"WHAT do you think of those folk who believe that the British people are the Ten Lost Tribes?" "Well, I certainly think the facts are in their favour." "Do you believe with them?" "Yes. Why not?" The foregoing is a fair statement of conversation which passes nearly every day between friends. It, moreover, fairly sets forth the spirit of reticence which possesses thousands of believers in the Israelitish origin of the British, and thus accounts for the fact that while the knowledge of this truth is spreading far and wide, permeating every section of the Christian Church, to the onlooker the growth of British-Israelism appears to be both slow and uncertain. We, therefore, purpose to detail some of the reasons for this reticence in the many friends who accept and firmly hold our views of Divine truth.

First, the opposition of the ministers of religion may be considered as a great impediment to an open avowal of our faith in the truth that the British are Israel after the flesh. True that some hundreds of religious teachers of every denomination of Christians are to be found who have accepted this truth, and sympathise with us, but the fact remains that the general body of them are distinctly, some of them violently, opposed to any such reading of the Word of God. The secret of this opposition has its foundation in a misunderstanding of our position and aim, and when this point is pressed upon the attention of our opponents, we are invariably met with the excuse that they have neither time nor inclination to look into the subject. More than one clergyman, when asked to consider the question, has replied, "If I accept the views enunciated by the British-Israelites, that we are really the Lost Ten Tribes, my present sermons will be of no use whatsoever, and at my time of life I have not the disposition, neither can I afford to prepare new discourses for my people." In this frame of mind how can it be expected that any attention or study will be devoted to one of the most important phases of truth, bearing more than any other upon the present day life, happiness, and prosperity of the nation whom the Lord hath blessed?

Another cause of opposition from this class of opponents is to be found in the fact that if it be decided that the British people are Israel, possessing nationally and literally the Abrahamic covenant with all its wealth of promise and blessings, then the Jews are no longer to be regarded as the special chosen people of God, to the exclusion of all others. For many years in the minds of most Christians, a certain glamour and fascination has gathered around the children of Judah which has, in our opinion, given them undue prominence, and fostered many errors concerning God's will and purpose towards that branch of the family of Jacob. To detract from the glorious position of pre-eminence over all others of the Jews in anywise is counted nothing less than sacrilege, and the persons who do so, should cover themselves with confusion and shame. Such is the feeling of multitudes of Christians who are asked to look attentively at the facts which prove our identification with Israel. But to such we say, What about that other child of Jacob, to whom pertains the birthright, and who is the only child blessed by the dying Patriarch, into whose possession is given all that is valuable and glorious as the inheritor of the covenant made with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob? Joseph, with his children, Ephraim and Manasseh, demand the pre-eminence over all the sons of Jacob, and those who prefer any other before him are guilty of wrong-doing which sooner or later will bring its own sorrow; to prefer another before him, is to rob him of his just dues, for with him alone is found the covenant and the birthright; to give any other child a pre-eminence, is to usurp a position assigned him by God.

Is it, then, wrong to find out Joseph, the head of the house, together with the brethren who constitute that particular house wherein is the blessing? We think not; further, we hold that to know the true facts, and not to act upon them, is a sin against God.

British-Israelites believe that in these latter days God has revealed most positively and distinctly, that they are really the literal House of Israel, therefore if in any way this belief gives them not only equality but pre-eminence over the Jews, faithful men of God must accept the position, notwithstanding they must forego all the fancied, but erroneous national glory with which they have for so long invested the Jew.

We are not unmindful of the fact that of Judah came the Chief Ruler, Christ, but we attach no undue importance to this, since Christ could only come of one tribe. Judah was honoured by so much as to be the medium, or tribe, by which Christ came, and we know that humanly speaking the line was crossed by Gentile blood, notably in the case of Boaz and Ruth; still, apart from all this, Judah will only participate in national blessing by so much as he is joined with the House of Israel, in other words, the Jew will be blessed by so much as he is joined with the British people.

Let our Ministers and Teachers of Religion everywhere be honest and loyal to God's Word and themselves, and fairly consider and teach the faithfulness of God, in preserving the House of Israel, and make it manifest in the present day.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed: "Philo-Israel," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£ s. d.
Annual Subscription for one copy weekly (including the Twelve Double Numbers) post free	0 7 6
Two Copies (including Double Numbers)	0 13 6
Three Copies " " "	1 0 4
Four Copies " " "	1 5 6
Six Copies " " "	1 16 4

Post Office Orders to be made payable at the head office, St. Martin's-le-grand, London, to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C., or F. W. PARRY & Co., 29, Paternoster-row, London.

The Editor cannot undertake to return rejected MSS. unless stamps for the purpose be sent. Parties requiring an answer should enclose a stamp.

Contents Bills and Show Cards may be obtained on application to the Publishers.

Advertisements should be sent to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

Prepaid Advertisements are inserted at the rate of thirty words for 1s. 4d.

BLACKPOOL.—Anglo-Israelites will find COMFORTABLE APARTMENTS, Public or private, near Sea or Gardens, at Mrs. Breakells, 39, Adelaide Street.

SPECIAL OFFER.

VOLUMES

II., III., IV., V., VI., VII. and VIII.

OF

ISRAEL'S HOPE

AND

DESTINY.

Edited by DOUGLAS A. ONSLOW, Esq., J.P.

Bound in handsome cloth, gilt are now offered, post free to any part of the World for 2s. 6d. per volume, or the Seven Volumes will be sent for 15s. Orders must be sent direct to the Publishers, ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C., as they cannot be supplied through a Bookseller at this price.

Each Volume contains a large number of interesting and important articles on the Anglo-Israel Question, Great Pyramid, and other Prophetical and Biblical Subjects.

Just published—Cloth, 2s. 6d.—a re-issue of

The Origin of Masonic Ritual and Tradition:

A Lecture on the Three Degrees, by BRO. WM. ROWBOTTOM, P.M., 1028, with facsimile of a very rare Masonic engraving published in 1789.

"Exquisitely clear and singularly correct in everything wherein I may be any authority or guide."—Professor PIAZZI SMYTH. "Will be found of considerable interest to many besides Masons."—Church Bells.

Oxford: S. Rowbottom and Son; London: R. Banks and Son, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C.; and F. W. Parry and Co., 29, Paternoster Row, E.C.

Price Five Shillings.—"Substantially and attractively got up, and profusely illustrated."—Oldham Chronicle.

Eildon Grange: A Tale.

By ANDREW CLARK, M.A., Vicar of St. Michael's, Oxford. "One of the most charming books. . . . The illustrations are full of playful humour."—Scotsman. "The book is undoubtedly a happy one."—The Oxford Magazine. "Both entertaining and bracing."—Dundee Advertiser.

Oxford: S. Rowbottom and Son; London: Hamilton, Adams and Co., 32, Paternoster Row, E.C.

☞ Ask for this Book at the Libraries.

WORKS BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

The History of the House of Israel. How They Were Lost and How They Were Found. Told for the children. Price 6d., cloth 1s.; post free 7d. and 1s. 1d. Fifth edition.

A Resume of the Scriptural Argument Proving the Identity of the British Race with the Lost Ten Tribes. Price 1d.; 6s. per hundred, postage 6d.

Anglo-Israelism. True, Not False. Being Philo-Israel's Reply to the Rev. Canon Bell's pamphlet, "Anglo-Israelism: True or False?" Price 1d., 6s. 6d. per 100. 16 pages, crown 8vo.

An Elementary Digest or Sketch of the Chief Facts and Teachings of the Great Pyramid of Egypt. Adapted to the Unlearned and Unscientific 56 pages. Illustrated with Diagrams, price 4d., post free 5d. 10th Thousand.

Our Identity with the House of Israel. Price 4d., Reprinted from "Clifton Chronicle Letters'

Our Identity: What it is Not; What it is; and Our Obligations To-day in Respect to it. Being a Lecture recently delivered in London by Philo-Israel, and published by special request. Price 2d., a reduction for quantities.

London: Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C. F. W. PARRY (late GUEST & Co.), 29 PATERNOSTER-ROW WEDNESDAY, JUNE 13, 1888 [All rights reserved

NEW BOOK BY DR. WILD.

Just Published, Price 3s., Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Lettered. Sent by Post on receipt of Published Price.

TALKS

FOR

THE TIMES.

BY JOSEPH WILD, M.A., D.D.,

Pastor of the Bond-st. Congregational Church, Toronto.

CONTENTS.—Chapter 1. A Gift of One Hundred and Ninety-Two Million Acres of Land. 2. The Return of the Jews to Palestine. 3. Folks that won't be Somebody. 4. The Four Prophecies of Egypt. 5. The Stone Kingdom and Dynamite; and the Orange Bill. 6. "144!" 7. "666!" 8. The Transit of Venus. 9. The Miracles of Antichrist; and the High Rock Image of Massachusetts, U.S. 10. The Man who could not sleep, and what came of it. 11. The Rainbow. 12. London Destroyed, and Jerusalem a Seaport. 13. Liberalism. 14. A Graft without a Stock. 15. Mouldy Bread and an Oath. 16. A Tombstone Inscription. 17. Dog Lappers. 18. How to get Rich.

WORKS BY PASTOR CHINIQUY.

Cloth, gilt lettered, 5s. Sent post free for P.O.

FIFTY YEARS IN THE CHURCH OF ROME.—Complete Revised Edition on good paper, well bound in Cloth, Gilt Lettered, nearly 600 pages. With New Portrait and Autograph of the Author. "No history like it since the time of Luther."—New York Witness. Be particular to order the Complete Edition published by Banks.

1s., post free 1s. 2d.

THE PRIEST THE WOMAN, AND THE CONFESSIONAL.—"In its pages will be found ample evidence of the danger of the Confessional."—English Churchman.

Price 6d. in paper covers; on toned paper, in cloth boards, gilt lettered, 1s. post free for stamps.

PAPAL IDOLATRY. An Exposure of the Dogma of Transubstantiation and Mariolatry, to which is added "My Reasons Why I will Never Go Back to the Church of Rome." The Bible Christian Magazine says:—"Unanswerable! The most powerful argument against Transubstantiation, in the same space, that we have read."

R. BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

MR. EDWARD HINE has returned from his lecturing tour in America. Friends wishing to arrange for him to lecture can communicate with Isaac Loveland, Shoreham, near Sevenoaks, Kent, at present fixing no dates. Mr. Hine's publications have had a large circulation, and can be obtained of F. W. Parry & Co., 29, Paternoster Row, London, E.C.

Forty-Seven Identifications, 6d., post free 7d

Cui Bono? 6d., post free, 7d.

Lost Israel Found. 3s 6d., post free, 3s. 9d

Also The Nation Warned by the Scripture Teachings of the Great Pyramid. 6d., post, 7d.

BY THE REV. ROBERT DOUGLAS, M.A.

(Vicar of Kidsgrove, Stoke-on-Trent),

EPHRAIM - ENGLAND. The Nineteenth Century Revelation of the Fruits of History. Price 4s., post free.

THE TWO WITNESSES. A Monthly Identity Magazine. Price 6d., Annual Subscription, post free, 6s.

London: ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-st.

PIANOFORTES, Harmoniums, American Organs. Why buy at shops inferior made instruments, and pay large profits, when you can buy direct from the Maker High-class Instruments, and save 50 per cent. by so doing? Full value allowed for old Instruments in exchange as part payment. Write for Price Lists and Testimonials to G. LINSTEAD, 2, Oseney Crescent, Camden Road, London. Established 1874.

SOUND, PURE, WHITE TEETH!

Those who value these will try

CARBOLINE

(The Great Sanitary Tooth Paste).

1/6 & 2/6 per Pot.

Through Chemists, or post free from the Makers,

GEORGE & WELCH

WORCESTER.

Lancet writes:—"To save the teeth use a good carbolic daily."

THE WATERS OF HERMON.

THE interesting circumstance of the re-production by modern science of these celebrated Waters of Antiquity, so famed in Biblical times, is one of the most important illustrations of the advance of the age. Differing from all other Waters they contain no mineral ingredients, so that the system, instead of being lowered by their use, is steadily built up, while the functions of life are restored to a healthy condition. And it is, therefore, with extreme gratification that this is now brought within the reach of the general public. The well-known curative properties of this famous medicine are promptly manifested in the following disorders:—Indigestion, Biliousness, Congestion of the Liver, Nausea and Vomiting, Disorders of the Stomach and Bowels and their consequences, Constipation, Piles, Flatulence, Repletion, Spasms, Discomfort or Pain after Meals, Pain Between the Shoulders, Pains in the Back and Loins, Cold in the Head, Coughs of various character, Difficulty of Breathing, Giddiness and Sick Headache, Effects of Alcohol, Overworked Brain, Affections of the Nerves, &c. Price 2s. 9d. per bottle, post free. THE WATERS OF HERMON DEPOT, 107, King Street, Hammersmith, London.

INVALUABLE REMEDY

HUMAN LIFE.—FIFTY YEARS' Record of Facts, Principles, and Discoveries (just published, complete) Relating to the Improvement and Preservation of Human Life on Earth. Origin and true treatment of diseases. A series of articles by DR. SAMUEL BIRLEY, M.D., Ph.D. Book form, 50 pages. SENT FREE to every applicant by the publishers, GORDON B. MURRAY & CO., 50, Theobald's-road, Holborn, W.C. Write to-day

Certain HARNESS' Cure.

ELECTROPATHIC BELT

FOR

SLEEPLESSNESS

SLEEPLESSNESS.—The Rt. Hon. LORD BYRON says that—"Harness' Electropathic Belt is invaluable for sleeplessness, I recommend it to all my friends."

Guaranteed to generate a mild continuous current of Electricity, which speedily cures all Disorders of the Nerves, Stomach, Liver and Kidneys. Thousands of Testimonials. Pamphlet & Advice free on application to Mr. C. B. Harness, Consulting Electrician, the Medical Battery Co. Ltd.

Only Address,

52, OXFORD ST. LONDON, W. (Corner of Rathbone Place.)

Call to-day, if possible, or write at once

EXTRAORDINARY OFFER.

☞ 10,000 CARPETS. ☜

5/- Five Shillings each. 5/-

GUARANTEED GENUINE BARGAINS.

THE BRITISH CARPET-WEAVING COMPANY will forward direct from their Looms to any address, on receipt of Postal Order for 5s., or 62 stamps, one of their GENUINE SEAMLESS WOVEN REVERSIBLE TRIUMPH CARPETS, with handsome border, and woven in six different Art Patterns to harmonise with surroundings in Drawing-room, Dining-room, Bed-room, Kitchen, Study, etc., and large enough to cover any ordinary-sized room. These Carpets will be sold as an advertisement for the Goods of the British Carpet Weaving Company BELOW THE ACTUAL COST OF PRODUCTION, the price they have hitherto been sold at being 8s. each. A Rug will be sent with Carpets for 1s. 6d. extra.

SPECIAL OFFER.—Two Carpets and two Rugs for 10s. 6d. This extraordinary offer may not be repeated.

REMEMBER these Carpets and Rugs are woven, and are not merely printed on Canvas like the so-called Carpets some firms advertise. We guarantee these Carpets to give every satisfaction, or money will be returned in full.

Send at once. All orders are despatched same day as received.

Don't forget to send for Sample, or you may never have another chance of getting a Carpet at such a ridiculously low price. Cheques and Postal Orders should be crossed "Union Bank."

The British Carpet-Weaving Co., 31, Old St., Aldersgate, London, E.C.

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."

(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India.)

"And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the Forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS of the EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. XII., No. 599. Entered at Stationers' Hall.] WEDNESDAY, JUNE 20, 1888. [PRICE ONE PENNY.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
The Defence of the Empire and the Coaling Stations	245
Enormous Emigration from Liverpool	246
An Attack on the Strongholds of Our Opponents. A Lecture by V. M. Cox. Part III.	247
An Old Objection Revived	248
A Canaanitish Stratagem. By J. G. Taylor	249
Idol-Worship in the Churches. An Identification. By E. W. Rudder, Australia	250
When Did the Seed of David Ascend the British Throne?	250
Correspondence	251
Obituary—Mr. John Greig, of Sunderland	251

THE DEFENCE OF THE EMPIRE AND THE COALING STATIONS.

WE were very much impressed by the anxiety shown by a stranger, just before our late Annual Meeting at Exeter Hall, in respect to the probable fate of our country in the expected event of a great European war. "Do you think, sir, we shall escape? or that these preparations for defence mean that we are going to be attacked?" Such was the question asked by one who was in great anxiety, and desired to be comforted by what the Identity might be able to impart. We assured the inquirer that there was no cause for fear. "We rest secure under the promise and oath of God Almighty Himself. When His defence is beaten down, then, we argued, we might as a nation expect invasion and disaster, but not till then!" Such was our reply, and we see no reason now to question its correctness. But the public require something more tangible, definite, and of the world than this. Questions of dependence on God's promises they naturally put aside. They do not know what God's will is, and cannot after the manner of the world trust it for a moment of time or for an inch beyond their natural vision. What is to satisfy them must be patent to their senses and their reason, and they want to know, therefore, how God is going to effect the object in view and provide for the perfect safety of these islands, its commerce, and the world-wide Colonies of Britain? They want this question answered quite independently of the prophecies, and taking the world and its affairs as they appear to plain people like themselves to-day.

We propose to reply to our inquirers in the way they desire, taking for our authority Admiral Columb, as he explained the matter in his recent lecture at the Royal United Service Institution on the subject of "The Higher Policy of Defence." In the past the Navy of England brought the Empire safety, and ensured to her, conquest besides. To-day, and during the time to come, we must depend upon the same instrument to help us. This cuts off dependence on the local forces available in these islands to oppose a landing of our enemies, and it also puts on one side the so-called fortifications of our coasts which, while our Navy exists, can only be useful to help the latter at certain home Gates, or ports, of primary importance. But the Navy, to be an efficient defence, must be stronger and more numerous than any that the enemy, or combination of enemies, can bring against us to contest with us the command of the English Channel and the ocean highways of our trade afloat. We must have ships, many and strong enough to blockade the enemy's ships in his ports and close his Gates upon them. But there are hostile swift cruisers which are sure to escape, and, roving about the seas, will be able to inflict deadly injury to our home-Gates, such as London, Liverpool, Portsmouth, Plymouth, Glasgow, etc., besides capturing our merchantmen at sea, and so inflicting frightful losses on our commerce. To meet the former danger, such valuable ports as London and the rest must be fortified, and vessels for the defence of those ports detained there for that one object. To defeat and capture the enemy's cruisers as soon as possible, we must be ready with our own cruisers, powerful and swift ships capable of hunting down the swiftest the enemy have. "For one privateer fitted out from an enemy's port, Great Britain must, and easily can, fit out six." For we hold nearly all the "points of vantage" of the world, and we are able, from our wealth and peculiar advantages, "to build iron ships at a rate which the foreigner cannot approach."

In 1882 the French had only 90 merchant steamers of 1,500 tons and upwards, against 1,039 owned by our own nation. The disproportion against the French is not much altered now. Official returns give us the list of unarmoured and armoured ships belonging to the British and French nations now, thus: The British have 42 unarmoured cruisers, of speeds varying from 20 to 16 knots, against 30 of the same kind owned by the French. We have, besides, 48 armoured ships of the first and second class, of an aggregate tonnage of 377,580 tons, the French 28 armoured vessels of an aggregate tonnage of 231,515 tons. It seems, on the whole, we are not as strong in the number of ships as we ought to be. "We have officers, seamen, and reserves; we have unrivalled resources for shipbuilding; we occupy a truly enviable position in the matter of finance; we have coaling-stations in every quarter of the globe, conveniently placed along the great lines of trade. But we fall short of ships." Admiral Columb's great object was to show that where we fall short we ought to push on, and that we must increase our power at sea, to make us "the head and not the tail, above only and not beneath" all the navies of the world.

Digitized by Google

We must secure at all hazards "the command of the sea," wherever it is important we should have it—that is, we must be so strong in ships that "no hostile fleet in certain waters can count on the time requisite for serious enterprise without a strong probability of having a superior British force to deal with." In short, we must make the sea everywhere our own, at home in our own waters by leaving our home Gates open, day and night continually, under the protection of our powerful squadrons outside them; and abroad by seeing that "the Gates of our enemies" (now our own possession) are properly closed, shut, and secured by proper fortifications, so that the squadrons of British war-ships, with our merchant navies, too, may run there for repair, shelter, and coal, the road to the next such station being patrolled by our cruisers and armoured ships, and so kept safe and free from molestation by the enemies' interference. That enemy, in these days of steamers, must have coal to enable the war-ships to keep the sea at all. But as the British have all these on the trade routes, it stands to reason that the only Power which can command the sea by holding the ground is the owner of the Gates, which are the world's coaling-stations, now British, by the gift of God. It comes, then, to this:—Our Empire's defence, humanly speaking, depends upon our command of the sea—that on the number and power of our war-ships, and the efficiency of the latter, entirely on the possession of the coaling-stations.

Admiral Sir G. Phipps Hornby, in his important address before the London Chamber of Commerce on May 28th, declared, as the result of his calculations, that we required 186 fast cruisers to watch and patrol the seas and protect our merchant vessels at points where the enemies' cruisers would lie in wait for them, but at present we have only 42 of the kind we want and must have, to do the work! We are, in fact, dwelling confidently and carelessly in the Isles, as Israel is described to be doing in Ezek. xxxix. 6; and we may be sure that under God's protecting care we shall be safe and secure. Whether He will permit us to add the vast number of ships said to be needed to make our position secure remains to be seen. We incline to the belief that our fears and panic will lead to a large, and, possibly, extravagant expense; but that at last it will be seen that our enemies will be disarmed by the forces of other nations God will bring against them, and that as the result we shall be safeguarded from all harm. To Him will be all the praise. Our blindness alone prevents us seeing that even now He is guiding, guarding, and protecting us, as He has done all along, for the last one thousand years! (Compare 2 Kings vi. 13—17).

ENORMOUS EMIGRATION FROM LIVERPOOL.

"It is estimated that over 14,000 emigrants sailed from the Mersey during last week for the United States and Canada, the number of conveying steamers being twelve. Although these figures showed enormous developments, it is nevertheless anticipated that future weeks will show as great if not greater numbers. The companies having steamers sailing were the Cunard (two), White Star (two), National (one), Guion (one), and Inman and International (one) to the United States, and Allan line (three) and Dominion line (two) to Canada. The pressure on all the lines is very great, and to meet the demand extra boats have had to be put on. The White Star line sailed an extra boat last week, and the Cunard Steamship Company have arranged to send an additional boat every week during the pressure, which has every appearance of lasting. The streets of Liverpool during the week have been very lively as batch after batch of emigrants passed along. Out of the 14,000 emigrants about 6,500 went to Canada."

The above appeared in the Manchester Guardian of April 23, and gives interesting details of a week of extraordinary activity in the movement now developing for the emigration of our surplus population to the American Continent. Out of 14,000 emigrants it is good to know that a little less than half elected to seek their future homes in Canada. The majority as usual, proceeded to the United States. But a good "Identity" reason exists for that preference, as Mr. J. G. Taylor, of Newcastle, believes, and he will, we hope, explain the grounds on which he reasonably holds that view, in these columns. It is a comfort to know that in this and in all that relates to the emigration of our British-Israelite race to the ends of the earth, our God has the nation in His own hands, and is regulating it according to His good pleasure. His glory is connected with it, as Isa. xxvi. 15, R.V. describes; and it is obvious from Zech. x. 9, that God Himself has undertaken to "sow" this race "among the peoples," so that "they shall remember Him in far countries," and there "live with their children and return." Their restoration to the land of the inheritance will be from "the ends and coasts of the earth" (Jer. xxxi. 8; Deut. xxxiii. 17; Isa. xxvi. 15, xli. 8, 9) showing thus that they had first emigrated "to all the ends, and coasts of the earth," under the impulse given them by the God of Israel, according to the prophecies. It is strange and interesting to watch the fulfilment of prophecy in the streets of Liverpool, and to know that the enormous emigration which has just begun at that western gate is the commencement of a movement which will probably be long continued in order that the imperial race may go out to occupy its inheritance at the ends, the coasts, and the uttermost parts of the earth in accordance with the will of God. No fact more astonishes and irritates our foreign neighbours, the French, the Russians, and shall we say the Germans, than the occupation of alien territory in the four quarters of the globe by the inhabitants of these two petty "Isles of the West," who, separated from their conquests by thousands of miles of ocean, yet carelessly and confidently hold distant India, the Cape Colonies, Australia, New Zealand, and Tasmania, besides the enormous Dominion of Canada, which is larger than all Europe put together! They dream therefore of some day destroying these Western Islanders and robbing them of their empire in both hemispheres. They bolster up their courage by writing boastful books regarding "The Downfall of England," published by a Frenchman, and "The Russia's Hope," the work it is said of a Russian Admiral. In these two volumes the hatred of the Russians and of the French also, is clearly manifested towards the British-Israelite nation. They show that we can hope for nothing but jealousy and ill-will from those two Powers in the time of trial yet to come on all the world. Therefore the Divine command to our race "to shut the doors" of our dominions, and to hide ourselves "for a little moment," is seriously called for now, since it gives us the security we shall need in the midst of raging foes, suffering the vengeance of Divine wrath, what time the Lord's indignation is let loose upon the nations who know Him not. "The year of recompense in the controversy of Zion" (Isa. xxxiv. 8, R.V.), is preceded by the strengthening of Israel at the ends of the earth, in order to make her stronger than her enemies. To effect that, the surplus population of this teeming people must needs be carried from the swarming hives at home to those parts of the earth where the race has settled in flourishing colonial nations, requiring only a greater population to make them each formidable to their empire's foes. The sight that Liverpool saw last April was only an exhibition of the Lord's hand, working for His people's benefit, and carrying out by ordinary methods the promises to our forefathers respecting their after-seed in these latter days. Hard times and competition are the agencies the Lord is using to force His people to go out to the ends of the earth to found new Anglo-Saxon States, but these are potent engines which are doing the work of "effectually scattering the power of the holy people," and so fulfilling the prophecies of the living God. To Him be all the praise for His undeserved mercies to the children of Israel, His people! To Him be all the praise and glory for the comfort He gives us in our present circumstances, when with trade dull, and times bad at home, we seem to be losing the best of our bone and sinew in our emigrating population, foreign nations the while, resenting our prosperity in regard to the Outland Empire which is rising up in majesty in every portion of the globe, to demonstrate to each and all of them that "the heir of the world" is before them, and that the "rulers of the nations" will ere long assert their prophetic destiny and rights.

Digitized by Google

AN ATTACK ON THE STRONGHOLDS OF OUR OPPONENTS.

A Lecture by V. M. Cox.

PART III.

But there is yet another class of objectors by no means so large, whose minds have been opened to see the inconsistency of treating God's Word thus. They, however, fall into an error of another kind. A literal interpretation is absolutely insisted on and then totally misapplied. Their method is a species of "robbing Peter to pay Paul;" in other words, Ephraim is defrauded that Judah may be enriched. But to ignore Ephraim is to remove the keystone of the prophetic arch, since he is the heir of that magnificent birthright which according to the clear statements of the Hebrew chroniclers never was Judah's and certainly never will be. "I always supposed," said one who was interrogated as to this very matter of birthright inheritance, "that Ephraim was the black sheep of the family." And this seems to have become a pretty generally received idea. In truth, Ephraim did sin deeply, and grievously did he suffer for it; but we cannot forget that which seems to escape the notice of many; that at the very time when he was rebellious, idolatrous, and impenitent, the heart of Jehovah yearned over him, and the gracious words went forth, "Is Ephraim My dear son? Is he a pleasant child? for since I spake against him I do earnestly remember him still. I will surely have mercy upon him, saith the Lord." And again, "I will not return to destroy Ephraim, for I am God and not man, the Holy One in the midst of thee." And even after Judah has returned from her seventy years of Babylonish captivity, and has again become rooted in the land of the inheritance, Ephraim, still in banishment, is not forgotten; and God promises him that he shall be as a mighty man, that the heart of his sons shall rejoice, that He will sow them in the earth, and that they, remembering God in far countries, shall live with their children and turn again. How then is it possible to understand the Bible aright and yet to take no cognisance of the subject of so much remarkable prophecy?

In the millennial age, these opponents tell us, Israel will be the greatest nation. Yes, we admit that, but also insist that she is the greatest nation now. But when we say Israel, we mean Israel, not Judah, and that is the rock upon which this class of opponents make shipwreck; "Israel" they tell us is to convert the world during the millennial age. Doubtless, with Judah, this glorious work will then be hers even in greater measure than heretofore, but we will never believe it is a Gentile nation that has everywhere commenced the work of evangelisation in heathen lands. The heaviest of the labour, the difficult task of opening up new countries, of acquiring 270 languages and dialects, of translating into them the Holy Scriptures, of founding schools and colleges, of training native pastors and teachers, has been already accomplished by British instrumentality. So that if opponents are right, and Jews are to be the missionaries of the future, they can only enter into and share the work which the British have inaugurated, and we, for our part, refuse to admit that this is what God meant when He declared the mission of Israel to proclaim His glory to the nations that knew it not, to be "among the Gentiles as a dew from the Lord, and as showers upon the grass," "to blossom and bud, and fill the face of the world with fruit;" in short, to be His witnesses, and show forth His praise. And then, against this millennial theory, there is the one great fact, which cannot be set aside, that Ephraim, and Ephraim only, received the promise of development into a multitude of nations; an event which cannot take place in a time when, as Ezekiel has told us, the two peoples will have again become one, and can no longer have diverse fortunes and histories. This one central fact answers a host of minor objections; for God's Word being true, this nation and company of nations must be somewhere, and since we cannot find them with Jewish features we must either conclude that God's promise has failed, or we must suppose that whatever their type of physiognomy, they exist, and must be recognised by the marks of fulfilled prophecy, and not otherwise. Since we cannot find a nation and a company of nations speaking a Semetic language, yet doing Israel's work and enjoying her blessings, we are bound to believe that the only nation that owns the blessings and does the work is Israel none the less for speaking an Aryan tongue, or else that the Lord has been false to His covenant, which God forbid; there is simply no alternative. If our opponents would cease to quibble over side-issues and deal once for all with this great central fact of Ephraim's predicted "multitude of nations" and its historic counterpart, their opposition could not long survive.

A minister of the gospel was lately discanting on the blindness of the Jews, as to the meaning of their own prophecies, and he remarked, "The truth is, they had certain set ideas, the growth of ages, about the meaning of these scriptures, and they expounded every portion so as to make it square with these ideas. Their eyes were fixed so steadfastly on one set of predictions, (those relating to the triumph and glory of Messiah) that they entirely overlooked the other section, which referred to His suffering and humiliation. So that when the predictions were actually fulfilled before their very eyes, they were unable to trace any connection between the event and the prophecy which it verified." What our opponents are doing is wonderfully similar to this. They, too, gaze so steadfastly on one set of predictions, that another and equally important portion of Holy Writ is unnoticed or misapprehended; and now, when the "multitude of nations," Britain and her glorious colonies, stand forth before their eyes the grandest fact of the century they see no connection between the fact and the forecast, but stigmatise us as credulous and crazy, because we cannot help recognizing the original by comparing it with the portrait.

It is now seven years ago that a friend, to whom I shall ever be grateful, brought our Identity under my notice, and provided me with a stock of excellent pamphlets and a good supply of Nos. of the Banner. Curiosity induced me to dip into these; but curiosity quickly gave place to burning interest, and I can truly say, this interest has never flagged during the whole subsequent period, nor do I think it ever will. How can it? The subject is always developing. Every week throws new light on it, and we are probably on the threshold of events that will afford a still greater illumination. Only consider how much has happened since 1880 to confirm our faith! The occupation of Egypt, in regard to which more anon; the annexation of Burmah, the extension of our African Empire, and indeed, of our territorial possessions in every direction, the acquisition of several new Gates, the meeting of our colonial children on British soil at the splendid exhibition of 1886, the Imperial Conference, destined to have far-reaching results; together with a host of minor events, all these have made us year by year more sure that we have not been following an ignis fatuus, but that our grand belief is one which has truth, common sense, and God's Word on its side. But if the retrospect of less than a decade afford confirmations so striking, what if we review a century? A little more than a hundred years ago, where were our Sunday-schools? Non-existent. Now there are sixteen millions of Sunday-scholars, and five millions of teachers, mainly in England and her colonies, and in the United States; while for the most part what Sabbath-schools there are on the continent of Europe were established by British agency, and are supported by British contributions. Where (a century ago) was the Church Missionary Society? Where the Religious Tract Society, the Bible Society, and the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge? Nowhere. We have not yet celebrated their centenaries. Where was Greater Britain? Many among us have seen the Howard Vincent map, and recognize therein a wonderful testimony to the extent of the British dominions. Could we possess a map of Britain's Empire in 1788 and hang the two side by side, how startling would be the contrast! Then our few little foreign settlements were in their infancy, while the American colonies had just asserted their independence and set up a separate nationality in order to the accomplishment of the promise to Ephraim's elder brother, "He also shall be a people, and he also shall be great," while England, bereft of her firstborn, and knowing not of the children she should have after she had lost the other, appeared in a hapless plight, but now in 1888, how appropriate are the words of a living English poet:—

Digitized by Google

"Ours is no country bounded by the waves
That lap her rocks and haunt her ocean caves,
She reaches far and wide beyond the sea;
And all her children, scattered tho' they be,
Clasp hands unseen around the earth, and feel
A common gladness in the common weal,
And where her ensign flashes in the sun,
All British hearts are wont to beat as one;
Just as the triple crosses there combined
All float with equal motion on the wind,
And neither white, nor blue, nor dazzling red,
Can droop unnoticed, while the rest are spread,
Nor can a single one away be borne
By any gale that leaves the rest untorn!

(To be continued.)

AN OLD OBJECTION REVIVED.

THE young lady—the Vicar's daughter,—whose objections we lately noticed, has had something more to say to us in respect to God's covenant with Abraham and his seed; which she thinks decidedly goes against our claims to be the remnant of Israel. Her words were these:—

"God made a covenant with His servants, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob—that is, a bargain depending upon mutual fulfilments of the promises made—of this, circumcision was the outward sign and token. The Children of Israel soon forfeited all right to their promised blessings by their repeated wilful disobedience; therefore they are no longer (sic) the favoured ones of God; nevertheless, God will not break His covenant, nor suffer His truth to fail (Psa. lxxxix. 34, R.V.). He had sworn that the seed of David should reign for ever, and the monarch of David's line was born in Bethlehem, the city of David, and is the Prince of the Kings of the earth (Rev. i. 3). The Israelites refusing to hear the teaching of the Messiah, the Apostles were sent to the Gentiles, who were all included in the new covenant, of which baptism is the outward sign and pledge. The whole of the Mosaic dispensation was a type of the Christian covenant, which would include all the Redeemed." So far the Vicar's daughter. Surely there never were so many mistakes made before crowded into so few lines!

In reference to the covenants made by God with Abraham, it is perfectly true that the most solemn one of all, that ratified by the oath of God, in Gen. xxii. was in the nature of a "bargain." Abraham obeyed God, and God repaid him for his obedience by a cluster of promises, ratified by His oath, sworn upon the being of God Himself, which were hampered by no conditions whatsoever. Circumcision was not an ingredient of that compact; for it was instituted before the event on Mount Moriah (connected with Isaac), and was not so much as once referred to in Gen. xxii. from the beginning to the end of the chapter! Circumcision, in Gen. xvii., was enforced by God on Abraham's after seed, and the penalty for its breach, as prescribed in the institution, was duly carried out against the House of Israel, which broke God's commandment in this respect. That House was "cut off from His people" (v. 14), was accounted Lo-Ammi, or not God's people, and was, in fact, reduced to the condition of a Gentile non-Israelite race (Hos. i. 9, 10,); but did the fact cancel God's previous unconditional promises? Not one whit, as the lady objector herself seems also to know, by quoting Psa. lxxxix. 34! The promises in Gen. xii. 1, 2, 3, xiii. 14—17, xv. 5, 6, xvii. 1—8, xviii. 18, xxii. 17, 18, &c., &c., all these were unconditional promises on God's part, and all of them He must fulfil to Israel, as He is true. Why, then, the Vicar's daughter depreciates the Maker's faithfulness by telling us that God's people, Israel and Judah, are no longer His favoured ones,—we cannot imagine! She seems to think God's sworn promises were made to David only! they were given to Abraham and his seed, Israel, also, for ever, as Gen. xxii. 17, 18; Luke i. 55; and Psa. cv. prove! As to David's promises, they included not only his throne, but also his people and kingdom, which were Israel, as 2 Sam. vii. 12—26, Jer. xxxiii. 26, most clearly show. The promise of the kingdom over the Israelites was not Christ's only, but was given to the descendants (plural in number) of David described in the last text as rulers over the seed of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob.

The Apostles were sent to the Gentiles, but those Gentiles were Gentilized Ephraim-Israel, since to them only, God promised the kingdom of God, taken from the Jews (Matt. xxi. 43), His statutes and His judgments (Psa. cxlvii. 19, 20), and the evangelising functions to all nations, families, and kindreds of the world as well (Isa. xxvii. 6; Gen. xxii. 18). No Gentiles have listened to the Gospel as nations, save the British;—and as these fulfil all the prophecies of Scripture concerning the House of Israel, we believe that they were, and are, the nation indicated, when, as God's word says in Acts xxviii. 28, they will have the salvation of God sent to them.

The last objection of our lady doubter, which we shall mention, is that "the Gentiles are all included in the new covenant, of which baptism is the outward sign and pledge."

This is news to us. We read in God's Word, that the new covenant is to be and was made in Christ with the House of Judah, and with the House of Israel, the blessings accompanying being their's. Jer. xxxi. 31—34; Heb. viii. 8—12 bear us out in this view. But God's grace, given to the House of Israel, is intended for the whole world—whom He loved so well, that He sent His only begotten Son to die for them (John iii. 16). We do not read in the Scriptures that the new covenant as such was ever made with any but the Hebrew "afterseed" of Abraham, and that for ever. We therefore object to our lady's view that "all the Gentiles were included in it." We should desire to see a text to that effect before we accepted this new teaching. Rom. xv. 8 appears to our mind to contradict it. The new covenant was a promise made to the Hebrew fathers in Jer. xxxi. To confirm that promise and others, so made, Jesus Christ was a Minister of the circumcision for the truth of God. We never heard of any promise to the fathers of Israel, declaring that all the Gentiles were interested in that new covenant in any way except through and by Israel, who are appointed to communicate its benefits to them.

ERRATA.—Page 209, column 2, line 13, read "Inis Scatery." In third line from end of article read "through."

Digitized by Google

A CANAANITISH STRATAGEM.

By J. G. Taylor.

When we think of the magnificent territories attached to the British crown, and the endless outlets they offer to surplus labour, skilled and unskilled, it becomes clear that the recent observations of the Editor on the exodus of English and Scotch to the United States (Banner, Mar. 28), trench upon a very pregnant inquiry. The main object in leaving the old home at all is to secure a living, and one might conclude that the comparatively untapped regions of Canada and Australia would have brighter attractions, and would furnish a richer field for the exercise of energy and enterprise, than the beaten thoroughfares of America. The prevalent complaint here is that in this island there are too many men to the square mile, yet, strange to record, vast throngs desert our shores and locate themselves in cities as densely crowded as those they left. And there is the further consideration that when the Englishman withdraws to the colonies he simply takes a sea trip. He still continues to be an atom of the empire, sharing in its life and sheltered by its wing. The fact remains, however, that he prefers to break the link, for the tide of emigration sets steadily towards the States. But, putting aside this purely human aspect of the case, and viewing it in the light of the Identity, we are struck with another anomaly, and that is the apparent discord between actual events and the demands of prophecy. From the tenour of the predictions affecting Israel we are led to suppose that her superabundant millions would be drafted into the "branches," and so promote the development of the "company of nations." But the large majority deliberately neglect the Colonies in favour of Manasseh, who is now nearly twice the size of Ephraim in so far as numbers go. Manasseh is already a "great people," consequently she has no need of the shiploads of Britons who disembark daily on her soil and who would be truly useful elsewhere. Instead of the stream being utilized it seems to be misdirected, and instead of a gain we are conscious of a distinct loss. The progress of colonization is doubtless subject to divine control, and it may therefore be asked, Is there a reason for despoiling the immature shoots in this fashion? Or rather, we should say, there must be a reason, but can we assign it? As this particular phase of the difficulty is created by the Identity, the Identity ought to provide the explanation. We believe also that it does, but what is more, in doing this it dispels the kindred perplexities excited by the erratic course of emigration, and divulges the secret of the whole matter.

The promise to the children of Joseph was that they should grow into two nations; separate, and of separate character, but both essentially Israelitish; and in our system of interpretation these two nations are represented by the United States and Great Britain. It is not disputed by any that the United States and Great Britain are at present racially alike, being Anglo-Saxon in their structure, but there was a time when this ethnic condition stood in imminent danger, and the danger would return if the current of colonization were diverted from the channel in which it is providentially flowing. It is well known that next to the English the chief emigrating element is the disloyal section of Irish, Canaanites by their own confession, although they cover their parent with the more respectable title of Phœnician. For the first three months of this year the figures were: English 28,400, Irish 7,100, while in the same quarter of 1887 they amounted to, English, 28,100, Irish, 10,500. Be it noted that in the short space of three months over 10,000 Irish went abroad, and as usual they flocked to the States. But large as those numbers are, they bear no comparison with the enormous shoals that left the country at the Famine period; for during the five years of 1847 to 1851 the population of Ireland sank at the average rate of 355,000 per annum. These departing hosts, on arrival (for the most part) in America, could not be and were not as water spilt upon the ground. They entered into the fibre of the race, and subsequent admixtures threatened to change it. Not so long ago, observant Americans expressed the opinion that the United States were likely to be transformed into a Celtic community. Irish blood suffused the national constitution, and the Irish qualities were forging to the front, not merely in politics, but in sentiment and temperament. This was a sure sign of ethnological transition. "The Irish republic across the Atlantic" was not entirely a myth. Even to-day "the Irish nation in America" is a cherished toast in patriotic circles, but the Irish nation in America is not fated to survive, for the latest utterances on the matter tell us that the States are every year becoming more Saxon in character and complexion. This, however, is owing to the heavy gravitation of English to the weak spot, and there cannot be the slightest doubt that had it not taken place, Manasseh would have fallen a prey to our so-called Celtic but really Canaanitish enemy. The ten thousands of England and the thousands of Scotland have counteracted the evil, and in the near future they will extirpate it altogether. Beyond question the Irish nation in America emits a terrible noise, but the mightiest works of nature are silent in their operation, and so it happens that while the Irishman is shouting at the top of his voice, gesticulating withal, the Saxon is quietly undermining his footing. The Hibernian may be of a clever family. He may with O'Connell be able to drive a coach and several horses through any law on the Statute-book. But he is quite unable to perforate the decrees of God in such an off-hand way.

But this does not exhaust the inquiry we have alluded to and instituted. Latterly the Teuton has stepped into the arena, and landed a few German armies at various points of the American continent. Some judge that these Germans are remnants of Israelitish tribes, seized with a sudden and forewarning impulse to evacuate the European crater. But personally we are prepared to mistrust this. We incline to imagine that they are Gentiles proper, and that in their joining Manasseh we have a picture of Israel inheriting the Gentiles by means of absorption. If this is so, what with Germans, Irish, and Scandinavians, the Gentile invasion assumes serious dimensions, and it is doubly necessary that the Israelite supplies be sustained, in order that the original stock may be reinforced and reinvigorated. Nor is the integrity of the race the only thing to be considered, or the only thing in jeopardy. Designing politicians may mouth the Irish cause, and earn the Irish vote as the reward of their servility. But Americans at the heart despise such tactics, and have no sympathy with Fenian principles. On the contrary they apprehend them, and the fears vented in the San Francisco Argonaut indubitably represent the feelings of the reflective classes. This journal, in a comprehensive article, remarks:—"There is not an intelligent American of native birth, not in politics, and not of the Roman faith, who does not disapprove of the whole business. With religious beliefs we have no concern, but when they are used to cement the members of one church and one nationality for the purpose of interfering with our institutions we feel an indignation that has the right to relieve itself in open expression. When we see Ireland endeavouring to subvert English laws and overthrow English institutions; when we hear the utterances of politicians that lead to practical confiscation of property, and when we see this Irish party in England and America advocating dynamite, murder and misrule, and working together on both sides of the ocean under the inspiration of a common hate to everything English and Protestant, we have the right to dread the happening of similar events in this country. This is the more menacing when we consider the number of voting Irish already among us, the number that are coming, and reflect that they are under the dominance of the same priests and the same sentiments of bigotry and political hatred that inspire their conduct in their native land. This fear becomes the more real when we know that the Home Rule Irish is a strong well-organised party in all our northern States, sending hundreds of thousands of pounds to promote an agitation which, if successful in Great Britain, will direct all its energies to America. This organised opposition to law which manifests itself in Ireland, and which, if successful there, will be transplanted to America, is equally dangerous whether it finds its origin in religious or race prejudices, whether it be spiritual or political, whether it be Roman or Celtic." From this we see that society and religion, as well as the race, are beset with dangers. And this is what we might expect, because "Israel" is not an empty name, but the chosen depository of public benefits which God explicitly declines to confer upon the world through any second medium. Race, religion, and social prosperity, must flourish or decay in union. But, apart from that, the ascendency of the Canaanite in America would deal an appalling blow at the truth of Scripture, and entail the establishment of a power bitterly hostile to the British dynasty, and fanatically opposed to the Protestant faith. The crippling of his influence, political or otherwise, by the continued infusion of Israelites is signal evidence of the wisdom and watchfulness of God, and we conceive that not until all risk has passed away will the Colonies be suffered to obtain their just proportion of redundant Britons. For the peril of Manasseh is the peril of Ephraim, and the peril of prophetic veracity.

Digitized by Google

IDOL-WORSHIP IN THE CHURCHES.—AN IDENTIFICATION.

By E. W. Rudder, Australia.

Read the 36th chap. of Ezekiel, from ver. 16—38. From ver. 16—22, has been fulfilled, but from ver. 22—38 has yet to be so, before the eyes of all men; but, being decreed by the eternal God, who knoweth the end from the beginning, and "with whom one day is as a thousand years, and a thousand years as but one day," it is as certain of accomplishment as if it had already been done. Some may, probably, object, that this relates to the Israelites of old, who defiled the land with their idols, and who were restored to the land of their forefathers, under Ezra and Nehemiah; the context, however, clearly shows the contrary, the land being still desolate, the cities of old being still ruined heaps of stone, without inhabitants, and the land untilled (see ver. 33—38), and the waste cities yet to be filled with flocks of men. The next chapter, from ver. 12 to the end, clears up all doubt as to the time of the restoration, as an event yet unaccomplished. The collection of Israel from amongst the nations, whither they were driven, has been partly accomplished in the Anglo-Saxon races now inhabiting the British Islands, the United States, and the English Colonies. In ver. 23 the defilement of idols is, then, to be a thing of the past, which is not, at this time, an accomplished fact; idol-worship being still practised amongst millions of avowed Christians of Roman Catholic and Protestant denominations. It is especially to be noted that the words used by the prophet clearly indicate that the people to be restored, and to be united as one nation, are spoken of as defiling themselves with idols and detestable things. Bowing* before the images or pictures of Jesus Christ, the Virgin Mary, saints, crosses, and the elements of bread and wine is, undoubtedly, idol-worship. Jesus Christ being in heaven, and God, to make any image of Him, and to bow before it, is a contravention of God's commandment, and therefore, idolatry. The wearing of robes, of the same make as those worn by heathen priests, or mitres, or chains, must be detestable in the sight of God, as having been originated by idolaters in the ages before Christianity; and agree with the detestable things alluded to by Ezek. xxxvii. 23. Take, for example, the mitre worn by bishops, which has been traced back to the idol Dagon. The words of God's law are as follow: "Thou shalt not make unto thee a graven image, nor any form that is in heaven above, nor that is in the earth beneath, or that is in the water under the earth; thou shalt not bow down thyself unto them, nor serve them."† These words are so clear and emphatic, that there can be no misconstruction put on them. "The wayfaring man, though a fool, cannot err therein." The art of bowing before the images, sculptured or painted, of our Saviour, His Mother, the Host, or bread and wine at the Sacrament, and crosses, &c., come under both prohibitions—the one being representative of that which is in heaven, and the other, that which is on the earth beneath. These practices being carried on at the present moment, and on the increase, in the Church of England; and Israel being still unrestored to the land of their forefathers, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob (an event not far distant), and idolatry still practised by the Anglo-Saxon races—if these people represent the Lost Ten Tribes, then they, doing so—of which there can be no reasonable doubt—are clearly idolaters, as defined in the second commandment, and come within the range of Ezek. xxvi. 25, and xxxvii. 23.

Tens of thousands, nay, millions, in great Britain and her dependencies, are at this moment idol-worshippers, or idolaters, in the true sense of the word, including Anglo-Israelites. God says: "I will make them (Israel and Judah) one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel, and one king shall be king to them all; and they shall be no more two nations, neither shall they be divided into two kingdoms any more at all: neither shall they defile themselves any more with their idols, nor with their detestable things, nor with any of their transgressions; but I will save them out of all their dwelling-places, wherein they have sinned, and will cleanse them: so shall they be My people, and I will be their God" (Ezek. xxxvii. 22—24). God also declares "He will put His Spirit within them, and cause them to walk in His statutes, and they shall keep His judgments, and do them" (ver. 27). It may be argued, in opposition to these views, that the present British people are not idolaters, and that, therefore, they cannot be the people referred to by the prophet. To this the reply is they do not, like the heathen in Ezekiel's time, worship the same idols; still, the bowing to any image, or likeness of any heavenly person or being in heaven above, or any emblematic image of any creature on earth, as has been shown, is an act of idol-worship or idolatry, of which the English, Scotch, and Irish, are chargeable, and becoming more so every day, and is the condition in which they, if lost Israel, must remain, till put into possession of the Holy Land, and is an additional and very important evidence of their Israelite origin. The 27th and 28th chapters of Ezekiel are supported by other prophets, and will well repay careful reading and study. How truly encouraging are God's promises as quoted above. Praise the Lord!

* Bow means to bend the body in token of respect, or submission, or worship.

† Exod. xx. 4, 5, R.V.; Deut. v. 8; iv. 16—20.

WHEN DID THE SEED OF DAVID ASCEND THE BRITISH THRONE?

It is usual to trace the descent of Queen Victoria to David the King of Israel through the Stuart line by James I. of England and VI. of Scotland. A correspondent now comes forward with a claim for another and a long prior descent for our royal family, which takes us through Malcolm III. of Scotland and Henry II. of England. James' accession to the throne in succession to Elizabeth was in 1603; but the elder line, through Henry II., was 449 years prior in time, and lends a very different aspect to the question when Israel of the Isles first began to feel the weight of the sceptre of David. The fact minimises our obligations to the Stuarts, and shows, as the authoress of "The Coronation Stone" remarks, that "whereas we have thought that the stone preceded the advent of David's line to sit upon the throne of the House of Israel by 309 years, it now turns out that they were already in England upon the throne, waiting for their 'heir-loom' nearly 200 years before it arrived! The Anglo-Saxon claim is of course infinitely more important than the descent from the Stuarts"! The earlier descent links the chief or southern portion of the Island with the royal Hebrew race; the kings of the stock of David holding the sceptre in England over a century before the stone was secured "to confirm the sovereignty." The letter we have received on the subject was to the following purport:—

"Dear Sir,—The Banner for May 23rd has an able article on 'Our Irish Queen.' But I do not see the fact mentioned that the royal line of David was reigning in England long before the Stuart advent. Taking David's line from Princess Tea Tephi, it descends straight to King Malcolm III. of Scotland, who married the Princess Margaret of England, descendant of King Alfred. The daughter of King Malcolm and Queen Margaret was the Princess Matilda, who married King Henry I. of England. Their daughter was the Empress Maud, and her son was King Henry II., from whom is descended our present Queen.

Digitized by Google

"The Stewart family did not marry into the royal line until 1315, when Margery Bruce married Walter Stewart. So the prior line of David was not the Stewart one, because that line did not ascend the English throne until 1603, whereas the elder line was reigning quite 449 years earlier from 1154 in England. I think this Anglo-Saxon descent is really of more importance than the Stuart one, but singularly it seems very seldom mentioned. I believe Mrs. G. A. Rogers, in her valuable little work 'The Coronation Stone,' places James I. as the first of David's line on the English throne.

"I have long been a firm upholder of the Anglo-Israelite theory, and so are several of my friends. I thought you might like to know there are a few believers here.

"I remain, dear sir,

"Very sincerely yours,

"E. Rose.

"St. Martin's, Stamford."

Correspondence.

"SUNDAY," AND "THE SABBATH."

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

Dear Sir,—It is commonly objected that we cannot be Israel because we do not observe the Jewish Sabbath, but hallow the first instead of the seventh day of the week. I have on former occasions endeavoured to show that this objection is invalid because the commandment to keep holy the Sabbath-day makes no reference to weeks, neither does it give any fixed point of departure from which to reckon the six working days. It merely enjoins that the seventh day, after six days of labour, shall be kept holy, as a day of rest, and this commandment is obeyed as implicitly by the Christian as the Jew.

In the course of my reading to-day I came upon an argument in favour of the Christian Sabbath being observed on the first day of the week, which Justin Martyr uses in his dialogue with Trypho the Jew. He says that circumcision was given to Abraham as the seal of the covenant which God made with him, and which was typical of the new covenant which was to be made in Christ; and that as it was commanded to be performed on the eighth day after birth, a peculiar sanctity was thus given to the eighth day in the commonwealth of Israel as being that on which every individual Israelite had been brought into covenant with God. The old covenant having been typical of the new, which was confirmed in the resurrection of Jesus on the eighth day, counting from the beginning of the week which had preceded it, that day became sacred under the New Testament dispensation, as it had been under the old, not only with regard to individuals, but the whole body of Christian believers, as marking the ratification of the covenant of which circumcision had been the seal, but entrance into which was henceforward to be from a new departure, by the rite of baptism, a day to be always remembered, and kept holy, and therefore the most fit and proper to be consecrated as the Christian Sabbath.

I have stated Justin Martyr's argument in my own way; but a reference to Bickersteth's "Christian Fathers," pp. 212 and 213, where I found it, will show that I have stated it correctly.

Yours truly,

J. M. Grant, M.D., Surgeon-General.

Cheltenham, 27th April.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

Dear Philo-Israel,—When first I was fairly satisfied that the Anglo-Saxon race was Israel of the Ten Tribes, and noticed the promises of God to that race, I often thought that it would be such a good thing if a few Anglo-Israelites were in Parliament—how nicely they would be able to work in accordance with the teaching of the Word of God, and bring about the fulfilment of the various promises to this nation, and how earnestly they could contend for the faith of our fathers, and support the honour of our gracious God; and how directly they could work together to help to cause the fulfilment of prophecy. But, dear sir, I am now come to quite a different conclusion, and I hope I quite understand that God and His truth are quite independent of all of us in the sense that He needs our help to enable Him in any way to bring about His purposes of grace and mercy. And I begin to think that my former anxiety partook very much of the nature of unbelief, and savoured very much of the spirit of Uzza, when he put forth his hand to hold the ark. I am now quite satisfied that whether there are Anglo-Israelites in Parliament or not, God's purposes will be brought about, even if the House were filled with Bradlaughs! Their most determined opposition to our God would only show their impotence to arrest the eternal purposes, but their every effort should conduce to the glory of our God and His Christ, and the establishment of His kingdom, and the carrying out of His purposes. And blessed be His name that it is so; for if God's gracious will towards our fallen race depended at all upon our wisdom and effort it would undoubtedly miscarry. But praised be His wisdom that He has kept the reins of government entirely in His own gracious and able hands. But, dear sir, we as Anglo-Israelites may humbly and thankfully rejoice in the fact that God has in great and loving condescension and grace opened to us the councils of the Most High. May He now endow us all with a double portion of His Holy Spirit that we may be made humble and devoted servants in the kingdom of His dear Son, the Redeemer of Israel and Saviour of mankind. H. A.

Isle of Wight, April, 1888.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

Dear Sir,—As soon as the weather is settled I hope to begin my open-air lectures on the sea front, near Pool Valley, on Monday nights, about 8 p.m. Thanking you and your many readers for the kind help you gave me last year with Banners and other literature, I again ask you for help in this way to sow all we can during the year of "commemoration" so that our people may see the real reason of God's deliverances. The seed sown on Brighton Beach is carried all over the country by the crowd of visitors who hear the lectures and are glad to accept something to read. I am also willing to go to any village or town near Brighton some other nights of the week to speak to large or small meetings in the open-air, or rooms, as most convenient, if any friends should invite me and pay travelling expenses only. I also ask that our friends should pray God to bless these means to the opening of the eyes of many.

I am, yours truly,

H. A. Marchant.

60, Upper Lewes-road, Brighton, May 28, 1888.

Obituary.

We regret to announce the death, at Sunderland, of Mr. John Greig, on Tuesday, June 5th. He died rather suddenly, greatly to the regret of all the believers in Our Identity at the place. He had been in the habit of giving lectures on the subject, which were greatly valued. His knowledge of the Scriptures was very extensive, which rendered him a formidable controversialist in the treatment of the matter. Mr. Greig was a Christian man, jealous for the truth, and we have the satisfaction of knowing that he sleeps in Jesus. Our friend, Mr. J. T. Gott, who knew the deceased well for nearly 20 years, says that "he was a truly good man. He was well up in nearly every branch of our subject, and had a marvellous knowledge of Scripture. His quotations were always apt and to the point. He was ever ready to conduct a Bible-class, and spared neither time nor money in his endeavour to advance the cause of Our Identity."

Manchester and Salford British-Israel and Biblical Evidence Association.—The members of the above Association held their annual tea-meeting on Tuesday, May 1st, 1888, at St. James' School, Major-street, Manchester. Mr. E. Tudor in the chair. The secretary, F. S. Gandy, read the report, and resolutions were passed thanking the officers for their services during the past session. Short addresses were given by Messrs. W. Wallis, J. Scott, A. Duxbury, and Thos. Leigh. After which questions were asked and answered by Messrs. J. Dean, A. E. Longdon, F. Graham, T. Hopkins, Thos. Leigh, and others. The above meeting was both interesting and profitable. The council, members, and associates are determined, with the help of the Almighty, to work more ardently than ever during the next session—notices of which will (D.V.) appear in the Banner of Israel and Manchester papers in September next.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed: "Philo-Israel," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

SUBSCRIPTIONS. £ s. d.

Annual Subscription for one copy weekly (including the Twelve Double Numbers) post free 0 7 6
Two Copies (including Double Numbers) 0 13 6
Three Copies ,, ,, ,, ... 1 0 4
Four Copies ,, ,, ,, ... 1 5 6
Six Copies ,, ,, ,, ... 1 16 4

Post Office Orders to be made payable at the head office, St. Martin's-le-grand, London, to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C., or F. W. PARRY & Co., 29, Paternoster-row, London.

The Editor cannot undertake to return rejected MSS. unless stamps for the purpose be sent. Parties requiring an answer should enclose a stamp.

Contents Bills and Show Cards may be obtained on application to the Publishers.

Advertisements should be sent to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

Prepaid Advertisements are inserted at the rate of thirty words for 1s. 4d.

BLACKPOOL.— Anglo-Israelites will find COMFORTABLE APARTMENTS, Public or private, near Sea or Gardens, at Mrs. Breakells, 39, Adelaide Street.

SPECIAL OFFER.

VOLUMES

II., III., IV., V., VI., VII. and VIII.

OF

ISRAEL'S HOPE

AND

DESTINY.

Edited by DOUGLAS A. ONSLOW, Esq., J.P.

Bound in handsome cloth, gilt, are now offered, post free to any part of the World for 2s. 6d. per volume, or the Seven Volumes will be sent for 15s. Orders must be sent direct to the Publishers, ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C., as they cannot be supplied through a Bookseller at this price.

Each Volume contains a large number of interesting and important articles on the Anglo-Israel Question Great Pyramid, and other Prophetical and Biblical Subjects.

Just published—Cloth, 2s. 6d.—a re-issue of

The Origin of Masonic Ritual and Tradition:

A Lecture on the Three Degrees, by BRO. WM. ROWBOTTOM, P.M., 1028, with facsimile of a very rare Masonic engraving published in 1789.

"Exquisitely clear and singularly correct in everything wherein I may be any authority or guide."—Professor PIAZZI SMYTH. "Will be found of considerable interest to many besides Masons."—Church Bells.

Oxford: S. Rowbottom and Son; London: R. Banks and Son, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C.; and F. W. Parry and Co., 29, Paternoster Row, E.C.

Price Five Shillings.—"Substantially and attractively got up, and profusely illustrated."—Oldham Chronicle.

Eildon Grange: A Tale.

By ANDREW CLARK, M.A., Vicar of St. Michael's, Oxford. "One of the most charming books. . . . The illustrations are full of playful humour."—Scotsman. "The book is undoubtedly a happy one."—The Oxford Magazine. "Both entertaining and bracing."—Dundee Advertiser.

Oxford: S. Rowbottom and Son; London: Hamilton, Adams and Co., 32, Paternoster Row, E.C.

☞ Ask for this Book at the Libraries.

WORKS BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

The History of the House of Israel. How They Were Lost and How They Were Found. Told for the children. Price 6d., cloth 1s.; post free 7d. and 1s. 1d. Fifth edition.

A Resume of the Scriptural Argument Proving the Identity of the British Race with the Lost Ten Tribes. Price 1d.; 6s. per hundred, postage 6d.

Anglo-Israelism. True, Not False. Being Philo-Israel's Reply to the Rev. Canon Bell's pamphlet, "Anglo-Israelism: True or False?" Price 1d., 6s. 6d. per 100. 16 pages, crown 8vo.

An Elementary Digest or Sketch of the Chief Facts and Teachings of the Great Pyramid of Egypt. Adapted to the Unlearned and Unscientific 56 pages, illustrated with Diagrams, price 4d., post free 5d. 10th Thousand.

Our Identity with the House of Israel. Price 4d., Reprinted from "Clifton Chronicle Letters"

Our Identity: What it is Not; What it is; and Our Obligations To-day in Respect to it Being a Lecture recently delivered in London by Philo-Israel, and published by special request. Price 2d., a reduction for quantities.

London: Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street.

Are the English People the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel? An Inquiry Establishing the Identity of the British Nation with the Lost Ten Tribes. 4d. Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

NEW BOOK BY DR. WILD.

Just Published, Price 3s., Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Lettered. Sent by Post on receipt of Published Price.

TALKS

FOR

THE TIMES.

BY JOSEPH WILD, M.A., D.D.,

Pastor of the Bond-st. Congregational Church, Toronto.

CONTENTS.—Chapter 1. A Gift of One Hundred and Ninety-Two Million Acres of Land. 2. The Return of the Jews to Palestine. 3. Folks that won't be Somebody. 4. The Four Prophecies of Egypt. 5. The Stone Kingdom and Dynamite; and the Orange Bill. 6. "144!" 7. "666!" 8. The Transit of Venus. 9. The Miracles of Antichrist; and the High Rock Image of Massachusetts, U.S. 10. The Man who could not sleep, and what came of it. 11. The Rainbow 12. London Destroyed, and Jerusalem a Seaport. 13. Liberalism. 14. A Graft without a Stock. 15. Mouldy Bread and an Oath. 16. A Tombstone Inscription. 17. Dog Lappers. 18. How to get Rich.

Dr. JOSEPH WILD'S WORKS

The most useful works on the subject.

NEW EDITION JUST PUBLISHED.

THE LOST TEN TRIBES

Price 3s., post free 3s. 3d.

'We have much pleasure in directing attention to this handsome volume. . . We promise our readers that if they procure this work, and will peruse it, they will find 'Our Identity' discussed in a clear, novel, racy, and from an American point of view, which is sure to interest."—Banner of Israel.

THE FUTURE OF ISRAEL AND JUDAH.

Price 2s., post free 2s. 3d.

R. BANKS & SON, RACQUET-COURT, FLEET-ST.

Just Published, Crown 8vo., Cloth, price 3s. 6d.

BRITAIN IN HISTORY, ANCIENT AND MODERN;

Or, Proofs Linking Israel with Britain Throughout the Ages.

By Mrs. G. A. ROGERS,

Author of "The Coronation Stone," etc., etc.

"The Book possesses a national interest, and ought to be widely read."—The Fireside News.

"The most useful addition to Identity literature that has been made for a long time past."

Israel's Hope and Destiny.

"Well worthy of perusal for the rare and curious information conveyed."—Christian Age.

"This remarkable volume. . . We welcome this addition to the literature of Israel."—Banner of Israel.

"Interesting and suggestive."—English Churchman.

THE CORONATION STONE;

And England's Interest in It

4th Thousand, Crown 8vo., Cloth, price 1s. 6d.

"A reverent and graceful little book."—Life and Work.

"An excellent account of the history and wanderings of the Stone. . . will be read and re-read."

Banner of Israel.

LONDON: J. NISBET & Co., Berners Street, and to be had of all Booksellers.

Published by ROBERT BANKS & SON,

RACQUET COURT, FLEET STREET, E.C.

Postal Orders may be obtained at any Post Office in the United Kingdom for the following amounts: 1s., 1s. 6d., ½d. each; 2s., 2s. 6d., 3s., 3s. 6d. 4s., 4s. 6d., 5s., 7s. 6d., 10s., 10s. 6d. 1d each: 15s. 20s., 1½d. each. They should be "crossed" City Bank, Ludgate Hill, E.C. Stamps accepted

JEHOVAH TRIUMPHANT. The New and Complete Theology and Electric Light of the Bible, containing the History of British-Israel, Compiled from the Sacred Scriptures. Cloth gilt, price 10s. 6d., post free for Postal Order or Cheque.

THE GEOGRAPHY OF THE GATES. By PHILO-ISRAEL. With Map, and six full page, and one double-page, Illustrations, printed on plate paper. 208 pages, in handsome cloth, gilt. Price 3s. 6d.; post free.

THE WORD: THE WORLD: THE BRANCH. By J. LEYLAND FIELDEN, Esq. Price 12s., post free.

EPHRAIM - ENGLAND. The Nineteenth Century Revelation of the Fruits of History. By Rev. R. DOUGLAS, Vicar of Kidsgrove. Cloth gilt, lettered, 4s., gilt edges 5s., free by post.

FIFTY REASONS WHY THE ANGLO-SAXONS ARE ISRAELITES of the Lost Tribes of the House of Israel. By Rev. W. H. POOLE, D.D. Price 6d., post free 7d.

BIBLE LESSONS AND REFLECTIONS. By the late ROBERT GAIRDNER, of Kilmarnock, N.B. Price 2s. 6d., by post 2s. 9d.; cheap edition, limp cloth, 1s., by post, 1s. 2d.

BY THE REV. ROBERT DOUGLAS, M.A.

(Vicar of Kidsgrove, Stoke-on-Trent),

EPHRAIM - ENGLAND. The Nineteenth Century Revelation of the Fruits of History. Price 4s., post free.

THE TWO WITNESSES. A Monthly Identity Magazine. Price 6d., Annual Subscription, post free, 6s.

London: ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-st.

SOUND, PURE, WHITE

TEETH!

Those who value these will try

CARBOLINE

(The Great Sanitary Tooth Paste).

1/6 & 2/6 per Pot.

Through Chemists, or post free from the Makers,

GEORGE & WELCH

WORCESTER.

Lancet writes:—"To save the teeth use a good carbolic daily."

THE WATERS OF HERMON.

THE interesting circumstance of the re-production by modern science of these celebrated Waters of Antiquity, so famed in Biblical times, is one of the most important illustrations of the advance of the age. Differing from all other Waters they contain no mineral ingredients, so that the system, instead of being lowered by their use, is steadily built up, while the functions of life are restored to a healthy condition. And it is, therefore, with extreme gratification that this is now brought within the reach of the general public. The well-known curative properties of this famous medicine are promptly manifested in the following disorders:—Indigestion, Biliousness, Congestion of the Liver, Nausea and Vomiting, Disorders of the Stomach and Bowels and their consequences, Constipation, Piles, Flatulence, Repletion, Spasms, Discomfort or Pain after Meals, Pain Between the Shoulders, Pains in the Back and Loins, Cold in the Head, Coughs of various character, Difficulty of Breathing, Giddiness and Sick Headache, Effects of Alcohol, Overworked Brain, Affections of the Nerves, &c. Price 2s. 9d. per bottle, post free. THE WATERS OF HERMON DEPOT, 107, King Street, Hammersmith, London.

INVALUABLE REMEDY

HUMAN LIFE.—FIFTY YEARS' Record of Facts, Principles, and Discoveries (just published, complete) Relating to the Improvement and Preservation of Human Life on Earth. Origin and true treatment of diseases. A series of articles by DR. SAMUEL BIRLEY, M.D., Ph.D. Book form, 50 pages. SENT FREE to every applicant by the publishers, GORDON B. MURRAY & CO., 50, Theobald's-road, Holborn, E.C. Write to-day

PIANOFORTES, Harmoniums, American Organs. Why buy at shops inferior made instruments, and pay large profits, when you can buy direct from the Maker High-class Instruments, and save 50 per cent. by so doing? Full value allowed for old Instruments in exchange as part payment. Write for Price Lists and Testimonials to G. LINSTEAD, 2, Oseney Crescent, Camden Road, London. Established 1874.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C. F. W. PARRY (late QUEST & Co.), 29 PATERNOSTER-ROW WEDNESDAY, JUNE 20, 1888, [All rights reserved.

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."
(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India.)

"And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the Forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS of the EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. XII., No. 600. Entered at Stationers' Hall.] WEDNESDAY, JUNE 27, 1888. [PRICE ONE PENNY.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
The Invasion of England	253
A Melbourne Opponent and His Answerer	254
The Calliope Dock in Auckland, New Zealand	255
Great Britain as a Naval and Military Power	256
The Death of the Emperor Frederick	257
Rev. F. A. C. Lillingston Gives Evidence	257
An Attack on the Strongholds of Our Opponents. A Lecture by V. M. Cox. Part IV.	258
"The Good Olive Tree" (Rom. xi. 17—24). By William McVey	259

THE INVASION OF ENGLAND.

THE scare regarding the possible invasion of our land grows and is beginning to bear fruit in the direction of "preparation." It is perhaps God's will that His people's defence should be conducted and brought about, not by victory after the declaration of war and during the attempted invasion, but by the preparations for the defence, which will deter the enemy from making it. The volunteer movement here was the reply to the threats of the French colonels in 1857, and produced the desired effect. No attempt was made, and the threats ceased. At present there are no threats at all on the part of our possible invaders, but our own people have taken great alarm after listening to the terrifying statements of H.R.H. The Commander-in-Chief, of Lord Wolseley, Lord Charles Beresford, R.N., and the other responsible and irresponsible experts who have, one and all, lately told us that our Islands are in danger; our armies despicable in number and equipments; our navy utterly unfit to cope with any combination among our foreign possible enemies, by keeping the command of the channel at all times and seasons, and defending our immense floating commerce throughout the ocean highways of the world. It appears to us that the whole question, quite apart from Our Identity and its promises, turns upon this point. Is it possible, the British being such a naval Power as it is, for any nation, or combination of Powers to collect, embark, and land on our shores 100,000 or 150,000 infantry, cavalry, and artillery—with food supplies—in the face of the British channel fleet? The problem starts with the idea that there will be a previous battle, in which the British will be defeated and their ships sunk, captured, or destroyed. This, it is supposed, will give the enemy command of the channel for a period of time long enough to enable the hostile operations to be carried out. But here the difficulties of the invasion theorists begin: for in the first place, we are sure to have ample notice of the intention of our obliging foes, the French. They must collect their 100,000 men, with all their vast implements of war complete, at some French port near our shores: we should certainly be aware of that gathering! Then there must be called in the transport needed to convey the French army. The First Lord of the Admiralty told us, on June 4th, in Parliament, that to convey such a force, packed as close as they can be, for forty-eight hours, would require 120 steamships of 4,000 tons, or an aggregate of 480,000 tons. The French have only 500,000 tons available of steam tonnage altogether, and therefore must denude all their Mediterranean ports and foreign possessions, making them thus defenceless, in order to carry out the proposed operations. Here would be our opportunity. France could not collect such a host of steamships suddenly, or without our knowledge. Our object would be to intercept and destroy them before they would be available for the object proposed. It is true that Lord Wolseley declares that nothing like the amount of tonnage named would be required by the French, but that 150,000 tons of shipping would suffice, and that they have that amount perfectly available. That may be so, but even then it must be collected to convey the army across, and then would be the opportunity of the British navy. Of course, if the navy be nowhere, or destroyed, and the French have ample time to prepare and to tow their vessels across the channel, anything is possible! But in that case, a better plan than invasion seems open to our enemies. They may overcome our fleets, and destroy our convoys of provisions, as well as the wheat which we must have in our over populated Islands, to enable our millions to live. The British can be starved in our Islands if we provide, first, that the command of the sea be taken from us, and next, that our merchant ships be at the mercy of the enemy, who could make wheat contraband of war, and so prevent neutral ships supplying us with it.

The scare has done its work, however, and now we have the orders issued authorising the formation of volunteer brigades in anticipation of an invasion of our country, which these orders admit tacitly to be possible and even probable.

So far the case argued from the standpoint of mere human foresight. It is certain, that if our nation be Gentile non-Israelite in origin, we do well to take heed for our safety, and that the facts of the case make it very uncertain what the issue will be. If we be not Israel, we have no guarantee that we shall survive as a nation, or escape from the last indignity a nation can suffer—defeat and subjugation by some other. But what are the facts? They are these:—This nation is God's long-lost people, the Ten Tribes of Israel, His inheritance and heritage, His chosen ones, His firstborn, possessed even now of the birthright of Joseph, and of all the blessings the Lord swore to give to them in these last days, the times of the Christian dispensation. Among those blessings were these: A secure and safe domicile in God's own appointed place—in the Isles of the west,—our own home Gates the while open continually day and night for the continuous, never failing reception of bread stuffs, and all that makes up the wealth of the Gentile nations. He added also what is tantamount to the gift of the command, or supremacy of the sea, that we, as Israel, should possess "the Gate of our enemies," and should live "confidently and carelessly in the Isles"; under the guardianship of our God, praising and glorifying Him there, since "He has made, formed, created, and fashioned us to show forth His praise." Anyone who will refer to the well-known texts containing these many promises, will see that our future is as secure as God's throne, and that save as deterrents to the nations to warn them off, we have no need for these warlike preparations or to fear invasion and the havoc that such terror would bring to our land (see Deut. ix. 26—29; 1 Chron. v. 1, 2; 1 Chron xvi. 13; Jer. xxxi. 9; Heb. i. 1; 2 Sam. vii. 10; Isa. lx. 11; Gen. xxii. 17; Ezek. xxxix. 6; Isa. xxiv. 15, R.V., xliii. 17—21). God has promised us safety and security in our appointed place, and let Israel therefore praise the Lord!

Digitized by Google

A MELBOURNE OPPONENT AND HIS ANSWERER.

We beg to ask our readers' attention to the following attack made by the Hon. James Campbell in the Melbourne Daily Telegraph of Nov. 26, 1887, upon Our Identity and its teachings. It occurred in the course of some amusing and instructive papers he wrote regarding "Wanderings in Asia" wherein Bombay and its Parsees are particularly described. Regarding the Parsees and their Persian origin he wrote thus, diverging from his subject to have a little fling at the foolish Anglo-Israelites. His attack brought forward immediately our Israelite friend, F. J. Annear, of South Yarra. Mr. Campbell said:—

A greater joke could hardly be imagined than to propose to the wealthy and highly educated Parsees to abandon the civilisation of India, and the facilities for money-making in the great cities of the peninsula, to return to the despotism of semi-civilised and poverty-stricken Persia. That country may afford themes for the gorgeous poetry of those who never lived in it, and never intend to, but it will not get back its Parsees. These gentlemen look at it with the cold eyes of business men, and not with any "fine frenzy rolling." Their resemblance to the Jews has been pointed out over and over again. Some historians hold the theory that the Lost Ten Tribes never were lost, and I lean lovingly to that idea; but if ever I go in search of those tribes I shall not follow those amiable enthusiasts who have found twenty-seven identifications of the English nation with the Lost Tribes. I think those twenty-seven have swollen to seventy-seven, and I am quite prepared for a very small consideration to offer the believers anything up to seven hundred of equal value with the original twenty-seven. My search, however, after the Lost Ten Tribes would be in the direction of the Parsees, but I fear me much that natural laziness, coupled with a secret fear as to whether the Lost Ten Tribes are worth finding, will deter my unenterprising spirit from the quest. Apart from this, too, might not it be a real disaster to discover the Lost Ten Tribes? As the other two tribes have acquired so much of this world's goods, what might happen if ten more were let loose on us?

The reply to the above appeared in the paper of Dec. 3rd, and was to the following effect:—

THE LOST TEN TRIBES.

To the Editor of the "Daily Telegraph."

Sir,—In speaking of the Parsees in your issue of Saturday, 26th November, Mr. Campbell makes certain statements which, as one of those "amiable enthusiasts" who have found the Lost Ten Tribes in the British nation, I cannot let pass without at least an attempted protest. While Mr. C. "leans lovingly" to the theory held by "some historians," that the "Lost Ten Tribes never were lost," Anglo-Israelities get them to the law and to the testimony, and if they (some historians, or all for that matter) "speak not according to this word," decide at once, "it is because there is no light in them." The prophetic books abound with passages which tell of Israel's becoming lost "wanderers among the nations" as well as their ultimate discovery as a multitudinous Christian nation, so that these historians can be dispensed with by the believer in inspiration in deciding this point. I do not know that I am in a position to offer Mr. C. the "very small consideration" which he would consider adequate for his trouble in increasing the number of identifications between Israel and Britain from 27 to 700. I have not read the book Mr. C. refers to, except in its enlarged form—"Forty-seven Identifications." With all its faults (which none was freer to admit than its author, Mr. E. Hine), it may, in truth, be called an epoch-making book—one which very few have honestly read unconvinced. Whether Mr. C. may or may not be induced to increase the number of identifications, let him explain how all these prophecies find their fulfilment in the British if they are not Israel, the indestructible nation of God's choice. As a Christian (leaving Anglo-Israelism out of the question), I would enter an emphatic protest against the latter part of Mr. C's. remarks. He has a "secret fear as to whether the Lost Ten Tribes are worth finding," and "it might be a real disaster to discover them." He is surely not ignorant of the great events hingeing on their discovery and restoration. To note only one—the restoration and consequent conversion of the Jews cannot take place till the discovery of Ten-Tribed Israel. And besides all this, the replanting (which must follow the identification) of Israel is spoken of as occupying God's "whole heart" and "whole soul," and we cannot be indifferent as those that "make mention of the Lord" are commanded to "keep not silence, and give Him no rest till He establish, and till He make Jerusalem a praise in the earth." In view of those scriptures, who dare talk of Israel's discovery as a disaster? Mr. C. speaks of the Ten Tribes acquiring much of this world's goods, like their brethren of Two-Tribed Judah. That has already taken place to an incomparably greater extent in the British, and constitutes a strong proof of their identity. God gave Israel "the power to get wealth." Israel, obedient, was also to "lend to many nations but borrow from none." This remarkable promise is fulfilled in the British, and them alone. As an English paper, "Money," lately stated, "Britain is the creditor of the whole globe." Then again, Britain holds the "Gate of her enemies," e.g., Gibraltar, Malta, Aden, Perim, Socotra, etc. She alone keeps the sabbath nationally. Her "nation and company of nations;" her missionary zeal—"blossoming and budding, and filling the earth with fruit;" all these, and many more, mark her as the people of God's choice, long-lost but now found Trusting that these few disjointed remarks will be taken in the spirit in which they are intended, and apologising for trespassing thus far.

I am, etc.,

F. J. ANNEAR.

South Yarra, 28th November.

We think the Melbourne Anglo-Israelite has much the best of the argument, and shows that he has a firm hold of the truth, while the Hon. Mr. Campbell has evidently not given much thought to the subject. His search for the Lost Tribes, he says, would be directed to the Parsees, because, we suppose, there is said to be some facial resemblance between them and the Jews.

But the Lost Tribes are to be found before their restoration to their land a Christian nation, "sons of the living God," which the Parsees are not (Hosea i. 10). They are destined to be discovered in the West (Hosea xi. 10), whereas the Parsees are in India. They must be multitudinous (Gen. xlviii. 16—19), the Parsees are few. They are to develop into "a nation and company or fulness of nations" (Gen. xlviii. 19). The Parsees are not a nation at all, and are never likely to develop into "a company of nations." The Ten Tribes must be found singing Jehovah's praises in "the Isles of the West" (Isa. xxiv. 15). But the Parsees neither praise Jehovah, nor are they domiciled in the "Isles of the West." Israel was to be discovered "holding the Gate of their enemies" (Gen. xxii. 17), but the Parsees have no Gates at all to hold, and no enemies, since they live under Israel's banner in Bombay and throughout the Heathen Empire; a feeble folk, relying on the protection of the paramount power. Israel being wealthy, were "to lend to many nations but borrow from none" (Deut. xv.6). The Parsees are in many cases very wealthy, but they do not lend to any nation, much less to "many." The Parsees then will in no way respond to the portrait of Israel which the scriptures put before us, and Mr. Campbell must go further afield to find the right people. These must be a dominant, powerful, wealthy, Christian, very numerous, island, sea-going, people, loving the Gospel, the Bible, the Sabbath, the Decalogue and the souls of men; as different in fact as light and darkness from the Parsees. In regard to the doubt whether the Ten Tribes were ever "lost" at all, Mr. Campbell has been well answered by Mr. Annear. The Scriptural account of the matter is one that Mr. Campbell does not dare to touch, for then he would find his "historians" are answered In Ezek. xi. 16, 17, the Lord's intentions as to the "scattering" and subsequent "gathering" of Israel of the Ten Tribes are clearly detailed. In Amos ix. 9, the same prophecy is repeated. Israel was to be "sifted" among all nations, yet not a stone was to fall in that process upon the earth. In Micah v. 7, 8, the picture of Israel surrounded by many Gentile nations, administering to their spiritual wants first, and yet dominating them by force of arms, affords another clue to their condition during their Lo-Ammi state, being "not God's people" yet all the time blessed by Him as He said He would bless "Israel obedient," and as he has blessed the British people, since the Reformation. There is no doubt that attacks and scoffing notices such as those of the Hon. Mr. Campbell, irritating though they may seem, are in the end beneficial to our subject, because they bring out replies and arguments which otherwise would not have been elicited. In the present case it is doubly interesting to know that the attack and the reply are both Australian, and that a Melbourne paper publishes them. It is clear that at the Antipodes Our Identity is receiving considerable attention. With that fact we must be satisfied. The truth is great, and it must and will prevail!

Digitized by Google

THE CALLIOPE DOCK IN AUCKLAND, NEW ZEALAND.

On February 16, 1888, a work was completed in Auckland, New Zealand, in the presence of Sir William Jervois, the Governor, Admiral Fairfax, the naval Commander-in-Chief, and all the chief authorities of the locality, which bids fair to double and quadruple Israel's power in the Antipodes. The Calliope Dock, the largest in the colonial possessions of this country, capable of docking the very largest vessels in Her Majesty's Navy, was that day completed at a cost of £135,000, amidst great rejoicings. The dock, as we find from the New Zealand Herald, of February 27, is 500 feet long, and 40 wide on the floor, with a width of 110 feet at the level of the cope. The depth of water at high tide gives 33 to 34 ft. 8 in. above the centre of the sill, showing that the structure can accommodate the largest merchantmen afloat, as well as any men-of-war in the Navy. It is situated in the finest and most convenient harbour in Australasia, and from its position is sure to command the route to Vancouver in the North Pacific, and make Auckland one of the most important Gates or harbours in the British Empire. What the new dock has done for the Australasian colonies is well described by a writer in the New Zealand Herald, who said thus:—

We look upon the completion of this dock as of great interest in an imperial point of view. In the event of a war, the dominion of the ocean would fall to that Power which could maintain at sea the large steamers which now form the navies of the world. It must especially be so in the wide Pacific. No Power has the advantage in this respect possessed by Great Britain. All the ports of Australia, Tasmania, and New Zealand are open to English ships of war, where they could be supplied with provisions, and could, if necessary, communicate instantaneously with London. In Auckland, now, by the completion of the Calliope Dock, any vessel which had been long at sea, and which had had her swift steaming capacity impaired thereby, could be docked and cleaned. Any vessel which had suffered damage could be repaired. Ample supplies of coal could be procured. And all this could be done under the protection of batteries erected by the Colonial Government, and of torpedo boats commanding the entrances to the harbour. It must be obvious that this must be of enormous advantage to the British Navy, and will still further strengthen England's predominance at sea.

England's predominance at sea depends on two of her possessions—namely, on "The Gates" and the ships of war driven by steam which keep the ocean highways open, and serve in their turn to safeguard the Gates. These war vessels are liable to accidents, and to that fouling of their hulls which destroys their efficiency, until they can be docked and cleaned. They are so immense in size, however, that no docks large enough to hold them, out of England, can be found nearer than the Cape, when they happen to be in this condition at the Antipodes. The completion of the Calliope Docks at Auckland, however, furnishes the remedy by providing in Australasia a first-class harbour, adequately protected, a magnificent dock, capable of admitting the largest of H. M. steam war-ships, and the biggest of our splendid mercantile marine, for repair or cleaning. Our navies now are independent of our home arsenals and docks, and need no longer return to our distant shores for repair when they require overhauling at the Antipodes. The Calliope Dock, then, is an important factor in the question of the defence of our colonies and of the safety of our distant Gates.

The completion of the new docks in Auckland, therefore, resolves itself into an Identity question, and has a very direct bearing on the stability of our Empire in the far South-east. These docks will make the newly proposed British route, between Auckland and Vancouver, both safe and feasible, and we expect soon to hear that in carrying out the arrangement some barren spots in the "Sandwich Islands'" group have been occupied by the British as a repeating station for our telegraphic service, constituting thus a new but urgently needed Gate in the North Pacific, midway in the ocean route.

Many and interesting speeches were made in Auckland at the banquet given in honour of the occasion, when Sir William Jervois, the Governor of the colony, and others, expatiated on the value of the work just completed. The American Consul, Mr. J. T. Campbell, in proposing the toast of "The City of Auckland," made a quotation in which he blindly described the British Gates, and testified, on the authority of an American orator, that we hold the military posts of the world. He said, inter alia:—

I am proud to propose the toast, "The City of Auckland," situated as it is in this great country—on this beautiful bay. With this magnificent dock its prominence and position is assured. I cannot do better than to say, in the language of America's greatest orator, Dan Webster, "England has dotted the world over with her possessions and military posts, so that her morning drum-beat, following the sun in his course, and keeping company with the hours, encircles the globe daily with one continuous strain of martial music of the martial airs of Great Britain." (Applause.) This is but a young city; it is probably very little older than myself. I won't speak as to that —(laughter)—but here in this city upon the hills—the beautiful city of Auckland—the jacketed schoolboy is attending your public schools who will live to see here a population of three hundred and fifty thousand people. (Applause).

That is to say, according to the American Consul, the British in New Zealand have the Israelitish blessing of enormous increase of population; they have "The Gates" around the world, and have the world-wide dominion besides, depending upon the possession of the Gates.

We see from all this, how grandly, yet silently, God has been working for His people—building up their strength quite unknown to themselves, giving them first the Gates or fortresses on the ocean-routes towards the East and South, then British India, then the colonial possessions in Australia, and lastly, after He had increased them till they have become nations in loving alliance and federation with their old mother in the West, He has endowed them all with such strength, credit, and riches that they have, as at Auckland, provided by the new dock accommodation, for the repair and efficiency of the British Fleet on the spot, obviating the need for a return half across the globe to Europe, for the purpose. In all these things we see the Lord's hand stretched out to help His people and to increase their power; not to aggrandize them, and feed their overweening pride, already too great; but "to establish His covenant which He sware unto their fathers as it is this day." (Deut. viii. 18, R.V.) To Him be all the praise!

Digitized by Google

GREAT BRITAIN AS A NAVAL AND MILITARY POWER.

THE Continental nations are often exercising themselves on the subject of the excessive weakness of Great Britain as a military Power. They have, it seems, some reason for that idea. But they do not stop there! They now and again express doubts as to our power at sea, and intimate pretty plainly, that even there we are overrated, being not so strong as the world supposes. The Times of April 11, published a specimen of this sort of criticism, not at all consolatory to our position as "The chief of nations," and positively alarming, were we not comforted by the reflection that the Vienna paper does not see all our defence, nor the whole of our power; and cannot know that we have for our ally the King of kings, and the Lord of lords, who is the God of Israel, and therefore, in a special sense "our God!" This makes all the difference! For if our continental neighbours desire to amuse themselves by reckoning how easy it would be to land 100,000 men (why not 500,000 men?) on British soil, and so capture London and its enormous wealth, there is no reason why they should not enjoy their calculations and anticipate their spoils, called in Indian parlance, their "loot"! God's word indeed gives us a hint that this very thing shall take place, and the occurrence of such day dreams therefore is another item in the mass of evidence which points to the truth of Our Identity and confirms it. In Isaiah liv. 15, R.V., we have the statement, that attempts shall be made by the enemies of Israel to destroy them, "Behold they may gather together, but not by Me: whosoever shall gather together against thee, shall fall because of thee." Their weapons formed against Israel cannot prosper, because the Lord forbids them; and all tongues rising against His people (like those now in question) shall be condemned by Israel herself (v. 17). The result is declared by the same scripture to be the heritage, or right of the Lord's servants (Israel), because they are shielded by their forensic acquittal from all sin and its penalties, namely, by the imputed righteousness of Jehovah-Jesus Himself (v. 17). The portion of those, therefore, who would spoil God's chosen Israel, and the "lot" of those that would "rob" them (just what our continental friends desire!), is plainly declared in Isa. xvii. 12—14, R.V. The passage ought to be transcribed in letters of gold, and placed on the gates of all our maritime ports. "Ah! the uproar of many peoples, which roar like the roaring of the seas; and the rushing of the nations, which rush like the rushing of many waters! The nations (non-Israelite Gentiles), shall rush like the rushing of many waters; but He shall rebuke them, and they shall flee afar off, and shall be chased as the chaff of the mountains before the wind, and like the whirling dust before the storm. At eventide behold terror; and before the morning they are not! This is the portion of them that spoil us, and the lot of them that rob us." In Isa. xli. 11—13, R.V. we have a well known passage, fully supporting all that has gone before, and declaring that those that are incensed against Israel shall be ashamed and confounded, "those that strive with Israel shall be as nothing," and shall (let our friends note this) —"perish"! They that "war" against Israel it is added, are to be also "as nothing, and as a thing of nought!" Here then is our security and defence against our Continental foes, who cannot conceal their envy and covetousness, and desire to land upon our shores, to "rob and spoil us." In vain! In vain! Our military force may be weak, our navy vastly overmatched by the work it is always called upon to perform. But in spite of all that, our defence is from on high; and the Arm of Omnipotence is stronger than that of the whole world combined! The miserable anticipations of national defeat and disruption, which some of our leaders, Lord Wolseley and others, seem to cherish, are the result of course of regarding the British as one of the ordinary nations of the earth, depending for existence and prosperous continuity upon their own right arms, and upon their own powers of defence and offence. If we had only that hope before us we should be of all men most miserable. For we can see as well as our neighbours, that our safety and our prosperity hinge on the mere chances of war, and that with an empire dispersed as ours is, a very slight succession of reverses might send down our power in ruins to the ground. But we know, on the contrary, that our national growth, and present abnormal existence, are as nearly miraculous as anything can be, and that God, who has caused us to become nationally what we are, will preserve and extend our empire, till it fills that position of universal domination which we know it is to assume, for the praise and for the glory of the God of Israel (Daniel vii. 27; Rom. iv. 13, R.V.). The cablegram which we have been commenting upon was to the following effect:—

VIENNA, APRIL 10.

For some mysterious reason the Ultramontane Vaterland publishes an article to show that Great Britain is hopelessly weak as a military and naval Power. It gives several quotations from the writings of Lord Wolseley and Sir Charles Dilke, points out that the British fleet could not possibly protect a scattered colonial Empire, and concludes by remarking that if an army of 100,000 men were landed on the British coast it would march to London and take it without resistance. The Vaterland does not explain where or how 100,000 men could be landed, nor does it give reasons why the invading force would be allowed to enjoy a simple military promenade.

The remarks of the correspondent in the last sentence of the above are to the point: granted that 100,000 could be landed on our shores (we Anglo-Israelites deny this possibility, because of God's promise in 2 Sam. vii. 10.);—granted that they could be landed, they would certainly be resisted, and would certainly never get away again! The Channel Squadron, reinforced by all the ships of war within call, would undoubtedly make the departure of the landed foes impossible; and 100,000 Frenchmen and Russians (!), even if landed on the shores which God has sworn to defend, would be unable to subdue an Imperial people of 37 millions. "I will not leave thee, nor forsake thee," is the promise; and let Israel, therefore, praise the Lord!

INDIA.—"The most important people in India are the Hindoos. They invaded the country thousands of years ago, coming from the high lands of Central Asia. The people living in these high lands at that distant time were called Aryans, and from them nearly all the Western nations, including the English, have sprung, as well as the Hindoos. Thus this large part of the Indian population is much more nearly related to us than the Chinese, for instance, or the Negroes."—Extract from "Round the Globe," by W. C. Proctor; W. Isbister, London; page 216.

THE LATE ANNIVERSARY SPEECHES.—The Rev. J. Idrisyn Jones begs us to say that several inaccuracies have occurred in the report of his speech in Exeter Hall, as published in the BANNER, of June 6 (No. 597), in consequence of his not having received a "proof" for correction. Our readers will be interested in the fact that our friend Mr. Idrisyn-Jones is "the son of Idrisyn, late vicar of Llandisilio-gogo, author of the most popular Welsh Commentary on the Bible ever published, and translator of 'Her Majesty's Journal' into Welsh. He died a few months ago."

Digitized by Google

THE DEATH OF THE EMPEROR FREDERICK.

On the 15th June, only three months and six days after his aged father died, the Emperor Frederick peacefully passed away at Friedrichskron, stricken by a mortal disease, which he bore nobly, Christianly, and bravely. The story of his ailment, which has just ended in his death, is one of the saddest episodes of these our times. Only a year ago he was the foremost figure in the gallant cavalcade of foreign princes who rode with the Queen's sons on the memorable morning of her Jubilee on that bright 20th June. This year the same date sees him set free from the trials, sufferings, and anxieties of an exalted earthly position, struck down by a lingering painful illness, and consigned to an honoured grave by a sorrowing nation called twice almost within three months to part from their beloved sovereigns, the rulers of a mighty empire.

"Taking what has happened in Germany with what is happening elsewhere, he must be either dull or depraved who cannot see the hand of Providence at work in a very remarkable way." Such were the words of a provincial secular paper recording the event we all deplore just before it occurred. Doubtless the hand of the God of Israel was manifested in removing the good Emperor Frederick (as it removed Lord Beaconsfield) just when his presence would have interfered with the grave events impending. Grave European complications—even "the great earthquake war-woe"—are approaching to-day. The late Emperor would never have furthered, but would certainly have delayed its approach! He is therefore taken from the evil to come, and spared the experience of the terrible miseries and afflictions about to overwhelm "yonder ill-consolidated Europe," with his own so greatly loved Fatherland as well!

Just now a sorrowing nation needs all our sympathies. The widowed Empress and her mourning children too need all our prayers. Their beloved one has died a Christian's death, bravely and patiently endured; and is gone to his crown above, the purchase of the blood of Him who died that he might win it! Anglo-Israelites, let us pray for the German Royal Family, and ask that this second bereavement, tremendous as its effects are likely to be for Europe, may for them be full of spiritual blessing and consolation, the purchase of the Cross.

REV. F. A. C. LILLINGSTON GIVES EVIDENCE.

DEAR PHILO-ISRAEL,—The Rev. F. A. C. Lillingston, Vicar of St. James's, Clapham, has kindly lent me the notes of a remarkable sermon, which he preached on Sunday, 27th of May, on the Armada, and as he has given me permission to do what I like with them, I have copied them out and sent them to you in the hope that you may give them the hospitality of your columns. It gives blind, but strong evidence of the truth of our views, and was in fact a sermon on the Identity, unintended by the preacher. As it was chiefly extemporary, many strong points do not appear in the notes, but I may mention that he made much of our astounding wealth and the fact that we were so rich, that all nations borrowed of us; and he dwelt also on the wonderful growing increase of the Empire, that the English language must be the language of the future, and that Victor Hugo had laid down his pen aghast at the wealth and power of England.

Hoping you may shortly find room for this sermon in the BANNER,

Believe me, yours very truly,

H. ST. GEORGE PRIAULX.

The Avenue, Brixton Rise, S.W., 2nd June, 1888.

"Beware that thou forget not the Lord thy God, in not keeping His commandments, and His judgments, and His statutes, which I command thee this day, &c. But thou shalt remember the Lord thy God: for it is He that giveth thee power to get wealth, that He may establish His covenant which He sware unto thy fathers, as it is this day."—Deut. viii. 11—19.

THE exhortation of which these words form the burden is a very clear and distinct call to the children of Israel to remember all the mercies of God in delivering them from Egypt, and in feeding them in the wilderness, and in making them a great and mighty nation. The people were soon now to cross the Jordan and enter the promised land. But before he died Moses gathered them together, related the leading events which had taken place since they had left Egypt; recapitulated the law to them, and then urged upon them to remember all the way in which God had led them, His mercies to them, and His goodness in preserving them among so many dangers. I think we can take as the watchword of this remarkable sermon the word, Remember. And the lesson which I want to put before you to-day is, Remember.

We have in England a most extraordinary country and kingdom. The rule of our Queen at the present time is over a fifth portion of the whole world, and yet England is one of the smallest countries in the world. Our race, including in them the United States of America which has sprung from us, is dominating everywhere, is ever growing in actual power and influence. The wealth of England is such that all the nations of the world come to borrow of her. The rate of discount, the value of money in London, is anxiously studied every day in every part of the world. In a word, no kingdom, no Empire, no State has ever existed, or has ever been dreamt of, so vast, so powerful, so rich, so apparently secure, so influential, as is now this little island of England. And yet under Queen Mary, who died on 17th of November, 1558, there was hardly any country so poor, so much contemned and despised as England. The last of her French dominions had just been taken by the French, and the loss of Calais hastened the death of Mary. Spain was then the dominant country, and Philip, the proud Monarch of Spain, Naples and Sicily, and many other countries, was looked upon as the practical master of the world. After a time, 20 years less than that during which our Queen has reigned, Philip, urged by the Pope, determined to subdue England and bring it into subjection to Rome. There can be no doubt but that religion was the cause of the Armada. No expedition had been fitted out with more care. The dockyards of the coasts of the Mediterranean for three years resounded with nothing else but the sounds of the shipwrights preparing this magnificent fleet: armaments, provisions and food were gathered from all quarters of the globe, and at last, May 30th, the fleet sailed from the Tagus with the blessings of the Pope, and 200 monks in addition to all its sailors, soldiers and slaves, with relics and many awful instruments of torture, to bring England into subjection to the Roman Catholic Church and the Pope. Now I cannot stay to dwell on all the marvels of God's providence; on the awful storms both off Cape Finisterre and Ushant, which twice scattered the fleet, and sank several of the largest ships, nor on its wonderful discovery when least expected by a Scotch Pirate, just when, England asleep, was believing that the danger was all past, nor on the mistakes which the Commanders made of the Lizard for Plymouth Sound, which gave time for Howard, Drake, and Frobisher to get the English fleet ready for sea, nor on the wondrous guidance of the English fireships attacking the Spanish galleons at Calais and Gravelines, so that many were burnt; nor the stolidity of the Dutch, which prevented the Duke of Parma with his 34,000 veteran soldiers leaving Belgium to join the Armada and conquer England; nor on the admirable skill and wonderful pluck which was given to every captain, and every sailor, in the English fleet, and the constant changes of wind which helped the English and hindered the Spaniards. Never, since the day when Pharaoh pursued Moses and the Israelites unto the Red Sea, was there seen such marked intervention of Divine power to save His people as was then seen. Historians exhaust the English language to find words to describe the greatness of this fleet and to boast of the weakness and unreadiness of England, and the extraordinary result that of that fleet of 150 sail which left the Tagus not 50 returned to tell the tale. But where history stops, truth steps in, and drawing up the veil displays the arm of the power of God shown in rescuing England, where the Bible was read, where God was worshipped, where Jesus was trusted, where souls were looking for salvation to Him alone, where true Gospel Christianity had found a home and a refuge from the power of Spain which was then striving to restore in England the power of Rome, that parody of Christianity! You know the extraordinary history of England which followed, the rise of the Pastors against Ritualism, their magnificent triumph, their subsequent suffering and fall. The intrigues of the Romanizing party, culminating in the reign of James II., which seemed as if it would lead England again under the rule of Rome, and how that was defeated by another Armada of three ships from that very Netherlands which had helped us before, by now sending a Protestant ruler in William III. All these are facts known to all, even to cursory students of history, and the duty remains to me to point out the lessons which are to be derived from them. And here, 1st: Let us see the hand of God in all this. I fear very much the danger of praising men or nations and not God. It is that which always throughout this world many of the people assert. It was not their own power which had saved them, or brought them in, but the power of God. I do think that nothing is more sad, dangerous or ungrateful, than for us as a nation to praise the skill and courage of the English sailors, and not see in it all the hand of God. No doubt Queen Elizabeth was a clever ruler; no doubt Walsingham was an astute Prime Minister; no doubt Howard was a brave man, and Drake and Frobisher were spirited sailors, but who placed that galaxy of good qualities round the throne of England just at that moment, but God? who lulled the storms but God? But it is bad arithmetic to add up your sums and forget the chief line in the column. It is bad mathematics to try and work out your problems and ignore the chief factor! It is bad philosophy, whether of history or of anything else, to ignore God in any review which we may take of His dealings with the children of men. Let us learn again that God was determined to rescue England as an ark wherein His truth should be preserved and defended. At one time there was only one family on the earth who all worshipped the true God; then one race, the Jews in Palestine; then it seemed as if all the world would soon come round to the knowledge of God in Jesus, but it was not so! For as Christianity spread at one time it became more and more corrupt; then God came forth, and by the staff of witnesses kindled a fire in Europe of Divine truth, strong but submissive to the teaching of Jesus. But most parts of Europe would not have it, and in many places it was crushed out, but here in England it found a home, and the Bible was opened, and read, and the truth was received. Here God placed His truth and defended it. Who can be blind to that fact who reads the page of English history? Let us look at the cause of this light burning in England. It was because the Bible was read here. Tyndale's translation in the days of Henry VIII. had permeated the land. Wherever people read the Bible the claims of Popery were denounced. It is quite true that political events so shaped themselves that the rulers were brought to favour the re-establishment of the true gospel, but that they could not have done, except there had been a prepared gospel beforehand in the Bible studies of the people. Oh, brethren, take heed to this point, value your Bible, get all those over whom you have authority or influence, well grounded in Bible truth, and you will soon feel it a blessing and a defence against all kinds of error, together with the noblest motives for life. Let us learn another lesson. Rome never changes, she will alter her tactics a thousand times, she will try force if she can, but if that fail she will use blandishments. But she never falters or changes her course to turn aside men from the gospel. England she is determined to subdue. Yes, and I fear at times England is courting this subjection. Men do not now read either history or their Bibles, and they see not what has happened to Spain, its awful degradation from being the first Power in the world to being of less importance or value in the history of the world than New Guinea; the gross ignorance of her people, accompanied with frightful immorality, their awful indolence, their dreadful incapacity. They know something of it themselves, for they lately published a history for their schools in which the Peninsular war, during which England served them principally, is not even mentioned. Yet many amongst us see nothing of all this, and talk as if Popery was Christianity. Let me sound an alarm! It is always a thankless task. It cost Micah, the son of Imalaiah, to be cast into prison, and Jeremiah the prophet into a dungeon. Thousands of God's people were cast into the flames. But I must not stop for that. Under the guise of charity we are now being deceived by Rome. Jesuit priests occupy the English pulpit; wealth and wit all now adorn her with their praises. Brethren, Be not deceived: if we forsake God He will forsake us. Men, be men, and let the tale of the Armada stir your hearts to fight the battles which I see Rome is again preparing for England, and go forth to triumph in the old, old story which must give you the victory, a firm reliance on Jesus and His love.

Digitized by Google

AN ATTACK ON THE STRONGHOLDS OF OUR OPPONENTS.

A Lecture by V. M. Cox.

(Continued from page 248).

PART IV.

At a recent missionary meeting in a Berkshire town a remarkable piece of testimony as to British influence abroad was contributed by one of the speakers present on that occasion. His subject was the French invasion of Madagascar and the utter failure of the design of France to subjugate that island. The speaker quoted at some length from a French fortnightly journal of that period, in which the writer remarked that while France had expended her thousands on the attempted conquest of Madagascar but had accomplished nothing, the true conquest of that island had been silently but surely consummated by British missionaries, who had bound the hearts of the Malagasy people to themselves by indissoluble ties, making them love the British name, and honour the British flag, by bringing to them the Christian religion, and the word of God, which Britons carry wherever they go, thereby to civilise and bless the peoples of the heathen world. Not only in Madagascar, continues the journalist, but everywhere else they are planting the same sentiment, the love of England, and that which France, after large expenditure of gold and blood, has vainly sought to secure, England has obtained without any effort, simply by her gracious and Christianising influence on the pagan races of mankind to whom she has been privileged to take the word of heavenly truth and the knowledge of the one true and living God. This is a strange testimony to proceed from the pen of a French journalist, wholly detrimental to his own people, wholly favourable to a nation which France certainly has regarded with no special affection. May it not be considered a striking commentary on the prediction, "All nations shall acknowledge them that they are the seed which the Lord hath blessed"?

Again, our position in regard to Egypt and the changes we are effecting there are among the clearest confirmations of our Identity. We can look back to old Nos. of the Banner, published in 1882 or 1883, in which the work we are doing in Egypt to-day is forecast with startling definiteness. This was done at a date when such work had not been even commenced, and it was done on Scriptural grounds but on no other. "The Lord shall smite Egypt, He shall smite and heal it." "They shall cry unto the Lord because of the oppressors, and He shall send them a Saviour and a great one, and he shall deliver them." "The smiting and the healing," said the BANNER, "will be done by the same hand," and events proved the correctness of that conclusion. Nobody doubts that Britain was the instrument used for the smiting, and in proof that the healing is being no less surely effected I will ask your attention to a cutting from that very Radical paper, the Daily News, the paper indeed, which, more than any other, has constantly advocated the policy of evacuation. Had the advice of this journal been followed no such record as that which I am about to read to you, could ever have been inscribed, but it was not possible that we should leave Egypt till our work was done; certain it is that our rulers tried it again and again. Yet every attempt was a failure. God's hands constrained us to remain, and never has His leading been more clearly seen perhaps, than in the succession of catastrophes which forbad our relinquishing the position His providence had compelled us to assume in the land of the Pharoahs. Now, the very organ which most loudly clamoured for our departure from that land, becomes our witness that a splendid work has been already done, and we know that this work is yet in its infancy, and that yet more glorious results lie in the future, possibly the near future. The Cairo correspondent of the Daily News wrote, under date Feb. 16, 1888.

Digitized by Google

[The quotation from the Daily News we find has already appeared in the BANNER OF ISRAEL. Our readers will find the extract on page 238 of the issue for June 13].

(To be continued).

"THE GOOD OLIVE TREE" (ROM. xi. 17—24).

BY WM. MCVEY.

SOME short time ago there appeared in the BANNER (I think) the following:—

A question arising from the contemplation of the allegorical picture, contained in the above passage, who were, and are intended to be represented by "the good olive tree?" The tree—

(a) Out of which some of its branches were broken;
(b) Into which certain other wild ones were to be grafted in;
(c) Into which (their own tree) the broken branches are yet to be re-grafted.

Now since the greater cannot be grafted into the less, "the good olive tree" must be—

(1) Greater than the "Gentile" Church (wild olive branches);
(2) Greater than the Jewish (broken branches), and
(3) Capable of having both these added as (mere) grafts. Therefore, both now and in the yet future—seeing that the Jews are not re-grafted in—there must be a Church greater than either of those in (1) and (2), and greater than both taken together. What and where is she (this Church)?

In order to make the foregoing a little plainer, especially to those of your BANNER readers who may not be so far advanced, and who may not see the logical conclusion to be drawn from the above contemplation, permit me to supplement the above with the following remarks. But before doing so, allow me to confess my indebtedness to other writers on Our Identity, for matter quoted from their writings, and incorporated into the following remarks:—

Trees, in Scripture phraseology, are frequently employed to denote the individual; likewise, in a more extended or collective sense, they are used to denote communities and nations.

There are many examples in the sacred writings in proof of the above assertion.

St. Paul in Rom. xi. uses this same metaphor. There he likens that nation to which he belonged to a "good olive tree," from which some of its branches were broken off (the Jews), "because of unbelief," into which "the wild olive branches," the Gentiles, were to be grafted on. Further, he warns those "Gentile branches" not to boast, as if they were the stem itself, bearing all thereon, and reminds them that God is able and willing to re-graft the natural branches (the Jews) on to their own tree again. Therefore "the good olive tree," on the testimony of St. Paul, can be no other than a Hebrew nation (under the similitude of a tree).

Where, then, is this "good olive tree," that nation (a tree) "bringing forth fruit thereof" to God's glory, and in accordance with the Saviour's prediction? (Matt. xxi. 43; Isa. xxvii. 6.)

St. Paul affirms that God hath not cast away "His people," "His nation," "His Church," "His peculiar treasure," "whom He foreknew." They, as a people, as a nation, must be showing forth "His praise, His glory" (Isa. xliii. 21; lxvi. 19); and no one can for a moment suppose that the Almighty disposer could (or ever can) be thwarted in His purpose by any of His creatures—for, call to mind the attributes of the All-mighty.

With the above remarks, we do not wonder at St. Paul referring to "a mystery," purposely hid until a set or definite time "be come in," and that "blindness in part is happened to Israel, until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in, and so all Israel shall be saved" (Rom. xi. 25, 26).

Much, we believe, hangs on these two verses: they furnish a key whereby we can understand why this mystery, and the meaning of the same in relation to "the good olive tree."

"The 'fulness of the Gentiles' is taken to be the entry into the Church of its Gentile element."

The Gentile election is drafted in, and this, we are informed, is followed by the lifting of the veil from Israel; but the Apostle plainly specifies that the salvation of Israel precedes, and contributes to, the conversion of the Gentiles (ver. 12—15). If the "fulness of the Gentiles" is their ingathering to the Church, the gathering will have to be completed, or, "come in," previous to Israel's conversion, which is just inverting God's plan, and this in itself "stamps the interpretation as wrong."

Commentators are oblivious of the fact, that in alluding to the "fulness of the Gentiles," or nations, Paul is citing Gen. xlviii. 19, where it is prophesied that Ephraim should become "a multitude (margin, fulness) of nations."

The New Testament revisers, in a marginal note on Matt. iv. 15, say the word "Gentiles" should be "nations," and so elsewhere.

In Hebrew Bibles (we are informed) the phrase employed by St. Paul is identical with that of Genesis, and with these two exceptions, it is not to be found in Scripture—(J. G. Taylor).

We have therefore to look for the "fulness of nations," not among Gentiles proper, nor among Jews, but among Ephraim-Israel, to whom this multiplicity of seed specially belongs, who was severed from the Mosaic law, declared "Gomerised" (or Gentilised) by Hosea. All this, be it observed, is to take place in the latter or last days, previous to the millennium, and revealed to-day in the British people, with their magnificent off-shoots, in America, Africa, and Australasia, unknown to man, unconsciously, even to the subjects of His working, and in silent mockery of infidelity, God's immutable purpose has matured into history, and Ephraim's "fulness of nations" is at our very doors. Its culmination will, as predicted, be accompanied by the dissipation of Jewish blindness, "and so all Israel shall be saved"—(J. G. Taylor).

This developing into a "fulness of nations" has never in the past been witnessed. History is singularly silent on this point; but in our own day we see this amply and forcibly fulfilled in our own history. Witness the extraordinary growth of our empire; all sprung from the same stock, developing and desiring to confederate into "a company of nations." This fact is unique in the world's history, thereby proving that we must be the "good olive tree," into which the broken branches (the Jews) will yet be re-grafted, on to which many of the "wild olive branches" are already grafted, proving conclusively that we must be Ephraim-Israel, "the good olive tree." "O let Israel now confess that He is gracious, and that His mercy endureth for ever." "For the Lord will not cast off His people, neither will He forsake His inheritance" (Psa. xciv. 14).

Portobello, N.B., April 19, 1888.

SCOTT'S COMMENTARY IN SUPPORT.—A friend has sent us the following quotation from Scott's Commentary on Lev. xxvi. 42, which, however, we have not yet been able to authenticate. In reference to that passage Scott remarked: "It is observable that it is not said the Lord would remember His covenant ratified with Israel at Mount Sinai, but the covenant made with their progenitors, the Patriarchs, long before the Sinai covenant. The future restoration of Israel will be in fulfilment of the Abrahamic covenant." These are remarkable sentiments to emanate from the commentators, and they fully justify our views that God cannot but remember His covenant with Abraham and "his afterseed for ever," because that was unconditional and binding upon Him as a faithful God for all eternity. He cannot break His covenant with Israel, for He is the Lord their God (Lev. xxvi. 44, 45).

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed: "Philo-Israel," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

SUBSCRIPTIONS. £ s. d.

Annual Subscription for one copy weekly (including the Twelve Double Numbers) post free 0 7 6
Two Copies (including Double Numbers) 0 13 6
Three Copies ,, ,, ,, ... 1 0 4
Four Copies ,, ,, ,, ... 1 5 6
Six Copies ,, ,, ,, ... 1 16 4

Post Office Orders to be made payable at the head office, St. Martin's-le-grand, London, to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C., or F. W. PARRY & Co., 29, Paternoster-row, London.

The Editor cannot undertake to return rejected MSS. unless stamps for the purpose be sent. Parties requiring an answer should enclose a stamp.

Contents Bills and Show Cards may be obtained on application to the Publishers.

Advertisements should be sent to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

Prepaid Advertisements are inserted at the rate of thirty words for 1s. 4d.

BLACKPOOL.— Anglo-Israelites will find COMFORTABLE APARTMENTS, Public or private, near Sea or Gardens, at Mrs. Breakells, 39, Adelaide Street.

Just published—Cloth, 2s. 6d.—a re-issue of

The Origin of Masonic Ritual and Tradition:

A Lecture on the Three Degrees, by BRO. WM. ROWBOTTOM, P.M., 1028, with facsimile of a very rare Masonic engraving published in 1789.

"Exquisitely clear and singularly correct in everything wherein I may be any authority or guide."—Professor PIAZZI SMYTH. "Will be found of considerable interest to many besides Masons."—Church Bells.

Oxford: S. Rowbottom and Son; London: R. Banks and Son, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C.; and F. W. Parry and Co., 29, Paternoster Row, E.C.

Price Five Shillings. —"Substantially and attractively got up, and profusely illustrated."—Oldham Chronicle.

Eildon Grange: A Tale.

By ANDREW CLARK, M.A., Vicar of St. Michael's, Oxford.

"One of the most charming books. . . . The illustrations are full of playful humour."—Scotsman. "The book is undoubtedly a happy one."—The Oxford Magazine. "Both entertaining and bracing."—Dundee Advertiser.

Oxford: S. Rowbottom and Son; London: Hamilton, Adams and Co., 32, Paternoster Row, E.C.

☞ Ask for this Book at the Libraries.

WORKS BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

The History of the House of Israel. How They Were Lost and How They Were Found. Told for the children. Price 6d., cloth 1s.; post free 7d. and 1s. 1d. Fifth edition.

A Resume of the Scriptural Argument Proving the Identity of the British Race with the Lost Ten Tribes. Price 1d.; 6s. per hundred. postage 6d.

Anglo-Israelism. True, Not False. Being Philo-Israel's Reply to the Rev. Canon Bell's pamphlet, "Anglo-Israelism: True or False?" Price 1d., 6s. 6d. per 100. 16 pages, crown 8vo.

An Elementary Digest or Sketch of the Chief Facts and Teachings of the Great Pyramid of Egypt. Adapted to the Unlearned and Unscientific 56 pages, Illustrated with Diagrams, price 4d., post free 5d. 10th Thousand.

Our Identity with the House of Israel. Price 4d., Reprinted from "Clifton Chronicle Letters"

Our Identity: What it is Not; What it is; and Our Obligations To-day in Respect to it Being a Lecture recently delivered in London by Philo-Israel, and published by special request. Price 2d., a reduction for quantities.

Are the English People the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel? An Inquiry Establishing the Identity of the British Nation with the Lost Ten Tribes. 4d.

Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

SOUND, PURE, WHITE

TEETH!

Those who value these will try

CARBOLINE

(The Great Sanitary Tooth Paste).

1/6 & 2/6 per Pot.

Through Chemists, or post free from the Makers,

GEORGE & WELCH

WORCESTER.

Lancet writes:—"To save the teeth use a good carbolic daily."

NEW BOOK BY DR. WILD.

Just Published, Price 3s., Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Lettered. Sent by Post on receipt of Published Price.

TALKS

FOR

THE TIMES.

BY JOSEPH WILD, M.A., D.D.,

Pastor of the Bond-st. Congregational Church, Toronto.

CONTENTS.—Chapter 1. A Gift of One Hundred and Ninety-Two Million Acres of Land. 2. The Return of the Jews to Palestine. 3. Folks that won't be Somebody. 4. The Four Prophecies of Egypt. 5. The Stone Kingdom and Dynamite; and the Orange Bill. 6. "144!" 7. "666!" 8. The Transit of Venus. 9. The Miracles of Antichrist; and the High Rock Image of Massachusetts, U.S. 10. The Man who could not sleep, and what came of it. 11. The Rainbow. 12. London Destroyed, and Jerusalem a Seaport. 13. Liberalism. 14. A Graft without a Stock. 15. Mouldy Bread and an Oath. 16. A Tombstone Inscription. 17. Dog Lappers. 18. How to get Rich.

Just Published, Crown 8vo., Cloth, price 3s. 6d.

BRITAIN IN HISTORY, ANCIENT AND MODERN;

Or, Proofs Linking Israel with Britain Throughout the Ages.

By Mrs. G. A. ROGERS,

Author of "The Coronation Stone," etc., etc.

"The Book possesses a national interest, and ought to be widely read."—The Fireside News.

"The most useful addition to Identity literature that has been made for a long time past."

Israel's Hope and Destiny.

"Well worthy of perusal for the rare and curious information conveyed."—Christian Age.

"This remarkable volume. . . We welcome this addition to the literature of Israel."—Banner of Israel.

"Interesting and suggestive."—English Churchman.

THE CORONATION STONE;

And England's Interest in It

4th Thousand, Crown 8vo., Cloth, price 1s. 6d.

"A reverent and graceful little book."—Life and Work.

"An excellent account of the history and wanderings of the Stone. . . will be read and re-read."

Banner of Israel.

LONDON: J. NISBET & Co., Berners Street, R. BANKS & SON, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, and to be had of all Booksellers.

WORKS BY PASTOR CHINIQUY.

Cloth, gilt lettered, 5s. Sent post free for P.O.

FIFTY YEARS IN THE CHURCH OF ROME.—Complete Revised Edition on good paper, well bound in Cloth, Gilt Lettered, nearly 600 pages. With New Portrait and Autograph of the Author. "No history like it since the time of Luther."—New York Witness. Be particular to order the Complete Edition published by Banks.

1s., post free 1s. 2d.

THE PRIEST, THE WOMAN, AND THE CONFESSIONAL.—"In its pages will be found ample evidence of the danger of the Confessional."—English Churchman.

Price 6d. in paper covers; on toned paper, in cloth boards, gilt lettered, 1s., post free for stamps.

PAPAL IDOLATRY. An Exposure of the Dogma of Transubstantiation and Mariolatry, to which is added "My Reasons Why I will Never Go Back to the Church of Rome." The Bible Christian Magazine says:—"Unanswerable! The most powerful argument against Transubstantiation, in the same space, that we have read.

R. BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

THE WATERS OF HERMON.

THE interesting circumstance of the re-production by modern science of these celebrated Waters of Antiquity, so famed in Biblical times, is one of the most important illustrations of the advance of the age. Differing from all other Waters they contain no mineral ingredients, so that the system, instead of being lowered by their use, is steadily built up, while the functions of life are restored to a healthy condition. And it is, therefore, with extreme gratification that this is now brought within the reach of the general public. The well-known curative properties of this famous medicine are promptly manifested in the following disorders:—Indigestion, Biliousness, Congestion of the Liver, Nausea and Vomiting, Disorders of the Stomach and Bowels and their consequences, Constipation, Piles, Flatulence, Repletion, Spasms, Discomfort or Pain after Meals, Pain Between the Shoulders, Pains in the Back and Loins, Cold in the Head, Coughs of various character, Difficulty of Breathing, Giddiness and Sick Headache, Effects of Alcohol, Overworked Brain, Affections of the Nerves, &c. Price 2s. 9d. per bottle, post free. THE WATERS OF HERMON DEPOT, 107, King Street, Hammersmith, London.

INVALUABLE REMEDY

Published by ROBERT BANKS & SON,

RACQUET COURT, FLEET STREET, E.C.

Postal Orders may be obtained at any Post Office in the United Kingdom for the following amounts: 1s., 1s. 6d., ½d. each; 2s., 2s. 6d., 3s., 3s. 6d., 4s., 4s. 6d., 5s., 7s. 6d., 10s., 10s. 6d., 1d. each: 15s., 20s., 1½d. each. They should be "crossed" City Bank, Ludgate Hill, E.C. Stamps received.

JEHOVAH TRIUMPHANT. The New and Complete Theology and Electric Light of the Bible, containing the History of British-Israel, Compiled from the Sacred Scriptures. Cloth gilt, price 10s. 6d., post free for Postal Order or Cheque.

THE GEOGRAPHY OF THE GATES. By PHILO-ISRAEL. With Map, and six full page, and one double-page, Illustrations, printed on plate paper. 208 pages, in handsome cloth, gilt. Price 3s. 6d.; post free.

THE WORD: THE WORLD: THE BRANCH. By J. LEYLAND FIELDEN, Esq. Price 12s., post free.

EPHRAIM-ENGLAND. The Nineteenth Century Revelation of the Fruits of History. By Rev. R. DOUGLAS, Vicar of Kidsgrove. Cloth gilt, lettered, 4s., gilt edges 5s., free by post.

FIFTY REASONS WHY THE ANGLO-SAXONS ARE ISRAELITES of the Lost Tribes of the House of Israel. By Rev. W. H. POOLE, D.D. Price 6d., post free 7d.

BIBLE LESSONS AND REFLECTIONS. By the late ROBERT GAIRDNER, of Kilmarnock, N.B. Price 2s. 6d., by post 2s. 9d.; cheap edition, limp cloth, 1s., by post, 1s. 2d.

THE ANGLO-ISRAEL POST-BAG; or, How Arthur Came to See It. By the Right Rev. BISHOP TITCOMB. Price 2s. 6d. in cloth gilt; paper cover, 1s. 6d., by post 1d. extra.

THE ISRAELITES FOUND IN THE ANGLO-SAXONS. The Ten Tribes supposed to have been Lost, traced from the land of their captivity to their occupation of the Isles of the Sea. By WILLIAM CARPENTER. Price 2s. 6d., by post 2s. 8d.

THE ANSWER TO THE EASTERN QUESTION, With Some Facts Concerning the Identity of the British With Israel. By the Author of "The New Old Story," enlarged. Price 3d.; for distribution, 50 copies, 11s., post free.

CARDINAL PROOFS THAT THE BRITISH Are the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel—the Abrahamic Covenant. By F. W. PHILLIPS. With two chapters by PHILO-ISRAEL. Price 6d., post free 7d.

THE NEW OLD STORY. By "A E I." Price 6d., post free; in cloth, 1s., post free.

THE BIBLE ATLAS. To Illustrate the Old and New Testaments. Price 1s.; post free 1s. 1d.

ANGLO-ISRAEL TRACTS. 8 pp. Royal 16mo., on toned paper. Adapted to enclose in letters, and for general distribution. No. 1—12. Half-penny each, 12 copies, post free, 6d. Specimen packet for 6 stamps.

HUMAN LIFE.—FIFTY YEARS' Record of Facts, Principles, and Discoveries (just published, complete) Relating to the Improvement and Preservation of Human Life on Earth. Origin and true treatment of diseases. A series of articles by DR. SAMUEL BIRLEY, M.D., Ph.D. Book form, 50 pages. SENT FREE to every applicant by the publishers, GORDON B. MURRAY & CO., 50, Theobald's-road, Holborn, E.C. Write to-day

PIANOFORTES, Harmoniums, American Organs. Why buy at shops inferior made instruments, and pay large profits, when you can buy direct from the Maker High-class Instruments, and save 50 per cent. by so doing? Full value allowed for old Instruments in exchange as part payment. Write for Price Lists and Testimonials to G. LINSTEAD, 2, Oseney Crescent, Camden Road, London. Established 1874.

Certain HARNESS' Cure.

ELECTROPATHIC BELT

FOR

PARALYSIS

J. FULLER, Jun., Esq., Whiteparish, Salisbury, Wilts, writes:—"Since wearing your Electropathic Belt I am decidedly better and stronger. I have more confidence in myself, and the pain in my back is completely gone. Your Belt is truly wonderful."

Guaranteed to generate a mild continuous current of Electricity, which speedily cures all Disorders of the Nerves, Stomach, Liver and Kidneys. Thousands of Testimonials. Pamphlet & Advice free on application to Mr. C. B. Harness, Consulting Electrician, the Medical Battery Co. Ltd.

Only Address,

52, OXFORD ST. LONDON, W. (Corner of Rathbone Place.)

Call to-day, if possible, or write at once

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C. F. W. PARRY (late GUEST & Co.), 29 PATERNOSTER-ROW WEDNESDAY, JUNE 27, 1888 [All rights reserved.

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."

(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India.)

"And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the Forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS of the EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. XII., No. 601. Entered at Stationers' Hall.] WEDNESDAY, JULY 4, 1888. [DOUBLE NUMBER, TWOPENCE.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
The South African Dominion and its Boundaries	261
England's Doom According to Foreign Prediction—A Review. By E. Reep	262
The "Great Step" Era in Israel's History. By W. H. Mason	264
An Attack on the Strongholds of Our Opponents. A Lecture by V. M. Cox. Part V.	266
Ephraim—"A Wild Ass Alone by Himself" (Hosea viii. 9). By John T. Gott	267
Extract from a Lecture on the Identification of a Lost Race. By W. Grieg	269
The Rev. Dr. Wild on the Return of Israel and Judah	270
"The Downfall of England"	271
The Echo and the BANNER OF ISRAEL	273
Anglo-Israel Free Distribution Fund	274
Israel's Scripture and Prayer Union	274
How to Spread the Identity	274
Review	275
Correspondence	276

THE SOUTH AFRICAN DOMINION AND ITS BOUNDARIES.

MEN are beginning to talk of the "luck of our race," and how marvellous the change is between the South African prospects of the British a few years ago and those which present themselves to us to-day. We fear our nation's supineness in looking to their own interests has been a marked feature in our history always, bringing into marked contrast God's good gifts to us at all times, and His interferences in our favour when the case seemed to be utterly hopeless and desperate. If we notice the state of things in Queen Elizabeth's days, just as the Spanish Armada was approaching our shores, it will be seen that our authorities were supine then to the last degree, but the public spirit of the nation did what there was to be done in the way of resistance to the enemy, God's winds and waves and storms really conquering and utterly destroying him. The Queen's ships were sent to fight the Spaniards on half rations and with the scantiest supplies of powder, but they truly described on the medals of the time that it was God who blew with His winds and the enemy was scattered, "Flavit Jehovah, et dissipati sunt." Over and over again our ships were forced to discontinue the fight for want of powder; but God came to our rescue and completed the disaster which the eight fire-ships off Calais made in Sidonia's proud ranks of war-vessels. So it is now in our time. We have been disgraced as a nation in South Africa. Our defeat at Majuba Hill set the seal of failure on our arms. The German annexations were humiliating, the trade of the Cape was rapidly falling away, its people were said to be disaffected to British rule, and a policy of abandonment of our Colonial responsibilities there was discussed at home. What is the state of things to-day? Let the following, from Imperial Federation of June 1, tell us. The interference in our nation's favour has come straight from the God of Israel. He has sent us the unexpected but decisive gift of gold, and diamond mines, the heritage of Joseph according to the prophecies (Deut. xxxiii. 13—17), and so completely turned the tables in our favour, against all our enemies. By the discovery of gold everywhere in South Africa He has sent a vast, powerful, Anglo-Saxon population to the spot, and so given us the numerical pre-eminence, the Israelitish gift of multitudinousness. In that way we also conquered New Zealand when swords and bullets had failed to give us the victory. So now, in South Africa, South of the Zambesi, we shall find that gold and diamonds, followed by armies of peaceful settlers of the chosen race, bringing good government, the Bible, and the Gospel in their train, will eventually conquer the whole of that mighty Continent for the Lord Jesus Christ and His Gospel, in a way that no victory in war could possibly have achieved. Our quotation is as follows:—

To-day the whole situation seems changed as if by magic. It is not merely that in the interval we have annexed new territory larger than the whole area of Great Britain and Ireland. That is an event in our history so much the matter of course as scarcely to call for any special notice. But the difficulties that it seemed so hopeless to encounter have mostly disappeared as we came nearer and faced them. The hostility of the Transvaal has calmed down, and even if it remained as intense as ever, it is likely ere long to be neutralised by the fact that in a year or two the Boers will be in the minority in their own country. It is scarcely to be feared that 100,000 Englishmen would allow half that number of Dutch farmers to make their country a base of operations against the English power in South Africa. As for the Cape itself, prosperity is fast returning to it. We are assured on the best authority that the Dutch population are as loyal to the British connection as their English fellow-Colonists; and the Colonial and the Home Government are actively co-operating in constructing and arming the fortifications of Cape Town. The expected complications with Germany have not arisen, while the road to the interior that seemed likely to be closed against us is now safely in our hands, and the native tribes as far north as the Zambesi are only too anxious to come under the protection of Great Britain.

The moral, as we have said, is that England is a wonderfully fortunate country. The discovery of the rich deposits of gold which has even now done much and may yet do for South Africa all that gold has done for California and for Victoria, is a thing that no one could have calculated upon. There is another moral which was drawn in statesmanlike language by Mr. Chamberlain a week or two since at the London Chamber of Commerce; a moral.

Digitized by Google

that was expressed long ago in a homely rhyme telling of the proper way to grasp a nettle. Says Mr. Chamberlain, "The policy of shirking has been a most conspicuous failure. . . . . There is only one alternative, that we should frankly accept our obligations and responsibilities; and if we are once for all to recognise our obligations in regard to this great Continent, we must do so in pursuance of an Imperial policy." The Cape has been called the half-way house to India. It is a half-way house, not only in a geographical but in a political sense. Instead of communities of purely British blood, as in Australia, or even of purely European blood, as in Canada, we have Europeans living among natives who, even in the Orange Free State, where they are least numerous, outnumber the whites, and who on the whole outnumber them sevenfold. Side by side we have, therefore, all forms of government, from the self-governing Cape Colony, and Natal with its representative institutions, down to the paternal despotism of British Bechuanaland. Besides these, there are the Free State and the Transvaal, which, though not nominally in the position of Scindia and the Nizam, can yet not shake themselves free from the overshadowing influence of England. In this state of affairs our duty is obvious; we must recognise our obligations as an Imperial Power, and we must administer the affairs of the whole Dominion of South Africa "in pursuance of an Imperial policy and not of a Colonial policy, if that in any respect differs from ours." Once we have definitely accepted the position that for better for worse we have got to rule over Africa south of the Zambesi, and that it is impossible for us to wash our hands of responsibility and hand over the control of some three millions of natives, in a country as large as Europe, to the few hundred thousand Europeans of the Cape Colony, the task will not be too great for the nation that maintains the pax Britannica in India. But one of our first actions, we fear, will be once more to enlarge our borders, and frankly to consent to take the whole of Khame's territories under our protection. It would be well to let it be publicly known that henceforward in South Africa one stitch will be taken in time, and not nine, or ninety-nine, when it is all but too late.

So far Imperial Federation, a publication all Anglo-Israelites should order and read, the cost only being four shillings a year, post free for the annual subscriber (30, Charles Street, Berkeley Square, London, W.)

The problem which is being worked out by our God in His own way in South Africa is being repeated by different methods in Central Africa, East and West Africa, and Egypt. Everywhere British supremacy, in some way or other, is being secured for the House of Israel. We have but to watch and see how the Lord will bring it all to pass, since come it will finally, according to the promises and prophecies.

The boundaries of Israel's South African Empire are already being marked out by men. The sea will be its Eastern, Southern, and Western limits. To the North the Zambesi river and its Southern affluents will be its confines. It will thus include the coasts and ends of the African earth; and it will command the most temperate and richest portion of the South African continent, accessible by sea to Israel's navies from all sides. Good government and God's blessing will complete the rest, and make ours the "head and not the tail," the paramount Power in Africa as we are in India, Australasia, North America and North Borneo. To God be all the praise!

THE CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—A small debt of £6,630 clogs the operations of the Church Missionary Society, and retards its usefulness. We desire to do what we can to clear off the incumbrance, and shall be glad to undertake to collect £20 to meet the deficit as the humble contribution of the readers of the BANNER OF ISRAEL. We shall be prepared to receive any donations our friends may entrust to us for the good cause, and to hand the £20 when realised to the Church Missionary Society secretaries in Bristol, in proof of the fact that Anglo-Israelites are the best friends of missions to the heathen, ever willing to help them with their contributions and their prayers. The names of donors will be advertised in the BANNER as before.

THE Metropolitan Hospital Sunday collection promises to exceed last year's total. The amounts paid in already exceed £32,000.

ENGLAND'S DOOM ACCORDING TO FOREIGN PREDICTION—A REVIEW.

BY E. REEP.

A TEMPEST of war is in the air. Continental nations are restless and uneasy as they discern the coming storm looming nearer and nearer upon them.

England too scents mischief abroad, but preserves a calm attitude, even though jealousy of her great position as a dominant Power is known to be lurking in many quarters.

Russia and France are obviously anxious for a prey; the former being credited with a hankering after Constantinople, the latter with a hostile desire to revenge herself on a near neighbour.

For the moment these two Powers are unable to lay real cities waste, and so they amuse themselves by fighting an imaginary war with England, the story of which is told in two small volumes published recently, for the purpose it is said of inspiring a hopeful spirit in connection with future attempts to demolish English supremacy.

As England is at all times profoundly interested in Russian aspirations, the volume announcing that Britannia no longer rules the waves may first be subjected to criticism.*

In the spring of 18—, a cruiser, named "Russia's Hope," receives orders to get ready for sea. Her destination is a mystery to all on board. At length information comes that war has been declared with England. As luck would have it, the spring was early, and all the Baltic fleet was stationed in good time along the Finnish fjords.

When the Russian war vessels received their instructions, the "Russia's Hope" had her vocation assigned to her, and without delay is soon carrying out her mission by intercepting a British steamer, which vessel is captured after the first shot and appropriated as a lawful prize.

Thus within twenty-four hours of war breaking out, a severe loss is inflicted upon British subjects; but what was still more satisfactory to the "Russia's Hope" crew, was the conviction that probably upon every ocean British vessels were in the same way being summarily dealt with by Russian cruisers.

Another twenty-four hours sees England further humiliated by the capture of more British steamers, one a splendid vessel freighted by the British Government being changed into an awful weapon against her owners, the prize becoming as apt, under the name of the "Little Son," in capturing of ships and precious cargoes as the "Russia's Hope" herself.

Alas for poor England! Almost every hour of every day records the destruction of her ironclads, her gunboats, her merchant ships, all worth millions of roubles to the needy Russians.

The easy way in which these English vessels fall victim to the foe is something quite new in the annals of history. The British seaman is no longer an adversary to be dreaded, but is set up as a sort of nine-pin to be bowled over by his Russian antagonist, who does not forget to offer hearty and earnest thanks to a merciful Creator for this wonderful effacement of the English Tar, which it is edifying to know was the cause of great joy and astonishment to the sharks, unhappily ignorant of the obligation they were under to the benevolent Russians for having provided them so sumptuous a feast.

While the "Russia's Hope" is making short work of the enemy's fleet, the "Little Son," already mentioned, is not idle, indeed, her career of devastation is one which the future historian of this war will have to chronicle as a miraculous succession of victories, even our Indian Empire, so long coveted by Russia, not escaping conquest.

Those who have attributed to Russia nothing but the highest motives in her ambition to conquer Asiatic races, must now learn that in the war of 18—, Bombay was the scene of the

* "The Russia's Hope," translated by C. F. Cooke.

Digitized by Google

most awful conflagration ever beheld by the eye of man. The heavens seemed ablaze, lighted up by the vast sea of burning naptha with which the harbour had been flooded by the wily Russians.

No wonder that shouts and discordant sounds were heard by the "Little Son," as she retreated to a respectful and safe distance from the burning city, there to watch with bated breath the merciless flames ruthlessly consuming the colossal wealth of an opulent community.

So many successful exploits on the rolling deep could but end in the naval supremacy of Russia. No longer will Britannia rule the waves; no longer will the English flag float in all waters; no longer will it be possible for our statesmen to say thus:—"Go where you will in Europe, in Asia, in North America, in South America, in Africa, and in the islands of the trackless sea, the flag of England asserts the dominion of the English name." In the future all this will be changed, at least so this small volume would have us believe. Englishmen, however, will feel no dismay in looking forward to imperious Russia posing as a universal world-power; they know, or are beginning to know, that they have not acquired absolute sway over the greater part of the earth's surface by a mere concurrence of accidental causes, and so can afford to let Russia amuse herself with visions of what will never be, for the reason that to England (Israel as she should be called) has been given by Divine selection the custody of the political and religious liberties of the world.

The author of the preface of this book doubts whether Englishmen are aware of how fervently the great nation, to which they are proud to belong, is envied and detested by Russia, and it is with a view to opening the eyes of Englishmen that the translator offers his translation of "The Russia's Hope" to the British public.

"DOWN WITH ENGLAND."

The above is the appalling title of the booklet next under review. It is translated from the French, and is to be bought for the moderate sum of one shilling. As the book has been written to fill a gap in educational literature, and is also to be regarded as a French prophecy, we scan its pages with curiosity. The first piece of information that strikes us is, that England is the enemy of France. She has despoiled France of her colonies, she has done her best to prejudice Italy against her, she has fooled her in China, she made a tool of her in the Crimea, and has, in various ways, offered every affront possible to her French neighbour; but there is one insult that has wounded above all others, and that grievance is that John Bull has taken under his protection—Egypt.

Many of these grievances, it is admitted, have arisen from the unavoidable accidents incident to a policy of which the whole world is the theatre.

It is in this admission that we can descry what it is that vexes Frenchmen when their reflections turn upon England and the English people. It is the ubiquity of England that prompts their upbraidings. Frenchmen cannot endure to see England wielding a sovereignty surpassing anything the world has before seen; nor can Englishmen be surprised at this: the British Empire is a puzzle to themselves, and though the problem has been solved, it is only the few who have found the key in the plea that we are the descendants of the House of Israel, which was destined, from the time of Abraham, to have the uttermost parts of the earth for a possession. And how, asks the Frenchman, is this wonderful Empire to be maintained? To the Frenchman it is incredible that the mistress of 310 millions of subjects should have no more than 200,000 regular troops to conquer the world with. Only Scripture can clear up this mystery, wherein we read that God promised to scatter Israel's enemies in such a way that all the nations of the earth should see that they were a people called by the name of the Lord, whereby they should be afraid of them, and be subjected to them. No stronger claim can England put forward to identify herself with the House of Israel, than her participation in this covenant of help in the dispersion of enemies.

History furnishes us with many instances of this miraculous intervention. In the reign of Henry III. (1217), the French fleet attempted an invasion of our island. As soon as action begun, we are told, the English made a terrible slaughter, despite the lime-dust thrown into their eyes by their opponents, who, instead of being blinded by it, as the French intended they should be, were, on the contrary, greatly helped by the wind catching it, and completely blinding the invaders. This turn of the wind enabled the English to secure the whole French fleet, only a few vessels escaping; notwithstanding, too, that the French were greatly superior in numbers (four times as many, it is said), with about double the number of ships. Many similar victories might be recorded, were it necessary, to convince Englishmen of an axiom, well-known to our foreign contemporaries, that one English soldier, or sailor, is equal to three of any other nationality; an axiom as true of Israel to-day as it was in the time of Moses, when the Israelities were told, "an hundred of you shall put ten thousand to flight, and your enemies shall fall before you by the sword" (Lev. xxvi. 8).

A Frenchman, we fear, would not accept this elucidation of England's advantage over her enemies: he can only regard her as a thief. She has stolen Gibraltar, Jamaica, and Trinidad from the Spaniards; Egypt from the Egyptians; Cyprus from Turkey; the Cape from the Dutch; India from the Hindoos; Malacca from the Portuguese; Malta, Mauritius, Quebec, and many colonies besides from the French. Like an immense octopus, she has feelers which embrace the globe, and drain it for the benefit of a wretchedly small head, situated thousands of miles from its members.

England would need to tremble at these bitter accusations, had she not the word of God to justify her in the sight of nations. It is enough for us that it has been said, "He shall subdue the people under us (Israel), and the nations under our feet. He shall choose our inheritance for us." And so, because God chooses for us, we dare not go against Him; it therefore comes about that England offers the world the grand sight she does; so grand, says our author, that it approaches nearly to the ridiculous.

The scheme of colonial federation is by no means approved of; it is nothing less, says the Frenchman, than an attempt to coerce the whole world. This arrogance of the Englishman, however, is doomed, as will be seen as we go on to recount the French declaration of war, followed by the embarkation of troops, the start for England, the invasion of our shores, the occupation of London.

In this imaginary war, no Channel Tunnel was needed to effect an easy invasion. Hastings was unfortified, and after a single broadside of melinite shell, disappeared like a piece of fairy scenery. We should have thought the "elegant houses," fringing the shore, would have withstood a broadside or two; but no, neither the houses nor the inhabitants had any strength in them, and without waiting to ascertain what their danger was, the people gladly welcomed the invaders, by hoisting a white flag. Thus did the French take (or would like to take) possession of English soil.

The French having obtained a safe and easy landing, the British lion forgets all national traditions, and lets the invaders do very much as they please. Tunbridge Wells is taken without the firing of a shot; London is occupied without the smallest resistance, for everywhere incapacity and confusion reigned.

Not able to bear the presence of Frenchmen on English territory, our Queen abdicates, added to which the Prince of Wales is driven out of his wits; finally, the face of Europe is changed, or rather, to be more correct, the whole world. French aspirations are satisfied; they have gained restitution, changed the map of Christendom, whereby, we are told, France will, at the end of the 19th, as she did at the end of the 18th century, open to the world a new era of life.

Digitized by Google

This last is crushing news to a maritime people, with a commerce which, it is said, stretches its arms around the world.

Our author has something to say of our naval fleet, but like our soldiers and volunteers, it quickly collapsed after a few French broadsides.

In conclusion, it would be a real kindness to point out to any believers in the prophecy of this very entertaining volume, the desirability of digesting a little history before placing implicit faith in its fulfilment. Whatever France may long for, England cannot change her destiny, any more than the stars their course; for the good reason that the Lord Jehovah is her everlasting strength, and hath predestinated her to carry to all nations the good tidings of salvation by Jesus Christ.who, as the Mediator of the new covenant, hath restored the House of Israel to the favour of the Lord their God.

"Abinger," Sylvan-road, Upper Norwood, May 2nd, 1888.

THE "GREAT STEP" ERA IN ISRAEL'S HISTORY.

By W. H. Mason.

This paper will take it for granted that the passage system of the Great Pyramid is prophetically historical. Also it will take it for granted that, as in the written Word, so in the measured record, it is Israel's history which is dealt with. As the one, properly read, gives no ground for supposing the substitution of any other people, so the prophetic outline in the great Bible in stone is evidently that of Israel and of Israel only. In either record other peoples are only incidents in the grand record of God's only chosen race. A place there is for the turning off and temporary estrangement of a portion of the race, which having shared the general upward and onward advance till the time of the Messiah, then refuses to tread longer the ever-rising national pathway and goes off at that level of national attainment to continue its separate course through the world, midway between the ever-downward course of the God-hating world, and the ever-upward course of the chosen nation—ever-upward until the era of the Great Step whose indications are to be considered. During this consideration it will be seen why the upward aspect ceases and the future course thenceforward is a level one. In no part of the passage system, however, is any provision made for, or any indication given of, the substitution of another nation: the one started upon the upward course Godward is the one which alone continues to occupy the ever-ascending path. Indication is given of the fulfilment of the prophet's word, "Yet will I gather others to Him besides those that are gathered unto Him;" but none of substitution, none of a "Gentile interregnum." In the history of the people placed upon and pursuing this upward path must appear several most important eras. While dealing chiefly with one, these others must be glanced at as supplying in some measure a key or index to this one.

If these passages be prophetic, will they indicate the material or the spiritual history of the people concerned? The spiritual, certainly, though this may be accompanied by indications of the material history, prosperous or otherwise, even as we find in the written Word.

If in this record any particular events have prominent notice or indication given, will it not certainly be the most really important events; important in the eyes of the Great Recorder, and not merely what man would think the greatest? What then would appear the most important eras in the history of the people which Jehovah chose to be His own peculiar—His very own—people for ever? First, surely, would come the era of their choice, when as a nation, they were separated from the rest of mankind, rushing down the ever-declining pathway of departure from God, set apart for God and placed upon the upward path of return to Him. This great event is indicated of course by the beginning of the "ascending passage." The next great era in the upward course is the advent of their Messiah and Redeemer, through whom alone they could return to God. This is represented by the entrance of the Grand Gallery, immediately within which appears the sign of "His precious death and burial, and of His glorious resurrection"—He "died for our sins and rose again for our justification," and "through Him we have access to God." The Great Step indicates the next great era; then the "Ante-Chamber," indicative of Israel's rest in the restored inheritance; and lastly, the glorious "King's Chamber," typical of the millennial reign of Israel's great and glorious Redeemer and King.

Now let us look more particularly at the Great Step Era. To attain to a right appreciation of this era, it is necessary to look back upon Israel's history and note the chief points of their relations with God. Take two—the purpose of their choice; and, their rejection of God for idols.

The purpose of their choice. This is sufficiently indicated in God's first recorded word to Abraham—"In thee and in thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed." This cannot possibly refer only to the person and work of Christ. Only by faith in Him can any receive the benefits of His precious death. But "how shall they believe in Him of whom they have not heard, and how shall they hear without a preacher?" Not only the cross, but the messengers of the cross, were necessary to the realisation of the blessing promised through Abraham and his seed, and so, while the seed, which is Christ, should be the sole procuring cause and channel of blessing; the seed of Abraham should be the messengers and channels of His grace to all the nations—all the families of the earth. Hence we find the Lord saying of Israel, in Isaiah, "This people have I formed for Myself, they shall show forth My praise;" and again, "Israel shall blossom and bud and fill the face of the world with fruit;" and again in Micah, "The remnant of Jacob shall be in the midst of many peoples as a dew from the Lord, as showers upon the grass, which tarrieth not for man, nor waiteth for the sons of men." Hence it is evident that God's purpose in choosing Israel was to use them as fellow-workers with Himself in blessing the world through the Gospel of Christ. This blessing, too, was not simply sent and intended for individuals, but for nations, and contemplated eventually and was intended to secure the reconciling of the world to God and the establishment of the kingdom of Christ upon and over the world. Hence we read in Daniel—"The kingdom and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven was given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey Him." Then—after what interval we know not—"Then cometh the end, when He shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father." Israel then was chosen of God first to prepare for the incarnation and sacrifice of Christ, and then to prepare the world for His second coming and millennial reign. This was the purpose of their choice.

But they rejected God their Saviour and chose to themselves idols of their own making, and served and worshipped them. Hence the continual contention between Jehovah and Israel was on this subject of idolatry. This was continued even to the period of Israel's exile in Assyria. The nation's heart was still set upon its idols, and God sent them this message by the hand of Ezekiel, "As I live, saith the Lord, this shall not be at all that ye say—we will be as the nations to serve wood and stone. As I live, saith the Lord God, surely with a mighty hand and with outstretched arm, with fury poured out, will I rule over you, and I will bring you out of the countries and gather you out of the peoples, and will bring you into the wilderness of the peoples, and there will I plead with you face to face—and I will bring you under the bond of the covenant." What covenant? Surely that, and only that, "new covenant" which God promised by the mouth of Jeremiah to make with the House of Israel (Jer. xxxi. 33), and which St. Paul re-echoes in Heb. viii. 10,—both prophet and apostle evidently placing Israel before Judah in the reception of this new covenant. Thus should Israel be led to cast away her idols and yield herself to God, who should then make her the messenger of His grace to all the nations, all the families of the earth, through the Gospel. This, then, is the next great era in Israel's history. "Ephraim shall say, What have I any more to do with idols; I have heard Him and observed Him." Then follows the promise, "From Me is thy fruit found," Israel shall now blossom and bud, and fill the face of the world with fruit.

Digitized by Google

When were these things realised? The promise by Ezekiel was fulfilled in the gathering of the Tribes into these islands and in their conversion to Christianity. Words could not possibly better describe these events than do those few sentences of the prophet, which depict, as vividly as briefly, the history of our people for several hundred years before and after their arrival in these isles of the west. Having then been brought into the bond of the covenant, they had to be confirmed and trained therein to fit them for their messenger service, and to lead them to its adoption and practice. This occupied more centuries until the period of the Great Step, when truly Israel took that great step, in their spiritual course, which brought them into the highest possible position for man or nation to attain on earth, viz., that of fellow-worker with God in the great work of the world's salvation and restoration to God. Let us now glance at our history and see if these things are so, gratefully remembering the while the American brother who first was used to note and publish the fact. In the year 1813 (the period of the foot of the Great Step), after years of unsuccessful effort, the great Wilberforce and his friends were enabled to carry through Parliament a Bill for—first, the suppression of the British connection with the idolatrous systems of India, a connection long maintained by the East India Company and as long mourned by true Christians at home—and second, the admission into India of the Christian Missionary, hitherto as determinately kept out by the Company, as idolatry was cordially supported—both from mercenary motives. Let us note carefully these two things—the close of the idolatrous connection, and—the opening of the door of India to the Christian Missionary. Note also that this was done by the nation through its Parliament. It was the voice of the nation expressed through public meetings and petitions, which induced the legislature to take these important steps and thus constitute this nation—as a nation—a missionary people, by whose command the wide lands of heathen India were thrown open to the feet of the messengers of the covenant—the Gospel! These soon took advantage of the opening, and thenceforward our Missionary work has gone on and prospered. The years immediately following 1813, were the most distinguished in our history for Missionary enterprise. Many Missionary Societies were then formed, and the broad foundations were laid for our present world-wide experience of Israel's glorious duty and privilege as contained in the promise, "In thee and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed," "The remnant of Jacob shall be in the midst of many peoples as a dew from the Lord." Thus Ephraim finally—as a nation—put away idolatry, and thus she essayed to begin her part in the fulfilment of the covenant of blessing to the nations! Was not this a great step? Was it not the greatest step Godward she ever took? Was it not then fitly marked in the prophetic record by this "Great Step" which, landing her at the greatest elevation possible to the nation, leads her thenceforward on that level towards her promised "rest," aye, and still onwards—at the same level—to the glorious millennial reign of her Great King and Saviour, Jehovah-Jesus?

We must, however, look a little more closely at our history at this time to get an adequate idea of the true greatness of this era, so entirely ignored by the world. In 1813, our nation may be truly said to have sprung into new life—almost to have been born again—so great is the change between the previous and the after periods. In 1813, Jacob was still a "remnant." The blossoming and budding had still to take place before he should fill the face of the world with fruit. We were then a people few in number, about eight to ten millions, and this after a history of eighteen hundred years: now we are fourfold our then numbers, after sending away millions to form those magnificent "daughter nations" whose very localities were then, many of them, unknown. Then our colonial system was in its very infancy: now look round the world and see our colonies and dependencies in every clime. Then our trade and shipping reached not a tithe of their present dimensions. Steam, with all its wondrous present results, was then only just born, while the telegraph and the telephone were utterly undreamed of. Think of the revolution these things have made in the world, all since that great epoch. Compare the literature of to-day with that of 1813 and all the long previous centuries! It is contrast, not comparison. Look at the condition of our people and all their surroundings so immensely changed for the better. Look at our position among the nations. In 1813, we were still involved in that long and terrible struggle with the first Napoleon, which drained our nation so fearfully of its manhood and its wealth. In 1814, the year when the "Act" was passed to which we refer as the turning-point in our history, in that year we sent Napoleon to Elba, and finally, in 1815, placed him in safe custody in St. Helena, thus restoring peace to long distracted Europe and attaining ourselves to that high position we have since held as Queen among the nations and mistress of the seas. The "nation and company of nations" has begun and almost accomplished its formation, and Manasseh has been constituted a nation and has become a "Great People"—our brother Jonathan—the United States.

Not the least precious of the many precious gifts of Jehovah to His people at the auspicious era under notice was that "tender one," who, born and cradled and nurtured in poverty and seclusion, was placed in gentle youth upon the throne of these realms, fit heir and representative of her who was chosen by Israel's God to bring over the Royal Sceptre and Crown of David to Israel in the Isles. Under the gracious sway of this gentle heir of David, Israel has risen to such a height of power, wealth, extent and beneficent influence as never empire before experienced since empires were, blessing many nations and peoples by her missionary and philanthrophic deeds, and evidencing continually to all beholders that this is truly "the people whom the Lord hath blessed." Of blessing abroad it is enough here to mention India, whose many many millions of many erewhile conflicting races, must for ever bless the day when Jehovah placed them under British-Israel's rule. Of blessedness at home let one example suffice, and let the reader ponder well its immense significance. It is stated in that most reliable authority, the Sheffield Daily Telegraph, that since the time of Henry VIII., nine Bishoprics have been created in England. Every one of these nine Bishoprics has been erected during the lifetime of our present beloved Queen, all but one during her reign, and note, therefore, all since Israel put away idolatry and took up her God-assigned work of Gospel-blessing to the nations in that momentous and ever-to-be-remembered year 1813, so fitly indicated and commemorated by the Great Step in the grand prophetic and historic gallery of the Great Pyramid; that glorious witness to the Lord in the land of Egypt, now providentially beginning in its due time to give what shall yet prove its overwhelming and all-convincing evidence of the Eternal Being, wisdom and truth of the Great Jehovah, the God of Israel, our glorious Creator, Redeemer, and King.

THE Annual Report of the Metropolitan Anglo-Israel Association will be ready for issue the second week in July. It will contain the Report of the Meeting held at Exeter Hall, Strand. The Secretary of the Association will forward a copy on receipt of 1d. stamp, and name and address.

Digitized by Google

AN ATTACK ON THE STRONGHOLDS OF OUR OPPONENTS.

A Lecture by V. M. Cox.

(Concluded from page 259.)

PART V.

Another undesigned confirmation was contributed by a leading Liberal statesman, Lord Rosebery, ever one of the foremost advocates of the grand scheme of Imperial Federation. His speech at the annual dinner of the League which has been formed for the furtherance of this scheme is worthy of note by Identity believers, and as reported by the Christian World of March 29, 1888, is full of suggestiveness in regard to our Anglo-Israel contention. I have preserved the account in question, and would like to introduce it to your notice, since it contains a host of points worth remarking.

The Christian World wrote as follows:—

OUR COLONIAL EMPIRE.

In describing the aims of the Imperial Federation League, at its annual meeting, Lord Rosebery said that formerly the Empire lay listless all over the world, politically passive; but now, since the League was formed, they had seen a conference of representatives from all parts of the Empire meeting in London, with all the weight and authority of an Imperial Council; they had seen a military contingent sent from Australia to swell the Imperial army in Africa, and a common fleet established for the defence of Australasia. There were no less than three Australians sitting for British constituencies in the House of Commons. The Colonial Office, which used to vacillate between ignorant dictation and ignorant apathy, is now an organization receiving freely all the guidance the colonies can give, and in which the Agents-General have a recognised and influential position. At the dinner in the evening, Lord Rosebery again spoke at some length. The British Empire, he said, was not formed on any fixed rules, like the Roman Empire, which was co-extensive with civilisation; but it had been rather the result of a drifting of a masterful race into the waste places of the world. Comparing our method of Colonisation to a game of chess, his Lordship remarked that at first we began with castles, our great object being to obtain fortresses like Malta, Gibraltar, Corfu, and Quebec. Then there came what might be called colonising by bishops and knights. But, after all these systems of colonisation had been exhausted, there always remained the Queen. The future of our Empire rested, however, mainly with the pawns. It was impossible to tell where they would be moved. They had no notion where they would move themselves. It might be a gold mine, or a fertile tract, which was the great attraction, but where the pawns went the Empire went. The British Empire rested on character, and character alone; because if we were to send emigrants who were like coolies they would carry no Empire—they would leave no permanent trace on the globe.

So far the Earl of Rosebery. Note that he speaks of "the drifting of a masterful race into the waste places of the world." But this is simply a rendering into more familiar English of the scriptural declaration that the destiny of Israel is "to inherit the desolate heritages," and to cause "the wilderness and the solitary place" to be glad, and "the desert" to rejoice and blossom as the rose. "A masterful race?" Surely we cannot doubt that Israel would be accurately described in such language, since the Word of God announces as His purpose, "I will make thee the head and not the tail, above only, and not beneath;" and again, "the nations shall see, and be confounded at their might, they shall lay their hand upon their mouth, and their ears shall be deaf, and what language more forcibly suggests "a masterful race" than that which appears, week by week, on the Banner's title page:—

"And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a Lion among the beasts of the forest, as a Young Lion among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver." —Micah v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the Horns of Unicorns: with them he shall push the people together to the ends of the earth."—Deut. xxxiii. 17.

But his lordship's comparison of our method of colonization to a chess-board is likewise fertile in suggestions. "We began," he says, "with castles, our great object being to secure fortresses like Malta, Gibraltar, Corfu, and Quebec." But we recognize these as Israel's Gates, vouchsafed to her in fulfilment of the promise to Abraham (Gen. xxii. 17).

A magnificent chain they form, binding all Israel's mighty possessions together in one, and securing to her in perpetuity the empire of the sea, and all the unbounded power and the influence that comes therewith. "Then," continues Lord Rosebery, "there is the colonizing by bishops and knights," which is another way of saying that wherever our flag waves we send our Christian teachers and the brave soldiers of the Cross, who, more heroic than the knights of mediæval chivalry, have in many cases laid down their lives for the faith; these have borne the message of salvation to the dark places of the earth, and, as we have seen, while seeking to plant the religion of Jesus Christ, have planted, undesignedly, the love of England too, and will reap a glorious and double harvest. But once more Lord Rosebery adds, "After all these systems of colonization have been exhausted, there always remains the Queen." Here he recognizes the truth that this nation may rejoice in the possession of a stable and permanent monarchy. Unlike our unhappy neighbour, France, torn by faction within, armed to the very teeth against foes from without, yet ever insecure, we are safe from foreign foes, at peace within our own borders, and we have a sovereign whose name we not only revere, but love, and whose throne, being established in righteousness, is secured against possible overthrow, by the divine oath and promise that a scion of David's royal line shall never be wanting to reign over the House of Israel perpetually.

Finally, the Earl concludes, "there are the pawns;" the masses of the Anglo-Saxon race. They know not themselves where they will next be moved, but where they go, the Empire will go too. But why is this a characteristic of one special race and of none other? The Germans migrate by hundreds to the United States, the Chinese to Australia. But they do not take with them the German or the Chinese Empire. No, they are absorbed by the Anglo-Saxon race, already there in possession, which race has the unique power of assimilating every alien race, and of being absorbed by none. But why? No answer can be found except that of Our Identity. Israel is appointed to world-wide dominion. Accordingly, her destiny is accomplishing itself, brought to pass by divine overruling, which her own folly and blindness are powerless to defeat. Her people are blind indeed; blind to their noble origin, blind to their highest interests; but it is out of their power to mar the magnificent future marked out for them by their covenant-keeping God. "I will bring the blind," says He, "by a way they know not, and by paths they have not known. I will make darkness light before them, and crooked things straight; these things will I do unto them, and will not forsake them."

There is great need for the recognition of our truth now; greater need, perhaps, than ever before, because of the unrest and unbelief rampant in the religious world of to-day. New theories and creeds, together with re-statements of old creeds, are being daily presented to our notice, and all the religious journalism of the day is concerned in either defending or denouncing the new schools of thought. Grave doubts are being cast on the divine origin of the Bible, on the authenticity of some of its books, on the authorship and chronology of others. In this fierce war of words Anglo-Israelites have borne no part, and have pretty nearly slipped out of notice. Now and then a stray sneer is cast to them, as when the Christian World of December 22nd, 1887, casually informs its readers that "there are educated people who believe we are the descendants of the Lost Ten Tribes," and then proceeds to speak of certain writers who teach Our Identity certainly, but who have propounded therewith various extraordinary theories for which we are not responsible, and with which we do not sympathise. But for the most part we go quietly on our way and receive little attention from theological polemics. And yet we hold the knowledge of a fact which, once duly recognized, will for ever put an end to all speculation as regards the inspiration of Holy Scripture. What a pity that Mr. Spurgeon, who writes so eloquently about the evils of "modern thought," should scornfully cast away such a powerful argument as Our Identity would supply, to prove the Bible true! God's covenant faithfulness will be for ever vindicated in the day of Ephraim-Israel's manifestation! To hasten this day, we are working under the surface truly, yet not in vain. We are assured of that. The coral insects are insignificant creatures; and they toil for ages unseen beneath the surface of the waters, but at length fair islands rise out of the ocean, and the patient labour of centuries becomes manifest to all. Thus shall it be with our work:—

Digitized by Google

"Never yet
Share of truth was vainly set,
In the world's wide fallow.'

And because we are Israel we may look out fearlessly into the labyrinth of political complications now opening to our view. The aged Emperor of Germany has passed away. The life of his heroic son and successor hangs, humanly speaking, on a thread. Should that feeble thread be snapped, men scarcely dare to think what may shortly ensue.* But Israel is safeguarded. She is not without her home troubles, but God will make these work together for her national good. Her colonial children are loyal and true, and one and all have the welfare of the mother country closely at heart. But her only real security lies in the fact that being Israel, the honour of her Redeemer God is pledged to save her from the disasters that must ultimately engulf the nations not included under the divine covenant. Spoken of Israel are the words:—"The eternal God is thy refuge, and underneath are the everlasting arms." Be it ours to accept the precious message of encouragement and consolation, and to respond with holy confidence, "Therefore will we not fear, though the earth be removed, and though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea, though the waters thereof roar and be troubled, though the mountains shake with the swelling thereof. For the Lord of Hosts is with us, the God of Jacob is our refuge" (Psalm xlvi.).

Israel may rest on her mighty Defender,
Nothing can hurt her, tho' legions assail,
Cohorts of angels are charged to attend her,
Fierce tho' her foes, they shall never prevail.
What tho' their fury rage?
Yet doth His Word engage,
Israel shall still dwell at peace and secure;
Strong is the Holy Arm,
Guarding her land from harm;
God her Protector, her safety is sure!

History's records remain to assure her,
How in the past He has fought on her side.
Promise and prophecy join to secure her,
Still He will fight for her, still be her guide.
Kept by His mighty hand,
Israel shall ever stand,
Tho' the earth reel, and the wild billows roar;
Israel! aloud rejoice,
Raise your exulting voice,
Praise ye Jehovah, your Lord, evermore!

"THE KING'S DAUGHTERS."—Mrs. Margaret Bottume, who has been for some time labouring among the rich women in New York, getting them interested in religious work, and the organisation of the band of "The King's Daughters," reports that the Society now numbers 20,000 in the country.

* Since the above was penned the fear here expressed has become realised. The heroic and greatly beloved Emperor Frederick has breathed his last, and his son, the Emperor William II., now sits on the throne of the German Empire.

EPHRAIM—"A WILD ASS ALONE BY HIMSELF." (HOS. VIII. 9).

By JOHN T. GOTT.

THE book of the prophet Hosea covers a period of sixty years. His career, as a prophet, is probably one of the longest; and his name, which means salvation, is very significant. He was a prophet of the Ten Tribes, and although very little is known about him, personally, we may gather from his prophecy that he was a very earnest man, and had an intensely patriotic spirit. He seems to have been a keen observer of human nature, and judging from the numerous similes he uses, a thorough naturalist. His style seems abrupt: so probably were his manners in the opinion of those who did not know him well. He was most unsparing in the terms he used in denouncing the sin and folly of the people he cared for so much. He tried mild terms and harsh ones, and the result was the same.

Ephraim, "a silly dove," is one of his mildest expressions, and we have already endeavoured to show how graphically true his simile is (page 98, vol. xii.). Now he uses a much stronger term, and says Ephraim is "a wild ass." An ass is an ass all the world over: an object of contempt and reproach; but under certain given conditions, he is really a very useful animal. He can be stubborn and stupid to a degree; he will patiently bear a heap of ill-usage, and yet, vicious as he often is, he can be drawn, led, and made tractable, and as a good, honest, old ass, can be trained to do an immense amount of downright hard work.

Ephraim—the wild ass—is here depicted as having kicked himself free from the traces of Assyrian bondage, and to be roaming about in the wilderness, sniffing and enjoying the fresh air of freedom for a time. Here note the hand of God in Ephraim's history. It is man that robs animals of their freedom. God gives it. He gave Ephraim, the wild ass, his freedom. The wild ass, roaming at large in the wilderness, has troubles and dangers to encounter, of which we have no conception. We know just as much about Ephraim, the wild ass, in his cast-off condition, until he was guided and led to the place appointed for him, the Isles of the North and West. Hosea says this wild ass was "alone by himself." Then he should not have been alone, but should have had a fellow. As Ephraim represents the House of Israel (the Ten Tribes) his fellow must be the House of Judah; and note again, that there is no reunion intimated while the wild ass is in his outcast condition.

In the early ages, no doubt, many devout men pondered well over these sayings. The prophet Hosea calls Ephraim a wild ass, and has no more to say about him. This leaves the subject in a very unsatisfactory state, for any child, hearing the story, would naturally want to know what became of that wild ass. And this leads us to infer that the prophet, with the welfare of his people truly at heart, expressed himself in such terms that it is highly probable he was often much misrepresented, and much misunderstood. It is left to the prophet Zechariah to place before our view the ass under another aspect, entirely new, yet quite natural. He predicted an event which received a very literal fulfilment. This event is well known to Christian men and women. We think we know all about it, and a passing thought seems enough. Here we all sadly err. The Biblical subjects which we think we know the best are really the subjects upon which we ought to concentrate all our thought, guided by the signs of the times, for they are the subjects about which we probably know the least. All our Saviour's utterances were prophetic, and He may be said to have illustrated the dark sayings of the prophets, by openly acting prophecy in the very sight of the unbelieving Jews.

No part of His history is more pregnant with meaning than the narrative of His last journey to Jerusalem. Two events demand our attention, and to those who believe in the prophetic character of Our Saviour's ministry there is more to be learned from the brief narrative than has hitherto been suspected. The first was the restoration of sight to Bartimeus, the blind beggar; the other was the call of Zaccheus. The Master was drawing nigh Jericho, when blind Bartimeus heard the commotion caused by the passing multitude of people. Notice his earnest enquiry: his importunate prayer, and the blessed result (Luke xviii.). Blind Bartimeus is typical of Ten-Tribed Israel, upon whom blindness in part hath happened, that will be miraculously removed, in a national sense, when those stirring times take place, which most immediately precede His Second Advent. Concerning those times, is it not predicted of the "blind people," "I will yet for this be enquired of by the House of Israel to do it for them"? (Ezek. xxxvi. 37). And Zaccheus, little of stature; rich but despised; too worldly-minded to be moved by any ordinary event, is now roused to vigorous action out of sheer inquisitiveness. Running along a lane, before a crowd of people, and climbing up a tree, to gratify pure curiosity, cannot be considered dignified actions on the part of a rich man. He climbed the lowly sycamore, clambered along one of its sturdy branches, obtained a good position, and looked down with curious eyes on the Leader of that new creed he could not understand. The Leader "looked up," "saw him," called him by name, "Zaccheus, make haste, and come down: for to-day I must abide at thy house." And we read that he did make haste to come down (from his elevated standpoint of personal opinion. He descended to the level of the new creed), and not only welcomed, but entertained the Master joyfully. And what was the Master's comment? "This day is salvation come to this house." Blind Bartimeus is typical of the House of Israel. Zaccheus is typical of the House of Judah, whose entire conversion was sudden and complete. Stirring events of world-wide interest will suddenly strike the ears of the "blind people," who will immediately and anxiously begin to inquire what it means, and there will be those in the crowd who will be able to tell them, even as it was of old, for "the thing that hath been, it is that which shall be."

Digitized by Google

When the signs of the times bring about the restoration of sight to the blind people, and the manifestation of the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel in the British people, then will the Jews evince that eagerness (characterised in Scripture as running) which will end in their sudden and complete conversion. As with Zaccheus of old, so with the modern Jews. They must first hear of Jesus; succeeding events will cause considerable speculation; stirring times will arouse earnest enquiry, ending in the sudden and complete conversion of the Jews.* There are and ever have been many poor Jews, and many rich ones. The same fact exists to-day. Zaccheus was the influential type of his race, and we have existing to-day similar types, known the world over even as Zaccheus was well known in the vicinity of Jerusalem. That his conversion was complete, we may gather from his generosity: "The half of my goods I give to the poor," and from his renewed sense of justice: "If I have wrongfully exacted aught of any man, I restore fourfold." What a glorious end there was to a good day's work, in the testimony given by the Great Teacher: "This day is salvation come to this house."

The sycamore is a tree of low stature, but its trunk is massive, its branches strong and wide-spreading, and it is one easy to climb. Zaccheus thus had every privilege vouchsafed to him of seeing Jesus. Viewed prophetically, this tree reminds us of Ten-Tribed Israel, the vine, the "tree of low stature" (Ezek. xvii.). The vine was to grow to such proportions that it could be readily reached, and easily climbed, and under its shadow were to be found shelter and protection. This is a prophetical delineation of Jehovah's method of bringing the Jews to realise the truth of the Gospel of the Lord Jesus. This prophecy has been for some time past, and is now being, literally fulfilled in our midst. The despised and persecuted Jews, throughout the world, are seeking the shelter and protection afforded to them by the "tree of low stature." Zaccheus found on his hurried way only one tree adapted to his wants, easy of access, and he found on that tree a branch which enabled him to see, learn and know all he wanted. So the Jews find to-day, that they have only one available, safe place, in the wide world, to which they may flee for shelter and protection, and that place is Israel-Britain, the "tree of low stature," with its wide spreading branches (colonies) of world wide extent. When the new colony (Palestine) is annexed, the Jews, or House of Judah, will be seen making their way along that particular branch (in unbelief, like Zaccheus of old to see Jesus). This is the Divine method by which, unconsciously, the "two sticks" (Judah and Ephraim) are, first of all, to be brought together (Ezek. xxxvii.). After that the two Houses will be joined together and become one. There is nothing new in this. Joseph, in Egypt, after long exile, knew his brethren, but they did not know him. There were many reasons for this. But they were eventually convinced of his identity, and broken family ties were divinely cemented together.

* * * * *

Here follows some of Our Saviour's sublime teaching, which, for the present, we must pass over. It is indicative of a time, yet to come, between the European Earthquake Woe, and Restoration times, which synchronized with Christ's entry into Jerusalem. That will be a time for the nations of the earth to reflect. The Judge of all the earth is about to call them to give an account of their national stewardship, as the nobleman, who went into a far country, to receive for himself a kingdom, did, on his return (Luke xix.).

* * * * *

During this short interregnum, another work will be progressing, of which the world at large will be oblivious, as was the crowd of people which followed Jesus. The ways of Jehovah are often secret and mysterious. Man understands them not. The acts and sayings of the God-man were equally so. When He drew nigh to Bethphage and Bethany, something had to be brought which required despatch. Messengers were required who could be trusted, and something had to be done, improbable though it appeared, but to which there was to be no gainsaying. There have been, in the past, world-wide rulers—world-wide, so far as human knowledge of territory then extended. They entered their capitals, on prancing chargers, in great pomp, and amid unbounded popular applause. But the King of kings, robed in humanity, sends not for a noble charger, nor for a dignified mule, nor for a stolid looking ass, but for a colt, a shaggy, untried skittish-looking animal, commanding no dignity, and less respect than even its dam. On such a despicable looking animal, did the King of kings condescend to enter into the future capital of the whole earth. And never did king or emperor receive such honour among men. Heaven and earth rang with pæans of praise, and had humanity ceased to proclaim it, the very stones would have cried out (Luke xix. 40).

And the messengers who were sent were Peter and John, men very opposite in character and disposition. Peter, the stone, bold, rash, daring and impetuous. John, the beloved, mild, gentle, timorous.*

They were commanded to go to a certain village, at the entrance of which they would find a colt tied (Luke xix.). This animal was unbroken, untried. No man had ever sat on him. They were to "loose him and bring him." The instructions given to the messengers were simple but sufficient, and they knew nothing but obedience to Him who ordered them. There were to be those claiming † ownership, who should say, "Why loose ye the colt?" Their ownership seems to be very questionable, for when they are told, "The Master hath need of him," not another word is spoken. It is highly probable

* "They shall look on Me whom they have pierced, &c." (Zech. xii. 9, 10). It was the look Jesus gave that brought Zaccheus down quickly.

* This has a political meaning which time will demonstrate.

† St. Matthew says, Go and ye shall find "an ass tied, and a colt with her, &c." (xxi. 2).

Digitized by Google

that these messengers did not know the importance of their mission, nor clearly understand for what great purpose the colt was required. We think that the whole narrative is prophetic, and that we have here intimated to us the last word on the Eastern Question.

St. Mark, the most observant of the disciples, says they "found the colt tied by the door without, in a place where two ways met" (xi. 4). If this narrative be prophetic, the solution is simple. The ass (Israel-Britain) is tied outside a gate (Constantinople) at a place where two ways meet, the way from the East and the way from the West. The colt is the offspring of this ass, and no further progress can be made in the Lord's triumphal march till the ass is loosed, and the colt brought. Thus we have the divine assurance that Israel-Britain will yet be chained to that great Gate, and that the time will come when she will be "loosed," and the Gate will be left open, like all her other Gates. There will be very little opposition, for all will be done under Divine guidance. The ass was not sent for, but the colt. The restoration of Israel means the re-colonization of Palestine. All Israel will not return, could not, in the natural order of things. But it will be "one of a city, and two of a family" (Jer. iii. 14). This is the colt. The colt trots along well enough with the dam alongside. So the new colony will have the support and protection of the mother country. It will have more. How quietly everything was arranged and ordered! What unbounded enthusiasm burst forth when Jesus was set upon the colt, and the people spread their garments in the way, and strewed branches from the palm trees in His path, while the air was rent with loud Hosannas of praise and glory to God. And is it not written respecting this coming return, "Ye shall not go out with haste, nor go by flight: for the Lord will go before you, and the God of Israel will be your rereward"? (Isa. lii. 12).

Thus we have portrayed in our Saviour's last journey to Jerusalem the restoration of sight to the blind people—Israel-Britain; the conversion of the Jews: the return in peace, with praise and joy, and with manifestations of divine glory over them. This will be done in the sight of all nations. In those days, when our Saviour's mission had proceeded so far, we find the proud Pharisees consulting among themselves, and in their inner consciousness tacitly admitting that they had made a huge blunder. They had struggled hard to overthrow His teaching, to damage His reputation, and to entrap Him in His talk, but now, with consternation depicted on their countenance, they exclaim among themselves "Behold, the world is gone after Him" (John xii. 17, 19. N.B. Lazarus raised from the dead: so Israel is to be like the prodigal son. "This my son was dead, and is alive again," etc.).

Our Identity with Lost Israel is truth, with Revelation for its foundation; and for its superstructure, facts which cannot be refuted. This truth has become known throughout the whole world, much in the same way that Christianity did. With the exception of a worthy Gamaliel here and there, the shepherds of the land have done their level best to stamp out the new teaching, because it would entail personal labour and inconvenience to themselves. They are no lovers of truth who deliberately refuse to consider the dark sayings of prophecy in the light which latter days flood over them, simply because it may mean the reconstruction of a sermon. It is very pleasant to run along smoothly in a given groove, but not so to be unwillingly jolted out of it. Where the truth of God is to be considered, all our faculties ought to be exercised in order to make the truth plain to those who have neither the means, nor opportunities at command, to enable them to understand it.

Consider the advocates of Christianity nineteen centuries ago! Some were rich, many were poor: some were literate, many illiterate. Both were required to propagate these truths, both are required now. But all must be taught of God. Of old, the Master was despised and rejected of men. So must His servants expect to be. None were more so than the apostles and disciples of old. And of those who support the Identity "craze," little need be said. But of old it was said, and admitted by the Pharisees themselves, "Behold, the whole world is gone after Him." And this is precisely what will take place when Israel of the Ten Tribes, lost and dead to the world, with no clue to their own Identity (taken in a national sense), and without acknowledgment among the nations of the earth, shall obtain peaceable possession of the great Gate, Constantinople.

The signs of the times are prominent in our midst. The war scare has sent a panic of fear throughout the length and breadth of the land. And doubtless, with our scattered dominions, scattered forces, and mismanagement, we have, nationally, much cause to fear.* We must do all we can to defend ourselves, but we must also place implicit confidence in the Holy One of Israel, who by the mouth of the prophet Isaiah, proclaimed to Israel, in the latter days, "Fear not."

The European earthquake woe will bring about our peaceable possession of the great Gate. The re-colonisation of Palestine will be an immediate resultant, and Ezekiel's prophecy will be literally fulfilled (xxxviii.).

And what will follow such a marvellous event? Just what took place long ago when the Pharisees declared, "The whole world is gone after him." Is it not predicted, "It shall come to pass that every one that is left of all the nations which came against Jerusalem, shall even go up from year to year, to worship the King, the Lord of Hosts," etc. (Zech. xiv. 16—19). "And they shall teach no more every man his neighbour, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord: for they shall all know Me, from the least of them to the greatest, saith the Lord" (Jer. xxxi. 34).

May, 1888.

EXTRACT FROM A LECTURE ON THE IDENTIFICATION OF A LOST RACE.

By W. Greig, of Montreal.

"The sceptre shall not depart from Judah, nor a law-giver from between his feet until Shiloh come, and unto him shall the gathering of the people be." Thus saith the Lord, "If ye can break My covenant of the day, and My covenant of the night, so that there should not be day and night in their season, then may also My covenant be broken with David, My servant, that he should not have a son to reign upon his throne," and, "Thy seed will I establish for ever, and build up thy throne to all generations" (Psa. lxxxix. 3, 4).

"Thus saith the Lord, which giveth the sun for a light by day, and the ordinances of the moon and of the stars for a light by night, which stirreth up the sea, that the waves thereof roar. The Lord of hosts is His name. If these ordinances depart from before Me, saith the Lord, then the seed of Israel also shall cease from being a nation before Me for ever." And "Thou hast confirmed to Thyself Thy people, Israel, to be a people unto Thee for ever" (2 Sam. vii. 27).

Dr. J. Munro Gibson, in his book, "The Mosaic Era," 354th page, details Israel's growth, from childhood, in Egypt, to adolescence in Solomon's reign, then downwards, through slow steps of decay, until, in the days of the Maccabees, it sinks into the grave to which it has been steadily advancing.

F. Ballard, M.A., F.G.S., in his article printed in the Wesleyan Methodist Sunday-school Magazine for Oct. 1885, on the last kings of Israel and Judah, asks, "What became of the Lost Ten Tribes?" and answers, "The twenty-seven identifications may be dismissed as absurd, the problem remains yet unsolved; but the certainty is, that here ended, for ever, the history of Israel as a monarchy." If the problem remains

* One writer says that we "are a people without an army." This is quite true when our small army is contrasted with the immense standing armies to be found on the Continent.

Digitized by Google

unsolved, where does the certainty come in? Our good pastors, not seeing how to reconcile these passages of Scripture with what they conceive to be the facts, find a roundabout way out of the dilemma, by stoutly declaring that Judah's and David's blessings are both fulfilled in Christ, who was the Shiloh promised, and the person in whom the throne of David finds, from the time of Zedekiah's death, its perpetual occupant.

To this we object :—

1.—That the sceptre was not to depart from Judah until Shiloh came.

2.—That David was never to want a man to sit on his throne so long as the sun and the moon should endure.

Nevertheless :—

1st. Judah's sceptre had fallen from his nerveless grasp 585 years before Christ came in the flesh, and its next king was Herod, an Edomite, the vassal of Rome.

2nd. And in this year of grace, 1888, we still behold with the natural organs of vision, the sun and moon, and enjoy their life dispensing rays.

3rd. And David's throne was a material throne, over a very material and worldly people, and though it was the throne of Jehovah over Israel, yet in no sense of the word was it a spiritual or heavenly throne.

4th. And Christ, when He came, did not sit on any throne, for Rome had possession, and Christ was the subject of Rome, and paid tribute to Rome, and died under the sentence of the Roman Governor.

5th. If Christ was the Shiloh promised, and this promise was fulfilled when He came, then His mission was fruitless, for Shiloh means "peace," or "safety," and He Himself declares, "I came not to send peace on the earth but a sword," and the sword has been unsheathed ever since.

6th. He also declares, "If My kingdom were of this world, (age, as the word world should be rendered), then would My servants fight," which shows, by strong inference, that His kingdom shall be in a future age.

7th. Christ was in no sense, other than a prophetic sense, the Son of David at the time when the last king over Judah ceased to reign, any more than we were sons of Noah, at the time when he entered into the ark.

Therefore :—

1st. The Shiloh promised is not yet come, nor can come until the millennium, at which time, we are assured, peace shall prevail, and be established on this earth.

2nd. And Jesus, who was the Son of David by descent, at His first coming, did fulfil His offices of prophet and priest; but shall then, at His second coming, take unto Himself His mighty power and reign, at which time the prayer, long offered but by few understood, shall be answered—"Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done in earth, as it is done in heaven."

3rd. And God shall give unto Him the throne of His father, David (which never was in heaven), and of His kingdom and dominion there shall never be an end.

4th. And David's throne must still be in existence in some part of the world, and David's son must this very day be the occupant of that throne, and his family the oldest dynasty in the world, as God is true.

5th. And if there is a throne over Israel, there must also be an Israelitish nation to rule over, and the word of God being true, that nation must be to-day the greatest the world has ever seen, encircling the globe, filling up its desolate places with teeming multitudes, which no man can number, and, like the sand by the seashore, which can neither be measured nor numbered, and of whom people will persist in declaring, "Ye are not God's people," but nevertheless a people whom God declares shall be called "The sons of the living God" (Hosea i. 10).

And lastly, I defy the world to produce such a people outside of the British Empire and the United States of America. But these pastors will insist that the Jews are the only nation referred to; not realizing, or wishing to realize, that Judah is a scattered people, having neither king nor country, and denying themselves that they are a nation. The "American Israelite," published in New York, in a late issue, says:—

It is strange that some of our Gentile friends can not, or will not understand the word "Jew." In the Evening Post, a paper published in this city, a communication, signed E. W., appeared, censuring the editor for adding the word "Jew" to the name of persons acting against law and decency. "E.W." asked, "Why do you always say, N. N., a 'Jew,' did so-and-so, and never N. N., a Methodist, or Baptist, etc.?" The Editor's reply was, "That the word 'Jew' has nothing to do with the religion of the party, but 'Jew' is the nationality, just like 'Irishman, German, Frenchman'; and although a Jew, and even his ancestors before him, may have been born in this country, or in Germany, or in France, he still belongs to the Jewish nation, and is either an American Jew, a German Jew, or a French Jew." Can these American Christian editors not understand that the Jews have ceased to be a nation, and that by using that appellation, they can only mean their religion, while and because we are proud of being "Jews," we hope the daily press will cease bringing the title "Jew" in connection with some miscreant or vagabond, who accidently was born of Jewish parents.

Thus, as Judah repudiates the claim to being a nation, and claims the appellation only as a sectarian title, Israel must both be a nation and a monarchy, and Judah is the seed-royal, swaying its sceptre.

Ard-choille, Cote St. Antoine, Montreal, March 27th, 1888.

THE REV. DR. WILD ON THE RETURN OF ISRAEL AND JUDAH.

THE following appeared in the Parkdale News of August 4th, in one of Dr. Wild's sermons, that on "The Ploughman Overtaking the Reaper." The sentiments are too good to be omitted from the BANNER, and we quote them accordingly. He said:—

"When you ask, Will the ploughman overtake the reaper? some of you will be surprised to find that he cannot overtake the reaper until Israel is recognised and Judah is restored. Here come in the Ten Lost Tribes again: you cannot keep them out. Now many good things that people are praying for and wishing for, and longing for and talking about are all on the other side of Israel's recognition and Judah's restoration. My good friends, the Adventists, that have met over Niagara the last few weeks, I have got some nice things sent from them. They think I am in error; I may be; it is likely I am in some things just as much as they are; but if any man, Adventist or not, will show me the millennium, with the Jews scattered, Palestine desolate, and Israel unrecognised, I will confess I am in error. You cannot have any millennium on the face of the earth until these things have transpired. Why ignore the greatest fact that is to comprise all these? When the ploughman will overtake the reaper these things will be accomplished. In that day, He says. What day? The time referred to when Palestine shall be settled and Israel shall be quiet and at peace. Did you ever think of the unity of the various churches? When will you get it? Zephaniah, 3rd chap. and 9th verse: 'For then will I turn to the people a pure language, that they may all call upon the name of the Lord to serve Him with one consent.' Do you see that you cannot get it now? You have to believe in Israel and Judah as God's select people for civilizing and Christianizing the world; until the Church and the whole world believe that, we can never be united. Then He will turn a pure language upon the people. You may ask for it, and you have the answer given in Jeremiah, 32nd chap. and 39th verse: 'And I will give them one heart and one way that they may fear before Me forever.' But when will you get that one heart and one way?

Digitized by Google

After Judah is restored and Israel recognised. Yet people are praying and preaching all over to give us one heart, give us one way. It is the Lord's to give such a blessing. But He does not give rebellious people their way. He has got a way of His own about this thing, and He will have it. So you can find some other passages. Perhaps they would say, I wish you ministers could see eye to eye. You will by and by. But when? In that day. But when is that day? Isaiah, 52nd chap. and 8th verse, 'Thy watchmen shall lift up the voice; with the voice together shall they sing, for they shall see eye to eye when the Lord shall bring again Zion.' The time you see is that day.

"We want you to see eye to eye now. We want you to see eye to eye with Archbishop Lynch. I cannot for the life of me. Then do with Canon Dumoulin. I cannot exactly. Well, then, do with the Methodist ministers. I cannot exactly. Well, go to the Baptists. No. What is the matter with you? We will never see eye to eye till Judah is restored and Israel is recognised. Just so you will find the same idea borne out in the 11th verse of the chapter of my text: 'In that day I will raise up the tabernacle of David that is fallen, and close up the breaches thereof, and I will raise up his ruins, and I will build it as in the days of old.' That is just exactly what is to be done. If you will go to the 14th verse, He says: 'And I will bring again the captivity of My people Israel, and they shall build the waste cities and inhabit them, and they shall plant vineyards and drink the wine thereof and eat the fruit of them. And I will plant them upon their land, and they shall no more be pulled up out of their land which I have given them, saith the Lord thy God.' It is after they are settled there that the ploughman is to overtake the reaper. And yet you want him to overtake him now. He cannot. What you have got to do, and what the churches should do, is to recognise Israel literally, just as the Jews are. This is the order of God's work and His providence. Co-operate with Him, and bring these things to pass. Peace would be on the world in thirty years if we were to do it. But you will go out, some of you, and say, I do not believe in the Lost Tribes. You do not know what you believe in. All the great events of the future for which the Church is praying are predicated upon this fact. I will ask any Adventist or any other man, Give me a great fact that belongs to the future, that is to come into force or play now before Israel is recognised and Judah restored. Now, my friends, just own up. You will always find them when this great thing is done. If we want peace, good-will and plenty, if we want sorrow and poverty wiped out, we shall have this thing done first, as you will read in Isaiah, 51st chap. and 11th verse: 'Therefore the redeemed of the Lord shall return and come with singing unto Zion, and everlasting joy shall be upon their head; they shall obtain gladness and joy, and sorrow and mourning shall flee away.'

"Oh, that people could see the will and purposes of God, so simple, so plainly revealed in His Word, and be willing to co-operate with Him. Let the technicalities of theology go; the great question is to recognise God's purposes through the chosen seed of Abraham, their work, their place, and their reward. May we thus be willing servants of God the Most High! Amen."

So far the doctor. We concur with his remarks almost word for word. Yet there is one point which seems to jar. Peace could not be obtained by the world in thirty years by admitting the Identity of the British with Lost Israel unless God's good time for the restoration of the two Houses be fully come then. Man's acknowledgment of the fact could not hasten the time by a single moment. But when the time arrives, the whole world will recognise Israel and admit that the Lord Jehovah is their God in truth and in fact. What we have to do meanwhile, is to pray the Lord "to hasten the time," and then peace will be upon the earth according to the promises and prophecies; "when the Lord shall bring again Zion" (Isa. lii. 8).

"THE DOWNFALL OF ENGLAND."

THE French are it seems amusing themselves at our expense by buying and reading extensively a 2-franc pamphlet which is having a large sale in France, entitled "Plus d' Angleterre." In this brochure the "downfall of England" at the end of this century is foretold, and the events leading up to it narrated in the form of a diary. We copy the entries which appear in the Pall Mall translation, as follows. If this be the style of thing the French are looking forward to, they must, it seems to us, love their British neighbours very dearly! The coming destruction of the power of Britain it is declared by the Frenchman will give peace to Europe for perhaps a hundred years! Therefore we may conclude that this country is the only existing obstacle to the peace of Europe, France, Russia and such Powers being, we presume, the peace makers and lambs among the nations. Credat Judeus Apella!

THE AWAKENING.

July 4.—Lobbies of the French Chamber crowded. Excited deputies. Interpellation of Ministers on news from Madagascar. Equivocating replies. Rumour of murder of French Resident. Complicity of English General suspected. Indignant speech by young member of the Left. General Willoughby at Tamatave undoubtedly accomplice. Same thing everywhere. Speech much applauded. Discussed in evening papers.

July 5.—Yesterday's debate followed up by violent articles in the French paper, especially one, which attracted great attention, entitled "The Enemy—is the Englishman."

July 7.—Newspapers all over France take up the cry against England.

July 8.—Attacks treated in England with disdain. Excitement attributed to financial operators. Nothing was to be feared from France.

July 9.—Lord Wolseley declares invasion impossible. Congratulations in England at abortive attempt to make Channel Tunnel. Tragic scenes in Ireland, result of Coercion. Thirty-five thousand English troops quartered there.

July 10.—Indignation meetings in Paris on behalf of Irish people. Correspondent of the Times recognised and hissed at the theatre. The Queen returns from Aix les Bains, but has refused to pass through France, and goes round by Ostend. German newspapers very reserved. Russian press bitterly attack English policy.

July 11.—French Ambassadors at Berlin and St. Petersburg interview the two Emperors.

July 22.—Concentration of large massses of Russian troops at Merv.

July 24.—English military authorities commence feverishly to organise mobilisation of two army corps on the Indus. English ships of war ordered to the Persian Gulf.

August 6.—Discussion in the House of Commons on the famous project of federating the Colonies. Looked upon in France as a final attempt by England to lay hands on the entire globe.

WAR.

Sept. 13.—Revolution broken out in Bulgaria. Prince Alexander said to be about to return to Sophia. Instigated no doubt by English Ministers.

Sept. 14.—Questioned in the House of Commons, English Ministers prevaricate as usual.

Sept. 15.—Interpellation in the French Chamber. President of the Council admits that great tension exists between the two nations.

Sept. 22.—English newspapers publish two great events. First, a Russian column of ten thousand men has quitted Merv for Herat; secondly, outrage on the French Consulate at Cairo. Greatest excitement in Paris. Chamber and streets thronged with excited multitudes.

Sept. 23.—French securities have fallen 5 per cent.

Sept. 27.—An ultimatum couched in moderate language demanding redress sent to English Government.

Sept. 28.—Irish members in the House of Commons accuse Government of desiring war in order to draw away attention from domestic troubles. Four army corps ordered to be mobilised in France. Many remonstrances by those who look upon Germany as the legitimate foe. Generally thought, however, that the way to Alsace-Lorraine lies through London.

Digitized by Google

Sept. 30.—Rumours of an unfavourable reply from England. In London mobs parade Trafalgar-square, crying for work and denouncing war.

Oct. 2.—Herat captured by the Russians. News confirmed. Excitement intense. Queen left Balmoral for London. English Cabinet now striving hard for a pacific solution.

Oct. 5.—The mine has exploded. English newspapers announce that a French steamer has been sunk in the Suez Canal by an English man-of-war. The Indus, a French liner returning from the East, had taken on board some fugitives from Cairo. Summoned to surrender them, the captain refused. A blundering English commander—more by accident than design—in endeavouring to make good his seizure, destroyed the French ship.

Oct. 6.—Crowds paraded before the offices of The Standard and Daily Telegroph on the Place de l' Opéra, and broke the windows of "Old England," a shop on the boulevards. The Chamber voted a declaration of war and a credit of 300 millions of francs.

Oct. 7.—Vast crowds in London surrounded the Houses of Parliament, receiving members recognised with groans or cheers. Prince of Wales present in the gallery. The Prime Minister announced to a crowded House that France had seized the pretext of two untoward incidents to declare war; that the French Government had refused to consider a pacific settlement of these questions; that England was ready to take up the gauntlet so insolently thrown down.

Oct. 8.—German official organ observes that Germany can afford to look on impartially, as the victory or defeat of France must equally turn to her advantage. Russian press sympathetic to France. Austrian hostile. Italian newspapers favourable to England. 3rd, 4th, 9th, and 17th Army Corps ordered to be mobilised at Rouen, Le Mans, Orleans, Tours, and Toulouse, and orders given for the concentration of the 10th, 11th, 12th and 18th, already mobilised.

Oct. 9.—Jingoism rampant in London.

Oct. 10.—Hostilities commenced. England cut off from North America. All communication of military intelligence to newspapers strictly forbidden by the Commander in Chief. The English newspapers, however, continue to publish military and naval news.

Oct. 11.—The English papers continue to arrive, viâ Ostend, giving details of movements of troops. Reserves massed at Croydon and Aldershot. Volunteer and Militia camps forming on the coast of the North Sea and on the shores of the Channel. Fleets concentrating at Portland and Portsmouth; large merchant steamers requisitioned. Subscriptions opened at Mansion House: 50 millions in four days subscribed. Queen arrived at Buckingham Palace. The Prince of Wales and his sons visit the southern ports. Since the 8th, French fleet collecting at Brest. Thirteen ironclad cruisers, together with war vessels of other classes, making forty-six sail. In the harbour there are also lying large transports. The Transatlantic line capable of carrying 27,000 men and 4,000 horses. Mediterranean line can carry 18,000 men and 5.000 horses; and the Messageries 50,000 men.

Oct. 13.—159,000 officers and men, 26,000 horses and mules, 450 guns, and 2,500 waggons are embarked at Brest. The Mediterranean Fleet was at Toulon on the 1st, and received orders to leave for Alexandria. On the 5th, when about to start, received secret orders to proceed to Brest. Crossed Straits of Gibraltar at night and arrived at Brest on the 13th.

Oct. 14.—Great impatience in France at the silence imposed by military authorities. What is composition of English fleet? Two hundred and seventy vessels. Of these only thirty-five first-class ironclads. From total at least seventy may be deducted as not ships of war, but Royal yachts and unserviceable craft. Fleet scattered all over the world. collected for the Jubilee, but since dispersed. This evening news of the bombardment of Cherbourg. Northampton, Sultan, and Hercules, escorted by Brisk and Archer, appeared off the harbour. Two French ships went out to meet them, accompanied by torpedo boats, but were forced to retire, after a successful attack by Torpedo Boat 80 on the Sultan.

Oct. 15.—Great naval battle, claimed by the French as a victory; disastrous to both fleets. After the first half hour the English had lost Iron Duke, Conqueror, and Minotaur, while Edinburgh, Inflexible, and Impérieuse were so out of gear as to be useless. The French lost Brennus, Dehorter, and Condor, while Redoubtable and Admiral Baudin (flagships) were with difficulty forced out of action by Villars and Roland. After two hours' hard fighting both fleets were completely crippled; but Channel free for the passage of our Army.

Oct. 16.—Illuminations yesterday in Paris. Consternation in London. Attempt to sack the Admiralty frustrated by the police.

Oct. 17.—French fleet arrived off Hastings yesterday, in form of crescent. No troops or fortifications. Volunteers and Militia in camp at Eastbourne. Authorities at Hastings telegraph to Commander of Forces. All wealthy people leaving for Tunbridge and London. Ships open fire with melenite. After short bombardment, white flag on parade. Parties landed immediately. Resistance abandoned, town spared. By ten o'clock the 41st Brigade of the 11th Army Corps occupied Hastings.

Oct. 18.—Yesterday, at eight o'clock, the army began to march, General direction—Tunbridge and London. At one o'clock Eastbourne Army in touch with the French, at Battle. Five hours later, English retired; French lost 3,000 men, enemy 9,000 killed or wounded.

Oct. 20.—Yesterday march at nine. Occupy Tunbridge Wells. Heard of enemy at Tunbridge. English army consisted of 70,000 regular troops and 30,000 Militia and Volunteers. French force 145,000 men. Battle lasting all day. English overwhelmed by superior numbers and defeated.

Oct. 21.—News of the battle spread over England; Ninth Army Corps disembarked at Folkestone, marching on Dover. French cruisers in Chatham and Liverpool. Insurrection in Dublin. Riotous mobs scouring the streets of Birmingham, Manchester, Liverpool, and Leeds. A Russian army marching through Afghanistan. Riots feared in London. Parliament fortified. Cannon in Trafalgar-square commanding the Strand, and on Westminster Bridge, enfilading the Thames Embankment, all armed by London Volunteers. Parliament met. A commission of thirty appointed to support Ministry.

Oct. 22.—French army resting with the right at Orpington, centre at Keston, left at Addington. All shops shut in London. Docks pillaged. Queen gone to Windsor. Complete collapse of the Horse Guards and War Office.

Oct. 23.—French troops occupied London. Armistice offered. After long deliberations Ministers accepted terms. Royal approval required. Queen telegraphed from Balmoral announcing abdication.

Oct. 24.—New Corporation established in London. Each vestry sent 20 delegates. The milliard voted by the new municipal authorities.

Oct. 26.—Armistice signed. Fleet given up.

Oct. 29.—Preliminaries of peace presented to English Government.

ARTICLES OF PEACE.

1. Payment of a war indemnity of 14 milliards of francs.
2. England to cede to the French Republic the town of Dover, the Channel Islands, Heligoland, Gibraltar, Malta and its dependencies, Cyprus, Sierra Leone, the Gold Coast, Cape Colony, Mauritius, Seychelles, the Admiralty Islands, Chagos Islands, Aden, Perim, Socotra, Ceylon, Hong-Kong, New Guinea, Tasmania, New Zealand, Fiji, Vancouver, English Guiana, the Antilles, the Windward Islands, Barbadoes, Jamaica, Province of Quebec, and Newfoundland.
3. England to evacuate Egypt and recognise French rights in the New Hebrides.
4. England not to maintain a standing army of more than 50,000 men, nor a fleet of more than 50 ships.
5. Until the complete execution of these stipulations French troops to occupy Great Britain.

