maritime Mahommedans, the Moors, "the mildest mannered men who ever scuttled ships or cut a throat"—(laughter)—where are they all now? I could push the inquiry further back, and gather confirmation for my argument from the mythic annals of decades of centuries and nations, as they "spin for ever down the ringing grooves of change." Phœnicia, the first pilot in the stream of history; Carthage, to which all lines of wealth bent towards, concentrated in, and then radiated from, lie buried in the dust, without the record of a written line or a chiseled stone. The glory that was Greece, and the power that was Rome, has vanished. And why? Because, intoxicated with success and insolence, they gave themselves up to the Delilah charms of luxury. "Their garments were all fringes, and their meals all sauces." (Laughter.) Ease, enervation, and cupidity blinded them. They turned too self-assured and self-indulgent to protect their empires. They first crumbled, then tottered, and then fell. They teach an identical moral—and it is this. If dominion goes from a people, trade goes. What has been, will be. If England is to keep her commerce, she must keep her empire; and she can only do that by paying a steady and sufficient premium against all risks. In other language, by being resolved to enforce her rights, and prepared to defend her interests. (Loud cheers.) And this resolve gives a nation something more precious than gold—it gives it character. Our empire cannot be converted into a joint-stock company, involving limited and isolated liabilities. We have been made, by the irresistible sequence of events, paramount potentates in the Eastern seas. (Cheers) It is the behest of destiny. Our ships swarm in every creek and harbour, our merchants press everywhere, trade everywhere, settle everywhere, and our captains and consuls follow to protect, and, if need be, to control them. (Cheers.) We cannot evade either the dignity or the obligations of the position. These obligations strengthen our national character, prevent us degenerating into parochialisms, and convert a community of merchants into a race of teachers and rulers. (Hear, hear.) The position involves undoubted difficulties; but it should be our glory to confront and overcome them. If we wrestle with them they will strengthen our nerves and sharpen our skill. When the Athenians learnt of the mighty preparations of the Persian King of Athos, and of the shores of the Hellespont being united, Themistocles told them they had only one refuge—their own courage. Out of that self-reliance came forth those miracles of power, Thermopylæ and Salamis. Englishmen have all the courage in war, the sinew in labour, the cunning in workmanship, the daring in seamanship, that are requisite to constitute them the centre of such a vast territorial circumference. They are the inter-penetrating and binding power, the international amalgam that reaches to all, webs each to each, and all to themselves. That position can only be held, that puissant nationality can only be sustained, that sceptre can only be swayed, by a continuous and undaunted display of the imperial characteristics that won them, and by making our multitudinous obstacles occasions for fresh efforts, and converting new dangers into instruments of new triumph. (Cheers.) It is not sufficient, however, to possess the power; it is necessary to have the will and the ingenuity to apply it. Centuries before any modern nation—when Britain was buried in barbarism, and America was undiscovered and undreamt of—the Chinese made gunpowder, discovered the mariner's compass, and invented the printing press. They possessed in these three instruments the means for securing military, maritime, and literary supremacy. But they had not the nouse to utilise them. Gunpowder, in their hands, produced only crackers and fireworks. (Laughter.) Junks, to navigate the seaboard, were all they drew from the mariner's compass; while printing produced nothing but stereotyped editions of Confucius. We have not buried our talents in the earth and hid them; but we have made them agents of our enterprise, furrowed the earth with railways, and given aërial wings to human speech. We have fought and conquered, and sailed and traded, through every zone; foreign skies only uncoiling the strength, and adding to the electric energy, of the race.

Digitized by Google

(To be continued.)

NEW TESTAMENT NOTES.

By J. G. Taylor.

(Continued from page 42.)

PART XVI.

The End of Faith.

In this the nineteenth century, it may seem a late hour to lecture the world on the end of faith, but the contumacious attitude adopted by many on the Anglo-Israel controversy compels a return to even the most elementary principles of Scripture. There are some who have very hazy views as to the proper latitude and range of the Christian religion—some have very extravagant views, and some have no views at all. Those who have no views had better study the Bible, and by the Bible we mean, of course, the Bible—not the commentaries, or the headlines, or the references. Those who have extravagant views do not hesitate to declare that Christianity abrogated the promises which gave Israel a special dignity in God's economy; that when Christ came He repealed the Abrahamic covenant and made its bequests the common property of mankind. But He did not. Paul certifies that the Saviour was a minister to "confirm" the promises, and we have His own words that He came not to destroy, but to fulfil—to fulfil the law. The law, which had borne like an incubus on Israel for nearly 2,000 years, and which they had proved themselves utterly unable to fulfil, He fulfilled for them—thus finishing it and abolishing it (Rom. x. 4, Eph. ii. 15). Instead of cancelling the promises to Israel, He cancelled the conditions attached to the promises, and thereby rendered them capable of unshackled development. In their opinion, the compact with Israel, chronicled in Genesis, was only a temporary expedient, to be displaced by the Gospel, whereas the law was the temporary expedient (Gal. iii. 19), and the covenant itself will last while sun and moon endure (Gen. xvii. 19, Jer. xxxi. 35).

Digitized by Google

It is futile to argue that Israel broke the conditions and so absolved God from His obligations; for the conditions formed no part of the original contract, and it is not open to man, much less, therefore, to God, to introduce reservations into an agreement long after the agreement has been settled and sealed. "Though it be but a man's covenant, yet if it be confirmed, no man disannulleth or addeth thereto" (Gal. iii. 15). "The covenant, that was confirmed before of God in Christ, the lawwhich was four hundred and thirty years after, cannot disannul, that it should make the promise of none effect. For if the inheritance be of the law it is no more of promise: but God gave it to Abraham by promise" (Gal. iii. 17, 18).

Those who are embarrassed with hazy views need to be reminded that the end of faith is not to rob Israel, but to gain heaven. The Bible has not left us in any suspense as to that. We will, not, however, rest satisfied with pronouncing that the "whole tenour" of the New Testament demonstrates it, but will cull a few passages which may serve as aids to their memory. "Receiving the end of your faith: the salvation of your souls" (1 Pet. i. 9). Not the Gates, or the wealth, or the power of earthly Israel; not a thick slice of Joseph's birthright, but "the salvation of your souls," "remission of sins" (Acts xxvi. 18), "repentance unto life" (Acts xi. 18), "reconciliation with God" (Eph. ii. 16). It is true that the Christian is an "heir," but "to a hope laid up in heaven" (Col. i. 5); being an "heir of the kingdom which He hath promised to them that love Him" (James ii. 5), "an heir of God through Christ" (Gal. iv. 7), an "heir according to the hope of eternal life" (Titus iii. 7), an "heir of God and joint heir with Christ" (Rom. viii. 17), a fellow heir and fellow partaker of the promises in Christ Jesus (Eph. iii. 6). He has an "inheritance," but it is an "eternal inheritance" (Heb. ix. 15), an inheritance with the saints in light (Col. i. 12), an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away (1 Pet. i. 4). He has an "adoption," but it is "the redemption of the body" (Rom. viii. 23). He has his "blessings," but they are "spiritual blessings in heavenly places" (Eph. i. 3), and he has his "promises"; but it is "that through these he may become partaker of the divine nature" (2 Pet. i. 4). Hence the line of demarcation between the possessions of an Israelite and those of a Christian is incisive, and prohibits that habitual poaching on the preserves of Israel which has at length managed to diminish God's purpose to a myth.

(To be continued.)

THE LORD'S DAY.

THERE are three questions connected with the Lord's-day which it is interesting to consider and answer. These are: (1) Is the Lord's-day still binding on Christian men? (2) If so, on what authority is the first day of the week, and not the seventh, kept as the Sabbath, or rest day? and (3) Does the change of the seventh to the first day of the week throw any light on our Sunday observance?

In regard to the first point raised, it is clear that the day of Sabbath rest has its sanction in Gen ii. 2, 3, when God rested from creation work on the seventh day, "blessed and sanctified it." The origin of the day is the creation, and it records the time of God's rest from it. The observance, then, is quite independent of nationalities, times, and seasons. It relates not to the times and history of the Hebrew people; but to the Creator's work, and the cessation thereof. It is, therefore, for all men. It was probably observed by the patriarchs—possibly by Noah—but was allowed to fall into disuse and neglect during the times of the Egyptian bondage; but Exod. xvi. 5, 22—26, proves to us that the observance of the day was early enjoined upon the children of Israel after the Exodus; "tomorrow is the rest of the holy Sabbath of Jehovah."

The institution was thus prescribed before the people reached Sinai, and before the ten true laws of God were proclaimed for their national observance. It is manifest that the ordinance of the Sabbath, like all the rest of the ten laws, had its origin, not in Sinai, but in times prior to that date. The Decalogue merely enacted them in a codified, compendious form, though all the laws against idolatry, theft, adultery, false swearing, covetousness, and the observance of the Sabbath, were in force before the date of the Sinaitic promulgation, and were applicable (as some affirm) to all nations and all people, without restriction as to the Hebrew race.

In the New Testament the Lord Jesus always upheld the validity and binding force of the Decalogue, as respects all Christian people. He came, He said, to fulfil it all, and "not to destroy the law or the prophets" (Matt. v. 17). The apostles followed in the same track, in Jesus' wake. Rom. xiii. 8, 9; Eph. v. 5; James ii. 8—11, all uphold the law, and repeat its sanctions with approval. The Lord said the Sabbath was made for man—not for the Hebrews only, not for one nation only or exclusively; but for man (Mark ii. 27). He gave it by divine authority an application for all mankind—for high and low, rich and poor, for employers of labour and for labourers, for postmen and guards, for tradesmen and their customers. What God has given, that let not man remove or take away. The day of rest, then, is binding on all Christian men in these our days. But if so—

(2) On what authority is the first day of the week substituted for the seventh as a day to be kept holy to the Lord? In the first place, the essence of the commandment is not that any particular day should be hallowed, but that the seventh day—one portion of time in seven, should be kept for holy rest. In the lapse of ages, it is thought, an error has crept into the calendar, and that our first day of the week is the true day of the Edenic observance. However that may be, it is certain that the early Christians began to observe the first day as the day of Sabbath rest. It is not clear when they ceased to observe the seventh-day Sabbath; but it is certain that the Lord rose on the first day of the week, that the Holy Ghost fell on the first day, that the early Christians met on that day for public worship and for the celebration of the Holy Communion. Acts xx. 7; 1 Cor xv. 2, prove that; and Rev. i. 10, that it began thus early in St. John's day to be called "the Lord's-day."

It seems from these facts that the Lord of the Sabbath had Himself changed the day of the observance. It is morally certain that He must have done so. If not, is it conceivable that the apostles and early Christians would have ventured to alienate the Jews by repudiating the seventh and taking the first day of the week as the Christian's Sabbath, when the object clearly was to propitiate the Jews? The change of day was needful, as the one chief physical evidence of the resurrection. Every Sunday-Sabbath celebrated (and nearly 100,000 such days have occurred since the resurrection, 1800 years ago) the risen Saviour is called to mind, and the fact of His rising from the tomb visibly commemorated. The freethinker of the present day; nay, even philosophers, assert it that Christ only "seemed to die," and only "seemed to rise again," it being a spiritual death and a spiritual resurrection; but our Sabbath-Sundays are a standing protest against these false doctrines, and proclaim a real death and a real resurrection of the Son of God for sinners.

But, thirdly, does the change of the day from the seventh to the first day of the week throw any light upon our own Sunday observance? We think it does. For if on this day the Lord Jesus Christ rose from the dead, then He is appointed the Guardian of the Sabbath; He is "the Lord also of the Sabbath-day." The day, in short, is not, thank God, in our care and keeping. It is in His! A minor heir to a large and valuable estate is protected from the loss or injury of his estate by its being vested in a confidential, able trustee, so that the minor cannot injure or dissipate it during his minority. In regard to God's precious gift of the Sabbath to man, also, it is vested in the care and keeping of the Lord of the Sabbath for us, even in the case of our Elder Brother, who is its Lord and ours—its Guardian, capable of keeping it secure for us from all the attempts of those ready and willing enough to rob us of it. If the day is the Lord's, then, in truth, it belongs to Him by right. "The Son of Man," He said to the Jews—speaking of their two sacred things, the temple and the Sabbath—"is Lord also of the Sabbath-day." He only had the right to alter the day of its observance, and He only can abolish it. His direction to us, then, is a simple and clear one. We must "keep it holy," and for Him; doing on His day only those works which are pleasing to Him, works of mercy, of necessity, of love and charity. Isa. lviii. 13, 14, tells us in what spirit it should be observed. It must be regarded as a "delight, the holy of the Lord, honourable, a day in which to honour Him, doing not our ways, nor finding our own pleasures, nor speaking our own words." No other day, man-honoured, is to be exalted to the level of God's day, and the Lord's-day can never be safely lowered to the level of any of man's sacred days. The day is peculiarly the Lord's, and He is the Lord thereof.

Digitized by Google

So far the Rev. Talbot Greaves, whose sermon on Rev. i. 10, delivered at his Parish Church, Clifton, on April 12, 1885, is condensed in the above lines, and, we fear, greatly injured in the process. We reproduce it because the Sabbath is Israel's own God-given gift, entrusted to them, like the Bible and the Decalogue, for the Gentile nations of the earth; and we are glad to publish the notes of an eloquent, able discourse, which gives us many valuable hints and thoughts on subjects which are often controverted between Anglo-Israelites and their opponents. There are points on which we differ from the preacher. These, however, we do not press; only thankful that the subject is so forcibly and clearly handled, and satisfied that since the Sabbath is observed only by the Anglo-Saxon races according to God's will, the Decalogue, and the Sabbath law contained in it, meant for all the world, is, after all, only accepted by the British, who therefore, we argue (and we believe correctly), must be God's people Israel. The Lord's-day, in short, is accepted fully by the Lord's people Israel only; and we believe, therefore, that, like His Word, He only meant it primarily for them (Psa. cxlvii. 19, 20). He hath NOT dealt so with any nation as He hath dealt with Israel in reference to the Lord's-day.

ANOTHER NONCONFORMIST MINISTER ON THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

WE have received a letter from a Non-conforming minister, from which we may quote the following without breach of confidence. It will be seen that, being an Anglo-Israelite, he is a friend of the Church, and stoutly declares "it will ever be safe"! On another matter, too, our customary plan of "praise to Jehovah!" he is quite one with us. He wrote thus:—

"Don't let critics hinder you ending BANNER articles with 'Praise ye the Lord!' I find that the bright and cheerful side of the Identity hits the dull, blinking critic hard between the eyes, as fighters say! Don't be alarmed about the Church of England. It will ever be safe, though wonderfully reformed. I find Identity Nonconformists are better friends to it than many of its own ministers are! I expect to see on earth the 'one flock' of John x. 16. It is clearly coming, and in sight!"

So far our Nonconforming friend. It is a great satisfaction to ourselves to know that Nonconforming ministers are so friendly to the Establishment. As Anglo-Israelites, they are certain to see that the Church is God's appointment, united to Israel's State for beneficent purposes towards the nations of the earth. Every Nonconforming minister, therefore, whom we succeed in persuading of the truth of Our Identity is a friend gained to the Church; a hint that we hope our readers will take in their efforts to spread the knowledge of our glorious truth.

If our friend be right in respect to the close approach of the time when Christian men, both in and out of the Church, will become the "one flock" of John x. 16, then in truth the publication of Our Identity, and its acceptation by our race, must be at the doors; for the two events will certainly occur together! Ezek. xxxvii. 13, 14, tell us that! For then will the Spirit of God be poured out on our whole nation, and "we shall see eye to eye, when the Lord shall bring again Zion" (Isa. lii. 8, lx. 5; Zeph. iii. 9; Ezek. xi. 17—19; Jer. xxxii. 39).

AN ISRAELITISH CUSTOM.

By A. S.

AMONG the many customs mentioned by your correspondents traceable to the Israelitish origin of the British people, one very universal and of every day occurrence has been overlooked hitherto, so far as I have observed; I allude to that custom of throwing old shoes after the bride on her leaving her father's home, with her husband, for good. Few, I believe, have ever given a thought as to the origin of this really wonderful legacy, which is of great antiquity, and was part of the "use and wont" law observed by our forefathers thousands of years ago.

The authority for this is to be found in Ruth iv. 7—viz., "Now, this was the manner in former times in Israel concerning redeeming and concerning changing, for to confirm all things a man plucked off his shoe and gave it to his neighbour, and this was a testimony in Israel." The Vulgate has it more explicitly, I think—thus: "Now, this in former times was the manner in Israel between kinsmen, that if at any time one yielded his right to another, that the grant might be sure, the man put off his shoe and gave it to his neighbour; this was a testimony of cession of right in Israel."

The right of a father over his daughter having altogether ceased on her marriage, and she having become one with her husband, and quitting her paternal home for good, the throwing of the shoe is clearly the testimony of the father's "cession of right" in her as shown from the above "manner in Israel," and is a curious survival of a very interesting and ancient Israelitish custom.

Bedford, December 1, 1885.

Correspondence.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—I send you these few lines, knowing you will be glad to learn how the cause you have so much at heart is going on here. The British-Israel Association in Christchurch broke up about three years ago, from various causes, one of which was my leaving for the suburbs. However, you must not think the subject is dying out; in fact, it is making great progress in a quiet way. I have been doing my best to keep the glorious truth before the public, by lectures, writing to the different papers, conversations, and distributing books and tracts. After having exhausted the patience of editors until there was not a paper left in which I could advocate our cause, I hit upon the plan of asking the editor of the New Zealand Church News to allow me to discuss in that paper certain parts of Scripture as to the meaning of which there is a difference between our opponents and British-Israelites; but to do this without reference to our conclusions, in fact, as if there were no British-Israel theory at all.

There could be no good ground for refusing such a discussion in a religious paper; at the same time it would enable me to lead up to our subject in such a way that the readers would draw their own conclusions, which could only be favourable to it. This the editor very kindly has allowed me to do, and I have now written twelve letters; and, although I have invited discussion, not one answer has been attempted. A gentleman, who holds a prominent position here, told me they could not be answered. One clergyman said he was closely following them, and another said that through reading them he felt convinced that there was truth in our belief, though at one time he thought it only a "fad." The New Zealand Church News is read by all the clergy here, and I have reason to believe that they think more favourably of it than they did.

Digitized by Google

The Dean of Christchurch has questioned me several times on the subject, and another clergyman invited me to spend an evening with him to talk the matter over. He has since told me he believes it to be true.

That which seems to impress the clerical mind here favourably is the course events are taking in the world. For instance, when there was a fear of hostilities between England and Russia, I told my clergyman I could not see how it could be yet, from what I read in Ezekiel (by the way, I afterwards saw in the BANNER that you and one of your correspondents used almost the same words that I did). On matters turning out as I thought, he seemed greatly impressed. Another clergyman told me the other day he could clearly see from what is going on that Russia is the "Gog" of Ezekiel.

I will merely add that I have great hopes of the success of the glorious cause in this place. I forgot to say that 25 BANNERS are regularly sold in this place, and that I always place mine on the table of the Churchman's Club here.

With prayers for your success, I remain, dear Sir,

Yours truly, T. M. GEE.

Sydenham, near Christchurch, Canterbury, New Zealand,
November 4, 1885.

ISRAEL'S SCRIPTURE AND PRAYER UNION.

DURING the past month eight new members have been enrolled; the number of cards now issued is 1,384. All subscriptions for the Monthly Comments, by Philo-Israel, should in future be paid up to January, 1887, inclusive, as that number will complete the second series. The Comments for February and March will be forwarded together, according to the suggestion adopted last year.

The Card of Membership will be sent on receipt of three stamps. The Comments, prepared by Philo-Israel, will be sent post-free monthly for 1s. per annum; 2 copies, 1s. 6d.; 3 copies, 2s. The "Prayers for Daily Use," being a prayer for each day of the week, by Philo-Israel, are 1d., or 9d. per dozen; postage extra.

The prayer of the Union, as on the Card of Membership, may now be obtained printed in larger type. Price 1d. for three copies, post free; or 1s. per 100 for distribution.

The bound volume of Monthly Comments (first series) may be had in paper cover for 1s., postage 2d., or in cloth 1s. 9d., postage 3d. Address Miss J. Lawrence, Rosslyn, Upper Teddington, Middlesex.

J. LAWRENCE, Hon. Sec.

ANGLO-ISRAEL FREE DISTRIBUTION FUND.

THE following subscriptions, received from December 12 to January 15, are very thankfully acknowledged:—J. G., Reading, 10s.; H. W. and E. L., 5s.; Miss R., Berwick-on-Tweed, 1s.; J. P., Leicester, 1s. 6d.; Mrs. H., Loughborough, 7s.; H. G., Tooting, 1s.; J. L., Bridgnorth, 1s. 6d.; R. G., Yeovil, 1s.; Mrs. S., New Hampton, 2s. 3d.; A. D., Hampstead, 1s. 6d.; Mrs. C., Ryde, 5s.; A Widow's Mite, 6d.; Miss W., Hampstead, 6s.; Mrs. S., Clevedon, 5s.; Mrs. S., Manchester, 1s. 6d.; A. M. B., Bath, 10s.; Miss P., Topsham, 5s.; Mrs. M., Carshalton, 10s.; Mrs. C., Wellington, 4s.; J. H., Ripon, 5s.; C. B., S. Hayling, 6s.; R. R., British Guiana, 5s.; Mrs. N., Barnsbury, 1s. 6d.; Miss L., Malmesbury, 18s. 6d. Received by Miss E. M. Rush:—E. L., £1; L. L., £1; Mrs. M., 5s.; Lady J. E., £1; J. V., Brighton, 10s.; Mrs. S., Sandown, £1; E. J., Norton Woodseats, 5s.; Miss S., Tunbridge Wells, per Philo-Israel, 5s. Total £10 19s. 9d. Thanks are also due to an anonymous donor at Bath for 6 copies of "Simple Truth."

Amongst the letters received last month we find the following:—"I should be so glad if you could send me some more literature to give away in this district. I have been glad to see the eagerness of the people here to know more about Our Identity. I have been able to induce one more to take the BANNER weekly. I beg to enclose 1s. for the Free Distribution Fund, and only wish that it was in my power to send you £12 instead of 12 pence. I have not the means to give money, but I do give myself to labour in the cause, as I am sure it is the cause of God. I may say that I have laboured as a local preacher with the Wesleyans for fifteen years, and I must say, for the encouragement of yourself and other workers, that many parts of God's Word which I could not understand for years have now been made plain by a knowledge of Our Identity."

As if to emphasise this testimony, another sower writes:—"I have had a very nice conversation with a Wesleyan minister on Our Identity. I gave him some papers to read, and he admits that the Identity has cleared up the terrible muddle about Jews and Israelites, and made the Old Testament of infinite value."

Two sisters send us 5s., and "wish they could do more for the fund; having themselves derived so much light on God's Word from fourteen years' study of Our Identity with Israel, they wish others to know the same glorious truths."

Another evinces her interest in the work by sending 5s., wishing "it could have been treble the amount." We thank all these and other kind friends very much—both for the ready help and their wish "to do more."

A Sower in the North writes:—"The papers have been received, and I will do my best to dispose of them judiciously far and near. Many believe in this neighbourhood now, or are inclined to examine the question. I think one here to whom I have lent the BANNER will now take it in. Some of the pamphlets you have now sent are new to me and very good. I return you many thanks for them. I enclose small papers in letters to friends at a distance."

Another says:—"I am pleased to tell you the literature is still very readily accepted, but few care to go any farther than to convince themselves. I wish we could find more willing to work in the cause."

The following is from a letter received by Miss E. M. Rush from one of our Sowers with the Field Force at Kosheh, Egypt, recently engaged with the rebels. He says:—"I think some of the men will now be convinced of our being the chosen of God; some of them must have felt His presence with us in our engagement with the enemy, as they were pouring the bullets amongst us, and there were only three officers wounded, and in truth it surprised us all to see so few injured. . . . May God bless our noble cause, and more so your work."

Nearly 140 BANNERS are still sent out weekly, besides which, Miss E. M. Rush has forwarded 38 packets to the following places, from 1 to 4 to each:—Banff, Caterham, Devonport, Dover, Lee, London, and suburbs; Netley, Sheffield, Southwold, Stirling, Pau, Malta, Suakim, Wady Halfa, Kosheh, Assouan, Egypt; Secunderabad and Morar Gwalior; Fort Curtis, Zululand; Pietermaritzburg and Port Nolloth, Natal; Barbadoes and Toronto. Literature has also been sent to Berwick-on-Tweed, Birkenhead, East Charleton, Leicester, Manchester, N. Hayling, Portsmouth, Reading, West Coke, Launceston, Tasmania; Auckland, New Zealand, and George Town, British Guiana.

J. LAWRENCE, Treasurer.

Contributions to the Fund will be very gratefully received by the Treasurer, Miss J. Lawrence, Rosslyn, Upper Teddington, Middlesex; or by the Hon. Sec., Miss E. M. Rush, 103, Burnt Ash-road, Lee, London, S.E.

BRISTOL AND CLIFTON ISRAEL'S IDENTIFICATION ASSOCIATION.

THE Treasurer in account with the above Association for the year ended December 31, 1885:—

	£	s.	d.		£	s.	d.
Cash in hand, Jan. 1, 1885	10	0	0½	Expenses of Deputations	5	15	0
Subscriptions and Donations	13	16	6	Sundries and Advertising	6	19	11
Collections by Mrs. Sherwill	3	15	0	Subscription to Metropolitan Association as Affiliation Fee ...	1	1	0
Sale of "Eurêka" ...	0	4	6	Hire of Rooms for Lectures	14	4	0
Collections at the Meetings	19	10	11	Books purchased ...	0	10	6
				Messrs. Chillcott, for Printing, &c. ...	10	16	0
				By Balance for New Year	8	0	6½
	£47	6	11½		£47	6	11½

Audited and found correct, C. G. ASHWIN, M.A.

January, 1886.

THE Lecture on Wednesday Feb. 3 at the Metropolitan Anglo-Israel Association's Rooms, will be delivered by Douglas A. Onslow, Esq. The subject is "Israel His Dominion."

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed: — "Philo-Israel," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

SUBSCRIPTIONS £ s. d.

Annual Subscription for one copy weekly (including the Twelve Double Numbers) postfree - 0 7 6
Two Copies (including Double Numbers) - - 0 13 6
Three Copies ,, ,, ,, ,, - 1 0 4
Four Copies ,, ,, ,, ,, - 1 5 6
Six Copies ,, ,, ,, ,, - 1 16 4

Post Office Orders to be made payable at the head office, St. Martin's-le-grand. London, to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C., and W. H. GUEST & Co. 29, Paternoster-row, London.

The Editor cannot undertake to return rejected MSS. unless stamps for the purpose be sent. Parties requiring an answer should enclose a stamp.

Contents Bills and Show Cards may be obtained on application to the Publishers.

Advertisements should be sent to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

Prepaid Advertisements are inserted at the rate of 30 words for 1s. 4d.

METROPOLITAN ANGLO-ISRAEL ASSOCIATION, Palace Chambers, 9, Bridge-st., Westminster. President:
The RIGHT HON. VISCOUNT FOLKESTONE, M.P.

THE BIBLE READINGS

Will be continued EVERY TUESDAY AFTERNOON during February from 3 till 5.

On WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 3, 1886,
A Lecture will be delivered (D.V.) at Seven o'clock, by
DOUGLAS A. ONSLOW, Esq., J.P.
SUBJECT:—"ISRAEL HIS DOMINION."
All are earnestly invited to these Meetings.
JOSEPH JAS. SHRUBSOLE, Hon. Secretary.

PUBLISHED BY ROBT. BANKS & SON,
RACQUET COURT, FLEET STREET, E.C.

WORKS BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

The Geography of the Gates. With Map and six full page, and one double-page, Illustrations, printed on plate paper. 208 pages, in handsome cloth, gilt Price 3s. 6d., post free 3s. 10d.

An Elementary Digest or Sketch of the Chief Facts and Teachings of the Great Pyramid of Egypt. Adapted to the Unlearned and Unscientific. 56 pages, Illustrated with Diagrams, price 4d., post free 5d. 10th Thousand.

Our Identity with the House of Israel. Price 4d. Reprinted from "Clifton Chronicle Letters"

Philo-Israel's Leaflets. Four pages Crown 8vo. Price 1s. 6d. per 100, postage 2d. No. 1.—"The Identity of the British with Lost Israel." 2.—"The Glory of God." 3.—An Address to British Seamen. 4.—An Address to British Soldiers. No. 5.—The Communion of the Body and Blood of Our Lord Jesus Christ Viewed in the Light of Our Identity. 6.—The Bible and the Jew. 7.—The Jewish People. 8.—Lo-Ammi; or, the Gentilisation of Ten-Tribed Israel. 9.—The Atonement. 10.—Is Our Identity Evangelical, or Non-Evangelical in its Tendency? No. 11.—Cui Bono? No. 12.—The "Thoughts" of God Towards Israel, Judah, and the Gentile Nations. 13.—The Teutonic Theory—Is It True? 14.—An Address to the Police Force of Great Britain. 15.—An Address to Israel's Missionaries and Their Supporters. 16.—The One Seed, Christ. 17.—An Address to Israel's Electors. Price 1s. 6d. per 100.

A Resume of the Scriptural Argument, proving the Identity of the British Race with the Lost Ten Tribes. Price 1d.; 6s. per 100. New edition now ready.

London: Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street.

PRICE FIVE SHILLINGS.

"Freemasonry from the Great Pyramid of Ancient Times."

How formed among the rulers and skilled craftsmen to perpetuate an order of succession, passed along by the ancient Khasdim, Khesed, Trustworthy (or modern Freemasonry) through the land of Media by the Chaldees to the chosen people of Israel, and travelled as they travelled, dispensing their usages and customs among the earlier Anglo-Saxons. With illustrations shewing the parts of the interior of the Pyramid to be removed, disclosing the long-hidden chambers, developing further research.

To be had of the Author, T. Holland, 2, Charles-street, Rutland Gate; Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-st., E.C; and Guest, Hayworth & Co., 29, Paternoster-row.

A Thousand of the first edition sold in a few weeks for Great Britain, Ireland, Egypt, Natal, India, and America.

ISRAEL'S WORLD:

Origin and Destiny of British Race, Colonies, and Empire; according to Scripture, History, and Signs of Our Times.

BY REV. HENRY ROE.

Price 2d., post free 2½d. R. Banks & Son, Racquet-court

Also by the same Author. "Consecration," 4d.; "Going to Africa," 1s.; "Fernando Po Mission," 1s.; "West African Scenes." 2s. E. Stock, 52, Paternoster-row, London, E.C. Rev. H. Roe, St. Ives, Cornwall.

PRICE ONE SHILLING, POST FREE 1s. 1d.

Best edition on toned paper, cloth boards, gilt edges, &c., price 2s. 6d.

Bible Lessons and Reflections.

BY ROBERT GAIRDNER, OF KILMARNOCK, N.B.

"Mr. Gairdner has given us in his book a series of Bible lessons, with his own reflections added thereto, and though he has been very cautious in the latter, and has not committed himself too broadly, he has plainly let it be seen that he is an Anglo-Israelite by conviction, and that the Scriptures which he quotes at length and extensively throughout his book, are meant to teach Our Identity and God's faithfulness, from first to last, to His promises to 'Abraham and His seed for ever.'"—Banner of Israel.
London: R. Banks & Son, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C

EDWARD HINE'S PUBLICATIONS.

FORTY-SEVEN IDENTIFICATIONS, 6d.
COMING GLORIES, 6d.
FLASHES OF LIGHT, 6d.
OXFORD WRONG, 4d.
ANGLO-SAXON RIDDLE, 2d.

Penny extra per post. Above bound in handsome vol., LOST ISRAEL FOUND, 3s. 6d. POST FREE, 3s. 9d. LEAFLET No. 1, 1s. per 100, of ISAAC LOVELAND, Shoreham, Sevenoaks; GUEST, HAYWORTH, & Co., 29, Paternoster Row, E.C.

SEE FIFTY REASONS WHY THE ANGLO-SAXONS ARE THE LOST TEN TRIBES. Price 6d., post free 7d.

The Land of Espousals.
The Testimony of Language.
The Transfer of the Kingdom from Judah to Israel.
"Shiloh:" Its Interpretation.
Ireland not Missioned from Rome
Israel and Judah Distinct.
Israel's Blindness.
The Standard Goes to Israel.
Our Royal Standard.

R. Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

LUNG OWBRIDGE'S TONIC
LUNG LUNG TONIC; TONIC
LUNG THE MIGHTY HEALER. TONIC
LUNG Save Your Lives by Taking TONIC
LUNG OWBRIDGE'S LUNG TONIC. TONIC
LUNG It has a power over diseases hitherto un- TONIC
LUNG known in Medicine. TONIC
LUNG Are you at all Weak-chested, or inclined TONIC
LUNG to be Consumptive, with just a touch of TONIC
LUNG Cough now and then? TONIC
LUNG "Try this Wonderful Medicine." The TONIC
LUNG Cough and Weakness will disappear as if by TONIC
LUNG magic, and you will feel a strength and TONIC
LUNG power you never had before. TONIC
LUNG HAVE YOU A COUGH? TONIC
LUNG A DOSE WILL RELIEVE IT. TONIC
LUNG HAVE YOU A COLD? TONIC
LUNG A DOSE AT BEDTIME WILL TONIC
LUNG REMOVE IT. TONIC
LUNG Bronchitis and Asthma it relieves instantly TONIC
LUNG The Spasms of Coughing so dreadful in TONIC
LUNG Whooping Cough become less with each dose TONIC
LUNG of the medicine. — TONIC
LUNG Prepared by W. T. OWBRIDGE, Chemist, Hull TONIC
LUNG Sold in Bottles 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d. & TONIC
LUNG 11s. by all Chemists and Patent Medicine TONIC
LUNG Vendors. Wholesale all London and Provin- TONIC
LUNG cial Houses. TONIC

PAINLESS DENTISTRY.

MR. J. SHIPLEY SLIPPER, R.D.S.
SURGEON DENTIST
ARTIFICIAL TEETH.

37, HIGH HOLBORN,
(Directly Opposite Chancery Lane)
LONDON, W.C.

By a combination of two of his latest inventions, Mr. J Shipley Slipper, Surgeon Dentist, Hon. Dental Surgeon to the School for the Sons of Congregational Ministers, Caterham, is enabled to fit artificial teeth without extracting loose teeth or stumps. These Teeth are life-like in appearance, and can be adjusted without any injurious wires from 3s. 6d per tooth, and from 20s. a complete set (guaranteed)

Repairs whilst waiting at a trifling cost. All cases guaranteed. Consultation and every information FREE DAILY

From 9 a.m. to 7 p.m., Saturdays till 3 p.m., at 37, High Holborn, London, W.C

Is as much a Curative for Dyspepsia, (Indigestion, Liver Complaint, and Kidney Diseases, as Bread for Hunger, or Water for Thirst.

Cures Coated Tongue, Dizzy Head, Bilious Vomit, Stomach Miseries Agonies after Food, Accidental Indigestion, Chronic Dyspepsia, and a Hundred other Disagreeable and Painful Symptoms. "Gordon's Extract," Two Shillings, at all Chemists.

A CASE.

They said that he was dying. I watched him day and night.
I fancied every moment the spirit would take flight.
His life was hanging merely upon the faintest breath.
Physicians told me, sadly, it was the approach of death.
But a dear friend I cherish a medicine famed did bring:
He soon began to flourish, to bloom as flowers in Spring.
It was "Gordon's splendid Extract," which I now gladly bless,
Restoring life and health to him; to me true happiness.

WANTED SITUATION. Professionally understands cultivation of land, fruits, plants, &c., road making. Well read on the Identity. Have had good experience. No objection to Syria or Egypt. Apply, BANNER OF ISRAEL Office.

Health Aids
Health Aids
Health Aids
Health Aids

Write for this valuable little Book.
50 YEARS RECORD of Facts, Principles, and Discoveries Relating to the Improvement and Preservation of Human Life on Earth. By Dr. Samuel Birley, M.D. Ph.D. Articles 1, 2, 3, and 4, complete in book form, post free 2 stamps—
GORDON I. MURRAY & Co.,
33, CASTLE ST., HOLBORN, LONDON

THE BRITISH ISRAELITES;

Or, Evidences of our Hebrew Origin, gathered from History, Genealogy, Philology, and Heathen Customs. To which is added the Scriptural Testimony of Prophecy Compared with Existing Facts, Answers to Objections, and a Lecture on the Great Pyramid.

By LIEUT.-COLONEL H. W. J. SENIOR. 1st Bengal Infantry.

"We can safely recommend it as an excellent guide to the learned and an invaluable mine of wealth to the Anglo-Israelite controversialist. We hope all our readers will secure a copy, and have it often in their hands.—Banner of Israel
With Illustrations, cloth gilt, 178 pp., 3s. 6d. BAGSTER & SONS, LMTD., 15, PATERNOSTER ROW, E.C

Printed for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C. PUBLISHED BY GUEST, HAYWORTH, & Co., 29, PATERNOSTER-ROW, WEDNESDAY, FEB. 3, 1886. [All rights reserved.

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."

(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India.)

"And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the Forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS of the EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. X., No. 476. Entered at Stationers' Hall.] WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 10, 1886. PRICE ONE PENNY.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
The Opening of Her Majesty's Eleventh Parliament	61
The Impending Eastern "Conflagration"	62
New Testament Notes. By J. G. Taylor.—Part XVII	63
The Dominion of the World by the English-speaking Race	63
"Old England's Sea Kings"	65
The British Empire, Federation, and Foreign Affairs.—Part II.	66
Extract from Sermon Preached by the Rev. Alex. Maclaren, D.D., of Manchester	67
Correspondence	67

THE OPENING OF HER MAJESTY'S ELEVENTH PARLIAMENT.

THE historical event which took place on January 21, 1886, when Her Majesty in person opened her Eleventh Parliament deserves mention in these pages. They mark an advance in Israel's representative character in her Commons House of Parliament, which the Sovereign did well and wisely to honour with her presence. The day was wretched in the extreme. The cold and sleet and miserable state of the streets, however, did not damp the ardour and the loyalty of her subjects. They appeared in vast multitudes to honour the Queen, and to prove to her how true the heart of this Hebrew people beats to the monarchy of these realms. The Queen's Speech was full of deeply-interesting Identity matter, which deserves a few words of notice in these columns.

It recorded, first, the welcome news that Israel is at peace with all the great Powers of the earth. Next, there was the satisfactory fact that the relations between Russian Gog and this country, which the Liberal Government left in the most critical condition last summer, have become for the time friendly and peaceful.

The "Queen's ally," the Ameer, is satisfied. Russia is content, and peace reigns on the Afghan North-west frontier.

The Eastern Question, as respects the Bulgarian dispute, is quieting down in the manner the late Government desired. Eastern Roumelia will probably remain as it wishes, under the rule of the Prince of Bulgaria, and the essential rights of the Sultan will be respected.

In Egypt the co-operation of the Sultan, who is the Suzerain, has been secured for British action, and, therefore, our position now in that land is a legal one, with which the nations of Europe have no right to meddle. Israel's hold on Egypt is thereby strengthened.

Burmah, much to our nation's regret and disappointment, has had to be incorporated with Israel's Empire. We did not want it or desire it. But God's will was more powerful than that of politicians and statesmen, and the annexation has been carried out. Theebaw is a pensioner in India, and Burmah is now wholly British. The thin, red line has gone round it, as it was bound to do, according to the prophecies.

A long-standing dispute with the French regarding the Newfoundland fisheries has been settled favourably, and the Ministry claim a triumph thereabout.

Whatever commercial rights Germany has acquired in the Caroline Islands from the Spanish nation, those same we have, by agreement, obtained; another success to be placed to the credit of Lord Salisbury's Administration.

So far the successes. There are matters for regret. First, trade is no better. Distress among our own people is very severe; and agriculture is also as badly off. Then Ireland is now, as ever, in a terrible state. But the Government will never let her have as she wishes, an independent parliament. "The legislative union" must and shall be maintained, and the hands of Government must be strengthened to enable them to deal with the increase of crime and for the protection of the loyal subjects of the Queen in Ireland. These are the salient points of the Queen's Speech, and they teach us some Identity lessons which are of interest to believers in our origin. It proves that Russian Gog has taken up a position favourable for an attack on the Heathen Empire of Israel, and having secured it, has made a truce for the time being with his future enemy till his opportunity shall have arrived.

In regard to the Eastern Question, men are saying, "Peace, peace," when in truth there is no peace. They desire no further complications, and vainly imagine that since for the moment there seems a lull the fear of a general conflagration is subsiding. They do not reflect that the Turkish empire is tottering to its fall, and that Russia and the other powers must soon be engaged in the deadly struggle for the spoils; the last word being, "Who is to have Constantinople?"

In regard to Egypt, the Queen's Speech bears testimony that our hand grasps the prize still, and that we are clinging to the pretext of the Suzerain's co-operation to give ourselves a legal title to remain occupants of the soil.

The message as to Burmah tells an Israelitish tale. The Gate of Rangoon has done its work, and has given Israel the country beyond—a land as large as France—according to the prophecies. Upper Burmah is in the hand of Israel, and she has already begun to govern it after the manner of the race, and will subdue the people to the glory of the Lord and of His Christ. Burmah is the purchase of the Cross and must be brought to Christ. What other race but Israel can teach the people of the great salvation or give them the Word of life?

Digitized by Google

The successes in the Caroline Islands and the Newfoundland Fisheries are gratifying proofs that God is blessing our Government and is giving us power and prestige among the nations, as He promised He would to Israel.

So far the matters for congratulation. Do the gloomier parts of the Queen's Speech give us cause to doubt Our Identity? Far from that! The distress in trade and agriculture now existing are, we think, means to an end God desires—namely, the emigration of His people, so that they may, driven by distress, go forth and occupy the "desolate heritages" where our colonies are situated, and thus people and dominate the globe. Our race here are too many for the land, and the distress in commerce and agriculture is intensifying the national trouble. There is only one remedy—one the colonies are desirous to see carried into operation. The emigration of our surplus population to the colonies which want our bone and sinew, presents the only cure for all our ills, and will serve to strengthen our Empire beyond sea—that Greater Britain which is crying out for population to fill up their boundless, vacant spaces.

Then there is Ireland—that open sore of our country at the present time. Poor, priest-ridden, wilful, unhappy Ireland; which, not knowing what she wants, imagines she can soon become rich and powerful and happy, separated from Great Britain, wallowing the while in her Roman Catholicism and enmity to the Son of God. Vain hope! Israel's Queen, Government, and people are "resolutely opposed to any disturbance of the fundamental law" that binds the two countries together legislatively and otherwise, and for her own good they have firmly resolved to deny to Ireland her foolish wish. God's Word speaks of "the Isles of the West" as the domicile of Israel, and no disloyal Parnellite will be permitted to sunder the two islands God has put under the sceptre of the House of David, reigning over His people Israel. Consequently the Government must seek, and is sure to obtain from the new Parliament "all the necessary powers to enable it to cope with the growing evils of organised intimidation" and "boycotting," so sadly rife just now in parts of Ireland.

Such is the commencement of the labours of the new Parliament of Israel—one which represents for the first time, the whole nation. Its action will be watched with interest and some anxiety by the country. But of one thing we may be quite sure, God will guide all its proceedings, and the result will be His glory and the final good of His people Israel, His chosen ones (1 Chron. xvi. 13).

THE IMPENDING EASTERN "CONFLAGRATION."

STATESMEN are striving, struggling, nay, agonising for peace; but it seems all their efforts are likely to prove vain, and that what The Times persists in calling "the conflagration" impending in "Eastern Europe," is nearer to us at the moment we write than most men think. Servia and Bulgaria will not come to terms, and seem willing to defy the power of "United (?) Europe," which commands them to disarm and keep the peace. But it was the provoking conduct of Greece, just now, which alarmed the European Powers. She seemed to have lost her head, and to have resolved that Europe should be set ablaze rather than that her own petty schemes and desires should not be carried into effect. "The state of Eastern Europe," said The Times on January 25, "grows daily more menacing." The Greek Premier being called on by Sir Horace Rumbold, the British Minister at Athens, to disarm and to desist from attempts to attack Turkey by sea, under the penalty that if he refused to obey, the British fleet should be sent to the Greek waters, declined to give the required engagement, but, on the contrary, sent the Greek fleet to sea next morning under sealed orders! These movements are symptoms of the spirit now abroad in Eastern Europe, and tell us that the great "earthquake" woe is not far off, and the conflagration, consequent thereon, at hand. The fear at present, as expressed by The Times leader, is not, however, so much because of "reckless acts of naval provocation, as by reason of attempts to excite risings beyond the Turkish frontier, involving the whole of Macedonia, and re-opening the Eastern Question in its fullest extent."

We see, then, what the Eastern Question really is! It is nothing less than the coming repartition of the territory of the Turkish Empire, when that effete Power suddenly collapses, and all Eastern Europe begins its struggles, in company with Russia, Austria, Germany, Italy, and perhaps France, to acquire as much of the spoils as a succession of bloody wars will give them each. The last two words in those commotions will be, "Who will have Constantinople?" and "Who will have the holy places?" Russia has set her heart on both; the first, because it is "the Gate of her House;" and the last, because it is the central country of the world, commanding the trade-routes from Western Europe to Eastern Asia, to India, to China, to Australasia, and to Southern, Western, and Central Africa. Russia, possessed of Constantinople and Palestine, would needs be then the Mistress of the world, and her presence there, in power by land and sea, would seal the fate of the British Empire. But the British are Israel, God's Ten-Tribed House of Joseph. To them God has given for themselves, for Judah and Manasseh, the whole of the land of the inheritance, with all the appurtenances thereof; and it is, therefore, impossible that Russia can touch them to keep and hold them. The "Gate" too, Constantinople, passes, by another promise, to British-Israel; and the Russians cannot and must not have that door of their own premises, because, to humble and lower them, God, 4,000 years ago, declared that Israel should have "the Gate of his enemies" (Gen. xxii. 17). The Russians are obviously destined to be the enemies of the British in the last days, the bone of contention being the dominion of the world, to which both nations aspire; Israel, because it is her destiny, and God made her for it; Russia, because, Satan-led, her object is to supplant the people of the Lord and to take their heritage. The Times bewails the probability of Lord Salisbury's retirement from the Government at this crisis of Europe's fate and ours, as it deems "his steady hand" at the helm of foreign affairs needful for the safety of the State at home, and "his retirement at this moment would be felt throughout Europe as a weakening of the concert of the great Powers, and of the forces working for the maintenance of international tranquillity." This very consideration leads us to fear and anticipate that it may be part of God's plan just now to precipitate the great "conflagration," by causing Lord Salisbury and the Conservative party to retire, to make room once more for Mr. Gladstone or some other Liberal ruler whose policy, different from Lord Salisbury's, will let loose the wild passions of the enemies of Turkey in respect to the Eastern Question, and bring on commotions in Ireland which will chain us to our home affairs, what time the "earthquake woe" spends its awful force "on yonder ill-consolidated Europe." The change of Government, too, seems needed to teach the agricultural voter at home that the promise of the famous "three acres and a cow" cannot by any means be kept, and so lead the bucolic mind to see that the franchise was given to its class, not for selfish, but for patriotic purposes; to give good Government and prosperity to the Empire at large, but not to benefit only its own miserable self. Nothing short of experience, it appears to us, will teach the counties that its late verdict was a mistake. But God has, we see, arranged, by means of that very mistake, to work out His purposes in respect to the Eastern Question, as well as regards the one nearer home, in Ireland.

Digitized by Google

NEW TESTAMENT NOTES.

By J. G. Taylor.

(Concluded from page 57).

PART XVII.

Two Mistakes.

From the foregoing it will be gleaned that where we diverge from those who so freely traduce us is upon the question as to whether the prophecies concerning Israel should have a literal or a spiritual interpretation, or, to be more liberal, whether they should have a literal application or not. Perhaps sufficient has already been said to convince the unprejudiced that the spiritual hypothesis is untenable. But, in conclusion, it may be submitted that there are a couple of points on which the spiritualisers are obviously astray. One is as to what constitutes a "spiritual fulfilment." Strictly speaking, a spiritual fulfilment is an impossible circumstance. What we may do, and what is constantly done, is to derive spiritual lessons from literal events, but the spiritualists are a great distance in advance of this, for they wish to derive spiritual injunctions from what never happened.

Let us put the case plainly. We spiritualise the captivity of Israel in Egypt. We spiritualise the preparations for, and celebration of, the Passover. We spiritualise the Land of Promise, and the journeyings of Israel through the wilderness to win it. But we could not do so if these countries were imaginary spots, and the various incidents had not veritably occurred. If, instead of subjugating Palestine, the Israelites had been repulsed and annihilated, where would the spiritual lesson appear? The lesson would be that God cannot, or does not, keep His engagements. Prior to building spiritual maxims on the acquisition of Canaan, or extracting spiritual instruction from it, the acquisition of Canaan must be an accomplished fact; yet there are multitudes who see nothing preposterous in spiritualising the final and future acquisition of Canaan. In a word, the spiritual depends for its significance on the literal. Just as there is a moral to every fable, there is a spiritual precept to be deduced from every historical act in Scripture, but those who contend for the spiritual apart from the literal are contending, as it were, for the moral without the fable.

The other misconception springs from overlooking this, that if prophecy fails to meet with a literal fulfilment it fails of its object. The function of prophecy mainly is to attest the inspiration of the prophet and, as a natural corollary, the existence of the Deity who inspired him. It is held that the fulfilment of prophecy vindicates the truth of the Biblical record, and no sane person will deny the cogency of such reasoning, but it is equally transparent that the non-fulfilment of prophecy would evince its falsity. A spiritual fulfilment, be it ever so shadowy or mystical, might satisfy the spiritually discerned, but prophecy is largely for those who are not, and nothing less than a visible, tangible execution of it will drive them from their scruples. Consequently, we find God challenging the heathen idols, "Produce your cause, saith the Lord. Let them bring them forth and shew us what shall happen; shew the things that are to come hereafter, that we may know that ye are gods. Who hath declared from the beginning that we may know, and beforetime that we may say, He is righteous?" (Isa. xli.). "Who as I shall call, and shall declare it, and set in order for me since I appointed the ancient people? And the things that are coming and shall come, let them shew unto them" (xliv.). "Let all the nations be gathered together, and let the people be assembled; who among them can declare this and shew us former things? Let them bring forth their witnesses that they may be justified; or let them hear and say, It is truth. I have declared, and have saved, and I have shewed." And then to Israel He proclaims, "Therefore, ye are My witnesses that I am God."

Israel—the embodiment of prophecy, and the living evidence of its faithfulness—is the divinely-equipped antidote for modern doubt. With Ephraim-Israel, as with a flash of lightning, will God illuminate the sacred scroll, and constrain the most sceptical to confess it is truth, or stand condemned in the estimation of the world. And if the aim of prophecy is thus to destroy infidelity, and establish the authenticity of revelation, those who would repress or detract from its literal character are doing what is in their power to thwart the very purpose for which it was framed.

THE DOMINATION OF THE WORLD BY THE ENGLISH-SPEAKING RACE.

The dominion of the world is destined for the Anglo-Saxon, and the language of the world is certainly to be English. We hope our opponents do not consider these sentiments are the offspring of our "Jingo" proclivities, and that they stamp our views as calculated to puff up our nation, and thus evidence their earth-born character. On the contrary, we believe we are simply enunciating facts when we declare that the world is destined for the Anglo-Saxon, and that the language of the world is fast becoming that of the dominant race located in these "Isles of the West." If we can prove these assertions we shall have laid the foundation for a claim which we make thereon that the people thus destined to world-wide dominion must be God's people Israel, His saints; and that the English is the language which God declares He will use when "He turns to the peoples a pure language, that they may all call upon the name of the Lord, and serve Him with one consent" (Zeph. iii. 9, R.V.).

According to the Word of God, the dominion of the world is to be Israel's; for in Dan. vii. 27, R.V., we read, "The kingdom, and the dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High. His kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey Him."

Who these saints of Jehovah are is manifest from Psalm cxlviii. 14, R.V., where it is stated—

> "And He hath lifted up the horn of His people,
> The praise of all His saints;
> Even the children of Israel, a people near unto Him.
> Praise ye the Lord!"

It is clear, then, that the domination of the whole earth and all its kingdoms is reserved for God's saints, who are the children of Israel, a people near unto Him (praise the Lord!), and their language is to be the one God will bless to enable all "the company of nations" of Anglo-Saxon origin (His people) "to call upon His name with one consent."

Such is God's determination. How can we show that facts are pointing in the same direction, and that able men of the most trustworthy character are unanimous in the present times in declaring that the British race is the one destined for universal domination, the world-wide universal language being the language that race uses—namely, the English. Our first witness shall be an unexceptional one—the Viceroy of India, Lord Dufferin, a man all parties delight to trust and honour. Our next shall be an American gentleman—Mr. Underwood, a literary man and visitor to our shores, who on St. Andrew's day made a speech at Glasgow, reported in the Scotsman of Dec. 1. That speech, with Lord Dufferin's, presents us with two specimens of "blind evidence of our Hebrew origin," which are surely unrivalled of their kind, and must attract attention. They prove that, in the estimation of these authorities, the dominant language of the world is going to be the English, and the dominant race that which speaks that tongue. Let us hear his lordship first. He was speaking at the Mayo College at Ajmere, in North India, on November 8, 1885, when addressing the native chiefs and surrounding gentry, he said, inter alia:—

Digitized by Google

And I would impress upon you the great desirability of your becoming thorough masters of the English language. In doing so I will not particularly insist on the obvious advantages of your acquaintance with a tongue so rich and varied in its literature, and through which you can make yourselves acquainted at first hand with the ideas of some of the greatest men who ever lived, as well of the latest results of modern philosophic thought and scientific research. I would rather remind you of the practical benefits which a due prosecution of your studies in this direction will confer on you. English is the official language of the Supreme Government under which you live, and of books which deal with public affairs, the domestic administration of the general interests of your country, and it will be in continual use; indeed, I may say an absolute necessity to you in positions which you may be called upon to fill. The keen-witted inhabitants of many other parts of India have fully appreciated this fact, and all their energies have consequently been devoted to the acquisition of English. As a consequence, many of them speak and write it with an eloquence and fluency beyond all praise. Now, I trust those I am addressing have sufficient self-respect to take sufficient pride in their province not to wish it to fall behind other component parts of the empire. In this particular, therefore, again I say, let it be one of the principal objects of your ambition, while within these walls, to acquire the English language. Already in the councils of Providence the edict has gone forth that English should be the language chiefly prevalent upon God's earth. Within another hundred years it has been calculated that the English-speaking races of the world will number upwards of a thousand millions. Under such circumstances it would indeed be a disgrace if any of her Majesty's subjects in India, with any pretensions to belong to the educated classes, should remain ignorant of it.

Lord Dufferin, we see, knows that our race has the blessing of enormous increase, and that consequently in a hundred years from this time our Anglo-Saxon race will number upwards of 1,000,000,000 of souls! The language, too, of this multitudinous race, he admits, "will be the one chiefly prevalent upon God's earth!" The language must follow the race, and therefore we see that with numbers which will then nearly equal the entire population of the planet to-day, the British race will ere long prevail on the globe, as their language is sure to do. But the race which "prevails with God and man" is the race of "Israel," as Gen. xxxii. 28 shows; and the nation which Lord Dufferin declares is marked out for this high Israelitish honour, being the English or British people, is proved by his Lordship's "blind evidence" to be exhibiting another of those signs by which we may know they are God's people, His chosen ones, the head and not the tail, above only and not beneath among the nations.

We now refer to our second witness, the American speaker at the banquet in Glasgow on Nov. 30. The report of the proceedings was to the following effect:—

GLASGOW.

Last night the thirty-first anniversary banquet of the Glasgow St. Andrew's Society was given in M'Lean's Hotel of that city, where a company of about a hundred assembled. The chair was occupied by Mr. John Watson, of Earnock, the President of the Society; and ex-Lord Provost Ure and Colonel Smith, 1st Lanark Rifles, acted as croupiers. Among the other gentlemen present were Mr. Underwood, United States Consul; Colonel Turner, Cameronians; Sheriff Birnie, Preceptor Wilson, Lieutenants Hinshaw and Clark, Rev. Mr. Johnstone, Shettleston, and others. After the usual toasts, the Chairman gave "The Glasgow St. Andrew's Society," remarking that Scotsmen continued to progress at home and to make their mark abroad. It seemed to him that at no time had Scotsmen had greater reason to be proud of their country and its people. (Cheers.) During the past fifty years vast strides had been made in Scottish agriculture, manufactures, and social life. Of course, there was still a percentage of indolent and ignorant in the land, but they, as true-hearted Scotsmen, looked forward to the day

"When man to man the world o'er Shall brithers be for 'a that."

(Cheers.) Mr. Frank Gibb Dougall asked them to drink to "The Sheriffs of the County," and Sheriff Birnie replied. Preceptor Wilson proposed "Our American Cousins," observing that their prosperity and our prosperity were really one. (Cheers.) It afforded him pleasure to couple the toast with Mr. Underwood, a gentleman whom to know was to honour and respect. The friend of Emerson, Lowell, Whittier, and Longfellow, and himself one of the foremost literary men in America, he came among them as a stranger, but he had already made many friends, and they hoped, when he returned to his native land, he would always have a kindly recollection of his sojourn in Scotland. (Cheers.) Mr. Underwood, who was loudly cheered, spoke of the familiarity of the American people with English, and especially Scotch, literature, and of the good done by men who went from the old country carrying something of their learning into remote districts, for which great credit was due, as much, perhaps, as in sending missionaries to the heathen. (Cheers and laughter.) Did they ever think, he proceeded to ask, of the tremendous fact of the solidarity of the people speaking the English tongue? Did they ever think what it meant for humanity that a majority of Englishmen took possession of America, and consequently gave the language to that country? The Germans learned English. The wild Irish learned English. (Laughter.) The French learned English, and the Italians learned English, English was the national speech. (Cheers) There were fifty-five millions of people, and for them the official proclamations were all in the English tongue. It was an astounding fact that English was also the speech in the West Indian Islands, the coast of China, South Africa, Australia, and all the British dependencies, so that the language was encompassing the world. If that could go on, and if one step more could come—if the barriers called national should no longer stand up to make divisions among men who spoke the same language, and had the same ideas and the same feelings, and if all stood together, then he said, with no boast and with no menace, that the English race would dominate the world, and that in the right way, setting them an example and compelling them to follow it. (Loud cheers.) The other toasts were "The Clergy," "The Ladies," "Kindred Societies," "The Chairman," "The Croupiers."

Mr. Underwood need have no fears! The British, being Israel, are sure to "go on," and they and the Americans will eventually become one people, because, as Ephraim and Manasseh, they are destined to unite and return with the other Tribes to the Land of the Inheritance, to enjoy their own separate portions of that land as one people (Ezek. xxxvii. 22, and xlviii. 5, 6). The "domination" and "compulsion" towards the rest of the nations will surely follow too, because, as we have seen, "the kingdom and dominion and the greatness of the kingdoms under the whole heaven" are to be the possession of this favoured race! Israel, praise ye the Lord!

In conclusion, we quote a portion of a paper from The Times of Dec. 4, 1885, regarding "a new phase of Japanese progress," wherein are shown the mighty strides which the knowledge of English is making in Japan. The Japanese, it seems, are proposing to adopt the Roman characters for their written language, and this system is called the "Roma-ji Kai." The Times observes in respect to it as follows:—

The powerful influence which the Roma-ji Kai is likely to have on the establishment of English as the dominant foreign tongue in Japan is not its least important feature. There has long been a tendency in this direction, yet it needed stimulating. Many years ago the Japanese Government purposed making English the language of diplomatic intercourse, and began by writing despatches in very good English to the British Legation; but were effectually snubbed for their pains by a refusal to receive communications in any language but Japanese. Since then, French has taken the vacant place. Notwithstanding this, and in spite also of the disfavour we have brought upon ourselves by past persistence in an obstructive policy, there is no great reason to complain of the extent to which our language, literature, science, and material products and appliances have already permeated Japan. Germany here as also in many other places, has of late been making a bold effort for supremacy. German influence now prevails in the drafting of the new Constitution for Japan which is to come into effect in 1890; in the army, the supply of ordnance, the geological survey, and medical tuition. Japan's navy, on the other hand, is wholly on the English model; so are her railways, lighthouses, telegraphs, mint, postal service, and other public enterprises. Though her new Codes of Law are founded on those of France, an influential English Law Society was started in this metropolis only a few days ago. English is now taught, by decree of the State, in the primary schools throughout the country; and, generally, England fills the first place in the ranks and system of education; while in ships, machinery, and other material aids to development, she has distanced every competitor. To these facts may now be added the reasonable certainty that English will prevail in Japan over all other foreign tongues. Already, indeed, there has been started a creditable weekly journal in English, the work exclusively of Japanese. It should be mentioned, finally, that in the Roma-ji Kai the Mikado's Government are receiving at the hands of their people valuable support of the principle of action on which, as I pointed out in a recent letter, they have founded their hopes and plans for preserving the national integrity—the principle, namely, of never ceasing to tighten by every means in their power the bonds of sympathy and civilised progress which now attach them to Western countries. Perhaps nothing could be better calculated to subserve this principle than the new popular movement, which aims at creating the freest possible channel of intellectual intercourse between Japan and the Occident.

Digitized by Google

Here again the old story is repeated! Israel is in Japan, as elsewhere, "the head and not the tail, above only and not beneath all the nations of the earth," and her language taught in all the schools of Japan is evidently soon to become supreme there as elsewhere! (Deut. xxviii. 1, 13).

"OLD ENGLAND'S SEA KINGS."

THE following appeared in the Sydney Daily Telegraph of May 18, 1885, and we gladly transfer the lecture to our pages. The sentiments are capital blind evidence of Our Identity, and come to us from the antipodes to confirm our views as to the fact that war is often a blessing in God's hands, like the hurricane and earthquake, terrible in itself, but needful to purify the air or help mankind to further usefulness in the world. God's weapons of war and battle-axe are the House of Israel, as Jer. li. 20—23 proves, and we know that God requires as a witness to the nations that He is God, that last great and awful war, when Russian Gog shall strive to spoil His people of their inheritance in Palestine, but by war shall be met and destroyed (Ezek. xxxviii., xxxix.). Our extract is as follows:—

GERALD MASSEY'S VIEWS ON WAR.

At West's Academy last evening Mr. Gerald Massey delivered, for the second time in Sydney, his lecture on "Old England's Sea Kings," to a very large audience. When the lecture was first delivered here, in the old Masonic Hall, the war cloud which has recently passed over us had not arisen, and it was probably owing to the excitement caused by recent international complications that the audience last night evinced more than the ordinary interest which such a lecture, dealing with the fighting instincts of the British race, would be expected to excite, however admirably the subject might be treated, in times of perfect peace. Mr. Massey, in this lecture, traces much of the greatness and supremacy in arms for which the British race has been distinquished to the old Norse Sea Kings, who were the conquerors of the early Britons—those North-men who spread over the land and made their stamp upon the nation which has gained the reputation of being the greatest maritime Power in the world. Within the space at command it would be impossible to do justice to the argument of the distinguished lecturer, and it would be difficult to convey an accurate idea of the singular beauty and power of his language. Such a lecture must be either heard or read to be fully appreciated. Moreover, a short description of it has appeared already. But in view of the recent "war scare," as it has been called, Mr. Massey made some pertinent remarks, which will no doubt be read with interest, and therefore we reproduce them. Speaking on the war question, Mr. Massey said:—In many ways we need more of the sturdy strength of the old sea kings. Some good, peaceful people may not sympathise with me, for they are always thinking that the lion is about to lie down with the lamb, and that they are just going to catch hold of the tail of the Millennium. We all know how easy it is for the enthusiastic of heart and the narrow of mind to get lost in some abstract idea, and to see nothing but their own special bit of truth, but we must accept the facts of human life and human nature as they are if we are to deal with them. You bury the hatchet of war, but you find it again in the human heart. And so long as the war spirit will not be ignored on the side of wrong and tyranny, it cannot, must not, be ignored on the side of freedom and right. (Loud applause.) So long as there are dynasties in the world the only chance of the lamb lying down peacefully with the lion will be when he is inside of him after being eaten. (Laughter.) Nor is war, in itself, altogether that unredeemed evil that the peacemen would have us believe it to be. Righteous war has often quickened and kindled the life of a nation, like fire from heaven. The great, grim, terrible thing that towers up so vast and darkly as an obstacle in the path of progress! But it may become another Sinai, dreadful with the presence, but eloquent with the voice of the Almighty, speaking His new decrees to the world in thunder and lightning and the terror of tempests. We may depend upon it the world has not done with the need of battle-bravery yet. The sword is not superseded. We are not over anxious to draw the sword. As the Jingo song has it, "We don't want to fight," but we get all the more mad-angry if they force us to it. We must not let the Norse and the sea-king spirit die. . . . . We must not put away Thor, who has done so much hard work for us in the past. It may be that we shall again need his hammer to strike our battle-blow, and the hand that can wield it. Our England has fought three grand battles for the freedom of humanity; one under Elizabeth against Popish Spain; one under Cromwell against treacherous kingcraft; and a third against Napoleon Bonaparte. (Applause.) It may be that she has yet to fight a fourth decisive battle to maintain her place in the front rank of nations, as God's chosen race among the Gentiles, the old guard of freedom, in whom rests half the hopes of the world. (Applause.) Our national life may get so low and enervated as to need a tonic of cold steel. (Applause.) Battle often comes to us to beget a new heroic life. War has its exalting as well as its fearful aspects. That is good for us at all times—men or nations—which lifts us out of the ordinary limits of our own little self with the sea swell and wave of a larger sentiment. How the loafer and the larrikin, even, will rise up and straighten out to attain something of the hero's stature, and at least die like men who fall full length upon the battlefield. (Applause.) Let the peace men preach. I say never may the ancient bravery die. And when the tug comes—it may come now—I don't think they will find the old Norse spirit is quite dead. (Applause.) Mr. Gladstone may wax old and falter, and Lord Derby may want to stand still—as he always does (laughter); but they must move on, or move off and leave the way clear for others, whether in Egypt or New Guinea. (Applause.) Mr. Gladstone, for all his greatness, never seems to be able to take the hint when Providence gives him the wink, or to divine the language of that dull thunder-thud of the English heart, which is more eloquent than words. It takes him too long to know what we are silently meaning. . . . Even though England should fail, which is not likely, you (referring to the colonies) must go on. You must take to the sea before you can fulfil your destiny on this side of the world. It is for you to show that the old breed is not depraved. (Applause). But you may believe one of her dearest lovers, who believes in her as firmly as in his own immortality, when he tells you that they will wait long, and sit up late, who watch to see the setting sun of England go down in the darkness. (Loud applause). Her sunset on one side of the world is dawn upon the other. And that is typical of England's perennial renewal in her youth at home as in her colonies abroad. Moreover, scattered as we are around the world, the sign of danger to the mother shows at once that the children are all one. (Applause). No more politic or profitable note of true statesmanship has been struck in our time than that offer of help made by the colonies to the old country. (Loud applause). It is a hint or warning to the rest of the world that we are all one at heart, and whether you federate among yourselves, as I trust you will, beginning with your navy—whether this young England of the Southern seas will federate with us or not—whether you come over to us and help us to reform and change our House of Lords for a Federal Council or not, we shall go on trying to effect the work that has yet to be done. Our old England is neither dying, nor decrepid, nor decaying. (Hearty applause).

Digitized by Google

THE BRITISH EMPIRE, FEDERATION, AND FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

(Concluded from page 56).

PART II.

MR. J. COWEN, M.P., continued his address thus:—

"Character in a nation, as in a man, is strength. (Hear, hear.) And it is cumulative. The consciousness of a train of great achievements behind adds to its present force and dignity, and guarantees them for the future. Courage calls forth emulation. But assuming that the benefits of the Empire were less, can we dissolve the international partnership, and capriciously break up such a gigantic moral and physical apparatus? (Cries of 'No,' and cheers.) Consider what would happen if we did so. The colonies do not seek separation. They may quarrel with the Colonial Office, but they never quarrel with England. Their loyalty is more than a sentiment; it is a passion. Although strong as a part of a great confederation, they would be weak if alone. The colonies could not stand by themselves; and would either become the victims of civil contention, or the prey of some prowling Power ready to play the part of buccaneer or bully. (Hear, hear.) Our exit from India would mean Russian entrance, and, preparatory to that, a reign of loot and rapine. The native princes, like eels in a jar—(laughter)—would wriggle for ascendency; and, whoever secured it, humanity would suffer and civilisation be retarded. (Hear, hear.) South Africa would become the prize of slave-holding Boers, or a hunting-ground for marauding tribes. (Cheers.) The West Indies might be seized by the United States; but, before that was done, we would see a servile war, in which the dominant race-enmities would be revived, the hopes which England has nourished of redeeming the negroes would be blighted, and the sacrifices she has made so ungrudgingly for that purpose would be thrown away. (Hear, hear.) The shock of separation might shake Canada into the American Union, and our large Pacific possessions in a federation; but the smaller ones would fall into the covetous embraces of Germany and France. (Hear, hear.) Colonies with mixed and aboriginal populations could not be abandoned without positive cruelty. But this is not all. A desertion of our posts—as mediators or masters—would be followed by a demand for indemnity to those settlers whose position, assumed on our security, would no longer be tenable. It is estimated that the European investments in British dependencies—in loans, lands, railways, and public and private works—equals in amount our national debt. All this large sum would be endangered, and most of it lost, if we severed the connection. Can any colonist anticipate such a sacrifice with equanimity, or any patriot contemplate such a catastrophe with composure? (Cries of 'No,' and cheers.) No. We cannot without a direliction of duty, amounting to a crime, capriciously abandon the obligations of protection and control we have voluntarily assumed. Sympathy for the native races, whom we have rescued from barbarism—justice to our countrymen, who have staked their property and imperilled their lives on the faith of the imperial connection—security for the men who have driven the eagle to higher retreats, and the panther to deeper jungles; who have converted swamp, morass, and wilderness into scenes radiant with contentment; and who have lessened the misery at home by creating markets abroad—devotion to the regenerating civilisation, which robes men in the nobler raiment of rectitude and moral principles, calls into exercise the highest capacities of the human soul, and opens up a boundless infinitude of resources—would all combine to brand us as infamous for such a wanton and selfish repudiation of our responsibility, as the demolition of the Empire would involve. (Loud cheers.) I appeal from Englishmen's interests to their duties; from their pockets to their consciences—(cheers)—from their epicurean timidity to their traditions of liberty; from ignoble ease to memories that will not die, and cannot be destroyed; against such sacrilege and cowardice. As we cannot abandon the empire, in what manner shall we govern it? How must we deal with our dependencies? and how with the nations with whom they bring us always into contact, often in competition, and sometimes in conflict? First, as to our dependencies. We must have a centre. Sovereignty must reside somewhere, and that sovereignty cannot be elsewhere than in England. (Cheers.) Nationality is not imagination only. It is a powerful bond of action. Like the mainspring of a watch, it sets the whole machinery in motion; like the heart, it causes the pulse of life to beat in the farthest extremities of the system. It is the soul which animates and exalts the whole brotherhood of associated men. This sentiment should be, and is, the link of life between England and her colonies. The less it is regulated, the more robust it will grow. The fullest freedom, compatible with union, is a specific alike for the relief of the mother country, the masculine well-being of the dependencies, and the vigorous integrity of the empire. (Hear, hear.) Along with absolute local liberty, give the colonists their proportionate share of imperial authority. Let them feel that the difference between the colonist and the citizen is a difference of distance, and not status or influence. England's greatness is their greatness; England's honour their honour; England's glory their glory. (Cheers.) They cannot separate themselves from her past history, nor her future fortunes. The ties of kindred, the instincts of race, and common tradition, are, and ever will be, the motive forces. In such a spirit of liberality, forbearance, and justice, we should rule the colonies; and, if we do, we will "grapple them to us with hoops of steel." (Cheers.) There is not time, nor is this the occasion, in which to indicate a method of federation. I am only preaching the principle. It is capable of embodiment, in a form that will promote unity, preserve liberty, foster local independence, and give strength and splendour to the British Empire. (Cheers.) Great power means many responsibilities, and a great empire means many wars. Out of the 16,000,000 of people in the colonies, about half are of British descent. In the other half, nearly every known race is represented. Most of this non-European population is in Africa and the West Indies. There are about 100,000 red Indians in Canada, who live partly on their own resources and partly by Government subsidies; and about 40,000 Maories. The Maories have the franchise, and send members to the New Zealand Parliament. Both in America, and in the Pacific, the natives are inoffensive, but they are rapidly disappearing. In South Africa and the West Indies, on the other hand, they thrive and multiply. One of the most gratifying results of English colonisation is the steady rise of the social position of the aborigines. In increasing numbers, they are becoming not only labourers, but skilled agriculturists, merchants, contractors, and professional men. The difficulties with them, and the disputes with those across the border who are allied to them by descent and creed, involves us in interminable embroilments. This is one of the penalties of empire. We have had only one European war since the treaty concluded at Vienna 70 years ago; but we have had 30 colonial wars during that period. It is impossible to calculate the combined cost of all these military operations, big and little, to the mother country and her dependencies; but it cannot have been less than £200,000,000, or an average of £3,000,000 a year. We cannot avoid frontier collisions, and we cannot save this outlay. Whenever civilised and savage, or semi-savage, people come in contact, friction first, and then fighting, are inevitable. (Hear, hear). But by respecting native susceptibilities, by honesty in our dealings, and by justice in our treatment of our unlettered neighbours and fellow subjects, we may minimise the disquietude and trouble. The colonies are not governed for our benefit alone, but for the treble benefit of settlers, aborigines, and the mother country. No nation has heretofore acted on this principle.

Digitized by Google

Other States have treated their colonies as spoils, and their inhabitants as slaves. Hence their failure. Unredeemed brute force has never led to permanent conquest. No inferior race ever displaced a superior one, except when the superior one had first become demoralised. Inferior races have swept over lands as scavengers—clearing the way for better tenants. They have never held what they won. The ultimate victory has always been for the fittest, and it will be so with England. So long, and so long only, as she shows herself fit and equal to the task, will she hold her own against the wild and warlike clans that converge on her every frontier, and threaten all her outposts. (Cheers.) England, up to the reign of Elizabeth, had only gone to war for kingly aggrandisement or renown. She then went for a principle—the solidarity of free states. There has seldom been a time when Europe has not been dominated by an autocrat. Forty years ago it was Russia, then it was France, now it is Germany. In Elizabeth's days it was Spain. Conceiving Europe's danger to be her own, England gallantly placed herself between the tyrant and his prey. The achievements of her statesmen, at that era, dwarf the feats of modern diplomatists; while her warriors inspired the awe of her enemies, and won the admiration of all ages. (Cheers.) England then emerged from an insular to an imperial position. The nation was alive in every fibre. Cromwell maintained the position with imperial imperiousness. He intimidated Holland, humiliated Spain, and twisted the supple Mazarin round his fingers. These nations were unfriendly to the rising power of England; but they swerved before the authority of the man who had coerced at once her aristocracy and her factions. (Cheers.) Political debauch succeeded political purity. Charles II. wiped out the record of English fame and influence by shameless dependence and corruption. (Hear, hear.) England's king became a pensioner of France, who had worked her way to the sway Spain had lost, and in her turn jeopardised the independence of Europe. Again England stood in the breach. William III. gave her freedom, and us a national debt. The historic policy was sustained by his predecessors. Another war trebled our debt, but secured the Hanoverian succession, and our North American colonies. Under the corrupt administration of Walpole, we kept tolerably clear of foreign entanglements; but while subjected to the inspiring pulsation of the two Pitts, England became Continental arbitress. There was not a cannon fired in Europe that we did not demand to know the reason why. (Cheers.) . . . . . Let us bold to every State, whether powerful or weak, friendly but firm language, and observe a courteous, temperate, but unequivocal course of conduct. (Hear, hear.) We gain nothing by trying to conciliate those who wish to intimidate. (Hear, hear, and laughter.) Do not let us mistake cowardice for prudence. The white feather has often been dabbled in blood. If our rights are infringed, our interests imperilled, our honour outraged, address the offenders in the memorable words of Lord Dalhousie:—'I want peace; I have laboured for peace; but if you are bent upon war, war you shall have, and with a vengeance.' (Loud cheers.) I have described what the British Empire is, rapidly summarised its extent, character, and population, shown how it was built up, how it is held, and what is the cost of holding it; I have set out the obligations it entails, and the benefit it confers, and have adduced from them that interest, duty, and honour require us to keep it. (Hear, hear.) I have outlined the policy we have followed with our colonies, and with foreign Powers, and indicated where, and in what way, I agree and differ from it. I am for holding our own at all hazards—(hear, hear)—for not meddling in the internal affairs of free States; for not seeking fresh territory, but for resolutely asserting our rights, and discharging our duties—(cheers)—whatever the cost and sacrifice to our kindred and our kind. This is the source and sanction of progress. Nothing is sacred but justice, and nothing stable but right. Like the old Crusaders, we should wear on our breasts the symbols of our faith. I believe there lurks beneath the workman's jacket a spark of the saered fire which burned in British breasts when her heroic sons counted no odds in the fight for liberty. (Loud and prolonged cheering, the audience rising and continuing the enthusiasm for some time.)

EXTRACT FROM SERMON PREACHED BY THE REV. ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D., OF MANCHESTER,

ON SUNDAY MORNING, OCTOBER 25TH, 1885

"I am debtor both to the Greeks and to the barbarians; both to the wise and to the unwise"—Romans i. 14.

"MORE especially we English Christians are debtors, in many cases, to the world by benefits received. This great commercial, maritime, colonising nation, what does it not owe, what do your homes not owe, what does the business of Manchester not owe, to the heathen to whom you owe your Saviour? We have received our civilisation in its germs, our language, and much high thought, from that far-off East which is still the possession of the English Crown. To India we owe language and much subtle and lofty thinking; to the distant lands for which I plead we owe room for our expanded surplus population and our widespread empire. Many crimes have been done by England in winning it. 'As a nest thou hast gathered the riches of the nations, and there was none that peeped, or opened the mouth, or moved the wing.' But the skirts of England have been splashed with blood and filth many a time in the course of her winning her foreign empire. I do not mean to say that we condone our past national sins by using their fruits as an opportunity of preaching the Gospel, but I do say, 'who knoweth whether thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this?' And whether, in the great mysteries of Providence, it be not the case that England has received her widely-stretching empire, not only that her tongue and her literature may fly through the world, as it seems likely to do, nor only that Lancashire may be populous and prosperous, and that our trade may enrich ourselves and help to civilise the world, nor only that our higher justice and nobler laws may antiquate and supersede many a barbarous code, but also that you Christian men may have a door opened for you to discharge your debts by carrying to the world the Gospel of Jesus Christ. And so, by benefits received in the regions of language, thought, and truth, in material regions, in regard of our national dominion and prosperity, in regard of the trade of Manchester, which would look still gloomier than it does to-day if there were no India, no China, and no Congo, 'we are debtors' unto all men to carry them this Gospel."

Correspondence.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—In the issue of the BANNER dated May 6, which, through some inadvertence, has only recently reached me, appears an article on "Egypt's Place in the Bible," with reference to which will you allow me to make a few remarks?

Jerusalem was taken by the Arabs, or Saracens, in the Spring of the year 637, and 1,260 lunar years from this date, or rather from the completion of the conquest of Palestine, bring us down to 1860, the year of the Syrian massacres, not to 1882.

Again, the Hejira, or flight of Mohammed, took place on July 16, 622, or corrected for new style, July 18 of that year, and 1,260 solar years bring us to July 18, 1882, the day on which Lord Dufferin, ambassador at Constantinople, officially announced to the Porte the bombardment of Alexandria, and the determination of the English Government to intervene in the affairs of Egypt.

Yours truly, F. E. H.

India, November 6, 1885.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed: — "Philo-Israel," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

SUBSCRIPTIONS £ s. d.

Annual Subscription for one copy weekly (including the Twelve Double Numbers) post free - 0 7 6
Two Copies (including Double Numbers) - - 0 13 6
Three Copies " " " " - 1 0 4
Four Copies " " " " - 1 5 6
Six Copies " " " " - 1 16 4

Post Office Orders to be made payable at the head office, St. Martin's-le-grand, London, to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C., and W. H. GUEST & Co. 29, Paternoster-row, London.

The Editor cannot undertake to return rejected MSS. unless stamps for the purpose be sent. Parties requiring an answer should enclose a stamp.

Contents Bills and Show Cards may be obtained on application to the Publishers.

Advertisements should be sent to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

Prepaid Advertisements are inserted at the rate of 30 words for 1s. 4d.

PUBLISHED BY ROBT. BANKS & SON,
RACQUET COURT, FLEET STREET, E.C.

WORKS BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

The Geography of the Gates. With Map and six full page, and one double-page, Illustrations, printed on plate paper. 208 pages, in handsome cloth, gilt Price 3s. 6d., post free 3s. 10d.

An Elementary Digest or Sketch of the Chief Facts and Teachings of the Great Pyramid of Egypt. Adapted to the Unlearned and Unscientific. 56 pages, Illustrated with Diagrams, price 4d., post free 5d. 10th Thousand.

Our Identity with the House of Israel. Price 4d. Reprinted from "Clifton Chronicle Letters"

Philo-Israel's Leaflets. Four pages Crown 8vo. Price 1s. 6d. per 100, postage 2d. No. 1.—"The Identity of the British with Lost Israel." 2.—"The Glory of God." 3.—An Address to British Seamen. 4.—An Address to British Soldiers. No. 5.—The Communion of the Body and Blood of Our Lord Jesus Christ Viewed in the Light of Our Identity. 6.—The Bible and the Jew. 7.—The Jewish People. 8.—Lo-Ammi; or, the Gentilisation of Ten-Tribed Israel. 9.—The Atonement. 10.—Is Our Identity Evangelical, or Non-Evangelical in its Tendency? No. 11.—Cui Bono? No. 12.—The "Thoughts" of God Towards Israel, Judah, and the Gentile Nations. 13.—The Teutonic Theory—Is It True? 14.—An Address to the Police Force of Great Britain. 15.—An Address to Israel's Missionaries and Their Supporters. 16.—The One Seed, Christ. 17.—An Address to Israel's Electors. Price 1s. 6d. per 100.

A Resume of the Scriptural Argument, proving the Identity of the British Race with the Lost Ten Tribes. Price 1d.; 6s. per 100. New edition now ready.

The History of the House of Israel; How they were Lost, and How they were Found, Told for the Children. Price 6d., cloth 1s.; post free 7d. and 1s. 1d. Fourth Edition. Eleventh thousand.

The Sisters of Harrowdale Rectory. A Tale of Great Interest for Young People on the Identity of Lost Israel; with splendid double-page frontispiece, illustrating Harrowdale Rectory and Church. This book will be read by both young and old with the greatest interest. By Mrs. M. A. SEARSON. Price 2s. 6d. post free 2s. 9d.; handsome cloth, gilt, bevelled boards.

The Lost Ten Tribes. By the Rev. JOSEPH WILD, D.D., Pastor of Union Congregational Church, Brooklyn, New York. Price 3s., post free 3s. 3d. Handsome cloth, gilt, printed on toned paper and illustrated.

Identity Leaflets. No. 1.—ISRAEL'S MISSION (Psa. cxlvii. 19; Mark xvi. 15; John iii. 16). By V. M. Cox. No. 2.—HOPE FOR EGYPT (Isaiah xix. 20-25). By V. M. Cox. 100 copies post free for 1s.; 2s. 6d. per 1000.

"Banner" Series of Leaflets No. 1. "For Thine is the Kingdom, the Power, and the Glory." By Philo-Israel. No. 2.—The Spirit of Truth. By Philo-Israel. Price 1s. 3d. per 100, post free.

London: Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street.

THE SILVER MORN AND PROPHETIC VOICE. A Monthly Undenominational Magazine, for Testimony in Regard to the Second Advent of Christ, Prophetic Exposition, &c. Price 2d., post free for twelve months for 2s. 6d. R. Banks & Son, Racquet-court, E.C.

PRICE FIVE SHILLINGS.

"Freemasonry from the Great Pyramid of Ancient Times."

How formed among the rulers and skilled craftsmen to perpetuate an order of succession, passed along by the ancient Khaibm Khesed, Trustworthy (or modern Freemasonry) through the land of Media by the Chaldees to the chosen people of Israel, and travelled as they travelled, dispensing their usages and customs among the earlier Anglo-Saxons. With illustrations shewing the parts of the interior of the Pyramid to be removed, disclosing the long-hidden chambers, developing further research.

To be had of the Author, T. Holland, 2, Charles-street, Rutland Gate; Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-st., E.C.; and Guest, Hayworth & Co., 29, Paternoster-row

BOOKS FOR BIBLE STUDENTS.

Price 2s. 6d., post free (published at 4s.), cloth, gilt lettered

The Book of Hebrew Roots.

Showing the Ideal Meanings and Various Ramifications of the Principal Hebrew Radicals. By BURLINGTON B. WALE.

Large Folio, Hand Coloured, 12s. 6d., uncoloured, 6s. 6d., without Introduction, 3s., by post 3d. extra.

Modern Hieroglyphics of the Apocalypse and Great Pyramid.

Illustrated by Ten Plates, with explanations. By A WATCHER. To which is prefixed an introduction, showing how recent events in the Eastern Question and the Church have worked towards a fulfilment of the Theory suggested in this Book.

R. BANKS & SON Racquet-court, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

A Thousand of the first edition sold in a few weeks for Great Britain, Ireland, Egypt, Natal, India, and America.

ISRAEL'S WORLD:

Origin and Destiny of British Race, Colonies, and Empire; according to Scripture, History, and Signs of Our Times.

BY REV. HENRY ROE.

Price 2d., post free 2½d. R. Banks & Son, Racquet-court

Also by the same Author. "Consecration," 4d.; "Going to Africa," 1s.; "Fernando Po Mission," 1s.; "West African Scenes," 2s. E. Stock, 62, Paternoster-row, London, E.C. Rev. H. Roe, St. Ives, Cornwall.

Price 1s. per 100, assorted packets 1s. 2d.; 8s. 6d. per 1,000 (nett). Carriage free 4d. extra.

Thoughts for the British Folk.

Suggested by PHILO-ISRAEL.

No. 1.—Multitudinousness.
No. 2.—The Gates.
No. 3.—The Nation and Company of Nations.
No. 4.—British Wealth.
No. 5.—The Rulers Over Many Nations.
No. 6.—The Universal Creditor.
No. 7.—The Ever-Continuing British Monarchy.
No. 8.—The Scattered People at Home in Every Climate.
No. 9.—The Queen, Lords, and Commons.
No. 10.—The Unconquerable Nation.
No. 11.—The Fatally Destructive Race.
No. 12.—The Isolated Nation.
No. 13.—The Nation Which Belts the Earth.
No. 14.—The Emancipators of the Slave.
No. 15.—The Christian Nation.
No. 16.—The Ten Commandments.
No. 17.—The Asylum for the Foreign Refugee.
No. 18.—The Possessors of the "Sign."
No. 19.—The Universal Missionaries.
No. 20.—Testimony of the Book of Common Prayer.
No. 21.—Church and State, and also Disestablishment.
No. 22.—Our Poor Laws.
No. 23.—The Labour Question is an Identity Question.
No. 24.—Emigration.

London: R. Banks & Son, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C.

SEE FIFTY REASONS WHY THE ANGLO-SAXONS ARE THE LOST TEN TRIBES. Price 6d., post free 7d.
R. Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

LUNG OWBRIDGE'S TONIC
LUNG LUNG TONIC, TONIC
LUNG THE MIGHTY HEALER. TONIC
LUNG Save Your Lives by Taking TONIC
LUNG OWBRIDGE'S LUNG TONIC. TONIC
LUNG It has a power over diseases hitherto unknown in Medicine. TONIC
LUNG Are you at all Weak-chested, or inclined to be Consumptive, with just a touch of Cough now and then? TONIC
LUNG "Try this Wonderful Medicine." The TONIC
LUNG Cough and Weakness will disappear as if by magic, and you will feel a strength and power you never had before. TONIC
LUNG HAVE YOU A COUGH? TONIC
LUNG A DOSE WILL RELIEVE IT. TONIC
LUNG HAVE YOU A COLD? TONIC
LUNG A DOSE AT BEDTIME WILL TONIC
LUNG REMOVE IT. TONIC
LUNG Bronchitis and Asthma it relieves instantly TONIC
LUNG The Spasms of Coughing so dreadful in TONIC
LUNG Whooping Cough become less with each TONIC
LUNG dose of the medicine — TONIC
LUNG Prepared by W. T. OWBRIDGE, Chemist, Hull. TONIC
LUNG Sold in bottles 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s 6d. & TONIC
LUNG 11s. by all Chemists and Patent Medicine TONIC
LUNG Vendors. Wholesale all London and TONIC
LUNG Provincial Houses. TONIC

Now ready, price 6s., carriage paid to any part of the United Kingdom, and all countries in the Postal Union, for 8s. 6d.

THE NINTH VOLUME
OF
"THE BANNER OF ISRAEL."
Edited by PHILO-ISRAEL.

The Volumes are strongly bound in handsome blue cloth, gilt lettered, and form a most attractive present for a Library, Working Men's Institute, or Young Men's Christian Association.

CASES FOR BINDING VOL. IX.
1s. 6d. each.

BANNER OF ISRAEL READING CASES,

For holding the weekly Numbers or Monthly Parts of the BANNER OF ISRAEL, may now be had. 2s.; post free 2s. 1d.
ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

TO BE GIVEN AWAY.

10,000 Magnificent LEATHER PURSES to be presented ENTIRELY FREE OF CHARGE, expressly to Lady and Gentlemen readers of the "BANNER OF ISRAEL."

I have been fortunate in securing some thousands of elegantly-finished, superior City-made LEATHER PURSES, all guaranteed perfectly NEW GOODS, each Purse having four compartments for notes, for gold, for silver, and copper, and, being such a useful article, suitable for lady or gentlemen, I have decided to present one of these BEAUTIFUL LEATHER PURSES to every purchaser of a GOVERNMENT HEARTHRUG on the production of the Coupon below.

GOVERNMENT HEARTHRUGS.

TWO SHILLINGS EACH.

2s. SIX FEET LONG—THREE FEET WIDE. SELLING IN THOUSANDS. 2s.

THESE RUGS are SIX FEET LONG and THREE FT. WIDE—seventy-two inches by thirty-six. Each Rug is handsomely blended in six or seven different colours. The designs are exquisite, including Ferns, Oak Leaves, Flowers, Masonry, &c. They are suitable for Drawing-room, Bed-room, Dining-room, Parlour, or Kitchen. Thousands have been sold at 3s. 6d. each. In order that EVERY HOUSEHOLDER IN THE LAND may possess one of these Beautiful Rugs, I will send, at 2s. each: 2 for 3s. 10d.; 6 for 11s.

Be in time. Cut out the following coupon and send at once. All orders are taken in rotation as they arrive.

"Banner of Israel." Feb. 10, 1886.

FREE PRESENTATION COUPON.

GOVERNMENT HEARTHRUG AND PURSE COUPON.

On receipt of this Coupon and P. O. Order value 2s., or 26 stamps, I guarantee to forward one Government Hearthrug, 6 Feet Long, 3 Feet Wide, as Advertised above, and Present to every Purchaser a BEAUTIFUL LEATHER PURSE. Two, with two free presents, for P.O.O. 3s. 10d., or 50 stamps, six, with six free presents, P.O.O. 11s.

P. O. Orders to be made payable at Low Hill Branch to

J. WATTS,
113, BRUNSWICK ROAD, LIVERPOOL.

BAD LEGS.

CLARKSON'S CELERBATED SPECIFIC.—THE ONLY SURE REMEDY. Wonderful Cures throughout England. Testimonials (many from Ministers) sent. Easy Terms. Watch new great cures thought incurable!!! Case:—The Rev. J. B. Lee, late of Halstead, Essex, wrote: "A person at Manton, near Marlborough, Wilts, had a bad leg 30 years. He received immediate relief and a wonderful cure at little expense."—Address:—Dr Clarkson, Darley, Ripley, Yorks.

Health Aids — Write for this valuable little Book.
Health Aids — 50 YEARS RECORD of Facts, Principles, and Discoveries Relating to the Improvement and Preservation of Human Life on Earth. By Dr. Samuel Birley, M.D., Ph.D. Articles 1, 2, 3, and 4, complete in book form, post free 2 stamps—
Health Aids — GORDON I. MURRAY & Co.,
Health Aids — 33, CASTLE ST., HOLBORN, LONDON

Printed for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C. PUBLISHED BY GUEST, HAYWORTH, & Co., 29, PATERNOSTER-ROW, WEDNESDAY, FEB. 10, 1886. [All rights reserved.

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."

(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India.)

"And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the Forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS of the EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. X., No. 477. Entered at Stationers' Ha l·] WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 17, 1886. PRICE ONE PENNY.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
Perplexity	69
Israel and Greece—Another Sign of the Times. By W. S. Cavill	70
The Testimony of Mr. Stevenson A. Blackwood, C.B., and the Rev. F. F. Goe, that the British are Israel	71
Sowing the Seed. By E. M. Rush	72
"The Grand Old Book"	73
Love, and Trust, and Prayer	74
Correspondence	74

PERPLEXITY.

WE think no word in the English language so accurately describes our present national condition as the one we have placed at the head of this article—"perplexity." Our Lord, in Luke xxi. 25, stated that a mark of the latter part of the last days would be that there should be "signs in the sun and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations with perplexity, the sea and the waves roaring." Men's hearts, at home and abroad, "are failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth." Our own political affairs are at present in a disjointed and unhappy condition. The Conservative Cabinet, as was foreseen, was hurled from office on Tuesday, January 26, by a side issue on the Address. Mr. Jesse Collings' amendment regarding agricultural labourers' holdings was the ostensible lever used to uproot the Conservatives, while in the background the true object of the move was the Irish Question, including the legislative separation of Ireland from Great Britain, and the final disruption of the Empire, as the last card of the Parnellite faction, who have now the upper hand with Mr. Gladstone.

The feeling of all men who love their country is no doubt one of dire perplexity. "Where," they ask, "will these things end? What will be the issue of the career of Mr. Gladstone, who is now in the hands of Mr. C. Parnell and of the 80 Irish members?" The one aim in life of the latter is to make Ireland an independent nation, cut off from all connection with the sister isle, and with its vast majority of loyal subjects. The determination of these last is, in spite of Mr. Gladstone, to keep Ireland to its allegiance to the British throne, and never for a moment to yield to the traitors who demand, first, legislative separation, as a prelude to the complete rupture of the Empire, and the erection of an independent State in Ireland hostile to the British, but so close to their side as to make the position utterly intolerable to the latter. Verily, things are coming rapidly to the worst; and if it were not for Our Identity, its hopes and glorious promises, we should be in despair for our future national prospects. Even the Liberal Times seems torn to pieces with the perplexities of the situation, and plainly anticipates, as one of the possible results of the present momentous crisis, war. That journal, not long ago, remarked:—

> The country cannot be said to be in a happy state when it becomes in some sort a consolatory reflection that the Minister at the head of the Government cannot govern, but until we know a great deal more about Mr. Gladstone's intentions than we do at present, it must be held the most hopeful point in the situation that he has not much chance of carrying them out. His position would, of course, be simple if he could yield the implicit obedience demanded by Mr. Parnell. But, as Lord Cranbrook remarked yesterday, 250 votes are a still greater power in the House than 85, and implicit obedience to the Irish leader will at once reinforce the Opposition. Hence, although the position is very critical and dangerous, there is no need for the friends of the Empire to despair. Home Rule in any form yet suggested is a very big affair, so big, indeed, that it will be the fault of moderate Liberals and their Conservative allies if it is not proved impossible. Legislative separation is implied in all the schemes yet put forward, even when they ostensibly confine themselves to a transaction in land. No matter in what way it is arrived at, legislative separation means the creation of a hostile State on our shores, and of political complications which at some most inconvenient moment will plunge us into war. Against such a consummation every patriot is bound to fight with invincible determination, and, notwithstanding all the discouragements of the moment and the desertion of those whose leadership patriots had a right to expect, the fight may be undertaken with every hope of success.

We may indeed and in truth now realise that Ireland, with its Canaanite plagues to Israel, are "pricks in our eyes and thorns in our sides" (Num. xxxiii. 55). The sorrow present in our own mind, however, is that there is no man on our side who seems able enough or courageous enough to cope with the handful of traitorous Irishmen who, knowing what they want, deem that they are victorious already, and that they are within measurable distance of Home Rule and independence of the hated British connection. On the contrary, we have a man at the head of this nation—the beloved, we suppose, of the majority—who, in order to reach power, has given himself up to Mr. Parnell to be ruled and guided, but who, for the boon thus obtained, must pay a price, or attempt to pay it, which we believe this nation will never let him give at their expense.

"The legislative separation" will result in civil war, beyond question; also in the necessity which will at last be forced on us, to re-conquer Southern and Western Ireland, and to put that portion of the land under martial law. Meanwhile, the misery that Mr. Gladstone is preparing for our Irish fellow-subjects, and the sacrifices in blood and treasure we shall, on this side the water, have to pay as the ruinous consequence of his submission to Mr. Parnell, will, we suppose, at last teach our countrymen that, as in Egypt and the Soudan, as in India too, the policy of this wonderful statesman will be a lavishly expensive one, which seeking for peace precipitates war, and advocating retrenchment leads to enormous increase to the public burdens.

Digitized by Google

It falls now to Mr. Gladstone, in all human probability, to guide this nation through the troubles of the great earthquake woe, the incidence of which his policy abroad may very easily provoke; and it seems not unlikely that in order to enfeeble our race, and to prevent it taking part in those coming Eastern European troubles, the disturbed state of Irish politics (distinctly brought about also by Mr. Gladstone's acts), may be intended, in the providence of God, to chain us to our own home affairs, in literal fulfilment of the Lord's own injunction in Isa. xxvi. 20, 21, to His people Israel. He has bidden us there to "enter into our chambers, to shut our doors about us, and to hide ourselves for a little moment, until the indignation be overpast" in yonder European earth.

The miserable condition of our Irish fellow-subjects, and the rebellious action of some of their misguided numbers, may be God's method of preventing our emerging to take part in the continental commotions soon to burst upon the world; and it may be, too, His plan to chain us to our own chambers, our own doors or gates, what time the fire of His jealousy is devouring "all the earth" (Zeph. iii. 8). And yet, in all our perplexities, troubles, and material losses and disappointments, we have the consolation which no other nation possesses, for we are Israel! The God of Israel is our God, and we His people. He has us firmly grasped by our right hand; and He holds us, in these emergencies, by the right hand of His own righteousness (Isa. xli. 10, 13). He is guiding us, and though the way be dark and long, He has promised us in Isa. xlii. 16, that He will make "darkness light before us, and crooked things straight." "He will do these things to us," is His declaration; but He assures us that "Never, no never, will He leave us or forsake us" (Heb. xiii. 5). Therefore, even in our sad perplexities and sorrows, we may, because of Our Identity, nationally praise the Lord.

ISRAEL AND GREECE.—ANOTHER SIGN OF THE TIMES.

By W. S. Cavill.

How marvellous are the ways of our covenant God! Truly past finding out are the purposes of Jehovah, the God of Israel, which lie embedded, so to speak, in the nature and order even of the apparently common events of our national life. "Verily," we might exclaim with the prophet, "Thou art a God that hidest Thyself, O God of Israel, the Saviour" (Isa. xlv. 15). Such were the reflections which were at once in mind as I sighted the announcement which is just made, that British vessels are to be (or purposed to be) sent to Greek waters, for the purpose of coercing that people into inaction, and restraining them from pursuing those acts of folly to which the late Premier so forcibly drew attention, and expressed the hope that they would not commit. But the precise reasons for these reflections I wish to give as briefly as possible.

A passage of Holy Writ came to mind, which has a peculiarity in it that demands the event in order to give force to its application, perhaps more so than some of the texts with which we have become familiar. But as will be seen by comparison of the two versions, if we had only had the authorised copy before us, we should not so readily have marked the significance of the event itself. And this, by the way, seems to have formed part of the order of providence that, little by little, the hidden things of God become our joyous possessions—they are joined to the list of the things which are revealed, and in that case, as Moses declares, they "belong unto us, and to our children for ever" (Deut. xxix. 29).

The passage of primary reference is Zech. ix. 12, 13. The contrast of the two versions will be of especial interest.

Authorised.	Revised.
"Turn you to the stronghold, ye prisoners of hope; even to-day do I declare that I will render double unto thee; when I have bent Judah for Me, filled the bow with Ephraim, and raised up thy sons, O Zion, against thy sons, O Greece, and made thee as the sword of a mighty man."	"Turn you (or mar., return) to the stronghold, ye prisoners of hope; even to-day do I declare that I will render double unto thee. For I have bent Judah for Me, I have filled the bow with Ephraim; and I will stir up thy sons, O Zion, against thy sons, O Greece (mar., Javan), and will make thee as the sword of a mighty man."

The alteration of tense in the Revised Version makes a wide difference in the force and application of the passage in its relevancy to the events of the present time; and a careful consideration of the context will show that the passage has exclusive reference to the time of the return, in union, of the two houses of Israel and Judah. According to the Revised Version, the bending of Judah under the hand of God, whatever its fulness of meaning may be, and the filling of the bow with Ephraim are regarded as accomplished facts when the stirring up of Zion's sons against the sons of Greece is fully brought about. But may not the present movements be looked upon clearly as signs? For what have we before us in the facts of passing history? Have we not Judah hunted here and there, and made to feel daily that the lands in which she has chosen to settle are not to be regarded as her home? Only in the countries owned by Ephraim and Manasseh does she find rest for the sole of her foot; and even there she seems as a bird of passage, for as yet she knows not who her true friend is. Her heart is set on the land of her fathers; and how rejoiced will she be when she recognises our Sovereign to be (as we believe) the lineal descendant of David? And to what are we, Ephraim-Israel, hastening? Is it not to the federal union of the Mother Country with the outlying colonies and dependencies? Is it not to the presentation before the world of the British Empire—greater even now by far than its predecessors—in such a state of unity and compactness that the promise to Jacob, which passed to Ephraim, shall be verily accomplished: "A nation and a company of nations shall be of thee"? When this has been done, then truly will the bow have been filled with Ephraim. But the other event lies beyond this. And the antagonism uprising between Israel and Greece, though it may for the moment pass away, yet has its explanation in the consideration here named.

We have, however, to bear in mind that God declares that He will make a short work upon the earth, when He sets His hand to the consummation, and as these signs accumulate, day by day, the thoughtful Israelite will not let them pass without extracting from them both instruction and comfort. The nation may declare, "We see not our signs; there is no more any prophet; neither is there any among us that knoweth how long" (Psa. lxxiv. 9). Ephraim-Israel may declare, "Our hope is lost; we are clean cut off" (Ezek. xxxvii. 11), but it is for "the Lord's remembrancers" to perform their part (Isa. lxii. 6); and for them "that fear the Lord to speak often one to another," exercising the spirit of true enquiry into the grand yet solemn unfolding of divine purpose.

One word more. Expression has often been given to the view that a Liberal administration seemed necessary for the due carrying out of the divine decrees against Edom, whom we deem to be Turkey; and this inasmuch as the traditional Conservative policy would be to aim for the maintenance of Turkish power and influence. Following similar lines, we might regard the existence of a Conservative Ministry, as peculiarly fitted for fulfilling Israel's divinely fixed rôle in respect to Greece; and for this reason, that Gladstonian sympathy is with Greece, and consequently the coercive measures now proposed would presumably not find favour with a Liberal Cabinet. I refer to this more particularly to show how each political party has its own distinctive or allotted part to play; how each may be used, even against their will and traditions, for accomplishing divine purposes; and how rejoiced we should be in the reflection that Jehovah, the God of our fathers, holds the helm of state, and will assuredly, according to the determination declared of old, "guide us eventually into the haven where we would be" (Psa. cvii. 30, R.V.).

Digitized by Google

Norton Woodseats, Jan. 25, 1886.

THE TESTIMONY OF MR. STEVENSON A. BLACKWOOD, C.B., AND THE REV. F. F. GOE, THAT THE BRITISH ARE ISRAEL.

In the Church Missionary Intelligence for February, 1886, No. 122, there is published at pages 132 to 136 the report of two excellent speeches declared to have been powerful beyond expectation, made by Mr. Stevenson A. Blackwood, C.B., and the Rev. F. F. Goe on the subject of the February Simultaneous Meetings just held throughout the country. They were delivered at a Conference held at the Church Missionary House in Salisbury-square, E.C., on January 14, attended by about 150 clergymen and laymen from all parts of the country interested in the proposed meetings.

The salient point of Mr. Stevenson Blackwood's speech was an observation he repeated several times, that the movement and the response made to it was an indication that God's presence was with us as a Church, and with the C. M. Society, as such. "It seems to me," he said, "that the Committee of the Church Missionary Society have been imbued with special wisdom in this matter. The prayer of our Collect for this week, that we 'may both perceive and know what things we ought to do,' has, I think, been answered in this case; and to them, it seems to me, has been given the character of the men of Issachar: that they had 'understanding of the times,' and 'know what Israel ought to do' . . . . . And then, dear friends, if that be true we can indeed have full assurance of the Divine Presence. Need I remind you of the words spoken of old, for instance, to Moses: 'I will be with thy mouth and teach thee what thou shalt say;' to Joshua, 'Have not I commanded thee? Be strong, of a good courage, for the Lord thy God is with thee withersoever thou goest;' to Gideon, 'Go in this thy might: have not I sent thee? Surely I will be with thee.' Whenever God indicates our duty and clearly marks out the path of service, we shall have an unfailing assurance that He will be with us. I need only refer again to His last command: 'Go into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature: lo! I am with you alway, even unto the end of the age.' This, dear friends, is no fancy; it does not depend upon, or arise from our own feelings; it is no cunningly devised fable; it is a glorious, immutable fact. God is with us, Emmanuel, the Lord, is with us. And I feel that it is, in the second place, a most indispensable principle—or, rather, fact, for us to bear in mind—that if we are in sympathy with the Divine purpose we also have the assurance of the Divine Presence." These, and other remarks of the same character, were made by Mr. S. Blackwood, insisting on the fact that the Divine Presence was with this national movement, and with the Society which was originating the Simultaneous Meetings. To illustrate his claim and position he quoted the instances of God's presence with Moses, the Hebrew law-giver, of Joshua, the Hebrew military leader; and of Gideon, the illustrious deliverer of Israel. He shewed the parallel between their cases and that of the leaders in this national movement, which seeks to reach our whole people, to make them see their duty towards the entire heathen and Mahommedan world.

In reference to these statements we remark that God's Word is silent as to any promise of His Presence with any community save the Hebrew community, or any Church but the Hebrew Church, and those Churches and people in connection with Israel. God's presence was promised to the Israelitish race for ever in Exod. xxv. 8, xxix. 45, 46; Levit. xxvi. 12; Zech. ii. 10; Ezek. xxxvii. 27, xliii. 7, &c., and to the Hebrew Christian Church, quâ Church, in Matt. xxviii. 20. But never do we find in Old or New Testament that the Divine Presence is promised, save in connection with the Hebrew race or Church; and therefore, Mr. S. Blackwood being right in his facts, which no doubt he was, he thereby established by a chain of undoubted evidence that the British people, of whom the C. M. Society is decidedly representative, are indeed the people of Israel.

The Rev. F. F. Goe, on the other hand, gave some remarkable evidence in his speech, to the same or similar effect. He stated that the Church needs and receives three special blessings to qualify her for her work: 1st, mercy from God the Father; 2nd, enjoyment of the favour and peace of God the Son; and 3rd, the indwelling power of God the Holy Ghost, chasing away darkness, and producing within us a glorious Epiphany of the Lord and Saviour Christ. When the Church possesses these three great blessings (said Mr. Goe), then she is equipped for Missionary service. We may ask why it is that God bestowed upon His Church these three great blessings? This is the answer, "That Thy way may be known upon earth; Thy saving health among all nations." Here Mr. Goe, we see, quoted Psa. lxvii., which was clearly a Psalm of David or one of the Hebrew race, appropriating to themselves as a race those blessings Mr. Goe says belong to the Church of England, quâ Church. "God be merciful to us," said the Psalmist, "and bless us; and cause His face to shine upon us; that thy way may be known upon earth; thy saving health among all nations." Mr. Goe's argument is perfectly correct, no doubt; but his reference to the Psalm proves, if anything, that the British Church is an Israelite Church, or his quotation is a mistake. But Mr. Goe said many other remarkable things; take the following on page 135, "When we look around, what do we see? we see the Church of England not only a very powerful Christian organization, but by far the most powerful Christian organization in an Empire the like of which the world has never known before. No phenomenon like the Colonial Empire of Great Britain has ever been seen. There are at the present time, I believe, as many as nine millions of British people residing in the colonies, and it has been calculated that if the progress of emigration goes on during the next 100 years as it has of late the number will be—I forget how many to say—but very great indeed, enough to show what wonderful capabilities the Church of England must have as chief spiritual organization of such a wonderful Empire. If the Spirit of God were borne in upon the Church at home, and concurrently with the Church at home upon all our settlers and colonists, upon our merchants resident in those distant countries, especially in India; upon our officers and men in the Civil Service, and upon our soldiers and sailors; there would be an amount of missionary capability called forth which no other Church has the power of sending out to this great work. Therefore we have special cause at this time for praying that the capacity which the Church of England certainly possesses may be developed by the power of the Spirit of God in the great work of the Evangelization of the world."

Digitized by Google

So far the Rev. F. F. Goe. Our readers will recognise here BANNER sentiments and teaching without the need to alter a word. He looks on our Empire as phenomenal and unique, such as the world never saw before; and our Church as the great instrument in it, wanting only the outpouring of the Spirit (that which was promised to Israel in Joel ii. 28; Jer. xxxi. 33, 34, and Heb. viii. 10, 12), to give our race the power needed to blossom and bud and to fill the face of the world with evangelical fruit, to the glory of God and of His Christ. There is no doubt Mr. Goe is quite right. But he and Mr. Stevenson Blackwood are right only because this nation is Israel and blessed by God with the Colonial Empire, the Church, the Bible, and the outpouring of the Spirit, giving us a desire to spread the Gospel, and thus to make the February Simultaneous Meetings possible in these Islands, whereas they would be impossible in any other country on the Continent of Europe, because they do not belong to Israel. We rejoice to read the speeches of these two unconscious Anglo-Israelites, and reading them, praise the Lord! We call on all our readers too to praise His Holy name for the consolation they both, blindly but truly, bring to our race and nation.

SOWING THE SEED.

By E. M. RUSH.

SINCE last making public, under the above heading, some details of the work of the Free Distribution Fund, a special opportunity for making known Our Identity has been given to the Anglo-Israel public of which many availed themselves, and received assistance directly from the Fund. The General Election afforded this new way of making progress, and the timely issue of Philo-Israel's "Address to Israel's Electors" enabled it to be followed, special contributions having been kindly sent for the purpose; accordingly, this leaflet, with two or more suggestive little Identity papers, varying in their contents, were folded together, and mixed packets sent out in quantities to careful hands for distribution. There can be no doubt, that in this way, our claim to be Israel must have been brought, unexpectedly, before the eyes of many people who before were ignorant of the fact.

It seems right to refer thus particularly to what was done during the Election, in order to indicate a method of work in which all Anglo-Israelites can take part when such an occasion again presents itself for general and united effort, and also whenever a bye-Election gives opportunity for local work. Following this plan there is also a double gain, for while "Our Identity" is brought into notice, an earnest appeal is made to the conscience of the public to select God-fearing men as their Representatives in Parliament, an appeal which it is known only too well is required to be heeded, and a glance at the "Address" in question will show that it can be accepted by members of either of the great Political Parties in the State.

The Monthly Reports, published in THE BANNER, have shown that the general work of the Fund has gone on as usual, but some quotations from letters received will doubtless be welcome; many come to hand, all breathing the same earnest spirit, with thankful acknowledgment of the aid received, and with full recognition of the importance of the help the various Identity papers afford in the study of the Bible, but limited space will only allow reference to a few.

From Caterham:—"Thanks for the continued and increased supply of BANNERS and other literature, all of which I find useful in my work here, and am pleased to report a steady increase in interest, and a spirit of enquiry among some who read THE BANNER and other publications."

From Briton Ferry:—"Very many thanks for parcel. I take so great an interest in the cause of Anglo-Israelism, that when I see any opening to introduce the subject I am very thankful to avail myself of the opportunity. I have been thoroughly convinced of the 'heresy' of my past life in throwing cold water upon the Identity question, and am now trying to be a Paul, where, aforetime, I was a Saul."

From Toronto a correspondent sends glowing words of thanks for "much light on that subject, which has been to me, for many years, of prime importance; it is, in my estimation, far above all other subjects in its Divine significance, embracing, as it does, so many precious things."

From Barbadoes:—"Very many thanks for your goodly package. Bountiful as you are in your supplies, they are yet as a drop in the ocean, so glad and eager are our soldiers to receive these excellent papers."

In Malta our Sowers continue work, and according to the store of Seed in hand, the fleet, and vessels of various kinds touching at the island, receive supplies, and from there communication is kept up with many Identity believers in distant places.

On the Nile, proceeding to Wady Halfa, a Sower in the 1st Royal Berks Regiment wrote a most interesting letter:—"We stopped at Assouan a week, and had some very happy meetings in the school tent—there are some earnest workers in the South Stafford Regiment who would be only too pleased to get a few copies of the BANNER." (The name of one who should receive them was enclosed—BANNERS, and other papers, have been sent regularly since.) "I am so thankful to you for the BANNERS, and look for them every mail, it is so nice to have something to read about the wonderful works of the Lord our God; and many who are not on our side like to read them. I feel sure the Lord has sent us up here to do His bidding."

From Morar, Central India, come these words, which are significant:—"I had a nice conversation with one who has been reading our Identity literature ever since I have been in the station; he said, 'I have learned more about the Bible than ever I knew before, and searched it more since I began to read these papers (THE BANNER)."

From Trimulgherry, Deccan:—"I really do not know how to thank you for the weekly packet. Being thoroughly convinced of Our Identity, I have such a longing for the mail that I may devour THE BANNER OF ISRAEL, and I so long for every British soldier to see for himself what he really is. It requires a constant supply of your literature to leaven the great lump of prejudice and ignorance. I am very cautious into whose hands my papers fall, I make diligent enquiry first of the man's ability to understand, and then of his willingness to study the subject. I have gained a few earnest readers, to whom I would beg you to send weekly such papers as you deem necessary. There are two men who are in raptures over the papers. One says, 'It is so full of Scripture;' another could not get enough of them. Such a volume of Scripture is brought before them to prove the Identity, and their responsibility."

According to the above, eight names, with full address for each, were enclosed, but with great regret it must be stated, that only two of them can be supplied regularly, on account of the very heavy expense of the Indian postage, and the large demands upon the Fund; also of the actual impossibility of getting more work into the hours of each week, as these papers have only one pair of hands at their disposal; nevertheless, it is to be hoped, that as the value of, and need for, the Free Distribution Fund is more fully recognised, there will be additional workers, and we can but most earnestly hope that not one who now looks for supplies will ever be disappointed, and that the blessing of God will rest upon all that is accomplished.

Contributions to the Free Distribution Fund will be gratefully received by the Treasurer, Miss Lawrence, Rosslyn, Hampton-road, Upper Teddington; or by the Hon. Sec., Miss E. M. Rush, 103, Burnt Ash road, Lee, London, S.E.

MESSRS. BANKS & SON acknowledge with thanks the receipt of 10/- from Mrs. Sealy for BANNER Supplement Fund.

Digitized by Google

"THE GRAND OLD BOOK."

DR. WILLIAM HILLIER, the author of the Anti-Bradlaugh Lectures, lately published another pamphlet, entitled, "A Lecture for the Two Millions of New Electors," wherein he dealt eloquently with "The British Constitution, the Queen's Letter to Sagbua, the Prince of Wales on Theism and Freemasonry," and various other topics. Our object in noticing Dr. W. Hillier's lecture is to place before our readers his words on the subject of "The Grand Old Book," the British Bible. Some of his details are most interesting and striking, and cannot fail to be so regarded by our readers. What he adds, however, about the Bible as the foundation of our national greatness requires a word of explanation which we propose to offer when our friends have perused the lecturer's words. They are as follows:—

No doubt you have often heard that our gracious and religious Queen once sent a Bible to an African Prince, and a letter in which it was stated in so many words that the Bible was the source of England's greatness. Such words from England's Christian Queen have had a good effect on Her Majesty's subjects in all parts of her dominions. Infidels have tried, however, to destroy the beneficial effects of these words by declaring that the statement has no foundation in fact, and is nothing but a fable. The Royal letter is before me, and I will transfer a portion of it, so that you may be able to contradict the wicked assertions of Infidel, Radical, and Atheistical agitators.

II.—THE QUEEN'S LETTER.

The letter was written by the Right Hon. the Earl of Chichester, when President of the Church Missionary Society, by and with the special request and authority of the Queen of England, and runs, "The Queen and people of England are very glad to know that Sagbua and the chiefs think as they do upon the subject of commerce. But commerce alone will not make a nation great and happy, like England. England has become great and happy by the knowledge of the true God and Jesus Christ. The Queen is therefore very glad to hear that Sagbua and the chiefs have so kindly received the missionaries who carry with them the Word of God. In order to show how much the Queen values God's Word, she sends with this, as a present to Sagbua, a copy of this Word in two languages—one the Arabic, and the other English."

The Rev. Isaac Smith, a Church missionary in Abbeokuta, in the year 1849, had the honour and pleasure of presenting the two copies of the Holy Bible to the African Prince, Sagbua. He has been staying for a few days in this city with his co-worker in Abbeokuta, the Rev. Henry Townsend, and I heard from his own lips the account.

* * * * *

All honour to our noble Queen Victoria for such a true and bold confession of the fact! The "Grand Old Book" has made the Victorian era of English history the golden age of our honoured country. The history of our nation proves that in proportion as she has embraced the principles of the Bible, practised its precepts, and breathed its spirit, she has advanced in those things which have contributed to her strength and glory as mistress of the world. To-day England stands on the pinnacle of unparalleled dignity, of unequalled greatness, and looks down with a benignant smile upon the nations of the earth. Her commerce extends to every land; she collects the riches of every clime; and her manufacture is such that she is the workshop of the world. But her lofty position and distinguisned character must not be ascribed to the form of her Government, the wisdom of her legislators, the heroism of her Army, or the bravery of her Navy; these are but constituent parts of her greatness, not the cause. Her glory arises from the "Grand Old Book." Noble Queen! Most Gracious Sovereign! Your favourite Book is the foundation of our country's strength, the parent of our charities, the palladium of our Constitutional freedom, the bulwark of our morality, and the Divine safeguard of our peace, prosperity, and Throne. Blessed Bible! Prince of Books! Wave this Book above the thrones of tyranny, and they shall fall; above the temples of superstition, and they shall crumble; above the "Hall of Science," falsely so-called, and Bradlaughian Atheism shall disappear; above the House of Commons, and the flag of Secularism shall never be carried into the British Temple of Law, Order, and Godliness.

* * * * *

Nothing but a Revolution can destroy the Throne and the Houses of Parliament in this country, and nothing but the Bible can destroy or prevent a Revolution.

Oh, "Grand Old Book!" foundation of the British Constitution to Alfred the Great, the sword of State to Edward VI., and "The cause of England's greatness" to Victoria the Good.

By all means let Christians be aroused to throw greater energy into all departments of service, in and out of Parliament, always bearing in mind that as in the past, so in the future, the "Grand Old Book" must be the source of old England's greatness.

The Bible is the source of England's prosperity, and as long as she is guided by the teaching of that book the sun of her greatness will not set. But if we despise God's order, and let Infidels be our rulers in this nation, then we shall come to the beginning of the end of Britannia's glorious reign.

We do not deny that the Bible is the Book of books, and that the nearer we walk nationally to its holy precepts and commandments the better we shall please God and carry out His holy will. We fully agree, too, with the lecturer in all he says respecting the honour, and glory, and power, and greatness, and wealth of this country. We know as well as he does that she is "the head, and not the tail; above only, and not beneath" them all; also that "she blesses all nations," which is Dr. Hillier's meaning when he says that Great Britain "looks down with a benignant smile on the nations of the earth." We do not stop to point out to Dr. Hillier that these are the blessings God promised to Israel, and to that nation only. But we do desire to tell him that we do not find that such benedictions were bestowed on that happy race because they were the possessors and followers of this "Grand Old Book."

In respect to our own national selves to-day we have a fact or two to bring to Dr. Hillier's notice which perhaps he has not sufficiently considered. For 900 years after Augustine the monk's era this nation had not the Word of God, but was the willing servant of the Papacy. Yet during that very period of darkness and neglect of God's Word He gave this nation greatness, victory in foreign wars, civil and religious liberty to an extent unknown abroad, a free Constitution, fairly good laws, and at sundry times, such as in John Wycliffe's era, religious revivals introducing to their notice, with other benefits and blessings already theirs, that Book of books which a later age (the 16th century) gave them exclusively among the nations as their very own.

The Bible, then, was not the origin of the blessings of the British, but was one of many other blessings God gave that nation previously—a blessing bestowed later in time, after several others (Israelitish in their character) had already become their own. Let it be remembered further that the Word of God was promised by the Lord to Israel and Jacob only, and God declared that in giving that gift to them exclusively He had not so dealt with any nation (Psa. cxlvii. 19, 20). In that wondrous promise nothing was stated to show that because Israel was so gifted, the Word was therefore the procuring cause of all her other blessings. Rather it is clear that the Word is bestowed on His chosen people because of their relationship to the Divine Giver, and that the statutes and judgments of God follow the people of God, but cannot be of themselves the procuring cause of a single other blessing.

It is obvious, too, from Psa. cxlvii. 19, 20, that the British people must be Israel on Dr. Hillier's own showing. For since God declares that "He showeth His word unto Jacob, His statutes and His judgments unto Israel, and He hath not so dealt with any nation," He cannot now be showing us His Word, as the lecturer admits He is doing, unless we be His chosen people, since He is a true and faithful God, who promises and exactly performs what He has once declared He will do. The lecturer attributes to the possession of the Word of God all our country's strength, our charities, our Constitutional freedom, our morality, our peace, prosperity, and the safety of our throne. But this nation being Israel, as we have already shown, it cannot be proved from Scripture, and therefore must be rejected, as a fact, that these great blessings are ours because we have the Bible. Some of them we had before the Bible was given us of God. Our throne, for instance, is David's, and was preserved to Israel and guarded by God Himself in Ireland and Scotland long before this nation was a Christian and a Bible-loving people (1 Kings viii. 25; Jer. xxxiii. 17—26; 2 Sam. vii. 13—16).

Digitized by Google

Our country's strength, peace, and prosperity depend on our safe possession of the home and foreign Gates, also on our success in war, blessings God gave us in Gen. xxii. 17; Isa. lx. 11, and Isa. xli. 10—15, quite independently of the Bible. Our charities depend on our "power to get wealth," which God gave us in Deut. viii. 18, not because we were thereby to possess His Word, but because He meant by such charities that He would "establish His covenant that He sware unto our fathers as it is this day."

The source of "old England's" greatness and prosperity is the fact that we are His people Israel (Jer. xxxiii. 9), and the possession of the Word of God as "the literary heirloom of the British people" is only another sign that we are Israel, another among ten thousand gifts the Lord Jesus Christ has shed His precious blood in order that He might procure for us, to prove to the whole world that this nation is His redeemed people, His heritage, and inheritance. Israel, praise ye the Lord!

LOVE, AND TRUST, AND PRAYER.

In Psa. xviii. 1—3, we have a gradation of service towards the Lord. There is David's resolve to "love the Lord Jehovah" (ver. 1), then his resolve "to trust Him" (ver. 2), and, finally, the determination to call upon the Lord, in the confidence that "so" he would be saved from his enemies (ver. 3). The highest service is to love; yet if the will be set against the Lord-Jehovah, then there can be no power to force on love towards the Lord. But if we cannot love, we may trust Him who is "the Horn of our salvation." If faith, again, is weak, and love is cold, there is yet one thing all may do, and do acceptably. We may and can "cry to the Lord," who is worthy to be praised (ver. 3).

The application of this passage to the case of the true believer in the Lord Jesus Christ, is, of course, easy. It has, we are convinced, however, a direct reference to the national case of Ten-Tribed Israel. Her case is desperate. She is outcast and afflicted, yet the Lord has had mercy upon her. He is her Rock and Fortress, her Deliverer, her God, her Strength, her Buckler, the Horn of her salvation, her High Tower. God enjoins on Israel the duty of loving Him, of trusting Him, and, if these be presently unattainable, at least of crying to Him. "He will be inquired of by the House of Israel to do it for them" (Ezek. xxxvi. 37). Trust, or faith in Him, He requires (Heb. ii. 13), and love from His chosen ones He looks for. "My son, give Me thy heart" (Prov. xxiii. 26). Israel is nurtured and brought up in faith. Hosea ii. 20, declares it to be God's intention to betroth His Ten-Tribed wanderers unto Himself in faith or faithfulness, and then they shall know the Lord, a plain intimation that the restoration of that House to God's favour was to be under the Christian dispensation; but not before.

Such, too, is the testimony of Hosea i. 10, where the history of the House of Israel is epitomised thus: "Yet the number of the children of Israel shall be as the sand of the sea, which cannot be measured nor numbered. And it shall come to pass that in the place where it SHALL be said unto them, Ye are (Lo-Ammi) not My people; there it shall be said unto them, Ye are the sons of the living God;" or believers in the Lord Jesus Christ, as John i. 12 plainly declares of them.

We regard Psa. xviii. 1—3 as prophetic of the condition of the Ten Tribes in this our day of Christian light and national privilege. David, speaking by the Spirit of God, foresaw that Christian Ephraim-Israel would be known as the people who love the God of Israel and obey His commands; who trust, or have faith in Him as their Rock, Fortress, Deliverer, God, and Strength, and who not only love and trust Him, but call upon Jehovah's name in order to praise Him, asking Him for salvation. That the House of Joseph Christianised is meant by this allusion is clearly shown by such a passage as Jer. xxxi. 7, where Ephraim is called on to "sing with gladness for Jacob, and shout among the chief of the nations, Publish ye, praise ye, and say, O Lord, save Thy people, the remnant of Israel."

Here is Ephraim-Israel glorying in the Lord, just as Psa. xviii. 1—3 says she should be doing, trusting in Him, gladly obeying Him, calling on Him for salvation, and praising His glorious name! But how is it that Ephraim-Israel is thus specially selected for the glorious destiny of showing forth God's glory? St. Peter, in his first epistle, chap. i. 5, tells us. He addressed the strangers of the diaspora, or dispersion of Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia, who, it is admitted, and chapter ii. 9, 10, proves, were Ten-Tribed Israelites. The apostle declared that they were "kept" by the power of God through faith unto salvation, "ready to be revealed in the last time," pointing, we believe, not only to the spiritual salvation of the souls of faithful Israelites, but to the material, earthly, national restoration of the Ten-Tribed kingdom, since the salvation was not revealed in St. Peter's days; but was "ready to be revealed" in "the last days," or our modern times.

Theirs and ours is an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled, "reserved in heaven" now, where our King, the Lord Jesus, is, till such time as He descends to occupy the throne of David in Jerusalem, as its Heir. So will He transfer heaven to earth. Israel's standing, we have seen, is by faith, or trust; and St. Peter declares the same thing of the elect of the dispersion. They are kept, he declares, through, or by means of faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed, or made known and exhibited to the world, in these our last days. Our Identity, surely, was here in St. Peter's mind, as in the second chapter of the same epistle he declares these same faithful ones were God's Lo-Ammi and Lo-Ruhamah, henceforth to be known as His Ammi and Ruhamah, the old names in God's allegory given by Himself to His chosen ones of the House of Israel (Exod. iii. 7; Hosea i. 6—9; ii. 1).

Correspondence.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

Dear Philo-Israel,—It is about three years since I took the liberty of addressing a few lines to you. You were kind enough to note the receipt thereof in the Banner of Nov. 15, 1882, p. 486. The reason of my long silence was lack of news re "Our Identity." The reason for my breaking that silence is that I have a little cheering news to relate.

Six months ago I read a paper on the subject before a young men's literary club, connected with the Church which I attend. This is noted only because it is the first occasion Our Identity has been brought into notice even in such a semi-public way in this town. I send per book-post a copy of most of my paper. I might remark that I myself received some good from writing it. Up to that time I had a sort of leaning to what you call "the Teutonic theory"; or, rather, I will put it in this way: I had not been able clearly to see why Britain should be held to represent the whole Ten Tribes, and not Ephraim alone. When I came to reduce to writing and exactly define the reasons for the faith that is in me, I discovered that I must settle this point one way or the other. So I had to call a halt. But the doubt was soon dissipated, and I saw clear as noonday that as a nation were they cast out of their land, as a nation would they inherit Ephraim's peculiar blessings, and as a nation would they again be restored.

Digitized by Google

But it was not about myself that I took up my pen to write. I have far better news for you. I probably told you in my first letter that one of the three clergymen to whom I spoke and wrote showed a disposition to take up the subject. (The other two have never fulfilled their promise to write to me on it.) Shortly after he removed from this district. His successor, during the past winter, has been delivering a series of lectures on prophecy. I went to hear most of them—although not the Church I usually attend it is the same sect, Presbyterian—and soon discovered that his mind was not so trammelled by traditional teaching as, unfortunately, the bulk of our Presbyterian divines. So I thought I would try him with Our Identity: at the worst it could only be another refusal. So I wrote him, offering him books on the subject, should he care to read them. I was agreeably surprised to learn from his courteous reply that he "knew most of Hine's views on the subject," and was favourably—very favourably—disposed towards it. There were one or two difficulties, however, which prevented him from giving his adhesion to it. One of them was, "Is England not destined to become one of the ten toes of the Roman latter-day development?" Fortunately I was able to give him pamphlets, &c, which dispelled all his difficulties. He has since delivered three lectures on three consecutive Sabbath evenings bearing directly on the subject; and I know that they have caused considerable interest among his own people and others who were drawn to hear him by the advertisements in the newspapers. He intends taking up "the subject again next winter, when he will deal more positively with the evidences, when the people have given some attention to it."

There! is not that good news from a far country? Although I have no authority from the rev. gentleman to say so, I feel confident he is now a believer in Our Identity, and the name of the Rev. David Gordon, St. Paul's Presbyterian Church, Invercargill, may safely be added to your list of clergymen who teach its truths.

I also send you a few extracts which may come in useful. The book from which they are taken is an authority—used in Bible classes, &c., in the Free Church of Scotland. I also enclose copy of a few verses produced during the recent Russian scare, as some call it. It pretty well expresses the spirit in which the scare was met in these colonies. I cannot give you any idea of the intenseness with which the negotiations between the British and Russian Governments were watched (the cable kept us posted up every morning and evening), nor of the silent but deep disgust—nay, rage—which was created by the vacillating tendencies of the late Cabinet.

I am, yours very truly,
ALEXANDER HAY.

Invercargill, New Zealand, Oct. 31, 1885.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—I think "An Enquirer" in this week's BANNER, is distressing himself and others over a by-gone truth; I do not read Jer. xxx. 6, 7, as he does, nor as yourself. I, therefore, venture to intrude upon your valuable space; for in the multitude of counsel there is safety.

In reading the preceding chapter, I can see an interpretation of the distress called Jacob's trouble, at ver. 10. Judah (who is also Jacob) is promised relief, and God's thoughts of peace towards Judah should have filled all those children of Jacob with faith and trust in His most holy name; but instead God "hears" (see chap. xxx., ver. 5) a voice of trembling, of fear, and anything but peace; and compares the unhappy Judah to a woman in travail. Alas! that day was indeed great; for Judah presented just such a picture of woe and anguish, both in that present trial of transportation to Babylon, and that greater one when, later on, the Romans decimated and tried to stamp out that portion of God's people. But the comfort comes at ver. 8, "The Lord of hosts will break Jacob's yoke (put on by himself for his want of faith) from off his own neck." God would burst their bonds, and they should serve strangers no more. Both branches of Jacob's family, at the time of Jeremiah's writing, was indeed in a pitiable plight—outcast, lean, and faint, holding their sides with the anguish of suffering—one in Media, the other at Babylon. Alas! was it not truly the time of Jacob's trouble!—Israel cast off and let alone with its loved idols; Judah to weep by the rivers of Babylon.

And now, sir, has not God kept His word? has He not burst the bonds of Israel (one of the families of Jacob)? do any Israelites serve strangers—do they not serve God in these isles and David their king? And if Judah, the other family, is not yet free, every hour brings her nearer the day when they too shall be free, without any bonds of servitude. God (ver. 17) will restore health unto them; He will heal them, and ye (Jacob's two families) shall be My people and I will be your God."

This, I venture to feel, is the meaning of Jacob's trouble; it is past, and I do not now anticipate any more God's face being hidden from us. Chap. xxxi., in my opinion, removes all doubts upon the subject.

J. T. W. G.

December 14, 1885.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—We regret we cannot take the comfort our friend offers us. The captivity and restoration spoken of in Jer. xxx., are those of Israel and Judah—both. They relate to the banishment of both the houses, and the matter of the chapter is to be subject for consideration in the latter days, or our time, as in fact is the case to-day, our pages being the witness (ver. 24). The reference is surely not to a past and by-gone distress; but one in which both houses are in union to share (ver. 4—7). The words are "concerning Israel and concerning Judah." Community in disaster is expressly described in ver. 4, 5. and these do not describe the facts of the captivity to Media, nor those of Judah to Babylon; nor (least of all) Titus' dispersion of the Jews only. Ver. 10 describes nothing that occurred in either of these three epochs but gives Jacob and Israel to mean the united Thirteen Tribes in their return, and we see that these verses run parallel to Ezek. xxxviii. and xxxix., and portray a time of terror by reason of Gog Magog's temporary success in Palestine and Egypt—success dearly bought, by utter destruction from the Lord, who delivers the Tribes from all fear, and gives them rest and quiet, and fearlessness all along in their own land.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR PHILO-ISRAEL,—The Weekly Churchman states that the number of sects registered as possessing "places of meeting for religious worship," in England and Wales, at the end of 1885 had reached the figure of 217, being nine more than the number given in 1884. Among the additions in the last year are British-Israelites, &c., &c.

Readers of the BANNER OF ISRAEL know that it is in no sense responsible for this fresh division. There has never been anything savouring of sectarianism in its tone or teaching: its loyal attitude toward the National Church is unmistakable: but to avoid any occasion of misunderstanding it would not be amiss to state that the editor, and those who have had the pleasure of working with him, deprecate the position which appears to have been taken by a few. There is nothing in the fact of the Identity which could reasonably cause, and much less justify, a separated position; its tendency is to strengthen, and not by severance to weaken our national "witnessing" function.

Very truly yours,
January, 1886. DENIS HANAN.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—We quite concur with our correspondent, but have reason to believe that the British Israelites are not in any way connected with Our Identity, and certainly the new sect has nothing to do with those who hold the views represented by the BANNER OF ISRAEL.—ED.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR.—In this week's BANNER, under the heading "'The Wesleyan Methodist Sunday-School Magazine' Decides the Question," a very curious historical error has been made by Mr. Frank Ballard, of that magazine, in his article upon the "Last Kings of Israel and Judah." He states therein, "That the fatal defeat of Carthage at Cannæ is accounted for in history by the previous demoralisation of luxury at Capua." I find in Hooke's Roman History that the Carthaginians, under Hannibal, gained a great victory at the Battle of Cannæ over the Romans, under Varro and Emilius, slaughtering most of their troops.

If our erring guide fails so greatly in pagan, what may he not do in sacred history? Excuse my troubling you; but I did not like to see so serious an error perpetuated and left unexposed in our BANNER OF ISRAEL.

Yours faithfully,
JOHN T. W. GOODMAN

December 30, 1885.

IF the correspondent who wrote to Dr. Grant from Leicester will send his name and address, he will receive an answer.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed:—"Philo-Israel," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

SUBSCRIPTIONS £ s. d.

Annual Subscription for one copy weekly (including the Twelve Double Numbers) postfree - 0 7 6
Two Copies (including Double Numbers) - - 0 13 6
Three Copies " " " " - 1 0 4
Four Copies " " " " - 1 5 6
Six Copies " " " " - 1 16 4

Post Office Orders to be made payable at the head office, St. Martin's-le-grand London, to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C., and W. H. GUEST & Co. 29, Paternoster-row, London.

The Editor cannot undertake to return rejected MSS. unless stamps for the purpose be sent. Parties requiring an answer should enclose a stamp.

Contents Bills and Show Cards may be obtained on application to the Publishers.

Advertisements should be sent to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

Prepaid Advertisements are inserted at the rate of 30 words for 1s. 4d.

FIRST VOLUME OF "THE BANNER OF ISRAEL" WANTED. Send to Robert Banks and Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London. 6s. will be returned for same.

PUBLISHED BY ROBT. BANKS & SON,
RACQUET COURT, FLEET STREET, E.C.

WORKS BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

The Geography of the Gates. With Map and six full page, and one double-page, Illustrations, printed on plate paper. 208 pages, in handsome cloth, gilt Price 3s. 6d., post free 3s. 10d.

An Elementary Digest or Sketch of the Chief Facts and Teachings of the Great Pyramid of Egypt. Adapted to the Unlearned and Unscientific. 56 pages, Illustrated with Diagrams, price 4d., post free 5d. 10th Thousand.

Our Identity with the House of Israel. Price 4d. Reprinted from "Clifton Chronicle Letters"

Philo-Israel's Leaflets. Four pages Crown 8vo. Price 1s. 6d. per 100, postage 2d. No. 1.—"The Identity of the British with Lost Israel." 2.—"The Glory of God." 3.—An Address to British Seamen. 4.—An Address to British Soldiers. No. 5.—The Communion of the Body and Blood of Our Lord Jesus Christ Viewed in the Light of Our Identity. 6.—The Bible and the Jew. 7.—The Jewish People. 8.—Lo-Ammi; or, the Gentilisation of Ten-Tribed Israel. 9.—The Atonement. 10.—Is Our Identity Evangelical, or Non-Evangelical in its Tendency? No. 11.—Cui Bono? No. 12.—The "Thoughts" of God Towards Israel, Judah, and the Gentile Nations. 13.—The Teutonic Theory—Is It True? 14.—An Address to the Police Force of Great Britain. 15.—An Address to Israel's Missionaries and Their Supporters. 16.—The One Seed, Christ. 17.—An Address to Israel's Electors. Price 1s. 6d. per 100.

A Resume of the Scriptural Argument, proving the Identity of the British Race with the Lost Ten Tribes. Price 1d.; 6s. per 100. New edition now ready.

The History of the House of Israel; How they were Lost, and How they were Found, Told for the Children. Price 6d., cloth 1s.; post free 7d. and 1s. 1d. Fourth Edition. Eleventh thousand.

The Sisters of Harrowdale Rectory. A Tale of Great Interest for Young People on the Identity of Lost Israel; with splendid double-page frontispiece, illustrating Harrowdale Rectory and Church. This book will be read by both young and old with the greatest interest. By Mrs. M. A. SEARSON. Price 2s. 6d. post free 2s. 9d.; handsome cloth, gilt, bevelled boards.

London: Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street.

PRICE FIVE SHILLINGS.

"Freemasonry from the Great Pyramid of Ancient Times."

How formed among the rulers and skilled craftsmen to perpetuate an order of succession, passed along by the ancient Khadem Khesed, Trustworthy (or modern Freemasonry) through the land of Media by the Cimmerians to the chosen people of Israel, and travelled as they travelled, dispensing their usages and customs among the earlier Anglo-Saxons. With illustrations showing the parts of the interior of the Pyramid to be removed, disclosing the long-hidden chambers, developing further research.

To be had of the Author, T. Holland, 2, Charles-street, Rutland Gate; Robert Banks & Son, Racquet court, Fleet st., E.C.; and Guest, Hayworth & Co., 29, Paternoster-row

Now Ready Price 6d., Post Free Six Stamps

Why We Do Not Adopt The French Metrical System

IN PLACE OF

Our Anglo-Saxon Metrology.

By CHRISTOPHER GILES,

Accountant, General Post Office & Telegraph Department, Adelaide, South Australia.

With an Introduction by C. PIAZZI SMYTH,

Astronomer-Royal for Scotland.

London: Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-st.

BOOKS FOR BIBLE STUDENTS.

Price 2s. 6d., post free (published at 4s.), cloth, gilt lettered

The Book of Hebrew Roots.

Showing the Ideal Meanings and Various Ramifications of the Principal Hebrew Radicals.

By BURLINGTON B. WALE.

Large Folio, Hand Coloured, 12s. 6d., uncoloured, 6s. 6d., without Introduction, 3s., by post 3d. extra.

Modern Hieroglyphics of the Apocalypse and Great Pyramid.

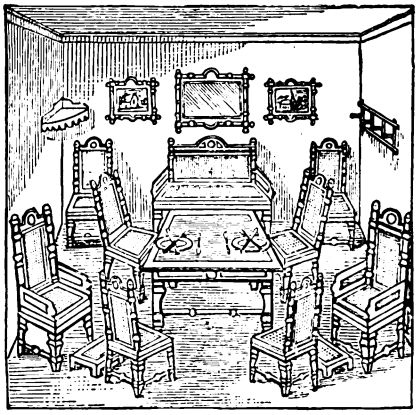
Illustrated by Ten Plates, with explanations. By A WATCHER. To which is prefixed an introduction, showing how recent events in the Eastern Question and the Church have worked towards a fulfilment of the Theory suggested in this Book.

R. BANKS & SON Racquet-court, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

A Thousand of the first edition sold in a few weeks for Great Britain, Ireland, Egypt, Natal, India, and America.

ISRAEL'S WORLD:

Origin and Destiny of British Race Colonies, and Empire; according to Scripture, History, and Signs of Our Times.



BY REV. HENRY ROE.

Price 2d., post free 2½d. R. Banks & Son, Racquet-court

Also by the same Author, "Consecration," 4d.; "Going to Africa," 1s.; "Fernando Po Mission," 1s.; "West African Scenes," 2s. E Stock, 62, Paternoster-row, London, E.C. Rev. H. Roe, St. Ives, Cornwall.

LUNG OWBRIDGE'S TONIC
LUNG LUNG TONIC, TONIC
LUNG THE MIGHTY HEALER. TONIC
LUNG Save Your Lives by Taking TONIC
LUNG OWBRIDGE'S LUNG TONIC. TONIC
LUNG It has a power over diseases hitherto unknown in Medicine. TONIC
LUNG Are you at all Weak-chested, or inclined to be Consumptive, with just a touch of Cough now and then? TONIC
LUNG "Try this Wonderful Medicine." The Cough and Weakness will disappear as if by magic, and you will feel a strength and power you never had before. TONIC
LUNG HAVE YOU A COUGH? TONIC
LUNG A DOSE WILL RELIEVE IT. TONIC
LUNG HAVE YOU A COLD? TONIC
LUNG A DOSE AT BEDTIME WILL REMOVE IT. TONIC
LUNG Bronchitis and Asthma it relieves instantly TONIC
LUNG The Spasms of Coughing so dreadful in TONIC
LUNG Whooping Cough become less with each TONIC
LUNG dose of the medicine —— TONIC
LUNG Prepared by W. T. OWBRIDGE, Chemist, Hull TONIC
LUNG Sold in bottles 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s 6d. & TONIC
LUNG 5s. by all Chemists and Patent Medicine TONIC
LUNG Vendors. Wholesale all London and TONIC
LUNG Provincial Houses. TONIC

ONLY ONE SHILLING TO FURNISH A DOLL'S HOUSE THROUGHOUT
With over Seventy Pieces of Furniture.

Comprising Drawing Room Suites, Dining Room Suites, Kitchen Furniture, Chairs Lounges, Sofas, Tables, Looking Glasses, Pictures, Umbrella Stands, Hat Racks, Clocks, Bookcases, Flower-pots, Wash-stands Chamberware Stoves, Knives, Forks, Spoons, Vegetable Dishes, Soup Tureens, Cruet Stands, Vases, &c. These different articles of Furniture are beautiful beyond description, and must be seen to be properly appreciated. All the articles are spendidly finished and when placed in their proper positions, present an extremely pretty and tasteful sight. Every person that sees them immediately exclaims, "Oh, how lovely, I must have a set." Children will get more genuine enjoyment out of these articles of Furniture than they would out of other toys that cost ten times the money. Every person that buys them not only sends immediately for more, but, what to us is of more value, recommends them to their numerous friends and acquaintances. A lady writes us, "that the dolls' Furniture are really beautiful" and that "her children are never tired of playing with them." Young and old alike are fascinated with them and if parents only knew how much amusement here is in these article of Furniture, they would willingly pay double the price for them.

Any agent, male or female, can sell 100 sets every day if they are only energetic and at this rate they would make over five guineas per week. If you send for one or two sets immediately, we will send you our circular, showing how you may make at least twenty guineas per month.

Samples of these MARVELS of INGENUITY and CHEAPNESS, consisting of over SEVENTY DIFFERENT ARTICLES, post paid for FOURTEEN STAMPS. Two sets for TWENTY-FOUR STAMPS. Agents wanted. Address:

J. CHAMBERS & Co.,
145, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

EDWARD HINE'S PUBLICATIONS.

FORTY-SEVEN IDENTIFICATIONS, 6d.
COMING GLORIES, 6d.
FLASHES OF LIGHT, 6d.
OXFORD WRONG, 4d.
ANGLO-SAXON RIDDLE, 2d.

Penny extra per post. Above bound in hand-some vol., LOST ISRAEL FOUND, 3s. 6d. POST FREE, 3s. 9d.

LEAFLET No. 1, 1s. per 100, of ISAAC LOVELAND, Shoreham, Sevenoaks; GUEST, HAYWORTH, & Co., 29, Paternoster Row, E.C

SEE FIFTY REASONS WHY THE ANGLO-SAXONS ARE THE LOST TEN TRIBES. Price 6d., post free 7d.

R. Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, EC.

Health Aids — Write for this valuable little Book.
Health Aids — 50 YEARS RECORD of Facts, Principles, and Discoveries Relating to the Improvement and Preservation of Human Life on Earth. By Dr. Samuel Birley, M.D. Ph.D. Articles 1, 2, 3, and 4, complete in book form, post free 2 stamps—
Health Aids — GORDON I. MURRAY & Co.,
Health Aids — 33, CASTLE ST., HOLBORN, LONDON

THE BRITISH ISRAELITES;

Or, Evidences of our Hebrew Origin, gathered from History, Genealogy, Philology, and Heathen Customs. To which is added the Scriptural Testimony of Prophecy Compared with Existing Facts, Answers to Objections, and a Lecture on the Great Pyramid.

By LIEUT.-COLONEL H. W. J. SENIOR, 1st Bengal Infantry.

"We can safely recommend it as an excellent guide to the learned and an invaluable mine of wealth to the Anglo-Israelite controversialist. We hope all our readers will secure a copy, and have it often in their hands.—Banner of Israel

With Illustrations, cloth gilt, 178 pp., 3s. 6d. BAGSTER & SONS, LMTD., 15, PATERNOSTER ROW, E.C

Printed for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C. PUBLISHED BY GUEST, HAYWORTH, & Co., 29, PATERNOSTER-ROW, WEDNESDAY, FEB. 17, 1886. [All rights reserved.

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."

(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India.)

"And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the Forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS of the EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. X., No. 478. Entered at Stationers' H.] WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 24, 1886. PRICE ONE PENNY.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
Why Burmah Was Annexed	77
Identity Difficulties Answered. Our Cui Bono? Opponents.—Part I.	78
The "Silver Morn."—An Opponent	79
The "English Churchman and St. James's Chronicle" on the Identity and Its Supporters	80
An Anglo-Indian on Our Identity.—Part I	81
The Nile Campaign—General Order to the Troops	82
The Free Distribution Fund	83
"A World's Sabbath." By R. E.	83
Bristol and Clifton Israel's Identification Association	83
Correspondence	83

WHY BURMAH WAS ANNEXED.

THE question regarding the annexation of Upper Burmah has now been happily settled. Lord Dufferin has done the right thing, in the right way, and at the right time. Common sense, prudence, and political wisdom all suggested that a protectorate would be a mistaken policy, and that annexation pure and simple, was the only thing under the circumstances, open to us. We are thankful that a Liberal statesman like Lord Dufferin was at the helm in the Indian Empire to do the deed, and that he had such supporters at home in the Government as Lord Salisbury and Lord Randolph Churchhill to permit the deed to be done. We think that had Mr. Gladstone's Government been in power at the moment, we should hardly have gone so straight to the point, but that after many tortuous devices and hair-splitting arguments why we should have refrained from taking action at all in the famous "three courses open to us," we should have left the French to deal with Thebaw, and so ruined our hopes of a prosperous termination to the Burmese episode. The question, "Why was Burmah annexed?" has been very well answered in The Times of January 2nd, 1886, in the following words:—

The annexation of Burmah fulfils Lord Dalhousie's prophecy thirty years ago, that he held the remaining kingdom of Ava in the hollow of his hand. It adds the largest province to the British Empire acquired since the annexation of the Punjab, and it brings us into immediate contact with the Chinese on a land frontier which presents no serious difficulty to inter-communication, such as the Himalayan range has offered for a hundred years. In every sense the event is one of the highest importance, and before accepting the new responsibilities which the assumption of the sovereignty of Burmah entails, both the Government at home and the Viceroy of India in Council considered every possible alternative to the extreme measure which has now been taken. Theoretically every one preferred a protectorate, but after the most careful deliberation it was found that a protectorate was quite impracticable. No candidate at all suitable by character or family connexion could be found for the post, and the elevation of a puppet prince, whom the Burmese would not respect, could only have launched us upon a sea of difficulties with the pretenders and rebels, sure to be brought to the front by the presence of a nominal native ruler at Mandalay. Our own position would have been equally unsatisfactory. Not merely should we have been entangled in the difficulties of our nominee, but the exercise of a paramount influence over the domestic and foreign policy of the Burmese Court would have been much hampered, and, perhaps, ultimately rendered impossible. If it be asked why annexation has been preferred to any other solution of the Burmese difficulty the reply may be given briefly, because it was impossible to find any prince of the blood who could be put on Thebaw's throne with the least assurance that his power would be respected except when supported by British bayonets. The reasons in favour of the prompt publication of our decision were as strong as those which dictated it. The interests of the Burmese people themselves demanded it, and delay could only have minimised the advantages of the short campaign which closed with the occupation of Mandalay.

The natural wealth of Burmah is very great. According to the writer in the leading journal, its productions are all cereals; magnificent forests, and minerals of all kinds. There are 102 different sorts of rice grown in the country, also sugarcane, cotton, tea, potatoes, gums, oils, besides precious stones; Indiarubber or caoutchouc trees, gold, silver, copper, tin, lead, antimony, bismuth, petroleum, amber, salt, jade, marble, these and many other products are in abundance.

In further illustration of this point, we desire to call attention to the following excellent letter from Mr. E. Garnett Man, the late legal adviser to Her Majesty's Government in Burmah. The writer describes what Upper Burmah is and how valuable it will prove as a possession to our race, and how impossible it was to deal with it in any other way than that which Lord Dufferin, the Viceroy, has since wisely elected to do. The letter was published in The Times on December 14th, before the annexation was ordered; but it will be read as a profitable comment on that firm act of state. Mr. Man said:—

Whether Upper Burmah is to be merely protected or annexed will be a question that must soon be answered. If the former, the government will have to choose either of the two princes who have been exiles in our territory for some years. One of these (Memgoni) is imbued with French ideas and tastes. The other is of very ordinary intellect and has shown no promise of wielding a despot's sceptre with ability or justice. If we place either on the throne we shall have to maintain a large force at Mandalay and a Resident and staff, who will possess but slight control over the civil or criminal administration of the country, and still less over the collection of revenue and expenditure.

Digitized by Google

If the King is allowed no jurisdiction his enthronement would be a farce. He must also have a court of native officials necessarily expensive and the cause of intrigue and constant bickering between the Resident and their master. The former would attempt to prevent the injustice and wrong perpetrated by native officials; the latter would always be chafing at the interference of a "Kullah" with his authority.

After a long residence in Burmah, and after an intimate relation with the Burmese, I have no hesitation in saying that the protectorate scheme must prove a failure.

The Burmese would gladly hail annexation. For many years Burmans have flocked into our territory to avoid the exaction and injustice of the King's officials, and Rangoon has in a short time increased from 30,000 to over 130,000 inhabitants. There are English officers, in the prime of life, who have assisted to mould British Burmah into its present prosperous and peaceful condition, and their services might easily be made available for working the newly annexed province into shape.

At the end of last year a monster meeting was held to protest against the cruelties of Thebaw. From 4,000 to 6,000 Burmese were present, and unanimously passed a resolution praying that the British Government would annex Upper Burmah.

It is a country rich in gold, silver, rubies and other precious stones, and teeming with iron and coal. It possesses magnificent waterways, huge forests of teak timber, and a fertile soil, and is inhabited by a race which seems to fraternise most cordially with the British. No charges are ever made by Burmese against Europeans for oppressing them, while in India such charges used to be of constant occurrence. Despite the favours nature has showered upon Upper Burmah, it has become gradually depopulated by the anarchy and oppression of the king. It is our duty as a Christian and a civilised country to extend to its remaining inhabitants that same protection and good government which has drawn so many Burmese over our frontier and under which British Burmah has so flourished. I am personally acquainted with Thebaw and knew the old king, his father. By the kindness of the Rev. J. H. Marks, who was then a missionary at Mandalay teaching the king's sons, I had the opportunity of being rowed in a boat in which Thebaw was the stroke, and his nine brothers rowers. When Thebaw came to the throne these nine brothers were murdered, and a large number of princes and princesses with them. I saw in the burial ground the crucified form of a Buddhist priest who had doubted the orthodoxy of the Buddhist priesthood. I have visited their prisons and have seen the appalling misery and oppression there. I was passing through the town of Mandalay when four men were thrashed to death with rods for some trivial offence; and I have walked through the gates of the city over the graves of those who had been buried alive, men, women, and children, seized as they happened to be passing by, and hurried to their living tomb by the ruthless orders of the king. I have also seen the gaols in which the prisoners were massacred by order of Thebaw. We have been longsuffering with Thebaw. The same oppression and almost the same cruelty characterised many of his father's officials, while the cruelties of Tharawaddy, the grandfather, still strike terror into the minds of the Burmese children when related. It is useless to hope that kings, brought up as Burmese princes are, can be anything but tyrants when intrusted with unlimited power. Shut up in their palace, afraid to move out (for if the palace be taken during their absence their power passes with it), even were they desirous they would be unable to restrain the oppression and injustice of their officials.

The representatives of our Government have often been insulted in a manner that no other country would have allowed.

We have been compelled to make war, and by the right of conquest we take the country, and in the name of Christianity and civilisation we should keep it. The expense of annexation will be fully repaid; for Burmah gives a million surplus to the Indian revenue, and is one of the richest countries in the world, and if the Government recognise their duties and responsibilities Upper Burmah should from this time forth add another bright jewel to the British Imperial Crown.

Yours faithfully,

E. GARNETT MAN

(Late Legal Adviser to Her Majesty's Government in Burmah).

Temple.

We do not think our opponents can accuse us of earth hunger! We merely record the opinion of every one acquainted with the facts, and say that so far from our nation at this moment desiring to extend the empire or hungering for extended territory, the very opposite is the case. The British folk do not desire to increase their empire; and yet, in spite of it, we were forced, by circumstances over which we have no control, to conquer or obtain province after province, dominion after dominion, state after state, till at last we shall have a world-wide dominion which God, against our will, has forced upon us and is compelling us to acquire. No one can read Mr. Garnett Man's letter without seeing that the annexation of Thebaw's dominions was really the only alternative before us. We might, of course, foolishly have put the province away from us, and posed as a purely disinterested power, refusing to take the country with its pecuniary and other responsibilities. But we may be sure our sin of faithlessness would then have found us out, and we should have been visited with troubles and costly wars, till we had learnt to obey the will of the Lord. This has been uniformly our experience in Egypt and the Soudan, when God put those lands in the possession of our nation, that we might hold and bring them to Christ. We have refused the gift to this hour. Up to this moment, therefore, war with the Soudanese is our portion, and our position in Egypt is likely to be precarious, till we recognise the fact that God wishes us to dominate the Nile and Khartoum as a means to the pacification and Christianisation of those lands. In Burmah God gave us years ago the gate of Thebaw's territory, when He allowed us to capture Rangoon in 1852, and gave us the Irrawaddy River besides. These were the means to the end now before us. If we had refused the gift as we refused that of Egypt and the Soudan, we might have expected the same treatment, till we had learnt to obey the Lord's command and take what He bestows, to enable Him to establish His covenant which He sware unto our fathers as it is this day (Deut. viii. 18). In Upper Burmah there are souls to save for whom Christ died. He has given the land to us now distinctly that we may blossom and bud, and fill the face of it with Gospel fruit (Isa. xxvii. 6). If we accept the commission, and do this Christian work, which He declares will show forth His praise, we shall feel the blessing and the benefit of it, in the prosperity which will attend our occupation of the country (Isa. xliii. 21). But if we reject the privilege, and decline the honour God puts upon our nation as His missionaries to Burmah, what can we expect but Jehovah's frown, and the chastisements of His Almighty hand? We look, however, for better things, and that in this respect we shall do the will of Him, who being our God and Israel's King, calls on us for these and all His other benefits, to "praise the Lord."

IDENTITY DIFFICULTIES ANSWERED—OUR CUI BONO? OPPONENTS.

PART I.

WE believe if the opposition of the majority of our antagonists were traced to its source, it would be found that they fail to see the use of the machinery, if we may so speak, of Israel in the economy of God's dealings with the world. They think that the world has got on very well for 1800 years without Israel of the Ten Tribes, and no one has clearly shown that the world would be any way benefited, or mankind advanced, by the discovery of the Ten Tribes of Israel in the British races. The state of mind we describe goes rather beyond the usual Cui bono? difficulty. It declares the absolute uselessness of the discovery of the Lost Tribes in the present day, and fails to see how and why the nations of the world would be the better if it were established beyond doubt to-morrow that the British are they.

Digitized by Google

The arguments on our side to prove that we are the House of Israel are, in the eyes of these folks, beside the point. "First show," they cry, "that the appearance of the Tribes of the House of Israel, at this time of day, is a necessity for the world; and when you have shown us that, we may listen to you with patience as to the details." "The nations," say the evangelicals, "are perishing for lack of knowledge of Christ and His salvation. We are preaching the humbling doctrines of the cross. Leave us to insist upon these and these alone, and do not disturb us with this new and needless dogma which refers to the startling, but useless, discovery of some Hebrew tribes, of whom the world has had no cognizance for about 2,000 years, and of whom really no one wants to hear more to-day." "The second Advent of the Lord is what we desire to teach men (others say), and why should we be disturbed by troublesome and abstruse arguments, respecting the Identity of the British with Israel, when these arguments do not bear upon the coming Advent in the very slightest degree?" "Ritual and ornate services are the proper modes to approach and please the Lord. Why should we (asks the Extreme High Churchman) stay to investigate most difficult scientific questions regarding the pedigree of the British, or try and puzzle out the meaning of prophecies, regarding which no two persons, it seems, have ever agreed on earth; or why should we entertain views rejected, after careful inquiry, by all the Bishops (and Archbishops), most of the clergy of the Church, and pretty nearly all the scientific men of our own times?"

The indifference which the subject meets with, among all classes of the ministers of religion, is, we are satisfied, explained by the fact that they regard it, without exception, as a mere toy, with which Anglo-Israelites are playing, of which in ten years time they will all be tired. Why then, they argue, should they break off from important and deeply interesting pursuits, to contemplate a mere craze and a delusion, such as Our Identity obviously, from their point of view, really is? In arguing the matter with such opponents our aim must clearly be, to try and explain to them what Our Identity means, and why it is of such vast importance to them and to the people entrusted to their spiritual charge.

In the first place we would ask them, how in their view it would be possible to carry on the work those who love the souls of men have in view without the agency of such a race as Israel is described to be in God's Word? For what was the problem presented to us in the scheme of salvation? And how did God propose to meet it? The problem, as all our opponents will allow, was this: "The world is lying in the wicked one"; "sold under sin"; "lost and perishing." But "God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish, but have everlasting life" (John iii. 16). Here is the fact stated respecting the condition of the whole of this fallen, ruined world; and here also the fact is declared of God's plan to effect its recovery. How is the remedy to be applied? The cure was to be by faith. Now the love of God operates independently of man's agency. The vicarious sufferings of Christ, also God's gift of His dear Son to suffer, were both independent of human instrumentality. But how was the faith of fallen mankind in the great sacrifice to be brought about and kindled without a direct and ever continuing recurring miracle?

There must surely be a human instrumentality organised, as St. Paul teaches in Rom. x. 14, 15, to carry the news of the Divine offering to all the nations, to all the families, and to all the kindreds of the world? That instrumentality to deal with ALL the families of mankind must needs be "a nation!" No individual could do that world-wide work, lasting for centuries of time. No family, no small, powerless tribe, no Church could effect it. Nothing but a great and mighty, and very numerous nation, guaranteed to last for ages, educated in its special gracious work, could effect the object contemplated. That great, mighty, and multitudinous nation, to carry on its special duties satisfactorily, must needs have special spiritual qualifications to fit it for its functions. It must have the love of God, and the laws of God written and implanted in its heart. It must love the souls of lost men, nay, it must love them universally, prompting it to great self-sacrifice in order to carry out the object contemplated—namely, to tell the world the good news that "Christ died for sinners."