So far the French dream. "The wish is father to the thought"! But all turns upon the great fact whether "The Downfall of England" is God's will or not? The French author of this squib does not stop to consider that, or to inquire who the British are! They are Israel, the Lost Ten Tribes, who are guarded in their isles by the oath and promise of the Lord Jehovah, recorded in their Holy Book nearly 4,000 years ago. They have God's blessing and constant presence, to give them the safety the Frenchman would deny them, and their appointed place wherein to dwell confidently and carelessly according to the prophecies (Gen. xii. 2, 3, xviii. 18, xxii. 17, 18; Deut. xxviii. 1—15, xxxiii. 28, 29; 2 Sam. vii. 10). The invasion and occupation of Great Britain by the French is, as Lord Wolseley is reported to have said, impossible, because God has promised it shall be impossible, and not because of military considerations. The destruction of the British fleet and the defeat of 100,000 British by 145,000 French soldiers on British soil reads prettily for the French foes of God's inheritance, but in all this the power of God, and the will of God, are put on one side, which we cannot afford to do! The God who fought the Spanish Armada and destroyed it, who upset all Napoleon's plans for the invasion of England at Boulogne, and enabled us to vanquish him and carry him a humbled prisoner to St. Helena, will defend us against all the boastings of the French, whose legions cut so poor a figure when face to face with the Germans on French soil in 1870. The French have their objects to gain in respect to Alsace and Lorraine, but they will not find that the road to them lies through London, because it will not be possible for them to put London to ransom or to sack it till they have reached the Throne of God and defeated Him who sits thereon. The Lord laughs such threats as these to scorn, and will rebuke the impiety of those who disdain His people, and seeing that they are likely to dominate the world, resent the coming federation of the colonies, as a final attempt by England to lay hands on the entire globe! That very possession is God's promise in Dan. vii. 27, and Rom. iv. 13, to His people Israel, and theirs it will, and must finally be, as God is true! Let Israel therefore praise the Lord, even for such vapourings as this fresh French insult to Him and to His inheritance, His chosen ones.

Digitized by Google

"THE ECHO," AND "THE BANNER OF ISRAEL."

ON April 11, the London Echo did the BANNER and its Editor the honour of giving them five distinct notices under the head of "Daily Gossip." They were not flattering notices—rather the reverse, but they were notices nevertheless; and we are glad that in one quarter at least, of the Press in London, the BANNER receives some recognition, though it is, as yet, far from a favourable one. The Echo wonders at our "Ingenuity" in pressing into our service everything that occurs, and backing our opinions by a text. Thus the trade picked up in Iceland by Britons, where Frenchmen failed; the prosperity which Egypt has enjoyed under British control; the defeat of the Spanish Armada in 1588; the wonderful increase of population in London; all these we have employed to illustrate our main contention regarding our nation's Identity with Israel, and the Echo deems that a subject for mirth. The writer at last to crown the whole matter as a huge absurdity, declares this:—

> We are quite prepared to be told ere long that the Manchester Ship Canal, the recent New York blizzard, Mr. Goschen's Budget, Mr. Ritchie's County Government Bill, the Trafalgar-square riots, the election of General Boulanger, the threatened resignation of Prince Bismarck, and the fight between Sullivan and Mitchell, are additional proofs of Our Identity with the Lost Ten Tribes.

We fear we can make nothing of the New York blizzard, nor respecting the threatened resignation of Prince Bismarck. As to the fight between Sullivan and Mitchell, we could not venture to promote that to the rank of a new proof that this nation is Israel. But the Manchester Ship Canal and Mr. Goschen's Budget certainly testify to the great wealth of the nation, and Mr Ritchie's Bill seems to afford proof that the most far reaching and almost revolutionary changes can be made in this our nation only of all the races upon the earth without bloodshed or political disturbance. We could present to the Echo scores of facts, which cannot be explained away save on the supposition that we British are God's people Israel, now in enjoyment of all His promises to that race. Such are our wonderful acquisition of India, and our retention of it to this hour in spite of the mutinies, and of a hundred other mischances that have befallen us there; such is our position in South Africa, in Australasia, in North America, in China, in North Borneo, and in the many islands of the sea. The history of the British acquisition of "The Gates" is one that testifies to God's care over His people, and to the plan on which He has been working for them for the last 300 years. Our commerce, our wealth, our power on the sea, our security in our island home, our national love of the Bible, of the Sabbath, of the Decalogue, and of the Missionary cause; these are all gifts testifying to our Israelitish origin, but they cannot be explained with any regard to the truth of God, and to His faithfulness to His promises, on any other hypothesis whatsoever. Let the Echo show, if possible, why, for instance, the most magnificent outland Empire that the world has ever seen attached to a single State has been to-day given to us, and how, and by what miraculous means, about 75,000 men, soldiers and civilians contrive to keep 250,000,000 of alien, warlike nations at the ends of the earth not only in subjection to a foreign yoke but content also to remain so? How is it that long before that Eastern Empire was created as we now see it or thought of, a long line of coaling stations was gradually acquired, making the retention of that empire when conquered a possibility, and the supremacy of the sea, in these days of steam, secure in British hands? Why were Gibraltar, Malta, and Aden acquired, and St Helena, Ascension, the Cape of Good Hope, the Mauritius, and Ceylon besides, by us, except to prepare for the advent and power of the coming "kings of the East"? How is it that to our race and to ours alone was given the energy and power to acquire and keep the vast volume of commerce we have secured, that brings us the stupendous wealth which is the wonder and envy of the world, besides constituting our race the richest on the earth? Such are some of the many problems which are presented in our nation's position and condition in the world to-day, and they belong exclusively to us.

In the multiplying faculty our race is in the very first rank. Our numbers double faster than among any other people. To us alone belong "The Gates" of the world. Ours consequently is the supremacy of the seas. No other nation ever had such unique Colonies as ours, and no empire ever planted its infant States in the "desolate heritages" or "desolations" of the earth, yet all in temperate zones, like ours. Our Colonies alone have developed into nations, and those exclusively are showing a strong tendency to confederate politically with each other and with their old mother in the West. Our wealth is phenomenal, and our commerce bewildering in volume. So great is it that we lend to many nations, but we have no need to borrow from any. We alone of all peoples reign over many nations, but no nation reigns over us. We alone of all nations have an Eastern as well as a Western Empire, and we alone endeavour so to rule that empire, gigantic as it is, that we really "bless by ruling and rule by blessing." We alone so succeed in this hitherto impossible task, that the millions of India, being at least 16 great nations, are content with our rule, and are ready to stand by us with men and treasure to prevent the Russian armies overrunning the land and making India their own. So well have we succeeded in our righteous attempt to govern well, that the inhabitants of Syria and Palestine, of parts of Arabia, Egypt and Africa, are asking "when they too may welcome so beneficent a government as that which rules in India," and would welcome the British Raj there, as heartily as it is accepted in the Heathen Empire of the Queen-Empress! We ask the Echo, then, how all these things can be accounted for, except on our Anglo-Israel lines? and why it deems us ridiculous in referring all that is happening to us, to our Hebrew, Ten-Tribed origin? If we be Israel, then the God of Israel is guiding us in all our ways, and not a thing is happening to us save as He is ordering it for our good. Therefore our successful trade in Iceland where the French have failed must needs be a part of God's work in our favour, because we are His people, and He has promised them that He will ever give them "the power to get wealth," in order that His glory may be thereby furthered. Egypt's prosperity under British rule, where French efforts to govern have ever failed, is a mark of the same facts, and a fulfilment of a very literal promise to Israel in Isa. xix. 20—25. The defeat of the Spanish Armada, 300 years ago, was a Divine interference on our nation's behalf which even Queen Elizabeth's medal publicly recorded at the time in the memorable words, "Flavit Jehovah, et dissipati sunt."

Digitized by Google

That deliverance was the work of Jehovah, the God of Israel, and its facts seem to have been foreseen and recorded in Isa. xvii. 12 to 14, as a deliverance He effected for Israel His people. We have said enough! We thank and praise God for our Israelitish origin as a nation. Knowing the fact to be true, we feel that we do right to call attention to it, and to remind our countrymen everywhere that every part of our current history has a reflex reference to the main point, and should be noticed by us all with praise and thanksgiving to our God, the God of Israel.

ANGLO-ISRAEL FREE DISTRIBUTION FUND.

Fifty-fifth Monthly Report.

The following donations and subscriptions, from May 18th to June 16th, are very gratefully acknowledged:—

By the Treasurer: Miss W., Hampstead, 5s.; H. G., Tooting (three months' subscription), 3s.; The Lady J. E. (for Banners, No. 597), 5s.; Mrs. M., Stroud, 3s.; Darlington, 7s. 6d. (2s. 6d. for Banners, No. 597); M. C., Lee (per Miss E. M. Rush), 1s., for Banners.

By Mr. C. Horner: W. W. (two months' subscription, for Banners), 7s.; G. R., 2s. 6d.; A Friend, 2s. 6d.; Mrs. C. (monthly subscription), 2s. 6d.; G. G., 1s.; Mrs. C. B. (monthly subscription), 5s.

Total, £2 5s. 0d.

Owing to the illness of our Secretary, Mr. C. Horner, which we are sure all will hear of with much regret and sympathy, it falls to our lot to send in the monthly report.

Banner Distribution.—Another cause of regret is the lowness of the funds. From May 5th to June 10th only 8s. was received by the Treasurer. On this account we have been obliged again, most unwillingly, to reduce the number of Banners sent out weekly to 96, though, thanks to special contributions lately received, we have been enabled to circulate some extra copies of the double No., 597.

Literature Distribution.—In consequence of the small balance in hand we have incurred as little expense as possible, and very little literature has been sent out. Eight parcels have been despatched to the following places:—Hastings, Portsmouth, Brighton (2), Wigan, Somerstown, Clerkenwell, and Malta.

Old Banners, etc., have been received from Chiswick, Henley, and London.

Correspondence.—One of our Sowers in the neighbourhood of London tells us that the parcel of literature last sent to him has been distributed amongst a large number of people, and some of it sent to all parts of the United Kingdom. He has also sent copies of the last double number of the Banner to various clergymen, enclosing a suitable leaflet. Our friend says:—"I find there are some ready to read all I can lend them, and are asking for more. Several have openly expressed their belief in the truth of the Identity, our last convert being a school mistress, who is now as actively employed in propagating this truth as I am myself. Some literature is now being read by a student at the London University, who has promised to carefully consider the matter, and says he should be proud to know that he was a descendant of Abraham. A young Jew is now reading some books on the subject with much interest. But perhaps the most remarkable case I have in hand is an Agnostic, as he calls himself. It says much for the amount of evidence, and its quality, we are able to adduce outside Scripture, that he believes it to be proved that the different races who came to these islands, with the exception of the Romans, were all of one stock, and that stock a Hebrew one! But when I pointed out to him that all that has happened to this race was spoken of by the prophets, and written in the Bible centuries ago, he says it is an accident!"

Our Sower at Brighton, who lectures and distributes literature on the beach, says: "I am looking for much good to be done this year. The Armada, &c., will help us with much argument, and 'England in Danger' will also help to show that we have One better than 10,000 guns who fighteth for us."

J. Lawrence, Hon. Treasurer.

Contributions to the Fund will be thankfully received and acknowledged by the Hon. Treasurer, Miss J. Lawrence, Rosslyn, Hampton-road, Upper Teddington, Middlesex; or by Mr. Charles Horner, 34, Sheen-park, Richmond-on-Thames. Cheques may be crossed, "London and Provincial Bank, Teddington Branch." Grants of literature will be made, as far as funds allow, on application to the Secretary.

ISRAEL'S SCRIPTURE AND PRAYER UNION.

During the past month two cards of membership have been issued. The total number of members is 1,459. Two cards have also been given out by our agent in Malta.

The following donations, received towards the expenses of the Union, are most gratefully acknowledged: 2s. 6d. from Member 1,413; and 5s. from Miss W., Hampstead.

New members are requested, when writing for cards, to kindly state whether their names are to be entered as Mr., Mrs., or Miss, etc.

For the convenience of those members who wish to continue the daily reading, the following list of chapters for July is appended:—

1st ...	Luke	xvii.	12th ...	John	iv.	23rd ...	John	xv.
2nd...	,,	xviii.	13th ...	,,	v.	24th ...	,,	xvi.
3rd ...	,,	xix.	14th ...	,,	vi.	25th ...	,,	xvii.
4th ...	,,	xx.	15th ...	,,	vii.	26th ...	,,	xviii.
5th ...	,,	xxi.	16th ...	,,	viii.	27th ...	,,	xix.
6th ...	,,	xxii.	17th ...	,,	ix.	28th ...	,,	xx.
7th ...	,,	xxiii.	18th ...	,,	x.	29th ...	,,	xxi.
8th ...	,,	xxiv.	19th ...	,,	xi.	30th ...	Acts	i.
9th ...	John	i.	20th ...	,,	xii.	31st ...	,,	ii.
10th ...	,,	ii.	21st ...	,,	xiii.
11th ...	,,	iii.	22nd...	,,	xiv.

The card of membership will be sent on receipt of three stamps.

The first and second series of Monthly Comments on the whole Bible, by Philo-Israel, may be obtained in volume form. Price in paper cover, 1s. 2d. each, post free; in cloth, 2s. each, post free. The "Prayers for Daily Use," being a prayer for each day of the week, by Philo-Israel, are 1d., or 9d. per dozen, postage extra. The prayer of the Union, as on the Card of Membership, may be obtained printed in larger type, price 1d. for three copies, post free, or 1s. per 100 for distribution. Address, Miss E. Sibbald, 3, Townshend-villas, Richmond, Surrey.

HOW TO SPREAD THE IDENTITY.

By a Reporter.

On the occasion of the Sunday-school anniversary in connection with the Ashurst Wood Congregational Church, near East Grinstead, Sussex, held last Tuesday, the 5th instant, some very capital ideas were put forth by the various speakers of the day, presided over by a highly respected gentleman from Brighton, Daniel Friend, Esq., whose whole heart is with the cause of children. The ideas put forth by the speakers formed an excellent opportunity for a good Anglo-Israelite, Mr. G. J. Vince, who was among the speakers, whereon to base his remarks respecting British-Israel truth, and to appeal to the previous speakers as witnesses of the fact. Mr. Vince proceeded to show how and why the future progress of this nation was so much in the hands of the children. They (the speakers), he said, admitted that vast progress had been made during the past 50 years through Sunday-school work. They admitted that the nation had arrived at a height of glory that was at once unique and remarkable in the history of the world. Had it never struck them that that was a fulfilment of prophecy? Had it never struck them to observe very carefully Isa. liii., in reference to the sufferings of the Messiah, and the chapter following, regarding the immediate great glory that was to follow? And were they not living in the realisation of this 54th chapter at the present time? What was the prophecy? Was it not that "ALL thy children shall be taught of the Lord, and great shall be the peace of thy children"? What other nation in the world than the Anglo-Saxon race answers to such a description? The prophecy was to the children of Israel, and the children of this nation answer the very description and prediction, showing that our children and the whole of the Anglo-Saxon race are Israel. He concluded by appealing to them again as unwilling witnesses to the fact. Therefore, he urged, we had much to be thankful for, and we know for certain that Sunday-school work will never be downward or backward, but, as the chairman put it and believes it, ever onward and upward, as long as the Word of the Lord stands, delivered through the mouth of His servants the prophets. Ah! ours is indeed a glorious future, and full of buoyant hope in our heavenly Father for His kindness to us and to our children, as He has promised to be in the Old Testament records:—"All thy (Israel's) children shall be taught of the Lord, and great shall be the peace of thy children."

Digitized by Google

Review.

Israel: Where is she Now, and What is her Mission? A Lecture by George Nelson Walsh. Price 3d. Sheffield: George Slater, West Court and Ling Hill.

THIS is a carefully prepared and sensibly written lecture on our subject. Mr. Walsh begins at the very beginning, shows how the Scriptures and Scriptural history distinguish between the Houses of Israel and Judah, and then proceeds to ask, "Where Israel," the Ten Tribes, "now are?" "and what is her mission?" He shows that the plan of salvation has a dual character, the Saviour and the ordained preachers of the Saviour. The Old Testament deals with the latter, God's people Israel, the New with the Saviour. "The Old Testament is the covenant of consecration," "The New Testament the covenant of atonement," and both are "perpetual." Our author sets himself the task to prove, and we think successfully, that Israel was always intended by God to be the world's evangelizer, and that, therefore, she must now be doing her appointed work somewhere. Mr. Walsh, commenting on the wonderful fact that our accredited spiritual guides are earnest in urging men to accept the promises of the New Testament while they pass over those of the Old, with little or no notice, writes thus: "What wonder is there that ministers often complain of seeing so little fruit for their labour, if, in this critical age, they expect men to accept the promises contained in the New Testament without endeavouring to prove first that God has been faithful to those He gave in the Old!" Dealing with the history of Israel, and with the certainty "that the nation is not irrecoverably lost," he presses on those who apathetically refuse to search for it that it is their duty to do so, since the matter is very close to God's own heart (Jer. xxxii. 14). Our author enumerates the blessings God promised Israel during their Gentilized condition, and shows that the chief of these was their appointment to be "preachers of righteousness." He notices that "God never yet, as far as we know, has made any communication to men, except through the medium of an Israelite" (a statement requiring qualification, since Balaam, Nebuchadnezzar, and others were exceptions.) He argues, however, that since Matt. xxi. 43 put the Jews on one side the kingdom of God must have been given to the other extant Hebrew nation Israel, otherwise God's oath to Abraham and his afterseed would have been broken. Mr. Walsh enumerates God's gifts to Israel as their particular qualifications for their prescribed work, as detailed in the prophecies, thus:—1. Wealth. 2. Multitudinousness. 3. Colonies. 4. Power and dominion. 5. A benevolent and missionary spirit. He concludes by showing that the British as a nation fully answer the prophetic description of Israel in every iota, and that they, therefore, are the lost people now found.

We hope Mr. Walsh's lecture will find its way into the hands of multitudes who are not yet persuaded that the British are Israel, and that perusing his lucid arguments they may accept his conclusions, joining our body of faithful Anglo-Israelites in daily praising God for His mercies to His people, as well as in praying to Him to give us soon that new covenant blessing promised to the House of Israel first in Jer. xxxi. 33, 34, and in Heb. viii. 10, 12.

Correspondence.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR PHILO-ISRAEL,—A friend who had been told that a persuasion of God's covenanted promises to Israel having failed—which must be the case if the House of Israel cannot be found—would, if fully realised, land one in infidelity, writes to urge a reconsideration of this argument as unwise, and liable to misconstruction. He says it has made him "very uncomfortable," and asks how such a view can be reconciled with the fact that our Protestant forefathers walked with God, and died in faith without having learnt this great discovery?

Solomon tells us that as in water face answereth to face, so the heart of man to man. And in many another heart I believe the like objection exists to the truth of Our Identity. If, therefore, the answer given to the friend in question is deemed likely to be of any service to others, will you make use of it? It was in substance as follows:—

"When people feel and speak strongly on any subject, their words are always liable to misinterpretation, notably so on sacred topics, and especially is this apparent in Holy Writ. Else why in expounding such passages as Acts xxvii. 31 (coupled with ver. 24), Acts xxviii. 26, 27, 1 Cor. ix. 27, xv. 15, 32, and countless other passages, does the expositor invariably think it needful to preface his remarks with, "This does not mean so and so," or "This must not be understood as conveying such a meaning," unless upon the first blush this very meaning would be the one conveyed? The fact is, however, that very few people do exert themselves to feel strongly on any subject outside a personal grievance, or one of individual interest; still less do they expend their strength in trying to bring home to others the importance of truths which they themselves may possibly regard as vital. Men will do it on a public arena for éclat, or for motives which awaken their energy, but in private the majority will take no such trouble.

"The grand subject of the Identity was brought home to my own mind in a way in which I cannot but see the finger of God. In expressing myself upon it, I invariably say, 'Had I not already found the Lord, the conviction which then rushed upon my mind, that if the House of Israel were indeed nowhere, God had broken His covenant with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob—might have landed me in infidelity.' But this statement, if explained by the aforesaid Rules of Exposition, would educe three remarks. First, that being a believer, I was upheld and preserved from the threatened danger, even during that fortnight of agonizing suspense. Secondly, that unless God's time is come for teaching His children a hidden (or unseen) truth, He does not usually allow their minds to be thus deeply exercised with regard to it. Thirdly, that as Hume and very many others have assigned the supposed failure of God's promises to His chosen first-born, and the supposed transfer of His love, from Israel to a Gentile Church, as grounds sufficient for their infidelity, it behoves all who care to vindicate the honour and faithfulness of their God, to proclaim that Joseph is yet alive, and the Governor over not merely the land of Egypt, but over the sixth part of the habitable world!

"This is either an awful fiction or a demonstrable fact, and one so astounding, so overwhelming, that we may well tell it out in language as earnest as we can command. A prayerful study of Britain's place in prophecy and history will prove to every willing enquirer that God's time is come to show the why and the wherefore of His unparalleled goodness to our nation throughout the ages.

"The vision was to be sealed up 'till the time of the end.' The fact of its now being unsealed proves that the end is nigh at hand. It was not so in the days of our Protestant forefathers, and they could not grasp a truth which had not been presented to them."

Trusting that this answer may meet a difficulty which presents itself to some minds,

I am, truly yours in the hope of Israel,
ELLEN M. ROGERS.

Glenwood, Weston-Super-Mare, May 28th, 1888.

TWELVE thousand four hundred Jubilee New Testaments have now been ordered from the British and Foreign Bible Society in London, for New Zealand. They are to contain the Queen's autograph.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed: "Philo-Israel," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

SUBSCRIPTIONS. £ s. d.

Annual Subscription for one copy weekly (including the Twelve Double Numbers) post free 0 7 6
Two Copies (including Double Numbers) 0 13 6
Three Copies " " " 1 0 4
Four Copies " " " 1 5 6
Six Copies " " " 1 16 4

Post Office Orders to be made payable at the head office, St. Martin's-le-grand, London, to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C., or F. W. PARRY & Co., 29, Paternoster-row, London.

The Editor cannot undertake to return rejected MSS. unless stamps for the purpose be sent. Parties requiring an answer should enclose a stamp.

Contents Bills and Show Cards may be obtained on application to the Publishers.

Advertisements should be sent to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

Prepaid Advertisements are inserted at the rate of thirty words for 1s. 4d.

BLACKPOOL.— Anglo-Israelites will find COMFORTABLE APARTMENTS, Public or private, near Sea or Gardens, at Mrs. Breakells, 39, Adelaide Street.

Just published—Cloth, 2s. 6d.—a re-issue of

The Origin of Masonic Ritual and Tradition:

A Lecture on the Three Degrees, by BRO. WM. ROWBOTTOM, P.M., 1028, with facsimile of a very rare Masonic engraving published in 1789.

"Exquisitely clear and singularly correct in everything wherein I may be any authority or guide."—Professor PIAZZI SMYTH. "Will be found of considerable interest to many besides Masons."—Church Bells.

Oxford: S. Rowbottom and Son; London: R. Banks and Son, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C.; and F. W. Parry and Co., 29, Paternoster Row, E.C.

Price Five Shillings.—"Substantially and attractively got up, and profusely illustrated."—Oldham Chronicle.

Eildon Grange: A Tale.

By ANDREW CLARK, M.A., Vicar of St. Michael's, Oxford. "One of the most charming books. . . . The illustrations are full of playful humour."—Scotsman. "The book is undoubtedly a happy one."—The Oxford Magazine. "Both entertaining and bracing."—Dundee Advertiser.

Oxford: S. Rowbottom and Son; London: Hamilton, Ad. ms and Co., 32, Paternoster Row, E.C.

☞ Ask for this Book at the Libraries.

WORKS BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

The History of the House of Israel. How They Were Lost and How They Were Found. Told for the children. Price 6d., cloth 1s.; post free 7d. and 1s. 1d. Fifth edition.

A Resume of the Scriptural Argument Proving the Identity of the British Race with the Lost Ten Tribes. Price 1d.; 6s. per hundred postage 6d.

Anglo-Israelism. True, Not False. Being Philo-Israel's Reply to the Rev. Canon Bell's pamphlet, "Anglo-Israelism: True or False?" Price 1d., 6s. 6d. per 100. 16 pages, crown 8vo.

An Elementary Digest or Sketch of the Chief Facts and Teachings of the Great Pyramid of Egypt. Adapted to the Unlearned and Unscientific 56 pages. Illustrated with Diagrams, price 4d., post free 5d. 10th Thousand.

Our Identity with the House of Israel. Price 4d., Reprinted from "Clifton Chronicle Letters"

Our Identity: What it is Not; What it is; and Our Obligations To-day in Respect to it Being a Lecture recently delivered in London by Philo-Israel, and published by special request. Price 2d., a reduction for quantities.

Are the English People the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel? An Inquiry Establishing the Identity of the British Nation with the Lost Ten Tribes. 4d.

Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

SOUND, PURE, WHITE TEETH!

Those who value these will try

CARBOLINE

(The Great Sanitary Tooth Paste).

1/6 & 2/6 per Pot.

Through Chemists, or post free from the Makers,

GEORGE & WELCH

WORCESTER.

Lancet writes:—"To save the teeth use a good carbolic daily."

Just Published, price 1d., 6 copies post free for Six stamps, 6/6 per 100, carriage paid.

FACTS AND PROBABILITIES

Respecting the Identity of the British and American Nations with the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel,

Compiled by DELTA.

London: ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-st.

Price 2d., by post 2½d. Second Edition, Revised.

A SUMMARY OF ANGLO-ISRAELITE TEACHING,

And of the Scripture Proofs on which it rests.

By SURGEON-GEN. J. M. GRANT, M.D.,

President of the Cheltenham Association, and Vice-President of the Metropolitan Anglo-Israel Association.

London: Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street.

New Work on the Identity of Lost Israel

By the late BISHOP TITCOMB.

Now ready, in Cloth Gilt, Bevelled Boards Imperial 8vo. Price 3s.; sent Post Free for Postal Order or Stamps.

A MESSAGE TO THE CHURCH

FROM

THE NINETEENTH CENTURY

BY THE LATE

RT. REV. BISHOP TITCOMB, D.D.

ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet Court, Fleet Street.
F. W. PARRY & Co., 29, Paternoster Row, E.C.

Price 2s. 6d., Cheap Edition, 1/-

BIBLE LESSONS AND REFLECTIONS.

By ROBERT GAIRDNER, of Kilmarnock, N.B.

"Mr. Gairdner has given us in his book a series of Bible lessons, with his own reflections added thereto, and though he has been very cautious in the latter, and has not committed himself too broadly, he has plainly let it be seen that he is an Anglo-Israelite by conviction, and that the Scriptures which he quotes at length and extensively throughout his book, are meant to teach Our Identity and God's faithfulness, from first to last, to His promises to Abraham and His seed for ever."—Banner of Israel.

ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-st

WORKS BY PASTOR CHINIQUY

Cloth, gilt lettered, 5s. Sent post free for P.O.

FIFTY YEARS IN THE CHURCH OF ROME.—Complete Revised Edition on good paper, well bound in Cloth, Gilt Lettered, nearly 600 pages. With New Portrait and Autograph of the Author. "No history like it since the time of Luther."—New York Witness. Be particular to order the Complete Edition published by Banks.

1s., post free 1s. 2d.

THE PRIEST THE WOMAN, AND THE CONFESSIONAL.—"In its pages will be found ample evidence of the danger of the Confessional."—English Churchman.

Price 6d. in paper covers; on toned paper, in cloth boards, gilt lettered, 1s., post free for stamps.

PAPAL IDOLATRY. An Exposure of the Dogma of Transubstantiation and Mariolatry, to which is added "My Reasons Why I will Never Go Back to the Church of Rome." The Bible Christian Magazine says:—"Unanswerable! The most powerful argument against Transubstantiation, in the same space, that we have read.

R. BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

THE WATERS OF HERMON.

THE interesting circumstance of the re-production by modern science of these celebrated Waters of Antiquity, so famed in Biblical times, is one of the most important illustrations of the advance of the age. Differing from all other Waters they contain no mineral ingredients, so that the system, instead of being lowered by their use, is steadily built up, while the functions of life are restored to a healthy condition. And it is, therefore, with extreme gratification that this is now brought within the reach of the general public. The well-known curative properties of this famous medicine are promptly manifested in the following disorders:—Indigestion, Biliousness, Congestion of the Liver, Nausea and Vomiting, Disorders of the Stomach and Bowels and their consequences, Constipation, Piles, Flatulence, Repletion, Spasms, Discomfort or Pain after Meals, Pain Between the Shoulders, Pains in the Back and Loins, Cold in the Head, Coughs of various character, Difficulty of Breathing, Giddiness and Sick Headache, Effects of Alcohol, Overworked Brain, Affections of the Nerves, &c. Price 2s. 9d. per bottle, post free. THE WATERS OF HERMON DEPOT, 107, King Street, Hammersmith, London.

INVALUABLE REMEDY

Published by ROBERT BANKS & SON,

RACQUET COURT, FLEET STREET, E.C.

Postal Orders may be obtained at any Post Office in the United Kingdom for the following amounts: 1s., 1s. 6d., ½d. each; 2s., 2s. 6d., 3s., 3s 6d. 4s., 4s. 6d., 5s., 7s. 6d., 10s., 10s. 6d., 1d each; 15s., 20s., 1½d. each. They should be "crossed" City Bank, Ludgate Hill, E.C. Stamps received.

JEHOVAH TRIUMPHANT. The New and Complete Theology and Electric Light of the Bible, containing the History of British-Israel, Compiled from the Sacred Scriptures. Cloth gilt, price 10s. 6d., post free for Postal Order or Cheque.

THE GEOGRAPHY OF THE GATES. By PHILO-ISRAEL. With Map, and six full page, and one double-page, Illustrations, printed on plate paper. 208 pages, in handsome cloth, gilt. Price 3s. 6d.; post free.

THE WORD: THE WORLD: THE BRANCH By J. LEYLAND FIELDEN, Esq. Price 12s., post free.

EPHRAIM-ENGLAND. The Nineteenth Century Revelation of the Fruits of History. By Rev. R. DOUGLAS, Vicar of Kidsgrove. Cloth gilt, lettered, 4s., gilt edges 5s., free by post.

FIFTY REASONS WHY THE ANGLO-SAXONS ARE ISRAELITES of the Lost Tribes of the House of Israel. By Rev. W. H. POOLE, D.D. Price 6d., post free 7d.

BIBLE LESSONS AND REFLECTIONS. By the late ROBERT GAIRDNER, of Kilmarnock, N.B. Price 2s. 6d., by post 2s. 9d.; cheap edition, limp cloth, 1s., by post, 1s. 2d.

THE ANGLO-ISRAEL POST-BAG; or, How Arthur Came to See It. By the Right Rev. BISHOP TITCOMB. Price 2s. 6d. in cloth gilt; paper cover, 1s. 6d., by post 1d. extra.

THE ISRAELITES FOUND IN THE ANGLO-SAXONS. The Ten Tribes supposed to have been Lost, traced from the land of their captivity to their occupation of the Isles of the Sea. By WILLIAM CARPENTER. Price 2s. 6d., by post 2s. 8d.

THE ANSWER TO THE EASTERN QUESTION, With Some Facts Concerning the Identity of the British With Israel. By the Author of "The New Old Story." enlarged. Price 3d.; for distribution, 50 copies, 11s., post free.

CARDINAL PROOFS THAT THE BRITISH Are the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel—the Abrahamic Covenant. By F. W. PHILLIPS. With two chapters by PHILO-ISRAEL. Price 6d., post free 7d.

THE NEW OLD STORY. By "A E I." Price 6d., post free; in cloth, 1s., post free.

THE BIBLE ATLAS. To Illustrate the Old and New Testaments. Price 1s.; post free 1s. 1d.

ANGLO-ISRAEL TRACTS. 8 pp. Royal 16mo., on toned paper. Adapted to enclose in letters, and for general distribution. No. 1—12. Half-penny each, 12 copies, post free, 6d. Specimen packet for 6 stamps.

HUMAN LIFE.—FIFTY YEARS' Record of Facts, Principles, and Discoveries (just published complete) Relating to the Improvement and Preservation of Human Life on Earth. Origin and true treatment of diseases. A series of articles by DR. SAMUEL BIRLEY, M.D., Ph.D. Book form, 50 pages. SENT FREE to every applicant by the publishers, GORDON B. MURRAY & CO., 50, Theobald's-road, Holborn, E.C. Write to-day

PIANOFORTES, Harmoniums, American Organs. Why buy at shops inferior made instruments, and pay large profits, when you can buy direct from the Maker High-class Instruments, and save 50 per cent. by so doing? Full value allowed for old Instruments in exchange as part payment. Write for Price Lists and Testimonials to G. LINNSTEAD, 2, Oseney Crescent, Camden Road, London. Established 1874.

Certain HARNESS' Cure.

ELECTROPATHIC BELT

FOR

SCIATICA

R. J. WATSON, Esq., 13, Market Street, Harwich, writes:—"Harness' Electropathic Belt has completely cured me of sciatica. After wearing it for a week I got better, and am now quite free from pain."

Guaranteed to generate a mild continuous current of Electricity, which speedily cures all Disorders of the Nerves, Stomach, Liver and Kidneys. Thousands of Testimonials. Pamphlet & Advice free on application to Mr. C. H. Harness, Consulting Electrician, the Medical Battery Co. Ltd.

Only Address,

52, OXFORD ST. LONDON. W. (Corner of Rathbone Place)

Call to-day, if possible, or write at once

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED for the Proprietors by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C., F. W. PARRY (late GUEST & Co.), 29 PATERNOSTER-ROW. WEDNESDAY, JULY 4, 1888 [All rights reserved.

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."
(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India.)

"And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the Forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS of the EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. XII., No. 602. Entered at Stationers' Hall.] WEDNESDAY, JULY 11, 1888. [PRICE ONE PENNY.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
The Brotherhood of the Anglo-Saxon Race	277
Israel's Native Fellow-Helpers in the Defence of India	278
The Gentile Church. By Surgeon-General J. M. Grant, M.D.	279
"Happy art Thou, O Israel"	280
A Nonconforming Minister Gives Evidence	280
The Promises to the Fathers	281
Thoughts on Britannia for English Israelites. By E. Pearse	282
Mr. H. A. Marchant's Work at the Brighton Beach	283
Correspondence	283

THE BROTHERHOOD OF THE ANGLO-SAXON RACE.

How comes it that on all sides the subject of the closely approaching union of the presently divided Anglo-Saxon race is commanding attention? The Times frequently discusses the subject and dwells in remarkable language on the glories of the coming Federation of States of the Anglo-Saxon race, the greatest the world has ever seen. St. James's Gazette had an equally remarkable article on March 29 last, in respect to "The Future of the English-speaking Peoples," meaning the inhabitants of these islands and the people of the United States. At the banquet given to Mr. Chamberlain on his return from his late successful mission to America to settle the Fisheries dispute Mr. John Bright spoke in glowing terms of our brethren across the water, and declared that America and the British would never come to blows. This fact and expectation leads men to anticipate the other and more splendid result, which Mr. John Bright unfortunately does not see, namely, that "the Brotherhood of the Anglo-Saxon Race," will yet be demonstrated before the world by a confederation of the various English-speaking peoples which will place the world at their feet." The writer in the St. James's Gazette paints in brilliant language the possibilities of the future, and we cannot do better than ask our readers to peruse the sentiments. He said:—

"In the past, men have spoken by convention of the brotherhood of the Anglo-Saxon race; but to-day the fact grows towards certainty, that the lapse of years, the recurrence perhaps of friendly missions such as that so happily closed, possibly the incidence of hostile alarm, will knit together, into more real union, the empires of Great Britain and the United States. What may be the steps of the progress towards reunion, what checks, what doubts may beset its path, who shall say? yet many will believe in the likelihood of it as well as the hope for it. No mere questions of commercial interest can finally bar the way of that great re-union—a re-union, not necessarily of fellow-subjects, but one of equal partnership in a splendid future; for before the consummation of the highest wishes of our race, meaner things will cease from troubling. Here, then, is one side of the picture, too little looked on by Mr. Bright; and yet another remains. If the future drawing together of the English-speaking race in Europe and America already looms large, is not there yet more likelihood of a closer knitting together of Great Britain and its colonies? Mr. Bright says not; for no man in Australia or the Cape of Good Hope—or, for the like of that, in Canada—will fetter himself with the quarrels and foolish policy of European diplomacy. If that were true, what should we say of the colonial volunteers in our late wars, or the ready enthusiasm of the Canadians? But it is not so; and for the best of reasons—that the forces of this country are the necessary defence of her vast and scattered dependencies. In the knowledge of mutual self-dependence lies the key to the story of our future. Scattered though they are, the English peoples of Australasia, of Africa, and America, hold the most temperate portions of the globe, and link its surface with an endless chain. They have no desire for conquest; but they will be dangerous to attack and swift to co-operate. Their daily lives filled with the quiet energy of commerce, the English-speaking peoples will spread their empire by peaceful adventure. The quiet villages of rural England and its busy marts will rise again in many distant scenes, and the spirit and traditions of the race will inspire and lend cohesion to a hundred new communities. This vast concourse of people of the same blood, may stand as one man, one in common loyalty and common endeavour. That is no hopeless picture of the future—whatever Mr. Bright may say."—So far the journalist.

No doubt Mr. Bright is right regarding the British Colonies or company of nations at the present moment. They would not just now consent to enter into a Federation with their old Mother in the West or with each other. The constraining motive has not been applied to them as yet! The incidence of hostile alarm has not yet taken place. It may be that God has His incidents ready for the proper time, and when they come, fear will possibly drive the Colonial Empire to close their ranks, and present an unbroken front to a threatening world in arms! God's resources are many, men's are very few. What we see at present is the salient fact that one race is "spread abroad to the West, to the East, to the North, and to the South," and all the most temperate portions of the globe, with the Gates thereof, "to serve as connecting links," are in their hands; our secular writers themselves being the witnesses. The Federation will we feel sure be effected by the impulse of an overwhelming danger, and that danger will override all the petty jealousies which now make the Australian colonies for instance draw apart from one another and refuse to unite on any subject, as is the case to-day. New South Wales seems the chief offender; but a national terror which the Lord can easily bring to bear upon them, will in due time no doubt dissipate all jealousies. A company of allied nations must be formed of Israel's descendants in these our last days, and we see them actually before us; ready formed, loyal to a fault in respect to the parent State in the Western Isles, and dependent entirely upon her, as yet, for their necessary defence against their many enemies, present and future; "mutual self-dependence" is indeed "the key of the story of our empire for the future." Its various parts are scattered in the four quarters of the globe, and the endless chain which unites them is the ocean, commanded by "the Gates" God's unique gift to Israel. It is strange that the Rev. Robert Douglas, for instance, is unable to recognise in our nation's coaling stations, "Israel's Gates," but that he defined the latter in a recent lecture published in the Hastings and St. Leonards News of April 6, as "the supreme power of judgment over his enemies," whatever that may mean. The means by which our nation "rules the waves" is the possession of the strategical places abutting on the ocean, which give our fleets supplies of coal, means to refit, and places of rendezvous.

Digitized by Google

"The Gates of the daughter of Zion" in Psa. ix. 14, R.V., is translated in the Prayer-book version as "the Ports of the Daughter of Zion," and this we believe to have been in the mind of God when in Gen. xxii. 17, He sware "to Abraham and his seed for ever" that to them He would give "the possession of the Gate of their enemies." These Gates or ports are strategic places at sea, giving the possessors the command of the ocean, and by means of them there accrues to the British people the supremacy of the sea and the ability to defend the outland colonial nations, who look to Britain of the "Isles of the West" to provide for their safety. When that safety is really in jeopardy, we shall find the Federation of the company of Israelitish nations will follow as a matter of course! But even then, the ability to carry out that mighty prophetic change, will rest upon the foundation of The Gates, which our Teutonic theorists naturally despise, since the promise forms part of the birthright which is Joseph's or Ephraim's, not excluding the tribes of Israel his "fellows," or "companions." (Ezek. xxxvii. 16, 19, A. and R.V.). They fail to recognise the latter companionship, and therefore deny our nation's exclusive possession of a gift which was never tied up to Ephraim's tribe alone.

ISRAEL'S NATIVE FELLOW-HELPERS IN THE DEFENCE OF INDIA.

THE following comes by telegraph from Calcutta, and is being repeated in the newspapers at home:—

The Ameer, in an able article on the defence of India, analyses and discusses the various offers of money and troops made by certain feudatory princes to the Government. The total amount of money offered reaches 1.03.80.000 rupees, including Hyderabad, 60.00.000 rupees; Cashmere, 10.00.000 rupees; Jodhpore, 10.00.000 rupees; Bhurtpore, 8.00.000 rupees; Kota, 6.00.000 rupees; Kapurthalah, 5.00.000 rupees; Nabha, 4.00.000 rupees; and Maler Kotla 80.000 rupees. These princes offer troops in addition. Of the other princes, the ruler of Mysore expresses a wish to raise and maintain a suitable military force, trained by British officers; the ruler of Patiala offers troops whenever required; the ruler of Bhawalpore a contingent of troops and money aid proportioned to his resources; the ruler of Tonk the services of himself, his family, his troops, and the whole resources of his state; the ruler of Alwar money and troops whenever required; the ruler of Rampore to defray the expense incurred in raising and maintaining a native infantry regiment in every war, together with all the resources of his state; the ruler of Mandi the services of himself and the resources of his state; the rulers of Suket and Manket the like; the ruler of Loharu the services of himself, his brothers, his property, and a caravan of 50 camels; and the ruler of Chamba, land for cantonments.

A million sterling is not a trifling sum to represent the good and loyal wishes of some of the native princes of India, as their contribution towards the defence of the peninsula against the anticipated attacks of Russia. The native troops of the feudatory states are also at the disposal of the paramount power in the event of an invasion from the North-west. How the great Mahratta states of Holkar and Scindia are going to aid, is not yet announced; but we do not suppose they will be behindhand as compared with the rest. Russia calculates we believe on the disloyalty of the Indian nations to the British Râj as a factor in favour of her proposed invasion whenever it may take place. But we imagine the idea must now be laid aside, since the bare rumour of the designs of Russia has been sufficient to stir up the latent loyalty of the feudatory states, and induce them betimes to come forward with pecuniary help in defence of the Empire—help which already reaches over a million sterling. These offers are only valuable as showing that the native princes have thrown in their lot with their British Suzerain, and that there is no question of a desire to cast off that yoke in order that that of Russia might be assumed instead. India is God's good gift to His people Israel, as Psa. cxi. 6 teaches us: "He showeth," says the Revised Version, "His people the power of His works, in giving them the heritage of the nations." The Indian races are such Gentile races, or "nations," and He hath shown to the world the wondrous power of God in giving to the chosen people British-Israel, the heritage of the heathen in their native lands; and not only so, but He has made the nations willing subjects of their conqueror, since the Government of the latter is a righteous rule, one the heathen know is the best the world can give them. They are therefore anxious and willing to sustain and defend it, knowing that Russia's domination, the only one which could succeed it, would be tyranny itself in comparison.

The action of the Indian feudatory princes corroborates in a marked way the verdict of the peasantry of Arabia and Africa, and of the fellaheen of Syria and Egypt, who, when they hear of British rule in Hindostan, inquire when the Islanders propose to assume the sovereignty in their lands also, and confer upon them the benefits and blessings they are assured are enjoyed by the more fortunate ryots of Hindostan.

By their conduct the Indian native states declare that they bless the British for the Government they confer upon them; and God, true to His promise in Gen. xii. 3, has blessed India in every possible imaginable way. He has given the native races peace and safety, abounding commerce and national wealth. He has granted them "multitudinousness," such that the problem is now how they are to be fed in the time to come. He has sent the Gospel to them by the hand of British Missionary Societies, and the Bible, which is His Word, also His Sabbaths and His laws by the same honoured instrumentality. Surely never were such signal blessings granted to any nation as the 250 millions of men in the native Indian states have received at our hands. God has blessed them because they have blessed Israel, and served His chosen ones, the sons of the living God (1 Chron. xvi. 13; Hosea i. 10). They have publicly consented to serve His people, and therefore the Indian feudatories have neither wasted away nor perished, according to the prophecy in Isa. lx. 12 (R.V.): "For that nation and kingdom that will not serve thee shall perish; yea, those nations shall be utterly wasted." India's condition is the very opposite of this, and therefore may we, as Israel, praise the Lord for all His goodness and mercies to the nations of India.

IT is stated that the Queen has consented to become patron of the movement for celebrating at Plymouth the tercentenary of the defeat of the Spanish Armada.

Digitized by Google

THE GENTILE CHURCH.

By Surgeon-General J. M. Grant, M.D.

It may be interesting to enquire whether it is possible to reconcile the generally received view of the commentators that when the oracles of God were taken from the Jews, they were committed to the Gentile Church with our contention resting upon the express declaration of Jesus that they were committed to A nation, that nation being, of necessity, Israel.

There are only three churches extant which can claim to be of apostolic origin—the British, which includes the Protestant Churches throughout the world, the Roman, and the Greek. It will scarcely be contended that the gospel was committed to these three indiscriminately, and therefore it becomes necessary for those who maintain the Church theory to choose one from amongst them ; and I think we may say without fear of contradiction that their choice must fall, and that it does fall on the British Church. The term "Church" is more or less misleading because it is very generally used in a restricted sense, being applied either to the ecclesiastical organization only, to the ministers rather than the people, or to a certain exclusive and comparatively small portion of the community. Thus, when we hear of "the Church," we apply the expression to the Church of England, and very generally to those who hold office in it, only, excluding the members, as well as the large body of Nonconformists, whereas the Church consists of pastors and people, so that before there was any dissent, it included the whole population. The church was the nation, and the nation the church. Now I think that few churchmen will venture to say that our Nonconformist brethren are outside the pale of the Christian church, and therefore as the aggregate of all denominations of Christians constitutes the Christian church, so it also constitutes the nation. The Church by law established is the Church of God in Great Britain, while Great Britain is the Church of God in the world.

Another point which does not seem to have been sufficiently considered by those who regard the custody of the gospel as an ecclesiastical, rather than a national privilege is that the Church, using the expression in its more restricted sense, is quite powerless to spread it. The vast expenditure of money upon which our missionary work depends is provided for by the people, not as a compulsory levy, but a free-will offering to the Lord. Civilization, as Livingstone well observes, must go before the gospel—the Bible must follow the sword—let peace societies and aborigines' protectionists clamour as they will. This has been the rule in Israel from the days of Joshua until now,—the nations must be "subdued" by God's chosen people Israel, "His battle axe and weapons of war," before they can be brought to Christ. This is God's own appointment, and for this purpose He has given His people the heritage of the heathen, (Psa. cxi. 6) and established them as a Christian civilizing nation in all parts of the world. It is unnecessary to pursue this argument further. Let our church evangelizers tell us what would become of all their missionary work if Spain had the dominion of the sea.

I have already said that there are only three Christian churches extant : and they are all Gentile, while it is certain that the church which Christ established and founded on the prophets of the Old Testament, and the apostles of the New, was Israelitish, and destined to remain so till the end of the world. No truth in the Bible is more clearly stated than this, for He says to His Hebrew followers, "Go ye unto all the world and preach the gospel to every creature, and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." This Church must therefore exist now, and it must be the only true Christian church in the world, because Christ founded one church only, not two or more; and therefore we must look for it as one of the professing Christian churches which we have enumerated. But how can this be if all these churches are Gentile ? The objection is a reasonable one, and requires to be fairly and fully met. It is very certain that the church we are in search of does not exist amongst the Jews, and it is equally so that, using the word "Gentile" in what the Revisers calls its "moral sense," the distinction between Jew and Gentile no longer exists, although the nationality of Israel remains as distinct as it always was, and always must be. In Old Testament times the distinction between an Israelite and a Gentile was that the one was in covenant with God, under the law of Moses, and the other was not. The ceremonial law was a hard and fast line of demarcation between them ; and it was only by conforming to its requirements that the stranger could join himself to the Lord; but when Christ came, all this was changed. He fulfilled the ceremonial law, and abolished it, thus breaking down the middle wall of partition, and doing away with all religious distinction between Jew and Greek, barbarian, Scythian, bond, or free, as far as the reception of the gospel was concerned, although its promulgation was still committed to Israel, as we learn from Acts x. 39—42, and other passages of Scripture.

When Israel of the Ten Tribes was sent into captivity, she was divorced permanently and irretrievably from the covenant which she had broken, the sentence pronounced upon her by the prophet of the Lord being, "I will no more have mercy upon the House of Israel, but will utterly take her away." As long as the dispensation of the law continued in force, it was utterly impossible that she could be restored to God's favour. She was divorced from God—no longer His people—and became Gentile; like the nations amongst which she was scattered, and therefore, although Christ came to be a light to the Gentiles, and for salvation to the ends of the earth, His primary mission was, as He Himself declares, to the lost sheep of the House of Israel, to bring them again into favour with God, under the new covenant, which the Jews, for the present, refuse ; not only extending to them the salvation which He wrought for all the world, but being also their "glory," by restoring the kingdom to Israel, not in the way that the Jews expected, but by bringing their lost and outcast brethren into the bond of the covenant, and raising them to the position of chief of all the nations of the earth, a kingdom of priests, and an holy nation—the church of God in the world, and if our divines will receive it, the "Gentile Church" of the commentators, although they did not so understand their paraphrase.

It is necessary to remember what is too generally forgotten, that the promises made to Israel by Moses and the prophets refer to the latter days. They are enumerated in the 28th chapter of Deuteronomy, and in the 30th chapter are made conditional upon their turning to the Lord, in the countries whither He would drive them; and that they did so turn to the Lord is established not only by the prophets, but the apostles, for it is evident, or should be, to the most cursory reader of the epistles of St. Peter and St. Paul, that they are addressed to this same people in their dispersion. In Gen. xlix. 1, we read that Jacob called his sons together to tell them what would befall them in the latter days; and Balaam, in his magnificent prophecies of the future greatness of Israel, refers it to the latter, or last days, clearly indicating the Christian dispensation by adding that a star should come out of Jacob, and a sceptre arise out of Israel, which should smite the corners of Moab. It is usual to relegate the promises to Israel to the millennium, but that cannot be the time to which Balaam referred, because that will be a reign of peace, during which there will be no smiting of the corner, or coasts of Moab, or any other people. Besides, St. Paul distinctly affirms that the promises which God made to the fathers, He had confirmed to their children in the resurrection of Jesus. Lastly, we read in Gen. xlviii. that when Jacob blessed the two sons of Joseph, on his deathbed, he prophesied that Ephraim, the representative of his father's house, should become the fulness of the Gentiles, that is, a teeming Gentile nation; and St. Paul teaches in Rom. iv. that as the promises were made to Abraham while he was in uncircumcision, so they have been fulfilled, not to circumcised

Digitized by Google

Judah, under the law (v. 14), but to uncircumcised, believing Gentile Israel (v. 11), the other portion of the seed which was called in Isaac (Gen. xvii. 21; xxi. 12), God's own appointed witnesses—a people whom He had formed for Himself, that they might show forth His praise—the "Gentile Church" of the Christian dispensation.

"HAPPY ART THOU, O ISRAEL!"

NATIONAL happiness is what God promised to Israel in Deut. xxxiii. (R.V.) by the mouth of His prophet Moses. That chapter, which is in truth a sublime Hebrew poem, the composition of the Spirit of God Himself, tells us why Israel is happy and what causes her to be so.

In the first place her enemies are conquered by the Lord Jehovah, who thrusts them out before her (ver. 27); and consequently, "Israel dwelleth in safety." "The fountain of Jacob alone" (ver. 28). The expression recalls the prophecy of Balaam, "Lo, it is a people that dwelleth alone" (Numb. xxiii. 9, R.V.). They "dwell alone" as a people of "separation"; so esteemed because God is with them and accompanies them always (Exod. xxxiii. 16, R.V.).

"They dwell alone,
In a land of corn and wine:
Yea, His heavens drop down dew.
Happy art thou, O Israel!
Who is like unto thee, a people saved by Jehovah,
The shield of thy help:
And that is the sword of thy excellency!
And thine enemies shall submit themselves unto thee,
And thou shalt tread upon their high places"
(Deut. xxxiii. 28, 29).

Additional reason is assigned in verses 26, 27 for Israel's happy lot, "dwelling alone" among the nations in privilege.

"The Lord rideth upon the heavens for thy help,
And in His excellency on the skies.
The eternal God is thy dwelling-place,
And underneath are the everlasting arms!"

Surely no people were ever so honoured before, or so safeguarded as Israel! God is her defence, her sanctuary, her dwelling-place, and her loving, nursing, Guardian. No wonder she is regarded as a people "dwelling alone," "not reckoned or reckoning herself among the nations or heathen" (Gentiles) (Num. xxiii. 9, R.V.).

The hymn of Moses in Deut. xxxiii. seems to have a blessing for each of the Tribes, excepting Judah and Simeon. The latter is not mentioned at all, though it is supposed the name is omitted from verse 6, thus, "Yet, Simeon, let not his men be few." In Judah's case, verse 7 certainly conveys no blessing to that Tribe, but prays the Lord to spare and help it in its affliction.

"Hear, Lord, the voice of Judah:
And bring him in unto his people.
With his hands he contended for himself:
And Thou shalt be an help against his adversaries."

The rest are true blessings declared to be the portion of the Ten Tribes, of which the lion's share is Joseph's in verse 13—17; the Tribe being divided at last into two—Ephraim and Manasseh; the former represented by "ten thousands," the latter only by "thousands." Joseph's blessings are indeed vast and splendid! God gave that Tribe an extra portion above his brethren, and blessed his land. He bestowed upon him also in an especial way "the good-will" of the triune Jehovah, "who dwelt in the bush." Consequently "majesty" is his; therefore the kingly, ruling power, represented by his firstling bullock. Military success is promised to Joseph's posterity, represented by the "pushing" ability of the horns of "the wild ox," or reem, which they possess; horns wherewith to "gore," or push at, push down, and push out "the peoples, all of them"—"even the ends of the earth." What people are at the ends of the earth, in India? the Malay Peninsula? Australasia? the South African Colonies? Patagonia? Gibraltar? Cyprus? They are the British, whose "pushing" powers have dispossessed the Indian native princes, the Malay rajahs, the Maori kings, the Australian black chiefs, the South African native kings, the Spanish commandant at Gibraltar, the Turkish suzerain in Cyprus, and all the ruling powers on almost all the (literal) "ends of the earth."

This same Joseph and his after-seed are blessed as to their land; including, we presume, that place of their own, "the appointed" place in these our British Islands. There the dew favours them, the waves of the surrounding ocean benefit them, the sun and the moon bless them, the coal and iron of the ancient mountains and of the everlasting hills bring them wealth, and the earth and its fulness will be in their favour. The Lord's good-will is of itself a supreme blessing; but when we know that it expresses and includes all spiritual blessings, the grandeur of this gift appears in all its glory. That seems to have been the burden of the angel's song of praise, when they appeared to the shepherds of Bethlehem.

"Glory to God in the highest,
And on earth peace among men in whom He is well pleased" (or margin, men of "good pleasure").

The men whom the Lord Jesus came to save and redeem were Israel, as the Holy Ghost testified by Zacharias in Luke i. 68—79, R.V., and they were those in whom He was well pleased. "The day-spring from on high visited them," and therefore on us their descendants, in order that by them the world at large might have light" (Psa. lxvii. 1—7, R.V.). Of all the Tribes the birthright-holder Joseph has in Deut. xxxiii. the largest share of temporal and spiritual gifts and blessings (1 Chron. v. 1, 2, R.V.). To Benjamin, in verse 12, there were some choice gifts made, and to Asher (verse 24, 25) increased favour and strength were granted. The blessing of the Lord Jehovah was conferred on Naphtali (verse 23). Levi was honoured as the teacher of the law to Israel, and Reuben and Gad had enlargement conferred on them. But amid all the blessings of the Tribes, Moses, like Jacob in Gen. xlix., dwells with rapture on Joseph's portion, as containing everything for time, and much for eternity as well. Well may the Lord conclude with the words:—

"Happy art thou, O Israel!
Who is like unto thee, a people saved by the Lord.
The shield of thy help,
The sword of thine excellency."

We have need indeed to praise and glorify God for His goodness to us as a nation, because, being Israel, we are the heirs of such splendid blessings; not the rewards of merit on our part, but as His free gifts, through Jesus Christ, our Saviour and Redeemer.

A NONCONFORMING MINISTER GIVES EVIDENCE.

THE Echo lately, when noticing some popular preachers, stated that the Rev. C. A. Berry, formerly minister of the principal Congregational Church of Wolverhampton, had created quite a sensation when he was advertised to preach in Dr. Parker's church, the "City Temple." This arose from the fact that Mr. Berry had been elected by the Brooklyn congregation in America to fill the place of the late Henry Ward Beecher—over the heads of all the Nonconforming Congregationalists in the United States. To hear and see such a man, who had further declined the proposed honour, large numbers went to Dr.

Digitized by Google

Parker's church, and this is what the correspondent of the London paper describes as what he saw and heard:—

Mr. Berry did not make his appearance in Dr. Parker's spacious pulpit until the singing of the hymn before the sermon, and then he stood before the congregation a dark-bearded, thick-set man of middle height, who looked far more like a layman than a clergyman.

Of all the sayings of this man of coming men, that which struck me most forcibly was the bold declaration that "England, in the spiritual sense, is the modern Israel," by which, of course, he meant that England is God's chosen witness in these latter days, and that to the Anglo-Saxon race is chiefly committed the task of evangelising the world which Ancient Israel never attempted. It may seem strange to some that at the end of the nineteenth century a popular preacher of the Broad Evangelical school should speak in this way, but the fact is that the Lost Ten Tribes theory is but a vulgar materialisation of an old Puritan idea which has never died out, and which now shows as much vitality as ever. The prose works of Milton are saturated with it; as, for example, when in his treatise on Reformation in England he speaks of England "having had this grace and honour from God, to be the first that should set up a standard for the recovery of lost truth, and blow the first evangelic trumpet to the nations, holding up, as from a hill, the new saving light to all Christendom." As an illustration of the modern vitality of the idea, I dropped into a May meeting last week and heard a thousand people singing this:—

"Lift thy song among the nations,
England of the Lord beloved!
Sing the grace for generations
That hath kept thy lamp unmoved;
Sing how vainly hosts assembled
'Gainst the isle of His delight,
Sing how tyrants turned and trembled
When his arm upheld thy right.
Sing how He His England crownèd
When He loosed the yoke of Rome;
Sing how He His truth enthronèd
In this consecrated home."

This fervid pious patriotism has its dangerous side. David taught the ancient Hebrews to sing, "In Judah is God known; His name is great in Israel," and their descendants were the Pharisees! A.

Here there is a fresh and new view of our doctrines. They are, it seems, relics of the old Puritan ideas, and, therefore, as Milton shared them, we ought at least to be acquitted of wicked, crazy, tendencies, abhorrent to all lovers of God's word and of His truth! It seems, however, that A. deems ours a "vulgar materialisation of the Puritan's faith," though "our vitality in holding the belief is as strong as in the olden times!" We do not know whether the Rev. C. A. Berry goes quite as far as we do in respect to Our Identity, or whether, after all, he only holds the opinion of the Rev. Vicar of Hull, Mr. Kroënig, namely, that "the British are the modern" (spiritual?) "Israel," but by no means the literal people according to the flesh, scripturally known as "The Remnant of Israel" (Jer. xxxi. 7, R.V.).

The correspondent of the Echo says that Mr. Berry holds that England is "the modern Israel in the spiritual sense," meaning "God's witness in these latter days," evangelising the world as ancient Israel never essayed to do. This, however, was what prophecy allotted to Israel according to the flesh to carry out, as Isa. xxvii. 6, R.V. affirms. Therefore, if the British nation is now doing that very same work, it is manifest she is not "spiritual Israel," whatever that phrase may mean (for it is not a scriptural term at all!), but must be the literal, flesh-and-blood Israel, the Ten Tribes, once lost and now found in the British Empire. The verse sung in Exeter Hall by the thousand "fervid pious patriots" teems with Identity allusions, as our readers can perceive, but A.'s comment on it is sadly out of place, since the hymn related to the House of Israel, whereas David was of the House of Judah, and the Pharisees were of Judah too. "All Jews are Israelites," it is true, but A. has yet to learn that "not all Israelites are Jews." Milton knew the distinction between the two Houses if A. does not, since he described his country, "England," as the first missionary nation, sending the Gospel "to the nations," and showing her light to the whole, so-called, "Christian world," which obviously the Jews cannot do! It appears to us that the ministers of religion, conforming and nonconforming, are gradually approaching the point when they will suddenly awake to the knowledge that there are extant two distinct Houses of the Hebrews, Israel and Judah—the latter under curse just now, and the former under blessing, and that our own country is the abode of Israel the blessed. Here we have, we see, the Rev. C. A. Berry declaring we are "the modern Israel, God's chosen witness to evangelise the world." The Rev. Vicar of Clifton, on the other hand, publishes his opinion that our countrymen are the happy and favoured race destined to conduct the Jews back to their land, as described in Isa. xviii. 1 and 7, also that they are the "ships of Tarshish," "the merchants of Tarshish, and all the young lions thereof," of Isa. lx. 9, and Ezek. xxxviii. 13, respectively; while the Rev. J. C. Kroënig, a Christian Israelite and vicar of Hull, declares boldly that Britain is the nation mentioned by our Lord as the successors of the Jews in the possession as grantees of the kingdom of God; bringing forth nationally the fruits thereof (Matt. xxi. 43; comp. Isa. xxvii. 6, R.V. and Gen. xli. 52).

These are all hopeful signs, and lead one to entertain the expectation that ere long the clergy as a body will accept "the craze," and believe that this nation after all is God's people Israel. May that speedily be the result, and to God be all the praise!

THE PROMISES TO THE FATHERS.

THE above is a title of a remarkable paper, by (presumably) an American writer, M. L. Streator, published in the Christian Standard, March 10th last, at Cincinnati, Ohio, United States. He treats the subject in rather an original way, but falls into the error of calling the great (and mighty) nation of Gen. xii. 2, a promise to Judah and the "Jewish nation." The writer was not aware, we suppose, that there was no "Jewish nation" so called, till after the return of the captivity from Babylon (Joseph. Antiq. xi. 7, 5), and that the promise of a Judah king to reign over Israel in perpetuity, did not make the latter a "Jewish people." His idea, however, is this (we regret that our space will prevent our quoting his whole paper):—God gave Abraham three promises. First, "I will make thee a great nation" (Gen. xii. 2). The second, "In thy seed shall all nations of the earth be blessed" (Gen. xxii. 18). The third, "Thou shalt be the father of many nations, or of a multitude of nations" (Gen. xvii. 4). The first, he says, concerns one nation; the second, all nations; the third many nations. The first he means to say, belongs to the Israelitish race ruled by a Judah king; the second, to Christ; the third, to Joseph. In the first, Judaism was developed. In the second, Christianity, and in the third exists the germ of the Anglo-Saxon race developing into many nations. These three promises are mutually related and dependent. The fulfilment of the first was the condition for the fulfilment of the second, and that of the second for the fulfilment of the third. The Hebrew nation and religion was a condition for the coming of Christ, and the revelation of the Gospel to all nations. The proclamation of the Gospel among all nations is a condition for the development of many nations of the Anglo-Saxon race in Christian civilization, and extension "to the utmost bound of the everlasting hills." Judaism gave a favourable condition for the revelation of Christianity, and Christianity was the indispensable condition for the civilization and world-wide diffusion of the Anglo-Saxon race. History confirms all this. The chosen family became a great nation, through whom the promised seed Christ came into the world. He announces the Gospel for all nations. The great nation having divided, the rejected branch becomes an innumerable people, who are converted to Christ, and they carry the Gospel to all nations, with civil and religious liberty to the four quarters of the globe. The latter part of this most valuable paper, which we hope will be printed separately and sold in England, we give in the author's own words:—

Digitized by Google

The scripture for the fulfilment of the third promise, "Thou shalt be a father of many nations," or, more accurately, "Thou shalt be the father of a multitude of nations," gives to Joseph the pre-eminence and blessing. This promise is antithetical to each of the others. Instead of relating to one nation, as in the first promise, it relates to many nations, a multitude of nations. Instead of relating to one seed, as in the second promise, it relates to an innumerable seed. Not unity but multiplicity is its distinguishing characteristic. In this promise the seed is not one, but many, multitudinous, innumerable. The third promise rests upon the second one as the indispensable condition for its fulfilment. The one seed, the anointed person, gathers to Himself the innumerable seed of the chosen race. The Christ is the personal Servant of Jehovah; the people of Israel is the ethnical servant of Jehovah, through whose multitudinous seed, constituting "many nations," the triumphs of the Christ among "all nations" throughout the world are consummated. This is the Divine order, revealed of God, expressly declared in His Word. "Hear, ye deaf; and look, ye blind, that ye may see." Our God, the Omniscient, says, after depicting in the Psalm of the Cross the passion of the Redeemer:

"All ye seed of Jacob glorify Him;
And stand in awe of Him, all ye the seed of Israel" (Psa. xxii. 23).

Here He calls on the innumerable seed of the third promise to confide in the personal seed of the second promise.. They will obey the call. For again He declares, "In the Lord shall all the seed of Israel be justified, and shall glory" (Isa. xlv. 25). The mission of the personal Servant of Jehovah is "to bring Jacob again to Him, and that Israel be gathered unto Him," "to raise up the tribes of Jacob, and to restore the preserved of Israel," that they may become the messengers of His salvation unto the ends of the earth. (See Isa. xlix. 5, 6). Here is a Divine intimation that the people seeking for the restoration are the preserved of Israel. The conditions of salvation in Christ are the same to all. But the gifts and callings of God are not the same. God chooses the best agents for this purpose. As all cannot be the best, and all cannot in this respect, be called, Israel was the chosen race, and remains so to this day and for ever. For, as Paul himself says in treating of the restoration of Israel after a partial and temporal rejection, "the gifts and callings of God are without repentance" (Rom. ix. 29). There is no change of purpose in the mind of God. Addressing the people in the islands of the west at the ends of the earth, which accurately describes the British Islands, he says to them:—

"But thou, Israel, My servant,
Jacob, whom I have chosen,
The seed of Abraham, My friend;
Thou whom I have taken hold of
From the ends of the earth,
And called thee from the corners thereof,
And said unto thee,
Thou art My servant,
I have chosen thee
And not cast thee away" (Isa. xli. 8, 9).

The same people who were His peculiar messengers in the Mosaic age, become His best evangelists in the Christian age. Men thought that God had rejected them, that the tribes were lost. But the innumerable seed of the third promise were chosen of God from of old. They are not rejected. The Divine Spirit of infallible truth says:—

"Their seed shall be known among the nations,
And their offspring among the peoples:
All that see them shall acknowledge them,
That they are the seed which the Lord hath blessed" (Isa. lxi. 9).

This is the heritage of Israel. This is the blessedness of the Anglo-Saxons. They are known among the nations, their colonies among the peoples; all acknowledge that they are the race which the Lord hath blessed. The Anglo-Saxons possess the heritage of Israel. Therefore the Anglo-Saxons are Israel—Israel by nature as well as by grace. "Hear, ye deaf; and look, ye blind, that ye may see. Who is blind, but My servant? or deaf as My messenger that I send? who is blind as he that is at peace with Me, and blind as the Lord's servant? Thou seest many things, but thou observest not; his ears are open, but he heareth not (Isa. xlii. 18—20). God Almighty demands of us, His servants at peace with Him, His messengers sent by Him, that we open our ears and hear, that we look unto the evidence of His Word and providence, and see the truth concerning our own origin, for in it is involved our duty and destiny. In some respects we have acted blindly in doing His will. How much more joyous it will be to act with the eyes of our understanding lightened, that we may perceive the way in which our fathers' God has led us, and know the glorious destiny that awaits us!

THOUGHTS ON BRITANNIA FOR ENGLISH ISRAELITES.

By E. Pearse.

Britannia represents the British Empire. "Breth" is Hebrew for a covenant; "Ish" means people; therefore, without knowing it, we are entitling ourselves the "covenanted people," the "Brith—ones, or Britons=the people to whom Jehovah has given the kingdom, and dominion, and greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven (Dan. vii. 27), as we equally blindly style ourselves through our beautiful liturgy.

This covenanted one, this Britannia, is represented as (a) a woman; (b) seated on a rock (or the globe); (c) a helmet on her head; (d) a trident in one hand; (e) on her right side a lion; (f) and a combination of shield, ensign, and wheel on the other, each detail of the figure an identity.

(a) The woman is the betrothed (Hosea ii. 19, 20), the spouse (Cant. iv. 8), the bride (Isa. lxii. 5; Rev. xxi. 9, 10), the wife, once divorced (Isa. l. 1), but now received again (Isa. liv. 1—8).

(b) She is seated on a rock (or the globe). The kingdom she represents is founded on Jesus, the foundation stone, and the head corner stone, of which Jacob's stone in Westminster is a pledge. It is the kingdom of Nebuchadnezzar's dream—a stone at first, when, like David's stone, it prostrates the enemy (as at Waterloo); but after that it becomes a mountain filling the earth. Our Saviour uses the same metaphor, for He says, "The kingdom of God shall be . . . given to a nation, bringing forth the fruits thereof, and whosoever shall fall on this stone shall be broken," etc. (Matt. xxi. 43, 44). Sometimes Britannia is seated on the globe. That is another (more simply worldly) form of showing her world-wide power.

(c) "She has a helmet on her head" (Psa. cxl. 7). "O God, the Lord, the strength of my salvation, Thou hast covered my head in the day of battle" (also being redeemed she has the helmet of salvation. "O come, let us sing unto the Lord; let us heartily rejoice in the strength of our salvation").

(d) The trident in her hand directs us to the promise in Jer. xxxiii. 21, that the nation of Israel should never be without the priests, the Levites; therefore we have the flesh-hook of three teeth, tri—dent, mentioned in 1 Sam. ii. 13.

(e) The lion on her right requires no explanation, for we all know that Britannia's Queen is of the Tribe of Judah, whose emblem is the lion. There is also an evidence of the fulfilment of Balaam's prophecy. "The people shall rise up as a lion, and lift up himself as a young lion" (Num. xxiii. 23, 24). "He couched, he lay down as a lion, and as a great lion" (Num. xxiv. 9).

(f) But the last point in her representation, viz., on her left a combination of wheel, shield, and ensign, is more difficult to explain. The wheel refers to the cherubim of Ezek. i. Israel must be the cherubim, viz., the chaiath, or chariot of the glory of God. "He sitteth between the cherubim, be the earth never so unquiet." The shield reminds us of the promise to Abraham: "I am thy shield." Then the rest, the double cross: the diagonal cross points to the promise of multitude of nations, or, as St. Paul has it, the fulness of Gentiles, promised to Ephraim when Jacob rested his right hand on Ephraim (crossing his hands), and said he should be a multitude of nations.

England and her Colonies are a multitude of nations, and that ensign called the Union Jack flies everywhere, and proclaims that God is true. The fulness of nations has come, and the blindness is disappearing from Israel. The straight cross, the redemption cross, witnesses to her being a redeemed people. The Union

Digitized by Google

Jack, or Jacques, or Jacobus, or Jacob, introduced when the Scotch sceptre was joined to the Engel-ish (Engel, Heb., calf, Ephraim's emblem), reminds us that Ezekiel's prophecy of the Union of the sticks (rods or sceptres) was partly fulfilled when the Royal House of Judah and the Israelites with them were united to Ephraim (the first-born, the heir), and the Israelites his companions, and they became one sceptre, the lion and the unicorn, the supporters (in heraldry) of the throne of God.

MR. H. A. MARCHANT'S WORK AT THE BRIGHTON BEACH.

EVERY Monday evening at 8 p.m. during the Summer, Mr. H. A. Marchant of 60, Upper Lewes-rd., Brighton, delivers lectures near Pool Valley on the Beach at Brighton, taking for his subject, "Our Identity." The character of his addresses may be seen at a glance by reference to the following notice of one of them, by the Brighton Herald of June 30:—

"THE LOST TEN TRIBES.—Mr. H. A. Marchant, who is giving a course of lectures on British-Israel on Monday evenings about 8 o'clock on the Beach, near Pool Valley, continued his subject on Monday, calling special attention to the fact that all the Israelites were not Jews, and that the Ten-Tribed House of Israel are never called Jews from one end of the Bible to the other, and, whilst the prophecies declared that Christ should be rejected by Judah, the Jews, they distinctly declared that the Ephraimite House or the Ten Tribes would receive Him. Some persons smiled at the lecturer's remarks, but he urged his hearers to see if God had fulfilled the patriarchal promises, especially those made to the House of Joseph, to the Jews or to the English people. There was a fair attendance, and a good number of the copies of THE BANNER OF ISRAEL were distributed."

Mr. Marchant is anxious to have as much Identity literature of a sound character sent him as our friends can spare, and is particularly grateful to Capt. Geo. Bayly of Streatham for 1,000 copies of "The Thoughts for British Folks," the latter recently gave him; as well as for 350 BANNERS forwarded, he believes, by Miss J. Lawrence. His wish is to have 500 or 1,000 papers or leaflets of various sorts to distribute gratuitously every week to the large numbers who listen to him at his lectures or who can be induced by his distributors to accept copies of such literature on the sea-front.

Mr. Marchant is doing a very good work at Brighton, and God is blessing him in it. He asks our prayers and thanksgivings to Him who so employs him. Our aid further cannot be more acceptably rendered than by our affording him the spare copies of our BANNERS and other works we may happen to possess. He will see to their wide distribution in connection with his Monday evening open-air lectures, and will be thankful for the help.

Correspondence.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—I don't know if you will think this passage worthy of any consideration, but it seems to me striking, to say the least, and as a little independent testimony from one of the great writers of the day to the indestructibleness of our Empire, though he fails to hit the true key-note, I cannot resist sending it to you.

"An Australian writer, in a fine passage, has said of me that I am wont to turn with weariness and despondency from European international animosity, or suspicion and military rule, to the splendid spectacle, gratifying indeed to English pride, of young nations, offshoots of the United Kingdom, growing up to power and greatness in America and Australia, far away from the crushing burdens, and the feuds of the old world. That is so, and England has yet this upon her side, that in a higher degree even than Russia she is indestructible, and that come what disaster may to her insufficient armies, and her overburdened fleets, her race, her laws, and liberties must continue to flourish in half the world. But to the home-staying Englishman of the present day that may seem but poor consolation, and it has been my hope in writing these articles that I might be able to do some little towards helping the tiny old home-country to keep her place awhile as the mother of the flock."

[From an article in "Fortnightly Review" (May) on "National Defence," by author of "Greater Britain."]

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR PHILO-ISRAEL,—Being only a very occasional reader of the BANNER, what I am about to refer to might in all points have had frequent notice in its pages, but since believing myself nationally an Israelite, so many things in my Bible have acquired an entirely new light that I should like to know whether the theory of the "Stone Kingdom" has ever struck others in the way it forced itself upon me. All at once the thought struck me that the "Stone cut out of the mountain without hands" (Dan. ii. 45) could not in any possible sense be taken as a symbol of Christ, because, holding as Christians do their belief in the Trinity —three Persons in one God, co-equal and co-eternal—a something so inferior as a stone to a mountain or anything denoting inferiority is wanting in the very essence of a symbol, or type of Christ, and thus I saw plainly that the whole foundation of a spiritual kingdom crumbled to pieces.

The prophet gives the meaning of the image, which is accepted with regard to the four secular, dominant kingdoms of the earth. Assyria, Persia, Greece, and Rome pass undisputed, while the fifth is spiritualized at the expense of common-sense altogether. Geology, telling us that this little Island of Great Britain, upon which our Empire is founded, which overspreads the globe, was once joined to the Continent, is plain proof of the good sense of the literal meaning for which we contend. History then comes to our aid. Think of the tremendous hostility the ancient Britons showed to the Romans. Rome was allowed to overthrow Jerusalem, but Rome was not allowed to conquer Britain. Even Cowper's poem, "Boadicea," acquires a deeper meaning in every line. The secret, so to call it, permeates the whole Word of God, making arguments almost useless where insight only is needed. We cannot give men insight. God alone can do that. It might not be a saving knowledge to our statesmen; they would hardly, perhaps, be the better rulers—they do very well as they are, for the Lord reigns, and in His own good time He will make it plain. However, I am more thankful than I can express to possess the knowledge myself, though it is far from an easy task to hammer it into other people. RUTH.

April 23rd, 1888.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR PHILO-ISRAEL,—About a year and a-half ago I saw a "Bill of Contents" of the BANNER OF ISRAEL outside the shop of Mr. Guest, Red Lion-street, Holborn. Seeing by it that the BANNER claimed us as the Ten Tribes of Israel, I bought it; and I thank God most sincerely that He led me to that shop! I was converted to the Lord about three years ago, and, as a member of the Church of England, I can truly say the teaching of the BANNER brings our Church Service home to me with a double beauty. I can truly say reading the BANNER with my Bible has brought about a fulness of belief and faith in God's promises and fulfilments that nothing else ever did. There seems to be something very peculiar in the fact that large bodies of Christian men, such as the Young Men's Christian Association, of which I am a member, should utterly decline to introduce a light that must in a very few years be the universal belief! As far as lays in the power of a poor uneducated man, I do try to introduce it, but it is quite "pooh-poohed" amongst them. I am sure, if the secretaries would only devote a small portion of their time in comparing Scripture with Scripture and the history of our own and other countries, they must see they have a weapon stronger than any yet provided for them. The only way I can account for their objection is that they will not study the question. They will not read the BANNER, it seems to me, so that they shall not be convinced against their own will. They will have it that "All-Israel" is found in the Two Tribes of Judah, and that is really how they are blinded.

Now, Sir, I am an "Assurance Collector," and my book is composed of about 800 members, some of whom are very poor indeed. I cannot afford to buy, and they often will not; but I do speak of the Identity wherever I can, and I know if I could give them papers or books on the subject they would read, and, with God's help, be led to believe in the dear Lord. Can you help me in this matter? I cannot give them out of my own pocket, but I must speak of the glorious light I have got through the BANNER.

Hoping you will kindly answer this in the BANNER under the nom de plume of "Collector," as I do not wish my name to appear, you will oblige

Yours most gratefully, COLLECTOR.

30, Rupert-street, Haymarket, June 18th, 1888.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed: "Philo-Israel," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

SUBSCRIPTIONS. £ s. d.

Annual Subscription for one copy weekly (including the Twelve Double Numbers) post free 0 7 6
Two Copies (including Double Numbers) 0 13 6
Three Copies ,, ,, ,, ... 1 0 4
Four Copies ,, ,, ,, ... 1 5 6
Six Copies ,, ,, ,, ... 1 16 4

Post Office Orders to be made payable at the head office, St. Martin's-le-grand, London, to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C., or F. W. PARRY & Co., 29, Paternoster-row, London.

The Editor cannot undertake to return rejected MSS. unless stamps for the purpose be sent. Parties requiring an answer should enclose a stamp.

Contents Bills and Show Cards may be obtained on application to the Publishers.

Advertisements should be sent to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

Prepaid Advertisements are inserted at the rate of thirty words for 1s. 4d.

BLACKPOOL.— Anglo-Israelites will find COMFORTABLE APARTMENTS, Public or private, near Sea or Gardens, at Mrs. Breakells, 39, Adelaide Street.

Just published—Cloth, 2s. 6d.—a re-issue of

The Origin of Masonic Ritual and Tradition:

A Lecture on the Three Degrees, by BRO. WM. ROWBOTTOM, P.M., 1028, with facsimile of a very rare Masonic engraving published in 1789.

"Exquisitely clear and singularly correct in everything wherein I may be any authority or guide."—Professor PIAZZI SMYTH. "Will be found of considerable interest to many besides Masons."—Church Bells.

Oxford: S. Rowbottom and Son; London: R. Banks and Son, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C.; and F. W. Parry and Co., 29, Paternoster Row, E.C.

Price Five Shillings.—"Substantially and attractively got up, and profusely illustrated."—Oldham Chronicle.

Eildon Grange: A Tale.

By ANDREW CLARK, M.A., Vicar of St. Michael's, Oxford. "One of the most charming books. . . . The illustrations are full of playful humour."—Scotsman. "The book is undoubtedly a happy one."—The Oxford Magazine. "Both entertaining and bracing."—Dundee Advertiser.

Oxford: S. Rowbottom and Son; London: Hamilton, Adams and Co., 32, Paternoster Row, E.C.

☞ Ask for this Book at the Libraries.

WORKS BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

The History of the House of Israel. How They Were Lost and How They Were Found. Told for the children. Price 6d., cloth 1s.; post free 7d. and 1s. 1d. Fifth edition.

A Resume of the Scriptural Argument Proving the Identity of the British Race with the Lost Ten Tribes. Price 1d.; 6s. per hundred, postage 6d.

Anglo-Israelism. True, Not False. Being Philo-Israel's Reply to the Rev. Canon Bell's pamphlet, "Anglo-Israelism: True or False?" Price 1d., 6s. 6d. per 100. 16 pages, crown 8vo.

An Elementary Digest or Sketch of the Chief Facts and Teachings of the Great Pyramid of Egypt. Adapted to the Unlearned and Unscientific 56 pages, Illustrated with Diagrams, price 4d., post free 5d. 10th Thousand.

Our Identity with the House of Israel. Price 4d., Reprinted from "Clifton Chronicle Letters'

Our Identity: What it is Not; What it is; and Our Obligations To-day in Respect to it Being a Lecture recently delivered in London by Philo-Israel, and published by special request. Price 2d., a reduction for quantities.

Are the English People the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel? An Inquiry Establishing the Identity of the British Nation with the Lost Ten Tribes. 4d.

Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

SOUND, PURE, WHITE TEETH!

Those who value these will try

CARBOLINE

(The Great Sanitary Tooth Paste).

1/6 & 2/6 per Pot.

Through Chemists, or post free from the Makers,

GEORGE & WELCH

WORCESTER.

The Lancet writes:—"To save the teeth use a good carbolic daily."

Price 3d., post free; 2/6 per dozen, post free.

The Teutonic Theory Considered in the Light of Holy Scripture.

By SARAH SHARP.

Author of "My Jewels" (Mal. iii. 17).

ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-st., E.C.

Just Published, price 1d., 6 copies post free for Six stamps, 6/6 per 100, carriage paid.

FACTS AND PROBABILITIES

Respecting the Identity of the British and American Nations with the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel.

Compiled by DELTA.

London: ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-st.

Price 2d., by post 2½d. Second Edition, Revised.

A SUMMARY OF ANGLO-ISRAELITE TEACHING,

And of the Scripture Proofs on which it rests.

By SURGEON-GEN. J. M. GRANT, M.D.,

President of the Cheltenham Association, and Vice-President of the Metropolitan Anglo-Israel Association.

London: Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street.

New Work on the Identity of Lost Israel

By the late BISHOP TITCOMB.

Now ready, in Cloth Gilt, Bevelled Boards Imperial 8vo. Price 3s.; sent Post Free for Postal Order or Stamps.

A MESSAGE TO THE CHURCH

FROM

THE NINETEENTH CENTURY

BY THE LATE

RT. REV. BISHOP TITCOMB, D.D.

ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet Court, Fleet Street. F. W. PARRY & Co., 29, Paternoster Row, E.C.

Dr. JOSEPH WILD'S WORKS

The most useful works on the subject.

NEW EDITION JUST PUBLISHED.

THE LOST TEN TRIBES

Price 3s., post free 3s. 3d.

'We have much pleasure in directing attention to this handsome volume. . . We promise our readers that if they procure this work, and will peruse it, they will find 'Our Identity' discussed in a clear, novel, racy, and from an American point of view, which is sure to interest."—Banner of Israel.

THE FUTURE OF ISRAEL AND JUDAH,

Price 2s., post free 2s. 3d.

R. BANKS & SON, RACQUET-COURT, FLEET-ST.

THE WATERS OF HERMON.

THE interesting circumstance of the re-production by modern science of these celebrated Waters of Antiquity, so famed in Biblical times, is one of the most important illustrations of the advance of the age. Differing from all other Waters they contain no mineral ingredients, so that the system, instead of being lowered by their use, is steadily built up, while the functions of life are restored to a healthy condition. And it is, therefore, with extreme gratification that this is now brought within the reach of the general public. The well-known curative properties of this famous medicine are promptly manifested in the following disorders:—Indigestion, Biliousness, Congestion of the Liver, Nausea and Vomiting, Disorders of the Stomach and Bowels and their consequences, Constipation, Piles, Flatulence, Repletion, Spasms, Discomfort or Pain after Meals, Pain Between the Shoulders, Pains in the Back and Loins, Cold in the Head, Coughs of various character, Difficulty of Breathing, Giddiness and Sick Headache, Effects of Alcohol, Overworked Brain, Affections of the Nerves, &c. Price 2s. 9d. per bottle, post free. THE WATERS OF HERMON DEPOT, 107, King Street, Hammersmith, London.

INVALUABLE REMEDY

Published by ROBERT BANKS & SON,

RACQUET COURT, FLEET STREET, E.C.

Postal Orders may be obtained at any Post Office in the United Kingdom for the following amounts: 1s., 1s. 6d., ½d. each; 2s., 2s. 6d., 3s., 3s. 6d., 4s., 4s. 6d., 5s., 7s. 6d., 10s., 10s. 6d., 1d each; 15s., 20s., 1½d. each. They should be "crossed" City Bank, Ludgate Hill, E.C. Stamps received.

JEHOVAH TRIUMPHANT. The New and Complete Theology and Electric Light of the Bible, containing the History of British-Israel, Compiled from the Sacred Scriptures. Cloth gilt, price 10s. 6d., post free for Postal Order or Cheque.

THE GEOGRAPHY OF THE GATES. By PHILO-ISRAEL. With Map, and six full page, and one double-page, Illustrations, printed on plate paper. 208 pages, in handsome cloth, gilt. Price 3s. 6d.; post free.

THE WORD: THE WORLD: THE BRANCH. By J. LEYLAND FIELDEN, Esq. Price 12s., post free.

EPHRAIM - ENGLAND. The Nineteenth Century Revelation of the Fruits of History. By Rev. E. DOUGLAS, Vicar of Kidsgrove. Cloth gilt, lettered, 4s., gilt edges 5s., free by post.

FIFTY REASONS WHY THE ANGLO-SAXONS ARE ISRAELITES of the Lost Tribes of the House of Israel. By Rev. W. H. POOLE, D.D. Price 6d., post free 7d.

BIBLE LESSONS AND REFLECTIONS. By the late ROBERT GAIRDNER, of Kilmarnock, N.B. Price 2s. 6d., by post 2s. 9d.; cheap edition, limp cloth, 1s., by post, 1s. 2d.

THE ANGLO-ISRAEL POST-BAG; or, How Arthur Came to See It. By the Right Rev. BISHOP TITCOMB. Price 2s. 6d. in cloth gilt; paper cover, 1s. 6d., by post 1d. extra.

THE ISRAELITES FOUND IN THE ANGLO-SAXONS. The Ten Tribes supposed to have been Lost, traced from the land of their captivity to their occupation of the Isles of the Sea. By WILLIAM CARPENTER. Price 2s. 6d., by post 2s. 8d.

THE ANSWER TO THE EASTERN QUESTION, With Some Facts Concerning the Identity of the British With Israel. By the Author of "The New Old Story," enlarged. Price 3d.; for distribution, 50 copies, 11s., post free.

CARDINAL PROOFS THAT THE BRITISH Are the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel—the Abrahamic Covenant. By F. W. PHILLIPS. With two chapters by PHILO-ISRAEL. Price 6d., post free 7d.

THE NEW OLD STORY. By "A E I." Price 6d., post free; in cloth, 1s., post free.

THE BIBLE ATLAS. To Illustrate the Old and New Testaments. Price 1s.; post free 1s. 1d.

ANGLO-ISRAEL TRACTS. 8 pp. Royal 16mo., on toned paper. Adapted to enclose in letters, and for general distribution. No. 1—12. Half-penny each, 12 copies, post free, 6d. Specimen packet for 6 stamps.

HUMAN LIFE.—FIFTY YEARS' Record o Facts, Principles, and Discoveries (just published complete) Relating to the Improvement and Preservation of Human Life on Earth. Origin and true treatment of diseases. A series of articles by DR. SAMUEL BIRLEY, M.D., Ph.D. Book form, 50 pages. SENT FREE to every applicant by the publishers, GORDON B. MURRAY & CO., 50, Theobald's-road, Holborn, E.C. Write to-day

PIANOFORTES, Harmoniums, American Organs. Why buy at shops inferior made instruments, and pay large profits, when you can buy direct from the Maker High-class Instruments, and save 50 per cent. by so doing? Full value allowed for old Instruments in exchange as part payment. Write for Price Lists and Testimonials to G. LINSTEAD, 2, Oseney Crescent, Camden Road, London. Established 1874.

Certain HARNESS' Cure.

ELECTROPATHIC BELT

FOR

PARALYSIS

J. FULLER, Jun., Esq., Whiteparish, Salisbury, Wilts, writes:—"Since wearing your Electropathic Belt I am decidedly better and stronger. I have more confidence in myself, and the pain in my back is completely gone. Your Belt is truly wonderful."

Guaranteed to generate a mild continuous current of Electricity, which speedily cures all Disorders of the Nerves, Stomach, Liver and Kidneys. Thousands of Testimonials. Pamphlet & Advice free on application to Mr. C. B. Harness, Consulting Electrician, the Medical Battery Co. Ltd.

Only Address,

52, OXFORD ST., LONDON, W. (Corner of Rathbone Place.)

Call to-day, if possible, or write at once

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C. F. W. PARRY (late GUEST & Co.), 29 PATERNOSTER-ROW WEDNESDAY, JULY 11, 1888 [All rights reserved.

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."

(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India.)

"And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the Forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS of the EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. XII., No. 603. Entered at Stationers' Hall.] WEDNESDAY, JULY 18, 1888. [PRICE ONE PENNY.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
The Greatest and the Freest Empire the World has Ever Known	285
The British Empire, the Tabernacle of Jehovah. Part I. By E. Pearse	286
Scientific Moonshine. By J. G. Taylor	287
Israel's Carrying Trade, and Ephraim's Woe	288
The Lost Ten Tribes of Israel.—Are They Found?	289
Correspondence	291

THE GREATEST AND THE FREEST EMPIRE THE WORLD HAS EVER KNOWN.

THE above words, read even to our own selves, like a constantly-repeated Philo-Israelite saying, one which to many of our friends must be wearying and stale. To our opponents it will seem like the usual boasting of those self-satisfied "Anglos," who are never happy till they are in their "fool's paradise," praising everything which is British and Anglo-Saxon, flattering their own vanity on the vain assumption, that because they are Israel (forsooth), the nation to which they belong must needs be "the favourite of the gods," more blessed than all the world besides, and destined to be its ruler. No doubt these are the sentiments which the legend, standing at the head of our present article, will excite in the minds of those who peruse it in the BANNER, and have, truth to tell, read words like them from our own and kindred pens, in these columns, times without number. Yet our readers, who make such reflections, may be asked to pause, and tell us "if they would be surprised to know" that the sentence in question is not at all our own! Not even is it that of an Anglo-Israelite! but it is merely the final sentence of a splendid peroration, which was received, by a great and enthusiastic audience, with loud and continued cheers, when Mr. J. Chamberlain, M.P., sat down after he had given thanks, when toasted by the chairman, Earl Granville, at the banquet given him at the Devonshire Club, on April 9, to congratulate him on the result, so far achieved, in America, in regard to the Fisheries' Disputes and Treaty. Mr. Chamberlain, of course, made a grand and patriotic speech; for he is a patriot, and loves his country! He concluded his address by declaring that our Colonies shared with us "in our history, our origin, and our common citizenship, in the greatest and freest Empire that the world has ever seen"! Splendid and true words! Words which the noble company then present, members mostly of the British Lords and Commons Houses of Parliament, received with absolute approval, and which history declares to be true. The British Empire dwarfs into pigmies those of Egypt, Assyria, Medo-Persia, Greece, and Rome, in the days gone by. To-day there is no Empire existing which is larger, richer, more influential, and more beneficent and blessed, than our own! It possesses every blessing which God designed for and promised on oath to grant to the afterseed of Abraham for ever! Therefore, it is "a great and mighty nation" (Gen. xii. 3; xviii. 18); and history proves to us that when God said that, He meant that it should be what Mr. Chamberlain declares it is, "the greatest" (and mightiest) "that the world has ever known"! It is also the richest, the most powerful in respect to its Colonial, Heathen, and Ocean Empires. In respect to the use it makes of its colossal strength and wealth, we all know, and the thing cannot be denied, that it is also the most beneficent "Empire that the world has ever known." But why should this be? Why has God so distinctly marked down ours as the people and the nation He has resolved to bless? Why has He given us the blessings which He sware solemnly to grant exclusively to His people Israel, and to none other? There is but one cause assignable or possible! God cannot foreswear Himself! Nor can He give to British, non-Israelite Gentiles what He engaged on oath to reserve for "His chosen ones" exclusively! The British are Israel; and that is the secret, unknown to Mr. J. Chamberlain, which explains it all. It shows why he was right, and wherefore all the blessings lying at God's right hand, He has, without reserve or stint, poured out lavishly on our favoured race!

But Mr. Chamberlain said more than what we have yet noticed. He spoke of the United States, and their wonderful advance in recent years. He mentioned the fact, we do well to notice, that "its population at the present time exceeds that of the whole English-speaking population of the British Empire!" He believed the American nation was likely always to be on terms of love and friendship with our own; and in regard to our own Colonial Empire, he said what can only rightly be repeated in his own words. The extract we make is as follows:—

In the case of the United States of America, I hope for amity and peace, and I ask for nothing more. Our course has been marked out for us as separate and independent, but I hope as friendly nations. But is it necessary, is it desirable, that our relations with Canada, with our great Colonies in Australasia and South Africa, should follow the same course, should result in a similar absolute independence? I am willing to submit to the charge of being a sentimentalist when I say to you that I will never willingly admit of any policy that will tend to weaken the ties between the different branches of the Anglo-Saxon race which form the British Empire, the vast dominion of the Queen. (Cheers.) I feel myself a natural pride in the restless energy and dauntless courage which have created this great Empire. I feel a satisfaction in the constant evidence which is given us of the affectionate attachment of our fellow-subjects throughout the world to their old home. (Hear, hear.) It seems to me that it would be unpatriotic to do anything which would discourage this sentiment—that it would be cowardly and unworthy to repudiate the obligations and responsibilities which the situation entails upon us. (Hear, hear.) I would be willing to put it on the lowest possible grounds. Experience teaches us that trade follows the flag, and even in commercial questions sentiment is a powerful influence on the question of profit and loss. A great part of our population is dependent at the present moment upon the interchange of commodities with our colonial fellow-subjects, and it is the duty of every statesman to do all in his power to maintain and increase this commercial intercourse and to foster the attachment upon which, to a large extent, it is founded. We have to watch for opportunities to strengthen the ties between our Colonies and ourselves. There is a word which I am almost afraid to mention. I have been assured, upon the highest authority, that Confederation is an empty dream, the fantastic vision of fools and fanatics.

Digitized by Google

> "It cannot be. The vision is too fair
> For creatures doomed to breathe terrestrial air.
> Yet not for that shall sober reason frown
> Upon that promise, nor that hope disown.
> We know that only to high aims are due
> Rich guerdons, and to them alone ensue."

(Cheers.) I am well aware that up to the present time no practical scheme of Federation has been submitted or suggested, but I do not think that such a scheme is impossible. (Hear, hear.) There are two points which have to be prominently borne in mind. There is the question of commercial union and the question of union for defence. I have heard it argued that the Colonies would be very foolish to allow themselves to become mixed up in our old-world policy, and to concern themselves with wars in which they can have no possible interest or advantage. But I may point to the action of the Colonies, not so very long ago, in the case of the Egyptian war (hear, hear), when they exhibited a sentiment which I think we should all be ready to appreciate on the occasion of a war in which they certainly had nothing but a sentimental interest. But I will go further. I suppose the colonists read history; and if they do, they will know that every great war in which this country has been engaged, since the great French war at the beginning of the century, and that every dispute which has seriously threatened our peace, has arisen out of the concerns and interests of one or other of the Colonies or of the great dependency of India. (Hear, hear.) And under these circumstances it appears to me that it may be at least as much to the interests of the Colonies as to those of the Mother Country that we should seek and find a concerted system of defence. (Cheers.) The difficulty in the case of commercial union is, no doubt, much greater. It is no use to expect that our Colonies will abandon their custom duties as their chief and principal source of revenue. It is hardly to be hoped that the protected interests fostered by their system will willingly surrender the privileges which they now enjoy. All we can do is to wait until proposals are made to us, to consider those proposals when they come with fairness and impartiality, and to accept them if they do not involve the sacrifice of any important principle or of any interest vital to our population. Meanwhile, my lords and gentlemen, I say that we ought not to do anything to discourage the affections or to repel the patriotic and loyal advances which are made to us by our fellow-subjects and fellow-kinsmen, who are proud of the glorious traditions of our country, who share with us our history, our origin, and our common citizenship in the greatest and freest Empire that the world has ever known. (Loud and continued cheers.)

Mr. Chamberlain ought, certainly, to become an Anglo-Israelite by conviction, for he not only admits ours to be the greatest and freest Empire the world has ever known, but he regards each of our Colonies as bidding fair to become nations themselves. He sees no reason however why, as nations, they should ever declare for independence like our brother Jonathan (Manasseh). He ventures even on speculations connected with Federation, and sees that the Federation of Defence has begun already! He believes that of commerce will follow in due time. The Empire of the Queen, he sees, is tied together by the silken bonds of love and loyalty, and he clearly anticipates, what the Identity will fully assure him is the truth, that those bonds can never break, because it is the Empire of Israel, the kingdom of the Ten Tribes, which is one and indivisible, destined to a political union (even with America, ere long), but under fear of rupture and separation—NEVER! To the Lord let Israel give all the praise!

THE BRITISH EMPIRE, THE TABERNACLE OF JEHOVAH.

By E. PEARSE.

THE following thoughts are only intended for believers in Our Identity; to others they would appear as fanciful as many now thoroughly accepted identities appeared to us before we were well instructed in the subject. They were chiefly suggested by the Jubile* commemorations, commencing with the sounding of trumpets on that memorable Trinity Sunday, June 20th, 1886.

Not for very many years will Trinity Sunday fall so late, and that it should have occurred in the year when the people of God's choice were proclaiming the Jubile of their Queen (also of His special anointing) cannot be considered merely a curious coincidence.

On that day the trumpets sounded according to the directions given by Jehovah, "Thou shalt number seven Sabbaths of years unto thee . . . . forty and nine years, then thou shalt cause the trumpet of the jubile to sound throughout all the land" (Lev. xxv. 8, 9); and the proclamation was made in Churches, "The kingdom of this world is become the kingdom of our Lord, and His Christ" (or His anointed)—(Rev. xi. 15).

"Our fathers had the tabernacle of witness in the wilderness" (Acts vii. 44); an outward and visible sign of the presence of Jehovah with His chosen people, and the witness is with His Brith-ones (Brith—Heb., covenant), i.e., His covenant ones are Britons now. It was veiled, and covered with a cloud then, and so it is now; but the cloud is gradually being lifted, the veil being removed, as in the wilderness preparatory to a journey. There is a revelation or unveiling. "The temple of God is opened, (or being opened in heaven), and there is seen in His temple the ark of His testimony" (Rev. xi. 19), that is, it is being gradually revealed that we are the possessors and owners of the title-deeds of the covenant promises made to Israel. Heaven is an old Saxon word, meaning a hidden, secret place (authority, a late Bishop of Ely, at the re-opening of St. Paul's Church, Bedford), answering to the dwelling place of Jehovah in the Sanctuary, the innermost part of the tabernacle.

"This indenture witnesseth" is the heading of Israel's title-deeds, from the custom in former times of dividing the documents, each party to the covenant keeping a portion, and if, when put together, the two parts fitted, the document would be considered genuine (or authentic).

So when we compare the prophetic descriptions of Israel during her outcast days,—particularly in the latter days—with the history of the British empire in the past, and Britannia's present condition, we shall find perfect agreement. This we are commanded to do. "Produce your cause, saith the Lord, bring forth your strong reasons, saith the King of Jacob" (Isa. xli. 21; xliv. 9).

Israel was to be so lost that even the sons of God would not know their glorious heritage and descent. "In the place where

* Jubile, so spelt in A.V.

Digitized by Google

it was said unto them, Ye are not My people, it shall be said unto them, the sons of the living God" (Hosea i. 10). His servants, His perfect ones, would be blind and deaf" (Isa. xlii. 19). Yet they were to be carefully shielded, though hidden, by Jehovah, "In the shadow of His hand hath He hid me, and made me a polished shaft, in His quiver hath He hid me" (Isa. xlix. 2). "In the secret of His tabernacle shall He hide me, and set me up upon a rock" (Psa. xxvii. 5). "He that dwelleth in the secret place of the Most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty" (Psa. xci. 1).

The Lord Jehovah bid His people make a dwelling place (the Hebrew word Mishkan used is "dwelling place") for Him. "Let them make Me a sanctuary, that I may dwell among them, according to all that I show thee, after the pattern of the tabernacle, and the pattern of the instruments thereof, so shall ye make it" (Exod. xxv. 9). "I will dwell (or tabernacle) among the children of Israel" (Exod. xxix. 45). "I am the Lord their God that brought them out of the land of Egypt, that I may dwell among them" (ver. 46). When everything was completed, and the tabernacle reared up "a cloud covered the TENT of the congregation, and the glory of the Lord filled the tabernacle" (Exod. xl. 34). "And the Lord called unto Moses, and spake unto him out of the tabernacle of the congregation" (Lev. i. 1), showing that He had taken up His abode, in a special manner, there.

Jehovah Himself gave directions as to every part of the tabernacle, so special, and entering into such minute details, that we cannot fail to perceive that there was a typical, or allegorical meaning in the whole, easily comprehended now that "the door is opened (or being opened) in heaven" (Rev. iv. 1); "the temple opened" (Rev. xi. 19).

The tabernacle (Mishkan—dwelling place) was to comprise three main parts, the tabernacle or sanctuary, its tent, and its covering. The tabernacle (sanctuary, dwelling-place) itself was to consist of curtains of fine linen, woven with coloured figures of cherubim, and a structure of boards which was to contain the holy place, and the most holy place; the tent was to be a true tent of goat's hair cloth, to contain and cover the tabernacle, the covering was to be of red ram's skins and seals' skins, that is:—

1. The dwelling-place or tabernacle.
2. The tent.
3. The covering.

It has been usual to represent the tabernacle as consisting of the wooden structure, with the masses of drapery thrown over it, as a pall is thrown over a coffin. The objections to the common theory are these—(1) The arrangement proposed makes out the fabric to have been unsightly in its form, and to have had a great part of the beauty of its materials entirely concealed. (2) It would be quite impossible to strain drapery over a space of fifteen feet, so as to prevent it from heavily sagging; and no flat roof of such materials could by any means be rendered proof against the weather. (3) It is hard to assign any use to the pins and cords of the tabernacle, (Exodus xxvii. 19; xxxv. 18), which would be essential in the construction of a tent, if the curtains and skins were merely thrown over the wood work, and allowed to hang down on each side. (4) The shelter of the Mishkan is always called in Hebrew by a name which, in its strict sense, can denote nothing but a tent, properly so-called, of cloth or skins."—Speaker's Commentary.

It was in the wilderness that the dwelling-place was prepared and set up, and where Jehovah dwelt with His people. It was to the wilderness that His outcast people were to be drawn; few in number, but there to increase like fishes. "I will allure her, and bring her into the wilderness" (Hosea ii. 14). It was to the wilderness that the woman, clothed with the sun, the moon under her feet, and on her head a crown of twelve stars, was carried on the wings of the great eagle" (Rev. xi. 1—6, 14). "I bear you on eagle's wings" (Exod. xix. 4). The woman thus described directs our thoughts to Joseph's dream. The wilderness gradually loses its character, rejoices, and blossoms like the rose, and though she arrived barren and desolate, she there has so many children (Hosea i. 10, 11) that she is obliged to make a larger home, and she is not to hesitate about doing it as soon as, and whenever the family is cramped for room, "Enlarge the place of thy tent, and let them stretch forth the curtains of thine habitations, spare not, lengthen thy cords, and strengthen thy stakes; for thou shalt break forth on the right hand and on the left, and thy seed shall inherit the Gentiles (or nations, as the word would be better rendered), and make the desolate cities to be inhabited" (Isa. liv. 2, 3). "Thy waste, and thy desolate places, and the land of thy destruction, shall even now be too narrow by reason of the inhabitants. The children which thou shalt have, after thou hast lost the other (supposed by some to have reference to the separation of the United States from us) shall say again in thine ears—the place is too strait for me: give place to me that I may dwell" (Isa. xlix. 19, 20).

(To be concluded in our next).

SCIENTIFIC MOONSHINE.

By J. G. TAYLOR.

IN the two previous articles on the ignorance of our race with regard to their descent from Israel (BANNER, Nos. 577 and 594), we proceeded on the assumption that this mental failing was a phenomenal event, and one which required a certain amount of apology. The question so loudly begged was conceded, and a few reasons were adduced to show that the belief was still within the bounds of sanity. But it must not be supposed that, in acting thus, the advocates of the Identity are doing what is necessary. They are doing what is generous, but perfectly optional. If it were the custom for communities to engrave their pedigree on the palms of their hands, or treasure it up with care in some select cerebral cavity, we should have to allow that the forgetfulness of the British people was a serious flaw in our contention. But no such usages prevail. The very reverse is the rule, for nations are in the habit of throwing their origin entirely to the winds, and to assert that there is anything unwonted or preposterous in England having done so is a bold perversion of historical truth. We are quite unable to tell where our critics gather their lore. As they prey upon their memory for their humour it may be that they feel justified in drawing upon the imagination for their facts. But wherever their quarry is situated they conceal it as effectively as the Phœnician did his tin, for in their writings they studiously refrain from giving us a clue to it, and we have not succeeded in finding it unaided. Or, perhaps, the field of their research is too extensive to be defined in pamphlet form. There is in this respect a subtle but striking family resemblance between our theological antagonists and those of a scientific hue. One adversary with whom we have been privileged to grapple in a pen and ink struggle has communicated to the public that "Israel has to have no prosperity until restored to their land. See the Bible everywhere." Brandishing "the Bible everywhere" is to take it for granted that we are as well versed in Scripture as they are, which is a most unlikely circumstance, so that a more limited allusion, including if possible the name of the book, is greatly to be desired, and if they could supply the chapter, this would yet further facilitate reference. The champions of ethnology commit a similar mistake. They laugh at us, or scowl, according as to whether the ape or tiger predominates in their disposition, and recommend us to "read history," but the particular portion of history they wish us to read is too often left untold. This is to presume that Anglo-

Digitized by Google

Israelites possess a complete set of ethnographic works written since the date of the Deluge, or at least from Herodotus to Rawlinson, and that they have nought to do but wade through them. It is high time they were notified that we are not so fortunate. What little history we are acquainted with, however, does not inspire us with much reverence for the opinion of our advisers, but rather suggests the thought that they might advantageously adopt their own advice.

The volume of learned and frequently jocose hostility launched at the Identity on the ground we have indicated, may be condensed into a line. It is deemed incredible that the British should have lost all recollection of their ancient stock; and the idea is branded with a string of uncomplimentary epithets which are too numerous to individualize. The indictment is heavy, and extremely plausible, but in reality it is seldom that scientists propound so utterly absurd a sentiment. The very existence of an enlightened folk called ethnologists proves that the objection is a piece of nonsense. For it is the special duty and the lifelong employment of these distinguished gentlemen to make diligent inquiries into the origin of nations, a task which we think would be superfluous if the origin of nations demanded no inquiry, and what inquiry is needed if nations are familiar with their lineage? If the races of mankind carry the knowledge of their ancestry about with them it is inexplicable why a person should have to undergo a severe course of training and experience before he is dignified with the title of ethnologist. Indeed, if nations can speak for themselves on the matter of their extraction, it is not clear what we want with ethnologists at all. In requesting us to produce this traditional certificate of birth the professors credit humanity with a marvellously good memory, but they should reflect that it will be an evil day for ethnologists when the world arrives at that stage of mental perfection, as their occupation will then be gone. Their avocation is either a science or a sham. If it is based on the collection and scrutiny of difficult materials, it is a science, but if it simply consists in asking people whom they sprang from, it is a consummate imposture. It will be apparent that the former is the more correct description of the pursuit to which ethnologists are devoted, and consequently, in their eagerness to disparage Anglo-Israelism, they depreciate their own craft. But let us observe their methods, and we shall at once see whether in this attitude towards the Identity they are honest or consistent.

To what do they appeal in support of their tastefully variegated classifications of man? To what do they direct their attention, and on what do they rely, when prosecuting their investigations? Not, assuredly, the "remembrance" of those races whose origin they seek, nor yet their traditions. The "recollection" of nations is not for a moment consulted, which leads us at the outset to suspect that nations have no recollection to consult. And as to tradition, it is accounted worthless. The Roumanians, for instance, claim to be derived from the military colonists settled in Dacia by Trajan, and they cannot be persuaded otherwise. Scratch a Roumanian and you find a Roman, is their popular adage. Here is a case not merely of tradition. For the conviction is so fresh and universal in Roumania that it may be designated "memory." But in spite of this the savants put it aside with freezing coolness. "That patriotic delusion," they say, "originally exposed by Thunmann, has been finally disposed of by Roesler." Even, therefore, if we could boast of a sackful of traditions they would very probably be calmly discarded as "patriotic delusions." The philosopher deals with more elevated data than vulgar rumour. The length of the skull, the contour of the nose, the angle of the jaw,—physiology, archæology, philology, and similar ingenious contrivances: these are the instruments with which the scientist dissects and groups the human progeny. Schwiker remarks: "Speech remains the most conspicuous distinctive indication of European affinities." "In Africa as in Asia language affords the best guide for the division of races." And Waitz, "For the classification of mankind philological research has given more certain and harmonious results than the physical study of man." From this we glean that the chief aids to ethnologists are physiology and philology, the priority being awarded to the latter, weak and deceptive though it is. National reminiscences do not seem to be a factor of the smallest size in their calculations. When they begin to fix the abode of Semites, Hamites, and Japhetites, or Kelts, Teutons, and Slavs, they take an unintelligible departure,—unintelligible in several senses. We listen to a confused noise concerning skulls prognathous, brachycephalous, and dolichocephalous; and languages agglutinative, monosyllabic, inflectional, and polysynthetic. But of information furnished by the proprietors of the skulls we hear not a word, and however polysynthetic their tongues may be they are all evidently monosyllabic on the subject of their parentage. Now if people are aware of their paternity it is surprising that there should be any debate whatever, and, having commenced the debate, it is just as curious that no reference is made to that valuable faculty which it is considered outrageous in the British to lack. How is it that ethnologists waste their time and rack their brains with the unwieldy paraphernalia of technics if they can gain their end by interrogating the natives? The answer is not far off; and why they apply a test to Anglo-Israel which they do not dream of applying to any other race can only be conjectured. It is a skilful shift, by means of which a cloud of dust is blown into the eyes of inquirers, and it is also a species of trickery which we should have thought would never have entered the scientific skull.

As this constitutes but half of the argument in our favour we shall return again to it shortly, and evince by the simplest of processes that the objection brought against us on the score of obliviousness, and absence of tradition, is pure moonshine.

ISRAEL'S CARRYING TRADE AND EPHRAIM'S WOE.

St. James's Gazette on Feb. 13, made a few comments on the meeting held recently at the Cannon Street Hotel on the subject of British shipowners and their world-wide carrying trade. Thus:—

It is not only the man-o'-war's man who will soon find it unnecessary to know how to reef topsails or to bend a rope aloft. Jack of the merchant service is being turned into a "stoker" too. The figures given at the Chamber of Shipping a few days ago show that steam is fast superseding sails in the mercantile marine of the country. In 1840 97 per cent. of our tonnage was in sailing ships. In 1860 the percentage of sailing vessels had fallen to 90 per cent., in 1870 it was 80, in 1880 it was 58, and in 1886 it had sunk to 46. At this rate, how long will it be before our merchant fleet is wholly made up of steamers? England too is increasing her steam tonnage faster in proportion than other countries. We possess nearly 70 per cent. of the steam shipping of the world, and even the desponding ship-owners of the Cannon-street Hotel must admit that our carrying trade is still some distance from ruin.

Our article on "Israel's Steamships" (p. 64, Vol. xii.), gives details on the subject which corroborate the above in every particular. When our nation possesses 70 per cent. of the whole steam shipping of the world it is clear that God has made us "the head and not the tail, above only and not beneath all the other nations of the world" in this particular, and thus testified that we are "Israel obedient" (Deut. xxviii. 1, 13). But this testimony is not general, but particular in regard to India also. That comes out quite independently in some very interesting remarks by the Hon. James Campbell, made in Melbourne and reported in the Daily Telegraph of Nov. 26th last. Speaking of Bombay Harbour and its wonderful concourse of shipping from all parts of the world, he said:—

The harbour of Bombay is a pure joy to my heart. Every form of stately ship and steamer is there, and every form of strange shaped craft also. Wonderful monstrosities, with bulging sides and high swelling stem and stern. Nondescript crews of every shade of yellow, brown, and black. These queer craft are of the type which has been sailing along the Asian and African coasts for far centuries back. In the good old times they were largely slavers and pirates; now they are peaceful traders, earning an honest living. Their number is astonishing, and it is one of the sights of Bombay to go to Malabar Hill and watch the long line of native craft as they crawl along the coast. They plod along northwards to Kurrachee, the Persian Gulf, and Arabia, across to Africa, eastwards as far as Singapore, Java and even China. Many go down in the storms, and some are cut down by the steamers; but, all in all, they are very safe, and the ordinary seaman in these craft is just about as sure of his life as the ordinary landsman. But the days of the quaint, picturesque Asiatic craft are probably numbered. Whilst the Indian coasting trade has increased at the rate of nearly a million and a half pounds per annum, the number of entries of small craft has diminished within the last twelve years by nearly ninety-eight thousand! The figures of the coasting trade are quite remarkable in other aspects. Not only do they show the rapid extinction of the little native craft, but the power of steam, the increasing size of the ships, and the wonderful hold British enterprise has upon the coasting trade of India. Of 9,515 coasting steamers, which entered or cleared Indian ports in 1882-3, only seventy-six were foreign, all the rest being British, or British-Indian. The size of the vessels is notable, and suggests several reflections. The average of the steamers was 1,047 tons; of British sailing vessels, 692 tons; of British-Indian, 118 tons; of foreign 41 tons; and of native craft, 17 tons. Of these there were over 190,000, and the striking fact comes out that less than 10,000 steamers do more than double the work in a year of nearly 200,000 sailing ships and craft. What locomotion by means of sedan chairs or jinrickshaws is as compared with a railway train, so is carrying by sailing ship as compared with the rushing steamer of these days. Yet each has its sphere, though the sphere of the native craft will tend to become more and more limited. There are little wayside ports, sea coast villages, with insignificant harbours, reefs, or open roadsteads; groups of islands like the Maldive, where the steamers cannot go, and with which these, the average 17 ton native craft, will continue to do a trade. And it is well that it is so, for from these humble boats come the hardy sailors who in process of time are promoted to big ships, and form the crews of the steamers which carry us from one great centre to another. When I say it is well I have my eye more on the small coasters of Europe than those of India, I have the gravest doubts if the sailors taken from the Asiatic coasts are good men in times of emergency. Opinions of officers differ, but the majority with whom I have spoken are emphatic in their statements that the ordinary Lascar (a term which covers all sorts and conditions of Indian seamen) is not to be relied upon in seasons of peril. He becomes demoralised, loses his head, and is useless in the extreme moment. But, on the other hand, the officers of all shades of opinion as to the courage of the Lascar, agree they would rather take him, with all his faults, than they would take Europeans or Americans. The general run of officers have an immense dislike to the British or American common sailor on account of his insubordination, his grumbling, and especially his drunkenness. I tried to do battle with one captain on behalf of Jack, but I confess I got the worst of it. "What is the use of theorising," he said, "as against the practical facts of every day life? I am just as anxious as you are to give employment to our own people, but if our fellow countrymen show they are unworthy of consideration, why should I consider them? They will strike on the smallest provocation; they are constantly grumbling, no matter how well you treat them; and they keep you in hot water at every port by their drunkenness, and sometimes long after you leave port. I once had to leave Liverpool with only four sober men among the engineers and firemen, and I never was in so great a difficulty in my life. If the passengers had had any idea of the position they were in, there would have been a frightful row afterwards. I admit these Lascars are not as good men in danger as our Britishers, but times of danger don't come often, whereas everyday worries are with you everyday. The Lascars are very good seamen in ordinary weather; they don't grumble, they respect authority, and they never get drunk. If the British seamen is being extinguished, he has himself entirely to blame for it. If he were as reliable and sober as the Lascar, we would certainly pay him his higher wages." I doubted the latter statement, but for all the rest felt that the captain had the best of the argument. It went much against my grain, for I am intensely pro-British, yet I could say nothing; for if our faults and vices make us worthless in any capacity, it is right and just that, in that capacity, we should be blotted out.

Digitized by Google

The latter part of the above graphic description of Israel's expansion of trade in steamers is a sad comment on a frequent complaint made against the ordinary seaman's intemperate habits. But even this indicates that Ephraim's Woe, described so clearly in Isa. xxviii., is not yet eradicated, but lingers still and disgraces the nation on the ocean highways of the world; also in all the foreign ports where her merchants carry on their commerce. Allowing however to the fullest extent that a large proportion of our British seamen are insubordinate, grumbling (or murmuring), and drunken, (three distinctly Israelite sins), we cannot but think that if we are perpetually increasing the percentage of our steam tonnage as compared with that of the whole world besides, and if the wonderful excess of British or British Indian coasting steamers and sailing vessels entering the Indian Ports in 1882-3, has been maintained, then there must be more in the British sailor, degenerate as he appears to be, than Mr. Campbell's report leads one to suppose? When the whole nation is baptized with the Spirit of God, as it will be when the outpouring promised in Ezek. xxxvii. 13, 14, and other scriptures takes place, then will the British-Israelite sailor too partake in the national benefit, and become a sober, obedient, useful servant of the State, a blessing to his master on board, and to his great Master above, according to the prophecies (Jer. xxxi. 33, 34).

Meanwhile the curse of drink dogs our nation's path and in every direction we are met by its horrid traces. The only true and perfect remedy it appears to us is the change in the nation's heart which the baptism of the Holy Spirit promised to Israel only will effect. Temperance and teetotal efforts are praiseworthy and useful in the extreme; but if we may rely upon Mr. J. Campbell's report, the results upon our sailors at least has not yet been wholly satisfactory! Something more is wanted to correct the evil, and that is Israel's promised blessing. Let every Anglo-Israelite pray daily to the Lord to grant us as a nation the new covenant described in Heb. viii. 10—12, and in doing so remember at the throne of grace, British seamen, who so freely risk their lives that Israel may grow rich, but whose position at sea leaves them greatly neglected as to their soul's salvation, and a prey to the horrible, degrading, national vice!

THE LOST TEN TRIBES OF ISRAEL.—ARE THEY FOUND?

CONFERENCE AT STROUD.

A conference on the subject of Anglo-Israelism was held at Lansdown Hall on Friday evening last, when an address in support of the contention that the English races are God's chosen people was given by the Rev. J. Idrisyn Jones, of Rodborough Tabernacle. The room was three-parts filled with an interested audience. Mr. A. Apperly presided, and there were also on the platform, Rev. W. Thompson (Ruscombe), and Mr. George (Rodborough). After prayer by Mr. Thompson,

The chairman, Mr. Apperly, said the subject before them was one of very great and deep interest; but as far as he was concerned he had never studied the matter, and therefore any remarks he might make upon it would be out of place. Some had thought that he sympathised with the theory by taking the chair. He did sympathise with it in this way, that he should be very glad if, at the close of this lecture, or at any future time, he could become a believer in it—(hear, hear)—because great promises belonged to those who were the Lost Tribes, and if we were able to identify ourselves with those tribes, these promises belonged to us; and therefore he should be very glad to be able to believe in the contention. He should be sorry to say more now, not having gone into the subject, but he was sure that they had in

Digitized by Google

Mr. Jones a very able man, and one who had gone deeply into the question; and he had great pleasure in asking him to give his address. (Hear, hear).

Rev. Idrisyn Jones, after some preliminary remarks, said the bills announcing the conference did not indicate what view he would take, and therefore he thought it right and proper to state at the very outset his position, and it was this, that he believed

THE LOST TEN TRIBES OF ISRAEL WERE FOUND

—(hear, hear)—and that in the British nation they were to be found. (Hear, hear). This was his position, and just to outline his point. They believed that the Covenant with Abraham was intended to stretch throughout all time. (Hear, hear). They believed that the Ten Tribes of the House of Israel were carried into exile; that from the place of their exile they wandered; and that in their wanderings by Divine arrangement they came over to these Western Isles, western in relation to their position in Palestine. They came here as Danes, and as Normans, and as Celts, as Saxons, and so on. That they came here under different names was not to be wondered at. The Jews assembled in Jerusalem on the Day of Pentecost, had acquired the name of the country from which they had come, and so the Ten Tribes came into Britain under the names of the countries whence and through which they came. Then they believed that the Covenant was resumed with these Ten Tribes in these parts. The British people could be traced in their origin to that very part of the world where the Ten Tribes were lost in history. This was a most significant and independent point of evidence, because the two great historians of the world, Herodotus and Turner, writing without reference to Anglo-Israelism, showed that these Anglo-Saxon people had come from the neighbourhood of the Caspian Sea, where the Ten Tribes went into their captivity under the Kings of Assyria. They believed that the Covenant blessings with Abraham were now possessed by the British people, and that finally the Ten Tribes would be united with the House of Judah, which were at present distinct from the House of Israel, and that in their representative capacity they should by-and-bye return to the land of Palestine, which had never been and never could be alienated from the seed of Abraham; and that in that land, under the special dominion of the Messiah, they should dwell in peace and enjoyment for evermore. (Hear, hear). A question met them at the very outset, "Supposing that the British people are the Lost Ten Tribes, what good is there to us in discussing it?" He would point out two or three reasons why it was good. The first was that

ANGLO-ISRAELISM WOULD BE ONE OF THE MOST TERRIBLE BLOWS TO INFIDELITY.

Tom Paine who was put at the top, stated that his infidelity was based on this, that the Covenant alleged to have been made in the Bible with Abraham had broken down, and that, therefore, there was no truth in the Bible. Their answer to Tom Paine was that the Covenant had not broken down, but that that night it was in full swing. Infidelity, therefore, had lost its standing-ground. (Hear, hear). Upon the Covenants were based all the dearest hopes we had, for time and for eternity, and if one Covenant in the Bible had become falsified what was to become of the others. Anglo-Israelism made the Bible a thousand times more clear. (Hear, hear). The Bible was a dark riddle to him without this explanation. Two-thirds of the prophecies of the Bible related to this question of the Ten Tribes of the House of Israel, and therefore if we lost two-thirds we lost a precious portion. There was another reason why this doctrine was to him a thing of immense value. He was a patriot; he was a Briton—and an ancient Briton too—and he liked to think that England was the best country on the face of the earth. (Hear, hear). These were times of great perplexity. He was not going to enter into party politics: that would be to prostitute that meeting—but this was a time of great perplexity to the nations. A cloud as big as a man's hand was getting larger and spreading further, and before we were very much older there were

INTERNATIONAL PROBLEMS THAT MUST BE SOLVED.

Armies and navies were preparing rapidly for a final struggle, and soon we should be among the sounds of the crash of empires. Very well, what about the fate of old England? "Watchman, what of the night?" What was the answer of the watchman? He thought the answer was, "The morning cometh;" but to the other nations, "The night cometh;" because Anglo-Israelism assured us as to the future of our country. He heard a gentleman say the other day that he thought England was on the wane. He believed it was on the rise—(hear, hear)—and this, in view of the coming conflicts and disorders, was a thing to be proud of. It was not an empty boast of the songster who wrote the inspiring National Anthem, "Britannia rules the waves." What Britain had been and what she should be, could only be explained, in his judgment, by this theory of Anglo-Israelism. Moreover, another reason why it was good, was that it involved great spiritual blessings. The speaker quoted some words penned by Bunyan two hundred years ago, including: "Another thought came in my mind, and that was whether we were Israelites or no. . . . I found a great longing to be resolved about this question, but could not tell how I should. At last I asked my father, who said, 'No, we were not.' Therefore I fell in my spirit as to hopes of that." So far Bunyan, who in this very doctrine of Anglo-Israelism was just before his time, because certain prophecies were not to be revealed till a given time. He had just two reasons he wanted to place before them why he was bound to accept of Anglo-Israelism. The first was this, that

THE OPPOSITE THEORIES DID NOT MEET THE DEMANDS OF THE BIBLE.

(Hear, hear). There were two views held outside their own. One was this: that the Covenant with Abraham related to the land of Canaan; that it continued in force only till the time of the Messiah; that at the coming of the Messiah the Jews or the Children of Israel were to be merged into the general Church, including Jew and Gentile. The second view was that the Covenant with Abraham related to the land of Canaan, but went through all time, and that as the Jews were now in exile, they would again return to the land, and that, in the land of Canaan, under the Messiah, the Covenant with Abraham would be fulfilled and carried out. His point was that neither of these views met the demands of the Bible; they were not wide enough—there was no scope in them. The Covenant was this: Abraham was to be the heir of the world, and his posterity was to be without number, as the sand of the sea and the stars of the heavens. Let them remember these two points. This was how God spoke to Abraham: "Behold, My Covenant is with thee, and thou shalt be a father of many nations; neither shall thy name any more be called Abram, but thy name shall be called Abraham for a father of many nations have I made thee, and I will make thee exceeding fruitful, and I will make nations of thee, and kings shall come out of thee." Did they mean to say that the little land of Palestine, with one nation in it, even to the end of time, met the scope of this mighty promise? Such an idea altogether stinted the glorious breadth of the Covenant. It might be said in answer, "Yes, but that means in a spiritual sense." But the characteristic of the Christian Church was that there was no nation in it; that nationalism was blotted out. Moreover, there was a still more conclusive argument against the spiritual rendering: the promise of nations and of kings was made to Sarah as well as to Abraham. Now, the Church was the spiritual seed of Abraham, on account of his faith, but Sarah had no faith; she had unbelief, and yet to her this very same promise came. Here it was: "And I will bless her, and give thee a son of her, and she shall be a mother of nations, and kings of the people shall be of her." (Hear, hear). This did not mean the Christian Church. Sarah was not a progenitor of the Christian Church, but of nations; and therefore "nations" meant nations and not the Christian Church. Mr. Jones read other promises, including, "Thy seed shall be as the dust of the earth, and thou shalt spread abroad to the west and to the east, and to the north and to the south, and in thee and in thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed." Moses confirmed this in the 15th chapter of Deuteronomy and the 6th verse, "For the Lord thy God blesseth thee, as He promised thee; and thou shalt lend unto many nations, but thou shalt not borrow: and thou shalt reign over many nations, but they shall not reign over thee." His second reason was this, that BRITAIN WAS AN ABSOLUTE MYSTERY APART FROM THIS THEORY.

He would like to ask those who objected, how it was, if Britain be not the Lost Ten Tribes that Britain possessed all the blessings of the Covenant—and if not Israel there was no Covenant—why need there be any Covenant at all? Why all this boast in the Covenant? We had, as a people, the identical blessings that were contained in the Covenant. There was not merely a coincidence in one or two of the blessings. Every point was there.

Digitized by Google

Here were some. Israel was to be the chief nation of the world —Britain was that. Israel was to be unconquerable—Britain had never been vanquished. Israel was to be a company of nations—Britain was to-day a company of nations. Israel was to be so rich as never to borrow, but to lend money—Britain was so rich that she never borrowed money, but lent money to the whole world. Israel was to keep the Sabbath—Britain observed by law the institution of the Sabbath. Israel was to be God's instrument for propagating the Gospel—Britain was the great missionary power of the world. Israel was to liberate the slaves —Britain was the friend of the slaves, and broke their fetters. Israel was to possess the Gates of the world (that was the entrances to the other nations)—Britain to-day was posted at the Gates of the world. (Hear, hear). Israel was to gather into these isles of the West—the British people were in the isles of the West. Israel was to be signalised by the blessings of Providence above other nations—whom did Providence bless so much as the British people? Israel was to be the successor of the four kingdoms of gold, silver, brass and iron—who had succeeded in history since the Roman arms like the British people? Israel was to have a symbol, a stone—and Britain had a stone, more remarkable in its history than any other stone on the face of the earth. (Hear, hear). We were

ON THE MARCH TO-DAY TO THE THRONE OF THE WORLD.

If these things were true why should they hold their peace? Why, the very stones would cry out. Supposing that the Covenant were offered to the other nations of Europe; did they suppose that they would spurn it? It was Israel's by an act of grace, and if we were Israel we ought to be thrilled with our position. Let them take nothing on hearsay. There were two books that would settle this question. One was the Bible, and the other was British History. There were two halves, as it were, of one whole; put them together and they were one. Our Saviour said, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free," and our great poet had paraphrased it, as it were, He hath true liberty who the truth makes free; and all beside are slaves." (Applause).

OTHER SPEAKERS.

Mr. GEORGE, as an old believer in the "Identity," made an able speech on the subject. He said for his own part he found the greatest power of argument in the fact that it was not so much in the great material blessings which we enjoyed above all other nations, as in the great functionary work in which we were endowed, and for which we were appointed by our God. He took it that whilst we were in possession of these great blessings, it was simply to qualify us for the great work of manifesting the glory of God to the world at large. If he were asked the question why he believed in the Identity, he should say simply because there was no other nation in the world that was fulfilling the prophetic role but Britain. Mr. George referred to the attempts of Mr. Bradlaugh within the last two years to ridicule the Christianity of the day in the inconsistency of the Covenant with Abraham, and said this seemed almost a prelude to these latter day revelations. The speaker related the circumstances under which he was led to believe in the subject, mentioning that he caught sight of Professor Wilson's book twenty-five years ago. He went through it carefully, but set himself down to object to a theory that made us out to be Jews. He thought it proper as a Bible student to try and do what he could in refutation of such a theory, but his very application to oppose was the very cause of his becoming a very strong adherent. (Hear, hear) Misapprehension was the cause of indifference and opposition. He challenged any man to be more loyal to the Bible than himself; he loved it, and it had always been the text book of his life. Alluding to some of the aspects of the subject, he said the commercial world was perplexed on the question of Free Trade. He saw that in that movement we were bound to take a forward step in this great question which was to bring about the fraternising of the world, and although we had to make a great sacrifice in pioneering this system, he believed that sacrifice would ultimately be returned to us in great blessing and reward. (Hear, hear).

Rev. W. THOMPSON urged those who were not quite convinced to read the 37th chapter of Ezekiel, referring to the valley of dry bones, and expressed the opinion that they would rise from the study of that one chapter convinced that they were the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel. In conclusion he proposed that they endeavour that night to form themselves into an association of believers in the theory of Anglo-Israelism.

Mr. TROTMAN also made a few remarks illustrative of the wonderful light thrown on the Bible by the theory of Anglo-Israelism. He said it made what was utter darkness before, as light as the sun at noon-day.

Mr. BASTIN asked a question of Mr. Jones relative to the correct interpretation of a text of Scripture bearing on the subject, after which,

Mr. D. WHITE, of Amberley, seconded Mr. Thompson's proposition.

Mr. THOMPSON invited those interested in the formation of an association to stay behind to make the necessary arrangements.

Mr. GWINNELL said as far as Britain was concerned, British history seemed to correspond very much with these promises. So far, so good, but when they came to general history this did not exactly back out these theories, for they found that our histories spoke of the Afghans as being part of the Ten Tribes. He should like to ask were these histories to be thrown overboard altogether?

Mr. JAMES (Rodborough) responded to several invitations to speak a few words. He said he had long believed in this question. He first took it up some twenty years ago, or more, and they were looked upon as crazed, but learned men were now coming to the same conclusion that they came to many years ago. He thought we made a mistake in not trusting sufficiently in God. He thought we should recognize the hand of God more, both in individual and national affairs.

Rev. IDRISYN JONES replied to the questions that had been put, and dealing with the Afghans, said it was not a matter of history, but only of opinion. He applied the test of the Covenant to the Afghans, to show that they did not possess the marks of the chosen people.

Votes of thanks to Mr. Jones and the Chairman concluded the meeting, a collection for incidental expenses being taken at the doors, any surplus going to the Stroud Hospital.

It may be mentioned that at one time periodical meetings were held in Stroud in connection with Anglo-Israelism.

—From the Stroud News.

Correspondence.

THE BIBLE AND ENGLISH HISTORY.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—Last evening I attended Emmanuel Reform Church of England in this town, and heard a good Gospel and Identity sermon preached by the Rev. J. W. Storer. This is the first public preaching of the truth of Israel, as found in Great Britain, that I have heard of here, and I feel sure there are many believers in our Israelitish origin (proving as it does the exact truth of the Bible) who, like myself, would be only too glad to know of faithful preaching in this regard, therefore in their interest I send you this.

The rev. gentleman took for his text Joshua i. 9, and after putting forth the simple Gospel of salvation by faith in Jesus and His finished work, gave an earnest exhortation to study Scripture thoroughly, and, with English history in one hand, to see how God has fulfilled all His promises to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob to our nation. He also pointed out the Scriptural distinction between the House of Israel and the House of Judah (or the Jews), and closed by saying that papers on the subject of the Identity were on a table in the vestibule, which were at the disposal of the congregation.

True Shepherds of Israel are still rather rare amongst us, and I think we should all do our best to hold up the hands of those who do try to proclaim our great truth.

I notice that at the annual meeting of the London Anglo-Israel Association another local minister is mentioned as speaking, the Rev. J. Idrisyn Jones, of this place. The light is spreading here in all directions, and for the encouragement of other sowers of God's truth I mention the following: On Sabbath evening, March 30th, 1884, I gave an address from Gen. xxii. 16—18, in a Cocoa Room here, and afterwards packets of Identity literature, "The History of the House of Israel," "Resumé," and leaflets were given at the door. This seed has appeared after many days. One who was present at that meeting and received the papers, told me last week that they had been sent over the country in all directions, and were at present in Warrington. So if we sow in faith, the loving Father of Israel will not let His Word return void. Yours faithfully, THEODORE S. HILL.

Birkenhead, June 4th, 1888.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed: "Philo-Israel," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

SUBSCRIPTIONS. £ s. d.

Annual Subscription for one copy weekly (including the Twelve Double Numbers) post free 0 7 6
Two Copies (including Double Numbers) 0 13 6
Three Copies ,, ,, ,, ... 1 0 4
Four Copies ,, ,, ,, ... 1 5 6
Six Copies ,, ,, ,, ... 1 16 4

Post Office Orders to be made payable at the head office, St. Martin's-le-grand, London, to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C., or F. W. PARRY & Co., 29, Paternoster-row, London.

The Editor cannot undertake to return rejected MSS. unless stamps for the purpose be sent. Parties requiring an answer should enclose a stamp.

Contents Bills and Show Cards may be obtained on application to the Publishers.

Advertisements should be sent to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

Prepaid Advertisements are inserted at the rate of thirty words for 1s. 4d.

BLACKPOOL.— Anglo-Israelites will find COMFORTABLE APARTMENTS, Public or private, near Sea or Gardens, at Mrs. Breakells, 39, Adelaide Street.

Just published—Cloth, 2s. 6d.—a re-issue of

The Origin of Masonic Ritual and Tradition:

A Lecture on the Three Degrees, by BRO. WM. ROWBOTTOM, P.M., 1028, with facsimile of a very rare Masonic engraving published in 1789.

"Exquisitely clear and singularly correct in everything wherein I may be any authority or guide."—Professor PIAZZI SMYTH. "Will be found of considerable interest to many besides Masons."—Church Bells.

Oxford: S. Rowbottom and Son; London: R. Banks and Son, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C.; and F. W. Parry and Co., 29, Paternoster Row, E.C.

Price Five Shillings.—"Substantially and attractively got up, and profusely illustrated."—Oldham Chronicle.

Eildon Grange: A Tale.

By ANDREW CLARK, M.A., Vicar of St. Michael's, Oxford. "One of the most charming books. . . . The illustrations are full of playful humour."—Scotsman. "The book is undoubtedly a happy one."—The Oxford Magazine. "Both entertaining and bracing."—Dundee Advertiser.

Oxford: S. Rowbottom and Son; London: Hamilton, Adams and Co., 32, Paternoster Row, E.C.

☞ Ask for this Book at the Libraries.

WORKS BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

The History of the House of Israel. How They Were Lost and How They Were Found. Told for the children. Price 6d., cloth 1s.; post free 7d. and 1s. 1d. Fifth edition.

A Resume of the Scriptural Argument Proving the Identity of the British Race with the Lost Ten Tribes. Price 1d.; 6s. per hundred, postage 6d.

Anglo-Israelism. True, Not False. Being Philo-Israel's Reply to the Rev. Canon Bell's pamphlet, "Anglo-Israelism: True or False?" Price 1d., 6s. 6d. per 100. 16 pages, crown 8vo.

An Elementary Digest or Sketch of the Chief Facts and Teachings of the Great Pyramid of Egypt. Adapted to the Unlearned and Unscientific 56 pages. Illustrated with Diagrams, price 4d., post free 5d. 10th Thousand.

Our Identity with the House of Israel. Price 4d., Reprinted from "Clifton Chronicle Letters'

Our Identity: What it is Not; What it is; and Our Obligations To-day in Respect to it Being a Lecture recently delivered in London by Philo-Israel, and published by special request. Price 2d., a reduction for quantities.

Are the English People the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel? An Inquiry Establishing the Identity of the British Nation with the Lost Ten Tribes. 4d.

Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

SOUND, PURE, WHITE

TEETH!

Those who value these will try

CARBOLINE

(The Great Sanitary Tooth Paste).

1/6 & 2/6 per Pot.

Through Chemists, or post free from the Makers,

GEORGE & WELCH

WORCESTER.

Lancet writes:—"To save the teeth use a good carbolic daily."

Price 3d., post free; 2/6 per dozen, post free.

The Teutonic Theory Considered in the Light of Holy Scripture.

By SARAH SHARP.

Author of "My Jewels" (Mal. iii. 17).

ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-st., E.C.

Just Published, price 1d., 6 copies post free for Six stamps, 6/6 per 100, carriage paid.

FACTS AND PROBABILITIES

Respecting the Identity of the British and American Nations with the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel.

Compiled by DELTA.

London: ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-st.

NEW BOOK BY DR. WILD.

Just Published, Price 3s., Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Lettered. Sent by Post on receipt of Published Price.

TALKS

FOR

THE TIMES.

BY JOSEPH WILD, M.A., D.D.,

Pastor of the Bond-st. Congregational Church, Toronto.

CONTENTS.—Chapter 1. A Gift of One Hundred and Ninety-Two Million Acres of Land. 2. The Return of the Jews to Palestine. 3. Folks that won't be Somebody. 4. The Four Prophecies of Egypt. 5. The Stone Kingdom and Dynamite; and the Orange Bill. 6. "144!" 7. "666!" 8. The Transit of Venus. 9. The Miracles of Antichrist; and the High Rock Image of Massachusetts, U.S. 10. The Man who could not sleep, and what came of it. 11. The Rainbow. 12. London Destroyed, and Jerusalem a Seaport. 13. Liberalism. 14. A Graft without a Stock. 15. Mouldy Bread and an Oath. 16. A Tombstone Inscription. 17. Dog Lappers. 18. How to get Rich.

London: Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street.

Dr. JOSEPH WILD'S WORKS

The most useful works on the subject.

NEW EDITION JUST PUBLISHED.

THE LOST TEN TRIBES

Price 3s., post free 3s. 3d.

'We have much pleasure in directing attention to this handsome volume. . . . We promise our readers that if they procure this work, and will peruse it, they will find 'Our Identity' discussed in a clear, novel, racy, and from an American point of view, which is sure to interest."—Banner of Israel.

THE FUTURE OF ISRAEL AND JUDAH.

Price 2s., post free 2s. 3d.

R. BANKS & SON, RACQUET-COURT, FLEET-ST.

THE WATERS OF HERMON.

THE interesting circumstance of the re-production by modern science of these celebrated Waters of Antiquity, so famed in Biblical times, is one of the most important illustrations of the advance of the age. Differing from all other Waters they contain no mineral ingredients, so that the system, instead of being lowered by their use, is steadily built up, while the functions of life are restored to a healthy condition. And it is, therefore, with extreme gratification that this is now brought within the reach of the general public. The well-known curative properties of this famous medicine are promptly manifested in the following disorders:—Indigestion, Biliousness, Congestion of the Liver, Nausea and Vomiting, Disorders of the Stomach and Bowels and their consequences, Constipation, Piles, Flatulence, Repletion, Spasms, Discomfort or Pain after Meals, Pain Between the Shoulders, Pains in the Back and Loins, Cold in the Head, Coughs of various character, Difficulty of Breathing, Giddiness and Sick Headache, Effects of Alcohol, Overworked Brain, Affections of the Nerves, &c. Price 2s. 9d. per bottle, post free. THE WATERS OF HERMON DEPOT, 107, King Street, Hammersmith, London.

INVALUABLE REMEDY

HUMAN LIFE.—FIFTY YEARS' Record of Facts, Principles, and Discoveries (just published complete) Relating to the Improvement and Preservation of Human Life on Earth. Origin and true treatment of diseases. A series of articles by DR. SAMUEL BIRLEY, M.D., Ph.D. Book form, 50 pages. SENT FREE to every applicant by the publishers, GORDON B. MURRAY & CO., 50, Theobald's-road, Holborn, E.C. Write to-day

Published by

ROBERT BANKS AND SON,

Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C.

Postal Orders may be obtained at any Post Office in the United Kingdom for the following amounts: 1s., 1s. 6d., ½d. each; 2s., 2s. 6d., 3s., 3s. 6d., 4s., 4s. 6d., 5s., 7s. 6d., 10s., 10s. 6d., 1d. each; 15s., 20s., 1½d. each. They should be "crossed" City Bank, Ludgate Hill, E.C. Stamps received.

A MESSAGE TO THE CHURCH FROM THE NINETEENTH CENTURY. The last written work on the Identity of the Anglo-Saxon Race with Lost Israel. By the late BISHOP TITCOMB. Imperial 8vo., cloth, gilt, 3s.

BRITAIN IN HISTORY—ANCIENT AND MODERN; or, Proofs Linking Israel with Britain Throughout the Ages. By Mrs. G. A. ROGERS, Author of the "Coronation Stone," &c. Crown 8vo., 276 pp., cloth, gilt lettered, 3s. 6d.; sent post free for P.O.

THE TOWER OF EGYPT: the Types and Chronology of the Great Pyramid. By A. R. G. An Inquiry into our "Position in Time," by a re-consideration of the meaning of the symbolic passages of the Great Pyramid of Egypt. Illustrated with Diagrams. Crown 8vo., cloth, gilt lettered, 4s.; post free for P.O.

WHO ARE WE? AND WHAT IS OUR MISSION? By J. THORNHILL HARRISON. With seven Maps by the Woodbury Permanent Photo Process. In handsome cloth, gilt, 5s.; post free for P.O.

A CHRONOLOGICAL AND GEOGRAPHICAL TREE. A design Showing the Development of the British Power and the Affinity of the British Nation with the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel. On plate paper, 8d.; by post, 10d. Mounted on linen, with rollers, and varnished, 2s., post free.

ANGLO-ISRAEL TRACTS. Price ½d. each; 8 pp., royal 16mo. Assorted packet post free for 7 stamps. The tracts are well written, by the following Authors:—Rev. Bishop Titcomb, D.D.; Philo-Israel; W. S. Cavill; Douglas A. Onslow, J.P.; Mrs. G. Albert Rogers; "A E I"; Surgeon-General J. M. Grant, M.D.; Rev. Robert Douglas; Rev. C. W. Hickson.

Price 6d., by post 7d.

AN OUTLINE OF THE PAST, the Present, and the Future of Great Britain as Revealed in the Word of God.

Also an Examination of the Theory which asserts the Kingdom to be Unconquerable.

By JAMES KEITH.

(Author of "The Impending Judgment of Great Britain," "Light Shed by the Great Pyramid of Egypt.")

"Known unto God are all His works from the beginning of the world."—ACTS xv. 18.

"Open Thou mine eyes, that I may behold wondrous things out of Thy law."—PSA. cxix. 18.

ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London. JOHN MENZIES & Co., Edinburgh & Glasgow.

PIANOFORTES, Harmoniums, American Organs. Why buy at shops inferior made instruments, and pay large profits, when you can buy direct from the Maker High-class Instruments, and save 50 per cent. by so doing? Full value allowed for old Instruments in exchange as part payment. Write for Price Lists and Testimonials to G. LINSTEAD, 2, Oseney Crescent, Camden Road, London. Established 1874.

Certain HARNESS' Cure.

ELECTROPATHIC BELT

FOR

SLEEPLESSNESS

SLEEPLESSNESS.—The Rt. Hon. LORD BYRON says that—"Harness' Electropathic Belt is invaluable for sleeplessness, I recommend it to all my friends."

Guaranteed to generate a mild continuous current of Electricity, which speedily cures all Disorders of the Nerves, Stomach, Liver and Kidneys. Thousands of Testimonials. Pamphlet & Advice free on application to Mr. C. B. Harness, Consulting Electrician, the Medical Battery Co. Ltd.

Only Address,

52, OXFORD ST. LONDON, W. (Corner of Rathbone Place.)

Call to-day, if possible, or write at once

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C. F. W. PARRY (late GURST & Co.), 29 PATERNOSTER-ROW WEDNESDAY, JULY 18, 1888 [All rights reserved.

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."

(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India.)

"And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the Forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS of the EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. XII., No. 604. Entered at Stationers' Hall.] WEDNESDAY, JULY 25, 1888. [PRICE ONE PENNY.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
The Keys of the Tzar's House	293
The Islanders Careless and Confident—Rich, but Safe	294
The British Empire, the Tabernacle of Jehovah. Part II. By E. Pearse	295
The Rev. Andrew A. Bonar, D.D., on the Jews' Home-Coming	296
Review	297
Correspondence	298

"THE KEYS OF THE TZAR'S HOUSE."

IN a series of articles the Pall Mall Gazette is publishing, one numbered xvii. is entitled, "Who is to keep the keys of the Tzar's house?" It appears in the issue of July 2nd, and is well worth perusal by Anglo-Israelites. In the first place it distinctly corroborates our views, always consistently expressed since the BANNER was first launched, namely, that Constantinople is the Gate of the Russian Empire and the possession of that Gate is the constant aim and object of the great Northern Power. The writer of the article calls "the peerless port" the "keys of the Tzar's house;" we, "the Gate of the Czar's dominions." Between the two figures of expression there is not much to choose. Ours is a Scriptural and correct description of it. For the locality whereon Constantinople is built, and the narrow strip of water called the Bosphorus in front of it, are together decidedly "a Gate." The possession of that Gate is the object Russia wants: not the bolts and bars and keys which open and shut it. Give her the Gate of her house, and she will easily apply the keys to the locks of the Gate and close it. Writing about the future of the great Gate of all the Gates, the author of this article says, "Behind all Balkan questions there ever arises the one question which dominates the whole situation, Constantinople and the Bosphorus, Who is to hold the keys of the straits? Who is to keep the keys of the Tzar's 'house'? Unless an agreement can be arrived at on that point, the antagonism between England and Russia is likely to continue, and even to grow more acute. Is such an agreement possible? I venture to believe that it is, and for this reason."

Here we may pause and notice that round Constantinople, which represents "the keys of the Czar's dominions," or the Gate of his house, two Powers only are angrily watching. The writer admits their antagonism or enmity, and he says it is likely to grow. The Russians then are British-Israel's enemy. The Gate about which the quarrel exists is the Gate of Russia's "house." What more do we need to direct our thoughts to Gen. xxii. 17, and to learn that regarding this very spot God swore to Abraham, our forefather, that that Gate, the Gate of our enemies, should at last lapse, not to the owners of the house of the Russians, but to the afterseed of Abraham, the British-Israelites! "Thy seed," He promised on oath, "shall possess the Gate of his enemies." Israel is before us. The Gate is confessedly recognised as the keys of Russia's house. Russia is seen to be the coming Gog-Magog, already the bitter foe of Israel in India, in Egypt, in Palestine, and in the Bosphorus. We may then take for our comfort and consolation what the writer of the article in his pro-Russian sympathies little knows, namely, that the keys of the Tzar's house are not for Russia at all, but for Israel; and that the British will have and hold them at last, as God is true, to the glory of His faithfulness and truth, and to the confusion and ruin of His enemies and Britain's, even of Russia! The Pall Mall writer, knowing nothing of God and of His purposes and promises to Israel, takes it comfortably for granted that the Russians will and must succeed to their keys as soon as the Turkish Power expires. For, said he, there can only be one settlement of the question of the Bosphorus. Russia will some day own the keys of her own house. If she may not grasp them when she is 120 millions strong, or when she is 150 millions, she will take them when she is 200 millions. It is only a question of time; hence, as there can be only one settlement, it is important to consider what England should do when that inevitable settlement arrives. The writer begs the question handsomely all round and settles it, that Russia must and will obtain the Gate; and England? Well, she must content herself not with a fortress in Gallipoli! That will never do! The Russians seated at the Gate will never stand that! No! the British must be content with the occupation of Mitylene (or Lesbos) the large Island to the South of the Dardanelles. With Egypt English, and a naval station within a few hours' steam from the mouth of the Dardanelles, we can await with composure the inevitable moment when the Russian Emperor takes over from his dvornik "the keys of his own house." The Turk, it seems, is the "Doorkeeper or dvornik, of the Russian Empire, and has charge of the keys of the Czar's house!

So far the Pall Mall Gazette! Everything of course can be arranged comfortably and prosperously for the Russians in respect to the mighty Gate, if God, and His word, and His promises to Israel, can be put out of the way. But the question is, can they be so ignored? They cannot! God will carry out His purposes and means to give the keys of the Tzar's house not to Russia, but to Britain! The Pall Mall wants eternal peace between the Russian and British Empires by giving Russia all she wants in regard to the Gate. But God deems Russian Gog to be His own and Israel's eternal enemy, and means to bring Russia into His own land of Palestine to destroy her armies, brought there probably by reason of Israel's previous occupation of Russia's Gate. The Pall Mall Gazette consequently seeks for a peace which never can be brought about, and for a concession to Russia which God Himself refuses to contemplate! Israel's seed must consequently possess Constantinople and the Bosphorus, since these united are the Gate or keys of the Tzar's house. On one point no doubt the Pall Mall's correspondent is right. Russia does not mean to invade India, but only to frighten us on that side of the world, and create a diversion in her own favour, when she delivers her final assault on Constantinople and the Holy Land afterwards. God has the matter well in hand, however, and will work out all the military plans needful to effect His own purposes, both at the Gate and on the borders of Afghanistan, in spite of the little arrangements the writer in the Pall Mall sees to be so necessary for his good friends the Muscovites. Israel, praise ye the Lord, for His protecting care and for His prophetic word, which gives you such comfort and consolation regarding the things which are coming to pass shortly in the earth.

Digitized by Google

THE ISLANDERS CARELESS AND CONFIDENT:—RICH, BUT SAFE.

GIVEN a maritime nation answering to the above five descriptions, and you have found Israel. An island nation, living "carelessly" in the midst and face of her enemies, enormously rich and attracting the envy and attacks of her enemies, but safe as the apple of God's eye. This is the description of God's inheritance and chosen ones, Israel. If we find a people answering to every iota of this description we have found the Lost Ten Tribes. The matter constitutes, in fact, a new identity, and may take rank as such accordingly. In Ezek. xxxix. 6, A.V., Israel as the dwellers in the Isles are described as living "carelessly" (margin, confidently) there. The Revised Version gives the words, "securely in the isles." The characteristic of the nation's island residents is "carelessness, security, and confidence." This is also the description of their domicile in Deut. xxxiii. 28, R.V. "And Israel dwelleth safely, the fountain of Jacob alone." Similar descriptions are to be found scattered about the Scriptures everywhere. God's favour follows His people, and as the result they "dwell in safety alone." But this is not all. The House of Israel, God's chosen ones, are not only to be safe and secure, they are to be abnormally rich as well; "lending to many nations, borrowing from none; endowed with the power to get wealth;" but only to God's glory (Deut. xv. 6, viii. 18). Here, then, are five marks which must be found meeting in some modern nation. They must be a settled nation. They must be living "carelessly" in the face of danger, yet "confidently." They must be rich nationally, and so become the world-wide money-lender, and yet so living and so envied they must be safe and secure from all harm, protected by God's grace and promises in their island home. If such a nation exists anywhere to-day, that nation must be Israel. If we look around in search of such a people we shall not find them out of Europe. No island people outside it are rich enough to attract the envy and greed of their powerful neighbours, and none are safe; but all are liable to, and have suffered invasion and spoil. In Europe we find but one great nation whose dwelling is in islands. None but they are living "carelessly and confidently." All others are the prey of incessant anxieties in respect to wars and invasions; and none are rich as the British are rich, or safe as they from the military and naval threats of their powerful neighbours. One nation, the British alone, respond to the entire portrait. They are an island people, "a great and mighty nation." They are rich beyond conception, and their fleets laden with the riches of the world cover the seas. They are the carriers of the whole earth, as Lord George Hamilton, the first Lord of the Admiralty, told us in his speech on the 28th of May, at Derby. "We have," he says, "as everyone is aware, a practical monopoly of the carrying trade of the world. Not only that, but our ancestors were wise enough to lay hands upon many fair places in different parts of the world. They had created the greatest Colonial Empire, and the gigantic commerce of so vast an empire renders us always subject to great risk if we come into collision with any great nations abroad." Such are the deliberate opinions of the first Lord of the Admiralty, and he does not conceal his fear that at this moment "the strength of our navy is insufficient" to defend all that we have to guard. With these tremendous risks pressing on us and with a world of commerce afloat entrusted to our care, or properly belonging to ourselves, we are absolutely reckless in regard to the risks we run. We live securely and confidently, careless to the consequences of our crass neglect and negligence, and yet safe hitherto, even for the last 1,000 years, from the attacks of enemies and the invasions of the covetous aliens who are at heart our bitter foes. Our past Government, notably the one in power in 1880, built no large ships of war, but purposely, to pose as an economical Government, failed to order the guns to arm several to be made, and therefore to-day "we have nine ships in the Navy, some of them of the largest and most expensive class, waiting for 78 guns." "The armament of 'The Howe,' for example, ought to have been finished last September by the Royal Gun Factory, but will not be complete till September 1888! Other large ships of war are in the same plight, leaving us the laughing stock of Europe, and our strength lamentably shortened." But we care not as a nation! We live "carelessly and confidently," trusting to the chapter of accidents for safety, and somehow or other, coming out of our national scrapes quite right at last!

Then again with respect to the commerce afloat, the opinion of the experts, represented by Admiral Hornby, was, that we required, as we lately saw, no less than 186 swift steaming cruisers to defend our mercantile navy, as the very smallest possible minimum; whereas we have but 42 such ships to do the whole work, against 30 possessed by the French to prey on our trade and many more owned by the Russians for the same object. We know this perfectly well, yet we are not agitated or alarmed! Panic is not felt by the nation, and we are to-day "confident and careless," assured of our safety, relying on the experience of the last 1,000 years; and not alarmed in the smallest degree at our proved incapacity to defend our floating commerce, though that commerce embraces the food supplies, and the wheat and corn we need to exist, deprived of which we should as a nation, be starved in three months, by any conquering enemy. It is clear, then, that we are an island nation; rich to a degree, yet safe; running awful risks of destruction by our envious, hostile neighbours; yet careless to a fault; supine as to measures of defence; confident of our safety, when apparently, as the experts see the matter, we have no reason for confidence at all! We answer in short to the picture of Israel as drawn in the Scriptures, and therefore must be the very people of God, as He is true. But let us not be misunderstood. We do not advocate a condition of hapless, heedless, defencelessness, for our nation! Far from that! God works by means; and He will not allow us to be taken unawares and ruined by our enemies. He has guaranteed our safety, and we see by the magnitude of our navy as it exists; by our volunteer force; by the success He has given our arms hitherto in the four quarters of the world, that He would not have us go unarmed or underarmed in the present crisis of the world. He sends us panics to force us to take precautions; and when He has obtained the power He needs to work out His own purposes, He does the rest Himself. Israel's history as described in God's Word and our own since Alfred's days, plainly shows that God ever uses human means, and blesses them. But the amount of force He needs He calls for, and does not leave us to grant or withhold it according to our national caprice! We have to do our duty in the matter, and provide the armies and navies for the work! He manipulates them and effects His objects; generally, we see, by the few, and not by the many (Judges vii. 2, 4). Israel, praise ye the Lord!

Digitized by Google

THE BRITISH EMPIRE, THE TABERNACLE OF JEHOVAH.

By E. Pearse.

(Concluded from page 287).

The sanctuary was made of boards of imperishable wood, covered with gold, and so contrived that, though when reared up they made a perfectly firm structure, yet they could be taken down and removed without injury to another place, there to be set up as firmly as before, a type of the British Empire. Our forefathers dwelt in the wilderness; next they dwelt in God's land; but the tabernacle was taken up and brought to these islands, there to be a temple for Jehovah, hidden or veiled, as in the wilderness, until now that the time is approaching for their journey back to the East.

The most important parts of the tabernacle were the ark, the mercy-seat, and the cherubim. The word translated ark is aron, meaning a box or chest, translated coffin in Gen. l. 26. This contained God's covenant with His people. It is called the ark (or chest) of the covenant, the ark of the testimony. Above it was the mercy-seat, on which were two golden cherubim, with their faces inward, and their wings overshadowing the ark. The throne or seat of Jehovah was between the cherubim. "He sitteth between the cherubim, be the earth never so unquiet." Who are the cherubim? They are the agents of Jehovah in His work of restoring the world to the tree of life. They are variously represented, sometimes as composite figures, combining all that is chief in strength, usefulness, activity, and intelligence, i.e., lion, ox, eagle, and man. Being the agents of Jehovah, they must be Israel, His witnesses, for He says, "This people have I formed for Myself" (Isa. xliii. 21). They are familiar to us under the name of griffins, and in heraldry are called supporters on coats of arms; the name is the same. "Griffin,* gryphon, from the Greek gruphês, are all from the Hebrew, Cherubin, in English, cherub."†

Over the sanctuary were two beautiful curtains of five breadths each, fastened together by taches of gold in loops of blue. They were of fine linen, woven with blue, purple, and scarlet, and embroidered with cherubim. The colours‡ used are emblematical of revealed truth (Major Nickle, in "Life from the Dead"), light and redemption. God is light, and the Godhead is Trinity in Unity. Light divides primarily into three colours, blue, red, and yellow. We have, therefore, the Holy Trinity represented in the blue, scarlet, and gold of the sanctuary and hangings:—Blue, God the Father; scarlet, God the Son, the Redeemer (the word translated scarlet is scarlet-worm—reference to Psa. xxii. 6, "I am a worm and no man"); gold, God the Holy Spirit, whose influence is extended over the whole tabernacle, represented by the gold everywhere, covering the boards, and forming the clasps which unite the curtains. The other colour used is purple, which represents our King, Jehovah-Jesus, the God-man, purple being a combination of blue and red—blue the colour of God (sapphire), and red the colour of Jesus as man, the Redeemer. "Who is this that cometh from Edom, with dyed garments from Bozrah, this that is red in His apparel?" (Isa. lxiii. 1). The combination producing the royal purple, royalty and redemption.

The fine linen is an emblem of the righteousness of the saints, i.e., of the cherubim, the agents of Jehovah. So we see in the curtains those who are nearest to the sanctuary, or dwelling-place of Jehovah, who are washed and made white in the blood of the Lamb, and striving to maintain His honour, do His work, and set forth His glory, conscious of His presence with them. They are one with Him, not to be separated, for the curtains were woven with blue, purple, and scarlet.

Now we pass to the tent and its coverings. The first covering, or tent cloth, was of goat's hair; the hairs innumerable representing the people, not so close to the sanctuary as those whose chief aim is to glorify God, but very decidedly shielding the tent or empire which contains His dwelling-place. Over the goat's-hair curtains was a covering of rams' skins, dyed red. "The valiant men are in scarlet" (Nahum ii. 3). These are our soldiers—regulars, militia, and volunteers—who protect those who protect the servants immediately around the throne, which is supported by the cherubim. Note, rams' skins, not sheep's skins, because the military are intended, and women do not engage in that warfare.

The outside covering was of seals' skins (R.V.), dyed blue, very clearly identified with the Navy, who surround the whole, amphibious, like seals, not only protecting, but enabling all belonging to the empire to move about from place to place. So in moving the tabernacle a covering of seals' skins was thrown over the holy things. There is a remarkable allusion to this in Ezek. xvi. 10: "I clothed thee also with broidered work (the embroidered curtains), and shod thee with seals' skins." That is the only place where the word occurs, except with reference to the outer covering of the tent of the tabernacle, and in wrapping up the holy things when they were moved. It has in Ezekiel a figurative meaning, the idea being that they had the power of moving from place to place. The holy things being wrapped in the same, figured the transferring the tabernacle by means of these marine animals, the navy; therefore by sea, which was a necessity, as islands had to be reached. There is a confirmation of this idea in the fact that the coracles of the Britons were covered with skins. As to the colour of this outer covering authorities differ, but Josephus determines it by likening it to the heavens, and in the East that would be deep blue, answering to our navy blue. The blue and the red.

All this was brought prominently to mind in the Jubile celebrations. First the Queen gave thanks in the sanctuary, over the very throne of God, Jacob's stone (called His house, Gen. xxviii. 17, 18). Surrounding her were the Royal Family, representatives of the House of Judah, answering to the cherubic figure of the lion, and representatives of every class of the people, corresponding to the other cherubic figure, the unicorn, one of Ephraim's emblems.

Next came those who, in churches (and chapels?) all over the country were singing, "Holy, holy, holy, Lord God of Sabaoth!" "In the midst of the throne and round about the throne were four living creatures, full of eyes, before and behind. And the first living creature was like a lion, and the second living creature like a calf, and the third living creature had a face as a man, and the fourth living creature was like a flying eagle. And the four living creatures had each of them six wings about him; and they were full of eyes within; and they rest not day and night saying,* "Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty" (Rev. iv. 6, 7, 8). Later on, the people in general, who, without much thought of the goodness of God

* "Lights and Shades," by J. Wilson.

† Britannia's supporters are the lion and the unicorn (Gen. xlix. 9; Numb. xxiii. 22, 24, xxiv. 8, 9).

‡ Our flags are called "The colours," and are blue and red.

* This hymn of praise is perpetually ascending from some portion of the British Empire, on which the sun is always rising.

Digitized by Google

and desire for His glory, were, all over the country, eating and drinking and enjoying themselves at other people's expense, in a thorough Israelitish manner, precisely as they were commanded to do every third year,* with the second tithe.

A few days later the military, figured by the rams' skins dyed red, had their share in the Jubile demonstrations; and lastly the navy, the Blue Jackets, who cover the whole, for the military would be powerless without them. Blue, the colour of the sky which surrounds the universe, a type of the Creator-Father's care, which embraces the whole of His people and creation.

And everywhere in the world was displayed the Union Jack, testifying to the faithfulness of Jehovah's promise made to Ephraim that his seed should be "a multitude of nations" (Gen. xlviii. 19; and Rom. xi. 25, which is a quotation from the first text, only the translators have put "Gentiles" for "nations"). Of this we are reminded by the transverse cross, that they are a redeemed people, which is shown by the sign of redemption placed over it always. "Thou hast given a banner to them that fear Thee, that it may be displayed because of the truth" (Psa. lx. 4). "Then shall appear the sign† of the Son of Man in heaven."

To those who are becoming panic-stricken at the supposed defenceless condition of the Empire, here is the promise: "I, saith the Lord, will be to her a wall of fire round about, and will be the glory in the midst of her" (Zech. ii. 5). "No weapon formed against thee shall prosper" (Isa. liv. 17).

Bedford, June 15, 1888.

THE REV. ANDREW A. BONAR, D.D., ON THE JEWS' "HOME-COMING."

THE Christian Leader published some time since the following remarks by Dr. Andrew Bonar, on Isa. xviii., and the return of the Jews to their land. The Rev. Doctor does not recognise the Scriptural distinction between Israel and Judah, and therefore with him the Jews are Israel and Israel the Jews. In Egypt he says the Jews were terrible to the Egyptians! and their sufferings he rightly adds were terrible in the time of the destruction of Jerusalem. His idea must be therefore that the Twelve Tribes were Jews when the Romans destroyed Jerusalem in A.D. 70, and the Twelve Tribes were Jews in Pharoah's and Moses' day when the nation was reduced to slavery in B.C. 1491! Either Dr. Bonar must be a careless divine indeed, or his eyes are blinded so that he cannot see that Israel parted from Judah in B.C. 975, never to reunite again up to this hour, and that when Titus destroyed Jerusalem the Jews alone suffered the vengeance, being Israelites, but not the House of Joseph, or Ephraim, then cast away in exile as God's Lo-Ammi yet Firstborn still (Jer. xxxi. 9; Hosea i. 9, 10, 11, R.V). Dr. Bonar, however, identifies the British people with "the country spoken of in Isa. xviii. as destined to carry the Jews home to Palestine." The grounds for that opinion he states thus:—

> The country spoken of in Isa. xviii. which is to carry home the Jews to Palestine, is Britain. In another part of the same prophecy it is said the ships of Tarshish shall carry them home, and there is no navy entitled to that name so much as ours. Reference is made in Isaiah to a nation summoned on the errand of seeking out another nation. The "shadowing with wings" conveys the idea of protection; and here is a land that stretches out its protection to other countries. This is what our country is doing to Turkey, and also to India, which is referred to as the land "beyond the rivers of Ethiopia." It is a blessed thought that our country may have the honour and privilege of carrying Israel home. "Surely the isles shall wait for Me, and the ships of Tarshish first to bring thy sons from afar, their silver and their gold with them." They will take all the Rothschilds and others with them in the ships back to Palestine, with all their gold. Israel will return unconverted, they are converted in the land, but not till then—at least, the two tribes, Judah and Benjamin, go back unconverted. The Jews, though "scattered and peeled," are still a nation. A curious thing about them is that, so far as we have records, they have been just about seven millions—seldom less or more. They are a "people terrible." There is no other nation that this can be said of. The Romans became a terrible people, but they were not so from their beginning. But Israel became terrible whenever they became a nation. They were terrible to Egypt, the mightiest nation on the face of the earth. And they were terrible in the sufferings which they themselves endured. We never read of a city the taking of which involved such fearful misery as the destruction of Jerusalem. They are a nation measured out as slaves to be sold, and there were thousands and thousands of them sold in this way when Jerusalem was destroyed. They are a nation "whose land the rivers have spoiled." Is there any nation on the face of the earth that says of its land, "This belongs to me by divine right"? We say of our land that it is ours because we are here and our forefathers were here; but we cannot say by divine right. Israel can say that land belongs to us by divine right. God gave it to Abraham and to his seed. When Rabinowitz was in Glasgow some eight months ago he made this remark: "That is our land, and you notice no nation can keep hold of it long, for all the nations that have been there have just a hold of it for a certain time, till the true owners of the land return. It is just as if I were leaving for a few minutes my seat in that railway carriage, and I said to somebody, 'Now keep that seat till I return;' so the Lord says to the nations that have been there, 'You may keep that land for a little, but it is not yours, the true owners will be here in a little.'" Some have been puzzled by the saying, "Whose land the rivers have spoiled." Israel's land was never spoiled by rivers. The prophet speaks figuratively, and the rivers are the invading enemies like the Assyrians that have trodden down this land and taken it as their own (Isa. viii. 7). The Chaldeans did this, so did the Greeks under Alexander, the Romans, the Saracens, the Turks, and for a short time the Crusaders. The Turks possess the land just now, but they will soon be out of it. We shall see—some of us at least—a placard in the streets: "The Turks driven out of Jerusalem." It will not be all at once. The Lord says, "I will take My rest;" but just as before a storm there is often an uncommon stillness in the air, so, says the Lord, there will be a time when it seems I am doing nothing for Israel: it will seem that I have dropped them out of My sight; but all this is just before the storm comes and sweeps away their enemies. Their conversion is referred to as "a present brought unto the Lord." The Holy Spirit will be poured out on that nation when they are in their own land, and thus the present of a nation shall be made to the Lord.

Dr. Bonar is quite certain in regard to two points wherein he agrees with us. He is sure that Isaiah in ch. xviii. was prophetically describing the British nation as the restorer of the Jews to Palestine, and that they are called in other Scriptures, "Tarshish" and "the ships of Tarshish." He also sees that the Jews will be restored to their land in unbelief, Jews in religion still, but that their conversion will take place there, after the Return. On these points we quite see with the Doctor. But we wish to urge upon him that if the British people are prophetically described in the Scriptures as "the ships of Tarshish," their land as "Tarshish," and their colonies, as "the young lions thereof" (which is the case), then it is certain the British will accompany the Jews, as their protecting companions during that mighty historical event, and that beside themselves there will be no other national fellow voyagers in the splendid procession of the Return of the Jews to their land. This being granted, our next point is this. That according to the scriptures (Jer. iii. 18, R.V), the House of Judah, or the Jews, are "to walk to the House of Israel, and they shall come together out of the land of the North" (just where the British dwell) "to the land which God has given to their fathers for an inheritance." It seems, then, from Jeremiah's inspired testimony that Judah or the Jews will have as their sole companions, "the House of Israel;" and that under Israel's protection Judah will return. This makes it clear, comparing Scripture with Scripture, that

* This was always a feast of tabernacles, when Jubile was proclaimed.

† The Greek word translated "sign" is ensign in some versions of Old Testament.

Digitized by Google

the House of Israel, Tarshish, the ships of Tarshish, and "the land shadowing with wings," are synonyms for the House of Joseph or Ephraim. The Prophecy of Ezekiel in ch. xxxvii. 15—28 shows also that the return of the Jews will take place in junction with Ephraim or the House of Joseph, i.e., Israel, and Hosea i. 11, a political prophecy, distinctly names Israel and Judah only as the parties to the Return, the leading Power being, as in Isa. xviii., not Judah but the naval maritime State which is deeemed worthy to carry and offer "the present" of Judah to the Lord. It seems, then, that the maritime Power in question goes under the names scripturally of Tarshish, the ships of Tarshish, Ephraim, the Children of Israel, or the House of Joseph, alias the House of Israel, and Dr. Bonar is sure that some of these names cover the British nation. It follows, then, like one of Euclid's deductions, that according to Dr. Bonar's conclusion the British are Israel, alias Ephraim, Joseph, Tarshish, and the ships of Tarshish.

On another point too we find Dr. Bonar has not quite clearly read his text in Isa. xviii. He notes that the Jews are described there as "a people terrible from their beginning" and he comments on the fact and explains it. But why does he not see that while "the present" of the Lord is so described those who bring Him this people are precisely similar in character? (v. 7.) Verse 1 compared with v. 7, R.V., will show we are right and Dr. Bonar wrong. In ver. 1 the Jews are mentioned as a nation tall and smooth (margin, dragged away and peeled) "a people terrible from their beginning onward" whereas in v. 7, the Lord's present is spoken of as "of a people tall and smooth," and the "present" as coming "from a people terrible from their beginning and onward." The "present" and the nation offering "the present" are thus both of the same description, "terrible from their beginning and onward." The British are these folks, according to Dr. Bonar; and we quite agree with him! But then the British must be the brethren of the Jews; and that they can only be if they are the Lost Ten Tribes, which is precisely our contention! We wait to hear what Dr. Bonar has to say against this view, which is supported by the Hebrew prophets Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel and Hosea. Zephaniah too is not silent, for in ch. iii. 9, R.V., "the Lord's suppliants" (therefore Christians), being the "daughter of His dispersed" (therefore scattered Israelites), "living beyond the rivers of Ethiopia" (see Isa. xviii. 1), "shall bring the Lord's offering." These must be Israel, according to God's word, but British according to the Doctor!

Review.

Talks for the Times. By the Rev. J. Wild, M.A., D.D., pastor of the Bond-street Congregational Church, Toronto, Ont., Canada. R. Banks and Son, 5, Racquet-court, Fleet-street. Price 3s.

THIS book contains 18 sermons preached by Dr. Wild on Sunday evenings in his church at Toronto, and they are now published by request. They are valuable to our cause, because the preacher is a firm believer in Our Identity, and in almost every discourse his belief is apparent. He has an immense congregation—upwards of 3,000—and therefore under his energetic treatment the subject is enjoying advantages in the Dominion which, somehow, it fails to obtain in the British Islands. No popular divine here preaches on Our Identity constantly as Dr. Wild does, and no clergyman or minister on this side the water recognises any obligation on his part to notice the matter in addressing his people. Dr. Wild, on the contrary, seems ever anxious to bring the matter forward, and to press it home. On almost every point we find Dr. Wild is in agreement with the BANNER, and he is particularly clear in regard to all our foundation truths. He sees distinctly the Scriptural difference between the House of Israel and the House of Judah, and finds the former, called the Lost Ten Tribes, in an organised state in Great Britain. Manasseh, he tells us, is in an organised state in the United States. "The House of Israel," he believes, "has a fine part to play in the civilisation and evangelisation of the world, and that many prophecies, both temporal and spiritual, apply to them and none else." Dr. Wild's first sermon in the published volume before us has a remarkable title, "A Gift of 192,000,000 acres of Land." This is the extent of the land of the inheritance, and it was given in fee simple, says the doctor, to Abraham and his seed for ever. "He has given it,' he writes, "to Abraham and his seed for ever," to be a special heritage. "At the appointed time God will place in possession of Israel (England) this land, and England will open it up for the settlement of the Jews. Towards this central idea all history, all strife, all diplomacy is now tending. The tide of events that is setting in this way alarms Russia, gives distrust to Turkey, neutralises France, strengthens Prussia, makes Austria careful, Italy suspicious, Spain indifferent, the United States hopeful, and England confused and divided." In regard to our acquisition of Egypt in 1882, and our mysterious stay there ever since, Dr. Wild in the first sermon writes as follows:—"How naturally, yet mysteriously and unexpectedly, Egypt went under the control of Great Britain! The man whose word may be said to be as good as his bond (Mr. Gladstone!) has had to break it. 'We are only in Egypt to settle this matter,' he said, 'and then we shall leave it.' God would not let him leave it. That man berated that crownless king, Benjamin Disraeli, for calling to his help the East India soldiers, but he called them himself to help him in the war in Egypt to show that the vast empire is one. And God made the very man do it that we would of all other men believe would not do it, for he had declared he would not."

In regard to Palestine and its importance to modern nations, Dr. Wild has a fine passage on p. 29:—"It is a wonderful land in this respect, that it is the only one strongly and earnestly coveted by the several great nations of the earth. Russia would give herself to possess Palestine. France would abandon her Paris to-day to possess Palestine. It was the glorious ambition of old Bonaparte to get Palestine. Germany would be glad of Palestine. Italy is jealous of Palestine. England watches guardedly and carefully Palestine. What are they watching this bit of land for? what is there about it? why centre their covetous disposition for increased territory upon this barren piece of country? Because there is such a history connected with it, and great expectations in respect of it." Space forbids our adding to our quotations. But there are many passages throughout this volume which will well repay the studious reader. The fifth sermon, on "The Stone Kingdom," is one of the best. Speaking of the fifth or Stone Kingdom of Dan. ii. 35—44, the Preacher said:—"I am under the impression, I am under the conviction, that what we call the British Empire to-day stands for this fifth empire. So small in its beginning, so mysterious as to its origin, that the best historian cannot tell us the time, nor who were the actual originators of it. It seems to come into existence invisibly, and it has been a sort of unruly little pugnacious chap, among the other nations, ever and always pounding and fighting, and yet ever and always growing. The more it fought the more it grew. It seems to have grown by fighting."

Such are some of the gems in these sermons. There are plenty more. We do not wonder, when we note Dr. Wild's style, that he has such an enormous congregation of hearers in constant attendance. We wish we had a few of such outspoken preachers amongst us on this side the Atlantic! In that case the number of those persuaded of the truth of our Israelitish origin would, we presume, be largely in excess of those who now avow their belief. We are thankful for Dr. Wild's book, and though we do not pretend to agree in all his statements, or share his admiration of the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, lately Prime Minister of England, we can recommend this book and wish it a wide circulation. We are glad to see that other volumes will follow in response to the demand by the public for the sermons in book form.

THE social, as well as the intellectual, and the civil and religious relations of man, I think, have only so far been developed in their highest and most civilized forms under the influence, and training, and force of the Gospel. We cannot but prove this by a reference to the nations that have entertained the Gospel as a motive power in their government, and in their general conduct. I need not refer to the United States, or to our own beloved land, as mounting up and above every other land on God's earth.—DR. JOSEPH WILD.

ERRATUM.—Page 275, column 1, line 23, read "Snig Hill."

Digitized by Google

Correspondence.

THE JUBILEE OF TARA HILL.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR PHILO-ISRAEL,—Over and over again, of late, you have called attention, in the columns of the BANNER, to the probable speedy fulfilment of the prophecy of Isaiah xxvi. 20, which bids us, as God's chosen people, enter into our chambers and shut our doors about us, in preparation for the great earthquake war-woe, which all the signs of the present times show to be fast approaching: and now it has actually been brought within the range of practical politics by the passage in the Queen's Speech, at the opening of the present session of Parliament, which says to the members of both Houses, "you will be asked to make provision for improvements in the defence of the ports and coaling stations of my Empire, which have been rendered urgently necessary by the advance of military science," and the measures which are being adopted in compliance with it. Will you kindly allow me to call attention to another event which I as firmly believe must precede that awful period of judgment, and which is actually connected with it in the prophecy of the Revelation which foretells it? I refer to the recovery of the Ark of the covenant. In my pamphlet, entitled "The Re-appearing of the Ark of the Covenant," which is published at the office of the BANNER, and can be had for the small sum of threepence-halfpenny, post free, I have identified the Throne of Revelation iv. 2, with the Ark, the recovery of which is distinctly predicted in chapter xi. 19, and argued that, as this event is there connected with incidents answering exactly to those which will ensue on the outpouring of the seventh vial (xvi. 17, 21), they are connected with each other as cause and effect; * and that, as all the elements for the accomplishment of the latter, to those who interpret the Revelation from the Historical point of view, are already fully prepared, the time for the recovery of the Ark must be very near at hand. In identifying Tara Hill as the place of the concealment of the Ark, I can clearly show that I have not followed any mere baseless fancies, or "cunningly devised fables," but that every link in the chain of evidence which I have put together rests upon a solid foundation. Thus my statement that the Greek word, naos, which is used for the place which was "opened in heaven," and in which the Ark was "seen," does not mean the temple, properly so-called, but the secret part of it, or Holy of Holies, rests upon the authority of Donnegan's Greek-English Lexicon, which gives this meaning for the word, "In Septuagint, 1 Kings vi. 5, the inner part of the temple, the Sanctum Sanctorum, Holy of Holies, where the priests alone were admitted; so also New Testament, Matthew xxvii. 51." And Dr. Cumming interprets the "heaven," in which this event takes place, as meaning the high places of the world, or the places of dominion, Empire, rank, and power—"Apocalyptic Sketches," Ed. 1848, p. 222,—a description which applies pre-eminently to the British Empire. I maintain that my interpretation of the "rainbow, like an emerald to look upon" (Rev. iv. 3, R.V.), as a symbol of the Irish Church, "reflecting, as it has done, the rays of the Sun of Righteousness longer by far than any other national Church in Christendom," and surrounding the Ark when brought again to light, is a perfectly legitimate one. The employment of the emerald, as a symbol of the verdure of Ireland, is no mere modern poetic fancy. Pliny, the Roman historian, who lived in the first century of our era, speaking of the voyage of the Carthagenian admiral, Hamilco, to explore the Western parts of Europe, which took place in the fifth century before it, says, "In a four months' voyage, keeping to his left the great shoreless ocean, on which no ship has ever ventured, where the breeze blows not, but the eternal fogs rest upon its lifeless waters, Hamilco reached the Sestryneides (Scilly Isles). Rich are they in metals, tin and lead. Spirited and industrious are the race who inhabit them. Fond too are they of trade, and they traverse the boisterous sea; not on barks of pine or oak, but on coracles made of skins sewn together. At the distance of two days' sail from them is the 'Holy Island,' with its abundant emerald pastures, inhabited by the Hibernians. Hard by also is the wide Isle of Albion." And I have shown that the only case in which the emerald is referred to in the Old Testament is the mention of its use in the high priest's breastplate, as the religious symbol of the tribe of Reuben, of which a man was the political symbol. Few will dispute my conjecture, that the "four living creatures, round about the throne" (Rev. iv. 6, 7, R.V.), are symbols of the four divisions of Israel, under their four standards, surrounding the Ark again as of old (Num. ii.). And, as these are organized bodies, I draw the inference that the "rainbow, like an emerald to look upon," must be of a similar nature. And if, as we both believe, the Ark is to be found in Ireland, would it not be strange if some mark, by which to identify it as the place of its concealment, were not given us; and where could a more significant symbol than this possibly be found? I fully agree with Mrs. Rogers when she says, in her last interesting work, "Britain in History, Ancient and Modern" (p. 126), "We believe that much light might be thrown upon our Anglo-Israel origin, and upon 'Jacob's Stone,' as well as upon our claim to possess it, if the much desired excavations of Tara were commenced, and search made for the Ark of the Covenant." Perhaps those who are satisfied with the evidence which I have adduced, as to Tara Hill being the place of its concealment, may be led to respond to the appeal made in my pamphlet for funds to carry out its exploration. If these were forthcoming there would probably be no longer any difficulty in obtaining permission to excavate, as Earl Russell, who is the proprietor of the Hill, has just come of age. This year may well be considered the Jubilee of Tara, for the Rev. F. R. A. Glover tells us, in his "England the Remnant of Judah" (Ed. 1881, p. 148), that it was in 1838 that he obtained the first evidences of the settlement upon it of a Hebrew colony. I was agreeably surprised to hear, the other day, that a clergyman, an old and esteemed friend of mine, who is a D.D., and rector of one of the principal churches in Dublin, had lately become a believer of Anglo-Israel truth, and had given several lectures on the subject to his ladies' Bible class. Having obtained from my Dublin publisher (George Herbert, 117, Grafton Street) a copy of my pamphlet, he approved of it so much that he recommended all the members of the class to procure copies of it, which has given a great impetus to its sale in Dublin; and I have further reason for believing that the subject it treats of is attracting much attention in this country at present. The more I study the evidence which I have put together on this wondrous subject, the more do I fancy I hear the Saviour's voice saying from heaven, "Seek, and ye shall find." And when the Ark has been found, then, I believe, will be the time to obey His further injunction, "knock,"—at the gate of heaven—"and it shall be opened unto you," for the Shechinah to come down, and take possession once more of its ancient throne, and also for the national outpouring of the Holy Spirit. If each reader of the BANNER, who is interested in this subject, would contribute, according to his ability, a fund might speedily be raised sufficient to enable steps to be taken to set this all-important question at rest for ever, provided permission for the exploration can be obtained, which will surely be the case if the set time for it be come. I remain, very sincerely yours,

EDWARD DENNY.

Laracor Vicarage, Co. Meath, May 12, 1888.

* This is most strikingly apparent from the rendering of Rev. xi. 19, in the R.V., which reads thus: "And there was opened the temple (secret place) of God that is in heaven; and there was seen in His temple (secret place) the Ark of His covenant; and there followed lightnings, and voices, and thunders, and an earthquake, and great hail."

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—A gentleman, whose name I need not mention, has been writing to me from Scotland characterising our belief that we are Israelites as "the rotten and most unscriptural theory. Rot of the first water." Here is his argument; if argument it can be called:—

"Now let us leave the nation, and let me represent you as personally the nation. What are you? Are you a member of Christ's body, the Church of God out and out? or are you an Israelite? or are you a compound mixture? You cannot be all three combined. If you are not of the first, the two last will be of no use to you. You might as well be a Hottentot or anything else you please.

"Read Hosea iii. 4. How long have the English been without a king or prince?"

The following being in substance my reply, I thought it may prove interesting to some of your readers:—

"Let me remind you that abuse is not argument, and as I do not consider your judgment infallible, I cannot accept your ipse dixit that a subject which has for its object the glory of God, His faithfulness and lovingkindness to His people, is 'an unscriptural theory and rot of the first water.' I will put your own questions to you, with a slight alteration, viz.:—

Digitized by Google

"1st. Are you a member of Christ's body?
"2nd. Are you a Scotchman?
"3rd. Are you a compound mixture of both?

"Your judgment in the case, as put by you, is that I 'cannot be all three compounds.' 'Three,' as you call it, I call it two; for if I am a 'compound mixture,' I am both a member of the body of Christ spiritually and an Israelite corporeally. Where your third compound comes in I do not know. Paul himself will bear out my position (see Rom. xi. 1, xii. 5), and therefore my position is scriptural. If I apply your judgment to your argument, then it follows that when you accepted Jesus as your Saviour you ceased to be a Scotchman. You are therefore placed in the dilemma of either withdrawing your anti-scriptural charge or acknowledging your own argument to be 'rot of the first water.' Moreover, you see how absurd it is in an argument to place a part for a whole, an individual for a nation; neither the British as a whole, nor the Scotch as part of that whole, can be 'the body of Christ the Church of God,' unless you can show that the Church does not consist of believers from every nation under the earth; but the Scriptures distinctly maintain this fact, that on this point there is no difference between Jew and Gentile (Rev. v. 9, vii. 9, 14; Rom. x. 12, 13; Gal. iii. 8, 28, proves this); so that even in the tenor of your very first question you are unscriptural as well as illogical.

"Either the British as a whole, or the Scotch as a part, or you and I individually as integral portions of the Empire, can be Israelites; but since the temporal promises of God were to Israel as a nation, and we see that the British only as a nation have the national blessings promised to Israel by a faithful covenant-keeping God (who swore that He would never forsake His people, nor deprive them of the unconditional promises made to the fathers; but would chastise them if they broke the covenant they made with Him at Sinai) it follows that Britain is Israel, and I defy anyone to disprove it.

"Your next question is in reference to Hosea iii. 4. From your standpoint, as you profess to know the Scriptures so well, how do you reconcile the passage you have quoted with other passages, say, Jer. xxxiii. 24—26? Were not the Ten Tribes without king, prince, &c., at least from the first captivity, about 740 B.C., to the Babylonish captivity of the remaining Two Tribes in 588 B.C.—viz., 152 years? Is 152 years not 'many days'? We reconcile the two passages by showing that the throne of David was with Judah during those 152 years, while the Ten Tribes were without. At the captivity of the Jews the throne of David was transferred by Jeremiah to Ten-Tribed Israel, through King Zedekiah's daughter, since which time the Jews have been the many days without a king, and the prophecy now applies to them; yet the sceptre of Israel has not departed from the royal House of Judah as promised to David, and therefore God has been true to His covenant. Don't forget to read Hosea iii. 5 when you read Hosea iii. 4.

"Your last statement in your postscript is, 'Maybe God is kind to England because of their (i.e., Israel's) presence, as He was to the Jews in the days of Esther. I confess I do not know what you mean! You admit 'the fact that you have no doubt a good number of the scattered tribes will by-and-bye be found in England,' and yet blame us for holding 'the unscriptural theory and rot of the first water,' in proving the existence of the very fact you believe in!

"Please excuse my plain speaking and faithful dealing, with kind love, "Yours affectionately,

"H. SENIOR."

THE UNWARRANTABLE SCARE.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR PHILO-ISRAEL,—Your very cheering and instructive article in last week's BANNER on "Great Britain as a Naval and Military Power," turned my thoughts upon the great sin of our forefathers—viz., want of faith in the promises of God; yet, notwithstanding their unbelief and rebellion, when He brought distress upon them for their contumacy, and they cried unto Him for pardon, He brought them out of all their troubles. But though God had thus favoured them over and over again, they were afterwards just as distrustful as ever. Well might they be called a perverse and faithless generation.

When we now read the daily papers, many of them abounding in the apprehensions of some of the leading warriors of our day, we are constrained to admit that like as our ancestors sinned through lack of faith, so do we their descendants. Two years ago the "Anglo-Israel Almanac" recorded the upwards of two hundred battles fought by the British Army and Navy, when God had given us the victory, and sometimes against fearful odds. Do our scared legislators ever couple these victories with what (if they ever attend public worship) they repeat every Sunday, "Because there is none other that fighteth for us, but only Thou, O God"? I fancy not, or they would not be so fearful. I would recommend as an antidote to their fright Psa. xxxvii. 1, 8, 10, R.V. But even looking at the matter in a worldly light, what a disgrace to our nation it is that we should be continually publishing to the world our belief that an enemy could easily invade our country and rob and plunder us with impunity! The correspondent at Vienna has hit the right nail on the head. Our pessimists seem to think that British pluck has evaporated, and that the people would stand still and tamely allow an army to land on our shores and march to London, or elsewhere, unresisted, and "take their full swing in the island."

Some of us are old enough to remember the threatened invasion in the early part of the century and the scare that occurred at that time, but the cry of our fighting men then was,—

"Devil or Don, let them come on,
But how'd they come off at the island?"

Why! there was not a boy in our school who did not believe himself a match for two or three Frenchmen; and, however absurd such an idea might have been, yet it showed what I believe to be the God-given spirit inherent in the British race.

We remember the despotic cry of the mob, "Light up, light up, luminations," and better by far the heartfelt thanksgivings to the Almighty which were offered up in every place of worship throughout the kingdom, after the Lord had given us the glorious victories by Nelson and Wellington, which culminated in uprooting the power of that scourge of humanity, Napoleon I. When we consider the vast mass of infidelity, atheism, Sabbath-breaking, and indifference to God's commands now rampant in this land, we cannot but expect that we shall have to endure some heavy national punishment; but, glory be to our merciful Father in heaven, who has given us His gracious promises, "I will visit their transgression with the rod, and their iniquity with stripes; nevertheless, My lovingkindness will I not utterly take from him, nor suffer My faithfulness to fail." "I will correct thee in measure, and will not leave thee altogether unpunished."

Therefore, we can humbly look forward to the time when, by His favour, we shall have surmounted all the troubles, and when our Navies will be diligently engaged in transporting our brethren of Judah, and those of us who will accompany them, to the land of our forefathers, where according to God's promise we shall dwell safely. I remain, yours in the faith,

GEORGE BAYLY.

Streatham, July 1st, 1888.

SUNDAY AND THE SABBATH.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—I have just read with considerable interest Surgeon-General Grant's letter in this week's edition of the BANNER on the above subject. The objection that we cannot be Israel, because we do not observe the Jewish Sabbath, has no validity whatever. The fact is, we continue to hallow the seventh day, and not the first; and this is confirmation strong of our real Identity. A little tract, issued some time ago by the Rev. John Harris, entitled "New Idea of the Sabbath," proves very clearly that we are now actually keeping the primitive Sabbath of Eden. Those who have read this tract with care and attention are prepared to recommend its perusal to the readers of the BANNER. Last week you published a tract, pointing out that in ecclesiastical matters supremacy and pre-eminence belonged to the Christian Israelitish Church, and not to that of Rome. Perhaps you will be also kind enough to publish at an early date in the BANNER the tract to which I have referred, and called the "New Idea of the Sabbath," by the Rev. John Harris. It can be procured from the publisher, viz., Elliot Stock, London.

The argument is very interesting, and I think everybody that reads it will allow that the author fully makes good his contention that we are now observing as our day of rest the early Edenic Sabbath. This, I may add, is not a new discovery. The view has been held by eminent divines since the days of the fathers. Usher, Gale, Lee, etc., in modern times also held it. I venture to recommend the tract to the attention of all your readers.

LUDOVICUS.

Stirling, June 20th, 1888.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed: "Philo-Israel," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

SUBSCRIPTIONS. £ s. d.

Annual Subscription for one copy weekly (including the Twelve Double Numbers) post free 0 7 6
Two Copies (including Double Numbers) 0 13 6
Three Copies " " " 1 0 4
Four Copies " " " 1 5 6
Six Copies " " " 1 16 4

Post Office Orders to be made payable at the head office, St. Martin's-le-grand, London, to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C., or F. W. PARRY & Co., 29, Paternoster-row, London.

The Editor cannot undertake to return rejected MSS. unless stamps for the purpose be sent. Parties requiring an answer should enclose a stamp.

Contents Bills and Show Cards may be obtained on application to the Publishers.

Advertisements should be sent to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

Prepaid Advertisements are inserted at the rate of thirty words for 1s. 4d.

BLACKPOOL.— Anglo-Israelites will find COMFORTABLE APARTMENTS, Public or private, near Sea or Gardens, at Mrs. Breakells, 39, Adelaide Street.

NEW BOOK BY DR. WILD.

Just Published, Price 3s., Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Lettered. Sent by Post on receipt of Published Price.

TALKS

FOR

THE TIMES.

BY JOSEPH WILD, M.A., D.D.,

Pastor of the Bond-st. Congregational Church, Toronto.

CONTENTS.—Chapter 1. A Gift of One Hundred and Ninety-Two Million Acres of Land. 2. The Return of the Jews to Palestine. 3. Folks that won't be Somebody. 4. The Four Prophecies of Egypt. 5. The Stone Kingdom and Dynamite; and the Orange Bill. 6. "144!" 7. "666!" 8. The Transit of Venus. 9. The Miracles of Antichrist; and the High Rock Image of Massachusetts, U.S. 10. The Man who could not sleep, and what came of it. 11. The Rainbow. 12. London Destroyed, and Jerusalem a Seaport. 13. Liberalism. 14. A Graft without a Stock. 15. Mouldy Bread and an Oath. 16. A Tombstone Inscription. 17. Dog Lappers. 18. How to get Rich.

London: Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street.

Just published—Cloth, 2s. 6d.—a re-issue of

The Origin of Masonic Ritual and Tradition:

A Lecture on the Three Degrees, by BRO. WM. ROWBOTTOM, P.M., 1028, with facsimile of a very rare Masonic engraving published in 1789.

"Exquisitely clear and singularly correct in everything wherein I may be any authority or guide."—Professor PIAZZI SMYTH. "Will be found of considerable interest to many besides Masons."—Church Bells.

Oxford: S. Rowbottom and Son; London: R. Banks and Son, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C.; and F. W. Parry and Co., 29, Paternoster Row, E.C.

Price Five Shillings.—"Substantially and attractively got up, and profusely illustrated."—Oldham Chronicle.

Eildon Grange: A Tale.

By ANDREW CLARK, M.A., Vicar of St. Michael's, Oxford. "One of the most charming books. . . . The illustrations are full of playful humour."—Scotsman. "The book is undoubtedly a happy one."—The Oxford Magazine. "Both entertaining and bracing."—Dundee Advertiser.

Oxford: S. Rowbottom and Son; London: Hamilton, Adams and Co., 32, Paternoster Row, E.C.

☞ Ask for this Book at the Libraries.

Just Published, price 1d., 6 copies post free for Six stamps, 6/6 per 100, carriage paid.

FACTS AND PROBABILITIES

Respecting the Identity of the British and American Nations with the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel.

Compiled by DELTA.

London: ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-st.

HUMAN LIFE.—FIFTY YEARS' Record of Facts, Principles, and Discoveries (just published complete) Relating to the Improvement and Preservation of Human Life on Earth. Origin and true treatment of diseases. A series of articles by DR. SAMUEL BIRLEY, M.D., Ph.D. Book form, 50 pages. SENT FREE to every applicant by the publishers, GORDON B. MURRAY & CO., 50, Theobald's-road, Holborn, E.C. Write to-day

POISON IN THE ASHES.

—o—

MANY people believe that Nature has somewhere a remedy for every disease. So many and so terrible are the ills of life, and so slight the pleasure we get as time flies past, that such a belief is the least faith we can show in a gracious and all-wise Providence. A few remedies—but, alas, how few!—have been found. Others, so far, lie hidden from human inquiry. Occasionally death follows quickly on the heels of the evil—an illustration of the dangerous character of the ailment to be relieved:—

For example, Nervous Dyspepsia is a comparatively new disease, growing out of the conditions of modern life. It is a joint affection of the digestive organs and of the nervous system. These two were formerly treated as separate ailments, and it was left for the clear-sighted thinkers to prove that the basis of this terrible and often fatal complication lies chiefly in the disordered and depraved functions of digestion and nutrition. They reasoned thus: "If we can induce the stomach to do its work, and stimulate the excretive organs to drive out of the body the poisonous waste matters which remain after the life-giving elements of the food have been absorbed, we shall have conquered Nervous Dyspepsia and Nervous Exhaustion. And they were right. Knowing the infallible power of Seigel's Syrup in less complicated though similar diseases, they resolved to test it fully in this. To leave no ground for doubt, they prescribed the remedy in hundreds of cases which had been pronounced incurable—with perfect success in every instance where their directions as to living and diet were scrupulously followed. Nervous Dyspepsia and Exhaustion may almost be called a peculiar English disease. To a greater or less extent half the people of this country suffer from it—both sexes and all ages. In no country in the world are there so many insane asylums filled to overflowing, all resulting from this alarming disease. Its leading symptoms are these: Frequent or continual headache; a dull pain at the base of the brain; bad breath; nauseous eructations; the rising of sour and pungent fluids to the throat; a sense of oppression and faintness at the pit of the stomach; flatulence; wakefulness and loss of sleep; disgust with food even when weak from the need of it; sticky or slimy matter on the teeth or in the mouth, especially on rising in the morning; furred and coated tongue; dull eyes; cold hands and feet; constipation; dry or rough skin; inability to fix the mind on any labour calling for continuous attention; and oppressive and sad forebodings and fear.

All this terrible group Mother Seigel's Curative Syrup removes by its positive, powerful, direct, yet painless and gentle action upon the functions of digestion and assimilation. Those elements of the food that build up and strengthen the system are sent upon their mission, while all waste matters (the ashes of life's fire) which unremoved, poison and kill, are expelled from the body through the bowels, kidneys and skin. The weak and prostrated nerves are quieted, toned, and fed by the purified blood. As the result, health, with its enjoyments, blessings, and power, returns to the sufferer, who had, perhaps, abandoned all hope of ever seeing another well day.

Mother Seigel's Curative Syrup is for sale by all chemists and medicine vendors, price 2/6 per bottle, and by the proprietors, A. J. White, Ltd., 35, Farringdon Road, London, E.C.

Price 6d., by post 7d.

AN OUTLINE OF THE PAST, the Present, and the Future of Great Britain as Revealed in the Word of God.

Also an Examination of the Theory which asserts the Kingdom to be Unconquerable.

By JAMES KEITH.

(Author of "The Impending Judgment of Great Britain," "Light Shed by the Great Pyramid of Egypt.")

"Known unto God are all His works from the beginning of the world."—ACTS XV. 18.

"Open Thou mine eyes, that I may behold wondrous things out of Thy law."—PSA. CXIX. 18.

ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London. JOHN MENZIES & Co., Edinburgh & Glasgow.

PIANOFORTES, Harmoniums, American Organs. Why buy at shops inferior made instruments, and pay large profits, when you can buy direct from the Maker High-class Instruments, and save 50 per cent. by so doing? Full value allowed for old Instruments in exchange as part payment. Write for Price Lists and Testimonials to G. LINSTEAD, 2, Oseney Crescent, Camden Road, London. Established 1874.

THE WATERS OF HERMON.

THE interesting circumstance of the re-production by modern science of these celebrated Waters of Antiquity, so famed in Biblical times, is one of the most important illustrations of the advance of the age. Differing from all other Waters they contain no mineral ingredients, so that the system, instead of being lowered by their use, is steadily built up, while the functions of life are restored to a healthy condition. And it is, therefore, with extreme gratification that this is now brought within the reach of the general public. The well-known curative properties of this famous medicine are promptly manifested in the following disorders:—Indigestion, Biliousness, Congestion of the Liver, Nausea and Vomiting, Disorders of the Stomach and Bowels and their consequences, Constipation, Piles, Flatulence, Repletion, Spasms, Discomfort or Pain after Meals, Pain Between the Shoulders, Pains in the Back and Loins, Cold in the Head, Coughs of various character, Difficulty of Breathing, Giddiness and Sick Headache, Effects of Alcohol, Overworked Brain, Affections of the Nerves, &c. Price 2s. 9d. per bottle, post free. THE WATERS OF HERMON DEPOT, 107, King Street, Hammersmith, London.

INVALUABLE REMEDY

SOUND, PURE, WHITE TEETH!

Those who value these will try

CARBOLINE

(The Great Sanitary Tooth Paste).

1/6 & 2/6 per Pot.

Through Chemists, or post free from the Makers,

GEORGE & WELCH

WORCESTER.

Lancet writes:—"To save the teeth use a good carbolic daily."

Certain 'HARNESS' Cure.

ELECTROPATHIC BELT

FOR

DEBILITY

Mr. WILLIAM WHITTINGHAM, Chiswick Cottage, Surbiton Hill, writes:—"I have derived great benefit from wearing your Electropathic Belt. Its influence has been marvellous."

Guaranteed to generate a mild continuous current of Electricity, which speedily cures all Disorders of the Nerves, Stomach, Liver and Kidneys. Thousands of Testimonials. Pamphlet & Advice free on application to Mr. C. B. Harness, Consulting Electrician, the Medical Battery Co. Ltd.

Only Address,

52, OXFORD ST. LONDON, W. (Corner of Rathbone Place.)

Call to-day, if possible, or write at once

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C. F. W. PARRY (late GILBERT & Co.), 29 PATERNOSTER-ROW WEDNESDAY, JULY 25, 1888

[All rights reserved.

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."

(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India.)

"And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the Forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS of the EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. XII., No. 605. Entered at Stationers' Hall.] WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 1, 1888. [DOUBLE NUMBER, TWOPENCE.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
How the Blessings of Abraham will Win Back the Transvaal to the Empire	301
Returning Prosperity	302
An Anglo-Israel Conversazione	303
Hurrah! for the Land Shadowing with Wings	304
The Jewish Seventeenth Century Search for Lost Israel in Great Britain. By A. T. F., India	305
Our Empire in the West	306
Chambers' New Encyclopædia on Our Identity	308
This Protracted Era of Grace. Part I. By J. C. H. Mehl	309
The Flock of God	310
"England's Doom," &c. A Review, by E. Reep	311
Australasia According to Sir Henry Parkes	312
Three Fresh Gates in the Pacific	313
The Toronto Daily News on Our Identity	314
Anglo-Israel Free Distribution Fund	315
Correspondence	315
Antediluvian Hebrew Names (Genesis v.)	315

HOW "THE BLESSINGS OF ABRAHAM" WILL WIN BACK THE TRANSVAAL TO THE EMPIRE.

GOLD mines, diamond mines, and "a multitudinous people," were the literal gifts of God to the favoured great grandson of Abraham. Through Joseph and Ephraim they have descended to the Ten Tribes of British-Israel. Therewith they have conquered the Boers, or are on the point of subduing them. The discovery of gold all over the Transvaal and contiguous countries, has drawn to those regions immense numbers of stalwart diggers, who are for the most part Anglo-Saxons. Prior to these gifts, God gave to our race vast wealth in diamond mines, and these, not yet nearly exhausted, have attracted to the neighbourhood of the Transvaal, at Kimberley, and adjacent regions, another great mass of British folk, subjects of our Queen, who have settled there, and founded towns which will become ere long Anglo-Saxon British cities and colonies. At present (and here is the point of interest for us) the British settlers in the Transvaal, brought there by the gold diggings, have actually outnumbered the Boers; and a very slight cause is sure in the long run to set the stronger against the weaker race yet in power, and so cause them to assert their Israelitish sovereignty.

President Krüger seems resolved just now to bring matters to a crisis. He has lately issued a proclamation declaring that in future, in public markets, and wherever public business shall be transacted, the only language to be used shall be Dutch! The Boers have grown rich with the profit of the gold diggings, and though lately bankrupt as a government, are now rolling in wealth. The Boer Government has taxed the diggers enormously, and the latter have in no wise resented the oppression, because they have been intent on finding gold to make their fortunes, to depart elsewhere to spend it. The Boer officials taking the diggers' taxes have in return done nothing to improve the country, to create roads, or to bridge the rivers. All this has been borne patiently. But now that the President (Krüger) proceeds further to interdict the use of English, though Barberton and Johannesberg are English towns of 10,000 people each, within the Transvaal, the matter is past endurance. There English is the language of the markets, the courts, and of all public buildings, since the inhabitants are English, or British, to a man. The decree declares besides that even at the meetings of the diggers, the language shall be Dutch, and where the speakers do not understand the same, interpreters must be employed!

These high-handed proceedings are described by an English newspaper, started in the Transvaal, as an attempt to "mop back the ocean." The English diggers seem resolved to defy this new and insulting law, while the Boers on theirs are determined to put it into force. It seems the recollection of Majuba Hill, and the ease with which Mr. Gladstone was cowed and defeated then, inflates the Boers with overweening confidence, and causes them to despise their unarmed subjects, the British diggers! To prepare for the coming struggle, the Boers are importing arms and Gatlings, looking after their horse artillery, and taking measures to put down their boasting fellow-subjects, who are getting too numerous in the land to be at all pleasant for the rulers of the Transvaal. But as the Morning Post declared on July 9th last, in an admirable article on this subject, the British have this advantage over the Boers. The latter are scattered all over a country as large as Italy, being only 40,000 all told. Whereas the British are in towns closely united, and collected in masses of 10,000 in two of them; one close to the capital (a mere village of 3,000), Pretoria. The natives, 700,000 in number, are cruelly treated by the Boers, and would probably take sides with the English in any coming struggle.

We quote the following from the Morning Post, as we have here the pith of the case well put:—

Sooner or later the Boers will have to go out of office and the English will take their place, and as every day renders this operation easier to effect, the longer the little revolution is deferred the less trouble there will be in snuffing out the Boer Government. The Boers, in their search for fresh farms and new gold fields spread out more and more daily. Receiving no additions from without, it is clear that the more the 20,000 Boers, who at the outside constitute the able-bodied population of the Transvaal, push further afield, the less capable they become of grappling with the new comers, who have swarmed in bodies of 5,000. 10,000, and 15,000 souls to centres dominating the Transvaal, and every day receive new additions to their numbers from England. And not only are the new comers powerful in themselves. The Boers have always been notoriously cruel to the natives, and in the Transvaal there are 700,000 blacks who would probably range themselves on the English side. Thus, the English in the Transvaal seem perfectly able to work out their own political salvation, and will probably, in the long run, do it without any necessity for a single redcoat crossing the border. A year ago the condition of the English element might have inspired anxiety. To-day it is powerful enough to look after itself, and President Kruger must sometimes feel that he has deferred his policy of repression too late.

Digitized by Google

Thus, for the moment, England can continue to watch unmoved the unfolding of events in the South African Republic, all the more so since, under any circumstances, any necessity to resort to arms to protect her interests there would find her very differently situated from what she was on the eve of Majuba Hill. At that period the English element in the country was insignificant, and there were many English politicians (they did not deserve the name of statesmen) who doubted whether we had any interests in the Transvaal at all. To-day England's investments in the Transvaal territory not only outweigh in value the private interests of the Boers, but even, we may say, of the Boer State itself. At a rough computation upwards of £15,000,000 of English capital have been invested of late in the Transvaal, and there is hardly an English speculator who has not got some interest in Transvaal gold mines. The temper of the commercial world, therefore, would be very different from what it was when Mr. Gladstone scuttled from the Transvaal, and the slightest crime perpetrated by President Kruger's Government would arouse a feeling of angry solicitude for interests attacked, which we may be sure Her Majesty's Government would immediately respond to. When the fighting last took place, the Transvaal was far inland, and the march to Pretoria was an arduous affair. Now the railway is finished to Kimberley, on the west frontier of the Transvaal, and the Natal line is completed to Ladysmith on the east, and beyond both of those points to Pretoria run a large and constant stream of coaches and waggons, providing on the spot abundance of splendid transport for the rapid pouring of troops into the dominions of President Kruger.

So far the Morning Post. There is no doubt the Transvaal is much more vulnerable now than it was at the date of Majuba Hill. Swazieland is to-day under British protection. Amatongaland is asking for it. Bechuanaland, on the West of the Transvaal, is occupied by us, and to the North of the country the recently created protectorate over Matabeleland gives us a commanding position there, surrounding the Transvaal on all sides. There are besides the friendly Boers, who would rejoice to see the British in power once more, and a really strong and wealth-bringing government created.

It is thought by those who are acquainted with the facts that the revolution in the Transvaal is close at hand, and that we may learn ere long that the British majority rules there. We see how God has brought it all about. Just as He did in New Zealand so He is doing in the Transvaal. We failed to subdue the Maories with our troops and guns. But we conquered them by a vast surging wave of British emigration, which placed half-a-million of British-Israelites in New Zealand to dominate over the 50,000 Maories who were then so formidable, while our own numbers were very small. So now the British diggers and settlers in the Transvaal outnumber the Boers, who do not increase, and the tide is hourly rising which will overwhelm the Dutch and transfer the country by a blow to British hands. In short the blessing of Joseph, recorded in Deut. xxxiii. 17, is at work; for the "horns, like the horns of the wild ox, are pushing the Boers, all of them, even the ends of the earth, and they are the ten thousands of Ephraim, as compared with the thousands of Manasseh" (R.V.). The revolution in the Transvaal, when it comes, will, it is hoped, result in a mixed government of Britons and Boers which will enable them all to live in friendship together, the subjects of Queen Victoria, a fresh colony of that race which is destined to rule the world. To God then be all the praise; and let Israel therefore give all the glory to Him who is faithful to His word, and is so grandly and so majestically bringing all His promises to pass, which He made on oath to Abraham and his seed for ever, even to us!

RETURNING PROSPERITY.

THE Board of Trade returns for May show that prosperity is at last being restored to our depressed and somewhat afflicted people. The accounts for the month, if corroborated by those for the summer season, will prove that trade is improving "by leaps and bounds," and that therefore "the good time" expected is at hand at last. Imports in May increased in the ratio of 8¾ per cent., exports at even a more rapid rate, namely, 16¾ over the corresponding period of 1887. The total value of imports during the month, was £30,371,000, the total value of exports being much less, namely, £19,276,000. The disproportion between the imports and exports is accounted for by the fact that our country has investments everywhere abroad, and the interest or dividends on these come to our shores in the shape of imports which have no corresponding exports to balance them. We have an invested capital outlying over the known world valued at about 4,000 millions sterling, and the paying portion of this sends its dividends to us as our imports; alien races send us this, which was something like eleven millions sterling in May, over and above what they received from us in produce, because they are in our debt, and must pay for the use of our money. In May, both the imports and the exports of this country rose, and the latter faster than the former, which is said to be also a good sign, showing "an increase in the power of British industry to attract foreign customers." Even if the excess of imports over exports is paid for out of British capital, the Times takes comfort in the fact that we have the capital to put to this service, and it is better to pay our way thus than to have no capital wherewith to pay the excess, like some of our neighbours. The fact is, trade is improving abroad as well as at home, and if there is the least improvement anywhere British merchants may be trusted to push in and secure the plums of the increased commerce. To them was promised, as Israel, "the power to get wealth," and we see signs everywhere that God is true to His promises, and has allowed our nation to prove the fulfilment in all directions.

Thus, in the Times of June 8, we have a remarkable fact vouched for to us by a Consular Paper, in regard to the supremacy of British merchantile shipping in French ports. The English Consul at La Rochelle gave a very interesting account therein how British commerce was gradually taking the place of French shipping, even in one of the chief French Atlantic ports, in their own waters, and that under the most tremendous disadvantage. In 1885 the amount of British tonnage arriving inwards with foreign trade was 30,000 tons. This increased in 1886 to 35,000, and in 1887 to 47,000, while the French tonnage slightly shrunk about 2,000 tons, from 83,000 to 73,000. This occurred too in the face of the Government bounties to the home shippers, and in spite of the regulations in French ports forbidding the interference of aliens in the port to port trade! British steamers, to meet the obstruction, are now sailing under the French flag, and will doubtless largely increase the proportion of trade in their own favour. In short, God's blessing still rests on His people Israel, and "He gives them the power to get wealth." Periods of depression there must and will be, but even during these, our non-Israelite neighbours suffer as much or more than we do. In the end prosperity returns, as we hope it is doing today, and then the time of leaps and bounds takes place for the British, in which, as we see, our neighbours are unable to hold their own, or retain the trade in their own waters, against our superior energy and enterprise.

Digitized by Google

It is the same story throughout the world. The carrying trade of the world, as far as the ocean-routes are concerned, is in our hands already, and it is found besides that by superior energy and wealth we beat the French in their own waters, the Chinese in theirs, and fill all the harbours and seas of the world with the shadow of the sails of our ships, and by that of the smoke of our almost countless mercantile steam ships. The consequence is this nation, (being Israel), grows rich according to the promises! We are blessed with the power to get wealth (Deut. viii. 18, R.V.); we consequently lend to many nations, but never borrow (Deut. xv. 6, R.V.), and are the envied of all the nations by reason of our great prosperity and wealth. But our wealth is not our own. It is God's good gift to us for a purpose. He gives it that He may establish His covenant which He sware to our fathers as it is this day (Deut. viii. 18, R.V.).

The result is, that never was the Gospel so extensively preached by our nation as it is to-day. Never were the British and Foreign Bible and Tract Societies' operations so magnificent as they are now; never were there so many British Evangelical Societies engaged in evangelising the nations of the earth as there are now, and never was success greater than it is now, to the praise and glory of the grace of God in Christ Jesus. Being Israel, God in His faithfulness to His promises gives us the willing mind to serve Him, that thus "Israel may blossom and bud and fill the face of the world with fruit" (Isaiah xxvii. 6, R.V.). To give us power to carry out His will, He gives us wealth, without which not a step in the path could be taken by our favoured nation. Our wealth enables us to acquire and hold the supremacy of the sea; and it gives us the Gates besides which dominate the ocean highways of the earth, by which the world's wealth, our imports and exports, arrive and depart, respectively, to and from our shores. To Him be all the praise; for in truth, He made, fashioned, and created us, that we might thus show forth His praise (Isa. xliii. 1, 7, 21, R.V.). We conclude by quoting the Times extract of June 8th, as singularly corroborative of our contention:—

British Shipping and French Shipping Bounties.—The British Consul at La Rochelle states that, in spite of shipping bounties and other advantages, foreign shipping is being beaten out of the French ports by the British. In 1887, 20 per cent. more British shipping entered La Rochelle than in 1886, while in the latter year there was 15 per cent. more than in 1885, the shipping from other countries having decreased. The increase is the more remarkable from the fact that nearly the whole of it is not in trade with England, but in indirect trade with foreign countries. "British vessels with cargoes to the value of £30,000 entered in this trade in 1887, against £16,000 in 1886, and only £3,000 in 1885; and it is therefore a new trade, as far as this port is concerned, done under the greatest disadvantage compared with French shipping, because, owing to the system of protection here, we are excluded from the coasting trade, which they can most advantageously combine with it. For instance, an English vessel coming from Italy will have only part of her cargo for La Rochelle, and the rest of it for other French ports, but, after discharging here, she cannot take up cargo for these ports, though there may be plenty waiting for a ship. She must go on with what she originally shipped in Italy for them, while a French vessel can take anything that offers; but, in spite of all this, we are taking the trade away, for, in 1885, English tonnage entered in the foreign trade was 30,000 tons, against 82,000 French; in 1886, 35,000 tons English, against 83,000 French; and in 1887, 47,000 tons English, against 73,000 French. We are even beginning to compete in the coasting trade, as some of the lines of British steamers are transferring vessels to the French flag, by which they can avail themselves of this trade, and at the same time escape the Board of Trade restrictions about lading, &c., which tell heavily against them."

Since the above was in type the following has appeared in the newspapers, giving the revenue returns for the month of June:—

The Board of Trade returns for June show that the imports for the month amounted to £30,478,854, being an increase of £2,923,637 compared with the same month last year. The exports amounted to £19,042,845, being an increase of £1,722,404 compared with last year. For the six months ended June 30 the imports amounted to £189,729,707, being an increase of £10,862,548 compared with the first half of last year; the exports for the same period amounted to £112,677,945, being an increase of £8,382,055 compared with last year.

AN ANGLO-ISRAEL CONVERSAZIONE.

On July 3rd last the Bath Anglo-Israel Association issued invitations to about 70 persons—believers—and interested in the subject of Our Identity. The party met at the Corridor Rooms, Bath, at 4 p.m. The rooms were tastefully arranged, the tea and coffee being set out at one end of the spacious rooms, and various specimens, photographs, models, albums, &c., being exhibited on the walls and tables bearing on the subject of the Great Pyramid, Palestine, Jerusalem, and cognate matters. These were exhibited, and lent, we believe, by the kindness of the Rev. A. B. Grimaldi, M.A., an Anglo-Israelite resident of Bath, and other friends. After tea and coffee had been served the company assembled at the opposite end of the room round a long table, and were conveniently seated while the Rev. J. Wemyss-Whittaker, M.A., the President of the local Association, took the chair, and opened the proceedings. He made an interesting speech, welcoming the guests to the first experimental conversazione in the interests of Israel ever held in the place, and proceeded to explain the object of the meeting. He deprecated the idea that we met to find fault with or condemn the clergy. We differ from the clergy and ministers on the one point respecting the House of Israel as distinguished from the Jews, but do not desire to blame them on that account.

The fact was, God had not revealed His secrets respecting Israel, and full light had not hitherto been vouchsafed by the Lord on the subject. As time advances new light is thrown on many subjects hitherto concealed, and this is one of them. The Word of God in respect to Israel is gradually having light thrown upon it, and so, by degrees, true knowledge is being diffused on many subjects, besides that of "Our Identity with Israel." It is being seen now more and more clearly that God has tied up all His choicest blessings to His people Israel, and that the British nation are they. He deprecated the idea that we wished to reflect upon the clergy, because at present they were not able to see eye to eye with us in this matter.

Philo-Israel, the Editor of the Banner, was next asked to address the friends assembled, and he compared the opinions of three representative divines he named with those of the five great prophets of Israel in respect to the restoration of the Jews, and the method in which it was to be carried out. He asked them to remember that such men as the Rev. Talbot Greaves, the Rev. Dr. Andrew Bonar, of Glasgow, and the Rev. J. C. S. Kroenig, of Hull, concurred in the opinion that the nation mentioned in Isa. xviii. 1, 7, as that selected to restore the Jews was the British, whereas the prophets Jeremiah iii. 18; Ezekiel xxxvii. 15—28; Hosea i. 11; Zephaniah iii. 9, 10; and Isaiah xviii. 1, 7, all pointed to, and mostly named, the House of Israel as designed of God for that high honour. He pointed to the conclusion, which was inevitable, if the three divines named were correct—namely, that the British and the House of Israel were synonymous.

The Rev. A. B. Grimaldi followed, pointing out the importance of our subject, since it was one founded on the Scriptures. If you want a monument of its greatness, look around, he said, and see the proof of the Hebrew origin of the British and European nations. He commented on Matt. xxi. 43, and observed that the kingdom of God was, at the time of our Lord, located in Palestine, and that the Jewish people were then the kingdom and the Church of God. The Church and State were then united, and both fell together in A.D. 70, when the polity of the Jews was overthrown. The "nation," specially designated by our Lord as the Jews' successor, was the one responding to the character frequently described in the Old Testament, and ascribed especially in Hosea xiv. 8, to Ephraim.

Digitized by Google

Colonel Senior succeeded. He stated that he had accepted the belief in our Hebrew origin only after long inquiry, and after being convinced that the subject afforded the best evidence of the faithfulness of God. "When I first heard of Our Identity," said Colonel Senior, "I flung away the book which treated of it, saying, 'What stuff is this?' But careful study and prayerful thought led me to a very different conclusion, and at last a lecture I heard at one of our Association's meetings on the subject of God's faithfulness to His promises, led me finally to espouse this belief." Colonel Senior then read a letter of an opponent in Edinburgh and his own reply thereto, showing to the assembled friends the weakness of the opponent and the strength of our own cause. The correspondence has appeared in the BANNER, and we do not, therefore, introduce it here.

At this stage of the proceedings the Rev. F. M. Rowden, of Bath, asked permission, as one who did not concur with the previous speakers, to interpose. He said the whole theory seemed to him to be adopted by the believers in it to throw discredit on the clergy, who did not concur in the view; that it seemed as if those who embraced it began by desiring the thing to be true, and with that bias searched the Scriptures hastily, putting their own construction on the texts they quoted. Was the British nation the only one which God had blessed? Had not other nations been also blessed by Him? Where was our special British superiority? We were evil enough and wicked enough. He stated his desire to read the sermons of the three divines quoted by Mr. Bird, as having identified the British people with those who were destined by Isa. xviii. 1 and 7 to restore the Jews to Palestine.

Dr. Cockell, of Bath, a zealous member of the Bath Association, immediately replied to the reverend objector. He pointed out to the latter that the British people observed the Sabbath as no other nation on the face of the earth did, and that the Sabbath was a God-given "sign," whereby it was declared by the Lord Himself that Israel would be known in "the latter days" to be His people. He repudiated the notion that we desired to put any slight upon the clergy, but said we desired to see them inquiring into this matter patiently and earnestly, being sure that such investigation would lead to conviction.

Colonel Senior and Philo-Israel both followed. The former stated again that his own convictions were formed after a long struggle against the truth, in which he now rejoiced; and Philo-Israel, speaking in the same strain, said that he was for six months a student of the evidence before he gave in. As an old Indian judge, he had studied Our Identity as a judicial puzzle, Bible in hand, before he admitted the tremendous force of the evidence. He added that our clerical opponent quite mistook the case in respect to the character of the blessings the British enjoyed. Gentile nations, no doubt, had certain valuable blessings common to all mankind, but ours were those unique and special gifts which God sware to confer on "Abraham and his seed for ever." All these we exclusively enjoy to-day!

Colonel Senior and Philo-Israel both denied any wish to reflect upon the clergy for rejecting their views. It had not yet been given them to see, but doubtless the day would soon come. Then they hoped the rev. opponent would acknowledge the truth and rejoice in it.

Philo-Israel promised the rev. gentleman an opportunity of reading the three sermons mentioned in print. A local and earnest friend proposed a vote of thanks to the chairman and speakers, and thus closed a most successful and enjoyable conversazione, the pecuniary cost of which, we are glad to learn, was trifling.

"HURRAH! FOR THE LAND SHADOWING WITH WINGS."

THE Rev. Talbot Greaves, M.A., vicar of Clifton, preached on May 13th, 1888, in the parish church, a very remarkable sermon, Isa. xviii. 1 to 7 being his text. He came then as near as possible to a declaration of his belief in the Israelitish origin of the British people, yet in the conclusion announced the lame result that, this our nation, as "the prophetic land shadowing with wings," "the honoured messenger of the Lord" going in "swift vessels" to the House of Judah or the Jewish people, as "the ships of Tarshish first" bringing to the Lord His "present" of His chosen ones, was after all, in the category of "sinners of the Gentiles," a highly honoured nation only, destined for a noble work, but non-Israelites after all! The sermon was an excellent one; but the conclusion as startling as it could be! The rough outline of the discourse was noted down by us at the time. We give it below for our readers' attention and consideration, that they may judge how a nation, destined to take Judah back to the Lord as "His present" to Mount Zion,—being a maritime, mercantile, missionary and colonial people, accurately described in Isa. xviii. 1, about also to be united to Judah in all future operations, escaping for that very reason the troubles and trials coming on the world at large, how such a nation can fail to be the House of Israel as distinguished from the Jewish people? Of that House of Israel, or Ephraim of the prophecies, the preacher was altogether oblivious! It seemed to him, we presume, to have no place in God's word, and it had none at all in his able sermon on the restoration of the Jews! We British, as a Gentile, but honoured, people, were, he said, going to take back the Jews to their land. We were the nation greeted by the Spirit of God with the word "Hurrah," which commences Isa. xviii.; we were "the ships of Tarshish" of Isa. lx. 9, restoring the Jews to Palestine; we were to work hereafter in union, and unison, with Israel, the Jewish people;—but in spite of all this, and in spite of Ezek. xxxvii. 16—19, to which allusion was made in the sermon, we were not Israel at all, but "sinners of the Gentiles!" Strange that a divine so learned in the Scriptures, and so acute in intellect, should after all be so singularly in the dark in respect to God's plainly declared purposes as to the restoration of the Jews! The statements of Jer. iii. 18, Hosea i. 11, Ezek. xxxvii. 15 to 28, and Zeph. iii. 9, were not referred to at all in the preacher's scheme;—but God's declared purpose to honour Israel by making her the instrument of Judah's restoration was ignored because of the inability or unwillingness of the preacher to "see" the Scriptural distinction between the House of Joseph, i.e., Ephraim or Israel, and the House of Judah or the Jews!

The preacher, after briefly introducing the subject, said:—"The word 'Woe' in verse 1 of the text should rather be Ho!—or the English word 'Hurrah!' What words can better express, he asked, a colonising Power, than those which open this chapter?—a land whose ships shadow all the earth with its navies, sheltering and protecting its colonies in the four quarters of the globe with its maritime power; a great mercantile country with commerce extending to every land, traversing the ocean 'beyond the rivers of Ethiopia,' in swift steam-driven vessels. What words could better describe Great Britain than these? This, our nation, is a missionary people, going at God's command, as His swift messengers, to the Jews first, according to the prophecies—a peaceful race,—not issuing forth with vast armies to conquer the world; but as the Lord's ambassadors, a people averse to war, but eager to work for Him as the missionaries of the Cross of Christ; travelling by the Suez Canal (in allusion to the vessels of Papyrus of Egypt and the Nile) to the far East; carrying thither the story of the love of Christ for sinful man. What other nation but ours answers to all these many points to which this prophecy alludes? The British must be the nation which Isaiah indicated:—the maritime, mercantile, colonising, missionary, powerful, commanding people, who go with the Gospel in swift steamers to the House of Judah, or the Jewish people first, that race scattered everywhere, 'peeled' of all national blessings and mercies, 'terrible from their beginning as God's chosen ones,' as the examples of His judgments and afflictions for sin, and examples too of the mode in which, in such cases, He deals with sinful nations. The terrible sufferings of the Jewish people are described in prophecy by Moses in Deut. xxviii. 35 and 64, et sequitur. They are a people trampled down by all nations; the soil of their country washed down literally by water, and rendered unfit for cultivation on that account; a race whose territory further has been defiled by alien nations—the Assyrians, the Chaldeans, the Romans, the Saracens, the Turks; those scriptural nations described as waters in Isa. viii. 7 and Rev. xvii. 15. What is our mission to the Jews? We take to them by command of the Lord ('Go, ye swift messengers!') the Gospel of Jesus, as the messengers of the covenant (Isa. xi. 10.). We lift up the ensign of the people, which is Christ, the hope of glory; and we blow the great trumpet, described in Isa. xxvii. 13, of the Gospel of their salvation. England's mission is to send the good news to distant lands in swift vessels, remembering that the object is to reach 'the Jew first;' and that we, as Gentile sinners, are honoured with this glorious stewardship, being destined too, on account of the same, to escape the troubles and sorrows to fall upon the other nations of the earth; and united with the Jewish people in the future, like the two sticks of Ezekiel's prophecy, in one, doing the will of God!" So far the preacher.

Digitized by Google

Now if Britain is the nation described by Isaiah in ch. xviii. 1 and 7, if she is also "Tarshish" and "the ships of Tarshish," destined to take the Jews back to their own land and unite with them afterwards in working for the Lord, then it appears to us, from the words of Zeph. iii. 10, R.V., that the bringer of the Lord's offering or present must be "The daughter of the Lord's dispersed"—those Christians, Israelites, dispersed beyond the rivers of Ethiopia, God's suppliants, therefore Christ's servants, being Judah's sole companion in the Return, as Jer. iii. 18 declares, and Hosea i. 11 and Ezek. xxxvii. 15 to 28 positively affirm. There is no place in God's Word from Genesis to Revelation for any other nation but Israel of the House of Joseph, or Ephraim, as accessory to Judah, or as the latter's companion, in the details of the Return. Judah is taken there by the House of Israel; the two sticks are then re-united, and never parted again. The restoration, according to the rev. preacher at Clifton, is to be effected by "the ships of Tarshish," or the nation described in Isa. xviii. 1 and 7. But as that nation is Britain, it stands to reason that Britain is an alias for the House of Joseph or Ephraim! We commend this argument to the vicar of Clifton as a piece of close reasoning, which we are sure must be acceptable to his acute and logical mind. We trust he will adopt it, and with it, the recognition of the British nation as "God's people, the remnant of Israel" (Jer. xxxi. 7, R.V.)

THE JEWS IN TURKEY.—The Rev. A. Thompson, of Constantinople, at the Great Missionary Conference in London, gave an account of his labours among the Spanish Jews, who, he stated, had settled in Turkey during the persecution of their race by Ferdinand and Isabella. There were 50,000 in Constantinople, and Salonica was almost a Jewish town. The Crimean War gave a great impetus to the circulation of the Scriptures in Turkey, many copies having been distributed by Christian officers.

THE JEWISH SEVENTEENTH CENTURY SEARCH FOR LOST ISRAEL IN GREAT BRITAIN.

BY A. T. F., INDIA.

THE historian Bossuet has sagaciously remarked—"In all affairs there is that which prepares them, that which determines they be undertaken, and that which makes them succeed. The true science of history is to note at each period the secret arrangements that have prepared great changes, and the important crises which have made them happen." It is an observation applicable to none so fittingly as to those who are exploring the indications of the Great Pyramid, because it is to exactly these two classes of events that the obscurer markings may be understood to point.

Before deciphering these marks, therefore, there is the necessity to collect together enough of those primary events which are left out in ordinary history books, and are only to be come at by accident, or particular investigation in nooks and corners.

In the Great Pyramid itself, we have for instance, the horizontal passage into the Queen's Chamber, closed up to the year 820 A.D., when it was broken into by the Caliph Al Mamoun, continuing the Mosaic dispensation intact underneath the Grand Gallery, till it takes a full and counterfeit expansion of the width of the King's Chamber, in the chamber which ends abruptly in the vertical wall on the central line of axis, passing through a point on the Great Step immediately before the termination of the Grand Gallery, and commencement of the low Antechamber passage. Thus a hollow representative of the entire Mosaic cult runs parallel with, and underlies the Grand Gallery, but its progress is arrested at the central axis with the effect of at once curtailing the space, and narrowing in the gallery gradually to the old Levitical dimensions, or less, of the first ascending passage.

There is a meaning in all this, if, as there can be little doubt, the Queen's Chamber delineates the condition of the Jews in our Grand Gallery ages; and it only remains to turn to the less known facts in history, and see if there is anything to confirm the supposition; recollecting that when water is suddenly stopped running by filling a receptacle, it produces a back pressure in the pipe.

The Jews first got into France with the Romans invading Gaul, and by the 11th century were there to the number of eight hundred thousand. Their plan has always been to mix themselves up financially with the secret societies, so as to obtain their ends through these without other people knowing for three-quarters of the time what they are about. "The dream of the Jews"—says a French author—"was a widespread revolution, organized above by an order allied to nearly all the noble families, below by the scum and by those who would pass the watchword from one to the other, outside by the Moors of Spain, and the Semites of Tunis; and it ended with the Knights Templars. Philip the Fair in 1306 passed a law of expulsion of the Jews from France. It was well known then, but little to us, that the whole of the financing of the crusades was managed by the Jews acting through the Templar Knights, in whose names the title deeds of all lands, sold to defray the expenses, had to be drawn up, as the Jews who had advanced the money could not let their own appear. From this came all the apparent wealth of the Templars. They were suppressed in 1314 finally as an Order, and their head, Jacques De Molay, was executed. But the Temple, their Parisian head-quarters, lasted much longer. "I have always had such a fright of that tower"—said Marie Antoinette in 1792—"that I have thousands of times asked the Count De Ortois to have it thrown down." Louis XVI. was imprisoned there, and Louis XVII. killed in the Temple by the Jew, Simon the Cobbler.

Driven from France, many of the Jewish families simply went over the frontier into Alsace, and in the time of Louis

Digitized by Google

XIV. there were only four families of Jews left in Paris. The rest found congenial shelter in the Netherlands, German kingdoms, and other European countries.

The conquest of Alsace in 1648 added a large number of Jews to France; and this condition of a substratum of the population being really neither French nor German, had doubtless its own influence in the arrangements concluding the last Franco-German war.

But in the meanwhile, the sombre roll in the depths of the Queen's Chamber passage was running its course. In 1520, the year Luther burnt the Pope's Bull at Wurtemburg, the first edition of the Talmud was printed in Venice. Though Luther had an unfavourable sentiment towards the Jews, scholars of that race were said to have been largely instrumental in bringing about the Reformation by furnishing the Protestant leaders with arguments against Papacy, and the mutual support of Reuchlin, who, while the Old Testament was put beside the New, allowed the Talmud to emerge behind.

The Jews did not begin to act upon Great Britain till the time of Cromwell. Now all history manuals, and most readers of history, put down the success of the leader of a revolution to the ability of the individual, and imagine that it is only requisite to be supereminently clever and daring to found an empire anywhere. The cleverest might just as well try to swim in a tank of oil.

Knowing that he had no hereditary right Cromwell had recourse to the secret influence in possession of the Jews, and it was with their, and allied support, that he attained supreme power. There were two royal houses that the Jews have set upon implacably—the house of Stuart and the Bourbons.

There was in Cromwell's case a very singular occurrence. The Jews, it is well known, keep up such a penetrating correspondence, that situated as they may be in the most remote parts of the world, they are well posted wherever they are in current events. Certain Jews resident in some very distant region of Asia, hearing about the beheading of Charles I. were very much struck, and under their Rabbi, Jacob Ben Azabel, a deputation of these Jews came to Cromwell from the far east to enquire if he were not the Messiah. They were many times, it appears from Leon Halevy's "Resumé de l'Histoire des Juifs," received by the Protector, without any other result than being ordered to quit London, which was beginning to ferment at the bare idea that it was possible Cromwell was a Jew himself.

Yet British dislike to Papacy made them favourable to the Jews, and inclined to remove their disabilities. Previously it was Holland that had proved an asylum. The Dutch were too hard-headed to be intrigued with, and the Jews had at the same time an open field for regular trading. Their country became the cradle of the modern Jew.

It was in Cromwell's time they were permitted to settle in Britain, many of them coming over from Amsterdam. They chose Manasse Ben Israel to conduct the negociations.

This Manasse was intensely taken up with the question of the Ten Tribes. A constant source of disquiet with him was the consideration of what has become of the Ten Tribes removed by the Shalmana-Tzar? of whom we no longer hear speak; for, he argued with himself, the restoration of the kingdom to Judah was impossible without those Ten Tribes, and thus the fulfilment of the prophetic promises had become doubtful. The reunion of Israel and Judah could not take place without the participation of these Tribes.

Manasse reflected upon the topic without cessation, and tried every imaginable direction in which to find them somehow or other. He at last turned his attention to South America, and wrote his "Espérance d'Israel." But his British search formed the subject of Victor Hugo's drama of "Cromwell."

The next contact of the Jews with our insular politics, was in connection with the successful attempt of William of Orange. When William of Orange was meditating his expedition to dethrone James II. he was in perplexity about his funds, till Schwartzan, a Jew of Amsterdam, demanded audience. He said, "Sire, you want money to carry out your undertaking. Here I bring you two millions. If you succeed, pay me back—if you lose, we are quits."

So it has been since, ever and again. Prudhon defined the French revolution of 1848 in these terms, "France has done nothing but change Jews." We hear little about it, because as Edouard Drumont tells us, almost all the newspapers in France being in the hands of the Jews it is not surprising that they conceal from the French people carefully the meaning and extent of the vast anti-Semitic movement everywhere being organised. "While I write," he says, "Europe is in agitation. The disease has reached its acute stage. Twelve millions of men are under arms. Workshops make up rifles by hundreds of millions, cannon, and melinite shells. Will they violate the neutrality of Switzerland, or of Belgium? In Spring? or in Autumn? What order of things will be disengaged from this formidable unknown? Behind these armies in battle array, these cuirassed troopers and bayonets glancing in the sun, behind the staff of the nameless masses who will fall under fire, appears the Jew of pale complexion."

When there are no more measurements to make on the floor of the Queen's Chamber, they must be continued and followed up, upon the top of the Great Step in the Grand Gallery.

India, June 18th, 1888.

OUR EMPIRE IN THE WEST.

THE HON.P. CARTERET HILL was lecturing lately in the East of England, at Tunbridge Wells, we believe, on the subject of "Our Empire in the West." Without intending it, and we suppose quite unwittingly and blindly, he gave in his lecture several valuable proofs that the Empire he discoursed about so happily, was the Empire of Israel. He stated, for instance, that this was a world-wide dominion, blessing all its subject races; that it contrasted wonderfully in this respect with other European States, which were striving, but all too late, to follow our example and found other Colonial Empires for themselves, to wit, for Germany and France, for which Empires in fact there was no room now in the world, and no ability in these nations to achieve success in this direction. He added that we were above only and not beneath, the head and not the tail in respect to shipping, commerce, wealth, and the colonies now rapidly developing into "a company of nations," a Federated Empire in short, constituted to be a blessing to millions of the human race. There were clusters of Our Identity texts which Mr. Carteret Hill illustrated, without naming or directly quoting them; such for instance as Gen. xii. 2, 3, xviii. 18, xxii. 17, xxxv. 11, xlviii. 19, xxviii. 14; Acts iii. 25; Isa. xxiv. 15; Hosea x. 11; Jer. xxxi. 10; Psa. cxi. 6; Deut. xxviii. 1, 13, besides very many others. He thus showed that he was an unwitting witness of the truth of our contention, though innocent of any desire to prove, by what he said, that the British were the Lost Ten Tribes. By alluding to this nation's Protestantism, and to France's failure to achieve outland Colonial Empire, the lecturer gave testimony that Great Britain was a witness to God's truth, and therefore that Isa. xliii. 8, 10, xliv. 8, R.V., were fulfilled in our race. We think it well to let our readers peruse for themselves the report of Mr. Carteret Hill's lecture as it has reached us, that they may judge how near he is to the acceptation of Our Identity. The Kent and Sussex Courier reported the matter thus, on June 8, 1888:—

OUR EMPIRE IN THE WEST.

This was the subject of a lecture delivered last evening to the Wesleyan Mutual Improvement Society by the Hon. P. Carteret Hill. The Rev. J. Kirtlan presided over a good attendance.

In the course of an interesting lecture the hon. gentleman asked the question, "How many educated gentlemen are there in England to-day who could without consulting any authorities name all the Colonial possessions of Great Britain?' They would make he feared but a very small company. Yet the British Empire was the most magnificent the world had ever seen. Having enumerated the millions of population and of square miles of area which go to make up the 50 distinct colonies and possessions, the lecturer remarked that it was the contemplation of this almost boundless extent of the British Empire that inspired that brilliant passage of the great American orator, Daniel Webster, in which he described the rising sun all over the world being saluted by the morning reveillé of British garrisons. How was this vast dominion built up? It did not grow up in a night and it was not made to order, as the French and German Governments appeared to think possible, if one might judge by their new-born zeal for Colonial acquisition. It was remarkable how little notice had been taken of the steady growth of our colonies during the last century or two, and the little jealousy they appear to have created in other nations till a very recent period. With an almost portentous suddenness the world had awoke to the sense of their greatness, and Germany, France and Russia were running a headlong race to the ends of the earth in search of new provinces and colonies. Prince Bismarck was one of the ablest men of the age, and the rulers of France and Russia were sufficiently astute statesmen, but they were under a delusion in their anticipation that a Colonial Empire could be made like a coat to order. Since the fall of the Roman Empire there had not been a colonizing nation in its real sense except Great Britain. No nation ought to know this better than France, whose stupendous attempts at colonization on the American continent a couple of centuries ago had been doomed to failure. Not a vestige of the magnificent Empire which France founded with such infinite care now survived. The flag of England or that of her offspring, the United States, now waved over the continent. It was a curious instance of the revenge which the whirligig of time brings about that Sir George Cartier, a lineal descendant of the Admiral Jacques Cartier who mapped out the continent of America for his master, the King of France, should have taken a leading part in consolidating for his sovereign, the Queen of England, the whole of that great territory into the Dominion of Canada. In India they had the same story of the attempts by France to establish a great dependency, and its eventual absorption into the British dominions. Germany had never been a colonizing power, and was already beginning to learn that the acquisition of pestilential swamps in Africa may not turn out to be the benefit anticipated to the Fatherland. The lesson, however, appeared to have been lost, if they might judge by the blundering action of Germany in the more recent case of the Caroline islands, which afforded evidence of a craving for colonial expansion so strong as to override the most ordinary rules of international courtesy. The colonial policy of Russia might be said to be sui generis. Indeed in its true sense it was not a colonial policy at all, but an insatiable desire for territorial acquisition, and that, as shrewdly suspected by many, chiefly in the direction of British India. The testimony of Professor Vambery in his recent work on the coming struggle for India was of the highest interest in this matter. This distinguished foreigner gave his experience that while English rule was a blessing to the tribes subjected to it, Russian administration demoralised and degraded. It was not to be supposed however that England had never fallen into errors of colonial policy. A terrible blunder of the statesmen of the last century lost us the United States. John Bull had often won fair possessions by the sword and then allowed them to slip through his fingers by the craft of diplomacy. When England conquered Canada she entered into a treaty of cession with France, for which there was no need whatever, and allowed stipulations to be placed in that unnecessary treaty the baneful effects of which were felt in Canada to the present day. The astute French diplomatists obtained by their craft concessions which John Bull had won by the sword and allowed to let go when he took up the pen. Notwithstanding all blunders the growth of the British Empire had been steady and irresistible. We had not to wait for the faint distant "tramp of the coming millions" of our colonial populations. The vanguard was already on the scene. In Canada—greater in area than the United States—in Australia, in India, and other portions of the globe, British subjects had built great cities, covered the land with their railways and the ocean with their shipping, and had founded great communities on the solid foundation of British freedom, law, and order, which were rapidly developing into powerful nations. The English language was now spoken in every quarter of the globe, and appeared destined to become the universal language of the human race. He had spoken of the colonies covering the ocean with their shipping, and he would show that that statement was not overdrawn. Canada was the fourth great ship-owning country in the world, and had more ships on the ocean than Germany and France, and completely distanced Russia, Sweden, Spain, and all the Continental States of Europe, except Norway. Great Britain was, of course, facile princeps among nations, but the tonnage of Canada and the colonies went far to swell her gigantic total above all other nations. Was there no significance in this great colonial growth which was going on? Had all this great empire arisen merely to gratify the pride of the inhabitants of a little island in Western Europe? Did it mean nothing to the human family at large that a spectacle of such surpassing interest is ever before their eyes? They might feel assured that it was not for naught, and as the future unravelled itself the interest would be constantly intensified. Some looked on the bond of union between the colonies and the parent state as so weak and brittle that the first real strain would snap it asunder. He who witnessed the troops of India and Australia and the voyageurs of Canada serving side by side in the hardships of the Egyptian campaign with British troops would be bold indeed to affirm that none but weak fragile bonds existed between the centre and the outlying parts of the empire. When they looked around at other nations they failed to see any whose constitution, laws, and government were so fitted to promote the happiness of the human family as those which prevailed in the British Islands. They failed to discover anything approaching the extent and grandeur of this empire, or its beneficent effects on the welfare of men. It was true it partook of the imperfections to which all things human were subject, mistakes had been made in the past, and mistakes were still of too frequent occurrence, but no thinking man who looked beyond the street in which he lived could fail to see that on the whole the Colonial Empire of England had been a blessing to millions of the human race. It had a reflex action on the mother country for good, as in matters of commerce her colonies were her best customers. An instance of the possibilities involved in the possession of great colonies was seen a short time ago when war with Russia seemed imminent. The value was then seen of the Canadian Pacific Railway, which had now been completed, which in seven days would transport war material across the Continent. Should the Suez Canal be blocked, as was not impossible, we had here another quick route to the East over British territory, which might yet prove of incalculable importance in the coming struggle for India, which Professor Vambery saw looming before us. The fortunes of the Empire were bound together in one bundle, and it was for the advantage of the whole world that the union should remain intact. Stripped of her colonies England would still remain a busy hive of industry —another Holland or Belgium—but a queen among nations she would no longer be. The world would also be a great loser by the withdrawal of that moral spectacle and example of a great nation, whatever its shortcomings, seeking to do justice and study the welfare of its subjects in every clime. A remarkable article recently appeared in a German paper, said to be inspired by Prince Bismarck, in which the unique position of England was admitted with great frankness and admiration, and the writer said that if the ubiquitous influence of England were withdrawn, the loss would be irreparable. Other nations might sink or disappear, the loss would be their own; but if the British Empire were to collapse, the loss would be the world's. Well, then, might Englishmen speak with enthusiasm of the great Colonial Empire, whose foundations were laid in the immutable principles of truth and justice, and those civil and religious liberties which were guaranteed by the Protestant Constitution to every subject of the Crown in every land.

Digitized by Google

So far the lecturer. We wonder, when we read such statements, that those who make them, and those who listen to them, do not instinctively compare the picture so drawn with God's description of Israel's Empire in the latter days! Why do they not see that each item of Great Britain's grandeur is a part of Israel's likeness as depicted in the word of God? Britain's Empire is universal, and the language of the race promises, says the lecturer, to be world-wide. But so were Israel's! (Dan. vii. 27; Rom. iv. 13; Zeph. iii. 9, R.V.).

The Empire of Britain, colossal in size as it is, greater than any now on the earth, or that has existed since the world began, is the most beneficent of that of all nations! But so was Israel's to be!

Digitized by Google

(Deut. xxviii. 1, 13; Isa. xxvii. 6, R.V.). The British exists to bless the world as no other nation does or ever has done! But this was to be exactly the character of Israel's rule! (Isa. xliii. 21, lxi. 9, R.V.). In short the picture of the British Empire drawn by the lecturer, and the likeness of Israel's dominion exhibited in Scripture, agree in every iota, in every line and lineament. They must therefore be the same people, as God is true! We wonder this conclusion has not been arrived at by the Hon. P. Carteret Hill and by the audience who listened to his glowing words. That they did not see the identity between the two people is attributable, we suppose, to their national blindness, which was to be one of Israel's prophetic conditions in the latter days (Isa. xlii. 16, R.V.). We trust Mr. Carteret Hill will ere long be able to see that the British are Lost Israel, and that he will derive all the comfort from that conviction which God would have him enjoy.

CHAMBERS' NEW ENCYCLOPÆDIA ON OUR IDENTITY.

On page 279 of Chambers' New Encyclopædia an article on "The Anglo-Israelite Theory" appears, which it is right and proper our readers should peruse, because, coming from such a source, it must be, one would think, the carefully-weighed, deliberate opinion, based on well-reasoned arguments, proceeding from educated and instructed minds. Whether the following extracts answer to the above description of what such an article ought to be, and if the account be a fair and a just description of Our Identity arguments, let our readers and others decide! We reserve our own comments. It said:—

"The so-called identifications, on examination prove to be little more than verbal quibblings on the English letter, depending for their success on the reader's ignorance of Hebrew exegesis. Thus one of the strongest is that according to prophecy, lost Israel's location must be the 'isles.' Much is made of 'Jacob's stone;' of the fact that the Irish, or Canaanites, still trouble us according to prophecy; that in public worship we still pray towards the East, as if the posture was peculiar to English Christians.

"On such feeble arguments as these we are gravely asked to believe that prophecies which apply to All Israel relate to the Ten Tribes only, to the complete exclusion of the Two Tribes represented by the Jews. We are told, moreover, that the well-marked physical features of the Jews are the special effect of the curse of God upon them; and when we ask for any survivals among the English of such peculiar and persistent customs as circumcision, seventh-day observances, legal uncleanness, and the like, we are told that the Identity was to be lost, and that our ignorance is the best proof of the theory being true. Of course all the evidence goes to show the impossibility of such peculiar customs, and the language of a nation being so completely forgotten.

"The Ten Tribes delusion has now, however, sunk to a lower level than when Lord Kingsborough spent his fortune in publishing the Mexican pictures and chronicles.

"In spite of all the new, real knowledge as to races, it has even now more votaries than ever. 'There is indeed no doubt,' says Dr. Taylor, 'that this abject nonsense has a far larger circulation than all the rational ethnology published in England.'"

So far the writer in Chambers' Encyclopædia. The sentiments remind one strongly of the Rev. Dr. Horatius Bonar's objections, published in Sunday at Home so far back as October, 1880, and fully answered by us in the BANNER OF ISRAEL, vol. iv., pp. 418, 425, 441, 451, and 490, in the same year. The writer in the present instance has not studied our literature (which was also Dr. Bonar's wonderful mistake), and therefore writes about what he is not competent to condemn! Our case does not in the least depend upon verbal quibblings on the English letter, or on the reader's "ignorance of Hebrew exegesis." It depends on great and important modern national facts, which none can deny, and on their exact correspondence to the jot and to the tittle, which all thoughtful men admit, with the prophecies of the living God, announced in favour of His people Israel, as distinguished from His people Judah. Our strong points are not the location of Israel "in the isles" (though that is a point). "Jacob's stone" is seldom or ever mentioned in the BANNER OF ISRAEL. "Prayer towards the East" has never so much as once, we believe, been relied upon by us in these pages; and the allegation that the South Irish of the present day are Canaanites carrying out their pestering, troublesome, prophetic destiny towards Israel, is one of a multitude of smaller proofs of our origin, which we occasionally advance for consideration, but place no particular weight upon as evidence, at any time.

The writer in Chambers' Encyclopædia blames us for distinguishing certain prophecies as exclusively applicable to the Ten Tribes to the exclusion of the Two, who he admits are represented by the Jews. We suppose our writer is quite competent to teach us in respect to "Hebrew exegesis"? Will he then tell us whether the passage in Zech. x. 6—9 relates to two distinct Houses or to the Jews alone? In ver. 6 God promised "to strengthen the House of Judah," "and to save the House of Joseph." Were these two one and the same House? Are they the modern Jews? The House of Joseph was it appears, in the days of Zechariah (B.C. 487) "cast off" by their God. Was the House of Judah represented by the modern Jews "cast off" by God at that period of their history? Again, verse 7 speaks of the House of Joseph as Ephraim. Are the modern Jews Ephraim? and do they at all respond to-day to the blessings promised to Ephraim in verses 7—10? With one more question we leave our writer to the judgment of our readers, and it is this: Where in the Scriptures is the term "All Israel" applied to the Two Tribes, or Jews? and does the great mass of scriptural authority apply the name to other than the House of Israel, alias Joseph, alias Ephraim, or Isaac, as opposed to Judah, or the Jews? In regard to the other objections our mentor adduces against our views, we would ask him, "Why, if God meant to hide or lose His people, Lo-Ammi Israel, He should stamp them with the signs of their Israelitish origin—viz., circumcision, seventh-day observances, legal uncleanness, and the like?" and as to the impossibility of a race failing to keep its language, manners, customs, and religion in memory after dispersion and sifting among other races, as it happened to the Ten Tribes to be, we ask him to say if the African races, after deportation to America, were or are particularly noted for their diversity of African speech? their African religious beliefs? or their African manners and customs? Also, if the 100,000 Huguenots who came over to London in 1686 are noted now for their French language, manners, and customs? If in 200 years these have been utterly lost, and African slaves have lost them all also in only 60 or 70 years, why are we to find the Ten Tribes after being "sifted among the nations," as Amos ix. 9 says they were to be, on the authority of God Himself, talking pure Hebrew in London, practising circumcision and the Mosaic law, after 2,500 years of expatriation from Samaria, and after their national profession of Christianity for about 1,400 years?

Ours may be a delusion, as this writer says it is. But it is a comfort to find him admitting that it has now "more votaries than ever;" and Dr. Taylor confessing that our "nonsense" "has a far larger circulation than all the rational ethnology published in England!" It shall be our anxious effort daily to increase the circulation of this "abject nonsense," in the hope that even Dr. Taylor may at last be brought to see that ours is the true ethnology—the rational God-justified ethnology—since He has given to us British all the blessings He promised to Shemitic Israel, and God cannot lie or give to Japhetic Englishmen what He promised to Semitic Hebrews.

Digitized by Google

THIS PROTRACTED ERA OF GRACE.

By J. C. H. Mehl.

PART I.

Perhaps no other thought had taken such root in the minds of the disciples in connection with the gracious Master with whom they companied for three years and a half, their convictions deepening all the while as to the greatness of the One who walked so sublimely and yet so humbly among them, as the expectation of His manifesting Himself shortly before the world as the Messiah, the King, and so "restoring the kingdom unto Israel." And surely, our own hearts will witness to it, that we cannot upbraid them for being slow to apprehend the mind of the Spirit "when it testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ, and the glories that should follow them;" neither, on the same grounds, can we wonder if their thoughts of this blessed kingdom were set more on its material glories than on the righteousness and grace that would characterise it. Presumably they were cognizant of the angel Gabriel's words to the Virgin Mary: "He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Most High; and the Lord God shall give unto Him the throne of His father David; and He shall reign over the House of Jacob for ever; and of His kingdom there shall be no end;" but in this message there was no allusion to the suffering that should precede the exaltation. On this promised glory their minds were dwelling; hence their inability to lay to heart their Lord's repeated warning that the Son of man should be delivered to the chief priests and scribes and Gentiles, to be mocked and scourged and crucified; hence also the request of two among them to be granted the privilege of sitting, the one on His right hand and the other on His left in His kingdom. Perhaps none of them rose to so great a height in their conception of Him as king and of the nature of His rule, as the penitent thief on the cross, when he cried: "Jesus, remember me when Thou comest into Thy kingdom!" Herein also may lie the secret of the remarkable answer given to the apostle Peter in Matt. xvi. 16; for in his confession, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God," it was given him to soar above and beyond the minds of his fellow disciples, his faith laying hold, as it were, on the highest point in the Divine counsels. Yet how utterly this faith failed him in view of the cross! Natural, therefore, were the dejection and the disappointment manifested by the disciples after the crucifixion, to which also two of them gave vent in the words: "but we hoped that it was He which should redeem Israel;" and natural again was it at the end of those forty days during which He had appeared unto the Apostles, and shewn Himself alive after His passion by many proofs, and spoken the things concerning the Kingdom, when they, in the full joy of assurance put the question, "Lord, dost Thou at this time restore the kingdom to Israel?" The validity of the question is indeed admitted in the answer; yet He says, "It is not for you to know the times and seasons which the Father hath set within His own authority." Notice the expression "times and seasons;" do not these words point to progressive stages through which the accomplishment of His purposes on earth would be reached? But their own attention, their own activities were to be directed to another object: energised by the Holy Ghost they were to be witnesses of the grace of God that bringeth salvation to all men, from Jerusalem to the uttermost parts of the earth.

Let us consider for a moment what statements and warnings of their Master, what prophecies of old, what circumstances in their own day the disciples must have overlooked while cherishing the expectation of an immediate manifestation of the Kingdom. Of this He had indeed spoken to them, of its blessedness and of their share in it; yet as a nearer prospect He had held out to them persecutions and sufferings and sundry kinds of death, "by which they should glorify God." He had distinctly instructed them to the contrary when they supposed that the kingdom of God was immediately to appear (see Luke xix. 11; xxi. 9). He had told them of the times of the Gentiles during which Jerusalem should be trodden down; had they heeded any of these sayings? He had promised, "Lo, I am with you alway, even to the end of the age." Did they think their little span of life would embrace both the beginning and the end of such a period? We cannot suppose them to have been ignorant of at least the most prominent prophetic scriptures concerning the trials and destiny of their race; yet had they even attempted to estimate the scope of the inspired forecast? Had for instance, according to Deut. xxx., the blessing and the curse, both, come to Israel? Had they called them to mind and as a nation obeyed the voice of the Lord their God? Yea, when scarcely three years had passed since John the Baptist had so powerfully appealed to the conscience of the multitudes in and about Judaea, when his burning words had swayed them to come and submit to the baptism of repentance, is it not evident that their contrition was not of a deep and lasting character, seeing how subsequently they laid themselves open to the Apostle Peter's charge, "Ye men of Israel, ye denied the holy and righteous One, and asked for a murderer to be granted unto you?" Could the King come into His kingdom and not find anywhere a people prepared for Him, nationally fitted to be the executors of His behests? In Hos. ix. 17, it was stated that Ephraim-Israel of the Ten Tribes were to be "wanderers among the nations," had they completed their wanderings? Had they returned unto the Lord their God? (chap. xiv. 1). Had they answered to the call (Jer. iii. 14), "Return, O backsliding children . . ." with the filial cry, "my Father!" (v. 19)? Where were those Tribes? Whither had their wanderings led them since they had been carried captive to Assyria? Where was the mighty nation (Gen. xviii. 18), the company of nations (Gen. xlviii. 4), that Israel should develop into? In Micah v. 8, it was said that "the remnant of Jacob were to be as a lion among the beasts of the forest, as a young lion among the flocks of sheep;" in Deut. xxxiii. 17, Joseph, even the ten thousands of Ephraim, the thousands of Manasseh, were represented as "pushing the peoples, all of them, even to the ends of the earth, as with the horns of the unicorn;" was any known section of the chosen people giving the faintest promise of ability to acquire shortly in such a fashion a world-wide sway? Were the Jews of Judæa, were the "sojourners of the Dispersion," scattered throughout the Roman Empire, in a condition to fulfil this rôle, and the still more blessed one assigned to Israel in days to come, of blossoming and budding and filling the face of the world with fruit? (Isa. xxvii. 6). Thus might the disciples have pondered. Well had the Master said to them immediately before the crucifixion: "I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now;" but He promised them the gift and guidance of the Spirit of truth, for which also, after His resurrection, He bade them "tarry in the city until they should be clothed with power from on high."

It is of importance therefore to enquire what was the nature of the testimony of the Apostles after they had received the outpouring of the Spirit. Throughout the Book of Acts the two great facts they witness to, are the Resurrection of Christ and the perfect salvation unto eternal life through faith in Him. In chap. iii. in addressing the crowd which had gathered on the occasion of the healing of the man lame from his birth, St. Peter impresses upon them that the promised "seasons of refreshing," and the "times of the restoration of all things" must be preceded by the repentance of the people and their acceptance of the Christ, whom until then "the heavens must receive." In the Epistles which, roughly speaking, link on with the closing chapters of the record in the Acts, we find, as affecting our subject, two distinct lines of thought, running also through the Book of the Revelation. On the one hand the Second Advent of the Lord is never lost sight of, often insisted upon as imminent and held up to the believers as the object of their expectations (see 1 Thess. i. 10; Tit. ii. 13, &c). On the other hand, that which from the beginning is spoken of as "the Way" (Acts ix. 2; xix. 9, 23; xxii. 4, &c.), that path of faith and obedience in witness of the death and resurrection of Jesus, is shewn to be connected with much tribulation, and to call for the exercise of patient endurance. They are reminded of the "God of patience." St. John speaks of himself when addressing the churches as "your brother and partaker with you in the tribulation and kingdom and patience which are in Jesus;" and throughout we find indications of a continuance through a protracted period of the conditions then existing. Before His passion Christ had already said to His apostles: "In the world ye shall have tribulation," and St. Peter exhorts the believing sojourners of the dispersion not to be dismayed at the fiery trial of persecution that was to test them. He himself must have had ever present before him his Master's prediction as to the martyrdom awaiting him. The Lord's coming is indeed the ever present purpose of Him with whom a thousand years are but as one day, and consequently the Spirit ever so presents it (see Heb. x. 37; Jas. v. 8; Rev. xxii. 20, &c). Nevertheless not only are the instances numerous which point to this delay, during which the unfaithful servant would be tempted to act on the persuasion, "my Master delayeth His coming;" but we find also an ample provision made for the time that should thus elapse.

Digitized by Google

It may, therefore, not prove unprofitable to search the N. T. Scriptures a little in view of this period of wayfaring of the children of God; and then to venture even a step further to enquire whether He who "worketh all things after the counsel of His will" has not also, in His communications by His Spirit, vouchsafed to reveal that which in due time would offer even to limited human perception an explanation for this delay, and independent of the fact that neither of the former dispensations was confined within the limits of time which the godly, living at their outset, could have been prepared to assign to them.

As to this provision, perhaps no other of the New Testament writings shews this so clearly as the Epistle to the Hebrews. These were consciously of the stock of Abraham, of the seed of Israel; they had accepted Christ as the Messiah, the Redeemer of Israel, and now that they knew Him to have ascended on high and to be there crowned with glory and honour, might not unnaturally, before this great fact, lose sight of other issues and expect to see in their day the actual fulfilment of the promises made unto the fathers. What, they might ask, redemption being accomplished, could now hinder the return of the King who, as Psa. lxxii. taught them, should reign in righteousness, should be feared while the sun and the moon endured; whose dominion should extend from sea to sea, and to the ends of the earth; before whom all kings should fall down, whom all nations should serve, who would deliver the needy and pity the poor and weak; whose name should last for ever, in whom all men should be blessed, and whom all nations should praise? Yet in this Epistle we find the whole scene, as it were, changed from earth to heaven. They are addressed as "holy brethren, partakers of a heavenly calling;" they are reminded that their High Priest, with His unchangeable Priesthood and His power to save to the uttermost, is not now on earth, but is interceding in heaven for them; and that what they are called to receive is an eternal inheritance there. Meanwhile, as regarded their representative nation here on earth, the Jews, by them the King had been rejected; but they, His true subjects, should go forth unto Him without the camp bearing His reproach. So also in 1 Pet. i. 45, writing to the "elect who are sojourners of the Dispersion" the Apostle exults in the living hope to which they are begotten by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, "unto an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you who by the power of God are guarded through faith unto a salvation ready to be revealed in the last time." But in the interim, as already alluded to, their path on earth was one of testimony, involving trial and persecution. The whole power of God was to be on their side, yet not for the sake of temporal deliverances, but that they might glorify Him in the new name given them (chap. iv. 16), when made to suffer for it. Being called to God's eternal glory in Christ, they are exhorted (2 Pet. 1) to all diligence, so that there should be richly supplied unto them the entrance into the eternal Kingdom of their Lord and Saviour. Thus their minds were prepared for the manifold temptations that would beset them; but on the other hand gifts of the manifold grace of God would be distributed among them. In turning to other epistles we find the same line of thought. St. Paul writes to the Colossians of the hope that is laid up for them in the heavens; and he himself in his last epistle on record, 2 Tim. iv. 18, expresses his confidence that the Lord would deliver him from every evil work and preserve him unto His heavenly kingdom. In the same letter he instructs Timothy to provide for the maintenance in the Church of a succession of sound teachers. Thus in every way the preparation was not for the glory of the millennial Kingdom, but for something higher, and which would throw those who were faithful into fellowship with their Master in His path of suffering here on earth. He Himself had said to His disciples: "I will not leave you desolate,"—this because of the comfort He knew they would need,—and the gift of the Spirit, His presence on earth now, working in the hearts of God's children and gathering together the living stones of the spiritual House, marks this dispensation. Over and above all He instituted as the central act in their worship, as the highest expression of the source and power of the new life bestowed, that which should continue a "perpetual memorial" until His coming again. Surely all this, and we could multiply instances, points to a prolongation of the period ushered in on the day of Pentecost!

(To be continued.)

"THE FLOCK OF GOD."

ST. PETER, in his 1st Epistle v. 2—4, R.V., using the metaphor of the flock and its shepherd, addressed the Christians of the Diaspora, or Dispersion of the strangers from Israel, elect of God, then scattered over Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia (such being the Ten-Tribed Lo-Ammi House of Joseph), as "The flock of God." We are not aware that any non-Israelite Church was ever addressed in God's Word as "the flock of God." The Church at Ephesus was designated "the flock," "purchased by God with His own blood" (Acts xx. 28, R.V.). But Ephesus was in Asia (Minor), and so was included in those parts where St. Peter declared the dispersion of the Ten Tribes was located. In Ezek. xxxiv. 31, R.V., we find that the Lord's flock, or "sheep," are the House of Israel, God's people; that they are the sheep of His pasture, and He their God.

The Lord Jesus Christ in His last charge to His repentant apostle Peter, said to him thrice, "Feed My lambs," "Tend My sheep," "Feed My sheep." Peter, we see, wrote his two epistles to the elect sojourners of the Dispersion, then in Asia Minor, declaring himself to be a "fellow elder" with the elders (of Israel), and a witness of the sufferings of Christ (1 Peter v. 1, R.V.). Herein came to pass the prophecy of Psa. cxlvii. 19, 20, "He showeth His words unto Jacob, His statutes and His judgments unto Israel. He hath not so dealt with any nation, and as for His judgments they have not known them." "The flock of God" to whom St. Peter wrote were, as his own words show, "An elect race, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a people for (God's) own possession, that ye may show forth the excellencies of Him who called you out of darkness into His marvellous light, which in time past were 'No People' (Lo-Ammi), but now are 'The people of God' (Ammi), which had not obtained mercy (Lo-Ruhamah), but now have obtained mercy" (Ruhamah). They were residents "among the Gentiles" (1 Peter ii. 9—12, R.V.), full of good works for the glory of God (ver. 12). These statements call to mind the words of God Himself describing His people Israel in Exod. xix. 5, etc., R.V., where He addressed "Israel-obedient" as "a kingdom of priests," "a holy nation," "a peculiar treasure unto the Lord Jehovah." "This people," He said of Israel in Isa. xliii. 21, R.V., "I formed for Myself that they might show forth MY praise." The House of Israel was God's Ammi and Ruhamah once. But He caused them in punishment for sin to become His "Lo-Ammi" and His "Lo-Ruhamah," with sure and certain promises of restoration in His own good time. Hosea i. 2—11, R.V., distinctly foretells those facts, and proves that St. Peter, in his General Epistles, was addressing the Ten Tribes only as "The flock of God."

Digitized by Google

The Ten Tribes, then, were existing in the early days of the Christian Dispensation. The two epistles of St. Peter were clearly addressed to them. St. Paul had them in his mind when he wrote the epistle to the Galatians, or Celtae. They were also for the most part the Christians to whom his epistles to the Corinthians were addressed, as such a passage as 1 Cor. x. 1—11 very clearly proves. If, then, the Ten Tribes and the strangers of that dispersion were so important a body in St. Peter's day, bearing the honourable designation of "God's flock," "His heritage," "His peculiar possession," "a people He formed for Himself," for the very special and peculiar honour that "they might show forth God's praise," who will venture to say that the Ten Tribes are not existing now "among the Gentiles," a "Christian, holy, separated nation," therefore one "dwelling alone," "because "God dwells with them," and they are "the sons of the living God"? (Hosea i. 10, R.V.). Yet men do deny this thing! and journals called "ecclesiastical" are foremost in their contempt of the assertion that "The British are Israel!" We thank God that a clergyman of the Church has come forward to defend God's truth in this matter, and that in the Rev. C. W. Hickson, M.A., of Bristol, we have one whose abilities none may despise. The "Ecclesiastical Gazette" of November 15, 1887, noticed the late work of Mrs. G. Albert Rogers ("Britain in History"), in the terms described below, which brought our friend Mr. Hickson to the rescue in the "Ecclesiastical Gazette" of December 15 following. A letter of enquiry followed on March 15, 1888, at an interval of three months—a delay for which we cannot account:—

"Britain in History, Ancient and Modern." By Mrs. G. Albert Rogers (London: James Nisbet and Co.). The author of this book is one of those who believe that the inhabitants of these isles are the descendants of ancient Israel. We suppose it is useless to argue with those who hold this belief. To such this book may be of interest, but we cannot think that any unprejudiced person could possibly be convinced by the arguments here set forth.

BRITISH-ISRAELISM.

To the Editor.

SIR,—Apropos of your notice of "Britain in History," by Mrs. G. Albert Rogers, may I be allowed to mention that the late learned and much-respected Bishop Titcomb, D.D., "believed in the Israelitish origin of the British Empire, and in its consequent investiture with the prerogatives of Joseph's birthright." I know nothing of Mrs. Albert Rogers or her book, but whether or not "any unprejudiced person could possibly be convinced by the arguments set forth" in it, sure I am that not a few persons originally prejudiced against British-Israelism have been convinced of its truth, and afterwards confirmed in their convictions, by the writings on the subject of the late prelate. His earlier little work, "The Anglo-Israel Postbag; or, How Arthur Came to See It," has never, to my knowledge, been answered; and his last work, "A Message to the Church from the Nineteenth Century," is not a book to be lightly laid aside as the performance of a man with "a craze." When those two books have really been thoroughly answered, argument by argument, by someone at least as good a scholar as was the Bishop, those who believe in the theory may begin to question their views. I cannot refrain from remarking that it seems to me almost positively dishonest in those who have written obituary notices in papers and magazines of the late Bishop, that, while noticing his labours, talents, and writings with commendation, they have all with a sort of conspiracy of silence passed over the facts that he was a firm believer in the British-Israel doctrine, and that, by at least two books, as well as some sermons and pamphlets, he publicly and boldly propagated it.

C. W. HICKSON, A.M.

St. Bartholomew's Vicarage, Bristol.

To the Editor.

SIR,—In your last issue mention was made of the theory of British-Israelism. Would some of your readers, who have studied this question, give me some information as to the grounds on which this theory rests? 1st. On what historical data is it concluded that the Sakæ, Sachsens, or Saxons, migrated from the country to which Israelites were deported? 2. What data are produced to show that these Sakæ are descendants of the Israelites? 3rd. What is the probable date of the migration of the Sakæ? 4th. In what books—giving author, publisher, and price—will be found the arguments in favour of the theory?

E. LEATON-BLENKINSOPP.

We reply to Mr. Leaton-Blenkinsopp's inquiry by recommending him to study the two works of the late Bishop Titcomb mentioned by Mr. Hickson; to send also for a catalogue of "Identity Publications" from Robert Banks and Son, our publishers; and we inform him that Sharon Turner derives the Anglo-Saxons from the Sacæ of Central Asia (where Israel was carried captive in the eighth century), bringing our ancestors from those parts in the seventh century, B.C. The historical work of Oxonian, "Israel's Wanderings" (to be had of Messrs. Banks), describes how our British ancestors, being Israel, travelled from the land of their captivity to "The Isles of the West." The final link in the evidence is that the British today enjoy exclusively all those national blessings, temporal and spiritual, which God sware "to Abraham and his seed for ever" to bestow upon the latter exclusively; and such being the case, God being true, we cannot see how any sane man can now doubt that the British are Israel, to the praise of His truth and faithfulness in Christ Jesus.

"ENGLAND'S DOOM," &c., A REVIEW, BY E. REEP.

A CORRESPONDENT at Bradford, Yorks, has asked us for information as to where the writer of the above Review found authority for the statement which appears on page 263 of the BANNER OF ISRAEL of July 4th last, "that in 1217 a battle between the French and English was decided by the wind carrying the lime dust the French threw to blind the English, whereas God sent a change of wind which blew back the dust and blinded the French." The correspondent thinks the balance of evidence goes to show that the English threw the dust, and not the French. To clear up the matter we asked our reviewer (E. Reep) the question; and the answer is as follows:—

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

"DEAR SIR,—Your correspondent will find the information he requires as to the invasion of England in 1217 in a work entitled 'England on the Sea,' by Davenport Adams.

"Yours very truly,

"E. REEP.

"Abinger, Sylvan-road, Upper Norwood, S.E., July 4th."

PRINCESS LOUISE distributed the prizes to the art students at South Kensington Museum, the Princess herself having at one time attended the classes.

A TEST ballot taken in Newcastle-on-Tyne gives an enormous majority in favour of entire Sunday closing and local option, and against compensation.

Digitized by Google

AUSTRALASIA ACCORDING TO SIR HENRY PARKES.

At the New South Wales "Centenary Celebrations" held on Jan. 26, 1888, the banquet was attended by Lord Carington, the Governor of New South Wales, by Sir Henry Lock, the Governor of Victoria, Sir William Jervois (N. Zealand), Sir Anthony Musgrave (Queensland), Sir W. Robinson (S. Australia), Sir F. Napier Broome (W. Australia), and by Sir Chas. Mitchell (Fiji). It was a representative gathering of Australasia, and Sir Henry Parkes, of New South Wales, as its foremost man, did the honours. His was the chief speech of the evening. There was so much that was interesting in it from an Identity point of view that we feel bound to quote it in parts. He said, inter alia, speaking of the founders of New South Wales and their landing at Botany Bay on Jan. 26, 1788:—

Whatever adverse cloud shrouded the assemblage of that poor group of men, they unconsciously were laying the foundation-stone of what, I believe, will be the greatest empire in the world. (Cheers, and slight dissent). I will give you reasons why I think the future empire of Australia will be superior to all that has gone before it, and for a moment I may dwell on the progress of this colony. Two years after the landing of Collins and his band of exiles the population was only 10,000. In 1856 it was 286,873, and last year it had reached 1,044,000 souls. At the close of last year the shipping of this one colony numbered 1,124 vessels, of which 485 were steamships. Their tonnage was 128,544, and their value £2 265,000. At the present day Australasia has at least 3,500,000 inhabitants, and from a calculation which I believe is based upon the most trustworthy data, at the end of another generation the population of Australasia will be 12,000,000 souls. That will be about the year 1922.

* * * * * *

We have five colonies in this continent, which, with the tight little island of Tasmania and New Zealand, make a total of seven states, and who to-night start on a new race for the next hundred years. (Cheers). It is not for us to turn back to the century that is gone, but to look steadily to the future. It is my belief that at the end of the next hundred years the population of this nation will be 60,000,000. Talk of the growth of America, with her 55,000,000, including negroes—why, the conditions of life are so favourable here that we shall show an increase of population which has never been seen in any other part of the world. We have none of the frosts and snows which are detrimental to the progress of life in America; but go wherever you please in Australia, there is hardly a place where the conditions of life are not eminently favourable to the human race. For these reasons, I say that, as sure as the sun rises upon the day to-morrow, there will be seen here at the close of our next century one of the greatest populations on the face of God's earth. (Cheers). It matters little—and I say this before the representatives of our beloved Queen—what is the form of our future governments. We shall be loyal Britons, whatever the form may be, but we shall never find, when trying to solve the problems of government, a happier connection than the union with the parent state. But what we have to do above all other considerations, is to be loyal to the trust which God has imposed on us here by doing the best we can for the development of our grand resources, to build up a stalwart people, to preserve the liberties which happily we possess without bloodshed and without struggle by the enlightened benefits of the mother state. This brings me to the future of this state. I trust that we shall in a very short time tread under foot all paltry rivalries in one broad and abnegating spirit of Australian union, and join together not to work out a better fortune for Victoria or South Australia, but to work out a grand and undying destiny for the whole of Australia. Clearly this day ought to be the time for a new departure of a more national character, and if the colonies will only unite one and all to maintain the interests of United Australia we cannot go wrong. (Loud cheers). When we rise from this table to-night it will be no ordinary rising. Most gatherings of this kind bring men together, and are thought of no more. But we here to-night fairly represent the whole of these great colonies, and when we leave this hall let us not forget the teachings which memory ought to bring home to every one of us, which teaching is that we should live more for our common country than for any particular division of that country in the future. We are old enough to take this higher course, and if we lay aside all paltry jealousies, consider the interests of each other as equal, as our own particular interests, and enter upon the next century with this broad feeling, and with a resolute spirit, our destinies are in our own hands. (Cheers). There must be great changes before very long in the condition of Europe, and in these changes the mother country cannot expect to be left entirely untouched, but whatever changes take place in other parts of the world they will be but trifling compared with the developments in this young nation of ours. Our riches are so boundless, the power is so completely in our own hands, that if we do not become rich and prosperous, as well as free, the fault must be at our own doors. England has shown that what she wants us to do is to guide ourselves in an honourable course, to an honourable destiny. The last thing she wishes is in any way to interfere with us. Under the united monarchy of the present day we have a greater freedom than we could enjoy under any form of Republican Government known in the world. The bonds that unite us to the Imperial power are bonds of silk. The bonds that ought to unite us together are made of steel and bone with the magic strain between them of consanguinity which can never be removed. While, therefore, we are always loyal to the parent state, and I trust that we always shall be, let us also be loyal to ourselves as true descendants of the British stock, doing our utmost in season and out of season to sustain our own Government, and the rights of the British Constitution. If we will only in this broad spirit work out our own destinies in connection with the mother country, let whatever may happen, we shall be conscious of having kept a proper course, and depend on it when the time of danger to the empire arrives, we shall be in a position to act as a worthy colleague and defender. (Loud cheers), I make no boast of my attachment to the British Constitution, and at the same time I do not seek to shirk my just responsibilities. If we are to be part and parcel of the Empire we must be prepared to take our fair share of its burdens and dangers. It is in that way I wish to maintain our position in the future as thorough Australians, and therefore the most consistent and patriotic of Britons. Now the colonies are chiefly united by ties of kinship, but the railway made through several of their territories has had a marvellous effect in still more closely uniting us. If we can only enact laws which will be applicable to all the colonies alike, and if we commit ourselves to the lines of a broad and national policy, then we are at once created a great nation, and if my calculation of the population of 12 millions be true, we shall be able to sweep any invader into the sea. If we had a wise military organisation which would press all the flower of our young men into the patriotic service of our country, we could raise an army against which no foreign invader could stand for a moment. (Cheers). Without detaining you longer I ask you to drink to "Australia, her trials and triumphs of the past, her union and progress in the future."

So far Sir Henry Parkes. He spoke as an Anglo-Israelite without knowing it; and that on many various and important points. Thus he noticed the immense numerical increase of the Australasian Colonies, and declared his belief that in A.D. 1922 there would be 12 millions of inhabitants on the Island Continent and its adjuncts, but 60,000,000 by the end of a century from the present time! As this implies a doubling rate of once in 20 years in a population of only 3½ millions now, we see that Sir Henry Parkes gives the rising nations of Australasia the Israelitish blessing of abnormal increase in a very remarkable degree! If, as he anticipates, there will be in A.D. 1988 "a Greater Britain" at the Antipodes, of the power, numbers, and wealth that he very reasonably anticipates, it will be seen how enormously the might of the Anglo-Saxon race will be extended in the South and the East of the globe! With the United States on our side, and the nations of Canada and South Africa also in loyal union with the British-Ephraim-Israel Empire, what Power on earth would or could venture to cross our path in war, or refuse to remain at peace on our demand? Sir Henry Parkes spoke of Australian wealth present and to come, in glowing language, regarding it as "boundless," with "the power over it in their own hands." He regarded the Australian colonies already as "a great nation" and in all these respects, as our readers know, merely re-echoed the promises of God to Israel. The Word of God tells us that Ephraim was to develop into "a company" or "assemblage of nations." Sir Henry Parkes affirmed on the 26th January last that, as regards Australasia, they had formed already. He spoke of seven States already in existence there, five on the Island Continent, and one each in Tasmania and New Zealand. Canada is a nation already, and promises to be "great." The South African Colonies are bidding fair soon to consolidate into a powerful Federation of States under a British Protectorate. We have thus nine new Anglo-Saxon nations under process of crystallization, each of them likely to exceed or equal the United States in population, wealth and prosperity, and therefore forming a multitude of great and mighty States in union with the Ten-Tribed nation in the "Isles of the West," which will constitute the British Empire a colossal Power indeed, greater than Manassite America, by reason of the single fact that the former is "a fulness of nations," according to the prophecies, which the United States are not. A point we are apt to forget or to take for granted without considering its extraordinary value in our case is this:—Our Colonial grandeur has been enormously enhanced and assisted by the fact that God has permitted gold, and diamonds, rubies, and coal, to be largely found in our newly occupied possessions; and these once "desolations" and "waste places of the earth" are all situated in the temperate zones of the earth, and well fitted to be the home of the Anglo-Saxon British race on that account. Gold found in Victoria was the means of enormously benefiting that colony. South Africa is at this moment growing by leaps and bounds as a British Colonial possession, because diamonds and gold are being largely discovered there, to be worked chiefly by British hands, and to lead to the formation of British companies, towns, and provinces. Throughout our Outland Empire, not excluding India, coal of a valuable sort is being discovered, and in our newly conquered territory in Upper Burmah we have inherited ruby mines of great value. These are however God's good gifts promised in "the latter days" to Joseph, Ephraim, and Manasseh, and He is now literally fulfilling these promises of "the precious things of the earth" to us the House of Israel, Joseph, or Ephraim, according to the prophecies (Gen. xlix. 1—22—26; Deut. xxxiii. 13—17). This peculiar gift of the precious things of the earth, the hills and of the mountains was given exclusively to the House of Joseph, through Ephraim. We British in these "latter" or "last days" of the Christian Dispensation, are exclusively endowed with them, no other nation participating; and God is turning the gift to our nation's enormous advantage, by filling up our colonies with a vast population of hardy miners, British in origin, attracted by the gold and precious stones to be the foundation of fresh nations; causing them thus to enrich our infant daughters beyond sea, in an abnormal way, and causing them to become giant States in very short periods of time, loyal to their old Mother in the West, according to the prophecies. Let Australasia and South Africa then praise the Lord for all His goodness to them, and for all His undeserved mercies to an unworthy race.

Digitized by Google

THREE FRESH GATES IN THE PACIFIC.

An announcement was made in some of the papers on May 18th that the Government had annexed three small islands in the Pacific Ocean for Her Majesty's Empire, and that they were destined to serve as coaling stations, or store depôts, in case of need. There is no doubt if the three islands named, south of the Sandwich Islands, have indeed been annexed as reported, by Captain Sir William Wiseman, R.N., for the British Government, we have acquired three long needed, and called for, "Gates," to break the distance between Vancouver's Island, in Canada, and Auckland, in New Zealand, at the two opposite extremities of the Pacific. At present the distances are thus marked: between Auckland and the Fijis is 1,100 miles; between the Fijis and Honolulu, in the Sandwich group, 2,800 miles; and between the latter and San Francisco 2,100 miles. To Vancouver it would be 250 miles further, we suppose. The distance between the Fijis and Honolulu is too great, and therefore we find three other islands selected, namely, Fanning, Christmas, and Perhyn, which conveniently divide the distance and give to our ships and men of war three depôts for coal on British soil, and so obviate the inconvenience of steaming 6,250 miles without fresh supplies. These stepping stones across the Pacific are multiplying the British Gates, and will ere long lead to the acquisition of others in all directions. Esquimault in Vancouver, and Auckland in New Zealand, will, as the most powerful Gates in that distant sea, finally dominate over those vast waters; but they lack at present some supports midway in the ocean, as fortified coaling stations, to give strength to the power of Britain there. If the report we mentioned be true, we are likely to see the rapid growth of British influence in the Pacific by the small additions to the Empire effected. The expansion in fact never ceases and never can cease till the world becomes British or Anglo-Saxon, as it is destined to be according to the promises. The world and all the inhabitants thereof belong to the Lord Jesus Christ, and He desires that they should hear the message of His mercy. It is this, "God so loved the world, that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." To publish that message and cause it to influence the whole world, He has chosen and endowed one single race, the seed of Abraham, the House of Israel, to be His ministers and missionaries to all the nations, families, and kindreds of the earth. These nations, however, will not listen to the gracious message until they come into immediate contact with the favoured race, now known to be the British. Such contact is only to be secured in most cases by the subjection of the peoples of the earth to the rule of Israel.

God therefore has endowed His people, British-Israel, with power, and wealth and numbers, and dominions unparalleled. He has given them a mighty Colonial Empire, and a heathen one besides, which is simply unique. He has given them the dominion of the sea to enable them to hold their outland possessions; and the Gates also, to secure their supremacy on the ocean as well as to safeguard the highways leading to their distant empires. Hence God is adding to our Gates one by one as it seemeth good to Him. To-day it is in the Pacific; last week it was the Horn of Africa; a short time since the Australian coasts were safeguarded by the addition of two new coaling stations; and some months ago the world was startled by the fact that Esquimault had been created a first-class impregnable fortress, to dominate the whole of the North Pacific, by reason of the power which the Canadian Pacific Railway gives it. (Banner, Vol. x., p. 311, August 4, 1886.) The "one or more Gates," which we foresaw in 1886 must needs be added to our list to strengthen our power where it was manifestly weak, have now, we believe, been supplied in the three islands just given to us by our God. They will of course become repeating stations for the Pacific Ocean Telegraphs, under British protection, which Honolulu would scarcely be. The Gates are multiplying in British hands, a sign, we believe, that we are living in critical times, when the great earthquake war-woe is about to be let loose upon the earth. Only one nation then, the House of British-Israel, will be safe or secure; since she will be, at the Lord's command, shut up in her chambers, her doors closed around her, for a little moment, what time the tremendous judgments of the Lord are visited upon the nations who by sin and rebellion have brought upon themselves the fire of His jealousy, and His fierce and terrible "indignation" (Isa. xxvi. 20, 21; Zeph. iii. 8; Rev. xvi. 18; Luke xxi. 25 to 28, R.V.). To Him be all the praise!

Digitized by Google

THE TORONTO DAILY NEWS ON OUR IDENTITY.

WE take the following from the Toronto Daily News of April 16 last, being part of an article entitled "By the Way," on the subject of the Rev. Dr. Wild's remarkable success in that city as a preacher on prophecy, and the reason for that success. The writer held that his success depended on the fact that Sunday by Sunday the Doctor dealt with the grandest subject of modern times, namely, "the Identification of Britain with Israel, in other words that the British people are the descendants of the Lost Ten Tribes, and therefore the chosen people of God." After eulogising the writings of Mr. Edward Hine and Oxonian, and giving a sketch of the rudiments of the subject, especially in reference to the Scriptural distinction between the two Houses of Israel and Judah, the writer went on as follows:—

It is held that belief in the Anglo-Israel idea is gaining ground in this city (Toronto), and that where Dr. Wild had a few followers in maintaining the truth of it he has now several thousand. They point to the fact that Isaiah speaks time and again of "the isles," that the isles are in the west or north, that Israel is always spoken of as a great people, a powerful people, the chosen of God, that the sayings cannot relate to Judah or the Jews, because they have no nation whatever, that no nation on earth fills the points of identification like the British nation, and that therefore the British nation is Israel. This is a grand thought. To show conclusively that the British are the inheritors of the promises made to Israel would be the most glorious triumph of the world's history. Israel, when in exile, is to possess the "sides of the earth," "the coasts of the earth," "the ends of the earth," "the uttermost parts of the earth," making a circle or girdle of the earth. British settlements surround the Eastern Hemisphere, and British islands and colonies surround the Western Hemisphere. There is no power on earth like Britain, the Doctor's followers argue, and no other people could be Israel, for they must be controllers of the earth to be so. It is impossible to find their main body in the east, because Scripture declares their settling down after they had become lost to be in the northwest from Palestine, the seat of prophecy. It will be impossible to find them a continental nation, because Scripture declares them to have settled down in an island home. It will be impossible to find them without immense colonies, because Scripture declares that the desolate heritages of the earth were expressly given to Israel, when a lost people, to colonise and people. It will be impossible to find the main stock under a republic, because Scripture declares that they should be under a monarchy. It is impossible that a commoner should be their reigning sovereign, because Scriptural promises declare that a lineal descendant from the Royal House of King David should rule over them. It will be impossible to find any portion of Lost Israel under the Mosaic law, because Scripture declares them to be under the Christian dispensation, and divorced from the Mosaic ceremonies. It will be impossible to find Israel without a state national church, because Scripture declares that the carcases of her kings are buried in her high places. It will be impossible to find Israel's national churches without an east window, because Scripture expressly provides that Israel, when lost in her captivity should, in national prayers, pray with their faces toward their land; thus, their island homes being in the northwest, their faces in prayer must be towards the east. It will be impossible to find Israel without dissenters from their national form of religion, because Scripture declares this would be the case with lost Israel. It is impossible that Israel should be known when lost as having Israelitish descent, because Scripture declares that they should during this state be called by "another name." It is impossible, though called by "another name," that her national existence should be unknown to the Gentile nations, because Scripture declares that even when lost she should be known among the Gentiles as a seed the Lord hath blessed. It is impossible, when lost, that she should be an inferior political power, because Scripture declares that she should then be the most powerful war-power on earth. It is impossible, though the Gentile nations should war against her, that she should ever be defeated by their hands, because Scripture declares the defeat of lost Israel to be an impossibility. It is impossible that Israel should ever become an extinct nationality, because Scripture declares that as long as day and night, sun, moon and stars exist, Israel shall endure as a nation, distinct from the Gentiles. It is impossible for Israel to divest herself from the use of the weights and measures given her by God, because Scripture declares that they were to abide in her use. It is impossible for Israel to be freed from the influence of the Canaanites, because Scripture declares that they were to be "thorns in their side."

Under these heads the Anglo-Israelites mass an array of facts which satisfy them that the British people, undefeated and dominant in the world, are "the chosen people," and that the time is near at hand when their Identity will be fully revealed. Let us hope that it may be so, for the colonies, as offshoots from the parent stem cannot be shut out from the glorious inheritance which the Identity would secure. WAYFARER.

So far the Canadian writer. Whether we may all concur with him in the whole of the views he puts forward, may be doubtful; but one thing is certain, namely, that he is thoroughly in earnest, and is very well read in our Anglo-Israel literature. It is a remarkable fact, and one which our opponents should try and account, for, that all over the earth the Identity lacks no advocates. Wherever our truths are attacked God always seems ready provided with a champion of the same, who rushes forward instantly to do battle for the cause. In Australia, New Zealand, Tasmania, the Cape Colonies, Canada, even in Egypt, in the States of America, in Italy, there are instructed, well-read men and women ready to advocate our truths and defend them against all comers. This of course is no evidence that the matters we and others deal with are necessarily true, but they show that intelligent men and women all over the world have deeply studied the question, and being convinced of it, truth are struggling to impress others with their opinions showing cause the while, in public, why men should accept and act on them. In spite of what many call "an absurd craze and delusion," the Identity certainly survives in a most wonderful way! It never collapses anywhere; but advances in most Anglo-Saxon lands by leaps and bounds. Thoughtful men are not all found among the ranks of the opponents. We are constantly hearing of men of culture and women of education and reading, accepting our truths (we greatly dislike the use of the word "theory," so constantly employed by some to describe our belief). Such being the case, we see cause to thank God and take courage. The thing we are dealing with is of God, and He will in His own good time and way make it to prevail. We have to advance it in every way which lies in our power. It is of God to give our efforts success, and He does so as it seems good to Him. Now and again we meet with perverse and provoking men who oppose our teachings because their eyes are blind to the truth, and no amount of evidence seems able to convince them. Such an one, being a working man, lately addressed us anonymously, and among other astonishing objections he asked the following, "How do you prove the Irish to be Canaanites, simply because they used to worship Baal?" "The Babylonians and some of the Lost Tribes did the same."

"May not God deceive our nation (sic!) for their wickedness by making them believe they are Israel, and so allow anti-Christ to spring up amongst us?

"How can you fix the date of the building of the Great Pyramid as B.C. 2170, when King Khufu, who built it, lived according to Brugsch B.C. 3700?

"How can Dr. Wild prove the Canaanites and Philistines to be identical? (sic).

"How could the whole of the Ten Tribes have been so carried away, when Sargon himself says he only carried away 27,280?"

The anonymous person who sent us the above, demanded replies to them and other such questions, in the very next No. of the BANNER, as if our space were not pledged for several weeks in advance. Of course, much that this inconsiderate person asked we have no means whatever of answering. What reasons Dr. Wild may have for certain assertions he surely must explain, not we! Why B.C. 2170 is alleged to be the date of the erection of the Great Pyramid Professor Piazzi Smyth has explained in "Our Inheritance" and we have nothing to add to his lucid explanations and reasonings. Whether God may deceive our nation by making them believe they are Israel, is a wicked and irrational statement, which those who assert such a monstrous thing should prove. We decline to entertain the horrible thought! The last question is unreasonable. No one states that all the Ten Tribes were deported by the Assyrians. Dan for instance was not as far as we can conjecture; and there were other deportations of the Ten Tribes besides Sargon's, as 1 Chron. v. 25, 26, R.V. seems to show (see also Isa. vii. 8, R.V.) Our objector's arguments are therefore weak and futile. They deserve no consideration.

Digitized by Google

ANGLO-ISRAEL FREE DISTRIBUTION FUND.

Fifty-sixth Monthly Report.

The following donations and subscriptions, from June 16th to July 13th, are very gratefully acknowledged:—

By the Treasurer: H. G. (two months' subscriptions), 2s.; Major P., 5s.; M. R. C., £1; H. E. T., £1; Rev. R. L. B., 10s; Per Miss E. M. Rush: A. B., 1s.; "Liverpool Marine Engineer" (for Banners), £1; G. J. (for Banners), 2s. 6d. Per Philo-Israel: Miss C. (for Banners), 4s.; J. R. M., 2s. 6d.

By Mr. C. Horner: W. W., 13s. 6d. (3s. 6d. for Banners); G. R., 2s.; G. W., 1s.; C. B. (monthly subscription) 5s.; S. T., 3s.; G. G., 6d.; M. C. (monthly subscription), 2s. 6d.

Total, £5 14s. 6d.

It is with much regret that we have to report the continued illness of Mr. C. Horner. We ask the prayers of the Sowers that he may soon be restored to health, and enabled to take up the work of the Fund again.

Banner Distribution.—During the past month 96 Banners only have been sent out weekly, but we hope next week the usual number, 127, will be despatched again.

Literature Distribution.—Thirteen parcels have been sent out from Richmond to the following places: Sheffield, Brighton, Barnsley, Silvertown, Alverston, Devonport, Canterbury, Bolton, Dover, Calne, Carlisle, Birkenhead, Great Yarmouth; and three from Upper Teddington to Brighton, Kirkdale, and the Thames Church Mission.

Correspondence.—We hear a good account from our Sower at Brighton, whose method of work, we think, might be copied with advantage by others. He is fortunate, too, in getting several of the local papers to print short notices of the work every week. Mr. Marchant says:—"I have got my bookseller to take up the Banner, and he has furnished me with a stamp (giving his name and address) to stamp all the papers I circulate that are on sale. I stamped 100 Banners with both his and my stamp, and he sent them out with his papers to customers. Although we have only just begun, he sold, I think, five extra Banners last week. On two Sunday mornings I and some friends have distributed a large number of various leaflets, &c., down by the seaside. People from all parts had them and read them, and put them in their pockets; and last Sunday people who recognised us came and asked for more. One man said he had been greatly interested in the others. So I am praying my God to use all this seed and my poor feeble advocacy to His glory. I shall never know how to thank you all for the help you give me, but it is our common cause, and we all desire the glory of God, and may He use our humble efforts to help on the manifestation of the sons of God."

Another Sower tells of one who, having had his attention called to the subject by an opponent, has looked into it, with the result that he and his wife are much interested, and are already rejoicing in the light. So it is hoped that an opponent arousing this man's attention will be the means, under God, of adding two good workers to the cause.

Another says:—"I am constantly lending or giving away the literature and Banners. I have been the means of teaching others, one of whom helps me very much, for he is never easy but when he is unfurling the banner. We are causing many to be surprised when we open up the Scriptures to them in the Identity light. They say they never heard them explained in such a plain way or manner before, so we leave it in the hands of God to prosper our labours."

Another, at Great Yarmouth, has worked hard to bring it before various people, and would be glad if meetings could be held or a lecture given there. He adds: "I have asked my heavenly Father to take it from my mind, if not true, that we are His people, to do His holy work; and instead of it leaving me, it gets stronger in me."

J. Lawrence, Hon. Treasurer.

Contributions to the Fund will be thankfully received and acknowledged by the Hon. Treasurer, Miss J. Lawrence, Rosslyn, Hampton-road, Upper Teddington, Middlesex; or by Mr. Charles Horner, 34, Sheen-park, Richmond-on-Thames. Cheques may be crossed, "London and Provincial Bank, Teddington Branch." Grants of literature will be made, as far as funds allow, on application to the Secretary.

Correspondence.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

Dear Sir,—You will be pleased to learn that Anglo-Israel belief has found a footing in this far-off corner of a far-off land. We can now boast of an association, named in honour of the Jubilee of our beloved Queen, "The Jubilee Anglo-Israel Association of South Australia, Honiton." The association was started in the Jubilee year. It was inaugurated by a course of five lectures setting forth the facts connected with Anglo-Israelite belief. The association being formed, papers have been read by Messrs. Algie, W. Warden, and W. Correll (secretary). A kind and enthusiastic lady has given valuable help to the society by the loan of books, pamphlets, &c. In fact, but for this lady (Mrs. Salter) the society could hardly have been started; so she may be regarded as the mother of the association. Mr. Algie is also a most enthusiastic worker. The paper read by Mr. Warden was very good, and worthy of a place in a corner of the Banner.

One very important feature of the movement here is that it has given those who take our subject up a greater interest in the Bible, and we frequently hear the remark, "The Bible is quite a different Book in the light of the Anglo-Israelite faith." One thing we are very much in need of—that is, Anglo-Israel literature, and leaflets for distribution. Either I myself, or the secretary, Mr. Correll, will be pleased to supply you with Anglo-Israel news from time to time, if you deem our effort worthy of notice. I am, dear Sir, yours truly,

Stephen Carter.

Honiton, South Australia, May 21st, 1888.

[Note by the Editor.—We shall be very glad to hear occasionally from our Honiton (South Australia) friends, and if Mr. Warden's paper could be forwarded to us for perusal we shall be glad to find a place for it in the Banner, if it should prove to be suited to our columns. We are glad to know that even in the Antipodes our truths are exercising men's minds, and that the results are conviction, combination, and successful efforts to propagate the views which we have so much at heart.]

ANTEDILUVIAN HEBREW NAMES.

Genesis v.

Adam	Man in the Divine image;
Seth	substituted
Enos	Man in misery
Canaan	Lamenting.
Mahalaleel	The blessed Elohim
Jared	shall come down
Enoch	teaching.
Methuseleh	His death will send
Lamech	to the humbled race,
Noah	"Consolation."

George Bullock,

Liverpool.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed: "Philo-Israel," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£ s. d.
Annual Subscription for one copy weekly (including the Twelve Double Numbers) post free	0 7 6
Two Copies (including Double Numbers)	0 13 6
Three Copies " " "	1 0 4
Four Copies " " "	1 5 6
Six Copies " " "	1 16 4

Post Office Orders to be made payable at the head office, St. Martin's-le-grand, London, to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C., or F. W. PARRY & Co., 29, Paternoster-row, London.

The Editor cannot undertake to return rejected MSS. unless stamps for the purpose be sent. Parties requiring an answer should enclose a stamp.

Contents Bills and Show Cards may be obtained on application to the Publishers.

Advertisements should be sent to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

Prepaid Advertisements are inserted at the rate of thirty words for 1s. 4d.

BLACKPOOL.— Anglo-Israelites will find COMFORTABLE APARTMENTS, Public or private, near Sea or Gardens, at Mrs. Breakells, 39, Adelaide Street.

NEW BOOK BY DR. WILD.

Just Published, Price 3s., Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Lettered. Sent by Post on receipt of Published Price.

TALKS

FOR

THE TIMES.

BY JOSEPH WILD, M.A., D.D.,

Pastor of the Bond-st. Congregational Church, Toronto.

CONTENTS.—Chapter 1. A Gift of One Hundred and Ninety-Two Million Acres of Land. 2. The Return of the Jews to Palestine. 3. Folks that won't be Somebody. 4. The Four Prophecies of Egypt. 5. The Stone Kingdom and Dynamite; and the Orange Bill. 6. "144!" 7. "666!" 8. The Transit of Venus. 9. The Miracles of Antichrist; and the High Rock Image of Massachusetts, U.S. 10. The Man who could not sleep, and what came of it. 11. The Rainbow. 12. London Destroyed, and Jerusalem a Seaport. 13. Liberalism. 14. A Graft without a Stock. 15. Mouldy Bread and an Oath. 16. A Tombstone Inscription. 17. Dog Lappers. 18. How to get Rich.

London: Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street.

Just published—Cloth, 2s. 6d.—a re-issue of

The Origin of Masonic Ritual and Tradition:

A Lecture on the Three Degrees, by BRO. WM. ROWBOTTOM, P.M., 1028, with facsimile of a very rare Masonic engraving published in 1789.

"Exquisitely clear and singularly correct in everything wherein I may be any authority or guide."—Professor PIAZZI SMYTH. "Will be found of considerable interest to many besides Masons."—Church Bells.

Oxford: S. Rowbottom and Son; London: R. Banks and Son, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C.; and F. W. Parry and Co., 29, Paternoster Row, E.C.

Price Five Shillings.—"Substantially and attractively got up, and profusely illustrated."—Oldham Chronicle.

Eildon Grange: A Tale.

By ANDREW CLARK, M.A., Vicar of St. Michael's, Oxford. "One of the most charming books. . . . The illustrations are full of playful humour."—Scotsman. "The book is undoubtedly a happy one."—The Oxford Magazine. "Both entertaining and bracing."—Dundee Advertiser.

Oxford: S. Rowbottom and Son; London: Hamilton, Adams and Co., 32, Paternoster Row, E.C.

☞ Ask for this Book at the Libraries.

Just Published, price 1d., 6 copies post free for Six stamps, 6/6 per 100, carriage paid.

FACTS AND PROBABILITIES

Respecting the Identity of the British and American Nations with the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel.

Compiled by DELTA.

London: ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-st.

HUMAN LIFE.—FIFTY YEARS' Record of Facts, Principles, and Discoveries (just published complete) Relating to the Improvement and Preservation of Human Life on Earth. Origin and true treatment of diseases. A series of articles by DR. SAMUEL BIRLEY, M.D., Ph.D. Book form, 50 pages. SENT FREE to every applicant by the publishers, GORDON B. MURRAY & CO., 50, Theobald's-road, Holborn, E.C. Write to-day

Published by
ROBERT BANKS AND SON.
Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C.

Postal Orders may be obtained at any Post Office in the United Kingdom for the following amounts: 1s., 1s. 6d., 2d. each; 2s., 2s. 6d., 3s., 3s. 6d., 4s., 4s. 6d., 5s., 7s. 6d., 10s., 10s. 6d., 1d. each; 15s., 20s., 1½d. each. They should be "crossed" City Bank, Ludgate Hill, E.C. Stamps received.

A MESSAGE TO THE CHURCH FROM THE NINETEENTH CENTURY. The last written work on the Identity of the Anglo-Saxon Race with Lost Israel. By the late BISHOP TITCOMB. Imperial 8vo., cloth, gilt, 3s.

BRITAIN IN HISTORY—ANCIENT AND MODERN; or, Proofs Linking Israel with Britain Throughout the Ages. By Mrs. G. A. ROGERS, Author of the "Coronation Stone," &c. Crown 8vo., 276 pp., cloth, gilt lettered, 3s. 6d.; sent post free for P.O.

THE TOWER OF EGYPT: the Types and Chronology of the Great Pyramid. By A. R. G. An Inquiry into our "Position in Time," by a re-consideration of the meaning of the symbolic passages of the Great Pyramid of Egypt. Illustrated with Diagrams. Crown 8vo., cloth, gilt lettered, 4s.; post free for P.O.

WHO ARE WE? AND WHAT IS OUR MISSION? By J. THORNHILL HARRISON. With seven Maps by the Woodbury Permanent Photo Process. In handsome cloth, gilt, 5s.; post free for P.O.

A CHRONOLOGICAL AND GEOGRAPHICAL TREE. A design Showing the Development of the British Power and the Affinity of the British Nation with the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel. On plate paper, 8d.; by post, 10d. Mounted on linen, with rollers, and varnished, 2s., post free.

ANGLO-ISRAEL TRACTS. Price ½d. each; 8 pp. royal 16mo. Assorted packet post free for 7 stamps. The tracts are well written, by the following Authors:—Rev. Bishop Titcomb, D.D.; Philo-Israel; W. S. Cavill; Douglas A. Onslow, J.P.; Mrs. G. Albert Rogers; "A E I"; Surgeon-General J. M. Grant, M.D.; Rev. Robert Douglas; Rev. C. W. Hickson.

TALKS FOR THE TIMES. By Rev. JOSEPH WILD, D.D., Author of the "Lost Ten Tribes," &c. Being 18 Sermons preached in Bond-street Congregational Church, Toronto. 345 pp., crown 8vo., cloth, gilt lettered, 3s.; free for P.O.

THE BRITISH NATION Proved to be the Remnant of Israel, and the Representatives of the Lost Ten Tribes. By J. H. WELDON, J.P., Author of "Britain and Prophecy." 66 pp., demy 8vo., 6d.; by post, 7d.

ENGLAND'S DUTY IN RELATION TO THE CHRISTIANS OF TURKEY. Being a true Solution of the Eastern Question. By the late JOHN WILSON, Author of "Our Israelitish Origin," &c. Price 6d., by post 7d.

Price 2s. 6d., Cheap Edition, 1/-

BIBLE LESSONS AND REFLECTIONS.

By ROBERT GAIRDNER, of Kilmarnock, N.B.

"Mr. Gairdner has given us in his book a series of Bible lessons, with his own reflections added thereto, and though he has been very cautious in the latter, and has not committed himself too broadly, he has plainly let it be seen that he is an Anglo-Israelite by conviction, and that the Scriptures which he quotes at length and extensively throughout his book, are meant to teach Our Identity and God's faithfulness, from first to last, to His promises to Abraham and His seed for ever."—Banner of Israel.

ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-st.

WORKS BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

The History of the House of Israel. How They Were Lost and How They Were Found. Told for the children. Price 6d., cloth 1s.; post free 7d. and 1s. 1d. Fifth edition.

A Resume of the Scriptural Argument Proving the Identity of the British Race with the Lost Ten Tribes. Price 1d.; 6s. per hundred. postage 6d.

Anglo-Israelism. True, Not False. Being Philo-Israel's Reply to the Rev. Canon Bell's pamphlet, "Anglo-Israelism: True or False?" Price 1d., 6s. 6d. per 100. 16 pages, crown 8vo.

An Elementary Digest or Sketch of the Chief Facts and Teachings of the Great Pyramid of Egypt. Adapted to the Unlearned and Unscientific 56 pages, Illustrated with Diagrams, price 4d., post free 5d. 10th Thousand.

Our Identity: What it is Not; What it is; and Our Obligations To-day in Respect to it Being a Lecture recently delivered in London by Philo-Israel, and published by special request. Price 2d., a reduction for quantities.

Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

PIANOFORTES, Harmoniums, American Organs. Why buy at shops inferior made instruments, and pay large profits, when you can buy direct from the Maker High-class Instruments, and save 50 per cent. by so doing? Full value allowed for old Instruments in exchange as part payment. Write for Price Lists and Testimonials to G. LINSTEAD, 2, Oseney Crescent, Camden Road, London. Established 1874.

ASK YOUR BOOKSELLER FOR

'GREAT THOUGHTS'

MONTHLY PART FOR AUGUST,

Commencing a New Volume. Greatly Enlarged and Improved.

Read the opening chapters of DR. GEORGE MACDONALD'S splendid Story, founded on history, entitled "St. George and St. Michael," specially illustrated for Great Thoughts.

The August Part contains 64 pages of choice reading, interspersed with more than 20 Illustrations, and a Splendid Coloured Photo. of the Princess of Wales and the Bishop of St. Albans reading the Bible together.

This exquisite work of art is worth double the price asked for the whole Part.

Of all Booksellers, price 6d., or post free for seven stamps from

A. W. HALL, 132, Fleet Street, E.C.

THE WATERS OF HERMON.

THE interesting circumstance of the re-production by modern science of these celebrated Waters of Antiquity, so famed in Biblical times, is one of the most important illustrations of the advance of the age. Differing from all other Waters they contain no mineral ingredients, so that the system, instead of being lowered by their use, is steadily built up, while the functions of life are restored to a healthy condition. And it is, therefore, with extreme gratification that this is now brought within the reach of the general public. The well-known curative properties of this famous medicine are promptly manifested in the following disorders:—Indigestion, Biliousness, Congestion of the Liver, Nausea and Vomiting, Disorders of the Stomach and Bowels and their consequences, Constipation, Piles, Flatulence, Repletion, Spasms, Discomfort or Pain after Meals, Pain Between the Shoulders, Pains in the Back and Loins, Cold in the Head, Coughs of various character, Difficulty of Breathing, Giddiness and Sick Headache, Effects of Alcohol, Overworked Brain, Affections of the Nerves, &c. Price 2s. 9d. per bottle, post free. THE WATERS OF HERMON DEPOT, 107, King Street, Hammersmith, London.

INVALUABLE REMEDY

SOUND, PURE, WHITE
TEETH!

Those who value these will try

CARBOLINE

(The Great Sanitary Tooth Paste).

1/6 & 2/6 per Pot.

Through Chemists, or post free from the Makers,

GEORGE & WELCH

WORCESTER.

Lancet writes:—"To save the teeth use a good carbolic daily."

Certain HARNESS' Cure.

ELECTROPATHIC BELT

FOR

CONSTIPATION

Rev. D. SUTCLIFFE, Vicar of Holme, Burnley, Lancashire, writes:—"My health has improved very satisfactorily, and I am now entirely free from the constipation I used to suffer from so severely."

Guaranteed to generate a mild continuous current of Electricity, which speedily cures all Disorders of the Nerves, Stomach, Liver and Kidneys. Thousands of Testimonials. Pamphlet & Advice free on application to Mr. C. B. Harness, Consulting Electrician, the Medical Battery Co. Ltd. Only Address,

52, OXFORD ST. LONDON, W. (Corner of Rathbone Place.)

Call to-day, if possible, or write at once

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C. F. W. PARRY (late GUEST & Co.), 29 PATERNOSTER-ROW WEDNESDAY, AUG. 1, 1888 [All rights reserved.

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."

(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India.)

"And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the Forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS of the EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. XII., No. 606. Entered at Stationers' Hall.] WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 8, 1888. [PRICE ONE PENNY.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
A.D. 1588 and 1688	317
The Language Follows the Race	318
The Sheriff of Hull gives Evidence	319
This Protracted Era of Grace. Part II. By J. C. H. Mehl	320
A Wesleyan Minister's Objections	322
Israel's Scripture and Prayer Union	323

A.D. 1588 AND 1688.

THE Armada Commemoration or Tercentenary of the Great Deliverance from Spanish Invasion and intended conquest of God's people Israel, has just been celebrated at Plymouth, and was very magnificently attended by enthusiastic crowds. Twenty thousand people were on the Hoe at Plymouth on July 19th, when the foundations of the National Memorial of the Defeat of the Armada were being laid. It was a proper thing to celebrate the great event in Devonshire, and among the men of that county, for the heroes of that time were Drake, Raleigh, Gilbert, Hawkins, and other Devonians. Drake's game of bowls, which he was playing when the news arrived that the Spaniards were sighted off the Cornish coast, coming up the Channel, was played out to the last shot, and then Drake and his group of captains on the grass prepared to go out to meet the great host under the Duke of Medina Sidonia, who with his "Invincible" ships, galleons and galliasses, was going to try conclusions with the King of kings and Lord of lords, by striving to reverse His word and oath, and by proving to the world that the appointed place of Israel's security was no safe refuge after all, but open to the assault of the servants of the man of sin. One hundred and thirty-two vessels rode at anchor in the Tagus during the summer of 1588, prepared for the destruction of the English Throne, which in reality was Jehovah's! Half of these, says Collier, consisted of huge galleons, leviathans whose wooden ribs were four or five feet thick, and round whose masts heavy cables daubed with pitch were twined to make them shot-proof. There were also galliasses, in each of which 300 slaves tugged at ponderous oars. The smaller fry, zabraes, pataches, caravels, swarmed thick between. Besides 8,000 sailors and galley slaves, there were 20,000 soldiers on board. The plan of Medina Sidonia was this. The Armada was to sweep the Channel clear of British ships, and hold it for a time. In that interval (just what our modern Frenchmen are talking about to-day!) the army collected at Dunkirk by the Prince of Parma and Captain-General of the Spanish Netherlands, was to cross the Channel in the flat-bottomed boats made ready there for the purpose, and invade the home of Israel, by landing in Kent. London would be reached by a rapid march, and then England itself would fall at the Spaniard's feet, and the new religion of the hated Reformation be rooted up. Philip came to destroy our Protestantism as the champion of the Papacy, and in Israel's land both Protestants and Papists stood side by side to resist him. Meanwhile, how were we prepared to meet the enemy at sea? Very poorly! The navy had been previously reduced as a measure of economy to 36 ships! The nation however came to the aid of the Government and sent out ships privately equipped. Bristol we are told furnished six or seven for the fight. In the end 191 were ready to meet the invasion, though their tonnage did not amount to half that of the enemy. The Dutch came to our aid by blockading Parma's army in Dunkirk and Nieuport, and so frustrated the plan of invasion. How the Armada was destroyed, and how God's winds and waves spoilt the "Invincible" array of ships and allowed only a small percentage to return home to tell the tale of disaster and God's deliverance of His people, does not require to be repeated. It was a signal and glorious deliverance, and salvation. It was one we benefit by to-day, since it was the foundation of Britain's greatness, nay of the greater Britain or Colonial Empire of our modern times. The Armada taught this nation the lesson that henceforth our strength was the sea, and that it behoves us to be stronger on that element than any of the other nations and Powers of the civilised world, likely to molest us. From the time of Queen Elizabeth this country has always set itself this task, and the mighty British fleets which have recently been and are manœuvring off the coast of Ireland show that the lesson has not been taught in vain! The value of her fleets to England, first learnt from the attempt of Philip to destroy this land and its religion, was effectually taught by the Armada. It gave the supremacy of the sea to Britain! also the Gates, the colonies, the commerce, and the wealth we enjoy to-day. These however are all God's good gifts promised to Israel; and the great teacher of the lesson which God desired His people to acquire was the so-called Invincible Armada. It was defeated in battle off Portland; was dispersed by the fireships off Calais; and had to flee for safety round the north of Scotland and Ireland, only to fall into the hands of the living God, and there meet with destruction from His winds and storms. "Flavit Jehovah et dissipati sunt," was Queen Elizabeth's true verdict and historical résumé of the whole matter. Jehovah the God of the Hebrews fought for His people. He conquered and dispersed their enemies by blowing on them with His winds, and lo! they were not! "The nations shall rush like the rushing of many waters. But He shall rebuke them, and they shall flee far off and shall be chased as the chaff of the mountains before the wind, and like the whirling dust before the storm. At eventide behold terror, and before the morning they are not" (Isa. xvii. 13, 14, R.V.). The Armada brought upon Israel a crisis which she has never forgotten and which the nations are not likely to forget. The event, as the Times said on July 20, cut a deep and broad mark in national history. It showed how God can and did, and therefore can and will, interpose in favour of His people, and how He can turn the greatest peril into the most splendid blessing. He preserved to us our Protestant, witnessing faith. He brought our enemies' boasted preparations for our destruction to public shame. But on us, His people, He put the most exalted honour.

Digitized by Google

One hundred years later there was yet another Armada, having for its object the benefit of the people of the Lord in Great Britain. William of Orange set sail from Helvoetsluys on November 1, 1688, to invade England, to dethrone James II., to restore Protestantism as the religion of the country, and to place himself upon the Throne of Britain. To destroy the Protestant religion in Israel was the object of the Armada; to restore it was the purpose of the "The Great English Revolution." Each event had an Israelite bearing, and each pointed to the people who were the subjects of these mighty movements as the witnesses for the Lord that He is the God. The Armada testified to God's faithfulness in saving His people from the extremity of peril when they were little prepared to meet it. The Revolution testified to God's faithfulness to His promise to re-kindle the rapidly expiring flame of Protestant truth in the land, when Popery had succeeded in grasping even Israel's Throne, the Throne of Jehovah. He then showed once more "His words unto Jacob, His statutes and judgments unto Israel," and He restored to them the blessings of Protestant truth and worship, with the security of a Protestant succession to the Throne, the benefits of which remain even to this day. Let Israel therefore praise the Lord for the two Armadas, God's instruments for good to Israel!

THE LANGUAGE FOLLOWS THE RACE.

We have often declared in these pages as an axiom which demands acceptance, that "Language follows the race" that speaks it. That is, that if the English language is destined to become the universal language of the world, it follows, as the shadow the substance, that the British people who speak it must first be located everywhere and become the dominant race. A remarkable illustration of what we mean is now taking place before our eyes in the Transvaal, where the Boers, as they imagined, conquered their independence at Majuba Hill, and had achieved their right to keep their country to themselves for evermore. The trouble of the Boers, as exhibited by their debates in Parliament, or the Volksraad just now, is, that the English language is becoming universal in the Transvaal, because the hated English settlers who had come in to search for gold are rapidly making the country English, and compelling everybody to talk their detested speech in the courts, the markets, and public buildings! So hateful was the very sound of English to the majority of the Volksraad, as stated in their debates on the subject, that one of the members, Mr. Taljaard, actually imitated the cackle of turkeys to describe the sound of the English language in his ears. He said in the debate on the 1st June, that "it jarred upon his feelings to come into a court, or at the market, and to hear the English language spoken, 'encoet, encoet, encoet,' like turkeys" (loud laughter). The fact is, Mr. Taljaard is not aware who the British are; and that being Israel, they are destined presently to become the ruling race in his beloved Transvaal, simply by weight of numbers. The race has flowed like the tide into the land to look after gold, and they are settling there in towns like Johannesburg and Barberton, ten thousand strong each. The language following the race, will at last fill the Transvaal too, like the rest of the world, to plague him to the end of his days with the "encoet, encoet," call of the turkey! Mr. Badenhorst, another member, said, that in his district "there were constant complaints about the use of the English language; everywhere nothing was heard but English! The markets were being conducted in English, and now there was talk of having English in the courts of law. They should therefore pass a stringent measure that all government servants using English should lose their positions. If they did not understand Dutch the English settlers must employ interpreters."

The Vice-President, on June 2nd, during the debate, declared that as long as he had a drop of blood in his veins he would uphold the use of the Dutch language as against English. In the result the Volksraad adopted a motion, authorising the government to pass a resolution wherein it should be determined "that the Dutch language shall be used in all markets, and in all public offices, by all officials, and also to make such regulations and determine on such punishments as government may think necessary." By 27 to 6 this vote was passed.

It will interest our readers to know that all this information comes to us in an English newspaper published in the Transvaal town of Johannesburg, which is an English town. The Eastern Star is full of the subject, and we have cuttings furnished us by friends in Johannesburg giving more details. The English settlers are becoming restless and excited. The Eastern Star declares that they will "as surely become the preponderating element in the State, and Anglicise it from one end of it to the other, as that to-morrow's sun will rise;" but adds, that even when this takes place, these new settlers will not desire to add the country to the British empire, but mean only to erect a powerful independent republic, having Englishmen and Boers to govern it, English being the language of the State. This humble desire is not likely to be gratified, as our readers can see from our quotation from the speeches made in the Volksraad; and the result must be a revolution, during which power will pass over to the British, and they will use it as God shall direct. What the Johannesburgh papers think of the crisis can be gathered from the following, just received by the mail, purporting to be an article of one of the journals on the subject:—

THE DUTCH LANGUAGE.

The Volksraad is rushing the country to the edge of a pitfall, and hastening it into trouble to which there can only be one end. The new comers to this State are desirous of living in the fullest harmony with the Government, and of rendering due obedience to the law as they find it. But when they find that laws are being made unnecessarily to oppress them, and to hamper them in their business transactions with each other as well as with the authorities in the various departments of the State, they will be likely to resent it. The latest folly of the Raad has been to pass a resolution declaring that the Dutch language shall be used exclusively in the Courts, in all the departments of the State, in the transaction of all public business, and even upon Markets by marketmasters. And this, too, in the face of a generally expressed wish that the use of either language should be permissible, as it is in the Courts and Legislature of the Cape Colony. It is the veriest folly on the part of the Volksraad to attempt to enforce the use of a language not understod by a large proportion of the people. If it is hoped that the use of the Dutch language will by such measures be perpetuated, the hope is a vain one. This country is going to become Anglicanised, and a few years will witness a complete change in the position of parties. The sensible portion of the Dutch population know it is futile to attempt to stay the tide of English population which will flow into this State, and wish to assist them in making this country a great and prosperous one. But it can never be made great by compelling the people who are rapidly becoming the most numerous in the State to adopt a language they do not understand, which must hamper official and every day business to a very serious extent. The vote has been arrived at by the Volksraad in no friendly spirit towards the new comers; and it will very much retard that rapprochment of all classes in the State which is so necessary to the future prosperity of all.

Digitized by Google

So far the writer in Johannesburg. It is clear from all this, that once more the "language is following the race," and that the Boers, whose Dutch tongue is not destined to prevail, must give way to Israel and her heaven-blessed vernacular (Zeph. iii. 9, R.V.). The blessing of Abraham and his seed for ever is following us, and to-day we see that as in New Zealand, and Australasia, in Canada, and India, the British race is supreme, either by numbers or energy, and dominates at last, so it is prevailing also in the Transvaal. The language of the dominant race follows it, and must become the language of the Transvaal, as God is true! Majuba Hill withstood us for a time; and Mr. Gladstone did his best as he did in Egypt to withstand the will of God. But he was put down by the mighty hand of Him who rules the world, and Egypt has lapsed to Israel as the Transvaal also will shortly lapse to the conquering race, by reason of her God-given multitudes and her enormous energy and enterprise as a nation. For the results which we see to be imminent let Israel praise the Lord!

THE SHERIFF OF HULL GIVES EVIDENCE.

Mr. H. Allison, the Sheriff of Hull, was present on May 17 at a special service held at the Jewish Synagogue on that date on behalf of the funds of the Hull Children's Hospital. After the sermon by the Rev. J. Myers on Exodus xxiii. 16, during which he eloquently urged the Jews present to show sympathy for their fellow-townsmen, the Christians, the Sheriff seems to have addressed the assembled congregation, asking their liberal help to the Children's Hospital. He said further, what will be noticed with interest by our readers, when they recollect that this little Identity confession was made in a Jews' Synagogue, before the assembled congregation of the Jews, the preacher, the reader, the president and the treasurer of the synagogue, being also of that race! His remarks were as follows:—

They were met there upon the broad platform of humanity to do good to their fellow-men, and, as their minister had told them it was their object to see if they could do anything to benefit the sick children of the poor, in doing which they were doing a very good thing. It might be interesting to them to know that one of the first inmates of the Victoria Hospital was one of themselves, viz., a Jew of the name of Jacob. That little fellow had become immortalised, for he believed the matron wrote a book giving the history of the institution, and Jacob was the hero of the little work, and a very great number of children—both Jews and Christians—had received benefit since that time in and through the hospital. Mr. Myers had said the difference between Jews and Christians ought not to be so great as it was. He (the sheriff) did believe himself the relationship was not so far distant as some of them thought. He did not say he was of the tribe of Judah, but he at times thought he was an Israelite. If they took Englishmen throughout, the contour of the whole countenance and their build together, they would find that they very much resembled those who belonged to the Tribe of Judah. He had not gone very deeply into the subject, but he did think it was just possible that Englishmen might belong—they had got a little mixed perhaps—to the Lost Ten Tribes. He was quite sure that on an occasion of that kind Jews and Christians might meet and join hand-in-hand to serve the interests of suffering humanity. He did not know whether he should be in order to propose a vote of thanks, but he was sure he might personally, and on behalf of the committee of the hospital, give their very sincere thanks to Mr. Myers and the wardens of that Synagogue for the very great interest they had taken in the hospital, and he trusted the result would be worthy of the occasion. (Applause).

So far the Sheriff of Hull. We think he was a bold and faithful man to bring forward this subject, generally so hateful to the Jews, in their own house of prayer! Judah is jealous of Ephraim because of her blessings, just as the elder son of the parable resented the ragged and sin-stained prodigal's unmerited rewards bestowed by the hands of their loving and forgiving Father. The Jews of Hull, it appeared from the preacher's sermon, were in the past without sympathy for their Christian fellow-townsmen, and both he and the Sheriff said much in deprecation of such a state of feeling between neighbours and those "made of one blood." The Sheriff of Hull is not far from the possession of Anglo-Israelite belief. But he requires to study the subject more deeply, and ascertain from the evidence whether the British folks are in truth "the Ten Lost Tribes" or no! He has to learn that not only the British "may belong" to the Ten Tribes; but that they are in fact the Ten Tribes, according to the flesh, themselves. "Though Abraham knew us not, and Israel be ignorant of us, doubtless God is our Father, our Redeemer, and His name is from everlasting" (Isa. lxiii. 15).

Mr. Allison is ready to think himself an Israelite because "the countenance and build of Englishmen" is in his opinion similar to those of the Jews, as a rule. This seems to us to be a precarious and rather fallacious test of identity of race, and would hardly satisfy us, though it seems to be sufficient for the Sheriff of Hull. The fact is, Mr. Allison will find from further study of the question that the identity of the British with Lost Israel can only be made good to the inquirer by the proof of the fact that historically it was possible for Israel to have escaped westward from the place of their captivity in Central Asia, in the seventh and eighth centuries B.C., and that of all modern nations the one most clearly connected with the House of Israel is the British, since they enjoy, exclusively, all those blessings and benefits which God declared on oath He would "reserve for Abraham and his seed for ever," exclusively! Now God is a God of truth, and His oath, covenants and promises are inviolable. He cannot swear to reserve certain blessings exclusively for His people Israel, and give them all exclusively in violation of His oath to a certain head-strong wicked race of the Japhetic blood, non-Israelites in origin, called the British. The fact that the British do enjoy these blessings exclusively is proof positive that they are the after-seed of Abraham. But there is no doubt we are not Jews. Therefore it stands to reason that we must be the Lost Ten Tribes, destined to be found by the very marks we display, as God is true! It is a good sign, showing that the time of Judah's sufferings are drawing to a close, to find they can endure to hear Ephraim's praises in their own synagogues, and can find it in their hearts to give of their substance to the relief of the sufferings of Christian children. May the jealousy soon pass away, and may Judah be seen to be "walking with and to" the House of Israel, preparatory to the longer and more joyous journey when the Two Houses united "shall come together out of the land of the North to the land which the Lord hath given to their fathers for an inheritance!" (Jer. iii. 18, R.V.). In that day Israel and Judah together will raise the glorious shout of "Hallelujah! Praise ye the Lord!"

The Church Missionary Society's Deficiency Fund.—We have received on account of this Fund (see page 262), the sum of £11 4s. 6d., detailed lists of which will be published hereafter. Of this amount we received £1 from "Henrietta," of Liverpool, and from a "Friend, per Major P," 5s., these being anonymous. PHILO-ISRAEL.

August 2.

To our Readers.—Will those of our readers who are thinking of taking their holidays, request their booksellers to obtain for them their copies of the Banner of Israel as usual, and to deliver them on their return to town. You prevent your bookseller from making a loss. The Banner of Israel may also be ordered at any of Messrs. Smith and Son's bookstalls. When ordering of this firm at the country stalls, (if not a permanent order) the number of weeks for which the paper is required should be stated.

Digitized by Google

THIS PROTRACTED ERA OF GRACE.

By J. C. H. Mehl.

(Concluded from page 310.).

PART II.

We might be tempted to linger too long in the contemplation of the high vocation of the faithful in this present era, in which they are called upon "to walk by faith and not by sight;" but enough has been said to prove that a peculiar blessedness attaches to it; that if there is suffering and warfare here; if the wrestling is severe, "against the spiritual hosts of wickedness in the heavenly places," there is on the other hand the sure and certain hope of "an eternal weight of glory." St. Paul fully estimated both the immediate and ultimate effects of the "Grace and Apostleship" he had received "unto the obedience of faith among all nations;" therefore he says elsewhere, "I endure all things for the elect's sake, that they also may obtain the salvation which is in Christ Jesus with eternal glory." The "election of grace" to this high and heavenly calling, and as connected with it, the formation of the Church of God; its yet future exhibition in the perfection of truth and holiness; this is the great theme in the apostle's writings, as that which was to continue in operation as part of the mystery of God's will, until in the dispensation of the fulness of the times all things shall be summed up in Christ, both the things in the heavens and the things upon the earth (Eph. i. 9, 10). These epistles abound indeed in allusions to the Lord's Second Advent; but in them the glories of the coming kingdom are not dwelled on. The book of the Revelation takes up this subject, yet is the greater part of it occupied with the judgments that must precede, and by which the earth shall be purified and made ready. We do not know what possibilities of faith and attainment will be set before the inhabitants of the millennial earth: we may rest assured there will be no check to the ever onward and upward drawing of our fallen race, to the praise of the glory of God's grace; but we do know that when the great King comes into His kingdom, He will not come alone, but surrounded by myriads of heavenly saints, "blessed and holy" partakers in the "first resurrection" (Rev. xix. 14, and xx. 5, 6). We also know that the revelation of Israel, the long lost House, will then have taken place, that they shall "possess the nations," that "their seed shall be known among the nations, and their offspring among the peoples, all shall acknowledge them that they are the seed which the Lord hath blessed;" and they "shall be named the priests of the Lord: men shall call them the ministers of our God." And those "nations" who shall have been preserved through the great tribulation, having witnessed the wrath of the Lamb and beheld Him coming in the power and glory of His kingdom, will not then refuse a ready submission. Amid the last closing scenes of woe they had heeded the proclamation of "an eternal Gospel" as a final warning "unto every nation and tribe, and tongue and people . . . . . Fear God and give Him glory; for the hour of His judgment is come, and worship Him that made the heaven and the earth and the sea and fountains of waters!" (Rev. xiv. 6). This is elementary truth; but it is easy to conceive how it will be needed after the demoralisations of the great apostasy and the deification of the Antichrist.

Let us further notice that the recognition of the two lines we have hinted at, of "glories terrestrial" and "glories celestial," evidently running along through the age that is to come, may remove some difficulties that have been felt in the endeavour to harmonise the prophecies of the Old and the New Testament scriptures when referring to that period. Doubtless there will be a sphere where these two lines will blend. Hence, in comparing Ezekiel's vision from a very high mountain in the land of Israel, of the city, its temple, and all details given as to measurement and worship—glories terrestrial—with the description of the holy City, new Jerusalem, which St. John saw "coming down out of heaven from God, having the glory of God . . . and . . . no temple therein, for the Lord God and the Lamb are the temple thereof,"—glories celestial—it is impossible not to be struck both with the similarities and the strong contrasts in the two pictures.

The reinstitution of the sacrifices of blood and of the rite of circumcision, according to Ezek. xlv. 18—25 and xliv. 9, has startled many minds; yet if we take into account that there will then be dwelling upon the earth the many millions who had needed the elementary truth above alluded to; that although the world will be exempt from satanic influences and under the guidance of a perfect rule of righteousness, there will yet be those neglectful of the privilege of going up unto Jerusalem to worship the King, the Lord of hosts (Zech. xiv. 17); and finally, that at the end of that blissful reign, Satan, being loosed, will again succeed in deceiving the nations (Rev. xx. 8); if we take into account such possibilities of evil, it may not be so difficult to understand how the peoples of the earth, together with Judah-Israel, represented in Zech. xii. 10, 14, as deeply repentant, will again have to learn, through type and symbol, the two great lessons missed by them in this dispensation, viz., the need of an atonement for sin and the necessity for a renewed and sanctified life; even the truths known so well by Abraham of old. He builds an altar unto the Lord the moment he finds himself in the land of Canaan (Gen. xii. 7, 8), and ever and again as he journeys on; and when Jehovah appears unto him to enlarge upon and renew the blessings promised at the outset, of multitudinousness and exceeding fruitfulness, and He links with these His covenant of circumcision, the opening words are: "I am God Almighty, walk before Me, and be thou perfect" (Gen. xvii. and comp. Gal. v.).

But to resume. Having pointed out the clear indications there are throughout the New Testament scriptures of the prolongation of the period that has run on since the day of Pentecost, and of the provision made for it, notwithstanding the apparent immediateness in the promise of Christ's Second Advent, we still have to meet the question which has occupied so many minds, "Why this delay?" Only with the utmost humility should an answer be attempted. We have already traced even to its yet future fruition in glory a wonderful work which the Holy Spirit is accomplishing now, "to the intent that now unto the principalities and the powers in the heavenly places might be made known through the church the manifold wisdom of God" (Eph. iii. 10).

But if at the close of this nineteenth century of our era we have neared, as many believe, the "time of the end" spoken of by the prophet Daniel (chap. xii.), when secret things shall be unsealed, then may we count upon it that further light will be given as we endeavour to comprehend the mighty ways of Him who ever "worketh" (John v. 17), and never fails or falters in His purpose; and we shall share somewhat in Ezekiel's vision (chap. i. 16, 18; and x. 13, R.V.), when he saw "the appearance of wheels and their work . . . as it were a wheel within a wheel . . . and as for their rings they were high and dreadful . . . and they were called the whirling wheels."

The testimony of Josephus, so often alluded to by writers on the identity of the British race with the Lost Tribes of Israel, as to these never having returned, but being in his day a great multitude somewhere beyond the Euphrates, and evidently out of contact with their brethren, the Jews, and with the civilized world, must be of great value to any one interested in tracing the history of this outcast House. The ignoring of this fact, as well as of the more important one, that up to their still future reunion with their brethren of the other House, there are two distinct lines of prophecy running through the Old Testament, so that the predictions referring to the one are in no way applicable to the other, has been and is the cause of endless confusion in the interpretation of the prophetic scriptures; but to even a casual reader of the Banner and other Anglo-Israel literature this subject must be familiar and the distinction evident.

Digitized by Google

There is, however, yet another cause of confusion which may need to be a little more insisted upon than it has been hitherto, namely, blindness as to the necessarily pre-millennial fulfilment of a number of the predictions concerning Israel. If the one error has been fitly described as "a noxious weed of which the soil must be cleared before seeds of (Identity) truth have any chance of springing up," the other may be compared to a luxuriant parasite which, preying on the prophetic tree, hides its fair proportions as its branches extend through this age and the next.

The author of "Israel in the New Testament," Surgeon-General Grant, says on p. 5 of his pamphlet: "Our divines, or some of them, do not hesitate to affirm that the promises made to Israel will have no fulfilment till the millennium! They fail to perceive that God's dealings with men are progressive; that the blessings temporal and spiritual upon which Israel entered at the resurrection of Jesus, will continue to be developed during this dispensation and the next, so that some only, but by no means all of them, must pass through this dispensation before they can reach those to whom they were promised." Anyone admitting the existence of the House of Israel as distinct from Judah would readily concede that as in the case of the latter so in that of the former also, the trials and chastisements pronounced against them must be accomplished before the establishment of the reign of righteousness, when both Houses, the sticks in Ezekiel's hand—will be united, having their centre in the Holy Land. Yet many whose views are clear thus far are nevertheless not prepared to see what is above asserted, namely, the gradual development of many temporal and spiritual blessings promised to Joseph in his descendants and to the other tribes of Israel associated with him, and necessarily requiring their partial or entire fulfilment before millennial times, and therefore in this dispensation. That time of universal blessing and peace will be preceded by the outpouring of the Spirit upon Israel, who will all be taught of the Lord and thus fitted to be the dispensers of benefits, the administrators of that righteous rule to which all nations shall yield a willing obedience (Isa. lxi. 6—9). That day, when "the Lord shall be King over all the earth" (Zech. xiv. 9); when "from the rising of the sun unto the going down of the same His name shall be great among the Gentiles, and in every place incense shall be offered unto Him and a pure offering" (Mal. i. 11); when "the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea" (Isa. xi. 9), will not be a time for conquest, for the ravages of war, for the subjugation of enemies, for the lion-like action of tearing to pieces (Mic. v. 8, 9), for putting those who resist to flight (Lev. xxvi. 7, 8), and for their wasting away (Isa. lx. 12), for the putting forth of the strength of the wild ox in thrusting the peoples to the ends of the earth (Deut. xxxiii. 17); for the weary process of reclaiming the desolate heritages (Isa. liv. 3; lviii. 11, 12); for all the toil and strife and danger of going to occupy the ends of the earth. Neither will it be a time for that national repentance of Israel and amending of their ways; for this will be followed by the outpouring of the Spirit (Acts iii. 19), which, as we have seen, takes place at the opening of that blissful day. All these things, and yet more might be enumerated, not suiting the calm and peace of that "golden age," Israel must evidently have experienced or acted out before the close of this present dispensation. We must in fact, at this hour of the day be able to point to a nation which from small beginnings (the difference as between a stone and a mountain) has gradually risen and is rising to a position of pre-eminence politically and morally, bidding fair presently even to "fill the whole earth" (see Dan. ii. 35). We must also be able to trace in its history a twofold process: the predicted sufferings and chastisements accumulated at the outset of outcast Israel's wanderings becoming gradually exhausted, and in inverse ratio the blessings unfolding, the blessings of multitudinousness, of wealth, of universal sway (Gen. xlviii. 4, 16, 19; xlix. 22—26). We must expect to find it the keeper of the word of God above all other nations (Ps. cxlvii. 19), a worshipper of God the Father under the new covenant (Hos. ii. 19), having the power and the will to carry the gospel message to every nation and kindred and tongue and people; for before the end of this present age the "Gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in the whole world for a testimony unto all the nations" (Matt. xxiv. 14).

Let the thoughtful reader who has not hitherto sought for Lost Israel with this guiding-thread in his hand, take a rapid survey of the nations of the earth, now that it is impossible that any such people, if in existence, can be hidden, and if he discovers one nation, one race, shewing the features above pointed out, let him know that the only conclusion he can arrive at has already been reached by many others; and that abundance of historical, ethnic and philological corroboration has been the reward of diligent research, confirming the testimony of Holy Writ, to the praise of the faithfulness of the Lord God Almighty.

Yet one or two more considerations in conclusion. Is it possible to conceive that after the flood-gates of Divine mercy had been thrown open wide by the death and resurrection of Jesus Christ, the Redeemer of Israel, the Saviour of the world, that all embracing grace, the good tidings of which were to be published among all nations, was yet to be restrained and to continue so to this day, in the direction of that section of the chosen people upon whom had been conferred irrevocably the birthright blessings? For to Joseph was given this "double portion;" and through him to Ephraim and the whole House of Israel associated with that tribe in the kingdom under Jeroboam and his successors; as they were also in the ensuing corruption and abomination of idolatry, in the outcasting and the captivity, and the subsequent strife and toilsome wanderings. Having finished the work which the Father gave Him to do, and ascended into glory, was the Saviour still to be "straitened" even there, and that with regard to the people of whom Jehovah had declared, one hundred years after their captivity had been consummated (Jer. xxxi. 9, 20), "I am a father to Israel, and Ephraim is My first born," and "Is Ephraim My dear son? . . . . . for as often as I have spoken against him I do earnestly remember him still"? Further, if to this day Israel is under the Divine displeasure, what was the meaning of Zechariah's prophetic utterance when, in contemplating his own infant son, his soul by the Holy Ghost overflowed with joy in expectation of the great Redeemer's coming: "Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, for He hath visited and redeemed His people!" For as to the other section of the chosen people, the Jews, they as a nation ignored the gracious visitation and rejected the redemption (as they do to this day); and in His time the Lord said to them: "The kingdom of God shall be taken from you and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof," and St. Paul afterwards in his earliest epistle, the first to the Thessalonians, uses language which cannot be surpassed in intensity when he says of that deluded people, "who both killed the Lord Jesus and the prophets and drave out us, and please not God, and are contrary to all men, forbidding us to speak to the Gentiles that they might be saved; to fill up their sins always: but the wrath is come upon them to the uttermost."

Where then was the people in whom, during the period then about to open, it should be manifested that it had been visited and redeemed? Must it not be identical with that nation to whom the kingdom of God was to be given, who from thenceforth and throughout the age then beginning was to witness for Him in the earth? It has often been pointed out and proved in the pages of the BANNER, that from the call of Abraham down through all generations, and through the age that is to come, his descendants were to be, and to become in an ever-increasing measure, the light-bearers upon earth, to whom the oracles of God were committed, to whom were communicated the progressive revelations of the Triune Jehovah, that they might thus be the depositors of the truth, the dispensers of it to the rest of the world (See Isa. xli. 8; xliii. 10; xliv. 1, 2, 3). But according to the ordinary views prevailing on this subject this evident purpose of God sustained a check after the death and ascension of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the rejection of Him by "His own," the Jews; and it is taught that throughout this Christian dispensation to the Gentiles promiscuously was the Gospel message committed. No doubt many individuals of purely Gentile origin have been and are so used and honoured; but the words already quoted, that the kingdom of God should be given to a nation bringing forth fruits suitable thereto, forbid our applying them in a loose way to the Christianised Gentiles in general. We must, therefore, look for a nation preeminently Christian, we must find it supplying the world with witnesses to the power and truth of the Gospel of salvation, with disseminators of the word of God; it must be a people maintaining truth and righteousness and equity, although all this imperfectly as yet. But we have before shewn that nation to be one and the same with "His people" whom the Lord God of Israel hath visited and redeemed; and again, it is obvious it should be identical with the one in whom those many predictions before pointed out must find their fulfilment in pre-millennial times. May this mode of reasoning in a circle not have proved too wearisome to the reader. It would not have been attempted but that experience has shewn how strangely some very important points are overlooked by zealous commentators of every degree, when endeavouring to harmonise the Almighty's ways upon earth with the prophetic scriptures of both Testaments; while they find themselves unable to account satisfactorily for the apparent interruption of the Divine purpose regarding the chosen people, the unmitigated repudiation, as is supposed, of the outcast House of Israel during this reign of grace, and the indefinite prolongation of a period throughout which yet from its commencement the faithful are exhorted to be as those hastening to its close, and in the attitude of expectancy, as servants awaiting the return of their Lord.

Digitized by Google

June, 1888.

A WESLEYAN MINISTER'S OBJECTIONS.

We have been requested to notice the difficulties a Wesleyan minister experiences in regard to the teaching of the Banner preventing his acceptance of the doctrines of Our Identity. We have carefully perused what has been sent to us on the subject, and find that the objections now raised have all been mooted and answered before. As, however, many may not be able to refer to these replies, and the difficulty of discovering any particular article grows with the growth of the Banner, we propose to let our Wesleyan minister give us his views, in his own words, first, and we shall endeavour, then, to meet his strictures and objections afterwards. He wrote thus:—

My views on this subject are the same as before. Whilst I have not a word to say against those who entertain the opinion that the English are the descendants of Ancient Israel, and whilst I do not regard the opinion itself (even if it were untrue) as involving any serious consequences, yet no representation of the subject, that I have ever read, has carried the slightest conviction to my own mind. The class of facts adduced, however multiplied, do not seem to me to lie in the line of proof. If the same historic facts, that attest the modern Jews to be the descendants of the Ancient Jews, could be adduced in favour of the modern English being the descendants of Ancient Israel, then evidence of a valid nature would be presented. But the "Coincidences" of Mr. Hine, which I have twice read, in order that I might not do him injustice, do not present to my mind a single proof of the point he aims to establish. All the coincidences he mentions, and all the coincidences in the Banner you have kindly sent me, have, to my mind, no evidential value that the English are the descendants of Ancient Israel. Every History of England shows, clearly and unmistakably, that all the English are a composite people, in whose blood the Roman, Saxon, Dane, Norman, and British ancestry are blended. Until historic disproof of this can be given, which, in the nature of the case, seems an impossibility, no other kind of evidence could, to my mind, be satisfactory.

The class of evidence, as represented in the Banner, &c., I regard as evidence of another fact. The blessings promised to Ancient Israel were conditional on moral conduct and religion! Such blessings God ever promises to those nations who comply with His moral and religious requirements. The British race, in its diffusion of these moral and religious truths, by Bible and Missionary Societies, more than any other nation, fulfils those duties to which God has promised His great blessing. Hence, I accept all the glorious facts of Britain's greatness and terrestrial glory, such as are cited in the Banner, but do not account for them in the same way that the Banner does. I cheerfully admit all the glowing and yet just descriptions of Britain's greatness, and I am ready to allow that the Banner you kindly sent me contained some very interesting accounts of Britain's greatness, most of which I read with great satisfaction. The only point to which I take exception is the logic of the evidence.

The Scriptures repeatedly taught the Ancient Jews that their national obedience to God would bring national prosperity, and that their national sins would bring national ruin. Moral causes, and not physical, are the bases of Britain's prosperity. No nation is great because of hereditary descent, but because of moral worth. "God has made of one blood all nations of men that dwell upon the face of the earth." Israelitish blood is no better than any other. God did not bless Ancient Israel because of their having Abraham's blood, but because of their being in Abraham's covenant. Hence St. Paul says: "They are not all Israel who are of Israel: neither, because they are Abraham's seed, are they all children: but, in Isaac shall thy seed be called. That is, it is not the children of the flesh that are the children of God: but the children of the promise are reckoned for a seed" (Rom. ix. 6, &c.). All who accept the Saviour as the promised Messiah, are, as St. Paul shows, "The children of Abraham (because), they are the children of the promise." Neither on historical, moral, nor Biblical grounds can I believe that the British (or English) are the lineal descendants of Ancient Israel.

1. History disproves our lineal descent from Ancient Israel, by proving us to be a fusion of at least a half-dozen races.

2. God's great natural law, that "all nations are made of one blood," disproves that there is any value in any kind of hereditary descent whatever, and hence it would be no benefit if we were descendants of Israel.

3. God's selecting the Jews, as a nation, was not intended to express any value in hereditary descent, but it was to environ the keeping of His religious covenant with greater historic care. The purpose of the old covenant was to prepare and authenticate the new covenant, and to introduce the world's Redeemer. As soon as its temporary and historic purpose was ended, this "middle-wall of partition" was broken down.

4. It is keeping God's covenant, and not hereditary descent, that is the ground of all God's promises, either under the Old or New Dispensation.

5. I believe, fully, all the grand things stated in the Banner, and other like papers, about Britain's greatness, but instead of ascribing this greatness to hereditary descent, or a more material and physical cause, I ascribe it solely to a moral cause, and that moral cause is, the predominating, Biblical Christianity of our nation, God still blessing most that nation which most faithfully keeps His covenant.

So far our opponent. We answer him thus. Our friend will only recognise, as evidence of the Identity of the British with Lost Israel, that which, historically, satisfies him that the Jews are the descendants of "the Ancient Jews." That is, he must be able to trace their descent step by step, historically, and recognise them by their religious rites and ceremonies. He must find Israel, in short, not "lost," but patent to the world by their history and religion. But God's Word, to which our Wesleyan minister bows, plainly declares that Israel, of the Ten Tribes, were to lose their nationality, and were no longer to be recognised as Hebrews! They were to be "Lo-Ammi"—"not God's people"; "swallowed up" by the nations; "mingled with them"; "lost sheep" (Hosea i. 9, 10; viii. 8; Ezek. xi. 15, 16; Amos ix. 9; Jer. l. 6, 17; Matt. x. 6; xv. 24). Such evidence as the minister demands, is refused by the nature of the case, and by the Providence of God. It is vain, then, for our friend to call for what God refuses, and refuse the only evidence He will grant.

Digitized by Google

The identifications in general are deemed, by our opponent, mere coincidences—pointless facts, without any probative value of any sort. The reason for this dictum seems to be that (1st) we British are a composite race—Roman, Saxon, Dane, Norman, and British. This objection remaining, nothing else will satisfy our minister. But we beg him to read Hosea ix. 17; Amos ix. 9, and Ezek. xi. 16, 17, and to ask himself whether or not these texts prove it to have been God's intention that the Tribes of Israel should become "wanderers among the nations," "scattered among them," "swallowed up by them," and, in fact, "lost" in their midst? Now, as it is certain from these Scriptures, that these so scattered, wandering tribes were finally to be gathered together in "the North country," and the "isles of the West," was it not the most natural thing in the world to find the scattered tribes converging, in the Providence of God, to one spot (Great Britain), and under various names and ethnic conditions, re-uniting, under their prophetic monarchy, in their "appointed place"? (2 Sam. vii. 10). This, accordingly, we find actually took place. The Saxons, Danes, Normans, and Ancient Britons, being Celts, and Teutons, or Goths, are declared, by our historians and philosophers, to have been of one and the same race; all Asiatics, all from Central Asia, and all of the same ethnic origin, though converging here under diverse names, and joined, in their migrations, to diverse tribes. (The Romans left no trace behind them, and were but a few centuries in Britain.)

The next objection arises from a surmise of our critic, for which he can surely find no authority in Scripture. "Israel's blessings," he declares, "were conditional on moral conduct and religion." Is that true? It is not true! It is contrary to the plain declarations of God's Word! The cluster of sworn promises to be found in Gen. xxii. 17, 18, had no condition attached to them whatever save this: that whereas Abraham had obeyed, therefore God, on oath, engaged to give him, unconditionally, what then and there He promised. When the Ten Tribes lapsed into gross idolatry, and were banished for their sins, their fate was sealed, according to the minister's view. But on the contrary, when Ephraim and Israel had been outcasted for gross idolatry for 134 years, even then God declared, "I am a Father to Israel, and Ephraim is My firstborn" (Jer. xxxi. 9). St. Paul knew better than our opponent, for he scouted the idea that God had "cast away His people." "The gifts and callings of God are without repentance," was his reply to those who opposed (Rom. xi. 1, 2, 29). Our opponent thinks Israel's blessings were transferable, and that "merit, such as ours, in diffusing moral and religious truths by Bible and Missionary Societies," can buy God's favour. What a view is this of God's unalterable purpose as to Israel! How low an estimate it presents of the value of His oath, covenants, and promises, which, being unconditional, can never change! In Mal. iii. 6 our opponent has his answer. "I am the Lord, I change not: therefore, ye sons of Jacob are not consumed."

But our minister makes another statement. "The fulfilment of the promises to the Ancient Jews" (!), he says, "was conditional on national obedience—but national disobedience would entail national ruin. Therefore" (seems to be the minister's logic), "the British prosper. They are, morally, worthy"! But this does not answer the tremendous question, how the just, and holy, and faithful God, having sworn to give Israel certain blessings, exclusively and for ever (Luke i. 55), can be just, and holy, and faithful, when He has transferred, en bloc, Israel's property, to the "moral" British, who, on the supposition advanced, are not Israelites at all? Our minister, with the Bible in his hands, tells us that no nation is great, because of "hereditary descent, but only because of moral worth"! Where did he learn this wondrous fact? The Israelites of old were a rebellious, recreant, wicked race. Deut. ix. 4—29, teaches us that! Yet God chose them, not for their excellence or moral worth, but for the reason stated in Deut. vii. 6—11, and the selection was to last for ever (2 Sam. vii. 23, 24; Judges ii. 1). The "afterseed" of Abraham were of Abraham's blood; that seed the Lord loved, and then made an "everlasting covenant" with them, according to His sovereign will and pleasure. The Lord Jesus Christ came to confirm that covenant in all points, being a Minister of the Circumcision for the truth of God (Rom. xv. 8). It is a fact, no doubt, that "not all Abraham's seed were counted as the children." Ishmael was excluded, and so were Keturah's offspring. "In Isaac" was the entail, and from him the Ten Tribes descended. Isaac and his seed were "the children of the promise," which is all that Rom. ix. 7 and 8 means. The Lord adds non-Israelite Gentiles to His people, and makes them a part of "the spiritual House" by faith, as Isa. lvi., and Gal. iii. 7, 27—29, declare.

These remarks and references fully cover the ground our minister erroneously takes up. Thereby he does dishonour to the Lord's faithfulness, oath, and covenants! "God is not a Man that He should lie, neither the Son of man that He should repent. . . . He hath not beheld iniquity in Jacob, neither hath He seen perverseness in Israel"; and this makes all the difference! The blood of Jesus Christ has sanctified and redeemed His people Israel, from, and to all eternity. What He has promised to His "chosen ones," He must needs perform! To Him be all the praise (Numb. xxiii. 19, 21).

ISRAEL'S SCRIPTURE AND PRAYER UNION.

THE number of cards now issued, including those in the hands of the local secretaries, is 1,459, no new members having joined since our last report.

The prayers of the Union are requested on behalf of a member who is seriously ill.

New members are requested, when writing for cards, to kindly state whether their names are to be entered as Mr., Mrs., or Miss, etc.

For the convenience of those members who wish to continue the daily reading, the following list of chapters for August is appended:—

1st ...	Acts	iii.	12th ...	Acts	xiv.	23rd ...	Acts	xxv.
2nd...	„	iv.	13th ...	„	xv.	24th ...	„	xxvi.
3rd ...	„	v.	14th ...	„	xvi.	25th ...	„	xxvii.
4th ...	„	vi.	15th ...	„	xvii.	26th ...	„	xxviii.
5th ...	„	vii.	16th ...	„	xviii.	27th ...	Rom.	i.
6th ...	„	viii.	17th ...	„	xix.	28th ...	„	ii.
7th ...	„	ix.	18th ...	„	xx.	29th ...	„	iii.
8th ...	„	x.	19th ...	„	xxi.	30th ...	„	iv.
9th ...	„	xi.	20th ...	„	xxii.	31st ...	„	v.
10th ...	„	xii.	21st ...	„	xxiii.
11th ...	„	xiii.	22nd...	„	xxiv.

The card of membership will be sent on receipt of three stamps.

The first and second series of Monthly Comments on the whole Bible, by Philo-Israel, may now be obtained in volume form. Price, in paper cover, 1s. 2d. each; in cloth 2s. each, post free.

The "Prayers for Daily Use," being a prayer for each day of the week, by Philo-Israel, are 1d., or 9d. per doz., postage extra.

The prayer of the Union, as on the Card of Membership, may now be obtained printed in larger type, price 1d. for three copies, post free; or 1s. per 100 for distribution. Address—Miss E. Sibbald, 3, Townshend-villas, Richmond, Surrey.

ERRATUM.—Page 314, column 2, line 30, read "of its truth."

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed: "Philo-Israel," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

SUBSCRIPTIONS. £ s. d.

Annual Subscription for one copy weekly (including the Twelve Double Numbers) post free 0 7 6
Two Copies (including Double Numbers) 0 13 6
Three Copies " " " 1 0 4
Four Copies " " " 1 5 6
Six Copies " " " 1 16 4

Post Office Orders to be made payable at the head office, St. Martin's-le-grand, London, to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C., or F. W. PARRY & Co., 29, Paternoster-row, London.

The Editor cannot undertake to return rejected MSS. unless stamps for the purpose be sent. Parties requiring an answer should enclose a stamp.

Contents Bills and Show Cards may be obtained on application to the Publishers.

Advertisements should be sent to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

Prepaid Advertisements are inserted at the rate of thirty words for 1s. 4d.

NEW BOOK BY DR. WILD.

Just Published, Price 3s., Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Lettered. Sent by Post on receipt of Published Price.

TALKS
FOR
THE TIMES.

BY JOSEPH WILD, M.A., D.D.,

Pastor of the Bond-st. Congregational Church, Toronto.

CONTENTS.—Chapter 1. A Gift of One Hundred and Ninety-Two Million Acres of Land. 2. The Return of the Jews to Palestine. 3. Folks that won't be Somebody. 4. The Four Prophecies of Egypt. 5. The Stone Kingdom and Dynamite; and the Orange Bill. 6. "144!" 7. "666!" 8. The Transit of Venus. 9. The Miracles of Antichrist; and the High Rock Image of Massachusetts, U.S. 10. The an who could not sleep, and what came of it. 11. The Rainbow. 12. London Destroyed, and Jerusalem a Seaport. 13. Liberalism. 14. A Graft without a Stock. 15. Mouldy Bread and an Oath. 16. A Tombstone Inscription. 17. Dog Lappers. 18. How to get Rich.

London: Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street.

Just published—Cloth, 2s. 6d.—a re-issue of

The Origin of Masonic Ritual and Tradition:

A Lecture on the Three Degrees, by BRO. WM. ROWBOTTOM, P.M., 1028, with facsimile of a very rare Masonic engraving published in 1789.

"Exquisitely clear and singularly correct in everything wherein I may be any authority or guide."—Professor PIAZZI SMYTH. "Will be found of considerable interest to many besides Masons."—Church Bells.

Oxford: S. Rowbottom and Son; London: R. Banks and Son, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C.; and F. W. Parry and Co., 29, Paternoster Row, E.C.

Price Five Shillings.—"Substantially and attractively got up, and profusely illustrated."—Oldham Chronicle.

Eildon Grange: A Tale.

By ANDREW CLARK, M.A., Vicar of St. Michael's, Oxford. "One of the most charming books. . . . The illustrations are full of playful humour."—Scotsman. "The book is undoubtedly a happy one."—The Oxford Magazine. "Both entertaining and bracing."—Dundee Advertiser.

Oxford: S. Rowbottom and Son; London: Hamilton, Adams and Co., 32, Paternoster Row, E.C.

☞ Ask for this Book at the Libraries.

WORKS BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

The History of the House of Israel. How They Were Lost and How They Were Found. Told for the children. Price 6d., cloth 1s.; post free 7d. and 1s. 1d. Fifth edition.

A Resume of the Scriptural Argument Proving the Identity of the British Race with the Lost Ten Tribes. Price 1d.; 6s. per hundred, postage 6d.

Anglo-Israelism. True, Not False. Being Philo-Israel's Reply to the Rev. Canon Bell's pamphlet, "Anglo-Israelism: True or False?" Price 1d., 6s. 6d. per 100. 16 pages, crown 8vo.

An Elementary Digest or Sketch of the Chief Facts and Teachings of the Great Pyramid of Egypt. Adapted to the Unlearned and Unscientific 56 pages. Illustrated with Diagrams, price 4d., post free 5d. 10th Thousand.

Our Identity: What it is Not; What it is; and Our Obligations To-day in Respect to it Being a Lecture recently delivered in London by Philo-Israel, and published by special request. Price 2d., a reduction for quantities.

Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

Published by
ROBERT BANKS AND SON.
Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C.

Postal Orders may be obtained at any Post Office in the United Kingdom for the following amounts: 1s., 1s. 6d., ½d. each; 2s., 2s. 6d., 3s., 3s. 6d., 4s., 4s. 6d., 5s., 7s. 6d., 10s., 10s. 6d., 1d. each; 15s., 20s., 1½d. each. They should be "crossed" City Bank, Ludgate Hill, E.C. Stamps received.

A MESSAGE TO THE CHURCH FROM THE NINETEENTH CENTURY. The last written work on the Identity of the Anglo-Saxon Race with Lost Israel. By the late BISHOP TITCOMB. Imperial 8vo., cloth, gilt, 3s.

BRITAIN IN HISTORY—ANCIENT AND MODERN; or, Proofs Linking Israel with Britain Throughout the Ages. By Mrs. G. A. ROGERS, Author of the "Coronation Stone," &c. Crown 8vo., 276 pp., cloth, gilt lettered, 3s. 6d.; sent post free for P.O.

THE TOWER OF EGYPT: the Types and Chronology of the Great Pyramid. By A. R. G. An Inquiry into our "Position in Time," by a re-consideration of the meaning of the symbolic passages of the Great Pyramid of Egypt. Illustrated with Diagrams. Crown 8vo., cloth, gilt lettered, 4s.; post free for P.O.

WHO ARE WE? AND WHAT IS OUR MISSION? By J. THORNHILL HARRISON. With seven Maps by the Woodbury Permanent Photo Process. In handsome cloth, gilt, 5s.; post free for P.O.

A CHRONOLOGICAL AND GEOGRAPHICAL TREE. A design Showing the Development of the British Power and the Affinity of the British Nation with the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel. On plate paper, 8d.; by post, 10d. Mounted on linen, with rollers, and varnished, 2s., post free.

ANGLO-ISRAEL TRACTS. Price ½d. each; 8 pp., royal 16mo. Assorted packet post free for 7 stamps. The tracts are well written, by the following Authors:—Rev. Bishop Titcomb, D.D.; Philo-Israel; W. S. Cavill; Douglas A. Onslow, J.P.; Mrs. G. Albert Rogers; "A E I"; Surgeon-General J. M. Grant, M.D.; Rev. Robert Douglas; Rev. C. W. Hickson.

TALKS FOR THE TIMES. By Rev. JOSEPH WILD, D.D., Author of the "Lost Ten Tribes," &c. Being 18 Sermons preached in Bond-street Congregational Church, Toronto. 345 pp., crown 8vo., cloth, gilt lettered, 3s.; free for P.O.

THE BRITISH NATION Proved to be the Remnant of Israel, and the Representatives of the Lost Ten Tribes. By J. H. WELDON, J.P., Author of "Britain and Prophecy." 66 pp., demy 8vo., 6d.; by post, 7d.

ENGLAND'S DUTY IN RELATION TO THE CHRISTIANS OF TURKEY. Being a true Solution of the Eastern Question. By the late JOHN WILSON, Author of "Our Israelitish Origin," &c. Price 6d., by post 7d.

Dr. JOSEPH WILD'S WORKS

The most useful works on the subject.

THE LOST TEN TRIBES

Price 3s., post free 3s. 3d.

'We have much pleasure in directing attention to this handsome volume. . . . We promise our readers that if they procure this work, and will peruse it, they will find 'Our Identity' discussed in a clear, novel, racy, and from an American point of view, which is sure to interest."—Banner of Israel.

THE FUTURE OF ISRAEL AND JUDAH.

Price 2s., post free 2s. 3d.

R. BANKS & SON, RACQUET-COURT, FLEET-ST.

Just Published, price 1d., 6 copies post free for Six stamps, 6/6 per 100, carriage paid.

FACTS AND PROBABILITIES

Respecting the Identity of the British and American Nations with the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel.

Compiled by DELTA.

London: ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-st.

HUMAN LIFE.—FIFTY YEARS' Record of Facts, Principles, and Discoveries (just published complete) Relating to the Improvement and Preservation of Human Life on Earth. Origin and true treatment of diseases. A series of articles by DR. SAMUEL BIRLEY, M.D., Ph.D. Book form, 50 pages. SENT FREE to every applicant by the publishers, GORDON B. MURRAY & CO., 50, Theobald's-road, Holborn, E.C. Write to-day

PIANOFORTES, Harmoniums, American Organs. Why buy at shops inferior made instruments, and pay large profits, when you can buy direct from the Maker High-class Instruments, and save 50 per cent. by so doing? Full value allowed for old Instruments in exchange as part payment. Write for Price Lists and Testimonials to G. LINSTEAD, 2, Oseney Crescent, Camden Road, London. Established 1874.

THE WATERS OF HERMON.

THE interesting circumstance of the re-production by modern science of these celebrated Waters of Antiquity, so famed in Biblical times, is one of the most important illustrations of the advance of the age. Differing from all other Waters they contain no mineral ingredients, so that the system, instead of being lowered by their use, is steadily built up, while the functions of life are restored to a healthy condition. And it is, therefore, with extreme gratification that this is now brought within the reach of the general public. The well-known curative properties of this famous medicine are promptly manifested in the following disorders:—Indigestion, Biliousness, Congestion of the Liver, Nausea and Vomiting, Disorders of the Stomach and Bowels and their consequences, Constipation, Piles, Flatulence, Repletion, Spasms, Discomfort or Pain after Meals, Pain Between the Shoulders, Pains in the Back and Loins, Cold in the Head, Coughs of various character, Difficulty of Breathing, Giddiness and Sick Headache, Effects of Alcohol, Overworked Brain, Affections of the Nerves, &c. Price 2s. 9d. per bottle, post free. THE WATERS OF HERMON DEPOT, 107, King Street, Hammersmith, London.

INVALUABLE REMEDY

SOUND, PURE, WHITE
TEETH!

Those who value these will try

CARBOLINE
(The Great Sanitary Tooth Paste).

1/6 & 2/6 per Pot.

Through Chemists, or post free from the Makers,

GEORGE & WELCH
WORCESTER.

Lancet writes:—"To save the teeth use a good carbolic daily."

LADIES!

WE will send a FULL-DRESS LENGTH of BEAUTIFUL CLOTH (for Good, Strong, Serviceable use) in any of the following colours, Carriage paid to any address for 10s. 6d. Colours:—Black, Blue, Fawn, Salmon, Russ da, Slate, Ruby, Brown, Grey, Claret, Sage, Old Rose, Terra-Cotta, Amber, Peacock, Tabac, Bronze, Myrtle, Drab, Olive, Grenat, Clay Green, Navy, Partridge, Heather, &c., &c. These wonderful Dress Lengths have gained a world-wide reputation for magnificence, cheapness and durability, having no equal.

The Lady's Pictorial says:—"They are excellent quality and very good value for the money."

Thousands of Testimonials from all parts of the world.

Ladies should write at once for Patterns, which may be had free, and need not be returned.

AN AMAZING OFFER!!—We shall give a very handsome Brocaded Silk Handkerchief with each dress-length ordered from us during this season. Write for patterns. LUTUS B. LEATHLEY, Armley, Leeds.

Certain HARNESS' Cure.

ELECTROPATHIC BELT
FOR DEBILITY

Mr. WILLIAM WHITTINGHAM, Chiswick Cottage, Surbiton Hill, writes:—"I have derived great benefit from wearing your Electropathic Belt. Its influence has been marvellous."

Guaranteed to generate a mild continuous current of Electricity, which speedily cures all Disorders of the Nerves, Stomach, Liver and Kidneys. Thousands of Testimonials. Pamphlet & Advice free on application to Mr. C. B. Harness, Consulting Electrician, the Medical Battery Co. Ltd.

Only Address,

52, OXFORD ST. LONDON, W.
(Corner of Rathbone Place.)

Call to-day, if possible, or write at once

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C. F. W. PARRY (late GUEST & Co.), 29 PATERNOSTER-ROW WEDNESDAY, AUG. 8, 1888. [All rights reserved.

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."
(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India.)

"And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the Forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS of the EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. XII., No. 607. Entered at Stationers' Hall.] WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 15, 1888. [PRICE ONE PENNY.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
The Complications in South Africa	325
The Stroud Journal's Correspondent Opposes	326
Anticipation of the Coming War-woe	327
The Growth of Great Britain. Part I.	328
The Juggernaut of Modern Europe	329
Our Identity in Christchurch, New Zealand	330
The Two Nations	330
Correspondence	331

THE COMPLICATIONS IN SOUTH AFRICA.

THE death, on July 14 last, of Sir John Henry Brand, the president of the Orange Free State, South Africa, occurs at a severe crisis in the history of the British Colonies there. For just at this moment the late Cetywayo's son, Dinizulu, has risen in rebellion, ostensibly against his old enemy, Usibepu, but really against the British as well, since it seems he attacks the latter's posts and troops whenever he has a chance. The Zulus are joining his standard from all quarters, even from Natal, and the strong probability is, that emboldened by our feeble policy now, and by the feebler way in which we submitted to the Boers at Majuba Hill, the Zulus think the time has come to strike once more for independence, and to get rid forthwith of the British annexation of Eastern Zululand, and of that of the Boers to the West. The third complication now coming to a head is the domestic question in the Transvaal. The British settlers are becoming the political majority, and feel inclined to press for a voice in the Volksraad. This is a demand which the Boers mean to resist, and if possible besides, to put down the British settlers and miners by prohibiting them the use of their own language in the courts and markets, and by forcing them to make Dutch their vernacular whether they can speak it or not. That the British majority of rough diggers will meekly submit to such proceedings is problematical, but the matter is becoming a burning question, requiring a settlement soon. The Bishop of Pretoria, reading an article on the subject in the London Morning Post, deprecates allusion to the race-hatred existing among the Boers towards the British, and thinks the past fully accounts for the fact. He believes "the solution of the present difficulties, the happiness of all, and the prosperity of the country, can only be accomplished by patience, sober thought, and mutual understanding." This of course is very well, but when the Boers are the aggressors, and being in the minority, talk about denying to the British folk the use of their own beautiful English language, the difficulty to overcome will be on the other side and not on that of a London editor, who plainly states the facts and deplores the punishment which will be the portion of the Boers if their folly is persisted in. It would be most desirable if President Krüger would carry out his promise of a Reform Bill which would give to the British and other miners a voice in the management of the adopted country in which they have taken root and built towns to live therein. But we doubt the willingness of the Boers to do this, since their overweening pride is such that they look down on British settlers as belonging to a race they have defeated in war, and whom they can afford henceforth to despise, since just now they are unarmed and unprotected. Race-rivalry in short, in spite of the peaceful words of the Bishop of Pretoria, is at its height in the Transvaal; and consequently the fact constitutes one of the burning questions of South Africa—one of its imminent complications. What most men desire, and what is likely to come to pass, is, that the Boer or Dutch race will finally merge into the British, and so the present rivalry will terminate in a peaceful amalgamation under the British flag. The Dutch flag can never domineer over its rival, for the latter belongs to Israel. To that race God has given at the Cape and elsewhere pre-eminence, wealth, power, energy, and Christian grace. The Boers have no pre-eminence in numbers or other quality. Of wealth they have none. When nearly bankrupt as a people, we saved them, not long since, from the consequences. Now the discovery by the British of gold, which was always close under the feet, but was never reached by the hands of the Boers, has given to the former untold wealth. A mere fraction of this passes into the National Boer Treasury and has made it comparatively rich. Without inherent energy, wealth, or the Christian graces which are God's good gifts to Israel, the Boers can never maintain a position of supremacy in the Transvaal, as matters stand to-day.

The late Sir John Brand was the style of man which it is hoped may result from the fusion of the two races now struggling for the mastery in the South African Provinces. He was a Dutchman by birth, an English barrister by profession, and lastly, "a Cape Colonist of unchallenged loyalty." He loved his Dutch countrymen at the Cape, but saw, at the same time, that they could only prosper in union with the British Empire in South Africa. In 1863 he was elected President of the Orange Free States, and for friendly services rendered to this country he was knighted by the Queen some years ago. His loss will be greatly felt, and is a calamity at the present moment, since he had the confidence of all classes, and saw clearly that the Dutch element could only prosper as it finally threw in its lot with the British Empire. His policy lately, therefore, was opposed to President Krüger's in the matter of railways and tariffs, and in favour of that of the Capetown Conference. The death of such a man, however, will not be so much felt in respect to President Krüger's anti-British propositions, since the Orange Free State burghers are said to be as a mass favourable to the Capetown policy, and averse from joining Krüger in his insane idea of destroying the British influence in South Africa, and keeping the Continent altogether exclusively for the Africander. Under any circumstances, in the face of so much that is alarming and uncertain in South Africa, it is clear that the power of the British Government on the spot ought now to be increased but not reduced. We are glad to know that the battalion of the 3rd Rifle Regiment now in Egypt is to be transferred to Zululand, and more artillery should follow. To be unarmed in the midst of such people as the native tribes of Africa may be cheap and heroic, but not so is India retained. There British power rests on a solid foundation of swords and bayonets. In South Africa it must be so too, till such a population of British and Boers, in indissoluble union, has been created as will make resistance to the paramount authority impossible. All these events and changes, perplexing as they seem, point one way—to Israel's final supremacy in South Africa. The uprising in Zululand will teach our Government a lesson: that native races, if subdued at all, will only yield to force, and that force costs money. They must either spend it and stay, or save it by retiring altogether from the land. The trouble in the Transvaal will continue a trouble till the advancing Anglo-Saxon tide numerically overwhelms the Boers, and teaches them that fusion is the only remedy left for a problem that the sword in their hands will never solve.

Digitized by Google

The death of Sir Joseph Brand at this juncture will probably hasten the settlement of the question pending in the Transvaal, and lead the Boers to see that union with Britain, and not war, will lead to greatness, wealth, and empire. The South African Colonies, with the Boer republics, have a grand future before them, but the complexion of the whole must and will be British, since to them, being Israel, God has given supremacy, power, dominion, wealth, and blessing from on high: all those good things in short at His right hand which He promised on oath to give "to Abraham and his seed for ever." Therefore, let Israel praise the Lord!

"THE STROUD JOURNAL'S" CORRESPONDENT OPPOSES.

UNDER the head of "Anglo-Israel" a correspondent of the Stroud Journal in two consecutive numbers in April gives reasons why Our Identity cannot have his support. The question of the loss of the Ten Tribes, he maintains, "is one that has been invented in the present century, and was never presented as a difficulty to the men who lived nearest to the times when the Ten Tribes lost their prominent position in the history of the chosen people." Esdras, he declares, was the sole ancient writer who states they were "lost," in ch. xiii. 39—47. His authority he considers nil. He believes that the Old Testament affords proof that before Israel's captivity numbers of the Ten Tribes had joined Judah (2 Chron. xi. 13, 16; xv. 9; xxx.). As the Assyrian captivity only took away 27,280 persons, according to the Assyrian records, and Samaria was never really depopulated, according to the Religious Tract Society's Biblical Atlas and Gazetteer; the 12,000 over and above the 30,000 who are enumerated as belonging to the Tribes of Judah, Benjamin and Levi in Ezra ii. 64 must have belonged, he says, to the Israelites. Ezra calls them "the children of Israel." Therefore it is plain, says our objector, that in Ezra's time many of Israel were living mixed with the Jews, and many more of both were we know left in the land of their captivity. He argues, therefore, that there is no "lost" House of Israel, to find; especially because Zechariah in ch. viii. 13, addresses both Houses, and chap. ix. 2, admits the existence of all the tribes in his day. The Virgin Mary's and Zacharias' hymns further mention "Israel," and our Lord Himself speaks of "the lost (!) sheep of the House of Israel" and St. Paul as well as St. James recognise, in Acts xxvi. 7 and James i. 1, the existence in their day, of the Twelve Tribes in union, existing under Moses' religion (!) The opponent quotes Dr. Lightfoot (one of the Puritan divines) in his "Hebrew and Talmudical Exercitations on 1 Cor. xiv." to show that in his opinion the Gospel reached the Ten Tribes in their Asiatic domiciles, as well as other nations there. Being known in B.C. 500 in Asia as a civilized, educated people how could these same tribes have been "the wild, savage, idolatrous people that we find our Celtic and Teutonic ancestors to have been when we first hear of them!" He opposes the idea that the Celts, Norseman, Danes, and Northmen, could all belong to the tribes of Israel, became "the Celts belonged to the Judo-Germanic race (sic) as their language proves." They came from the East, long before all historical records, and settled in the West of Europe. The Celts and Germans, he says, were known in Europe at the very time that the Israelites were travelling Eastwards from Palestine, and were thereafter settled in Elam, Media, &c., for 1,000 years.

This new opponent then takes up the philological difficulty, and says it is decisive against the Celts and Teutons being descended from Ephraim, Manasseh, and Zebulun; his grounds being those which we have met with scores of times, and which he promises to open up afresh for us at a future date. He concludes by declaring that "the Celts and Germans were known in Europe while Israel and Judah were still in Palestine (that is, prior to B.C., 740).

Such is an imperfect rèsumé of divers reasons against our views, with most of which we are all quite familiar. The difficulty the case presents is, that this new opponent has read none of the answers to his arguments existing; has seen nothing of Bishop Titcomb's writings, or of the many articles in our own journal which have appeared to contradict similar arguments to his, from time to time. He sits down and repeats the same objections which were made by previous writers years ago, and expects us de novo to supply him with satisfactory answers for his own information, or give up our contention on perusal of his somewhat crude objections. We propose nevertheless to give our opponent some arguments which may serve to enlighten him in regard to his difficulties; and lead him to search for and peruse more elaborate works dealing with the very points he now advances as new. In regard to "Lost Israel," it is manifest that the Ten Tribes were, on the opponent's own admission, in existence in A.D. 500 in Central Asia. Are they there now? No one ventures on that statement? Besides, God's word declares that Ephraim shall be found in the West (Hosea xi. 10; Isa. xlix. 12, xxiv. 15). In islands afar off, in a locality of their own, in the North country (Jer. iii. 18, xxxi. 10), sown as "Joseph and Ephraim" among the peoples in far countries, an increasing, Christian, rejoicing, redeemed and God-blessed people (Zech. x. 6—9). Until such a people as this be found and recognised as the Ten Tribes it is idle to say the latter are not a "lost" people, but mingled at this moment with the Jews! The latter deny the fact, but declare in plain terms, that their brethren of Ephraim are "lost," yet destined to be found again; and they pray constantly in their synagogues for the discovery and restoration to God's favour of these very "Lost" Tribes, to complete their own happiness and to facilitate their own return to their land in the foretold reunion with them. We admit with the opponent that the Ten Tribes were not "lost" to history till the fifth century A.D., and therefore most of his arguments are devoid of force. It is clear, on his own showing, though his assertions are somewhat contradictory and confusing, that Celts and Teutons first were known in Europe (as Sharon Turner also declares) in B.C. 600, which was long after the deportation of the Ten Tribes (B.C. 740 to 678). It is quite possible therefore that those Celts and Teutons might have had wandering Israelites in their company advancing Westwards towards their goal, the islands there. There is no impossibility, but much probability, in the supposition that many of a nomad race like the Israelites should have deserted their lands at the first hint of the coming Assyrian invasion prior to B.C. 740. It is clear from the Scriptures that Dan early disappeared from the Northern Israelite nation, and there is nothing to show that many others of the remaining Tribes of Ephraim did not also follow their example. In those early days the Ten Tribes were an idolatrous, therefore degraded people. And their savage habits, if such they were, would be hardly surprising after 1,100 years of travel Westward from Palestine, fighting their way step by step towards "their appointed place" of safety here.

Digitized by Google

The philological argument has been long ago exploded. Affinity of language is no proof of affinity of race, but only of contact. Hebrews speaking the Aryan languages are common enough to-day, and no one is surprised, for the Jews are in contact with those who speak those languages. Why then the Ten Tribes, cast out among a people speaking an Aryan or Indo-European tongue, should be expected to keep up their Hebrew, but eschew the language of their conquerors, we fail to see. Hebrews of the Ten Tribes were to be mixed and mingled with the nations of the earth, as Ezek. xi. 16, 17; and Amos ix. 9, tell us. So mingled experience tells us they would speedily (within 200 years for certain) forget their own vernacular, and adopt that of their conquerors or companions. The thing has been done over and over again in modern days, and we wonder at anyone at this time of day bringing forward philology as a bar to our Anglo-Israelite claims.

ANTICIPATIONS OF THE COMING WAR-WOE.

THE words of our blessed Lord in Luke xxi. 25, 26, R.V., are singularly verified by the state of anxious expectancy of trouble which our public writers freely express at the present time in their writings. The Times and Standard, for instance, on May 4, made no attempt to conceal their alarm. Men are verily "in perplexity for the roaring of the sea, and of the billows; men are fainting for fear and for expectation of the things that are coming upon the world, or on the inhabited earth" (marg.) Seeing that, "the powers of the heavens shall be shaken," this somewhat figurative language, explained by other portions of the word, lead one to anticipate a general feeling of alarm and anxiety as likely to pervade society in view of the approaching terrors about to fall on the inhabited earth; while Israel's safety is guaranteed by the call to her to observe these things, and when they see them, "to look up and lift up their heads, because their redemption draweth nigh" (v. 28, R.V.). The Times on the 4th of May, devoted the leading article to the consideration of the perplexing, troublous, aspect of the times, and plainly looked for the coming continental war as near at hand. It admitted that nothing alarming had yet happened, though we had entered on the month of May. Still, the writer held that the condition of European affairs at this moment inspires widespread uneasiness, if not actual apprehension.

These words are almost a paraphrase of our Lord's, above quoted; and are an unwitting proof that His prophecy is under fulfilment to-day. The condition of Europe, the leader went on to say, is such, that while it is easy to hope, it is difficult to find grounds for positive and definite anticipations of a cheerful kind. Wherever we turn we find unsettled weather. Although no storm has actually burst, the political meteorologist cannot but confess that he has little ground for a confident forecast. It cannot be said that any progress has been made towards the peaceful solution of the complications which menace the peace of the world. The writer proceeded to notice the signs of disturbances in Roumania, which had not begun yet because obviously the parties were not yet ready. It seemed likely to the Times that South-Eastern Europe would be the gathering ground of the coming political storm, and there already were symptoms of a large crop of disturbances which may precipitate a catastrophe upon the largest scale. The leader describes the present state of affairs as one of general confusion and uncertainty, almost in the words of Scripture; but declares, inter alia, in regard to France, that although General Boulanger may not desire or intend war, Boulangism, as the negation of constitutional Government, and as the registered failure of principle, inevitably means war. Such war, we conceive, cannot be waged with this country, which has no quarrel with France, or France with her, but solely with Germany or Italy, who are her natural rivals and are armed to the teeth to withstand her restless ambition.

The rabid French publication, "Down with England!" which has already been mentioned in these pages, certainly makes it appear that the French are our relentless enemies still, and that they nourish schemes of revenge against us to spoil and rob us, like Gog-Magog of the prophecy of Ezekiel (xxxviii. and xxxix.).

We need not, however, pay much attention to such writers as these. They paint pictures of "the Downfall of England," the defeat of our navies, the invasion of our country, the occupation of London, and the partition of the empire; the wish being the father to the thought, and so draw largely on their imagination, for their facts. We rather point to the admissions of our foreign enemies that with Gibraltar, Malta, Egypt, and, Cyprus we dominate the Mediterranean and the Levant (p. 7); that the Red Sea, sealed by Perim, Aden, and Socotra, is a British Lake: and that French conquests in the Chinese Sea are neutralised by our action there! It is easy to write imaginary accounts of naval actions in which the British Squadrons are utterly destroyed, and 100,000 men thus comfortably conveyed across to Hastings, landed, and allowed to march safely on London, to capture and hold it to ransom! All this, however, negatives the existence of the God of Israel, and His promises to us His people, located in the "Isles of the West," the "appointed place" of their safe domicile, according to 2 Sam. vii. 10. Anything is possible if God and His covenants can possiby be ignored. But they cannot be contemned or put aside! The French have never been able to stand before us, because God is not on their side to fight for them, but on ours always to give us the victory! Their previous attempt to invade England under Bonaparte was a failure. At Waterloo their cause was ruined by Wellington, their effort to hold India against us was defeated. They lost Canada when we demanded its surrender; the Mauritius when we fought them for it; and lately Egypt by their own laches when it was in their power to stay there. It is not possible for them to reverse all God's plans and purposes towards His people Israel by destroying and conquering them in this island fortress He has provided for them, and where His Almighty arm defends them. Three hundred years ago this very year, He scattered Spain's naval power when they attempted to subdue us by their "Invincible Armada;" and the French, too, will find now, that defenceless as we seem to be in their sight, God can protect us in our "careless and confident" occupation of our Islands, and can fight with our ships, and against theirs, if ever they make the foolish attempt again to fight us at sea or to land on our shores to conquer us. "He that toucheth you," He declared regarding Israel (in Zech. ii. 8, R.V.), "toucheth the apple of His eye!" Such gatherings against our Empire and its Metropolis as the French dream about may very possibly take place but Isa. liv. 15, R.V., declares that they will never have God's blessing or encouragement, nay, that those who so "gather together against Israel, shall fall" because of her!

Digitized by Google

In short, a very different fate awaits the French nation and government to that so joyously depicted in the pamphlet in question, "The Downfall of England." They have to be cast into the furnace of an unparalleled war, not with British-Israel, but with Gentile Germany, Austria and Italy. In that contest all these nations alike will find that God is against them and that He has gathered them together to judge them. The prophecies of Isa. xxvi. 20, 21; Zeph. iii. 8; Rev. xvi. 18, R.V., show that the national troubles the continental nations are about to experience are unparalleled in the history of the world and that from that scourge Israel will be entirely exempt, "because of the anointing." (Isa. x. 27, R.V.). Let Israel therefore praise the Lord for His distinguishing mercies to His people and for His saving grace!

THE GROWTH OF GREAT BRITAIN.

THE following sermon was delivered by Rev. Dr. Wild, in Toronto, on December 4, 1887:—

PART I.

"Enlarge the place of thy tent, and let them stretch forth the curtains of thine habitation; spare not, lengthen thy cords, and strengthen thy stakes, for thou shalt break forth on the right hand and on the left; and thy seed shall inherit the Gentiles, and make the desolate cities to be inhabited."—ISA. liv. 2, 3.

These prophetic words apply to literal Israel, who at this time had been in captivity in Central Asia for several years. They are spoken of, we see, after their captivity, as a people cast off, as a people cast away, as a people desolate and as a people divorced. In Isaiah l. i, the prophet tauntingly said to them, "Thus saith the Lord, Where is the bill of your mother's divorcement, whom I have put away." The Jews or House of Judah were still in Palestine. They had not yet been carried captive, so in Jeremiah iii. 8, we read, "And I saw, when for all the causes whereby backsliding Israel committed adultery I had put her away, and given her a bill of divorce, yet her treacherous sister Judah feared not, but went and played the harlot also." The prospect of Israel at this time in captivity seemed very gloomy, and many prophecies and precious promises were predicted of this people for fulfilment. Now, how could they be fulfilled, how could they ever enjoy these promises, being cast out from Palestine, and apparently under the anger of God? We answer, God's ways are not our ways; He is wonderful in devising and bringing to pass the great and mighty things foretold by His holy prophets, and He has actually revealed those things unto them and unto us in His word, things that are to be fulfilled. He tells us, for instance, in Hosea ii. 14, 15; "Therefore, behold, I will allure her, and bring her into the wilderness, and speak comfortably unto her. And I will give her her vineyards from thence, and the Valley of Achor for a door of hope; and she shall sing there as in the days of her youth, and as in the day when she came up out of the land of Egypt." This is what he says concerning Israel, and historians like Sharon Turner and others, who have treated on the origin and the migration and the general history of the Saxon race, help us to see very much how these things have been literally fulfilled; for the wandering Celti, the Scot, the Cimri, the Saxon, the Dane, the Angles, the Jutes, and the Normans of old history are none other than these wandering tribes of Israel—wandering through the wilderness of Europe to their appointed home and resting place in the British Isles.

In their island home they were to grow in numbers and power after a certain time. They were to lose much of their tribal distinctions, and fuse together, consolidate together, and become one strong mighty people and nation; all that history tells they have done. When this should have been accomplished, the Lord promises to break the divorce, and again to enter into a marriage relation with Israel. Hosea ii. 19, "And I will betroth thee unto Me forever; yea, I will betroth thee unto Me in righteousness and in judgment, and in lovingkindness, and in mercies." I believe that marriage took place at what we call the Reformation, and from that date to this, this people must be a conquering, prosperous and supreme people to answer the will and purposes of God. Nor will there ever be another divorce, for He has betrothed Israel unto Himself forever. In this new state God promises to bless them with many temporal and spiritual blessings. One of these blessings is to be specially noticed, namely, that He would greatly multiply their seed. Now, is it not remarkable that for the first 1,600 years since our Lord the British people barely held their own in number, influence or power? Just, for instance, as we find the House of Judah, or the Jews of to-day—they only number about the same as those that were living in the time of our Saviour—from 7,000,000 to 9,000,000 in all the world. Why have they not increased? Why have they not decreased? God has kept them just as they are, and He kept Israel for about 1,600 years with about the same number, and then He promises that when He should enter into the marriage relation their offspring should become as the stars of heaven and the sands of the sea. Now, of a prophecy like this it is easy to acertain whether it has been fulfilled or not, because it will be a perfect break in the order of nature; so that no man, whether he be Agnostic, Infidel or Christian, can refuse to see it. A man could do nothing, of course, with the Jews—why they should remain only 7,000,000 to 9,000,000 for 1800 years. He has no argument for it. Everything is against him; it is simply that it is God's will. But look now at the rapid increase of Israel, whom we take to be the British, and this is best seen by a comparison of them with a few of the other lively nations around.

Take, for instance, Germany; they double every 100 years in population; the Russians double every 100 years; the French double every 140 years; the Italians double every 135 years; the Spanish double every 112 years; the British double in the British Isles every fifty-five years, and in the Colonies with the United States they double every twenty-five years. The mean average, then, of these Ten Lost Tribes in their doubling quality is every forty-one years. Well might the prophet utter the words in the verse preceding my text: "Sing, O barren; thou that didst not bear; break forth into singing, and cry aloud, thou that didst not travail with child; for more are the children of the desolate than the children of the married wife, saith the Lord." Now, the desolate here, you see, means Israel, and the married wife here means Judah or the Jews, and cannot anyone see that we are more than they. Take the descendants of the Ten Lost Tribes in Britain, her Colonies, and in the United States, and we are over 100 millions, while they (the Jews) remain at from seven to nine millions. What do you think of that? "The children of the desolate shall be more than the children of the married wife," He says; and there it is all right. It is just as He said it would be, and it is so patent that not a man could deny it. You can readily see when this prophesied increase began to be fulfilled, more room would be wanted for their descendants, hence the exhortation of my text, which is a very beautiful one, you see, "Enlarge the place of thy tent, and let them stretch forth the curtains of thy habitations; spare not; lengthen thy cords, and strengthen thy stakes; for thou shalt break forth on the right hand and on the left; and thy seed shall inherit the Gentiles, and make the desolate cities to be inhabited." So, seeing that they were going to multiply, according to the prophecy, He said, You will want more room, you cannot live in the tent you have already; enlarge it, and give yourself room in the world. These words would forcibly and most beautifully express the idea to an Oriental mind familiar with tents, would it not? and equally so to us if we have the slightest idea of Oriental customs.

Digitized by Google

The tribe of Manasseh swarmed off from the old nest in the British Isles and formed the United States, for of all the tribes Manasseh alone was to be a separate, distinct and great people; hence there can only to the world's end ever be one English-speaking nation outside of the British Empire. That is hard on the Fenians, because they cannot succeed. There is just one in prophecy assigned to go forth from the old roof, and only one has gone forth ; and out of sixty-seven other colonies there has never been one single instance nor will there be one that will leave. But even when they did leave the old nest and set up for themselves, their first home the British Isles, became too narrow by reason of the inhabitants, so we read in Isaiah xlix. 19, " For thy waste and thy desolate places and the land of thy destruction shall even now be too narrow by reason of the inhabitants, and they that swallowed thee up shall be far away. The children which thou shalt have after thou hast lost the others shall say again in thine ears, The place is too straight for me; give place to me that I may dwell." You see the beauty of it. That is just what they are crying; they are too crowded there. It is evident that if God promised to make the seed of Jacob a multitude He would also open up their way for new territory, that they might have room to dwell.

(To be continued.)

THE JUGGERNAUT OF MODERN EUROPE.

FREDERICO GARLANDA, an Italian, contributes an interesting article to the New York Independent on "The Military Strength of Europe at the Dawn of 1888," which contains some remarkable statistics, revealing the awful possibilities of a European war, should all these mighty forces come in conflict. We paragraph the principal figures given by the writer:—

Spain in time of war can muster an army of 869,000 men and 134 ships.

Turkey has 12,000 officers, 170,000 men, 30,000 horses, and but a small navy.

The Russian Empire has at hand 48,000 officers and two million men, half-a-million horses, and 142 ships.

The Austro-Hungarian Empire has 43,774 officers, a million-and-a-half of men, 200,000 horses, and 106 ships.

France too can muster over two million men in case of war, while she has an exceptionally strong navy of over 400 ships.

Italy has a total force, of the standing army, men on leave, and militia, of 32,248 officers and 2,475,533 men, in addition to 235 ships.

The English army has now under arms 218,557 men, with 24,000 horses and 624 guns. The navy, the strongest in the world, numbers nearly 700 ships.

Germany's total force reaches the enormous number of six million men! The recent bill passed by the Reichstag provided for bringing 700,000 more men under arms; the above being the total with these figures added. Her navy consists of 183 boats.

Sig. Garlanda concludes as follows:—"This array of figures may have tired out the reader, I fear, and proved dry and uninteresting enough; but only at first sight they may appear dry. Just look at them a while, and you will see with what a ghastly light they appear circumfused. Think not of the waste of wealth and toil they represent—a waste which is part imagination, but yet is the least damage. Think, on the contrary, of these millions, no one of whom can call himself a free man, as no one is the free master of his own life, but may be summoned from day to day to imperil it for a cause in which he does not believe. Think of the rivers of human blood that will run when such forces come to clash; think of men's brotherhood destroyed, and crops of hatred sown to be reaped with bloody scythes by the coming generations. Alas! poor Europe! America, on her part, can once more enjoy that which Lucrece calls a god-like pleasure: to watch, secure from the shore, the raging sea, foaming, beaten, torn by the angry waves."—The Canadian Advance, March 7, 1888.

So far the Italian. We hardly think our modest 218,557 men and 24,000 horses, with 624 guns, can be deemed an excessive force when compared with the millions of men whom the six European continental nations named, are employing to fly at each other's throats. We have possessions in all parts of the earth to defend, Gates innumerable, and a sea-borne commerce to protect, for which our 700 ships of war are hardly sufficient. Ours is a defensive force; those of the continental nations are offensive as well. The peace of the world will never be disturbed by our petty army of 220,000 men! As to our Navy, though it is the strongest in the world, it is all needed, and is none too large to protect freedom, civil and religious liberty, as well as Protestantism, from the attacks of those ruthless enemies who would, if our ships were to disappear from the ocean, make short work of these, and of our commercial Navy, our Gates, our Colonies, and our Heathen Empire too!

Our Italian writer envies the peaceful and secure position of the American States. But if he were to study Our Identity he would see that to this country too (being Israel) it is given to enjoy in peace and safety the "appointed place" of domicile, what time the nations of the continent are being decimated by the scourge of war, the results of God's wrath and indignation upon them for allowed national sin, for idolatry, and for refusal to obey the Gospel of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, once freely offered to them each, but rejected by all. "Alas! poor Europe!" is the cry of the Italian, who realises the horrors of the coming desolation! But he has only to read the Word of God, to find that these things are all provided for there, and their incidence on "yonder ill-consolidated Europe," predicted even in the time of Zephaniah, the prophet of B.C. 630 (chap. iii. 8), repeated by our Lord Himself in Luke xxi. 26, R.V., and reiterated by St. John-the-Divine in Rev. xvi. 18, R.V., in words that correspond exactly with the forecast of the coming storm made by Signor Garlanda. For Israel the Lord had quite another message, "because of the anointing" (Isa. x. 27). To them He promises protection and safety while the indignation is having its effect. "Come, My people," He said in Isa. xxvi. 20, 21, R.V., "enter thou into thy chambers, and shut thy doors about thee; hide thyself for a little moment until the indignation be overpast. For behold the Lord cometh forth out of His place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity. The earth also shall disclose her blood, and shall no more cover her slain." The plain meaning of this prophecy seems to be that in the coming unexampled time of trouble, war, and sorrow, which will overtake the non-Israelite Gentile races of the earth, the House of Israel, the British people, will be protected by the Lord Himself, hidden as by the hollow of His hand, and brought safely through the terrors and afflictions of that dreadful period, as Noah and his sons were safeguarded, what time God's wrath, operating by water, utterly destroyed the then world lying in the wicked one, during the "little moment" that the avenging waters were let loose upon the earth and its inhabitants.

Our military forces are so contemptible in number compared with the Continent's 14 millions, that a London paper, discoursing on its small proportions and large diffusion, remarked that "the thin red line was now so attenuated, as to have almost reached vanishing point." Our true defence, in short, being Israel, is the strong arm of the Lord our God, but not at all our troops, our guns, horses, or ships of war. This is the lesson God seems to be teaching the nations of the earth by our example. Their millions of soldiery will only serve to complete their own destruction. But our feeble "thin red line" will show by its attenuation that God is our Rock, our Fortress, and Deliverer, and that we rest on Him for our safety and security, but not at all on the arm of flesh. To Him be all the praise!

THE editor of a Japanese paper has received directly from all Protestant churches of Japan their statistics for the past year, which he gives in comparison with the three preceding years, by which the marvellous growth appears in that time of 151 churches from 38, of 11,606 members from 3,769, and the contributions over £3,725 from £2,196.

Digitized by Google

OUR IDENTITY IN CHRISTCHURCH, NEW ZEALAND.

We take the following notices from The Press of Christchurch, N. Z., of May 4th, and the Lyttleton Times, of May 18th, last, respectively:—

"British-Israel Association.—The Sydenham branch of this Association held its usual fortnightly meeting on Tuesday evening. Mr. T. M. Gee, President, was in the chair. After some routine business the president read from the Banner of Israel some favourable notices of the Association's work. A discussion afterwards took place as to the application of the term 'Israel' to the House of Judah. The general opinion was that it was so applied in several places in Scripture. Mr. McHaffie promised to read a paper at the next meeting on 'The British in Relation to the Territorial Promises made to Abraham.' Before the meeting closed a number of leaflets on British-Israelism were given out for distribution."

"Sydenham British-Israel Association.—This Association met on Tuesday evening; the president in the chair. A hearty vote of thanks was passed to Mr. S. Smart for his gift of pamphlets on British-Israelism for public distribution. Mr. McHaffie read a paper on 'The Relation of the British to the Territorial Promises made to Abraham.' In the discussion which ensued, it was pointed out that the descendants of Abraham were to spread in all directions, and that the Anglo-Saxon race alone had done this. It was arranged that the subject for discussion next meeting should be 'The Chinese Question, Considered from the British-Israel Standpoint.'"

Our readers will note with satisfaction that our colonial friends at any rate are up and doing in New Zealand; and that they have qualified members in the Sydenham Association able and willing to treat the subject with knowledge and discretion. We should like to know how they regard "the Chinese Question from the British-Israel standpoint," as we confess that at this distance it seems a complicated puzzle which hardly appears capable of solution from our point of view.

THE TWO NATIONS.

Stone-blind is the only thing that can be said of them who, reading the promises of the Most High God, and seeing their manifest wholesale literal fulfilment in the British Folk and Empire, do not see that the answer to the question, Where are the Tribes of Israel? is that they are in Britain and the dependencies of Britain.

But, then, arises the further natural and obvious question, if that be so, what about the great Anglo-Saxon folk of the United States? How comes it that they, our kith and kin, one with us in traditions, history, language, literature, law, freedom, love of righteousness, and the fear of God, are yet separate from us, second only to us in power and influence, in some things barely second?

The answer to the further question clinches the answer to the first, and makes it clear as the sun in heaven that the Two Nations, the whole great Anglo-Saxon folk together, are the very Israel of God, Israel of the House of Ephraim, of Samaria, of the Assyrian captivity—Israel that separated from the Jews (that is, Judah) twenty-eight hundred years ago. The very root of the matter is that, by the word of Yehova,* a time should come when one great tribe should separate itself, when there should be two nations yet one Israel; until the final reunion of the whole thirteen tribes, including Judah, or the Jews, in the end of the days, when one King should be King to them all.

It is written that though Reuben was the firstborn of Israel, forasmuch as he sinned, his birthright, that is the heir-ship, was given to the sons of Joseph, and the genealogy is not to be reckoned after the birthright. "For Judah prevailed above his brethren, and of him came the prince; but the birthright was Joseph's." The sons of Joseph were Manasseh, the elder, and Ephraim, the younger. It is to be noted that everywhere in the descent of the Elect Generations, a younger is set before the elder, precisely that the purpose of God according to election should stand, not of works, but of Him that calleth. So here, in the transaction in which the heir-ship was conferred on the sons of Joseph, Israel on his deathbed, though his eyes were dim for age guided his hands wittingly, and laid his right hand on Ephraim the younger, and his left upon Manasseh the firstborn, thus making over both the sign of the cross. "And he said, Let my name, that is the name of Israel, be named on them, and the name of my fathers: and let them grow into a multitude in the midst of the earth. But it displeased Joseph that his father had laid his right hand on the head of Ephraim, and he sought to remove his father's hand to Manasseh's head; and he said, Not so, my father, for this is the firstborn. But his father refused, and said, I know my son, I know;—he also, that is Manasseh, shall become a people, and he also shall be great. Howbeit his younger brother shall be greater than he, and his seed shall become a multitude (or fulness, or filling-up) of nations."

About thirty-six centuries passed before the Two Nations stood in their strength before the world. But it came at last. Yehova is not slack concerning His promise as some count slackness. Meanwhile the word of Yehova by His prophets had throughout the ages endorsed and ratified the headship of Ephraim, by directing their message to him as representing the tribes his companions. Of all those wondrous messages, wondrous by reason of their fulfilment to yod and tittle by means the most complex and unexpected, none is more wondrous than this by the mouth of Isaiah, "Lift up thine eyes round about, and behold. All these gather themselves together, and come to thee. "As I live," saith Yehova, "thou shalt surely clothe thee with them all as with an ornament, and gird thyself with them like a bride. For, as for thy waste and thy desolate places, and thy land that hath been destroyed, surely now shalt thou be too strait for the inhabitants. The children which thou shalt have, after thou hast lost the other, shall say again in thine ears, The place is too strait for me: give place to me that I may dwell. Then shalt thou say, Who hath begotten me these, seeing I have lost my children, and am desolate?"

Seven is the number of Life. In the year of Sevens, 1777, the American Plantations and Colonies cut themselves adrift from the leading-strings of the "august mother of empires," and became the United States, became a people, have become also great. Howbeit Britain is greater; and her seed has become a fulness of nations. Since the separation, her empire has grown by huge leaps and bounds, her colonies have grown into nations, the company of nations promised to Israel. She cried that she had lost her children, and was desolate. But the children which she has had since she had lost the other have again and again said in her ears, and with a loud cry are now saying, "The place is too narrow for us; we have not room to dwell." Her children from beyond sea gather themselves, and come to her. She clothes her with them as with an ornament. As a bride she is girt with them. At the Col-Inderies we saw it with our eyes.