To enable the chosen ones to go to the ends of the earth and there proclaim this Gospel, they must have power to compel the heathen to give their message a patient hearing; and that cannot be done unless as a nation they dominate over such heathen lands. No heathen will listen to teachers who condemn their religion and interfere with the emoluments of heathen priestcraft, unless there be political ascendency over them, acquired, first, by the evangelising power. That ascendency must be won by the sword, and held by the sword, in such a land, for instance, as British India, which is the chief field of our nation's missionary operations, among the heathen in the far East. But such distant spheres of labour cannot be occupied by an island race living in the North-west of Europe, unless the road of access—the sea—that is, the supremacy of the sea be fully assured to the evangelising power.

Hence the necessity of the coaling stations to the dominant Christian nation ruling in India, because such coaling stations confer the supremacy of the sea; and on the supremacy of the sea the ability to hold India depends. But the supremacy of the sea and the power of the coaling stations, with the paramount dominion in such a heathen land as British India, cannot be secured by any nation which, for whatever cause, is poor. It could not meet the expenses of such a mighty responsibility. Hence, the nation, such as we describe, must be rich; possessing a great and unique commerce dealing with all parts of the world. The power to get wealth, to God's glory, must needs be a qualification to be found in the nation thus doing God's service as His missionaries to the ends of the earth. We may search the world over, and we shall find but one nation extant now, which answers to the picture we have drawn of the instrumentality requisite to do the work obviously necessary to reclaim the world. That nation is the Anglo-Saxon British race.

(To be continued.)

THE "SILVER MORN"—AN OPPONENT.

THE Silver Morn and Prophetic Voice is a prophetic magazine published by Messrs. Partridge and by R. Banks & Son, the owners of the BANNER OF ISRAEL. It is duly advertised in the pages of this journal, as may be seen by reference to p. 44; and yet the Silver Morn is opposed to Our Identity, as the December, 1885, No. 14, Vol. II., p. 59, clearly testified. It seems strange that a journal hostile to the Identity should be advertised by the owners of the BANNER in the pages of the latter; but as this is one of the circumstances connected with our position which can be described only as anomalous, one over which we editorially have no control, we merely draw attention to it, and proceed to the consideration of the grounds of the Silver Morn's opposition. It is to be found in an article by the Rev. D. Carey, B.A., Vicar of Baildon, entitled, "Love to Jerusalem;" or, "The Restoration of the House of Israel, the True Keystone, Backbone, and Kernel of Prophecy." The author seems, as far as we can comprehend his paper, to know nothing of "the House of Joseph," or "Ephraim," but to confuse "the Jews" with "the House of Israel." There is, it seems (according to the Silver Morn), an "Earthly House of Israel," who are the Jews

Digitized by Google

(p. 58), and "a Heavenly House of Israel," who are the "Spiritual House," or "Spiritual Israel"—the "Watchmen of Israel," or "the Church triumphant of this day of grace." The latter is to be "the deliverer in Christ of the earthly House of Israel." This earthly House of Israel is by-and-bye "going to be the earthly kings in the midst of the earth, enthroned and installed in authority and power by the true Heir of the world, who regained their crown on Calvary's Cross." This "earthly House of Israel" is now a lost House, but it is going to be "Christ's redeemed earthly Bride, and will reign, under Christ, on the earth."

Such being the case, the author, after this (to us) unintelligible statement, proceeds to show why, in his view, our Identity will not bear investigation. His reasons are these :—

The idea of the English nation being the Lost Ten Tribes will, by these considerations, be seen to be utterly untenable and apart from the eternal purpose and covenant of God. It is a mixing up of what is quite distinct; the effects of the day of grace; the effects of the day of vengeance. It is mingling the heavenly Israel and earthly Israel. It is depriving Christians of this day of grace of the peculiar privilege in Christ, and lowering the glories of the day of grace to be seen at His coming. Besides, the blessings promised to the House of Israel are nowhere in the Bible promised to them as Ten Tribes, or even to the Twelve Tribes as merely being Twelve Tribes of professing Israelites. The blessings to Israel are only promised to Israel as a nation, consisting of twelve tribes, and that not as a mere nation by profession but as a peculiar nation whose members are all righteous. This will not be till they shall say, Blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord. Then they shall see eye to eye Jesus their King, Saviour, God and their people made all righteous, and their children princes in all lands. These great and precious promises will not be relied on by the nation till they have gone through the fires of the day of vengeance, though probably the Two Tribes will be the first to be purified and accept Jesus, and then the Ten.

So far the Rev. D. Carey, B.A. It is almost impossible gravely to sit down and expose so complicated a piece of absurdity as the above. It is new to us, for instance, to be told that God's Word nowhere promised to the Ten Tribes those blessings which belong to "the House of Israel" of the Scriptures. As Mr. Carey meant by "the House of Israel" the Jews, it would be strange indeed to find blessings promised to the Jews given to the Ten Tribes! But if Mr. Carey knows that the scriptural name for Israel, or "the House of Israel," was Ephraim (Hosea iv. 15—17; ix. 16, &c., &c.), then he must be taught that to Ephraim God gave in Gen. xlviii. 16—19, and xlix. 22 to 26, as well as in Deut. xxxiii. 13—17, the blessings of Joseph and his birthright quite apart from the Jews and from the Twelve-Tribed united nation. He gave Ephraim or the Ten Tribes for enjoyment now between the two Advents multitudinousness, the company of nations, earthly power, wealth, dominion and sovereignty, a heathen and colonial Empire—therefore the Gates and wealth; therefore the power of the sea and all that follows from it. To Ephraim appertained also the Christian national character—the redemption, repentance towards God, and faith towards our Lord Jesus Christ, as may be gathered from Hosea i. 10; Zech. x. 8, 9, 12; Jer. xxxi. 18—20. Mr. Carey's quotation of Matt. xxiii. 39, in connection with the Twelve-Tribed nation of the children of Israel (whereas our Lord spoke the words strictly with reference to the Jews), is a specimen of the way he confuses Scripture and makes the whole unintelligible. Before Mr. Carey of the Silver Morn can teach us anything about the meaning of "The Prophetic Voice" it will be needful for him to learn the distinction between the House of Israel, which is Ephraim or Joseph, and the House of Judah, or the Jews. Till the Silver Morn teaches its readers according to the plainly expressed meaning of God's Word, and not according to the vain imaginings of its contributors, we trust the advertisement columns of the pages of the BANNER will not be used to recommend the work. "Doth a fountain send forth at the same place sweet waters and bitter?" (James iii. 11).

One word more and we have done. Mr. Carey tells us "the Two Tribes will probably be the first to be purified and accept Jesus, and then the Ten." It follows, then, there is a Two-Tribed and a Ten-Tribed division of Israel, these being forthcoming at the last days! But where does Mr. Carey find that the Two Tribes will be converted first? We shall show him from the Bible the very opposite result. Hosea i. 10, 11, tells us that before Judah and Israel unite to return to their land Israel will, even as "Lo-Ammi," be known as "the sons of the living God," and that character belongs only to truly converted Christian men and nations. Again, Ezek. xxxvii. 14 proves that before Israel's return to their land God's Spirit will be given to them as a nation; whereas Ezek. xxxvi. 25 shows us that the Jews (called by Ezekiel throughout "the House of Israel") will be converted after their return to the land joined in company with Israel (comp. Jer. iii. 18 and xxxi. 33, 34). We find, then, that the Rev. D. Carey, B.A., is not a safe prophetic guide, for his teaching is misleading and incorrect. He wants light himself before he can venture to appear again in the pages of the Silver Morn as a teacher and interpreter to Israel.

THE "ENGLISH CHURCHMAN AND ST. JAMES'S CHRONICLE" ON THE IDENTITY AND ITS SUPPORTERS.

THE issue of the English Churchman and St. James's Chronicle of November 26 contained a remarkable panegyric of Bishop Titcomb's recent Pastoral, published by Messrs. Rivingtons, and addressed to the Chaplaincies of the Church of England in Northern and Central Europe. The Bishop is praised for moderation of language in respect to the High Church and Evangelicals, and his advice as to the Sabbath and its observance on the continent by our fellow-countrymen is highly commended. His "Farewell Counsels to the Clergy" are deemed so excellent that they prove that his selection for his present duties was a most judicious one, and "calculated to call forth thankfulness to God." The notice being a highly laudatory one, we wonder what the writer would have said had he been informed of the fact that the Bishop believes in Our Identity? That he has written a capital work on the subject, entitled, "The Anglo-Israel Post-bag," which has been one of the most useful publications, enabling his fellow clergy and laymen, many in number, to "see it."

We ask these pertinent questions because, in the same issue of the journal, there appears a most vicious review of the Rev. G. O. Barnes's "Eureka!" with which our readers are well acquainted. The reviewer declares Mr. Barnes's work "is the most extraordinary brochure that ever was written in support of one of the wildest delusions that ever was invented by speculative man." "Mr. Hine, of London" (described as Mr. G. Hine), "is said to have started this theory a few years ago," whereas, as we all know, Canon Abbadie, and Mr. John Wilson, of Brighton, published and taught Identity truth long before Mr. Hine ever thought of it. From some of the expressions used by the reviewer, such as "silly craze," "a theory which has not a leg to stand on," and the like, we conclude he is not unacquainted with the Rev. B. W. Savile's denunciations of our belief once so strongly held by himself; and having nothing particular to say against that view of God's truth, the reviewer abuses Mr. Barnes and ridicules Our Identity as what "Spurgeon and Max Müller have condemned." He concludes a very unfavourable notice of the Tea Tephi romance by the following condemnation of the entire pamphlet :—"Probably there never has been such a tissue of absurdities, or such a ludicrous series of legends invented, the crude fancies of disordered brains unconfirmed by anything approaching historic truth, as this wild speculation of Mr. Hine and his disciples respecting the identification of the English nation with Ten of the Twelve Tribes of Israel, and Queen Victoria's alleged possession of the throne of David!!! It is marvellous how any professing Christian can believe such a stupendous piece of folly." We think the three marks of admiration and the violence of the language of assertion, wholly unaccompanied by argument or reasoning of any sort, betray the source whence the above review has emanated. The reviewer extols Bishop Titcomb as one worthy of all praise, yet the worthy prelate is, as all the world knows, a firm adherent of this "wild speculation" regarding the identification of the British nation with the House of Joseph. He believes this "stupendous piece of folly," and teaches it, too, by his admirable publications and printed sermons, as the reviewer may learn any day by inquiring at Mr. W. H. Guest's, his lordship's publisher.

Digitized by Google

It is wonderful that the very work which the St. James's Chronicle condemns in the language we have quoted, is lauded to the skies by the reviewer of the Protestant Times of December 1, 1885. The latter treats the pamphlet thus :—

Eureka! The Church of My Fathers, and How and Where I Found It, or Rather was Found by It. London: S. Standring, 8 Finsbury Street; W. H. Guest, Paternoster Row, E.C.

This brochure of twenty-three pages is the record of an experience, we would to God that thousands more could undergo. It testifies to the unrest which ever exists until an earnest soul has the truth revealed. The author points to the declaration of God for His Church chosen in the patriarch Abraham. When the people realise and acknowledge this fact, then will the nation be born again; but so long as the Church of England is torn in sunder by false and ignorant preachers within and enemies without, the people must become more degenerate; and political charlatans and religious demagogues still separate them from the truth. "Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the Word of God."

We do not know if the writer of the above was an Anglo-Israelite, but we believe he cannot be far from the acknowledgment of that truth. Anyhow, we put the reviewer in the Protestant Times against him of St. James's Chronicle, and thus find the matter is at large. We need not be much frightened by the positiveness of the latter, or by his unsupported condemnation of views we have proved by Holy Writ to be true as the throne of God, and as enduring.

AN ANGLO-INDIAN ON OUR IDENTITY.

PART I.

WE find the following published in The Calcutta Englishman of August 4, 1885, and reproduce it in our columns as a paper on an interesting subject, written with great care and research, and generally on BANNER lines:—

A POLITICAL SERMON.

To the Editor of "The Englishman."

SIR,—Since you considered the sermon preached in Dublin recently by the Rev. F. F. Carmichael, a fit subject for your columns in your issue of the 6th ult., might I ask for a small space to follow out what the preacher has left?

He points out that Ezek. xxxviii. and xxxix. are only to be explained by the events at present transpiring between the Russian and British Empires; and he shows that "Gog, of the land of Magog, the Prince of Rosh, Mosk, and Tobl," is the Russian Empire, the only modern nation named in Holy Scripture. Hundreds and hundreds of Biblical students have for years past so interpreted "the land of Magog;" and hundreds and hundreds of political students have for years past seen these two mighty Empires being irresistibly drawn one against the other. But while the Rev. F. F. Carmichael preaches the coming of Russia against England, the Holy Spirit in Ezekiel tells of the coming of Russia against God's people Israel. And here I would quote the words of the Rev. W. Kay, D.D., Hon. Canon of St. Alban's, Rector of Great Leighs, Essex, and Chaplain to the Bishop of St. Alban's, in the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge Commentaries on Ezek. xxxviii.:—

"Restored Israel had been promised an everlasting 'covenant of peace.' Were all its enemies, then, finally put down? After Edom and Egypt and the other old world-powers had disappeared, would the subtle adversary find no other agents, by whom he might assault God's earthly kingdom?

"Not so. Israel's safety was guaranteed, but there would still be many surviving foes; and in the 'latter days' (ver. 16) these would be combined into one vast organisation by a mysterious leader, who would conceive the design of exterminating the people of God. His attempt should utterly miscarry, he and his whole host perishing 'on the mountains of Israel.'

". . . . That a distant future is contemplated is evident from ver. 8, 16 (comp. Rev. xx. 7—9).

"'The land.' Rather, 'of the land' Magog, the second of Japheth's sons . . . . represents the regions which of old went by the name of Scythia (including Russia and Tartary).

(Note.—The Rev. W. R. Churton, B.D., Fellow of King's College, Cambridge, and Hon. Canon of Rochester Cathedral, says, in the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge Commentaries on Gen. x., that "Magog, according to Josephus, was the ancestor of the Scythians, and denoted the tribes who peopled the country, now known as Russia or Georgia.")

"'Gog' probably signifies 'gigantic' (akin to Og and Agag).

"'Chief Prince of Meshech . . . . ,' or, 'Prince of Rosh, Meshech. . . . .' The name 'Rosh' is thought to be allied to Roxo lani, Araxes, Russ. He comes forward as the adversary of the 'Prince' mentioned in chaps. xxxii. 25; xxxiv. 24; in other words, as the enemy of Messiah—the Antichrist.

"Gog is challenged to do his best, to put out the whole of his skill as Commander-in-Chief of the invading forces."

I think I have quoted enough to show that "Holy Russia" is looked on by the Rev. Dr. Kay as the Antichrist, as the last of Israel's enemies. But mark, that this Antichrist does not come against the House of Judah (known to us as "Jews"), but against "restored Israel," "God's earthly kingdom," "the people of God," Dr. Kay tells us—against the "people of Israel" (ver. 14, 16), "gathered out of the nations" (ver. 8, 12), "rich in cattle and goods" (ver. 12), and "dwelling safely" (ver. 8, 11, 14), says the Holy Scripture—the "House of Israel" (chap. xxxix. 22, 25).

And mark that "Gog is challenged to do his best," &c. Is it necessary for Russia to bring the whole resources of its mighty empire against the few Jews in Palestine? Is it the Jews who bar Russia's way to Constantinople? Is it the Jews who keep holy "Rosh" from the Bosphorus? Is it the Jews who have acquired the protectorate of the holy places in Syria, which holy Russia thinks himself entitled to as "the House of Israel"? Is it the Jews who thwart Russian designs in Turkey, Asia Minor, and Central Asia? Is it the power of the Jewish Empire which Russia would like to break? Or is it the Empire of a people "called in Isaac's name?" of a people "redeemed" and baptized in Christ's name? of a people "richer" than any other people? of a people made up of all sorts of tribes from the continent of Europe? of—in short—the British? Are these not "the people" against whom you yourself, Sir, in an editorial on March 5, said that "some overpowering motive seems to be drawing Russia onward to a premature collision?" Aye, Sir, a very "overpowering motive"—even the Lord God Almighty (ver. 3, 4, 16, 17), to whom be praise and glory for showing us these things.

But there are allies with these mighty empires—Persia, Cush, Phut, Gomer, and Togarmah, with Russia; "Sheba and Dedan, and the merchants of Tarshish, with all the young lions thereof," with Israel.

We will first take the Russian allies—Persia, Ethiopia or

Digitized by Google

Cush, and Libya or Phut, Gomer, the house of Togarmah "of the North quarters," and many people. Persia we know, and we also know that our conduct, and Russian petting and gold, have made her a mere puppet in Russia's hands. Your own correspondent, in your issues of May 29 and June 20, tells us that our "concessions in the matter of the Afghan frontier have created an unfavourable impression in Persia;" and telegrams, in your issues of June 20, and July 14, inform us that Russian soldiers swarm in Persian territory, and use it "for the advance of Russian reinforcements."

Gomer originally inhabited the Crimea and Southern Russia. We may, therefore, put him down to mean the "provinces of the Don Cossacks."

Togarmah originally dwelt in Armenia, and by the Treaty of Berlin in 1878, Russia acquired 10,000 square miles in the North of Armenia, including Batoum, Ardahan, and Kars. "The house of Togarmah of the North quarters," is, therefore, the Northern portion of Armenia. Now, who are Ethiopia and Libya?

Ethiopia, or Cush, is usually shown in classical atlases as dwelling in Upper Nubia and Abyssinia. In the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge Commentaries map, preceding the book of Genesis, Cush is marked so; his eldest son, Seba, being put down in the peninsula between the blue and white Niles; his second son, Havilah, being placed on the Red Sea to the East of Abyssinia, now peopled by the Danakil; his third son, Sabtah, along the coastline of Massuah Bay; his fifth son, Sabtechah, on the Southern shore of the Gulf of Aden, inhabited now by the Somali; while his fourth son, Raamah, with his sons Sheba and Dedan, are shown as inhabiting the territory of Muscat in Arabia, and the Western coast of the Persian Gulf. The Rev. W. R. Churton, B.D., Hon. Canon of Rochester Cathedral, in the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge Commentaries on Gen. x., says that "Sheba and Dedan of Ham were afterwards dispossessed by Sheba and Dedan of Keturah, or by the Sheba of Joktan;" and that "Cush spread from Ethiopia on the Nile, to Babylon." And the Rev. E. P. Edrupp, M.A., Prebendary of Salisbury, Rural Dean of Bremhill, &c., commenting on Esther, writes that Herodotus mentions the Indians (i.e., the people about the Indus, the Punjaub, and Scinde—Herod. iv. 44; iii. 97, 98), together with the Ethiopians (vii. 9), as nations subject to the Persians; and that he describes both the Asiatic and African Ethiopians, as well as "Indians," as forming part of the great host which Xerxes led against Greece (vii. 69, 70). Homer also says that the Ethiopians "are divided into two sections, remotest of men, some towards the setting, some towards the rising sun" (Od. i. 23, 29). Ethnologists also tell us of ancient migrations of Cushites from Ethiopia in Africa, along the opposite shore of the Persian Gulf, to the borders of Western India; and so, in classical atlases, we find Ethiopians marked as occupying the shores of Gedrosia, now Beloochistan. The Daily Englishman of March 31, stated that "the district between the Murghab and Herirud, which Russia is now taking, is known by the name of Badgheis, from the Bad Kushan, or 'wind-worshippers;' who were also known as Hiyatheleh, or Ephthalitos, a section of the great tribe of Kushan, who colonised the region in the second or third century of Christ. It is now inhabited by Sarak Turkomans." It is, therefore, evident that Cushites or Ethiopians, besides inhabiting Upper Nubia and the South coast of the Gulf of Aden, also inhabited Belloochistan, Afghanistan, and Central Asia; and it is peculiar that England should be having trouble both in Nubia and Central Asia. The Abyssinians are, in these days, usually looked upon as the Ethiopians, and The Illustrated London News of June 21, 1884 (p. 614), tells us that "the language used in Tigre (the Northern portion of Abyssinia) is a corrupt dialect of the ancient Geez"—Geez being apparently the Keesh of the Egyptian monuments, "Prince of Keesh" being the name given to the Governor of Nubia under the Pharaohs. If the Abyssinians are meant to represent the Ethiopians of Ezek. xxxviii., here are two very significant pieces of news. The first is in The Jewish World, May 22, 1885, and states that King John of Abyssinia, who claims to be descended from King Solomon of Israel, has had constructed "a throne for himself similar to that of King Solomon," which he recently mounted for the first time amid great rejoicings and "pomp of state . . . . the act on the part of the King is unmistakably characteristic." The second is in the Plymouth Western Morning News, June 11, 1885, and states that "the latest development of Russian activity is in the direction of Abyssinia. An embassy from that country is expected at St. Petersburg this year (this is borne out by a paragraph in your own paper of July 8), and many Russians are finding Abyssinia a congenial sphere of operations. All this is rather remarkable. What can King John's Ambassador have to say to the Czar, and what can Russian adventurers do in Africa? True, Abyssinia is near the Soudan, and, . . . the establishment of Russian influence in Abyssinia might be a useful source of annoyance to the English in Egypt, and it is manifestly the policy of Russia to create as many centres of embarrassment to us as she can." What with Russian intrigues, and the "pomp" attending the ascension of King Solomon's throne, there is every likelihood of finding King John on the side of Russia in "the day of the great battle of the Lord." But Dr. Bellew, in his "Journal of a Mission to Afghanistan in 1857," states that "the Afghans profess to be descended from the youngest son of Kais," but are doubtful if Kais was the father of Saul, first King of Israel, or Kais the friend of Mahommed. Can they mean the youngest son of Cush? Or can they be the grandsons of Cush, Sheba, and Dedan, who, the Rev. Churton told us, "were afterwards dispossessed" of their land in Arabia, and who probably went East? For "Whitaker's Almanac" for 1885, p. 277, tells us that "Mahmud of Ghuzni (1001—1024) established himself at Lahore, and became the first of a line of Afghan kings, who reigned in India for more than 500 years." Mahmud of Ghuzni (or Cushni!) and his people, are called Arabs. These Afghans call themselves Pushtaneh, and inhabit Arachosia, on the slopes of the Hindu-Kush range; and a glance at Newman's Map of Afghanistan, will show the number of names of places bearing a similitude to the name Cush. Russia's Ethiopian ally is, therefore, either Abyssinia or Afghanistan, and events now occurring enable us to fix it as the former. For these reasons also, that when Russia takes Herat and simultaneously marches into Syria, the Afghans will look to us for help, and Russia will want an ally to keep our troops in Egypt.

(To be continued.)

THE NILE CAMPAIGN.—GENERAL ORDER TO THE TROOPS.

THE following is the text of General Butler's order, on the recommencement of hostilities in the Soudan:—

Special order to the officers, non-commissioned officers, and men of the Nile Frontier Brigade, by General W. F. Butler, C.B., A.D.C., November 29:—Events have again imposed on us the duties of service in the field. The enemy to whom we were so long opposed, and whose efforts so often proved fruitless against disciplined courage, mistaking the reasons for withdrawal from Dongola, now ventures to assume the offensive, and to approach our fortified positions. As the foremost soldiers of the Nile frontier force, we represent a great cause, and we have committed to us a glorious duty. We are the advanced guard of the oldest civilisation opposed to the oldest existing barbarians on earth. We are also the rear-guard of the army which all but saved Gordon from his murderers. The enemy who dares to advance against us is the same at whose hands our heroic soldier met his death. If the glory of Gordon's deliverance was not given to us, the hour of retribution upon his murderers has now arrived. Placed here as the instruments of divine justice, you are called upon to inflict that retribution, and when the time for striking comes you will remember the duty which is committed to you.—MORGAN CROFTON, Brigade-Major.—Daily Express, Dublin.

Digitized by Google

REMARKS THEREON BY THE REV. D. HANAN, B.D.

General Butler states that ours is the oldest civilisation; therefore, older than that of Greece or Rome. He says that the Arabs represent the oldest existing barbarians; therefore, dating back to earliest times. The oldest historic barbarian was a wild man, his hand was against every man, and every man's hand against him—Ishmael. The Arabs are recognised as his descendants. The civilisation which we represent dates from the same period; we have been ruled and civilised by the law of the God of Abraham. It is true, that when we are brought face to face with Arab hordes, then the oldest civilisation and the oldest barbarism are opposed. We wonder whether our General knows anything of the true import of his words—viz., that the seed called in Isaac, and the seed sprung from Ishmael, are fulfilling their predicted destiny?

THE FREE DISTRIBUTION FUND.

WE are glad to find that the two ladies who manage this Fund have been able to issue their second, most satisfactory, Annual Report, several copies of which we acknowledge with thanks. They have received £135 2s. 3d. during the year, and have very properly expended the whole, with the exception of a trifling balance in hand of £2 2s. 4d.

The Seed has been very widely sown, a long list of places in all parts of the globe testifying that the 550 parcels of publications sent out, exclusive of the 1,840 BANNER packets, have gone to the ends of the earth, as well as to a great many places in the United Kingdom. We have no doubt that this movement is yet in its infancy, and that ere long we shall have an agency created which will spread the knowledge of Our Identity with surprising rapidity. The Free Distribution Fund, at present, is being most zealously worked by Miss Lawrence and Miss Rush; and evidently God's blessing is resting on their labours. Copies of the Report should be obtained by all our friends from these ladies, and the result is sure to be satisfactory to the zealous Secretary and Treasurer of the little institution we all so highly value. Address: Miss Rush, 103, Burnt Ash Road, Lee, London; or Miss Lawrence, Rosslyn, Upper Teddington, Middlesex.

"A WORLD'S SABBATH."—BY R. E.

To the observant mind there are not wanting indications of the fulfilment of the predicted union of the stick of Joseph, which is in the hand of Ephraim, with the stick of Judah (Ezek. xxxvii.). We reckon not how near us are the things that are to come and shall come, though often the march of events can be distinctly seen, as in the following remarkable project which is for forming a "World's Day Rest League," a project propounded by a Mr. Wm. Lewis Jackson, of Chicago, who proposes to his Jewish brethren, that at a convention of representative Jews from all parts of the world, to be held in Paris in the year 1900, the Jewish Sabbath be transferred to the National Day of Rest by authoritative edict. He considers that human rapacity is becoming so great, that unless the working men of all denominations take measures to preserve a uniform day of rest, they may lose it altogether.

Surely we must be entering upon a new epoch, when a Jew advocates the setting aside of the Mosaic Sabbath in favour of the Christian Sabbath, a day that commemorates the resurrection of our Saviour Jesus Christ. Twenty years ago, the likelihood of such an event coming to pass in this nineteenth century, would have been thought absurd, but such a possibility is now supported by the better knowledge we have of God's purposes toward His chosen people. Should this transference of the Jewish Sabbath take place in this present century, it will be a long step forward to that day when one Shepherd shall unite the two elect peoples, as prefigured in Ezek. xxxvii.: "They shall be no more two nations, neither be divided into two kingdoms any more at all."

Croydon, February 4, 1886.

BRISTOL AND CLIFTON ISRAEL'S IDENTIFICATION ASSOCIATION.

THE Committee of the above have made the following arrangements as to the Monthly Lectures for the current half-year:—Friday, Jan. 29, Mr. E. W. Bird: "What Will be the Spiritual Condition of Our Country at the Coming of the Lord?" Friday, Feb. 26, Surgeon-General J. M. Grant, M.D.: "Objections—Their Origin and Importance Considered." Friday, March 26, A. Osborne, Esq.: "The Proof of Our Identity Deduced from the Holy Scriptures and Current Events." Friday, April 30, Miss V. M. Cox: "Present Day Problems, and How Our Identity Solves Them." Friday, May 28, Rev. H. Roe, of St. Ives, Cornwall: "The Colonies of the Anglo-Saxons and Israel." Friday, June 25, the Rev. C. W. Hickson, M.A., subject not yet arranged.

Correspondence.

TITHES—AN IDENTITY.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—Will you kindly allow me, as a new contributor to your paper, to add an important item to your article under the above heading in the BANNER of the 3rd inst. Immediately after I became a believer in Anglo-Israel truth, which was through reading "The Coronation Stone and England's Interest in it," by Mrs. G. A. Rogers, it occurred to me to try and ascertain whether the Anglo-Saxons had any idea as to tithes, and, on consulting Gibbon, I found that, even before they arrived in England, they had a distinct tradition with regard to them, and actually carried it into practice in their heathen rites. The account of this practice, as stated by Gibbon, I have since found in an amplified form in "The Making of England," by John Richard Green. Having stated that "the slave-hunting of the Saxons had features of peculiar horror," he gives the following account of it, which is an extract from a letter written by Sidonius Apollinaris, a Roman provincial, to a friend, who was an officer in the Channel Fleet which was "looking out for the pirate-boats of the Saxons":—"Before they raise anchor and set sail for their own home-land, their wont, when they are on the eve of returning, is to slay, by long and painful tortures, one man in every ten of those they have taken, in compliance with a religious use which is even more lamentable than superstitious; and for this purpose to gather the whole crowd of doomed men together, and temper the injustice of their fate by the mock justice of casting lots for the victims. Though such a rite is not so much a sacrifice that cleanses as a sacrilege that defiles them, the doers of this deed of blood deem it a part of their religion rather to torture their captives than to take ransom for them." What a contrast does this picture present to the humanity shown towards their prisoners of war by the descendants of these very people under the influence of Christianity! Faithfully yours,

EDWARD DENNY.

Laracor Vicarage, Trim, Co. Meath, February 4th, 1886.

L. P. writes:—I send you an extract which I think may well cause us to rejoice that we do not live in the 17th century, or some of our opponents would assuredly sentence us to the Pillory for blasphemy, or confine us in Bedlam for our "craze." This is the extract from E. W. Brayley's "History of Surrey," published in 1841:—"Among the multitude of religious sectaries in England in the reign of Charles the Second were those who styled themselves 'Sweet Singers of Israel.' Dr. Harris says they were a blasphemous sect, whereof one Jacob Taylor was head, and had a congregation of them at Guildford in Surrey; but was deservedly sentenced to the Pillory and Bedlam by the Lords in Parliament in the year 1675."

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor to be addressed:—"Philo-Israel," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

SUBSCRIPTIONS £ s. d.

Annual Subscription for one copy weekly (including the Twelve Double Numbers) post free - 0 7 6
Two Copies (including Double Numbers) - - 0 13 6
Three Copies " " " " - 1 0 4
Four Copies " " " " - 1 5 6
Six Copies " " " " - 1 16 4

Post Office Orders to be made payable at the head office, St. Martin's-le-grand. London, to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C., and W. H. GUEST & Co. 29, Paternoster-row, London.

The Editor cannot undertake to return rejected MSS. unless stamps for the purpose be sent. Parties requiring an answer should enclose a stamp.

Contents Bills and Show Cards may be obtained on application to the Publishers.

Advertisements should be sent to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

Prepaid Advertisements are inserted at the rate of 30 words for 1s. 4d.

FIRST VOLUME OF "THE BANNER OF ISRAEL" WANTED. Send to Robert Banks and Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London. 6s. will be returned for same.

METROPOLITAN ANGLO-ISRAEL ASSOCIATION, Palace Chambers, 9, Bridge-st., Westminster. President:

The RIGHT HON. VISCOUNT FOLKESTONE, M.P.

THE BIBLE READINGS

Will be continued EVERY TUESDAY AFTERNOON during March from 3 till 5.

On WEDNESDAY, MARCH 3, 1886,

A Lecture will be delivered (D.V.) by the Secretary at 7 p.m.

SUBJECT:—"REFLECTIONS AND STRICTURES ON THE NEW AND EXHAUSTIVE WORK ON ANGLO-ISRAEL DOCTRINE, ENTITLED 'JEHOVAH TRIUMPHANT.'"

JOSEPH JAS. SHRUBSOLE, Secretary.

PUBLISHED BY ROBT. BANKS & SON,

RACQUET COURT, FLEET STREET, E.C.

WORKS BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

The Geography of the Gates. With Map and six full page, and one double-page, Illustrations, printed on plate paper. 208 pages, in handsome cloth, gilt Price 3s. 6d., post free 3s. 10d.

An Elementary Digest or Sketch of the Chief Facts and Teachings of the Great Pyramid of Egypt. Adapted to the Unlearned and Unscientific. 56 pages, Illustrated with Diagrams, price 4d., post free 5d. 10th Thousand.

Our Identity with the House of Israel. Price 4d. Reprinted from "Clifton Chronicle Letters"

The Sisters of Harrowdale Rectory. A Tale of Great Interest for Young People on the Identity of Lost Israel; with splendid double-page frontispiece, Illustrating Harrowdale Rectory and Church. This book will be read by both young and old with the greatest interest. By Mrs. M. A. SEARSON. Price 2s. 6d. post free 2s. 9d.; handsome cloth, gilt, bevelled boards.

London: Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street.

A Thousand of the first edition sold in a few weeks for Great Britain, Ireland, Egypt, Natal, India, and America.

ISRAEL'S WORLD:

Origin and Destiny of British Race, Colonies, and Empire; according to Scripture, History, and Signs of Our Times.

BY REV. HENRY ROE.

Price 2d., post free 2½d. R. Banks & Son, Racquet-court

Also by the same Author. "Consecration," 4d.; "Going to Africa," 1s.; "Fernando Po Mission," 1s.; "West African Scenes," 2s. E. Stock, 62, Paternoster-row, London, E.C. Rev. H. Roe, St. Ives, Cornwall.

PRICE FIVE SHILLINGS.

"Freemasonry from the Great Pyramid of Ancient Times."

How formed among the rulers and skilled craftsmen to perpetuate an order of succession, passed along by the ancient Khadem. Khesed, Trustworthy (or modern Freemasonry) through the land of Media by the Chaldæs to the chosen people of Israel, and travelled as they travelled, dispensing their usages and customs among the earlier Anglo-Saxons. With Illustrations shewing the parts of the interior of the Pyramid to be removed, disclosing the long-hidden chambers, developing further research.

To be had of the Author, T. Holland, 2, Charles-street, Rutland Gate; Robert Banks & Son, Racquet court, Fleet st., E.C; and Guest, Hayworth & Co., 29, Paternoster-row

BOOKS FOR BIBLE STUDENTS.

Price 2s. 6d., post free (published at 4s.), cloth, gilt lettered

The Book of Hebrew Roots.

Showing the Ideal Meanings and Various Ramifications of the Principal Hebrew Radicals.

By BURLINGTON B. WALE.

Large Folio, Hand Coloured, 12s. 6d., uncoloured, 6s. 6d. without Introduction, 3s., by post 3d. extra.

Modern Hieroglyphics of the Apocalypse and Great Pyramid.

Illustrated by Ten Plates, with explanations. By A WATCHER. To which is prefixed an introduction, showing how recent events in the Eastern Question and the Church have worked towards a fulfilment of the Theory suggested in this Book.

Price 2d., by post 2½d. 12s. 6d. per 100 nett.

✣ A New Light. ✣

BY A E.I.

Author of "The New Old Story," "4,000 Years Old," &c.

This pamphlet is prepared specially for general distribution, and as a means of introducing "Our Identity" to persons unacquainted with the subject will be found particularly useful. It is printed on good paper, in clear type, and bound in primrose colour cover.

R. BANKS & SON Racquet-court, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

THE LINCOLNSHIRE BEDDING CO.'S FEATHER BEDS.

Beds sent direct from the Lincolnshire Feather Factory, Boston, Lincolnshire.

Great Reduction in Price to 9d. per lb.

THE LINCOLNSHIRE BEDDING CO. are now offering their celebrated FEATHER BEDS at the following greatly reduced prices:—

	s.	d.
No. 1.—SINGLE BED, BOLSTER, AND PILLOW, 6 ft. 3 in. by 3 ft. 6 in., weighing 40lbs.	30	0
No. 2—DOUBLE BED, BOLSTER AND TWO PILLOWS, 6 ft. 6 in. by 4 ft. 6 in. 50 lbs.....	37	6
No. 3.—DOUBLE BED, BOLSTER, and TWO PILLOWS, 6 ft. 6 in. by 4 ft. 6 in.. 55 lbs. ...	41	3
No. 4.—EXTRA DOUBLE-SIZED BED, BOLSTER AND TWO PILLOWS, 6 ft. 6 in. by 5 ft., 65 lbs.....	48	9

WARRANTED NEW AND SWEET.

Any size Bed only 9d. per lb., including Feathers, in white (bordered) tick, making, packing, wrapper, and carriage paid to any station in the United Kingdom. Superior Beds. Splendid Feathers, Linen Tick, 1s. per lb. Samples of Feathers and Tick, Price Lists, &c., post free. Agents wanted everywhere.

All Orders must be prepaid to A. W. HALL (London Agent), 132, Fleet Street, London, E.C., where Beds may be obtained. To ensure safe delivery of Goods, Cheques or P.O.O. may be post-dated ten days. Feathers only 9d. per lb., a large discount on three or more Beds. The trade supplied. Please mention this paper.

LUNG OWBRIDGE'S LUNG TONIC, TONIC

THE MIGHTY HEALER. TONIC

Save Your Lives by Taking TONIC

OWBRIDGE'S LUNG TONIC. TONIC

It has a power over diseases hitherto unknown in Medicine. TONIC

Are you at all Weak-chested, or inclined to be Consumptive, with just a touch of Cough now and then? TONIC

"Try this Wonderful Medicine." The Cough and Weakness will disappear as if by magic, and you will feel a strength and power you never had before. TONIC

HAVE YOU A COUGH? TONIC

A DOSE WILL RELIEVE IT. TONIC

HAVE YOU A COLD? TONIC

A DOSE AT BEDTIME WILL REMOVE IT. TONIC

Bronchitis and Asthma it relieves instantly TONIC

The Spasms of Coughing so dreadful in Whooping Cough become less with each dose of the medicine TONIC

Prepared by W. T. OWBRIDGE, Chemist, Hull TONIC

Sold in bottles 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s 6d. & TONIC

11s. by all Chemists and Patent Medicine TONIC

Vendors. Wholesale all London and TONIC

Provincial Houses. TONIC

J. THEOBALD & CO.S

PRIZE STATIONERY BOXES.

THE MOST EXTRAORDINARY OFFER EVER MADE,

and thoroughly genuine. The most wonderful value ever given for money, and produced only by the utter stagnation in every branch of industry, inducing the various manufacturers to combine with us in giving such value as has never before been offered.

READ CAREFULLY

this advertisement, as you have never before had the opportunity of obtaining so thorough and genuine a bargain. OUR PRIZE BOXES OF STATIONERY contain a handsome Leatherette Combination Writing Case, made of Imitation Crocodile Leather, and fitted with compartments for writing paper, envelopes, stamps, &c.; also twenty-four sheets of superior writing paper; twenty-four cream-laid envelopes, a handsome penholder and pencil, with rackwork adjustment; ink eraser, blotting paper, elastic securer, the perplexing 64 and 65 puzzle, a new puzzle, perplexing everyone, and sold separately at 6d. each at shops. By special arrangements with a Parisian House, we also give a beautiful Watch Charm, representing a Miniature Opera Glass, made of Ivorine, and containing a wonderful microscopic portrait of an actress or other celebrity, which the powerful lens in the glass magnifies to an enormous extent; also by special arrangement with a large publishing-house, a 4s. copyright song. Our boxes of stationery contain all the above; will be sent carriage free for 2s. 3d. It will at once be seen that this is most extraordinary value for money, and yet we guarantee all these for 2s. 3d. Then in addition to this we give gratis in every box a prize—Watches, Rings, Brooches, Pipes, Gold Pencil-cases, etc., as below. This we give away.

THIS IS NO LOTTERY.

Every person gets a prize gratis. Every person stands an equal chance of getting a Silver Watch, a Gold Ring, or other valuable prize. 500 boxes are got ready at a time, a prize is put in each box. Then the boxes are all fastened and tied up and mixed about till nobody can possibly tell what prize is in any box. The boxes are then piled up in rows, and as the orders arrive are got off strictly in rotation, so everyone stands a chance of getting 10 times the value of their money, while everybody gets more than full value. This offer may never appear again, and you should therefore send at once.

All boxes are sent carriage free, by Sutton and Co., carriers at the following prices:—One for 2s. 3d., two for 4s. 3d., three 6s.

The Coupon must be cut out and sent to us with all orders, otherwise we will not guarantee to supply as above.

B. of I. COUPON.
This Coupon entitles the holder to Prize Boxes of Stationery at above prices.
Signed,
J. THEOBALD & CO.

We guarantee to put in every 500 boxes 4 Silver Watches, 4 Real Gold Rings, 12 Real Gold Pencil-cases, 30 Good Briar Pipes Silver Mounted and otherwise, 6 Silver Brooches, 6 Silver Lockets, 6 Silver Bracelets, 12 Silver Scarf-Pins, 6 Sets of Magic Lanterns and Slides, complete, 20 Gentleman's Handkerchiefs, 20 Ladies' ditto, 50 Bagpipes (as advertised by us at 1s.), 12 Pairs' Scissors, 12 Pocket Knives, and the rest in Packs of Playing Cards, Conjuring Tricks, Photographs, &c.

Special Notice.—This advertisement is copyright, and any person infringing the same will be prosecuted.

J. THEOBALD & CO.,
(Established in Kensington over 50 years),
6 and 7, Bath Place, Kensington High Street, Kensington London, W.

EUREKA!

This remarkable pamphlet has already reached its Third Edition, and can now be had containing an excellent Portrait and a short Biographical Account of the Author, the Rev. G. O. BARNES. Post free 7d.; cheap edition, 2½d.

Guest, Hayworth & Co., 29, Paternoster-row, E.C.; S. Standring, 8 and 9, Finsbury-street.

Health Aids — Write for this valuable little Book.

Health Aids — 50 YEARS RECORD of Facts, Principles, and Discoveries Relating to the Improvement and Preservation of Human Life on Earth. By Dr. Samuel Birley, M.D. Ph.D. Articles 1, 2, 3, and 4, complete in book form, post free 2 stamps—

Health Aids — GORDON I. MURRAY & Co., 33, CASTLE ST., HOLBORN, LONDON

Printed for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C. PUBLISHED BY GUEST, HAYWORTH, & Co., 29, PATERNOSTER-ROW. WEDNESDAY, FEB. 24, 1886. [All rights reserved.

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."

(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India.)

"And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the Forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS of the EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. X., No. 479. Entered at Stationers' Hall.] WEDNESDAY, MARCH 3, 1886. [DOUBLE NUMBER, TWOPENCE.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

PAGE

The London Riots and the Lesson They Teach Us 85
An Anglo-Indian on Our Identity.—Part II. 86
The Kingdom of God and the Church of God. By the Rev. Denis Hanan, B.D. 87
"The Church of the Firstborn" 88
What and Where Is the Church of Christ? 89
A Fresh Clerical Objection Answered 90
Identity Difficulties Answered. Our Cui Bono? Opponents.—Part II. 91
A Lecture by Surgeon-General J. M. Grant, M.D. 92
A Postal Step Towards the Federation of the Empire 93
Faith in God. A Sermon by the Rev. C. Godfrey Ashwin, M.A. 94
"The Urgent Cry of Heathendom" 96
Transfers of Land 96
True Apostolic Succession. By G. O. Barnes, Mountain Evangelist.—Part I. 97
The Signification of the Name Britain. By the Rev. Eliezer Bassin, M.S. 98
Progress in Port Hope, Ontario, Canada 98
Correspondence 98
Israel's Scripture and Prayer Union 99

THE LONDON RIOTS AND THE LESSON THEY TEACH US.

THE serious events which took place on Monday, February 8th, and following days in London, when the West-end was given up, by a lamentable error of judgment on the part of the police authorities, to the cruelties of a secularist-communist mob, have some crumbs of comfort for us, if we only recognise in them the hand of our God tempering correction with mercy. In the first place, though the wealthiest part of the metropolis was absolutely in the power of a cruel mob of the dangerous classes for several hours, by God's restraining mercy not a life was lost, though many persons were severely injured; and next, though the riot was a most serious one, the like of which for violence has not been witnessed in London within the memory of living men, the mob, though master of the situation, dispersed at last, and disappeared Eastwards without the coercion of authority, and apparently by a voluntary impulse. How different would the event have been in Paris! The riot would have speedily developed into an insurrection and bloodshed, following the license of those four hours' unchecked rioting and plunder. The loss sustained by the looted shops is said to have amounted to at least £50,000, a sum which it seems to us is a very moderate price to pay, considering the frightful negligence of the authorities, who, fully warned, took not the very smallest precautions before the outrage, and while it was proceeding with their full cognizance close to the headquarters of the force in Scotland Yard, did not lift a finger to stop or stay it. Here, then, were signal mercies our God extended to our metropolis in the very midst of a correction which has fallen on us to warn us, in love, of the perilous character of our nation's present proceedings, for then the town was helplessly in the hands of a riotous mob who seemed for the moment to be masters of the situation!

But what was the ostensible cause of the mad outburst of which we are all so naturally ashamed? The dire distress which actually exists among our labouring classes brought a large gathering of these together to take counsel what they ought to do to obtain relief. The occasion was seized by a mob of Socialists and red Republicans, aided by the thieves and robbers of the metropolis, and excited by the speeches of their leaders, Messrs. Hyndman, Burns, Champion, and others, to commit a dangerous riot, during which, the police being off their guard and the people paralysed, an enormous amount of destruction and robbery took place in several of the richest and most frequented thoroughfares of the West-end. The unemployed want employment, and in these dark and troublous times cannot obtain it in our own land, where we are already too many to find the means to live. But all this time God has provided for our surplus population a large number of colonies, immense in territorial expanse, which are grievously in want of just that human material the bone and muscle of which we have too much. The colonial authorities, on the other hand, are prepared to deal very liberally with all those who will go out to occupy the vacant lands. The late riots, then, teach us this additional lesson. They certify to our distressed people that this land of ours is again once more, as it was in former times, "too strait" for us (Isa. xlix. 19, 20). The cry is going up from tens of thousands of hearts to-day, "The place is too strait for me; give place to me that I may dwell." These troubles which we are passing through are God's hints to His people that they must obey His voice, and, leaving their island home, prepare to occupy with their hundreds of thousands that portion of the great African and North American or Canadian Continents available for emigration, to say nothing of the Australasian British Colonies, all which have vast masses of land where there are yet no cultivators. These lands will give the London unemployed any amount of space on which to spread themselves, and fields which only require cultivation to make them "blossom as the rose."

The riots of course will impress sharply on our dull nation's mind the fact that things have come now to a crisis, and that the difficulty will have to be met, as it must and ought to be met, at once. Facilities must be given to the unemployed to learn where their presence is most required as emigrants, and what facilities each country or colony offers to those willing to go out. No such help in connection with the British Government now exists, though abroad—in the United States, for instance—official aid is given to all immigrants in each State to ascertain where they had best proceed to settle, and how many and what advantages each State guarantees to those who wish to become citizens in the great Republic. Our Government must now take this matter in hand at home, and, as one of the lessons of the riots, open Governmental offices to facilitate and aid emigration on a national scale, pointing out to each inquirer how he must set about his work, where he and his family had best proceed, and what help he can secure by going under the auspices of the State. Meanwhile, let our readers note the kindness and consideration of our God for His people. He had a lesson to teach us which we would not otherwise learn. He sent the sharp experience of the riots to make us reflect upon the vast and seething mass of humanity now dangerously increasing in our midst without hope of employment in these islands, and to lead us to see that He has given us enormous tracts of habitable land in the favourable latitudes of our British Colonies where these very masses may go out as "shoals" of emigrants, according to the prophecies (Gen. xlviii. 16), and establish the outland dominions of His people Israel in wealth, prosperity, godliness, and contentment. In reference to the attempt of Messrs. Hyndman and his friends to force this nation by blood and pillage to surrender their wealth for their starving fellow-citizens our readers may dismiss their fears. The sad events of Monday were, humanly speaking, an accident caused by the remissness and lack of judgment of the police authorities. But the people once roused are well able now to put down all the violence Mr. Hyndman can command. Over a hundred thousand free men are prepared to act in the City of London only as special constables; the Volunteer regiments in London are ready to defend the streets; and the police, aroused at last, are not likely to allow London again to be put even for five minutes under the violent, cruel rule of the Socialists, who are a contemptible minority in the midst of God's people Israel. And for this we praise the Lord.

Digitized by Google

AN ANGLO-INDIAN ON OUR IDENTITY.

PART II.

(Concluded from page 82.)

Now who is Libya, or Phut? Ancient atlases show that part of Barbary called Tripoli as Phut, while modern atlases part the "Libyan desert" on the Western boundary of Egypt; and it is a curious fact that the Mahdi's rebellion was originally started, and was also kept up, by Mahomed-es-Snouci, the long-armed prophet of Tripoli, the head of the powerful Mussulman order of Sid Abd-el-Kader el Djilani, that order supplying the money and the arms. The "Biblical Dictionary" says that Phut seems to have been an insignificant nation generally mentioned in combination with Cush, and apparently subordinate thereto. The name only occurs six times in the Bible, and all we can infer from these passages is that Phut was an African nation, contiguous to Egypt and Ethiopia. The conclusion arrived at in the "Biblical Dictionary" is that Phut is represented by the modern Nubia, called on the Egyptian monuments "To-Pet," or the "Land of the Bow." The Nubians are, and always have been, split up into tribes, and subordinate to the adjacent countries, either Egypt or Abyssinia. Egypt is now casting them off. Will Abyssinia take them up again, and revive the ancient "Kingdom of Keesh?" She has her chance, for a telegram in your issue of July 24, tells us that "the British Government is making arrangements with the Egyptian authorities for the relief of the Kassala garrison by employing the Abyssinian Commander-in-Chief Ras-al-Oula, and his forces." Abyssinia hates Egypt and the Turk, and so does the Nubian; and with Russian gold flowing in that direction, Abyssinia will be able to entice the Soudanese to help her to retaliate on Egypt for its invasion in 1875, and on us for our campaign of 1868. We have lighted the fire against ourselves in the Soudan. When Russia gives the word, Abyssinia will have no difficulty in leading its tribes against the Israelites in Egypt.

Now for England's allies—"Sheba and Dedan, and the merchants of Tarshish, with all the young lions thereof." It has been shown above that Cush's descendants, besides occupying Nubia and Abyssinia in Africa, dwelt also in Beloochistan and Afghanistan. But the Rev. Churton told us that the Sheba and Dedan of Keturah possessed Arabia after the Sheba and Dedan of Cush left it. Do Ezekiel's Sheba and Dedan, therefore, stand for Afghanistan and Beloochistan, or for the people of the Arabian peninsula? For the former; and for these reasons Afghanistan has received a subsidy from us since 1879, while the present Amir has publicly proclaimed his alliance with the English. Beloochistan has received a subsidy from us since 1854, and is bound by treaty to oppose all enemies of the British Government, and to have no foreign relations with other States. She must also permit British troops to occupy any part of her territory. While Arabia is out of the question on account of the antipathy of all its people to the Sultan of Turkey, and as we are bound to uphold Turkey against Russia, we need not look for help from the Arabian peninsula.

Who is Tarshish? Psa. lxxii. 10; Isa. xxiii. 1; lx. 9; Ezek. xxvii. 12; Jonah i. 3; identify Tarshish with either Carthage in Africa, or with Tartessus, a wealthy colony in Spain, of vast commerce. 1 Kings ix. 26, 28; x. 11—22; xxii. 48; 2 ch. ix. 21; xx. 36, 37; however, indicate that ships sailed from Ezion-Geber at the head of the Gulf of Akaba to Tarshish, and that the ships of Tarshish went to Ophir. And here we must remember that the "Ships of Tarshish" were Israelite ships trading with or to Tarshish. And with regard to Ophir, some think that it was on the East coast of Africa; others that it was in Arabia; while others again infer that it was in India, from the articles imported being Indian (apes, peacocks, algum-woods, spices, precious stones, gold, ivory, &c. "Algum," or "Almug," is supposed to be sandal-wood). "Granting that they came from India," says the Right Rev. Lord Bishop of Bath and Wells, in the S. P. C. K. Commentaries, "Ophir in Arabia might equally have been the Emporium whence Solomon's ships brought them."

There was no Suez Canal in Solomon's days, and Ezion-Geber was built for the gold trade with Ophir (near Aden?). Ships would not go down the Red Sea and all round the African continent to reach either Carthage in Libya or Tarsessus in Spain. For those ports they would sail direct from Tyre through the Mediterranean. The long route is about 10,000 miles, and the direct route about 1,500 to 2,000; and Solomon's merchants were not fools. We may, therefore, look East for Solomon's new Tarshish. "Every three years once came the ships of Tarshish, bringing gold and silver, ivory and apes and peacocks. These are not found in Spain, nor are peacocks found in Africa. India is the home of the peacock, and an M.A. of Cambridge tells us that the words used in 2 Chron. ix. 21, for "ape" and "peacock," and possibly also for "ivory," are of Sanscrit origin. The P. & O. S. N. Co.'s mileage from Suez to Point de Galle is 3,425. But Solomon's navy probably coasted, scarcely ever losing sight of land, in which case the mileage would be nearly double that run by our modern steamers. They would likely anchor, too, at night, so that, with the time required for purchasing and loading the cargo, they would probably only reach Ceylon and get back "every three years once." As the "peacock" points to India, and the "precious stones" and "spices" to Ceylon, we unhesitatingly declare that Solomon's "ships of Tarshish" were East-Indiamen, and that India is the Tarshish to which his ships traded. And this is borne out by Ezek. xxxix. 2, which says that Russia shall "come up from the sides of the North" (marginal rendering)—India being on the East "side," and Syria on the West "side" of Russia's Southern boundary.

Digitized by Google

With reference to Tarshish being India, note this cutting from the Englishman, June 6, 1885, the May number of the Voice of India contains the following summary:—

The Anglo-Russian question still continues to be the principal topic of discussion in the Indian Press. Many of our native contemporaries are as jealous of British prestige as the most patriotic of Anglo-Indians could desire, while the apparently humiliating position which England occupies in the present aspect of affairs would seem to distress not a few of them. They all unite in distrusting Russia, and the prospect of peace, with a few exceptions, is hailed with joy, though a permanent peace appears doubtful.

This, together with the spontaneous outbursts of loyalty and offers of service from prince and gentleman and peasant—even from Nepaul and Cashmere also—from Cape Comorin to Peshawur, shows how that England's Government has been "a blessing" (Gen. xviii. 18) to the merchants of Tarshish, with all the Native Princes thereof, and how that the Lord is shewing His people "the power of His works," and giving them "the heritage of the heathen" (Psa. cxi. 6).

Anglo-Indians, you may rest in peace, and trust to the loyalty of Tarshish and its young lions, for the Lord's Spirit is working among them for our good; and a day will soon come when all India "shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea." Let each one of us try to hasten that day, and bring India to our King.

Rulers of India, our God has in these "latter years" revealed to us our allies and opponents in that "great battle of the day of the Lord." The opposing armies are Russia, Persia, Abyssinia, Nubia, and the vast hordes of Cossack, Circassian, Georgian, and Turkoman "horsemen riding upon horses," on the one side; England, India, Afghanistan, and Beloochistan on the other. Persia, Abyssinia, and Nubia, are not quite ready yet, but the Lord has given Russia the opportunity of getting them so, by a short period of peace. Note the hand of the Lord working for us, His sons, Israel. He made Lord Beaconsfield obtain for us the Protectorate of His Land; He made Mr. Gladstone acquire Egypt, and prepare the nations for His great day; and now He has raised up Lord Salisbury to consolidate our own allies, and to give the enemy breathing time to consolidate his. If Lord Salisbury works in close union with Germany, Austria, and Italy, he will cause Russia (and France, too) to pause in her onward career, for such a combination is too strong for her at present. But it cannot be a long pause, for the whole earth is groaning under the immense military burdens which are now kept up—and for what? For the settlement of the question, "Who shall have Egypt, Assyria, and Palestine, the carcase of the moribund Turk?" Who shall? Who dare take it? It must be given to Ephraim-Israel and Judah-Israel when the former is found (Ezek. xxxvii. 16, 19, 22, &c.); and he is found, the Ten "lost sheep of the House of Israel" (Matt. xv. 24). Isaiah (lxii.) tells us that these "sought out" (ver. 12) and "redeemed" sheep "shall be called by a new name (ver. 2), which the mouth of the Lord shall name." Ephraim is called an "heifer" (in Hos. x. 11; iv. 16), the Hebrew word being Engel; and Jeroboam's Kingdom, the Ten Tribes, is called (in Amos. vii. 9, 16), the "house of Isaac." Isaac got his name from Abraham's "laughter" (Gen. xvii. 19), the Hebrew for which is "tsahak;" so that Ephraim-Israel's new name is "Engel-tsahak," which in the rolling course of years has become "Anglo-Saxon!" Could the Word of God give us stronger proof of our origin? But God has said, "I will bring them (i.e., Ephraim) again out of Egypt, and will gather them out of Assyria" (Zech. x. 7; Hosea 11, 8, 9). And as the Engel tsahak is now in Egypt, and is the protector of Assyria and Palestine, well may Isaiah join these three together in his chapter xix. 24, 25! And Judah shall be restored "in the midst of them" (Ezek. xvi. 53).

Israel is described (Ezek. xxxviii.) as "dwelling safely," occupied apparently with its "cattle and goods," and perfectly astonished at Russia's conduct. Tarshish, &c., are also astonished at the vast preparations made against a people who "don't want to fight." Can anything better describe the first feelings of England and India, when they saw Russia's hand openly displayed? We are told that England's navies are useless, and that her armies are composed of mere boys; and that her coaling-stations and ports are all defenceless, "without walls, bars, or gates." And yet her people are apathetic and indifferent, and have become so meek and humble as to have made themselves the laughing-stock of the World! And who has made them so? Mr. Gladstone and his colleagues? No! But the Lord God of Israel, who never slumbers nor sleeps, and who will never rest until He has fixed His sons in the lands which He has put under their protection (Gen. xxviii. 15). Mr. Gladstone and his colleagues were only His earthly instruments, and when the nation recognizes that "there is a God that ruleth in redeemed Israel," then will party politics disappear, and all will unite in upholding the prestige of God's earthly kingdom, and in giving peace to a distressed and heavily-burdened world.

The Treaty of Berlin, and the fear of Germany and Austria, turned Russia from operations on the North shore of the Bosphorus. The spontaneous howl of "the merchants of Tarshish, with all the young lions thereof," has checked his advance in Central Asia. His next move will be through Armenia and Persia to the Bosphorus and the Suez Canal. When that comes, "look up, for your redemption draweth nigh;" for Ezek. xxxviii. 20, tells of God's presence on the earth, and xxxix. 8, tells of "the great day of the Lord," and don't believe those who prophesy of "peace, peace," for the day of the Lord is a time of trouble, and of wars; but be calm, and trust in the Lord, for He shall deliver all those who watch for His coming.

Yours faithfully,
A WATCHMAN IN ISRAEL.

August, 1, 1885.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD AND THE CHURCH OF GOD.

BY REV. DENIS HANAN, B.D.

I PROPOSE in this paper to endeavour to give the outlines of an answer to the questions,

1. Are the words "kingdom of God" or of "heaven," and "Church of God," synonymous?
2. Are the things the same?

These names have been regarded as interchangeable, and it is but very recently that the assumption has been questioned. For many years I, in common with the many, was satisfied with the general opinion, but recent circumstances have produced research which has caused me to think that while the names (so to speak) overlap one another, yet that they are not synonymous; for instance, that it would not have been a right use of words for the Baptist to have proclaimed: "Repent, for the Church of God is at hand," or for St. Luke to have written: "As for Saul he made havock of the kingdom of God." When our blessed Lord taught men to pray, "Thy kingdom come," He did not mean the prayer to be regarded as granted when the Church was formed on the day of Pentecost. We pray to-day for the coming of the kingdom of God, although the Church of God has been so long in existence. The Church of God at Corinth, or elsewhere, was not ever called the kingdom of God; and there was no synonymous use of the words then, which would have led the Ephesian elders to suppose that feeding the Church meant feeding the kingdom.

Digitized by Google

In the Old Testament the words, Church of God, do not occur; and St. Stephen's reference to the "Church in the Wilderness" is to be understood of "the congregation," as in the Revised Version. The equivalents for the kingdom of God, and kingdom of heaven, are kingdom of Jehovah, and a kingdom which shall never be destroyed. Therefore, in endeavouring to reply to the second question—viz., "Are the things the same?" we obtain our knowledge of the kingdom from both Old Testament and New Testament, our knowledge of the Church from the New Testament alone.

The kingdom of God, as set forth in the Old Testament, was confined to the nation of Israel, and consisted in Divine Rule in temporal and spiritual things—i.e., in civil administration and in worship. Thus the congregation in the Wilderness was not the kingdom. The nation in Canaan was. The judges ruled under God, and the appointed worship was part of the state polity and inseparable from it.

THE HOLY ONE OF ISRAEL was THE KING of the Kingdom of God. The people erred in that they forgot this when they thought that a change to hereditary monarchy would be an improvement; but the kingdom continued to be the kingdom of God. Saul's wilful policy would have altogether subordinated the Divine worship to his own rule; he was, therefore, set aside; and under David and Solomon the union of the civil and religious elements was perfectly established.

When Ephraim-Israel revolted, it ceased to be the kingdom of God. The divinely-appointed worship was necessarily severed from the state, although Ephraim was the first-born then, as ever; the kingdom remained with Judah. Judah possessed it up to the captivity (and during the seventy years its nucleus does not seem to have been altogether removed from Jerusalem); but after the captivity ceased, and up to the time of our Lord, we are taught by His words, that the kingdom in all that was essential to its existence remained with that tribe, else the existence of the kingdom could not have been recognised by our Lord when He said, "The kingdom of God shall be taken from you and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof."

This kingdom of God was then to be transferred to a nation, not to the Church which was to be called out from among all nations. A temporal state and executive was to be united with the true worship, and thus to perpetuate the kingdom of God; and to be enabled to bring forth the fruits thereof.

Rome long since recognised this, and after much striving succeeded in the year 610 in uniting the ecclesiastical polity with temporal power. She then assumed the position of being the kingdom of God. She retained this power for 1,260 years, and she is yet striving to regain the lost possession because she is conscious that the Church and State in union constitute the kingdom which is never to be destroyed, and that although the Church may exist by itself, and the State by itself, yet by union only can the kingdom of God be formed.

Manifestly it was not God's will that the question should be obscured to the end by the existence of branches of the Apostolic and Catholic Church in State union with temporal power. The Church of Rome was apostate. The Church of Ireland was distinctly protesting, yet both were disestablished at the same time; and, therefore, in the Western Church there is at present but one instance in which the State is in union with the Church of Apostolic foundation, and strange to say, that union dates from the very period when the kingdom was taken from Judah, according to our Lord's prediction. This is in England, and with all humility, but with truth, we may say, that England has brought forth fruit; and by the outpouring of the Good Spirit, may she be enabled to bring forth more abundantly, to the honour and glory of our God. Thus in reply to our question, it can, I think, be shown, that although in the kingdom of God the State element and the Church element are necessarily united; yet the Church is not the kingdom; and also it is manifest that the Church can exist, and ever has and does exist, perfectly in herself apart from all State connexion. So also the State can exist and be God-fearing apart from connexion with the Church; but the kingdom of God consists of the divinely appointed State and the divinely appointed Church in union.

In the Eastern Church, as far as I am aware, there is but one State in which a similar union with the Apostolic Church exists—namely, in Russia; and this is suggestive in view of the struggle which many foresee between Britain and that power. But there are great points of distinction between the position of Britain and Russia: 1st, the faith of the Church of England is purer far than the purest form of that professed by the Greek Church; 2nd, the liberties of the people of England are based upon the Mosaic code, and her sovereigns are not autocrats; 3rd, the origin of the British people connects them with the original representatives of the kingdom of God, and of the throne of David.

Nevertheless, before these things are made plain there will doubtless be a fearful struggle for the mastery, and then will come the full manifestation to the world of the kingdom which shall "come," and shall "never be destroyed," which "shall not be left to other people," but be secured to "the people of the saints of the Most High," which having been set up, as foretold, in the days of the opposing powers, as a stone, has grown and conquered, until it bids fair to be the mountain which shall fill the whole earth, and restore the theocracy, the Divine rule in temporal and spiritual things; the kingdom which shall "stand for ever," whose "King shall reign in righteouness," whose "princes shall rule in judgment."

"THE CHURCH OF THE FIRSTBORN."

THE expression, "the Church of the firstborn" occurs, we believe, but once in the Scriptures, and the passage is to be found in Heb. xii. 23, part of a highly figurative portion of the Word, which has its parallel in the avowed allegory of Gal. iv. 23 to 31.

In Heb. xii. 18—23 we have a statement made to the Hebrew converts to Christ, couched in allegorical language they would well understand as Jews just escaped from the bondage of the law. The apostle pointed out in verses 14 to 17 that those who apparently were running well, and were entitled by their birth to the position of the holders of the birthright, might, like Esau, fall short of "the grace of God." The grace, mercy, and pity of God to saved sinners was the point of the apostle's admonition, to which verses 18 to 25 led up. They were not come as Christian believers, he said, like Israel at Sinai, to a God of terrors—a God who appeared to men apart from Christ—who manifested Himself as Jehovah did at Sinai in the majesty of the law, "as a palpable and kindled fire" (R. V., margin), "as darkness and tempest, and trumpet sound and voice of words;" so terrible that men could not bear to hear them, and Moses himself did "exceedingly fear and quake"—to see whom was terror, and even to touch the mountain where He dwelt for the moment, death by stoning. That was not the dispensation (St. Paul intimated) to which the Hebrew converts had now come under Christ. The dispensation of Sinai was one of fear and dread, where God appeared as the Holy God, out of Christ—vengeance against sin—pure justice without mercy—and therefore a horror, terror, and fear to the unsaved sinner. This was the dispensation of the law—the Mosaic; the one of the ceremonial ritual and of the two tables, which imposed burdens on men they could never sustain, for they could not keep the law's holy requirements. This, said St. Paul, was not the kind of dispensation to which the Jewish convert had now come; and the attainment therein was theirs now by grace. What were its outward circumstances? To begin with. They had come now not to Sinai and to the legal dispensation with its demands, but "to Mount Zion, to the city of the living God, to the heavenly Jerusalem, to innumerable hosts of angels, to the general assembly and church of the firstborn, who are enrolled in heaven, and to God the judge of all, to the spirits of just men made perfect, and to Jesus the Mediator of a new covenant, and to the blood of sprinkling that speaketh better than Abel." The contrast was between Mount Sinai as representing the law, and Mount Zion as portraying the Gospel of God's grace in Christ. The law spoke in thunders; the Gospel in grace, mercy and love in Christ Jesus. Zion represented the City Church of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem as contrasted with the earthly Sinai; the hosts of angels, "myriads" in number, acting as Jesus' messengers of grace, and the general assembly and church or congregation of the firstborn—those that are enrolled in heaven. It represented, too, God the judge of all dead men made perfect in Jesus, and finally Jesus Himself, the Mediator of a New Testament or covenant.

Digitized by Google

The question arises whether the "congregation of the firstborn" is the "congregation of Christ"? We think not. The firstborn is indeed the Lord Jesus, but His name appears the last in the series, as St. Paul summed up the case as the climax and antitype, He to whom all the rest lead up as the King, Redeemer, Saviour. If the "firstborn" be not Christ whom then does the word represent? Israel was God's "firstborn" in Egypt, as Exod. iv. 22 testifies. "Thou shalt say unto Pharaoh, Thus saith the Lord, Israel is My son, My firstborn." But in the time of Jeremiah the prophet (900 years afterwards), when Ephraim, the Ten Tribes, were outcast from Palestine, when they had become an idolatrous heathen people, then was God's purpose regarding the House of Israel declared afresh: "I am a Father to Israel, and Ephraim is My firstborn" (Jer. xxxi. 9). "God changes not, and therefore the sons of Jacob are not consumed" (Mal. iii. 6). He was the Father of Ephraim-Israel in Malachi's days, as in Jeremiah's and Moses' time, and regarded Ephraim of the Ten Tribes in B.C. 397 as His own son, His first-born.

When the Lord Jesus came He was revealed as the expected ruler "over His people Israel" (Matt. ii. 6), and, therefore, at the date of the first advent the House of Israel was still as "Ephraim," God's "firstborn." The congregation and Church of the first-born mentioned by St. Paul in Heb. xii. 23 were consequently clearly the congregation or church of Ten Tribed Ephraim, just developing into being in St. Paul's days, and since that time expanded into the "great and mighty British nation," possessing the Gates, the wealth, the Heathen and Colonial Empires, the Sabbaths, and the laws of God, our Bibles, our Prayer Books, and our tracts. This is the dispensation of the Gospel, and if so what greater privilege can there be than to belong in it to the Church of Ephraim-Israel, "God's firstborn," whose names are enrolled in heaven: the earthly representatives of a system of grace which has in heaven its complements in Mount Zion, the heavenly Jerusalem, in God the Judge of all, and in the Mediator of the new covenant, to be given to the House of Israel (Jer. xxxi. 33, 34), even the Lord Jesus Christ.

That we are not wrong in this interpretation is partly allowed by some of our commentators, and is seen by reference to the strictly parallel passage written by the same apostle in Gal. iv. 22 to 31. There, too, the two Houses are contrasted as in Heb. xii. 18—23. Mount Sinai is again there the type of the legal dispensation; Hagar that of the Jewish dispensation of Jerusalem "that then was." What was the contrast? Jerusalem the free, the one above—our "Mother." Herein, as in Heb. xii. 23 (when writing of "the Church of the first-born"), the apostle pointed to Ephraim the Ten Tribes, since he quoted as descriptive of the heavenly Jerusalem Isa. liv. 1 and 2, a passage distinctly pointing to Ephraim, of the House of Joseph or Israel, in these words: "Rejoice, thou barren that bearest not. Break forth and cry, thou that travailest not; for the desolate hath many more children than she which hath an husband." "We," said the apostle, "are, as Isaac was, the children of promise." Israel were in the latter days to become the sons of the living God, true believers in the Lord Jesus Christ, as Hosea i. 10 distinctly indicates. St. Paul, therefore, in Heb. xii. 23 was writing what was strictly correct under the circumstances of the case, and we joy and rejoice incessantly that in this, as in all other respects the New Testament has clear references to the Ephraim-Israel, the British folk, as the Church of the firstborn—those enrolled in heaven but working for the Lord in the world below, "blossoming, and budding, and filling the face of that world with fruit" (Isa. xxvii. 6).

WHAT AND WHERE IS THE CHURCH OF CHRIST?

WE ask these two questions, "What is the Church of Christ?" and "Where is the Church of Christ?" because the circulars and notices put forth by the Church Missionary Society in respect to the "Special Simultaneous Meetings," held in 160 odd centres in England and Wales during the month of February, leaves us in some doubt on the subject. These notices distinctly indicate that, according to the view of the Church Missionary Society, the Church of Christ is the Church of England, or perhaps the whole of this favoured Christian nation occupying the British Islands. Let the following quotations indicate our meaning, and also our perplexity.

In one circular, signed F. E. Wigram, hon. sec. Church Missionary Society, we have the following: "The purpose (of these meetings) is to set forth, plainly and solemnly, the claims of the unevangelised heathen and Mahommedon world upon the Church of Christ—to emphasise the risen Saviour's one great last command, the only one recorded in various forms in all the four Gospels, and in the Acts of the Apostles, to describe the world's need of the Gospel; to illustrate the blessings which God has already given to the hitherto poor and inadequate efforts put forth by His Church; to press home the obligation lying upon all Christians to take a share in the work; some by personal service, some by large and liberal gifts, some by systematic work in making the cause known to others, and all by prayer and influence."

What we want to know is whether this invitation is addressed to the Protestant body at Home, or if it includes Roman Catholics of France, Italy, Spain, Portugal, and Belgium, Greek Church Christians of Russia and Greece, and Lutherans of Germany, Norway, and Sweden? Are these nations professing these various religions equally with British Protestants, the Church of Christ, and "Christians" to whom the unevangelised Heathen and Mahommedans of the world have a claim for "the Gospel?" We hardly think this can be the intention of the Church Missionary Society. For the Latin nations, the Greek Church, and the Lutheran Christians of Germany and Scandinavia have not the same Gospel as we have to offer, and our Protestant orthodox Church Missionary Society surely cannot wish Roman Catholic error, Greek Church heresies, and Lutheran doctrine to be taught to races who cry out to us to help them by imparting to them the pure and unadulterated Gospel of the grace of God as our Reformation taught it to us.

All Christians, then, to whom these appeals are sent are clearly only the Protestant Christians of the British Islands, and that portion of Christendom alone we conclude is addressed as the Church of Christ. These leaflets and handbills relating to the Special Simultaneous Meetings were all addressed to British Christians, to the great society, in fact, called the Christian Missionary Society, and to all other sympathising Christian bodies and persons in this Protestant land, which it is our birthright, by God's gift and grace, to occupy in these "Isles of the West."

But the circular which was issued at Bristol and Clifton by the local Church Missionary Society secretaries, in connection with the February Simultaneous Meetings, carries us a step further, and gives us a fresh hint where the Church of Christ is, and what it is. That circular recited as follows: "The papers (we enclose) speak for themselves, and we leave them to do so with this single addition. That the vast Empire which God has given us surely entails a tremendous responsibility upon us as Christians to use the opportunities He has thus given us for carrying the message of salvation through Jesus Christ to those who are yet 'sitting in darkness and the shadow of death, but who are, as we constantly find, being prepared by Him in a remarkable way for the reception of the message."

Digitized by Google

The appeal, then, is to British Christians, and to the British Church of Christ—to that Church and those Christians, in short, who have "the vast Empire of those Heathens and Mahommedans who are sitting in darkness and the shadow of death." Other nations have Heathen and Mahommedan Empires too, such as Russia, France, Spain, Portugal, and Holland. But these nations have not the Gospel as we have, and have not the Evangelising spirit and the desire to preach the Gospel as we have by the Grace of God. On us there rests the tremendous responsibility, because we have the Gospel and the Word of God, the Sabbath, and the Decalogue to impart, and God has given us a huge Heathen and Mahommedan Empire in the four quarters of the globe, larger than those of other nations, with an earnest desire implanted in tens of thousands of Christian minds and hearts here to send the Gospel to those perishing millions who so sorely need it.

We think, then, that "the Church of Christ" is the Church and nation of the British people, and that it includes all the sects of Christians in this land sprung from and holding the pure doctrine of the Church of England. Does the Word of God give us any corroboration for this view, and support us in entertaining it? Surely it does. It describes the people who are blessed as we are, and responsible as we are to the Heathen nations as the people of the House of Israel. "This people (Israel)," it says, in Isa. xliii. 21, "have I formed for Myself. They shall show forth My praise. In days (or generations to come) shall Jacob take root. Israel "shall blossom and bud, and they shall fill the face of the world with fruit" (Isa. xxvii. 6, R. V.). "He hath shewed His people the power of His works in giving them the heritage of the Heathen" (Psa. cxi. 6, R. V.). "In thee and in thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed" (Gen. xxviii. 14).

These texts may suffice. They prove to us that the Hebrew Israelite race was the one honoured by God with the Heathen and Mahommedan Empires, and also with the knowledge of the Word of God to impart to them, for Psa. cxlvii. 19 so testifies to that fact. "He sheweth His word unto Jacob, His statutes and His judgments unto Israel. He hath not dealt so with any nation, and as for His judgments, they have not known them. Praise ye the Lord!"

But Israel knows them, and on that race therefore devolves the tremendous responsibility mentioned by the Bristol and Clifton Church Missionary Society's circulars, "to use the opportunities He has thus given us for carrying the message of salvation through Jesus Christ to those who are 'sitting in darkness and in the shadow of death.'"

The British Christians thus being the Church of Christ are Israel, and as Israel is doing and must yet more fully do the work of Christ prescribed for her. She is formed by God Himself for this very work of universal Gospel evangelisation, and by the grace of God is doing it in her feeble, half-hearted, perfunctory sort of way. But God calls on us now to work for Him heart and soul; and hence arises the unutterable importance of the Church Missionary Society's summons to the British Church of Christ and British Christians to-day to arise and shine "and to show their Gospel light to the Heathen and Mahommedans God has entrusted to their charge nationally.

To the Church Missionary Society's appeal we therefore desire cordially to respond; but we must do so on the only valid ground existing—namely, that the British Church is the Church of Christ, and not only so, but the British people is God's people Israel—His long-lost, Ten-tribed, House of Israel, who were destined so long ago as Hosea's time (i. 10) to be discovered as God's Lo-Ammi outcast ones, and yet the "sons of the living God," His Christian nation, striving to evangelise the world. "Israel, praise ye the Lord" (Isa. xxvii. 6).

A FRESH CLERICAL OBJECTION ANSWERED.

A CLERGYMAN of the Church of England now at Munich, has lately taken an interest in Our Identity, and is studying some of our pamphlets. He thinks Mrs. Rogers' book very well written and convincing. "The argument from Scripture," he tells us, "seems the strongest, and the comparison of what is there stated about Israel with our British position and blessings at the present day" very convincing.

He confesses to one difficulty, however, and describes it thus. "The promises made to Israel for the most part appear to refer to them after their restoration to Palestine, and not to their state of exile." He admits that "the time of the restoration may now be very near, and that the fulfilment of the promises may have already begun; to be more fully accomplished hereafter." He deems "the ethnographical argument rather weak, and by itself the truth of the Identity could never be proved." To establish proof he thinks there should be "conclusive means of separating the peoples who settled in Britain from the other North European races." If it be true that the settlers here were Israel, he then suggests that at present all we can say in explanation of the neat way in which Israel was separated from the Gentiles with whom they were mingled in Europe, is that the remnant of Israel were "providentially" conducted to our islands, and separated from the Gentiles on the Continent, "however much they may in their passage from the East have seemed to be one with them."

To prove this ethnographically our clerical friend demands some "documentary or monumental proof to be forthcoming" to convince his mind and others that the British settlers were Israel, and their Continental companions, whom they left behind after ages of union, were non-Israelite Gentiles. Our clergyman quite expects this kind of proof will yet be produced to convince his own mind and those of others equally sceptical, and (as he thinks) quite reasonably so.

What we have to say to our clergyman, however, is this. We respect his candour and his clear exposition of the difficulty which blocks the way to his own acceptation of Our Identity. We have no doubt it is the difficulty of thousands more of his cloth and of his lay brethren. We submit, however, to him and them these considerations. The subject is a Scriptural one; and therefore before we dictate to God Almighty what sort of evidence we shall demand of Him before we believe the Identity, we think the proper attitude for us to assume is to inquire what He has said respecting the nature of the evidence He proposes for us in the matter. In Hosea ii. 6 He Himself has told us that He means "to hedge up Israel's way with thorns, and make a wall that she shall not find her paths." When God proposes to do this, is it likely He will give us the documentary and monumental evidences demanded to show that the Celts, Angles, Saxons, Danes, Frisians, Jutes, and Normans were Israelites, but the Continentals, from whom they separated, were non-Israelite Gentiles?

Again, in the picture of this transaction which the vision of dry bones of Ezek. xxxvii. gives us from the pen of God Himself, do we find that He gave Israel clear "monumental and documentary proof" which satisfied the prophet's mind that those dry bones, brought together and constituting a mighty army, were Israel's bones? and the army, Israel? Nothing of the sort! The prophet was questioned by the Lord, if he thought "those bones could live"? He answered, O Lord God, Thou knowest!" confessing total ignorance of all facts connected with their identity! The Lord, in short, had to tell him that those bones were "the whole House of Israel" (ver. 11), and He gave His servant no evidence such as the clergyman demands to satisfy his mind! The latter may, of course, tell us that if God were to speak to him now, and tell him the British were Lost Israel, he too would be able to believe. But to this we rejoin that God has given to him proofs of the Identity of the British with Israel superior in probative force to those He condescended to give to the Jews to prove to their incredulous hearts that Jesus was the promised Messiah, the Son of God! Putting aside the miracles which the Jews, who stood by, deliberately rejected as the work of Satan, what were the proofs from the prophetical writings to show that Jesus was the Christ, compared with ours from the same prophets to prove that the British are Israel? The proofs of the Lord Jesus' identity were (we say with reverence) the veriest trifles compared to our facts; such as the Heathen and Colonial Empires, the Gates, the Wealth, the Nation and Company of Nations, the Bible, the Sabbath, the Decalogue. Yet God did not exonerate the Jews for their disbelief because the evidence was what we call trivial!

Digitized by Google

These so-called trivialities were facts written in the Jews' own Divine Scriptures, and were the words of the living God. They rejected them and the proofs founded on them; the result being that God held the Jews responsible and punished them as they are punished this day before our eyes. Does our clergyman expect that God will give him any other sort of evidence respecting Israel's Identity than that He deemed sufficient to convince the Jews and to hold them responsible to Him for failure to exercise their judgment reasonably and correctly? What is the evidence our clergyman at Munich has already? He himself describes it. He calls it our strongest weapon, and tells us it is exhibited by comparison of Britain's "present position and blessings with what is stated in God's Word about Israel" in the latter days. God foretold to Abraham that in the last days his after-seed should enjoy exclusively certain blessings which we British exclusively enjoy to-day. The Jews do not enjoy those blessings now, and no other nation existing does so outside our own race. God being true and Israel being "lost," but destined to be found by these same blessings in possession, how can our clergyman demand fresh proof that God clearly is not going to afford him?

In regard to the objection that God's promises to Israel "appear to refer to times subsequent to their restoration to Palestine, we fail to see where our clergyman gets the proof of this. Where is it stated that Israel was to be blessed after, but not before, the restoration? We fail to discover this from God's Word. In Gen. xxii. 17, 18, xxviii. 14, xxxv. 11, xlviii. 19, xlix. 22—26; Deut. xv. 6; Isa. xxvii. 6, and other like passages, not a hint is conveyed that these wondrous gifts therein detailed are to be relegated to the times after the restoration. They are obviously all reserved for Israel's enjoyment between the two advents as it is this day, since these blessings are part and parcel of the birthright blessings of Joseph which were not in that Tribe's enjoyment before the first advent, and cannot be theirs after the restoration, since then the Twelve Tribes will be united and will enjoy all blessings in union, sharing them in common.

The separation of Israel from the Gentiles among whom they were mingled was doubtless an act of divine power quite beyond our finite ability to explain, but that the thing had to be done is stated in Hosea ix. 17; Ezek. xi. 16, 17, xxxvii. 1—28; Amos ix. 9, and other passages, and that it is now an accomplished fact history records.

We are glad that our clergyman's difficulties are so easily answered, and trust that he will doubt no more, but now thankfully and willingly accept Our Identity.

IDENTITY DIFFICULTIES ANSWERED—OUR CUI BONO? OPPONENTS.

(Concluded from page 79).

PART II.

THE British folk, as we all know, are "a great and mighty nation," whose numbers increase more rapidly than those of any other people on the face of the earth. Their rate of doubling their population at home is once in fifty-seven years, but in the Colonies, once in twenty-five years—the average being once in forty-one years. There is no race extant which is so active in the cause of Missions, "to the Jew first," and also to the heathen. Its activity, in this respect, compares, as regards the Missionary zeal of all the world besides, in the ratio of twelve to one. Its Missionaries go to all the nations of the world with the Bible and the Gospel in their hands. The sum thus spent upon the evangelisation of the nations of the world amounts to nearly a million sterling a year. To secure this zealous Christian race a theatre, whereon to show forth their love of souls, God has given to our British people a Heathen Empire in India, in China, in Africa, in Australia, Burmah, Borneo, North America, and in the islands of the sea, which is, without comparison, the largest the world ever saw brought under control by any single nation of past or present times. The way in which India, for instance, has been subdued by a handful of Englishmen, and is now retained in willing submission to the power of an Empress who lives in a land 7,000 miles distant (as the crow flies) from her Indian Empire, is simply the wonder of the world. To enable us to keep India and the other vast heathen possessions belonging to the Crown, God has given to our race a military supremacy, which is perfectly unique in its character; and considering the vast millions of heathen reduced to subjection, the most wonderful, historical, and military fact the world has ever witnessed. He has given us also the supremacy of the sea, without which it would be impossible for us, as an island race, to secure continued access to our distant Indian Empire. That supremacy is mainly secured by the possession of almost all the principal coaling stations of the earth, some of which are the most splendid fortifications to be anywhere seen. These coaling stations, which we Anglo-Israelites call "Gates," are principally such spots as Malta, Gibraltar, Perim, Aden, Colombo, Bombay, Madras, Calcutta, Singapore, Hongkong, the Cape, the Mauritius, the Bermudas, and such like, all British Stations and Gates of the surrounding lands or seas, or both. A dominion so world-wide, and depending on such costly machinery to maintain, must be supported by immense wealth; and we find, accordingly, that the British Empire is the richest in the world. Its annual income is over 2,000 millions. Its savings are 200 millions. Its revenue, raised without friction, about 100 millions. It is so rich, that it lends to many nations, but it never goes into any foreign money market to borrow. The volume of its commerce is, as Mr. Gladstone once said, bewildering in its magnitude. The mercantile marine of the nation floats in all harbours, and has secured the carrying trade of the whole world. The investments of the nation are in all lands; and the returns of these investments, as interest, come home in the shape of our enormous imports from the four quarters of the globe, at the rate of about one million pounds sterling a day, Sunday included.

Our opponents see, then, that God has provided in this our own land, and here alone, an instrumentality exactly suited to the end they have in view. Given the whole world sunk in sin, and wanting the knowledge of the grace of God, in the face of Jesus Christ His Son, we have, in the British people, just such an agency as the exigencies of the case require, to provide, by means of them, the remedy for the world's disease. God has implanted in their hearts a desire to spend and be spent for Him; to publish the knowledge of His salvation in all lands. He has provided for them accordingly, vast heathen nations in all parts of the earth to be recipients of His blessings administered by our race. To them, as the paramount Power, He has given the dominion over millions of heathen in various parts of the earth. To serve this purpose, God has given us British the dominion of the sea, the Gates, and the wealth needful to pay for them. Such grandeur being meant to subserve the chief purpose of their being—namely, that God's praise may be shown forth—His glory manifested among all the nations. Our opponents, then, cannot but admit, that to meet the case they put to us, a machinery has been divinely contrived exactly suited to the pressing needs of the earth. God has given them, in short, in the British nation and in the gifts He has provided it with, all they need to carry out the work they declare they are successfuly accomplishing, and we must do them the justice to say they are grateful for God's blessings. But doing and feeling all this, they do not desire, strange to say, to be troubled with the story of Our Identity with Israel, since such is, in their view, wholly irrelevant to the matter in hand, which engrosses their whole attention. Our object, however, is to show our opponents that herein they greatly err. For the "great, and mighty," and numerous "nation," blessed as they know the British are blessed to qualify them for the work they are themselves doing so succesfully for Christ, is Ten-Tribed Israel. The evidence of that fact is furnished by the Word of God, which our opponents, whom we are now combatting, so greatly and properly prize. The picture there drawn of what Israel was to appear and to perform for Christ in these the last days of the Christian dispensation, answers, as face answers to face in a mirror, to the British people and their doings, in which our antagonists so greatly rejoice. Israel, or the House of Joseph, are described in Gen. xlix. 22—26, and Deut. xxxiii. 13—17, in terms which exactly portray the British people to-day. The chosen race are there predicted to appear in the "last days" of the dispensation of grace; and in the Scriptures bearing on this point we have the picture of the British nation so correctly and exactly drawn, that none may err in recognising the perfect likeness. When God, then, has so clearly spoken, how can men venture to despise His purposes, and tell us, that in the one material point which affects God's faithfulness to His oath and covenant with our forefather Abraham, it is immaterial and unimportant whether Israel be found or not, and if the British be they or some Gentile, non-Israelite race, of which God's Word has made no mention from Genesis to Revelation?

Digitized by Google

A LECTURE BY SURGEON-GENERAL J. M. GRANT, M.D.

A LECTURE was delivered in the Victoria Rooms, Clifton, on Friday evening, the 26th of February, by Surgeon-General Grant, M.D., the subject being "Scriptural Objections; their Origin and Importance Considered." The lecturer commenced by stating that although the subject was controversial, we had no controversy with the clergy except what was involved in the interpretation of the word Israel; that our contention was that the promise that God made to Abraham that He would make of him a great nation, pointed on to the Christian dispensation, that it had not been fulfilled to the Jews, and that the requirements of prophecy were not met by applying it to the Church. The importance of the subject was touched upon, and the prevailing ignorance and misconception regarding it were traced to neglect and misunderstanding of the Old Testament Scriptures, as evidence of which quotations were made from Dean Alford's published sermons, and the error into which he falls in saying that we have no record of God having made ready the nations for the proclamation of the Gospel was exposed. Reference was next made to the transfer of the blessings promised to Israel to the Gentile Church; and quotations were made from the published sermons of the late Dr. Walker, Rector of Cheltenham, to show that whilst rebuking this error in his brethren, he himself was hopelessly in the dark from not being able to distinguish between Israel and Judah.

Attention was next called to the fact that the promises referred to the Christian dispensation, as shown in the 49th chapter of Genesis, where Jacob calls his sons together to tell them what shall befall them in the last days; the blessing of Israel by Balaam in the "last days," when a star shall come out of Jacob and a sceptre shall arise out of Israel, being adduced as proof that "the last days" means the Christian dispensation in the Old Testament as well as in the New. From this it was argued that the objection that Israel forfeited the blessing by her disobedience in Canaan, which had been clearly foretold by Moses, was most absurd; and the stereotyped vindication of that objection that Christ alone was the seed of Abraham, destined to be a blessing to the world, was shown to be untenable. The teaching of St. Paul on this point was examined and explained, and the prevalent misconception regarding it was attributed to "reading the Bible from the wrong end, and interpreting the Old Testament by the New." The question, How the Gospel has been propagated? was next considered, and answered from Matt. xxi. 42, 43; the nation referred to by our Lord being shown to be Israel by his quotation from Psalm cxviii., and by St. Paul's interpretation of Isa. lii. 7, in reply to the question, How shall they hear without a preacher?

Passing on to the time of the kings, it was shown that God never divested Himself of the sovereignty of Israel, but committed it to David and his successors, whom He placed on HIS OWN throne (1 Chron. xxix. 23); and the irreverence and absurdity of saying that Christ succeeded David, and assumed a spiritual sovereignty at His first coming, was strongly insisted on. It was remarked that the form of government committed to David was a theocracy—that is, a union of Church and State; and that He was commanded in the 78th Psalm to provide religious instruction for the people, from which it was argued that, the British being Israel, there must always be found a State-endowed Church in their land; but that that was not to be regarded as the only true Church, because, although our Lord did not encourage nonconformity, He certainly sanctioned it in Mark ix. 38—40, and Luke ix. 49, 50.

It was next shown how much we lose by spiritualising such expressions as "the kingdom of God," "the lost sheep of the House of Israel," &c., and that if the kingdom of God were spiritual it could not, like the net cast into the sea, enclose good and bad; while if the expression lost sheep meant sinners, then Christ did not come to save sinners of the Gentiles, because He distinctly told the Syrophœnician woman that He was not sent to her, or to her race.

The separation of the kingdom of Israel was next considered in connection with the remarkable declaration, "This thing is from Me;" and it was suggested that the Tribe of Benjamin was probably identical with the Galileans of our Lord's time, who received Him, having seen the miracles which He did in Jerusalem, and that Benjamin having escaped from the siege of Jerusalem, would probably disperse themselves over the Roman Empire, and, following the track of the Apostles, keep alive the flame of Christianity which they had kindled. The object of separating the nation so that one portion of the people might receive the Saviour whom the other would reject was insisted upon; and the fallacy of the argument that the two Houses were equally implicated in the guilt of the crucifixion was fully exposed, as well as the absurdity of the contention that Benjamin had always been one with Judah. The term Gentile was also considered, and it was shown how it became applicable to Israel during the time of their divorce from the Mosaic covenant.

Digitized by Google

Notice was next taken of the remarkable distinction between Judah and Israel drawn in the Psalm cxiv.; and it was argued that as rule and dominion could not be separated in the case of a united people, that prophecy could not apply to Israel in Palestine up to the time of Rehoboam, nor to either of the then disrupted kingdoms, because each of them enjoyed rule and dominion within their respective limits; that it could not apply to the millennium, because then the nation would be united as it had been under Solomon; and that, therefore, it must apply to some time between the captivity and the return during which Judah, as a people, would be excluded from the dominion, but would, through the reigning family of David, exercise the regal function in Israel.

The last objection noticed was that the two Houses of Israel returned together from Babylon, and have been united ever since; with reference to which Dr. Grant said that if that position could be established, the result would be to prove all prophecy A LIE, and he made good his contention by many passages and references drawn from the Bible.

We have been able to give only a very brief and imperfect summary of this lecture, which we hope will be published and extensively read by Anglo-Israelites, as it furnishes a complete answer to all the more important Biblical objections, not from isolated passages of the Bible pitted one against another, according to a practice which Dr. Grant strongly and consistently condemns, but from a carefully considered digest of the whole testimony of Scripture. Dr. Grant traces, in lines which it is easy to follow, all the misconception which exists regarding the mission of Israel in the world to the habit of thought in which "our religious instructors have allowed themselves to indulge, of regarding the Old Testament writings as a set of musty documents referring to a dispensation and a state of things that has now passed away."

A POSTAL STEP TOWARDS THE FEDERATION OF THE EMPIRE.

THE cause of Australasian Federation has advanced a step by the conclusion of the postal arrangement just announced between Great Britain on the one side, and the Colonies of New South Wales, Victoria, South Australia, and Western Australia on the other. The mail service is to be to the terminus, Adelaide, by mail steamers, viâ the overland route. Thence it is hoped that in two years' time, when the arrangement will be carried out, railways will connect Adelaide with Melbourne, Western Australia, and New South Wales, and thus four of the Australian States will, at least for this postal service, act as one nation with equal interests. The peculiarity of the scheme, however, is that each of the members of this amicable and federal arrangement will pay the cost, and obtain the revenue of the transmission of its own mail matter, thus keeping up its own independence of the other Colonial members. The arrangement is not, we believe, the doing of the new Federal Council, which is sitting without the adhesion of New South Wales and New Zealand, and therefore shorn of much authority which, by-and-bye, no doubt, it will enjoy when Colonial jealousies have died out, and Greater Britain in Australasia has learnt the lesson that unity is strength and safety.

The postal union now cemented is, however, an important step in the right direction, and will show the Colonies that the advantages reaped in the domain of the Postal Department can be also enjoyed in many other directions if only they will lay aside their mutual jealousies and recognise what must eventually take place when the federation of the Colonies becomes an accomplished fact according to the prophecies—"a nation and a company of nations shall be of thee" (Gen. xxxv. 11). Henceforth, as the first fruits of this overt act in the direction of confederation, the Australian Colonies will enjoy a weekly mail service between England and Adelaide in 29 days; and after that their own railway system, when completed, will do the rest, and give Sydney, Melbourne, and Western Australia communication with London by letter within a month.

The necessity and advantage of federation between the mother country and her young daughters in the South-east was well described in a speech made by the Right Rev. Dr. Moorhouse, the Bishop of Melbourne, in the Town Hall of that city some time in 1884. We published part of that speech in the BANNER last year (vol. ix., p. 369). The following sentiments correspond with our views expressed in what has been said above, and we ask our readers' attention to them:—

Dr. Moorhouse, who was received with prolonged and enthusiastic cheers, said: I saw it stated in one of the newspapers that a great authority of the Colonial Office had expressed some doubt whether there was any great sentiment of attachment to the empire in the Colonies. Well, of course, if there were room for that doubt, federation could only be a futility. It could be nothing but a futility, for you cannot bind together by an outward bond those who have not a sentiment of mutual attachment to one another. (Cheers.) But now, is the allegation true that there is no such sentiment of attachment here to the mother country? (Cries of "No, no," and "Yes.") I am in a position to affirm on this platform that it is not, and, what is more, to advance the proofs of it. (Cheers.) You remember when the Russians attacked the Afghans, and when even Mr. Gladstone was constrained to use decisive language, we all thought war was imminent. Well, I chanced to be in the country at that time, so I laid what I thought to be the existing situation before a great number of meetings in townships which, from their character and their population, were admirably representative of Australian opinion, at least of Victorian opinion. (Cheers.) I laid it before them thus: "Gentlemen, a deceitful, tyrannical, and aggressive Power has overrun Central Asia, has made an unprovoked aggression upon the British Empire. We have done nothing to invite attack; it is prompted simply by a savage lust of war. Will you let your dear mother land be smitten by the sword of the despot and never lift a hand to help her?" The men jumped to their feet, waved their hats wildly in the air, vociferating cheers which were astonishing even for Australians, and saying they would live and die for the old land. (Enthusiastic and prolonged cheers, a large section of the audience rising and waving their hats and handkerchiefs.) That is the feeling in Australia, let who will say to the contrary, for I have witnessed it. (Cheers.) Now, on the other hand, I ask you, is there any such feeling at home towards this colony or these colonies? I have heard men say "No," but I hold in my hand a proof that it is a slander. (Loud cheers.) I daresay there may be little enough of love, amity, and unity in the regions of red tape, but these feelings glow in the hearts of living people, and I say that there is a bond of union and affection between England and her colonies which no brute force can break, and which I think not even domestic jealousies can dissolve. (Cheers.) I say the time for federation is ripe, and the question only remains for us: Is it worth our while to endeavour to make this affection, which is proved to exist, an abiding feeling? (Cheers.) I think it is. (Hear, hear.) We see clearly that the next lead of Russia is upon India. (Hear, hear.) What are we going to do to keep pace with the advance of our enemy so as to have a hope of making a successful resistance to any attack? (Hear, hear.) Now, then, let me speak to young Australia. (Hear, hear.) Do try to get above the horizon of parochial politics. (Hear, hear.) I would repeat my warning, because in the time that is coming none but great states will be able to live. (Cheers.) The European Governments see that, and with quick instinct are prepared for the future. (Hear, hear.) What is the movement which has had the most influence in the last quarter of a century in Europe? What has caused its wars? What has excited its deepest impulses? Why, the desire for unity, begun in Italy, and completed in Germany. (Cheers.) These states feel and know that they cannot live in the future unless they are large enough, for it is an age of the renewal of universal empires: and so Germany, finding that she has done all the unification she can upon the home ground, is going forth into the world to enlarge the area of her dominions, and increase the numbers of her children as colonists. (Hear, hear.) If we federate with the Home Government we do this—we take security that we do not lie at the mercy of any power, whatever it be, that has the ambition, and thinks it feels the necessity, of enlarging its area and multiplying its people. (Cheers.)

Digitized by Google

FAITH IN GOD.

A Sermon By the Rev. C. Godfrey Ashwin, M.A.

"Why are ye fearful, O ye of little faith?"—Matt. viii. 26.

The Word of God is so full, the wisdom of God so great, and the love of God so all-embracing that no true-hearted, anxious, sorrow-laden soul ever drew near to Him, in His house and on His day, without receiving a message of peace and comfort from His Word, for as we have just heard, "The Lord is nigh unto all them that call upon Him, to all that call upon Him in truth" (Psa. cxlv. 18). And what is true of individuals is also true of a community, for often a common anxiety or sorrow fills the hearts and minds of a whole congregation or nation, and in the overruling providence of God a very definite message is sent to them in their common need. I think this is eminently so to-day, and the message is, "Have faith in God." For I venture to say that there is no Englishman, who is worthy of that name, whose mind is not greatly preoccupied with the political crisis through which we are passing. Many hearts are filled with fear, many minds are full of anxiety, and probably the least anxious amongst us are greatly perplexed. The last few days have intensified these feelings, and I think God has sent us a message of peace, in the services of the day, in a very remarkable manner.

1. In the epistle (Rom. xiii. 1) we are reminded there is no power, but of God; and, consequently, that only the evil have to dread any rulers, even if rulers themselves do evil. Are you good? Then the rulers placed over you are ministers of God to thee for good.

2. In the Gospel we have a noteworthy incident. The Church of Christ and kingdom of Christ, of small dimensions then, apparently on the verge of all but inevitable destruction, and her Lord asleep! Was there any real danger? The text teaches there was not, "Why are ye fearful, oh, ye of little faith?"

3. In the first lesson Job in his misery, his terrible sufferings of heart and body, the terrible trial of intellectual conflict, into which these sufferings had plunged him, refuses to doubt the ultimate issues, and declares to his mistaken friends that the wicked, and the wicked alone, shall fall.

4. In the second lesson, again we have the same lesson, "Have faith in God." For it was only want of that faith which prevented the disciples delivering the poor possessed boy from the devil, who had plunged him into so much misery. But the Master's hand was there, and the spirits of evil, those unwilling, rebellious ones, are subject to His will—servants of His, mysteriously working His will, and when His purposes of mercy are accomplished through their instrumentality, finally cast out of the hearts and bodies of men.

5. Then in the Psalms we are reminded of the vanity of man, the untrustworthiness of princes, and that God's dominion is universal, everlasting, and that He will preserve all them that love Him, but all the wicked will He destroy (Psa. cxliv. 4. cxlvi. 3, cxlv. 13—19).

I ask you then to consider the text—the text rather than the miracle with which it is connected, in reference to our present national anxieties—for though the Church pulpit should never be the rostrum of party politics, it ought to be the fountain from which all truth should proceed; and man's duty, including that very important branch of it, political duty, be clearly and distinctly taught, and definite religious convictions made the basis of all worldly avocations. First, then, we have a wide-reaching touch of human sympathy in the condition of our Lord, when He uttered the words. He had just preached that sermon on the mount, which stands alone amongst all the sermons in the world. He had descended the mountain and spent the rest of the day in incessant labours of love; the evening was come, and crowds still pressed upon Him, and He took refuge in a boat, directed His disciples to cross the lake, and, exhausted, fell asleep, bone of our bone. and flesh of our flesh—in all things He can sympathise with us, in work and weariness, rest and restoration to labour. But soon a dangerous tempest was upon them, winds and waves threatened to destroy them, the shadow of death was over them, and He, their Master, who had called them from the fisher life; their Teacher whose words of wisdom exceeded all others; their Lord at whose rebuke disease disappeared and devils departed, was asleep, while they were toiling in rowing, and helpless in the storm. And they wake Him with the almost reproachful cry. "Save us, we perish; carest Thou not that we perish?" The text is His loving but, at the same time, somewhat reproachful answer: "Why are ye fearful, oh, ye of little faith." And He rebuked the winds and the sea, and there was a great calm. Anxiety and terror give place to awe, and deeper reverence, and truer faith.

Is not this a message to us to-day—the voice of God to all true-hearted anxious ones—speaking peace and bidding us cast aside all anxious care, as the wild winds of political passion, and the stormy waves of party spirit seem to threaten our Church and nation with anarchy and dire distress? A State has often been compared to a ship, in which the sailors represent the working members of the Government, directed by higher officers under the command of a captain and guidance of a pilot, fighting its way now through calm, and now through troubled waters, and ever exposed to sudden and unexpected dangers and unforeseen emergencies. And when these arise the greatest danger arises from the indecision of the captain, the incapacity and cowardice of the pilot, and the insubordination and want of harmony of the crew.

Again, from the time of Noah, a ship has almost necessarily been an emblem of the Church, sailing, with its immortal crew, over the surging but ever receding waters of time, to its final haven. Now, in God's mercy, for more than 1,000 years, the Church and State of England has been one and the same ship, and many the storm through which it has passed, and many the losses it has sustained, and often it has been run aground, and at times, absolute shipwreck threatened it. But God is its Captain and Pilot; and though insubordination on the part of some of the crew, and errors, sinful errors of its petty officers have often damaged it, and many valuable lives been sacrificed in consequence—swept overboard through the feeble and faithless counsels of men, preferring expedience to principle, and the maxims of men to the direction of God's Word—it has hitherto weathered every storm, and grown more and more powerful, and, I would fain hope, on the whole, more and more pure. Why, then, should we be cast down because called upon to pass through stormy weather—and the calm of the Pacific has changed to the billows of the Atlantic? "Why are ye fearful, oh, ye of little faith?"

True, in realising the sins, and all involved in them, of the present, we may be tempted to say, "The former days were better than these;" but the answer is as true now as it was 3,000 years ago—"Thou dost not enquire wisely concerning this." Unquestionably there have been times of greater and less prosperity, greater and less adversity, through which our Church and nation has passed, and history, in our own case, as in all others, distinctly connects these matters with the greater or less piety which has prevailed—idolatry, in any form, and licentiousness, have always, in God's mercy, been followed with temporal troubles. But our Captain and Pilot has never altogether deserted us, He has chastened us—chastened us in love—but never forsaken us as a Church and nation; and when grievous corruption has invaded the Church or the State, the Spirit of the Lord has raised up the standard of truth again, through some of His faithful servants—faithful ministers of the crown, and faithful ministers of the Church—to recall our people to a higher standard of duty towards God and duty towards man, through purer, because more Scriptural, faith. And as we consider these facts of the past, whatever may be the immediate issues of the present, though there may be, though there is, cause for the gravest heart-searchings, would it not be the basest ingratitude, contemptible faithlessness, to doubt the ultimate issues brought about by the love of God, ruling through the good, and overruling the machinations of evil rulers?

Digitized by Google

Compare our history with God's people of old. In the Old Testament Scriptures we have an inspired history, for, to my mind, the fulfilment of prophecy is a proof of their inspiration; an inspired history of two nations, in which not only results are recorded, but the causes of these results distinctly stated; and not only the avowed, but the real motives of those leaders through whom they were brought about, made known by Him who trieth the hearts, and God's verdict on their conduct revealed in history. And I am sure many Christian people deprive themselves of much knowledge, much comfort, by not studying the Old Testament Scriptures more carefully. In this history we read, that in consequence of Rehoboam's sinful folly, the Twelve-Tribed kingdom of David was divided into two distinct nations; and though prophecy declares they shall be again reunited under one king, that union has not yet taken place. Time will not allow me to enter into details, but verify for yourselves the general facts I am about to state.

Remember, when the division took place, it is distinctly stated that this separation was God's appointment, and the first king of Israel was also His direct appointment. What a dawn of promise, especially when we remember the glorious prophecies that had preceded. But what the history? Contemptible, miserable, and despicable, almost from the very commencement! In 255 years it ran out its degraded course, and its people, ere long, lost to human knowledge, were wanderers amongst the nations; and during this period, nineteen different kings of nine different dynasties occupied the throne, and the average reign of the monarch was about thirteen years and a-half. And what was the reason of this lamentable history? Self-seeking, self-reliance! trusting to his clever political mind, "Jeroboam, the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin," established idolatry, his successors persisted in the sin, all the while professing to be servants of God, until Ahab completed the apostacy by the establishment of the worship of Baal! and from that time, rapid and great was the fall of the kingdom whose record is chiefly that of arrogance and bloodshed, and constant civil war.

What a commentary on God's Word! "Righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people;" and, "for the transgression of a land, many are the princes thereof."

Departure from trust in God—obedience to God—led on, step by step, to the Disestablishment of the worship of God, and the overthrow of the kingdom. The history of the kingdom of Judah teaches the same lesson in a modified form. It lasted over 370 years, until the Babylonish captivity, and during that time there were only 20 sovereigns all of David's line, with an average reign of 18½ years. But they, too, followed in the man-wise God-dishonouring course of their sister kingdom, Israel, and though they never went so far as to establish idolatry, they departed in heart from the worship of the living and true God. Neglected His Word, His ordinances, though still professing to be His servants, until the irrevocable, because perfect, law of God carried them into captivity, and left their land a desolation and their capital a ruin. And, take the trouble to verify the statement, national prosperity, or adversity, varied in direct relationship to the piety or impiety of the rulers in both kingdoms; and though an exception, at first sight, appears in the case of Ahab, for never was the kingdom of Israel in such prosperity as in the early part of his reign, though the evil fruit did not shew itself immediately, it did so speedily, in the utter demoralisation of the people, and the national overthrow. While on the other hand we cannot trace—no doubt it existed—but we cannot trace on the national history of Judah the effect of the personal efforts for the reformation of his people on the part of the good Josiah. He was told it was too late. The message was sent him, "Thus saith the Lord, Behold I will bring evil on this place and upon the inhabitants thereof, even all the curses that are written in the book which they have read before the King of Judah." That was the recently discovered, the long-neglected law of God—"Because they have forsaken Me and burned incense to other gods; therefore My wrath shall be poured on this place and shall not be quenched." While a personal message of peace was sent to Josiah himself. Yet, notwithstanding all this national degeneracy, God declares He will never forsake the sinful people, for whom He had done so much, and with whom He had entered into a covenant for ever.

Now compare with this contemptible history of Israel, this humiliating history of Judah, the history of our own people.

Israel lasted 255 years, Judah 370. Nineteen sovereigns, of nine distinct families, occupied the throne of Israel. The kingdom of Judah extended over 370 years. Twenty sovereigns occupied the throne, all of the family of David, and with an average reign of 18½ years, fifty per cent. longer than that of the kings of Israel!

Now simply dating from the Norman Conquest—though the lineal descent of our Queen can be traced much farther back—eight hundred years have passed away, more than twice the duration of the favoured Judah; and though the succession to the crown has not always been in the male line, it has always been in the same family, and the average reign of the thirty-five sovereigns has been 23½ years, far exceeding, nearly forty per cent. longer, than that of the kings of Judah!

Compare any continental history with this! In Germany alone can anything like such a duration of the monarchy be traced? and over and over again the tramp of the foreign conqueror, and occupation by a foreign Power, has for a time humbled the pride of that great Empire and filled its homes with woe. While no foreign foe has ever been permitted to carry the horrors of war into our borders; and only once, since the Reformation, has civil war devastated our land; and only once, and during a portion only of one life, has the sceptre not been swayed by a scion of our ancient line of kings. With such a history of God's providence and love shall we lose heart at the passing troubles which our faithlessness, as a nation, have produced? "Why are ye fearful, oh, ye of little faith?"

And note, moreover, the continual, and marvellous growth of our Empire, the unexampled increase of our home population since the Reformation—there is nothing to be compared to it on earth. Why then is our nation so distinguished, notwithstanding our national sins? Why does our Empire expand more and more, in spite of the limitations our rulers have endeavoured to put upon it, until our Empire is not only the most powerful in the present day, but the largest the world has ever known, and differing from all others as the only one endeavouring, by its Missionary and Bible Societies, to spread the true knowledge of God throughout the world? The answer must be found in the Word of God, as it ultimately resolves itself in the love and favour of the Almighty. Let us not therefore be cast down by the present, apparently, untoward events. Let us not be fearful, because faithless; but let us "have faith in God," and shew it personally and practically in our lives. Personally by true devotion to His service, loyalty to His Word, and practically by using our personal influence to lead others to study history in the light of that Word, and do our best to send those to govern us who are determined, first and foremost, to govern the land according to His revealed will.

Digitized by Google

And, last but not least, let us be instant in prayer. I, for one, believe that much of our prosperity in the past is connected with the constant prayer we offer in our services and homes for our sovereign, and for our Parliament. And, as I know, many faithful and true prayers ascended to heaven respecting the late elections—however gloomy and unsettled things may look—however much, whatever our political conviction may be, we may have been disappointed at the general returns.

I believe we ought to expect an answer to our prayers, and that God will overrule, for the wellbeing of the nation, the events which are now taking place. But let us never forget that idolatry, the departure from the pure worship of God, was the root of all the evils that fell upon His people of old. And therefore let us sanctify the Lord God in our hearts, and abjure all idolatry, all superstition, and guide our hearts, minds, and lives by His revealed Word. And let no worldly maxims of expediency, no doctrines derived from the traditions of men, lead us to swerve from the simple faith in Christ, and worship of God in Christ, enjoined in the Holy Scriptures. "Happy are the people that have the Lord for their God."

"THE URGENT CRY OF HEATHENDOM."

THE above is the title of an excellent little pamphlet written for the Church Missionary Society by our former opponent, the Rev. Dr. C. D. Bell, Rector of Cheltenham. The text on which the whole hinges is taken from Acts xvi. 9—"A vision appeared to Paul in the night. There stood a man of Macedonia and prayed him, saying, Come over into Macedonia and help us."

The Rev. Canon deals with the matter very ably and very powerfully, dividing his subject into the following three heads, descriptive of the character of the cry for help raised by the man of Macedonia. It was, says the Rector:—

1. The cry of the ignorant asking for instruction.
2. The entreaty for comfort.
3. The cry containing a call for salvation.

But Paul obeyed it implicitly and immediately, and went at once to Macedonia to preach to its inhabitants the Gospel of the grace of God. The author concludes an eloquent paper by the following remarkable words which we shall quote, asking for them our readers' careful attention, because we have a truth stated here by the Rector of Cheltenham for which he has given us no adequate cause. Why are Christian missions our special national duty? Why is our duty unfulfilled if there is a shore to which the missionary's foot has not yet been sent? Why is it our duty to send the Gospel to the one human being who may not yet have heard of the tidings of redemption? Why is the cry of China, Africa, India, for help, directed to us British, and to us alone? and why is it incumbent on us, whatever others do, to hearken to the call, and send the "glad tidings," whatever the efforts, the sacrifices, and the cost it may be to us? The worthy Canon has not answered these questions, but we hope to do so as soon as our readers have perused the author's words. He said:—

> The history of Christian missions is the history of the glorious triumph of light over darkness; of truth over error; of virtue over vice; of religion over superstition; of heaven over hell. And this is the good work we are called on to pursue. While there is a shore which the foot of the missionary has not trodden, we should consider our duty unfulfilled; while there is a human being who has never heard the tidings of redemption, we should not relax in our efforts to send him the glad message of salvation.
>
> We are summoned to Macedonia. A cry has crossed the seas and reached our shores. The voice for assistance is shrill, and clear, and piercing. Listen to it! In thrilling and plaintive tones it falls on the ear. Behold the vast districts of the East, which are yet darkened by superstition, are calling to you. Cities where the Cross of Christ has never been planted; mountains on whose summits are altars reddened with human blood; forests whose recesses are profaned by licentious rites; rivers whose waters are supposed to wash away sin—from all the cry, the piercing cry, is heard, "Come over and help us." The millions of China; the untold tribes of Africa; the vast population of India; the thousands of islanders on the bosom of the broad Pacific—all utter the piercing cry, "Come over and help us!" No land is voiceless A cry, articulate, urgent, loud, comes thrilling across the dark waters to our ears. It is a cry for the tale of love which, when told, has melted many a frozen heart; a tale which if left untold can never find another to take its place, either in the theories of philosophy, or the facts of science, or the refinements of the arts; a cry for the balm of Gilead, which can heal the wounds of suffering men; a cry for the blood of sprinkling which can cleanse the guilty conscience and give it peace
>
> And what is our reply? We will hearken to their call. We will send them "the glorious Gospel of the blessed God." They shall have men who will go forth among them to preach Christ crucified; a stumbling-block, alas! to some, to others foolishness; but to all who believe, in whatever nation, of whatever class, "Christ the power of God and the wisdom of God" for ever. For this end we will make efforts, we will endure sacrifices, we will lay the gold and silver on the altar of the Lord. Yes, ye hopeless and benighted heathen, your appeal to us is not in vain. We have heard your urgent cry, 'Come over and help us!" and we will immediately endeavour, at whatever pains or sacrifice or cost, to send you the "glad tidings of good;" for we "assuredly gather that God hath called us to preach the Gospel unto you."

We have taken the liberty to put all the rev. author's personal pronouns into italics that we may the better point attention to the singularity of the author's appeal to the British Christians of our times. He does not seem to have an idea that any other race but ours needs, or will respond to the agonising cry of the heathen and Mohammedan world for help. He never for an instant contemplates that France or Germany, Austria, Italy, Spain, or Portugal have any call from these heathen lands to run to their rescue spiritually. What is the meaning of the Canon's words? They mean that Dr. Bell, in spite of his strong opposition, is a splendid blind witness that the British are Israel of the Ten Tribes. For the position he assigns to the British Church and people is that assigned by God in His Word to Israel, "His chosen ones." It was to Israel as well as to Israel's Saviour, God addressed the words to be found in Isa. xlix. 6, R. V., "I will give thee for a light to the Gentiles, that thou mayest be My salvation unto the ends of the earth" (compare Acts xiii. 47). To Israel God said, in Isa. xxvii. 6, R. V., "In days to come Jacob shall take root. Israel shall blossom and bud, and fill the face of the world with fruit." In Gen. xxviii. 14 the Lord made promise to Jacob—"In thee and in thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed." Of Israel God declared, in Isa. xliii. 21, R. V.—"My people, My chosen, the people which I have formed for Myself, that they might set forth My praise." This may suffice. The quotations show that, according to Canon Bell, we British are doing, and are prepared to do, for the heathen races just what Israel was formed, created, and made by the Lord their God to do for all nations, families, and kindreds of the earth! In each case spiritual benefits and blessings were and are the aims and objects of the blessing nation, which is the British, as Canon Bell will have it, but Israel according to God's Word. "The urgent cry of heathendom" arises from the ends of the earth, saying, "Come over and help us!" and instantly British-Israel responds, according to the prophecies, Canon Bell being our witness, saying not only to Judah, "Behold your God!" but to the Gentile, Heathen, and Mohammedan nations of the world, "Repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand" (Matt. iii. 2).

TRANSFERS OF LAND.

OUR readers doubtless are surprised to notice the question connected with land transfer finding a place in the BANNER. What possible connection can it have with Our Identity? Let us try and show. One of the Radical proposals at the present day is that the great mass of valuable land has got into the hands of a few bloated proprietors, whereas land is God's gift to man, and it ought to be equally divided among all. The Radical demagogues, therefore put forward as bait at the late Election, their promise that if returned to the New Parliament they would see to it that good laws should be passed which would gradually strip the great landlords of England of their acres and get it into the hands of the masses, who would thus become small proprietors each of three or four acres, and so be wealthy and happy for ever hereafter. What hinders the realization of these bright hopes for the landless poor? Why should they not get possession of small plots of land and become each of them small holders of landed property, and so keep poverty and the Workhouse away from their doors henceforth?

Digitized by Google

Lord Salisbury gave us some answers to these questions, and they seem satisfactory. In the first place, "there have been numbers of small freeholds in this country, from one end of the nation to the other, and for a hundred years and more, the steady process has been, the owners of these small freeholds have sold their land, which has been merged into the land of larger freeholds." Here then is nature's provision and a law ordained by God Himself which will absolutely prevent the success of any experiment having for its object the gift of small freeholds to the poor, and the reduction of the large freeholds of the rich. The tendency of the thing is that land accumulates in the hands of the large holders, and it freely leaves the hands of the small freeholders who find it impossible to retain it. The reason is plain. Arable land does not pay to cultivate. Wheat is grown at a loss, and if wheat is a losing concern, nothing else sown on arable land will pay. Land, therefore, is more and more thrown into pasture or grass, and that pays but a small profit, while it employs labour to the extent of one third of that required for arable land. The consequence is the poor holder of a small farm is forced to sell his holding, and agricultural labourers go into the towns and cities for a livelihood, thus add to the pressure of population there, and bring down wages to starvation point. For this state of thing there is, humanly speaking, no remedy. The whole difficulty has arisen from the enormous growth of wheat and bread-stuffs in the British Colonies, in America and India, which enables these as imports to be landed and sold here in England cheaper than our own people can grow them.

What remedy can there be for such a difficulty as this? The one alleviation must be found in emigration of our surplus struggling agricultural population. The land here is starving them. Lands in the colonies, in Canada, in Australia, in New Zealand, in America, are lying fallow, lacking their labour and their cultivation, and there is room enough there and to spare for all the suffering folk who to-day feel the pinch of want by reason of this our land being too "strait" for them.

The "desolate heritages of the earth" are Israel's inheritance, and, therefore, that of the British people, who are Israel. Thither our surplus people must go who cannot find a living here, and going there and occupying these waste, howling, wildernesses, they will, by their labour, make them Gardens of Eden for loveliness; blossoming like the rose, according to the prophecies. Here then is the God-provided remedy for the troubles of the British farmer and the farm labourer at the present time. We are fed by our colonies so cheaply that our own land refuses to support our vastly-increased and increasing populations. Our colonies are so vast and so much in need of population that there our starving people must resort to live. Our over-burdened towns will thus obtain relief from their excessive numbers; and the outland Empire of our Queen, the Greater Britain of her Colonial Dominions, will develop into that "Company of Nations" which was to come of Ephraim, and thus prove his superiority over the elder brother, Manasseh, the great and independent people to come of him.

How wonderful are our God's ways in fulfilling His own Prophetic Word, and how majestically does He provide for its historical development! He gives His people a vast increase of population, according to the prophecies, and thus forces them by the "straitness" of their island home, to seek colonial domiciles abroad. These develop into "Nations," so rich in arable lands that they completely ruin the wheat cultivation of their old Mother in the West, and drive the agriculturalists of the ruined arable cultivation here to flee from their ancient home, driven by want and hardship.

Many plans are devised to remedy this sad state of things, and men are found to tell our sufferers that if each poor man could only have a little "holding" of his own he must become at last prosperous and rich. But how? If he have his land what can he do with it? Wheat and other cereals he cannot grow! They will ruin him to raise! To turn his paddock into pasture will do him no good. He is forced to sell it to his richer neighbour who has capital, and thus the experiment fails! The one remedy is God's, and our poor must use it. It is the Divine prescription of Him who scatters Israel and sows her "among the nations" (Zech. x. 9), who also blesses them there; what time they live with their children there and 'turn again" to Him who has redeemed them, even to the Lord Jesus Christ, their Saviour, King, and God! (2 Peter i. 1; John i. 49; 2 Cor. v. 19).

TRUE APOSTOLIC SUCCESSION.

By Geo. O. Barnes, Mountain Evangelist.

Is it not, on the face of it, rather a melancholy fact, that the Church of England—Israel—should, after casting off Popery as an incubus of horror, go to her and supplicate for the honour of tracing her ministry through such polluted channels as some of the Popes at least furnished, in order to get at the holy apostles of our Lord, by an unbroken succession? Is it not an imputation against the wisdom and grace of our God that He should have cared no better for His ministry than that—He, so jealous, in time past, upon that very point? I am not forgetting, for a moment, that God's blessing came in time past—I will not say unhindered, but unfailing, notwithstanding all of Israel's twenty kings were bad, and eleven out of nineteen of Judah's monarchs "did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord." Nor am I denying, what is written in characters of living light upon every page of inspiration, and every dispensation of providence, that character never affects relationship. God's children are His, however bad; God's priests are His, though as wicked as Hophni and Phinehas; God's kings are His, though as graceless as Ahaz, or Manasseh, or Charles II. But Rome stands on other grounds. She is not in the line of promise at all, but in the line of the curse, from first to last—ending in the overwhelmed Babylon of Rev. xviii. Not through such a line of pollution, and not over such a road, dark with the shadow of "Anathema," does the true priest of the holy tabernacle, that "God pitched and not man," come to us who worship at the blessed shrine. The thought is one of unmitigated horror, once the eyes are anointed with the true "eye salve," so that we see clearly.

Whence, then, do we get the true "apostolic succession," to minister to which, the very apostles themselves were appointed, as gifts from the Ascended One, to keep for the Church the holy ordinances of the new-old dispensation? The answer is simple and Scriptural. God has never had but the one line, since Jacob's sons furnished material for the expanding development of God's eternal purpose, through one nation to bless the world; through one royal line, "after His own heart," to rule the world; through one priestly family to regulate His altar. The throne, the altar, the Imperial race are all "predestinated" according to the "counsel of His will," who surely will carry it out, in spite of raging devils and unholy men. The race—the seed of Abraham, the friend of God. The throne—David's. The altar—Levi's. Let me say, too, that all stand or fall together. If God is not true in all, He is true in nothing. Anglo-Israel truth stands unshaken on this foundation Rock—that nothing shall fail of all "the mouth of the Lord hath spoken."

Digitized by Google

"What, then, saith the Scripture?" This, in plainest words (Jer. xxxiii. 17—22): "For thus saith the Lord; David shall never want a man to sit upon the throne of the House of Israel; neither shall the priests the Levites want a man before Me to offer burnt offerings, and to kindle meat offerings, and to do sacrifice continually. And the word of the Lord came unto Jeremiah, saying, Thus saith the Lord; If ye can break My covenant of the day, and My covenant of the night, and that there should not be day and night in their season; then may also My covenant be broken with David My servant, that he should not have a son to reign upon his throne; and with the Levites the priests, My ministers. As the host of heaven cannot be numbered, neither the sand of the sea measured: so will I multiply the seed of David My servant, and the Levites that minister unto Me."

Can anything be plainer than that? Can any connection be more indissoluble? If the Levite be not there, the king is not there, and the race is not there, according to the Scriptures upon which the whole fabric of Anglo-Israelism is built. Either God has Levites ministering somewhere at His altar now, or day and night have ceased, and the ordinances of the sky have failed. As surely as David's seed are reigning somewhere, so surely Levi's seed are ministering somewhere. Scripture cannot be broken. Where are they?

(To be continued.)

THE SIGNIFICATION OF THE NAME BRITAIN.

By The Rev. Eliezer Bassin, Master of Surgery.

The name Great Britain, which is now given only to England and Scotland, was a term used, without the word Great, by ancient classical writers previous to Cæsar, for the British Isles, including England, Scotland, and Ireland, with the smaller isles round them. Ptolemy, in the second century A.D., was the first who applied "Little Britain" to Ireland, and "Great Britain" to England and Scotland.

More than a thousand years B.C. these isles were called, by the Phœnicians, by the name of Brython, and it is still so in the Welsh language. Many interpretations have been given as to signification of the name Britain or Brython, but no one could say with certainty which was the right meaning. I have a right to propose an interpretation which is, perhaps, as likely to be correct as any other.

The word Brython is composed of two pure Hebrew words, Bryth om—i.e., covenant people. You will find the words in Isaiah xlii. 6. These islands were probably called Brython, I think, because they were inherited by Israelites, who were known to the Phœnicians as the covenant people of God. It seems, from Judges v. 17, that the Danites had emigrated in ships as early as 1285 B.C. In the English Revised Version we read, "And Dan, why did he remain in ships?" but in Hebrew it is, "And Dan, why did he emigrate in ships?" The word yagoor is from the verb goor, stranger. Deborah in her song says, regarding Dan, "Why did he emigrate in ships from the promised land, and become a stranger to the God who is able to deliver His people from their enemies, as He has done this day." It is quite clear from the book of Judges that the Danites emigrated from Palestine, and probably many other Israelites went with them, when Israel was under the yoke of Jabin, king of Canaan, of the king of Moab, of the king of Mesopotamia, and of the Philistians. History tells us that Ireland was, in remote times, peopled by a tribe styled Danaans, and it is quite reasonable to think that they were descended from Dan, the son of Israel.

However difficult it may be, to many, to acquiesce in statements of this kind, which contradict what they have learned concerning the inhabitants of these Isles, they must in time admit that traces of Israelitish origin are to be found among the British people, as well as in the Irish antiquities which illustrate British history, as now preserved in the British Museum and in Dublin; also in the name Brython, which we bring now once more to the notice of the British people.

PROGRESS IN PORT HOPE, ONTARIO, CANADA.

We have received a very cheering letter from Mr. H. H. Lea, of Port Hope, Ont., Canada, dated December 23rd, 1885, the following extracts from which, give good news of progress there:—"I rejoice to tell you," he writes, "that Our Identity is spreading silently, but surely. I feel surprised, but delighted, to find it in most unexpected places. I am attacked with the greatest nonsense. Some declare 'that all the Israelites are Jews' and that 'the whole of the Tribes returned from captivity together.' A Wesleyan minister here, who had been President of the Conference, was talking with me about Our Identity When I remarked to him 'that we were the descendants of Abraham,' he replied, 'Oh, God, give us a better origin than that!' I asked, 'Do you feel disgraced by it?' 'Yes,' he said, 'I do, indeed!' I told him 'Our Saviour did not, and all we know of God's dealings with the world is from that race. God chose them, but you reject them with scorn! Why do you read the Bible at all? It is all, or nearly all, concerning this Hebrew nation.'" Mr. Lea tells us of his deep interest now in the Word of God; and how, led by the literature of the Identity, he has perused its sacred pages thirty times, each time with new discoveries of its wondrous treasures! With similar testimony from all parts of the earth, we wonder at the constancy of the clerical opposition, and are at a loss to explain why it is as persistent as it is—unless, indeed, Ezekiel xxxiv. be the cause? Of all our countrymen the clergy and ministers of religion are the most determined opponents, resisting the evidence of Our Identity, maligning its professors, scoffing at its scriptural evidences, and, without reason or cause, declaring the teaching to be dangerous, false, and heretical. We trust that the march of events and the fulfilments of prophecy will soon rebuke these cavillers, and that ere long the ministers of Christ will rejoice to know that they and their people are indeed the people of God, and the House of Israel, His chosen.

Correspondence.

OUR IDENTITY IN SOUTH AFRICA.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

Dear Philo-Israel,—I send the following warm welcome to our Identity papers, from a Royal Artilleryman, that will interest the supporters of the Anglo-Israel Free Distribution Fund.

Yours, very sincerely,
E. M. Rush, Hon. Sec.

My Dear Madam,—I don't think I will be able to write as I would like to, to express my thankfulness to you for your kind Christian love to me in sending me all the papers to instruct me in the ways of the Lord's dealings with us His people. Words I cannot find to describe what I feel in my soul with regard to the goodness of God. He truly works in a mysterious way His wonders to perform, and the light He has thrown on His holy Word of late, is marvellous in the extreme; and as I read the Banner, and compare Scripture with Scripture, there is a marvellous link of beauty in it. My comrades delight to read them, several come to me and say, "Have you any books for me to read?" As I see one read, and pass it to another, it gives my heart joy, and I can't help but thank Him from Whom all good comes. There are many things I can't understand now, but I leave them to Him Who can explain, and will in His own good time. I rest in confidence, knowing He will do what is best for me. He who says "I will lead thee in the way thou should'st go,' will not forget His promise. Mr. Pearse has sent me up some books from Pietermaritzburg that I like well. I have not read them all yet, but what I have read I have found to be very helpful, and instructive, and throw a great light on the book of Daniel. Daniel had a great deal revealed to him, his prophecies are so very deep and instructive; time does not afford me to read all I should like to. but I hope I will soon have it. I think I will be returning to Pietermaritzburg in six weeks, or two months time, and I will be glad of it, and more at home than up here in this lonely place; but the greatest comfort I have is that God will direct my path as best for me. BOMBARDIER, R.A.

Digitized by Google

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—There having been frequent allusions in the numbers of the BANNER to human remains found in some parts of Great Britain, and supposed to indicate the types of the original prehistoric inhabitants of the country—"squat figures" and "boat-shaped skulls," their implements proving them to belong to the "stone age,"—it occurred to me that it might be both interesting and suggestive to your readers, if a translation of a few passages in a German paper, Die Taliche Rundschau of January 20th, concerning some Bella Coola Indians, now exhibiting in Berlin could (subject to your judgment), appear in the pages of your valuable publication:—

"The Bella Coola Indians are interesting as belonging to the Behring tribes—that important group inhabiting the two Northern shores of the Pacific, and forming a connecting link between the Mongol and American races; more interesting still are they, however, on account of their manners and customs. These have not yet been altered in the least by contact with European civilisation, and therefore they afford opportunity for the most instructive comparisons with other primitive nations. They have short hair and wear a beard, and reach on an average the height of 168 cm., but their heads are extraordinarly broad, even to 90 per cent. of the length of the skull. This great width is produced artifi ially, by compressing the head of the new-born infant. However, this custom has been found to exist among diverse primitive nations. Descent is traced through the female lines. Like the tribes along the Rio Xingo in Brazil (see Von Den Steimen's researches), they still belong to the stone age, so that they construct their canoes, made out of the trunks of trees, entirely with the help of stone tools. These canoes, like those in use at Cameroon, are sometimes capable of carrying 100 men.

Thus this comparatively unimportant nation, which is, moreover, dying out, may prove a valuable link in comparative ethnology and throw a bright light on some dark points in the history of the human race."

May I, as one not of the British Nation, be allowed, before concluding, to express my earnest desire, that all who undertake to teach and preach this Identity, may be given grace to do so in the spirit of humility and holy reverence, like those who are treading on sacred ground; for such a region it is, which is being opened to the mind of the inquirer into prophetic truth—a region consecrated by the unerring though hidden working of the God of truth and of judgment, the God of Abraham, of Isaac and of Jacob, the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ.—Yours truly,

GERMAN.

ISRAEL'S SCRIPTURE AND PRAYER UNION.

THE number of cards now issued is 1,389. This includes those in the hands of the local secretaries. Since our last report five new members have been enrolled here, and one in Malta. One who has lately joined writes: "I have believed for the last ten years that God is with us, and that we are the descendants of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. I am thankful to testify also that I have been born of water and of the Spirit. There is a glorious future for us who have made our calling and election sure, and believe in Christ's words to the ruler, Nicodemus, 'Ye must be born again.'"

All subscriptions for the Monthly Comments, by Philo-Israel, should in future be paid up to January, 1887, inclusive, as that number will complete the second series.

The Card of Membership will be sent on receipt of three stamps. The Comments, prepared by Philo-Israel, will be sent post-free monthly for 1s. per annum; 2 copies. 1s. 6d.; 3 copies, 2s. The "Prayers for Daily Use," being a prayer for each day of the week, by Philo-Israel, are 1d., or 9d. per dozen; postage extra.

The prayer of the Union, as on the Card of Membership, may now be obtained printed in larger type. Price 1d. for three copies, post free; or 1s. per 100 for distribution.

The bound volume of Monthly Comments (first series) may be had in paper cover for 1s., postage 2d., or in cloth 1s. 9d., postage 3d. Address Miss J. Lawrence, Rosslyn, Upper Teddington, Middlesex.

J. LAWRENCE, Hon. Sec.

ANGLO-ISRAEL FREE DISTRIBUTION FUND.

The following subscriptions, received from January 16 to February 13, are very gratefully acknowledged:—Major P., Brixton, 5s.; A Friend, 2s. 6d.; S. R., Wilsden. 2s. 6d.; Miss B., New Hampton. 2s.; G. S., Sidcup, 2s. 6d.: I. S., N.B., 5s.; Mrs. O., N.B., 2s. 6d.; J. D., Chatham, 1s. 6d.; F. W., Demerara, 15s.; J. H., Demerara, 3s.; Miss B., Hackney, 1s.; Mrs. A., Edinburgh, 1s. 6d.; Miss B., 6d.; H. G., Tooting, monthly subscription, 1s.; C. B., South Hayling, monthly subscription, 5s.; Miss G., Cheltenham, 1s. 6d.; C. P., 1s.; Mrs. B., Canada, per Philo-Israel, 6s. 6d.; Miss M., Marazion, 1s.; Rev. S. M. S., £1; Mrs. L; Upper Norwood, £1; Mrs. P., Richmond, 2s. 6d. Received by Miss E. M. Rush:—J. M., Malta, a collection, 11s.; A Friend, per P. N., 5s.; A Trifle from Shrewsbury, 3s.; Mr. B., Caterham, 3s. 6d.; G. N. P., Malta, 2s. Total, £6 7s. 6d. Our warmest thanks are also due to Mr. T. D. Almond, of Liverpool, for another large parcel of "Britain's Inheritance," and to Mrs. Gairdner for thirteen copies of "Bible Lessons and Reflections."

The Annual Report for 1885 is now ready, and will be forwarded on application to anyone who has not received a copy. The following is a list of those who kindly act as local agents and treasurers: T. S Hill, Esq.. 6, Newby-terrace, Claughton, Birkenhead; C. K. Stevens Esq., Clifton-house, Par, Cornwall: Mr. John May, 26, Piazza Miratore, Floriana, Malta; H. Moore Hancock, Esq., Silligori, Bengal, India; E. L. Dwyer, Esq.. Saud-hill, Launceston, Tasmania; E. C. Baxter, Esq., Cape Town, Cape Colony, South Africa.

One of our Sowers in Yorkshire writes:—"It gives me great pleasure to send you another mite towards the Free Distribution Fund. I pray that God will touch the hearts of those who have ample means at their disposal to give liberally towards the fund, and help to extend its usefulness. I have a great number of persons who are ready to receive and read the pamphlets and leaflets which you send me to distribute. They seemingly do not make that impression one might expect; but I firmly believe that in God's own time great results will be shown. By prayer, patience, and perseverance, through God's help, this noble work will be abundantly blessed and crowned with success. If you have any more 'seed' to send me I shall be happy to go on sowing, as there is plenty of fallow ground to break up yet. 'For in due season we shall reap, if we faint not.'"

From another comes the following encouraging words:—"Will you please send me a few copies of 'Eureka.' I had one in the last parcel and lent it to our vicar's churchwarden. He liked it so much, he asked permission to lend it to a friend. It is still passing from one to another, and I have not seen it again. Some are reading it that would not look into any other book on the Identity, and I hope it may be the means of some reading more on the subject. Two young men that I gave a few leaflets to a few weeks ago have asked for more. One has got a second book to-day, and they both appear interested in the subject."

One who has opportunities of sowing the seed as district visitor, writing of one whom she has recently interested in the subject, says:—"Since I have told him of this grand truth he mentions it to everyone, and he says he is surprised how many amongst the poor people he finds that believe in it. I told you, I think, that he was going to have men of an evening to read to them, and now he says this subject will draw far more people."

The following comes from Devon:—"I should be glad if you could send me a few copies of 'Britain's Inheritance.' I think they will take with some people I know. I have given my only copy to a quartermaster. I had given him some books on Our Identity before, among the rest 'The Bible in Stone.' so I asked him what he had done with it, and he told me it had gone nearly through the Fleet. He is a firm believer in it himself, and I think will make it known as far as he has the power. May our dear Lord open many blind eyes and soften hard hearts."

The following striking testimony to the good resulting from the circulation of the BANNER comes to Miss E. M. Rush:—"I enclose herewith 5s., brought me by a friend for the Free Distribution Fund. He wouldn't have the Identity at all, so I sent him a BANNER every week by post, with the above result."

Since our last report 140 BANNERS have been sent out weekly, and 38 packets of literature forwarded by Miss E. M. Rush to the undermentioned places, from one to three to each:—Berwick-on-Tweed, Briton Ferry, Blackfen, Dover, Eastbourne, Lee, Misson (Yorks), Montrose, Pimlico, Westminster; H. M. ships Himalaya and Orwell, Cannes, Montelar, Aouste (France). Malta, Cairo, Wady Halfa, Assouan, Kosheh and Akasheh, Soudan; Etshame, Zululand; Cape Town, Pietermaritzburg, and Griquatown, South Africa, and Toronto. In addition to the above we have sent out 18 parcels to Birkenhead, Cheltenham, North Hayling, Portsmouth, Richmond, Rugby, Sheffield, Wilsden, Moosejaw, Canada; British Guiana, India, Australia, Tasmania, and New Zealand. The address given by our Sower staying at Rugby is insufficient.

J. LAWRENCE, Treasurer.

Contributions to the Fund will be very gratefully received by the Treasurer, Miss J. Lawrence, Rosslyn, Upper Teddington, Middlesex; or by the Hon. Sec., Miss E. M. Rush, 103, Burnt-Ash-road, Lee, S.E.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed: — "Philo-Israel," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

SUBSCRIPTIONS £ s. d.

Annual Subscription for one copy weekly (including the Twelve Double Numbers) post free - 0 7 6
Two Copies (including Double Numbers) - - 0 13 6
Three Copies " " " " - 1 0 4
Four Copies " " " " - 1 5 6
Six Copies " " " " - 1 16 4

Post Office Orders to be made payable at the head office, St. Martin's-le-grand, London, to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.; and W. H. GUEST & Co. 29, Paternoster-row, London.

The Editor cannot undertake to return rejected MSS. unless stamps for the purpose be sent. Parties requiring an answer should enclose a stamp.

Contents Bills and Show Cards may be obtained on application to the Publishers.

Advertisements should be sent to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

Prepaid Advertisements are inserted at the rate of 30 words for 1s. 4d.

PUBLISHED BY ROBT. BANKS & SON,

RACQUET COURT, FLEET STREET, E.C.

WORKS BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

The Geography of the Gates. With Map and six full page, and one double-page, Illustrations, printed on plate paper. 208 pages, in handsome cloth, gilt Price 3s. 6d., post free 3s. 10d.

An Elementary Digest or Sketch of the Chief Facts and Teachings of the Great Pyramid of Egypt. Adapted to the Unlearned and Unscientific. 56 pages, Illustrated with Diagrams, price 4d., post free 5d. 10th Thousand.

Our Identity with the House of Israel. Price 4d. Reprinted from "Clifton Chronicle Letters"

The Sisters of Harrowdale Rectory. A Tale of Great Interest for Young People on the Identity of Lost Israel; with splendid double-page frontispiece, illustrating Harrowdale Rectory and Church. This book will be read by both young and old with the greatest interest. By Mrs. M. A. SEARSON. Price 2s. 6d. post free 2s. 9d.; handsome cloth, gilt, bevelled boards.

London: Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street.

Price 2d., by post 2½d. 12s. 6d. per 100 nett.

A New Light.

BY A E I.

Author of "The New Old Story," "4,000 Years Old," &c.

This pamphlet is prepared specially for general distribution, and as a means of introducing "Our Identity" to persons unacquainted with the subject will be found particularly useful. It is printed on good paper, in clear type, and bound in primrose colour cover.

London: R. Banks & Son, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C.

A Thousand of the first edition sold in a few weeks for Great Britain, Ireland, Egypt, Natal, India, and America.

ISRAEL'S WORLD:

Origin and Destiny of British Race Colonies, and Empire; according to Scripture, History, and Signs of Our Times.

BY REV. HENRY ROE.

Price 2d., post free 2½d. R. Banks & Son, Racquet-court

Also by the same Author. "Consecration," 4d.; "Going to Africa," 1s.; "Fernando Po Mission," 1s.; "West African Scenes." 2s. E. Stock, 62, Paternoster-row, London, E.C. Rev. H. Roe, St. Ives, Cornwall.

THE

WONDERFUL VISITING BASKET AND DRESS STAND COMBINED.

Alice Gem's Patent.

LADIES ARE DELIGHTED WITH THEM

OPEN. A Perfect Dress Stand.

CLOSED. Room Inside for 2 Dresses, &c.

Without Body .... 25s. 6d.
To measure of waist 27s. 6d.
With Body ..... 31s. 6d.
To size of Waist and Bust, 4s. extra.
With French Padded Bust ..... 33s. 6d.
Do. to Size of Waist and Bust ..... 35s. 6d.
Do. to Tight-fitting Bodice ..... 39s. 6d.
Plain Skirt Stand to pack into Small Compass ..... 10s. 6d.
To size of Waist .. 11s. 6d.
Do. with French bust 17s. 6d.
Do. to Size of Waist and Bust ..... 19s. 6d.

Sent any part of the kingdom on receipt of P.O. by STEPHENSON BROS., 230, Tottenham Court Rd., W.

Printed for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C. PUBLISHED BY GUEST, HAYWORTH, & Co., 29, PATERNOSTER-ROW, EDNESDAY, MARCH 3, 1886.

[All rights reserved.

BOOKS FOR BIBLE STUDENTS.

Price 2s. 6d., post free (published at 4s.), cloth, gilt lettered

The Book of Hebrew Roots.

Showing the Ideal Meanings and Various Ramifications of the Principal Hebrew Radicals.

By BURLINGTON B. WALE.

Large Folio, Hand Coloured, 12s. 6d., uncoloured, 6s. 6d., without Introduction, 3s., by post 3d. extra.

Modern Hieroglyphics of the Apocalypse and Great Pyramid.

Illustrated by Ten Plates, with explanations. By A WATCHER. To which is prefixed an introduction, showing how recent events in the Eastern Question and the Church have worked towards a fulfilment of the Theory suggested in this Book.

R. BANKS & SON Racquet-court, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

NEW FEATHER BEDS AT HALF PRICE.

Great Reduction in Price to 9d. per lb.

THE LINCOLNSHIRE BEDDING CO.

Are now sending their celebrated Feather Beds direct from the Lincolnshire Feather Factory, Boston, Lincolnshire, as follows:—

	s.	d
No. 1.—SINGLE BED, BOLSTER, AND PILLOW, 6 ft. 3 in. by 3 ft. 6 in., weighing 40lbs.	30	0
No. 2—DOUBLE BED, BOLSTER AND TWO PILLOWS, 6 ft. 6 in. by 4 ft. 6 in. 50 lbs.....	37	6
No. 3.—DOUBLE BED, BOLSTER, and TWO PILLOWS, 6 ft. 6 in. by 4 ft. 6 in., 55 lbs. ...	41	3
No. 4. — EXTRA DOUBLE-SIZED BED, BOLSTER AND TWO PILLOWS, 6 ft. 6 in. by 5 ft., 65 lbs.....	48	9

WARRANTED NEW AND SWEET.

Any size Bed only 9d. per lb., including Feathers, in white (bordered) tick, making, packing, wrapper, and carriage paid to any station in the United Kingdom, Superior Beds, Splendid Feathers, Linen Tick, 1s. per lb. Samples of Feathers and Tick, Price Lists, &c., post free. Agents wanted everywhere.

All Orders must be prepaid to A. W. HALL (London Agent), 132, Fleet Street, London, E.C., where Beds may be obtained. To ensure safe delivery of Goods, Cheques or P.O.O. may be post-dated ten days. Feathers only 9d. per lb., a large discount on three or more Beds. The trade supplied. Please mention this paper.

LUNG TONIC

OWBRIDGE'S LUNG TONIC,

THE MIGHTY HEALER.

Save Your Lives by Taking

OWBRIDGE'S LUNG TONIC.

It has a power over diseases hitherto unknown in Medicine.

Are you at all Weak-chested, or inclined to be Consumptive, with just a touch of Cough now and then?

"Try this Wonderful Medicine." The Cough and Weakness will disappear as if by magic, and you will feel a strength and power you never had before.

HAVE YOU A COUGH?
A DOSE WILL RELIEVE IT.
HAVE YOU A COLD?
A DOSE AT BEDTIME WILL REMOVE IT.

Bronchitis and Asthma it relieves instantly The Spasms of Coughing so dreadful in Whooping Cough become less with each dose of the medicine ——

Prepared by W. T. OWBRIDGE, Chemist, Hull.

Sold in bottles 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d. & 11s. by all Chemists and Patent Medicine Vendors. Wholesale all London and Provincial Houses.

GENUINE FREE PRESENT.

GOVERNMENT

HEARTHRUGS.

10,000 BEAUTIFUL PURSES to be GIVEN AWAY.

"BANNER OF ISRAEL." March 3, 1886.

FREE PRESENTATION COUPON.

A Beautiful City-made Leather Purse to be Given Away.

On receipt of this Coupon and P.O.O. value 2s., or 26 stamps, I hereby agree to send one BEAUTIFUL GOVERNMENT HEARTHRUG, 6 feet long, 3 feet wide, various designs, fern leaves, oak leaves, flowers, masonry, mosaic, cat and kittens, and the new tiger design, suitable for drawing-room, dining-room, parlour, or kitchen; and I also agree to present to every purchaser a BEAUTIFUL LEATHER PURSE.

(Signed) J. WATTS

Two Rugs, with two presents, 3s. 10d., P.O.O. or 50 stamps. Six Rugs, with six Presents, P.O.O. 11s.

P. O. Orders to be made payable at Low Hill Branch to

J. WATTS,

113, BRUNSWICK ROAD, LIVERPOOL.

THE ANTHEMIC

HOP PILLOW.

A WONDERFUL REMEDY FOR

SLEEPLESS NIGHTS.

Acknowledged by the highest Medical Authority to be unique in its action, certain in its effect, and one of the greatest boons known to modern times. Noxious sleeping draughts with their ill effects; in fact, sedatives of every kind, can now be dispensed with, THE HOP PILLOW supplying their place by giving sound and NATURAL SLEEP, stimulating the brain, invigorating and strengthening the nervous system, and bringing back that vital power which was thought to have been irretrievably lost. Sent free on receipt of P.O.O. or stamps for 7s. 6d., or 10s. 6d. Please address—

Department B. I., C. W. WESTON,

The London and County Medical Drug Co.,

4, BURY COURT, ST. MARY'S AXE, LONDON.

EDWARD HINE'S PUBLICATIONS.

FORTY-SEVEN IDENTIFICATIONS, 6d.
COMING GLORIES, 6d.
FLASHES OF LIGHT, 6d.
OXFORD WRONG, 4d.
ANGLO-SAXON RIDDLE, 2d.

Penny extra per post. Above bound in handsome vol., LOST ISRAEL FOUND, 3s. 6d. Post FREE, 3s. 9d.

LEAFLET No. 1, 1s. per 100, of ISAAC LOVELAND, Shoreham, Sevenoaks; GUEST, HAYWORTH, & Co., 29, Paternoster Row, E.C

EUREKA!

This remarkable pamphlet has already reached its Third Edition, and can now be had containing an excellent Portrait and a short Biographical Account of the Author, the Rev. G. O. BARNES. Post free 7d.; cheap edition, 2½d.

Guest, Hayworth & Co., 29, Paternoster-row, E.C.; S. Standring, 8 and 9, Finsbury-street.

Health Aids Health Aids Health Aids Health Aids

Write for this valuable little Book.

50 YEARS RECORD of Facts, Principles, and Discoveries Relating to the Improvement and Preservation of Human Life on Earth. By Dr. Samuel Birley, M.D. Ph.D. Articles 1, 2, 3, and 4, complete in book form, post free 2 stamps—

GORDON I. MURRAY & Co., 33, CASTLE ST., HOLBORN, LONDON

THE BRITISH ISRAELITES;

Or, Evidences of our Hebrew Origin, gathered from History, Genealogy, Philology, and Heathen Customs. To which is added the Scriptural Testimony of Prophecy Compared with Existing Facts, Answers to Objections, and a Lecture on the Great Pyramid.

By LIEUT.-COLONEL H. W. J. SENIOR, 1st Bengal Infantry.

"We can safely recommend it as an excellent guide to the learned and an invaluable mine of wealth to the Anglo-Israelite controversialist. We hope all our readers will secure a copy, and have it often in their hands.—Banner of Israel

With Illustrations, cloth gilt, 178 pp., 3s. 6d. BAGSTER & SONS, LMTD., 15, PATERNOSTER ROW, E.C

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."

(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India.)

"And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the Forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS of the EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. X., No. 480. Entered at Stationers' Hall.] WEDNESDAY, MARCH 10, 1886. PRICE ONE PENNY.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
The Righteous Nation	101
True Apostolic Succession. By G. O. Barnes, Mountain Evangelist.—Part II.	102
Optimism	103
The Interior of the Great Pyramid and the Earthly Lifetime of Christ. By F. Gass	104
Disestablishment. By R. E.	105
The British and Foreign Bible Society Gives Testimony that the British are Israel	106
Reviews	106
Correspondence	107

THE RIGHTEOUS NATION.

"THE righteous nation that keepeth the truths" there can be no doubt is Israel. Isa. xxvi. 2 alludes to it as the one that enters the open gates. It is the nation which the Lord calls "My nation," in Isa. li. 4, and certifies that He thus speaks of Israel, by declaring they are "His people"—those who belong to the isles that wait for Him (ver. 5). To this nation and this alone is righteousness promised, in such a passage as Isa. lx. 21, where it is stated: "Thy people also shall be all righteous; they shall inherit the land for ever, the branch of My planting, the work of My hands, that I may be glorified." Of this nation the Lord spake in Isa. xliii. 20, 21 (R. V.) as "His people, His chosen;" "the people which I formed for Myself, that they might show forth My praise." Of them Isaiah spoke in chap. liv. 13 and 17, saying, "All thy children shall be taught of the Lord, and great shall be the peace of thy children. In righteousness shalt thou be established. This is the heritage of the servants of the Lord, and their righteousness, which is of Me, saith the Lord."

If we British, then, be the Ten-tribed House of Israel, we must be to-day showing signs of this our glorious origin. We must be showing forth God's praise, waiting for Him in the isles, exhibiting to the world the character of a "righteous nation," trusting for our righteousness before God only through the finished work of Jehovah-Jesus, our God and Saviour, and blessing the ends and uttermost parts of the earth with all nations, families, and kindreds of the same, by spreading the knowledge of His Word and His Gospel throughout the world. Our nation answers to the description exactly. Our national attitude before God is that of waiting on Him for the outpouring of His spirit on our masses; trusting for our righteousness only to the merits and sacrifice of our Lord Jesus Christ. We are from our Isles in the West blessing the whole world, sending the Word of God to all the nations, families, and kindreds of the earth, and giving to all with whom we come in contact, as a protecting power, civilization, the Bible, the Sabbath—civil and religious liberty and all those good and holy things that the Gospel of the grace of God carries in its train.

And this is the testimony even of the secular writers of the day, who witness to the general beneficence of the British character, and therefore desire that British outland Empire should indefinitely extend. It is a wonderful fact that even Mr. Morley, the late editor of the Pall Mall Gazette, who has hitherto been the declared enemy of British Empire beyond sea, is now openly advocating the extension of our nation's influence on the very ground we are insisting on—namely, that that influence is invariably exerted for good, but not for evil. The following extract from the Pall Mall Gazette of September 30 testifies to that effect, and adds on its own account that the authority of "England," beyond these seas, "makes for righteousness, peace, liberty, humanity, and civilization." This is splendid evidence, and proves on the testimony of a perfectly blind witness that the British are Israel. Alluding to one of Mr. Morley's late addresses, the Pall Mall wrote thus:

But first and foremost of all, before commenting on what there is in the speech from which we must dissent, we give the heartiest and most cordial recognition of the larger tone and more patriotic ring of the aspiration with which he closed his speech. It is almost the first time Mr. Morley has definitely declared that part of the inspiration of every citizen ought to be a desire "to give new strength and new authority to the country which has no rival in the magnitude of its interests and in the humanity of its purposes." What an incalculable gain if that noble aspiration could be impressed on every English heart, especially on those of the men who at Lambeth the other day diversified their applause of Mr. Chamberlain and Mr. Morley by hissing "Rule Britannia!" Nay, what a boon it would be if Mr. Morley would but live up to his own declared creed in this matter. For hitherto, we confess, we have not felt that Mr. Morley believed in England—at least in England beyond the seas. If we had been asked to indicate the difference between the foreign policy of this journal, for instance, under Mr. Morley and under his successor, we should have said that we believed that England's authority outside England made for good and ought to be strengthened, whereas our predecessor believed that it was always exercised for evil, and ought to be minimised. The advocates of the exercise of the authority of England abroad, and those who pleaded for the extension of that great humane and civilizing influence to regions yet unfavoured by its presence, never had a more persistent and a more consistent opponent than Mr. Morley. That, we are rejoiced to learn, is now to be a thing of the past. Mr. Morley now stands shoulder to shoulder with those whom in his unregenerate days he was apt to calumniate as Jingoes, and cries, "More power to the elbow of old England beyond the sea, for no Power has such wide and general interests to protect or pursues a policy so humane." This is a somewhat unfamiliar sound on Mr. Morley's lips, but it is all the more welcome on that account, and he will render a truly Imperial service if he will keep that note uppermost during the whole of the general election. It will enormously simplify political discussion if it can now be taken for granted that, taken as a whole, the authority of England beyond these seas makes for righteousness, peace, liberty, humanity, and civilization. In both hemispheres England is Ormuzd, not Ahriman. If only that were recognized all round, half our colonial and foreign differences would disappear.

Digitized by Google

It is a remarkable fact, no doubt, that God has disposed the hearts of all parties in this country to see that what was once called the Jingo policy of the Tories, is the true policy which British-Israel must pursue to benefit the world. Ours is a righteous rule, and our authority beyond sea is what Sir Arthur Cotton called, in his letter published on page 354 of last year's issue of the BANNER, "a new kingdom founded on the Word of God, all whose rule is for good." "Every mile," he added, "brought under England's flag is clear gain."

Our true and righteous policy is therefore always to accept all enlargement of the Empire, wherever and whenever it may be offered and lawfully placed within our reach for honorable acceptance. Our policy is, towards outland Empire and its alien inhabitants, decidedly "humane," as Mr. Morley allows, and the Pall Mall Gazette admits that it makes for the benefit and blessing of those who are fortunate enough to come under our nation's flag. Mr. Morley's wish now is that "new strength and new authority" should be given by his countrymen to our nation's operations abroad beyond sea; and in desiring this he is only echoing the promises of God to Abraham and Jacob for their afterseed: "In thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed;" "in thee and in thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed" (Gen. xviii. 18, xxviii. 14).

The British, in short, is the righteous nation, even on Mr. John Morley's showing, and she is "the head and not the tail, above only, and not beneath," all the Gentile races of the earth, since he admits that she has NO rival in the magnitude of her interests and in the humanity of her purposes!

Surely the stones would cry out with such a result as this before us, admitted as it is by the Radical element in our midst, if we failed to call upon all Anglo-Israelites, therefore, to "praise the Lord" because to God and God only we are indebted for the gifts which make our nation what it is to-day.

TRUE APOSTOLIC SUCCESSION.

By GEO. O. BARNES, MOUNTAIN EVANGELIST.

(Concluded from page 98.)

I REPLY that the Levites are to be found in the Church of England, par excellence, as constituted in the year of grace 1885. "As it was in the beginning, is now, and shall be to the age never ending." Alas! for the "blindness in part" that has been Israel's dreary heritage "for her sins" since the words were spoken! Alas! for the blind eyes turning Romewards for the light! A thousand pities that libraries have been written to prove what, if established, would only have proved our shame. Israel's priesthood needs not to trace itself to angels—even they are but ministering, serving spirits sent forth. Much less to apostles—sons of Benjamin—who, again, in turn, are but ministers sent forth—receptacles of light, predestined to be poured out upon the chosen race, the chosen ruler, the chosen priesthood. Oh, brethren! let us not forget that that which is "chosen of God" is precious. Let us not make it vile, wilfully choosing for ourselves instead of gratefully recognizing what God has selected.

Once seeing this (and it is crystal clear to me now), I am not concerned, however deeply interested, in knowing how God will manage to bring His own Word to pass. That is His business, though mine, if He has given a clue, however feeble, to discover, and reverently to adore, and thankfully to rejoice, when found. I think the clue, like an almost invisible golden thread (though quite strong enough for faith), is given us in Jer. xli. 10, xliii. 6, where the king's daughters (plural) give us a parting glimpse of all that was left of the seed royal of Judah. It is not absolutely necessary in making a case; for Jeremiah's marriage to one of the Tribe of Dan would not have polluted the Levite purity of stock in his children. But I love the legend, that while Eochaid, the Heremon of Dan, married Tephi, Jeremiah, the Levite priest—sang pur—married another of Zedekiah's daughters, thus beginning the Levite stock in the Church of the isles by a grand typical union of the royal and priestly races.

I do not care to prove all this. It is beautiful, and like the Lord, and full of heavenly romance, and I only care to revel in the belief of it, without a proof that would satisfy a critical head. A loving heart is more to the purpose, nor do I care to answer the cavilling question, "How can these things be?" It is enough for me to know that God has spoken the unbroken word concerning Levi, as of Abraham and David. I rest in that.

Though after seeing for myself, that our God has preserved the Jew, intact, through ages, and among peoples and nations that one would have thought would long since have absorbed, or, failing that, have mongrelised them, at least; it does not need much faith to believe that God could keep a royal line from David pure, or a priestly line from Levi unpolluted.

Have faith in God, dear reader, and you will find the "rough places smooth," and the hills levelled to the valleys. Only, for myself, I say Rome shall not furnish me a priesthood, when I can have God's ordained Levite for the simply taking Him at His word. And now, fail not to remember, dear reader, that thrice repeated is that promise to Levi, in Jer. xxxiii. 17—22. And if God, in spite of a thousand untoward influences brought to bear by Satan upon the throne, has kept the blue blood of David on that, why should He not even much more, by His over-ruling power and grace, keep the unpolluted stock of Levi at the altar? A critic may "laugh to scorn" our tracery of Queen Victoria's line to David, as we stagger through the mists of Scotch and Irish legend, groping for the dim clue. So the same one, "wise in his own conceit," may pick flaws innumerable, defy us point blank to establish a single valid link in the chain, from his Grace of Canterbury to Jeremiah, without touching the original promise. That stands, though feeble humanity cannot discern the "ways of the Lord" in bringing all to pass; nor am I, who believe that literal and spiritual are combined in the word of the Lord, so that the one supplements the other, instead of nullifying,—concerned at the mention of "burnt offerings" and "meat offerings," in the passage quoted in Jeremiah; for both these are in the Church of England to-day, set forth more plainly than of old—the burnt offering God's due in the cup of blessing, and the meat offering man's due—in the gentle ministry of love from every curate to his parishioners. God's priests, specially set to minister at His altar, do not prevent every believer from being a priest ordained to "offer spiritual gifts and sacrifices, acceptable unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord."

The Ritualist may monopolise that in his narrowness, and reduce it to the stringency of his cramped creed. I do not follow him. The Radical may deny the special virtue in an order of men ordained for special work, and in his "Broad Church" sweep of independence, obliterate holy landmarks that God has set up. Nor will I follow him. But I will follow in the middle path, the Shepherd's footsteps, who was as true to His Tribe as He was to God, because His Father God had chosen His Tribe. Men forget that He appears at last as the "Lion of the Tribe of Judah," as well as "Head of the Church triumphant." They forget that a Jew died upon the cross, and a Jew sits at the right hand of God to-day. I am glad to think a Jew sits upon England's throne as I write—not of those who crucified Him on Calvary—but of those who lived before the shame of that bloody transaction settled down upon the race, and even before the auburn hair and chiselled features, the blue eye and comely beauty of God's favoured ones had given place to the swarthy ill-favour of the modern Hebrew—whereby the "show of his countenance" betrays him wherever he goes. This dreary legacy of woe he entailed upon himself on the day when he flung dust in the air in the madness of his rage, and said, "His blood be upon us and upon our children." I am glad our beloved and honoured Queen is as free from the stain of that crime as David, her father, was. It comes in as the dismal inheritance of a later day and another clime, when and where her ancestors figured not.

Digitized by Google

"Oh, the depths! the depths! of the wisdom and knowledge of God"!