There is also this by the same prophet:—"Sing, O barren, thou that didst not bear; break forth into singing; for more are the children of the desolate than of the married wife, saith Yehova. Enlarge the place of thy tent, and let them stretch forth the curtains of thine habitations. Spare not. Lengthen thy cords, and strengthen thy tent pegs. For thou shalt spread abroad on the right hand and on the left, and thy seed shall possess the nations and make the desolate cities to be inhabited." Men may deny that the Two Nations of the Anglo-Saxon folk are Israel, but they cannot deny that they are doing these very things spoken of old by the prophets of Yehova. Men may make light of His word, as of their own. But He is not man that He should lie.

Lest men should question whether the appointment of Ephraim by Jacob to the heir-ship and head-ship of Israel was by the word of Yehova, He expressly declares by the mouth of Jeremiah,—"I am Father to Israel, and Ephraim is My firstborn." Lest there should be doubt where Ephraim is to be found in the latter days, it is also declared, not once, but many times, "I will bring them from the North country, and gather them from the uttermost parts of the earth." Not once, but many a time and oft, the cry of the prophets of Yehova is, "Listen, O isles, unto Me, and hearken, ye peoples, from far. Keep silence before Me, O isles. The isles saw, and feared." When they come to see, they will fear, fear with a great amazement, because they had not sooner seen that the Word of Yehova is not the word of a man that it should lie. When He bringeth forth the blind that have eyes, and the deaf that have ears, and their eyes and ears are opened, then they will fear. When they shall understand what Yehova saith, "Ye are My witnesses, My servant whom I have chosen," expressly that in and by you it may be made manifest to all men that My word is truth, then the isles will fear, the ends of the earth tremble.

* The name "Yehovah" is so given as the nearest approach to the recovered true pronunciation.

Digitized by Google

Meanwhile, men wonder much how could precisely the tribe of Manasseh get itself separated from the rest, to form the nucleus and substance of a great nation. Honouring God with the lip, while the heart is far from Him, not honestly believing God, therefore not understanding God, men shorten the arm of Yehova. Surely Adonai Yehova doeth nothing but He revealeth His secret unto His servants the prophets. But here is a thing so simple to be done by Him who made the world, the stars of the heaven, Pleiades and Orion, that He sent a man who was no prophet, neither the son of a prophet, but a herdman and a dresser of sycamore-trees, one Amos, to say, "I will sift the House of Israel among all the nations, like as sifting in a sieve, yet shall not the least grain fall upon the earth." Surely the arm of Him who sifted Ephraim and the tribes his companions in their tumultuous wanderings through all the nations, from the cities of the Medes to the Isles of the West, during sixteen centuries, was not shortened so that from these He could not sift one tribe, Manasseh, to make him a people that he also should be great, according as it is written in the Word of Yehova.

Some will still say that the folk of the United States are mixed of many Germans, Swedes, and one knows not what. But the blind that have eyes cannot see that these may not all be truly German, Swedes, or other; but the sifting of the sieve so that not the least grain should fall to the ground. Yet some doubtless are of alien race; for again it is written, "Also the strangers that join themselves to Yehova, to love His Name, to be His servants, every one that keepeth the Sabbath from profaning it, even them will I bring to My holy mountain. Saith Adonai Yehova, which gathereth the outcasts of Israel, "Yet will I gather to him beside his own that are gathered."—The "Messenger" Leaflets.

Correspondence.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—I have noticed various articles in the BANNER on the question of the Gentile Church, and feel it might do good if I were to add a few words on the subject of "the Church." I sometimes think that some of the writers in the BANNER confound the kingdom with the Church, and I believe that if the fact of their separation, or rather of their separateness, were kept clearly before the people the Identity would spread faster. In this hope I send you the following, should you think it worthy of insertion:—

THE CHURCH.

The first time this word occurs in the sacred volume is in Matt. xvi. 18: "On this rock I will build My Church." Now "I will build" is clearly future. Again, Matt. xviii. 17—20; these verses show that from the first the Church met in the name of Jesus Christ. In Acts ii. 37, 38 the multitude had become convinced of sin, and they came to the disciples seeking directions, which they received in the command, "Repent and be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ." We have the same truth in Acts iv. 30; v. 40, 42; vi. 14, and now in Acts viii. 1 we have a record of those who believed in that name, being the Church. Wherever this Church is referred to as a whole it is always called "the Church of God" (Acts xx. 28; 1 Cor. i. 2; x. 32; xi. 22; xv. 9; Gal. i. 13; 1 Tim. iii. 5), but never the Gentile, or Hebrew, or Roman, or British Church; for it is neither the one nor the other. It is God's Church, and though we sometimes find it at Jerusalem (Acts viii. 1), at Antioch (Acts xiii. 1), in the house of Nymphas (Col. iv. 15), it is never spoken of as being the Church of any of them. When referred to in its various assemblies it is called "the Churches throughout Judea, and Galilee, and Samaria" (Acts ix. 31), as the Churches of the Gentiles (Rom. xvi. 4); but when spoken of as a whole it is "the Church of God which He hath purchased with His own blood" (Acts xx. 28); and she has been purchased (agorazo) out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation (Rev. v. 9); she belongs then to no nation; but to God; neither has she been given to any nation, but remains God's exclusive property. She is a new man in Christ (Ephes. ii. 15). Whenever any person enters into her he then ceases to be recognised by God as either Jew or Greek, bond or free, male or female; and they are looked on by God as all one in Christ; God putting no difference between them (Gal. iii. 28; Acts xv. 7, 8, 9). Now, the reason for this is obvious, if we remember the position which is to be occupied by the Church in the ages to come. For when Jesus Christ comes to take to Himself the kingdom, she will then sit with Him on His throne as His joint heir, in the same way as Princess Alexandrina of Denmark by her union with our Prince of Wales, whenever he obtains the kingdom will then be with him as his consort; so the Church shall sit in the kingdom as the bride or consort of the King (Psalm xiv. 6—9; Matt. xix. 28; Luke xxii. 29; Col. i. 13; Heb. xii. 28; Jas. ii. 5; 2 Peter i. 11; Rev. iii. 21; vii. 9, 10).

This kingdom in which the Church will be is the kingdom of God, and this kingdom is Israel. In 2 Chron. xiii. 5, Abijah calls on Jeroboam and All Israel to remember that God gave David and his sons the kingdom over Israel, and "now ye think (verse 8) to withstand the kingdom of the Lord in the hand of the sons of David." This kingdom of the Lord remained with them till the captivity and death of Zedekiah, when the diadem (the outward sign of royalty) was removed (Ezek. xxi. 26), and the tender twig of the royal house was transplanted to Israel, now far away (Ezek. xvii. 22, 23). The kingdom still remained with Judah, though the outward signs had been taken away, until at last the King Himself appeared in their midst. They had been told by Zech. ix. 9 that their King "would come riding upon an ass, and upon a colt, the foal of an ass;" and when He did come fulfilling the Word of God (Matt. xxi. 1—10), they only recognised Him as Jesus, the prophet of Nazareth, and no king. "Write not the King of the Jews," said they; but that "He said, I am the King of the Jews." We "have no king but Cæsar" (John xix. 15, 21). Our blessed Master had warned them very solemnly of this event (Matt. xxiii. 42, 43), that if they rejected Him God would take the kingdom from them, and give it to a nation, not "to the nations," but "to a nation" "bringing forth the fruits thereof." This is where the confusion produced by confounding the kingdom with the Church reaches its climax. One party says the Church and the kingdom are one and the same, and all nations are on a level in it. The other party says, the Church by law established is the Church of God in Great Britain, and Great Britain is the Church of God in the world. But if he had said, "The Church by God established is the Church of God in Great Britain, and Great Britain is the kingdom of God in the world," he would have been nearer the truth; for we have already seen that all national recognition ceases in Christ; for all in Christ, of whatever nation soever, share in the kingdom when Christ comes; but the kingdom of God does belong to one nation, and it was given to one only, and that nation was to bring forth the fruits thereof. According to Rom. xiv. 17 these fruits are:—(1) Righteousness; (2) Peace; (3) Joy. Where on all the earth is there a nation which by its righteous acts gives peace and joy to all who will live as men should? You will search in vain for it until you set your foot on Britain's shore; but no sooner have you done so than you will be compelled to acknowledge that here we have the most righteous rule that is on earth. I grant that there are many things yet to be put right. But this was to be the case in God's kingdom till the end of the age, when the Son of Man will send forth His messengers, and they shall gather out of His kingdom all things which cause stumbling, and them that do iniquity, and shall cast them into a furnace of fire (Matt. xiii. 41, 42).

Now, it is quite true that God began His Church with Israelites, and I can see two reasons for that:—1st. Jesus came and lived among the Jews, and it was necessary that the first believers should be witnesses of His death and resurrection, and so they had to be where He was. 2nd. Although God had taken the kingdom from the Jews, yet He had not taken the offer of mercy through grace from them; as He commanded His disciples to tarry in Jerusalem till they got the power from on high; and then they were to begin at Jerusalem to preach His name to the Jew first and also to the Greek; and He knew that the Jews would not receive the message from the uncircumcised; so He chose His disciples from among themselves. Paul also knew this when he circumcised Timothy (Acts xvi. 3).

Hoping these thoughts will remove the difficulty,

I remain, yours in Jesus Christ, D. W.

79, Hamilton-street, Govan, July 16th, 1888.

THE LATE CHARLES HORNER.—We deeply regret to announce that Mr. Charles Horner, the Secretary of the Free Distribution Fund, passed away on August 5 after a short illness. His loss will be deeply felt.—ED.

Some of our friends at Bradford are about to erect an Iron Church, to be known as St. Matthew's Identity Church.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed: "Philo-Israel," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Annual Subscription for one copy weekly (including the Twelve Double Numbers) post free	0	7	6
Two Copies (including Double Numbers)	0	13	6
Three Copies " " "	1	0	4
Four Copies " " "	1	5	6
Six Copies " " "	1	16	4

Post Office Orders to be made payable at the head office, St. Martin's-le-Grand, London, to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C., or F. W. PARRY & Co., 29, Paternoster-row, London.

The Editor cannot undertake to return rejected MSS. unless stamps for the purpose be sent. Parties requiring an answer should enclose a stamp.

Contents Bills and Show Cards may be obtained on application to the Publishers.

Advertisements should be sent to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

Prepaid Advertisements are inserted at the rate of thirty words for 1s. 4d.

WANTED TO PURCHASE.—"Our Inheritance in the Great Pyramid," by SMYTH. "The Great Pyramid," by BADGER. "The Great Pyramid Inside and Out," by DALMAS. Send to R. Banks & Son, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C.

NEW BOOK BY DR. WILD.

Just Published, Price 3s., Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Lettered. Sent by Post on receipt of Published Price.

TALKS
FOR
THE TIMES.

BY JOSEPH WILD, M.A., D.D.,

Pastor of the Bond-st. Congregational Church, Toronto.

CONTENTS.—Chapter 1. A Gift of One Hundred and Ninety-Two Million Acres of Land. 2. The Return of the Jews to Palestine. 3. Folks that won't be Somebody. 4. The Four Prophecies of Egypt. 5. The Stone Kingdom and Dynamite; and the Orange Bill. 6. "144!" 7. "666!" 8. The Transit of Venus. 9. The Miracles of Antichrist; and the High Rock Image of Massachusetts, U.S. 10. The an who could not sleep, and what came of it. 11. The Rainbow. 12. London Destroyed, and Jerusalem a Seaport. 13. Liberalism. 14. A Graft without a Stock. 15. Mouldy Bread and an Oath. 16. A Tombstone Inscription. 17. Dog Lappers. 18. How to get Rich.

London: Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street.

Just published—Cloth, 2s. 6d.—a re-issue of

The Origin of Masonic Ritual and Tradition:

A Lecture on the Three Degrees, by BRO. WM. ROWBOTTOM, P.M., 1028, with facsimile of a very rare Masonic engraving published in 1789.

"Exquisitely clear and singularly correct in everything wherein I may be any authority or guide."—Professor PIAZZI SMYTH. "Will be found of considerable interest to many besides Masons."—Church Bells.

Oxford: S. Rowbottom and Son; London: R. Banks and Son, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C.; and F. W. Parry and Co., 29, Paternoster Row, E.C.

Price Five Shillings.—"Substantially and attractively got up, and profusely illustrated."—Oldham Chronicle.

Eildon Grange: A Tale.

By ANDREW CLARK, M.A., Vicar of St. Michael's, Oxford.

"One of the most charming books. . . . The illustrations are full of playful humour."—Scotsman. "The book is undoubtedly a happy one."—The Oxford Magazine. "Both entertaining and bracing."—Dundee Advertiser.

Oxford: S. Rowbottom and Son; London: Hamilton, Adams and Co., 32, Paternoster Row, E.C.

☞ Ask for this Book at the Libraries.

WORKS BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

The History of the House of Israel. How They Were Lost and How They Were Found. Told for the children. Price 6d., cloth 1s.; post free 7d. and 1s. 1d. Fifth edition.

A Resume of the Scriptural Argument Proving the Identity of the British Race with the Lost Ten Tribes. Price 1d.; 6s. per hundred, postage 6d.

Anglo-Israelism. True, Not False. Being Philo-Israel's Reply to the Rev. Canon Bell's pamphlet, "Anglo-Israelism: True or False?" Price 1d., 6s. 6d. per 100. 16 pages, crown 8vo.

An Elementary Digest or Sketch of the Chief Facts and Teachings of the Great Pyramid of Egypt. Adapted to the Unlearned and Unscientific 56 pages, Illustrated with Diagrams, price 4d., post free 5d. 10th Thousand.

Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

ALL PUBLICATIONS ON THE IDENTITY OF THE LOST TRIBES OF ISRAEL
May be obtained at the Office of
ROBERT BANKS & SON, RACQUET COURT, FLEET STREET.

The Banner of Israel (Weekly No. and Monthly Part). The Messenger, Two Witnesses, etc., forwarded immediately on publication at office rates. The Canadian Advance, post free for one year for 4s. 6d.

Catalogues post free on application.

Price 2d., by post 2½d. Second Edition, Revised.

A SUMMARY OF ANGLO-ISRAELITE TEACHING,

And of the Scripture Proofs on which it rests.

By SURGEON-GEN. J. M. GRANT, M.D.,

President of the Cheltenham Association, and Vice-President of the Metropolitan Anglo-Israel Association.

London: ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-st.

New Work on the Identity of Lost Israel
By the late BISHOP TITCOMB.

Now ready, in Cloth Gilt, Bevelled Boards Imperial 8vo. Price 3s.; sent Post Free for Postal Order or Stamps.

A MESSAGE TO THE CHURCH
FROM
THE NINETEENTH CENTURY
BY THE LATE
RT. REV. BISHOP TITCOMB, D.D.

ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet Court, Fleet Street.
F. W. PARRY & Co., 29, Paternoster Row, E.C.

Price 6d., by post 7d.

AN OUTLINE OF THE PAST, the Present, and the Future of Great Britain as Revealed in the Word of God.

Also an Examination of the Theory which asserts the Kingdom to be Unconquerable.

By JAMES KEITH.

(Author of "The Impending Judgment of Great Britain," "Light Shed by the Great Pyramid of Egypt.")

"Known unto God are all His works from the beginning of the world."—ACTS xv. 18.

"Open Thou mine eyes, that I may behold wondrous things out of Thy law."—PSA. cxix. 18.

ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London. JOHN MENZIES & Co., Edinburgh & Glasgow.

Price 2s. 6d., Cheap Edition, 1/-

BIBLE LESSONS AND REFLECTIONS.

By ROBERT GAIRDNER, of Kilmarnock, N.B.

"Mr. Gairdner has given us in his book a series of Bible lessons, with his own reflections added thereto, and though he has been very cautious in the latter, and has not committed himself too broadly, he has plainly let it be seen that he is an Anglo-Israelite by conviction, and that the Scriptures which he quotes at length and extensively throughout his book, are meant to teach Our Identity and God's faithfulness, from first to last, to His promises to Abraham and His seed for ever."—Banner of Israel.

ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-st.

1s., post free 1s. 2d.

THE PRIEST THE WOMAN, AND THE CONFESSIONAL.—"In its pages will be found ample evidence of the danger of the Confessional."—English Churchman.

Price 6d. in paper covers; on toned paper, in cloth boards, gilt lettered, 1s.; post free for stamps.

PAPAL IDOLATRY. An Exposure of the Dogma of Transubstantiation and Mariolatry, to which is added "My Reasons Why I will Never Go Back to the Church of Rome." The Bible Christian Magazine says:—"Unanswerable! The most powerful argument against Transubstantiation, in the same space, that we have read.

R. BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

HUMAN LIFE.—FIFTY YEARS' Record of Facts, Principles, and Discoveries (just published complete) Relating to the Improvement and Preservation of Human Life on Earth. Origin and true treatment of diseases. A series of articles by DR. SAMUEL BIRLEY, M.D., Ph.D. Book form, 50 pages. SENT FREE to every applicant by the publishers, GORDON B. MURRAY & CO., 50, Theobald's-road, Holborn, E.C. Write to-day

PIANOFORTES, Harmoniums, American Organs. Why buy at shops inferior made instruments, and pay large profits, when you can buy direct from the Maker High-class Instruments, and save 50 per cent. by so doing? Full value allowed for old Instruments in exchange as part payment. Write for Price Lists and Testimonials to G. LINSTEAD, 2, Oseney Crescent, Camden Road, London. Established 1874.

THE WATERS OF HERMON.

THE interesting circumstance of the re-production by modern science of these celebrated Waters of Antiquity, so famed in Biblical times, is one of the most important illustrations of the advance of the age. Differing from all other Waters they contain no mineral ingredients, so that the system, instead of being lowered by their use, is steadily built up, while the functions of life are restored to a healthy condition. And it is, therefore, with extreme gratification that this is now brought within the reach of the general public. The well-known curative properties of this famous medicine are promptly manifested in the following disorders:—Indigestion, Biliousness, Congestion of the Liver, Nausea and Vomiting, Disorders of the Stomach and Bowels and their consequences, Constipation, Piles, Flatulence, Repletion, Spasms, Discomfort or Pain after Meals, Pain Between the Shoulders, Pains in the Back and Loins, Cold in the Head, Coughs of various character, Difficulty of Breathing, Giddiness and Sick Headache, Effects of Alcohol, Overworked Brain, Affections of the Nerves, &c. Price 2s. 9d. per bottle, post free. THE WATERS OF HERMON DEPOT, 107, King Street, Hammersmith, London.

INVALUABLE REMEDY

SOUND, PURE, WHITE
TEETH!

Those who value these will try

CARBOLINE
(The Great Sanitary Tooth Paste).

1/6 & 2/6 per Pot.

Through Chemists, or post free from the Makers,

GEORGE & WELCH
WORCESTER.

Lancet writes:—"To save the teeth use a good carbolic daily."

LADIES!

WE will send a FULL-DRESS LENGTH of BEAUTIFUL CLOTH (for Good, Strong, Serviceable use), in any of the following colours, Carriage paid to any address for 10s. 6d. Colours:—Black, Blue, Fawn, Salmon, Resida, Slate, Ruby, Brown, Grey, Claret, Sage, Old Rose, Terra-Cotta, Amber, Peacock, Tabac, Bronze, Myrtle, Drab, Olive, Grenat, Clay Green, Navy, Partridge, Heather, &c., &c. These wonderful Dress Lengths have gained a world-wide reputation for magnificence, cheapness and durability, having no equal.

The Lady's Pictorial says:—"They are excellent quality and very good value for the money."

Thousands of Testimonials from all parts of the world.

Ladies should write at once for Patterns, which may be had free, and need not be returned.

AN AMAZING OFFER!!—We shall give a very handsome Brocaded Silk Handkerchief with each dress-length ordered from us during this season. Write for patterns. LUTUS B. LEATHLEY, Armley, Leeds.

Certain HARNESS' Cure.
ELECTROPATHIC BELT
FOR DEBILITY

Mr. WILLIAM WHITTINGHAM, Chiswick Cottage, Surbiton Hill, writes:—"I have derived great benefit from wearing your Electropathic Belt. Its influence has been marvellous."

Guaranteed to generate a mild continuous current of Electricity, which speedily cures all Disorders of the Nerves, Stomach, Liver and Kidneys. Thousands of Testimonials. Pamphlet & Advice free on application to Mr. C. B. Harness, Consulting Electrician, the Medical Battery Co. Ltd.

Only Address,
52, OXFORD ST. LONDON, W. (Corner of Rathbone Place.)
Call to-day, if possible, or write at once

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C. F. W. PARRY (late GUEST & Co.), 29 PATERNOSTER-ROW WEDNESDAY, AUG. 15, 1888. [All rights reserved.

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."
(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India.)

"And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the Forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS of the EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. XII., No. 608. Entered at Stationers' Hall.] WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 22, 1888. [PRICE ONE PENNY.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
A New British Protectorate	333
The Growth of Great Britain. Part II.	334
The Education of the Young in Israel	335
The Jaffa and Jerusalem Railway	336
Psalms li., lvii., and cxi.	337
Testimonial to E. W. Bird, Esq.	338
Correspondence	338

A NEW BRITISH PROTECTORATE.

THE Cape Argus of April 26, records the fact, since confirmed in the House of Commons, that a fresh advance has been made in British expansion, and that the first step has been taken in the final annexation of Matabeleland. The High Commissioner, Sir Hercules Robinson, has just completed what is described as a magnificent stroke of Imperial policy. In short he has done for Matabeleland what was done by the Indian Government respecting the island of Socotra, and more recently by the British Government regarding Amatongaland, namely, he has caused the native ruler to sign a treaty binding himself and his heirs never to sell or alienate the whole or part of his territory without the previous knowledge and sanction of Her Majesty's High Commissioner for South Africa. The effect of this treaty is that the native rulers of Matabeleland have placed themselves under the Protectorate of Great Britain, and that the whole territory, one of the richest in Central Africa, has been taken clean out of the hands of the Powers who have been "scrambling for Africa," that thus it may finally lapse under the beneficent sway of "Israel of the isles." The natives throughout South and Central Africa have learnt the lesson that British Government means wealth, peace, prosperity, and freedom from the curse of negro slavery. They therefore are ready everywhere to welcome British power and rule, and to do as the Chief Lobengula has done with his territory, (which is what Moselikatze used to govern), namely, place it in the hand of the paramount British power as suzerain. The Chief Lobengula rules over three peoples, the Amandebele, the Mashuna, and the Mallakalaka, native races whose territories are bounded by the Zambesi on the north, and the Transvaal on the south. The arrangement now made with this powerful native chief, whose country overlaps the Transvaal itself and leaves it to the south, is not annexation, and it is not exactly a Protectorate. But, says the Argus, it is exactly suited to the necessities of the case. It is a great step forward, and likely to be lasting in its effects because it does not proceed to the length of annexation, or talk of a Protectorate. The effect of this agreement made with Lobengula as described in the Cape paper is this. The native chief retains all his sovereign powers. He preserves and extends the trade routes which have always been in the hands of the colonists. Matabeleland is one of the richest gold countries in the world. "It is a high healthy plateau and will some day be a great country." It will be the last great field open to European trade, for this new British Protectorate is bounded on the west by an impassable desert, on the north by a fever country, to the east by the same. The further advance of British or European power therefore is limited by this territory to the west, north and east. The effort must now be made to open communication with this new region by fresh railways through Bechuanaland and Kimberley, and thus develop the trade of Matabeleland for the benefit of the Empire.

The benefit that Lobengula will derive from the treaty now made will be that he will be in the hands of a Power which will allow of no injustice. It will neither tolerate oppression and spoliation by foreign nations, or by its own subjects. Native chiefs, it appears, are aware that in the scramble for Africa by the European nations they are certain to be absorbed unless their position is defined in the South African system. Mr. Moffatt's agreement which has just been executed does this for Matabeleland and its chief Lobengula. Our readers will recognise in all this the wonderful way in which God is providing for the "expansion of Israel" in the Dark continent. Sometimes by conquest, as in the case of Cape Town and Natal; then by the results of subsequent good government, the power and influence of this country advances by leaps and bounds almost in spite of itself. The cause is aided by the sensible views promulgated by such politicians as the Right Hon. J. Chamberlain, who, as we have seen on p. 237, strongly urges the acceptation of offers by friendly chiefs who desire to come under our protection and wish for our interference. In all directions this is the case in Syria, Arabia, and Africa, and doubtless with the example of British administration in India and Egypt before their eyes the natives of the Asiatic and African Continents who are capable of reasoning on the subject must see that British control and guidance will be a blessing to them and not a curse. God has promised to His people "the heirship of the world" for the good of the latter; and it is clear that the events we are able to record almost from day to day, are carrying out His purposes very rapidly. They are making Israel in this as in all else, "the head and not the tail, above only and not beneath all the nations of the earth," in the matter of Empire! To Him be all the glory and all the praise!

Digitized by Google

THE GROWTH OF GREAT BRITAIN.

(Concluded from page 329).

PART II.

PROPHECY, history and the present facts are equal, and they are harmonious, and there is not a man in Toronto that can be an infidel in the sight of these things, because they are not following the laws that are natural. There is a superhuman element comes in in order that these things may be fulfilled. The growth of Great Britain is a mystery to many; in spite of all opposition, internal and external, Israel keeps enlarging her tent, lengthening her cords and strengthening her stakes, leaving a natural increase in the island home every year of hundreds of thousands, and she has half a million now to spare that must emigrate somewhere every year, either to Canada, Australasia, or some other part of the world. The fact is, the British are peopling the continents and the isles of the sea and the Gentile nations, and the cities of the Gentiles they are taking possession of. They are overflowing in every direction all around the earth. Her ships are on every sea, her missionaries are in all lands, her merchants are in every nook and corner of this round earth. The students of Anglo-Israelism easily understand all this; it is to them a living, vital, positive proof of the existence of a God, of an over-ruling Providence, and of the inspiration of God's Book that could foretell the destiny of races and nations for thousands of years.

This great mystery with others is with them a sign and a confirmation. I am not surprised at the following in the New York World of Thursday, November 10, 1887. It is as follows:—"Within the past fortnight an addition has been made to Queen Victoria's dominions of a territory almost as large as the half of Europe. The Niger country has very quietly been declared British territory, and it will be looked after in future by the Royal Niger Trading Company—a sort of East India Company. Where is this expansion of the British Empire to stop, and what will be the ultimate result of this insatiable greed for land on the part of John Bull?" These words very properly voice the expressions and surprise of other millions of the earth; for other nations and other races and other people are looking at Britain's growth with astonishment and amazement and without the ability to account for it. He asks where this expansion of British territory is to stop. I answer, when God's purposes flowing through Israel are accomplished and not until then, sir. Or when a people come into existence who want more room than we do; or when a people come forward who can rule the heathen and pagan better than they do; or make a better use of the lands and products and the power of the earth; or when a people come forward with a better appetite, a larger stomach and a stouter heart than John Bull. For you must take note of this simple fact that John Bull's stomach is a great centre of power, of courage and of commerce. From this centre is projected motive energy that sends him buzzing all around the world to find what he can eat and drink. The earth is the Lord's and we are all His children, but He has chosen Israel and imposed upon her some great work and onerous duties to perform.

By this blessing of increase Britain wants room, and she must have that room, and she can make use of the natural products of a desolate or a half inhabited country equal to any other people on the face of this earth. She has a right to and interest in such countries, and Providence will open up her way always to get it. Britain has purchased Africa by money, blood and sacrifice, and if any one of the outlying nations has a claim upon Africa, it belongs to Britain to-night, and I will show you why. God, in the order of His providence, will pay back every cent and interest to Britain which she has spent on behalf of that country and people. I ask, who has done more, paid more and sacrificed more for the African and Africa than Britain? I ask an answer. Had Britain not set her face against slavery when she did, Africa, in the year 1887, would have been nearly depopulated, and have been in worse desolation than she is now, for the supply of slaves would have run shorter while the demand would have increased yearly. On March 25th, 1807, Great Britain proclaimed slavery unlawful in the British Isles; in 1834, she asked all her Colonies to forbid slavery; and to encourage them and help them to carry out that idea she gave them one hundred million dollars in gold, and since then she has spent twenty times that amount in trying to suppress it in different parts of the world through her navy, and her consuls, and her soldiers. She owns by right every foot of Africa if it were offered for sale, and she had credit for what she has paid in the past. Again, Britain has spent millions in missionary work for that people and land. God will not forget this great sacrifice on behalf of a people whoever they are, whether Britons, Russians or Germans, or any other race that will undertake nationally to serve God; He will pay them back; but if they undertake to slight Him, He will make them pay with interest for their slight. It is not possible for a nation to resist God.

Israel's work on this line was foretold by Isaiah lviii. 6. "To loose the bonds of wickedness, to undo the heavy burdens, and to let the bruised go free." That was Israel's mission. I have no hesitation in saying that Britain can make better use of Africa, and deal with the Africans better than any other people. If so, is it any wonder that God should give that country into her hands? would He not give it into the hands of that people who could do best by the people and for the country? There seems a sort of nationality in this. I want you just to remember I had no special choice in being born a British subject; I simply fell on the lap of time, and am what I am and cannot help it; but God's Book is His Word.

Scientists have pretty well settled two points of late: first, that life is a communication in every case; that inert matter can never produce life; that life always comes from life; that it is not a spontaneous product. The second thing that they have settled of late is, that civilisation is always a communicative thing; that a people in barbarism, paganism and heathenism will remain so for ever unless civilisation and Christianity are taken to them. There is not a single instance on record when a people in this state have ever lifted themselves up without foreign help. Now, if Africa is to be civilised and Christianised, I am glad that it has fallen upon Britain to do that. Somebody has to do it, and she is able to do it, and for that purpose Providence will keep giving her patch after patch of that continent until she has got the whole of it.

What do you think we possess now? Cape Colony we came in possession of in 1795; Natal, 1843; Lagos, 1861; Gold Coast Colony, 1872; Port St. John, 1884; Walfish Bay, 1884; Pondo Land, 1886; Tembuland, 1885; Bechuana Land, 1886; Transvaal, Fingoland, Basutoland, Transkei, St. John's Territory, Griqua Land, both east and west, and Niger Land, 1887. We are doing pretty well, and we will keep taking big pieces like that every year, and the New York World will have to write in another year, and he will wonder when this insatiate greed of John Bull shall stop. I simply tell him when the Lord has done; it is not John Bull; he is as much against it as others, but neither they nor the New York World can stop the course of Providence. It will go on. The grand mission of Israel is to Christianise and civilise Africa; God has laid upon her that great burden. Jointly with the United States, for they are of Israel, and are taking a noble and grand part in the missionary work—Ephraim and Manasseh are joining hand in hand for the conquest of that great dark continent. Britain will yet have her pay back; God will give it to her back through her trade. What that land wants is stability and law, and then trade will spring up. You are aware that slavery is destruction. Mr. Stanley gives some very fine descriptions of beautiful tracts of country where the people were a sort of comfortable, having received instructions in former years from the the missionaries, yet when the slave traders came in and took thirty-two thousand slaves, as he tells us, they depopulated hundreds of miles square of country, ruined villages and towns and left it desolate, as it is to-night. Britain must go there with the Gospel in her hand, not to destroy, but to build up, and to give security to these poor Africans; then once they are secure, they will begin to trade, they will want clothing and other articles.

Digitized by Google

When Africa is opened up it will be open for trade with Britain, so that she can be independent of us in Canada and the United States. God will take care of her, for we are too foolish and too independent; it will open up a vast continent that will invite ten times the number of factories to begin to work to supply them. No nation nor men can work for God and go without their pay; that is the way He will pay her back all that she has spent on the slave, all that she has given to that great Continent. Britain being Israel she is sunk deep in the councils of God, and in spite of her own statesmen of either party she will go on to her appointed destiny, to their amazement and the amazement of the outside world.

There is nothing I can conceive of so complete as an illustration to compare Britain with, as these huge icebergs I have seen coming down from the North Sea, going against wind, against wave, and against tide. You say, How are they going? They are deep enough sunk to catch an undercurrent, and that is master of the upper commotion. Israel is sunk in the councils of God, and in spite of all political agitation and differences that you and I or anybody else can see God will carry her on to her destined end, and prepare her to fulfil her mission. Seeing then, my dear friends, the stately steppings of God nationally, have you ever thought of it individually; that He who keeps His word with races and nations will keep His word to you as an individual? He has a covenant vow with you. Are you keeping as an individual that vow to-night? If not, I am under instruction to say that you will fail if you resist God. Give your heart to Him, your hand to Him, work in harmony with Him and you will come out all right in this world, in death, and in the next world as sure as we are living. If you do not, you cannot. The Lord bless us all. Amen.

—"Canadian Advance," December 6, 1887.

THE EDUCATION OF THE YOUNG IN ISRAEL.

SEARCH the Bible from end to end, and there will appear nothing therein in regard to the education of the young in schools of modern type. There is much regarding the religious instruction of the children of the families of Israel, but not a word respecting the secular instruction of such children, or the delegation of the duty to others, by the parents. The Word of God seems to recognise only the religious instruction of children, and that by parents; but takes for granted that the latter will provide secular instruction for them of themselves, without any pressure from without as to their duty in the matter. What appears to be the danger anticipated is, that Israelite parents will neglect to teach their children the fear of God and His commandments; and therefore we find that education of the young as inculcated in the Bible is the religious education, such education being entirely parental. We have accordingly in Deut. iv. 9, 10, R.V., the following: "Only take heed to thyself, and keep thy soul diligently, lest thou forget the things which thine eyes saw, and lest they depart from thy heart all the days of thy life; but make them known unto thy children and thy children's children; the day that thou stoodest before the Lord thy God in Horeb, when the Lord said unto me, Assemble Me the people and I will make them hear My words, that they may learn to fear Me all the days that they live upon the earth, and that they may teach their children." In Psa. lxxviii. 5—7, R.V., we have the same precepts repeated with details, showing that the education God's Word prescribes is parental and religious only. There it is written, "For He established a testimony in Jacob, and appointed a law in Israel, which He commanded our fathers, that they should make them known to their children, that the generation to come might know them, even the children which should be born, who should arise and tell them to their children, that they might set their hope on God, and not forget the works of God, but keep His commandments." Here the instruction contemplated is clearly religious, its objects obedience to God and regard for His works and commandments; also trust in His help. But the manner of the teaching is also clearly parental, and not as in our modern times in schools apart from the authority and influence of the parents. Bible teaching however goes to show this: that if the State, or congregations or societies elect to impart instruction to the young in modern times, the heads of such schools as they establish must occupy a position in loco parentis, and the education they impart must include religious instruction in obedience to the Israelite rule we have just seen to be prescribed for God's people in the books of Deuteronomy and the Psalms.

The subject in which instruction is directed to be imparted to Israel's youth is mentioned in Deut. iv. 8, R.V., as God's statutes and judgments, that is, His ten commandments or moral law (ver. 13), to know and practice which is, we are told in ver. 6, sufficient to constitute them "a wise and understanding people." "For what great nation is there that hath God so nigh unto them as the Lord our God is whensoever we call upon Him?" The duty in regard to children is set forth in Deut. vi. 4—7, R.V., where, addressing them as "Hear, O Israel," He adds, "these words which I command thee this day shall be upon thine heart, and thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up." The direction therefore to the children of Israel for all time, in regard to the education of their young, is very precise and clear. Their instruction must be parental and religious too; founded on God's word and on His ten commandments. It must be dogmatic, teaching the ruin of man and their recovery to God's favour, by the one only way permitted, namely, by and through the divine Substitute, God the Son, on Calvary, who "died the just for the unjust or the righteous for the unrighteous that He might bring us to God" (1 Peter iii. 18, A. and R.V.). These considerations seem to rebuke the modern practice in Board Schools, where the only book which is distinctly discountenanced and placed under prohibition and ban is the Holy Bible, God's holy Word, to know which suffices to make "a wise and understanding people" and a sinner acquainted with the only way of salvation! In the New Testament the instruction in regard to education seems to correspond accurately with Old Testament teaching. In Eph. vi. 1—3, R.V., we read, "Children, obey your parents in the Lord, for this is right. And ye fathers, nurture them in the chastening and admonition of the Lord." The education is to be parental and religious, even under the Christian dispensation, and therefore now. Here then is a strong argument showing what Israel ought to do in regard to the instruction of their young people. Parents cannot and must not surrender the religious education of the rising generation to those who will not accept the parental duty. Public systems of education must and ought to include Biblical instruction and moral teaching, founded on the ten commandments of the Lord God of Israel. These ought to be taught as part of the duty of those who have assumed the position of parents towards the children, and not neglected because of a regard for the susceptibilities of those who cannot concur in the teaching of the Established Church. We have a national duty to perform towards the children of God's nation, and this His word tells us includes instruction in His statutes, His judgments, commandments, and words; and we neglect to obey His divine directions in this respect at our own peril. The secularization of the education of our young is a national danger which must be guarded against, but doubtless when the Spirit of God is poured out upon our masses and His laws are written on the heart and on the minds of our people it will be seen then (perhaps not before!) that we shall not know the Lord as we desire to know Him till we obey His commandments in respect to the religious and parental instruction of our children in the national Board Schools.

Digitized by Google

THE JAFFA AND JERUSALEM RAILWAY.

THE very first railway ever proposed for the Holy Land is actually in progress now! The distance between the two places, Jerusalem and Jaffa, or Joppa, is about fifty miles, and therefore the work will soon, we suppose, be completed. It is possible the "highway" described in Isa. xix. 23, as connecting Egypt and Assyria, promoting communication between the inhabitants of those two countries, was an allusion to the railway passing through the Holy Land from Assyria to Cairo, which is certain eventually to be made. Its commencement we witness to-day in the branch line between the seaport Jaffa, whither Jonah the prophet fled from the face of the Lord, and the holy city, Jerusalem. Verily, we are approaching the "end" when we see the land of the inheritance asserting itself amongst the civilized countries of the world, and demanding a place among them, by the construction of a railway between the capital and the coast. But there are other changes besides this which are silently taking place, showing that the land of promise is coming up into remembrance before the Lord. Some of these were described in the London Morning Post of June 20, which we think it well to quote:—

The country is rapidly changing in every direction; many places, famous for their ancient historic associations, are being metamorphosed into quite European-like towns, while the aspect of its principal cities is such at the present time that the traveller who visited the Holy Land twenty or twenty-five years ago would decidedly not recognise them again. Jaffa, the "beautiful," as it was of old designated, is changed out of all knowledge. The old wall which surrounded the port, and which probably existed when Jonah embarked on board the Phœnician coasting vessel in which he sought to fly, has been pulled down; warehouses and magazines, built after European models, have been constructed upon its site, suburbs have grown up all around it, whole quarters of the older city have been rebuilt, and the place goes far ere long to justify its ancient designation. It is well cleaned and lighted, and the country all round is one vast orange grove. For miles along the road to Jerusalem the traveller sees nothing but well-kept vegetable gardens and orchards, raising some of the finest produce imaginable. The orange trade is growing in importance and value year by year. Many places in the interior have progressed at even a more rapid rate. Nablous, which readers of the Bible will probably know better under its ancient designation of Sichem or Shechem, is quite a European manufacturing town. Its specialities are soap and boots. One half of the town where Joseph sought his brethren in Patriarchal times is now but a huge soap-boilery, and the other half is the Northampton of the Syrian Villayet. All along the Mediterranean coast, as far as Tunis and Southern Italy, there is a demand for Nablous soap, which is exported, viâ Jaffa and Beyrout, in large and constantly increasing quantities, and the bootmakers of Sichem enjoy as good and as bad a reputation in the Holy Land as those of our English Northampton. They are a very rough and turbulent lot.

Another town changed beyond all recognition is Bethlehem. A few years ago the place was neither more nor less than a collection of dirty hovels. Pavement was unknown; and after rain, or in winter, the roads were quite impassable. Now Bethlehem is a neat and clean little townlet, well paved and lighted, and passable at all times. Its houses have been rebuilt, and, most suggestive of all, the dwellings have glass windows, a striking sign of progress. Indeed, the growing use of glass throughout Palestine and Syria is a most remarkable indication of the changes which are gradually coming over the country. The tiny port of Cæsarea, once an important Roman harbour, is on the high road to regaining its former trade, a colony of Circassians having settled there, while the Turkish Government has made arrangements for building a Custom-house so that vessels may regularly land their cargoes there. As for Beyrout—which, if not actually part of Ancient Palestine, must be considered in these days as belonging to it—it is really becoming an imposing and important European city. One half of the place has been rebuilt in accordance with modern notions, and the European quarter is positively palatial in its buildings. It is supplied with water, is lighted with gas, is well paved, and has a corps of scavengers, a decided novelty for an Oriental city. It can boast of two paper mills, and an omnibus company which runs a very good service of vehicles to Damascus, over one of the only two roads that exist in the whole of Syria. Its inhabitants have increased fourfold in the last five and twenty years, and the tonnage of the vessels frequenting the port has risen to over a hundred times what it was a quarter of a century ago. In another twenty years Beyrout will be the most important maritime city on the shores of the Mediterranean.

It is in and about Jerusalem, however, that the most striking changes have been accomplished of late years. To say nothing of the rebuilding constantly in progress there, the improving of the roads and thoroughfares, the steady influx of German and Jewish residents, more or less European in their ways, has not been without its influence. Jerusalem is losing something of its Oriental character day by day, and on the whole the loss is not to be regretted. The city gates are no longer closed at night, as they were a few years ago. Church bells are allowed to be tolled there—a proceeding which would have made the hair of an old-fashioned Turkish Govenor stand on end—and employés of the Government are not compelled to wear the red fez, to which so many of the non-Mahommedans always objected. European commodities are as readily obtainable there as in London and Paris, and every luxury of the West—from patés de foie gras and Perigord truffles to dry champagne and Bass's beer—can be bought in the bazaars. The ladies are no longer so strict in their seclusion as formerly: they affect the newest French fashions, and patronise the latest literary productions of the realistic French school. The members of the different religious denominations mix together much more than a few years ago; and there is less friction, so those in a position to judge assert, in the relations between the authorities and the non-Moslem communities. Outside the walls of Jerusalem a new town of imposing proportions and extent is gradually rising; and as the rapidly growing suburbs unite, this will, in the not-distant future, far outrival in all but its sacred associations the older city on Mount Zion. It is not surprising that a railway should have become almost a necessity on the road from Jaffa to Jerusalem, the most frequented highway, it is admitted, in the Holy Land. The introduction of the locomotive there, may, as we have said, jar upon our sensibilities a little at first; but the gain to civilization in the long run will far outweigh any breach of the romantic associations attached to the land which the construction of a railway line is likely to cause.

Here, then, is a fresh fact for our opponents to consider. The land of promise, after continuing a desolation and a reproach for centuries, is at last showing that the time to visit her has arrived. She is beginning to attract European attention. Railways, roads, buildings, glass, gas, and the many other accompaniments of civilization, are being extended to her, and it is possible to conceive that a restoration of her ancient inhabitants, now the highly civilized British and American peoples with the Jews, in dependence upon the power and protection of the former, may soon become one of the political facts of the day, since the land is being manifestly prepared for its owners. For thus saith the Lord, "Refrain thy voice from weeping and thine eyes from tears; for thy work shall be rewarded, saith the Lord, and they shall come again from the land of the enemy; and there is hope for thy latter end, saith the Lord, and thy children shall come again to their own border" (Jer. xxxi. 16, 17 R.V.). The Holy Land is our own land, and its borders ours, though we have been absent from it, for two and a-half millenniums. But God recognises our title, and calls the land ours because we are His people Israel, and because of "the anointing" (Isa. x. 27, R.V.) Meanwhile, our hand is over the whole of the Bible lands, by reason of the convention with Turkey, effected for us by Lord Beaconsfield at the time of the Berlin Treaty, in virtue of which the island of Cyprus was ceded to our nation, as a pledge that when the crisis comes, and necessity arises, we shall defend the Turkish empire in Asia against its ancient enemy in the North. What strange events will arise to bring about these marvels no one may yet say. But of one thing we may be sure. God will bring these changes to pass in a perfectly natural and easy manner, just as we see Palestine becoming civilized to prepare for the advent of a civilized people, its future owners, so we shall by-and-bye find that political events will so shape themselves that we shall be forced to restore the Jews to their land and take our own allotted portions, American Manasseh accepting her's. The Jaffa and Jerusalem railway is possibly the first overt step towards the restoration of the tribes, and for this first proof of the faithfulness of the Lord, let Israel praise His holy name!

Digitized by Google

PSALMS II., LVII. AND CXI.

THE above were the Psalms prescribed for the morning service on Easter Sunday, and as such were read by and in the hearing of our Church-going Israelites, on April 1st last. How many who repeated these Psalms on that occasion thought of the words they uttered, and how they bore on the grand truths of the Identity of the British with the Lost Ten Tribes? And yet these three Psalms brought the whole subject before the Church plainly and palpably. Referring to Psalm ii. that glorious Messianic song respecting the Lord Jesus Christ and His kingdom, the Lord Jehovah and His anointed are its subjects. "I have set My King," He declares, "upon My holy hill of Zion." "I will tell of the decree. The Lord said unto Me, Thou art My Son, this day have I begotten Thee. Ask of Me and I will give Thee nations for Thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth (for) Thy possession." The gift in both cases is to the Lord Jesus, but Rev. ii. 26, 27 (R.V.), shows us that the gift so bestowed is by the Lord given over to His people Israel, His overcoming ones. "He that overcometh, and He that keepeth My works, to him will I give authority over the nations; and he shall rule them with a rod of iron; as vessels of the potter are broken to shivers, as I also have received of My Father."

The gift to Christ, then, is the same thing as the gift to His people, the overcoming House of Israel (Gen. xxxii. 28, R.V.). The Psalm first read then on Easter Day reminded the British Church and people that God had given to His blessed Son the nations, to subdue them to Himself. His agents to effect that object, it appears, as well as the mode of doing it, are shown in the succeeding verses, as well as by its inspired commentary in Rev. ii. 26, 27 (R.V.). The nations are given to Israel "to break with a rod of iron, and to dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel."

In just such way the nations in India, South Africa, New Zealand, and elsewhere, have been reduced to obedience, as history tells us. And no words describe it so well as those of this Psalm, and the reference to it in the second chapter of the Revelation of St. John. In verse 12 of the same Psalm the teaching of Israel's missionaries is epitomised. "Kiss the Son lest He be angry, and ye perish in the way. For His wrath will soon be kindled. Blessed are all they that put their trust (or take refuge) in Him" (R.V.).

Psalm lvii., the next in order, is a Psalm of David, and tells of Israel singing among "the nations." The Lord Jesus is the burden of the Psalm; but His people are joined with Him and partake of His sufferings and of His glory. "I will give thanks unto Thee, O Lord, among the peoples, I will sing praises unto Thee among the nations" (R.V.). This is their cry, and they give God all the glory, "Let Thy glory be above all the earth" (ver. 11., R.V.).

Psalm cxi. is the last of the three prescribed, but its testimony to the Israelite origin of the British is direct and clear. The Psalm begins with the Hallelujah Chorus of "Praise ye the Lord!" and then reciting "the works of the Lord," tells His people that "He hath shewed them (His people) the power of His works." How? "In giving them the heritage of the nations." This seems to be the leading idea of the three Psalms, and those who chose them for our Easter Sunday morning service, blindly pointed to the unique fact that a great Heathen Empire was to be given by the Lord Jesus Christ, our Jehovah-Jesus, to His people to bend, to break, and to teach them for Him; also that His power would be shewn in this, His work, when He should give over to them the heritage or lands of the nations, and their glory and their wealth, to have and to hold, as gifts from Him. Among those same nations Israel was to sing the Lord's praises, "blossoming and budding, and filling the face of the world with fruit;" the hallelujah shout of "praise to God!" being the cry resultant among those who hear the glorious gospel message from their lips. Thus, "God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish, but have everlasting life. For God sent not His Son into the world to judge (or condemn) the world, but that the world should be saved through Him."

But how are these blessings to become Israel's, and therefore British possessions? Through the resurrection of the crucified Saviour, who brought redemption for His people, ascended up on high, led captivity captive, and received gifts for (or among) men (Psalm lxviii. 18, R.V.). Easter Day commemorates the resurrection, without which there could have been no atonement, no blessing, no gifts for Israel, and the power of God's works could never have been shewn by giving them the heritage of the nations.

A reference to the types in Levit. xvi. 11 to 17, will show this to be the correct view. The blood of Calvary, the death, sufferings and burial of the Lord Jesus Christ, could never have atoned for one of Israel's sins, unless He had ascended to the throne above, and there in the Holy of Holies had made atonement for the sins of His people, by exhibiting it, pleading it, claiming by it, the redemption of His people from the burden of their sins. Thus, in Levit. xvi., the priest had to go alone within the veil with the blood of the bullock and the goat, and there sprinkle it upon the mercy-seat, and so make the atonement for the holy place, for "the priest, his household, and for all the assembly of Israel" (ver. 17 and 33).

It was after the atonement was made that the priest came out and blessed the congregation of the people (Levit. ix. 7, 22, 23). So it was after the resurrection of the Lord Jesus. His atonement was offered and accepted in the courts above, in order that the blessings enumerated in Psalms ii., lvii., and cxi., might be showered down upon our nation, as we have heard it recited in our ears during our late Easter commemorations. To Him be all the praise!

THE FREE DISTRIBUTION FUND.—We are requested to state that in consequence of the lamented death of Mr. Charles Horner, all letters and money for the Free Distribution Fund should be sent to Miss J. Lawrence, Rosslyn, Hampton-road, Upper Teddington, the Treasurer, till further notice.—ED.

IN consequence of advancing years, Professor Piazzi Smyth has retired from the post of Professor of Astronomy in Edinburgh University and Astronomer-Royal for Scotland. It is now many years since Professor Smyth held any class for teaching astronomy in the University, and it is said he has been dissatisfied because the observatory on the Calton Hill is so poorly equipped that he cannot compete with other observatories. Professor Smyth is seventy years old.—Daily Chronicle.

Digitized by Google

THE EDITOR OF THE "BANNER OF ISRAEL" offers his compliments to those friends who lately so kindly presented him with an illuminated testimonial letter, and begs them to peruse the accompanying correspondence which has taken place on the subject, as the only means by which he can clearly convey to them the facts of the case, and his own heartfelt appreciation of the kindness which has prompted so many to come forward, in a manner quite unsolicited, to express their approval of the way in which the journal has hitherto been conducted.

E. W. BIRD (PHILO-ISRAEL).

Aberystwyth, Wales, August, 1888.

London, July 26th, 1888.

To E. W. BIRD, ESQ. ("PHILO-ISRAEL"), EDITOR OF THE "BANNER OF ISRAEL."

DEAR SIR,—Some months ago a few friends desired to give some practical expression of their appreciation of your services in connection with the editorship of the BANNER OF ISRAEL, and it was proposed to express that appreciation in the form of a presentation to you. For the purpose of carrying this desire into effect a small committee was formed. This committee having ascertained that it would be contrary to your wishes to receive such a presentation, it was suggested that a letter should be drawn up and sent you, signed by the committee, and also by any friends who might desire to join them in this expression of appreciation of your labours in connection with the beforementioned journal.

On behalf of those who have subscribed their names, we now ask your acceptance of the accompanying Illuminated Testimonial letter. The signatures are those of friends in various parts of the world, and the committee are sure that the number would have been multiplied ten-fold had it been possible to have given publicity to the movement in the pages of the BANNER OF ISRAEL.

Trusting you will accept this small, but heartfelt, expression of but a few of your friends and admirers, and wishing you and your family every blessing,

We are, dear Sir,
Yours faithfully,
NORMAN B. BEDINGFELD,
T. W. BOYCE,
H. ST. GEORGE PRIAULX,
DOUGLAS A. ONSLOW,
R. FERGUSSON BANKS,
(Hon. Sec.)

TO EDWARD WHELER BIRD, ESQ.,
Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—We, the undersigned, desire to express our sense of obligation to you for your able and most disinterested work in editing the BANNER OF ISRAEL. Your reluctance to receive even ordinary thanks, much more any substantial expression of gratitude, only strengthens our sense of indebtedness, when we remember your continuous exertion (for now fully eleven years) at much cost of time and strength, and with so much circumspection and Christian acumen as regards current events in the world's history, and their probable tendency in the light of divine prophecy concerning Israel.

Your uniformly courteous and faithful protest against the narrowness of the traditional view which now limits "Israel" to the modern Jews, the scattered House of Judah, thereby excluding the other and much more multitudinous "nation and company of nations" of the House of Israel, who, upon their outcasting and divorce from Jehovah, became as heathen and Gentiles, but now, by the mission of Israel's Redeemer, have been restored to divine favour, and become again "sons of the living God," merits our special approval; not less than does your confidence of reassuring faith by its remarkable outspokenness claim our cordial thanks when "men's hearts are failing them for fear."

We cannot but recollect also your self-repressing abstinence from all effort to retort in kind, after painful attempts of opponents to discredit your efforts to vindicate the faithfulness of our Covenant God to His every promise.

Above all, our thankful acknowledgment is due for highly valuable addition to the evidence of the truth of Christianity which has been afforded by unanswerable arguments that the divine faithfulness has not failed (as infidels allege) in respect of His pledged word to make of Israel that "great nation" and "company of nations" which the once lost tribes have become in the British races.

For it is, we believe, in very great part through your persevering endeavours that those arguments have now penetrated through the "Gates," and to every corner of the world-wide British Empire, concurrently with your vindication of the saving truths of the Gospel of Christ, as expressed in our National Code of Doctrine and Worship.

For all this, and much more that is still unexpressed, we can but re-echo your own frequent aspiration of "Praise" to the God of all grace, with prayer that His continued blessing may rest upon both you and your labours.

Please to regard the signatures hereto attached as chiefly representative, on account of the time which would be required to multiply them at all adequately.

We are, dear Sir, in all Christian esteem and affection,
Faithfully yours,

January, 1888.

Clifton, Bristol, August 1, 1888.

MY DEAR FRIENDS AND FELLOW-HELPERS IN THE WORK OF THE "BANNER OF ISRAEL,"—Your beautiful Illuminated Testimonial Letter, in the form of a splendid album, has safely reached me, and I hasten to return to you my heartfelt thanks for your touching words.

My first thoughts on receiving so acceptable a recognition of my poor labours in connection with the BANNER were thankfulness and praise to Him who has enabled me to be of use in a cause you know to be so dear to my heart, who has also given me the power to please and satisfy you. Without His help I had failed. If I have succeeded, as you tell me I have, to Him I wish to ascribe all the praise.

It is a joy to my heart to know that not only in the United Kingdom, but in the Dominion of Canada, in British Guiana, and Australia, about 500 individuals have kindly intimated to me that the modest journal I have had the honour to conduct for over eleven years is doing its work satisfactorily, usefully, and Christianly throughout the world.

Your help on this occasion will, be sure, nerve me to fresh exertions. My duty hitherto has been my pleasure; and I cannot be too thankful that in the midst often of much provocation from opponents, and of some difficulties even from friends, I have been able to carry on my work without serious friction, or loss of the esteem of those who have differed from me.

I feel deeply your words of Christian esteem and affection, and I assure you I reciprocate them from my heart.

I am, dear friends,
Very gratefully your humble servant in the work of Israel,
EDWARD W. BIRD (PHILO-ISRAEL).

Correspondence.

TARA HILL AND ARK OF COVENANT.—THE LATE TARA FUND.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

SIR,—Some six or seven years ago, I am not certain which, I myself first commenced to raise a fund for the exploration of Tara Hill, sending the money to the former Editor of the "Messenger," in which paper he acknowledged the different sums, with the names or initials of the donors. After a short time other people, in consequence of reading the "Messenger," becoming aware that a fund was being raised, sent the Editor money direct. Seeing that the fund was increasing, I insisted on the Editor placing the money in a bank and appointing trustees to the fund, whose names eventually appeared in one of the "Messenger" numbers, so I felt that I had done my duty to the subscribers, notwithstanding which, the trustees neglected their duties, and the subscriptions were absorbed in the current expenses of keeping up the paper, without reference either to me, the originator and commencer of the fund, or to the subscribers, which ought never to have been allowed by the trustees; and, if so, they ought to have been prepared to make good the whole amount.

With regard to the Editor of the paper, I believe myself he was actuated solely by a wish to keep the paper from failing for the good of the public in general, and from no other motive, intending, no doubt, to replace the money later on, as I believe both in his integrity and honesty of purpose.

Digitized by Google

I think the sum collected amounted to over £213, and I am afraid it will be uphill work commencing the fund again, particularly after the above circumstances; but, nevertheless, I wish the promoter of it, whoever he may be, all future success, as I agree entirely with the Rev. Mr. Denny, that it is highly necessary that a sum should be raised and explorations commenced, so that the eyes of our nation, as well as those of the Jews, may be opened.

No doubt the Tara Fund commenced by me would have, by this time, reached large dimensions had it not come suddenly to grief, and I am sorry now that I did not lodge the money myself in the first instance in some good bank in the name of the Tara subscribers, to be eventually dealt with on its reaching a sufficient amount, which, I think, would not have been long, particularly if aided by proper advertisements.

C. FORTH, Colonel.

London, July 29th, 1888.

P.S.—I am induced to send the above on account of seeing a letter in the BANNER of July 25th, 1888, from the Rev. Edward Denny, headed "The Jubilee of Tara Hill."

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR PHILO-ISRAEL,—Will you kindly expend the enclosed 10s. in sending copies of the double number of the BANNER for June 6th to the enclosed addresses, using the surplus towards the "Free Distribution Fund." Permit me to take this opportunity to say how glad I am at the continued and increased success of your Journal, at which, however, I am not surprised. It is conducted upon a high line. No vulgar personalities, no party political scurrilities soil its pure pages—professing, under divine guidance and blessing, to elucidate God's truth, it does so reverently. Long may you, dear Sir, be spared to show forth with godly reverence the glorious and inspiriting truth of Our Identity with the Lost Ten Tribes. What this precious belief has been to me, ever since it was my happy lot to receive it, words fail me to express. Life has been a new thing since then, and I constantly praise the Lord for His goodness in giving me so graciously the power of belief.

With all good wishes, I am, yours in this glorious hope,

EXPECTANT.

Hull, July 23rd, 1888.

N.B.—We beg to acknowledge, with thanks, the donor's 10s., and inform him (or her) it was spent thus:—

	£	s.	d.
BANNERS, with postage, to the parties named	0	5	5
Forwarded to Miss Lawrence for the Free Distribution Fund	0	4	7
	0	10	0

We are grateful for the very kind way in which "Expectant" speaks of our BANNER's poor merits.

PHILO-ISRAEL.

July 26th, 1888.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

MY DEAR PHILO-ISRAEL,—I deem it best to inform you of my changed address and arrival at this new field of sowing and reaping. The great kindness of the readers of the BANNER did much to save the Dawley poor until near my departure, and as a proof that that kindness was not misused, I gave away to a local object of charity the very last shilling I possessed in all the world, only the month before leaving, after which I received no relief for the poor. I thank God there is no local distress here, but if there were I would rather not name it, for the BANNER friends were more noble and more godly than all beside in the past two years' trials; and even godly friends should not be strained and wearied.

I can hear of only three BANNERS, including my own, being taken in this town of 15,000 people. A highly respected Church lady had seen a notice in a former BANNER of my coming here, and her remarks on the same, passing from person to person, caused a Methodist local preacher to ask me what it all meant. Why should such a person be interested in your ministry? This caused me to explain to him the BANNER and the Identity, and sent him to study Isa. xlix. He now tells me that he went and read that chapter to his wife, and searched the points I told him; and that now he sees and confesses the Identity! What do you think of that for a start? Thus, in spite of priestly persecutions, God gives me much fruit. Last Sunday evening, at the close of the service, a prodigal wanderer repented, prayed, and believed in Christ, giving himself again to his Father who went out in the service to meet him. Do as you deem best with this letter, and with love to all Israel, believe me to be still,

Yours in the sowing and the reaping,

HENRY ROE.

4, Lorne-villas, Knox-road, Wellingborough, Northamptonshire, July 31st, 1888.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—A series of lectures on Prophecy were given in the Christian Union Buildings in Dublin last month, by Mrs. Grattan Guinness. The lectures professed to be on "Current Events in the Light of Scripture." Mrs. Guinness' strong point is, that these are the "last days," yet, while dealing largely with the Jews, and their looked-for return in the near future to Palestine, she absolutely ignored the greater part of the family of Jacob—viz., the Ten-Tribed House of Israel. I wrote the following letter to her; but have had no reply whatever up to the present date!

I may mention that receiving no reply to my first letter, I wrote again, enclosing printed copy of first letter, and asking why, when dealing with Ezekiel xxxvii., she should stop at the end of verse 14, and leave out the Scripture's own exposition of the foregoing parable on the dry bones? I have had no reply, and the only conclusion one can arrive at is, that the latter part of the chapter was left out because it contradicts point-blank the views which Mr. and Mrs. Guinness have put forward in their books!

Yours faithfully,

JOHN T. CROSTHWAIT.

"ANGLO-ISRAEL ASSOCIATION.

"5, Manders-terrace, Ranelagh-road, Dublin,
"May 17th, 1888.

"DEAR MADAM,—At some of your lectures on Prophecy in Dublin, can you inform your audience of the whereabouts of the 'great and mighty nation' of the family of Abraham in these 'last days,' foretold in Gen. xviii. 18 and Micah iv. 6, 7; to which the House of Judah is to walk, and return together with them to Palestine (Jer. iii. 18); and what exposition can you give of Hosea i. 10, 11, in conjunction with Ezekiel xxxvii., unless it be that Israel, the Ten-Tribed House, exists now as a powerful nation, dwelling in the Isles afar off from Palestine to the North-west?

"Can one handle the Scriptures fairly, and leave out of consideration such explicit prophecies, which point to the Anglo-Saxons as the remnant of Israel, when dealing with 'Current Events in the Light of Scripture'?

"I shall be pleased also to receive your written reply, which I can lay before the Anglo-Israel Association at our next meeting.

"I am, madam, yours faithfully,

"JOHN T. CROSTHWAIT.

"Mrs. Grattan Guinness."

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR PHILO-ISRAEL,—I wish to thank you for so kindly inserting my letter in the BANNER; also for the help so very kindly sent me by your present of BANNERS. I am very glad to tell you that on two or three occasions I have lent some of my own BANNERS, and I have had the pleasure of being told that they have been of great assistance in explaining many very difficult passages of Scripture, leading people to study still further. They now acknowledge the truth of Our Identity. I have had several parcels of leaflets, for which I am very grateful. The kindness of my brothers in Israel has given me great courage to go on spreading the glorious news as far as lies in my power. I also wish to thank M. A. C., and also M. A. F., for their help, and to assure any who feel inclined to assist me that the very best use shall be made of anything sent. I ask for the prayers of all believers to bless the work in hand; because the combined prayers of many must bring blessing to the object.

Yours faithfully,

COLLECTOR.

30, Rupert-street, Haymarket, July 17th, 1888.

ERRATUM.—Page 326, col. 2, line 14, read A.D. 500.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed: "Philo-Israel," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Annual Subscription for one copy weekly (including the Twelve Double Numbers) post free	0	7	6
Two Copies (including Double Numbers)	0	13	6
Three Copies ,, ,, ,, ...	1	0	4
Four Copies ,, ,, ,, ...	1	5	6
Six Copies ,, ,, ,, ...	1	16	4

Post Office Orders to be made payable at the head office, St. Martin's-le-grand, London, to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C., or F. W. PARRY & Co., 29, Paternoster-row, London.

The Editor cannot undertake to return rejected MSS. unless stamps for the purpose be sent. Parties requiring an answer should enclose a stamp.

Contents Bills and Show Cards may be obtained on application to the Publishers.

Advertisements should be sent to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

Prepaid Advertisements are inserted at the rate of thirty words for 1s. 4d.

WANTED TO PURCHASE.—"Our Inheritance in the Great Pyramid," by SMYTH. "The Great Pyramid," by BADGER. "The Great Pyramid Inside and Out," by DALMAS. Send to R. Banks & Son, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C.

Just published—Cloth, 2s. 6d.—a re-issue of

The Origin of Masonic Ritual and Tradition:

A Lecture on the Three Degrees, by BRO. WM. ROWBOTTOM, P.M., 1028, with facsimile of a very rare Masonic engraving published in 1789.

"Exquisitely clear and singularly correct in everything wherein I may be any authority or guide."—Professor PIAZZI SMYTH. "Will be found of considerable interest to many besides Masons."—Church Bells.

Oxford: S. Rowbottom and Son; London: R. Banks and Son, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C.; and F. W. Parry and Co., 29, Paternoster Row, E.C.

Price Five Shillings.—"Substantially and attractively got up, and profusely illustrated."—Oldham Chronicle.

Eildon Grange: A Tale.

By ANDREW CLARK, M.A., Vicar of St. Michael's, Oxford. "One of the most charming books. . . . The illustrations are full of playful humour."—Scotsman. "The book is undoubtedly a happy one."—The Oxford Magazine. "Both entertaining and bracing."—Dundee Advertiser.

Oxford: S. Rowbottom and Son; London: Hamilton, Adams and Co., 32, Paternoster Row, E.C.

☞ Ask for this Book at the Libraries.

WORKS BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

The History of the House of Israel. How They Were Lost and How They Were Found. Told for the children. Price 6d., cloth 1s.; post free 7d. and 1s. 1d. Fifth edition.

A Resume of the Scriptural Argument Proving the Identity of the British Race with the Lost Ten Tribes. Price 1d.; 6s. per hundred, postage 6d.

Anglo-Israelism. True, Not False. Being Philo-Israel's Reply to the Rev. Canon Bell's pamphlet, "Anglo-Israelism: 'True or False?'" Price 1d., 6s. 6d. per 100. 16 pages, crown 8vo.

An Elementary Digest or Sketch of the Chief Facts and Teachings of the Great Pyramid of Egypt. Adapted to the Unlearned and Unscientific 56 pages, Illustrated with Diagrams, price 4d., post free 5d. 10th Thousand.

Our Identity with the House of Israel. Price 4d., Reprinted from "Clifton Chronicle Letters.

Are the English People the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel? An Inquiry Establishing the Identity of the British Nation with the Lost Ten Tribes. 4d.

Our Identity: What it is Not; What it is; and Our Obligations To-day in Respect to it Being a Lecture recently delivered in London by Philo-Israel, and published by special request. Price 2d., a reduction for quantities.

Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

1s., post free 1s. 2d.

THE PRIEST, THE WOMAN, AND THE CONFESSIONAL.—"In its pages will be found ample evidence of the danger of the Confessional."—English Churchman.

R. BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

HUMAN LIFE.—FIFTY YEARS' Record of Facts, Principles, and Discoveries (just published complete) Relating to the Improvement and Preservation of Human Life on Earth. Origin and true treatment of diseases. A series of articles by DR. SAMUEL BIRLEY, M.D., Ph.D. Book form, 50 pages. SENT FREE to every applicant by the publishers, GORDON B. MURRAY & CO., 50, Theobald's-road, Holborn, E.C. Write to-day

PIANOFORTES, Harmoniums, American Organs. Why buy at shops inferior made instruments, and pay large profits, when you can buy direct from the Maker High-class Instruments, and save 50 per cent. by so doing? Full value allowed for old Instruments in exchange as part payment. Write for Price Lists and Testimonials to G. LINSTEAD, 2, Oseney Crescent, Camden Road, London. Established 1874.

POISON IN THE ASHES.

—o—

MANY people believe that Nature has somewhere a remedy for every disease. So many and so terrible are the ills of life, and so slight the pleasure we get as time flies past, that such a belief is the least faith we can show in a gracious and all-wise Providence. A few remedies—but, alas, how few!—have been found. Others, so far, lie hidden from human inquiry. Occasionally death follows quickly on the heels of the evil—an illustration of the dangerous character of the ailment to be relieved:—

For example, Nervous Dyspepsia is a comparatively new disease, growing out of the conditions of modern life. It is a joint affection of the digestive organs and of the nervous system. These two were formerly treated as separate ailments, and it was left for the clear-sighted thinkers to prove that the basis of this terrible and often fatal complication lies chiefly in the disordered and depraved functions of digestion and nutrition. They reasoned thus: "If we can induce the stomach to do its work, and stimulate the excretive organs to drive out of the body the poisonous waste matters which remain after the life-giving elements of the food have been absorbed, we shall have conquered Nervous Dyspepsia and Nervous Exhaustion. And they were right. Knowing the infallible power of Seigel's Syrup in less complicated though similar diseases, they resolved to test it fully in this. To leave no ground for doubt, they prescribed the remedy in hundreds of cases which had been pronounced incurable—with perfect success in every instance where their directions as to living and diet were scrupulously followed. Nervous Dyspepsia and Exhaustion may almost be called a peculiar English disease. To a greater or less extent half the people of this country suffer from it—both sexes and all ages. In no country in the world are there so many insane asylums filled to overflowing, all resulting from this alarming disease. Its leading symptoms are these: Frequent or continual headache; a dull pain at the base of the brain; bad breath; nauseous eructations; the rising of sour and pungent fluids to the throat; a sense of oppression and faintness at the pit of the stomach; flatulence; wakefulness and loss of sleep; disgust with food even when weak from the need of it; sticky or slimy matter on the teeth or in the mouth, especially on rising in the morning; furred and coated tongue; dull eyes; cold hands and feet; constipation; dry or rough skin; inability to fix the mind on any labour calling for continuous attention; and oppressive and sad forebodings and fear.

All this terrible group Mother Seigel's Curative Syrup removes by its positive, powerful, direct, yet painless and gentle action upon the functions of digestion and assimilation. Those elements of the food that build up and strengthen the system are sent upon their mission, while all waste matters (the ashes of life's fire) which unremoved, poison and kill, are expelled from the body through the bowels, kidneys and skin. The weak and prostrated nerves are quieted, toned, and fed by the purified blood. As the result, health, with its enjoyments, blessings, and power, returns to the sufferer, who had, perhaps, abandoned all hope of ever seeing another well day.

Mother Seigel's Curative Syrup is for sale by all chemists and medicine vendors, price 2/6 per bottle, and by the proprietors, A. J. White, Ltd., 35, Farringdon Road, London, E.C.

THE WATERS OF HERMON.

THE interesting circumstance of the re-production by modern science of these celebrated Waters of Antiquity, so famed in Biblical times, is one of the most important illustrations of the advance of the age. Differing from all other Waters they contain no mineral ingredients, so that the system, instead of being lowered by their use, is steadily built up, while the functions of life are restored to a healthy condition. And it is, therefore, with extreme gratification that this is now brought within the reach of the general public. The well-known curative properties of this famous medicine are promptly manifested in the following disorders:—Indigestion, Biliousness, Congestion of the Liver, Nausea and Vomiting, Disorders of the Stomach and Bowels and their consequences, Constipation, Piles, Flatulence, Repletion, Spasms, Discomfort or Pain after Meals, Pain Between the Shoulders, Pains in the Back and Loins, Cold in the Head, Coughs of various character, Difficulty of Breathing, Giddiness and Sick Headache, Effects of Alcohol, Overworked Brain, Affections of the Nerves, &c. Price 2s. 9d. per bottle, post free. THE WATERS OF HERMON DEPOT, 107, King Street, Hammersmith, London.

INVALUABLE REMEDY

SOUND, PURE, WHITE

TEETH!

Those who value these will try

CARBOLINE

(The Great Sanitary Tooth Paste).

1/6 & 2/6 per Pot.

Through Chemists, or post free from the Makers,

GEORGE & WELCH

WORCESTER.

Lancet writes:—"To save the teeth use a good carbolic daily."

LADIES!

WE will send a FULL-DRESS LENGTH of BEAUTIFUL CLOTH (for Good, Strong, Serviceable use) in any of the following colours, Carriage paid to any address for 10s. 6d. Colours:—Black, Blue, Fawn, Salmon, Reseda, Slate, Ruby, Brown, Grey, Claret, Sage, Old Rose, Terra-Cotta, Amber, Peacock, Tabac, Bronze, Myrtle, Drab, Olive, Grenat, Clay Green, Navy, Partridge, Heather, &c., &c. These wonderful Dress Lengths have gained a world-wide reputation for magnificence, cheapness and durability, having no equal.

The Lady's Pictorial says:—"They are excellent quality and very good value for the money."

Thousands of Testimonials from all parts of the world.

Ladies should write at once for Patterns, which may be had free, and need not be returned.

AN AMAZING OFFER!!—We shall give a very handsome Brocaded Silk Handkerchief with each dress-length ordered from us during this season. Write for patterns. LUTUS B. LEATHLEY, Armley, Leeds.

Certain HARNESS' Cure.

ELECTROPATHIC BELT

FOR

SCIATICA

R. J. WATSON, Esq., 13, Market Street, Harwich, writes:—"Harness' Electropathic Belt has completely cured me of sciatica. After wearing it for a week I got better, and am now quite free from pain."

Guaranteed to generate a mild continuous current of Electricity, which speedily cures all Disorders of the Nerves, Stomach, Liver and Kidneys. Thousands of Testimonials. Pamphlet & Advice free on application to Mr. C. B. Harness, Consulting Electrician, the Medical Battery Co. Ltd.

Only Address,

52, OXFORD ST., LONDON, W. (Corner of Rathbone Place.)

Call to-day, if possible, or write at once

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C. F. W. PARRY (late GUEST & Co.), 29 PATERNOSTER-ROW WEDNESDAY, AUG. 22, 1888 [All rights reserved

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."

(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India.)

"And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the Forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS of the EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. XII., No. 609. Entered at Stationers' Hall.] WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 29, 1888. [PRICE ONE PENNY.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
The Invasion Scare Again	341
The Frontier that Marches with the Zambesi	342
Why do the People Reject the Identity. By G. D. Y.	343
The Unprotected Female	343
British Settlers in the United States	344
The Colonial and Continental Church Society	345
The Third Decennial Council of the Anglican Church, 1888	346
Lost Israel Found	347
The Universal Language	347
Obituary	347
Correspondence	347

THE INVASION SCARE AGAIN.

WE feel bound to revert to the subject of the invasion of our land again, because the scare was once more raised in the House of Lords, on the evening of June 29, and some notable things were said on that occasion which the BANNER OF ISRAEL ought to notice. In the first place; while Lord Wolseley adhered to the statement that it was quite possible to invade England from France, with 100,000 men, carried on 150,000 to 160,000 tons of shipping, he had to admit what it was not clearly understood at first he did allow—namely, that it would be impossible for the French, even with their ships at hand, to put their 100,000 men on board their ships, and start to invade us in one night, by way of surprise, and without our being previously well aware of what they were about. This is a consolation for us unhappy Israelites! We shall have notice, it seems, of our enemies' intentions, and shall be able to take measures to deal with the coming Armada. We may add that God—our God—the God of Israel, will also know all about the movements and intentions of the French in that case; and that though Lord Wolseley, Lord Salisbury, the Duke of Cambridge, and all the other noble lords who took part in this debate, never so much as once hinted at His existence, but ignored Him utterly and totally, He will, in that supreme moment, take thought for His peoples' safety, and will devise means to upset the plans of those who would destroy them. One point raised by the Duke of Cambridge during the debate was worthy of our readers' particular attention. It was this. He declared what is perfectly true; that till this last year or two, no one thought about the necessity of arming (that is, fortifying) our coaling stations, which we call our Gates! What could possibly have produced in our nation this strange and really absurd neglect? The Duke stated the case very simply, but sensibly. "If you have coaling stations, which are necessary," he said, "they must entail an additional number of men, because the fleet could not take charge of them alone. There must be troops to defend them—without troops they would be worse than useless." But we have had our Gates for scores of years, and trusting to our navy and our prestige to defend them, have given many of them no men or fortifications at all to protect them. We are awaking now from our strange lethargy, and are obeying God's commands issued quite recently, in a voice of thunder. "Come, My people, enter thou into thy chambers, and shut thy doors about thee;" a precept directing us, we believe, as a nation, to secure our Gates and safeguard them by an adequate system of fortifications and of garrisons. Our repeated scares, no doubt, have done the nation good service in this respect, and acted as God's mouthpiece in the matter in question.

Another point in the debate which requires allusion, was the account given by Lord Elphinstone of our present naval strength, as compared with that of France and Russia. The account was most encouraging, and should tend to allay alarm and lead to more confidence in God's protecting care of His people, to whom, as it is shown, He has given such colossal strength. His lordship's words were these:—

The following (omitting coast defence) was a statement of the relative strength of the navies of Great Britain, France, and Russia:—In 1888 Great Britain had thirty-four armoured battle ships, France had twenty-three, and Russia two. In 1890 the numbers would be respectively, forty, twenty-four, and seven. In 1888 Great Britain had six armoured cruisers, France four, and Russia six. In 1890 England would have fourteen armoured cruisers, France four, and Russia three. In 1888 we had one torpedo ram, while France and Russia had none. In 1888 England had seventy-three unarmoured ships, with a speed of eleven to sixteen knots, while France had fifty-one, and Russia twenty-six. In 1890 we should have seventy-eight, France would have thirty-seven, and Russia twenty-six. In 1888 England had twenty-one unarmoured ships of sixteen knots and over (exclusive of gun-boats), France had six, and Russia none. In 1890 England would have thirty-nine ships of that class, France twenty-one, and Russia four. In 1888 England had four torpedo gun vessels with a speed of nineteen to twenty-one knots, France had eight, and Russia one. In 1890 England would have thirteen, France eight, and Russia two of that class of vessels. That list did not include the two protected cruisers, the Blake and Blenheim, of 9,000 tons, and twenty-two knots, and capable of steaming 15,000 knots at ten-knot speed. Nor did this include the Vulcan protected cruiser, of 6,600 tons, and twenty knots, and capable, of steaming 12,000 knots at ten-knot speed. The battle-ships, Minotaur, Achilles, Hector, Valiant, and Defence, were not included in the list, because it had not yet been decided to repair them. It should be noted that three ironclads were on foreign stations.

Digitized by Google

The above is, as the Times declares, satisfactory, and, to a certain extent, reassuring, "as far as the statements go." But the Times requires positive, tangible evidence, altogether apart from God's providence, and His promises to this His people, because it does not believe the British to be Israel, and if they were proved, in its estimation, to be Israel, it clearly sees no reason to acknowledge that God has anything whatever to do with the matter; that His blessing is immaterial to our safety; and that, given the big ships, big guns, and big battalions, we may trust to them, and leave God Almighty pretty well out of consideration altogether. But God will not be so treated, set aside, and despised! He controls the whole situation, and has made certain promises to, and covenants with, this nation, His people Israel, which must be estimated and weighed. He has promised absolute immunity to His people, and guaranteed that our islands shall not be invaded. The promise contained in 2 Sam. vii. 10, R.V., covers this point. He probably has His own means for effecting His object and fulfilling His promise, one such being His command to us to fortify our Gates, home and foreign, and to raise our navy to such strength that our foes shall never dare to challenge our command of the Channel, or dare to invade our territory. It must indeed be offensive to Him to find us ignoring His promises and protection, but making much of the secondary means He employs to safeguard our land. And yet He has given us abundant cause to reflect that, trusting to the arm of flesh, the ships, the men, and guns, has proved a failure from our earliest days, as a nation. When we were threatened by the Spanish Armada in 1588, the arm of flesh was an utter failure. God gave us the victory by reason of His winds and storms, which He used to ruin our enemy. When the great Napoleon thought to invade and destroy us, as an Empire, in 1805, he found he could not move out of his own harbours, because the convoying fleet was not forthcoming, but had been destroyed by Nelson at Trafalgar. God cannot be left out of the account, but must always be reckoned with as the Ruler of the history of the nation. This nation is His own chosen people Israel, and it is not likely that He who solemnly promised them perfect security in their Island Home, will now abandon them to the tender mercies of their enemies, who desire to rob and ruin them, arresting thereby all the work that God has been doing by their instrumentality, for the benefit and blessing of the nations of the world, whereof the Tribes of His chosen ones are the appointed agents. Let Israel, then, praise the Lord for His goodness to them, and trust Him for their safety in the place He has appointed for their domicile; where, also, He has promised to safeguard them day and night continually.

THE FRONTIER THAT MARCHES WITH THE ZAMBESI.

THE public will realise before long the enormous stride which the nation has taken in regard to the late announcement made by the British Government in the face of the Boers especially, and of the whole world in general, that in South Africa the sphere of their influence shall in future extend to the Zambesi. The fact has created a great sensation in those quarters where African affairs are understood, and where it is seen that in our discussions with Portugal regarding the navigation of that river, the resolve of the British nation will give it a much stronger position. It is stated, too, that the declaration has been made at the critical moment when France and Germany were about to make the same respecting the territory in question, which would have placed the Zambesi far away from British protected lands, and made the free navigation of that river of little avail to the merchants of this Empire. But a greater and more important result will probably take place from the declaration in question. The great Boer, or Africander, question must be settled soon, and the declaration, "which cuts off the access of the Boers to the rich and tempting country North of the Transvaal and South of the Zambesi, will probably force that to the front for a solution."

The Boers cannot be expected to relish the idea of being entirely surrounded by the hated British, and may try to cut the toils which surround them by the sword. This issue must be decided ere long, and it must be settled sooner or later who is to be supreme in South Africa, the British or the Boers? We Anglo-Israelites, who study the Scriptures, know what the result of any collision will certainly be in the long run. The dominion of the earth is given to Israel, but she may have to struggle for it by force of arms as she had to do in India and Canada. The Boers seem full of fight, and are now brought to bay. If they mean to oppose the march of British power they must act at once before the numbers of diggers and settlers greatly increases. If they allow a few months to elapse without striving for the mastery, the mere numbers of the British surging into the land will settle the matter against them without any appeal to arms.

The fatal error of Majuba Hill, which we attribute, of course, to Mr. Gladstone's misjudged humanity, no doubt aggravates the case, for it inflated the Boers with an exaggerated estimate of their own powers, and increased their contempt for an enemy who has, however, the power of the God of Israel behind them. Time will show what the result of the present complications will be, but it is clear that the importance of the act of the Government here cannot be exaggerated, and that it carries with it the possibilities, if not the probability, of a terrible war in South Africa, which will tax our powers there to the utmost. We trust it will not come to that, but that God will give us peace without a collision with the Boers. We believe He will enable us by sheer force of numbers and the hopelessness of success which the Boers must see to be the fact, to secure at last a firm and united Government of British and Boers together in the Transvaal, and so cause the flag of the Queen to wave from the Zambesi Southwards to the sea in token of the existence of a vast federated dominion in South Africa, British in character and allegiance.

Our opponents, seeing these things, must surely be sometimes puzzled to account for them on any principles which can be regarded as rational. Why should our race be selected for every blessing God promised to His people Israel? And why should they all be accumulated just at this epoch of the history of the world which must be literally the dregs of the last days? Spiritual blessings we have of every kind, and they are all those that God promised to the afterseed of Abraham. The Word of God, God's laws, His Sabbaths, the outpourings of His Spirit—all these we have in great abundance; and as to the temporal blessings there is not one which was promised to the chosen people absent from the list of those we now enjoy. These are the national blessings of multitudinousness, the Gates, the wealth, the Colonies, developing rapidly into nations, the heathen Empire, the Davidic dynasty secure from interruption, the safeguarded Island home, the Home-Gates secure from the blockade of foreign foes, and consequently the supremacy of the sea, allowing our ships and steamers the free, uninterrupted navigation of the ocean at all seasons. Were we not Israel, and therefore under the necessity of enlarging our borders whenever God may point the way, it were madness to increase the sphere of British influence to the South banks of the Zambesi, and so enlarge our national responsibilities and dangers, which are large enough already in all conscience. But being Israel we have no option. We have to be the paramount Power at the Cape, as we are in India, or leave the country altogether. The latter alternative is simply out of the question, and therefore we must, as opportunity offers, "lengthen our cords and strengthen our stakes," "enlarge the place of our tents, and stretch forth the curtains of our habitation" (Isa. liv. 2, 3, R.V.).

Digitized by Google

We have, whether it be prudent or not, to "spread abroad on the right hand and on the left; our seed has to possess the nations, and make the desolate cities to be inhabited" (verse 3, R.V.). The Right Hon. J. Chamberlain's opinion of our national duties now has undergone a change, and as we pointed out on page 237 of this Journal, Vol. XII., he thinks that our duties lie just in accord with God's prophetic word. He would have us "frankly accept our obligations and responsibilities. We should firmly and resolutely maintain our hold over territories we have already acquired, and we should freely offer our Protectorate to those friendly chiefs and people who are stretching out their hands towards us, seeking our protection and our interference." These words cover the whole ground! They show that some of our foremost statesmen are at one with God's Word, though quite unwittingly, and see that the policy God directed Israel to pursue is just the one which is best suited to our nation's condition at this epoch of her history. These things are worthy of our careful consideration, but the wonder is that godly and intelligent men give no thought to the strange events of the day, or if they do, refuse to see how exactly God's prophetic Word agrees in marking out for Israel the history of the British people.

WHY DO THE PEOPLE REJECT THE IDENTITY?

By G. D. Y.

PERHAPS some will say, "But do the people reject Our Identity when it is properly put before them?" Most certainly they do, and in some cases they seem to dread it as much as they would a pestilence! Some will not listen at all, and others will particularly avoid you when they know you belong to that so-called "crazy set." This has been my experience for the last twelve years, and I am afraid it has been the experience of many others. It certainly is very remarkable that a glorious truth, so plain, so clear, so exalting, and so rich in blessing, should, at the hands of wise and godly people, meet with such rejection, indeed, I might almost say contempt; but so it is. Is there any answer to this? I think there is. I do not say mine is the correct one, for many, perhaps, could give some better reason for the great indifference manifested.

Many people think that as God at the present time allows the veil to remain before the eyes of Judah so that they cannot see the Messiah, He also in like manner allows the veil to remain before the eyes of Israel, so that they are unable to see their origin. I think it is perfectly clear, from the words of the Saviour Himself, that the Jews will not, and cannot, receive the Gospel at the present time, their work and mission as Jews not being complete. When the disciples asked the Saviour why He taught the Jews in parables (see Matt. xiii. 10), "because having eyes they see not, ears, and hear not, neither do they understand," He quoted Isa. vi. 7—10. We find the same truth respecting the same people even more definitely stated, and this is confirmed by the other evangelists, and history and experience prove the same to be true. Such being the case, we see how puny are all man's efforts if not in accord with the divine will. In precisely the same condition do we find Israel to-day. We confess that we came out of the land of Egypt, and out of the house of bondage. We confess that we are the chosen people, and ask that we may be made joyful. We confess "there is none other that fighteth for us, but only Thou, O God," and that "we have erred and strayed from Thy ways like lost sheep," etc. These, and many other expressions of a similar nature, are daily made use of in prayer, and still we fail to see that we are the people to whom they all so pointedly apply; and when the fact is pointed out it is either rejected or treated with contempt. One quarter of the evidence upon any other subject would rivet our attention and lead us to inquiry. We ask again, why this indifference? And we say, because it is not God's will that we should as a nation see the Identity now. The time for the full manifestation is not yet. One here and one there (as in the case of the Jews) is permitted to see this glorious truth. Still we are to continue sowing the seed, in season and out of season. But when in the providence of God the time shall come when the people are permitted to know this truth, the whole earth will ring with shouts of exultant joy.

Hull, June, 1888.

[NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—If it be God's will that the Jews should remain obdurate to the Gospel invitation since God has more work for them to do as Jews, our correspondent, we believe, would therefore not have us trouble the Jew with the offer of Christ's salvation. But in our British case, which, according to him, is on "all fours" with that of the Jew, he bids us "continue sowing the seed in season and out of season." Where is the consistency of this? We ought, logically, according to his view, to refrain from telling our nation of their glorious origin, for God must have some great work for them to do, as "Britain," and not "Israel." Why, then, proclaim Our Identity to the unwilling ears which God has closed?—ED.]

"THE UNPROTECTED FEMALE."

"PUNCH'S" capital cartoon, in the issue of May 26, has doubtless attracted our readers' attention. It is entitled, "The Unprotected Female," representing Britannia standing on the shore of Britain alone, and apparently defenceless, save for the sword of patriotism she clasps to her side with both her hands. Her forlorn condition, however, is shown by her surroundings. For in every direction about her on the seaside are scattered "broken contracts," bent cutlasses, damaged bayonets, twisted sword-blades, burst guns, and portions of wrecked vessels. The mistress of all these failures—betrayed by her own sons—stands, nevertheless, undaunted, and haughtily surveying the ruins about her, "unafraid," because with "patriot zeal arrayed." "As for fright," says Punch,—

"Nay, stands she day and night,
Love armed, with eyes alight,
Calm and collected!"

And the reason of the calmness is described thus:—

"England's still patriot!
Hearts at delay wax hot;
But while we've hearts, she's not
All 'unprotected'!"

So far the London Charivari. So far the artist who depicts a noble figure, nobly defiant, and fearless amidst appalling circumstances. One thing only is wanting in the picture, and in the lines which describe it in Punch. God is wanting! He is not in all the letterpress, and He is absent in the portrait of Israel which Tenniel so skilfully presents to us! Israel can find no adequate defence in her people's patriotism if her soldier's swords are worthless, their bayonets are made of lead, and her ship guns burst and shatter in the using! Patriotism, in these days of big battalions, and monster ships and guns, can offer no adequate defence against the enemy who possesses all of them! If British-Israel is reduced so low as Punch declares is indeed the case, then, if there be no God to help her, the "unprotected" nation has but a short while to live, and her national life will speedily end. But, thank God, it is not so! Israel is not an "unprotected," but a protected "Female"! She has God to sustain her; the Son of God, her Divine King, to defend her; and the Holy Ghost, who is God the Spirit, to teach, and warn, and guide her. Here are some of the promises which go to show that this is indeed the case.

Digitized by Google

"But thou Israel . . . thou art My servant, I have chosen thee . . . fear not thou, for I am with thee. Be not dismayed, for I am thy God: I will strengthen thee, yea, I will help thee; yea, I will uphold thee with the right hand of My righteousness" (Isa. xli. 8—13, R.V.). Again: "Behold, He that keepeth Israel shall neither slumber nor sleep. The Lord is thy Keeper. . . . The Lord shall keep thee from all evil" (Psa. cxxi. 1—8, R.V.). "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world" (Matt. xxviii. 20, R.V.). "My Spirit abideth among you, fear ye not" (Haggai ii. 5, marg., R.V.).

This, then, is Israel's defence, not a patriotism which allows "broken contracts," bent swords and bayonets, bursting guns and wretched implements of war, furnished by false contractors and faithless traitors among British manufacturers. Our true defence is God's promises and covenants made with His people Israel, and surviving this day for His glory, but for His people's comfort and security. The failure of our earthly weapons, even if it were as complete as the picture in Punch hints it is, would make no difference! God can ensure the safety of "His chosen nation," even if all her ships were rotten, and all her arms, ashore and afloat, were in the wretched plight the cartoon pretends they are to-day.

The facts of our condition, as compared with those of French commerce, now show that we are indeed, humanly speaking, in a dangerous position of weakness in respect to national defence. For it seems, by Lord Brassey's figures (Times, May 25, 1888), that British mercantile steam and sailing tonnage, together, amounted, in 1886, to 7,361,818, that of the French to 993,291. Our commerce then was six or seven times larger than that of the French, but our naval power, to protect our huge commerce, was then not nearly twice as great as that of France, but in some respects not even on an equality! These facts warn us of the necessity that exists to put our house in order, and shut our Gates about us, according to the prophecies, to deter, by superior force, the attempt of an enemy to surprise and capture our floating commerce, and threaten our Outland Empire and Gates. These things we must do. But we must never give way to fear, or imagine that our safety rests upon earthly arms and ships of war, since God is now showing us our utter weakness in these respects, and telling us, while we mend these failings in our nation's armour, never to put our trust in them, but only in our God, who has assured us, not twice nor thrice, that come what will, He will never leave us nor forsake us. Therefore, let Israel praise the Lord, and give thanks to Him for His tender, loving care of His chosen ones —His people and inheritance!

BRITISH SETTLERS IN THE UNITED STATES.

MR. J. G. TAYLOR has very clearly and cleverly shown us, in his article, "A Canaanitish Stratagem" (p. 249), "the Identity reason why" so many more British emigrants proceed just now to the States in preference to the British Colonies. Manasseh was in danger of being swamped by the Irish Canaanite, and God therefore has been directing the vast mass of British emigration to the States to counteract the Irish invasion, and to absorb it, in order to keep American Manasseh for Israel, and to root out the Irish alien element by assimilation. This gave the reader a general idea of the direction things were taking, but did not show exactly how, at the present moment, movements are taking place which are tending to deprive the Irish of their present political power in the States. What gives them this power is the fact that the average native American citizen cares nothing about politics, except in so far as they affect his business. He is content that that work should be done by the Irish citizen, "who takes a keen interest in it, and has caused the Irish vote to become a very important factor in all elections, State, Federal, and municipal." But where is the British emigrant the while, who for years past has been pouring into the States, alongside the Irish? How have his votes gone? His influence has been, politically, absolutely nil! for the best of reasons, that, as a general rule, the English, Scotch, and Welsh settlers have not cared to become naturalised Americans, and therefore, at the ballot boxes they have not appeared, to counteract the Irish! The overpowering influence of the British immigration has, hitherto, gone for nothing. But now a change is taking place, and it has been brought about by the Irish Nationalists here in Britain, and in America, whose object has been, as we all know, to cause the separation of Ireland from Great Britain. Their conduct has satisfied the British settlers in the States that it is in their own power to defeat the Separatists, by becoming naturalised Americans themselves, and by thus exercising the franchise, in order to defeat and overwhelm the Irish vote! Thus the efforts of rebellious Irishmen, aided by rebellious Britons, to sever the Union of the United Kingdom, "are causing Britons in America to yield up their birthright, in order to assist in maintaining that very Union"! The British, generally, are reluctant to surrender their birthright, and voluntarily to accept the position of "aliens." But Mr. Goldwin Smith has lately taught them, in the States, that the best service British settlers can render to their Mother Country, just now, is to qualify themselves for sitting in the councils of their adopted country. This carried out, will add, it is said, 130,000 British voters to the State of New York alone! The result will be, that the Irish vote will not, in future, be so valuable as the British vote in American elections, and the shouting Irishman of Mr. Taylor's vivid description, is likely to find his political position undermined by the patriotic action of the far more numerous Britishers, who, naturalised, will counteract the Irishman's influence, and leave him powerless on the ground.

The Canaanites' ascendency in the States is doomed, by reason of the influx of naturalised and voting Britishers into America; and we may see here another of those marked, providential interferences in favour of our race and country, which show that God is still the God of Israel, and guards and guides us as the apple of His eye, protecting us from the subtle snares of Irish Canaanites, which everything, hitherto, has seemed to favour. These facts lead us to see how wise has been the providence of our God in sending the vast majority of the emigrants from this country to the States, instead of to the British Colonies, during recent years, thereby destroying the political influence of the Irish in one large section of "the House of Joseph." If it be asked, what influence the Irish or British vote, in the States, can possibly have on the affairs of the United Kingdom, we reply, that the chronic rebellion which afflicts Ireland at the present moment is fed by the American Irish, and by the fact that they command so largely at the American elections. They have a ruling and hostile influence, further, in all questions where British interests clash with those of the United States; and therefore, whatever destroys the value of the Irish vote, and enhances that of the loyal British, naturalised American, who still loves the Mother Country, serves the latter, by neutralising the votes of the hostile Irish. The Fisheries' dispute has been envenomed by the Irish vote, and the open sore, regarding Ireland and the dynamite conspiracy, owes all its strength and virulence to the Irish influence which keeps it open. All these dangers are likely to be averted now; and for the remedy applied, let Israel praise the Lord!

THE report that Princess Christian is about to join the Church of Rome is denied. The Queen is said to have dissuaded her from such a step. Another report says the Princess is "one of the strongest of Protestants."

Digitized by Google

THE COLONIAL AND CONTINENTAL CHURCH SOCIETY.

EVERY office-bearer, and every chaplain and missionary of the Colonial and Continental Church Society ought to be an Anglo-Israelite. Their work lies among our own kith and kin on the continent, and in the colonies. To them they convey the Gospel, the Bible, the Sabbath, the ten true laws of God, the means of grace and the hope of glory. In all parts of the world where the Anglo-Saxons are spread abroad, "to the west, the east, the north, and the south," they "blossom and bud, and are filling the face of the world with fruit." They fulfil the work the Lord Jesus assigned to that nation to whom He transferred "the kingdom of God" when He took it from the House of Judah, for they "bring forth the fruits thereof." The objects of their solicitude are the children of Israel, our own sons and daughters, our brothers and sisters, gone abroad as exiles in search of subsistence or health, and requiring there the spiritual aid which this society furnishes them. We can hardly conceive of a true and genuine Anglo-Israelite who, knowing the claims of this society, has hitherto refrained from helping it. It seems to us they are bound to assist, since "the children must first be filled," and it is the duty of those who send out their offspring to colonise "the ends and uttermost parts of the earth" to see to it that those who thus go forth are followed by the Gospel of the grace of God, by the blessing of the Sabbath, and by all that is contained in the word of God. The Colonial and Continental Church Society has just put forward a "plea for the colonies," which we think deserving of notice by our readers, and we therefore quote a portion of it for their information. There is much in the words of the writer which might have originated in the BANNER OF ISRAEL, and we regard with real wonder the declaration that in the author's opinion "the colonists, like Abraham, are called to be the fathers of mighty nations." What we would ask is, how that can be unless the British and their colonial children are "the afterseed of Abraham"? How can they inherit so stupendous and unique a blessing as this which God tied up by oath to "His friend" for ever, and fail to be at the same time, "the children of Israel" enjoying the benefits described? The Colonial and Continental Church Society declares below that the spread of British institutions, and the British gifts of the word of God, will bring about the consummation to which all God's purposes are tending, namely, the "filling of the earth with the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea." But this can only be effected, according to the prophecies, by the instrumentality of the children of Israel, admitted blindly, by the writer of the following, to be the British race scattered over the face of the earth, in order to spread the kingdom of Christ, "upon the best and surest foundations." Our quotation then is as follows:—

4 If, like the prodigal, the colonists have left their homes against their parents' wishes, and merely for the sake of adventure, they might be allowed to feed upon husks till, like the prodigal, they saw the error of their ways. But is it not the case that in every part of England, in north and south, in east and west, the one question that presses for solution on parents in every grade of life is: "What are we to do with our children?" The fair fields of Kent, the busy looms of Lancashire, the docks of Liverpool, and the shops of London, no longer suffice to give employment and bread to the teeming population of the land. Fields of activity and means of livelihood must be sought for abroad. Is our duty as a Church and nation limited to those of our children for whom we can find a living at home? Or does it not also extend with equal force to those whom famine drives into exile? And does not the Society's claim come home to us with all the force of parental, brotherly, and national feeling? For there is scarcely a Churchman in the British Islands who has not a son, a brother, or a kinsman in the Colonies. By providing means of education and of grace for the Colonies the Society is simply smoothing the way for our own children who are under the painful necessity of leaving home and country, of toiling in many cases like navvies, and of being deprived of comforts, both temporal and spiritual, which they enjoy as a matter of course at home.

5. And they are proud to remain English in their new homes. Their loyalty is beyond question. The parish Church and the book of Common Prayer, which they too often treated with contemptuous neglect in the old home, become inexpressibly dear to them in the new one. The dear old flag waves over them still. The mere mention of Queen Victoria is sure to call forth the loudest cheers. Their prayers continually ascend for the Parent Church and State. They never meet in political or social assembly without singing the National Anthem. And their sturdy sons are always ready to come forward to fight the battles of England. For their origin and their patriotism they have the strongest claim upon the motherland. And they have done nothing to forfeit that claim. On the contrary, they have done much to create such a claim if it did not already exist.

6. For what is the outcome of their labours? What is called the British Empire is, in a great measure, their work. It is they who have laid the foundation, and are rearing the structure of Greater Britain. To them is due a large share of the enormous development of England's manufactures and commerce. They send cheap flour and meat to the English market. They supply the English builder and manufacturer with cheap timber and wool. Their knives and forks come from Sheffield, their cottons from Manchester, and their steel rails from Birmingham. A fleet of English ships, and an army of English sailors, are employed in this exchange of commodities. And the farms of Manitoba, and the plains of Australia, and the offices and schools and Churches of all the Colonies, offer the most tempting prizes to many who can scarcely earn their bread at home.

7. But there are higher and less material considerations than these. Canada, with its population of five millions, is as powerful as England was in the days of Cromwell, and may be as powerful in a hundred years hence as England is to-day. Australia, with its population of three millions, is as strong as the United States were when they became independent, and may be as strong as the United States are now at no very distant date. No mention need here be made of New Zealand, South Africa, and a thousand islands of the seas. Possibilities of wealth and of power, beyond the dream of the enthusiasts, lie within the grasp of the English race in these world-wide possessions; yes, and possibilities beyond the vision of the seer, of happiness, of freedom, of civilization, and of true religion, lie within the reach of millions untold of our fellow-countrymen, in the forest and the prairie, where even now the wild deer and the buffalo roam at large. And better still, possibilities, beyond the hopes of the most sanguine apostle, lie in our very hands, and in those of our children, for spreading the light of Christian truth, through our Colonies, to the utmost bounds of man's habitation.

8. What a prospect in the providence of God lies before the English race! And how easily this glorious prospect may be marred if the moral and religious character of the colonists, who are called, like Abraham, to be the fathers of mighty nations, is wilfully neglected, if the educational and religious institutions of these infant states, which justice alone can exalt into truly great kingdoms, are not adequately developed! Brother Englishmen and Churchmen, are you ambitious to do great things? Are you sincerely anxious for the well-being of the land of your birth, for the spiritual good of the land of your children's adoption, for the best interests of the English race scattered over the face of the earth, for the extension of the kingdom of Christ, upon the best and surest foundations, in the midst of infant colonies that cannot fail to become mighty empires, and for the irresistible advance, through the medium of these mighty empires, of the Word of God and of British institutions, which mean everywhere justice and freedom, until "the earth is filled with the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea"? Then, do what in you lies to aid the work of the Colonial and Continental Church Society.

So far the author of the "plea." The sons of Ephraim-Joseph "sown among the peoples," are declared by the prophet Zechariah to be blessed of the Lord. "I have redeemed them," He said, "and they shall increase as they have increased. And . . . . they shall remember Me in far countries, and they shall live with their children, and shall return" (Zech. x. 8, 9, R.V.). A people so distinguished as Israel in her colonies, must be specially the objects of the Lord's care and protection. The society then which has just issued "The Plea" need be under no kind of alarm. The Lord will not forsake His people, but will prosper their society's work for these exiles, and will bless that enterprise largely while they are carrying it out. To Him be all the praise!

Digitized by Google

THE THIRD DECENNIAL COUNCIL OF THE ANGLICAN CHURCH, 1888.

THE Lambeth Conference is over, and the prelates assembled have issued their Encyclical Letter to "the faithful in Christ Jesus," according to their custom. The conference was attended by 145 prelates, the president being the Archbishop of Canterbury, and his supporters the Archbishop of York, the Archbishops of Armagh and Dublin, the Primus of Scotland, the Presiding Bishop of the United States, represented by the Bishop of Minnesota (accompanied by 28 American bishops), the Metropolitan of Calcutta and four Indian bishops, the Metropolitan of Guiana, of Sydney, with bishops from New Zealand, South Africa, Canada, Gibraltar, and Jerusalem, and several missionary bishops. The conference splendidly represented Israel's world-wide dominion and influence. As it largely included the United States, it was a representation of the whole House of Joseph, Ephraim and Manasseh included. The great lesson that the conference had for us Anglo-Israelites was this, that the kingdom of God is with Israel of the two divisions of the nation represented by Ephraim and Manasseh, also that the House of Joseph brings forth abundantly the fruits of the kingdom of God (Matt. xxi. 43).

In the first place the Encyclical Letter shows that the Church of Israel is a protesting Church, which sets its face against all evil. It is opposed to intemperance, yet refuses to sanction the language of those who condemn the use of wine in itself, and it disapproves of the action of those who withdraw wine from the proper celebration of the Holy Communion as unfit for the occasion. In reference to purity, the conference spoke out manfully on the right side, and denounced the social evil in all its bearings, upholding marriage, and refusing to sanction the polygamy of the heathen, without, however, dogmatically declaring how a fixed remedy was to be applied. Socialism was discussed, but admitted to be a difficulty requiring wisdom to surmount. It inculcated the care of emigrants, the need of definite teaching of the faith, and above all the necessity that exists for a more careful study of the Holy Scriptures, since they are the main instrument in all teaching of religion.

The soundness of the conference in matters connected with the evangelical faith is shown by one grand sentence of the letter, which we quote:—"We must recommend (they say) to the clergy cautious and industrious treatment of the points of controversy (connected with the Scriptures), and must earnestly press upon them the importance of taking as the central thought of their teaching our Lord Jesus Christ, as the sacrifice for our sins; as the healer of our sinfulness; the source of all our spiritual life; and the revelation to our consciences of the law and motive of all moral virtue. To Him and to His teachings all the teachings of the Old Testament converged, and from Him all the teachings of the New Testament flow in spirit, in force, and in form. The work of the Church is the application and extension of the blessings of the Incarnation."

These are glorious statements, showing that our world-wide Empire contains a world-wide Church whose prelates and leaders rest upon the cardinal doctrines of a standing, but not falling Church, namely, man's universal depravity, and justification by faith only in the death, resurrection, and ascension of a Divine Substitute, the Lord Jesus Christ. In regard to the Nonconforming Churches at home and the Churches abroad, the conference holds its own ground with Christian charity, yet with stedfastness to the truth as it is in Jesus. In matters of faith and discipline, the Church represented by the conference abides by its own standards. But as to non-essentials unity is desired and would be welcomed. Towards the Scandinavian, the old Catholic, and the Eastern Churches the conference would wish to hold out the hand of sympathy and friendship "without any sacrifice of principles which we hold to be essential." Towards those Churches the conference declares "with thankfulness that there exist no bars such as are presented to communion with the Latins by the formulated sanction of the infallibility of the Church residing in the person of the Supreme Pontiff, by the doctrine of the immaculate conception, and other dogmas imposed by the decrees of Papal Councils. The Church of Rome has always treated her Eastern sisters wrongfully."

We have heard objections raised to these sentences as showing the conference's willingness to embrace Rome in certain circumstances! We see in the words a consistent protest against Rome's corruptions and errors, and as these will never be given up, a final and everlasting separation announced from a lapsed and ruined Church. The conference appealed as the foundations of her belief and form of worship to "Holy Writ, the Creeds, the Prayer Book and Catechism, the Ordinal, and to the Thirty-nine Articles, the special heritage of the Church of England."

The prelates were especially sound on the subject of the holy observance of one day in seven, called the Lord's-day, declaring it was of divine obligation, and its religious observance imperative. "In the Lord's-day," they say, "we have a priceless heritage. Whoever misuses it incurs a terrible responsibility." They call on the master and employer, therefore, jealously to guard herein the privileges of the servant and workman.

The opinion of the conference on the articles, four in number, which supply a basis on which, by God's blessing, an approach may be made towards home reunion, are worthy of note by Anglo-Israelites. They are—1st, the Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments, as containing all things necessary to salvation, and as being the rule and ultimate standard of faith.

2. The Apostles' Creed, as the Baptismal symbol; and the Nicene Creed, as the sufficient statement of the Christian faith.

3. The two sacraments ordained by Christ Himself, baptism and the Lord's Supper, ministered with unfailing use of Christ's words of institution, and of the elements ordained by Him; and

4. The historic episcopate locally adapted in the methods of its administration to the varying needs of the nations and peoples called of God into the unity of His Church.

Such are the main outlines of the resolutions arrived at by the third Anglican Conference. We may not all be able to approve of the whole of their proceedings, but we take it to be a good sign of God's blessing on our Israelitish Church that in regard to doctrine, the rule of faith, Sabbath observance, temperance, chastity, and desire for brotherly unity, if no fundamental principle be violated, the representatives of our Church are so sound and so orthodox. How could it be otherwise, however, if the Anglo-Saxon race be the House of Joseph, including Ephraim and Manasseh? God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Spirit, have all three distinctly promised to live and dwell among them for ever, and can we imagine that under those circumstances the Church of this House would ever lapse into corruption and error irrevocable like the Church of Rome, the apostate?

We have these promises in Ex. xxix. 45, 46, R.V.; Matt. xxviii. 19, 20, R.V.; and Haggai ii. 5, R.V., where God the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit each separately and individually promised His continued presence with Israel to the end of time. The promise respecting the teaching of the Scriptures to Israel is to the same effect, and is illustrated by the Encyclical Letter under review. For in Psa. clxvii. 19, 20, R.V., which declares it, we have these words: "He showeth His word unto Jacob, His statutes and His judgments unto Israel. He hath not dealt so with any nation, and as for His judgments, they have not known them. Praise ye the Lord!"

Digitized by Google

"LOST ISRAEL" FOUND.

Declare it in the Isles, and say,
"Who scattered ISRAEL away,
The same will gather him and keep,
Just as a shepherd doth his sheep." Jer. xxxi. 10.
What gracious words of peace and love
Are sent by ISRAEL'S GOD above;
To gather him and surely bless,
E'en in the Northern Wilderness. Hosea ii. 14.
Surely there is a gracious spell
About the name of ISRAEL; [Gen. xxxii. 28
"A Prince with GOD, the first-born Son," Ex. iv. 22.
And is it true, that I am one?
Down from His throne, forsaking all,
CHRIST came, His scattered sheep to call; Matt. xv. 24
To make them as of old He sware, Jer. xxxi. 1—9.
The SONS of GOD, with Him joint-heir. Rom. viii. 17.
Shall words like these as music fall
Upon your hearts and not enthral?
Are ye so dull that no desire
To find this people, can inspire
A wish, a thought, or e'en a look Into the pages of the Book
That tells of ISRAEL'S Princely race, Ex. xix. 6.
Safe in their own appointed place? 2 Sam. vii. 10
To whom remains a certain rest, Heb. iv. 9.
Through whom all nations shall be blest, Gen xxii. 18.
Of whom by prophets long foretold, Rom. ix. 5.
Came the Great Shepherd of the fold! Heb. xiii. 20.
To seek this people far or near, See Ezek. xxxiv. 16.
Is why we are assembled here,
That if by chance they may be found
In us, our praises may resound, Jer. xxxi. 7.
Until the earth and heavens ring
With songs to our Redeemer King;
Who by His prophets long foretold,
Whene'er He gathers home His fold,
"This is My rest, here will I dwell,
Amidst my people, ISRAEL, Ezek. xliii. 7.
Just as I did in days of yore,
But now remain for evermore."
Then let us loud the anthem swell
To CHRIST, the King of ISRAEL;
Let Heaven and Earth with joy resound,
"My son was lost, but now is found." Luke xv. 32.

JOHN T. CROSTHWAIT.

THE UNIVERSAL LANGUAGE.

To the Editor of the "Canadian Advance."

DEAR SIR,—I send you some information I happened to meet with in regard to the rapid growth of the English language, which I feel sure will prove as interesting to most of your readers as it was to me, and I shall feel very glad if you can find space for it in your next issue. Yours truly,

J. S. D.

Ottowa, Ont., May 26th, 1888.

President Eliot, of Harward College, recently said: "I sat down to dinner, one stormy night, in a Swiss inn, with sixteen people. Six different nationalites were represented by these sixteen people, and the only language they could all speak was English. One may travel now, as I have just travelled, through southern Spain, through northern Africa, through Greece and Constantinople, and back by Vienna, and the more usual routes with nothing but English. I do not mean to say that you may not occasionally feel the need of some French words, but you can travel comfortably through all these countries with no language but English. That, I am sure, could not have been said 25 years ago. The spread of the language within that time for purposes of commerce is most noticeable, as is also the increased knowledge of the language and literature among educated people on the Continent of Europe."—The Christian.

PRINCIPLE EUROPEAN LANGUAGES SPOKEN.

Comparison showing the superior rapid growth of the English tongue.

Languages.	Number of Persons spoken by.		Portion of the whole.
	1801.	1883.	1801.	1883.
English.....	20,521,000	99,861,000	12.9	27.1
French	31,448,000	47,818,000	19.6	13.0
German	30,318,000	68,826,000	18.4	18.6
Italian	15,074,000	29,873,000	9.2	8.1
Spanish	26,194,000	40,835,000	16.0	11.4
Portuguese.....	7,480,000	12,810,000	5.0	3.5
Russian	30,770,000	66,725,000	18.9	18.3
Total	161,805,000	366,748,000	100.0	100.0

These figures and comparisons are given on the authority of Mulhall, 1886.—Canadian Advance, June 6, 1888.

Obituary.

THE late Mr. Charles Horner, of Sheen-park, Richmond, brother of Mr. Burnham W. Horner, passed away very peacefully on Sunday last. An invalid for thirty years, a frail frame was the home of a mind of extraordinary vitality and power of thought. His mind was one of unbounded energy, and had his physical nature been equal to it, science would have been richer by his discoveries than it is. His photographs of Professor Nobert's diffraction gratings, 6,000 lines to a square inch, gained a European and an American renown. Many new trains of thought have been created by his blow-pipe beads for spectrum tests of metallic oxides. In conjunction with Lord Rayleigh, he showed that the compound nature of yellow light is a mixture of red and green. His mind was ever working, and had not exhaustion been so often the obstacle, he would have entertained and carried on new spheres of discovery. Unlike some scientific labourers he was known for his Christian character and a love for all that was gentle and good. His trials appeared to refine his nature, and he was ever ready to counsel and sympathise with others with whom he came into contact. Educated at the City of London School, under the late Dr. Mortimer, his mathematical studies enabled him to enter into the amazing calculations necessary to understand the intricate measurements of the Great Pyramid. His calculations are quoted in Professor Piazzi Smyth's work on that monument. His work in connection with the Anglo-Israel subject ceased only in his last illness.—The Thames Valley Times, August 8.

Correspondence.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR PHILO-ISRAEL,—Having just read your article in last week's BANNER, "Israel's Carrying Trade and Ephraim's Woe," I venture to ask for a little of your valuable space to call the attention of British-Israelites to the work being done by the Thames Church Mission. Its sphere of labour is from Richmond to the Nore, a parish, as the Bishop of London remarked at the annual meeting, "seventy miles long, and on an average a mile broad, but it contains something like 300,000 souls." His lordship added, "We cannot consider that three clergymen and nineteen lay agents are a sufficient staff to deal with 300,000 people." It is truly an Israelitish work; for as another speaker said, "If you get sailors converted you will have missionaries all over the world, at sea as well as on land." I think if people knew of this great work that is going on amongst our sailors, the income of the society, which last year was under £6,000, would be more in proportion to its needs. While preaching the Gospel to every creature, let us not forget to begin at London, our own capital, which I take it was the Saviour's meaning when He said, "beginning at Jerusalem." Information about the work will be gladly given by the secretary, by whom also subscriptions and suitable literature will be thankfully received. Address the Rev. H. Bloomer, 31, New Bridge-street, London, E.C.

Yours faithfully,

Upper Teddington. JESSIE LAWRENCE.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed: "Philo-Israel," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

SUBSCRIPTIONS. £ s. d.

Annual Subscription for one copy weekly (including the Twelve Double Numbers) post free 0 7 6
Two Copies (including Double Numbers) 0 13 6
Three Copies ,, ,, ,, ... 1 0 4
Four Copies ,, ,, ,, ... 1 5 6
Six Copies ,, ,, ,, ... 1 16 4

Post Office Orders to be made payable at the head office, St. Martin's-le-grand, London, to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C., or F. W. PARRY & Co., 29, Paternoster-row, London.

The Editor cannot undertake to return rejected MSS. unless stamps for the purpose be sent. Parties requiring an answer should enclose a stamp.

Contents Bills and Show Cards may be obtained on application to the Publishers.

Advertisements should be sent to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

Prepaid Advertisements are inserted at the rate of thirty words for 1s. 4d.

ROYAL BLIND PENSION SOCIETY OF THE UNITED KINGDOM.—Patron: HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN. President: THE DUKE OF GRAFTON, K.G.—This Society, founded in 1863, pays Life pensions to the Blind Poor at their own Homes in all parts of the United Kingdom, in sums ranging from 10s. to 25s. per month. There are 540 of these afflicted people now on the Funds, and 203 others awaiting election. Only the want of funds prevents the Committee assisting all these necessitous cases. Help is most urgently needed. No costly Establishment and Administrative Expenses are incurred. Subscriptions and Donations will be gratefully received by the Officers, or may be paid to the Bank of England, or London and Westminster Bank (Southwark Branch). Treasurer, John C. Rumsted, Esq., 36 King William Street, E.C. Hon. Secs., Messrs. Thomas Pocock and A. S. Dodson. Secretary, W. Elliott Terry. Office, 235, Southwark Bridge road, London, S.E.

Just published—Cloth, 2s. 6d.—a re-issue of

The Origin of Masonic Ritual and Tradition:

A Lecture on the Three Degrees, by BRO. WM. ROWBOTTOM, P.M., 1028, with facsimile of a very rare Masonic engraving published in 1789.

"Exquisitely clear and singularly correct in everything wherein I may be any authority or guide."—Professor PIAZZI SMYTH. "Will be found of considerable interest to many besides Masons."—Church Bells.

Oxford: S. Rowbottom and Son; London: R. Banks and Son, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C.; and F. W. Parry and Co., 29, Paternoster Row, E.C.

Price Five Shillings.—"Substantially and attractively got up, and profusely illustrated."—Oldham Chronicle.

Eildon Grange: A Tale.

By ANDREW CLARK, M.A., Vicar of St. Michael's, Oxford. "One of the most charming books. . . . The illustrations are full of playful humour."—Scotsman. "The book is undoubtedly a happy one."—The Oxford Magazine. "Both entertaining and bracing."—Dundee Advertiser.

Oxford: S. Rowbottom and Son; London: Hamilton, Adams and Co., 32, Paternoster Row, E.C.

☞ Ask for this Book at the Libraries.

WORKS BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

The History of the House of Israel. How They Were Lost and How They Were Found. Told for the children. Price 6d., cloth 1s.; post free 7d. and 1s. 1d. Fifth edition.

A Resume of the Scriptural Argument Proving the Identity of the British Race with the Lost Ten Tribes. Price 1d.; 6s. per hundred, postage 6d.

Anglo-Israelism. True, Not False. Being Philo-Israel's reply to the Rev. Canon Bell's pamphlet, "Anglo-Israelism: True or False?" Price 1d., 6s. 6d. per 100. 16 pages, crown 8vo.

An Elementary Digest or Sketch of the Chief Facts and Teachings of the Great Pyramid of Egypt. Adapted to the Unlearned and Unscientific 56 pages. Illustrated with Diagrams, price 4d., post free 5d. 10th Thousand.

Our Identity with the House of Israel. Price 4d., Reprinted from "Clifton Chronicle Letters.

Are the English People the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel? An Inquiry Establishing the Identity of the British Nation with the Lost Ten Tribes. 4d.

Our Identity: What it is Not; What it is; and Our Obligations To-day in Respect to it. Being a Lecture recently delivered in London by Philo-Israel, and published by special request. Price 2d., a reduction for quantities.

Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

HUMAN LIFE.—FIFTY YEARS' Record of Facts, Principles, and Discoveries (just published complete) Relating to the Improvement and Preservation of Human Life on Earth. Origin and true treatment of diseases. A series of articles by DR. SAMUEL BIRLEY, M.D., Ph.D. Book form, 50 pages. SENT FREE to every applicant by the publishers, GORDON B. MURRAY & CO., 50, Theobald's-road, Holborn, E.C. Write to-day

Price 3d., by post 3½d. One dozen copies post free for 8s.

PRESENT-DAY PROBLEMS

AND

How Anglo-Israel Truth Explains and Solves Them.

By V. M. COX.

Contents:—Our Identity and its Mission.—Imperial Federation.—The Eastern Question.—Rev. Archibald G. Brown and the Eastern Question.—Disestablishment.—Sabbath Observance.—Foreign Missions.—Our Relations with Judah.—Our Relations with Russia.—Egypt.—The Unemployed.—The Irish Problem.—Cui Bono?—A Remedy.

Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

READING CASES

For Holding the Weekly Nos. of the BANNER, Price 2s.

Price Threepence, by Post 3½d.

British & Jewish Fraternity.

The Outline of the Reasons which Convinced a Jew that the British People are of the Tribe of Israel

By the REV. ELIEZER BASSIN, M.S.

Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

Price 1d. One doz. post free 1s.; 100 post free, 6s. net.

WORK:

A THOUGHT OF THE PAST, PRESENT, AND FUTURE.

BY E. M. RUSH (A.E.I.),

Author of "The New Old Story," "The Answer to the Eastern Question," "A New Light," "The Emblem of the Empire," etc., etc.

London: Robert Banks and Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-st.

Price 2d., by post 2½d. Second Edition, Revised.

A SUMMARY OF ANGLO-ISRAELITE TEACHING,

And of the Scripture Proofs on which it rests.

By SURGEON-GEN. J. M. GRANT, M.D.,

President of the Cheltenham Association, and Vice-President of the Metropolitan Anglo-Israel Association.

London: ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-st.

NEW BOOK BY DR. WILD.

Just Published, Price 3s., Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Lettered. Sent by Post on receipt of Published Price.

TALKS

FOR

THE TIMES.

BY JOSEPH WILD, M.A., D.D.,

Pastor of the Bond-st. Congregational Church, Toronto.

CONTENTS.—Chapter 1. A Gift of One Hundred and Ninety-Two Million Acres of Land. 2. The Return of the Jews to Palestine. 3. Folks that won't be Somebody. 4. The Four Prophecies of Egypt. 5. The Stone Kingdom and Dynamite; and the Orange Bill. 6. "144!" 7. "666!" 8. The Transit of Venus. 9. The Miracles of Antichrist; and the High Rock Image of Massachusetts, U.S. 10. The man who could not sleep, and what came of it. 11. The Rainbow. 12. London Destroyed, and Jerusalem a Seaport. 13. Liberalism. 14. A Graft without a Stock. 15. Mouldy Bread and an Oath. 16. A Tombstone Inscription. 17. Dog Lappers. 18. How to get Rich.

London: Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street. ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London. JOHN MENZIES & Co., Edinburgh & Glasgow.

Price 2s. 6d., Cheap Edition, 1/-

BIBLE LESSONS AND REFLECTIONS.

By ROBERT GAIRDNER, of Kilmarnock, N.B.

"Mr. Gairdner has given us in his book a series of Bible lessons, with his own reflections added thereto, and though he has been very cautious in the latter, and has not committed himself too broadly, he has plainly let it be seen that he is an Anglo-Israelite by conviction, and that the Scriptures which he quotes at length and extensively throughout his book, are meant to teach Our Identity and God's faithfulness, from first to last, to His promises to Abraham and His seed for ever."—Banner of Israel.

ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-st.

PIANOFORTES, Harmoniums, American Organs. Why buy at shops inferior made instruments, and pay large profits, when you can buy direct from the Maker High-class Instruments, and save 50 per cent. by so doing? Full value allowed for old Instruments in exchange as part payment. Write for Price Lists and Testimonials to G. LINSTEAD, 2, Oseney Crescent, Camden Road, London. Established 1874.

Published by

ROBERT BANKS AND SON,

Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C.

Postal Orders may be obtained at any Post Office in the United Kingdom for the following amounts: 1s., 1s. 6d., 2s. each; 2s., 2s. 6d., 3s., 3s. 6d., 4s., 4s. 6d., 5s., 7s. 6d., 10s., 10s. 6d., 1d. each; 15s., 20s., 1½d. each. They should be "crossed" City Bank, Ludgate Hill, E.C. Stamps received.

A MESSAGE TO THE CHURCH FROM THE NINETEENTH CENTURY. The last written work on the Identity of the Anglo-Saxon Race with Lost Israel. By the late BISHOP TITCOMB. Imperial 8vo., cloth, gilt, 3s.

THE BRITISH NATION Proved to be the Remnant of Israel, and the Representatives of the Lost Ten Tribes. By J. H. WELDON, J.P., Author of "Britain and Prophecy." 66 pp., demy 8vo., 6d.; by post, 7d.

ENGLAND'S DUTY IN RELATION TO THE CHRISTIANS OF TURKEY. Being a true Solution of the Eastern Question. By the late JOHN WILSON, Author of "Our Israelitish Origin," &c. Price 6d., by post 7d.

SOUND, PURE, WHITE

TEETH!

Those who value these will try

CARBOLINE

(The Great Sanitary Tooth Paste).

1/6 & 2/6 per Pot.

Through Chemists, or post free from the Makers,

GEORGE & WELCH

WORCESTER.

Lancet writes:—"To save the teeth use a good carbolic daily."

LADIES!

WE will send a FULL-DRESS LENGTH of BEAUTIFUL CLOTH (for Good, Strong, Serviceable wear), in any of the following colours, Carriage paid to any address for 10s. 6d. Colours:—Black, Blue, Fawn, Salmon, Res da, Slate, Ruby, Brown, Grey, Claret, Sage, Old Rose, Terra-Cotta, Amber, Peacock, Tabac, Bronze, Myrtle, Drab, Olive, Grenat, Clay Green, Navy, Partridge, Heather, &c., &c. These wonderful Dress Lengths have gained a world-wide reputation for magnificence, cheapness and durability, having no equal.

The Lady's Pictorial says:—"They are excellent quality and very good value for the money."

Thousands of Testimonials from all parts of the world.

Ladies should write at once for Patterns, which may be had free, and need not be returned.

AN AMAZING OFFER!!—We shall give a very handsome Brocaded Silk Handkerchief with each dress-length ordered from us during this season. Write for patterns. LUTUS B. LEATHLEY, Armley, Leeds.

Certain HARNESS' Cure.

ELECTROPATHIC BELT

FOR

SLEEPLESSNESS

SLEEPLESSNESS.—The Rt. Hon. LORD BYRON says that—"Harness' Electropathic Belt is invaluable for sleeplessness, I recommend it to all my friends."

Guaranteed to generate a mild continuous current of Electricity, which speedily cures all Disorders of the Nerves, Stomach, Liver and Kidneys. Thousands of Testimonials. Pamphlet & Advice free on application to Mr. C. B. Harness, Consulting Electrician, the Medical Battery Co. Ltd.

Only Address,

52, OXFORD ST. LONDON, W. (Corner of Rathbone Place.)

Call to-day, if possible, or write at once

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C. F. W. PARRY (late GUEST & Co.), 29 PATERNOSTER-ROW. WEDNESDAY, AUG. 29, 1888. [All rights reserved.

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."
(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India.)

"And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the Forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS of the EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. XII., No. 610. Entered at Stationers' Hall.] WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 5, 1888. [DOUBLE NUMBER, TWOPENCE.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
The Naval Manœuvres and their Warning	349
The Centennial Missionary Conference of 1888	350
Lord Carnarvon on the "Shutting" of the Gates	351
The British Church the Mother National Church of European Christendom; our Logical and Chronological Refutation of Romanism. By Rev. R. Douglas, M.A.	352
Some of Israel's Recent Acquisitions. By J. Thomson	354
The Word of the Lord Glorified	355
The Pan-Anglican Conference	356
Mr. Meredith Townsend on the Future of India	357
The Bishop of Exeter Gives Evidence	358
"Blessed is he whosoever shall not be offended in Me"	359
Which shall be the Gate, Esquimalt or Burrard Inlet?	360
Anglo-Israel Free Distribution Fund	361
Israel's Scripture and Prayer Union	361
Correspondence	362

THE NAVAL MANŒUVRES AND THEIR WARNING.

ON August 9th, the fleet of the fictitious enemy, hitherto blockaded in Berehaven, in Ireland, succeeded in appearing in the Mersey, after escaping from the blockading squadron. The result was disastrous for Liverpool and Birkenhead. Six ironclads made of course short work of these cities, which are practically without any defence at all. Liverpool is held to have been captured, was put to ransom for a million sterling, and the captors escaped out of the river unmolested. Besides this, the Spider, a powerful cruiser, with the Calypso, supposed to belong to the enemies' fleet, also escaped from the blockade, caused great damage (in imagination) to several Scottish towns, such, for instance, as Greenock, Ardrossan, Campbeltown, Aberdeen; also to the Hartlepools, with Filey, and the grand new bridge in the Firth of Forth. The lesson that these results are meant to teach us is that when real war takes the place of these "sham fights" we may expect, with our really limited fleets, to find ourselves unable to shut up our enemies' ships in their harbours, and that therefore, when they escape, as our own ships had done from Berehaven and Lough Swilly, we shall have our open towns and commercial centres destroyed by the fast and powerful cruisers of the enemy, and our own prestige irreparably destroyed. The actual facts seem to show that it is impossible, with the force we have at command in the two spots chosen for experiment, to keep an enemy's blockaded squadron from escaping sooner or later, and that therefore our boasted power to force our enemy to inaction does not really exist. In short, our fleet is not strong enough in these days of steam to do the work we must have done to be safe (humanly speaking), and since our army counts for nothing as an engine of offence, and for little as an instrument for defence, we are, as men would count it, in a bad way. But here the facts and promises of Our Identity come in with their reassuring comfort, and tell us that these armies and fleets are not our true defence, but that we lean for our safety on the strength of the living God, who has promised us, as His people Israel, that "the children of wickedness shall not afflict us any more as at the first," and that "we shall dwell in a place of our own and move no more" (2 Sam. vii. 10, R.V.). In reference to our enemies, "those who war against us," trusting for victory to our apparent weakness, the promise to us is, that "they that war against us shall be as nothing, and as a thing of nought" (Isa. xli. 12, R.V.). No doubt "gatherings" may take place against us, but God has engaged that those who "gather together against us" shall not do so by His authority or permission. They shall "fall" because of us! (Isa. liv. 15, R.V.). Neither fear nor terror are to come near us, according to the promise, in Isa. liv. 14 (R.V.), and surely that must amount to a guarantee that no foreign man-of-war shall venture to bombard our open cities, or do in earnest what our own squadrons have in sham fight just effected in the Mersey for Liverpool and Birkenhead. "No weapon that is formed against thee,"—no cruiser, no torpedo boat, no man-of-war,—"shall prosper; and every tongue that shall rise against thee in judgment thou shalt condemn. This is the heritage of the servants of the Lord, and their righteousness, which is of Me, saith the Lord" (Isa. liv. 17, R.V.).

Such being the case, is not the logical conclusion this, that we need be at no pains to increase our navy, nor make good the defects in our fleets, as regards the number of its cruisers or line of battle ships, since the Lord will fight for us and the victory is His, whatever our efforts and preparations may be? Nay, we must not, and cannot so tempt the Lord our God! It is ours to do all we can, and all that prudence and necessity requires of us, to secure the victory, leaving to Him to bless the means we use and efforts we put forth. It is true that in the case of Gideon's warfare against the Midianites, God did not use the whole strength that Israel provided, for the reason stated in Judges vii. 2, but in others He called for "all the people of war" His people had at command, and used them all to destroy Ai, and then the five confederated kings of the Amorites (Josh. viii. 1; x. 7). In every case He used the human means at hand, and by Israel's troops and armies discomfited the enemies He might have struck down without His people's help. The recent manœuvres teach us that our ships are too few for the work God has given them to do, and therefore their number ought to and must be augmented. The navy has to guard our own shores, safeguard our commerce afloat on every sea, and assist in the divinely prescribed operation of shutting all our "Doors," or Foreign and Home Gates. The work is stupendous, but the ships on which we must depend to carry out the work are but 700; whereas the cruisers required are 186 in number, and we have but 42! (p. 246, BANNER, No. 599). The estimate of the cost at which we may reasonably expect to ensure safety is stated to be 37 millions sterling. Supposing this to be no exaggeration, we think the amount insignificant compared with the awful losses we might sustain by neglecting to take those precautions which God has just shown us are manifestly needed for our safety in the perilous times drawing so near. We have no doubt that we shall accordingly look to our national safety by largely increasing our navy, and that God will bless the means we shall use to carry out His purposes. To Him will be all the glory and all the praise; to us, His people, all the blessing and the benefits.

Digitized by Google

THE CENTENNIAL MISSIONARY CONFERENCE OF 1888.

IN June, this year, there was held, in London, a Centennial Missionary Conference, which was undenominational and Protestant, international and ecumenical in its character. Yet it was held in the metropolis of "Israel of the Isles," because here are the headquarters of Evangelical work and zeal. London therefore was the fitting scene of the Missionary Conference, which had the world for its theatre, as the Pan-Anglican Conference of the Church of England could properly have been held nowhere else but in Israel's Metropolis or Chief City. The July No. of "Regions Beyond" gives in Mrs. Grattan Guinness' words a very good and clear account of the world-wide Missionary Conference of June, 1888, from which we quote our facts. The Conference was unique in its character. "The like has probably never been held since Pentecost!" Then all Asia, Arabia, and Egypt contributed its quota of Jews and proselytes to hear the apostles speak of the Gospel of the grace of God.

On this occasion, in London, in June, 1888, there were present to hear of the triumphs of the Gospel throughout the world, men from Japan, China and Persia, Syria, Turkey and Egypt, from every part of Africa, from the United States, represented by New York, Chicago and Boston, people from Canada and Nova Scotia, South America, Australia, and New Zealand. They came "by the score and the hundred!—east and west, north and south, from the crowded boulevards of Paris and Berlin, from Eastern Ispahan, from Cape Colony, Yokohama, Colorado, Sweden, Boston;" from all parts of the civilized world, and from every portion of Europe, "the two or three hundred foreign delegates, and over 1,200 English, Scotch, and Irish delegates and members, came to the Conference, representing 130 different organizations "for the Evangelization of the world." There were present at the Conference men of world-wide notoriety; and papers were read by the Rev. Dr. Post, of Syria, the Rev. Robert Bruce, D.D., of Persia; the Rev. Arthur T. Pierson, D.D., Editor of the Missionary Review; Robert Needham Cust, LL.D.; Dr. Maxwell; the Rev. Murray Mitchell; Bishop Stuart, of New Zealand; Principal Mc Vicar, of Montreal; Dr. Weitbrecht; Sir Monier-Williams, LL.D.; Dr. Gordon, of Boston; Dr. Noble, of Chicago, and other eminent Americans." In fact, all sorts and shades of opinion were present, and were listened to with respect, save and excepting the Anglo-Israelites, who were neither present, nor were likely to have been heard with patience by the evangelists so gathered! And yet they were all assembled in London, and succeeded in the mission field, simply because they were, almost to a man, Israelites of Ephraim, or of Manasseh (the former as to the vast majority), and were blessed from on high only because they shared in the glorious gifts granted to Abraham and his seed for ever, not the least of which was the promise that in him and his seed all the nations, families, and kindreds of the earth should be blessed (Gen. xxii. 17, xxviii. 14; Acts iii. 25, R.V.).

It is strange that the only reason why God has given success to the efforts of His people in evangelising the world was utterly ignored, and if stated would probably have been received with derision and contempt! There is indeed no other conceivable reason why British and American efforts for the spread of the Gospel should have been so successful in their Anglo-Saxon hands but the one we advocate, namely, that these missionary agencies were almost exclusively Israelitish, that is to say, those of Ephraim and Manasseh!

The following closing words of Mrs. Grattan Guinness show very clearly what the hope of Israel is, in respect to the expected results of this vast modern missionary effort, and they are words which point to our nation's Israelitish origin. "We are filled (she writes) with the hope, and deeply impressed with the expectation, that the next few years will witness such ingatherings from among the heathen as the world has never seen—the latter rain, heavier and more abundant than the early rain, and resulting in a glorious harvest above all that we ask or think. O how vast and varied the resources and opportunities of our Church of the end of the 19th century compared to those of the little Church of the first century! God give us grace to use them all as well as did the Apostolic Church, for Jesus' sake. Amen."

So far Mrs. Grattan Guinness. She accepts all the benefits and blessings God showers down upon this nation; she recognises that 300 years ago God granted to us, as the Protestant nation of the world, the signal deliverance which the defeat of the Spanish Armada proclaimed; that 200 years ago He also sent us the glorious Revolution, whereby the Reformed Protestant Religion was firmly established in our land after centuries of struggle, and that 100 years ago He sent us the most blessed movement of modern times, evangelical missions to the heathen. And yet she never pauses to enquire why Spain's efforts were defeated; why Protestantism was seated on our throne; why to us was nationally committed the world-wide propagation of the Gospel. But surely a slight search into the divine record might have shown to Mrs. Grattan Guinness that the Spanish Armada was defeated because it was a daring attack on God's people Israel, located in God's own appointed place in the Isles of the West (2 Sam. vii. 10; Jer. xxxi. 10, R.V.); that Protestantism was re-established in our country 200 years ago because this people are God's witnesses, and cannot fall finally, therefore, under Rome's dominion (Isa. xliii. 10—12, xliv. 8, R.V.); and lastly that Evangelical Missions were committed to us as the most natural thing in the world, because the Lord declared by the mouth of our prophet Isaiah: "In days to come shall Jacob take root; Israel shall blossom and bud, and they shall fill the face of the world with fruit" (Isa. xxvii. 6, R.V.).

If Protestantism was saved in the person of England in 1588, then must England be Israel; if Protestantism was enthroned in the person of William III. in 1688, then too must England be Israel; and if since 1788 God has given to our nation the Evangelical Missions to the Heathen, then again, for the third time, England must be Israel, on the authority of the Word of God, and He is true!

All this Mrs. Grattan Guinness fails to see, and cannot see! With her it must be mere chance that 1588, 1688, and 1788, with 1888, have been big with Israelite mercies to our country. She probably does not know or reflect that all these are God's special gifts to His people Israel, and to no other; and in neglecting to recognise this fact she is tacitly winking at the horrid insult to Almighty God that He can give to the Gentile British what He swore to grant exclusively to the children of Israel; and that having promised to Abraham and his Semetic offspring for ever, He can fulfil those same promises to the Japhetic British, and yet remain worthy of faith and confidence and trust, when He promised to mankind through faith in Christ that He would give the world everlasting life through the precious, precious blood of His only begotten Son, that they might not perish (John iii. 16, R.V.).

Digitized by Google

This blindness, however, is another evidence of our Israelitish origin, for the well-known words of Isa. xlii. 16, R.V., lead one to the conclusion that those the Lord will bring by the way they know not, and lead by the paths they know not, will be the blind ones of Israel, who in some respects are in darkness and walk in crooked places. May our public writers and Christian workers awake up, and see, and glorify the Lord by acknowledging at last their splendid origin!

LORD CARNARVON ON THE "SHUTTING" OF THE GATES.

THOSE who read Lord Carnarvon's letter to the Times in the issue of July 9th know that his lordship gave a very good report of the progress already made in respect to the closing of the British Gates and the barring the doors of Israel throughout the world. Much remains to be done, and some things are being neglected rather shamefully. But then Israel was always given to living carelessly and confidently, not only in the isles, but wherever they have possessions. They cannot be made to believe that anything they have is in danger, or that anyone will dare to interfere with their enjoyment of their property. They consequently neglect precautions and let things slide. But in respect to the fortification of the Gates, or coaling stations, they have their orders from on high, and the word has gone forth from the King of Israel, as recorded in Isa. xxvi. 20, 21 (R.V.): "Come, My people, enter thou into thy chambers, and shut thy doors about thee; hide thyself for a little moment, until the indignation be overpast. The nation, therefore, is bound to carry out the Lord's commands at the time assigned, which is close before the outburst of the indignation against the nations, the period, we suppose, described also in Rev. xvi. 18 (R.V.), when there will be the great earthquake such as there was not since men were upon the earth, so great an earthquake, so mighty."

His lordship, writing to the Times, declares that the Gates are being armed. Singapore has got part of her new guns, but they are not all mounted and available. Hong Kong is not so far advanced, but soon will be. Neither of these Gates, however, has received its promised ten-inch guns, though in other respects these two first-class coaling stations, or ocean fortresses, are not so insecure and in so dangerous a condition as they lately were. In the Mauritius the work is proceeding, but Lord Carnarvon fears that it will take a year to complete the necessary fortifications. In St. Lucia, now an important Gate once more, progress is being made, but it is too slow. In Trincomalee (Ceylon) and St. Helena the work is done, and both Gates have their doors shut according to the prophecies. As to Aden, the Gibraltar of the East, that Gate too is tight closed, and Lord Carnarvon feels satisfied.

The Australasian colonies are quite alive to their danger, and have done all that was needful and possible to avert it. His lordship declares their zeal and forwardness puts us at home quite to shame! "New Zealand is well armed." Victoria is organised as respects her guns, her forts, her ships, and her forces. New South Wales has spared no expense in regard to guns, but has not mounted them, as they ought to have done. South Australia and Queensland are ready; but as to Tasmania, she has better forts and guns to defend herself with than any our home commercial forts have thought it worth while to provide for their own defence!

But after all is said and done, Lord Carnarvon still brings heavy charges against our supine nation in respect to the work in hand of closing our Gates and shutting our doors throughout our colonial world and Gates. He declares, first of all, "that none of our first-class ocean fortresses are defended as completely as Germany, or France, or Italy would do the work or deem necessary; and next, that as to garrisons for all these Gates and their fortifications, no one has thought of providing them, and they are still in the clouds!" The true defence of the Gates, then, as well as of our floating commerce, has not yet been properly provided.

In respect to one of our Gates, the chief of all, as he thinks, his lordship brings a heavy indictment against our country, and this we had better leave him to describe in his own words. They were as follows:—

I said in the earlier part of this letter that there was one exception to the general progress which I have recorded, and that exception is the Cape—the most important of all our stations, the half-way house between West and East, invaluable for coaling and refitting, for protecting our own commerce, and assailing our enemy's fleets. So strongly did the Commission of which I was chairman hold this opinion, that they postponed every consideration to press upon the then Government the vital necessity of placing the Cape in an adequate state of defence; and no one has ventured to deny or question our recommendations. But years have passed, and Governments have come and gone, and for the purposes of modern war the Cape is still undefended. It is right to say that the works are now in actual process of construction, and that a much better condition of affairs may be expected; but I do not believe that as yet there is a single modern gun mounted in a single modern fort. When I was at the Cape eight months ago there were new forts without their proper armament, and new armaments expected for forts which had as yet no existence—an unfortunate but a not very uncommon illustration of our procedure in these matters. I much doubt whether even now there are any new guns at the Cape.

So far his lordship. His account, as he describes it himself, is "a picture of lights and shades, of progress made, of needless and unfortunate delays, and of much important work yet to be done." Our very shortcomings, however, are proofs of Our Identity, for they show that while our distant Australasian daughters are up and doing, and closing their doors betimes against the coming enemy, "Israel of the Isles" is resting carelessly and confidently there, according to the prophecies, doing her prescribed work languidly and half-heartedly, trusting to chance and the chapter of accidents, but confident always that no one will dare to put a hand on what is in her possession. Surely this attitude is the exact response to Balaam's prophecy in Numb. xxiv. 9 (R.V.), where the British people are described by God Himself in these words—words perfectly true at the present moment:—"He couched, he lay down as a lion, and as a lioness: who shall rouse him up? Blessed is every one that blesseth thee, and cursed be every one that curseth thee." Our nation, in short, is proving its Identity in four ways—

1st. By its possession of the Gates.

2nd. By commencing to fortify them at this particular juncture.

3rd. By doing that work tardily, and with careless deliberation.

And lastly. By evincing, nevertheless, a dread that a mighty collapse of the nations is approaching, when it will be indispensable that our own defences should be perfect, our armies ready, and our navies, as our first line of defence, in first-rate order, ready for the work of national defence.

We welcome such letters as Lord Carnarvon's, because they give blind evidence of our Israelitish origin, albeit quite unconsciously; affirming our contention, however, that we are veritably God's lost people, His heritage and inheritance. To Him be all the praise!

Digitized by Google

THE BRITISH CHURCH THE MOTHER NATIONAL CHURCH OF EUROPEAN CHRISTENDOM: OUR LOGICAL AND CHRONOLOGICAL REFUTATION OF ROMANISM.

By the Rev. Robert Douglas, M.A., Vicar of Kidsgrove.
(Editor of "The Two Witnesses.")

Although, in a sense, stripped of its temporal power, with the Pope posing as "the prisoner of the Vatican," ruefully bewailing that "there are now no Catholic crowns;" every intelligent British Protestant must feel that the Papacy as a political organization, and Romanism as a religious system, are foes with which the nation and the Church have yet to reckon. John Bunyan described Giant Pope in his day, as grown so stiff and crazy in his joints, that he could only growl at us; but we have been lulled into a false security since then, have thrown down those safeguards which the nature of Popery, and ages of bitter experience, had proved to be necessary; and are guilty not only of the folly of despising an enemy possessing enormous resources, but even, to some extent, of openly fraternising with him. Meanwhile, taking advantage of our good nature and our stupidity together, the Roman Philistines are environing us round in such a manner that it will take a Revolution, or require another Protestant Reformation, before we can be finally extricated from the meshes of our antagonist.

Look at the situation.

1st. Politically. Since the Reformation, Rome has kept Ireland in a ceaseless condition of agitation against England. The yoke of the hated "Saxon" must be got rid of. Witness the past sixty years. We yielded Catholic Emancipation. We endowed Maynooth with £365,000. We disestablished and disendowed the Irish Church. And now we are asked for "Home Rule." And when this, in any form, is granted, does any one imagine we shall have peace? Nay, fuel will still be found to keep the pot of rebellion boiling; for Rome, from its essential principles, can stop short of nothing but the absolute ascendancy of her intolerance. Much as it may suit the Pope and his advisers to play a double game, and hoodwink a Conservative Government, it is self-evident that this pernicious agitation could not go on a day if sincerely and resolutely resisted by the Irish Priesthood, acting under his positive and infallible orders.

2nd. Religiously. In spite of Scripture, and nineteenth century civilisation, Rome has crowned the edifice of her idolatry and humanitarianism, by decreeing the doctrines of the Immaculate Conception of the Virgin, and the infallibility of the Pope. By means of Jesuits, she has promoted the advance of Ritualism in England, in defiance of law and public opinion, until its influence has become almost paramount in Church and State. Many have become Romanists in consequence, and many more, though preferring to remain Anglicans, teach and practice in our midst the doctrines of Rome.

3rd. The present situation as regards the influence of Popery, both political and religious, was sadly illustrated on the occasion of the so-called Papal Jubilee. That of our Most Gracious Queen, being not barely commemorative of a prosperous reign of fifty years, but of the marvellous power and progress of the centre and stronghold of the world's Protestantism, in such a manner as invests it with universal and enduring supremacy in the world, alarmed the Papacy. Such an influence must be counteracted in some way. As luck would have it, it chanced to be fifty years since the Pope as priest began to offer mass. This, though on the face of it absurd, was termed the Pope's Jubilee, though, in fact, only his Jubilee as a Mass-Priest. But it served the purpose, as diverting attention from a disagreeable subject; and behold the world does homage, and virtually falls down before the Mass! We blushed to observe that the golden ewer presented as an offering by our Queen was used by the Pope to wash his hands, after celebrating that which our Church by law established, declares to be "a blasphemous fable and a dangerous deceit." President Cleveland, better advised, presented the Pope with a copy on vellum of the Constitution of the United States. A copy of the Magna Charta and of our own Protestant Institutions, would have suited us better. But the incident proves one thing, and that is, the preponderating influence which Rome has again acquired over all parties and monarchs of the earth. She will not rest until, along with Home-Rule in Ireland, we have consented to establish diplomatic relations with the Vatican, and, as Bishop Vaughan puts it, the restoration of the Pope's "Civil Princedom." In the newspapers has appeared the ominous announcement:—"According to a telegram from Rome, the Pope will probably prolong Monsignor Persico's mission to Ireland, it being the intention of the Vatican to establish an agency of the Holy See in that kingdom."

It has long been observed, and it is undoubtedly true, that we shall have "to fight the battle of the Reformation over again." Although not in the same form, our future great conflict, as a Church and Nation, will inevitably be against Romanism. It therefore becomes an important question, on what ground can this battle be fought and won? By what means is this terrible system of apostacy, idolatry, and tyranny, to be finally crushed and vanquished? And this enquiry brings us to what we believe is one of the grand purposes of the British-Israel Revelation. To annihilate civil and ecclesiastical popery is our divine mission.

Let me proceed to illustrate and explain this point.

Nothing is easier than to show that Roman dogmas, Transubstantiation, the Mass, Confessional, and the like, are unscriptural. They are not taught in the Acts, or the Epistles. Nay, it is easy to prove them Antichristian, and subversive of New Testament Christianity. But this, though vitally important, is not enough to destroy the logical position of Romanism. The doctrine of development, and the power claimed by the Church to proclaim new dogmas, however really contradictory to the old, sufficiently covers these innovations in teaching, according to Cardinal Newman and the 'verts. The real stronghold of Popery, and that which makes it both respectable and formidable in the eyes of many nominal Protestants, is its plausible claim to be the real, old, original Church of God. "There can be no doubt that Christ," says the Pope, "founded His Church on Peter, and Peter was the first Pope." And even many who would dispute this proposition, allow that the Church of Rome is older than ours. Where were the Protestant Churches before the sixteenth century? Now this claim to be God's one, original Church, logically contains the whole question as to being the true Church. It was this which, as we see in "Tracts for the Times," had such weight in the Oxford movement over such minds as the Newmans, Mannings, and Wilberforces. It is the pet argument of Jesuits among Oxford undergraduates now-a-days. It is argued, and justly, that as God cannot change, He cannot, having once called and ordained His Church to be His witness and do His work in this world, finally abandon it. "Once the true Church, always the Church," is, on the rock of the divine immutability, a self-evident proposition. But where, as an outward and visible Church, was your Church before Luther? urges the papist.

Here, according to current and accepted views, is the weakness of the Protestant position. And here accordingly is the strength of our British-Israel contention.

First, we say to the Romanist,—we fully admit, as an indisputable axiom, your premise, "Once the Church, always the Church." The Church being God's, and founded on Himself, this is absolutely clear and certain. But stay! Was there not a Church before that of Rome? What about "the Church that was in the wilderness?" The Church called out of Ur of the Chaldees? That to which God said, You only have I known?

Digitized by Google

That which received the lively oracles? To whom pertained the glory and the covenants, and the giving of the Law, and the service of God, and the fathers; and of whom, as concerning the flesh, Christ came? The Church of Christ Himself, of the Apostles, and the New Testament? Was this the Church of Rome? Where were the Romans when God made with Abraham and his seed an everlasting covenant? Where were the wolfish Latin races, when Israel came out of Egypt, and the House of Jacob from among the strange peoples, or when the Shekinah blazed in Shiloh and in Zion? Your argument, Mr. Romanist, recoils on and annihilates your own position! You were not always the Church, and, therefore, you are not now! Or, for this is a necessary inference, you are not now and therefore you never were! You were not the old original, and are therefore proved to be an interloper and usurper of God's heritage.

It is in this way, A RE-MANIFESTED Israel that can alone finally dispose of papal arrogance and error. Our blindness and unbelief as to our Israelite origin and calling, have ceded the main vantage ground to our adversaries. Finding that in popular religious opinion among Protestants, Israel has "no heir," that her grand spiritual heritage is without a claimant, Rome rushes in, and as she established her mediæval temporal power on the forged Decretals, and alleged donation of Constantine, she bases her spiritual despotism on Israel's supposed final rejection and disappearance.

Secondly, we proceed to prove, in addition to the other overwhelming evidence from Scripture and history, reason and fact, as to our being the Israel of God, that our British Churches can show, in opposition to Rome's pretended apostolic succession, a direct succession from ancient Israel. We can prove the continuity of the church of God, through us, from the days of Abraham. There never has been, as St Paul demonstrates so lucidly in Rom. xi., but ONE church,—the old Olive Tree of Israel; and he himself accordingly planted that Olive Tree in Britain, among the British, or Covenant Hebrews, BEFORE THE DESTRUCTION OF JERUSALEM! We have before recapitulated this evidence, but the point is of such fundamental and supreme importance, and ought to be so universally understood, that we may profitably introduce it again.

This divine foundation of our Church by apostolic men before A.D. 70, is one of the best ascertained facts in history.

Clement, mentioned in Phil. iv. 3, says of St. Paul, he preached "even to the utmost bounds of the West." Theodoret, in the fourth century, says—"Paul carried salvation to the Islands that lie in the ocean." Jerome, soon after, wrote—"Paul having been in Spain, went from one ocean to another, and preached in the Western parts." Eusebius, fourth century, says—"Some of the twelve passed over to those which are called the British Isles." Fortunatus, fifth century, tells us—"Paul preached in the countries which the Briton inhabits, and in utmost Thule." Gildas, the British historian of the sixth century, says—"Christ the true Sun, afforded His rays to this Island." The probability of Paul's visit is confirmed by the fact that there is an interval of about eight years of his life not accounted for in the New Testament, from the 5th to the 14th year of Nero.

A learned writer quoted by George Smith in his "Religions of Ancient Britain," thus sums up the evidence for St. Paul's Apostolic Visit:—

"That St. Paul did go to Britain we may collect from the testimony of Clemens, Romanus, Theodoret and Jerome; who relate, that after his imprisonment, he preached the Gospel in the western parts; that he had brought salvation to the isles that lie in the ocean; and that in preaching the Gospel he went to the utmost bounds of the West. What was meant by the West, and the isles that lie in the ocean, we may judge from Plutarch, Eusebius and Nicephorus, who call the British Ocean the Western; and again, from Nicephorus, who says that one of the Apostles "went to the extreme countries of the ocean and the British Isles;" but especially from the words of Catullus, who calls Britain the utmost Island of the West; and from Theodoret, who describes the Britons as inhabiting the utmost parts of the West. When Clement, therefore, says that Paul went to the utmost bounds of the West, we do not conjecture, but are sure, that he meant Britain, not only because Britain was so designated, but because Paul could not have gone to the utmost bounds of the West without going to Britain. It is almost unnecessary, therefore, to appeal to the express testimony of Venantius, Fortunatus and Sophronius, for the Apostle's journey to Britain."

In the next place, a further confirmation of this visit of St. Paul to Britain, and his missionary labours here, is supplied by the independent testimony of the national Triads and uniform tradition, to which historical facts give every appearance of truth. In these, moreover, we discover a plain reason both for his letter to British Christians in the Epistle to the Hebrews,* and for the visit promised in it. According to Triad 18 Bran, the father of the noble Caractacus, whose bearing and address won the admiration of the Roman Emperor, "brought the faith in Christ first into this Island from Rome after his imprisonment." "The genealogy of the saints of the Isle of Britain," which forms the most ancient and reliable document in Welsh Archæology, confirms this Triad in these words, "Bran was the first who brought the Christian faith to this country." And nothing can be more historically probable than this statement. For, according to Tacitus, the British hostages were taken to Rome A.D. 51, and remained there till A.D. 58, just at the time when the Apostle says "the faith of the Christians in Rome was spoken of throughout the whole world." The probable course of events was this—zealous Christians in Rome were used to accomplish the conversion of the British Bard king, and some of them accompanied him on a mission into Britain. This the "Genealogy of the Saints" just referred to, positively asserts, "Four Christian Missionaries accompanied Bran on his return, viz.,—Ilid, Cyndav, and his son Mowan, who are styled "MEN OF ISRAEL)" and Arwystli Hen, a man of Italy," who is commonly identified with Aristobulus. It is likely even that this memorable mission which had then recently occurred, and was to be crowned with such remarkable results, suggested the remark in Rom. i. 8.

(2) Observe the singular fact that the Church in Britain was the first Nationally Established Church. While the heathen Emperor, Marcus Aurelius, reigned in Rome, between the years 161 and 180, Lleirwg, who reigned in Wales as titular king of Britain,† made Christianity the religion of the realm. Triad 62 says, "he made the first church at Llandaff, which was the first in the Isle of Britain, and bestowed the privilege of country and nation, judicial power and validity of oath, on those of the faith of Christ." This was before the sovereign dignity was wholly wrested from the Silurian chiefs, and annexed to the Romans by Pertinax and Severus. The explanation of this national movement, says Williams, is this: "Christianity had naturally and gradually become incorporated with Bardism; till at length, by the consent of the country and the tribe, Druidism was abolished, to make way for the church, and the privileges of the Druids (so strikingly analagous to those of the Levites in Israel) were transferred to Christian ministers. Among other things, these included five acres of land; exemption from personal attendance in war; permission to pass unmolested from one district to another, both in war and peace; support and maintenance wherever they went; exemption from land tax; and a contribution from every plough in the district where they were the authorized teachers."‡

Geoffrey of Monmouth says, "there were in Britain twenty-

* See article in the Two Witnesses for last November.

† An old Saxon Chronicle cited by Usher, ch. iii., styles him, "King of the Britons in Wales."

‡ See Williams' Antiq. Cymry, ch. ii.

Digitized by Google

eight Flamens and three Arch-Flamens, who used to offer incense and sacrifice cattle to the deities. These things being suppressed, and all things governed by the standard of Christianity, they consecrated Bishops in the room of the Flamens, and Archbishops in the jurisdiction of the Arch-Flamens." (Book iv., ch. 19). It is true this author, with his Roman proclivities, makes Lleirwg (or Lucius) consult the Bishop of Rome as to his proceedings. But Sir H. Spelman has cast grave doubts on the pretended letter of Pope Eleutherius to Lleirwg; and even if genuine, it affords no countenance to later papal claims.

On the contrary, the letter, translated by Collier, makes the Pope say to the king, "You are God's vicegerent within your own dominions;" a truth Popes soon learned to deny. But whether genuine or not, the letter bears testimony to the establishment of Christianity by Lleirwg, from the attempts of the Romanisers to make capital out of it. Hence Dr. Lingard is constrained to admit, "we have undoubted proof that believers were numerous in Britain, and that a regular hierarchy had been instituted before the close of the third century." And this national establishment of the British Church at the time, combined with the fact of the large degree of independence enjoyed by the British chiefs under the Roman occupation, probably accounts for the apparent exemption of native Christians from the Diocletian persecution, which raged among those who were Roman citizens, and cut off St. Alban and others. Thus the British National Church antedates the adoption of Christianity by the Roman Empire about 160 years!

(3) Remember that, by a deeply significant act of divine Providence, Rome was indebted to Britain for her first Christian Emperor, Constantine; upon whose forged "Donation" the papacy subsequently based its claim to universal temporal power. His contemporary biographer says, "Brittanias illic oriendo nobilas fecisti;" and in spite of the recent scepticism of Gibbon and others, these words, according to old tradition, seem properly to refer to the birth as well as to the accession of the Emperor; our oldest authorities asserting that Helena, the mother of Constantine, was the daughter of Coil, a British King. One thing however, is sure, that whether this were so or not, Britain was the birthplace of Constantine's Empire. He was crowned in York by the army in Britain, on July 25th, A.D. 306, and a curious fact mentioned by Gibbon is that "the national troops were reinforced by a numerous body of Alemmanni (or 'warlike Germans'), under Crocus." From these our shores, then, as a patent and undisputable fact, Constantine went forth to the conquest and Christianization of the Roman world! An event like this, one of the most crucial in the history of mankind, is to him who believes in an all-ruling Providence, absolutely decisive of God's election of Britain as the true mother church of Christendom. Hence Britain's influence grew in the Christian world. The Rev. Edward Churton, in his "Early British Church," truly says, "Constantine himself being a native of this island, seems to have honoured the British bishops, who were sent for to attend at councils, held by his authority, at different places for the settling of order and promoting of the true faith." There were bishops from Britain, whose names are recorded at the Council of Arles in France, A.D. 314. They seem also, to have been at Nice, where the Nicene Creed, was received. Again, British bishops were summoned by Constantine, A.D. 337, to another Council at Sardica in Bulgaria, and another at Ariminum in Italy, A.D. 360. And both St. Athanasius and St. Hilary have borne testimony that the Christians in Britain in their day "kept the faith as taught in the Nicene Creed, and preserved a good conscience with unshaken stedfastness." The horrors of the Saxon invasion, though designed and overruled by God for so much ultimate good to Israel in Britain, were a sore chastisement at the time. Nor must we overlook the fact, stated by M. Thierry in his "Norman Conquest," that, "The ambition of the Saxons was excited against the indigenous Britons by the Church of Rome for its own ends. In doing so, indeed, it was preparing a rod for its own back, but no thanks to it for that.—The "Two Witnesses," July, 1888.

SOME OF ISRAEL'S RECENT ACQUISITIONS.

By J. Thomson.

PART I.

The Beaconsfield administration of 1874—1880 was remarkable for many things, but for nothing more, perhaps, than some foreign acquisitions then made, and the great importance which it is acknowledged universally that they now possess. We may instance the Suez Canal shares, which were sold by the Khedive, and purchased by our Government for this country. From that very day, it may almost be said, the value of the Canal shares, from a low point, began steadily to go up, to the great satisfaction of the Shareholders, until they are now quoted at a price about four times the value of what they were then. At that time, also, the occupation of Cyprus was obtained, and its value, if not as a "place of arms," at least as a sanitorium, was soon seen during the subsequent "military operations" in Egypt, entered upon by the succeeding Gladstone administration, 1880—1885. The value of Cyprus to us nationally, as a place for trade, has also been steadily increasing, and all the predictions that its occupation would never "pay," have been proved baseless, by a steadily increasing revenue which leaves a surplus.

The result of our policy in the East has been to virtually give into our hands, for its administration and protection, the whole of Egypt, that ancient country which has long been reckoned as the "basest of kingdoms," its labouring fellaheen trodden down by exacting oppressors; but their cry has been heard, and through our influence justice is, in some measure, being done, and plenty and prosperity, in consequence, is rapidly advancing the conditions of existence in a marked and highly satisfactory manner.

But perhaps in no place is the peculiar "fortune" (if we may so term it) of this country seen in the value of our acquisitions as in the history of South Africa and our possessions there. We need not now stay to shew how the Cape, a Dutch colony, came into our hands at the first; nor how territory has been added to territory until, virtually, the whole of South Africa is under our influence. The most romantic of all our South African acquisitions is that of what was formerly known as Griqualand West, but now as the Diamond Fields. Little over twenty years ago it was thought of little value; the first diamond was found in 1867, but there existed great scepticism as to the genuineness of the discovery, and there was a perplexing question with the Orange Free State as to whether they, or we, exercised the sovereignty; besides native rights and European claims requiring adjusting. At length, in 1876, a settlement agreeable to both parties was arrived at, the Orange Free State giving up all claim to the territory for the sum of £90,000. Soon the doubts first expressed as to the "find" disappeared, and there became a certainty of the reality of the discovery of diamonds 600 miles north of Cape Town, and then followed a rush of diggers, allotment of claims, a new settlement and fixed institutions, resulting in the large and prosperous town of Kimberley, and a peculiar industry "such as exists nowhere else in the world," giving employment to many, and enriching the State and the world by the production of more than £4,000,000 worth of diamonds annually!

The very mention of the production of such an amount in value of diamonds every year, naturally makes one ask where do they go? and how is it that they keep up their value? To answer such questions is not within our province at the present time, even if we were able to do so: but we are assured "such are the requirements of modern luxury that this enormous amount of precious stones is absorbed into the market without materially disturbing prices, or affecting the ordinary conditions of trade." Everywhere in Kimberley there is a sense of these precious stones. A stranger passing by might think those he sees at work were engaged in the labours of ordinary husbandry. Large masses of soil are dried in the sun, and broken up by oxen, to separate the gems from the dust. Poultry sometimes pick up, in place of a more savoury morsel, a stray jewel; and not unfrequently has the old story in the fairy tale been repeated that precious stones are found inside these feathered bipeds. There are diamonds everywhere—"underground, above-ground, in the water if not in the air, in men's houses, and ladies' dresses, in the talk, the thought, the business of everyone." This industry gives employment to many, creating also in thousands of native workmen an appreciation of European dress and food, and some of the comforts and decencies of civilised life. The spectacle of these wild races tamed by steady labour, and incorporated into an orderly and prosperous community, is a very remarkable and interesting sight in Kimberley. The large companies engaged in the Diamond trade engage twelve or fifteen hundred of the natives, housing them together, and not allowing them to go beyond the bounds of a large enclosure during the time of their engagement (which generally lasts for some months), except to work; but they are provided within it with everything they may want, from a hospital to a general store. Their money, if they wish, is kept for them till they return to their own country, when they carry it back with them, with the other property and new ideas they have gathered up of a settled and civilized life.

Digitized by Google

The connecting link between Cape Town and Kimberley is a long line of rails which crosses the Karroo Desert—a vast expanse of uncultivated country—and makes the journey one of fewer hours than a few years ago it would have required days to accomplish. The great importance of this, and the accompanying telegraph wire which keeps the young settlement in touch with the civilized world, can only be fully appreciated by those who live in such vastly extended countries. Nor is the railway important merely in a monetary point of view, and the speedy transport of materials or persons; but it is equally as valuable considered in an administrative and political aspect. Consolidation and increase of the powers of government, are greatly advanced by railways, especially in countries of large extent; and what the high roads were to the ancient Romans, railways are to us—a necessity of government and symbol of dominion: subjects of distant provinces are brought into easy and familiar intercourse, and a sense of unity and dependence on a common authority created and fostered to the strengthening of the whole body politic.

These facts relative to Kimberley we have obtained from an interesting article by the Earl of Carnarvon, entitled "The Cape in 1888," which appeared in the Fortnightly Review for June last. The noble Earl refers to many other matters besides the material prosperity of the young colony, as for instance the influence of Freemasonry abroad, and he bears his "testimony to the organization of Freemasonry as a powerful influence for good." Non-Freemasons generally think that, abroad, Freemasonry is connected with revolutions and conspiracies, and that English Masons are members of a great friendly society mainly interested in convivial meetings. "Such a notion," says the Earl, "is very far removed from the fact;" and he knows "no place where Freemasonry plays a more useful part in public, as well as private affairs, than at the Cape . . . . it ignores the varieties and opposition of nationalities; invites men of different races to a community of action for excellent and practical objects; and has a direct and beneficent action in South Africa. English and Dutch can meet on this common ground, and in so meeting forget many of the divisions which public affairs have sometimes tended to accentuate." The noble Earl speaks from wide experience, and details the impressions made on him by a recent visit to the Cape, where he came into contact with South African Freemasons, and says explicitly, "I have had, perhaps, unusual facilities for watching and measuring the strength of such an influence, and I am satisfied that I do not overrate its power or value."

(To be continued.)

THE WORD OF THE LORD GLORIFIED.

THE motto of the Bible Society, that which has for its honourable title and description, that it is "The British and Foreign Bible Society," is a sentence taken from 2 Thes. iii. 1, "That the Word of the Lord may have free course and be glorified." The Society means of course by this that its aim and object, its sole raison d'être, is that the Holy Scriptures, which are "the Word of the Lord," may be published among all nations, families, and kindreds of the earth; and that thereby God's glory may be secured. It is a noble intention, and one nobly carried out during the 84 years of the existence of the Bible Society. On March 7th, 1804, it was founded, and during its short life it has sent forth 112,253,547 copies of the Bible, Testament, and portions of the same; printed or published in 279 languages or dialects. Its great advance has occurred during her Majesty's 50 years' reign. In the Society's last Report this circumstance is mentioned, and the following remarkable statement made:—

"In the future times," says the Report, "when the reign of Queen Victoria becomes to our posterity historical, as the Elizabethan age is to us, there is little doubt that far above the extension of the empire, and the wondrous achievements in art, science, and literature, the unprecedented advance of religious activities will be its most conspicuous and admired feature. That Britain should be the fountain whence the streams of the water of life flowed most copiously, swiftly, and widely will constitute her surest claim to renown and grateful remembrance. And that this marvellous extension of the Gospel at home and abroad, occurred not only during the reign, but with the sympathy and support of Queen Victoria, will for ever associate her name with the grandest era in the past progress of the kingdom of Christ." From this country, then, there have proceeded, as from a fountain, the streams of the water of life and of the word of life which is the Word of the Living God. It has free course here, and here only, and flows to the glory of God swiftly, copiously, and widely over the whole world. Such being the case, there is derived from this fact a clear and positive proof that this nation is Israel, and that God dwells among us. For He hath said in Psalm cxlvii. 19, 20 that, "He showeth, hath shown, and will ever show, His word unto Jacob; His statutes and His judgments unto Israel, and that He hath not dealt so with any nation;" and as for these other nations, "they have not known God's judgments." The large increase in Bible circulation, which appears on comparing the issue by the British and Foreign Bible Society in the years 1837 and 1887 is shown by the following table for the countries named respectively:—

COUNTRY.	EXCESS OF 1887 OVER 1837 IN ISSUES.
For France	9,918
„ Germany	315,460
„ Italy	129,028
„ Austria	167,959
„ Spain	51,280
„ Turkey and Greece ...	34,036
„ Russia	442,641
„ India	269,133

The land to which the Lord has intrusted the Word in the largest measure is the one which has done most to disseminate the Scriptures, and so glorifies the Lord. To Israel only is this privilege given, as recorded in the Sacred Volume; for it is declared to be hers "to blossom and bud, and to fill the face of the world with fruit." With this duty to perform it would be hopeless to expect the nation to carry it out successfully without the directing presence of the Lord. Accordingly, God has promised that as Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, He will, as the Triune God, dwell with His people Israel, and enable them to glorify Him. "This people, said Jehovah, have I formed for Myself; they shall show forth My praise" (Isa. xliii. 21, R.V.). "Whoso offereth the sacrifice of thanksgiving glorifieth Me" (Psa. l. 23, R.V.). "I will dwell among the children of Israel, and will be their God" (Exod. xxix. 45, 46, R.V.). "I am with you, saith the Lord of Hosts, according to the Word which I covenanted with you when you came out of the land of Egypt, and My Spirit abode among you. Fear ye not" (Haggai ii. 5, R.V.). "Go ye therefore and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I commanded you; and lo, I am with you always, even until the end of the world (or age)" (Matt. xxviii. 19, 20, R.V.).

Digitized by Google

The mode in which the Society carries on its work is shown by the following sentences from one of its publications:—

The Society has Agents or Correspondents actively engaged in printing the Word of God and spreading it by means of depôts and Colporteurs (some 300 in number) throughout Europe.

In India, China, and other great heathen countries, the operations of the Society are conducted on a very extensive scale. Within the last few years grants involving an outlay of from £2,000 to £3,000 a year have been made to other societies, such as the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel and its Ladies' Association, the Church Missionary Society, the Church of England Zenana Missionary Society, the Indian Female Normal School and Instruction Society, the Society for Promoting Female Education in the East, Miss L. M. Whately's Mission, and others, to enable them to employ more native Christian Bible-women to read the Bible to their secluded sisters in the East, and to teach them to read it, as well as to encourage them to buy portions of it for themselves. In this way it is hoped that an increased circulation of the Holy Book will eventually follow.

The indispensable aid which the British and Foreign Bible Society renders to Missions abroad is often forgotten. Speaking generally, translations of the Scriptures in about seventy languages at least are now used in the Foreign Missions of the Church of England. Of these about six-sevenths can be obtained only from the Bible Society, and almost all the rest are practically furnished by it.

In Australia, New Zealand, the West India Islands, and British North America, the work is carried on by many vigorous Auxiliaries, which send valuable pecuniary support towards the general operations of the Society, in addition to providing the Scriptures for the supply of their own fields.

The attractive New Testament in English, which was first issued in July, 1884, for sale (below cost) at one penny per copy, had reached a total circulation of 3,330,038 copies on February 20th, 1888. As the price is specially fixed at one penny to bring it within the purchasing power of all classes, and to encourage them to purchase copies of their own, no copies of this book have been supplied free, or at a price below one penny. A similar Penny Testament has been published in Welsh.

It will be seen by the above that the British and Foreign Bible Society is honoured by God as the great instrumentality whereby the Word is taken to all the world, and has thereby free course and is glorified. Glorifying the Word, God Himself is glorified; for it testifies of Jesus, God the Son, and of the Spirit of God, who takes of the Word and shows it to the unbelieving, ungodly world. The nation which thus deals with the Word of Life, and whom God Himself thus exclusively employs must needs be Israel. Our national duties therefore in reference to the circulation of the Bible are manifest. We are merely trustees of the Book. It is meant for the whole world as their Book no less than ours; and it is our duty, as God's chosen ones, to take it to every erring, sinful, child of Adam, and give it to them as the great Father's message to His beloved children. "For God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son" for it; and not only so, but He gave His Word also to Israel that they as His messengers and missionaries might "blossom and bud, and fill the face of the world" with Gospel, Bible "fruit," to the saving of the souls of those for whom the Lord Jesus Christ died and rose again, "The Just for the unjust." Let Israel therefore, as the stewards of so great a treasure, praise the Lord for His goodness, and work for Him as He desires them to work, in making known to the sons of men the grace of God, the pitifulness of His tender mercy, and His faithfulness (James v. 11; 1 Cor. i. 9, and x. 13).

THE PAN-ANGLICAN CONFERENCE.

THERE is clearly an Israelitish reference in the Pan-Anglican Conference which has just separated, for it points to a gathering of the Prelates of the whole Anglican Communion, and they were summoned to confer together by the Patriarch of the whole Anglican Episcopate. Since the British are Israel—Christianised—it is the most natural thing in the world that the Primate of all England, and of the English-speaking races, should summon the Prelates to assemble and deliberate upon questions material to the religion of the chosen people. Britain, and Greater Britain, then have, representatively, come together at this time to take counsel with the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Patriarch, in regard to matters interesting to "the universal Episcopate"—on which the sun never sets, North, South, East, and West, where Israel is found. The reason why the Archbishop of Canterbury has been selected to represent the Patriarch of the new Patriarchate of Greater Britain, is thus set forth by "Morris Fuller" in a recent publication. He said "It was because of the recent marvellous growth of the British Empire—now a seventh part of the world's surface, and a sixth portion of the world's inhabitants—because of the rapid spread of the Anglo-Saxon race and language in both hemispheres, from Quebec to Canton, from New Zealand to the Himalayas; because of the development of our commerce, and the foundation of young and vigorous communities, connected with our Imperial Federation, in all parts of the world; because of the colossal proportions of England's Imperial Power, and its magnificent future, the consequent advance of the Anglican Church, and unprecedented increase in the Anglican Episcopate. All these reasons, combined, have caused the Archbishop of Canterbury, our Primate, to be regarded as Patriarch of the new Patriarchate of Greater Britain."

These points, thus succinctly put forth by the writer in question, indicate clearly that the nation which has recently summoned the Prelates of the Empire to the isles of the West, must be Israel, and none other, because our Empire has marvellously grown in recent years, as we all know, and such growth was Israel's destiny in the latter times. To Jacob the promise was made, in Gen. xxxv. 11, R.V., by the Lord Himself: "And God said to him, I am God Almighty; be fruitful, and multiply: a nation and company of nations shall be of thee." Also in Gen. xxviii. 14, R.V.: "Thy seed shall be as the dust of the earth, and thou shalt spread abroad to the West, and to the East, and to the North, and to the South; and in thee and in thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed." This has been literally fulfilled. Therefore, our public writers notice, as the reason for the Pan-Anglican Conference and its efforts, that the British Empire has so marvellously grown in recent times, that already it extends over a seventh part of the earth's surface, and holds within its folds a sixth of the world's inhabitants. It was meet, therefore, he argues, that its Church should assemble, at the bidding of the Primate of such a Power, and discuss the questions of the day, as they affect the Church of God. But there is another point raised in this matter. The Anglo-Saxon race is rapidly spreading over the earth, and, as a consequence, the language is also becoming universal. The language follows the race, as we have always maintained. It is being adopted in Quebec, and spoken in Canton. In New Zealand it is the vernacular of the majority of the inhabitants, and at the foot of the Himalayas it is the tongue of the paramount Power. Our world-wide commerce carries it everywhere, and our colossal, imperial power compels its adoption even in countries like the Transvaal, where, in spite of the Boers, who compare it to the cackling of turkeys, it is everywhere adopted, in the courts, the markets, in public offices, and the way-side.

Digitized by Google

Greater Britain, and the English-speaking races then, have a new link of loving connection added to those which have previously existed, and through the Pan-Anglican Conference they realise and exhibit to the world the wondrous fact, that "the nation and company of nations" are Christian and Protestant, one in love to Christ, and united in national, federal, Christian bonds, which, in itself, is a fulfilment of Hosea's prophecy: "In the place where it was said to them, Ye are not My people (Lo-Ammi), it shall be said unto them, Ye are the sons of the living God." The Pan-Anglican Church, and its Conference, are the modern, living, acting embodiments of this prophetic announcement. It is connected with and united to a nation which is the first of all the Powers of the world, that nation which our Lord declared would succeed to the inheritance of the kingdom of God, which, being taken from the Jews, was to be conferred on the other sister, the Israelite kingdom of Ephraim, the fruitful one—even Great Britain. This Conference was not a "Council," it was not œcumenical, it was not infallible, like those of Rome. It represented only the Anglican National Church, "a more modest platform than Vaticanism, but more Scriptural and more in accordance with primitive models and the dictates of reason."

The Churches, now united and represented at the Pan-Anglican Conference, are "the Church of England, the Churches planted by her in India, the Colonies, and elsewhere, most of which Churches are associated into six distinct provinces; the Church of Ireland, the Episcopal Church in Scotland, the Episcopal Church in the United States of America, with its missionary branches, and the Church in Haiti." To prove that the Pan-Anglican Conference represents, in a real sense, God's great witnesses in the world, according to Isa. xliii. 10—12, and xliv. 8, R.V., the following parts of the addresses to the Faithful, issued by the Conference in 1867, and again in 1878, will fully testify. In 1867 the Conference said: "Furthermore, we entreat you to guard yourselves and yours against the growing superstitions and additions with which, in these latter days, the truth of God has been overlaid; as otherwise, so especially by the pretension to universal sovereignty over God's heritage, asserted for the See of Rome, and by the practical exaltation of the Blessed Virgin Mary as Mediator in the place of her Divine Son, and by addressing of prayers to her as intercessor between God and man; of such beware, we beseech you, knowing that a jealous God giveth not His honour to another." In 1878 the Bishops in Conference declared, inter alia:—

The principles on which the Church of England has reformed itself are well known. We proclaim the sufficiency and supremacy of the Holy Scriptures as the ultimate rule of faith, and commend to our people the diligent study of the same. We confess our faith in the words of the ancient Catholic creeds. We retain the apostolic order of Bishops, Priests, and Deacons. We assert the just liberties of particular or national Churches. We provide our people, in their own tongue, with a Book of Common Prayer, and offices for the administration of the Sacraments in the best and most ancient types of Christian faith and worship. These documents are before the world, and can be known and read of all men. We gladly welcome every effort for reform upon the model of the Primitive Church.

We see by these extracts that the Conference is a witnessing, protesting body, as Israel was destined to be. She protests against the errors of the Church of Rome, against the worship or cultus of the Virgin Mary, and the multiplication of false mediators between God and man. The Pan-Anglican Conference, therefore, was an assemblage in keeping with Israel's character throughout, and points, as we have seen, to several of her Scriptural characteristics. Thereby, the Conference gave us another and a fresh clue wherewith to be certified that the British are the people of whom we are in search—a people once lost, but now discovered to the glory of God.

MR. MEREDITH TOWNSEND ON THE FUTURE OF INDIA.

In the Contemporary Review for June, 1888, Mr. Meredith Townsend contributes a paper on the question, "Will England Retain India?" which he answers in the negative. He admits we govern well, and bestow vast benefits on India by our rule. He grants also, that when we go, India will become the prey of the murderer, robber, and marauder. Her fields will reek with blood then, and the pax Britannica will give place to the carnage of political chaos. We ask, then, why this pessimist thinks we are going to lose India, and why the vast Empire is to be torn from our paternal grasp, and delivered over to the miseries of plunder, robbery, and ruin? He thinks it is because, first, the Indian races are brown, and we, their rulers, are white! and because, between brown and white races there is a perennial hatred, that nothing ever can or will reconcile! Therefore, he declares our Empire there is destined to set in blood, and collapse in revolution and rebellion! The Indian Mutinies, he declares, took place for these two causes, but no other. British rule, too, it seems, is so monotonous, and lacks so much the "interestingness of life," that the natives are sure, one day, to set it aside and go back, out of mere preference, to their old Asiatic liberty, to slay, and murder, and rob, or be slain, murdered, and robbed, by way of variety to the present intolerable sameness of their national lot. The conclusion of his whole contemplation of the subject is this:—

India, therefore, will fly in pieces; the ancient hostilities of race, and creed, and history, none of which have we had time to extinguish, will revive at once; and life will again be made interesting as of old by incessant wars, invasions, and struggles for personal ascendancy. The railways, the only things we have built, will be torn up, the universities will be scouted by military rulers, the population will begin to decline, and, in short, for one word expresses it all, India will be once more Asiatic. Within five years of our departure we shall recognise fully that the greatest experiment ever made by Europe in Asia was but an experiment after all; that the ineffaceable distinctions of race were all against it from the first; and that the idea of the European tranquilly guiding, controlling, and perfecting the Asiatic until the worse qualities of his organisation had gone out of him, though the noblest dream ever dreamed by man, was but a dream after all. Asia, which survived the Greek, and the Roman, and the Crusader, will survive also the Teuton and the Slav.

Mr. Townsend considers that our Indian Empire, "which came in a day (!), will disappear in a night." The whole Empire is so great a puzzle to him, that he regards its existence as a miracle, and says "it is a miracle, as a floating island of granite would be a miracle, or a bird of brass, which flew, and sung, and lived in mid-air." He deems it "a structure built on nothing, without foundations, without buttresses, held in its place by some force, the origin of which is undiscoverable, and the nature of which has never been explained." This, and a great deal more like it, is the burden of Mr. Townsend's article, but in one point he is right. The Indian Empire is a miracle and a puzzle, founded on what, because he is blind, he cannot see or understand, though Anglo-Israelites understand and comprehend it well. This Empire is God's good gift to Israel. This British nation is

Digitized by Google

Israel, and to them God has given the Heathen Indian Empire, in the words he will find in Psa. cxi. 6, where God declares "that He showeth His people the power of His works, in giving them the heritage of the heathen." "The heritage of the heathen" is India, and God has given it to Israel, the British nation, according to the prophecies. The Lord maintains them in possession, and here is the explanation of the secret Mr. Townsend cannot comprehend, for lack of a little faith and spiritual discernment. He is no prophet, as he admits, and yet he ventures, freely, to prophesy that the Empire, which he says was "the growth of a day, will perish in a night." How does he know that? Who gave him the information? The Indian Empire did not "grow in a day"! It has been slowly growing for 120 years, and is growing still, as the State of Burmah, and the North-west Provinces, plainly prove to us. He considers, too, that we hold 250,000,000 of our Indian races by our 1,500 Civil Officials, and by the 65,000 bayonets supporting them, forgetting, utterly, that these are the advance-guard of the Power of Israel in the British Islands, and of the Colonial nations attached to us in the four quarters of the globe. It is this mysterious power which the Hindus and Mussulmans of India so greatly dread, and which reconciles them to the British Râj. "We are not afraid of you, sir," said some Hindus of the Madras Presidency, once, to a civilian who interrogated them on this very point. "We are not afraid of you, but we are afraid of the power behind you, which would fall upon us from the sea, and which, when you send for them, collect here from the North, South, East, and West. We are afraid of them and submit." Besides, the natives of India know better than Mr. Townsend does, that if the British go, Russia would come and take possession of India. There is no power of cohesion among the Indian races, even if there were a desire to eject the British. There are over sixteen nations in the land, diverse in languages, manners, habits, customs, religions, and institutions. The vast masses of the population are inert and content to remain under any power which will tax them lightly, and let them remain as they have remained for 3,000 years. The British, on the whole, deal justly and kindly with the masses, and they are content they should govern them. It was so in the Mutinies, and has been so ever since. Even during the Sepoy War, the people were with the British all through the North and North-west. In the South, peace reigned right across the peninsula. The people, in the very height of the Mutinies, protected the British under the very eyes of the raging Sepoys, and were content, as soon as the mutineers were exterminated, to return to their allegiance to the British Empress, then the Representative of the nation.

Differences of colour, between conquering and subject races, have never, of themselves, caused rebellions or insurrections. South India is very black, but its people are the most loyal of Her Majesty's subjects! The Kafirs and Hottentots of the Cape are black as well, yet love the British. The Maories are red, but live at peace with their British fellow-subjects. The Chinese and Red Indians are tawny yellow, yet contrive to exist in amity with the British in Hong Kong and North America. Mr. Townsend, in short, is wrong all round! He may be a very clever man, but his learning does not make him wise! He may have lived in India, but he knows very little about the people who inhabit it! In regard to what we have done for India, Mr. Townsend ought to know that railways are not the only things we have built for India. We have built for her splendid roads, magnificent bridges; a telegraphic system—the wonder of the world; canals, weirs, and irrigation works; education, the Gospel, the Bible, commerce, peace, civil and religious liberty, besides wealth, all these we have freely given to that distant heathen heritage, and we have won India's gratitude, as far as she is capable of feeling it. God's gift to Israel is India, and to Him be all the praise for the splendid prize!

THE BISHOP OF EXETER GIVES EVIDENCE.

THE Right Rev. Edward H. Bickersteth, D.D., Bishop of Exeter, preached the annual sermon of the Church Missionary Society at St. Bride's Church, Fleet-street, on April 30, 1888, and chose for his text, 1 Tim. i. 11 (R.V.), "The Gospel of the glory of the blessed God which was committed to my trust." One portion of his excellent sermon is so clearly on the lines of Our Identity that we think we must place it before our readers for their consideration. He was discussing the fact that the Gospel was committed in the councils of the Lord to human stewardship. This has always been our own contention. Through the after-seed of Abraham all nations, families, and kindreds of the earth are by promise to be blessed. Israel was to take root, to blossom and bud, and fill the face of the world with fruit (Gen. xxii. 18; xxviii. 14; Acts iii. 25; Is. xxvii. 6, R.V.). To no angelic agency was this glorious work to be committed. God formed, made, and created Israel to do it. "This people have I formed for Myself," He said, in Isa. xliii. 21, R.V., "they shall show forth My praise!" The Bishop drew a remarkable parallel beween the case of St. Paul, the Hebrew apostle to the Gentiles, and that of England, which is doing a work like his in these "last days." Yet it never occurred to the Bishop that "England" was so engaged in fulfilment of the prophecies, and because England was and is "Israel!" The preacher shows how our power is world-wide and built up to perform the very work God determined should be done by Israel, and while he acknowledged that we are doing that work, in a way exactly parallel with the one St. Paul was raised up to perform, it strangely never has been revealed to the Bishop that "the Imperial Anglo-Saxon Race" must be the "Imperial House of Israel," whose dominion is to be world-wide according to Dan. vii. 27, R.V., being the masters and yet the Christian teachers of the whole world (Micah v. 7, 8, R.V.). We quote as follows:—

And this brings us to the third and last great truth affirmed in our text—

3. The committal of this Gospel to human stewardship. The Gospel of the glory of the blessed God, says St. Paul, was committed to my trust. Nothing moved the Apostle more deeply than this. Whenever he alludes to it, it seems to bring him to the very dust. It is in connection with this he speaks of himself as the least of the Apostles; and a few years later, with deepening humility, as less than the least of all saints; and later still, not long before he finished his course, as the chief of sinners. He was with those to whom he ministered this Gospel in weakness and in fear and in much trembling,—not from fear of man, not from any doubt of the certainty of the message, not from any questioning of the power of God. But the overwhelming thought, "We are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us: we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God," compelled him to ask, Who is sufficient for these things? The priceless treasure was in an earthen vessel; but why? only that the excellency of the power might be of God.

You admit this in the great Apostle of the Gentiles. But you say, he was a chosen vessel unlike every other. You admire, and justly, his manifold education for the work he was called to fulfil. You point to the fact that he was an Hebrew of the Hebrews, and yet a Roman citizen of Tarsus, to the culture of his learning, to the religiousness of his Pharisaic youth, to the fiery zeal of his manhood, and, when it pleased God to reveal His Son in him, to the overmastering love of Christ, which made him count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus his Lord if only he might finish his course with joy. Then you urge that St. Paul was clothed, like Israel's warriors of old, with the Spirit of the living God. And lastly you remind us that the legions of Rome had prepared a highway for the Gospel into almost every land, and that the weary world was unconsciously craving for that wonderful ambassador of the Cross.

All this is true. But is it too much to say that England, and pre-eminently England's Church, have been trained by God for a like embassy, an embassy of the same promise and of the same hopefulness, in these last days?

How marvellous has been God's education of the Church of our fathers; the early planting of the Gospel among us from apostolic days; then, lessons learned under the iron bondage of Rome, which perhaps nothing else could have so deeply graven on our hearts, hunger for freedom, thirst for light, a craving for the pure word of God; then, after a long winter, the fresh springtide of the Reformation; then, amid sundry calm and wildering storms, the consecration of noble intellectual powers to the defence and furtherance of the Gospel; and then, coming nearer to our own times. the revival of Evangelical life, followed by the renaissance of Church order; and now year by year the closer intermingling of these two great streams of thought, so that Evangelical life has largely indoctrinated the lovers of Church order, and the love of Church order has directed into the best channels the zeal of Evangelical life. We ponder these things and ask ourselves, Has not God, Who trained the Apostle of the Gentiles in the first century, been training the Church of the imperial Anglo-Saxon race for His missionary work among the heathen in these last day? St. Paul was clothed with the Holy Spirit; but the Master's promise holds true now as at the first Pentecost after His resurrection, "I will pray the Father, and He shall give you another Comforter, that He may abide with you for ever." Faith has grasped and is grasping the promise. In St. Paul's days the civilized world had been laid open to the messengers of the Gospel by the victorious armies of Rome. But the empire of England is vaster than that of Augustus. Our mother tongue is known in regions where Latin in the times of the Cæsars was never heard. Our far-reaching Colonial Empire gives us the power of preaching Christ to two hundred and fifty millions of the heathen under the protection of the British flag. And our mercantile ascendancy, which is now so great that more than one-half of the freightage of the whole world is carried in British vessels, gives us access at least. and often far more than bare access, to almost all other lands. Is it, then, presumptuous to say that the Gospel of the glory of the Blessed God has been committed to our trust as a nation? We make no exclusive claim to this lofty privilege. We rejoice in the missionary labours of other Churches and of other lands. Especially we bless God for the Protestant missions of America, that great nation to which we are bound by countless ties of kinship and sympathy. Nor would we forget that the reversion of the missionary inheritance belongs to Israel, when the prayer of the Jewish Psalmist shall be fulfilled: "God be merciful unto us, and bless us, and make His face to shine upon us, that Thy way may be known upon earth, Thy saving health among all nations." But although there were many apostles in the early Church, St. Paul was pre-eminently the Apostle of the Gentiles. Has not his mantle now fallen upon England?

Digitized by Google

It has been the first and foremost glory of the Gospel Propagation Society that for nearly two hundred years it has sought to make spiritual provision for the emigrant sons and daughters of England, and now is seeking through them to reach the heathen. For these colonists are, we cannot doubt, the ancestors of great and mighty nations yet unborn, and on us at home, speaking after the manner of men, it largely depends what the faith of those nations shall be, and what their influence upon the heathen among whom they dwell. Which of us does not pray, God bless that venerable Society, and its younger sister, the Colonial and Continental Church Society, in their noble work? May the merciful kindness of the Lord be ever more and more towards them; and may they prove the truth of the Lord endureth for ever in the fulfilment of that double benediction which rested on the father of the faithful, "I will bless thee, and thou shalt be a blessing."

But from among and from beyond our Colonial dependencies the cry of heathen and Mohammedan lands, sometimes an inarticulate cry of anguish and unrest, sometimes a cry of distincter entreaty, "Come over and help us," is borne to our ears by every wind that blows. Our beloved Church Missionary Society has heard the cry, and assuredly gathering that the Lord has called us to preach the Gospel unto them, has striven for almost four-score years and ten, as God has opened one door after another, to send forth faithful evangelists and pastors and teachers. The selection of Mission fields in which to labour, in itself a vast responsibility, has been made on no cast-iron system. But this very absence of system, when God has sealed the labours of His servants with success—so like the spread of the Gospel in Apostolic times—is, I think, no uncertain indication that God has led us.

"BLESSED IS HE WHOSOEVER SHALL NOT BE OFFENDED IN ME."

SURELY Matt. xi. 6 is one of the most wonderful verses in the Bible! The passage records the words of the Lord Jesus Himself, and we may rely upon them implicitly. The words were spoken in reference to the question sent by John the Baptist to the Lord. "Art Thou He that should come, or look we for another?" The Lord in reply, performed many miracles in the presence of His questioners, and sent back to His imprisoned servant the fulfilment of the words of Isaiah xxxv. 5, 6, xxix. 18, xlii. 7, and lxi. 1, and bade him draw his own conclusions! He ended the incident by declaring, what seems disconnected with the context, "And blessed is he whosoever shall find none occasion of stumbling in Me" (Matt. xi. 6, R.V.) The words of the Lord, however, we may apply them to the Baptist and his question, refer us straight back to Isa. viii. 14, 15, and also to Rom. ix. 33, 34, 1 Peter ii. 8, and other like texts. The chief point in the passage which excites wonder is this, that our Lord declared that merely "not to be offended in Him," or "not to find cause of stumbling in Him," would suffice to mark the man or nation whom He regards, and which is really blessed of God! The plain allusion is to Isaiah's prophecies in ch. viii. 14, 15, and xxviii. 16. These verses in the Revised Version are to the following effect: "He (the Lord of Hosts) shall be for a sanctuary; but for a stone of stumbling, and for a rock of offence to both the Houses of Israel; for a gin and for a snare to the inhabitants of Jerusalem; and many shall stumble thereon, and fall, and be broken. and be snared, and be taken." Again, in ch. xxviii. 16, R.V., "Behold, I lay in Zion for a foundation a stone, a tried stone, a precious corner-stone, a sure foundation; he that believeth shall not make haste." "The Lord of Hosts" thus figured, was the Lord Jesus Christ, God the Son. He was "the sanctuary" to Israel; that is, to the House of Ephraim-Joseph but a rock of offence to the "disobedient House," the House of Judah, or the Jews. Our Lord in Matt. xi. 6. R.V. had in His mind, we believe, the two Houses when He spoke, and repeated, pointing to Himself, the prophecy of Isaiah in ch. viii. 14, 15, "Blessed is (the House) which shall not be offended, or find occasion of stumbling in Me!" The Jews stumbled and fell, and were snared and taken. Blessed was the House then in separation from the Jews, who would find in Jesus a sanctuary, and would accept Him as their Saviour, not finding in Him any cause of offence. There were but two alternatives in the Lord's mind. Either rejection of Himself, as a sanctuary; or acceptation of Himself, as such. There was no middle course. The case of those who never heard of Him, or who paid no attention to His claims to save and redeem them, was not before Him. He had but two peoples in view, namely, those mentioned in Isa. viii. 14, from which He quoted, that is, "both the Houses of Israel." This, then, was the Baptist's answer! Tell him (said the Lord, in effect) that I am the sanctuary and the rock of offence and stone of stumbling. To Israel I present Myself, and they will deem Me precious. To the Jews I shall be a gin and a snare, the stone of stumbling, and a cause of offence. These will reject Me, being rebellious. Those will accept Me being "obedient." "I am inquired of by them that asked not (for Me). I am found of them that sought Me not; I have said 'Behold Me, behold Me!' unto a nation that was not called by My name." But what of the other House, the Jews? "I have spread out My hands all the day unto a rebellious people, which walketh in a way that is not good, after their own thought; a people that provoketh Me to My face continually" (Isa. lxv. 1, 2, R.V.).

St. Peter also quoted Isa. viii. 14, 15, and xxviii. 16, in his 1 Epistle ii. 6, 7, and 8, R.V. drawing a distinct parallel as we have done now, between "Israel obedient" whom He was addressing then, and the "disobedient" Jews. Thus, "Because it is contained in Scripture, behold I lay in Zion, a chief corner-stone, elect, precious. And he that believeth on Him, shall not be put to shame. For you, therefore, which believe, is the preciousness; but for such as disbelieve, "the stone which the builders rejected, the same was made the head of the corner" (Psalm cxviii. 22). And "A stone of stumbling, and a rock of offence;" for they stumble at the word, being disobedient, whereunto also they were appointed." The diaspora or elect dispersion of Israel, whom St. Peter addressed, were Israel "obedient" and had accepted Christ. The other House were "disobedient," stumbled and fell. Our Lord's words then in Matt. xi. 6, addressed to John the Baptist, had a national significance which we can perceive by reference to Isa. viii. 14, he quoted: and we see, St. Peter followed Him in drawing the distinction between the two Houses of Israel, "obedient" and "disobedient;" the blessedness or preciousness connected with Christ's sacrifice was to come, and thank God has now come on those being Ephraim-Israel, who have not found any occasion of stumbling in Jesus. The British nation has not stumbled at, or rejected Him. The Jews distinctly have done both! The blessedness attaches to that House which is not Judah, but nationally it has nothing to do with any non-Israelite Gentile nation, in any way at all. This view agrees singularly with our Lord's other words to Judah in Matt. xxi. 43, "The kingdom of God shall be taken from you (Jews) and given to A NATION bringing forth the fruits thereof." That nation is Israel, as Isa. lxv. 1, (R.V.) shows us, compared with Isa. xxvii. 6 (R.V.). In short, Matt. xi. 6, is not true as a fact of individuals or of nations other than the two Houses of Israel! The proposition that save those who have been offended in Jesus all others are "blessed" is not capable of substantiation! Myriads never hear of Christ, and these cannot be blessed. Myriads treat His claims with indifference, neither stumbling at, or being offended with Him. These cannot be said to be blessed! It is not even true of Israelites and Jews individually; for while Jews have stumbled and fallen, individual Israelites who have not similarly rejected Him are in multitudes of cases lost for lack of faith; forgetting God and their own souls, caring for nothing but their own ease and pleasure. Nationally the thing is true as between Israel and Judah only; and to God be all the praise for the consolation it nationally brings us! since it tells us, that not having stumbled as the Jews have stumbled, over the Lord Jesus, our sanctuary, we are as a nation blessed of God, saved by Christ, and sanctified, or set apart for the service of the Lord, by the Holy Spirit of the Lord Jehovah. Israel praise ye the Lord!

Digitized by Google

WHICH SHALL BE THE GATE, ESQUIMALT OR BURRARD INLET?

EVERYTHING respecting the Gates possesses a special interest for Anglo-Israelites, and therefore we propose to refer to a curious debate in the House of Lords on June 11th in respect to the merits of two spots in and near Vancouver's Island, to serve as Israel's North Pacific Gate. The debate was raised by a proposal made by Lord Sudeley that our present position at Esquimalt was unsatisfactory, and that a better and safer harbour, fortified arsenal, and coaling station could be found in Burrard Inlet, on the mainland opposite to, and North-west of, Esquimalt. Thither his lordship advised the Government to remove their proposed Gate, or Fortified Harbour, for the defence of the North Pacific and the Canadian Pacific Railway's Western terminus.

Lord Sudeley's reasons for making these proposals were these. In the first place, Esquimalt was on Vancouver Island, far removed from the terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway, on the mainland, and at this present moment Esquimalt was absolutely undefended and defenceless, there being no gun, or fort, or battery erected there to protect the place against Russia, its possible enemy. We had now very few vessels of war on the station (only seven), and their speed was very small, compared with the efficient and large fleet the Russians maintained at Vladivostock. Then there were the coal mines fifty miles higher up the Straits, which furnished the only coal procurable anywhere in the Pacific for the supply of war on that and the China Station, and those mines could not be defended from Esquimalt. Just opposite to those mines, Lord Sudeley said, there was a natural harbour, 20 miles long and two wide, capable of being adequately defended, and where all our ships of war could lie safe from attack. It was close to the terminus of the Great Railway. Thither he counselled the removal of the Gate, and suggested that, at whatever cost, the transfer from Esquimalt to Burrard Inlet ought to be made.

The answer came from Lord Elphinstone, supported by Lord Harris. The former said that Esquimalt had been selected as the proper coaling station by the Committee on Colonial Defence, a body of qualified experts, and it was necessary to abide by their decision, and not by that of those who had no knowledge or authority to speak. Burrard Inlet was all Lord Sudeley described it, but there was one fatal objection to it, which put it quite out of Court. The entrance was a quarter of a mile wide only, and the tide ran so strongly into and out of it (eight or nine knots an hour) that, except at certain times, it was not safe to enter with a large ship, which there would be great danger of running ashore. The harbour was 12, not 20, miles long, and it was admitted to be perfect when once a ship was in it. But the objection named was fatal. Esquimalt was better adapted to naval purposes. It enabled us to defend the whole seaboard of British Columbia. It was situated in a strategic position, and large sums had been spent on it by the Colonial and Home Governments to defend and fortify it. It was admitted by Lord Harris that at the present moment it was absolutely defenceless! though the guns to occupy the works were nearly all ready, and could be sent out "to-morrow."

Lord Elphinstone said that if war were to take place now, the naval and military authorities would not go to Burrard Inlet, but would make Esquimalt their head station. The guns which the British Government had prepared for Esquimalt, costing £31,000, were as follows:—Two six-inch guns of 5,000 yards range, four nine-inch guns of 7,000 yards range, two quick firing guns, six ten-pounders for general use, and six rifle machine guns. They were going to provide also £10,000 worth of submarine stores, and £10,000 of submarine buildings, besides suitable ammunition for the whole of the armaments provided.

The result of the entire debate was that Esquimalt is established as the great Gate guarding the British possessions and interests in the North Pacific Ocean, that at present the Gate in question is utterly undefended, an easy prey to Russia if war were suddenly declared, and that we purpose in our leisurely way to send out guns to fortify the harbour some day when it suits us, living meanwhile as Israel was to live, securely, carelessly and confidently in the isles, neglecting the command of our Lord to "shut our doors about us," though Russia is threatening disturbances on the Eastern frontiers of Europe, and on the North-West of India is preparing for a military demonstration, which may mean war whenever she feels ready for it. Surely our nation's conduct in such instances of neglect as that exhibited at Esquimalt is a fresh Identity, and is inexplicable on any other hypothesis than that of her Israelitish origin. Her most vital interests she neglects, and allows years to go by without taking the most reasonable precautions against attack and pillage, though well aware she has a watchful and deadly enemy on the opposite shore of the North Pacific, increasing her power of offence year by year in Vladivostock, on Russian territory. That enemy she knows is bent on robbing and spoiling her Indian and other territories, and is waiting for her opportunity to do it. Yet Israel lives on carelessly and confidently in the isles, unmindful of her danger, but only tardily waking up now to obey her God's command to shut her doors about her and to fortify her Gates!

Digitized by Google

No doubt the thing will be done in time, but only if her sons urge her to the duty, for the idea seems to be ingrained in this nation's mind that however bitter and jealous the nations may be of her power and wealth, no one will dare to touch her, because for a thousand years past no one has robbed or spoiled her! Can it be that British-Israel has a suspicion that God is her ever-present Guardian, and that it is best to trust in Him? If so, to Him be all the praise!

ANGLO-ISRAEL FREE DISTRIBUTION FUND.

Fifty-seventh Monthly Report.

We are sure all our readers will have learnt with much sorrow and regret of the trouble that has befallen us in the death of our excellent secretary, Mr. C. Horner, who, since our last report, has passed to his rest. While rejoicing in his gain, we can but lament our loss, which to the Fund, we feel, is well nigh irreparable.

Until someone is found to take up the secretary's work, we will endeavour to supply with literature any Sowers who apply to us for it. We hope to hear from all, especially those abroad, some of whom, we fear, have been rather neglected lately, owing to the secretary's illness and want of funds.

The following donations and subscriptions, from July 14th to Aug. 17th, are very gratefully acknowledged:—Mrs. T., 2s.; Miss L. H. S., 10s.; Mrs. C. (monthly subscription), 2s. 6d.; T. W., 1s.; "Ephraim," £1; C. G. L., Dieppe, 10s.; Mrs. N., Tasmania, £1; J. C. F., 7s. 6d.; Mrs. L., 10s.; Mrs. C. B. (monthly subscription), 5s. Per Philo-Israel: Mrs. J., £1; "Expectant," 4s. 7d.; W. P., New Zealand, 10s.

Total, £6 2s. 7d.

Finance.—The total amount received this year is £55. At the same date last year the receipts amounted to £80. We should be exceedingly thankful if our friends would endeavour to make up the difference, as it is difficult to meet the increasing demands on the Fund.

Donations of Literature.—The following gifts are very gratefully acknowledged:—100 copies of "New Testament Truth," from the author; 19 Messengers and various leaflets, from "Oxonian"; and also one copy monthly of the Two Witnesses, from the Rev. R. Douglas.

Banner Distribution.—Owing to lack of funds we were obliged lately to reduce the number of Banners sent out. At present, however, we are again enabled to despatch the full number (127) weekly.

Literature Distribution.—Sixteen parcels have been forwarded to the following places:—Sheffield, Ludlow, Stockport, Weymouth, Owlerton, Devonport, Manchester, Cheshunt, Calne, Colwyn, Shepherd's Bush, Portsmouth, Brighton, Malta, Berne (Switzerland), and Launceston (Tasmania). Twelve smaller packets have also been sent to Liverpool, Barnsley, Great Yarmouth, Manchester, Silvertown, Hull, Wilsden, Sheffield, Shrewsbury, London, New Hampton, and Teddington.

Correspondence.—Mr. Marchant tells us that he has delivered six lectures on Brighton beach, and one at St. Leonards. The latter appears to have been a success, and he is invited to give another there soon. It is known that four clergymen stood the lecture out. On Bank Holiday he had a very successful meeting at Brighton, and was thanked by several visitors at the close, including two Jews, who warmly expressed their satisfaction. Our friend adds: "I did not know there was a Jew present, but my subject was chiefly about who were to restore them to the land of Israel. They said as far as the Old Testament was concerned I was right. They accepted some Banners, and went away very grateful, as I also was to have their thanks. They told a gentleman I was right in saying that Ezekiel xxxvii. was unfulfilled. The two sticks had yet to be joined."

Launceston, Tasmania. We understand that an association is about to be formed here, which we trust may prove a success. Any information from Colonial Secretaries as to rules and method of work will be thankfully received by Mrs. J. Nichols, Wellington-street, Launceston. Mr. Dwyer, of the same place, is thanked for his interesting letter just received, which we hope to notice in next report. The encouragement has been long in coming, but is well deserved by our indefatigable agent.

From Dieppe one writes:—"I would rather fast one day in the week than forego my Banner."

J. Lawrence, Hon. Treasurer.

Contributions to the Fund will be thankfully received and acknowledged by the Hon. Treasurer, Miss J. Lawrence, Rosslyn, Hampton-road, Upper Teddington, Middlesex. Cheques may be crossed, "London and Provincial Bank, Teddington Branch."

P.S.—Since writing the above, Mr. A. Sibbald, of 3, Townshend Villas, Richmond, Surrey, has kindly offered to take the secretaryship, on the same terms as the late Mr. C. Horner. It has been decided to accept Mr. Sibbald's offer, and all applications for literature, and reports of progress should therefore be addressed to him as above.—J. L.

ISRAEL'S SCRIPTURE AND PRAYER UNION.

Within the past month three new cards of membership have been issued, making the total number of members 1,462. One card has also been given out by our agent in Malta.

The prayers of the Union are requested on behalf of a family in bereavement, that God's grace may enable them to bear their great loss.

New members are requested, when writing for cards, to kindly state whether their names are to be entered as Mr., Mrs., or Miss, etc.

For the convenience of those members who wish to continue the daily reading, the following list of chapters for September is appended:—

1st ...	Romans	vi.	12th ...	1 Cor.	i.	23rd ...	1 Cor.	xii.
2nd...	,,	vii.	13th ...	,,	ii.	24th ...	,,	xiii.
3rd ...	,,	viii.	14th ...	,,	iii.	25th ...	,,	xiv.
4th ...	,,	ix.	15th ...	,,	iv.	26th ...	,,	xv.
5th ...	,,	x.	16th ...	,,	v.	27th ...	,,	xvi.
6th ...	,,	xi.	17th ...	,,	vi.	28th ...	2 Cor.	i.
7th ...	,,	xii.	18th ...	,,	vii.	29th ...	,,	ii.
8th ...	,,	xiii.	19th ...	,,	viii.	30th ...	,,	iii.
9th ...	,,	xiv.	20th ...	,,	ix.
10th ...	,,	xv.	21st ...	,,	x.
11th ...	,,	xvi.	22nd ...	,,	xi.

The card of membership will be sent on receipt of three stamps.

The first and second series of Monthly Comments on the whole Bible, by Philo-Israel, may now be obtained in volume form. Price, in paper cover, 1s. 2d. each; in cloth 2s. each, post free.

The "Prayers for Daily Use," being a prayer for each day of the week, by Philo-Israel, are 1d., or 9d. per doz., postage extra.

The prayer of the Union, as on the Card of Membership, may now be obtained printed in larger type, price 1d. for three copies, post free; or 1s. per 100 for distribution. Address—Miss E. Sibbald, 3, Townshend-villas, Richmond, Surrey.

We ought to pray as a nation, and if Christian nations—I believe if the United States, Great Britain, Germany, and other nations that profess to be Christian would consecrate themselves to God and His divine guidance, His blessing would flow upon the people, for He is King of kings, and Lord of lords. Prayer has been a wonderful factor in the history of the British Empire.—Dr. Wild.

Digitized by Google

Correspondence.

IT IS THE "IMPOSSIBLE" THAT HAPPENS.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—I dare say your readers are almost nauseated with the frequent repetition of the facts in defence of our contention that nothing is commoner than for a nation to lose its own language and adopt its neighbour's. But attacks like this of Dr. Taylor (no relation I hope) render it necessary that the rebutting evidence should be kept before the public, and, if practicable, augmented. The published opinions of Huxley, Dwight Whitney, Sayce, and others, all of them unequivocally in our favour, have frequently been alluded to; in addition to which I pointed out a short while ago that the Normans appropriated the French tongue and everything else that was French in the space of a century or so. To further substantiate our position I will quote a few lines from two fresh authorities, who, in marked contrast to our critic, do not content themselves with bare assertion, but furnish us with the proof in support of what they promulgate. Professor Keane admits the transitory nature of both language and physical type, and among a number of instances he adduces these:—"The Hungarians and Bulgarians came of one stock—the Ugro-Finnic. The Hungarians have lost their racial type and retained their Ugrian speech. The Bulgarians have lost their speech and retained their type. On the other hand, the Polabish Slavs—Slavs of the Elbe Basin—have been completely Teutonised both in speech and type." "There are no pure races in Europe, and no mixed languages." How is this, unless half of Europe has abandoned its vernacular tongue?

Dr. Pinkerton undertook an official scientific tour round the world in a U. S. vessel, and his journal detailing the results of his voyage contains the following:—"The adoption of a language seems to be very much a matter of convenience." "A foreigner may traverse the United States without hearing a word of any Negro language, a single generation being sufficient to efface all knowledge of Africa."

The transformation in Hayti is still more peculiar, concerning which Pinkerton says: "Nothing short of written history could solve the enigma of French being the language of this island."

In the face of these and kindred examples, in view also of house-top deliverances by the most eminent living philologists, it is really startling that such men as those who write for "Chambers' Encyclopædia" should have the shamelessness to declare that "of course all the evidence goes to show the impossibility of the language of a nation being completely forgotten." Events which occur daily are not usually described as impossibilities, and if the doctor is actually not aware that they do occur it seems to me that the cash expended over a scholastic education is money thrown away.

The Identity may be abject nonsense. Its advocates may be "ignorant," and its opponents strikingly "learned." But Chambers' has so far only given us empty statements to that effect, and when we find that its theories are at variance with the teachings of every leading ethnologist, it becomes plain that Anglo-Israelism has more to fear from ignorance than from learning. Yours faithfully,

Newcastle, August 4, 1888. J. G. TAYLOR.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR PHILO-ISRAEL,—In reading your admirable reply to our Wesleyan friend I was particularly struck with the allusion to Romans ix. 6: "In Isaac shall thy seed be called." And this the apostle applies to the children of the promise, not to the children of the flesh. Now to any investigator of the Word of God the meaning of such passages is often discovered elsewhere.

Let us turn to the same expression in Hebrews with this commentary: "Accounting that God is able to raise up, even from the dead; from whence He did also in a parable receive him back" (Heb. xi. 18). But this carries the mind to another parable—that of the prodigal son—which we apply to Israel: "This my son was dead, and is alive again; he was lost and is found."

Now, what is meant by the "children of the flesh"? Here, again, we turn to Rom. iv., where the whole question is fully discussed. Take the 11th verse: "That he might be the father of all them that believe, though they be not circumcised." The children of the flesh evidently means the circumcision.

Again, let us turn to Gal. iv. 23, 24: "He that was born of the bondwoman was born after the flesh." She represented the covenant from Mount Sinai—the circumcision covenant, as will appear from the continuation of the argument in Gal. v. 1, which concludes the 4th chapter in the new version: "Stand fast, therefore, and be not entangled again in a yoke of bondage. Behold, I, Paul, say unto you, that if ye receive circumcision, Christ will profit you nothing." Verses 28 and 29 show the then position of the children of the flesh and the children of the promise. This whole epistle seems to be a letter against circumcision. Read Gal. i. 7, then ii. 7, 8, then iii. 3, then iv. and v. throughout; and even in Gal. vi. 13 we have again his stern opposition up to the end of the chapter to the reintroduction of the rite of circumcision: "Be not entangled AGAIN in a yoke of bondage." "Ye are not the children of the flesh, but the children of the promise."

Now, the Jews never have been received back from the dead; but the Ten Tribes have been received back from the dead. They were lost, dead, forsaken, hidden; and Peter recognises this fact in 1 Peter i. 5: "You—the dispersion—are guarded through faith unto a salvation ready to be revealed in the last time;" which Bishop Ellicot thus interprets: "Begotten unto an inheritance, which hath been reserved unto you, who are kept safe unto a deliverance." Reserved. The perfect tense: "Kept all this while until you came," or "with a view to you." (Compare Heb. xi. 40). Bengel says, "As the inheritance hath been preserved, so are the heirs guarded, neither shall it fail them, nor they it."

The salvation or, rather, a salvation to be revealed in the last time, must not be taken in the bald sense of salvation from damnation. Indeed the thought of the perdition of the lost does not enter into the passage. And is not our time the last time? And is not this salvation now being revealed in our history?

In his second proposition our Wesleyan friend states that there is no value in hereditary descent. Jesus does not think so, for He says from heaven: "I, Jesus; I am the root and offspring of David."

In the fifth he confounds himself; for he there shows that the predominating Biblical Christianity of our nation is a sign that He deems it necessary to environ the keeping of His religious covenant with great historic care, as He is stated by our friend to have deemed it necessary with respect to the old covenant in selecting the Jews, as he calls them, for this purpose. We give the glory to God. Our friend glorifies man.

The value of hereditary descent is very fully set forth in Rom. ix. 4, 5, which precedes his own quotation, and qualifies it in showing this value; for without this descent Abraham would be heirless; so the announcement is made—"In Isaac shall thy seed be called." Yours truly,

Hill House, Sandown, Isle of Wight. W. L. BLORE.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—I cannot refrain from writing to thank you for the instruction I have received in the pages of your delightful paper, the BANNER OF ISRAEL. It is now more than three years ago since I made the great and all-important discovery that the Almighty—whose love for mankind is so plainly manifest in the wondrous works of nature—had also in His grace and mercy provided what I required most of all—viz., a Saviour. I then began to study the Scriptures, a duty which I had long neglected. Oh, what a wealth of wisdom and love is to be found therein! In what beautiful language was the advent and life of my new-found Saviour foretold. I became very much interested in the Jewish question. How marvellously every event of importance in their history was foretold—sometimes centuries before the fulfilment! Yes, there they are, living witnesses to the truth of the Word of God, "removed into all the kingdoms of the earth for their hurt, to be a reproach and a proverb, a taunt and a curse in all places I shall drive them" (Jer. xxiv. 9).

Becoming fascinated with the subject, I pursued my studies, and found myself entering into discussion occasionally with unbelievers, some of whom soon pulled me up short. I would point to the Jews as witnesses of the divine inspiration of the Bible. "See," I would say, "The Jews are known as a by-word and a reproach," as predicted by Jeremiah. "Yes," the infidel would say, "but Hosea says they were to become unknown in name." 'When did the Jews become unknown?" Evading that question, I would urge, "It is prophesied that the Jews were to be bereft of children. Look at them now. They number only about the same as they did 2,000 years ago." My friend would then produce Hosea again. "The Jews were to be a multitudinous people after their dispersion;" and so we would go on: for every prophecy I brought forward fulfilled by the Jews he brought forth one which they did not fulfil. I then had to beat a retreat, and although still believing in every word of the Bible, yet very much discouraged to find that I could not make use of the Jews to overcome unbelief. I next consulted orthodox works to clear up the mystery, and the information I got from them amounted to this: That all the promises and prophecies made to the Israelites which are being fulfilled by the Jews were to be taken literally, and that those not fulfilled in the Jews refer to the Church, and are to be taken spiritually. It is needless to say I did not attempt to tackle an atheist on this ground on the question of prophecy. In the midst of my troubles a friend introduced to my notice some Identity literature, and directly I recognised the fact that there were two Israels, Judah-Israel and Ephraim-Israel, the whole difficulty was explained away, since the apparently contradictory prophecies were made to two distinct peoples.

Digitized by Google

The Jews (Judah) were to be known as a by-word and a reproach, and the Israelites of the Ten Tribes were to become unknown in name. Judah-Israel was to be bereft of children, and Ephraim-Israel was to become a multitude of people. I am now no longer obliged to retreat before the onslaught of the scoffer of God's Word on the subject of the Jews and prophecy. Truly I can now say, "My eyes have been opened, and I now behold wondrous things in the law." Trusting you will be spared many years to spread a knowledge of our larger belief,

I remain, yours truly,

London. G. G.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR PHILO-ISRAEL,—I send you herewith a comment on Anglo-Israelism, which displays such profound ignorance on the subject that were not Mr. Spurgeon, as we all know, a sincere and eminent preacher of the Gospel, we might imagine that he had never read the Old Testament. It seems to me of no use reiterating the fact of the very early separation of the Ten from the Two Tribes. The remark itself, "We are not Jews," is an evidence that Mr. Spurgeon has never made himself acquainted with the subject. What Anglo-Israelite ever averred that "we are Jews"?

It is wearying to read the unsupported assertions of clergymen and ministers who are supposed to have received a religious education, and who ought to be our teachers, so determined not to admit the facts of the Bible, and especially to scorn that by which we know that we are "the seed whom the Lord has blessed." Let us continue instant in prayer that the Lord may enlighten the minds of thousands of true and sincere Christians who at present, like Mr. Spurgeon, are devoid of perception of the inestimable value of God's promises to "Abraham and his seed for ever," the current fulfilment of which is now taking place in the experience of the British nation.

Yours sincerely, GEORGE BAYLY.

9, Kempshott-road, Streatham Common, Aug. 5th, 1888.

MR. SPURGEON AND ANGLO-ISRAELISM.

In reviewing a book on this subject, Mr. Spurgeon says: "We regard the theory as a sheer piece of romance. We are not Jews. Abraham is ignorant of us, and Sarah acknowledges us not."—From the "British Weekly," August 3rd, 1888.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—I see by to-day's BANNER that a correspondent, D. W., finds my writings on the Gentile Church the climax of confusion, and I hope you will allow me to explain myself once again. I will not trouble you further.

The quotation which D. W. makes from a former paper of mine is the following:—"The Church by law established is the Church of God in Great Britain, and Great Britain is the Church of God in the world;" for which he suggests that the following should be substituted:—"The Church by God established is the Church of God in Great Britain, and Great Britain is the kingdom of God in the world."

This would not at all express my view, because it takes no cognizance of the establishment of the Church in the throne as a divine ordinance, and loses sight of the fact that we make converts of the heathen as much by example as precept, and that the administration of a just and equal law has quite as much effect upon them as the preaching of the Gospel; that these heathen must first be conquered so that we can have a secure footing amongst them, next civilised, and, lastly, instructed in the knowledge of God. Moses says that Israel in the Christian dispensation would be a kingdom of priests, a consecrated or holy people. Now a priest is a man consecrated to officiate in a Church. So that the kingdom of God in which Israel ministers as His priests, must also be the Church of God. The national Church by law established is a Church within a Church. It ministers to the nation, and the nation ministers to the world.

It appears to me that our friend is the author of confusion himself, for he repeats the old error that there is no nationality in the Church of God. He admits that the Church is the bride, and that the kingdom is Israel; but he seems to forget that God represents Himself by His prophets as betrothed and married to Israel; and that St. Paul teaches that all who are in Christ are of the seed of Abraham—that is, they are adopted into the family of Abraham—which is Israel, which is the kingdom of God. D. W. instances the case of the Princess of Wales as proof that there is no nationality in the Church, the bride or consort of the king. He says that if H.R.H. Prince of Wales inherits the throne during his wife's lifetime, she will sit with him upon it; but he forgets that she will do so as an English not a Danish princess, and that her husband will not have inherited from his father, who occupied exactly the same position as herself, but from his mother.

There are two passages in the writings of St. Paul which clearly refer to the same event in which the terms Church and kingdom are used indiscriminately. In Ephes. v. 25—27 he writes that Christ loved the Church and gave Himself for it that He might present it to Himself a glorious Church, not having spot or wrinkle, or any such thing. The Church here evidently means the whole body of the redeemed after those who have refused the ransom have been separated from it. Again, in 1 Cor. xv. 24, 28, the same apostle tells us, referring to the same time, the same event, and the same people, that Christ must reign till He has put all enemies under His feet, and that then He will deliver up the kingdom to the Father. Christ presents the whole ransomed race to Himself as His Church which He has redeemed; and He then delivers up both Himself and it as the kingdom of God to the Father, subjecting Himself in His humanity, as the second Adam to the sovereignty of God, who establishes Him as Head of the House of Israel, King over the race which He has redeemed, for ever and ever (Psa. xlv. 6, 7).

Such is the close and inseparable connection between the Church and kingdom of God which the continuity and harmony of Scripture appears to me to require; and I think that D. W. mars that harmony by teaching that God "began His Church with Israelites;" but that He has not so continued it.

Yours truly,

J. M. GRANT, M.D., Surgeon-General.

Cheltenham, August 15.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—It may interest you to know that about eighteen months past I was staying in my native city, Bath, and passing by the Rooms I saw a lecture advertisement on a bill—subject, "The Great Pyramid." I attended, and could make nothing of it, but took up a leaflet headed "Who are you?" took it home, read it, thought it strange, sent for "The History of the House of Israel." I read this with the greatest interest, with the avidity of a novel reader.

Sir, it seemed as though it was the break of day, after a night of darkness; it seemed so extraordinary to have read, studied, and taught the Bible for 60 years, and then to begin to understand it. I still continue to feel the same, and have read that little book with several ladies, who all feel with me the truth of the Identity question, and last week sent the same book to America, and have no doubt it will throw the same light there and spread in that part of the world. I roused an interest by giving a sketch of it in a letter. If I say I have worked among the poor as a mission lady for seven years, doing nothing else, you will understand I am not writing in a cavilling spirit, and relate these few particulars to encourage you in your work and labour of love. I also heard a beautiful lecture at the Town Hall by a gentleman living in Pulteney-street, from which I also gained much information. If not troubling you too much, perhaps you will kindly give me the name of some easy book on the Pyramid.

I remain, Sir, yours obediently,

A READER OF THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

Aug. 7th.

THE last Hospital Saturday Collection in London was the largest yet made. It realized £5,000.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed: "Philo-Israel," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

SUBSCRIPTIONS. £ s. d.

Annual Subscription for one copy weekly (including the Twelve Double Numbers) post free 0 7 6
Two Copies (including Double Numbers) 0 13 6
Three Copies " " " 1 0 4
Four Copies " " " 1 5 6
Six Copies " " " 1 16 4

Post Office Orders to be made payable at the head office, St. Martin's-le-grand, London, to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C., or F. W. PARRY & Co., 29, Paternoster-row, London.

The Editor cannot undertake to return rejected MSS. unless stamps for the purpose be sent. Parties requiring an answer should enclose a stamp.

Contents Bills and Show Cards may be obtained on application to the Publishers.

Advertisements should be sent to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

Prepaid Advertisements are inserted at the rate of thirty words for 1s. 4d.

ROYAL BLIND PENSION SOCIETY OF THE UNITED KINGDOM.—Patron: HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN. President: THE DUKE OF GRAFTON, K.G.—This Society, founded in 1863, pays Life pensions to the Blind Poor at their own Homes, in all parts of the United Kingdom, in sums ranging from 10s. to 25s. per month. There are 540 of these afflicted people now on the Funds, and 203 others awaiting election. Only the want of funds prevents the Committee assisting all these necessitous cases. Help is most urgently needed. No costly Establishment and Administrative Expenses are incurred. Subscriptions and Donations will be gratefully received by the Officers, or may be paid to the Bank of England, or London and Westminster Bank (Southwark Branch). Treasurer, John C. Bumsted, Esq., 36, King William Street, E.C. Hon. Secs., Messrs. Thomas Pocock and A. S. Dodson. Secretary, W. Elliott Terry. Office, 235, Southwark Bridge-road, London, S.E.

Just published—Cloth, 2s. 6d.—a re-issue of

The Origin of Masonic Ritual and Tradition:

A Lecture on the Three Degrees, by BRO. WM. ROWBOTTOM, P.M., 1028, with facsimile of a very rare Masonic engraving published in 1789.

"Exquisitely clear and singularly correct in everything wherein I may be any authority or guide."—Professor PIAZZI SMYTH. "Will be found of considerable interest to many besides Masons."—Church Bells.

Oxford: S. Rowbottom and Son; London: R. Banks and Son, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C.; and F. W. Parry and Co., 29, Paternoster Row, E.C.

Price Five Shillings.—"Substantially and attractively got up, and profusely illustrated."—Oldham Chronicle.

Eildon Grange: A Tale.

By ANDREW CLARK, M.A., Vicar of St. Michael's, Oxford. "One of the most charming books. . . . The illustrations are full of playful humour."—Scotsman. "The book is undoubtedly a happy one."—The Oxford Magazine. "Both entertaining and bracing."—Dundee Advertiser.

Oxford: S. Rowbottom and Son; London: Hamilton, Adams and Co., 32, Paternoster Row, E.C.

☞ Ask for this Book at the Libraries.

WORKS BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

The History of the House of Israel. How They Were Lost and How They Were Found. Told for the children. Price 6d., cloth 1s.; post free 7d. and 1s. 1d. Fifth edition.

A Resume of the Scriptural Argument Proving the Identity of the British Race with the Lost Ten Tribes. Price 1d.; 6s. per hundred, postage 6d.

Anglo-Israelism. True, Not False. Being Philo-Israel's Reply to the Rev. Canon Bell's pamphlet, "Anglo-Israelism: True or False?" Price 1d., 6s. 6d. per 100. 16 pages, crown 8vo.

An Elementary Digest or Sketch of the Chief Facts and Teachings of the Great Pyramid of Egypt. Adapted to the Unlearned and Unscientific 56 pages, Illustrated with Diagrams, price 4d., post free 5d. 10th Thousand.

Our Identity with the House of Israel. Price 4d., Reprinted from "Clifton Chronicle Letters.

Are the English People the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel? An Inquiry Establishing the Identity of the British Nation with the Lost Ten Tribes. 4d.

Our Identity: What it is Not; What it is; and Our Obligations To-day in Respect to it Being a Lecture recently delivered in London by Philo-Israel, and published by special request. Price 2d., a reduction for quantities.

Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

HUMAN LIFE.—FIFTY YEARS' Record of Facts, Principles, and Discoveries (just published complete) Relating to the Improvement and Preservation of Human Life on Earth. Origin and true treatment of diseases. A series of articles by DR. SAMUEL BIRLEY, M.D., Ph.D. Book form, 50 pages. SENT FREE to every applicant by the publishers, GORDON B. MURRAY & CO., 50, Theobald's-road, Holborn, E.C. Write to-day

---

Price 3d., by post 3½d. One dozen copies post free for 3s.

PRESENT-DAY PROBLEMS

AND

How Anglo-Israel Truth Explains and Solves Them.

By V. M. COX.

Contents:—Our Identity and its Mission.—Imperial Federation.—The Eastern Question.—Rev. Archibald G. Brown and the Eastern Question.—Disestablishment.—Sabbath Observance.—Foreign Missions.—Our Relations with Judah.—Our Relations with Russia.—Egypt.—The Unemployed.—The Irish Problem.—Cui Bono?—A Remedy.

Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

READING CASES

For Holding the Weekly Nos. of the BANNER, Price 2s.

Price Threepence, by Post 3½d.

British & Jewish Fraternity.

The Outline of the Reasons which Convinced a Jew that the British People are of the Tribe of Israel

By the REV. ELIEZER BASSIN, M.S.

Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

Price 1d. One doz. post free 1s.; 100 post free, 6s. net.

WORK:

A THOUGHT OF THE PAST, PRESENT, AND FUTURE.

BY E. M. RUSH (A E I),

Author of "The New Old Story," "The Answer to the Eastern Question," "A New Light," "The Emblem of the Empire," etc., etc.

London: Robert Banks and Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-st.

Price 2d., by post 2½d. Second Edition, Revised.

A SUMMARY OF ANGLO-ISRAELITE TEACHING,

And of the Scripture Proofs on which it rests.

By SURGEON-GEN. J. M. GRANT, M.D.,

President of the Cheltenham Association, and Vice-President of the Metropolitan Anglo-Israel Association.

London: ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-st.

NEW BOOK BY DR. WILD.

Just Published, Price 3s., Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Lettered. Sent by Post on receipt of Published Price.

TALKS

FOR

THE TIMES.

BY JOSEPH WILD, M.A., D.D.,

Pastor of the Bond-st. Congregational Church, Toronto.

CONTENTS.—Chapter 1. A Gift of One Hundred and Ninety-Two Million Acres of Land. 2. The Return of the Jews to Palestine. 3. Folks that won't be Somebody. 4. The Four Prophecies of Egypt. 5. The Stone Kingdom and Dynamite; and the Orange Bill. 6. "144!" 7. "666!" 8. The Transit of Venus. 9. The Miracles of Antichrist; and the High Rock Image of Massachusetts, U.S. 10. The an who could not sleep, and what came of it. 11. The Rainbow. 12. London Destroyed, and Jerusalem a Seaport. 13. Liberalism. 14. A Graft without a Stock. 15. Mouldy Bread and an Oath. 16. A Tombstone Inscription. 17. Dog Lappers. 18. How to get Rich.

London: Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street. ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London. JOHN MENZIES & Co., Edinburgh & Glasgow.

ALL PUBLICATIONS ON THE IDENTITY OF THE LOST TRIBES OF ISRAEL

May be obtained at the Office of ROBERT BANKS & SON, RACQUET COURT, FLEET STREET.

The Banner of Israel (Weekly No. and Monthly Part). The Messenger, Two Witnesses, etc., forwarded immediately on publication at office rates. The Canadian Advance, post free for one year for 4s. 6d.

Catalogues post free on application.

PIANOFORTES, Harmoniums, American Organs. Why buy at shops inferior made instruments, and pay large profits, when you can buy direct from the Maker High-class Instruments, and save 50 per cent. by so doing? Full value allowed for old Instruments in exchange as part payment. Write for Price Lists and Testimonials to A. G. LINSTEAD, Cobden Pianoforte Company, 5, Eversholt-street, Camden Town, London. Established 1874.

Published by

ROBERT BANKS AND SON,

Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C.

Postal Orders may be obtained at any Post Office in the United Kingdom for the following amounts: 1s., 1s. 6d., 2s. each; 2s., 2s. 6d., 3s., 3s. 6d., 4s., 4s. 6d., 5s., 7s. 6d., 10s., 10s. 6d., 1l. each; 15s., 20s., 1½d. each. They should be "crossed" City Bank, Ludgate Hill, E.C. Stamps received.

A MESSAGE TO THE CHURCH FROM THE NINETEENTH CENTURY. The last written work on the Identity of the Anglo-Saxon Race with Lost Israel. By the late BISHOP TITCOMB. Imperial 8vo., cloth, gilt, 3s.

THE BRITISH NATION Proved to be the Remnant of Israel, and the Representatives of the Lost Ten Tribes. By J. H. WELDON, J.P., Author of "Britain and Prophecy." 66 pp., demy 8vo., 6d.; by post, 7d.

ENGLAND'S DUTY IN RELATION TO THE CHRISTIANS OF TURKEY. Being a true Solution of the Eastern Question. By the late JOHN WILSON, Author of "Our Israelitish Origin," &c. Price 6d., by post 7d.

SOUND, PURE, WHITE TEETH!

Those who value these will try

CARBOLINE

(The Great Sanitary Tooth Paste).

1/6 & 2/6 per Pot.

Through Chemists, or post free from the Makers,

GEORGE & WELCH

WORCESTER.

Lancet writes:—"To save the teeth use a good carbolic daily."

LADIES!

WE will send a FULL-DRESS LENGTH of BEAUTIFUL CLOTH (for Good, Strong, Serviceable wear), in any of the following colours, Carriage paid to any address for 10s. 6d. Colours:—Black, Blue, Fawn, Salmon, Resda, Slate, Ruby, Brown, Grey, Claret, Sage, Old Rose, Terra-Cotta, Amber, Peacock, Tabac, Bronze, Myrtle, Drab, Olive, Grenat, Clay Green, Navy, Partridge, Heather, &c., &c. These wonderful Dress Lengths have gained a world-wide reputation for magnificence, cheapness and durability, having no equal.

The Lady's Pictorial says:—"They are excellent quality and very good value for the money."

Thousands of Testimonials from all parts of the world.

Ladies should write at once for Patterns, which may be had free, and need not be returned.

AN AMAZING OFFER!!—We shall give a very handsome Brocaded Silk Handkerchief with each dress-length ordered from us during this season. Write for patterns. LUTUS B. LEATHLEY, Armley, Leeds.

Certain HARNESS' Cure.

ELECTROPATHIC BELT

FOR

SCIATICA

R. J. WATSON, Esq., 13, Market Street, Harwich, writes:—"Harness' Electropathic Belt has completely cured me of sciatica. After wearing it for a week I got better, and am now quite free from pain."

Guaranteed to generate a mild continuous current of Electricity, which speedily cures all Disorders of the Nerves, Stomach, Liver and Kidneys. Thousands of Testimonials. Pamphlet & Advice free on application to Mr. C. B. Harness, Consulting Electrician, the Medical Battery Co. Ltd.

Only Address,

52, OXFORD ST. LONDON, W. (Corner of Rathbone Place.)

Call to-day, if possible, or write at once

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C. F. W. PARRY (late GUEST & Co.), 29 PATERNOSTER-ROW WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 5, 1888, [All rights reserved.

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."
(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India.)

"And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the Forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS of the EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. XII., No. 611. Entered at Stationers' Hall.] WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 12. 1888. [PRICE ONE PENNY.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
France and Italy—Tibet and the British Fleet	365
Much Ado About Nothing. By J. G. Taylor	366
Some of Israel's Recent Acquisitions.—Part II. By J. Thomson	368
The One Great Colonizing Power of the Modern World	369
Review	370
The Great Craze of the day is Anti-Israelism, not Anglo-Israelism	370
British-Israel Lectures on Brighton Beach	371
Correspondence	371

FRANCE AND ITALY — TIBET AND THE BRITISH FLEET.

THERE are burning questions enough on all sides to lead us to anxious thought just now. There is the Massowah grievance between Italy and France, which has suddenly become threatening to the peace of Europe; there is the unlooked-for recrudescence of Boulangism in France, which means a danger to peace from another point of view; there is for ourselves quite a serious frontier war brewing by reason of the neglect of the Sikkim question, and of the idea that the invasion of the Tibetans might be disregarded, and would of itself die out. To crown all, the late naval manœuvres have left their sting behind, and revealed our national weakness at sea, telling us that we are only strong enough to protect London and the Channel, but that doing so we must leave the rest of our home ports to defend themselves, and in case of war with such a Power as France, must sacrifice our floating commerce for lack of ships. The list of burning questions is not exhausted by any means, as we all know, for Ireland is still in the throes of agitation, though matters are on the mend there; and the Eastern Question is perpetually threatening some crisis, which is unavoidable while the restless ambition of Russia is what it is, and "the sick man" still reigns at Constantinople, ready to die, leaving a rich inheritance that is sure to become the bone of contention among the maritime nations of the world.

In France the success of General Boulanger in securing a large majority of votes in three Electoral Divisions, the Nord, the Somme, and the Charente, was unexpected, and is giving cause for anxiety to Germany and Austria, who hoped French preference for this revolutionary, and, therefore, really, war candidate for power, was on the wane. France is in many quarters ripe for a change of Government, and will take the aid of anyone, even though he be a Boulanger, to get rid of the present political Constitution, not remembering past experience, which teaches that national power entrusted to a military autocrat leads to war as a matter of certainty. The outlook in France is causing distress of nations, with perplexity, and men's hearts are failing them for fear, and for looking after those things that are coming upon the earth.

Signor Crispi's note in reply to M. Goblet's (French) protest respecting the Massowah question is quite unparalleled in regard to the sharpness of the language used by the Italian statesman in dealing with the French Government. "The Powers," he wrote, "well know which side is in the wrong: whether it is the Power which enforces respect for the law, assuring public order, or whether it is the one which excites a peaceful population to disregard the law and defy the authority of the established government." That a proud nation like the French should not resent such a blow as this can only be accounted for by the supposition that France is not ready yet for war, and has reason to know that the attitude of Italy has Germany's initiative and sanction in order that France may be forced without Russian help, just now, to provoke Germany, Austria, and Italy combined to a contest, which it is hoped will destroy the power of France before the Czar is prepared to join in the mélée on her side.

But independently of the condition of Europe and the imminence of war in some quarter or other there, we have our own Israelitish troubles, though these are far removed from our own thrice-blessed home in these Isles of the West. There is the Tibetans' quarrel with our Indian Government, which threatens to grow into a frontier war of no small dimensions. We have allowed these Tibetan Asiatics for two years to defy the whole power of the British-Indian Empire, and because we have failed to give them the only lesson they can or will understand, namely, defeat in war, they have now massed 15,000 to 18,000 men against our slender garrison of 1,875 Europeans and natives, with four guns, at Gnatong; and the fear for the moment is that Darjeeling, our British station close by, may be attacked, and the European women and children there, now almost undefended, be placed in the extremity of danger. A blow will probably be struck there soon which will teach the Tibetans a needed lesson, but the pity is that it was not inflicted 18 months ago, when what may now become a war on the North-eastern Indian frontier, would have been settled without trouble or expense in the infancy of the disturbance.

But another source of anxiety still afflicts Israel of the Isles. She finds that her splendid fleet is not large enough to blockade an enemy's squadron in any given port for a length of time, and to protect at the same moment the Metropolis and the floating commerce of the country. The lesson seems to be that with our present fleet we are not strong enough to protect the country at large, and that the floating wealth of our merchant princes must, in the event of war, be left to take care of itself. Our cruisers are, it seems, insufficient in number, and very defective in speed and endurance. The result is this, that at a period of unexampled trouble abroad, when nation is ready to rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom, when North India and Ireland are two pregnant causes of distress and trial to ourselves, the British fleet is found by actual experiment to be lamentably deficient in fighting power, and the country and its trade in grievous danger by reason of our past neglect and foolish parsimony. What, then, shall we do? Shall we sit down in despair, and conclude from all this that our doom is fixed and our ruin from our neighbour's military ascendency a certainty? Nothing of the sort! This nation is Israel! She has God's promises of protection, help, and guidance. We have, as Israel, the certainty of victory when attacked, and we have the command of the Lord to take due and necessary precautions to ensure our safety in such words as those in Isa. xxvi. 20, R.V., "Come, My people, enter thou into thy chambers, and shut thy doors about thee; hide thyself for a little moment, until the indignation be overpast." We cannot shut our doors about us in any efficient way without a large increase in our naval power, and we suppose we shall, in obedience to the Lord's command, give further proof of Our Identity by spending at once a large sum in the increase of our fleet, and thus effectually closing our doors and our chambers against the threatening enemies of our polity, who are, it is feared, ever waiting for their chance to attack and ruin us, to rob and spoil God's Israel! In vain the fear! "He who keepeth Israel never slumbereth or sleepeth. The Lord is our keeper. He is our shade upon the right hand. He will preserve us from all evil. He will preserve our souls. He will preserve our going out and our coming in, from this time forth, and even for evermore." Ought we not then to say, "Praise ye the Lord," O ye children of Israel, His chosen and protected ones? (Psa. cxxi. 1—8, cxlviii. 14, R.V.)

Digitized by Google

MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

By J. G. Taylor.

In concluding this quartette of papers on a phase of the Identity which is regarded by friends as a formidable drawback, and paraded by foes as a fatal defect, we propose to adopt the policy of taking the bull by the horns, and so prove that it has none. We have shewn that if the failure of our nation to recollect its Israelitish lineage were even the anomaly it is represented to be there was ample reason for the ordination of the anomaly. But we have also shewn, by implication, that no anomaly exists, and made it manifest that in demanding what they call documentary evidence our opponents are anxious to sift the Identity through a sieve which they have been good enough to manufacture for the occasion. We now purpose bringing the matter to the bar of history, and leaving it to be judged by the tribunal to which its propounders have ostentatiously appealed. In this way we shall have met the objection at all points, shirking nothing, and claiming no indulgence. It is often said that Anglo-Israelism requires of its adherents an extremely large quantity of faith. Of course it needs faith to believe God's promises, just as it needs faith to believe in His Being, and those who assent to the second have no difficulty in crediting the first, so that the sneer falls with dubious propriety from the pillars of Christendom. But probably it is principally aimed at our historical arrangements and the facility with which we surmount sundry ethnic barriers imagined by them to be insuperable. In reply to this accusation we maintain quite confidently that the secular side of the Identity requires no faith whatever. It only asks for candour, and asks in vain. But there are lesser virtues than faith, as witness our opponents, who exhibit the most extraordinary credulity of modern times apart from the excesses of religious mania. This credulity is perceptible in all directions, but nowhere does it shine to greater advantage than in the complacency with which they swallow historical fiction.

History, like other things, is subject to rules and liable to exceptions. Consequently, if the unconsciousness of the British concerning their genealogy is an infraction of those rules, we have merely to produce the extenuating circumstances which warrant exceptions. This it would not be difficult to do—we have done it already,—but what we wish to emphasize in the strongest manner is that the ignorance complained of is not in the slightest degree exceptional, that it infringes no historical law, and that it is in complete harmony with normal conditions. To assert it to be impossible or singular for England to have forgotten her extraction is to allege that contemporary nations can remember theirs; for if the latter are as ignorant as we, the singularity and impossibility are not apparent. What is the rule, acquaintance or non-acquaintance with one's ancestors? This contains the whole controversy, and happily the inquiry is incapable of being settled by accomplished sophistries or an accumulation of abusive adjectives. It is determined by facts so simple that they cannot be either falsified or mistaken. For instance, can the Germans tell us where they were, who they were, or what they were, in the year 800 B.C? Can the French, Spaniards, Russians, Magyars, Poles, Scandinavians, or the offspring of any nomadic race? This is exactly what we are challenged to do, and astonishment akin to indignation is expressed as we are not in a position to do it. We never heard a word of surprise uttered over the incident that the rest of the world is in similar darkness.

But so it is. Wolfgang Menzel, the standard German historian, writes:—"The first authentic account of the Germans dates scarcely a century before the birth of Christ, when the Romans came into conflict with them. There are indications of eastern origin and of affinity between our language and that of India. From the warlike castes who thence migrated Northwards may have sprung those warlike nations met with at a later period as worshippers of Wodan." The intelligent foreigner is clearly not in receipt of much intelligence. There are "indications" of Hebrew in English, but the soul of the ethnologist is vexed at the crudity of this argument—he wants manuscript. The only manuscript that Menzel gives is his own. Virchow comes to his assistance, but what he contributes is not particularly conclusive. "If the Germanic people had their origin in the extreme East it seems to me very probable that from the first, in Asia itself, a certain physical divergence was developed between their various branches. And what is supposed of the Teutonic is equally applicable to the Keltic, Slavic, Hellenic, Italic, and other divisions of the European population." That is "if" they had their origin in the East: an open confession that the very quarter of the globe from which Europe was colonized remains a riddle. The truth is that the forefathers, ancient home, and early life of the Keltic, Teutonic, and Slavonic tribes are inscrutable secrets. The trifle which is conceived to be known is no better than guesswork, and even these conjectures have been gathered from sources entirely independent of documentary evidence or national reminiscences.

The memory of the old Kelts, in sympathy with ours of to-day, appears to have been exasperatingly short, and they might have emanated from Og for what they could testify to the contrary. But instead of remarking that this state of affairs was incredible, the scientists began with their usual industry to dig, decipher, and dissect. For a while fortune frowned, and they moan pitifully, "Hopeless confusion reigns in the whole range of Keltic ethnology." But the brave men persevered; and a rich reward was in store for them. De Ujfelvy, travelling in Turkestan, hauls to the surface a skull. No doubt the party to whom it properly belonged had esteemed it an article of considerable value, but to De Ujfelvy it was priceless. He felt convinced that it was, or at least had been, the head-piece of an aboriginal dweller in Kohistan Highlands, and as it resembled the cranium of the Savoyards he hastily forwards it to a shrine of wisdom, exclaiming, "It solves the chief problem of our national origin. It shews that the brachycephalous race which Cæsar found in central Gaul calling themselves Kelts were of Asiatic origin." It is amusing to watch the scientists rising into ecstacies at the discovery of a bone from which they may extort a theory of descent for the Kelts, and then spurning the Identity in superior tones since we cannot establish our descent by memory. This tale of a skull evinces the wretched hollowness of that antagonism to Anglo-Israelism which is based on our inability to offer legendary or documentary anecdotes, and the frivolity of the charge becomes magnified a hundredfold when it is borne in mind that the mystery which envelops the Kelts is a characteristic of races in general. De Quatrefages observes: "Had it not been for their special language no one would have hesitated to consider the Basques as of the same family as other southern Europeans." The Basques have not the dullest conception who they are. Pent up at a corner of the Pyrenees they have managed to retain their language, but they have not succeeded in preserving an atom of historical legend, although the opportunities were at their best. What should we expect when they are at their worst?

Digitized by Google

Pinkerton has it that "Dr. Morton thinks there is such a coincidence between the evidence with regard to the physical type of the ancient Egyptians as to leave little ground for doubting that this nation was more closely allied to the Negro race than any other of the sub-divisions of the human family. Therefore we must believe that they constituted a branch of the African type, and thus that they are elevated forms of the Negro type or that the Negro races are degraded forms of the Egyptian type." Dr. Morton "thinks," and Dr. Pinkerton "thinks" with him, that the Egyptians are Negroes or the Negroes Egyptians, this rumination being the result of rummaging among the mummies and dust-bins of Egypt. Is there not a Copt or a Negro on the face of the earth who can inform us which is which? Is there not a scrap of document to shed a ray of light and so reduce this heavy thinking to a minimum? But Leland has selected a different object for his thoughts; there is room for everybody in this department of philosophy. "It is a truism that the gypsies are a mysterious race, and that nothing is known of their origin." But he submits that within the past few years much has been picked up to disperse the mystery and connect them with certain tribes of India and Persia. For, wonderful to relate, the Jats of India are thieves and destitute of religion; the Nats are acrobats and robbers; the Doms are drunkards and fond of pork; while the Luri of Persia are minstrels and rogues. These flattering identifications may be cogent, and they may be the reverse, but they do not dispense with the "truism" that so far as the gypsies themselves are concerned "nothing is known of their origin." If the gypsies stood alone in this respect they would suffice to pulverize the absurdity that it is impossible for a people to lose the knowledge of their antecedents, but, as we have tried to indicate, their experience is neither more nor less than commonplace. It would be instructive but decidedly tedious to enumerate the legion of speculations and contradictions vented by ethnologists on the histories and affinities of nations. We see one earnest but confused investigator absorbed in the vitally important query, Were the Tasmanian and Australian aborigines identical? We see a second equally engrossed with, Are the Caucasians and Ethiopians distinct species? A third exercises his fancy on the Gallos of Brittany, and thinks they may be Gauls. A fourth is perplexed as to the relation the Kymry bear to the Gaels, and which is the original stock, if either. A fifth is desirous of ascertaining if the Great and Little Russians are a single race, or separate races, or a sort of Siamese Twins, or what, and if they are Finnic. The Finns are the desperation of a sixth, no Finn being able to go back two generations; and so on in chaotic profusion. Enough to say that the primitive patronymics of modern nations, also their cradles, their wanderings, and remote careers, are wrapped in absolute obscurity. The Greek-Italian stock, by tacking itself on to defunct dynasties, may boast of a borrowed antiquity. An empire such as China, with its bolted archives and stationary population, may stretch its annals to 840 B.C. But the migratory portion of humanity with which we as a race are associated, have drifted bodily into obliviousness. England has followed the prevalent rule, and met with the prevalent fate. It would seem therefore that the hostility to the Identity on account of our non-familiarity with the rock from whence we were hewn may be described as "much ado about nothing." And there is a still easier method of elucidating that the employment of this Shakespearean sentence is finely appropriate. For those who harp on the impossibility of our having forgotten our parentage omit to notice that we have done so. The traditions of the Saxons break off at a comparatively recent date. They will reach to the shores of the Danube and the days of Arminius, but that is the extent of their elasticity. Ethnologists, by artificial paths, have tracked both Saxons and Kymri to the last known residence of Israel, but are powerless to advance a step beyond it. History—what there is of it—confirms the Identity, but the actual beginnings of the British people have disappeared from sight and sense. Whether we are of Israel or not, the fact is the same, and this perhaps is the straightest answer that could be devised.

In holding that opponents have no history behind them on this question we fear we are perpetrating a faint injustice, for there is one item which they have worn almost threadbare with assiduous use. They explain to us that the Jew can revert to Canaan without an effort; he can recount his pedigree in unbroken line to Abraham; and it is strange that the British cannot do so too. This is a further illustration of the deception against which Anglo-Israelism has to contend. What is the meaning of "strange"? That which is strange is something exceptional, a digression from the ordinary; and is it not the Jew who is the exception, the digression from the ordinary? The poor Jews have served in various capacities, but it is altogether a new idea to have them cited as an example of historical regularity. Hitherto we have been taught that they are the "strangest" abnormity on record, a marvel, a miracle, and amenable to no historical law, maxim, or principle. We are prepared to admit that the British are not another exception, because that is precisely what we are endeavouring to prove, and according to this latest cavil we have proved it, for in taxing us with deviating from the Jews it is unwittingly conceded that we approximate to the remainder of man. We may therefore close, with the mingled reflection that these self-destroying incompatibilities are amazing, but that yet they are not, as error is ever, inconsistent, and the glaring inconsistencies of the opposition are its surest condemnation.

MR. P. T. MIGNOT, Church of England Missionary, Bowling-green, Ontario, Canada, writes, August 10:—"DEAR PHILO-ISRAEL,—For some time past a Christian friend of mine has regularly forwarded me a copy of the BANNER OF ISRAEL, thus giving me an opportunity of studying the subject that the British are Israel. Thank God, I now rejoice in the fact that the promises made to Israel are ours. Well might St. Peter exclaim that we 'are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people;' for every one of these sentences can be attributed to Britain. Might I ask some of your readers to give me their views regarding the people of the Channel Islands. Can they also glory in being Israelites? If any of your subscribers could send me their BANNERS after reading them, I could utilise them in this vast Church of England Mission, which is two hundred square miles in extent; and if they have any old unused books which would be interesting to the settlers, I should be glad to have them to form a nucleus for a lending library."

Digitized by Google

SOME OF ISRAEL'S RECENT ACQUISITIONS.

By. J. Thomson.

(Concluded from page 355.)

PART II.

This influence of Freemasonry, and the other influences exerted by the long lines of railways, the gold and diamond discoveries, with the consequent influx of a large population, are doing much to smooth away public difficulties and furnish a solution to political problems which a few years since seemed almost insuperable. "A town nearly as large as Pretoria itself," the Earl says, "has sprung up within a few miles of that capital; a large trading company is being organised, if it has not already come into existence; land is changing hands; the older population is moving northwards, and a fresh body of emigrants is taking their place; the whole scene is undergoing a great, but a peaceful transformation. But amid the flood of cross-currents and apparently conflicting purposes, there is, as it appears to me, one steady drift in the direction of British ascendancy, which neither time nor circumstance can stay. There will be no disposition at the Cape to oppose this natural tendency of events; for the interests of the Cape and of England are inseparably interlaced—only may no indifference to Imperial objects or error of judgment at home mar the fair prospect of the future."

From these last words it is evident that where the noble Earl fears obstacles to carrying out a right and suitable policy may be found, is here, at home, through our ignorance, indifference, or partizan strife. This all British patriots will honestly strive to avoid; while, as Anglo-Israelites, we have no fear of the ultimate issue.

The noble Earl goes on to refer to three things which, during his official connection with the Cape, he was anxious to see brought about. The first was the Diamond Field controversy, which was happily concluded, as above noticed. The second was the desired acquisition of Delagoa Bay, which, being in dispute between this country and Portugal, was referred to arbitration, and decided against us, "as generally happens," the noble Earl remarks, "when England submits to arbitration;" we should therefore say let England never submit to arbitration, but keep all she may get territorially, and let those take it from her who can. The noble Earl is of opinion that when he entered upon office, Dalagoa Bay might have been bought for a "moderate sum," but "a very large amount now" would be required; and he fears that if ever the European Powers intervene in force in African affairs, "one day may make us bitterly regret the position in which this question was left." But for our part we have no such misgivings. If ever Delagoa Bay is essential to our keeping hold of South Africa, we shall get it, somehow; that time, however, has not yet arrived, but it may come perhaps sooner than some of us expect. Should an European war break out, the Continental Powers will find it difficult to retain their distant foreign and colonial possessions, except we exercise a "benevolent neutrality;" while if we are dragged into actual warfare, one of our first objects will be to wrest from the enemy all the foreign possessions they may have; just as we have done in previous wars.

The third object Lord Carnarvon had in view when in office, was the Confederation of the South African Colonies and States, which at that time he thought was "both practicable and desirable." That it was "desirable" everyone will admit, but that it was "practicable" the event disproved. "The Imperial proposals did not secure the necessary local concurrence," so it was for the time "necessary to relinquish the hope of such a union." Had South African Confederation been attained, the noble Earl thinks that the annexation of the Transvaal, and all the events that flowed out of it, with the Zulu war and its "most unsatisfactory consequences, would have been spared." He, however, is of opinion that confederation is only postponed; and says that the doubts and fears which inspired the opposition to it in 1877, have "long since been seen to be groundless." During his recent visit to the Cape, he was often asked to give his views upon this question, but declined; invariably replying that proposals for Confederation ought now to proceed from South Africa herself, "as the spontaneous expression of her own desires and public interests."

Of these three objects, one was successfully achieved, the second lost (probably only temporarily), and the third deferred to a more convenient season; but there is still "another large and serious question in which both the Cape and the Empire are gravely interested, but which before 1880 was not ripe for settlement;" and that is, virtually, who shall have the preponderance in South Africa? In the modern craving for colonial annexations by the Continental Powers, Africa, until lately unknown, and uncared for, has become a sort of lottery, in which territorial prizes may be drawn by lucky or daring adventurers. Since the days of Cortes or Pizarro, there has not been a territorial scramble upon so large a scale as that now seen in Africa—France, Germany, Portugal, and England are the chief owners or claimants in this vast territory, and their pretensions often conflict with each other to an extent which may possibly give rise to future trouble. Some large tracts of country are still undisposed of, and to our Imperial interests "none are so important as the large tract lying immediately to the north of the Transvaal and Bechuanaland." On the west are the German colonies; on the east Delagoa Bay; and on the north the Zambesi. Were another European Power to lay hold of it, we should be hemmed in, and the relations of every neighbouring State would be so altered, that it would "disturb the whole balance of South African politics," the cost of which can perhaps be estimated by recent wars and troubles in that part. This middle space can no longer remain a "no-man's land." Its native rulers have readily engaged to accept no other sovereign, but it has not yet been "formally declared British territory;" and Lord Carnarvon asserts that if it were now to pass into other hands, "the results would be simply disastrous." Our colonists would lose their right of way into the interior; our traders would lose the native markets, which would be closed by hostile tariffs—(how long shall we be in using this weapon against the foreigner?)—and we should be shut out from the free navigation of the Zambesi,—that great water-way of Eastern Africa. While the question was not pressing, it was possible and expedient to adjourn its decision; and if the territory could be preserved neutral and free to all nations, it might be wisest to do so; but now that South Africa has become the object of foreign scramble, our safety lies in the extension of our protectorate up to the banks of the Zambesi. Lord Carnarvon says, "The time is now come. The Governments of Europe, for various reasons, are engaged in a tremendous race of territorial annexation; everywhere the void places of the earth are being appropriated, though they cannot be filled up, and at this moment the confiscation of a whole Continent, larger than Europe itself, proceeds with astonishing speed, though most of us at home are so ignorant, or so indifferent, or so absorbed in local concerns, that we hardly give this new and portentous phenomenon a second thought. The age in which our lot is cast is a wonderful one, not more in what it does than in what it leaves undone."

From what we have already said above, it will be gathered that we do not altogether share the noble Earl's apprehensions, though we are quite one with him with respect to our duty, and the wisdom of immediately extending our frontier in the direction indicated. We also quite agree with him in terming "the age in which our lot is cast a wonderful one;" but in nothing is it more wonderful than in the way in which God has extended our territory; for again and again has Providence forced upon us that which our rulers have often refused to have anything to do with. The knowledge of Our Identity with the ancient House of Israel explains this, and all kindred phenomena in a manner that nothing else does; and if our teachers and statesmen would thus see and acknowledge the fact by acting upon it, their labours would be more useful, their policy more constant and progressive; and all the world would, more or less directly, feel the beneficial influence put forth by our country being thus Providentially called to the leadership and domination of the nations of the whole earth. For "the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions (margin rulers) shall serve and obey Him" (Dan. vii. 27).

Digitized by Google

THE ONE GREAT COLONIZING POWER OF THE MODERN WORLD.

THERE will be no difficulty in determining which is "The one great colonizing Power of the modern world." The French have always made bad colonists, and nationally their endeavours in modern times to plant colonies have failed. They had a fine one in Canada once, but could not keep it. It is now British, but its origin is patent to the world, since the million Frenchmen who compose it speak French still, and are thoroughly French in language and religion, though loyal British subjects of Queen Victoria all the same. The Germans emigrate in enormous numbers from the Fatherland, but somehow they cannot found German Colonies. They prefer to settle down in British Colonies or in the American States under settled governments, and in two or three generations become naturalized; British or Americans in speech, manners, customs, institutions and loyalty.

The Italians, Spanish, Swedes, Austrians, and Russians, are not noted for success in colonial enterprise, and beyond all comparison one nation stands out in modern times as the one great colonizing Power throughout the world. The history of the Australasian Colonies, the eldest, only just one hundred years old, is as miraculous as it can be. The haphazard manner (humanly speaking) in which they were founded, in what were veritably "the desolations" or "desolate heritages" of the earth; their recent rapid growth, the discovery of the Israelite gift of gold mines in vast abundance in the south of the Island Continent; all these betoken a wondrous history, unique in the annals of the world, and all but miraculous, even to ourselves. The colonial possessions of Great Britain in North America are vast in extent—rich in all manner of wealth—and the home of a loyal, energetic population, destined to develop into a great and mighty dominion united to Great Britain, and one of her most sturdy, stalwart "daughters." In South Africa we find a third cluster of colonies not yet united into a single State, and now in the very act of working out their future polity. That future cannot be independent of British Israel! The late Sir John Brand, the President of the Orange Free State, recognised that, and so do all the foremost men of the Cape Colonies, whose opinion is worth having. President Krüger, of the Transvaal, however, does not concur in their views. He believes the Africander or Dutch Boer is "the coming man" of South Africa, and therefore his effort is to get rid of the British settler and emigrant; to set up native rebellions against him; to arm the Boer population to extirpate him, and to prevent him in the Transvaal from speaking his own language in the courts, the markets, and in all public places! This anti-English crusade is directed, however, against the majority of the subjects or dwellers in the Transvaal, being the rough and powerful class of gold-diggers, British almost to a man! To this race God promised supremacy when He declared in Deut. xxviii. 1, 13, that He would "set them on high above all nations of the earth, as the head and not the tail, above only and not beneath them all," that they should "reign over many nations, but that the nations should not reign over them" (Deut. xv. 6). To imagine the Dutch Africander ruling and reigning over the free British subjects of the Queen is absurd. For these are already in possession of most of the gold fields of the Transvaal, and are now, in number, a clear majority of the inhabitants, without, however a voice in the government of the country, though paying heavy taxes to its exchequer! The British besides are Israel, and to them God has given the supremacy, as we have said. "The great colonizing Power of the modern world" is Israel, according to the prophecies, and she must, in a country like the Transvaal, where the flag has once been dragged through the mire, assert her power and show the doubting Zulus and the insulting Boers that God is on our side, and has given us the South African "ends of the earth," to dominate and rule for Him, as His almoners, His messengers and missionaries. The Morning Post said, in a spirited article, on July 17th, "There is no idea in the British electorate of permitting any further dishonour to the British Flag. England is, and must continue to be, dominant in the Cape Colony." She is dominant there already, and the knowledge of that fact drives President Krüger to all sorts of desperate projects "to mop up the ocean," and to arrest the advancing tide of the British digger, who is rushing into the province in search of gold, but is destined to stop and settle there, to win it finally for Christ! The same mighty surging tide conquered New Zealand once from the now decaying Maori. The Boers, who do not increase, but ever more and more disperse widely abroad in search of new settlements, are bound to succumb to a race which increases in population quicker than any other on the face of the earth; and is borne in upon the home of the Boers, like locusts in the desert, by reason of the God-sent attractions of gold and iron, and diamonds, to be had for digging. The amount of provocation which the British settlers in the Transvaal have received at the hands of the Boer government is well stated by Mr. Charles Marvin, in his letter of July 14th, published by the Morning Post. He said:—

> Up to the present moment the English in the Transvaal have treated the Boers with a consideration amazing, seeing that they are in the majority as regards able-bodied men, and are not allowed to exercise the smallest influence on the affairs of a country to whom they contribute the bulk of the revenue. From them there has been absolutely no provocation. On the other hand, President Krüger has tried to induce the Free State to co-operate in forming an armed force to coerce them; he has prevented the Cape railway approaching the Transvaal; he has taken steps to arm the Boer population, and is now trying to prevent the public use of the language of the English majority. These measures can neither be ignored by the English in South Africa, nor the English at home, nor, for that matter, can President Krüger's policy be indefinitely tolerated. The Bishop of Pretoria says:—"The solution of the present difficulties can only be accomplished by patience, sober thought, and mutual understanding." Quite so; but the remedy will fail if wholly one-sided, and at present the efforts to be patient, think soberly, and recognise mutual interests, are solely confined to the diggers!

The weak policy of past British governments has emboldened President Krüger and his following to suppose that Britain is a defeated foe. But from that dream they will one day have a rough awakening, when the Lord gives the word for His people to "go forward." The Transvaal was once theirs, and now again God Himself has given it to them by letting them discover the gold and diamonds thereof. The Anglo-Saxon is in possession; and we believe it will be hard to dislodge him; for the Lord God of Israel is his Guardian, Guide, and Strength. To Him be all the praise!

NOTICE.—There should be no difficulty in obtaining the "BANNER OF ISRAEL" in any part of the Kingdom on Wednesday afternoon, as it is published on Mondays in time for trains to all parts. Any delay in delivery should be communicated by your newsagent to Messrs. R. Banks & Son, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

Digitized by Google

Review.

God's Everlasting Faithfulness. First Address: The Unconditional Promises. By Lieut.-Col. H. W. J. Senior, 1st Bengal Fusiliers. London: Robert Banks and Son, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C. Bristol: J. Wright & Co., Stone Bridge. Price 4d.

Our friend Col. Senior has given us in print a lecture on one of our very favourite subjects, "The Faithfulness of God," which we hope will be very largely circulated and extensively read, by the clergy especially. It has always been a wonder to us why our opposing friends, jealous as they properly are for God's righteousness and truth, do not see that in the matter of the promises to Abraham God's character for faithfulness rests, as a Scriptural fact, upon the proper and exact fulfilment of His sworn statements to Abraham and his seed for ever. No one can deny that God did swear to give to that race certain unique blessings, temporal and spiritual, exclusively; and no one has ventured to say that the Jews, or the Israelites either, have, as ostensible Hebrews, enjoyed any of these except the gift of the Saviour of mankind, who, true to the promise in Gen. xlix. 10, R.V., was born in due time, only 1,888 years ago, of the House of Judah, in Bethlehem. These facts would, perhaps, be of no great importance to our contention were it not for another great and momentous matter, which no one has yet had the boldness to deny, namely, that the very blessings God swore to give exclusively to the afterseed of Abraham He has bestowed exclusively and wholly in these, the last days, upon the British nation. The conclusion is that either the British people must be the House of Israel, as distinguished from the House of Judah (which has, by reason of disqualification, no experience at all of the gifts in question); or else (which God forbid), the Lord has broken His oath to Israel, forgotten His promises to them, compromised His character for faithfulness, disgraced the throne of His glory (Jer. xiv. 21, R.V.) by giving to us, non-Israelite, Japhetic, Gentile, British, every one of the good things spiritual and temporal, He promised faithfully to reserve exclusively and without abeyance for His people Israel, who must be the Ten Tribes, since the Two Tribes are specially excluded by their own laches and transgressions.

Col. Senior has dealt with the subject thus. He first illustrated the general subject of the faithfulness of God by Scripture references, as an introduction to his theme, and then pointed out that the facts of Scripture demand a literal interpretation, as well as a spiritual application of the facts, for the elucidation of spiritual truths. He then drew the distinction between the two Houses of Israel and Judah, the former including (for a time) Benjamin of the House of Joseph, leaving nine tribes, as the Colonel states, but really ten when Manasseh is reckoned in addition to Ephraim, to represent the House of Joseph in modern times. These promises and covenants were thereafter shown to be of two kinds, viz., conditional and unconditional, the former made with the Twelve Tribes at Sinai, and the latter with the Fathers. The new covenant, it is stated, is to be one which includes the promises given to the Fathers, and grants spiritual blessings in heavenly places besides to all mankind, as well as to the people of Israel. The author illustrates his subject by explaining first what covenants of God were actually and notoriously fulfilled, and he argues from the fact of such fulfilment that God cannot lie when He made to Abraham and his seed for ever the eleven distinct unconditional promises discussed in the pamphlet under review. The covenants, general in their character, made with man irrespective of His people Israel, are described as follows:—

1st. The promise that man's dominion should extend over the whole earth (Gen. i. 26—28).
2nd. The promise of "the Seed," even Christ (Gen. iii. 15).
3rd. The prediction respecting the Flood (Gen. ix. 5—15).
4th. That as to the division of the earth (Gen. x. 25).

Finding, and proving too, that God was faithful to His words in these four respects, the author enlarges on the theme that God's unconditional promises to the three patriarchs, as well as to His people Israel, in all other matters, were as exactly performed. He considers these promises under the following eleven aspects:—That,

1st. Abraham was to be the father of a "great nation."
2nd. That he would be blest of God, and his name become great.
3rd. That he was to become a blessing to others.
4th. That his enemies were to be cursed.
5th. That in him all nations were to be blessed.
6th. That he was to possess the land.
7th. That his seed would become excessively numerous (Gen. xiii. 16, xv. 15).
8th. That the descendants of Abraham would be delivered from Egyptian bondage.
9th. That he should live long and die happy.
10th. That in Isaac the seed would be called (Gen. xxi. 12).
11th. That the promises would be everlasting.

Each of these points the author considers Scripturally, and proves from historical facts that the fulfilments are actually before us at the present time. A section is introduced by Col. Senior at p. 20 in reference to the peculiar and valuable promise to Abraham and his afterseed of "the Gates." This he construes as the Banner does, and finds that Capt. Columb, R.N., has exactly described the facts in his Prize Essay, Sec. 35, United Service Institute, No. xciv., vol. xxii., 1878, a passage with which Banner readers are quite familiar. Col. Senior's résumé of the whole contention referring to the Gates is as follows, and we think his conclusion quite unanswerable. "As the British alone," he says, "are in possession of a complete girdle of Gates round the world, which was to have been Israel's portion, it follows that the British are Israel, and that God has fulfilled His gracious promise in faithfulness."

In the concluding sentences of his pamphlet Col. Senior deplores the shortcomings of our people regarded as God's people Israel. No doubt there is deep cause for distress and self-accusation on this account. It is well there should be this national repentance and sorrow for sin. But our righteousness as a nation never will be perfect in ourselves. It is God's righteousness which justifies us, and brings us before His throne perfect in the robe and blood-bought holiness of Jesus Christ, our Redeemer. We shall never, we believe, exhibit perfection; but shall always show that in respect to our nation's worthiness we have nothing whatever to boast of, but that as regards Him, our worthiness, excellence and strength are divine, since our righteousness is Jehovah's (Isa. liv. 17). In Israel and Jacob He sees no iniquity, and no perverseness, because of the anointing (Numb. xxiii. 21; Isa. x. 27, R.V.). The blood of Christ is upon the nation, and through that blood even the eye of God can see no defilement in Israel as a nation, or on the repentant sinner as fallen man. To Him be all the praise for this His wondrous grace!

Col. Senior's effort has our entire approval. We had been better satisfied if he had spared the use of capital letters so liberally in his pamphlet. They are like italics, which grow by use, until at length the whole work tends to become one great emphasis, and the eye is wearied by the continuous call to very special attention. We prefer to use italics as a rare exception, and to abolish capitals in toto. This, however, is a detail which may be regarded as a matter of taste. The Colonel's pamphlet is calculated to attract attention, and to do good. We therefore wish it "God speed!"

THE GREAT CRAZE OF THE DAY IS ANTI-ISRAELISM, NOT ANGLO-ISRAELISM.

An Australian paper, the Spectator, has given this deliverance, "That Anglo-Israelism is the maddest of all mad delusions."

Now I, as a Methodist, remembering that the Spectator is a Methodist journal of some eminence in Australia, can but say that this utterance is to me one of "the saddest of sad effusions." It, unaccompanied by solid proof, betokens a sad blindness to existing facts, proving Britain to be Israel; and a strange deafness to the loud proclamations of the great Governor of the universe, in His Book of directions concerning them.

It is very easy to say this saying; very easy to call a thing madness, and to say of an opponent, "He is mad, why hear ye him?" But observe there is not a particle of reason in it, not a shred of argument, not the smallest evidence of good sound sense. And yet it is launched out on the sea of public opinion; and on it goes, careering through the world as a truism, an established axiom, serving to brand an undiscussed and outlawed statement of truth with the mark of folly and insanity. Surely this is not quite sane.

Digitized by Google

The Spectator, indeed! O rare Spectator! Well, let us quietly pass him over to be handled by the Word of God. That speaks of "Blind people that have eyes" (Isa. xliii. 8); and I really think this Editor, Spectator though he be, must be one of them. This is said in no way to disparage his claim to be a true minister of God: for God Himself has spoken these strange words:—"Who is blind but My servant, or deaf as My messenger that I sent" (Isa. xlii. 19). Nay, more; the Ministers of Christ, even the first of them, according to His testimony, have been—as alas! they now too generally are—"Slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have written," that is, blind, at least partially to prophetic truth. Wonderful to relate, but there it is from the mouth of Israel's King and printed in the Book.

It is evidently upon this present ministerial blindness that God, speaking through Isaiah, curiously enlarges thus:—"Who is blind as he that is perfect? and blind as the Lord's servant? seeing many things, but thou observest not (sees not how God is mightily working); opening the ears (of other men to Gospel truth), but he heareth not (the loud voices that fill the air and tell of the near approach of a foreshewn crisis. No) he heareth not" (Chap. xlii. 19, 20).

No wonder that these "blind," "deaf," and "non-observing" men cry out—in self-justification — Crazy! Crazy! Crazy! against those who have obeyed God's injunction, conveyed in the twenty-third verse of the same chapter: "Who among you will give ear to this? Who will hearken and hear for the time to come?"

Those are the crazy ones, those are they who have "delusions," and "mad delusions," who, when Jehovah proclaims, as He does in the ninth verse:—"Behold. . . . new things do I declare: before they spring forth I tell you of them," treat them all as myths; and when He commands:—"Sing unto Jehovah a new song, and His praise unto the end of the earth. . . . let them give glory unto the Lord, and declare His praise in the islands"; and when He explains in five following verses (13—18) what these new things—the matter of the new song—really are, He has furthermore, to roughly rouse them to consider and comprehend these new things, which He does in the eighteenth verse, thus:—"Hear ye deaf, (for deaf as you are, you can hear if you will but listen), and look ye blind (for you are only blind because you will not look), that ye may see." How reasonable is this in Jehovah? how unreasonable, how insane is this opposition to His will?

No wonder that God cries out as if astonished:—"Who is blind, but My servant! or deaf, as My messenger that I sent! blind as he that is perfect! blind as the Lord's servant! How He harps upon that reproachful word, "Blind! Blind! Blind!" What a ridiculous position they place themselves in! But don't laugh at them: for God is very serious with these "perfect" ones.

Now this—so wonderfully foreseen and so clearly foretold—this is the craze that has seized upon so many of God's "sent messengers," and upon His otherwise "perfect servants." So crazed are they by allowing figurative interpretations to displace natural and obvious meanings, and by letting perversions—under the guise of spiritualising—smother and bury out of sight the plain, literal, incorruptible truths of ancient prophecy,—so crazed that the new things to be done for Israel by Jehovah, as declared by Himself in this chapter and the next, they will not look at—no, nor look at Israel to identify him: and the new song unto the Lord they will not learn, no, nor even listen to! They treat all as a vain chimera. Oh! they are to be pitied.

But our comfort is that as God has peremptorily said, "Hear ye deaf," they must soon condescend to hearken. He has commanded, "Look! Look! ye blind," they must, therefore, eventually obey. And the sooner they do so, the better for themselves undoubtedly.

J. S. H.

(Writer of the Jubilee letter to the Queen.)

A TESTIMONY.

DEAR PHILO-ISRAEL,—I have to thank you for your very friendly letter and for the very perfect editing of the Jubilee letter. Trusting that you will not consider the above article unfit for our BANNER, which floats gloriously over Israel's rank and file through all her squadrons.

I am, dear friend, your fellow soldier,

J. S. H.

Warkworth, Auckland, New Zealand, July 12th, 1888.

BRITISH-ISRAEL LECTURES ON BRIGHTON BEACH.

On Monday evening, on the Beach, near Pool Valley, Mr. H. A. Marchant continued his weekly lecture on British-Israel. The evening cleared up as the lecturer commenced his address, and he had a large audience who listened attentively throughout. He shewed from Jeremiah iii. and other Scriptures that the Ten Tribes of Israel were the people prophesied of who should restore the Jews to Palestine, and said that most prophetic students agreed that this was the work of Great Britain, but the Anglo-Israelites maintain that prophecy and Providence could not run counter to each other, and therefore the British race must be the Israel of prophecy.

Several gentlemen from other parts thanked the lecturer for his address.

A fair number of people listened to Mr. H. A. Marchant's British-Israel Address, given on the Beach, near Pool Valley, on Monday evening. A Christian periodical having lately taken exception to the Anglo-Israelites maintaining that this country was under the special protection of God, the lecturer quoted passages from the writings of the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, who says: "When all the nations were in arms against it (England) they could not touch its shores, for God was there. . . . Our nation has been as much under the peculiar and especial Providence of God as were the descendants of Jacob themselves, and therefore God deals with us as he does not deal with other nations." He also quoted from Cowper's Expostulation, "Has He not hid thee and thy favoured land for ages safe between His sheltering hand?" The lecturer referred to Isaiah liv.: "In righteousness shalt thou be established, thou shalt be far from oppression, for thou shalt not fear; and from terror, for it shall not come nigh thee," he saying this said what God did to Israel also; and "Their righteousness is of Me."—Brighton Guardian, Aug. 15th, 1888.

Correspondence.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—Resolving upon a fortnight's holiday, my wife and I exchanged the noisy bustle of Cottonopolis with all its dins and discomforts for a quiet sojourn amongst the Welsh mountains at Fforddlas, near Glan Conway. We both said we never spent a happier fortnight in our lives. I took care to fill my pockets and make use of that latest tract, "Facts and Probabilities," besides having a copy of that "Epitome of the whole Bible in 10 Hebrew Words," see "BANNER," page 315, which I found a capital introduction as I "went forth to sow" Identity seed.

The Rector of Llanrwst was interviewed, and seemed deeply interested. With the Rector of Glan Conway I had over two hours' friendly conversation. He promised to study the matter. Conway's Rector, Llandudno's Rector and Curate, and Colwyn Bay's minister were in turn interviewed, and much useful information exchanged. Not one of them pooh-poohed the matter: all expressed themselves glad that I had waited upon them.

On the Sabbath, the worthy people with whom our temporary lot was cast accompanied us to a Welsh Baptist Chapel hard by. No. 79, "Groswen" was sung at our request, with a true heartiness we shall never forget, and through the open doors the sound of the rushing waters in the wood, mingled with the earnest gutteral speech of the minister within. To our surprise, in the midst of the service we suddenly heard the Queen's English; the minister from Rhyl seeing strangers, explained to his flock that they must sacrifice their native tongue for a few minutes for our edification, so for once prayer both in Welsh and English ascended on high from the little Bethel. Amongst the English population were distributed a goodly number of tracts during our stay in North Wales, of which I hope to hear more by-and-bye.

I am, dear Sir, yours truly,

C. E. PRIESTLY.

Stretford, Manchester, Aug. 20th, 1888.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed: "Philo-Israel," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

SUBSCRIPTIONS. £ s. d.

Annual Subscription for one copy weekly (including the Twelve Double Numbers) post free 0 7 6
Two Copies (including Double Numbers) 0 13 6
Three Copies ,, ,, ,, ... 1 0 4
Four Copies ,, ,, ,, ... 1 5 6
Six Copies ,, ,, ,, ... 1 16 4

Post Office Orders to be made payable at the head office, St. Martin's-le-grand, London, to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C., or F. W. PARRY & Co., 29, Paternoster-row, London.

The Editor cannot undertake to return rejected MSS. unless stamps for the purpose be sent. Parties requiring an answer should enclose a stamp.

Contents Bills and Show Cards may be obtained on application to the Publishers.

Advertisements should be sent to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

Prepaid Advertisements are inserted at the rate of thirty words for 1s. 4d.

Just published—Cloth, 2s. 6d.—a re-issue of

The Origin of Masonic Ritual and Tradition:

A Lecture on the Three Degrees, by BRO. WM. ROWBOTTOM, P.M., 1028, with facsimile of a very rare Masonic engraving published in 1789.

"Exquisitely clear and singularly correct in everything wherein I may be any authority or guide."—Professor PIAZZI SMYTH. "Will be found of considerable interest to many besides Masons."—Church Bells.

Oxford: S. Rowbottom and Son; London: R. Banks and Son, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C.; and F. W. Parry and Co., 29, Paternoster Row, E.C.

Price Five Shillings.—"Substantially and attractively got up, and profusely illustrated."—Oldham Chronicle.

Eildon Grange: A Tale.

By ANDREW CLARK, M.A., Vicar of St. Michael's, Oxford. "One of the most charming books. . . . The illustrations are full of playful humour."—Scotsman. "The book is undoubtedly a happy one."—The Oxford Magazine. "Both entertaining and bracing."—Dundee Advertiser.

Oxford: S. Rowbottom and Son; London: Hamilton, Adams and Co., 32, Paternoster Row, E.C.

☞ Ask for this Book at the Libraries.

WORKS BY PASTOR CHINIQUY.

Cloth, gilt lettered, 5s. Sent post free for P.O.

FIFTY YEARS IN THE CHURCH OF ROME.—Complete Revised Edition on good paper, well bound in Cloth, Gilt Lettered, nearly 600 pages. With New Portrait and Autograph of the Author. "No history like it since the time of Luther."—New York Witness. Be particular to order the Complete Edition published by Banks.

WORKS BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

The History of the House of Israel. How They Were Lost and How They Were Found. Told for the children. Price 6d., cloth 1s.; post free 7d. and 1s. 1d. Fifth edition.

A Resume of the Scriptural Argument Proving the Identity of the British Race with the Lost Ten Tribes. Price 1d.; 6s. per hundred, postage 6d.

Anglo-Israelism. True, Not False. Being Philo-Israel's Reply to the Rev. Canon Bell's pamphlet, "Anglo-Israelism: True or False?" Price 1d., 6s. 6d. per 100. 16 pages, crown 8vo.

An Elementary Digest or Sketch of the Chief Facts and Teachings of the Great Pyramid of Egypt. Adapted to the Unlearned and Unscientific 56 pages, Illustrated with Diagrams, price 4d., post free 5d. 10th Thousand.

Our Identity with the House of Israel. Price 4d., Reprinted from "Clifton Chronicle Letters.

Are the English People the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel? An Inquiry Establishing the Identity of the British Nation with the Lost Ten Tribes. 4d.

Our Identity: What it is Not; What it is; and Our Obligations To-day in Respect to it Being a Lecture recently delivered in London by Philo-Israel, and published by special request. Price 2d., a reduction for quantities.

Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

PIANOFORTES, Harmoniums, American Organs. Why buy at shops inferior made instruments, and pay large profits, when you can buy direct from the Maker High-class Instruments, and save 50 per cent. by so doing! Full value allowed for old Instruments in exchange as part payment. Write for Price Lists and Testimonials to A. G. LINSTEAD, Cobden Pianoforte Company, 5, Eversholt-street, Camden Town, London. Established 1874.

HUMAN LIFE.—FIFTY YEARS' Record of Facts, Principles, and Discoveries (just published complete) Relating to the Improvement and Preservation of Human Life on Earth. Origin and true treatment of diseases. A series of articles by DR. SAMUEL BIRLEY, M.D., Ph.D. Book form, 50 pages. SENT FREE to applicant by the publishers, GORDON B. MURRAY 50, Theobald's-road, Holborn, E.C. Write to-day

POISON IN THE ASHES

—o—

MANY people believe that Nature has somewhere a remedy for every disease. So many and so terrible are the ills of life, and so slight the pleasure we get as time flies past, that such a belief is the least faith we can show in a gracious and all-wise Providence. A few remedies—but, alas, how few!—have been found. Others, so far, lie hidden from human inquiry. Occasionally death follows quickly on the heels of the evil—an illustration of the dangerous character of the ailment to be relieved:—

For example, Nervous Dyspepsia is a comparatively new disease, growing out of the conditions of modern life. It is a joint affection of the digestive organs and of the nervous system. These two were formerly treated as separate ailments, and it was left for the clear-sighted thinkers to prove that the basis of this terrible and often fatal complication lies chiefly in the disordered and depraved functions of digestion and nutrition. They reasoned thus: "If we can induce the stomach to do its work, and stimulate the excretive organs to drive out of the body the poisonous waste matters which remain after the life-giving elements of the food have been absorbed, we shall have conquered Nervous Dyspepsia and Nervous Exhaustion. And they were right. Knowing the infallible power of Seigel's Syrup in less complicated though similar diseases, they resolved to test it fully in this. To leave no ground for doubt, they prescribed the remedy in hundreds of cases which had been pronounced incurable—with perfect success in every instance where their directions as to living and diet were scrupulously followed. Nervous Dyspepsia and Exhaustion may almost be called a peculiar English disease. To a greater or less extent half the people of this country suffer from it—both sexes and all ages. In no country in the world are there so many insane asylums filled to overflowing, all resulting from this alarming disease. Its leading symptoms are these: Frequent or continual headache; a dull pain at the base of the brain; bad breath; nauseous eructations; the rising of sour and pungent fluids to the throat; a sense of oppression and faintness at the pit of the stomach; flatulence; wakefulness and loss of sleep; disgust with food even when weak from the need of it; sticky or slimy matter on the teeth or in the mouth, especially on rising in the morning; furred and coated tongue; dull eyes; cold hands and feet; constipation; dry or rough skin; inability to fix the mind on any labour calling for continuous attention; and oppressive and sad forebodings and fear.

All this terrible group Mother Seigel's Curative Syrup removes by its positive, powerful, direct, yet painless and gentle action upon the functions of digestion and assimilation. Those elements of the food that build up and strengthen the system are sent upon their mission, while all waste matters (the ashes of life's fire) which unremoved, poison and kill, are expelled from the body through the bowels, kidneys and skin. The weak and prostrated nerves are quieted, toned, and fed by the purified blood. As the result, health, with its enjoyments, blessings, and power, returns to the sufferer, who had, perhaps, abandoned all hope of ever seeing another well day.

Mother Seigel's Curative Syrup is for sale by all chemists and medicine vendors, price 2/6 per bottle, and by the proprietors, A. J. White, Ltd., 35, Farringdon Road, London, E.C.

Published by

ROBERT BANKS AND SON,

Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C.

Postal Orders may be obtained at any Post Office in the United Kingdom for the following amounts: 1s., 1s. 6d., 2s. 6d., 3s., 4s., 4s. 6d., 5s., 7s. 6d., 10s., 10s. 6d., 1l. each; 15s., 20s., 1½d. each. They should be "crossed" City Bank, Ludgate Hill, E.C. Stamps received.

A MESSAGE TO THE CHURCH FROM THE NINETEENTH CENTURY. The last written work on the Identity of the Anglo-Saxon Race with Lost Israel. By the late BISHOP TITCOMB. Imperial 8vo., cloth, gilt, 3s.

THE BRITISH NATION Proved to be the Remnant of Israel, and the Representatives of the Lost Ten Tribes. By J. H. WELDON, J.P., Author of "Britain and Prophecy." 66 pp., demy 8vo., 6d.; by post, 7d.

ENGLAND'S DUTY IN RELATION TO THE CHRISTIANS OF TURKEY. Being a true Solution of the Eastern Question. By the late JOHN WILSON, Author of "Our Israelitish Origin," &c. Price 6d., by post 7d.

SOUND, PURE, WHITE TEETH!

Those who value these will try

CARBOLINE

(The Great Sanitary Tooth Paste).

1/6 & 2/6 per Pot.

Through Chemists, or post free from the Makers,

GEORGE & WELCH

WORCESTER.

Lancet writes:—"To save the teeth use a good carbolic daily."

LADIES!

WE will send a FULL-DRESS LENGTH of BEAUTIFUL CLOTH (for Good, Strong, Serviceable wear), in any of the following colours, Carriage paid to any address for 10s. 6d. Colours:—Black, Blue, Fawn, Salmon, Reseda, Slate, Ruby, Brown, Grey, Claret, Sage, Old Rose, Terra-Cotta, Amber, Peacock, Tabac, Bronze, Myrtle, Drab, Olive, Grenat, Clay Green, Navy, Partridge, Heather, &c., &c. These wonderful Dress Lengths have gained a world-wide reputation for magnificence, cheapness and durability, having no equal.

The Lady's Pictorial says:—"They are excellent quality and very good value for the money."

Thousands of Testimonials from all parts of the world.

Ladies should write at once for Patterns, which may be had free, and need not be returned.

AN AMAZING OFFER!!—We shall give a very handsome Brocaded Silk Handkerchief with each dress-length ordered from us during this season. Write for patterns. LUTUS B. LEATHLEY, Armley, Leeds.

Certain HARNESS' Cure.

ELECTROPATHIC BELT

FOR

RHEUMATISM

Major PAKENHAM, Longstone House, Armagh, writes:—"The Electropathic Belt has completely cured me of rheumatic gout. I suffered intense agony for two years. I now feel strong and active."

Guaranteed to generate a mild continuous current of Electricity, which speedily cures all Disorders of the Nerves, Stomach, Liver and Kidneys. Thousands of Testimonials. Pamphlet & Advice free on application to Mr. C. B. Harness, Consulting Electrician, the Medical Battery Co. Ltd.

Only Address,

52, OXFORD ST., LONDON, W. (Corner of Rathbone Place.)

Call to-day, if possible, or write at once

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C. F. W. PARRY (late GUEST & Co.), 29 PATERNOSTER-ROW WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 12, 1888. [All rights reserved.

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."

(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India.)

"And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the Forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS of the EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. XII., No. 612. Entered at Stationers' Hall.] WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 19, 1888. [PRICE ONE PENNY.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
Israel's Empire Growing by Leaps and Bounds	373
A Universal Speech	374
Freethought Liketh It Not. By J. G. Taylor	375
Epistles to the Jews Concerning the Ten Tribes of Israel. By the Rev. Eliezer Bassin, Edinburgh	377
Idolatry	378

ISRAEL'S EMPIRE GROWING BY LEAPS AND BOUNDS.

WE are almost tired of calling attention to the increase of the British influence beyond the sea; but on the present occasion it is needful to notice an event which we hope will convince our opponents that the Empire, which advances as ours is doing, must be Israel's;—the dominion which has God's blessing upon it, and is meant, eventually, to be coterminous with the whole earth, for it will be that which Christ the King is to govern, instrumentally, by His people British-Israel. The mighty fact was announced only a few days ago. It is the determination of the British Government to take under its protection, as the sphere of its influence in South Africa, the whole of that immense territory which lies between the River Zambesi on the North, British Bechuanaland and the Transvaal on the South, and German Damaraland on the West. This is what the Times called a "forward move" in a late issue, but it is one which plainly proclaims that the British Lion is asserting himself, and will eventually rule, without a rival throughout the whole of South Africa, over sixteen degrees of South latitude! The thing has come about in the most remarkable way, and has, as usual, been forced upon our Government. A restless Boer, Commander Grobellaar, searching for a new domicile, entered Khama's territory, to the North of the Transvaal—a part of this native chief's territory is included in the Protectorate which we had lately proclaimed over Northern Bechuanaland. We had a right, therefore, to interfere, and did so forthwith. We have sent Sir Sidney Shippard, the Administrator of Bechuanaland, to inquire into the facts, and the Boer Government have sent their representative to see that the inquiry is fairly conducted.

This was the incident. But it required decisive action on the part of our Government. The restless character of the Boers being manifest, they might next proceed to the country North of the Transvaal and South of the Zambesi, and annex it. We had not asserted any rights there, and yet we have secured the navigation of the Zambesi for the free use of all nations, and we meant to trade with all the regions South of the river. What follows is told us by the Times:—"The hands of our Government have been forced. Sir Hercules Robinson was instructed to intimate to President Krüger's Government that the Matabele, Mashona, and Mahalala territories, and the Northern part of Khama's territory, as far as the Zambesi, are solely within the sphere of British influence." This, of course, means that the thin end of a fresh wedge, into Africa, has now been inserted, and that a vast territory, just off the Island of Madagascar, on the East Coast and central parts of South Africa, are, by-and-bye, to be included within the benign influence of the Empire of Israel! Surely never was there such rapid growth known in any Empire before, and never has an Empire expanded as ours has done in South Africa, by peaceful means, with the consent of the native inhabitants thereof! Concurrently with this forward step on the part of the British Government, we find that the rebellion of the native chiefs, Somkeli and Betzane, has collapsed, and that of Dinizulu has approached its end. All these are signs, it seems to us, that the purposes of God, respecting the world and His people Israel, are maturing fast, and that we shall, ere long, witness events which will, in a more marked way than ever, testify to our nation's identity with the Lost Ten Tribes. Men obstinately refuse to credit the good news when spiritual blessings and the propagation of the Gospel among all nations, families, and kindreds of the earth, are merely in question. But here is a test which nothing can put aside; and facts which no one can explain, otherwise than on our principles. Without our desiring it, and often contrary to our expressed wishes as a nation, the vast Continent of India has become British. Australia has, imperceptibly, expanded, till it sustains to-day a Federation of States, as large, in the aggregate, as Europe, with sister States, like New Zealand and Tasmania, growing up into stalwart womanhood close by—all British-Anglo-Saxon. The Dominion of Canada, half British half French, covers ground as extensive as Europe, and owes allegiance only to the British Queen and Empress! In South Africa, as we see, another huge Empire is rapidly growing, which bids fair to rival the Dominion of Canada, and the Island Continent of Australia.

Here, then, are four enormous masses of territory, occupied by hundreds of millions of men, all British, and tending, each in its way, to expand the Empire in territories contiguous to them. They are all held together, and are bound to their Parent, in "the isles afar off," by another, a fifth Empire, which God has given the race, the Empire of the sea! This vast Empire exists by reason of the nation's possession of "the Gates of her enemies" throughout the globe, and the whole five Empires are Israelitish, God-given gifts to His chosen nation, to qualify them for the beneficent work He has entrusted to their hands—even the preparation of the kingdom of the Lord Jehovah, and of His Christ, the King of glory. At the present moment it is well that Anglo-Israelites should fix their eyes on Africa, and see the power of the Lord there, in "giving us, His people, the heritage of the Heathen" in that vast continent (Psa. cxi. 6, R.V.). It is full of gold, diamonds, iron, coal, and valuable timber. It possesses, in the interior, land fit for the habitation of Europeans. It will, we believe, be ours to open that vast, dark world, to the commerce of the nations, and to introduce the Gospel of the grace of God to sin-stained, oppressed, and miserable Africa. The bold act of the British Government, in claiming the country South of the Zambesi for Christ, is one of the crucial events of the present century, and will have results, we believe, of which our present generation has no idea. While we nationally rejoice at the honour the Lord has put upon our nation in this matter, because we are Israel, let us praise Him for His unmerited blessings to an unworthy race, humbling ourselves before Him, and saying, "Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us be the praise."

Digitized by Google

A UNIVERSAL SPEECH.

UNDER the above heading there appeared in the Salford Weekly News, of June 23rd, a piece of "blind evidence" in respect to our British-Hebrew origin which a good friend at Pendleton, near Manchester, has obligingly sent for our information. We pass it on to our readers that they may see how the writer, Professor F. A. March, points to our British nation as "the head and not the tail, above only and not beneath, all the other nations of the earth," in those respects, in which God's Word declares Israel shall excel. These are multitudinousness, expansion of empire, supremacy at sea, commerce, wealth, love of the Word of God, universal ministry of the Word, literary activity, colonial enterprise in the desolations of the earth, which colonies, so founded, in their turn become nations and empires in federation with the old mother in the West. He also showed that this our race attracts and assimilates others to itself, the latter "flowing into and growing up in them." The extract is as follows:—

A UNIVERSAL SPEECH.—A universal language must be a growth. Some national language must expand until it covers the whole world. Of late years the English language alone has been much spoken of as likely to grow so great. Hardly any philosophic linguist attempts to forecast the future without some discussion of the destiny of the English; and De Candolle calculates that within a hundred years English will be spoken by 860,000,000 of men, German by 124,000,000 and French by 96,000,000. At present the populations either speaking the English language or under the domination of English-speaking peoples number more than 318,298,000, or one-fourth of the population of the globe. The English-speaking races occupy one-fourth of the dry land of the earth, and own nearly two-thirds of the tonnage of the ships. They live in all regions; they handle all articles of trade; they preach to all nations; they command one-half of the world's gold and silver, and distribute more than two-thirds of the Bibles and Testaments. More than one-half of the letters mailed and carried by the postal service of the world are written, mailed, and read by the English-speaking populations. The expectation that English will come into universal use is not based upon anything in the nature of the language, but rather on the character and circumstances of the people. The English people have been the great colonisers of modern times. They have taken possession of America, of Australia, of South Africa, the regions which are to be the seats of new empires, and they control and assimilate the populations which flow into them and which grow up in them.—Prof. F. A. March, in The Forum.

The texts of scripture applying to Israel, what Professor March tells us is in British possession and enjoyment to-day, are as follows:—

Multitudinousness,—Gen. xxii. 17, xxxv., xlviii. 19, Hosea i. 10, Rom. ix. 27, &c.

Expansion of Empire,—Dan. vii. 27, Rom. iv. 13, Zech. x. 7—9, Deut. xv. 6, xxviii. 1.

Supremacy at sea,—Gen. xxii. 17, Numb. xxiv. 7, Psa. lxxxix. 25, &c.

Commerce,—Numb. xxiv. 7.

Wealth,—Deut. viii. 18, xv. 6, Jer. xxxiii. 9.

Love of the Word of God,—Psa. cxlvii. 19, 20.

Literary activity,—Isa. xxvii. 6, Matt. xxviii. 19, 20.

Universal ministry in holy things,—Isa. xxvii. 6, Gen. xxii. 18.

Colonial enterprise,—Gen. xlix. 22, xlviii. 16, 19, xxxv. 11, xvii. 16.

The world's desolations being the localities of their colonies,—Isa. xlix. 8.

The federation of the colonies,—Gen. xxxv. 11, xlviii. 19.

Israel's assimilation of alien races,—Isa. lvi. 6—8.

Here, then, are twelve points in the short compass of a newspaper paragraph, wherein a professor who knows nothing of Israel, or God's special favour to that race, declares that we British, as a nation, are enjoying blessings which are distinctly Israelitish in their character, and tied up by prophecy to that people and no other! What are we to say to these things? No one can deny the facts! Nor can anyone assert with truth that God can swear to confer on "the afterseed of Abraham" exclusively, those blessings which we British enjoy exclusively, unless the British be Israel. A people who "preach to all nations," and "distribute more than two-thirds of the Bibles and Testaments," are doing Israel's work, "blossoming and budding, and filling the face of the world with fruit," that fruit being further of a spiritual kind (Isa. xxvii. 6). A people whose language is likely to come into "universal use" must be universally diffused, since the race must precede the language. If they have besides the gift of such multitudinousness as confers the faculty of founding colonies in "the desolate heritages" of the earth, in America, Africa, and Australasia, such colonies becoming nations and empires, the race in question must necessarily be Israel, since they thus respond in all particulars to the unique portrait of Israel drawn in the Scriptures. Why Professor March, with the Bible in his hands, did not see all this, and recognise the absolute certainty that the British must therefore be the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel, we cannot understand. But it is evident the idea did not occur to him, or he may have been satisfied that God having sworn to Abraham to bless his descendants in a particular manner has been justified in breaking His oath, and transferring to quite another race, non-Israelite in origin, all those gifts which He promised exclusively to the Israelites.

This hypothesis is absurd, and violently opposed to all right conceptions of the faithful and true God of Israel, and we feel bound to reject it, saying, "God forbid!" to such a proposition. The conclusion therefore to which we are shut up, is that the British are Israel of the House of Joseph, entitled as such to all the future blessings, temporal and spiritual, which God's Word tells us will be their portion in these our "last days." Gen. xlix. 1, Heb. i. 1, Acts ii. 17, R.V.), To Him, the faithful Promiser, be all the praise!

THERE is a Providence in all things, my dear friends, imitating, modifying, restraining, and destroying. Do you mean to say there is no providence in our individual or the Church experience? There is. "God speaketh, but man perceiveth it not; in a dream, in a vision of the night, when deep sleep is fallen upon men, in slumber upon the bed, then He openeth the ears of men, and sealeth their instruction."—Dr. Wild.

Digitized by Google

FREETHOUGHT LIKETH IT NOT.

By J. G. Taylor.

The National Reformer and the Rock have joined hands. Messrs. Bradlaugh and Wilkinson are met together; "Chilperic" and "Spiritual Israelite" embrace each other. The secularist organ has this month (Aug.) published a couple of articles casting down Anglo-Israelism, and, although it is painful to say so, I must confess that for good sense and moderation they are in striking contrast to the criticisms of self-styled "Christian" weeklies, which do nothing but vomit abuse. The papers of "Chilperic" are novelties, for they actually contain an argument, and this argument it is our duty to examine. His contention is that the Ten Tribes were never transplanted or lost as a people, that only some 27,000 were carried off to Assyria; that the revelations made by the cuneiform writings mention Samaria and Samaria's monarchs 54 years after its conquest by Sargon; and that the Jewish scribes, in speaking of Israel as "wholly carried away," invented a falsehood for the purpose of disowning the kinsmen whom they hated. Our sceptical friend (or enemy) is wrong. The territory of Israel was overrun and partially depopulated on more than one occasion; and, while the capture of Samaria was doubtless the crowning catastrophe, we are nowhere told that its polity was then extinguished. The reverse is the case. Isaiah, prophesying B.C. 734 or 733, announced that "within threescore and five years shall Ephraim be broken that it be not a people." This leaves Israel with a head until B.C. 668, and Chilperic's 54 years terminate in that very year. It would seem, therefore, that the Jewish seers were inspired to tell the truth, or at least they made a fairly good guess for ordinary individuals.

This explanation is, in my opinion, quite sufficient for our purpose; but as Chilperic may not be so easily satisfied, I will deal with his statements in detail, and in order to avoid confusion where confusion already exists, I shall divide his onslaught into separate sections.

1.—"The evidence of the monuments is this. The Assyrians did not carry away the Ten Tribes, but only 27,280 of the inhabitants of Samaria." The evidence of the monuments is this. That Sargon carried 27,280 into captivity. Some translate it "27,280 families," but whether we read it families or units is immaterial, for the fall of Samaria was only an item in the long list of disasters. Pul invaded the country as early as B.C. 772, and exacted tribute from Menahem, but we are not told that he removed any of the people (2 Kings xv. 19). Tiglath-Pileser followed in B.C. 733, and transported the population situate in Galilee and eastward of Jordan (1 Chron. v. 26). Concerning this incursion the annals of Tiglath declare: "The tribes . . . the goods of its people, and their furniture I sent to Assyria. Hoshea to the kingdom over them I appointed. In my former campaigns all their cities I had reduced. Samaria alone I left (Smith's "Assyrian Eponym Canon," Ex. 18 and 19). In B.C. 727 there was an inroad by Shalmaneser. He returned to the attack B.C. 725, and was succeeded by Sargon, who captured the city and exiled the aforesaid 27,280 inhabitants. The next invasion and deportation (by Esarhaddon, B.C. 678) is not expressly mentioned, but it is implied in Ezra iv. 2. We thus see that the country was being drained of its population for more than half a century. Yet Chilperic would have us suppose that Sargon's 27,280 represent the total number of Israelitish captives. And, what is still stranger, he is able to cite the Rev. A. H. Sayce in support of this idea. Professor Sayce, in "Fresh Light from the Ancient Monuments," observes: "The comparatively small number of Israelites who were carried into captivity shows that Sargon contented himself with removing only those persons who had taken part in the revolt against him. The greater part of the population were allowed to remain in their native land. This fact disposes of the modern theories which assume that the whole of the Ten Tribes were carried away." Chilperic clutches at this, and does not appear to understand that the rev. gentleman's object is similar to his own. I do not wish to impeach the honesty of the learned professor. I would simply suggest that his memory is at fault. This is made a little clearer by the remarks in his "Bible and the Monuments." He there says: "The throne was seized by Sargon, who took the Israelitish capital, carrying 27,280 of the inhabitants into captivity. The rest were allowed to remain under the government of vassal kings. These kings were replaced by a governor. The change of government was probably in consequence of another revolt, which was suppressed by Esarhaddon, who carried away the remaining Israelites, and supplied their places with foreigners." Even without this admission of the Professor we should have esteemed his remarks in "Fresh Light" at their proper value; but this convenient excerpt releases us from the necessity of esteeming them at all.

2.—The levy made by Sargon. Chilperic writes: "Sargon tells us that Samaria was compelled to furnish fifty chariots, equipped with horses and men, for the Assyrian army. Hamath had to find a much larger number—200 chariots and 600 horsemen." To substantiate these diminutive figures he refers to the cuneiform records thus: "I took before all parts over them fifty chariots, the part of my kingdom. . . . I took from them fifty chariots." We would naturally gather from this that fifty chariots was the full quota supplied by the captives. Sayce goes further, and states that fifty was all Sargon could discover. Unfortunately, Chilperic's quotation from "Fresh Light" begins a line or two in the rear, and I will therefore do myself the pleasure of supplementing his extract. "The capture of Samaria took place in Sargon's first year. 27,280 of its inhabitants were sent into exile, but only fifty chariots were found in the city." Professor Sayce here agrees with his secularist ally that Israel's prisoners only boasted of fifty chariots. But let us "study Assyrian history," as Chilperic kindly recommends, and we shall "hear a different tale," as he truly reflects. Quoth Sargon, "Samaria I besieged. I captured. . . . Fifty chariots from among them I selected, and the rest of them I distributed" ("Fastes of Oppert," l. 23, 24). I repeat that it is not the honesty of the Professor but his memory which is defective, and until his memory rivals his honesty his opposition to Anglo-Israelism will be of small weight. But having answered this allegation of Chilperic, it may be advisable to note that he seems to be slightly mixed over these chariots. I fail to see how the chariots would serve his point. So far as I comprehend him, he avers that as merely fifty were seized, the number of captives would be correspondingly trivial. To my mind the chariots requisitioned would bear a very remote relation to the number of prisoners, but would be guided by the quantity to be had, and if there were only fifty available this is a plain proof that the country had already been impoverished and reduced to the lowest ebb, which is exactly our view.

3.—Menahem and Abi-baal. Our critic adduces the "famous Taylor cylinder" in the British Museum to demonstrate that in 701 B.C. Israel still existed, having a king on its throne with the distinctively Jewish name of Menahem II. In 676 B.C. it is again mentioned, the ruler being Abi-baal; and even so late as 668 B.C. Samaria and its monarch are alluded to in Smith's "History of Assurbanipal." This conflicts somewhat with Oppert, who holds that Menahem II. reigned 742 B.C.; but the above facts, if facts they be, do not in any way damage our position. Tirhakah, of Egypt, stirred the residue of Israel into rebellion, and it was this which brought the final deportation upon them. "Tirhakah having made the whole of Palestine revolt, Esarhaddon marched against him, carried into captivity the remnant of Israel, and drove Tirhakah into Ethiopia" (Geo. Smith's "Assyrian Eponym Canon," p. 166). We are aware that in 668 B.C. Samaria had inhabitants. So it had in 1 B.C. The question is, Who were they? and this, of course, Chilperic is not in a condition to decide. If we were to allow that the Assyrian slabs are absolutely correct, Anglo-Israelism would sustain no harm. But are they correct? I will show that the very slabs our opponent builds upon are unreliable.

Digitized by Google

4.—The Scriptures versus the Inscriptions. The free-thinker adopts a thoroughly natural attitude. The cuneiform chronicles are regarded as infallible, and set up in antagonism to Scripture, which is ridiculed as worthless in their illustrious society. He honours 2 Kings xvii. 23, 24 with a reference, and his comment is: "This is what we are told by the Jewish Scribes, but if we study Assyrian history we shall hear a very different tale," the different tale being in this instance the tale of the 27,280. If this discussion has to resolve itself into a contest between the Scriptures and the Inscriptions, I do not think the former have much to fear. Perhaps Chilperic is not so familiar with the Inscriptions as he might be, and this may account for the unwavering confidence he reposes in them. But his faith in baked clay cannot possibly exceed our faith in inspiration; and, consequently, if he is entitled to indict the Bible with a terra-cotta tablet, we are equally at liberty to annihilate his tablet with the Bible. This proceeding, however, would be tactical rather than conclusive. There is open to us a better method of presenting cuneiform frailty, that is by pitting these immaculate inscriptions against themselves. To echo, or nearly echo, the apostrophe of Chilperic—"O Assyrian! Rod of mine anger, and staff of mine indignation! Declare what a muddle thou madest with thy clay!"

Our detractor has appealed to Smith's Assurbanipal, and what does Mr. Smith pronounce? "There is an account of the tribute of Mugallu, King of Tubal, but the Assyrian scribe has left the name of the country blank. Blank spaces for names are also left in three other instances. There is a case of mis-statement in the reign of this monarch. Esarhaddon informs us that Sennacherib had carried captive the gods of the King of Arabia, and that he, Esarhaddon, had restored them to Hazael, yet in one of his inscriptions (Cylinder B., page 283) he makes out that Esarhaddon had carried the idols away, and that he, Assurbanipal, had restored them to Vaitch, the son of Hazael. It is difficult to suppose a want of knowledge here. It appears to be a bold attempt to claim the deed of a former monarch, desiring to make out that the Arabians had sworn submission to him, an incident which never occurred in his reign at all. From such an instance as this we can see how a name like Menahem might be continued in the list of Assyrian tributaries long after Menahem was dead." This Assurbanipal is the potentate who, according to Chilperic, summoned a king of Israel to do homage, B.C. 667, and it is unlucky for his theory that the only inscription he has submitted, of any serious import, should be the handiwork of a convicted liar. But to continue. "In the history of Sennacherib, the captured cities in the first campaign are given in the Bellino cylinder as 89 fortresses and 820 smaller cities, while the Taylor inscription gives 75 fortresses and 420 smaller cities." This latter is the "famous Taylor cylinder," invoked by Chilperic, and yielding "the distinctively Jewish name of Menahem II." at 701 B.C. Its fame is not increased by this disclosure, "In the account of the war with Benhadad (Kurkh Monolith) there are considerable differences from the other copies as to the kings confederate with Benhadad. Only 11 are there enumerated, yet they are called 'these 12 kings.' In the Bull inscription the kings are 14. On the black obelisk they are 13, and on the same monument they are again mentioned as 12. On the Kurkh Monolith the slain are counted at 14,000; in the Bull inscription they are 25,000; and on the black obelisk they are 20,500; all in accounts of the same battle" (Assyrian Canon, page 193).

The National Reformer has a great contempt for "Jewish scribes." What has it to say anent its Assyrian scribes? These delinquencies could be multiplied, but this being needless I will just cull another, as it is pertinent to the very cylinder (C) which, if we are to believe our adversary, bestows a deadly blow on the lost Tribe legend. The date of it is 668 B.C., and since it mentions the payment of tribute by the "King of Samaria," Chilperic adjudicates that "the story of the captivity of the Ten Tribes was a baseless fiction." In his Assyrian Canon, Mr. Smith remarks, "I am able to bring evidence to show that these tribute lists were sometimes carelessly compiled, and in error as to names. Extract xx. is one instance in point. It contains the name of Metinti of Askelon, who was dead according to Extract xvii.; and among the other tributaries is quoted Vassurmi of Tubal, who, we are informed directly afterwards, refused to come and give tribute, yet his name figures among the others as paying it. There is another instance in the tribute list in the first expedition of Assurbanipal (Cylinder C), which, so far as it is preserved, contains the same names as that of Esarhaddon, about thirteen years before, being most probably a literal copy of the earlier document, without any attempt to ascertain if these kings were still reigning, and if they really paid tribute. One of these names is particularly doubtful, the first in the list, Bahal of Tyre, who was in rebellion late in the reign of Esarhaddon, and only submitted on the third expedition of Assurbanipal" (page 179). In the face of these manifold discordancies as to dates, names, and events, we are inclined to go beyond Chilperic, and to admit that in studying Assyrian history we hear several different tales. It is a pity that the breath of suspicion should have settled on Assurbanipal and the King of Samaria who was about to conquer the Identity, but so long as they associate with Menahem II., Abi-baal, and "monarchs" of that stamp, they will be in congenial company.

5.—The charge grounded on spite. If the Jews fabricated the captivity, they must have had a deep motive for doing so, but Atheists are adepts at fishing up motives, hence no difficulty is experienced in that respect. The priests are described as "spiteful and unscrupulous, wishing to disown relationship with their brethren who differed from them in religious matters." The argument is puerile and illogical. We can conceive a Jewish priest—or any priest, even a secularist one—misconstruing a dogma to suit his ends, but we cannot imagine historians relating what is contradicted by the eyes and ears of their auditory. To sceptical minds the Jewish scribes were knaves. Granted, but they were not fools, and to teach the Jews that the Ten Tribes were wholly carried off while the said Ten Tribes were jostling their shoulders, can hardly be called the act of a knave. But there are various considerations which collide with the imputation. For example, the same people who record their removal predict their world-wide dominion and certain restoration, which is not compatible with spite or malignity. Again, the Jews were threatened with a like total expatriation unless they reformed; a denunciation which would have had no force if the Ten Tribes were still in power. Further, whatever offences our censor may lay at the doors of the priests, he cannot criminate the prophets. The latter are no less emphatic in their utterances on the subject, and it is in the highest degree improbable that men, who risked their lives in defence of morality would concoct or condone an audacious falsehood. To this I will simply add, that the "romancing" was not confined to "spiteful Jewish scribes," but that the complete banishment of the Ten Tribes was signified by their own compatriots—e.g., Hos. i. 6.

6.—The ethnological province. "The Anglo-Israelite delusion still flourishes in spite of history, ethnology, philology, and common sense." Chilperic has not favoured us with the historical, ethnological, and philological facts which locate Anglo-Israelism outside the confines of common sense. When he has done this it will be soon enough to touch upon them. I have answered the arguments with which we have been supplied. It is impossible to answer arguments of which we know nothing. That it "still" flourishes, is not surprising, because the progress of scientific enquiry assists it to do so, sweeping away the inheritance of the Middle Ages, and subverting the fallacies on which the scientist formerly reared his ethnological systems. Which of these fallacies Chilperic desires to champion, is not apparent, and his gibe may, therefore, be sent to the Samaritans of Nablous. But the identity of the British with lost Israel is not based on the shifting sands of popular ethnology. If it were, woe to it; for its foundations would have to be changed with every succeeding generation, or collapse like the exploded theories of our learned antagonists. It owes its primary origin to the unerring pencil of the prophet, who painted both Jew and Israelite in lines and colours which cannot be effaced from the canvas of the universe. And here the closing sentence of our Atheist may be utilised to clench the matter. The Ten Tribes have "gone the way of the other nations of Syria, and been absorbed or exterminated." I believe the Jews are a Syrian race, and many of us will be startled to learn that they have been absorbed or exterminated. Philistia and Phœnicia have indeed sunk into oblivion, as foretold by the seers, but, also as foretold, the Jew remains, more indestructible than adamant. Surely this might convince the sceptic that the prophets were not given to romancing—that their vision was supernatural. And the fiat which preserves the Jew as a Wanderer, is pledged to preserve Israel as a Nation, establish her as an Empire, and restore her as the Witness to divine truth.

Digitized by Google

EPISTLES TO THE JEWS CONCERNING THE TEN TRIBES OF ISRAEL.

FIRST EPISTLE.

WHERE ARE OUR BRETHREN THE TEN TRIBES?

By the Rev. Eliezer Bassin, C.M., Edinburgh.

My dear Brethren of the House of Judah,—The question which I now put before you, and which I propose to consider in this epistle, is one which has been much discussed of late by the British people, and one also which must urge itself upon the attention of every thoughtful and earnest Jew.

The time of our restoration to the land which God promised to our fathers Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob is very near at hand, and according to the prophecy of Jeremiah iii. 18, the House of Judah must go to the House of Israel, the Ten Tribes, and together with them go to the land which God gave to our fathers for an inheritance. The glorious and blessed union of Judah and Israel, mentioned in Zechariah x. 6—12, will ere long take place; the Lord is preparing the way, and we have only to open our eyes and see where Israel is, and go to them. I know many of you believe in the record given in the book Sharish Israel, that the Ten Tribes reside at a certain place beyond the river Sambatyon, and that the king who reigns over them is descended from the household of David, since whose time they have been settled there, and that no stranger has been within their territories, because they are surrounded by the river Sambatyon, which is so agitated for six days of the week that no vessel can pass over. Also, you believe that stones of immense size are continually flying from the river, having the appearance of pumice-stone issuing from burning mountains; and that as soon as the Sabbath commences the river dries up entirely; however, if any one presumes to venture across they would be lost, for it is so wide that even the swiftest horse cannot cross it before the Sabbath ends and the water returns.

All this I myself once firmly believed, but since carefully studying geography and reading the voyages of Captain Cook, Lord Anson, and others, and finding no description whatever of such a river, I gave up that belief. Then I became anxious to know where our brethren, the House of Joseph, or the Kingdom of Ephraim, really is. Although I had given up the belief in the above tradition that the Ten Tribes are beyond the river Sambatyon, yet I could not help thinking that after all there must be some foundation of truth in it, my reasons for which I will give you by-and-bye.

Meanwhile, let us in calmness and reason consider where they may be, if they are not beyond that river, for surely we cannot look for them beyond a river which does not exist. The Ten Tribes are not lost, although they have been unknown for many centuries. We Jews never denied or doubted their existence as a separate people, and it never entered our minds, as it did into the minds of some Christians, that the Ashckenazim, or the Jews in Russia, Poland, Germany, and Austria, are of the Ten Tribes, and that the Sephardim, or Spanish and Portuguese Jews, are of Judah. They who assert it take too much upon themselves, nor are they able to give the least proof for so saying.

Then again, some say they are in China; some, that they are in the region of the Caspian Sea; some assert that the Nestorians are the long lost tribes, others say that they are the North American Indians, or the Karens of India, or the Gipsies of Southern Europe, and some say that the Afghans are they. It is wonderful how many theories have been brought forward by Christians concerning this subject, many showing undoubted ability and great research, while we Jews have not taken any steps to find out our lost brethren of the House of Israel.

I am sure many will say, we would very much like to find our brethren, but how and where shall we search for them? Now let me tell you; suppose one of us lost his purse containing a large amount of money and precious stones, he would no doubt be anxious to find it and this is what he would do; first, he would call to mind the place where he was sure he had it, and there being no necessity to search there, he would next try and remember where he was not sure whether he had it or not, he would search there, and failing to find it would go from one place to another wherever there might be even the slightest probability of finding it. Then, if all these efforts proved useless, he would look in the newspapers hoping to find some information there about it. Supposing that one day he saw a notice that a purse containing great valuables had been found and the owner wanted, would he not go without hesitation to give a description of the one he had lost? Then if the possessor of the purse said, "It is true this one contains all the things you said, but the outside colour is not as you describe," would he not surely say, "Sir, how can you expect the outside of the purse to have its original colour when it has been exposed to all sorts of weather for such a long time?" The possessor would then not hesitate to hand it over to its lawful owner, who would receive it with joy, and call his friends and neighbours to rejoice with him over his long-lost treasure. In this way let us search for our lost brethren, the Ten Tribes; let us first call to memory the place where we are sure they were. On this point we have no doubt, for the Bible tells us that they were with us in the land of our fathers in the time of David and Solomon, under one king and one administration.

After the death of Solomon the Twelve Tribes of Israel divided themselves into two separate kingdoms, Judah and Benjamin being called the kingdom of Judah from that date, and the other Ten Civil Tribes, the kingdom of Israel. I say the Ten Civil Tribes because the tribe of Levi was an ecclesiastical tribe and joined the kingdom of Judah, in which the Temple was.

The Ten Tribes have never since then been re-united to Judah: with this we Jews all agree. They remained in the land of our fathers as a separate kingdom, under nineteen kings, for a period of about 250 years, then the whole House of Israel, as a nation, was carried away by the king of Assyria, and the last place in which we know of them from the records of the Holy Scripture is Assyria, where they were placed by the king of Assyria in Haleh and Chabor, by the river of Gosen, and the cities of the Medes. (2 Kings xvii. 6).

Digitized by Google

We have no further record of them in Scripture, therefore some Christians say they are lost among the heathen, and others, that the House of Israel returned simultaneously with the House of Judah to the land of their fathers, after the Babylonish captivity.

A distinguished Christian writer who undertook to write our history (I refer to Dean Milman of St. Paul's), makes an unscriptural, an unhistorical assertion when he says in his History of the Jews, vol. 1, p. 376, fourth edition, that the House of Judah and the House of Israel were united on their return from the Babylonish captivity, and that the Jews now contain all the Twelve Tribes. The dean supports his opinion by quoting Ezekiel xxxvii. 19—22, "I will take the stick of Joseph, which is in the hand of Ephraim, and the Tribes of Israel, his fellows, and will put them with the stick of Judah, and make them one stick, and they shall be one in Mine hand . . . . And one king shall be king to them all; and they shall be no more two nations, neither shall they be divided into two kingdoms any more at all." We Jews believe that this union will be under the King Messiah, but Milman took upon himself to say that this . . . . Messianic prophecy of the final restoration refers to the other Babylonian captivity." The Dean's mistake is well pointed out by the late Rev. B. W. Savile in his book entitled, "Are we Israelites?" p. 13, where he says, "Had the Dean only carried his eye a few verses further on from the place where he incautiously stopped, he must surely have seen the fallacious nature of his own assertion, for Ezekiel, when speaking of the signs which will necessarily prove to the world when the union between the Tribes of Israel and the House of Judah has been accomplished, specially points out that "David, My servant, shall be king over them, and they shall dwell in the land wherein your fathers have dwelt, they shall dwell therein, even they and their children, and their children's children for ever" (Ezek. xxxvii. 24, 25). To this all the prophets agree, as Amos says, "Behold, the days come, saith Jehovah, that I will bring again the captivity of My people Israel, and will plant them upon their land, and they shall no more be pulled out of their land which I have given them, saith the Lord thy God" (Amos ix. 13—15, R.V.).

What I want, dear brethren, in addressing these epistles to you, is to protest against those Christians who in spiritualizing Holy Scripture and calling themselves spiritual Israel, appropriate all Israel's promises to themselves, and so give infidels good grounds to say that God is not true to His promises, and that He is not a covenant-keeping God, for He has broken His unconditional covenant which He made with our fathers Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. In order to stop the mouth of the infidel and to open the eyes of blind Christians who do not see God's object with Israel in His dealings with His once-for-ever chosen people, let us earnestly search for our lost brethren, the Ten Tribes, and when we have found them, let us not be silent, but proclaim to the whole world God's wonderful dealings with them, and that He is true to His promises, not a changeable God, but still the same Jehovah, the covenant-keeping God of Israel.

Consolation for the Dejected.—At this time, when so many are talking about our defenceless condition, it is refreshing to note a remark by Scott when commenting on Deut. xx. His "practical observation" commences—"War is an express appeal to the righteous Governor of the world, and should be undertaken and conducted upon such principles, and such only, as He approves. When the cause warrants this awful appeal, our confidence should be placed, not in chariots and horses, not in fleets and armies, not in experienced commanders and brave soldiers, but in the Lord of Hosts Himself."

IDOLATRY.

A paper read before the Committee of the Drypool Branch (Hull) of the Church Association, July 8th, 1888.

[Dear-Philo-Israel,—My son, who is on the committee of the Church Association here (of which I am Hon. Sec.) wishes me to send you the enclosed copy, with a few slight omissions, of a paper I read before it, thinking you may find it, or some liberal portion of it, suitable for the Banner. We are both firm believers in the Identity, and at all times, in season, and our friends say some times out of season, we bring it to the front. Our Vicar and President has been a very hot opponent to us on the subject, and it was with some misgivings I began the paper, but was glad to find much of his opposition disarmed. Early in the autumn it is intended to call together all our believers and enquirers that we can discover, to try if possible, to form some bond of union here.—Yours very sincerely, A. Winsor.]

Peril of Idolatry. At the outset, while preparing this paper, I found myself at a loss to know precisely what the propounder of the subject (chosen for us by the central office) means by the terms used: does it mean our peril of falling into the sin of idolatry, or the peril of the punishment of idolatry? does it mean individual idolatry or the national recognition of it? Not being able to answer any of these queries it leaves me at will to skip from point to point.

The fundamental basis of the sinfulness of idolatry is to be found, I take it, in the Decalogue, as recorded in Exodus and Deuteronomy. Our late President used frequently from the pulpit to enforce the necessity when quoting texts to be sure as to whom the text applies; following that principle, one which I devoutly wish were more attended to by all preachers and teachers, we will read beginning at Exodus xix. 23, "And Moses said unto the Lord, The people cannot come up to Mount Sinai, for Thou chargest us, saying, Set bounds about the mount, and sanctify it. And the Lord said unto him, Away, get thee down . . . . so Moses went down unto the people, and God spake all these words, saying, I am the Lord thy God, which brought thee out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage. Thou, etc. etc." This is more fully declared in Deut. v., which begins, "And Moses called all Israel, and said unto them, Hear, O Israel, the statutes and judgments which I speak in your ears this day, that ye may learn them, and keep, and do them. And the Lord made a covenant with us in Horeb; the Lord made not this covenant with our fathers, but with us—even us, who are all of us here alive this day. The Lord talked with you face to face out of the mount, out of the midst of the fire, saying, I am the Lord thy God, which brought thee out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage. Thou, etc. etc.," (the Hebrew family). I take it as certain that, some on one ground and some on another, we all believe that we are nationally and individually bound to the ten commandments. The denunciations against idolatry and idolators, especially those of the kingdom of Israel and the kingdom of Judah, are so numerous and well known that on that point I shall content myself with giving you five phrases or examples. 1st. The superstitious worship which is given to idols or false gods. 2nd. The making any image or likeness of God, or any creature for a religious end. 3rd. All human inventions thrust into the worship of God. 4th. The setting the heart inordinately on any creature. 5th. An inordinate love to, and distrustful care for the things of the world.

I daresay you all believe the sin of idolatry applies to Gentiles as well as to Jews and Israelites, and which I do not deny, although I believe it has much greater force on God's convenanted nation and people. But let us come to closer quarters: man has been defined as "a religious animal:" if that definition be true, then all who are not worshippers of the one true God, or in other words, "members of the household of faith," are idolators; taken then in its broadest sense, the danger of falling does not exist; being already there.

In holy writ, the sins of the people are frequently charged to their rulers or kings; for instance, how often do we read in the books of the Kings and Chronicles language such as this: "And he did evil in the sight of the Lord, and walked in the way of his fathers who made Israel to sin, for he followed Baal, and worshipped him;" until we come to the culminating passage in 2 Chron. xxxvi. 11—14, "And Zedekiah, the last king of Israel in the land of Palestine, did evil in the sight of the Lord his God. Moreover, all the chief of the priests and the people transgressed very much after all the abominations of the heathen, they mocked the messengers of God, and despised His words, and misused His prophets till there was no remedy." Are we Britons in peril to-day of a similar state of things? That would be a very bold, if not a rash person who would say there is no apparent danger in the face of recent facts.

Digitized by Google

It may be profitable for a minute or two to examine the points wherein the papacy is most dangerous, and whereon the Romanists base their claims, for that I take it is the form of idolatry in which our peril most lies, is it not on their claim to pre-eminence, and infallibility? You never hear of a Romanist arguing that because of their idolatry, and their mariolatry, or the confessional, Protestants should join their Church, but because of their pre-eminence, in that she is the one plant of God's planting, into which every branch must be grafted; unconnected with which is no salvation; and infallibility, in that she claims as a Church, absolute freedom from error, and the possibility of falling away. Did St. Paul in his epistle to the Church at Rome say anything to them about either of these two points, for it seems to me that an inspired letter to such a Church should contain some indication of, or warning as to its future history. In chapter ix. 4, Paul claims pre-eminence for Israel, "to whom," he saith, "pertaineth the adoption, and the glory, and the covenants, and the giving of the law, and the service of God, and the promises." And in chapter xi. 17, 18, the Roman Church is solemnly assured that it is but a mere branch grafted on to the stock of Israel; that they bear not the root, but the root Israel them; and the whole chapter goes to show that in the time then to come, God would recover His erring tribes of Judah, and His lost tribes of Israel, and graft them again into their own olive tree. This pre-eminence then, being given to His people Israel, cannot be claimed by any Gentile Church, least of all by the Roman, which is reminded in verse 17, that it is only a graft "taken from a wild olive, and growing contrary to nature (verse 24) upon the good olive tree."

Infallibility:—Of her claim to this, the Holy Spirit through St. Paul did not leave them without warning; chapter xi. 20, says, "Be not high-minded but fear, for if God spared not the natural branches, take heed lest He also spare not thee." Again, "Behold the severity and goodness of God . . . . toward thee goodness, if thou continue in His goodness, otherwise thou also shall be cut off." Could words such as these be sent by an inspired apostle to a Church possessing a promise from God of infallibility? I say impossible. Would to God our Queen could and would, through her dominions, do as Emperor Justinian II. did; he removed all images out of the Churches in the east, and ordered it to be done in Rome, about 700, A.D.

Let us gather up the threads: to my mind a national idolatry is most likely meant by the propounder of our subject. Are we then in real danger of that, or in other words, of the establishment of the papacy in Great Britain? The answer will largely depend on who we British are? If we be Gentiles, then I say we are in real, absolute danger; if not, the danger is apparent, and not real! Allow me to give you an extract from one of our hymns (411, Songs of Grace and Glory), based on Numbers xxiii. 23, "Surely there is no enchantment against Jacob":—

"O people selected by sovereign love,
What nation so blessed, so honoured of God!
Though foes should assail you on every hand,
Your King will not fail you, beside you He'll stand,
He's near to defend you, and ne'er will depart,
No power shall rend you away from His heart."

What is the sum of the whole matter? Israel of old, God's Church and people, had many deliverances wrought out for them by God, but not one because they deserved it. I will only mention two: at the Red Sea, where the only visible cause of the parting of the water, was Moses with his rod stretched out over it: but he said, "stand still, and see the salvation of the Lord." And again when the hosts of the Philistines were discomfited by Jonathan and his armour-bearer, when Jonathan said "Come . . . . it may be the Lord will work for us, for there is no restraint to the Lord, to save by many or by few."

And has not this nation (I mean Great Britain), whom, without hurting anyone's susceptibilities, I will say, has at least from the time of the Reformation been God's chosen, peculiar, elected people to do His work in the earth; I say have not we His Church and people in these latter days been delivered again and again by God against fearful odds? Again, let me say, not once because we deserved it, and as before I will only cite two cases. 1st. The deliverance from an Armada of 150 ships in 1588, and the deliverance by an Armada of three ships in 1688. And now in 1888, I say in the full assurance of faith, "God's hand is not shortened that He cannot save, nor His ear heavy that He cannot hear." The Lord still knoweth His own, and will not cast away those He foreknew. He also knoweth their wants, but He says, "Yet for this will I be enquired of by the House of Israel." As a practical application, I would ask, are we as a Church (I speak now only of St. Andrew), I say are we, who are great sticklers for doctrinal tenets, which are held up as the acme of perfection: are we as a Church sufficiently cognizant of our duty, and of the power of prayer? Rather, do we not woefully neglect "the assembling of ourselves together" to besiege the throne of grace: is not the cause of the cry that is continually being wrung from some of our hearts and lips, "our leanness, our leanness," arising from the same cause as the apostle said, "ye have not because ye ask not"? To my mind a prayerless Christian is an impossibility, and I am inclined to put a prayerless congregation in the same category. May the Lord have mercy on us, and so stir our hearts up that we may hear what He has long been saying to us, "Seek ye My face," and then may we as an association and congregation respond, "Thy face, Lord, will we seek."

The chairman, Rev. J. J. Beddow, in the course of his comments on the paper, said, the dogma of Rome's supremacy may be refuted on many grounds, that, whilst he could not agree with the deductions drawn by the writer of the paper, yet he had made out a good case from his standpoint. On the peril he thought we could not be nationally in a much worse plight, keeping in view the doings of most of our bishops, and many of our clergy.

The writer in response, particularly drew attention to the fact, that what is being done by the bishops and pastors, is done in spite of, and not because of the law: a wonderful difference.

American Sunday-school Union.—Dear Philo-Israel,—It is right to tell you that some of us here are very much interested in the subject of Our Identity. The Sunday-school work in which I have for many years been engaged seems to be included in Israel's functions. Of Israel it was said, "All thy children shall be taught of the Lord, and great shall be the peace of thy children." It will be interesting to note how many of the over fourteen million of Sunday-school teachers and scholars now said to be in the world are of the "stock of Israel." My computation makes over thirteen millions to be in the lands or under the control of the English-speaking people. Wishing you great success in your testimony, I am, cordially yours—W. P. Paxson. —Springfield Mo., U. S. A., Aug. 14, 1888.

The British-Israel Conference Association will hold a meeting at Manchester on the 4th and 5th of October, when Delegates from all parts of the kingdom are expected to take part in the proceedings.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed: "Philo-Israel," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

SUBSCRIPTIONS. £ s. d.

Annual Subscription for one copy weekly (including the Twelve Double Numbers) post free 0 7 6
Two Copies (including Double Numbers) 0 13 6
Three Copies ,, ,, ,, ... 1 0 4
Four Copies ,, ,, ,, ... 1 6 6
Six Copies ,, ,, ,, ... 1 16 4

Post Office Orders to be made payable at the head office, St. Martin's-le-grand, London, to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C., or F. W. PARRY & Co., 29, Paternoster-row, London.

The Editor cannot undertake to return rejected MSS. unless stamps for the purpose be sent. Parties requiring an answer should enclose a stamp.

Contents Bills and Show Cards may be obtained on application to the Publishers.

Advertisements should be sent to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

Prepaid Advertisements are inserted at the rate of thirty words for 1s. 4d.

Just published—Cloth, 2s. 6d.—a re-issue of

The Origin of Masonic Ritual and Tradition:

A Lecture on the Three Degrees, by BRO. WM. ROWBOTTOM, P.M., 1028, with facsimile of a very rare Masonic engraving published in 1789.

"Exquisitely clear and singularly correct in everything wherein I may be any authority or guide."—Professor PIAZZI SMYTH. "Will be found of considerable interest to many besides Masons."—Church Bells.

Oxford: S. Rowbottom and Son; London: R. Banks and Son, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C.; and F. W. Parry and Co., 29, Paternoster Row, E.C.

Price Five Shillings.—"Substantially and attractively got up, and profusely illustrated."—Oldham Chronicle.

Eildon Grange: A Tale.

By ANDREW CLARK, M.A., Vicar of St. Michael's, Oxford. "One of the most charming books. . . . The illustrations are full of playful humour."—Scotsman. "The book is undoubtedly a happy one."—The Oxford Magazine. "Both entertaining and bracing."—Dundee Advertiser.

Oxford: S. Rowbottom and Son; London: Hamilton, Adams and Co., 32, Paternoster Row, E.C.

☞ Ask for this Book at the Libraries.

BRITAIN IN HISTORY—ANCIENT AND MODERN; or, Proofs Linking Israel with Britain Throughout the Ages. By Mrs. G. A. ROGERS, Author of the "Coronation Stone," &c. Crown 8vo., 276 pp., cloth, gilt lettered, 3s. 6d.; sent post free for P.O.

WHO ARE WE? AND WHAT IS OUR MISSION? By J. THORNHILL HARRISON. With seven Maps by the Woodbury Permanent Photo Process. In handsome cloth, gilt, 5s.; post free for P.O.

London: Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street.

WORKS BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

The History of the House of Israel. How They Were Lost and How They Were Found. Told for the children. Price 6d., cloth 1s.; post free 7d. and 1s. 1d. Fifth edition.

A Resume of the Scriptural Argument Proving the Identity of the British Race with the Lost Ten Tribes. Price 1d.; 6s. per hundred, postage 6d.

Anglo-Israelism. True, Not False. Being Philo-Israel's Reply to the Rev. Canon Bell's pamphlet, "Anglo-Israelism: True or False?" Price 1d., 6s. 6d. per 100. 16 pages, crown 8vo.

An Elementary Digest or Sketch of the Chief Facts and Teachings of the Great Pyramid of Egypt. Adapted to the Unlearned and Unscientific 56 pages, Illustrated with Diagrams, price 4d., post free 5d. 10th Thousand.

Our Identity with the House of Israel. Price 4d., Reprinted from "Clifton Chronicle Letters.

Are the English People the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel? An Inquiry Establishing the Identity of the British Nation with the Lost Ten Tribes. 4d.

Our Identity: What it is Not; What it is; and Our Obligations To-day in Respect to it Being a Lecture recently delivered in London by Philo-Israel, and published by special request. Price 2d., a reduction for quantities.

Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

PIANOFORTES, Harmoniums, American Organs. Why buy at shops inferior made instruments, and pay large profits, when you can buy direct from the Maker High-class Instruments, and save 50 per cent. by so doing? Full value allowed for old Instruments in exchange as part payment. Write for Price Lists and Testimonials to A. G. LINSTEAD, Cobden Pianoforte Company, 5, Eversholt-street, Camden Town, London. Established 1874.

HUMAN LIFE.—FIFTY YEARS' Record of Facts, Principles, and Discoveries (just published complete) Relating to the Improvement and Preservation of Human Life on Earth. Origin and true treatment of diseases. A series of articles by DR. SAMUEL BIRLEY, M.D., Ph.D. Book form, 50 pages. SENT FREE to every applicant by the publishers, GORDON B. MURRAY & CO., 50, Theobald's-road, Holborn, E.C. Write to-day.

NEW WORK BY DR. GRANT.

Just published, price 2s. 6d., Cloth boards, gilt lettered.

Sent free to any address in Great Britain, Europe, and America, on receipt of Postal Order or stamps.

THE Origin, Progress, & Establishment

OF THE

Kingdom of God in the World.

BY SURGEON-GEN. J. M. GRANT, M.D.
Army Medical Staff (Retired).

"THY KINGDOM COME."

CONTENTS.—Preface.—Introduction.—Chap. I. Abraham.—Chap. II. The Chosen People.—Chap. III. The Monarchy.—Chap. IV. Israel and Judah.—Chap. V. Jew and Gentile.—Chap. VI. The New Covenant.—Chapter VII. The End of the World.—Chapter VIII. The Kingdom.—Chapter IX. The Government, Ritual, and Close of the Millennium.—Conclusion.—Appendix. The Gentile Church.

ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

Published by ROBERT BANKS AND SON,

Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C.

Postal Orders may be obtained at any Post Office in the United Kingdom for the following amounts: 1s., 1s. 6d., 2d. each; 2s., 2s. 6d., 3s., 3s. 6d., 4s., 4s. 6d., 5s., 7s. 6d., 10s., 10s. 6d., 1d. each; 15s., 20s., 1½d. each. They should be "crossed" City Bank, Ludgate Hill, E.C. Stamps received.

A MESSAGE TO THE CHURCH FROM THE NINETEENTH CENTURY. The last written work on the Identity of the Anglo-Saxon Race with Lost Israel. By the late BISHOP TITCOMB. Imperial 8vo., cloth, gilt, 3s.

THE BRITISH NATION Proved to be the Remnant of Israel, and the Representatives of the Lost Ten Tribes. By J. H. WELDON, J.P., Author of "Britain and Prophecy." 66 pp., demy 8vo., 6d.; by post, 7d.

THE TOWER OF EGYPT: the Types and Chronology of the Great Pyramid. By A. R. G. An Inquiry into our "Position in Time," by a re-consideration of the meaning of the symbolic passages of the Great Pyramid of Egypt. Illustrated with Diagrams. Crown 8vo., cloth, gilt lettered, 4s.; post free for P.O.

A CHRONOLOGICAL AND GEOGRAPHICAL TREE. A design Showing the Development of the British Power and the Affinity of the British Nation with the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel. On plate paper, 8d.; by post, 10d. Mounted on linen, with rollers, and varnished, 2s.; post free.

TALKS FOR THE TIMES. By Rev. JOSEPH WILD, D.D., Author of the "Lost Ten Tribes," &c. Being 18 Sermons preached in Bond-street Congregational Church, Toronto. 345 pp., crown 8vo., cloth, gilt lettered, 3s.; free for P.O.

SOUND, PURE, WHITE TEETH!

Those who value these will try

CARBOLINE

(The Great Sanitary Tooth Paste).

1/6 & 2/6 per Pot.

Through Chemists, or post free from the Makers,

GEORGE & WELCH

WORCESTER.

Lancet writes:—"To save the teeth use a good carbolic daily."

LADIES!

WE will send a FULL-DRESS LENGTH of BEAUTIFUL CLOTH (for Good, Strong, Serviceable wear), in any of the following colours, Carriage paid to any address for 10s. 6d. Colours:—Black, Blue, Fawn, Salmon, Resida, Slate, Ruby, Brown, Grey, Claret, Sage, Old Rose, Terra-Cotta, Amber, Peacock, Tabac, Bronze, Myrtle, Drab, Olive, Grenat, Clay Green, Navy, Partridge, Heather, &c., &c. These wonderful Dress Lengths have gained a world-wide reputation for magnificence, cheapness and durability, having no equal.

The Lady's Pictorial says:—"They are excellent quality and very good value for the money."

Thousands of Testimonials from all parts of the world.

Ladies should write at once for Patterns, which may be had free, and need not be returned.

AN AMAZING OFFER!!—We shall give a very handsome Brocaded Silk Handkerchief with each dress-length ordered from us during this season. Write for patterns. LUTUS B. LEATHLEY, Armley, Leeds.

Certain HARNESS' Cure.

ELECTROPATHIC BELT

FOR

SCIATICA

R. J. WATSON, Esq., 13, Market Street, Harwich, writes:—"Harness' Electropathic Belt has completely cured me of sciatica. After wearing it for a week I got better, and am now quite free from pain."

Guaranteed to generate a mild continuous current of Electricity, which speedily cures all Disorders of the Nerves, Stomach, Liver and Kidneys. Thousands of Testimonials. Pamphlet & Advice free on application to Mr. C. B. Harness, Consulting Electrician, the Medical Battery Co. Ltd.

Only Address,

52, OXFORD ST. LONDON, W. (Corner of Rathbone Place.)

Call to-day, if possible, or write at once

EXTRAORDINARY OFFER.

10,000 CARPETS.

5/- Five Shillings each. 5/-

GUARANTEED GENUINE BARGAINS.

THE BRITISH CARPET-WEAVING COMPANY will forward direct from their Looms, to any address, on receipt of Postal Order for 5s., or 62 stamps, one of their GENUINE SEAMLESS WOVEN REVERSIBLE TRIUMPH CARPETS, with handsome border, and woven in six different Art Patterns to harmonise with surroundings in Drawing-room, Dining-room, Bed-room, Kitchen, Study, etc., and large enough to cover any ordinary-sized room. These Carpets will be sold as an advertisement for the Goods of the British Carpet Weaving Company, BELOW THE ACTUAL COST OF PRODUCTION, the price they have hitherto been sold at being 8s. each. A Rug will be sent with Carpets for 1s. 6d. extra.

SPECIAL OFFER.—Two Carpets and two Rugs for 10s. 6d. This extraordinary offer may not be repeated.

REMEMBER these Carpets and Rugs are woven, and are not merely printed on Canvas like the so-called Carpets some firms advertise. We guarantee these Carpets to give every satisfaction, or money will be returned in full.

Send at once. All orders are despatched same day as received.

Don't forget to send for Sample, or you may never have another chance of getting a Carpet at such a ridiculously low price. Cheques and Postal Orders should be crossed "Union Bank."

The British Carpet-Weaving Co., 31, Old St., Aldersgate, London, E.C.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C. F. W. PARRY (late GUEST & Co.), 29 PATERNOSTER-ROW. WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 19, 1888. [All rights reserved

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."
(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India.)

"And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the Forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS of the EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. XII., No. 613. Entered at Stationers' Hall.] WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 26, 1888. [PRICE ONE PENNY.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
The Lord Jehovah's Perpetual Enemy, Amalek	381
How Russia and Italy Treat the Word of God	382
B.C. 720 and A.D. 60. By J. C. H. Mehl	383
The Best Positions on the Surface of the Globe	384
The Indian Gates as Described by the Rev. W. R. Fletcher, M.A.	385
Mr. H. A. Marchant to the Christian Commonwealth	386
The Church Missionary Society's Deficiency Fund	387
The Metropolitan Anglo-Israel and the British-Israel Conference Associations	387
Correspondence	387

THE LORD JEHOVAH'S PERPETUAL ENEMY, AMALEK.

AMALEK was the grandson of Esau, being the son of Eliphaz, his eldest, by Timna a concubine (Gen. xxxvi. 12). When the Israelites were brought by the Lord out of Egypt, "with a high hand and a stretched out arm," they had their first great trial at Rephidim, in the absence of water to drink. God worked a miracle to satisfy the people's wants, and when Moses, by command, struck the rock, the water came out abundantly (Exod. xvii. 1—7). Directly after that deliverance and miraculous interference, God brought upon the tribes war and battle. Amalek came out against Israel and fought with them in Rephidim (ver. 8). The battle was a long and arduous one. Joshua fought with God's enemies, the first the Israelites encountered after their miraculous deliverance from Egypt, and while he fought in the valley, Moses, Aaron, and Hur prayed for the Lord's help in the mountain above them. The final result was a great victory for Israel over the enemies of Jehovah Himself and of His people. After the battle, the Lord commanded Moses and said: "Write this for a memorial in a book, and rehearse it in the ears of Joshua, that I will utterly blot out the remembrance of Amalek from under the heaven. And Moses built an altar, and called the name of it Jehovah nissi (the Lord is my banner); and he said, The Lord hath sworn, the Lord will have war with Amalek from generation to generation" (Exod. xvii. 14—16, R.V.). Here, then, is recorded the name of the Lord Jehovah's perpetual, national enemy, and it is Amalek, the grandson of Esau or Edom. The insult, which the Lord will never forgive, and for which He will perpetually fight with Amalek, was this—"Knowing the Israelites were preordained by God to be put in possession of the land of Canaan, the Amalekites came against them with an armed force, in hopes of frustrating the designs of Providence. . . . The injury done to the Israelites was not so great an offence as the affront offered to the Divine Majesty; therefore God threatens utterly to extirpate the designers of it" (Stackhouse).

Looking forward to over 3,000 years, we find there is to be yet another restoration of Israel to their own land (the second), and a Power then, we know, will strive to oppose that restoration also, and that settlement by an armed force. The result is told us by Ezek. xxxviii. and xxxix. What power so likely to carry out this evil design, and what power so likely to be the enemy of the Lord on that occasion also, as Amalek, His ancient and perpetual foe? Let us see if that is to be the case or not. When Saul was "anointed king over His people, over Israel," God gave a charge to the new ruler in these words: "I have marked (or I will visit) that which Amalek did to Israel, how he set himself against him in the way, when he came up out of Egypt. Now go and smite Amalek, and utterly destroy all that they have, spare them not, but slay both man and woman, infant and suckling, ox and sheep, camel and ass" (1 Sam. xv. 2, 3, R.V.). Saul, we know, disobeyed the Lord's command, and spared Agag the king, who was afterwards "hewed in pieces by Samuel, before the Lord in Gilgal" (ver. 33). Agag was, it is supposed, the general name of the kings of Amalek, as "Pharaoh" was of those of Egypt; and therefore, when we find, years before Saul's time, a prophecy by Balaam in B.C. 1452, that "Israel's king shall be higher than Agag, and his kingdom shall be exalted," we accept that as an assurance that in these latter days, in Israel's time of exaltation, the Amalekites will be in existence, Agag will be their king, and God will put them down under Israel's feet, in respect to military and naval power; since He has sworn by an oath, which can know no change, that "He will have war with Amalek from generation to generation" (Exod. xvii. 16, R.V.). A point for observation is, that in each instance Amalek, headed by an Agag, is Israel's enemy, opposing God's purposes of mercy and restoration regarding them, and therefore in each case insulting the Lord God of Israel in His designs on their behalf.

Before we come to modern times, we find Amalek again appearing as a foe of God's people, and seeking their destruction, in the days of Esther and Mordecai, about 460 B.C. Haman, the Jews' enemy, who wished to destroy the whole race, was an "Agagite," a descendant of Agag, of the Royal House of Agag. He it was who, hating the Jews, the Lord's people, craftily designed to destroy them all, throughout the 127 provinces subject to the Persian monarch, Ahasuerus (Esther iii. 6). God interfered on behalf of His people, saved them by a series of critical events, and defeated the Agagite

Digitized by Google

Amalekite Haman, by sending him to the fearful and cursed death he designed for Mordecai.

But we have not yet done with Agag, the king of Amalek. As God declared He would have war with Amalek from generation to generation, we expect in these last days to find in prophecy some intimation answering to Balaam's prediction, that an "Agag" king would exist as the declared enemy of Israel, and that God's glory would be shown forth by his utter and final destruction. We are not deceived in the matter! We do find in the Scripture, that a great and terrible foe of Israel is to appear in the latter days, a veritable "Agag" or "Gog," who, as head or king of a mighty confederation, is destined to attempt the destruction of God's restored and re-united Tribes, when located in their own inheritance, possibly in revenge for their occupation of the Gate of his house at Constantinople, according to the will of God. That Power, named in Ezek. xxxviii. 2, and xxxix. 1, R.V., as "Gog," is, without doubt, the head or Chief Prince of Rosh, Meshech, and Tubal (Russia, Moscow, and Tobolsk). The word "Gog," as well as the title, "Agag," are Hebrew words, having precisely the same signification—"high," "lofty," "dominant," "mountain," "warlike." The roots of the two words are the same, and apply, we believe, to the same malignant, Satanic power, which first tried to prevent Israel's occupation of their land in B.C. 1452; which strove, in Haman's person, to destroy the Jews in B.C. 460; and which was the subject of Balaam's prophecy in B.C. 1452. After that, Ezekiel, in B.C. 587, clearly described the same Power by name as the modern Empire of Russia, the "Agag" of this age, destined for the third time to try conclusions with the people of the Lord, only to find again, for the third time, that the Lord did not declare in vain that "He would have war with Amalek from generation to generation." History tells us, as well as prophecy, that God has destroyed, and will utterly destroy them in every case, but irretrievably at last. Balaam's declaration, in Num. xxiv. 20, R.V., is clear: "Amalek was the first of the nations; but at his latter end shall come to destruction." Russia, the modern "Gog" or "Agag," is thus a thrice conquered enemy of Israel; and his conqueror is, and ever has been, the Almighty God of Israel, our King! We need not fear "Gog," therefore, since God is on our side, as his bitter, unforgiving enemy, ready to fight him as our ally, and to make us more than conquerors at last. To Him shall be all the praise!

HOW RUSSIA AND ITALY TREAT THE WORD OF GOD.

It seems a remarkable thing that while Russia has suddenly resolved to put a stop to the circulation of the Bible in the Baltic Provinces, the editor of a Milan paper, taking advantage of a change in the law, has, in spite of the frowns of the Church of Rome, resolved to issue at an exceedingly cheap rate a copy of the Bible in connection with his paper, the Secolo! It is to come out in halfpenny numbers, the text being that of Martini translated into Italian from the Vulgate! The following describes the act of Russia, and the probable effects of it. The enemy of God's people cannot be favourable to His word! The act proves the truth of the promise to Israel in Psa. cxlvii. 19, 20, "He showeth His words unto Jacob, His statutes and His judgments unto Israel. He hath not so dealt with any nation, and as for His judgments they have not known them." The Russians know not the Lord's judgments and words. They therefore presume to deny them entry into their dominions. The account of the matter published in the papers was this:—

RUSSIAN SUPPRESSION OF THE BIBLE.

Religious persecution in Russia has taken a fresh turn, and one that will put the Protestant world of England and America on its mettle. Without any warning the Russian Government has suddenly, within the last few days, put a stop to the operations of the American Bible Society in the Baltic Provinces. Those provinces have been the field for years of activity of the Bible Societies of England and the United States, who have worked the country by a mutual arrangement, the latter having colporteurs in Esthonia, and the former elsewhere. The American Society has been forbidden to circulate any more Bibles in Esthonia, and the operations of the colporteurs of the British Bible Society are daily expecting to be stopped, No cause whatever has been assigned by the Russian Government for an act which is generally ascribed to the intolerance of the all powerful Procureur of the Synod, M. Pobiedinostseff. It is by no means improbable that the ultimate result of the policy he has been some time maturing will be the total expulsion of the British and American Bible Societies from Russia. In the meanwhile the persecution of the Lutheran pastors in the Baltic Provinces continues. Four more have been exiled to Archangel, and 60 are to be tried for opposing the Russifying decrees of the Imperial Government. After this year the Germans of the Baltic Provinces, most of whom are ignorant of Russ, will be only allowed to read the Bible in Russ; and the pastors, who are equally ignorant, will be only permitted to conduct their services and preach to their German congregations in the Russian language. It would be difficult adequately to describe the indignation that prevails in Riga and Revel at this persecuting policy.

So far the journalist. It is meet that those who have to fulfil an ignoble function according to the prophecies should voluntarily blindfold and deprive themselves of the knowledge which the Bible would give them of their coming destiny. The destruction of Gog-Magog in the land of the inheritance has for its fitting prelude the rejection of the whole Bible by the doomed people, who will thus ignorantly meet their fate.

Quem Deus vult perdere prius dementat. It looks like an act of insanity to reject the counsels of God against one's self and one's own nation. But this is just what the Russians and their government are doing at the present moment in regard to the Holy Scriptures. The Italians on the other hand are nationally no more willing than the Russians to admit the Bible to the masses. But Signor Sonzogno, editor and proprietor of the Secolo newspaper, quite apart from Protestant or religious views, desires his countrymen to read the Bible because he believes "it gathers up the poetry and science of humanity," that as "a specimen of literature it has no peer," that it teaches morality as no other book does; that it has "incomparable educational credentials," and "that it is unrivalled as a world's classic!" The Priests of the Church of Rome of course do not approve of the Divine Book being thus brought to the notice and within the reach of the Italian people. They prefer to impart the knowledge of it to the masses second-hand. They have succeeded in this effort, and now the editor of the Secolo wants to put a stop to this state of ignorance by giving the people the Italian version of the volume that they may judge for themselves. No doubt the editor will succeed. The people will buy and read, and the Church of Rome, in Italy as in England, will discover that the Book may be read freely and yet the readers remain after all good Roman Catholics still! The book itself cannot alone convert anyone, much less a nation. The Spirit of God, who wrote and dictated it, must teach and apply the contents of the Book before any effect can take place at all. "He hath not dealt so with any nation" as He hath done with Israel, "and as for His judgments they have not known them!" The effort of the Secolo, however, will have a good effect no doubt. It will act as a call to God's people in Italy to "come out" and be separate, that they be not partakers of the plagues about to be poured out on European Christendom. A correspondent at Milan writing to the Times on the subject, on July 3, made the following observations on this curious matter, heading his remarks as "A Novel Ally for the Bible Society."

(FROM A CORRESPONDENT AT MILAN.)

An ally for the Bible Society has just arisen in a most unlikely quarter—namely, in the publishing office of a leading daily newspaper of this city. Signor Sonzogno, the proprietor and able editor of the Secolo, announces that he is about to issue a popular edition of the Bible in half-penny numbers, so as to bring the book within the reach of all. In the face of the fact that the Church of Rome spares no pains to prevent the Bible from getting into the hands of the people, and in view of the difficulty Bible societies and evangelical agencies encounter in their endeavour to circulate the Word of God, and looked at in connexion with the new Penal Code, which makes the priest directly responsible to the State for his speech and behaviour in the pulpit and the pastorate, this announcement of the Secolo is weighted with great significance. This also must be noted, that Signor Sonzogno has not undertaken this work in the interests of religion, nor simply out of hostility to the Church, but as a commercial speculation, which, while putting money into his pocket, will also promote the good of Italy. I have known this editor through his journal for many years, and, judging from his liberalism and patriotism and readiness at all times to advance the welfare of his countrymen, even though it involves a sacrifice, I am justified in saying that he speaks sincerely when he declares his intention in this publication to be what I have said.

Digitized by Google

The statements which he makes in giving publicity in the pages of the Secolo to his enterprise are so strange and striking that I translate a few of them. He says:—

"There is one book which gathers up the poetry and the science of humanity, and that book is the Bible, and with this book no other work in any literature can be compared. It is a book that Newton read continually, that Cromwell carried at his saddle, and that Voltaire kept always on his study table. It is a book that believers and unbelievers should alike study, and that ought to be found in every house. The text will be that of Martini translated from the Vulgate, and care will be taken to insure accuracy."

He then concludes, "This artistic, useful, and popular edition, the first of its kind in Italy, is destined to have an extraordinary success, equal only to the marvel of its cheap production."

The Secolo has hitherto been successful in its publications, and I have no doubt that the editor's prophecy will be realized. Colporteurs and Bible societies will now have their labours lightened and helped. For when once this edition finds its way into the hands and homes of the people, and is read and studied, the Bible will no longer be looked upon as the wicked production of the "Protestanti," or as a foreign importation to be shunned. The timeliness of this enterprise is to be noted. It comes on the back of the adoption of the new Penal Code by the Chamber of Deputies. Had it appeared earlier the Church could have suppressed it, or used its influence in that direction. Now any interference with the liberty of the subject of that nature is a breach of law, and renders the transgressor liable to fine, imprisonment, and dismissal from his ecclesiastical office. Surely happier days are in store for Italy. "The darkness is past and the true light now shineth."

So far the journalist. Our Israelitish origin seems capable of proof by the fact that Israel only, as God's messengers, puts forward the Word as the rule of life, fit for the guidance of the whole of the human race. But every other nation except Israel, on one pretext or another, offers opposition to its free circulation among the masses. The Russians are likely to banish it from the Czar's dominions. Italy guarded by the Priests of Rome will take care that the Secolo's effort will have little or no effect. Germany has the word but pays no attention to it. France is too volatile to accept it, and the Latin races are blinded by the Priests of the Papacy, therefore refuse it. "He showeth His words unto Jacob, His statutes and His judgments unto Israel!" The British alone of all the nations are the people of the Book, and press it upon the notice of the non-Israelite nations as the record of their Master's will, the only true statement of the way of salvation. It tells them that "God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish but have everlasting life," and "that there is none other name given among men whereby they may be saved" but the name of "Jesus Christ of Nazareth" (John iii. 16; Acts iv. 12, R.V.). For such distinguishing mercy let Israel praise the Lord!

B.C. 720 AND A.D. 60.

By J. C. H. Mehl.

It has been lately remarked to the writer that, "at the present time there is a certain and not infrequent anomaly to be found in the writings of some teachers of the truths of Our Identity. This has become apparent, since, with the growth of knowledge, resulting from careful study and research, great pains have been taken for evident reasons to point out the fact that Israel of the Ten Tribes had been located, indeed had taken root in the British Isles before the Christian Era, and that she was there prepared for and awaiting the Gospel which reached her in the days of the Apostles, long before the Roman Church obtained any pre-eminence: yet not far from the same page setting forth the above may often be found the common assertion that the bulk of Israel of the Ten Tribes was in apostolic times in and about the cities of Asia Minor; and this notwithstanding that the locale referred to is entirely away from the position which the main body is known to have occupied immediately after their exodus from Assyria, and quite out of the track which must be assigned to them on their way North-west, as so often shown by competent authorities. How opposers of the 'craze' must enjoy pointing out to one another this very apparent anomaly!"

The above proves that when any truth is being advocated those convinced of it and anxious for its dissemination will often find themselves in the position of hearing with ears and seeing with eyes other than their own. Having present in their minds those uninitiated whom the things written or spoken may possibly reach, they put themselves in the place of such readers or hearers and hence are alive to whatever there may be unguarded, or misleading, or insufficient, in statements which, if only addressed to those within the camp, it were not necessary to challenge. From this point of view the following remarks will, it is hoped, be of some use.

All earnest believers in the Identity of the British race with the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel feel it to be of the utmost importance, in the face of the ignorance and confusion of ideas generally prevailing on the subject, to be able to prove that these Tribes, the House of Israel, were in existence at the opening of this dispensation or in apostolic times, and consequently are in existence now. Amidst other proofs in confirmation of this fact the passage in 1 Pet. i. 10, is often referred to, and justly so; for in turning to Hos. i. we find that the words quoted by the apostle Peter, "which in time past were no people but now are the people of God, which had not obtained mercy, but now have obtained mercy," strictly apply to Israel as distinct from Judah; and consequently in the year A.D. 60, or thereabout, when this epistle was written to the sojourners of the dispersion (see chap. i. 1), there must have been among them a proportion of Israelites of the Ten Tribes. That a substantial and representative body of the latter must be understood as included in that term is evident from the opening words of the epistle of St. James, who sends greeting to the Twelve Tribes of the dispersion (R.V.). It is indeed indisputable that both these apostles, as well as St. Paul, when he said before King Agrippa, "unto which promise our Twelve Tribes earnestly serving God night and day, hope to attain," were convinced of the fact of All-Israel (see 1 Kings xii. 16, 18, 20,) being largely represented among the diaspora; and thus writers on the Identity are perfectly justified when they maintain that St. Peter, by the Holy Ghost, addresses in both his epistles Christianized Israelites of the Ten Tribes. So far so good! And no doubt this assertion is thoroughly well understood by those familiar with Identity truth, who know what limitations to assign to it; but to the uninitiated it may and does convey the idea that outside this "Dispersion," and apart from this scattered condition, Israel (as distinct from Judah or the "Jews") at that time had no existence and therefore has not any other to this day.

Now it is in order to guard against so grave a misapprehension, and one that an opponent might make great use of, that it seems desirable to point out how, in stopping short at the above statement, we, as it were, leave our story less than half told. For important as is the discovery that we find Israel thus represented in apostolic times among the diaspora, and chiefly in the provinces of Asia Minor (as specified in 1 Pet. i. 1), mixed up too in most instances with the House of Judah, adherents to the rite of circumcision and to the Mosaic law—for to such, "the circumcision," St. Peter's mission was directed—it is yet of greater importance to establish the fact that the bulk of that once outcast House was not, and could not at that time be thus located and so circumstanced.

Digitized by Google

The Right Rev. Bishop Titcomb says, in "A Message to the Church from the Nineteenth Century," on p. 49:—"The dispersion addressed by St. Peter belonged to scattered fragments of the Ten Tribes of Israel which had wandered far away from the place of their captivity, while those described by Hosea belonged to the main body of exiles who had wandered in a direction some long distance from it." The fate and wanderings of this main body, therefore, it is advisable to outline at least, by giving a few data; for, as a rule, even among the educated, their historical knowledge on this head presents a complete blank. Consequently, if it is shewn that from the date of their captivity B.C. 720, in Armenia and Media, and excepting a not inconsiderable number of Israelites who escaped seawards, these Tribes can be traced as making their way as Scyths, or Cymri, or Sacæ, warring and wandering, along the South and East of the Caspian Sea, on westward through the South of Russia, North of Germany and Scandinavia, until they finally, in various detachments and in the course of centuries (from B.C. 700 to A.D. 1066), all united in these British Isles to be formed into one powerful nation, the nucleus of the Great British Empire,—if these facts are pointed out as resting on a sound historical basis, the enquirer will at once gather that believers in the Identity are in possession of strong proofs to bear out their unanswerable Scriptural argument. Whereas, if we neglect thus to supplement our assertion as to the presence in Asia Minor of Israelites of the Ten Tribes about A.D. 60, we shall greatly perplex any thoughtful mind that we wish to gain. Seeing that there is no trace in history from that date forward of this scattered Israelite remnant inhabiting the provinces enumerated by the Apostle, ever uniting in a body and migrating westward, we set before our enquiring friends—all the while we are insisting that the House of Israel, the inheritor of Joseph's birthright blessing, was divinely led to gather in these British Isles—a problem so full of difficulty and contradiction, that they are likely to drop the whole subject as an absurdity and indeed a "craze." But a few sentences will suffice to prevent such confusion of facts, if we omit not to direct the enquirer for further information to such publications as Bishop Titcomb's "Anglo-Israel Postbag," and Philo-Israel's "Historical, Ethnic, and Philological Argument."

Lee, August 21, 1888.

"THE BEST POSITIONS ON THE SURFACE OF THE GLOBE."

If the Banner of Israel were to declare, as a matter of fact, that our favoured country had somehow or other secured for herself "the best positions on the surface of the globe," we should be deemed boastful and vain-glorious in making such a statement. Whatever may be the truth of the matter the assertion is not ours. It comes from an Admiral of the British Navy; one who, having been Commander-in-Chief on the East Indian Station, ought to know. He made the statement while under examination by "the Navy Estimates' Committee," on July 25, when Lord George Hamilton, first Lord of the Admiralty, was in the chair. His evidence was to the following effect—being interesting on account of the rank and opportunities of the witness, also by reason of the character of his testimony bearing on a part of our "Identity case." The Times' report said:—

Sir Frederick Richards, who has been Commander-in-Chief on the East Indian Station, gave evidence as to the dock accommodation on that station, which he considered inefficient. The station was a very large one, extending from Delagoa Bay, up the East Coast of Africa to Aden, and along the Persian Gulf and Bay of Bengal to Burmah, and the myriads of islands in the Eastern seas, such as the Maldives and the Mauritius. It took him from June to January to inspect the station. Trincomalee was very useful for clothing, victualling, and repairing the ships employed in the Bay of Bengal; in the case of war, Trincomalee would be absolutely essential. There ought, however, to be a dock there. We had all the best positions on the surface of the globe, but he did not think we were doing anything like so much as we ought in order to put those positions in a proper condition for naval purposes. It seemed to him that the British lion, not having had a foeman on the seas for three-quarters of a century, was now inclined to cut his own claws. He looked upon the Cape as our main route to India, and not as merely an alternative route. The Indian Government ought to build a dock at Bombay, and the Imperial Government ought to build one at Ceylon; but if only one dock was to be built he should prefer to have it at Ceylon. Situated as Bombay was, with the two turret ships which were there, he thought it could defend itself against any attack that would be probable.

So far the Admiral. He pictured the nation to the Committee as a lion; unwittingly declaring, thereby, that she was Israel, "the remnant of Jacob," as Balaam and the Prophet Micah both spoke of God's people Israel (Num. xxiii. 24; xxiv. 9; Micah v. 8, R.V.). He was speaking of the British coaling stations and ocean fortresses—that is, of Israel's "Gates"—and he declared, from a personal knowledge, that we "had all the best positions on the surface of the globe." Those positions, in his opinion, wanted fortifying, and putting into a proper defensive condition. Our inclination seemed to be, he said, that of a lion wanting "to cut his own claws"—that is, to disarm and leave the defence of the Gates to Providence, or to the clemency of "the enemy."

This was the purport of Sir Frederick Richards' evidence. He sees what God sees, that, in respect to the Gates or Doors of the Empire, they ought to be properly defended, bolted, and barred; which at present, though there is some improvement, they are not. "Come, My people," says the Word of God in Isa. xxvi. 20, R.V., "enter thou into thy chambers, and shut thy doors (Gates) about thee, hide thyself for a little moment, until the indignation be overpast." The reason is, that the Lord means to punish the inhabitants of the "earth" for their iniquity, and He desires to provide for His people's safety the while, just as Sir F. Richards does. The Admiral deemed Bombay sufficiently protected, which no doubt it is, but the Singalese Gate, Trincomalee, he thinks absolutely indispensable for war purposes, and would have a dock built there as well as at Bombay. We wonder whether the Admiral, during his many voyages to inspect his enormous station from Delagoa Bay to the Persian Gulf, and thence to Aden and Burmah in the West and East, ever reflected how we had happened, as a nation, to occupy these "best positions"? History would tell him there was no design in the matter, looked at from a national point of view. When Gibraltar was seized, during Queen Anne's reign, in 1704, by Sir George Rooke, the latter had no idea that that capture was important as one of the Gates of the route to India and Australasia! Still less, when the French surrendered Malta to the British fleet in 1800, was it imagined that thus a Gate of the Levant, and of the overland route, was obtained, which would prove of immense importance to the Empire as it now exists. Thenceforward the chief maritime Gates and fortresses in the Eastern and other Ocean routes were acquired, till, as Sir Frederick Richards truly observed in his evidence, "all the best positions on the surface of the globe" (not those in the Mediterranean and the East alone) are now in our own possession. Surely there was a design in this, and God purposed, by so endowing us as a nation, to make ours the dominant Power in the earth —"the head and not the tail, above only and not beneath" all the nations of the world.

Digitized by Google

This was to be Israel's latter-day experience, as, perhaps, Sir F. Richards does not know. Our possession of these Gates, these "best positions on the surface of the globe," is one of our unanswerable proofs that we are Israel. The gift, in fact, is unique. Its universality, which the Admiral acknowledges so clearly, and must often have realised in the course of his official duties, marks it as a point of vast importance in the discovery of lost Israel. This very mark, in its broadest aspect, God conferred on the "afterseed" of Abraham, when He sware by Himself that to that seed He would grant "the possession of the Gate of their enemies" (Gen. xxii. 17, R.V.). The strange carelessness of our nation, in disdaining to fortify or adapt these Gates for their proper defensive purposes, the Admiral likens to the folly of a lion voluntarily depriving itself of the power to fight, by "cutting its own claws," little knowing that this is another Israelitish trait, and that our true defence is not the Gates, either fortified or not, but the presence and protecting aid of the Lord our God, who has declared, not twice nor thrice, that He will never leave us nor forsake us, but will guide, guard, protect, help, and bless us; holding us by His own right hand, fighting for us, destroying most of our enemies before us, and using us in all things for His own glory and the good of all mankind (Isa. xli. 10—15; xxvii. 6, R.V.).

The defence of our Gates, however, is a matter, as stated before, which God requires us to look to at this juncture, and accordingly we find Bombay is adequately protected, according to the Admiral, and we know, from official sources, that the matter is everywhere in progress; that guns are being manufactured, works for the guns are mostly ready, and that garrisons only are wanted for the guns and to man the works against the enemy in the coming time of war. All things thus are getting ready, and what God commands is certain to be performed, according to His will. We may well leave all anxieties then at the foot of the throne of Him who is guiding His people even now; yea, and will so guide them to the end, till the Twelve Tribes, with Manasseh, shall return with rejoicing to their land, to the praise of the glory of the grace of Him who is Israel's King, Redeemer, Advocate, and God!

THE INDIAN GATES AS DESCRIBED BY THE REV. W. R. FLETCHER, M.A.

We give the following details as they appeared in the South Australian Advertiser of June 26, 1888, the author, we suppose, being an Australian. The Rev. W. R. Fletcher, M.A., we are glad to see, approached his subject with diffidence, and admitted that India presents a problem more difficult to solve even than that which Australia offers. He realised that India was a collection of nations differing from each other in all possible respects, in speech, religion, manners, customs, surroundings, scenery, dress, climate, vegetation and architecture. They only agree in one thing: all owe allegiance to the paramount Power, British-Israel. He observed that India was a country of immense distances: there being 1,900 miles between the snowy range of the Himalayas and Adam's Bridge, near Cape Cormorin, and about the same, he says, from East to West in the broadest part; the fact being, however, that the distance East to West is really only about 1,000 to 1,200 miles, about as far as London from Alexandria. He tells us what will give an idea to our readers of the immensity of India, that in our "British" portion there are 448,320 villages of less than 1,000 inhabitants, and only 44 of more than 50,000. In the Ganges Valley there is one village to every square mile, and the average number of their inhabitants is 338. But Mr. Fletcher comforts himself as an Australian by saying that he believes ere long Australia will be as densely peopled as India, for Australian population doubles itself once in 27 years. He believes that therefore in another century the balance of power in the world will have strangely shifted, and the Southern hemisphere will become altogether Anglo-Saxon. Returning to India, he says the Gangetic Valley is 1,600 miles long and 240 broad. The water that passes down the Ganges is enormous—400,000 gallons per second being discharged by it into the ocean in the dry months of the year, but five times that quantity during the four rainy months! The latter part of Mr. Fletcher's paper we can alone present to our readers; but this deals with the chief Indian Gates, Madras, Calcutta and Bombay. He wrote as follows:—

AN EMPIRE SPRUNG FROM A PEPPERCORN.

There is no more wonderful or romantic story in the history of the world than the occupation of this enormous empire by the far-off people of Britain. It seems at first a most absurd and impossible thing that an alien race coming from a small island in unknown seas should first subdue and then manage to hold a country with ten times the population, and separated from it by history, by custom, and by religion. Rome conquered her neighbours by the sword, but England has got hold of India by the ledger. The first adventurers were merchants, and their servants were armed with quill pens; Napoleon used to sneer at the English people as a "nation of shopkeepers," but, in the irony of fate, the heroism of Gallic glory in Asia has vanished into thin air; while the shopkeeping tendency of England has made her mistress of an empire twice as populous as that of Rome in the time of Trajan.

It came about through a war of tariffs. In the years when Good Queen Bess was getting old and testy, the Dutch, getting jealous of our brave attempts to send our merchant ships into the East, and having as they thought got the monopoly in their own hands, suddenly raised the price of pepper from 3s. to 6s. per lb. Pepper was not only a fiery but an expensive luxury even at 3s., for the shilling in those days was worth four or five of our modern shillings; but to have to pay 6s. for the fascinating condiment was more than the merchants of London would stand. The dearness of the usual stimulant proved, however, more stimulating than its cheapness. The Lord Mayor called a meeting on the 22nd of September, 1599, of London citizens to consider this peppery question. I do not know how many were present, or what was said, but the meeting was seized with a mania for forming a company for the purpose of trading in the East Indies. The old Queen favoured the idea, and sent an ambassador to the Great Mogul, the Mohammedan Emperor of India, to gain his concurrence. On the last day of the year, 1600, the English East India Company was incorporated by royal charter under the title of "The Governor and Company of Merchants of London trading to the East Indies." I have not come upon one of the original prospectuses, but the records tell us that there were 125 shareholders, and that their capital was £70,000. That was the small beginning of our Indian Empire—a beginning so small as almost to be deemed ridiculous. Our Indian Empire arose out of a peppercorn!

I need not tell you how the pepper company got on further than to say that the fortunate shareholders rapidly made money. They made an average of 100 per cent. per annum during the first 12 years of their history, and grew in importance and power. The peppercorns of the Moluccas were worth more than even South Australian rubies. As years went on we find this company living on very bad terms with their rivals in the trade who came from Holland and from Portugal, and the ships had to go about on their commercial enterprises loaded with cannon, as well as cottons and silks and spices, and the sailors had to play the part of marines. Many a fierce naval battle was fought with Dutch privateers and Indian pirates, and the high dividends of the shareholders were purchased at the cost of many a brave life.

This company had it in view to establish factories at various places where they could conveniently hoard up their merchandise and work up raw material into saleable stuff. They were driven from pillar to post in their search for suitable spots, but finally we find them setting up a factory on the sandy sea coast on the east side, which they called Fort St. George. It was a most unsuitable place, but it was the best they were allowed to take.

Digitized by Google

A tremendous surf beats on the shore there something like the surf at Middleton. There is not even the vestige of a harbour but the place answered their purpose. Their factory had to be defended against robbers of all sorts, and so it was surrounded by a rampart on which were mounted many guns. The merchant warriors were determined to defend their own and give a warm reception to unwelcome intruders. This "Fort St. George" is the heart of the great city of Madras, which now boasts of a palace for its governor, a university which educates thousands of graduates, a harbour which is being built in defiance of the terrible cyclones which rise against it, a town which contains half a million inhabitants, and which is the centre of a system of railways which brings it within two day's journey of any part of Southern India. The nation of counter-jumpers has no need to be ashamed of the shopkeeping origin of the Indian Empire.

A MIGHTY REVOLUTION.

One factory was not enough, however. Another site was wanted further north, and somewhere near the mouth of the Ganges. At that time a certain Shah Jehan was seated on the throne of the Great Mogul. He had a favourite daughter, who, somehow or other, let her dress catch fire, and who was badly burnt. A doctor was wanted for the poor girl, and Dr. Gabriel Boughton was sent for from one of the English ships. He cured the girl, and doubtless asked and obtained a handsome fee; but more than that, he got over the prejudices of the grateful potentate, and obtained permission for his white-faced friends to settle in Bengal. At that time there were three small villages situated in a line a short distance from the Hugli mouth of the Ganges. One was called Kalighat, from possessing the shrine and some relics of the terrible bloodthirsty goddess named Kali. This was and still is a famous place of pilgrimage, and is now one of the few places in India where sacrifices of blood are offered to any of the idols. On the banks of the river, in an open swampy plain, the English built their factory and their fort, and they rented the three villages I have named. This factory they surrounded by a wall, and on the wall cannon were mounted, a deep ditch was dug embracing the three villages in a wide semicircle, with the rim on one side. This was the origin of the far-famed city of Calcutta. The swampy plain by the river bank has been turned into a magnificent city park, with carriage drives intersecting it, along which every evening a string of gorgeous equipages rolls, carring lords and ladies, merchants, rajahs, and royal personages from every Indian state to a peaceful rendezvous around the bandstand of the Eden Gardens. At one end of this plain arises an English Cathedral which cost £40,000 to build. Near to that and on the way to the temple of the bloody goddess stands a noble pile of buildings dedicated to the work of the London Missionary Society. All along the road that used to connect the three villages stand in succession splendid residences, a great museum, clubhouses, and warehouses. At the other end stands the palace of the viceroy in the midst of a garden. Behind all these in every direction is a network of streets in which live a motley collection of three-quarters of a million human beings, housed in noble mansions and paltry hovels, and among which are to be found bazaars containing samples of the industry and skill of all countries on the face of the earth, and squares surrounded with colleges, where some 10,000 young people are studying law, medicine, arts, and sciences; and also conspicuous over all, the spires and domes of sanctuaries which tell of a purer faith than that of Mohammed, and a more merciful worship than that of Kali. Great indeed has been the change! We talk of the "impassive and immovable East." The East is not so immovable as we think. It too is the theatre of mighty revolutions and great changes, changes wrought not by force of conquest but by the silent influence of example, changes which touch and remodel the very basement elements of character. Calcutta is only 250 years old. The grave of Job Charnock, its founder, is still to be seen in one of the churchyards of the city. In the "immovable East" this city has risen like a splendid exhalation from the swamps of the Hugli, a modern city, a British city, and yet a truly Indian city; a type of a new life for that ancient land where it stands, of a new and a peaceful power in that land of perpetual anarchy, of the coming of a new and holier religion than that which is deemed sacred by the dwellers on the banks of the Ganges.

BOMBAY.

The origin of Bombay is similar yet different from that of her rivals. It belonged to the Portuguese, but when Charles II. took a bride from the royal house of Portugal he got as a dowry the island of Bombay. No one thought much of the gift. It was as bad as a share in a possible silver mine. It was in fact "thrown in" along with the illustrious bride, whom the king described as possessing "as much agreeableness in her looks as he had ever seen," with a face which bespoke her "as good a woman as ever was born." The king handed over the distant dowry to the company "in free and common soccage at an annual rental of £10 in gold on the 30th of September in each year." From that odd beginning Bombay has arisen till it bids fair to be one of the very greatest cities in the world. It has the advantage over Calcutta and Madras in possessing naturally a harbour which may dispute with Sydney and Rio the premier position on the globe. Its natural beauties are a perpetual delight to its inhabitants, and it has been built in a style of architecture which leaves the classical plaster imitations of Calcutta far behind. Calcutta is a triumph of patience over natural difficulties, but Bombay has had every natural advantage to help it on. These two cities are naturally somewhat jealous of each other. They look at each other somewhat as Sydney and Melbourne do, and much talk sometimes results. When I was at Darjeeling there sat next to me an odd and very pompous and very chatty Calcutta judge, and there sat opposite to us a wealthy Bombay merchant, who was likewise a civic father. Every morning at breakfast and every evening at dinner these two worthies drifted into their favourite theme, and great was our amusement in listening. The merchant was serious and earnest, the judge was unconsciously comical. The merchant gave us facts and figures; the judge launched out into rhetoric, and even began to defend the healthiness of Calcutta, pointing to his own portly rotund figure as an illustration. He then digressed into a description of the number and the excellence of the numerous bishops that Calcutta had had. The only thing these two worthies agreed upon was in their treatment of Madras. It was to them exactly what Adelaide is to the Melbourne broker or the Sydney squatter. It was "nothing;" it was "a mistake;" it was the capital of a "benighted presidency;" it was a "horrid hot place," its harbour was an "impossible dream;" its people were "asleep;" its society was "insufferably dull;" and much more to the same effect. If we had followed their advice we should have avoided that doomed city, and so have missed one of the pleasantest parts of our Indian tour, just as those do who content themselves with seeing Australia while they pass by the city of Adelaide as not worth the train fare from Glenelg or Largs Bay.

So far the Australian. If our readers will only commit to memory all the facts Mr. Fletcher gives us they will have some conception of the grandeur of God's gift to us in British India, and learn what "the power of His works" was when He gave Israel, His people, the heritage of the heathen in the most magnificent Heathen Empire of the world (Psa. cxi. 6, R.V.)

MR. H. A. MARCHANT TO "THE CHRISTIAN COMMONWEALTH."

60, Upper Lewes-road, Brighton, Aug. 4th, 1888.

SIR,—Being an Anglo-Israelite, and well known in my native town to have fulfilled all the requirements demanded in your strictures upon that question, by lifting up my voice like a trumpet, to shew those whom I believe to be God's people their transgressions, and the House of Jacob their sins, and idolatries against their just and merciful God, of whom it is said, "Is not He thy Father that hath bought thee, hath He not made thee and established thee?" (Deut. xxxii. 6), I feel I am in the position to claim the right of asking one or two questions upon the subject, although my general experience of the Christian press is, that though they can find space to stab at this question, they have neither time nor space to impartially discuss it. Do you believe there are any people, distinct from the Jews, who are "what are called the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel," and if no people upon earth can claim to be those people unless they are prepared to come up to a rigid standard of righteousness, in their national capacity, will you please inform me as to the whereabouts of such a righteous people, whose claim you would be prepared to admit? With regard to your remarks about the difficulties we should have to prove "that we are under the special patronage of the Divine Father," we Anglo-Israelites have no such work to perform, for the preachers and writers of all denominations (although they taboo this question) are continually asserting it, as witness the many speeches that have been recorded this year of the commemoration of God's providential deliverances. We Anglo-Israelites know it is all of grace, because of the covenant which God made with our ancestors, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, whilst those who deny this question are continually ascribing it to ourselves, saying it is the blood of the martyrs, regardless of the fact that other countries have had as many and more Christian martyrs than we, and yet the same blessings have never come upon them; and do you think that those who regard themselves as the Christian Church or ministry could stand the same rigid scrutiny as you conclude we ought before we can claim to be Israel? We say with David, "If Thou Lord shouldest mark iniquity, who can stand?" (Psa. cxxx. 3); again, "I will make mention of Thy righteousness, even of Thine only." I cannot quite reconcile the conclusion with the beginning of your article; at the end you assume the subject is neither practical nor theoretical, but at the beginning you say you have always placed these discussions under the heading, "Important if true." For my own part I cannot see the importance of that which is neither practical nor theoretical. Yours truly,

Digitized by Google

H. A. MARCHANT.

To the Editor of the "Christian Commonwealth."

THE CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY'S DEFICIENCY FUND.

ON page 262 of this year's BANNER, we explained to our readers that the Church Missionary Society were, in July last, in debt to the extent of £6,630, and that we desired to undertake the collection of £20 towards the liquidation of this sum, if our readers would help us in so doing. To the present date (Sept. 20th) we have received the following sums, and trust the small amount yet wanted will soon be kindly made up, and so enable us to remit the £20 to the secretaries of the Church Missionary Society for the good of the cause:—

Names of Donors.	£	s.	d.
Miss Elizabeth Pearse	1	0	0
R. F. B.	0	5	0
Mrs. Watts	1	0	0
F. H. Crozier, Esq.	1	1	0
"Henrietta"	1	0	0
Mrs. Rhoda C. Norris	1	0	0
Mrs. S. White	1	0	0
Captain Bayly	1	1	0
Mrs. Hird	0	2	6
Mrs. Morgan Browne (per Major Priaulx) ...	0	10	0
A Friend (per Major Priaulx)	0	5	0
Miss Eliza Pearse	1	0	0
Mrs. P. C. Jones	2	0	0
Mrs. Man	0	5	0
Miss K. Grant	0	3	0
Mr. Chas. Litten	0	5	0
C. J. H.	0	5	0
Mrs. Clara Bailey	1	0	0
Miss C. Middlemist	0	2	6
Miss Brake	0	5	0
Miss S. Brown	0	2	0
E. B.	0	2	6
Philo-Israel	0	10	0
	£14	4	6

THE METROPOLITAN ANGLO-ISRAEL, AND THE BRITISH-ISRAEL CONFERENCE ASSOCIATIONS.

WE are glad to learn that our London friends have not been idle, and that they are arranging a good programme for the remainder of the year. On August 31 they saw their way to inaugurating 40 lectures and addresses, to take place before the end of the present season at Christmas. During September, 14 sermons and lectures are to be delivered in Scotland on the subject of Our Identity. In the Association's rooms in London, 12 addresses are to be given between October and December. Six drawing-room meetings are to take place, and a series of three lectures each are promised in two chapels in the West End of London, besides two in the town of Leicester. This is indeed a good record of work which the London Association proposes to carry out before the end of 1888.

The British-Israel Conference Association, on the other hand, is also "up and doing." Its second conference is to take place (D.V.) at Manchester, during the Church Congress week, on Oct. 4th and 5th. On the 4th the speakers will be the Rev. R. Douglas, Rev. H. Marriott, the Rev. S. C. Adam, Rev. Idrisyn Jones, Oxonian, the Rev. C. W. Hickson, and Surgeon-General J. M. Grant (six clergyman and a layman!). On the 5th, the Rev. F. Aston, the Rev. Denis Hanan, the Rev. Idrisyn Jones, the Rev. R. Douglas, J. G. Taylor, Esq., Col. Senior, D. A. Onslow, Esq., Surgeon-General J. M. Grant, and Philo-Israel will speak (four clergymen and five laymen). On the 3rd the Rev. R. Douglas will preach an introductory sermon in St. James's Church, with the holy communion, at 7.30 p.m.

On the whole there seems good evidence of activity on all sides, and for this we feel bound to thank God.

Correspondence.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

SIR,—I think you are mistaken in supposing, as stated in your leading article on the subject on Aug. 22nd, that the Jaffa and Jerusalem Railway now happily under construction is the first proposed for the Holy Land. I was at Cairo during Sir Moses Montefiore's last visit, not long before his death, undertaken, I believe, chiefly by Sir Moses with the object of originating a railway from Cairo to Gaza, Jaffa, and Jerusalem, via Ismalia, and I understood from him the funds needed were then available for the purpose. Your excellent article also alludes to a railway from Beyrout to Damascus. I heard on a later visit to that part of Palestine it was then under consideration.

Yours faithfully,

F. H. CROZIER,
Late Madras Civil Service.

Delawarr, Lymington, Hants, Aug. 27th.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

MY DEAR SIR,—I was very much surprised to read your confession of wonder as to the meaning and probable issue of the Chinese question. You will most likely find that our Antipodean friend will discover the solution of the question in Isaiah lxi. 5. This has been my idea on the subject since the Chinese first began to pour into our colonies. Certainly at present their influx is regarded as in some measure a calamity to our own working classes, just as is the case with the poor Polish and German Jews, who are crowding into London in such numbers, to become there the victims of the sweating system, and to diminish the already sufficiently scanty supply of work for our own people. Both invasions, however, Jewish and Chinese, are preparations for the coming wonderful and glorious day, when Israel shall realise Isa. lx. and lxi., both in all their fulness. It is a certain fact that but for our false and lop-sided Free Trade, and for the many unfavourable years suffered by our agriculturists, our present population, over-abundant as it now seems, would not be sufficient for the work to be done. How much more will this be the case in that day? Besides that, God hath promised, in Isa. lx. 17 (which is merely an improvement on Israel's experience under Solomon), and it is evident, that Israel's possessions will be so vast and her wealth so great that she will need all the help her subject and friendly heathen populations and neighbours can give her. Besides, she will have her hands so full of evangelistic work that the men to spare from this great work as priests of the Lord will be insufficient to do much more than teach and direct and control her hordes of subject labourers in all branches of agriculture, trade and commerce.

This is getting too long for a letter, so I must close it, with many kind regards from

Yours truly,

W. H. MASON.

291, Abbeydale-road, Sheffield, Aug. 27, 1888.

MEN'S lives should be like the days, more beautiful in the evening; or like the seasons aglow with promise, and the autumn rich with golden sheaves, where good words and deeds have ripened on the field.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed: "Philo-Israel," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

SUBSCRIPTIONS. £ s. d.

Annual Subscription for one copy weekly (including the Twelve Double Numbers) post free 0 7 6
Two Copies (including Double Numbers) 0 13 6
Three Copies ,, ,, ,, ... 1 0 4
Four Copies ,, ,, ,, ... 1 5 6
Six Copies ,, ,, ,, ... 1 16 4

Post Office Orders to be made payable at the head office, St. Martin's-le-grand, London, to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C., or F. W. PARRY & Co., 29, Paternoster-row, London.

The Editor cannot undertake to return rejected MSS. unless stamps for the purpose be sent. Parties requiring an answer should enclose a stamp.

Contents Bills and Show Cards may be obtained on application to the Publishers.

Advertisements should be sent to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

Prepaid Advertisements are inserted at the rate of thirty words for 1s. 4d.

Manchester AND Salford British-Israel AND Biblical Evidence Association.

MEETINGS of the "BRITISH-ISRAEL CONFERENCE ASSOCIATION will be held in ST. JAMES'S SCHOOLROOM, Major-street, off Portland-street, MANCHESTER, on October 4 and 5, 1888.

Thursday, October 4, at 11 a.m., 4 and 7.30 p.m.

Friday, October 5, at 11 a.m., 3 and 7.30 p.m.

An Inaugural Sermon will be preached by the Rev. R. Douglas, M.A., in St. James's Church, George-street, Manchester, on Wednesday evening, October 3, at 7.30, after which the Holy Communion will be administered.

The Revs. R. Douglas, H. Marriott, Idrisyn Jones, S. C. Adam, W. Hickson, F. Aston, Denis Hanan, &c.

Philo-Israel, Surgeon-General Grant, M.D., Oxonian, D. A. Onslow, Esq., J.P., Colonel Senior, J. G. Taylor, Esq., and other gentlemen will address the meetings.

James Weaver, Esq., M.D., of Southport; John Thomas, Esq., of King-street, Manchester; the Rev. A. Parkinson, Rector of St. Clement's, Broughton, and other gentlemen, have kindly consented to preside at several of the meetings. A good selection of Identity Literature will be offered for sale at these meetings.

Just published—Cloth, 2s. 6d.—a re-issue of

The Origin of Masonic Ritual and Tradition:

A Lecture on the Three Degrees, by BRO. WM. ROWBOTTOM, P.M., 1028, with facsimile of a very rare Masonic engraving published in 1789.

"Exquisitely clear and singularly correct in everything wherein I may be any authority or guide."—Professor PIAZZI SMYTH. "Will be found of considerable interest to many besides Masons."—Church Bells.

Oxford: S. Rowbottom and Son; London: R. Banks and Son, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C.; and F. W. Parry and Co., 29, Paternoster Row, E.C.

Price Five Shillings.—"Substantially and attractively got up, and profusely illustrated."—Oldham Chronicle.

Eildon Grange: A Tale.

By ANDREW CLARK, M.A., Vicar of St. Michael's, Oxford. "One of the most charming books. . . . The illustrations are full of playful humour."—Scotsman. "The book is undoubtedly a happy one."—The Oxford Magazine. "Both entertaining and bracing."—Dundee Advertiser.

Oxford: S. Rowbottom and Son; London: Hamilton, Adams and Co., 32, Paternoster Row, E.C.

☞ Ask for this Book at the Libraries.

LUNG TONIC

SAVE YOUR LIVES BY TAKING

OWBRIDGE'S LUNG TONIC

THE MIGHTY HEALER.

It has a power over disease hitherto unknown in Medicine.

Are you at all Weak-chested or inclined to be Consumptive, with just a touch of Cough now and then?

"Try this Wonderful Medicine." The Cough and Weakness will disappear as if by magic, and you will feel a strength and power you never had before.

HAVE YOU A COUGH?
A DOSE WILL RELIEVE IT!
HAVE YOU A COLD?
A DOSE AT BEDTIME WILL REMOVE IT.

Bronchitis & Asthma it relieves instantly

The Spasms of Coughing so dreadful in Whooping Cough become less with each dose of the medicine.

Prepared by W. T. OWBRIDGE, Chemist, Hull

Sold in Bottles 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d. and 11s. by all Chemists and Patent Medicine Vendors. Wholesale all London and Provincial Houses.

NEW WORK BY DR. GRANT.

Just published, price 2s. 6d., Cloth boards, gilt lettered.

Sent free to any address in Great Britain, Europe, and America, on receipt of Postal Order or stamps.

THE ORIGIN, PROGRESS, AND ESTABLISHMENT OF THE KINGDOM OF GOD IN THE WORLD.

BY SURGEON-GEN. J. M. GRANT, M.D.

Army Medical Staff (Retired).

"THY KINGDOM COME."

CONTENTS.—Preface.—Introduction.—Chap. I. Abraham.—Chap. II. The Chosen People.—Chap. III. The Monarchy.—Chap. IV. Israel and Judah.—Chap. V. Jew and Gentile.—Chap. VI. The New Covenant.—Chapter VII. The End of the World.—Chapter VIII. The Kingdom.—Chapter IX. The Government, Ritual, and Close of the Millennium.—Conclusion.—Appendix. The Gentile Church.

ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

Published by ROBERT BANKS AND SON, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C.

Postal Orders may be obtained at any Post Office in the United Kingdom for the following amounts: 1s., 1s. 6d., 1d. each; 2s., 2s. 6d., 3s., 3s. 6d., 4s., 4s. 6d., 5s., 7s. 6d., 10s., 10s. 6d., 1d. each; 15s., 20s., 1½d. each. They should be "crossed" City Bank, Ludgate Hill, E.C. Stamps received.

A MESSAGE TO THE CHURCH FROM THE NINETEENTH CENTURY. The last written work on the Identity of the Anglo-Saxon Race with Lost Israel. By the late BISHOP TITCOMB. Imperial 8vo., cloth, gilt, 3s.

THE BRITISH NATION Proved to be the Remnant of Israel, and the Representatives of the Lost Ten Tribes. By J. H. WELDON, J.P., Author of "Britain and Prophecy." 66 pp., demy 8vo., 6d.; by post, 7d.

THE TOWER OF EGYPT: the Types and Chronology of the Great Pyramid. By A. R. G. An Inquiry into our "Position in Time," by a re-consideration of the meaning of the symbolic passages of the Great Pyramid of Egypt. Illustrated with Diagrams. Crown 8vo., cloth, gilt lettered, 4s.; post free for P.O.

A CHRONOLOGICAL AND GEOGRAPHICAL TREE. A design Showing the Development of the British Power and the Affinity of the British Nation with the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel. On plate paper, 8d.; by post, 10d. Mounted on linen, with rollers, and varnished, 2s., post free.

TALKS FOR THE TIMES. By Rev. JOSEPH WILD, D.D., Author of the "Lost Ten Tribes," &c. Being 18 Sermons preached in Bond-street Congregational Church, Toronto. 345 pp., crown 8vo., cloth, gilt lettered, 3s.; free for P.O.

BRITAIN IN HISTORY—ANCIENT AND MODERN; or, Proofs Linking Israel with Britain Throughout the Ages. By Mrs. G. A. ROGERS, Author of the "Coronation Stone," &c. Crown 8vo., 276 pp., cloth, gilt lettered, 3s. 6d.; sent post free for P.O.

ANGLO-ISRAEL TRACTS. Price ½d. each; 8 pp., royal 16mo. Assorted packet post free for 7 stamps. The tracts are well written, by the following Authors:—Rev. Bishop Titcomb, D.D.; Philo-Israel; W. S. Cavill; Douglas A. Onslow, J.P.; Mrs. G. Albert Rogers; "A E I"; Surgeon-General J. M. Grant, M.D.; Rev. Robert Douglas; Rev. C. W. Hickson.

PIANOFORTES, Harmoniums, American Organs. Why buy at shops inferior made instruments, and pay large profits, when you can buy direct from the Maker High-class Instruments, and save 50 per cent. by so doing? Full value allowed for old Instruments in exchange as part payment. Write for Price Lists and Testimonials to A. G. LINSTEAD, Cobden Pianoforte Company, 5, Eversholt-street, Camden Town, London. Established 1874.

HUMAN LIFE.—FIFTY YEARS' Record of Facts, Principles, and Discoveries (just published complete) Relating to the Improvement and Preservation of Human Life on Earth. Origin and true treatment of diseases. A series of articles by DR. SAMUEL BIRLEY, M.D., Ph.D. Book form, 50 pages. SENT FREE to every applicant by the publishers, GORDON B. MURRAY & CO., 50, Theobald's-road, Holborn, E.C. Write to-day.

WORKS BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

The History of the House of Israel. How They Were Lost and How They Were Found. Told for the children. Price 6d., cloth 1s.; post free 7d. and 1s. 1d. Fifth edition.

Anglo-Israelism. True, Not False. Being Philo-Israel's Reply to the Rev. Canon Bell's pamphlet, "Anglo-Israelism: True or False?" Price 1d., 6s. 6d. per 100. 16 pages, crown 8vo.

An Elementary Digest or Sketch of the Chief Facts and Teachings of the Great Pyramid of Egypt. Adapted to the Unlearned and Unscientific 56 pages, Illustrated with Diagrams, price 4d., post free 5d. 10th Thousand.

Our Identity with the House of Israel. Price 4d., Reprinted from "Clifton Chronicle Letters.

Are the English People the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel? An Inquiry Establishing the Identity of the British Nation with the Lost Ten Tribes. 4d.

Our Identity: What it is Not; What it is; and Our Obligations To-day in Respect to it Being a Lecture recently delivered in London by Philo-Israel, and published by special request. Price 2d., a reduction for quantities.

Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

SOUND, PURE, WHITE TEETH!

Those who value these will try

CARBOLINE

(The Great Sanitary Tooth Paste).

1/6 & 2/6 per Pot.

Through Chemists, or post free from the Makers,

GEORGE & WELCH

WORCESTER.

Lancet writes:—"To save the teeth use a good carbolic daily."

LADIES!

WE will send a FULL-DRESS LENGTH of BEAUTIFUL CLOTH (for Good, Strong, Serviceable wear), in any of the following colours, Carriage paid to any address for 10s. 6d. Colours:—Black, Blue, Fawn, Salmon, Reseda, Slate, Ruby, Brown, Grey, Claret, Sage, Old Rose, Terra-Cotta, Amber, Peacock, Tabac, Bronze, Myrtle, Drab, Olive, Grenat, Clay Green, Navy, Partridge, Heather, &c., &c. These wonderful Dress Lengths have gained a world-wide reputation for magnificence, cheapness and durability, having no equal.

The Lady's Pictorial says:—"They are excellent quality and very good value for the money."

Thousands of Testimonials from all parts of the world.

Ladies should write at once for Patterns, which may be had free, and need not be returned.

AN AMAZING OFFER!!—We shall give a very handsome Brocaded Silk Handkerchief with each dress-length ordered from us during this season. Write for patterns. LUTUS B. LEATHLEY, Armley, Leeds.

Certain HARNESS' Cure.

ELECTROPATHIC BELT FOR SLEEPLESSNESS

SLEEPLESSNESS.—The Rt. Hon. LORD BYRON says that—"Harness' Electropathic Belt is invaluable for sleeplessness, I recommend it to all my friends."

Guaranteed to generate a mild continuous current of Electricity, which speedily cures all Disorders of the Nerves, Stomach, Liver and Kidneys. Thousands of Testimonials. Pamphlet & Advice free on application to Mr. C. B. Harness, Consulting Electrician, the Medical Battery Co. Ltd. Only Address,

52, OXFORD ST. LONDON, W. (Corner of Rathbone Place.)

Call to-day, if possible, or write at once

Printed and Published for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-st., London, E.C. F. W. PARRY (late GUEST & Co.), 29, Paternoster-row. WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 26, 1888.

[All rights reserved.

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."

(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India.)

"And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the Forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS of the EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. XII., No. 614. Entered at Stationers' Hall.] WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 3, 1838. [DOUBLE NUMBER, TWOPENCE.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
Dominant Israel and her Colonies	389
An English Bishop at Ballarat, Victoria, Gives Blind Evidence of Our Identity	390
The Israel of God in Relation to the National Use of the Harp. By Rev. Thos. Lowe	391
It is the Lord	391
Hebrew Gentiles. By the Rev. Denis Hanan, B.D.	392
Psalms xxii. xxiii. and xxiv., and Isaiah liii., liv. and lv.	393
Mr. W. Hindle's Lecture in Yarmouth	394
The Sanctuary (Poetry)	395
Some Objections, and How They Are Answered	396
The Norfolk Chronicle and Norwich Gazette	397
The Coasts, the Ends, and the Uttermost Parts of the Earth	398
Mr. and Mrs. Grattan Guinness' Views. Forwarded by W. C., jun.	398
Anglo-Israel Free Distribution Fund	400
Israel's Scripture and Prayer Union	401
Reviews	401
Correspondence	403

DOMINANT ISRAEL AND HER COLONIES.

THERE comes to us from the Island of Corsica a short extract from some nameless French paper, without date and without special reference to the subject-matter of the article. It is sent us however as blind evidence of two things: that "the English" dominate over the Latin races in respect to their possession of Jersey, Gibraltar, and Malta (the portions of that race affected by these places being the French, the Spaniards and the Italians), and that the Mediterranean is an English Lake! The curious little extract is as follows:—

La race latine est la fille de la Méditerranée. La Méditerranée doit être un lac latin. Elle est assez large pour nous tous, pour Gênes, Barcelone et Marseille. Crispi ne veut pas qu'elle soit un lac francais, et il a raison; mais il veut qu'elle soit un lac anglais, et il a tort. Il est l'ami quand même de l'Anglais qui domine les Latins partout, la France à Jersey, l'Espagne à Gibraltar et l'Italie à Malte et il est l'ami et l'allié de l'Allemand comme de l'Anglais pour que le Rhin soit un fleuve allemand, comme la Méditerranée un lac anglais; bref, pour que l'étranger soit partout maître chez nous.