"Prospect Point," Landour, N.W.P., India, Sept. 29th, 1885.

OPTIMISM.

We have been told that our views of the present state of public affairs are "optimist," and that the real facts of the case are far different from what we take them to be. We cannot, however, plead guilty to the charge made against us; because we do, in truth, believe, that what men esteem misfortunes and national disasters, may indeed overtake us in the future, but that these, when they submerge us, will be found to be blessings in disguise, sent us by our loving Father in heaven, to prepare us for His promised showers of blessing; and that, therefore, nothing that can possibly happen to us, will fall out otherwise than for our benefit. And why? Because this people here in Britain is God's people Israel, and the Lord has engaged, that when things come to the very worst with us, they shall surely mend; that even "when the enemy cometh in like a flood, the Spirit of the Lord shall lift up a standard against him" (Isa. lix. 19). When troublous times and distress are upon us as a nation, God has declared that His people are not to fear, or be distressed and dismayed, for "I am with thee;" He declares, "I am thy God, I will strengthen thee, I will help thee, I will uphold thee with the right hand of My righteousness." "I will hold thy right hand, saying unto thee, Fear not, I will help thee" (Isa. xli. 10). The Lord declares, too, in Isa. liv. 8, that He hid His face from Israel for a moment in a little wrath, but with everlasting kindness He would have mercy upon her, being "the Lord her Redeemer." Recalling the waters of Noah, and His oath that those waters should never again "go over the earth:" "so have I sworn (He added) that I would not be wrath with thee nor rebuke thee." Whatever, then, happens to our nation, be the clouds as dark as ink, and the prospect such as to presage instant destruction of the statecraft amid the breakers, we shall not lose our faith in the promises of God, for we know that this nation is Israel, and that the God of Israel has sworn, and cannot break His word. "Hath He said, and shall He not do it? Hath He spoken, and shall He not make it good?" He will, doubtless, fulfil His promises to His people Israel, and we have no hesitation in saying, that even now, while the pessimists are declaring the empire is on the verge of ruin, He is better to us than all our fears. He is giving us proofs of His love and care of us as a nation, which we are allowing to be disregarded, in our resolve that the pessimist aspect of our public affairs shall prevail. A remarkable example of this appeared in The Times on December 28, to which we refer our readers, and there we see the pessimist and optimist view side by side. Every one of the latter statements we all know to be founded on fact, and though it is perfectly true that trade is generally greatly depressed at the present moment, things are not quite so black as our low-spirited friends make them out to be. The letter was as follows:—

To the Editor of "The Times."

Sir,—May I invite your attention to the aspect presented by this country to one who has been absent from England for several Christmas Days in succession, and who, since leaving home, has seen many lands and many races of men?

What most strikes the returning absentee is the curious contrast between what he is told to expect and what he really finds. Were he guided solely by what he read and by what he heard said over and over again, he could not doubt that the ruin of his country is at hand. Her trade is paralyzed, her manufacturers are outdone in the neutral markets, her agriculture is destroyed, her venerable Church is in danger, her Imperial unity is about to be dissolved, her Army and Navy have reached the uncomfortable destination to which officers (usually the older ones) of both services have long declared that they were going, her prestige is lost, she has become the laughing-stock of foreign nations, her ancient institutions are at the mercy of an unwieldly mass of grossly ignorant electors, well-established economic laws have fallen into disrepute, politicians of eminence openly coquet with Socialism, not to say—according to the more recent criticisms—with Jacobinism, if that is worse. All this, and more, will have been pressed upon the new arrival.

But if the exile post reditum observes for himself, he will discover that the real state of affairs is more like the following:—Though prices have fallen, to the advantage of the not insignificant body of consumers, the total volume of British trade, even in a time of world-wide depression, has not materially shrunk. Foreign manufacturers complain even more loudly and with more reason than our own. The shows of stock of the season are as well supplied as in average years, and the despondent utterances of agriculturists exactly resemble those which a moderate acquaintance with our history proves to have been common at former periods. The Church has shown within the last few weeks an unexpected capacity for defensive organisation and a power over certain large classes of the people which few had anticipated. The Tory aristocrat and the Radical so advanced as to be suspected of Socialism or Jacobinism have both professed themselves to be on the side of the integrity of the Empire. Our remotest colonies have sent material help to us in difficult expeditions. The feudatories of the Empress of India have placed their forces at her disposal when her Eastern dominions seemed to be in danger. Though we have made war, perhaps too often of late, on foes unworthy of us, there can be no dispute but that our Army and Navy exhibited an efficiency which no one could have credited them with thirty or even fifteen years ago. Your own columns shew the close attention with which the course of public affairs in England is watched by journalists and statesmen in other countries, an attention far surpassing that paid to them a generation ago. The huge electorates of great cities have of late declared, with surprising frequency, for Conservatism in politics. An unlooked for feature of the recent county elections was the smallness of the number of spoilt ballot papers, no inconsiderable proof of educational progress; and even where Conservative candidates were defeated in rural constituencies, they rarely failed to poll a respectable minority of votes. Though fair trade was talked about by many of the irresponsible, no serious politician of any eminence has ventured to confess plainly that he believes in it. The Socialism of prominent public men appears, on closer scrutiny, to be confined to an attempt to change the system of allocating school fees.

Is the proportion unemployed of the working class of America smaller than with us? Is the trade of France more prosperous than ours? Has she done in Tonquin better than we have in Burmah? Have the urban constituencies of Germany shown themselves more Conservative or more opposed to anarchical programmes than those of England? Surely there can be but one answer to these questions, and that answer is one that will not impair an Englishman's enjoyment of this merry time of the year.

Your obedient servant,

C. A. G. B.

London, Christmas Day, 1885.

It is astonishing how the truths of Our Identity cause all our national and public sorrows to assume a roseate hue, because we have the promises of God appearing behind them and His assurance, that in and through them all, we have hold of His right hand, the right hand of Jesus' spotless righteousness, and He has our nation clasped by her right hand, to keep her safe and steadfast through the deep waters she must pass through. Consequently, we have now no fears about the state of Ireland, being sure that if even rebellion and civil war be the result of the crisis there, they will end in our liberation from the Canaanitish thorns and pricks which afflict us so sorely now. If trade continues depressed, we cheer ourselves with the certainty of the "good time coming," when, as God has promised, "the seed shall be prosperous, and the vine shall give her fruit, and the ground shall give her increase, and the heavens shall give her dew, and God will cause the (British) remnant of His people to possess all these things" (Zech. viii. 12). Our Identity is the most comforting cordial for drooping hearts and desponding breasts that we know, because it meets us at every turn. There is no circumstance, however dark, to which it lends no light, and the reflex glories of Israel illuminate the recesses of private and individual griefs, because the same God—the God of Israel—who leads the nation, is the God, the Father, the Redeemer, Husband, Brother, and Friend of every individual Israelite among us. He is the faithful covenant-keeping God, and we may trust Him to be to us each, individually and personally, what He is to the nation at large—our God, our King, our Saviour, our Mediator, and our Advocate, the Daysman who appears in the courts above to represent our case, and to offer a sacrifice for our sins. Israel, praise ye the Lord!

Digitized by Google

THE INTERIOR OF THE GREAT PYRAMID AND THE EARTHLY LIFETIME OF CHRIST.

By F. Gass.

I HAVE stated in the BANNER more than once that the Messianic period of 33·6 solar years is intimately connected with Pyramid measures, and I have a firm hope that this paper will be accepted as decisive proof of the correctness of that statement. The different measures dealt with have taken a considerable time to collect, as there is very little in the actual numbers to guide an investigator in his search. As the measures are so numerous, I am compelled to be brief in description. It will be as well to commence with the Grand Gallery, as it is specially connected with the work of Christ on earth, and the measures thereabout are firmly fixed.

(1) The length of the Grand Gallery = 33·6 × 56. The distance from North wall of Grand Gallery to North wall of King's Chamber = 33·6 × 8 × 8. The distance from North wall of Grand Gallery to South wall of King's Chamber, and up the wall to roof = 33·6 × 77. The distance from North wall of Grand Gallery, measured over the Great Step, to South wall of King's Chamber, and up the wall to roof = 33·6 × 77·85, the interior length of Coffer. The distance from North wall to South wall of Grand Gallery, measured over Great Step, plus the distance from North edge of Step to North wall of King's Chamber = 33·6 × 66·66 + . The distance from North wall to South wall of Grand Gallery, plus the distance from North edge of Step to South wall of Ante-Chamber, equals the circumference of a circle with diameter = 33·6 × 20.

The sum of the horizontal length of the Grand Gallery and the vertical height of the rise of its inclined floor-line = 33·6 × 75 = 2,520. Add to this the length of the floor-line, and the sum of the three sides of the right-angled triangle thus formed = 33·6 × 131. To this add the height of the Grand Gallery, at each end, and the length of its roof-line * (= 33·6 × 75) and the total = 33·6 × 206 = the Messianic period multiplied by the width of the King's Chamber.

The inclined distance from North wall of Grand Gallery, through the Great Step, to surface of Ante-Chamber passage beyond (the point K in diagram, BANNER, vol. ix., No. 458, p. 399) plus the horizontal distance between the same points, and the vertical height (or sine) of the subtending angle (making the three sides of a right-angled triangle) equals the circumference of a circle with diameter = 33·6 × 7 × 6.

It is clear from the above that the geometrical relations of Grand Gallery are rich in Messianic allusions.

(2) Let us now try the axes of the passages. Commencing with the most significant place, the original Entrance Doorway, I find that the inclined distance up the Pyramid outside, from the North base-side at the pavement-level, directly below the Doorway to the axis at the Entrance = 33·6 × 26. From axis of Entrance Doorway, along axes of passages, to North wall of Grand Gallery = $\frac{33{\cdot}6 \times 7^2 \times 4^2}{10}$. The whole distance along axes of passages to South wall of Grand Gallery = 33·6 × 33·6 × 4 The distance from axis of Descending Passage to North wall of Grand Gallery = 33·6 × 45. The distance from axis of Descending Passage to South wall of Grand Gallery = 33·6 × 101. The distance from axis of Descending Passage to South wall of King's Chamber, with the height of that wall = 33·6 × 61 × 2 = the Messianic period multiplied by twice the length of the Great Step.

(3) There are some remarkable horizontal lengths as follows:—

The horizontal distance from North commencement of floor of original Entrance Doorway to the South wall of Grand Gallery = 33·6 × 33·6 × 6 × ·6.

Carry the floor-line of the Grand Gallery to the South wall, and the horizontal distance from that point to the South inclined side of the Pyramid = 33·6 × 56 + 33·6 × 37·5 = 1,881·6 + 1,260 = 3,141·6 = 1,000π = 33·6 × 93·5. The horizontal distance from commencement of First Ascending Passage to South wall of King's Chamber equals 105½ times 33·6.

The horizontal distance from North beginning of subterranean horizontal passage to South wall of Subterranean Chamber = 33·6 × 20.

(4) The whole length of the interior passage system (omitting the passage to the Queen's Chamber, which originally was cut off, or shut out, from the other passages) is a multiple of the Messianic period:—

The full length of the floor of Descending Passage from original Entrance Doorway to South end of incline in the rock below, equals the circumference of a circle with diameter = 33·6 × 8 × 7 × ·7 (= 188·16 × 7 × π = 4,137·855). Add to this the ascending distance, from the commencement of the First Ascending Passage to the South wall of the Grand Gallery, or the whole of the descending and ascending passage system, and (within the errors of measurement) the sum equals 33·6 × 25 × 9 = three times 2,520, the prophetic period in years of the "seven times." And by adding further to this sum of the lengths of the inclined passage system, the lengths of the upper and lower horizontal flooring (North to South) the total sum equals, exactly, the circumference of a circle (4,138 + 1,542·4 + 1,881·6 + 536 + 346·6) with diameter = 33·6 × 80.

The length of the Descending Passage from original Entrance Doorway to First Ascending Passage = (33·6 × 30) + $\frac{(33{\cdot}6 \times 3)^2}{100}$ = 1,109·6.

(5) Passing now to the Ante-Chamber. The width of Great Step plus length of low passage to Chamber = 33·6 × 4. The distance from North edge of Step to North side of granite leaf = 33·6 × 4.

The height of Chamber = 33·6 × 4·44 + = 149·33 + .

The sum of the bounding lines of the Chamber (at the back of the wainscots)

* The length of the roof-line of the Grand Gallery, as measured by Dr. Grant by direct mensuration between two plummets = 1844·5, but this included the thickness of the top overlap at the North wall, which is entirely destroyed, and therefore has to be deducted.

Digitized by Google

$$= \frac{33{\cdot}6 \times 37{\cdot}5 \times 7 \times 5 \times 3}{100} = \frac{1{,}260 \times 7 \times 5 \times 3}{100} = 1{,}323.$$

In the first equation the Messianic period is the chief factor, and in the second equation it is the 1,260 prophetic years, the "time, times, and dividing of time."

The following, showing a connection between the Ante-Chamber and the Grand Gallery, is noteworthy:—

$$\frac{(149{\cdot}33+) \times 1{,}260}{100} = \frac{1{,}323 \times 128}{90} = 1{,}881{\cdot}6.$$

(6) The King's Chamber and the Coffer will bring our inquiry to an end:—

The distance from South wall of Grand Gallery to North wall of the Chamber = $33{\cdot}6 \times 8$. And, if I am right in my theory that the thickness of the Great Step-stone is 40· + inches, the measure from its North base, vertically upward, to its North edge, then horizontally to South wall of King's Chamber, and again vertically up the South wall to roof of Chamber $(40 + 536 + 230{\cdot}4) = 33{\cdot}6 \times 6 \times 4$.

The granite wall height of Chamber $= 33{\cdot}6 \times 7$. The square of the cubic diagonal $(515{\cdot}165)^2$, gives the diameter of a circle with the same area as a square with a side $= 33{\cdot}6 \times 7{,}000 = 235{\cdot}2 \times 1{,}000 = 1{,}000$ times the height of granite walls. The cubic diagonal of the granite wall height of Chamber $= 33.6 \times 7{\cdot}7 \times 2$. The sum of the bounding lines of the Chamber equals, within a fraction of an inch, $33{\cdot}6 \times 101$, equal to the distance from axis of Descending Passage to South wall of Grand Gallery.

The exterior arris lines of the Coffer $= \frac{(33{\cdot}6)^2 \times 6}{10}$. Also equal, within the measures, to the sum of the length, breadth, and gable height of the Queen's Chamber.

The sum of the arris lines of both the exterior and interior of the Coffer $= \frac{33{\cdot}6367}{10}$.

Many of these results deserve a much fuller explanation than it is possible to give them within the space of a short paper. But I am content if I have given the earnest student of the sacred aspect of the Great Pyramid food for thought and study. Proofs have had to take the place of words. The numbers of the Messianic period have been traced from the outside pavement below the Entrance Doorway, through the interior passages, ascending, descending, and subterranean, in the dimensions of the Chambers and the Coffer, and, generally, in the geometry of the structure. The Christian believer in the Great Pyramid as God's inspired building, will be glad to learn that the Saviour, by the symbol of the years in His earthly lifetime, is so fully represented in the measures of the building.

Apart from those lengths that depend upon the position of the original Entrance Doorway, as given by Mr. Petrie, there are amply sufficient measures tested by actual mensuration to prove my case.

DISESTABLISHMENT.

By R. E.

A SMALL volume published by the Liberation Society comes to this sad conclusion — Disestablishment inevitable! This Society was formed some forty years ago with the hope of being instrumental in upsetting Church and State, it being of opinion that State Churches are inconsistent with the teaching of the Bible, as also with the teaching of Christ and His Apostles. The Establishment is accused of being opposed to progress, hostile to liberty, and a failure, besides being a hindrance to religion. These are serious impeachments, and dealt out with an unsparing hand; but, happily, such impeachments can be refuted.

First, it is difficult to see in what manner a State Church is inconsistent with the teaching of the Bible. Eli, as head of the Church, was governor of the people. Samuel, also, united the priestly office with that of Judge of Israel, and in that capacity went in circuit every year to administer justice; and more than that, he further identified himself with State affairs by leading, as we are told by Josephus, an expedition against the Philistines, many of whom he slew.

After the election of a king, Church and State were as inseparable as in the days of the Commonwealth, inasmuch as any breaking of the law of Moses by the people brought judgment not only on themselves but on their king, thus showing that the king, as head of the State, was held responsible for the due observance of the ordinances of religion. It is asserted by the volume under review that in the Church of the Old Testament neither the civil rulers nor the congregation of the children of Israel, neither kings nor any other human authority whatsoever, could interfere with religion in the way of legislation without destroying the divine command.

That the ordinances of the Church of Israel were divinely founded is, of course, true; but to say that no human authority ever enacted statutes relating to the religious welfare of the people without disobeying God is hardly correct. In Exodus xviii. we have at least one instance of Moses acting on his own responsibility in taking the advice of Jethro, his father-in-law, who seeing how much pressed Moses was by the people's anxiety to enquire of God, suggested that he should appoint chosen rulers over tens of thousands, and then over thousands; then to divide and sub-divide into hundreds and fifties, rulers to be set over each of them, dividing them again into thirties, and lastly into twenties and by tens.

It has been pointed out that this manner of appointing judges and officers over the Israelites deserves to be noted, as it was the pattern of the manner of the choice and ordination of bishops, presbyters, and deacons in the Christian Church (Acts. vi.). It is also to be noted that Moses exhorted these judges and officers to be perfect in their judgment, to be afraid of the face of no man, for he reminds them the judgment is God's (Deut. i. 17).

By this system of self-government, of division and sub-division into what we should call parishes, this method of placing wise men chosen from the people in authority, it is clearly shown that the congregation of the children of Israel had a voice in religious legislation, and that the Liberationists are wrong; the civil polity was strengthened and consolidated by the Church, and the Church was invigorated and its organisation established by the parochial government of the State.

The one end aimed at in the Mosaic constitution was to build up an Established Church—a Church we are to trace back to an age beyond the time of Moses, back to the call of Abraham, for he is, says Dean Stanley, the first figure in the long succession which has never since been broken—the first father of the universal Church, the founder of the chosen people, whose seed was to be as the sand upon the sea-shore, as the stars for multitude. From this point, he continues, we enter on the history of the people of Israel as the true beginning and prototype of the Christian Church.

As the Christian Church sprang out of the Jewish, as Christ came not to destroy but to fulfil, as He came specially to save the people elected to represent the Church, how can it be possible for a State Church to be inconsistent with His teaching? Christ, the Head of the Church, proclaimed the continuity of the old and the new when He said to the woman of Samaria, "Salvation is of the Jews."

"It is in the dispersion of the chosen people that the Christian may see," says Farrar, in his "Life of St. Paul," "the hand of God so ordering the course of history as to prepare the world for the revelation of His Son."

The early preachers of the good tidings having received their mission to seek out the lost sheep of the House of Israel, traverse through countries open to them by the conquests of Alexander, and in due course the news they have to preach reaches remote Britain before A.D. 61—Gildas, the most ancient of historians, stating that Christianity was known in this island before that time. Here we have evidence of the Gospel coming to these shores in the age of the Apostles, and with it the foundations of the Church of England—a Church declared by Canon Kingsley as being wonderfully and mysteriously fitted for the souls of a free Norse-Saxon race.

Digitized by Google

As the Church of the Levitical dispensation was, root and branch, an inseparable part of the prosperous existence of Israel, so is the Church of England, by the will of God, the fundamental source of State prosperity in Israel in these latter days. To quote the words of Mr. Gladstone:—

The powers that dwell in individuals acting as a government can only be secured for right uses by applying to them a religion. The statesman must be a worshipping man, the powers and instruments with which he works are public, acting under and by the authority of the law; he moves at his word ten thousand subject arms; and because such energies are thus essentially public and wholly out of the range of mere individual agency, they must be sanctified not only by the private personal prayers and piety of those who fill public situations, but also by public acts of the men composing the public body. They must offer prayer and praise in their public and collective character—in that character wherein they constitute the organ of the nation and wield the collective force. A nation having a personality lies under the obligation, like the individuals composing its governing body, of sanctifying the acts of that personality by the offices of religion, and thus we have an imperative ground for the existence of a state religion.

In these words Mr. Gladstone exactly presents to us what was established in Israel. God desired to have an habitation in the midst of His people, and Moses is instructed by Him to make Him a sanctuary, that He within its walls might bless and sanctify His people as one collective body—Church and State.

That which God has established cannot be put aside. Men may say that the Church of England has failed in her work. Maybe she has; as the Church Militant she stands not faultless, but, like her elder sister, she has a mission to carry out, and until that work be done men may talk of her inward and outward blemishes, but their talk will accomplish nothing. As long as she is the champion of every good work, so long as her zeal is for the salvation of souls, she has nothing to fear, neither from without nor within, for God would not so have enlarged her borders had she not found grace in His sight. May it be ever so.

South Park Hill, Croydon, Feb. 13th, 1886.

THE BRITISH AND FOREIGN BIBLE SOCIETY GIVES TESTIMONY THAT THE BRITISH ARE ISRAEL.

We beg our readers will give a calm and careful consideration to the following notice issued by the British and Foreign Bible Society during the past year, 1885. It illustrates a number of points bearing on Our Identity which we are constantly enunciating. It declares that the Society's work—

1. Is among "all nations, families, and kindreds of the earth;" and that is Israel's commission (Gen. xviii. 18, xxii. 18, xxviii. 14, Acts iii. 25).

2. That it is working in every part of Europe, and also among "the most distant nations of the earth." But this was Israel's appointed work (Isa. xxvii. 6).

3. That its object is to honour the Word of God and to lead men to ascribe to God all the glory; which is Israel's prescribed function (Psa. l. 23, lxxviii. 5, 6; Isa. xliii. 21).

The British and Foreign Bible Society, as representing this nation, herein distinctly, if blindly, bears witness that the British are Israel. The notice was to the following effect:—

BRITISH AND FOREIGN BIBLE SOCIETY.

This Society was instituted in 1804, with the object of circulating the Word of God throughout the world. Nearly ten millions sterling have been spent by it in the work of translating, revising, printing, and circulating the Scriptures, and more than one hundred millions of Bibles, Testaments, and portions have issued from its depôts in 267 languages and dialects, many of which have been reduced to writing for the first time. In this work the Society has been aided by every section of Christ's Church, by the leaders and friends of Christian enterprise, by scholars and philologists, especially among the missionaries, foreign as well as British.

There is no country in the world which has not felt the influence of this Society. Not only does it possess agents and correspondents, colporteurs and depôts, in every part of Europe, but it is working as the handmaid of all the missionary societies among the most distant nations of the earth. Syrians and Persians, Indians and Chinese, Abyssinians and Kaffirs, the islanders of Madagascar, New Zealand and the South Seas, Mexicans and Esquimaux, with many others, can say that through its means they hear in their own tongues the wonderful works of God.

Christian workers of all denominations are cordially invited not only to contribute to the Society's funds, but also to draw from its stores of precious seed. Schools and hospitals, prisons and reformatories, railway-stations and hotels, the army and the navy, acknowledge the blessing it has conferred upon them. Poverty, trouble, sickness, and even blindness, present a claim to which it never turns a deaf ear. Public and social movements, emigration, international exhibitions, wars, fires, floods, are regarded as so many occasions for its renewed exertions, and for the introduction of God's Word into fresh channels.

The average issues from the London depôt alone are over six thousand volumes a day, and from the various foreign depôt, taken together, the issues are still greater. Printing-presses are employed by the Society, not only in London, Oxford, and Cambridge, but also at Paris, Brussels, Amsterdam, Berlin, Cologne, Vienna, Rome, Madrid, Lisbon, Copenhagen, Stockholm, St. Petersburg, Constantinople, Beyrout, Bombay, Madras, Calcutta, Shanghai, Capetown, Sydney, and other centres of activity.

To God be all the glory!

Reviews.

A New Light. By A E I, author of "The Answer to the Eastern Question," &c., &c. Robert Banks and Son. Price twopence.

This is a bright little tractate by our old friend, A E I, written to show that Our Identity is a new light upon the pages of the Word of God and upon the events of the day; also that the wonderful dissemination of this great truth is an additional evidence, amounting to proof positive, that the Bible is true, but no lie. "It has convinced those who hitherto would not listen to the Gospel (says our author), such being men and women too, that the Gospel of Christ is worth listening to; and that it is a mighty power to convince a heedless world that God is faithful and true. But look at home," adds our friend, and asks, "Has the Identity been proved sufficient to convince infidels and sceptics of the truth of the Bible and win them to Christ?" And the answer comes to us, "Yes, over and over again!" Then may we not say that a new light has indeed come to us, and we dare not shut our eyes to the heaven-sent gift, nor risk the retribution that surely will follow if we despise our birthright and ignore its responsibilities in the sight of God" (p. 14). An illustration of the exact truth of our author's words has just come home to us from a lady writing from that far-distant spot, Moosejaw River, N. West Territory of Canada, who says: "To me the finding the Lost Tribes in the British people is the grandest revelation of God's faithfulness to His word that has been made known to His people since the Reformation." We quite concur in this verdict, and as the object of A E I's work is to make known this revelation as a "New Light" which should be welcome to all men, we wish for the effort every success, and also the blessing of the God of Israel.

Digitized by Google

Why we do not adopt the French Metrical System in place of our Anglo-Saxon Metrology. By Christopher Giles, Adelaide, South Australia. With an Introduction by C. Piazzi Smyth, Astronomer-Royal for Scotland. Robert Banks and Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C. Price 6d.

FIRST NOTICE.

The implied question which the Australian author of this truly excellent pamphlet has asked is very well answered indeed in the 39 pages of his work. Men ask why we do not and should not adopt the metrical system of France? The author tells us why with arguments and reasons most cogent and powerful. The essay was sent, it appears, to Professor Piazzi Smyth from the ends of the earth at Adelaide, in South Australia, with the result that the Professor was so well pleased with it that he wrote an introduction to it and caused it to be published in the attractive form we see it now, to the great satisfaction of all Identity students. It must be clearly understood that the writer of this clever yet clearly and very simply written treatise is an Anglo-Israelite. His words throughout show that he believes the Anglo-Saxon race to be the lost House of Israel.

Our author has divided his work into four parts or chapters. Part i. deals with "The French Metre and the French People"; part ii. with "Anglo-Saxon Metrology, Earth Commensurability;" part iii. enters on the consideration of "The Great Pyramid which is in Egypt, but aloof from all Idolatry"; and part iv. concludes with the statement that "The only Universal Metrology is connected with the true religion of the past, present, and glorious future of divine prophecy." In commencing his subject, Mr. Giles explains clearly what the metric system is, how it was born in French revolutionary, atheistic times, the unit being a curve and the basis a quadrant of the terrestrial meridian which passes through Formentara and Dunkirk in Northern France.

The French metre, which equals 39·3707 British imperial inches, is a ten-millionth part of the said meridianal quadrant. This quadrant and the metre are both of them imperfect as being geometrically curves, and the arc of the meridian selected as the base of the system is erroneous because proved too small by 4,008 feet. The French metre is shown thus by our author to be "not only a curve, but a curve of arbitrary length, without even the sorry honesty of professing to be such and no more" (p. 11).

Mr. Giles shows that the metrical system is French altogether, but not universal at all in any sense. It is, he adds, "unscientific in theory, wanting in philosophic significance, non earth-commensurable, devoid of universality in origin, genius, and fact; and therefore "utterly unworthy of the acceptance of another and a great people." After disposing in a masterly way of the claims of France to dictate to the whole world a new metrical system which is French from first to last, the author very properly said that "the people with the best right to propound its system of metrology for universal acceptance would be one possessing—1. The greatest amount of territory by sea and land; 2. The highest rate of increase in population; 3. The greatest wealth; 4. The pre-eminence in commerce; 5. The first place in extent and power of colonisation; 6. The greatest freedom for its individuals; 7. First in philanthropy and improvements in the condition of subject races." Therefore clearly the British Anglo-Saxon races.

Our author, on p. 15, quotes from The Times of Sept. 6, 1884, some statistical tables of the probable population of European nations in A.D. 2000, which we also re-published in BANNER vol. viii., p. 457, wherein it is seen at a glance that the British folk increased at the rate of 13·5 per thousand between 1871 and 1881, whereas the French rate was for the same period only 4·5, the German increasing only as 10·8 per 1000. He showed that therefore in A.D. 2000 the French will number 64,189,400, and the Germans 164,678,076, but the British 142,465,921, a very abnormal comparative advance indeed in numbers. Noticing the anxious desire of the French to force on us as she has done on her Continental neighbours her false system of metrology, our author observes that a people so great as the Anglo-Saxons "should be governed by and enjoy a metric system of the very highest order, suitable to them, and founded on a basis which shall be at once truly scientific and inherently universal" (p. 18).

How Mr. Giles proceeds to prove that our Anglo-Saxon Metrology, founded on its earth commensurability, is the truest and best possible for any nation because divine and cosmic in its origin, we must leave him to explain. He gives up his part ii. to this point, and here founding a good deal of what he advances on Professor Piazzi Smyth's works on the Great Pyramid, he gives a blow at the doctrine of man's evolution from a jelly fish, and an ape. What he says on this point on p. 24 must have a place in the BANNER. After eliciting from the man of modern science that according to his theory, man's intellect as well as his physical conformation were also progressive, he propounds the following questions to the philosopher of evolution:—

1. "Jelly fish and apes exist and are still man's very humble servants. They are, in fact, still (pardon the expression) under his feet. Will you please explain this, and state what induced some individuals of the tribe and not others to the important step which led to such marvellous results. Is the process still going on? Are jelly fish, or, to come nearer still, are apes ever met with in the transition state? If so, kindly state instances. If not, why not?

2. "History tells us that man's intellect (and this is proved by the remains of ancient architecture) was four or five thousand years ago, of an order so high that little, if any, improvement has after the lapse of so many ages become manifest. And man's moral nature, if history may be believed, was at the same remote period precisely the same as now. I should be glad if some explanation of these remarkable facts could be given."

(To be continued.)

Correspondence.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—My attention has been called to your remarks in the BANNER OF ISRAEL on the article of Rev. D. Carey in Silver Morn; and though I am not able to accept the views of Anglo-Israel, yet I desire ever, in the spirit of my Lord and Master, to be kind and courteous towards those from whom I differ, especially if they are brethren in Christ.

And as my rule is not to have any controversy in our magazine, I much regret the appearance of anything which might give rise to it, and so excite feelings of acrimony and hostility. Had I been sufficiently careful, that part of the article would have been omitted.

We have not ourselves been able to accept the Anglo-Israel view, in the interpretation of Holy Scripture; but we have never written (nor shall we) anything to controvert it in The Silver Morn. Though we hold ourselves at perfect liberty to speak freely our mind on this and all other points in which we may differ from other prophetic interpreters, apart from the magazine.

Of course we hold much in common with our Anglo-Israel friends on other points, even of prophetic interpretation, and we desire ever to speak and act kindly and courteously toward those from whom we may differ. "Let brotherly love continue." "Ye are all one in Christ Jesus."

I am, dear Sir, yours faithfully in the Lord,

WILLIAM FRITH,

One of the Editors of "The Silver Morn and Prophetic Voice."

AN ISRAELITISH CUSTOM.—On page 58 we published a short statement by A. S., calling attention to an Israelitish custom, that of "throwing the shoe" at wedding parties, which the writer supposed had not been alluded to before in the BANNER. We are reminded that in Vol. IV. of this journal, at page 41, our contributor and correspondent, L. P., drew attention to the custom, and commented on it. It is difficult now, of course, to point out anything new in connection with the Identity; but it is more difficult for our friends to refer back to volumes of the BANNER published six years ago—which our recent converts probably have never seen—and so guard against the reproduction of an idea already published. Some latitude we feel must be allowed to correspondents in such matters, though of course recognition of L. P.'s prior mention of the Israelitish custom in question is very right and proper.

THE "marriage chest" which the women of Bristol are about to present to the Princess Beatrice is nearly a yard square. It is made from ancient oak, obtained from Redcliffe church, which building was much admired by Queen Elizabeth when she attended a service within its walls.

THE QUEEN has signified to the Countess of Dufferin her intention of presenting medals to the most distinguished female licentiates in the Medical School of India.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor to be addressed — "Philo-Israel," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

SUBSCRIPTIONS £ s. d.

Annual Subscription for one copy weekly (including the Twelve Double Numbers) post free - 0 7 6
Two Copies (including Double Numbers) - - 0 13 6
Three Copies " " " " - 1 0 4
Four Copies " " " " - 1 5 6
Six Copies " " " " - 1 16 4

Post Office Orders to be made payable at the head office, St. Martin's-le-grand. London, to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C., and W. H. GUEST & Co. 29, Paternoster-row, London.

The Editor cannot undertake to return rejected MSS. unless stamps for the purpose be sent. Parties requiring an answer should enclose a stamp.

Contents Bills and Show Cards may be obtained on application to the Publishers.

Advertisements should be sent to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

Prepaid Advertisements are inserted at the rate of 30 words for 1s. 4d.

PUBLISHED BY ROBT. BANKS & SON,

RACQUET COURT, FLEET STREET, E.C.

WORKS BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

The Geography of the Gates. With Map and six full page, and one double-page, Illustrations, printed on plate paper. 208 pages, in handsome cloth, gilt Price 3s. 6d., post free 3s. 10d.

An Elementary Digest or Sketch of the Chief Facts and Teachings of the Great Pyramid of Egypt. Adapted to the Unlearned and Unscientific. 56 pages, Illustrated with Diagrams, price 4d., post free 5d. 10th Thousand.

The History of the House of Israel; How they were Lost, and How they were Found, Told for the Children. Price 6d., cloth 1s.; post free 7d. and 1s. 1d. Fourth Edition. Eleventh thousand.

Our Identity with the House of Israel. Price 4d. Reprinted from "Clifton Chronicle Letters"

London: Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street.

A Thousand of the first edition sold in a few weeks for Great Britain, Ireland, Egypt, Natal, India, and America.

ISRAEL'S WORLD:

Origin and Destiny of British Race, Colonies, and Empire; according to Scripture, History, and Signs of Our Times.

BY REV. HENRY ROE.

Price 2d., post free 2½d. R. Banks & Son, Racquet-court

Also by the same Author. "Consecration," 4d.; "Going to Africa," 1s.; "Fernando Po Mission," 1s.; "West African Scenes." 2s. E Stock, 62, Paternoster-row, London, E.C. Rev. H. Roe, St. Ives, Cornwall.

EUREKA!

This remarkable pamphlet has already reached its Third Edition, and can now be had containing an excellent Portrait and a short Biographical Account of the Author, the Rev. G. O. BARNES. Post free 7d.; cheap edition, 2½d.

Guest, Hayworth & Co., 29, Paternoster-row, E.C.; S. Standring, 8 and 9, Finsbury-street.

THE ANTHEMIC

HOP PILLOW.

A WONDERFUL REMEDY FOR

SLEEPLESS NIGHTS.

Acknowledged by the highest Medical Authority to be unique in its action, certain in its effect, and one of the greatest boons known to modern times. Noxious sleeping draughts with their ill effects; in fact, sedatives of every kind, can now be dispensed with, THE HOP PILLOW supplying their place by giving sound and NATURAL SLEEP, stimulating the brain, invigorating and strengthening the nervous system, and bringing back that vital power which was thought to have been irretrievably lost. Sent free on receipt of P.O.O. or stamps for 7s. 6d, or 10s. 6d. Please address—

Department B. I., C. W. WESTON,

The London and County Medical Drug Co.,

4, BURY COURT, ST. MARY'S AXE, LONDON.

Printed for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C. PUBLISHED BY GUEST, HAYWORTH, & Co., 29, PATERNOSTER-ROW, WEDNESDAY, MARCH 10, 1886. All rights reserved.

BOOKS FOR BIBLE STUDENTS.

Price 2s. 6d., post free (published at 4s.), cloth. gilt lettered

The Book of Hebrew Roots.

Showing the Ideal Meanings and Various Ramifications of the Principal Hebrew Radicals.

By BURLINGTON B. WALE.

Large Folio, Hand Coloured, 12s. 6d., uncoloured, 6s. 6d. without Introduction, 3s., by post 3d. extra.

Modern Hieroglyphics of the Apocalypse and Great Pyramid.

Illustrated by Ten Plates, with explanations. By A WATCHER. To which is prefixed an introduction, showing how recent events in the Eastern Question and the Church have worked towards a fulfilment of the Theory suggested in this Book.

R. BANKS & SON Racquet-court, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

THE LINCOLNSHIRE BEDDING CO.'S FEATHER BEDS.

Beds sent direct from the Lincolnshire Feather Factory, Boston, Lincolnshire.

Great Reduction in Price to 9d. per lb.

THE LINCOLNSHIRE BEDDING CO. are now offering their celebrated FEATHER BEDS at the following greatly reduced prices:—

	s.	d.
No. 1.—SINGLE BED, BOLSTER, AND PILLOW, 6 ft. 3 in. by 3 ft. 6 in., weighing 40lbs.	30	0
No. 2—DOUBLE BED, BOLSTER AND TWO PILLOWS, 6 ft. 6 in. by 4 ft. 6 in. 50 lbs.....	37	6
No. 3.—DOUBLE BED, BOLSTER, and TWO PILLOWS, 6 ft. 6 in. by 4 ft. 6 in.. 55 lbs ...	41	3
No. 4.—EXTRA DOUBLE-SIZED BED, BOLSTER AND TWO PILLOWS, 6 ft. 6 in. by 5 ft., 65 lbs.....	48	9

WARRANTED NEW AND SWEET.

Any size Bed only 9d. per lb., including Feathers, in white (bordered) tick, making, packing, wrapper, and carriage paid to any station in the United Kingdom, Superior Beds, Splendid Feathers, Linen Tick, 1s. per lb. Samples of Feathers and Tick, Price Lists, &c., post free. Agents wanted everywhere.

All Orders must be prepaid to A. W. HALL (London Agent), 122, Fleet Street, London, E.C., where Beds may be obtained. To ensure safe delivery of Goods, Cheques or P.O.O. may be post-dated ten days. Feathers only 9d. per lb., a large discount on three or more Beds. The trade supplied. Please mention this paper.

Health Aids Health Aids Health Aids Health Aids

Write for this valuable little Book.

50 YEARS RECORD of Facts, Principles, and Discoveries Relating to the Improvement and Preservation of Human Life on Earth. By Dr. Samuel Birley, M.D. Ph.D. Articles 1, 2, 3, and 4, complete in book form, post free 2 stamps—

GORDON I. MURRAY & Co.,
33, CASTLE ST., HOLBORN, LONDON

LUNG OWBRIDGE'S TONIC
LUNG LUNG TONIC, TONIC
LUNG THE MIGHTY HEALER. TONIC
LUNG Save Your Lives by Taking TONIC
LUNG OWBRIDGE'S LUNG TONIC. TONIC
LUNG It has a power over diseases hitherto unknown in Medicine. TONIC
LUNG Are you at all Weak-chested, or inclined to be Consumptive, with just a touch of Cough now and then? TONIC
LUNG "Try this Wonderful Medicine." The Cough and Weakness will disappear as if by magic, and you will feel a strength and power you never had before. TONIC
LUNG HAVE YOU A COUGH? TONIC
LUNG A DOSE WILL RELIEVE IT. TONIC
LUNG HAVE YOU A COLD? TONIC
LUNG A DOSE AT BEDTIME WILL TONIC
LUNG REMOVE IT. TONIC
LUNG Bronchitis and Asthma it relieves instantly TONIC
LUNG The Spasms of Coughing so dreadful in TONIC
LUNG Whooping Cough become less with each TONIC
LUNG dose of the medicine — TONIC
LUNG Prepared by W. T. OWBRIDGE, Chemist, Hull TONIC
LUNG Sold in bottles 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s 6d. & TONIC
LUNG 11s. by all Chemists and Patent Medicine TONIC
LUNG Vendors. Wholesale all London and TONIC
LUNG Provincial Houses. TONIC

OVER THE SUNSHINE OF EXISTENCE HANGS A BLACK CLOUD.

WITH the uncertainty of Life is mingled the dark mystery of Death! While, on the one hand, we catch the welcome sound of a new breath of life that tells of an addition to our species, on the other we shudder as we hear the rushing wings of the Destroying Angel! The mighty voice of the Great Influence which rules the Universe has pronounced our fate; the dread fiat has gone forth, and every mortal man is doomed to die! But though we cannot prevent, can we postpone Death? The question is momentous, even if it concern the prolongation of Life but by a single hour, inasmuch as every instinct prompts us to fight the boldest battle we can for this glorious boon of Existence. The promptings of Instinct are but the spontaneous voice of Nature, and it is our duty to obey. But there still remains the question, Can Death be postponed by a single hour? Yes, for the world works in obedience to certain laws, and a study of these proves that those who have the judgment and the will to buckle on the shield which Nature places ready to their grasp, may ward off the insidious attacks of the implacable enemy to Life, until, in a ripe old age, the vital faculties gradually decay, and the Angel of Peace glides softly into our presence, leading us, as it were, in a gentle slumber to the regions beyond the shadow of the Tomb.

The Fell Destroyer makes his first approaches in many forms, but none are more favoured by him than that of a deadly foe now preying upon the very vitals of Modern Society. What is this foe? There are few among us who have not been or are not now to some extent its victims. Would the reader know if he, too, is under the ban of this frightful scourge! Let him ask himself whether he experiences any of the following symptoms:—

There are pains about the chest and sides, and some times in the back. The mouth has a bad taste, especially in the morning; and there are feelings of dulness and drowsiness. The appetite is poor, a sort of sticky slime collects about the teeth, there is a feeling as of a heavy load on the stomach, and sometimes a faint, all-gone sensation at the pit of the stomach, which food does not satisfy. The eyes are sunken, the hands and feet become cold and feel clammy. After a while a cough sets in, at first dry, but attended in the course of a few months with expectoration of a greenish colour. The sufferer feels constantly tired, and sleep seems to afford him no rest. Nervousness, irritability, and evil forbodings follow. When rising suddenly there is a giddiness, a sort of whirling sensation in the head. The bowels become costive; the skin is dry and hot at times; the blood becomes thick and stagnant; the whites of the eyes are tinged with yellow, the urine is scanty and high coloured, depositing a sediment after standing. There is frequently a spitting up of the food—at times with a sour taste, and at others with a sweetish taste. This is often attended with palpitation of the heart, or impaired vision with spots before the eyes, accompanied by great prostration and weakness. All of these symptoms are in turn present. It is thought that nearly one-third of our population has this disease in some of its varied forms. Medical men have mistaken the nature of the malady. Its true name is Dyspepsia or Indigestion, for which a certain remedy is to be found in Mother Seigel's Curative Syrup, a medicine which has won in both hemispheres a confidence founded only on its great virtues. The Syrup can be obtained from any Chemist or Medicine Vendor, or from the Proprietors, A. J. White, Limited, 35 Farringdon-road, London, E.C.

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."

(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India.)

"And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the Forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS of the EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—PSA. lx. 4.

VOL. X., NO. 481. Entered at Stationers' Hall.] WEDNESDAY, MARCH 17, 1886. PRICE ONE PENNY.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
A Field for British Emigration	109
The Teutonic Theory.—A Correction	110
Another Clerical Objection	110
"That Speculation" Again	111
Froude's "Oceana; or, England and Her Colonies." Forwarded by J. S. Anderson	112
Tarshish. By A. H. Griffiths, of Moulmein, British Burmah	113
"Our Place in History by Septuagint, Hebrew, and Pyramid Chronology"	113
Literal Versus Spiritual Israel. By John S. Anderson	114
A Fresh Instance of Spiritual Benefit Derived from Perusal of the "BANNER"	114
The Russian Advance in Central Asia. By Major-Gen. Sir H. Rawlinson, K.C.B.	115
Reviews	115
"A Little Sanctuary"	115

A FIELD FOR BRITISH EMIGRATION.

THE Canada Pacific Railway is now complete from end to end, and passengers and goods can be conveyed from London to Montreal, and thence to Vancouver's Island on the Pacific Ocean, in about a dozen days. Thence the ocean highway points to China, Hong Kong, Australia, New Zealand, and the Fiji Islands, where the traveller from Britain, and British merchandise, can arrive journeying on British rails and British ships, and flash back news of his proceedings by British wires, without once touching the alien's railways, or foreign telegraphic or steamship lines. Our Government has already invited tenders for contract steamers to carry our mails from Hong Kong to Liverpool, viâ the Canada Pacific line; and the wire is already laid which joins Australia with the Sandwich Islands, and Liverpool viâ the new through railway in the dominion of Canada. This route is far shorter than that between these two points, viâ the Suez Canal, and has the advantage of connecting our distant Colonies with China and Australia by rails wholly on British soil, where no French or Russian rivals can dare to utter a word to hinder us, or stay our commerce's progress. But it seems that not only has Canada this advantage to offer us, but she has also a field for British emigration to attract us unrivalled in the world. All along the side of the new Canada Pacific line are virgin lands, well suited for emigrants from our islands, and capable of supporting vast numbers of our starving home population. The Canadians are ready and willing to offer these lands to our emigrant classes, and have, it seems, made proposals on the subject to the British Government some time since, which the latter was not able, or was unwilling, to accept. The details respecting the offer are given us in the Rev. H. R. Haweis' communication to The Pall Mall Gazette of November 23, last, to the following effect:—

The president and the directors of the Canada Pacific line said to the British Government, a short time ago:—"We are about to open up Canada from shore to shore; we carry our line through 1,000 miles of richly timbered land from Montreal to Winnipeg; then through 1,000 miles of prairie arable land from Manitoba to the Rocky Mountains; then through the Rocky Mountains to British Columbia, which is boundlessly fertile. Doubts of the cultivable nature of some of the prairie land were raised. Well, we tried rough ploughing and planting at intervals of twenty miles along our line, and found an abundant harvest result in each case. We now offer to place as many plots of 160 acres at the disposal of as many farmers as choose to come out. Our agent will superintend their settlement. We will put down a log house and stock with a pig, cow, and sheep, and break up the land. Send us people; advance a million or part of a million to pay the initial expenses. We will give you good security—a lien on the land, shanties, and products, and we will withhold the deeds from the occupants till they have refunded all. You have thousands of dock labourers in London and Liverpool starving, thousands of farmers at their wits' ends—we offer them and their families immediate and certain maintenance, and in a few years wealth." That was the Canada Pacific Railway's offer to England. The Government did not see its way to meet this large, statesmanlike, industrial, and commercial proposal. Private enterprise did. The Tuke fund has done something. Lady Cathcart eighteen months ago sent over some of the Scotch crofters, and more are on their way. These have already largely repaid the outlay, and are fast growing fat. In a few years, along the line of the Canada Pacific, thousands will doubtless be at work in the virgin forests that stretch 1,000 miles East to West, and 300 miles North to South. Thousands more will be breaking up the fertile prairie land of equal extent between Manitoba and the Rockies. It must and will come in time—but why should it not come now? And why should Canada be overrun with foreigners reaping benefits blindly rejected by us?

We are not in the least alarmed that any backwardness on the part of our nation or Government will lead to the occupation by the foreigner of Israel's God-given patrimony in the Canadian desolate heritages. They are Israel's by a patent which dates from Isaiah's days (B.C. 712); for by the mouth of that prophet the Lord said Israel was destined "to establish the earth, to cause to inherit the desolate heritages." All the land through which the new Canada Pacific passes, from Manitoba Westwards, is of the character described in the Word of God, and to us, as a race, it must fall, as God is true! The forests there are "virgin forests," where never man has dwelt or tilled. For 1,000 miles it stretches East to West, with a breadth of 300 miles North and South. The fertile soil, between Manitoba and the Rocky Mountains, is prairie land, and its extent is equal to the forest lands. Here we have, then, 2,000 miles of country, 300 miles broad, where countless millions of our race can settle advantageously, on either side of the new railway line. And we may be sure, that once the good news is made known, there will be a rush to occupy it, the majority of the settlers being the "wandering" race, those God declared He would "sow among the people in far countries," so that "they may remember Him there," and "live with their children, and turn again" (Zech. x. 6—9). It is wise, however, to call attention to the facts, since God uses means to carry out His purposes, and doubtless we shall find the stream of settlers from this country will be attracted to the splendid territory the Canada Pacific line has opened out to them as their inheritance, by means of information which the public journals of the day will henceforth abundantly make known to all concerned.

Digitized by Google

THE TEUTONIC THEORY.—A CORRECTION.

A CORRESPONDENT, who holds the Teutonic theory strongly himself, strives hard to convict us of holding it too, and he points in triumph to our Comments for February 17, 1886, No. 67, vol. ii., as proof positive. Therein these words occur with reference to Num. viii. 16: "The Levites were taken for the service in substitution (a type of Christ) for the firstborn of all the Tribes (ver. 16). Ephraim is now God's firstborn (Jer. xxxi. 9), to do service and benefit to the other Twelve Tribes (ver. 19). How this magnifies Our Identity, since it deals with God's firstborn, chosen ones!"

Our objector writes regarding this: "When you make such an assertion as this, what else can be your meaning than that Ephraim is a separate and distinct nation from the others?" In reply, we have to observe that anyone reading the above Comment, and being aware of our views for the last ten years, must have very well known that there was a mistake or misprint in the passage in question. The proper reading is evidently "Ephraim is now God's firstborn to do service and benefit to the other Two Tribes." Our contention has always been that in the prophetic Scriptures "Ephraim" stands for the House of Israel, the kingdom, or Ten Tribes. We could not, with Jer. xxxi. 9 under reference as it was, immediately add that Ephraim, as one of the Twelve Tribes, was to do service and benefit "to the other Twelve Tribes."

Ephraim, as the Ten-Tribed House, was, we intended to convey, set apart to do service and benefit to the other Tribes —that is, to the House of Judah; but by no possibility can our words be held to mean that Ephraim, the one Tribe, was now a separate and distinct nation from "the others." What others, we may ask? The opponent is ready with his answer. "With the other European nations," to whom he allots, we believe, six of the Ten or Eleven Tribes of Israel; Reuben being the Irish, Benjamin in Ireland too, Ephraim here, the Scots answering for another Tribe, and the Welsh for a fifth. With these views, which are part and parcel of what is called the Teutonic theory, we have no sympathy, and they cannot, as far as we have any voice in the matter, appear in the pages of the BANNER.

It seems, further, that in our thirteenth leaflet, "The Teutonic Theory; Is It True?" we made a statement on page 3 which the objector (we will not call him our opponent), describes and quotes thus: "In your article on the Teutonic theory you assert that there are in these islands four nationalities—the English, the Scotch, Irish, and Welsh." He then defines what a nation is, and declares from our words that each of those named above "constitutes a single and distinct nation." On reading these words we referred at once to our leaflet, and on page 3 we found the quotation, which we are sorry to see our objector has not exactly or accurately copied. The words we used were these: "The truth, as taught in Scripture, is that the Ten Tribes went by the common representative name of Ephraim, the leading tribe of Israel. Just so our own nation, composed of four nationalities, so-called—English, Scotch, Irish, and Welsh—is known by the common name of one of its component parts, the English."

The important words, "so-called," slipt out of our friend's quotation, and therefore he made us say positively that the four divisions of our United Kingdom were in their origin four nations, whereas we said nothing of the sort. We admitted they were "called" nationalities; but Our Identity and our argument clearly demand of us the assertion to be found everywhere in our leaflet, that the so-called diverse British people are one people composed of Ten of the Thirteen Tribes of Israel; but how mixed now, or how mixed when they arrived here, none may say, and none can prove, save and except as to the Tribe of Benjamin.

Our mentor further brings to bear on our Israelitish case, as apart from the Teutonic view, this testimony: "I should much like to know, he says, if you have ever heard of the acknowledgment made by the great German writer, Grimm, 'that the future of the world is in the hands of the English-speaking branch of the Teutonic race' (the italics are our friend's), and this (he adds) is exactly in accord with my view?" The reason why in this (Teutonic) matter Grimm is entitled to override our ideas regarding the British alone being the Ten Tribes, is thus stated by our objector: "Of the nature of his labours, he (Grimm) says himself, "All my labours have been either directly or indirectly devoted to researches into our ancient language, poetry, and laws. These studies may seem useless to many; but to me they have always appeared a serious and dignified task, firmly and distinctly connected with our common Fatherland, and calculated to foster the love of it. I have esteemed nothing trifling in these inquiries; but have used the small for the elucidation of the great, popular traditions for the elucidation of written documents.' Surely (adds our friend) a man like this, whose whole life has been devoted to such studies, ought to know what he was writing about."

So far the objector. But in reply, we say that great names do not frighten us; nor can we allow Grimm to tell us that the English-speaking race is only a branch of the Teutonic family. He judged from philological studies; but philology, it is now universally admitted, is no proof of ethnic affinity; for affinity of language is proof, not of affinity of race, but only of contact. The English-speaking race were once in close contact with the Teutons, and therefore learnt their language and borrowed their etymons. But that does not prove that the British English-speaking races were ethnically descended from the same stock as the Teutons. Nothing of the sort! We accept Grimm's testimony to our nation's coming glory in respect to their supremacy in the world, and have already, in the BANNER, long since, quoted his evidence as "blindly" given; but if Grimm adds that this nation, which we know to be Israel, is of the same ethnic stock as the Germans, because of philological reasons, then we reject Grimm's authority, since it clashes with the Bible's, and tells us that Ephraim is now separated from his fellow tribes, whereas Ezek. xxxvii. 16, 19, declare they are now, as they always have been when existing as a nation, one and indivisible, companions and fellows.

ANOTHER CLERICAL OBJECTION.

ONE who, being a clergyman of the Church of England, holds strong views against Our Identity, informs us that in his opinion the fount and origin of our mistakes in this respect are that we do not properly distinguish between the dispensations. The present is, it seems, "the dispensation of the Church of Christ, the Bride," consisting of all believers, without reference to race, Jews and Gentiles alike; and all the work for Christ being performed in the world now is being done by these. By-and-bye in the next dispensation, the time will come when the Jews, who are "the seed of Abraham," will look on Him whom they have pierced, and mourn for Him, will repent and become His faithful people, and His universal missionaries, appearing then as the recipients of all the promises made to "Abraham and his seed." By their instrumentality, finally, "the earth will then be filled with the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea."

Digitized by Google

Such is the clerical objection to Our Identity views, and such the scheme which relegates the fulfilment of God's promises to the patriarchs, to the Jews alone, and that in the distant times of the coming Millennium. The present is declared to be our old friend "the Gentile parenthesis," which we noticed in vol. vii. of the BANNER, page 466 (followed by "A Clergyman" on the same side at page 507 of the same volume).

To this objection on the part of our clerical friend we make answer that there is no proof whatever forthcoming in God's Word to show that He meant His promises "to Abraham and his seed for ever" to be subject to the alleged "parenthesis." Where is it said or shown that "the Church of Christ, the bride" of this dispensation, is not mainly the Hebrew Church and Hebrew bride joined by such Gentile converts as may add themselves, by God's grace, to the Hebrew stem? Has our opponent not read Rom. xv. 10, where the Gentiles are bidden "to rejoice with God's people"? Also that Jesus Christ was a minister "of the circumcision for the truth of God to confirm the promises made unto the fathers"? How could the Lord Jesus be true to His functions if He cast off the Hebrew Church as soon as He rose from the dead, and conferred all His blessings in the present dispensation on "His bride," irrespective of the children of the father of the Abrahamic stock, to whom exclusively they were made? Does not our clerical opponent read the Scriptures of the Old Testament which the Lord Himself commanded to be read as those which testified of Him? (John v. 39).

There is no question in them of the Abrahamic blessings passing for a time to "the Church of Christ the bride," as a body independent of the after-seed of Abraham! There we read of Israel's special spiritual blessings, as God's ministers and messengers of the Gospel to all the nations, to all the families, and to all the kindreds of the earth (Gen. xii. 3, xviii. 18, xxii. 18, xxviii. 14; Acts iii. 25); of God's formation and creation of that Hebrew race to show forth His praise (Isa. xliii. 21); that He knew them only of all the families of the earth (Amos iii. 2); that they (and they only) should blossom and bud and fill the face of the world with fruit" (Isa. xxvii. 6); that to them exclusively He showeth His words as Israel and Jacob, and He hath not dealt so with any nation (Psa. cxlvii. 19, 20).

To prove that He is no fickle Being such as our cleric would make out, He declares further, in Malachi iii. 6, "I am Jehovah, I change not; therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed." That the Lord Jesus has not forgotten those promises made "to Abraham and his seed for ever" is perfectly manifest at the present hour to any one with eyes to see and intellect to observe. Do we read that God promised to Abraham's after-seed development into a great and mighty, numerous, Christian, Bible-loving, evangelising, Gate-holding, wealthy nation? We have the British nation answering all the requirements! Did He promise to the House of Joseph and then to Ephraim, his son, that theirs should be the line in which the birthright blessings should be developed in "the last days," or our times? (Gen. xlix. 1, 22—26). We find the Lord Jesus true to His promises, and all these very gifts He has showered on the British people at this hour, not one being wanting. Did He say that the oracles of God, and the day of the Lord, and the laws of God would be the special gifts and graces He would bestow on His people Israel, as Psa. cxlvii. 19, 20; Exod. xxxi. 13—17; and Deut. vi. 4—9 declare? Then facts tell us at the present hour that the nation especially distinguished by the possession of all these blessings God promised to Israel, are the British!

Our clerical friend has his task. He declares "the Church of Christ the Bride" is now doing the work of God in the world totally irrespective of the promises "to Abraham and his seed for ever"; but he has to explain how it is that the work is being done by the nation and the Church in these islands, which has especially been favoured by the Lord with every one of the gifts He swore that Abraham and his seed alone should exclusively possess! He has not then forgotten His people or relegated to the distant Millennium those goods gifts He promised should be the possession of the House of Joseph as distinguished from the Jews, in the present dispensation.

Our clergyman knows nothing of Ephraim, Joseph, or Ten-Tribed Israel. But he cannot be wiser than God's Word! There Joseph's blessings are clearly enumerated, and his was to be the Hebrew birthright (Gen. xlix. 22—26; Deut. xxxiii. 13—17; 1 Chron. v. 1, 2). We British possess all the blessings of the birthright and all the spiritual benefactions appertaining to the favoured House of Israel. How does the clerical mind explain these facts? It will not do to ignore them! They are patent to the world, and cannot be concealed. Joseph or Ephraim has yet to be exhibited to the world in separation from the Jews, as Ezek. xxxvii. 1—28 plainly teaches us, and if we British be not the House of Joseph, let the opponent tell us, in the name of common sense, how and why we have become possessed of all the privileges and blessings God tied up to Joseph to enable him to do for the world just what the British nation performs as its duty to the outlying Gentile nations around us.

"THAT SPECULATION" AGAIN.

A LADY who states she herself was once "bitten" by Anglo-Israelite views has come to the conclusion that the subject has an "unhealthy tendency" for workers for the Lord. These have more than enough to think of, she says, and to add these speculations regarding British identity with Israel, appears to her to be "fiddling whilst Rome is burning." The good old paths, it seems, are good enough for her. Her time, she believes, is "very short," and "the present straining after novelty is one of the snares of the age." She believes that "the literal children of Abraham have glorious times before them, and that there will be yet a second fulfilment of Zech. viii. 23, but she has neither time, nor strength, nor inclination to go into speculative questions." These questions have, she adds, *any*thing but a Divine source, for, "if Judah be our brother, I think we ought to be more earnest in seeking his spiritual welfare. Do you find that these people who are so eager to prove the relationship are as eager to work for the conversion of the Jew? How feebly the society is supported! It appears to me that these people are only thinking of our aggrandisement as a nation. I do believe Satan is at the bottom of it—if for nothing else to divert men's minds from the good, earnest work which lies at our doors. Everywhere the call, 'Come over and help us,' and yet how few obey the call"!

So far our lady opponent. Our readers can gauge the force and logical depth of the argument; and how unjust the contempt which speaks of us all as "these people," "Satan-led ones," diverting men from good, earnest God's work, to attend to "speculative questions" like ours. The argumentum ad hominem, fortunately for us, we, as the editor of the BANNER, can meet directly and quite satisfactorily. We are of those most eager to prove the relationship between the British folk and the Jews, but we are also zealous to bring all efforts to bear on the conversion of the Jews to Christ. The writer of these lines, as treasurer of "the Society for promoting Christianity amongst the Jews," has laboured in Bristol and Clifton since 1870 to aid that venerable association to carry out the work of Judah's evangelisation. We know of many other Anglo-

Digitized by Google

Israelites also who are zealous in the same cause. If in this we are doing Satan's work, we must plead guilty. But we certainly do not feel inclined to allow that our zeal for Our Identity has ever induced us to prove cold in the cause of Jewish conversion. On the contrary, we have always felt, since we knew of our Israelitish origin, that our first duty was to care for our Hebrew brethren, and that while foreign missions are the raison d'être of Our Identity, it ought to be, and in our case always has been, "the Jew first."

Our "lady opponent" is thoroughly unsatisfactory in her opposition. She opposes our views as "novelties," and as one of "the snares of the age," forgetting that the Lord declared that "every Scribe instructed unto the Kingdom of Heaven is like a man that is an householder which bringeth forth out his treasure things new and old" (Matt. xiii. 52).

Our lady opponent would have objected, at any rate, to the novelties in our Lord's prescription! We, too, like "the good old paths." But Our Identity relates to paths as old as Abraham, and people as God honoured, and venerable as "the chosen ones," and "the elect" of God! When our feminine opponent tells us we are "thinking only of our own nation's aggrandisement," but not of God's glory in this matter, and that we cause men to neglect work at our doors, "fiddling while Rome is burning," we tell her, in reply, that this is not the tendency of the BANNER'S testimony. There we are constantly pointing to world-wide evangelical work as Israel's bounden duty for God's glory, this nation's rôle being to "blossom and bud, and to fill the face of the world with fruit." Our flippant opponent has evidently never read the BANNER, nor seen what the tendency of our views really is! Besides, in telling men that the British are God's people, "Lost Israel," we do no more than direct men's minds to a patent fact, the evidence of which lies on the surface. That fact has its glorious and splendid consequences, involving our God's glory. If our objector cannot see the worth of the fact, nor how God's glory has anything to do with it, we regret the circumstance, but the loss is hers, not ours.

How and why Our Identity has, in our opponent's view, "an unhealthy tendency for workers," we are not told by her. But is it nothing to her, as "a worker for the Lord Jesus," to be assured that the race to which she belongs is "the Lord's people," redeemed by Him, and consecrated to the very object she has in view—namely, "to become a blessing to all the nations, to all the families, and to all the kindreds of the earth?" (Gen. xii. 3, xviii. 18, xxii. 18, xxviii. 14, Acts iii. 25). If she has no time, no strength, no inclination to enter on these questions, which Jer. xxxii. 41 tells us occupy "the whole heart and the whole soul" of God Almighty, of God the Son, and of God the Holy Ghost, the blessed Jehovah, the Three in One, then we take leave to tell her that she is not in concord with Him whom she believes she serves, and that He declares in Deut. vii. 6, 7, 8, Isa. xli. 8 and 9, and a score of other like texts, that He loves that race, whose identity with the British she scorns, and that He will love them to the end!

Our lady opponent would dissuade workers for Christ from searching for and striving to find the Lord's lost sheep of the House of Israel. She is herein in full but disastrous accord with the shepherds of Israel of Ezek. xxxiv. 4, 6, 8, 10, 12, 15, 16, whose condemnation by the God of Israel is in these verses recorded with terrible distinctness. These shepherds had no "time, nor strength, nor inclination" to prosecute the "vain search," and were doubtless ready to work in some other way they themselves approved, and grudged every moment spent on anything but that. But the question remains—Did they thus please God or anger Him? They angered Him, and paid the penalty of the Divine displeasure, by ceasing to be employed by Him in His work at all!

Does our lady opponent like the idea? Will she be ready to insist that Our Identity is Satan's work, and not God's heart's desire, when she finds too late that she has been neglecting Her Maker's will, and in the place of it setting up her own?

FROUDE'S "OCEANA; OR, ENGLAND AND HER COLONIES."

FORWARDED BY JOHN S. ANDERSON.

THE above is the title of a very remarkable work which has just appeared. It is the result of an expedition round the world, undertaken by Mr. Froude about a year ago, which he completed last May. He commences with a notice of Sir James Harrington's dream of an Ocean Empire for this country. He says:—

These islands cannot bear a larger population than they have at present without peril to soul and body. It appeared as if the genius of England, anticipating the inevitable increase, had provided beforehand for the distribution of it. English enterprise had occupied the fairest spots upon the globe where there was still soil and sunshine boundless and life-giving; where the race might for ages renew its mighty youth, bring forth as many millions as it would, and would still have means to breed and rear them strong as the best which she had produced in her early prime. The Colonists might be paying us no revenue, but they were opening up the face of the earth. By-and-bye, like the spreading branches of a forest tree, they would return the sap which they were gathering into the heart. England could pour out among them, in return, year after year, those poor children of hers now choked in fetid alleys, and, relieved of the strain, breathe again fresh air into her own smoke-encrusted lungs. With her colonies part of herself, she would be, as Harrington had foreshadowed, a commonwealth resting on the mightiest foundations which the world had ever seen. Queen among the nations, from without invulnerable, and at peace and at health within—this was the alternative future lying before Oceana; in every way more desirable than the economic. Unlike other good things, it was easy of attainment; we had but to stretch our hand out to secure it; yet we sat still doing nothing, as if enchanted, while the Sybil was tearing out page on page from the Book of Destiny.

This is exemplifying the prophecy in Psa. lxxxi. 16, 17, "Open thy mouth wide and I will fill it." "But My people would not hearken to My voice, and Israel would none of Me." His comparison between the colonists and ourselves is very touching:—

The leaves that grow on one branch of an oak are not more like the leaves that grow upon another than the Australian swarm is like the hive it sprang from. All was the same—dress, manners, talk, appearance. The men were quite as sensible, the women as pretty, and both as intelligent and agreeable. I could not help asking myself what, after all, is the meaning of uniting the colonies more closely to ourselves? They are closely united; they are ourselves; and can separate only in the sense that parents and children separate, or brothers and sisters; and until symptoms have actually appeared of a wish on our part to throw them off, or on theirs to desert us, the very talk of such a thing ought not to be. Nor need any other straighter bond exist between us, were there but one executive among us, or even but one fleet, since in no other way can the colonies come in collison with a foreign power. Parents and children do not enter into articles of compact. If the natural tie is not strong enough, no mechanical tie will hold.

And this brings us to his interview with Mr. Dalley, at the time the Australian contingent was about starting for Egypt. This gentleman expressed his opinion as follows:—

British ships of war were the safeguard of colonial liberty, and the natural chain which held the scattered communities together. The fleet, therefore, ought to be one. Division was weakness, and the old story of the bundle of sticks had here its proper application. Let there be one navy, Mr. Dalley said, under the rule of a single Admiralty—a navy in which the colonies should be as much interested as the Mother Country, which should be theirs as well as hers, and on which they might all rely in time of danger. Let there be no more colonial ships under a separate authority, unlikely to be found efficient if their services were needed on a sudden, and liable to be mischievously misused if maintained continuously in a condition fit for sea. Let each great colony or group of colonies have its own squadron, which should bear its name, should be always present in its waters, and be supported out of its own resources, while it remained at the same time an integral part of the one navy of Oceana. So the empire would be invulnerable on its own element, and, invulnerable there, might laugh at the ill-will of all the nations of the earth combined. It would be linked together by a bond to which the most ingenious Parliamentary union would be as packthread. Each member of the vast community would be left free to manage its internal affairs as might seem best to itself, and, secure in being admitted into partnership with the most splendid empire which the earth had ever seen, it would as little think of separating, as the hand would think of separating from the body.

Digitized by Google

With regard to federation he further says:—

The wish will be its own realisation. Two pieces of cold iron cannot be welded by the most ingenious hammering; at white heat they will combine of themselves. Let the colonists say that they desire to be permanently united with us; let the people at home repudiate as emphatically a desire for separation, and the supposed difficulties will be like the imaginary lion in the path—formidable only to the fool or the sluggard. No great policy was ever carried through which did not once seem impossible. Of all truly great political achievements the organisation of a united British Empire would probably be found the easiest.

It would be well if the concluding quotation were laid to heart by everyone, and we must hope that there will never be a repetition of the blunders to which Mr. Froude so pointedly refers:—

After all is said, it is on ourselves that the future depends. We are passing through a crisis in our national existence, and the wisest cannot say what lies before us. If the English character comes out of the trial true to its own traditions—bold in heart and clear in eye, seeking nothing which is not its own, but resolved to maintain its own with its hand upon its sword—the far-off English dependencies will cling to their old home, and will look up to her and be still proud to belong to her, and will seek their own greatness in promoting hers. If, on the contrary (for among the possibilities there is a contrary), the erratic policy is to be continued which for the last few years has been the world's wonder; if we show that we have no longer any settled principles of action, that we let ourselves drift into idle wars and unprovoked bloodshed; if we are incapable of keeping order even in our own Ireland, and let it fall away from us or sink into anarchy; if, in short, we let it be seen that we have changed our nature, and are not the same men with those who once made our country feared and honoured, then, in ceasing to deserve respect, we shall cease to be respected. The colonies will not purposely desert us, but they will look each to itself, knowing that from us, and from their connection with us, there is nothing more to be hoped for.

TARSHISH.

By F. H. Griffiths, of Moulmein, British Burmah.

It will not improbably add considerable interest to that already felt by outward-bound passengers in the Peninsula and Oriental steamers, in their first glimpse of Indian land, to know that, according to the best authorities, Point de Galle is the Tarshish which was visited by the navies of Hiram and Solomon.

"Tarshish obviously lay in the road to Ophir, the land from which Solomon procured gold. Malacca was known to the later Greek geographers as the Golden Chersonese; and in the Malay language, ophir is the generic term for a gold mine. King Solomon made a navy of ships in Eziongeber, 'which is beside Elath, on the shore of the Red Sea.' From Eziongeber Solomon's navy traded with Tarshish and Ophir. 'Once in three years came the navy of Tarshish, bringing gold and silver, ivory, and apes, and peacocks.' In a Persian poem of the tenth century, which describes an expedition from Jerusalem to Ceylon, the outward voyage is stated as occupying a year and a-half—a coincidence which would be valueless, if it were not for the regular limits imposed upon unscientific navigation in the Indian Seas by the recurrence of the monsoons. Gold could have been trans-shipped at the main port of Ceylon from the vessels which brought it from Ophir. 'Silver spread into plates,' which Jeremiah mentions as coming from Tarshish, is even yet in use as the material of the sacred books of the Singhalese. Ivory was, of course, from the earliest times an export from Ceylon, and even more common formerly than now. Apes are indigenous to the island, and pea-fowl abound there. It is curious that the very terms by which these three latter articles of commerce are designated in the Hebrew invoice, so to speak, are identical with their Tamil nomenclature in Ceylon at the present day. And these terms were so entirely foreign and alien from the common Hebrew language, as to have driven the Ptolemaist authors of the Septuagint version into a blunder, by which the ivory, apes, and peacocks, come out as 'hewn and carven stones.'" *

If Tarshish be once placed in Ceylon, everything seems to point to its being expressly localised at Point de Galle. This has been from time immemorial the great emporium of the island. Under the name of Kalah, it was the rendezvous for the Persian and Arabian vessels in the time of Haroun Alraschid trading with China. The impossibility of navigating the Strait of Manaar, except with the smallest craft, as well as the difficulties in regard of wind and currents, which would painfully add to the length of the voyage for ships from Arabia or the Persian Gulf, in rounding the South-east coast of Ceylon, exclude the noble harbour of Trincomalee from all claims to this historical distinction. And Pliny learned from the ambassadors, sent from Ceylon to the Emperor Claudius, that the great port of the island fronted the South—a description applicable to no point on the coast but that of Galle. In default of any ground of the slightest probability for a bare suggestion, that the depôt of general Asiatic maritime trade was silently changed in the interim (a thing utterly repugnant to the habits of timid tenacity, and slow-bought experience characteristic of Eastern sailors), it may be reasonably concluded that the great port of Ceylon, from the times of Claudius to those of Haroun Alraschid, and from his times to those of the Dutch and the Portuguese, was also the great port of Ceylon in the times of Solomon. (From "The Throne of David," by the Rev. J. H. Ingraham, LL.D.)

"OUR PLACE IN HISTORY BY SEPTUAGINT, HEBREW, AND PYRAMID CHRONOLOGY."

(Being an abstract of a paper by A. T. F. of India.)

In a pamphlet entitled "Our Place in History," the Rev. H. G. E. St. Dalmas, of Poonah, argues with sustained interest and ability for acceptance of the Septuagint chronology, differing though it does in the earlier ages by no less than 1,584 years from that derived from the Hebrew text of one and the same Bible of all Christians. This is a difference between the two forms in which the inspired Book has come down to us, which everyone must most devoutly wish did not exist; but it does, and refuses to be settled in the usual manner of most persons, who simply follow the one chronology and ignore the other. Hence it is that, age after age, the question insists on cropping up again and again as to which is the true chronology—the Septuagint or the Hebrew, or any other between them. In fact, Pilate's question, "What is truth?" if applied to chronology, is as rife in the world as ever; and though we may not like it, the theology and the religious history of mankind will not be complete until we can give a much more accurate answer to the difficulty than has yet been arrived at by any of the churches.

* Sir Emerson Tennent.

Digitized by Google

In most respects, the Rev. Mr. St. Dalmas takes the ordinary theological views of the origin of man; and the general plan of his work is, after laying down that the human races as we find them have originated from a single pair, to connect the Septuagint dates with the supposed chronological galleries of the Great Pyramid; and then with the earliest authentic date in profane history—viz., July 19 of B.C. 776, the first Olympiad.

The date of the Deluge is an important step in every scheme of true Biblical interpretation. As measured from the creation of man, the Hebrew text gives an interval of 1,656 years, and the Septuagint 2,256 years But it is more to our purpose to ascertain the interval from a later than from an earlier date.

The Great Pyramid, says our author, is considered by Professor Piazzi Smyth to fix this latter interval at 2,742 years before or from the birth of Christ; but Mr. St. Dalmas, adding on 100 inch-years for dilapidations at each end, extends the interval to 2,942 years, and as he still keeps to Professor Smyth's Pyramid date for the Dispersion—viz., 2527, we seem to have a goodly number of years for a considerable post-diluvian population to have collected for the building of the Tower of Babel in Shinar, without adopting the still earlier dispersion date of the Septuagint; indeed too early, and too extravagantly different from that of the Hebrew version of the Bible to be likely.

Mr. St. Dalmas' pamphlet further agrees with the Pyramid passages in the date B.C. 1542 for the Exodus, while he agrees with Rev. Mr. Galloway's ("Chain of Ages") in holding the birth of our Lord to have taken place about September 29, in B.C. 1; though that would have the effect of making the year of our present reckoning terminating the Grand Gallery, not 1882, but a year and three months later.

But the year 1882 was marked so signally for the Pyramid, by the bombardment of Alexandria, by its being made the one and only "city of destruction" out of the five cities in Egypt which were to be dominated by those speaking the language of the navigators—viz., the English—that some minuter examination of the accepted lengths of earlier parts of the Pyramid passages seems called for, or possibly a consideration of whether the beginning of the Grand Gallery of that building in Egypt be not intended to mark the date of the flight of the Holy Family into Egypt, rather than the date of the birth of Christ in Palestine. Yet wherever the perfect adjustment of dates and measures, now so very close to each other, may be proved to be wide in the future, is it not very striking to find again and again throughout the investigation, that, however profane and idolatrous, and condemed therefore by the God of Israel, the land and people of Egypt were—there is nevertheless a point of contact between Egypt and the beginning of Christianity of a most saving kind—emphasised above all by the Divine word, "Out of Egypt have I called My Son."

LITERAL VERSUS SPIRITUAL ISRAEL.

By JOHN S. ANDERSON.

THERE is one point connected with Our Identity which does not seem to have been brought forward as an argument against those who spiritualise certain parts of the Scriptures that are evidently meant to be taken literally. It struck the writer during the reading of the first lesson in the evening service on the fifth Sunday after Easter (Deut. x. 8, 9), when "the Lord separated the Tribe of Levi, to bear the ark of the covenant of the Lord, to stand before the Lord to minister unto Him, and to bless in His name unto this day. Wherefore Levi hath no part nor inheritance with his brethren; the Lord is his inheritance, according as the Lord thy God promised him." There are three references to this—viz., Num. xviii. 20—24, Deut. xviii. 1, 2, and Ezek. xliv. 28—so it is no isolated quotation, and bears upon the question in no uncertain manner. It is to be noticed that there is nothing said to show that Levi's brethren were not to participate in any spiritual blessings; but the point we wish to show clearly is that from the Word of God we find a distinct comparison between the spiritual and temporal inheritance or blessings; and that the promises made to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, whenever they bear a temporal signification, are to be so understood and not only in a spiritual sense.

We cannot but be surprised that it should be necessary to write in this manner on the subject of the promises; for when God promised Abraham that He would make of him a great nation (Gen. xii. 2), that He would multiply his seed as the stars of heaven, . . . and that his seed should possess the Gate of his enemies (Gen. xxii. 17); and further confirmed these blessings to Isaac and Jacob and to their seed "for ever," He could not make such promises to attach to a race destined to cease to exist? His promises were made to the actual descendants of the patriarchs "for ever"; therefore those descendants must be in existence on the earth at the present time or there would be no truth in the Bible. But as we know that we are Israel, that we are now inheriting these promises, and that the Bible is the Word of God, we must pray that He will in His good time show all men His ways and teach them His paths (Psa. xxv. 4).

A FRESH INSTANCE OF SPIRITUAL BENEFIT DERIVED FROM PERUSAL OF THE "BANNER."

WE are thankful to find that this journal has again been made useful to another of its readers in spiritual things. He writes to us thus:—"The BANNER has been a light to me and to my family; and not merely, I trust, an intellectual light, but a brighter one—a spiritual light. May God in His favour long honour you to proclaim that the Anglo-Saxons are His chosen people the Lost Tribes. Since the subject has been before me, which has been only during the current year, I have been able to interest many in this wonderful matter. I pray our heavenly Father that you may still be strengthened and honoured to proclaim the beauties of His Word to His chosen nation."

Such testimony as this to the value of Our Identity and its teachings is very cheering to us, and we are grateful for them. If Our Identity does not impart spiritual light based upon the Word of God, and if it does not bring the student as a sinner to the foot of the cross for the sprinkling of the blood of Jesus, it does really little for those who, reading, are convinced of our Israelitish origin. The beauties of the Word, the faithfulness of God, the God of Israel, and the love and pity of the Redeemer of Israel, who came to the lost sheep of the House of Israel, found and saved them; these are the truths which really benefit those who study and accept our glorious subject. These truths are national, and testify that God, who first loved His nation and His inheritance, has loved them to the end. They tell the trembling sinner that He who, after three thousand years of sin and provocation, has never yet cast off and destroyed His people on account of their constant backslidings, will not now reject the penitent believer in the Lord Jesus Christ, but will save and support him, because He has promised that "God so loved the world that He gave His only-begotten Son that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish but have everlasting life" (John iii. 16).

These are the deductions which arise from the acceptation of Our Identity, and give such comfort to one persuaded of its truth. Israel thus becomes what God intended—the witness to the world that He exists and is the Lord our God. "Ye are My witnesses, saith the Lord, that I am God" (Isa. xliii. 12). If we deprive Him, as some would, of His Israelite witnesses and limit Him only to His Jewish ones, we destroy the valid testimony of two witnesses to confront the scoffing infidel world, and put aside His own determinate plans and purposes in the matter. In vain! God's will must and will be done, however men may oppose and scoff. Israel exists, and can be seen and known by all but the inly blind; and she stands forth to-day a true witness for God that He exists, and that all His prophecies and promises in favour of His chosen ones of the House of Joseph are literally and exactly true. The British folks answer to the picture, and they are they. Israel, praise ye the Lord!

MR. E. W. DEANE.—We are asked to notify that Mr. Deane's present address is "Care of Mr. Tritton, Deganwy, near Conway, North Wales."

Digitized by Google

THE RUSSIAN ADVANCE IN CENTRAL ASIA.

By Major-Gen. Sir Henry Rawlinson, K.C.B.

From the Nineteenth Century for April, 1885:—"It was during the Crimean War, we are told, that Russia first realised her false position in regard to England. In her schemes of aggrandisement in Europe she was liable to be met and thwarted at every turn by British alliances and British influence; and when engaged in war she was open to our attack in every quarter, in the Black Sea, the Sea of Azof, the Baltic, or the coast of Georgia, without any possibility of retaliation. If she was to develop in due course, as had been so often predicted, into the leading Power of the world, it was thus absolutely necessary that the inequality complained of should be redressed. Some weak point in our armour must be discovered. Some means must be found to shatter the paladium of our insular security. Hence there arose the idea of creating a great Oriental Satrapy under Russian administration, which should envelope the north-west frontier of our Indian Empire, and from which, as occasion might arise, pressure could be exerted, or if necessary, armed demonstration might issue, which would neutralize British influence in Europe, and would place our policy on the Bosphorus or elsewhere in subordination to her own."

Sir Henry, in these few lines, describes the coming of Gog against Israel for "the dominion of the world," and the "mischievous purpose" conceived in the "vast organisation" which is to draw attention off "the land" and concentrate it on "Tarshish." He also states that Gog wants to "shatter the paladium" of "them that are at rest," or "the people of God." His remarks are almost the same as those of the Rev. Dr. Kay, and both should be read together. If Israel does not recognise herself after late events, it is because she will not, for the Lord's hand has been distinctly revealed to her over the Afghan frontier.

Review.

Why we do not Adopt the French Metrical System in place of our Anglo-Saxon Metrology. By Christopher Giles, Adelaide, South Australia. With an Introduction by C. Piazzi Smyth, Astronomer-Royal for Scotland. Robert Banks and Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C. Price 6d.

Second Notice.—(Concluded from page 107.)

Mr. Giles in his third chapter notices that the honour of the discovery of the object for which the Great Pyramid was designed by God was reserved for the late Mr. John Taylor, then for Professor Piazzi Smyth, and lastly in a wider sense for the Anglo-Saxon race, not excluding the American people. "The discovery was reserved," he says, "through millenniums for Christian Anglo-Saxons. The significance of this fact (page 28) is at once philosophic, scientific, historical, and divine." "Because we have here," he adds—"1. A perfect and earth commensurable system of metrology hidden and treasured up for forty centuries; therefore, forty centuries ago, the human intellect was somehow capable of formulating such a transcendental system. 2. The system, as before remarked, was expressed and most minutely described in its own language, without a word of speech or writing, or figurative sign, employed. 3. The said system has been interpreted and brought to light by one people to the exclusion of all others."

This is a view of the facts few have insisted on, and Mr. Giles has done well to draw marked attention to it. He asks the question what the discoverers of the object of the Great Pyramid found when they had proved that it was the testimony to a vast system of metrology? "This," says Mr. Giles in answer, "that the system of metrology brought to light by the Anglo-Saxon people, was no other then their own." "They employed their own scale in the measurements, and they found it was that of the architect. For had it not been so the discovery would never have been made." "No two languages ever spoken could approach each other so closely as do the metrologies of the Great Pyramid and of the Anglo-Saxon people. They are one, literally to a hair's-breadth." "The Pyramid inch exceeds the Anglo-Saxon by about this quantity."

Pointing to the "unique and truly universal line, the axis of the rotation of the earth," and the use the Great Pyramid makes of it as the basis for its metrology, Mr. Giles observes: "It is not possible to conceive anything more dissimilar as regards origin than the two systems of metrology we have brought into comparison. The one divinely given—brought down literally from heaven—the scale in which, if we may so express it, the divine Architect Himself worked to, in at least the solar system. The other, born of modern strife and all the evil passions of which degenerate human nature can be the slave. One a right line, the symbol of righteousness; the other crooked and devious as the way of the serpent."

The last chapter of the pamphlet under review traces the connection between metrology and ethics; between the "only universal metrology of the Great Pyramid and the one true religion of the past, present, and glorious future of divine prophecy." He establishes the fact by a chain of reasoning like this. There is only one true and perfect system of metrology for all mankind. This, to be scientific and philosophical, must be "earth-commensurable." If it can be shown to be also "uranometrically-commensurable" in the solar system, then its claims transcend all other systems. Such a system the French have not; nor the Russians; nor the Chinese. But the Anglo-Saxons have! Now this "earth," and cosmically "commensurable" system must be from the nature of things divine. The history of the Great Pyramid and its earth-commensurable system of metrology embedded in it proves that system was divine. Its builder and founder was probably the divinely-inspired Shem or Melchisedek himself. Sir Isaac Newton connects the sacred cubit of the Hebrews with the British inch, by saying its length was probably twenty-five British inches, and the British inch is linked with that of the Great Pyramid; the difference being as 1 is to 1·01. As speech was a divine gift to man, so must that metrology have been which was perfect and exact and suited for universal use. Our metrology answers the requirement, and is in the hands of the "sons of Isaac," who are the children of Israel—God's people.

Our friends can see that the pamphlet which Mr. Giles has given us is a remarkable work, whose only fault is the extreme condensation in the argument he employs. He is capable of forcible and clear elucidation of any subject he handles, and we hope he may yet come forward with a more elaborate and exhaustive work on the subject he has already touched upon in his present tractate, and give us his views too on the topic to which he often alludes—namely, the Identity of the British folk with the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel.

Whatever view the reader may take of Mr. Giles' arguments, it is satisfactory to know that at the very Antipodes, in Adelaide, South Australia, there is a mind which can ably and intelligently deal with the subject of this pamphlet, and having embraced Our Identity, is also fully alive to the glorious truths connected therewith. We thank the author, finally, for his favourable notice of the Banner, which appears on pp. 18 and 19 of his work.

"A LITTLE SANCTUARY."

I have never been able to attach any meaning to the above expression, and am glad to find that light is thrown upon it in the Revised Version, where the reading is, "I will be to them a sanctuary for a little while in the countries where they are come." This is quite intelligible, and nothing can be clearer than the declaration in Ezek. xi. 15—21, that while Israel would be in sanctuary in different countries, pending their restoration to their own land, the Jews would be undergoing punishment at the same time.

J. M. Grant, M.D., Surgeon-General.

Lecture on Genealogy.—"Adam to Queen Victoria." On March 1, at St. Stephen's Hall, Saxon-road, North Bow, Mr. R. E. Hammond, a journeyman cooper, lectured on this subject. The chair was taken by the vicar of St. Stephen's (Rev. T. R. Lawrence), supported by Messrs. Bryan and W. Scott, churchwardens, and several rev. gentlemen and members of the congregation. The audience were most attentive, and applauded the lecturer several times. On the platform were two charts, the first was twelve feet high. It took the lecturer seven years to complete, and is in itself most interesting. It aims to show the whole of the line of Adam down to the Queen. On each side are all the lines of Britons, Saxons, Welsh, Picts, Scots and Danes; also the line of Brandenburg, Este, Mecklenberg, and Brunswick, and down to King George I. On each side are the shields, showing the strength of each line, all judges, Kings of Judah and Israel, and all dates. The second chart was presented to the lecturer by Mr. W. Scott, churchwarden of St. Stephen's, on that evening. It is 30 feet long, and is placed on a stand to show thirty generations at a time. This one is in large letters, which can be seen to advantage, and starts from Adam and Eve, father to son, down to the Queen, Prince of Wales and Albert of Wales; in all, 118 generations. Mr. Hammond is an Anglo-Israelite, and is desirous to make arrangements for the delivering of this lecture.—Address: 4, Walker-street, Thomas-street, Limehouse, London, E.

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed: — "Philo-Israel," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

SUBSCRIPTIONS £ s. d.

Annual Subscription for one copy weekly (including the Twelve Double Numbers) postfree - 0 7 6
Two Copies (including Double Numbers) - - 0 13 6
Three Copies " " " " - 1 0 4
Four Copies " " " " - 1 5 6
Six Copies " " " " - 1 16 4

Post Office Orders to be made payable at the head office, St. Martin's-le-grand, London, to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C., and W. H. GUEST & Co. 29, Paternoster-row, London.

The Editor cannot undertake to return rejected MSS. unless stamps for the purpose be sent. Parties requiring an answer should enclose a stamp.

Contents Bills and Show Cards may be obtained on application to the Publishers.

Advertisements should be sent to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

Prepaid Advertisements are inserted at the rate of 30 words for 1s. 4d.

GROUND RENTS.—WANTED TO PURCHASE, Ground Rents secured on Shop or good House Property. In London or suburbs preferred.—W. K., 102, Kennington Park Road, S.E.

WANTED, April 16, as GENERAL SERVANT, an honest, truthful Girl, about 16; a total abstainer, who would value a quiet home.—Apply to Mrs. S., 18, Montpellier Villas, Cheltenham.

The Geography of the Gates. With Map and six full page, and one double-page, Illustrations, printed on plate paper. 208 pages, in handsome cloth, gilt Price 3s. 6d., post free 3s. 10d.

An Elementary Digest or Sketch of the Chief Facts and Teachings of the Great Pyramid of Egypt. Adapted to the Unlearned and Unscientific. 56 pages, Illustrated with Diagrams, price 4d., post free 5d. 10th Thousand.

The History of the House of Israel; How they were Lost, and How they were Found, Told for the Children. Price 6d., cloth 1s.; post free 7d. and 1s. 1d. Fourth Edition. Eleventh thousand.

Our Identity with the House of Israel. Price 4d. Reprinted from "Clifton Chronicle Letters"

London: Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street.

A Thousand of the first edition sold in a few weeks for Great Britain, Ireland, Egypt, Natal, India, and America.

ISRAEL'S WORLD:

Origin and Destiny of British Race Colonies, and Empire; according to Scripture, History, and Signs of Our Times.

BY REV. HENRY ROE.

Price 2d., post free 2½d. R. Banks & Son, Racquet-court

Also by the same Author. "Consecration," 4d.; "Going to Africa," 1s.; "Fernando Po Mission," 1s.; "West African Scenes," 2s. E Stock, 62, Paternoster-row, London, E.C. Rev. H. Roe, St. Ives, Cornwall.

EDWARD HINE'S PUBLICATIONS.

FORTY-SEVEN IDENTIFICATIONS, 6d.
COMING GLORIES, 6d.
FLASHES OF LIGHT, 6d.
OXFORD WRONG, 4d.
ANGLO-SAXON RIDDLE, 2d.

Penny extra per post. Above bound in handsome vol., LOST ISRAEL FOUND, 3s. 6d. POST FREE, 3s. 9d. LEAFLET No. 1, 1s. per 100, of ISAAC LOVELAND, Shoreham, Sevenoaks; GUEST, HAYWORTH, & Co., 29, Paternoster Row, E.C

THE ANTHEMIC

HOP PILLOW.

A WONDERFUL REMEDY FOR

SLEEPLESS NIGHTS.

Acknowledged by the highest Medical Authority to be unique in its action, certain in its effect, and one of the greatest boons known to modern times. Noxious sleeping draughts with their ill effects; in fact, sedatives of every kind, can now be dispensed with, THE HOP PILLOW supplying their place by giving sound and NATURAL SLEEP, stimulating the brain, invigorating and strengthening the nervous system, and bringing back that vital power which was thought to have been irretrievably lost. Sent free on receipt of P.O.O. or stamps for 7s. 6d., or 10s. 6d. Please address—

Department B. I., C. W. WESTON,

The London and County Medical Drug Co.,

4, BURY COURT, ST. MARY'S AXE, LONDON.

Printed for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C. PUBLISHED BY GUEST, HAYWORTH, & Co., 29, PATERNOSTER-ROW WEDNESDAY, MARCH 17, 1886. [All rights reserved

Dr. JOSEPH WILD'S WORKS

THE LOST TEN TRIBES

Price 3s., post free 3s. 2d.

The FUTURE of ISRAEL and JUDAH.

Price 2s., post free 2s. 2d.

The Special Commissioner of the Christian Word, writing of Dr. Wild, says:—"On Sunday evening I had to fight my way into the Congregational Church of which Dr. Wild is the minister. He hails from America, and is quite the sensation of the hour. There was no standing room anywhere, and as I made to the door I met many coming away. However, I had made up my mind to hear the Doctor, and hear him I did. It seems that the subscribers have a door to themselves; I made for it, and luckily found a chair, which I wedged in under the platform. The Doctor prayed, and then we had a sermon about Revelation, containing much that was very effective, if not about his text, at any rate about that mysterious part of Scripture from which the text was taken."

B. BANKS & SON Racquet-court, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

TO BE GIVEN AWAY.

FREE PRESENT.—GOVERNMENT HEARTHRUGS.

B. of I. FREE PRESENTATION COUPON. 17.3.86.

A Beautiful City-made Leather Purse to be Given Away.

On receipt of this Coupon and P.O.O. value 2s., or 26 stamps, I hereby agree to send one BEAUTIFUL GOVERNMENT HEARTHRUG, 6 feet long, 3 feet wide, various designs, fern leaves, oak leaves, flowers, masonry, mosaic, cat and kittens, and the new tiger design, suitable for drawing-room, dining-room, parlour, or kitchen; and I also agree to present to every purchaser a BEAUTIFUL LEATHER PURSE.

(Signed) J. WATTS

Two Rugs, with two presents, 3s. 10d., P.O.O. or 50 stamps. Six Rugs, with six Presents, P.O.O. 11s.

P.O.O. to be made payable at Low Hill to J. WATTS, 113, Brunswick-road, Liverpool.

Health Aids — Write for this valuable little Book.

Health Aids — 50 YEARS RECORD of Facts, Principles, and Discoveries Relating to the Improvement and Preservation of Human Life on Earth. By Dr. Samuel Birley, M.D. Ph.D. Articles 1, 2, 3, and 4, complete in book form, post free 2 stamps—

Health Aids — GORDON I. MURRAY & Co.,

Health Aids — 33, CASTLE ST., HOLBORN, LONDON

LUNG OWBRIDGE'S TONIC
LUNG LUNG TONIC, TONIC
LUNG THE MIGHTY HEALER. TONIC
LUNG Save Your Lives by Taking TONIC
LUNG OWBRIDGE'S LUNG TONIC. TONIC
LUNG It has a power over diseases hitherto unknown in Medicine. TONIC
LUNG Are you at all Weak-chested, or inclined to be Consumptive, with just a touch of Cough now and then? TONIC
LUNG "Try this Wonderful Medicine." The TONIC
LUNG Cough and Weakness will disappear as if by magic, and you will feel a strength and power you never had before. TONIC
LUNG HAVE YOU A COUGH? TONIC
LUNG A DOSE WILL RELIEVE IT. TONIC
LUNG HAVE YOU A COLD? TONIC
LUNG A DOSE AT BEDTIME WILL TONIC
LUNG REMOVE IT. TONIC
LUNG Bronchitis and Asthma it relieves instantly TONIC
LUNG The Spasms of Coughing so dreadful in TONIC
LUNG Whooping Cough become less with each TONIC
LUNG dose of the medicine. — TONIC
LUNG Prepared by W. T. OWBRIDGE, Chemist, Hull, TONIC
LUNG Sold in bottles 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d. & TONIC
LUNG 11s. by all Chemists and Patent Medicine TONIC
LUNG Vendors. Wholesale all London and TONIC
LUNG Provincial Houses. TONIC

J. THEOBALD & CO.'S

PRIZE

STATIONERY PACKETS

THE MOST EXTRAORDINARY OFFER EVER MADE,

and thoroughly genuine. The most wonderful value ever given for money, and produced only by the utter stagnation in every branch of industry, inducing the various manufacturers to combine with us in giving such value as has never before been offered.

READ CAREFULLY

this advertisement, as you have never before had the opportunity of obtaining so thorough and genuine a bargain. OUR PRIZE PACKETS OF STATIONERY contain a handsome Leatherette Combination Writing Case, made of Imitation Crocodile Leather, and fitted with compartments for writing paper, envelopes, stamps, &c.; also twenty-four sheets of superior writing paper; twenty-four cream-laid envelopes, a handsome penholder and pencil, with rackwork adjustment; ink eraser, blotting paper, elastic securer, the perplexing 64 and 65 puzzle, a new puzzle, perplexing everyone, and sold separately at Sixpence each at shops; and by special arrangement with a large publishing-house, a 4s. copyright song. Our packets of stationery contain all the above; will be sent carriage free for 2s. 3d. It will at once be seen that this is most extraordinary value for money, and yet we guarantee all these for 2s. 3d. Then in addition to this we give gratis in every packet a prize—Watches, Rings, Brooches, Pipes, Gold Pencil-cases, etc., as below. This we give away.

THIS IS NO LOTTERY.

Every person gets a prize. Every person stands an equal chance of getting a Silver Watch, a Gold Ring, or other valuable prize. 500 packets are got ready at a time, a prize is put in each packet. Then the parcels are all fastened and tied up and mixed about till nobody can possibly tell what prize is in any packet. The parcels are then piled up in rows, and as the orders arrive, are got off strictly in rotation, so everyone stands a chance of getting 10 times the value of their money, while everybody gets more than full value. This offer may never appear again, and you should therefore send at once.

All Parcels are sent free, by Parcels Post, at the following prices:—One for 2s. 3d., two for 4s. 3d., three 6s.

The Coupon must be cut out and sent to us with all orders, otherwise we will not guarantee to supply as above.

B. of I. COUPON.
This Coupon entitles the holder to Prize Packets of Stationery at above prices.
Signed,
J. THEOBALD & CO.

LONDON RIOTS.

Very Special.—At great expense we have had prepared 6,000 beautiful Photographs, mounted on glass, and enclosed in ivorine, representing the London Riots, showing the excited mob marching through the streets waving the red flag. For this occasion only one of these will be given in each of our Prize Packets.

We guarantee also to put in every 300 packets 4 Silver Watches, 4 Real Gold Rings, 12 Real Gold Pencil-cases, 30 Good Briar Pipes, Silver Mounted and otherwise, 6 Silver Brooches, 6 Silver Lockets, 6 Silver Bracelets, 12 Silver Scarf Pins, 6 Sets of Magic Lanterns and Slides, complete, 20 Gentleman's Handkerchiefs, 20 Ladies' ditto, 50 Bagpipes (as advertised by us at 1s.), 12 Pairs Scissors, 12 Pocket Knives, and in the rest Packs of Playing Cards, Conjuring Tricks, Photographs, &c.

Special Notice.—This advertisement is copyright, and any person infringing the same will be prosecuted.

J. THEOBALD & CO.,

(Established in Kensington over 50 years),

6 & 7, Bath Street, Kensington High Street, Kensington, London, W.

BAD LEGS.

CLARKSON'S CELEBRATED SPECIFIC.—THE ONLY SURE REMEDY. Wonderful Cures throughout England. Testimonials (many from Ministers) sent. Easy Terms. Watch new great cures thought incurable!!! Case:—The Rev. J. B. Lee, late of Halstead, Essex, wrote: "A person at Manton, near Marlborough Wilts, had a bad leg 30 years. He received immediate relief and a wonderful cure at little expense."—Address:—Dr. Clarkson, Darley, Ripley, Yorks.

THE BRITISH ISRAELITES;

Or, Evidences of our Hebrew Origin, gathered from History, Genealogy, Philology, and Heathen Customs. To which is added the Scriptural Testimony of Prophecy Compared with Existing Facts, Answers to Objections, and a Lecture on the Great Pyramid.

By LIEUT.-COLONEL H. W. J. SENIOR, 1st Bengal Infantry.

"We can safely recommend it as an excellent guide to the learned and an invaluable mine of wealth to the Anglo-Israelite controversialist. We hope all our readers will secure a copy, and have it often in their hands.—Banner of Israel

With Illustrations, cloth gilt, 178 pp., 3s. 6d. HAGSTER & SONS, Limited, 15, PATERNOSTER ROW, E.C

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."

(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India.)

"And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the Forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS of the EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. X., No. 482. Entered at Stationers' Hall.] WEDNESDAY, MARCH 24, 1886. PRICE ONE PENNY.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
The French Treaty with Madagascar	117
The Pessimists Rebuked as to Israel's Mercantile Marine	118
The Kingdom of God and the Church of God. By Surgeon-Gen. J. M. Grant, M.D.	118
A Military Step Towards the Federation of the Empire. Forwarded by A. B. R.	119
England the Missionary Nation. Forwarded by Alex. Hay, of Invercargill, N.Z.	120
God's Covenant with Abraham and Its Breach	121
Some Details Regarding Emigration to One of Israel's Desolate Heritages. By J. S. Anderson	122
"Thou Shalt Call His Name Jesus," etc. By Rev. W. H. Redknap	122
Our Anglo-Israelite Badges	123
The British-Israel Identity Association of Liverpool	123
Correspondence	123

THE FRENCH TREATY WITH MADAGASCAR.

AFTER years of open warfare, the unjust invasion and interference of a highly civilised nation with a semi-barbarous black race has been brought to a close by a treaty of peace, lately published in Paris, which tells us what results have been obtained by France in her protracted contest with the Malagasies of Madagascar. The issue is not very honourable to France, nor does it confer on the French much advantage as the result. The treaty contains 19 sections, and recites the following stipulations:—France will represent Madagascar in all her foreign relations, and will protect all Malagasy subjects who go abroad. Malagasies do not go abroad very much, and they have no particular foreign relations. This clause, therefore, will do little to give France power over the Malagasy nation. There will be a French Resident at Antananarivo living with a native guard to protect and honour him. The Resident will be entitled to audience of the Queen, and will be helped by a native judge in settling all disputes between Frenchmen and natives; but the Queen will retain the government of the whole island. The Malagasies will pay £400,000 as compensation to the French for losses sustained by foreigners during the war, and France will examine and liquidate such claims. Till this sum is paid the French will hold Tamatave, and the Queen undertakes to treat the Sakalavas and Antankares in a friendly manner, following the information to be given by France on these points. The French will help the Queen to defend her States, and desist from the demand of a war indemnity.

These and a few more unimportant provisos mark the lame and abortive conclusion of an unjust war waged for inadequate objects by the great French nation. The French pretensions have collapsed, and left the Malagasies with the fruits of victory, though the French have secured some commercial rights, to obtain which the war was first declared. The stipulation regarding the promised friendly treatment by the Queen of the Sakalavas and Antankares is remarkable, because the French, at the outset, claimed these tribes as their own subjects, and wished to set them against the Queen's troops.

The point to which we desire to call attention is this: the French, after years of expensive warfare, entered on "with a light heart," conclude peace with no real advantage to themselves, leaving the Malagasies masters of their own territories. But the British, on the contrary, in Upper Burmah, within a month, subjugated a difficult country, dethroned the king thereof, annexed his territory, and set up their own rule and authority throughout the conquered province with the full acquiescence of the people, who everywhere welcomed the British as friends, and helped them to put down the Dacoits and brigands. The latter, in the first confusion of the change, have made desperate attempts in many directions to rob and murder their own countrymen, but have not seriously attempted to interfere with her Majesty's newly-established rule.

What accounts for the difference of the results in the case of the French attack on Madagascar and ours on Upper Burmah? The difference is that of the races engaged in these hostilities as the assailants. The French, being non-Israelite Gentiles, have no promises to sustain and help them from on High, and, therefore, have failed. We British are Israel, of the House of Joseph, and we therefore have had the presence of the God of Israel with us throughout the operations, according to the prophecies. He has given us a prestige before which our enemies have quailed and been subdued, and the result has been that we have become, in barely a month, absolute masters of the whole of Upper Burmah, a country as large as France, while the French, after several years of hostilities, have not secured an inch of Malagasy land, save a port to the North of the island, which it is doubtful if they will occupy.

This is remarkable as evidence which any one may recognise that this our own nation is Israel, because we are blessed as God promised to bless Israel, but that the French, to whom God has given no promises at all, are Gentiles—non-Israelites—and have met therefore with disappointment and repulse in their efforts to secure in Madagascar a counterpoise to British power in India, Aden, Ceylon, and the Mauritius. They made a strong bid for Empire once in India, but God expelled them in Israel's favour. They colonised the Mauritius, but God gave that island to us, and we rule now over natives and Frenchmen there, by thousands. They have striven hard to gain Madagascar for their Republic, but God has frustrated that design, and left them with no material advantages to put against the cost in men and money of a long and protracted contest which, in spite of their wealth and naval strength, has ended in nothing.

Digitized by Google

Men ask respecting Our Identity, Cui bono? But they forget that the facts regarding India, Madagascar, Burmah, and the Mauritius are proofs that we have the blessings of Abraham, but that the French have not. For God's continued blessings to His people let Israel always praise His Holy Name!

THE PESSIMISTS REBUKED AS TO ISRAEL'S MERCANTILE MARINE.

We are glad to give our Israelite friends another weapon wherewith to reply to those who never cease to proclaim that our material national power and commercial greatness are on the wane. The following is from "The Ship-wrecked Mariners Society's Report for 1884-85"—i.e., for the past twelve months—under the head of "The Mercantile Marine of the World," the following facts and figures appear, which will repay study.

"The mercantile marine of the world," says the Report, "according to the latest statistics published by the Bureau Veritas, consists of the ocean-going sailing and steam vessels enumerated in the Table below as respectively belonging to each Flag named. Referring first to the steam tonnage, it is at once apparent that the British total is approached by none, standing as it does at the head of all with 6,593,610 tons, whilst the united steam fleets of the rest of the world give but 3,615,858 tons, or not much over one-half the total of the British steam tonnage. Taking then sailing ships, the British supremacy at sea again asserts itself, no less than 4,752,059 tons, out of the total of 13,010,879, or considerably over one-third of the entire sailing-ship tonnage of the world, being British owned:—

Flag	Vessels.			Tonnage.
	Sailing.	Steam	Total.	Sailing.	Steam.	Total.
African	7	...	7	2521	...	2521
American	6344	350	6694	2161490	539342	2700832
Asiatic	125	106	231	38535	96320	134855
Austrian	511	99	610	207325	119487	326812
Belgian	30	53	83	8859	95965	104824
British	15384	5090	20474	4752059	6593610	11345669
Central American	118	20	138	29956	22068	52024
Danish	1158	160	1318	181733	121464	303197
Dutch	965	145	1110	280880	188491	469371
Egyptian	...	28	28	...	31947	31947
French	2343	493	2836	431495	737205	1168700
German	2471	488	2959	864661	550528	1415189
Greek	1358	52	1410	266804	49761	316565
Hawaiian	24	8	32	9793	4024	13817
Italian	3037	143	3180	890422	183623	1079045
Norwegian	4056	242	4298	1415795	125691	1541486
Portuguese	374	24	398	81513	23705	105218
Roumanian	20	2	22	3494	1434	4928
Russian	2139	204	2343	467740	157696	625136
South American	378	118	496	140687	84731	225118
Spanish	1502	301	1803	299340	345862	645202
Swedish	1963	292	2255	406583	117947	524530
Tahitian	3	...	3	697	...	697
Tunisian	...	1	1	..	1067	1067
Turkish	423	13	436	68058	11376	79434
Zanzibar	...	1	1	...	1124	1124
Unknown	1	...	1	439	...	439
Grand Totals...	44734	8433	53167	13010879	10209468	23220347

We may add to the remarks above made that the number of steam vessels owned by the British alone amounts to much more than one half of all the steamers in the world, the proportion being as 5,090 British steam vessels to 8,433 belonging to all nations together. The French, German, and American nations own next to ourselves the largest number of steam vessels; but at what a vast distance do these races follow us in this respect! For our 5,090 vessels the French own only about one tenth, or 493; the German Empire only 488, and our American brethren only 350. How vast then is the disproportion, and how great must be a commerce that owns 20,474 vessels (sailing and steam) as against the 53,167 the whole world possesses! The vicar of Clifton considers our claim to be the Israel of God a mere "speculation," even when confronted with the mass of evidence we have laboriously accumulated during the last ten years! We wish we could obtain his opinion on the facts we have now presented to the world, and could ask him whether they do or do not exactly fulfil the promises to Joseph, or Ten-Tribed Israel, in Gen. xlviii. 1 and 25, 1 Chron. v. 1, 2; Numbers xxiv. 7 and Isa. xviii. 1 in reference to Israel's maritime supremacy as being "the ships of Tarshish" and the prophetic succourer and restorer of the House of Judah. If the British be not the House of Ephraim, or the Ten Tribes, where else can that nation be which is destined in these "last days" to possess the blessings Gen. xlix. 1 and 22 to 26 describe; being also the owner of the Gates, the possessor of "the uttermost parts," "the coasts," and "the ends of the earth," the inheritor of the Heathen and Colonial Empires of the world, the wealthy, Sabbath-keeping, Gospel-propagating, Bible loving, "Christian nation," multitudinous to a degree, "blossoming and budding and filling the face of the world" with true Gospel "fruit?" (Gen. xxii. 17; Psa. ii. 8; Isa. xxiv. 15; xli. 9; Jer. xxxi. 7, 8; Isa. xlix. 8; Deut. viii. 18; Exod. xxxi. 13, 17; Acts. xiii. 47; Isa. xlii. 6; Psa. cxlvii. 19; 20; Hosea. 1, 10; Gen. xxii. 17; Isa. xxvii. 6). Here are scores of proofs converging to one point and all testifying that this nation is Israel, if God be true, and if His word be those Holy Scriptures we all love so well. Can the conclusions we draw, then, founded on such evidence, be deemed a mere "speculation"? If so, then why may we not also deem the story of the Nazarene of Galilee and of Calvary a "speculation" too, and the Gospel of the grace of God a pleasing tale on which no serious reliance can be placed? The testimony is the same, the evidence that of the same inspired prophets and apostles, and the terminus ad quem in both cases the glory of the Lord of hosts! We dare not call the Identity of Jesus of Nazareth with the promised Messiah a "speculation," and we ask then on what grounds our conclusions regarding the British nation are to be put on one side with the remark that they are at best "a speculation," but no more?

THE KINGDOM OF GOD AND THE CHURCH OF GOD.

By Surgeon-General J. M. Grant, M.D.

Although agreeing with much of what has been advanced by the Rev. D. Hanan in The Banner of March 3, there are one or two points on which I differ from him, and as the subject is important, in view of present apprehended danger to the Church, I will, with your leave, offer some further reasons for my belief that the Church of God has been established in the throne of David since David's time, and must remain so established till He comes, whose right the throne is, and re-establishes a theocracy in the world. The kingdom of God and the Church of God are certainly not synonymous or interchangeable expressions. It is very necessary to remember this; but we must, at the same time, be careful to distinguish between the kingdom and the chief rule.

When we speak of a Church, we mean the ministering body and the congregation of worshippers, and in this sense Israel was the "congregation" in the wilderness, and the Tribe of Levi was the "ministers." Both these expressions occur in the Old Testament, and the two, ministers and congregation combined, constitute what is called a Church, or the Church, in the New Testament; and this temporal and spiritual combination of the Twelve Tribes of Israel appears to be what is called the Church in the wilderness in Acts vii. 38. The substitution of the word "congregation" for "Church," in the Revised Version, is immaterial, because the congregation or gathering together of the faithful may be used as including both ministers and people.

Digitized by Google

The rule over the kingdom of God, which was deputed to David, embraced the Twelve Tribes, or both Houses of Israel; and therefore, as I have endeavoured to show on many former occasions, the promise of God to David required that a representative portion of the House of Joseph should be attached to Judah, and remain under the sceptre of David at the time of the separation of his kingdom. This sovereignty has continued in one unbroken line from David to Victoria. It was not affected by the separation of the two Houses of Israel, nor by the subsequent captivities of Israel and Judah, because, at the time of the captivity of Judah, there was no formal or statutory emancipation, or removal of the Jews from the rule of David. There was a violent separation of the king and the people—prophecy was fulfilled—Israel abode many days without a king, because their king had been forcibly removed; but his dynasty was established, and his succession made sure, just as happened at a later period in the history of the same people, when the kingly rule was for a time supplanted by a commonwealth under the usurper Cromwell.

It appears, as far as we can gather from tradition, that when the dynasty of David was transplanted into Ireland, a Hebrew Church was established there, conformity to which was made the condition of kingly rule. It is uncertain how long this Hebrew worship was maintained; but it is immaterial, because there can be no doubt that the Church was established in Judah till the Advent; and as there never was any legal separation between Judah and her kings, it follows that the Church was established in the throne of David from the captivity till the dispersion of Judah, as surely as it was in the throne of England during the commonwealth.

Having now considered the kingly rule and its inseparable attendant "the Church," let us enquire what constituted membership of the kingdom, and we shall find the answer to be covenant relationship with God the King of Israel, for whom David and his successors have been viceroys. I do not agree with Mr. Hanan that Ephraim-Israel ceased to be the kingdom of God when it revolted, because it was still His people; but from the date of the captivity till the Christian era, the kingdom of God was taken from it because it had broken the covenant and become Lo-Ammi, not His people. Israel rejected God, and He rejected them, and deprived them of the privileges of subjects of His kingdom; and in this sense only the kingdom was taken from the Jews when they rejected Christ and refused to come under the new covenant in Him. The sovereignty remained with them because it was established in their Tribe by the oath of God; but the privilege of being subjects of the kingdom was taken from them and given to the other House or nation which was brought into the bond of the covenant which they had despised and rejected. And here, again, we find the dominion or national power bestowed conditionally on the acceptance of the true religion. The Church and State have been one from the beginning. No human statute united, and no human statute can sever them. Ever since there has been a nation of Israel the Church of God has been found in union with it, and such it must always continue, because God has so ordained it, as we read in Psa. lxxviii., that He chose David His servant that he might feed Jacob His people, and Israel His inheritance, that is, that he might maintain a State-endowed Church; so that wherever we find the throne of David, we must find it in union with the Church of God. I cannot, therefore, agree with Mr. Hanan that the kingdom of God on earth can exist separately from His Church, or His Church separately from His kingdom, because He changes not, and Israel is His appointed channel of blessing to the world by the promulgation of the Gospel. She is His Church in the world now, as she was His Church in the wilderness under Moses.

The Sovereign is bound to maintain a State Church, and to offer a pure worship to the people, but he is not bound to maintain more than one, and hence the Church in Ireland has been disestablished, with no very good result, as far as we can see; and the Church in Scotland may be disestablished also, although it is to be hoped that she will not. We must remember too, that although the Sovereign is bound to maintain a State Church, the Church so maintained must not be regarded as the only Church of God in the State of Israel—and that much more latitude of rubric and ritual is admissible under the Christian, than was under the Jewish dispensation.

The stability of the nation depends upon the fulfilment of its destiny as a kingdom of priests and an holy nation, proclaiming Christ to all the world. And accordingly we find, that much of our missionary enterprise is conducted altogether independently of State control. Here all denominations of Christian Israelites meet on common ground as THE CHURCH OF GOD IN THE WORLD.

We cannot too clearly disclaim sectarianism in our teaching; and any who may feel inclined to be exclusive, and to treat our nonconformist brethren with disregard, should turn to Mark ix. 38—40, where they will find the earliest record of nonconformity, and learn how it was dealt with by Christ.

A MILITARY STEP TOWARDS THE FEDERATION OF THE EMPIRE.

FORWARDED BY A. B. R.

THE following cutting from a leading article in The Daily Express (Dublin) seems to be such an unintentional, but yet suitable sequel to the BANNER OF ISRAEL article of March 3rd, "A Postal Step Towards the Federation of the Empire," that we quote it. The debate on Lord Sidmouth's motion may—nay, must—point to great results.

Slowly, however, the spirit of true Imperialism, based on the nationality principle, is moving among us. It is the leaven which by and by will leaven the whole lump. Another sign that it is stirring to some good purpose was the short debate in the House of Lords on Friday night on a motion of Lord Sidmouth, which, though simple in itself, seems to point to great results. Lord Sidmouth moved for returns of the naval and military officers now employed in the service of the colonies, and asked whether her Majesty's Government intended to propose to the Colonial Governments any scheme by which the naval and military forces of this country and of the colonies might be made interchangeable for the purposes of Imperial and Colonial defence. In itself the return will be a modest one, but it points to a decision which we should hope our colonies, as much as the mother country, will see the importance of. It is the germ of a scheme of confederation based on a common support in danger, and the interchange of military and naval resources. In the first place, the arrangement, if carried out, would provide a suitable outlet for our half-pay naval and military men, who, under the present compulsory system of retirement, have to step out of the ranks and retire into private life in the very prime of their days. These unelderly veterans who before their time are turned adrift, and degenerate into club loungers and habitual grumblers at the new regulations arising from the abolition of purchase, might all be provided for in our colonies. As a matter of fact, our colonies turn out excellent raw material for the rank and file of their sea and land defences. But the educated element is defective. In a word, there are the men and here are the officers, and it only wants a little administrative adjustment to bring the two together, and so to find openings for our middle-aged captains and colonels turned adrift from the army to make room for the rising generation of subalterns.

This is only the first and least important result of such a step in the direction of federation. What would follow and flow out of this in the course of time would be a common feeling of patriotism of which army and navy are among the strongest symbols and pledges. A crown without supporters soon falls, as a throne topples over without props. Imperialism, unless it is to end as a mere piece of vapouring, must take some substantial form, and this, as we hold, can best be given to it by organizing the united services of the British Empire. It is too late for us to attempt to go back to the garrison theory of holding our colonies. Beyond a few strong places like Gibraltar and Malta, which are garrisons pure and simple, and not colonies at all, we leave the defence of our larger colonies to the local authorities. They raise their own fencibles, and at present officer them as best they can. It is at this point that the help of the mother country might be looked for, when, with advantage to them and relief to ourselves, we could provide for this by sending out to them our discharged and half-pay officers.

Digitized by Google

On every ground, then, this motion of Viscount Sidmouth deserved something more than the mild good wishes for its success of Earl Granville, who is the present stopgap Secretary of the Colonies. When we seriously take up the question of confederation which this call of the Irish Nationalists is rapidly forcing to the front, we shall want a stronger man to shape so large a measure. But we may take the present as an instalment of our duty, and, with cries of Justice to Ireland in the air, we hope some one will raise the more reasonable cry of justice to the Greater Britain of the future.

It may be also, as stated, that the Irish troubles are but an instrument in the hands of God to cause Imperial Federation to come into the field of "practical politics."

ENGLAND THE MISSIONARY NATION.

FORWARDED BY ALEXANDER HAY, OF INVERCARGILL, NEW ZEALAND.

Extracts from "Short History of Christian Missions, from Abraham and Paul to Carey, Livingstone and Duff."

By GEORGE SMITH, LL.D., F.R.G.S., &c., &c. Edinburgh: H. T. Clark, 38, George-street, 1884.

Being one of a series of handbooks for Bible-classes and private students.

AT p. 6 we read: "The historical development of Christian Missions is the subject with which we have to deal." "Abraham was the first man whom God sent forth as a missionary" (p. 7). "The time was about 2,000 B.C., when there appeared to Abraham what the first Christian martyr, Stephen, described as the glory of God, and said unto him, Get thee out from thy land, and from thy kindred, and come unto the land which I shall show thee."

"Palestine thus became the first, the greatest missionary centre of the race, for the two thousand years from Abraham to Christ" (p. 9). God made with Abraham the universal missionary covenant, during that awe-inspiring vision depicted in Gen. xv. From Abraham, 2,000 B.C., on through the Judaic economy to 70 A.D., our author designates the "first or Judaic preparation" for the evangelising of the world.

In speaking of Daniel's vision of the four empires, the Chaldean, Medo-Persian, Grecian, and Roman, the successive empires of gold, of silver, of brass, and of iron, which have preceded the missionary kingdom of Christ, he gives a quotation from "Scarth's Roman Britain, 1883," which will have an interest for those who combat the idea that Britain will be one of the ten toes or kingdoms of the final development of the Roman Empire. "It is significant," our author says, "that we find the latest, and, by general acknowledgment, the first authority on Roman Britain, writing thus, as the closing passage of his secular history: 'This land of Britain, which has a wondrous history, and holds so high a place among the nations of the earth, shows in every part traces of the fourth great empire—the iron—which was to precede the coming of a better and kindlier dominion, the little stone cut out of the mountain without hands, which grew great and filled the earth. We have distinct traces in every part of this island how that great iron empire sought to fix itself firmly, and to mingle with the seed of men, but did not prevail. It failed because it was based upon an unsound principle, that of force and conquest rather than of justice and truth; but we have also seen how it prepared the way for a better kingdom, which has taken root and filled the land, and has substituted truth and justice, tempered with mercy, for despotic military rule.'"

From A.D. 70 to 1784 is the second or Latin preparatory period of our author. The following, from p. 59, speaks for itself: "Britain from the first a missionary land. The same insular position and commercial facilities which have made Great Britain the abode of constitutional freedom and the head of the most powerful civilising empire the world has yet seen, early caused it to receive and to propagate the Gospel of Jesus Christ. What, physically, Palestine was before the days of the apostles, as the cradle of Christianity, that the two little British Isles have been ever since as its nursery. Each, Palestine and Scoto-Ireland, has been in succession the holy land of missionary preparation and propagation—Palestine, from Abraham to Christ; Britain, from the Celtic Patrick and Columba, and the Saxon Boniface and Wiclif, to the English Carey and the Celtic Duff. Paul declared his design to visit Spain, and from a passage in an epistle of Clemens Romanus, the chief missionary apostle, has been set down as the apostle of Britain. Clement represents Paul as 'coming to the extremest limit of the West.' In the five or six years between his first imprisonment at Rome and his martyrdom, there was time for the apostle to visit not only Spain but Britain, which had close commercial relations with that peninsula."

What have we here? Britain's land and people taking the place of Palestine's land and people in carrying on to completion that universal missionary covenant God made with Abraham. There is no link wanting in the chain of continuity, for we are assured (p. 60) of the "apostolic origin of the (early British) Church, whether from Ephesus or Rome, or both, whether from St. John's immediate disciples, or from Paul himself, or both. . . . And, once fairly constituted, this early British Church was, in the modern sense, a missionary Church" (p. 61). And these missionary efforts were not confined to their own land, but extended to the continent.

"Neander . . . as in 1846 he contemplates the successive steps by which the Scots and English missionaries brought the Teutons of Germany to Christ, bursts forth into an exclamation of grateful joy, 'What would have become of our fatherland if God had not, by His Spirit, awakened that missionary zeal?' The mission of Augustine and his immediate successors in the sees of Canterbury and York, had so limited the field of the Scoto-Irish missionaries at home, that they swarmed like bees, to use the expression of contemporary annalists, into the dark places of heathen Europe (p. 85). The conversion of Western Europe may be said to have been nominally or historically completed when, in 1066, the Normans, Christianised, became conquerors, under William, of the Saxon, and ultimately the Celtic peoples, who had been the chief instruments in God's hands of turning the Northern nations from nature-worship and hero-worship, animal sacrifices and human sacrifices, and dumb idols like the colossal Irmin Saule and Thor, to the living God. First, the Scoto-Celt transformed the Saxons so that they should not give England back again to a demon-driven barbarism. Then Christian Celt and Saxon became the Missionaries to Frank and Goth, Hun and Scandinavian. . . . Western Europe was saved by the Christianisation of the Northern nations from the fate which was fast overtaking Eastern and Southern Europe, where the Saracens, and then the Turks swept away Church and State, creed and polity together, even in the lands where Christ had taught and suffered, where His followers were first called by His name, and His apostles found centres whence to evangelise Africa, India, and Spain" (pp. 94, 95).

Our author calls "the Reformation a home mission to Christendom. . . . The reformers of the sixteenth century in Germany and Switzerland, France and Sweden, Scotland and England, lived right through the greatest age of discovery the world has ever yet seen; but in vain, so far as foreign missions are concerned. That was not their work. Spain and Portugal were first in the race of discovery, and their dead Church carried a Gospel of compromise and extirpation to races who have died out before it. Germany, which led the Reformation, has not a colony to this day, or has only just acknowledged a small strip of the South-West coast of Africa. The Danes were the first Protestants to do their duty to the heathen, with German assistance, but on a small scale. The Dutch came out of their own national baptism so earthy, that when they supplanted the Portuguese in the East they failed as missionaries by adopting the same method of compromise from its secular side."

Digitized by Google

"It has taken six centuries, from Wicliff to Duff, to train the British Churches, for the second time, to become the missionaries of Christ and Christian civilisation to the nations. The nineteenth century has become the missionary century, and English-speaking men and women of Great Britain and America, aided by their German cousins in lands under British influence, are its missionaries" (p. 112).

"With the opening of the seventeenth century the time came, in God's providence, for the English to take the lead in colonisation and commerce. It was the open eye that led the English Puritans to New Zealand. It was the English East India Company that opened India (often against its will) to Christ, when Portugal and the Netherlands had been rejected" (p. 132).

"On 1st November, 1858, the Company gave place to the direct rule of the Crown and Parliament of Great Britain—that is, practically as well as constitutionally, the Christian people of England, Scotland, and Ireland, became trustees for the good of the people of India, now 254 millions in number. Thus each citizen of Great Britain and Ireland is immediately and individually responsible to God for the discharge of that trust, the greatest in all history" (p. 139).

"The first Protestant missionary corporation was undoubtedly that created, not by a Church, but by the Long Parliament" (p. 135). And again, having introduced us into his third period, "English-speaking Universal Evangelisation, 1784—1884," he takes pains to point out, when rapidly sketching the history of the great missionary societies, that they were of a national character, and that not till 1830 did the Churches become missionary. William Carey was the first English missionary. Unconsciously Carey served himself heir to Abraham, with whom God had made the universal missionary covenant" (p. 161).

Carey was a Baptist. To that sect was given "the honour of making England the missionary, or, in some sense, the Fifth Empire of history, that of the Little Stone of Daniel" (p. 155). The latest statistics, for 1882-83, give the following results:—Total amount raised from all sources, £2,275,000, contributed as follows: Great Britain, £1,530,000; America, £600,000; Continent of Europe, £145,000.

	Number of Missionaries.	Native Helpers.	Communicants.	Scholars.
British ...	2,757	20,532	352,196	285,237
American ...	1,395	6,498	198,587	80,395
Continental ...	767	2,441	71,794	27,548
	4,919	29,471	622,577	393,180

"The future. From the political side the new world seems to be at the beginning of its history. The English-speaking empires of Great Britain and the United States go on expanding. The Canadian and Australasian dominions are in their infancy. The Indian Empire compels reluctant statesmen to lengthen the cords and strengthen the tent-pegs. From Scotland (Britain?), by the Mediterranean and Red Sea, to the Himalayas and the Pacific Ocean, is one missionary highway. Japan and China are bursting with the buds of promise, like the forest of an Arctic spring-time. The great islands of Borneo and New Guinea are being dragged into the mighty march. From the spiritual side, we watch God's haste, the 'one day,' as the uncultured races flock into the kingdom; God's leisure, the thousand years, as hoary Brahmanism and its Buddhist offspring slowly yield" (p. 211).

GOD'S COVENANT WITH ABRAHAM AND ITS BREACH.

An earnest and conscientious Anglo-Israelite recently sought an interview with us, in order to state what was to him an insuperable difficulty, and to seek, if possible, its true solution. "I am," he said, "an Anglo-Israelite of some standing, and I have been a traveller almost all over the earth. Years ago, before I ever heard of Our Identity, I came to the conclusion, from my intercourse with many nations in the earth, that the language which would certainly prevail at last, and become the universal tongue, was the English. Why this should be I could not then comprehend; but I was certain it would be a fact, and now I know the reason for it. Another matter that often puzzled me before I had possession of the light Our Identity gives us, was this. I could not see the justice of our national acquisition of the lands of foreign nations, or how we could, as a righteous people, annex the countries of aliens and add them to our own Empire. Now, I perceive that every addition is made for God's glory, that Christ's doctrine and name may be made known to each new region we acquire, and that salvation and blessing may be extended by our means to the ends of the earth. I am now (he added) engaged every Sabbath in teaching a Bible-class of 17 or 18 young men, who evince the greatest interest in Our Identity, which is the only or chief subject of our readings. In the course of it I have had to enter on the consideration of the covenants of God made with Abraham and his after seed, and find, as we all do, that the covenants respecting the great and mighty nation, the multitudinousness, the wealth, the Gates, the Heathen and Colonial Empires, and the evangelising function bestowed on Abraham and his seed, had no conditions attached to them at all, but were given to the patriarch in fee, because he had obeyed his Maker. In the course of my reading, however, I came to Genesis xvii. 9 to 27, and there I found a difficulty I cannot solve, and I have come to you for help. Here is a covenant made by God with Abraham. It has a penalty attached to its breach, and that penalty was the cutting off of the delinquent for the breach. 'That soul shall be cut off from his people: he hath broken My covenant' (Gen. xvii. 14). Now, what am I to make of this? Our nation is not circumcised. It has broken God's covenant. It is cut off from their people, and the covenant being broken on one side, is not the matter at an end? Can this nation any longer look to God to fulfil His promises to the after seed of Abraham?"

Here was an honest difficulty experienced by an honest Anglo-Israelite, and he felt the burden of it to be so heavy that "he could not continue to teach his Bible-class the truths of Our Identity till it was removed out of his way." We had to give our friend an answer on the spot, and that which suggested itself to us was this. Our inquirer was a great contractor employed in a certain British city, and was therefore well able to understand the nature of a covenant. "God," we said (reading to him Gen. xvii. 1—8), "made certain promises to Abraham and his seed for ever (Luke i. 55), to which no conditions whatever were attached. He gave him and them the promise of 1st, Multitudinousness (ver. 2); 2nd, The fatherhood of many nations (ver. 4—5); 3rd, Such being kingdoms (ver. 6); 4th, That God would be their God; 5th, and the Land of Canaan theirs for an everlasting possession (ver. 8). These were royal gifts without a single condition attached to them. The gift was signed, sealed, and delivered. It cannot change."

Digitized by Google

"Because of the said gift and promise God Almighty added that He would impose on Abraham and his seed after him a covenant obligation, which was circumcision. This was prescribed and incumbent on all males. Breach of this covenant would entail on individuals transgressing the penalty of "cutting off," or being cut off from his people. Such a man was to be outcasted, sent adrift out of Israel, and was, in fact, to become a Gentile. "He hath broken My covenant." The penalty was individual, applicable to males only as we understand, and not applicable to the nation, quâ nation. For when afterwards the nation as a body neglected circumcision for 40 years, no penalty was exacted from them. They were not as a nation outcasted or Gentilised. (Joshua v. 2—9).

"The time came, however, when one portion of the chosen race, Abraham's after seed, did depart from God, and serving idols neglected also, we presume, the rite of circumcision. The Ten Tribes as a body revolted from God, and refused to serve Him, but served idols. "They left ALL the commandments of the Lord their God. . . . They worshipped all the hosts of heaven and served Baal" (2 Kings xvii. 16). We are justified, therefore, in concluding that they dropped circumcision, and refused in this thing, too, to serve God. What was the penalty? They were "cut off from their people." They ceased to be Israel. They became God's Lo-Ammi—outcast, Gentilised people; and so the penalty was exacted, the covenant was broken, and the price of disobedience paid. Israel was "cut off," and became as Gentiles to the eyes of the world, according to Gen. xvii. 14. But did this constitute a release to the Lord Jehovah in respect to His unconditional covenants with Abraham, which had no reciprocal covenants by breach of which they could be annulled? Clearly not. God had promised. He could not and cannot change. Israel paid the penalty prescribed for their breach, which was only outlawry and outcasting; but still remained the blessed subjects and objects of God's prior unconditional covenants respecting the promises of the land, the multitudinousness, and the causing many nations and kings to spring from the Abrahamic-Ephraimic stock.

"To make surety sure, we know beside and beyond all this, that when Israel, according to the Prophecies, was cast away, cut off from his people as an uncircumcised race, God instantly followed them in love and mercy, and told them that though they had been outcasted, "they should be to Him as though He had not cast them off;" and He would "be to them as a sanctuary for a little while in the countries where they should come" (Zech. x. 6; Ezek. xi. 16, R.V.). In Jer. iii. 12—14, too, He sent them gracious messages, telling them He was their Husband and they His wife, and that He would yet take them to His heart as His people, He being yet their God. Such we told our inquirer were the circumstances of the case, and they in no way militated against the teachings of our glorious Identity, but rather proved from facts that God's Word was true, and was literally fulfilled in the past and in the present history of our race." We showed our friend, too, that a contract broken on the one part need not necessarily be thereby annulled as to the other contracting party; that just so, God having covenanted on oath to give Israel certain blessings, is not absolved from that contract or promise, because His people have, in a totally different matter, failed to render obedience to His commands, seeing, too, they have for the said breach been adequately punished in the very manner prescribed in the special agreement between the two parties. We pointed out, finally, that Isa. lxv. 1 and Col. ii. 11 have a bearing on this subject, for Christ our Lord was circumcised for us, and we therefore are circumcised now in Him; that "He sought and found us" when we were unwilling to serve Him; finally, that He said to us, "Behold Me, behold Me," when we were a nation not called by His name—even outcast, Gentilised, Lo-Ammi, British-Israel. These arguments sufficed for our inquirer, and he left us perfectly satisfied in his mind.

SOME DETAILS REGARDING EMIGRATION TO ONE OF ISRAEL'S DESOLATE HERITAGES.

By JOHN S. ANDERSON.

THERE can be no doubt that the present distress and want of employment in this country are means by which the Almighty is working to force His people here to flock to other lands. At the same time, we hear that there is distress in many other places—in fact, that business is bad all over the world. It is not my intention to endeavour to point out a way whereby matters may be mended, but to say, that for many industrious men, with their wives and families, there is, I am convinced, in most of our colonies, much good to be done. This will apply especially to farmers, who are unable to make both ends meet at home.

New Zealand is a grand field for such men. In The Banner of Faith for January, there was an article entitled, "A New Field for Emigration," by the Rev. I. C. Yarborough, of 4, Sunnybank, Leeds, recommending Hokianga, a district in the North-west of that colony, to which I would refer intending emigrants; but I am sorry to say he alludes to the same want as that to which I wish to call the attention of the readers of THE BANNER OF ISRAEL, and that is, the lack of clergy.

Some relatives of mine went out last year to ~~Kohi Kohi~~ Kaiti Auckland, some two hundred miles South of Hokianga; they report most favourably of land and climate, the vegetation being very luxuriant, most of the trees evergreen, strawberries to be gathered almost all the year round, and peach and other fruit trees growing naturally, with splendid crops on them. The price of cows is about £4 10s. each, horses from £2 10s. up to £12 each, and sheep from 6s. to 8s. each; but in the midst of all this earthly plenty there is great room for improvement with regard to their spiritual necessities. They have a nice little church, but service is not performed in it more than once a month. The Bishop has promised, if they can get anyone to go out, that he will nominate him. The income, I understand, is £120 per annum, with a house, and some ground. There are a good many families settled in the neighbourhood; but it may be as well to mention, that there are no servants there, everything must be done by the emigrants themselves. Letters addressed to the writer—John S. Anderson, c/o Messrs. Saunders & Co., 68, Coleman-street, London, E.C.—regarding any clergyman willing to go out, will receive due attention, and appointments could be made for interview, to discuss any point on which further information might be required.

"THOU SHALT CALL HIS NAME JESUS," ETC.

(MATT. I. 21.)

By REV. W. H. REDKNAP.

"JESUS."—The Hebrew original of this name is "Oshea," or "Hoshea," signifying Saviour; and when Moses made Oshea, the son of Nun, a leader of the army of Israel, he prefixed to his name, the first syllable of the name of "Jehovah," and thus it became "Jah"-"Oshea"—i.e., Jehovah Saviour, or Joshua. In the Greek its form is changed to "Jesus." And this is the name that God gave to His Son when He was born into the world, and "came to seek and to save" lost sinners, the name by which He is most known and loved on earth, and most revered and adored in heaven, and the practical lesson that we, God's own ancient chosen people get from this glorious name is to be found in the words, "Trust ye in the Lord for ever, for in the Lord Jehovah is everlasting strength" (Isa. xxvi. 4). Being Jehovah, He unites in Himself the Old and New Testaments, Jah-Oshea, Jehovah-Jesus (see Psa. lxviii. 4).

IT ought to have been said that the sermon of the Rev. C. G. Ashwin, printed in BANNER No. 479, was preached at Trinity, St. Philip, Bristol, on Sunday morning, January 31, 1886.

Digitized by Google

OUR ANGLO-ISRAELITE BADGES.

We are glad to find that the silver badges which were once offered for sale to Anglo-Israelites are now again to be had in London. The following tells the reader where and the cost at which each badge can be procured. We trust Miss L. Hope will have a large number of orders, and so bring into general use a device which is most suggestive and yet an ornamental adjunct to the dress of Anglo-Israelites, male and female, young or old. These ornaments often lead to the introduction of the subject of Our Identity among strangers, as they provoke inquiry and explanation. The following notice gives the latter very clearly, and any one with a little attention can soon get up the subject, so as to interest the inquirer to ascertain for himself whether these things are so. The notice runs thus: —

"A desire having been expressed for a further supply of the badges worn by Anglo-Israelites, the public are informed that they can now be obtained from Miss L. Hope, 7, Ovington-gardens, London, S.W., on payment of 5s. 6d.; postage 3d. extra.

"The badge is made of standard silver, and has a ring attached, by which it can be suspended to any chain.

"The design consists of a circle, measuring an inch across, on which is placed a raised six-pointed star, composed of two pyramids reversed, each line of which measures an inch; a design which has also the interest of being the traditional signet of David. In the centre of the star a motto in Hebrew expresses the duty of the believer, in the words from Isaiah xliii. 10, 'Ye are My witnesses.'

"On the reverse of the badge are the Royal Arms, with quarterings and supporters in raised work, recalling, by its imagery, the promises of supremacy given long ago to Israel. Below is the answering motto, representing the confidence of the believer: "The Holy One of Israel is our King," from Psalm lxxxix. 18. These words also are in Hebrew, the sacred tongue, and the two mottoes are intended to point to the two aspects of the subject—earthward and heavenward."

THE BRITISH-ISRAEL IDENTITY ASSOCIATION OF LIVERPOOL.

We are glad to welcome the first annual report of the above association, which is indeed doing a good work. It began practical operations only on January 26, 1885, and now the association has a room of its own, lectures, Bible-classes, and library and reading room, and a system of distribution which, we fear, puts other associations quite in the shade. The income last year was £48 odd, and expenditure £47 odd. But as there are some liabilities, there is a small balance to the debit side of £6 6s. 10d., which we hope will soon be cleared off. The Liverpool Association has issued another broad-sheet, this time of four large pages, which is circulated gratuitously. We are glad to see it has reached the 55th thousand. We regard this fact as remarkable. The broad-sheet is devoted principally to the idea of the "confederation" of the British Empire, and contains, besides, articles on "The Union of the British Race," on "Unity," on "Lord Beaconsfield and the Eastern Question," also a paper by Farrar Fenton on "The Semitic Discovery and Colonisation of Britain," &c., &c. Those wishing to obtain this broad-sheet should apply to Mr. E. P. Dix, 24, Newington, Liverpool, at the British-Israel Identity Association.

The following appeared in the Liverpool Evening Express, Feb. 3, 1886. We publish it for what it is worth, without endorsing the view:—

"BOYCOTTING AS FORETOLD IN THE BIBLE.

"An Irish land agent writes from the South of Ireland:—'The introduction into the world of boycotting has, I think, hardly attracted sufficiently the attention of students of prophecy. We observe that 18 centuries ago it was predicted that just at the end of the age boycotting should be one of the principal instruments of coercion which Antichrist will use, the words of Scripture being as follows:—"He causeth all, both small and great, rich and poor, free and bond, that there be given them a mark in their hand or in their foreheads; and that no man might buy or sell save he that had the mark," &c. (Rev. xiii. 16, 17). As a matter of fact, now in some parts of Ireland, unless a farmer has the Land League ticket as a mark in his forehead—that is, stuck in the front part of his hat—he could not sell a single beast. I have myself seen it so placed. Thus this method of coercion has been introduced, and its power established beyond all question, so there it is prepared and ready to hand whenever Antichrist shall appear to use it. Is not this, then, a very remarkable sign of the approaching end of the age?" It may be added as of further important significance, that this form of coercion and fulfilment of prophecy is thus utilised in a land and amongst a people which are in spiritual and ecclesiastical subjugation to the Papacy, which has shown so many other signs of kinship, if not identity, with the Antichrist."

Correspondence.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

Dear Sir,—The following is an abstract from a letter I have just received from one of my sons, who went out in the "Liguria" to Sydney, in September last. Of course, I gave him a good supply of your leaflets. Yours very truly

John S. Anderson

Croydon, January 4, 1886.

"My dear Father,— . . . You will be pleased to hear that I made a convert on board the "Liguria" to the Anglo-Israel belief of a Jew. I asked him, half in fun, if he would like to read some papers on the subject, and he said he would. In about an hour he came back to me, begging with all his might to be allowed to buy the pamphlets, so of course I gave them to him, and as he asked me where he could get more I gave him your address on a slip of paper, with a few words from me on the back; which he will, no doubt, send you in order to get more pamphlets. He said that he would not part with those he already had for five pounds. His name is Levy.

"Your affectionate son,

"Henry K. Anderson.

"Sydney, Nov. 19, 1885."

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

Dear Sir,—Some unknown friend and supporter of Our Identity has very kindly, during the two last years, sent me a number of Banners of Israel for distribution at Devonport, and as I have no other means, but through the issue of the Banner, of reaching my friends to express to them my best thanks for this act of Identity generosity, and to assure the donors that their wish is strictly carried out, I ask you kindly to give this insertion. T. Inman.

33, Haddington-road, Devonport.

To the Editor of "The Banner of Israel."

Sir,—A clergyman has demurred to my opinion that the British people are the Ten-Tribed House of Israel, now doing their predestined work of evangelising the world according to God's promises to Israel, because, as he alleges, his great difficulty in entertaining the Identity of our race with Israel is that Judah's conversion must precede Israel's, and he quotes Zech. xii. 7 in support of his views, "The Lord shall save the tents of Judah first." But taking the context in the Revised Version, I submit (and am I not right in holding) that the prophet is referring to a time yet future, when Judah having "walked to," or fraternised with, Israel—at least, an election of that House. "one of a city, and two of a family"—will return to Jerusalem (Jer. iii. 14—18). Both Houses are being besieged, and "made a cup of reeling to all the peoples round about," in that day, it seems, when Judah's chieftains, &c., are confessing in their heart (converted, I conceive) the strength of the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, and now, too, their God in Christ, who "opens His eyes upon the House of Judah, which shall be made like a pan of fire among the wood, and like a torch of fire among sheaves."

Then it is—in that day—I submit "the Lord will save the tents of Judah first"—referring to the siege—in order "that the glory of the House of David and the glory of the inhabitants of Jerusalem be not magnified above Judah," &c. So that the "salvation" in question appears to refer not to priority of salvation of the soul at all, but to their salvation in the siege "from the hands of their enemies round about on the right hand and on the left," &c. I am, dear sir, yours faithfully, Lichfield, Jan. 28. Chas. J. Hadfield, Colonel.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed: — "Philo-Israel," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

SUBSCRIPTIONS £ s. d.

Annual Subscription for one copy weekly (including the Twelve Double Numbers) post free - 0 7 6
Two Copies (including Double Numbers) - - 0 13 6
Three Copies " " " " - 1 0 4
Four Copies " " " " - 1 5 6
Six Copies " " " " - 1 16 4

Post Office Orders to be made payable at the head office, St. Martin's-le-grand, London, to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C., and W. H. GUEST & Co. 29, Paternoster-row, London.

The Editor cannot undertake to return rejected MSS. unless stamps for the purpose be sent. Parties requiring an answer should enclose a stamp.

Contents Bills and Show Cards may be obtained on application to the Publishers.

Advertisements should be sent to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

Prepaid Advertisements are inserted at the rate of 30 words for 1s. 4d.

GROUND RENTS.—WANTED TO PURCHASE, Ground Rents secured on Shop or good House Property. In London or suburbs preferred.—W. K., 102, Kennington Park Road, S.E.

NEW & IMPORTANT IDENTITY WORK.

Just issued, 550 Pages, Crown 8vo., Cloth gilt, price 10/6, post free for Postal Order or Cheque.

JEHOVAH TRIUMPHANT

The New and Complete Theology and Electric Light of the Bible, containing the History of British-Israel, compiled from the Sacred Scriptures,

And traced down chronologically through the Pentateuch, the Historical Books, the Prophets, the Evangelists, Apostolic Writings, the Book of Job, and Revelation of John, and proving that Great Britain is a Development of the Monarchy of David, and has been established by eternal law the kingdom of God, and that the Anglo-Saxon race, together with the Jews, are the lineal descendants of the great Hebrew Race, and the heirs to the substantialities of the Abrahamic Covenant. Together with the key to future Prophecy, and a sketch of events looming on the Prophetic Horizon, and ending in the Coming of our Lord.

Introduction. 1.—The Ecclesiastical Error. 2.—The Everlasting Covenant. 3.—The Design of an Immortal Nation. 4.—The Great Nation Created, its Perpetuity declared. 5.—The Features of the Great Nation. 6.—Meridian and Sunset, the Burning Bush. 7.—Light out of Darkness. 8.—The Hidden Counsel of Jehovah. 9.—The Separation of the Houses and Doom of Judah. 10.—The Permanent Distinction: Jews are Israelites, but Israelites are not Jews. 11.—"The Sceptre shall not depart from Judah, nor a Lawgiver from between his feet, until Shiloh come." 12.—The Intermediate National Tribe. 13.—The Building and the planting, the throne of David. 14.—"Unto Him shall the gathering of the people be." 15.—The Valley of the Shadow of Death. 16.—The Shepherd of Israel with the People prepared. 17.—The Valley of dry bones and mighty revival. 18.—"The Twelve Tribes who are of the Dispersion." 19.—"The Elect who are sojourners of the Dispersion." 20.—The Intermediate Ecclesiastical Tribe. 21.—Migration and Settlement. 22.—Behemoth and Leviathan. 23.—The Signs of the Times. 24.—The Last Great Revolution. 25.—The Judgment of the Nations—Edom, Moab. 26.—The Coming of the Lord. 27.—"Tekel." 28.—Reveille.

See Review in Banner of Israel, January 6 and 13.

ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-st., London.

Health Aids — Write for this valuable little Book.

50 YEARS RECORD of Facts, Principles, and Discoveries Relating to the Improvement and Preservation of Human Life on Earth. By Dr. Samuel Birley, M.D. Ph.D. Articles 1, 2, 3, and 4, complete in book form, post free 2 stamps—

GORDON I. MURRAY & Co., 33, CASTLE ST., HOLBORN, LONDON

EXTERMINATION OF ALL CORNS & BUNIONS

Guaranteed by using Gardner's Patented Corn and Bunion Exterminator, an ingenious little instrument which can be used by anyone. Painless in operation—"never fails." Price 1s. The highest Surgical Testimonials can be seen and operations successfully performed in all difficult or peculiar cases, bad nails, &c., at the Patentees', who will send the Exterminator direct for 13 stamps. C. & J. P. GARDNER, Kendal.

PUBLISHED BY ROBT. BANKS & SON,
RACQUET COURT, FLEET STREET, E.C.

WORKS BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

The Geography of the Gates. With Map and six full page, and one double-page, Illustrations, printed on plate paper. 208 pages, in handsome cloth, gilt Price 3s. 6d., post free 3s. 10d.

An Elementary Digest or Sketch of the Chief Facts and Teachings of the Great Pyramid of Egypt. Adapted to the Unlearned and Unscientific. 56 pages, Illustrated with Diagrams, price 4d., post free 5d. 10th Thousand.

The History of the House of Israel; How they were Lost, and How they were Found, Told for the Children. Price 6d., cloth 1s.; post free 7d. and 1s. 1d. Fourth Edition. Eleventh thousand.

Our Identity with the House of Israel. Price 4d. Reprinted from "Clifton Chronicle Letters"

A Resume of the Scriptural Argument, proving the Identity of the British Race with the Lost Ten Tribes. Price 1d.; 6s. per 100. New edition now ready.

London: Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street.

A Thousand of the first edition sold in a few weeks for Great Britain, Ireland, Egypt, Natal, India, and America.

ISRAEL'S WORLD:

Origin and Destiny of British Race, Colonies, and Empire; according to Scripture, History, and Signs of Our Times.

BY REV. HENRY ROE.

Price 2d., post free 2½d. R. Banks & Son, Racquet-court

Also by the same Author, "Consecration," 4d.; "Going to Africa," 1s.; "Fernando Po Mission," 1s.; "West African Scenes," 2s. E. Stock, 62, Paternoster-row, London, E.C. Rev. H. Roe, St. Ives, Cornwall.

THE ANTHEMIC

HOP PILLOW.

A WONDERFUL REMEDY FOR

SLEEPLESS NIGHTS.

Acknowledged by the highest Medical Authority to be unique in its action, certain in its effect, and one of the greatest boons known to modern times. Noxious sleeping draughts with their ill effects; in fact, sedatives of every kind, can now be dispensed with, THE HOP PILLOW supplying their place by giving sound and NATURAL SLEEP, stimulating the brain, invigorating and strengthening the nervous system, and bringing back that vital power which was thought to have been irretrievably lost. Sent free on receipt of P.O.O. or stamps for 7s. 6d., or 10s. 6d. Please address—

Department B. I., C. W. WESTON,

The London and County Medical Drug Co.,

4, BURY COURT, ST. MARY'S AXE, LONDON.

LUNG TONIC
LUNG OWBRIDGE'S TONIC
LUNG LUNG TONIC, TONIC
LUNG TONIC
LUNG THE MIGHTY HEALER. TONIC
LUNG Save Your Lives by Taking TONIC
LUNG OWBRIDGE'S LUNG TONIC. TONIC
LUNG It has a power over diseases hitherto unknown in Medicine. TONIC
LUNG Are you at all Weak-chested, or Inclined TONIC
LUNG to be Consumptive, with just a touch of TONIC
LUNG Cough now and then? TONIC
LUNG "Try this Wonderful Medicine." The TONIC
LUNG Cough and Weakness will disappear as if by TONIC
LUNG magic, and you will feel a strength and TONIC
LUNG power you never had before. TONIC
LUNG HAVE YOU A COUGH? TONIC
LUNG A DOSE WILL RELIEVE IT. TONIC
LUNG HAVE YOU A COLD? TONIC
LUNG A DOSE AT BEDTIME WILL TONIC
LUNG REMOVE IT. TONIC
LUNG Bronchitis and Asthma it relieves instantly TONIC
LUNG The Spasms of Coughing so dreadful in TONIC
LUNG Whooping Cough become less with each TONIC
LUNG dose of the medicine. — TONIC
LUNG Prepared by W. T. OWBRIDGE, Chemist, Hull TONIC
LUNG Sold in bottles 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d. & TONIC
LUNG 11s. by all Chemists and Patent Medicine TONIC
LUNG Vendors. Wholesale all London and TONIC
LUNG Provincial Houses. TONIC

GRAND FREE DISTRIBUTION.

5,000 GENUINE FREE PRESENTS, consisting of GOLD and SILVER WATCHES, DIAMOND and RUBY RINGS, SILVER BROOCHES and EARRINGS, REAL SILVER BREAST PINS, elegant Leather and Plush Purses, and thousands of other valuable Presents. Every Purchaser of one of my NOTED GOVERNMENT HEARTHRUGS will receive a free Present, and at the same time may become the fortunate possessor of a

Lady's Magnificent GOLD WATCH ..... for 2s.
Lady's Beautiful SILVER WATCH ..... for 2s.
Gent's Elegant SILVER WATCH ..... for 2s.
A Beautiful DIAMOND RING (Real Gold) for 2s.

Or one of the above-mentioned Free Gifts.

I am now selling so many of these beautiful Hearthrugs per week that I am enabled to RETURN A BONUS to my numerous customers in the shape of a Free Present.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

I guarantee to place in every 100 Hearthrugs packed up a REAL GOLD WATCH; I guarantee to place in every 100 Hearthrugs packed up a REAL SILVER WATCH for a Lady; I guarantee to place in every 100 Hearthrugs packed up a REAL SILVER WATCH for a gentleman; I guarantee to place in every 100 Hearthrugs packed up a GENUINE DIAMOND RING; and, lastly, I guarantee to place in every Hearthrug packed up a beautiful FREE PRESENT, consisting of an article of Jewellery or other goods.

THIS IS NOT A LOTTERY. Every Purchaser will receive a beautiful Free Present, and at the same time get unexampled value in the shape of a useful Hearthrug 6 ft. long and 3 ft. wide at the wonderful low price of 2s. each.

2/- Government Hearthrugs 2/-

SIX FEET LONG, THREE FEET WIDE.

Thousands Selling. Every Purchaser Delighted.

These Rugs are Six feet long, and Three feet wide—Seventy-two inches by Thirty-six inches. Handsomely blended in six or seven different colours, The designs are exquisite; including Ferns, Oak Leaves, Flowers, Mosaic, various animals, Cats and Kittens; and the latest introduction, the new Tiger design. They are suitable for Drawing-room, Dining-room, Parlour, Bed-room, or Kitchen. Thousands have been sold at 3s. 6d. each. In order that every Householder in the land may possess one of these beautiful Rugs, I will send at 2s. each, two for 3s. 10d., six for 11s.

Be in time. Cut out the coupon below and send at once. All orders are taken in rotation as they arrive per post.

BANNER OF ISRAEL. March 24, 1886.

FREE PRESENTATION COUPON.

This Coupon entitles every Purchaser of a GOVERNMENT HEARTHRUG, 6 feet long, 3 feet wide, to be considered by me in my GRAND FREE DISTRIBUTION of 5,000 Free Presents.

(Signed) J. WATTS.

113, Brunswick Road, Liverpool.

One Rug, P.O.O. 2s. or 26 stamps, two Rugs, P.O.O. 3s. 10d., or 50 stamps, six Rugs, P.O.O. 11s.

P. O. Orders to be made payable at Low Hill Branch to

J. WATTS,

113, BRUNSWICK ROAD, LIVERPOOL.

£5 REWARD.

GOLDEN PILL OF HEALTH.

The Proprietors of the above well-tried Family Medicine of 60 years standing, have determined to protect the Public—viz., by sending direct to sufferers instead of supplying their Golden Pill of Health through agents, and will pay £5 to any sufferer who does not find relief in the following distressing diseases:—Indigestion, Loss of Appetite, Headache, Dyspepsia, Constipation, Bile, Nervousness, and all diseases arising from sedentary employment or close confinement. The Pills in boxes, post paid, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 3d. Directions and Testimonials accompany each box. None are genuine without the Government stamp. Only Address—

PROFESSOR McPHERSON & Co.,

KIDDERMINSTER.

BAD LEGS.

CLARKSON'S CELEBRATED SPECIFIC.—THE ONLY SURE REMEDY. Wonderful Cures throughout England. Testimonials (many from Ministers) sent. Easy Terms. Watch new great cures thought incurable!!! Case:—The Rev. J. B. Lee, late of Halstead, Essex, wrote: "A person at Manton, near Marlborough Wilts, had a bad leg 30 years. He received immediate relief and a wonderful cure at little expense."—Address:—Dr. Clarkson, Darley, Ripley, Yorks.

Printed for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C. PUBLISHED BY GUEST, HAYWORTH, & Co., 29, PATERNOSTER-ROW WEDNESDAY, MARCH 24, 1886. [All rights reserved

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."

(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India.)

"And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the Forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS of the EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. X., No. 483. Entered at Stationers' Hall.] WEDNESDAY, MARCH 31, 1886. PRICE ONE PENNY.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
The Legislative Union of the Three Kingdoms	125
Mr. John Wilkinson Again	126
The Early British Church.—Part I.	127
Professor Seeley's Blind Evidence that "Israel is Dwelling Alone"	128
Another Pessimist View	129
"The Lord Both of the Dead and Living"	130
The Unity of the Empire	130
Correspondence	131

THE LEGISLATIVE UNION OF THE THREE KINGDOMS.

WE are living in days when the legislative separation of Ireland from Great Britain is the ardent desire of a noisy party in the sister isle, and the project, probably for that very reason, is adopted and embraced with ardour by our foremost Liberal statesman, who is resolved, if he can, to dis-unite the two legislatures, in the hope (it is nothing more than a forlorn hope) of bringing peace to Ireland, and settling, once for all, the problem of the day how to make Irish discontent give place to loyalty to the throne of the Queen of England. The question of the hour is, the ways and means by which he proposes to effect the object he has at heart.

We seem to think Mr. Gladstone aims at impossibilities. He has first to satisfy and carry with him Mr. C. Parnell, and the eighty-six rulers of the British Parliament who demand, as the price of their support in a division, that Ireland shall have a separate Parliament independent of British control to manage their own affairs. This, it is understood, Mr. Gladstone means to give them, saddled with the proviso, that the unity of the Empire shall be maintained by checks and guarantees, which he will provide in great profusion. Mr. Parnell and his followers, however, will accept of nothing short of independence for Ireland, and thus the first great difficulty Mr. Gladstone will encounter is here provided for him.

If we mistake not he will find it insuperable. For the working-men of Edinburgh, who lately came to present the Prime Minister with a congratulatory address from a great Liberal demonstration there, were prepared to tell him "that they desired the settlement of the Irish question without endangering the legislative union of the three kingdoms!" This will be found to be the decided opinion of the vast mass of the working-men of the United Kingdom, but it is utterly opposed to the wishes of the Irish party, and Mr. Gladstone's scheme will, in its result (however good may be his intentions), lead to the disruption of the Empire for a time, and to war at last, to reconquer South and West Ireland.

There is, however, another portion of Mr. Gladstone's scheme which demands, and must receive, close attention. He means to give Ireland "Home Rule," and a separate Parliament; but before he does that, he sees it will be necessary to remove from the jurisdiction of the new Irish Parliament all the Irish landlords who hold their property there now, under the protection and guarantee of the British Parliament. The Irish landlords must be "expropriated"—that is, bought out—and compensated for disturbance of possession, lest they should, when the Irish Parliament reigns, be crushed and ruined by it. The cost of this operation will be, as calculated by the journals of the day, and admitted by those responsible, nearly one fourth of the National Debt, or £220,000,000 sterling! The cost is to fall on English and Scotch taxpayers, in the hope that, the Irish landlords being bought out, the Irish tenants and farmers in possession will be induced, under a hostile and independent Irish Parliament, to think fit to pay handsomely to the British Government, for the lands they are taught to believe are their own already, without payment of any kind!

The innocence of our rulers in imagining the scheme, thus hatched, will satisfy the British taxpayers, and carry Mr. Parnell's disloyal followers with them is simply incredible. Well may the Times remark on the whole plan that, "it does not believe that the people of this country will be imposed upon by the sham, if their proper teachers have the courage and manliness to do their duty"; and well may it describe the policy of Mr. Gladstone as "a gigantic scheme, for investing 150 to 200 millions in the pauperisation of Ireland."

We hope, and believe, that the attempt now being made with all the authority and ability of the Prime Minister will collapse, and that he will fail to persuade his Cabinet, the House of Lords, the Commons House of Parliament, and finally the country, to support him in such a project for the ruin of the Empire, the pauperisation of Ireland, and the utter destruction of vast classes of interests in that wretched country, which since the Liberal Government succeeded Lord Beaconsfield in 1880, has gone from bad to worse, till to-day it is on the verge of national ruin, of civil war, and political collapse.

We believe, however, that none of these things will take place; although, probably, the country will come very near the catastrophe. Our Identity will, we are persuaded, prove to be, by God's mercy and favour, the means by which we shall avoid so great a danger. This nation is Israel, and these two islands are by God's gift the possession inviolable and invulnerable of His people. In these "isles of the West," these "isles afar off," the name of the Lord God of Israel is to be glorified by His chosen nation, and there His promise "to gather scattered" Israel and keep him must be fulfilled (Isa. xxiv. 15, Jer. xxxi. 10). There is no provision in God's Word for the further disruption of the collected Tribes in this their appointed place (2 Sam. vii. 10), and therefore we can give no heed to the threats of Israel's disruption, and the separation of Ireland from the Empire. That misfortune, at any rate, will never overtake this afflicted nation, though the elimination of Irish discontented members from the British Parliament will be a result much to be desired, and we believe certain, in some way, known only to our God, to be carried out, at last.

Digitized by Google

Meanwhile we would ask our readers to give way, in this our day, to no desponding thoughts. Matters are really not in Mr. Gladstone's hands, nor in those of Mr. Charles Parnell and his eighty-six devoted Irish followers. They are in the hands of the God of Israel, who is using Messrs. Gladstone and Parnell as it may best seem good to Him. We may leave results with God, for He has told us, "Fear thou not, for I am with thee. Be not dismayed, for I am thy God; I will strengthen thee; yea, I will help thee, yea, I will uphold thee with the right hand of My righteousness" (Isa. xli. 10). And such being the case we will look up and be no more sad or sorrowing for our country's sake, but on the contrary look up, and lift up our heads, and praise the Lord, because our nation's redemption draweth nigh! (Luke xxi. 28).

MR. JOHN WILKINSON AGAIN.

DEAR SIR,—In the Northampton Herald, of January 30, 1886, I find the following questions asked by an adversary who signs himself G. E. Siebenrood, and considered by him to be conclusive against Our Identity. They are quoted as taken from two pamphlets by John Wilkinson. It would relieve the minds of myself and others if you could find time to publicly answer them. Wishing, as heretofore, that our glorious cause may be abundantly blessed, and that you may be long spared to advocate it, I remain, yours most truly,

SARAH HILL.

Culworth Rectory, Banbury, February 1, 1886.

1. "The people shall dwell alone, and not be reckoned among the nations" (Num. xxiii. 9). Whatever we may be under the next Government, we certainly have been, up to this, reckoned among the nations.

2. Israel is to remain many days without a king, or prince, and without a true knowledge of God (Hosea iii. 4, 5). Can this be said of England?

3. The Twelve Tribes out of Palestine are to be few in number, under national curse, but to be increased when restored (Deut. iv. 26, 27; xxviii. 62—66; Jer. xxx. 3, 4, 19; Zech. viii. 13). The Anglo-Saxons are out of Palestine, and are not cursed or few in number.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.