The above may be translated thus:—

"The Latin race is the daughter of the Mediterranean. The Mediterranean ought to be a Latin lake. It is large enough for us all, for Genoa, Barcelona and Marseilles. Crispi does not desire it should become a French lake, and he is right, but he wishes it to become an English lake, and he is wrong. He is even the friend of the English, who dominate the Latins everywhere—France at Jersey, Spain at Gibraltar, and Italy at Malta. He is also the friend and ally of the Germans, as of the English, that the Rhine may become a German river, as the Mediterranean an English lake—in short, that the alien may everywhere be the master of our home."

One cannot read the above without thinking of the power and gift of Israel's "Gates" and of the grace of God in making His people "the head and not the tail," "and high above all the nations of the earth," as promised in Deut. xxviii. 1, 13. The three spots mentioned are this nation's foreign Gates taken from the enemy and held by force against all comers (Gen. xxii. 17, R.V.). Jersey is a Gate of France, occupied by Great Britain since the time of the Norman Conquest; Gibraltar we took from Spain in 1704, and have held firmly ever since; Malta we took from France in 1800, though it is geographically a Gate which should belong to Italy. By these Gates we dominate the neighbouring lands and seas of the Latin nations, and that they acutely feel, as our journalist tacitly admits.

This blind testimony, coming from a French paper, and forwarded to us by a staunch British Anglo-Israelite now in Corsica on a visit, is strong corroboration of the truth of Scripture, coming from a foreign source. It describes to us three of the British Gates, telling us how they act as against our foreign neighbours; and they illustrate our case very clearly by declaring that the Gates in British hands confer on them the supremacy of that sea which ought to be the Latins', but really is Great Britain's! So far the domination of Israel over our Gentile Latin neighbours by virtue of the Gates. Let us now turn to the British Colonies and see what we can learn of their wondrous rise and present greatness to-day, as told us by the Free Church of Scotland in their leaflet issued on the subject on June 10, 1888. The statements which follow are wonderful in the extreme. They prove the greatness of Israel to God's glory, and that if she is a dominant Power in the Mediterranean, the Latin races being our judges, the Colonies of Britain bid fair to make us the rulers of the earth, since, according to Lord Rosebery, "we annually send a nation from us to colonize the world." Dr. Burns, the Convener, writes thus:—

During the present year, Australia, as a colony, has a sort of double Centenary to commemorate. It was in 1688 that Dampier, the celebrated navigator and buccaneer, discovered it and landed on its shores; and it was in 1788 that Captain Phillip, Commissioner from the British Government, planted there the British settlement. All that was then intended or expected from the "Plantation" was to provide a place of banishment for the surplus criminals of the old country—to turn it into a huge, capacious, open-air penitentiary or prison—no revenue being looked for! How stands the case now, in 1888? The penal colony (no longer penal) has expanded into the dimensions of an empire, with imperial revenues and more than imperial territories. From Sydney Cove, where it began, Australasia has developed into a country of three million square miles, with a public income of 20 millions, and a credit more than commensurate. It has a vast commerce, and a multitude of wealthy towns. Man for man, its inhabitants are wealthier than those of the mother country. Including New Zealand, its size is almost precisely that of the United States of America, and thirty times that of the United Kingdom. On the 26th January, one hundred years ago, Captain Phillip announced to an inattentive world, that "thenceforward the people of a little island in the Atlantic intended to own and govern a land in the South Pacific thirty times greater, and possibly fifty times richer, than their own."—These people have accordingly owned and governed it ever since.

Digitized by Google

And now, in looking forward, instead of backward, it remains to be seen what the use of that vast acquisition, to those who have acquired it, to the rest of the world, is to be. It belongs to politicians to speculate, and to statists to calculate, as to what it will have developed into, politically or commercially, when the next Centenary (1988) shall come round. But in the meantime, there need be no hesitation surely among Christian people in affirming that its real use to the rest of the world will depend on the conservation within it, as a colony or a confederation of colonies, of the Christianity which has made the mother country what it is, which, like salt, has both seasoned and conserved it; and on the faithfulness of the mother Churches, in caring for and endeavouring to cherish and keep alive the Christianity of their expatriated children. Gigantic as this work of Colonial Missions is, it is a work which must be done—of which the obligation to do it, not less, to say the least, than that of Missions to the heathen, is imperative, is paramount. "We annually send a nation from us to colonize the world," said Lord Rosebery on his return from Australia a few years ago. That saying was and is true. And not until Christian men learn to look as intelligently and as anxiously on the fact as statesmen do, will they be able to realise the vastness or the indispensableness of the enterprise; neither will the home Churches be stirred up in real earnest to do their bounden duty. It may be little, comparatively, which any one of the Churches by itself may be able to do; and all that our Church has done is still but little, in view of what remains to be done—of the destitution which every succeeding year discovers, while increasing the extent of it,—but were all the "littles" combined, were all the Churches, national or not national, to co-operate, each "doing what it could," the greatness of the work need not, should not, deter any of them from contributing its share, any more than the smallness of the sum which any individual member of the Church is able to contribute should either discourage him from the duty or deprive him of the privilege of offering it "free-willingly unto the Lord."

Dr. Burns, however, need be under no alarm in regard to the success of our Colonial Missions. They are under God's control, and He has decided that they shall succeed but not fail. We have the promise in Zech. x. 9, R.V., where the Lord says regarding Ephraim's colonial offspring, "sown among the peoples" of the world by God Himself, "I will sow them among the people, and they shall remember Me in far countries, and they shall live with their children, and shall return." They are His redeemed ones (ver. 8), and He promises them numerical increase, as if that were a blessing fit to be mentioned in close conjunction with redemption. "The gigantic work of Colonial Missions," therefore, is sure to be carried out successfully in God's own time and way, and there need be no anxiety about it. The God who gave us the vast Colonial Empire, and keeps on adding to it at the rate of "a nation every year," as Lord Rosebery rather figuratively puts it, is able to keep the spiritual life of the colonists alive by means of Colonial Missions, and He has accordingly given us ample encouragement in the prophecy of Zechariah that He will do so. To Him be all the praise!

In the Daily Telegraph, Sept. 4th, the following occurs:—"We continued to hold Calais as we now hold Gibraltar; not for offensive, but for defensive purposes—not to assert, far less to assist in prosecuting, a political claim, but merely to secure or strengthen our position on the sea."

Happiness consists in activity. Such is the constitution of our nature; it is a running stream, and not a stagnant pool.—Goode.

AN ENGLISH BISHOP AT BALLARAT, VICTORIA, GIVES BLIND EVIDENCE OF OUR IDENTITY.

In the Ballarat Courier, published at the Antipodes on May 24 last, we find the report of a lecture delivered there by an "English Bishop" (name not given), under the title "Rule Britannia"! The lecture teemed with "Identity points" which the speaker laid down, quite unconsciously that in so doing he was advancing proof of our Israelitish origin. We quote the report, and ask our readers to judge whether it was so or not. They will observe that the good Bishop strove all through to point to our nation's supremacy at sea, and what has come of it. Empire has come of it, and the dominion is kept up by our hold upon the Gates. The report of the Bishop's address appears in the Victorian paper in the following form:—

"RULE BRITANNIA."

The English Bishop divided his lecture on the above subject on Tuesday evening into three sections. In the first, he reminded his audience of the enormous dimensions and wealth of the British Empire—four times as populous as that of Rome at its greatest, thrice the area of the United States, a sixth of mankind, and almost of the globe, and still increasing mightily. Four-fifths of the commerce of the world was in Anglo-Saxon hands; the primacy in it rested with Britain and her American children, and seemed likely to remain there. Yet all this, as Professor Seeley had pointed out, was of recent growth. When Queen Elizabeth died, in 1603, England had not an inch of land outside England proper, and not even the beginning of a navy. The bishop then traced the progress of maritime discovery from the days of Columbus, De Gama, and Magellan, showing how they altered the centre of gravity of the world, reduced the importance of the Mediterranean peoples in favour of the ocean-bordering lands, and generated that race for oceanic supremacy between the latter, which intensified into a fierce duel, at last, between France and ourselves, and gave the rule of the waves to Britannia. In his second section the bishop traced the rise and fall of the oceanic power and influence of Portugal, Spain, Holland, and France. Most of them had even reconnoitred Australia long before ourselves. He dwelt particularly on the schemes of France for appropriating North America and India. Where was the maritime influence of these Powers now? Of what importance were either of them to-day in oceanic questions, compared with Britain? They quarrelled with one another, and by degrees wasted one another down, till France had humbled the others, and in her turn yielded to the true sovereign of the seas. Up to nearly the end of the seventeenth century, England had done little on the ocean. The defeat of the Armada in 1588—one notion of which expedition was the desire of Spain to crush the nascent sea power of England, and retain her monopoly in America—opened the eyes of our forefathers to the maritime possibilities of their country. After this, English colonial enterprise began. The bishop reviewed briefly the development of England's settlements in India, America, and Africa, but the eighteenth century found her far behind the other European powers. It was that century that brought her to the front. She became Britain now by union with Scotland and spent £7,000,000 a year on war during much of this period, piling up a colossal debt. But her rule of the waves was the result. In his third, and last section, the bishop sketched the wars of the eighteenth century, their causes and results, showing how the rule of the waves was the real issue underlying all other occasions of conflict. The seven years' war was a complicated and momentous struggle, and yielded disaster to France, and brilliant honour to Britain, in India and America, as well as Europe. We now hear of Clive, and Franklin, and Washington, and Wolfe, and Pitt. The wars of American independence was a time of aggrandisement for Britain rather than humiliation. We retained the north of North America, and had planted our race and our faith in the south of it before it separated from us, our loss in population being soon recouped in India and Australasia, while we dealt great blows to European rivals in the course of the struggle. The duel with Republican and Imperial France was then reviewed. Professor Seeley's luminous indication of the policy which dictated Napoleon's encroachments in Egypt, Portugal, Spain, Austria, and Russia, viz., his resolve to wrest back oceanic and colonial supremacy from Britain, giving special interest to the conclusion of the conflict, which sent him to his island prison to learn "Rule Britannia." Since Waterloo,

Digitized by Google

Spain and Portugal had lost their colonies, and while the rest withered, Britain had advanced in oceanic influence and would do so still, and surrender nothing, for her rule meant the benediction of mankind. Britain, with all her faults, loved righteousness. She once held slaves, but cast off slavery at tremendous sacrifice; once misgoverned India and Ireland, but when she became conscious of it, had set herself fully to redress their wrongs. After pointing out the folly of the programme of separation of Australia from the mother-country, and of claiming the title of "nation" for Victoria, the bishop traced the fitness of Britain for the splendid destiny Providence had assigned her, in the British character—its self-controlled intensity and its liberty-loving loyalty. Having illustrated this from political, social, and military events, the bishop assigned religious faith as the true strength of the British character. The Cross was inextricably interwoven in our national insignia, and with deep significance. So long as she ruled in the fear of God—ready for war, but hating it; grasping firmly her mighty possessions, but owning them a trust from the Almighty—Britannia's rule would remain the stablest thing in this unstable world.

We see thus, that the "English Bishop" notes that till A.D. 1603 the expansion of England had not begun, but that from that time God favoured us—"Israel's obedience," in fact, in casting off Rome and her errors, and in following the Lord's commands in regard to the Christian Passover Service, had commenced. Hence all blessings were poured on His people, who now have become a mighty nation surrounded by a veritable company of British-Israelite nations. The true sovereign of the seas ever since has been, and is, Great Britain; but she has only become so by reason of God's gift to her of the Gate, and of the success in war He has granted her for the last 300 years. The Bishop, though he sketched the growth of British power with a master's hand, was clearly quite in the dark as to why she was so distinguished by the Creator! He seemed to hint that it was because of her love of righteousness, and her hatred of slavery! But who gave her the love of righteousness? and why did she come to abhor slavery? These were God's good gifts to His chosen people Israel, as a reference to Isa. liv. 17 and lviii. 6—8, R.V., will show, and we may search the Bible through without finding that any other nation, quâ nation, was blessed with the like tokens of God's favour! "The stablest thing in this unstable world" the Bishop described to be Britannia's Rule, but only on condition that she ruled in the fear of God, and held her possessions fast as God's trustee. Rather we should say that God's faithfulness to His promises to Israel made our nation's political future sure and stable, because this nation is Israel, and we inherit all the Israelitish blessings since God, who cannot lie, made an oath to confer them all, for ever, upon Israel. The gold-miners of Ballarat would have been attentive hearers of the Bishop had he shewn them the truth, and attributed Britain's and Greater Britain's national greatness to the true cause, "Our Identity." His address was an exceedingly valuable one, however, and no doubt was deeply interesting to all who heard him.

One point of the Bishop's lecture requires a few words of comment. He declared, as a matter beyond dispute, that Britain's rule meant the benediction of mankind." Now the Bishop doubtless is acquainted with the Word of God far better than we are. He will of course be able to show that "the benediction of mankind" is reserved in these last days for a Gentile non-Israelite nation like ourselves? We confess we are unacquainted with any such text. We find on the contrary that over and over again God promised to Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and Israel, "and their seed for ever," that in them should all nations, families and kindreds of the world be blessed, and that "Israel should blossom and bud and fill the face of the world with fruit" (Gen. xxii. 18, xxviii. 14; Acts iii. 25; Isa. xxvii. 6, R.V.). Not a syllable occurs anywhere throughout the Scriptures to show that that commission has been cancelled and abrogated, or that the evangelising and blessing function has been transferred to any other race, even for five minutes of time, since the date of these glorious promises to Israel.

THE ISRAEL OF GOD, IN RELATION TO THE NATIONAL USE OF THE HARP.

By the Rev. Thomas Lowe, Stratford-on-Avon.

The harp is the most ancient, and perhaps the most expressive and elegant of all musical instruments. It was probably the first instrument attuned to harmony. The ancient Hebrews called the harp the pleasant harp, and used it, not only in their worship, but in their festivals and entertainments. King David danced when he played on the harp. So did the Levites. It was a light and portable instrument. Such instruments have been found among the ruins of Herculaneum. The harp is frequently mentioned in old Gælic poems, by a poetical phrase expressive of its nature and power, as tewd ciuil, "the strings of music." There are popular and national customs connected with its use, which descended successively to the Cambria, Britons, and the Anglo-Saxons.

The harp, or Scythian lyre, an instrument common to all the Celtæ, was probably the only one used by the Britons. Alfred the Great struck the tuneful harp with the hand of a master.

> "With harp of simple frame,
> But the notes were notes of flame
> Which it flung."

It certainly is no far-fetched theory or fancy to connect the national use of the harp in England, Scotland, Ireland, and Wales, especially in ancient times, with other customs which have obtained from time immemorial, which we may fairly assume to have had an Hebrew or Israelitish origin. We think of its power in the hands of David, "the sweet singer of Israel," and in the immortal strains of inspired Psalmody, of which it was the invariable accompaniment, kindling alike the battle's fire and the pure flame of the sublimest devotion. Its thrilling thrum shall yet be heard on the mountains of Israel, in the glad acclaim of the universal restoration of the House of Israel, and the glorious triumph of the King of Israel. "Praise Him with the psaltery and harp" (Psa. cl. 3). "David shall never want a man to sit upon the throne of the House of Israel" (Jer. xxxiii. 17). "As the host of heaven cannot be numbered, neither the sand of the sea measured, so will I multiply the seed of David, My servant, and the Levites that minister unto Me" (Jer. xxxiii. 22). No mere spiritual exegesis or theory can realise the true and full import of these sublime passages, which, apart from the high and supreme position of British-Israel, are meaningless.

IT IS THE LORD!

After the Lord Jesus Christ had risen from the dead He appeared to the apostles Simon Peter, Thomas, called Didymus, Nathanael of Cana, in Galilee, and to the sons of Zebedee, James and John, at the sea of Tiberias. Peter, the man of impulse and decided action, resolved to revert to his old manner of living, which he had given up three years ago at the bidding of Jesus, and he said, "I go a fishing." The others agreed to do the same, and entering a boat they worked all night; yet without success. But there was One watching them they did not recognise; One who saw in them the feeble nucleus of His future Church—even Jesus. He stood on the beach at dawn, and asked them, "Children, have ye ought to eat?" They answered Him, "No." "Cast the net on the right side of the boat and ye shall find," was the precept and the promise. They obeyed, and the result was a "take" so large, that they were not able to draw the net for the multitude of great fishes, one hundred and fifty and three (John xxi. 1—14, R.V.). The beloved disciple John saw "the sign," and knew its meaning at once. Multiplication and blessing was a habit of the Saviour he loved, and who loved him. Therefore, he recognised Him at once, and cried, "It is the Lord!" Miraculous interposition, and the miracle especially of an increase beyond all human calculation and emulation, of the benefit granted, sufficed to carry conviction to the mind of John, and he was satisfied at once that they were in the presence of the Saviour. "It is the Lord!" The rest too knew Him. "They durst not ask Him, who art Thou?" knowing that it was the Lord. What taught them? His appearance? That seemed to have undergone a change. Men did not at first sight appear to know Him after the resurrection. The two disciples walking to Emmaus were completely in the dark, and did not know Him till a familiar action betrayed Him to them. John, at the sea-beach, seems only to have arrived at the certainty that Jesus was before him when he saw Him miraculously causing the wonderful great draught of fishes in their net, full of great ones, one hundred and fifty and three. But what caused the Lord's interest in the fishing operations of these poor half-hearted disciples in their fruitless night of labour? Was He really interested in their success in mere fishing? Was He not rather regarding them as the first little company of "the fishers of men," who were to learn, and then teach their followers for all time, that they were to become catchers of men henceforth? In that sacred pursuit they were to expect long nights of painful, fruitless labour, with the certain prospect of a great harvest of souls "at the break of day." Then Jesus, standing on the beach, would teach them where to fish, and how; leading them to reap the mighty harvest of souls for Him; so many, that the gospel net would seem like to break by reason of the multitude of great fishes they would take for Christ. This one miracle of the multitude of fishes proved to the beloved disciple that his Lord was there. The vastly greater miracles which the Lord is working before men's eyes now fail to convey to them in any way that "It is the Lord!" That event which is the precursor of His own coming, and towards which all history and all providences are converging; namely, the discovery of the Ten-Tribed House of Ephraim-Israel, is of no interest at all to the successors of the apostolic teachers in the ministry as a rule! Seeing the miracles He is performing, standing on the shores of time, they gaze, but find no reason to cry with St. John, "It is the Lord!" For instance, they see a people rapidly emerging from the nations who only 300 years ago—in Queen Elizabeth's day—were not five millions in number, but now are 37½ millions strong. They see the same race becoming abnormally wealthy—strong in outland possessions—owning fifty-six separate Governments, Colonies, or dependencies abroad, where 300 years ago they had not one! They note that they are the owners of the Gates of the world, and therefore supreme at sea; that their Heathen Empire is the largest in the world, and their Colonial Empire is nothing less than a Federation of daughter-nations in the four quarters of the globe, each gladly owning the sovereignty of the Queen of England. Yet, noting all these things, which are patent to the veriest school-boy, our modern teachers and scientists cannot perceive with St. John that "It is the Lord" whose hand is giving all this to the British, nor do they guess "the reason why." But we can tell them; and give them, besides, cause to praise the Lord for His faithfulness to "our forefather Abraham and his seed for ever!"

Digitized by Google

The wonders that they see in modern times are God's good gifts to Israel, according to the prophecies. The British are Israel, and therefore, to qualify them in their work of fishers of men, feeders of Jesus' sheep and lambs, He gives them nationally multitudinousness—mighty possessions—a Colonial Empire of federated nations, wealth abnormal, commerce bewildering in volume to feed that wealth; a stable monarchy; a safe island home; the Gate of their enemies, carrying the supremacy of the sea; the love of souls; the missionary spirit; intense veneration for the Word of God; the desire to propagate it, and the gospel as well, "to all nations, families, and kindreds of the earth," love for the ten true laws of God the witnessing function, and the repeated baptism of the Holy Spirit of God. These great and mighty signs, true gifts of God, men of the present day see and note, proclaim in sermons, in books, and in the newspapers of the day as facts, but are blind to the cause, that "It is the Lord!" and that these are certain proofs that Ephraim, the holder of the birthright, is before the world, disguised as perhaps the Saviour was, but readily and easily detected by the signs He has put upon that House abundantly, according to the Scriptures and to their prophetic teaching! May the day soon come when men like the beloved apostle will multiply around us, and seeing our nation's signs, cry aloud at the discovery of Israel, that "the Second Advent is at hand;" that "it is the Lord," who, being present, is testifying to the national resurrection of His people, prior to His own manifestation in glory to reign over His ancients gloriously in Jerusalem, and in Mount Zion, according to our prophet Isaiah (xxiv. 23, R.V.). To Him let Israel therefore give all the praise!

HEBREW GENTILES.

By the Rev. Denis Hanan, B.D.

The inaccurate knowledge betrayed by thousands who imagine that if they know anything well it is Old Testament History, which becomes apparent when we hear or read such words as "The Jewish Church under Moses," "the conquest of Canaan by the Jews," "Abraham was a Jew," &c., &c., phrases repeated by so many writers that it would be tedious to enumerate them, statements accepted by numberless readers and hearers without the slightest recognition of their inaccuracy, or of the fact that it would be just as correct to say the Danite or the Gadite church under Moses, or the conquest of Canaan by Manasseh, or that Noah was a Jew—this inaccurate knowledge shows itself again and again in the popular conception of that which constitutes the position of those whom we speak of as Gentiles.

Common answers to the question: Who are the Gentiles? are, "All are Gentiles who are not Jews." Another "All are Gentiles except the descendants of Abraham." Another, "All who are not in the circumcision covenant." Now there is a certain amount of truth in all these definitions, but I submit that they are mischievously inaccurate, and that they are a fruitful cause of the difficulty which is experienced by those who desire to shew that God's mercy to Gentiles is but the development of His covenant with Abraham.

The commonly used words "Gentile" and "Jew" are misleading. The word ethnos, translated Gentile, is more properly given by nation, and this sense of the word ought never to be lost sight of. In the Revised Version the marginal note at the place where the word first occurs (Matt. iv. 15) is "Greek, nations; and so elsewhere," and it is so translated at Matt. xxi. 43 and elsewhere. The Hebrew word "Goi," a collective body, is rendered Gentile about thirty times, and "nation" hundreds of times in the Authorised Version, in the Revised Version more frequently "nation," but, sometimes "Gentile," with the marginal note "nation." The invariable contrast in Holy Scripture is that between the nation and the nations, i.e., between Israel and the non-covenant peoples.

There were certain of Abraham's descendants who were and are reckoned Gentiles, viz., Ishmaelites and those sprung from Keturah. Again, circumcised sons of Abraham in the line of Isaac are Gentiles, viz., Esau's descendants; while the sons of Jacob were uncircumcised during forty years and yet were God's nation.

To arrive at a right understanding it will be necessary for us to use the term nations instead of Gentile. And inasmuch as that the tribe of Judah (and especially that small portion of it represented by the 42,000 who returned from Babylon) does not constitute the whole Abrahamic race, we must substitute the term Hebrew nation for Jew. Again, we have to limit the extension of the term Hebrew, for, as we have seen, all of Heber's or of Abraham's descendants did not form the "My nation," nor did all of Isaac's; thus we come to him who was a Prince with God. In Jacob, and in his descendants alone, we find the nucleus of the "My nation" to which was given the inheritance of promise, multitude, power, wealth, empire, and federation. We will think more accurately when we finally use the word Israelite nation instead of Jew. Thus we place in contrast the nation and the nations.

Digitized by Google

Here we have to grasp clearly this further fact, viz., that one part of the birthright blessing given to a part of the nation was that it should become the fulness of the nations. Therefore we are not safe in assuming that peoples apparently nations, are in reality to be reckoned as such. How then are we to know the covenant people from all others? Here probably we shall be met by the statement that circumcision and the observance of the Levitical law, combined, i.e., the covenant entered into just before the passage of the Jordan, is the distinguishing mark; and that as the descendants of the restoration under Ezra are those alone who fulfil these conditions, they alone are the nation. The difficulties in which this position involves those who assume it, are many and great.

1st. The rejection by the Jews of Christ is the cause of their becoming and remaining the alone inheritors of Israel's blessing.

2nd. The reception of Christianity and the consequent disuse of the rite of circumcision is the cause of cutting off from the Abrahamic stock!

3rd. The promise of being a nation and a company of nations can never be fulfilled in a Christian people!

4th. The New Covenant in Christ overthrows and does not confirm the promises to Israel! It will, I think, be seen, without further explanation, that these results must follow, and that they are directly opposed to distinct Bible statements. Need I pursue this matter further, or may I not assume that this way of solving the difficulty will be given up?

There must be some other way of discovering the nation. It is with reluctance that I introduce what is really a ludicrous suggestion into a serious discussion, but we are sometimes solemnly told that the nose is the distinguishing mark. That because some of the tribe of Judah have a peculiar cast of countenance, all the descendants of Jacob must be thus recognised! and this although Joseph's children must have been unlike their kindred, and have been tribally distinct from them for ninety generations! Surely there must be some more satisfactory reply?

Our task is to learn from Holy Scripture how the covenant nation and company of nations is to be distinguished from the nations. This we boldly say can only be done by learning the nature of the blessings entailed upon Israel obedient, and finding the people that possess them, if any do so possess them. Until the blessings are developed to their fullest extent we cannot possess complete evidence, but their partial fulfilment can be used as a most trustworthy clue by those who desire to know. The non-fulfilment in years past of the sign is evidence that God did not mean the people to be recognised earlier in the world's history.

It is for us in the light of the present day to distinguish "the nation." In the latter days it must be found:—

1. A Christian nation (Hos. i. 10).
2. Possessing, since A.D. 70, the Kingdom of God (Matt. xxi. 43).
3. Blossoming, and budding, and filling the world with fruit, (a missionary nation—Isa. xxvii. 6).
4. A nation and company of nations (Gen. xxxv. 11).
5. Allied to a great people (Gen. xlviii. 19).
6. Multitudinous (as the sand and stars—Hos. i. 10).
7. Wealthy (lending and not borrowing—Deut. xxviii. 12).
8. Powerful (possessing the Gates—Gen. xxii. 17).
9. Dwelling in a place free from invasion, where they have renewed their strength (2 Sam. vii. 10; Isa xli. 1).
10. Sabbath-keeping (Ezek. xx. 12).
11. Witnesses for God (Isa. xliii. 10).
12. Yet declared to be not God's people (Hos. i. 10).
13. A maritime people (Isa. xviii. 1).
14. Peopling the world (Deut. xxxiii. 17).
15. Ready to repossess the land of Palestine from the North and West (Jer. iii. 18; Hos. xi. 10).

There are many other signs, but fifteen may suffice. It was a cause of marvel to Joseph's brethren when they observed that they were placed at his table the eldest according to his birthright, and the youngest according to his youth. It was one million to one that no stranger could have so placed them. Joseph may now be known by an inverse process. He must possess all the signs: but possessing them, it would be folly to deny his identity. The nation that exhibits these marks is thereby distinguished from the nations. We point to one race in which all are apparent, and we defy anyone to name another. We say this is the nation, Ephraim-Israel, Hebrew-Gentile, as foretold they would be, British-Christians as the evidence proves them to be. None but the blind can deny that if the case as stated is true, the deduction is necessary. And it is but shirking the question to fall back upon linguistic and geographical difficulties. But difficulties they are not, as any candid study will demonstrate.

We hold up to the light of the Inspired Book, to the light of present day fact, to the light of unprejudiced judgment, these fifteen signs, and we ask for any other rational deduction than that which we suggest.

It is of course open to objectors to say that these signs do not belong to Israel, or that they are not manifested to-day by the Anglo-Saxon race. Let them prove their statements; or try to do so if in blissful ignorance that others have tried and been refuted. But until they overthrow the position, it is, to say the least, unwise in them to deny the statement that the nation can be and has been distinguished from the nations.

PSALMS XXII., XXIII., AND XXIV.; AND ISAIAH LIII., LIV. AND LV.

HAVE our readers ever noticed the parallelism between Psa. xxii.,—xxiv. and Isa. liii.,—lv.? It appears to us there is a distinct resemblance between the two passages, and the same Spirit having dictated them, what wonder is it if the same subject is treated by two different human but inspired agents in a similar manner? Let us explain our meaning,—referring to the latter prophet, Isaiah, first.

In chapter liii., as we all know, we have depicted, first, "Christ crucified,"—the despised and rejected of men—the Man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief; carrying Israel's grief; bruised for our iniquities; stricken for the transgression of the Lord's people; cut off out of the land of the living; making His grave with the wicked, and with the rich in His death. Him it pleased the Lord to bruise! He hath put Him to grief; His soul was made the offering for sin, and He saw His seed, and the pleasure of the Lord prospered in His hand. The vicarious sufferings of Christ for Israel, His people, are clearly portrayed in this chapter, and the justification He wrought out for many, bearing their iniquities, throughout the whole world, is plainly described.

This entire chapter of Isaiah being devoted to the history of Christ's sacrifice, and of His mediatorial work for His people, and for the world at large (a work sufficient for all men—but efficient for the elect, and them alone, as yet), the next chapter takes up quite another subject. Chapter liv. of Isaiah deals with the condition and future work of Ten-Tribed Israel, that is, of the British nation. She is addressed as the barren wife; travails with child, to whom it is given, after Christ's sufferings and resurrection, to sing, to cry aloud for joy, and to increase, in such wise, that her children shall be more than Judah's, the married wife's, and she would therefore need to "enlarge the place of her tent, and stretch forth the curtains of her habitation; lengthening her cords, strengthening her stakes, spreading abroad on the right hand and on the left," possessing the nations and making the desolate cities to be inhabited. Great and glorious are her promises that follow, and the splendid cadenzory ends with a temporal and a spiritual blessing, too, unique in the Word of God, and perfectly priceless.

Digitized by Google

The first mentioned is a temporal blessing, "No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper. No tongue that shall rise against thee, to condemn thee, shall succeed." The spiritual blessing is like it; for it declares that this shall be the heritage of the servants of Jehovah (that is of Israel), and that her righteousness (wondrous promise!) should assuredly be the Lord's! (v. 17). A people so blessed, so armed, so formed, and so created, must indeed have a splendid destiny and occupation. What could it possibly be? Chapter lv., the very next one in order, tells us.

There is described Israel's blessed, God-given work of world-wide beneficence. Their message to all mankind, on God's behalf, is there distinctly enunciated, and dictated to this people to proclaim. Here is what they are told to publish: "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters; and he that hath no money, come ye, buy and eat; yea, come, buy wine and milk, without money and without price." To the end of the 11th verse the message from the God of Israel is put into Israel's mouth to preach and to proclaim to the whole creation; and the promise that should accompany the Evangelists is the burden of verses 12, 13. This is in strict conformity with the announcement in John iii. 16, "God so loved the world," and the promise that follows is contained in Matt. xxviii. 19, 20, R.V., "Lo I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world. Amen."

Such is the burden of the triad of chapters in Isaiah. 1st, we have Christ crucified. 2nd, the blessedness of Ten-Tribed Israel, in consequence of that event; and 3rd, redeemed Israel's work of evangelisation to the world at large.

We may now turn to the corresponding three Psalms we have named, the xxii., xxiii., and xxiv., and see if the same ideas are not portrayed by the sweet Psalmist of Israel, under the guidance of the Spirit.

In Psa. xxii., R.V., we have, as all allow, a Messianic Psalm, describing the crucifixion with great profusion of detail. From verses 1 to 21 we have the picture of Christ's sufferings, ending with the Lord's cry for deliverance (v. 20):—

"Deliver My soul from the sword,
"My darling from the power of the dog.
"Save Me from the lion's mouth,
"Yea, from the horns of the wild oxen Thou hast heard Me."

The following verse, 22, indicates for whom this great sacrifice was primarily made:—

"I will declare Thy name unto my brethren,
"In the midst of the congregation will I praise thee.
"Ye that fear the Lord, praise Him,
"All ye seed of Jacob, glorify Him,
"And stand in awe of Him, all ye the seed of Israel."

The latter part of the Psalm pictures the conversion of the heathen, and seems to point to "the seed that shall serve Him" as the blessed instrumentality whereby the heathen shall be benefited (verses 27 to 31).

Psalm xxiii. is one which is precious to the saints of the Lord. It is one which David appropriates to himself, and every individual believer in Christ has rejoiced in it ever since; especially when passing through or near the valley of the shadow of death (or the deep darkness). Will any one deny that a Psalm spoken by David, appropriated by himself, and after him by every tried or dying believer since, cannot and must not be applied to the expatriated outcast nation—Ephraim-Israel of the Ten Tribes? We think every verse can be, and should be, applied also to the lost sheep of the House of Israel, converted to their Lord, and testifying to Him after their redemption.

Verses 1 to 4 have a plain and obvious application to their lost and restored condition. Verses 5 and 6 tell of their triumph over their temporal enemies, and of the time when they were to be "the head and not the tail, above only and not beneath," and "high above all the nations of the earth" (Deut. xxviii. 1—13). They were, and are, the Lord's anointed ones (Psa. cv. 15; Isa. x. 27), whose cup runneth over as it is this day: whom goodness and mercy have followed all the days of the nation's life, and who will dwell in the House of the Lord Jehovah for ever (ver. 6, Psa. xxiii.). If that application of the Psalm be also admissible, which we do not doubt, then Psa. xxiv. follows in a beautiful order. It takes up the case of the earth and world at large. These belong to the Lord, and all that dwell therein are His (v. 1). So their righteousness and holiness must be made known, and to them the blessing of the Lord must be administered, with the righteousness from the God of the world's salvation (ver. 5, John iii. 16). The description of the Lord Jesus Christ, as the King of glory, concludes the Psalm, and all praise, and power, and glory, and might, are ascribed to Him as the King of glory and the Lord of Hosts (verses 7—10). In that ascription it is the privilege and duty of British-Israel to join, for they are Israel, and their King is the Lord of Hosts—even Jehovah-Jesus—the King of glory!

MR. W. HINDLE'S LECTURE IN YARMOUTH.

THE Yarmouth Gazette published on July 21st last the report of a lecture delivered by Mr. W. Hindle, of that town, which deserves a place also in the BANNER OF ISRAEL. The address was mainly designed to answer the Rev. M. Baxter, who is very zealous in propagating his views of prophecy, involving the destruction of the British Empire, as we know it now, the separation of Ireland, India, and the colonies, from the Queen's dominions, and the general humiliation of our country by some combination of foreign Powers which are to be confederated by the Antichrist. Mr. Baxter, however, does not recognize the House of Israel anywhere in the earth, and does not see, we suppose, the distinction between Israel and Judah, either in the Scriptures, or in modern history. He is bound, therefore, to be wrong in his interpretation of God's Word, and in his reading of modern history. Mr. W. Hindle set out in his lecture to answer Mr. Baxter. The newspaper account probably does not give a very clear or accurate report of what was said; but it points to the arguments which ought to silence our opponents. We wish Mr. Baxter could be answered in every town he visits for lecturing purposes, in order that his errors may be corrected, and interest in Our Identity awakened. Mr. Hindle's lecture was reported thus:—

BRITAIN'S DESTINY.

The popular interest is always exceedingly keen upon matters affecting our national safety, and this was strikingly manifested on Thursday evening, when the large Assembly Rooms, at the Town Hall, was filled on the occasion of a lecture, under the above title, which was delivered by Mr. W. Hindle. Amongst those present were the Rev. W. E. Sharpley, E. Hall, Capt. Aldrich, R.N., etc.

In the course of an exceedingly interesting lecture, in which he endeavoured to expose the errors in the teachings of Mr. Baxter, recently given utterance to at the Aquarium, Mr. Hindle referred at some length to the prophecies in the Bible, which, he contended, conclusively proved in every respect that the House of Israel, so often mentioned, was none other than Great Britain. He then proceeded to explain the fulfilment of Jeremiah's prophecies, respecting the Jews, who had suffered all manner of persecutions, from the peoples of the earth, ever since their dispersement, and after entering at some length upon the various passages in the Scriptures, bearing upon the question, he ably compared the great similarity between the Anglo-Saxon race and the prophecies relating to Israel. The British, he observed, were as surely the direct descendants of Israel as the Jews were of the House of Judah. Their historians told them that the early Britons came from Medea seven centuries before Christ, and the fact that it was thither that the House of Israel were led captive, about that time, was a strong argument in favour of that assertion (hear). Then again the position of Britain corresponded precisely with the position that Israel was to occupy, as foretold in the Bible. Their increase in population had no parallel upon the earth. She was to be a wealthy nation, and the invaders' scourge was never to reach her shores, and with all these prophecies Britain corresponded exactly. After tracing the early settlers in Ireland to be fugitive Israelites, through subsequent generations, Mr. Hindle remarked that he came to the definite conclusion that Victoria, England's most honoured Sovereign, was the direct descendant of King David. Israel, they were told, was to dwell in safety, she was to be unconquerable, and up to the present had not Britain enjoyed that proud privilege? That year they celebrated the defeat of the Spanish Armada, and 300 years ago that very evening that powerful fleet was threatening England's shores. Nothing could exceed the marvellous deliverance then wrought by the Almighty, and every day they might observe similarly equal great deliverances in which the hand of God was unmistakably apparent. Although nearly the whole of Europe had been allied against Britain, although nation upon nation had envied and tried to rob her of her proud position, yet the devastating foot of the invader had never harmed her. They did not pretend to attribute it to their physical supremacy, but they recognised the presence of their God, who had protected them according to His blessed promise. So when Mr. Baxter had predicted that the Mount of Israel should soon be laid low, and that in three years' time England should be conquered by France, they unhesitatingly replied that he was wrong. In referring to the prophecy of Mr. Baxter respecting the two last wars, the lecturer remarked that it was his firm opinion that England would never be subject to France (applause). In the first war, doubtless the Jews would be driven forth from the nations of Europe, and the daily events as chronicled in their newspapers went far to convince them of this. Then Turkey would probably be disposed of, and in accordance with the Scriptures, when Turkey fell, Palestine would take her place. Mr. Baxter in his lecture had started badly, and had founded his theory upon bad principles (hear), and from his standpoint he had given the best exposition in his power. Mr. Baxter and men of his way of thinking, stretched the Scriptures to fit in with their far-fetched notions, but the lecturer believed if they accepted the simple truths, trustfully, no uneasiness would ever exist in their minds. After ably dealing with the many important points of similarity between Israel and Britain, and ably explaining the many prophecies bearing on the same, the lecturer concluded his instructive remarks with an earnest appeal to his hearers to give greater attention to their Bibles. Containing as it did inestimable spiritual blessing, it should be their constant study, but when they found written in its pages of history, the past, present and future of their country, which was very dear to their hearts as Englishmen, it at once became the most interesting book they had. (Applause).

Digitized by Google

A hearty vote of thanks was accorded to the lecturer for his carefully prepared address, which terminated the proceedings.

The lecture, no doubt covered the whole ground, and the spiritual as well as the temporal and earthly blessings of our nation were shown to be those God reserved especially for the seed of Abraham for ever. It is this point which it is so impossible for the sceptic and unbeliever to get over. Our position in the world to-day is unique. But it exactly corresponds with that destined for the people of Israel as distinguished from Judah, in the Word of God. The Scriptures have been written and published among men for nearly 3,500 years, and the atheist therefore has to account for the fact that predictions announced thirty centuries ago at least, are gradually being unfolded and fulfilled in one modern race only, but in no other, point answering to point, each jot, each tittle being exactly reproduced in the British people alone. How can this be accounted for? If the correspondence were in two or three points only, coincidence and fortuitous agreement might be allowed as the true explanation. But here we have magnificent events of the most wondrous character, agreeing in all particulars with prophetic statements in fifty or sixty instances; the majority of such being of world-wide interest, affecting the well-being of nations, and changing the aspect of the whole planet. Israel was represented in the Scriptures as destined to appear in the latter days, as a multitudinous, island, western nation, wealthy, powerful, at sea especially, possessors of the Gates, and consequently of the supremacy of the sea as well, having a mighty Heathen Empire, and a colonial dominion of federated nations, unique in the history of the world, "lending to many nations, borrowing from none," protecting all comers to her island home, invincible and invulnerable there; blessed in their city, their cattle, sheep, and kine, their fields, their baskets, and their stores, high above all nations in war, "The head and not the tail, above only and not beneath them all," honourers and distributors of the Word of God, world-wide missionaries, respecters of the Sabbath instituted by the triune Jehovah, and of the ten true laws He gave to them to keep on Sinai; subjects of the Holy Spirit's outpouring, "dwelling alone" among the nations, and "not reckoning themselves" as part of their number, because of the dwelling of the Lord God of Israel in their midst; thus constituting them His people, and Him their God. These and other British possessions and blessings, are in truth God's good gifts to Israel, as may be seen by such texts as the following, which the reader is requested to verify by turning to the Word of God, namely, Gen. xlix. 1, 22—26, Gen. xxii. 17, xxviii. 14, Hosea i. 10, Zech. x. 6—9, Jer. xxxi. 10—36, Deut. xv. 6, Psa. cxi. 6, ii. 8. Isa. xlix. 8, Gen. xlviii. 19, 2 Sam. vii. 10, Isa. lvi. 6—8, Deut. xxviii. 1—13, Isa. xxvii. 6, Psa. cxlvii. 19, 20, Gen. xxviii. 14, Acts iii. 25, Exod. xxxi. 13—17, Deut. vi. 6—9, Numb. xxiii. 9, Exod. xxxiii. 16, all R.V.

Such being the case and God's promises, made on oath to Israel exclusively, being fulfilled literally, in every instance recorded, in the British people exclusively, we are tied up to the logical conclusion, which the atheist and sceptic cannot avoid, namely, that there is a God; that the British are "His people Israel" blessed as He said He would bless them in the Scriptures of truth; and are thus constituted His honoured "witnesses" (Isa. xliii. 10—12, xliv. 8, R.V.).

We trust Mr. Hindle will continue his labour of love, and strive earnestly to teach his fellow townsmen the mighty truths he sees so clearly himself, to the praise and the glory of Him who describes Himself by His everlasting name, the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, the Lord God of the Hebrews, the God of Israel (Exod. iii. 15, 18, Psa. xli. 13, cvi. 48, R.V.)

THE SANCTUARY.

"ALTHOUGH I have cast them far off, yet will I be to them as a little sanctuary in the countries where they shall come" (Ezek. xi. 16).

Hos. xi. 10. A Sanctuary in the West,
With sullen waves surrounded,
Which hostile host may not molest,
But, baffled, flee astounded.
This, God in ages past decreed,
In ages past He founded,
And there doth Israel, ransomed, freed,
Display His love unbounded.

Isa. xxiv. 15. A Sanctuary in the Isles,
From terror separated,
To guard His people from the wiles
Of them her soul that hated.
This, God in ages past decreed,
In ages past created;
And there supplies her every need
With mercy unabated.

Jer. iii. 18. A Sanctuary in the North,
By rocky bulwarks fended,
Where peace may dwell in midst of wrath,
And prayer with song be blended.
This, God in ages past decreed,
In ages past hath friended;
And there, O Israel's favoured seed,
Let praises rise unended!

J. G. TAYLOR.

Digitized by Google

SOME OBJECTIONS AND HOW THEY ARE ANSWERED.

A CLERICAL friend of our cause was during this summer at the seaside, and one day strolled for two hours up and down the esplanade of the town he was visiting, with an astute middle-aged cleric. To the latter our friend opened the subject of Our Identity; but he had scarcely heard of the idea! On the whole he thought "the Ten Tribes had never been lost; and wondered where they could possibly be looked for now if they were a lost peop'e"? Besides, he added, "even if they could be identified, what use would it be"? In reply to the first question, as to where the Tribes were now, our friend startled his questioner a good deal, when he involuntarily stretched out his hand towards the thousands of people who crowded the esplanade and beach, all joyous in the sunshine and the breeze, and said, "There they are, in some part! How do you account for our nation's prosperity, wealth, power, expansion, &c., otherwise than on the supposition that they are enjoying, as Israel, all the unconditional promises of God to the patriarchs, and to the prophets who succeeded them"? Our friend then opened to his doubting companion some of Oxonian's facts and inferences (of which the cleric had never heard), and on the 2nd point (unconditional promises), he mentioned Tom Paine to him as the representative of a class our subject silences. All this impressed the clerical opponent, who accepted some literature ("Facts and Probabilities" being given him). It is hoped that this conversation may have a good effect, and that the clergyman, a Scot, with a "hard-headed congregation of Scotch Episcopalians," may at last embrace our views himself, and impart them to his flock.

Another illustration occurs to us; and the objector again is a Baptist minister, the illustrious and eloquent Mr. C. H. Spurgeon. He wrote lately, it appears, in reviewing some of our Anglo-Israel literature, thus:—

"We regard the theory as a sheer piece of romance. We are not Jews. Abraham is ignorant of us, and Sarah acknowledges us not."

With Mr. Spurgeon's objections we are of course all familiar. But we do wonder that one so clear-headed and so able in all he deals with, should persist in driving his head against a stone wall, and continue to condemn a subject of which he has not taken the trouble even to learn the rudiments! His remark "that we are not Jews" is a truism which no one denies, and no Anglo-Israelite can fail to support. "We are not Jews," but we are "Israelites, who are not Jews."

Mr. Spurgeon evidently is yet ignorant of the elementary Biblical fact that "while all Jews are Israelites, not all the Israelites were or are Jews." Had he lived in Jeroboam's time he would have learnt the fact from experience. The two Houses were then Houses of pure Israelites; but only one of them was of Judah; and was called first by the name of "Jews," somewhere about B.C. 742 (2 Kings xvi. 6), when the Ten-Tribed captivity was ready to commence. All the tribes were tribes of Israelites; but ten of them were Israelites only, not Jews; the other two were "Jews" as well as "Israelites." This lesson, which is an elementary one, every schoolboy ought to know, but the great Spurgeon is unaware of it even yet! He quotes a part of Isa. lxiii. 16, and introduces Sarah's name in a new but unscriptural connection! "Doubtless thou art our Father, though Abraham be ignorant of us, and Israel acknowledge us not," are God's words, which verses 17 to 19 show are applicable to the Ten Tribes of God's inheritance, outcasted from God's sanctuary and under His displeasure then. They prove our point; but they cannot, garbled as the preacher quotes them, prove anything against us. Mr. Spurgeon regards our views as a "sheer piece of romance." The history is God's romance, no doubt! His wondrous drama; whose final act has not even yet been played out! But Mr. Spurgeon condemns without inquiry, and without knowledge; and his condemnation, therefore, cannot avail in the smallest degree to damage our case.

Our next opponent is a clergyman again. This time a Tasmanian pastor, whose paper, "The Pioneer," of July, 1888, just forwarded to us from Launceston, shall tell its own tale. In the "pastor's column," devoted to the subject of ministerial successes, conversions, lectures, church work, and the like, the following occurs:—

On Friday evenings prophetic lectures have been largely attended owing to the discussion of the Anglo-Israel theory, by which it is sought to establish that the British nation are the descendants of the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel, and that to us, as Englishmen, all the promises of God made to Israel are being fulfilled. We fail to see that any valid proof has yet been established, and while endorsing much that our friends assert, with regard to the truth of the Scripture, the Restoration of the Land of Palestine to the nation of Israel, the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ the second time to set up the kingdom, and many other points, we think that they have forestalled the prophecies to Israel by applying them to the British nation. It is most important in considering this subject to understand this prophecy of Genesis x., with regard to the sons of Noah. It is considered by all the great historians and students of the history of languages, that the races now dominating Europe can be traced back to Japhet. The "seed of Abraham" or the descendants of Shem, are therefore a distinct race from the descendants of Japhet. We have not as yet seen any proofs that the English, Danes, Germans, Swedes, and French are descended from Shem, and this is the first and most important link in the chain of evidence. We desire only to know the truth of God, and to yield at once every opinion that may be proved contrary to Scripture. We shall continue our Friday evening course of lectures, and hope they may still prove helpful in opening up Bible Truth.

Our Tasmanian Pastor, no doubt is an excellent, godly, humble man; serving God with all his heart, and desiring to honour His word, whatever may be the result. His verdict is, that Gen. x. shows the European races generally were descended from Japheth, the son of Noah, and as the philologists also do not class our language as a Semitic tongue, therefore, (oh the power of Tasmanian non sequiturs!) "therefore" the British people, who came to their Islands between B.C. 200 and A.D. 1066, cannot be Israelites! He might just as well say that he and all his fellow British-subjects in Tasmania must be Australian blacks, because it is well known Tasmania was originally peopled by a black race from time immemorial! And as to language, he might just as reasonably affirm that the Jews who returned from Babylon after the captivity were not all Hebrew because many did not understand the Hebrew tongue! (Nehem. xiii. 23, 24; Ezra viii. 8). He fails to see that if Japheth's sons originally peopled Europe it does not follow they stopt there! Besides, as a Pastor, he ought to know, that if the British exclusively enjoy, as they do enjoy to-day all the blessings which God swore to bestow upon "Abraham and his seed forever" exclusively, then the British must be Israel, unless God's faithfulness and truth have failed, which is impossible! Gen. ix. 26, 27, ought to convince our Tasmanian "Pastor" that he is wrong and we are right. For God there promised to "dwell in the tents of Shem" but not in those of Japheth. He "dwells" now in manifest blessing with the British nation, and therefore they must be of Shem, "since the Scripture cannot be broken."

The pastor, mistaking our case or accepting the Rev. R. Douglas' "Teutonic or Gothic theory," for the truth, desires, before he can believe, to find "proofs that the English, Danes, Germans, Swedes, and French, are descended from Shem!" He will never find such evidence anywhere, nor is it needed to prove our case. We allege, according to the Scriptures, that the various emigrants from the nationalities which ostensibly went to constitute the British nation, came out from among the Danes, the Germans, the Swedes, the Franks; but being Israelites, were not of those Gentile races at all, but only for a time were "mingled with them." Just so now the Jews to-day are mingled with all nations, and are spoken of as German, Russian, French, Arabian and other Jews, mingled with these races, but destined yet to be "gathered" out of them. The Jews are known as such in their mingled state. Israel was unknown to all, save God, while yet "mingled" with all these nations; but when the time came He "gathered and assembled them" out of their foreign companionships and brought them to their appointed place in Britain (Ezek. xi. 16, 17; Amos ix. 9; 2 Sam. vii. 10, R.V.). The Tasmanian Pastor desires to know the truth and act upon it. We trust these few suggestions will meet his eye, and will lead him to conclude that Our Identity has God's glory for its aim, and demands his adhesion, to the praise of His Lord's wisdom, and truth and faithfulness!

Digitized by Google

"THE NORFOLK CHRONICLE AND NORWICH GAZETTE."

THE following appeared in the above journal on September 8th, in response to an intimation from a local friend that a temperate letter from some authoritative party on the Identity would be acceptable to the Editor. We suppose it will elicit a reply from some of our opponents; and then a profitable discussion may possibly ensue:—

THE ISRAELITISH ORIGIN OF THE BRITISH PEOPLE.

SIR,—Being informed that you would not be unwilling to open your columns to a temperate discussion of the question of "the Israelitish Origin of the British Nation," I should be glad if the following observations on the subject proved acceptable.

The foundation of the question, which cannot be treated apart from the Holy Scriptures, is the Scriptural distinction between the two Houses of Israel and Judah. Our plea is that the British Folk are the flesh and blood descendants of the Ten Tribes or House of Ephraim, alias Joseph, alias Israel—but not of the Jews, who belong to the House of Judah. The two Houses were separated in the days of Rehoboam, the son of Solomon, as 1 Kings xii. 16—19 tells us, and they have never been re-united since. The Kingdom of Samaria or Israel was carried into captivity to Assyria, and thence they did not return with the Babylonian Captivity of the Jews, as can be proved. The "Captivity" of the Ten Tribes, that is its banishment from the Holy Land, continued till the days of Josephus, for he tells us in 'Antiquit,' xi. 5, 2, that in his days (A.D. 93) the Ten Tribes were in separation from the two, and were still "an immense multitude there beyond the Euphrates." In the 5th century, A.D., all trace of these tribes ceased historically, and we hear no more of them. Scripture assures us, however, that they cannot be finally destroyed as a people, because they are destined yet, in the future, to be re-united to the Jews, and so to form once more, in the Land of Promise, a United Kingdom and people to the glory of God. The following texts will establish that point:—Jer. iii. 18; Hosea i. 10, 11; Ezek. xxxvii. 15—28, Isa. xviii. 1, 7; Zeph. iii. 9, 10. The question then arises, what became of the Ten Tribes last heard of in their Central Asian "Captivity"? They did not remain in their "House of Bondage," for no trace of them remains there now. They left it, probably, when the Roman Empire broke up, and the great "Migration of the Nations" took place from the East, westwards. Under various names and with various races it is believed that the tribes of Israel, in detachments, left their Assyrian and Median homes, mingled with Celts and Teutons, traversed northern and central Europe, and arrived at last at these "Isles of the West," just as Scripture said they would, "to renew their exhausted strength." A reference to the following will illustrate this:—Ezek. xi. 16, 17; Hosea ix. 17; Isa. xli. 1; Hosea xi. 10. They are prophetically destined to be found in "the Isles afar off" from Palestine (Jer. xxxi. 10); in the north country or Land of the North (Jer. iii. 18); in the West (Hosea xi. 10; xxiv. 15; Isles of the West, or Sea). The British people historically respond exactly to the sketch above given. They came originally, as Sharon Turner and other historians tell us, from Central Asia. The first trace in Europe of the Celtic tribes called the Cimmerioi, or Cimbri, or Khumri (who are British), is dated B.C. 630, which was quite a century after the Ten Tribes were banished from Palestine to the Median territory, whence the British folks and their Celtic ancestors emerged into Europe. It was therefore historically possible, but not impossible, that parties of the tribes escaping from captivity might all along the centuries have accompanied the Celts in their early emigration into Europe, and their settlement in these Islands, then well known to Solomon's descendants by reason of the commerce they kept up with them in tin and the other commodities mentioned in Ezek. xxvii. 12, as the trade of Tyre with "Tarshish" (strongly suspected to be an alias for the British Islands). The ethnic possibility of the Identity of the early British settlers with Israel being chronologically conceded, there is nothing in philology to negative the hypothesis. Granted that we British speak an Aryan and not a Semitic tongue. Israel was in contact with Aryan races during their Median captivity, and again for centuries during their travels into Europe and the "Isles." The affinity of language is no proof of affinity of race. It is generally only proof of contact between races. The last remnants of Israel having been miraculously brought into their "appointed place" of domicile (2 Sam. vii. 10), the rest is easy. We find the British people to-day answer in all points to the prophetic picture drawn in the Bible of what "Israel" would be in the "last days." All those blessings which God, who cannot lie, promised on oath to bestow upon Israel His people, exclusively, we find that we British, to-day, exclusively possess. God being such as He is, we are tied up to the belief that, therefore, the British are Israel. Those blessings are—

1. Multitudinousness (Gen. xxii. 17; Hosea i. 10; Zech. x. 6—9).
2. Colonies in the "desolate heritages," or savage wildernesses of the world, such as Australia, Canada, Tasmania, South Africa, and the like (Isa. xlix. 8).
3. Colonies developing into nations, and those federating into States loyal to their parent mother (Gen. xxxv. 11, xlviii. 19).
4. A mighty Heathen Empire (Psa. cxi. 6, ii. 8).
5. The Gates of their enemies, such as Gibraltar, Malta, Perim, Aden, &c., &c., (Gen. xxii. 17).
6. Abnormal wealth (Deut. xv. 6, viii. 18).
7. Many spiritual gifts, such as
    1. The Bible (Psa. cxlvii. 19, 20).
    2. The Sabbath (Exod. xxxi. 13—17).
    3. The ten true Laws of God (Deut. vi. 6—9).
    4. The Propagation of the Gospel to all nations (Gen. xxii. 18, xxviii. 14; Acts iii. 25), and the like.

For these and other similar reasons we conclude that the Bible being true, and God being faithful to His Oath, the British folk must be Israel.

That point established, we find our nation is, therefore, heir to all the blessings yet to come, detailed in God's promises to His people, and these are—

1. Perpetual continuance as a nation.
2. Perpetual continuance of the Davidic line of Kings now reigning over Israel, according to Jer xxxiii. 26.
3. The baptism of God's Holy Spirit on every individual of the race, with the accompanying blessings (Jer. xxxi. 33, 34, and Heb. viii. 10—12):
4. The dominion of the world, in preparation of the coming kingdom of Our Lord Jesus Christ.

I am, of course, unable, in a newspaper article, to enlarge on these various points. It is not necessary. For there are many valuable and learned works published on the subject, some by the late Bishop Titcomb and others, which will well repay perusal.

PHILO-ISRAEL,
Editor of "THE BANNER OF ISRAEL."

Clifton, Bristol, August, 1888.

A RECENT telegram from a correspondent at Berlin states that Dr. Bening, a German Government official, professes to have discovered a new derivation for the name England, or the English. The word, he contends, does not originate, as has for a thousand years been supposed, from the Angles, or from the district of Angelu, in Schleswig, but from the Engern, a numerous and very powerful Saxon race, formerly living near the banks of the Weser. He bases his theory partly on the statements of the old British monk, Gildas. He lived considerably earlier than Bede, and speaks only of the Saxons who colonised Britain. Dr. Bening points out that, in Schleswig, Engelland is very small, and now has barely eight thousand inhabitants; moreover, it lies on the Baltic, not on the North Sea, like the country of the Engern.

Digitized by Google

THE COASTS, THE ENDS, AND THE UTTERMOST PARTS OF THE EARTH.

THERE is no doubt that according to the Bible, Israel's heritage was described as being in "the coasts, the ends, and the uttermost parts of the earth." We have that distinctly stated in such passages as these :—

"He (Joseph) shall push the people, all of them, even the ends of the earth" (Deut. xxxiii. 17, R.V.). "Behold I will bring them from the North country, and gather them from the uttermost parts of the earth" (Jer. xxxi. 8, R.V.). ("Coasts of the earth" in the A.V.). "All the ends of the earth shall remember and turn to the Lord" (Psa. xxii. 27, R.V.). "Thou hast increased the nation, O Lord, Thou hast increased the nation ; Thou art glorified (marg.), Thou hast removed it far unto all the ends of the earth" (Isa. xxvi. 15, R.V. and A.V.). "All the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of God" (Isa. lii. 10, R.V.). "Thou Israel, My servant, Jacob whom I have chosen. . . . thou whom I have taken hold of, from the ends of the earth, and called thee from the corners thereof" (Isa. xli. 9, R.V.).

Such being the geographical description of the localities occupied by Christianized Israel, therefore the Ten Tribes—but not Judah—it is interesting to note that the Identity finds our British folk exclusively occupying "the ends of the earth, the corners and coasts of it, the uttermost parts," or outlying promontories of it; and that no other nation has obtained a footing in such localities. Thus we have the whole peninsula of India and Ceylon, jutting out as a vast triangle from Asia, and pointing southwards. India is an "end of the earth, a coast-land, and the uttermost part" of that portion of the globe. Israel is its sole mistress. Africa is a gigantic example of the very same fact. We have the whole of South Africa in our grasp, and quite recently we have annexed the whole coast-line from the Orange Free River, on the West, to Amatongaland on the East; with larger portions of the East and West coasts of the same great continent, including, we may say, Egypt to the North, and the Horn or Somali coast-land, a veritable "end of the earth," to the North-east, opposite Aden and Bab-el-Mandeb. Australia and Tasmania, with New Zealand, are "coast-lands" of the largest size, being vast islands, one nearly as big as all Europe put together!

In Singapore we have an important strategical "end of the earth," which is of great value, as it safeguards the route to China from the West. The North-east coast of Borneo is British territory, and it is an "end and uttermost part of the earth" in a very literal sense. The whole of the enormous territory of the Dominion of Canada is an "end of the earth," its "uttermost part" abutting on the Arctic circle, with no habitable land beyond it to the North. The Southern parts of South America are not yet included in Israel's Empire, but it is a significant fact that the British South American Missionary Society has a flourishing Mission there, which is under the protection of the Argentine Republic, the Government of which has assented to the Society's Mission Station at Ushuwia, in Tierra del Fuëgo, being in a measure independent of the government's control (Deut. xv. 6, R.V.).

The secular press of the day notes the singular position our country occupies just now as unwittingly a continually expanding, annexing one. The Bristol Times and Mirror, on July 19th, commented on the facts thus:—

What an acquisitive race the British is, to be sure! Here the nation has been quietly plodding on its way, free from any suspicion of what used to be known as Jingoism, and certainly not dreaming of any additions to our already vast domains. Yet, lo and behold! all the time, without the slightest effort, perhaps even in spite of ourselves, Great Britain has been adding point after point to the empire upon which the sun never sets. She has been doing this, too, in a business-like way, altogether becoming in a nation of shopkeepers. There are so many odd corners of unclaimed territory in Africa, that the different Powers of Europe a few years ago came to an arrangement to the effect that any nation which thenceforth took possession of a tract of land on the coasts of the African continent, outside of its present possessions, or which, being hitherto without such possessions, acquired them, as well as the Power which assumed a protectorate there, should accompany the respective acts with a notification thereof, addressed to the other Powers, in order to enable them, if need be, to make good any claim of their own. The first schedule under this Article has just been published, and from this we learn that since June, 1885, five bits of African territory have been annexed. Great Britain, of course, took the greatest number—three, leaving one to France and one to Portugal. We seized the Niger Districts and Oil Rivers, Zululand, and the Somali Coast. France took a place between Grand Popo and Dahomey; and Portugal assumed a protectorate over the sea-coast of Dahomey in 1886, only to give it up again in 1887. In addition to these bits of Africa, we have also just annexed Christmas Island, which lies 200 miles south of the western end of Java. This island is of volcanic origin, small, waterless, and uninhabitable; and it is of no strategical value. But it would be irritating to see any other flag than our own flying over the island; and so we have taken it.

The Times and Mirror, however, under-estimates British expansion in recent years, for three islands in the Pacific have quite lately been annexed, as we have already noticed in these columns. The Kermadec Islands, North-east of New Zealand, were only a few months' ago added to the Empire. We have undertaken the protection and administration of Egypt since 1882; and Upper Burmah has been annexed to the Indian Empire during Lord Dufferin's viceroyalty, and is hardly yet settled down contented with the change. In short, the Empire is growing with "leaps and bounds," and will continue to do so until the Scripture is fulfilled, which declares that God has removed the nation of Israel "far unto ALL the ends of the earth" (Isa. xxvi. 15, A. & R.V's.). The "removal" is in progress, and it is marked with great rapidity of action. When it is completed "all the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of God," which is the glory of the Lord; the purchase of the cross of the Lord Jesus Christ. To Him shall then be all the praise, since His mercy endureth for ever!

MR. AND MRS. GRATTAN GUINNESS' VIEWS

FORWARDED BY W. C., JUN.

As I have seen no reference in the BANNER to the volume entitled "Light for the Last Days," by Mr. and Mrs. Grattan Guinness, authors of "The Approaching End of the Age," &c., I take the liberty of sending you a few extracts from "Light for the Last Days," and invite your attention more especially to the extracts from pages 311 and 323—327.

Page 245 of "Light for the Last Days":—"Prophecy does not lead to the expectation that Moslem power in Turkey would cease at the end of 1,260 years, for Dan. xii. 11 distinctly assigns to it a duration of thirty years longer: 'From the time that the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate set up, there shall be a thousand two hundred and ninety days.'"

Page 246:—"When this period runs out, which on the lunar scale it will do in 1889, we may expect to see the Mohammedan treading down of Jerusalem come to an end, but as this is still a future date we do not dwell on it here, but in a later chapter."

Page 311:—"We have seen reason at a previous stage of our examination of these prophetic periods to anticipate that the very proximate year 1889 will see Jerusalem liberated from Moslem tyranny. This sanctuary cycle points us on to two other future dates, 1893 and 1906. What events are these years likely to bring? We do not venture even to suggest, but may remark that the overthrow of Ottoman rule in Syria, whenever it occure, may or may not mark the close of 'the times of the Gentiles.' It is quite possible, and perhaps we may say probable, that when the Turks first cease to exercise direct control in Palestine the country will be placed under a protectorate, either a joint protectorate of the western nations, or, possibly, as less difficult to work, under the protectorate of one or two of them, or even of England only, as it already has a sort of protectorate in these regions through the Anglo-Turkish convention about Cyprus. In that case Turkish rule would be succeeded by another Gentile Power; Jerusalem would still be under Gentile rule, showing that 'the times of the Gentiles' were still running their course. Such rule might be brief, and autonomy might, [page 312] after a few years, be granted to the people of the land under a Jewish governor, and so it might continue to the end of the age. There seems to be no distinct revelation on this point in Scripture prophecy, though it is clear from the 12th of Zechariah that there will be governors of Judea in Jerusalem at the final crisis, and that Israel's God will defend them and their city against the confederation of hostile allies, who will apparently be besieging Jerusalem at the time of the glorious advent of Christ with His saints.

Digitized by Google

"It is, however, useless to speculate as to the detail of future events, even when the occurrence of the events themselves is distinctly predicted and is near at hand We may know that certain things will happen, because the Scriptures distinctly predict them. and we may know when they will happen because the time of their occurrence has been revealed; but we may yet be entirely ignorant as to how they will be brought about, because the mode has not been revealed. That the sanctuary will be cleansed, or Syria freed from Moslem domination, at the close of this cycle of twenty-three centuries, there seems little room to doubt, but how the deliverance will be effected, or with what immediate results, it is not for us or for anyone to say. Time will declare. The ultimate result is clear—the rapid restoration [p. 313] of a considerable number of the Jewish people to the land of their fathers, where they will repent and be converted; led to say, 'Blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord!' and be thus prepared to welcome their long-rejected King, Messiah." (Here follow quotations from Zech. xii. 2 to xiv. 9.)

"What the interval between the cleansing of the sanctuary and this final and glorious crisis is likely to be, we must learn from the chronology of the times of the Gentiles. This cycle of twenty-three centuries from the Persian restoration era leads no further than the deliverance of the Holy Land from Gentile rule." (End of chapter xii.)

CHAPTER XIV.—THE FUTURE DATES OF THIS SERIES.

Page 321:—"Up to this point of our investigation we have been dealing exclusively with past events and past dates—that is, with fulfilled prophecy. This should be distinctly observed. We have been studying facts, not theories. In our investigation of the dates of the 'seven times' and of the sanctuary cycle, we reserved for consideration in a separate group all those which are still future.

"The two last dates we considered were 1882 and 1885. The two next of the series are 1887 and 1889. Here, therefore, we must cross the line that divides the fulfilled from the unfulfilled; and there, losing the clear light of history, we have to complete our survey of this series of prophetic dates, guided for the most part by the comparatively dim and doubtful light of analogy. We do not, be it observed, plunge into the total obscurity which leaves no room for anything but baseless speculation. There are still facts for our consideration, facts as to the dates of the expiration of the prophetic times, and facts as to the predictions of the Word of God concerning the [p. 322] closing events of this dispensation. We shall seek to confine ourselves chiefly to a statement of these facts, and avoid, as far as possible, all unwarrantable speculation as to their significance.

"The dates we have now to consider are the few last of the long series, numbering many score, and extending back over eighteen centuries, which we have studied in the foregoing pages. All the previous dates in this series have brought about stages in certain definite historical movements, and the events which prophecy attaches to these future dates are mainly final stages of the same movements. The analogy of the past, from which we may judge of the future, is therefore a broad and strong one as regards the nearer dates, and the word of prophecy throws a flood of light upon the closing events of this dispensation, which would seem to be indicated by the more remote ones. The detailed and exact order of these events is to some extent doubtful, but their nature is indisputable.

"When 'the times of the Gentiles' close, the millennial age begins, and at the junction of these two great ages lies the grand fruition of our 'blessed hope," the second coming of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Daniel's grand prophetic outline of the future places this beyond dispute. The second advent of Christ in glory is there connected again and again with the termination of the fourth, or [p. 323] Roman Empire, in its divided, ten-horned, Papal form. The stone cut out without hands falls upon the feet of the image, breaking them and the whole image to pieces before it becomes a mountain and fills the whole earth.

"The Son of Man comes with the clouds of heaven, and receives dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages should serve Him. At the advent of the Ancient of Days, the dominion of the persecuting horn is taken away, and 'the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey Him.'

"Numerous prophecies, both in the Old and the New Testaments, treat of this solemn and glorious crisis, and of that which succeeds it. The 2,520 years of 'the times of the Gentiles' extend from the fall of Judah's independence up to this crisis, from which dates a new chronological period—the thousand years of the millennial age. Now, not only have by far the greater number of the events foretold by Daniel and the prophets, and by our Lord and His apostles, as destined to intervene before His return, already taken place, but by very far the longer portion of 'the times of the Gentiles' has, as we have seen, already elapsed. Measured [p. 324] on the lunar scale, and from the earliest date, the period expired 187 years ago, at the beginning of this era of the 'time of the end'; and measured on the full solar scale, from the latest date in the captivity era, we are now within half-a-century of its final close. There is not, therefore, chronological room for any large number of future events of a critical character, nor are there many such on the scroll of prophecy.

"The complete fall of Babylon the Great, the entire removal of the Mohammedan power from Syria, and the restoration, to a larger extent and in a more corporate and national sense, of the Jews to their own land—these seem to be the principal remaining events predicted in prophecy as destined to occur before the end of 'the times of the Gentiles,' the end of the indignation against Israel, and the advent of the manifest kingdom of God on earth.

"Hence the future, prior to the second advent, is a question, not of new and different historic events, but simply of fresh stages in existing and progressive movements. How many more stages are there likely to be in the fall of Babylon? How many more in the fall of Islam? How many more in the restoration of Israel? This it is not for us to say; but we may point out that only a few more dates are indicated by the chronological prophecies we are considering; so that if the system we have sought to unfold [p. 325] be true and Scriptural, the remaining crises cannot be numerous.

"Five of the dates which remain are the full solar termini of the respective prophetic periods as measured from their latest starting points in the captivity, restoration and bisection eras. They extend to the end of the 'time of the end,' to the full close of this closing era, to the last events of this Gentile age. Grouping them according to their astronomic and historic nature and connexion, they are as follows:—

"I. Two of the calendar termini from the two last Nebuchadnezzar starting points of the captivity era—the years 1887 and 1898.

"II. The three full solar termini from all the three Nebuchadnezzar starting points (that is from the falls of Jehoiakim, Jehoiachin, and Zedekiah), the years 1917, 1923, and 1934.

"III. The two solar termini from the two latest starting points of the sanctuary cycle, the years 1893 and 1906.

"IV. The lunar closes of the supplementary periods of Dan. xii., the added 30 and 45 years, which, measured on the lunar scale from the Omar capture of Jerusalem, run out respectively in the years 1889 and 1933."

Page 326:—"Arranged in chronological order, the dates we have named lie, two in this decade, two in the next, and the remaining five in the early part of the next century. 1887, 1889, 1893, and 1898 in this century; 1906, 1915, 1917, 1923, and 1933-4 in the next century.

We are not about to attempt any prediction of the specific events which may be expected to occur in these years of crisis in the near future, but we may point out that analogy seems to warrant the assumption that the dates which remain will bring events harmonious in character with those which have been brought by previous dates of the same series. The series, for instance, which starts with the Zedekiah destruction of Jerusalem and the burning of the temple, and which has already led us in the bisection era to the Saracenic capture of the city, and conquest of the land, and in this 'time of the end' to the 'Universal Israelite Alliance' and the European protectorate of Northern Syria in 1860, runs out in its extended form of 1.290 lunar years in the year 1889. That year is consequently likely to witness, not a Papal crisis in Western, but a Mohammedan crisis in Eastern Europe, or some further and marked stage of Jewish elevation and restoration, or possibly both. It is likely to carry forward another step the cleansing of the sanctuary. This is also the case with the dates 1893 and 1906, [p. 327] both of which are termini of the sanctuary cycle, and have to do with Palestine, not Rome.

Digitized by Google

"On the other hand, the four still future years of the series which, starting from the Babylonian overthrow of Judah, have already led us to so many stages, first in the rise and subsequently in the fall of Rome Papal, seems likely to bring fresh crises of a similar character, or further stages in that fall of Babylon the Great, whose final judgment is to be the immediate precursor of the marriage of the Lamb.

"Especially the three full solar termini from the three latest Nebuchadnezzar starting points of the captivity era, are likely to prove years of solemn and terrible crises to Babylon the Great, and of blessed liberation and uplifting to the people of Israel, and to the true Church of God. The solar termini from earlier stages of the captivity era have already brought about most momentous events, though only of the nature of preliminary stages. The solar terminus of the period of 'seven times' from Shalmanezer brought the Papal overthrow connected with the French Revolution. The solar terminus of the same period from Sennacherib brought Napoleon's awful wars, including the retreat from Moscow, in which an army of half-a-million of men perished almost as tragically as did the hosts of the Assyrian monarch of old when the angel of death passed over them."

Page 328:—"The solar terminus of 'seven times' from the captivity of Manasseh brought the final fall of the temporal power of the Papacy; but from no one of the Nebuchadnezzar starting points has the period yet run out on the full solar scale. The years in which it will do so are the four closing ones of the series given above—1915, 1917, 1923, and 1934.

"The question as to what events are likely to be brought by these future dates is a deeply interesting one, which no reader who has intelligently followed us thus far can avoid pondering, as we have pondered it, but which no one who realises as strongly as we do the utter folly of speculation, will venture to answer dogmatically. When we glance back over the many stages of fulfilment which we have indicated in the past, we feel little difficulty in anticipating the nature of the crises which may be brought by the nearer intervening dates, though they afford but slender help when we attempt to conceive the close.

"What is likely to be the nature of the events of these earlier dates, the four in this century, and the first in next century? In answering this question we need to remember that the symbolic language of some prophecies, and the poetical imagery of others, are too often permitted to create expectations for which, in reality, they give no ground. The final fall of the anti-Christian Roman apostasy is predicted, as we before stated, to occur [p. 329] in two contrasted ways: the first, a gradual consuming; the second, a sudden destruction. The latter is to take place at Christ's coming, the former prior to that coming. The instrument of the latter is to be the brightness of His epiphany, the power and glory of His advent. The instruments of the previous consumption are twofold: first, a spiritual movement; and secondly, a political one. The spirit of God's mouth, or truth of Scripture, has been the one agency, and the hatred of 'the ten horns' the other.

"We have seen both these agencies at work. In the Reformation movement, and in all subsequent Protestant evangelistic movements, in the circulation of the Scripture and religious literature, we have seen the first, the spirit of God's mouth undermining and destroying the vitality and power of the Papacy; and in the atheistic revolution born of the revulsion from degrading superstition and of hatred to the lying pretensions of the Papacy, we have seen the second, the kingdoms of modern Europe hating and destroying the Romish Church and Papal power, and liberating themselves through vehement revolutions and bloody wars from its yoke. These opposite agencies are probably destined to continue, each in its own way, the predicted consumption of the anti-Christian apostasy, until the last stage of the great prophetic drama arrives, the supreme crisis for which [p. 330] prophets and apostles and martyrs have waited, and for which the Church has watched for many a century—until the cry is heard, 'Behold the Bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet Him.'

"We ought to expect, then, at the earlier of these future dates only such events as have fallen out at the previous closes of the prophetic periods; nothing supernatural, nothing unprecedented, nothing that cannot be perfectly well accounted for by second causes, nothing that will irresistibly fix the attention of the world, or even of the Church, events of a certain definite character, that cannot be overlooked or misinterpreted by those who understand the counsels of God, but which will no more disturb the wicked, or arouse men from their fatal dreams of peace and safety, than did the fall of the temporal power of the Papacy in 1870.

"We may expect, for instance, that ultramontanism may bring down on itself during the next few decades even more marked and disgraceful defeats than it has hitherto sustained; that the decadence of the Papal nations will, as time advances, become more and more conspicuous and more sharply contrasted with the advance and prosperity of Protestant ones; that encroachments on the civil power will be everywhere less and less tolerated; that disestablishment and disendowment will be everywhere the order of the day; that ecclesiastical influence will wane, [p. 331] though true religion will increase on the one hand, and infidelity on the other. We may expect a further dismemberment and final extinction of the Turkish power in Europe, and especially in Syria, and that probably very soon. We may expect Russia, 'the king of the North,' who is to figure so largely in the closing scenes, to become mightier and mightier, and to aim at possession of the Holy Land."

ANGLO-ISRAEL FREE DISTRIBUTION FUND.

Fifty-eighth Monthly Report.

The following donations and subscriptions, from Aug. 17th to Sept. 15th, are very gratefully acknowledged, and we very cordially thank our friends for responding so readily to our appeal:—

By the Treasurer: Miss D., Wicklow, 10s.; W. W. (for Banners), 3s. 6d.: Miss B., Chichester, 3s.; H. L., Teddington, 5s.; Mrs. S. T., Lymington, £5; Mr. N. (per Bath Association, for Banners), 2s. 6d.; Mrs. C. (monthly subscription), 2s. 6d.; E. M. A. (towards the Secretary's honorarium), £1; Mrs. C. B. (monthly subscription), 5s.; G. G., Clerkenwell, 1s.; J. S., Cambridge, 3s.; H. G. (two months' subscription), 2s.; The Lady J. E., £5; "Two Sisters," Margate, 5s. Per Miss E. M. Rush: "Liverpool Marine Engineer" (for Banners), £1; J. C. H. M. (for Banners), 5s.

By Mr. A. Sibbald: Miss A., Hammersmith, 3s.

Total, £14 10s. 6d.

A correspondent has lately inquired about collecting-boxes. Perhaps the information given to this lady may be useful to others, and induce them to follow her example. We do not send out boxes, but very good ones can be made of those in which correspondence cards are sold. Cut a slit in the lid, and paste above and below it the top and bottom portions of page 1 of the pink circular issued by the Fund. It can be ornamented with coloured scraps, if desired. We have lately made a box of this kind for ourselves, and hope to collect some stray pence for the Fund.

As Mr. Sibbald is now away for his holiday, we have undertaken to write the report again this month.

Literature Distribution.—Twenty-four parcels of pamphlets and leaflets have been forwarded to the following places: Canterbury, Clerkenwell, Minehead, Brighton, Redruth, Woolwich, Hammersmith, Birkenhead, Eltham, Malta; Rawul Pindee, Secunderabad (2), Bangalore (2), Poona, and Nellore (India); Rangoon and Moulmein (Burmah); Hong Kong; Cape Town and Port Nolloth (S. Africa); Barbadoes; and Launceston (Tasmania).

Banner Distribution.—One hundred and twenty Banners are now forwarded weekly to the following places: Lee, Shetland, Ponsanooth, Silver Town, Catford, Commercial-road, E., Southwold, Walton-on-Naze, Cockburnspath, Carlisle, Dover, Canterbury, Aldershot, Dublin, Edinburgh, Glasgow, Westminster, Hamilton, N.B., Cowbridge, Farnworth, Upper Teddington, Birkenhead. Sydenham, Maesteg, Minehead, and Ballincolig. To the following Libraries and Institutions: Barrow-in-Furness, Wandsworth, Manchester, Crewe, and Wimbledon. To the Colonies, India, and other countries: Cleveland, Ohio; Toronto; Ograbeis (S. Africa); Gewgery (New South Wales); Secunderabad, Poona, Bangalore, Rawal Pindee, Ambala, Nellore (India); Rangoon, Hong Kong, Barbadoes, and Malta.

Digitized by Google

CORRESPONDENCE.—Our agent at Launceston, Tasmania, in giving an account of the work there, says: "I have made no distinction of persons; high and low, rich and poor, magistrates, merchants, ministers of all denominations, and Sunday-school teachers have all had some of our literature. I have had a hard fight, but have never given in. Quietly as I have worked, I have lately caused, quite unexpectedly, a great stir in Launceston." Some to whom literature has been given are Sunday-school teachers and members of the Memorial Church. This at length roused up the pastor, and he gave notice that he would "give a few lectures on prophecy, and also treat on the Anglo-Israel theory, a subject very much going about just now," as if it were some infection in the town! The rev. gentleman did not have it all his own way, and was probably surprised to find there are more Anglo-Israelites in Launceston than our untiring agent, who adds: "He has done our cause no harm, but a great deal of good, for the good folks are beginning to inquire into the subject more than ever, and are sending to London and Melbourne for literature. A local preacher, too, has been telling his congregation that the British people are Israelites. This is the first time we have had it from the pulpit since Canon Brownrigg left." A parcel of literature was despatched to Launceston on Aug. 31st, through Wheatley and Co., which we trust will reach our friend safely, and prove useful.

An interesting account of progress has been received from our Sower at Birkenhead, and will be noticed more fully in next report. J. LAWRENCE, Hon. Treasurer.

Contributions to the Fund will be thankfully received and acknowledged by the Hon. Treasurer, Miss J. Lawrence, Rosslyn, Hampton-road, Upper Teddington, Middlesex; or by Mr. Andrew Sibbald, 3, Townshend-villas, Richmond, Surrey. Cheques may be crossed, "London and Provincial Bank, Teddington Branch."

ISRAEL'S SCRIPTURE AND PRAYER UNION.

ONE new card of membership has been sent out since our last report, which makes the total number of members 1,463. Another card has also been given out by our agent in Malta.

A donation of 2s., from Miss S., Folkestone, received towards the expenses of the Union, is most thankfully acknowledged.

New members are requested, when writing for cards, to kindly state whether their names are to be entered as Mr., Mrs., or Miss, etc.

For the convenience of those members who wish to continue the daily reading, the following list of chapters for October is appended:—

1st ...	2 Cor.	iv.	12th ...	Galatians	ii.	23rd ...	Philippians	i.
2nd...	,,	v.	13th ...	,,	iii.	24th ...	,,	ii.
3rd ...	,,	vi.	14th ...	,,	iv.	25th ...	,,	iii.
4th ...	,,	vii.	15th ...	,,	v.	26th ...	,,	iv.
5th ...	,,	viii.	16th ...	,,	vi.	27th ...	Colossians	i.
6th ...	,,	ix.	17th ...	Ephesians	i.	28th ...	,,	ii.
7th ...	,,	x.	18th ...	,,	ii.	29th ...	,,	iii.
8th ...	,,	xi.	19th ...	,,	iii.	30th ...	,,	iv.
9th ...	,,	xii.	20th ...	,,	iv.	31st ...	1 Thess.	i.
10th ...	,,	xiii.	21st ...	,,	v.
11th ...	Galatians	i.	22nd...	,,	vi.

The card of membership will be sent on receipt of three stamps.

The first and second series of Monthly Comments on the whole Bible, by Philo-Israel, may now be obtained in volume form. Price, in paper cover, 1s. 2d. each; in cloth 2s. each, post free.

The "Prayers for Daily Use," being a prayer for each day of the week, by Philo-Israel, are 1d., or 9d. per doz., postage extra.

The prayer of the Union, as on the Card of Membership, may now be obtained printed in larger type, price 1d. for three copies, post free; or 1s. per 100 for distribution. Address—Miss E. Sibbald, 3, Townshend-villas, Richmond, Surrey.

Reviews.

The Origin, Progress, and Establishment of the Kingdom of God in the World. By Surgeon-General J. M. Grant, M.D. London: Robert Banks and Son, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C. Price 2s. 6d.; 1888.

PART I.

THIS volume is, we think, one of Dr. Grant's best efforts; and his theme, no doubt, is the most glorious and grand he could have chosen. It deals with God's kingdom in the world, with the king, the subjects, and their future destiny. In 1878, BANNER, Vol. ii., No. 53, pages 9 and 26, we ourselves drew attention to this glorious subject in two papers, entitled, "The kingdom of Heaven," identifying it on Scriptural grounds with "Jehovah's kingdom on earth"—even with Ten-Tribed Israel, the British people. We are glad to see that our views, published ten years ago, are corroborated in Dr. Grant's present volume, and that in all fundamental points he supports and confirms our statements on the subject. Dr. Grant's object, however, has not been to demonstrate the Identity of the Lost Ten Tribes with the British people, but "to show that the recognition of a House of Israel distinct from the Jews, no matter where it is to be found, is essential to the right understanding of prophecy regarding the Millennial kingdom." But the volume under notice goes far beyond that. The Author endeavours to throw light upon the rather difficult and startling question, "What will be the state of existence and occupation in the next world?" and he feels himself quite able to answer it (judiciously or otherwise, our readers must judge from the whole tenor of the book—pp. 92 and 106). The main object of the Author's effort has been, however, to sketch out, as clearly as he can from the light the Scriptures throw upon the matter, the nature of Christ's government, and that of His subjects, in the kingdom. He notices the fact, that our modern preachers deal only with the spiritual aspect of "the kingdom," but never allude to the fact that it will be "a real, tangible, material kingdom, wherein Christ will rule over one particular people, and by their means govern all other nations; that its place will be the world we now inhabit, and its subjects the people who shall be alive at His Second Coming." Dr. Grant does not expect that his system of interpretation will commend itself to most of his fellow-Christians, but anticipates what we fear will be the fact, that the great majority (of the clergy for instance) will feel repelled by his views, and deem them utterly distasteful. We trust, with him, that they will give him at least a prayerful hearing, and then, bringing the matter to the test of the Word, pronounce their final judgment.

After an instructive Introduction, our Author opens his subject with a chapter on "Abraham," the head of the chosen Semitic race. In illustrating the national and everlasting character of the selection of this family of mankind, Dr. Grant takes the opportunity (p. 19) of showing that God's promise to Noah could not have been that Japheth "should dwell in the tents of Shem," because He never fulfilled it! Those who assert it are confronted by the fact, that soon afterwards God, in disregard of His alleged covenant with Noah, transferred the promise of national greatness from the Japhetic branch to Abraham, who came from Shem. Ever since, the supremacy of the Abrahamic stock must be a fact, as God is true, even though the wise ones may not be able yet to see that the British are of that race. In the 2nd chapter, on "The Chosen People," who are, of course, the Twelve Tribes of Israel, "chosen from before the foundation of the world, as the only instrument for its redemption from the fall," we have the Author's sentiments on the doctrine of election and predestination, as held by many of us, and certainly by the Church of England. He expresses those sentiments in very plain terms. He says that the doctrine in question "has done more to ruin souls than that of the immaculate conception, the infallibility of the Pope, or any other dogma of the Church of Rome." We cannot follow our Author here! We fear he will, by such ideas, give just offence to many whom we would desire to attract to our views. The doctrine in question is, it seems to us, the natural outcome of God's choice and predestination of one nation out of all the other nations of mankind. He who, from all eternity, avowedly chose one race for blessing and for service, rejecting all the rest, must know, too, those "chosen ones" among individuals whom He would draw to Christ, and so enable them to come to Him (John vi. 44, 65). We hold with the 17th Article of Religion, that "the godly consideration" of this subject is full of comfort to "godly persons, and such as feel in themselves the working of the Spirit of Christ," but certainly we cannot endorse our Author's very vigorous language in respect thereto. The chapters on "The Monarchy," and "Israel and Judah," are full of good points, some of them new and original. Such is the idea, that "while the theocracy is in abeyance, David's descendants reign as kings over Israel"; but that when the theocracy shall have been restored, they will each continue to govern as the "ruling Prince "of Israel (Jerem. and Ezek.). Also the idea (p. 39), that Israel, as a nation, has "eluded the search of the Learned, because, according to God's appointment, that nation is not to be reckoned or recognised amongst the nations until the time comes for its manifestation, for His glory, and as the crowning wonder of the world."

Digitized by Google

On page 48 we have a good description of Israel's (or Joseph's) birthright, telling us of what it consisted; a point regarding which there is much ignorance. It included, says our Author, "military power, extensive territory, genial climate, command of the sea, and a teeming population, all, in short, that constitutes national power and greatness." But the sceptre over this vast Empire, adds Dr. Grant, was to be in the Tribe of Judah during the "last days" or Christian Dispensation (Num. xxiv. 15—17). A characteristic passage, illustrative of our Author's style, occurs on page 52, with which we must conclude our present notice of this clever and instructive book.

"The Bible," he writes, "teaches as plainly as language can, that the Ten Tribes of Israel accepted the Gospel which the Jews rejected; and that they inherited the blessings so glowingly described in Isa. lviii. 6—14, 'riding upon the high places of the earth, and being fed with the heritage of Jacob their father.'

"To apply such language as this to 'the Church,' is to deprive it of all meaning. It is a nonsensical application of Scripture, leading to a nonsensical conclusion, for that the custody and promulgation of the Gospel is the work of a nation, and a strong nation too, not of the Church, is a fact which requires no demonstration, but must be obvious to all who will ask themselves the very simple question,—What would become of all Protestant Missionary enterprise if Spain had the dominion of the sea?"

(To be continued.)

The Teutonic Theory Considered in the Light of Holy Scripture. By Sarah Sharp. London: Robert Banks and Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C. Price 3d.

THESE papers have appeared in the BANNER OF ISRAEL during the months of April and May, 1888, and we need not therefore enlarge upon the arguments employed by the authoress of "My Jewels," to support her case. The Teutonic theory is one which we have always opposed to the extent of our ability, and we are not sorry to see Miss S. Sharp, with her long experience of Germany and the German people, so warmly espousing our view of the case, and opposing that advocated by the Rev. R. Douglas, the able editor of the Two Witnesses. Our authoress rightly declares that the theory propounded by those who support the Teutonic idea is destructive to the cause they really wish to serve. It cannot be defended, and its only patent result is to cause divisions among friends, and impede the acceptance by the public of the main idea they have at heart like ourselves—namely, the Israelitish origin of the British folk.

"Their theory," says Miss Sharp, "is that the continental Protestant countries of Europe contain part of the Ten-Tribed House of Israel." This is hardly accurate, however, as we may all admit that rifts and remnants of Israel may yet be domiciled among the continental nations, ready for the divine call to leave their homes and join the main body of the Ten Tribes already in the Isles of the West. What we object to in the Teutonic theory is that those who hold it declare that only some of the Ten Tribes are here, and that the rest, as Tribes, are represented now by the Protestant, Gothic, and Scandinavian nations abroad. To one nation only, however, as our authoress observes, has God on oath promised to give the inheritance of His people Israel, and no other nations other than the one can have part or lot in the matter from the nature of things. "You only have I known of all the families of the earth," is God's declaration in Amos iii. 2, and therefore we cannot give to "many" nations which have nothing in common with the British, and have no share in the Abrahamic benedictions, a portion in what has inalienably and exclusively been secured by God Himself to His chosen ones.

"We have," says Miss Sharp, very justly, "to discover one nation alone, which must answer to the description given in the Bible of the people of God's choice and "His peculiar treasure" (Psa. cxxxv. 4). The pushing propensity was, according to the Scriptures. to be peculiar to Joseph's House in the last days (Deut. xxxiii. 16, R.V.), and accordingly Great Britain has actively and energetically performed this work, till there are now scarcely any more "peoples" to "push"; and if any other future Israel were to come forward to do this business, they would find we had forestalled them!"

On one point Miss S. Sharp is peculiarly fitted to instruct us—in regard to the Teutonic German people and their observance of the Sabbath. She has resided seven years among them, and knows their habits and customs well (p. 7). She has accordingly in the pamphlet under review contributed a valuable paper on "Germany's Sunday Considered in the Light of the Teutonic Theory." Her verdict is that Germany does not reverence the Lord's-day by consecrating it wholly to the Lord. She gives Him only half the day, and so proves she is not Israel—that peculiar people—whom the Ten Commandments bound to keep the entire day holy to God's glory and man's benefit. Germany has not therefore the prescribed sign, and consequently can be recognised as a non-Israelite Gentile nation, having no connection with the Lord's inheritance. "Can we at all agree with the Teutonists in thinking that this Sabbath-breaking people can have any claim to being a part of God's people Israel? God says in Exod. xxxi. 13: 'Verily, My Sabbaths ye shall keep: for it is a sign between Me and you throughout your generations.' But in no generation at all have the German people had this sign."

These and many more are the cogent reasons Miss Sharp gives us for coming to the correct conclusion (as we deem it) that the Teutonic nations are not Israel, quâ nations. "They set aside the Old Testament Scriptures, and have no knowledge of God's laws therein contained. The Decalogue they keep out of sight, and neither in Protestant or Roman Catholic places of worship is it ever to be seen!" "Congregations are never reminded in Germany that they should remember to keep holy the Sabbath-day. God is insulted by the omission of all allusion to His own day!" Well may Miss Sharp reiterate her inquiry, "How then can this German nation have any part in Israel?"

So far back as November 9, 1875, Mr. J. W. Cockburn-Muir published some very striking, trenchant, and powerful arguments against those who held these objectionable views. He wrote thus, inter alia:—

"If the Teutons of the Continent be indeed sharers in the special promises to Israel, is it not very strange that even now, when we are on the verge of the cataclysm which is to sift the nations, no awakening to the apprehension of their position has been vouchsafed to them, as there has been to us? Surely we should at least wait until they be led to vindicate for themselves, by appeal to the sacred record, their part in the matter. Surely it is for us to wait for light, not go before, still less wrest, the promises?

"Moreover, let those who teach the Teutonic theory of interpretation explain how it comes that the German Empire has taken upon itself that mark of the beast, so that now no man among them is 'able to buy or sell save he that hath the mark'—that Gallic system of weights and measures, which is based on falsehood—and the appointed sign of them who shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God. Let them also explain how it is that throughout Germany they systematically, and as a settled social habit, profane the Sabbaths of the Lord God, and that not less, but more in Protestant than in the Popish provinces."

Our space forbids us to enlarge further on this tempting subject! We refer our readers to Miss Sharp's pamphlet, as well as to the many other articles on the same topic which have also been published in the BANNER OF ISRAEL. The subject is one of considerable importance to ourselves, and our authoress deals well and thoughtfully with it.

Facts and Probabilities Respecting the Identity. Compiled by Delta. London: Robert Banks and Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street. 6s. 6d. per 100.

WE notice that Delta has put forward this useful little tract after the manner and style of Philo-Israel's "The Résumé" in the hope that the truth may penetrate further by that means. The "Facts" are arranged under 38 sections, the "Probabilities" under 15. The author begins by pointing out the distinction between Israel and Judah, and then deals with the Identifications.

Digitized by Google

The subject of the Facts is brought to a conclusion by a paragraph on the Cui bono? aspect of the case. The last of "the Probabilities" is that "Constantinople, the Gate of Gates, will ultimately belong to Great Britain." The little work, which is a compilation and nothing more, is likely to be popular. We trust it will meet with much general approbation, and be the means of giving to many the ability to see Our Identity and to profit thereby.

Correspondence.

THE JAFFA AND JERUSALEM RAILWAY.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR PHILO-ISRAEL,—The place from which I write will explain the cause of my silence. The removal from Rome to this, to me, new field of work among our brethren of the House of Judah, necessarily absorbed months in preparations for settling down and in surveying the hallowed sphere, to which the Lord has called me in the fortieth year of my missionary career. Otherwise I have had, and have still, several subjects relating to the Identity floating in my head, and since I landed on this sacred strand, the Danites and their history, and particularly that most significant reference to their ships and to Asher's fondness of the sea-shore (Judges v. 17), which, like so many other brief sentences in the Bible, speaks a volume; the relations of Dan and Asher to the Phœnicians, the renowned navigators of antiquity; and kindred topics, have occupied my thoughts, and perhaps ere long I may find leisure to pen down some of those thoughts for the BANNER.

Meanwhile, jealous for the reputation of our good BANNER, I write to rectify some sanguine statements of the Morning Post, quoted in the BANNER of August 22nd.

There is no trace or sign of any railway from here to Jerusalem. The project has been the topic for years past, and is still, it is believed, under negotiation; but it would be venturesome indeed to predict when it is likely to be a fait accompli.

Jaffa is not lighted. After dusk it is necessary—obligatory—to have a lantern for walking in the crooked, uneven, unpaved, abominably filthy, narrow lanes of Jaffa, with low arches here and there, and steep, ruined, break-neck steps up and down the conical hillock, on which the old, venerable town stands. Some lanes have rough, protruding stones, but all the rest—it would be a misnomer to call them streets—is sand, sand right and left, blinding when there is wind, muddy when it rains, and always fatiguing to traverse.

There are a few yards of pavement in front of a row of new shops close to the bazaar, a thoroughfare crossing the market-place, and stretching to the German colony, where the two hotels of Jaffa and Cook's office are situated, on one side of the town, and on the other to what may be called the English quarter, for there are located the English Hospital, the Church Missionary Society's Mission House and School Building, which now serves for Church also; and Miss Arnott's Tabitha Mission School for native girls—the largest and best structures in Jaffa, excepting the French Hospital, close to them.

Jaffa is growing and expanding rapidly. The population increases fast—faster than new houses, and yet building is constantly going on. Rents rise, while living is dearer than in Europe, though not half as good, with the exception of fruit, when in season. Trade is brisk and business flourishing, and one or more steamers anchor in the open roadstead almost daily. Labour, inferior in quality, is well paid, while domestics are difficult to procure, earn pretty high wages for doing only one kind of work, and are so independent, that, for the merest trifle, they throw up their situations.

At last a landing-pier and custom-house are under construction, as I found out to my sad cost on arrival, for the landing of my baggage and effects over scaffoldings, fosses, and other impedimenta, shattered several cases of books, and every fragile article in the others—a dead loss of over £20, but for which no one admitted responsibility! My books were stolen from the floors of the dirty customs' store, and brought to me for sale!

The population of Palestine was increasing at rapid strides, mainly with Jews, due to the disgraceful, cruel persecutions in Russia and elsewhere; but latterly the Turkish Government has interdicted this influx of strangers, and now foreigners, and Jews specially, may not stay in Palestine beyond a month, unless they submit to naturalisation as Turkish subjects.

And it has done another and more foolish thing. It is trying to prevent the entrance of books into its territories by requiring their previous examination by the local civil authorities! As these cannot do it, and no qualified examiners have been appointed, the order is practically a prohibitory interdict—a subject on which I have written a letter to the Times.

The fact is, the Porte does not want railways in Palestine and Syria; it does not want an increase of population from without; it does not want its subjects to be instructed, and therefore, stops the admission of books; it does not want Christian civilisation—it dreads it all; and it tries naturally enough to postpone the inevitable as long as possible.

Now the railway has penetrated into Constantinople itself, it is to be hoped that Mr. Bakshish, without whose permission nothing can be done in Turkey, will soon pave the way for it in Palestine also. But it may be that the time is not yet, and that it is reserved for Israel, when he puts his other foot on this side of the Suez Canal also, as put it he must in the near future, to introduce railways into the Holy Land, as the divinely-appointed heritor of it.

Will your readers kindly remember this Mission and all other Missions in the land of Israel in their prayers? "Ye that are the Lord's remembrancers, be ye not silent, and give Him no quiet till He establish, and till He make Jerusalem a praise in the earth" (Isa. lxii. 6, 7), for ye are the Lord's watchmen, to watch the signs of the times: "Watching thereunto in all perseverance and supplication for all the saints, and on my behalf."

Yours cordially in the Lord,

A. BEN-OLIEL.

Jaffa, Palestine, Sept. 5th, 1888.

EGYPTIAN EXPLORATION FUND.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

SIR,—Unless pecuniary assistance is shortly received by the Committee of the Egyptian Exploration Fund, America is prepared to purchase the Biblical Historical remains only recently discovered at Tahpanhes (near Tel-el-Kebir) (Jer. xliii. 7), and other ancient cities, at present at the disposal of England.

Subscriptions will be gladly received by Miss Amelia Edwards, The Larches, Westbury-on-Trym, Bristol, Hon. Sec. to the Society; or at Messrs. King's, Doman's, and Drayton's Libraries, High-street, Lymington.

Yours faithfully,

F. H. CROZIER.

Delawarr, Sept. 10th, 1888.

THE following is a copy of a note to a small brochure entitled "Birds of the Air and Grains of Sand," a book left for reading at a railway station:—"Their spiritual descendants, if not their actual. There has been a great deal of talk lately about the whereabouts of the Lost Ten Tribes, and much has been advanced in favour of the British nation, and the white population of the United States, Australia, &c., being neither more nor less than the Lost Ten Tribes. I will not enter into the argument here; but those who hold the opinion, quote in its favour many prophecies which, I must say, appear very applicable, such, for example, as 'Israel shall blossom and bud, and fill the face of the world with fruit.' Israel is understood to mean the Lost Ten Tribes, as contrasted with Judah and the Jews. See how the British nation extends its power and dominion over the world; then such quotations as are to be found (see reference 6), and look at the British possessions of Gibraltar, &c."—Forwarded by C. E. P.

THE following is taken from an article in Cassell's Magazine (Sept.), by Richard Holland, entitled, "How Ships are Spoken at Sea":—"There is one thought that seems to arise from our brief consideration of this interesting subject. Our country is popularly designated 'the Mistress of the Sea.' The poet Campbell has sung, 'Her march is on the mountain wave, Her home is on the deep.' It appears to us that the best practical evidence of this assertion may be discovered, not alone and solely in the victory achieved at the Baltic or Trafalgar, but in the more peaceful and enduring conquest by which, in 1857, she gave a common language to the countless thousands of all peoples and tongues 'that go down to the sea in ships, that do business in great waters.'"—Forwarded by J. Lawrence.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed: "Philo-Israel," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

SUBSCRIPTIONS. £ s. d.

Annual Subscription for one copy weekly (including the Twelve Double Numbers) post free 0 7 6
Two Copies (including Double Numbers) 0 13 6
Three Copies ,, ,, ,, ... 1 0 4
Four Copies ,, ,, ,, ... 1 5 6
Six Copies ,, ,, ,, ... 1 16 4

Post Office Orders to be made payable at the head office, St. Martin's-le-grand, London, to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C., or F. W. PARRY & Co., 29, Paternoster-row, London.

The Editor cannot undertake to return rejected MSS. unless stamps for the purpose be sent. Parties requiring an answer should enclose a stamp.

Contents Bills and Show Cards may be obtained on application to the Publishers.

Advertisements should be sent to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

Prepaid Advertisements are inserted at the rate of thirty words for 1s. 4d.

Manchester AND Salford British-Israel AND Biblical Evidence Association.

MEETINGS of the "BRITISH-ISRAEL CONFERENCE ASSOCIATION will be held in ST. JAMES'S SCHOOLROOM, Major-street, off Portland-street, MANCHESTER, on October 4 and 5, 1888.

Thursday, October 4, at 11 a.m., 4 and 7.30 p.m.
Friday, October 5, at 11 a.m., 3 and 7.30 p.m.

An Inaugural Sermon will be preached by the Rev. R. Douglas, M.A., in St. James's Church, George-street, Manchester, on Wednesday evening, October 3, at 7.30, after which the Holy Communion will be administered.

The Revs. R. Douglas, H. Marriott, Idrisyn Jones, S. C. Adam, W. Hickson, F. Aston, Denis Hanan, &c.

Philo-Israel, Surgeon-General Grant, M.D., Oxonian, D. A. Onslow, E-q., J.P., Colonel Senior, J. G. Taylor, Esq., and other gentlemen will address the meetings.

James Weaver, Esq., M.D., of Southport; John Thomas, Esq., of King-street, Manchester; the Rev. A. Parkinson, Rector of St. Clement's, Broughton, and other gentlemen, have kindly consented to preside at several of the meetings. A good selection of Identity Literature will be offered for sale at these meetings.

Just published—Cloth, 2s. 6d.—a re-issue of

The Origin of Masonic Ritual and Tradition:

A Lecture on the Three Degrees, by BRO. WM. ROWBOTTOM, P.M., 1028, with facsimile of a very rare Masonic engraving published in 1789.

"Exquisitely clear and singularly correct in everything wherein I may be any authority or guide."—Professor PIAZZI SMYTH. "Will be found of considerable interest to many besides Masons."—Church Bells.

Oxford: S. Rowbottom and Son; London: R. Banks and Son, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C.; and F. W. Parry and Co., 29, Paternoster Row, E.C.

Price Five Shillings.—"Substantially and attractively got up, and profusely illustrated."—Oldham Chronicle.

Eildon Grange: A Tale.

By ANDREW CLARK, M.A., Vicar of St. Michael's, Oxford. "One of the most charming books. . . . The illustrations are full of playful humour."—Scotsman. "The book is undoubtedly a happy one."—The Oxford Magazine. "Both entertaining and bracing."—Dundee Advertiser.

Oxford: S. Rowbottom and Son: London: Hamilton, Adams and Co., 32, Paternoster Row, E.C.

☞ Ask for this Book at the Libraries.

LUNG TONIC
SAVE YOUR LIVES BY TAKING OWBRIDGE'S LUNG TONIC
THE MIGHTY HEALER.
It has a power over disease hitherto unknown in Medicine.
Are you at all Weak-chested or inclined to be Consumptive, with just a touch of Cough now and then?
"Try this Wonderful Medicine." The Cough and Weakness will disappear as if by magic, and you will feel a strength and power you never had before.
HAVE YOU A COUGH?
A DOSE WILL RELIEVE IT!
HAVE YOU A COLD?
A DOSE AT BEDTIME WILL REMOVE IT.
Bronchitis & Asthma it relieves instantly
The Spasms of Coughing so dreadful in Whooping Cough become less with each dose of the medicine.
Prepared by W. T. OWBRIDGE Chemist, Hull
Sold in Bottles 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d. and 11s. by all Chemists and Patent Medicine Vendors. Wholesale all London and Provincial Houses.

NEW WORK BY DR. GRANT.

Just published, price 2s. 6d., Cloth boards, gilt lettered.

Sent free to any address in Great Britain, Europe, and America, on receipt of Postal Order or stamps.

THE ORIGIN, PROGRESS, AND ESTABLISHMENT OF THE KINGDOM OF GOD IN THE WORLD.

BY SURGEON-GEN. J. M. GRANT, M.D.
Army Medical Staff (Retired).

"THY KINGDOM COME."

CONTENTS.—Preface.—Introduction.—Chap. I. Abraham.—Chap. II. The Chosen People.—Chap. III. The Monarchy.—Chap. IV. Israel and Judah.—Chap. V. Jew and Gentile.—Chap. VI. The New Covenant.—Chapter VII. The End of the World.—Chapter VIII. The Kingdom.—Chapter IX. The Government, Ritual, and Close of the Millennium.—Conclusion.—Appendix. The Gentile Church.

ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-st., London, E.C., and by order of any Bookseller.

THE MONTHLY PART OF
THE BANNER OF ISRAEL
FOR OCTOBER.

Now ready, price 7d., by post 8½d. The Monthly Part is particularly useful for sending abroad, and for Libraries. London: Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street.

Published by
ROBERT BANKS AND SON,
Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C.

A MESSAGE TO THE CHURCH FROM THE NINETEENTH CENTURY. The last written work on the Identity of the Anglo-Saxon Race with Lost Israel. By the late BISHOP TITCOMB. Imperial 8vo., cloth, gilt, 3s.

THE BRITISH NATION Proved to be the Remnant of Israel, and the Representatives of the Lost Ten Tribes. By J. H. WELDON, J.P., Author of "Britain and Prophecy." 66 pp., demy 8vo., 6d.; by post, 7d.

TALKS FOR THE TIMES. By Rev. JOSEPH WILD, D.D., Author of the "Lost Ten Tribes," &c. Being 18 Sermons preached in Bond-street Congregational Church, Toronto. 345 pp., crown 8vo., cloth, gilt lettered, 3s.; free for P.O.

ANGLO-ISRAEL TRACTS. Price ½d. each; 8 pp., royal 16mo. Assorted packet post free for 7 stamps. The tracts are well written, by the following Authors:—Rev. Bishop Titcomb, D.D.; Philo-Israel; W. S. Cavill; Douglas A. Onslow, J.P.; Mrs. G. Albert Rogers; "A E I"; Surgeon-General J. M. Grant, M.D.; Rev. Robert Douglas; Rev. C. W. Hickson.

WHO ARE WE? AND WHAT IS OUR MISSION? By J. THORNHILL HARRISON. With seven Maps by the Woodbury Permanent Photo Process. In handsome cloth, gilt, 5s.; post free for P.O.

Extermination of all Corns and Bunions.

Guaranteed by using Gardner's Patented Corn and Bunion Exterminator, an ingenious little instrument which can be used by anyone. Painless in operation—"never fails." Post free 13 stamps. The highest Surgical Testimonials can be seen, and all difficult cases, ingrowing Nails, etc., successfully treated personally by the Inventor.

C. GARDNER, Chiropodist.
94, Regent Street, London, W.

PIANOFORTES, Harmoniums, American Organs. Why buy at shops inferior made instruments, and pay large profits, when you can buy direct from the Maker High-class Instruments, and save 50 per cent. by so doing? Full value allowed for old Instruments in exchange as part payment. Write for Price Lists and Testimonials to A. G. LINSTEAD, Cobden Pianoforte Company, 5, Eversholt-street, Camden Town, London. Established 1874.

HUMAN LIFE.—FIFTY YEARS' Record of Facts, Principles, and Discoveries (just published complete) Relating to the Improvement and Preservation of Human Life on Earth. Origin and true treatment of diseases. A series of articles by DR. SAMUEL BIRLEY, M.D., Ph.D. Book form, 50 pages. SENT FREE to every applicant by the publishers, GORDON B. MURRAY & CO., 50, Theobald's-road, Holborn, E.C. Write to-day.

WORKS BY PHILO-ISRAEL

The History of the House of Israel. How They Were Lost and How They Were Found. Told for the children. Price 6d., cloth 1s.; post free 7d and 1s. 1d. Fifth edition.

Anglo-Israelism. True, Not False. Being Philo-Israel's Reply to the Rev. Canon Bell's pamphlet, "Anglo-Israelism: True or False?" Price 1d., 6s. 6d. per 100. 16 pages, crown 8vo.

An Elementary Digest or Sketch of the Chief Facts and Teachings of the Great Pyramid of Egypt. Adapted to the Unlearned and Unscientific 56 pages, Illustrated with Diagrams, price 4d., post free 5d. 10th Thousand.

Our Identity with the House of Israel. Price 4d., Reprinted from "Clifton Chronicle Letters."

Are the English People the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel? An Inquiry Establishing the Identity of the British Nation with the Lost Ten Tribes. 4d.

Our Identity: What it is Not; What it is; and Our Obligations To-day in Respect to it. Being a Lecture recently delivered in London by Philo-Israel, and published by special request. Price 2d., a reduction for quantities.

Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

SOUND, PURE, WHITE TEETH!

Those who value these will try

CARBOLINE
(The Great Sanitary Tooth Paste).

1/6 & 2/6 per Pot.

Through Chemists, or post free from the Makers,

GEORGE & WELCH
WORCESTER.

Lancet writes:—"To save the teeth use a good carbolic daily."

LADIES!

WE will send a FULL-DRESS LENGTH of BEAUTIFUL CLOTH (for Good, Strong, Serviceable wear), in any of the following colours, Carriage paid to any address for 10s. 6d. Colours:—Black, Blue, Fawn, Salmon, Resida, Slate, Ruby, Brown, Grey, Claret, Sage, Old Rose, Terra-Cotta, Amber, Peacock, Tabac, Bronze, Myrtle, Drab, Olive, Grenat, Clay Green, Navy, Partridge, Heather, &c., &c. These wonderful Dress Lengths have gained a world-wide reputation for magnificence of appearance and durability, having no equal.

The Lady's Pictorial says:—"They are excellent quality and very good value for the money."

Thousands of Testimonials from all parts of the world. Ladies should write at once for Patterns, which may be had free, and need not be returned.

AN AMAZING OFFER!!—We shall give a very handsome Brocaded Silk Handkerchief with each dress-length ordered from us during this season. Write for patterns. LUTUS & LEATHLEY, Armley, Leeds.

Certain HARNESS' Cure.
ELECTROPATHIC BELT
FOR
SLEEPLESSNESS

SLEEPLESSNESS.—The Rt. Hon. LORD BYRON says that—"Harness' Electropathic Belt is invaluable for sleeplessness, I recommend it to all my friends."

Guaranteed to generate a mild continuous current of Electricity, which speedily cures all Disorders of the Nerves, Stomach, Liver and Kidneys. Thousands of Testimonials. Pamphlet & Advice free on application to Mr. C. B. Harness, Consulting Electrician, the Medical Battery Co. Ltd.

Only Address,
52, OXFORD ST. LONDON, W. (Corner of Rathbone Place.)
Call to-day, if possible, or write at once

Printed and Published for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-st., London, E.C.
F. W. PARRY (late GUEST & CO.), 29, Paternoster-row.
WEDNESDAY, OCT. 3, 1888. [All rights reserved.

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."
(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India.)

"And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the Forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS of the EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. XII., No. 615. Entered at Stationers' Hall.] WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 10, 1888. [PRICE ONE PENNY.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
British Civilization One Hundred Years Hence	405
Epistles to the Jews Concerning the Ten Tribes of Israel. Second Epistle. By the Rev. Eliezer Bassin, C.M., Edinburgh	406
Is Federation a Prophetic Necessity for Ephraim-Israel?	407
Two Opponents from the Antipodes	408
The Queen's New Empire	409
Review	410
Correspondence	411

BRITISH CIVILIZATION ONE HUNDRED YEARS HENCE.

ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE of April 27 last, has a short paragraph on the subject of British expansion during the next century, which requires to be published in the BANNER as the expression of opinion of a paper which does not believe in Our Identity. The writer said:—

The Government statist of the colony of Victoria calculates that the Australasian populations will reach 100,000,000 in the course of another century. There is ample room for such expansion, seeing that the area of Australasia is 3,000,000 square miles—only 750,000 square miles less than Europe, 500,000 less than the Dominion of Canada, and 30,000 less than the United States. India, with an area of 1,500,000 square miles, has a population of 250,000,000, while the British Isles, with an area of 121,000 square miles, has a population of 36,000,000. What is called the English-speaking race is at present under 120,000,000; and, calculating the increase in Canada, the United States, and South Africa (where the territorial areas favour such expansion) at the same ratio as the Victoria statist assumes for Australasia, British civilization should be represented a hundred years hence by 600,000,000 or 700,000,000 of the world's inhabitants, without counting the subject races. This would be the history of Roman civilization repeated on a far grander scale.

The estimate of St. James's Gazette is a moderate one. Six or seven hundred millions as the British population of the world in A.D. 1988 is an anticipation exceeded largely by that of Mr. W. E. Axon in his paper on "The Languages of the Future," in The Quarterly Journal of Science, of July, 1873. There he estimated the numbers of the Anglo-Saxons in A.D. 2000 at over 1,700,000,000, or 1,000,000,000 more than the St. James's Gazette calculates will be the quota of the population of the earth in 1988 of that race. Mr. Gladstone some time since, we believe, anticipated that the Anglo-Saxons would be 1,000 millions strong at the end of another century. The consensus of opinion seems to be that the race is now rapidly advancing in numbers, and that within the next 100 or 120 years they will rather more than half fill the globe as at present populated! No race since the world began has ever multiplied like this, doubling its numbers for a century at the rate of about once in 30 years! To these, our Anglo-Saxon nations, is the great distinction granted of such capacity of rapid increase, that our occupation of the whole earth as the dominant race is only a question of time. Other writers of the secular press of the day follow Mr. Axon and Mr. Gladstone. They tell us, as the Times did once, that "the most increasing people in the world are found in the United Kingdom, in France the least. And that is not half the tale. So increasing at home are we, that we are filling continents, fringing oceans, and making the whole world our home." "We are overflowing our old boundaries and we are peopling the globe!" (see and compare Gen. xlix. 22). Whether the present rates of increase during the coming century will be maintained for the whole empire, like that which obtains now in Australasia only, we cannot of course predict; but it seems very likely that that will be the result. In that case the Anglo-Saxons alone will represent the moiety of the inhabitants of the globe, and their subject races will be about 300 millions more, leaving only three or four hundred millions not belonging to their truly magnificent Empire. When five-sevenths of the people of the globe own one sceptre, speak one language, and belong also to one dominant race, who can doubt that the earth will at last become their heritage, and the government of it theirs? There must be some cause for this, some secret which explains the extraordinary fact? The secret is not far to find. It is our Israelitish origin. Because this nation is Ephraim-Israel God has blessed her as He promised to bless His people in "the latter days." He has made her to be as "the dust of the earth," as "the stars of heaven," as "the sand which is on the sea-shore, for multitude." He has given her to occupy "the ends, the coasts, and the uttermost parts of the earth," and planted her in colonies, and then as "a company or assemblage of nations" to the West first, then to the East, and to the North and to the South. He has given her by reason of her vast numbers the command of the ocean, and to secure it "The Gates of her enemies" on all the ocean highways of the world; He has awarded to her "the power to get wealth," that He may thus "establish His covenant which He swear unto their fathers as it is this day." (See in the following order the authorities for the above in God's Word: Gen. xlix. 1, 22—26; xiii. 16; xvii. 5; xxii. 17; Hosea i. 10; Isa. xxvi. 15; Jer. xxxi. 7 8; Psa. ii. 8; Gen. xxxv. 11; xlviii. 19; xxviii. 14; xxii. 17; Deut. viii. 18, &c.).

Digitized by Google

British civilization, therefore, will be the ruling civilization of the earth one hundred years hence. It will be Christian in its character and beneficent in its operation. It will exercise the birthright of Ephraim by ruling the world merely to bless it, and by blessing the world to rule it. God promised to Abraham that in his seed "all nations, families and kindreds of the earth should be blessed" (Gen. xviii. 18; xxii. 18; xxviii. 14; Acts iii. 25), and already the British folk are responding to that prophecy by "blossoming and budding and filling the face of the world with (Bible and Gospel) fruit." Even now Isa. lxi. 9, R.V. is true of this nation: "Our seed is known among the nations, and our offspring among the peoples; all that see us acknowledge us, that we are the seed that the Lord hath blessed." To Him must be all the praise!

EPISTLES TO THE JEWS CONCERNING THE TEN TRIBES OF ISRAEL.

SECOND EPISTLE.

By the Rev. Eliezer Bassin, C.M., Edinburgh.

THE PREDICTED PUNISHMENT OF EPHRAIM-ISRAEL.

(Continued from page 378).

My dear Brethren of the House of Judah,—Having invited you in my first epistle to search for the Ten Tribes, we will now continue our enquiry in the light of the parable there mentioned, and I think the best way will be to begin with the book of the prophet Hosea, who had a special mission to the Ten-Tribed kingdom of Israel.

There we see that God spoke to the rebellious people of Israel, at sundry times, by the mouth of the prophets, and as simple words did not make a great impression on them, He resolved to make known the punishment He intended to bring on them by actions which would draw their attention. Therefore Jehovah said unto Hosea, Go and proclaim My decision in a new form, no more in words only, but by a peculiar act. That was to marry a profligate woman; the people would naturally ask how he, a holy man, could do such a thing, and he would tell them that it was the very thing which God, the Holy One of Israel, had done in marrying them—that Israel was as sinful as any other nation. God commanded them to return from their sin and be holy, but they would not; therefore God was determined to divorce them and bring upon them a great calamity. Much has been said by Jewish and Christian writers on the subject of Hosea's marriage. Some affirm that it was simply a transaction performed in a vision. The reason of such an interpretation is on account of the impropriety of the action. Some contend for the historical truth of the event, and maintain that all impropriety was done away with by God's command, and that the immediate minister of God might, consistently with the design of his appointment, be employed thus to illustrate the scandalous conduct of the Israelites. I will not enter on the subject of these divers opinions, for that is not my object in bringing the prophet Hosea to your notice. My only object is to see what was the determination of God in regard to the Ten-Tribed Kingdom; so that whether the prophet's marriage was real or fictitious, it may, with equal consistency, be represented as figurative.

Under the figure of the adulterous woman it represented the great idolatry of the Ten Tribes, which provoked God to cast them off utterly, for a time, but not for ever. This we can see by a careful study of the book of the prophet Hosea; firstly, the condition of the woman Gomer was similar to that of the Israelites, who had departed from the true God and had polluted themselves with idols, often called in the scripture by the names, whoredom and fornication. Secondly, the figure of the names of the three children, Jezreel, Lo-Ruhamah, and Lo-Ammi, is the picture of the fate hanging over the Kingdom of Ephraim.

The signification of the word Jezreel, according to etymology, is, God disperses, or sows; but it has also an allusion to the place Jezreel, where a great judgment of God was executed upon the House of Ahab, King of Israel, when Jehu was anointed King by one of the sons of the prophet sent by Elisha (2 Kings ix.).

Jehu, when anointed king, was commanded by God to smite the house of Ahab, and to avenge the blood of God's servants, the prophets, and the blood of all His servants, at the hand of Jezebel, and the whole house of Ahab was to perish; this was done by Jehu at Jezreel, as related in 2 Kings ix. 10. The prophet Hosea proclaims by the figure of the name of his son Jezreel, that the royal house and along with it all Israel, are now anew to become a Jezreel, i.e., that the same divine judgment which was once manifested at Jezreel was to be exhibited again.

The house of Jehu and all Israel were to become a Jezreel, in as far as judgment was concerned, because they had become a Jezreel with respect to guilt, and because, as in former times, at Jezreel, blood that had been shed cried to the Lord for vengeance.

Had the Israelites hearkened to the prediction of the prophet, and repented, God would have had mercy upon them, and would not have brought the evil which was determined upon them, but as they would not return, God informed them by the name of the second child of the prophet, Lo-Ruhamah, that He would not continue mercy, for they should not abide in the land any longer, but "I will utterly carry them away," saith Jehovah. Here the prophet Hosea seems to have argued with the Ephraimites in this way: should you say, "Oh, it is not true that God has determined to carry us away from the land, on account of His covenant with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and He will neither destroy us nor cast us away from His presence," hear therefore what God says, "But I will have mercy on the House of Judah, and will save them," who are also the children of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. The prophet further informs them "that the saving of the House of Judah will not be by bow, nor by sword, nor by battle, by horses, nor by horsemen, but by Jehovah their God." Mercy is here promised to Judah at the time when Israel should not find mercy.

The intention of Hosea in describing the mercy which their brethren should experience, was to rouse Israel from their false security, and to direct their attention to the bad foundation of the entire constitution of their political and ecclesiastical affairs.

Mercy was shown to Judah in a most wonderful way, as we read in 2 Kings xix., and that mercy is still greater when we read chapter xvii. of the same book, and see the different fates of the two Houses during the Assyrian dominion. Furthermore, divine mercy was shown to Judah, even when they were carried away into captivity about 150 years later. Contrary to all human expectations, their affairs soon took a favourable turn, while the withholding of mercy from Ephraim was continued. And here we see that the announcement of the prophet was not a human vision. It was by means of this contrast with the lot of Judah that the announcement of the lot of Ephraim appeared in its true light.

The kingdom of Israel would have been delivered no less than the kingdom of Judah, had they listened to the prophet's message, and repented, but as they did not return to God, the third announcement is made to them in the name of the prophet's third child. God said to Hosea, "Call his name Lo-Ammi," i.e., not My people, "for you are not My people, and I will not be your God."

The fulfilment of this we see in 2 Kings xvii. 18, "And the Lord was very angry with Israel, and removed them out of His sight, and there was none left but the tribe of Judah alone." See also Isaiah vii. For Israel to become Lo-Ammi (not My people), no more known to the world as the covenant people of God, could only be done by driving them out of the land promised to their fathers, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, thus losing their Identity as Israel. How that should come to pass the prophet declares (chapter ii. 8, in Hebrew, and 6 in English) that God was to hedge up the way of the Ten Tribes with thorns, and make a wall so that they should not find their path; that is, that they would lose all their connection with the land which is the house of God, their Husband, and in a few generations they would even forget that they were of Abraham's stock, and in this way a wall would be built between their past and present.

Digitized by Google

In studying the book of Hosea, we see quite clearly that Ephraim-Israel was to be lost to themselves, and also to other nations. But "God is not a Man that He should lie," or not fulfil the unconditional special blessings He promised to Abraham, that his descendants should become great, mighty, and prosperous, therefore the prophet says (Hosea ii. 1 in Hebrew, and i. 10 in English), "And the number of the children of Israel shall be as the sand of the sea, which cannot be measured nor numbered, and it shall come to pass that in the place where it was said unto them, Ye are not My people; there it shall be said unto them, Ye are the children of the living God."

Professor Hengstenberg, in his Christology of the Old Testament, says, "The first point which requires to be determined is the subject of the verse. Every other reference, except that to the Ten Tribes, is here out of the question; inasmuch as the same who, in the preceding verse, were called Lo-Ammi are now to be called sons of the living God. Several of the ancient expositors here assume a sudden transition to the Christian church; but such would be a salto mortale, or "deadly leap." Nor are we to understand by the children of Israel all the descendants of Jacob; for the children of Judah are distinguished from them in verse 2. Substantially, however, those too are included, as appears from this very verse; for both shall then form one nation of brethren. But here the prophet views only one portion, because to this only did the preceding threaten, and the mission of the prophet in general, extend. From this also it may be explained how the prophet may apply to the part the promises of Genesis, which there refer to the whole. The reference to these promises in the first part of the verse cannot be at all mistaken. Compare especially, as agreeing most literally, the passage in Genesis xxii. 17, "I will multiply thy seed as the stars of heaven, and as the sand which is upon the sea shore," and xxxii. 13, "I will make thy seed as the sand of the sea, which is not numbered, for multitude."

So, according to the above passage, we must look for Ephraim-Israel among the great nations; for some would like to make out that they are a few here and a few there.

With God's help we will continue our search for the House of Joseph in the next epistle, but before closing this, I would like to point out to those who know a little Hebrew, that the translation of the word Bimkome into "instead of," in Hosea i. 10, as given by some translators, is not correct, and when you compare Lev. iv. 24, 33; Jer. xxii. 12; Ezek. xxi. 35 in Hebrew, or 30 in English; Neh. iv. 14 in Hebrew, or 20 in English, you will see that the words Bimkome Asher can only mean "in the place where," or, more literally still, "in the place that." The explanation is that the whole succeeding sentences together express only one substantive idea, equivalent to "in the place of being said unto them." The place is no other than that where they lost their Israelitish identity. (This is according to Hengstenberg, Jonathan, and others).

Therefore, to you, my brethren, who believe that the time of the union of Judah and Israel is near at hand, I appeal to search earnestly for our brethren, the larger House of Israel, and go to them and learn from them how they became the children of God, for surely by this time they are in the fulfilment of the prophecy of Hosea, that the Lo-Ammi will become the children of the living God.

IS FEDERATION A PROPHETIC NECESSITY FOR EPHRAIM-ISRAEL?

A QUESTION comes to us from the Iron Dockyard, Devonport, from one who lives, it seems, at Aylesbury, to the following effect, "Are we justified in so confidently anticipating an Imperial Federation of our Colonies? May it not be that God intends them to become separate nations, lovingly attached nevertheless, to their old mother?"

This question involves the one above set out: "Is Federation a prophetic necessity for Ephraim-Israel, that is, for the British Empire? Is it possible to imagine that God meant, by the words 'A nation and a company of nations shall be of thee,' to imply that Ephraim was to develop into a large number of independent colonial nations, held together only by loyal sentiment?" We must refer to the Word of God before we can give any reply to this new difficulty! To Abraham the prophecy was general in its scope. We read in Gen. xvii. 4 (R.V.) "As for Me, behold My covenant is with thee, and thou shalt be the father of a multitude of nations." We cannot determine from this promise whether these nations were to be a federated cluster of nations or not. The promise to Jacob, however, comes next, in Gen. xxxv. 11, "And God said to him, I am God Almighty; be fruitful and multiply, a nation and a company of nations shall be of thee, and kings shall come out of thy loins." Here the word is "Qahâl," a congregation, "convention," "what is called together," clearly indicating a "body united," acting together for offence and defence, never implying, we believe, separation or independent action. The same word occurs in Numbers xxii. 4: "Now shall this multitude lick up all that is round about us;" in Jer. xxxi. 8: "A great company shall they return hither;" and in Ezek. xvi. 40, xvii. 17, and twelve other passages in Ezekiel; and means in each case as in Gen. xxxv. 11: "A united body of individuals acting in concert."

It is when we get to Gen. xlviii. 19 that the meaning of the promise comes out. "Manasseh," said Jacob, "shall be a people, and he shall be great, and truly his younger brother (Ephraim) shall be greater than he, and his seed shall become a multitude or fulness of nations" (melo-hag-goim). Here Manasseh's greatness as a single united people is contrasted with Ephraim's many but united nations, and the comparative greatness of the latter is declared to be a fact, because Ephraim is not to become one people only, like Manasseh, but many nations in one Empire, therefore greater even than "great but single Manasseh." The whole comparison hinges on the fact of Ephraim's Empire being one and indivisible, yet composed of "many nations," many-sided, but one. What is predicted then of Ephraim-Israel is, that their Empire must contain in it a multitude of homogeneous nations, one in race, language, religion, and customs, &c.; somehow united so as to form what in modern parlance we call "a Federation of States."

It appears then that Federation is indeed a prophetic necessity for Ephraim-Britain's Empire. This appears more apparent still, when we reflect that when the Return takes place there will be a rejoinder and restoration of all the Tribes of the children of Israel, even Manasseh taking his part by the side of the other Twelve Tribes, in the enjoyment of his own God-allotted portion of the inheritance in Palestine. Then Ephraim, Manasseh and Judah will be "two nations and two kingdoms" no longer, but one nation in the land, and one kingdom upon the mountains of Israel, one king being king to them all" (Ezek. xxxvii. 22, R.V.). As a preparation for that glorious consummation, the present condition of Ephraim's Empire is to become "a Federation of States such as the world never saw before," as the Times once wrote, and that Federation is even now casting its bright shadow before it in the anticipations everywhere expressed that it is an absolute necessity, and sure to come.

This is the time of colossal nations. Germany, France and Russia are increasing their dominions, and strengthening thei powers of offence and defence. Our Colonies, nations though they are, are widely separated from each other, and at present weak in population; they therefore cannot, without help from their Mother in the Western Isles, hope to oppose, singly and unaided, the naval and military strength of such nations as these, which are becoming also powerful at sea. Federation then is safety for these our outlying Daughters, who, growing rich, are therefore becoming now a tempting prey for our grasping German, Russian and French neighbours. To prevent this catastrophe God, we see, has arranged that Ephraim-Israel is to become, by colonization, a divided yet united Empire, as it is this day; divided by seas and hemispheres, yet united by the silken but adamantine thread of the viceroyalties which truly represent the British-Israelite throne in every one of our ten outlying colonial nations.

Digitized by Google

But Federation, to be perfect, must be something more than this; it must be a "confederacy" which gives protection to our Colonies, the naval protection of the Mother Country; the costs of which must be borne in due proportions by the protecting mother and by her giant, protected daughters. This must be a Federation too, which gives some voice to the outlying Colonies in Imperial Councils, whereby the questions of peace and war affecting their distant lands shall not be settled behind their backs and without their sanction and approval. How this will come about, when and by what means, none may tell, till the event. But it seems to us that it will be brought about, easily and naturally, under the pressure of some great and terrible national danger, affecting the Colonies chiefly, when our daughter-nations will come to their "old Mother in the West" for succour and safety; and will then gladly accept Federation, its risks and liabilities, as the only alternative in the face of great disasters. Then will come fully to pass, as the outcome of Our Identity, be it noted, the Lord's promise to Jacob, "A nation and a 'company' of nations shall be of thee!"

TWO OPPONENTS FROM THE ANTIPODES.

By a recent Australian mail we received two newspapers from the Antipodes, one, the Daily Telegraph of June 9, from Launceston, Tasmania, and the other, the Bible Echo and Signs of the Times for the month of May, 1888, from Melbourne. These papers we conclude, were sent us by believers in Launceston and Melbourne respectively, in order that we might see what Colonial opponents had to say against us, and if possible answer them. We have to thank our kind friends in these two far-off lands, and congratulate them on having stirred up so great an interest in our cause that grave and respectful opposition has been raised to the subject of Our Identity, and that in Launceston a crowded meeting assembled to hear Pastor Soltau tell them that the British are located in a portion of the earth where Japhet the son of Noah, and his descendants settled, and that therefore the "present bulk of evidence" did not satisfy him that the British are Israel. The other Melbourne opponent gave several reasons for the contention that the Ten Tribes were always in the land of Canaan, save during the seventy years' captivity, and that they remained in union with the Jews till Christ came, after which there are no Israelites to be found or restored, but "he is an Israelite now who is one in heart, and not outwardly." To enable our friends here to gauge the depth and value of these two opponents, we beg to reproduce the two notices we have received, before we endeavour to reply to them. The Tasmanian shall lead the way:—

Anglo-Israelism.—Yesterday evening Pastor Soltau delivered a lecture in the schoolroom of the Memorial Church, entitled, "Is Anglo-Israelism right or wrong?" The hall was crowded to its fullest capacity, and the question was handled by the speaker in an able, exhaustive, and impartial manner, the arguments adduced by the supporters of both views of the question being fairly criticised and contrasted, the main points of agreement and disagreement being specifically brought forward in detail. Tracing from Noah, he pointed out the portions of the world in which his three sons immediately settled, the kingdoms which their descendants founded at a very early age, their spread, disruption, and the formation of other nations. From his deductions he drew the inference that the English people were the descendants of Japhet, not Shem, from whom Abraham, and subsequently the House of Israel, sprung, and that consequently, so far as the present bulk of evidence went, it did not appear to him to support the contention that the English race were the direct descendants of the House of Israel.

The Melbourne adversary wrote more at length, and his remarks, which are endorsed by The Bible Echo and Signs of the Times, are to the following effect:—

ISRAEL.

Since it has become a point of some importance, in view of the theories entertained by some upon this subject, to determine whether or not the Ten Tribes have been lost, as is claimed, or whether they were recognised as existing in the land of Palestine, from their first settlement there till the days of Christ, we wish to offer the following considerations bearing upon the point:—

1. The Ten Tribes which revolted from Rehoboam, and were carried away captive in the days of Hoshea, were not, after their removal "out of the sight of the Lord," recognized as Israel (2 Kings xvii. 1, 23).

2. After these Ten Tribes, as many of them as still persisted in their revolt, were carried away, the Twelve Tribes still existed in the land of Judah; for all such as set their hearts to seek after the Lord God of Israel, out of all the Tribes of Israel, disgusted with the idolatry of Jeroboam, came to Jerusalem to sacrifice unto the God of their fathers (2 Chron. xi. 13—16).

3. At the end of the seventy years' captivity, when Cyrus made proclamation for the restoration of the house of the Lord at Jerusalem, he gave liberty to all the people of Israel throughout his realm, who were so minded, to return to their own native land (Ezra i. 2, 3). And this favour was granted throughout all Media where the Ten Tribes were in captivity, as well as in Chaldea, and Assyria, where the Jews were in captivity. Prideaux's Connection, vol. 1, book 3. Many of those who belonged to the Ten Tribes availed themselves of this decree; and hence we read in 1 Chron. ix. 1, 3 that there dwelt in Jerusalem, not only the children of Benjamin and Judah, but also of Ephraim and Manasseh; and we find again still later (Neh. vii. 73), and all Israel (an expression never applied to any other than the Twelve Tribes) dwelt in their cities.

4. We learn from the history above quoted, p. 160, that according to the authority of Jewish writers, the "Urim and Thummim" was established "to ask counsel only about that which belonged to the common interest of all Israel; and therefore, whenever the high priest asked counsel of God in this way, it was with the names of all the Tribes of Israel upon his breast to denote that what was asked was for the common interest of all of them." Let us apply this fact to the question under consideration. In the ministrations of the sanctuary, this side the captivity, did not the high priest, on the day of atonement, bear into the most holy place upon his breast the breast-plate of judgment, which contained the names of the Twelve Tribes of Israel?—Of course; as much as he did before. Then was not the ministration then performed, for the common interest of all Israel?—Certainly. Every Tribe whose name was on the breast-plate of judgment had an interest in the services therewith performed; and had there been but Two Tribes recognised as existing about Jerusalem at that time, it would have been proper that they only should be represented on the breast-plate. But as we find no notice of anything of this kind, we conclude that each Tribe retained its name upon the breast-plate of judgment, and maintained its existence in the land, and that those only were recognised as Israel, who still persevered in adhering to the worship of the true God, as ordained for that dispensation.

From these few considerations alone, regardless of many others which might be offered, it is sufficiently evident that the Twelve Tribes maintained an uninterrupted existence in the land of Canaan, except, perhaps, during the seventy years' captivity, till the days of Christ, since which time he is an Israelite indeed who is one at heart, and not outwardly. And the view, therefore, which claims that there are Ten Tribes of literal Israel somewhere existing, who must at some time in the future be restored in order that great and gracious promises which are supposed to concern them may be fulfilled. is a dangerous fallacy, unworthy of our serious belief.

Digitized by Google

Such are the arguments of the two quite independent opponents, who agree only in one point; a resolve, namely, that the British shall not be mistaken for the Ten Tribes, since the latter were Shemetic Israelites, whereas the British are non-Israelite, Japhetic, Gentiles. We proceed now to ask the Tasmanian pastor why "the English people" must necessarily be of Japhetic origin, because he thinks the British Islands were once the portion of Noah's son Japheth? There seems to be no reason in the assertion! For God's Word, which tells us where the sons of Noah founded Empires and States in a general way, also declares to us that Ephraim, the Ten Tribes, would be found in the Christian dispensation, before the Return, in the west (Hosea xi. 10. R.V.); "in Islands afar off" from Palestine (Jer. xxxi. 10, R.V.), first "mingled with the Gentile nations," "wandering among them," and then "gathered from out of them," domiciled in a God "appointed place" of safety, in "the north country" or "land of the north" (Hosea ix. 17, Amos ix. 9, Ezek. xi. 16, 17, 2 Sam. vii. 10, Jer. iii. 18, xxiii. 8, R.V.). All these considerations point to the conclusion that the House of Ephraim or the Ten Tribes of Israel were not likely to be confined to the original habitat of the Semetic races, but would rather be found at last as a Gentile people, Gentilized, dwelling in a Gentile, Japhetic country, and known to be of Gomer or Japhet (Gen x. 2; Hosea i. 3, R.V.) In response to prophecy our pastor Soltau declares that the British are Japhetic Gentiles, because they lived where Japhet the son of Noah settled his descendants after the flood, which is a conclusion about as reasonable as would be his announcement (if he were to make it) that the African slaves, of the American United States, must be Red Indians, because they are found now in regions where those Aborigines once were settled.

Having reduced the pastor's argument to an absurdity, we turn now to the Melbourne writer, whose name it appears is "U. S." His declaration is that the Ten Tribes never were "lost," but have all along been in union with the Two Tribes, or Jews. To prove this point he starts with an assertion to which we can give the fullest adhesion. "The Ten Tribes after their captivity under Hosea, by the Assyrians, were never recognised again as Israel." He quotes 2 Kings xvii. 1—23 to prove that; and we may add Hosea i. 1—9, Isa. lxv. 1, and other texts to support the fact. They were after their captivity known as God's "Lo-Ammi," therefore "hidden," "disguised," Israelites and Gentiles ostensibly to this day. But then the opponent adds a contradictory statement (sec. 2). The Ten Tribes were, he says, carried away as respects those who persisted in their revolt. Yet the Twelve Tribes existed in Palestine still united! From Twelve we take Ten Tribes, and yet Twelve remain! This is strange arithmetic! We were taught at school that if ten be removed from twelve, only two would be the residuum! The writer, however, goes to Scripture for his proof, and says he finds it in 2 Chron. xi. 13—16. We find there nothing of the sort! We read here that the strength Rehoboam received, whatever it was, lasted only three years, and that after all it only consisted of this, that the Levites in a body seceded to him, and that the godly Israelites went up to Jerusalem periodically to worship according to God's commands, such obedience however only lasting three years! There was no permanent change of domicile. But U. S. has a third ground of objection. When the seventy years of captivity were over, Cyrus' proclamation invited "all the people of Israel" to go back, which he adds, in the teeth of Josephus (Antiquit. xi. 5, 2), that the Ten Tribes accordingly did, as regards "many" of them.

In reply, we may remind our opponent at Melbourne that according to his own admission (sec. 1) there were no such people named as Israel of the Ten Tribes after the captivity to Media, and that therefore as only "the Lord's people" could return under Cyrus' proclamation, and the Ten Tribes were "not His people," not known as, or named Israel, they would not return, or make use of a permission that did not affect or include them. That we are right and U. S. wrong, Josephus proves! so did Jerome in the 5th century A.D., so do the Jews at this hour, for they admit that the Ten Tribes are lost, and are yet to be found, and therefore are not now with them! But, says U. S., the statement in 1 Chron ix. 1—3 proves that the Ten Tribes were located in Palestine, on the return. We deny that assertion in toto! U. S. reads verse 1 of that chapter incorrectly! Let him turn to the Revised Version, and see there that "all Israel" is distinguished from Judah, and that it was only "Judah was carried away captive to Babylon for their transgression." From ver. 3 to 22; the sacred writer gives us the names of those ordained to office by David and Samuel the seer, and the enumeration had nothing to do with the settlement of the land after the Babylonian captivity returned! The date of the former occurrences was B.C. 1200, while that of the Return was B.C. 536.

We notice that U. S. declares that the Scriptural term "all Israel" never applied to any other than the Twelve Tribes! We recommend our rather rash opponent to study the following passages to teach him his error:—2 Chron. x. 16, xi. 3, 13; 2 Sam. ii. 9, iii. 12, v. 5, etc. In most of these the term "all Israel" is applied to only a part of the Twelve Tribes, not to the whole Twelve at all, as U. S. declares! The argument (sec. 4), grounded on the use of the Urim and Thummim is clearly invalid. The Twelve Tribes were and are always one in God's sight, to whom there is no past or present, but always one eternal "now." He regards the Tribes as one nation, even when divided. So in 1 Kings xviii. 21, Elijah commemorated the United Kingdom when he approached God, though only the Ten-Tribed House of Israel were present on the ground of Carmel. The twelve stones in the breastplate only represented the same fact, that the Twelve Tribes were in existence, and were in God's sight still united, though separated for a little moment. There is no argument here to found thereon the fact that the Twelve Tribes were then in the land. We conclude, then, that U. S. is in error, and that he has not read the Scriptures carefully. The "dangerous fallacy" unworthy of serious belief is therefore not ours, but that of our Melbourne opponent. For if he be correct he sweeps away scores of God's promises to Israel, which He has never fulfilled to them, but has, contrary to His oath and covenants, made good to Japhetic, British, non-Israelite, Gentiles, to "the disgrace of the throne of His glory!" (Jer. xiv. 21, R.V.). Is U. S. prepared for this horrid alternative? Will he not rather say, "God forbid" to such dishonouring thoughts, which help the atheist and infidel, and are directly contrary to Scripture, as well as to the testimony of the great Jewish historian, Josephus?

THE QUEEN'S NEW EMPIRE.

A SCHEME TO ABSORB AFRICA AS INDIA WAS CONQUERED AND ABSORBED.

(From New York World.)

LONDON, May 25.—Within the past few days Queen Victoria has, quietly and unobserved, succeeded in adding to her dominions a vast empire almost continental in size, and peopled by some seventy millions of industrious and relatively prosperous inhabitants. The immense tract which has just been constituted as British territory extends from Zanzibar northward as far as Abyssinia, with a seaboard of over seventeen hundred miles in length. Westward it reaches to beyond the Victoria Nyanza and the other great lakes from which the Nile takes its source, and includes the finest lands and richest markets of Central Africa.

Mindful of the fact that England owes her Canadian Dominion and her great Indian Empire to the Hudson's Bay Company and the defunct East India Company respectively, Lord Salisbury's Government has in the present instance proceeded with the same characteristic caution.

Digitized by Google

A royal charter based on the lines of that of the old East India Company has been granted to a powerful association promoted chiefly by Lady Burdett-Coutts and constituted under the name of the East African Company. The latter is authorized thereby to take possession of the district in question, to exercise justice, to collect revenue, to deal with refractory subjects "by force of arms," and, in fact, to wield all the power of a semi-independent Government.

With laudable foresight the charter states that the extent of the territory westward of the great Central African lakes "has not as yet been exactly delimited." But as the Chairman of the new East African Company is the millionnaire Scotch merchant Mackinnon, who is the principal shareholder in King Leopold's Congo enterprise and the financial backer of Henry Stanley's "rescuing expedition," it may be fairly taken for granted that within a short time the clutches of John Bull will reach right across the African continent.

Without discussing the incredible impudence of Lord Salisbury in thus granting to a London company a rich, prosperous and populated country to which he has no vestige of a right, it is most interesting to watch the absolutely cold-blooded manner in which John Bull proceeds to satisfy his notorious land-grabbing instincts. A comparison of the boundaries of the British empire in 1837, when Queen Victoria ascended the throne, with those of to-day, is extremely instructive, and the question arises as to what measures England will be driven to adopt for the purpose of gratifying her greed when, in a very short time, every speck of land between the North and South poles will have been appropriated by one Power or another.

The above appeared in the Montreal Daily Witness of June 8, 1888, and though it seems to err by exaggerating the extent of the new territory, now recognised as a British possession or protectorate, it defines the situation very clearly. We alluded to this matter under the heading, "A further expansion of the empire," on pages 88 and 89 of the present volume of the BANNER OF ISRAEL, showing how the new "British East African Company" was likely to make an opening for British commerce and emigration in a fine healthy region of Central Africa, with a British Gate at the seaboard to depend on, and a fifty years' lease to begin with.

The Montreal Daily Witness and the New York World see as clearly as we do where all this tends, and are virtuously angry at Lord Salisbury's "incredible impudence" in thus granting to a London company a rich and populous country to which he has no right at all. It affects to feel horror at the enormous increase of the Queen's Empire since she ascended the throne in 1837, and wonder what we shall do as a nation when every speck of land between the north and south Poles has been appropriated by one Power or another of the earth? To answer such a question we must go to the Word of God, and see there what His will is in respect to the dominion of His people Israel, in the final condition of the planet. There we find it stated, that "Abraham and his seed" are "the heir of the world" (Rom. iv. 13), and that to Israel "the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdoms under the whole heaven, are to be given as the people of the saints of the Most High; His kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey Him" (Dan. vii. 27, R.V.). The Montreal, or New York writer then, need be under no alarm at all! "The earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof," and He in His sovereignty has decreed that He will Himself, by God the Son, Jehovah-Jesus, rule this earth, by and through "the people of the saints of the Most High, even the children of Israel, a people near to Him" (Praise ye the Lord!) (Psalm cxlviii. 14, R.V.). The British nation is God's chosen people Israel, and therefore it is quite natural and proper, according to God's will and Christ's purpose, that step by step and bit by bit, they should acquire the dominion of the earth, first in India, then in North America, Australia, Australasia, North Borneo, South, Central, North, East, and West Africa, and so acquiring the command, bring all the earth into the obedience of Christ, the King. We are glad to know that Africa bids fair, like India, Australasia, and North America, to "fall into the clutches of John Bull," the Ten-Tribed House of Joseph, Ephraim-Israel, and when Africa from end to end thus becomes British, like Hindostan and Australia, we shall recognise the fact as a new proof of the faithfulness of God to His people; and a new sign that His advent to take up the sceptre of the whole earth is near at hand. May that day speedily arrive, and His shall then be all the praise!

Review.

The Origin, Progress, and Establishment of the Kingdom of God in the World. By Surgeon-General J. M. Grant, M.D. London: Robert Banks and Son, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C. Price 2s. 6d.; 1888.

(Concluded from page 402).

PART II.

DR. GRANT is very clear and decided in his teaching regarding the Gentilization of Israel. He points out the Scriptural distinction between an Israelite and a Gentile in his fifth chapter. The difference, he says, was simply this. The Israelite "was in covenant with God, under the law of Moses, and the other was not." Therefore, the Ten Tribes, when sent into captivity and divorced from the Mosaic covenant became Gentile, and remain so to this day. When the apostle Paul then said on the rejection of the Gospel by the Jews that he would "turn to the Gentiles," it does not follow that he meant the heathen nations. He knew that prophecy announced the acceptance of the Gospel as a nation by Israel only (Ezek. xx. 32—37, and Hosea i. 10), but that the heathen world would not receive it. Our author shows that Scripture supports this position, and points to Gen. xlviii. 19 to prove that Ephraim was destined to develop into "a teeming Gentile nation," "overflowing the world." To these, as the chosen Gentile nation, yet Israelitish in origin, the Gospel was committed for communication to the other nations of the world, "so that the plain teaching of the Bible is, that in the unchangeable purpose of God, a knowledge of Him should be attained under the New Testament dispensation, as under the Old, only by intercourse and communication with His chosen people Israel" (page 59).

When we reach Dr. Grant's sixth chapter on "The New Covenant," we confess to a feeling of disappointment. In this portion of his work, after ably pointing out that the temporal as well as the spiritual portions of God's covenants with Israel must be under fulfilment at this time to that House, as distinguished from Judah, he adds that the new covenant with which St. Paul was dealing in Heb. viii., and Jeremiah in chapter xxxi., has, he thinks, a national, but not an individual application, and that "in that sense it may be said to have had a more or less complete fulfilment "in every Christian people, ourselves among the number, for surely the Lord may be said to be known from the least to the greatest of us, when He is preached from the barrack of the Salvation Army to the lofty cathedral!" He gives his opinion that "this prophecy mainly referred to the conversion of Israel from heathenism, when they said one to another, 'Know the Lord' that is, preached Him from mouth to mouth, as contrasted with the time when He should be universally acknowledged as the God of the nation." Surely we have here a complete alteration in the scope of a prophecy strictly tied up in verses 33, 34, to the House of Israel only, and thus the transfer without Scriptural authority of the blessing so conferred to "every Christian people," even if outside Israel. Further, when the text tells us how the national and individual change is to be effected, even by the conversion of each individual of the race, by means of the engraving of God's law in each Israelite's heart and mind, it is a disappointing thing to find so sturdy a champion for the literal interpretation of God's Word (when and where possible), as is Dr. Grant, accommodating the text so as really to contradict it flatly, and explain away its assertions, because hitherto "it cannot be said of any people that the law of God is written in their hearts," and because, even in the Millennium, there will be iniquity and that which offends in Christ's kingdom." Our main hope and expectation in connection with Our Identity is that the day is approaching when our whole British race will be a vast assemblage of truly converted men and women, not sinless or faultless before God, far from that; but an empire of true Christians, "sons of the living God," all repentant, pardoned, and accepted sinners, because all believers in the Lord Jesus Christ. The doings of the Salvation Army and the High Church ritual of our cathedrals do not, alas! affect our masses or bring about in all ranks of our people now that change of heart answerable to the promise in Heb. viii. 10—12, and of this fact our author is doubtless well aware. Our Lord's words to Nicodemus, further, in John iii. 3, and 5, R.V., seem to us decisive that no Israelite and no professing Christian either will ever "see" or "enter into the kingdom" of God unless he be "born again," "of water and the Spirit;" unless, in fact, "the new covenant" blessing of Heb. viii. be his. And this seems to involve more than our author looks for, since he believes that the new covenant implies only a national, general change, and not that personal one in heart and head, the individual conversion, which regards God's laws as supreme, and the "knowledge" of God, personal salvation. The "kingdom of God" is indeed not outward only, or national only, exclusive of individual heart-work. It is "righteousness, peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost" for each person separately, according to Rom. xiv. 17 and Heb. viii. 10—12.

Digitized by Google

(In connection with chapter vi., p. 63, of Dr. Grant's book, we would notice, for the reader's sake, a slight error. The reference should be to the 26th chapter of Isaiah, not to the 25th).

In the chapter (vii.) which deals with the "end of the world," our author has some very distinct and original views in which he will hardly, we believe, get many to concur with him, such. for instance. as that the Jews will go back with Israel to their land in a converted, but not in an unconverted state (p. 71). He believes no unclean thing could be brought to the Lord as an "offering," and the Jews "are unclean, while they remain in unbelief."

We suppose Mr. G. Dimbleby, of Hull, would deny that the Jews in unbelief can be regarded "as unclean," but waving this point, we find from Ezek. xxxvi. 24—26, that the Jews' "new covenant," and change of heart, with their baptism of the Holy Spirit, are reserved till after their return to the land (compare Zech. xii. 7—10), and this seems to us to settle the question. God will accept the Jews just as they are, for Jesu's sake, and will look on them, like Israel, too, as clothed and covered with the righteousness of the Son of God, giving them faith to believe, but only after the events recorded in Zech. xii. shall have happened in the Promised Land.

The concluding pages of Dr. Grant's work are, to our mind, of momentous interest, and treated, as he has treated the matter, we do not think fault can be found with the way in which he has discussed questions, hidden from our gaze, it is true, but regarding which we have some pregnant Scriptural hints. He writes of the ages beyond the Millennium thus (pp. 105, 106). He founds his views on Psa. xliv. 6, and 1 Cor. xv 28, where alone he finds materials for insight into those distant times. "Thy throne is for ever and ever. The sceptre of Thy kingdom is a right sceptre." Christ's throne then, is to be eternal, but His kingdom is to be delivered up to the Father, and the Son, God's equal, is to be subject to Him. How? In the manner following:—

"The kingdom can be none other than God's own kingdom Israel, which having, like the leaven, assimilated all nations, and, like the stone cut out without hands, become a mountain and filled the whole earth, will now include the whole human race, which Christ, as the Second Adam, having redeemed, will present to the Father, sinless as before the Fall, restored to all the privileges, spiritual, intellectual, and physical, which Adam possessed, but intensified into a state of enjoyment in all three departments of their being which surpasses the power of thought; having an unconditional immortality, and restored to union with God, from which there can be no more separation. And it is obviously in this sense, in the sense of His humanity, and as the Second Adam, that the Son will be subject to the Father, reigning in obedience to Him as the glorified head of our human nature, and sharing it for ever and ever. . .

"We have reason to believe that the government of the Millennium will be that of the ages beyond it, because we read that the sceptre of Christ is a right sceptre, and that His throne is established for ever and ever. As the First Adam lost the dominion through sin, so will the Second and sinless Adam retain it throughout the ages of eternity."

With one more passage, which is a bright jewel in this brilliant book, we must conclude an already too long notice, The author was quoting Matt. xxi. 43, and said (pp. 110, 111), "Christ teaches plainly in this text that the faithful husbandman who would supplant the unbelieving Jews as the custodians of the Gospel were 'the stone which the builders rejected;' on turning to Psa. cxviii., from which He quotes, we find that this figure applies to the House of Israel, which He further identifies with 'the Stone Kingdom' by saying that it will grind to powder all upon whom it shall fall, while Daniel predicts of this Stone Kingdom that it will immediately succeed Rome as the dominant power in the world. A more complete and authoritative identification of Israel with the Stone Kingdom, and the Stone Kingdom with Great Britain, it is impossible to imagine."

The work we have thus passed in review is, we think, an excellent contribution to Our Identity literature. But it is not perfect. It has, we think, like all human performances, its faults, but they are very few.

Correspondence.

MR. SPURGEON AND ANGLO-ISRAEL.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR PHILO-ISRAEL,—A correspondent in this day's BANNER draws attention to Mr. Spurgeon's misquotation of Isa. lxiii. 16, which is in danger of becoming stereotyped to the disparagement of Mr. Spurgeon himself, for this expression of his is being bandied about in private correspondence as well as in the public prints.

We agree with Mr. Spurgeon that "we are not Jews." We are Israelites of the Ten Tribes, not of Judah. There we are in accord.

Both the Old and New Version do not mention Sarah in connection with Mr. Spurgeon's quotation. The passage reads thus, together with the context, which Mr. Spurgeon has most unaccountably overlooked. In fact, in quoting he could not have referred to his Bible at all. The passage is addressed to those mentioned in the 8th verse. "For He said, surely they are My people." 9th verse: "In all their afflictions He was afflicted." 10th verse: "But they rebelled." 11th verse: "Then He remembered the days of old, Moses and His people." 12th verse: "That led them by the right hand of Moses with His glorious arm." 13th verse: "That led them," etc. 14th verse: "So didst Thou lead Thy people." 15th verse: "Israel asks, looks down," etc. Barnes says on this verse: "The idea is, where is Thy former compassion for Thy people?" Ellicott:—Perhaps there is a latent remonstrance, as though Jehovah had ceased to manifest His care and pity for His people, as He had done of old.

Then comes the passage misquoted by Mr. Spurgeon, 16th verse: "Doubtless Thou art our Father, though Abraham be ignorant of us, and Israel (not Sarah) acknowledge us not; Thou, O Lord, art our Father, our Redeemer," etc.

Whose Father? Whose Redeemer? Go on to the next verse: "Return, for Thy servants' sake, the tribes of Thine inheritance." Next verse: "The people of Thy holiness." 19th verse: "We are Thine. Thou never bearest rule over them; they were not called by Thy name."

The whole passage, in fact the whole chapter, shows that Israel is represented here as having lapsed into a condition in which not only Abraham ignored them, and Israel (Jacob) acknowledged them not, but in which their Heavenly Father had hid His face, as it were, from them, so Israel says: "Return for Thy servants' sake, the tribes of Thine inheritance." Barnes says on this passage: "Though our parents refuse to own us we should confide in God." Ellicott:—"Abraham might disclaim his degenerate descendants, but Jehovah would still recognise them." So now the Jews, the children of the flesh, disclaim us the Israel of God, the children of the promise.

Unless Mr. Spurgeon be one of Abraham's descendants, and unless he belong to "the tribes of Thine inheritance," who existed when Isaiah wrote, and whom Jehovah "led by the right hand of Moses with His glorious arm," he can have no participation in this prophecy, and has no right to quote any portion of it as applicable to himself.

In future it would be well if our respected and time-honoured friend and brother, Mr. Spurgeon, were to consider the context in this case before again misquoting it as he has done, and before again misapplying it as he has done. Mr. Spurgeon, as many of us did once, regards "the theory (as he calls it) as a sheer piece of romance;" but we have even hope of Mr. Spurgeon's eyes being opened to the truth of God's Word in this particular.

Yours truly,

W. L. BLORE.

Hill House, Sandown, Isle of Wight, Sept. 5th, 1888.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed: "Philo-Israel," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

SUBSCRIPTIONS. £ s. d.

Annual Subscription for one copy weekly (including the Twelve Double Numbers) post free 0 7 6
Two Copies (including Double Numbers) 0 13 6
Three Copies ,, ,, ,, ... 1 0 4
Four Copies ,, ,, ,, ... 1 5 6
Six Copies ,, ,, ,, ... 1 16 4

Post Office Orders to be made payable at the head office, St. Martin's-le-grand, London, to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C., or F. W. PARRY & Co., 29, Paternoster-row, London.

The Editor cannot undertake to return rejected MSS. unless stamps for the purpose be sent. Parties requiring an answer should enclose a stamp.

Contents Bills and Show Cards may be obtained on application to the Publishers.

Advertisements should be sent to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

Prepaid Advertisements are inserted at the rate of thirty words for 1s. 4d.

Just published—Cloth, 2s. 6d.—a re-issue of

The Origin of Masonic Ritual and Tradition:

A Lecture on the Three Degrees, by BRO. WM. ROWBOTTOM, P.M., 1028, with facsimile of a very rare Masonic engraving published in 1789.

"Exquisitely clear and singularly correct in everything wherein I may be any authority or guide."—Professor PIAZZI SMYTH. "Will be found of considerable interest to many besides Masons."—Church Bells.

Oxford: S. Rowbottom and Son; London: R. Banks and Son, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C.; and F. W. Parry and Co., 29, Paternoster Row, E.C.

Price Five Shillings.—"Substantially and attractively got up, and profusely illustrated."—Oldham Chronicle.

Eildon Grange: A Tale.

By ANDREW CLARK, M.A., Vicar of St. Michael's, Oxford.

"One of the most charming books. . . . The illustrations are full of playful humour."—Scotsman. "The book is undoubtedly a happy one."—The Oxford Magazine. "Both entertaining and bracing."—Dundee Advertiser.

Oxford: S. Rowbottom and Son; London: Hamilton, Adams and Co., 32, Paternoster Row, E.C.

☞ Ask for this Book at the Libraries.

WORKS BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

The History of the House of Israel. How They Were Lost and How They Were Found. Told for the children. Price 6d., cloth 1s.; post free 7d. and 1s. 1d. Fifth edition.

Anglo-Israelism. True, Not False. Being Philo-Israel's Reply to the Rev. Canon Bell's pamphlet, "Anglo-Israelism: True or False?" Price 1d., 6s. 6d. per 100. 16 pages, crown 8vo.

An Elementary Digest or Sketch of the Chief Facts and Teachings of the Great Pyramid of Egypt. Adapted to the Unlearned and Unscientific 56 pages, Illustrated with Diagrams, price 4d., post free 5d. 10th Thousand.

Are the English People the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel? An Inquiry Establishing the Identity of the British Nation with the Lost Ten Tribes. 4d.

Our Identity: What it is Not; What it is; and Our Obligations To-day in Respect to it Being a Lecture recently delivered in London by Philo-Israel, and published by special request. Price 2d., a reduction for quantities.

Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

LUNG SAVE YOUR LIVES BY TAKING TONIC
LUNG OWBRIDGE'S TONIC
LUNG LUNG TONIC TONIC
LUNG THE MIGHTY HEALER. TONIC
LUNG It has a power over disease hitherto unknown in Medicine. TONIC
LUNG Are you at all Weak-chested or inclined to be Consumptive, with just a touch of Cough now and then? TONIC
LUNG "Try this Wonderful Medicine." The Cough and Weakness will disappear as if by magic, and you will feel a strength and power you never had before. TONIC
LUNG HAVE YOU A COUGH? TONIC
LUNG A DOSE WILL RELIEVE IT! TONIC
LUNG HAVE YOU A COLD? TONIC
LUNG A DOSE AT BEDTIME WILL TONIC
LUNG REMOVE IT. TONIC
LUNG Bronchitis & Asthma it relieves instantly TONIC
LUNG The Spasms of Coughing so dreadful in Whooping Cough become less with each dose of the medicine. TONIC
LUNG TONIC
LUNG Prepared by W. T. OWBRIDGE Chemist, Hull TONIC
LUNG Sold in Bottles 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d. TONIC
LUNG and 11s. by all Chemists and Patent TONIC
LUNG Medicine Vendors. Wholesale all London TONIC
LUNG and Provincial Houses. TONIC

POISON IN THE ASHES.

—o—

MANY people believe that Nature has somewhere a remedy for every disease. So many and so terrible are the ills of life, and so slight the pleasure we get as time flies past, that such a belief is the least faith we can show in a gracious and all-wise Providence. A few remedies—but, alas, how few!—have been found. Others, so far, lie hidden from human inquiry. Occasionally death follows quickly on the heels of the evil—an illustration of the dangerous character of the ailment to be relieved:—

For example, Nervous Dyspepsia is a comparatively new disease, growing out of the conditions of modern life. It is a joint affection of the digestive organs and of the nervous system. These two were formerly treated as separate ailments, and it was left for the clear-sighted thinkers to prove that the basis of this terrible and often fatal complication lies chiefly in the disordered and depraved functions of digestion and nutrition. They reasoned thus: "If we can induce the stomach to do its work, and stimulate the excretive organs to drive out of the body the poisonous waste matters which remain after the life-giving elements of the food have been absorbed, we shall have conquered Nervous Dyspepsia and Nervous Exhaustion. And they were right. Knowing the infallible power of Seigel's Syrup in less complicated though similar diseases, they resolved to test it fully in this. To leave no ground for doubt, they prescribed the remedy in hundreds of cases which had been pronounced incurable—with perfect success in every instance where their directions as to living and diet were scrupulously followed. Nervous Dyspepsia and Exhaustion may almost be called a peculiar English disease. To a greater or less extent half the people of this country suffer from it—both sexes and all ages. In no country in the world are there so many insane asylums filled to overflowing, all resulting from this alarming disease. Its leading symptoms are these: Frequent or continual headache; a dull pain at the base of the brain; bad breath; nauseous eructations; the rising of sour and pungent fluids to the throat; a sense of oppression and faintness at the pit of the stomach; flatulence; wakefulness and loss of sleep; disgust with food even when weak from the need of it; sticky or slimy matter on the teeth or in the mouth, especially on rising in the morning; furred and coated tongue; dull eyes; cold hands and feet; constipation; dry or rough skin; inability to fix the mind on any labour calling for continuous attention; and oppressive and sad forebodings and fear.

All this terrible group Mother Seigel's Curative Syrup removes by its positive, powerful, direct, yet painless and gentle action upon the functions of digestion and assimilation. Those elements of the food that build up and strengthen the system are sent upon their mission, while all waste matters (the ashes of life's fire) which unremoved, poison and kill, are expelled from the body through the bowels, kidneys and skin. The weak and prostrated nerves are quieted, toned, and fed by the purified blood. As the result, health, with its enjoyments, blessings, and power, returns to the sufferer, who had, perhaps, abandoned all hope of ever seeing another well day.

Mother Seigel's Curative Syrup is for sale by all chemists and medicine vendors, price 2/6 per bottle, and by the proprietors, A. J. White, Ltd., 35, Farringdon Road, London, E.C.

THE BRITISH NATION Proved to be the Remnant of Israel, and the Representatives of the Lost Ten Tribes. By J. H. WELDON, J.P., Author of "Britain and Prophecy." 66 pp., demy 8vo., 6d.; by post, 7d.

TALKS FOR THE TIMES. By Rev. JOSEPH WILD, D.D., Author of the "Lost Ten Tribes," &c. Being 18 Sermons preached in Bond-street Congregational Church, Toronto. 345 pp., crown 8vo., cloth, gilt lettered, 3s.; free for P.O.

ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet Court, Fleet Street.

PIANOFORTES, Harmoniums, American Organs. Why buy at shops inferior made instruments, and pay large profits, when you can buy direct from the Maker High-class Instruments, and save 50 per cent. by so doing? Full value allowed for old Instruments in exchange as part payment. Write for Price Lists and Testimonials to A. G. LINSTEAD, Cobden Pianoforte Company, 5, Eversholt-street, Camden Town, London. Established 1874.

HUMAN LIFE.—FIFTY YEARS' Record of Facts, Principles, and Discoveries (just published complete) Relating to the Improvement and Preservation of Human Life on Earth. Origin and true treatment of diseases. A series of articles by DR. SAMUEL BIRLEY, M.D., Ph.D. Book form, 50 pages. SENT FREE to every applicant by the publishers, GORDON B. MURRAY & CO., 50, Theobald's-road, Holborn, E.C. Write to-day.

SOUND, PURE, WHITE

TEETH!

Those who value these will try

CARBOLINE

(The Great Sanitary Tooth Paste).

1/6 & 2/6 per Pot.

Through Chemists, or post free from the Makers,

GEORGE & WELCH

WORCESTER.

Lancet writes:—"To save the teeth use a good carbolic daily."

LADIES!

WE will send a FULL-DRESS LENGTH of BEAUTIFUL CLOTH (for Good, Strong, Serviceable wear), in any of the following colours, Carriage paid to any address for 10s. 6d. Colours:—Black, Blue, Fawn, Salmon, Resida, Slate, Ruby, Brown, Grey, Claret, Sage, Old Rose, Terra-Cotta, Amber, Peacock, Tabac, Bronze, Myrtle, Drab, Olive, Grenat, Clay Green, Navy, Partridge, Heather, &c., &c. These wonderful Dress Lengths have gained a world-wide reputation for magnificence, cheapness and durability, having no equal.

The Lady's Pictorial says:—"They are excellent quality and very good value for the money."

Thousands of Testimonials from all parts of the world.

Ladies should write at once for Patterns, which may be had free, and need not be returned.

AN AMAZING OFFER!!—We shall give a very handsome Brocaded Silk Handkerchief with each dress-length ordered from us during this season. Write for patterns. LUTUS B LEATHLEY, Armley, Leeds.

Certain HARNESS' Cure.

ELECTROPATHIC BELT

FOR

RHEUMATISM

Major PAKENHAM, Longstone House, Armagh, writes:—"The Electropathic Belt has completely cured me of rheumatic gout. I suffered intense agony for two years. I now feel strong and active."

Guaranteed to generate a mild continuous current of Electricity, which speedily cures all Disorders of the Nerves, Stomach, Liver and Kidneys. Thousands of Testimonials. Pamphlet & Advice free on application to Mr. C. B. Harness, Consulting Electrician, the Medical Battery Co. Ltd.

Only Address,

52, OXFORD ST., LONDON, W. (Corner of Rathbone Place.)

Call to-day, if possible, or write at once

Printed and Published for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-st., London, E.C. F. W. PARRY (late GUEST & Co.), 29, Paternoster-row. WEDNESDAY, OCT. 10, 1888. [All rights reserved.

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."
(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India.)

"And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the Forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS of the EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. XII., No. 616. Entered at Stationers' Hall.] WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 17, 1888. [PRICE ONE PENNY.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

PAGE
Africa for Israel 413
The Christian Commonwealth Pronounces an Opinion 414
The Unveiling of the Nations. By W. H. Mason 415
The Rev. M. Baxter's Doleful Views 417
Our Land and Flag: A Canadian National Song 418
The Rev. J. Robertson, M.A., of Whittinghame, Gives Blind Evidence 418
The British-Israel Conference Association at Manchester 419

AFRICA FOR ISRAEL.

A VERY remarkable paper has been published by the Times (of Aug. 22, 1888) on the subject of "Great Britain's Policy in Africa." We shall be doing our readers good service by quoting portions of it for their information. We deem the paper useful to our cause, because its author is described by the Times as "An African Explorer," and not only are his sentiments those of the BANNER, but he also uses our very phraseology, in describing the chief Ports of "The Dark Continent," telling us they are the "Eastern, and Western," and general, "Gates" of the land! We trust those friends who differ from us on this point will mark well what this African traveller and explorer tells us, and reflect that when we use the Scriptural phrase to describe the chief Ports of Africa, our Explorer can find none more expressive and exact to picture to us, geographically, the doors of entry into that country. What he says about Delagoa Bay is especially interesting to BANNER readers because he writes respecting it just as the Editor of the BANNER does, and gives a capital scriptural reason too, to explain why the British should have that Port, and Portugal lose it, namely because, "to him who hath shall be given, she shall have abundance, but from him that hath not, shall be taken away even that which he hath" (Matt. xxv. 29, A & R.V). This may sound immoral. But it is the immorality which gave Palestine to the Tribes of Israel; India and the Colonies to our own nation, America to the Anglo-Saxons, and promises to put the whole earth into British hands, as "the survival of the fittest." God's people are the "fittest," for they are His chosen ones, taught and blest by Him. Therefore there can be no better heir of the world than they. We quote first that portion of the article which relates to Delagoa Bay, and beg our readers and opponents too, to regard well the words of a writer who is commended by the Times. He said:—

In Southern Africa we have one pressing want—Delagoa Bay. The Limpopo river ought to be the southern boundary of the Portuguese East African possessions. It is a pity Portugal cannot be brought to see this. It is a case of absolute necessity as far as we are concerned. Sooner or later we must have Delagoa Bay, and it would be well for Portugal to recognize our pressing want while we are sufficiently patient to make her an advantageous offer. I know it is considered technically immoral to advance these ideas. Conscientious philanthropists would say that because Delagoa Bay was useless to Portugal and of immense value to us, that constituted no valid reason why we should require the Portuguese to part with it against their will. But the philanthropists and the doctrinaire school of modern Radicals—who are, so to speak, total abstainers where Imperial interests are concerned—too often forget the practical application of the parable of the talents. The nation that makes no use of its possessions must give way to the interests of a more energetic people which spends money and men's lives in the development of its territories. Some centuries ago, when Southern Africa was a great uncultivated field, Portugal skirted it and in a half-hearted way took its Gates, but never attempted to enter into possession of the estate. The Western Gate was taken from her by the Dutch, who in their turn surrendered it to the English, and then our nation proceeded resolutely to occupy and cultivate the field beyond. Portugal in course of time lost all interest in the South African estate, and had even abandoned her hold over its eastern Gate, when, suddenly becoming conscious that England now occupied all the field and was about to possess herself of its last and most important point of ingress, Portugal woke up and reasserted her ancient claim to the Eastern Gate of Southern Africa, and we, too scrupulously conscientious and magnanimous, retired before her clamour. Some day, it is to be feared, our South African children will wax strong and impatient, and will rightly or wrongly wrench from Portugal the harbour that is necessary to the development of their trade, and then Portugal will regret that she did not in the day of grace sell the possession that was useless to her for the millions we were ready to offer. After all, are we so very unreasonable? We only ask from Portugal that small strip south of the Limpopo—barely the twentieth part of her East African possessions—and we would buy it honestly for a sum of money which would materially enable her to develop the resources of the splendid lands she possesses but does not utilize in East and West and North-west Africa.

Thanks to the recent action of our Government in extending the sphere of our influence to the Zambesi, we have secured nearly all we want in Southern Africa with the exception of Delagoa Bay. If we obtain the cession of that important point it will assure our domination in South Africa; and the Boer question will peaceably solve itself by the continued influx of English into the Transvaal and the eventual mingling of the two white races, races who, after all, are so nearly allied in origin, in language, and in religious sympathies.

We lately expressed our confidence that the time would come when in some way or other the great Gate of South-east Africa would become directly or indirectly a British possession, and said that we were prepared to give up belief in Our Identity and in the Gates too, if it should turn out that such a Gate as Delagoa Bay became the undisputed, adverse, hostile, possession of a non-Israelite Power, without some understanding with the House of Israel. We observe that our "explorer" sees the necessity for our acquisition of this Gate, and foresees the day when it will be taken by force from Portugal, by the rising power of the British in South Africa, if she does not previously surrender it by sale to the coming masters of the country South of the Zambesi. However it come about, we foresee that because the British are God's people Israel, and because Delagoa Bay is a Gate of the first class, the only one too on the East African Coast, the Gate owners and Gate holders of the world under the promises of God will hold and occupy Delagoa Bay, for the benefit of the nations of the earth (Gen. xxii. 17; Isa. xxvii. 6, R.V.).

Digitized by Google

The African explorer proceeds to discuss the interests of the various European nations in the continent of Africa and marks off those regions which are already occupied by other Powers, where therefore we cannot and must not interfere. Thus he believes that in the Morocco and the Barbary States we shall never bear rule. Spain, France, and Italy must look after them. Algiers and Tunis belong to France, and we shall not reign there! Tripoli and Barca are Italy's, and we must not touch them when the Turkish empire collapses. What we want, and must strive to keep with the consent of the Powers, is Egypt. Our interests in the Valley of the Nile are paramount and we must stay there, exercising influence over the Soudan, Nubia, Suakim, Darfur, &c. Opposite to Aden our explorer would announce a Protectorate over the "Horn of Africa," which we believe the British Government has already done. In regard to the great bulk of Central Africa this is what our explorer says:—

The east coast of Somaliland, at present unclaimed by any European Power, may be left to the enterprise of the new British East African Company. If they see their way to securing it, north of the German protectorate of Vitu, it may well be added to the British sphere of influence in East Africa. Vitu would then remain as a small German enclave in our East African possessions, and its transfer or exchange by Germany against equivalents elsewhere might some day be amiably negotiated. South of Vitu we have already secured—thanks to Sir John Kirk—the coast between the river Tana and the Uruba and a wedge stretching inland as far as the Victoria Nyanza, which in the not far distant future may become united to Emin Pasha's province in the Soudan. The western shore of Lake Tanganyika nominally belongs to the Congo Free State; the eastern shore of the lake should be secured by England, whose interests are solely (among European Powers) represented there at present by missionaries and traders who navigate Tanganyika by their steamers and have connected it with Lake Nyassa by a road. In the north the English domination on Lake Tanganyika may be connected at some future day with the rule of British companies or feudatories on the Albert and Victoria Nyanzas and the Upper Nile; in the south with Lake Nyassa, of which the western and southern banks will probably some day come under our protection, while the eastern bank is left open to German influence. From the western shore of Nyassa, along the course of the Loangwa river, through a country rich in gold, tin, and iron, we may eventually extend our rule over the relatively short distance which at present separates our recently acquired protectorate over the middle Zambesi from the British settlements on Lake Nyassa. Thus, if our Government only grants some measure of support to the British agencies—commercial and evangelical—which have obtained such a footing in the Lake region, our possessions in South Africa may be linked some day to our spheres of influence in Eastern Africa and the Egyptian Soudan by a continuous band of British dominion. The day will come, let us hope, when the African Lakes' Company will shake hands with the British East African Company on the northern shores of Tanganyika; and Emin Pasha will rule in England's name and for the interests of civilization on the Albert Nyanza and the White Nile.

This is pretty well for a beginning! It shows how God is working to give His people Africa, and how in the course of time the result is sure to be achieved, principally by means of the operation of the Gates. On the West coasts our rivals are the French, Germans, and Portuguese principally, and doubtless their influence is beneficial in civilizing large tracts of country which they hold. We have enough and more than enough to occupy our attention in the Niger region, which the African explorer calls "a splendid field, a new India." There, our commerce and enterprise may have free scope. At present trade and religious jealousies are driving the Germans to oppose our expansion as much as they can, but they may as easily strive "to mop out the ocean," as to keep out British commerce and enterprise from the land. This tendency in short has forced our Government to extend the sphere of British influence in all directions where an opening has occurred, in order that our interests may be protected and made independent of the petty weaknesses of our rivals. "We want a fair field and no favour, and it is to secure this for our commerce and our civilization that we are forced to extend our direct political influence over a large part of Africa." In short the British are Israel, and on them devolves the duty and privilege of taking the Gospel of Christ to heathen, down-trodden Africa. God is opening the Dark Continent to her, and in obedience to the call we are entering on the work. To the Lord be all the praise for His distinguishing favour to our race, and for the power and opportunity He gives us of carrying out His gracious purposes literally to "the world lying in the wicked one," in poor afflicted Africa.

"THE CHRISTIAN COMMONWEALTH" PRONOUNCES AN OPINION.

In its issue of August 2nd the Christian Commonwealth has a word to say respecting "The Identity of the Israelites and Great Britain." The judgment is unfavourable, like that of most of the journalists of the day; but the decision is candidly and respectfully stated, and must be carefully examined in these pages. The writer shall speak first in his own words; and we must reserve what we have to say in deprecation of his judgment till after our readers have carefully weighed his reasoning. The notice was to the following effect:—

THE IDENTITY OF THE ISRAELITES AND GREAT BRITAIN.

We are frequently receiving books and pamphlets which undertake to show the identity of the people of this country with what are called the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel. We have always received these honest discussions in true newspaper style, placing them under the heading, "Important if True." The latest pamphlets from the house of Robert Banks and Son, are "An Outline of the Past, the Present, and the Future of Great Britain, as Revealed in the Word of God," by James Keith; and "Facts and Probabilities Respecting the Identity of the British and American Nations with the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel," by Delta. The trouble about all this discussion is similar to that which the Darwinian encounters. Only in the identity case there are several missing links instead of one. No doubt these writers very conscientiously believe in their theory, and it must be confessed that they offer some ingenious reasoning in behalf of it. But all the same, the missing links are not forthcoming, and the exegesis of Isaiah liv. is, in our judgment, largely wide of the mark. At any rate, if the views entertained by these gentlemen be correct, it is time that they were exhorting these Anglo-Saxons or Israelites to cease their idolatries and serve the living God. While we are making wars upon helpless peoples, and monopolising the opium trade, and keeping up our exchequer largely from a tax on the drink traffic, we fear that our Anglo-Israel friends will have some difficulty in making the Christian world believe that we are under the special patronage of the Divine Father. If the Anglo-Israel notion is right, then our practice is quite enough to bring about another divorce between the Lord of Hosts and the "wife which He put away for a time." We express no opinion as to the conclusions reached further than to say that from a practical point of view the notion seems to be more defective even than from the theoretical point of view.

The journalist has read Mr. J. Keith's work on "The Past,

Digitized by Google

Present, and Future of Great Britain," but expresses no opinion as to the writer's argument. We are totally unable to accept Mr. Keith's views, and protest against his book being held up as a fair exposition of the grounds on which our case rests. Delta's "Facts and Probabilities" is more to our liking, and gives a good sketch, without argument or much evidence in detail, in respect to the matter, as it can, and should, be presented. The editorial notice in question, however, touches none of these points. It merely declares that Our Identity fails because there are "several missing links in the evidence," and not only one, as in Darwin's famous argument. The "exegesis" of Isa. liv., too, is declared to be "wide of the mark" as we give it, and therefore the judgment of the Christian Commonwealth is adverse. It virtually rejects our claim to be regarded as the remnant of Israel (Jer. xxxi. 7, R.V.). Of course we are unable to deal with such objections as these; for we are not told by the writer what the "several missing links" he alludes to are; nor are we informed wherein our "exegesis," or "interpretation" of Isa. liv. is halting and defective. Passing these ambiguities aside we come to the point wherein the Christian Commonwealth speaks out, and gives us a rational and tangible reason why our views are wrong. The nation is too wicked, it seems, in the matter of idolatry, as well as of the drink and opium traffic, to allow Christian people to conclude that the British are Israel, a people "under the special patronage of the Divine Father." This is the practical point of view; and judged from this aspect, the writer in question thinks our case is more hopeless from it, even than from the theoretical one.

The meaning of all this of course is that we are too sinful a race to be a people under God's special protection as "His chosen nation"; and that if we be Israel, in spite of all objections, then our nation's doings are "quite enough to bring about another divorce between the Lord of Hosts and the wife which He put away for a time."

We freely admit in reply that this nation, the British people, are a sinful, wicked, stubborn race, not one whit better than they were in Moses' days, and as little deserving of God's compassions and mercies now as they were then. Israel was always recreant, vile, and worthless. She is no better to-day; and as far as her moral condition is concerned, never will be. Our opponent well knows what Israel was in the early days. Their evil character is recorded in Moses' time in Deut. ix. 3—24 in terrible characters; yet all that time God was their God, and they His people, heritage, and inheritance, as clearly stated in the 26—29 verses of the same chapter. If a people so vile were yet God's chosen ones and His specially loved inheritance, loved for the reason God Himself gave in Deut. vii. 6—10, how can the Christian Commonwealth venture to deny that the British can be God's people now by reason of what in His own sight He deems to be national sins of the very deepest dye? Are the drink trade, and the opium traffic, wars, and idolatry, after all, more heinous in God's sight than the crimes of which God convicted Israel in Deut. ix., and again in 2 Kings xvii. 7—23? The former are national sins against men and nations; Israel's sins were directed against God Himself. If we finite mortals can, or may, in such a case venture to gauge the enormity of national iniquity, will this writer venture to tell us that in the two items of guilt he names, we exceed in wickedness the Israelites of old? Evidently, however, the Christian Commonwealth is quite ready to usurp the office of this nation's supreme judge, for it tells us boldly, that our practice is quite enough to bring about another divorce between God and His re-married wife! Surely this is going too far! Can any one, in the face of Hosea ii. 19, 20, and Jer. xxx. 1—9, dare to hazard such a statement as this? There we find the Lord's espousals with His once divorced wife will be for ever; and that even in gross idolatry Israel was declared to be God's firstborn. In righteousness, in judgment, in lovingkindness, and in mercies will He betroth her to Himself, He says, and that for ever. But the modern writer says "nay" to this. This bride, he asserts, is still too wicked, and the re-marriage will again be dissolved, in spite of the Lord's promise, covenant, and solemn asseveration, that the betrothal shall be in faith or faithfulness, and that for ever! (ver. 19). There is no question here of the poor bride's and firstborn's worthiness. Alas! she had, and has none! The righteousness is Christ's, the Bridegroom's, not hers! The "judgment, lovingkindness, and the mercies," are all His, not her's! Her's only is to be "the faith," and that as the gift of God! We find then our opponent to be hopelessly in the wrong, and he advances no valid reason which can scripturally be maintained to show that for unworthiness and sin the British folk, being Israel, must again be divorced from the gospel covenant with her Maker and Redeemer. The Christian Commonwealth fails to recognise the vast cleansing power of the blood of Christ shed for Israel, which can purge her from all her national sins. The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from them all, and the House of Israel only waits the promised outpouring of God's Holy Spirit on them, with the blessings of the new covenant, to stand forth a people such as those described in Jer. xxxi. 33, 34; Isa. lxi. 9; and Heb. viii. 10—12: "All that see them shall then acknowledge them, that they are a seed the Lord hath blessed;" for God's law will in that day be written in their hearts, and in their mind, and He will be their God, and they His pardoned people. The Christian Commonwealth must wait a little for that time, and look for Israel's worthiness and righteousness not in them, but in the Lord Jehovah, who is for them, both the one and the other, to His praise and glory (Isa. liv. 17; xlv. 45; lv. 24, 25, R.V.).

THE UNVEILING OF THE NATIONS.

By W. H. Mason.

The careful and thoughtful reader of the Prophetic Scriptures can scarcely fail to notice that, while present destruction is denounced therein against various nations, several others are promised future restoration, in the latter days. There are in fact seven of the nations mentioned in the Scriptures to whom future restoration is directly or indirectly promised. Of the first are Israel, Judah, Elam, Moab and Ammon; of the second Assyria and Egypt.

Seeing that the Almighty has promised to restore or to bless these nations, they must surely have been preserved and be still in existence, although under other names and other conditions than their ancient ones. Where are these seven nations? Two, some would say three, of them are well known, as they still retain their ancient names: Judah or the Jews, Elam or Persia, and Egypt. It is very possible that all these have other representatives than the popularly known ones, and especially is this probable with regard to the last of the three, as will appear later. Where Israel is has been so overwhelmingly proved, that it is marvellous that any intelligent believer in the truth of God's Word and Oath can still have any doubt on the subject. Where, however, is Moab? Where is Ammon? Where is Assyria? Where is Egypt, if she have other representatives than the degraded Copts and Fellaheen of modern Egypt? Before we proceed further let us have the charter of our search and expectation from God's sure Word. Of Moab God says, "Yet will I bring again the captivity of Moab in the latter days." Of Ammon—"But afterwards I will bring again the captivity of the children of Ammon." Of Elam—"But it shall come to pass in the latter days, that I will bring again the captivity of Elam." Of Assyria and Egypt—"In that day shall Israel be the third with Egypt and with Assyria, a blessing in the midst of the earth; for that the Lord of Hosts hath blessed them, saying, Blessed be Egypt My people, and Assyria the work of My hands, and Israel Mine inheritance." Having then these promises from God, these nations must realise them. They must therefore be all in existence to-day. Where are they? This should be an interesting question to the Christian who desires to see the glory of God in the accomplishment of His word, and the exhibition of His wondrous works.

Digitized by Google

Let us then try to anticipate somewhat the wonders of that glorious time when the unveiling of the nations shall take place, and all the world shall see and adore the wonderful works of God among the children of men. How shall we then commence our search for these long-lost nations? In the case of Israel, the Scriptures are full of marks whereby she may be known, and we have only to find the nation now bearing the marks to be sure of the Identity of the people. With these nations, however, this is not the case, so we must proceed by other methods. First, then, as all the nations named were more or less connected with Israel, and had, instrumentally, more or less influence upon her fortunes, and as on this account probably their future restoration and blessing is promised, so we may look for them to be now also bearing similar relations with Israel of to-day. Again, though a man's moral character may be modified, improved or otherwise, by the acquisition or loss of good religious influences, his mental and physical characteristics will remain pretty much the same through life, and his constitutional likes and dislikes will remain unchanged. As with individuals so with nations, only in a less marked degree. For instance, the effect of Christianity on a man will be more marked and general than on a nation, for while it pervades the whole man it does not pervade the whole nation, a great portion of which may never be more than nominally Christian. Thus then we may expect to find in the nations for whom we are searching the same characteristics which distinguished them in ancient times; the same racial affinities and antipathies; and the same mutual relationships, only modified by modern circumstances, and by their more or less perfect or imperfect Christianity, if they have embraced it.

Now let us proceed, and we shall find that, taking our nation to be Israel, there are certain nations, which bear to us and to each other the very same relations which in ancient days were borne by Egypt, Assyria, Moab and Ammon. Moreover, their national characteristics are the same, and their geographical positions are relatively the same as of old, save in one instance, and that evidently from the necessities of the case in order to meet modern contingencies. Further, these nations disappeared off the stage of Asiatic history one after another during one connected period of disruption and destruction, and reappeared successively on European soil, also in one prolonged period during which the whole of Europe was parcelled out, and finally occupied by the Asiatic hordes which became the present European nations. Israel had preceded them to the isles of the West, and they followed and took up their divinely allotted situations (Deut. xxxii. 8) for working out to its future grand consummation the God-appointed destiny of the nations, and triumph of Divine wisdom, grace and power. Prominent among the nations connected with Israel's early history stand Egypt and Assyria. By one she was welded into a nation; by the other her national life was destroyed: one was her cradle, the other her grave. All through the brief span of her national life, too, these two nations exercised a marked influence upon her character and history. When Israel threw off her allegiance to Jehovah, it was the Egyptian calf which was set up in His stead as the object of their worship. When she leaned on the arm of flesh rather than on the arm of the Lord, we read that she looked to Egypt and leaned on Assyria, and so we find her sending presents and seeking aid first from one, then from the other, while both were used at different periods for her chastisement. While thus related with Israel, their mutual relationship was one of continual antipathy and ever recurrent war, and the lands lying between their several countries proper were ever the cause of fierce contentions. Carchemish of old held the place of Alsace of to-day, and the powerful nations striving for posses ion of the one are to-day represented by the two mighty contestants for the lordship of the other, for Germany is Assyria, and France is Egypt.

In religion and politics, too, the relations of the modern peoples with our own are the relations of the ancient kingdoms with Israel of old. Instead of leaning on Jehovah, the constant cry of our rulers is, we must maintain a close alliance with Germany, or with France, to ensure our safety in the event of European complications. Thus we look to Egypt or lean on Assyria as did our fathers, as though there were no God in Israel. In religion it is hard to say whether the idolatry of France or the neology of Germany is most in favour in modern Israel. Certain it is that both find more favour in high places than the pure Protestantism, the witness for God, which should be the one voice of our nation. The religious, moral and political characteristics of the ancient nations and their modern representatives are marvellously alike. Compare the atheistic and superstitious French with the equally God-disliking, idolatrous Egyptians. Compare their moral characters: where but in France would one look for a modern counterpart of Potiphar's wife, and the state of society and morals indicated by her history? How like the ancient Egyptians are the boastful, self-assertive French—man-exalting, God-despising! Where else is, or has been, a Goddess of Reason, and such a Goddess! possible save in France; and here again, how like to Egypt of old! The destruction of ancient Egypt by Nebuchadnezzar occurred subsequent to the Assyrian expatriation of Israel, and so the descendants of the former followed those of the latter to Europe under the characteristic name of Franks or Freemen, and took up a geographically similar relative position as nearly as the gift of the isles of the West to Israel permitted. Now contrast with all this, for it is contrast, the characteristics of Germany, or rather Prussia; for the Prussians are the soul of Germany, as the Frankish element is the ruling genius of France. In striking contrast to the Egyptians, the Assyrians both had a knowledge of, and a reverence for the true God: as witness the book of Jonah. The former were also a far more moral, stable and reliable people than their Egyptian neighbours and enemies, being indeed a perfect and most favourable contrast to them, even as the Germans of to-day are to their neighbours and enemies, the French. The geographical positions of Germany (Prussia) and France are also to each other as to England, the same relatively as were those of Assyria, Egypt, and Israel, save as before mentioned and as necessitated by the requirements of their modern rôles and fortunes, preparatory to and for the working out of their and Israel's destined future. There is only room left for one more feature of these nations and that is with reference to their Eastern proclivities. The penchant of France for Egypt is in most remarkable contrast to the utter indifference of Germany. France appears to be consumed with a desire for the possession of Egypt for its own sake, quite as much as from mere territorial greed, or as a means to an end. A sentimental longing, quite like a yearning for a lost treasure, or a lost home, and but for Israel-England the yearning would most likely be satisfied and the desire fulfilled as, in part, may yet be, some day, since Israel's possession runs from the river of Egypt, and from the other side of the river and all along the North of Africa may be restored to the exiled owners, whose present possessions in those regions may be but instalments, given in advance of the whole estate. If Germany have any prepossessions Eastwards, they point to the region of the Euphrates. These were indeed suggested as a possession for Germany some time ago as a check upon the encroachments of Russia, and it may yet be that beyond the river which bounds Israel's inheritance Eastwards, Germany may obtain her portion, and so Egypt, Israel, and Assyria, may again, under happier auspices than of old, dwell together and realise Isaiah's prophecy of their return.

There are two peoples in Europe whose present survival is really marvellous. The greed of Prussia, the treachery of

Digitized by Google

Austria, and the shameless and remorseless cruelty and tyranny of Russia, have exerted their utmost powers to wipe out their national existence, yea, their very name. In spite of all, Hungary is to-day a kingdom of considerable importance, and though Poland be no longer a kingdom by name, her nationality remains, and her long-forgotten prosperity revives. Situated relatively to each other, to Turkey, (Edom) and to England, (Israel) save the interposition of Germany, (Assyria) they bear the same geographical relations with their modern neighbours as did Moab and Ammon of old to the forefathers of these same neighbours. Their national characteristics are moreover the same, the Magyars representing the more staid and manly Moabites; the Poles the more fickle Ammonites. The mutual relations of Moab and Ammon of old were just those of the Magyars and Poles of our day, while the relations of the latter peoples with ourselves are exactly those of Israel with the two peoples whom Jehovah commanded Israel on no account to molest. A friendly sympathetic feeling has ever characterised our conduct towards them. Who so popular in England as Kossuth the Magyar, and Kosciusko the Pole, in the day of their gallant struggles for the freedom of their several peoples? and what struggling peoples ever won so strongly our sympathetic regard? Surely this is what might be expected from Christianised modern Israel toward their brethren, the children of Lot, yet to be their willing subjects, for in the day of her power and blessing Israel "shall lay her hand upon Edom (Turkey) and Moab (Hungary), and the children of Ammon (the Poles) shall obey them."

Here then are five peoples, all of undoubted Western Asiatic origin, occupying relatively the same geographical positions as the five ancient nations we are seeking; the modern nations display also the same general characteristics as the ancient ones, save as modified by their more or less imperfect Christianity. Except as so modified, also, their mutual relations, racial affinities and antipathies are the same. Seeing then that the five ancient nations have to be restored and blessed, and must therefore be in existence, may we not fairly suppose that the five modern nations represent the five ancient ones; that England is Israel; France is Egypt; Germany is Assyria; Hungary is Moab; and Poland is Ammon?

THE REV. M. BAXTER'S DOLEFUL VIEWS.

A friend to our BANNER hopes and expectations has sent us the accompanying extract from the St. James's Gazette, of January 27th, with the following remark: "Reading all this, folks can yet wonder at our rejoicing to know we are not one of the ten toes, but Israel, the chosen and elect people of God! As such we can cheerfully (?) accept the Rev. M. Baxter's interpretations." The journalist wrote as follows:—

The mantle of Dr. Cumming has fallen upon a certain "Reverend M. Baxter," who is discoursing in an Edinburgh circus on "coming great events." The reverend gentleman starts with the "greatest European war ever known, involving all the nations of Europe, to begin in 1888—89, and to end in 1891 with the defeat of Germany." He follows up with the announcement that "Britain is to lose Ireland and India (and perhaps also the Highlands) by 1891, and to resort to compulsory military conscription." The "perhaps" will interest the crofters in the Lewis. Next we have "Lord Wolseley's prediction to be found true within the next nine years, that a French army landing on the south coast cannot be prevented from capturing London." It is evident that our country is to come off badly in 1891, when, as our prophet tells us, "Britain is to lose its present independence and become one of the ten kingdoms of a confederacy under France's leadership—the ten-horned leviathan and the ten-toed image in Daniel." Among the lesser horrors are "Britain's desolation in 1897 by Red Republican crusading armies from Europe, and the Scarlet Woman to be seated as the Established State Church and to massacre Protestants." In 1894, according to this cheerful seer, "Napoleon the Antichrist will arise as King of a small part of Greece or Turkey, and then become Emperor of the ten Kings;" while "Napoleon's image, from 1897 to 1901, will be set up and worshipped in every city, town, and village of Britain and the rest of the ten kingdoms; and tens of thousands of people to be beheaded for refusing to worship his statue." Greatest wonder of all will be the "translation of 144,000 living Christians to heaven without dying, in March, 1896." To hear all this there is no special charge, only there is a "collection on entering."

The mistake Mr. Baxter makes in all this is the attempt to prophesy from prophecy. He is only a poor mortal like ourselves, and cannot tell what is going to happen to-morrow, much less what will take place at the close of the coming great earthquake war-woe. No doubt such a catastrophe is at hand; for Rev. xvi. 18; Isa. xxvi. 20, 21; Zeph. iii. 8, declare the fact. But the Rev. prophet has no grounds for alleging that (1st) in 1891 Germany will be defeated; (2nd) that Britain will lose Ireland and India; (3rd) that before 1897 a French army will capture London, and the rest of it. The prime mistake Mr. Baxter makes is that there are any ten-toed kingdoms mentioned in Daniel ii. at all! There is no mention of the fact in the vision! any more than that there are ten-finger kingdoms at the end of the arms! The assertion that the coming Antichrist is going to be a Napoleon, that he will appear and reign about 1894; and that between 1897 and 1901 the said Napoleon's image is going to be set up in every city, town, and village of Great Britain, and in the rest of the ten kingdoms too; these, and the like, are monstrous pieces of infatuation; fables in short, for which there is not the shadow of a shade of proof within the four corners of the word of God. It no doubt is a very sensational programme to enunciate at the safe distance of eight or ten years from the disaster predicted, that Britain is to be desolated in 1897, and the Papacy is to be once more dominant in that same year, in order to be able to massacre the Protestants. None of these things, we believe, on the contrary, are going to happen, because there is not the very least likelihood of the matter, by reason of the Identity of the British people with the lost Ten Tribes.

Being Israel, our land is the appointed place of her safe domicile, as promised in 2 Samuel vii. 10, and she cannot therefore be invaded and humbled by the French. The idolatry of the gross and horrible kind Mr. Baxter describes, cannot be rife again in these islands, because this nation is Christian—"sons of the living God" (Hosea i. 10); and her cry is, "What have I to do any more with idols?" (xiv. 8). Our views are consoling, comforting, and scriptural. Mr. Baxter's have no support in God's word—are wildly improbable, the dreams of his own brain; also miserably discouraging and depressing to our nation, which is certainly striving after good things, and attempting "to blossom and bud, and fill the face of the world with fruit," like Israel (Isa. xxvii. 6, R.V.). Mr. Baxter steadily refuses to recognise the very existence of Israel as a nation during the present dispensation, and therefore, his interpretation of the prophecies puts a bizarre and grotesque aspect upon the predictions of the prophets; the picture being filled with horrors—massacres, blood, fire, pillars of smoke, with the desolation of God's witnesses, His Protestant Israelites; for whom nationally in these last days He has reserved only a dominant and commanding position, as "the head and not the tail, above only and not beneath all the other nations of the earth, "by reason of God's continuing presence with them as "His people," according to the promises. We notice these persistently published views of Mr. Baxter, because we suppose he has a large following. His interpretations of prophecy, however, are unpatriotic, and unsupported by the word of God. We trust those who have adopted them will pause and see how far the Scriptures justify Mr. Baxter, and that those who are enquiring into the matter will first ascertain where the lost Ten Tribes are; and see if the British are not they!

Digitized by Google

"OUR LAND AND FLAG": A CANADIAN NATIONAL SONG.

THE following Canadian lines were written some time since by Mr. John Lesperance, the then editor of the Illustrated News of Canada. The music was composed by Mr. M. McLeod, Q.C., and the whole was published in the Canadian Illustrated News. Recently, recollection of the song has been revived by its quotation during a speech on the Reciprocity question by Mr. McNeill, M.P. for North Bruce. The words of the song are worthy of repetition in the BANNER, because of their merit, and because they illustrate Our Identity in some remarkable respects. The words are these, as they appeared in The Empire newspaper, of Montreal:—

"Britain bore us in her flank;
Britain nursed us at our birth;
Britain raised us to our rank
'Mid the nations of the earth.
In the hour of pain and dread,
In the gathering of the storm,
Britain raised above our head
Her broad shield and stalwart arm.

Stand, Canadians! firmly stand
Round the flag of Fatherland!"

In these lines we have a clear declaration that Canada, one of Britain's stalwart daughters, is now taking her place as one of the nations of the earth—that her mother is Britain, the powerful mighty one, whose broad shield and stalwart arm in the hour of danger have protected her infant daughter, nursing her at her side from the Isles of the West. These are Israel's prophetic marks, as our readers well know, and are fulfilments of predictions to be found in Gen. xlix. 22, xxxv. 11, xlviii. 19, xvii. 16, xxii. 17; Isa. lx. 11, xlix. 20, xxiv. 15, &c.