In reply to our correspondent's appeal, we beg to refer her to BANNER, vol. iv., pp. 353, 362, 371, wherein we entered fully on the discussion of Mr. John Wilkinson's objections to Our Identity, and, we believe, fully answered them. As this was done so far back as September 1, 1880, more than five years ago, we may be permitted to give a brief reply again to the points raised by our adversary in the Northampton Herald, on January 30, 1886.

The first objection is that the British cannot be Israel because they do not "dwell alone" among the nations, but are reckoned among them, whereas Numb. xxiii. 9 tells us that Israel was "to dwell alone and not be reckoned among the nations." If Mr. Wilkinson be correct in his interpretation of the passage, then the subjects of David and Solomon, or Jeroboam and Rehoboam, were not the children of Israel; because at no time did they dwell alone, and never did THEY fail to be reckoned among the nations. They were surrounded by them, and it was their sin that they were mingled among them, and were reckoned as of them.

In Psa. cvi. 35, we read, as the past record of David's days, "They (Israel) were mingled among the heathen, and learned their works." Their enemies, the heathen, often ruled over them, and in every way the people belied the prophecy, if Mr. Wilkinson be right. But he is not right! God has told us how His people were to be esteemed as those who "dwell alone, not reckoned among the nations." Exod. xxxiii. 16, gives us the proper definition of these phrases. "For wherein," asks Moses of the Lord, "shall it be known here that I and Thy people have found grace in Thy sight? Is it not in that Thou goest with us? So shall we be separated, I and Thy people, from all the people that are upon the face of the earth." This obviates all difficulties, and Exod. xxv. 8; xxix. 45, 46; Haggai ii. 5; Neh. ix. 20; Matt. xxviii. 20, tell us that to Israel, and to them alone, the Lord promised and guaranteed His Holy Spirit's constant presence, thus making it certain that Israel would also alway "dwell alone," not reckoning herself among the nations, by reason of God's distinguishing mercy in always being present with her.

The second objection relates to Hosea iii. 1—5, which Mr. Wilkinson declares cannot be said to describe "England's" condition to-day. But we, on our part, reply, that we never said Hosea iii. applied to Israel! We say it referred to Judah as distinguished from Israel, and each verse accurately describes the miserable fate which has overtaken that scattered, kingless people. The chapter addresses "yet" another woman married to the prophet in a figure. Chap. ii. was the history of the Lord's first wife, Israel of the Ten Tribes, even Jezreel, or Lo-Ammi Israel, whereas chap. iii. was God's description of His second wife's condition, even Judah.

Objection No. 3. "The Twelve Tribes out of Palestine are to be few in number and under curse, but to be increased when restored." We are referred by Mr. Wilkinson to Deut. iv. 26, 27, xxviii. 62—66; Jer. xxx. 3, 4, 19; and Zech. viii. 13, for the proof of this. But we fail to find the proof in these texts. Deut. iv. 26, 27, is followed by ver. 28, which plainly does not apply to the Jews, since their scattering cured them of idolatry; but in Israel's case it made them worse heathen than they were before! During their wanderings Israel did indeed become few in number, but they were to become also in their penal outcast condition multitudinous as the sand upon the sea-shore, as Hosea i. 10 testifies, thus showing Mr. Wilkinson to be wrong.

But Deut. xxviii. 62—66 is quoted against us as applying to Israel, whereas our contention is that verses 1—15 of that chapter apply to Israel of the House of Joseph, alias the British, but the rest of the chapter to the Jews, because inexorable facts show that this was historically true of our own race and of the Jews respectively. Mr. Wilkinson quotes Jer. xxx. 3, 4, and 19, as evidence against Our Identity. But these verses do not prove that the increase of Israel is to take place only after the restoration and not before. Scripture cannot contradict Scripture. Hosea i. 10; Zech. x. 8, 9, 10, declare, as does Jer. xxxi. 8, that the increase will take place before the restoration as respects Ephraim's House only, and therefore we see that Mr. Wilkinson herein fails again. Zech. viii. 13 is said also to prove that Israel outside Palestine are to be "few," but increase only after restoration to the land. We defy any one to establish these propositions from this text!

Digitized by Google

We admit that "the Anglo-Saxons are out of Palestine," and we know they are not under God's curse, or few. But we do not find in Mr. J. Wilkinson's texts anything to show us that the House of Ephraim, being outcast, are to be anything but blessed. "They shall be (God declared in Zech. x. 6) as though I had not cast them off," and in Ezek. xi. 16, "I will be to them as a little sanctuary in the countries where they shall come." Their multitudes are promised to them in Hosea i. 10, when banished from their land as Lo-Ammi, "not His people," and the texts Mr. Wilkinson quoted cannot be used against us. They prove our case completely.

THE EARLY BRITISH CHURCH.

PART 1.

We beg to call attention to the following remarkable article we quote from The Protestant Churchman and Record of Church Missions to Roman Catholics in Great Britain of January, 1886. We think the article in question strongly confirmatory of our contention that this nation is Israel. It certainly illustrates our Lord's declaration in Matt. xxi. 43, since it is clear from Gildas' statement that "the kingdom of God was taken from the Jews and given" to the British-Israelite "nation" in A.D. 61, fully nine years before the Roman army under Titus destroyed the polity of the Jews, razed their temple and city to the ground, and carried the inhabitants of it away captive to other lands. We hope to offer a few observations on the paper we re-publish below next week, since we deem it valuable as testimony, ab extra, to the truth of Our Identity.

"THE EARLY BRITISH CHURCH.

"Writers of our national history, if they touch this question at all, dismiss it with but a brief notice. Even ecclesiastical historians and biographical writers begin their narratives with the appearance of St. Augustine in this country at the close of the sixth century, as if all above this period were a blank, and during the six hundred years that preceded there were no traces of a Christian Church in this island. Hence the popular notion that Augustine and his companions were the first that preached the Gospel in Britain, and hence the conclusion is drawn that, as the British Church owed her foundation to, so she was till the time of the Reformation dependent upon, the Church of Rome. This is the snare of the Romanist and the delusion of the ignorant Protestant, and the trap into which the political partizan would inveigle all who are simple and willing enough to be misled by him. The conclusion is as mischievous as it is untrue.

"What England owes to Rome is not that of lighting or re-kindling Christianity in this land, but that of tarnishing its native lustre, gradually corrupting our Church's creed, heathenising her discipline and worship, enslaving her clergy, making merchandise of the souls of her people, turning this kingdom into the principal member of the 'man of sin's' usurped authority and empire. And as she had enslaved all, so causing all to drink deeply and intoxicatingly of the cup of her enchantments. But that there was a regular independent Christian Church, of Apostolic foundation, subsisting for more than five centuries before the Roman Augustine set foot on our shores, or the voice of a spiritual usurper was heard in our churches, for this the evidence is ample and conclusive. Gildas, the earliest Christian writer of this country whose writings have come down to us, says:—'That upon this our frozen isle, while shivering with icy cold of ignorance and heathenism and idolatry, the cheering beams of the true sun—the Sun of Righteousness—shone brightly out, a little before or about (interim) the time of the defeat of Boadicea by the Roman legions." This was in A.D. 61, so that we have here direct testimony to the precise time of the founding of the Church in Britain. Many passages might be given from the early fathers showing that Britain and the British Church were both well known to them. Eusebius, who was Bishop of Cæsarea in 313, speaks of the preaching of the Gospel to the Romans, the Persians, &c., and to those 'called the British Isles.' Tertullian, who flourished about seventy years after St. John, when enumerating the nations in which the religion and rule of Christ was received at that time, refers to Britain among the rest in the following words:—'Those places of Britain into which the Roman arms have not yet been able to penetrate, but which are subject to Christ.' To this century, about A.D. 156, belongs the fact stated in the Welsh Triads—namely, that Lucius, king of Britain, publicly professed the Christian religion, and gave the privilege of country and tribe, with civil and ecclesiastical rights, to all who were Christians. Origen, who lived in the third century, writing in A.D. 230, says: 'When did Britain, before the coming of Christ, consent 'together in the worship of one God? . . . Christ's power is seen in Britain as well as in Mauritania.' In the fourth century, testimonies so multiply that there is some difficulty in making a selection. We may observe that in the year 303 commenced that fiery trial, the last of the ten persecutions, that called the Diocletian, which was the first that stained our soil with the blood of martyrs. Gildas and Bede tell us of the havoc it made in Britain.

"'Then it was,' say they, 'that Britain enjoyed the highest glory by her devoted confession of God, and great was the number of the martyrs.' The names of several are preserved, especially those of Aaron and Julius, who were martyred with great torments in Caerleon-upon-Usk, and that of St. Alban, who suffered upon a hill over against the present St. Albans, which is named after him. This persecution closed with the accession of Constantine to the Empire. 'Now,' says Gildas, and Bede after him, 'the persecuted Christians return from the woods and mountains and dens of the earth, re-establish the faith, build again the demolished churches, erect basilicas of the saints and martyrs, and setting up again in triumph their victorious standards celebrate their sacred rites with clean hands and hearts, and this peace continued in the British churches till the time of the Arian madness, which infected this remote corner of the earth as well as the rest of the Christian world' (Bede, lib. 1, chaps. 7, 8). The Empire being now Christian, general councils were frequent, and British bishops regularly attended those ecclesiastical assemblies, voting in them, and subscribing their decrees and canons. The names of three British bishops—namely, Eborius, Bishop of York; Restitutus, Bishop of London; and Adelphius, Bishop of Caerleon-upon-Usk, with the names of a British presbyter and a deacon, are found appended to the Council of Arles, which was held in the year 314. British bishops were also present at the Council of Sardica, held in 347; at that of Ariminum, in 359, and it is highly probable that there were British bishops present at the Council of Nice in 325. These facts alone, had we no others, are quite conclusive of the existence of a well-organised Christian Church in this island centuries before St. Augustine landed on its shores. The orthodoxy of the Church was witnessed to by several of the Christian Fathers of the time. Throughout the Fifth and Sixth Centuries we have still many evidences of the flourishing condition of the British Church. All matters concerning the Church were settled without any appeal to Rome, by means of councils, at one of which there were present 118 bishops, held in the Sixth Century at the Church of St. David's in Wales, and presided over by St. David. Schools or colleges were founded in some of the dioceses, particularly in the West. In the monastery of Bangor-Iscoid, there were 2,100 members, as we learn from Bede, so that, up to the close of the Sixth Century, we find the British Church holding on among the Saxon heathen, and not till the year 586, as shown by Bishop Stillingfleet, did Theonus, Archbishop of London, and Thadioc, Archbishop of York, quit their dioceses. So that we see that within eleven years of the arrival of the Romish missionaries in this country we have the British bishops and Church among the Saxons, even in the headquarters of their power. In 597 Augustine landed in Kent, and as soon as he gained a firm footing, he wrote to Pope Gregory for instructions, sending him a series of questions, and requesting his answers. The seventh of these questions was, 'How am I to deal with the bishops of Gaul and Britain?' Gregory answered, 'We give you no authority over the bishops of Gaul. . . . But as 'to the bishops of Britain, we commit them all to you, brother, that the ignorant may be taught, the weak strengthened by your word, and the disobedient corrected by your authority' (Bede, b. 1, c. 27). This is the first time, so far as we know, that the voice of ecclesiastical usurpation was heard in this island. The British Church showed herself a truly orthodox Christian Church, and as essentially Protestant as she is at this day, resisting the Pope's anti-Christian pretentions and rejecting his insidious proposals: that the conversion of the Anglo-Saxon settlers and the re-establishment of the Church in the kingdom of the heptarchy were almost owing to her zeal, and not to that of the Roman intruders, who were yet comparatively confined to Kent, and dwindled to insignificance even there; and lastly, that though the Pope's representatives did afterwards, through a sudden turn of royal favour—the result of dark intrigue and subtle Jesuitism—suddenly rush in and make her their prey, and then gradually work her round and imperceptibly draw her into an observance of the canonical usages, still it was not into 'the Roman obedience they could induce her to enter, but into the Communion of the Catholic Church.' It was to the rule of her own primate, not to any authority so alleged of the Bishop of Rome, 'she consented to surrender.' The Pope's name as such is not so much as dimly alluded to in any of those transactions. But it was not till the Norman Conquest that the ancient liberty and purity of the British Church were destroyed; but this was only for a season. In the good Providence of God, the time was coming when once more the Church should be free from the authority of the Bishop of Rome. This was done at the time of the Blessed Reformation. Then the Church once again stood forth 'Bright as the sun, fair as the morn, and terrible as an army with banners.' Not a new Church, but the old Church purified from Romish corruption and usurpation, and she appeared the Scriptural Church that she was when she was planted in this island in A.D. 61, according to our earliest historian, Gildas.

Digitized by Google

(To be continued.)

PROFESSOR SEELEY'S BLIND EVIDENCE THAT "ISRAEL IS DWELLING ALONE."

In The Bradford Observer of Oct. 16, 1885, we have the report of the Annual Meeting of the Salt Schools, Shipley, at which the President, Professor Seeley, delivered an Address of a very remarkable kind. He spoke, as he would naturally do, of the study of history as the one thing needful, and then dilated on the condition of our own nation by reason of its failure to study the history and literature of its neighbours. In doing this he remarked on the fact of British insularity and its consequences, his testimony being distinctly the scriptural one in regard to Israel, that "we dwell alone"—not reckoning ourselves among the nations (Num. xxiii. 9). What he said was this—

"When a nation secluded as England arrived at great wealth and power this narrowness blended with self-satisfaction, and the compound that resulted was of that peculiar character which foreign politicians knew by the name of 'John Bull' (laughter). They thought him very conceited, very self-satisfied, and they were astonished at his ignorance of all the affairs which to them seemed most important. Foreigners could not help admiring our success; yet they did not think we were prosperous simply because we were very wise or very virtuous, for they held to the opinion that we were ignorant. They thought our insularity, which was the cause of our ignorance, was also the principal cause of our prosperity, since it kept off enemies and diminished the difficulties of foreign policy. It was not precisely such narrowness, and ignorance, upon which he would dwell, for if it only concerned the ignorance of the Foreign Office it might be deemed happy; but this insularity had another result, which was too marked. As we had practically no frontier to protect, and at home, at least, no enemy to fear, nothing forced us to think of other nations, and our education did not introduce us to foreign literature. We lived almost as if we were alone in the world. Our American cousins were in a position more insular than we were, but this was compensated to them by the fact that they read more foreign literature—for English literature was foreign to them—than other nations. They at least knew that besides the United States there existed England, but we knew of no other country except our own (laughter). Imagine what a strange individual a man would be if the influences of society were removed from him. Never to compare himself with others; never to inquire what others thought of him. That man could never acquire anything that might be called a character, he would never rank as an individual at all. As a nation we scarcely know and do not care how we were regarded in the societies of other nations—whether we were heartily, yet discriminatingly, admired as in the last century or in the early part of this, or whether we were described as the 'sick old woman,' which was too often the case now. The opinion of foreigners, favourable or unfavourable, did not trouble us. One of the consequences of life in society was self-respect, but as our nation did not live in society (laughter), it cared less than any other nation what appearance it made. Dickens quizzed the American for perpetually repeating, 'How do you like my country?' but we do not trouble ourselves with such curiosity. We supposed ourselves too great. For example, he would point to the enormous indifference with which we could parade our vices. No doubt such extraordinary frankness might have its advantages, but the reason why we so exposed ourselves was because we were not aware of any spectators; we were only aware of ourselves. We conceived it impossible for England to be in danger. Everywhere else the duty to the country and to the fatherland was a most solemn and moral obligation. Where a country was never in danger, where it was immutably safe, loyalty and duty were regarded as fantastic and bookish notions, and as a consequence morality changed its character. Patriotism dropped out of our morality as in no nation since the world began. Our morality meant a devotion to some abstract principle, to some church, or to humanity at large. However we sympathised with Italy and the Italians, or Germany and the Germans, the name of England seemed to have no sacred associations for us. We disposed of it as something for poets or authors to conjure with. We regarded it as being the symbol of an ambitious or warlike policy. Had we really made an improvement in morals by banishing all notions founded on patriotism? At any rate the reform was so sweeping that we ought to make very sure that it was sound. Meanwhile he confessed he looked to see the day come again when one might mention the name of England without provoking a laugh. After all it was not really true that England was an island or that she had no frontier to protect. She had a frontier in Canada, and another in South Africa, if he might not also say that she had a frontier in Afghanistan. In the main he held that it was healthy for a nation to live in society. Like an individual a nation should study its behaviour to its fellows, and for this purpose should listen respectfully and anxiously for their opinion; it should take an interest in their affairs, consider their rights and its own; it should strive to stand well with them, and yet it should assert its own personality in their presence. By this self-knowledge it would acquire self-confidence, and would then secure the confidence of others. It was good for a nation to have a strongly-pronounced national type. In the last century foreigners pronounced the Englishman rough almost to brutality, with no notion whatever of art, hard, lonely-minded, wilful to the verge of madness. On the other hand, we had an individuality, an independence, a directness of speech, a distinctness and tenacity of opinion, which made us seem like a nation of kings, and so Goldsmith, who looked at us as a foreigner, while he blamed our fierce party spirit, could yet grow enthusiastic in the description of us—

Digitized by Google

"'Pride in their port, defiance in their eye,
I see the lords of human kind pass by;
Intent on high designs, a thoughtful band,
By forms unfashion'd, fresh from Nature's hand;
Fierce in their native hardiness of soul,
True to imagined right, above control;
While e'en the peasant boasts these rights to scan,
And learns to venerate himself as man.

And so foreigners thought they understood us. They did not like us altogether; but at any rate they admired us. Even now the old conception of Englishmen was not dead. Now we found ourselves pictured as madmen, but men of self-reliance, tenacity, and individuality. No doubt that great national character stood greatly in need of brightening and refining. It was but a rough sketch; and yet we looked well wearing that character among the nations of Europe. We had a place worth keeping, and it would have been wise to retain the reputation we had, while at the same time we studied to improve it. But with our insular way of proceeding we never gave a thought to the ways of foreigners."

So far the Professor. He says. "We conceived it impossible for England to be in danger," and hence we have no patriotism! The fact is the country is in no danger because we exist under the protection of the Lord God Almighty, the God of Israel, who has defended us by promises which cannot fail. It is true our nation, quâ nation, does not dream of the fact that this immunity is God-given, God-promised; but it has an intuitive consciousness that the matter is so, and the experience of 1,000 years tells them they are right. Hence the callousness the Professor complains of. But as to the lack of patriotism which the Professor remarks upon, does he not recollect the history of the Spanish Armada and the burst of patriotism that invoked? also the threatened invasion of our land by Napoleon in the beginning of the century? what effect, again, was produced when the French Colonels made preparations for the invasion of England twenty five years ago, thereby raising patriotism to the boiling point and giving birth to the Volunteer movement? Professor Seeley has probably never been to the Colonies or to India, or he would scarcely have said that the name of England seemed to have no sacred associations for us. We have no doubt that in all this the Professor spoke unjustly of his countrymen, yet in the main he was correct; for we, being Israel, do indeed "dwell alone," "not reckoning ourselves among the nations," but as something far above them all, which indeed we are, because God says so in Deut. xxviii. 1, 13.

ANOTHER PESSIMIST VIEW.

In the British Protestant, of February, 1886, there appeared a leading article on the subject of "Rome Triumphs." Towards the end of that article the writer expressed his belief that "Party politics will prove to be one of the principal instruments of the overthrow of the Reformation settlement, of the Protestantism of the nation, and consequently of the existence of the British Empire." Further on, the belief is expressed that "the priesthood of Rome in our beloved land, will—in consequence of the craven Act of 1829—ultimately place the throne of England at the feet of Antichrist." These views are pessimist indeed! They condemn the Reformation settlement, the nation's Protestantism, and even the existence of the British Empire to extinction. They declare that the throne of Great Britain will be at last degraded beneath the feet of Antichrist.

So far the result to the nation. But it seems, we are glad to say, that, according to the British Protestant, "there is a remnant of intelligent Christian people yet amongst us who will, by the enabling grace of their God, resist all terms with the Pope of Rome, and whose determination to maintain the cause of Bible truth in Ireland, as in each other constituent of the United Kingdom, will be found to rise triumphant over all the Jesuit schemes of the mystic Babylon, and to tread down the Satanic devices of him who thinks 'to change time and laws' (Dan. vii. 25). We have unshaken confidence" (adds the writer) "in the promises of our God, and we have not forgotten that those faithful promises are addressed not to the many but to the 'little flock.'"

So far the editorial of the British Protestant. We confess we cannot reconcile the first part of the passage we quote with the last. If the Reformation, the Protestantism, the Empire itself, are all doomed to destruction, how can the existence of a faithful few, heirs of the (Abrahamic?) promises, mend the matter? Will they save the Empire, our witnessing function, the Reformation settlement, and the evangelising operations of the British? Will their faithfulness to God prevent the collapse of the British throne under the feet of the coming Antichrist? The Empire and the rest cannot collapse and be destroyed and yet survive! However that may be, we see here what miserable comfort men take to themselves who turn their backs on the Identity; and we see here, too, how inconsistent are their forecasts of the future of our race and Empire.

In regard to the more hopeful aspect of the matter, as described by our contemporary, we fail to read in any portion of God's Word that the promises of God (which are the Abrahamic promises, and not otherwise) are dependent for fulfilment on their acceptation by the faithful few, who, "by God's grace, resist all terms with the Roman pope, and uphold Bible truths in Ireland" and the rest? We find in the Word that "faithful is He who hath promised," and "Faithful is He that calleth you, who also will do it" (Heb. x. 23, 1 Thess. v. 24). The promises depend then on God's faithfulness and not on man's obedience. They are conferred on the promisees while they are unworthy, vile, and aliens—nay, enemies of God (Rom. v. 6—8)

We further dissent from the writer in the British Protestant in respect to those to whom God's faithful promises are addressed. He says they are for "the little flock." We reply, they are for "the chosen many." The words "little flock," of course, are a quotation from our Lord's words in Luke xii. 32, and occur nowhere else in the Scriptures. The context (ver. 22) shows they were addressed to the disciples of the Lord, who were then indeed a "little flock"; but they promised them a kingdom as the Father's gift, which clearly represents, in the latter days, the innumerable multitude of Israel whom no man can measure nor number, become then a nation of saints—"the sons of the living God" (Hosea i. 10). The kingdom of God is not the gift of Christ to a "few." It is His gift to "a nation"—the one which brings forth the fruits of righteousness or of the kingdom, as Matt. xxi. 43 tells us; and the nation of Ephraim is no "little flock," but an enormous, innumerable race, like the sand of the sea and the stars of heaven for multitude! We too have unshaken confidence in the promises of God, and therefore have not forgotten that those faithful promises are addressed to Israel of the Ten Tribes, "God's first-born," who are anything but a "little flock"! Theirs is to be the sovereignty of the whole globe—"the kingdom and dominion and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven"— and therefore, though they were a "little flock" when the Lord addressed those words to His disciples, as stated in Luke xii. 32, we look now, at the end of the age, for our Saviour's fulfilment of His promises, and for the realisation by the descendants of the then "little flock," of the Master's words: "It is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom"; that kingdom which was promised also to "a nation."

Digitized by Google

We cannot then agree with our British Protestant in his melancholy anticipation of the destruction of the British Empire, Church Protestantism, and throne. We do not believe the few but the "many" will be the heirs of the promised kingdom, because for that expectation we have the authority of the Old Testament promises to Israel, and also the New Testament assurance that "many shall be made righteous" by the obedience of Jesus (Rom. v. 19). The new covenant made at Calvary further corroborates our view, since it promises us as the House of Israel, "that we shall all know the Lord, from the least of us to the greatest of us;" a promise as wide as the nation and as far removed from the idea of the "little flock" as it is possible to conceive (Jer. xxxi. 33, 34; Heb. viii. 10—12). Israel, praise ye the Lord!

"THE LORD BOTH OF THE DEAD AND LIVING."

THE Lord Jesus Christ is the Lord both of the dead and of the living. St. Paul, in Rom. xiv. 9, testifies to that! There he said: "To this end Christ both died, and rose, and revived, that He might be Lord both of the dead and living." But our Lord's own testimony, in Luke xx. 37, 38, was, that our Lord Jehovah was the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, being not the God of the dead, but of the living. St. Paul thus clearly gave to our Saviour the Divine honour belonging to the Lord Jehovah, claiming for Him that He is God. In Luke xx. 37 the words, "the dead and the living," had reference to Israel and to the seed of Abraham only. In St. Paul's argument we are not necessitated, we think, to apply the teaching to the "dead and living" in general, but may place a more restricted meaning on the passage; taking the "dead" to mean Israel, and the "living," Judah. Let us examine the matter in this light. To what end did Christ come "to die, to rise, and to revive?" First, as St. Paul declares, to establish His Kingship or Lordship; that is, His kingdom over "both the dead and the living" of His subjects. What is His kingdom? who are Christ's subjects? Christ's kingdom is over the people whose King He is. He was born King of the Jews (Matt. ii. 2). He was born also King of Israel (John i. 40; xii. 13). He came to His own to be their King, but His own received Him not (John i. 12). Rejected by the Jews, He has turned to the other dead and outcast portion of His people (Isa. lxv. 1), those buried in their graves, whose dry bones (unbroken) strew the valley of the vision of Ezek. xxxvii. 1—15), but are destined to rise in due time "an exceeding great army," with the Prince of David for their King; whose kingdom over them will be "an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey Him." The dead of Israel then, the Ten-Tribed House of Joseph, the British nation, these own Christ Jesus as their King; and the living House of Judah, not buried, but exposed (living) to view, these are part of Jesus' kingdom, though now they refuse to submit to Him. Hosea vi. 1, 2, show us that the dead ones of Jesus' kingdom are Ephraim-Israel, destined, at a fixed time and hour, to rise from the dead.

Our own experience shows us that the Jews are the Lord's "ancient" living "people," whose King He also is. "To this end Christ both died, and rose, and revived, that He might be Lord both of the dead" House of Israel "and of the living" House of Judah. To the same effect is Isa. ix. 6—8 (R. V.): "The Lord sent a word into Jacob, and it hath lighted upon Israel" . . . "even Ephraim." What was that word? Ver. 6 tells us! "Unto us"—that is, unto Israel—"a child is born," who is "the Wonderful Counsellor, mighty God, everlasting Father, Prince of Peace," who is the King of Israel, to be seated on the throne of David. "The zeal of the Lord of hosts shall perform this." This was the Redeemer of Israel, the God-Man, who died for His people, rose, and revived, that He might be their Lord, as well as the King of the Jews. Acts x. 36 also teaches us a lesson of the same kind, where "the Word which God sent unto the children of Israel, preaching peace by Jesus Christ (He is Lord of all)," assures us that the Lord Jesus is Lord of Israel as well as Judah, and that He sent His Word to the former that they might preach peace by Him "to all the nations, to all the families, and to all the kindreds of the earth."

The Lordship of the Saviour and Redeemer of Israel, Jesus Christ, is shown by His assumption of the kingdom over the then dead ones, Israel, as well as over the living branch of the Israelitish stock, the Jews; and let us mark, the dead had the priority in Rom. xiv. 9! He died, rose, and revived, that He might be Lord of the dead of Israel first, and then of the then still living House of Judah. Jer. xxxi. 33, 34, and Heb. viii. 10—12, corroborate this teaching, by proving to us that to the House of Israel first, the new covenant will be applied, and afterwards to Judah. The dealings of the Lord with the two Houses are similarly described in Ezek. xxxvii. 14, and xxxvi. 25, 26, respectively; showing that Israel will be baptized with the Holy Spirit after the Identity is declared, but before the return to Palestine; whereas, Judah, or the Jews, will return in unbelief, and will be cleansed by the Holy Spirit after they are settled in the land. Then will the Lord Jesus Christ be Lord not of the dead at all, but of the living ones, even of Israel and Judah, and of all who are joined in fellowship with them.

THE UNITY OF THE EMPIRE.

THE Scotsman of Edinburgh of Dec. 18, 1885, published the following remarkable testimony to the Identity of the British folk with the Lost Ten Tribes:—

SIR JOHN MACDONALD ON THE UNITY OF THE EMPIRE.—Sir John A. Macdonald, Prime Minister of Canada, was yesterday afternoon presented with the freedom and livery of the London Turners' Company, in recognition of "the eminent services rendered by him to the British possessions in North America in promoting their political confederation as the Dominion of Canada, and in successfully accomplishing their physical union by the recent completion of the Canadian Pacific Railway." The ceremony took place in the old Council Chamber, Guildhall, the Master of the Company (Mr. S. G. Bake) presiding. Sir John Macdonald, in replying, said the Canadians considered with pride that they were British subjects, and believed that they had a right to share in the glories of the Empire. While Canadians, they felt they were also Englishmen, and formed a portion of that great monarchy—the greatest the world had ever seen. (Hear, hear) They were proud to be under the shadow of the Monarchy, and to call Queen Victoria their Queen, and believed that the best interests of the provinces composing the Dominion were involved in the perpetual connection of that Dominion with the mother country. (Hear, hear). He was gratified that Englishmen at last recognised that the Dominion might become a source of strength to the Empire rather than a source of weakness. (Hear, hear.) They would in the future be able to share the dangers and run all the perils of war for the sake of perpetuating the integrity of the Empire. (Hear, hear.) Referring to the completion of the Canadian Pacific Railway, Sir John said that should war or an Eastern crisis arise and the Suez Canal be interrupted, as it would be in the case of war, the railway would give England a secure and unassailable military route by which the Northern Pacific seas could be reached, and China and Hong-Kong would be brought within striking distance of Australia, which could come to the succour of the mother country if wanted, and India could also be reached from the Continent. After referring to the agricultural prospects open to settlers in Canada, Sir John said that he looked forward to a more complete federation of Australian and other colonies. In case of war in the future, he believed the mother country would have such assistance that an enemy would have to reckon upon fighting three auxiliary nations as well as England, and that would give alike to the mother country and her several dependencies an assurance of continued peace and a sovereignty of the ocean. (Cheers.)

Digitized by Google

Sir John Macdonald in his observations noticed the British Monarchy as the greatest the world had ever seen (which Israel's was to be). He insisted on the unity or federation of the Empire (which Israel's "nation and company of nations" was to present).

He insisted on federation leading to universal supremacy and the dominion of the sea (which was God's gift to Israel).

(Vide Deut. xxviii. 1 and 13; Numb. xxiv. 7; Jer. xxxiii. 17—26; Luke i. 32, 33; Gen. xlviii. 19, xxxv. 11, xxii. 17; Dan. vii. 22—27; Rom. iv. 13).

Correspondence.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

My dear Sir,—I wrote to you about a year ago about the spread of Our Identity knowledge in this part, and you were good enough to insert my letter in The Banner. This time I am writing on a more speculative subject, and I do not ask you to insert my remarks, as the event may turn out differently to what I expect; but, whether or no, I am anxious that you should be informed about it. This matter is, the increase or decrease of the native Maori race in New Zealand. A few years ago they were obviously diminishing very fast, so fast, that it was commonly thought and said that the present generation might see the last of them; this is still the common opinion in England, and to some extent, out here.

"The nation that will not serve thee shall perish." This is always quoted with reference to Maoris, amongst other disaffected races; and I have often thought it over, and wondered, as I have had to do about so many other facts connected with Our Identity. Of late it has occurred to me, that up to a few years ago, the Maoris were almost perennially at war with us, but now they have submitted, it would be reasonable to expect that the melting away of their race would cease. Accordingly, I addressed our local, resident magistrate, who is also native agent, and received a full and courteous reply, together with printed reports of native agents of the last census in 1881, and their opinion as to the increase or decrease of the native population. Some do not directly answer the question, but on the whole, six of these gentlemen report a decrease, five an increase, slight in some cases, and four are not able to give a decided opinion. It would not interest you, perhaps, to have fuller details, except that the decrease is greater than the increase; and where the decrease is most marked and striking, in the New Plymouth, Taupo, and Wanganui districts, is also where the mass of hostile natives lived. The increase is where the natives have been for years on friendly terms with their European neighbours, and more or less adopted our ways.

So much for His Grace of Canterbury, and "firewater." But the last census took place in 1882, just before or about the time that the then native Minister, John Bryce, more power to him, broke the neck of the native resistance for ever. There was a gathering of 2,000 natives at Parihaka, making speeches, and hinting, rather than threatening, what they would do; Mr. Bryce collected a considerable body of Europeans, over 1,000 I think, in the neighbourhood, and then went himself, with a small escort of civil police, into the Maori camp, and arrested the leaders and sent them to prison, where they remained until they were peaceable. This undignified ending to their valiant speeches has quite sobered them; and the visit of the so-called Maori King, Jawhiao, to England, was clear evidence, that though he did not yet rightly understand his position, yet he no longer played at being an independent king.

Another census will take place next February of the native population; I will send you the result as soon as I have it; but though it may show a total decrease, I feel pretty confident that the increase in the friendly tribes will continue. We have a desperate bad Government in the colony now; two Atheists of the vulgar C. Bradlaugh type, and two Papists; the leader of the Government going about giving "Freethought" lectures. Can we wonder at Colonial depression, surely we are being chastened for our good? Yours very truly,

H. S.

Atheuru, Katikati, New Zealand, January 1, 1886.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

Dear Sir,—The Apocryphal books of the Bible, set aside by the judgment of "authorities," whose fallibility of reasoning seems to be too little realised by others enjoying the privilege of independent thought, probably deserve respectful study, not only for their moral teaching, but for their practical historical value.

The following remarkable assertion—viz., that the Lacedemonians of Greece were Israelites (or Jews?) by the mutual recognition of such racial origin on the part of both peoples will be found recorded in extenso in 1st Book of Maccabees, chap. xii. I regret that I have not an English version of this book to quote from; but the subject is certainly so interesting and important to Anglo-Israelites, that, no doubt, you will verify and inquire into it.

Yours obediently,

D. Stuart.

January 3, 1886.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

Dear Philo-Israel,—Owing to various causes I find it impossible to give as much time as formerly to the work in connection with Our Identity. I hope to be able to act as secretary to the Prayer Union until the end of this year, but should be glad now to hear of some one who would share, with Miss E. M. Rush, the work of secretary to the Free Distribution Fund, leaving me to act as treasurer only. He, or she, would be required to receive applications, and send out literature, and make up the monthly report for the Banner. I shall be glad if you will kindly make this known amongst your readers, and shall be pleased to hear from anyone able and willing to undertake the work. Yours very truly,

Jessie Lawrence.

Upper Teddington.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

Dear Sir,—I think the ethnographical difficulty to the belief in Our Identity, brought forward by a clergyman in your issue of March 3, page 90, who, though almost persuaded of its truth, considers "documental and monumental proof" necessary before he, and many others, can be convinced that the settlers in these islands (if the Lost Ten Tribes) were separated and kept distinct from the other races of Europe, during their passage from the East, could be best met by the following text of Holy Scripture, so often quoted in defence of the statement: "For, lo, I will command, and I will sift the House of Israel amongst all nations, like as corn is sifted in a sieve; yet shall not the least grain fall upon the earth" (Amos ix. 9). Surely this is "documentary" evidence, proving that Israel was to be scattered amongst all nations, yet separated as corn is separated from the chaff, not a grain of which should be lost; which, to pursue the same metaphor, we may reasonably interpret the words "fall to the earth" to mean. Here then is an explanation of what your correspondent styles the "neat way" in which Israel was separated from the Gentiles, with whom they were mingled in Europe, however much they may, in their passage from the East, have seemed to be one with them. I remain, dear Sir,

Very truly yours,

A late Senior Chaplain in Her Majesty's Indian Service.

Baden-Baden.

Erratum.—Page 122, col. 2, line 22, for "Kohi, Kohi" read, "Kati, Kati."

At the Rooms of the Metropolitan Anglo-Israel Association, Palace Chambers, 9, Bridge-street, Westminster, a Paper will be read by the Rev. Edward Denning, M.A., on April 6, at three p.m. Subject, "The Re-appearing of the Ark of the Covenant." The reading will be repeated on April 7, at 7 p.m. Discussion will follow on each occasion.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed: — "Philo-Israel," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

SUBSCRIPTIONS £ s. d.

Annual Subscription for one copy weekly (including the Twelve Double Numbers) post free - 0 7 6
Two Copies (including Double Numbers) - - 0 13 6
Three Copies " " " " - 1 0 4
Four Copies " " " " - 1 5 6
Six Copies " " " " - 1 16 4

Post Office Orders to be made payable at the head office, St. Martin's-le-grand, London, to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C., and W. H. GUEST & Co. 29, Paternoster-row, London.

The Editor cannot undertake to return rejected MSS. unless stamps for the purpose be sent. Parties requiring an answer should enclose a stamp.

Contents Bills and Show Cards may be obtained on application to the Publishers.

Advertisements should be sent to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

Prepaid Advertisements are inserted at the rate of 30 words for 1s. 4d.

METROPOLITAN ANGLO-ISRAEL ASSOCIATION, Palace Chambers, 9, Bridge-st., Westminster. President:
The RIGHT HON. VISCOUNT FOLKESTONE, M.P.

D.V.—On TUESDAY, APRIL 6th, 1886, at THREE p.m., a Paper entitled,

"The Re-appearing of the Ark of the Covenant,"

BY THE

Rev. EDWARD DENNING, M.A.,

Vicar of Laracor, Trim, near Tara, Co. Meath, Ireland,

Will be read in the above Rooms.

On WEDNESDAY, APRIL 7, 1886, at 7 p.m., The same Paper will be read.

The subject is most interesting and instructive, and a discussion will follow the reading on each occasion. As these readings will close the Session 1885-6, it is hoped a large number of members and their friends will kindly attend.

JOSEPH JAS. SHRUBSOLE, Hon. Sec.

PUBLISHED BY ROBT. BANKS & SON,

RACQUET COURT, FLEET STREET, E.C.

WORKS BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

The Geography of the Gates. With Map and six full page, and one double-page, Illustrations, printed on plate paper. 208 pages, in handsome cloth, gilt Price 3s. 6d., post free 3s. 10d.

An Elementary Digest or Sketch of the Chief Facts and Teachings of the Great Pyramid of Egypt. Adapted to the Unlearned and Unscientific. 56 pages, Illustrated with Diagrams, price 4d., post free 5d. 10th Thousand.

The History of the House of Israel; How they were Lost, and How they were Found, Told for the Children. Price 6d., cloth 1s.; post free 7d. and 1s. 1d. Fourth Edition. Eleventh thousand.

Our Identity with the House of Israel. Price 4d. Reprinted from "Clifton Chronicle Letters"

A Resume of the Scriptural Argument, proving the Identity of the British Race with the Lost Ten Tribes. Price 1d.; 6s. per 100. New edition now ready.

Philo-Israel's Leaflets. Four pages Crown 8vo Price 1s. 6d. per 100, postage 2d. No. 1.—"The Identity of the British with Lost Israel." 2.—"The Glory of God." 3.—An Address to British Seamen. 4.—An Address to British Soldiers. No. 5.—The Communion of the Body and Blood of Our Lord Jesus Christ Viewed in the Light of Our Identity. 6.—The Bible and the Jew. 7.—The Jewish People. 8.—Lo-Ammi; or, the Gentilisation of Ten-Tribed Israel. 9.—The Atonement. 10.—Is Our Identity Evangelical, or Non-Evangelical in its Tendency? No. 11.—Cui Bono? No. 12.—The "Thoughts" of God Towards Israel, Judah, and the Gentile Nations. 13.—The Teutonic Theory—Is It True? 14.—An Address to the Police Force of Great Britain. 15.—An Address to Israel's Missionaries and Their Supporters. 16.—The One Seed, Christ. 17.—An Address to Israel's Electors. Price 1s. 6d. per 100.

London: Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street.

EDWARD HINE'S PUBLICATIONS.

FORTY-SEVEN IDENTIFICATIONS, 6d.
COMING GLORIES. 6d.
FLASHES OF LIGHT. 6d.
OXFORD WRONG. 4d.
ANGLO-SAXON RIDDLE. 2d.

Penny extra per post. Above bound in handsome vol., LOST ISRAEL FOUND, 3s. 6d. POST FREE, 3s. 9d.

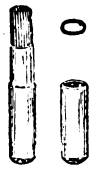
LEAFLET No. 1, 1s. per 100, of ISAAC LOVELAND, Shoreham, Sevenoaks; GUEST, HAYWORTH, & Co., 29, Paternoster Row, E.C.

Printed for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C. PUBLISHED BY GUEST, HAYWORTH, & Co., 29, PATERNOSTER-ROW, WEDNESDAY, MARCH 31, 1886.

[All rights reserved.

A Thousand of the first edition sold in a few weeks for Great Britain, Ireland, Egypt, Natal, India, and America.

ISRAEL'S WORLD:



Origin and Destiny of British Race, Colonies, and Empire; according to Scripture, History, and Signs of Our Times.

BY REV. HENRY ROE.

Price 2d., post free 2½d. R. Banks & Son, Racquet-court

Also by the same Author. "Consecration," 4d.; "Going to Africa," 1s.; "Fernando Po Mission," 1s.; "West African Scenes," 2s. E. Stock, 52, Paternoster-row, London, E.C. Rev. H. Roe, St. Ives, Cornwall.

EXTERMINATION OF ALL CORNS & BUNIONS

Guaranteed by using Gardner's Patented Corn and Bunion Exterminator, an ingenious little instrument which can be used by anyone. Painless in operation—"never fails." Price 1s. The highest Surgical Testimonials can be seen and operations successfully performed in all difficult or peculiar cases, bad nails, &c., at the Patentees', who will send the Exterminator direct for 13 stamps. C. & J. P. GARDNER, Kendal.

£5 REWARD.

GOLDEN PILL OF HEALTH.

The Proprietors of the above well-tried Family Medicine of 60 years standing, have determined to protect the Public—viz., by sending direct to sufferers instead of supplying their Golden Pill of Health through agents, and will pay £5 to any sufferer who does not find relief in the following distressing diseases:—Indigestion, Loss of Appetite, Headache, Dyspepsia, Constipation, Bile, Nervousness, and all diseases arising from sedentary employment or close confinement. The Pills in boxes, post paid, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 3d. Directions and Testimonials accompany each box. None are genuine without the Government stamp. Only Address—

PROFESSOR McPHERSON & Co.,
KIDDERMINSTER.

BAD LEGS.

CLARKSON'S CELEBRATED SPECIFIC.—THE ONLY SURE REMEDY for WOUNDS, SCURVY, &c. Wonderful Cures throughout England. Testimonials sent (many from Ministers) of marvellous cures thought incurable! Case:—Mr. Thos. Shepherd's sister, Fellscliffe, Harrogate, suffered 17 years. She had a very large wound, was twice in hospitals, and discharged incurable. Amputation recommended. Cured in seven weeks. Easy terms.—Address:—Dr. Clarkson, Darley, Ripley, Yorks.

LUNG OWBRIDGE'S LUNG TONIC, TONIC

THE MIGHTY HEALER.
Save Your Lives by Taking
OWBRIDGE'S LUNG TONIC.
It has a power over diseases hitherto unknown in Medicine.
Are you at all Weak-chested, or inclined to be Consumptive, with just a touch of Cough now and then?
"Try this Wonderful Medicine." The Cough and Weakness will disappear as if by magic, and you will feel a strength and power you never had before.
HAVE YOU A COUGH?
A DOSE WILL RELIEVE IT.
HAVE YOU A COLD?
A DOSE AT BEDTIME WILL REMOVE IT.
Bronchitis and Asthma it relieves instantly The Spasms of Coughing so dreadful in Whooping Cough become less with each dose of the medicine. ——
Prepared by W. T. OWBRIDGE, Chemist, Hull,
Sold in bottles 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d. & 11s. by all Chemists and Patent Medicine Vendors. Wholesale all London and Provincial Houses.

GRAND FREE DISTRIBUTION.

5,000 GENUINE FREE PRESENTS, consisting of GOLD and SILVER WATCHES, DIAMOND and RUBY RINGS, SILVER BROOCHES and EARRINGS, REAL SILVER BREAST PINS, elegant Leather and Plush Purses, and thousands of other valuable Presents. Every Purchaser of one of my NOTED GOVERNMENT HEARTHRUGS will receive a free Present, and at the same time may become the fortunate possessor, of a

Lady's Magnificent GOLD WATCH ..... for 2s.
Lady's Beautiful SILVER WATCH ..... for 2s.
Gent's Elegant SILVER WATCH ..... for 2s.
A Beautiful DIAMOND RING (Real Gold) for 2s.
Or one of the above-mentioned Free Gifts.

I am now selling so many of these beautiful Hearthrugs per week that I am enabled to RETURN A BONUS to my numerous customers in the shape of a Free Present.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

I guarantee to place in every 100 Hearthrugs packed up a REAL GOLD WATCH; I guarantee to place in every 100 Hearthrugs packed up a REAL SILVER WATCH for a Lady; I guarantee to place in every 100 Hearthrugs packed up a REAL SILVER WATCH for a gentleman; I guarantee to place in every 100 Hearthrugs packed up a GENUINE DIAMOND RING; and, lastly, I guarantee to place in every Hearthrug packed up a beautiful FREE PRESENT, consisting of an article of Jewellery or other goods.

THIS IS NOT A LOTTERY. Every Purchaser will receive a beautiful Free Present, and at the same time get unexampled value in the shape of a useful Hearthrug 6 ft. long and 3 ft. wide at the wonderful low price of 2s. each.

2/- Government Hearthrugs 2/-

SIX FEET LONG, THREE FEET WIDE.

Thousands Selling. Every Purchaser Delighted.

These Rugs are Six feet long, and Three feet wide—Seventy-two inches by Thirty-six inches. Handsomely blended in six or seven different colours, The designs are exquisite, including Ferns, Oak Leaves, Flowers, Mosaic, various animals, Cats and Kittens, and the latest introduction, the new Tiger design. They are suitable for Drawing-room, Dining-room, Parlour, Bed-room, or Kitchen. Thousands have been sold at 3s. 6d. each. In order that every Householder in the land may possess one of these beautiful Rugs, I will send at 2s. each, two for 3s. 10d., six for 11s.

Be in time. Cut out the coupon below and send at once. All orders are taken in rotation as they arrive per post.

BANNER OF ISRAEL. March 31 1886
FREE PRESENTATION COUPON.
This Coupon entitles every Purchaser of a GOVERNMENT HEARTHRUG, 6 feet long, 3 feet wide, to be considered by me in my GRAND FREE DISTRIBUTION of 5,000 Free Presents.
(Signed) J. WATTS.
113, Brunswick Road, Liverpool.
One Rug, P.O.O. 2s. or 26 stamps, two Rugs, P.O.O. 3s. 10d., or 50 stamps, six Rugs, P.O.O. 11s.

P. O. Orders to be made payable at Low Hill Branch to

J. WATTS,
113, BRUNSWICK ROAD, LIVERPOOL.

Dr. JOSEPH WILD'S WORKS

NEW EDITION JUST PUBLISHED.

THE LOST TEN TRIBES

Price 3s., post free 3s. 2d.

The FUTURE of ISRAEL and JUDAH.

Price 2s., post free 2s. 3d.

The Special Commissioner of the Christian Word, writing of Dr. Wild, says:—"On Sunday evening I had to fight my way into the Congregational Church of which Dr. Wild is the minister. He hails from America, and is quite the sensation of the hour. There was no standing room anywhere, and as I made to the door I met many coming away. However, I had made up my mind to hear the Doctor, and hear him I did. It seems that the subscribers have a door to themselves; I made for it, and luckily found a chair, which I wedged in under the platform. The Doctor prayed, and then we had a sermon about Revelation, containing much that was very effective, if not about his text, at any rate about that mysterious part of Scripture from which the text was taken."

R. BANKS & SON Racquet-court, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

THE BRITISH ISRAELITES;

Or, Evidences of our Hebrew Origin, gathered from History, Genealogy, Philology, and Heathen Customs. To which is added the Scriptural Testimony of Prophecy Compared with Existing Facts, Answers to Objections, and a Lecture on the Great Pyramid.

By LIEUT.-COLONEL H. W. J. SENIOR, 1st Bengal Infantry.

"We can safely recommend it as an excellent guide to the learned and an invaluable mine of wealth to the Anglo-Israelite controversialist. We hope all our readers will secure a copy, and have it often in their hands.—Banner of Israel

With Illustrations, cloth gilt, 178 pp., 3s. 6d. BAGSTER & SONS, Limited, 15, PATERNOSTER ROW, E.C.

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."

(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India.)

"And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the Forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS of the EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4

VOL. X., No. 484. Entered at Stationers' Hall.] WEDNESDAY, APRIL 7, 1886. [DOUBLE NUMBER, TWOPENCE.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
Home Rule for Ireland	133
"The Word of God and Anglo-Israelism." A Review by Surgeon-General J. M. Grant, M.D.	134
Leaven	137
The Preparation of Israel for Her World-wide Missionary Work	138
"Was the Church of Christ Never Hebrew?"	139
A Lecture by the Rev. Robert Douglas, M.A.	140
The Church in Israel. By E. M. Rush	142
Mr Froude's Oceana, and Federation	143
The Early British Church.—Part II.	144
Some Ancient British Laws. By J. Thomson	145
Britain's Greatness. By W. L. Blore	145
The Queen of Ireland	146
Distribution of the British Army	147
Good News from Germany	147
Correspondence	147
Israel's Scripture and Prayer Union	147

HOME RULE FOR IRELAND.

THE question of Home Rule for Ireland is the one which now presses for decision. It blocks the way of all legislation for the United Kingdom, and while we write it is the subject of deliberation by the Cabinet, with the Prime Minister at its head as the responsible originator of a proposal which aims at the disruption of the British Empire. Not that Mr. Gladstone imagines that the grant to Ireland, of a separate Parliament, will lead to the separation of Ireland from Great Britain. We have no doubt he has quite satisfied his own mind that, with proper guarantees and safeguards, he will be quite able to defend the integrity of the Empire, and prevent, what every one else believes will be the result of this "leap in the dark."

What Mr. Gladstone's plans and proposals are no one yet knows, though before these lines are published they will probably be made public. Whatever his scheme is, it is clearly a radical change in the constitution of the country which he is endeavouring to effect. The question arises, whether he has the political power to carry out his designs? He must count, in the first place, on securing a majority in the present House of Commons. If he can secure that, he is sure to find the House of Lords opposed to his attempts; and then will come the expected appeal to the country, when the battle cry at the hustings will be represented by the watchwords, "union" or "separation!"

Even if he can be imagined to have persuaded this country to consent to the surrender of Ireland and its countless interests to the tender mercies of the National League, and of Mr. C. Parnell's followers, there will be the certainty of civil war in Ireland to be faced—a war of Roman Catholic Ireland against the Protestant North. It will be impossible to avoid interference in such a quarrel as that, at our own doors, and then it will surely be seen that it will be more costly to subdue the Roman Catholic population of Ireland then, than to give them at once a firm and strong government in union with the rest of the United Kingdom.

We believe the problem will work itself out more easily and speedily than we perhaps imagine. When Mr. Gladstone shall have announced his plans in dependence on the strength of the eighty-six Parnellite members, and of his own admirers (who would, we believe, rather ruin the Empire than give up their leader), he will find that he will have opposed to him, not only the solid Conservative body who deplore his rash proceedings, but also the large following of Lord Hartington, who has lately declared he will have nothing to do with the separatist proposals of his political leader.

With one result of Mr. Morley's programme we confess we have great sympathy. We much desire that some way could be contrived to rid the British House of Commons of the alien disloyal Irish band, whose presence is only a bar to the business of the Empire. Their only aim and object in appearing in the House is to make legislation impossible, till the British nation, in very despair and disgust, shall be ready to give Ireland over to her disloyal sons as an independent country. That this expulsion will one day take place we believe to be certain; but how it will be brought about we cannot yet perceive. However this may be, we expect the result of Mr. Gladstone's "Home Rule" legislation will be, that it will be doomed to failure. "The chances are very remote that Mr. Gladstone will be sent back to power, in case of a dissolution, with a majority that would carry a Home Rule scheme."

He may try to abolish the House of Lords for failing to support his projects; but he can do nothing but bow to the clearly expressed will of the nation on the subject. That will, unless we read prophecy amiss, will never sanction the rupture of the Empire, and cannot permit the violent separation of a part of the Queen's subjects from allegiance to her throne, without their consent. Rather than this a coalition of moderate Liberals and Conservatives must be formed—and will, we believe take place, which will put Mr. Gladstone's projects in the background, and leave the Empire intact.

This Empire is Israel's, and the nucleus of the Empire is located, by God's own providence, in "the place appointed" for it, even in "the isles afar off," the "isles of the West" (Jer. xxxi. 10; Isa. xxiv. 15). There is no provision in the Word of God for a second dismemberment of Israel, or for a separation in these last days of its Ten-Tribed polity into two distinct nationalities. Whether the grant of an Irish legislature, in separation from the British House of Commons, will not lead to the rupture of the union must be proved by those who desire to make the experiment. The burden of proof lies on them.

Digitized by Google

"Every statesman since the Union, down to December last, has unanimously declared that the effect of the concession of legislative independence to Ireland will be to bring about the separation of the two nations." We cannot satisfy Mr. Parnell, and at the same time safe-guard the Imperial interests and honour of the British people. We believe, therefore, that the separation of the two countries will never take place; that Mr. Gladstone's projects will fail, that legislative independence will not be granted to Ireland in any shape, but that in some way or other which we cannot yet anticipate, the exclusion of the band of disloyal Irishmen from the British Parliament will be carried into effect, to the great relief of our body politic. May that day soon be here!

This is clearly an Identity question, one going to the very root of our national existence, and, therefore, a matter to which the BANNER must perforce pay careful attention. At the same time we may approach it without panic or anxiety, since it is a glorious truth that "the Lord reigneth," and He who keepeth Israel never slumbereth or sleepeth. Israel, therefore, praise ye the Lord (Psa. cxxi. 1, xciii. 1, xcvi. 10).

"THE WORD OF GOD AND ANGLO-ISRAELISM."

A REVIEW BY SURGEON-GENERAL J. M. GRANT, M.D.

The Word of God and Anglo-Israelism: An Argument founded on Scripture. By G. M. G. Bath: Charles H. Seers, 1, Argyle-street. 1885.

THE above is the title of a pamphlet in opposition to our views, which I have only lately seen. It professes to take Scripture as its only guide, and has the following prefatory remark, which shows that its author has fallen into the common error of not studying the subject with which he undertakes to deal. He says, speaking of the Bible, "What is therein written should necessarily first be ascertained; but it may be suspected that this was not the method adopted by the originators of Anglo-Israelism; it would rather seem that having excogitated the theory, and partially satisfied themselves of its truth, they now seek, by a sort of a priori argument, to maintain it by isolated texts as best they may." I will not bandy words about "isolated texts." Those who read the arguments which we draw from Scripture attentively and impartially cannot fail to see that its object is to bring the whole Bible, Old Testament and New, into harmony with the promises which God made to Abraham, and confirmed with the most solemn oath to him and his seed by an everlasting and unchangeable covenant for ever; and that this cannot be done by those who, like the author of the pamphlet before me, assert that these promises are now in abeyance, and have been transferred from the posterity of Abraham to alien races.

The pamphlet is divided into chapters, with a heading to each, that of chapter i. being "The sentence of God pronounced by His holy prophets Isaiah, Hosea, and Amos; the certainty of its existence drawn from analagous instances." These instances are Tyre, Edom, Ammon, and Moab; and it is difficult to understand why this chapter should have been written, because nobody has ever denied that the sentence upon both Houses of Israel has been executed, and is still in course of execution, as they are still outcasts from their land. The chapter opens with the following incomprehensible passage:—"The root of Israel's offence was disloyalty to the divinely-appointed throne of David, the result being that the foundation of the kingdom was laid in, and bound up with, the always-emphasized sin of Jeroboam, who made Israel to sin. Not one of its depraved line of kings could give it up, or risk his throne for God; and the nation fell into a state of shameless idolatry and wickedness." I have called this passage incomprehensible, and so it is to me, because I have always considered that the great offence of Israel was disloyalty to the throne of God in demanding a king when the Lord their God was their King; that after the separation of the nation, the kingdom of David was established in the throne of Rehoboam, not Jeroboam, because before the separation the expression, "the kingdom," was always applied to the Ten Tribes; and we read in 1 Kings xi. 13, that God would not rend away all the kingdom, but would give One Tribe out of the Ten to David, and that it is incorrect to speak of Israel after the separation as one nation, or "the nation," because we learn from Ezek. xxxvii. 22 that the two Houses will not be united and made into one nation till after their return to their own land.

Having delivered himself of this most unscriptural utterance, the author goes on to show, from 2 Kings xvii., that a formal indictment "was framed against Judah and Israel, both nations included, and a general sentence pronounced in the words, "The Lord rejected all the seed of the House of Israel, and cast them out of His sight." This sentence, he says, was final; and "from that time the people of Israel have never appeared in a national character as distinct from Judah." The Scriptural answer to that statement is that long before the separation of the kingdom, the Ten Tribes were known and designated as the House of Joseph, and the One Tribe as the House of Judah; and that although it is quite true that since the separation of the kingdom, Israel, or the House of Joseph, has never appeared in an Israelitish national character as distinct from Judah, it must have developed into two great peoples, the one greater than the other, and become a nation and a company of nations, "the fulness of the Gentiles"—that is, the multitudinousness of, or amongst, the Gentile nations; or the divinely-inspired prophecy of Jacob regarding it in Gen. xlviii. 19, 20, must have failed of accomplishment. It is singular that our author, drawing his inspiration, as he professes to do, from the Word of God, should have left such a very remarkable prophecy as this altogether unnoticed.

The author next proceeds to cite the following passages of Scripture, which he places in italics, and requests his readers to ponder as proving his assertion that the sentence upon Israel was final:—Hosea i. 6, "I will no more have mercy upon them, but I will utterly take them away;" and ver. 9, "For ye are not My people, and I will not be your God." Chap. ii. 6, "I will hedge up thy way with thorns, and make a wall that she shall not find her paths." Chap. iv. 6, 7, "I will reject thee that thou shalt be no priest to Me." "As they increased so they sinned against Me, therefore will I turn their glory into shame." Chap. ix. 11, "As for Ephraim, their glory shall fly away like a bird from the birth, and from the womb, and from the conception. Though they bring up their children, yet will I bereave them that there shall not be a man left; yea, woe also to them when I depart from them."

I need not transcribe more of these quotations. They are all denunciations, as the author affirms, on the House of Israel; and the only question is, when the infliction of them commenced and how long it continued. Strange to say, our opponent gives an answer to this question which is perfectly in accord with our teaching. With regard to the first of them—"I will no more have mercy upon them, but will utterly take them away," &c.—he says, "This amounts to a revocation of the original covenant made with the whole people in Lev. xxvi. 12"—that is, the Mosaic covenant. This is rather an odd way for a reverent student of Scripture to state the case, because

Digitized by Google

God is not represented in the Bible as a revoker of covenants, and it is very certain that the Mosaic covenant continued operative until the coming of Christ, and the Jews remained under it till that time, although Israel had been divorced from it for about 700 years. But let that pass. The point I wish to insist upon is that as the punishment consisted in exclusion from the blessings of the Mosaic covenant, on the showing of our author himself, it could not possibly outlast the duration of that covenant; and accordingly our author is bound to admit, and he does admit, at page 6, that at some future "belonging to a far distant time," it would be said to them, "Ye are the sons of the living God." Now we know that this far distant time was the dawn of the Christian dispensation, because we find the fulfilment of the prophecy in 1 Pet. ii. 9, 10, where the apostle, addressing the same people, in the language of the prophet, which obviously could not refer to any other people, tells them that they are "the people of God."

One more interpretation by this "reverent" student of prophecy I must notice, if only to remark on its daring contradiction of the Word of God. Commenting upon the prophecy of Amos ix. 9, that Israel would be sifted amongst the nations as corn is sifted in a sieve, but that one grain would not fall to the ground or be lost, he says, "In this sifting there are good reasons for believing that many of them, separated like the chaff, have become absorbed among heathen peoples, leaving faint, but clearly recognisable traces of their origin to this day; but the rest, wonderfully preserved according to the Word of God, have been wandering for centuries with the veil upon their heart, "They cannot find the Word of the Lord." The Bible makes no mention of chaff. The sifting of corn in a sieve would, in the ordinary course of things, result in the smaller and less mature grains falling to the ground. The Bible tells us that this did not happen, but that Israel as a whole was wonderfully preserved. Our author, however, finds reasons for believing that only a portion of them was preserved! Surely the man who makes so free with the Word of God cannot consistently say to us, "The Lord God says He will cause to cease the kingdom of Israel: it shall rise no more. Man says, Not so; that same kingdom is at this time strong and flourishing, and boasting a long line of kings! Whether it be right in the sight of God to hearken unto you more than unto God, judge ye" (Acts iv. 19). This censure is altogether unjustified, and the argument is ad captandum, sonorous from its hollowness alone!

If the author intends, as he appears to do, to apply the prophecy of Amos, that the people would wander from sea to sea, and from shore to shore, in search of the word of the Lord, but would not find it, to the Jews, he has read the Bible to very little purpose, because they have never been without the word of the Lord, and they were the custodians of the oracles of God till they rejected Christ (Rom. iii. 1, 2; Matt. xxi. 43). This chapter closes with a statement of the wonderful discovery that the prophecy of Jer. xxxi. 35—37, that Israel shall never cease from being a nation upon which Anglo-Israelites build, applies to the two Houses of Israel! Of course it does. It is evident that Ephraim, or Israel, was not a nation during the time that it was broken, that it was not a people. It is equally clear that the Jews have not been a nation for the last 1,800 years; so that unless Israel exists as a nation before God—that is, necessarily in this dispensation, a Christian nation now—this prophecy of Jeremiah's has failed. This is our contention, and neither G. M. G. nor any other opponent has been able to shake it in the smallest degree.

The next chapter is headed, "Concerning the period during which the sentence of God upon the kingdom of Israel shall continue in force, showing that the promises of favour towards that people are not current during this dispensation; and it begins with what the author, More Hibernico, calls a digression to consider some parts of the prophecy of Daniel, regarding which he says, that the fourth kingdom of the image still continues, because the Roman Empire is continued in the Roman Church! He next informs us that the "times of the Gentiles," during which Jerusalem is to be trodden down, embrace the whole interval between the rise of the head of gold, and the destruction of the image! and regarding Israel, he says, "Once it was a chosen nation, maintained by God for carrying out His mighty plan—the Gentiles being left outside the pale. Now God has appointed a Church (for His unchangeableness does not necessitate the use of the same means), and is visiting the Gentiles to take out a people for His name—Israel, for their sins, being now left out of sight and favour." But the promise of God was, that Israel should be an holy nation, and a kingdom of priests for ever; and regarding their being left out of sight and favour, He says, "In a little wrath I hid My face from thee for a moment; but with everlasting kindness will I have mercy on thee, saith the Lord thy Redeemer" (Isa. liv. 8); and so in many other passages. And regarding Himself He says, "I am the Lord, I change not, therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed;" and again, "I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. This is My name, and this is My memorial to all generations." What Scriptural authority has G. M. G. for saying that Israel is left out of sight and favour for her sins? and how can he venture to contradict such solemn utterances of the Word of God? His assertion, that the unchangeableness of God does not necessitate the use of the same means, is richly Irish! A resolution to effect a particular object by certain specified means, and a subsequent departure from that resolution, does not involve changeableness!! He might as well say, that a man who had entered into a contract with a firm of builders to build him a house, or had plighted his troth to a woman that she should become his wife, and afterwards attained his object by other means, was not changeable, as well as guilty of falsehood and dishonour!

It is one of the common questions of the infidel who, like G. M. G., recognises no Israel except the Jews; "What has become of the promises of your faithful and unchangeable God to His chosen people?" It is a question to which our theologians can give no satisfactory answer; but they would be rash indeed if they were to give that which our author suggests to them! I need not follow him further through his interpretation of Daniel. He evidently considers the stone kingdom the spiritual kingdom of Christ, or as he expresses it, "the power and action of the Son of Man," but he does not tell us how this power and action was set up, "in the days of those kings," long before the Son of Man had been manifested; or if the power of the Son of God be intended, how that which existed from all eternity could have been "set up" at any period of the world's history. No. The stone is evidently a material kingdom, and any attempt to spiritualise it can only land us in absurdity.

The prophecy of Ezek. xx. 33, 38, is next referred to as being, beyond question, intended for the whole House of Israel, because the chapter opens with a review of the early history of the nation. But this is evidently a mistake, because, although "the seed of the House of Jacob" is referred to from ver. 5—26, "the House of Israel" is exclusively addressed from ver. 27—44; and after a full statement had been made of God's purposes towards Israel, the prophet is commanded to address Jerusalem, or the Jews, which he does in the following chapter. It is evident that the Jews have never been brought into a wilderness, and there pleaded with face to face, since their captivity, and that they have not been brought under the bond of the covenant in Christ, which is evidently the covenant referred to. This difficulty is got over by means of an interpretation directly opposed to the whole teaching of Scripture, that Israel shall not be gathered before Judah, but that both will remain scattered and unconverted to Christianity until the end of this dispensation.

Quotations might be multiplied to show the error of this interpretation, but one will suffice, taken from the same prophet, and from the Revised Version of the Bible (Ezek. xi. 15—21), where we read:—"Son of man, thy brethren, even thy brethren, the men of thy kindred, and all the House of Israel, all of them, are they unto whom the inhabitants of Jerusalem have said, Get you far from the Lord; unto us is this land given for a possession: therefore say, Thus saith the Lord God, Whereas I have removed them far off amongst the nations, and whereas I have scattered them amongst the countries, yet will I be to them a sanctuary for a little while in the countries where they are come. Therefore, thus saith the Lord God: I will gather you from the peoples, and assemble you out of the countries where ye have been scattered, and I will give you the land of Israel. . . . But as for them whose heart walketh after the heart of their detestable things and their abominations, I will bring their way upon their own heads, saith the Lord God."

Digitized by Google

I would notice in passing that the expression, "All the House of Israel, all of them," in this passage does not include the Jews. But my chief object in quoting it is to show that there is a distinct promise that Israel would be gathered and kept in sanctuary by God evidently as a Christian people, and during the Christian dispensation, for a little while before their return to Palestine; while the Jews would remain in unbelief. Everybody knows where and in what condition the Jews are; but where and in what condition is Israel? Isa. liv. is next cited, and it is contended that the blessing and rest there promised to Israel are not to be bestowed during this dispensation because, in ver. 11—14, she is addressed as being in a rejected condition. "The afflicted and tossed with tempest, and not comforted" "up to the very time of her final establishment in peace and righteousness." I might here return the taunt about "isolated texts," because if our censorious opponent had read on to the end of the chapter, he would have found that although the nations would rise against Israel in her appointed place of safety, and the smith would continue his calling of forging instruments of war, no weapon formed against her would prosper; and we know, whether he knows or not, that these are not the signs of the millennial dispensation!

We are next introduced to the third chapter of Hosea, which applies to Judah, although our author erroneously applies it to Israel. Judah is to remain in covenant relationship to God, although maintained, as he says, "in a humble way" for many days while the House of Israel is remaining without a king and without the means of worship, after which, the many days of Judah's covenant having expired, the children of Israel will return, and seek the Lord their God (from whom, be it remembered, the Jews had not till then been separated) and David their king in the latter days—that is, that Israel having been long divorced from God, would seek Him, and would be brought again into covenant with Him, and under the sceptre of David their king in the latter days—that is, the Christian dispensation. This is the interpretation that we give to this prophecy; and it is the only one that will harmonise with other parts of Scripture.

Our author next goes on to consider the testimony of the New Testament, into which I will not follow him, because I have treated the subject fully in my pamphlet, "Israel in the New Testament," and because he proceeds on the assumption that when the Jews refused the Gospel the apostles carried it not to the lost sheep, or Gentilised House of Israel, according to their Lord's commandment, but to the heathen: and his premises being erroneous, his deductions are necessarily fallacious.

In the third chapter he says, and nobody will contradict him, that the Jews are the only people that is suffering the calamities predicted by Moses. But the Jews are not a nation; and we are looking for the "great nation" which God promised to make of Abraham in the last days, or the Christian dispensation (Gen. xii. 2, and xlix. 1).

The old stereotyped objection, that there would not be standing room for the millions of the British Empire in Palestine, is brought prominently forward, and the following comment is made upon our explanation that Israel will return by representatives. "To meet this difficulty, it is said, that these prophecies would find a sufficient fulfilment in the return of a few as representatives of the nation. But this will, by no means, satisfy the precise announcements of the prophets. Micah thus declares the will of God: 'I will surely assemble, O Jacob, all of thee: I will gather the remnant of Israel'—that is, all that are left. Jeremiah says: 'Because I am a Father to Israel, and Ephraim is My first-born, I will bring them from the North country and from the coasts of the earth, and with them the blind and the lame, and the woman with child' (ii. 12; xxxi. 8—9)—that is, none shall be left behind, not even those most unfit for the journey. And when Isaiah declares that the outcast and dispersed, both of Israel and Judah, shall be gathered from the four corners of the earth, unprejudiced minds must understand that all are comprised in the remnant; and all gathered from the same dispersed condition. Is it well to put a gloss on such words for the sake of a theory?"

Now to all this I would answer that there has been a great deal of energy uselessly expended to establish a fact which, as far as I know, has never been disputed. I do not remember to have ever before seen these passages referred to. Their meaning is perfectly clear, and they contain predictions of the gathering of the whole House of Israel, and Judah, the Tribes of Jacob, all of them; but I find no mention made of the immediate return of the Tribes to Palestine; and I think that a gloss is put upon the words by those who attach that meaning to them. The gathering of Israel has taken place, as we have already seen; but the gathering of Judah is still future and will take place after they have walked to the House of Israel, as predicted in Jer. iii. 18. Then, at some time after their union, whether long or short is not stated, the two will return together to their own land; and the return will be representative in the case of Israel, as we affirm on the authority of Jer. iii. 14. The passage is clear, and free from all ambiguity; and no amount of glossing can alter its plain and obvious meaning. It is, "Turn, O backsliding children, saith the Lord; for I am married to you; and I will take you, one of a city, and two of a family, and I will bring you to Zion." We observe here again that the Lord is married to Israel, or, in other words, the Ten Tribes are converted to Christianity—"brought under the bond of the covenant," before their return to their own land.

We are also treated to the old absurd objection that the Ten Tribes returned from Babylon with the Jews, because Ezra speaks of "All Israel," and so forth; and at the building of the second temple, sacrifices were offered for the Twelve Tribes; whereas the Jews were the only House of Israel extant in Ezra's time, and were very properly called, "All Israel;" and with regard to sacrifices, Elijah offered sacrifice for the Twelve Tribes on Carmel; but it will hardly be contended that they were present there; and on Good Fridays, we pray for all Jews, Turks, Infidels, and Heretics, but none but a madman would say that all the Jews and Turks in the world are present in England at these recurring periods! The statement that Israel and Judah returned together is opposed to the Bible, especially the Book of Ezra, as well as to history; and if it could be made good, a wet pen might be drawn through all the prophetic writings.

The teaching of the Bible is that Israel's mission in the world was destined in the unchangeable counsels of Jehovah to be that of a kingdom of priests, proclaiming His salvation in Christ "in the last days" (Gen. xlix. 1; Numb. xxiv., 14—17), or the Christian dispensation, and that their training in Egypt, the Wilderness, and Canaan, was intended to fit them for that work; and if we say that the whole nation has rejected Christ, it follows that God must have changed His purpose regarding them, or failed to accomplish it; an alternative supposition of which we make a present to those who preach that doctrine, but refuse to entertain for ourselves!

Digitized by Google

The fourth and concluding chapter is a kind of homily, constructed upon a parcel of paraphrased and misapplied texts; and may be edifying to those who like that sort of thing. It ends with the usual personality which, at this time of day, may be the best met with contemptuous silence, that Anglo-Israelite teaching is carnal, and has a dangerous tendency to foster self-esteem!!

LEAVEN.

With two or three exceptions the Scriptures represent leaven as a corrupting, defiling thing, unfit and unworthy to be put upon the altar of sacrifice, where nothing under the Mosaic system could be offered to the Lord with leaven—"Thou shalt not offer the blood of My sacrifice with leaven" (Exod. xxxiv. 25). "Take the meat offering that remaineth of the offerings of the Lord made by fire, and eat it without leaven beside the altar." In the New Testament the word is used invariably in a bad sense. Thus, in Matt. xvi. 6, the warning is, "Beware of the leaven of the Pharisees and Sadducees." Again, "A little leaven leaveneth the whole lump"; "Purge out, therefore, the old leaven." "Let us keep the feast, not with the old leaven, neither with the leaven of malice and wickedness, but with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth" (1 Cor. v. 7—8).

In connection with the Passover, the command was very strict —"Whosoever eateth leavened bread from the first day until the seventh day, that soul shall be cut off from Israel" (Exod. xii. 15). While the command in Levit. ii. 11, was express and precise: "No meat offering that ye shall bring unto the Lord shall be made with leaven: for ye shall burn no leaven, nor any honey, in any offering of the Lord made by fire."

Clearly understanding the general character of the precepts relating to leaven, we may notice the three exceptions in the Scriptures when the leavened bread was mentioned, and apparently with approval. The passages are, Levit. vii. 13, xxiii. 17, and Amos iv. 5. These refer to offerings of thanksgiving, or of first fruits to the Lord, to be partaken of by the priests or the offerers, but not laid upon the altar of burnt sacrifice to the Lord, because with none of the offerings on the altar was any leaven, or honey, or other corrupting substance allowed to be offered. The passage in Amos iv. 5 referred to the same.

The leavened bread was permitted as part of a thanksgiving, and the same was to be eaten by those who presented it, with their invited guests. Such being the case, we may now approach the consideration of the parable of the Lord, wherein He likened the kingdom of heaven—the Church and State of Israel in union—to leaven; leaven which a woman took—a woman, the Scriptural type of a Church or ecclesiastical body—and hid it after the manner of the baker, in three measures of meal. The meal was pure and untainted till this woman surreptitiously hid the contaminating leaven, the evil principle in the heart of the Kingdom of God—the Church and State united among Israel—the British people.

What was the result? The tainting thing began to "work," as the bakers describe the process. The taint spread, the leaven began to spread its influence from the centre of the mass to the surface, and affected all. If left to itself, the leaven of the bakehouse would so "work" that it would taint, corrupt, and spoil the whole of the dough, and make it unfit for food. The baker wisely watches it, and when the tainting process has gone far enough, he kills the leaven by placing the mass in the oven. The heat destroys the evil, but leaves untouched the good which the leaven, after all, was intended to do to the bread. To the leaven in the kingdom of God, His Church and State, the evil, corrupt, Antichristian, Romanizing principle, which the mother of harlots has succeeded in "hiding" in Israel's body politic, being "lawlessness," or hatred of God and of His Christ, has been "working" for hundreds of years in "the kingdom of God" upon earth, and at last its effects are apparent. The whole is leavened.

"The enemy has come in like a flood." Now is the moment when the master's skill will come into play. As the baker kills the action of the leaven by the heat of the oven, so the fire of the Spirit of God converting, purifying, renewing, and regenerating the body politic of Israel's Church and State will soon come into operation. He will lift up a standard against the intruding enemy, and so destroy and expel him. The Lord will put His laws in the minds of His people, and write them in their hearts. They shall henceforth all know Him, from the least of them to the greatest of them, and their sins and iniquities He will remember no more (Heb. viii. 10—11). But it may be objected that the parable in Matt. xiii. 33, merely declares that the kingdom of God is like leaven, that its operation in gradually permeating the whole of Israel's body politic will be secret and insidious, and that the parable predicts a good thing, but not a calamitous and evil thing as about to happen to God's Church and people. This is a view which, of course, has much to recommend it; but it is not supported by the bulk of the other parables in Matt. xiii. The first regarding the sower, tells of confusion and failure in the sower's operation. Only one effort was successful; three were utter failures (ver. 3 to 23). The parable of the good seed sown, and of the tares, is the very picture of only a very partial success for the sower, but of the enemy's victory for the time, in marring the object of the former (ver. 24—43). The good seed and the tares grew up together till the harvest, and so the meal and the leaven remained in union till the moment when the application of heat would stop the "working" of the leaven. In ver. 47—50, the parable of the net cast into the sea, teaches the same lesson of the mingling of the good and bad, and their final severance only when the end comes. We therefore incline to the belief that the leaven of ver. 33 indicates the introduction into God's kingdom, the Church and State of Israel, of a disturbing, tainting, defiling element, which increases in its influence, and would utterly deprave and destroy the whole of God's work and kingdom, unless a limit were put upon the working of the evil leaven.

This limit can only be attained by the Divine operations of the Spirit of God poured out upon the body politic of Israel; answering to the "Standard of the Lord lifted up" against the "enemy already come in like a flood" (Isa. lix. 19). "The kingdom of God" is, therefore, human in its constitution, as indicated in Scripture. It is the Church and State of Israel in union; and both, it is clear, are accessible to Satan, and as experience tells us, capable of defilement by his efforts in every part.

But blessed be God, every parable teaches the same lesson—that the time will at last arrive when the leaven shall be destroyed; the tares shall be gathered and burned; the bad fish collected and "cast away"; and the unfruitful seed forgotten in the abundant harvest secured by that sown on the good ground. The knowledge of this fact is necessary to those who would understand God's purposes towards Israel, and would not mistake His dealings with His people. He means to bless Israel at the last, but He permits during this time of Israel's probation, and in order to enhance His glory, by their salvation, that Satan should sow the tares; that the woman should hide the leaven; that the bad fish should enter the draw net with the good; but the result of all will be God's glory. Israel, praise ye the Lord!

The New Part of Israel's Hope and Destiny is now ready. The contents will be found advertised on our last page. We notice the Editor publishes an article giving his reasons for inserting the contribution of Mr. Pitt on "The Mark of the Beast."

Digitized by Google

THE PREPARATION OF ISRAEL FOR HER WORLD-WIDE MISSIONARY WORK.

In our two articles on "Identity Difficulties Answered," with reference to the cui bono? opposition to our views, published on pp. 78 and 91 of the Banner, we showed how God had prepared our own race for their world-wide Missionary operations in the present day, such work being that for which God had expressly "created," "made," and "formed" this nation from the times of Abraham, our forefather, right down to the present hour (Gen. xxii. 17—18; Isa. xliii. 21; xxvii. 6). We showed that God selected the race, and then educated and built it up in the only way in which, humanly speaking and without a continual miracle, they might fulfil the function for which He designed them—namely, to act as the promulgators of the good news of Christ's salvation by the sacrifice of Himself upon the Cross for the sins of guilty man, among all nations, families, and kindreds of the earth. To effect this object He made them a great and mighty nation, multitudinous to an abnormal degree, wealthy, supreme at sea, the owners of the Gates, the possessors of a wonderful Heathen and Colonial Empire, a Nation and a Company of Federated Nations, lovers of the souls of sinful men, missionaries to the heathen, owners of the Book of God, respecters of the Sabbath, and of the decalogue, a people fired with the desire to preach the Gospel to all the nations, to all the families, and to all the kindreds of the earth, and doing it. We pointed out also that the purposes of God could not (without a standing miracle) be effected by any other means than those the British nation, endowed as it is, offered for the object in view; and this race we showed was in every respect the fac-simile of the Israelitish Nation, to whom God in His Word declared He would exclusively entrust the mighty work for which He created them—namely, the evangelization of all the occupants of the Globe. We little thought when we penned those articles, that a blind unconscious witness would be raised up in Scotland to corroborate every word we published, and that "The Free Church of Scotland Monthly," of March 1, 1886, would contain an article by the Rev. J. H. Thomson, of Hightae, wherein, discoursing of the "Encouragements to Foreign Mission Work, Peculiar to the Times in which we Live," the author would endorse our views and thus blindly prove our Israelitish origin. The writer, it is true, joins with us the German Protestants, as those on whom God's blessing has descended on account of their missionary work among the heathen. But we fail to find that Protestant Germany does missionary work for Christ which can be called world-wide in any sense, and we are sure that of the blessings which God has bestowed upon the British, as Israel, the Germans have not one. Their wealth is nil; they have no Heathen or Colonial Empire; they have no sea power, no Gates; they love not God's Word, His Sabbath, or His laws; they are not a "Nation and a Company of Nations," and their missionary zeal is not comparable with ours. They have large numbers, but their multiplying faculty is greatly less than ours. With this exception the article in question, which we transfer to our pages, is worthy of our readers' attention, and we hope they will read it carefully. It is as follows:—

5. God has been blessing the nations whose people in recent times have taken an interest in foreign mission labours. The prosperity of Great Britain and America, and of Protestant Germany, is something altogether unparalleled in the history of nations. They have increased in wealth, in numbers, in position, far more than any other nation. This is especially true of the Protestant population of these three countries. While the Roman Catholic population of the English-speaking world has doubled since the beginning of the century, the Protestant population is five times greater. The exports and imports have risen from £108,000,000 in 1836, to £732,000,000 in 1883—nearly a sevenfold increase in fifty years. The annual income of the inhabitants of Great Britain and Ireland, is computed by reliable statisticians to be £1,000,000,000. Although our statesmen of both schools of politics for the last fifty years have been far from favourable to plans for extending British dominion, yet in spite of their aims and policy it has more than doubled, since the Queen ascended the throne. The wealth and the territory of the United States have increased in the same proportions with our own, while their population is ten times greater than it was eighty years ago. Protestant Germany has risen from being merely a number of petty isolated states, that Romanism often made to thwart one another, into a united empire, whose statesmen very much give the law to Europe. There can be no question then that God has been prospering the nations whose Christian people have in recent times been aiming at the conversion of the heathen to Christ. They have the means of giving, and they have an influence in the world such as no other nations possess. Protestantism is no longer a power struggling for existence, but it has taken by far the foremost place among the nations.

6. The knowledge God has given us of the powers that have been slumbering in His works during past ages. Two centuries ago men knew little or nothing of the powers slumbering in the divine works. The coal, the water, the iron, the copper, the zinc, were all in existence, but the powers that lay sleeping in their embrace were unknown. But within this century of missionary effort God has been revealing the powers in these works. It is instructive to take up the "Encyclopedia Britannica" of a century ago in its first edition, and read its article Chemistry, and compare it with the like article in the edition issuing in our day. As a specimen, it is said that of the substances incapable of being resolved into others, the principal are earth, water, air, and fire. The word "steam" does not occur in the volumes. But as compared with a century ago, we are now in a new world. The discoveries of the last hundred years have disclosed to us powers lying hidden in God's works that give us facilities for going over the earth, fully equipped for mission labour, such as our fathers a century ago could hardly have dreamed to be within the bounds of possibility. Steam, and electricity, and iron, and coal have disclosed powers that make the Christian missionary to the heathen to-day an immensely superior person to what he could have been a century ago. It must not be forgotten that these powers, slumbering in God's works, have mainly been discovered by our Protestant nations. Great Britain and the United States have been largely the homes of discovery and invention. Now, why has God given us this knowledge of the powers slumbering in His works? Has it been merely to make Great Britain and the United States the workshop of the world? Has it been merely to add to our material comforts? Has it been merely to make our geography more correct, that we may visit more easily and more safely distant lands? No. We may be certain that He in whose hand our breath is, and in whom are all our ways, has had higher ends in view. The Father's promise to the Son is—"I shall give thee the heathen for Thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for Thy possession." And He has been revealing to us the powers in His works to qualify us to be instruments to bring about the fulfilment of this promise. There is a remarkable passage in Psalm cxi., highly instructive on this matter. The psalmist is speaking of the divine works, and he says, "The works of the Lord are great . . . He hath made His wonderful works to be remembered . . . He hath showed His people the power of His works, that He may give them the heritage of the heathen."

7. But contemporary with the discovery of the powers slumbering in God's works, a change has been coming over the chief seats of heathenism and Mahommedanism. A century ago, by a strange infatuation of our rulers, India was closed against our missionaries, and it was in Serampore, which then belonged to Denmark, that Carey and Marshman and Ward began their work. But India is now open from Cape Cormorin to the Himalayas, and its people were never so accessible and so disposed to listen to an Englishman as they are now. Japan, a few years ago, was hermetically sealed to Great Britain; but now it is open and sending its students to our colleges, and its rulers and people are full of eagerness to fall in with English ways. And even China, that has had so much in the opium traffic, fostered and protected by this country, to make it hostile to English Christianity, is open to the Protestant missionary, and would seem to be turning a friendly look to Great Britain. Africa has at last been opened, and its great rivers have been found to be highways that lead us into centres teeming with population. Mohammedanism is no longer the terror of the civilised world. Its chief centres of population are under English rule, while Turkey is the sick man of Europe, whose dissolution cannot be far distant. Its obligations to Great Britain have for years back required it to throw open its territories to English-speaking Protestant missionaries. The heathen and Mohammedan world is thus, as it were opening its gates for the reception of evangelical Protestantism as it never has done before.

Digitized by Google

So far the Rev. Mr. Thomson. We would merely add that the writer seems to reverse the proper order of things in the above. He believes that God has honoured the Protestant Nations, because they have attended to the evangelisation of the world. Because they have evangelised the heathen, therefore as a reward, God has blessed them. We believe there is no truth in the view. We cannot so purchase God's blessings promised by Him "to Abraham and his seed for ever!" The truth is God has blessed "The after seed of Abraham" as He promised, and therefore they are—1st. His Protestants or Witnesses (Isa. xliii. 10—12; xliv. 8); and 2nd. His Messengers or Evangelists to the Nations (Isa. xxvii. 6). God's blessings cannot be bought by the merits of sinful men. They are fully bestowed and purchased for His people by the Lord Jesus Christ; and He gives them, according to the prophecies, to His chosen ones, His heritage, even Israel. And therefore should we, being Israel, praise the Lord.

"WAS THE CHURCH OF CHRIST NEVER HEBREW?"

THE clerical opponent, whose words we quoted at page 51, stated, as will be seen, that "the Church of Christ was never Hebrew," and he made that observation in reference to our remark on page 22, col. 2, "that our Lord's last command to His Hebrew infant Church was to prosecute foreign missions." Our clerical opponent denies the fact that the command was given to "a Hebrew infant Church," because of the text which stands on record in Gal. iii. 28—namely, that in Christ Jesus "there is neither Jew nor Greek." This is the clerical logic as it bears on this passage, and on such an interpretation we are asked to conclude that the apostles and disciples to whom the Lord Jesus addressed the words recorded in Matt. xxviii. 19, 20; Mark xvi. 15; Luke xxiv. 47; Acts i. 8: "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature," were not Hebrew apostles and disciples at all, but persons of no nationality, because "in Christ Jesus there is neither Jew nor Greek." The statement seems too ludicrous for serious argument; but it is needful to meet and to rebut every objection, however futile, because where one educated clergyman is found holding such views as those stated, there may be hundreds of others not so well educated or so well versed in God's Word, ready to adopt like erroneous ideas, and on the strength of them, eager to refuse even the consideration of our pleas in favour of Our Identity.

To begin with: if Gal. iii. 28 is a sufficient argument to oppose Our Identity, because in Christ Jesus there "is neither Jew nor Greek," it must be equally true that in the infant Church which our Lord addressed, "there were neither bond nor free, neither male nor female," because "all were one in Christ Jesus." Will our opponent accept the argument and the conclusion as we have now brought them home to him?

If Peter, James, and John, and the rest of the apostles and men of Galilee who saw the Lord ascend, were not Hebrews, because of Gal. iii. 28, it is clear they were not men and women, for the same reason! What were they then? The objection is absurd and unworthy of a clergyman to advance.

The infant Church to whom the Lord gave the evangelical commission to prosecute foreign missions was composed of men who were Hebrews by birth, and not Gentiles at all, since the door of Gospel grace was not then opened to them by the mercy of God. It was not till eight years had elapsed after the ascension that the Gentiles were admitted into the Church of Christ along with the Hebrew converts by the baptism of the Holy Ghost (Acts x. 1—48). It is vain, therefore, to deny that the infant Church of our Lord was in fact a Hebrew Church, and our clerical opponent, in declaring that "the Church of Christ was never Hebrew," was advancing that for which there is no kind of support, no scintilla of evidence, in the Word of God. He was making a rash and random statement which is contradicted by the history of the period and by the distinct statements of the Gospels themselves. The subsequent records of the infant Church after our Lord had passed into the heavens, will not further bear out the opponent's view. When the circumcision had to be reached, who was their appointed instructor? Peter, a Jew of Galilee, the apostle of the circumcision (Gal. ii. 7). When the Gospel had to be preached to the uncircumcision, by whose hands did God send the message to them? By those of Paul of Tarsus, a man of the Tribe of Benjamin of Israel (Gal. ii. 7, Rom. xi. 1). Whom did the Lord appoint to "Go into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature?" It was the Hebrew "eleven" who had been ever with Him, and those were Hebrews to a man, and constituted His infant Church. Where was the Church of Christ earliest established among the nations? and where did it become incorporated first with any State? In these "isles of the West," where Israel was located in A.D. 61, and there in the second century, that Church became first the Church in England and then at last the Church of England; a Hebrew Church established in a Hebrew state, "the kingdom of God," in fact, once the portion of the Jews, but then transferred to Ephraim under the direct sentence of the Lord, as promulgated in Matt. xxi. 43, and addressed to the Jews of His day.

The fact is, our clerical opponent has confounded things that differ. In Christ Jesus no doubt "there is neither Jew nor Greek, bond nor free, male nor female." All without exception of all climes and colours, of all times and places, are welcome to Him, if they will but accept His spiritual gifts and receive His everlasting salvation through the blood. But the same Christ Jesus stands as a "Minister of the circumcision for the truth of God," and He came "to confirm," but never to cancel the promises of God made to the fathers, who were the Hebrew fathers, but not otherwise (Rom. xv. 8). He came to bring joy and gladness first to His Hebrew people. "The children must first be filled," and then the Gentiles will be privileged to "rejoice with His people" (Rom. xv. 10). "The children" who are Israel "must first be filled;" because "it is not meet to take the children's bread and cast it unto the dogs" (Mark vii. 27). The dogs may take the children's crumbs under the table, but the repast is served for the latter first. Our clerical opponent would banish the children from the table and serve the dogs first with the dainties and bounties provided by the Master for His own chosen ones! This is not the Lord's plan! "You only have I known of all the families of the earth," was God's message to the Twelve Tribes in Amos iii. 2. "He showeth His words unto Jacob, His statutes and His judgments unto Israel. He hath not dealt so with any nation," is the unalterable law of Jehovah Jesus (Psa. cxlvii. 19, 20). "I am Jehovah: I change not. Therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed," is the determination of the Lord, as recorded in Mal. iii. 6.

We say then, taking a wide survey of the whole case, that the Church of Christ at first was an infant Hebrew Church, and its constitution has never changed at all from that day to this. It is a Hebrew Church still at this hour, and every unit added to it from the non-Israelite Gentile races, has become an adopted son of Abraham by faith, an Israelite by ingrafting, "Abraham's seed truly, and heirs according to the promise" (Gal. iii. 29), in a real but spiritual sense, while the flesh and blood racial stock remains as always the mass and nucleus of the Church of Christ.

Digitized by Google

A LECTURE BY THE REV. ROBERT DOUGLAS, M.A.,

(Vicar of Kidsgrove, Stoke-on-Trent).

WE take the following report of a most excellent lecture from The Skegness Herald of February 26th, 1886:—

THE LOST TEN TRIBES OF ISRAEL.

On Tuesday evening last, the Rev. Robert Douglas, of Stoke-on-Trent, delivered a lecture in the Pavilion, Pleasure Gardens, Skegness, the subject being "Ephraim-England: four witnesses to our Israelitish origin." The Rev. F. Baldwin, rector of Skegness, presided, and there was a large attendance. Prayer having been offered,

The Chairman said the subject of the lecture that evening was one which he had not gone deeply into, and, therefore, he was a learner as much as anyone else. He felt sure they would be exceedingly interested in what they would hear. (Hear, hear.)

The Lecturer, after a few prefatory remarks, said one of the wise sayings of all time was "Know thyself," and this our day was a time when England should especially seek to know itself, in order that it might know that God was the true God. In the present day, all classes were interested in what was going on in the world. All read newspapers, and he was sure they must be very much struck with this phase in the life of this century how the principle of nationality was asserting itself. They had seen Italy united by Victor Immanuel, Germany through the policy of Bismarck, and they saw the same tendency to solve nationality pioneered by Russia and Austria, and we had not yet done with the claims of Ireland and the Irish. He thought that these things had a providential meaning; that was, that God overruled the thoughts of men in order to follow His own purpose. He thought the great outcome of this strong tendency to return to the old spirit of nationality was the revival of Israel as a nation; to restore the Holy Land to the people to whom God gave it for an everlasting possession. If a people had ever a right to territory, Israel had a right, and a divine right, to Palestine, and that from the Nile to the Euphrates, for such were the covenant limits of the land never historically realised in Old Testament times, but to be realised when Israel should attain its final glory as a nation in Christian times. Now came the question, "Who were the Israelites?" He would not discuss the question of the ethnography of the modern Jews, for, as a very eminent critic points out, the ethnographical signification of the term Jew was extremely debatable, and those people who were called Jews were more professors of religion than a race; in fact, they did not represent a race at all. As was shown by the book of Esther, and also the history of the Jews by Josephus, the Jews had been incorporated with other nationalities, and were more of a circumcised religion than a race. Then supposing they represented Judah, and were in that sense rationally and strictly Jews, they must remember that, according to the clearest possible statements in God's Word, the heir of Abraham, the Israel of God, was not Jewish. In support of this theory he quoted Genesis xlviii., which, he said, was one of the most remarkable chapters in the Bible, and the authenticity of it had never been questioned. Jacob, that was Israel, died, and, like other patriarchs, before his death he made a kind of will, not merely in the form of a human legal document, but by the inspiration of God he transmitted to those who were to come after him the blessings of the covenant. What did he do? Did he call for Judah? No. Did he call for the Tribes in the first place? No; he called for Joseph and his two sons, Ephraim and Manasseh, and the two latter he adopted as the first-born, and transferred to them the Abrahamic covenant blessing—the blessing that Abraham gave Isaac, and which God had given to him. They were not to receive this blessing as circumcised; Abraham himself was not circumcised, and in that sense a Jew, when he received that blessing. St. Paul was very strong on this point, for he said, "How then was the inheritance or the promise given to Abraham?" Not in circumcision, but in uncircumcision. The old patriarch, crossing his hands, laid his right hand on the head of Ephraim and his left on that of Manasseh. To the former he said: "Thou shalt become a multitude of nations." This reference to the fulness of nations in Scripture was the Israel of God, Ephraim-Israel, that was to be blessed. Now, it was admitted by the Jews themselves that they were not Ephraim; that they were not the Ten Tribes: they know that Ephraim was at the head of the Ten Tribes, and in the Old Testament Scripture the word Ephraim was used to denote the whole Ten Tribes, because Ephraim was the head of Israel in that sense. He referred to Chron. xv., and Jer. xxxi., in support of his argument, and to the fact that for more than a hundred years Israel had been lost to human eyes after the Assyrian captivity. There never had been any amalgamation of Ephraim and Judah. In the days of Hezekiah, the Israelites spurned the idea of any union with Judah, and since their departure from Judea in the time of Jeroboam, there had been no union between Israel and Judah. Israel remained perfectly distinct, and there was not a hint of any return from the Assyrian captivity. The only return, and that a very partial one, was that of forty-two thousand from the Chaldean-Babylonish captivity. The Ten Tribes of Israel were certainly now in existence, and the only question was, What people represented them? Israel must be found, because it was the heir of the world. Israel was to possess the land of the covenant from the Nile to the Euphrates, which was the grand centre of the world-wide empire, an empire on which the sun shall never set. They therefore saw what an important question this was. It was not merely a question of amusement or entertainment; it was a question in the answer to which lay the solution of history, and the solution of those tremendous problems which confront the age in which our lot was cast. He should not pretend, in the time allotted to this lecture, to give them anything like an exhaustive analysis even of the evidence that he could adduce to prove that the British race was Ephraim-Israel. He would classify the evidence under four divisions—first to prove Our Identity with Ephraim-Israel, that was that Lost Israel must be found, if the Word of God was ever to be fulfilled and the world to be governed according to prophecy. This Israel, he would not say, must be found, but that it must be now in existence and playing a leading part in the politics of the world. From historical observation, we might conclude that our Israelitish origin was possible, and then, bringing the light of reason to the aid of history, we might conclude that it was probable. Take another standpoint, that of the Bible, and there they would find that providence and prophecy had coincided, that prophecy was history anticipated, and history was prophecy fulfilled. From this standpoint our Israelitish origin was certain.

In the next place, take the standpoint of utility, of what was required in the age in which we lived, and if we looked at the Church, or at the State, we had a fourth witness to the truth of our Israelitish origin. He would say a few words on each of these four heads. First of all was the historical possibility, next the philosophical probability, then the Scriptural certainty, and, lastly, the practical utility of our Israelitish origin.

Look at the broad facts of our history and the history of Israel. Our authority was first the Bible—Old Testament history, but this did not pretend to give us the history of Israel as a race. The Bible simply spoke of Israel as being under the Mosaic law, and as living in the land of Palestine. But the history of Israel as a race was not so circumscribed. Palestine, a country about one third larger than Wales, could not possibly contain all Israel as a race in the days of David when they had one million five hundred thousand fighting men; and as a nation had twelve or fifteen millions population.

Digitized by Google

Such a race could not possibly be cribbed and confined in the narrow limits of Palestine; and it was never intended to be so. Hence they saw Solomon engaged in commerce and trading with the Tarshish of Scripture, which was Britain. In a classical sense Tarshish meant the extreme West, including Spain. Solomon traded all over the world, just for the same reason that we had found it necessary to trade because of our increasing population. There was an unwritten history of Israel as a race in contrast and distinction with Israel as living in Palestine under the Mosaic law. Perhaps the most striking fact to be found in the Bible, in regard to the history of Israel, was that the prophets Isaiah and Jeremiah spoke of that nation in the latter days as to be looked for in the isles afar off. These words were exactly the words in which an Hebrew would have described the British Islands, as the isles afar off. In 2 Esdras xiii., in the Apocrypha, reference was made to a certain section of the Ten Tribes, and to what they did, and that after they had been carried across the Euphrates, they took counsel together and decided to leave the multitude of the heathen where they were. As soon as God had used Assyria to accomplish His chastisement of Israel in Palestine, the power of Assyria itself was broken. Some eleven years after the departure of the tribes under Hosea, the Medes, a people living in the very place where a portion of Israel was carried captive, raised an insurrection against the Assyrians, and Herodotus, the father of history, our only possible authority on such a question, told us that in consequence of this, the tribes and nations in that part of the world obtained the blessing of self-government. This was before the spirit of the people was broken, and before they lost the instincts of nationality. He also told us that they left the heathen, crossed the Euphrates, and travelled Westward for eighteen months. Where a whole nation moved together they moved very rapidly, but we had no instance of it in these days because circumstances had changed. It was very probable that these were the Cimri, and on comparing them with the British tribes in the old chronicles of Britain they would find that it exactly agreed, sometimes in the very words in the description, so that he could not help thinking but that this was the first national movement. There were, he believed, Israelitish settlements in the days of Solomon, and we must not lose sight of that fact. He remarked that there were monuments now in the British Museum which went to prove this, and said that we should ask ourselves where the Anglo-Saxons came from. Well, our best historian, Turner, traced them back to Western Asia, and also said that Britain was not our ancestral home. We were emigrants as much as the people of New York, and where the Ten Tribes were lost the Anglo-Saxons were found. According to Rawlinson there was no clearly recorded movement from Asia into Europe before the eighth and seventh centuries before Christ, the very time of the Assyrian captivity.

With regard to the difference in the forms of language, we must not make too much of that. There was emigration at intervals from Western Asia into Europe from 600 years before to 500 years after Christ. The religion of the ancient Britons was next alluded to. They were, he said, Baal worshippers, and so also were the children of Israel, who were also according to the Old Testament a monarchical people. They were determined to have a king, but took care to limit his prerogative. Israel had a clear idea of a limited monarchy, and so had the Anglo-Saxons. There was this analogy, and again in our language there were traces of Hebrew of a distinct character. Tyndale said that the properties of the English tongue agreed a thousand times more with the Hebrew than with the Latin, referring to the spirit of the language and the construction of the sentences. Language was governed by social contact, and of itself was no test of race. With regard to looks some said we were not like the Jews, but one writer said that the type of Jew to be met with in Western Europe was different from that they met with in Palestine, that the latter was not the original type, and that the old and true type of a Jewish face approximated to the Anglo-Saxon face.

These matters might at first sight meet with objections, but after looking thoroughly into them they became a strong argument in support of his view. After looking at all these facts, he thought they would agree with him that it was just possible that we might be Israelites. (Hear, hear.) An utter confusion, he remarked, existed in our historical studies now-a-days. There was an indissoluble union and communion between one race and another, there was a transmission of character, of instincts, and principles from age to age onwards. There must be progress in this beautiful world of ours, but there was chaos and confusion in the study of our history. There were two questions that no one could answer according to the accepted interpretation of history, and the first was this: What became of the Ten Tribes? who for 1,200 years were under God's special guidance, government, and teaching. Our history could give no answer to this most important question. It was utterly absurd to suppose that they had sunk into utter nothingness. He would rather believe they had been swallowed up by a great earthquake, or had been taken up into heaven, than that they ceased to take a leading part in the world from that time forward.

Divine teaching insisted that they should be a leading people, but where were they! No one knew anything about them. The other question was, What was the origin of the Anglo-Saxons? Our modern historians could not answer this, but we were told that ancient Britons were painted savages, and that the Anglo-Saxons were but little better. Such descriptions were utterly unreliable.

It had been shown that there was a regular commerce in Britain 350 years before Christ, and that we had here a gold coinage 200 years before Christ. George Kingley, the professor of history at Cambridge, said that some people thought that the British Constitution was the work of 1688 A.D.; but if they said 1688 B.C., they would be nearer the mark. He maintained that we were Israelites, and that this was the only solution of the two otherwise insoluble problems. What became of the Ten Tribes? and from whence did the Anglo-Saxons, who were civilizing the world, spring? If we admitted that we are Israelites we should have an answer to the questions, that the Ten Tribes were doing the same work they did of old, Protestantising the world and doing away with idolatry, and that was what the British races were doing and what their ancestors did.

Many thought that it was in the sixteenth century that we began to be Protestants, but from the very first we were Protestant as opposing the worship of false gods. It was the mission of Israel, and it was our mission, and so with the grand representative principle of government they found it in Israel and they found it in England. The same might be said with regard to social purity; they found it in ancient Israel, and the old Goths, and permanently here in England. The general look of the two peoples in this sense led him to the conclusion that we were doing the same kind of work that God told Israel to do in the old time.

We have derived this inspiration and instinct from our ancestors, and were possibly fulfilling the prophecy of Scripture. This was his explanation of the two problems which otherwise could not be explained. Looking at it from a Scriptural standpoint it was a certainty, because it was the only true fulfilment of history, and made certain from divine promises to Abraham. The Israelites were to be revived in Christ, and to be the glory of Immanuel. The redemption spoken of in the New Testament was the redemption of Israel from the curse of the law. God made by the prophets certain promises, and said that upon Israel He would pour out His Spirit and would be their centre in all the places where they should go, and that they should be as the stars of the sky, the sands of the sea, and the dust of the earth for multitude, that they should push the nations together to the ends of the earth. In that wonderful chapter of Moses, the 33rd of Deuteronomy, where he spoke of Ephraim and Manasseh, he said of Joseph, "His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the horns of unicorns," and that animal, the bullock, the symbolism of Old Testament Israel, and the lion and the unicorn, were just those which were adopted as our national emblems. Then it goes on, "With them he shall push the people together to the ends of the earth, and they are the ten thousands of Ephraim, and they are the thousands of Manasseh." These were the words used by Moses in the plains of Moab just before he died. God said that the people should ultimately take possession of the Promised Land, but those blessings were never intended to be realised under the Mosaic law.

Digitized by Google

The object of Christ's mission to this world was to manifest Israel, and 1850 years had now passed since our Saviour went to the right hand of God after having given power of repentance. Although by the admission of all prophetical circumstances, we were now in the very Saturday night of this dispensation, yet to say that work had not yet been begun was to deny Christianity itself, and that Christ had failed to fulfil the mission for which He came into the world. Before the destruction of Jerusalem there was reason to suppose that some of the apostles laboured in Britain. We had evidence and proof from the early British tribes that there was a Church in Britain before the destruction of Jerusalem, and that before the old dispensation had passed away Christ had planted His Church here. We had evidence to show that in the second century—in 160 A.D.—there was a national Church here in Britain, and 150 years before Rome received Christianity under Constantine who was, in all probability, the son of a British mother.

We were told that Constantine went out from York in 166 to Christianise the world, and, therefore, so far from our being indebted to Rome for Christianising us, Rome was indebted to us for her Christianity. So far from the promises made being fulfilled to us in the later times, they were now more than fulfilled. We had had more of the Spirit of God during the last century and a greater increase of population than hitherto, and had put ourselves in such a position that the possession of Palestine was absolutely necessary for Britain. We were already going towards it, from Egypt on the South, Cyprus on the West, our Indian Empire on the East, and Armenia on the North. Because under the Berlin Treaty we were entitled to a protectorate over Armenia. We therefore saw that the four divine and distinct promises made to Abraham were fulfilled to us even in the times in which we live.

The lecturer then pointed out as additional evidence of the fulfilment of prophecy how our population had increased, and that the English-speaking population was 100 millions, and that at the present rate of increase it would in another century be 1,000 millions. The whole thing lay in a nutshell. Was the God of prophecy the God of Providence? Was the God that governed the world the God that said to Abraham, "I will make thy seed as the stars of heaven, the sand of the sea, the dust of the earth?" God could not make a promise to one people and give it to another.

The whole history of England was the history of God's blessing us in spite of ourselves, or the incompetency of rulers: in spite of the blunders and mistakes they had made God had overruled our history in such a manner as to fulfil His promises, yet we had done everything we could to frustrate His purpose in every part we had played.

With regard to the fourth point, that of utility; what is the use of it? What was the worst feature in England and in the world at the present time? Why, infidelity, and the disposition to set aside the authority of Scripture. The Church in the wilderness, the Church which the Old Testament described, had been the same Church all along; it had been the Israelitish Church from the beginning. The British people had been missionaries from the first. When we had learnt what we are, when we had learnt to represent Him as a nation, and to represent His Israel, we should have a grand future—a converted and consecrated England—an England that should rule the whole world for God, one vast Federated Empire with her great centre in Palestine from the Nile to the Euphrates. We should not treat this as a wild dream; far from that, because it is a thought that has suggested itself to our great politicians.

He hoped what he had said would lead them to read their Bibles more closely and study the history of their own country, to know themselves as Christians and as English people The great truth that Christ had revealed was a call to repentance, His call to faith and holiness itself. As long as we refused to see the hand of God in our history we should be in trouble, and he believed a great tribulation was coming upon us; it would be a time of Jacob's trouble, but we should get out of it. In conclusion, he remarked that Mr. Crofts and Mr. Swift would be glad to hear the names of any who would like to join them in the study of this question. The lecture occupied an hour and a half in delivery, and was listened to with the deepest attention.

A hymn was then sung, and a collection made, after which Mr. C. H. Tippet proposed a vote of thanks to the Rev. Mr. Douglas for his able and interesting lecture. From the time of the captivity when the Ten Tribes went to Assyria they were lost in history. The great wave of conquest which swept over Europe eventually came to England, and he thought there was very little doubt that we were the Lost Tribes of Israel, and with regard to Imperial Federation it was a grand idea that England with her mighty colonies and empire, and the spread of Christianity and civilization, we must be fulfilling the mission of Israel. There was a divinity that shaped our ends, rough hew them as we will, and by advocating such excellent virtues as Mr. Douglas had done would soon come the time which had been looked forward to by Canon Farrar when—

> "The war-drum shall throb no longer and the battle flags be furled;
> In the Parliament of man, the Federation of the world."

Mr. W. P. Hiley seconded the motion, which was carried.

The lecturer having acknowledged the compliment,

Mr. H. V. Tippet proposed a vote of thanks to the chairman, who, he said, was ever ready and willing to help in any good work.

Mr. Dunkley seconded the motion, which was carried by acclamation.

The chairman then brought the meeting to a close by pronouncing the benediction.

THE CHURCH IN ISRAEL.

By E. M. Rush.

It has been apparent from various opinions expressed in the Banner, that the position of the Church in Israel is being considered by many minds; and we know also that the difference of opinion has caused some heartburning amongst us, which private letters from distant parts tend to confirm. In deprecation of this heated opposition to any new view of a question which comes before us as Israelites, I would venture a few words in the Banner, with your kind permission, and also because of the great difficulty of discussing any subject thoroughly by private letters to many people. We were startled when the plainly expressed idea was first put before us that the Church of England is the Church of Christ; but it requires more than that shock to old ideas to prove the new to be false, or to afford a true ground of offence.

I would ask all to study this question of the Church of Israel calmly and fairly, with the one aim of seeking the truth only; not merely for a confirmation of this or that opinion, nor for the purpose of strengthening any view that may have been generally held by one, or another body of earnest Christians up to this time. Let us remember that if we offer blind and heated opposition, we are but following in the footsteps of those who declare generally against "Our Identity" without looking straightway into the question for the discovery of the truth, which method of proceeding, we have not been slow to utterly condemn. If we will only think of it, we must know that whatever may be our own private view, and however much we may dislike to accept another, our opposition will not alter in the very slightest degree the truth which is to be found embedded in the Word of God, and which has been ordained by the Almighty in ages past.

The Church question having come up for discussion on many counts outside our circle, as well as within it, doubtless the time has come that we should give it due consideration. This being so, it will be granted at once that our first duty is to ask for Divine guidance, and that we may receive light; and in doing this, we should surely lay aside all bitterness. Then let us all, whether conforming, or non-conforming, approach the subject without prejudice. If a few thoughts in addition to the above, and bearing directly on the question of the Church in Israel, would at all help to clear the ground before us, I should be glad indeed if they can be allowed.

(1) I would that we should remember the blindness that has been our heritage, assisted by the misleading headings to many chapters in the Bible, where for Israel is substituted "the Church." Again, there is the common practice adopted by many writers and speakers on sacred subjects, of giving the name of Israel to Christian believers. All this has tended to incline our thoughts one way, and induce some of us—conscious Israelites—to believe that the nation must be "the Church," if indeed, the whole body of Christian believers, of whatever clime or race, may not be considered to constitute it through our Saviour Christ, the divine Head of the Church.

(2) When we try to think out this matter, let us not put aside the remembrance that in the early days of Hebrew history, the Israelites were a special people, with a special calling by divine appointment at that time. In these latter days, they are still a special people with a special calling to Gospel work. In the midst of them of old there was a sacred ministry formed through the selection by the Almighty of one Tribe to serve before Him; and now at this time does it seem altogether unreasonable to suppose that there is still a parallel to be found, and a continuity in the divine method of working through His people on the earth? Shall we say it is impossible that there is now a sacred ministry by special dedication, and by one unbroken chain from the time when the light of the Gospel was first given to the world? Have we no warrant for giving a literal meaning to the words of our Saviour when He selected Peter, and declared that "upon this rock I will build My Church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it"? (Matt. xvi. 18). Would any one of us dare to say that it was chance that Peter alone was selected, and not the whole body of the apostles, to be the foundation of the Church of Christ? In the previous verse the words of Christ give the reason, and shew with clearness and power the foundation of His action. Noting this special selection—again one out of twelve, as in former times—and the following definite declarations, is it strange that some believe that there is in the midst of us, and ever will be, that special Church, the foundation of which was laid by Jesus, and which must have been built up according to His word?

Finally, I would add that if we find this Church in our midst, standing till our Lord comes to us again, we shall find it erring, though working for Christ; but in need of His cleansing, for was not humanity in the essence of its foundation? We should remember also, that side by side with Peter, the selected one, laboured the other true apostles; and we have no hint of jealousy on account of the honour to one of their number, nor of arrogance on the part of that one who was divinely chosen. So let us try without offence to seek the light and serve our Lord wherever our lot has been cast, striving ever to draw nearer and nearer together as we desire to be united in Him, our Saviour and Redeemer.

Lee, London, March 16th, 1886.

MR. FROUDE'S OCEANA, AND FEDERATION.

THE following lines, published in one of the London papers (St. James's Gazette, or The Pall Mall Gazette), were sent to the journal in question by one, who had read "Froude's Oceana," and saw how strong his anticipations were that "the Imperial Federation of the British Dominions" would one day become an accomplished fact. The British being Israel, their God-prescribed destiny is to appear at last as "a nation and a company of nations" of the Hebrew stock. Without any reference to the Scriptural destiny of this nation, Mr. Froude anticipates for us just such a development of our body politic as this; and the author of the lines we quote speaks accordingly of this great traveller's idea as one which makes "all the peoples of our Queen one undivided Empire," "going round the world in strength serene," "unchallenged in our peaceful fleets;" because, clearly, we shall then be "the head and not the tail, above only and not beneath, all the nations of the world" (Deut. xxviii. 1, 13). The lines were these:—

"O framer of a happy tale
Of marvels strange and manifold,
Of fields that know not how to fail,
And hills that teem with hidden gold.

In the great England over seas,
Where giant-like, our race renews
Its youth, and, stretched in strenuous ease,
Puts on once more its manhood's thews—

We thank thee for thy fervent hope
That our dear land, in days to be,
May orb herself to fuller scope,
Knit, heart to heart, in bondage free:

Till all the peoples of our Queen
One undivided Empire know,
And round the world, in strength serene,
Our peaceful fleets unchalleng'd go.

We thank thee, too, for preaching fair
To those sad millions, grim'd with smoke,
Who yearly, daily, hourly, bear
The bitter load of Mammon's yoke.

A glad evangel of release,
Of lessen'd cares, and lighter toil,
Of graveward mellowing age, at peace
Upon its plot of kindly soil.

Who fears to venture? Who would stay
To stifle in our murky streets?
Who would not fain escape away
And change the town's unblest retreats

For that bright air, that boundless blue,
Where Britain draws a deeper breath,
And patriot souls create anew
The England of Elizabeth?"

The writer of this little poem sees, as clearly as we do, that the only hope for our starving and crowded masses is emigration to that greater Britain, which invites them to boundless spaces, only waiting the tillage of their strong hands and brawny sinews to flourish like a rose. The remarkable fact, both in Mr. Froude's book and in his panegyrist's lines is, that quite apart from Scripture, they both look on the continued prosperity of our Empire as assured. They anticipate no separation to occur as in the days of the revolt of the American colonies, and no diminution of the nation's strength by reason of the world-wide scattering of our surplus population. Wherever they go our colonists are still to be the peoples of our Queen, and her Empire "round the world," one and undivided, more powerful than those now located in the four quarters of the earth. Who taught Mr. Froude and his admirer this "glad evangel"? and where did they discover that the British folk were thus to inherit the blessings of Abraham our forefather—the multitudinous seed; the united, federated Empire; "the nation and company of nations," the dominion of the world, the wealth, the Gates, and all the other blessings that lie at the right hand of God the Son, which "He has ascended up on high to give as gifts to men"? (Eph. iv. 8; Psa. lxviii. 18). Where did they get their authority for predicting so peculiar a future for the British people outside the Bible, and how came they to overlook the fact that all these are blessings God, who cannot lie, promised in His Holy Word to His people Israel, as Joseph's birthright, but not at all to any Gentile nation, such as Mr. Froude, no doubt, believes the Anglo-Saxon race to be?

Digitized by Google

The fact is, that we have here a splendid specimen of "blind witnessing." For the assertions made, regarding the future of our people, are obviously true, but true only by reason of our Israelitish origin, and not otherwise. Were we not Israel, we should have no prospect of attaining the glorious destiny Mr. Froude sees to be in store for us. But we are Israel, and therefore he is right in his vaticinations. The glorious future is ours, because we are the sole legatees of a bequest God has exclusively tied up to the seed of Abraham; not to the Jewish branch, which had no right or title to the birthright, but to the House of Joseph or Israel, in their outcast, Lo-Ammi condition, when they were to be called and known by another name" (Isa. lxv. 15). Mr. Froude probably knows not this most elementary Bible truth; but without this knowledge, he judges from patent facts occurring before his eyes, that the Colonial Empire of the Queen will become at last "a federation of States, such as the world never saw before," united in loving perennial bonds to the Mother Country in the "isles of the West," according to the prophecies. These results depend, for the most part, upon the wonderful power of this nation to double its population within incredibly short periods of time. To enable our readers to grasp the facts, we call their attention to the following, which appeared in The Times of March 2, and gives a fair idea of the growth of the British nation, and the rapid way it distances all her European competitors. Russia seems, at first sight, an exception, her ratio of increase being 1·38 per cent., whereas that of the British was only 1·01 per cent. The fact seems to be, that Russia's increase is that of accretion, but not generation; whereas, ours is mainly the multitudinousness of the race exhibiting itself according to the prophecies. Our quotation is as follows:—

INCREASE OF POPULATION IN THE EUROPEAN STATES.—Enough is already known of the results of the German census taken on December 1 last, to enable German statisticians and publicists to institute comparisons and draw inferences as to the relative growth of population in the various countries of Europe. During the last five years the population of Prussia has increased by 3·79 per cent. This is not as high a rate as during the preceding quinquennial periods. During the eighteen years from 1867 to 1885 the population of Prussia had increased by 17·87 per cent., which gives an annual average increase of 0·918 per cent. The annual rate of increase in Austria-Hungary during the eleven years from 1869 to 1880 (no later figures are available) was only 0·49. In Italy the annual increase for the decade, 1871 to 1881, was 0·60 per cent. In France (omitting Algiers and the colonies) the annual rate of increase, for the fifteen years from 1866 to 1881, was 0·15 per cent. In Great Britain and Ireland, for the decade from 1871 to 1881, the annual increase was 1·01 per cent. In European Russia, including Finland and the Don Cossacks, in the thirteen years from 1867 to 1880, the average annual increase was 1·38 per cent.

THE EARLY BRITISH CHURCH.

(Concluded from page 128.)

PART II.

THE salient point which comes out strongly in the article we have quoted from the "Protestant Churchman," is that (on the authority of Gildas, our earliest British Christian historian) the Church of Christ was founded in these islands about the time that Boadicea, Queen of the Britons, was defeated by the Romans—that is, in A.D. 61. The fact remarkably illustrates and fulfils our Lord's prediction to the Jews in Matt. xxi. 43, when He said to them that "the kingdom of God was to be taken from them and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof." The Jews were accordingly destroyed as a nation by Titus in A.D. 71; and ten years before that date, we have Gildas' assertion that that kingdom was first planted here in Israel's "appointed place"—the British "Isles of the West" (2 Sam. vii. 10; Isa. xxiv. 15).

The object of the writer in the Protestant Churchman, was also to show that although the Protestant Apostolic and pure Church of A.D. 61, was afterwards corrupted by Rome, who sent here Augustine and his forty monks to effect his object, yet that God always rekindled in these islands the expired or fading light; for in the time of the blessed Reformation, the Church in these lands was freed from the authority of the Bishop of Rome—and the light kindled in A.D. 61, was rekindled after its long collapse of 900 years. And why was this? Why was the lamp relighted here only, but in all other lands why has it gone out in darkness, without that restoration which has been granted here alone? The answer is given us in Psalm cxlvii. 19, 20: "He showeth His word unto Jacob, His statutes and His judgments unto Israel; He hath not dealt so with any nation; and as for His judgments, they have not known them. Praise ye the Lord!" This nation is Jacob or Israel; and God, according to His promises, has loved His people, and given them His Word, His presence, and His blessings.

But the testimony of history is, as the writer we quote tells us, that the British early Church was a Protestant, witnessing, or martyr Church. "She was (then) as essentially Protestant as she is this day." "She rejected the Pope's Anti-Christian pretensions, and rejected also his insidious proposals." But when she yielded, and thus nominally became Popish, as a nation, even then God remembered His promises because they were His people, and sent John Wicliffe with the British Bible translated into a language "understanded by the people;" and finally, He gave them the glorious Reformation of the 16th Century, when it was distinctly proved that this nation was the witnessing one, blessed with the pure evangelical light of heaven, given to it to disseminate the same among "all the nations, all the families, and all the kindreds of the earth." Then was Rome cut off by Israel from spiritual communion with her—a bond that will never again be rivetted upon this nation, as God is true! The wonderful story of the early British Church, as told by the Protestant Churchman, is that of Israel's Church. It was the spiritual portion of the "kingdom of God," which up to A.D. 61 was attached to the House of Judah, but was then transferred to the House of Israel, already located in "the Isles of the West," and destined in a few centuries afterwards to be joined by the mass of the yet "wandering" Tribes of Ephraim-Israel, then painfully journeying Westward towards their "far off" habitation, appointed for them as their place of safety by God Himself (2 Sam. vii. 10). There the Church of Israel gathered strength, but lapsed into sin and sloth and ignorance, till God sent His Spirit to arouse His slumbering witnesses to the performance of their duty to the outside world, for which alone God destined them, made, created, and formed them. "This people have I formed for Myself," He said; "they shall show forth My praise" (Isa. xliii. 21).

Digitized by Google

SOME ANCIENT BRITISH LAWS.

By J. Thomson.

That the ancient Britons lived under, and acknowledged the authority of law, there is ample evidence to prove. The "Molmutian laws" have been celebrated by tradition, and confirmed by legitimate history, for 2,300 years or more. Dwynwal Moelmud, otherwise Dunwallo Molmutius, is said by one authority to have been the sixteenth British King, and to have lived about B.C. 440. But according to another Chronicle of the British Kings, in the "Book of Basingwerke" (a Welsh version of Geoffrey of Monmouth's Chronicle), he is said to have flourished about 250 years earlier; or from B.C. 694, to B.C. 667. Molmutius is reported to have been the first who published any laws in this country, and they continued famous until the Norman Conquest. Mr. Owen, in "Cambrian Biography," describes him as "the celebrated legislator of the Ancient Britons, who first combined the laws, maxims and customs into a regular code." He also adds, "Dwynwal is recorded in a Triad with Bran and Prydain, as the three combiners of monarchy in Britain, so that by their institutions the various tribes of the island were brought to acknowledge one sovereign authority, under certain circumstances of general warfare." Whatever may be the historic value of the Welsh Triads, of Geoffrey, of Nennius, or Richard of Cirencester, when we find their testimony uniform, and evidently not slavishly copying one another, and all confirmed by other historical hints, it seems to be showing too great an incredulity to reject their evidence as untrustworthy.

The Vendotian Code of Welsh laws, said to have been compiled about A.D. 1180, mentions Dvynval Moelmud as "a very honourable and wise man, and it was he who first established good laws for this island; and these laws continued in force until the time of Howel the Good. After that Howel the Good enacted new laws, and abrogated those of Dvynval. Yet Howel did not, however, alter the measurements of the lands in this island, but continued them as they were left by Dvynval, because he was the best measurer." Here we have evidence of the art of surveying; and there can be no doubt that there were well-known and established laws respecting boundaries in this country, long before the Roman invasion. Cæsar himself says (De Bell, Gal. l. 1), "When any disputes arise about their inheritances, or any controversies about the limits of their fields, they are entirely referred to the decision of their Druids." King Alfred collated the laws of his ancestor, Ina, many of which were taken from British sources; and those, if credit is to be given to their compiler, were excerpts from the Greek and Trojan laws. Thus, again, tradition takes us back to the place where, according to Nennius, the first colonists of Britain came from. Neither Geoffrey of Monmouth, nor Nennius, give their histories upon their own authority, but both refer to MSS. which are now lost. Nennius is the oldest British author we have, and he is supposed to have lived in the middle of the 9th century of our era ("Our British Ancestors," pp. 6—9).

Of Molmutius, Polydore Virgil writes, "This man, even from the beginning, began to take care for those things which he thought to concern the utility of the commonwealth, renewing with the ancient usage the science of warfare, sore decayed through discontinuance: he sacred new laws, and those very profitable, which afterwards deserved to be called Molmucian Laws. He appointed that the temples of the gods should be a sanctuary to all that would fly thereunto" (Whence this idea centuries B.C.? Was it a traditional relic of the Hebrew "cities of refuge"?); "he was the first that wore a crown of gold; he relieved, as well with riches as favour, all those who applied themselves to laudable arts, to the end that both the chief of the realm might do the same by his president, and youth might the better be animated to the embracing of virtues; he ordained measures and weights for the buying and sale of things; he punished thieves, and noisome, or harmful creatures, with severity; he founded many highways, prescribing their breadth; appointing terrible penalties as well to the breaker of their immunities and rights as to those which committed any heinous offence in them. Furthermore, lest the ground should lie waste, and the people be either oppressed or diminished for the want of grain, if only cattle should feed in the fields, which should be tilled by men, he appointed how many ploughs every county should have; enjoining a punishment to those by whom the number should be made less, and forbidding that such steers as should serve for tilth to be carried away by any magistrate, or otherwise to be surrendered to creditors for the debt of money, if otherwise the goods of the debtor would suffice. This was ordered lest the graziers for advantage should cause the fields of the husbandmen to be untilled, the which law groweth out of ure (use) in these our days, to no small hindrance of the whole commonalty." A community governed by, and respecting such laws as these, was certainly far removed from barbarism. But even before Molmutius, another British King, named Gintoline, is recorded to have lived, and "endeavoured to make new and furnishe the Britishe commonwealthe, which of others before had received some forme and furniture. But above all things he repressed and extinguished civil dissention." Dying early, his widow Martia, during the infancy of their son, "having goode experience in manie things, took in hand the charge and care of the kingdom," and "promulged lawes, which, of the posteritee, were called Martian Lawes" (Polydore Virgil's "History of England," book i. pp. 38—41). Though these were not so famous as the subsequently enacted Molmutian Laws, yet it is interesting to note that they are good evidence to show that at this very remote period our ancestors were subject to law and order.

Finally, we may go much further back than the Saxons, who had their "Witangemote," or assembly of wise men, and affirm truthfully that the Ancient Britons had not only laws and a magistracy, as we have just seen, but also a national council, senate, or parliament, as we should call it. "in which alone," Cæsar says, "it was permitted to speak on affairs of the State"—De republica nisi per concilium loqui non conceditur. (De Bell, Gal. lib. vi.). This was, no doubt, brought by our earliest ancestors, at a remote period, from the place of their first habitation; and all probabilities point to its then being a relic of an ancient institution; even as history shows it to be the original seed whence has grown, in this country, our modern representative legislature.

BRITAIN'S GREATNESS.

By W. L. Blore.

It is found that the greatness of the British Empire has been estimated by certain statistical returns irrespective of position, area, and religious profession. We thus find that the productiveness, wealth, and annual income of this truly greatest centre of all three, both as regards the United Kingdom in its entirety, and as to their influence upon each of its dependencies, have been scheduled with such countries as the United States, Russia, France, &c.

The areas of some of these "newer" countries are more extensive, and, as in North America and New Zealand, the ground is virgin soil, it is more productive than that of some of the older countries of the world. In Europe agriculture has to be conducted very carefully, and requires the application of artificial manures, and consequently the net result is not so remunerative as in newer settlements.

And yet we find that the wealth, production, and average income of the British people stands highest in the schedules; and that hitherto such colonies as New Zealand, New South

Digitized by Google

Wales, and Victoria, with their large proportionate areas, share in the proud position of the mother country in these respects.

When we take the limited area of the United Kingdom into consideration and compare its population, wealth, etc., with that of the United States with its comparatively unlimited area, the United States stand far below the Mother Country in such comparison.

Then, in the United States, we find that the population has been increased in efficiency, and is in every way benefited by the annual introduction of a very large amount of the best energy and intellect of Great Britain and Germany. If we compare the United Kingdom with France, one of the "oldest" countries of the civilized world, we find that, with about the same population and nearly twice the area, the average income of its inhabitants is one-third less than that of the Briton.

The United States, with twenty-five times our area and with a population one-third more numerous than ours, has an annual income, according to Porter, but four per cent. in advance of that of the United Kingdom.

Germany, with an area nearly double ours, and with a population one-fourth more numerous, has an annual income below that of France: so that the population of the British Isles produces as much annually as 62 million Germans and Frenchmen, and as much as 47 million United States' men.

According to Porter's tables, the commerce and industry of the British Isles equals also those of Russia, Austria, and Italy combined. These calculations do not include Colonial industries and those of our Indian Empire. The bearing of the 61st chapter of Isaiah upon Great Britain's present magnificent commercial position, as well as upon her position as a civilizing power in the world, is very evident.

The introductory verse of this remarkable chapter was quoted by Christ as declaratory of His kingly commission; but the following eight verses have direct reference to the subject under discussion—the position of the kingdom itself in the world—the nine verses being all connected by conjunctions.

It is interesting then to note the position accorded to the British Empire in the world at this moment. In Petermann's meteorological map of the world, we have three zones—the Torrid, comprising the regions between the Warmth Equator, and the isothermal lines, North and South of 70 degrees Farenheit; the Temperate Zones, North and South, between the isothermal lines of 70 degrees and 30 degrees Farenheit; the Frigid Zones, North and South, comprising the regions below 30 degrees Farenheit.

Let us take the Torrid Zone first—the Zone considered inimical to European colonization, and let us ask ourselves, Which is the pre-eminently reigning power over this Zone? In the Northern Hemisphere the isothermal line of 70 degrees cuts through Mexico, the Peninsula of Florida, Morocco, Beyrout in Syria, South of the Sea of Aral, along the ridge of the Himalayas, the Northern boundary of Burmah, and Formosa.

The Southern 70 degree line enters South America at 20 degrees South latitude, and leaves it at the Southern limit of Brazil. It then skirts the Northern limit of British South Africa, and cuts Australia at the northern limit of New South Wales. Within this anti-European colonization zone Great Britain rules over 270 millions of people. After due investigation, I estimate the annual income of these collectively, as equivalent to that of the people of the United Kingdom. So that within this immense zone the Anglo-Israelitish race rules over a larger population with a larger annual income and industry than all other countries within the same zone combined.

In the Southern Temperate Zone we find that in area and population our Colonial settlements equal those of the remainder of this zone, and that in productive industry and annual income they far surpass the remainder of the zone.

We have now but to consider the Northern Temperate Zone, the most extensive in land area of the three zones. Let us refer to Petermann's meteorological map of the world, and we observe Great Britain as a mere dot in the very centre of this vast zone, about equidistant from Eastern China and the West Coast of America. But with her daughter in the West, she stands pre-eminent amongst the nations of the North in power, wealth, and social status.

The Anglo-Israelites of North America and of the United Kingdom rule over 93 millions of people in the Northern Temperate Zone. Their productive industry within this zone equals that of Russia, Austria, Italy, Germany, and France combined, with 250 million inhabitants—i.e., one Anglo-Israelite is worth two and two-thirds of those inhabiting Russia, etc. The only countries within this zone to be accounted for are China, Spain, Portugal, Belgium, Holland, Sweden, Norway, Denmark, and Turkey; and these, all combined, are not equal in industry and wealth to Great Britain and the United States combined. So that taking the Anglo-Israelitish trade and dominion in the three zones collectively, we find that in commerce, industry, and wealth that dominion equals the remainder of the world combined in the year of grace 1886.

Truly this is the Lord's doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes. Let us then not worship our position and the gifts of our King, but let us worship our Great King Himself, and humble ourselves before Him, seeing in how far we have been unfaithful in our wonderful stewardship!

Let us then put forth every effort to glorify God and not ourselves in the position in which He has placed us, and cast from us all idolatry, and whatsoever worketh abomination or maketh a lie!

Our present position, wealth, influence, intelligence, and social status are not our own. They are our King's. Let us serve Him, honour Him, and extend His kingdom in the earth, and we shall be doubly blessed (as in Isaiah lxi. 3—9).

Hill House, Sandown, Isle of Wight.

P.S.—Let the ungrateful sentence, "Perish India and the Colonies!" never again be heard within the British Empire!

"THE QUEEN OF IRELAND.

"The Edinburgh Daily Review publishes the following correspondence between Dr. M'Lauchlan and Mr. Gladstone :—

"Free St. Columba Manse, Edinburgh, Feb. 25, 1886.

"DEAR SIR,—I have been led in the course of my life to study ancient Celtic history, and have found that our Gracious Sovereign the Queen is by right of birth and succession the Sovereign of the native Irish race. She represents the ancient royal family of Ireland as much as of England and Scotland. This may be of interest to you in making arrangements for conducting the future government of Ireland, and dealing with a people so influenced by sentiment as the Irish are. Dermot MacKelvar was the Arch-Righ or Supreme King in the time that St. Columba was forced to flee from Ireland for rest. Shortly after that time a branch of the northern royal family crossed to Scotland and founded the kingdom of Dabriada, which they long occupied. At last they united with the Picts, and Her Majesty represents both branches of the Irish royal race. The union with England united the Crown, and the Queen thus comes to represent the three royal families of Ireland, Scotland, and England. She is as much Queen of Ireland as of England and Scotland. I think you should know this, and I communicate these facts in case they may be of use to you. Excuse the liberty I take, and believe me,

Yours faithfully,

(Signed) THOMAS M'LAUCHLAN."

"The following is Mr. Gladstone's reply :—

"10, Downing-street, Whitehall, March 1, 1886.

"SIR,—I am desired by Mr. Gladstone to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 25th of February, and to thank you for your views on the subject of Ireland.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

(Signed) H. W. PRIMROSE.

Digitized by Google

DISTRIBUTION OF THE BRITISH ARMY.

THE latest returns of the British Army show that the Regular Forces number about 201,000 effective of all ranks, for an Empire which, in the four quarters of the globe, comprises very nearly 9,000,000 square miles of territory and about 306,000,000 souls. Even when the 6,700,000 square miles of Australasia and North America—the former containing no Imperial troops and the latter only 1,300—are deducted, the Regular Army has still to cover more than 2,000,000 square miles, a proportion of about one European soldier to 10 square miles of territory. Of the 201,000 about 97,000 are quartered in the British Isles, and the remainder would be but a small garrison for the Indian and Colonial dependencies were the deficiency not supplied by native levies.—Morning Post, Dec. 25, 1885.

GOOD NEWS FROM GERMANY.

WE have just heard, from an English resident in one of our nation's favourite German resorts, that in that place Anglo-Israelites "form rather a strong company of believers," "and I am thankful to say" (adds our informant) "that the truth is growing among the Germans." That this is the case in Germany the BANNER afforded evidence on page 99, vol. x., where our readers have, probably, noticed "a German's" letter, in which he contributed his mite towards the establishment of Identity truth, and plainly declared, we think, that he believed in the fact himself. Our friend in the German town tells us that he is "a thorough believer in Our Identity, and that he prays that God may prosper our" (editorial) "exertions to spread the great truth amongst mankind."

Correspondence.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR PHILO-ISRAEL,—My attention has been directed to what I conceive to be a mistake in my article, BANNER, vol. ix., page 220, where I wrote of Casiphia as being near the Caspian Sea.

Col. Beresford, at page 97 of the same vol., gives very conclusive reasons for rejecting this view. But my paper was written before the 4th March, although appearing in print later in the year. Faithfully yours, DENIS HANAN.

The Rectory, Tipperary, 17th March, 1886.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR PHILO-ISRAEL,—I enclose a cutting from this day's St. James's Gazette which may usefully enhance the interest of your columns.

It is scarcely probable that the Premier's recent tendencies will induce him to hail the repeated suggestion which possibly underlies Dr. McLauchlan's communication—i.e., that of a right Royal and Queenly visit to Ireland.

But such a progress preceded by (if possible) a thorough and patriotic circulation of Dr. L.'s view, and a fuller statement of the facts on which it rests, might prove of the greatest service at this juncture. Eminently influenced by sentiment as the Irish are, why may we not yet see the day when towards one of such a half-century's Royal proof, affectionate loyalty shall yet succeed to the rancour of unhappy ignorance? May God grant this.

Yours ever, T. W. BOYCE.

78, Victoria-road, Clapham Common, S.W.

ISRAEL'S SCRIPTURE AND PRAYER UNION.

SINCE our last report only one new member has joined the Union; the number of cards issued is 1,390. The prayers of the members are asked on behalf of one who writes as follows: "I am very ill in mind and body. I have overworked myself, and now I am troubled with anguish of soul and weariness of body. Please ask Israelites to pray specially that God will help me, and send me back to my work with renewed strength."

The Comments for April and May will be sent out together to all members residing in the United Kingdom.

All subscriptions for the Monthly Comments, by Philo-Israel, should in future be paid up to January, 1887, inclusive, as that number will complete the second series.

The Card of Membership will be sent on receipt of three stamps. The Comments, prepared by Philo-Israel, will be sent post-free monthly for 1s. per annum; 2 copies, 1s. 6d.; 3 copies, 2s. The "Prayers for Daily Use," being a prayer for each day of the week, by Philo-Israel, are 1d., or 9d. per dozen; postage extra.

The prayer of the Union, as on the Card of Membership, may now be obtained printed in larger type. Price 1d. for three copies, post free; or 1s. per 100 for distribution.

The bound volume of Monthly Comments (first series) may be had in paper cover for 1s., postage 2d., or in cloth 1s. 9d., postage 3d. Address Miss J. Lawrence, Rosslyn, Upper Teddington, Middlesex.

J. LAWRENCE, Hon. Sec.

ANGLO-ISRAEL FREE DISTRIBUTION FUND.

The following subscriptions, received from February 14 to March 19, are very thankfully acknowledged:—H. E. T., Dorking, 10s.; H. M. H., Silligori, 5s.; E. G., Ivybridge, 1s.; H. G., Tooting (monthly sub.), 1s.; C. B., South Hayling (monthly sub.), 5s.; W. R., Cardiff, 1s.; J. S., Cambridge, 2s.; A Sailor's Mite, 2s. 6d.; Mrs. A., Haverthwaite, 3s.; Mrs. P., Henley-on-Thames, 2s. Received by Miss E. M. Rush:—E. S. and A. C., Port Nolloth, South Africa, £1; Lady J. E., 10s.; Colonel S., 10s.; Mrs. M., 3s.; Mrs. D., 10s.; Mrs. M. B., £1; Mrs. B., 5s. Total, £5 10s. 6d. Thanks are also due to the Rev. T. W. Boyce for three dozen copies of "Our Scythian Ancestors," and to Messrs. Guest & Co. for one hundred copies of "The British-Israelite."

A sower in the North of England writes:—"A manifest blessing is attending the sowing here. I am again out of all larger works. Doors keep opening when I thought I had sown all I could think of." From the same, later on, comes the following encouraging extract from a letter received from a friend:—"I have read over most of the papers you gave me on the Identity of the British nation with Lost Israel, and I must say the facts are plainly shown in the events now occurring all over the world, and truly ought to make us deeply thankful that we are so highly honoured as the chief of nations, and in spreading so many blessings around. I feel thankful more and more every day for my visit to you, as what you explained to me, and I have since read and thought over, has led me to see political matters in quite a different light. I read the BANNER."

Numerous letters testify how much the BANNER is appreciated One extract from a letter reaching us from Devon shows us again this month the good resulting from its distribution. Our friend tells us how he came to see the BANNER as follows:—"One day I went in to see a friend I am well acquainted with, and he asked me about it. I told him I had never heard anything about such a paper, although I lived in Plymouth many years, neither had he until a few weeks before. He lent me the first number of this year, and I was so much taken with it, that I ordered a few copies and gave them to friends in different parts. I take it regularly now, and am become a firm believer in the glorious truth, and so has my friend. I am learning more from it than I ever knew before, and I would rather do without all the papers I ever saw than the BANNER, for it is the light of truth. I belong to the Church of England, but never heard such truths as are in the BANNER, and I wish it God's great speed to open the eyes of His people."

We deeply regret the loss of one of our most earnest and active Sowers, Mr. Porter, of Normandale-terrace, Langsett-road, Sheffield, who died after a few weeks' illness. He had worked with us almost as long as our Free Distribution Fund has been in existence, widely sowing the good seed amongst our soldiers and militia, with much good result, and previously he had taught the truth of Our Identity, having been a conscious Israelite for years. If friends who have kindly sent BANNERS to Mr. Porter will now direct them to Mr. J. Taylor, 394, Langsett-road, Sheffield, they will be gladly received and made use of by him.

Another Sheffield Sower writes:—"I am pleased to tell you the good news is spreading. I continue to give a few leaflets or a pamphlet to fresh ones, and, with very few exceptions, it creates a thirst for more. I feel more than ever anxious to spread the glad tidings, knowing how much better I can understand God's Word myself since I looked into the subject."

From Cardiff:—"I am trying to spread the knowledge of the good news, for I think it the right thing. If you can send me any literature by February 21 I shall be glad, for on that night I give an essay, 'Israel not Forsaken,' and I shall do my best with it."

During the past month Miss E. M. Rush has forwarded sixty-five packets of literature to the following places:—Alvaston. Abingdon, Blackheath, Bristol, Carlisle, Caterham, Coryton (North Devon), Chatham, Cheltenham, Devonport, Edinburgh, Hungerford (Berks), Lee, Liverpool, Kilmarnock, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Montrose, Oldham, Sheffield, Stirling, Southampton, Tipperary, Westminster and Westgate, Rome, Malta, Cairo, Frontier Field Force (Hospital), Nile, Wady Halfa (Hospital), Assouan, and Soldiers' Reading-room, Wady Halfa; Rawul Pindee, Morar, Secunderabad, Trimalgherry, Fyzabad, Bombay and Landour, India; Port Nolloth and Pietermaritzburg, South Africa; Etshawe, Zululand; Fiji Islands, Barbadoes, and Toronto. Parcels have also been sent to Birkenhead, Cardiff, Deganwy, North Wales; Haverthwaite, Ivybridge, and British Guiana. In addition to the above, 144 BANNERS have been sent out weekly. J. LAWRENCE, Treasurer.

Contributions to the Fund will be very thankfully received by the Treasurer. Miss J. Lawrence, Rosslyn, Upper Teddington, Middlesex; or by the Hon. Secretary, Miss E. M. Rush, 103, Burnt Ash-road, Lee.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed: — "Philo-Israel," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

SUBSCRIPTIONS £ s. d.

Annual Subscription for one copy weekly (including the Twelve Double Numbers) post free - 0 7 6
Two Copies (including Double Numbers) - - 0 13 6
Three Copies " " " " - 1 0 4
Four Copies " " " " - 1 5 6
Six Copies " " " " - 1 16 4

Post Office Orders to be made payable at the head office, St. Martin's-le-grand, London, to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C., and W. H. GUEST & Co. 29, Paternoster-row, London.

The Editor cannot undertake to return rejected MSS. unless stamps for the purpose be sent. Parties requiring an answer should enclose a stamp.

Contents Bills and Show Cards may be obtained on application to the Publishers.

Advertisements should be sent to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

Prepaid Advertisements are inserted at the rate of 30 words for 1s. 4d.

THE NEW QUARTERLY PART
OF
ISRAEL'S HOPE & DESTINY
Is now Ready, and Contains:

What is the Mark of the Beast? By the Editor. — A Short Essay on the Second Coming of Our Lord By J. T. Crosthwait. —The Resurrection Morn—The Descendants of Ishmael and of Esau Equally Guilty with the Jews of the Blood of Christ. By the late Capt. H. P. Keighly—Christian Truth and British-Israelism, their Relation and Manifold Developments. By. W. S. Cavill. —Workers at their Work: Mr. W. H. Peters, J.P.—Divine Selection. By T. C. Westfield. —The Afghans are the Lost Ten Tribes. Are They?—"Without a King, and Without a Prince." By Surgeon-General J. M. Grant, M.D.—Joseph's Birthright. By the Editor. —"Art Thou the King of the Jews?" By J. S. Lowe.—The Mystery of the Prophetic Dates Unsealed. By A. MacPhail.—In Memoriam: Mr. Robert Banks.—The Liverpool British-Israel Identity Association.

Price 6d., by Post 7d.; Annual Subscription 2s. 6d., post free.

London: ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.; GUEST, HAYWORTH & Co., 29, Paternoster-row, E.C.

PUBLISHED BY ROBT. BANKS & SON,
RACQUET COURT, FLEET STREET, E.C.

WORKS BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

The Geography of the Gates. With Map and six full page, and one double-page, Illustrations, printed on plate paper. 208 pages, in handsome cloth, gilt Price 3s. 6d., post free 3s. 10d.

An Elementary Digest or Sketch of the Chief Facts and Teachings of the Great Pyramid of Egypt. Adapted to the Unlearned and Unscientific. 56 pages, Illustrated with Diagrams, price 4d., post free 5d. 10th Thousand.

The History of the House of Israel; How they were Lost, and How they were Found, Told for the Children. Price 6d., cloth 1s.; post free 7d. and 1s. 1d. Fourth Edition. Eleventh thousand.

Our Identity with the House of Israel. Price 4d. Reprinted from "Clifton Chronicle Letters"

A Resume of the Scriptural Argument, proving the Identity of the British Race with the Lost Ten Tribes. Price 1d.; 6s. per 100. New edition now ready.

Philo-Israel's Leaflets. Four pages Crown 8vo Price 1s. 6d. per 100, postage 2d. No. 1.—"The Identity of the British with Lost Israel." 2.—"The Glory of God." 3.—An Address to British Seamen. 4.—An Address to British Soldiers. No. 5.—The Communion of the Body and Blood of Our Lord Jesus Christ Viewed in the Light of Our Identity. 6.—The Bible and the Jew. 7.—The Jewish People. 8.—Lo-Ammi; or, the Gentilisation of Ten-Tribed Israel. 9.—The Atonement. 10.—Is Our Identity Evangelical, or Non-Evangelical in its Tendency? No. 11.—Cui Bono? No. 12.—The "Thoughts" of God Towards Israel, Judah, and the Gentile Nations. 13.—The Teutonic Theory—Is It True? 14.—An Address to the Police Force of Great Britain. 15.—An Address to Israel's Missionaries and Their Supporters. 16.—The One Seed, Christ. 17.—An Address to Israel's Electors. Price 1s. 6d. per 100.

PRICE ONE SHILLING, POST FREE 1s. 1d.
Best edition on toned paper, cloth boards, gilt edges, &c., price 2s 6d.

Bible Lessons and Reflections.
BY ROBERT GAIRDNER, OF KILMARNOCK, N.B.

"Mr. Gairdner has given us in his book a series of Bible lessons, with his own reflections added thereto, and though he has been very cautious in the latter, and has not committed himself too broadly, he has plainly let it be seen that he is an Anglo-Israelite by conviction, and that the Scriptures which he quotes at length and extensively throughout his book, are meant to teach Our Identity and God's faithfulness, from first to last, to His promises to 'Abraham and His seed for ever.'"—Banner of Israel.

London: Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street.

PRICE FIVE SHILLINGS.

"Freemasonry from the Great Pyramid of Ancient Times."

How formed among the rulers and skilled craftsmen to perpetuate an order of succession, passed along by the ancient Khasdim, Khesed, Trustworthy (or modern Freemasonry) through the land of Media by the Chaldæs to the chosen people of Israel, and travelled as they travelled, dispensing their usages and customs among the earlier Anglo-Saxons. With illustrations shewing the parts of the interior of the Pyramid to be removed, disclosing the long-hidden chambers, developing further research.

To be had of the Author, T. Holland, 2, Charles-street, Rutland Gate; Robert Banks & Son, Racquet court, Fleet-st., E.C.; and Guest, Hayworth & Co., 29, Paternoster-row.

Price 2s. 6d., post free (published at 4s.), cloth, gilt lettered

The Book of Hebrew Roots.

Showing the Ideal Meanings and Various Ramifications of the Principal Hebrew Radicals.
By BURLINGTON B. WALE.

Large Folio, Hand Coloured, 12s. 6d., uncoloured, 6s. 6d. without Introduction, 3s., by post 3d. extra.

Modern Hieroglyphics of the Apocalypse and Great Pyramid.

Illustrated by Ten Plates, with explanations. By A WATCHER. To which is prefixed an introduction, showing how recent events in the Eastern Question and the Church have worked towards a fulfilment of the Theory suggested in this Book.

A Thousand of the first edition sold in a few weeks for Great Britain, Ireland, Egypt, Natal, India, and America

ISRAEL'S WORLD:
Origin and Destiny of British Race Colonies, and Empire; according to Scripture, History, and Signs of Our Times.
BY REV. HENRY ROE.

Price 2d., post free 2½d. R. Banks & Son, Racquet-court

Also by the same Author, "Consecration," 4d.; "Going to Africa," 1s.; "Fernando Po Mission," 1s.; "West African Scenes," 2s. E. Stock, 62, Paternoster-row, London, E.C. Rev. H. Roe, St. Ives, Cornwall.

LUNG TONIC
LUNG OWBRIDGE'S TONIC
LUNG LUNG TONIC, TONIC
THE MIGHTY HEALER.
Save Your Lives by Taking
OWBRIDGE'S LUNG TONIC.
It has a power over diseases hitherto unknown in Medicine.
Are you at all Weak-chested, or inclined to be Consumptive, with just a touch of Cough now and then?
"Try this Wonderful Medicine." The Cough and Weakness will disappear as if by magic, and you will feel a strength and power you never had before.
HAVE YOU A COUGH?
A DOSE WILL RELIEVE IT.
HAVE YOU A COLD?
A DOSE AT BEDTIME WILL REMOVE IT.
Bronchitis and Asthma it relieves instantly The Spasms of Coughing so dreadful in Whooping Cough become less with each dose of the medicine. —
Prepared by W. T. OWBRIDGE, Chemist, Hull,
Sold in bottles 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s 6d. & 11s. by all Chemists and Patent Medicine Vendors. Wholesale all London and Provincial Houses.

Dr. JOSEPH WILD'S WORKS

NEW EDITION JUST PUBLISHED.

THE LOST TEN TRIBES
Price 3s., post free 3s. 2d.

The FUTURE of ISRAEL and JUDAH.
Price 2s., post free 2s. 3d.

The Special Commissioner of the Christian Word, writing of Dr. Wild, says:—"On Sunday evening I had to fight my way into the Congregational Church of which Dr. Wild is the minister. He hails from America, and is quite the sensation of the hour. There was no standing room anywhere, and as I made to the door I met many coming away However, I had made up my mind to hear the Doctor, and hear him I did. It seems that the subscribers have a door to themselves; I made for it, and luckily found a chair, which I wedged in under the platform. The Doctor prayed, and then we had a sermon about Revelation, containing much that was very effective, if not about his text, at any rate about that mysterious part of Scripture from which the text was taken."

R. BANKS & SON Racquet-court, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

Price 2d., by post 2½d. 12s. 6d. per 100 net.

A New Light.
BY A E I.

Author of "The New Old Story," "4,000 Years Old," &c.

This pamphlet is prepared specially for general distribution, and as a means of introducing "Our Identity" to persons unacquainted with the subject will be found particularly useful. It is printed on good paper, in clear type, and bound in primrose colour cover.

London: R. Banks & Son, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C.

TO BE GIVEN AWAY! — 5,000 FREE PRESENTS, consisting of GOLD and SILVER WATCHES, DIAMOND RINGS, SILVER BROOCHES and EARRINGS, SILVER BREASTPINS, Silk-finished Handkerchiefs, Leather and Plush Purses, and other Presents, in value from 3d. to 20s. A Lady's Genuine GOLD WATCH GIVEN AWAY with each 100 Rugs packed up. A Lady's or Gentleman's Real SILVER WATCH GIVEN AWAY with each 100 Rugs packed up. Every Purchaser will receive a Free Present.

GOVERNMENT HEARTHRUGS.

B. & I. FREE PRESENTATION COUPON.

On receipt of this Coupon and P.O.O. value 2s., or 26 stamps, I hereby agree to forward one BEAUTIFUL GOVERNMENT HEARTHRUG, 6 ft. long and 3 ft. wide, in various designs and colours. Fern leaves, oak leaves, flowers, Turkish, cat and kittens, Irish harp centre, and the new tiger design. Suitable for drawing-room, dining-room, parlour, bedroom, or kitchen; and I also agree to consider every purchaser in my Grand Distribution of 5 000 Presents. (Signed) J. WATTS

Two Rugs, with two presents, 3s. 10d., or 50 stamps. Six Rugs, 11s.

P.O.O. to be made payable at Low Hill Branch to J. WATTS, 113, Brunswick-road, Liverpool.

£5 REWARD.

GOLDEN PILL OF HEALTH.

The Proprietors of the above well-tried Family Medicine of 60 years standing, have determined to protect the Public—viz., by sending direct to sufferers instead of supplying their Golden Pill of Health through agents, and will pay £5 to any sufferer who does not find relief in the following distressing diseases:—Indigestion, Loss of Appetite, Headache, Dyspepsia, Constipation, Bile, Nervousness, and all diseases arising from sedentary employment or close confinement. The Pills in boxes, post paid, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 3d. Directions and Testimonials accompany each box. None are genuine without the Government stamp. Only Address—

PROFESSOR McPHERSON & Co.,
KIDDERMINSTER.

EXTERMINATION OF ALL CORNS & BUNIONS

Guaranteed by using Gardner's Patented Corn and Bunion Exterminator, an ingenious little instrument which can be used by anyone. Painless in operation—"never fails." Price 1s. The highest Surgical Testimonials can be seen and operations successfully performed in all difficult or peculiar cases, bad nails, &c., at the Patentee's, who will send the Exterminator direct for 13 stamps. C. & J. P. GARDNER, Kendal.

Printed for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C. PUBLISHED BY GUEST, HAYWORTH, & Co., 29, PATERNOSTER-ROW, WEDNESDAY, APRIL 7, 1886. All rights reserved.

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."

(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India.)

"And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the Forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS of the EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. X., No. 485. [Entered at Stationers' Hall.] WEDNESDAY, APRIL 14, 1886. PRICE ONE PENNY.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
Is Our Protestantism in Danger?	149
The Rapture of the Saints	150
The Religious Tract Society's Testimony as to God's Splendid Gift to Israel of India	151
The Extent, Population, and Trade of the British Empire. By J. Thomson	152
What's in a Name?	153
The Girdle Round the Earth	153
Judah Walking to Israel	154
The Stone of Bethel	154
Mr. Arthur Osborne's Lecture at Clifton	154
Correspondence	155

IS OUR PROTESTANTISM IN DANGER?

"THE National Club" is an institution whose head-quarters are in 1, Whitehall-gardens, London. It was founded about forty years ago, in order "to promote Protestant principles and to encourage united action amongst Protestants in political and social questions, by establishing a central organization, to obtain and spread information on such questions, by affording facilities for conference thereon, and by providing, in the Metropolis, a central place of meeting to devise the fittest means for promoting the object in view." This Society, therefore, is clearly a good Israelite body, doing Israel's work, "witnessing" or "protesting" for God, and facilitating the witnessing functions of our nation to the utmost of its power, as Israel ought to do. As a Protestant body, it becomes important to ascertain what such an institution thinks of the proceedings of Mr. Gladstone in respect to the Irish question, and whether they have any, and if any, what bearing upon the maintenance of Protestantism amongst us as a nation? The National Club have a very decided and pronounced opinion on these subjects, arrived at not on party lines, because "party" has nothing to do with their operations, but regarded solely from a Protestant standpoint. What do they say regarding Mr. Gladstone's project for giving Ireland a separate legislature? They believe the Government measures, as announced by report, to be "perilous" in the extreme, "productive of grave anxiety, and calculated to endanger, not only the stability of the Constitution, but even the integrity of the Empire"! Looking broadly at the Irish question they tell us, that in the greater part of Ireland the condition of society is one of "veiled rebellion." "The law is held in abeyance, unrepressed terrorism dominates the land. Disloyalty and treason are openly preached. Crime and outrage are recognised instruments for enforcing the demands of unscrupulous agitators; and these are subsidised by alien foes, who openly preach a policy of plunder and confiscation. The "avowed aim of these men (the Club further tells us) is to dismember the Empire, to overthrow the Protestant Constitution of Great Britain, and to ruin her envied prosperity and power." But how do these foes threaten the Protestantism of our nation? The Club gives us a very clear reason, which is something to the following purport. "In order to effect the dissolution of the British Empire, these men demand the legislative independence of Ireland. They claim the right, by that Parliament, to levy taxation, to regulate all commercial relations, whether with England or foreign countries; and also to legislate on all questions of religion, education, and justice." These powers, in the hands of those who hate the British people, "would place the loyal inhabitants of Ireland at the mercy of the disloyal, would inflict the gravest injury on those whose rights have been guaranteed by the British legislature, and who, rather than surrender them, will not shrink from the horrors of civil war."

The independent legislature, if established in Ireland, would be mainly elected by Roman Catholics, would be under priestly control, and would be pledged to endow the Roman Church in Ireland, take education into its own hands, and train up the rising generation in principles of hostility to British Protestantism, and hatred of the British people. The result of all this would be, that the Irish police, then purely Roman Catholic in organisation, would become the nucleus of a powerful weapon against the British; and "Ireland, from its position on the flank of this country, would be gladly seized as an effective base for the operations of an invading enemy in time of war, while the harbours of Ireland would afford convenient shelter for the rendezvous of a hostile (foreign) fleet." The National Club thus look on the crisis as one of the greatest national importance as affecting our Protestantism, and even our existence as a nation, and pray the people of this land, as Protestants and loyal subjects of the Queen, to uphold, unimpaired, the legislative union between Great Britain and Ireland as vital to the maintenance of the constitution, and the protection of individual liberty.

Such is the position taken up by the National Club, and we do not hesitate to say, that it is a patriotic, faithful position, well worthy of the institution, and called for also by the circumstances of the case. Humanly speaking, the National Club is justified in every word it has put forward on the subject. But we feel that, regarded from the standpoint of Our Identity, the case will wear a different aspect. This nation is Israel, God's people, and His witnesses; therefore, His Protestants; set apart to testify to Him, and to His truth, throughout the world. This fact completely changes the whole of the features of the case! The British have been constituted God's Protestants or witnesses by the Lord Himself (Isa. xliii. 10, 12), and He abides and goes with us for the very purpose of "separating" us from all the other nations of the earth, that we may give a valid testimony for Him, and thus "glorify" His Holy name (Exod. xxxiii. 16; Isa. xliii. 21).

Digitized by Google

The Irish rebels may harass and annoy, but they cannot touch the implanted Protestantism of the British, their witnessing functions being the gift of God Himself to them for His own glory, and for the good of mankind in general. The separation of Ireland from Great Britain, which is the aim of the disloyal Irish, can never be accomplished, because God constituted "the isles of the West" the appointed place of His people's domicile, and called it "a place of their own," whence they are commanded and destined to "move no more" (2 Sam. vii. 10). If the Irish rebels succeed in their attempt, then that Scripture would be broken, and a possession of Israel, which God guaranteed to them for ever, would be proved to be no longer theirs, to the dishonour of the God of Israel, and the ruin of His glory; which is simply impossible! While, then, all lawful means must be used by Christian men, and by the House of Israel in general, to defeat an absurd and foolish plan, conceived by a statesman of powerful intellect and unbounded popularity, we must never despair, or approach the subject in other than a confident spirit, because the Lord Himself is with us, as He promised, and He cannot either allow us, as His people, to be put to shame (Joel ii. 26, 27), or permit the enemies of "His chosen ones" to rob them of their "appointed place in these "isles of the West." Our Protestantism, then, is in no danger, because it is part and parcel of our entity as the Israel of God; and it is impossible to hurt and injure the inheritance of the Lord God of Israel. The enemy coming in like a flood may assault and threaten our chief and God-honoured characteristic; but the Spirit of the Lord shall lift up a standard against him, and great will be the fall and defeat of our conquered foe, the enemy of Israel's king, as he is of Israel herself. Israel, praise ye the Lord!

THE RAPTURE OF THE SAINTS.

THE passage on which the doctrine of the "rapture of the saints" is founded is 1 Thess. iv. 16, 17, where it is stated, "The dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive, and remain, shall be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore, comfort one another with these words."

This subject is one which, in connection with the future of the world and of Israel, is surrounded with the greatest difficulties. It forms the back-bone of our Plymouth Brethren's opposition and arguments, contra Our Identity. We have recently asked the opinion of an experienced Anglo-Israelite clergyman on the matter, and his weighty words are so suggestive and important that we think we ought not to withhold them from the readers of the BANNER. What he said was this:—

"The question has presented itself to me in a four-fold division. 1. The extreme (Derbyite) view—viz., that all the saved will be taken up in one and the self-same moment, leaving the world to the devil.

2. "The extreme (Irvingite) view that only the sealed, a literal 144,000 will be raptured, and that all others will have to pass through the great tribulation, forthwith.

3. The Identity reasoning that the restoration of the kingdom to Israel; Israel and Judah's union; the law going forth from Mount Zion and Jerusalem; the full manifestation of the stone kingdom, &c., &c., all of which is future and must occupy a long time, must fit in in some way with St. Paul's teaching concerning rapture.

4. "What did St. Paul teach? His object was to comfort the tried Thessalonian brethren, who thought that their dead brethren had, by death, lost the participation of the Church's hope—viz., seeing the Lord return. His object was not to give a detailed statement of when, or how, or in what order, the events of the last times would occur. He simply states, therefore, that the dead have lost nothing; that the living will not anticipate their joy by even a moment, but that the dead shall rise first. He does not mean to teach anything as to the universal catching away of all the living Christians; if he does teach it it is casually and not of design. He does not even teach it casually, for "We that are alive, that are left" (1 Thess. iv. 15), does not imply each and every remaining Christian. "We shall not all sleep, but we shall ALL be changed" (1 Cor. xv. 52); the second "all" applies not to all the living, but to the living and dead; although it might be so understood. St. Paul was not writing to teach it, or to imply that all Christians were watching and ready, or would necessarily be so when the dead are raised.

"Every man in his own order, Christ the first-fruits, then they that are Christ's in their order (1 Cor. xv.). A change "in the twinkling of an eye," to the individual may not mean that the stupendous work of resurrection is to be at the same moment for all—e.g., "at His coming, then cometh the end" (ver. 23, 24), does not imply an instantaneous close. Then the question narrows itself to this. The relationship in time of the resurrection, to the manifestation of Israel, is it to precede, or to occur during, or to follow; or is the stone kingdom's era the Millennium age, and is the resurrection to take place before, or during, or after that age?