The fact of the rapid rise of Canada to the rank of one of the nations of the earth, is unique in the history of the world, when it is remembered that it was only in 1867 that the Dominion Parliamentary Government was conferred by law upon Canada, modifying the previous constitutions created by the Acts of Parliament of 1774 and 1840. The Dominion is now, therefore, a nation, ruling herself, all but independent of the Mother Country, and that since only 20 years ago. But the wondrous fact becomes almost miraculous, and but for prophecy and Our Identity utterly inexplicable, when it is remembered that the Canadian Dominion is only one of British-Israel's stately daughters. She has seven more in Australasia—namely, New South Wales, Victoria, South Australia, Queensland, Western Australia, New Zealand, and Tasmania, besides the nation struggling into existence in South Africa even now; nine in all throughout the world, and all British in language, blood, laws, manners, customs, religion, and institutions. These nations are all of modern growth—all are British; and not one of the nine—stately daughters as they are—desire to part company with their old mother; but on the contrary wish above all things to remain in loyal union with her—a veritable company of nations.

Here, then, is evidence of our origin of a very remarkable and convincing kind. The evidence is cumulative, and it is unique. The Bible predicts of Israel that she would develop at last into "a nation and a company of nations." Modern facts point to the British as the Lost Tribes of Israel, and the chief item in the immensely strong chain of evidence of Identity appears true to time in our own day, showing us the British Empire in the aspect of a nation in the Isles of the West, surrounded by "a company of nations" in the four quarters of the globe, her stately daughters. The Rev. W. Hickson deems the fulfilment to include the American people as "the nation," and the British Empire as "the company of nations." However that may be, we find Britain and her Colonies are now responding faithfully to the prophecies of Israel, and no other nation or empire which has existed since the world began has exhibited the like phenomena, or anything even distantly resembling them.

The last two stanzas of the Canadian song well represent the loyal attitude of the British Colonies. The words are like a trumpet blast, calling "Israel to the rescue"!

"Stand, Canadians! firmly stand,
Round the flag of Fatherland!"

The same call resounded through Australia what time the Australian contingent was sent on to Egypt to take part with the British forces against her African enemies. The Colonial nations are ready now as ever to "stand firmly round the flag of Fatherland." They are "a company of nations," and they have shown it once already in war, and are ready to show it again and again against a world in arms! It is this fact makes ours a nation invincible, even if the world were united against us. But when we know that this thing is of God, we see how glorious is our national position! To Him be all the praise!

THE REV. J. ROBERTSON M.A., OF WHITTINGHAME, GIVES "BLIND EVIDENCE."

A FRIEND in Portobello, N.B., sends us the following excellent paper contributed by the Rev. James Robertson, M.A., to "Life and Work," a "Parish Magazine for Portobello." The writer is Chaplain to Her Majesty, representative to the Church of Scotland at the time of the Assembly in May last. It is somewhat uncertain whether the Rev. J. Robertson is a believer in Our Identity or not. He comes however very near to it when he declares that ours is an "elect people," that our race, like the Jews, is "privileged and responsible," and that if we fulfil the will of God and honour Him among men, a greater place still in the world will be given to us according to His word. "To him that hath shall be given," and "them that honour Me I will honour." Herein of course we suspect the rev. writer is ignorant of Our Identity, for being Israel our future greatness does not depend on our fulfilling God's will, or honouring Him. It depends upon the fact of our election. God chose Israel to be His people, and He blest them with blessings unique, and identical with those the writer describes, in order that they might inherit the whole earth, and become His agents and stewards for the communication of all spiritual blessings in Christ, to the inhabitants of the whole earth. These are Israel's perquisites and blessings, which no nation or race may take from them, as God is true! Possessing them they must be God's "chosen ones," or He is false to His covenants and oaths, which God forbid! We cannot accept the Rev. J. Robertson's conclusion, if, as we suppose, he teaches that we are "a chosen nation," endowed with Israel's blessings, but holding our preferment on condition of "obedience to God's will." We are Israel, destined to obey; and therefore to enjoy all those good things He has promised to Israel obedient; those in fact to whom "He showeth His words, His statutes and His judgments;" and that, after a fashion He doth not show to any other of the nations of the earth.

The article in question was to the following effect:—

THE SPANISH ARMADA.

How great is the long history of the English-speaking peoples! The beginning of it was that crossing of the German Ocean by bands of heathen plunderers who settled on the eastern coasts of Britain, driving out, slaying, or enslaving the weaker Celtic race, who, on their part, took a noble revenge in winning their oppressors to the Christian faith, and contributing a tender element of imagination and poetry to the united national life. Now after more than twelve hundred years of an interval, we see how this blended race has multiplied exceedingly, has crossed the greater oceans of the West and the East, possessed vast lands over all the world, and seems still only at the beginning of a period of more controlling influence than ever on the future of the world. No Christian can consider that long history, which is yet apparently so far from ending, without a reverent apprehension that God is in it, and that great purposes of God are inwoven with it. For importance and impressiveness we cannot but compare it with the history of Israel, and ask if there be not *in this also a sacred meaning. We could wish we had, what the Jews had the privilege of, a national history written by prophets of God and continually interpreted by inspired men. Yet though we have not indeed prophets to whom comes individually such insight as came to Isaiah, Jeremiah, or Ezekiel, the Spirit of God, diffused in the Church and nation, is not less now but greater; and in the course of time the Christian judgment on great historical events becomes nearly as clear, certain, and impressive, as was that of inspired prophecy.

Digitized by Google

Thoughts like these occur to us in looking back on that great conflict which was going on exactly three hundred years ago (July and August, 1588) between the English fleet and the Spanish Armada. That supreme crisis in our "island story" stands out in a light so clear and significant that we cannot read it as merely secular history.† It has a character about it which stamps it as sacred.

First let us see this in the wonderful fashion and issue of it at the time. Reckoning up the forces, we find the English fighting against tremendous odds. Philip was King of Spain, the foremost country in that age in war, whose soldiers were the most steady and the most daring since Roman times. He had also Portugal under him, with its adventurous seamen. He had the most fertile parts of Italy. He had Flanders with Antwerp, the busiest country and the richest mart of commerce in Europe. He had, besides, the resources, so vast for that time, and so entirely his own, of the New World, from which his galleons yearly brought gold, jewels, and ingots of silver to the harbour of Cadiz. His army—the only standing army in Europe and the most renowned—was commanded by the ablest general of the time. His vast fleet, with every kind of provision, weapon, and store on board, which had been years in preparation, doubled in tonnage all that England and her Dutch allies could muster. His was, indeed, the greatest power Europe had seen since the days of the Cæsars. On the Continent he had many friends, and only enemies too weak to hinder him. In England itself the Roman Catholics were numerous, had revolted before against Elizabeth, had plotted her assassination, and were recently exasperated by her execution of Mary Queen of Scots. The Irish, too, as rebels and Romanists, were to be counted on to side with Philip; and even in Scotland the Papal party had strength. The odds in his favour were so great that, in the judgment of Europe, there was imminent danger—in Spain it was thought certainty—of Elizabeth being dethroned, England being reduced to an appanage of the Spanish Crown, and the Protestant faith, already weakened throughout Europe, receiving a death-blow. Yet in the course of little more than a week the English admirals saw that great Armada fleeing before them shattered and dispirited, seeking an escape by the Northern Seas, whose storms, as they rounded the Orkneys and tried in this way to reach their home, scattered the bulk of them in miserable wrecks along the Scottish and Irish coasts. And, as Sir Francis Drake wrote at the time—"With all their great and terrible ostentation, they did not in all their sailing round about England so much as sink or take one ship, bark, pinnace, or cock-boat, or even burn so much as one sheep-cote in this land." What wonder if the English nation reckoned this not a victory only but a divine deliverance, and that the medal struck in memory of it bore the inscription: "Afflavit Deus et dissipantur"—"God hath breathed upon them, and they are scattered"? The English fought indeed with great skill, bravery, and unity, the Roman Catholics putting patriotism before religion; but, viewing the event as a whole, the nation felt it to be the act of God no less than when the army of Sennacherib was smitten.

And we who now can trace the remoter and enduring issues of the event find these to be so far-reaching and of such importance to mankind as powerfully to confirm that old judgment of it. The defeat of Spain saved the Protestant faith. For many years that faith had been suffering loss and defeat. It had been rooted out of Spain, Italy, and Belgium, smitten down in France, greatly weakened in Germany; and now Philip, the acknowledged champion of Catholicism, hoped to complete the victory of his religion by recovering England. Years before Christendom owed him a great deliverance from the Turks and from Mohammedan aggression by his victory of Lepanto, and doubtless he sincerely believed he would do a similar work of God in capturing the citadel of heresy. He failed, and who that estimates the effect that our Protestant faith has had on the national life, on the family life, and on the whole mind and history of England and English-speaking peoples,—who that compares the state of these peoples to-day with that of Roman Catholic nations, can hesitate to thank God, who in that crisis three hundred years ago gave the victory to the Protestant Queen?

From that time also began the "Expansion of England." This country of Britain ceased to be merely an agricultural country with a population dependent on its soil. England began to discover her vocation to trade, colonisation, and the dominion of the seas. With the defeat of the Armada, which so raised England and exhausted Spain, the power of the sea began to pass to our people, and the first great impulse was given to that enterprise abroad which, by colonies and commerce, makes now the English race the greatest influence in determining the future of the world. Unconscious of it themselves, England and Spain were contending for the future leadership of the world: it was a great appeal to God of two races and two religions; and in the issue we reverently believe that we see God choosing the nation and the faith to which He would entrust the chief part in bringing the races of the world together, leading their liberties and spreading among them the Gospel of His Son.

The more history is studied, the more is the conviction strengthened, that the course of events in the world is not of chance and aimless. It is progressive and consecutive. It has a divine goal to which it is being continually directed. The principle of election runs through it, and we dare not refuse the belief that ours is an elect people; that we in our time, in some measure as the Jewish nation in old days, are called, privileged, responsible; and that if, under this inspiring conviction, we have it in mind to fulfil the will of God and honour Him among men, a greater place still in the world will be given us, according to the words—"To him that hath shall be given," and "Them that honour Me I will honour."

* Isaiah xli. 22, 23. (Editor). † Isaiah xvii. 13, 14. (Editor).

THE BRITISH-ISRAEL CONFERENCE ASSOCIATION AT MANCHESTER.

The Second Conference of the above Association was held at Manchester on the 4th and 5th of October, in St. James's School-room, Major-street. An inaugural sermon was preached the evening before (October 3rd), in St. James's Church, George-street, by the Rev. R. Douglas, of Kidsgrove, Stoke-on-Trent. The programme as published was strictly carrried out, with one or two exceptions. Mr. J. G. Taylor, of Newcastle, who was advertised to speak on the 5th, was unable to appear, and Mr. Douglas Onslow's paper was read for him by the Clerical Secretary, as the writer was detained in London unavoidably. The various addresses were received very favourably by audiences which nearly filled the room at the two evening meetings, and half filled it during the afternoon of the 5th. The morning meeting of the 5th was poorly attended in consequence of the unfavourable character of the weather. It was hoped, we suppose, that the Church Congress sitting at the same time in Manchester might serve to fill the British-Israel meetings. If such were the case, we fear the expectation was hardly realised. Local clergymen in the audience seemed to be few indeed, though some no doubt there were present who appeared to be interested hearers.

A full report of the proceedings will be published by the Association in some form or other, and it is hoped that the next meeting of the Conference Association may take place in Bath early in December, if arrangements can be made to carry out the proposal by the local friends. The speakers at Manchester were the Rev. Robert Douglas, M.A.; the Rev. C. W. Hickson, M.A., of Bristol; the Rev. H. Marriott, M.A., the Rev. S. C. Adam, M.A., and the Rev. F. Aston, of Wolverhampton; the Rev. Denis Hanan, B.D., of Tipperary, Ireland; the Rev. Idrisyn Jones, M.A., of Birkenhead; the Rev. W. M. H. Milner, M.A. (Oxonian), of Trowbridge; Colonel Senior, Indian Army; Surgeon-General J. M. Grant, M.D., of Cheltenham; and Philo-Israel (Mr. E. W. Bird), of Clifton, Bristol. The testimony of the Association to the truth of Our Identity was fully and fairly given at the Conference, and the result, we hope, will be satisfactory. There was no controversy or opposition at the meetings, no time being afforded (wisely, we think) for such conflict of opinion. The chair was occupied by J. Thomas, Esq., of Manchester, Surgeon-General Grant, and Colonel Senior, at the several meetings respectively. There seemed to be a brisk sale for Identity publications at a stall near the door of the school-room, but we fear the literature distributed was confined to the cheaper description.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed: "Philo-Israel," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

SUBSCRIPTIONS. £ s. d.

Annual Subscription for one copy weekly (including the Twelve Double Numbers) post free 0 7 6
Two Copies (including Double Numbers) 0 13 6
Three Copies " " " 1 0 4
Four Copies " " " 1 5 6
Six Copies " " " 1 16 4

Post Office Orders to be made payable at the head office, St. Martin's-le-grand, London, to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C., or F. W. PARRY & Co., 29, Paternoster-row, London.

The Editor cannot undertake to return rejected MSS. unless stamps for the purpose be sent. Parties requiring an answer should enclose a stamp.

Contents Bills and Show Cards may be obtained on application to the Publishers.

Advertisements should be sent to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

Prepaid Advertisements are inserted at the rate of thirty words for 1s. 4d.

METROPOLITAN ANGLO-ISRAEL ASSOCIATION.

THE BIBLE READINGS

are held

EVERY TUESDAY AFTERNOON,

At 3.30, in the Library of the Association, 14, King William-street, Charing Cross, W.C. All friends are invited.

METROPOLITAN ANGLO-ISRAEL ASSOCIATION.

A LECTURE will be Delivered in the ASSOCIATION ROOMS, 14, King William-street, Charing Cross, W.C., on THURSDAY EVENING NEXT, Oct. 18, 1888, at 7.30 o'clock, by Miss E. M. BABINGTON. Subject: "Ezekiel, the Prophet, in Expatriated Israel." Strangers will be made welcome.

JAMES BILLINGTON, Sec.

"NO PLACE LIKE HOME."

BY HIS GRACE THE

LORD ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY.

A copy of this Address will be SENT POST FREE on application to Mr. W. E. TERRY, 235, Southwark Bridge-road, S.E.

Kindly mention this Paper.

Just published—Cloth, 2s. 6d.—a re-issue of

The Origin of Masonic Ritual and Tradition:

A Lecture on the Three Degrees, by BRO. WM. ROWBOTTOM, P.M., 1028, with facsimile of a very rare Masonic engraving published in 1789.

"Exquisitely clear and singularly correct in everything wherein I may be any authority or guide."—Professor PIAZZI SMYTH. "Will be found of considerable interest to many besides Masons."—Church Bells.

Oxford: S. Rowbottom and Son; London: R. Banks and Son, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C.; and F. W. Parry and Co., 29, Paternoster Row, E.C.

Price Five Shillings.—"Substantially and attractively got up, and profusely illustrated."—Oldham Chronicle.

Eildon Grange: A Tale.

By ANDREW CLARK, M.A., Vicar of St. Michael's, Oxford. "One of the most charming books. . . . The illustrations are full of playful humour."—Scotsman. "The book is undoubtedly a happy one."—The Oxford Magazine. "Both entertaining and bracing."—Dundee Advertiser.

Oxford: S. Rowbottom and Son; London: Hamilton, Adams and Co., 32, Paternoster Row, E.C.

☞ Ask for this Book at the Libraries.

NEW BOOK BY DR. WILD.

Just Published, Price 3s., Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Lettered. Sent by Post on receipt of Published Price.

TALKS FOR THE TIMES

BY JOSEPH WILD, M.A., D.D.,

Pastor of the Bond-st. Congregational Church, Toronto.

CONTENTS.—Chapter 1. A Gift of One Hundred and Ninety-Two Million Acres of Land. 2. The Return of the Jews to Palestine. 3. Folks that won't be Somebody. 4. The Four Prophecies of Egypt. 5. The Stone Kingdom and Dynamite; and the Orange Bill. 6. "144!" 7. "666!" 8. The Transit of Venus. 9. The Miracles of Antichrist; and the High Rock Image of Massachusetts, U.S. 10. The an who could not sleep, and what came of it. 11. The Rainbow. 12. London Destroyed, and Jerusalem a Seaport. 13. Liberalism. 14. A Graft without a Stock. 15. Mouldy Bread and an Oath. 16. A Tombstone Inscription. 17. Dog Lappers. 18. How to get Rich.

ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London. JOHN MENZIES & Co., Edinburgh & Glasgow.

Price 3d., by post 3½d. One dozen copies post free for 3s.

PRESENT-DAY PROBLEMS AND How Anglo-Israel Truth Explains and Solves Them.

By V. M. COX.

Contents:—Our Identity and its Mission.—Imperial Federation.—The Eastern Question.—Rev. Archibald G. Brown and the Eastern Question.—Disestablishment.—Sabbath Observance.—Foreign Missions.—Our Relations with Judah.—Our Relations with Russia.—Egypt.—The Unemployed.—The Irish Problem.—Cui Bono?—A Remedy.

Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

ISRAEL IN THE NEW TESTAMENT OR, Proofs of the National Conversion of the Ten Tribes to Christianity.

By SURGEON-GEN. J. M. GRANT, M.D,

Price 4d., post free, 4½d.; 12 copies, post free, 4s.

London: Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street.

LUNG SAVE YOUR LIVES BY TAKING TONIC
LUNG OWBRIDGE'S TONIC
LUNG LUNG TONIC TONIC
LUNG THE MIGHTY HEALER. TONIC
LUNG It has a power over disease hitherto unknown in Medicine. TONIC
LUNG Are you at all Weak-chested or inclined to be Consumptive, with just a touch of Cough now and then? TONIC
LUNG "Try this Wonderful Medicine." The Cough and Weakness will disappear as if by magic, and you will feel a strength and power you never had before. TONIC
LUNG HAVE YOU A COUGH? TONIC
LUNG A DOSE WILL RELIEVE IT! TONIC
LUNG HAVE YOU A COLD? TONIC
LUNG A DOSE AT BEDTIME WILL TONIC
LUNG REMOVE IT. TONIC
LUNG Bronchitis & Asthma it relieves instantly TONIC
LUNG The Spasms of Coughing so dreadful in TONIC
LUNG Whooping Cough become less with each TONIC
LUNG dose of the medicine. TONIC
LUNG TONIC
LUNG Prepared by W. T. OWBRIDGE Chemist, Hull TONIC
LUNG Sold in Bottles 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d. TONIC
LUNG and 11s. by all Chemists and Patent TONIC
LUNG Medicine Vendors. Wholesale all London TONIC
LUNG and Provincial Houses. TONIC

PIANOFORTES, Harmoniums, American Organs. Why buy at shops inferior made instruments, and pay large profits, when you can buy direct from the Maker High-class Instruments, and save 50 per cent. by so doing? Full value allowed for old Instruments in exchange as part payment. Write for Price Lists and Testimonials to A. G. LINSTEAD, Cobden Pianoforte Company, 5, Eversholt-street, Camden Town, London. Established 1874.

HUMAN LIFE.—FIFTY YEARS' Record of Facts, Principles, and Discoveries (just published complete) Relating to the Improvement and Preservation of Human Life on Earth. Origin and true treatment of diseases. A series of articles by DR. SAMUEL BIRLEY, M.D., Ph.D. Book form, 50 pages. SENT FREE to every applicant by the publishers, GORDON B. MURRAY & CO., 50, Theobald's-road, Holborn, E.C. Write to-day.

SOUND, PURE, WHITE TEETH!

Those who value these will try

CARBOLINE

(The Great Sanitary Tooth Paste).

1/6 & 2/6 per Pot.

Through Chemists, or post free from the Makers,

GEORGE & WELCH

WORCESTER.

Lancet writes:—"To save the teeth use a good carbolic daily."

CHEAP WINTER DRESSES

WE will send a FULL-DRESS LENGTH of BEAUTIFUL CLOTH (for Good, Strong, Serviceable wear), in any of the following colours, Carriage paid to any address for 10s. 6d. Colours:—Black, Blue, Fawn, Salmon, Reseda, Slate, Ruby, Brown, Grey, Claret, Sage, Old Rose, Terra-Cotta, Amber, Peacock, Tabac, Bronze, Myrtle, Drab, Olive, Grenat, Clay Green, Navy, Partridge, Heather, &c., &c. These wonderful Dress Lengths have gained a world-wide reputation for magnificence, cheapness and durability, having no equal.

The Lady's Pictorial says:—"They are excellent quality and very good value for the money."

Thousands of Testimonials from all parts of the world.

Ladies should write at once for Patterns, which may be had free, and need not be returned.

AN AMAZING OFFER!!—We shall give a very handsome Brocaded Silk Handkerchief with each dress-length ordered from us during this season. Write for patterns. LUTUS B LEATHLEY, Armley, Leeds.

Certain HARNESS' Cure.

ELECTROPATHIC BELT

FOR

SLEEPLESSNESS

SLEEPLESSNESS.—The Rt. Hon. LORD BYRON says that—"Harness' Electropathic Belt is invaluable for sleeplessness, I recommend it to all my friends."

Guaranteed to generate a mild continuous current of Electricity, which speedily cures all Disorders of the Nerves, Stomach, Liver and Kidneys. Thousands of Testimonials. Pamphlet & Advice free on application to Mr. C. B. Harness, Consulting Electrician, the Medical Battery Co. Ltd.

Only Address,

52, OXFORD ST. LONDON, W. (Corner of Rathbone Place.)

Call to-day, if possible, or write at once

Extraordinary Offer!

☞ 10,000 CARPETS. ☜

5/- Five Shillings each. 5/-

GUARANTEED GENUINE BARGAINS.

THE BRITISH CARPET-WEAVING COMPANY will forward direct from their Looms, to any address, on receipt of Postal Order for 5s., or 62 stamps, one of their GENUINE SEAMLESS WOVEN REVERSIBLE TRIUMPH CARPETS, with handsome border, and woven in six different Art Patterns to harmonise with surroundings in Drawing-room, Dining-room, Bed-room, Kitchen, Study, etc., and large enough to cover any ordinary-sized room. These Carpets will be sold as an advertisement for the Goods of the British Carpet Weaving Company, BELOW THE ACTUAL COST OF PRODUCTION, the price they have hitherto been sold at being 8s. each. A Rug will be sent with Carpets for 1s. 6d. extra.

SPECIAL OFFER.—Two Carpets and two Rugs for 10s. 6d. This extraordinary offer may not be repeated.

REMEMBER these Carpets and Rugs are woven, and are not merely printed on Canvas like the so-called Carpets some firms advertise. We guarantee these Carpets to give every satisfaction, or money will be returned in full.

Send at once. All orders are despatched same day as received.

Don't forget to send for Sample, or you may never have another chance of getting a Carpet at such a ridiculously low price. Cheques and Postal Orders should be crossed "Union Bank."

The British Carpet-Weaving Co., 31, Old St., Aldersgate, London, E.C.

Printed and Published for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-st., London, E.C. F. W. PARRY (late GUEST & Co.), 29, Paternoster-row. WEDNESDAY, OCT. 17, 1888. [All rights reserved.

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."

(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India.)

"And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the Forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS of the EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. XII., No. 617. Entered at Stationers' Hall.] WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 24, 1888. [PRICE ONE PENNY.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
Federation or Disintegration	421
Archbishop Whitgift's Prayer, dated A.D. 1588	422
The Opening Address of Mr. T. M. Gee, President of the Sydenham British-Israel Association, New Zealand, August 30, 1887	423
The Careless, or Confident, Dwellers in the Isles (Ezek. xxxix. 6. By Joseph Thomson. Part I.	425
The Rev. Dr. Wild on the French Armada	426
Correspondence	427

FEDERATION OR DISINTEGRATION?

MR. DAVID L. GUILD, of 28, Raglan-street, Dundee, has obtained a second prize for an essay on the subject of "The Future of the British Empire" and an epitome of the paper has been published in the Supplement of The Newcastle Weekly Chronicle, of August 4th, 1888. The essay is evidently an able one, and Mr. Guild's ideas are original, with a fair foundation of reason in them. His view as to the future of the Empire is that "Federation is out of the question," and that disintegration stares us in the face. We shall lose Australasia by reason of the Colonies there setting up independent Governments of their own. Canada will probably gravitate to the United States. But what then? We shall keep India, the Ocean fortresses, Ireland, and for a long time to come the South African Colonies. We are really practically independent already of the Australian Colonies and of the Dominion. Our army will remain as it was, and we ought to be glad to confer independence on the Colonies which want it and let them go, to fulfil their allotted destiny like the United States, which we once foolishly allowed to part from us in anger, and so destroyed the then greatness of the Empire. Holding that view Mr. Guild yet looks "with a light heart" on the inevitable but coming disruption of the world-wide British Empire of to-day, concurring in what he deems the decree of God, which hitherto has been the rule of His government, whereby "Westward the course of Empire takes its way." He evidently thinks our greatness will depart Westward to the United States, by-and-bye, and just as the Persian gave way to the Greek, the Greek to the Roman, the Roman to the British Queen Victoria, who wields the sceptre of the Roman Emperor Augustus, so our mighty Dominion must pass into the hands of the "new people which England founded by her persecution and Britain lost by her folly." The reasons for these doleful anticipations had better be told us by Mr. Guild in his own words, and they are these:—

The scheme of Federation generally proposed is that of Home Rule for each of the colonies, with a Federal Parliament composed of representatives from the different members of the Federation, and entrusted with the management of the Imperial questions of foreign relations, peace and war, and imperial taxation, and acting also as a Supreme Court of Appeal to arbitrate between the members. Such an arrangement would relieve Britain from an immense burden in the shape of army and navy taxation, for the colonies would, of course, be required to bear their share in such expenditure; and it is certainly no more than just that they should be allowed a voice in their own foreign relations. But mark the opposite side of the picture. Great Britain, the nucleus of a world-wide empire, will sink to the humble position of a member of the British Imperial Federation, nominally equal, but perhaps actually inferior, both in power and wealth, to some of the other members; the days of her time-honoured Parliament, with its long list of venerated traditions and associations, will be gone, and its place will be taken by a petty provincial assembly. It is in consequence of such a step that the first great difficulty lies. To oppose such a downfall of their native country all classes and ranks and denominations would unite, and the consent of the British nation through its representatives in Parliament would never be given. Even were the scheme actually tried, it would in all probability be found impracticable. Provinces separated from each other by thousands of miles of ocean, the nearest ten days, and the farthest a month's navigation, have interests and concerns unknown to the other provinces, and in which they feel at best only a languid interest. Take, for instance, the Canadian Fisheries' Dispute, which caused so much agitation in Canada last year. How little interest was felt at home, and how much less in Australia and India, in what, to that colony, was a momentous question! Take, too, the present Chinese-Australian difficulty, and view it in the same light, Then there is the ever-present difficulty of Imperial taxation. With the rapid advance of the colonies in prosperity and wealth, an advance that must from the very nature of things, of necessity be unequal as between themselves, and which must, even in the case of the slowest, be far more rapid than any which Britain herself can hope for—it would be impossible to formulate any permanent basis of apportioning the taxation, and in the allocation of the share of the annual budget payable by each colony endless jealousies and ill-feeling would be generated. So great would be the friction that the Federation would in all likelihood be dissolved after a short trial. The case of the United States, to which some may draw attention as an instance of a large confederacy of many States, working harmoniously together, is not a case in point. There the Federating States were nearly equal in resources and rate of progress. Situated in one compact body, they had and have common interests and relations which the members of the proposed Federation would not have.

Federation is thus out of the question. In this age of striving after individual independence it would be strange if the fever did not reach the nations; indeed, as a matter of fact, the colonies are already so far on the road towards independence that Federation would involve a retracing of their steps. At home, here, in Britain we have seen, during the last hundred years, continual encroachments on the power of the Crown, and more and more power passing into the hands of the people, until the Crown has become little more than a puppet in the hands of the Prime Minister. Latterly, the same thing has been taking place in the colonies. Canada still receives from this country a Governor-General, but that Governor-General has simply to do what he is told. The colonies are already autonomous and autocratic, and it is only in the external matter of foreign relations that they are connected with, and subject to, the government of Great Britain. In all internal matters they already have Home Rule and independence. In fiscal matters it is long since the unity of the Empire was at an end. Each colony has its annual budget of revenue and expenditure, imposes taxes on British produce to raise that revenue, or to protect its own manufactures, and has its own national debt for which the colony, and the colony only, is responsible. What fiscal separation could be more complete?

Digitized by Google

In the colonies there has been mentioned a plan which it is said, would meet, at least for the present, their desires. This is the establishment of a representative council composed of deputies from all the colonies, sitting with the Colonial Secretary, and having, if not authoritative, at least a weighty deliberative voice in the settlement of colonial affairs. To this scheme there is the same objection of want of interest in one another's affairs. Yet a modification of it, namely, the appointment of colonial assessors to assist the Secretary for the Colonies in arriving at a decision in questions relating to the colonies they respectively represent, might be adopted with advantage.

But even these doleful prospects did not satisfy Mr. Guild. He is sure, come what will, "separation must end the present precarious state of affairs," and the certainty remains that the whole of Australasia and the Canadian Dominions must be lopped off, leaving nevertheless the substantial power of the Empire still unaffected by the change. His conclusions are thus expressed:—

Separation and dismemberment of the Empire then is the future which we must accustom ourselves to expect, but certainly not such a complete dismemberment as will confine Britain to her own shores and strip her of all her foreign dependencies, except such important possessions as Gibraltar and Malta. Australia and New Zealand, situated by themselves, will, in all likelihood, set up an independent nationality. Whether Canada will follow their example, or will seek admission into the United States, is an open question, and one the settlement of which depends very much upon the exigencies of that party warfare which is the bane of the Dominion. There the dismemberment will end. For Ireland, whether with or without Home Rule, there need be no fear. The Cape Colony, encouraged by the success of her larger sisters, will echo the demand for national independence. But the Cape is not in a position to enforce that demand, nor is it likely to be, and hence the demand will be unsuccessful. India is secure to us for the present and for a long time to come. The British who are there go there for the sake of Mammon, and without a single thought of ending their days there. However long they may remain, they are still Britons; all their hopes and aspirations are centred on "this precious stone set in the silver sea," and their feelings towards the country of the Moguls have in them nothing of patriotism.

With this future, then, before us, contracted it is true, but still most glorious, need we repine? Ought not that nation which has always been the proud possessor and asserter of liberty, rather to confer the independence which may soon be asked, and stretch forth the hand of renewed friendship to the new nations of the West and South, certain that the ties of kinship will form a bond stronger and more lasting than any constitution that man's ingenuity could devise?

The essayist reasons, of course, entirely from the experience of the past, and concludes that what America did, Australia and Canada will imitate. God and His prophetic word are in Mr. Guild's programme entirely out of view. He does not imagine God has any interest in the affairs of men, and that the great and mighty British Empire of these days will be left to fall to pieces without reference to God's will and His arrangements for His people Israel. Mr. Guild correctly looks for the future of our nation to be great and powerful under any circumstances but does not virtually credit the idea that He who gave the Anglo-Saxons their nation colonies in Australasia and in Canada can keep them as they are to-day, so content with the alliance with their "old Mother in the West," that they will remain for all time in union with her Empire. But God's Word speaks very decidedly on the subject of Israel and her Daughter nations. "A nation," He says, "and a company of nations shall be of thee" (Gen. xxxv. 11, R.V.). That these nation colonies, so created by promise, were to fly apart from each other and their parent, and become independent nations, is clearly negatived by the promise that the Empire so constituted was to become "the heir of the world," the benefactor of the nations of the earth, the ruler of the globe, the Power to whom "the kingdom and the dominion and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven," is destined to be granted by the King of kings (Rom. iv. 13; Isa. xxvii. 6; Dan. vii. 27, R.V.). The separation of America from Great Britain was provided for in Scripture, as Gen. xlviii. 19; Isa. xlix. 19—21, R.V., demonstrate, and the union of the whole British-Israelite Empire is shown by the union of the two sticks of Ezekiel's prophecy, Ephraim constituting one Empire only, (though one of many "tribes,") also by the prophecies of Hosea, Zephaniah and Isaiah, which always speak of Israel as one and indivisible, a nation and a kingdom, possessing the Gates and the Dominion of the sea, a mighty Heathen Empire, and illimitable commerce and wealth, all which considerations point to a world-wide Empire, consisting of "a company" of united or federated "nations" related as a mother nation and her stately "daughters" according to the prophecies (Gen. xlix. 22, mar. R.V.). Mr. Guild writes according to his lights, and his scheme for this nation's future is both interesting and able. But as he has nothing but his unaided reason to guide him, and the indications of Scripture in regard to Israel's history are not in all his thoughts, his conclusions are bound to be wrong, and misleading, as well as dishonouring to the Lord God of Israel.

ARCHBISHOP WHITGIFT'S PRAYER. DATED A.D. 1588.

In The Literary Churchman, of July 13th, 1888, we find a curious prayer quoted with approval, composed by Archbishop Whitgift, and recorded in his life. It had reference to "the troublous times" of the Spanish Armada (A.D. 1588), and was called "a Form of Prayer, necessary for the present time and state." The prayer was as follows:—

"O Lord of hosts, most loving and merciful Father, we Thy humble servants, prostrate ourselves before Thy Divine Majesty, most heartily beseeching Thee to grant unto us true repentance for our past sins—namely, for our unthankfulness, contempt of Thy Word, lack of compassion towards the afflicted, envy, malice, strife, and contention among ourselves, and for all other our iniquities. Lord, deal not with us as we have deserved, but of Thy great goodness and mercy, do away our offences: and give us grace to confess and acknowledge, O Lord, with all humble and hearty thanks, Thy wonderful and great benefits which Thou hast bestowed upon this Thy Church and people of England, in giving unto us, without any desert on our part, not only peace and quietness, but also in preserving our Most Gracious Queen Thine handmaid so miraculously from so many conspiracies, perils, and dangers, and in granting her good success against the attempts of our enemies. For the which so wonderful and great benefits, we humbly beseech Thee to stir up our dull minds to such thankfulness and acknowledging of Thy mercies, as become us and may be acceptable to Thee.

"We do instantly beseech Thee of Thy gracious goodness to be merciful to Thy Church militant here upon earth, many ways vexed and tormented by the malice of Satan and his members, and at this time as it were compassed about with most strong and subtle adversaries, and especially, O Lord, let Thine enemies know, and make them confess that Thou hast received England (which they most of all for Thy Gospel's sake do malign) into

Digitized by Google

Thine own protection. Set, we pray Thee, O Lord, a wall about it, and evermore mightily defend it. Let it be a comfort to the afflicted, a help to the oppressed, a defence to Thy Church and people persecuted abroad.

"And forasmuch as Thy cause is now in hand, we beseech Thee to direct and go before our armies, both by sea and land. Bless and preserve them, and grant unto them, O Lord, Thy good and honourable success and victory, as Thou didst to Abraham and his company against the four mighty kings, to Joshua against the five kings and against Amalek, to David against the strong and mightily armed Goliath, and as Thou usedst to do to Thy children when they please Thee. We acknowledge all power, strength, and victory to come from Thee. Some put their trust in chariots and some in horses, but we will remember Thy Name, O Lord our God. Thou bringest the counsel of the heathen to nought, and makest the devices of the people to be of none effect. There is no king that can be saved by the multitude of an host, neither is any mighty man delivered by much strength: an horse is but a vain thing to save a man. Therefore we pray unto Thee, O Lord, Thou art our help and our shield.

"O Lord, give good and prosperous success to all those that fight Thy battle against the enemies of Thy Gospel. Show some token continually for our good, that they who hate us may see it and be confounded, and that we, Thy little and despised flock, may say with good King David, Blessed is the people whose God is the Lord Jehovah, and blessed are the folk whom He hath chosen to be His inheritance. These and all graces necessary for us, grant, O heavenly Father, for Jesus Christ's sake, our only Mediator and Redeemer. Amen."

The good archbishop, supposing him to have composed this beautiful prayer, was evidently well satisfied that this our nation was even then God's chosen people. For he declares, what he wishes our enemies to know, that God had received "England into His own protection." He had no hesitation in affirming, even in the sight of God, that the State so honoured and comforted, was a defence to the Church of this land as well as to its people "persecuted abroad." He desired such a victory for our people, as the Lord gave to Abraham and his company against the four mighty kings, to Joshua against the five kings and Amalek; and to David against Goliath." All his illustrations were from the history of Israel, and he clearly regarded the British as they. He calls the British "God's despised, and little flock," and finally quotes Psa. xxxiii. 12, in order to describe them as "the people whose God is the Lord Jehovah, and the folk He hath chosen to be His own inheritance." Saying this, the archbishop, being a man of logical mind, must have been satisfied that "the English" were Israel, since God only chose the children of Israel, out of all the nations of the earth, to be "His people" and "His inheritance," and there cannot be two races entitled to this splendid honour and divine distinction? It is satisfactory to know that in Queen Elizabeth's days this country was hated and maligned by our continental neighbours, for the Gospel's sake, and that such an one as Archbishop Whitgift realised the fact that God Himself was "a wall about our country," and evermore mightily defended it as promised to Israel in respect to the appointed place" of her safe and secure domicile (2 Sam. vii. 10, R.V.; Isa. xli. 8—14, R.V.). In invoking the divine help and protection the archbishop did not imagine that our nation could dispense with her armies and navies, or that in the war with our enemies, we were to abstain from fighting, but leave God to destroy our enemies without putting forth our own proper exertions to attain the desired result—even victory. On the contrary, he asked God's presence with "our armies, both by sea and land," and he pleaded for God's "good and honourable success and victory" to attend our wars. In short, he recognised God as our national "help and shield," without whom nothing is strong, and who alone giveth the victory.

ANGLO-ISRAEL ASSOCIATIONS.—The Publishers of The Anglo-Israel Almanack will be glad to receive particulars of any new Association or Class for the study of Our Identity, for insertion in the 1889 issue of the Almanack.

THE OPENING ADDRESS OF MR. T. M. GEE, PRESIDENT OF THE SYDENHAM BRITISH-ISRAEL ASSOCIATION, NEW ZEALAND, AUGUST 30, 1887.

IT having fallen to me to address you on this our first meeting, I cannot do so without expressing my satisfaction and thankfulness to God that we have been able to start this association, which has for its end the discussion and propagation of what I believe to be one of the grandest and most important questions of the day, whatever may be thought of it at the present time by others. And I have the more hope of, and belief in our success: because whereas, a few years ago, the belief which we hold was received with the greatest ridicule, now people are beginning not only to listen to it with patience, but also to enquire upon what grounds we base that belief, and begin to confess that there is something in it.

More than this, it has stood proof against all arguments brought against it, and still challenges its opponents to bring forward any objections which cannot easily be met. And whilst it has been able to withstand the attacks made against it, it has put forth over and over again logical proof of its truth; such as cannot be denied by any reasonable person. And so far from being put down, as its enemies foretold it would be, it is, though slowly, yet steadily making its way: the numbers of those who believe in it increasing more and more as time goes on.

In this opening address, I think it will be proper for me to set before you the objects we have in view in such an association as this; the kind of proof we have for our belief; the spirit in which we should conduct our enquiries, and the benefits to be derived from such a pursuit.

1. The objects we have in view are threefold: (a) to study the great truth that we British people are verily and indeed the literal descendants of the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel, that people to whom such splendid promises are made in God's Word, for whom there is in store such a grand destiny; a people whom God (though we have not known it) has been watching, guiding, and gradually strengthening all through our past history up to the present time, that we are "Israelites, to whom pertaineth the adoption, and the glory, and the covenants, and the giving of the law, and the service of God, and the promises, whose are the fathers, and of whom as concerning the flesh Christ came, who is over all, God blessed for ever" (Rom. ix. 4, 5). That we are "the elect according to the foreknowledge of God," "a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a peculiar people, that we should shew forth the praise of Him who hath called us out of darkness into His marvellous light; which in time past were not a people" (in our Lo-Ammi condition,) "but now are the people of God; which had not obtained mercy" (in our Lo-Ruhamah condition), "but now have obtained mercy" (1 Peter ii. 9, 10).

(b) Our second object is to strengthen, confirm, and instruct each other in our belief. Different minds see things in different lights; and different persons have means more or less of gaining knowledge, which knowledge they can bring here and add it to the common stock.

(c) Our third object will be to disseminate to others the knowledge we have gained ourselves, to make known the glorious truth, each as he or she has means to do so, by speaking of it to our friends and acquaintances, or by circulating the literature on the subject. And we shall be better able to do so, by belonging to such an association as this, because it will not only raise our enthusiasm for our belief, but will also provide us with arguments to support it to answer the honest objections of some, and to combat the hostility of others.

2. The kind of proof we have. When any proposition is made, more especially if it be of a nature unexpected, and such as runs counter to the long-established opinions of men (and this is the case with Our Identity), it is necessary and reasonable that proofs should be advanced for our belief in the truth of the proposition. For we have no right to put forth anything as truth, unless we can shew that we have reasonable grounds for so doing, and such as would be accepted for any other kind of truth, and this more especially where it affects our religious opinions.

Digitized by Google

What, then, is the kind of evidence we have for believing the British to be the descendants of the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel.

First and chiefest, we have the proof afforded by Identity. In God's Word a certain career and special characteristics are declared for Israel after their leaving Palestine and in the latter days, and it is not only reason, but common sense such as we act upon every day, when we find a people answering to these in every respect, to believe that they are the people so indicated. And this argument is the stronger, because we cannot question the truth of the prophecy; since we know by experience that other prophecies from the same source have been literally fulfilled. The prophecies concerning Israel itself up to the time of its expulsion from Palestine, those concerning Judah, those concerning Christ, those concerning Babylon, Tyre, etc., have all been literally fulfilled; and so we might reasonably expect that those concerning Israel's after history would be fulfilled, and in the same way, viz., literally, and not spiritually, as most people are led by their teachers most unreasonably to believe. Where, then, is the unreasonableness, where the "craze," if we, finding the British answering in every way to what was foretold of Israel, declare that they are Israel?

The kind of evidence we thus have in identification would stand in any court of law in cases of claim to property, nay, much less evidence than we produce has secured to claimants the property they have sought for.

This proof, founded upon the Word of God, is in itself sufficient for us, and needs no other; but if there be any other kind tending towards the same end, then I think it is right to ascertain what it is, not only for the strengthening our own convictions, but because there is a certain class of minds to which evidence outside the Bible seems to have, however wrongly, greater weight, such for instance, as may be obtained from secular history, language, race, etc. And this brings me to the second kind of proof, viz., history, language, race, manners, customs, laws, etc., Of course, it would be out of place in this address to shew how these, in a greater or less degree, confirm our belief. I can only say that as far as research has been made with regard to them, they all point in the same direction, and that is to Our Identity with Israel. Of course, in the case of history, we cannot find a full confirmation of our views: because if it were to contain all the facts necessary for such confirmation, then Israel could not have been lost, and God's purpose would have been frustrated. It is sufficient for us, that history does not contradict us; and as far as I have been able to see, it does not do this.

Besides all this, there are a number of little things cropping up from time to time, which, though by themselves they would have little weight, yet all tend to the same thing, and add to the amount of evidence we already have. These things will be pointed out during our future discussions.

There is also for this belief a peculiar kind of evidence which is very striking. The Anglican Church, or National Church of England, in her cathedrals every day in the year, and in her churches every Sunday, over and over again most unmistakably proclaim that we are Israel; she puts into the mouths of her worshippers such terms and phrases as would be altogether inappropriate and untrue, were those worshippers not Israelites. And this she does blindly, and quite ignorant of how literally true the words are which she uses, reminding one of the words of God by the prophet, "Who is so blind as My servant Jacob?" When this fact is pointed out to her ministers, they say we are to take these words in a spiritual sense, an assertion which can easily be shown to be without proof, as I hope our future enquiries will shew.

Taken altogether, we have such an amount of proof, and that daily increasing, not only from increased light thrown upon God's Word, but also from events that are occurring in the world, as no unprejudiced mind can resist, and it would be astonishing to us that men should still be opposed to the Identity, did we not know from past history how difficult it is to combat the prejudices of men, and particularly when we remember how all the proofs (which, like ours, were identities and appeals to the prophets) which our Lord gave of His Messiaship were futile against His enemies, nay, even though they were confirmed by unmistakable miracles. Well might He say, "If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead."

Since our object is to ascertain the truth as contained in the Bible, a book given us by God, it becomes a duty, and rightly understood, a privilege, to search it, as for "hid treasures," to seek by its means to know the mind of God, as far as we finite creatures can learn it. But we must approach it with humility, and an unbiassed mind, not seeking to establish some favourite theory of our own; but by patient research, and comparing Scripture with Scripture, and using such outward aids as will assist us, seek to find out what it is really intended to teach us. And since we cannot do this in our own wisdom, we should bring to our researches a prayerful spirit, asking with the Psalmist, "Open Thou mine eyes, that I may see the wondrous things of Thy law."

And we must bring to it an earnestness of spirit, being fully persuaded in ourselves, that what the apostle says is true for us as for those in old times, "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works."

We must also come to it with a fixed resolve, that whatever it points out as true, though it shatter our belief in the Identity to pieces, that we will abide by. I would lay especial stress upon this, because when we take up with a certain theory which pleases us, we are apt to seek only that which makes for it: to disregard, or slide loosely over that which appears to be against it, and to esteem as enemies all those who do not agree with it. For my part, I have always given as much attention to the objections to the British-Israel Identity as to those arguments which are in favour of it, for my object is not, as I am sure yours is not, to uphold this belief at any hazard, but to enquire whether it be true or not. And my firm persuasion is, that whatever God has ordained, whether we be Israel or no, that is the best; and I am content to abide in this as in all other things by His will, who knows infinitely better than we do what is good for us.

Coming, then, to the Bible in such a spirit, let us seek out what it says with regard to the after condition of the Israelites, and let us be very careful that we understand what it really says shall happen, and to whom the prophecies are really applicable. Having done this carefully, then let us seek out the people who are fulfilling what it is said the Israelites should do. When John the Baptist sent to our Saviour, asking, "Art thou the Christ, or do we look for another?" His answer was, "Go and shew John again those things which ye do hear and see; the blind receive their sight," &c., enumerating all the things which Isaiah had said the Messiah should do, thus giving us a simple and natural rule of judging whether a prophecy is being fulfilled or not.

In pursuing this enquiry, it will be necessary to ascertain that while the British people are fulfilling the like things to those foretold of Israel, they only are completely doing so, and that the same things cannot be said of other nations; for it has been objected to this belief that it has claimed identifications which are as true for other peoples. But though it be true that they in some respects may answer to the prophecies, such as China for multitudinousness, yet not one of them, nor all of them together, answer in all, as the British do.

Digitized by Google

It is now time that I mention some of the benefits to be derived from a belief in our Identification. One of the most tantalising things a British-Israelite has to meet with when speaking to others on this subject, is the indifferent way in which he is asked, "Well, supposing we are Israelites, what good will it be to us to know it?" Such a question is worse than downright antagonism and ridicule; because you can have no hope of such a questioner; it matters not to him whether you can prove yourself right or not.

I have not left myself much time to point out all the benefits to be gained by pursuing this subject and finding it to be true; but I will mention two or three of the most important.

1. The establishment of this belief is an unanswerable proof of the truth of the Bible, and completely cuts the ground from beneath the feet of infidelity, such as no other argument has been able to do. This is no mere supposition, for it is a matter of fact that many infidels have already been converted by it, and are witnessing for Christ and our holy religion.

2. It makes the meaning of the Bible wonderfully clear; we understand it as we never understood it before; we see in it a beautiful consistency and order, when all before appeared confusion and self-contradiction; and we have no need to defend its statements in the miserably illogical manner spiritualists are compelled to do,—a manner of interpretation which has done so much mischief by playing into the hands of the sceptic.

3. It gives us a reason for the great events that are now passing in the world, particularly in respect to our own country. We see why it is that the people of a small island in the north-west of Europe is gradually over-running all the world, is possessed of all the most powerful positions on the globe, is absorbing year by year vast tracts of country, and that in opposition to the wishes of its government. It also enables us to forecast in some measure what the outcome of present events will be. For instance, British-Israelites knew before the event, that France would have nothing to do with the British occupation of Egypt; that the British, when they were there, however much they might try to leave it, would not be able to do so, as the event has proved. They foresaw, years ago, what is now almost an accomplished fact, the Federation of the British Colonies; they knew when everybody a little time ago was expecting war with Russia, that no such thing could occur yet. They have long seen that a tremendous war will ere long break out in Europe, in which Britain will not be involved. They can venture to say that Constantinople will become ours; that Ireland will never be separated from the Empire; that there will at some future time be a war with Russia and Britain in which the former will be most signally beaten. And many other things British-Israelites see that would be of the utmost importance to our statesmen, if only they could believe that we are Israelites.

4. I have only time to mention one other benefit, and that is a personal and very comforting one. If I find that God has kept every promise He has made to His people as a nation, so I can believe that He will keep every one made to us as individuals. I can firmly believe the promises made to those who trust in Him, cast their burdens upon Him, etc. So in times of trouble and anxiety, I can go to my Bible and find comfort and promise that I can most confidently rely on.

To conclude, let us, in pursuing this enquiry, study our Bible earnestly, humbly, and prayerfully; and even if it should so happen that we do not find confirmation of our belief, yet we shall surely find a blessing, and shall be enabled to see truths unknown to us before; and better than all, we shall not fail to meet Him there, of whom all the Scriptures testify, and who came to be "a light to lighten" the Gentiles, and the glory of His people Israel.

THE "CARELESS," OR "CONFIDENT," DWELLERS IN THE ISLES (EZEK. XXXIX. 6).

By Joseph Thomson.

PART 1.

The first article in the "Fortnightly Review" for June, 1888, entitled, "Can we hold our own?" and presumably by the Editor, should be carefully read by every Anglo-Israelite and British patriot, as indicating the position we at present occupy relative to other nations. Its direct bearing is upon the question of our national defences; and if we may accept all its statements, our present position is one, humanly speaking, not only full of danger, but absolutely tempting to the cupidity of any possible foreign enemy. This position, however alarming it may be to others, does not much disconcert us; for even without the fuller assurance of immunity from foreign conquest which the knowledge of Our Identity with the lost House of Israel supplies, only a slight knowledge of our history shows that this state of unpreparedness, comparatively speaking, to resist attack, or enter upon aggressive warfare, has been generally our normal character. It is within the memory of the present generation how unpreparedly we embarked upon the Russo-Crimean war; while, to mention no other, the time of the projected Invincible Spanish Armada invasion of 1588, (the tercentenary of which we have been celebrating in a somewhat half-hearted way this year)* found us similarly most unprepared to meet an hostile enemy. Our fleet was low, poorly manned, not half victualled, and the pay greatly in arrears, while private enterprise had to supplement the spasmodic efforts of the government at the last moment. And we fear that, notwithstanding all the efforts of our present alarmists, such is the innate character of the British people for supine unpreparedness and a parsimonious economy, were war suddenly to break out, our general unreadiness, even for self-defence, would at first be painfully conspicuous, if not disastrous.

The writer of the article in the Fortnightly, however, gives us a summary of our national doings in former years. In those great wars of the past "we were," he says, "relatively a poor country attacking richer nations." This, he implies, though he does not exactly assert it, is now so altered, that it has affected our national warlike character, which however is very much open to question. He goes on to say that this "fact" (our being "poor") "called out all the energy and ambition, not only of our soldiers and sailors, but of men everywhere throughout the country. From the time of Drake onwards, numbers of private individuals selected as the road to honour and fortune, attacking the public enemy. During the great war from 1795 to 1815, our population was not half that of France. The seizure of the Cape and Ceylon in 1795, and of all the colonies of Denmark and Sweden in 1801, and of 400 Prussian merchant ships in a few weeks in 1806, and the sweeping of the Prussian flag from the ocean, as we had already swept the French," are, he says, "only typical instances of the whole course of our procedure during that war" (p. 734).

Having thus shown that "we had everything to gain and nothing to lose (!) by war"—nothing to lose, even if Napoleon

* Since writing the above we have learnt from current newspapers that the tercentenary anniversary of sighting the Armada from Plymouth Hoe, was celebrated at Plymouth on July 19th. The foundation stone of an Armada Memorial was laid by the Mayor, Archdeacon Wilkinson officiating. It is to be of granite, 35 feet high, surmounted by a figure of Britannia holding a banner and trident in one hand, and a sword in the other. In the shaft panels will be medallion portraits of the "sea-dogs," Howard, Drake, Hawkins, Raleigh, Seymour, Frobisher, and some others; and on a bronze bas-relief, besides which will be statues of Valour and Vigilance, there will be a representation of the destruction of the "invincible" fleet, with the words, "He blew with His winds, and they were scattered." The sentiment expressed in this inscription is thoroughly Israelitish and Biblical; referring us back to the destruction of Pharaoh's host in the Red Sea (Ex. xv. 10), and giving the glory of our national deliverance unto Him to whom it is due. See Psa. cxxiv.

Digitized by Google

had made good his projected invasion!—he goes on to ask "what is the case now?" and thus answers it:—

"Since 1844 the territories over which the Kaiser of Germany rules have been trebled in extent by accessions in Africa and the Pacific. Yet all the lands of the German Kaiser in Europe, Africa and the Pacific, added to those of the Czar, who rules the most extended empire next to our own in the world, will not make up a territory equal to that of Britain. All the Great Powers of Europe,—Russia, France, Germany, Austria, Italy, and all their subject races, do not together muster such numbers as those over whom her Britannic Majesty reigns. Even that does not express the difference of wealth on land. Never since the days of the Roman Empire has there been such a disproportion between the condition of one country, and that of all its rivals. But if this is the comparison on land, the comparison by sea throws it altogether in the shade. More than half of all the commerce in the world is in our hands, and in the remaining half our interests are so great, that it would be more nearly true to say that English interests are involved in at least three-fourths of the ocean commerce of the world." (pp. 734—5).

The writer then shows how detached are our possessions, and what distances separate them; asserting that this "commerce lies exposed to any hostile cruiser in the broad Pacific, and among the numberless sea creeks and bays, from Melbourne and Cape Town, northwards to the Baltic;" and that our commercial system is so sensitive at present, that the "mere rumour of danger during the affair of Pendjeh, so sent up the rates of insurance on freightage from the Baltic, that contracts at home were refused." Instancing the injury done to American commerce by the Alabama, he asks what effect would one (to say nothing of many) such cruiser have upon our commerce, which is at least one hundred fold that of America then? and remarks that it is not our wealth alone which is thus risked, but "our very food, of which at least one-third now comes to us across the seas."

Nor is our present position, according to this writer, one having fixed conditions, that have stood the test of time and events; nor one the peculiarities of which are even yet fully developed. "Twenty years ago, our commerce was not half of what it now is. Twenty years ago far more of our food was grown within these islands, far less came from abroad. Every year our commerce grows. Every year our home supplies dwindle." He then asks if our present naval strength is such as is reasonably calculated to defend this wide-spread commerce upon which our very existence depends, against not only one hostile Power, but any combination of Powers that may be formed against us? His answer is in the negative; and this he illustrates by an instance which demands the notice of all our responsible authorities at the head of affairs. He says:—

"Last February a rumour was current that we had entered into an alliance with Italy, by which we had undertaken to protect her from naval attack. France had good reasons for wishing to know the truth. The French fleet was ordered to Genoa. The French dockyards were busy with the preparation of every war vessel for sea. A rumour of an intended attack on Spezzia was spread. The English fleet moved in response to the challenge. Happily for us that gave the answer to the question which France thus asked. For the moment French Statesmen had gained all that they desired. The French admiral who had been placed in command of the mock expedition, went off to another station. The incident was ended. But had the French fleet at that moment made an attack upon the English, our admiral must either have fled ignominiously to take shelter under the guns of Malta, or have had the yet more terrible experience of having every English vessel sunk. This is a statement which cannot be gainsaid, if ship is compared with ship, and gun with gun" (p. 736).

Of course nothing is here allowed for the superiority of the British seamen over the French. "Ship is compared with ship, and gun with gun," and the British fleet is shown to be shortcoming. If this were all, we might be allowed, even by this writer, to trust a little to "British pluck," if not to circumstances, or, as we prefer putting it, to Providence. But this is not the worst as regards our navy: for "it takes three years to make one of the big guns of our greater ships," and these are only usable for about two hundred rounds; so after two hundred rounds we should have to re-supply our fleet with such guns. Have we such available in case of emergency? and if not what may we expect to happen in such a case? In answer to the first of these queries the writer refers to some facts, one of which is that when the Temeraire put to sea the other day, two of her 11-inch guns were found useless, and in no dock were there to be found two guns to replace them, but two had to be taken from an important fort in the mouth of the Thames! Thus, "only by robbing our poor land defence could even one ship be supplied with the first deficiency that appeared in her armament." The greatest naval authority in France, a Mr. Weyl, has recently published a study on the English navy, and the Times in reviewing his book says, "our old ordnance is worth nothing at all; our new gives us all manner of trouble. It would be difficult for England to go to war to-morrow, because people cannot fight without guns. 'Strange that the richest of countries' (says Mr. Weyl), should in this matter of artillery be inferior to all continental Powers." "It is humiliating," adds the Times, "to have these things said of us by a, for the nonce, good natured rival, but the bitterness of the criticism lies in its truth."

(To be continued.)

THE REV. DR. WILD ON "THE FRENCH ARMADA."

On Sunday evening, July 30 last, the Rev. Dr. Wild preached a remarkable sermon in his Church in Bond-street, Toronto, Canada, on Isa. xlix. 8. As our space forbids us to transcribe it into our pages we must content ourselves with quoting its substance for our readers' benefit, hoping they may read the original in The Canadian Advance of August 1st.

The text addressed to Israel declared God's decree: "In an acceptable time have I heard thee, and in a day of salvation have I helped thee. I will preserve thee, and give thee for a covenant of the people, to establish the earth, and to cause to inherit the desolate heritages." The preacher remarked on the peculiarity of British history: "There seems a divine quality or some element in it that must be taken into account. There is a power behind that Throne when we read that history and study the growth of that Empire." Regarding the origin of this people, he said that the mysterious Saxons first came into view just where and when the Ten Lost Tribes disappeared from sight. "We miss a people; we find another. No one can say whence the Anglo-Saxons came, nor what is now the condition of Israel who was lost. Dr. Wild comes to the conclusion that these two sets of peoples are one and the same. Lost Israel is found as the British nation.

He recommends those who do not yet believe in our Hebrew origin, to carry out the following simple plan. Let them read in the Bible all the prophecies applying to literal Israel, or the Ten Lost Tribes. Let them note the peculiarities, and then look for their fulfilment in some race or nation. You will surely find the Saxons and the British Empire giving you an answer to all those peculiarities, while at the same time you will not find half-a-dozen answers out of more than fifty in any other race or nation. Dr. Wild noticed the inconsistency of people who grow enthusiastic in respect to the literal fulfilment of prophecies which refer to Babylon, Persia, Greece, and Rome, but forget their own rules of interpretation when they come to the fifth kingdom, the little stone cut out of a mountain. They spiritualize everything respecting that, but literalize all that relates to the first four! The prophets literally foresaw Moab, Assyria, Egypt, Ammon, and their respective decay and ruin as Empires and States, but they could not see Britain, its small beginnings, its wondrous growth, and its magnificent future! "Nebuchadnezzar," said Dr. Wild, "in his palmy hour was a petty prince in comparison to Her Majesty Queen Victoria! The British Empire is five times larger than the Persian Empire under Darius; six times larger than Greece under Alexander the Great; and four times larger than Rome under the most prosperous of the Cæsars! Why should the prophets take up all their time with these petty kingdoms, and the grandest one the world had ever had they should pass by in silence?" "There was no reason for it!"

Digitized by Google

Dr. Wild then proceeds to comment on Isa. xlix., noticing how exactly the prophet describes the British in his glowing words, which point directly to Israel. God's plan clearly was to provide the tribe of Benjamin to accept the Saviour's teaching, and then by Benjamin's instrumentality to search for and find the remainder of the then wandering House of Joseph, in order that, converted to the faith, they might become the honoured missionaries to all the alien nations of the world. After describing Napoleon's abortive effort to invade England in 1803, Dr. Wild concluded thus, with respect to the second attempt of Israel's arch-enemy to frustrate the promises of God in their favour, and to prove them false by subduing His people after a successful invasion of their hitherto inviolable territory. He said:—

Thus ended ingloriously this mad, but yet, humanly considered, certain scheme to take Israel's island home. Bonaparte's indomitable will was not yet broken. The Pope had promised and arranged to crown him Emperor on his return. The scheme was an utter failure, but not so the crowning part, for Napoleon, as I have said, crowned himself, and more, he compelled the Italians to crown him as their king by giving him the iron crown of Charlemagne. He planned another invasion, and England this time learning what was in store for her began preparations. Bonaparte sought to deceive them and was almost successful. He ordered his fleet to sail for India with the intention of drawing after it the English fleet. The stratagem was a success, and to all appearances England was doomed. The order of Bonaparte's fleet after decoying the English away, to secretly return to Brest, and as England would be unprotected, they would then accomplish their work. But here again comes in an accident on man's side, but a God-send for England. The Admiral in command died suddenly while they were out at sea, and as he alone was in possession of the secret of the plan, the whole fleet had to return to get fresh orders. This gave to England a little more time. God knew what He was doing. Finally, once more all was ready. This time Napoleon said, "The English do not know what is hanging over them. If we can be masters of the Channel for twelve hours, England will have ceased to be." This saying was not as bold as the first, for it is "if we can" and it was twelve hours instead of six. Lord Nelson, who had command of the English fleet, was decoyed after the French fleet, and losing them, he returned to Gibraltar unconscious of Bonaparte's scheme. Admiral Treveille, the French Admiral, learnt of Nelson's presence, hesitated what to do, so instead of sailing for Brest, according to his orders, he went to Cadiz. Bonaparte was only made aware of the change the day he expected the fleet. He went into a rage, and in loud and angry tones cried, "What a navy, what an Admiral indeed we have; all hope," he said, "is gone; for God seems to be on the side of those hated English." He is. Lord Nelson followed Treveille, the Admiral, to Cadiz, and forced him to battle, and there and then was fought, October 21st, 1805, the Battle of Trafalgar Bay, that ended their invasions forever. This is the remedy, and scores of such like instances dot along the centuries the line of British history. Are they God's Israel? If they are not, it is strange that God and Providence has favoured them so remarkably. What a strange career the French nation has had? Their peasantry, the masses of the people, none more honest, more patient, nor more charitable than they in the whole world. Other countries are quiet and peaceable; their cities are hot-beds of revolution and strife. What a career they have had! No son succeeded a father on that throne for over 200 years. Government after government, one form after another; how unstable, while the little Island Home, which they desired to destroy, had not heard the sound of a foreign cannon for over 200 years, and where father and son had succeeded each other, and where quiet and peace reigns over their homes. Surely it is of God, and if we can only understand our mission, it will help us to that heroism, that sacrifice, that charity, that goodwill, and the enjoyment of that freedom which comes from God. If we will be true on these points, we need not fear even the combined world. The Lord bless us. Amen.

The power of the French, broken at Trafalgar, has strangely revived during our own times, and now more fears are expressed that France is becoming dangerously strong, and that we must look to our fleets, if we wish to maintain our superiority at sea. The God who fought for us at Trafalgar and prevented Napoleon's repeated efforts to invade our sacred soil can be trusted to-day to prevent the French molesting us or our floating commercial wealth. France requires to be powerful at sea to enable her to cope with Italy and Germany during the times of the coming "earthquake war-woe for Europe." She has a terrible coalition of enemies to face, and God is probably making her strong at sea to enable her to present a formidable front to her powerful foes and so protract the contest. We fail to see why France should attack us or provoke our hostility when her work upon the continent will tax all her energies. Besides which, God has guaranteed our safety and immunity from attack. Why therefore should we fear? Why should we not rather trust in the name of our God, and praise Him for all His undeserved benefits to our sinful race!

Correspondence.

AMERICAN SUNDAY-SCHOOL UNION.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR PHILO-ISRAEL,—Excuse me for troubling you again, but I would like to know if there is any evidence that any portion of the North American Indians are of Israelitish origin. My missionary superintendence is over what is known here as the "Five Civilized Tribes," viz., Cherokees, Creeks, Seminoles, Choctaws, and Chickasaws, and I find among their customs many reminders of Israelitish worship. They are well civilized and Christianized, and though I know that the "English-speaking peoples" are the "Lost Tribes," it occurred to me that these Indians may have mingled with them in the past so as to claim the title of "Israelites." Is there any evidence on the subject?

Cordially yours,

W. P. PAXSON.

Springfield, Mo., U.S.A., Sept. 25th, 1888.

[Note by the Editor.—Our friend has not mentioned in what respects the Five Civilized Tribes responded to the marks of Israel prior to their conversion to Christ, but we imagine that they had at no time any of the signs God put upon His people whereby they were to be known, and that, therefore, they cannot be any part or portion of the chosen ones of God. They were never "the head and not the tail" among the nations, but on the contrary have been subdued and dispossessed of their lands. They have no wealth, no power, no national status or strength. A people may have mingled with Israel as the Canaanites of old did with the Twelve Tribes, yet such mingling did not cause the former to be reckoned among the Lord's people. It will be found, we think, that the Red Indians have no racial connection with Israel, but are among the subject races destined to serve her, and to give up to her that portion of the desolate heritages of the earth which they occupy.]

A NEW ENGLAND.—It is a matter of difficulty for even the close reader to keep pace with the growth of England's possessions. The East Coast of Africa is now under English rule, through a treaty effected between the Sultan of Zanzibar and the British East African Association, by which 250 miles of coast line is virtually placed under English Government for fifty years. This new treaty indicates a desire on the part of England to found on the East African Coast a new colony, whose influence shall extend to the sources of the Nile.—Canadian Advance.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed: "Philo-Israel," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

SUBSCRIPTIONS. £ s. d.

Annual Subscription for one copy weekly (including the Twelve Double Numbers) post free 0 7 6
Two Copies (including Double Numbers) 0 13 6
Three Copies " " " 1 0 4
Four Copies " " " 1 5 6
Six Copies " " " 1 16 4

Post Office Orders to be made payable at the head office, St. Martin's-le-grand, London, to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C., or F. W. PARRY & Co., 29, Paternoster-row, London.

The Editor cannot undertake to return rejected MSS. unless stamps for the purpose be sent. Parties requiring an answer should enclose a stamp.

Contents Bills and Show Cards may be obtained on application to the Publishers.

Advertisements should be sent to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

Prepaid Advertisements are inserted at the rate of thirty words for 1s. 4d.

METROPOLITAN ANGLO-ISRAEL ASSOCIATION.

THE BIBLE READINGS

are held

EVERY TUESDAY AFTERNOON,

At 3.30, in the Library of the Association, 14, King William-street, Charing Cross, W.C. All friends are invited.

"NO PLACE LIKE HOME."

BY HIS GRACE THE

LORD ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY.

A copy of this Address will be SENT POST FREE on application to Mr. W. E. TERRY, 235, Southwark Bridge-road, S.E.

Kindly mention this Paper.

WORKS BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

The History of the House of Israel. How They Were Lost and How They Were Found. Told for the children. Price 6d., cloth 1s.; post free 7d. and 1s. 1d. Fifth edition.

Anglo-Israelism. True, Not False. Being Philo-Israel's Reply to the Rev. Canon Bell's pamphlet, "Anglo-Israelism: True or False?" Price 1d., 6s. 6d. per 100. 16 pages, crown 8vo.

An Elementary Digest or Sketch of the Chief Facts and Teachings of the Great Pyramid of Egypt. Adapted to the Unlearned and Unscientific 56 pages, Illustrated with Diagrams, price 4d., post free 5d. 10th Thousand.

Are the English People the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel? An Inquiry Establishing the Identity of the British Nation with the Lost Ten Tribes. 4d.

Our Identity with the House of Israel. Price 4d., Reprinted from "Clifton Chronicle Letters."

Our Identity: What it is Not; What it is; and Our Obligations To-day in Respect to it Being a Lecture recently delivered in London by Philo-Israel, and published by special request. Price 2d., a reduction for quantities.

Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

Price 6d. in paper covers; on toned paper, in cloth boards, gilt lettered, 1s., post free for stamps.

PAPAL IDOLATRY. An Exposure of the Dogma of Transubstantiation and Mariolatry, to which is added "My Reasons Why I will Never Go Back to the Church of Rome." The Bible Christian Magazine says:—"Unanswerable! The most powerful argument against Transubstantiation, in the same space, that we have read

R. BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

Just published—Cloth, 2s. 6d.—a re-issue of

The Origin of Masonic Ritual and Tradition:

A Lecture on the Three Degrees, by BRO. WM. ROWBOTTOM, P.M., 1028, with facsimile of a very rare Masonic engraving published in 1789.

"Exquisitely clear and singularly correct in everything wherein I may be any authority or guide."—Professor PIAZZI SMYTH. "Will be found of considerable interest to many besides Masons."—Church Bells.

Oxford: S. Rowbottom and Son; London: R. Banks and Son, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C.; and F. W. Parry and Co., 29, Paternoster Row, E.C.

Price Five Shillings.—"Substantially and attractively got up, and profusely illustrated."—Oldham Chronicle.

Eildon Grange: A Tale.

By ANDREW CLARK, M.A., Vicar of St. Michael's, Oxford. "One of the most charming books. . . . The illustrations are full of playful humour."—Scotsman. "The book is undoubtedly a happy one."—The Oxford Magazine. "Both entertaining and bracing."—Dundee Advertiser.

Oxford: S. Rowbottom and Son; London: Hamilton, Adams and Co., 32, Paternoster Row, E.C.

☞ Ask for this Book at the Libraries.

ALL PUBLICATIONS ON THE IDENTITY OF THE LOST TRIBES OF ISRAEL

May be obtained at the Office of ROBERT BANKS & SON, RACQUET COURT, FLEET STREET.

The Banner of Israel (Weekly No. and Monthly Part). The Messenger, Two Witnesses, etc., forwarded immediately on publication at office rates. The Canadian Advance, post free for one year for 4s. 6d.

Catalogues post free on application.

NEW WORK BY DR. GRANT.

Just published, price 2s. 6d., Cloth boards, gilt lettered.

Sent free to any address in Great Britain, Europe, and America, on receipt of Postal Order or stamps.

THE ORIGIN, PROGRESS, AND ESTABLISHMENT

OF THE

KINGDOM OF GOD IN THE WORLD.

BY SURGEON-GEN. J. M. GRANT, M.D.

Army Medical Staff (Retired).

"THY KINGDOM COME."

CONTENTS.—Preface.—Introduction.—Chap. I. Abraham.—Chap. II. The Chosen People.—Chap. III. The Monarchy.—Chap. IV. Israel and Judah.—Chap. V. Jew and Gentile.—Chap. VI. The New Covenant.—Chapter VII. The End of the World.—Chapter VIII. The Kingdom.—Chapter IX. The Government, Ritual, and Close of the Millennium.—Conclusion.—Appendix. The Gentile Church.

ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-st., London, E.C., and by order of any Bookseller.

LUNG SAVE YOUR LIVES BY TAKING TONIC
LUNG OWBRIDGE'S TONIC
LUNG LUNG TONIC TONIC
LUNG TONIC
LUNG TONIC
LUNG TONIC
LUNG TONIC
LUNG THE MIGHTY HEALER. TONIC
LUNG TONIC
LUNG It has a power over disease hitherto TONIC
LUNG unknown in Medicine. TONIC
LUNG Are you at all Weak-chested or in- TONIC
LUNG clined to be Consumptive, with just a TONIC
LUNG touch of Cough now and then? TONIC
LUNG "Try this Wonderful Medicine." The TONIC
LUNG Cough and Weakness will disappear as TONIC
LUNG if by magic, and you will feel a strength TONIC
LUNG and power you never had before." TONIC
LUNG HAVE YOU A COUGH? TONIC
LUNG A DOSE WILL RELIEVE IT! TONIC
LUNG HAVE YOU A COLD? TONIC
LUNG A DOSE AT BEDTIME WILL TONIC
LUNG REMOVE IT. TONIC
LUNG Bronchitis & Asthma it relieves instantly TONIC
LUNG The Spasms of Coughing so dreadful in TONIC
LUNG Whooping Cough become less with each TONIC
LUNG dose of the medicine. TONIC
LUNG TONIC
LUNG Prepared by W. T. OWBRIDGE Chemist, Hull TONIC
LUNG Sold in Bottles 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d. TONIC
LUNG and 11s. by all Chemists and Patent TONIC
LUNG Medicine Vendors. Wholesale all London TONIC
LUNG and Provincial Houses. TONIC

PIANOFORTES, Harmoniums, American Organs. Why buy at shops inferior made instruments, and pay large profits, when you can buy direct from the Maker High-class Instruments, and save 50 per cent. by so doing? Full value allowed for old Instruments in exchange as part payment. Write for Price Lists and Testimonials to A. G. LINSTEAD, Cobden Pianoforte Company, 5, Eversholt-street, Camden Town, London. Established 1874.

HUMAN LIFE—FIFTY YEARS' Record of Facts, Principles, and Discoveries (just published complete) Relating to the Improvement and Preservation of Human Life on Earth. Origin and true treatment of diseases. A series of articles by DR. SAMUEL BIRLEY, M.D., Ph.D. Book form, 50 pages. SENT FREE to every applicant by the publishers, GORDON B. MURRAY & CO., 50, Theobald's-road, Holborn, E.C. Write to-day.

Published by

ROBERT BANKS AND SON,

Racquet-court, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

A MESSAGE TO THE CHURCH FROM THE NINETEENTH CENTURY. The last written work on the Identity of the Anglo-Saxon Race with Lost Israel. By the late BISHOP TITCOMB. Imperial 8vo., cloth, gilt, 3s.

ANGLO-ISRAEL TRACTS. Price ½d. each; 8 pp. royal 16mo. Assorted packet post free for 7 stamps. The tracts are well written, by the following Authors:—Rev. Bishop Titcomb, D.D.; Philo-Israel; W. S. Cavill; Douglas A. Onslow, J.P.; Mrs. G. Albert Rogers; "A E I"; Surgeon-General J. M. Grant, M.D.; Rev. Robert Douglas; Rev. C. W. Hickson.

WHO ARE WE? AND WHAT IS OUR MISSION? By J. THORNHILL HARRISON. With seven Maps by the Woodbury Permanent Photo Process. In handsome cloth, gilt, 5s.; post free for P.O.

THE BRITISH NATION Proved to be the Remnant of Israel, and the Representatives of the Lost Ten Tribes. By J. H. WELDON, J.P., Author of "Britain and Prophecy." 66 pp., demy 8vo., 6d.; by post, 7d.

SOUND, PURE, WHITE

TEETH!

Those who value these will try

CARBOLINE

(The Great Sanitary Tooth Paste).

1/6 & 2/6 per Pot.

Through Chemists, or post free from the Makers,

GEORGE & WELCH

WORCESTER.

Lancet writes:—"To save the teeth use a good carbolic daily."

CHEAP WINTER DRESSES

WE will send a FULL-DRESS LENGTH of BEAUTIFUL CLOTH (for Good, Strong, Serviceable wear), in any of the following colours, Carriage paid to any address for 10s. 6d. Colours:—Black, Blue, Fawn, Salmon, Reseda, Slate, Ruby, Brown, Grey, Claret, Sage, Old Rose, Terra-Cotta, Amber, Peacock, Tabac, Bronze, Myrtle, Drab, Olive, Grenat, Clay Green, Navy, Partridge, Heather, &c., &c. These wonderful Dress Lengths have gained a world-wide reputation for magnificence, cheapness and durability, having no equal.

The Lady's Pictorial says:—"They are excellent quality and very good value for the money."

Thousands of Testimonials from all parts of the world. Ladies should write at once for Patterns, which may be had free, and need not be returned.

AN AMAZING OFFER!!—We shall give a very handsome Brocaded Silk Handkerchief with each dress-length ordered from us during this season. Write for patterns. LUTUS B LEATHLEY, Armley, Leeds.

Certain HARNESS' Cure.

ELECTROPATHIC BELT

FOR

RHEUMATISM

Major PAKENHAM, Longstone House, Armagh, writes:—"The Electropathic Belt has completely cured me of rheumatic gout. I suffered intense agony for two years. I now feel strong and active."

Guaranteed to generate a mild continuous current of Electricity, which speedily cures all Disorders of the Nerves, Stomach, Liver and Kidneys. Thousands of Testimonials. Pamphlet & Advice free on application to Mr. C. B. Harness, Consulting Electrician, the Medical Battery Co. Ltd.

Only Address,

52, OXFORD ST. LONDON, W. (Corner of Rathbone Place.)

Call to-day, if possible, or write at once

Printed and Published for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-st., London, E.C.; F. W. PARRY (late GUEST & CO.), 29, Paternoster-row.

WEDNESDAY, OCT. 24, 1888. [All rights reserved.]

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."

(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India.)

"And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the Forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS of the EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. XII., No. 618. Entered at Stationers' Hall.] WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 31, 1888. [PRICE ONE PENNY.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
The Imperial British East African Company	429
The Wild Olive Graft Boasts Itself. By the Rev. Denis Hanan, B.D.	430
The Careless or Confident Dwellers in the Isles (Ezek. xxxix. 6). By Joseph Thomson. Part II.	431
The Spanish Armada	432
The Cities of the Plain. By John T. Gott	433
Metropolitan Anglo-Israel Association	435
Correspondence	435

THE IMPERIAL BRITISH EAST AFRICAN COMPANY.

IN the Times of Sept. 8, the text of the charter which Her Majesty's Government has just conferred on "The Imperial British East African Company" is published in extenso. In the same issue of the Times, the leading article dwells with great satisfaction on this fresh addition to the British Empire and its responsibilities, while three or four columns in another part of the paper are devoted to a carefully prepared description of the new East African Dominion, its capabilities and resources. On pp. 38 and 39 of the BANNER of this year, No. 578, we noticed this "Further Expansion of the Empire," and pointed out its geographical position, as well as the bearing of the subject on Our Identity with the Lost Ten Tribes. We revert to the matter now because the Government has placed its approval on the entire transaction, and granted the company a Royal Charter which practically launches a new British East and Central African Empire, the future consequences of which are likely to be of the most far-reaching character, pointing in no doubtful manner to the fact that this nation is Israel. In one respect we find our previous description of the new British African territory, on page 38, was incorrect. Mount Killima Njaro is not included in the British concession. That mountain falls to the sphere of German influence. But Mount Kenia to the North of it is within the ceded territory, and will fall to Britain.

"The British zone [says the Times correspondent] extends for 300 miles inland to the shores of Victoria Nyanza. Its Northern limit follows the river Tana to its source, then strikes in a direct line North-west, at about 70 miles north from Mount Kenia, which may be regarded as a fair compensation for the cession of Kilimanjaro to Germany. One estimate makes Mount Kenia even higher than Kilimanjaro, and it certainly is a mountain of very great interest. There seems no reason why ultimately the company's influence might not be extended to the Nile, and include at least the province of Emin Pasha. There is one great advantage to start with which the coast of the British zone possesses over the coast generally. Beyond the central half, from a little south of Mombassa to Malindi, the deadly character of the maritime region is reported to be almost entirely absent. After 25 miles of low hills and undrainable depressions, the country rises by a very gradual slope to the elevated plateau of the interior. From what information we possess, it would seem that the atmosphere is dry and comparatively healthy; rank vegetation is absent, perhaps because of the porous nature of the sandstone undersoil."

The new charter has been issued to thirty-five British subjects, of whom the chief are Lord Brassey, Mr. William Mackinnon, Sir Donald Stewart, and Sir John Kirk. The territory was ceded on a long lease by the Sultan of Zanzibar to the English Company, and comprises first a strip of coast-line 10 miles broad and 150 miles long, the chief harbour being a veritable and already settled British missionary and splendid naval station, Mombassa. The land then "stretches inward in the shape of an irregular wedge, which has its apex on the Eastern shore of the Victoria Nyanza Lake." Its northern boundary is the river Tana from the coast to some distance inwards. The line passes from that river Northwards so as to include Mount Kenia, and its southern boundary is that which divides the "sphere of German and British influence."

The whole territory now accepted as a British East African State is 50,000 square miles in extent, with a population of about two millions of Africans. The highlands 200 miles from the coast are most fertile and healthy; but the country near the coast is very much the reverse of healthy. It constitutes one of the serious difficulties of the new company that it is in just this unhealthy region the Slave Trade holds its ground, and the opposition of the company to those proceedings, as stipulated in the charter, will bring upon it the hostility of all slave drivers and their masters; thus rendering it precarious and difficult for the officers of the company to reach the salubrious regions inland, where alone Europeans can live and thrive. Another difficulty in our way, is the fact that the warlike tribe of the Masai occupy the uplands of the interior, and they must be rendered amenable to reason in some way or other before the operations of civilization can even commence! In regard to this aspect of the matter the Times remarks thus:—

It is no small matter that England is now definitely committed to a share in the work of carrying European civilization into the recesses of the Dark Continent. It may be that this will hereafter be regarded as one of the great achievements of the nineteenth century. The issues of such an undertaking are as yet literally incalculable. Africa, especially Eastern Africa, seems to be like a fruit with a rough and forbidding rind and a sweet kernel within. There is no calculating as yet what the full value of the kernel may be when the rind is once penetrated and stripped off, but there is no reason to think that its value has been greatly overestimated by the few who have been permitted to taste it. It is likely enough that, although Africa has been the last of the great territorial divisions of the earth's surface to yield up its secret and its treasure to European curiosity and enterprise, it may yet prove in the end to be as rich as any, and may surrender more rapidly and completely to the peaceful conquests of civilization. . . . It is not wise to boast at the beginning of a great enterprise, still less to be over-confident of immediate and brilliant success.

Digitized by Google

The fortunes of the new Company will probably undergo many vicissitudes. But, if the reports of those who have seen the promised land are even approximately true, there can be little doubt that the founders of the British East Africa Company have set their hands to a work big with the fate of many generations of the English race.

Such, then, is this great achievement on which the British Government has put the seal of its imprimatur by granting the company a Royal Charter. Not only will this event lead in all human probability to the building up a great African British Empire, but it will also doubtless be blessed of God to the final strangling of the cursed Slave Trade, which has for one of its best hunting-grounds the territory through which the chartered province passes. This new addition to the already enormous British Empire has all the marks of an Israelite gift straight from God. It has been acquired in peace. The native sovereign who grants it does it with his full and free consent. The territory rests on a mighty, splendid Gate, Mombassa; the only one on the whole of that coast of West Africa, save Delagoa Bay to the South-west.

Mombassa doubtless has led to the selection by the company of the territory to the West of it, and the lands so acquired will serve by-and-bye for the abode of countless numbers of British colonists who are now starved in their too narrow island-home in Great Britain. Thence as from a centre there will spread the Gospel and the Word of God, to civilize and Christianize the degraded, wretched, downtrodden sons of Ham. That this acquisition will have the blessing of God upon it we cannot doubt; and we see in it fresh occasion for praise from Israel, seeing God is giving to her, not only in Africa, but elsewhere throughout the world, greatness, power, and dominion, according to the promises and prophecies of His Holy Word!

THE WILD OLIVE GRAFT BOASTS ITSELF.

By the Rev. Denis Hanan, B.D.

The R. C. Bishop of Salford preached a sermon in St. Wilfred's Church, Holme, on Sunday the 7th October, immediately after the meeting of the Church Congress in Manchester, the report of which in The Manchester Guardian lies before me. It is evident that he felt the power manifested by the Church on that occasion and tried hard to lessen its influence. The means whereby he endeavoured to do this can be learned from the following. He took for his text, "The branch cannot bear fruit of itself unless it abide in the vine" (John xv. 4). He assumed the root and stem to be "Blessed Peter and his successors," and stated that "The Vicar of Christ had cut off the Anglican branch 300 years since." He repeated the often answered assertion as to the assumed invalidity of Anglican orders, and boasted of the submission of the Church for so many centuries to the see of Rome. Because of this excision from Rome he recognises only "human energy" in the life of the English Church. He tried to show that she is only a protesting body, and has no part in the Catholic Church, and finally stated that all who valued the Catholic idea should be received into the arms of Rome.

He vaunts the continuity of doctrine and Orders in the Church of Rome, assumes that she is the vine, the stem, and that all or any not in communion with her cannot bear fruit.

I am not about to enter into the old controversy, or to show, as so often has been shown, how false these assumptions are. My present purpose is to point out how completely the fact of the Identity pulverises the Italian boasting. In the first place the text chosen refers to union with Christ. He is the Vine. A church or individual member severed from Him is dead. But of course the Roman controversialist begs the question, and assumes that being in communion with the Roman See is equivalent to abiding in Christ, as it is, as the Bishop states, "the stem" and "root." This statement directs our attention to Rom. xi., whence only the Bishop can derive the words and the simile. What said St. Paul when writing to this same Roman Church in its early and purest period? Did he say you are the root, all branches must be grafted into you? No. He said, "Boast not thyself against the branches, for thou bearest not the root but the root thee." He says that Gentile Rome was a wild olive branch grafted in contrary to nature upon the stem where Judah had been cut off. He reminds Rome that she stands by faith, that she is not to be high-minded but to fear, and he proceeds to say that the natural excised branches will be graft in again, "Since thou (Rome) also shall be cut off." (The word translated "otherwise" in our versions being a distinct declaration—"for" or "since.") Verily the Bishop of Salford's sermon is a valuable pronouncement, showing that the evil which the Apostle Paul rebuked, has not ceased, but has grown and multiplied. The wild olive graft boasts itself against the branches and assumes to be the root that bears them, in direct contradiction to the Apostolic teaching, "Thou bearest not the root but the root thee."

Furthermore, the wild olive graft boasts itself that it has excised, i.e., excommunicated, one of the natural branches. It is here that the fact of the Identity of the British Church and nation with Israel shows the presumption of Rome. The Kingdom of God was given to Britain before the armies of pagan Rome destroyed Jerusalem. Britain received the Gospel in Apostolic days, and the Roman mission to England long centuries after, was an effort prompted as much by the desire to subdue the National Church as to convert the pagans.

Rome obtained a certain measure of success, and from the point of vantage thus gained she demanded entire submission, and when the King of England, in his political and personal struggle with Rome, fell back upon the latent power that lay in the national Church, and thus in God's providence enabled her to free herself from the foreign thraldom, and to purge herself from Papal heresies, she excommunicated Rome, cut her off from her position "among" and "with" the natural branches, and unconsciously did that very thing which St. Paul predicted.

Yet the wild graft continues to boast itself against the branches, says that it is the root, and that sap and life can only flow through union with it; and there are unstable minds which have yielded, and probably will yet yield to the able boastings so well put forward in this sermon; in fact, the statements here made as to lack of continuity and succession, are the trump card of Rome. But this boasted position of hers crumbles to dust when her true place is known, and when the natural unexcised branches in perpetual union with the root, Christianised and blessed of God, stand forth in the glory of their continuity; manifesting their historical succession, and upholding in its purity and fulness the faith once delivered to them, that is, when Britain is recognised as Israel: then the wild olive graft's day of boasting will be for ever over; then unstable souls that have been led away by her assumption of authority, will return; and then the impious assertion that when Christ said "Abide in Me," He meant abide in communion with the Bishop of Rome; will meet with its righteous condemnation, and the wild graft that has boasted itself against the natural branches and assumed to be the root will be cut off manifestly and suddenly—"For in one hour is thy judgment come."

Digitized by Google

THE "CARELESS," OR "CONFIDENT," DWELLERS IN THE ISLES (EZEK. XXXIX. 6).

By Joseph Thomson.

PART II.

(Concluded from page 426).

The writer in the Fortnightly goes on to tell us that the French are making a great ship canal to connect the Mediterranean with the Bay of Biscay, which will no doubt take some years to finish, even as it takes some years to build a modern man-of-war, and three years to make her guns. When this canal is finished, the French fleet can be sent to either sea without our knowledge; and so, engaging a part of ours in either the Channel or the Mediterranean, by their numerical superiority obtaining a victory, we shall be at their mercy; and such a blow once struck would be a mortal one for our commerce; and Russia, which has never given up the right of privateering, could take advantage of any concentration of our fleet to sweep our commerce from the seas; while commerce so lost seldom returns. The French, we are told, "can afford to smile whilst our Ministers count up the additional expenditure which we have undertaken lately for the increase of our navy. To compare our strength now, with what it was a few years ago, they know, is utterly beside the question. They know that only by one means can we be secure, viz., by having a navy strong enough to confine to their own harbours, or to destroy, the combined fleets of Russia and France, and by having, in addition, sufficient vessels to patrol the seas, and keep open the highways of commerce." If our navy cannot do this, "our immense carrying trade—i.e., three-fourths of that of the whole world—will leave us:" and what that loss would mean, is beyond present conception by any one, though it is asserted that the estimate of Lord Charles Beresford was within the mark, when he said that "in case of war with France at the present time, even supposing we were victorious, if we could not stop cruisers and privateers, war would cost us, at least, £500,000,000."

Such is the condition of our navy. Thus, even if victorious at sea, it must return to harbours which have no guns to re-fit it; and it must wait months or even years before it could be again ready for war. And what in the meantime? Why those who intend attacking us count upon this very weakness of ours; for the fleet having been engaged by one nearly equal, and its sting drawn, then would be the time for a successful invasion of our shores; for, as the Duke of Wellington remarked long ago, "there were long reaches of the English coast where an enemy could land at any hour of the day or night" (vide "The Fortnightly Review," p. 742); and if so, as Lord Wolseley said the other day in the House of Lords, "if a hostile force of say 100,000 men were to land, there is no reason why that force, properly led, should not take possession of London." (Ibid, p. 738.)

Thus we are told by one of the highest military authorities we have, that our army (including the volunteers) is virtually useless as a means of defence against foreign invasion. Much curious information is adduced by the writer in the Fortnightly to establish this position; one fact worth noticing is that the demand of our military authorities of £10,000,000 additional expenditure, and an addition of about 10,000 men will still leave our army "considerably less than it was in 1860" (p. 739). In this sum of £10,000,000, nothing is allowed for our present barrack accommodation, which is miserably deficient: one authority "knowing" £800,000 is required for the current year to put barracks into a condition "satisfactory and not dangerous to health," but knowing, also, that there was no prospect of getting anything like that amount, put forward a modest estimate for £200,000, which however was cut down by our economical Secretary of State, Mr. Stanhope, to the ridiculous figure of £13,950. Such has been, and still is, the parsimony of our successive Governments that, from the accumulated neglect of the past, nearly £5,000,000 is now required to put the existing barracks in decent order, and yet the House of Commons is asked for a mere £13,950! "Penny wise and pound foolish" economy this truly!

As it is with the barracks, so it is with the artillery and commissariat departments. Steel work and steel forgings are the special art of England: we have the best weapon makers in the world; and foreign countries send here for their armaments. This being the case, it would naturally be supposed that we should secure the best pattern of a large or small gun, or rifle, and get them made, and our troops equipped with them in time to complete their training, so that if war should break out, they would be found both armed, and efficiently trained to the use of such arms. But the very contrary to all this is the fact. We are actually told that, not only is our army the worst armed and trained (as well as being the smallest) in Europe, but it is really unarmed, and so deficient in training as to be hardly worth calling an army. "We have for field service, according to the Artillery List for February, 1888, out of 53 batteries at home, about fifteen armed with an excellent weapon— the 12 pounder gun, probably the best in Europe. We have ten batteries armed with the 13 pounder—a fair gun. Also ten batteries armed with the 16 pounder, a gun heavy for use, causing a fearful destruction to its carriage, with a recoil that makes it quite unavailable." All the remaining home batteries, and all in India except one, "are armed with the 9 pounder, which Lord Wolseley has again and again publicly described as an infamous gun, the worst gun used by any army in Europe. . . . Three of these various guns are muzzle-loaders. One, the best, is a breech-loader." (The Fortnightly, p. 741.) We may imagine, but cannot estimate the loss in efficiency and fighting power entailed on our army by this mixture of arms and ammunition. We have thus, for even such an army as we could send abroad, four different sizes, and two different kinds of ammunition, breech and muzzle-loaders; and the confusion will be raised to six, if we include the proposed armament of the volunteers with 20 pounders and 40 pounders. And here we may remark as to the volunteers, (of whom Lord Wolseley has always expressed a high opinion as a splendid body of soldiers) that they as yet have no organization whatever for actual warfare. They have no equipment such as they would require: no staff to unite their battalions together; no artillery; and the merest beginnings of an attempt to see if they can form battalions for themselves out of 20 and 40 pounders are just being made! They have, further, "no supply carts, or horses for either ammunition or food, such as they would require if they had to act as an army. With all their zeal and all their hard work, and by no fault of their own, they are not an army." (p. 742.) But the contrary to all this is the case on the Continent. There we find the armies are not made up of "mere conscripts." "The best blood of all the European nations is, by the distinct will and purpose of the nations, far more than of their rulers, in arms. The nations are in arms. The clumsy armies of the past, which it took months to prepare for war, are gone, everywhere but in England." No one can guarantee us against what may come out of the present political complications on the Continent, and if some Boulanger with private reasons for secret arrangements with Russia, should gain power to use the resources of France, he would only have "to touch a certain electric bell, and more than 2,500,000, will be ready to his call. Napoleon took three months to get his army of 124,000 men ready for Waterloo;" and so long as we had such armies to contend with, we also could afford to be similarly behind in our preparation. "But within little more than a week when that bell was touched, though only part of the 2,500,000 men would take the field, yet hosts ten times the number of Napoleon's army would be ready—not merely to parade—but to march, subsist and fight. Horses, arms, equipment, the things which it took Napoleon so long to prepare, are now ready. Thanks to the facilities of modern life, these armies, or any part of them, can be ready for war in a week or ten days." (p. 743.)

Digitized by Google

"But," our economists say, "we have spent far larger sums on our army in proportion than the French or Germans, and why is there this difference between them and us as regards national defence, or preparations for war?" In all these calculations, the fact is omitted, that while we have been reducing our debt almost yearly since the Crimean War, France has, since 1870, more than doubled hers, and this mainly by expenditure on re-armament, fortifications, and military supplies generally; and while the capital of the public debt of France about equals that of the national income, the capital of the English public debt is only about half our national income. Germany also has expended almost entirely on military requirements, all the large indemnity received from France after the Franco-German War of 1870. Possibly there may have been waste in some of our expenditure; but the writer in the Fortnightly, "cannot admit that, as a matter of commercial prudence, it is wise to allow such risks as we now run, to continue for an hour, whilst we are hunting for the pence that may be saved. Let us secure our national wealth and liberty first, and investigate possible economies afterwards" (p. 743). He then, thus summarises our present position:—We have, he says,—

"A navy that cannot hold the seas or protect our commerce against the most moderate risks of war. A navy without any supply of guns behind it, which can enable it to refit after even victorious action. A navy to protect a commerce of which that of France is a mere decimal. An army having to protect an empire more extensive and vulnerable, if the seas are not securely ours, than any other empire in the world. Yet in mere numbers that army reckoning only a small fraction of the armies which have a far more easy task to fulfil—an army not organised at all on the same principle of readiness for action as the armies of the Continent, but trusting to the conditions which existed during our great war, and which have entirely disappeared from the Continent. A heterogeneous and inferior artillery armament. An infantry kept in a defective condition by reduced cadres in absolute violation of the principle on which its system was established. A home army of volunteers, not allowed to be efficient despite all their zeal—without artillery, without organization, without equipment. Home and foreign fortresses and coaling stations unfinished and unarmed, and in addition, inadequately garrisoned." (pp. 743-744.)

Such is our condition at present, according to the writer in the Fortnightly Review. To this question, "Can we hold our own?" he, nevertheless, gives an affirmative answer. "We can hold our own—if we will. Our dangers are great and real, and they must be faced manfully, and at once. We have time to put everything right, but not to fritter away in ministerial quibbles, and sham ministerial responsibility." That is, if we have the right sort of men at the head of state affairs, there is some hope of our safety, but not otherwise.

So far the Fortnightly reviewer. We have no reason to doubt anything that he has advanced, and may admit that his diagnosis of our national state of health, as he has viewed it, is substantially correct. And yet we see no cause for alarm. He has taken account of the "big battalions;" but of one element ever present in human affairs he seems not to have thought, viz., on which side Providence is likely to fight. Doubtless he would reply (as fairly he might), "God helps those that help themselves;" and with Cromwell he would advise, that, whilst we put our trust in Him, we should also "keep our powder dry:" all of which we should heartily endorse. But when we look back upon our history, and see how often we have been reduced to great straits, and suffered many disasters, and yet come through them all by the good will of our God helping us, we do not see any reason for undue alarm at the present time. And when, in addition, to the encouragement thus afforded us by our National history, we see even more certainly by the light of our Identity with the lost House of Israel, that our God has promised, and even engaged Himself by all the solemnities of an oath, that He will never forsake His people (Gen. xxii. 16-18; xxviii. 15; Deut. xxxi. 6; 1 Sam. xii. 22), we have a great reason not to be over-much alarmed at the "arming of the nations" which we see going on around us.

At the same time, let every British patriot urge upon our rulers their duty as leaders of this great people; and let us all, more earnestly than ever, join in the prayer of our National Church:—"Give peace in our time, O Lord; for there is none other that fighteth for us, but only Thou, O Lord." Truly may we raise our National Ebenezer, and say, "Hitherto hath the Lord helped us" when we remember our past immunity from invasion, and which we believe has been, and is secured to us by His promise: "Moreover I will appoint a place for My people Israel, and will plant them, that they may dwell in a place of their own, and move no more; neither shall the children of wickedness afflict them any more, as beforetime." (2 Samuel vii. 10.) For this and every other mercy of His gracious Providence, let Israel ever "praise the Lord!"

THE SPANISH ARMADA.

We quote the following from The Lymington Chronicle, of August 30, 1888:—

THE SPANISH ARMADA.—The following "commemoration hymn," written by the Rev. Canon Burbidge, Vicar of St. Michael's, Toxteth, Liverpool, and Rural Dean, was distributed at the bazaar held at Lymington, on Friday and Saturday last:—

"Thine, Thine shall be the glory,
Great God of Land and Sea!
But we will tell the story
To children at our knee,
How once Spain's proud invader
Put off for England's shore,
And how that great Armada
Returned to Spain no more.

Oh! wondrous page of hist'ry,
It speaks in every line;
To us no hidden myst'ry,
But all throughout divine.
'Twas God who nerved our seamen;
'Twas God who made them brave;
'Twas God who kept us freemen—
The God of Wind and Wave!

Our fathers saw those galleons,
With shining banners spread,
And all Spain's proud battalions,
And felt no fear or dread.
Led by the gallant Howard,
The bold, intrepid Drake,
No man could play the coward
With hearth and home at stake.

We read the tale with wonder,
It must our souls inspire;
We hear the cannon's thunder,
We see the raging fire.
It tells of fearful slaughter,
A fleet with mighty host
Sunk in the surging water,
Wrecked on the rocky coast.

Yes, we will tell the story
Of England's noble Queen;
To God she gave the Glory
For all that wondrous scene.
Long may the grand narration
By thankful hearts be told,
How God preserved our nation
In the great days of old."

The hymn, it may be added, is set to the tune "Lancashire," in the "Hymnal Companion."

Digitized by Google

THE CITIES OF THE PLAIN
(GEN. XVIII. XIX.).

BY JOHN T. GOTT.

THE story of the "Deluge of Fire" will be familiar to all our readers. Homilies have been written, sermons preached, and lessons deduced from them, admirable in their way; but we have never heard a sermon, or read an article, in which this subject has been treated in a prophetical aspect. Ever since Identity light dawned upon us, we have been fully imbued with the idea that Bible stories, Bible portraits, were divinely designed as a simple method of teaching mankind, by reflection, the true and literal meaning of the dark sayings of the prophets. We have endeavoured to demonstrate this in the pages of the BANNER, in previous volumes, and we now desire to suggest a few thoughts on the destruction of the Cities of the Plain.

The history of Noah and the Deluge portrays the history of the world. The history of Joseph portrays the history of the lost House of Israel, in clear and unmistakable lines. The history of Daniel portrays the history of Israel in the latter days. He was carried captive at an early age; he was suddenly brought into prominent notice; he was surrounded by subtle enemies and many dangers, and was miraculously delivered from all of them; and during the whole of his long career, in exile, he was the ruling spirit in the world, for he held the highest posts of government under three dynasties—the Chaldean, Median, and Persian. The same is identically true of Israel-Britain in these latter days, a nation destined to develop into a universal empire, "which shall never be destroyed" (Dan. ii. 44).

Viewed from Bethel, the Cities of the Plain were lovely to behold. The plain seemed a veritable Garden of Eden (Gen. xiii. 10). But natural beauty was marred by human sin. "The men of Sodom were wicked, and sinners before the Lord exceedingly" (ib. 13).

Jehovah had renewed His covenant with Abram, and had changed his name to Abraham (multitude of nations); and now, when a righteous judgment is to befall the cities of the plain, He says, "Shall I hide from Abraham that thing which I do?" etc. (Gen. xviii. 16—22). Abraham was the friend of God, and the Lord declared to him His purpose against the Cities of the Plain, because their sin was very grievous. The same intercourse between Jehovah and Abraham's afterseed continued until there was need for no further revelation. "Surely the Lord will do nothing but He revealeth His secret unto His servants the prophets" (Amos iii. 7).

We are strongly disposed to think that the destruction of the Cities of the Plain is typical and prophetical of the coming European earthquake woe.

Abraham was living alone in the plains of Mamre (fatness, strength). His kinsman, Lot, had departed from him, and taken up his residence in the plain of Jordan (Gen. xiii. 10), an excellent choice, in a worldly point of view, but in every other respect a decidedly bad one; and it was not long before he experienced the disadvantages, difficulties, and dangers which such a choice must ever entail. Yet the Scriptures declare that Lot was "just," and one that "vexed his righteous soul every day with their unlawful deeds" (2 Peter ii. 7, 8). This may have been one reason why the Lord made known to Abraham the judgment He was about to inflict upon the inhabitants of the five Cities of the Plain—Sodom, Gomorrah, Admah, Zeboim, and Bela, the same is Zoar (Gen. xiv. 8). It was necessary that the "righteous," how few soever in number, should have a mediator, and Abraham was chosen to act that part. "Wilt Thou destroy the righteous with the wicked? That be far from Thee to do after this manner, to slay the righteous with the wicked" (Gen. xviii. 23, etc.).

We take it for granted that our readers understand that we look upon the British people as the seed of Abraham, the modern representative of the Ten-Tribed House of Israel. If that be so, and this Bible story has any prophetic character, then we ought to be able to trace some striking and suggestive analogies.

Abraham dwelt alone, i.e., he was isolated from neighbouring tribes and nations, and had little intercourse with them. If he had any enemies, they were probably the Canaanites, who watched him with a jealous eye. This may be the reason why the sentence, "the Canaanite dwelt then in the land," seems to be interpolated here and there in his history. He was well known, had the reputation of being a prince among the peoples, and while he commanded their respect, he had also given them an illustration of his power, and had taught them to understand that he was also one to be feared, e.g., when he rescued Lot out of the hands of the four kings (Gen. xiv.).

Jehovah had changed Abram's name to Abraham (father of a multitude of nations). The same was to occur with Ten-Tribed Israel, the "Forsaken," the "Desolate." "The Gentiles shall see thy righteousness, and all kings thy glory; and thou shalt be called by a new name, which the mouth of the Lord shall name" (Isa. lxii. 1—5).

Like Abraham, Israel, under her new name, was to "dwell alone" (Numb. xxiii. 9), was to be menaced by similar dangers, and watched with the same jealous eye. Like Abraham also, Israel, under the new name, though seemingly weak and feeble, was to be the conqueror, even against fearful odds; was to command universal respect, and even to inspire a certain amount of dread among surrounding nations. Our present neutral position among the nations corresponds with the position in which Abraham was placed among surrounding tribes.

Abraham acted as intercessor, or mediator, and this, we opine, will be the future position and character of Israel-Britain, after Restoration times, when wars shall cease, and the millennium era be brought about. The Universal Empire, the kingdom of God, will act as Mediator among the nations, and will be able to settle all disputes that may arise, amicably.

When Israel was brought out of Egypt with a mighty hand, we have a record of their history for two years. Then follows a great gap, a long silence. There is no written record of their history for thirty-eight years. Suddenly they appear again, to the consternation of surrounding nations, who had probably forgotten their existence altogether; and they take forcible possession of the Land of Promise. What occurred within a limited area is now going on with the whole world as a witness. The great bulk of God's chosen people long since disappeared; were buried in the earth; have been altogether forgotten by mankind. But all the while the God of Israel has been carrying on "His marvellous work," and His people have been, and are still, unwittingly, doing His holy will, and are performing the national work allotted to them, or, nationally, are severely punished if they disobey. "The Lord sent a word unto Jacob, and it hath lighted upon Israel" (Isa. ix. 8). That word we believe to be the Gospel, and Israel was to become a great missionary nation, which Britain is to-day, "the righteous nation which keepeth the truth" (ib. xxvi. 2). This people have light within their dwellings. As Abraham knew what Jehovah had decreed against the Cities of the Plain, so they know that the Lord hath a "controversy with the nations" (Jer. xxv. 31).

Abraham's kith and kin, who had mixed themselves up with the inhabitants of the Cities of the Plain, were not left without warning of the coming catastrophe. Spotless men, however, cannot live amid scenes of vice and open wickedness without being contaminated, or conduct business with avowed infidels, without blunting the edge of their higher faculties. Lot believed the warning, but his efforts to convince his sons-in-law, who had married his daughters, were utterly unavailing. To them his fears were foolish and groundless; to them he appeared an imbecile; to them he was as one that mocked

Digitized by Google

(Gen. xix. 12—14), i.e., they seemed to look upon the matter as a huge hoax, or a tremendous joke. Even Lot himself, when the time was short, and their flight urgent, even he "lingered." They had to be literally dragged out of the place—"Haste thee, escape thither; for I cannot do anything until thou be come thither" (Gen. xix. 23)—just as they were, and leaving all their earthly possessions behind them. Lot's wife could not tear herself away from these things without one last yearning look behind, and for this act of disobedience, trivial in the eyes of worldly men (as so-called little sins ever are), she became a monument of divine judgment. One of these Cities of the Plain became, as it were, a temporary place of refuge, viz., Zoar.

The five Cities of the Plain are typical of five Gentile nations in Europe (two against three, &c.), whose future is so ominous, and who may ere long be locked in deadly conflict on the battle-plain of Europe. Each city had a king, and is typical of a nation or kingdom, and there are striking analogies in the sublimity of the scenery in which those nations are situated, the open vice and wickedness of the people, &c. Israel's kith and kin also have mixed themselves up with these nations, notably the men of Judah, the Jews. The warning has been given. The Lord will do nothing till they be gathered out. We have seen, and still see, thousands of these kinsmen, bereft of all their earthly possessions, walking to Israel-Britain for safety and protection. To many Israel's identity in the British people, and the sure and certain knowledge they possess of coming events of momentous importance, seem ridiculous absurdities; but as time rolls on the "lingerers" will find extreme pressure laid on them, and if they wish for deliverance from coming woes, they must be content to leave all their possessions behind them in their flight, for flight it will be in the end.

The destruction of the Cities of the Plain came with appalling suddenness. These cities embodied in themselves the elements of their own destruction. The whole district abounded in sulphur and bitumen. The houses were built of "clay bricks made from the soil of Siddim, in which bitumen was a predominant ingredient." The earthquake and the lightning flash brought swift and sudden destruction, and it occurred at a time when the people were utterly unconscious of coming danger (between the dark and the dawn), and when all hope of escape was cut off.

"Abraham got up early in the morning, and looked toward all the land of the plain; and lo, the smoke of the country went up as the smoke of a furnace (ib. 27, 28).

Men try to soothe their souls with the consolations which the Press affords, saying, Peace! peace! but they are inwardly conscious that there is no peace. It is manifest to all that among the teeming masses of armed men in Europe there is, and must be, a feeling of great unrest, that the strain must eventually become too great, and that we must be prepared for some sudden declaration of war, arising, in all probability, in some unexpected quarter. If there can be any consolation in war, it is only in the certainty that it will be swift and of short duration. As it was with the Cities of the Plain, these men will be surrounded with all the elements that will conduce to utter destruction. All this is plainly predicted. "I have long time holden My peace. . . . I will destroy and devour at once" (Isa. xlii. 14). The time of this controversy with the nations will be when "the Lord cometh out of His place to punish the inhabitants of the earth" (Isa. xxvi. 20, 21), as it was in the days of Sodom. And this will not be done in a corner. The Lord shall roar; the whole earth shall be cognizant of the controversy; evil shall spread from nation to nation; the slain of the Lord shall be at that day from one end of the earth to the other end of the earth;—(war is often followed by pestilence, which seems to be indicated here)—and, finally, the dead shall not be lamented, nor gathered, nor buried (Jer. xxv. 30—33). The men of Sodom were not lamented, gathered, nor buried. It needs no stretch of imagination to grasp the meaning of the prediction. Millions of men are likely to be set in battle array, with all the elements of combustion about them. The Lord has declared that He will roar. There will be the lightning flash, the thunder peal, the trembling earth, and panic, ending in a second deluge of fire. When the Lord shall roar from Zion, and the heavens and the earth shall shake, it is written, "The Lord will be the hope of His people, and the strength of the children of Israel" (Joel iii. 16).

This short, sharp conflict with European nations will have one disastrous result. As the Cities of the Plain were utterly destroyed, so will the prestige of these different nationalities be completely crushed by this ruinous war. The wreck of nations will thus be brought about by the great decimation of men, the loss of property, the complete ruin of empires. After this terrible experience, nations will eschew war for many years. Indeed, it will take many, many years for the remnant of these nations to renew their strength. This terrible European earthquake woe seems to us to be the time prophetically indicated, when the Holy One of Israel will restore sight to His blind people, Israel-Britain. The urgency, danger, and necessity of the times will compel the mother country (Israel-Britain) to look after the interests and welfare of all her daughters (the colonies), and to weld them all in the strong, firm bonds of Federation. There will then be left only one dominant, universal empire, Israel-Britain and her colonies, the Stone Kingdom of Daniel's prophecy, which grew until it filled the face of the whole earth.

This brings about the era of Restoration times, or in modern parlance, the re-colonization of the lands of the Bible. The first possession of the Land of Promise was obtained by force. The next will be in peace, when the Lord shall set His hand the second time to restore the remnant of His people Israel, and to gather together the dispersed of Judah (Isa. xi.).

In concluding these brief suggestions, we must point out that all the Cities of the Plain were not destroyed. Bela, or Zoar, was spared. So we opine that one of the five European Powers will not be so entirely crushed as to be one among the wreck of nations. She may, at the very last moment, by some unforeseen circumstances, not take part in the conflict at all. We think this because it is predicted that at Restoration times three Powers are to be united together, as it were, and to become a blessing to all the other nations or peoples of the earth. "In that day shall Israel be a third with Egypt, and with Assyria, even a blessing in the midst of the land" (Isa. xix. 23—25). Egypt we know; Israel is identified in the British people; but what modern nation represents the ancient Assyrian Empire? Some affirm that it is France; but we are strongly of the opinion that it will turn out to be Germany.

This subject might be very much extended; but we have written enough, in a suggestive way, and leave time to prove whether we are right or not in thinking that the "Deluge of Fire" has a striking prophetical meaning.

August, 1888.

God's Faithfulness.—Scott, commenting on Joshua xxi. 43–45, says:—"This acknowledgment of the faithfulness of God to His promises was a very becoming conclusion to the history of the conquest and division of the land. . . . When, however, their several tribes and families had settled in their estates and cultivated them, without disturbance, every particular of the Lord's promises, on that head, had been punctually fulfilled." Thus Scott, by the italics, recognises that there are other promises for future fulfilment.—A. H.

Royal Hospital for Incurables.—Mr. R. F. Banks, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, would be glad to receive the proxies of any Subscriber to this Institution for the case of Elizabeth Davies, who is an applicant for a £20 pension. It is a most deserving case, and is strongly recommended by the Editor of Great Thoughts, the Rev. John Hurst, the Rev. Ossian Davies, and others.

Digitized by Google

METROPOLITAN ANGLO-ISRAEL ASSOCIATION.

SINCE the annual meeting in May last, the work of the Association has steadily proceeded. In addition to the Bible readings, and weekly addresses in the rooms of the Association, drawing-room meetings have been held at Southsea, Ramsgate, and Belsize Park, which were well attended, and great interest awakened in the truths set forth. Public lectures and sermons have been delivered at Streatham, and various other places, notably in Scotland, where we have again been privileged to open up fresh centres of "Identity" operations. On three successive Sabbath days, it was our great joy to deliver the glad tidings of God's faithfulness to His covenant promise, in confirming the same to the British people, before many hundreds gathered in the parish Churches of Bervie, Lawrencekirk, and Bathgate, while on the intervening week-evenings we met earnest enquirers and others who assembled in good numbers at Perth, Roslin, Stirling, Peterhead, Macduff, Montrose, in various places of worship and halls in these respective towns, in addition to which we held a most important drawing room meeting in Edinburgh. In twenty-four days, through the good mercies of our God, we were permitted to travel over 2,000 miles, speak at 14 meetings, and address between 7,000 and 8,000 persons. At the close of some of the meetings we were waited upon by several individuals who desired further information upon the subject, and from communications received since, there is reason to believe that great interest has been excited in the minds of the people who attended our lectures.

Our Bible readings, and weekly addresses, at 14, King William Street, Charing Cross, are now in full operation, printed programmes of the same being supplied to members and friends, in addition to which a course of three lectures are being delivered in the Congregational Church, Robert-street, Grosvenor-square, W., which are to be followed by a similar course in St. Leonard's Chapel, Pimlico, both of which places have been kindly placed at our disposal for the purpose. Two lectures are to be delivered at Leicester, on Oct. 16th and 17th, and several drawing-room meetings are being arranged for as quickly as dates will allow.

These engagements, together with those fulfilled previous to the annual meeting, show a steady, progressive, continuous work, which must certainly conduce to the success of the cause.

Sundry parcels of literature have been supplied for gratuitous distribution, while opportunities are presented for further operations in this direction if friends of the cause will kindly supply us with the means of satisfying the demands made upon the Association from time to time.

The council have therefore all confidence in laying before every believer in the Israelitish origin of the British people, the importance of the great work which has been done, and is still being accomplished by the Metropolitan Association, and earnestly ask continued and increasing aid, to meet the expenses consequent on the growing demands made upon their resources for the promulgation of the great truth that "Lost Israel is found in the British nation."

In February of this year an appeal was made for the sum of £80 to enable the Association to clear off certain liabilities which for some time past has burdened its work. The following donations have been received in response thereto, and are hereby gratefully acknowledged:—Captain F., £20; Anon, £5; W. H. P., £5; Misses E. D., £4 10s.; J. D., 10s.; Miss S., 2s. 6d.; Mr. George S., 21s.; Mr. and Mrs. H., 20s.; J. Balfour R. 20s.; Mrs. C. B., 20s.; Mrs. L., 20s.; Miss S. S., 5s.; Miss L., 10s. 6d.; Miss W., 10s, 6d.; Miss C., 20s.; Mrs. G. T., £4 4s.; Dr. O. A., 10s.; Mrs. B., 21s.; Mrs. G. M., 15s.; Miss H. P. M., 10s.; Mrs. W. B., 10s.; Miss. C. P., 5s., Miss H. 10s.; Mr. G. H. C., 10s.; Rev. T. W. B., 21s.; Miss E. K., 5s.; Miss H. M. S., 2s. 6d.; Mr. H. L., 10s.; Mr. J. C. P., 5s.; Mrs. J. C. B., 10s.; Mr. W. L. B., 7s. 6d.; Miss S., 2s. 6d.; T. N., 10s.; Mrs. Anne S., 20s; Philo-Israel, 21s.; Mrs. F. Y. W. S., 10s. 6d.; Mr. G. D., 10s. 6d.; Mrs. F., 10s.; Mr. J. P. B., 5s.; Lady J. H. E., £2; Collected Miss S., 10s.; Captain B., 21s.; Miss E. F., 2s. 6d.; Mrs. J. K., £2 2s.; Dr. P. H. R., 10s. 6d.; Mrs. C., 2s; Miss L. C., 20s.; Mrs. F. D., 2s; Mr. C. E. P., 10s. 6d.; Collection at Mrs. A., 8s.; Ditto Mr. and Mrs. P., 10s.; Ditto Ramsgate, 4s; Mrs. M. B., 20s.; Mr. J. R. M., 2s. 6d.; Mr. W. C., 3s. 6d.; Rev. R. Lingan B., 10s.; Miss F. A. B., 5s.; Mr. H. H. P., 21s. Making a total to date of £69 9s. 6d.

As the income of the Association is far below what it should be considering the work done in the past, and the importance of that which yet remains to be done, the council would ask the friends of the cause everywhere to help them in their labours by contributing of their substance, as stewards of the God of Israel, sending either donations or subscriptions to the office, 14, King William Street, Charing Cross, London. W.C.

JAMES BILLINGTON, Secretary.

Oct. 17th, 1888.

Correspondence.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—Looking through some back volumes of the BANNER, I noticed in vol. vi., 1882, pp. 255, 308, some remarks by Commander G. Roberts, R. N., on Ezekiel's 390 and 40 days, chap. iv. which I could only consider to be, at least a little far-fetched, if not beside the mark altogether; but upon p. 328, J. G. T. has no doubt hit upon the right solution in ascribing the 40 years of Judah's burden to the 37 years of Jehoiachim's imprisonment, plus the three months of his reign, and allowing two years either for the time during which Nebuchadnezzar was besieging Jerusalem, or that mentioned "and when the year was expired" &c. (2 Chron. xxxvi. 10), we get as J. G. T. says "closer than the popular theory results in." For Israel's burden, J. G. T. also starts from the date of the siege of Samaria, 720 B.C., or 721. 390 years from this brings us to the date 330 or 331 B.C. as the period of Israel's emancipation. But J. G. T. seems doubtful as to the historical events connected with this last date, and asks for further light upon it; may I then give (though so long time has elapsed) the historical circumstances as I call them from an old chronological table?

B.C. 335.—Darius III., the last king of the Persians, began to reign. Alexander enters Greece and destroys Thebes.

B.C. 334.—The great battle of the river Granicus gained by Alexander, over the Persians. Halicarnasus besieged, taken and demolished by Alexander; upon which most of the Asiatic princes revolt from Darius.

B.C. 332.—The great battle of the Issus gained by Alexander over the Persians, in which about 100,000 men were killed. (Mr. Grainger, in his "Seed of Isaac," chap. xiii., gives a graphic account of these struggles).

B.C. 331.—Darius' army, consisting of 1,000,000 horse and foot completely routed by Alexander at the village Guagemela.

From this great event is to be dated the beginning of the Macedonian empire, or Daniel's third beast.

Mr. Grainger proceeds to say in chap. xvi., "These successes of Alexander revolutionised the political dependence of the Asiatic nations, and for ever divided the slender ties which influenced the Saccæ and other tribes to support the Persian power.

I presume this will supply the information needed; and as I do not remember to have seen the matter referred to in the BANNER since, on the principle of better late than never, I put these notes at your service, and remain, dear sir,

Yours very truly,

Oct. 10th, 1888. JASHUB.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—It has been definitely arranged to hold a conversazione at the Memorial Hall, Clifton, on Thursday, November 15, from 3 to 6 p.m., and as I am entrusted with the carrying out of the arrangements by the committee of the Bristol and Clifton Israel's Identification Association, I am anxious to make the gathering as successful as I can. May I be permitted through the medium of your much-esteemed paper, the BANNER, to ask such of your readers as may feel disposed to help, and are able to do so, to send me, as soon as possible, for exhibition, any article they may have which would be of interest to our friends assembled, especially such as would in any way bear on the subject in view. I would suggest that if books containing evidence in support of our object be sent to me, they should have a memorandum slip containing name of book, sender, and particular page * to which reference is directed.

I am, dear sir, yours in the Lord,

H. SENIOR, Lieut.-Col.

Brooklyn, Osborn-road, Clifton, Oct. 13.

* I will take great care of the article sent, and return as soon as the conversazione is over.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed: "Philo-Israel," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

SUBSCRIPTIONS. £ s. d.

Annual Subscription for one copy weekly (including the Twelve Double Numbers) post free 0 7 6
Two Copies (including Double Numbers) 0 13 6
Three Copies ,, ,, ,, ... 1 0 4
Four Copies ,, ,, ,, ... 1 5 6
Six Copies ,, ,, ,, ... 1 16 4

Post Office Orders to be made payable at the head office, St. Martin's-le-grand, London, to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C., or F. W. PARRY & Co., 29, Paternoster-row, London.

The Editor cannot undertake to return rejected MSS. unless stamps for the purpose be sent. Parties requiring an answer should enclose a stamp.

Contents Bills and Show Cards may be obtained on application to the Publishers.

Advertisements should be sent to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

Prepaid Advertisements are inserted at the rate of thirty words for 1s. 4d.

METROPOLITAN ANGLO-ISRAEL ASSOCIATION.

THE BIBLE READINGS

are held

EVERY TUESDAY AFTERNOON,

At 3.30, in the Library of the Association, 14, King William-street, Charing Cross, W.C. All friends are invited.

METROPOLITAN ANGLO-ISRAEL ASSOCIATION.

THE CONCERT, advertised for Nov. 1, is POSTPONED till an early date in the New Year.

On THURSDAY EVENING NEXT, Nov. 1, at 7.30 o'clock, a Lecture will be delivered in the ASSOCIATION ROOMS, 14, King William-street, Charing Cross, W.C., by Mr. JOHN S. LOWE. Subject:—"The Early History of the Identity Movement." JAMES BILLINGTON, Sec.

WORKS BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

The History of the House of Israel. How They Were Lost and How They Were Found. Told for the children. Price 6d., cloth 1s.; post free 7d. and 1s. 1d. Fifth edition.

Anglo-Israelism. True, Not False. Being Philo-Israel's Reply to the Rev. Canon Bell's pamphlet, "Anglo-Israelism: True or False?" Price 1d., 6s. 6d. per 100. 16 pages, crown 8vo.

An Elementary Digest or Sketch of the Chief Facts and Teachings of the Great Pyramid of Egypt. Adapted to the Unlearned and Unscientific 56 pages, Illustrated with Diagrams, price 4d., post free 5d. 10th Thousand.

Are the English People the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel? An Inquiry Establishing the Identity of the British Nation with the Lost Ten Tribes. 4d.

Our Identity with the House of Israel. Price 4d., Reprinted from "Clifton Chronicle Letters.

Our Identity: What it is Not; What it is; and Our Obligations To-day in Respect to it Being a Lecture recently delivered in London by Philo-Israel, and published by special request. Price 2d., a reduction for quantities.

Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

Price 6d. in paper covers; on toned paper, in cloth boards, gilt lettered, 1s., post free for stamps.

PAPAL IDOLATRY. An Exposure of the Dogma of Transubstantiation and Mariolatry, to which is added "My Reasons Why I will Never Go Back to the Church of Rome." The Bible Christian Magazine says:—"Unanswerable! The most powerful argument against Transubstantiation, in the same space, that we have read

R. BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

Just published—Cloth, 2s. 6d.—a re-issue of

The Origin of Masonic Ritual and Tradition:

A Lecture on the Three Degrees, by BRO. WM. ROWBOTTOM, P.M., 1028, with facsimile of a very rare Masonic engraving published in 1789.

"Exquisitely clear and singularly correct in everything wherein I may be any authority or guide."—Professor PIAZZI SMYTH. "Will be found of considerable interest to many besides Masons."—Church Bells.

Oxford: S. Rowbottom and Son; London: R. Banks and Son, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C.; and F. W. Parry and Co., 29, Paternoster Row, E.C.

Price Five Shillings.—"Substantially and attractively got up, and profusely illustrated."—Oldham Chronicle.

Eildon Grange: A Tale.

By ANDREW CLARK, M.A., Vicar of St. Michael's, Oxford. "One of the most charming books. . . . The illustrations are full of playful humour."—Scotsman. "The book is undoubtedly a happy one."—The Oxford Magazine. "Both entertaining and bracing."—Dundee Advertiser.

Oxford: S. Rowbottom and Son; London: Hamilton, Adams and Co., 32, Paternoster Row, E.C.

☞ Ask for this Book at the Libraries.

Price 2d., by post 2½d. Second Edition, Revised.

A SUMMARY OF ANGLO-ISRAELITE TEACHING,

And of the Scripture Proofs on which it rests.

By SURGEON-GEN. J. M. GRANT, M.D.,

President of the Cheltenham Association, and Vice-President of the Metropolitan Anglo-Israel Association.

ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-st., E.C.

Price 1d. One doz. post free 1s.; 100 post free, 6s. net.

WORK:

A THOUGHT OF THE PAST, PRESENT, AND FUTURE.

BY E. M. RUSH (A E I),

Author of "The New Old Story," "The Answer to the Eastern Question," "A New Light," "The Emblem of the Empire," etc., etc.

London: Robert Banks and Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-st.

Price 3d., post free 3½d.; 3/- per dozen, post free.

PRESENT-DAY PROBLEMS

AND

How Anglo-Israel Truth Explains and Solves Them.

By V. M. COX.

Contents:—Our Identity and its Mission.—Imperial Federation.—The Eastern Question.—Rev. Archibald G. Brown and the Eastern Question.—Disestablishment.—Sabbath Observance.—Foreign Missions.—Our Relations with Judah.—Our Relations with Russia.—Egypt.—The Unemployed.—The Irish Problem.—Cui Bono?—A Remedy.

Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

ANGLO-ISRAEL TRACTS. Price ½d. each; 8 pp., royal 16mo. Assorted packet post free for 7 stamps. The tracts are well written, by the following Authors:—Rev. Bishop Titcomb, D.D.; Philo-Israel; W. S. Cavill; Douglas A. Onslow, J.P.; Mrs. G. Albert Rogers; "A E I"; Surgeon-General J. M. Grant, M.D.; Rev. Robert Douglas; Rev. C. W. Hickson.

WHO ARE WE? AND WHAT IS OUR MISSION? By J. THORNHILL HARRISON. With seven Maps by the Woodbury Permanent Photo Process. In handsome cloth, gilt, 5s.; post free for P.O.

THE BRITISH NATION Proved to be the Remnant of Israel, and the Representatives of the Lost Ten Tribes. By J. H. WELDON, J.P., Author of "Britain and Prophecy." 66 pp., demy 8vo., 6d.; by post, 7d.

ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet Court, Fleet Street.

LUNG SAVE YOUR LIVES BY TAKING TONIC
LUNG OWBRIDGE'S TONIC
LUNG LUNG TONIC TONIC
LUNG THE MIGHTY HEALER. TONIC
LUNG It has a power over disease hitherto TONIC
LUNG unknown in Medicine. TONIC
LUNG Are you at all Weak-chested or in- TONIC
LUNG clined to be Consumptive, with just a TONIC
LUNG touch of Cough now and then? TONIC
LUNG "Try this Wonderful Medicine." The TONIC
LUNG Cough and Weakness will disappear as TONIC
LUNG if by magic, and you will feel a strength TONIC
LUNG and power you never had before. TONIC
LUNG HAVE YOU A COUGH? TONIC
LUNG A DOSE WILL RELIEVE IT! TONIC
LUNG HAVE YOU A COLD? TONIC
LUNG A DOSE AT BEDTIME WILL TONIC
LUNG REMOVE IT. TONIC
LUNG Bronchitis & Asthma it relieves instantly TONIC
LUNG The Spasms of Coughing so dreadful in TONIC
LUNG Whooping Cough become less with each TONIC
LUNG dose of the medicine. TONIC
LUNG TONIC
LUNG Prepared by W.T. OWBRIDGE Chemist, Hull TONIC
LUNG Sold in Bottles 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d. TONIC
LUNG and 11s. by all Chemists and Patent TONIC
LUNG Medicine Vendors. Wholesale all London TONIC
LUNG and Provincial Houses. TONIC

PIANOFORTES, Harmoniums, American Organs. Why buy at shops inferior made instruments, and pay large profits, when you can buy direct from the Maker High-class Instruments, and save 50 per cent. by so doing? Full value allowed for old Instruments in exchange as part payment. Write for Price Lists and Testimonials to A. G. LINSTEAD, Cobden Pianoforte Company, 5, Eversholt-street, Camden Town, London. Established 1874.

HUMAN LIFE.—FIFTY YEARS' Record of Facts, Principles, and Discoveries (just published complete) Relating to the Improvement and Preservation of Human Life on Earth. Origin and true treatment of diseases. A series of articles by DR. SAMUEL BIRLEY, M.D., Ph.D. Book form, 50 pages. SENT FREE to every applicant by the publishers, GORDON B. MURRAY & CO., 50, Theobald's-road, Holborn, E.C. Write to-day.

Warmth & Comfort for the Winter

WALTER KEAST, 102, Kennington Park Road, London, S.E., is sending daily to all parts of the United Kingdom his

CELEBRATED CYPRUS SLIPPERS.

These Slippers are of superior finish, lined all through with Red Flannel and give universal satisfaction.

Delivered free by Parcels Post.

Ladies' 1/6, Gents' 1/9.

Send No. of size, or paper length required.

NORWEGIAN SLIPPERS, an inferior make of above, sent post free.

Childrens' 6d., Ladies' 9d., Gents' 1s.

Just Published, price 1d., 6 copies post free for Six stamps, 6/6 per 100, carriage paid.

FACTS AND PROBABILITIES

Respecting the Identity of the British and American Nations with the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel.

Compiled by DELTA.

R. BANKS & SON, RACQUET-COURT, FLEET-ST.

SOUND, PURE, WHITE TEETH!

Those who value these will try

CARBOLINE

(The Great Sanitary Tooth Paste).

1/6 & 2/6 per Pot.

Through Chemists, or post free from the Makers,

GEORGE & WELCH

WORCESTER.

Lancet writes:—"To save the teeth use a good carbolic daily."

CHEAP WINTER DRESSES

WE will send a FULL-DRESS LENGTH of BEAUTIFUL CLOTH (for Good, Strong, Serviceable wear), in any of the following colours, Carriage paid to any address for 10s. 6d. Colours:—Black, Blue, Fawn, Salmon, Rescda, Slate, Ruby, Brown, Grey, Claret, Sage, Old Rose, Terra-Cotta, Amber, Peacock, Tabac, Bronze, Myrtle, Drab, Olive, Grenat, Clay Green, Navy, Partridge, Heather, &c., &c. These wonderful Dress Lengths have gained a world-wide reputation for magnificence, cheapness and durability, having no equal.

The Lady's Pictorial says:—"They are excellent quality and very good value for the money."

Thousands of Testimonials from all parts of the world.

Ladies should write at once for Patterns, which may be had free, and need not be returned.

AN AMAZING OFFER!!—We shall give a very handsome Brocaded Silk Handkerchief with each dress-length ordered from us during this season. Write for patterns. LUTUS B LEATHLEY, Armley, Leeds.

Certain HARNESS' Cure.

ELECTROPATHIC BELT

FOR

CONSTIPATION

Rev. D. SUTCLIFFE, Vicar of Holme, Burnley, Lancashire, writes:—"My health has improved very satisfactorily, and I am now entirely free from the constipation I used to suffer from so severely."

Guaranteed to generate a mild continuous current of Electricity, which speedily cures all Disorders of the Nerves, Stomach, Liver and Kidneys. Thousands of Testimonials. Pamphlet & Advice free on application to Mr. C. B. Harness, Consulting Electrician, the Medical Battery Co. Ltd.

Only Address,

52, OXFORD ST. LONDON, W. (Corner of Rathbone Place.)

Call to-day, if possible, or write at once

Printed and Published for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-st., London, E.C.; F. W. PARRY (late GUEST & Co.), 29, Paternoster-row.

WEDNESDAY, OCT. 31, 1888. [All rights reserved.

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."
(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India.)

"And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the Forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS of the EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. XII., No. 619. Entered at Stationers' Hall.] WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 7, 1888. [DOUBLE NUMBER, TWOPENCE.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
Sikkim and the Black Mountain	437
The Fifth Monarchy	438
The Dwellers in the Tents of Shem	439
The Chinese Question. From a British-Israel Point of View. By Mr. R. Bell	440
The Controversy in The North Manchester Guardian	443
The Nation of the Bible	444
Obituary. Dr. Robert Young	444
The Right Rev. Dr. Moorhouse, Bishop of Manchester, Is Sure Of It	445
The Indwelling Presence of the Lord With Israel	446
The People Who Are Never Forsaken	447
The Church Missionary Society's Deficiency Fund	447
The Vision of the Valley of Dry Bones	448
Our Naval Weakness	448
The Coronation Stone and Chair	449
Professor C. Piazzi Smyth, F.R.S.	450
Anglo-Israel Free Distribution Fund	450
Israel's Scripture and Prayer Union	451
Correspondence	451

SIKKIM AND THE BLACK MOUNTAIN.

IN the BANNER of Feb. 15, 1888, No. 581, p. 70, we drew attention to Sikkim, described its geographical position, and shewed our readers that the country operates as a Gate towards Tibet, whereby the vast trade of that country and of the regions beyond may be poured into India and find its way down to the colossal maritime Gate to the West, Calcutta. When we last wrote on the subject, eight months ago, military operations were then about to commence in order to bring the Sikkim Rajah and his Tibetan friends to reason, to persuade them that the British power cannot be insulted with impunity, and lawful commerce with the Empire impeded by false friends or open enemies. The Gate has now been forced open by violence, and British troops under Col. Graham have taught the Tibetans a lesson which they will hardly forget in a hurry. The British advance encountered the Tibetan levies and completely dispersed them, capturing their camp and guns, killing 400 of their troops and invading their territory. The effect has been most salutary: for the Sikkim Rajah has come into Gnatong, the British head-quarters, and been forwarded to Darjeeling to confer with the Lieutenant-Governor. Tumlong, the capital of Sikkim has been occupied by Col. Mitchell, with the enthusiastic welcome of the inhabitants. The Chinese authorities are busy trying to secure favourable terms for the Tibetans, who are quelled by their recent disastrous defeat. The gateholders have according to the promise secured possession of one of the Gates of their enemies, and they now, we suppose, will hold it firmly till the road into Tibet has been constituted a trade route to minister to Israel's wealth, and give her power and security on her Northern frontier. The other name which stands at the head of this article is a fresh and far distant Gate, situated "in the South-western corner of our Hazara frontier, almost enclosed by the Indus on the West, and by two of its tributaries on the East." Strangely enough a spot close to this Black Mountain is called "the shut or closed Gate" for "Dar-band" is the true "Gate" of the Black Mountain, and whoever holds it, holds the key to the Black Mountain country too. The "shut Gate" lies just within our British frontier. "The Black Mountain" seems on the map close to Attock and Peshawar, but it is a most difficult mountainous country, requiring consummate skill to traverse and subdue. The geographical features of the district were well described in the Times on Oct. 8., and we quote them for our readers' information:—

The Black Mountain itself is described in Colonel Paget's Record of the Expeditions undertaken against the North-west Frontier Tribes as a district of comparatively small extent, but of the most rugged character. It is only about 30 miles long, with an average breadth of 10 miles, and an average height of 8,000 feet above sea-level. It is really a long crest running in a generally northern direction at some little distance east of the Indus, from near Darband on the south to where the river takes a sharp turn eastwards on the north. The ridge is in general more rounded than sharp, sends up high peaks at intervals, is crossed here and there by deep passes, and shoots out great spurs east and west, which are often precipitous and rocky, with deep, narrow glens or gorges lying between them, in which are planted the villages of the tribes. The soil of the hillsides is described as for the most part rocky and stony. When uncultivated the lower slopes are covered with thorny bushes and grass; further up, forest replaces these, and the whole of the upper portion of the spurs and crest is thickly wooded. Along the crest frequent open glades occur in the forest, which, with the exposed slopes of higher peaks, are covered with short grass. The Indus in this part is deep and rapid, from 70 to 150 yards wide, and crossed at 11 different points by ferries, the boats accommodating from 20 to 30 passengers. The natives also cross the river at nearly every point on inflated skins, which they can do with great rapidity and in great numbers. The scenery in some parts is magnificent, as might be expected, and with its general features we are pretty familiar from the information obtained during the troublesome punitive expeditions of 1852-3 and 1868. The climate of the Black Mountain is fine in spring, summer and autumn, but severe in the winter, when snow falls in sufficient quantity to stop communications over the crests, along which are the main routes for a military expedition.

The attack on the Black Mountain has just been delivered (Oct. 3 and 5) by four columns of British troops, who have encountered a resolute enemy and defeated him with loss.

Digitized by Google

One of the staff officers on the British side was killed—Capt. C. H. H. Beley—and three more were wounded. The crest of the Black Mountain was reached and occupied by the 1st column of General McQueen's force, and the 4th column, which seems to have had much of the most difficult part of the operations to encounter, is harassed by the enemy on the opposite banks of the Indus. The result we may hardly doubt, and shortly we may expect to hear that the Black Mountain is either annexed to the British Empire or placed under such political governmental arrangements as never to be a cause of anxiety and expense for the future. An episode in the operations was an assault delivered on the Royal Irish Regiment about two miles beyond Kotkai, by some Ghazi fanatics. It was repulsed, though with some loss to ourselves, and 200 of the attacking fanatic force were killed, accepting we presume no quarter. The operations resemble those which usually accompany an expansion of our Indian Empire. A frontier tribe perhaps commits some unprovoked assault on British territory and kills a couple of European officers on our own ground, as in this case. A punitive expedition is organised by the Indian Government to avenge the insult, and to punish the assailants. The expedition is entirely successful, and after a time the British government, tired of the expense of repeated efforts to teach moderation to our aggressive neighbours, orders the territory of their foes to be annexed, and forthwith the rebels subside into quiet and peaceable subjects of the British Raj, and become themselves the supporters of their rulers in their next contest with the powers of turbulence, beyond. The Black mountain will soon we believe be the "Dar-band" or "closed Gate" of the difficult country beyond, and thus "the gatekeeper of the world" will be possessed of one more bunch of keys, opening for them fresh sources of trade, and providing new defensive bulwarks for the Empire against its savage enemies to the North-west. Such are the facts of an interesting historical event which has just taken place before our eyes, and is yet awaiting its completion. What lessons do Sikkim and the Black Mountain teach us? Surely that Israel of the Isles is before us, carrying out his destiny as the subjugator of the world, and illustrating Micah v. 8, R.V., "The remnant of Jacob is among the nations, in the midst of many peoples, as a lion among the beasts of the forest, as a young lion among the flocks of sheep, who going through treadeth down and teareth in pieces, and there is none to deliver." The same process is going on in other distant countries, and the same results follow. The conquering race is advancing in South, Central, and Eastern Africa: in Australasia, and the South Pacific, and "there is none to deliver," because the Lord is "showing to His people the power of His works in giving them the heritage of the heathen" (Psa. cxi. 6, R.V.). Let Israel then ascribe to the Lord all the praise!

THE FIFTH MONARCHY.

We have been for the most part taught that the Scriptures indicate the general outline of the course of history, from the beginning to the end of time. Concerning the four great empires of the ancient world, very precise indications are given in the prophecies delivered through Daniel, and many also through other prophets. Now, if the Scriptures be indeed the Word of the Most High God, King of nations, by whom kings reign and princes decree justice; if the Scriptures do indeed declare His will and purposes in the ordering of human affairs, it would be very strange if they had not abundant references to the vastest and most widely-spread empire that has ever existed.

The British Empire is four times the size of the Roman Empire, the last and greatest of the four ancient monarchies. To traverse the territory it possesses in North America alone takes a week, travelling night and day by express train. Its whole territory is a fifth of the habitable area of the whole world. Its whole population is nearly a fourth of the whole world. It is conspicuously the most influential political organization of any age, admitted by all men to be the exemplar of harmonized justice and freedom. It is in contact at some point with every considerable State, civilized or uncivilized, throughout the world, so that no considerable State can wholly escape its influence. It has grown mainly by trade and by colonization, only incidentally by the sword. Whereas the outer provinces of all other empires have tended to break away, the tendency of all the provinces of the British Empire is towards continually closer and more compacted union. Moreover, its expansion is continuous; it goes on always growing. During the Queen's reign, the population has doubled, the territory has increased fourfold, the trade fivefold, the shipping tenfold. This expansion has been going on almost unperceived during the last ten years of comparative quiescence. Such periods alternate in more or less regular oscillation with periods of activity. The girth of the small home territory is bursting with pent-up over-population for which the place is too strait. By one means or another room must be found for them where they may dwell. What the Empire must grow to in this continuous process of expansion, which is inherent in the very conditions of the case, passes the wit of man to conceive.

If there be not in the Scriptures abundant references to this immense phenomenon, unique in every one of its aspects, and without any sort of historic parallel, then the Scriptures cannot be what for the most part we have been taught to understand. That is to say, they do not declare the purposes of God in the ordering of human affairs. That alternative fixes itself with an obvious logical precision from which there is no escape. The issue is definite and rigid. There are minds which cannot, or do not, grasp the meaning of the words, "British Empire." But by common consent of all men who know what the words mean, the thing they stand for is beyond any comparison the hugest thing in human history. The definite issue is that if the rise, and growth, and ultimate development of this huge matter have been omitted from the deliverances of the prophets of God, then, while discoursing of the older and less influential elements of history,—concerning the greatest and most influential they are silent. That cannot be. As a matter of fact it is not.

The whole Scriptures teem with glowing details, from every imaginable point of view, of a kingdom which should succeed the four of elder history, which should grow and spread to the furthest verge of the world, and ultimately dominate all other kingdoms and States.

The commentators have made the Word of God of none effect by their commentaries. The four elder monarchies were visible, material, fighting, conquering monarchies. The commentators, being blind, illogical, and inconsequent, have made out the fifth to be an invisible, immaterial, wholly metaphorical thing; have hopelessly dislocated the parity and consistency of the argument of the prophets of God. But now in these last days we have more sure the prophetic word, "Whereunto ye do well that ye take heed as unto a lamp shining in a squalid place" (see R.V.).

The Fifth Monarchy is described in the prophecy through Daniel thus,—In the days of those kings (of the elder monarchies) the God of heavens setteth up a kingdom never to be destroyed nor its sovereignty left to another people; but it breaketh in pieces and consumeth all these kingdoms, and it standeth for ever. It is likened to a stone cut out of the mountain without hands, that becometh a great mountain, and filleth the whole earth.

About the time of the Commonwealth there was a set of people called Fifth-Monarchy men. They were fanatical and troublesome; as people generally are who come into the world before it is ready for them. The empire was then a long way from having grown into a great mountain; but already its voice and authority were of such command in Christendom, and already the latent possibilities of its expansion and power had become so manifest, that these men, who believed God and His Word, were taught by the Spirit of God to discern thus early that Britain was the instrument appointed by the Lord of Hosts to vindicate His truth and righteousness before the nations. If they did not understand that this people are the very Resurrection of Lost Israel, at least they saw that they have succeeded to the functions of Israel as set forth by the prophets of God, to be on the one hand a kingdom of priests and a separated people, the witnesses to Yehova Tsebáoth, on the other His battle-axe and weapons of war to break in pieces the nations and to destroy kingdoms.

Digitized by Google

By all the Scriptures it is evident that the Fifth Monarchy is the Kingdom of Israel, the kingdom which was taken from the Jews (that is the tribe of Judah) to be given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof. It is God's Kingdom. Its throne is the throne of Yehova, on which Solomon sat instead of David his father, on which there can never fail a descendant of David, so long as the covenant of the day and the night endureth; until He come whose right it is, Son of David and Son of God. This Monarchy is a world empire so as that it has no defined frontier by land or by sea.

Concerning the Dry Land, it is written,—When the Most High gave to the nations their inheritance, when He separated the children of men, He set the bounds of the people according to the number of the children of Israel. That was ages before Israel himself was born. Manifestly, then, the ultimate dominance of the children of Israel was in the purpose of the Most High from the very beginning. Then follows the reason for so ordering the bounds of the peoples,—For the portion of Yehova is His people, Jacob is the measuring-line (khebel, hence the word cable) of His inheritance, that is of the kingdom which is set apart as specially His own, under the kingship of the House of David the beloved.

Let us see upon a map of the world how the British territories make a measuring line, girdling every continent by a continuous string of dominating points of vantage. Going first eastward, from Heligoland, by the Channel Islands, Gibraltar, Malta, and Cyprus, to Cairo, the string stretches round Europe and along the North of Africa. Thence down the Red Sea to Aden and Perim, by Sócotra to Karáchi, the great Empire of India, the Burmas, Ceylon, groups of islands scattered over the Arabian and Indian Seas, Malacca, Singapore, Labuan, Penang, Hong-Kong, stretch the line round Asia. The Australian continent, New Guinea, Tasmania, New Zealand, Fiji, and groups of islands scattered over the South Pacific, carry the line to the ends of the earth. Returning Westward, and beginning again at Aden, by the Seychelles, Mauritius, and other islands, to Natal and the great Cape territory, thence by Walvish Bay, St. Helena, Ascension, the Gaboon, the Gold Coast, Lagos, and Guinea, Sierra Leone, Bathurst to Gibraltar, the line has measured the whole circuit of Africa. Taking now the Western hemisphere, from Cape Britannia, in the uttermost hyperborean region, down to Newfoundland and Nova Scotia, and across the continent to Vancouver, the whole immense territory belongs to the Fifth Monarchy. That is not all. Down to the Gulf of Mexico (see "The Two Nations" in the October, 1886, Messenger) is the possession of that tribe of Israel which was also to become a people, and also to be great. Thence by the Bahamas, Jamaica, Honduras, Guiana, the West Indian islands, by Ascension and St. Helena again, Tristan da Cunha, the Falklands, round the Horn to the Carolines and other groups in the Pacific, the line has stretched round the American continent, and reached the opposite ends of the earth.

Concerning the empire of the Sea, it is written,—They shall suck the abundance of the seas. And again, of the dominion of David it is said,—"I have set his hand also on the sea, and his right hand on the rivers."

Now let us trace the official "Stations" of the Imperial Navy. The China Station extends from the longitude of Behring's Straits to the coast of China, and South to an irregular boundary South and North of the equator. South of this is the Australian station, from about 98° E. to 155° W. The Indian Station extends from 98° E. to the African coast, and to the Tropic. There begins the Cape station from 98° E. to 20° W. Thence the South American station extends to that continent. The West African station is bounded by the coast, by 20° W. and by the Tropic. The North American station covers from about 32° W. to the American coast. East of it, and up to the European coast, is the Channel station. Finally, the Pacific station includes the great area from the Western coast of America to the longitude of Behring's Straits; thus completing the whole circuit of the world.

"Britannia rules the waves," is another way of saying her hand is on the sea. Who has set Britannia's hand on the sea? —"Messenger" Leaflet.

THE DWELLERS IN THE TENTS OF SHEM.

We recur to this subject because we have somewhat recently heard a sermon on that famous Identity text, Gen. ix. 26-27, which sent a pang of pain and surprise through the hearts of the many Identity believers who listened to it. The preacher, commenting on the fact that no one could have invented this prophecy of Noah, uttered just after his shameful sin had been committed, proceeded to consider the distinct national destinies which the passage showed were marked out by the Patriarch for his three sons. There was he said first Canaan; cursed for his father's sin—the father being cursed in his son, who was destined to a terrible future—to ages of slavery and perpetual serfdom. "A servant of servants shall he be to his brethren." History shows the prediction has been exactly carried out. The sons of Canaan in Africa have been enslaved from that time to this by the Shemitic and Japhetic races; and after all the noble efforts this our own nation has made and righteously made to stay the evil, God has fulfilled the prophecy He Himself inspired, and Canaan is still the victim of an atrocious system of slavery which is terrible to contemplate. Next in order is the destiny of Shem. It is remarkable no blessing is pronounced on him—but the prediction declares, "Blessed be Jehovah, the God of Shem!" This, however, was a priceless blessing even so expressed. For it tied up Shem to the Lord Jehovah, and declared that the Lord God was ever to be the God of Shem. This unique blessing was carried on to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; and Jehovah became their God,—the God finally of Israel; all of whom belonged to the Shemitic race. To them accordingly God gave His Holy Word; His visible presence; His comforting protection. By them alone He was acceptably worshipped. They constituted "His peculiar treasure and inheritance." They were His "especial people," and to them He sent as their Saviour His own only-begotten Son, the Lord Jesus Christ. In the "tents" or tabernacle of Shem, the Shekinah dwelt, and all spiritual blessings were granted to this people. Further, included in these tents of Shem, there have always gathered those spiritual sons of Abraham, the true believing spiritual Israel, who are as entitled now to say with the racial descendants of Shem himself—"Blessed be Jehovah, the God of Shem!" So far the exposition of the passage was clear, scriptural, and quite in accordance with our Anglo-Israelite views. But when the preacher came to the 27th verse and dwelt upon the prophetic future of Japheth, we were constrained to differ, and to regret that his views diverged so widely from what we believe to be the truth. "Japheth," he said, meant "enlargement," and the prophecy foretold as his future destiny two things; first: enlargement or vast increase of population, influence, and extension in power and dominion; as well as—secondly: the privilege of dwelling in the tents of Shem. "'God shall enlarge

Digitized by Google

Japheth, and he (Japheth) shall dwell in the tents of Shem,' are (he added), the words of the prediction. The history of the Japhetic races—Greece, Rome, the Tartar monarchs who overran Asia and Hindustan; and, within the last two centuries the Portuguese, the French, and the Anglo-Saxons, all being Japhetic in their origin, have conquered the lands of Shem—have overrun India, and thus have proved the truth of His Scripture and the call of the Gentiles at the same time, for they have showed all through history, that God has verily enlarged Japheth, and Japheth has thereon dwelt in the tents of Shem." The preacher went on to declare that in spiritual privilege it was the same. The blessing of Shem, Noah declared, was one day to come in spiritual showers on the sons of Japheth. "The tents" were a symbol of religious worship; and the words of the twenty-seventh verse therefore foretold that the Gentiles of the Japhetic stock, were to inherit all Shem's spiritual blessings, and supplant him in respect to the true religion! This was "the call" of the Gentiles described in Isa. liv. 1-3 and Ephes. ii. 12, et seq. "We have, as the English Japhetic nation," said the preacher, "entered into Shem's place! We have been put in trust with the true religion and the Word of the living God—and have we not fulfilled the glorions mission? Have we not during these past 300 years sent the Gospel as a great and mighty and wealthy mercantile people into the whole world? Our vast wealth has been spent on the work, though immensely greater good would have been done with it than we have affected, had we not spent so many millions on the demon drink—the curse of our favoured land."

So far our preacher! The whole of the scheme he propounded regarding the Japhetic origin of our Anglo-Saxon British people, was based upon the misconception of the latter half of the 27th verse, which he used as his text. For whereas the text speaks of "God enlarging Japheth," and the same God "dwelling in the tents of Shem," the preacher quite gratuitously introduced as the nominative of the second clause, the accusative of the first, contrary to the Hebrew text, to the plain meaning of the passage, also contrary to the words of the LXX. translation, and the whole tenor of Scripture regarding the heirs of the promised blessings of multitudinousness, dominion, wealth, empire, the Gates, and spiritual privileges untold! The Septuagint clearly renders it so as to make "the dweller in the tents of Shem, the same God who enlarges Japheth." To accept the preacher's reading, which is that of the commentators almost universally, would be as reasonable as to allow the translation of 1 Sam. xvii. 51 to run as follows—(a reading the Rev. H. Marriott first suggested as a ridiculous parallelism, in Vol. 1, Horæ Apocalypticæ), "Therefore David ran and stood upon the Philistine, and he (the Philistine) took his sword; and it (the sword) slew him; and he (David or the Philistine) cut off his head therewith," &c. Precisely the same mistake has been made in this instance by nearly all our commentators, for they have taken "Japheth," the accusative of the first sentence, and against the genius of the Hebrew, English, and Greek languages, made it to do duty as the nominative of the second; and thus totally changed the meaning of the Lord Jehovah's prophetic utterance! For they have read it thus, "God shall enlarge Japheth, and he, (Japheth) shall dwell in the tents of Shem;" whereas the statement really is, "God shall enlarge Japheth, and shall dwell in the tents of Shem." He is in truth Jehovah the God of Shem, and naturally does dwell, and has dwelt, and will always dwell, in the tents of Shem. It is contrary to every promise within the Bible to take away Shemitic Israel's birthright of multitudinousness, dominion, expanse, wealth, spiritual primogeniture and privileges, with the custody of the Word of God and the Sabbath, and to declare that Japheth is finally to take that birthright right away from Shem. The Scriptures cannot contradict themselves; and therefore we must decline to follow the explanation of the passage which robs Shemitic Israel of her blessings—declares the British races have, as the offspring of Japheth, dethroned the sons of the Shemetic Hebrew Patriarchs from their high position of privilege which countless promises made theirs for ever and for evermore by the oath of God. We hold then to the Israelitish Shemitic, but not to the Japhetic, origin of the Anglo-Saxon folk; believing that they are what they are, because they come of Shem, and because God dwells in their tents according to His promise; not that being of Japheth they have robbed God's people of their first-born rights, acquired by virtue of countless Divine promises that the great Jehovah swore should be Shemitic Israel's for ever. (Gen. xii. 2, 3; xviii. 18; xxii. 17, 18; 2 Sam. vii. 23, 24; Isa. xxvii. 6; xliii. 21; Dan. vii. 27; Psa. cxlvii. 19, 20.)

THE CHINESE QUESTION. FROM A BRITISH-ISRAEL POINT OF VIEW.

A Paper by MR. R. BELL, read before the Sydenham British-Israel Association, New Zealand.

OUR subject for this evening, as you are all aware, is one which at present is causing a great deal of agitation in these colonies—viz., the Chinese Immigration Question—a question on which there is some difference of opinion among ourselves as British colonists, some contending we ought not to allow the Chinese to come among us, others asserting we have no right to prevent them coming, for, they say, it is difficult to understand by what right we, the British, hold full possession of and occupy these lands, the Australian Colonies, in preference to any other of the great Powers of the earth. The reason for this is found only in British-Israel belief. When the question, "Why do we possess these lands"? is brought to this great and important subject, the answer we receive is from the sacred word. God has given them to Israel. Nearly twenty-six centuries ago, about the time the Ten-Tribed house of Israel were being banished from the land of Palestine, the Prophet Isaiah, under divine inspiration, addressed these words to them, "Thus saith the Lord, I will preserve thee, and give thee for a covenant of the people, to establish the earth, to cause to inherit the desolate heritages" (Isa. xlix. 8). We have here God's promise that Israel (the British nation) were to be preserved to inherit the desolate heritages. This promise has been fulfilled, and in its fulfilment we have the reason why we possess and occupy these Australasian Colonies.

I am fully persuaded that the Lord's will is, that we alone, to the exclusion of every other nation, shall possess and occupy these lands, for He has nowhere in His word promised these desolate heritages to Israel as an inheritance conjointly with any other people, but on the contrary He declared by the mouth of Balaam, "Lo the people shall dwell alone" (Num. xxiii. 9). And through the prophet Jeremiah He says, "I will make a full end of all the nations whither I have driven thee" (Jer. xlvi. 28). These and other scripture statements shew that the divine will is that Israel, and Israel only, shall occupy these lands, which in the days of the prophets were "the desolate heritages."

Certain promises of national greatness were made to Israel through Moses, such as Deut. xxviii. 1—13. Certain commands, of perpetual obligation, were laid on Israel, obedience to which was to be an everlasting sign between God and Israel (see Exod. xxxi. 13, 16, 17). By this sign Israel would be distinguished from all the nations of the earth. I hold that if those promises and commands given to Israel in the wilderness apply to us in these latter days, so also must the instructions to Israel in the wilderness concerning their occupancy of the land of Canaan apply to our occupancy of these "desolate heritages."

Let me call attention to some of those directions or commands which are necessarily bound up with the subject we are now considering. I need not stay to shew that the people who occupied the land before Israel obtained possession of it were idolaters—every Bible reader knows that. God's command to our forefathers, repeated again and again, was, that idolaters were not to be allowed to dwell in the land with them, for the tendency to evil in the human heart is such, that notwithstanding all the sacred teaching Israel had received, and all the manifestations of divine goodness and love God had given them, they would form alliances with those people, and the gods and vile practices of the idolaters would become temptations and snares to them of the most dangerous character. Read the divine command, "For I will deliver the inhabitants of the land into your hand, and thou shalt drive them out before thee. Thou shalt make no covenant with them, nor with their gods. They shall not dwell in thy land, lest they make thee sin against Me" (Exod. xxiii. 31, 33). "But ye shall destroy their altars, break their images, and cut down their groves; lest thou make a covenant with the inhabitants of the land, and they go a whoring after their gods, and do sacrifice unto their gods, and one call thee, and thou eat of his sacrifice. And thou take of their daughters unto thy sons, and their daughters go a whoring after their gods, and make thy sons go a whoring after their gods" (Exod. xxxiv. 13, 15, 16). "And when the Lord thy God shall deliver them before thee: thou shalt smite them, and utterly destroy them; thou shalt make no covenant with them nor shew mercy unto them, neither shalt thou make marriages with them: thy daughter thou shalt not give to his son, nor his daughter shalt thou take unto thy son. For they will turn away thy son from following Me, that they may serve other gods; so will the anger of the Lord be kindled against you, and destroy thee suddenly" (Deut. vii. 2, 3, 4). These passages have reference to the idolatrous nations who occupied the land before Israel, and if it was necessary they should not be suffered to dwell in the land with Israel, was it not equally necessary to Israel's well-being that other idolaters should not be allowed to enter and settle in the land, lest they should become snares to Israel?

Digitized by Google

When the Lord brought the Israelites into the land of promise, instead of rigidly observing these commands, and driving out the idolaters, and thereby cleansing the land from idolatry, they failed to obey, spared some of the people, who were allowed to dwell in the land with them, and, as God had foretold, so the gods of those nations became snares to Israel. "And the children of Israel did evil in the sight of the Lord, and served Baalim: and they forsook the Lord God of their fathers, which brought them out of the land of Egypt, and followed other gods, of the gods of the people that were round about them, and bowed themselves unto them, and provoked the Lord to anger" (Judges ii. 11, 12). "And they took their daughters to be their wives, and gave their daughters to their sons, and served their gods. And the children of Israel did evil in the sight of the Lord, and forgat the Lord their God, and served Baalim and the groves" (Judges iii. 6, 7). Such was the tendency to idolatry in Israel that though they were frequently chastised on account of this sin, yet were they as frequently turning from the Lord and worshipping the gods of the heathen, until at last this sin brought upon both Israel and Judah the most terrible calamity, expulsion from the land which God had given them in accordance with the promise made to their fathers.

And are we, their descendants, more steadfast in our allegiance to the God of heaven than were our forefathers? Can we introduce an idolatrous race in large numbers among ourselves, and hope to remain true nationally to our glorious Christianity? Is the tendency to idolatry rooted out of us?

The Chinese are known to us all as a nation of idolaters, who will bring with them their heathen gods, and follow their idolatrous practices in our midst. I believe it is generally known in New Zealand that those Chinese who are now in our land have their little images with them in their homes, though perhaps not many may have seen them engaged in their idol worship. It would be well to consider what the result may be if they are permitted to come in large numbers, or if coming gradually they become a numerous people in our lands. Imagine a few hundreds of them in any locality! Is it too much to suppose they would engage unitedly in their religious exercises? Is it at all unreasonable to think one or more religious edifices would be erected, and their idolatries practised openly and in the sight of our own people? And having set up their heathen worship in our midst, will the evil be confined to themselves? Are the principles of our holy faith so imbedded in the hearts of all our people, that none would be found ready to join them in departing from the Lord our God, and bowing the knee to the senseless idols which are the object of worship among the Chinese? Are our Christian churches so rigid in their adherence to the word of God that there is no danger of any of them being ensnared, and led into error by the evil influence of heathenism? Would a large influx of idolaters to these colonies not mean danger to the church of the living God? Is it drawing too strongly on the imagination if we picture these "desolate heritages" occupied by God's people Israel having a large number of idolatrous Chinese among them as naturalised British subjects, demanding legislation on their behalf, and in the interests of their religion; in such a case it is not at all improbable that with our manhood suffrage the Chinese vote may become an important factor in our elections parliamentary and municipal, that with our ideas of religious liberty we might witness an avowedly Christian parliament legislating in the interests of a religion at once degrading to the human race, and dishonouring, insulting to the living God, the Creator of heaven and earth, and all they contain.

If any are sceptical as to this possible result of Chinese immigration to these colonies, and are asking the question, Can such things happen, I point you to the history of our native land, during the present century. About the year 1845 large numbers of idolatrous Irish (Canaanites) came over to England, compelled to leave their own country on account of the distress existing there, caused by failure of the crops, known in history as the potato famine. Those people by joining themselves to the Romish Church so increased the number of Catholics and strengthened the hands of the Papacy in England, that in many large towns additional accommodation was required. Large and attractive buildings were erected, the services have been rendered more imposing, the influence of that church has been widened, and increased numbers of our own race have been drawn within her pale, and this political, religious system which we call Popery has gained a position in Britain which I think it has never occupied there since the Reformation. The evil has grown and spread until our Protestant Churches of every denomination have in some measure felt its deadly influence, and in more than one instance have set up the image of the beast in their midst, and Israel is again shewing that the tendency to idolatry exists among us.

No one needs to be reminded what importance is attached to the Catholic vote in all our elections, both at home and in those colonies. I learn from English papers that in the last general election the Catholics in every constituency were instructed by the Church what candidates to vote for, the object being, if possible, to so balance the two parties in the House of Commons, Liberal and Conservative, that at any time the vote of the Catholic party in the House might be used to turn the scale to suit the purpose or serve the interest of the Church. Seeing that this state of things exists in regard to Romish idolatry, so largely established in our dominions, whether brought about by Irish settlement among us or no, we can easily conceive in our minds what may be the result of a large influx of Chinese idolaters to this colony. China, with her four hundred millions of subjects, can, if permitted, very well spare half a million or more to settle in New Zealand in company with our half million of the Anglo-Saxon race already here, and then, think what a political and religious power they would be in the land!

Though God's command to Israel was, not to suffer the idolater to dwell in the land with them, yet did the Lord make provision for the stranger who wished to settle among them. He appointed certain conditions which were to be imposed on the foreigner, and which, if enforced, would be effective in preventing him, not from dwelling in the land, but from continuing in his idolatry while he dwelt with Israel in the land. I will call attention only to one passage, which may suffice to shew what I mean; you will find more if you will "search the Scriptures" for yourselves. Turn to Exod. xii. 48, 49: "And when a stranger shall sojourn with thee, and will keep the passover to the Lord, let all his males be circumcised, and then let him come near and keep it; and he shall be as one that is born in the land, for no uncircumcised person shall eat thereof. One law shall be to him that is home-born, and unto the stranger that sojourneth among you." The stranger must embrace Israel's religion, submit to Israel's religious ordinances and laws. The conditions under which the stranger in the olden time might dwell in the land of Israel, being of God, and therefore far superior to all human plans, shew us the only safe course to pursue in the case of the Chinese, who come to these colonies. If we could enforce on them submission to all our laws and Christian rites and observances, then we need not fear them becoming dangerously numerous, but to allow them to come free from all such conditions is to run a terrible risk of having these desolate heritages flooded with idolatry, and thereby bringing upon ourselves the indignation of our offended God.

Digitized by Google

It is contended by some good Christian people among us, that as the earth is the Lord's we have therefore no right to refuse the Chinese a home in these lands, for as God's creatures they have an equal right here with ourselves. True the earth is the Lord's, and He may give it, or any part of it, to whomsoever He will. In His wisdom He has given China to the Chinese, but He never gave them these desolate heritages—they are His gift specially to Israel. The Chinese like the rest of the human race are God's creatures, and when there is necessity for such a gift to them, doubtless He will supply their need, but in their case there has not yet been any need like Israel's need for such a gift. When God promised this gift to Israel, He also stated the reason why it would be necessary to them; we have it stated in these words, "For thy waste and thy desolate places, and the land of thy destruction, shall even now be too narrow by reason of the inhabitants; and they that swallowed thee up shall be far away. The children which thou shalt have after thou hast lost the other, shall say again in thine ears, The place is too strait for me, give place to me that I may dwell" (Isa. xlix. 19, 20); "For thou shalt break forth on the right hand and on the left, and thy seed shall inherit the Gentiles, and make the desolate cities to be inhabited" (Isa. liv. 3). We have been multiplied exceedingly, until the place the Lord appointed for us, in which He planted us, became too strait for us, by reason of the inhabitants; and if God had not given us the desolate heritages of the earth (the various British colonies and America) we would have been in a lamentable condition now. It is very different with the people of China. It cannot be said of them, The place (China) is too strait for them. If you will take the Jubilee Atlas and work out a few figures, you will then be able to compare their present need for place, that they may dwell with our own.

According to that authority, in the year 1887 the population of England was equal to 486 persons to every square mile. The population of Scotland 125 persons to every square mile. The population of Wales was 184, and the population of Ireland was 159 persons to every square mile. Taking Great Britain as a whole, the population was 337 persons to every square mile, and including Ireland the population of the United Kingdom was equal to 289 persons to the square mile, while the population of China equalled only 88 to the square mile. It will be seen from these figures that Israel's need for the desolate heritages does not exist with the Chinese.

And what about the future? If we continue during another century and a half multiplying as we have done during this century, we shall by then require all the territory we now possess that we may dwell, for the Anglo-Saxon race will then be nearly equal in number to the present estimated population of the earth. And with such an immense population of our own there will be no room for any other race to dwell with us in the heritages the Lord has given us.

But it is said the Chinese cannot long continue numerous among us, for even though they come in large numbers they are sure to die out before us, as the Aborigines have in some instances died out, and in other instances are rapidly dying out before the British.

Now, I do not think this dying out process will apply to the Chinese any more than it applies to the Negro race in America. I am not aware they are dying out. To my mind such an idea is not in accordance with the teaching of Scripture. God has not said He will make a full end of them. He says, "I will make a full end of all the nations whither I have driven thee." He has not driven us among the Chinese. He has said, "For the nation and kingdom that will not serve thee shall perish, yea, those nations shall be utterly wasted" (Isa. lx. 12). The Chinese do not refuse to serve us; as a nation they have served us for some time, they trade with us, many of their ports are open to us for purposes of commerce. And the individual Chinese who are now among us, are willing to serve us in any capacity, even the lowest and most menial, and for the smallest remuneration. No, I do not think the Lord "will make a full end" of the Chinese. I do not think they "shall be utterly wasted."

There are some Christians among us who say, As we send our missionaries to China for the purpose of converting the Chinese to Christianity, we ought, therefore, to allow them to come among us, in order to lead them to the Saviour, so that when they return to their own land, they will carry with them the glad tidings of salvation to their fellow-countrymen, and so help on this missionary work.

This may be man's proposed way, but it is not God's authorised way of dealing with the heathen, at least, not yet. When the Saviour commissioned His Galilean disciples (Acts i. 11, and ii. 7) to preach the gospel to every creature, He commanded them to go into all the world. And we know this work was not given to the eleven exclusively, for it is revealed to us by the prophets that the Lord has laid this work on Israel; that is, it is a work for the nation, "Israel shall blossom and bud, and fill the face of the world with fruit" (Isa. xxvii. 6). "This people have I formed for Myself, they shall shew forth My praise" (Isa. xliii. 21). "I will also give thee for a light to the Gentiles, that thou mayest be My salvation unto the end of the earth" (Isa. xlix. 6). It is clear from these and other similar passages, that Israel is to be the agent in God's hands for conveying the Gospel to every creature. But I know of no Scripture that teaches that this is to be accomplished by receiving the heathen among ourselves. On the contrary, Scripture teaches that we are to carry out the purposes of God concerning the heathen by going to them. He says of Israel, "They shall declare My glory among the Gentiles" (Isa. lxvi. 19). And again He says, "And the remnant of Jacob shall be in the midst of many peoples, as a dew from the Lord" (Micah v. 7). You will see by these Scriptures that we are to declare God's glory among the Gentiles, not with the Gentiles among us, that we are to be in the midst of many people, as a dew from the Lord, not many people in the midst of Israel. Not until the restoration to the land of promise, have we any Scriptural warrant for receiving the heathen among us, then they may come to us, to that land, not as colonists seeking mere worldly advantage, but as enquirers anxious to learn the ways of Israel's God, and to walk in His paths. This is so clearly stated in Scripture, that none can fail to understand. "And it shall come to pass in the last days, that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills, and all nations shall flow into it. And many people shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob, and He will teach us of His ways, and we will walk in His paths, for out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the Word of the Lord from Jerusalem" (Isa. ii. 2, 3). "And many nations shall come and say, Come and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, and to the House of the God of Jacob, and He will teach us of His ways, and we will walk in His paths" (Micah iv. 2). "Yea, many people and strong nations shall come to seek the Lord of Hosts in Jerusalem, and to pray before the Lord" (Zech. viii. 22). This is God's way of dealing with the heathen: Israel is to carry the Gospel to them until the time of our restoration. Then they will come to us to learn to know and serve the Lord, the God of Israel.

Digitized by Google

While man professes to propose a better way; while Christians are so anxious about the spiritual welfare of the Chinese, as to urge as a plea for their coming among us, a desire to lead them to the Saviour, I am not aware of any effort Christians are making in this direction. I have not heard of any mission instituted by any denomination in these colonies for the special benefit of the "heathen Chinee" already dwelling with us in these lands. I believe there is not any such mission in New Zealand. And until some effort is made for their conversion it will be better for Christians to cease urging this reason for permitting the idolater to dwell with us in these "desolate heritages."

These are some of my views on this Chinese Immigration Question. I believe, and this belief is founded on the Word of our God, that it would be contrary to His will to permit a large influx of idolaters to these lands which He has given us. And that the agitation against Chinese immigration now going on in some of the Australian Colonies is but the Lord moving the people to cry out, and protest against the thing which if permitted will bring upon Israel a great calamity, namely, further estrangement from and insult to her God.

THE CONTROVERSY IN "THE NORTH MANCHESTER GUARDIAN."

A SHARP and rather too personal controversy is being carried on, as we have already noticed, in the columns of The Guardian of Middleton, North Manchester, the last portion of which, dated Sept. 29th, has just been forwarded to us. We do not think it serves our cause to allow our controversy to degenerate into personal allegations of ignorance, delusion, carelessness, and the like. We do not propose to allude to such accusations on either side in the letters which appear from the pen of our champion, Mr. Gandy, or from our antagonist, Mr. Ernest E. Hoole. The latter conscientiously believes we are wrong, and gives reason for the statement. We are bound to consider those reasons dispassionately, and to answer them fairly, if we can, in the hope of converting one to our side, who is bound at last to be a believer, and who may as well be our friend now as some weeks or months hence. Mr. Hoole states he was perfectly well aware that there was once a distinction between the House of Israel and the House of Judah, as recorded in the Scriptures, but what he maintains is this: that "whatever differences existed 2,000 or 3,000 years ago, such differences do not now exist, and have not existed for centuries." He argues that because we admit that 1,800 years ago we knew where to find the Ten Tribes (alluding, we suppose, to the testimony of Josephus), therefore the wildest stretch of imagination will not justify us in declaring those Tribes are "lost" now! To all this, of course, we demur; and we are sure Mr. Hoole will see he is going too far. We do admit the Ten Tribes were indicated by Josephus in A.D. 93, as still existing beyond Media, an "immense multitude;" but we affirm without contradiction that since the 5th century, A.D., after the Roman empire broke up, the House of Israel has not been heard of, and therefore may be described just as the Jews describe them to-day, a people "lost," but destined to be found some day, according to the prophecies. Mr. Hoole mentions a difficulty which has been well answered in our columns by J. C. H. Mehl, in an article entitled "B.C. 720, and A.D. 70," on p. 383 of our present volume. It relates to the fact that whereas St. Peter, in his epistle, addressed the Diaspora of Ten-Tribed Israel in Asia Minor, in his day, Mr. Scott, the Anglo-Israelite advocate, wished Mr. Hoole to believe that the Ten Tribes were already at that date in the British Islands, receiving Christian instruction from St. Paul and others. The explanation which the late Bishop Titcomb and J. C. H. Mehl have given is the correct and simple one, that while the main body of the Ten Tribes reached these shores of ours, through the North of Europe, prior to, and long after the Christian era, a detachment, or "scattered fragments of the Ten Tribes which had wandered far away from the place of their captivity," were located in Apostolic times in Asia Minor ("Message to the Church," p. 49, Titcomb). It is clear from the whole epistle (1 Peter i., ii.), that the Diaspora was the dispersion of Israel, not that of Judah; and the testimony of Scripture requires that Israel's dispersion should be in many directions, and not in one, as Mr. Hoole seems to expect (see Hosea ix. 17; Amos ix. 9; Ezek. xi. 16, 17, R.V.). On another point, Mr. Hoole takes exception to our case, arguing in proof of the union of the Twelve Tribes, in our Saviour's days, that when it is said, "He came to His own and His own received Him not," the Twelve Tribes were indicated, but not the two only. "Christ," he says, "was promised to the whole Hebrew race long before the term Jew was invented, and He came to the whole Hebrew nation and they rejected Him." Mr. Hoole considers we are guilty on our side of begging the question, when we assert that the Lord's own were the Jews only and not the whole Twelve Tribes.

Mr. Hoole's error of course is a natural one, and arises from the fact that he is not aware that on him, under the circumstances of our case, rests "the burden of proof" that the two Houses which he admits were once divided, were re-united again in our Lord's day. He must prove that fact; not the Anglo-Israelites. For he admits that the state of division once existed, and the presumption of continued separation even to this hour must prevail until it can be distinctly shown by him who asserts it, that the two severed and divided Houses re-united. Let Mr. Hoole assume the labouring oar, and tell us when the House of Israel and the House of Judah were re-united after their division in B.C. 975, and after the captivity of Israel to Assyria in B.C. 740 to 678! If he fails to offer proof, then the presumption that the rupture was never healed must prevail, and that when Christ came in A.D. 1, He came to Judah only—to His own tribe from which He sprung (Heb. vii. 14); and therefore was able to reject His own and transfer the kingdom of God to the House of Ephraim-Israel, as the nation bringing forth the fruits thereof (Matt. xxi. 43; Gen. xli. 52, R.V.). Mr. Hoole, in dealing with the parable of the husbandmen, declares that "the heritage of the Twelve Tribes was taken from them and given to the Gentiles," and the British, being Gentiles, "have not had the least share of the light, but that the time when Christ shall become again the glory of His people Israel (the Twelve Tribes) has not yet come, and will not for a considerable time."

Mr. Hoole will find, however, that his scheme of interpretation does not allow for the Gentilization of the House of Israel, and their absolute departure from the society of the Jewish remnant of the chosen people. Where does he find on his hypothesis that Hosea i., for instance, was fulfilled in Israel's history? When they were reckoned as "Lo-Ammi, and Lo-Ruhama," "not God's people," those on whom He had no mercy? When while so outcast did they become multitudinous "as the sand of the sea, which cannot be measured nor numbered"? When, while in the Lo-Ammi outcast condition, did these Ten Tribes become "the sons of the living God," that is, "a Christian nation"? When was verse 11 of Hosea i. fulfilled in the history of the Ten Tribes, before re-union with the House of Judah? At what date, how, and when, was the final amalgamation carried out? How does history corroborate Isa. xi. 15, 16, in respect to the mighty signs which were to accompany the rejoinder? If the re-union took place when Judah returned from Babylon, have the particulars of Ezek. xxxvii. 15—28 been accomplished? When and how? Is there one nation and one kingdom now existing on the mountains of Israel, and is the reigning prince there, ruling over the Twelve united Tribes, a prince of the House of David, as that Scripture requires? All these matters it devolves on Mr. Hoole to prove, not on the Anglo-Israelites, because his is the labouring oar, to prove that an admitted state of rupture and separation has been succeeded by the union of the tribes—a fact we deny. The onus probandi is his, as every court of law in the land would rule and require; and he cannot evade the responsibility or call on us to assume it as he has done when arguing with Mr. Scott. Mr. Hoole's words were these, "When Mr. Scott says Christ came to His own, and means this phrase to indicate the Judahites alone, he is simply begging the question and perverting the Scripture." We fear we must saddle Mr. Hoole with the burden of proof, and we know that under it he must collapse.

Digitized by Google

THE NATION OF THE BIBLE.

We hardly expected that our opponent, the Rev. J. Wilkinson, the true "Friend of Israel," as distinguished from the Philo-Israel of the Banner, would be giving us a piece of evidence to help us in our demonstration that the British folk are the Lost Ten Tribes. We find, however, in the "Occasional Paper No. 1," issued for the Mildmay Mission to the Jews, by the Hon. Director, the Rev. J. Wilkinson, that in detailing the history of the Hebrew New Testament movement, he published statements regarding this our nation's share in that work which go far to establish our claim—that she is Israel of the Lost Tribes. It is well known that certain English friends of the Jews bought 100,000 copies of the New Testament for gratuitous distribution amongst them. The fact when made known to some German friends, elicited the following:—"It is to our shame that the brethren in England have had the honour to give back to the Jews the New Testament of our Lord and Saviour, in which book they too occupy a prominent place."

This is what we Christians should do first and foremost; and ought to have done it long ago. It is to our shame that the brethren in England have to do it first, although the Lord laid the Jews before our very door, like poor Lazarus at the door of the rich man. What have we till now done for the Jews? The English people are, and remain, the nation of the Bible; this glory no one can take from them. Like the priests who in the old dispensation, went in time of war with the ark of God before the people, conquering the heathen nations, so the missionaries now go with the Bible in their hands conquering for Him, before whom all knees must bow; and English people go before, in the work among the heathen as well as among the Jews. And it is therefore that that nation enjoys the blessing of God in a special manner.

Mr. Wilkinson publishes these sentiments, and issues them with the sanction of his approval. He must be bound, however, by the conclusions we cannot but draw from such avowals as are here contained. For, if the British "are the nation of the Bible," doing for the Jews and for the heathen races of the world what no other Christian people think of doing; if they are therefore specially blessed of God in so carrying out His will, acting as the conquering servants of Him who puts His Bible into their hands, we cannot see how Mr. J. Wilkinson can avoid the conclusion that the British must consequently be the House of Joseph or Ephraim, now "the sons of the living God" (Hosea i. 10, R.V.).

Nowhere do we find in the Scripture that any race is honoured as the British are admitted to be, except Israel. To them God has declared that "He showeth His words, His statutes, and His judgments, as He doth not deal with any other nation" (Psa. cxlvii. 19, 20, R.V.). To Israel only is given the commission "to blossom, and bud, and fill the face of the world with fruit" as the people whom "the Lord hath formed for Himself," and who therefore must perforce "show forth His praise" (Isa. xxvii. 6; xliii. 21, R.V.). Israel only was to be "the head and not the tail; above only and not beneath," in missionary enterprise as in all other things; and yet Mr. Wilkinson's paper declares to us that the English people are doing Israel's work and occupying her position, in this respect, to the jot and to the tittle. There is an error of course in the assertion made that it is only because the English so act, God has therefore blessed them in an especial manner; as if God grants His special favours for goodness and obedience, shown by any race, even non-Israelite in origin, instead of giving all the blessings described to His people Israel, only as promised, because they are the afterseed of Abraham, and not because of their fancied merits. By reason of our Israelitish origin, we are the nation of the Bible. For precisely the same reason ours is a missionary nation, going forth, Bible in hand, to bless and convert all the nations, families, and kindreds of the earth, to Christ. The British are foremost in this blesssed work, because they are the chosen nation, formed, created, made, and set apart for this very work by the will of God, to show forth His praise. The Bible assigns this honour to Israel, and to them exclusively. Mr. Wilkinson, then, ought not to allow the glory which God has conferred upon His servants of the chosen race only to be transferred by any one to a people like the British, whom he regards, for reasons of his own, as a non-Israelite, Gentile, Japhetic, nation, having no affinity at all with the House of Joseph. He may search the Bible from end to end, and he will never find what the writer in the Occasional Paper supposes is the case, namely, that God has attached to the general blessing He confers on any nation, the condition precedent, that they must take the Gospel, Bible in hand, to the Jews first and also to the Gentiles. God's blessing is unconditionally pledged to the after-seed of Abraham, exclusively; and He has bound Himself by an oath, which because He could swear by no greater, He sware by Himself, that blessing He would bless them, and multiplying He would multiply them, their seed being as the sand of the sea, possessing also the Gate of their enemies, and lastly that He would bless them by designating them His agents for carrying to all nations the gospel of the grace of God. The sovereign grace of God gave to Abraham's posterity— the Israelites—all the blessings that lie at His right hand, but He never once promised to any nation, much less to a non-Israelite Gentile race, that if they preached the gospel to all mankind, He would therefore reward them in return, by honouring and blessing them as He has the British. God does not pay for service done for Him by rewarding those who do it in the manner supposed; still less can He give to Gentiles what He never promised them at all, but only and exclusively to His chosen ones, the remnant of Israel. Let us therefore praise Him for His distinguishing mercies to our unworthy race, who are, nevertheless, covered with the righteousness of their Lord Jesus Christ, and sprinkled with the precious blood, are in a peculiar sense "The Nation of the Bible."

Obituary.

Dr. Robert Young, Author of the "Analytical Bible Concordance" and numerous other Biblical and Oriental works, died on Sunday evening, Oct. 14, at 6.20, at his residence, 14, Grange-terrace, Edinburgh, after a protracted and painful illness, borne with Christian fortitude.

Digitized by Google

THE RIGHT REV. DR. MOORHOUSE, BISHOP OF MANCHESTER, IS SURE OF IT.

THE Bishop of Manchester consecrated the new church of St. Augustine's, Sanderson, Queen's Road, Newton Heath, on Sept. 12th; and preached a sermon appropriate to the occasion after it, taking for his text, 2 Kings xviii. 31, 32: "Make an argument with Me." The following were his opening sentences, as reported in the Manchester Courier of Sept. 13:—

He said in the words of the text there was a representation of the means adopted by the great Assyrian empire for establishing and maintaining a universal dominion, which had been so successfully used eight or nine years before in connection with the children of Israel. They had not only been swept out of their ancestral home, but scattered over all parts of the Assyrian empire, owing to a policy which had for its purpose the destruction of the national life of the Israelites. So long as men remained together and had a common origin, religion, and history they would be dangerous to the power that desired to reign alone in the midst of the earth. The remarkable policy of the Empire of Assyria was not merely one of conquest or of spoliation, but of national murder. And so successfully had that aim been attained in the case of the children of Israel that they were utterly lost amongst the crowds of surrounding heathendom, and never from that day, in spite of the fantastic performances of some in modern times, had it been possible to discover their remnants in any part of the earth. Hezekiah and the men of Judah knew perfectly well it was nothing but this national doom that was promised to them in alluring words of the insolent emissary of the King of Assyria. They met the evil by the determination to fight with their lives if need be to maintain their national character and independence, and thus they were able to shake off the shackles that were about to be put about them. It was this same spirit that had kept them through 18 centuries of contempt and exile, the witnesses for God, and the wonder of history down to our own days. The lesson to be learnt from this was that the people of these days must cleave to the religion of Christ, not merely because it pleased them, or had been created by any human mind, but because it was the revelation of God.

The Bishop of Manchester knew the scriptural distinction between "the children of Israel" and "the men of Judah," and stated what the fate of each has been. The former were "lost" among the heathen; the Jews are "witnesses for God" to this hour, and are "the wonder of history." We hope our opponents who tell us "Israel was never lost, but that they are now mingled with the Jews," will pay some respect to our statements in future. The BANNER and the Anglo-Israelites have the support in this matter of a real Anglican bishop. None of your Colonial bishops this time! A real bishop of the Home Church, highly respected too among men! His fiat is (and the bishop pronounces the verdict in a very decisive and clear way), that the children of Israel were "utterly lost amongst the crowds of surrounding heathendom, and never from that day, in spite of the fantastic performances of (the Anglo-Israelites) some in modern times had it been possible to discover their remnants in any part of the earth." No words could better convey our constantly repeated declarations in respect to Israel. The Ten Tribes were "lost;" and so completely lost that men doubt—the bishop at the head of them, whether it is possible to find even remnants of them "in any part of the earth now." This settles the further question "the Ten Tribes are not now mingled with the Jews." The Jews deny, the Bishop of Manchester denies, and the Anglo-Israelites strenuously deny the assertion of some, that the Twelve Tribes are now fused, and the two sticks are one.

So far in regard to the point respecting which the Bishop and the BANNER agree. But what about that fundamental question on which we differ? The Bishop calls ours, "fantastic performances," because we in "modern times" declare that it is possible to discover "the remnant" of Israel, and that the British folk are they! The Israelites were "lost" it is true, But we assert that they are now found again, if only people will open their eyes and see! To enable the Bishop of Manchester to see, we have first to show him, that the very book which foretells the utter dispersion of Israel amongst the heathen, predicts also their discovery as a "great and mighty," western, island nation, wealthy to a degree, the possessors of the Gates, a nation and a company of nations; the mistress of the seas, and par excellence the Christian, Bible-loving, Sabbath-keeping, world-evangelising nation, destined to inherit "the kingdom of God" in these the latter times. In all these facts we have the support of Scripture, as our readers well know, and we are ready to submit them to his lordship if he will only condescend to look. They will be found in the following passages, relating, every one of them, in the order stated, to Israel, "the afterseed of Abraham," namely, Gen. xviii. 18; Isa. xxiv. 15, xlix. 1; Hosea xi. 10; Jer. xxxi. 10, 36; Deut. viii. 18; xxviii. 12, 13; Gen. xxii. 17; xxxv. 11; xlviii. 19; Hosea i. 10; Psa. cxlvii. 19, 20; Exod. xxxi. 13, 17; Ezek. xx. 20; Gen. xxii. 18; xxviii. 14; Acts iii. 15; Isa. xxvii. 6; Matt. xxi. 43; Gen. xlix. 1.

The Bishop's declaration that the children of Israel were entirely mingled with the heathen leads to the correct conclusion that they were Gentilized, and declared God's Lo-Ammi, or outcasts. This of course, has Scriptural warrant from Hos. i. 9, 10; but it is also true, as the Bishop will find from the last text, that "In the place where it shall be said to Israel that they are God's Lo-Ammi, there it shall be said of them, The sons of the living God, or behold, a Christian nation!" They must be a "nation" because the Lord said in Jer. xxxi. 36, that the "seed of Israel shall never cease to be a nation before God for ever." The Jews are not a nation now; and therefore the Ten Tribes must be one. Our Lord's words in Matt. xxi. 43, were to the same effect; "The kingdom of God," He said, "was to be taken from the Jews, and given to a nation, one bringing forth the fruits of that kingdom." That nation must needs be the House of Israel, the Ten Tribes; because Isa. xxvii. 6, R.V. declares they are to be planted by the Lord, take root, and bring forth blossoms and buds, and thus "fill the face of the world with fruit" (2 Sam. vii. 10, R.V.). To a nation, Isa. lxv. 1 refers, and that nation can be none other than Israel for obvious reasons, since the Lord teaches them alone His words, His statutes, and His judgments, as Psa. cxlvii. 19, 20, declares, and He knows only Israel and Judah "of all the families of the earth" (Amos iii. 1, R.V.). Remove Judah from God's favour, and then God's love and grace must rest upon Israel, as He is true. The Bishop therefore is wrong, and his theology is at fault. He has to learn God's faithfulness, truth and love in true constancy and force, and to realise that having loved Israel, He hath loved them to the end, and given them all the blessings which lie at His right hand, in accordance with His oath and promises to Abraham, and with the prophecies of His Holy Word.

Why should the Bishop consider it a thing impossible with God to restore again His scattered people Israel? Does not His Word distinctly pledge the Lord Almighty to do this very thing? Has not the Bishop read Ezek. xi. 16, 17; Amos ix. 9—15; Rom. xi. 1, 25—29, and can he doubt that God who has promised will certainly perform and fulfil His promises? This is the time when these promises must be fulfilled prior to His coming, and to the restoration of the Thirteen Tribes to their inhertance, according to Jer. iii. 18; Hosea i. 11; and Ezek. xxxvii. 1, 15—28. When we tell the Bishop then, that the British nation are Israel discovered, why should he style ours "fantastic performances," and refuse to look into our demonstrations? The British bear all the marks of Israel, and if they are not Israel (and the Bishop is certain they are not), he ought, like a good under-shepherd of the flock, gently to convince us by argument of our errors, and not dogmatically, declare with a stamp of his foot, that we are attempting a "fantastic performance," in trying to achieve the "impossible." The onus probandi of the negative proposition rests upon the Bishop, and his is the labouring oar! Let him show us now, that the British are not Israel; also that the Lost Tribes are somewhere else, and we shall be content! If he declare the latter portion of our demand is an impossibility, at least let him show us wherein we are mistaken in declaring, as we do with all earnestness, that our nation is "Lost Israel found," and that his lordship himself is one of Israel's honoured under-shepherds.

Digitized by Google

THE INDWELLING PRESENCE OF THE LORD WITH ISRAEL.

ONE of the promises of the Lord Jehovah to His people, the tribes of Israel, was that He would be constantly and really present with them. It is well to notice this, and in doing so to recollect three things:

1st—That God is unchangeable, and will not alter the thing that has gone out of His lips (Psa. lxxxix. 34).
2nd—That He has never similarly promised that His presence shall be with any other of the nations of the earth.
3rd—That if the British be Israel, then the Lord's presence is with US.

Let us refer to the evidence on the subject to be found in the Word of God.

In Exod. xxix. 45, 46, we have the following unconditional promise made by the Lord God of Israel to His people just after they left Egypt. "And I will dwell among the children of Israel and I will be their God; and they shall know that I am the Lord their God that brought them forth out of the land of Egypt, that I may dwell among them. I am the Lord their God." . . There is no doubt here who are the people addressed. Not the Christian church, for it did not go forth out of the land of Egypt in Moses' days, brought by God Himself from the house of bondage. The people, and the only people, mark! to be so favoured, without limitation as to time, and without condition, were the children of Israel.

In confirmation of the above we have the "Sanctuary" constructed by Moses, "that God may dwell among" the people of Israel (Exod. xxv. 8).

In Numbers xxxv. 34, we have this wonderful statement made by the Lord Himself to Moses, and no condition is attached to the promise. "Defile not therefore the land which ye shall inhabit, wherein I dwell: for I, the Lord, dwell among the children of Israel." What proof is there the Lord ceased His indwelling amongst that race, or that He consented to dwell with any other nation or nations? There is none! To confirm this verse, we have in Deut. vii. 21, the following spoken by the Lord through Moses to encourage Israel to war with their Canaanite foes, "Thou shalt not be affrighted at them, for the Lord thy God is among you: a mighty God and terrible."

Nine hundred years after the above promises, we have God speaking by Haggai to the remnant of Judah, in Haggai ii. 4, 5, to the following effect, alluding to Exod. xxix. 45, 46. "Be strong all ye people of the land, saith the Lord, and work—for I am with you—saith the Lord of Hosts. According to the Word that I covenanted with you when ye came out of Egypt: so My spirit remaineth with you. Fear ye not."

In Zech. ii. 10 we have a promise to Israel very like the above, relating to the future. "Sing and rejoice, O daughter of Zion, for lo! I come and I will dwell in the midst of thee, saith the Lord." "Immanuel," who was the Lord Jesus Christ, came to His own—the House of Judah—"God with us" (Matt. i. 23).

His own rejected Him: Judah crucified the Lord of glory, and therefore the wrath came on them to the uttermost (1 Thess. ii. 15, 16). The Kingdom of God was taken then from Judah and transferred "to a nation bringing forth the fruits" of the kingdom; that is to Israel of the House of Ephraim (Matt. xxi. 43; Isa. xxvii. 6; Gen. xli. 52).

When our blessed Lord was ascending up on high after His suffering, He spoke to His Hebrew disciples—His infant Israelite church, and He said to them: "Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you, and lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world (or dispensation). Amen." The promise of the continuance of the Lord Jehovah with Israel by indwelling among them, began with the Twelve Tribes 1,450 years B.C. It continued right up to the birth of our blessed Lord, with first one then the other of the two Houses. After this, addressing His Christian Israelites who were not of the House of Judah by race, but who were Galilean Benjamites, He promised them His indwelling presence among them till the end of the Dispensation; till, in fact, His Second Advent. Can any one point out another nation or church to which such privilege of God's indwelling abiding presence was either promised or granted as a fact? It is impossible! but being Israel, we British have this promise: and facts attest the reality, for God's word is with us. We are its truly appointed custodians. Our British and Foreign Bible Society, our Tract and Missionary Societies, all declare that ours is the nation where God's word written has its home, and to us as to no other nation is the promise applicable, "He showeth His words unto Jacob; His statutes and His judgments unto Israel. He hath not dealt so with ANY nation, and as for His judgments they have not known them" (Psa. cxlvii. 19, 20). His presence with us is shown by the fact, that to us is committed the evangelization of "all nations, families, and kindreds of the earth" (Gen. xxii. 18; xxviii. 14; Acts iii. 25), and we, and we alone, of all the nations attempt it. The Lord is therefore with us as He promised in Matt. xxviii. 20. His presence with us as with no other race is also proved by the fact that repeated but limited outpourings of God's Holy Spirit have been granted to us, and we nationally look for the fulfilment of the promise which declares that the new covenant blessing, embracing the complete baptism of our whole race, "from the least of them to the greatest of them," with the Holy Ghost, shall be ours in God's good time (Joel ii. 28; Jer. xxxi. 33, 34; Heb. viii. 10—12, R.V.). But there is another sense in which God's Word, or "the Word of God" written, and Incarnate, is also "indwelling" among men. It is so described in 2 Cor. iii. 3; Jer. xv. 16; Col. iii. 16, and John xv. 7, and xvii. throughout.

In each of these passages we find the Spirit of God described as the agency employed in the operation; and the subject the hearts of His people. "Ye are the epistle of Christ, written with the Spirit of the living God." "Let the Word of Christ dwell in you." "If My Words abide in you . . . ye shall 'ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you.'" "I have given them the words which Thou gavest me. . . ." "Thy words were found and I did eat them." Thy words were to me a joy, and the rejoicing of my heart" (Jeremiah declared). The words of the Lord indwelling among men, must relate chiefly to the promised blessing to Israel already mentioned, whereby God gave to His people His covenant that He would teach them His words, His statutes, and His judgments, as He does not teach them to any other nation (Psa. cxlvii. 19, 20). But this does not exclude other nations from this benefit; for Israel when taught is constituted God's messenger and missionary to "all nations, families, and kindreds of the earth," to bless them and administer to them all the spiritual benefits they have themselves derived from the word of Christ, mentioned in the text above quoted. But, being thus in a national sense the temple of the Lord, how tremendous are our own responsibilities to preserve that temple, which is the dwelling of the Lord and of His Christ, holy to His name! We are bought nationally with a price.

Digitized by Google

Therefore, let us glorify God in our body-politic and in our spirit, as Christian men and women, for both are God's. He hath redeemed Israel. We are His "spiritual House," and "He dwells with us and among us," according to His covenant (1 Cor. vi. 20; 1 Peter ii. 5; Luke xxiv. 21; Haggai ii. 5, R.V).

THE PEOPLE WHO ARE NEVER FORSAKEN.

We read Heb. xiii. 5, R.V., as a matter of course, but we seldom discover the wondrous depth of the promise it contains, or its national application to ourselves. The words addressed to the Christian Hebrews of St. Paul's day, and written by him from Rome, were these: "Be free from the love of money" (or, "Let your turn of mind be free from the love of money"—marg.), "content with such things as ye have; for Himself hath said, I will in nowise fail thee, neither will I in any wise forsake thee." Here is a promise to the Hebrews, addressed by God Himself to them exclusively, nationally, and individually. The force of the Greek is hardly rendered in the two versions we have. The words in the Greek are these: "For Himself hath said, Never, never will I let go My hold of thee; never, never, never will I let you go right away" (from Me)! A wonderful promise! one taken from the Old Testament and adopted into the New, and never in any one instance addressed to any nation but the Hebrew nation, or to any but believers in the Hebrew God-man, the Lord Jesus Christ, in connection with the Hebrew Church, founded by and on Him!

The promise is one from God Himself, and St. Paul emphasises the words by omitting to mention God's name as the Promiser, speaking of Him as "Himself." The promise was national, addressed to the believing Hebrews in a body, yet individual and personal too. "I will in nowise fail thee. No! never, never will I forsake thee." The duration of the promise covers all time—'never'—and it operates unconditionally, whether the Hebrews addressed be worthy or not. "Never, never, never," is God's own expression to denote eternity of purpose, and eternity of time, and faithfulness on His own part.

We may search the Bible through and through, and yet we shall never find such a wonderful promise as this made by God to any race but Israel, or to any soul of man but those united by faith to the Son of God, the Lord Jesus Christ. The occasion on which the blessing in question was pronounced in the Old Testament, and quoted in the New, were remarkable, and worthy of notice, to show the exclusiveness of the promise to the children of Israel, God's chosen ones, and as proving how certainly and boldly we may claim it nationally for the British folk as the Lost Ten Tribes. The first passage in which the promise was mentioned is Gen. xxviii. 15, R.V., where God said to Jacob at Luz: "I will not leave thee until I have done that which I have spoken to thee of." This, though addressed to Jacob personally, was manifestly intended also for his posterity. For the Lord did not give Jacob what He had spoken to him of, namely, the land on which he lay; nor did He confer on him at once a vastly expanded posterity, or the Gospel to proclaim to all the families of the earth (ver. 14). God promised to bring Jacob back again to the land, and did so. But even then none of the glorious blessings promised were bestowed on him. They were all reserved for his distant posterity, and are, even now, most of them, in the future as regards their final accomplishment. They were promised to "Israel," then known as "Jacob the supplanter," and will yet be his afterseed's possessions as the Israel of God, and as a Hebrew race.

The next occasion on which the promise was repeated was when Moses addressed the Twelve Tribes in the presence of their future leader, Joshua, and told them that the promise made to Jacob was theirs to rely upon. "Be strong (he said) and of a good courage; fear not, nor be affrighted at them (the nations of Canaan); for the Lord thy God, He it is that doth go with thee; He will not fail thee nor forsake thee." The same promise was repeated to Joshua in Deut xxxi. 8, having first been given to the people in ver. 6, R.V. The words, we thus see, were addressed to the Tribes of Israel exclusively, and to Joshua, their commander.

In Joshua i. 5, R.V., we have the same encouragement given to Joshua alone, as Israel's leader, in these comforting words: "There shall not any man be able to stand before thee all the days of thy life. As I was with Moses, so I will be with thee. I will not fail thee, nor forsake thee." The promise was here again made to a representative Israelite, and that as commander and leader of the people of God's choice.

In 1 Kings viii. 57, R.V., we have the same words of promise of previous occasions, adopted by Solomon in his prayer and blessing of the people of Israel at the dedication of the Temple, and turned into a supplication for them that God would grant them what He had already engaged to give them. "The Lord our God (he prayed) be with us, as He was with our fathers; let Him not leave us nor forsake us; that He may incline our hearts unto Him, to walk in all His ways, and to keep His commandments, and His statutes, and His judgments, which He commanded our fathers." The prayer, we see, was exclusive. It was for Israel only, but did not include any of the nations of the earth non-Israelite in origin.

In 1 Chron. xxviii. 20, R.V., we hear David's exhortation to Solomon when he seated him on his own throne. He addressed him thus, being king-elect over Israel: "Be strong, and of good courage, and do it. Fear not; nor be dismayed; for the Lord God, even my God, is with thee. He will not fail thee, nor forsake thee, until all the work for the service of the house of the Lord be finished."

In Isa. xli. 17, R.V., the Lord, as the God of Israel, declared He could not forsake "the poor and needy, who seek water and there is none, whose tongue faileth for thirst." The context shows that it was regarding the men of Israel the prophet was delivering God's message (ver. 14). In Isa. xlii. 16, R.V., we have a similar promise to blind Israel: "These things will I do unto them, and I will not forsake them." In short, the Old Testament record has but one voice throughout. To Israel God made promise of His perpetual presence, guidance, and protection. In the Book of Malachi iii. 6, R.V., the whole is summed up in those pregnant words which Anglo-Israelites should never forget: "I the LORD change not; therefore ye, O sons of Jacob, are not consumed."

The New Testament then takes up the promise, and we have it repeated only in that Epistle which was addressed exclusively to the Christian Hebrews. That Epistle we British, as "the remnant of Israel," may take to ourselves, and, accepting the comfort it is designed to give, we may praise the Lord for His lovingkindness and tender mercy to His stubborn and ungrateful, but greatly favoured people.