"The Identity light disposes of No. 1. The servants of the Lord Jesus, the Israelite sons of the living God, the people that by grace are to be "all righteous," are to live and work in the flesh on the earth; whether any or some are previously raised or raptured.

"The Identity light disposes of No. 2. The sealing vision applies to Israel nationally, and not to the Christian Church as a Church alone, and the implied preservation of the tribes has taken place.

"The Identity light requires the reading of St. Paul's words in the sense as given, by remembering the object with which they were written—viz., alone to comfort by correcting a mistake. The Identity light requires us to look for and to pray "Thy kingdom come"; (a) as plainly foretold of Israel; (b) in respect of the dead either before, or during, or after; or before, during, and after, the manifestation of the stone kingdom. For as there were dead raised at our Lord's death, or resurrection, so there may be a repetition in part of the resurrection. There may be many Enochs and Elijahs during the time when the kingdom has come, and there may be many repetitions of the transfiguration during the same period; the period when the first-born receives the promises in the flesh, and rules on earth, the Christian kingdom witnessing for FATHER, SON, and HOLY SPIRIT."

So far our clerical friend. On such a subject we must not venture to dogmatise. We think, however, our correspondent has come very near the truth, and has rightly judged that St. Paul never meant to teach, that the whole body of living Christians is to be universally caught away at the period of the predicted rapture.

It seems to us that the comfort St. Paul intended to convey was, that the dead in Christ would rise first and be first partakers of the joy of the Lord. Then, "we that are alive—that are left" (R. V.), such as are destined for that bliss and glory "shall together with them (the dead) be caught up in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air." To the watching and waiting ones alone, we suppose, that glory will be reserved as the highest and the best. But there will be other gradations of happiness for those who, belonging to the Lord's people Israel, are yet not among those who are to be rapt away into the clouds to meet the coming Master. There will be those of the Israelite saints to whom is reserved the glory of the returning procession to Palestine, when, as "the Ransomed of the Lord they shall return and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads. They shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away" (Isa. xxxv. 10, li. 11).

Digitized by Google

But there is yet another gradation and a lower joy yet, reserved for His people Israel by their loving Lord, who will reward all men according to their works. There will be those who, not being fit for the rapture, nor selected for the return journey of the "one of a city and two of a family" who return with Judah to their land, are yet not to go unblessed. These last, the vast majority, we suppose, will be those who experience the baptism of the Spirit and the new covenant blessings promised in Joel ii. 28, Jer. xxxi. 33, 34, and Heb. viii. 10—12, whose hearts and minds will be filled with the law of God—who will be "His people and He their God;" who will know Him, from the least of them to the greatest of them, and "whose sins and iniquities" the Lord Himself, the Judge, declares "He will remember no more."

It is clear that those who go out to meet the Lord in the air and are the honoured deputation from the kingdom of God on earth to the coming Master, to conduct Him to His throne below, are those selected for the highest honour and the most exalted joy. Those, probably, will be the small minority. A larger quota will go forth to the land to conduct the Lord's "present" to Mount Zion and Jerusalem before the Lord arrives to be enthroned there upon the throne of David, which is His own throne from everlasting. But the mass of the Israelitish nation, who are God's saints, will abide in these islands and in their surrounding empire, blessed as no people ever have been blessed since the world began, baptized with God's own Spirit, fed by Him and comforted by Christian duty done in Christ's name for all the world, besides being the evangelists of all the nations, families, and kindreds of the earth, blossoming and budding and filling the face of the world with fruit—Christian fruit to God's glory and to the salvation of the nations of the earth now lying in the wicked one. Israel, praise ye the Lord!

THE RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY'S TESTIMONY AS TO GOD'S SPLENDID GIFT TO ISRAEL OF INDIA.

THE Revised Version of the Old Testament has thrown a great light on one verse in Psa. cxi., which puts God's gift of India to the British-Israelites in quite a new aspect. The Authorised Version translated the 6th verse thus: "He hath shewed His people the power of His works, that He may give them the heritage of the heathen." The verse so read is hardly intelligible, and it is not clear how the Lord, by showing His people the power of His works, did so "that He might give them the heritage of the heathen." The revision puts the matter differently, and tells us that, in giving us India, God has exhibited on a magnificent scale, "the power of His works." The new version is as follows: "He hath shewed His people the power of His works, in giving them the heritage of the heathen."

This is clear and quite comprehensible. It illustrates the facts of modern history which point to God's miraculous power in His dealings with us, respecting the Heathen Empire of Great Britain in India and elsewhere. For He has demonstrated His power by subduing under our race 250 millions of heathen and Mahommedans, mostly warlike, belligerent, stubborn nations. He has made them succumb to a mere handful of His own chosen people, operating 7,000 miles, as the crow flies, from the base of their power in "the Isles of the West."

The Rev. G. H. Rouse, Secretary of the Tract Society at Calcutta, has a capital paper on "Tract Distribution in India," published in the last December number of the Religious Tract Society's (monthly) Record for 1885. Mr. Rouse gives us some excellent "blind testimony" to corroborate our contention that the British are Israel, for he points to the vast extent and truly wonderful, unique character of our Eastern possessions, and declares that our language, the English, is sure to become the universal tongue of our Hindu and Mahommedan subjects there! We propose to quote Mr. Rouse's words in extenso, believing his statement to be of great national importance to us at the present moment. The article runs as follows:—

TRACT DISTRIBUTION IN INDIA.

BY THE REV. G. H. ROUSE, SECRETARY OF THE CALCUTTA TRACT SOCIETY.

In no country on the face of the earth is the work of the Religious Tract Society more important than in India, and the importance of it grows year by year. It is difficult for people in England to realize what is meant by the short word India. A visit to that country in the cold weather, which is becoming more common every year, has a wonderful effect in opening the eyes to a sense of its vastness. The railway journey, from Calcutta to Bombay, occupies two days and three nights. From Calcutta to Kurrachi would take about four days, travelling on an average twenty miles an hour, day and night. And this vast country is, in many parts of it, as densely peopled as England itself, or more so. The total population of the country is about 250,000,000; and throughout the whole length and breadth of it the preacher and the colporteur may freely go, making known Christ by the living voice and by the printed Gospel or tract. Three-quarters of this vast population (about 180,000,000) are under direct British sway, our fellow-subjects as much as the people of Kent or Fife; while the remainder, though ruled by their own sovereigns, are yet practically under British control.

One great difficulty we have in India, in our tract work, is the large number of languages spoken there. In China one written character is intelligible over the whole country, whilst 200,000,000 in the North can be reached by one spoken vernacular. But in India we have at least a dozen important languages, such as Bengali, Hindi, Urdu, Punjabi, Marathi, Guzerati, Tamil, Telugu, Canarese, Malayalim, Oriya, Assamese, and Cingalese, if we include Ceylon in our survey; whilst, if we take into consideration the numerous hill tribes, we must add a hundred or more additional languages spoken in India In all the above-named, and in some of the more important hill languages, such as Santali, Mandari, Garo, Khassia, and many others, we need to have the Bible translated, tracts adapted to Hindus and Mohammedans written, printed, and circulated, and a Christian literature prepared for the rapidly-growing number of native Christians.

Referring to the last Report of the Religious Tract Society, we see that the issues of the various Tract Societies in India and Ceylon for last year amounted to about two millions and a half of books and tracts. Some of these may represent school-books, but the great bulk of them are directly religious, and contain a clear statement of the way of salvation through Christ. It is a matter of devout thankfulness that so much has been done in this way to carry the light of life to the benighted millions of India.

There is no room to refer to the work in any of the particular vernaculars of the country, but a word must be spoken as to the growing importance of English as the vehicle for communicating Christian truth. The Matriculation Examination of the Indian Universities is in English, so that every candidate must be able to read that language, and thousands of young men appear every year at these examinations. For many years open-air preaching to the natives in English has been carried on here and there in Calcutta. The educated in India are often more ready to receive religious teaching in that language than in their own vernacular, as they are accustomed to look upon English as the language of study and thought. Hence it is becoming year by year growingly important to supply Christian teaching, in English, adapted to the natives. For some years the Madras Tract Society has issued a monthly English four-page tract for educated natives; and the Calcutta, Bombay, Bangalore, and other Societies have also issued many English tracts for this class of readers. English, in fact, is fast becoming one of the vernaculars of India, the lingua franca of the educated all over the country.

Digitized by Google

Thus the seed is being sown. But again, as so often, we have to say, "What are they among so many?" Two and a-half million religious books, tracts, and leaflets, the entire issue for a whole year to a population of 250,000,000! One tract or leaflet per year for a hundred individuals! We thank God as we review the past; let us also take courage, and strive to do in the future far more than we have hitherto done.

So far the Rev. G. H. Rouse.

Surely the above requires no comment from us! Here is an "Israelite worker" at the ends of the world, clearly indicating how grand are the works of the Lord, and His power towards us, as exhibited in His gift of the Heathen Empire to His people, that they may bring them to Christ. He shows us how we have taken the Word of God and the message of salvation to the masses in Hindoostan, and how our language, spreading like our race, is becoming fast one of the vernaculars of India—nay, the lingua franca of it. It is God's vehicle to spread the Gospel, and shall we not, knowing all this, "Praise the Lord"?

THE EXTENT, POPULATION, AND TRADE OF THE BRITISH EMPIRE.

By J. Thomson.

We often hear, and perhaps speak of our Colonial Empire, but perhaps do not, because we cannot, realise the immense extent and value of these God-given possessions to His people Israel, and the vast influence they must exert upon the future history of our planet. We purpose quoting, as briefly as possible, a few facts to show what that empire comprises. In itself England is, comparatively, a little country, embracing about 130,000 square miles, with a population of about 30,000,000. In other parts of the world, however, we find our colonial possessions are 65 times as extensive; or, in other words, "we have one England at home and sixty-five abroad." *

"If," says Mr. Ransome, "one looks at the map of Europe and Asia, one is at once struck by the enormous extent of the territories which are possessed by the Emperor of Russia. Yet if we include British India in our calculation, then the size of the dominions of the Queen, scattered throughout the world, exceeds that of Russia by about an eighth." (This was written before the recent annexation of Upper Burmah on Jan. 1, 1886). "That is one way of looking at it. Again, another place one thinks of as very large, is the United States. The United States is slightly more than one third of the size of the British Empire! No other European State comes anywhere near these dimensions. France, with all her possessions, is only the sixteenth part of this. Germany, which has practically no colonial possessions, the fortieth."

Thus far as regards extent. Now what about the population of this empire? British India has over 250,000,000, but that of the colonies is only about 11,000,000—a most insignificant number when compared with their area, which is ever ready to receive all that can be sent of the overflowing population of the Mother Country. And yet, so rapid has the increase been of late years, that it is calculated that the British colonies will contain in another century a population of 100,000,000! The population of Australia and Tasmania has increased from about 80,000 in 1835, to about 2,500,000 at the present time, which is still less than one to the square mile of territory. The population of Canada reaches nearly 5,000,000; New Zealand about 600,000; South Africa less than 500,000 souls of English blood; and the 25 islands belonging to Great Britain in the West Indies have a population of nearly 1,250,000.

The president of the Statistical Society, Sir R. W. Rawson, says that not only is the area of the British colonies nearly 8,000,000 of square miles (a number inconceivable by human faculties), or more "than three times as large as the combined area of the colonies of all other countries, of the mother countries of these latter, and of the United Kingdom added;" but he also goes on to observe, "there is this marked difference between the colonies of England and those of other countries, that while the whole of the Portuguese, Spanish, and Dutch colonies, and almost all the French, are within the tropics in Africa, Asia, and Central America, three-fourths of the British are within the temperate zones," thus giving a decided advantage in climate to our possessions.

Southey wrote many years ago, "I want English knowledge, and the English language diffused to the East, and West, and South." Since his time every year has added to the high probability that his wish will be realised. Before the end of this century it has been calculated that the "tongue of Shakespeare" will be that of at least 150,000,000 of human beings.

The trade arising from the possession of such territories, and such a population, must be enormous; and, indeed, so it is; but for want of a wise and sound fiscal policy, it has not yet been productive of that benefit to the Mother Country which it ought to be. "Trade follows the flag;" and if there were no flag to follow, as the late Mr. Forster said, "trade would cease to exist in this country itself." From a speech by Mr. Forster we gather that the trade "which the inhabitants of Great Britain conduct throughout the world, is about one-third of the total trade of the world. The annual trade of the United Kingdom, with its possessions abroad, exports and imports, is in value £190,000,000; with other countries £170,000,000—i.e., a total of £360,000,000, or six times the value of the annual trade of the United Kingdom at the beginning of the century." From these figures we see that our trade with our own possessions, "kith and kin," is worth £20,000,000 more than our trade with the foreigner; and yet we give no preference to our own people over the foreigner. No wonder if the latter should step in, and help himself to the good things obtainable by "free trade."

Further, Mr. Forster goes on to say, "The trade of this kingdom with foreign countries in 1872 was more than £248,000,000 in value; in 1882 it was £214,000,000—a decrease in 10 years of £34,000,000; while our trade with British possessions, which in 1872 was £66,000,000, in 1882 had increased to £92,000,000 in value." Here again we see a great increase in favour of our possessions of nearly 50 per cent. The late Mr. Forster observed, "we should never have had these figures if the colonies had been separated from the mother country. We are also largely dependent for the food of the country upon our colonies; and we cannot help the fact." The importance to us of this last statement will be evident, when we find, as Mr. Forster further shows, that the "increase in the amount of wheat imported into this country in 1882 from India, North America, and Australasia, against that in 1872, was—from India, 8,000,000 cwt.; from North America, 1,000,000 cwt.; and from Australasia, 2,000,000 cwt." Thus again showing the greatest increase from our own possessions. "The total trade of imports and exports of the United Kingdom with the world outside British possessions," Mr. F. said, "has increased, from 1854 to 1882, more than 77 per cent.; but the total trade, import and export, of the United Kingdom with British possessions has increased more than 170 per cent."

To quote but a few more statistics. In his inaugural address to the Statistical Society last year, as president, Sir R. W. Rawson observed that the "total trade of the United Kingdom is a fraction greater than that of all the other European countries possessing colonies; and that the total trade of England with her colonies exceeds five-fold that of all the other countries with their own colonies. Although," he said, "the system of free trade opens the markets of the whole world to all our colonies, nearly one-half of their trade, amounting to

* See "Our Colonies and India; How We Got Them and Why We Keep Them." By Cyrus Ransome, M.A. Cassell and Co.

Digitized by Google

£199,000,000 a year, is carried on with the Mother Country, notwithstanding all the influences of distance, convenience, suitableness of products, and competition of commercial rivals, operating to reduce it." After presenting a long array of figures, the president concluded that Britain had "become great, and still maintains her greatness in no small degree by the possession of her colonies, and that, subject to those changes which time may bring about, and a concensus of interests and desires may dictate, the fixed, unwavering policy of our rulers should be that England and her colonies are one and indivisible."

Thus we are led, perforce, to the consideration of the Imperial Confederation of the whole British Empire; a problem of vast interest to us, and incalculable importance to the world. That it will be brought about in the no distant future we have no doubt; and that when it is brought about, it will secure the peace of the world more than anything yet recorded in history, except the promulgation of Christianity itself, is, we think, equally indubitable. Anglo-Israelites are doing nothing but their duty when, as British patriots, they advocate this desirable end on every favourable or unfavourable opportunity.

For the facts and figures in this article we are indebted to a paper, entitled, "Greater Britain: Our Colonies and Dependencies," by John Dennis, in "The Companion to the Almanack for 1886." London: The Stationers' Company, Stationers' Hall, Ludgate-hill.

WHAT'S IN A NAME?

Our remarks on pages 40 and 41 on the use of the words "England" or "Britain," to describe the larger of our "islands of the West," have their illustration in a dispute which has been going on, it seems, in Canada, on the same subject. We suppose the Canadian Scots have claimed the name "Britain" for the "United Kingdom," as we have done, while their opponents have deemed, like Dr. Grant, that the right word to use is "England." However that may be, it seems an Irish gentleman has turned the tables on the Scots, and declared they have no right to that name, since it belongs to the Irish! We believe there is a modicum of truth in that claim. We quote the following from the Court Journal of January 30, 1886.

In these times of universal quietude the next best thing to attacking a grievance is to manufacture one. Younger countries than ours are not so rich in good, substantial, fightable grievances, and the public are often put to sorry straits in order to get up a little mild excitement in the columns of the newspapers. In Canada just now the use of the term English where British would be more accurate is being fiercely discussed; but the Scotsmen have by far the best of the argument if they got the worst of the vote. The debate, however, has taken a novel and amusing turn by the appearance of a protest from an Irishman, who, after complaining of the insufficiency of the term British to embrace the loyal sons of Ireland, questions the right of Scots to use the word "Scotia," which was once the name of his country. In support of his contention he quotes the lines of Claudian:—

> "When Scots came thundering from the Irish shores,
> And ocean trembled, struck with hostile oars."

According to other authorities, about two centuries before Christ, Ireland was known to the Greeks as Inveona; Cæsar and Ptolemy called it Hibernia, a name which, it is said, was given by the Phœnicians; while towards the decline of the Roman Empire the country began to receive the name of Scotia, a name which was used till the eleventh century, when it passed to modern Scotland. Disputes of this kind are amusing, but profitable; yet by zeal and determination many wonderful changes have been wrought in the feelings and opinions of men, and maybe among the crazy faddists of a century hence there may be found some who will argue that he who wrote "Scotia! my dear, my native soil!" was a "thrue born Oirish jintleman."

There is no doubt, we suppose, that many of our North British—i.e., Scots—friends are sensitive on the subject of their national designation, and do not wish to be known as "the English." The matter is one of no great importance; but if we can obtain a more favourable hearing for the Identity among our Scotch-Israelites, whether Irish or North British, by using a name which is agreeable to them, and yet strictly accurate, according to the Act of Union, then we say, in the name of common sense, let us use that word and so benefit our cause.

THE GIRDLE ROUND THE EARTH.

An article with this title was sent us by Mr. E. W. Rudder, of West Kempsey, New South Wales, Australia, on October 5th, 1885, the same being published by the Sydney Daily Telegraph on the 1st of that month. It related to telegraphic communication round the globe, which now, it seems, only requires one link of 6,000 miles to complete "the girdle round the globe." New Zealand wants to be "hooked on" to America, and then the feat that Puck undertook to do for Oberon in 40 minutes will be performed by men. The Sydney writer enlarged on this subject thus:—

If any accident happened to one of the mail steamers in the neighbourhood of the Samoa Islands, it might be many weeks before the news became known in ports from which the representatives of the contracting companies could render assistance. Until the cable links San Francisco with Honolulu, Samoa and Auckland, this service cannot be made as complete and convenient for passengers, mails and merchandise as the other leading lines of ocean traffic. Moreover, the commerce of the outlying groups of Polynesia is becoming yearly of greater extent and value, and would be enormously benefited by the trunk line of the telegraph and the branches which, before many years, would be attached to it. To Australasia and Polynesia generally the advantage of a Pacific cable would be unmistakable.

The growing interest of the American Republic in the Hawaiian Islands has already led Californian capitalists to take into consideration the need of cable communication with Honolulu, and if the line of telegraph to New Zealand came to be practically entertained by any of the great telegraph companies, there would be no difficulty in securing American support.

But it is to England, perhaps, after all, that the proposed line is most important, and from which the enterprise must expect the warmest welcome. Apart from advantages of a merely mercantile character which must accrue to the great commercial centre of the world from the establishment of electric intercommunication with thousands of rich and populous islands of the tropics, the political import of the new line of telegraph would far outweigh its commercial. An independent chain of communication between Great Britain and India—free from the entanglements of European, Asiatic or African jealousies and conflicts—might at a crisis of diplomacy, as Mr. Dion Boucicault pointed out in his eloquent speech on Tuesday, prove of incalculable value to the Empire. For this cause, if for no other, this line of cable ought to commend itself to the favour of British statesmanship, which, once gained, there would need no magical Puck to ensure the speedy construction of these "missing links" in the earth's electric girdle.

The Australian journalist is forced to confess that Britain is the "great commercial centre of the world"—"the head and not the tail" in fact, in the trade and commerce of the earth, to which Australasia must look, as well as India, Africa, and China, and without which no great project, such as that in question, can hope for success. This being the case, and Sydney being about to renew a contract for a mail service between that capital and San Francisco, it is clear the new telegraphic line will be duly laid, and thus the promised girdle be put around the earth after a fashion never contemplated by Puck at all!

It will be seen that this projected girdle will be altogether in Anglo-Saxon hands and lands. Starting from the British

Digitized by Google

Islands westward, it traverses the North Atlantic, Canada, Vancouver's Island. It will then, either from Vancouver or San Francisco, traverse the ocean to Honolulu and Samoa, till it reaches Auckland in New Zealand, whence the wires stretch to India, Aden, Egypt, and so home to Great Britain, viâ Malta, Gibraltar, and London.

JUDAH WALKING TO ISRAEL.

THE Times of December 16, 1885, contained the following announcement, which the friend who sent us notice of it from Brighton introduced with the following laconic observation: "Verily, this is Judah walking to Israel!" Another friend in London wrote on the same subject, that it struck him very forcibly as being much like the commencement of "Judah walking to the House of Israel." "This is a remarkable influx," he added, "and looks very much as a preparation for the return."

INFLUX OF EXPELLED JEWS.—At the present time a very great strain is being put upon the resources of the Jewish Board of Guardians through the influx of Jews into London who have been expelled from Germany. These are, it appears, deserving and industrious artisans, who have been driven into exile simply because they were not born in Germany. The number of these poor people arriving in London is daily increasing. What adds to the difficulty with which the Jewish Board of Guardians has to cope is the arrival recently of a number of Jews from Roumania and Russia, those from the former country having been expelled by virtue of a discretionary law voted in 1881 by the Roumanian Chambers, and intended to be applied to vagrants who had no home and who did no work. It may be added that 95 per cent. of the Jews relieved at the Jewish workhouse in Devonshire-square are foreigners. These people cannot get employment, as the industries to which they belong are already overweighted.

The Scripture says that "the House of Judah shall walk to the House of Israel in those days, and they shall come together out of the land of the North to the land that I have given for an inheritance unto your fathers" (Jer. iii. 18). If the facts recorded indicate the advent of the Jews to Israel's land, then is the return of Israel and Judah united, to their land, at the doors!

THE STONE OF BETHEL.

IN Capt. Conder's book on Palestine we find the following, which a correspondent at Dawlish has sent us as quoted in Word and Work.

In the times of Abraham and Jacob, the Bible itself indicates the use of stone memorials by the early patriarchs, the stone of Bethel and the cairn of Mizpah being the most important examples. The discovery of such monuments on Mount Nebo and on mountain tops which appear (for other reasons) to represent the ancient Bamoth Baal and Baal Peor, as well as near Abel Shittim, and again near Dan, serve to give an historical connection with the Old Testament narrative, since we know that Balaam erected altars on the first three named mountains, that Israel worshipped Baal Peor at Shittim, and that Jeroboam's calf stood at Dan. It seems not impossible that the cairn of Mizpah may yet actually exist in Gilead, marking the spot where Jacob and Laban concluded their treaty, although the stone at Bethel has been vainly sought in repeated and exhaustive explorations in the neighbourhood of the city.

The above curious admission that repeated and exhaustive explorations have been vainly made in the neighbourhood of that city to find "the stone" of Bethel, reminds us of the fact that men are now, and have been for ages, searching for the Lost Ten Tribes in all parts of the earth, in vain, when all the time, in consequence of their blindness, the lost people, invisible to them, have been growing up before their eyes in Britain, till at last they are found a great and mighty nation, multitudinous and powerful, possessing their enemies' Gate, and wealthy to a degree, in the very midst or centre of the earth. So the stone of Bethel is patiently and exhaustively sought for in the neighbourhood of Bethel, by Englishmen, with the Bible in their hands. These failing to recognise the House of Joseph in the British people are oblivious to the fact that a stone, believed to be Jacob's pillow, is the very one which is the monument of this Empire, the chief and choicest jewel of this imperial race, placed in the position of honour in the Abbey Church of the metropolis, and there devoted to the noble function of being the coronation stone of the oldest dynasty of kings this world has ever seen, even monarchs of the seed of David (Jer. xxxiii. 17—26). Our exploring parties, who are spying out the land of Palestine, may weary themselves in trying to find the stone of Bethel in the Holy Land. It is not there now. "The stone that gives to drink," which was long in the holy precincts of the Tabernacle of the Temple of the Most High, is now said to be in Westminster Abbey; and there it is that Capt. Conder must look for it to find it.

MR. ARTHUR OSBORNE'S LECTURE AT CLIFTON.

ON March 26th, 1886, Mr. Arthur Osborne lectured at the Victoria Rooms, Clifton, before the Clifton and Bristol Israel's Identification Association, at their usual monthly meeting, the subject being "The Proof of our Identity Deduced from the Holy Scriptures and from Current Events." The night was very wild, wet, and stormy, and we regret therefore that the attendance at the meeting was not of the usual character. The lecturer commenced by laying down a definition. What kind of evidence are we demanding in proof of our nation's Identity? Just the same as that Philip and Nathanael required of our Lord's Identity with the Messiah—"We have found Him, of whom Moses in the law and the prophets did write" (John i. 45). This is our test. "We have found the nation of whom Moses in the law and the prophets did write." Jesus Christ answered in all points to the prophecies of the Bible, and therefore was accepted as The Christ; and if we can show that this nation answers to the prophecies in the same way, we may claim that this nation should be accepted as Israel.

God gave to Abraham certain unconditional promises, and we now find the British nation answering to those prophecies. We claim, therefore, that the British are the afterseed of Abraham. All the world has been searching for the Lost Ten Tribes for centuries. Who ever heard of search being made for the lost Jews? The latter were never lost; the former have disappeared from history, and are "lost" in that special sense. The Bible speaks of the two Houses of Israel—Ephraim and Judah—and our contention is that the two are not united now. The Rev. John Wilkinson (said the lecturer) has written a pamphlet to tell us "where the Ten Tribes are not and where they are." We differ from the reverend author most widely, for whereas he accuses our writers of "twisting and wresting the Holy Scriptures to suit our own purposes," he himself is not guiltless of doing the very same thing.

The lecturer then went over the chief of Mr. J. Wilkinson's objections, refuting them seriatim, noticing first the statement that we cannot be Israel, because we do not "dwell alone" (Num. xxiii. 9). This he met by the allegation that as a matter of fact the British do "dwell alone" in respect to the Continental nations; second, that Israel was to have no prince and no king of the Royal House of David ruling over them, according to Hosea iii. 1—5, whereas, we British have had kings and princes over us for a thousand years.

This prophecy, said the lecturer, has been fulfilled in both the houses of Israel consecutively. It was true of Ephraim-Israel for centuries; it is true of the Jews to-day. Third, in regard to the opponent's statement that Israel were to be few out of Palestine, but multitudinous only after the Return, Mr. Osborne pointed to the Scriptures, and showed that Deut. iv. 26, 27, 28, 30—38, and xxx. 1—4, 8—16. Hosea i. 10, 11, prove that the very opposite is the case. The Scriptures promise Israel of the house of Ephraim multitudinousness in their condition of exile and every other blessing. In regard to "the Gentile parenthesis," which our opponents constantly bring forward against our views, Mr. Osborne showed that it had no foundation whatever in the Word of God. The whole tenor of Scripture went the other way.

In proof of Our Identity, the lecturer quoted the promises to Abraham in Gen. xii. 12; xvii. 1—7; and alluding to Gal. iii. 16, maintained that nowhere in the Old Testament was there any promise which could be clearly taken to identify "the seed" with Christ. The seed spoken of in the Old Testament Scriptures was a multitudinous, powerful people, but not Christ; and he argued therefore that the promise of the Messiah must have been given to Abraham when he was in Mesopotamia, where Acts vii. 2, says God appeared to him before he received the Promises of the "many seeds" in Canaan. God promised that the great and mighty nation should come of Abraham, and declared that having scattered them He would "gather them one by one again" (Isa. xxvii. 12).

Digitized by Google

It is not our business to show how God did this. But as He said He would do it, we have to accept the conclusion and show the fact now realised. Gen. xxii. 15—18 was quoted, also Gen. xxvi. 1—4, xxxv. 11; and the moment you find, said the lecturer, a people who from small beginnings have become a great and mighty nation, and then have split up into a nation and company of nations going forth to bless and govern the whole earth, then you may say you have discovered the house of Israel, now lost to human ken, for these are her "signs." I claim, said the lecturer, that the Anglo-Saxon race responds to the description, and that they are they!

Another class of objections was noticed at this point—namely, those that declared that Israel had received her promised blessings in past times, as 1 Kings iv. 20 is said to prove. Mr. Osborne met this by showing that Hosea i. 10 promised Israel of the Ten Tribes multitudinousness long after they had gone into exile, and that they should enjoy that blessing in exile itself. Gen. xv. 18 was quoted to show that the land promised had not yet been given to Israel according to the boundaries specified. So far the Scriptural testimony.

But what say the current events of the day? Do they support our claim and fulfil the prophecies? They do! We see Canada, America, Australia, New Zealand, Tasmania, South Africa, occupied by one race, the Anglo-Saxon, which, as its head-quarters, holds these small Islands of the West. Let us hear what the Echo, a Radical paper, says on the subject. I quote, said Mr. Osborne, from the issue of October 13th, 1885. "The English nation evinces no signs of decay, but day by day gives evidence of expansiveness, of flexibility, of firmness, and continued vitality. A nation that can exist and continue to prosper for 1,000 years; that can invent a Parliamentary form of Government destined to be universally imitated for all time; that can plant and nurture infant Colonies which will grow into STRONG NATIONS; that can apply science to industry and cosmopolitanise commerce—such a nation is not likely to be arrested in its progress or turned out of its pathway by any intrigue hatched, or obstructive policy promoted by the Irish party."

The lecturer quoted largely from Moore's "Lost Tribes," the "Saxons East and West," pp. 90—95, also Mr. Gladstone's testimony to the greatness and power of the British races, as well as Sir J. Macdonald's speech on Canada, as delivered at St. George's Club, Hanover-square, and as recorded in the Daily Telegraph of the 5th of January, 1886. "There are prophets," said Sir J. Macdonald, "who predict the decadence of England. That might be the case if England had no Colonies. But in them no limit can be set to the population and numerical strength of the British Empire. I believe (he added) that there must be Imperial Federation. I believe that as the auxiliary NATIONS of Australia, Canada, and South Africa increase, the present relations with the Mother Country, comfortable and pleasant as they are, cannot remain permanently fixed. We in Canada are ready to sacrifice our last man and our last shilling in defence of the Empire and flag of the Mother Country. We are Englishmen, Scotchmen, and Irishmen far from the centre, but still clinging to the Mother Country. And besides, there is a feeling that England is the great moral force of the world; and that, as she is the greatest naval power in the world, she must always command the world. England and her Colonies already control the sea, and will enforce peace upon the world. . . . We may look forward to our children and children's children occupying Canada and developing its extensive resources, and doing so under the Flag of England. (Loud cheers)." Such was Sir J. Macdonald's testimony to the fact that Great Britain and her Colonies are a nation and a company of nations likely to control and dominate the world for good. We find thus that the testimony of our leading men, and even of the Radical papers, goes to show that our race is ubiquitous, powerful, having its language rapidly spreading through the earth. Its language is already the language of commerce. It is rapidly being acquired by other races as the best medium of intercommunication, and even Mr. Gladstone bears testimony to the fact. The evidence of Scripture is exactly corroborated by the facts of the day. Ezek. xxxvii. shows there is but one nation recognised in God's plan destined to become a company of nations, and these are destined to become one and confederate. They are to be seen a "company of nations." And this, as our own history shows, must be the case before the return. The lecturer also mentioned the Sabbath as one of Israel's most important signs—one that our nation alone exhibits. He quoted Exod. xv. 25; xvi. and xxxi. 12—17 in support of his argument. He concluded an excellent lecture by calling on his hearers to pursue the inquiry by deep study of the Scriptures of truth, and by an intelligent observation of the events of the day, to see if they fulfil the prophecies of the living God in Israel's favour, in the circumstances of our own most favoured race.

THE MAORIES.—"The reports of the medical officers in the native districts of New Zealand confirm the prevailing belief that the Maories are dying out. It seems that the establishment of a peaceful regime among the tribes, instead of tending to increase their numbers, has largely resulted in the decadence of the race. The security against attack which they now enjoy has led them to build their habitations on low-lying and badly-drained ground, which is particularly favourable to the development of diseases of the respiratory organs."—Englishman, November 13th, 1885.

"The nation and kingdom that will not serve (restored Ephraim) shall perish; yea, those nations shall be utterly wasted" (Isa. lx. 12). And so the Maories, the Celts of Ireland, the Celts of France, the North American Indians, are 'wasting,' because they will not serve the Saxon! Faithful is the God of Israel!"—The Stone Kingdom, Dec. 1, 1885.

Russia is obeying the LORD God of Israel. "Thus saith the LORD God: Behold, I am against thee, O Gog, prince of Rosh, Meshech, and Tubal (Russia, Muscovy, and Tobolsk): . . . . and I will bring thee forth, and all thine army . . . . Persia, Cush, and Put with them . . . in the latter years thou shalt come into the land that is brought back from the sword, that is gathered out of many peoples, upon the mountains of Israel . . . . and thou shalt ascend, thou shalt come like a storm, thou shalt be like a cloud to cover the land . . . . and thou shalt come up against My people Israel as a cloud to cover the land: it shall come to pass in the latter days, that I will bring thee against My land, that the nations may know thee, when I shall be sanctified in thee, O Gog, before their eyes."—Ezek. xxxviii. 3 to 16.

The "threatening cloud" can only travel in one direction. China and Japan turn it back from the Pacific; China and India turn it back from Eastern Turkestan; India and Afghanistan drive it further West, and the Austro-Hungarian and German Empire send it back Eastward again. Persia and Armenia are the only outlets, and these are the countries through which God will bring the "storm."—The Stone Kingdom, Dec. 1, 1885.

Correspondence.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD AND THE CHURCH OF GOD.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR.—Surgeon-General Grant has fallen into a strange mistake, as to my article which appeared in the BANNER OF ISRAEL, of the 3rd March.

In his paper, March 24th, he says: "I cannot therefore agree with Mr. Hanan, that the Kingdom of God upon earth can exist separately from His Church, or His Church separately from His Kingdom." Whereas my paper was written to shew that the Kingdom consisted of the Church and State in union: My words are "It is manifest that the Church can exist, and ever has, and does exist perfect in herself apart from all State connexion. So also the State can exist and be God-fearing apart from connexion with the Church, but the Kingdom of God consists of the divinely appointed State and the divinely appointed Church in union."

Dr. Grant admits in same article that the Church, and many branches of it, can exist apart from State connexion: and he is evidently contending for the very same idea as that which is, as I conceive, the plainly expressed meaning of the words which "he cannot agree with." Faithfully yours, DENIS HANAN.

A CONFERENCE on the Identity will be held at the "Ark" Church, Rotherhithe, on Easter Monday and Tuesday, each day at 2.30 and 7.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed: — "Philo-Israel," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

SUBSCRIPTIONS

	£ s. d.
Annual Subscription for one copy weekly (including the Twelve Double Numbers) postfree	0 7 6
Two Copies (including Double Numbers)	0 13 6
Three Copies " " " "	1 0 4
Four Copies " " " "	1 5 6
Six Copies " " " "	1 16 4

Post Office Orders to be made payable at the head office, St. Martin's-le-grand, London, to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C., and W. H. GUEST & Co. 29, Paternoster-row, London.

The Editor cannot undertake to return rejected MSS. unless stamps for the purpose be sent. Parties requiring an answer should enclose a stamp.

Contents Bills and Show Cards may be obtained on application to the Publishers.

Advertisements should be sent to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

Prepaid Advertisements are inserted at the rate of 30 words for 1s. 4d.

TO BE SOLD, the First and Five following Volumes of "LIFE FROM THE DEAD"; also the First and Five following Volumes of "GLORY LEADER." Address, J. VICKERY, Alcombe, Dunster.

THE NEW QUARTERLY PART

OF

ISRAEL'S HOPE & DESTINY

Is now Ready, and Contains:

What is the Mark of the Beast? By the Editor. — A Short Essay on the Second Coming of Our Lord. By J. T. Crosthwait. —The Resurrection Morn—The Descendants of Ishmael and of Esau Equally Guilty with the Jews of the Blood of Christ. By the late Capt. H. P. Keighly—Christian Truth and British-Israelism, their Relation and Manifold Developments. By. W. S. Cavill. —Workers at their Work: Mr. W. H. Peters, J.P.—Divine Selection. By T. C. Westfield. —The Afghans are the Lost Ten Tribes. Are They?—"Without a King, and Without a Prince." By Surgeon-General J. M. Grant, M.D.—Joseph's Birthright. By the Editor. —"Art Thou the King of the Jews?" By J. S. Lowe.—The Mystery of the Prophetic Dates Unsealed. By A. MacPhail.—In Memoriam: Mr. Robert Banks.—The Liverpool British-Israel Identity Association.

Price 6d., by Post 7d.; Annual Subscription 2s. 6d., post free.

London: ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.; GUEST, HAYWORTH & Co., 29, Paternoster-row, E.C.

PUBLISHED BY ROBT. BANKS & SON, RACQUET COURT, FLEET STREET, E.C.

WORKS BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

The Geography of the Gates. With Map and six full page, and one double-page, Illustrations, printed on plate paper. 208 pages, in handsome cloth, gilt Price 3s. 6d., post free 3s. 10d.

Our Identity with the House of Israel. Price 4d. Reprinted from "Clifton Chronicle Letters"

The History of the House of Israel; How they were Lost, and How they were Found, Told for the Children. Price 6d., cloth 1s.; post free 7d. and 1s. 1d. Fourth Edition. Eleventh thousand.

Philo-Israel's Leaflets. Four pages Crown 8vo Price 1s. 6d. per 100, postage 2d. No. 1.—"The Identity of the British with Lost Israel." 2.—"The Glory of God." 3.—An Address to British Seamen. 4.—An Address to British Soldiers. No. 5.—The Communion of the Body and Blood of Our Lord Jesus Christ Viewed in the Light of Our Identity. 6.—The Bible and the Jew. 7.—The Jewish People. 8.—Lo-Ammi; or, the Gentilisation of Ten-Tribed Israel. 9.—The Atonement. 10.—Is Our Identity Evangelical, or Non-Evangelical in its Tendency? No. 11.—Cui Bono? No. 12.—The "Thoughts" of God Towards Israel, Judah, and the Gentile Nations. 13.—The Teutonic Theory—Is It True? 14.—An Address to the Police Force of Great Britain. 15.—An Address to Israel's Missionaries and Their Supporters. 16.—The One Seed, Christ. 17.—An Address to Israel's Electors. Price 1s. 6d. per 100.

Printed for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C. PUBLISHED BY GUEST, HAYWORTH, & Co., 29, PATERNOSTER-ROW, WEDNESDAY, APRIL 14, 1886. All rights reserved.

PRICE FIVE SHILLINGS.

"Freemasonry from the Great Pyramid of Ancient Times."

How formed among the rulers and skilled craftsmen to perpetuate an order of succession, passed along by the ancient Khasdim, Khesed, Trustworthy (or modern Freemasonry) through the land of Media by the Chaldæs to the chosen people of Israel, and travelled as they travelled, dispensing their usages and customs among the earlier Anglo-Saxons. With illustrations shewing the parts of the interior of the Pyramid to be removed, disclosing the long-hidden chambers, developing further research.

To be had of the Author, T. Holland, 2, Charles-street, Rutland Gate; Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-st., E.C.; and Guest, Hayworth & Co., 29, Paternoster-row.

A Thousand of the first edition sold in a few weeks for Great Britain, Ireland, Egypt, Natal, India, and America

ISRAEL'S WORLD:

Origin and Destiny of British Race, Colonies, and Empire; according to Scripture, History, and Signs of Our Times.

BY REV. HENRY ROE.

Price 2d., post free 2½d. R. Banks & Son, Racquet-court

Also by the same Author, "Consecration," 4d.; "Going to Africa," 1s.; "Fernando Po Mission," 1s.; "West African Scenes," 2s. E. Stock, 52, Paternoster-row, London, E.C. Rev. H. Roe, St. Ives, Cornwall.

FOR ONE WEEK ONLY!

TO BE GIVEN AWAY!—FREE PRESENT! GOVERNMENT HEARTHRUGS.

5,000 LEATHER PURSES TO BE GIVEN AWAY!

B. of I. FREE PRESENTATION COUPON.

On receipt of this Coupon and 26 stamps, agree to forward one BEAUTIFUL GOVERNMENT HEARTHRUG, 6 ft. long and 3 ft. wide, in various designs and colours. Fern leaves, oak leaves, flowers, Turkish, cat and kittens, Irish harp centre, and the new tiger design. Suitable for drawing-room, dining-room, parlour, bedroom, or kitchen; and I also agree to present every purchaser with a beautiful city-made Leather Purse.

(Signed) J. WATTS.

Two Rugs, with two presents, 3s. 10d., or 50 stamps; 6 Rugs, 11s.

P.O.O. to be made payable at Low Hill Branch to J. WATTS, 113, Brunswick-road, Liverpool.

LUNG OWBRIDGE'S LUNG TONIC, TONIC

THE MIGHTY HEALER.

Save Your Lives by Taking

OWBRIDGE'S LUNG TONIC.

It has a power over diseases hitherto unknown in Medicine.

Are you at all Weak-chested, or inclined to be Consumptive, with just a touch of Cough now and then?

"Try this Wonderful Medicine." The Cough and Weakness will disappear as if by magic, and you will feel a strength and power you never had before.

HAVE YOU A COUGH?
A DOSE WILL RELIEVE IT.
HAVE YOU A COLD?
A DOSE AT BEDTIME WILL REMOVE IT.

Bronchitis and Asthma it relieves instantly. The Spasms of Coughing so dreadful in Whooping Cough become less with each dose of the medicine. —

Prepared by W. T. OWBRIDGE, Chemist, Hull.

Sold in bottles 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d. & 11s. by all Chemists and Patent Medicine Vendors. Wholesale all London and Provincial Houses.

EASTER CARDS! EASTER CARDS!

At least 50 per cent. saved by buying from us!

ASTOUNDING OFFERS.

To still further popularise an already deservedly favourite custom we have decided this year to surpass every previous offer in the business of Easter Cards.

We have made up a few thousands of packets of Easter Cards of assorted values as per the list hereafter set out, which will be seen to cover the requirements of everybody in variety, quality, and quantity, and we guarantee the value of each parcel to be such as will astonish the purchaser.

☞ Note the List with its Prices.

No. 1 (E) PARCEL.

Containing 3 Easter Cards, worth 6d. each, in folding Ivorine, hand-painted on silvered Cards. Price 1s. only; 13 stamps.

No. 2 (E) PARCEL.

12 Easter Cards of original and favourite designs, a choice selection. Price 1s. only; 13 stamps.

No. 3 (E) PARCEL.

20 Beautiful Easter Cards. Wonderful value. Cards in this packet worth 2d., 3d., or 4d. each. All for 1s. only, or 13 stamps.

No 4 (E) PARCEL.

12 Cards for 1s. 8d. Wonderful value. This packet is honestly worth 2s. 6d.

No. 5 (E) PARCEL.

25 Easter Cards for 1s. 8d. only. Nothing less than 1d. cards in this parcel, and some worth much more.

No. 6 (E) PARCEL.

8 Valuable Cards for Easter, worth 4d. and 6d. each. Our price 2s. 6d. for the parcel.

No. 7 (E) PARCEL.

20 Cards, worth at least 4s. For 2s. 6d. only.

No. 8 (E) PARCEL.

100 Easter Cards for half-a-crown. Happy is the man or woman who can make 100 hearts glad for 2s. 6d. only!

No. 9 (E) PARCEL.

20 Exquisite Easter Cards for 5s. only, in Ivory, Porcelain, Silk, &c., hand-painted, worth at least 10s. 6d.

No. 10 (E) PARCEL.

50 Selected Easter Cards for 5s. only.

No. 11 (E) PARCEL.

100 Suitable Easter Cards of splendid design and workmanship, a surprisingly cheap assortment for 5s. only. No cards of less value than 1d. each included in this parcel.

No. 12 (E) PARCEL.

A choice and varied assortment of the best makes in this season's Easter Cards, selected with great care from the best houses only. We reckon the parcel to be worth £1 1s., but by reason of our being able to buy largely we can take 50 per cent. off this and let you have it at 10s. 6d.

In ordering from this list please name paper.

To ensure the satisfaction which it is our endeavour at all times to deserve we shall hold all payments on deposit for ten days, and any one not satisfied with their parcel and returning to us within the ten days shall have their money returned in full, or other parcels or pictures from our catalogue to the full value in exchange, if desired.

New Oil Picture just published by us,

AN ANGEL'S CARE.

Size, 27 by 22. Price 2s. 6d. each, and the companion picture,

AN ANGEL GUIDE.

Same size and price; the pair for 4s. 6d.

CHRIST GIVING SIGHT TO THE BLIND.

New Oil Picture, size. 21 by 16. Very impressive and splendidly finished. Price 1s.; post free for 15 stamps.

OUR NEW CATALOGUE

Is now ready, containing the best and cheapest variety of Oil Pictures, Chromos, Lithographs, Scraps, etc., ever catalogued; also Easter, Birthday, and Love Cards. Catalogue free for 1d. stamp.

THE BIBLE PICTURE AGENCY,

MASON ROBERTS, Principal,

145, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

THE BRITISH ISRAELITES;

Or, Evidences of our Hebrew Origin, gathered from History, Genealogy, Philology, and Heathen Customs. To which is added the Scriptural Testimony of Prophecy Compared with Existing Facts, Answers to Objections, and a Lecture on the Great Pyramid.

By LIEUT.-COLONEL H. W. J. SENIOR 1st Bengal Infantry.

"We can safely recommend it as an excellent guide to the learned and an invaluable mine of wealth to the Anglo-Israelite controversialist. We hope all our readers will secure a copy, and have it often in their hands.—Banner of Israel

With Illustrations, cloth gilt, 178 pp., 3s. 6d. BAGSTER & SONS, LMTD., 15, PATERNOSTER ROW, E.C

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."

(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India.)

"And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the Forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS of the EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. X., No. 486. Entered at Stationers' Hall.] WEDNESDAY, APRIL 21, 1886. PRICE ONE PENNY.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
British Law in Ireland Clothed in a "Foreign Garb"	157
The Two Great Rising Powers in the East	158
Our Bath Opponent	159
The Rev. A. C. Macdonald on Egypt	160
Anglo-Israel's Geographical Position. By W. L. Blore, F. R. Met. S.	161
England and Ireland. By C. Piazzi Smyth, F.R.A.S.	162
Review	163
Lay of the Primrose. By T. W. B.	164

BRITISH LAW IN IRELAND CLOTHED IN A "FOREIGN GARB."

THE Prime Minister, in his famous speech made in the House of Commons on Thursday, April 8th, when he introduced his Bill to give Ireland Home Rule and an independent Legislature, made the assertion over and over again that the true remedy for Irish discontent was to give Ireland "Laws stript of their foreign garb;" in other words, that the British (Englishmen, Welshmen, and Scots), were foreigners in respect to the Irish people, and that the latter naturally resented by hatred and violence the attempt of the alien to legislate for them, and to force on them the law they had not made for themselves.

This is, in truth, the language of the Irish Separatists, and gives them on the high authority of the Prime Minister of England, all the justification they want to sever the last links of the connection they hate, and claim independence of the "alien" Power. Surely never were words so idly, recklessly, and dangerously used—words sure to sow the seed of a terrible crop of turbulence, violence, and ill-will, which will render peaceful government in Ireland impossible for years to come! Mr. Gladstone, by telling the discontented Irish Catholics that their English and Scotch fellow-subjects are "foreigners," has put a sword into their hands which will work havoc in our Constitution for many a day. It is true that the Premier in his elaborate scheme for the future government of Ireland imagines that he has fenced his scheme about with a hundred safeguards to preserve the Union; and that like Norway and Sweden, and Austria and Hungary, it will only need to give the Irish such a Parliament as he has devised to bring them peace. But the Irish leaders already say they will only accept this boon as an "instalment," and that the stipulations as to the collection of the Customs and Excise Revenue must be amended and cancelled before they can accept them. These arrangements to secure the Irish contribution to Imperial expenditure have the fatal objection that they impose taxation upon the Irish for Imperial purposes without giving them representation in the Imperial Parliament. The scheme Mr. Gladstone has put forth is full of dangers and inconsistencies, and our wonder is that a man of so extensive an experience, so notably an "old Parliamentary hand," should imagine that his plan will be accepted by this nation, or that a coalition now impending of such men as Lord Hartington, Lord Salisbury, Mr. Chamberlain, Mr. Goschen, Mr. Trevelyan, and others, will permit him to imperil the unity of the Empire by such a crude scheme as he has put forth, acceptable to no one. The salient points of the proposed Bill are these: An Irish Parliament will sit in Dublin. It will consist of two Houses, the Upper of 103 members, partly elected, and 206 in the Lower House to be elected as at present.

The Parliaments are to last only five years. They will confine themselves to Irish affairs only. The Irish Peers and Irish members will no longer sit in the British Houses of Parliament.

The Irish Parliament will have complete control of the Irish constabulary, civil servants, judges, and post-office officials. Irish Customs and Excise will be collected by the Imperial Government, paid to a separate account and used only for Irish purposes.

The Irish Parliament will impose what taxation it pleases.

It will have no power to establish or endow any religion.

The Irish people to contribute to Imperial taxation $\frac{1}{15}$th of the Imperial expenditure.

There are other provisions too connected with the Viceroyalty which in practice cannot work and are sure to bring the whole scheme, if it could pass the two Houses of Parliament at St. Stephens, in ruins down to the ground.

Meanwhile, what does the Identity say to the whole of the elaborate plan Mr. Gladstone has evolved to split the British Empire into two, and to sunder the two islands God has united as the habitation of one race? It says that the scheme is doomed to failure, and that God will not permit the House of Israel again to become severed by disruption as before. The effect of Mr. Gladstone's encouragement to disloyalty and rebellion will, of course, bear wretched fruit in making the task of statesmen in the future hazardous and troublesome to a degree; for hopes have been raised which cannot be gratified, and a premium has been offered by our foremost statesman, to rebellion and violence, which will by-and-bye end in bloodshed and loss of many lives. We must lay it down as a postulate that the separate legislature cannot be given to Ireland, because it would be certain in the present state of mind of Mr. Parnell and his followers, to lead to the separation of the nations, if we could patiently submit to such a terrible disgrace. But we cannot do it, and, being Israel, there is no provision in the promises of God's Word for such a disruption as the policy of Mr. Gladstone plainly puts before us.

Digitized by Google

The isles of the West, "the isles afar off," are the heritage of Israel, and we have as a nation had Ireland linked to our fortunes ever since the Tribes were collected in Great Britain (Isa. xxiv. 15, Jer. xxxi. 10). The message to "the isles afar off," including Ireland, is that "He that scattered Israel will gather him, and keep him as a shepherd doth his flock;" and how can this promise be fulfilled by the violent separation of Ireland from Great Britain, now contemplated, and by the legacy of civil war between Ulster in the Protestant part of North Ireland and the South and West, where the seditious and disloyal majority of one-and-a-half millions of Roman Catholics and Canaanitish Irish presume to dictate to Mr. Gladstone and to the nation he unhappily rules at the present moment with something like a rod of iron?

We beg our readers not to be dismayed at the dark and dreary prospect affairs just now present to the perplexed vision of our people as to the Irish Question. God's plans are not ours, but they have for their object Israel's good and Israel's final happiness. Let us trust Him who, foreseeing our distresses and our perplexities, has given us this assurance in Isa. xlii. 16, "These things will I do unto them, and NOT forsake them."

THE TWO GREAT RISING POWERS IN THE EAST.

THE thoughtful among us have long perceived that there are in the East "two really influential Powers," towards one or other of which all the native oriental races and kingdoms must eventually gravitate, and indeed are already leaning. France desires to be one of these Eastern dominant Powers, and hence her restless policy in Tonquin and Annam, and again in Madagascar; her object being to counteract the influence of Israel in China, and the preponderance the latter has already attained as the Mistress of Hindostan in the Indian Ocean.

But this is only a French dream. It is the revival of one she had in the latter part of the last century and in the beginning of this; which proved a delusive one. She then thought to possess herself of India, and to become the paramount power of the East with the trade and commerce thereof; but God had otherwise decreed. She had to make way for Israel throughout the whole Peninsula of Hindostan; to surrender the Mauritius, and to take up a humble and very subordinate position at a few spots where she is suffered to remain, till the outbreak of the next war between the Powers, when she will forthwith be forced to retire, and leave the whole of the East to the real kings thereof, God's people Israel. Germany also has a hankering for a position of commercial prosperity in the same regions, and accordingly has seized part of New Guinea; but her chances of decided supremacy in the Indian seas are nil.

Spain, Portugal, and Holland have no real desire to pose as great Eastern potentates, and therefore they may be dismissed from consideration.

There remains one great and mighty rival to Israel's supremacy in the East, and she is the same prophetic power, Gog Magog, which Ezekiel tells us is destined to try conclusions with God's people in Palestine, in their struggle for the dominion of the world—a struggle to end in the utter undoing of the enemy of the people of the Lord. Russia in the East as in the West is busily preparing for her contest with her destined enemy, and is building up her power in the far East, as she is doing in her Western frontiers, to insure her final anticipated victory. In vain! There is a limit to her advance; and in Palestine she has to meet her doom, and to yield the coveted sovereignty of the world to the British-Israelite Power, which from the foundation of the world has been promised "the kingdom, and dominion, and greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, as the people of the saints of the Most High." Meanwhile, even the Times records the fact that the day is at hand when the Eastern nations, the Japanese and Chinese, to wit, will have to choose between the friendship of these "two really influential powers," and decide for themselves to which they will submit. The one empire is represented by a fortress gate, Vladivostock by name; the other by a matchless island gate, Port Hamilton, situated just by Japan and in the narrow strait between that empire and the Corea; a gate very recently acquired, and now held firmly by the gate-holders of the world, according to the prophecies (Gen. xxii. 17). The leading journal discoursing about the need of our release of the Japanese from certain commercial restrictions which they have now outgrown, and regarding the policy that we should adopt in order that we may, by the liberality of our treatment of the Japanese, conciliate the Chinese and induce them to enter into national and commercial relations with ourselves, made the following observations:—

> It is well-known to those who are conversant with the less obvious currents of Eastern politics that, in the opinion of Japanese statesmen, the time is approaching when they will have to choose between the friendship of Russia and that of England. Vladivostock and Port Hamilton are the symbols of the veiled opposition which exists in the furthest East between the two really influential powers. It is not on the Afghan frontier alone that the two great antagonists are watching one another. The Pacific is almost as important to us as India is; and it is quite as important to Russia as are the Khanates. It is a fact that for a long time past Russia has been coquetting with Japan, as with China, and there will at least be no harm done if, by putting Japan under a strong obligation to ourselves, we do something to show them that our friendship is the more valuable of the two. This is, moreover, what the Japanese desire.
>
> Nothing is more certain than that they look to England for the type of civilisation which they would prefer to follow; that they are interested in England, learn the English language, and imitate the English habits as closely as they can. Japan, says a native of the country, if she is to have her throat bound with silken cords, prefers that they should be of England's making; but what she would like best of all is that England's hand should unbind her. Again, her statesmen are well aware of the present tendencies of Anglo-Chinese policy. They greet it with satisfaction; they rejoice to see a country so closely akin to them and so near a neighbour as China, working in concert with the country which they admire most among the nations of the West. They are anxious to be admitted to a share in the understanding, or covert alliance, or whatever it may be called, which exists between England and the Government of Pekin. In every way it would be an excellent thing if this could be so, and not the least for the help it would give us in the great object—an object beside which most of the aims and schemes of Western politics seem trivial—of opening up China to the trade of the world.
>
> A prosperous and contented Japan would be the best argument that could be offered to China by those who wish to bring her into the family of nations. But what prospect can there be of persuading China to quit her seclusion so long as we hold up for her edification the spectacle of the present treatment of Japan? China has always professed to despise her neighbour for yielding to the flimsy temptations offered her by Europe. If Japan, after more than yielding to all that the Powers have demanded, is to be perpetually treated de haut en bas, China may take the hint, and may elect to remain as she is, without her railways and her telegraphs, but with her freedom from Western control. Thus a liberal treatment of the wishes of Japan would be of the greatest indirect, as well as direct, service to England in that most important of her peaceful campaigns—the campaign against the obstructiveness and the stagnation of China.

We see thus that God has already given to the British Empire advantages which the Russians vainly desire to obtain. They have built up a vast fortress in Vladivostock, to the North of China, by which they hoped to dominate the sea board of China, Japan, and the Corea. But already they are opposed by the British Gates of Hong Kong in the South, and Port Hamilton in the North; and we have besides acquired a dominant position with the Japanese by reason of the preference they evince for the English language and for British institutions. China also is permeated with British influences at the 14 odd treaty ports and by our missionaries inland. Our commanding commercial navy, and the opening for trade which the railways and rivers of our new possession have now given us in Upper Burmah, will speedily teach the Chinese that they cannot hope longer to keep out the mercantile energy of our commercial princes, but must admit them to the benefit of intercourse with them on equal terms.

Digitized by Google

It is remarkable that our secular journalists, writing without reference to the Holy Scriptures, blindly testify to our nation's greatness and also to the certainty that a contest for supremacy awaits us, both in the far East and also nearer home with "our great antagonist" Russian-Gog. These, our "enemies," are watching us, according to the Times, on the Afghan Frontier, as well as on the coasts of China and Japan. We know, too, that they have an eye steadfastly fixed upon the Great Gate of their house at Constantinople, and only wait their opportunity to speak the last word of the Eastern Question by taking possession of it as their own. In vain! In vain! That Gate is not for them! God gave it by oath to Israel 4,000 years ago! (Gen. xxii. 17); and India, too, shall not be theirs, because it is God's gift to His people Israel, by a promise which is also upon oath, written in Psa. ii. 8 and cxi. 6. Doomed to disappointment in India and in Constantinople, too, the Russian greed for territory in the Holy Land will receive that tremendous punishment which Ez k. xxxviii. and xxxix. so graphically record. Knowing this, shall Gog-Magog succeed in China and Japan, where British-Israel is already materially as strong as she? where, besides, ere long, treaties of offensive and defensive alliance with such Empires as those of China and Japan, will make Russia's attempts at conquest and dominion, as hopeless as they are destined to be in Palestine, God's Word being our true and steadfast witness? And for these splendid prospects, shall not Israel praise the Lord?

OUR BATH OPPONENT.

THE review by Surgeon-Gen. J. M. Grant of G. M. G.'s last work in opposition to Our Identity is so exhaustive that it leaves little to be said in further refutation of an attack which deals with worn-out arguments, and has nothing new to say. The new pamphlet is dated "Bath, 1885," and is to be had of "Charles H. Seers, 1, Argyle-street." We hope our readers will procure it, to see exactly what our opponent's line of argument is, when the weapon is the allegation that the Ten Tribes are now still partly mingled with the heathen (p. 8, 21), partly united with the Jews to-day (p. 32), and wandering still among the Gentiles (p. 28), but waiting till the coming of Christ or David, their king and prince, to be restored to favour in union with Judah (p. 16), but no more as a separate kingdom for ever (p. 9).

These references suffice to prove that, on G. M. G.'s own showing, the Ten Tribes, or Israel, are somewhere at the present time; and mingled with the heathen, or wandering still among the Gentiles, are a people yet waiting for their restoration to favour. The only difference, then, between our opponent and ourselves is that, whereas we say the Ten Tribes have been gathered into a consolidated, powerful nation in the Isles of the West, G. M. G. declares the Scriptural testimony denies this, and shows they are still a wretched wandering remnant, mingled either with the Gentiles or Jews, or both, and destined never to be recognised till the Second Advent, or till David, their prince and king, even Christ, appears (p. 16).

In proof of his statements, G. M. G. refers us to 2 Kings xvii., Isa. vii. 8, Hosea i. 6, ii. 6, iii., iv. 6, 7, ix. 11, 15—17, Amos v. 2, vii. 1—8, viii. 2—12, ix. 8.

These passages, our opponent declares, we do not venture to face, because they make against our views, and "they will not submit to a gloss" (p. 8). "She shall rise no more" is declared to sound the death-knell of the Ten-Tribed kingdom, and to prove the impossibility of the same ever rising again in Great Britain as a kingdom such as we describe. We are not aware that Anglo-Israelites have ever desired to evade these texts, or to shrink from dealing with them. We have ourselves alluded to them all, and shown that they have each and all been fulfilled in the history of the House of Joseph. The house in question was cast away and suffered every one of the judgments mentioned in the texts which G. M. G. brings in triumph against us. The kingdom was destroyed and rose no more as the Kingdom of Israel in the Holy Land—it was destroyed from off the face of the prophetic earth. The people wandered from sea to sea, from the North even to the East, and for centuries they sought in vain for the Word of the Lord. It was withheld from them, and none was able to raise the nation up. They became rank idolaters—abandoned by their God—were joined to their idols, and lapsed into the condition of nomades and wanderers among the Gentiles. No one attempts to deny all this. These things are part of our case, and prove Our Identity. What we add, and what G. M. G. omits to consider, is that, concurrently with the punishment and denunciation of God's wrath, the Lord added, as regards the House of Joseph or Israel, the blessing which reversed the sentence, and, but for the banishment, left Israel supremely favoured. Thus in Hosea i. the curse of ver. 6, which related only to the outcasting and banishment of Israel, is followed by the blessing of ver. 10 and 11. There, even in banishment, Israel is promised multitudinousness, and national conversion to God, and after that, restoration to the land with Judah (ver. 11, compare Jer. iii. 18). So Hosea ii. 6 is followed by God's promise to Israel of conversion and gathering, not in their land but in the wilderness, with blessings innumerable, spiritual and temporal, to follow (ver. 14 to 23). The denunciations of chapter iv. 6 and 7 are followed by the comforting promises of chapter vi. 1 and 2, with a limit of punishment as to time, which brings Israel's hour of blessing to synchronise with the present day in which our own lot is cast. So, again, the punishment denounced in chapter ix. 11 and 14 to 17, is followed by the Lord's own resolve not to destroy but to cherish and build up Ephraim, then located in the West (chapter xi. 1 to 12). The threats and declarations of evil of Amos v. 2, vii. 1 to 8, viii. 2, 12, and ix. 8, are no doubt terrible; but Ephraim drank the dregs of God's wrath during the centuries of their penal wanderings, which had their termination in mercy, as stated in Amos ix. 8 and 9. Then was fulfilled God's promise not "utterly to destroy the House of Jacob" (ver. 8), and then the stones of Israel, "sifted among all nations," never fell even as to one of them to the earth! The day of Christ came with full consolation and mercy to that house what time ver. 11 and 12 were fulfilled in the manner detailed by Acts xv. 14—17, by the acceptation of the Gospel by those Gentiles who were David's fallen "tabernacle," the Hebrew kingdom of which he was king.

In omitting and forgetting all these comforting texts, our opponent has not acted fairly by the Word and works of God, but has been guilty of suppressing what was unfavourable to his own preconceived notions in the manner that he unjustly charges against our writers. He omits to record the fact which Zech. x. 6 declares, regarding the House of Joseph as distinguished from the House Judah, that, having cast them off, as G. M. G. delights to note, God proclaimed His purpose that they "should be as though He had not cast them off—"for am the Lord their God, and will hear them."

Why does G. M. G. take no notice of such a glorious text as that? And, again, why does he pass over that other promise which Dr. Grant has mentioned, in Ezek. xi. 16 (R. V.), where God said of the Ten Tribes, "Whereas I have scattered them among the countries, yet will I be to them a sanctuary for a little while in the countries where they are come?"

Digitized by Google

Our opponent, G. M. G., who we are told has entered the lists before against us, charges Identity writers freely with dealing dishonestly with God's Word. But what are we to say to a writer who wrests the Lord's own prophecies, and will not allow even Him to express His own intentions? Matt. xxi. 43 is so dealt with. The Lord declared, "The kingdom of God should be taken from the Jews and given (ethnei) to a nation." G. M. G. will not allow that! "Ethnei" does not mean "a nation," but "the Church of Christ" (p. 30). This nation, he says, is "the elect Church of Acts xv. 14;" whereas in that verse the elect Church is not once mentioned, but the "Laos," or the Israelite people of God, is referred to; the word always used in the New Testament to describe (Laos) a Hebrew as contrasted with a Gentile non-Israelite race.

G. M. G.'s pamphlet is founded on two great errors. He maintains that this is a parenthetical dispensation wherein God has transferred all His promised blessings from the Hebrew race to the non-Israelite Gentiles—for which there is not a scintilla of evidence in the Word of God—and he makes next the fatal mistake described in Jer. xxxiii. 24, by declaring that "the two families which the Lord hath chosen, He hath even cast them off." Thus he hath despised God's people, Ephraim-Israel, "that it should be no more a nation before Him!"

G. M. G. further has not dealt honestly with God's Word in that he has failed to refer, as Dr. Grant has pointed out, to one of the fundamental promises to Ephraim contained in Gen. xlviii. 19. That was a promise to Ephraim as well as to Manasseh, which was unconditional, was not fulfilled before the first advent, cannot be fulfilled after the second advent (because then Ephraim and Judah will share and share alike in all blessings), and, therefore, must be in Ephraim's enjoyment as well as in Manasseh's to-day, between the two advents. We show by facts that the British are to-day a "nation and a company of nations," and greater for that reason than American Manasseh. Let G. M. G. prove to us that this prophecy has received a better and a completer fulfilment, or that the two great Anglo-Saxon nations have not the blessings answering to the promises. He cannot!

The fact is, G. M. G. does not reflect that God promised "to Abraham and his seed for ever" three great blessings, all centered at first in the patriarch himself—namely, 1st. The land of Canaan. 2nd. The Messiah. 3rd. The increase into a multitude of nations.

The first was a gift common to the Twelve Tribes. The second was a gift tied up to Judah only. The third was entailed on Ephraim, the head of the Ten Tribes. This last was the birthright to which that house succeeded (1 Chron. v. 1).

Now, the first promise has been literally fulfilled by the partition of the land to all the Tribes; and a yet further, fuller, final fulfilment awaits the Thirteen Tribes in the future in their land.

The second promise as to Christ the Messiah has been literally fulfilled 1886 years ago to the Tribe of Judah, as all allow.

The third promise of the multitudinous seed developing into "a nation and company of nations," must equally literally be fulfilled to the House of Joseph represented by Ephraim, the head of the kingdom or Ten-Tribed House of Israel. The promises as to the land and the Messiah were not kept in abeyance till the millennium; and the promise to Ephraim and Manasseh in regard to the birthright blessings which are theirs exclusively, cannot be relegated to the millennium after the second advent, because, as before remarked, the only time available, by the nature of the case, for Ephraim's enjoyment of these birthright blessings, described in Gen. xlviii. 19, xlix. 22—26, and Deut. xxxiii. 13—17, must be the present dispensation between the two advents.

When G. M. G. enters on his concluding remarks he makes a protest against the danger of our views. He maintains that our subject tends not so much to the glory of God as to the exaltation of Israel. We cannot allow that statement to pass without a decided protest. God's glory is the very foundation of our teaching; and the line our opponent takes serves, it seems to us, the Atheist and infidel; for it tells them God is a promise-breaking God, who promises to one race, but performs to quite another; who having sworn to give to the seed of Abraham certain blessings, exclusively, and without abeyance, promptly transferred all those gifts, in direct contradiction of His solemn oath and covenant, to another body called the Church; the British nation having secured, however, the whole of the temporal gifts and all the spiritual blessings promised to Abraham's "after seed" besides!

G. M. G.'s pamphlet is, we fear, an illustration of the fact that those who refuse to read God's Word literally are apt to accept its meaning and its statements only so as to suit their own peculiar theological notions and systems of belief. With that we can have no sympathy.

THE REV. A. C. MACDONALD ON EGYPT.

We take the following from The Scotsman of February 18th, 1886. It shows that the Rev. A. C. Macdonald, if not an Anglo-Israelite already, is, as regards the subject of the land of Egypt, quite one with us who read The Banner and accept its teaching regarding the annexation of Egypt by the British. He wrote as follows to The Scotsman:—

"Cairo, February 9th, 1886.

"Sir,—Palestine alone excepted, no country in the world presents such a variety of interesting material for either Christian or scientific study as Egypt. Her mysterious monuments of prehistoric antiquity tell that Egypt was a flourishing kingdom when the surrounding nations and her subsequent conquerors even were yet only wild hordes of the desert. They tell that power, and knowledge, and commerce, and religion have been enjoyed in Egypt to an extent which made her the centre of attraction and envy at a very remote period of the world's history.

"But my object at present is not to dwell upon the monuments of Egypt's former glory, which, although they tell what Egypt was, yet are absolutely wanting in all authoritative chronology, and leave us, after all, in the dark as to the rise, progress, or even the decay of that wonderful country. My object is to give my impression with respect to the present condition of Egypt.

"It is interesting, if not indeed melancholy, to compare the present state of Egypt with its ancient prosperity, when they enjoyed a native monarchy flourishing among the great empires of the East, and when the elegance and finish of their manufactures engaged the admiration of surrounding nations. All have completely passed away. For more than twenty centuries Egypt has not enjoyed the benefits of either a native or any other steady government. During this long lapse of time the national life is virtually extinct. From the uncertain tenure of their power, the manifest object of each successive ruler has been to increase his own wealth and aggrandisement, resulting in the reduction of the nation to a state of most afflicting poverty. Yet this country is still the same. Its grain, vegetable, and fruit growing capacity is equal, if not beyond, that of any other country in the world; and so it will remain while the mighty and most beneficent of rivers continues to roll from mysterious sources. Its people are still the same; and a people that have successfully resisted for two thousand years the civilisation of the Western world, that still bear the lineaments and speak the language which were seen and heard by their conquerors countless centuries ago, cannot be lacking in force of character, and yet they are down-trodden and wretched. Buried monuments, monarchies lying in the dust, a religious condition as lamentable as the political, is all that can be seen in the place that once was Egypt.

Digitized by Google

"'Can these dry bones live?' I believe they can. There is a glorious future predicted for Egypt which must be realised. 'The Lord shall be known to Egypt.' . . . 'The Lord shall smite Egypt. He shall smite and heal it.' This great change in the destinies of Egypt can only be inaugurated by the conquest and policy of Great Britain, and all that is needed is to incorporate this worn-out population in her own vigorous and life-giving organisation. England, to a certain extent against her will, and by a political policy which has been much and severely criticised, has been pressed forward by an over-ruling Providence, to a work which it is hoped she will not abandon till it is thoroughly done—till the great cloud of the Mahdi's influence which still overshadows Egypt is completely dispelled, and heart, elevation of character, and capacity of self-control restored to this ancient race. This happy result could be accomplished by the adoption of one or the other of two policies, either that of temporary occupation or permanent annexation.

"A declaration on the part of Britain to occupy Egypt for thirty or forty years would be sufficient to establish peace and good government, and secure civil and social prosperity for her unfortunate people.

"But why not permanently annex the country? I would advocate this policy, not for the glory of England, but in the true interests of Egypt. I am generally averse to the accession of territory by conquest on the part of any nation or individual, but the circumstances here are peculiar. Britain is now in military occupation in Egypt, from which she cannot possibly escape in a hurry, unless she is prepared to sacrifice her own interest and leave the country in every respect in a much worse condition than she found it. Hitherto English policy in Egypt, though doubtless intended for the best, has at every step been most unfortunate and unsuccessful, and has certainly failed to commend itself to the people of Egypt, for the simple reason that it has lowered the prestige of England in their eyes, and to such an extent that the Christian population of Egypt feel that were England to withdraw, they have far less security for life and property now than before her intervention. No sooner does she cease to occupy than trouble is apprehended from the Muslims whom the Mahdi inspired with high hopes that he was the 'Sword of Allah' to avenge infidel encroachments upon Mahommedan prerogatives.

"Whether by 'occupation' for a certain period of time, or by permanent 'annexation,' one thing is certain, England must assert her authority in Egypt more than she has yet done. Her own interests, no less than the welfare of Egypt, demand this. Egypt for a long roll of centuries has been ruled by Persians, Greeks, Romans, and Caliphs and Turks. Each of these Powers in their turn made an impression upon the country which is visible to this day. Other nations attempted the same, but failed; and it would not do for England to be numbered with them. She must stamp a lasting and salutary impression on the nation—free it from the evils that overshadow its national life, and raise it to commercial importance and prosperity.

"The Egyptians would hail the supremacy of England; they are far too keen not to see its great advantages, and much too selfish to oppose them. True, they manifest their patriotism by an extraordinary hatred and contempt of foreigners; but it must not be forgotten that that hatred was caused by their former conquerors making them endure all the bitterness and humiliation of defeat in company with the most miserable servitude and suffering. In most instances their cities were dismantled, their temples plundered, and the people themselves given up to slaughter, but no such thing would ever occur under the humane and pacific administration of Britain. It would have higher and nobler ends in view—viz., to develop a country boundless in agricultural resources, and unequalled in climate, fertility, and variety of production; by encouraging railways, canals, schemes of irrigation, and other necessities for advancing civilisation, in order to enable a people capable of great mental development, and manifesting a commendable spirit of enterprise, to profit by their own inexhaustible national wealth. A judicious financing of the revenue of Egypt under British rule, without any foreign capital, would be sufficient for all, while a large annual surplus might be applied to the payment of coupons and other existing deficits. I feel confident that the policy of 'annexation' is the one which offers the best and most permanent solution of the Soudanese and Egyptian difficulties; and beyond some barking on the part of France, whose commercial interests would be concerned, I am not aware that such a step would lead to any political complications either at home or abroad, while it would confer greater benefits on Egypt, and contribute more to its peace and prosperity than anything that happened during the past history of the country.

"And why should England hesitate to declare such a policy, and adopt, with respect to Egypt, the line of action she has been pursuing elsewhere in far less important places—where British interests are less involved, where indignities have been less suffered, and less precious blood shed? The graves of thousands of our bravest men, whose blood has been shed on the desert wastes from Tel-el-Keber to Abu-Klea, cry aloud, not for vengeance, but for the improvement of the great opportunity which is now put into the hands of Great Britain for introducing moral civilisation, peace, and good government into Egypt. To secure permanently these advantages for this nation of unknown antiquity would be a task worthy of England. It would be the grandest monument she could raise to the memory of the noble and self-sacrificing Gordon, whose love for this kind and polite people made him go through all manner of hardships and dangers, and death itself for their sakes.

"This would be the best thing for Egypt, the best thing for England, the best thing for Europe. 'In that day Egypt shall be a blessing in the midst of the land.'

"I am, &c., A. C. MACDONALD."

So far Mr. Macdonald. We do not quite see where he got his last quotation, but certainly not from Isa. xix. 24 (R. V.), for that verse states, "In that day shall Israel be the third with Egypt and with Assyria, a blessing in the midst of the earth." The blessing is conferred not by Egypt but by Israel—by Israel, on Egypt and Assyria together.

ANGLO-ISRAEL'S GEOGRAPHICAL POSITION.

BY W. L. BLORE, F.R. MET. S.

I DO not think that the geographical position of the Isles of the West, and the wonderful arrangement by the Almighty of the forces of the Gulf Stream in modifying climatic influence as affecting Great Britain exclusively, have ever been noted by any contributor to the BANNER OF ISRAEL.

Taking Petermann's meteorological map of the world, we find that, in the Northern Hemisphere, the isothermal line of 30 degrees, or that of permanent frozen ground, enters the West Coast of America at 60 degrees North latitude, and leaves its Eastern Coast at 52 degrees North latitude. But directly it leaves this coast it goes almost in a straight line up to 78 degrees North latitude, when it reaches the meridian of Greenwich.

The lower isothermal line of 70 degrees, which forms the Southern limit of the Northern Temperate Zone, is not so affected, but takes a straight line from the Coast of Florida to Morocco, and in its whole length to the Coast of China does not vary 10 degrees; whereas, the Northern isothermal line is bent above Great Britain, and that suddenly to the extent of 18 degrees, so that at the meridian of Greenwich, the latitude of the 30 degrees Farenheit line corresponds with zero on the continent of North America and with 10 degrees below zero in Russia.

Digitized by Google

Thus we find that the width of the Northern Temperate Zone extends over 48 degrees of latitude at the meridian of Greenwich, and that both the 30 degrees and 70 degrees isothermal lines immediately afterwards contract, until when the zone reaches Central Russia it measures but 24 degrees, or one-half in width. So that in North America and in Great Britain, the Anglo-Saxon race has four and a-half million square miles of the Northern Temperate Zone at its disposal for extension and commercial and social influence in the world. Europe has only two millions, and Russia in Asia but two million square miles; China has a little more than a million square miles; so that Anglo-Israel possesses in the Northern Temperate Zone nearly one-half of the area available for the development of the best types of the human race; and the position of England is equidistant—125 degrees of longtitude from the two extremities of that zone. Moreover, the mean isothermal line of this zone—50 degrees—passes through New York, the commercial capital of North America; through London, the commercial capital of the world; and then, on reaching Russia, passes through the Black Sea to the South of the Crimea; and in Central Asia to the South of the Sea of Aral, so that Germany and Russia are excluded from the 50 degree mean isothermal line of the Northern Temperate Zone, the mean isothermal line of Germany being 47 degrees and of Russia as low as 40 degrees.

Now, it is notorious that Central Asia is but a poor country, especially that portion under the rule of Russia, measuring one million square miles. But when we turn to America, we find a country available throughout for the support of an immense population, and in sustaining power the million in Central Asia would not balance more than a quarter of a million square miles in North America.

Therefore, taking into consideration productive power, mean temperature, river navigation, and internal resources, as well as distance from the ocean and available seaports, I unhesitatingly affirm that if the Northern Temperate Zone on the continents of Europe and Asia support 600 million inhabitants at a certain average income, the continent of North America within the same zone will support the same number at double the average income of those on the above continent.

As to the Southern Temperate Zone, we outstrip the rest of the world already in population, area, wealth, and commercial enterprise; so that, if in the providence of God we are faithful to our stewardship, the Anglo-Israelitish race must of necessity predominate in the world; for in the two temperate zones, North and South, they have in extent fully one-half, and in advantages arising from the conformation, river communication, position, etc., fully three-fourths of these zones. And the central well-spring of all this development is the United Kingdom, which, from its position and in this age of scientific warfare, is a perfect fortress, from which any force may be despatched without hindrance.

As for the Torrid Zone, we know what Central South America is worth, and that Central Africa is certainly not worth more. Arabia is but a poor country, Persia is not very influential; so that our Eastern possessions here, and one-half of Australia within the same zone, must ever outweigh the remainder in wealth, population, and commercial activity. In fact, they already perfectly eclipse the rest of the Torrid Zone.

Let us, then, in our commerce, wealth, social intercourse, and in every mundane enterprise, worship our Great King, and use these His gifts for the extension of His kingdom and the promotion of His glory! May we be, in fact, co-workers with God Himself in benefiting the nations of the earth, and then, literally in us, all the nations of the earth shall be blessed.

In conclusion, I beg to submit the following estimate of the population of the world, compiled from Whitaker and the latest authorities. The estimate for China has been very properly reduced by Whitaker, and, being a native of Africa, I know that the population of that country has been most ridiculously exaggerated.

Northern Temperate Zone.
Anglo-Israel	100,000,000
Africa	8,000,000
Europe	300,000,000
Asia	330,000,000
Total, Northern Temperate Zone	738,000,000
Torrid Zone.
Possessions of Anglo-Israel	270,000,000
South America	36,000,000
Africa	50,000,000
Asia, Pacific, etc....	40,000,000
Total, Torrid Zone	396,000,000
Southern Temperate Zone.
South America	6,000,000
Anglo-Israel in South Africa and in Australia, etc.	6,000,000
Total, Southern Temperate Zone	12,000,000

Total of all three Zones, 1,146,000,000, of which Anglo-Israel holds 376,000,000, or one-third of the whole.

P.S.—From the above table it will be perceived that all but some 100 millions of the human race are accessible to missionary effort. What hath not God wrought through His people!

ENGLAND AND IRELAND.

By C. Piazzi Smyth, F.R.A.S., Astronomer-Royal for Scotland.

The prophecy in Deuteronomy xxxii. 21 is remarkable enough in itself, but is further most noteworthy as having received a renewed vitality and an enlarged applicability to these Christian times, through the use made of it by St. Paul in his Epistle to the Romans, or rather to the saints then dwelling at Rome (x. 19).

The original words, and those the words of God, Almighty God, through His servant Moses, are: "They have moved Me to jealousy with that which is not God; they have provoked Me to anger with their vanities; and I will move them to jealousy with those which are not a people; I will provoke them to anger with a foolish nation."

Who are alluded to as "they" and "them?" From ver. 15 of Deut. xxxii., it appears to be "Jeshurun," and at a time in the future when he should have "waxed fat and kicked"—i.e., Ephraim, i.e., England—when the nation should have grown eminently rich, as it had done within the last few years beyond all former records, and is now declining again; but at the same time, whether from being blindly led by its rulers, or from its own innate untowardness, it has passed that meridian culmination of its earthly wealth without a single day of special humiliation before God in acknowledgment of His mercies, or in supplications for His help in the present times of distress. But how has Ephraim-England furthermore contrived to move God "to jealousy with that which is not God, and provoked Him to anger with their vanities?"

By the semi-Papistical consubstantiation theories of the Oxford Tractarians (among whom figured so largely W. E. Gladstone in his earlier days), and by the vain adornments of their churches, their painted glass windows, their useless wax candles, the millinery and haberdashery of their priests, their many coloured vestments, and the "enthronisation" ceremonies of their higher officials.

Digitized by Google

So the Divine answer, prepared in the beginning of the world, yet suited most exactly to all these things as now occurring, is, that they shall, by an offended but overruling Providence, be moved to jealousy with those which are not a people, and by a foolish nation shall they be angered.

Wherefore, behold, at this very time, when England is represented, if by any one single man, by the very individual who figured first and chiefly in introducing those High Church vagaries and unauthorised inventions as a new and better kind of Christianity—when England is represented, I repeat, by him, through his being now, and having been in many latter years her Prime Minister; he, too, the most passionate and irascible of human beings since the day of Achilles as described by Homer—now it is that England is being moved through all her depths to "jealousy" with those "which are not a people," and being "provoked to anger with a foolish nation"—viz., the Southern Irish.

Whether the Roman Catholic priest-ridden Irish peasantry have been remarkable before all Europe as a wise or a foolish nation during the last 600 or 700 years, facts already recorded in history have demonstrated long since. While as to their also not being in either an ethnological sense, or political point of view, and from earliest dawn, a people in toto teres atque rotundus, was well brought out by the Rev. Mr. Bassin in a recent BANNER, where he set forth, on the authority of Ptolemy (earlier than any known and existing Irish manuscripts) that in a pre-Irish day, the country which those subsequent Milesian invaders—last from Spain, but previously Canaanites, according to Edward Hine's long-since published views—overran and called Ireland, was known as "Lesser Britain," England and Scotland being Greater Britain.

In fact, the so-called native Irish are interlopers where they now are, and merely because they barbarously exterminated the earlier Israelite settlers before them (the "Tuatha de Dannan," those very Danites of Israel who, as Mr. Bassin well shows, had already emigrated from Palestine in ships in the days of Deborah and Barak), they must not be allowed by arts and wiles like those of Gibeon, to magnify themselves against the main body of the Israelites in Greater Britain, by being needlessly donated with a so-called home, but really foreign, rule of independence, hostility, and insult over all Lesser Britain, though they themselves have never occupied the whole of it, and have no right so to do.

But the requisite steps for keeping them in both their proper place, and duly subservient position need not be attempted by England, until our nation has, whether with or without her present Prime Minister's assent and approval, bowed down be-e the God of Israel in true and simple Christian humiliation, in a manner far removed from the human-devised vanities and non-Divine innovations which have been characterising the wealthier portion of the Anglican Church and State combined, far too long.

March 21, 1886.

Review.

Anglo-Israelism Examined in the Light of the more sure Word of Prophecy. By Frank H. White. Part II. Price 3d. Haughton & Co., 10 Paternoster-row. Bristol, W. Mack.

IN Vol. III., p. 465, of the BANNER OF ISRAEL, we reviewed Part I. only, of Mr. Frank H. White's lecture on "Anglo-Israelism Examined." We were not then aware that Part II. of his lecture was about to be separately published, and we have only recently been informed that such has been the case. The two parts together are deemed by many a cogent, unanswerable refutation of the arguments which we have been painfully and laboriously advancing for the last ten years for the information of our readers. In respect to Part I. we have at present no more to add.

Mr. F. White in Part II. makes his chief point our statement in the "Résumé" that Numbers xxiii. 21, demand Israel's discovery and constant continuance under a monarchy. This he denies because, when Israel was described in Numbers xxiii., in Balaam's time, they were under a theocracy, and the shout of a king was that of the King of kings, the "Lord of Hosts." But Mr. White forgets that God never relinquished His sovereignty over Israel when earthly sovereigns were occupying the throne of His people. The throne which Solomon ascended was the throne of Jehovah still (1 Chron. xxix. 23), and the kingdom over Israel in David's days was still the kingdom of Jehovah, as 1 Chron. xxviii. 5 proves. When Balaam then declared that the Lord God was with Israel, and the shout of a king was among them, he prophetically declared an everlasting truth, and announced that God was the King of Israel for ever, ruling in person then, by human viceroys of His own choice, from Saul and David's days right down to the time when He will Himself resume the sovereignty personally, as declared in Ezek. xxi. 27.

The point of our statement was, and that of prophecy is, that Israel during all time is to be a Kingdom, monarchically ruled—the throne and kingdom throughout being Jehovah's. Mr. F. White devotes a large space in his second pamphlet to the consideration of Hosea iii. 4—5, which he believes is conclusive proof against Our Identity. The words "children of Israel" of verse 4, he declares are clearly not Judah, but Israel, who are therefore to be many days "without a king," without a national standing," and not under a monarchy at all. Afterward "they will return to seek the Lord, and David their king." He adds: "No king till Messiah!" And Ezek. xxxvii., xxxiv. 23—24; Jer. xxiii. 5—6; Isa. ii. 2—3, show, he tells us, that when this part of the prediction is fulfilled, "it will be true of Judah and Israel alike." Messiah will have returned in glory, and the two will "be one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel, and one king will be king to them all, and they shall be no more two nations, neither shall they be divided into two kingdoms any more at all" (ver. 22). So far Mr. White's reasoning. But he jumps too fast to his conclusions.

We may quite concede to him that verses 4 and 5 of Hosea iii. refer to the house of Israel as well as to the house of Judah (as Mr. Wilson and others confine the application), but that cannot do away with the fact that there were two houses and two wives of Jehovah in the figure presented to us in Hosea ii. and iii. 1 to 3, respectively. Israel in the former case, and "yet" another "woman," or Judah, in the second. Neither can it be shown by Mr. White or anyone else, from Scripture, that Israel was to have no king till Messiah. On the contrary, 1 Kings viii. 25; 1 Chron. xxii. 10; Gen. xvii. 6, xxxv. 11; Jer. xxxiii. 17, and other like passages, distinctly teach us that the monarchy was tied up to the house of Israel till He come—the Lord Jesus—whose right it is to reign (Ezek. xxi. 27). Hosea iii. 4 has been true of the Ten Tribes, as of the two, and verse 5 is also true in the past history of the house of Ephraim, and will be true of Judah (both being children of Israel) in these our "latter days." Mr. White's chief effort is directed to show that Israel and Judah are in these our days dealt with alike by God, and that they are united both of them, or otherwise existing, in "a separate, isolated, lonely, waiting state, as she is now" (p. 6—7). "Her house is left desolate," says Mr. White (quoting Matt. xxiii. 38, which the Lord addressed to the Jews), as if He spoke then of the two houses, Israel and Judah, together! It appears then that Mr. White is fundamentally wrong. Israel as a house were not to be in "the latter days" without a king. The throne which collapsed in Judah in B.C. 588, was to revive in Israel, and accordingly we find the Hebrew monarchy is present with Israel now, according to the prophecy of Jer. xxxiii. 17, 26.

To prove beyond cavil that "Anglo-Israelism" is impossible, Mr. White begs us to remember what God has revealed in His word concerning:—

1. The character of Israel's promised blessing.
2. The place where He has promised to bless them.
3. The time and immediate occasion of their blessing.
4. The antecedent circumstances and
5. The subsequent events.

In regard to the character of Israel's promised blessing, he says: it will be national, spiritual, and continual. We quite concur in this view, and add that while we are enjoying the first fruits of these national spiritual and continual blessings to-day they will be fulfilled in our race when Ezek. xxxvii. 16—28; Jer. xxxi. 31—34 and Heb. viii. 8—12 have fully come to pass.

Digitized by Google

As to the place of blessing, we differ toto cœlo from Mr. White. The passage of Scripture he quotes to show that it will be Palestine proves to our mind nothing of the sort. The "Height of Zion" of Jer. xxxi. 11, 12, is doubtless the land of the inheritance, but the blessed nation is blessed before they reach it, when they "shout among the chief of the nations," and pray the Christian prayer of salvation, "O Lord, save Thy people, the remnant of Israel," which would be obviously out of place for a people to offer up when safe in Palestine during the millennium. They are to be Christian and accepted not in Palestine only, but in the land of their exile, when men like Mr. White, fulfilling an ignoble, degrading function, according to the prophecy, shout, "Lo-Ammi! Lo-Ammi!" the British are not Israel! but where, in spite of him, they are to be known by God and the world at large, as a "righteous nation," "sons of the living God," or true believers in the Lord Jesus Christ (Isa. xxvi. 2; Hosea i. 10; John i. 12). God's "Holy Mountain" is God's holy or separate nation, even Ephraim-Israel, wherever she may be (Jer. li. 25). But it is true that even Israel will not, all of them, know the Lord till after the battle or war of Armageddon, and after the destruction of Gog Magog (Ezek. xxxix. 22). Ezek. xx. 40—42, refers, we believe, to Judah-Israel, whose conversion after they return to the land, but not before we think, is proved by this and other like texts (ex. gr. Ezek. xxxvi. 24—28).

But (3) as to the time and immediate occasion Mr. White lays down that Israel (meaning Ephraim) will return to the land in unbelief, and therefore cannot be found a Christian nation out of Palestine. We have shown already that Hosea i. 10 and 11 contradict this. Ezek. xxxvii. 13—14, also shows that the baptism of the Ten Tribes with the Spirit of God will precede the restoration to the land, and the testimony of Zech. x. 6—9 is to the same effect. Isa. xviii. 1 and 7, support our view, but contradict Mr. White's! Our opponent quotes Ezek. xxii. 17—22, a passage referring to the Jews, addressed as this prophet always does, under the name of the "House of Israel." Zech. xii. 8—14 refers by name to David's house belonging to Judah, and the occasion is a time after the return to Palestine. There is no mention here of Ephraim-Israel's conversion, but only of Judah's and David's house. Mr. White quotes Matt. xxiii. 39, in support of his view, that text being on the face of it addressed not to Ephraim, but to the Jews! Ephraim's conversion and redemption outside Palestine is provided for in Hosea i. 10; Zech. x. 6—9; Ezek. xxxvii. 13—14, and Mr. White cannot shake that evidence by merely ignoring Ephraim-Israel!

We now come to Mr. White's fourth point. The antecedents. These are, he says, that Israel will acknowledge the false before they submit to the true Messiah. To prove this of Ephraim-Israel, Mr. White has no text available, and therefore we have nothing to answer. But he adds, that before Israel's blessing they must pass through "sore and unexampled tribulation." We are quite ready to admit this: but it will make no difference, for Israel "will be saved out" of that time of "trouble," as promised in Jer. xxx. 7. We have never said "Jacob's rest" would not come before his day of trouble. We believe the reverse is the truth.

The last point is one we need not waste time upon. The "subsequent events" are yet future, and we must wait and see what they will prove to be. No doubt, however, Zeph iii. 8—9; Joel iii. 16—17, prove Mr. White to be correct. Israel's blessings are closely connected with the judgments of the great and terrible day of the Lord. Joel ii. 28—31 teaches us that. But when Mr. White adds, that Israel will be the "chief missionary power on the earth" only when the House of Israel have returned to the land, but not before, we cannot go with him. He ignores existing facts, which it is never wise to do. Psa. lxvii. does not tell us the blessings it describes are reserved for the coming millennium age only after the return! There is not a word in this Psalm to prove the allegation. The British are at this moment fulfilling that Psalm in all its clauses, and no other nation is approaching us in the fulfilment. Our views do not, as Mr. White declares, teach that "we have reached the end of the indignation!" Where does he find this statement made? Not by the BANNER! Israel's time of trouble, which is Jacob's, is future, as we have always maintained; and Ezek. xxxviii. and xxxix. indicates its nature! We have never said that the millennium has begun, but we do say that the Lord is doing for us as a nation what He promised in Isa. xxvii. 6. We are filling the face of the world with Gospel fruit, and Mr. White must be a bold man to deny it with the history of British missions before his eyes to-day! It is true we are not perfect, and sins stain all our works. But Israel was never sinless, and is not sinless to-day. Opium traffic and drink are her national curses, and will continue to curse her till Jer. xxxi. 33—34, are fulfilled in her history by blessed experience. Mr. White depreciates the facts we depend upon, by comparing Israel's liquor bill, 140 millions, with her missions bill, £1,100,793, and cries that the two do not bear comparison.

Granted. But what if the Lord only requires us to spend one million odd, now, in preaching the Gospel "as a witness" to the world? The silver and the gold are His. If He required the only missionary nation in the world which fulfils the promises of God "to Abraham and his seed for ever" to spend more, would He not have called for it? We do not say that one-and-a-half millions a year spent on works of beneficence by this nation, are anything like the proper amount due to the cause of Gospel propagation throughout the world; but we do say that what we do for God is twelve times the amount all the other nations of the world combined attempt for His name, and that when He gives more grace the result will appear in larger returns. We beg to assure Mr. White, in conclusion, that we do not despise "the necessity for the new birth," which is his last point. He maintains that Our Identity makes unregenerate men to forget their Adam origin, and in identifying themselves with the "Lost Ten Tribes they are too ready to forget their identity as lost sinners."

We remember that St. Paul's experience in respect to the Gospel of the grace of God was that men of his time said, "Let us do evil that good may come." To them St. Paul had only one answer. He refused to argue with them. "Their damnation is just," was his scathing rejoinder. And of Mr. White we say that he is not aware of the tendency of our views, for his account of it is not true. We repudiate his conclusions, and say that Our Identity is a humbling doctrine, which nationally glorifies God, and sends us nationally not only to our knees in humble adoration, but compels the joyful shout to arise among us, "Let Israel praise the Lord!"

LAY OF THE PRIMROSE.

(For the 19th of April, suggested by "A E I's" leaflet, "The Emblem of the Empire.")

"FIRST gem of the sea" was bright Erin, I ween,
For learning and culture of old;
Her emblem, the SHAMROCK, aye, triple and true,
Her worth beyond rubies and gold.

"The land of the brave" is fair Albion famed,
And bravest when triple and strong;
White and ruddy her queen-flower and emblem, the ROSE—
Aye, loyal her heart and her song.

"The land of the leal" is bold Scotland, wide known,
The crown of both shamrock and flower;
King's purple her emblem, the THISTLE'S bright bloom,
This union, to whom shall it cower?

Their God-given Empire, in East, West, and South,
Of earth and broad ocean the zone,
Owns the PRIMROSE, her emblem, five-petalled* and pure,
With Eden ordained for her throne.

T. W. B.

POLITICAL IDOLATRY.

WE take the following from the Bristol Mercury of April 7, 1886, a Liberal or Radical paper. The sentiments of the writer we leave without comment. The words occurred in the second or sub-leader regarding the Barrow election:—

"What Mr. Caine has done is to withhold his judgment from Mr. Gladstone's Home Rule scheme until it sees the light. In this attitude there is nothing at all derogatory to a high-minded and consistent Liberal politician. It would, perhaps, have been more satisfactory if Mr. Caine, whose admiration of, and confidence in, Mr. Gladstone are unabated, had been willing to so far surrender his judgment to that of his leader as to promise to support whatever legislation Mr. Gladstone should propose for Ireland. From the point of view of ordinary party discipline, this, no doubt, would have been the proper course. But the present crisis is no ordinary one, and for the moment the bonds of party are somewhat relaxed." The force of political idolatry surely can go no further!

* In allusion to the primitive and sacred number FIVE, as that of the principal groups of British possessions beyond sea.

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."

(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India.)

"And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the Forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS of the EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. X., No. 487. Entered at Stationers' Hall.] WEDNESDAY, APRIL 28, 1886. PRICE ONE PENNY.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
British-Israel's Influence on the Continent	165
"I was in Prison, and Ye Came Unto Me" (Matt. xxv. 36)	166
Zaphnath-Paaneah	167
Sowing the Seed. By E. M. Rush	168
Israel's Church and State and Disestablishment, as Viewed by the Identity. A Lecture by Philo-Israel	169
The Silver Morn Again	170
Review	171

BRITISH-ISRAEL'S INFLUENCE ON THE CONTINENT

IT is the fashion in some quarters to pretend that the influence of the British nation and government is declining on the Continent; and that, since men cannot place any confidence on the continuance of a fixed line of policy here, by reason of the unstable equilibrium the late elections have established between the two parties in the state, and the preponderance the Parnellites can effect for either at will, the power of this nation, therefore, to affect foreign affairs for good or evil, as in days gone by, is at an end. Never was there so great a mistake! This nation is Israel; and to her, since she became "obedient" to God's will at the Reformation, in the 16th century, there has been granted supremacy over all the Gentile nations, as promised in Deut. xxviii. 1—13: "It shall come to pass, if thou shalt hearken diligently unto the voice of the Lord thy God to observe and to do all the commandments which I command thee this day, that the Lord thy God will set thee on high above all nations of the earth." Among the four and twenty very special and unique gifts the Lord gave to His people was this one, described in ver. 13: "And the Lord shall make thee the head and not the tail, and thou shalt be above only, and thou shalt not be beneath, if thou hearken unto the commandments of the Lord thy God which I command thee this day to observe and to do them." With these promises in our favour we expect that at the present crisis, when the pessimists are busy declaring that our prestige in the councils of Europe is at a low ebb, it will be found, on the contrary, that we are still the leading factor on the Continent, also, that without our consent and co-operation the Gentile nations are still at a loss how to act, or afraid to take any step till they see how we intend to comport ourselves. The Daily Telegraph of some weeks since, gave us a hint as to the real facts, quoting its Vienna correspondent's words of the day before. It was to this effect, proving that "British influence on the Continent" is not waning but waxing—and that God's word is true in this, as in all other respects. The words were these:—

(TELEGRAM FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT).

VIENNA, JAN. 12.

The critical state of affairs in the Balkan Peninsula so completely absorbs public attention in Vienna that the opening of parliament in England is exciting less general interest than usual. One or two of the more important journals devote leading articles to the subject, their comments being more especially directed to the Irish Question.

The Freie Presse recalls Lord Salisbury's success in the management of foreign affairs, but apprehends that it will not go far to strengthen the position of the Ministry. In government circles the state of affairs in England is, on the contrary, watched with the very keenest concern; indeed, I believe I am not mistaken in saying, that at the present moment, half the cabinets of the Continent, are reserving their decision in various matters of international import, until the uncertainty as to the continuation in office of the Conservative Ministry shall cease. Russia in particular, has done her utmost to keep the whole Balkan crisis in suspense, in the hope that a change of government in England may contribute to bring about a settlement of pending difficulties, to her advantage. The decisive influence which the course of events in England will undoubtedly have on European affairs, proves how entirely void of all foundation have been the repeated assertions of the German inspired press, that Great Britain no longer held the rank of a first-class power. Continental statesmen have lately discovered that the destinies of the Balkan Peninsula, at all events, cannot be settled without England, and even Prince von Bismarck will be the wiser for having found that the three Emperors' entente was liable to shipwreck against the rock of England's opposition. Another fallacy besides that industriously propagated by the German semi-official press has now been disposed of. The foreign policy of the present English government has not been such as it was represented to be.

Without giving any opinion as to its merits, it may be said with every confidence that it has not been trimmed so as to fit in with that of Austria and Germany. It has been condemned as selfish simply because it was independent, and yet the little that has been done towards warding off a conflagration in the Balkans, has been due to England. But England's efforts in that direction have, to a great extent, been crippled precisely on account of the uncertainty prevailing with regard to the attitude of the new parliament towards the Conservative Ministry. If it be only borne in mind what effect a change of government in England would be likely to have at the Porte, it will be understood what a far-reaching influence it would have on European politics generally, and hence that the present session of parliament promises to be eventful, not only for England, but for all Europe.

Here we have the influence and power of the dominant nation plainly shown and illustrated. The Continental governments are waiting to act, and will not take action till they see which government, Mr. Gladstone's or Lord Salisbury's, is eventually to guide the helm of the "great and mighty" people in these "Isles of the West." Not only do events in the Balkans hinge upon Israel's proceedings, but she will have, as God's Word tells us, the leading part in whatever is destined eventually to bring about the fall of Turkey and the destination of the Peerless Porte, the gate of all the gates, Constantinople. In Ezek. xxv. 14, we have an intimation which must fill our statesmen with consternation, if they realise what is probably the case—namely, that the Turkish Empire is the prophetic Edom, and that (positively) God's people are the British nation. In that verse the statement runs thus. "I will lay My vengeance upon Edom by the hand of My people Israel, and they shall do in Edom according to Mine anger, and according to My fury, and they shall know My vengeance, saith the Lord God."

Digitized by Google

Israel is the Lord's battle-axe and weapons of war, as Jer. li. 20 declares. And we may therefore expect, as the statesmen of the Continent seem now to admit, that the British (being Israel) have a commanding influence to exercise in the providence of God in all directions on the Continent, though they are themselves, as a nation, destined to be "hidden" in the hollow of God's hand, what time the fiery fury of His jealous wrath is poured out upon the wicked nations of the earth, according to the prophecies (Zeph. iii. 8). Israel, praise ye the Lord for all the mercies He has shown you in the past, and for those He has yet promised us as our portion in the coming dreadful future of "yonder ill-consolidated Europe" (Dan. ii. 41—42).

"I WAS IN PRISON, AND YE CAME UNTO ME."

(MATT. XXV. 36.)

WE have always been of opinion that the great assize described in Matt. xxv. 31—46 is a highly figurative description of the Lord's judgment upon the nations of the world, whom He divides into two parts—the chosen Israelite nation being placed as His sheep, or flock, on His right hand—the non-Israelite Gentile races, NOT in alliance and subordination to Israel, being on His left. The same distinction is shown in the prophets to exist in their prophecies. Zeph. iii. 8, 9, describes it in detail. Isa. xxvii. 20, 21, does the same, and Isa. lxvi. 12 to 18 follows, painting the blessings which are to be Israel's portion, but the punishment of the non-Israelite Gentile nations. The Lord, on the occasion in question, is described in Matt. xxv. as giving His reasons why the Israelite nation was preferred and constituted ruler of the world, with possession of the kingdom allotted to them from the foundation of the same (ver. 34).

Which house of the chosen race was meant in this passage? The House of Ephraim, Joseph and Israel, or the House of Judah—i.e., the Jews? The honoured house is doubtless the Christian one, British-Israel; for its distinctive marks are given us by our Lord Himself in ver. 35—39, and they are distinctly Christian. The service the Lord acknowledges is service done for Him, therefore Christian service pleasing to Him. He, the Lord, was hungry. His people (certainly not the Jews) gave Him meat. He was thirsty; they gave Him drink; a stranger, and they took Him in; naked, and they clothed Him; sick, and they visited Him; He was in prison, and they came unto Him. It is afterwards explained that this service done to the least of Christ's brethren is accounted as done to Himself.

The whole parable (for such it purports to be, we presume) is national, not individual, in its application. Individual Christians do indeed feed the hungry and thirsty, clothe the naked, take strangers in, and visit the sick; but to visit those in prison is not given to individual Christians to do. State reasons prevent the authorities generally opening prison doors to the public, however benevolently inclined, in order that men may, Bible in hand, visit them. Spiritual ministrations are provided for the prisoners of our jails by the British Government, but not by the philanthropic among ourselves here in these Isles of the West. Furthermore, not all godly men and women are in circumstances enabling them to feed the hungry and thirsty, to clothe the naked, and visit the sick and imprisoned. Christians are often sick and weary, poor and wretched, as to worldly goods themselves, utterly unable and disqualified by poverty, sickness, or incapacity, to minister to the sick, sorry, and imprisoned who love Christ.

The description then, as verse 32 implies, relates to the assize of nations, when the Son of Man, enthroned in glory and power, will separate the nations and declare to the universe for what good and sufficient cause He chose British-Israel, but rejected the world, and why even Judah-Israel was shut out from the selection. Matt. xxi. 43 tells us the reason in respect to the Jews. They rejected Him, and therefore the kingdom of God is taken from them and given to a nation—the sheep on the right hand, bringing forth the fruits of the kingdom, specified in Matt. xxv. 35.

But do we British nationally feed the hungry and thirsty, clothe the naked, receive and house the stranger, visit the sick? Such deeds of philanthrophy are natural to the British!

How many famine-stricken nations have we not succoured in Persia, India, and China? When distress and famine threatened the death of tens of thousands of French men and women after the siege of Paris was ended, whose hands brought the trains of food to the gates of that capital? It was Israel's! Whose missionaries and messengers of mercy followed the armies of Europe in late wars, and ministered to sick and dying soldiers the Word of Life, and comforts they could not otherwise obtain? British-Israel's! But do the British also go to prisoners in their cells, and make it their duty, as no other nation thinks of doing, to help them in foreign lands, where prisoners are grievously neglected? Surely there is no nation on the face of the earth which has undertaken and performs this function as we have done? We beg our readers to peruse the following, issued by Mr. Charles Cook, the chief agent of the Foreign Prisons Mission, of Hyde Park Hall, Edgware-road, London, W. In the notice he has lately issued, and speaking of his work, Mr. Cook said, prefacing his statement with the very words we are now commenting on:—

"I WAS IN PRISON AND YE CAME UNTO ME."

The above work was begun some two or three years ago, when having visited all the prisons of London and all her Majesty's convict prisons, besides many in America, I sought and obtained permission to visit the prisons of France. I was struck by the fact that no Bibles or Testaments were to be found in any of the cells; and determined, with God's help, that I would endeavour to take some. Since that time I have made several journeys through France, and paid four or five visits to the prisons of Paris, and last week completed a tour of all the prisons of Paris and its suburbs, and am able by God's goodness to say, that in all these places I have left the Word of God. In only one place was I unable to give Testaments away broadcast, this was at St. Lazare, where the women are under the charge of Sisters of Mercy, who would have hindered me giving them away to the Catholics, yet I gave them to the Governor and the officials, and even to the Lady Superior herself.

Holland and Belgium were next visited with the same object; then came a longer journey through Italy to Egypt and the Soudan, and home through Greece; and having in some cases supplied the wants of the needy prisoners in these countries, and in Egypt having been of use in helping to obtain the release of many prisoners who had been in gaol for years without trial, I was also able to take some thousands of copies of the Word of God and portions, to the prisons of these lands. The governments in no case supplying them, but in no instance have they stopped me doing so. The work, therefore, is philanthropic and spiritual, as in these countries I have often met with Englishmen who have complained of their treatment by the officials, and of their being unable to express their wants to them as they were unable to speak the language; and in French prisons have left my address for such to apply to me for employment. I know of three such now who will be shortly released, for whom I desire to find work, and a fourth soon to be discharged from an English convict settlement whom I am also responsible for.

Digitized by Google

My evangelistic work in London hinders me from devoting all my time to this needy work of supplying the Word of God to foreign prisons. Save in Russia, I know of no effort, except my own, to do this, and as my own local work suffers in my absence from England, I feel that after I have completed one other journey I must put it, or leave it, in the hands of others who are less busy than myself in Home Missions. I am particularly desirous of now visiting the North of Italy, Austria, Norway, Germany, and Turkey, and to take with me some thousands of New Testaments and portions, and leave them with the prisoners in these countries. There may be some little difficulty and danger attending Turkey, yet in other Mahometan countries the portions have been thankfully received, and attentively read by one prisoner who gathered others around him to listen; in some cases they have asked me for the other three gospels. The estimated expense of this journey, including the purchase of the books and the taking of a companion with me, would be about £600, whilst I should be obliged to make some provision for my work in England whilst away, as our expenses are about £50 per month.

It is to raise about £800, therefore, that this effort is made, and I believe that this vast untrodden field of Christian service needs but to be known to evoke the sympathies and practical fellowship of all the Lord's children.

I may here say that, excepting my last journey, I have borne the expenses of this foreign work myself alone, but this journey now contemplated is quite beyond my own powers, and thus I seek the fellowship of the Lord's people.

I need hardly say that all the different governments have at once given me stamped credentials and authority to visit their prisons, and I anticipate no difficulty in this respect in the future. My object and desire primarily is that of these poor wretches who languish in darkness and despair, I may be able to say,

"I HAVE GIVEN THEM THY WORD."

When we think that Italy alone has between 5,000 and 6,000 convicts sentenced to penal servitude for life, and except those prisons in that land, to which I have been, none of them have a copy of the Scriptures, and no means of hearing the Gospel, it should move our hearts to pity, and us to action to take or send them that Gospel which has done so much for us.

Any help forwarded for this object can be sent to me at Hyde Park Hall, Edgware-road, London, W., and which I shall be glad to acknowledge. CHAS. COOK.

Surely it cannot now be denied that the House of British-Israel fully carries out the Lord's prescription, and in addition to the work it notoriously performs, in the direction of international beneficence, does also what the Lord declares it shall do—namely, go to the relief of the distressed in prison!

ZAPHNATH-PAANEAH.

THAT was Joseph's name; the one given him by Pharaoh as a name of honour and distinction. In the Coptic it signifies, says the margin of Genesis xli. 45, "a revealer of secrets," or "the man to whom secrets are revealed."

Joseph's typical history has been exhaustively treated by Mr. J. T. Gott, in BANNER, vol. ii. pp. 134, 146, 152, 160, 170, 177, 183, and 194. We would ask our readers to refer to those papers again, written and published so far back as April to June, 1878, eight years ago. We do not propose to go over the ground so minutely as was done on that occasion. But we think reference may now again be made to the divine and affecting story of Joseph, in its typical aspect, as it bears upon the case of Ephraim-Israel, the British nation of modern times. We shall touch rapidly on the salient points of the story, leaving our readers to fill up the details for themselves.

Joseph was a type of Israel of the Ten Tribes, and he was also a type of Christ. He was the head of the house, whose representative was Ephraim, God's first-born (Jer. xxxi. 9). He was his father Jacob's best beloved son (Gen. xxxvii. 3). So was Ephraim, God's first-born, as the Lord Jesus was, too, of His Father (Matt. xvii. 5).

God instructed Joseph by dreams, and he was distinguished above all his brethren by God's favour openly shewed to him. (Gen. xxxvii. 5 to 11). So Israel was selected by God to become His dominion, His battle-axe and weapons of war, the Son on whom His love was fixed (Psa. cxiv. 2; Jer. li. 20, and xxxi. 20). The Lord Jesus Christ was the Great Anti-type, God's best beloved, in whom He was well pleased (Matt. iii. 17).

Joseph was set at nought by his brethren, who hated him. He was killed, in figure, by them, cast into a pit, sold for money, condemned to outcasting and slavery in a foreign land, and his sufferings were vicarious to save the lives of his brethren and of the world at large (Gen. xxxvii. 15—36 and xlv. 1 to 7).

Ephraim, the Ten Tribes, were envied and hated by their brethren, were separated from them and sent away into captivity into a foreign land as slaves to the Assyrian Monarchs. But their sufferings and banishment were for their good and for Judah's benefit, to save life and to restore them in future to their homes (Isa. xi. 13, 2 Kings xvii., Jer. iii. 18, Hosea i. 11, Ezek. xxxvii. 15 to 19). The Lord Jesus Christ was Joseph's anti-type in all these respects. He was envied and hated, and went a refugee into Egypt. He died for Israel, Judah and the Gentile world, vicariously, in order that at last He might restore the former to their inheritance, and save the whole world from the consequences of sin.

Joseph in the land of his affliction was unjustly accused, degraded, and cast into prison. There he morally died, and was buried for two full years. In the third year he was restored to active life—sent to the palace of the king—became the Second Ruler of Egypt, next to Pharaoh on his throne, and unknown as a Hebrew, became the head, succourer, and protector of his father's house (Gen. xl. 1, xli. 38—44). The Ten Tribes of Israel were outcasted and sent as wanderers over the face of Europe from Media. During their penal wanderings they lost their name and identity, and were literally buried among the Gentiles, being degraded into the condition of Lo-Ammi heathen. From B.C. 678 till A.D. 1,322, for two whole millenniums, or two days of prophecy, they continued in their graves, but in the third day, A.D. 1558, God gave them the Reformation, called them to honour, power, dominion, national supremacy among the nations, and began to give them all the blessings of Abraham, as it is this day. Unknown as Hebrews, the British, to-day, have become the succourer of their brethren, the Jews, and they are preparing in God's good time to restore them to their land when the promises of Jer. iii. 18, and Ezek. xxxvii. 15 to 28 take effect.

The Lord Jesus Christ, too, was unjustly accused, degraded, put to a shameful death. For two days He lay in the grave, on the 3rd day He rose again to ascend His Father's throne, and to give gifts to Israel, the "men of His good pleasure." Presently He will return to the land, there to reign at Jerusalem, and in Mount Zion over His ancients, gloriously (Matt. xxvii., xxviii., Phil. ii. 6 to 11, Luke ii. 14 (R.V.), Isa. xxiv. 23).

Raised by Pharaoh, King of Egypt, to the height of glory, Joseph was named by him "Zaphnath-Paaneah," a Coptic title, not a Hebrew—meaning, as before stated, "revealer of secrets," or "the man to whom secrets are revealed," in recognition of the fact that he had told the king the meaning of his two dreams, as he had before to the baker and butler of the Court. Herein Joseph was the type of the Great Anti-type, the Lord Jesus Christ, the true revealer of the secrets of God to men; secrets connected with redemption and the glorious plan of salvation by the blood of Jesus. The Ten Tribed House of Israel are the revealers of God's secrets to the world. They are the men to whom His secrets are revealed by the Lord for communication to the Gentile world. "He sheweth His words unto Jacob; His statutes and His judgments unto Israel. He hath not dealt so with any nation, and as for His judgments, they have not known them" (Psa. cxlvii. 19, 20). These secrets, hidden from all eternity, are now revealed unto His people, and they are the oracles of God, once entrusted to Judah, but now transferred with "the kingdom of God" to "the House of Israel," a "nation bringing forth the fruits thereof" (Matt. xxi. 43; Gen. xli. 52; Rom. iii. 1—2, xvi. 25, 26, 27).

Digitized by Google

Finally, Joseph, the youngest son of Israel (save one, Benjamin), was exalted to be the First-born. The birthright was God's gift to him and to his seed for ever, and he was endowed when the sons of Israel were blessed by their father with all the temporal blessings God has at His right hand, even Judah's King being afterwards granted to his house as the sovereign over the House of Israel for ever (1 Chron. v. 1—2; Jer. xxxi. 9; Gen. xlix. 22 to 26; Deut. xxxiii. 13 to 17; 1 Kings viii. 25; Jer. xxxiii. 17—26).

Israel of the Ten Tribes being the remnant of Joseph is now, as the British nation, exalted to the position of the First-born of God's chosen people, His inheritance. The British are now in possession of all the blessings God granted in fee simple to Joseph in the passages above quoted, and their Sovereign is of the House of David upon the British throne. The Gates and the multitudinous seed, the wealth and the Colonial Empire, the supremacy at sea, and the Heathen Dominions, the safety of their homes and the commerce of the world, all these are theirs because included in the birthright, as promised. Theirs, too, is the Sabbath Day, and the ten true Laws of God—the Bible, and the evangelising functions, with the love of souls, because these spiritual gifts were transferred to the House of Joseph when the kingdom of God was taken from the Jews and given to the nation bringing forth the fruits thereof—namely, Ephraim (Matt. xxi. 43).

The parallelism is complete when we declare that the Lord Jesus Christ, the First-born of the Father, has, with His precious blood, purchased all these gifts to bestow upon His redeemed people Israel. He is the King of Israel and will be so for ever. "When He ascended up on high He led captivity captive and gave gifts unto men" (Psa. lxviii. 18; Eph. iv. 8). "Yea, for the rebellious also, that the Lord God might dwell among them." Israel were these rebellious ones; and the Lord Jesus poured out, and is still pouring out upon us gifts, temporal and spiritual, that He may subdue our sins, and dwelling among us, lead us at last to submit our hearts and minds nationally to His will till Jer. xxxi. 33, 34, and Heb. viii. 10—12 are fulfilled in us, as a people, to the glory of His Grace. Then will the Great Zaphnath-Paaneah be revealed in His glory as the imparter of the secret things of God—the Preserver and Ruler of His people—their Reedeemer.

SOWING THE SEED.

By E. M. Rush.

In a very short time from now the various organisations for the spread of religious and moral teachings, and the missionary societies both great and small, will be drawing our attention at their annual meetings to the work accomplished, or commenced during the past year, and to what is needed, and hoped for in the future. To each and every one it appears as if Anglo-Israelites must have a keen interest, at least to those of us who realise that the fact of the British people being Israel is of paramount importance, touching, as it does, for every one the bottom of all things connected with this life; for shall we not find it true, that there is not a thing in either the social, or political, and how much more the religious world, that will remain unaffected by the position Israel is destined to hold? Are we not seeing more clearly day by day how the knowledge we have gained as to our origin and destiny increases our responsibility in the sight of God? Can any one read and digest such words as follow, and still doubt this increase of responsibility resting on conscious Israelites? "For thou art an holy people unto the Lord thy God: the Lord thy God hath chosen thee to be a special people unto Himself, above all people that are upon the face of the earth" (Deut. vii. 6). And by divine selection, yet being free agents to work good or evil, we are "witnesses" to the truth of the Word of God, and "messengers of the Gospel" to all the world by divine appointment, yet ourselves depending for eternal life on faith in the finished work of our Saviour Jesus, and for grace and strength for all good work upon the Holy Spirit of the living God.

These things being so, is it not fitting at this season to make a special effort to set forth the light committed to our keeping, that the eyes of many of our missionaries, and others, may be opened, and to try to induce people both at home and abroad to make use of the new power placed ready to their hands by the gift of God? It was but a little while ago we saw mentioned in the Banner how after the claims and arguments concerning "Our Identity" had been put before a Boer in South Africa (vol. ix., p. 484) he acknowledged the truth of them as being undeniable. This means something more than most of us realise; and a short quotation from a letter from Bombay will furnish further food for serious reflection when we shall hear, or read, that this society and that pleads for the millions yet living in darkness, without the light of the Gospel; and for those who have heard and seen, and yet receive it not. The letter gives the following words:—

"I was sitting by the seaside a short time ago when a native apothecary came up, and entered into conversation on various questions, among which I introduced the "Identity." He listened very attentively, and said that when he thought of the success of the British arms he came to the conclusion that there must be a greater power than man fighting for England, and he urged me to let him have some papers on the question." Do not words such as these make us long for missionaries who shall go out, much more fully armed with Bible truths, for sowing in virgin soil the good seed that shall bring forth fruit which leads to eternal life, than even now they possess?

Men who can tell the story of Judah and Israel, with a purpose, who will detail the marvellous history of the two houses, who can say with truth, and feel the power of it, "You have seen the Jew; here now is Israel who was to have the dominion, and has it, as you know; here is proof complete at every point that our Scriptures are true, and the Gospel of Christ is the 'Light' of the world, then how will it be possible for you to stand against it?" Should we not speedily hear many and many a heart-stirring answer to such an appeal backed by the undeniable proofs that our Bible is true, and its story puts all heathen imaginations into the darkness of past ages?

Looking for, and hoping that the commencement of such work is close at hand, let us one and all see what we can do, where lies our own work, and what are the materials at hand, and the most suitable. There is public speaking. Surely, here and there, that can be undertaken, and the distribution of telling papers on all sides that shall promote and provoke discussion, and lead to careful study for the discovery of the truth. Only let us all do something. Here it may be mentioned, as on another special occasion, that as there may be those who are prevented from doing active work, the Free Distribution Fund stands ever waiting with an open purse to receive and disburse contributions which might not otherwise be disposed of. Let us not think only of lands far away, but remember the devoted workers amongst our own heathen, for over our own country, gathered by many evil influences besides ignorance, hangs a cloud that casts a deep shadow, the knowledge of which should awaken our conscience and spur us to action.

Digitized by Google

Further details of the work of the Free Distribution Fund, beyond what is furnished in the monthly report, will be given another time, for the present it will suffice to say that the work continues, the field of labour increases, and the distributors of the fund acknowledge with very many thanks the help that has been given them in so many ways by sympathetic friends.

Donations will be gratefully received by the Treasurer, Miss Lawrence, Rosslyn, Hampton-road, Upper Teddington, or by the Hon. Sec., Miss E. M. Rush, 103, Burnt-Ash Road, Lee, London, S.E.

March 23rd, 1886.

ISRAEL'S CHURCH AND STATE AND DISESTABLISHMENT, AS VIEWED BY THE IDENTITY.

A Lecture by Philo-Israel.

I am, I know, on tender ground. There is no question on which many of our Nonconforming brethren are more sensitive than that of the "Establishment," and they mostly endure with impatience any allusion to the perpetuity of an institution against which they are in opposition, wishing it out of the way. But I am dealing with a great subject now agitating men's minds, and as Anglo-Israelites we have much to say on the matter which must be said, whether men be willing to listen or not—whether they take offence or not. I maintain, however, that there is no offence in the subject which the most sensitive Dissenter should entertain; and that, as Anglo-Israelities, Nonconformists may, and ought, patiently to listen to what we urge. To begin with, What do we mean by "The Church of England?" Do we mean the universal Church—the general assembly and Church of the Firstborn written in heaven of Heb. xii. 23? We don't suppose our commentators mean that! but perhaps we really do! Do we mean local churches like those in Galatia, in Judea, in Laodicea, in Sardis, in Rome, in Ephesus, in Ireland, or in Scotland? We mean not those, though those were once, and some are now, living churches in connection with Israel, but are now either extinct, threatened with extinction, or, having fallen into error, are cut off from the Church of God. Do we mean those Churches in the houses of individuals such as St. Paul alluded to in 1 Cor. xvi. 19 and in the Epistle to Philemon, when he spoke of the Church in the houses of Aquila and Priscilla and Philemon? I certainly speak not of these, nor of this nation as the Church nation of all the rest—the teaching, blessing one. I don't mean that! But I speak of a nation's Church—the Church of England—one established, formed, built, and created, we say, by God Himself for purposes of His own, purposes of blessing, chiefly to all the world around and also to Israel. I call the Catholic (not Roman Catholic) Church of England as we see it now the Church of God and "the Church of Christ" established in this our land.

How can I make that point good, and prove it to your satisfaction that our Church is in very truth the Church of God? By showing you first what men not inspired by God declare it is, by what the Church of England herself claims to be as her true position, and by what God's Word says about it. Hear what the Morning Post said, as its accurate description of what we mean when we talk of the "National Catholic Church of England." It said:—

> But there is one position which the friends of the Church are in danger of taking up, which must be distinctly avoided, or mischief in a new form and of a bad sort will certainly arise. A great deal turns upon the right use made of the term "National Church." There is the sense in which the Bishop of Peterborough used the phrase in his recent brilliant speech, and there is the sense in which it is used by the supporters of Mr. Albert Grey's Burial Boards Bill. The one implies that the Church is not a mere function of the State, but an independent entity, deriving its existence, vitality, and authority, from spiritual sources alone, and in communion with the main trunk of the Catholic Church from the earliest Apostolic days. That the Church is Catholic is of her very essence. That she is National is an accident. The phrase came into use in times when everybody belonged to the Church, and when Church and State were co-incident and co-extensive quantities. But since then large masses of people have separated from her, and, without ceasing to be members of the State, have ceased to be members of the Church. The title of National has remained, though the accident of co-incidence and co-extensiveness has fallen temporarily into abeyance. It is an ancient title, once strictly accurate, and likely to become so again, but for the present only approximately correct. It is National in the sense of being the continued Church of times anterior to Nonconformity; in the sense also of being the Church of the majority of the people; in the sense of being intermingled and associated with the spiritual and social life of the nation in worship; in education; in religious offices at the birth, the bridal, and the burial of the people; and in the sense of being bound to render all religious services for the free use of the people at all regulated and reasonable times. Thus it becomes very necessary to know what it is we are defending. It is the Church of Apostolic times which has been continued in her place by the favour of Providence from then till now, and will without doubt be continued in it as long as England herself shall last.

So far the Morning Post of November 7th, 1885. "The favour of Providence" is the favour of God, and the secular writer thus sees that what we term the Church of England was founded by God, is maintained by His favour, was planted here in Apostolic times, exists still as God would have her be, and without doubt shall last as long as the nation lasts, become again national in a true sense, because protected by the grace of God even to the end!

History supports the Morning Post! Dr. Lingard, the Roman Catholic historian, admits, as the Rev. Robert Douglas, M.A., told us in his late lecture at Clifton, that Episcopacy was established as a regular institution in the second century in Britain. "Gibbon tells us that in May, A.D. 306, Constantine went forth from the City of York to conquer and Christianise the Roman Empire, thus making Rome our debtor for the Christianity she first got from our British Church nationally regarded.

But our own Bishop Ellicott gave us a capital definition of the Church of England lately in his sermon preached in Emmanuel Church, Clifton, on Nov. 15. He said, inter alia, speaking on the definition of the "Church of England," or the Church of the nation:—

> We must give the answer of history. And the answer of history is, in the barest outline, this—that the Church of Christ in this island was founded by missionaries of the Apostles—most likely missionaries who came from the neighbouring shores of France; that the Church was founded in the very earliest days of Christianity; and, as all versed in the ancient history of our Church know, there are records still of the Church in those very early days, and, if my memory fail me not, the names of the bishops of this early English Church are to be found appended to some of the ancient councils of the Church. But, as we know from many and many a combined cause, the Church, then the English Church, declined in numbers and authority, owing to a variety of causes—divisions, inroads from abroad in these early days—and we all remember, and remember with thankfulness, that, after this founding of the Church, there came, by the mercy and blessing of Almighty God, a revival and a renewal—our English Church was renewed and revived; and, to use the words here of a secular historian, I may say that it became the mould on which the civil organisation of the State quietly shaped itself. It came to be the National Church as having itself supplied the very elements for the development and consolidation of the national unity. But up to this time no one could rightly and technically have spoken of it as the Church of England. It was the Church in this island; it was not the Church of England. We may notice in Holy Scripture how it happens that the term of is never applied to the Church in relation to any country. It is curious; and I believe it occurs once in our Authorised Version in reference to the Church as it stands, the Church of Ephesus; but the more correct reading—you will find the Revised Version presents it properly to us—is the Church in Ephesus, the Church in Jerusalem, the Church in Pergamos, the Church in Thyatira. This is the term we find, I believe, without any exception, in Holy Scripture. The Churches in their plural number are spoken of as the Churches of Galatia, and once we find the Church of Thessalonians. The Church was in no way united with the State in that portion of the globe in which it was locally situated. In our own case the first actual relation of Church and the State was when the heathen King of Kent told the Christian missionary that his words were fair, and when he promised him shelter and protection. And that was 1,300 years ago. A little more than a century after this event saw the first rudimentary relation marvellously developed. In the century that elapsed dioceses were created, parishes were formed, tithes were given, the canon law had become accepted, and the decrees of the first four general councils formed an integral part of the constitution of the Consolidated Church. It was a great time—a great day—when the question was put, as an historian tells us, to the bishops and presbyters of the Church in England, whether they would receive decrees of the four councils of the universal Church. The answer was given with one acclaim, "Content." The canon law, as I have said, was accepted, and on the canon law the early laws of the nation were founded, and the relations between Church and State were rendered thus still more close and intimate, and so the Church had silently become the Church of the nation; the Church in England had become the Church of England.

Digitized by Google

* * * * * * *

After this survey we are now in a position fairly to formulate our answer to the broad question which forms the substance of this sermon—"What mean we by the Church of England?" and will not now the answer of any sober thinker be this, or something like this? I mean that true branch of the Church of Christ, founded by apostolic men in these islands—first missionary, then territorial—which, in the providence of God, primarily moulded the civil polity of this country, grew up with it, and was united with it, and when alien tyranny oppressed the country, waived its own privileges that England might be no less ecclesiastically than civilly both self-governing and free; and that is what each sober man means when he uses the term, the National Church.

In fact, friends, as The Times truly said some time ago:—

The Church of England is the oldest of English institutions. It cradled our liberties, it developed our civilisation, it profoundly modified our jurisprudence, and it is interwoven with every fibre of the national organisation.

And this is the institution which God planted in our land and established here, which men want ruthlessly to extirpate and destroy, but shall fail to do it. But what claim does the Church of England herself advance as to her own position as a God-founded, divinely-established Church? Let us learn from her own prayers, articles, and formularies.

See first her articles, and what she defines in Article XIX. to be a true Church. "The visible Church of Christ," she says, "is a congregation of faithful men, in the which the pure word of God is preached, and the sacraments are duly administered according to Christ's ordinance in all those things that of necessity are requisite to the same." She adds that in all these respects the Churches of Jerusalem, Alexandria, Antioch, and Rome have erred, and have erred also in the matter of faith. She declares, too, by her very standing, that she herself has not so erred, by the grace of God; and is therefore "the visible Church of Christ," and "a congregation of faithful men" of the sort described. Her prayers testify to the same fact. For instance, those for Ember Week run thus: "Almighty God and heavenly Father, who has purchased for Thyself an universal Church by the precious blood of Thy dear Son, mercifully look upon the same, and at this time so guide and govern the minds of Thy servants the bishops and pastors of Thy flock that they may lay hands suddenly on no man, but faithfully and wisely make choice of fit persons to serve in the sacred ministry of Thy Church," and so on.

Here the bishops and pastors of Christ's universal Church and flock are clearly those of the Church of England universal; and the sacred ministry of "God's Church" is obviously that of the same "Church of England." In the prayer for the High Court of Parliament and "for this kingdom in general," the supplication that matters may happen "for the good of Thy Church," and "for His whole Church," evidently imply and point to "the Church of England," scattered throughout the world. The words are: "We pray that Thou wouldst be pleased to direct and prosper all their consultations (that is, the Parliament's consultations) to the advancement of Thy glory, the good of Thy Church (clearly the Church of England), the safety, honour, and welfare of our Sovereign and her dominions. . . . These and other necessaries for them, for us, and Thy whole Church, we humbly beg in the name and mediation of Jesus Christ, our most blessed Lord and Saviour. Amen."

(To be continued.)

"THE SILVER MORN" AGAIN.

WE lately were constrained to point out some statements of one of the writers in The Silver Morn, which in faithfulness to Our Identity we could not approve (BANNER, vol. x., p. 79). To-day it is our pleasing duty to refer to a paper by the Rev. J. H. Broome, Vicar of Houghton, Norfolk, on the subject quoted below, which we can heartily commend. No doubt Mr. Broome does not give any support to Our Identity as such, but he enunciates a great truth which many of our opponents (the Rev. Mr. Baxter to wit) hotly contest—namely, that Great Britain is not one of the Ten Kingdoms of the revived Roman Empire. The latter part of Mr. Broome's article we do not quote, as therein he falls, like Mr. Carey, into the error of speaking of the Jews as the entire nation of Israel, forgetting that while all Jews are Israelites, there is extant the House of Israel who never were and never will be Jews. He believes, however, that to "England" will be given a "prominent part in the restoration of Israel to their own land" (p. 32). We should like Mr. Broome to tell us where he finds authority in God's Word for that statement, "England" being, as he supposes, a purely Gentile, non-Israelite nation? For our part, we see in the Bible (Jer. iii. 18) that Israel and Judah will "return together" out of the land of the North, but there is no place there for Gentile "England," unless England be Lo-Ammi Israel! In Hosea i. 11 we find the same dual return, but not a word about "England." In Ezek. xxxvii. 15—28, we find mention of the restoration of Ephraim and Judah and the Tribes of Israel, the fellows and companions of the former, but again not a word about Gentile "England." We know Mr. Broome, however, to be perfectly right. England will, indeed, restore the Jews to Palestine, going there themselves as their protectors, in the manner described in Isa. xviii. 1—7, and Zeph. iii. 9, being the House of Israel, "The daughters of the Lord's dispersed," or Ten-tribed Ephraim, God's "Lo-Ammi" chosen ones (1 Chron. xvi. 13).

The sentiments we desire to quote in Mr. Broome's article are these (Silver Morn, vol. ii., No. 13, p. 30).

Many commentators are of opinion that the ten horns of the "beast" mentioned in Dan. vii. 7—17, represent so many kingdoms of the revived ancient Roman Empire. In the prophet's time they were not in existence, but in the distant future their ten notable kings were to arise. In Rev. xvii. 12 the apostle John speaks of them as "receiving no kingdom as yet." Many attempts have been made to give an orderly classification of these especial ten kingdoms. Some think that Great Britain is, or is to be, one of them. Can a true and definite geographical connection mark her ut as ever having been one of the Roman kingdoms? Let us consult history, which tells us that Great Britain never had a king of the entire realm till the days of Edgar of the Saxon Monarchy, three hundred and seventy-four years after the Romans had withdrawn their forces from Britain, which they had never entirely subjugated even in Agricola's time, A.D. 78, for the mountainous parts of Wales remained unsubdued, letting alone the Northern parts of Scotland, such as Ross, Sutherland, and Caithness, with the Hebrides, which last are about one-eighth of the whole kingdom. The Romans never regarded their uncertain establishment of their conquests in Britain over the petty kings of barbarous tribes of sufficient importance to style them a kingdom added to Cæsar's power, but as another province only of his vast empire gained at length by the military skill of Agricola. On the final abandonment of Britain by the Romans, about the year 420, after being masters of the best part of it for nearly four centuries, the historian says, "The Britons had already deposed the magistrates appointed by Rome, proclaimed their independence, and taken up arms for their defence against their invaders, as the Emperor Honorius could no longer give them assistance. But the final disseverance was not accompanied by any apparent ill-will. On the contrary, a mutual friendship subsisted for some time after between the islanders and the Romans, and the Emperor, in a letter addressed to the states or cities of Britain, seemed formally to release them from their allegiance and to acknowledge their national independence." The "ten horns of the beast," signifying ten kings (Rev. xvii. 12), had not appeared when the Romans finally departed from Britain, leaving its inhabitants to be governed by their own civil laws and religious observances. Thus there appears to be no authority from Scripture, and certainly none from a rightly defined geographical connection of England with the Roman world, to form the conclusion that our beloved country is to become one of those wicked kingdoms, destined to give "their power and strength unto the beast" (Rev. xvii. 13) of the latter day, and to be found, like Balak and Balaam, warring against the "King of kings" in the last conflict, when He shall appear for His people Israel in the valley of Jehoshaphat, called "the great battle of the Lord God Almighty" (Rev. xvi. 14—16).

Digitized by Google

There is an increasing interest shown on the part of Christians and others in the land as to the prospects and hopes of the Jewish people. More than one passage of the prophetic Scripture seems to intimate that England will take a prominent part in the restoration of Israel to their own land.

Review.

New Testament Truth on the Anglo-Israel Controversy. By J. G. Taylor. Price 3d. Robert Banks and Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

THIS pamphlet of 31 pages contains a reprint of the excellent papers published in the BANNER OF ISRAEL during 1885-86 by Mr. J. G. Taylor, of Newcastle-on-Tyne. They are most valuable because they discuss, and in our view controvert, statements evidently very dear to the clerical mind, and which form the backbone of the opposition to the Identity of those who hold spiritualising interpretations. Mr. Taylor's papers are most able and caustic. They answer our opponents in a very good-humoured yet complete manner, and furnish in the hands of Identity believers a perfect armoury of weapons whereby we may carry on the war into our enemies' country and at the same time parry their thrusts at our contention. Where all are good it may be invidious to select some of Mr. Taylor's topics for especial notice; but we think "The Gentile Parenthesis" a very telling answer to our clerics, and we commend it to their notice for reply. It will be found on page 14 of the pamphlet. The crucial point is this, that in God's Word the "rejoicing people" are represented as the people "of Israel, and the Gentiles are invited to rejoice with them" (Rom. xv. 10), and there is not a solitary text to be found in the Bible "where the Gentiles are commissioned to evangelise Israel." From Genesis to Revelation, says Mr. Taylor, the Hebrew stands appointed to reclaim the Gentiles, and "if the purpose has somehow collapsed and withered away in the very age it should have borne fruit, it will be the first occasion on which God's designs have been baulked by His creatures." We commend this sentence (page 15) to our opposing clergy's consideration, and beg them to refute it if they can.

Mr. Taylor's sentiments on Gal. iii. 29 are particularly good, for he distinguishes between those who are "heirs according to promise," as the Revised Version has it, and those who are "heirs of the promises." He shows on page 26 that the Gentiles are heirs of a specific promise, but not of the promises, and that promise is described with clearness in Rom. xv. 27; they were to be partakers with the Hebrews of their spiritual things, but of nothing else. "The blessings of saving religion formerly in the exclusive possession of Israel became the heritage of the Church universal; but the Church is not, and cannot be, heir to the land, the wealth, the colonies—the several attributes of national Israel."

The spiritualisers, says Mr. Taylor, disdain these things as unimportant matters quite below the privileges and blessings of the Church's inheritance. Granted; but if so, why does the Church and why do its clergy refuse to allow an inheritance God gave Israel in these very things and deny Him the right to endow His people with earthly gifts, which He sees to be needful for the fulfilment of His designs?

A very valuable portion of Mr. Taylor's work is that wherein he treats of Gal. iii. 28 (pp. 9—12). In Christ Jesus "there is neither Jew nor Greek." He notes very correctly that this is the watchword of our enemies, who argue from this one text that Anglo-Israelites are in error because in God's sight Israel has no advantage over other races; there is, in fact, henceforth "neither Jew nor Greek" in Christ. Mr. Taylor answers this objection in a masterly manner by showing it is "opposed to history," "opposed to Scripture," and also "opposed to common sense." History opposes it, and our own opponents cannot deny its testimony that our own race is now the most highly favoured of all nations, and that we are literally "standing in the shoes of Israel." Our language, says M. Littré is going to Anglicise the globe. There are then national distinctions now under the Gospel, and no one, not even our opponents, can deny it. Scripture opposes our antagonists, as Mr. Taylor shows on page 11, by a great abundance of Scriptural quotations showing that "the Bible teems with promises to the Hebrews of national supremacy. The declaration, "There is neither Jew nor Greek," does not revoke these, "for Paul was discoursing not of secular concerns, but of spiritualities." Finally, the objection, says Mr. Taylor, is opposed to common sense, for if there are no national distinctions now under Christ, Gal. iii. 28 also proclaims that there is now "neither male nor female, barbarian nor Scythian, bond nor free." "This drops the blunder into the crucible," and there we mean to leave it!

We heartily commend this pamphlet to our readers as a most valuable gift to clergymen, and to such of our lay friends as have yet failed to see that Our Identity is a part of God's truth. We hope the work will be circulated by thousands, and it cannot in that case fail to help our cause. We conclude with Mr. Taylor's last sentences, because these put the whole subject into a nutshell.

"Israel," he says, "the embodiment of prophecy, and the living evidence of its faithfulness, is the divinely-equipped antidote for modern doubt. With Ephraim-Israel, as with a flash of lightning, will God illuminate the sacred scroll, and constrain the most sceptical to confess "it is truth," or stand condemned in the estimation of the world. And if the aim of prophecy is thus to destroy infidelity, and establish the authenticity of revelation, those who would repress or detract from its literal character are doing what is in their power to thwart the very purposes for which it was framed."

JEWISH POPULATION OF THE WORLD.—The total number of Jews in the world is estimated at 6,377,602—that is, 5,407,602 in Europe, 245,000 in Asia, 413,000 in Africa, 300,000 in America, and 12,000 in Oceania. The European Jews are distributed as follows—1,643,708 in Austria-Hungary, 561,612 in Germany, 60,000 in Great Britain, 3,000 in Belgium, 3,946 in Denmark, 1,900 in Spain, 70,000 in France, 2,652 in Greece, 7,373 in Switzerland, 8,693 in Holland, 36,289 in Italy, 600 in Luxemburg, 200 in Portugal, 260,000 in Roumania, 2,552,145 in Russia, 3,492 in Servia, 3,000 in Sweden and Norway, and 116,000 in European Turkey. There are about 150,000 in Asiatic Turkey, 15,000 in Persia, 47,000 in Asiatic Russia, 19,000 in India and China, and 14,000 in Turkestan and Afghanistan. In Africa there are about 35,000 in Algeria, 100,000 in Morocco, 55,000 in Tunis, 6,000 in Tripoli, 200,000 in Abyssinia, 8,000 in Egypt, 8,000 scattered over the desert, and about 1,000 at the Cape.—Family Herald, Nov. 21, 1885.

The A B C Church and Chapel Directory and May Meeting Handbook contains a complete List of the May Meetings now being held in London, can be had of Robert Banks & Son, by post for three stamps.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed:—"Philo-Israel," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

SUBSCRIPTIONS £ s. d.

Annual Subscription for one copy weekly (including the Twelve Double Numbers) post free - 0 7 6
Two Copies (including Double Numbers) - - 0 13 6
Three Copies " " " " - 1 0 4
Four Copies " " " " - 1 5 6
Six Copies " " " " - 1 16 4

Post Office Orders to be made payable at the head office, St. Martin's-le-grand, London, to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C., and W. H. GUEST & Co. 29, Paternoster-row, London.

The Editor cannot undertake to return rejected MSS. unless stamps for the purpose be sent. Parties requiring an answer should enclose a stamp.

Contents Bills and Show Cards may be obtained on application to the Publishers.

Advertisements should be sent to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

Prepaid Advertisements are inserted at the rate of 30 words for 1s. 4d.

WANTED, by an Elderly Female, a large Front Room, comfortably furnished as Bed and Sitting Room. Christian, Anglo-Israelite family preferred. References exchanged. State lowest terms to Mrs. Appleby, James Poston, 67, Pembroke Place, Liverpool.

PUBLISHED BY ROBT. BANKS & SON,
RACQUET COURT, FLEET STREET, E.C.

WORKS BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

The Geography of the Gates. With Map and six full page, and one double-page, Illustrations, printed on plate paper. 208 pages, in handsome cloth, gilt Price 3s. 6d., post free 3s. 10d.

Our Identity with the House of Israel. Price 4d. Reprinted from "Clifton Chronicle Letters"

The History of the House of Israel; How they were Lost, and How they were Found, Told for the Children. Price 6d., cloth 1s.; post free 7d. and 1s. 1d. Fourth Edition. Eleventh thousand.

Philo-Israel's Leaflets. Four pages Crown 8vo Price 1s. 6d. per 100, postage 2d. No. 1.—"The Identity of the British with Lost Israel." 2.—"The Glory of God." 3.—An Address to British Seamen. 4.—An Address to British Soldiers. No. 5.—The Communion of the Body and Blood of Our Lord Jesus Christ Viewed in the Light of Our Identity. 6.—The Bible and the Jew. 7.—The Jewish People. 8.—Lo-Ammi; or, the Gentilisation of Ten-Tribed Israel. 9.—The Atonement. 10.—Is Our Identity Evangelical, or Non-Evangelical in its Tendency? No. 11.—Cui Bono? No. 12.—The "Thoughts" of God Towards Israel, Judah, and the Gentile Nations. 13.—The Teutonic Theory—Is It True? 14.—An Address to the Police Force of Great Britain. 15.—An Address to Israel's Missionaries and Their Supporters. 16.—The One Seed, Christ. 17.—An Address to Israel's Electors. Price 1s. 6d. per 100.

A Resume of the Scriptural Argument, proving the Identity of the British Race with the Lost Ten Tribes. Price 1d.; 6s. per 100. New edition now ready.

Identity Leaflets. No. 1.—ISRAEL'S MISSION (Psa. cxlvii. 19; Mark xvi. 15; John iii. 16). By V. M Cox. No. 2.—HOPE FOR EGYPT (Isaiah xix. 20-25) By V. M. Cox. 100 copies post free for 1s.; 9s. 6d. per 1000.

"Banner" Series of Leaflets No. 1. "For Thine is the Kingdom, the Power, and the Glory." By Philo-Israel. No. 2.—The Spirit of Truth. By Philo-Israel. Price 1s. 3d. per 100, post free.

Volumes of "The Banner of Israel"

May be had, bound in specially-designed dark blue cloth covers, handsome gilt side and back, at the following

VOL. I. (Out of print.)
VOL. II. ... ... 7s.
VOLS. III. to IX. ... ... each 8s.

London: Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court Fleet-street.

Price 1s. per 100, assorted packets 1s. 2d.; 8s. 6d. per 1,000 (nett). Carriage free 4d. extra.

Thoughts for the British Folk.

Suggested by PHILO-ISRAEL.

No. 1.—Multitudinousness.
No. 2.—The Gates.
No. 3.—The Nation and Company of Nations.
No. 4.—British Wealth.
No. 5.—The Rulers Over Many Nations.
No. 6.—The Universal Creditor.
No. 7.—The Ever-Continuing British Monarchy.
No. 8.—The Scattered People at Home in Every Climate
No. 9.—The Queen, Lords, and Commons.
No. 10.—The Unconquerable Nation.
No. 11.—The Fatally Destructive Race.
No. 12.—The Isolated Nation.
No. 13.—The Nation Which Belts the Earth.
No. 14.—The Emancipators of the Slave.
No. 15.—The Christian Nation.
No. 16.—The Ten Commandments.
No. 17.—The Asylum for the Foreign Refugee.
No. 18.—The Possessors of the "Sign."
No. 19.—The Universal Missionaries.
No. 20.—Testimony of the Book of Common Prayer.
No. 21.—Church and State, and also Disestablishment.
No. 22.—Our Poor Laws.
No. 23.—The Labour Question is an Identity Question.
No. 24.—Emigration.

R. BANKS & SON Racquet-court, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

COMPLETE CHEAP EDITION.

Cloth gilt, price 7s. 6d., free to any address on receipt of P.O.O. or cheque.

FIFTY YEARS IN THE CHURCH OF ROME.

By FATHER CHINIQUY.

WITH PORTRAIT OF THE AUTHOR.

The work presents an array of testimony against the workings of the Church of Rome, and is a valuable compendium of facts from a living witness, and should be in the hands of preachers, students of history, legislators, heads of families, and every lover of liberty.

"It is pre-eminently calculated to open the eyes of the thoughtless and unsuspecting, and to give them a true insight into the real character of the Papacy. Moreover, it is of the most vital importance at such a crisis as the present."—Dr. Doudney in the Gospel Magazine.

Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

Price 6d., by post 7d., in cloth cover

ISRAEL'S CHRONOLOGY, compiled from the Old Testament, and arranged as a CHART, giving the A.M. and A.C. dates, and Scripture references for every event therein specified, together with the points of agreement between the Bible History and the Marks and Measurements of the Great Pyramid. With Explanatory Notes and Observations by GEORGE N. WALSH.

Dr. JOSEPH WILD'S WORKS

NEW EDITION JUST PUBLISHED.

THE LOST TEN TRIBES

The FUTURE of ISRAEL and JUDAH.

The Special Commissioner of the Christian Word, writing of Dr. Wild, says:—"On Sunday evening I had to fight my way into the Congregational Church of which Dr. Wild is the minister. He hails from America, and is quite the sensation of the hour. There was no standing room anywhere, and as I made to the door I met many coming away However, I had made up my mind to hear the Doctor, and hear him I did. It seems that the subscribers have a door to themselves; I made for it, and luckily found a chair, which I wedged in under the platform. The Doctor prayed, and then we had a sermon about Revelation, containing much that was very effective, if not about his text, at any rate about that mysterious part of Scripture from which the text was taken."

Just published, price 3d., post free 3 d.

New Testament Truth on the Anglo-Israel Controversy.

By J. G. TAYLOR.

CONTENTS—

Abrahamic Covenant.—The Advent.—Consolation of Israel.—"Cutting Off" of Israel—Ebal and Gerizim.—End of Faith.—Function of Prophecy.—Gentile Church.—Gentile Dispensation.—Gentile Parenthesis.—Fulness of the Gentiles.—Times of the Gentiles.—"He is not a Jew which is one outwardly."—"Heirs according to the promise."—Hosea and Peter.—"Israel hath not attained to righteousness,—The law.—"Lo, we turn to the Gentiles."—Meaning of "His People."—Meaning of "Israel."—Meaning of "My People."—Meaning of "The People."—Meaning of "Thy People."—New Covenant.—The Old Testament and the New.—The Promises.—Seed of Abraham.—Set Ideas.—Spiritual Fulfilments.—Spiritual Israel.—'A Stone of Stumbling."—"The kingdom shall be taken from you."—"There is neither Jew nor Greek."—Who's Who in the New Testament.

London: Robert Banks & Son, Racquet court, Fleet-st., and by order of any bookseller.

A Thousand of the first edition sold in a few weeks for Great Britain, Ireland, Egypt, Natal, India, and America

ISRAEL'S WORLD:

Origin and Destiny of the British Race
Colonies, and Empire; according to Scripture,
History, and Signs of Our Times.

BY REV. HENRY ROE.

Price 2d., post free 2½d. R. Banks & Son, Racquet-court

Also by the same Author, "Consecration," 4d.; "Going to Africa," 1s.; "Fernando Po Mission," 1s.; "West African Scenes," 2s. E. Stock, 52, Paternoster-row, London, E.C. Rev. H. Roe, St. Ives, Cornwall.

Manasseh and the United States. Important Essay delivered before the Lost Israel Identification Society. By Rev. JOSEPH WILD, at Union Congregational Church, Brooklyn, N.Y. Price 2d., post free 2½d.

Robert Banks & Son, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C.

SEE FIFTY REASONS WHY THE ANGLO-SAXONS ARE THE LOST TEN TRIBES. Price 6d., post free 7d.

The Land of Espousals.
The Testimony of Language.
The Transfer of the Kingdom from Judah to Israel.
"Shiloh:" Its Interpretation.
Ireland not Missioned from Rome
Israel and Judah Distinct.
Israel's Blindness.
The Standard Goes to Israel.
Our Royal Standard.
The Princess Tephi.
Ireland a University for Europe
The Apostle Paul in Britain.

Blessings and Curses, and their Relation to Israel and Judah. By F. W. Phillips, of Speedwell-road, Birmingham. In neat coloured wrapper, price 2d. post free 2d.

An Elementary Digest or Sketch of the Chief Facts and Teachings of the Great Pyramid of Egypt. Adapted to the Unlearned and Unscientific. 56 pages, Illustrated with Diagrams, price 4d., post free 5d. 10th Thousand.

The Sisters of Harrowdale Rectory. A Tale of Great Interest for Young People on the Identity of Lost Israel; with splendid double-page frontispiece, illustrating Harrowdale Rectory and Church. This book will be read by both young and old with the greatest interest. By Mrs. M. A. SEARSON. Price 2s. 6d. post free 2s. 9d.; handsome cloth, gilt, bevelled boards,

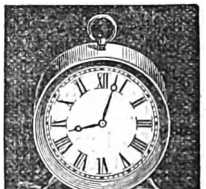
R. Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

Free by Parcels Post for 2s. 9d.

WALTER KEAST, 102, Kennington Park Road, London, S.E., will send on receipt of Postal Order for 2s. 9d. a pair of his Ladies' Comfortable House Slippers. These Slippers are especially suited for Summer wear, the uppers are lasting, and have elastic in the fronts, and being Hand-Sewn, they are the most durable and cheapest Slipper ever offered.

Lasting Oxford Walking Shoes
With high or flat heels, free for Postal Order for 3s. 6d. Walter Keast's

"Old Ladies' Comforts" 4s. 6d.



These Walking Shoes are made of Glove Kid, with broad toes and flat heels, and are lined through with Kid, the easiest fitting Shoe ever made. No place is too distant or remote in the United Kingdom to send these articles.

Send number of size. Numerous letters of satisfaction have been received from readers of the BANNER OF ISRAEL who purchased our Norwegian Slippers.

THE WONDER OF 1886!

AN excellent Timekeeper, strongly made; an ornament to any room, or suitable for a shop Will be sent carriage free to all readers of this paper for 5s. 6d. The best and cheapest Clock yet produced in any part of the world.

Carriage 5/6 Paid.

Carriage 5/6 Paid.

The face measures 5½ inches across, and we guarantee that the above is a correct drawing of the clock. Will stand on mantel-shelf or can be hung up. The cheapest thing advertised. Direct, on receipt of P.O.O., from the importers, BAXTER & Co., MOOR LANE, LANCASTER.

£5 REWARD.

GOLDEN PILL OF HEALTH.

The Proprietors of the above well-tried Family Medicine of 60 years standing, have determined to protect the Public—viz., by sending direct to sufferers instead of supplying their Golden Pill of Health through agents, and will pay £5 to any sufferer who does not find relief in the following distressing diseases:—Indigestion, Loss of Appetite, Headache, Dyspepsia, Constipation, Bile, Nervousness, and all diseases arising from sedentary employment or close confinement. The Pills in boxes, post paid, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 8d. Directions and Testimonials accompany each box. None are genuine without the Government stamp. Only Address—

PROFESSOR McPHERSON & Co.,
KIDDERMINSTER.

Printed for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C. PUBLISHED BY GUEST, HAYWORTH, & Co., 29, PATERNOSTER-ROW, WEDNESDAY, APRIL 28, 1886. [All rights reserved.

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."

(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India.)

"And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the Forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS of the EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. X., No. 488. Entered at Stationers' Hall.] WEDNESDAY, MAY 5, 1886. [DOUBLE NUMBER, TWOPENCE.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
Israel's Witnessing Function	173
The Coming "Family Show"	174
Israel's Church and State, and Disestablishment, as Viewed by the Identity. A Lecture by Philo-Israel. Part II.	175
The Assyrian Church. By A Watcher	177
A Gentile's Opinion of Great Britain in the Nineteenth Century. By J. S. Anderson	177
"Blessed Shalt Thou be in the City" (Deut. xxviii. 3)	178
A Clergyman's Difficulty	180
Another Clerical Objection	180
When and by Whom was the Gospel First Introduced into Britain?	181
The "Lost" Ten Tribes	182
An Identity Discussion Even in Northampton	183
"A Watcher" in the Promised Land	185
Sir Salar Jung on the Armies of Native States in India	186
Israel's Scripture and Prayer Union	187

ISRAEL'S WITNESSING FUNCTION.

WHEN we speak of this nation's witnessing function, we mean her Protestantism; when she is most Protestant in her national character she most honours God by witnessing for Him, "that He is God," and witnessing for Him against all forms of error, superstition, and idolatry. Throughout her history, this nation has distinctly proved that whenever she sunk into God-dishonouring dallying with Rome and her idolatry, just then she has always ceased to be prosperous and has come under the chastening visitation of her God. On the other hand, just in proportion to her manly testimony for Jesus, she has prospered and received tokens of the divine approval. Protestantism and prosperity have gone together; but lukewarmness in the testimony for the truth as it is in Jesus, has led us invariably to times of trouble and distress for our race—answering to the frowns on the Master's face, inflicting chastisement or "correction in measure" on the wayward child, and leaving us not "altogether unpunished," according to our deserts (Jer. xxx. 11).

What is our present political trouble? It is Ireland and its eighty-six Nationalists—most of whom, if not Papists themselves, represent purely Papist constituencies in the British Parliament. Ireland has been our scourge for long past; and for the last five years the Canaanitish Irish have been "pricks in our eyes and thorns in our sides," according to the prophecies (Num. xxxiii. 55). The trouble is now becoming acute, and possibly things, having come to the worst, will mend. The cure of our nation's disorder will, we suppose, be the removal of the Roman Catholic element out of our national Parliament by some means or other, and then will peace return to a distracted nation, which seems now to get no rest, by reason of the Popish sore which afflicts its body politic.

We append a portion of a paper on this subject, published by the Rev. Hely Smith, the well known vicar of Market Rasen, which illustrates our remarks, and ably brings much historical research to bear upon the facts. He wrote thus of our nation's history, commencing with the Commonwealth:—

"... Oliver Cromwell was at least a Protestant of Protestants. In no period of our country's history was England more prosperous at home or more respected abroad. The acquisition of Jamaica, the first and most important of our West Indian possessions, dates from the Commonwealth.

"Charles II. was a Papist at heart, sanctioned the persecution of Protestants by his brother, and was received into the communion of the Church of Rome on his death-bed—'dying,' as Macaulay describes it, 'with the host sticking in his throat.' In his reign were the plague and the fire of London, and England was panic-stricken and humiliated by the hostile fleet of the Dutch sailing up the Thames as far as the Medway.

"James II. was an avowed Papist—a bigot and a persecutor. A reign of civil war, terrorism, and riots; but prolonged national calamity was averted by the prompt action of the people in driving him from the throne.

"William of Orange was the European champion of Protestantism. He landed at Torbay with the flag flying from the masthead of his ship emblazoned with the motto, 'The Protestant religion and liberties of England I will maintain.' His reign brought power, prosperity, and plenty to England.

"Anne was also Protestant. England prosperous at home; Marlborough victorious abroad; Gibraltar was acquired; the union of the legislature of England and Scotland effected, and the kingdom was first called Great Britain.

"The House of Hanover succeeded to the throne simply on the ground of its Protestantism, and under the four Georges and William IV., our Empire grew to be one on which the sun never sets, and to be so respected that to be a British subject has become a greater boast and protection than the 'Civis Romanus sum' of the ancient mistress of the world.

"Yet this prosperous period was not without its dark clouds. In 1806 there came into office what was known as the 'Roman Catholic administration,' because the ministers were pledged to introduce popery into the Legislature. National disgrace and disaster were so crowded into their short term of power, that after thirteen months they were compelled to resign. This is more remarkable, as the Ministry was called 'The Ministry of all the Talents,' on account of the acknowledged abilities of its members. Again, after the passing of the Catholic Emancipation Act, 1829, came two years of unprecedented distress. Lord Stanhope, who moved the amendment to the king's speech, Feb. 4, 1830, said that, 'All the great interests —agriculture, manufactures, trade, and commerce—had never at one time been at so low an ebb.' Securities of all kinds sank forty per cent. There was a sudden depression in trade. The wages of silk weavers reduced from 17s. a week to 9s. The country filled with violence and incendiary fires. Ireland so unusually disturbed as to call for a renewal of the Insurrection Act, and all these troubles were followed by the cholera, which caused the greatest mortality known in this country since the plague of London.

Digitized by Google

"For many years the reign of our present gracious Queen continued bright and glorious, but it cannot be denied that an ominous darkness is now obscuring the long sunshine of our prosperity. Its decline has been remarkably coincident with the growth of Romanism, and its spurious counterpart, Ritualism. History once again repeats itself. Mr. Gladstone's late administration might well claim, from the acknowledged ability of its members, the title of 'All the Talents,' conferred on the Fox and Grenville coalition Ministry. It deserves also to bear the name of the 'Roman Catholic Administration,' from its undoubted sympathy with Romanisers. Not only was a popish viceroy appointed to rule in India over 200,000,000 of the Queen's subjects, but diplomatic relations—discontinued for three centuries—were practically revived with the Vatican, and precedence was given in Ireland to popish bishops over Protestant ministers; whilst the highest dignities in the Established Church have been conferred on men avowedly desirous of re-union with Rome. And this 'talented' administration, which came into power with a vast majority of 130 in 1880, was repeatedly discredited and finally beaten by a majority of 12 in 1885. It blighted everything it touched; alienated almost every European power; strained the loyalty of the colonies to the utmost; involved the country in a series of unnecessary, costly, sanguinary, disastrous, fruitless wars, and raised the annual expenditure of the country to one hundred millions; while the lament of commercial and agricultural depression was raised throughout the land. Hence the decline of our national Protestantism and the decline of our national prosperity under a late administration are equally evident and universally admitted. When will the people and their rulers learn to associate cause and effect? A priest-ridden nation never has been, and never can be, a prosperous nation, and not until the people of England determine steadfastly to resist every encroachment of Rome, both in politics and religion, to banish the superstition and idolatry of bread-worship, wafer-worship, cross-worship, Mary-worship, saint-worship, and priest-worship, and return to serve the one living and true God, and Jesus Christ, whom He hath sent, can they look for the return of national prosperity."

The picture, drawn by a master hand in the above, corresponds singularly with the story of our nation's Israelitish origin. Ephraim was ever prone to idols and idolatry. "Because Ephraim hath made many altars to sin, altars shall be unto him to sin," is the testimony of Hosea viii. 11, and it is true to-day of this nation. The sin of our race connected with the false gods of Popery, necessarily brings on us the "corrections in measure" of a loving, but jealous God who will not allow His beloved son to depart from Him willingly; but recalls him by chastisements and punishments to His side. Israel's duty is to witness for her God—to protest against false worship and every evil way. But her history has been one great lapse from this her bounden duty—one splendid sin against her Maker from first to last!

Now, at the end of the dispensation, although there is a marked improvement in her witnessing operations, and she is really sending the Gospel to all the nations, to all the families, and to all the kindreds of the earth, there is a constant tendency in her to backslide into popish, ritualistic ways, which need the corrections of her God to restore her to the paths of righteousness. Nevertheless, there is no fear of any final falling away such as the Rev. Hely Smith, we suppose, evidently dreads. For this our nation is God's people Israel, and with them God has an everlasting covenant which will prevent their final lapse. "Thou hast confirmed to Thyself Thy people Israel to be a people unto Thee for ever," is the testimony of God's servant David in 2 Sam. vii. 24. But how is this people Israel's recovery to God's favour to be effected while they on their part are so prone to fall, that their stability from one day to another, left to themselves, cannot be counted on? Under God, and for His Son's sake, the remedy is amply provided for. God has promised to His people the baptism of the Holy Spirit, and also that gift of the new covenant which will "put His laws into their mind and write them in their hearts;" so that they shall become God's people and He their God; whereby they shall all know Him, from the least of them to the greatest of them; and their sins and their iniquities He will remember no more (Heb. viii. 10—12). Israel, praise ye the Lord!

THE COMING "FAMILY SHOW."

THE time for the opening of the Indian and Colonial Exhibition draws near, and then we shall have a tangible and visible illustration to present to ourselves and our neighbours of the size and extent of our Queen's dominions. The fact that bewilders us all in regard to our British Empire is its magnificent territorial extent. Few can realise the size of its component parts. We remember once being interrogated by one in humble life as to whether, during our residence in India, we had ever come across his son, who was a private soldier in the army. "Where," we asked, "has he been serving?" The reply was that "he had been principally in Mirut, in the North-west provinces." "Ah," we replied, "that is about 1,000 miles from the nearest point of that Presidency in which our lot had been cast, and consequently we never had had a chance of seeing him."

A similar anecdote was narrated in our hearing lately by the Right Rev. Bishop Helmuth, formerly Bishop of Huron in Canada. An inquirer asked him if he knew a certain relative in Canada. It turned out the latter resided in a spot "just 3,000 miles" from where the Bishop had lived, and both were in British-Canadian territory. Such facts as these give us a hint respecting the vast areas over which our nation rules, and the splendid inheritance God has given us literally within the four quarters of the earth, West, and East, and North, and South (Gen. xxviii. 14). When the Exhibition opens a few days hence we shall have ocular demonstration of the variety of races over whom the Queen exercises rule, and of the amazing profusion of products which help to supply the wealth of God's people Israel. The Standard newspaper, on March 17th last, published a fine review of what we may expect to see at the coming Exhibition, and introduced the subject in a way not unworthy of Our Identity; thus:—

We have had the Fishery, the Health, and the Inventions Exhibitions. This year the field from which competition is invited is sufficiently wide, since rather more than a third of the human race may send to the capital of the British Empire samples of what their lands yield or their work-shops produce. India is itself not a country, but a collection of countries. Nor are the Colonies any easier to classify. Canada, reaching as she does from the Atlantic to the Pacific, can fill her courts with the riches of a vast stretch of the American Continent. The West Indies are more homogeneous. But when we cross to the mainland, we have Colonies as tropical as British Honduras and Demerara, and as temperate as the Falkland Islands, from which to collect examples of the means by which our fellow-subjects prosper and grow rich.

Digitized by Google

Australia is in itself a continent, and from the sugar fields of Queensland to the wheat-covered plains of the South can offer almost any crop of almost any climate, whilst in New Zealand we have a region not unlike the old country, but rather more agreeable, so far as the winds and weather are concerned. In the Cape and Natal we find another land, not so varied perhaps, but equally interesting, and though there is little to be said for either Sierra Leone or the Gambia as homes for our own race, it must be remembered that men of the most varied complexions are interested in the forthcoming display.

The distinguishing feature of the coming Exhibition, however, according to the Standard, is that the Show is a family affair. "No foreigners are allowed." It will be a meeting of Israel and her children, the Home and Colonial stock, helped by the alien but now adopted sons of the Hebrew race; a meeting to compare their progress in the arts and manufactures of civilization. It will be, as the journalist tells us, "a competition among the dependencies of these little islands, which have become the Mother of so many nations, or of colonies, which are independent in everything but name." These words recall to memory God's blessing on Sarah in Gen. xvii. 16, R. V., where He told her "she should become the mother of nations," or "nations," as preferably rendered in the margin. The Standard is particularly impressed with the magnificence of India as a possession; and justly! For it is not one country or one nation we have there for our inheritance, but sixteen races and sixteen nations, numbering 250 millions in all, who look upon the British as the paramount Power, and on the Queen as their "Empress Mother."

We talk of India and the Indian people, says the Standard, with the ignorance of islanders. We might with far more justice speak of Europe and the "European people," for the "Western Peninsula of Asia," as some geographical generaliser has termed it, does not contain anything like the same variety of races, or tongues, or climates, or products, or religions, as this greatest of British dependencies. From wheat to pine apples, from Afghans, whose homes are in the mountains near Peshawur, to languid Bengalees, from the moist plains drained by the Lower Ganges, from gold and diamonds to iron and coal, from the deodars of the Himalayas to the costly cabinet woods of the South, peoples and products of the most widely different character will pour into the Kensington Exhibition. A true Oriental durbar hall is to be erected, and every nook and corner of the space at the disposal of Hindostan will be filled with the products of her soil, and the teeming arts of her workmen, from the muslins of Dacca to the brasses of Benares.

The Indian Courts at the coming Exhibition will represent the Heathen Empire which God has given to our nation, that we may bring the whole to Christ; but the wonder of the new Exhibition will be that it will be that of a united federated family; that nation and company of nations which God promised to Jacob in Gen. xxxv. 11 (compare Gen. xlviii. 19), and St. Paul in Rom. xi. 25, told us to expect as the sign whereby we might know that "the blindness in part" now afflicting Ten-tribed Israel, would cease and determine, and so all Israel should be saved. The coming "Family Show," therefore, will, properly viewed, be a remarkable prophetic sign to this nation, as proving to them that the time of the discovery of the Identity is near at hand, and that the federation of the Empire is at the doors. The Exhibition will convince our thoughtless folk at home that the Colonies are truly nations now, in their size and importance, and they may well reflect when they see the signs of their greatness exhibited before them, that these our daughter-nations are robust and prosperous states, "as populous as, and in many cases more wealthy than, some European kingdoms." Their cities, like Sydney and Melbourne, are European in their magnificence and culture, and worthy of the race from which these nation-daughters have sprung.

These nation Colonies are Israelitish in their origin and in their outcome, and they are standing proof, if only our eyes were open to see the fact, that this nation, of which they form so grand a part, are the House of Ephraim, now developed into Melo-hag-goim, or the fulness of the nations of Jacob's prophecy, as well as of St. Paul's teaching and prophecy too of Rom. xi. 25. Israel, praise ye the Lord!

ISRAEL'S CHURCH AND STATE AND DISESTABLISHMENT, AS VIEWED BY THE IDENTITY.

A Lecture by Philo-Israel.

(Continued from page 170.)

In the Thanksgiving for plenty after dearth and scarcity, we have it declared that "Thy Church"—that is, God's Church, had devoutly prayed and was heard, and God had given cheapness and plenty to "our land," plainly pointing to the Church of England as "God's Church." In the Thanksgiving for deliverance from plague or sickness, we have "God's Church" described as the Church of this land—namely, "the Church of England," English worshippers thanking God "in the midst of "Thy Church" for mercies vouchsafed. These, and other similar prayers, plainly prove that the Church of England herself, in the Book of Common Prayer and in her Articles regards herself, and in God's sight claims to be "the visible Church of Christ" of this nation—i.e., "the Church of God." But this nation, as we all know, is the modern representative, because the direct heir by lineal descent, according to the flesh, of the House of Ephraim-Israel. And therefore the Church of England, which is the "Church of God" and of Christ, is the Church of the congregation of Israel—a Church established in these islands in the Apostolic times—admitted by historians to be the very first and earliest nationally established Church in the world and the parent of the State. It is known to have been so established about the end of the second century A.D., in the time of Lucius, King of the British, and it then, as well as for centuries afterwards, was the Church of every British subject of the State with which it was incorporated. Now the Church of Christ was "founded on the Apostles and Prophets" (Eph. ii. 20); and therefore the Church of England was founded (as we know it is) on the same basis—"the Apostles and Prophets" of the Hebrews. The Church of England thus is founded on a Hebrew basis—it belongs, as we know, to a Hebrew race, its formularies are Hebrew formularies—the chief corner-stone of the edifice being the Lord Jesus Christ, the Hebrew God-Man of the tribe of Judah.

The Hebrew Church of Old was allied to and incorporated with the State when the Government was a theocracy, under the Lord Jehovah. When the people rejected their God and demanded an earthly king, Saul, the unworthy and ungodly monarch, was given them in God's wrath; but he ruled, remember, a united State and Church as viceroy for the Lord. To him succeeded David, who received from the Lord a perpetual covenant—a covenant of salt—whereby the sovereignty over both Church and State united was vested in him and his heirs for ever—till He come, whose right it is—that is, till the Lord Jesus Christ come—the King of both Church and State in Israel. (Ezek. xxi. 27; 2 Sam. vii. 16; Jer. xxxiii. 17—21; Luke i. 32, 33; Matt ii. 6 and i. 21).* Thus God had joined in perpetuity the State and Church of Israel. He united them

* Ezek. xxi. 27. Speaking of Coniah's crown and mitre: "I will overturn, overturn, overturn it: this also shall be no more, until He come whose right it is, and I will give it to Him."

2 Sam. vii. 16. In regard to David's throne and heirs. "Thine house and thy kingdom shall be made sure for ever before thee. Thy throne shall be established for ever." And Solomon's blessing is stated in ver. 13, uniting Church and State. "He shall build an house for My name—(the Church)—and I will establish the throne of his kingdom for ever" (the State).

Jer. xxxiii. 17—21. "If ye can break My covenant with day and night in their season, then may also My covenant be broken in Old Testament times, and He tells us they will be one in Millennial days, when Christ comes to reign upon the earth over Church and State. In the interim, which is our day, "the kingdom of God," including the spiritual rule of Christ, or Christ's Church, once vested in the House of Judah, was by Christ's own decree made over by transfer to "the nation—mark that!—bringing forth the fruits—the spiritual fruits, mind!—of that kingdom"—namely, to the House of Israel, the British people. Matt. xxi. 43 declares that fact. "Therefore (He said to the Jews) the kingdom of God shall be taken from you and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof." The kingdom of God was the State and the Church in one; that united temporal and spiritual polity which had been vested in David, of the House of Judah, was transferred then to the other House of Israel, united still and inseparable from David's House and throne over Israel, for what God had joined together no man might put asunder. And no one can disunite them now!

Digitized by Google

Dr. Grant has lately put this very clearly. "God never promised perpetuity of duration," he wrote, "to the Churches of Corinth, Rome, Ireland and Scotland, but only to the Church of Israel: so that we need not be discouraged by what has already happened, or may happen around us. Every nation or people in the world, except Israel, may sever the connection between Church and State, or have it severed by a stronger hand than its own; but no power of man or devil can sever the connection which God has established between His own kingdom and His own Church."

A writer on our subject, John Leechman, of the Colony of Victoria, has just published a 10s. 6d. volume in London, called, "Jehovah Triumphant," a remarkable and valuable Identity work, in which, writing on the subject of the Church of England, in 1882, he says (p. 34), "Sec. 32. There is but one kingdom of God, and it must have a visible character and organisation, and an all-subduing influence before it leaves this world, and there is but one authenticated Church and Congregation in the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ. It is a great and glorious fact that, under divine control, the British Protestant Church Ecclesiastical is the Church of God in the veritable Israelitish kingdom of God." This testimony to the accuracy of my own view by a writer in Melbourne, whose book, dated two years ago, is just published in England, is a great satisfaction to myself, and I trust a confirmation to you of the truth of the matter as I am presenting it to you to-night. But it may be, and has been objected, that this description of the "Church of England which deems it 'the Church of God,' virtually excludes from the latter all who are not in the communion of 'the Church.'" "Surely, the 'true Church,'" our opponent adds, "consists of all those in Israel who love the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity, whether in or out of the Church, or beyond it; with the Gentiles of every nationality, who by faith are allowed to share in the spiritual blessings, promised to the Abrahamic seed. Much of the evangelistic work of the world is done by men and women outside this Church. The great Church of America is not established in connection with the State, and yet it does a great missionary work, is honoured of God, keeps the Sabbath, and works for Christ in every part of the world. Can those Churches be excluded from the Church of God?"

Such is the argument of those who are greatly shocked at the idea I enunciate to-night, when I say that "the Church of England is the true, visible, God-founded, God-appointed, Church of God in Israel, and there is none other!" My answer to the opponent is this, God had a visible people chosen for His name, to show forth His praise, and He had no other! That people was Israel, and that people now is British Ten-tribed Ephraim-Israel, God's firstborn. We all here, I suppose, allow that. But does this fact excommunicate and consign to everlasting perdition and destruction all who are not within the ring fence of the national privileges of the firstborn? Surely not! Israelites of the chosen race may reject Christ and be lost! Gentiles, non-Israelites, aliens from Israel's commonwealth, may accept Christ and be saved. The national privilege has no necessary bearing on the question of salvation. So as regards the Church of God, which He has formed for Himself in Israel. It is an instrument for good to the world at large, established in connection with Israel to do Israel's spiritual work, for the benefit of the world at large. It is God's machinery—human, but not perfect yet—for the blessing of the world; but the agents who work it and compose it may not all be (as we know well to our cost) spiritually-minded and saved ones, or truly willing to serve the Lord! The shepherds of Israel of Ezek. xxxiv. no doubt represent the shepherds of the visible Church of Israel, God's appointed means to benefit the nation. But while their misconduct and selfish actions show they are unworthy agents destined to be cast forth, it proves nothing against the fitness of the Church itself as an instrument, if only its pastors were renewed in their minds, or replaced by men after God's own heart. The Church is of God. The pastors or shepherds of it may be and often have been, and many now are, unworthy of their vocation, and destined to be deposed, if God in His mercy does not first give them the changed heart and needed qualification. The Nonconformists and Dissenters, whose existence outside the Church is deemed fatal to the Church's claims, are part of God's plan during the present dispensation, and afford a powerful argument by their bare presence in our midst, and by their dissent and protest that we are Israel, and that the Church is the nation's Church. Such texts as Isa. lii. 8, lx. 5, Zeph. iii. 9, Ezek. xi. 17 to 19, prove these facts.* These texts show that the time is coming when "they shall see (as Israel's watchmen) eye to eye when the Lord shall bring again Zion." But before that they shall be found exhibiting diversity of view, and nonconformity to the national Church's action.

The Church of England, then, being God's visible Church, is the appointed instrumentality in Israel for doing God's work in the world, to promote its evangelisation. But many men now in this Church are not worthy of it. On the other hand, with David My servant, that he should not have a son to reign upon his throne (the State), and with the Levites the priests—My ministers" (the Church).

Luke i. 32, 33. "He (Jesus) shall reign over the House of Jacob for ever, and of His kingdom there shall be no end" (Church and State united under one Head—Christ!).

* Isa. lii. 8. "Thy watchmen (Israel's) shall lift up the voice; with the voice together shall they sing; for they shall see eye to eye, when the Lord shall bring again Zion." It depends on the Return, and till then there will be nonconformity in Israel!

Isa. lx. 5. "Then (when Israel's light comes) then thou shalt see and flow together, and thy heart shall fear and be enlarged, because the abundance of the sea shall be converted unto thee," and so on.

Zeph. iii. 9. "For then"—when the Gentile nations suffer God's wrath—"then will I turn to the people a pure language, that they may all call upon the name of the Lord and serve Him with one consent (or shoulder, marg.)." Therefore, till that day there will be dissent and nonconformity, and no consent and no conformity universally.

Ezek. xi. 17 to 19. "I will give you the land of Israel, and they shall come thither, and I will give them one heart, and I will put a new spirit within you; and I will take the stony heart out of their flesh, and I will give them an heart of flesh," &c. (one heart).

Ezek. xxxiv. 11 to 16, 23. 23rd: "I will set up one Shepherd over them, and He shall feed them—even My servant David. He shall feed them and He shall be their Shepherd."

Jer. iii. 15. "I will bring you to Zion"—(one of a city and two of a family)—"and I will give you shepherds according to Mine heart, which shall feed you with knowledge and understanding."

Jer. xxiii. 4. After gathering the remnant of His flock out of all countries. "And I will set up shepherds over them which shall feed them, and they shall fear no more nor be dismayed; neither shall they be lacking, saith the Lord."

Digitized by Google

many good and saved men too now are out of it, refuse to obey it, and dissent from its discipline and order. But the Church of God stands all the same, waiting the coming of the day when Dissenters and Churchmen alike shall yet see eye to eye in it; when they shall flow together in it, and call upon the name of the Lord, to serve Him with one consent in it, and prove they are "the Church," or the faithful, visible congregation of Israel, which is God's chosen, believing nation.

We come, then, to the conclusion that the Church of England, being the Church of God and of His Christ, cannot be severed from the State, since, both together, they form God's kingdom, visible upon the earth even now, nonconformity and dissent being the accident and exception. The throne of Britain is David's throne; and it is Jehovah's too, involving the idea of God's Church, being His throne over and Church in Israel. "He hath chosen Solomon my son," said David in 1 Chron. xxviii. 5, "to sit upon the throne of the kingdom of Jehovah over Israel." And, again, 1 Chron. xxix. 23, we have the corresponding historical statement, "Then Solomon sat on the throne of Jehovah as king, instead of David, his father, and prospered; and All-Israel obeyed him." The same race, "All-Israel," now obeys Queen Victoria, who is queen regnant over Israel, seated as a descendant of David and Solomon upon the throne of Jehovah in Britain. This, therefore, is literally "the kingdom of God." The people of this realm, her subjects, are God's people and nation.

(To be continued.)

THE ASSYRIAN CHURCH.

By A Watcher.

I do not remember to have seen in the Banner anything calling the attention of Israelites to the piteous appeals of our undoubted brethren in Assyria, to the Church of England, to "Come over and help us."

Dr. Wolfe pronounced them to be an undoubted remnant of the Ten Tribes, and they inhabit the borders of Kurdistan and Persia, just where they were placed by Shalmanesar. They have for years been giving the liveliest evidence of this fact by their fraternal devotion to England and the English Church. Perhaps it was an instinctive feeling of blood-relationship which made me take a warm interest in the appeals of these (so-called) Nestorian Christians to successive Archbishops of Canterbury, in 1838, 1868, and 1876. Small attempts have been made in a half-hearted way, to give them the instruction they begged for. But now our good Archbishop has taken up their cause with characteristic energy. In 1884, he sent out Mr. Riley to report upon the condition and wants of these Christian Israelites, and is following it up by sending two clergymen to open a college for educating youths for the ministry, in the neighbourhood of Lake Van. For this work more than £1,000 a year will be required; and I earnestly appeal to Anglo-Israelites to join in this charitable work towards our brethren. All particulars of this and Mr. Riley's Report, can be obtained by application to Rev. R. M. Blakiston, 2, Dean's-yard, Westminster for sevenpence.

These Assyrians furnish one of the most conclusive Identities yet produced, and their Church history singularly resembles our own. There is no doubt that they are one of the oldest Churches in the world, planted by one of the apostles who preached in Asia, and they have always held stoutly by their threefold orders in the ministry, and their apostolic succession is as unbroken as our own. In the 5th century they were led by Nestorius into heresy on the doctrine of the Trinity, as we were, a few centuries later, by Rome on other points. This Church and our's are the only two in the world that have had innate vitality enough to reform their errors and abuses, without letting go their hold on all that is holy and good in the doctrine and discipline. The Vice-Consul now at Beyrout, held that position for two years in Kurdistan, and denounces them as dishonest, liars, and drunkards, and says that their aspirations for English help are due to a desire for temporal help and protection from the Turks and Kurds. This is disproved by the fact that Rome and America have well supported missions in all the districts occupied by Nestorians, but they will not accept protection which involves the acceptance of Papal supremacy, or the rejection of their long cherished episcopal succession. They are, therefore, at this time suffering horrible cruelties from their rulers rather than forsake the faith which they have held for ages in common with us.

But the Vice-Consul gives us a still stronger Identification in the fact that they were always pestering him with questions as to why England did not annex them, as they knew that such must, sooner or later, be our destiny! How marvellous it is that all the descendants of Abraham, both through Isaac and through Ishmael, should be guided to this prophecy, while those amongst ourselves who do not acknowledge their origin, can see no probability of such an event.

And what if these poor Assyrians are thieves, drunkards and liars? Have we none in England? It is our fault for not sooner attending to their call for instructors. It is all they ask of us, and it shows that they have the truest wisdom—to know that they are ignorant. It rests with us to raise the tone of their morals. If they are as warm-hearted and tractable, as our Syrian Fellaheen, they will soon excel our English labourers, for I have found that seven weeks contact with English straightforward honesty and kindness makes them quite as trustworthy in giving "A fair day's work for a fair day's pay," as the men of any county in England.

Beyrout, March 18th, 1886.

A GENTILE'S OPINION OF GREAT BRITAIN IN THE NINETEENTH CENTURY.

By John S. Anderson.

Since our own countrymen, clerical as well as lay, are so backward in acknowledging the enormous importance of our steadily increasing Empire, it devolves upon foreigners to endeavour to point it out to us. This is striking and significant, for were not the facts most patent they would be only too ready to write in a very different strain.

In this instance we allude to a work which the Paris correspondent of The Times informs the world has just been published by Baron Hübner, the Austrian ex-minister and ambassador, called "A Travers l'Empire Britanique, 1883—1884." Hachette, Paris.

The description of his tour shows, that in traversing Africa, Australia, India, Oceania, and North America, he accomplished 13,000 miles by land, and 47,000 miles by sea, making a grand total of 60,000 miles.

The two volumes he has just published are remarkable for the closeness of the observations, the geniality, and the political, philosophical, and social views, which they contain. The few extracts from his concluding observations are worthy of consideration as relating to pending questions.

"Not very long ago," he says, "most of the colonies were simply scattered factories in archipelagoes, and on the coasts of continents which were more or less inaccessible. The English Parliament took little heed of them; and in this way gave ample scope to the action of the Government. The statesmen who succeeded each other at the Colonial Office followed nearly the same path, and were guided up to a certain point by the same principles which then constituted by a tacit, but general agreement, the policy of England with regard to her trans-oceanic possessions.

Digitized by Google

"The machine was well put together, and worked wonderfully well. It had the priceless merit of giving stability in the management of colonial affairs. Such was still the state of matters about thirty years ago, but since then it has entirely changed. The factories have become rich and flourishing communities; the narrow areas which surrounded them, immense territories; the colonies, states; the populations, nations. While this transformation was proceeding in Canada, and at the Antipodes, Old England was passing through a phase without precedent, and without analogy, in the history of the world.

"Abstention from foreign politics became a sort of article of faith and a fundamental law. . . . . It was under the inspiration of an exceptional man, to whom the country had confided the control of affairs; it was in the midst of the tumult of a great war in the East of Europe, that England woke up. From that day no more has been said of abandoning the Colonies, or even India. On the contrary, there appears for the first time—earliest in Australia—an idea, of confederation with England. But the two movements—that of separation, which belongs to the past, and the opposite tendency which gains ground daily, chiefly in the colonies, but also in England—have the same origin, although they are opposed.

"It is the conviction which is spreading more and more, that it is impossible to remain in the old tracks. The antiquated machinery will no longer work. It must be replaced. A new mechanism is wanted. It is a problem which is put. I do not think it is possible to delay its solution.

"In seeking a solution it would be wise, it seems to me, to keep in view three ends—to secure for the direction of Imperial affairs in the colonies the utmost possible stability; to reserve for the exclusive action of the Imperial Government the control over the interests of men of colour, where they exist; and lastly, with these restrictions, to leave the field free for the development of the local autonomy which is enjoyed by the colonies possessing a responsible government.

"I now come to the question so frequently discussed—the loyalty of the colonies. I am one of those who believe in the loyalty of the Australians, and I see only one contingency in which that loyalty might suddenly and completely disappear—that is, in the case of the British Government replying by a final rejection of certain aspirations of public opinion.

"Two ideas seem rooted in the minds of Englishmen: the ambitious views of Russia, and 'Herat the key of India.' The latter phrase is attributed—I know not with what foundation—to the Duke of Wellington. But in the lifetime of that great captain, an immense space separated the Afghan fortress from the frontiers of Russia. Now they reach it. If it be true that Herat is the key of India, it is unfortunate for England, for that key is hung up at the door of her adversary. From his window, the latter has only to put forth his hand to seize it, unless it be guarded by one equally powerful. But it is not the English who can guard it. Enormous distances separate them from it. The custody of the key is confided to a friend, and that friend is the Ameer of Afghanistan. . . . Truly, if she had no other means of defence, British India would be nothing but a magnificent palace built on shifting sands. But there are other means. There is the sword of England. If Afghan hordes attack the Russian outposts, if some officer commanding a Russian detachment crosses during a walk the frontiers of the Ameer's territory, there is a casus belli. In other words, the axiom of 'Herat, the key of India,' involves war between two of the greatest Powers in the world, and indirectly European war. Happily, in the course of this year—perhaps thanks to the incident of Penjdeh, so rich in instruction—a sudden change has taken place in the ideas entertained on this subject. Herat begins to disappear from among the anxieties of the Anglo-Indian public, and the new Government concentrates its care on the natural frontier of India. It is fortifying the passes, and has recommenced the construction of railways. It is no longer at Herat that the English, placing 400 miles of steppe between them and their base of operations, will go forth to meet the enemy. It is on the Helmund they will await the enemy, if one really exists. The parts to be played will be reversed."

This is the manner in which a Gentile writes on the most important questions of the day, and we must admit that he deserves great credit for his discernment. Had he been one of our leading Anglo-Israelites he could not have put the case more clearly. In fact, as far as he goes, he proves our case, and blind, indeed, must those be who, with the Bible within their grasp, and all the light vouchsafed to them on every side, even by lay writers of another nation, will not see. Our Saviour's rebuke in the parable may well be applied to them, "If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead" (St. Luke xvi. 31).

"BLESSED SHALT THOU BE IN THE CITY"

(DEUT. XXVIII. 3).

THE blessing of God was promised to "Israel obedient," and the blessing was especially to appertain to their city. We look then, since the British are Israel, to find them distinguished by a city, the chief of all the cities of the earth, and expect to find it rise to fame and exalted greatness, wealth, and power, after the 16th Century, when Israel's Church and nation were blessed with the Reformation of Religion, and all the blessings of the covenant were showered down upon them for Christ's sake, according to the prophecies.

We find London just such a city as that described, and observe that after A.D. 1550, it began to wax larger and more prosperous continually, increasing in population in an incredible manner. A monograph respecting the incredible "growth of London" has just appeared in the December number of the London City Mission Magazine (No. 589, vol. l.). We think we shall serve our cause by transferring a portion of the article to our columns. The facts are an apt illustration of our contention that the British are Israel, since they show that God has blessed our people as He promised to bless "Israel obedient" in respect to multitudinousness generally, and in regard to their chief city, London, in particular. The article is taken from the annual report of the West Middlesex Auxiliary, and is a fine specimen of "blind testimony." The writer is perfectly unaware, while dealing with the wonderful facts of the history of London's growth, that he is blindly corroborating the Scriptures in reference to their testimony to Israel's population, greatness, and urban pre-eminence. The first of all the blessings which were to be Israel's, on obedience to the Lord, was the blessing on the people "in the city," and we find accordingly that our chief city, London, has been blessed from the very beginning. It is now the greatest and wealthiest "this world ever saw!" The account is as follows:—

"Slowly and stately, like an oak, London has grown from 'a cluster of stockaded huts' in the time of Julius Cæsar to its present immense proportions. A century after Cæsar's first landing (A.D. 62), Tacitus speaks of it as already a place highly celebrated for the number of its merchants and the confluence of traffic. In the third century London became renowned for its commerce; and, a hundred years later, no less than 800 vessels were regularly employed in the exportation of corn alone. That the city, however, grew slowly in these times we have abundant evidence; and early Roman London—though, perhaps, thickly populated—was scarcely larger than Hyde Park. When, after 500 years' occupation, he Romans quitted their pleasant villas on the banks of the Thames, their luxurious baths, their forum, and their temples, the native British burnt London, as they did the other Roman cities, and erected new habitations among the ruins. Thus the history of its growth began anew. London still continued to maintain its reputation amidst the desolation caused by plague and fire as a great commercial city, and the venerable Bede calls it a 'mart town of many nations which repaired hither by sea and land.' Under King Egbert, who had united the several kingdoms under one head, in 819, it sufficiently increased in importance to induce the king to make it his capital city. Twice rebuilt by King Alfred in 961, a fever carried off many of its inhabitants, and in 982 another tremendous fire—the seventh which had occurred by design or accident—again swept away the greater part of the city. In 1090, again, 600 houses and several churches were blown down.

Digitized by Google

"Without attempting to give further details of London's early struggle for existence, in the twelfth century FitzStephen could scarcely find words to express the grandeur of the city. Possessing twenty-six parochial churches, and thirteen conventual establishments, it contained 40,000 inhabitants. The city was then, and for many years afterwards, girdled with a great and high wall, having seven gates, which were made double, and on the North and South it had towers and turrets at intervals; but on the South side the wall was worn out and washed away by the ebb and flow of the Thames. Ludgate was the extreme West-end of London. The space between it and Westminster was a tract of fields and gardens; Smithfield—which was then really a field—was the great mart for cattle; Moorfields was a lake, formed by the confluence of several mill-streams; the country about the City-road was corn-fields, pasture, and delightful meadows, intermixed with pleasant streams; Pentonville and Islington were forest tracts, stored with wild boars, and the resort of sportsmen with gun and dog; St. Pancras and St. Giles alike were still 'in the fields'; and Marylebone was famous only for its 'hunting park, its gardens, and its bowling-greens.' London Bridge, a crazy structure full of tumble-down houses, was the only road into Southwark, which was then represented by Winchester House, 'a stately palace, with gardens, fountains, fish-ponds, and an extensive park.' Yet London was, in wealth and magnificence, the admiration and the envy of foreigners.

"In 1348 began the first of the eleven awful pestilences which decimated the inhabitants, when the streets of the city were filled with the dead and dying. Still, in the middle of the sixteenth century, London was considered to be one of the largest cities in Christendom, 'its extent being nearly a league,' and in 1631, on requisition by the Privy Council on the occasion of an expected scarcity, the Lord Mayor of London returned 'the number of mouths esteemed to be in the City of London and the Liberty' as 130,268. In 1637 London was computed to contain 145,000 inhabitants, and in 1661, four years before the Great Plague, it had 384,000. In 1685, although the great fire of 1666 had swept away 400 streets and 13,000 houses, London was, perhaps, the most populous city in Europe, as the number of its inhabitants—more than seventeen times that of the next greatest towns in the kingdom, Bristol and Norwich—was said to amount to 530,000. Every year since that period people have been flocking to this great centre of population and wealth from every county and every part of the empire, as well as from the Continent of Europe, until the population was in

1801 ... 958,863	1831 ... 1,654,994	1861 ... 2,803,989
1811 ... 1,138,815	1841 ... 1,948,417	1871 ... 3,254,260
1821 ... 1,378,947	1851 ... 2,362,236	1881 ... 3,814,571

Now 'Greater London,' as it is called, co-extensive with the Metropolitan and City Police District, has 704,000 inhabited houses and an estimated population of 5,199,000.

"In the 'good old times,' when the Strand was yet only a great highway, 'full of pits and sloughs very perilous and noisome,' but where palaces with their gardens stood along the river shore, and when bitterns were caught at Dockside, and wolves in the thickets by the Fleet Ditch, and laws were actually passed 'forbidding the building of any fresh houses by cause of the trouble to govern such a multitude, the dearth of viand, the multiplying of the poor, and the impoverishin' of other cities,' the 'Outer Ring' of this huge human hive was, as we have seen, given up to the pleasures of the chase, the cultivation of corn fields, or formed a large undrained morass. Now this mere fringe to our 'province covered with houses,' as the Metropolis has been happily designated, can boast alone of its 800,000 persons. One writer on this subject of ever increasing interest, as an aid to our apprehension, has estimated that the 520,000 houses of which Inner London is composed would make, if they were all extended in a row, at least 1,300 miles of buildings, or a line long enough to reach all round Great Britain, from John o' Groats to Land's End, and from the Land's End to the North Foreland, and from the North Foreland back to John o' Groats. Or, what is more striking still, such a line of buildings would be more than enough to make one long street stretching right across Scotland, England, France, and Switzerland, from Dunnet Head, in Caithness, to the shores of the Mediterranean.

"It may, indeed, be safely asserted, that London is the greatest city this world ever saw. Never before in this planet's history has there been gathered together such a concourse of human beings. Nineveh might boast of a population, according to the Book of Jonah, of 800,000 or 900,000; Rome, which, like most of the olden cities, resembled London as the centre of a world-wide empire, never reached a third part of its population, good authorities setting down the highest number its people ever reached, which was in the days of Nero, at about 1,020,000; and Pekin of modern times is said to be the only city which has any claim to rank beside it, but eye-witnesses tell us that Pekin is rather a peopled district than a city. Paris, Vienna, and Berlin united would but a little more than equal it in the number of its people; and twenty-three of the other largest cities of these Isles must be rolled into one to make a second London. Sir Salar Jung, in visiting it, may also, while describing Paris as 'the city of pleasure,' well refer to 'the severe aspect and activity of London,' seeing that 10,488 vehicles course through twenty-four of its principal thoroughfares every hour, and 384,000 pedestrians and 75,000 vehicles pass over its bridges daily. In the words of Sir Joseph Bazalgette, 'It is now without a rival as regards size and population, not only in the present, but, as far as we know, in the past history of the world. Its population is equal to that of the whole State of Holland, is greater than that of Scotland, and double that of Denmark, and if it continues to increase at the same rate until the end of the century it will then equal that of Ireland, as, indeed, Outer London, now does.'*

"And this London of ours is still growing. Every five minutes a soul goes out of London to its account before the Great Judge, and every three minutes a new immortal enters upon this scene of its probation. To-day 287 more persons live within its charmed circle of 'fifteen miles round Charing Cross,' than yesterday, and to-morrow there will be the same addition, until, within the short cycle of a year, some 105,000 new souls are added to its already teeming multitude; and in the last ten years the population of London increased to the extent of 878,671, which is nearly equivalent to the addition of the entire population of Liverpool and Manchester combined, or of the county of Durham.

"This enormous growth is, as might be expected, greatest in the more outlying districts, as, in addition to the natural increase of population, by the excess of births over deaths, there is always a large 'attractive' influence at work, resulting

*Address at the Institute of Civil Engineers, January 8th 1884.

Digitized by Google

in the year to little less than 40,000 persons. What this growth has been in some of our suburban parishes is shown by the following figures:—

	1801	1851	1861	1871	1881
Parish of Kensington, Pop.	8,556	44,053	70,108	120,299	270,369
Parishes of Fulham and Hammersmith ,,	10,028	29,646	40,058	66,041	114,839
Parish of St. Pancras ,,	31,779	166,956	198,788	221,465	236,258
,, Islington... ,,	10,212	95,329	155,341	213,778	282,865
,, Camberwell ,,	7,059	54,667	71,488	111,306	186,593

"In face of such veritable new 'flesh and blood' year by year—fed, it may be remarked by the way, bodily, by a sort of daily miracle—it is not surprising that the Bishop of Peterborough should think 'that the great pressure upon the Church of to-day was to meet the rapid ingathering and surging increase of population,' and, 'that the great danger of the Church was in the great centres of industry.' For if the Church does not enlarge and adapt its organisation with the increase of population, the rank weeds of infidelity and ungodliness, ever followed by anarchy, will surely spring up in the uncultivated portions. Unfortunately, in the metropolis, and in some of our other centres of industry, in the mining and manufacturing districts, 'the population has outgrown the Church,' and baffled the efforts of all parties to meet and Christianise the advancing tide of new people, until, startling as it may appear, so far as even accommodation for religious worship is concerned, London is the most destitute part of great Britain, while the number of those who never enter the churches and chapels which have, at great cost, been erected for their benefit, is variously set down at from one to two millions!"

A CLERGYMAN'S DIFFICULTY.

THE following anecdote illustrates the fact, that apart from Our Identity, the clerical mind is absolutely unable to accept or explain God's promises to the Hebrew fathers, but avoids the difficulty by ignoring them. Whether this state of things can be right in the sight of God, let our clerical brethren explain. The story (a true one) is this—anonymously told:—

"A certain vicar held a Bible-class, which, when the occurrence took place, was busy with the consideration of the chapter so dear to Anglo-Israelites—namely, Gen. xlix. A friend who attended that class, found the vicar at his wits end to explain that chapter, and was unable to answer the questions with which he was plied by the class. At the next meeting of the Bible-class, the friend in question heard the vicar say 'they would pass on to the next chapter, and that he was so glad to have now got rid of the blessings, as they could not be explained!'"

The correspondent who gives us the information, adds, "Is it not a mercy, in these dark times, to know that we cannot, if we would, 'get rid of the blessings' bestowed by the faithful God of Abraham on the Houses of Israel and Judah!" It appears the vicar considered Gen. xlix. to be a piece of obscure, old Hebrew poetry, of no present interest. Men ask us Cui bono? when we speak of Our Identity. We reply, that the above gives us a very good answer to the question. The Identity throws a flood of light upon Gen. xlix., read in connection with Gen. xlviii., its context, and tells us, that in these latter days, the Houses of Israel and Judah must be visible to the world fulfilling the prophecies which these passages contain; Joseph as the owner of the birthright, and Judah as the royal tribe from which the Lord Jesus Christ has sprung. We accordingly find, to-day, that the Saviour came of the tribe of Judah, and so fulfilled ver. 10 of Gen. xlix. Whereas, the British people being Joseph, or Ephraim-Israel, have responded, in all particulars, to Gen. xlviii. 19, and to xlix. 22—26. The other tribal blessings cluster round the House of Joseph, and all are present with us to-day in Britain.

Those who reject Our Identity close their eyes against the light, and are forced to "get rid" of the splendid blessings God Himself bestowed upon His servants, and like our vicar, are "glad" to shirk the consideration of the two chapters, because they fail to see how they can be explained; nay, declare "they cannot be explained at all." But the explanation is very easy, if only our clergy would admit that the House of Israel still exists in separation from the House of Judah, and that God, foreseeing that, has, in these two chapters, told us by the spirit of prophecy, that in "the last days," or in the Christian dispensation, we should discover the descendants of Ephraim and Manasseh as two mighty nations, the one an independent and great people, the other greater than he, because of the House of Ephraim would come Melô-hag-goim, or "the fulness of the Gentiles," mentioned by St. Paul in Rom. xi. 25. These chapters tell us that Ephraim or Joseph would, in these last days, be endowed with all the blessings which Gen. xlix. 22—26 enumerate; the multitudinousness, the conquering power, the favour of God, the mineral wealth of the earth and of the hills, the power of the sea, and world-wide dominion throughout the globe; all conferred and enjoyed by reason of the gift and help of God Almighty Himself, the gracious promise-keeping Giver of those good things we nationally enjoy.

ANOTHER CLERICAL OBJECTION.

IN reply to a friend who sent him some Identity literature to read and to circulate among his neighbours, a clergyman after thanking his correspondent for his offer, went on to comment on the subject in the following manner:—"I ought to tell you that this is a subject I am but little interested in; as I look on the inheritance of faith as far exceeding any natural lineage. The promise that he should be 'Heir of the world' was not to Abraham or to his seed through the law, but through the righteousness of faith (Rom. iv. 13—16; Gal. iii. 14). One of our greatest arguments against the Mahommedans of Zanzibar was, that we are the witnesses of the higher covenant of Isaac, they of the lower covenant of Ishmael. We the spiritual Israel—they the descendants of Hagar" (Gal. iv. 31). So far our clerical friend—he cannot be called an opponent! For in truth his argument leaves him defenceless in our hands, and ready for the acceptation of our Identity. He looks on the inheritance of faith as far exceeding "in value any natural lineage," which doubtless it is, if the natural lineage is always to be separated from faith. This, however, is not the case; since Israel is destined to be "betrothed" to the Lord in faith (Hosea ii. 20); to be blessed with the new covenant (Jer. xxxi. 33—34; Heb. viii. 10—12); to be baptized with the Holy Spirit of Jehovah (Joel ii. 28); and "to blossom and bud, and to fill the face of the world with fruit," "to show forth God's praise" (Isa. xxvii. 6; xliii. 21). In embracing our Identity views then our clergyman need not by any means abandon "the inheritance of faith" while he accepts the honour of the natural lineage we offer him as one sprung from the House of Joseph, the blessed. Nay, to put the argument on a lower ground still, we ask our cleric whether, accepting and enjoying the "inheritance of faith," as we are confident he does, is it his practice to contemn and disdain his "natural lineage" as an Englishman, enjoying all the blessings that that great distinction gives him? We are sure he does not. Then why is he bound to turn from his Israelitish lineage which we offer him, when he knows it will make him heir to all the glorious blessings God swore to confer upon that race, and makes him besides, literally, the brother according to the flesh, of the Lord Jesus Christ, the God-Man and great Redeemer of the world?

But our friend goes further and quotes Scripture quite in our own Identity sense! He says that the "promise to

Digitized by Google

Abraham that he should be 'heir of the world,' was not to him or to his seed, through the law, but through the righteousness of faith" (Rom. iv. 13—14). This is exactly our own argument! "The heirship of the world" was promised to Abraham and to his seed (Gen. xvii. 4—7), but the enjoyment of the blessing was not to be while Israel was under the law of Moses, and therefore is not the portion of the Jews to-day; but was to be the possession of Israel under Christ—that is, of Ten-tribed British-Israel, God's Lo-Ammi people, called to-day by friends and foes, "The sons of the living God," the Christian nation (Hosea i. 10). Our cleric uses this argument with the Mohammedans of Zanzibar, it appears, but why he literalises the Arab's position as the sons of Ishmael in Zanzibar, while he spiritualises our own as the sons of Isaac in England, and the Isles of the West, he does not explain! If we are properly to be regarded as "spiritual Israel," then surely by the same canon of interpretation of the Scriptures the Arabs of East Africa must be deemed "spiritual Ishmaelites," or "spiritual Hagarenes!" Will our clergyman descend to such absurdities? He dare not! It results then, that if the Arabs in question are the descendants of Ishmael and Hagar, we are, on his own arguments and reasoning, "the sons of Isaac," in a true and literal sense, which is our contention, pure and simple! To fortify our position we too can quote Gal. iv. 31: "So then, brethren, we are not children of the bondwoman but of the free." We are "sons of the living God," and therefore, on the testimony of God's Word in Hosea i. 10, not only true believers as a nation (John i. 12), but multitudinous Lo-Ammi Israelites as well, belonging to the House of Joseph, alias Ephraim. Our clergyman lastly maintains that we British are "witnesses" of the higher covenant of Isaac; therefore, of course, God's witnesses that He is faithful and true. But this is God's declaration in Isa. xliii. 8—10, and xliv. 8, regarding His people Israel. God has but two witnesses, Israel and Judah—the blind people and the deaf—and as the Jews are the latter, the British, according to our clerical friend, must be God's witnesses of the higher and better covenant the witness established in faith, which testifies that He is faithful and true; the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, the God of all the families of Israel, blind though we certainly are!

WHEN AND BY WHOM WAS THE GOSPEL FIRST INTRODUCED INTO BRITAIN?

THE British being Israel, it becomes an important question to ascertain how and when the Gospel was first brought into these islands after the Christian era. Our Lord said to the Jews, "The kingdom of God shall be taken from you and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof" (Matt. xxi. 43). This was said by the Lord about A.D. 33, and the Jews had their privileges entirely removed by the destruction of their polity in A.D. 70, when the Roman armies under Titus dispersed that people and razed their capital to the ground. We expect therefore to find, in accordance with the prophecy of the Lord, that "the kingdom of God"—that is, the Church and State of Israel—were given to the Ephraimite nation (which was to bring forth the fruits of the kingdom), about the time of the destruction of Jerusalem. Our object is now to inquire if this was the case or not. We propose to take for our guide in this inquiry the lecture of an opponent, the late Rev. Thomas C. Price, M.A., vicar of St. Augustine-the-Less, Bristol, delivered in 1876 in Clifton, and to be had of Hamilton Adams and Co., 32, Paternoster-row, E.C., for 3d. a copy. It is an admirable lecture, and one all Anglo-Israelites should keep by them for reference, entitled, "The Introduction of Christianity into Britain."

We are well pleased to follow Mr. Price in the historical disquisition on which he entered, because he throughout was an unconscious supporter of Our Identity, though bitterly opposed to it. His opposition was so marked while he lived that he on one occasion preached against our views and lost no opportunity of attacking them. Yet his historical lecture gives Our Identity some strong corroboration, and is a learned and carefully-composed essay on the subject on which it treats.

Confessing the difficulty which surrounds the subject, Mr. Price stated that the oldest British historian who threw light on the subject was Gildas, who was born A.D. 493, and wrote his history about A.D. 546. Gildas's testimony was this. Having briefly mentioned the revolt and defeat of the Britons under Boadicea in A.D. 62, in the reign of Nero, the British historian adds, "In the meantime Christ the true sun first afforded His rays—that is, His precepts—to these islands, stiff with cold and frost." St. Paul arrived in Rome between the years A.D. 56 and 61. The first date coincided with the last two years of the detention in Rome of Brân, a druid priest, the father of Caractacus, who was kept in that city as hostage for his son. It is possible Brân may have been one of St. Paul's converts, and the idea receives confirmation from the statements of the Welsh Triads. In Triad 35 it is stated, "The three blessed princes of the Isle of Britain. First Brân the blessed son of Llyr the stammerer, who first brought the faith of Christ to the Cambrians from Rome, where he had been seven years as a hostage for his son Caradaug, whom the Romans put in prison, after being betrayed through the enticements, deceit, and plotting of Boadicea," &c. (Caractacus was taken a prisoner to Rome A.D. 52, Tacit. Annal., lib. xii., c. 36.) "There came with Brân the blessed, from Rome to Britain, Ilid, Cyndav, Arwystli Hen (Aristobulus the Aged), and Mawan his son." Ilid and Cyndav are said to have been "men of Israel," converted Israelites; and Arwystli is styled a man of Italy, or a Roman. St. Paul, in Rom. xvi. 10, salutes "those which are of Aristobulus' household." There is evidence that Aristobulus was bishop of Britain, and probably a contemporary, as we see, of St. Paul himself. One of the ancient authorities mentions that Aristobulus was ordained to the office by Paul himself. There is, further, some good grounds for thinking St. Paul himself visited Britain in one of his journeys. Clement of Rome, an apostolic father (says Mr. Price), and believed to be he of whom the apostle makes mention in Phil. iv. 3, says that St. Paul "taught righteousness to the whole world," and in doing so, travelled to the utmost bounds of the West;" Epi to terma tēs duseôs, an expression which may well be understood of Britain, as it was then regarded and spoken of.

Theodoret, a Church historian, in A.D. 423, says that "St. Paul, after his release at Rome, went to Spain, and from thence carried the light of the Gospel to other nations;" and again, "St. Paul brought salvation to the islands that lie in the ocean"—expressions that seem to point to the British Islands.

Tertullian, in his book against the Jews, A.D. 209, says that the prediction in Psa. xix. 4, "Their words have gone out to the end of the world," were fulfilled by the wide preaching of the Gospel; and he instances districts of Britain which, unsubdued by the Romans, had been subjugated to Christ" (c. vii.).

Origen, in A.D. 230, asks, "When did Britain before the coming of Christ consent in the worship of one God?" Gildas tells us in sec. 12 and Bede in i. 7, that when Constantine was proclaimed Emperor in York in A.D. 306, the Christians rebuilt their churches which had been destroyed to the ground, and erected new ones in honour of the martyrs, among whom was Alban. From that time the British Christian Church flourished, and in A.D. 314 three of its bishops appeared as its representatives in the council of Arles in Gaul, proving thus that there was an organised established British Church existing nearly 290 years before St. Augustine and his 40 monks visited Britain first in A.D. 596, as Pope Gregory's delegates for the subjugation of British Christianity to the popes of Rome. The British bishops who went to Arles as the representatives of their Churches in A.D. 313, were Eborius from York,

Digitized by Google

Restitutus from London, and Adelphius from Caerlon, with Sacerdos, a priest, and Arminius, a deacon. British bishops were present at the Council of Sardica in A.D. 347, more than 240 years before Augustine's time; and at the council summoned by Constantine in A.D. 359 at Ariminum, three British bishops also were present.

Athanasius assured the Emperor Jovinian that at the Council of Antioch, A.D. 363, the bishops of Spain, Gaul, and Britain, adhered to the faith of the Council of Nice. During the latter period of the Roman occupation (i.e., A.D. 409), Mr. Price states Christianity was established throughout England and Wales (p. 12). Later testimonies of the existence of a pure apostolic Church in these islands, before Rome sought to corrupt her faith, abound. Jerome, in A.D. 378—220 years before Augustine—speaks of British Christianity as "the way here open to heaven" (Ep. xii. ad Paulinum). He added in the Ep. ad Evagrium (quoted by Bishop Burgess, p. 97) that Gaul, and Britain, and Africa, Persia, and the East, and India, and all barbarous nations, adore one Christ and observe one rule of truth." Chrysostom, in A.D. 398—200 years before Augustine's time—said (as bishop of Constantinople), "For the British Islands, those which lie beyond the sea" (the Mediterranean) "and are situated in the ocean itself, have experienced the power of the Word."

Gibbon, in chap. xxxi., says that "South Britain" was ruled by the authority of the clergy, the nobles, and the municipal towns; . . . and the episcopal synods were the only councils that could pretend to the weight and authority of a national assembly." This was in A.D. 409 to 449. Bede, in bk. i. 17, tells us that the British clergy, in A.D. 446—150 years before Augustine's era—held a solemn conference and disputation with the Pelagians at Verulam in order to put down that heresy, and that by the help of St. German, who came to Britain, the mischief was eradicated here. Ninias, bishop of North Wales, called by Bede "a most reverend bishop and holy man," introduced Christianity into the Southern parts of Scotland. He laboured among the Picts, South of the Grampians, from A.D. 412 to 432—over 150 years before Augustine came from Rome. Patrick, the apostle of Ireland, lived A.D. 387 to 465; 200 years before Augustine. He was a native of Britain, born of Christian parents, he was consecrated bishop of Ireland, and his commission was not derived from Rome. He entered on his work in Ireland in A.D. 432, and died about 465. Columba was a missionary to Scotland in A.D. 563, and founded the famous Culdee establishments of North Britain thirty years before Augustine's arrival here.

This, and much more, can be said and will be found in the Rev. Thos. E. Price's lecture. "We have seen," he writes, "that the Christianity of the British Churches was derived from sources independent of Rome, and may be traced back to the apostolic age, and to a date coeval with the reception of the Gospel by the Romans in Italy"—that is, in St. Paul's day, or ten years or so before the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus "During the first six centuries of the Christian era these British Churches maintained their independence of Rome and of all foreign jurisdiction. Their bishops took their share in the controversies which agitated the Christian world, and in the councils which were summoned to deliberate upon them. They furnished eminent divines and devoted missionaries through whose labours Christianity was widely propagated."

The reasons which actuated Pope Gregory, bishop of Rome, in A.D. 590, to send Augustine and his forty monks to Britain to bring the Christian Churches there into subjection to the Papal See, are well told by Mr. Price, and we must refer our readers to that most excellent precis. The result was that the British bishops refused to submit, and the power and influence of Rome declined. In the South of England only did Rome acquire an ascendency; but in every other county, from London to Edinburgh, the heptarchy was brought to Christ and His holy religion by the exertions of the ancient apostolic Church of Britain, and not at all by those of the Romish emissaries of the popes. Britain, in short, received the pure faith of Christ in the apostolic times, probably through the ministry of St. Paul himself, ten years before the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans; and so, literally, then, "The kingdom of God was taken from the Jews and given to a nation," the British Israelites of the Isles of the West, who have from that time to this "brought forth the fruits of that kingdom," according to the prophecies (Matt. xxi. 43). Israel, praise ye the Lord!

THE "LOST" TEN TRIBES.

An objection has been made to our Anglo-Israelite use of the word "lost" in connection with the Ten Tribes by one well acquainted with the Greek language. He says that the verb appolumi, as used in the New Testament, invariably means the spiritually "lost," not those physically lost in the mode suggested when we speak of the Lost Tribes—that is, tribes mingled with other races, and therefore now unknown or disappeared from human knowledge and recognition. He added that he believed the examination of the word "lost," as used in the Hebrew of the Old Testament, would prove that it does not apply to men, races, or things, physically, but morally "lost."

Acting on the suggestion, we have examined the subject, and find as the result, that the word translated "lost" in the Old Testament occurs there only fourteen times. In nine the original word is abad, in one naphal, and in the remaining four abedah. Of the nine represented by the Hebrew abad, two are from 1 Sam. ix. 3 and 20, "The asses of Kish, Saul's father, were lost, and Kish said to Saul, his son, Take now one of the servants with thee and arise, go, seek the asses." Ver. 20 is of the same kind, "And as for thine asses that were lost, set not thy mind on them, for they are found." There is clearly no spiritual signification here. The asses strayed, or were "lost," and they were found. The next passage is Psa. cxix. 176, "I have gone astray like a lost sheep: seek Thy servant, for I do not forget Thy commandments." Here the word lost is used in a figurative sense, but points to a sheep actually strayed away and lost, like Kish's asses, and found like his. The next is Jer. l. 6, "My people hath been lost sheep; their shepherds have caused them to go astray." Here, again, is a figure, but it represents literal sheep literally straying and lost; caused to stray, too, by reason of unfaithful shepherds. Ezek. xix. 5 is next in order. Here is a historical passage, and God illustrates Israel's story by likening her to a lioness whose whelp was captured by its enemies. The mother (Israel) saw her hope was "lost," and made another of her whelps a young lion. No spiritual meaning is concealed here under the guise of the Hebrew word abad. In Ezek. xxxiv. 4 and 16, we have the word occurring twice. The words are figuratively used of Israel ruled with violence by their shepherds. They refused to seek for the lost sheep of Israel, and God announced His intention of searching and finding the "lost" people Himself. "And ye, My flock, the flock of My pasture, are men, and I am your God, saith the Lord God" (ver. 31). In Ezek. xxxvii. 11 we have a use of the word which cannot be applied in a spiritual sense. There Israel complains, "Our bones are dried, our hope is lost: we are cut off from our parts."

The disinherited and forgotten nation complains that their hopes are lost, alluding, we conceive, to political but not at all to spiritual rights and privileges. These nine instances exhaust the occasions when the Hebrew word abad represents the English word "lost," and in no instance can it be said justly that the word represents the spiritual view of our objector. In Numbers vi. 12, the Hebrew naphal is translated "lost" in the Authorised Version, apparently incorrectly, as the Revised Version mends the translation by making the reading thus, "But the former days shall be void," instead of, "The days that were before shall be lost."

Digitized by Google

The four instances remaining are where the word abedah occurs, translated "lost thing." They are Exod. xxii. 9, Lev. vi. 3 and 4, and Deut. xxii. 3. In each case the idea is, as far as possible, apart from a spiritual meaning, and refers to "things lost," but found by the Israelites, and the laws regarding their restoration to the owners. In the New Testament (A. V.) the word "lost," being the translation of appolumi, occurs eleven times, and in all but two, or perhaps four, we believe, refers to the actual, literal, physical, as apart from the idea of spiritual, loss. The first and second cases are connected (Matt. x. 6 and xv. 24), "Go rather to the lost sheep of the House of Israel," and, "I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the House of Israel." Here reference is made to Psa. cxix. 176, where Israel are likened to a flock of sheep—lost and strayed. The same word and idea occur in Luke xv. 4, 6, 15, and 32, being four out of the eleven New Testament instances. In these cases the sheep were literally lost to the owner, and the son was literally lost to the father. The facts are stated, and spiritual lessons may be learnt from the literal physical facts. In Matt. xviii. 11, and Luke xix. 10, are two instances where the idea seems to cover a spiritual meaning. John vi. 12 is decidedly literal, "Gather up the fragments that remain, that nothing be lost." This clearly referred to the miracle, and deprecatingly alluded to the broken food. In John xvii. 12, and 2 Cor. iv. 3, we have reference to the lost condition of Judas in the one case, and to the damned in the other—those from whose eyes the Gospel is hidden. The use of the word, of course, in these two instances is figurative of the condition of those who for lack of faith miss salvation, and may therefore be reckoned as covering a spiritual meaning. Four instances then only, out of eleven New Testament cases where the word "lost" (appolumi) occurs, can justly be said to cover a spiritual meaning, but the remaining seven are clearly physical and literal in their reference.

In fifteen other instances in the New Testament the word "to lose" (apollumi) occurs, but in eight of these the word refers to the loss of sheep, a coin, or a man's soul. (See Luke ix. 24, 25; xv. 4, 8, 9; Matt. x. 39, 42; xvi. 25.) In the rest the expression seems to be figurative. On the whole we think we have shown that in the Old Testament the word in the majority of instances is equivalent to a Hebrew expression pointing to the literal and physical loss or disappearance for a time of some animal or chattel, and that in the New Testament word "apollumi," "to lose," or "lost," means in the majority of instances the loss literally and truly of something or some creature, the spiritual sense of the word occurring in the minority of cases but not otherwise. At any rate, we have shown that our opponent's first impressions are not correct, and that we Anglo-Israelites have ample grounds to justify us in using the expression, "The Lost Tribes," in the sense of these Tribes being "lost" to history, and human ken, but destined ere long to be "found" and then blessed with the outpouring of the Holy Spirit, to the praise of God's grace and love.

AN IDENTITY DISCUSSION EVEN IN NORTHAMPTON.

DURING the months of January and February last, quite an animated controversy took place in the Northampton Herald, on the subject of Our Identity, between Major G. E. Liebenrood, on the side of the opposition, and Messrs. J. Chambers and E. J. Tallet, who were champions for our side. Half-a-dozen letters passed between the combatants, and the result was that the attack was converted into defeat and Major Liebenrood beat a somewhat hasty retreat. The position of the opponent was weak from the first. He evidently knew nothing of the matter, but got up three of Mr. John Wilkinson's weakest arguments, and thought with the aid of those to demolish our friends. But he did not know that Mr. Wilkinson had been already triumphantly answered in THE BANNER, and that the former had entered on the contest with a false statement on the very fore-front of his pamphlets, to which he has unblushingly adhered, although he has been courteously reminded over and over again that in respect thereto, he was putting forward what was not the truth. This matter has again, in Northampton, been exposed by Mr. Chambers, who tells Major Liebenrood that Mr. Hine has been misquoted by Mr. Wilkinson, and that he never denied, but always affirmed that all "the Jews are Israelites," though he always added the obvious truth, that "not all the Israelites are Jews." We propose to transfer the bulk of the correspondence to the pages of THE BANNER, because it will be interesting to note how persistently error is repeated by those who will not read or study for themselves, and how triumphant is the answer which instructed Anglo-Israelites are capable of making when they adhere, as our champions have done, to the Word of God alone, and to the historical facts of our case. We omit Mr. Chambers' letter, which is somewhat confused in its arguments, and place before our readers the replies of Mr. Tallett, which seem on the whole fair and conclusive. The correspondence commenced as follows:—

To the Editor of the Northampton Herald.

SIR,—I was pleased to see in your paper of the 20th ult., a report of a discussion of the theory of Anglo-Israelism, which I think is a subject worth considering, as it is of world-wide importance, affecting as it does the destinies of this and every Empire of the world. Although there are many who ridicule the idea, yet the Lost Tribes must appear sooner or later, and when found, will be found as a nation and a company of nations. The head and not the tail, above and not beneath, holding the Gates of their enemies, circling the earth with their possessions, a lending and not a borrowing nation. Whether the British are the descendants of those tribes waits to be proved. At all events the prophecies fit the British nation in every way. We have both historical and Biblical evidence to prove our theories, and the more the subject is discussed, the more clear it becomes.

Yours obediently,
ANGLO-ISRAELITE.

To the Editor of the Northampton Herald.

January 29th.

SIR,—In your weekly issue dated January 22nd, I see some account of a discussion by the St. Giles' Mutual Improvement Society on the question whether Englishmen are descended from the Ten Tribes of Israel. I should recommend anyone who holds these false ideas to read two pamphlets by John Wilkinson, entitled "Englishmen not Israelites; and the Ten Tribes, where are they not, and where are they?" Publisher, John Shaw and Co., 48, Paternoster-row, E.C. If, after reading these, they are not convinced of the impossibility of such a theory, I shall be much astonished. In conclusion, I quote from one of these pamphlets three reasons why Anglo-Saxons cannot be descended as our friends seem to think.

1. "The people shall dwell alone and not be reckoned among the nations" (Numb. xxiii. 9). Whatever we may be under the next Government, we certainly have been up to this reckoned among the nations.

2. Israel is to remain many days without a king or prince and without a true knowledge of God (Hosea iii. 4, 5). Can this be said of England?

3. The Twelve Tribes out of Palestine are to be few in number, under national curse, but to be increased when restored (Deut. iv. 26, 27; xxviii. 62, 66; Jer. xxx. 3, 4, 19; Zec. viii. 13). The Anglo-Saxons are out of Palestine, and are not cursed or few in number.

Yours faithfully,
G. E. LIEBENROOD.

Mr. Chambers' letter followed, to which the reply was as under:—

To the Editor of the Northampton Herald.

Sir,—I see in your issue of Feb. 6th an attempt to reply to part of my note of the previous week. There is really nothing in Mr. Chambers' letter which requires an answer, and it is hardly necessary to point out that many of his statements are not borne out by the history of our country. Why Mr. Chambers finds fault with me for drawing my conclusions from another man's ideas, I am at a loss to understand. Surely he must plead guilty to doing the same thing, as he cannot wish us to believe he is the originator of Anglo-Israelism. If our friends like to ride their hobby, I suppose they must, and, after all, it is comparatively harmless. I only hope, if Anglo-Israelism spreads, all those who consider themselves Anglo-Israelites will join the Primrose League, in memory of the great Anglo-Israelite, the late Prime Minister of England. Yours faithfully,

Digitized by Google

G. E. LIEBENROOD.

To the Editor of the Northampton Herald.

February 5th, 1886.

SIR,—My attention having to-day been called to a letter signed "G. E. Liebenrood," respecting the above subject, I shall feel obliged by your favouring me with an opportunity for reply. In the first place we are told that our ideas are "false," and secondly, that if after the perusal of certain pamphlets we are not "convinced of the impossibility" of our theory the writer referred to will be "much astonished." We are then favoured with a specimen of the reasoning which proves the falsity and impossibility of Our Identity with the children of Israel. Well, sir, perhaps you will not be surprised if I deny the falsity or impossibility of such a thing, and I hope Major Liebenrood's astonishment will have no injurious effect when I tell him that I read the pamphlets referred to four or five years ago and laid them aside with the feeling that they were the weakest productions I had then found emanating from our opponents. He might have referred us to the Rev. J. B. Clifford's "Anglo-Saxons," or the effusions of "Philolethes" with more hope, but I am afraid with the same result so far as I am concerned. It is not my intention to advance arguments in favour of our views in this letter, but simply to examine the "three reasons" advanced against us by Major Liebenrood, for, having recommended the pamphlet in which they are contained, been convinced by them and endorsed them with his sanction and approval I think we may fairly hold him responsible for their accuracy and inaccuracy, although they may have originated with Mr. Wilkinson. With respect to the first, I am pleased to have the opportunity of stating clearly the value I put upon it, as it has constantly been quoted as an insurmountable difficulty in our path by almost every opponent I have met with, yet if we may place any faith in the opinion of Bishop Ellicott, the better rendering of the passage would be "Lo, it is a people who dwelleth alone, and that is not numbered among the nations." What becomes of Major Liebenrood's objection if we accept this rendering? Clearly there is nothing in it. The passage referred to time present, not future, and this position is further strengthened if we read the Bishop's comment upon the passage—"In the fact that the host of Israel dwelt by itself in a separate encampment Balaam discerned a type of the essential separation of Israel from the surrounding nations." When Israel adopted the ways of the heathen nations it speedily lost its external independence" (vide "Old Testament Commentary for English readers"). What then was this external independence which constituted the peculiarity of the Israelitish nation, which separated them from the surrounding nations, and caused them to "dwell alone and not be reckoned among the nations" in the only sense in which any people can exist in the world and fulfil that condition? Clearly it was that their polity, their feelings, their manners and customs, religious, social, and political, so essentially differed from those of the nations by which they were environed that they literally dwelt alone and reckoned not themselves among them. And now, lest some opponents should say, "But you benighted Anglo-Israelites claim that the British nation fulfils the conditions of this prophecy as rendered in the Authorised Version," let me add, we have good reason to do so whilst such an authority in matters pertaining to English history, as Lord Macaulay says (speaking of the thirteenth century), "Then it was that the great English people were formed, that the national character began to exhibit those peculiarities which it has ever since retained, and that our fathers became emphatically islanders—islanders not merely in geographical position, but in their politics, their feelings, and their manners." Is it not possible to conceive the "Islanders" of Lord Macaulay's utterance as a convertible term for the "dwell alone," or "dwelleth alone," of Balaam? A candid examination of this objection, I think, rather tells in our favour than against us. With regard to the second, Major Liebenrood quotes two words from the passage to which he refers, and asks triumphantly, "Can this be said of England?" I answer—No. But I would ask him to go back a little farther into the world's history than the establishment of the kingdom of England, and would then say that our progenitors fulfilled all the conditions of the quotation when, as nomadic tribes, they migrated across the continent of Europe from the land of their captivity to find rest in the British Isles. As to the third, surely Major Liebenrood is not in earnest. I am seriously inclined to ask whether he can possibly have looked beyond the mere verse or portion of a verse he quotes. I should be sorry to think that in his interpretation of the Bible he has fallen into the foolish error of interpreting passages without reference to the context, yet when I examined the quotations given in his third objection I could not help feeling that such was the case. Take Deut. iv. 26, 27 as an instance. These verses, read alone, leave the impression that the Israelites should be "scattered among the nations" and be "few in number" (although I find nothing of the inference drawn by Major Liebenrood that this condition should always remain during their exile from Palestine), but if we read on to 31st verse we find a very important proviso coming in to the effect that if in the land of their exile they sought the Lord their God," He "would not forsake them, nor destroy them, nor forget the covenant made with the fathers" of their nation." Now, what was the covenant made with the fathers? Its main provisions will be found in the following passages—Gen. xxii. 17, 18, xxvi. 3, 4, xxviii. 14, xxxv. 11. I must leave your readers to examine them for themselves, but one of them was the promise of a multitudinous seed or progeny, and if we are to believe the words of Moses, this promise would not be forgotten, even when the Children of Israel were in exile. The inference Major Liebenrood evidently wishes us to draw from the remaining passages he quotes is that although not forgotten, the promise would not be fulfilled until the Restoration to Palestine; yet it seems to me hardly necessary that this should be done representatively (vide Jer. iii., 14, 15) if the Israelites were only "few in number." Further, Major Liebenrood holds, I believe, as I do, that the promises of the Patriarchal Covenant were fulfilled in Christ (vide Gal. iii. 16-18, Acts xiii. 32, 33), consequently Israel must be found somewhere at the present time enjoying the temporal as well as the spiritual blessings of the covenanted promises; and our contention is that as we can show that the British nation is enjoying all the privileges of those promises, and in numerous other minor points corresponds with prophecies relating to Israel, we have reasonable grounds for believing that we are descended from that nation, apart from arguments deducible from historical, philological, and ethnological facts. In conclusion, I would urge Major Liebenrood to thoroughly examine the arguments in favour of "the theory" as well as those against it before he again ventures into print, either with his own or borrowed plumes; and I am bold enough to believe that if he does so he will not so hastily condemn it as he at present appears to have done. Apologising for the length of this communication.

I remain, Sir, yours obediently,

E. J. TALLETT.

To the Editor of the Northampton Herald.

February 13th.

SIR,—I do not intend occupying much of your space; in fact my object in first writing was, not controversy, but simply to direct enquirers on this subject to where they could get sound teaching. I must say I am rather amused at the cool way in which Mr. Tallet tries to put his foot on the excellent and clear statements of Mr. Wilkinson, a man who has been for many years a deep student of prophecy, who is a good Hebrew scholar, and has for many years worked among the Jews, in whom he takes the greatest interest. That anyone after reading Mr. Wilkinson's pamphlets and searching the Scriptures therein quoted, can still hold these ideas, is only proof of how blind a man with a hobby can be to truth. It is sad to see Scripture twisted and misapplied to suit a preconceived theory. 1 St. Paul, Romans xi., speaking of Israel as a nation, tells us that blindness in part is fallen upon the nation till the times of Gentiles (in which we are now living) is come in or ended. Surely England has had more light and less blindness than any other nation. (2) History, secular and Scriptural, tells us that Israel went into captivity into Assyria B.C. 721, history to 5th century of Christian era tells us they were there then. Since then we have no account of their having moved. Unfulfilled prophecy (Isa. xi. 11), tells us that when Ten Tribes (or Israel) are brought back they are to come from Assyria, the inference therefore is, that they are there still. I could bring forward other Scriptural arguments, but refrain, and as far as I am concerned this Anglo-Israelite correspondence will be at an end.—Yours faithfully,

Digitized by Google

C. E. LIEBENROOD

To the Editor of the Northampton Herald

February 16th, 1886.

SIR,—How much better it would have been had Major Liebenrood followed the "policy of examination and inquiry" recommended in my former letter before again writing on this subject. The Major has beaten a retreat; for his credit's sake let us hope it may not end in rout. 1. He has not even attempted to refute the facts or reasoning advanced against his position. 2. Like a prudent general he covers his retreat by a new position and a reserve force. We will examine that position shortly. The reserve force—ah! what possibilities are there not here? How grateful his opponent ought to feel for the generosity that caused him "to refrain" from advancing those forces which doubtless could have done so much execution. 3. He is amused at my coolness. It's an admirable quality in a soldier; but in this case is more than equalled by the audacity of Major Liebenrood's assumptions and the dogmatism underlying his utterances. One might imagine him a zealous Catholic of the Romish persuasion, Mr. Wilkinson a pontiff, and his pamphlet an ex cathedra Encyclical, so implicit is the faith reposed in them. 4. "Mr. Wilkinson is a Hebrew scholar, a student of prophecy, and a missionary to the Jews"—ergo, he is entitled to greater respect as an authority in textual criticism and Scriptural exegisis, than the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol, or the learned revisers of the Old Testament. 5. I am blinded by a hobby. Strange, very strange, Major, that many of the most intimate friends and relations of this rider of a hobby-horse, have only learned within the last few days, that he held the reins you have chosen to oppose. Evidently the horse has not been over-ridden or furiously driven. The fact is, I have never made this matter a hobby or endeavoured to force my views on others. 6. Now for the new position. "Blindness in part hath happened unto Israel." Again a quotation without due reference to the context. Partial blindness or ignorance as to what? According to the context the fulfilment of the covenanted promises. This is not applicable to the Jews, for they still anticipate the coming of the person in and through whom they were to be fulfilled. Hence the Jews are in total not partial blindness. 7. "England has more light than any other nation." Granted, but that knowledge is but partial. How many Britons look for the temporal portion of the "promises made to the fathers" to be fulfilled? Yet these were as integral a portion of the Covenant as the spiritual promise. Hence they are partially blind, and will remain so until the fulness of the ingathering of the Gentiles. 8. "History, secular and Scriptural, tells us that Israel went into captivity into Assyria B.C. 721." Granted, and Sharon Turner, the great authority on Anglo-Saxon history tells us that our progenitors first made their appearance "in Asia, to the East of the Araxes (the place of Israel's captivity) about the 7th or 8th century B.C., and thence migrated into Europe." 9. "Isaiah xi. 11, tells us that when Ten Tribes (Israel) are brought back it is from Assyria." Oh! Major, it is sad to see Scripture twisted and misapplied to suit a preconceived theory. I read in the verse referred to, that "the remnant of outcast Israel is to be recovered not only from Assyria, but also from Egypt, Pathros, Cush, Elam, Shinar, Hamath, and from the islands (or coasts) of the sea." One more instance of Major Liebenrood's method of quotation. But what of Israel being in Assyria 500 A.D., and even now, if they are scattered in all the places given in the above quotation? Further, who now inhabit the islands and coasts of the Earth? Is it not the maritime British nation with her colonies and dependencies? Therefore we occupy to a large extent the position from which Israel is to be recovered. I now leave your readers to judge whether Major Liebenrood is not blinded by preconceived ideas and deep-rooted prejudices more than I by adherence to what he is pleased to call my "hobby." I thank you, Sir, for your courtesy in inserting my former letter, and by anticipation for this also, and remain, yours obediently.

E. J. TALLETT.

So far the parties to this contention. The Anglo-Israelites had much the best of the argument. Only one question we would ask Major Liebenrood for ourselves. How has he ventured, when dealing with the Scriptures against our case, to misquote the Word of God? In his third letter he quoted Romans xi. 25, and put into St. Paul's mouth words the Spirit of God never dictated to him! He did not say there that "blindness in part is fallen upon the nation (or Israel) till the times of the Gentiles is come in," or ended. The Major recollected the phrase "times of the Gentiles" in Luke xxi. 24, and jumped to the conclusion that St. Paul in Rom. xi. 25 used them then! But he did nothing of the sort! The apostle declared that the "hardness (or blindness) of Israel," would last until "the fulness of the Gentiles be come in"—quite a different matter! If the Major does not know what the Plerôma tôn Ethnôn may mean, we would ask him to refer to Gen. xlviii. 19, where alone the words recur, but nowhere else in the Bible; and he will see they point to the Melo-hag-goim to come of Ephraim's seed—"the nation and company of nations" of Israel (Gen. xxxv. 11). Israel's blindness is to last, in short, till "the nation and company of nations" of the House of Ephraim is manifested to the world, and "so all Israel shall be saved" (Rom. xi. 22).

We think that our opponents, when they sit down to lecture and instruct us, should take care first to understand the subject they treat about, and next, always to quote God's Word as it is written, but never according to their own ideas and notions of what it ought to say.

"A WATCHER" IN THE PROMISED LAND.

WE have received a letter from our friend, "A Watcher," writing from Beyrout, in the Land of Promise; and as our correspondent has had now full twelve months' experience of what that land is like, we think it would interest our readers if we imparted to them some of the details with which we have been favoured. Speaking first of the BANNER, our friend says:—

"You have a wider field than most of the theological writers, and I congratulate you on the continued and increasing success of the BANNER. You and your writers are working your field to its foundations, ably and successfully, and your opponents are becoming less contentious and quarrelsome. I think any one reading the BANNER of 1885 carefully would think your case much stronger than it was five or six years ago. The only thing I dislike in your view is that Russia is to gain any power in these glorious lands. Dan. xi. was so literally fulfilled in the days of the Maccabees that I cannot believe that it is yet future, and everything is progressing so fast in preparation for the Great Return that I do not think it will be interrupted. You have no idea what a good land this is, and what a paradise it would be with English government! The country is beautiful, and the only cultivation it is capable of, improves instead of spoils it. The climate is absolute perfection. I had no idea that anything so via media existed upon earth! Thirty-five (35) degrees covers the range of the thermometer in our room during 12 months, and it is hardly any greater outside!

"I have bought an estate of about four acres, and laid the foundation of "Mispeh," "Ain-auoub," which is to be our resting-place till we can pass on to Mispeh, Neby Samwil. It is as grand a watch-tower as the other, only it surveys the lower range of Lebanon instead of Jerusalem and Mount of Olives. About the same height above the sea, the temperature in Summer and Autumn was absolutely delicious! The clearness of atmosphere all day, and every day for six months, is a cure for all defects of sight and hearing, and the beauty of heavenly bodies, especially a very bright star in the East, which I generally see from my bed, is very cheering. All the bad weather comes in fierce storms for a few days at a time in the winter. We had a very bad week at Christmas, but the instant it is gone the sun comes out, and the weather and roads can be compared to nothing but your May weather, only more delicious and clearer. But what I am most agreeably surprised at is the fellaheen—the hewers of wood and drawers of water of the future in Israel. I have had much experience of labourers in Yorks, Oxon, and Kent, and don't bring one of them in your exodus! We have a far finer race here! With very few exceptions they are the finest, handsomest, jolliest, most warm-hearted, intelligent set of fellows I ever saw! They are the most docile, willing, and skilful labourers I ever had. All classes in the Lebanon are devoted to the English, are delighted at our settling among them, and wish for English government, while they detest that of the Sultan. All the Syrians and Druses must be of Semitic origin. . . . I wish some more Israelites who love the fatherland, or retired clergy or officers who have nothing to do, would follow our example. They would find living cheap, and building easier and cheaper than in England. They would have a warm welcome, and be thoroughly trusted by the natives. We do not like Beyrout, and no one can live here in summer; but in houses with English comforts Lebanon is perfect. . . . What a 'fix' you are in, in politics! . . . If Lord Salisbury could only be persuaded to open Tara now, what a new face it might put on everything! Church and State transported here. Hodge and Paddy rejoicing in their dictators C— and P—, and as many 'acres and cows' as they can get out of them, while my grand fellaheen are too glad to let us British swallow up their acres and cows as fast as we like, if we only give them their labour at one shilling a day!"

Digitized by Google

So far "A Watcher," and it must be confessed the account of the Lebanon is a very tempting one for the poor, oppressed, and starving Israelite here! Yet for all that we would recommend our readers to pause awhile before they follow our venturesome friend to the land of the inheritance before the Lord's appointed time for the united return of Israel with Judah! At present the Western Antichrist, Mahommedanism, is in possession, and when it is driven out, as it must be, it will "die hard." Great commotions may, nay, are sure to, take place during the operation, and those who go now, as "A Watcher" has bravely done, "to settle," in order to prepare the land, will find, we fear, that they run great risks, and will wish, during the turmoil, that they had never gone there to incur them. The Holy Land, before it can be ready for the occupation of the House and Sons of Isaac, will, we may be certain, have to pass through many serious troubles, and those connected with the fall of Islam must be convulsive and cataclysmic. We do not read in God's Word that He has ever invited His people to go and occupy their land one moment before the appointed hour, when He will Himself lead the United Tribes of His inheritance to their possession.

It is on this ground we have deprecated the step "A Watcher" took; and even now, though the account we publish places the surroundings of the situation in a very roseate light, we see by the eye of faith that the storm clouds are gathering already in yonder Eastern lands, and we are sure that the cyclone will burst ere long, if not in the Holy Land, at least in lands contiguous, making further domicile in those territories impossible for the peaceful settler from these "Islands of the West." We trust, however, in spite of these dismal prognostications that "A Watcher" may be kept safely in the future, as during the present times, in the Land of the Inheritance, chosen as the residence of one of the most zealous and faithful, able and sanguine, Anglo-Israelites that we know anywhere.

NOTICE.—We regret that papers by Surgeon-General J. M. Grant, Mr. J. Thomson, and others have now been unavoidably crowded out. We shall arrange for their publication in our next number.—ED.

SIR SALAR JUNG ON THE ARMIES OF NATIVE STATES IN INDIA.

"THE anniversary of his Highness the Nizam's accession to the musnud was celebrated by a dinner given at Hyderabad on Feb. 5th, by Nawab Salar Jung, the minister. Upwards of 300 guests were invited, among those present being Mr. Cordery, the resident; General Gordon, commanding the Hyderabad subsidiary forces; Lady Prendergast, and a large number of ladies and gentlemen from Secunderabad. The gardens were beautifully illuminated with the electric light and thousands of oil butties, and after dinner there was a display of fireworks. Before the company adjourned to witness the fireworks, the minister proposed the health of the Nizam, and Mr. Cordery also made a speech.

"Sir Salar Jung, after alluding to the agricultural prospects of the country, and stating that 'the revenues have come in steadily and regularly; trade in its different branches has prospered, and is increasing apace, as the customs returns show; and order, peace, and prosperity have prevailed throughout the length and breadth of his highness's dominion,' went on to say:—'With the incidents that have occurred outside of Hyderabad we have nothing to do, but I may be allowed to touch upon one memorable event, which at one time seriously threatened to disturb that peace and security which all of us, from prince to peasant, enjoy under the just and benign rule of the paramount power throughout this vast peninsula. Gentlemen, you will at once understand that I am alluding to a time during the last hot weather, when the North-west frontier of our empire was overhung by dark clouds, and the invasion of Afghanistan was threatened by Russia. The inevitable evils of war would have followed, had it not been for the great genius, sagacity, and skilful diplomacy of the illustrious nobleman who presides over the Government of India, which alone averted that calamity. And here I may be allowed to state that, in touching upon this subject, I am not out of place, because it not only affects these provinces just as much as it does the rest of India, but also because, when rumours of an impending war were in the air, his highness, with that true friendship and loyalty which have ever distinguished the relations between his illustrious house and the British Government, at once proffered the assistance of his own troops for service with those of the imperial army on the distant frontier. This offer was not made in a merely complimentary spirit; it was not a nominal offer made simply with a view to show the British Government the good-will towards them of the first native prince in India; but it was put forward after calm consideration, careful thought, and in all sincerity and earnestness. Other native princes did the same, and their deep loyalty and true devotion met with a most generous and hearty acknowledgment, not only from the government of India but also from her Majesty the Queen-Empress. This acknowledgment has but recently taken a tangible shape in the restitution of the historical fort of Gwalior to its rightful owner—the Maharajah of Scindia. This measure has not only been hailed with general satisfaction throughout India, but it has also made an indelible impression upon the minds of the different races who inhabit this vast empire, of the good faith, generosity, and justice of the paramount power. Should, unhappily, the time ever come (and heaven forbid that it may) when this fair country is made the theatre of war, I earnestly trust that our humble offers will not merely receive the generous approbation and acknowledgment of our Queen-Empress, but that her Majesty will be pleased to utilise the armies of her native states. I trust it will not be considered presumptuous on my part to express an opinion on this important question, but I may be permitted to state that it would be wise and politic on the part of the paramount power to make use of the armies of the feudatory princes of India, instead of letting them eat the bread of idleness, and thus convince them of the confidence and trust that their Queen-Empress reposes in their loyalty and devotion. All native princes would, I feel sure, hail this measure with satisfaction, and as for his highness himself, I know it would be a source of great pleasure and gratification to him if our troops were employed side by side with British soldiers in fighting the enemies of England. For, gentlemen, we boast to consider the British flag as the national flag of India, I am perfectly justified in saying that we consider the British flag as our national flag, for the Queen-Empress now occupies precisely the same exalted position in India as the Mogul Emperors did before. Within the last two or three hundred years hardly a native state existed which did not in a measure owe allegiance to the Mogul Emperor. Thus the analogy is complete, but with this difference, that whereas under the Mogul empire native states were not secure from external aggression, they now enjoy perfect immunity from such danger."

Digitized by Google

The above taken from The Homeward Mail of March 2nd, 1886, illustrates our position, that the princes of India are of one mind and one accord with Israel the paramount power in that Eastern land, that they regard the Queen-Empress as they used to regard their Mogul Emperors, and the British flag as their national flag. Nawab Sir Salar Jung is a Mahommedan statesman and nobleman who speaks with authority as the exponent of many of the South and Central Indian native potentates. His words give support to our contention and illustrate the prophet's words in Isa. xli. 2. God has indeed given us in the East "nations" to govern. He has "made us rulers over kings." Nawab Sir Salar Jung is God's witness to-day that this thing is true. Israel, praise ye the Lord.

ISRAEL'S SCRIPTURE AND PRAYER UNION.

The number of cards now issued is 1,393. Three new members have joined the Union during the past month, one residing in New Zealand. All subscriptions for the Monthly Comments, by Philo-Israel, should in future be paid up to January, 1887, inclusive, as that number will complete the second series.

The card of membership will be sent on receipt of three stamps. The Comments, prepared by Philo-Israel, will be sent post free monthly for 1s. per annum; two copies 1s. 6d.; three copies 2s. For less than a year the cost is 1d. per month, for one copy, post free. The "Prayers for Daily Use," being a prayer for each day of the week, by Philo-Israel, are 1d., or 9d. per dozen, postage extra.

The prayer of the Union, as on the card of membership, may now be obtained printed in larger type, price 1d. for three copies, post free; or 1s. per 100 for distribution.

The bound volume of Monthly Comments (first series) may be had in paper covers for 1s., postage 2d., or in cloth 1s. 9d., postage 3d. Address: Miss J. Lawrence, Rosslyn, Upper Teddington, Middlessex.

J. Lawrence, Hon. Sec.

ANGLO-ISRAEL FREE DISTRIBUTION FUND.

The distributors of the Free Distribution Fund desire to inform all who have so kindly supported the fund, and helped forward the work, that it has become necessary to make an important addition to the staff. The Treasurer has not received any offers of voluntary help in response to the letter in the Banner, of March 31, and being compelled reluctantly to give up work which it is impossible for the Hon. Secretary to take over, it has been decided, after much consideration of the subject, and in view of the continued increase in the work which is hoped for, to accept an offer made by Mr. C. Horner, whose name is well known to many Anglo-Israelites. Mr. Horner is unable, under existing circumstances, to devote the necessary time to the work without some remuneration, but he would gladly give it were it possible; he is therefore appointed Secretary, and will receive the small honorarium of £1 per month for this year. As without some such step being taken a dead-lock would have been arrived at, it is earnestly hoped that the right thing has been done, and that our subscribers and friends will approve, and justify the course it has been necessary to take, and will kindly prove it to us by the continuance of their support with increasing interest, so that the work may, with the blessing of God, continue to increase in the future as it has done in the past, and is still doing, and by which so many people benefit.

For the future all letters relating to literature (except from Sowers who receive their supplies from the Hon. Secretary) should be addressed to C. Horner, Esq., 34, Sheen Park, Richmond, Surrey, who will also receive subscriptions and donations to the fund, as well as the Treasurer and Hon. Secretary.

(Signed) Jessie Lawrence, Treasurer.
E. M. Rush, Hon. Sec.

The following subscriptions, received from March 20 to April 16, are very gratefully acknowledged:—J. L., £1; Mrs. W. F. L., per Messrs. Guest and Co., 10s.; Mrs. C., Chippenham, £1 1s; H. G., Tooting, monthly subscription, 1s.; C. B., South Hayling, 6s. Received by Miss E. M. Rush:—Miss C., Clifton, 2s.; Rev. T. W. B., £1 1s.; Mr. D., Chatham, 5s.; E. V. B., Stirling, 2s. 6d.; E. P., Birmingham, 2s. 6d. Total £4 11s. 0d. We hope our friends will note the small amount received, and endeavour next month to make up for the deficiency, as the work is at present practically at a standstill, owing to want of funds. During the past month we have only been able to forward literature to Birkenhead, Chippenham, South Hayling, Weymouth, and Southsea.

Miss E. M. Rush has sent out parcels to Blackheath, Carlisle, Caterham, Chatham, Deal, Devonport, Fort George, N.B., Guildford, Lee, Montrose, Netley Hospital, Southampton, Sizewell Gap, Rome, Malta, Barbadoes; Morar and Trimulgherry, India; Pietermaritzburg and Port Nolloth, South Africa.

The following encouraging letter comes from a Sower in the North of England:—"'Hallelujah! Israel, praise ye the Lord.' Readers of the Banner often see these words, and every true Israelite will rejoice to raise his Ebenezer of gratitude to our loving Heavenly Father, for all His goodness to us His people. You will remember my telling you about a friend of mine, who received the great truth of Our Identity some time since, through the literature I gave him, by means of the Free Distribution Fund. He has a Bible-class of about twenty young men every Sunday, and has introduced the subject of Our Identity with Israel in the course of his teaching. This morning he told me that several fine young fellows were already deeply interested in the matter, and he asked if I had any literature to spare would I give it him to distribute. Seeing the finger of God plainly in this, in answer to earnest prayer for a blessing on each paper given out, I have just sent him all my remaining stock. I can, therefore, do with large lots of everything as soon as funds permit. The work is God's, He is blessing it. It is doubly blest, for I feel a blessing on myself in this work also. This morning I visited the home of a fine English workman, to whom I had given a set of papers a week ago. He thanked me much for the literature, and said it was altogether a 'new light' to him. He is still studying the subject with great interest and profit. So the work grows and extends, and to Him be all the glory and praise."

J. Lawrence, Treasurer.

Contributions to the Fund will be thankfully received by the Treasurer, Miss J. Lawrence, Rosslyn, Upper Teddington, Middlesex; by the Hon. Secretary, Miss E. M. Rush, 103, Burnt Ash-road, Lee, London, S.E.; or by the Secretary, C. Horner, Esq., 34, Sheen Park, Richmond, Surrey.

Prince Bismarck on Egypt's Value to Israel.—The following from the Times, of January 4th, 1886, on Professor von Kanke, Berlin, January 1st, 1886:—"Here again the 'Altmeister,' great master, professed his extreme interest in the history of England, of whose development and world embracing power he spoke with great enthusiasm, as a phenomenon unique in the annals of the human race; and referring to Egypt—'but only, mind you, as an historian, not a politician'—he declared his conviction that the course of history and the development of events all pointed to the absolute necessity of the English converting Egypt into another link in the chain which binds India to England. The force of circumstances and of facts always prove much stronger than the aims of mere policy; and that Mr. Gladstone has already found out."—Forwarded by S. S.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed: — "Philo-Israel," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

SUBSCRIPTIONS £ s. d.

Annual Subscription for one copy weekly (including the Twelve Double Numbers) postfree - 0 7 6
Two Copies (including Double Numbers) - - 0 13 6
Three Copies " " " " - 1 0 4
Four Copies " " " " - 1 5 6
Six Copies " " " " - 1 16 4

Post Office Orders to be made payable at the head office, St. Martin's-le-grand, London, to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C., and W. H. GUEST & Co. 29, Paternoster-row, London.

The Editor cannot undertake to return rejected MSS. unless stamps for the purpose be sent. Parties requiring an answer should enclose a stamp.

Contents Bills and Show Cards may be obtained on application to the Publishers.

Advertisements should be sent to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

Prepaid Advertisements are inserted at the rate of 30 words for 1s. 4d.

PREPAID "WANTED," &c., ADVERTISEMENTS, 27 words, 1s.; 4d. every additional line.

PUBLISHED BY ROBT. BANKS & SON,
RACQUET COURT, FLEET STREET, E.C.

WORKS BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

The Geography of the Gates. With Map and six full page, and one double-page, Illustrations, printed on plate paper. 208 pages, in handsome cloth, gilt Price 3s. 6d., post free 3s. 10d.

Our Identity with the House of Israel. Price 4d. Reprinted from "Clifton Chronicle Letters"

The History of the House of Israel; How they were Lost, and How they were Found, Told for the Children. Price 6d., cloth 1s.; post free 7d. and 1s. 1d. Fourth Edition. Eleventh thousand.

Philo-Israel's Leaflets. Four pages Crown 8vo Price 1s. 6d. per 100, postage 2d. No. 1.—"The Identity of the British with Lost Israel." 2.—"The Glory of God." 3.—An Address to British Seamen. 4.—An Address to British Soldiers. No. 5.—The Communion of the Body and Blood of Our Lord Jesus Christ Viewed in the Light of Our Identity. 6.—The Bible and the Jew. 7.—The Jewish People. 8.—Lo-Ammi; or, the Gentilisation of Ten-Tribed Israel. 9.—The Atonement. 10.—Is Our Identity Evangelical, or Non-Evangelical in its Tendency? No. 11.—Cui Bono? No. 12.—The "Thoughts" of God Towards Israel, Judah, and the Gentile Nations. 13.—The Teutonic Theory—Is It True? 14.—An Address to the Police Force of Great Britain. 15.—An Address to Israel's Missionaries and Their Supporters. 16.—The One Seed, Christ. 17.—An Address to Israel's Electors. Price 1s. 6d. per 100.

A Resume of the Scriptural Argument, proving the Identity of the British Race with the Lost Ten Tribes. Price 1d.; 6s. per 100. New edition now ready.

Identity Leaflets. No. 1.—ISRAEL'S MISSION (Psa. cxlvii. 19; Mark xvi. 15; John iii. 16). By V. M. Cox. No. 2.—HOPE FOR EGYPT (Isaiah xix. 20-25) By V. M. Cox. 100 copies post free for 1s.; 9s. 6d. per 1000.

"Banner" Series of Leaflets No. 1.—"For Thine is the Kingdom, the Power, and the Glory." By Philo-Israel. No. 2.—The Spirit of Truth. By Philo-Israel. Price 1s. 3d. per 100, post free.

Volumes of "The Banner of Israel"

May be had, bound in specially-designed dark blue cloth covers, handsome gilt side and back, at the following

VOL. II. ... ... 7s.
VOLS. I., III. to IX. ... each 8s.

London: Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court Fleet-street.

Price 1s. per 100, assorted packets 1s. 2d.; 8s. 6d. per 1,000 (nett). Carriage free 4d. extra.

Thoughts for the British Folk.

Suggested by PHILO-ISRAEL.

No. 1.—Multitudinousness.
No. 2.—The Gates.
No. 3.—The Nation and Company of Nations.
No. 4.—British Wealth.
No. 5.—The Rulers Over Many Nations.
No. 6.—The Universal Creditor.
No. 7.—The Ever-Continuing British Monarchy.
No. 8.—The Scattered People at Home in Every Climate
No. 9.—The Queen, Lords, and Commons.
No. 10.—The Unconquerable Nation.
No. 1.—The Fatally Destructive Race.
No. 12.—The Isolated Nation.
No. 13.—The Nation Which Belts the Earth.
No. 14.—The Emancipators of the Slave.
No. 15.—The Christian Nation.
No. 16.—The Ten Commandments.
No. 17.—The Asylum for the Foreign Refugee.
No. 18.—The Possessors of the "Sign."
No. 19.—The Universal Missionaries.
No. 20.—Testimony of the Book of Common Prayer.
No. 21.—Church and State, and also Disestablishment.
No. 22.—Our Poor Laws.
No. 23.—The Labour Question is an Identity Question.
No. 24.—Emigration.

R. BANKS & SON Racquet-court, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

SEE FIFTY REASONS WHY THE ANGLO-SAXONS ARE THE LOST TEN TRIBES. Price 6d., post free 7d.

The Land of Espousals.
The Testimony of Language.
The Transfer of the Kingdom from Judah to Israel.
"Shiloh:" Its Interpretation.
Ireland not Missioned from Rome
Israel and Judah Distinct.
Israel's Blindness.
The Standard Goes to Israel.
Our Royal Standard.
The Princess Tephi.
Ireland a University for Europe
The Apostle Paul in Britain.

Blessings and Curses, and their Relation to Israel and Judah. By F. W. Phillips, of Speedwell-road, Birmingham. In neat coloured wrapper, price 2d. post free 2d.

An Elementary Digest or Sketch of the Chief Facts and Teachings of the Great Pyramid of Egypt. Adapted to the Unlearned and Unscientific. 56 pages, Illustrated with Diagrams, price 4d., post free 5d. 10th Thousand.

The Sisters of Harrowdale Rectory. A Tale of Great Interest for Young People on the Identity of Lost Israel; with splendid double-page frontispiece, illustrating Harrowdale Rectory and Church. This book will be read by both young and old with the greatest interest. By Mrs. M. A. SEARSON. Price 2s. 6d. post free 2s. 9d.; handsome cloth, gilt, bevelled boards.

Dr. JOSEPH WILD'S WORKS

NEW EDITION JUST PUBLISHED.

THE LOST TEN TRIBES

Price 3s., post free 3s. 3d.

The FUTURE of ISRAEL and JUDAH.

Price 2s., post free 2s. 3d.

The Special Commissioner of the Christian Word, writing of Dr. Wild, says:—"On Sunday evening I had to fight my way into the Congregational Church of which Dr. Wild is the minister. He hails from America, and is quite the sensation of the hour. There was no standing room anywhere, and as I made to the door I met many coming away However, I had made up my mind to hear the Doctor, and hear him I did. It seems that the subscribers have a door to themselves; I made for it, and luckily found a chair, which I wedged in under the platform. The Doctor prayed, and then we had a sermon about Revelation, containing much that was very effective, if not about his text, at any rate about that mysterious part of Scripture from which the text was taken."

Just published, price 3d., post free 3½d.

New Testament Truth on the Anglo-Israel Controversy.

By J. G. TAYLOR.

CONTENTS—

Abrahamic Covenant.—The Advent.—Consolation of Israel.—"Cutting Off" of Israel—Ebal and Gerizim.—End of Faith.—Function of Prophecy.—Gentile Church.—Gentile Dispensation.—Gentile Parenthesis.—Fulness of the Gentiles.—Times of the Gentiles.—"He is not a Jew which is one outwardly."—"Heirs according to the promise."—Hosea and Peter.—"Israel hath not attained to righteousness,—The law.—"Lo, we turn to the Gentiles."—Meaning of "His People."—Meaning of "Israel."—Meaning of "My People."—Meaning of "The People."—Meaning of "Thy People."—New Covenant.—The Old Testament and the New.—The Promises.—Seed of Abraham.—Set Ideas.—Spiritual Fulfilments.—Spiritual Israel.—"A Stone of Stumbling."—"The kingdom shall be taken from you."—"There is neither Jew nor Greek."—Who's Who in the New Testament.

London: Robert Banks & Son, Racquet court, Fleet-st., and by order of any bookseller.

THE WONDER OF 1886!

AN excellent Timekeeper, strongly made; an ornament to any room, or suitable for a shop Will be sent carriage free to all readers of this paper for 5s. 6d. The best and cheapest Clock yet produced in any part of the world.

Carriage 5/6 Paid.

Carriage 5/6 Paid.

The face measures 5½ inches across, and we guarantee that the above is a correct drawing of the clock. Will stand on mantel-shelf or can be hung up. The cheapest thing advertised. Direct, on receipt of P.O.O., from the importers, BAXTER & Co., MOOR LANE, LANCASTER.

J. THEOBALD & COMPANY'S

KENSINGTON PHOTO CAMERAS.

50 GUINEAS IN PRIZES.

50 GUINEAS GIVEN TO BUYERS OF OUR CAMERAS.

EXTRAORDINARY ANNOUNCEMENT!

IN order to encourage the practice of Photography amongst Amateurs, we have decided to give away 50 Guineas to those persons sending us the best specimens taken with our Cameras by themselves. No professional will be allowed to compete.

FIFTY GUINEAS IN CASH

to the 50 persons who send us the 50 best specimens. Full particulars with each Camera, and in Catalogue.

Photography is now as clean and easy as it was once dirty and difficult. Any person can now become a successful Photographer. Ladies photograph their pets, gentlemen their houses and friends, tourists the places they visit, manufacturers their goods. People will no longer pay 8/6 and 10/6 doz. for Photographs when they can have the pleasure of producing their own at a cost of 2/- doz.

With every Camera we send the fullest and plainest Instructions, devoid of all technicalities; and with every Camera a ticket entitling the holder to enter into the competition for the 50 Guineas of Cash Prizes. We claim for our Sets that they are the best and cheapest ever offered. Many other advertisers only supply Camera, and say nothing of chemicals, disappointing the customer when he finds he has so many extras to buy. Our Sets include chemicals, &c., as under:—

No. 1. Kensington Camera will take Carte de Visite size, and consists of good Bellows Camera with Achromatic Lenses, Brass Front, Cap, Stained Framework, Folding Bottom, Set of Dry Plates, Set of Sensitised Papers, Two Bottles of Developing Solutions, Box of Fixing Crystals, Bottle of Gold Solution, Printing Frame, Elastic Bands, Mounting Cards, Glass Rod, Brass Fittings, and Dark Shutter complete. Carriage free, 21/-.

No. 2. Same size but with superior Lenses and fittings, also Double Dark Slide, enabling two photographs to be taken in quick succession, with all chemicals &c., as with No. 1, and the case of Polished Mahogany. Price 27/6 carriage free.

No. 3. A much larger Camera, Polished Mahogany, superior finish throughout, taking both Cabinet and Carte de Visite size Photographs; fitted with Two Stops, Double Shutter, Chemicals, Plates and Paper, for both sizes, and all chemicals, &c., as above, in double or treble quantity. Price, complete, £2 12s. 6d. This set is really cheaper than No. 1 and 2, considering its great power, extra chemicals, and being for both sizes.

No. 4. Most complete outfit, with best Rectilinear Double Portrait Lenses, Six Stops, all chemicals, &c., complete, £5 10s.

Our new Collapsible and Folding CAMERA STANDS, unrivalled for price and comfort, 8/6, carriage free 9/6. Superior ditto, Polished, 12/6.

We only guarantee the above prices for one month, except from Foreign customers (carriage abroad 5/- extra), and the enclosed Coupon must be forwarded with all orders.

Specimen of Photos taken by amateurs, with these Cameras, Carte size, 6d.; Cabinet, 1s. Illustrated Catalogue 1d.

BANNER OF ISRAEL COUPON.

Entitles holder to Kensington Cameras at above Special Prices.

(Signed) J. THEOBALD & COMPANY.

J. THEOBALD & COMPANY,
Wholesale Camera Manufacturers,
6 & 7, Bath Place, Kensington High Street,
KENSINGTON, LONDON, W.

The Book of Hebrew Roots.

Showing the Ideal Meanings and Various Ramifications of the Principal Hebrew Radicals.
By BUSLINGTON B. WALE.
Post free 4s.
R. Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C

Printed for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C. PUBLISHED BY GUEST, HAYWORTH, & Co., 29, PATERNOSTER-ROW, WEDNESDAY, MAY 5, 1886. [All rights reserved.

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."

(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India.)

"And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the Forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS of the EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. X., No. 489. Entered at Stationers' Hall.] WEDNESDAY, MAY 12, 1886. [PRICE ONE PENNY.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
Imperial Consolidation, or Imperial Disruption?	189
The Scriptural Evidence that Ephraim-Israel was to be a Powerful Nation During Exile from Palestine	190
Military Prowess of the British. By J. Thomson	191
Rudimentary Notes. By Surgeon-General J. M. Grant, M.D.	192
Israel's Church and State, and Disestablishment, as Viewed by the Identity. A Lecture by Philo-Israel. Part III.	193
The Family Herald Again—Now as a Blind Witness.—Part I.	193
Testimony from Shakespeare. By John T. Gott	194
Review	195
Correspondence	195

IMPERIAL CONSOLIDATION, OR IMPERIAL DISRUPTION?

THE question of the day is, whether the British Empire is presently to be consolidated by the federation of its parts, now widely separated in the four quarters of the earth; or whether, pursuing a policy of disintegration and disruption, which Mr. Gladstone counsels in the case of Ireland, "the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland" shall fall asunder into two nations, entirely separate from each other? It may be denied, and probably will be, that the tendency of Mr. Gladstone's Home Rule and Land Bills is to sever Ireland from Great Britain. It is true that the Prime Minister may have no intention of dividing the Empire; but he is taking measures which the whole world sees have that tendency, and which his own plans will never obviate.

The "safeguards" which he has recommended, and his limitation of the power of the Irish Executive and future Parliament, are really illusory, and impracticable schemes for effecting impossibilities. He proposes taxation for Ireland from a British Parliament, but denies the Irish a voice in that taxation by removing them from St. Stephens. He appoints a "Receiver-General" for Ireland, a device only known to such countries as Egypt, but sure to be rejected by an Irish independent Parliament. He gives Ireland a Parliament of two houses, or orders, voting one against the other, and certain to lead to a dead lock, leaving the Bills with one tendency only—namely, the separation of Ireland from Great Britain, and the repeal of the Union.

That this is the real object of the Bill, whatever the Prime Minister's avowed aim may be, is manifest from the declarations and action of such skilled politicians as Lord Hartington, Mr. Trevelyan, Mr. Goschen, Mr. Chamberlain, Mr. Jesse Collings, Mr. Rylands, and even Mr. John Bright. The latter, though he has not yet spoken in regard to the Bills now before the country, wrote in 1872, in reference to what is really the vital principle of the proposed legislation, thus:—"To have two legislative assemblies in the United Kingdom would, in my opinion, be an intolerable mischief, and I think no sensible man can wish for two, within the limits of the United Kingdom, who does not wish the United Kingdom to become two or more nations, entirely separate from each other."

The existence of two independent legislatures in a country where racial animosities have risen to such a height as they have done in Ireland, must lead to separation, however many and scientific may be the safeguards invented by sanguine statesmen to ensure unity of polity. Such being the character of Mr. Gladstone's proposals, we have to consider whether he can carry them into operation.

There are sanguine ones who believe the second reading of the first Bill will pass by a majority of twenty to twenty-five votes; but will be wrecked in committee. Others think it may be passed by the Lower House, but rejected by the Upper; and that if the latter cannot be frightened by the Prime Minister into destroying the Union, the constituencies will be appealed to, and that they will, because of their love and reverence for the name of the Prime Minister, pass the measure, and so set their seal on the wisdom, sagacity, and patriotism of Mr. Gladstone, in effecting the object of his heart, with the result, patent to every one but himself, to the unfortunate country thus ruined.

The question at stake is indeed an Israelitish, Identity question. It is nothing more nor less than this: Shall the prophecies and promises of the Word of God be literally and faithfully fulfilled, by the confederation and consolidation of the component parts of the British-Israelite Empire; or, shall the policy of a favourite, wonderfully able, and astute Prime Minister prevail, who has devised a scheme which he believes will pacify Ireland, and make her a friendly nationality at the side of Great Britain, but which really will result in the disruption of the Empire, the breach of the union between Ireland and Great Britain, and the ruin of the former? To these questions there can be but one answer. What saith the Scripture? Israel's history is the subject of the precious volume, and does that Book lead us to imagine that, under any possible circumstances, Ireland and Great Britain will become, in these last days, what Mr. John Bright so well described—"two entirely separate nations?"

Nothing of the sort! These are "the isles afar off," given to Israel as their "appointed place" of safe domicile in "the latter days"; and as to the chance of the disruption of the

Digitized by Google

Empire, the guarantee is entirely the other way. Ephraim is destined to throw off only one tribe—Manasseh—and that was done two hundred years ago, when Manasseh went Westwards and founded the American Colonies, afterwards the Great Republic of the United States. Henceforth the Book is silent about the further disintegration of the House of Joseph. The union of Israel with Judah finds only two sticks ready to be united, whereof one was the stick of Judah, the other that of "Joseph in the hand of Ephraim, and the Tribes of Israel his fellows" (Ezek. xxxvii. 15—20).

There is no place in prophecy, therefore, for Bills like those of Mr. Gladstone, which presuppose that the British Empire is like other Gentile nations with whom liberties can be taken, and which may be dismembered and destroyed by a minister, with a sufficiently powerful will. This cannot be attempted with the British Empire. That Empire, being Israel, is under guarantees from God of perpetual prosperity and union; and instead of disintegration, which Mr. Gladstone intends for it, he will be forced to build up the mighty fabric of the new state of things, the keystone of which is the confederation of the whole Empire, including all its parts.

We may safely conclude, then, that Ireland will not be legislatively disunited from Great Britain, but will, on the contrary, remain in union with the larger island, her disloyal rebels being purged out by emigration and other methods, till there will be no cry for separation, but, on the contrary, a united people; baptized by the Spirit of God, and carrying out His will by loving union and united national acts of beneficence towards all the other nations, families, and kindreds of the earth.

THE SCRIPTURAL EVIDENCE THAT EPHRAIM-ISRAEL WAS TO BE A POWERFUL NATION DURING EXILE FROM PALESTINE.

It is necessary to have the above point cleared up in a concise and succinct manner, because many of our opponents stumble at this matter, and declare that there is no positive proof that during their captivity, or exile from Palestine, the Scriptures provide for Ephraim-Israel's development into a powerful nation. The problem then is, to find direct Scriptural evidence to show that we are to look for Israel in such a nation as the British, in these our modern days—that is, as a Western, maritime, powerful, wealthy, gate-holding, colonial, military and dominant race in the "last days." What saith the Scripture?

In the first place we have by the testimony of Jer. xxxi. 36, to find Israel, that is, the Twelve Tribes, or some part of them, "always a nation before the Lord." There were two Houses or families of Israel—the House of Judah and the House of Israel or Joseph. Israel ceased to be a nation in the technical sense in B.C. 720, when their captivity was completed, and therefore, Judah was existing as a nation from that date, till A.D. 70. At the latter period Judah was destroyed and ceased to be a nation. Therefore, as the Jews still remain, not a nation, but a scattered people, we are bound to find (that the Scriptures be not broken) the House of Joseph somewhere to-day localised and consolidated "as a nation" before the Lord. This argument is perfect. Let our opponents try and destroy it.

But taking another view, we arrive at the same result. In Gen. xlviii. 19 (R.V.) we have the well known promises to Ephraim and Manasseh, the favoured grandsons of Jacob, recorded. They were separately blessed, and their gifts were manifestly to be contemporaneously enjoyed by them. "Manasseh," said the patriarch, "shall become a people; and he also shall be great; howbeit his younger brother shall be greater than he, and his seed shall become a multitude of nations." Not one nation only was Ephraim to become, but a "fulness" or "multitude of" Gentile "nations" (melo-haggoim), which was clearly a repetition of the precious blessing Jacob had separately received from the Lord, when He told him in Gen. xxxv. 11. "Be fruitful and multiply; a nation and a company of nations shall be of thee." Here we have Ephraim singled out to enjoy this blessing, in which Judah had no share; and therefore we look to find Ephraim a nation with a cluster of daughter nations round her, at some time or other. But when? Before the first Advent? Nay; history denies the fact. After the second Advent? Nay; prophecy negatives the idea; for then, the House of Ephraim and the House of Judah will be united as "one stick" in the Lord's hand, one nation, and one kingdom on the mountains of Israel, sharing and sharing alike, in all the blessings which will then be the splendid heritage of the thirteen consolidated Tribes of the children of Israel. It follows then that "the nation" of Ephraim and her "company of nations" must now be existing; and it is obvious that outside the British Empire they are not to be found. This argument, too, has no flaw, and invites the consideration of our opponents.

We approach a third. Our Lord, in Matt. xxi. 43, said to the House of Judah, or the Jews, "the kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and given to a nation (éthnei) bringing forth the fruits thereof." What nation was that? Does the Scripture anywhere specify what race shall in God's sight be ever the fruit-bearer? "Israel shall blossom and bud, and fill the face of the world with fruit," is the testimony of Isa. xxvii. 6. Is any other race, or nation, designated in God's Word, the "fruit-bearer"? Not one! Besides "Ephraim," whose name denoted, and meant in Hebrew, the fruitful one (Gen. xli. 51—52), no other nation has that honour. The kingdom of God, then, was to be transferred from one House of Israel to the other; from Judah, in short, to Ephraim-Israel, and the latter, by the Lord's own description, was to be "a nation;" which is the point we have to prove. It is almost needless to add, that even Jewish converts to Christ are obliged to admit, apart from Our Identity, that the British nation, being the fruit-bearer, was the one our Lord designated in Matt. xxi. 43 (see sermon of the Rev. J. C. S. Kroenig, vicar of St. Barnabas, Hull, on "England's Divine Mission in the East, or England's Identity with Israel proved"). This argument is cogent, and calls for reflection on the part of our clerical friends.

But we have further evidence. There is the Scriptural description of what Israel is to do in the latter days; a description which can only point to the status of a nation, and that a strong one in the last times.

She is to be in her Lo-Ammi condition abnormally multitudinous. Hosea i. 10 tells us that she is to be "among the Gentiles, in the midst of many people, as a lion among the beasts of the forest, and as a young lion among the flocks of sheep;" such lion, and young lion, being conquerors, but not otherwise (Micah v. 8); a "strong nation," in short, among the many Gentile weaker races (compare Deut. xxxiii. 17). If men ask when that is to be, Micah v. 7 replies that it will be during the Christian teaching dispensation, that is now! Further, Gen. xxii. 17—18, informs us this same Israel (not Judah, mark! because modern facts deny it) will be a "blessed" nation, multitudinous to a degree (as Hosea told us) —the gate-holder of her enemies—and (to mark the chronology) the evangelist for Christ during the present dispensation—since all the nations, or Gentiles of the earth, are to be blessed in her seed or race. But it may be asked, when is that to be? Not before the first Advent, because history would negative that assertion. Not only after the second Advent, because the blessing, teaching function of the Christian Church, was begun by the command of Christ, as soon as He ascended into heaven, and His last words to His own chosen Hebrew Church and nation were, "Go ye, therefore, and teach (or make disciples of) all the nations . . . . and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world" (or age) (Matt. xxviii. 19—20, R.V.). This is a Scriptural, evangelical argument, which surely the clergy and ministers of religion must take into their careful consideration.

Digitized by Google

But, again. The consolidation of scattered Ephraim into a separate nationality is clearly taught in Ezek. xi. 16—17, R.V., where, after declaring that they were removed far off among the Gentiles, or nations, and scattered among the countries, God promised to be "to them a sanctuary for a little while in the countries where they are come;" and He added, "I will gather you from the peoples, and assemble you out of the countries where ye have been scattered, and I will give you the land of Israel," the land not only of the inheritance, but also that "appointed place," "the place of their own," mentioned in 2 Sam. vii. 10, R.V., where "rest from their enemies" was to be their portion, as it is this day in these "isles afar off," "the Isles of the West," the abode of the most powerful nation of modern times.

Verily, we may say, taking a broad and wide view of all the facts, "the little one has become a thousand, and the small one a strong nation. The Lord has hastened it in its time" (Isa. lx. 22). And that nation, the strong one, is the House of Joseph, even Ten-tribed Israel, in her western island home (Hosea xi. 10; Isa. xxiv. 15; Jer. xxxi. 10, R.V.).

MILITARY PROWESS OF THE BRITISH.

By J. Thomson.

In his very interesting volumes, "Retrospect of a Long Life; from 1815 to 1883,"* Mr. S. C. Hall briefly touches upon several of our national characteristics, particularly noticing the fighting propensities of the modern Briton. Thus, in vol. i., p. 79, he has a paragraph headed, "Hatred of the French;" and says, that "sixty years ago France was considered the natural foe of England, and England of France. The threatened invasion of the first Napoleon, and the enthusiasm with which in 1800, and 1805, more than 200,000 volunteers sprang to arms," were matters of "fresh recollection" to all in his youthful days. Apropos to this, he tells a good anecdote: Some twenty-five years ago, "France was growling a similar threat, when Napoleon III. was pressed by his marshals to do what no one knew better than he, would have been madness—viz., attempt a landing on our coasts." At that time Mr. Hall was in Paris, and had the honour of conversing on the subject with one of Napoleon's most distinguished generals. The latter explained to Mr. Hall the feasibility of the plan, and concluded a long harangue by saying, "You know we have plenty of transports." "Yes," replied Mr. H., "and you will want them; but one will suffice to bring you back." Mr. Hall adds, "I think I see the old soldier now, with his look of indignation, as he suddenly rose and left the room." Yes, indeed, the threat of invasion has often been held out against this country by some one or other of the Continental Powers, or their despotic rulers. But we may fear them not; the fate of the "Invincible" Spanish Armada will be a warning to them for all time; and unless they would court the almost certainty of similar destruction, they would do well to think not once, twice, nor thrice, but many times, before engaging upon such a venture. In the words of our Israelitish poet:—

"O Britain, praise thy mighty God,
And make His honours known abroad;
He bids the ocean round thee flow;
Not bars of brass could guard thee so.

Thy children are secure and blest,
Thy shores have peace, thy cities rest;
He feeds thy sons with finest wheat,
And adds His blessing to their meat.
* * * *
To all the isle His laws are shown,
His Gospel through the nation known:
He hath not thus reveal'd His Word
To every land; praise ye the Lord."
Watts (Psa. cxlvii.).

Mr. Hall goes on further, and says, "I can well remember the earliest lesson I received from my father—an officer of the good old school of pig-tails and hair powder. The lesson was this: he would put me on his knee, pat me on the head, and say, 'Be a good boy, love your mother, and hate the French.' Such counsel would be almost invariably followed up by this: 'Now, my boy, if you meet six Frenchmen, run away; if there are three, lick them!' Such was the invariable teaching received by boys, of all ages, early in the century. Three Frenchmen were thought but a fair match for one Englishman, and I believe nine out of ten of the soldiers of the Peninsula considered three to one made even forces. There cannot be the slightest doubt that the belief, prejudice—call it what we please—thus inculcated as it were from the cradle, was the source to which England owes many of her victories, both by land and sea."*

These may be, under God, some of the secondary causes of our national pre-eminence in arms. But prophecy, and our Identity with the chosen people of old, furnish us with the true reason. "The remnant of Jacob shall be among the nations, in the midst of many peoples, as a lion among the beasts of the forest, as a young lion among the flocks of sheep: who, if he goeth through, both treadeth down and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver." "The nations shall see and be confounded at all their might: they shall lay their hand upon their mouth; their ears shall be deaf. They shall lick the dust like a serpent, they shall move out of their holes like worms of the earth; they shall be afraid of Jehovah our God, and shall fear because of Thee" (Micah v. 8; vii. 16, 17).

In illustration of his remarks, Mr. Hall again writes:—"I cannot say how it is now, but about thirty years ago, when I visited the 'Invalides,' the great hall was hung with the banners of every military power, except the English. Of English flags there was not one. A venerable custodian, who had shared in a hundred fights, took me round, and with the pride of the soldier and the Frenchman (either would have been ample) named to me, one after another, the battles of which they were the prizes. When he had made an end of that long and splendid battle-roll, I startled him by the simple and natural question:—'And where are the English?' He made me no answer, but turned away with a changed and gloomy look. There was not one!"† This anecdote is again eminently characteristic; for while innumerable victories over our foes have been vouchsafed to us by our great Captain, Jehovah, who is a "Man of war," few have been the occasions when they have triumphed over us, and spoiled us of our possessions. These latter, apparently untoward events, have also, indeed, occasionally been permitted by the same divine and gracious Hand, as chastisements for national sins, and to lead us to repentance; which end attained, they have been followed by more abundant national blessings. This fact in our history is so well known, that it is unnecessary to do more now than simply thus refer to it.

At the time of which Mr. Hall writes—viz., the Napoleonic wars, there were "many thousands" of French prisoners of war in the prisons of this country. No doubt they had therein little comfort, and limited supplies of food; for English prisons, at that time, were a disgrace to the nation. This is not what we now desire to call attention to; but the fact, that "English prisoners in France were as one to ten in comparison with the number detained on British soil":‡ another proof of the superiority of British over French prowess.

* London: Richard Bentley & Son, 1883.

* "Retrospect," &c., i., p. 80.
† Ibid., &c., i., p. 80, note.
‡ Ibid., p. 87.

Digitized by Google

These characteristics of the modern British have not always secured for them unmingled respect, or "fear," from our Continental neighbours; but sometimes violent threats have been indulged in by feeble envious potentates. Writing about thirty years ago, Mr. Gadsby quotes the following passage from a pamphlet then recently published at Naples, and supposed to be under the sanction or permission of the then Neapolitan government:—"The world will never have peace until all the sovereigns united shall be able to destroy this plundering people" (the British), "and wipe them away from the nations of the earth—until the English people are dispersed, like the Hebrews—until London, like Jerusalem, shall be in ruins and ashes; then Europe will be safe. Let us console ourselves in God. France will do it; the time approaches."* Mr. Gadsby's book was published in 1855, and since then Europe has seen many changes; but among them has not been London in ashes, though the French nation has been made to "lick the dust," and her capital again been in the hands of invaders. Indeed, in the light of Our Identity, the ardent hope of the Neapolitan writer seems farther off than ever among human probabilities. May we not again confidently quote from our Israelitish poet?—

"This Northern isle, our native land,
Lies safe in God th' Almighty's hand;
Our foes, of vict'ry dream in vain,
And wear the captivating chain."

"Almighty grace defend our land
From their malicious power:
Let Britain with united songs
Almighty grace adore."

"Let tyrants make no more pretence
To vex our happy land;
Jehovah's name is our defence,
Our buckler is His hand."

"He builds and guards the British throne,
And makes it gracious like His own;
Makes our successive princes kind,
And gives our dangers to the wind."†

The Israelitish ring in this last stanza is a very remarkable instance of "blind testimony." The poet asserts that God "builds and guards the British throne." But Holy Scripture assures us that Jehovah promised this of David's throne only. "Once have I sworn by My holiness, that I will not lie unto David. His seed shall endure for ever, and his throne as the sun before Me. It shall be established for ever as the moon, and as a faithful witness in heaven," &c. (Psa. lxxxix. 1-37; 2 Sam. vii.). "David shall never want a man to sit upon the throne of the House of Israel," &c. (Jer. xxxiii. 17—26). Hence, if the British poet is right in his assertion, the British throne must be that of the House Israel, and ever occupied by a descendant of King David. Jehovah also, he says, makes this throne "gracious like His own." Are we to esteem this as a bit of poetic licence merely, or of sober fact? If the latter, it is only the light of the Identity that can explain it, and give a satisfactory reason for this pre-eminence among the thrones and nations of the earth ascribed to the British. Israel, praise ye the Lord! "He hath not dealt so with any nation; and as for His judgments, they have not known them" (Psa. cxlvii. 20).

RUDIMENTARY NOTES.

By Surgeon-General J. M. Grant, M.D.

God promised Abraham that He would make of him a great nation; and not only that, but the greatest of all nations, "the head and not the tail" (Deut. xxviii. 1—13) obviously of all nations which had preceded or should come after him; also invincible (Isa. liv. 17). It is evident that this promise was not fulfilled in Palestine; and the Bible gives us no reason to suppose that it would be; on the contrary, it states very plainly that its fulfilment would be "in the last days" (Gen. xlix. 1). This expression occurs also in Numb. xxiv. 14, and Dan. x. 14; and on comparing those passages with their contexts, we find that the Christian dispensation is intended. For example, the time of Israel's greatness predicted by Balaam was to be when "there shall come a Star out of Jacob; and a Sceptre shall rise out of Israel." The same expression occurs in the New Testament; and in Heb. i. 1; 2 Tim. iii. 1; 2 Peter iii. 3, is applied to the Christian dispensation. Israel was also to be "a kingdom of priests, and a holy nation, God's witnesses, and the messengers of His salvation to all the world" (Exod. xix. 6; Isa. xliii. 10; Acts i. 8).

Now it is very certain that Israel, as she existed in Old Testament times, was neither the greatest of the nations, nor God's witnesses to all the world. Greater nations had preceded and greater have succeeded her; and that she was not invincible needs no demonstration. We do not read that Solomon's trading fleet did much missionary work; neither was it God's purpose that the mission of Israel as a kingdom of priests and a holy nation should be accomplished at that time, as we find clearly stated in Deut. xxxi. 16, etc. Such a mission has not, up to the present time, been accomplished by the Jews, so that there must be a House of Israel distinct from them fulfilling these prophecies now; a nation witnessing for God in all the world, and therefore Christian; greater than any other nation that has ever gone before it; and one that has never been conquered. There can be no uncertainty here. The prophecy must have been fulfilled, or be in course of fulfilment, or it must have failed. The only question upon which there is any room for speculation is, which of all the nations of the world is fulfilling it at the present time? We say Great Britain; and no other having better claims has ever been suggested by those who differ from us. Indeed there is no room for doubt, because a nation possessing all the blessings and privileges which were promised by God to Israel alone must be Israel, as God is true.

When we say that Great Britain has never been conquered, or invaded, we do not take into account the so-called invasions of Saxons, Jutes, Angles, Danes and Normans. Those we regard as the tribes of Israel flocking into the sanctuary provided for them by God, and finally becoming amalgamated into the existing population of these islands; but we say that since the last of them, the Normans, found sanctuary in Britain, there has been neither invasion nor conquest. Our national experience has been exactly that promised in 2 Sam. vii. 10, and Ezek. xi. 15—21 (R.V.), which latter pasage shows, by the way, that Israel will be found established as a Christian nation before the final return of the tribes to Palestine, but that the Jews will remain in unbelief.

The importance of distinguishing between Judah, or the Jews, and Israel, will be apparent from the above passages, because they describe a state of things diametrically opposed to the present and long past condition of the former; and if the two kingdoms were united at the time of our Lord's advent and ever since the return from the Jewish captivity in Babylon, as many eminent divines affirm, then the whole nation rejected Christ, and the purpose of Jehovah in separating Israel as a nation to proclaim His salvation to all the world has failed, or been abandoned!! In fact, this distinction is the key to prophecy, and if we apply it to those prophecies regarding Israel of the Ten Tribes which have been recklessly applied by our theologians to the Church, transferring to the heathen the promises made by God on oath to the seed of Abraham, we shall find that it throws an entirely new light upon the Bible, or in other words, that the visions of the prophets are speaking in these latter days (Habak. ii. 3; Dan. x. 14). I cannot think that we have received any new revelation. It rather appears that we are now beginning to see that we have heretofore despised and rejected the revelation which God has given us in His holy Word; and which, we may be sure, is the only one that He will ever give us; for if any other book had been interpreted as the Bible has been, the interpretation would have been laughed down long ago by sensible men of the world; and the only reason why the spiritualising interpretation of prophecy has not been scouted, instead of being allowed to remain a stronghold of infidelity, is that the Book is treated with such supreme indifference by the masses that they have accepted the mythical rendering of many important passages which one or two dreamy spiritualisers have adopted; and which has passed unchallenged down a long posterity of dreamers like themselves. It is time that the Church were awakened out of this torpor; but the awakening will not be by any new revelation, but by the reiteration of a command long ago given to the Jews, when as yet there was no New Testament—"Search the Scriptures, for they are they which testify of ME." Anglo-Israelism does not set up any new creed, or doctrine, or revelation. There is nothing sectarian, or sensational in her teaching. She merely points with a steady and unswerving finger to that commandment of her Lord's.

* "Wanderings," i., p. 572, note.
† Watt's "Hymns and Spiritual Songs," b. ii., 1, 92, 111.

With regard to the Teutonic theory, it is only necessary to say that although waifs and strays may possibly be found amongst the continental nations, Israel can have no national existence amongst them because, in that case, she has not been gathered out of, but established in the territory of the nations amongst which she had been scattered; and the house of Joseph has developed into more than two great peoples, which is at variance with the prophecy of Jacob recorded in Gen. xlviii. 19.

That prophecy has had an exact fulfilment in the separation of America from England, and the subsequent expansion of both, while nothing having the most remote connection with it can be found in the history of any other nation; and to divide Israel into more than the two houses of Judah and Joseph, the latter subdivided into two peoples, is without any warrant from Scripture.

ISRAEL'S CHURCH AND STATE AND DISESTABLISHMENT, AS VIEWED BY THE IDENTITY.

A Lecture by Philo-Israel.

(Continued from page 177.)

PART III.

The Church established by God's Providence and determinate counsel and foreknowledge in this land of England, where David's throne is placed, being here for a special purpose, is, as it claims to be, "God's Church." Men declare it is so, speaking merely from a secular point of view, as we have seen. Can such a Church be disestablished and separated from the State? How can it be so under the circumstances? God saw fit to unite Church and State all through the ages, from Moses to the Messiah, and since Christ came we see a Church nationally established where Israel was domiciled in these "Isles of the West," as the first so established in all the world. From the second to the nineteenth century, with one interval after the Saxon invasion, it has remained "Established," and connected, more or less closely, with the State, with no likelihood even now, though men are striving hard to separate them, of ever becoming disunited. "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the age," was our Lord's promise; and the fact answers to the promise! Green, in his valuable "History of the English People," says on page 30 that the Church was "established in A.D. 607, in Theodore's time, then Archbishop of Canterbury, before the British Kingdoms of Mercia and Wessex were compelled to submit to Northumbria; before, too, the Saxon Witenagemote of All England was organised and constituted a national Parliament." "It was," says Green, the historian, "the Ecclesiastical Synods, which, by their example, led the way to our national Parliaments, as it was the Canons enacted in such Synods which led the way to a national system of law." Well may the Rev. Wm. Butler Doherty, of Bristol, ask in reference to the above, "Who, possessed of any candour, will not say it was the Church of England which established the State rather than the State the Church?" The Church, then, my friends, is the parent of our national British polity—that is, of God's kingdom of Israel; and is it likely a body so honoured of God will be ever cut adrift from the State, dishonoured, and discarded? We Anglo-Israelites have not the slightest expectation or fear of that sort. But here we are met by an objection, which it is needful I should quote and answer. It has actually been stated to me lately by a Dissenter, an Anglo-Israelite, who cannot accept the fact that the Church of England is "the Church of God" in any sense. "There is one point (she says) which presents a great difficulty when you speak of the continuity of Israel's ecclesiastical existence. The Established Religion of England during several centuries was Roman Catholicism. The Reformers broke away from the trammels of Popery, and inaugurated a purer faith. They were the dissenters of the age in which they lived. Did they by their separation from Rome leave Israel's Church? If not, where was Israel's Church prior to the first dawn of the Reformation? I know, of course, that there was a pure Israelite Church in Britain in very early times; but from the date when the Church of Rome began to dominate in Israel's state where was her Church and how preserved till the Reformation era?" To these difficulties and questions I have to answer thus. During the early centuries Christ's, or God's Church, was established in Britain, and was a pure Church. After Augustine's visit here with his 40 Roman monks, in the sixth century, God's Church became a corrupt and evil Church, but it never ceased thereby to be God's Church or Christ's Church! It was God's Church backslidden into Popery, and waiting for God's grace to restore it, as He did! So in the earlier days of Moses. God's Church, which He Himself organised at Sinai, soon fell away and lapsed into gross idolatry, as in Aaron's time; into open uncleanness, as in Eli's days; into flagrant disobedience, as in Caleb's; and into gross contempt of God's authority, as in Corah's; and yet surely it never ceased to be "the Church in the Wilderness" of Acts vii. 38. The Church of Ezek. xxxiv. will be God's Church in Israel when that prophecy is fulfilled. But it is described as a degraded, wandering Church, with careless, negligent shepherds, destined to be removed from the teaching and feeding functions in Israel. Will the Church thereby cease to exist? Will it not rather, as promised, have new and better pastors, according to God's heart, to conduct its ministrations among God's people and the world? (Ezek. xxxiv. 11—16—23; Jer. iii. 15; xxiii. 4).

(To be continued.)

THE "FAMILY HERALD" AGAIN—NOW AS A BLIND WITNESS.

PART I.

At pages 370, 404, &c., of vol. ix. of the Banner, we drew attention to the opinions of the Family Herald as a violent opponent of Our Identity. To-day we have the pleasure to introduce that journal to our readers under another aspect—as a blind witness to the truth of our Israelitish origin. In what follows, which is indeed a remarkable and wonderfully-interesting production, published in the issue of Jan. 23, 1886, we have the writer placing before us facts concerning our Empire which positively identify our race with the Ten Tribes almost in the very words of Scripture.

The Bible tells us that Israel's influence for good shall be world-wide (Isa. xxvii. 6), and the Family Herald responds by saying, "The Englishman, seconded by his Celtic brethren," are everywhere, administering an empire "so pervasive, so widely distributed, so territorial, so maritime, and so universal, as the world has never yet seen."

Digitized by Google

God's Word says of Israel, "Thou shalt reign over many nations, but they shall not reign over thee" (Deut. xv. 6). The Family Herald responds by telling us that the Queen "reigns" over Frenchmen, semi-Italian, semi-Arab populations, over Spaniards, over Germans, Danes, Dutch-Boers, and mixed races, everywhere — besides over Hindoos, Mussulmans, Chinese, Malays, Negroes, Esquimaux, Papuans, Indians of South America and Polynesians.

God gave Israel "the Gates," but the Family Herald, avoiding the name, tells us that the Queen possesses in every sea her "minor possessions," such as Gibraltar, Heligoland, Malta, Aden, Mauritius, Hong Kong, Fiji, St. Helena, Ascension, Bermuda, and the Falklands.

God's Word points to Israel's Heathen Empire as an illustration of "the power of His works" (Psa. cxi. 6, ii. 8); but the Family Herald points, with great astonishment, at the fact that 90,000 British souls (about half the inhabitants of Brighton!) keep the 250 millions of India in check! This is indeed a standing miracle; but it is, as Psa. cxi. 6 expresses it, an instance of the power of Jehovah, and therefore supernatural.

We quote nearly the whole article, which is too important to pass over, and ask for it our readers' attention. It is as follows:—

GREATER BRITAIN.

Probably there never existed in all the world any organisation so vast, so varied, so complex, and so strangely constituted as the British Empire at the present moment. No corner or quarter of the globe now remains into which the intrusive Englishman, ably seconded by his Celtic brethren from Scotland, Wales, Ireland, and the Isles, has not pushed his nose, like a ubiquitous Paul Pry, and settled down at last, bag and baggage, taking with him his goods and chattels, his wife and children, his oxen and his asses, and all that is his. Go where you will, you still find him, with his laws and his customs, his plum-pudding, and his tall, silk hat. The Roman Empire, in the days of its greatest extension, was no doubt a very big concern indeed. It included, roughly speaking, England, France, Spain, Portugal, Belgium, Italy, Turkey, Greece, Syria, Egypt, and North Africa, together with small slices of Austria, Switzerland, Germany, and Scotland. That seems at first sight an immense empire to us nowadays, because the countries it included are mostly European; they lie near our own shores, and we have a better idea of their relative size than in the case of dependencies separated from us by half the breadth of the Atlantic, the Pacific, or the Indian Ocean. But, as a matter of fact, the dominions of Rome in her palmiest days, when her legions spread from the Firth of Forth to the Cataracts of the Nile, were but a mere fraction of the gigantic empire now wielded by our Sovereign Lady the Queen and the Commons of England in Parliament assembled. India alone nearly equals in size the whole territories of Trajan or Domitian; British North America, with its endless wilds, vastly exceeds them. Nay, if we owned no land at all outside Britain itself except Australia, our dominions would still be greater than those of any ancient state or potentate whatsoever, be they Egyptian, Assyrian, Babylonian, Persian, Macedonian, or even Roman.

Russia, to be sure, in the modern world, presses us hard as a numerically great rival. In actual square mileage of soil she now very nearly approaches the total area of the British Empire. But then a large part of the territory claimed and loosely ruled by the Russian Crown consists of mere ice and snow, barren mountain or unproductive Arctic bog. More than half her dominions lie in Siberia; and Siberia has never been accounted even by its most enthusiastic admirers an eligible site for a winter residence. Acres alone go for little. In population, on the other hand, the Russian territories are simply nowhere. India itself far outnumbers by more than double the sum-total of the subjects of the White Czar all the world over. Russia, in short, is an Arctic power, which puts forth here and there a few occasional straggling feelers into the temperate regions of Europe and Asia. But Great Britain is a world-wide power, with interests to guard and duties to perform in every zone and region of the earth. Look at them in detail. In Europe she has her own right little, tight little islands; in Asia, she owns India, Burma, and Ceylon, not to mention Aden, Hong Kong, and Socotra; in Africa she now holds one foot tentatively planted in Egypt and the other firmly pressed down at the Cape; in America she starts at the North with the Canadian Dominion and ends at the South with the Falkland Islands; in Australasia she simply sweeps the board with Australia, New Zealand, and New Guinea firmly secured and Borneo attacked from two separate points in its vulnerable sea-board. She has her own Siberia among the Eskimo of the North-west Passage; her tropics in the West Indies, in Southern India, and in Ceylon and Singapore; her temperate regions in New Zealand and the Cape, in Canada and Australia. Every sea is studded over its expanse with her minor possessions. In the German Ocean she holds the stranded rock of Heligoland; in the Mediterranean, the rearing rock of Gibraltar. Malta gives her one station on the road to India; Aden secures her the passage of the Red Sea. In the Indian Ocean she keeps Mauritius; in the China Seas she retains Hong Kong; crossing the Pacific, she rests at Fiji; on the broad Atlantic her vessels coal securely at their ease at St. Helena and Ascension, at Bermuda and the Falklands. An empire so pervasive, so widely distributed, so territorial, so maritime, so universal, the world has never yet seen.

The complexity of our wide English organisation, however, more than equals the vastness of its extension in space. In blood, in colour, in tongue, in religion, the British subject is infinitely diversified. Here he is of one race, governed in one way; there he is of another race, living under other laws, other customs, other creeds, other institutions. In one dependency, white Englishmen rule autocratically over black subject peoples; in another dependency a majority of black voters rule constitutionally (for all practical purposes) over a minority of white and half-caste fellow-subjects. In some places the complexity and intermixture become almost grotesque, as where, at Hong Kong, one sees the great swarthy white-turbaned Sikh policeman, imported from the Punjaub, keeping order, in the name of the English power, among the mongrel Chinese, Portuguese, and Malay elements of that strangely-commingled cosmopolitan population; or when, at Singapore, one observes the villa of that prosperous British subject, Ah Sing, Esq., swept daily in the morning by a Madras coolie, and supplied with meat from Australian cattle by a European butcher.

In religion, it will perhaps come with a slight shock of surprise to many to learn that the vast majority of Her Majesty's lieges are really heathen, and that among the remainder the Mohammedans seem somewhat to exceed the numbers of the Christians. Most English subjects worship still the many gods of their Pagan ancestors. This curious result is mainly due, of course, to the immense numerical preponderance of India, among whose two hundred and fifty million inhabitants about one hundred and ninety millions belong to the Hindoo faith, while over fifty millions devoutly profess the creed of Islam. In addition to these, we have Buddhists in Ceylon, in Burma, and in British Tibet, together with a vast variety of assorted heathens, fetish-worshippers, and other queer, low religions among the native races of South Africa and the Gold Coast, the Australian Black-fellows, the Indians of British North America, the Hill Tribes of India, the Dyaks of Borneo, the ex-cannibals of Fiji, and various others of our less familiar black, brown, and yellow fellow-subjects. Hence, strange as it sounds to say so, if one is merely informed of any hypothetical person that he is a British subject, the chances are two to one that he is a complete heathen, or, if he be not that then about even upon the question of his being a Mohammedan or a Christian.

(To be continued.)

TESTIMONY FROM SHAKSPEARE.

By John T. Gott.

Shakspeare's ideas of men and things were in strict conformity with Bible teaching, and there is every reason to believe that he derived much of his keen insight into human character, not from observation only, but from a deep study of the sacred record.

As a thinker, he was far in advance of the men of his day,

Digitized by Google

as indeed, he is far ahead of many of the so-called thinkers of the present day, who "in their tall talk about atoms and animalculæ, ignore God and all spiritual existences," who "spurn the teaching of the Bible, while they chant the praises of Shakspeare. Illustrious sages! Where is your consistency?"

The following graphic description of England (or, as we should say, of Britain) will be found in King Richard II., act ii., scene 1:—

GAUNT—

"This royal throne of kings, this sceptered isle,
This earth of majesty, this seat of Mars,
This other Eden, demi-paradise,
This fortress built by Nature for herself,
Against infection and the hand of war;
This happy breed of men, this little world,
This precious stone set in the silver sea,
Which serves it in the office of a wall
Or as a moat defensive to a house,
Against the envy of less happier lands;
This blessed spot, this earth, this realm, this England,
This nurse, this teeming womb of royal kings,
Feared by their breed and famous by their birth,
Renowned for their deeds as far from home,
(For Christian service and true chivalry,)
As is the sepulchre in stubborn Jewry,
Of the world's ransom, blessed Mary's Son,
This land of such dear souls, this dear, dear land,
Dear for her reputation through the world,
Is now leased out, (I die pronouncing it,)
Like to a tenement or pelting farm."

This play was published about the year 1593 (Malone).

In the above paragraph, Shakspeare enumerates the leading characteristics of England in his day. Her royal line of kings; the warlike character of her people; their safety and security; and the natural defences of the land. He calls England "a little world," notes the multitudinous character of her people, her Christian philanthropy, and her renown both at home and abroad. But the most suggestive idea is where he speaks of Britain as

"This precious stone set in the silver sea."

We have no evidence that Shakspeare gave any thought, or had any idea of the whereabouts of Lost Israel. The British Empire has made rapid strides since his day, and these characteristics have increased tenfold. He has certainly given us, in this paragraph, a string of leading identifications, which belong only to God's chosen people, the lost House of Israel. The "precious stone set in the silver sea" diverts one's thoughts at once to the "stone kingdom" of Nebuchadnezzar's vision recorded in the book of Daniel.

We submit the above to the notice of the readers of the BANNER, feeling sure, that after a little reflection, they will see that the paragraph in question is a very remarkable one, and further, that it is simply Scripture paraphrased.

Review.

The Answer to the Eastern Question, with some facts concerning the Identity of the British with Israel. By the Author of the "New Old Story." Sixth and revised edition. Price 3d. Robert Banks and Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street.

THE sixth edition of this useful pamphlet has been prepared and issued to draw attention to the Eastern Question, on the part of those who, from ignorance or indifference, are unable to understand what their special interest in this subject is. We, already, some time ago, reviewed the Author's work, as presented to us in its earlier editions. It will not be needful, therefore, now to enter into details as to the objects of the writer, or in regard to the subjects discussed in treating of the Eastern Question. Suffice it to say that the author deals, in the concluding part of the essay, with the Anglo-Turkish Convention of 1878, with the value of Cyprus to us now; with the three wars of Afghanistan, with that in Zululand; pointing out how the massacre of Isandlwana was, after all, a "blessing in disguise"; with the Transvaal and its re-transfer to the Boers, showing the fatal connection through these events with the destructive "policy of surrender," by which all the Liberal action of our recent times has been vitiated. Meanwhile, the hope of the Empire, as the writer of the pamphlet proves, is the Confederation of the British Empire. Events which have recently transpired in Australia, New Guinea, Ireland, Egypt, the Soudan, Khartoum, and Upper Burmah, are all passed in rapid review, pointing to the certainty of "the future Confederation of the British Empire for all purposes that touch the common interest and concern the welfare of her sons and daughters in the four quarters of the globe" (p. 29), and indicating that the new non-British "surrender policy" is unwise, costly, non-English, selfish, and nationally disgraceful (p. 30).

With the last words of our author we perfectly agree, and so, we believe, will all our readers, of whatever shade of political opinion they may be. The author says, "Governments may come and go, work well or ill for the British Empire on this point or on that; but we may rest assured that all is overruled by the good Providence of God for the benefit of the Anglo-Saxon people—the House of Israel. We may cast aside precious gifts for a time, but we shall have to stoop to pick them up, learning to prize them rightly. The British Empire will extend until it reaches the bounds set for it; the people will fulfil their destiny, being first and foremost in the world; living witnesses to, and proof of the truth of the Word of God" (p. 32).

Correspondence.

LEAVEN.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—As I have expressed in some of my published papers, which are largely read by subscribers to the BANNER, a view of the parable of the leaven in the meal different from that which you express in your article in last BANNER, will you allow me a few words on the subject?

It appears to me that you transpose the figures and make the meal the mass acted upon, the kingdom instead of the leaven, the active ingredient operating on the mass. I think, too, that the simile of leaven is used merely to indicate an all pervading influence or power of expression in the temporal kingdom, and that it is not necessary to give it a spiritual significance; and this is quite in harmony with the other parables and with our Lord's general teaching, which was that this kingdom should grow first, and be cleared of everything that offends afterwards. The stone indicates its growth by accretion, and the leaven by assimilation, but the growth, I conceive, is in both cases that of the temporal kingdom, and consists of the pushing aside of the weaker races, and the absorption of the stronger.

But if we give the parable the spiritual interpretation for which you and many others contend, there is nothing intrinsically bad in leaven. The thing represented by "the leaven of the Pharisees" was hypocrisy, and our Lord's caution against admitting the smallest particle of it into the spiritual nature was given because it would spread like leaven, "bringing forth fruit unto death"; but the result of unchecked leavening on nature is LIFE; and so leaven becomes a very apt type of the kingdom of God, which, with the spiritual laws, imparts life, for "to be spiritually minded is life."

No allusion is made to bread in the parable, neither does there appear to be any necessary connection between it and the Levitical law. It is quite true that when the baker puts the dough into the oven, he kills, or extinguishes the life which the leaven had begun to impart to it; and, in this sense, there are too many bakers amongst ourselves to make it necessary for us to look for them in the Church of Rome.

Yours very truly,
J. M. GRANT, M.D., Surgeon-General.

Cheltenham, April 7th.

THE COLONIAL AND INDIAN EXHIBITION was opened on Tuesday, May 4, by Her Majesty the Queen. It contains exhibits from all the Colonies and India, also an Indian Palace, erected at considerable cost. The representation of an old London street is maintained, and will probably be interesting to our Indian and Colonial visitors.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed: — "Philo-Israel," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

SUBSCRIPTIONS £ s. d.

Annual Subscription for one copy weekly (including the Twelve Double Numbers) post free - 0 7 6
Two Copies (including Double Numbers) - - 0 13 6
Three Copies " " " " - 1 0 4
Four Copies " " " " - 1 5 6
Six Copies " " " " - 1 16 4

Post Office Orders to be made payable at the head office, St. Martin's-le-grand, London, to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C., and W. H. GUEST & Co. 29, Paternoster-row, London.

The Editor cannot undertake to return rejected MSS. unless stamps for the purpose be sent. Parties requiring an answer should enclose a stamp.

Contents Bills and Show Cards may be obtained on application to the Publishers.

Advertisements should be sent to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

Prepaid Advertisements are inserted at the rate of 30 words for 1s. 4d.

PREPAID "WANTED," &c., ADVERTISEMENTS, 27 words, 1s.; 4d. every additional line.

THE Coming Struggle. Gladstone, the Anti-Christ; Sounding of the Seventh Trumpet, the British Nation (Israel), the Throne of God. Price 6d., by post 7d. By John Blair, 4, Middle Craigs, Stirling, N.B.

PUBLISHED BY ROBT. BANKS & SON,
RACQUET COURT, FLEET STREET, E.C.

WORKS BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

The Geography of the Gates. With Map and six full page, and one double-page, Illustrations, printed on plate paper. 208 pages, in handsome cloth, gilt Price 3s. 6d., post free 3s. 10d.

Our Identity with the House of Israel. Price 4d. Reprinted from "Clifton Chronicle Letters"

The History of the House of Israel; How they were Lost, and How they were Found, Told for the Children. Price 6d., cloth 1s.; post free 7d. and 1s. 1d. Fourth Edition. Eleventh thousand.

Philo-Israel's Leaflets. Four pages Crown 8vo Price 1s. 6d. per 100, postage 2d. No. 1.—"The Identity of the British with Lost Israel." 2.—"The Glory of God." 3.—An Address to British Seamen. 4.—An Address to British Soldiers. No. 5.—The Communion of the Body and Blood of Our Lord Jesus Christ Viewed in the Light of Our Identity. 6.—The Bible and the Jew. 7.—The Jewish People. 8.—Lo-Ammi; or, the Gentilisation of Ten-Tribed Israel. 9.—The Atonement. 10.—Is Our Identity Evangelical, or Non-Evangelical in its Tendency? No. 11.—Cui Bono? No. 12.—The "Thoughts" of God Towards Israel, Judah, and the Gentile Nations. 13.—The Teutonic Theory—Is It True? 14.—An Address to the Police Force of Great Britain. 15.—An Address to Israel's Missionaries and Their Supporters. 16.—The One Seed, Christ. 17.—An Address to Israel's Electors. Price 1s. 6d. per 100.

A Resume of the Scriptural Argument, proving the Identity of the British Race with the Lost Ten Tribes. Price 1d.; 6s. per 100. New edition now ready.

Identity Leaflets. No. 1.—ISRAEL'S MISSION (Psa. cxlvii. 19; Mark xvi. 15; John iii. 16). By V. M. Cox. No. 2.—HOPE FOR EGYPT (Isaiah xix. 20-25) By V. M. Cox. 100 copies post free for 1s.; 9s. 6d. per 1000. Price 1s. per 100, assorted packets 1s. 2d.; 8s. 6d. per 1,000 (nett). Carriage free 4d. extra.

Thoughts for the British Folk.

Suggested by PHILO-ISRAEL.

No. 1.—Multitudinousness.
No. 2.—The Gates.
No. 3.—The Nation and Company of Nations.
No. 4.—British Wealth.
No. 5.—The Rulers Over Many Nations.
No. 6.—The Universal Creditor.
No. 7.—The Ever-Continuing British Monarchy.
No. 8.—The Scattered People at Home in Every Climate
No. 9.—The Queen, Lords, and Commons.
No. 10.—The Unconquerable Nation.
No. 1.—The Fatally Destructive Race.
No. 12.—The Isolated Nation.
No. 13.—The Nation Which Belts the Earth.
No. 14.—The Emancipators of the Slave.
No. 15.—The Christian Nation.
No. 16.—The Ten Commandments.
No. 17.—The Asylum for the Foreign Refugee.
No. 18.—The Possessors of the "Sign."
No. 19.—The Universal Missionaries.
No. 20.—Testimony of the Book of Common Prayer.
No. 21.—Church and State, and also Disestablishment.
No. 22.—Our Poor Laws.
No. 23.—The Labour Question is an Identity Question.
No. 24.—Emigration.

R. BANKS & SON Racquet-court, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

Printed for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C. PUBLISHED BY GUEST, HAYWORTH, & Co., 29, PATERNOSTER-ROW, WEDNESDAY, MAY 12, 1886. All rights reserved.

SEE FIFTY REASONS WHY THE ANGLO-SAXONS ARE THE LOST TEN TRIBES. Price 6d., post free 7d.

The Land of Espousals.
The Testimony of Language.
The Transfer of the Kingdom from Judah to Israel.
"Shiloh:" Its Interpretation.
Ireland not Missioned from Rome
Israel and Judah Distinct.
Israel's Blindness.
The Standard Goes to Israel.
Our Royal Standard.

Robert Banks & Son, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C.

Dr. JOSEPH WILD'S WORKS

NEW EDITION JUST PUBLISHED.

THE LOST TEN TRIBES

Price 3s., post free 3s. 3d.

The FUTURE of ISRAEL and JUDAH.

Price 2s., post free 2s. 3d.

The Special Commissioner of the Christian Word, writing of Dr. Wild, says:—"On Sunday evening I had to fight my way into the Congregational Church of which Dr. Wild is the minister. He hails from America, and is quite the sensation of the hour. There was no standing room anywhere, and as I made to the door I met many coming away However, I had made up my mind to hear the Doctor, and hear him I did. It seems that the subscribers have a door to themselves; I made for it, and luckily found a chair, which I wedged in under the platform. The Doctor prayed, and then we had a sermon about Revelation, containing much that was very effective, if not about his text, at any rate about that mysterious part of Scripture from which the text was taken."

Just published, price 3d., post free 3½d.

New Testament Truth on the Anglo-Israel Controversy.

By J. G. TAYLOR.

CONTENTS—

Abrahamic Covenant.—The Advent.—Consolation of Israel.—"Cutting Off" of Israel—Ebal and Gerizim.—End of Faith.—Function of Prophecy.—Gentile Church.—Gentile Dispensation.—Gentile Parenthesis.—Fulness of the Gentiles.—Times of the Gentiles.—"He is not a Jew which is one outwardly."—"Heirs according to the promise."—Hosea and Peter.—"Israel hath not attained to righteousness,—The law.—"Lo, we turn to the Gentiles."—Meaning of "His People."—Meaning of "Israel."—Meaning of "My People."—Meaning of "The People."—Meaning of "Thy People."—New Covenant.—The Old Testament and the New.—The Promises.—Seed of Abraham.—Set Ideas.—Spiritual Fulfilments.—Spiritual Israel.—'A Stone of Stumbling."—"The kingdom shall be taken from you."—"There is neither Jew nor Greek."—Who's Who in the New Testament.

London: Robert Banks & Son, Racquet court, Fleet-st., and by order of any bookseller.

EDWARD HINE'S PUBLICATIONS.

FORTY-SEVEN IDENTIFICATIONS, 6d.
COMING GLORIES, 6d.
FLASHES OF LIGHT, 6d.
OXFORD WRONG: 4d.
ANGLO-SAXON RIDDLE, 4d.

Penny extra per post. Above bound in handsome volume.
LOST ISRAEL FOUND, 3s. 6d. POST FREE, 3s. 9d.
LEAFLET No. 1, 1s. per 100, of ISAAC LOVELAND, Shoreham, Sevenoaks; GUEST, HAYWORTH, & Co., 29 Paternoster Row, E.C

SPRING CLEANING

LOOK TO YOUR BEDS.

Why sleep on old beds when new ones are only 9d. per lb., complete, any size or weight, made to order, and carriage paid to any address?

THE LINCOLNSHIRE BEDDING Co.'s CELEBRATED FEATHER BEDS.
"As soft as downy pillows are."

Send for Price List and Samples, Post Free, to the Sole London Agent, A. W. HALL, 132, FLEET STREET, LONDON, E.C.

In Celebration of Her Majesty's Jubilee!!!

The Greatest and Most Genuine Art Distribution in the World.

MONTAGUE, MARKS & Co., Tower Chambers, Moorgate Street, have been singularly fortunate in securing the Chromo-Lithographic Stones of the following Eight Subjects after BIRKET FOSTER.

"Feeding Ducks."	"Gathering Seaweed."
"Birdnesting."	"Cherry Gatherers."
"Minding Baby."	"Studies."
"Cat's Cradle."	"Hayfield."

Size of each Picture, 14 by 10 inches.

The original published price of these perfect gems of art was 21s. each, or £8 8s. the set of eight. Upon receipt of Postal Order for 3s. 6d. we will forward the above-mentioned Eight beautiful Chromos, carefully packed and carriage free to any part of the United Kingdom.

N.B.—The money will be returned to any person not approving of their purchase, if sent back not damaged within three days.

As the quantity of these Chromo Pictures are limited, preference will be given to those ordering early.

MONTAGUE, MARKS, & Co.,
Chromo Printers and Publishers, Tower Chambers, Moorgate Street, London, E.C.
[Please Mention this Paper.

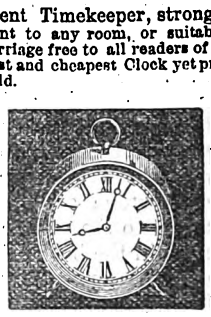
FOR ONE WEEK ONLY

FREE PRESENTS.—GOVERNMENT HEARTHRUGS, 5,000 Silk-Finished Handkerchiefs.

B. of I. FREE PRESENTATION COUPON.

On receipt of this Coupon and 26 stamps, I agree to forward one BEAUTIFUL GOVERNMENT HEARTHRUG, 6 ft. long and 3 ft. wide, in various designs and colours. Fern leaves, oak leaves, flowers, Turkish, cat and kittens, Irish harp centre, and the new tiger design. Suitable for drawing-room, dining-room, parlour, bedroom, or kitchen; and I also agree to present every purchaser with a beautiful Silk-Finished Handkerchief. (Signed) J. WATTS.



Two Rugs, with two presents, 3s. 10d., or 50 stamps; 6 Rugs, 11s.

P.O.O. to be made payable at Low Hill Branch to J. WATTS, 113, Brunswick-road, Liverpool.

THE WONDER OF 1886!

AN excellent Timekeeper, strongly made; an ornament to any room, or suitable for a shop Will be sent carriage free to all readers of this paper for 5s. 6d. The best and cheapest Clock yet produced in any part of the world.

Carriage 5/6 Paid.

Carriage 5/6 Paid.

The face measures 5½ inches across, and we guarantee that the above is a correct drawing of the clock. Will stand on mantel-shelf or can be hung up. The cheapest thing advertised. Direct, on receipt of P.O.O., from the importers, BAXTER & Co., MOOR LANE, LANCASTER.

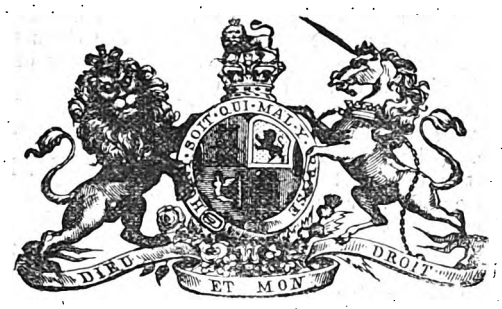
EXTERMINATION OF ALL CORNS & BUNIONS

Guaranteed by using Gardner's Patented Corn and Bunion Exterminator, an ingenious little instrument which can be used by anyone. Painless in operation—"never fails." Price 1s. The highest Surgical Testimonials can be seen and operations successfully performed in all peculiar cases, bad nails, &c., at the Inventor's, who will send the Exterminator direct for 13 stamps.
C. GARDNER, Chiropodist, Kendal.

THE BRITISH ISRAELITES;

Or, Evidences of our Hebrew Origin, gathered from History, Genealogy, Philology, and Heathen Customs. To which is added the Scriptural Testimony of Prophecy Compared with Existing Facts, Answers to Objections, and a Lecture on the Great Pyramid

By LIEUT.-COLONEL H. W. J. SENIOR. 1st Bengal Infantry.



"We can safely recommend it as an excellent guide to the learned and an invaluable mine of wealth to the Anglo-Israelite controversialist. We hope all our readers will secure a copy, and have it often in their hands.—Banner of Israel
With Illustrations, cloth gilt, 178 pp., 3s. 6d. BAGSTER & SONS, LMTD., 15, PATERNOSTER ROW, E.C.

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."

(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India.)

"And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the Forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS of the EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. X., No. 490. [Entered at Stationers' Hall.] WEDNESDAY, MAY 19, 1886. [PRICE ONE PENNY.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
Are the Irish "Foreigners"?	197
A Frenchman's Lament	198
The British Protestant Brings Forward a Fresh Objection	199
The Family Herald Again—Now as a Blind Witness.—Part II.	200
Israel's Church and State, and Disestablishment, as Viewed by the Identity. A Lecture by Philo-Israel. Part IV.	201
Britannia's Birthright. By S. T. A.	203
Miss Cox's Lecture at Clifton	208
The River Euphrates	208
Identity of the Lost Tribes	208
Correspondence	208

ARE THE IRISH "FOREIGNERS"?

THE Prime Minister of "England" told us in his famous speech of April 8th, on the Irish Home Rule Bill, that what the Irish wanted was "laws stript of their foreign garb"—in other words that because the British were foreigners in respect to the Irish people, the latter would never be satisfied with British-made, that is, with foreign law. A tremendous fallacy of course underlies this statement, for while it is true that a certain proportion (the majority) of the Irish people are of Phœnician or Canaanitish, and therefore foreign origin, a large number, perhaps quite 25 per cent. of the population, are derived from the very same Hebrew-Israelitish stock as the English, Scotch and Welsh people. The race which inhabits the North of Ireland, Ulster, is, in fact, of the same Celtic origin as the Northern Scots, and are blood-relations of the Highlanders and North Britons. The majority in the South of Ireland are of a totally different racial stock, Phœnician by origin, and in no way can be regarded as derived from the same people as the Irish of Ulster. The distinction is not clear even to those who have some knowledge of our Identity, for we have lately heard it stated by one of these, that "inasmuch as the Irish nation, taken as a whole, are Canaanitish, it matters not whether they are to be separated from the British-Israelites or not. The whole race is foreign and alien to ourselves, and therefore may properly be cast off and finally separated from the British Empire." The conclusion thus arrived at, however, is quite erroneous; because the Identity requires that the two islands called in Jer. xxxi. 10, "the isles afar off" given by the Lord as Israel's "appointed place" of refuge and of safety, must remain in possession of His people to the end. There can be no second disruption of the Tribes of the House of Joseph, after the departure of Manasseh to the now United States of North America, and therefore it is simply an impossibility that the island of Ireland, which is occupied by Israel now, can be severed from that larger one, entitled "the United Kingdom," because some of the Irish are of foreign extraction. Mr. J. Chamberlain, in his speech at Birmingham, on April 21st, 1886, and Lord Hartington, on April 26, at Rawtenstall, used plain and significant language in reference to this subject.

They spoke with no uncertain voice regarding the "two nations" and two communities now occupying Ireland, North and South, separated, they both declare, by religion, by race, by politics and by social conditions. The governing factor in this enumeration is, of course, that which alleges the races are of diverse ethnic origin. The Southerners are Phœnicians, or Canaanites, and foreigners. The Northerners are God's Witnesses, therefore Protestants; they are the wealthy, dominant race, to whom God has given His blessing, which shall never be taken from them, even Israel. Mr. Gladstone's proposed legislation for Ireland ignores this important distinction, and also the existence of the two separate nations in Ireland. It treats the whole nation as Irish of one homogenous ethnic character, totally ignoring the crucial fact that two antagonistic peoples exist upon the land, for both of whom no laws which can be devised will ever prove equally acceptable. In this connection we quote first some words of the Duke of Argyll in which he indignantly denies that the Irish (meaning, we suppose, the Northern Irish) are, as a race, "foreign" to us, and then Mr. Chamberlain's remarkable speech before alluded to, of which, of course, we can only present a few sentences to our readers now.

The Duke of Argyll denies and repudiates the "monstrous word foreign," which Mr. Gladstone used. "The Irish," said the Duke, "are not foreign to us, and we are not foreign to them. They are bone of our bone, and flesh of our flesh; they have contributed to our glory, great warriors, great lawyers, great statesmen," and "we wish to keep them united to us, members of our glorious dominions, under the security of our united lands."

Mr. Chamberlain, on the other hand, remarked inter alia:

There is one other point which I wish to put before you in reference to the Bill for the Better Government of Ireland. In the debate on the introduction, my friend, Sir William Harcourt —(laughter)—in a speech which was very witty, very amusing, and very good-tempered, said, among other things, that he thought he detected an Orange flavour in the arguments which I used. (Laughter). I think no man knows himself, but I don't think I have any sympathy whatever with bigotry—(hear, hear) —whether it is exhibited by the Orangemen of the North, or by the Roman Catholics in the South—(hear, hear)—but, on the other hand, I cannot blind myself to the facts of the situation. We have been accustomed, perhaps, a little too much, to talk of Ireland as if it were one people. There are two nations in Ireland—(hear, hear)—two communities, separated by religion, by race, by politics, by social conditions. There are in Ireland at this moment something like 1,250,000 of Protestants, most of them in the Province of Ulster, a great number in Dublin, and others scattered up and down the country in little groups, everywhere working for their existence, by becoming the centre of honest, praiseworthy industry and enterprise. (Cheers). This minority; it is not a small one—(hear, hear)—it is one quarter of the whole population, and through good repute and evil repute, has been loyal to the British connection. (Cheers). It has been industrious, and it has been prosperous. Now they are bitterly opposed to this scheme, rightly or wrongly. Under the protection of the British Government they have lived on terms of amity with their Roman Catholic neighbours. They believe that their property, their religion—aye, and their lives—could not safely be trusted to a Nationalist Parliament in Dublin. (Cheers). For my part, I hate coercion, and I am not disposed to coerce these men by British soldiers. (Loud cheers). I am not prepared to disregard altogether their wishes and their feelings. (Hear, hear).

Digitized by Google

Let the Radical leader then correct a popular error, one on which Mr. Gladstone's Bills are unfortunately based. Let men thus learn that there are Irish and Irish. Some of these are of the same Hebrew stock as ourselves in Great Britain, and these share all our God-given blessings, because of their Israelitish origin. The rest are the majority, Canaanites and foreigners, who have no blessing from on high—are bigoted Roman Catholics, without energy, or industry, or capital, or wealth, or prosperity of any sort; but are "pricks in our eyes, and thorns in our sides," according to the Prophecies (Num. xxxiii. 55). These last are destined yet to disappear from the face of the Israelite earth, because they refuse to serve Israel, and are accordingly by emigration, famines, and misery, disappearing from Ireland at a rapid rate, as we have lately shown (Isa. lx. 12; Jer. xxx. 11). Mr. Gladstone's proposed legislation, then, is based on defective, and partial information; it is opposed to Scripture, and to the facts of the case. It is distasteful to the majority even of the Liberal party, if they would only vote according to their conviction, and not according to the demands of that "hero-worship" so common in our day. We are confident, therefore, that these Bills are doomed to defeat, and that we shall never see Ireland separated from the sister island, since both are, in fact, now the abode and God-given property of Israel. God's blessing is on that race, defying the power of the enemy to effect the ruin of His people, and the disruption of a nation whose future (being Israel) is not to be one of division into fragments, but of national rehabilitation, till the world itself—and therefore Ireland—shall acknowledge that "the kingdom and dominion, and greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven" is theirs, because they are "the heir of the world," according to the prophecies (Dan. vii. 22—27; Rom. iv. 13).

A FRENCHMAN'S LAMENT.

Our readers have probably noticed in The Standard of April 24, the Paris correspondent's remarkable statement respecting M. Paul Bert's experience on his way out to Saigon, to take up his appointment as "Resident-General for Tonquin and Anam." He lamented that on his road out he saw nothing but evidences of Britain's power, nothing but the Union Jack, nothing but the English language everywhere. The correspondent's words were these:—

Paris, Friday night.

M. Paul Bert seems to have been greatly distressed at the evidences of English enterprise which he everywhere met with in his progress to the extreme East to assume the post of Resident-General for Tonquin and Anam. At a reception given at the Saigon Palace, he declared that he was doubly thankful to reach a town where he saw French faces and heard the French tongue, because his patriotic feelings had lately been exposed to a severe trial. "From Port Said," lamented M. Paul Bert, "England alone reigns by her language and her commerce. Everywhere I saw her flag waving—at Aden, Colombo, Singapore, and even in the Suez Canal, that work created by a French genius with the money of Frenchmen." In an address to the Saigon Chamber of Commerce, M. Paul Bert affirmed that the greatest anxiety of his administration would be to furnish French commerce with means of action under cover of a necessary protection.

The fact is, M. Paul Bert never realised, before he travelled to the East, that God had given to the British people the possession of the Gates, according to the prophecies. The Gates at the Suez Canal, at Aden, at Colombo, at Point de Galle, at Singapore, at Labuan, and at Hong Kong, all being God's gifts to Israel, they are naturally in the grasp of the British, who are the House of Joseph. Consequently, we hold the supremacy of the sea, the dominion of the Eastern Ocean highways of the world, immense territories in the East, like India, Ceylon, the Malayan Peninsula, North Borneo, and Sarawak, with the stupendous commerce and resultant wealth thereof. But the French, who are not Israel, therefore lack the Gates, the wealth, the commerce, and all the rest. They grieve and sorrow for the terribly discouraging fact, but Israel properly praises the Lord for His pity, love, and kindness towards His chosen ones (1 Chron. xvi. 13). The Frenchman, very wisely, selects two points, whereby our world-wide supremacy is maintained—namely, first, the prevalence of our English language; and next, our world-wide commerce. Where the language goes the race which speaks it has previously gone; and as to commerce, that follows the flag, and brings wealth in its train. M. Paul Bert thus noticed two of the crucial tests of our Israelitish origin, for he declares, that in the Eastern world, from the Suez Canal to the coasts of China, our language is becoming the vernacular, or lingua franca, of mankind—"England, alone, reigning there by her language." Also, that by her commerce, she was testifying to her possession of God's blessing to the children of Israel of "the power to get wealth, that He may establish His covenant which He sware unto their fathers, as it is this day" (Deut. viii. 18).

M. Bert means to signalise his administration by furnishing French commerce with means of action, under cover of a necessary protection. To protect French commerce in time of war with Israel, the French must obtain some "Gates." But where can she hope to find them? Israel has them all! Egypt is hers, the Red Sea is a British lake! Perim owns the meteor flag, and Aden is a British fortress. The French cannot obtain Socotra, for we have forestalled the foreigner, and the mighty Continent of India and Ceylon, with all the islands thereof, have given in their adhesion to the British raj! Does France covet a hold upon some Gate in the Straits of Malacca? She cannot have it, because the thin red line surrounds Penang, Malacca, and Singapore, and the territories contiguous thereto. North Borneo shuts out the Frenchman, for the Union Jack has obtained all that long sea-board in peace. How, then, can M. Paul Bert hope to "furnish" French commerce "with means of action, under cover of a necessary protection?" Without "the Gates" the thing is simply impossible, for God has given them all, without exception, to His people Israel—the British! God's gifts to His people, and His denial of them to France, are best illustrated by M. Bert's lament about the Suez Canal. It was the work of a Frenchman, paid for by France, but it is truly the property of Britain; is situated on soil protected by her flag, and forms the ocean highway for her multitude of ships voyaging to her possessions in the far-off East, South-east, and South. British shipping constitute nine-tenths of the vessels which use this wondrous channel! In short, the Empire of the world (with the commerce thereof) is not for France! It is reserved, by the decree of God Himself, for His people Israel, and the British, being Israel, enjoy the same because He is faithful and true. In regard to Saigon itself, M. Paul Bert will find, on enquiry, that three-fourths of the commerce of that very French port is carried on in British bottoms. The French mail ships must be deducted from the computation, however, because they are heavily subsidised by the French Government, and could not keep the seas, except for such help. The French faces M. Bert sees at the seat of his government, are only office-holders, and apart from these the representatives of France and its civilization are almost all priests.

Digitized by Google

M. Paul Bert's words remind us of those of Mr. Hepworth Dixon, published in the BANNER, so far back as vol. iii., No. 123 (on May 7, 1879), p. 194. Our readers, probably, have forgotten them now, and we shall, therefore, venture to repeat them here. "It appeared that the Chinese minister in London told Mr. Hepworth Dixon that a Russian agent, at Pekin, had shown him a map of the world before he started for England, in which the British territories, as compared with Russia, 'seemed no bigger than a leaf compared against a tree.' But on his journey from Canton to Southampton, the minister had learned to understand, that what the Muscovite showed him was the land-Empire, not the sea-Empire, and that the lesson of his map was altogether wrong. In fact, from Canton to London, he had never been out of the Queen's dominions, never beyond the sight of her flag, and the cover of her guns! At Hong Kong, English ships and English troops; at Singapore, English ships and troops; at Point de Galle, English ships and troops; at Aden, English ships and troops; at Port Said, English ships; at Malta and Gibraltar, English ships and troops; and at Southampton, English ships and troops! In all his journey of 10,000 miles he had never once seen the Russian flag. The tree was nowhere. The leaf seemed to cover all the earth. By this ubiquity of the flag, men's minds are thoroughly impressed. Ours is an Empire on which the flag never droops."

So far Mr. Hepworth Dixon. We feel that M. Paul Bert has had the same experience as the Chinese minister, and that from Port Said to Saigon he has seen nothing but English ships and troops, but has wholly missed the sight of French ships or French troops. In short, he failed to see French faces at all, or to hear the beloved language of his Belle France, and hence he had sorrowfully to acknowledge the fact, that Israel is destined to dominate the earth, and therefore, is already in possession of the East, and of the route which leads to it, past the fortified doors of "the Gate of her enemies." Israel, praise ye the Lord!

"THE BRITISH PROTESTANT" BRINGS FORWARD A FRESH OBJECTION.

THE Rev. James Ormiston, rector of St. Mary-le-Port, Bristol, is the able editor of The British Protestant. He has in his leader to the May number (29) just given the world a new reason why people should reject Our Identity, and that reason in duty bound we proceed, without delay, to examine. It appears in the article on "Who is on the Lord's side—who?" on pp. 68 and 69 of the magazine, comparing the "crime" of Great Britain in 1829, when the Catholic Emancipation Act was passed and Roman Catholics were admitted to Parliament, with the iniquity of the backsliding children of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob in desiring an earthly sovereign instead of the Lord Jehovah their King. The writer quoted Hosea xiii. 11, and pointed out that the king God gave Israel was given to them in His anger. "With what result?" "Why that in the issue the kingdom was divided, and civil war brought ruin and wretchedness on the land."

The editorial continues thus, admitting (1st) that Israel was divided in respect to the kingdom, and continued divided, "while the surrounding heathen swooped down upon the divided posterity of the patriarchs, putting them under perpetual tribute." This admission puts upon The British Protestant the burden of proof that the divided portion of the kingdom of Israel afterwards reunited, and since the Babylonish captivity have, as "the descendants of Abraham," ever since been "kept free by divine interposition from complicity with idolatry." We defy the rev. editor to establish proof of such re-union! and failing that, we beg to tell him that the presumption of continued separation which he admits, must prevail; and that there can be no argument founded on his hypothesis, till he shows us that both the houses, now in separation, "have been divinely kept free from idolatry." Herein Mr. Ormiston must fail, because his hypothesis is flatly contradicted by the Scriptures of truth. What he wrote was this:—

> And, let it be well remembered, Israel stood in relation to Jehovah upon conditions essentially superior to those on which rests the favoured Protestant kingdom for which, both as Christians and patriots, we plead to-day. With the theory that Israelites and Englishmen are identical terms we need scarcely here observe we have no sympathy. On the contrary, we maintain that the descendants of Abraham, ever since the Babylonish captivity, have been divinely kept free from complicity with idolatry; whereas, guilty England for ages before the Reformation, and now, at a period three hundred years later, has entered into covenant with "the abomination of desolation," and, with full knowledge of the consequences, has forwarded the schemes of "the Man of Sin," and promoted the interests of "the son of perdition" at the expense of that blessed Word of God which is the secret of all our national prosperity and the palladium of our civil and religious liberties.

When the editor of The British Protestant has proved that the divided kingdom was re-united, we shall be able to grapple with his argument; but as it is, we prefer to abide by the Scriptures which speak of Ephraim and Judah as two separate nations or peoples up to the time of the end, and of their re-union just before the united restoration takes place, as Jer. iii. 18, Hosea i. 11, Ezek. xxxvii. 15—28, and other Scriptures prove. But as Mr. Ormiston quotes Hosea xiii. 11 with approval, we may do so also without impropriety in reference to Ephraim or the House of Israel, the burden of that entire prophecy. There we find (chap. viii. 11) that Ephraim's sin was always idolatry. "Because Ephraim's hath made many altars to sin, altars shall be unto him to sin." "Ephraim is joined to his idols; let him alone" (chap. iv. 17). These verses and Hosea xiv., passim, prove that idolatry was to be Ephraim's or the Ten Tribes', constantly besetting sin; and therefore if Mr. Ormiston will only realise the fact that the two Houses of Israel and Judah are still in separation, he will perceive that while Judah is, as he justly says, "divinely kept from complicity with idolatry," at the present time, Ephraim (or the British people, as we believe them to be) must, on the other hand, be showing, as he affirms we do, strong leanings to idolatrous worship, after the manner of the Romish sorceress. This fact is really an Identity, but does not in the least upset our case, if only the truth be grasped that Israel and Judah are not yet re-united but are separate peoples still.

But we have something more to say to the rev. editor of The British Protestant. He declares this country is "guilty England"; guilty, ages before the Reformation, and guilty still; because of our wicked furtherance of the schemes of "the man of sin," and because of our promotion of the interests of "the son of perdition." What then, we ask, prevents our instant destruction as a nation? Why are we not visited at once with the wrath of God? The writer of the article has a ready answer. "We have the blessed Word of God, which is the secret of all our national prosperity, and the palladium of our civil and religious liberties." What! Is the bare possession of the Bible a shield against the wrath of God?—a sort of saviour and redeemer to protect our guilty and polluted nation from the consequences of our horrid insult to the King of heaven, by reason of our dealings with the Romish harlot? Where does Mr. Ormiston find that strange doctrine laid down in the Holy Scriptures? The Jews once had the Word of God; did it protect them? How come we, being so vile and wicked a nation, as alleged, to have that "blessed Word of God"? Who gave it to us? Surely Mr. Ormiston knows it is the gift of God? And if so, how is it God has given it to a rebellious, idol-worshipping nation such as we have been for three hundred years, and as we were for "ages" before the Reformation too? Does God reward iniquity in such a way as this, and give His choicest gifts to idolaters, to a guilty, Gentile, non-Israelite nation, and that for ages? Nay! We ask what God Himself says regarding His Word, and to whom alone He declares He gives it.

Digitized by Google

Let Mr. Ormiston turn to Psa. cxlvii. 19, 20, and read. "He showeth His Word unto Jacob; His statutes and His judgments unto Israel. He hath not dealt so with any nation, and as for His judgments they have not known them." This is decisive! That blessed Word of God is God's gift! and He gives it only to Israel, but not to a Gentile nation at all, such as Mr. Ormiston supposes we British are! The Bible is God's gift to the British, because they are Israel; just as "our national prosperity and our civil and religious liberties" are His gifts for the same reason. The fact that we are an idolatrous race, ever making many altars to sin, thus causing altars still to "be unto us to sin," does not affect and never has affected, God's promises one iota! Nay, because we are vile He sends us His Word, to cleanse us by the blood, and because of Our Identity He graciously leads us to repentance, and gives more grace to us because of our election. With these Scriptures before him, how our opponent can reconcile the fact of our possession, nationally, of God's most blessed Word, and of His gifts to us of civil and religious liberty, with our supposed Gentile origin, we cannot see.

But it may be asked why God took His oracles from the custody of the Jews, and why He entrusted them to Israel, admitted to be an idolatrous race (just like the British), making many altars to sin, and finding consequently altars to be unto them an occasion to sin? The Jews were deprived of the Scriptures, with the kingdom of God as well, not because of idolatry at all, but because they put the Son of God to death. Matt. xxi. 33—46 teaches us that. Turning from the Jews, therefore, the Lord sought the other House of Israel, (innocent of that awful crime) as Isa. lxv. 1 declares, a chosen nation to bring forth the fruits of the kingdom, because it is Ephraim by name and by engrafted nature too (Gen. xli. 52). God's grace and Holy Spirit given to that House, will be yet the cure for Israel's inbred sin; and as Hosea xiv. teaches us, God will cure her. "From Him is her fruit found." Then Ephraim in penitence (God given) will cry, "What have I to do any more with idols?"

Such being the case, as the Scriptures plainly present it to us, we may assure our antagonist, the editor of The British Protestant, of one thing—namely, that his views are in direct contradiction of the Word of God; and if his teaching could prevail, it would lead not to that popery which he so vehemently and faithfully opposes, but to downright infidelity and atheism and rejection of the Word, as utterly unreliable and false. Historically, our opponent is wrong; for he supposes the Jews to be All-Israel now, freed from idolatry; and he ignores entirely the separate existence of the House of Joseph, which history affirms. Theologically he is wrong too; because he imagines that our possession of the Bible acts as a charm, protecting our nation, and is the cause of our prosperity and liberty besides; whereas God's Word should teach him that we have all God's blessings, including the Bible, simply and solely because we are His redeemed people, blood-bought Israel, and because God is a faithful God, as He represents Himself to be in the Holy Scriptures, performing what He has promised to His own.

Our opponent describes Him to be a God who is faithless to His promises and oath regarding the gift of His Word, and unmindful of His people, whom by the very name of Ephraim He declared He would not cast off; but would "redeem, save, increase, prosper, bless, and restore to His favour," as it is here this day (Zech. x. 6—9). Therefore, Israel, praise ye the Lord!

THE "FAMILY HERALD" AGAIN—NOW AS A BLIND WITNESS.

(Continued from page 194.)

PART II.

In race, we rule over a mixed population of at least equally singular complexity. Great Britain itself comprises the Gaelic Scot and the Cymric Welshman—the one, by-the-way, usually a Presbyterian, and the other a Wesleyan—as well as the true Anglo-Saxon Englishman; while it has hitherto long governed the Roman Catholic and Celtic Irishmen for the most part as a practically subject race. Among European stocks, the Queen reigns over Frenchmen in Lower Canada and the Channel Islands, over a semi-Italian, semi-Arab population in Malta and Gozo, over Spaniards in Gibraltar, over Germans and Danes in Heligoland, over Dutch Boers at the Cape of Good Hope, over mixed communities of varied origin in Trinidad, Mauritius, Cyprus, and Demerara. Of our non-European subjects the name is Legion. We act in India as earthly providence over Hindoos, Mussulmans, non-Aryan aborigines, and Central Asiatic peoples like the Ghoorkas and the Assamese. The Chinaman owns our sway in Hong Kong; he crowds as a coolie into the Straits Settlements and the Australian towns; he cooks dinner for the Anglo-French British subjects at Port Louis, and he sweeps out the office for the wealthy merchants of Penang and Brisbane. Malays recognise our sovereignty at Labuan and Malacca; negroes obey us at Sierra Leone, Lagos, and the Gambia. The North American Indian is our vassal in Manitoba and British Columbia; the Eskimo owes us a shadowy allegiance among the ice and snow of the Arctic Circle. In South America we have Indian subjects in British Guiana; in Central America the descendants of the Mayas do us homage in British Honduras. The frizzy-headed Papuan is now our fellow-subject in New Guinea, the Maori in New Zealand, the Polynesian in Viti Levu. Nothing perhaps could more impress upon the minds of our black subject races an idea of the ubiquitous power of the British Empire than the common experience of the East Indian coolie who sails from Bombay or Madras in an emigrant steamer for Trinidad or Jamaica. He leaves behind him in his native land black races, Parsee, or Hindoo, or Mussulman, or Hill Tribes, ruled over by a mere handful of white Christian Englishmen; he crosses the sea by an almost endless voyage right athwart the Indian Ocean, and stops a while to coal at Cape Town, where he finds black races, negro and half heathen, still ruled over by a similar handful of white Christian Englishmen. He goes on once more, traversing the whole breadth of the South Atlantic till he arrives at last at his West Indian destination. There he comes again upon the self-same phenomenon—a black race, the imported and Christianised African negro, ruled over by yet another small handful of white Christian Englishmen, exactly as in India. Could anything more forcibly impress him with a sense of the greatness, the ubiquity, the all-pervading power of the English people? He has girdled half the world in length and breadth, and yet, wherever he goes, he meets for ever with the one picture of the intrusive Briton ruling by sheer force of mental superiority over a countless horde of helpless black dependents.

For, after all, the actual numerical force of Englishmen which holds in check and sways this mighty external empire is something absolutely insignificant and almost absurd. It stands to the total of the subject races in something like the same proportion as that which the British Isles themselves bear to the entire area under the Queen's sovereignty. The surface of Britain itself—including Ireland—amounts in round numbers to no more than a hundred and twenty thousand square miles. The area of the entire empire amounts to nearly nine million square miles. In other words, Britain rules a territory, roughly speaking, seventy-five times as great as itself. If you were to take seventy-five Englands, seventy-five Scotlands, seventy-five Waleses, and seventy-five Irelands, and stick them altogether side by side, you would have an area just about equal to that of the whole existing British Empire. In the same way it is probable that our British race, as a whole, the wide world over, amounts to about ninety-five million souls all told. But of these more than half, or some fifty millions, inhabit the United States of America, and belong therefore to a distinct and separate political organisation. The lesser half of our race, which still remains British in name and allegiance, is chiefly crowded into the United Kingdom itself, with a population of about thirty-six millions. Four millions more inhabit the Dominion of Canada, and three millions live in the Australian Colonies. Only about two million English altogether are therefore left to keep in check the vast subject population of two hundred and seventy millions in the various dependencies inhabited chiefly by black or coloured races. India, in particular, with its two hundred and fifty million people—more than double the number which Gibbon estimated for the Roman Empire in the zenith of its power—has a British-born population of only ninety thousand souls. In other words, ninety thousand Englishmen form the whole ruling and directing class for a country as big as eleven Englands, Irelands, and Scotlands; a population considerably less than that of Brighton administers a population more than six times as great as that of the whole United Kingdom.

Digitized by Google

These diversities of condition among the subjects of the Queen of course imply equal diversities in the kind of organisation by which they are managed. Britain itself has its Imperial Parliament, in which the Colonies and dependencies are not represented, but which nevertheless can legislate in the last resort (to a certain extent) for those Colonies and dependencies without their consent. Thus only the British Isles themselves are in the fullest and truest sense self-governing; even in the freest Colonies the Imperial Government still retains some right of veto and some power of interference for imperial purposes. Next to Britain itself in political position come the Colonies like Canada, which enjoys Home Rule—having their own Parliaments elected by themselves, their own ministries, responsible to themselves, and an ornamental figure-head Governor-General, who merely represents the Sovereign for ceremonial purposes and takes no real part in the legislation or administration of the country. From these a gradual descent leads down to the Crown Colonies, mostly managed from the Colonial Office, and governed by officials appointed from Downing-street—aided by a legislative body, sometimes nominated by the governor, sometimes, in whole or in part, elected by the people. Last of all we come to India, which is administered through the Viceroy strictly as a conquered country, the natives having absolutely no voice of any sort in the direction and management of their own affairs. . . . .

We are the citizens of no mean city, the arbiters of the destiny of a countless multitude. Our empire is at once the largest and the least consolidated ever known. It behoves all of us therefore to do our best to acquire a fair working idea of the component elements which go to make it up in all its aspects. . . . The very width of our operations—fighting to-day in the Soudan, yesterday in Burmah, to-morrow in Afghanistan, or New Zealand, or Zululand—has so accustomed us to take everything with easy carelessness that we seldom nowadays seriously ask ourselves what land we are going next to invade, or where lie the islands we are next to be driven by circumstances to annex. Familiarity has bred contempt, and the addition to our empire of two new countries, each as large as France, during the last twelve months passes almost unnoticed in a country already provided with enough territory to cut up easily into another Europe.

ISRAEL'S CHURCH AND STATE AND DISESTABLISHMENT, AS VIEWED BY THE IDENTITY.

A Lecture by Philo-Israel.

(Concluded from page 193.)

PART IV.

The Reformation in the 16th century here, brought back the Church to its original state of obedience to God, and that movement was in no sense a dissent from the Church of Israel, but a restoration and purging of the Church of Christ from deep and disgraceful error. There is to-day once more, I am sorry to know, a cloud of error spreading over the Established Church of God in Israel's polity. This, if it deepens till the enemy actually enters into our stronghold "like a flood," will make no difference in the nature of the Church, but only in its condition. It will still, as when idolatrous and pagan, as when rebellious, as when sensual and polluted, drunken and degraded, as when Roman Catholic, be the Church of Christ, because the Church of Israel; but it will be that Church invaded by the enemy as by a flood, and its cure must be not destruction and outcasting, but by the only remedy which will avail—namely, the uplifting by the Lord Jehovah-Jesus Himself of a standard against that enemy which can never fail to cause him to collapse and flee, vanquished by the Son of God, who is the King of Israel, and chief Shepherd of her Church as well!

And here, my friends, let me admit that the visible Catholic Church of God, which is the Church of England, presents at the present moment many and serious blots upon her fair face. She requires a fresh reformation whereby to purge herself of many grievous faults and errors which have lately crept into her system ecclesiastical. She shows a tendency to go back to "altars" which have ever made Ephraim to sin (Hosea viii. 11). Popery and priestcraft seem to have charms for her again which the Reformation was supposed to have utterly banished. What then is the true remedy for this lapse? Surely God's Word does not here leave us comfortless! We are assured in Isa. lix. 19 that "when the enemy shall come in like a flood (therefore he IS to come in!) the Spirit of the Lord SHALL lift up a standard against him." We have also the gracious promises before alluded to of Jer. iii. 15, xxiii. 4, wherein the Lord engages to "set up shepherds (over the remnant of His flock gathered out of all countries) which shall feed them, and they shall fear no more, nor be dismayed, neither shall they be lacking, saith the Lord."

The means whereby this great and salutary change shall be effected in His people and in their spiritual guides we have indicated to us in the Old and New Testament alike, in Jer. xxxi. 33, 34, and in Heb. viii. 10—12, wherein the Lord said, "This is the covenant that I will make with the House of Israel; after those days, saith the Lord, I will put My law in their inward parts and write it in their hearts, and will be their God and they shall be My people. And they shall teach no more every man his neighbour and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord; for they shall all know Me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them, saith the Lord; for I will forgive their iniquities, and I will remember their sin no more."

When this glorious, gracious promise shall have been completely fulfilled, then will the Church of England, being the Church of Israel and of God, be pure and holy in the Lord, and it will embrace within its folds all those godly men who now dissent from its teaching for a time, or refuse to conform to its discipline and order also for a time. Then it will indeed again be the Church of every member of the State and will embrace again within its folds "the whole House of Israel," from one end of the Empire to the other. All her sons and all her daughters "shall then see eye to eye, when the Lord Jehovah shall bring again Zion." I know that the prayer of every heart which hears me to-night responds with the longing, earnest cry, "Even so come, Lord Jesus, come quickly!"

In confirmation of the views I have ventured to submit to you, that this ancient institution, which is as old as Israel and is certain to last as long as Israel, will survive the present vigorous assaults of its enemies, you have only to note the wonderful defence both political parties in the State have begun to make in its favour. The Conservatives almost to a man are in the Church's favour. Many Liberals are rallying to its side. Such strong Liberal nobles as the Dukes of Westminster and Bedford, Lord Selbourne, Earl Grey, Mr. Thomas Hughes, Mr. E. P. Bouverie, and others are rising to support it. The cry from every quarter is that the Church is in danger, and the cry is eliciting a response which will emphasise the value of the Church to Israel's body politic and enable it to survive the storm, warning it at the same time to set its own house in order by removing all its abuses and so disarming the hostility of its enemies.

Digitized by Google

In the midst of all the dangers and shortcomings of the national Church at the present time, there is one point I for one never can, as an Anglo-Israelite, concede to those perhaps here this evening, I suppose, who love the Church, but yet plainly despair of her continuance because of her sins. I cannot admit that because of her faithlessness, idolatry, and ritualistic, semi-Popish declensions just now, she can, or ever will, be destroyed or disestablished or cast off by her God; and why? because she is the Church of His people Israel. Has He ever acted so in the past with His nation or His Church? The nation lapsed into gross idolatry and paganism once for 1,000 years on end. Then into Romanism for 900 years. Did God cast her away for ever? Nay, did He not declare, "they should be as though He had not cast them off"? (Zech. x. 6). When they had become purely Gentile in appearance, heathen in religion, and in departure from the living God, did He not say, "I am a Father to Israel, and Ephraim is My firstborn"? (Jer. xxxi. 9). "God changes not, therefore the sons of Jacob never have been, and never can be, consumed" (Malachi iii. 6).

The Church of England, being the Christian Church of Israel, will be reformed, scourged perhaps, and renewed, but destroyed and cast off—NEVER! Therefore, my friends, let us cheer up; let us have no fears for the future of our beloved Church, which is the visible Church of Christ established in this land. She is Christ's own Church, and we have His promise to protect her: "Lo, I am with you always, even to the end of the dispensation. Amen." He loves her since He is her Head and she His body, and "for His Church He gave Himself that He might present it to Himself a glorious Church, not having spot or wrinkle, or any such thing, but that it should be holy and without blemish" (Ephes. v. 27).

The Church of England, it is true, is far from answering to this lovely ideal to-day, but this is what God intends her yet to be when washed and cleansed, and shall we imagine for a moment that the Lord means to cast away and disassociate from His kingdom on the earth that Church which He united with it when He called it, "the kingdom of GOD," the kingdom spiritual and temporal both, of which the Lord Jesus Christ, the King of Israel, is KING?

In conclusion, let me put before you the advice of a Baptist minister to his fellow dissenters on the subject of the Establishment. It is sound, and liberal, and good advice, and it points a moral to my lecture to which you, my friends, will do well to take heed. He said:—

God has always identified the peace and prosperity of any nation with its recognition of the Gospel of His grace. It may be very easy for political zealots, under the sacred name of religion, to denounce the union of Church and State, because they are not members of the National Church themselves; but, Dissenter though I am, I cannot forget that in ancient times, in modern times, in all nations, cities, parishes, and societies, that historic fact of Holy Scripture has reproduced itself, as verified in God's providence, that while the Ark of the Lord continued in the house of Obededom the Gittite, the Lord blessed Obededom and all his household. As a Protestant nation, with its Established Church, this country has been one large house of Obededom; and the ark of the Lord has been preserved here by means of the union of Church and State, the State being pledged to protect it (let not this be forgotten); while, by the co-operation of the State with the Church, the Holy Bible has been placed in every parish, and read in every church—(who can say that God will not bless His own word, because read in a church?) a result which could not otherwise have been secured. From the Established Church, let it be remembered, all other Protestant Churches have sprung. This Church, though far from being perfect, has been the means of giving all other Protestant Churches life and being. They are all offsets from her; and shall we now, because our privileges are increased, and because our chapels and people have become many and mighty, shall we, the Nonconformists of England and Ireland, turn round, ungratefully and wickedly to destroy the source of our existence, and kill our own best protectors? I cannot consent to it.

I never can be a party to the overthrow of the Established Church, because that Church, incorporated as it is with the State in legal recognition of the Sovereign of the country, as its chief Representative, I look upon as the strongest and the only secure bulwark against the inroads and the restoration of the tyrannical Popish power. Behind that Church, as behind a great breakwater, our several vessels rest at anchor, and take in their passengers for the better land. It stands as a defence to us; it leaves us full liberty to carry out the convictions of our own consciences, and allows us to enjoy, undisturbed, the benefit of our own several endowments. Let us treat it, then, as we would have it treat us.

It appears to me that we shall be guilty of disloyalty to our Sovereign the Queen, as well as of a disregard for God's truth, if we lend ourselves to help to overthrow what our Sovereign has solemnly pledged herself by an oath to God, of which her whole people were the witnesses, to uphold. And to uphold it for ever was, be it remembered, the very purpose for which the present Royal Family were called to the throne of this Kingdom. The very basis of her authority, be it remembered, in Ireland as well as in England, is the Protestant Religion. Overthrow this as established, and the Queen's rightful authority is gone. In short, the Queen's authority is, in my belief, our security—and our ONLY security alike against popery, priestcraft, and tyrannical power.

Brother Nonconformists, I earnestly call upon you to be wise in time; do not commit yourselves to a course that must prove self-destructive, at the bidding of worldly and ambitious politicians, lifting themselves into power, by making capital out of your religious prejudices; not because they care for religion, but because they would hold the helm of Government, and steer you in whatever direction it best suits their purpose. Weigh well, then, the reasons I have given why you should go with me in my determination to cut off my right hand rather than give a vote that shall help to the overthrow of the Protestant Religion as the established religion of the United Kingdom, and our only sure national defence.

I must not conclude my lecture without a word to explain why God's people Israel must and should have a Church united to her State in the counsels of God. Let me explain in a few sentences. What does Israel exist for? To bless all the nations, all the families, and all the kindreds of the earth. How? With spiritual blessings chiefly. Now how can a State apart from a Church do that? The State exists to govern, to conquer, to acquire dominion, to obtain the Gates, the Heathen Empire, and the commerce of the world, and to give purely secular education. How will this convert and bless the world? The State wants a spiritual coadjutor, a Church in union with it, married to it, tied to it; to do the work of the world-wide evangelist and universal missionary. Israel, in short, must have the Church tied to it to carry out the Lord's parting precept to the Church of His people Israel. What was that? He gave but one direction just as He was ascending—only one! what was it? Read St. Matthew's Gospel, chap. xxviii. 18—20, "Go ye therefore and make disciples of all nations"; St. Mark's xvi. 15—18, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature"; St. Luke's, xxiv. 47, "Repentance and remission of sins must be preached in His name among all nations"; St. John's xx. 21, words addressed to all the disciples, "As My Father has sent Me, even so send I you;" in the Acts, chap. i. 8, "Ye shall be witnesses unto ME . . . unto the uttermost parts of the earth."

The Lord's parting precept, His last injunction, was to do "foreign missionary work for Him." How can the Church do that without the State's protection? Impossible. Here then is the Church's raison d'être, and this is why the Church must be Catholic (not Roman Catholic) in union with Israel's State, to be aided by the power thereof, and thus carry out the Lord's command "to blossom and bud and fill the face of the world with fruit"—Gospel, gracious, blessed, evangelistic fruit. And this is the secret, friends, of Israel's "State and Church;" of their union; also the secret of the utter impossibility of the Church ever being by man disestablished, in defiance of God's purposes and plans, recorded in the Scriptures of His truth, the Word of the living God. For in it He united the two—the State to protect the Church, and the Church as the visible sacred agency to convert and bless the whole world by and through the Spirit of Jesus Christ our Lord.

Digitized by Google

BRITANNIA'S BIRTHRIGHT.

By S. T. A.

GRAND promises of God to patriarchs made, 2 Cor. i. 20.
Rooted in glory, can ye ever fade? Rev. xxii. 16.
His own dear Son; and as the stars of heaven Gen. xxii. 17.
Or ocean's sands, the countless seed were given,
Gen. xxxii. 12.
Founders of "many nations," girdling earth, Gen. xvii. 4.
From far off Syria, cradle of their birth; 2 Kings xvii. 6.
Preserved in Britain, aye, the cov'nant race:— Jer. xxxi. 10
Not Judah's progeny in them we trace, { Matt. xxvii. 25. / Jer. xxv. 9.
But Joseph's line, who erst in Egypt famed, 1 Chron. v. 2.
Then chief of Israel's tribes by Jacob named, Gen. xlviii. 15.
E'en "birthright" father of Britannia's nation, Jer. xxxi. 9.
Whose church and laws are based on Revelation, }
Her throne yet Judah's throne by lasting consecration. }
Jer. xxxiii. 17.
She witnesseth for Christ o'er all the world Isa. xliii. 10-12.
Where'er her lion banner is unfurled, Ezk. xxxviii. 13.
While Great Jehovah, watching o'er her realm, Psa. cxxi. 4.
In His own might her foes shall overwhelm. Isa. liv. 17.
By her still faithless Judah He restores Isa. xviii. 1-7.
To ancient Zion and the Eastern shores, Ezek. xxxvii. 21.
And as His exiles crushed the Cæsar's power, Jer. li. 20, &c.
So His "great nation," at the appointed hour, Gen. xii. 2.
Shall rise victorious o'er the Northern foe, Ezek. xxxviii. 22.
That the whole world God's sovereign sway may know
Ezek. xxxviii. 23.
When He Himself goes forth His foes to fight, Zech. xiv. 3.
Then wars shall cease, bright day succeed to night,
Mic. iv. 3.
JESUS Himself shall reign, and Judah own the light.
Luke i. 32.

MISS COX'S LECTURE AT CLIFTON.

ON April 30th (and again at Bath on May 6th) Miss V. M. Cox delivered a lecture on "Present Day Problems, and how our Identity solves them." The lecturer was very well received by appreciative audiences, but as the address will soon be published in these pages, we do not on the present occasion say more regarding it than that the lecturer alluded to ten distinct problems of the present day, which are practically insoluble save by the help of Identity knowledge. These problems are—1. Imperial Federation; 2. The Eastern Question; 3. The Church Difficulty; 4. The Sabbath; 5. Foreign Missions; 6. Our Relations towards the Jews; 7. Our Relations with Russia; 8. Egypt; 9. The Home problem and our "Unemployed"; and 10. The Irish Difficulty. These burning questions were ably and exhaustively dealt with, and it was clearly shown that the Identity is the only solvent which can explain them all.

THE RIVER EUPHRATES.

"AND the sixth (angel) poured out his bowl upon the great river, the river Euphrates; and the water thereof was dried up, that the way might be made ready for the kings that come from the sunrising" (Rev. xvi. 12, Revised Version).

The following extract is from the Family Herald, March 6th, 1886:—"The once mighty Euphrates seems likely to disappear altogether. For some years past the river-banks below Babylon have been giving way, so that the stream spread out into a marsh, until steamers could not pass, and only a narrow channel remained for the native boats. Now this passage is becoming obliterated, and, unless matters improve, the towns on the banks will be ruined, and the famous river itself will be swallowed up by the desert."

Should the above be correct, then we have an important sign of the times in the literal drying up of the "great river." The Euphrates is represented as a barrier, or hindrance, and also as symbolical of the Turkish power. The literal disappearance of the one, signified the absolute decay of the other, and thus will be removed the greatest impediment to the conversion to Christianity of countless multitudes in the East. J. T. G.

IDENTITY OF THE LOST TRIBES.

LAST night a lecture was delivered in the Mechanics' Institute, Darlington, in connection with the local British-Israel Association, by Mr. J. G. Taylor, of Newcastle, his subject being "The Secret of England's Greatness." Mr. W. T. Ord presided. In the course of an address, which indicated considerable Biblical, secular, historical, and archæological research, Mr. Taylor argued that England's greatness, the fact of her succeeding in every part of the world where other nations failed, was not simply the reward of our pre-eminent Christianity, but because of the identity of the English race with the Ten Lost Tribes of Israel, every feature of which nation we possessed, as laid down by the Word of God. He explained the great difference between the Jews and the Israelites; and observed that, at this moment, the Jews were subject to atrocities in Russia and other countries worthy, or unworthy, of the Middle Ages; they were a people without a land, and in Palestine we had a land without a people. Then why did not the Jews go back to their country and get rid of persecution, and the Church try to restore them, seeing that she had always looked forward to the restoration of the Jews as the turning point of the world? It was because the Jews had not only to be restored along with, but by, the Ten Tribes; and until those Ten Tribes were found, no human power could restore the Jews and rid them of their persecutors. While such great advantages to the Church hinged upon the restoration of the Jews, that restoration itself hinged upon the discovery of the Ten Tribes. The objection usually taken by the clergy was that they could not expect to find a race enjoying the advantages of the English which was under the curses, like the Jews; but he contended that in the absence of identity no curse could lie, and if the Israelites were cursed they could not have hidden, as they had done, their nationality. As in the case of the Jews, the dreadful effect of the curse lay in the unmistakable identity of that scattered nation over the face of the globe, wherever it was to be found. The secret of England's greatness was not because we were a very religious or righteous people, but because the Lord's Word was true. In that also lay a surety; for it not only accounted for the unique position of England to-day, but guaranteed the continuance of it.—The lecturer was accorded a hearty vote of thanks. From The North Star, January 28th, 1886.

Correspondence.

CHURCH AND STATE.

To the Editor of "The Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—I am glad to find from the Rev. D. Hanan's letter, published in your paper of to-day, that he and I hold the same view on the important subject of Church and State. I was not quite sure whether we both gave the same interpretation to the expression, "The Kingdom of God," but it appears that we agree in regarding it as the kingdom of Israel; and that being so, if the kingdom of Israel consists, as he says, of a union of Church and State, I still think that there can be no separate existence of either within it, any more than, as I have said before, there can be a separate existence of a man and his head.

The reference that I made to Nonconformist Churches in my last paper was directed against the idea which some people seem to entertain, that because the Church of God is established in Israel by the statute law, Churches not so established are not the Church of God. I do not say that there can be no Church without State connection, or no State without Church connection, but merely that there cannot be such a separate existence of the two in Israel, because God has decreed that there shall not, so that Britain being Israel, it is impossible that the Church of England can be disestablished, because she is the National Church, the sanctuary of God which He has established in the throne of David, "like the earth, for ever" (Psa. lxxviii. 67—71).

This is the point which I thought that Mr. Hanan did not state with sufficient clearness. His remarks led me to suppose that he considered that the Church of England might be disestablished as the Church of Ireland had been.

Yours truly,

14th April. J. M. GRANT.

THE Annual Meeting of the Metropolitan Anglo-Israel Association fixet for June 9 (see advertisement in back page).

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed: — "Philo-Israel," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

SUBSCRIPTIONS	£ s. d.
Annual Subscription for one copy weekly (including the Twelve Double Numbers) post free	- 0 7 6
Two Copies (including Double Numbers) -	- 0 13 6
Three Copies " " " "	- 1 0 4
Four Copies " " " "	- 1 5 6
Six Copies " " " "	- 1 16 4

Post Office Orders to be made payable at the head office, St. Martin's-le-grand, London, to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C., and W. H. GUEST & Co. 29, Paternoster-row, London.

The Editor cannot undertake to return rejected MSS. unless stamps for the purpose be sent. Parties requiring an answer should enclose a stamp.

Contents Bills and Show Cards may be obtained on application to the Publishers.

Advertisements should be sent to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

Prepaid Advertisements are inserted at the rate of 30 words for 1s. 4d.

PREPAID "WANTED," &c., ADVERTISEMENTS, 27 words, 1s.; 4d. every additional line.

THE Coming Struggle. Gladstone, the Anti-Christ; Sounding of the Seventh Trumpet, the British Nation (Israel), the Throne of God. Price 6d., by post 7d. By John Blair, 4, Middle Craigs, Stirling, N.B

PUBLISHED BY ROBT. BANKS & SON,
RACQUET COURT, FLEET STREET, E.C.

WORKS BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

The Geography of the Gates. With Map and six full page, and one double-page, Illustrations, printed on plate paper. 208 pages, in handsome cloth, gilt Price 3s. 6d., post free 3s. 10d.

Our Identity with the House of Israel. Price 4d. Reprinted from "Clifton Chronicle Letters"

The History of the House of Israel; How they were Lost, and How they were Found, Told for the Children. Price 6d., cloth 1s.; post free 7d. and 1s. 1d. Fourth Edition. Eleventh thousand.

Philo-Israel's Leaflets. Four pages Crown 8vo Price 1s. 6d. per 100, postage 2d. No. 1.—"The Identity of the British with Lost Israel." 2.—"The Glory of God." 3.—An Address to British Seamen. 4.—An Address to British Soldiers. No. 5.—The Communion of the Body and Blood of Our Lord Jesus Christ Viewed in the Light of Our Identity. 6.—The Bible and the Jew. 7.—The Jewish People. 8.—Lo-Ammi; or, the Gentilisation of Ten-Tribed Israel. 9.—The Atonement. 10.—Is Our Identity Evangelical, or Non-Evangelical in its Tendency? No. 11.—Cui Bono? No. 12.—The "Thoughts" of God Towards Israel, Judah, and the Gentile Nations. 13.—The Teutonic Theory—Is It True? 14.—An Address to the Police Force of Great Britain. 15.—An Address to Israel's Missionaries and Their Supporters. 16.—The One Seed, Christ. 17.—An Address to Israel's Electors. Price 1s. 6d. per 100.

A Resume of the Scriptural Argument, proving the Identity of the British Race with the Lost Ten Tribes. Price 1d.; 6s. per 100. New edition now ready.

Identity Leaflets. No. 1.—ISRAEL'S MISSION (Psa. cxlvii. 19; Mark xvi. 15; John iii. 16). By V. M Cox. No. 2.—HOPE FOR EGYPT (Isaiah xix. 20-25) By V. M. Cox. 100 copies post free for 1s.; 9s. 6d. per 1000. Price 1s. per 100, assorted packets 1s. 2d.; 8s. 6d. per 1,000 (nett). Carriage free 4d. extra.

An Elementary Digest or Sketch of the Chief Facts and Teachings of the Great Pyramid of Egypt. Adapted to the Unlearned and Unscientific. 56 pages, Illustrated with Diagrams, price 4d., post free 5d. 10th Thousand.

Thoughts for the British Folk.

Suggested by PHILO-ISRAEL.

No. 1.—Multitudinousness.
No. 2.—The Gates.
No. 3.—The Nation and Company of Nations.
No. 4.—British Wealth.
No. 5.—The Rulers Over Many Nations.
No. 6.—The Universal Creditor.
No. 7.—The Ever-Continuing British Monarchy.
No. 8.—The Scattered People at Home in Every Climate
No. 9.—The Queen, Lords, and Commons.
No. 10.—The Unconquerable Nation.
No. 11.—The Fatally Destructive Race.
No. 12.—The Isolated Nation.
No. 13.—The Nation Which Belts the Earth.
No. 14.—The Emancipators of the Slave
No. 15.—The Christian Nation.
No. 16.—The Ten Commandments.
No. 17.—The Asylum for the Foreign Refugee.
No. 18.—The Possessors of the "Sign."
No. 19.—The Universal Missionaries.
No. 20.—Testimony of the Book of Common Prayer.
No. 21.—Church and State, and also Disestablishment.
No. 22.—Our Poor Laws.
No. 23.—The Labour Question is an Identity Question.
No. 24.—Emigration.

R. BANKS & SON Racquet-court, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

METROPOLITAN ANGLO-ISRAEL ASSOCIATION,

PALACE CHAMBERS, 9, BRIDGE STREET, WESTMINSTER, S.W.

THE ANNUAL PUBLIC MEETING

WILL (D.V.) TAKE PLACE IN

EXETER HALL, STRAND, ON WEDNESDAY EVENING, JUNE 9, AT 7 O'CLOCK.

ADMIRAL BEDINGFELD

Will take the CHAIR. The following Gentlemen are expected to take part in the proceedings:—

The RIGHT REV. BISHOP TITCOMB, D.D.; REV. D. HANAN, B.D. (Rector of Tipperary); REV. A. J. J. CACHEMAILLE, M.A. (Vicar of St. Mary, Oldham); REV. R. DOUGLAS, M.A. (Vicar of Kidsgrove, Stoke-on-Trent); REV. EDWARD DENNY, M.A. (Vicar of Taracar, Ireland); SURGEON-GEN. J. M. GRANT, M.D.; W. H. PETERS, Esq., J.P.; A. OSBORNE, Esq.; E. W. BIRD, Esq. (Philo-Israel, Editor of the BANNER OF ISRAEL); D. A. ONSLOW, Esq., J.P., &c.

ADMISSION FREE. TICKETS for Reserved Seats, 1s. each, may be obtained on application to the SECRETARY; at Exeter Hall; of R. BANKS & SON, Racquet Court, Fleet Street; GUEST, HAYWORTH & Co., 29, Paternoster Row; or at the Doors. J. J. SHRUBSOLE, Hon. Sec.

The ANNUAL MEETING of the MEMBERS of the ASSOCIATION will take place at PALACE CHAMBERS, WESTMINSTER, the same day at Three o'clock. Members desirous of taking Tea at the close of the Meeting are requested to communicate with the Secretary.

N.B.—On and after June 24th next, the Office of the Association will be 5, WILTON ROAD, OPPOSITE VICTORIA STATION, S.W.

Dr. JOSEPH WILD'S WORKS

NEW EDITION JUST PUBLISHED.

THE LOST TEN TRIBES

Price 3s., post free 3s. 3d.

The FUTURE of ISRAEL and JUDAH.

Price 2s., post free 2s. 3d.

The Special Commissioner of the Christian Word, writing of Dr. Wild, says:—"On Sunday evening I had to fight my way into the Congregational Church of which Dr. Wild is the minister. He hails from America, and is quite the sensation of the hour. There was no standing room anywhere, and as I made to the door I met many coming away However, I had made up my mind to hear the Doctor, and hear him I did. It seems that the subscribers have a door to themselves; I made for it, and luckily found a chair, which I wedged in under the platform. The Doctor prayed, and then we had a sermon about Revelation, containing much that was very effective, if not about his text, at any rate about that mysterious part of Scripture from which the text was taken."

Vols. of the "Banner of Israel"

May be had, bound in specially-designed dark blue cloth covers, handsome gilt side and back, at the following

VOL. II. ... ... 7s.
VOLS. I., III. to IX. ... each 8s.

London: Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court Fleet-street.

SEE FIFTY REASONS WHY THE ANGLO-SAXONS ARE THE LOST TEN TRIBES. Price 6d., post free 7d.

The Land of Espousals.
The Testimony of Language.
The Transfer of the Kingdom from Judah to Israel.
"Shiloh:" Its Interpretation.
Ireland not Missioned from Rome
Israel and Judah Distinct.
Israel's Blindness.
The Standard Goes to Israel.
Our Royal Standard.
The Princess Tephi.
Ireland a University for Europe
The Apostle Paul in Britain.

Robert Banks & Son, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C.

NOW READY, in Handsome Cloth Binding, Gilt Lettered, price 2/6, post free 2/9.

The New Revelation;

OR,

Daniel and John Revealed.

Being the First Treatise on these Books Founded on the whole Bible.

With a Table of Collateral Events.

By JOHN T. CROSTHWAIT. C.E.,

Trin. Coll., Dublin.

The object of this book is to show what the Holy Scriptures say, as a whole, regarding the history of the world, from Nebuchadnezzar's time down to the time of the Second Coming of our Lord."—Extract from Preface.

London: GUEST, HAYWORTH & Co., 29, Paternoster Row, E.C.

HUNDREDS OF THOUSANDS of Persons, from all parts of the world, will visit, during the next few months, the COLONIAL AND INDIAN EXHIBITION at South Kensington. Each Visitor should obtain from Messrs. Willing's Bookstalls at South Kensington Station, a copy of "THE PENNY POPULAR GUIDE TO THE EXHIBITION." There are, however, hundreds of thousands who will be unable to see this marvellous collection of the Arts and Products of the British Empire. These also may form some idea of the extent and beauty of the Exhibition by reading this Guide, which may be obtained of Robert Banks and Son, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, London, E.C. Post Free to any part of the Postal Union for 2d.

The Book of Hebrew Roots:

Showing the Ideal Meanings and Various Ramifications of the Principal Hebrew Radicals.

By BURLINGTON B. WALE.

Post free 4s.

R. Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

ETHELINE.

A New and most effective Remedy for CORNS.

Perfectly safe and harmless. Is very easily applied. Cures in a few applications, without the slightest pain. Everyone troubled with either Corns, Warts or Bunions, will find relief by using ETHELINE.

To be obtained of all Chemists, or post free for 14 stamps, from—

J. LLEWELLYN, CHEMIST, COWBRIDGE.

GENT'S 18-C. ROLLED GOLD SOLID DOUBLE ALBERTS.

We offer to all readers for the next few weeks an Albert of most marvellous value, at the merely nominal value of 2s., so as to induce further custom. They are finished equal to a chain costing £7. This chance should not be missed. As we have only a limited number we can sell at this absurdly low price, we can supply no person with more than one. P.O.O.'s to be made payable to Ward and Co. Orders by post receive immediate attention.—Messrs. A. WARD & Co., 331, Old Kent-road, London, S.E.

EXTERMINATION OF ALL CORNS & BUNIONS

Guaranteed by using Gardner's Patented Corn and Bunion Exterminator, an ingenious little instrument which can be used by anyone. Painless in operation—"never fails." Price 1s. The highest Surgical Testimonials can be seen and operations successfully performed in all peculiar cases, bad nails, &c., at the Inventor's, who will send the Exterminator direct for 13 stamps.

C. GARDNER, Chiropodist, Kendal.

Printed for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C. PUBLISHED BY GUEST, HAYWORTH & Co., 29, PATERNOSTER-ROW, WEDNESDAY, MAY 19, 1886. All rights reserved.

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."

(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India.)

"And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the Forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS of the EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. X., No. 491. Entered at Stationers' Hall.] WEDNESDAY, MAY 26, 1886. [PRICE ONE PENNY.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
Our Imperial Inheritance	205
The Scattered Children of the Mother Country	206
The Colonial and Indian Exhibition Points to Federation	207
A Visit to Tara. By Rev. Denis Hanan, B.D.	207
A Few Considerations and Practical Suggestions Respecting Imperial Federation. By J. Thomson	209
"God's England" and "Idolatry"	211
A Hatter's Testimony	212
Correspondence	212

OUR IMPERIAL INHERITANCE.

THE Times newspaper is quite alive to the fact that we British folk have received an inheritance which is imperial, though no acknowledgment is made that the giver of the inheritance is the God of Israel. On February 26, a leading article on the state of Ireland contained the following noble sentiments, in which the expression occurs that is so singularly in accord with our Israelitish views. The writer said:—

To the British Empire public credit—and that not of the sort only which is weighed and measured in Lombard-street—is the breath of life. To renounce the duty of protecting loyal subjects, of securing the property and the liberties of every class under the rule of the Queen, and of maintaining undiminished the imperial inheritance we have received as a solemn trust is to shake the structure — social, political, commercial, industrial, and financial—at its basis.

The idea which underlies these words is this:—that the separation of Ireland from Great Britain, under any pretence whatever, is an impossibility, and cannot take place because the sister island is part of our "imperial inheritance" (given us, we know, by God Himself), and if we renounce the idea of keeping it as part of our heritage the whole of our body politic will be likely to fall into ruins. The separation which Mr. Parnell seeks and desires is an impossibility, because the Irish are our close neighbours, and we shall not get rid of the Irish difficulty by merely letting the island go, as the Parnellites wish.

There are, besides, still a million and a quarter of loyal Protestants in Ireland who desire nothing less than separation from the British crown; and there are, also, half a million of "loyal and orderly" Roman Catholics, living now under the terrors of the National League, whom it would be a crying sin and national shame to abandon to the control of their enemies of the League. Then there are the commercial and pecuniary interests and rights of thousands of our Irish, English and Scottish commercial classes who have property in Ireland, who own land and mortgages there, who have a stake in the Irish railways, fisheries, canals, and other property in Ireland, to whom some defence and protection are due, by reason of the fact that they have all embarked their capital in Irish investments on the faith of British protection in the final resort, to defend them from insurrection and a reign of terror.

Separation, in Mr. Parnell's sense, is impossible, because the first effect of it will certainly be civil war between the Protestants of the North (joined by every Irishman who has anything to lose), and the disloyal and separatist faction whose supremacy is sure to lead to confiscation of property, national ruin, and bankruptcy. To prevent civil war and the reign of terror, at our own Gates, we must be always prepared for armed intervention, and the reconquest of the South and West of Ireland; a state of things which will be more burdensome than firmness to our national rights, and loyalty to the imperial inheritance which God has given us in the union of the two isles of the West, where Israel's lot has been cast by the Lord the God of Israel Himself.

Mr. Giffen, who belongs to the Statistical Department of the Board of Trade, has been giving to the world his ideas of the "economic value" of Ireland to the Empire. These appear in the March No. of the Nineteenth Century, and they are not complimentary to the worth of Ireland, as it exists to-day, to the British Empire:—

"To let Ireland split partnership," says Mr. Giffen, "would differ in no way in kind, and comparatively little in degree, as far as business is concerned, from letting the Isle of Man remain a separate State."

That is to say—Ireland, to-day, is of about the same value to the British in the United Kingdom as the Isle of Man is to the Empire, and it would be quite as safe to let her become independent as it is already to yield a mock independence to the Isle of Man or the Channel Islands. Of course this is very humiliating to the Irish. But in other aspects the matter is not as stated. Ireland, from its size and contiguity to Great Britain, would, as an independent and hostile country (which it is already), be a most important factor in our nation's existence. It would make our life intolerable. It would become the field of hostile action from America. In case of a European difficulty it would become the focus of hostile action from our European enemies, which would force us to overpower and reconquer the land in sheer self-defence, just as we have lately been forced to unseat Theebaw from his throne and take his country, because it was being used by the French to the detriment of our Indian interests, and the trouble was becoming intolerable.

Digitized by Google

But independently of all other considerations we know that the separation of Ireland from Great Britain cannot take place, because it would involve the fresh division of Ten-Tribed Ephraim into two nations, for which there is no provision whatever in the Word of God. Ireland is one of the two "isles of the West," where Israel is destined to glorify the Lord, and the rupture of the union existing among the tribes is forbidden by the Scriptures, since Ephraim, one and indivisible, as the House of Israel, is destined to be united to the House of Judah, and so become one nation and one kingdom in the hands of the Lord Jehovah their God.

Let our friends, then, be of good cheer! Ireland will not divide off from Great Britain, though the Rev. Mr. Baxter, of the Christian Herald, is quite convinced that such will be the case. That there is to be trouble there to the House of Israel is obvious, but that trouble will, it seems to us, be used by the Lord for our ultimate benefit as a nation; and, therefore, even in respect to the present state of Israel's "imperial inheritance," Ireland, we are inclined to say to our readers, let Israel praise the Lord!

THE SCATTERED CHILDREN OF THE MOTHER COUNTRY.

THIS is the appropriate name given by the Times of April 22 to the Colonies of the British people; and "the gathering of peaceful rivalry" which is under exhibition at South Kensington now, is declared by the writer to be one, "the like of which the world has not seen." That great "show" is, in truth, the representative of the industries of "a nation and her company of nations." It embraces the productions, not only of the Colonies, but those also of Her Majesty's Indian Empire. There, under one roof, are collected "the works of the scattered children of the Mother Country"—an impressive sight, and one which should remind the visitor that the Empire embraces races living under the most diverse conditions—in the four quarters of the earth, in all climates, from the Frigid to the Torrid; but uniformly happy and prosperous everywhere, under the government and protectorate of "the Christian nation" occupying these little "Isles of the West," which is, nevertheless, the mistress of the seas and the coming ruler of the earth.

Few Englishmen, said the Times, know what their Colonial Empire is, what it is becoming, and with what startling rapidity it is advancing in every form of wealth. Ignorance fosters indifference, and if there is so little sense of pride in being in community with an immense Empire, this is due to the imperfect sense of proportion which a great exhibition skilfully arranged best serves to correct. It will be interesting to note the advances which Victoria and New South Wales are making in all the fine arts. But we own to feeling more genuine interest in the solid products of colonial industry, in the admirable workmanship of articles of common use, and, above all, in the copious stores of the great primary necessaries of life. Wheat, fine timber, rare and useful metals, wool, and silk are, and must be, the basis of true national riches. All other forms of wealth are precarious, somewhat factitious, or only symbolical. By these substantial things nations live, and our colonies abound with most of such articles. Favoured lands above most others, able to support a vast native population and to supply the wants of the Old World, are the group of countries which are represented at South Kensington.

Our readers will see from the above, and, better still, from the Exhibition itself, that God has already given "the company of nations," which rejoices to own the sway of the Queen-Empress of Britain and Hindostan, that attribute which is truly Israelitish, and which enables this country to enjoy all the other blessings God has given to His people Israel, and, therefore, to us. "Every form of wealth" is the gift of God to these the daughter-nations of our race! He has, indeed, given us British "the power to get wealth," by endowing us with a Federation of States which is rapidly becoming, as the Times declares, the possessor of "every form of wealth!" Wheat, fine timber, rare and useful metals, wool, silk, "and mines" of coal, wherewith to work our metals and to drive our steamships; these are God's good gifts to our "scattered children" and ourselves. Therewith He enables us "to get wealth," and thus He "establishes His covenant which He sware unto our fathers, as it is this day." Besides these blessings the Lord has endowed our race (because we are Israel) with homes for these, our "scattered children," in countries "favoured above most others," because situated chiefly in the Temperate Zones. They can thus support vast nations and immense European populations in comfort, affluence, and prosperity. These supply our wants, and take our surplus people as emigrants to lands just like their own, where there is room enough and to spare for countless millions. But are these the sum total of God's good gifts to us His people? Nay, not so! Zech. x. 6—10 provides us with a rich cluster of fresh blessings, spiritual and temporal, which belong by promise to Ephraim-Israel, and are now in their enjoyment rudimentarily. There is "salvation" first for the House of Joseph (ver. 6), the promise of restoration specially made to them as a people (ibid.); "mercy" and restoration to them, God being to them "as though He had not cast them off" (ibid.). Might and strength are promised to Ephraim in ver. 7. "Rejoicing as through wine" is to be their portion; nay, the rejoicing which is "in Jehovah" (ver. 7). Their gathering and their increase is guaranteed in ver. 8; their scattering as colonists in far countries is God's promise to them (as it is this day), and there "they live with their children and turn again" or "return," as they are doing now (ver. 9). The Lord Jehovah promises to "strengthen them," and they are "to walk up and down in His name," which we take to be a promise of Christian prosperity and consistent Christian national conduct, which God Himself will regulate and direct (ver. 12). Surely these national, material, and spiritual blessings are tokens of divine favour towards us His people Israel, which make the question, Cui bono? a ridiculous impertinence, unworthy of the questioners, and proof of their ignorance not only of God's Word, but of the patent and notorious facts of the day.

The particulars of the earthly and temporal blessings God has given to our race in our own nation and in our "company of nations," as noticed by the Times, are in very fact the exact counterpart of the gifts God promised to Israel obedient in Gen. xlix. 22—26; Deut. xxviii. 1—13; xv. 6; and xxxii. 13—17. They consist, as we have seen, of cereals, of timber of the best sorts, of the precious and the useful metals, of wool and silk, to which we may add coal, and all the manufactures in which coal plays so immense a part. "The precious fruits brought forth by the Sun, the chief things of the ancient mountains, and the precious things of the lasting hills, the precious things of the earth, and the fulness thereof, the blessings of the deep that lieth under, the blessings of the breasts and of the womb." These are Israelite blessings God gives to them exclusively that confer multitudinousness, and, therefore, world-wide colonies, cereals, gold and silver, iron, copper, lead, and tin, coal-mines, timber of all sorts, sheep and oxen, wool and silk, and the manufactures depending on all these, with wealth and commerce as the great result. All these wondrous blessings given by God to His people only, the Times truly declares are the inheritance of the British folk and of their "scattered children" now exhibiting their gifts in South Kensington, to God's glory. We trust our home readers will all find the means and opportunity to visit and study this great Israelite "show," and learn from it the lesson God means to teach us—namely, that He has been faithful to His promises to the Fathers, and that He has performed His oath "to Abraham and his seed for ever," as it is this day. And seeing that, the result must surely be, that Israel will praise the Lord—their faithful, covenant-keeping God!

Digitized by Google

THE COLONIAL AND INDIAN EXHIBITION POINTS TO FEDERATION.

We think the leading idea of the mighty "family party," which Her Majesty herself inaugurated in the bright sunshine of Tuesday, May 4, 1886, is "National Confederation." It brings into one splendid focus the whole of "Her dominions," and enables us to estimate their greatness and their significance. This Empire was born in the time of Queen Elizabeth as an outland Colonial Dominion, and it has been growing ever since. There seems no likelihood of its ceasing to grow, till there are no more races and no more territory to be absorbed into its rapacious, all-devouring maw! In India it has assimilated 240 millions of heathen and Mahommedans. In Canada and the Mauritius we have over a million Frenchmen who admit Queen Victoria's sway. The Dutch are our fellow-subjects in the South African Colonies; Spaniards in the West Indies; Chinese and Dyaks are British by allegiance, in Hong Kong, Singapore, and North Borneo; Arabs, Africans, Jews, Parsees, Egyptians, Turks, and Syrians are the same in Aden, Bombay, Cyprus, Malta, and, shall we say, on the Suez Canal. The Empire is now knitted together and consolidated in a manner unknown when the Queen ascended the throne in June, 1837; for the electric telegraph has annihilated space, the railway has accelerated travel, and the ocean steam ships of the day have reduced distances, which required months to traverse before, to a matter, now, of weeks and days. "One of the most flourishing colonies of the Australian Continent bears the name of the Queen" (Victoria), "though it assumed it in the year of the great Exhibition, 1851; and its capital is named after her first Prime Minister," Lord Melbourne. "The colony of New Zealand did not even exist when the Queen came to the throne; and a general survey of the British Empire would show the enormous progress it has made, both in territorial extension and in political concentration, during Her Majesty's prosperous reign."

So far The Times of May 4. For ourselves, we look on the Exhibition, now in progress, as a providential help to the idea of that British Federation which God is rapidly bringing about. He is enabling men to see, by the wondrous show in Kensington Gardens, what astounding power and wealth are concentrated in the various portions of the British Empire; how immense is its strength in its multitude of men, how gigantic is its wealth in freeborn citizenship, united as one man in loyalty to the throne of David, a throne blessed of God like no other throne on the face of the earth, and situated in these "isles of the West," where the appointed place of Israel's domicile is fixed (2 Sam. vii. 10). The Exhibition, thus regarded, seems to us a rebuke and reproof to the idea promulgated by Israel's chief officer of State, whereby the Empire, so consolidated by the gift of God, may be shortly shattered at its head quarters; and Ireland, the sister island, be struck off and constituted a dangerous, alien, hostile neighbour, ever ready to take part against Great Britain in her future times of weakness, when attacked by some foreign foe. Mr. Gladstone boasts that his Bills, for the separation of the legislatures of the two islands, have the sympathy and adhesion of some American States, and of the Canadian Frenchmen. But how comes it, that from no pure British centre, in the Colonies or India, has a word of sympathy with his plans been forwarded? Melbourne, Sydney, Brisbane, Adelaide, Toronto, Ottawa, Kingston, Auckland, Cape Town, Calcutta, Madras, Bombay, Colombo; all these great cities, in the Colonial and Indian Dominions of the nation, are silent! Mr. Gladstone's plans are discredited already, and cannot, for a moment, mar the grandeur of the testimony that the Exhibition will give to all the world this year, that by God's blessing the British Empire is one, and indivisible (a nation and a company of nations), which is like the ever advancing tide that knows no ebb. Well may The Times observe, that "when the Queen opened the Exhibition, her subjects felt, that in the gathering of their representatives to greet the Common Sovereign of all, the unity of the Empire passed from the region of dreamland and moral aspiration into that of visible, material, and tangible manifestation."

In all these things we may plainly see the hand of God. Even in Mr. Gladstone's vain attempt to break the Empire into pieces, we may note the rebuke God's hand has sent him in the events which took place at Kensington Gardens on May 4. For the results of his efforts we have no fears, no anxieties. We see no hints in God's Word that Israel shall again be divided, impoverished, attenuated in these our "last days." We know, therefore, that Mr. Gladstone is foredoomed to disappointment and political disgrace, for he is manifestly fighting against his Maker, and will have to take the consequences of that rash attempt. "The isles of the West" are the locality set apart, in Isa. xxiv. 15, for Israel to glorify Jehovah; and shall Mr. Gladstone, by his puny effort, frustrate that Divine determination, and constitute one of these islands the property of a nation which hates God's people, and is to-day, as heretofore, "pricks in their eyes and thorns in their sides," according to the prophecies? It cannot and will not be! And knowing this, we praise the Lord, even for our present trials, arising from the doings of one who is troubling Israel (Josh. vii. 25).

A VISIT TO TARA.

By Rev. Denis Hanan, B.D.

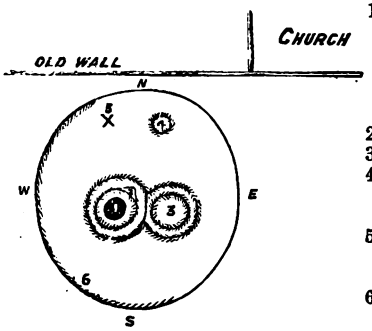
"The length and breadth of the Tomb of Tephi,
Accurately measured by the sages,
Was sixty feet of exact measure,
As Prophets and Druids have related."

Cu-an O'Cochlain, A.D. 1024.

The Hill of Tara is 24 miles from Dublin. A train from the Broadstone terminus (Dublin and Meath, &c., Railway), which leaves at 9.10 a.m. arrives at Kilmessan Station at 10.26 a.m.; the hill is about 2½ miles from the Station.

The country is flat, and although the hill is not high, it is said that nine counties can be seen from it. Mr. Petrie's words are graphic: "The Hill of Tara, though undistinguished either for altitude or picturesqueness of form, is not less remarkable for the pleasing and extensive prospects which it commands, than for the associations connected with it, as the site of the residence of the Irish monarchs from the earliest times."

Its value as a military position, even at present, is apparent, and its situation and capacity for defence, doubtless caused it to be selected from the earliest times as the residence of chieftains or kings who dominated the country by the sword. It is covered with earthworks similar to those which are common all over the country—viz., circular raths or forts, and also a long and narrow excavation is pointed out as the Hall of Tara.



A fence of stone, known as "The Old Wall," running from the churchyard across the hill, separates the Russell and Preston properties. It is only the earthworks on the former or Southern side, known as Rath na Riogh, or Cathair Corofin, to which the legends concerning Tea Tephi are attached. These at present consist of an outer ring, which encloses two central circular raths, and one mound of earth. The two raths touch one another, but it seems evident that that to the West was the first constructed, as the outer ring of that to the East has been cut into it in order to form the latter.

The older earth-work, or Western, has a double trench surrounding it, and the central part is raised: the Eastern is surrounded by one trench and is depressed in the centre. In my opinion the tomb, mergech, or receptacle, if it exists at all, is under the raised central part of the Western rath. The tradition of the locality is that it is not known under which of the many mounds, or raths, the princess lies buried. Mr. Petrie's research caused him to write (Petrie's "Tara"), "The next important monument noticed is that called Tea-mur: of this there is now no vestige, but its situation is pointed out as a little hill which lies between the two murs (septa) to the South of the Rath na Reogh, and the poem of Kinneth O'Hartigan indicates that it was 60 feet in extent and contained within it the sepulchre of the Milesian Queen Tea."

Digitized by Google

It is therefore necessary to give the reasons which cause me to think that the raised mound, now known as the Croppies' Grave, is the Tomb of Tea. Before I do so it may be well to mention why the rath is now so-called. During the rebellion of 1798 men who, when taken prisoners, could not be detained in custody, were marked by slitting open, or cutting, their ears: hence they were called "croppies." A body of these men defended themselves on the Hill of Tara, and fifty who fell were buried in a trench that was cut across the top of the central mound. At a later date the pillar-stone was moved from the mound upon which the kings were crowned, as stated above. It stands about 5½ feet high, and must be sunk at least three feet in the ground. It is round, and about five feet in circumference, and necessarily of great weight. Mr. Petrie says that it is granular limestone, but I do not think it is; it is harder than limestone. There are two circular seal-like marks on it, sunk about a quarter of an inch deep, and over them a rude and modern R.I.P.

1.—Rath of the King, known since 1798 as the Croppies' Grave, and on which the Lia Fail taken from No. 4 has been placed as a grave-stone.
2.—The Forradh.
3.—King Cormath's rath.
4.—The Crowning Mound on which the pillar Lia Fail originally stood.
5.—Site of a mound similar to No. 4, removed for top-dressing grazing land.
6.—The invisible and doubtful site of Tephi's tomb.

To return. The "croppies' grave" is the oldest and largest of the earthworks, and the most carefully constructed. It alone has the raised centre, and the size suits the traditional dimensions of the tomb. Section from Petrie's "Tara":—

Thus it will be seen that the central mound is 88 feet in diameter. Cu-an O'Cochlain's poem states that the tomb was 60 feet in circumference—i.e., 20 feet in diameter; supposing this to be the inside measurement and that the walls were, say, 6 feet, the whole 32 feet could be covered up in the 88 feet, and leave 28 feet of earthwork surrounding.

It is almost impossible to estimate the original height of ancient earthworks—probably they were at least twice as deep and as steep as they now are. The central mound in question is about 12 feet over the present level of the surrounding foss; if it was originally twice as high, there would be ample room for a lofty chamber under the super-imposed clay.

Mr. Petrie's statement is based upon a translation of a poem by Amergin, written in the sixth century, and given in the "Notes of the Annals of the Four Masters."

"A rampart was raised round her house,
For Teah, the daughter of Lughaidh;*
She was buried outside in her mound,
And from her it was named Tea-mur."

* The Rev. F. R. A. Glover states the Lug-haidh is Celtic for God's house.

The word translated "outside" seems to have given rise to the tradition that she was not buried under her house in the fortress or "cahir circular and strong." But considering the doubtful signification of the word—that it may mean the outside chamber of the Mergech, that this cahir alone could contain such a chamber, and that any other Tea-mur cannot be found—it seems an insufficient data upon which to conclude that "the grave, the Great Mergech, a sepulchre which has not been violated," does not lie under this the most remarkable of the Tara mounds.

A shaft or tunnel driven through the clay for 28 feet would settle the question, without injury to the mound, and there is no popular objection to the attempt being made. It is said that the consent of the proprietor and tenant would not be withheld; and there is every reason to suppose that if the funds were supplied, the Board of Works would lend their aid. I may add that if the measurement given meant 60 feet in diameter, such a chamber could be covered up, and I saw indications which caused me to think that a shaft of but 14 feet would touch masonry. It is only by a shaft driven in from the side that the rath can be opened, as an entrance from the top would disturb the croppies' grave. Although many such earthworks have been opened from the top and vaults found in them, they have been of small size in comparison with that mentioned in the poem, which must necessarily be vaulted and therefore approachable from the side only.

From an archæological position alone great interest must attach to this most ancient mound with which such a well-preserved tradition is connected. Although the study is but recent, Ireland has been a fruitful field. The Royal Irish Academy has in its museum a collection of ancient gold ornaments said to be unrivalled. It may be safely said that any excavation at Tara would add largely to the knowledge already obtained. When cairns were opened in the same County, although they had evidently been entered before, much of interest was obtained; this mound is almost certainly inviolate.

The historical question, who was Tephi? would probably be solved. The apparently somewhat similar mounds in the Crimea, opened by the Russian government, have given no uncertain information. The name, the history, the faith, and the date of the death of the entombed are known; the stones recovered from these mounds are carefully preserved in the museum at St. Petersburgh. It seems that the scientific efforts of the Russian government are far in advance of ours! If the identity of the Princess could be established, light would be thrown upon the personality of Ollamh Fodhla and Simon Burgh, who are said to have accompanied her.

Something of the mystery of the "Lia Fail," or stone of destiny; whether that is it which, huge and unwieldly and deserted, is so called at Tara; or that which portable and enshrined, is connected with the destiny of the Anglo-Saxon race and empire, might be revealed. A chamber of the size recorded could hardly have been constructed to hold one body; its size and its name (Mergech, a Hebrew word meaning receptacle) point to the safe hiding of something more.

Ignorance of chronology and superstitious reverence have caused the supposition that the Eastern princess was the Blessed Virgin Mary, and that her tomb is to be found at Tara; this strange notion need not be further considered.

The tradition that the ark of the covenant is hidden there is common, but I cannot trace its origin; it seems to have been in existence long before the conjecture that Tea Tephi was King Zedekiah's daughter. That the ark disappeared at the time of the Babylonian captivity, was not taken to Babylon, and was hidden by the Prophet Jeremiah, is certain. Jewish tradition states that it will be recovered, but how and when this tradition became connected with Tara, I have not been able to ascertain. Tara is almost pure Hebrew for Torah. Torah means law, and the original tables of the law were enshrined in the ark, which was a large box of the hardest wood, covered inside and outside with thick gold plates, indestructible by age or climate.

Digitized by Google

A modern conjecture mentions the title-deeds of Jeremiah's prophetical purchase, but this is of no present importance.

In conclusion I desire to impress upon my readers that although the traditions connected with the Hill of Tara have received point and interest from the historical and Scriptural identification of the Anglo-Saxon race with Ephraim-Israel, they are in no sense the origin of that discovery. Any revelation made by archæological research might yield interesting corroboration; but the absence of any tomb, or the overthrow of the supposed identity of the Eastern Princess, or of her guardians, would in no wise weaken the totally independent evidence which witnesses to the faithfulness of Him, who has not forgotten His covenant with Abraham, His oath to Isaac, His promise to Jacob. And has not transferred the birthright inheritance of Ephraim, His firstborn, to a Gentile people.

March 30th, 1886.

A FEW CONSIDERATIONS AND PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS RESPECTING IMPERIAL FEDERATION.

By J. Thomson.

It was briefly shown in our recent article on the population and trade of the British Empire (Banner, No. 485), how vitally important to us are our relations to our Colonies and India. A few more considerations on the same lines, and the results they point forward to, may not be considered out of place at the present time.

We may supplement what was before advanced respecting trade, by quoting some more figures given by a writer in the Quarterly Review for April, 1885. It is estimated, he says, that "the United States now take from us goods to the value of about 8s. 6d. per head of their population; the proportion taken by Australia is £8 18s. per head of their population; the Cape, £4 10s.; and Canada, £2 2s." Thus it will be seen that our great Colonies are much better customers to us than the United States. In 1873 the value of goods exported by us to the Australian Colonies was £17,670,152, which increased in 1883 to £24,216,452. In the same period of ten years "India increased her purchases from us by £10,539,000," and now "buys from us far more than even the United States or any other country;" standing at the "head of the list of our customers." In 1884 we exported to "this poor despised country," British India, no less in value than £30,584,395. The Quarterly Review adds that, as once the Bombay Chamber of Commerce boasted, "India alone could supply England with all the wheat she needs." In 1873, the value exported was £167,690, which was increased to £6,088,814 in 1883.*

The most recent returns for the Board of Trade are for the month of March, 1886, and show that the "arrivals of wheat from India were very large, amounting to 746,000 cwt., against 598,000 cwt. in 1885, and 355,000 cwt. in 1884." It is also remarked upon as being "noteworthy," that the "total imported from India during the three months just ended, is only about 300,000 cwt. less than the quantity received from the United States during the same period; the figures from India being 3,242,000 cwt., and from the United States 3,529,000 cwt."

Thus everything indicates the vast importance to the Mother Country of her Colonies, and the great Dependency of India; and how desirable it is, that, our mutual interests being so great, our union in the future should become closer and more indissoluble. In 1859 the late Lord Lytton, speaking in London of the Australian Colonies, said: "It may happen that the time will arrive when the other Great Powers of the world will rise up against the venerable parent of so many children. If that period should ever arrive, I believe the Colonies will not be unmindful of the tie which binds them to the Mother Country. I believe their vessels will come thick and fast across the ocean to her assistance, and that voices will be heard universally among them, saying, in effect, that while Australia lasts, England shall not perish."

How this anticipation (if we may not call it a prediction), has, in a measure, been already realised, and proved in a way not likely to be forgotten, when England was engaged in Egypt, and was threatened also by her "foe of the North," is so well-known and so recent, that we need do no more than just refer to it. From both Australia and Canada willing offers of volunteered help came—an earnest of what may be expected to follow, if need be. Almost every day brings to light more indications of the affection and interests existing that bind together the great mother and her children in ties stronger and more enduring than adamant. At one time, not so very long ago, it used to be said (and even desired by some public men) that as our Colonies grew, they would separate themselves from us; either setting up for themselves, or, as it was anticipated in the case of Canada, join the United States. It was also said they were willing to leave us, and this was repeated so often, that people began to think it was true. But now no responsible person would make such statements, or be extensively believed if they did. On the other hand, we find that last year, at Montreal, the Prime Minister of Canada declared: "We want no independence in this country, except the independence we have at this moment. . . . We may govern ourselves as we please; we may misgovern ourselves as we please. If we are attacked, if our shores are assailed, the mighty power of England, by land and sea, are used in our defence." Sir Charles Tupper, the Canadian High Commissioner, speaking, if that were possible, even still more emphatically, said: "I regard the proposal for independence as the most fatal delusion—so far as Canada is concerned—that could be presented for our consideration. . . . I am not speaking mere sentiment; but I know, after spending twenty-nine years of my life in the Parliament of my own country—and I am proud to be able to say it—that no man would stand the slightest chance of securing election in any one of the Canadian constituencies—from Prince Edward Island to British Columbia—were he to advocate the disintegration of the Empire."

The questions now suggested are—"How is this distintegration to be avoided, and what must be done to make the union close and permanent?" Perhaps a solution to the problem is not at present possible; and this is hardly to be wondered at, seeing that the vital importance of the issues raised, is only just beginning to dawn upon the public mind. As already just remarked, a few years ago men of greater influence than wise statesmanship, either treated the subject with indifference, or opposed any measure by which the union of the Mother Country and the Colonies might have been strengthened, and thus the neglect of former years increases the difficulties now. But difficulties are not impossibilities, and when met have only to be conquered by energetic resolution, and not allowed to stand as "lions in the way" towards a desired end.

In his lectures on "The Expansion of England," Professor Seeley points out that there is an ambiguity about our use of the words "Colonial" and "Empire." Our Colonies differ from those of Greece and Rome, and our Empire is "not a congeries of nations held together by force," but is "in the main one nation, as much as if it were no Empire, but an ordinary State." We should, therefore, view our Colonies as a simple extension of the Mother Country—a view all the easier realised now that steam has bridged the intervening distance. We should thus think of England, not as this "right, tight little island," but as a country of vast extent, with ample space for Englishmen for many generations to come; and "if there is pauperism in Wiltshire and Dorsetshire, this is but complimentary to unowned wealth in Australia: on the one side there are men without property, on the other there is property waiting for men." But we still continue to think of a Colony not as part of our State, but as a possession belonging to it—an erroneous idea, to say the least, and to be combatted with wherever found. "If Greater Britain, in the full sense of the phrase, really existed, Canada and Australia would be to us as Kent and Cornwall." The emigrant who leaves Sussex or Yorkshire for Canada or Australia, does "but leave one part of Great Britain for another; he lives under the same flag, is protected by the same laws, has the same religion, language, and literature, and can indulge in the same brusque independence that characterises John Bull in his island home." Years ago the United States Judge Haliburton ("Sam Slick") took the same view, and ardently desired to see a close union between England and her Colonies. He complained that the Colonists had no nationality, no place, station, or rank, and observed, "The organization is wrong. They are two people, not one. It shouldn't be 'England and her Colonies,' but they should be integral parts of one great whole—all counties of Great Britain."

* Companion to the British Almanack, 1886, pp. 9—261.

Digitized by Google

To bring about this much to be desired and happy result, is a work for true Statesmanship, and the sooner it is accomplished the better for the highest interests of our race and of the world. One time the Colonies were a great expense to the parent State—only natural that it should have been so, as children in a family are to their parents—but now they are largely dependent upon their own resources, and looking for protection (mainly, if not only) to the British Navy if attacked by a foreign foe. And even in such a case, the interests are mutual; for our Navy is largely dependent on the friendly harbours of our Colonies. Were they in the hands of an adverse, or even neutral Power, we should soon experience a difference. We have the largest shipping interests in the world.* British vessels traverse every sea, and we are largely dependent (whether wise or unwise our fiscal policy) upon foreign supplies for our food. Humanly speaking, the Navy is the guardian of this commerce and chief security of our coasts from invasion. The cost of our Navy is sometimes complained of by political economists, but it is cheap, and would be still cheap if it cost treble what it does, so long as it is efficient, with such vast interests as ours at stake. In the event of war, it would soon be seen how valuable the Colonies would be to us, and we to them, giving them the protection of our flag; while, on the other hand, we should find numerous ports round the world "open to English fleets, but closed to those of an enemy." The Colonies at present, and perhaps for some time to come, may be comparatively defenceless as separate States; but as parts of the British Empire they are strong, "not only in material strength, but also in that moral power with which a free nation enriches and elevates her children." A hundred years ago, when our Colonies were hampered with foolish and iniquitous restrictions respecting trade, that great political philosopher, Edmund Burke, after asserting in Parliament that our hold on the Colonies is in the affection arising from common names, kinship, equal protection, and privileges, added: "These are ties which, though light as air, are strong as links of iron. Let the Colonies always keep the idea of their civil rights associated with your Government; they will cling and grapple to you, and no force under heaven will be of power to tear them from their allegiance." We have lost a good deal in not attending earlier to these words of wisdom and far-sighted patriotism; but we hope the nation is alive now to their truth, and that both in the Old Country and its Colonies, a strong and earnest effort will be made to work out the principles advocated by words like these.

Hence the idea of uniting Great and "Greater" Britain by Imperial Confederation. The suggestion is good, though at present necessarily vague; but the very entertainment of it seriously, presages a successful result. In 1884 meetings were held in London, presided over by the late Mr. Foster, M.P., and these led to the formation of an Imperial Federation League. Its chief object is to call attention to the importance of a closer union between the Mother Country and the Colonies. In order to influence public opinion, branches of this League have been formed at home and abroad; two of the most important being in the Cape Colony and at Montreal. "Let us only keep in mind," said Mr. Foster, "what we want—viz., an organization for common defence, and an official acknowledgment of the right of the Colonies to have a voice in the determination of foreign policy, especially when such policy directly affects their feelings or interests." As yet the League has not officially proposed any plan for Confederation, though private persons have ventilated various schemes, the most prominent feature in which is the assembly of a Supreme House, or Houses of Parliament, in which the Colonists should be fairly represented. The best and most definite suggestion to this end which we have yet seen, is that of Mr. Frederic Young, who is an earnest advocate of Federation. In a paper read at Amsterdam in 1883, he said: "Taking as a basis the present position and relation of England and her Colonies, it has been proposed that there should be an Imperial Senate consisting of 300 members—185 for England (and Wales), 25 for Scotland, 40 for Ireland, and 50 for the Colonies." The distribution of the latter would, "for the present, at least, be as follows:—20 for Canada and Newfoundland, 15 for Australia, 5 for New Zealand, 5 for the Cape Settlements, and 5 for the West Indies. The Ministry of the day would be drawn from the members of the Imperial Senate and the House of Peers, and these, as at present, would be the immediate and responsible advisers of the Crown. The Senate to sit in London, and its term of duration to be five years."

We agree with Mr. Young that "here is an admirable suggestion as the nucleus for the construction of an Imperial Parliament," though to one or two points exception might be taken. Thus we quite agree that England, being the most important, wealthy, and best educated, should have a full half of the total number of members; but we think 40 too many for Ireland. We should give it the same number as Scotland, because the latter is by far the more intelligent and loyal of the two countries. This leaves us with 15 members to dispose of. We notice nothing is said of the great Dependency of India, which, we think, should have some direct representation in such an Imperial Parliament—say, 12 representatives—reserving the remaining three for some countries similarly looking up to us for protection as does India, not at present within our calculations. Other details have to be considered, as the qualification of members and electors, for it is evident that a mere representation of numbers will not answer in this case. Intelligence and property must be allowed an efficient voice, or such a popular assembly would only intensify the existing bitterness and senselessness of party feeling, and be very injurious to vital imperial interests. We must leave these further details to be discussed when the outline of the scheme is better digested, and the public have become more familiar with the essential idea of Confederation. It may, however, here be noticed that if any such scheme is determined upon, Imperial and Local Questions would be separated, and each country would require to have its Local Parliaments—England, Scotland, and Ireland; the Colonies having theirs to manage their domestic affairs, as some of them already do.

The place of meeting would have to be finally determined upon after experience had decided which was the most convenient. London would certainly be the first to be tried, as it is at present the great centre of attraction. But if, by-and-bye, not only Egypt, but Syria comes under our protection, or has to be annexed, another centre of attraction, and one even more convenient to all the outlying portions of the Empire, might be found at Jerusalem; and thus while we are, as a people, looking chiefly after preserving and safeguarding our Empire,

* See BANNER, No. 482, p. 118.

Digitized by Google

we may, unconsciously, be working out the vast designs of Jehovah, and fulfilling prophecy, which avers that "out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the Word of the Lord from Jerusalem" (Micah iv. 2).

Other suggestions have been made, beside the one we have just noticed; as, adding a number of representatives for the colonies to our present Parliament; but which is open to several serious objections. Another suggestion, from the Marquis of Lorne, is that "Agents-General" of the Colonies should be admitted members of the House of Commons, "without the power of voting," and also "abstain from all debate save on extraordinary occasions involving the Imperial issues of peace or war;" which would almost reduce Colonial representation to a "pious fiction;" and finally, there has been "the moderate proposal that the Colonies should combine with England for purposes of Imperial defence;" which is simply the first step towards federation, and we wonder it has not been taken long since. There are doubtless other schemes afloat, and stirring a greater or less number of minds, and perhaps advocated or opposed with partizan heat. But the solution is not just yet; though it may be nearer than many suppose. The questions involved in the issue are most vital, alike both for the mother country and the colonies. Professor Seeley says, "Modern English history breaks up into two grand problems—the problem of the Colonies, and the problem of India;" and he adds that the great expansion of our race "has the effect of making English politics most bewilderingly difficult." Yes, indeed, to weak-kneed feeble politicians of the "Perish India" school; or of the type of the "Grand Old Man," who has so many admirers, who cannot spare a thought for the confederation of the Empire, and who would check its growth (if he could), as being already far too large for human management. Difficulties in such a case as this, involving the welfare of millions, exist only to be conquered; and by God's grace they will be. Every member of the Anglo-Saxon race is (or ought to be) more or less interested in this great question; and when it has taken permanent form, and exists in fact, and not theory merely, in future years it will be seen that the settlement of the relation of England to her Colonies was about the most important event in the history of this century.*

We have not mentioned the United States, so far, in our consideration of this subject; not because we did not think of them, but because when once the federation of England and her Colonies has become an accomplished fact, and is working well for their mutual interests, it will only be a question of time, and upon what conditions, when the United States shall be admitted to join, and become participators of the many undoubted advantages of belonging to a confederation of all the English-speaking States, or nations, throughout the world. When that is accomplished, the continued peace of the world will, humanly speaking, be secured; for no outside nation would dare to touch, martially, the weakest member of so mighty a confederacy. We need not now stay to enlarge upon the bearing all this has upon Our Identity. To every one it is surely self-evident; and must bring conviction of the truth to all who have refused to be convinced by anything else than the existence of a world-wide Empire dominating over all the other peoples and nations of the earth.

*See "Companion to the British Almanack" for 1886, pp. 10—14.

"GOD'S ENGLAND" AND "IDOLATRY."

Two remarkable paragraphs have lately appeared in the papers. The first was published in the Standard on April 16 or 17, addressed to "the Protestants of Great Britain and Ireland." The other was a letter on "Hero Worship," by B. B., in the Pall Mall Gazette of May 29, 1886. The letter was headed, "These be thy gods, O Israel," and was intended to charge the British folk with rank idolatry of Mr. Gladstone, when at Hawarden on Good Friday last crowds invaded the Church to see not Him of whom Pilate said, "Ecce Homo"! "not this man, but—Mr. Gladstone." The writer complained that that scene was pure and simple idolatry, and that the sad thing was that "there are no Iconoclasts." . . "If these be thy gods, O England, alas for thee!" is the writer's concluding lament, because, as he justly remarked, "Idolatry has but one end for idol and worshippers alike"! The other paragraph we give verbatim, because we can do so without offence to those who are not afflicted with the hero worship the Pall Mall correspondent describes. The address to Protestants was this:

To the Protestants of Great Britain and Ireland.—The Bill for Home Rule is aimed at the destruction of your liberty, religion, and country. It will pass the House of Commons, unless all Protestants unite in defence of their Fatherland. If passed, its result will be revolution and civil war. This is no party question. It is a great national danger, and nothing but union will save the Empire. God has given us priceless blessings. Will you not stir for your country, and for that liberty in Christ which you enjoy? Will you allow "God's England" to be trampled in the dust by her deadliest enemies? Then unite heart and soul in opposing this cowardly and cruel Bill. But it must be now or never. No excuse for apathy will avail hereafter. Remember, Union is strength, and God will yet deliver us if only we will ask Him, but if we reject Him, He will cast us off. Read Deut. xxvii., xxxiii., Prov. xxiv., 11—12, Dan. ix.

The writer of the above is evidently under the impression that the Irish Bills which Mr. Gladstone has introduced are somehow aimed at Protestants, and that unless all Protestants unite to defeat them they will pass, the Empire will collapse and revolution and civil war will be upon us! We had some idea when we read such expressions as "God's England" and "God will yet deliver us if only we will ask Him," &c., that the writer was an Anglo-Israelite. But further consideration convinces us that this is a mistake. He is only a "blind witness" to the fact that this nation is "God's England," and that God will certainly deliver us whether we ask Him or not, because of His unconditional promises to the Fathers. The writer is wrong in saying that nothing but union will save the Empire. The Empire is saved already, because it is God's kingdom, and He has sworn to bless, increase, and save it.

"God has given us priceless blessings," is the writer's declaration, and without doubt he is right. He has indeed given us all the blessings He promised to His covenanted people Israel, and He cannot have done that unless we had been Israel, His people. He has given us as national blessings, multitudinousness, the Gate of our enemies, the evangelising function, wealth abnormal, and supremacy over "many" nations (Gen. xxii. 17, 18; Deut. xv. 6, xxviii. 1—13). Besides these He has given us the Sabbath, the Bible, His ten true laws, the missionary spirit, revivals of religion, civil and religious liberty, and the operation and outpouring of His Holy Spirit on our people.

The writer of this appeal to Protestants tells us that "if we reject God He will cast us off." Herein he is quite wrong, for God said to Ephraim (and no other race has any promise on the subject): "They shall be as though I had not cast them off." "This people have I formed for Myself, they shall show forth My praise" (Isa. xliii. 21). The fact is, God has a strong, imperishable love for His chosen ones. He will never leave them nor forsake them. Having loved them, He loves them to the end, and sent His only-begotten Son to redeem and succour them. From Ephraim, the Ten Tribes, He has received provocations innumerable, which have deserved His utmost wrath; but in the very extremity of their wickedness, the considerations which have inclined the Lord to mercy are just those which our opponents never can, and never will, understand, till they realise that He is a faithful God, who, having sworn, must keep His oath to bless the seed of Abraham; and, having promised, must perform His promises to the very jot and the very tittle. His feelings towards Ephraim are described in Hosea xi. 8, 9, R. V., and to these words we ask close attention: "How shall I give thee up, Ephraim" (He cries), "How shall I deliver thee, Israel? How shall I make thee as Admah? How shall I set thee as Zeboim? Mine heart is turned within me, My compassions are kindled together. I will not execute the fierceness of Mine anger. I will not return to destroy Ephraim; for I am God and not man, the Holy One in the midst of thee; and I will not enter into the city."

Digitized by Google

Such is our God, and such the blessings to which we are heirs as His people Israel! And yet there are thoughtless men and women among us whose cry is still, "Cui bono? cui bono?" From these we can afford to turn away, and remind them that this is, after all, "God's England," and that the inhabitants thereof are "His people Israel"! And let all who know these facts "praise the Lord"!

A HATTER'S TESTIMONY.

BUSINESS took us lately into the shop of a hatter in a town which shall be nameless. The owner of the business had heard and read about Our Identity, and seemed to be impressed with the fact that political and national events were falling out as the Identity required, and that in the East especially, nothing seemed to contradict our views, while much that was happening confirmed them. "Mr. R." we said, "I want to ask you a question in regard to your business as a hatter. Is there any peculiarity in the size of an average Englishman's head, as compared with those of foreigners who may call in to try on and purchase your hats?" "Certainly, there is," was the reply. "The average Englishman's head requires a hat which is rather longer from front to back than from side to side. The Englishman's shape is somewhat oval, as 6½ inches is to 5. It is longer between the forehead and the back of the head than as measured from ear to ear. We have consequently to make all our hats for home sale after that fashion. But here comes a curious fact. If a foreigner comes in to be fitted with a hat, there arises trouble. We cannot fit him! His head is not of the British shape, and is more rounded. He wants a round, not an oval hat; and therefore we have a difficulty in fitting him. We have to make his hat to measure." These remarks seemed to establish the fact which Mr. Robert Pegrum so clearly brought out in the BANNER of No. 203, vol. iv., pp. 454, 455—namely, that the British and Continental skulls are of a different type and belong to different races. We do not suppose our hatter's definition and Mr. Pegrum's were the same, or that the former knew anything of the "Dolicho-cephalic" and "Brachi-cephalic" types of skull. The hatter's testimony went to prove that there was a distinct type of head appertaining to the average Britisher which the Continental foreigner did not possess, and that the types were so diverse that the hats which fitted the ordinary Englishman would not fit the foreigner, such being caused by reason of a racial difference in the form of the skull. To bring the matter to an issue, we next asked the hatter, "whether he ever served Jews with hats, and whether they exhibited any craniological speciality, which made it difficult to fit them with his ordinary stock-in-trade?" Our hatter thought for a few moments, and then replied, "No, Sir! The Jews present no difficulty! I serve several Jewish families with hats, and there is nothing to prevent my fitting them with the hats the ordinary Englishman will take. The heads of the Jews and the heads of the Englishmen are, on an average, the same! The Jews give no trouble in buying my hats, like foreigners, when they come in to purchase!" When we observed to our friend in the hat trade that he had been giving us a good lecture on the Identity, because he had proved to us that the crania of the Jews and the crania of the average Englishman (or Britons) are the same in type and size, he answered, "Yes, Sir. I see that even in regard to my trade, the facts go to support your view that we are the Israelites!" So far the testimony of a British tradesman in regard to one of the branches of our subject. His evidence went to show that the heads of the British folk are formed on the same craniological model as those of the Jews, and, therefore, our opponents being the judges, they must, like those of the Jews, be Semitic heads—the heads of Israelites. And this is the fact which it is our object in the BANNER to prove. We think our hatter has supplied us with a very neat and clear demonstration of the fact from a point of view which our craniologists tell us is infallible. The hatter, however, measures from the frontal bone, over the eyes, to the back of the head; but the craniologist takes his measurements, we suppose, rather higher up the dome of the skull to arrive at his distinction of Brachi-cephalic and Dolichocephalic skulls, whereon he bases his scientific varieties of the races of man.

Correspondence.

"JACOB'S TROUBLE" AND ISRAEL'S FUTURE.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR PHILO-ISRAEL,—While the thought of "Jacob's trouble," and what concerns Israel in the future is still in our minds, and under discussion, will you kindly allow me to say a few words? The following thoughts, put on paper early last December, may be especially suggestive now that it is painfully proved to us that there is not, and, I may say, cannot be work enough in these islands to support the present vast, and ever-increasing population, and this recognised state of things has created a demand for State-aided Colonisation, and emigration.

In Matt. xxiv. 14 we see that the Gospel is to be preached to all nations, "and then shall the end come." The account of the "great tribulation" is given afterwards in the same chapter; it seems reasonable, therefore, to suppose that the "great tribulation," or "Jacob's trouble," is to be subsequent to the time of the general preaching of the Gospel. If so this appears to dispose of the idea, entertained by some people, that all the trouble was over at the past siege of Jerusalem. In the same chapter ver. 16 gives us, "Then let them which be in Judea," which seems to fix the locality. Dan. xi. 40—45 does the same. These passages, with others, to be found in the writings of the prophets, imply very forcibly, to me, that there will be a return of Jews, possibly some of Israel with them, before The Return. Noticing the events of the last few years, the persecution of the Jews, and the consequent exodus of so many from foreign countries, and remembering how the British have been drawn to the East, would anyone be surprised if the English Government, in ignorance of our origin, and in view of present or future difficulties, should make further arrangements with the Turkish Government to safeguard our inheritance, and then arrange for Jews, and others, to settle as colonists in the land? We may live to see it done, and witness the iniquity that is to abound culminating in a triumph of evil before the final overthrow at the second coming of our blessed Saviour. Should we see signs of a return, such as I have intimated, will it not be legitimate work for all Anglo-Israelites to give warning to their fellow countrymen to take no part in the movement, and to accept no lot in our inheritance before the accepted time, the time of peace? Yours most sincerely, A E I.

Author of "The Answer to the Eastern Question."

London, March 6, 1886.

BRITANI, THE NAME OF A SYRIAN VILLAGE.—Travelling in the East, in 1836-7, Lord Lindsay, in the valley between Antilibanus and Lebanon, passed through a village called Britani, which name, he observes, "was a pleasant surprise to us," as it reminded him of home. Beretanic, he was told by a Mr. Farren, "implied in Arabic 'the land of tin'—tantamount to the Cassiterides of Herodotus"; though he observes that Beretani, as a modern name means the second village; and it was the second they arrived at, after crossing Antilibanus ("Letters from Egypt," &c., pp. 333, and 432, fifth edition, 1858. London, H. G. Bohn). This testimony may be used for what it is worth by the advocates of Our Identity, but it is "curious," to say the least.

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."

(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India.)

"And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the Forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS of the EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4

VOL. X., No. 492. Entered at Stationers' Hall.] WEDNESDAY, JUNE 2, 1886. [DOUBLE NUMBER, TWOPENCE.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
Israel in South Africa	213
"Ulster Will Fight"	214
The Ten Toes of the Image of Daniel: Are They the Ten Kingdoms?	215
Is the British Nation an Idolatrous People?	216
"Blindness in part is happened to Israel" (Rom. xi. 25)	217
The Prayer of His Grace the Archbishop of York	218
Our Colonial Possessions	219
Israel's Daughter Lands	220
The Two Nations in Ireland	221
Present-Day Problems, and How Anglo-Israel Truth Explains and Solves Them. Miss Cox's Lecture at Clifton, April 30, 1886.—Part I.	221
The Right Rev. John Ryle, D.D., Gives Evidence	224
Our Great City	225
The Comfort Which Our Identity Gives Us In Our Present National Troubles	226
Correspondence	226
Shemitic or Japhetic—Which? By A. Osborne	227
Israel's Scripture and Prayer Union	227
Anglo-Israel Free Distribution Fund	227

ISRAEL IN SOUTH AFRICA.

MR. JOHN MACKENZIE, of Bechuanaland, in South Africa, has lately been lecturing on "What the English Have Done in South Africa." His account of our doings and failures is so interesting, from Our Identity point of view, that we propose to place some of his sentiments before our readers, and ask them to notice how closely the lecturer draws the picture of Israel. He tells us that the British have been the "liberators of the slave in the Southern regions of the Dark Continent;" and herein they have performed one of the prescribed functions of Israel, as Isa. lviii. 6 tells us.

He declares our race has brought freedom, liberty, peace, and safety, to the oppressed among the African tribes and peoples, blossoming and budding, and filling the face of South Africa with good fruit (Isa. xxvii. 6). The lecturer told his audience that the duty of superintending the occupation of the waste lands and wildernesses of habitable South Africa by British and Colonial settlers had devolved on the British Government, thus admitting the enormous increase of our British race and its expanding, colonising tendencies, according to the prophecies which have been recorded in favour of "the after-seed of Abraham," the Israelites (Gen. xxxv. 11; xxviii. 14; xlviii. 16; Hosea i. 10).

The lecturer also pointed to the fact that the British were becoming—nay, were already—the paramount power in South Africa by reason of their holding "the open Gate to supremacy in South Africa, uncontested and incontestable"—namely, the general direction over the occupancy of the vast areas of unoccupied habitable territory, with which South Africa abounds. He advocated, therefore, the assumption by the British of the general Government of South Africa, which would allow all existing white races there (all Protestants, too) to expand and consolidate their position, each and all under the guiding and protecting care of the paramount Israelite Power ruling over all, "the head and not the tail, above only and not beneath," all the rest (Deut. xxviii. 1, 13).

The following are only some of Mr. Mackenzie's statements, which we quote from the Christian World, of April 1, 1886:—

WHAT ENGLAND HAS DONE.

Summing up this part of his subject, Mr. Mackenzie said: Let me tell you, in few words, what the much-condemned English Government has accomplished in South Africa. It found a community of Europeans in serfdom to a very selfish and exclusive mercantile company; to those enthralled men it gave freedom and citizenship, and an honourable place in that colonial family of which England is the prolific mother. It found them without trade or colonial industry, except the vineyards of the descendants of the French; having neither wool of sheep nor of Angola goat till these wool-bearing animals were imported. In social and political life there was taken first one step of advancement, then another, and another—all in the way of widening and deepening their liberty—till some years ago they obtained, perhaps prematurely, the entire management of their own affairs within the boundary of their own colony. It has been asserted (said Mr. Mackenzie) that the Hottentot races suffered by our setting them free, and that they have died away under our rule. This is not true, as the statistics of Cape population will show to anyone. The races which were decreasing when we got the Cape, ceased to decrease; even the abject Bushman was affected by the advent of our English rule. Where one prisoner was taken in the Dutch Company's rule, four Bushmen were shot down, a course which would have led to speedy extermination; under the English rule three prisoners were taken to one Bushman shot. What we wish to infer from this is, not that an Englishman is more merciful than the Dutch-speaking colonist, but that border quarrels should not be left to the settlement of border men, but to a strong Central Government.

WHAT AFRICA HAS BEEN SAVED FROM.

Before leaving this part of my subject, allow me to say that it is not enough to ask what we have done for our colonists in South Africa. It is also of the utmost importance to point out what the influence and guidance of England have saved South Africa from. We have seen how the colonists have thriven and made remarkable progress. Indeed, when we consider the position in which we found them, perhaps no community has made greater progress than the colonists at the Cape under the Government of England. Then the freed slaves and serfs were never guilty of riot or excess after they got their freedom; they have steadily increased in number, and form to-day a useful labouring population. But the great question remains, What would have been the result to white and to black—to slave and slaveholder—if Europeans holding the sentiments of the Southern States of the American Union had commenced their operations in the Cape Colony, with the whole continent of Africa to the North of them to work upon? No doubt, in the course of time, and without the interference of England, a school of thought and of morals would have arisen in South Africa like that of the people of the Northern States of the Union. But when would their voice have been heard? Through what oceans of blood this cursed slave question would probably have led the Europeans in South Africa—through the blood of blacks continually, and through the blood of the whites themselves when the crisis came, and the system met its inevitable doom. . . . If, therefore, brother has not shot down brother in South Africa, if father has not found himself opposing son in mortal conflict, as in America, by whose management has the apple of strife been removed from the scene? By the wise forethought and the disinterested policy of England. The freeing of the slaves, the determination to treat men of all races as citizens before the common law, has been precious seed sown in South Africa by the conscience and genius of England, and is destined to bear fruit in the coming generations, and in regions far beyond our control when the Emancipation Bill became law. The obligations of all races throughout South Africa to the Power that has thus befriended all will appear more and more as the lapse of time helps us to understand the true bearing and proportion of things.

Digitized by Google

THE THORN HEDGE AND THE GATE.

It is one thing to enter by a gate or cross over by a stile; it is another thing to try and force your way through a thorn hedge. You will say, "We all agree as to the thorn hedge in South African politics, but where is the gate or the stile?" In a humble way I have been pointing this out for some years in various ways, and will do so once more to-night. I have long seen that there is common ground upon which the Imperial Government, the Colonial Governments, the Government of the Free States, and the native chiefs and people can meet and co-operate. It is apparent to all peoples in South Africa that the law of European society there is to expand Northward. The country is to a great extent unoccupied. Looking to the actual facts of their position, native chiefs intelligently and earnestly ask that the English Government should assume the responsibility of presiding over the occupancy of these wide territories by English and Colonial settlers. They make this request in self defence. They regard our Government as the Supreme Government of the white men in South Africa. They demand protection from lawlessness, and assistance in administering law and order. Now, the holder of these unoccupied regions, whoever he is, will be the supreme power in South Africa. The open gate, then, to supremacy in South Africa, uncontested and incontestible, is through such treaties as we were offered and refused in Bechuanaland in 1878, but which have been recently drawn up and concluded in Bechuanaland, and which may be extended when desired in adjacent regions. It needs only a glance at the map to receive the geographical assurance of the truth of my doctrine. But other common-sense proofs will occur. By adopting the policy which I advocate, instead of having to run after any local government in South Africa, asking it for this and for that, we might have every government there knocking at the door of our General Government, and making requests of us. No doubt they would come to us because they wanted something from us; but it would be our happiness in most cases to have that to bestow which they came to ask. The holder of the unoccupied land is the master of the situation; all will be his friends, and all will be quite willing to pay something for his good offices.

THE CONDITIONS OF PEACE.

Mr. Mackenzie holds it as proved by the readiness with which respectable colonists flocked to the standard of Sir Charles Warren, that order and peace could be upheld in South Africa without English soldiers, if due steps were taken for establishing a General Government in South Africa. What England should do in South Africa Mr. Mackenzie thinks should now be decided by an impartizan committee appointed by the House of Commons, and, of course, with the sanction of Her Majesty's Government. On these lines he promises peace, harmonious development of the country, protection of the rights of the natives, with the eventual Confederation of South Africa, and consequent lessening of Imperial responsibility. By giving attention now to remedial and administrative measures for South Africa, we are told we can secure, at a future time, even a closer and happier confederation than in Canada; for in South Africa, while the Europeans are of different races, and separated through the want of education, all profess the Protestant religion, and the great majority are Presbyterians. These may or not be the views of a visionary; but the suggestion that a committee should be appointed outside party politics to take the whole matter into consideration seems a common-sense proposal, and, coming from Mr. Mackenzie, amounts to a challenge for inquiry, and examination of his statements.

So far our admirable lecturer, whose blind testimony to our Israelitish origin must surely have some weight with impartial men. God in His Word assigned to Israel the spreading, ruling, governing, beneficent, slave-liberating functions, as we have seen; and lo, we find that in South Africa, as in India, Canada, Australia, and the West Indies, the British people are literally and exactly fulfilling the appointed duties of Israel throughout the world. God in His Word declared that Israel should be multitudinous to a degree, fabulously wealthy, powerful at sea by reason of the possession of the Gate, and we find the British in these "the last days" accordingly spreading abroad, West and East, and North and South (as in Africa), abnormally wealthy, powerful at sea beyond all existing nations, such power and wealth and numbers being given us that "God may establish His covenant which He sware to our fathers as it is this day" (Deut. viii. 18).

In these and scores of other respects we British are fulfilling prophecy as it deals with God's people, Ten-Tribed Israel, or Joseph the owner of the birthright (1 Chron. v. 1, 2), and will anyone deny that we must, from the very nature of things, and because of the character of our God, be the very people to whom He made the promises—that is, Israel? If we are wrong in our conclusions, let our clergy and our other opponents tell us wherein we err, and let them show us, from God's Word and from facts, that our conclusions are erroneous, and our facts misleading or untrue!

"ULSTER WILL FIGHT!"

Lord Randolph Churchill, in his letter published in the Times of May 8th, 1886, struck that key-note of the Irish troubles of the present day, regarding which men have been too long silent. The Bills for giving Home Rule to Ireland and a separate Legislature, which will virtually be the concession to Ireland of a separate national existence, if it were to pass by the votes of the House of Commons, if it were to be sanctioned by the Lords and authorised by the united voice of England, Scotland, Wales, and South Ireland, would certainly produce one result, which we presume Mr. Gladstone has never foreseen, or if he has foreseen, treats with derision and contempt. It would lead to civil war in Ireland. Ulster will never submit to be governed and trampled upon by their ancient Roman Catholic enemies. She will surely fight for the supremacy in a quarrel in which the whole of Great Britain will be in active sympathy with the Protestant, energetic, wealthy North, against the Roman Catholic, inert, unprogressive, fanatic, South and West of Ireland. What Lord Randolph Churchill wrote was this—solemn but sensible words—which we believe to contain the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. He said:—

"If political parties and political leaders, not only Parliamentary, but local, should be so utterly lost to every feeling and dictate of honour and courage as to hand over coldly, and for the sake of purchasing a short and illusory Parliamentary tranquillity, the lives and liberties of the loyalists of Ireland to their hereditary and most bitter foes, make no doubt on this point: Ulster will not be a consenting party; Ulster at the proper moment will resort to the supreme arbitrament of force; Ulster will fight; Ulster will be right; Ulster will emerge from the struggle victorious, because all that Ulster represents to us Britons will command the sympathy and support of an enormous section of our British community, and also, I feel certain, will attract the admiration and the approval of free and civilized nations."

Digitized by Google

So far his lordship. Who will venture to deny the facts he advances, or controvert the conclusion he arrives at? The point regarding which there is no doubt, and to which no consideration seems to have been given by the Government is, that the North Irish will fight rather than submit to the domination of Rome, and to the tyranny of the old enemies from whom the Union has preserved them for the last 90 years. Mr. John Morley is credited with the project of providing by law for the disarmament of the Ulster population, in order that they may be bound hand and foot, and left to the tender mercy of the dominant Irish Parliament in Dublin. We hardly think, however, that Protestant England and Presbyterian Scotland will care to leave their flesh and blood co-religionists of Ulster to be trampled upon and destroyed, as they surely will be, if we not only put them under the heel of their enemies, but take care that they are first disarmed before those enemies make them feel their power. In short, Ulster will fight! and we wonder if those who are responsible for these Bills have thought out the problem and decided whether it is worth while to try and satisfy the Roman Catholic population of Ireland (for whom nothing we have done yet has brought satisfaction), when the certain result of such attempt will be civil war in the island? That civil war we must prohibit, by undertaking the conquest of South and West Ireland ourselves, at an untold cost of life and treasure. We have ourselves no doubt that if, indeed, God's plans and purposes require that the experiment of the separate Parliament should be tried, that the end will be a war of reconquest, which must settle, once for all, the Irish question, and free our own Parliament of the presence of the Phœnician rebels. Nothing will pacify South Ireland—no, not even entire separation; for that will, as we see, bring on her civil war and deluges of blood. The one remedy left seems to be reconquest and the iron hand of military rule—results for which, we suppose, we are indebted to the Midlothian speeches, and to a policy of surrender to Irish rebels and to all other enemies of Israel, which has been pursued by our rulers since 1880. How is it such things are happening? Does Our Identity give us any clue to this new mystery? We think it does! We must recollect that the crisis in the Eastern Question is at the doors, and that the "great earthquake woe," which must devastate "yonder ill-consolidated Europe" cannot be long delayed! With that trouble Israel will have no concern, and with it she must not interfere. Isa. xxvi. 20, 21, seems to give the nation that direction. But how is she to be kept back from interference? How is she to "enter into her chambers and hide herself?" Surely by some such home trials and preoccupations there, as Mr. Gladstone has carefully prepared for us in Ireland! By rebellion and civil war there, which will require all our strength and means and power to put down; by the necessity, in short, of interfering by force of arms to restore peace to Ireland and safety to our own flesh and blood, not only in Ulster, but in every part of the land, North, South, East, and West, where they are living, even now, in the extremity of danger, looking to us to succour and deliver them in the last resort.

The Irish trouble then, brought rashly forward by Mr. Gladstone's proposed legislation, is, after all, then, a blessing in disguise. It will prevent our nation's active interference in the Eastern Question. It will settle the Irish Canaanitish Roman Catholic trouble once for ever. It will rid our British Parliament of the Irish Canaanitish element, because that population will, we believe, rapidly disappear by emigration, misery, famine, and war, before a firm grasp is laid by the British Government upon Irish disaffection, and the law is enforced there, as in other parts of our Queen's dominions, by the Executive of this long-suffering nation.

While we entirely disapprove of the plans and purposes of the present Prime Minister regarding Ireland, we can see the necessity for his proposals, because they will make the task of Government hopeless in Ireland, and bring on a state of things, where nothing but the sword will now avail to cut the Gordian knot. This will prevent our taking active part in the Eastern Question wars, while at the same time our occupation of Constantinople will be brought about, perhaps, by the special requisition of the Powers as a defence against French and Russian schemes, the Government of Egypt being finally undertaken by ourselves as a measure needful to defend the Empire against the doubtful objects of these two semi-hostile Powers. In all circumstances it is our privilege, whether in war or peace, to praise the Lord, for He reigneth upon the earth!

THE TEN TOES OF THE IMAGE OF DANIEL: ARE THEY THE TEN KINGDOMS?

A LETTER just to hand from London, Ontario, Canada, calls on us "to write an article in the BANNER OF ISRAEL on 'the ten toes of the image,' because many who laugh at Our Identity, or know nothing about it, declare that Britain is one of the ten-toed kingdoms of the metallic image of Dan. ii.," which our correspondent declares to be an impossibility. We quite concur in that judgment; but the difficulty is so to state the reasons for our opinion that they shall convince our opponents. The Rev. M. Baxter, of course, is the chief expositor of this view, and his statement on the subject is clearly put forward on p. 7 of his pamphlet called "The Great Crisis at Hand." He says: "All standard expositors hold that Augustus Cæsar's Roman Empire is represented by Daniel's ten-horned wild beast, and also by the ten-toed iron legs of Daniel's metallic human image. The two iron legs corresponded with the Roman Empire's Eastern and Western divisions, each of which is therefore to become subdivided into exactly five kingdoms, in accordance with the five toes upon each leg. And all the ten kingdoms must be allied together in a confederacy in agreement with the emblem of ten toes united together upon one corporate body."

So far Mr. Baxter. He admits that there are at present about eighteen kingdoms or states, which may be reckoned as parts of Augustus Cæsar's original dominions; but suggests that coming wars and revolutions will thin this number down to the prescribed ten, of which he tells us Britain is decidedly one. The list is given as follows on p. 8 of "The Great Crisis":—"1, Britain (probably legislatively separated from India and Ireland); 2, France; 3, Spain; 4, Italy; 5, Austria; South of the Danube; 6, Greece enlarged toward the North; 7, Turkey greatly reduced in size; 8, Syria separated from Turkey; 9, Egypt; 10, Tripoli, with Tunis, or else the Danubian provinces and part of Hungary; being five kingdoms in the West and five in the East."

The whole of the above, of course, is guess-work on Mr. Baxter's part; for it is to be observed that his tenth toe kingdom presents an alternative choice; we may take either Tripoli with Tunis, which the French have lately appropriated, or we may have the Danubian provinces, with Hungary, if we like. So wild a selection in regard to the tenth kingdom may be wrong and not infallibly correct as to the 1st, Great Britain. We shall try and show Mr. Baxter, and those who agree with him, that Britain cannot be one of the ten-toed kingdoms—for in truth there are no kingdoms in the vision asserted to be connected with the ten toes! The very fact on which the whole assumption is based is a coinage of Mr. Baxter's brain. Let anyone read the vision in Dan. ii: from first to last, and he will find that only four great kingdoms are mentioned. Babylon by name: then, as historically identified afterwards, the Medo-Persian, the Grecian, and the Roman. The fallacy is in supposing that the Roman legs must needs have ten kingdoms to come out of the Roman Empire, because the legs end in ten toes. The vision itself shows (ver. 42) they represented with the legs one whole entity—that is, the 4th or Roman "kingdom"—and there is no more necessity for the discovery of ten kingdoms to arise as the outcome of the ten toes, than there is for the discovery of ten kingdoms to arise out of the Medo-Persian or 2nd kingdom, because it was represented not only by the silver breast, but by the silver arms, at the end of which there were of course two silver hands and ten silver fingers. The vision is silent as to the latter, and silent as to the former (the toe kingdoms) too; and therefore we ask why Mr. Baxter and his friends insist on finding ten kingdoms as the outcome of the destroyed Roman Empire? and why we have to find the ten-toe kingdoms to-day as part of Rome's dominion? The answer we anticipate, of course, is that commentators have decreed that the ten horns of the fourth wild-beast kingdom of Daniel's vision in chap. vii. 7 and of Rev. xiii. 1 are the same as those of the fourth kingdom of the Babylonian king's vision of the metallic image in chap. ii., and that the ten toes must represent ten kingdoms, because these kingdoms were represented on the head of the beast as horns, but on the figure as toes. But this takes for granted what we are quite unprepared to admit.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Alexander MacPhail has, in Hope and Destiny, Nos. 62 and 63, shown, we think, conclusively, that in this respect commentators are wrong. Because the metallic image represented on the face of the vision (chap. ii.), that the figure in its parts, from head to foot, portrayed four kingdoms, beginning with the Babylonish, then present. It included, therefore, the Babylonian, the Medo-Persian, the Grecian, and the Roman. Four only. But the vision of Daniel, narrated in chap. vii., was given him in the time of the Medo-Persian kingdom (ver. 1), after the Babylonian had fallen, and the angel's interpretation in ver. 16—28 related to four wild beastial kingdoms which were then future as to the time then present, and were therefore subsequent to that of Babylon and of the Medes and Persians too. They were consequently—1st, Greece, the lion with eagle's wings (ver. 4); 2nd, Rome, the bear (ver. 5); 3rd, Turkey, the leopard (ver. 6); and 4th, Russia, the iron-toothed and ten-horned beast of the very last times (ver. 7, 23—25). It stands to reason, therefore, that the fourth beast of a new series of kingdoms, which began with Greece, cannot correspond with the fourth beast of a previous series of kingdoms which began with Babylon and with Nebuchadnezzar its king. Rome, in short, cannot be represented by those ten-toed kingdoms in its feet, which really Russia is to possess, as represented by the ten horns on its head.

These arguments demolish Mr. Baxter's views and those of the commentators whom he copies. We find therefore, with relief, that Britain does not, and never can, respond to one of the (non-existing) so-called ten-toed kingdoms of the metallic image, and cannot answer to one of the ten horns now forming on the brow of the Russian beast; since British-Israel is a nation God has raised up to destroy Russia and all its works; and it never can help or assist Russia in its designs against themselves, the saints of God, or against the land of the inheritance which the God of Israel has given to the chosen race to possess for ever.

So far our first and chief line of defence against Mr. Baxter. But let us, for the sake of argument, concede to him that the vision of the metallic image of Dan. ii., and that of the four wild beasts of chap. vii., were one and the same, the ten toes representing the ten kingdoms to come of the Roman Empire in its last days, as the ten horns were the same ten kingdoms of the fourth wild beast. This being so, we ask, was Britain one of the Roman kingdoms when the Saxons, Danes, and Normans congregated here from the continent of Europe in A.D. 449—1066? Certainly not! Rome Imperial, under the Emperor Honorius, cast off the British Islands in A.D. 409 and as Gibbon says in chap. xxxi., p. 359, the Empire made "an absolute and perpetual abdication of the exercise and rights of sovereignty." "Britain was irrecoverably lost," and the year of the separation was, says Gibbon, A.D. 409. Britain thus ceased to be a Roman toe-kingdom (if there were toe-kingdoms at all) at least forty years before Saxon-Israel flowed into their vacant home, and the ground is thus cut from under Mr. Baxter's assumption.

Taking another view, Mr. Baxter's claim is equally inadmissible. For reading Dan. vii. we find that after the ten horns of the fourth wild beast were fully developed, another eleventh horn came up (a new kingdom) among them, and this is recognised as the papacy. Now, when did the papacy arise with temporal power to devour some of the Roman kingdoms? Not before A.D. 588—622. But Britain became a Saxon, not a Roman, kingdom long after this date—namely, in A.D. 823, under Egbert. How then could the papal horn be said to have risen up with temporal power acquired after the formation of the British toe-kingdom in A.D. 823? Nothing of the sort took place! for the papal power was a developed horn long before the ten-toed kingdoms were formed by the appearance of the British so-called toe-kingdom in A.D. 823. Mr. Baxter is thus proved wrong again, and the main result is that the British kingdom was (1st) never a part of the Roman Empire, and (2nd) that it was not and could not be one of the horns of the Roman or any other wild beast of Daniel's vision in chap. vii.

IS THE BRITISH NATION AN IDOLATROUS PEOPLE?

In our reply to the Rev. James Ormiston, editor of the British Protestant, we admitted, for the sake of argument, that the British were an idolatrous race, which indeed, in one sense, they are "constructively," for they love money, the root of all evil, and "covetousness is idolatry" (Col. iii. 5). There is also the fact that the nation really has a tendency to fall into the ways of the Romish sorceress, "to make many altars to sin," and therefore "to have altars for an occasion to sin" (Hosea viii. 11). But there is a wide difference, we take it, between a nation whose tendency is to adopt a system of corrupt worship, and one which, as Mr. Ormiston declares, has been guilty for ages, and is guilty to-day, of complicity with idolatry, because we have supported Popery in the past, as he alleges truly, and are promoting its interests to-day, "at the expense of our blessed and precious possession, the Word of God, which is the cause of all our national prosperity and of our civil and religious liberties."

Mr. Ormiston's point evidently is, that whereas the seed of Abraham since the return from Babylon has been kept free from the idolatry that falls down to stocks and stones, distinctly by God's grace, we British for ages before the Reformation, and also to-day in the nineteenth century, have been in covenant with Rome, and served her. Hence, he argues, we British cannot be Israel. But we must see if the facts support Mr. Ormiston's argument, that the British nation is not only an idolatrous nation in a "constructive" sense, but one which is a downright idol-worshipper in the Biblical sense, such, in fact, as the House of Joseph or Israel were described to be in 2 Kings xvii. 9—23. Is this, however, true? and has the rev. editor any justification for this serious accusation against the people to whom he belongs, and whose prosperity and civil and religious liberties he attributes strangely to their bare possession of the Word of God, the Bible?

We think the rev. accuser has not any just ground for his allegation. As a nation, the British are not gross idol-worshippers. Her Church and its articles, formularies, and prayers, to which the Rev. Mr. Ormiston is personally attached as a clergyman of the Establishment, distinctly oppose any such idea. Ritualism and Romanism are not the religions of this land as by law established, and their followers among the people are but a handful compared to the great representative mass who oppose and protest, as God's "witnesses," against the idolatrous tendencies of these false systems. The Word of God, which is the Lord's gift to His people Israel, has taken deep root in this nation's mind, as it is certain it would, because the promise unconditionally made in Psa. cxlvii. 19, 20, was that "He showeth His word unto Jacob, His statutes and His judgments unto Israel," and "He hath not dealt so with any nation."

Digitized by Google

These words in the original imply much more than our translation describes, for they declare an eternal truth, that God shows now, has shown in past time, and will for ever show, exclusively to Jacob and Israel, the words of His truth. Will anyone tell us that these distinguishing favours were ever given by the Lord to a nation which for ages before the Reformation, and for three hundred years since, right down to our own day, has been a worshipper of stocks and stones after the manner of the heathen? The thing is absurd. We say, then, that this our nation is not an idolatrous people in the sense Mr. Ormiston would, we believe, have us understand the term—namely, a worshipper of material things or objects, like the city of the Ephesians, "which was a worshipper of the great goddess Diana, and of the image which fell down from Jupiter" (Acts xix. 35). If indeed it be so, then how can Mr. Ormiston reconcile it to his conscience any longer to remain associated with a Church which must be like the nation, idolatrous to the core? and why does he not renounce the land of his birth, and seek citizenship with some other nation (if he can, after diligent search, find even one), where God is worshipped according to the Scriptures and not idols? And how does he account for the curious fact that this our so wicked and vile a race, not being Israel according to his views, is yet favoured with God's gift of the Scriptures, besides the gifts of civil and religious liberties unknown elsewhere?

Now, such gifts and graces were God's promised blessings to Abraham and his seed for ever; but in our case were unaccountably given, not to the Jews, who are the sole nation free from the deadly sin of idolatry now, according to Mr. Ormiston, but to an unclean, "guilty," ever guilty race, steeped to the lips in complicity with idolatry (as the accuser declares), not just now only, but for "ages" before and since the Reformation. We should like to learn how Mr. Ormiston accounts for this, and how the fickleness of God, the God of Israel, can be accounted for in thus denying to Israel to-day, when she is cured of idol-worship, those blessings that Christ died to give them; but giving them instead to a very guilty, wicked, Gentile, nation, the British, who are idolaters to-day as ever, and are apparently quite incorrigible? Mr. Ormiston's inconsistencies all arise from the fact that he shuts his eyes to the distinction the Scripture draws between Israel and Judah, and does not see that Israel to-day, cured like Judah of gross idolatry, is blessed with every sort and kind of spiritual and temporal gifts, not because she is free from the evil spirit of idolatry, but because God in His love of the afterseed of Abraham, promised them unconditionally all those blessings (including the Word of God), which we enjoy to-day.

The Jews would now be participators in them all had they not crucified the Son of God, who came to redeem them with His blood. But the day is coming when Israel and Judah, with Manasseh, will be purged of all their sins, and then shall the whole of the children of Israel repent of their offences, and mourn for their departure from the living God, and then "will He comfort them as one whom his mother comforteth, and they shall be comforted in Jerusalem" (Isa. lxvi. 13). Then will the new covenant applied to the two Houses of Israel and Judah, with the outpouring of God's Holy Spirit, cure Israel as well as Judah finally of all tendencies "to altars," and to the dreadful sins they bring with them. "Who is wise and he shall understand these things? prudent, and he shall know them? For the ways of the LORD are right, and the just shall walk in them; but the transgressors shall fall therein" (Hosea xiv. 9).

"BLINDNESS IN PART IS HAPPENED TO ISRAEL"

(ROM. xi. 25.)

THE Greek word for "blindness" in Romans xi. 25 is (pôrôsis), which the Revised Version translates thus—"For I would not, brethren, have you ignorant of this mystery, lest ye be wise in your own conceits, that A HARDENING in part hath befallen Israel, until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in—and so all Israel shall be saved, even as it is written, 'There shall come out of Zion the Deliverer,' &c." (quoting from Isa. lix. 20). The question is, what does the apostle mean by this "hardening in part," or pôrôsis? We have been led to believe that the word expressed "the blindness" of Ephraim in regard to their origin, and that it meant that the House of Joseph would be partially ignorant of it for a certain time, "blind" in part to the "rock whence they were hewn"—"to the hole of the pit whence they were digged," regardless of "Abraham their Father, and of Sarah who bore them" (Isa. li. 1—2). This view, for which there is something to be said, is ridiculous in the eyes of Mr. Frank H. White, who, on pp. 23, 24, and 25 of his pamphlet, "Anglo-Israelism Examined," gives his reasons for rejecting it, and substituting for ours a better explanation of his own.

He declares that we must be "blind" ourselves because we do not see that "the blindness" spoken of by St. Paul was the blindness of "Israel" (meaning the Jews) that "Jesus of Nazareth is the Christ." The blindness is the same, he says, as that mentioned by the same apostle in 2 Cor. iii. 14, where the minds of the Jews, like those of the children of Israel of Moses' day, were said to be "blinded." "The vail remaining untaken away in the reading of the Old Testament, which vail is done away in Christ." The apostle did not mean "blindness" as to the "Identity" in the latter passage, and could not mean "the blindness" as to the "Identity" in Rom. xi. 25. "The blindness" in both cases, says Mr. White, is blindness in regard to the Lord Jesus as "the Lord their Righteousness," but had no reference to their Identity with Israel, as to which the children of Israel in Paul's day had no doubt. It was "heart blindness" St. Paul meant in Rom. xi. 25, not blindness in respect to their ethnic origin.

So far Mr. White; and his argument is in the above fairly stated, and deserves careful consideration. In reply to Mr. White we would say that in the first place, as he does not see any distinction after the captivities between the House of Israel and the House of Judah (although St. Paul stated it clearly in Heb. viii. 8—12, and even in Rom. xi. 16—24), it is not strange that he should refuse our view of verse 25. St. Paul, writing to the Gentile Roman converts, warned them as a Church not to be puffed up, because of their Christian standing and incorporation into the Abrahamic stock in place of the two Jewish natural branches cut off (ver. 19—20). The Gentile "wild olive branches" were graffed in, in place of the Jewish branches excised; and they were graffed in among the still standing Israelite branches, which we recognise as the Ten Tribes, but which Mr. White cannot recognise at all! St. Paul warned the Roman Gentile Church not to be high-minded, but to fear (since they were to be cut off at last—ver. 22), and he enforced his warning by telling them the solution of the mystery, the mystery of Israel, which he wanted them now to learn. The mystery was this. Over a part of the children of Israel, designated "All Israel" in ver. 26, a "blindness or hardness" had, at the date of the epistle, already come (A.D. 60); and this blindness was not going to be removed till a certain event, prophetically well-known, had come to pass. That event was "the coming in of the fulness of the Gentiles." The latter phrase in Greek is, To Plerôma tôn Ethnôn. Its Hebrew equivalent is, as may be seen by the Hebrew translation of the passage in the Hebrew New Testament, "Melo-hag-goim"; "the fulness of the nations, or Gentiles," of Genesis xlviii. 19, to come of Ephraim according to Jacob's blessing on the younger son of Joseph. The expressions only occur twice in the Bible, and must refer to the same event affecting the Ten Tribes. On it hinges the salvation, not of the Twelve Tribes, but of Ephraim the ten, as ver. 26 asserts, and as Jer. xxxi. 33—34, and Heb. viii. 10—12, confirm us in believing. What then is this "hardening" of Israel or Ephraim, which can only be cured when "the nation and company of nations" to come, not of Judah, but of Ephraim-Israel, is found to be an accomplished fact? It surely is the blindness of Ephraim as to her origin among the Gentiles, involving, when her eyes are opened, the cure of her heart malady by the out-pouring of the Holy Spirit on her masses, in consequence of her cry to the Lord, as Israel, for Israel's blessing,—"Oh, Lord, save Thy people, the remnant of Israel" (Jer. xxxi. 7). Mr. F. White imagines that we ascribe to the mere discovery of Israel as the British some magical effect which will per se save them. We do nothing of the sort! When Ephraim recognises her Identity, the repentant people will cry to the Lord for the splendid spiritual gifts He has promised them, as Israel, and He will surely grant them to her in full fruition, as He has already given her the temporal blessings which even now point to the British race as the only one extant in the world, answering to the missing people (Ezek. xxxvi. 37, Jer. xxxi. 7, 18, 33, 34).

Digitized by Google

Mr. Frank H. White, at p. 35 of his pampblet, tells us that, "one thing certainly is clear, neither the Old Testament nor the New warrants that kind of distinction between Israel and Judah on which Anglo-Israelism mainly relies in support of its assumption, that while Israel is under blessing, Judah at the same time must be under curses." Yet will Mr. White tell us that the "Israel" of the Old Testament (being the Ten Tribes) is not called "The Kingdom" in the Old Testament, such title never once being conferred on Judah?—and will he tell us, too, that the same name does not follow the House of Ephraim in Acts i. 6 (Rev. Ver.), as applied to the expected restoration of "The Kingdom" to the House of Judah then in the land? The apostles asked the Lord, Judah being present in Palestine, "Lord, dost Thou at this time restore the kingdom to Israel?" For Israel was then the House of Judah, the only extant representative of the nation with reference to "The Kingdom's" outcast Lo-Ammi condition. In the Old Testament we have the same "kingdom" distinctly described in 1 Kings xi. 35, Rev. Ver., in these words: "But I will take the kingdom out of his (Solomon's) son's hand, and will give it unto thee (Jeroboam), even TEN TRIBES." The same reference occurs in ver. 31 and 34, as well as in 1 Kings xii. 21—26, where the House of Israel or Ephraim is identified with "The Kingdom," and thus sharply separated from Judah, or the Jews. The statement of Mr. White on this subject is in direct opposition to Jer. xxxi. 31—34, and Heb. viii. 8—12, wherein in both Testaments alike the House of Israel is distinguished from Judah, and their separate blessings as to time are described in terms which plainly show that both have yet to receive the new covenant separately in days, future even to our own present period of grace. We shall probably recur again to other misstatements and mistakes of Mr. Frank H. White, because we understand many of our opponents deem him "a tower of strength" against us, and we are glad to measure swords with one who is deemed a strong man by them, in order that we may prove the weakness of the opposition's best champion and leader.

THE PRAYER OF HIS GRACE THE ARCHBISHOP OF YORK.

THE papers were lately full of the description of the opening of the Liverpool International Exhibition, when Her Majesty in person honoured that town in order to inaugurate the proceedings by her presence. The prayer which was offered by Dr. Thompson, the Archbishop of York, on the occasion will be found below, and will repay perusal by our Identity friends. The language is in many respects a repetition of that which often appears in the BANNER respecting our favoured nation. When we first read the prayer we asked ourselves in astonishment whether His Grace was not an Anglo-Israelite in belief! His sentiments and his petitions to the God of Israel are just those of one who is persuaded of our Hebrew origin, and well knows all the splendid blessings which follow in the train of that high distinction.

We propose to offer some remarks on the clauses of the prayer which call for notice, and hope our readers will ponder over the requests of this most excellent and comprehensive petition to the throne of grace, making them their own in their private devotions. Our report is from The Times of May 12, 1886, and was as follows:—

Eternal Lord God, King over all the earth, both riches and honour come of Thee, and in Thine hand it is to make great and to give strength unto all. We thankfully acknowledge Thy goodness to us in raising our country to rule over many nations, in filling our harbours with our commerce, and every sea with the sails and steam clouds of our ships. This year, when all the daughter countries are bringing to the mother island the tokens and first fruits of their wealth, may we be filled with thankfulness to Thee and with deep humility. Thou hast been very good to us, but we have rendered Thee scanty honour, and have failed to spread the knowledge of Thy glorious name through the lands. Now, at least, give us the grace to acknowledge that all our good things are Thy gifts, and that we are unworthy of Thy love. Take possession of us, O Lord, for we are Thine. Fill us with Thy Spirit, that we may strive henceforth that justice, love, wisdom, and piety may be spread abroad through all lands of English speech and rule, so that daily as the sunrise moves round the world nation after nation may awake to praise Thee, and the voice of Thy praise may never be silent. Bless our Queen, and preserve to her the loyal affections with which she is regarded in these kingdoms, in the remotest East and West of her Empire. Through Thee kings reign. For seven times seven years Thou hast sustained her Throne and added great countries to her rule. Make the year that is about to open a true year of jubilee for her and for her people. Make it a year of liberty indeed. Remove in Thy good time the dark clouds that lower on our commerce, so that the workman who now suffers from want may be able to eat bread with his children with a thankful heart. May all this Empire be bound together in the bonds of justice, of peace, of mutual help, and of knowledge of Thy divine will. Grant that for many years the Queen may reign over a people growing in good things and devoted to her person and Throne. Bless this Exhibition, and teach us to regard it not with foolish pride and self-importance, but as a call to fulfil more fitly our high trust among nations as ministers and stewards of Thy goodness. Except the Lord build the house, their labour is but lost that build it. Except the Lord keep the city, the watchman waketh but in vain. We are Thy people, Thy servants, and all glory and might are Thine. We commend our Queen, our peoples, and their skill and their wealth and enterprise, their souls and spirits, to Thy great love, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

There are so many Identity points in the above that we fear we shall weary our readers by even a cursory reference to each. In the first place the Archbishop ascribes to God "the gift of riches"—a gift we know He has granted exclusively to Israel (Deut. viii. 18). He thanked the Lord for His goodness in "raising our country to rule over many nations"—the very promise God made in these same words to Israel obedient in Deut. xv. 6. He declared that God had "filled our harbours with our commerce and every sea with our sails and steam clouds of our ships"—the latter being a palpable reference to the prophetic description of Israel in Isa. xviii. 1, and to Balaam's prophecy in Numbers xxiv. 7. "This year," the prayer continued, "our daughter countries are bringing to the mother islands the tokens and firstfruits of their wealth." Here we recognise the words of Jacob addressed to Joseph in Gen. xlix. 22 (margin), where reference is made to his "branches" or "daughters running over the wall." Sarah was to be a "mother of nations" (Gen. xvii. 16), but the prayer alluding to the promises, terms our islands as "mother" to the "daughter branches," which have already "run over the wall."

Digitized by Google

The prayer recognises our duty (which was Israel's) "to spread the knowledge of God's glorious name through the lands," and admits we have fallen short in our responsibilities (Isa. xxvii. 6; Gen. xxii. 18; xxviii. 14). The Archbishop twice over in his prayer admitted that our nation the British are "God's people." "We are Thine, O Lord." "We are Thy people, Thy servants, and all glory and might are Thine." The Scriptures tell us who are "God's people" and His "servants," and we never find that during the present dispensation any race but Israel are so distinguished (Deut. ix. 26—29; Exod. xxxii. 11).

The Archbishop beseeches God to fill us as a nation with His Spirit, the very gist of God's promise to Israel in Joel ii. 28, 29, and Jer. xxxi. 33, 34, and he asks for the outpouring of the Spirit, in order that justice, love, wisdom, and piety may be "spread abroad" through "all lands of English speech and rule, and thus nation after nation may awake to praise the Lord, and the voice of praise be never silent." Here the memory of his Grace must have recalled God's promise that "the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord as the waters cover the sea"—the agents to effect that work for God, being Israel (Isa. xi. 9, xxvii. 6; Hab. ii. 14; Numb. xiv. 21).

The prayer next admits that the Queen's Empire extends from "the remotest East and West," which answers to the divine description of Israel's (Gen. xxviii. 14). Seven times seven, or 7 × 7, a perfect Pyramid number, is the duration of Queen Victoria's reign (1837 to 1886), and the prayer tells us "Great countries have been added to her rule in these most eventful years." The Archbishop prayed God to give us Federation, when he asked that "this Empire might be bound together in the bonds of justice, of peace, and of mutual help, and of knowledge of the divine will"—a federation which was to be Israel's, as Gen. xxxv. 11 declares.

The prayer finally recognised our British place among the nations as those of God's "trustees," His ministers and stewards of His goodness"—the very function for which Israel was destined in God's Word, as countless texts, such as Gen. xii. 2, 3, xviii. 18, xxii. 18, xxviii. 14; Acts iii. 25; Isa. xxvii. 6, and other passages, fully prove. We thank God for this outspoken prayer! If men fail to see in it the proofs of our Israelitish origin, it is because they are blind and deaf; and nothing will persuade them save the miraculous interposition of God Himself! It is ours to mark the evidence supplied to us by his Grace, to publish the facts, and to leave the application to the Spirit of our God, who alone can open the blind eyes, and give hearing to the fast closed ears.

OUR COLONIAL POSSESSIONS.

Dr. R. J. Mann, F.R.C.S., on Tuesday night communicated a paper to the Society of Arts, on "The Present State of the Colonial Possessions of Great Britain." Sir Saul Samuel, Agent-General for New South Wales, presided. The paper, which, by reason of the author being indisposed, was read by Mr. Cobb, gave a summary of the resources and condition of the colonial possessions of the Empire, tracing in succession the growth and development in population, trade, wealth, and material resources of Canada, Newfoundland, the Australasian Colonies, Cape Colony, Natal, Mauritius, New Guinea, the West Indies, the West African Settlements, Malta, Cyprus, British North Borneo, and the Straits Settlements. The British Islands themselves, the central seat of the Empire, possess an area of 121,115 square miles and a population of 36,400,000, but the colonial and foreign possessions of the Empire represent an area of land of over 7,300,000 square miles, and a population of 19,485,000. The extent of the land comprised in the colonial and foreign possessions was thus 61 times as large as the central islands of the Empire, and the population a little more than one-half that of the parent community. With the addition of India the Empire represented an area of 8,991,254 square miles, and a population of 315,885,000. With regard to revenue and public debt, while the revenue of the British Isles was £88,000,000 and the public debt £740,000,000, the entire revenue of the colonial and foreign possessions, exclusive of India, was £42,055,000, or nearly half the revenue of the British Islands. The entire debt of the colonial possessions, exclusive of India, was £185,350,000, or something less than the fourth part of the debt of the central kingdom. The revenue of India was only £8,000,000 less than the revenue of the central Government, and its debt less than a fourth part of the debt of the home community. The value of the trade of the colonial possessions, exclusive of India, was close upon £241,000,000 or more than a third part of the value of the home trade. The value of the trade of India, to the value of the home trade, was as £142,000,000 to £685,000,000. Mr. Service, the Premier of Victoria, anticipated that in half a century the Australian colonies will possess a population of 50,000,000, and in that sense will constitute a second United States in the Southern hemisphere. If the present rate of increase of these colonies were continued, that number would be exceeded. The population of Great Britain and Ireland was at the present time seven times more than it was in the Protectorate of Cromwell. But, including the inhabitants of the United States, the number of people in new lands who have descended from the old stock in the British Isles was double that of the number which remains in the mother country. The paper concluded with some passages from Mr. Froude's glowing description of the great future which he anticipates for "Oceana" and of the incalculable importance of a closer alliance being maintained between the colonies and the mother country, if England is to keep the place which she has hitherto held among the nations.

A general discussion followed, in the course of which the necessity of the colonies to the home country, particularly in relation to trade and as an outlet for our over-charged population, was strongly insisted upon. Sir Saul Samuel remarked on the value of such papers in dispelling that ignorance which has too much prevailed with regard to the value of our colonial possessions. The forthcoming Colonial Exhibition would do a great deal of good, as showing the raw products and manufactures that belong to the colonies. With regard to emigration there was a large field for it in Canada and Australia, and these countries offered splendid inducements for persons of the right sort. But people who would not go out of the towns, who congregate in large cities, were not the people to go to the colonies. They wanted people who would go into the interior and who would work, and if they would only work they would do well, but it was idle to think that people who would not work here would work in the colonies. Therefore, any scheme of emigration which would take people indiscriminately to the colonies would end in failure, and only remove the distress from this side of the world to the other. On the motion of the chairman, a vote of thanks was given to the author of the paper.

So far The Times report of an interesting paper published on February 18, 1886. The statistics with which the lecture bristled are familiar to our readers, being the foundation of our arguments and proofs that the British folk are the House of Israel of the prophecies. Here all our points come out quite blindly and unwittingly on the part of the author of the paper. We have drawn for us by him with a master's hand the picture of a "great and mighty nation," multitudinous to a degree, possessing the Gates, also colonies in the four quarters of the earth—a people who are moving towards the federation of the Empire as their destined goal, an emigrating, commercial, abnormally wealthy, ruling, and blessed race, whose heathen possessions and dominions are larger than those of any other nation, past or present, who have territories in Europe, Asia, Africa, America, and Australasia, the like of which no nation on the face of the earth can show. The picture, in short, is that drawn in God's Word of His people Israel—a fact which can be realised by reference to the following texts in the order stated—namely, Gen. xii. 2, 3, xviii. 18, xxii. 17; Hosea i. 10; Numbers xxiv. 7; Gen. xxxv. 11; Deut. xv. 6; Isa. xxxv. 1, 2, xlix. 8; Psa. cxi. 6; ii. 8; Rom. iv. 13; Dan. vii. 27; and Deut. xxviii. 1 and 13.

Digitized by Google

Here we have prophecy fulfilled in modern facts, and nineteenth century history answering in every jot and every tittle to the promises and covenants made by the God of Israel to His chosen nation, the afterseed of Abraham. What want we more? Those who ask for evidence of our Israelitish origin have it here, and those who demand that Our Identity must be supported by documentary testimony of a credible character have here facts of the most stupendous kind responding to the written evidence of the oldest documents in the world; documents which have the imprimatur of divinity, and from their august and hoary age prove themselves, without the need of corroborating force, wherever they are produced. The testimony of the Bible favours Our Identity, and the facts of the present day confirm our claim that the British folk are "the remnant of Israel," the heritage and inheritance of the Lord! And let Israel, therefore, praise His holy name!

ISRAEL'S DAUGHTER LANDS.

THE Indian and Colonial Exhibition (called by some people for shortness, "The Kith and Kin-eries") is a great and splendid illustration, visible to the eye, of Israel's "Daughter-lands." This last was the very word used by the Archbishop of Canterbury in his remarkable prayer on May 4th, when the Exhibition was declared "open" by the Lord-Chamberlain, under Her Majesty's commands. He offered in the course of that prayer—that Israelitish prayer—the following petitions:

> Almighty God and Heavenly Father, we beseech Thee to send down Thy gracious blessing upon the manifold treasures and precious works which from among our kindred peoples and our fellow nations, from sunrise round to sunrise, are gathered here for glory and for beauty, unto the increase of knowledge, use, and wisdom.
>
> Bless our Sovereign Lady the Queen, and enrich her days with abundance of peace, that all the daughter lands of her Realms and Empire may be knit together in perfect unity and prosperous strength. And grant that, as her people inherit and fill peacefully all countries of her dominion, so not material concernments only, but the enduring riches of mind and spirit and the righteousness of Thine eternal Kingdom may be sacred and dear to them; so that, in Thy bounteous gifts, and in man's wise labours learnt of Thee, Thy Name may evermore be greatly magnified; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

In speaking of our Colonial and Heathen Empires the Archbishop addressed the Lord by asking Him to bless "our kindred peoples and our fellow nations" from East to West and West to East again—right round the world! He called those kindred nations the occupants of our "Daughter lands." Herein he clearly described Israel's Empire, for Joseph the fruitful bough was destined as "a fruitful branch by a well," to see "his branches," or "daughters, (margin) run over the wall" (Gen. xlix. 22, Rev. Ver.). These "daughters" occupying our "daughter lands" are termed in the prayer, "our kindred nations from sunrise round to sunrise," a beautiful paraphrase of our Israelitish promise that "a nation and a company of nations" were to be the development of Ephraim's seed (Gen. xxxv. 11, xlviii. 19, Rom. xi. 25); spread abroad to the West, and to the East, and to the North, and to the South (Gen. xxviii. 14); world-wide in locality; "sown among the people in far countries, where they live with their children and turn again" (Zech. x. 9). We need not add that the Archbishop prayed distinctly for the Federation of the Empire when he asked that this nation and her "fellow kindred nations" round the world might be "knit together" in perfect unity and prosperous strength." Just at the time when Israel's Prime Minister is doing his very utmost to break the Empire into twain and absented himself from the Exhibition at its opening, feeling, no doubt, that his plans and purposes were out of harmony with the Empire's aspirations in the Albert Hall, and wholly at variance with the spirit of the Archbishop's beautiful prayer. We are glad to think that just after the Archbishop's petitions, the Choir burst forth with the Hallelujah Chorus of "Praise ye the Lord," which is so perfectly in tune with every Israelitish meeting, but especially with the occasion when Israel and her Daughters meet together to give God the praise for all His gifts and blessings vouchsafed to "The nation and company of nations'," representatives present then. Prior to these concluding proceedings, the following hymn of praise was sung by Madame Albani, composed by special desire of the Prince of Wales by the Poet Laureate, and set to music by Sir A. Sullivan.

Welcome, welcome, with one voice!
In your welfare we rejoice,
Sons and brothers, that have sent,
From isle and cape and continent,
Produce of your field and flood,
Mount and mine, and primal wood,
Works of subtle brain and hand,
And splendours of the Morning Land,
Gifts from every British zone!
Britons, hold your own!

May we find, as ages run,
The mother featured in the son,
And may yours for ever be
That old strength and constancy,
Which has made your Fathers great
In our ancient island-state!
And,—where'er her flag may fly
Glorying between sea and sky—
Makes the might of Britain known!
Britons, hold your own!

Britain fought her sons of yore,
Britain fail'd; and never more,
Careless of our growing kin,
Shall we sin our fathers' sin,
Men that in a narrower day—
Unprophetic rulers they—
Drove from out the Mother's nest
That young eagle of the West,
To forage for herself alone!
Britons, hold your own!

Sharers of our glorious past,
Brothers, must we part at last?
Shall not we thro' good and ill
Cleave to one another still?
Britain's myriad voices call,
"Sons, be welded, each and all,
Into one Imperial whole,
One with Britain heart and soul!
One life, one flag, one fleet, one Throne!"
Britons, hold your own!
And God guard all!

Here the Poet Laureate distinctly called for the Federation of the Empire with no uncertain voice, and so again rebuked Mr. Gladstone's efforts to destroy it. He bids us "cleave to one another still, to "be welded each to all, into one Imperial whole, one with Britain, heart and soul; one life, one flag, one fleet, one Throne"; but never, by rash and foolish experiments, to strive to sunder what God has nationally joined together. No particular mention is made in either the hymn or the prayer, of the wonderful multitudinousness of these Israelite Nations, congregated at the Colonial Exhibition. The Pall Mall Gazette, however, on May 4th, had a few sentences on the subject, which will bear repetition here. They were as follows:—"One inscription on the frieze suggests more than all else. It is simply a statement—population of British Empire, 305 millions, an indefinite number of hundreds of thousands, and 924. What precision and what inaccuracy! The number of the subjects of the Queen no man knows. Even while we write it is greater than it was when we began, and yet this most essential of all facts, the boundless fecundity with which our numbers increase, is not represented in the Exhibition. If the growth of the density of our population could be represented by the movement of a dial hand, every revolution of which would testify to the addition of a hundred human beings to the number of the subjects of her Majesty, it would be the most suggestive, and perhaps, politically and socially, the most important, exhibit in the show." This, no doubt, is true! The multitudinousness of our race is the Divine mark of our Israelitish origin. It is the sign by which God tells us in many texts that we may be sure to recognise the chosen race. At home, in Britain, it doubles its numbers in about 50 years,—twice, in fact, in a century of time; but in "the daughter lands, by leaps and bounds," once in 25, or four times in a hundred years! The average then, is about once in 40 years!—an abnormal rate, unequalled by any nation existing now, or which has ever been known upon this earth! This fact is politically and socially, as God means it to be, the most important factor of any connected with our National existence; for it governs all the rest and proclaims us by the bare result to be the heir of the world and its destined rulers according to the prophecies.

Digitized by Google

THE TWO NATIONS IN IRELAND.

Mr. J. Chamberlain's letter, published in the London papers on May 14th, 1886, is so important in the light of Our Identity that we re-publish it below. He addressed Mr. Thomas Sinclair, J.P., chairman of the meeting of the recent demonstration held in Ulster Hall, Belfast, and wrote as follows:—

40, Princes' Gardens, S.W.,
May 10th, 1886.

Dear Sir,—I am glad to see the evidence of the growing determination of Ulster, and am convinced that it will have great effect on English opinion. The ordinary Englishman thinks always of the Irish question as if it were represented solely by the Nationalist members. He has hardly recognised as yet the fact that there are two nations in Ireland. When he does so he will see that it is at least as unfair to force the Ulster Protestants to submit themselves bound hand and foot to the Roman Catholic Nationalist party as it is to expect the latter to accept without appeal the views of Englishmen and Scotchmen. If Mr. Gladstone should to-night yield the point about representation, the next great issue will be as to the claims and position of Ulster. You may rest assured I shall do all in my power to obtain full and fair consideration for them.

Yours truly,
J. Chamberlain.

The Times, on the same date, commented on affairs in the following terms, alluding at the same time to the "Two Nations" in Ireland:—

Sir Henry James, after showing that Mr. Gladstone's policy would on constitutional principles make Ireland a foreign country, would destroy the supremacy of the Imperial Parliament and place the minority at the mercy of the majority, maintained that the measure could not be final, because there was no Irish "nation" which could give consent to the compact. Mr. Parnell angrily contradicted this statement, but, as has been often observed, there are at least two nations in Ireland, and Home Rule must inevitably place the one in subjection to the other. Against this result, Mr. Leatham entered a most energetic and eloquent protest, condemning the cowardly policy of buying off the troublesome opposition of the Parnellites and the organized terrorism of the League by the abandonment of our loyal fellow-subjects.

"There are at least two nations" in Ireland. The Southern nation is Phœnician, or Canaanitish, in origin—the other in the North-east is Israelitish. The latter are of the same blood as the Scots and British, and have the blessing of God in respect to wealth, power, commerce, vigour, and energy, promised to His people Israel. The other are thorns in the sides and pricks in the eyes of Israel according to the prophecies (Numbers xxxiii. 55), poor, wretched, discontented, and degraded. Mr. Gladstone's Bills for "the better Government of Ireland" (which we now know never can become law), were based on the idea that Ireland was a united nation longing to part company with the British Empire, and become a separate nationality. Whereas in real truth, the country is divided into two parts; the one prosperous, the other wretched; the one rich, the other miserably poor; the one Protestant, the other Roman Catholic. The Northern, Israelite, Protestant, portion of Ireland will never submit to the dictation of the Southern Roman Catholic majority, but will resist by force of arms their threatened severance from the British Empire. As their opposition will deprive the South Irish of the means to carry on a Government, apart from the British Parliament, the fact of there being thus "two nations" in Ireland, which Mr. Gladstone has ignored, will in the final resort wreck his schemes, even if he could succeed in carrying them through, and passing them into law. It is very remarkable that a Statesman, so well acquainted with Ireland and the Irish, who has destroyed the Protestant Church Establishment there, and twice essayed to mend the Land Laws of Ireland, should now so late in life attempt to legislate for Ireland as a whole, utterly ignoring the race differences existing in that land. Can he have imagined that he could, by a stroke of his pen or a wave of his hand, get rid of 1,250,000 Protestant Ulster men and women, the most steadfast, almost bigoted, religionists in the world, the enemies of those Roman Catholic aliens, who are the Southern majority, and long for the power which the Gladstone Bills would give them to dominate over the rich and prosperous North? This seems hardly credible, but we see no other way of accounting for the extraordinary facts now before us! The Bills will not and cannot pass! The dual Parliaments can never be restored; and Ireland must belong, North, South, East, and West, to Israel. The Canaanite will finally be banished from the land, and then, but not before, will peace be restored to our body politic. At present, all legislation for the larger island is waiting for the decision of the questions which Mr. Gladstone has raised: and these can only be disposed of in accordance with Our Identity. Ireland belongs to the sceptre of David, and there can be no separation, no rupture of union, now existing between the British Islands.

PRESENT-DAY PROBLEMS, AND HOW ANGLO-ISRAEL TRUTH EXPLAINS AND SOLVES THEM.

Miss Cox's Lecture at Clifton, April 30, 1886.

PART I.

Our Identity with Israel, that marvellous truth which to us, who have estimated its vast importance and considered its far-reaching issues, is incalculably precious, is by outsiders (who have not the remotest conception of all that it involves) variously regarded. There are a few who look askance upon its adherents, as if they believed them to be afflicted with some grievous, moral taint, and who even seem to fear contamination from the mere contact with those who have strayed so far from the beaten tracks of 19th century orthodoxy (which, be it observed, is a radically different thing from the orthodoxy of a century earlier). These constitute a small and ever dwindling minority. Then, again, there exists a larger class, who content themselves with sneering at what they cannot understand; seeking to hide, under a semblance of superior wisdom, an ignorance which is as deep as it is deplorable—an ignorance which finds its only parallel in that self-conceit which is the surest preventive of its removal, inasmuch as they "love darkness rather than light," wherefore all attempts to effect their enlightenment will be labour lost, as far as they are concerned.

But by far the most numerous class we meet, neither shun the Identity as a "doctrine of devils," nor ridicule it as a "craze." They only ignore it; but their absolute indifference is a thing harder to combat than the best directed efforts of our bitterest opponents. These can be defeated by our common-sense arguments. With simple disregard it is not so easy to cope. To ourselves, fired with ardent enthusiasm on behalf of a grand cause, this chilling indifference is peculiarly irritating. To feel oneself aglow with vivid interest in descanting of this absorbing theme, and to elicit as the sole response a cold Cui Bono? is enough to arouse in us very justifiable indignation. Yet, ere we condemn utterly this lack of concern which tries us to the verge of exasperation, let us pause for a retrospect. We can recall the time (perhaps not so very remote) when Identity truth was first presented for our own consideration. How did it then strike us? Most probably, in the majority of cases, our earliest idea was that, true or false, it was a matter which could have little or no bearing on the present or the future. If you will pardon a personal reminiscence, I may admit that it was thus in my own experience. "Do you believe," I was asked, "that we are the Lost Ten Tribes?" It was not a happy way of putting the subject before a novice, and I have an impression that I replied that I had never thought anything about it; that it was a thing which could not possibly be proved, and that it would be a waste of time to speculate thereupon at all. And there I left the question; left it for years, till one, more skilled in advocating our truth, brought it once more under my notice, and this time, thank God, not in vain. "The Lost Ten Tribes." The phrase struck me with a vague sense of familiarity. Of course, I had read of the revolt in Rehoboam's reign, and I knew just enough of the history of Israel and Judah to be aware that the kingdoms existed for a time in separation, and then were carried away in diverse directions and at different dates, into captivity; but as to expecting Israel's restoration at any time, as to dreaming that she had any rôle to play on the stage of history, any mission to the heathen, any work in the world, I had not entertained one such thought, and could not immediately grasp the idea. True, I had a fair acquaintance with the prophetic Scriptures, but a long course of instruction under pure spiritualisers had so habituated me to suppose that no other fulfilment of prophecy than the inferential one deduced by themselves need be anticipated, that I had never supposed a literal fulfilment probable, and Israel's latter-day destiny held no place in my speculations. "The Lost Ten Tribes." I pictured a loose-robed, turbaned, oriental people, such as we associate with our ideas of the pastoral and agricultural avocations of the Hebrews in the palmy days of their earlier sovereigns, and from thence, to our active, enterprising, inventive 19th century Englishmen, seemed such a sudden leap, that my first emotion was an irresistible desire to laugh at the apparent incongruity of supposing the two had any connection. It is probably thus with almost all of those who try us by their seemingly impenetrable indifference to the claims of our truth, and they will be induced to listen to it only when we have convinced them that it is not simply a wild and objectless speculation, not merely an ethnological inquiry, interesting to a limited class, but a grand FACT, bearing directly on practical politics, and that in a twofold manner, firstly as giving clear indications as to what position we should maintain with regard to many debated questions; and secondly, as enabling us to foresee (from the Word of God) whither events are tending, and what will be their ultimate issue with regard to our own and other nations mentioned by the sacred writers. When men are convinced that the Identity will do this, they will study it, and studying, many will be constrained to accept it as God's truth. It is this consideration which has led to the selection of a title for this short paper. It is proposed to pass under review a number of "Present-day Problems" of a deeply important character, and to endeavour to show in some degree how Our Identity solves them, and indicates our duty in regard to them.

Digitized by Google

IMPERIAL FEDERATION.

One subject of almost unparalleled interest has come of late into prominence, and bids fair at no distant period to demand the serious attention of those who have at heart the truest welfare of the Empire. That subject is Imperial Federation. Shall we permit our splendid colonies to drift away from us, and ultimately sever all connection with the Mother-land in the North-West, which gave them birth? or shall we, for purposes of mutual defence in time of danger, and for mutual benefit in time of peace, seek to effect and cement such an union between Britain and her daughter nations, that no hostile power on earth shall dare to menace her, save one, and that one to its own irretrievable undoing?

There can be no doubt as to the answer which patriotic Anglo-Saxons all the world over will supply to this question. Federation is bound to come. Separation of the colonies from the parent state is not to be dreamed of even for a moment. A marvellous chain of providential events has been gradually leading up to this consummation. Who could have supposed that the truly "desolate heritages" of the great Austral Continent, used at first only as penal settlements, would by-and-bye develop resources so extraordinary, and become the indispensable outlet for that overflowing population which it is certain the old country could never have sustained, and who could never have found employment therein? What but the providential care of God led to the discovery of gold in that distant region, a circumstance which induced thousands to seek home and fortune there, and, in time, to build and populate towns and cities, and to become founders of nations, small in their beginnings, but already displaying a vigorous growth, which holds a promise for the future so splendid, that few would venture to forecast how grand a destiny Australia has in store. Nor is it only under the Southern cross that nations owing their origin to Britain are springing up. In the trackless regions of the Far West, sons of the same enterprising and dauntless race are found doing the same work of fertilising and cultivating the soil, bringing beauty out of desolation, and evolving law and order where chaos once reigned supreme. And Our Identity enables us to see in this fact what those who know it not cannot perceive. They may see in Federation a scheme infinitely desirable from a political, commercial, and military point of view. We see all this, and much more. We see the Lord Jehovah working mightily on behalf of the people of His eternal choice; carrying out, for their sakes, a plan which only a divine mind could have conceived, and which only a divine hand could put into execution; bringing to pass the words addressed to the great race-father concerning his posterity; and which guaranteed that his descendants should become firstly a nation, great in the highest and best sense, as being the channel of rich blessing to all mankind, and then the progenitor of "a company of nations," one with their parent in race, language, and religion; and one with her in having the same grand, God-given inheritance and the same God-appointed vocation, even that of making His free salvation known to all the numerous sections of the human family, and at length of bringing the races that now groan beneath the yoke of Satan into "the glorious liberty of the children of God." Our attitude as Anglo-Israelites in regard to this great movement of Imperial Federation must be one of cordial approval, while we may rejoice in the glad certainty that however a certain faction of narrow-souled politicians may set themselves in antagonism to it, the Federation of the British Empire, nay, of all the English-speaking peoples on the globe, is God's plan for Israel, declared by His prophets, and as such cannot fail of accomplishment, whatever puny opposition may rashly presume to set itself in the way.

THE EASTERN QUESTION.

But the Identity, and that alone, provides us also with an answer, comprehensive and complete, to that complicated and difficult problem known as the "Eastern Question"; a question which involves such dreaded contingencies, and which will carry in its wake consequences so momentous that the boldest heart may well quail when contemplating their far-reaching influences and final outcomings. In brief, the plain Saxon of the Eastern Question is this—"Who shall possess the sacred lands, Egypt, Syria, and Palestine? and who shall hold the Gate of gates, Constantinople?" Turkey is at the present hour all but defunct. Not for long can the day of her dissolu-ion be delayed. Commentators of half a century ago, though they believed her to be (under the name of Edom) the subject of sublime denunciations recorded in the Word of God (wherein her destruction was clearly forecast), yet found it very difficult to realise, at that date, that her then wide and seemingly stable Empire should speedily collapse and hasten to its downfall. But what do we see to-day? One by one have Turkey's extensive possessions been forcibly rent away from her grasp. A mere fragment still remains, but her tenure of that is admitted to be most uncertain, and when her dismemberment is complete, what will supervene? Assuredly a great and terrible conflict which will involve more or less in its fearful throes all the nations of Continental Europe. Nor are we left in doubt regarding the time which shall see the release of Israel's land from the blighting rule of the Mohammedan Antichrist. The concurrent testimony of St. John's vision and Daniel's prophecy limits the time of Turkish Edom's sway to 1,260 years. Reckoned by lunar periods, these have already expired; in solar years they have but little longer to reach their termination. And then what will become of the "dead man's" dominions? We know that the land which was promised on the oath and covenant of Jehovah, to Abraham and his seed for ever, can only revert to the true owners when Turkey's dying hand looses hold of it.

Digitized by Google

And here I may appropriately quote the language of an earnest and deservedly, popular Nonconformist minister in the East of London, the Rev. Archibald G. Brown, who, so long ago as 1879, spoke on this very topic when preaching in Mr. Spurgeon's Tabernacle, from the words found in Ezek. xxxvii. 9: "Come, O breath, and breathe upon these slain, that they may live." Unlike the vast majority of the expositors of Holy Scripture, this gentleman strongly maintains that spiritual lessons, deducible from any passage, ought, on no account, to be allowed to eclipse its original signification; and though, apparently, not a believer in Our Identity, he yet enunciates sentiments which we can heartily endorse, and which are, in no sense, inimical to our contention. His words are as follows:—

> There are promises and prophecies concerning the chosen land that have yet to see their realization. Oh, what bat's eyes have the men of the world! How blind they are! They talk of their politics; they discuss the Eastern Question; but how they ignore the core of the whole matter. Back to the chosen land the tribes of Israel must go. All that opposes their homeward march must be thrust aside. It matters not whether it be Ottoman tyranny or Muscovite despotism. All that stands in the way of the fulfilment of the grand prophecies, concerning the return of Israel, must be swept aside, for the land of Canaan is not always to be trodden down beneath the feet of the Gentiles. There is a future bright and blest for the land and for the seed of Abraham. But you will observe, that in this chapter, there is not only the prediction of a political restoration, but also of a spiritual, for I read, "But I will save them from their detestable things, and I will cleanse them from their sin." So that not only is there a political resurrection for the chosen people, but also a day of spiritual gladness, in which they shall see and trust Him whom they scorned, pierced, and slew. They shall worship at the feet of the Crucified, and acknowledge Him to be the Lord.

So far the Rev. A. G. Brown. Probably, if there were many like him, the Bible would be better understood, and more highly prized, and there would be fewer infidels; for nothing is more adapted to strengthen the hands of the infidel than the contradictory, muddling, and utterly unsatisfactory treatment of the prophetic writings, so common with our spiritual instructors at the present time.

And now, with regard to "La Porte Sublime"? Since God promised Israel the Gate of her enemies, we, as Anglo-Israelites, cannot but believe, that the Gate par excellence, withal so passionately coveted by Russia, is, nevertheless, in the councils of God, the destined heritage of Israel, His elect; and in His good time, by means we cannot foreknow, the proprietorship of it shall be duly vested in her, and her alone. Such is the answer to the Eastern Question, supplied by Our Identity; and while "men's hearts are failing them for fear," lest our own beloved country should become involved in that "great earthquake woe," which will soon engulf the continental peoples, we, like Paul, amid the storm-tossed waves of the Mediterranean, may remain calm and undisturbed amid the crash of reeling thrones, saying, as he did, "I believe God that it shall be even as it was told me" (Acts xxvii. 25). And adding, in the confident courage, born of simple dependence on the promise of the Omnipotent King of Israel: "The Lord of hosts is with us, the God of Jacob is our Refuge" (Psa. xlvi. 11).

DISESTABLISHMENT.

We must now pass on to another "burning question," which is still agitating many minds, and which has been provocative of endless debates in the pages of nearly all the journals and newspapers, now in circulation, in this country. You will surmise that I refer to the question of Church Disestablishment. I feel that it behoves me to speak with moderation on this most important subject, inasmuch as I have openly defended Nonconformists in the correspondence columns of THE BANNER; though, at the same time, heartily deprecating the idea of Disestablishment. My argument was to the effect, that Nonconformists, no less than the Reformers of an earlier era, seceded from the National Church because of abuses in her, and would, by scores and hundreds, return joyfully to her communion whenever such abuses should be removed, and reformation effected. Philo-Israel's kind and clearly expressed note on my letter, showed me, very plainly, that it was a difference of definition, rather than of doctrine, which existed between myself and those whose opinions coincide with his own, as therein enunciated. For when I understood, that by the words, "Church of God," the ecclesiastical congregation of Israel was alone implied, I was immediately prepared to concede that, from his point of view, those who claimed that position for Britain's State-allied Church were perfectly right. I had always taken, and still personally prefer to take, the words, "Church of God," in a wider sense, as embracing all Christian believers in Israel, though of greatly varying doctrinal belief and Church government, together with Gentiles, who become children of Abraham by faith in Christ. I know all Anglo-Israelites will be at one with me when I say, that our position, with regard to Disestablishment, must be one of uncompromising opposition to Liberationists. We cannot, as believers in our Identity, approve of any measure which seeks to rend asunder what God originally joined—Israel's Church, and Israel's State; institutions which He has ever since maintained in union, either in one or the other branch of the Hebrew family. True, she has not been a perfect Church; on the contrary, she has, at times, apostatised, and sadly strayed from the truth; but (being Israel's Church) God has wrought reformation in her, and He is able to do so again; nay, He stands pledged to do so by the abundant outpouring of the Divine Spirit, which can alone "purge out of her all things that offend," and present her, at length, a "glorious Church, not having spot or wrinkle, or any such thing."

(To be continued.)

ARE there any signs in our own day? Are there any circumstances in the world around us which specially demand the believer's attention? Beyond doubt there are very many. The drying up of the Turkish Empire, the revival of the Romish Church, the awakened desire of the Protestant Churches to preach the Gospel to the heathen, the general interest in the state of the Jews, the universal shaking of governments and established institutions, the rise and progress of the subtlest forms of infidelity—all—all are signs peculiar to our day. All should make us remember our Lord's words about the fig-tree—all should make us think of the text, "Behold, I come quickly" (Rev. xxii. 22).—From "Expository Thoughts on Luke xxi. 25—33, by the Bishop of Liverpool.

Digitized by Google

THE RIGHT REV. JOHN RYLE, D.D., GIVES EVIDENCE.

THE Bishop of Liverpool, honest John Ryle, as men love to call him, has issued a short tract which has reached its seventh edition and thirty-fifth thousand, in aid of the Church Missionary Society's late noble effort to increase interest in world-wide missionary work, during the "February Simultaneous Meetings" throughout the kingdom. The tract simply bristles with evidence of our identity with Israel, and therefore deserves largely to be quoted in the BANNER.

The good bishop cannot "see" our Identity, and repudiates it. He is therefore an excellent witness on our side, for his testimony is quite involuntary, and unwitting. What he says we may all accept, even our adversaries and opponents, as the literal truth. Here is a bit, which if so good a man as Bishop Ryle may publish and be thankful for the facts, we Anglo-Israelites may surely produce the same in the BANNER, and ask the world to ponder over them as national blessings, so authenticated.

He wrote on page 7 of "More Prayer and Work" (London, W. Hunt & Co., 12, Paternoster-row. 1s. per dozen. 1886), "being thoughts on missions (Joshua xiii. 1), thus:—

"We ought to be humbled when we consider the position and power of our own nation. England is, without controversy, the first of nations. No nation on earth has such power, and such wealth, such dominion, and such greatness, such revenues, and such commerce. English ships are to be found on every sea. English colonies open a door to us in every climate. English influence is felt by every government under the sun. England is the heart of the world. The slightest movement in this little island is a pulsation felt in the remotest corner of the globe."

So far the good bishop! Surely these are words of the editor of the BANNER, adopted by Bishop Ryle, and published as his own! At any rate, they have been, mutatis mutandis, the text of almost every article we have written for ten years past; and the burden of them is that having these blessings, the British (or "England," as the bishop will call the nation!) must be the Lost Ten Tribes; for these are the very signs God's Word gives us, whereby we shall know the House of Joseph when we find her. What is it the bishop tells us?

1. "That England is the first of nations." But this is what Israel was to be! (Isa. xli. 9; Jer. xxxi. 7; Amos vi. 1).

2. "That England is first in power and wealth." But this was to be Israel's sign (Dan. vii. 27; Deut. viii. 18).

3. "That England is first in dominion and greatness. But these were to be Israel's gifts (Gen. xii. 2—3; xviii. 18; Deut. xxviii. 1—13).

4. "That England is first in revenues and commerce, her ships being in every sea." But these were the very things for which Israel was to be noted (see Deut. viii. 18; xv. 6; Num. xxiv. 7; Isa. xviii. 1).

5. "That England is first in colonies, having gates or doors opening to us every climate." But Israel was to have the universal Colonial Empire, and the Gates (Gen. xxii. 17; Isa. xlix. 8—10; Gen. xxxv. 11).

6. "That England is first in influence in other nations." But Israel's influence was to bind all other nations, who were to fear and obey her (Deut. ii, 25; xxxii. 8; xxviii. 1—13).

7. "That England is the heart of the world." But that was what Ephraim and Manasseh were to be, by the direct blessing of Jacob on the two sons of Joseph (Gen. xlviii. 16—19; Rom. iv. 13; Deut. iv. 6; 2 Sam. vii. 23—24).

We think nothing we have ever written is stronger than these words of the good bishop! Our opponents need not henceforth blame us for writing sentiments which apparently tend to make our people self-conceited and uplifted with pride. The fact is, these things are true of our race; and the bishop knows it. He therefore says them. We, too, know they are true, and also (what the bishop ignores—namely), that they are blessings direct from the God of Israel, who has given them to His people to fit them for their duty in the world, according to the prophecies. What is that duty? Just that which the bishop describes—namely, "the evangelisation of all nations, all families, and all kindreds of the earth." Without these very blessings, the benefit could not have been reaped by the world at large, for the instrument set apart to confer it would have been unfitted for the task! It is true that Bishop Ryle, having described our nation in the words quoted, proceeded to tell us that we have acted our part, in a very inadequate, and miserable manner, and that we should nationally be ashamed on account of our wretched shortcomings, as the world's missionaries. Herein, no doubt, he is right; for Israel is at best but an unprofitable servant, and never has come up to the standard of the sanctuary.

But giving full weight to all this, we think we can appeal to the bishop's own words, and prove from them, that this nation has, according to its open doors, and means, and God-given opportunities, done wonders for the cause of missions, for which all the glory must be God's. Here is the point, however. The bishop blames our race for not doing more than we have done. But we submit that we cannot go before or beyond God in this matter! When He has wanted us to advance, He has moved us by His Spirit to go forward. He has given us the men and the money, and also the willing mind. It cannot be said, that where openings have been made by the Lord, we have failed to push forward, and tried to occupy the ground. The missionary spirit is from God, and we can only push forward as He sends us forward. What, however, does the bishop say we have actually done, God being our helper? He tells us on page 4. Let us hear him. He says:—

We are now in the eighty-seventh year of the Church Missionary Society's existence. Come with me and review what God has done for us. Place side by side the Society of this day, and her beginning, eighty-six years ago, and then see what abundant reason we have to praise the Lord.

Eighty-six years ago there was hardly anything done for the heathen by the Church of England. Something, perhaps, was attempted, around our Indian settlements; but aggressive measures on the mass of heathenism there were none at all. Now we have a strong and powerful Society, well-organized, well-established, and well-worked.

Eighty-six years ago, twenty-five laymen and clergymen were all who met together to launch the Society into the world. They were names we now delight to honour—Venn, Pratt, Scott, Newton, and a few others. They stood almost alone in their desire to do good to heathen souls. Now thousands upon thousands throughout the land count it a privilege to give the Society a helping hand.

Eighty-six years ago not a single bishop supported the society. Some opposed it. Others looked coldly at it. Fifteen years passed before two bishops became subscribers. Now the two Archbishops and nearly all the episcopal bench give it active aid. Support is the rule, and not the exception.

Eighty-six years ago the Society started with an income of less than £500. At the end of ten years its income was under £2,500. It now receives more than £200,000 a year.

Eighty-six years ago the Society dared not think of anything more than "Africa and the East." Now all the world is dotted over with missionary stations Every quarter of the globe is visited by messengers of the Gospel. It can number 265 stations, 223 European ordained missionaries, 241 natives ordained, 3,509 native teachers, 41,000 communicants, and nearly 200,000 professing Christians, including children and candidates for baptism.*

Truly we have reason to bless God. Truly it is good sometimes to look back and compare "past and present." It is good to consider what we were, and then to say, "The Lord hath done great things for us whereof we are glad."

The first beginning of the Church Missionary Society was indeed a day of small things. Here, at this distance of time, we

* It is fair to add to this statement that the Society has transferred to settled native Churches, no longer missionary stations, in the West Indies large congregations.

Digitized by Google

can form little idea of the immense difficulties its founders had to contend with. The thing was new. The work was strange. Machinery had to be made. Men had to be found. It was five years before any missionaries at all could be obtained, and then they were two Germans. Sixteen years passed away before any Englishman was sent forth. It sounds incredible now. Truly other men have laboured, and we have entered into their labours. Truly we should remember all the way by which the Lord has led us, and be thankful.

Nothing can account for the growth and progress of the last eighty-six years but the hand of God. His arm has been round the Society. His power sustained her founders. His Spirit has guided her counsels. His blessing has been upon her work. Verily, we must be harder and more unbelieving than Egyptian magicians, if we do not say, "This is the finger of God," and give Him all the praise.

Let us praise God for moving the hearts of good men to begin the Society, and to wipe off from our Church the reproach of doing nothing for heathen souls.

Let us praise Him for giving them such zeal and courage in carrying on the work they took in hand. They were not discouraged by the feeble support they met with. They went forward, faint, yet pursuing. Let us praise Him for keeping the Society faithful to the true principles of the Gospel of Christ for eighty-six years. Notwithstanding some temptations to swerve, her course has been straightforward, her eye has been single; she has gloried in nothing but the cross of Christ.

Above all, let us praise Him for the abundant success He has graciously given to the Society's labours. Tinnevelly, Sierra Leone, New Zealand, North-west America, must never be forgotten. Thousands of souls have been plucked, like brands, from the burning. Hundreds are blessing God in paradise for the men the Society has sent forth.

Yes! reader, we have abundant reason to praise God—and let us do it. Let us not be slow to build an Ebenezer. Let us say rather, "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all His benefits." Surely it is true this day of our Society as it was of Jacob of old: "We are not worthy of the least of all the Lord's mercies: with our staff we passed over Jordan, and now we have become a mighty band.

So far the Bishop. With one word of comment we conclude. The episcopal commendation of our nation's conduct is our defence. We have done what God has enabled us to do, and has required of us up to date. At present the Gospel is to be preached, not to convert the whole world, but only "as a witness, before the end come" (Matt. xxiv. 14). The Lord's object, therefore, to-day, is to effect that purpose, and not just now to fill the earth with the knowledge of the "Lord as the waters cover the sea." That shall follow in due time! At present we believe we are doing "what we can," and what the Lord has demanded of Israel to do; and we do not think, therefore, that nationally we are deserving of, or obnoxious to the condemnation which the bishop metes out to us with no sparing hand in the latter part of his pamphlet. We are "unprofitable servants," without doubt; but we have, as the bishop assures us, abundant reason "to praise God;" and therefore we call on our nation, as Israel, to praise the Lord!

OUR GREAT CITY.

We take the following interesting details from a notice of Mrs. Brewer's Book, "Facts and Figures about London," published by the City Press, November 7th, 1885:—

FACTS AND FIGURES ABOUT LONDON.

Such London is, by taste and wealth proclaimed,
The fairest capital of all the world.

* * * * *

Where has commerce such a mart,
So rich, so thronged, so drained, and so supplied,
As London—opulent, enlarged, and still Increasing London? —Cowper.

"We who find our daily occupation in this great London are scarcely able to give a thought to anything outside our own special work. It is true we glory in the fame of our London, but we are scarcely aware of all that goes to make up its greatness. We rejoice, therefore, at the appearance of a little book of facts and figures, by Mrs. Brewer, which admits us behind the scenes, and shows us clearly all that is being done to make London morally and physically pure. The population, which statisticians declare to be the richest treasure a nation can possess, is an ever-increasing one. Greater London in 1876 had a population of four and a quarter millions; it has now over five millions; and Inner London, on which this little book (Facts and Figures about London, by Emma Brewer, price 6d., published by Messrs. George Bell and Sons, York-street, Covent-garden) has most to say, has increased from three and a-half millions of inhabitants in 1876 to over four millions, and the houses for the accommodation of this population have increased in like manner. We find that education has made its mark on the population; for example, in 1876, of all who were married in London 6,776 persons could not even write their names in the register; the last returns give us only 5,000 in that uneducated condition. Turning to another page, we find that London boasts of 101 hospitals, in which one and a-quarter millions of people are relieved, and which dispense out-door relief to four millions annually. Another page reveals the fact that 25 per 1,000 of the populatiou are paupers, and relieved at the cost of over two and a-quarter millions of pounds. A curious fact, too, is brought to light —viz., that there are many more lunatic women than men, a fact suggestive of many thoughts, which space does not allow us to dwell upon. Again, we find with pleasure that drunkenness is gradually and surely decreasing among women, and as this vice is the source of so much sin and misery in our London homes we may hope much for the future. We find also that cabs have increased during the last ten years from 10,000 to over 19,000. No wonder the streets are dangerous to little children, of whom 14,478 were lost in London last year. If we think of coal at all it is generally to ask about the price per ton: but this little book tells us something more about it, and we learn with astonishment that the amount brought to London in 1884 was over 11 million tons—two and a-half million more than in 1876. This ever-increasing London population has to be fed, and besides the number of beasts, calves, sheep, and pigs brought to the markets, the amount of killed meat is something marvellous. Calculating a farthing for every 21 pounds, the amount of toll paid last year was £25,444. We are startled at the amount of gas made and consumed in London. The sale of gas in 1876 amounted to £2,698,797. In the year 1884 it reached the sum of £3,105,216, and the number of public lamps in our streets has increased in the last 10 years from 56,689 to 64,855. The sale of the residual produce brings in annually one-third as much as the sale of the gas itself. This little book tells us also that the average produce of a ton of carbonized coal is 41·95 bushels of coke, 3·61 bushels of breeze, 10·84 gallons of tar, 32·93 gallons of ammoniacal liquor, and 10,139 feet of gas. We are told also that the waterworks supply daily 134,443,669 gallons of water to 684,654 houses. We get all the necessaries of life so easily that we do not, as a rule, comprehend what a giant work is going on to supply us with all our needs. Our attention is drawn to the wonderful work performed by the Metropolitan Board of Works and the London Fire Brigade; and, considering that last year there were 2,289 fires, and only 42 lives lost, our tribute of praise is due to the brave men who do their work so courageously and so well.

"Much has been said lately of the London School Board. Here we have all the detail of ten years' working, and can judge for ourselves without the least trouble. The Asylums Board, which has also had its share of criticism lately, stands out clearly, and the amount of work it has done during the last ten years is definitely shown by these figures. It will be a matter of satisfaction to many that the effects of vaccination, doubtful vaccination, and no vaccination upon the small-pox cases, are put down in figures decisive and clear, and that the work on the ship "Exmouth" has been wholly good. The rateable value of property in the metropolis has kept pace with everything else; it has increased in ten years from £21,000,000 to over £28,000,000. We are also glad that the world should know how well and beneficently the Corporation spends its funds.

Digitized by Google

"Mrs. Brewer draws our attention to the various societies working in our midst for the religious education of our people. The names we are acquainted with, but this, we think, is the first time their work and power for good has been placed before us side by side with each other. The names are: The Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, the Religious Tract Society, the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, the National Society, the British and Foreign Bible Society, and the London City Mission. Look at the figures to see the good work which has been going on quietly among us and bringing down a rich blessing on London. Leaving this subject, our attention is drawn to the manner in which the vast numbers of working men and women are brought to their occupations day by day. We have all the particulars of the tramcars, the Omnibus Company, and the metropolitan railways, and by noticing how few the accidents are you will appreciate the great care with which the passengers are conveyed.

"London has not left its population without recreations and amusements of a high class, neither have the population been backward in availing themselves of them. The amount spent in London on an average every night is over £8,000. And now, last of all, we get a glimpse of our metropolitan parishes, and are able to make comparisons without any difficulty. We can see the rateable value of our parishes ten years ago and now; we can see the cost of pauperism then and now; the poor's rate in the pound then and now; and learn many things about the inhabitants of the various parishes."

THE COMFORT WHICH OUR IDENTITY GIVES US IN OUR PRESENT NATIONAL TROUBLES.

An Anglo-Israelite sends us the following thoughts to cheer us, and we pass them on to our many readers:—

"How I wonder," writes our friend, "that thinkers can be cheerful as they are, who do not see what we see, and know what we know. Were I ignorant of who we are, I should perceive the dark cloud that enshrouds our country and be in despair about its future! Whereas, now, the shining of its glorious lining sheds brightness even on Ireland, on Roman Catholicism rampant, on Bradlaugh, Socialists, strikes, &c., &c., for we know 'the enemy,' in every shape and form, must fall before the standard of His Holy Spirit. The fight must come before the victory!"

If we had written pages on pages we could not have put the matter in clearer language, or expressed the views we have held for years regarding the evil days which have now overtaken us, in more forcible terms. Whether it be rampant raging democracy and socialism which seek to destroy society and uproot all our institutions; whether it be the demon drink, or the social evil, or ungodliness; or Roman Catholicism and superstition—all now rapidly coming to the front to strive for the mastery among us—we feel no fears, no terrors from the prospect. And why? Because this nation is God's people Israel, and the Lord Jehovah reigns! He Himself is guiding His people in these dark and crooked ways, as He said He would (Isa. xlii. 16); and can the nation be safer than when the Lord Omnipotent leads us? when He has declared, too, that He will never leave us, nor forsake us?

Things look black indeed on every side! We seem to be within measurable distance of the disruption of the Empire, and our furious enemies in Ireland hope to erect a hostile state at our right hand, ready to bring down the pride of Israel to the ground, and force her to submit to the galling yoke of Rome. In vain! in vain! We have the promise of the Lord the God of Israel! "I will make darkness light before them, and crooked things straight. These things will I do unto them and not forsake them." Why then should we be afraid? The enemy is permitted, nay, invited by the Lord of glory to enter into the very fortress of Israel, His sanctuary, that when all seems gained, he may be ignominiously expelled by Him who is the King of kings, and Lord of lords, even God the Son Omnipotent. His glory will then be seen and served by Satan's utter discomfiture, at the very moment of his seeming triumph. Hence all things now are making for the apparent triumph of evil.

Dark clouds are everywhere, and the tempest is gathering force to hurl itself upon our nation's devoted head. But this will be God's opportunity! "When the enemy shall come in like a flood, the Spirit of the Lord shall lift up a standard against him," or "put him to flight" (marg.). The fight must come indeed before the victory can be won; and the fight must be waged in Israel's stronghold, her secure abiding place, the appointed place where the promise is, they shall, and must, dwell safely, knowing no evil, and where the children of wickedness shall afflict them again no more (2 Sam. vii. 10, R.V.). Our comfort, then, comes from these considerations and these promises. The question is, do we believe them? Without faith in them we shall lose the comfort God means us to derive from their acceptation. Nationally we shall be safe, but in the scenes of trouble through which we are now passing, we shall miss the consolation by reason of our lack of faith.

To Anglo-Israelites Our Identity gives the comfort we want, and hence the splendid faith expressed by our correspondent, who, in the contemplation of Irish troubles, of Roman Catholic successes, of Bradlaugh's, and socialists' triumphs, of trade strikes, and general collapse of commerce, declares that the silver lining to these clouds sheds bright light on the darkened landscape, and promises a splendid deliverance to God's glory in His own good time. Israel, praise ye the Lord!

Correspondence.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

Dear Sir,—Inspecting, with a growing wonder, the relics of Mogul architecture, that, as you well know, abound in this ancient capital of Akbar, the question came to me again and again, "Whence this amazing skill and taste in the construction of public buildings, that bid the nineteenth century, with all its boasted progress, halt, and admire, what it cannot duplicate, nor fairly approach, in exquisite grandeur and chaste simplicity combined?"

The Taj Mahal, standing in queenly beauty on the right bank of the Jumna, but little more than a rifle shot distant from where I am writing this, has no rival on earth; not to speak of the structures of unequalled taste and beauty in the Agra Fort, at Futtehpore Seekree, Secundra, and over the tomb of Itmad-ud-Daulah. These are about Agra alone. Delhi furnishes equal wonders—the Taj excluded; and Lahore is not behind hand in Jehangir's Tomb at Shadra, and the exquisite things at Shahlemar Gardens. "Whence had these men this wisdom," in building and adorning?

The guide-books tell us that Akbar and Shah-Jehan had "Italian architects," but it needs only a limited knowledge of Italian architecture to convince anyone who stands before the Taj Mahal that no Italian ever designed that peerless building. It does not belong to the race to do it. An Italian may have superintended the inlaying of its wondrous Mosaics, but none but an Israelite ever designed it, I do aver.

Its architect was the right royal Solomon of the Mogul dynasty—Shah-Jehan himself, with his imperial "blue blood," and his God-given ability to build, descending in a direct line from that royal tribe, in whom is invested for all coming ages the right to reign upon this planet. Men and devils may rage against it, but God's plan shall never fail. I think I have fairly "struck the trail" of the mysterious Mogul, who has puzzled historians as much as the Anglo-Saxon in his turn.

Digitized by Google

Those sons of Judah, left in Babylon—when a fragment of the prolific tribe returned to rebuild Jerusalem and her temple—moving eastward, in the lapse of centuries, is the key to the mystery.

With these thoughts seething, almost in brain and heart, as I traced the analogy between David and Akbar, both consolidators of empire; and Solomon and Shah-Jehan, both royal builders to an unprecedented extent, in taste, and costliness, and number, you may imagine how I was thrilled by the "blind evidence" of the following sentence, which I copy from "Keene's Handbook to Agra," page 87. Of the Moguls, he writes:

"The invading Mussulmans were stout, ruddy men, resembling the modern Afghans. They wore cloth coats, tight trousers, armour, and boots. The subsequent assimilation to Hindoo manners and costume was initiated by Akbar. It was about this time that the language, known as Urdu, or Hindustani, first became popular; and it is stated that the earliest work in this mixed speech was written at Jaipur at the time to which we are referring."

I need not enlarge on these hints for intelligent Anglo-Israelites. Of course, unbelievers would still disbelieve, "though one rose from the dead."

Ever in Jesus, yours affectionately,
GEO. O. BARNES,
Mountain Evangelist, Kentucky, U.S.A.

Agra, N.W.P., India, January 16th, 1886.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—A propos of the English language becoming universal, a probability so often mentioned in the BANNER, I beg to forward a translation of a paragraph I have this day read in a German paper, and which runs as follows:—"In Berlin, a weekly periodical has appeared, entitled, the English Journal. The object of which is to impart to the numerous friends of the language the rich treasures of English contemporaneous literature. Each journal will contain, besides general news, cuttings from numerous articles, humouristic and otherwise, together with essays, which issue from the English press. Notwithstanding the size and contents of the journal, the price will only be four-and-sixpence per quarter, whilst the subjects of which it treats will be so varied that persons of all ages cannot but be interested in its perusal."

Here then is another instance of an English paper being published on the Continent, whose primary object is not the benefit of the English residents who may be located on the spot, but that of the Germans themselves, a significant fact that speaks for itself.

I remain, dear Sir,
A LATE SENIOR CHAPLAIN IN HER MAJESTY'S SERVICE.

Baden-Baden.

SHEMITIC OR JAPHETIC—WHICH?

BY A. OSBORNE.

"God shall enlarge Japheth, and he shall dwell in the tents of Shem and Canaan shall be his servant."—Gen. ix. 27.

BISHOP NEWTON, in his "Dissertations on the Prophecies," i. p 15—16, says, "'And he shall dwell in the tents of Shem,' is capable of a double construction; for thereby may be meant either that God, or that Japheth, shall dwell in the tents of Shem." "In the tents of Shem," saith he, speaking according to the simplicity of those times, when men dwelt in tents and not in houses. They who prefer the former construction, seem to have the authority of the original text on their side; for there is no other noun to govern the verbs in the period, but God. There is no pronoun in the Hebrew answering to the "He," which is inserted in our English translation; and the whole sentence would run thus—"God will enlarge Japheth, and will dwell in the tents of Shem." The Chaldee of Onthelos also thus paraphrased it—"And will make His glory to dwell in the tabernacles of Shem. . . ." It was fulfilled literally when the Shechinah, or Divine presence, rested on the ark, and dwelt in the tabernacle and temple of the Jews.

ISRAEL'S SCRIPTURE AND PRAYER UNION.

SINCE our last report we have sent out five cards of membership; the number now issued is 1,398. All subscriptions for the Monthly Comments, by Philo-Israel, should in future be paid up to January, 1887, inclusive, as that number will complete the second series.

The card of membership will be sent on receipt of three stamps. The Comments, prepared by Philo-Israel, will be sent post free monthly for 1s. per annum; two copies, 1s. 6d.; three copies, 2s. For less than a year the cost is 1d. per month, for one copy, post free. The "Prayers for Daily Use," being a prayer for each day of the week, by Philo-Israel, are 1d., or 9d. per dozen, postage extra.

The prayer of the Union, as on the card of membership, may now be obtained printed in larger type, price 1d. for three copies, post free; or 1s. per 100 for distribution.

The bound volume of Monthly Comments (first series) may be had in paper covers for 1s., postage 2d., or in cloth 1s. 9d., postage 3d. Address: Miss J. Lawrence, Rosslyn, Upper Teddington, Middlesex.

J. LAWRENCE, Hon. Sec.

ANGLO-ISRAEL FREE DISTRIBUTION FUND.

THE following subscriptions, received from April 16 to May 15, are very gratefully acknowledged:—Received by Hon. Treasurer, Miss J. Lawrence: Mrs. A. B. S., Sydney, N. S. Wales, £1; C. E., Bradford, 2s. 6d.; Mrs. P., Leamington, 2s. 6d.; Mrs. L., Upper Teddington, £1; H. G. (monthly sub.), 1s.; C. B. (monthly sub.), 5s.; Miss B., Ripon, 2s. 6d.; A Friend, 3s. Received by Miss E. M. Rush: Mr. W. W., Devonport, 5s.; Mr. W. P., Glasgow, £1; Miss S., Lee, 2s.; O. M., 2s. 6d. Also by the Secretary, from P. C. G., Sheffield, £2. Total, £6 6s.

Owing to the continued low state of finances, the work of the Fund has considerably slackened, the number of BANNERS, for example, having been reduced to 39, from numbers ranging hitherto 130 to 150 weekly. This enforced curtailment must be a disappointment to those who look forward to the weekly receipt of this journal. Parcels of various pamphlets have been forwarded by the secretary to Bradford, Penarth, S. Wales, and S. Hayling, while BANNERS have been sent weekly to Ohio, U.S.A., Rugby, and Birkenhead.

Miss E. M. Rush has despatched periodicals as follows:—Devonport, Guildford, Glasgow, Ulvaston, Briton Ferry, Rotherhithe, Netley Hospital, Guildford, Lee, and Westminster. Abroad: To India—Fyzabad, Secunderabad, Roorkee, Trimulgherry, Ahmedabad; Egypt—Wady Halfa, Assouan; Fiji Islands; Toronto; Bardadoes; Malta; Port Nolloth; S. Africa, and H. M. S. Himalaya.

Miss E. M. Rush begs to acknowledge with many thanks 500 "Britain's Inheritance" from the British-Israel Association, Liverpool; the valuable supply of "The Seat of the Scornful," by S. T. A., and "Our Scythian Ancestors," from the Rev. T. W. Boyce; also a parcel of literature from Mrs. Frad.

Letters are continually coming to hand wherein the recipients of literature detail the good uses they are making of it. As an instance one good worker relates how in a most densely populated suburb of his town he has succeeded in gathering weekly an assembly of from 30 to 40 intelligent working men to listen to the good news that Lost Israel is found in the British nation, and how important it is that these hearers shall not be sent empty away, but receive suitable periodicals to read, and to make use of as opportunities occur.

CHARLES HORNER, Secretary.

Contributions to the Fund will be thankfully received by the Hon. Treasurer, Miss J. Lawrence, Rosslyn, Hampton-road, Upper Teddington, Middlesex; by the Hon. Sec., Miss E. M. Rush, 103, Burnt Ash-road, Lee, London, S.E.; or by Mr. Charles Horner, 34, Sheen Park, Richmond, Surrey.

Grants of literature will be made on application to Miss Rush, or the Secretary.

April 15, 1886.

ON Monday, May 24, the Queen entered her sixty-eighth year, an age which has been exceeded by only seven English Sovereigns.—On June 20 the Queen will commence the fiftieth year of her reign

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed: — "Philo-Israel," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

SUBSCRIPTIONS	£ s. d.
Annual Subscription for one copy weekly (including the Twelve Double Numbers) post free	- 0 7 6
Two Copies (including Double Numbers) -	- 0 13 6
Three Copies " " " "	- 1 0 4
Four Copies " " " "	- 1 5 6
Six Copies " " " "	- 1 16 4

Post Office Orders to be made payable at the head office, St. Martin's-le-grand. London, to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C., and W. H. GUEST & Co. 29, Paternoster-row, London.

The Editor cannot undertake to return rejected MSS. unless stamps for the purpose be sent. Parties requiring an answer should enclose a stamp.

Contents Bills and Show Cards may be obtained on application to the Publishers.

Advertisements should be sent to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

Prepaid Advertisements are inserted at the rate of 30 words for 1s. 4d.

PREPAID "WANTED," &c., ADVERTISEMENTS, 27 words, 1s.; 4d. every additional line.

WANTED, HOUSEKEEPER for small Family. Manufacturing Town in Yorkshire. Identity believer preferred. State age and particulars, also enclose Photo, which will be returned, to H. M., care of R. Banks & Son, Racquet Court, Fleet Street.

HUNDREDS OF THOUSANDS of Persons, from all parts of the world, will visit, during the next few months, the COLONIAL AND INDIAN EXHIBITION at South Kensington. Each Visitor should obtain from Messrs. Willing's Bookstalls at South Kensington Station, a copy of "THE PENNY POPULAR GUIDE TO THE EXHIBITION." There are, however, hundreds of thousands who will be unable to see this marvellous collection of the Arts and Products of the British Empire. These also may form some idea of the extent and beauty of the Exhibition by reading this Guide, which may be obtained of Robert Banks and Son, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, London, E.C. Post Free to any part of the Postal Union for 2d.

PUBLISHED BY ROBT. BANKS & SON,
RACQUET COURT, FLEET STREET, E.C.

Price 1s. per 100, assorted packets 1s. 2d.; 8s. 6d. per 1,000 (nett). Carriage free 4d. extra.

Thoughts for the British Folk.

Suggested by PHILO-ISRAEL.

No. 1.—Multitudinousness.
No. 2.—The Gates.
No. 3.—The Nation and Company of Nations.
No. 4.—British Wealth.
No. 5.—The Rulers Over Many Nations.
No. 6.—The Universal Creditor.
No. 7.—The Ever-Continuing British Monarchy.
No. 8.—The Scattered People at Home in Every Climate
No. 9.—The Queen, Lords, and Commons.
No. 10.—The Unconquerable Nation.
No. 1.—The Fatally Destructive Race.
No. 12.—The Isolated Nation.
No. 13.—The Nation Which Belts the Earth.
No. 14.—The Emancipators of the Slave
No. 15.—The Christian Nation.
No. 16.—The Ten Commandments.
No. 17.—The Asylum for the Foreign Refugee.
No. 18.—The Possessors of the "Sign."
No. 19.—The Universal Missionaries.
No. 20.—Testimony of the Book of Common Prayer.
No. 21.—Church and State, and also Disestablishment.
No. 22.—Our Poor Laws.
No. 23.—The Labour Question is an Identity Question.
No. 24.—Emigration.

R. BANKS & SON Racquet-court, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

Third Edition. Just ready. Price 1d.; 12 copies, post free, 1s.; 100 copies, carriage paid, 6s. 6d. 16 pages.

Ephraim-Israel, the Pivot Nation of Prophecy and History.

By V. M. COX.

Being a Lecture delivered before the Metropolitan Anglo-Israel Association.

Robert Banks and Son, Printers, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

A BOOK OF REMARKABLE INTEREST.

Price, cloth gilt, 2/6, post free for P.O.O.

SCENES BEYOND THE GRAVE.

By W. J. STANFORD.
Edited by the late C. W. BANKS.

Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

METROPOLITAN ANGLO-ISRAEL ASSOCIATION,

PALACE CHAMBERS, 9, BRIDGE STREET, WESTMINSTER, S.W.

President: The Right Hon. Viscount Folkestone, M.P.

THE ANNUAL PUBLIC MEETING

WILL (D.V.) TAKE PLACE IN

EXETER HALL (LOWER ROOM), STRAND, ON WEDNESDAY EVENING, JUNE 9, AT 7.

ADMIRAL BEDINGFELD

Will take the CHAIR. The following Gentlemen are expected to take part in the proceedings:—The RIGHT REV. BISHOP TITCOMB, D.D.; REV. D. HANAN, B.D. (Rector of Tipperary); REV. A. J. J. CACHEMAILLE, M.A. (Vicar of St. Mary's, Oldham); REV. R. DOUGLAS, M.A., (Vicar of Kidsgrove, Stoke-on-Trent); REV. EDWARD DENNY, M.A. (Vicar of Laracor, Ireland); REV. J. DAVIES THOMAS; SURGEON-GEN. J. M. GRANT, M.D.; W. H. PETERS, Esq., J.P.; A. OSBORNE, Esq.; E. W. BIRD, Esq. (Philo-Israel, Editor of the RANNER OF ISRAEL); D. A. ONSLOW, Esq., J.P., and others.

ADMISSION FREE. A limited number of Seats Will be reserved. Tickets One Shilling each at the Doors.

The Eighth ANNUAL MEETING of MEMBERS will take place at PALACE CHAMBERS, WESTMINSTER, the same afternoon at Three o'clock, to receieve the Report and elect Officers, &c., for the ensuing year. Tea will be provided. J. J. SHRUBSOLE, Hon. Sec.

N.B.—On and after June 24th next, the Office of the Association will be 5, WILTON ROAD, OPPOSITE VICTORIA STATION, S.W.

MOST EXTRAORDINARY OCCURRENCE.

GRAND COLONIAL Curiosity Prize Packet.

THE BIGGEST THING

WE HAVE EVER DONE.

Although noted for great bargains, yet this time we have totally eclipsed all former efforts, and offer the most extraordinary value ever heard of. Every packet contains a volume of over 100 pages, closely printed, of thrilling stories by CHARLES DICKENS, originally published at 2s. 6d.; a box containing a double-jointed Bamboo Fishing Rod and four Japanese Fish, for playing Japanese fish game; a set of six Japanese Fairy Rods, each rod containing 100 beautiful variegated coloured stars; 25 wonderful Japanese Flowers, a pretty flexible Plush Monkey, 25 coloured Scraps for decorating Screens, Fans, Boxes, Windows, &c.; one good Pocket Handkerchief; The Lord's Prayer photographed on glass, also the Ten Commandments photographed on glass (both of these photographs are only one-eighth of an inch large, and are mounted each in a pretty ivorine opera-glass, in which is a powerful magnifying glass, enabling them to be read as plainly as possible. These sell separately at 6d. each); one beautiful Leatherette Writing Case, sold at 1s. each, fitted with various compartments and containing supply of note paper and envelopes; three coloured Cards of Robins; and one larger Card, in gold and colours, of Animals.

We guarantee all the above to be in every Packet, and to be sent carriage free for 2s. 6d.; two packets, 4s. 9d.; three for 6s. 6d. Also, to every person ordering three packets will be given, in addition, a complete thrilling novel by CHARLES DICKENS, entitled "Nicholas Nickleby." Such an opportunity is unparallelled, and should be seized at once, as we only offer the above for one month.

FOR ONE MONTH ONLY,

It being simply a gigantic experiment on our part, to see if it will bring in sufficient orders for our other goods to pay for so doing. Please to reckon up what we offer for 2s. 6d. Call and see the articles. There is no deception.

But, in addition to all the above, we give a PRIZE FREE in every packet, without any extra charge. The Prizes consist of Silver Watches, real Gold Rings, Gold Pencils, best Pocket Knives, Silver brooches, Silver pins, &c., &c. We put so many Watches, Rings, &c., in every 100 packets, and everyone stands a perfectly equal chance of getting a best prize. Any person who does not like to chance what prize they may get can have given them instead a real Sterling Silver Scarf Pin. Persons wishing this must distinctly say so when they write for the packet. These packets are giving every satisfaction. We are receiving hundreds of repeat orders, and have sent as many as 24 packets to one house. All orders must positively have the Coupon sent with them.

"BANNER OF ISRAEL" COUPON. 2.6.86.
Entitles holder to Colonial Curiosity Packets at above prices.
(Signed) J. THEOBALD & COMPANY.

J. THEOBALD & CO.,

(Established in Kensington over 50 years),
6 & 7, BATH PLACE,
KENSINGTON HIGH ST., LONDON, W.

SEE FIFTY REASONS WHY THE ANGLO-SAXONS ARE THE LOST TEN TRIBES. Price 6d., post free 7d.

The Land of Espousals.
The Testimony of Language.
The Transfer of the Kingdom from Judah to Israel.
"Shiloh:" Its Interpretation.
Ireland not Missioned from Rome

Robert Banks & Son, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C.

Free by Parcels Post for 3s. 3d.

THE "COLONIAL SHOE."

This is without exception the cheapest, as well as the most comfortable Lady's Walking Shoe ever manufactured. The tops are of French Lasting, to lace, with good soles and military heels. Sample pair sent free on receipt of Postal Order for 3s. 3d. to any part of the United Kingdom.

EASY SLIPPERS FOR TENDER FEET.

W. Keast will, on receipt of 2s. 9d., send free by Parcels Post, a pair of his French Lasting, elastic front Slippers. Thousands of Pairs of these Slippers have been sold. Everybody satisfied. Send number and size.

WALTER KEAST, 102, Kennington Park Rd., London, S.E. Established 1851.

NOTTINGHAM LACE.

SAMPLE PARCEL, 12 PATTERNS, 1s. Send Postal Order to
WM. HILL, LACE MANUFACTURER, LONG EATON, NEAR NOTTINGHAM.

ETHELINE.

A New and most effective Remedy for CORNS.

Perfectly safe and harmless. Is very easily applied. Cures in a few applications, without the slightest pain. Everyone troubled with either Corns, Warts or Bunions, will find relief by using ETHELINE. To be obtained of all Chemists, or post free for 14 stamps, from—

J. LLEWELLYN, CHEMIST, COWBRIDGE.

GENT'S 18-C. ROLLED GOLD SOLID DOUBLE ALBERTS.

We offer to all readers for the next few weeks an Albert of most marvellous value, at the merely nominal value of 2s., so as to induce further custom. They are finished equal to a chain costing £7. This chance should not be missed. As we have only a limited number we can sell at this absurdly low price, we can supply no person with more than one. P.O.O.'s to be made payable to Ward and Co. Orders by post receive immediate attention.—Messrs. A. WARD & Co., 331, Old Kent-road, London, S.E.

EXTERMINATION OF ALL CORNS & BUNIONS

Guaranteed by using Gardner's Patented Corn and Bunion Exterminator, an ingenious little instrument which can be used by anyone. Painless in operation—"never fails." Price 1s. The highest Surgical Testimonials can be seen and operations successfully performed in all peculiar cases, bad nails, &c., at the Patentee's, who will send the Exterminator direct for 13 stamps.

C. GARDNER, Chiropodist, Kendal.

Printed for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C. PUBLISHED BY GUEST, HAYWORTH, & Co., 29, PATERNOSTER-ROW, WEDNESDAY, JUNE 2, 1886. All rights reserved.

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."

(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India.)

"And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the Forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS of the EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. X., No. 493. Entered at Stationers' Hall.] WEDNESDAY, JUNE 9, 1886. [PRICE ONE PENNY.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

PAGE

Why Mr. Gladstone's Home Rule Bill Must Lead to Separation 229
The Character of Israel's Rule in India and Elsewhere 230
Present-Day Problems, and How Anglo-Israel Truth Explains and Solves Them. Miss Cox's Lecture at Clifton, April 30, 1886.—Part II. 231
Metropolitan Anglo-Israel Association Report 232
Zululand Again 233
Sowing the Seed. By E. M. Rush 234
The Brigaton Grammar School and Our Identity 235

WHY MR. GLADSTONE'S HOME RULE BILL MUST LEAD TO SEPARATION.

IT has often been asked why the concession of Home Rule to Ireland, as Mr. Gladstone proposes to give it, must, as alleged by many, infallibly lead to separation of the two countries. We propose shortly to state some of the considerations which lead us to the conclusion that the Bill now under discussion, if passed, can conduct us only to the goal of Mr. Parnell's desires—namely, entire separation. In the first place, the Bill gives Ireland a separate Parliament, but in certain respects one which is to be in subordination to the British Parliament, from which the Irish members are, however, to be excluded! It is incredible that Irishmen should be content with that! The Bill further provides for the taxation of Ireland by the British Parliament, such taxation being without representation in that assembly, which Mr. Gladstone declares is regarded as foreign by every Irishman. As Mr. Finlay said in his excellent speech on May 21: "Ireland, by the Bill as it at present stands, is reduced to a mere dependency, paying tribute to a stronger and wealthier neighbour, but has no voice in the shaping of the policy for which that tribute was required." It is said that the Bill would put Ireland in the position of the Colonies. But "the Colonies have no voice at present in the conduct of Imperial affairs, and they do not contribute taxation for Imperial purposes." The very thing it is proposed to do by the Bill for Ireland was done by us to the American Colonies, and the attempt led to rebellion and separation. Is it likely to end in less in the case of Ireland? "Scotland" (said Mr. Finlay) "would spurn such a proposal, and why should Irishmen accept it as the final and complete remedy for their troubles?" Abroad this subject is being very closely examined, and here is what The Paris thinks of it. It believes Mr. Gladstone's Bill "will place Ireland in the same position with regard to England as Canada and the Australian Colonies, and admits that if the population of Ireland were but an offshoot of the mother hive, the scheme would be of secondary importance. The case, however, is far different:—

What is contemplated is to confer on a hostile nationality, hitherto subject to coercive laws, an almost absolute independence, which there is very good reason to fear that it will use in its turn to oppress that portion of the population which, owing to religious or ethnical causes, is closely allied to the United Kingdom. It is that aspect of the question which passionately excites our neighbours. They dread, not without reason, the creation at a few miles from the shores of Great Britain of a hostile State which must become the natural ally of every enemy of the British Empire. Mr. Gladstone and his devotees contend, on the contrary, that the best means of averting that peril is to grant to the Irish the autonomy desired by them.

The fact is, if the Irish people were of one homogeneous race, as Mr. Gladstone supposes in his proposed legislation, the Bill does not go far enough. It will be accepted now as a step to obtain a further instalment till complete and entire separation from the British Empire shall have been secured. But the whole scheme is based upon a gigantic delusion. The Irish are not a united homogeneous people. There are two nations in Ireland. The minority in Ulster are Protestant British-Israelites. The Southern and Western Irish, the Roman Catholic majority, are foreign Phœnician Canaanites, who hate the Northern wealthy and energetic minority, and will certainly strive hard to extirpate them and destroy them from the face of the land. The flagrant evil of the present measure is that it sets up an independent and co-ordinate Legislature in Ireland, and yet retains power in the British Parliament to reserve from Irish jurisdiction matters respecting taxation, war, and foreign politics, leaving Ireland no voice at all in Imperial affairs. It is impossible such a Bill can finally settle the differences between the two countries. It opens the way for further rupture, the end of which must be a separation between the two, to be followed by a bloody war for supremacy between the opulent industrious Northern minority, assisted by the wealth and power and sympathy of England, Scotland, and Wales on the one side, and the indigent, poor, and turbulent South Irish Canaanite, who will be helped by foreign American subsidies, men, and money. Such are some of the more cogent reasons why Mr. Gladstone's Bill must, humanly speaking, lead, if passed, to separation, disruption of the Empire, war, and bloodshed.

But will it pass? We do not think the second reading will be carried in the House of Commons! If it is the Bill cannot survive the Committee stage, and certainly will be thrown out by the Lords! What will the country say to it if Parliament be dissolved? We do not think it will endorse Mr. Gladstone's scheme, or give him a "mandate" to break up the Empire! This Empire is Israel's, and its destiny is not disruption, but growth, so as to include the world, and therefore, Ireland! Ireland is one of the "Isles of the West," given in fee simple by the God of Israel to His people, and held in respect to the North of Ireland by that race at this very moment. It is inconceivable that such an integral portion of their inheritance should be wrung from the House of Israel by the proposed legislation, the fact being that the Irish Canaanite wants strong Government to teach him to obey the law, but is unwilling to learn the lesson, if we, on our parts, are prepared weakly to give him the option to disobey. The God of Israel reigns! and neither Mr. Gladstone nor Mr. Parnell can override His just decision. Ireland is Israel's possession, and can never be surrendered to the alien! Israel, praise ye the Lord!

Digitized by Google

THE CHARACTER OF ISRAEL'S RULE IN INDIA AND ELSEWHERE.

A ZEALOUS Anglo-Israelite has sent us a quotation from Mr. Edwin Arnold's communication to the Daily Telegraph of March last, on "India Revisited," and points to his opinion as valuable, because "Mr. E. Arnold is a great admirer of the Buddhist religion, and has had as good, if not a better, opportunity of arriving at the true character of native feeling in India than most Englishmen." What he said, regarding "British Rule in India," was this:—

Political mischiefmongers who talk at home or in India of the discontent and ill-will of her inhabitants towards the British, are either ignorant or malignant. I have recently passed through hundreds of her towns and cities, and over thousands of miles of her districts—often wandering alone in crowded bazaars or solitary jungles—and have not encountered a single evil look or received one rude or unfriendly answer. In conversation with intelligent people of all castes and classes, I have found the blessings of our strong and upright sway perfectly well understood, and repaid—not, indeed, with affection, since that is asking too much from Hindoo natures—but with respect, admiration, and general acquiescence. There are classes, of course, which will always remain hostile; and India is an ocean of humanity, about the various seas, gulfs, and inlets of which no man can ever securely generalise. Yet I am personally convinced, by observation and inquiry, that the roots of our Râj—despite all drawbacks and perils—were never so deeply struck into the soil as at present, and that, while we must strive more and more to develop the splendid resources of the country, and to win the hearts of her people by fearless but wise and gradual expansion of their rights and liberties, India knows well that she never has received from Heaven a richer blessing than the Pax Britannica.

Mr. Arnold's testimony being true to our own knowledge, and that of hundreds of living witnesses at the present day, how do we account for the fact, that 250 millions of aliens, many of them being of warlike races, hostile by religion to the paramount Power, are content with British rule, and are willing it should continue to dominate the land? There can be, humanly speaking, but one cause, and that is, that British Israel's rule in India is a righteous rule, carried on in no selfish mode, but for the good of the multitudes of beings whom God has given into our hands in that wondrous continent. Can we wonder, that seeing the result of our successful government of the masses of humanity we rule so easily and so well in India, the inhabitants of neighbouring nations should desire to come under our dominion, and reap the same benefits which the Hindus and Mohammedans of India derive from our conquest of the peninsula? The Burmese, of Upper Burmah, have, by reason of our righteous rule in India and in Lower Burmah, willingly accepted the British Râj, and are rapidly settling down as British subjects. Egypt is looking for the time to come when the Government of the Queen will become the paramount Power in the land, and in Palestine the fellaheen wonder when "the English" are coming to undertake the government, and turn out the corrupt and effete rule of the Turkish Pashas. The Scotsman of March 18, 1886, contains a letter from the Rev. A. C. Macdonald, written at Port Said, wherein the writer, from local knowledge, comes to the conclusion, that so good and righteous is British rule, that the only mistake Lord Beaconsfield made was, to annex worthless Cyprus instead of Palestine; and the only mistake Mr. Gladstone has made in Egypt is, his failure to annex the whole land just after the battle of Tel-el-Kebir. We feel sure Mr. Macdonald must be an Anglo-Israelite, and therefore present our readers with some of his remarkable statements respecting Egypt and the Holy Land. He wrote inter alia:—

There is scarcely a nation in Europe but is making manifest preparation for war. At present, and for some time back, the only safety of Turkey lies in the disunion of the great European Powers. But the system of her Government is so universally corrupt, that the autonomy of the Ottoman Empire cannot long be maintained. The arbitrary power of the Sultan transmitted to the Pashas and to all his sub-delegates gives free course to extortion and tyranny, which circulates through every class, and the effect is everywhere fatal to agriculture, commerce, population, and everything which constitutes the power and prosperity of the State. But the time has arrived when mere authority and tradition will avail but little, and everything which does not prove its right to exist is justly doomed to perish. And what a scramble there shall be among the European eagles over this wreck. Russia must have an outlet to the Southern seas, Constantinople, and the Bosphorus; and although the eye of all Europe is on Palestine, yet France and Russia are the only two nations that are at present striving and bidding for the mastery in Syria. It is a significant fact, that the Russian buildings in Jerusalem alone could easily accommodate 1,000 troops, not to speak of her valuable property at Hebron and other places throughout the province; and this, after all, is nothing compared with the hold, the power, and the influence which France has in that country. And all this is not without design, and the intention is not disguised by the non-Moslem communities throughout Syria. These and such things constitute the "peculiarities" which make it imperative that England should hold Egypt. Yea, and get possession of Palestine as well.

Two great life blunders, in the opinion of many, have been committed by two of England's greatest statesmen. The one by the late Lord Beaconsfield in not getting a hold of Palestine at the Treaty of Berlin, instead of that wretched island, Cyprus; and the other by Mr. Gladstone, in not permanently occupying Egypt immediately after Tel-el-Kebir. But Mr. Gladstone, whose sympathy with oppressed nationalities is well known, may yet have an opportunity of undoing both blunders—of securing at no distant date the possession of these two important positions. With their numerous advantages of climate and soil, both Syria and Egypt, whose melancholy and dismal state the strong language of the prophet can alone adequately describe, would soon again become a paradise were they inhabited by industrious people, permitted to reap the fruits of their own labour under an enlightened Government.

* * * * * *

The whole civilised world is indebted to these ancient countries as the foundations of civilisation, and the seats of religion, science, commerce, and education, but no other nation is so likely to come to their relief as Great Britain; and now that her hands are in, it is to be hoped she will not slacken until these peoples, which have experienced the predicted misery during ages of subjection and abasement, shall realise the predicted mercy and the blessing, which in the light of present events seem hastening to their fulfilment, when "there shall be an highway out of Egypt to Assyria. Israel shall be a third with Assyria, even a blessing in the midst of the land." I am, &c., R. C. MACDONALD.

The writer of the above remarkable letter being a clergyman, and one who repudiates a "jingo" policy, is satisfied the British rule, extended over Palestine and Egypt, will be for the benefit of those lands. His last words seem to point to his adoption of Anglo-Israelite views. However that may be,

Digitized by Google

he is evidently in error in respect to "the last word in the Eastern Question," Constantinople. He thinks it must be left to Russia, who requires her outlet to the Southern seas—to wit, "her Gate." But will she get that any more than Palestine and Egypt? We think not! The future owners and possessors of Egypt and the land of the inheritance will assuredly, even on secular grounds, acquire possession of "the great Gate of all the Gates." Russia is not the "owner of the Gates." Israel is! and therefore, to her will fall the possession of the Gate of "her enemies," even of Constantinople; and with the Gate, the ownership of all the land of Europe contiguous to the scene of the coming destruction.

PRESENT-DAY PROBLEMS, AND HOW ANGLO-ISRAEL TRUTH EXPLAINS AND SOLVES THEM.

MISS COX'S LECTURE AT CLIFTON, APRIL 30, 1886.

(Continued from page 223.)

PART II.

I WISH I could believe what is strongly maintained by many Identity writers, that, for Israel's Church, disestablishment is an impossibility; but though I should be alone in the opinion, I must confess that I cannot, thus far, find any definite promise which I can interpret as implying that Israel's Church and her State shall continue in unbroken union down to the end of the age. True, the Church and State were in alliance when the unchangeable covenant was made with David; but though the perpetuity of the monarchy is distinctly guaranteed, it is not said that the Constitution shall undergo no change, otherwise the tribal distinctions would have remained clearly defined, in which case Israel could never have lost her covenant name. There was a period in our nation's history when the functions and prerogatives, though not the name of sovereign, were temporarily vested in one not of royal blood; while the unworthy monarch of the Davidic dynasty remained in exile till the providence of God restored him to his throne. Even so, is it not conceivable that in the inscrutable purposes of God, the Church's enemies may be permitted a brief season of triumph? A brief season at best. Should it be thus, assuredly, at the coming of Israel's Messiah to "take His great power and reign," the Church "made white and tried," shall be re-united to a wholly Christian state—a state wherein Infidelity, Agnosticism, and Rationalism can have no part, because all its members will have been brought under the gracious operations of the Spirit of Truth, and He will have "guided them into all truth." This Church will assuredly embrace within her communion all who now feel it to be their duty to dissent from her on account of abuses; for abuses will then exist no longer, but all will be in very truth "one" in Israel's Redeemer, and "He shall reign for ever and ever."

SABBATH OBSERVANCE.

We may next consider what ought to be our attitude, as Israelites, with reference to those societies which seek to desecrate the Christian Sabbath, God's gracious gift to His chosen ones, by opening museums and picture galleries on the Holy Day, and whose counsels, if followed, would tend to reduce the English Sabbath to the miserable level of the Continental Sunday. It is futile to argue, as do the Secularists, that they are actuated by a disinterested desire to benefit the working classes. God's command, placed on record in His sacred Book, may not be lightly ignored, nor will He hold those guiltless who dare defy its authority in this matter. Whatever trenches ever so slightly on the Sabbath's sanctity, it is our imperative duty not only to deprecate, but to oppose strenuously, and with all our powers concentrated in antagonism thereto. God has made the possession of splendid national blessings expressly contingent on due observance of His Sabbaths, and assuredly chastisement awaits us if we fail to observe, nationally, His conditions.

We have recently seen with pain and indignation the passing in the Upper House (though by a narrow majority), of Lord Thurlow's motion in favour of opening museums and art galleries from dawn till dusk on Sundays, except during the hours of divine service. This is "the thin end of the wedge." The anti-Sabbatarians would, perhaps, be content with this seemingly trifling concession for awhile; but would their demands cease here? We think not. This point once yielded, what guarantee have we that the theatres will not presently obtain legal authority for opening their doors on the Sabbath, in London, as well as in Paris, Brussels, or Berlin? One only. It is found in our Identity. In Exodus xxxi. 13, God promises His people Israel that the Sabbath sign shall for ever mark them off from the rest of the world, as the people whom He chose to be His peculiar treasure. True, the holy day is not kept as it ought to be, but we have here security that we shall never lose it. It is when the enemy comes in like a flood that the Spirit of the Lord is pledged to lift up a standard against him. This makes us sure that the triumph of the anti-Sabbatarians is to be but of short duration. He who says to the angry billows, "Thus far, but no farther," can no less perfectly control the minds of men and overrule the deliberations of governments. The Sabbath is one of the choicest gifts Israel has received from the hand of God. Let her prize it very highly, and let her rejoice in the certainty that since God's Word says she shall possess the sign for ever, neither ungodly men, nor the evil one himself shall prevail to wrest it away from her.

FOREIGN MISSIONS.

But it may be farther observed that the Identity throws a most important light on our national and personal duty with regard to Foreign Missions. It has somehow been the misfortune of our spiritual instructors that they, while recognising God's gracious design to bless all mankind with the message of His grace, have failed to perceive that He has also intimated, and that in no uncertain terms, the channel through which these Gentile peoples are to receive the knowledge of His way of salvation. This want of perception is very remarkable, inasmuch as God's purpose to make Israel the "keeper of the truths," and His messenger to bear the Gospel to the remotest regions of the habitable globe, runs like a golden thread through all the sacred writings from Genesis to the Apocalypse. Even the dark providences that led up to Israel's exile and subsequent dispersion were but means to the accomplishment of this divine object. In exile Israel received and accepted the pure teachings of Christianity, and though for a season the light shone dimly, and there was more than one relapse into virtual idolatry (Papal, though not Pagan), in due time came the era of reformation, and Israel, saying, "What have I to do any more with idols?" cast off the Romish shackles, and arose to newness of life—life breathed into her by the Spirit of God, in accordance with Ezekiel's glorious predictions. Still, her work abroad did not immediately begin. Numerical increase, territorial expansion, providential training, were all needed before Britain might enter on her grand mission; and it was near the close of the last century that she made her inaugural response to the divine command, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature." But what do we see now? Everywhere, North, South, East, and West, on Continent or Island, in burning Tropic or Frigid Zone, the Banner of the Cross has been unfurled, the pioneers of Christianity often laying down their lives in the grand campaign; and everywhere (though in varying quantity) fruit unto the Master's praise has been garnered. Some lands have been simply revolutionised since their acceptance of Israel's message. Fiji, once the haunt of barbarous and bloodthirsty savages, whose cruelties were of a nature too atrocious for description, is now the home of a peaceful and law-abiding community, whose Christian sanctuaries numbered by the score are mainly self-supporting, and who in their turn, by means of native agency, seek to extend to other islands the good news to which they chiefly owe their present happy and prosperous condition. Few ever pause to inquire why British missionaries so enormously outnumber those of all other nationalities; why seven-tenths of all money contributed annually for mission work is supplied from British pockets; why British vessels carry copies of the Word of God beyond sea to every distant shore, and British societies at home are continually employed in keeping up the supply for exportation.

Digitized by Google

But were such an inquiry to be instituted, there could be but one satisfactory answer to it—namely, that which Our Identity supplies. We are doing this blessed work, because we are Israel; for we know that the purposes of God do not change, and that He has not deposed the originally commissioned messenger in favour of any Gentile people under the sun; not that Gentile missionaries cannot render acceptable service. "Let him that heareth say, 'Come,'" is the divine mandate, and native agency has been signally owned and blessed. Still, no Gentile nation can ever become a means of blessing to all the others as Israel is destined to do. This is the very reason of her existence, and such a belief is calculated above everything to inspire passionate enthusiasm for the cause of Foreign Missions.

"I should like to believe we are Israel," affirmed one whose chief ambition it is to enter the mission-field, "because it would give me such an impetus for my work." So it must do. Surely if the nation, as a nation, could have flashed upon her inner consciousness the knowledge of her exalted destiny and her high commission she would rise to the occasion, and we should hear no more about an insufficiency of funds and a scarcity of workers.

Those to whom our truth has been revealed ought, above all others, to have the spread of Christian missions closely at heart, and to endeavour by every means in their power to strengthen the hands of those who are going forth to proclaim the Gospel of Christ to the inhabitants of the dark places of the earth. May we do this more than ever henceforward.

(To be continued.)

METROPOLITAN ANGLO-ISRAEL ASSOCIATION REPORT.

FOR THE YEAR ENDING APRIL 30TH, 1886.

THE past year has been one of universal and almost unprecedented commercial depression. The result has been (with some noble exceptions) that the income of the various religious and philanthropic institutions dependent upon voluntary contributions has sensibly suffered, and that of this Association does not form an exception.

Some of our friends have been unable to renew their subscription, while others have been compelled to reduce the amount: notwithstanding, the balance-sheet shows an improvement upon any that has been presented during the past few years. This has resulted from the receipt of a legacy from the late Miss Dorothy Mildmay Bacon, of Bristol and St. Leonards-on-Sea, who bequeathed to the association one fourth part of her residuary estate; which share amounted to £70 3s. 11d. This has enabled your council to meet the necessary expenditure without a special appeal, which would otherwise have been inevitable. This is the first legacy, and your Council sincerely hope it will not be the last.

The affiliated associations remain the same as last year—twenty-one in number; but it is known that there is an immense number of secret, as well as of avowed believers in the Identity who are not attached to any association.

Your council are removing the offices to a small room situate at 5, Wilton-road, opposite Victoria Station, S.W., a spot easily reached from most parts of the metropolis. By this arrangement a saving of about £35 a year will be effected. It is proposed that arrangements be made to give a weekly lecture in one or other of the London districts, with a view to the establishment of local associations.

During the past Autumn and Winter a series of monthly lectures has been delivered at the rooms. Some of these were numerously attended, and in every instance the papers were warmly appreciated.

The Bible readings were carried on weekly, until the severe cold of the unusually prolonged Winter rendered it advisable to suspend them until the ensuing Autumn. Lectures have also been delivered in St. James's Lecture Hall, Forest-gate, placed at the Association's disposal by the Vicar, the Rev. Mr. Donovan, M.A., who kindly presided.

Mr. Hammond, a genealogist, medalist, and Identity advocate, gave two lectures in the East-end on "The Genealogy of the Bible," tracing the pedigree of Her Most Gracious Majesty Queen Victoria to David. These lectures were highly spoken of in the local newspapers. The Rev. J. Davies Thomas, C.M.S., has also given two lectures. One at Hampstead, on "The Coronation Stone," and another at Deal, at the request of the Rev. Dr. Bruce Payne, on "The British Race the Key to Prophecy."

Mr. Onslow also gave two drawing-room lectures at Hampstead, last Summer, on "Joseph's Birthright," and "The Abrahamic Covenant."

By the courtesy of Mr. Huxley a drawing-room conversazione was held in his house, in Old Cavendish-street, in February last. The Rev. J. D. Thomas introduced the subject of the Identity in a very lucid address, and an animated conversation followed.

Your Council sincerely hope their friends will secure in their respective districts the use of rooms, halls, schools, or chapels, for lectures, in which case the Council will provide Lecturers free of charge, and contribute towards the cost of advertising where needed.

It is with feelings of surprise and sorrow your Council have heard that two most able and God-fearing lay-helpers in the Church have been compelled to relinquish either their appointments or their Anglo-Israel tenets. To their honour be it stated, they did not "sell the truth," but chose the former alternative.

Your Council have viewed with indignation the action of the present Prime Minister regarding Ireland. They have no fear, however, for the result. Israel's kingdom can neither be diminished nor disintegrated; on the contrary, a substantial addition to the Empire is recorded almost yearly, thus gradually and grandly fulfilling the Scripture prophecies concerning Israel.

There is no longer an independent Burmah. Australia and New Zealand forbid the settlement of the New Hebrides by the French, while only a few days since the British flag was hoisted on the Kermedec Islands, North-east of New Zealand, by orders from the Home Government.

Again, the Imperial Federation movement is likely to be advanced by the present agitation concerning Ireland. This is a powerful force, antagonistic alike to disintegration or dismemberment.

Your Council have to announce—and they do so with unfeigned regret—the resignation of the Presidency by Viscount Folkestone, M.P. This his lordship does with the greatest reluctance, but feels the claims arising from his political engagements leave him no alternative.

Your Council are, however, happy to be able to state that his Lordship will continue to support this association, and has consented that his name should appear on the Association's official documents as patron.

Digitized by Google

A resolution will be submitted to the annual meeting expressing the association's deep regret, and presenting its warmest thanks for the active part his Lordship has taken in its operations during the past seven years, and the heartiest wishes of all its members for his Lordship's continued prosperity and usefulness.

Your Council acknowledges with thanks the receipt of a parcel of useful literature from an anonymous donor in Surrey, also the continued efforts of those excellent lady workers, Miss J. Lawrence and Miss E. M. Rush, in the circulation of Identity literature in all parts of the world, and pray that the Divine blessing may rest upon their devoted exertions in this direction.

The income of the association for the past year has been £202 3s. 8d., and the expenditure £168 1s., as shown in the balance-sheet.

In conclusion, your Council congratulate Philo-Israel (Mr. E. W. Bird,) and Mr. D. A. Onslow on the continued prosperity of the journals conducted by them and devoted to the great cause of the Identity—viz., the BANNER OF ISRAEL and Israel's Hope and Destiny, the recognised organs of the Association. By order,

J. J. SHRUBSOLE, Hon. Sec.

ZULULAND AGAIN.

OUR readers, we suppose, imagined that when the British Government transferred the territory of Zululand to the late Cetewayo they washed their hands of the whole of that large province and would never be harassed with questions respecting its disposal. But Cetewayo was rejected by his countrymen, and soon after died. Since that the unfortunate Zulus, rendered defenceless by our conquest of their armies and by our policy which divided them up into 13 petty kingdoms, have fallen lower and lower in the scale of African races, and are to-day in a most degraded, wretched, miserable condition. The Boers domineer over them and oppress them, and we find that now, as the distinct result of our own treatment of this brave but ruined nation, they must, to escape from Boer maltreatment, abandon their territory, and take refuge in British-ruled lands, or "sink into a condition of helplessness and degradation." Who can rescue them and give them relief? Is there any power in the neighbourhood which can do anything in the matter but ourselves? It may be asked why we are bound to be our brother's keeper? and the answer is ready to hand. We ruined the Zulu nation; we destroyed their armies; we removed their king; we gave them a faulty form of government, and left them at last to their fate, tired of the trouble and expense of governing them. The result, always foreseen, has now come to pass; our sin has found us out! We have acted harshly and cruelly by the Zulus, and now to save ourselves trouble and expense we shall have to apply some remedy which will probably be the only one the Zulus themselves are ready to welcome—namely, the proclamation of a British protectorate over Zululand.

A correspondence has just been published in the Times (April 12, 1886) in which 42 members of Parliament have addressed Earl Granville on the subject. We ask our readers to peruse the representation of our British senators and the answer that our Foreign Secretary gave them. They show, like the straw, which way the wind is blowing; and we shall be much surprised if any way can ever be found to put the matter right but the old, old way—namely, the incorporation of the helpless, ruined province into the British Empire, to restore it to prosperity, peace, and happiness. The correspondence was as follows:—

ZULULAND.

"House of Commons, March, 1886.

"MY LORD,—We desire as members of the House of Commons, being interested in the welfare of South Africa, to address your lordship with reference to the present deplorable condition of Zululand.

"In our judgment the anarchy and misery to which the Zulus have been reduced are the result of the war waged against them by this country, and which, by breaking up their government, their military system, their social order, and their nationality, exposed them to the subsequent encroachments and cruel treatment of white men from the neighbouring territories. It is therefore impossible to ignore the responsibility of Great Britain in this matter. Moreover, it is certain that, if the Government leave the Zulus to their fate, they will either be compelled to take refuge in Natal—where the native population is already excessive—or in the Reserve, with the risk of complications, or they will sink into a condition of helplessness and degradation.

"For these and other reasons, we beg respectfully to express the hope that your lordship will be pleased to take immediate steps to place the Zulus under British protection, which we believe they will welcome.

(Signed)

"Joseph W. Pease.	Courtney Kenny.	Richard Davies.
Donald Currie.	J. E. Ellis.	J. W. Johns.
R. N. Fowler.	W. Bickford-Smith.	D. Jenkins.
L. L. Dillwyn.	John H. Kennaway.	Lewis Fry.
W. Lowther.	E. N. Buxton.	H. G. Allen.
W. Agnew.	F. D. Dixon-Hartland.	George Campbell.
J. C. Bolton.	F. T. Mappin.	W. H. James.
Eugene Wason.	Richard Temple.	Henry Kimber.
Miles MacInnes.	T. T. Paget.	Henry Wiggin.
A. M'Arthur.	James N. Corry.	E. T. Gourley.
Stephen Mason.	Peter M'Lagan.	John Simon.
W. S. Allen.	Thomas Shaw.	H. M. Havelock-Allan.
Mark J. Stewart.	Thomas Burt.	J. E. Gorst.
James Stuart.	J. A. Campbell.	J. Brinton."

The following reply has been received:—

"Downing-street, April 1, 1886.

"SIR,—I am directed by Earl Granville to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 26th ultimo, enclosing a memorial on the present state of Zululand from 42 members of the House of Commons, and I am to state that his lordship will give to this representation of opinion the consideration which its importance deserves.

"I am further to state that, under instructions from Lord Granville, Sir A. E. Havelock is making a careful inquiry into the whole subject with a view to arriving at a satisfactory solution of it. "I am, &c.,

"JOHN BRAMSTON."

Let our opponents explain the extraordinary fact that one portion of the earth after another, by the providential changes of the times is being cast into the unwilling hands of the British Government, who are forced to undertake its administration. North Borneo was annexed by the meddling enterprise of British merchants. Cyprus was appropriated by the zealous foresight of Lord Beaconsfield when the Berlin Treaty was being manipulated. Egypt was forced on our acceptance by the bungling statesmanship of the British ministry of 1882. Every effort to get rid of the troublesome possession by the great minister, who has tried the policy of surrender and retreat over and over again in Egypt, has always been made in vain! Egypt remains to plague the Liberal party; but to be itself blessed by Israel, according to the prophecies. Bechuanaland has become a British-protected province by the genius of Sir Charles Warren; and the British nation have seen with consternation an enormous tract of South-central Africa added to their responsibilities, which may before long involve them in further costly wars. Germany drove us to annex the whole littoral of South Africa, and now misery and Boer tyranny are forcing the Zulu nation and its land into our embrace, and thus is bringing the Transvaal into that close proximity on all sides to British-Israelite power which must at last force the Boers to surrender to that civilised State which is not only destined to engulf them, but to dominate the whole earth as well (Dan. vii. 27). But this domination is not the cruel, grasping thing that some may be ready to account it. British-Israel annexes to bless and elevate the subject nations, and consequently her predominence is coveted and desired by the nations in Africa and in Asia which know the principles of her government. India is happier for the British Râj, and is ready to stand up and fight for it, as we lately saw, against the Russian invasion. Egypt and Palestine, as far as concerns the fellaheen, are ready to welcome the British protectorate. The chiefs in Bechuanaland and Burmah longed for it, and are glad to have it. Cyprus is perfectly reconciled to British rule, and confesses it is happier than it ever was. And now the Zulus, bitterly as we have punished them, cruelly as we have treated them in the past, are ready yet to welcome the protectorate and to settle down peacefully as British subjects for the time to come.

Digitized by Google

Why, it may be asked, is Britain able thus to satisfy her subject races, and how comes it that her government is welcome to the races she subdues and elects to govern? It is because she is Israel and has on her side God's blessing in her efforts to do her duty by her subjects. "I will bless them that bless thee, and curse them that curse thee; and in thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed," was the primeval benediction of Almighty God upon the race (Gen. xii. 3). In fulfilling these her functions Israel, as the British, is carrying out her destined purposes in the world, "blossoming and budding and filling the face of the world with fruit." She is preaching the Gospel "to all nations, families, and kindreds of the earth;" blessing by ruling them, and ruling by blessing them; exercising, in short, the duties of the first-born of the God of the Hebrew race, and carrying into operation the benefits of the birthright which it is hers to confer upon the Gentile nations of the earth, by the Lord Jehovah's own appointment.

SOWING THE SEED.

By E. M. Rush.

In the present paper under the above heading, I am wishing to make a few personal and special remarks to our sowers, and those who for a long time past have been regularly receiving through them, Banners and other Identity literature. The value of the Free Distribution Fund for taking the knowledge of Our Identity to many people at home in ignorance of this truth, and to others in distant parts of the world, has been admirably tested, and very gratefully appreciated, and now I am led to think that it may be more generally supported by those who have benefited by it. There have been those who have contributed very liberally to our fund from (to my knowledge) their really limited means; they have done what they could. There are others who I am perfectly aware could only receive; it has been out of their power to support in any way the fund from which they have thankfully received their Seed-packets, of which they have made good use; but yet there are more who perhaps could, but have not yet, helped us. I would that we all should fully realise how great is our responsibility for the work God has put into our hands of making known the truth of His Word, dating from the time when we first received light from the knowledge of Our Identity, and so I would ask now, when our store has been nearly exhausted, if all who have valued the papers received will do what they can when they can. The free distribution of the Banner causes a steady weekly drain and a heavy monthly bill to be met; as none know better than those who have the privilege of studying its pages what light and knowledge it brings to our minds concerning many vital questions. I would suggest that all who can should start a miniature Banner-Bag for the reception of small contributions from the readers of the Banner and other Identity works in their immediate neighbourhood, as a means of replenishing the parent Banner-Bag which I have the pleasure of watching over. This I suggest with some hope of a good result, because there may be many very willing to help who have thought it hardly worth while to send "only a little," though we know full well every small coin and postage-stamp has its value; but if we add to this fact the knowledge that multiplication will do much with small gifts, and turn them into a grand total, it will be evident that there will be a result that the parent Banner-Bag will gratefully appreciate and turn to good future account.

Every day seems to show us more clearly how grave are the times in which we live, and how great is the need that throughout this great Empire the cry should go up to our Almighty Father to beseech Him to hasten the time (Isa. lx.); and as yet, amongst the teeming millions of the subjects of our Queen, comparatively few are awake to the realities of the destiny of Israel—the masses of the people are still in ignorance of the truths which Our Identity brings home to us. All who have an interest in the Free Distribution Fund, all who kindly support it, and those who work for it, will probably recognise special points for notice in the following quotations from letters received, and will, I trust, by the blessing of God, be nerved, as also the distributors of the Fund, to fresh exertions:—

One Sower wrote to express thanks for regular supplies, and said, "I have made good use by scattering the seed hitherto sent, and I can only hope for a fruitful harvest. I enclose a Postal Order for my Annual Subscription. There are several people here now somewhat interested in Our Identity and the Banner of Israel; I wish they were sufficiently so to help with the expenses and the spread of the sacred truth; perhaps they think there are plenty of rich people with the subject at heart who can afford to carry on the work at their own expense; but my idea is that we should all do a little towards it as far as we can."

From Stirling:—"Thank you very much for the nice parcel of pamphlets you have sent me; also for the Banners so regularly sent." (The Banners are kindly forwarded by a friend to our Fund). "They are very much appreciated and inquired for by our soldiers. I am glad to see that Identity literature is being sent to the ends of the earth."

From an employé, Midland Railway:—"I would thank you kindly if you could send me any papers and tracts, as I have not had any for some time; they are generally read by the passengers travelling, and I find this way of giving them one of the best, and I hope to give some away on Sundays when at home."

From Southampton:—"Thank you kindly for the pamphlets you send me; the parcel you sent before is distributed where I think the papers would be read. I have some who thoroughly believe in our views; but I must say I have to exercise a deal of patience; but, thank God for the patience; they would not be without the light concerning Israel now on any account, and wish they had received it before."

From Toronto, Canada:—"I am always very glad to receive the good Banner of Israel, and also those excellent pamphlets; I have handed them to others. The good seed of truth is being sown here, and it is springing up beautifully."

From Port Nolloth, South Africa, a joint letter came from two workers in a copper-mine who subscribe to our Fund:—"We are really very much obliged for the great interest you take in our welfare; many thanks. I have sent the Banners, or rather the Seed of life, far into Great Namaqualand by traders going through, and ——— has sent his all through Port Nolloth, and some to Okip Mines; they are a great blessing to us all, and no poor man ought to be without the Banner of Israel. Believe me it is only now we can see the meaning and the interpretation of that which we stood so much in need of; we can see now where before we were blind." With this letter came a second donation to our Fund, and also 10s. for the book, "Jehovah Triumphant," to be sent out to one of these earnest workers in that far-off land—showing how, in what to us may seem out-of-the-way places, a careful study of Our Identity may be in progress.

Digitized by Google

From Morar, Gwalior, Central India, a letter was dated just before the Fort was restored this year to the Rajah Scindiah; since then our good fellow-worker has received another appointment, and is opening a new campaign at Roorkee, North-west Provinces; but keeps open communications with those to whom he has given Identity truths in other parts of the Indian Empire. He says:—"Since my last letter I have two more people to read our literature who are great friends and help each other in the study of Our Identity. I hope the truth may spread in this land and our people may see that they are the Lord's people. I have still many readers in the Army, and the men in the Hospital are in very real earnest after the BANNERS; I have many readers there; I can only spare one or two BANNERS for the Hospital, but they are passed on from one to another and get well read. May the precious seed thus sown produce much fruit to the glory of God."

These lines are written with the knowledge that to this Sower, and to others to whom the BANNER is equally valuable, I am now only able to send two or three BANNERS at the most, instead of six as heretofore, and I am unable to meet an urgent request from our agent at Malta for literature, and cannot supply some other Sowers who have not had Seed-packets for some time; but we live in hope and confidence of better days when many more people will realise how great is the need for making known the truth of the Word of God and how great is the blessing of it.

May 13, 1886.

Contributions to the Free Distribution Fund will be thankfully acknowledged by the Treasurer, Miss Lawrence, Rosslyn, Hampton-road, Upper Teddington, by the Hon. Sec., Miss E. M. Rush, 103, Burnt Ash-road, Lee, London, S.E., and by the Sec., C. Horner, Esq., 34, Sheen-park, Richmond, Surrey.

THE BRIGHTON GRAMMAR SCHOOL AND OUR IDENTITY.

IN the March number of Past and Present, the magazine of the Brighton Grammar School, we find the following excellent account, given before the "Old Boys' Association," of the leading truths of Our Identity. The lecturer was Mr. Walter Puttick, the date of the proceedings being Friday, February 19, 1886. Mr. Puttick is clearly a well read Anglo-Israelite, and, no doubt, he placed the subject very clearly before his hearers. We trust he made the matter of the Gates very plain to his audience, for, indeed, it is one of the most effective weapons to advance our cause available. To those acquainted with geography, no doubt the Gates could be made most interesting as a ground on which to build up a knowledge of Our Identity. We quote the account we find in the Brighton School Magazine, and ask for it our readers' attention:—

Mr. Walter Puttick did not write a paper, but came prepared with copious notes, and a thorough knowledge of his subject, to show that the English people are found to be, by the most conclusive evidence, the descendants of the hitherto Lost Ten Tribes of Israel! It may seem a strange idea to expound, and many who have advanced the theory of an Israelitish origin have been very heartily ridiculed for their ingenuity; but when Mr. Puttick brought the matter forward, he excited great interest for a subject, which he rendered attractive and plausible enough, for apart from the primary consideration, Mr. Puttick introduced much that was interesting in the history of the human race, and of language, and also shed very great light on certain passages of Bible prophecy, which, thus illumined, showed much that supported this theory, and which prophecies, he asserts, are otherwise quite inexplicable.

First of all, we are met with the not too-exacting proposition, that if we are instituting a search for something that has been lost, our success will depend, in no small measure, upon the fact that we know perfectly well what we have to look for. If the lost object be an individual, it is absolutely necessary that we should have a correct description or portrait of the missing one. "Very well," says Mr. Puttick, having startled his hearers by an introduction clear and undeniable, "2,600 years ago, Ten out of the Twelve Tribes of an ancient race disappeared from human ken, and as it is generally received that this people are destined yet to play an important part on the world's stage, their whereabouts has formed the subject of an enquiry which has been carried on, more or less persistently, for centuries, and has engaged the attention of the greater number of our leading Biblical students and historians. And with what result? A great diversity of opinion; briefly, because there has been great misunderstanding of the object of search, and of the conditions under which such object is likely to be found; and this, notwithstanding that the Old Book gives wonderful forecasts for our guidance, once we recognise the fact that the loss of their identity to themselves and the world was necessary, in the good providence of God, for schooling them in preparation of their great destiny, we shall hardly expect to find them where they were lost (which was clearly foretold), but should look for a developed nation, or developing race, on the lines laid down by prophetical utterances of old.

With regard to their ancient characteristics, we shall rather seek to account for their loss, while yet searching for any lingering traces of them still discernible. We must guard against the error of confounding the House of Israel (called also the House of Joseph or Ephraim) with the House of Judah (i.e., the Jews), who have never been lost, and who still retain their identity and peculiarities in a miraculous way. The distinction of their respective destinies is found in 1 Chron. v. 2, "Judah prevailed above his brethren, and of him came the chief ruler; but the birthright was Joseph's."

Judah was promised the one seed Christ; Ephraim, as leader of the House of Israel, was promised the "multitude of nations," literally, "fulness of Gentiles."

Mr. Puttick next proceeds to dismiss the fallacy, that God's promises to Abraham were conditional on the obedience of his seed. He then goes on to collect the details for the portrait of this people.

First—we must look for a Multitudinous People,
Secondly—a Missionary Nation,
Thirdly—a Powerful Nation,
Fourthly—a Maritime People,
Fifthly—a Military People, and Sixthly—a Wealthy Nation,

all of which assumptions are fully supported by prophetic references. A natural outcome of the first-mentioned requirement would be colonization, which is clearly foretold in many passages: "A nation and a company of nations," "A mother of many nations," "Increase as fishes do increase" (i.e., by sending off shoals). &c. Turning to the bad qualities of the people, we find, firstly, their drunkenness deplored in Isa. xxviii.; secondly, they are always spoken of as a "stiff-necked people." An enquiry into the physical characteristics of this wonderful race shows the typical Hebrew to be a fair-haired individual, the dark Jews deriving their complexion from an admixture of Idumean blood.

Mr. Puttick points to the great Anglo-Saxon race as fulfilling all these conditions. Where did the Anglo-Saxons come from? Why, according to best authorities, from the very part (the Caspian Sea) where the Ten Tribes were lost! Strabo speaks of them as dwelling beyond the Caspian Sea, Diodorus says they sprang from a people in Media, and Æschylus, the Greek poet, says they were a righteous people, with good laws.

An examination into the etymology of the word Saxon, reveals the very curious inference, that it means "sons of Isaac," or "seed of Isaac," as Israelites were often called by later prophets (Amos vii. 16).

Mr. Puttick went fully into the references, and an interesting discussion followed his exposition of a remarkable and most ably supported theory. Many would have been glad to hear more from Mr. Puttick than he could give in the short space of time he had allotted to him on this occasion, and we hope the opportunity will be afforded him and them.

ERRATUM.—Page 222, col. 2, line 52, for "fraction" read "faction."

"THE ARK" Identity Church, Paradise Street, Rotherhithe.—Whit-Monday Meetings at 2.30 and 7.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed: — "Philo-Israel," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

SUBSCRIPTIONS £ s. d.

Annual Subscription for one copy weekly (including the Twelve Double Numbers) postfree - 0 7 6
Two Copies (including Double Numbers) - - 0 13 6
Three Copies " " " " - 1 0 4
Four Copies " " " " - 1 5 6
Six Copies " " " " - 1 16 4

Post Office Orders to be made payable at the head office, St. Martin's-le-grand, London, to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C., and W. H. GUEST & Co. 29, Paternoster-row, London.

The Editor cannot undertake to return rejected MSS. unless stamps for the purpose be sent. Parties requiring an answer should enclose a stamp.

Contents Bills and Show Cards may be obtained on application to the Publishers.

Advertisements should be sent to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

Prepaid Advertisements are inserted at the rate of 30 words for 1s. 4d.

PREPAID "WANTED," &c., ADVERTISEMENTS, 27 words, 1s.; 4d. every additional line.

WANTED, HOUSEKEEPER for small Family. Manufacturing Town in Yorkshire. Identity believer preferred. State age and particulars, also enclose Photo, which will be returned, to H. M., care of R. Banks & Son, Racquet Court, Fleet Street.

HUNDREDS OF THOUSANDS of Persons, from all parts of the world, will visit, during the next few months, the COLONIAL AND INDIAN EXHIBITION at South Kensington. Each Visitor should obtain from Messrs. Willing's Bookstalls at South Kensington Station, a copy of "THE PENNY POPULAR GUIDE TO THE EXHIBITION." There are, however, hundreds of thousands who will be unable to see this marvellous collection of the Arts and Products of the British Empire. These also may form some idea of the extent and beauty of the Exhibition by reading this Guide, which may be obtained of Robert Banks and Son, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, London, E.C. Post Free to any part of the Postal Union for 2d.

PUBLISHED BY ROBT. BANKS & SON,
RACQUET COURT, FLEET STREET, E.C.

Price 1s. per 100, assorted packets 1s. 2d.; 8s. 6d. per 1,000 (nett). Carriage free 4d. extra.

Thoughts for the British Folk.

Suggested by PHILO-ISRAEL.

No. 1.—Multitudinousness.
No. 2.—The Gates.
No. 3.—The Nation and Company of Nations.
No. 4.—British Wealth.
No. 5.—The Rulers Over Many Nations.
No. 6.—The Universal Creditor.
No. 7.—The Ever-Continuing British Monarchy.
No. 8.—The Scattered People at Home in Every Climate
No. 9.—The Queen, Lords, and Commons.
No. 10.—The Unconquerable Nation.
No. 1.—The Fatally Destructive Race.
No. 12.—The Isolated Nation.
No. 13.—The Nation Which Belts the Earth.
No. 14.—The Emancipators of the Slave
No. 15.—The Christian Nation.
No. 16.—The Ten Commandments.
No. 17.—The Asylum for the Foreign Refugee.
No. 18.—The Possessors of the "Sign."
No. 19.—The Universal Missionaries.
No. 20.—Testimony of the Book of Common Prayer.
No. 21.—Church and State, and also Disestablishment.
No. 22.—Our Poor Laws.
No. 23.—The Labour Question is an Identity Question.
No. 24.—Emigration.

R. BANKS & SON Racquet-court, Fleet st., London, E.C.

A BOOK OF REMARKABLE INTEREST.

Price, cloth gilt, 2/6, post free for P.O.O.

SCENES BEYOND THE GRAVE.

By W. J. STANFORD.
Edited by the late C. W. BANKS.

Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

ASK YOUR TOBACCONIST for, and smoke, PRINCE ALBERT VICTOR'S SMOKING MIXTURE (by permission of His Royal Highness).—BLAGG AND YELLAND, Great Yarmouth.

Printed for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C. PUBLISHED BY GUEST, HAYWORTH, & Co., 29, PATERNOSTER-ROW, WEDNESDAY, JUNE 9, 1886. All rights reserved.

METROPOLITAN ANGLO-ISRAEL ASSOCIATION,

PALACE CHAMBERS, 9, BRIDGE STREET, WESTMINSTER, S.W.

President: The Right Hon. Viscount Folkestone, M.P.

THE ANNUAL PUBLIC MEETING

WILL (D.V.) TAKE PLACE IN

EXETER HALL (LOWER ROOM), STRAND, ON WEDNESDAY EVENING, JUNE 9, AT 7.

ADMIRAL BEDINGFELD

Will take the CHAIR. The following Gentlemen are expected to take part in the proceedings:—The RIGHT REV. BISHOP TITCOMB, D.D.; REV. D. HANAN, B.D. (Rector of Tipperary); REV. C. W. HICKSON, M.A. (Vicar of St. Bartholomew, Bristol); REV. R. DOUGLAS, M.A., (Vicar of Kidsgrove, Stoke-on-Trent); REV. EDWARD DENNY, M.A. (Vicar of Laracor, Ireland); REV. J. DAVIES THOMAS; SURGEON-GEN. J. M. GRANT, M.D.; W. H. PETERS, Esq., J.P.; A. OSBORNE, Esq.; E. W. BIRD, Esq. (Philo-Israel, Editor of the BANNER OF ISRAEL); D. A. ONSLOW, Esq., J.P., and others.

ADMISSION FREE. A limited number of Seats Will be reserved. Tickets One Shilling each at the Doors.

The Eighth ANNUAL MEETING of MEMBERS will take place at PALACE CHAMBERS, WESTMINSTER, the same afternoon at Three o'clock, to receive the Report and elect Officers, &c., for the ensuing year. Tea will be provided. J. J. SHRUBSOLE, Hon. Sec.

N.B.—On and after June 24th next, the Office of the Association will be 5, WILTON ROAD, OPPOSITE VICTORIA STATION, S.W.

Now READY, in Handsome Cloth Binding, Gilt Lettered, price 2/6, post free 2/9.

The New Revelation;

OR,

Daniel and John Revealed.

Being the First Treatise on these Books Founded on the whole Bible.

With a Table of Collateral Events.

By JOHN T. CROSTHWAIT. C.E.,

Trin. Coll., Dublin.

The object of this book is to show what the Holy Scriptures say, as a whole, regarding the history of the world, from Nebuchadnezzar's time down to the time of the Second Coming of our Lord."—Extract from Preface.

London: GUEST, HAYWORTH & Co., 29, Paternoster Row, E.C.

Dr. JOSEPH WILD'S WORKS

NEW EDITION JUST PUBLISHED.

THE LOST TEN TRIBES

Price 3s., post free 3s. 3d.

The FUTURE of ISRAEL and JUDAH.

Price 2s., post free 2s. 3d

The Special Commissioner of the Christian Word, writing of Dr. Wild, says:—"On Sunday evening I had to fight my way into the Congregational Church of which Dr. Wild is the minister. He hails from America, and is quite the sensation of the hour. There was no standing room anywhere, and as I made to the door I met many coming away However, I had made up my mind to hear the Doctor, and hear him I did. It seems that the sub-cribers have a door to themselves; I made for it, and luckily found a chair, which I wedged in under the platform. The Doctor prayed, and then we had a sermon about Revelation, containing much that was very effective, if not about his text, at any rate about that mysterious part of Scripture from which the text was taken."

London: Published by Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C., and may be ordered of any Bookseller.

COMPLETE CHEAP EDITION.
Cloth gilt, price 7s. 6d., free to any address on receipt of P.O.O. or cheque.

FIFTY YEARS IN THE CHURCH OF ROME.

By FATHER CHINIQUY.
WITH PORTRAIT OF THE AUTHOR.

Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

SEE FIFTY REASONS WHY THE ANGLO-SAXONS ARE THE LOST TEN TRIBES. Price 6d., post free 7d.

The Land of Espousals.
The Testimony of Language.
The Transfer of the Kingdom from Judah to Israel.
"Shiloh:" Its Interpretation.
Ireland not Missioned from Rome
Israel and Judah Distinct.
Israel's Blindness.
The Standard Goes to Israel.
Our Royal Standard.
The Apostle Paul in Britain.
Ireland a University for Europe

Robert Banks & Son, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C.

Free by Parcels Post for 3s. 3d.

THE "COLONIAL SHOE."

This is without exception the cheapest, as well as the most comfortable Lady's Walking Shoe ever manufactured. The tops are of French Lasting to lace, with good soles and mill ary heels. Sample pair sent free on receipt of Postal Order for 3s. 3d. to any part of the United Kingdom.

EASY SLIPPERS FOR TENDER FEET.

W. Keast will, on receipt of 2s. 9d., send free by Parcels Post, a pair of his French Lasting, elastic front Slippers. Thousands of Pairs of these Slippers have been sold. Everybody satisfied. Send number and size.

WALTER KEAST 102, Kennington Park Rd., London, S.E. Established 1851.

NOTTINGHAM LACE.

SAMPLE PARCEL, 12 PATTERNS, 1s. Send Postal Order to

WM. HILL, LACE MANUFACTURER, LONG EATON, NEAR NOTTINGHAM.

ETHELINE.

A New and most effective Remedy for CORNS.

Perfectly safe and harmless. Is very easily applied Cures in a few applications, without the slightest pain. Everyone troubled with either Corns, Warts or Bunions, will find relief by using ETHELINE. To be obtained of all Chemists, or post free for 14 stamps, from—

J. LLEWELLYN, CHEMIST, COWBRIDGE

EXTERMINATION OF ALL CORNS & BUNIONS

Guaranteed by using Gardner's Patented Corn and Bunion Exterminator, an ingenious little instrument which can be used by anyone. Painless in operation—"never fails." Price 1s. The highest Surgical Testimonials can be seen and operations successfully performed in all peculiar cases, bad nails, &c., at the Patentee's, who will send the Exterminator direct for 13 stamps.

C. GARDNER, Chiropodist, Kendal.

THE BRITISH ISRAELITES;

Or, Evidences of our Hebrew Origin, gathered from History, Genealogy, Philology, and Heathen Customs. To which is added the Scriptural Testimony of Prophecy Compared with Existing Facts, Answers to Objections, and a Lecture on the Great Pyramid

By LIEUT.-COLONEL H. W. J. SENIOR, 1st Bengal Infantry.

We can safely recommend it as an excellent guide to the learned and an invaluable mine of wealth to the Anglo-Israelite controversialist. We hope all our readers will secure a copy, and have it often in their hands.—Banner of Israel

With Illustrations, cloth gilt, 178 pp., 3s. 6d. BAGSTER & SONS, LMTD., 15, PATERNOSTER ROW, E.C.

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."

(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India.)

"And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the Forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS of the EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. X., No. 494. Entered at Stationers' Hall.] WEDNESDAY, JUNE 16, 1886. [PRICE ONE PENNY.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
Israel's Safety in Her Present Troubles	237
How Israel's Empire Advances in South Africa, from Longitude to Longitude	238
Present-Day Problems, and How Anglo-Israel Truth Explains and Solves Them. Miss Cox's Lecture at Clifton, April 30, 1886.—Part III.	239
The Rapture of the Saints. By John T. Crosthwait	240
Our "Union Jack"	241
M. Max O'Rell as a Lecturer	242
Italy and the Sabbath Day	243
Light.—An Illustration of the Holy Trinity. Forwarded by A. B.	243

ISRAEL'S SAFETY IN HER PRESENT TROUBLES.

THE trials in respect to the Irish question which our nation is at present passing through, are causing many searchings of heart and some trepidation to the faithless among the House of Israel. Our weak ones can see no gleam of light in the midst of the intense darkness of the surrounding outlook. "The Empire is about to be rent asunder by Mr. Gladstone and his Irish Bill." "At last our nation's wickedness and faithless conduct towards the Lord our God are finding us out, and we must surely be visited with condign punishment on account thereof." These are the faithless murmurs of even Anglo-Israelites, who ought to take courage and look upon the bright and brilliant hopes which God's word (rightly understood) holds out to them. It strikes us that the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, in his "Present Crisis," quoted in one of "Ephratah's" leaflets (No. 1), has sounded the keynote of what ought to be our national consolation in the midst of much perplexity. He wrote thus:—

English history from the first day till now is as full of instruction as the history of Israel from Egypt even to Babylon. Did you ever read Cowper's wonderful description of the care which God has taken of this little island, how He has favoured and protected it? When all the nations were in arms against it, they could not touch its shore, for God was there. . . . Our nation has been as much under the peculiar and especial providence of God as were the descendants of Jacob themselves, and therefore God deals with us as He does not deal with other nations.—Rev. C. H. Spurgeon's "Present Crisis."

Cowper's lines on Great Britain occur in his "Expostulation," and they run as follows, quoting again the previously mentioned leaflet:

"Ask now of history's authentic page,
And call up evidence from every age;
Display with busy and laborious hand?
The blessings of the most indebted land;
What nation will you find, whose annals prove
So rich an interest in Almighty love?
Where dwell they now, where dwelt in ancient day,
A people planted, watered, blest as they?

* * * * *

Has He not hid thee, and thy favoured land,
For ages safe between His sheltering hand,
Given thee His blessing on the clearest proof,
Bid nations leagued against thee stand aloof,
And charged Hostility and Hate to roar
Where else they would, but not upon thy shore?
His power secured thee when presumptuous Spain
Baptized her fleet Invincible in vain."

Cowper's Expostulation.

The Rev. C. H. Spurgeon's sentiments are remarkable, because they prove that to his view there is an exact parallelism between English history and that of Israel from Egypt to Babylon. In both cases, God's care of these two nations, His favour and protection, as well as His indwelling presence, are noticed by the great Nonconformist, and he makes the remarkable observation which reads like a non sequitur, that because our nation has been as much under God's special providential care as the Israelites were, therefore He deals with us as He does not deal with other nations." Does Mr. Spurgeon believe, then, we are those same Israelites? He knows we have the spiritual blessings God promised to Israel—the Bible, the Sabbath, the Ten Commandments, and the evangelising function, as it relates "to all the nations, all the families, and all the kindreds of the earth." Does not Mr. Spurgeon recollect the text which regulates God's conduct in this matter, and that for all time? "He showeth His words unto Jacob, His statutes and His judgments unto Israel." He hath not dealt so with any nation, and as for His judgments, they have not known them" (Psa. cxlvii. 19, 20). This being so, logic requires us to conclude that the British, so blest, must be Israel; for "He hath not dealt so with ANY nation," and it would falsify this passage of God's Word if it were to be found that God has indeed dealt with the British—if a Gentile race, in truth—as He declares He hath not dealt with them at all, and never will in future. Cowper, in his lines, does not indeed mention Israel by her name, but in the last eight lines quoted above, he has described the British as a people who (he blindly says) fulfil many of the Israelite signs given us in God's Word. For instance, he says that God has "hidden" our race safely "between His sheltering hands," a description of Israel to be found in Psa. xxxi. 20, lxxxiii. 3—8; also that God has given our nation His blessing on the clearest proof. But God promised to bless one race only—namely, the Israelite people; and no covenant has He made to bless the British, or any portion of them, being Gentiles (non-Israelites). Cowper adds that God has given military protection to these islands, and bid our enemies to keep "hands off" our shores, illustrating his facts with the story of the invincible Spanish Armada. At that hour, he tells us, God's power secured our fatherland from the disgrace of the Spaniard's threatened invasion.

Digitized by Google

But where did Cowper find in God's Word that He promised immunity from foreign invasion to any race but Israel in her "appointed place," in the "far off" "Isles of the West," these British Islands, where Israel now is found? (2 Sam. vii. 10; Jer. xxxi. 10; Isa. xxiv. 15). We know of no such promise, and therefore, God's Word being true, and the facts being such as Cowper and Spurgeon declare they are, the conclusion is inevitable, that the British are the afterseed of Abraham, who, not being Jews, must be the House of Israel or Ephraim, alias Joseph, according to the prophecies. The Rev. Mr. Spurgeon, no doubt, is quite correct as to his premises. Our nation has indeed been under God's peculiar and especial providence, after a manner we see nowhere else so clearly as in the history of Israel itself. We see it in the mode the ancient Britons were collected here, in their subjection to the Romans for a time, in Rome's departure in A.D. 409 for ever, in the flocking in of the majority of the House of Ephraim to Britain as the Angles, the Saxons, the Jutes, the Frisians, the Danes, and the Normans, from A.D. 449 to A.D. 1066. We see it in the union of the Tribes under the sceptre of a dynasty derived from David, the King of Israel (1 Kings viii. 25; Jer. xxxi. 17—26). We see it in the miraculous protection of our Islands from foreign invasion for a thousand years; also in the wonderful development of our commerce, and the growth of our abnormal wealth according to the prophecies. We see it in the acquisition of our gates, of our heathen Empire in the four quarters of the globe, and especially in our development by multitudinousness and colonizing operations, into "a nation and company of (British) nations, which apparently are on the eve of federating, according to God's promises to Jacob in Gen. xlviii. 19, and xxxv. 11. These are some of the secular blessings history tells us, and Mr. Spurgeon, too, we have as a nation received from God's right hand, and he is quite correct in affirming that they have their parallel in God's dealings "with the descendants of Jacob themselves." But if these are the temporal earthly benefits we have derived from God's peculiar and especial providence watching over us, what shall we say to the spiritual gifts we have obtained, and so richly enjoy from His divine hands? How was it that even before Jerusalem was destroyed by Titus, even in A.D. 61, the Gospel of the grace of Christ was planted in these lands by apostolic hands? How did it occur, that over and over again, when persecution, or war, or Rome's tactics, destroyed the glorious light, God again and again permitted it to be restored here? First by the Culdees, when the Heptarchy was converted; again in A.D. 1322, when John Wycliff was sent with the British Bible to awaken Israel from the spiritual sleep of Roman Catholic death; finally, when at the glorious and blessed Reformation on November 17, A.D. 1558, Protestantism ascended the British Throne with Queen Elizabeth, and, thank God, has never again been extinguished as the light of the life of this most favoured land? These have, indeed, been "peculiar and especial providences of God," remarkable as any of those which kept the descendants of Jacob from apostatising from the Lord in the dark days when Israel journeyed in the wilderness, or were located in the land of their inheritance for a time. Because we are Israel these things have occurred, and because we are literally His people, therefore "God deals, and will always deal, with us as He does not deal with other nations." We have Scriptural warrant for this assertion, as we have proved by quoting Psa. cxlvii. 19, 20; but the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon has not any authority at all for his declaration that God acts towards us as he describes, only because we are favoured by Him just as He favoured Israel. God cannot favour Gentile non-Israelite races as He favours Israelites, and yet be a faithful covenant-keeping God. Being ignorant of that fact, Mr. Spurgeon has yet much to learn regarding the God he serves so well, and whom he so faithfully worships, and makes known by his splendid gift of preaching.

HOW ISRAEL'S EMPIRE ADVANCES IN SOUTH AFRICA, FROM LONGITUDE TO LONGITUDE.

We do not realise at home how steadily the march of our Israelitish Empire progresses in such a Continent as South Africa. "The thin, red line" has been quietly advancing, and the heavy tramp of the Anglo-Saxon invasion of South Africa has never ceased for years. In these our "Isles of the West," where we "dwell alone," and trouble ourselves but little with the events going on at the distant "ends of the African earth," we do not notice the changes which time is rapidly effecting for our race in a part of the world where the British Empire is destined to make enormous advances before many years are over, and a nation in Federation with the parent stock is sure to rise to extend our influence at the South, till it fills the Dark Continent from end to end, as has already been the case in the mighty territory of North America, and in the almost equally mighty island of Australia.

Those upon the spot see clearly what we do not, and are in a position to notice how rapidly the Empire of Israel is taking up its proper place in South Africa, as assigned to it by the God of Jacob. We have before us some remarks published on this subject on January 30th last, in The Observer of Port Elizabeth, Cape of Good Hope. Though the writer is perfectly ignorant of Our Identity he speaks as the "BANNER" does in respect to the certain advance of the Anglo-Saxon race in the Dark Continent, and as to England's rapacious "maw which is open to receive the universe!" These remarks we transfer to our columns because they are the testimony of an eye witness of what is in progress there, and this evidence, blind as it is, gives full corroboration to our contention that this nation is Israel, because in the matter of territorial extension, we are fulfilling the destinies of Israel according to the prophecies (Hosea i. 10; Gen. xxxv. 11; Dan. vii. 27). He wrote as follows:—

One of the singular features of the latter part of this 19th century is the great hunger which has manifested itself in the leading European Powers to "eat up" distant lands and peoples. The cessation of wars between the combatants on the old battle-fields, and the difficulties which have arisen through years and years of peace, in consequence of the large increase of population and the want of the means of giving occupation to them all, have taxed the wisdom and the resources of the most astute of modern statesmen. Russia has persistently continued her march southward, resolved ultimately to have her shores washed by the Mediterranean, halting occasionally, but only occasionally, for a propitious time to resume her step-by-step advance to the goal she has set up for herself in that direction; while just as steadily, stealthily, and surely, she swarms over the Asiatic mountains and plains till she calmly gazes on the British gates of India. France, following her singular star, fanfaronades in Tonquin, on the West Coast of Africa, and Madagascar, and gasconades in Burmah, with the belief, all the while, that she is opening the way for Gallican colonisation. Germany sends her ships to New Guinea, to Angra Pequina, to Walwich Bay, to Zululand, the Caroline Islands, to Zanzibar, and pretty well everywhere else, on this new mission, in which she is supposed to be labouring heavily to bring forth trade for Germany in abundance. Belgium and others have their hearts above Loando and up the Congo; Italy would like to find an excuse for settling somewhere on the western shores of the Red Sea; and England's great maw is open to receive—the universe. It appears to be her fate to acquire, in spite of herself, more, and yet more, as years roll on. As with small possessions, so with large ones—all bring with them responsibilities; and in the resolve to hold these comes, often, the necessity to acquire more. This has been England's case. Her championship of the weak has repeatedly ended in herself "eating up" these very weaklings; but, singularly enough, frequently at their own request, and at times without troubling them to do more than "give in" without a fuss. Thus did we with the Fijians; thus have we done with the Burmese; and, we suppose, thus must we do again, wherever one of the Great Northern Powers threatens to settle down too near to our political coloured brethren. In this way have heaps of "small fry" fallen in with us. We have seen a little of this business in South Africa; and just as the Anglo-Saxon race have taken possession of the entire North Continent of the two Americas are they bound to spread over and "absorb" all the sub-Zambesi portions of this Continent. The march of the British footstep is neither silent nor slow in that direction. Destiny points to the peaceful conquests from one longitude to the other between which the points of boundary are to touch; and the time is not so very remote when the facts may be flashed through the electric girdle of the globe to inform all men of what has been accomplished. In 1874, an address was drawn up by one who was then only a visitor to this place (but who has settled here since that time), and presented by the Chamber of Commerce to Sir Henry Barkly, the then Governor. In that address the hope was intimated that British authority might be soon extended to the Zambesi. The signature to the address was J. W. Salomon, and he was accompanied by Messrs. A. J. Macdonald, W. Hume, Martin Lilienfeld, and W. Farmer, as the representatives of the Members of the Chamber on that occasion. Sir H. Barkly appeared to be a little doubtful of the realisation of such a thing in his day. He did not dream of the Protectorate being established at least midway, as it has been, within a decade of that date. In less than twelve years of that address we have seen the chiefs of the farther interior imploring to be taken under the care of Great Britain; and now it no longer sounds as a rhapsody or a mere dreamy illusion, but as partaking greatly of the possible—the rational—the real. And had it been the good fortune of England to have retained steadily on in its service to this time, Sir Bartle Frere, as High Commissioner, we should have had a different story to tell of Basutoland, the West Coast to Loando, the East Coast to the Zambesi, and the tribal territories lying between the extreme boundaries we have at this date, and that great stream. But, even without him, the fiat of Fate is—for England to advance, enter in, and take possession. Humanity, as well as politics, demands it; and as Humanity means also the survival of the fittest, the fittest will go there, and abide. Those who are, however, to be "this substance of things hoped for," must increase and multiply, and be brought from the old country. They must go in, carve their way through the few difficulties incidental to so long a journey—the filling up of so broad a space. To see this speedily accomplished, every Colony and State under the South African skies must be up and doing, clear the way, begin the new creation. The removal of all immigration restrictions; the passing of laws in their stead to encourage the right kind of immigration at all points—Walwich Bay, Capetown, Port Elizabeth, East London, Natal, and Delagoa Bay, would give a strong impulse to trade in every direction and in every occupation that men want, both in the old Northern Hemisphere and here in these parts of the South. These steps would renovate the desert, "the waste places of the earth," where millions have passed away by the decimating bands of the blood-thirsty slayers in intertribal wars; and every one of the present Colonies and States of South Africa would be increased a hundredfold in life, in industry, in value, in power, and in political importance in the eyes of each other, and of the nations elsewhere. This is the volume of issues involved in that expression relating to the subject in the Port Elizabeth Chamber of Commerce address of 1874, respecting a British Protectorate to the Zambesi; and the desire for which we hope that Chamber, and every other in the colony, as well as the Free State, the Transvaal, and Natal will now re-echo, as Capetown has taken up Port Elizabeth's wish in this great question, and make it so ring out in the calls of the day, as not to be hushed, till the new Protectorate be an accomplished fact.

Digitized by Google

PRESENT-DAY PROBLEMS, AND HOW ANGLO-ISRAEL TRUTH EXPLAINS AND SOLVES THEM.

Miss Cox's Lecture at Clifton, April 30, 1886.

(Continued from page 232.)

PART III.

OUR RELATIONS WITH JUDAH.

And this point leads up naturally to another—our relations with our brethren of Judah. For while we have a duty to the world at large which we may not neglect or abandon, surely, if it behoves us to strive to succour and benefit one people more than another, we owe this especial kindness and consideration to our Jewish brethren, co-heirs with ourselves of a bright array of glorious promises; though now they groan beneath the curse, while we are inheriting the birthright blessings. True, some Anglo-Israelites have unwisely sought to deter men from seeking the conversion of the Jews, saying, that since Scripture predicts their return to the land in unbelief, all efforts to evangelise them must necessarily be unsuccessful. We, however, have not to do with results; these are in higher hands than ours. The command to "preach the Gospel to every creature," knows nothing of exceptions. The earliest Hebrew preachers of the cross were laid under instructions to "begin at Jerusalem," and the divine order, "to the Jew first," may in no wise be set aside because it may be that the House of Judah, as a whole, will not readily accept of our message. God has crowned with much success Israel's efforts to win Judah to own the sway of the true and only Messiah, and this fact alone is sufficient proof that the work receives His sanction and approval.

Then, apart from evangelisation, Israel has a great work to do for Judah, which, in the nature of things, no one else can undertake. Even as Joseph in exile was raised to a position of wealth and power in order that he might be able to aid his perishing brethren in the day of their sore extremity, so Israel-Britain, exiled also, and supposed to be lost for ever to human view, has been raised to wealth and power unequalled, and has become "chief of the nations" in order that Judah should, in a time of need, hasten to her shores for sustenance and protection not to be secured anywhere else; and even as Joseph's brethren, while receiving gifts at his hand, failed to recognise their long-lost brother in that mighty Egyptian potentate; so the Jews know not Israel, although seeking help at her hands and regarding her as the only refuge and protector of their outcast children.

Thus the talented Grace Aguilar, a Jewess, well known among us as the writer of "Home Influence" and other excellent works, speaks in glowing terms of the country of her adoption, though supposing it a Gentile land. On page 565 of her work, "The Women of Israel," she writes as follows regarding Britain as compared with other lands where her exiled compatriots are located:—"But on the character of the English there is no darkness on our mind; integrity, honour, solidity, reserve, which only renders his friendship, when given, more worthy; a lofty spirit of independence and consciousness of his own position, as distinct from the radical contemner of differing ranks as respect is from servility; benevolence, domestic virtue, which must make home happy, intellect and genius which can only breathe in freedom; such are the characteristics of the English; and if they fail in the sparkling vivacity and apparent warmth of the French, the artistic genius and strong passions of the Italians, the music and metaphysics of the Germans, surely they have qualities sufficient of their own to make us truly love the land, and thank God that He has granted His captives so secure and blessed a rest. . . . And what may not the women of Israel become in this thrice blessed land? Much, much to recall what they have been, and to set forth what they will be!

Digitized by Google

"In every other country but England and America, still lingering restrictions, or characteristics peculiar to the children of the soil, may prevent or retard the spiritual and domestic graces which are the woman of Israel's own, and of which, though deadened by circumstances, nothing can deprive her; but in England and America these can be cultivated, fostered, and so displayed as to mark to the whole Gentile world our national privileges, our sacred duties, and our immortal hope! Hebrews and Englishmen!" continues Miss Aguilar; "we may look around the world, and what prouder titles can be our own?"

We answer, "None!" and rejoice to know that, as Anglo-Israelites, we have an equal claim to both! But does not this quotation suggest that Judah's heart is already turning to her sister Israel, who has indeed opened wide her sheltering arms to the oppressed and despised people? She is commissioned not only to accompany but actually to escort Judah back to their joint possession, the sacred land of promise. Thus will the people "terrible from their beginning and hitherto," the inhabitants of "the land shadowing with wings," "the daughter of the Lord's dispersed," be honoured in bringing the people "scattered and peeled," as a present to the Lord of hosts, unto Mount Zion. Thenceforward, linked in an indissoluble union, the two nations shall become more than ever a blessing to all men, and usher in upon the world the day of universal peace, the glad time when the anarchy, unrest, and distress that now desolate and mar God's fair creation shall be a thing of the past, and when Israel's Redeemer shall inaugurate His glorious millennial reign!

OUR RELATIONS WITH RUSSIA.

Our Identity, moreover, throws a vivid gleam of light on another great problem of our own times—namely, our relations with Russia. God's Word displays the picture, boldly delineated, luridly coloured, of two powerful nations in the throes of a fearful struggle such as this world, albeit the scene of hundreds of sanguinary conflicts, has not yet witnessed, and before the prospect of which the cheek of the boldest may well pale and the bravest heart recoil in dread: these nations are Gog and Twelve-Tribed Israel. Modern Russia (whom most expositors of Scripture believe to be identical with the Gog and Magog of Ezekiel's sublime but awful page and the sworn foe of God's chosen ones in the latter days) is now manifesting unmistakable enmity against two peoples, though her antagonism displays itself in widely differing modes of expression. These two peoples are the British and the Jews—alias the Houses of Israel and Judah—destined ere the final conflict with this great enemy, to have been re-united into a single nation, to have repossessed their inheritance, and to have entered on the happy occupation of rebuilding the long desolated cities, and of cultivating the long neglected soil. Their prosperity will excite the ungovernable jealousy of that haughty nation, whose deeply-rooted hostility will then assume a very terrible form. For the present, however, it is latent, but not the less real and potent on that account, although its manifestations are of a less active kind. In the case of the Jews, oppressed and down-trodden as they are, it is shown in the intolerance and injustice with which they are everywhere treated in Russian territory, law being no protection to them, persecution forcing them to abandon their homes, and, leaving the domain of this tyrannical power, to seek safety of life and property elsewhere.

In the case of Britain, Russia's hatred is half-concealed under a thin semi-transparent veneer of outward civility, which does not deceive us in the least. We know that, in spite of diplomatic finesse and bland suavity, the hatred exists, and needs little provocation to induce it to translate itself into hostile action. How nearly this was the case in 1885 we well know; but the hand of God averted the danger then, as we, from an Identity point of view, fully anticipated. But the awful struggle between these two great nations for the dominion of the world is only deferred. Come it must, and one good of our truth is, that it leaves us in no uncertainty as to what the issue of that stupendous conflict will be. Vainly may Russia cast wistful eyes upon our Indian Empire; God never promised her "the heritage of the heathen." Vain are her presumptuous hopes that the great Gate will fall into her keeping. It is promised to Israel only, and no Gentile power shall wrest it from the true heir of the Abrahamic birthright. Vainly shall Gog essay the destruction of God's covenant people when gathered to their land and established there in peace and prosperity they become the mark for his unutterable hate, and he resolves to compass their overthrow. An immense multitude will be arrayed against Israel, but though the opposing force should outnumber hers in the proportion of ten to one she has no cause for despair. Like Elisha at Dothan she may boldly say, "More are they that be with us than they that be with them." The same hand that destroyed the army of Sennacherib at the very gates of Jerusalem, that crushed the so-called "Invincible Armada;" and that interposed to defend our nation from the power of that unscrupulous despot who at the beginning of the present century essayed to lay Britain in the dust as he had laid well nigh all the powers of continental Europe; that hand will be brought to bear with terrible effect on this latter-day enemy, whose fearful end is so vividly pictured by the prophet Ezekiel in the words: "And it shall come to pass in that day when Gog shall come against the land of Israel, saith the Lord God, that My fury shall come up in My face, . . . and I will call for a sword against him unto all My mountains, saith the Lord God; every man's sword shall be against his brother. And I will plead against him with pestilence and with blood; and I will rain upon him and upon his hordes, and upon the many peoples that are with him, an overflowing shower, and great hailstones, fire, and brimstone. And I will magnify Myself and sanctify Myself, and I will make Myself known in the eyes of many nations; and they shall know that I am the Lord" (Ezek. xxxviii. 18, 21, 22, 23; R. V.).

(To be continued.)

THE RAPTURE OF THE SAINTS.

By John T. Crosthwait.

In the Banner of Israel of April 14th there is an article under the above heading, and as I have had a very considerable correspondence with the authors of perhaps two of the most recent publications on this very much misunderstood subject, I may perchance be able to state the cause of the apparent difficulty in drawing the true deduction from the various texts, which, to the superficial reader, appear more or less contradictory, but are in reality in perfect harmony.

The pre-tribulation rapture theorists base their works on an erroneous assumption—viz., "that the Church of Christ is separate from Israelites as well as Gentiles." One writer states, "Because the Ten Tribes rent themselves from the House of David, and lapsed into demonism and idolatry, therefore God would allow them to be Hebrews no longer, but sent them back again to the place from whence He had taken them. And there, beyond the river, they have remained, and apparently must still remain—whether in Afghanistan, China, or elsewhere—until the times of the Gentiles are ended." This author, failing to take into account the promises to the Fathers, and forgetting that the Early Christian Church was purely Israelitish, has been obliged, like others, to bring in another Church, and, of course, is bound to provide safety for it during the great tribulation, hence the pre-tribulation rapture theory.

To support this theory, 1 Thess. iv. 16, 17, is taken, and disassociating it from 1 Cor. xv. 52, is said to represent a different event. The latest proof of the pre-tribulation rapture theory is based on Rev. xiv., which is said to be in chronological order all through. The 144,000 on the Mount Sion are held to represent the raptured Church, the first fruits. At the close of the same chapter is given the harvest and vintage, which is said to be a further proof, because they follow in the proper order—first fruits, harvest, vintage. In the first place it is evident that the sixth verse commences an entirely new subject, and it is also evident that the scene is not in heaven before the throne, as this author states, for the sea of glass is before the throne, and the harpers sing before the throne; whereas, the prophet states he heard the voice from heaven, and it is but reasonable to suppose that he was present at the scene, which he says he saw; therefore, "the Mount Sion" must be that at Jerusalem, and hence the whole scene must be of things during the Millennium, but not before.

Digitized by Google

It would be impossible to go fully into this matter in one article; but if the dead in Christ rise first (1 Thess. iv. 16), and the dead in Christ do not rise until the last trump (the seventh), which is just as our Lord appears (Rev. xi. 15, 18), it is evident there can be no pre-tribulation rapture.

Again, if there be a pre-tribulation rapture, since the dead in Christ rise first, and since these dead include all the blessed dead from Adam's time (except those who rose at our Lord's resurrection); therefore, the first fruits, or raptured Church, would exceed the harvest in the proportion of the ocean to a millpond! Again, if the 144,000 in this chapter represent, as is said, some greater and indefinite number, it is evident that the 144,000 in chapter vii. must represent some other number also, and therefore it cannot be twelve times twelve thousand, as stated. These are some of the difficulties in the way of the pre-tribulation rapture theory.

On the other hand, viewing this subject of the calling away of the elect to meet the Lord, as He comes to take His kingdom, from the Anglo-Israel point of view, the problem presents no difficulty whatever. We, of the House of Israel, are assured of safety during the great tribulation (see Isa. xxvi. 20, 21), except the 12,000 of each tribe who are sealed to go faithfully through the great tribulation, and who appear in a place of honour, as first fruits of the Israelites, with our Lord on the Mount Sion. We, being assured of safety in these isles and in our possessions, have therefore no necessity for any pre-tribulation rapture, in order to secure our safety; and on searching through the Gospels, we can find but one gathering after the great tribulation (see Matt. xxiv. 29—31; Mark xiii. 24—27; Luke xxi. 25—28). This last verse distinctly gives us to understand that there shall be signs visible to all of our Lord's coming. The pre-tribulation rapture theory does not provide any signs, even for those who are waiting for their Lord. Of us Israelites who are left, some, as you say, will be chosen to return to Palestine, while the majority will abide in these islands and in their surrounding empire. Although the change to the individual, whether dead or alive, is instantaneous, it does not follow that the whole of the blessed dead are raised at the same moment, for in Rev. x. 7, it is said, "in the days of the voice of the seventh angel, when He shall begin to sound," as though the sounding occupied some days; at the same time, it is not probable that it will extend over many days, for none can be caught up until all the dead in Christ are already raised; then we shall be caught up together with them.

As I have shown, in an article on the Second Coming of our Lord in this month's Israel's Hope and Destiny, He appears in the neighbourhood of the earth, in the clouds, for some three and a-half weeks before His final descent on Mount Olives. This leaves room for all the different texts to harmonize and be strictly accurate. This rapture of the saints, like all other Scriptures, is, when viewed in the light of the Identity, perfectly plain; but viewed otherwise, leads to hopeless confusion.

Dublin, April 16th, 1886.

OUR "UNION JACK."

THE Annual Dinner of the Plymouth Mercantile Association took place at that city on April 28th. Admiral Phillimore, responding to the toast of the Navy, said:—

It was about thirty-six years ago, when the scholarly Lord Greville and the greatest of England's Ministers, William Pitt, seeing the miserable condition of Ireland, brought about the union of the United Kingdom. Of the political part of that act he would not speak, but he would say that at the union of Great Britain and Ireland our flag was altered, and the Union Jack became the flag of the kingdom. Under that flag we won Trafalgar and many a naval victory, and we also won Waterloo under it. General Lyons would speak for his troops, but he did not mind standing up for the navy—(applause)—and saying that the navy, at all events, had no wish to change its flag. (Applause.) He trusted, however, that whether naval warfare was to be fought with torpedoes, steel ships, or ships of iron, or of wood, under that flag this country might be blessed, and the navy always be maintaining its honour as it should, in humble confidence that by God's grace it would do its duty. (Applause.)

The separation of Ireland from Great Britain, which would be the certain result of the Home Rule Bills of Mr. Gladstone if they became law, would necessitate the alteration of our national flags. At present, as the Admiral said, we have "the Union Jack," which is the national flag, representing Great Britain and Ireland united. This consists of the Red Cross of St. George, and the red and white saltires of St. Patrick and St. Andrew combined, on a blue field. The ship in which the Admiral of the Fleet happens to be, always carries the "Union Jack." A merchant ship using this flag, does so with a white border round it, and it is called then "a Merchant Jack." The red, or British ensign, is a red flag with a Union Jack in the upper corner of the end attached to the haulyards. The Union Jack appears also in the white and blue ensigns. The Royal Standard consists of the armorial bearings of England, Scotland, and Ireland combined. These facts show that if Ireland is destined to separate from the other members of the Union effected in A.D. 1800, the national flags, as we have them now, must be altered so as to get rid of the Irish portion of the same. The great victories of this century have all been fought and won under the "Union Jack," which embraces Ireland in the triple combination; and how will our race bear to alter once more the banner under which they have so often proved victorious to God's glory? But why should this separation take place? Why should our national flag be altered? To suit the wishes of the enemies of our race the Phœnician, Canaanite, foreign element in Ireland, who, Roman Catholic and priest-ridden to a man, hate God's protesting, witnessing people, and are "pricks in our eyes and thorns in our sides" this day, according to the prophecies? (Numb. xxxiii. 55). Surely not! Mr. Gladstone, it is true, treats all Ireland as if it was inhabited by one united homogenous race, and all of them alien and foreign to the British races. Herein he is quite wrong, as Mr. Chamberlain has told him. Let us hear now what his friend, Lord Hartington, has said on the subject, on April 26th, at Rawtenstall. He spoke as follows:—

What do we mean when we speak of the people of Ireland? The people of Ireland are not one people, as I think Mr. Chamberlain pointed out the other day. The Protestant population of Ireland, which is found chiefly in the north—in Ulster—but which also exists in scattered communities in Ireland, is a population opposed to the Roman Catholic population of Ireland. That population is different from the Roman Catholic majority. The Protestant population of Ireland is divided from the Catholic population by differences which are far more vital and deeply seated than any political differences which divide the people of these kingdoms. There are differences between them of race; differences of religion; differences of ideas—ideas of all that relates to property, to individual liberty and freedom. (Cheers.) . . . I have used the phrase of the Irish people. In my opinion it contains a fallacy, because there is no united Irish people.

Digitized by Google

The Prime Minister wishes us to believe this racial difference does not exist, and that there is no section of the Irish people who are Protestants and united to ourselves in bonds of love and loyalty, of religion, civil and religious liberty, and of race. On such a false and insecure foundation he desires to build up a vast revolutionary framework which must surely collapse as soon as the light of Identity truth is brought to bear upon it. Ireland belongs to Israel; to the people represented by the Northern Protestant Israelitish section of it, and the rest, the Phœnician majority in the South and West, the Roman Catholic, bigoted, miserable majority, are aliens in the land, placed there for a time, according to the prophecies, to serve as our scourges, our pricks and thorns for a season, but destined to be removed for ever (Isa. lx. 12). Are we to obey Mr. Gladstone and destroy Israel that he may stay in power? Are we to mutilate Israel's flag, under which God has given us victory times without number, that he may surrender to the enemies of the Lord and give away God's heritage to them? We say, a thousand times, never! never can it be so, as God is true! We know that the question has now been decided in the House of Commons. But an appeal to the constituencies may be called for, and the judgment of the country will be, we believe, against measures suicidal in their tendency and dishonouring to God as well as to His people Israel.

M. MAX O'RELL AS A LECTURER.

M. MAX O'RELL, the author of "John Bull and His Island," is reported, in The Edinburgh Courant of February 5, 1886, to have given a lecture in that city, on the subject of "John Bull." What he said was this:—

After some introductory remarks the lecturer drew attention to some contrasts between John Bull and Jacques Bonhomme. When an Englishman spoke French, be it ever so well, if he met a Frenchman knowing two or three words of English he would not air his French. He knew that a man who spoke in a language not his own made a fool of himself, and with his common sense he naturally preferred that that man should be the other. (Laughter.) It was not so with Jacques Bonhomme. As soon as he could put together two or three words in English he thought he could address his audience in the mother tongue of Shakspeare. He described John Bull as a large landowner, with muscular arms, long, broad, and heavy feet, and he had an iron grasp which held fast whatever he seized upon. When he got Constantinople he would be satisfied with his slice of Europe. He referred to the British possessions all over the world, and described them as John Bull's assets. John had acquired all that territory at a cost of little bloodshed, and kept it with a comparatively small army, yet, at the present, he was not aware that any of John's possessions were the least in danger. But 'what shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" John had to bear that in mind, and he did bear it mind, with the result, that he had knocked down, in his own eyes, the kingdom of heaven as a possession as incontestibly his as Australia or India. (Laughter.) The French fought for glory or a dream, the Germans for a living, and Russia to divert the attention of her people from home affairs. But John Bull was a reasonable, moral, and reflecting man. He fought to promote trade, to maintain peace and order on the face of the earth, and the good of mankind in general. (Laughter.) If he conquered a nation it was to improve its condition in this world, and secure its welfare in the next. (Laughter.) "Give me your territory, and you shall have the Bible; fair exchange is no robbery." He congratulated the people of Edinburgh on the beauty of the city. Its statues proved that in Scotland people recognised native talent. He also noticed the fact that the photographs in the Princes-street shop-windows were not those of beautiful actresses, but of the professors of universities. He concluded by prophesying, that only in an era of peace would the two nations ever again rival each other. The lecture was greatly appreciated by the audience. On Saturday afternoon M. O'Rell will deliver a lecture on "Jacques Bonhomme."

We know, from his book, that M. Max O'Rell has read some of our Identity publications. He is aware of the general outlines of our belief, and in a humorous, exaggerated way, he has reproduced them in the above. He has been complimentary on the whole to our nation, and given it a fair character, as compared with his own and other Gentile alien nations. He said truly, that ours is a race which grasps firmly what it has once seized, and never lets go its hold if the acquisition be worth keeping. Strangely enough, unless, indeed, he was here reverting to Our Identity writings, the author declared that we have set our hearts on Constantinople, and shall be content with our share of Europe when we get that! John Bull's "assets," he justly described as being our Heathen and Colonial Empires, as well as our Gates. Very little have we paid for these in blood and treasure, says our lecturer (let opponents mark this!), a small army suffices to keep all our assets, and no one wants to touch them. In fact, though M. O'Rell does not know it, they are defended by the God of Israel, who keeps His people, and their assets, as He keeps the "apple of His eye" (Zech. ii. 8). M. O'Rell thought he had said a severe thing when he declared we had knocked down, in our own eyes, the kingdom of heaven as our own possession, and made it as sure as Australia or India. The fact is, M. O'Rell forgets we British are Israel, and being Israel, that we have Israel's inheritance, which God has given us as His own free gift. We are His kingdom, and He our King. We know our King is coming to reign over us. Therefore, we do no wrong in claiming to be "the kingdom of God," and declaring that kingdom is, in a peculiar sense, our own. Our author, albeit sarcastically, gives us, nationally, a very good character in regard to our acquisitions and annexations. "We do fight to promote trade, to maintain peace and order on the face of the globe, and for the good of mankind in general." As a State, we certainly, however, do not conquer a country, and then, nationally, offer it our Bibles in exchange. As a rule, the British do not acquire the lands of their conquered nations at all, nor do the governments of the day, quâ governments, ever attempt to proselytise. The sword opens the way, the sword does the work of penetration, and Israel's missionaries, Bible in hand, follow (with trade and commerce acting on parallel lines) to take possession of their new acquisitions, in the name of Christ their Lord. Thus we acquired Upper Burmah by the sword, and immediately efforts are made to extend the operations of our missions into the newly conquered tracts, to bring to the inhabitants those inestimable blessings and benefits which have made our own nation the first in the world. We strive to give the Burmese, the Chinese, the South Africans, the North Borneans, and to every other nation with whom we come in contact, first of all God's Word, which giveth light; then the Gospel of the common salvation, by and through the blood of Jesus only; then the blessing of the Sabbath, and the ten true laws of God; finally, civil and religious liberty also, and peace, with railroads, the electric telegraph, good roads, commerce by sea and land, and a literature which enlightens, and benefits, and cleanses, and purifies as no other literature is calculated to do. These are our objects when we are forced to enter on hostilities, and hitherto, thank God, we have carried out our intentions as Israel was directed to do. God's Word predicts, that "in the days to come Jacob shall take root"—that is, establish himself in many lands—"and Israel shall blossom and bud and fill the face of the world with fruit"—Gospel, evangelical, Christ-given fruit, which shall fill the face of the world, just as Max O'Rell declares our British people are endeavouring, at any rate, to do. The lecturing Frenchman, no doubt, intended to laugh at us as a nation, and hold up our spiritual conceit to public ridicule. But he wrote of us what is prophetically true of Israel, and the lecturer, giving blind evidence, really proved our Identity with the Lost Ten Tribes. Israel, praise ye the Lord!

Digitized by Google

ITALY AND THE SABBATH DAY.

We have always held, on Scriptural grounds, that an infallible test of the Hebrew origin of any race is its observance of the Sabbath. The British folk, including the American people, nationally, and by law, observe one day in seven holy to the Lord. So do the Jews by their law. These three races, then, we conclude are Hebrews, because they have "the sign" described in Exod. xxxi. 13—17, Ezek. xx. 20, and Isa. lviii. 13, 14. This being the case in respect to the Jews, whose Hebrew Semitic origin no one doubts, and also as to the British Anglo-Saxon races, who respond in every other way as well to the Scriptural character and description of the Eleven-Tribed House of Israel, or Joseph; we ask if the other nations of Europe, not of the British Anglo-Saxon stock, also possess this sign? We find there is not one which has it.

The Latin nations, such as the French, Spaniards, Portuguese, and Italians, lack it. They do not respect the Sabbath at all or keep it holy. To them it is the day of amusement, and worldly frivolity. Their theatres are all open on that day, they neglect the things of God on His day, and take on it their own pleasure, speaking their own words and doing their own works. But there are the German, or Teutonic, and Scandinavian nations, such as Norway, Sweden, Denmark, and Germany. Do these keep God's Holy day according to the Commandment, being as to the majority Lutheran Protestants? Let those testify who know these races best.

They give God half the day till noon, serve Him for a few of the hours of the holy season, but take the remainder for themselves. The concert-room, the theatre, the race course, the review, the ball-room, and the counting-house, these occupy the afternoon and evening hours of God's Holy day, and there is no national law reserving, for God's service, the whole day, according to the Commandment. These nations, then, the Latin and the Teutonic races, keep not God's Sabbath day according to His will, and therefore are not of the Hebrew stock, nor belong to His people, Shemitic Israel.

The habits and customs of the Italians, in regard to God's Holy Sabbath, we have not hitherto described in detail, for lack of reliable information. We have now, however, the testimony of a Scottish newspaper recently published, which opportunely gives us the following very suggestive statements, regarding Italian Protestant evangelisation, and the difficulties which attend the operations of the Waldensian pastors in Italy, in their efforts to make known the Gospel there. The writer said, inter alia:—

The question of the Sabbath occupied a great deal of attention. It must be remembered that Italy is without a Sabbath. Work of all kinds proceeds on Sunday, as on other days, up till two o'clock. After that the theatres are open, and in many of them there are two performances for the day. We have no conception in this country of the difficulties our brethren in that land have in carrying on their work without a Sabbath. They deserve our deepest sympathy.

Italy is without a Sabbath! Then Italians are not Israel, according to the Word of God; for they have not the "sign" which He put upon His people whereby they were to know Him and He them. But if Italy be not the land of Israel's domicile the Italians are not outside the pale of God's mercies. On the contrary, they are a Gentile, non-Israelite race, to bless whom God "created, made, and formed His chosen people." In Israel, and Israel's Saviour, all the nations, all the families, and all the kindreds of the earth, were and are to be blessed. Israel was endowed with all conceivable blessings, in order that they might "blossom and bud, and fill the face of the world with fruit" (Isa. xxvii. 6).

To benefit and bless poor, ungodly, Sabbathless Italy the British Churches, in England, Scotland, and Ireland have, during last year, contributed no less a sum than about £6,000, in order that the Italians might have the Gospel preached to them in their own tongue by their own fellow countrymen—the Waldensian pastors. The sum total of the expense incurred is about £10,000, and of this, three-fifths is defrayed by God's people Israel, to whom He has given the means to do His will, since He has declared that "He giveth them the power to get wealth, that He may establish His covenant which He swear unto our fathers as it is this day." The Italians themselves, according to their deep poverty, have given towards the fund about £1,600, being one-sixth of the total required. A fair result considering the character of the people and their godless condition without a Sabbath.

We have recently had the privilege of listening to an address delivered by the Rev. Charles Albert Tron, pastor of the Waldensian Church, and a member of the mission board, residing at Turin, Italy. He was on deputation to this country advocating the claims of the Waldensian Missions to the Italian people. The address was admirably and eloquently given in good idiomatic English, and gave us much food for thought on the subject of our present article. Signor Tron, speaking of the condition of Italy to-day, made the following statement:

"The state of Italy at present is very unsatisfactory. A clerical reaction has set in, which is headed by the present Pope—an able, astute man, very different from his predecessor. But in the face of this reaction of Popery against Protestantism there is the fact that religion is at a very low ebb in my country. Out of a population of about 30,000,000 at least 15,000,000 are infidels—infidelity, in fact, is rampant in the land. People regard all religions as false. They have once been deceived by Popery and they will not see truth in any belief at all now! What is the consequence of this wide-spread atheism? We had last year 2,000 suicides in Italy, and there are as many as 600,000 Italian men, and women, and children, always in the prisons, convicted of crimes against the law! One half of our population are steeped in ignorance, and next to the Spanish people ours in Italy are the lowest in the rank of civilised races, at least one half not knowing how to read or write!"

Such was the melancholy account given by a missionary, himself a Vaudois pastor, of the awful state of the Italians, a nation for ages under the authority and religious teaching of the Papacy. The Italians lack not only the Sabbath sign of Israel, but they occupy a place low down in the scale of nations, in regard to their moral and religious condition. They need Israel's help in respect to the Gospel of the grace of God, and they obtain it chiefly by means of our British wealth, which enables the Waldensian pastors to minister to their fellow countrymen, and preach to them the everlasting Gospel of the grace of God.

LIGHT.—AN ILLUSTRATION OF THE HOLY TRINITY.

Forwarded by A. B.

In Light we have a most remarkable illustration of the Holy Trinity. We can prove by ocular demonstration that there exists in Nature a trinity in unity, and a unity in trinity, quite as marvellous as the Holy Trinity. Light is easily separated into its component colours by transmitting it through a glass prism, where it is resolved into red, orange, yellow, green, blue, indigo, and violet, which constitute, when combined, white or ordinary light. Now, it will be perceived that red, yellow, and blue are its primary or essential colours, the others being merely produced by the admixture or over-lapping of two adjoining primary colours; thus, orange is found between the red and yellow, green between the yellow and blue; so that, in fact, we have only the three primary colours to deal with, each of which has its peculiar properties and attributes distinct from the others: thus, the red is the calorific, or heating principle; the yellow is the luminous, or light-giving principle; while it is in the blue ray that the power of chemical action is found.

Now, it is this trinity of colours which constitutes, when combined, the unity of ordinary, or white light; when separated, this unity of light is divided into the trinity of colours. Although one and the same, neither can exist without the other; the three are one, the one is three. Thus we have a unity in trinity, and a trinity in unity, exemplified in light itself; and God is Light.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed: — "Philo-Israel," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

SUBSCRIPTIONS £ s. d.

Annual Subscription for one copy weekly (including the Twelve Double Numbers) post free - 0 7 6
Two Copies (including Double Numbers) - - 0 13 6
Three Copies " " " " - 1 0 4
Four Copies " " " " - 1 5 6
Six Copies " " " " - 1 16 4

Post Office Orders to be made payable at the head office, St. Martin's-le-grand, London, to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C., and W. H. GUEST & Co. 29, Paternoster-row, London.

The Editor cannot undertake to return rejected MSS. unless stamps for the purpose be sent. Parties requiring an answer should enclose a stamp.

Contents Bills and Show Cards may be obtained on application to the Publishers.

Advertisements should be sent to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

Prepaid Advertisements are inserted at the rate of 30 words for 1s. 4d.

PREPAID "WANTED," &c., ADVERTISEMENTS, 27 words, 1s.; 4d. every additional line.

WANTED, HOUSEKEEPER for small Family. Manufacturing Town in Yorkshire. Identity believer preferred. State age and particulars, also enclose Photo, which will be returned, to H. M., care of R. Banks & Son, Racquet Court, Fleet Street.

Somerset House, Bath Road, Bournemouth.

FURNISHED APARTMENTS, in best position on East Cliff: thoroughly surrounded by pines. Good Lawn Tennis. Excellent cooking and attendance. Board if required. T. CLARIDGE, Proprietor.

HUNDREDS OF THOUSANDS of Persons, from all parts of the world, will visit, during the next few months, the COLONIAL AND INDIAN EXHIBITION at South Kensington. Each Visitor should obtain from Messrs. Willing's Bookstalls at South Kensington Station, a copy of "THE PENNY POPULAR GUIDE TO THE EXHIBITION." There are, however, hundreds of thousands who will be unable to see this marvellous collection of the Arts and Products of the British Empire. These also may form some idea of the extent and beauty of the Exhibition by reading this Guide, which may be obtained of Robert Banks and Son, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, London, E.C. Post Free to any part of the Postal Union for 2d.

PUBLISHED BY ROBT. BANKS & SON,
RACQUET COURT, FLEET STREET, E.C.

Price 1s. per 100, assorted packets 1s. 2d.; 8s. 6d. per 1,000 (nett). Carriage free 4d. extra.

Thoughts for the British Folk.

Suggested by PHILO-ISRAEL.

No. 1.—Multitudinousness.
No. 2.—The Gates.
No. 3.—The Nation and Company of Nations.
No. 4.—British Wealth.
No. 5.—The Rulers Over Many Nations.
No. 6.—The Universal Creditor.
No. 7.—The Ever-Continuing British Monarchy.
No. 8.—The Scattered People at Home in Every Climate
No. 9.—The Queen, Lords, and Commons.
No. 10.—The Unconquerable Nation.
No. 1.—The Fatally Destructive Race.
No. 12.—The Isolated Nation.
No. 13.—The Nation Which Belts the Earth.
No. 14.—The Emancipators of the Slave
No. 15.—The Christian Nation.
No. 16.—The Ten Commandments.
No. 17.—The Asylum for the Foreign Refugee.
No. 18.—The Possessors of the "Sign."
No. 19.—The Universal Missionaries.
No. 20.—Testimony of the Book of Common Prayer.
No. 21.—Church and State, and also Disestablishment.
No. 22.—Our Poor Laws.
No. 23.—The Labour Question is an Identity Question.
No. 24.—Emigration.

Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

A BOOK OF REMARKABLE INTEREST.

Price, cloth gilt, 2/6, post free for P.O.O.

SCENES BEYOND THE GRAVE.

By W. J. STANFORD.
Edited by the late C. W. BANKS.
Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

Dr. JOSEPH WILD'S WORKS

NEW EDITION JUST PUBLISHED.

THE LOST TEN TRIBES

Price 3s., post free 3s. 3d.

The FUTURE of ISRAEL and JUDAH.

Price 2s., post free 2s. 3d.

The Special Commissioner of the Christian World, writing of Dr. Wild, says:—"On Sunday evening I had to fight my way into the Congregational Church of which Dr. Wild is the minister. He hails from America, and is quite the sensation of the hour. There was no standing room anywhere, and as I made to the door I met many coming away However, I had made up my mind to hear the Doctor, and hear him I did. It seems that the subscribers have a door to themselves; I made for it, and luckily found a chair, which I wedged in under the platform. The Doctor prayed, and then we had a sermon about Revelation, containing much that was very effective, if not about his text, at any rate about that mysterious part of Scripture from which the text was taken."

London: Published by Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C., and may be ordered of any Bookseller.

SEE FIFTY REASONS WHY THE ANGLO-SAXONS ARE THE LOST TEN TRIBES. Price 6d., post free 7d.

The Land of Espousals.
The Testimony of Language.
The Transfer of the Kingdom from Judah to Israel.
"Shiloh:" Its Interpretation.
Ireland not Missioned from Rome
Israel and Judah Distinct.
Israel's Blindness.
The Standard Goes to Israel.
Our Royal Standard.
The Apostle Paul in Britain.
Ireland a University for Europe
The Princess Tephi.

London: Robert Banks & Son, Racquet court, Fleet-st.

Price 1s. 8d. per 100. Neatly Printed on Primrose-Coloured Paper.

No. 1 of the "SHADOW" SERIES OF LEAFLETS, entitled

The Emblem of the Empire.

By "A E I,"

Author of "The New Old Story."

A capital Leaflet for General Distribution by Members of the PRIMROSE LEAGUE and others.

No. 2. Now ready.

Predestined to a Glorious Title and Mission.

By L. P.

ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street.

Third Edition. Just ready. Price 1d.; 12 copies, post free, 1s.; 100 copies, carriage paid, 6s. 6d. 16 pages.

Ephraim-Israel, the Pivot Nation of Prophecy and History.

By V. M. COX.

Being a Lecture delivered before the Metropolitan Anglo-Israel Association.

Robert Banks and Son, Printers, Racque'-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

✣ A New Light. ✣

By A E I.

Author of "The New Old Story," "4,000 Years Old," &c.

This pamphlet is prepared specially for general distribution, and as a means of introducing "Our Identity" to persons unacquainted with the subject will be found particularly useful. It is printed on good paper, in clear type, and bound in primrose colour cover.

Price 2d., post free 2½d. R. Banks & Son, Racquet-court.

COMPLETE CHEAP EDITION.

Cloth gilt, price 7s. 6d., free to any address on receipt of P.O.O. or cheque.

FIFTY YEARS IN THE CHURCH OF ROME.

By FATHER CHINIQUY.

WITH PORTRAIT OF THE AUTHOR.

"It is pre-eminently calculated to open the eyes of the thoughtless and unsuspecting, and to give them a true insight into the real character of the Papacy. Moreover, it is of the most vital importance at such a crisis as the present."—Dr. Doudney in the Gospel Magazine.

Robert Banks & Son, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C.

Just published, price 6d., by post, rolled in case, 7d.

The History of the House of Joseph.

A Few Scriptures concerning God's Purposes with Ephraim. God's Firstborn, the Representative of the House of Joseph, the Ten Tribes, House of Israel.

Printed on a Sheet in form of a Chart, with the particular passages underlined, and lines showing the various connections of different passages of Scripture.

Compiled by J. L. W.

Printed and Published by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet Court, Fleet Street.

The Book of Hebrew Roots:

Showing the Ideal Meanings and Various Ramifications of the Principal Hebrew Radicals.

By BURLINGTON B. WALE.

Post free 2s. 6d.

R. BANKS & SON Racquet-court, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

✣ THROUGH THE BLUE MIST. ✣

SACRED SONG BY BENARI.
ARRANGED WITH CHORUS.

Every Israelite will appreciate this Song.

Price 3s., net.

EVANS & CO., 33, Argyle-street, Regent-street, London

Free by Parcels Post for 3s. 3d.

THE "COLONIAL SHOE."

This is without exception the cheapest, as well as the most comfortable Lady's Walking Shoe ever manufactured. The tops are of French Lasting, to lace, with good soles and military heels. Sample pair sent free on receipt of Postal Order for 3s. 3d. to any part of the United Kingdom.

EASY SLIPPERS FOR TENDER FEET.

W. Keast will, on receipt of 2s. 9d., send free by Parcels Post, a pair of his French Lasting, elastic front Slippers. Thousands of Pairs of these Slippers have been sold. Everybody satisfied. Send number of size. Persons not knowing size should send a piece of paper out to size of sole of boot.

WALTER KEAST, 102, Kennington Park Rd., London, S.E. Established 1851.

NOTTINGHAM LACE.

SAMPLE PARCEL, 12 PATTERNS, 1s.
Send Postal Order to
WM. HILL, LACE MANUFACTURER, LONG EATON, NEAR NOTTINGHAM.

ETHELINE.

A New and most effective Remedy for CORNS.

Perfectly safe and harmless. Is very easily applied. Cures in a few applications, without the slightest pain. Everyone troubled with either Corns, Warts, or Bunions, will find relief by using ETHELINE. To be obtained of all Chemists, or post free for 14 stamps, from—

J. LLEWELLYN, CHEMIST, COWBRIDGE

EXTERMINATION OF ALL CORNS & BUNIONS

O Guaranteed by using Gardner's Patented Corn and Bunion Exterminator, an ingenious little instrument which can be used by anyone. Painless in operation—"never fails." Price 1s. The highest Surgical Testimonials can be seen and operations successfully performed in all peculiar cases, bad nails, &c., at the Patentee's, who will send the Exterminator direct for 13 stamps.

C. GARDNER, Chiropodist, Kendal.

BAD LEGS.

CLARKSON'S CELEBRATED SPECIFIC.—THE ONLY SURE REMEDY for WOUNDS, SCURVY, &c. Wonderful Cures throughout England. Testimonials sent (many from Ministers) of marvellous cures thought incurable! Case:—Mr. Thos. Shepherd's sister, Fellisciffe, Harrogate, suffered 17 years. She had a very large wound, was twice in hospitals, and discharged incurable. Amputation recommended. Cured in seven weeks. Price 3s. 9d. Describe case; say if a wound, and its size. Easy terms.—Address:—Dr. Clarkson, Darley, Ripley, Yorks.

Printed for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C. PUBLISHED BY GUEST, HAYWORTH, & Co., 29, PATERNOSTER-ROW, WEDNESDAY, JUNE 16, 1886.

All rights reserved.

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."

(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India.)

"And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the Forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS of the EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. X., No. 495. Entered at Stationers' Hall.] WEDNESDAY, JUNE 23, 1886. [PRICE ONE PENNY.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
Israel's Ocean Empire	245
Metropolitan Anglo-Israel Association	246
Present-Day Problems, and How Anglo-Israel Truth Explains and Solves Them. Miss Cox's Lecture at Clifton, April 30, 1886.—Part IV.	251

ISRAEL'S OCEAN EMPIRE.

THE idea that underlies Mr. Froude's "Oceana" is the necessity of an "Ocean Empire for Great Britain." We have made immense strides towards the realisation of this idea, but it is held that we have not yet attained to it. There is no doubt that, step by step, God is enabling us to build up just that very empire which Mr. Froude desires our race may speedily acquire. The Ocean Empire is founded on the Gates, and "the Gates of the enemies" of Israel are given freely by the God of Israel to His people, just for the very purpose that by means of these Gates they may at last acquire the dominion of the Ocean Highways of the world, and so secure the "Ocean Empire" and all that that Empire means. Captain Philip H. Colomb, R.N., in his naval prize essay for 1878, to which we have often before alluded, gives us an admirable sketch of the trade and naval routes of Great Britain on the Ocean Highways of the world, and shows how they rest for security on the Gates, wherein coal is stored.

In regard to the Eastern route from London to China and Japan, there are Gibraltar and Malta, with Cyprus on the flank, before we come to the Suez Canal on Egyptian territory. This Capt. P. Colomb foresaw in 1878 must sooner or later fall into our power if the route to the far East was to be maintained. Accordingly in 1882 we know that land lapsed to the military control of Britain, never again, we believe, to be divorced from that union. The route down the Red Sea is safe and secured by naval coaling stations at Aden and Galle, with Bombay on the left flank only 800 miles from the central point between those two coaling "Gates."

Beyond Singapore the route to Hong Kong is protected, unless France, Holland, and Spain become as allies the enemies of Britain. At the extremity of the route between Japan and the Corea Capt. Colomb detected a weak point, and in 1878 actually named Port Hamilton (p. 15) as a spot just suited for a coaling Gate, and one we must have (with Tsu-Sima, belonging to Japan), to safeguard and supply our commercial and naval roads. We know that quite recently our Government have acquired that very spot, and are holding it now in strength. It is just the Gate we require.

The Southern route between Point de Galle and Freemantle in Australia has a run of 3,000 miles between these two Gates, an element of weakness in respect to coal for ships, which can be obviated by making the route between Point de Galle and West Australia to pass via the Seychelles and the Mauritius; neutralising thus also a possible French attack, by securing as British Gates Zanzibar and Johanna, and even ports in Madagascar, which will be quite possible in case of war. Beyond Freemantle to the Fijis there are no difficulties, and our Ocean Empire there is safe. From Singapore to Australia, via the Torres Straits, is a distance of 3,600 miles, but since the date of Capt. Colomb's essay we have secured the Gates in North and North-east Borneo, which should give our navy some coaling help in navigating that long distance. The routes on the Western Ocean Highways are deemed free from danger of attack. The points to which they lead are St. John's, Newfoundland, Halifax, Bermuda, and Nassau; and the only stations in foreign hands en route—viz., the Azores—are in possession of the Portuguese, a friendly Power.

The distances ships of war and commerce would have to travel on this route would be 3,200 miles. "In an European combination against us, our enemies have no such grasp of the Western routes as we have, and only the possession of the Azores could place them at all on a par with us." Therefore, says Capt. Colomb, "the Western routes are geographically perfect." There remains to consider the great Southern routes sending British trade mostly by sailing ships East to and round Africa, and West to South America to its Western coasts as well as to its Eastern. The latter is the most defenceless for our trading commerce, because between the great triangle formed by the Falklands, Fiji, and Vancouvers Island, we have no maritime Gate or coaling station wherein our war ships could obtain supplies to enable them to keep the sea. The deficiency must be supplied in time of war by alliances with the various Republics on the West Coast of South America.

The trade past the Cape of Good Hope Eastwards and back home to Britain is secured by the Gates, Cape Town, St. Helena, Ascension, and the Azores, with Gibraltar and Sierra Leone to serve our ships at the North of the route. These and other ocean highways are scientifically examined by Capt. Colomb with reference to the coal supply and the capacity of a fighting ship issuing from the British Gates to convoy a fleet or meet an enemy; and his verdict is this:—"It is a marvellous chain of ports which constitutes the strength of the British Naval Empire. We have seen that depending on British territory alone for supplies, ships capable of steaming at a given moderate speed for 3,500 miles, may everywhere, except in the Pacific, pass from point to point under steam alone. . . . . Our great conclusion is, therefore, that our naval Empire depends upon coal supply; that capacity for coal storage is the first requirement of a British man-of-war.

Digitized by Google

Such, we see, must be our "propulsive policy," and it can be that of no other nation at war with us. No other nation has these coal depôts under her lee even if she had the coal to place in them, and all other nations must, therefore, in attacking our trade routes, reverse our "propulsive policy." They must have great sail power, and their steam must be reserved for fighting purposes; whereas ours is to use the wind as an auxiliary only, to be cheated when foul and to be used when fair. It appears to me to be impossible for foreign ships to seriously attack our commercial lines guarded by other ships practically independent of the wind; though they would, of course, meet British ships depending greatly on sail power on an equality."

Then follows Capt. Colomb's famous paragraph (35) on the subject of the British GATES, where he notices "how a sort of destiny has possessed us not only with a command over all the great commercial routes, but with the GATES of those routes." He describes Egypt as the Gate of the Red Sea, and Gibraltar and Aden as the Gates of the Mediterranean and of the Red Sea to the South respectively. Galle, he declares, is the Gate of the East and South-east trade routes; Singapore that of the China and Japanese highways. The Cape of Good Hope is, he adds, the Gate of all the Eastern trade routes to the South, and the Falklands that of all the Western "roads by water." "Possessed of these Gates," he asks, "how are enemies to pass them? If they do pass them, what hopes are there of success against our trade, so long as we hold our chain of ports intact, with sufficient maritime forces resting on them? The answer is clear—None."

So far Capt. P. H. Colomb, R.N. His statement is a masterly exposition of the power of the British naval Gates, and a full description of the way in which Israel's Ocean Empire has been by the gift and grace of God built up for us in such wise as to make us even now supreme at sea and masters of the Ocean Highways of the world. It will not be long ere British naval power will be so consolidated and that of foreign Powers so attenuated, by reason of their lack of coaling stations and ports whereon to rest their strength at sea, that the acknowledged mistress of the ocean will be, as Mr. Froude desires, God's chosen, favoured people, British-Israel, the Ten-Tribed sons of the living God. For God's good gift of the Gates, on which all the other gifts of a temporal earthly character rest, let Israel, therefore, loudly praise the Lord!

METROPOLITAN ANGLO-ISRAEL ASSOCIATION.

THE ANNUAL MEETING.

The Annual Meeting of Members was held at the office of the Society, Palace Chambers, on Wednesday afternoon, June 9, at three o'clock; E. W. Bird, Esq., in the chair. The hymn commencing, "O God of Bethel, by whose hand," followed by prayer. Apologies for absence were read from Rev. C. W. Hickson, M.A., and Rev. A. J. J. Cachemaille. The Secretary read the Report and Balance Sheet. The Chairman then gave a short address. Douglas A. Onslow, Esq., moved, and Major Priaulx seconded, that the Report and Balance Sheet be adopted.

The second resolution, proposed by Admiral Bedingfeld, and seconded by Rev. Denis Hanan, was as follows:—

That the cordial thanks of this meeting be and are hereby tendered to Messrs. Horner and Icke for their kind services in auditing the accounts of the Association, and that they be and are hereby requested to continue their kind services during the ensuing year.

The third resolution, which was moved by Mr. Bowthorp, and seconded by Mr. Mackworth, was as follows:—

That the Vice-Presidents and Members of Council be and are hereby thanked, and requested kindly to continue their services during the ensuing year, and that Mr. H. Scott Icke's name be added to the list of Members of Council.

The fourth resolution, which was moved by Philo-Israel, seconded by Mr. Douglas A. Onslow, and supported by Rev. J. J. Shrubsole and Admiral Bedingfeld, was carried unanimously. It was as follows:—

That this meeting receives with profound regret the resignation of the presidency of this Association by the Right Hon. Viscount Folkestone, M.P. That this meeting is cheered by the statement of his lordship that this step is taken solely in consequence of his lordship's increasing obligations in connection with his lordship's Parliamentary engagements. That this meeting is also gladdened by the knowledge that his lordship will continue to support and advocate the great "truths (as his lordship states) which we hold in common," and has consented to be the patron of this Association, and that his lordship's name as such should appear on the official documents of the Association. That this meeting tenders its hearty thanks to his lordship for the great and uniformly kind services rendered to this Association as President during the past seven years. That this meeting expresses its sincere and earnest desire for his lordship's health and prosperity, and that the divine blessing may accompany all his efforts as a member of Parliament to vindicate and preserve those grand Constitutional principles which, under God, have placed Great Britain, God's ancient people Israel, at the head of all the nations of the world.

It was also resolved that the above resolution be illuminated on vellum and forwarded to his lordship on the part of the Association.

One verse of "God Save the Queen" was then sung, and the meeting closed with the Benediction.

ANNUAL MEETING AT EXETER HALL, STRAND.