THE CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY'S DEFICIENCY FUND.

	£	s.	d.
Amount acknowledged on p. 387, BANNER, No. 613	14	4	6
F. Braby, Esq. (Teddington)	1	0	0
Mrs. Sealy (Ealing)	1	0	0
Mrs. C. Bailey (London)	1	0	0
Mrs. Sandilands (Isle of Wight)	1	0	0
Major Newbury (Brighton)	0	10	0
Mr. H. Dewdney (London)	0	2	0
W. Alexander, Esq. (Upper Norwood)	0	10	0
J. H. Weldon, Esq. (Ireland)	1	0	0
	£20	6	6

The Editor begs to thank the subscribers for enabling him to remit the above sum to the Church Missionary Society, in liquidation of their debt.

Digitized by Google

THE VISION OF THE VALLEY OF DRY BONES.

THE 37th chapter of Ezek. 1 to 14 was read as the evening lesson on Sunday, Oct. 20th, 1888, in the churches of the Establishment, according to the new Lectionary. No doubt many of the clergy improved the occasion by preaching on the text, and discoursing on "the Vision of the Valley of the Dry Bones." One such sermon we know was preached in a church in the Midland Counties, wherein the preacher treated the subject strictly in a spiritual sense, as a parable in short, similar to our Lord's; and informed his congregation that the text pointed only to the Holy Spirit's breathing into the hearts of men who are dead in sins, making them new creatures in Christ Jesus. We do not for a moment deny that men may legitimately teach from the passage in question the deadness of man's unregenerate soul, and the need for the quickening of the Holy Ghost by the breathing of the spirit of life into the dead and dry bones of perishing sinners that they may live. What we do object to is the refusal of such divines to allow the Word of God to speak for itself and to divulge its own enigmas. In the chapter in question, the Lord Himself explained to His bewildered prophet the meaning of the vision which he had seen but could not comprehend. In no parable or symbolical passage of the Word of God is the explanation of the mystery more clearly and distinctly given than in verse 11 of the prophecy. God Himself said, "Son of man, these bones are the whole House of Israel. Behold, they say our bones are dried up and our hope is lost, we are clean cut off." God's reply to their cry follows; and then there is given to the whole House of Israel, the most comforting promise of restoration, and recovery to the condition of a blessed nation; the change being accomplished (see v. 13, 14) by four distinct processes, ere the restored people are replanted on their own inheritance in "the land of Israel." These stages are: (1) God opens their graves; (2) He brings them up out of their graves, as being His people (v. 13); (3) He will put His Spirit on them, and then (4) when they are alive, He will bring them and place them in their own land.

Nothing can be more graphic, clear and almost legal than this language! It is simply wonderful that men can overlook it, and deliberately pass it over when they are opening out the meaning of the passage in their pulpits and explaining it to the people. This is the plain, open, obvious signification of the whole vision, and God in the simplest language expounded the matter Himself; but His ministers to-day, "blind and deaf" to His teaching, refuse to consider what He tells them is His own intention, and declare to us that there is nothing literal or earthly about the parable; but that its explanation must be sought in the devious paths of spiritualising interpretation, which of course varies with the fancies of each human interpreter. The immediate context gives us the splendid allegory of "The Two Sticks," where positively there is nothing left for the spiritualising imagination, but each stick is marked and ticketed by God's own hand, with the name of one of the two Houses of Israel; Judah being one stick, and "Joseph," that is "Ephraim, with the Tribes of Israel his companions," the other! Nothing can be made of this of course by way of spiritual application, and our divines therefore, generally prudently leave out these verses from their comments, and do not choose their texts from them. We hope the day will soon come when our clergy will allow God to be His own interpreter; and when He tells us that these bones are the whole House of Israel, they will not flatly contradict Him, by telling us that it is not so, "because in real truth these bones are the hearts of men dead in trespasses and sins, and have nothing to do with the whole House, or any part of the House, of Israel."

The Canadian Advance, the Toronto paper that so frequently contains Dr. Wild's Sermons, commences its second volume. We are glad to learn the proprietors are well satisfied with the first year's progress.

OUR NAVAL WEAKNESS.

THE Telegraph of Launceston, Tasmania, has been taking stock of the British power at sea, and finds that ours is, as compared with the French, Italian, and even the Spanish, navies, most miserably weak; so weak in short that our colonies can hardly look to us for protection, and our commerce at sea will have to take care of itself! The writer seems to have his facts complete as to details, and if only they are correct, then indeed our condition as a naval Power is, humanly speaking, precarious, and our prestige ruined. The question is, are the facts as stated? and is our naval position to-day that of a second-class Power, living on the sufferance of our loving neighbours, the French? What the journalist at the antipodes said was this, in regard to facts furnished to him, however, by The Pall Mall Budget of London:—

ENGLAND'S NAVAL WEAKNESS.

Just now there is great excitement in England as to her alleged naval weakness and inability to resist an attack and prevent an invasion. Quite a scare has been produced, and at the time the last mail left there was a fierce party discussion going on, and a Commission, with Lord Hartington as chairman, had been appointed to enquire into the efficiency of the army and navy. A writer in the Pall Mall Budget, who appears to have a good knowledge of his subject, makes it abundantly clear that at any rate in heavy and fast ships and heavy guns, the English navy is below that of other countries, and that every available cruiser will be required, in the event of war, to protect Great Britain's immense mercantile marine. As to the heavy ships and heavy guns the writer in question says:—"The country possesses on paper, at the present time, the following sea-going battle-ships and belted cruisers, namely, turret-ships, eighteen; barbette ships, nine; central-battery ships, twelve; broadside ships, seven; armoured cruisers, three; belted cruisers, seven; total, fifty-six. Of these, all the broadside ships are obsolete, and not one of them could be allowed to take part in a modern fleet-action. Of the central battery ships, four—namely, Audacious, Invincible, Iron Duke, and Penelope—are obsolete. There remain, then, forty-five ironclads that may now, or some day, be useful. Of this number, fourteen—namely, Nile, Victoria, Sans Pareil, Trafalgar, Anson, Collingwood, Camperdown, Howe, Aurora, Australia, Narcissus, Immortalite, Undaunted, and Galatea—are either incomplete, or are waiting (and will have to wait some time) for their guns. The Benbow is complete, and has her heavy guns on board, but she has no shells for them, and shells of such kind as she lacks cannot be provided in a hurry. This reduces the available number to thirty ships. Thirteen out of the thirty have no breech-loading guns whatever; nine of the remaining seventeen have no breech-loaders bigger than a five-ton six-inch gun. We have therefore only eight available ironclads which carry heavy modern armour-piercing weapons; and of these only four are at home.

Defenders of the Admiralty may say, "Oh! but the muzzle-loading guns are not obsolete!" That must be a moot point until a great naval war teaches us a lesson. Will it be possible to work muzzle-loading guns under the fire of quick-firing weapons of the latest types? Probably not. But even if it be possible, can we compare our sixteen-inch eighty-ton muzzle-loaders with the French five-inch seventy-five-ton breech-loaders, or our twelve-inch thirty-five-ton muzzle-loaders with the German twelve-inch thirty-five-ton breech-loaders? Even if we include all our muzzle-loaders we have afloat, or ready to go afloat, only eighty-six guns of twenty tons and upwards, against France's 120 and against Italy's seventy-one. In the matter of heavy guns afloat we are, in fact—thanks to years of muddle and neglect—already in the position of a second-class Power.

It is also an undeniable fact that at a recent review of squadrons of all nations which took place at Barcelona in honour of the Queen Regent of Spain, England occupied a very inferior position among the ten Powers represented, both as to speed and weight of metal. As regards size and strength of armament the Italian Lepanto ranked first. She is a vessel of 13,340 tons displacement 400 feet long, and carrying in addition to other weapons four 103 ton breech-loaders. She has nineteen-inch compound armour on her barbettes, and steams seventeen knots. Each of her guns throw a projectile weighing two thousand pounds, and at the muzzle can perforate 32½ inches of iron. The Italians had also the Duilio and the Dandalo, two ironclads only a little inferior to the Lepanto. France had the Indomitable, Courbet, Devastation and Admirable Duperre. The Indomitable has barbettes plated with 17½ inches compound armour. She is 271 feet 6 inches long, and of 7,060 tons displacement, and she carries two 16½ inch seventy-five-ton breech-loaders, in addition to lighter guns, Her speed is fifteen knots. England had at present the Colossus, the Thunderer, the Alexandra, and Agamemnon, as the principal ironclads, and the heaviest of these is the Colossus. She is 325 feet in length, of 9,150 tons displacement, and mounts four twelve-inch forty-four-ton guns with an extreme speed of fifteen knots. Her armour is from fourteen inches to ten inches thick. From this it will be seen that both in speed and in weight both Italy and France were far ahead of England. An English paper writes, "The thickest armour we could show was eighteen inches; France showed twenty-two and Italy the same. Our best gun was a forty-four ton breech-loader; Italy showed 103 ton, and France seventy-five ton guns. Our fastest vessel that was present steams sixteen knots. Excluding torpedo-boats, the fastest Spanish vessel steams nineteen knots, and the fastest Austrian seventeen." This is far from being a creditable position for the "leading naval Power" of the world to hold at such an important international review: and if in action England is to be similarly handicapped, she will want every cruiser she can lay her hands upon to protect her mercantile marine, while her ironclads and armed vessels are exclusively engaged with the heavier metal of an enemy. It is plain that in the event of an immediate outbreak our chances of assistance from the mother country are in reality nil. For this reason it is desirable that we should know exactly upon what we have to rely, and to that end the alarm and the consequent turning out of the naval and artillery forces is not to be regretted.

Digitized by Google

The above of course is a pessimist's view of our naval strength, with no doubt a certain amount of truth for its foundation. It is remarkable that we are, on this writer's showing, so reduced in strength in comparison with our neighbours, that, while we have admittedly no chance against them in regard to our land forces, as to the sea they have faster ships and heavier guns than we have. Further, we possess so few of really serviceable vessels to fight our possible enemies, that with only four battle ships to depend on for home defence, our case looks gloomy and black enough! Besides this, Lord Charles Beresford, when speaking at the Cutlers' Feast (Sept. 6) declared there, in the face of the world, that we are not strong enough at sea to defend our coasts and empire in time of war; and we have not strength to insure a continued and punctual supply of food for our people at home. He declared that we need to spend twenty-one millions to get the amount of defence we need, and that if we do not spend this money as a mere matter of insurance, we run the risk of a disaster which will cost the country "three times the amount of the national debt," that is, £2,100,000,000 sterling! Verily Lord Charles Beresford and the public writers in Tasmania and London, see Israel before them, according to the likeness painted of them in the Scriptures, and describe the British in terms exactly corresponding thereto. They assure us we dwell in these islands "carelessly, securely, or confidently," just as Israel was to do in these last days (Ezek. xxxix. 6, R. and A.V.), and they warn us, as God warns us in Isa. xxvi. 20, that we must, to fulfil His will, "shut our doors about us" by fortifying our Gates, and by providing an adequate defence to our outlying Empire, to our floating commerce, and to our home ports too.

These facts and warnings besides, impress upon us the truth, that our real defence is the Lord our God; and that there is none other that fighteth for us but only He. The Duke of Rutland, as a member of the Government, answering to the toast at the Cutlers' Feast, told the truth in regard to our naval position, and declared his conviction that in the interests of peace England required not only a powerful, but a predominant navy. We only hope the nation will speedily awake to the importance of the present crisis, and will place the British power at sea on such a secure footing that we shall hear no more of "England's naval weakness," but shall find that while our naval shortcomings are attended to, our statesmen will learn that this nation being Israel, God's chosen ones and heritage, is therefore under His guaranteed protection, hidden under the hollow of His hand, safe and "secure as the apple of His eye," "because of the anointing" (Psa. lxxxiii. 3, 4; Isa. x. 27; Zech. ii. 8, R.V.). Israel, praise ye, and trust only in the Lord, the Holy One of Israel, your King! (Psa. xcviii. 18, R.V.).

THE CORONATION STONE AND CHAIR.

WE take the following from The Fireside News, of July 1st, 1887:—

THE CORONATION CHAIR.

Mr. John Donaldson, Tower-house, Chiswick, writes to The Times:—

As a perfervid Scot, proud in the belief that the ancient prophecy connected with the coronation stone is being fulfilled in our day and before our eyes in the persons of Her Most Gracious Majesty, the descendant of our ancient Scottish kings, and of the many eminent Scotsmen and descendants of Scotsmen who hold high office and bear rule, not only in these kingdoms, but in the colonies and in India, permit me to draw your attention to the statement you make in The Times of yesterday that the sovereigns of England, from Edward the Confessor downwards, had been crowned on that stone, and to that made by one of your contemporaries some days previously that "the famous coronation chair was made by command of the Confessor to enclose the stone of Scone."

Neither statement is correct. The stone was brought by Edward I. from Scone, "quhar," according to blind Harry,—

"Kingis was cround aucht hundyr yer and mar," and Edward II. would appear to have been the first English monarch crowned on it.

A passage in "Blind Harry" seems to show that Edward I. was crowned on the stone of Scone; but I think it refers to Baliol. It is as follows:—

"For Ihon the Balyonne to Munross then he send,
And putt hym doune for euir of this Kynrik,
Than Eduuarde self was callit a roy full ryk.
The croune he tuk apon that sammyne stane
At Gadalos send with his sone fra Spane,
Quhen Iber Scot fyrst in till Irland come."

The chair, according to Dean Stanley, was made by King Edward I. to contain the stone, and was originally intended to be made of bronze, but was ultimately made of oak.

Possibly the mistakes may have arisen from the fact that the chair in which it is encased is sometimes called King Edward's chair, and sometimes St. Edward's chair. Thus Stanley tells us that King Edward's chair is expressly mentioned in the coronation of Mary, while in the office for the "Benediction and Coronation of Kings," given in Palmer's "Origines Liturgicæ," I find "The king sitting down in St. Edward's chair; the archbishop reverently putteth the crown upon the king's head."

With regard to the prophecy, "Wyntoun" in his "Cronykill" of Scotland, gives it and the translation thus:—

"Now will I the werd rehers,
As I fynd off that stane in wers:
'Ni fallat fatum, Scoti, quocunque locatum
Invenient lapidem, regnare tenentur ibidem.
Bott gyff werdys falyhand be,
Quhare evyr that stane yhe segyt se,
Thare sall the Scottis be regnand,
And lorddys hale oure all that land."

Little did Edward think of the inestimable blessings he was laying up in store for the descendants of the people over whom he ruled, and of their heathen contemporaries, when he took away that old stone and—

"Gert it set in Lundyn be."

THE Sabbath is a seal to God's ownership of time, of earth, of man. It is just as if an agent came to collect rent for his house; his very demand and your very payment of it implies that you are a tenant. So this very Sabbath is a proof that God owns the world, owns time, and owns us all.—Dr. Wild.

Digitized by Google

PROFESSOR C. PIAZZI SMYTH, F.R.S.

THE following paragraphs of Professor Piazzi Smyth's farewell letter, reporting his retirement from the office of "Astronomer-Royal for Scotland" will be interesting to BANNER readers on various grounds connected with the Great Pyramid, our relation to the land of Egypt, and to Our Identity in general. Our friend the Professor has well earned his retirement and rest from public labours. We are sure the good wishes of all our friends will follow him into his retirement to Clova, Ripon.

Finally, I beg to close with a short mention of the recent progress of two subjects which, like the Electric Time-Ball, and Time-Gun, systems, have been originated here within my period of the Direction of this Royal Observatory, and have considerably characterised its labours.

The first of these is the Astronomical experiment of the summer of 1856, above the clouds on the Peak of Teneriffe. For a number of years no visible effect followed, and the island remained strangely unvisited by, and almost unknown to, the English public. But within the last three or four years it has become suddenly extremely popular; is found to be the very perfection of all winter residences, for recruiting the health of Northern invalids; while the qualities of the Peak, with its height of 12,180 feet for an astronomical and physical station during the summer part of the year, and its easy ascent on every side, are confessed to be so remarkable that I have received the following letter on the subject during the last month, from a perfect stranger,—

"SIR,—Will you do me the honour of accepting the two photographic views (enclosed) of El Pico de Teyde, taken in 1887 and 1888 respectively; as a small and heart-felt thank-offering for having, through reading your work, Teneriffe, an Astronomer's Experiment, led me to haunt the Fortunate Isles, (the Gardens of the Hesperides).

"Now that the tourist and invalid flood-tide sets so strongly toward the Canarian Archipelago, may I venture to suggest the feasibility of your mooting afresh a favourite scheme of your own, thirty years since, viz., the establishing of an astronomical station at Alta Vista (10,000 feet above the sea-level). It could be connected telegraphically with the Villa de la Oratava, Puerto de la Oratava, Ycod de los Vinos. I hope and intend to return to Teneriffe in October; and, if in my humble way, I can further your former plan, so strangely overlooked by the scientific world, pray count upon me.

"Last October I made my first ascent of the Peak, and found some of your old observatory walls still intact.

"I am, &c., &c.,

"GEORGE GRAHAM-TOLER."

The second of those subjects is the scientific investigation of the Great Pyramid, in the metrological lines first deduced by the late John Taylor, of London. It was for this that I visited and encamped before the Great Pyramid in 1865, for several months, and have written not a few books upon it since then; of which one, entitled in that day, when certainly the world in general never imagined that Great Britain had any hereditary claims to a possession in Egypt,—entitled, I repeat, "Our Inheritance in the Great Pyramid,"—has gone through four editions, and a fifth is now called for.

Moreover, that view of the subject has been taken up still more enthusiastically of late in the other great Anglo-Saxon country of the world, the United States of America, where the Rev. Dr. Seiss' Philadelphia version of the same facts, under the title of "A Miracle in Stone," has gone through, I am told, no less than nine editions; while a Pyramid Society, holding fortnightly meetings, and publishing a Journal, has been established at Cleveland, Ohio, by an admirable existency of a man, Charles Latimer, a Railway Engineer in chief, of those parts; until two months ago, when by a mysterious dispensation of Providence, he was suddenly struck by a fatal apoplectic stroke in the midst of his incessant activities and untiring beneficencies.

The "International Institute," which he had founded in the cause of primitive and hereditary Anglo-Saxon Metrology, as traced in the Great Pyramid, and found by its leadings to have evenly commensurable and harmonic proportions with the best metrological features of the Earth as a whole, though entirely unknown to ancient Egyptians, Greeks, and Romans,—was terribly grieved and perplexed by the blow; and after several conferences, did me the extraordinary honour across the Atlantic, of formally offering the Presidency of their Society, the Editorship of their Journal, and the successorship of their late beloved President, to my unworthy self. Of course, I was wholly unable to accept the honour. But, that it was made, and in a line of enquiry which justifies Great Britain's dominating presence in Egypt, exactly as it has been from 1882 downwards, and gives the sisterland of North America an equal hereditary right to the Metrology of the Great Pyramid, as her own from before the ages, and a similar interest in the Evangelization of the Egyptians of the present and future, is something for our Anglo-Saxon speaking races in these islands to look forward to with encouragement, when various great nations in Europe are perpetually grumbling at our position in Egypt, and demanding with anything but friendly feelings, when it is to cease?

C. PIAZZI SMYTH.

Astronomer-Royal for Scotland, and Professor of Practical Astronomy in the University of Edinburgh.

ANGLO-ISRAEL FREE DISTRIBUTION FUND.

FIFTY-NINTH MONTHLY REPORT.

The following donations and subscriptions, from Sept. 15th to Oct. 20th, are very gratefully acknowledged:—

By the Treasurer: W. W. (monthly subscription, for BANNERS), 3s. 6d.; Mrs. C. B. (monthly subscription), 5s.; Miss T., Rhyl, £1 1s.; T. D., Alvaston, 1s.; A Sower, Bridge of Allan, £2; Mrs. B., Bromley, 2s.; Mrs. S., Brockley, 5s.; W. W., Moreton-in-Marsh, 3s.; A Well-wishing Friend, Malta, 2s.

By Mr. A. Sibbald: Mrs. C., Summer-town (monthly subscription), 2s. 6d.; G. R., Cosham, 2s. 6d.

Total, £4 7s. 6d.

Total amount received this year	£74	1	0
Received at the same date last year.....	£101	10	0

J. LAWRENCE, Hon. Treasurer.

Our Father in heaven having called Charles Horner from a life of suffering here to that "rest which remaineth for the people of God," the Anglo-Israel cause has lost in him one for whose usefulness it is difficult to find a substitute.

In all humility I have undertaken the onerous duty of the secretaryship which has fallen from his hands, and solicit the prayers of the household of God that his mantle may descend on me, enabling me to carry on the work so that it may lose nothing through the unworthiness of the instrument, knowing that out of the mouth of babes and sucklings God can perfect praise!

During my short time of duty I have received several letters from working men, who seem much touched with the magnificent future of this nation, being Israel. While in Manchester and Liverpool, I disposed of some pamphlets and leaflets, with, I think, some success. Two gentlemen in Manchester were very much pleased with the way in which I expounded to them the Identity, and promised to write to me. Another gentleman, whose acquaintance I made at Buxton, was so wishful to learn more about Anglo-Israel that he invited me to his lodgings, where we had a long talk together on the subject.

We beg to acknowledge, with many thanks, the following gifts:—100 copies of "Israel: Where is she now? What is her Mission?" from the author.

BANNER DISTRIBUTION.—One hundred and thirty-seven BANNERS have been sent out weekly to the places enumerated in last report.

LITERATURE DISTRIBUTION.—Thirteen parcels of pamphlets and leaflets have been forwarded to the following places: Brighton, Sunderland, Sheffield, Aldershot, Mortlake, Birkenhead, Alfreton and Alvaston (Derbyshire, 2), Thames Church Mission, St. John's, S.E., Ontario (Canada), Malta (2).

CORRESPONDENCE.—From our Sower at Birkenhead we have received the following interesting account of the work there. He says: "The work we all love so much is surely growing from this centre. There are now three Bible-classes, to my knowledge, conducted by Identity men; and a clergyman of this neighbourhood preaches publicly from our great truth, and has twelve men in his Bible-class who now take the BANNER. We are, therefore, trying to make a British (in preference to Anglo, Israel being here long before the Saxons came) Israel Identity Association for Birkenhead. Last evening a young man, a bank clerk, called at my house, saying that in their bank, on that day, the conversation had somehow turned on the Identity, and the bank manager, knowing that I was a believer, advised this young fellow to call on me for information on the subject. I spent with him a most delightful hour over this our precious Word, going rapidly through the chief Identity points from Genesis to Ezekiel. The young man, who followed my points with great earnestness and intelligence, was evidently overwhelmed with the accumulated weight of evidence, both Scriptural and historical, I was able to lay before him."

Digitized by Google

Another correspondent, from Sunderland, writes: "It is now three years since I first read the BANNER, which was first lent to me by a friend. By our Identity I have long been led into such light that I think it impossible to relapse into darkness. I always try to introduce Our Identity to my friends, when they give me a visit. I have frequent visits from the curate of our Parish Church, to whom I introduce the subject."

A working man, from the neighbourhood of Derby, writes: "Just a line to say I should thank you to receive a shilling's worth of stamps towards the spreading of the grand truth of our Identity; and I shall try to send one shilling every month for the use of the Society."

Good news comes from New Zealand, showing that God is blessing the work there. Our correspondent, writing from Auckland, says: "About the year 1881, when I was led to see it, I only knew nine or ten believing in it. Now they can be counted by hundreds, but they keep it very quiet."

ANDREW SIBBALD, Secretary.

Contributions to the Fund will be thankfully received and acknowledged by the Hon. Treasurer, Miss J. Lawrence, Rosslyn, Hampton-road, Upper Teddington, Middlesex; or by Mr. Andrew Sibbald, 3, Townshend-villas, Richmond, Surrey. Cheques may be crossed, "London and Provincial Bank, Teddington Branch."

ISRAEL'S SCRIPTURE AND PRAYER UNION.

WE have pleasure in announcing the encouraging number of eight new members since our last report, making a total of 1,471 members.

New members are requested, when writing for cards, to kindly state whether their names are to be entered as Mr., Mrs., or Miss, etc.

A new member writes:—"I have a silver badge, and most firmly believe in this most blessed revelation, and pray daily for the ark to be given back, when the world will believe. I am thankful to say I have brought several to see 'the light.' I gave away some BANNERS one day, in Westminster Abbey, when looking at the stone, to those standing staring at what they knew nothing about, and I pray God used them for His glory."

For the convenience of those members who wish to continue the daily reading, the following list of chapters for November is appended:—

1st ...	1 Thess.	ii.	11th ...	1 Tim.	iv.	21st ...	Philemon	i.
2nd...	,,	iii.	12th ...	,,	v.	22nd...	Hebrews	i.
3rd ...	,,	iv.	13th ...	,,	vi.	23rd ...	,,	ii.
4th ...	,,	v.	14th ...	2 Tim.	i.	24th ...	,,	iii.
5th ...	2 Thess.	i.	15th ...	,,	ii.	25th ...	,,	iv.
6th ...	,,	ii.	16th ...	,,	iii.	26th ...	,,	v.
7th ...	,,	iii.	17th ...	,,	iv.	27th ...	,,	vi.
8th ...	1 Tim.	i.	18th ...	Titus	i.	28th ...	,,	vii.
9th ...	,,	ii.	19th ...	,,	ii.	29th ...	,,	viii.
10th ...	,,	iii.	20th ...	,,	iii.	30th ...	,,	ix.

The card of membership will be sent on receipt of three stamps.

The first and second series of Monthly Comments on the whole Bible, by Philo-Israel, may now be obtained in volume form. Price, in paper cover, 1s. 2d. each; in cloth 2s. each, post free.

The "Prayers for Daily Use," being a prayer for each day of the week, by Philo-Israel, are 1d., or 9d. per doz., postage extra.

The prayer of the Union, as on the Card of Membership, may now be obtained printed in larger type, price 1d. for three copies, post free; or 1s. per 100 for distribution. Address—Miss E. Sibbald, 3, Townshend-villas, Richmond, Surrey.

Correspondence.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR PHILO-ISRAEL,—Nearly two years ago I sowed the seed of Our Identity with the Lost Ten Tribes in Peshawar. In my letter to you about that time I mentioned an old lady who had taken a long journey to carry the good news to her relations. She returned, and she got many to read the books I gave her. I send them the BANNER and any other literature I have to spare. Mr. R., a senior apothecary, is a true believer in the Identity of the British nation with the Lost, but now found, Ten Tribes of Israel. I had many rich times with him while at Peshawar, and our conversation, while in each other's company, was generally on the Identity question. He is a good reasoner and well-versed in the Bible, and the greater part of his arguments are based on that good old Book which has stood the enemies' fire, as well as their malice and hatred, in days long passed, and still stands the attacks of our opponents on Our Identity: for this good old Book carries with it a convincing power which none of our opponents can gainsay. It is the Book of God, and His power and convincing Spirit are in it. But our good brother is not only one who reads our literature and bases all his arguments on the Bible, God's blessed truth, but he also labours to make Our Identity known, not only in our society but amongst all he comes in contact with. He has lately been teaching some railway employés, as you will see from a letter I received the other day. I was glad to get such good news, and I at once supplied him with what literature I could, and gave him the information where he could obtain any kind of it wanted. I have often wished I was a rich man. I don't think that it is right so to do; but I do not want money to spend it on my ownself, but to purchase much of the Identity literature, and send it broadcast over all this country. I am often visited by soldiers who crave for our papers, begging me to give them more. Well, I give them all I can get. They are remarkably fond of the BANNER. If I were rich enough so to do, I would be glad to spend £100 a year on this great cause; but my income is only small, and I have but little to spare, and there are numerous calls on ministers out in this country you cannot well turn a deaf ear unto; but the good Lord has hitherto provided, and He will still provide. If I cannot do all I would, may it be said of me, as it was said of one of old, "She hath done what she could."

There are thousands of the British Army in India who are well acquainted with Our Identity, and many have been led to search the Bible, seeking out its truth. I would much like to see a good lecturer through India who could handle the subject well. I could ensure his having many hearers, and, I am convinced, many converts. But the time is fast approaching when Our Identity will be proclaimed upon the house-tops, and when it will be seen that we are the people whom the Lord hath blessed, the seed of Abraham, His friend. What nation is like ours? With all her faults, there is none that has such holy laws and uprightness and even-handed justice; but our nation would be far more blessed if she could but see who she is, and know that she is really the true seed of Jacob, to whom many glorious blessings have been promised. But God will do all things well, and in His own good time will open the eyes of our nation.

I had just given one of the BANNERS to a Roman Catholic, when his priest came up, and demanded to see the paper. He looked angrily at it, and I think he would have taken it away, but the man would not give it up. I was glad to see it; for these priests would, if they could, keep all their adherents in the dark; but they can't do it. There is too much sown broadcast of all kinds of literature, and men will read, and they are beginning to find out they cannot stop it without endangering their own cause. God grant that the true light may shine into their hearts, and lead them to liberty and freedom.

I remain, yours truly,
L. HILL, Wesleyan Chaplain.

Rawul Pindi, Sept. 6, 1888.

THE ANGLO-ISRAEL ALMANAC will be ready on December 1st, and will contain a Portrait of Surgeon-General J. M. Grant, M.D., together with articles by Miss V. M. Cox, Miss J. C. H. Mehl, Rev. R. Douglas, Rev. C. W. Hickson, J. G. Taylor, Esq., Philo-Israel, etc.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed: "Philo-Israel," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

SUBSCRIPTIONS. £ s. d.

Annual Subscription for one copy weekly (including the Twelve Double Numbers) post free 0 7 6
Two Copies (including Double Numbers) 0 13 6
Three Copies ,, ,, ,, ... 1 0 4
Four Copies ,, ,, ,, ... 1 5 6
Six Copies ,, ,, ,, ... 1 16 4

Post Office Orders to be made payable at the head office, St. Martin's-le-grand, London, to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C., or F. W. PARRY & Co., 29, Paternoster-row, London.

The Editor cannot undertake to return rejected MSS. unless stamps for the purpose be sent. Parties requiring an answer should enclose a stamp.

Contents Bills and Show Cards may be obtained on application to the Publishers.

Advertisements should be sent to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

Prepaid Advertisements are inserted at the rate of thirty words for 1s. 4d.

METROPOLITAN ANGLO-ISRAEL ASSOCIATION.

THE BIBLE READINGS

are held

EVERY TUESDAY AFTERNOON,

At 3.30, in the Library of the Association, 14, King William-street, Charing Cross, W.C. All friends are invited.

METROPOLITAN ANGLO-ISRAEL ASSOCIATION.

ON THURSDAY AFTERNOON NOV. 8, at 3.30 o'clock, a Lecture will be delivered in the ASSOCIATION ROOMS, 14, King William-street, Charing Cross, W.C., by Mr. THOMAS HOLLAND. Subject:—"Interior Secrets of the Great Pyramid."

JAMES BILLINGTON, Sec.

WORKS BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

The History of the House of Israel. How They Were Lost and How They Were Found. Told for the children. Price 6d., cloth 1s.; post free 7d. and 1s. 1d. Fifth edition.

Anglo-Israelism. True, Not False. Being Philo-Israel's Reply to the Rev. Canon Bell's pamphlet, "Anglo-Israelism: True or False?" Price 1d., 6s. 6d. per 100. 16 pages, crown 8vo.

An Elementary Digest or Sketch of the Chief Facts and Teachings of the Great Pyramid of Egypt. Adapted to the Unlearned and Unscientific 56 pages, Illustrated with Diagrams, price 4d., post free 5d. 10th Thousand.

Are the English People the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel? An Inquiry Establishing the Identity of the British Nation with the Lost Ten Tribes. 4d.

Our Identity with the House of Israel. Price 4d., Reprinted from "Clifton Chronicle Letters."

Our Identity: What it is Not; What it is; and Our Obligations To-day in Respect to it Being a Lecture recently delivered in London by Philo-Israel, and published by special request. Price 2d., a reduction for quantities.

Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

Cloth, gilt lettered, 5s. Sent post free for P.O.

FIFTY YEARS IN THE CHURCH OF ROME—Complete Revised Edition on good paper, well bound in Cloth, Gilt Lettered, nearly 600 pages. With New Portrait and Autograph of the Author. "No history like it since the time of Luther."—New York Witness. Be particular to order the Complete Edition published by Banks.

Price 6d. in paper covers; on toned paper, in cloth boards, gilt lettered, 1s.. post free for stamps.

PAPAL IDOLATRY. An Exposure of the Dogma of Transubstantiation and Mariolatry, to which is added "My Reasons Why I will Never Go Back to the Church of Rome." The Bible Christian Magazine says:—"Unanswerable! The most powerful argument against Transubstantiation, in the same space, that we have read."

R. BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

The Origin of Masonic Ritual & Tradition: A Lecture on the Three Degrees, by BRO. WM. ROWBOTTOM, P.M., with facsimile of a very rare Masonic engraving published in 1789.—Cloth, 2/6.

"Exquisitely clear and singularly correct in everything wherein I may be any authority or guide."—Professor PIAZZI SMYTH. "The Author seems to reason intelligently from his principles."—Literary Churchman.

London: R. Banks and Son, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C.; George Kenning, 16, Great Queen Street, W.C.

"A decidedly picturesque fairy-tale."—Spectator.

Eildon Grange: A Tale.

By ANDREW CLARK, M.A., Vicar of St. Michael's, Oxford. "Extremely readable."—Church Times. "Clever, graphic, and morally elevating."—Literary Churchman. "Of absorbing interest to boys."—Tablet. "Fresh and vigorous."—Church Bells. "The illustrations are very good and possess a distinct charm and piquancy."—Spectator.

Oxford: S. Rowbottom and Son; London: Hamilton, Adams and Co., 32, Paternoster Row, E.C.—Price 5s.

Just issued, price 2d., by post 2½d., 6 copies post free 1s.

SUPREMACY;

Or, The British Church versus The Church of Rome.

By E. M. RUSH ("A E I"),

Author of "The New Old Story," "Answer to the Eastern Question," etc.

London: Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street.

Published by

ROBERT BANKS AND SON,

Racquet-court, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

JEHOVAH TRIUMPHANT. The New and Complete Theology and Electric Light of the Bible, containing the History of British-Israel, Compiled from the Sacred Scriptures. Cloth gilt, price 10s. 6d., post free for Postal Order or Cheque.

THE GEOGRAPHY OF THE GATES. By PHILO-ISRAEL. With Map, and six full page, and one double-page, Illustrations, printed on plate paper. 208 pages, in handsome cloth, gilt. Price 3s. 6d.; post free.

THE WORD: THE WORLD: THE BRANCH. By J. LEYLAND FIELDEN, Esq. Price 12s., post free.

EPHRAIM-ENGLAND. The Nineteenth Century Revelation of the Fruits of History. By Rev. R. DOUGLAS, Vicar of Kidsgrove. Cloth gilt, lettered, 4s., gilt edges 5s., free by post.

FIFTY REASONS WHY THE ANGLO-SAXONS ARE ISRAELITES of the Lost Tribes of the House of Israel. By Rev. W. H. POOLE, D.D. Price 6d., post free 7d.

BIBLE LESSONS AND REFLECTIONS. By the late ROBERT GAIRDNER, of Kilmarnock, N.B. Price 2s. 6d., by post 2s. 9d.; cheap edition, limp cloth, 1s., by post, 1s. 2d.

Catalogue post free on application.

THE MONTHLY PART OF

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL

FOR NOVEMBER.

Now ready, price 7d., by post 8½d. The Monthly Part is particularly useful for sending abroad, and for Libraries.

Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

LUNG TONIC SAVE YOUR LIVES BY TAKING TONIC
LUNG TONIC OWBRIDGE'S TONIC
LUNG TONIC LUNG TONIC TONIC
LUNG TONIC THE MIGHTY HEALER. TONIC
LUNG TONIC It has a power over disease hitherto TONIC
LUNG TONIC unknown in Medicine. TONIC
LUNG TONIC Are you at all Weak-chested or in- TONIC
LUNG TONIC clined to be Consumptive, with just a TONIC
LUNG TONIC touch of Cough now and then? TONIC
LUNG TONIC "Try this Wonderful Medicine." The TONIC
LUNG TONIC Cough and Weakness will disappear as TONIC
LUNG TONIC if by magic, and you will feel a strength TONIC
LUNG TONIC and power you never had before. TONIC
LUNG TONIC HAVE YOU A COUGH? TONIC
LUNG TONIC A DOSE WILL RELIEVE IT! TONIC
LUNG TONIC HAVE YOU A COLD? TONIC
LUNG TONIC A DOSE AT BEDTIME WILL TONIC
LUNG TONIC REMOVE IT. TONIC
LUNG TONIC Bronchitis & Asthma it relieves instantly TONIC
LUNG TONIC The Spasms of Coughing so dreadful in TONIC
LUNG TONIC Whooping Cough become less with each TONIC
LUNG TONIC dose of the medicine. TONIC
LUNG TONIC TONIC
LUNG TONIC Prepared by W. T. OWBRIDGE Chemist, Hull TONIC
LUNG TONIC Sold in Bottles 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d. TONIC
LUNG TONIC and 11s. by all Chemists and Patent TONIC
LUNG TONIC Medicine Vendors. Wholesale all London TONIC
LUNG TONIC and Provincial Houses. TONIC

PIANOFORTES, Harmoniums, American Organs. Why buy at shops inferior made instruments, and pay large profits, when you can buy direct from the Maker High-class Instruments, and save 50 per cent. by so doing? Full value allowed for old Instruments in exchange as part payment. Write for Price Lists and Testimonials to A. G. LINSTEAD, Cobden Pianoforte Company, 5, Eversholt-street, Camden Town, London. Established 1874.

HUMAN LIFE.—FIFTY YEARS' Record of Facts, Principles, and Discoveries (just published complete) Relating to the Improvement and Preservation of Human Life on Earth. Origin and true treatment of diseases. A series of articles by DR. SAMUEL BIRLEY, M.D., Ph.D. Book form, 50 pages. SENT FREE to every applicant by the publishers, GORDON B. MURRAY & CO., 50, Theobald's-road, Holborn, E.C. Write to-day.

Warmth & Comfort for the Winter

WALTER KEAST, 102, Kennington Park Road, London, S.E., is sending daily to all parts of the United Kingdom his

CELEBRATED CYPRUS SLIPPERS

These Slippers are of superior finish, lined all through with Red Flannel and give universal satisfaction.

Delivered free by Parcels Post.

Ladies' 1/6, Gents' 1/9.

Send No. of size, or paper length required.

NORWEGIAN SLIPPERS, an inferior make of above, sent post free.

Childrens' 6d., Ladies' 9d., Gents' 1s.

Just Published, price 1d., 6 copies post free for Six stamps, 6/6 per 100, carriage paid.

FACTS AND PROBABILITIES

Respecting the Identity of the British and American Nations with the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel.

Compiled by DELTA.

R. BANKS & SON, RACQUET-COURT, FLEET-ST.

SOUND, PURE, WHITE TEETH!

Those who value these will try

CARBOLINE

(The Great Sanitary Tooth Paste).

1/6 & 2/6 per Pot.

Through Chemists, or post free from the Makers,

GEORGE & WELCH

WORCESTER.

Lancet writes:—"To save the teeth use a good carbolic daily."

CHEAP WINTER DRESSES

WE will send a FULL-DRESS LENGTH of BEAUTIFUL CLOTH (for Good, Strong Serviceable wear), in any of the following colours, Carriage paid to any address for 10s. 6d. Colours:—Black, Blue, Fawn, Salmon, Reseda, Slate, Ruby, Brown, Grey, Claret, Sage, Old Rose, Terra-Cotta, Amber, Peacock, Tabac, Bronze, Myrtle, Drab, Olive, Grenat, Clay Green, Navy, Partridge, Heather, &c., &c. These wonderful Dress Lengths have gained a world-wide reputation for magnificence, cheapness and durability, having no equal.

The Lady's Pictorial says:—"They are excellent quality and very good value for the money."

Thousands of Testimonials from all parts of the world.

Ladies should write at once for Patterns, which may be had free, and need not be returned.

AN AMAZING OFFER!!—We shall give a very handsome Brocaded Silk Handkerchief with each dress-length ordered from us during this season. Write for patterns. LUTUS B LEATHLEY, Armley, Leeds.

Certain HARNESS' Cure.

ELECTROPATHIC BELT

FOR

RHEUMATISM

Major PAKENHAM, Longstone House, Armagh, writes:—"The Electropathic Belt has completely cured me of rheumatic gout. I suffered intense agony for two years. I now feel strong and active."

Guaranteed to generate a mild continuous current of Electricity, which speedily cures all Disorders of the Nerves, Stomach, Liver and Kidneys. Thousands of Testimonials. Pamphlet & Advice free on application to Mr. C. B. Harness, Consulting Electrician, the Medical Battery Co. Ltd.

Only Address,

52, OXFORD ST., LONDON, W. (Corner of Rathbone Place.)

Call to-day, if possible, or write at once

Printed and Published for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-st., London, E.C.; F. W. PARRY (late GUEST & CO.), 29, Paternoster-row. WEDNESDAY, NOV. 7, 1888. [All rights reserved.

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."

(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India.)

"And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the Forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS of the EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. XII., No. 620. Entered at Stationers' Hall.] WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 14, 1838. [PRICE ONE PENNY.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
Expansion in the South Pacific	453
The Jewish Quarterly Review on the Ten Tribes	454
The Fatal Marble Stone	455
The Sabbath Sign. By J. Thomson	455
The British Empire and Contemporary Powers. By R. N. Adams, of New Zealand. Part I.	456
Jerusalem Germanised	457
The Universal Language	458
Review	459
Correspondence	459

EXPANSION IN THE SOUTH PACIFIC.

ON the 2nd of October, 1888, the British Government annexed to the Empire a small group of South Pacific Islands, of no great value in themselves, but important to the Empire, because they lie in the direct line between New Zealand, Panama, and Vancouver. We have always maintained that we required repeating stations and minor ocean Gates in the mighty stretch of sea which separates Esquimault in Vancouver from the New Zealand Colonies. The group of Islands which have just been added to the Empire lie to the North-east of the Kermadec group (which are North-east again of New Zealand), and are called the Cook or Hervey Islands. The chief of them is Rarotonga, a famous British missionary station, where the native converts are trained for missionary work and sent to labour throughout the Pacific. To the North-east again of the Hervey group are the three small but strategic islands lately added to the Queen's dominions, namely Perhyn, Christmas, and Fanning, as we noticed on p. 313 of the present year's BANNER. With considerable foresight therefore the government is making good our naval deficiencies in the Pacific, and providing coaling stations and telegraphic repeating posts, which though hardly likely to amount to the dignity of "Gates," are nevertheless valuable additions to a Pacific Empire of Israel, enormous already, but likely to be very much larger ere long. There appeared in the Times of October 3rd, a very clear, short, but satisfactory description of these newly acquired islands, which we transfer to the BANNER, because the information is important to our case, and affords an additional piece of evidence in proof of British identity with Israel. The facts show how incessant the modern expansion of Israel is, and how manifestly there is design in the additions to the empire which God is giving us in the Pacific ocean. The plain object clearly is to strengthen our naval Power and to protect those islands where missionary triumphs for Christ have been most decided. The writer in the Times thus described our new acquisitions:—

NEW BRITISH ANNEXATION IN THE PACIFIC.

The announcement in the Times of yesterday that Rarotonga and the rest of the Hervey group of Pacific islands are to be taken under British protection is one that must be gratifying not only to the Australians but to all who have at heart our interests in that part of the world. In a recent article in the Times it was pointed out that no nation had a greater claim on these islands than England; they were discovered by Cook and were the scene of some of the greatest missionary triumphs of John Williams. The proper designation of the group is Cook's Islands, the term Hervey having been applied by Williams long after their discovery. A glance at the chart will show the importance of the group, as far as position is concerned. The Cook Islands lie immediately to the south-west of the Society Islands, where French influence prevails, and to the south-east of Samoa, where Germany is striving hard to obtain the mastery. They are separated from Fiji on the west by Tonga, which might with advantage be brought within the sphere of British protection. There are only about nine or ten islands in the group, with a population probably not exceeding 8,000. Many of the natives go over to Tahiti as labourers, returning with considerable savings and improved habits. Rarotonga, the largest in the group, is one of the most beautiful islands in the Pacific. The island itself is of volcanic origin, a mass of mountains rising to a height of about 3,000 feet. It is about 30 miles in circumference, and surrounded by a coral reef. The reef has a few openings which afford harbours for small vessels, without shelter, although there are several good boat harbours. As a naval station, therefore, it cannot be held to be of any great value. The principal village, Avarua, is to the north, and vessels of 100 tons can enter its harbour and moor to the reef. Coffee, cotton, arrowroot, and cocoanut oil are the chief products, while pigs, turkeys, fowls, yams, sweet potatoes, and pineapples are also produced. The people are not industrious, and the trade is of no great value. To the south-east of Rarotonga is Mangaia, about the same size, but not nearly so lofty. The population is also about the same, and, like that of Rarotonga, is Christian. The island is unprotected by a reef, and landing can be effected only in canoes. Atiu, the Wateeo of Cook, who describes at great length his friendly reception by the natives, lies to the north-east of Rarotonga, and is about 20 miles in circumference, with about 1,000 inhabitants. The Hervey Islands proper lie to the north of Atiu, the largest being Artutaki, discovered by Captain Bligh in the Bounty a few days before the mutiny. It is about 18 miles in circuit, extremely fertile, with a hill rising to 450 feet. Boats can enter the reef off the mission settlement on the north-west, but there is no anchorage. There is a population of about 1,500. There are a few other reefs and islets belonging to the group, but, so far as is ascertained there is no anchorage for large vessels. A closer examination of the group may lead to the discovery of a harbour that might be of service in a future trade route between the Panama Canal and our Australasian possessions. The islands are the centre of great English missionary enterprise; natives are trained there and sent to all parts of the Pacific and New Guinea. Facilities for such enterprises are more likely to be obtained under English than under any other rule. No doubt, also, the oil and other industries for which the islands are adapted will be considerably developed.

Digitized by Google

It is satisfactory to learn that our recent Pacific annexations have been made without war and bloodshed. The Hervey group of Islands were really ours by right of their conversion to Christ through the instrumentality of British missionaries. French and German adventurers were ready to appropriate the Islands because they had not yet been formally taken into the British Empire by overt act of the Government. This has now been done, and no doubt will lead to the annexation of Tonga and other islands, which we cannot allow to lapse to possibly future enemies of the rising might of the Australasian Britain so grandly developing on the Island Continent hard by. When the population of Australia, New Zealand, and Tasmania reaches 30 to 50 millions there can be no doubt that the other European nations, who have seized small points of vantage in the Pacific in view to annoy the British race and retard its growth and commerce, will have to yield their possessions to the true "heir of the world," Israel of the House of Joseph! Then it will be found that the Pacific Ocean is too small for any but the one dominant British race, to which God has given the earth because they are Israel, His chosen. With reference to British-Israel's Home the regions of the Pacific are clearly "the uttermost parts of the earth." Those very parts were to be in Israel's occupation, for the Lord declared in Psa. cxi. 6, R.V., that "He showeth His people the power of His works in giving them the heritage of the nations." They are given by the God of Israel first to His beloved Son (Psa. ii. 8, R.V.), and then as we see to His people. With His last words on earth the Lord Jesus Christ pointed to these "uttermost parts of the earth," for He said (Acts i. 8, R.V.), that His disciples were to be His witnesses "unto the uttermost part of the earth," and immediately after saying those words, He was "taken up" (v. 9). "The uttermost part of the earth," and especially the Pacific Ocean and its territory must be Israel's, and there they must witness to Him and see of the triumphs of His cross. We are glad that Rarotonga and the Hervey Islands are now safe under Israel's wings, and we praise the Lord for this new favour He has shown to us, His people!

THE "JEWISH QUARTERLY REVIEW" ON THE TEN TRIBES.

A NEW "Quarterly Review" devoted to the illustration of Jewish Literature, Theology, History, and Religion, and adapted to the general English reader, has just been issued under the editorship of I. Abrahams and C. G. Montifiore (price three shillings a number, or ten shillings annually post free); the publishers being D. Nutt, 270, Strand, London, W.C. We notice this very promising work because at p. 14 of its first number we have the commencement of a series of papers by that ripe Hebrew scholar, Dr. Ab. Neubauer, on the subject so deeply interesting to readers of the BANNER, "Where are the Ten Tribes?"

We recommend this series of papers to the attention of the Clergy of the Church of England, to the ministers of the non-conforming bodies, and to our scientific and other opponents. Dr. Neubauer settles some questions without a word of explanation, regarding them no doubt as palpable truisms which do not require investigation. His very theme, "Where are the Ten Tribes?" implies that he believes the Ten Tribes are existing somewhere, and that it only remains to find out "where" they are! Many of our opponents tell us there are "no Ten Tribes at all;" "that they are united now with the Jews," "that they have been absorbed by the Gentile nations among whom they were once scattered." Dr. Neubauer brushes all these contradictory fallacies aside, and commences in the first chapter of his inquiry to search the Bible, the Talmud, and Midrashic literature for traces of the people in whom we ourselves are so deeply interested. Our author believes, though he does not seem very sure about it, that the Assyrians did not carry away the Ten-Tribed nation in its entirety, as that would not have been an easy task for even such a military power as Assyria, but he thinks the latter "carried away the influential part of Israel just as the Babylonian king did later on the occasion of the conquest of Judah." If so, he adds, the humbler classes of the Ten Tribes remained in Palestine under the supervision of the transplanted tribes from Babylon, Cutha, Ava, Hamath, and Sepharvaim, with whom they gradually became amalgamated.

The Doctor next makes a statement which disposes of a good number of our other assailants, and we beg them to note that a man of Dr. Neubauer's learning does not condescend to argue the point whether or not the Ten Tribes returned with the Babylonian Jews. He lays it down at once that they never did, since there is no mention of the fact "in the documents at our disposal." This is what he writes on the subject (p. 15):—"The captives of Israel exiled beyond the Euphrates did not return as a whole to Palestine with their brethren the captives of Judah; at least there is no mention made of this event in the documents at our disposal." Ezra and Nehemiah give the enumeration only of "the children of the province of Judah, that went up out of the captivity of those which had been carried away, whom Nebuchadnezzar the king of Babylon had carried away unto Babylon, and came again unto Jerusalem, and Judah, every one unto his city." "We have seen that the author of Chronicles, a contemporary of Ezra, says that the captives of Israel are 'up to this day' in the lands of their transportation. Such was also the tradition in the time of Josephus, who wrote after the destruction of the second temple. He says, in speaking of the letters of Artaxerxes to Ezra granting permission to the Jews to return to Jerusalem, 'So he (Ezra) read the epistle at Babylon to those Jews that were there,' &c. Wherefore there are but Two Tribes in Asia and Europe subject to the Romans, while the Ten Tribes are beyond Euphrates till now, and are an immense multitude, and not to be estimated by numbers" (Joseph. Antiq. xi. v. 2). Quoting Isa. xi. 11, our author wrote, "In fact, the return of the Ten Tribes was one of the great promises of the prophets, and the advent of the Messiah is therefore necessarily identified with the epoch of their redemption.

Dr. Neubauer quotes the Apocrypha, the New Testament, the Talmud and other writings, to prove that the hope of the return of the Ten Tribes has never ceased amongst the Jews in exile, and this hope has been connected with every Messianic rising. The learned doctor then discusses certain questions relating to the settlements of the Jews in Europe—viz., in Italy, Rome, Spain, France, Germany; in Africa, that is, in Egypt, Libya, Tunis, Morocco; and incidentally mentions traditions of the existence of the Ten Tribes in various places among Jews. Throughout, however, the idea is always firmly grasped, that the Ten Tribes, at present, exist somewhere outside Palestine; that they have been supposed to be in various specified localities, but that scanty grounds exist for these conjectures, and that they are not mingled to-day with the Jews.

MESSRS. NELSON AND SON'S of Paternoster Row have just issued a beautiful illustrated volume, entitled, "Through Samaria to Galilee and the Jordan." The Author is Dr. J. L. Porter, of Queen's College, Belfast. It would form a most handsome Christmas or New Year's present. The price is 10s. 6d.

Digitized by Google

"THE FATAL MARBLE STONE."

A COPY of the Sun Newspaper, price sixpence, dated June 28, 1838 (Thursday evening), printed and published on the date of the coronation of Her Majesty Queen Victoria, has been obligingly forwarded to us by Mr. F. S. Gandy, Hon. Sec. of the Manchester and Salford British-Israel and Biblical Evidence Association. We take from this curious paper an account of the Coronation Chair and stone, called by the writer fifty years ago "the fatal marble stone," commonly called (he adds), "Jacob's Stone!" In those early days, before Mr. E. Hine was known, before even Mr. J. Wilson had published his works regarding Our Israelitish Origin, the Coronation Stone was commonly called "Jacob's Stone." It is even declared as boldly as any Anglo-Israelite would do to-day, that "history relates it is the stone whereon the Patriarch Jacob laid his head in the plain of Luz." The Sun, of course, knew nothing of Our Identity, nor of the fitness of things which brings the Stone of Jacob to Israel's capital, and to the most important Abbey in the land as its final resting-place to become the foundation of the British throne and Empire. His quoted account, however, is remarkable, and as such we present it to our friends. It was as follows:—

THE CORONATION.

Mr. Thompson, in his work on the "The Procession and Ceremonies observed in the coronation of the Kings and Queens of England," gives the following account of KING EDWARD'S CHAIR.

"This chair (commonly called St. Edward's chair) is an ancient seat of solid, hard wood, with back and sides of the same, variously painted, in which the kings of Scotland were in former periods constantly crowned; but, having been brought out of the kingdom by King Edward I., in the year 1296, after he had totally overcome John Baliol, king of Scots, it has ever since remained in the abbey of Westminster, and has been the royal chair in which the succeeding kings and queens of this realm have been inaugurated. It is in height 6 ft. 7 in., in breadth at the bottom 38 in., and in depth 24 in.: from the seat to the bottom is 25 in.; the breadth of the seat within the sides is 28 inches, and the depth 18 in. At 9 inches from the ground is a board, supported at the four corners by as many lions. Between the seat and this board is enclosed a stone, commonly called Jacob's, or the Fatal Marble Stone, which is an oblong, of about 22 in. in length, 13 in. broad, and 11 in. deep; of a steel colour, mixed with some veins of red. History relates that it is the stone whereon the patriarch Jacob laid his head in the plain of Luz. It is also added that it was brought to Brigantia, in the kingdom of Gallicia in Spain, in which place Gathol, king of Scots, sat on it as his throne. Thence it was conveyed into Ireland by Simon Brach, who was king of Scots, about 700 years before Christ's time; from thence into Scotland by king Fergus, about 370 years afterwards; and in the year 850, it was placed in the abbey of Scone, in the sheriffdom of Perth, by King Kenneth, who caused it to be enclosed in this wooden chair, and a prophetical verse to be engraved, of which the following is a translation:—

"Should fate not fail, where'er this stone is found
The Scots shall monarch of that realm be crown'd."

This is the more remarkable by its having been fulfilled in the person of King James I., grandfather to the Princess Sophia, electress dowager of Hanover, grandmother to King George II., who was grandfather to his late Majesty, King George III. This antique regal chair, having (together with the golden sceptre and crown of Scotland) been solemnly offered by King Edward I. to St. Edward the Confessor, in the year 1297 (from whence it derives the appellation of St. Edward's chair), has ever since been kept in the chapel called by his name; with a tablet affixed to it, whereon several Latin verses are written, in the old English character. The ornaments of this chair consist of crockets and fret-work, richly gilt. It has a cushion, covered with the same materials. The stone maintains its usual place under the seat of the chair, but is hid from observation by the fringe which surrounds it.

THE SABBATH SIGN.

By J. THOMSON.

"YE shall keep My Sabbaths;" "Ye shall keep the Sabbath. It is a sign between Me and the children of Israel for ever" (Lev. xxvi. 3; Ex. xxxi. 13—17). Such are the explicit words of Jehovah to His chosen people in the days of Moses. It cannot be supposed that this being the determination of the Almighty, He should be so overmatched by Satan and sinful men that He would be unable to bring it about. No; omnipotence is His attribute, and He will make even evil agents contribute to working out His plans. This sign of the Sabbath, or day of rest, is to be ever a national characteristic of His chosen people, and one which markedly distinguishes them from other nations not so blest as they. The nations most distinguished in this respect are the Jews and the English-speaking race. The strict observance of their Sabbath by the former is well known; while notwithstanding much (and perhaps a growing) laxity, some decent observance of Sunday is peculiar to the latter, even by those who do not profess to have much personal religion.

This trait seems implanted in the Anglo-Saxon race, and is frequently seen very clearly when the opportunity of religiously observing the day is difficult, and its violation temptingly easy. Thus we have not seldom heard of emigrants to the "Far West" expressing great regret at the loss of their Sundays as days of religious observance, while, at the same time they have intuitively, if not reverently, always, abstained from following their usual daily labour, or engaging in pastime recreation. On the continent Englishmen have often been scandalized by the way they have seen the Lord's-day desecrated; even those who, when at home, do not consider themselves so "strait-laced" as many of their neighbours, have testified to our superiority in this respect, and expressed their decided preference for the English manner of observing Sunday.

It is very much to be desired that English residents abroad would always (even more than they at present do) scrupulously respect the sanctity of the "day of days." By so doing they would not only cultivate religion in themselves, but protest against the continental mode of spending the sacred day, and also testify to our national characteristic as a decided contrast to that of the foreigners.

An incident illustrative of the above remarks recently occurred in Paris. A Mr. W. Knighton, an Australian gentleman residing in France, presented the city with a statue of Shakespeare. Our authority writes, "Unfortunately the inauguration took place on Sunday (Oct. 14, 1888), and as a result, there were very few of the English colony present. Lord Lytton declined a pressing invitation to take part in the ceremony on this ground, and many others followed his example."*

We trust that so good an example from our ambassador in Paris, will be followed by English residents on the continent on all occasions, and that we shall hear no more of our countrymen, (some high in position) being present at reviews, fêtes, or any sights calculated to desecrate God's holy day, and destroy the good influence its proper observance has upon both individual life and national character.

From this we may also see that the French cannot be Israel, in that they have not the Sabbath sign, and are as a people fast dying out, as undeniable statistics show; whilst Israel, on the contrary, was to "multiply" (Gen. xxii. 17), "increase" (Zech. x. 8), and "fill the face of the world with fruit" (Isa. xxvii. 6), as a people whom God has "formed for Himself," to "shew forth" His praise (Isa. xliii. 1, 7, 21; xliv. 2, 21, 24).

* See the "Record" for Friday, Oct. 19, 1888, page 1,030.

Digitized by Google

THE BRITISH EMPIRE AND CONTEMPORARY POWERS.

By R. N. Adams, of New Zealand.

PART I.

To sketch the origin and history of this nation, giving an outline of its increase in population, its growth in wealth, its advance in power, and the development of its resources, would occupy a longer space of time than this essay contemplates, seeing that the purpose in view is more particularly to produce a comparison of the position of the Great Powers of Europe with the power of Britain. Britain's struggle for her present position has been a prolonged series of resolute conflicts with those who were her contemporaries in the race for dominion. Nor has she gained her present place of honour and influence by the destruction of her neighbours, as was the policy of Rome, and all previous nations that stood in the van during their age. Britain has not grown up on the ashes of those whom her armies have conquered, but rather by the side of those who have contended with her for the prize. The race has been honourably won, and to-day we see all who have been engaged in it, whose plans have not been prostituted by base motives, in a condition far in advance of the starting post. But Britain having the most robust constitution, as well as the most energetic and persevering nature, gained the lead, and nobly maintains it in every phase or department of what may be truly called "national activity."

The one most conspicuous characteristic of our nation is the fact that it is not cast in a mould after the fashion of any great mind who, as a statesman or a warrior, devised, propounded, and enforced his scheme. The empire is not modelled on any artificial plan, but upon a principal which has been the natural outcome of the temperament inherent in the people. One event after another has transpired which has by degrees,, as circumstances arose, moulded the form of her basis of empire in conformity with the genius of the nation, while throughout all, the one fundamental principle, laid with the most thoroughly solemn and truly august ceremony by the men of England, when at Runnymede they forced their unwilling king to grant, with the attachment of his signature, the noble demand they made at his hands. This was one of the earliest and certainly most notable deeds which showed of what stuff the barons and commons of our rising nation were made. In this they asserted the principle of empire, which their sons have seen it wise to maintain and develop in every decade since their day.

By this step the men of England declared themselves men and not the mere tools of an autocratic and despotic sovereign. They affirmed the principle that they and not the king were the seat of power. They recognised clearly and fully his constitutional authority, while they as decidedly refused to forego their own rights. They owned the king as the head and ruler, but only a ruler within the laws authorised and recognised by himself and the people conjointly. In this, therefore, lay the foundation of Empire. Individually each man was his own empire; collectively, they were all one empire under their king and their laws. By this the true rights of monarchy were duly established, while the independence and freedom of the individuals were left in undisturbed liberty.

But the King's signature to "Magna Charta" did not at once and finally secure to the people the concessions which it embodied. Successive kings waged war with them, and many severe struggles ensued ere the matter was set at rest. But the broad, firm foundation, having been established as the natural birthright of the nation, the end at last came; and the spirit which showed such courage and heroic determination in the presence of King John, after many disappointments came victorious from the contest, and our eyes are to-day gladdened by the sight of a free people and a happy sovereign, such as no other form of constitution among the nations can present.

But still Britain has her weak points, even her corrupt parts. She is far from perfection, but there is this encouragement that her leaders were watching the errors, have their eyes carefully fixed on many of them, and they are yearly devising means for the improvement of every condition of things where they see the wheels of progress to be out of order. The progress which has been made in matters during the last century supplies abundant evidence of this fact. What was the condition of the labouring classes 100 years ago? They were little better than serfs in the eyes of the law. They had no voice in the government of the country, in fact, even the yeomanry were so thoroughly under the power of the aristocracy that they dare not act contrary to the wishes of their masters. There was then no such security in elections as that provided by the ballot, which shelters us from the inquisitive scrutiny of our richer neighbours, and even when the method of choosing members of parliament became more properly secured from public scrutiny, the system of bribery was so largely resorted to that it almost became the business of a candidate for parliamentary honours to offer a certain sum for the privilege of securing the seat for a particular electoral district. As much as £180,000 has been paid in one instance, and £60,000 in another. It can easily be understood that men sent to frame the country's laws through such a system as this must have had more desire for their personal ends than for the good of their constituents. Nor will any be surprised to find that these men so bore down the wage-earning classes as to make them almost mere machines in the hands of those who gave them employment. No matter how skilful a workman might be he was not allowed to accept a higher wage than that allowed by a commission which was appointed for the purpose of yearly fixing the amount of money each man was to receive in his special line of work. The man who dared to take more was under the penalty of a fine, as well as the employer who would dare to pay it. All such errors as these are now passed away so far as the law of the country is concerned, and every man can sell his honest labour at whatever price he can get for it. Every man can now record his vote without fear or danger of being questioned about it, and many other such like social and political matters have been improved in a similarly philosophical manner. The result of this is seen on every hand as the most wondrous advancement of a nation the world has ever witnessed.

The history of the struggle between the working men of the nation and the rich owners of the soil is one of the most thrilling interest, as we see in it the true spirit of England's manly sons of toil rebelling against the indignity so long and so unjustly cast upon them. Gradually, but surely, we observe their strong backs straightening, and their sweaty brows rising from the constant serfdom and mechanical drudgery—until now they are reckoned in the eyes of the law as men equal in importance to lords and princes. Occupation and birth has ceased to count in the matter of good and true subjects of the sovereign. But this is a result won by the perseverance and unyielding determination of those who have forced their claims of manhood upon a reluctant governing class; most of all through the power and light of a clearly taught and faithfully expounded Christianity, together with the national possession of a free and open Bible. This grand old book has had more influence in moulding the social and political condition of our people than most of us are generally prepared to admit. It has been a mighty leaven, so to speak, acting upon the meal by which it lay concealed. Well might our Queen, when asked by the foreign prince what was the secret of England's greatness, point to the wondrous volume, and say, "The secret lies there." Since it became the common property of all members of the nation, since the ban on the Bible became removed, we have made steady progress, and have been permitted to lead the other nations in much that is good and godly, and while it remains the same honoured and treasured book in our homes, we shall ever continue to pursue the mission upon which we have set out.

Digitized by Google

The change in our national status became plain in about the middle of the sixteenth century. And from that time we have not ceased to give evidence of our position, and to enforce our influence on all around. In the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries we asserted our dominion of the seas, and our superior skill and courage on the battle-field—a series of engagements unparalleled in history; and where in the early part of the present century we succeeded in securing peace from those who on the Continent had for ages threatened our national existence; attention became more concentrated in home affairs. England's heroes are from that date no longer confined to the fields of carnage and scenes of diplomacy and politics. As if by a foretaste of that time when men shall beat their spears into ploughshares and their swords into pruning hooks, the genius of the nation seems to have turned towards the arts of peace, for at this time we find the inventive powers to have had their attention drawn to such things as would facilitate artificial production and manufacture. In the end of the eighteenth century we find an Arkright laying the foundation of spinning cotton by machinery driven by water; a Watt constructing an engine to be driven by steam; a Cartwright discovering the method of weaving by steam. Then in the early decades of this century we discover the invention of Macadam, giving to the country turnpike roads available for traffic in all seasons of the year, which in itself was an immense facility to the march of progress. On this followed in a few years the connection of important cities by railways, and other useful inventions succeeded with most remarkable rapidity, which although it would be intensely interesting to follow, are too numerous and diverse for our present purpose. Our more modern heroes who have taken the place of those of the previous century are they who are heroes in the struggles of commerce and the truly advancing arts of peace; yet it must not be supposed that with our attention directed to the advancement of things of every-day life—a course which has earned for us the term a "nation of shopkeepers"—we have neglected the arts and science of war. We still claim that our men are unequalled either upon the field or on the ocean wave. We still produce heroes of war as well as heroes of peace.

The rate at which the trade of Britain has increased during the last two centuries is almost incredible. The bare facts require some effort of the imagination to catch their magnitude and their significance. In the year 1700, for instance, the amount of shipping in tonnage entering and clearing at the various ports of the United Kingdom was about 30,000 tons; in 1800 the same register shows a tonnage of 175,000 tons, almost six times the amount of 100 years before. But note particularly the stride made during the next 40 years. In 1840 the imports and exports had risen to the enormous figure of 9,500,000 tons. But still more surprising is the record of the 40 years which succeeded that, for in the year 1880 the returns of the same class gave a record of 58,736,000 tons, thus giving an increase of over 58½ millions of tons in 80 years. As showing the gradual and regular state of improvement in this trade it may be pointed out that in 1872 the value of imports and exports was £669,284,458, while in 1881 the total was £694,105,264, thus giving a clear increase of trade amounting to over 23½ millions in nine years. Doubtless we are a nation of shopkeepers or merchants, but our shopkeeping has a world-wide sphere of operation, and we seem well able to conduct our enormous business with profit and advantage. If we doubt the trustworthiness of these returns of trade as shown by imports and exports, we may test their correctness by various other means.

First, by the wealth of the country, as shown by the amount on which the income tax is chargeable. On this basis we find the wealth of the nation in 1870 was 445 millions sterling, while in 1880 it had increased to 578 millions—just an addition to the material wealth of the people of the respectable little sum of 133 millions in the space of 10 years, or an average of 13 millions per annum. It seems that there must be a profitable business going on somewhere in Britain to produce such a balance sheet.

Then, it can be shewn that this increase is not confined to the already wealthy classes, but is shared in largely by the less opulent, even by the working part of the population, whose savings are measured by the pulse-beats of the savings banks. In 1870 the amount of money in these institutions was 43 millions, but in 1880 it totalled a sum of 78 millions—showing that at least 35 millions of this increased sum of wealth had gone to the fingers of the humbler members of the community.

Further it is shown that the condition of the very poorest of the land was affected by this increase of wealth, as the pauper returns for 1870 show that there was then a pauper population in England and Wales receiving charitable relief numbering 1,079,000, but in 1880 there were only 837,000—showing a decrease at the rate of 25,000 a year for the decade.

There is no means of comparing this state of things in our nation with similar calculations for other nations. We might produce a contrast, but no comparison. Germany comes nearest to Britain in the matter of European export, and this is how the figures stand:—In 1880 Germany exported 330 million pound's worth of goods, while in the same year Britain exported 650 million's worth; so that we almost double the business of the nation which stands next to us in the catalogue of exporting and general trading people. The rate of our increase of trade is 10 per cent. above that of our neigbours of America, one of whose writers has recently said in the colums of the "Mining Record" of New York: "England is unquestionably the greatest commercial nation on the globe. England is the Maëlstrom which swallows up the commerce of the world." The same writer makes the following contrast: "In 1859 the foreign commerce of Great Britain amounted to 1,662,000,000 dols; in 1879 it amounted to 3,000,000,000 dols. In 1859 the commerce of the United States of America amounted to 695,000,000 dols.; in 1879 to 1,222,000,000 dols.—Great Britain's increase being at the rate of 85 per cent., the United States of America's rate being 75 per cent." Another comparison may be given as showing the standard of British trade. In 1859 the commerce of the United States of America was equal to £4 19s. per head per annum; in 1880 it was £5 12s. 6d. The British in 1859 was £12 12s. per head, and in 1880 it was £19 16s. per head.

Now these are contrasts and comparisons of an astounding character. In the march of trade and the accumulation of material wealth the old nation in the little Northern Isles is leading the van, and even still energetically outrunning our smart brothers of the new and noble Continent of the West.

(To be continued.)

JERUSALEM "GERMANISED."

A FRIEND sends us the following extract from a West of England Paper as something that makes against "Our Identity with the Ten Tribes," and solicits for the statement some answer from the BANNER. The words are these:—

When the hopes of the pious are fulfilled, and the children of Israel return to Jerusalem, some little difficulty is likely to arise through the colonisation of that land of reverent romance by the Germans. They are cutting out everybody else there. They have invaded the Holy Land as the Goths of old did the lands of Southern Europe. There they settle and there they stay. They are teaching the people better manufacturing habits and a love of German wares. The trade of Jerusalem is now done largely, and is likely to be done almost exclusively with Germany. The new war lord will presently have a much deeper and more intimate interest in Palestine than ever was rightly possessed by the French, who regard Syria as their future possession. Jerusalem is being Germanised. That fact may perhaps cause the curious investigators, who have discovered the Lost Ten Tribes in the English people, to reconsider their position, and to look to the Germans for the marks of this distinguished origin. In any case the Germanisation of Palestine is one of the most interesting movements of this generation, and our Consul at Jerusalem thinks it worth while to call Lord Salisbury's special attention to the fact.

Digitized by Google

The facts, if such they are, and the conclusions the writer draws from them, will be satisfactory to those who believe in the Gothic or Teutonic Theory. If the Germans are occupying and settling in the Holy Land and Germanising it, then of course the Germans must be a part of the Ten Tribes, and we ought to see in them the marks of the chosen people. Have they even one of them? If they be Israel their occupation of the Holy Land ought to be carried out in friendly companionship with the Jews. But they hate the Jews, and drive them out of their German Fatherland. The House of Judah has not walked to Germany and then in company with the German House of Israel gone together to the land of their inheritance according to the prophecies. The plain inference therefore is that the Germans are not the House of Israel, or anything to do with Israel. Their dealings now with the Land of Israel have no connection with the return of the 13 Tribes, but their influx into the land is probably an unauthorised incursion of some of a Gentile nation who will, ere the Restoration occurs, be driven out to make room for the true heirs. Those who assert that the Germans have the prophetic marks of an Israelitish origin must show that their peculiar blessing is multitudinousness, developing into colonial possessions, such too expanding into nations in federation with the Fatherland. They must prove to us too that the Germans are so wealthy that they lend to many nations but never borrow; and reign over many nations but are ruled by none; that their land has never been invaded; and that they have invariably been successful in war, that they live in Islands; and possess most of the gold, diamond, silver, iron, coal, and tin mines of the world, according to the promises of God to "the seed of Abraham forever." As none of these things can be truly alleged of the Germans, who are said to be Germanising Jerusalem, we may safely conclude that whatever success the race is meeting with just now in the holy city and the Holy Land it is but temporary and will have its termination when the true heirs are conducted back by their glorious King to take possession of their promised inheritance.

THE UNIVERSAL LANGUAGE.

THE following is from St. James's Gazette of Oct. 11th, and tells its own tale. If the English language is to be the universal one, then the British race which speaks it, must precede its language and be the universal occupants of the globe. Their influence at least must be so paramount throughout the earth, that their language must be the vernacular or the lingua franca of the inhabitants thereof. This singularly agrees with the words of prophecy which promises to the House of Israel, (the selected separated people of God) "the kingdom and dominion and the greatness of the kingdoms under the whole heaven," as the gift of God "to the people of the saints of the most High, whose kingdom shall be an everlasting kingdom and all dominions shall serve and obey Him" (Dan. vii. 27, R.V.; Psa. cxlviii. 14). St. James's Gazette wrote thus:

> The much-scoffed at Herr Schleyer, the ingenious inventor of Volapük, is dead. He devoted twenty years of his life to the task of forming a general language, which no doubt would have been extremely useful to the builders of Babel, but which seems rather unnecessary when the world will soon have in English a language practically universal.

It seems, according to the fitness of things, that when God confounded the language of the world at Babel as a punishment for rebellion and defiance of His authority, the return of His love and blessing to the world as the result of the Sacrifice at Calvary should be marked by the restoration of one universal speech; and that speech the language of His chosen nation, the children of the House of Israel, who are the British people. That this is His intention we think can be gathered from Zeph. iii. 9, 10, R.V., where we read that after the outpouring of the divine wrath upon the rebellious nations of the earth, "Then will I turn to the peoples a pure language, that they may all call upon the name of the Lord to serve Him with one consent." The united ascription of praise to Jehovah shall be expressed in one favoured language, to be used "with one consent," and that language, we gather from the testimony of St. James's Gazette, a secular newspaper, will, very probably, be "the English."

We see thus that in this, a new and unsuspected direction, our race is marked out as "the head and not the tail" of all the nations; the one which is to give its language to the rest, as well as to take the lead in the evangelisation of the world, and in the praise which mankind must render to the Lord Jehovah, the God of Israel. Hence we discover the reason why "in the seed of Abraham, all nations, families, and kindreds of the earth are to be blessed." We learn, too, why this race so blessed is described by God Himself as "the people He hath formed for Himself; they shall show forth His praise" (Isa. xliii. 21, R.V.). We can see around us the proofs that English is becoming fast the universal tongue. It is the language of commerce and navigation. It is spoken by over 100 millions of the British and Anglo-Saxon races. The subject races who own the British Queen as their Sovereign, are over 300 millions in number, and among them the thirst to acquire English is very real and marked, because it is the road to preferment, affluence, and worldly prosperity. Throughout the Continent of Europe, English is becoming the widest known and universally used language, so that an English traveller may pass from one end of it to the other and speak none but his own vernacular. Our mother tongue is therefore already practically universal, and at last, no doubt, will be the language of the world. There is no explanation of this unique fact but the old one which explains so many anomalies to-day.

These, our British folk, "are the remnant of Israel,' and therefore, in language as in every other respect, they must respond to the Scriptural portrait of the chosen race. They are "a nation and a company" of English-speaking people. The commerce of the world conducted mostly in English is in their hands. They are fast filling the Transvaal and causing their language to prevail there, much to the disgust and anger of the Boers. In Japan the English language is being adopted in the native schools, and promises to be an alternative vernacular of that race. Educated India aspires to speak English and succeeds marvellously in the effort.

Mr. W. E. Axon, M.R.S.L., some years since, writing in the Quarterly Journal of Science, said that he found as the result of his calculations that in the year A.D. 2000, Italian, French, Russian, German, and Spanish (the latter in Europe and South America), would be the languages of 505 millions of the human race, but that English must become the vernacular of 179 millions in Europe, and of 1,558 millions of Anglo-Saxons, in that "grand confederation of States" which is a glorious prophetic mark of the "Israel of God," so that whereas 505 millions would speak various languages, not English; that would be the world-wide universal tongue of the almost infinite incalculable multitude "no man can number" of over 1,700,000,000 of the human family, all of the same stock—the Anglo-Saxons. Well may we speak then of the coming "universal language;" but when we know that that language is to be the English, then may Israel greatly rejoice and praise the Lord!

Digitized by Google

Review.

Nobly Won. A novel in 2 vols. By B. Puller-Burry. Remington and Co., Henrietta Street, Covent Garden.

We have the pleasure to introduce to our readers a veritable two-volumed novel, founded on the dramatic incidents of the romantic story of Tea Tephi, and on "Our Identity" in general. The Author has imparted to the tale a very special interest, by founding it on the legends which tally so strangely and so perfectly with the promises of God to the seed of David, in respect to their throne over the House of Israel for ever. The story begins with the procession of Jewish fugitives, who sought refuge in Egypt in company with Jeremiah, the prophet of God, with Baruch also, and the king's daughters (Jer. xliii. 6). The commission given from on High to the prophet, to build and to plant, for the God of Jacob, "a nation and a company of nations," "to serve the Lord their God," is given us in the angel's summary of instructions, which, being carried out in detail, forms the plot of this Scriptural, British-Israelite romance. "Behold," said the Angel of God to Jeremiah the prophet, "take now 'the king's daughter,' even the daughter of Zedekiah which is with thee, and Baruch the Scribe; nor shalt thou leave in the land of the heathen, wherein thou goest, the Ark of the Covenant, nor the Stone of witness, and get thee into a ship of Tarshish; and thou shalt go into the uttermost part of the earth, and plant for Me A Nation, who shall serve Me. Fear not, nor be dismayed, for I am with thee, saith the Lord of hosts."

The Author skilfully works into the tale Mr. Flinders-Petrie's discovery of the House of Pharaoh in Tahphanes, the Daphne of the Greeks, and shows how it became the temporary abode of the Jew's daughter—El Kasr el bint el Yahudi. The elder of the sisters, Zarah, the worldly-minded and proud, was unlovely in her character and person. Jerusha, the younger, was perfect in beauty and gentleness of character. To her Jeremiah imparted the commission he had received, and bade her make ready to escape with him to the coast, leaving the haughty, wayward Zarah temporarily behind, as well as the sympathising nurse, Rachel. The interview between the prophet and the younger king's daughter, Jerusha, is told with pathos and power. The description will commend itself to the reader. The hurried journey to the coast, the adventures of the party on the road, the safe conveyance of the Stone of Witness, with the princess and her maid, into the boat for embarkation, the attempt at rescue at Pelusium, the twilight fight, and the defeat of the assailants, are told with great spirit and vigour. The party embarked safely on board a galley, belonging to a shipman of Dan, reached the city of Carthage after a storm at sea. The interest of the story is heightened by the discovery that Baruch the Scribe, of the Jewish Royal Family, aspired to the hand of the king's daughter, and that Jeremiah himself saw no way for the fulfilment of the prophecy, but the Royal Baruch's espousal of the lovely princess after their arrival at "the ends of the earth," in fulfilment of the commission he had received "to build and to plant" the future nation by means of the tender twig entrusted to his care.

The widely different ending of the interesting plot is known to most of our readers, and must be discovered by those who cannot guess, from the pages of this singular volume of fiction, which, founded on a Biblical story, is quite as interesting as a modern novel or romance. The wonderful termination of Jeremiah's life, after the fulfilment of his prophetic destiny "to build and to plant" the future British Empire, is finely told at the end of the second volume; and his vision of the future Empire of Queen Victoria, and her triumph during the Jubilee celebration, seated on the Stone of Destiny, is remarkably well narrated by our careful and painstaking Author. The Identity question is clearly one with which the writer is well acquainted and heartily believes. He has found its historical associations so interesting, taken even from an intellectual standpoint, that he has sought to introduce some of its salient features to the novel-reading world. The pages of these volumes teem with references to Our Identity literature. The Banner furnishes many of its notes. Philo-Israel's works are quoted frequently, and Oxonian, W. H. Mason, Sharon Turner, Dr. Wild, the Rev. Denis Hanan, Bishop Titcomb, and many other familiar names, are introduced as authorities, both in foot-notes and in the text. The writer is a clearly established Anglo or British-Israelite, well versed in the Scriptural argument, and at home in all the various points which we are accustomed to urge in defence of our belief. We have much pleasure in recommending this work of fiction as one by means of which much truth concerning Our Identity may be pleasantly imparted; and without doubt, as the volumes teem with quotations from the Scriptures, the story is calculated to recommend the word of truth to the careless reader, and induce him to dig deep into the mines that it contains.

Correspondence.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

Dear Sir,—I thought you would be interested to hear of the progress of the Identity in this town. The Rev. J. Billington's lecture (on "The Abrahamic Covenant Confirmed in the British People") was largely and influentially attended. At the close several questions were asked, and deep interest expressed. A gentleman remarked it was "a red letter day" for him to have been present; and a lady called upon me to express her thanks for giving her the opportunity of hearing the lecture. She said the subject was quite new to her, and would give her what she had long desired and prayed for—a real enjoyment in reading her Bible.

On Wednesday an address was given in the drawing-room of Mr. Boam, De Montford Square (who, I regret to say, does not yet accept the Identity). It was well attended, and Mr. Billington was listened to very attentively for an hour; especially when he compared Great Britain's missionary work with Israel's work, as foretold in prophecy. After the address a lively discussion ensued, and several ladies, whom I know as earnest truth-seekers and Christian workers, expressed much pleasure, and their intention to read and study the subject further. Of course both meetings were not without the usual opposition—namely, that salvation, through the knowledge of and trust in Christ, is sufficient; that it is not necessary to trouble one's self about God's great love and faithfulness to us as a nation, &c.

Permit me, in conclusion, to say I have found your little book, "The history of the House of Israel Told for the Children," one of the most convincing works upon the subject.

Yours very sincerely, E. C. B.

Leicester, Oct. 23, 1888.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

Dear Sir,—Thinking the enclosed paragraph from The Observer, which I copied from the Mona's Herald of Wednesday, was very illustrative of the statistics of population often alluded to in the Banner, I send it, in case the paper from which it was copied by our local journal should have escaped your observation:

"Extinction of French families.

"There is a tendency in French families toward rapid extinction. This throws a new light on the fact, that the population of France remains stationary, if not actually diminishing. It has been calculated that of 100 families existing in the time of King Philippe Auguste, who died in 1223, only four had representatives in 1840; and this tendency is not confined to the upper class, all sections betray the same tendency to extinction in the male line. A careful calculation showed that at present, as matters stand, 100 families, each with three children, would, in the second generation, have among them all a sum total of 83 descendants; that in the fifth generation, half these families would have no male representatives; and that in the fifteenth generation, in nine out of ten cases, the family name would perish altogether."—From "The Observer."

If this be really so, the proportion of English to French-speaking races will eventually be greater than M. de Candolle reckons—whose calculations have often appeared in the Banner—unless the increase of Canadian-French counterbalances the decline in France.

I noticed a historical error in the article of Dr. Wild, on "The French Armada." It was not Treveille but Villeneuve who commanded the French fleet at Trafalgar; and I find, on reference to Joseph Allen's "Life of Nelson," that the cause of Napoleon's displeasure against his admiral was, his conduct in an action with Sir Robert Calder. De Rosily was the admiral appointed to supersede him, but Villeneuve had sailed before his arrival. It is easy to make mistakes in names, but accuracy in all historical statements is important, lest our opponents make stock-in-trade of it against us, and attribute to ignorance what is only a confusion of dates or names. Yours truly, Esplanade, Douglas, Isle of Man. W. W. Ince.

P.S.—I continue to distribute, among friends, six Banners every week, and three Messengers each month.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed: "Philo-Israel," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

SUBSCRIPTIONS. £ s. d.

Annual Subscription for one copy weekly (including the Twelve Double Numbers) post free 0 7 6
Two Copies (including Double Numbers) 0 13 6
Three Copies " " " 1 0 4
Four Copies " " " 1 5 6
Six Copies " " " 1 16 4

Post Office Orders to be made payable at the head office, St. Martin's-le-grand, London, to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C., or F. W. PARRY & Co., 29, Paternoster-row, London.

The Editor cannot undertake to return rejected MSS. unless stamps for the purpose be sent. Parties requiring an answer should enclose a stamp.

Contents Bills and Show Cards may be obtained on application to the Publishers.

Advertisements should be sent to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

Prepaid Advertisements are inserted at the rate of thirty words for 1s. 4d.

METROPOLITAN ANGLO-ISRAEL ASSOCIATION.

THE BIBLE READINGS

are held

EVERY TUESDAY AFTERNOON,

At 3.30, in the Library of the Association, 14, King William-street, Charing Cross, W.C. All friends are invited.

METROPOLITAN ANGLO-ISRAEL ASSOCIATION.

ON THURSDAY EVENING, NOV. 15th, at 7.30 o'clock, a Lecture will be delivered in the ASSOCIATION ROOMS, 14, King William-street, Charing Cross, W.C., by Mrs. G. B. H. BROOKE

JAMES BILLINGTON, Sec.

WILL any British-Israelite in BARNARD CASTLE, COUNTY DURHAM, willing to assist in forming a Local Association, kindly communicate by letter with R. C. Hitchcock.

Price 1d. One doz. post free 1s.; 100 post free, 6s. net.

WORK:

A THOUGHT OF THE PAST, PRESENT, AND FUTURE.

BY E. M. RUSH (A E I),

Author of "The New Old Story," "The Answer to the Eastern Question," "A New Light," "The Emblem of the Empire," etc., etc.

London: Robert Banks and Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-st.

WORKS BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

The History of the House of Israel. How They Were Lost and How They Were Found. Told for the children. Price 6d., cloth 1s.; post free 7d. and 1s. 1d. Fifth edition.

Anglo-Israelism. True, Not False. Being Philo-Israel's Reply to the Rev. Canon Bell's pamphlet, "Anglo-Israelism: True or False?" Price 1d., 6s. 6d. per 100. 16 pages, crown 8vo.

An Elementary Digest or Sketch of the Chief Facts and Teachings of the Great Pyramid of Egypt. Adapted to the Unlearned and Unscientific 56 pages, Illustrated with Diagrams, price 4d., post free 5d. 10th Thousand.

Are the English People the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel? An Inquiry Establishing the Identity of the British Nation with the Lost Ten Tribes. 4d.

Our Identity with the House of Israel. Price 4d., Reprinted from "Clifton Chronicle Letters.

Our Identity: What it is Not; What it is; and Our Obligations To-day in Respect to it Being a Lecture recently delivered in London by Philo-Israel, and published by special request. Price 2d., a reduction for quantities.

Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

The Origin of Masonic Ritual & Tradition: A Lecture on the Three Degrees, by BRO. WM. ROWBOTTOM, P.M., with facsimile of a very rare Masonic engraving published in 1789.—Cloth, 2/6.

"Exquisitely clear and singularly correct in everything wherein I may be any authority or guide."—Professor PIAZZI SMYTH. "The Author seems to reason intelligently from his principles."—Literary Churchman.

London: R. Banks and Son, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C.; George Kenning, 16, Great Queen Street, W.C.

"A decidedly picturesque fairy-tale."—Spectator.

Eildon Grange: A Tale.

By ANDREW CLARK, M.A., Vicar of St. Michael's, Oxford. "Extremely readable."—Church Times. "Clever, graphic, and morally elevating."—Literary Churchman. "Of absorbing interest to boys."—Tablet. "Fresh and vigorous."—Church Bells. "The illustrations are very good and possess a distinct charm and piquancy."—Spectator.

Oxford: S. Rowbottom and Son; London: Hamilton, Adams and Co., 32, Paternoster Row, E.C.—Price 5s.

Just issued, price 2d., by post 2½d., 6 copies post free 1s.

SUPREMACY;

Or, The British Church versus The Church of Rome.

By E. M. RUSH ("A E I"),

Author of "The New Old Story," "Answer to the Eastern Question," etc.

London: Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street.

Just published, price 2s. 6d., Cloth boards, gilt lettered.

Sent free to any address in Great Britain, Europe, and America, on receipt of Postal Order or stamps.

THE ORIGIN, PROGRESS, AND ESTABLISHMENT

OF THE

KINGDOM OF GOD IN THE WORLD.

BY SURGEON-GEN. J. M. GRANT, M.D.

Army Medical Staff (Retired).

CONTENTS.—Preface.—Introduction. — Chap. I. Abraham.—Chap. II. The Chosen People.—Chap. III. The Monarchy.—Chap. IV. Israel and Judah. — Chap. V. Jew and Gentile.—Chap. VI. The New Covenant.—Chapter VII. The End of the World.—Chapter VIII. The Kingdom. — Chapter IX. The Government, Ritual, and Close of the Millennium.—Conclusion.—Appendix. The Gentile Church.

ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-st., London, E.C., and by order of any Bookseller.

LUNG SAVE YOUR LIVES BY TAKING TONIC
LUNG OWBRIDGE'S TONIC
LUNG LUNG TONIC TONIC
LUNG TONIC
LUNG THE MIGHTY HEALER. TONIC
LUNG TONIC
LUNG It has a power over disease hitherto TONIC
LUNG unknown in Medicine. TONIC
LUNG Are you at all Weak-chested or in- TONIC
LUNG clined to be Consumptive, with just a TONIC
LUNG touch of Cough now and then? TONIC
LUNG "Try this Wonderful Medicine." The TONIC
LUNG Cough and Weakness will disappear as TONIC
LUNG if by magic, and you will feel a strength TONIC
LUNG and power you never had before." TONIC
LUNG HAVE YOU A COUGH? TONIC
LUNG A DOSE WILL RELIEVE IT! TONIC
LUNG HAVE YOU A COLD? TONIC
LUNG A DOSE AT BEDTIME WILL TONIC
LUNG REMOVE IT. TONIC
LUNG Bronchitis & Asthma it relieves instantly TONIC
LUNG TONIC
LUNG The Spasms of Coughing so dreadful in TONIC
LUNG Whooping Cough become less with each TONIC
LUNG dose of the medicine. TONIC
LUNG TONIC
LUNG Prepared by W. T. OWBRIDGE Chemist, Hull TONIC
LUNG Sold in Bottles 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d. TONIC
LUNG and 11s. by all Chemists and Patent TONIC
LUNG Medicine Vendors. Wholesale all London TONIC
LUNG and Provincial Houses. TONIC

PIANOFORTES, Harmoniums, American Organs. Why buy at shops inferior made instruments, and pay large profits, when you can buy direct from the Maker High-class Instruments, and save 50 per cent. by so doing? Full value allowed for old Instruments in exchange as part payment. Write for Price Lists and Testimonials to A. G. LINSTEAD, Cobden Pianoforte Company, 5, Eversholt-street, Camden Town, London. Established 1874.

HUMAN LIFE.—FIFTY YEARS' Record of Facts, Principles, and Discoveries (just published complete) Relating to the Improvement and Preservation of Human Life on Earth. Origin and true treatment of diseases. A series of articles by DR. SAMUEL BIRLEY, M.D., Ph.D. Book form, 50 pages. SENT FREE to every applicant by the publishers, GORDON B. MURRAY & CO., 50, Theobald's-road, Holborn, E.C. Write to-day.

DE BEUVE'S GINGER CAKES

Are the most delicious Cakes in the world, and are highly recommended for invalids and the aged. They form an Unfailing Remedy for Constipation and Indigestion, and while most rich cakes disagree with children, these are very wholesome and conducive to health. Sent for 1s. Postal Order to any part of the Kingdom by Victor de Beuve, 3, Rood Lane, London, E.C.

GINGER CAKES

NEW BOOK BY DR. WILD.

Just Published, Price 3s., Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Lettered. Sent by Post on receipt of Published Price.

TALKS

FOR

THE TIMES.

BY JOSEPH WILD, M.A., D.D.,

Pastor of the Bond-st. Congregational Church, Toronto.

CONTENTS.—Chapter 1. A Gift of One Hundred and Ninety-Two Million Acres of Land. 2. The Return of the Jews to Palestine. 3. Folks that won't be Somebody. 4. The Four Prophecies of Egypt. 5. The Stone Kingdom and Dynamite; and the Orange ill. 6. "144!" 7. "666!" 8. The Transit of Venus. 9. The Miracles of Antichrist; and the High Rock Image of Massachusetts, U.S. 10. The an who could not sleep, and what came of it. 11. The Rainbow. 12. London Destroyed, and Jerusalem a Seaport. 13. Liberalism. 14. A Graft without a Stock. 15. Mouldy Bread and an Oath. 16. A Tombstone Inscription. 17. Dog Lappers. 18. How to get Rich.

ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London. JOHN MENZIES & Co., Edinburgh & Glasgow.

Just Published, price 1d., 6 copies post free for Six stamps, 6/6 per 100, carriage paid.

FACTS AND PROBABILITIES

Respecting the Identity of the British and American Nations with the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel.

Compiled by DELTA.

R. BANKS & SON, RACQUET-COURT, FLEET-ST.

Warmth & Comfort for the Winter

WALTER KEAST, 102, Kennington Park Road, London, S.E., is sending daily to all parts of the United Kingdom his

CELEBRATED CYPRUS SLIPPERS

These Slippers are of superior finish, lined all through with Red Flannel and give universal satisfaction.

Delivered free by Parcels Post.

Ladies' 1/6, Gents' 1/9.

Send No. of size, or paper length required.

NORWEGIAN SLIPPERS, an inferior make of above, sent post free.

Childrens' 6d., Ladies' 9d., Gents' 1s.

SOUND, PURE, WHITE TEETH!

Those who value these will try

CARBOLINE

(The Great Sanitary Tooth Paste).

1/6 & 2/6 per Pot.

Through Chemists, or post free from the Makers,

GEORGE & WELCH

WORCESTER.

Lancet writes:—"To save the teeth use a good carbolic daily."

Certain HARNESS' Cure.

ELECTROPATHIC BELT

FOR

CONSTIPATION

Rev. D. SUTCLIFFE, Vicar of Holme, Burnley, Lancashire, writes:—"My health has improved very satisfactorily, and I am now entirely free from the constipation I used to suffer from so severely."

Guaranteed to generate a mild continuous current of Electricity, which speedily cures all Disorders of the Nerves, Stomach, Liver and Kidneys. Thousands of Testimonials. Pamphlet & Advice free on application to Mr. C. B. Harness, Consulting Electrician, the Medical Battery Co. Ltd.

Only Address,

52, OXFORD ST., LONDON, W. (Corner of Rathbone Place.)

Call to-day, if possible, or write at once

Printed and Published for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-st., London, E.C.; F. W. PARRY (late GUEST & CO.), 29, Paternoster-row. WEDNESDAY, NOV. 14, 1888. [All rights reserved.

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."

(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India.)

"And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the Forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS of the EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. XII., No. 621. Entered at Stationers' Hall.] WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 21, 1888. [PRICE ONE PENNY.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
Germany, Austria-Hungary, and Italy	461
A Dying Out Nation. By J. Thomson	462
How a Church Missionary Views the Identity	462
Newcastle-on-Tyne Anglo-Israel Association	463
Our Aggressive Policy in Africa	464
The Head and Not the Tail	465
The Weak Link in Our Chain of Scriptural Evidence	466
Birkenhead and District British-Israel Association	467
Mr. Spurgeon and Anglo-Israelism	467

GERMANY, AUSTRIA-HUNGARY, AND ITALY.

THE young Emperor of Germany has concluded his visit to Italy, and has returned home to Berlin. The result of his visit to Rome as well as to Vienna has been to prove to the world that the Governments and peoples of these three great Empires are in perfect accord, and mean to resist the French and Russians should they attempt to invade the territories of one or more of the three. Behind Italy, said Signor Crispi lately, the Islanders with "the most magnificent fleet in the world" stand ready to support the splendid army the Italians have raised at such great sacrifices in defence of the European peace. In short, the cry is "peace, peace," because the French are isolated in Europe; and the Russians, overpowered by the union of three such nations as Germany, Austria-Hungary, and Italy, with the moral support of Great Britain, cannot venture to reopen the Eastern Question, or foment the disturbances threatening in Bulgaria and Macedonia. In fact, the situation may be well described in the words of a public writer, "If the Powers steadily refuse to give countenance to demands for disturbing the status quo, the storm will blow over for the time, and that is perhaps as much as is to be hoped for in the existing condition of the Balkan Peninsula." The idea is said to be entertained of a further visit of the Emperor of Germany to the two Latin nations occupying the peninsula, to draw them into the union of the three great Powers, to leave France or France and Russia combined powerless to break or disturb the peace. No doubt these are prudent measures, and the object most laudable. But that they will do more than postpone war we cannot believe till we see the five great nations disbanding their troops and abandoning the mighty preparations for war making by some for purposes of self-aggrandisement, by others for self-defence.

The "factor of disturbance" in the West of Europe is France, and she is jealous of the rising power at sea of Italy, and burning with dreams of revenge against Germany for the intolerable reverses and humiliation the latter brought upon the Empire in 1870. The Eastern Question slumbers till God's time for that great catastrophe shall have arrived, and meanwhile we watch the play of parties with the conflict of national jealousies in perfect confidence that God is "bringing our blind people by a way they know not, and in paths they know not, He is leading them, making darkness light before them, and crooked places straight" (Isa. xlii. 16, R.V.). At present there is a lull which may last for a longer or a shorter period than we anticipate, to be broken suddenly, we believe, as declared in 1 Thess. v. 3, R.V.: "When they are saying, Peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh upon them as travail upon a woman with child, and they shall in no wise escape." When "in that day" men are saying, Peace and safety, there will probably be ostensible reason for the universal expectation. But that will be the moment of the awful catastrophe, like the one which befel Sodom and Gomorrah with the Cities of the Plain, when, without any notice to the guilty occupants of those towns, they were suddenly involved in a terrific cataclysm, and overwhelmed by the irresistible wrath of Almighty God. What has happened once is to happen again, for the word of God hath spoken it! "Therefore, wait ye for Me, saith the Lord, until the day that I rise up to the prey; for My determination is to gather the nations that I may assemble the kingdoms, to pour upon them Mine indignation, even all My fierce anger. For all the earth shall be devoured with the fire of My jealousy" (Zeph. iii. 8, R.V.). In the New Testament we have similar warnings for a sudden and terrible event, an outburst of God's wrath against the Gentile non-Israelite nations; that in Rev. xvi. 18, R.V., being one in point: "There were lightnings, voices, and thunders, and there was a great earthquake, such as was not since there were men upon the earth, so great an earthquake, so mighty." Here, in highly figurative but quite comprehensible language, the Spirit of God tells us of a coming catastrophe, unprecedented and unparalleled among mankind, resembling an earthquake for suddenness and terrific violence; so great, so mighty that even in God's Word the reiteration of the word "great," thrice is deemed needful to impress the awful gravity of the event upon the heedless world. Our Lord Himself, in Luke xxi. 25—28, R.V. said, "There shall be signs in the sun, and moon, and stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, in perplexity for the roaring of the sea and the billows, men fainting for fear, and for expectation of the things which are coming on the world (the inhabited earth, marg.). For the powers of heaven shall be shaken. . . . When these things begin to come to pass, look up, and lift up your heads, because your redemption draweth nigh." For us, being Israel, the coming woe will bring no fears and no torment; for our redemption draweth nigh by reason of the outpouring of destructive wrath upon the enemies of our King. But as to the nations of Europe, the three against two, and the two against three, they must pass through the fiery billows of God's jealousy and anger, ere they too will be included within the Kingdom of our God, and join themselves by incorporation to the people of the Lord. "For the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea;" "For the kingdom of the world is become the kingdom of our Lord, and of His Christ, and He shall reign for ever and ever." To Him be all the praise (Hab. ii. 14, Rev. xi. 15, R.V.).

Digitized by Google

A DYING OUT NATION.

By J. Thomson.

One prominent identity proving the British race to be the Lost Ten-Tribed House of ancient Israel, is their great increase. The descendants of Abraham were to "multiply exceedingly" (Gen. xvii. 2); they were to become innumerable as the "dust of the earth" (Gen. xiii. 17), and the "stars of heaven" (Gen. xv. 5); growing into a "multitude in the midst of the earth" (Gen. xlviii. 16). That this description exactly applies to the British nation, and to it alone among all the nations, there is ample evidence to show. It has been adduced so often in the pages of the Banner, that it is unnecessary to do any more now than just refer to it in this general manner. The vast importance of this great and continued increase in the numbers of the English-speaking race, cannot be properly estimated by anyone now living; but a little reflection must convince every thoughtful person, that if it goes on long enough (and that need not be a very long time), it will elbow other nations out of the world, if they do not die out earlier from other causes.

As a contrast to this normal increasing character of the Anglo-Saxon race, let us look at a dying-out nation as seen in the case of our near neighbours, the French. It is to be noted that our authorities are themselves all French.

An article in Le Christianisme of Saturday, October 13th, quotes from a work written in 1771, by Rabant St. Etienne, the startling statement that, in 1698, notwithstanding the vast exodus caused by the revocation of the Edict of Nantes, there were in the diocese of Nimes 40,000 Protestants, in that of Uzes 23,000, in that of Alais 40,000, in that of Mende 18,000; and that altogether there were two millions of Protestants in France in 1771. "At present," says the writer of the article in Le Christianisme, "we are seven or eight hundred thousand. We have diminished by two-thirds in about a century;" and he declares that "this is startling."

It is natural to inquire what may be the cause of this? Is it that Protestantism is dying out, or the population? It is thought that some light may be thrown upon this state of things by a fact insisted on by a M. Lagneau in a paper read, about the same time that this article appeared, before the Academy of Medicine in Paris. The fact asserted by M. Lagneau is that "there is a tendency in French families towards rapid extinction" (The italics are ours). "It has been calculated," he says, "that of a hundred families existing in the time of King Philippe Auguste in 1220, only four had representatives surviving in 1840. This tendency to extinction is betrayed by all classes alike" (The italics are ours). "And a careful calculation shows that as matters stand at present, 100 families, each with three children, will in the second generation have among them all, a sum total of 83 descendants; that in the fifth generation half of these families will have no male representative, and that in the fifteenth the family name will, in nine cases out of ten, have perished altogether. It looks," he adds in conclusion, "as if the day will come when the French population will be entirely dependent for its growth on immigration!" *

"Look on this picture and on that!" Here, in France, we have a nation fast dying out, and likely to be "entirely dependent for its growth upon immigration," while our home population in England and Wales has more than trebled itself already during this century; besides the shoals of emigrants sent off to people other countries. Could there be a greater contrast? or could any nation be more particularly marked out as the modern representative and lineal descendant of ancient Israel, than Britain is by this indisputable characteristic of a vast, and continually increasing population? So rapid and so great an increase is calculated to cause anxiety to statesmen of the Malthusian school; but the light of the Identity shows that it is a God-given blessing, and one pointed out by ancient prophecy as distinguishing Israel from other nations in the "last days;" and thus, so far from exciting fear, causes us to rejoice, as it is evidently the fulfilment of God's promise to His people of old. If this is not so, can there be any other rational explanation of the phenomena given by those who believe in the divine origin of the Bible, and acknowledge a divine Providence over-ruling all the affairs of men? If there can, we shall be very glad to hear of it.

HOW A CHURCH MISSIONARY VIEWS THE IDENTITY.

A Missionary of the C. M. Society was lately conversing with us on the subject of the Ten Tribes, and gave expression to sentiments of which the following is a precis. "I have been reading some of your literature," he said, "and my impression is that you are probably right." I wish, however, the evidence was more direct than it is. If I understand you right the evidence amounts to this. There is a great similarity between the blessings promised to Israel in the Scriptures, and the facts which we British present to view to-day. The inference therefore, is that the British must be the Lost Ten Tribes. The evidence thus merely amounts to an inference, and however strong the inference may be, it is only a presumption, but no more. Now if there could be found some historical records showing that our nation is racially descended from the Lost Ten Tribes, as they originally were in their own land, then there would be tangible evidence on which one's mind could rest." We pointed out to our missionary friend that there were mighty facts connected with our race at the present hour, such as the abnormal increase of the people, and the wondrous portentous extension of the empire abroad, which ought to satisfy his judgment and his reason. "True," he replied, "there is no getting over those two facts, and I am consequently inclined to say that you are correct in your views; still—" The state of mind of our Church Missionary, of course, is deeply interesting, and we are certain it is very common: especially among the ministers of religion. They require historical and ethnological corroboration of our claims which will enable them to trace our pedigree back step by step, right up from the present time to those of Rehoboam and Jeroboam, kings of Judah and Israel respectively, in B.C. 975.

This demand, of course, is simply childish, and such as no nation could satisfy. The opponent, however, insists on our exhibiting such proofs of our origin when God's Word tells us that His object was to lose His people, to Gentilize them, to mingle them with the nations, to cause them "to lose their paths," to "hedge up their way with thorns" (Hosea ii. 6, R.V.). and to arrange for their being swallowed up by the Gentiles, or in other words to disappear from human ken, as Israel. The

* See The Record for Oct. 19th, 1888. Paris correspondent's letter.

Digitized by Google

opponents demand proofs which God's Word and purposes specifically deny, and neglect the only evidence He will permit to be adduced, such evidence being of the character which is always admissible and alone accessible in all cases where in our courts of law matters of disputed identity are under investigation.

Our friendly Church Missionary, however, is in error when he speaks of our national condition as presenting "great similarity" to that of Israel under the Abrahamic blessing. It is not a question of "great similarity" so much as of "absolute identity" between the blessings God promised to "Abraham and his seed for ever," and those the British nation possesses and enjoys to-day. On this point there really is no question. Our opponents agree on this subject, and unanimously admit that we are to-day a sort of "modern Israel," a "substituted Israel" placed by God exactly in Israel's position, blessed as she was to be, endowed as she was to be, and in no way different from her, but only for a time during this "Gentile parenthesis." The idea however, is monstrous, and utterly dishonouring to God! He swore that to "Abraham and his seed for ever," the blessings should be secured. This cuts off all idea of abeyance, or of a "parenthetical dispensation," during which the entail of blessings enumerated could be cut off from Israel, and a Gentile nation be substituted for her, even during five minutes of time in these our latter days. The identity of the Lord Jesus Christ with the promised Messiah depended on a multitude of facts predicted by the prophets of Israel, and all fulfilled in the actual history of His life on earth. Apart from His miracles and teaching which the bystanding Jews rejected, the fulfilments of the predicted facts raised such a violent presumption in favour of the identity of the Nazarene carpenter's son with the Son of God, that the Jews were reckoned by God guilty for rejecting this evidence as insufficient, and they were punished condignly accordingly. The same kind of prophetic evidence is now given us, supported by a multitude of stupendous facts in fulfilment of the prophecies to prove that the British are Israel, and God gives us no more. Will it be safer now to reject the God-given testimony as it bears upon God's people and nation, than it was when the Jews, equally unreasonably, contemned that which went to show (conclusively as we see to-day) that "Jesus was the Christ"? We are glad to know that our Church Missionary feels the force of two of our lines of proof, namely, the stupendous increase of our nation's population; and the empire's vast expansion abroad. But what about his own work in Bombay? Why do he and hundreds more elsewhere feel constrained to go and teach the Mohammedan and Hindu populations of Western, Eastern, and Southern India to impart to them the Word of God, to minister to them the Spirit, to give them the blessings of the Sabbath, to instruct them in the ten true laws of God, and generally to bring them under the bonds of the Gospel of Jesus Christ? Surely it is because "Israel was to blossom and bud and fill the face of the world with fruit," and in this the seed of Abraham, "all the nations, families, and kindreds of the world, (therefore the nations of India), were to be blessed" (Isa. xxvii. 6; Gen. xxii. 18; xxviii. 14; Acts iii. 25, R.V.).

Such spiritual fulfilments of prophecies respecting Israel's spiritual blessings must surely carry conviction into a British Missionary's breast, when he feels and knows that his life's dearest aim and object is to do for the heathen just what Israel was destined to do for them. When he finds too, that our nation is exclusively occupied in this peculiar work, embracing "all nations, all families, and all kindreds of the earth," that Israel's functions were to be not only exclusive but world-wide also, he must surely see that the evidence of our Israelitish origin is overwhelming in its character, and calls for his hearty thanksgivings and praise to the Lord his God, who has so blessed this our unworthy race and him in selecting him, to serve in such a cause!

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE ANGLO-ISRAEL ASSOCIATION.

THE annual meeting of this Association was held on the evening of Nov. 1st, at the rooms of the Berwick Club, Pilgrim Street. Tea was provided at 6 o'clock, and the subsequent proceedings were of a varied and pleasing character. The Rev. H. Morton, B.A., took the chair at 7.30, and offered prayer. In his opening remarks he encouraged the Association to continue its work with more determination than ever. Their cause was bound to prevail, for it was the cause of God, and the Identity was His own message. Nowadays men wanted to thrust God out of His own world, and practically they have done so. Man was everywhere and everything; God was nowhere in their thoughts. Man invented and discovered; man was improving himself and subduing nature to himself. The creature had supplanted the Creator and could do very well without Him. People did not acknowledge that God had formed Nature for man and was now unfolding it to him. In the Identity we saw that this pride and independence was rebuked. It showed the world that God was still the ruler of His universe, and that all its transactions were subservient to His honour and glory. Anglo-Israelism was in its infancy, and the light it gave was only dim at present, but everything had a small beginning. A Sheikh leaving his home in Ur of the Chaldees became in time a mighty nation, whose influence has moulded humanity, and whose light has penetrated into every corner of the earth. The Identity had a similar destiny before it, and it was their duty and privilege to hasten the issue. Captain Watkins said he first became acquainted with the Ten-Tribe enquiry through being in Egypt while Prof. Piazzi Smyth was taking his measurements at the Great Pyramid. He ascended the Pyramid, and becoming interested in it, he bought the Professor's book, in which the Ten Tribes are alluded to. He afterwards secured Mr. Hine's pamphlet, and his first feeling was one of astonishment that anybody could write such nonsense, but as he proceeded he became convinced of its truth. He was thoroughly ashamed of his new views, however, and stowed away both his pamphlet and his opinions until he found that others of undoubted sanity were of the same way of thinking. It was impossible to account for the British Empire except by the Identity. The nation had grown enormously, but not through any special virtue in the Englishman. We have grown in spite of ourselves and our stupidity. The history of England was a history of blundering. No country had ever made such disgraceful mistakes, and our generals had gone into battle over and over again with a recklessness and disregard of the enemy which could only be described as "impertinence." But God was behind us, and that was the explanation of our success. He believed in the literal fulfilment of every word of prophecy, and could not help seeing that the promises to Israel were being fulfilled in our nation only. It was often said to him, "I wonder why you, a man who labours in the Church, the Sunday-school, and the Mission, should take up with such a useless theory." His reply was that the Identity was not a hindrance but an assistance, for there was nothing that so much humbled the man and elevated the Christian as this wonderful development of God's Word.

Mr. John Wood observed, that in reading the Bible he found that the Hebrew race consisted of two distinct kingdoms, that the Jews were carried captive and returned in a few years, that the Israelites were also carried captive and never returned at all, and that the two nations had, in fact, entirely opposite destinies. He found, moreover, that the Jews were spoken of as being deaf, while the Israelites were said to be blind—two very different statements. It was necessary, both in the world and in religion, to distinguish between things that differ, such as black and white, and Israel and Judah. Mr. John Kemp remarked that he did not pretend to be able to teach the audience on this great subject. He confessed that the Identity had a tighter grip on him than he had on it. Its grip on him was complete. There was no truth on which he had stronger convictions or better grounds for his convictions, and he supported Anglo-Israelism because he believed in the Bible. God had pledged Himself to make of Israel a great nation, even a company of nations. He had given us a description of this nation and told us the position she would occupy, and if we went over the promises one by one we found that Britain fitted in exactly to the position intended for Israel, so that either the British Empire is Israel or the Bible is unreliable. People tell us it is "bosh," but they do not understand the matter—they do not even know their own country. The British Empire was our argument, and most people were ignorant of its existence. It was those who travelled that saw the force of the Identity. An American had said he never knew England until he left it, and a Frenchman exclaimed, "Do not talk to me about the world this and the world that; England is going to be the world, and the world is going to be England." It was asserted that Anglo-Israelism led men astray from religion. He gave that the lie direct. He had travelled much, and wherever he came across an Anglo-Israelite he found a centre of Christian life and activity.

Digitized by Google

Mr. J. G. Taylor said that the object of their Association was generally represented in public prints as a foolish one, but he failed to see where the folly lay. They wished to identify a lost race. That surely is not a trifling matter. Even if the Israelites were an ordinary people, their recovery from oblivion would have been of great importance—of far more importance than the work in which scores of other organizations are engaged, and over which money is spilt like water. The nineteenth century had a rage for explorations. Gangs of men, who had been called scientific navvies, were tearing up the ground all through the East in search of "relics," and bringing to light the ancient abodes of Israel in Egypt, Palestine, and Assyria. But the builder of a city is of more value than the city built by him, and common sense might tell us that the people of Israel were of vastly more moment to humanity than the ruins of their houses. Yet society ridiculed the endeavour to discover the people, and spent tens of thousands over the exhumation of broken bottles, sewer pipes, and similar rubbish not worth its cartage to the sea-coast. It was only a hundred here and there who had openly espoused the Identity, but there were large numbers both of clergy and laity who were firmly convinced of its truth, though they had not the courage to say so and run the gauntlet of that ridicule which is always showered on a new departure. We can give our timid friends arguments, but we cannot supply them with pluck, so we would simply have to do without their assistance.

Solos were rendered by the Misses Chubb, and songs and recitations by Messrs. Atkinson, Chubb, and Simpson. The band of the Boys' Refuge, under the able conductorship of Mr. Richard Lynes, performed numerous pieces of music during the evening. The usual votes of thanks concluded a highly successful gathering.

OUR AGGRESSIVE POLICY IN AFRICA.

THE Scotsman on September 12th, devoted an article to the defence of the present "policy of aggression" pursued by the British Government, and while declaring that same policy in past time was bad and immoral and harmful, it is now quite right and proper. These remarks were called for by the fact that the Imperial East African Company's Royal Charter has just been granted by the British Government, and thereby an opportunity is given to this country to obtain her just share of the commercial advantages Africa has to offer. The Geographical Section of the British Association at Bath, recently took this view of the new company's opportunities, and the Scotsman quite agrees with the speakers on that occasion. But how does the Scotsman justify the British proceedings in acquiring such vast portions of the African continent for purposes of its own? Our previous bad example brought the Germans into the field as competitors, and once they began to scramble for the African estate we could not help ourselves, and were bound to compete with them, for possessions larger and more valuable than theirs! Germany saw we got rich and powerful because we were a colonizing Power, and forthwith Germany and Prince Bismarck set to work together to get colonies, to make Germany "great" and the "mother of nations." This was a patriotic and sensible proceeding, and the result was that Germany scrambled for African land, and has got huge portions of it for her coming colonies.

But the British have been at this work for centuries, and are just now seeing the results of their efforts. Her colonies are already founded and quite settled in the four corners of the earth. Germany is no colonizing country, but her emigrants (and they are very numerous) have hitherto preferred to go to lands where settled governments exist (such as in the United States and Canada), rather than go through the trouble of organizing new colonies afresh. This is how the Scotsman defends our present proceedings in regard to African territory:

> There is no use now in speaking of our colonial policy, and especially of our policy in Africa, as if it could be based on the lines which were most properly advocated twenty years ago. We have to recognise facts as they are; and one of these facts is, that of late years we have been brought side by side with France, Germany, and other Powers in Africa and elsewhere. Are we to remain motionless while they go on? That would be as complete a proof of national decay as could be given. To stand still in such matters is really to go back. Are we, then, to confess that we are played out, that our energies are exhausted, that the old indomitable spirit which sent Britons all over the world, and caused them to build up the waste places of the earth, is dead? Are we to decline and fall, losing first our energies and then our means of living? These are the grave practical questions which are raised by recent events. We cannot afford, no matter what may be our inclinations, to pursue an apathetic and negative policy. We cannot allow the possible new markets of the world to be closed against us. We cannot, in especial, allow the great virgin continent of Africa to pass wholly or in great part into other hands than ours. The competition may be friendly enough; but let there be full recognition of the fact that there is competition. The East Africa Company deserves the fullest encouragement. It is taking possession, in the sense at least of exercising sole influence, of a territory which opens to us vast markets in the interior of Africa, and through which the greatest benefits may be conferred upon the native races."

The question of the slave trade too is closely connected with the increase of British possessions in Africa, especially with the new British East African Company's territory. That portion of the Dark Continent crosses the slave routes from the interior to the coast, and where British settlements exist, there the slave trade must expire.

On such grounds as these the modern journalist defends our rather rapid progress now in the acquisition of African territories. The true cause however of our expansion, lies deeper than this. It depends on the fact that this nation is Israel, and to Israel God has given the heritage of the heathen and the heirship of the world (Rom. iv. 13). Africa needs the Gospel, and no nation has the Gospel or the Word of God to communicate except the people of the House of Israel. "He showeth His words unto them; His statutes and His judgments unto Israel. He hath not dealt so with any nation, and as for His judgments they have not known them." Israel, the British people being they, have the Gospel and God's Word to proclaim to the outlying world; and accordingly they disseminate the precious Volume as no other nation does, or can, and preach the Gospel to "all nations, families, and kindreds of the earth" according to the prophecies. The "aggressive policy" of the British is therefore apparent now in Africa, because the time has come for a forward step for the delivery of the message in Central Africa, and for the liberation of the slave-bound inhabitants of that miserable continent. To Israel, and therefore to the British people, God has committed the case of the slave in Isa. lviii. 6, R.V., in such words as these, "Is not this the fast that I have chosen? to loose the bonds of wickedness, to undo the bands of the yoke, and to let the oppressed go free, and that ye break every yoke." Being Israel, God is entrusting Africa, North, South, East and West, to our care, that we may evangelize and free her from the bonds of her Mohammedan and other oppressors. We were latterly neglecting our Scriptural duty and functions, and therefore God raised up the Germans on the east and sent them forth to take our place, and sent the French to threaten our settlements on the western coasts, with the Portuguese on the south-east, in order that, goaded by their aggressions, we might be roused to action and advance when God would have us go. Hence, our Royal Charter for the Imperial East African Company; hence, the annexation of the Basin of the Niger; hence, the forward movement south of the Zambesi, in Amatongaland and Zululand, and the large gifts of gold, coal, and other minerals, throughout the Transvaal, which God has given to our race, almost exclusively, everywhere in South Africa, as the blessing and birthright of Joseph (Deut. xxxiii. 13—17). These events, viewed in the light of Our Identity, are deeply interesting to us who are believers in the fact, for they offer to us a kind of evidence which cannot lie, which points directly to our Israelitish origin on the one hand, and to God's faithfulness to His oaths and covenants "to Abraham and his seed for ever" on the other. To Him be all the praise!

Digitized by Google

"THE HEAD AND NOT THE TAIL."

We have received the following from a constant reader at Darlington, and the two newspaper extracts which accompanied the letter are also annexed. We reserve our comments till our readers have perused the documents.

Sir,—On the other side I send you two clippings from the Newcastle Chronicle, which I think are worthy of comment, especially "The Richest Country in the World." According to this paragraph America is the richest! I have always understood that Britain was the "head."

Darlington, Sept. 17, 1888. Constant Reader.

The extracts from The Newcastle Chronicle were these:—

The Great Tongues.—It is said in the current number of the Revue Scientifique that Chinese is the language most in use, being spoken by 400 millions. "Then comes Hindoo (100 millions) English (about 100 millions), German (57 millions), Spanish (47 millions)." The writer is somewhat astray in his reckoning. As regards English, for example, it is spoken by more than 100 million people of purely British origin, and there are in addition, millions of Asiatics, and of black, red, and yellow men who understand it. It is the dominant language over more than a fifth of the whole habitable globe. It is the language of the high seas and of every maritime port. The Chinese and Japanese required a language for their international commerce: they have adopted English—English, the language with which at his tongue's end a man may go round the earth and back again.

The Richest Country in the World.—Last year I made a note of the fact than in 1850 the total wealth of the United States was £1,686,000,000, that of Great Britain being £4,500,000,000. Last year the wealth of Great Britain was about £9,000,000,000, or almost exactly double what it was in 1850; but the wealth of the United States had risen in 1880 to £9,790,000,000, and last year was nearly £11,000,000,000. The annual savings of America are £210,000,000, exceeding those of the United Kingdom by £50,000,000, and those of France by £70,000,000.

Elfin, Birmingham.

In reference to the above, the statement regarding the Chinese and other languages of the earth is open to this objection: that in the first place no one can be certain that the Chinese are 400 millions in number. It has been suggested that this is an exaggeration, and that 300 millions is likely to be the correct total. Independently of this consideration it has to be borne in mind that the Chinese language is never likely to spread over the whole earth as our own tongue does. The Chinese is a very difficult language to learn. It has no literature which is likely to captivate mankind, and the Chinese who speak it are not a dominant race out of their own country, but on the contrary, a servile. These considerations put their vernacular out of the question as a world-wide language. English is winning its way, and is, as all scientists and philologists affirm, destined probably to be the language of the world at last.

In regard to wealth, and the alleged superior riches and savings of the United States, as compared with those of the United Kingdom, we think the comparison is unfair, even if the figures are correct. The total wealth of the United States ought to be compared with that of Great Britain and her Colonies, that is, of "the nation and company of nations," which are one. If the value of the gold mines of Australia and South Africa be added to the assets of the United Kingdom we suppose the comparison with the United States would be extremely unfavourable to the latter. Silver mines it appears have lately been discovered in the Barrien country, New South Wales, and no less than "2¼ millions sterling in dividends, cash and scrip, have been paid to the original shareholders of the Broken Hill silver mine." The Western portion of New South Wales is declared to be "highly metalliferous; gold, silver, tin and copper, only awaiting the opening up of the colony to yield a handsome percentage to any enterprising colonists who may care to work the soil." The diamond mines of South Africa and the gold mining operations of the Transvaal are only in their infancy. The capabilites of Central Africa to minister to the wealth of the empire are yet in their infancy, but they may safely be described as gigantic. An empire the entire trade of which last year amounted to £1,079,000,000 sterling, and whose total revenue was the huge sum of £207½ millions the year, must it seems to us rank as the very first of the nations in wealth, "the head and not the tail, above only and not beneath" all the others in this as in every other respect. Prophecy leads us to conclude that Ephraim, by reason of her development into "a fulness of nations," will show a marked superiority to Manasseh. "His younger brother shall be greater than Manasseh, and his seed shall become a multitude or fulness of nations," was the promise of Gen. xlviii. 19, R.V. When God reckons against Manasseh, "the nation and company of nations" of Ephraim-Israel, we may be sure that we do wrong to strike the balance of national grandeur by comparing Ephraim alone with Manasseh; and not by putting against Manasseh's greatness, the glory and strength of Ephraim with the daughter nations to come from her. We do not discuss this question in the spirit of rivalry or national jealousy. But we are jealous for the truth and promises of God! We decline to adopt any view which seems to do dishonour to the faithfulness and oath of the Father of Israel. He reckons Ephraim as His firstborn, and Manasseh as inferior only in this respect that whereas the latter was to be a "great people," confined to a single continent, His "first-born" Ephraim, were to develop into an empire nation, occupying many continents, and the riches and majesty of all. To Him be all the praise!

Like the Hebraic Levites, the Druids possessed many remarkable powers and immunities, such as exemption from taxation and military service. They annually elected the magistrates, and supervised the education of all children, who were not given up to their parents till they were fourteen years old. They brought up the kings, who were in fact mere puppets in their hands; and their power was not merely vast but practically absolute. Rarely had anyone the temerity to rebel against their power, but for such was reserved the penalty of excommunication, a punishment which originated among the Hebrews.—The Messenger.

Digitized by Google

THE WEAK LINK IN OUR CHAIN OF SCRIPTURAL EVIDENCE.

A FRIEND has forwarded to us a letter from a distinguished preacher, written in reference to some Identity literature submitted to his notice. He is "interested" in the subject, but has "not had spare brain power during the last twelve months to take up the matter with the requisite attention. He is aware Mr. Spurgeon does not see the thing in the light we do, and therefore means one day to ask the eloquent divine what "the weak point is in our chain of Scriptural proof." The writer says "he forgets what it is," and therefore, presumably he once knew, but now the matter has slipped from his memory. We on our part have been investigating Our Identity for the last thirteen years or so, and can conscientiously affirm that, as far as we can see, the chain of evidence has no weak point; and the links of proof are from first to last true, and sound, and solid. It is quite incredible that, attacked as we have been for the last dozen years or so, we should be unable to discern, as the result of incessant contest and controversy, the existence of a weak link in the main argument, if such were available to our opponents wherewith to hammer us. If there were an unsound argument in the centre of our chain, we are quite sure our opponents would have found it out and told us of it. But there is no such weak link. We are grateful to our opponents for so incessantly assailing us, since the result has proved, by their constant failure to put us down, that there is in point of fact no weak spot in our armour or defective link in our chain of Scriptural proof.

Mr. Spurgeon has, over and over again, tried his hand at destroying our foundations. But we appeal to our readers to say whether he has been successful! We have shown quite recently (page 396) that in the matter of the Scriptural distinction between Israel and Judah he is utterly at fault. He is not aware of it. He thinks all Jews are Israelites, which is correct, but he fails to recognise the fact that "not all the Israelites were or are Jews," which is unpardonable in a minister who has the Bible, we suppose, at his fingers' ends, and ought to know, for instance, that Ahab, King of Israel, was an Israelite only, but not a Jew; but that Jehoshaphat, the King of Judah, was a Jew as well as an Israelite. Ahab and Jehoshaphat were both of them Israelites, because they both belonged to the children of Israel. But only one of them, the King of Judah, was a Jew, being of the House of David, the Bethlehemite of Judah. Mr. Spurgeon knows well enough, we are sure, that "all the Scots are Britons," but he is surely aware that "not all the Britons are Scots." So all the Welsh are Britons, because they, as well as the Scots, are subjects of the British Queen. But a school-boy knows that not all the British are either Welsh or Scotch, for Ireland is also part of the United Kingdom, and the Irish people are British, as well as the Welsh and Scots. In contrast to the "distinguished preacher," who believes we have a weak point in our argument from Scripture somewhere, though he cannot recollect where, but hopes to ask Mr. Spurgeon about it anon, we have also received for perusal a note written by one who is busy about sacred things, and cannot find time to study Our Identity very deeply.

What he has read has not yet convinced him. "The arguments are, some of them, childish; they involve questions of interpretation, though he admits that the case presents a strong presumption in favour of Our Identity." "In two respects," he adds, "the subject has been most profitable to him. For—1st. It has awakened in him quite a peculiar feeling of interest in the Old Testament prediction, as it relates to God's ancient people; and 2nd, It has directed his notice to interesting aspects of the British people. The mere notion of the possibility of the Identity is enough to stir the blood in a pleasing manner." He concludes with this gratifying confession: "I have to acknowledge that you have been instrumental in one thing. That is, you have led me to regard with real respect and serious attention a view which I had previously considered to be a mere dream of a few highly imaginative people."

The above is a satisfactory result of a friend's effort to win a thoughtful man to look into our case. He sees no flaws or weak points in the evidence or arguments, and he respects now what he once ridiculed. He feels deeply interested in the bare possibility of the Identity of our nation with the Lost House of Israel proving to be true. What strikes us as cause for wonder in connection with our subject is this: That men seem anxious to find weak points in the evidence, in order that they may have a good excuse for abstaining from further inquiry into the matter. How is it there is this disinclination to believe? It is not that men have no leisure to undertake inquiry. Every other subject under the sun occupies their minds continually. But that which relates to God's honour, His oath, His faithfulness and truth, they care not to investigate. It is said that spiritual matters, matters concerning the Lord Jesus and His salvation, are alone worthy of attention and study. But do not such remember that "Jesus Christ was a minister of the circumcision for the truth of God to confirm the promises given to the Fathers"? (Rom. xv. 8, R.V.). Those promises were largely temporal and earthly, and were supplemented by spiritual gifts, which we never cease from declaring are of special value to His people and to the world at large who receive them at our hands. But cannot men see that, nationally speaking, the spiritual blessings could never be administered to the world at large by any but a nation specially endowed as the British are endowed, with power, and dominion, and wealth, and commerce, also with powerful colonies of the race, developing into nations, and strategically placed in the four corners of the earth? Our opponents fail to comprehend the problem that God thus presents to our contemplation, and therefore cannot understand that to take the Gospel to all nations, families, and kindreds of the earth God requires an agency just like that described in the Scriptures as the House of Israel, and the facsimile of the British folk to-day.

Given such a nation as ours, endowed as it is, and humanly speaking, the evangelisation of the world becomes feasible. But as Dr. Grant says in his recent work, "Where would the missionary work done by our Church be, if Spain had the dominion of the sea?" God knows that it would be impossible, and therefore He has given us, His Israelite servants, the Gates, the supremacy of the sea, the wealth, the Colonies, the Heathen Empire, and the safe domicile in the Isles of the West, thus constituting ours the most powerful and the richest nation of the earth, in order that with the strength thus acquired we may communicate to the nations all those spiritual blessings He has so abundantly granted to us, namely, the Gospel, the Scriptures, the Decalogue, the Sabbath, with all the other good things that lie at the right hand of Him who "so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish, but have everlasting life" (John iii. 16, R.V.). Let Israel therefore praise the Lord for His goodness to their unworthy race!

JUDAH IN ISRAEL.—Mr. F. D. Mocatta, in a recent lecture on "The Jews in their Various Habitations," said, in referring to this country:—"I need tell you nothing about the Jews of our own country, for we all know it and are, I am sure, fully grateful for the advantages we enjoy. It is strange, however, that there are only some 1,500 Jews in Scotland; perhaps less strange that there under 1,000 in Ireland; while of the 100,000 in the whole United Kingdom, it is reckoned that there are not far from 70,000 in London, and some 20,000 to 25,000 divided between Manchester, Liverpool, Leeds, and Birmingham. It might be wished that they were more disseminated throughout the country. The Jewish population of the numerous British Colonies, generally a very flourishing one, is estimated at between 15,000 and 20,000."

Digitized by Google

BIRKENHEAD AND DISTRICT BRITISH-ISRAEL ASSOCIATION.

ON Tuesday evening, October 23rd, 1888, a very successful meeting of those interested in Our Identity was held in Emmanuel Church School-room, Birkenhead. The audience numbered about 150 persons, all of whom listened with great and sustained interest to the addresses given by the gentlemen who had kindly promised to speak. The chair was occupied by Mr. Theodore S. Hill. After singing the grand old hymn,

"O God of Bethel by whose hand Thy people still are fed," prayer was offered by Inspector Thomas Leeson. In his opening remarks, the chairman dwelt upon the Cui bono? aspect of the question, showing how completely the infidel and papist were confounded by means of Our Identity—the infidel by the marvellous proof afforded of the literal truth of the Bible, as shown in the faithful performance by God of all His promises to Abraham's after-seed in the past history and present position of Great and Greater Britain; the papist receiving an effectual answer to his taunt that the Protestant Church springs from the Roman Church, and that if the fountain-head is impure so are the streams flowing therefrom, by the fact that a pure Israelitish Church existed in these islands more than 500 years before the arrival of Augustine and his 40 monks from Pope Gregory, and, moreover, that the ancient British Church was a direct continuation of "the Church in the wilderness" (Acts vii. 38), founded by God Himself B.C. 1491. The chairman also pointed to the fact that were the Identity fully known, we could not then find statesmen of repute making propositions with regard to Ireland, which, if carried out, would lead to the splitting-up of the British-Israelite Empire at the core.

Mr. E. P. Dix (hon. sec. of the Liverpool British-Israel Identity Association) followed with a most clear and logical paper on "The continuity of God's purpose regarding Israel as revealed in the Bible," showing how the elect people whom Peter in his first epistle addresses were none other than the forefathers of the British races, whom Sharon Turner traces to the exact spot in Media where the Ten Tribes disappear from history. Mr. Dix showed that no other people than the British were now fulfilling the exact rôle that Israel was to carry out in the days of the Christian Dispensation.

Mr. H. Gordon Jones (who has recently been in correspondence with Her Majesty the Queen and Lord Salisbury on the subject of Our Identity) then gave a most convincing address on the "Stone Kingdom" of Daniel, chapter ii., proving it to be as literal a kingdom as the four great kingdoms that precede it in the sacred narrative, and showing that England and her Colonies exactly correspond with the prophetic interpretation given by Daniel of the dream of Nebuchadnezzar.

The Rev. J. Whitehurst Storer (Vicar of Emmanuel Church) next spoke, taking as a text the handbill announcing the meeting, viz., "Blessed be the Lord, the God of Israel, for He hath visited and wrought redemption for His people" (Luke i. 68, R.V.). Pointing out that the Jews (the House of Judah) reject the Messiah, the rev. gentleman showed that the House of Israel of the Ten Tribes accept of Jesus as Saviour and Redeemer, and thus prove the words of Luke to be literally true. After the address it was unanimously resolved to form a British-Israel Identity Association for Birkenhead and district, the chairman being asked to become President, with the Rev. J. W. Storer as Vice-President, and the following as Council, viz.: Messrs. W. Key, J. Richardson, Thomas Leeson, Robert Neild, R. Speight, R. Matchett, Arthur Doherty, the hon. treasurer being Mr. John Pierce, and the hon. secretary, Mr. J. Jopson.

The meeting closed with a hymn and the benediction pronounced by the vicar.

Letters were received from Dr. Thomas Saul and Mr. Thomas Wynne, announcing their regret at being unable to attend the meeting.

THE ANGLO-ISRAEL ALMANACK for 1889 will be published on the 26th inst. at the usual price—viz., 3d., interleaved with ruled paper, stiff cover 5d., or bound in brown cloth, marble edges, and interleaved with ruled paper, 1s. The Almanack will contain the largest number of pages yet issued, and at the price at which it is issued it forms the cheapest Identity work published.

MR. SPURGEON AND ANGLO-ISRAELISM.

[The Editor of Present Truth having declined the following we beg to publish it, as requested by the writer.—ED.]

To the Editor of "Present Truth."

DEAR SIR,—The Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, in reviewing Anglo-Israelism, says "we regard the theory as a sheer piece of romance; we are not Jews, Abraham is ignorant of us, and Sarah acknowledges us not." It was the Ten Tribes in captivity who said, "Doubtless Thou art our Father, though Abraham is ignorant of us, and Israel acknowledge us not." They said, "We are Thine, Thou never barest rule over the heathen, they were not called by Thy name;" or, "Thy name was not put upon them" (see margin, Isa. lxiii. 16, 17, 19). Now God commanded Moses to put "His name upon the children of Israel, and I will bless them." I read in my Bible, that there are Two Houses of Israel, but only One House of Judah. We do not claim to be Jews. Why does Mr. Spurgeon persist in calling the Ten Tribes Jews, when neither Moses or the prophets call them Jews? There are no Jews but the sons of Judah. I read in my Bible that Israel and Judah are the two families whom the Lord hath chosen; I read of "the House of Israel" and the "House of Judah;" I read of "the kingdom of Israel" and "the kingdom of Judah;" I read that Israel is "the kingdom of the Lord;" I read that Judah was to cease from being a nation; while I read, Israel was never to cease from being a nation before the Lord for ever, as long as the sun, moon, and stars remain in the heavens; I read the Jews were to become "a remnant," while Israel was to become "a strong nation," and "the chief of the nations"—I read the Jews were to be a hissing and a by-word amongst the nations, "the show of their countenance was to testify against them;" I read that Israel was to be known "among the Gentiles," their offspring among the "people, all that see them shall acknowledge them to be the seed which the Lord hath blessed;" I read, when the Lord had "bent Judah for Him, and filled the bow in Ephraim, and raised up thy sons, O Zion, against thy sons, O Greece, and made them as a sword of a mighty man;" I read that Israel was to be "among the Gentiles, as a lion among the beasts of the forest;" I read the Lord said "He would be as the dew unto Israel, they were to be as the dew among the Gentiles;" I read, "Blessed is that nation whose God is the Lord, and the people whom He hath chosen for His own inheritance." "He hath not dealt so with any nation, and as for His judgments, they have not know them." Can the Jews say they have "not known God's judgments"? We acknowledge God blew with His winds, and scattered the Spanish Armada. If Mr. Spurgeon searches his Bible from Genesis to Revelation, he will not find that God has promised to fight for or defend any people but Israel. I read that "out of Bethlehem of Judah, should come forth He that is to be Ruler in Israel;" I read, the angel said, "Thou shalt call His name Jesus, and He shall reign over the House of Israel, or Jacob, for ever." Now, 1st.—I challenge anyone and everyone to show me the House of Israel, the Ten Tribes, God's house, nation, kingdom, and dominion, outside of the British Empire.

2nd.—To prove to me, from either the Old or New Testament, that the Ten Tribes are not a redeemed people, and under blessing.

3rd.—That the whole of the Epistles of St. Paul were not written to the Ten Tribes as Gentiles, God's Lo-Ammi.

Both Moses and St. Paul say "God would provoke the Jew to jealousy by them that are no people, and by a foolish nation He would anger them" (Deut. xxxii. 21; Rom. x. 19). Jeremiah (xvi. 19) says "the Gentiles shall come unto thee from the ends of the earth, and say our fathers have inherited lies." Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and his twelve sons, were the fathers of the Hebrews, Israel and Judah. Can Mr. Spurgeon inform us who the fathers of the Gentiles were? When the Church preaches the Identity, we shall hear very little of "the Down Grade," although we are told that in the latter days there shall be a great falling away.

Sure as Thy truth shall last,
To Zion shall be given
The brightest glories earth can yield,
And brighter bliss of heaven.

Zion is the House of Israel; Benjamin, the daughter of Zion; Judah, the Mount Zion.

I am, dear Sir, yours respectfully,

Plymouth. JAMES WRIGHT.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed: "Philo-Israel," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

SUBSCRIPTIONS. £ s. d.

Annual Subscription for one copy weekly (including the Twelve Double Numbers) post free 0 7 6
Two Copies (including Double Numbers) 0 13 6
Three Copies " " " 1 0 4
Four Copies " " " 1 5 6
Six Copies " " " 1 16 4

Post Office Orders to be made payable at the head office, St. Martin's-le-grand, London, to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C., or F. W. PARRY & Co., 29, Paternoster-row, London.

The Editor cannot undertake to return rejected MSS. unless stamps for the purpose be sent. Parties requiring an answer should enclose a stamp.

Contents Bills and Show Cards may be obtained on application to the Publishers.

Advertisements should be sent to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

Prepaid Advertisements are inserted at the rate of thirty words for 1s. 4d.

METROPOLITAN ANGLO-ISRAEL ASSOCIATION.

THE BIBLE READINGS

are held

EVERY TUESDAY AFTERNOON,

At 3.30, in the Library of the Association, 14, King William-street, Charing Cross, W.C. All friends are invited.

METROPOLITAN ANGLO-ISRAEL ASSOCIATION.

ON THURSDAY AFTERNOON, NOV. 22, at 3.30 o'clock, a Lecture will be delivered in the ASSOCIATION ROOMS, 14, King William-street, Charing Cross, W.C., by Mr. JOHN S. LOWE. Subject: "Jeremiah." JAMES BILLINGTON, Sec.

WILL any British-Israelite in BARNARD CASTLE, COUNTY DURHAM, willing to assist in forming a Local Association, kindly communicate by letter with R. C. Hitchcock.

ALL PUBLICATIONS ON THE IDENTITY OF THE LOST TRIBES OF ISRAEL

May be obtained at the Office of ROBERT BANKS & SON, RACQUET COURT, FLEET STREET.

The Banner of Israel (Weekly No. and Monthly Part). The Messenger, Two Witnesses, etc., forwarded immediately on publication at office rates. The Canadian Advance, post free for one year for 4s. 6d.

Catalogues post free on application.

WORKS BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

The History of the House of Israel. How They Were Lost and How They Were Found. Told for the children. Price 6d., cloth 1s.; post free 7d. and 1s. 1d. Fifth edition.

Anglo-Israelism. True, Not False. Being Philo-Israel's Reply to the Rev. Canon Bell's pamphlet, "Anglo-Israelism: True or False?" Price 1d., 6s. 6d. per 100. 16 pages, crown 8vo.

An Elementary Digest or Sketch of the Chief Facts and Teachings of the Great Pyramid of Egypt. Adapted to the Unlearned and Unscientific 56 pages, Illustrated with Diagrams, price 4d., post free 5d. 10th Thousand.

Are the English People the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel? An Inquiry Establishing the Identity of the British Nation with the Lost Ten Tribes. 4d.

Our Identity with the House of Israel. Price 4d., Reprinted from "Clifton Chronicle Letters.

Our Identity: What it is Not; What it is; and Our Obligations To-day in Respect to it Being a Lecture recently delivered in London by Philo-Israel, and published by special request. Price 2d., a reduction for quantities.

Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

The Origin of Masonic Ritual & Tradition:

A Lecture on the Three Degrees, by BRO. WM. ROWBOTTOM, P.M., with facsimile of a very rare Masonic engraving published in 1789.—Cloth, 2/6.

"Exquisitely clear and singularly correct in everything wherein I may be any authority or guide."—Professor PIAZZI SMYTH. "The Author seems to reason intelligently from his principles."—Literary Churchman.

London: R. Banks and Son, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C.; George Kenning, 16, Great Queen Street, W.C.

"A decidedly picturesque fairy-tale."—Spectator.

Eildon Grange: A Tale.

By ANDREW CLARK, M.A., Vicar of St. Michael's, Oxford. "Extremely readable."—Church Times. "Clever, graphic, and morally elevating."—Literary Churchman. "Of absorbing interest to boys."—Tablet. "Fresh and vigorous."—Church Bells. "The illustrations are very good and possess a distinct charm and piquancy."—Spectator.

Oxford: S. Rowbottom and Son; London: Hamilton, Adams and Co., 32, Paternoster Row, E.C.—Price 5s.

THE ANGLO-ISRAEL POST-BAG; or, How Arthur Came to See It. By the Right Rev. BISHOP TITCOMB. Price 2s. 6d. in cloth gilt; paper cover, 1s. 6d., by post 1d. extra.

THE ISRAELITES FOUND IN THE ANGLO-SAXONS. The Ten Tribes supposed to have been Lost, traced from the land of their captivity to their occupation of the Isles of the Sea. By WILLIAM CARPENTER. Price 2s. 6d., by post 2s. 8d.

THE ANSWER TO THE EASTERN QUESTION, With Some Facts Concerning the Identity of the British With Israel. By the Author of "The New Old Story," enlarged. Price 3d.; for distribution, 50 copies, 11s., post free.

CARDINAL PROOFS THAT THE BRITISH Are the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel—the Abrahamic Covenant. By F. W. PHILLIPS. With two chapters by PHILO-ISRAEL. Price 6d., post free 7d.

THE NEW OLD STORY. By "A E I." Price 6d., post free; in cloth, 1s., post free.

THE BIBLE ATLAS. To Illustrate the Old and New Testaments. Price 1s.; post free 1s. 1d.

ANGLO-ISRAEL TRACTS. 8 pp. Royal 16mo., on toned paper. Adapted to enclose in letters, and for general distribution. No. 1—12. Half-penny each, 12 copies, post free, 6d. Specimen packet for 6 stamps.

JEHOVAH TRIUMPHANT. The New and Complete Theology and Electric Light of the Bible, containing the History of British-Israel, Compiled from the Sacred Scriptures. Cloth gilt, price 10s. 6d., post free for Postal Order or Cheque.

THE GEOGRAPHY OF THE GATES. By PHILO-ISRAEL. With Map, and six full page, and one double-page, Illustrations, printed on plate paper. 208 pages, in handsome cloth, gilt. Price 3s. 6d.; post free.

THE WORD: THE WORLD: THE BRANCH. By J. LEYLAND FIELDEN, Esq. Price 12s., post free.

EPHRAIM-ENGLAND. The Nineteenth Century Revelation of the Fruits of History. By Rev. R. DOUGLAS, Vicar of Kidsgrove. Cloth gilt, lettered, 4s., gilt edges 5s., free by post.

FIFTY REASONS WHY THE ANGLO-SAXONS ARE ISRAELITES of the Lost Tribes of the House of Israel. By Rev. W. H. POOLE, D.D. Price 6d., post free 7d.

BIBLE LESSONS AND REFLECTIONS. By the late ROBERT GAIRDNER, of Kilmarnock, N.B. Price 2s. 6d., by post 2s. 9d.; cheap edition, limp cloth, 1s., by post, 1s. 2d.

R. BANKS & SON, RACQUET-COURT, FLEET-ST.

LUNG TONIC SAVE YOUR LIVES BY TAKING

OWBRIDGE'S LUNG TONIC

THE MIGHTY HEALER.

It has a power over disease hitherto unknown in Medicine.

Are you at all Weak-chested or inclined to be Consumptive, with just a touch of Cough now and then?

"Try this Wonderful Medicine." The Cough and Weakness will disappear as if by magic, and you will feel a strength and power you never had before.

HAVE YOU A COUGH?
A DOSE WILL RELIEVE IT!
HAVE YOU A COLD?
A DOSE AT BEDTIME WILL REMOVE IT.

Bronchitis & Asthma it relieves instantly

The Spasms of Coughing so dreadful in Whooping Cough become less with each dose of the medicine.

Prepared by W. T. OWBRIDGE Chemist, Hull

Sold in Bottles 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d. and 11s. by all Chemists and Patent Medicine Vendors. Wholesale all London and Provincial Houses.

LUNG TONIC

PIANOFORTES, Harmoniums, American Organs. Why buy at shops inferior made instruments, and pay large profits, when you can buy direct from the Maker High-class Instruments, and save 50 per cent. by so doing? Full value allowed for old Instruments in exchange as part payment. Write for Price Lists and Testimonials to A. G. LINSTEAD, Cobden Pianoforte Company, 5, Eversholt-street, Camden Town, London. Established 1874.

DE BEUVE'S GINGER CAKES

Are the most delicious Cakes in the world, and are highly recommended for invalids and the aged. They form an Unfailing Remedy for Constipation and Indigestion, and while most rich cakes disagree with children, these are very wholesome and conducive to health. Sent for 1s. Postal Order to any part of the Kingdom by Victor de Beuve, 3, Rood Lane, London, E.C.

GINGER CAKES

NEW BOOK BY DR. WILD.

Just Published, Price 3s., Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Lettered. Sent by Post on receipt of Published Price.

TALKS FOR THE TIMES.

BY JOSEPH WILD, M.A., D.D.,

Pastor of the Bond-st. Congregational Church, Toronto.

CONTENTS.—Chapter 1. A Gift of One Hundred and Ninety-Two Million Acres of Land. 2. The Return of the Jews to Palestine. 3. Folks that won't be Somebody. 4. The Four Prophecies of Egypt. 5. The Stone Kingdom and Dynamite; and the Orange ill. 6. "144!" 7. "666!" 8. The Transit of Venus. 9. The Miracles of Antichrist; and the High Rock Image of Massachusetts, U.S. 10. The an who could not sleep, and what came of it. 11. The Rainbow. 12. London Destroyed, and Jerusalem a Seaport. 13. Liberalism. 14. A Graft without a Stock. 15. Mouldy Bread and an Oath. 16. A Tombstone Inscription. 17. Dog Lappers. 18. How to get Rich.

ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London. JOHN MENZIES & Co., Edinburgh & Glasgow.

Just issued, price 2d., by post 2½d., 6 copies post free 1s.

SUPREMACY;

Or, The British Church versus The Church of Rome.

By E. M. RUSH ("A E I"),

Author of "The New Old Story," "The Answer to The Eastern Question," etc.

London: Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street.

SOUND, PURE, WHITE TEETH!

Those who value these will try

CARBOLINE

(The Great Sanitary Tooth Paste).

1/6 & 2/6 per Pot.

Through Chemists, or post free from the Makers,

GEORGE & WELCH

WORCESTER.

Lancet writes:—"To save the teeth use a good carbolic daily."

FITS! FITS!! FITS!!!

ALL persons suffering from Epilepsy should send Name and Address to JAMES OSBORNE, Medical Pharmacy, Ashbourne, Derbyshire, who will forward, free of charge, full particulars (with Testimonials) of the most successful remedy ever discovered for this distressing malady. Sent to all parts of the world. References permitted to Rev. J. Baker, M.A., 80, Bolton Road, Pendleton, Manchester.

HUMAN LIFE.—FIFTY YEARS' Record of Facts, Principles, and Discoveries (just published complete) Relating to the Improvement and Preservation of Human Life on Earth. Origin and true treatment of diseases. A series of articles by DR. SAMUEL BIRLEY, M.D., Ph.D. Book form, 50 pages. SENT FREE to every applicant by the publishers, GORDON B. MURRAY & CO., 50, Theobald's-road, Holborn, E.C. Write to-day.

Certain HARNESS' Cure.

ELECTROPATHIC BELT

FOR

RHEUMATISM

Major FAKENHAM, Longstone House, Armagh, writes:—"The Electropathic Belt has completely cured me of rheumatic gout. I suffered intense agony for two years. I now feel strong and active."

Guaranteed to generate a mild continuous current of Electricity, which speedily cures all Disorders of the Nerves, Stomach, Liver and Kidneys. Thousands of Testimonials. Pamphlet & Advice free on application to Mr. C. B. Harness, Consulting Electrician, the Medical Battery Co. Ltd.

Only Address,

52, OXFORD ST., LONDON, W. (Corner of Rathbone Place.)

Call to-day, if possible, or write at once

Printed and Published for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-st., London, E.C.; F. W. PARRY (late GUEST & Co.), 29, Paternoster-row. WEDNESDAY, NOV. 21, 1888 [All rights reserved.

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."

(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India.)

"And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the Forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS of the EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. XII., No. 622. Entered at Stationers' Hall.] WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 28, 1888. [PRICE ONE PENNY.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
The Transvaal Yields to the Blessing of Abraham	469
The British Empire and Contemporary Powers. By R. N. Adams, of New Zealand. Part II.	470
The Promises to the Fathers. By M. L. Streator	472
Germany and the African Slave Trade	473
The Strongest Empire in the World and the Coming General Conflagration	474
Progress in North Wales	474
Correspondence	475

THE TRANSVAAL YIELDS TO THE BLESSING OF ABRAHAM.

THERE are signs that the Transvaal Government are not inclined to push to extremities the foolish and dangerous order they lately issued respecting the language of the British majority noticed by us in BANNERS No. 605 and 606, pages 301 and 318. The Boers, who desire to carry matters with a high hand, are met by two great difficulties. In the first place the British who speak the detested English language are by far the strongest party in the State, by reason of their numbers and their consolidation in towns; whereas the Boers, who are ostensibly the governing race, are dispersed abroad all over a country as large as France, and the wealth of the land is not in their hands, but in those of the hated English. This is their first difficulty; but a graver one is behind. The English or British Power now surrounds them on all sides, and they cannot communicate with the outer world or the sea, without passing over independent territory now in possession of those same hated British. For instance, if they attempt as they lately did to go out to the north of the Transvaal, and occupy the country between their territory and the Zambesi, they will henceforth find that the British have proclaimed to the whole world that that zone is included in the lands where British influence shall prevail. No one may touch it without our consent! To that effect was Lord Salisbury's manifesto issued through Sir Hercules Robinson to the chief Khama. "You may rest assured that the law will be vigorously enforced against all persons who attempt to stir up strife between you and Lobengula on any pretext whatever, and that under no circumstances whatever will Her Majesty's Government tolerate any renewal in the British Protectorate of those filibustering raids which were so long a curse of Bechuanaland." These words are of course directed against the Boers, and relate to the country north of the Transvaal and Bechuanaland, right up to the banks of the River Zambesi. Towards the East the Boers are equally cut off from access to the sea, because since Dinizulu and his rebellion have been suppressed the British troops hold Zululand securely, and towards the North-east the projected Delagoa Bay Railway which the Boers wished to keep in their own hands has failed to become a Boer project, and is likely to have a British influence to direct it. The Boers, who do not increase, are thus hemmed in by the British on all sides, and in their midst, thanks to God's gift of gold and diamond mines to Israel, the foreign Israelitish element is already in the majority, and likely therefore to assume the Government of the Republic at no distant day! Some fine remarks of the Morning Post of Sept. 26, on this part of the subject, ought here to be quoted to the reader, as they will illustrate our views, and exhibit the hand of God manifestly working to favour His people Israel.

A year ago heavy clouds hung over the native territory, stretching from the northern borders of the Transvaal and Bechuanaland to the River Zambesi. Portugal, Germany, and the Transvaal Boers were known to entertain designs on the country, and it was feared that some hostile combination might lead to all access between Cape Colony and the heart of Africa being cut off. Even if an English Protectorate were established, there were doubts whether the Boers would recognise it, and suspend the filibustering expeditions they were believed to have in view. To-day the atmosphere is quite clear. The territory in question, belonging to the chiefs Khama and Lobengula, has been recognised by all rivals as part and parcel of the protected dominions of Great Britain, and instead of Boer raiding parties the country is being traversed in various directions by the well-armed prospecting expeditions of English companies. While the Transvaal is thus hemmed in and circumscribed on the north, the outlet through Zululand to the sea, on which the Boers have long had designs, has been completely blocked by the expulsion of Dinizulu, and the military hold established upon the country; and at the same time the failure of the Delagoa Bay railway to provide the Transvaal with a route rendering it totally independent of all others, has completed the feeling of dependence and isolation. Since, therefore, the Transvaal cannot now grow any larger, and can only maintain relations with the sea through non-Boer territory, the most sanguine local politician cannot expect very great things, even if the present Boer Republic be replaced by an English one. An independent existence it may maintain for a time, but sooner or later it is bound to join its fortunes with the other Colonies and States, and become part of the future South African dominion.

In short Israel's empire must grow; and where once her flag waved in token of possession, there it is sure to float again, as proof that God has given her back what she foolishly resigned under Mr. Gladstone's timorous policy, after the defeat at

Digitized by Google

Majuba Hill had stricken the terror of bloodguiltiness into his soul. The question just now is this. The Boers in a minority, and hemmed in by the mighty power of Israel surrounding them, must feel that after all they are only a small body of 40,000 or so of Boers, while the wealth-producing British in their midst are colonists and citizens of "the chief leading empire in the world." The end will probably be that before long there will be a fusion of British and Boers, and a united Republic be formed which at first will assume to itself the position of an independent State. This, as the Morning Post points out, cannot last long, but the new Transvaal will finally have to cast in its lot with the other portions of the great African Federation, and so become one of Israel's stately daughters in union with their old Mother in the West. Meanwhile the Boer government is becoming very rich, having a surplus revenue of over a quarter of a million sterling, which it does not know how to spend! The revenue is £865,000, and the expenditure only £611,988, leaving a surplus of £253,012 and cash balances amounting now to £378,072! Salaries are being increased to expend the surplus, and the temptation to obtain and enjoy these salaries is a powerful one to the British majority, who are striving to secure a share if not a monopoly in the Government of their adopted land. Whether this new form of government will be friendly or hostile to the British is ably discussed by the Morning Post, in the following sentences:—

So far from England resenting a transformation of the Boer Government in the Transvaal into a temporary English one, we believe the public would regard the change with pleasure; because, after all, it would be more satisfactory for the mother country to carry on diplomatic business with President Brown, Jones, or Robinson, elected by the English diggers, than with the English-hating President Kruger, or Joubert. Whatever the character of the institutions of the "New Transvaal," it is hardly possible that a community of Englishmen, for the most part new arrivals from home, would be worse disposed towards England than the men who fought against her at Laing's Nek and Majuba Hill. We believe it to be the general desire of the British public that the Transvaal question should be settled by the Transvaalers themselves, and we entertain the conviction that England would be far better pleased to see the Transvaal a contented English Republic, or an English-Boer Republic, with the Boer and English element living contentedly together, than see it a Crown colony, disaffected towards the mother country, and with the two races separated by an unappeasable animosity. England would watch this change with all the more equanimity to-day, because the conviction has grown upon her that the English race is at last the paramount race inSouth Africa, and whatever the ephemeral changes of this or the other colony or State there, the ultimate result will be a dominion, which, however much or however little it may differ from the Canadian type, will be loyal to the Empire.

In the meanwhile, among those who are flocking out by thousands to South Africa are the flower of the race, and we refuse to believe that these representatives of loyalty to the flag and love of the Empire will turn their back on their mother country and sink into the ranks of those who hate or dislike her, whether their lots be cast in the Cape Colony, the Transvaal, Natal, Bechuanaland, or the grand stretch of territory extending north to the Zambesi, over whose plains are now passing some of the most promising pioneers England has ever sent forth since she first commenced her career as a mother of colonies. In the hands of such men the honour of the Empire can be safely trusted, for their heart is true to Old England, and they will infallibly cherish the interests of the race, whatever the ephemeral character of the political institutions of the Transvaal and the Cape, before they reach the ultimate stage of an English dominion.

We hope our readers see from all this, how wonderfully the power of Israel is growing, and how rapidly God is giving to our race that which He promised, namely, "the kingdom and dominion and greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven" in general, and in South Africa in particular. In regard to the Transvaal He has let us see that although a too scrupulous statesman desired to thwart His divine decrees respecting His chosen people in ignorance of His designs, He worked out His own purposes very shortly after by the operation of two of the gifts He promised to the House of Joseph, namely, by vast increase of population, and consequent expansion in foreign lands, attracted to the locality by the gift to them there, and that exclusively, of gold and diamonds, coals and other mineral treasures, according to the prophecies (Gen. xlix. 22, 26; Deut. xxxiii. 13—17, R.V.). The Boers have been wholly unable to resist the power and will of God. For they are outnumbered, overpowered, and dwarfed, by the very race they thought they had once for all mastered at Majuba Hill; and to-day Israel is in the Transvaal, as elsewhere, "the head and not the tail, above only and not beneath," the Dutch and Boer population of South Africa (Deut. xxviii. 1, 13; Dan. vii. 27). Let us as a nation recognise the Lord's hand in all this, and give Him all the praise, since to Him but not to us, is it wholly and entirely due!

THE BRITISH EMPIRE AND CONTEMPORARY POWERS.

By R. N. Adams, of New Zealand.

(Continued from page 457).

PART II.

One thing which very largely contributes to this leading commercial condition of England is her magnificent fleet of merchant ships. It is more true to-day that in this respect "Britannia rules the waves" than at any previous time. In fact, it might almost be said that it is to her oceanic empire that Great Britain owes her wealth and influence. The sea and her gigantic mercantile navy enables Britain to trade in every market as no other nation can. Wherever there is a port there may be seen the triumphant colours of the Union Jack, declaring how penetrating and how adventurous are the people whose nationality it represents, and what facilities they possess for placing their wares in any market throughout the wide world. Her ships outnumber those of all other nations summed up in one grand total, for out of every 100 tons of shipping upon the ocean 54 per cent. are under the British flag. Not only in their numbers do Britain's ships maintain this leading position, but also in their size, carrying capacity, and speed; and as each year passes she gains a still further advantage upon her neighbours in this respect; and we hear such wails from America as follows, because of this state of things:—

"Twenty years ago we almost led the world; our ships were almost as numerous as those of England, and were even more numerous according to the proportion of the population. Since then England has enormously increased her shipping, while ours has enormously decreased." Some years ago America tried to remedy this by placing a heavy tax on all cargoes carried in foreign ships, allowing the freight of American vessels to pass almost free. But still the ships of England entering and clearing at the port of New York continue to outnumber those of the United States, and the condition of America's shipping is that in 1880 she only carried 15 per cent. of her own foreign merchandise. France is also in a state of agitation and perplexity over this maritime supremacy of England, and has offered large bounties to shipbuilders, as well as other facilities for the encouragement of a merchant marine. In fact, a commission appointed in 1881 to consider and report upon this matter has during the present year recommended the French Government to energetically promote a service of merchant steam-ships to compete with the English, stating at the same time that their present vessels are totally unfitted to compete with those with which they have to contend.

Commenting on the opening of the Langton and Alexandria Docks by the Prince of Wales, on the 8th of September, 1882, the London Times remarks: "Our shipping is not monopolising, but it is leading without a rival the carrying trade of the world. In the Norman ports our ships outnumber the native vessels by 20 to 1; our steamers have driven the Breton coasting brigs out of the water. We fill the ports of the Baltic, we tower above the bulwarks of the Italian steamers that share with us the harbours of the Mediterranean. We put a hundred girdles of steam communication round the globe. Our ships grow larger, our passenger vessels finer and more luxuriant." The returns of the Suez Canal give a fair idea of the proportion of shipping by each nation. Out of a total of 1,460 passing through the Canal in 1879, 1,127 were English, eighty-three were French, sixty were Dutch, fifty-two Italian, forty were Russian; and all the other nations were represented by smaller numbers.

Digitized by Google

The returns of the Canal for 1880 show the tonnage of British ships passing through as 2,247,305; French, 177,771; Dutch, 124,083; Austrian, 75,820; German, 38,162. Such figures are simply amazing, but the following statement nearly confounds us by the almost incredible position in which it places Britain's wealth in ships contrasted with the poverty of other nations during last year, 1882:—

	Sailing Vessels.	Steam Vessels.	Gross Tonnage.
Great Britain ...	18,035	4,317	5,352,549
America	6,054	941	—
Norway	4,112	185	—
Italy	3,054	127	—
Germany	2,871	354	—
France	2,536	414	—
Russia	2,155	189	—
Sweden	1,976	246	—
Greece	1,809	—	—
Spain	1,555	252	—
Holland	1,221	121	—
Denmark	1,165	233	—
Other Countries ...	1,941	396	3,404,932

An array of figures such as this requires no comment to enforce their significance. Britain is not only first in the list, but the first in such a conspicuous degree that the total carrying capacity of all below her, when aggregated, does not approach her individual tonnage by nearly two-fifths.

So important has Britain's maritime position become that M. Dupin, an eminent French writer of some years ago, has written the following:—"In Europe the British Empire borders at once towards the north on Denmark, on Germany, upon Holland, upon France; and towards the south upon Spain, Sicily, Italy, and Western Turkey. It holds the keys of the Adriatic and the Mediterranean; it commands the mouth of the Black Sea and the Baltic. . . . . In America it gives boundaries to Russia towards the Pole, and to the United States towards the temperate regions. Under the torrid zone, it reigns in the midst of the Antilles, encircles the Gulf of Mexico, till at last it meets those new States which it was the first to free from their dependence on Spain, to make them more surely dependent on their own commercial industry, and at the same time to scare in either hemisphere any mortal who might endeavour to snatch the heavenly fire of its genius or the secrets of its conquests. It holds midway between Africa and America, that rock to which it chained the Prometheus of the modern world." In such a strain this accomplished author continues his portraiture of what he is pleased to call the British Empire, whose boundaries he represents as the shores of the wide expanding oceans. From his language the logical conclusion follows: that wherever the billows of the ocean roll they are within this great Empire, and it is only when they reach the rock-girt coast of some foreign land that the frontier of the Empire of the British is reached.

It is in any case an indisputable fact that, so far as human occupation of the seas is concerned, almost five-eighths of it belongs to the British people, so much does our maritime commerce exceed that of all the rest of the world.

In respect to her power in a standing army, England may not make such an imposing show as some of her neighbours. To keep a great army always in harness is not so much demanded by insular England. Her rocky cliffs and ocean girdle serve her in much good service, and she is not in the same danger of invasion which threatens Continental States. Her navy, however, is larger and more efficient than any other afloat, and when in addition to this fact we keep in mind the skill, fortitude, and true courage of those by whom the vessels are manned, without one word of egotism we may place the navy of England against any other that could meet it on the seas. Our commanders still are fit and worthy successors of a Grenville, a Hawke, and even a Nelson; while our seamen, if called upon, could show that not one spark of the ancient British pluck has deserted them since the days of our former heroes.

Our army, if not great, is proved to be composed of good and noble stuff—of men who "have not yet learned to know when they are beaten," and it is led by officers who are of the first rank in Europe. We only need to mention our last little war to convince all of the skill and prudence with which our British officers can manage their troops. Nor need we further illustration to show with what alacrity the army can be got ready and transported to the scene of action. No other nation could have landed such a force in Egypt in so short a time, at the same time making ample provision for the perfection of the whole expedition, and the thorough arrangements of all the affairs for the comfort and health of the soldiers. We are not ponderous, but we are active; we are not anxious for war, but we are never unprepared to do our duty when the interests of our commerce or the peace and safety of our subjects are at stake. We are reluctant to strike, but when we do we generally teach a practical lesson. We never fire a gun for the mere sake of snubbing a foe, nor ever merely for the sake of extending our own authority, unless that at which we point our gun has first threatened to unfairly interfere beyond its true province. Our arms are intended only for the settlement of disputes in the interests of general peace and impartial justice. When we send out those little armed companies as the arbiters of justice, how insignificant they seem to be when judged by the Continental standard of armies, or by the numbers against whom they go. But they never fail, unless it be in some bungled Transvaal affair, where, not the soldier, but the Government, neglect their duty. Whether it be at Agincourt or Tel-el-Kebir, in the Crimea or the Indian Mutiny, they always succeed in their mission, even as in the great world-peace-making fight of Waterloo, they complete the work with honour, and leave the field with renown. If few in number, they seem always to be sufficient for their work. Wherever their power lies they seem able to assert it, to the astonishment of their foes—sometimes to the wonder of the world. But it should be remembered that a nation's greatness does not depend on her fighting power. The age of blood is now giving place to the era of commercial rivalry.

There is a notion very commonly expressed that the Jews are the masters of the financial world. This is as great a mistake as it is a common statement. We are constantly reminded of the special gift of this race to get wealth, and to employ it to advantage. We are directed to the economy of the Germans, to the thrift of the French, and to the business tact and energy of the Americans, as if these nations were more frugal and saving than our own. Yet with all their virtues and abilities they cannot approach the British as money-makers. In the reign of our present Queen there has been nearly one-half more money coined in Britain than was done during the whole previous history of the Empire. The amount of wealth annually added to the nation is set down at something like two thousand millions sterling. The wealth accruing during the last forty years, from the labours of one class of artizans alone a long way surpasses the amount of the national debt—that is, the labours of the builders of the United Kingdom. If to this we add the material wealth augmented by the labour of all the classes of trades can we wonder at the fact just mentioned? But, in addition to this, we, the British people, possess a source of wealth such as no other people can command—that is the amount of capitalised wealth we have lying at interest in the hands of foreign nations, which of itself keeps a constant flow of wealth pouring into the coffers of the Empire. At the present time there are twenty-nine foreign States paying interest to the British for money lent to them; while Britain, on the other hand, does not pay interest to any foreigner on account of her national debt. So that, while she receives into herself this great river of wealth, she sends none of it out through a similar channel into an absorbing ocean, but retains it for the good and enrichment of her own people. The loans by Jews are trifles compared with those from the British. From this source alone there comes into the great vortex of the British financial world the gigantic sum of over 120 millions sterling per annum; so that in seven years, from this one source alone, enough money comes into Britain to pay off the whole of her national debt. The financial influence of the insular people is seldom realised by themselves, although frequently referred to by Continental and foreign nations. Is it possible that those fifteen loans which Russia holds from the British has no influence, or that those twenty-five times which Turkey and Egypt have had to draw money from England have no weight in the balance of power? Does the indebtedness of France not in some degree account for the relations subsisting between Paris and Westminster? Or is it probable that the fact of Austria having six unredeemed loans from Britain does not in any way lay them under obligations to us? Can we suppose that the five times in which the once wealthy Spaniards have had to come for help to our door does not affect our position towards them?

Digitized by Google

Of Britain's commercial superiority M. Clement Routier, of Paris, has written the following:—

"The rivalry apparently likely to arise through events in Egypt between England and France is calculated to cause no little concern among those anxious for our great political and commercial interests. That rivalry, now latent, may at any moment flame out—than which nothing could be more injurious for us. People go about repeating every day that English influence is predominant in all the markets of the world, in every port, and in every river, and that it must be energetically withstood. This superiority, which it would be childish to deny, is after all but the logical result of the activity and intelligence of the English people. . . . . The English are superior to us as merchants and colonisers. Be it so; but, as we know it, since this is a fact as clear as daylight, why not unite with them, without arrière pensèe? Nothing could be more profitable for both nations. Our rivalry, on the contrary, can only serve the game of other nations."

These are words of straightforward acknowledgment. The French know well that we have the wealth, and the genius to employ it to advantage; and they see that we have secured the dominant influence of the commerce of all markets, and they are looking the stern facts square in the front.

To the same effect are the words of a recent German writer in the Cologne Gazette:—"It is no mere accident that the Germans who have had everlasting wars to wage with their neighbours have always been good friends with their kindred the world-controlling islanders. The foes of England say the English are a 'selfish, shop-keeping nation,' but commerce can never disunite nations as soon as they are penetrated with the conviction that both parties to a trade-bargain gain by it."

Here lies the grand secret of England's great influence. The other nations know well that they cannot afford to shut their ports to British imports or their markets to British wares, for Britain is the world's warehouse, and as necessary to the common prosperity of universal trade, as is the important wholesale merchant to the facilities of the retail traders. The world seems to look upon this state of things as nothing abnormal. It does not appear to be regarded as at all out of place that the race whose home seat is the little island of England should stand foremost as the "world-controlling islanders." It is no part of our plan to deprive our neighbours of territory, or to wrest from them by any unfair means their markets or other rights, and so we are not looked upon with any suspicion but such as creates a healthy rivalry in trade and the civil arts.

(To be continued.)

THE PROMISES TO THE FATHERS.

By M. L. Streator.

"His seed shall become a multitude of nations," is Jehovah's covenant of promise concerning Ephraim. The words in this divine blessing, those translated "multitude" and "nation," need careful attention and a strict scrutiny in order that we may perceive their real and full meaning, in which is involved the relation of this promise to other portions of the Scriptures of truth. Being the basis of some of the most solemn warnings and glorious predictions in the Word of God, we should search for the truth deposited in it as for hidden treasures. In a recent number of the "Christian Standard," Prof. C. L. Loos said: "No new objective revelation, in Bible things, will be made to man; but new subjective revelations will come to multitudes—that is, a better, a fuller, and a deeper understanding of the world of knowledge contained in the Holy Scriptures." May the God of Israel enlighten our minds that we "may be filled with the knowledge of His will in all spiritual wisdom and understanding" (Col. i. 9).

As formerly stated, the word translated "multitude" has in both the common and revised versions the marginal rendering, "Heb., fulness." We advanced in our last article some sentiments indicating its significance as a preparation for a more thorough investigation. The original word is melo. The Hebrew Lexicon of Gesenius, edited by Tregelles, defines it thus: (1) Fulness; hence that which is full; followed by a genitive. Also, with the addition of the thing with which anything is full (Amos vi. 8). "'The city and those who fill it;' that is its inhabitants (Isa. xlii. 10). 'The island and its inhabitants.' Hence (2) multitude, crowd." This great linguist defines the verb form thus: "To fill, to make full." He says: "This root is widely extended in the Indo-Germanic languages." He traces its derivatives through the Sanscrit, Greek, Latin, Gothic, and German to the English full, to fill. He says: "The original idea is that of abundance, overflowing. Specially—to fill, as anything does a vacant space with its own bulk or abundance (Gen. i. 22), fill the waters in the seas (Ex. xl. 34); the glory of Jehovah filled the tabernacle."

Melo is translated fulness eight times in both the King James version and the Westminster revision. The following are the passages:

"The earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof; The world and they that dwell therein" (Psa. xxiv. 1).

"If I were hungry I would not tell thee: For the world is Mine and the fulness thereof" (Psa. l. 12).

"The heavens are Thine, the earth also is Thine; The world and the fulness thereof, Thou hast founded them" (Psa. lxxxix. 11).

"Let the sea roar and the fulness thereof" (3 times: 1 Chron. xvi. 32; Psalms xcvi. 11; xcviii. 7).

"The land was desolate, and the fulness thereof" (Ezek. xix. 7).

"Blessed of the Lord be His land, for the precious things of the heart and the fulness thereof" (Deut. xxxiii. 16).

These examples show the use of the term melo, and show that it is applied to the land, the earth, the sea, and the world. They also exhibit its real significance, which is the same as that of our word fulness, "state of being filled so as to leave no part vacant." It expresses the totality, the entire contents of the thing to which it is applied. The parallelism in the poetical expressions confirms this meaning. The desolation of the fulness of the land expresses its utter desolation. The blessing involving the precious things of the earth and the fulness thereof includes the whole world "unto the utmost bound of the everlasting hills." This is the heritage of Ephraim. It is a significant and startling fact that throughout the Scriptures inspired of God the fulness of the earth, the fulness of the sea, and the fulness of the world is given to Joseph and Ephraim.

Digitized by Google

Dr. Robert Young, in the preface to the second edition of his translation of the Bible, says: "The aim of the whole is simply to give a photographic likeness of the Scriptures—only in English instead of the original tongues." The lexical testimony concerning the meaning of the term melo, and the scriptural passages illustrating its use and significance, confirm the marginal reading of our Bibles and the literal and exact translation given by Dr. Young. His seed is the fulness of the nations. When the Lord answered Job out of the whirlwind He said: "Whatsoever is under the whole heaven is Mine" (Job. xli. 11).

As the earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof He has the right to give it to whomsoever He pleases. "The Most High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever He will" (Dan. iv. 32). He wills to give it to him who will accomplish His purposes. It is the good pleasure of His will in the fulness of the times to give the fulness of the world to the fulness of the people of that race which He chose in the beginning and has preserved through the ages as the fittest to receive it. In doing so the Judge of all the earth does right. He deprives no nation or race of its heritage till it has shown its own utter unworthiness and unfitness for it. Divine judgments annihilate every incorrigible race. As God has dealt in the past with nations abandoned to lust, lawlessness and violence so He will deal with them in the future, and utterly destroy them from off the face of the earth.—Christian Standard.

Cincinnati, Ohio, United States, Sept. 8, 1888.

GERMANY AND THE AFRICAN SLAVE TRADE.

THE debate in the House of Lords on Nov. 6, in respect to the British policy in East Africa is remarkable for one or two important facts which ought to be brought to the especial notice of BANNER readers and their opponents. In the first place, there was the Earl of Harrowby's testimony that the British have found favour with the native races along the coasts of East Africa, but that the Portuguese, the French and Germans are detested. The earl said:—

> He trusted that the Prime Minister would be able to assure them that in any attack made by Germany on that coast, whether in retaliation or for the purpose of putting down the slave trade, the English flag would not be seen with hers. The men along that coast had befriended English missionaries, and had shown the greatest goodwill towards the English race. It would be absolutely fatal to our influence over that district if the English flag were seen joined with that of Germany in anything like an attack upon these men. He hoped that, while showing all anxiety to show a friendly and neighbourly feeling towards the Germans, we should be careful at this moment, when they had become odious to the native races, not to associate ourselves with them. Portugal, France, and Germany were out of favour with the native races, while the English name had always been held in high esteem, and it was therefore important that we should not be identified by the natives with those countries. (Hear, hear).

The plain English of which it appears to us is, that the British being Israel, "their seed is known among the Gentile nations, and their offspring among the peoples, all that see them acknowledge them that they are the seed which the Lord hath blessed" (Isa. lxi. 9, R.V.). The Portuguese, French and Germans being non-Israelites, and therefore Gentiles, have not the Lord's blessing, and all who see them refuse to acknowledge them as the seed of Israel. The German East African Company have committed great errors in the treatment of the natives, who have consequently risen up in arms against them and turned them out of the country, while they protect and cling to our countrymen who are there as their missionaries, or as traders dealing with them. The Prime Minister, in his speech in the House of Lords, said that in his opinion the terrible misfortunes of the German Company were due to the late vast increase of the slave trade as "the disposing cause." We hardly see how this can be the case. The Germans never till now thought of opposing that horrible traffic, and as to their colonies founded all along the coast, which Lord Salisbury thought were going to kill the traffic, where are they? The Germans do not colonise, especially in the tropics, and the slave-dealers must have had strong imaginations to induce them to stir up strife against the Germans on this account! Our ships and agencies have for years been against the slave trade; and we have as colonists done much for Africa, but no one lifts a finger against our people! The fact is the Germans do not know how to treat subject races considerately, and not being Israel have not Israel's blessing.

The question now is, whether we do right to associate ourselves with the German navy at all for the purpose of putting down the export of slaves and import of arms into East Africa. Opinion is divided on the subject, but we believe a wise resolution has been arrived at to join hands with Germany as long as she will help us to operate at sea (and at sea alone), against this hellish traffic. We can do no harm to the innocent population who suffer in Africa from the trade, because as Lord Salisbury said, "We have the good will of all the innocent population of those coasts." The ill-will of the slave-traders themselves we shall never lose, but must break them up and ruin their commerce, at all hazards, if we are ever to evangelise and civilize Africa. We are more than sceptical whether Germany will ever do any good to the Africans, because we know the former are not Israel, who alone are commissioned from on high to liberate the slaves, "to let the oppressed go free," and "to break every yoke" (Isa. lviii. 6, R.V.). The German's zeal for the suppression of the slave trade is quite newborn, as everybody well knows, and therefore highly suspicious. It has arisen from their desire to put down the opposition to their schemes for colonization and foreign trade, which has a very different source. They are hated for their violence by the innocent population around them, because they do not know how to study the prejudices and weaknesses of the natives, and thereby make their rule popular.

We are glad to find from German sources that the German East African Company will probably go into liquidation, and that "the fiasco of that company can now no longer be disguised." Of course the German Government will not openly renounce their protectorate over the portion of East Africa they claim, but it is difficult to see, if they cannot carry on trade and commerce, or found colonies on the coast, why they should go to the trouble and expense of putting down the slave trade or professing an interest in its future well-being when they are forbidden by the people to land, and cannot subdue it by force of arms? Africa can be subjugated by the Gospel of Christ, aided by the good and beneficent Government, which by God's grace Israel provides for all native races He has entrusted to her charge. But swords and cannon, violence and force, will not make a way for Teutonic settlements in a land which can only be held by an alien race, ruling as India is ruled in the fear of God, and with due regard and sympathy for the subject native populations.

Digitized by Google

THE STRONGEST EMPIRE IN THE WORLD, AND THE COMING GENERAL CONFLAGRATION.

On the 26th October there appeared in one of our provincial journals two consecutive leading articles headed, the one, "The Strongest Empire in the World," and the other, "A Savage and Rude Nation." The empire described as the strongest in the world was the British Empire federated; the savage and rude nation was what the semi-official German papers declared was the true character of the French, thus treating the latter with insolence and insult, provocative of the coming general conflagration which the writer declared was at the doors. The British Empire federated was what the journalist desired. It would, he said, be the strongest in the world, and able to defy all comers.

Both Lord Rosebery and Lord Brassey have been speaking sensibly regarding Imperial Federation. The former says it is possible and practicable, and should be carried out; the latter that the colonies desire Federation, and that they would be strengthened by a closer connection and union with their old mother in the West. There was one serious objection, in the view of the journalist, to the proposed Federation, and that was that there was doub twhether Great Britain could just now defend herself in case of war. There can be no prospect of Federation while the colonists can reply to our invitation on the subject "that they could not afford to place themselves under the protection of a Power which was notoriously weaker than her neighbours, and unable to resist them." The writer said:—

One essential duty which England has to perform is to get rid of the notion that she is unable to defend herself. It stands to reason that as long as there may be room for controversy on this point there will be no Imperial Federation. For Federation would create new responsibilities for the Colonies. They would not be to blame if they were inclined to take the chance of what might happen to them, rather than run the risk of linking their fortunes to those of a defenceless mother country. The First Lord of the Admiralty recently made a speech in regard to the intentions of the Government with reference to the condition of ironclads, which satisfied even the alarmists. When the programme of naval defence now before the country shall be carried out, England will be in a position to invite the colonists to consider seriously the question of Federation. Perhaps the invitation may come from the Colonies, which are quite sensible of the advantages that Federation would bring to them. On our side the advantages hardly need to be named. We, at any rate, should be saddling ourselves with no fresh responsibilities. We should merely consolidate the scattered dominions of an Imperial throne. Union is strength, all the world over.

The advice here given to us to defend ourselves, and look to our scattered Empire in order to give it a united front against its possible enemies, singularly accords with God's command to His people Israel in Isa. xxvi. 19, 20 (R.V.): "Come, My people, enter thou into thy chambers, and shut thy doors about thee; hide thyself for a little moment, until the indignation be overpast. For behold the Lord cometh forth out of His place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity; the earth also shall disclose her blood, and shall no more cover her slain." God would have us shut our doors about us after we have entered into our chambers, meaning, we conclude, that the nation's Gates, home and foreign, must be adequately guarded and protected from the attacks of foreign foes, as well as from the entry and invasion of her envious neighbours. This done, God undertakes the rest. He will protect the Empire, and secure from harm its component elements. So in the case of Noah and the Deluge, which destroyed the world outside the ark. The patriarch had, by God's command, to build the ark which was to shelter him, and then, before the cataclysm, God shut him in. After that, the ungodly world experienced the wrath of God, which swept them all away, while Noah, his family, and the saved creatures in the ark of safety, were preserved.

It is remarkable that the writer we have quoted, in the next article alluded to, after noticing the insolence of the German press towards their French neighbours at this crisis, concludes thus:—

The outspoken German language will be taken at its true meaning. It means that Germany is frankly indifferent whether she may offend France or not. It seems also to indicate that Germany would rather offend France than not. Undoubtedly, some people will say, Germany is in a position which enables her to assume this tone. But the question arises whether it is wise in any nation, however strong, to treat a powerful neighbour with insolence. The behaviour of Germany would seem to indicate that there is more in the recently concluded "League of Peace" than meets the eye. France has an unsettled Government, and some of her people are turbulent; but she does not deserve to be addressed in the strain in which Germany addresses her. At present there is no alliance between France and Russia; but events on the South-east of Europe may at any moment precipitate a quarrel between Russia and Austria. Can it be that Prince Bismarck desires to hasten the general conflagration which must come, sooner or later?

The general conflagration is considered imminent, and the parties to suffer designated. There are the two against three, the three against the two. Russia and France against Germany, Austro-Hungary, and Italy. At the very hour when the terrible earthquake war-woe between these giant Powers is imminent, the warning from on high is issued, the echoes of which are repeated in our press and our pulpits, on our platforms and our Senate, bidding us to confederate with our colonies, to form one united empire, and increase our defensive strength by sea and on land, that we may adequately safeguard our houses, protect our Outland Empire, and defend our floating commerce throughout the world!

We look on Isa. xxvi. 19 as a command from God Himself issued to His people. They are directed to "enter into their chambers and shut their doors, and hide themselves for a little moment," what time God's righteous indignation takes effect upon the nations of the earth. This command must perforce be obeyed by us, God's people Israel. The fortification of the home and foreign Gates will surely be effected. Israel will certainly be hidden and shut in by the Lord so as to be safe and secure from the tempests of God's fiery wrath which will rage outside. The cataclysm and conflagration will come and go, and will spend its fury on the nations of the disobedient, but the chosen ones of the empire and kingdom of the Lord, even British-Israel, will be safe and secure, hidden in the hollow of the Lord's hand, who is their Protector, their Saviour, and their God. Let Israel therefore praise the Lord for His goodness towards the people of His good pleasure, even towards "the Israel of God" (Gal. vi. 16, R.V.)

PROGRESS IN NORTH WALES.

We have not heard from our fellow helper, Mr. E. W. Deane, in North Wales, for some months, and his work has almost escaped the memory no doubt of our readers. But he is still active in endeavouring to propagate the "good news" we all have at heart, and will be glad to receive any spare copies of the Banner or other literature which his friends may have to give away. Parcels intended for the purpose may be addressed to "Mr. E. W. Deane, Post Office, Tywyn, Conway, North Wales." The report of his past proceedings is contained in the following sentences Mr. Dean has forwarded to a mutual friend:—"I am happy to say," he reports, "that many of the Welsh people have embraced our truths; but I found them at first very prejudiced against anything new, however plain and simple the matter before them. But when I succeeded in winning over some of them, explaining the subject in their native tongue, they gave attention, and are now regular readers of Identity works. My little library is almost done, as it has been in constant use for nearly three years. I hope to be able to replenish it myself next spring. I have endeavoured to establish an Association at Llandudno, but owing to the frequent changing about of believers it has been hardly possible to form a substantial committee. Ministers and others do not look unfavourably on our literature. I hope early next year to be able to lay before many, such leaflets and other works as I have wanted this last two years. Though hitherto invisible, I hope the fruit will show forth shortly. It is very gratifying to me to be able to say that many have not only embraced the truth, but are earnestly commending it to others. I have supplied many of our small trading vessels calling here for slates. Owing to the increased trade at the port, I shall be compelled to ask for additional literature to circulate among these ships, if the readers of the BANNER can spare it to me for the purpose. The BANNERS I have received from you from time to time I can only keep for a very short time—a few hours, because our postman is sure to tell others, 'Deane's BANNERS have come!' My class are all believers and our minister is gradually coming to the truth. I hope there is great progress in London? The truth is spreading all over the world; and may the God of Israel grant His blessing on this work!"

Digitized by Google

Such is Mr. Deane's testimony and we cannot but say a hearty "Amen!" to his last sentence. Without God's blessing, all our efforts will prove utterly vain. But with it there is nothing we shall be unable to accomplish. Our subject is enlisting a vast army of those who publish the truth, and men and women too are active in its propagation. It seems to us that God is effecting the publication of the Identity chiefly by means of personal and individual effort, but in a far less degree by the action of the associations and corporate bodies, the journals and quarterlies which are at much cost and labour endeavouring to diffuse a knowledge of the subject, with hardly commensurate effect. No doubt, however, all agencies are needed for the purpose, and as time goes on we expect new and powerful means will be found to hasten the publication of the "good news," and its reception by the masses of the House of Israel, who at present either do not know of the matter at all, or failing to appreciate the evidence, do not see that the case is proved and the Identity an established fact. The most potent method of convincing the people that this nation is Israel, is probably that furnished by the events of our times. The expansion of the empire, the new protectorates, and annexations of fresh territories to the Dominions of the Queen of which we hear so often in the present times, produce a startling effect on our people and put them on inquiry as to the origin of the race. History cannot give any satisfactory reply to this question, and none can be found except in the pages of the word of God, where the discovery is made that the blessings which the British folk exhibit in such wonderful profusion to-day are the very same God bound Himself upon oath to confer upon Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and "his seed for ever in the latter days." The case, therefore, is complete. The British must be Israel as God is true, since there cannot be two nations similarly endowed by God as He promised to endow Israel. This nation being possessed of all the blessings in question, can be no other than Israel, and this must bring conviction to minds reasonably exercised, that the Lost Ten Tribes are found, detected by the exact resemblance and likeness of the British to them.

Correspondence.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—Herewith please receive an extract from the Thames Evening Star, of 28th Sept., '88. The subject of the extract was the first regular meeting for the inauguration of the "Israel Identity Class." A preliminary meeting was held two weeks previously, at which were present four believers and four opponents, at which it was resolved "to form a class for the investigation of Scriptural and other evidence, with a view to the identification of the 'whole House of Israel.'" You will see from the above, and the name adopted, that the platform is very broad. The result of the meeting, alluded to in the extract, was the enrolment of sixteen members, and there is every promise of a large addition being made to this already very respectable nucleus.

I am requested to ask you on behalf of the class whether the free distribution department could spare a small quantity of literature, which would materially assist us in spreading the "good news."

I remain, dear sir, yours sincerely,
JNO. W. BRAME, Secy. I. I. C.

Thames, New Zealand, Sept. 30th, 1881.

The following is the extract in question :—

"A meeting of the Israel Identity Class took place last evening in the Pollen Street Lecture Hall, and the attendance was larger than had been anticipated. Mr. W. Pepper, who presided, opened the meeting with a brief speech expressing his pleasure at the formation of a class to consider the subject of the Identity of the British with the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel, and urging the members to prosecute their investigations with zeal and energy. Messrs. J. W. Brame and R. M. Morgan were elected Secretary and Treasurer respectively. A Committee was also formed to draw up rules for the guidance of the Class, and the Treasurer was authorised to open a donation fund for the purpose of procuring literature bearing upon the subject. It was decided to hold the meetings of the Class every alternate Thursday evening, and a number of names, including that of one lady, were enrolled on the list of membership."

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR SIR,—Kindly permit me to thank your many readers for the large amount of literature they have enabled me to distribute during the year at Brighton.

I have had sent me about 3,000 BANNERS, 1,000 of which were from Mr. Banks, 1,000 "Who Are You"? 800 of which were from Mrs. Thompson, of Bath, about 2,000 Philo-Israel leaflets and tracts, 1,000 of which were from Capt. Bayly; a large quantity of "Life from the Dead," "Glory Leaders," &c., from Isaac Loveland, Esq.; one or two parcels of tracts and pamphlets every month from the Free Distribution Fund. These, with Liverpool and Dublin tracts and pamphlets of all sorts, "Messenger," "British-Israelite" and "Good Tidings" go to make up what cannot be less than 12,000 papers, &c., distributed at my Monday evening lectures on the beach and on Sunday mornings at the sea-side, in the park, and some of it from house to house.

I have only had ten fine Monday nights during the Summer upon which I lectured on the beach, usually to good and attentive audiences. I also gave two lectures at St. Leonards to appreciative audiences.

I have to thank my friend Mr. B— for kindly using his influence with the Press, and sending three or four short reports of lectures which were inserted nearly every week.

I have also to thank Mrs. Wilson Melville for sending me a banneret to hang up at the meetings, which announces "British Israel lecture to-night."

I have to thank several friends for adding useful literature to my library; Mrs. Bayly for her sweet little book, "The Story of our English Bible"; Miss Sharpe for a volume of "Good Israelite Prayer;" Miss Jamieson for some volumes of the Sunday at Home, containing the history of the Jews since their dispersion; Miss Willis, of Folkestone, for several useful works and Vols. 6 and 7 of the BANNER, bound; Miss M. M. James has kindly presented me with Vols. 1, 2 and 3 of the BANNER bound, and Vol. 1 of "Life from the Dead." I have also to thank her for her kind sympathy with my work.

We our doing our best to compel the people to hear and read on the subject, and leave results with God. What we want in Brighton is courage of conviction on the part of those who believe in the subject, who hold back from professing to believe it on account of clerical and ministerial opposition; but in spite of all this the subject is gradually making its way, and please God to spare my life until next summer I intend to give my lectures on Sunday afternoons.

I beg to thank you for so kindly appealing to your readers for literature.

I am, yours truly,
H. A. MARCHANT.

60, Upper Lewes-road, Brighton, Nov. 10, 1888.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed: "Philo-Israel," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

SUBSCRIPTIONS. £ s. d.

Annual Subscription for one copy weekly (including the Twelve Double Numbers) post free 0 7 6
Two Copies (including Double Numbers) 0 13 6
Three Copies " " " 1 0 4
Four Copies " " " 1 5 6
Six Copies " " " 1 16 4

Post Office Orders to be made payable at the head office, St. Martin's-le-grand, London, to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C., or F. W. PARRY & Co., 29, Paternoster-row, London.

The Editor cannot undertake to return rejected MSS. unless stamps for the purpose be sent. Parties requiring an answer should enclose a stamp.

Contents Bills and Show Cards may be obtained on application to the Publishers.

Advertisements should be sent to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

Prepaid Advertisements are inserted at the rate of thirty words for 1s. 4d.

METROPOLITAN ANGLO-ISRAEL ASSOCIATION.

THE BIBLE READINGS
are held
EVERY TUESDAY AFTERNOON,
At 3.30, in the Library of the Association, 14, King William-street, Charing Cross, W.C. All friends are invited.

METROPOLITAN ANGLO-ISRAEL ASSOCIATION.

ON THURSDAY EVENING, NOV. 29th, at 7.30 o'clock, a Lecture will be delivered in the ASSOCIATION ROOMS, 14, King William-street, Charing Cross, W.C., by Rev. JAS. S. FORSYTH, M.A. Subject: "Facts about Creation."
JAMES BILLINGTON, Sec.

MISS WESTON acknowledges, with thanks, 10s., from "Henrietta," for the Building Fund of the Sailor's Rest, Devonport.

Price 2s. 6d., Cheap Edition, 1/-

BIBLE LESSONS AND REFLECTIONS.

By ROBERT GAIRDNER, of Kilmarnock, N.B.

"Mr. Gairdner has given us in his book a series of Bible lessons with his own reflections added thereto, and though he has been very cautious in the latter, and has not committed himself too broadly, he has plainly let it be seen that he is an Anglo-Israelite by conviction, and that the Scriptures which he quotes at length and extensively throughout his book, are meant to teach Our Identity and God's faithfulness, from first to last, to His promises to Abraham and his seed for ever."—Banner of Israel.

ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-st.

WORKS BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

The Geography of the Gates. By Philo-Israel. With Map, and six full page, and one double page illustrations, printed on plate paper. 208 pages, in handsome cloth, gilt. Price 3s. 6d., post free.

The History of the House of Israel. How They Were Lost and How They Were Found. Told for the children. Price 6d., cloth 1s.; post free 7d. and 1s. 1d. Fifth edition.

Anglo-Israelism. True, Not False. Being Philo-Israel's Reply to the Rev. Canon Bell's pamphlet, "Anglo-Israelism: True or False?" Price 1d., 6s. 6d. per 100. 16 pages, crown 8vo.

Are the English People the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel? An Inquiry Establishing the Identity of the British Nation with the Lost Ten Tribes. 4d.

Our Identity with the House of Israel. Price 4d., Reprinted from "Clifton Chronicle Letters.

Our Identity: What it is Not; What it is; and Our Obligations To-day in Respect to it. Being a Lecture recently delivered in London by Philo-Israel, and published by special request. Price 2d., a reduction for quantities.

Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

The Origin of Masonic Ritual & Tradition: A Lecture on the Three Degrees, by BRO. WM. ROWBOTTOM, P.M., with facsimile of a very rare Masonic engraving published in 1789.—Cloth, 2/6.

"Exquisitely clear and singularly correct in everything wherein I may be any authority or guide."—Professor PIAZZI SMYTH. "The Author seems to reason intelligently from his principles."—Literary Churchman.

London: R. Banks and Son, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C.; George Kenning, 16, Great Queen Street, W.C.

"A decidedly picturesque fairy-tale."—Spectator.

Eildon Grange: A Tale.

By ANDREW CLARK, M.A., Vicar of St. Michael's, Oxford. "Extremely readable."—Church Times. "Clever, graphic, and morally elevating."—Literary Churchman. "Of absorbing interest to boys."—Tablet. "Fresh and vigorous."—Church Bells. "The illustrations are very good and possess a distinct charm and piquancy."—Spectator.

Oxford: S. Rowbottom and Son; London: Hamilton, Adams and Co., 32, Paternoster Row, E.C.—Price 5s.

CHOICE CHRISTMAS BOOKS.

Now Ready. Crown 8vo., cloth. Sent post free on receipt of P.O. for 7/6, net.

LIGHT AND COLOUR
Emblematic of Revealed Truth.
By the LATE MAJOR NICKLE.
EDITED BY
SARAH SHARP,
Author of "My Jewels," etc.
With Explanatory Coloured Diagrams.
LONDON:
HODDER & STOUGHTON, 27, PATERNOSTER ROW.

ALSO,

"MY JEWELS"
By SARAH SHARP.
Price 4s. 6d., 2s., and 1s. 8d., net. Postage 2d.
R. BANKS & SON, RACQUET-COURT, FLEET-ST.

Published by ROBERT BANKS & SON,
RACQUET COURT, FLEET STREET, E.C.

Postal Orders may be obtained at any Post Office in the United Kingdom for the following amounts: 1s., 1s. 6d., ½d. each; 2s., 2s. 6d., 3s., 3s. 6d., 4s., 4s. 6d., 5s., 7s. 6d., 10s., 10s. 6d., 1d. each; 15s., 20s., 1½d. each. They should be "crossed" City Bank, Ludgate Hill, E.C. Stamps received.

PRESENT-DAY PROBLEMS, and How Anglo-Israel Truth Explains and Solves Them. By V. M. COX. 3d., by post 4 stamps.

LIGHT SHED BY THE GREAT PYRAMID OF EGYPT on the Last Days of this Dispensation, from A.D. 1814 to A.D. 1922. By JAMES KEITH. Price 4d., by post 5 stamps.

NEW TESTAMENT TRUTH on the Anglo-Israel Controversy. By J. G. TAYLOR. Price 3d., by post 4 stamps.

A NEW LIGHT. An Elementary Pamphlet for General Distribution. By A E I. Price 2d., by post 2½d. in stamps.

EPHRAIM-ISRAEL, the Pivot Nation of Prophecy and History. By V. M. COX. Price 1d., one dozen free for 1s.

LUNG SAVE YOUR LIVES BY TAKING TONIC
LUNG OWBRIDGE'S TONIC
LUNG LUNG TONIC TONIC
LUNG TONIC
LUNG TONIC
LUNG TONIC
LUNG THE MIGHTY HEALER. TONIC
LUNG TONIC
LUNG It has a power over disease hitherto TONIC
LUNG unknown in Medicine. TONIC
LUNG Are you at all Weak-chested or in- TONIC
LUNG clined to be Consumptive, with just a TONIC
LUNG touch of Cough now and then? TONIC
LUNG "Try this Wonderful Medicine." The TONIC
LUNG Cough and Weakness will disappear as TONIC
LUNG if by magic, and you will feel a strength TONIC
LUNG and power you never had before. TONIC
LUNG HAVE YOU A COUGH? TONIC
LUNG A DOSE WILL RELIEVE IT! TONIC
LUNG HAVE YOU A COLD? TONIC
LUNG A DOSE AT BEDTIME WILL TONIC
LUNG REMOVE IT. TONIC
LUNG Bronchitis & Asthma it relieves instantly TONIC
LUNG TONIC
LUNG The Spasms of Coughing so dreadful in TONIC
LUNG Whooping Cough become less with each TONIC
LUNG dose of the medicine. TONIC
LUNG TONIC
LUNG Prepared by W. T. OWBRIDGE Chemist, Hull TONIC
LUNG Sold in Bottles 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d. TONIC
LUNG and 11s. by all Chemists and Patent TONIC
LUNG Medicine Vendors. Wholesale all London TONIC
LUNG and Provincial Houses. TONIC

HUMAN LIFE.—FIFTY YEARS' Record of Facts, Principles, and Discoveries (just published complete) Relating to the Improvement and Preservation of Human Life on Earth. Origin and true treatment of diseases. A series of articles by DR. SAMUEL BIRLEY, M.D., Ph.D. Book form, 50 pages. SENT FREE to every applicant by the publishers, GORDON B. MURRAY & CO., 50, Theobald's-road, Holborn, E.C. Write to-day.

DE BEUVE'S GINGER CAKES
Are the most delicious Cakes in the world, and are highly recommended for invalids and the aged. They form an Unfailing Remedy for Constipation and Indigestion, and while most rich cakes disagree with children, these are very wholesome and conducive to health. Sent for 1s. Postal Order to any part of the Kingdom by

GINGER CAKES
Victor de Beuve, 3, Rood Lane, London, E.C

No Reader of Identity Literature should be without this Almanack.
Now ready. Price 3d. (by post 4d.). Interleaved with ruled paper, stiff cover, 5d. (by post 6d.). Brown cloth, gilt lettered, interleaved throughout with ruled paper, 1s. (post free on receipt of postal order).

The Anglo-Israel Almanack and Diary
FOR 1889.
Advertisement containing full particulars of contents will appear in next week's issue.
London: Printed and published by R. BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C., and may be had by order of any bookseller.

Just issued, price 2d., by post 2½d., 6 copies post free 1s

SUPREMACY;
Or, The British Church versus The Church of Rome.
By E. M. RUSH ("A E I"),
Author of "The New Old Story," "The Answer to The Eastern Question," etc.
London: Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street

SOUND, PURE, WHITE
TEETH!
Those who value these will try
CARBOLINE
(The Great Sanitary Tooth Paste).
1/6 & 2/6 per Pot.
Through Chemists, or post free from the Makers,
GEORGE & WELCH
WORCESTER.
Lancet writes:—"To save the teeth use a good carbolic daily."

FITS! FITS!! FITS!!!
ALL persons suffering from Epilepsy should send Name and Address to JAMES OSBORNE, Medical Pharmacy, Ashbourne, Derbyshire, who will forward, free of charge, full particulars (with Testimonials) of the most successful remedy ever discovered for this distressing malady. Sent to all parts of the world. References permitted to Rev. J. Baker, M.A., 80, Bolton Road, Pendleton, Manchester.

PIANOFORTES, Harmoniums, American Organs. Why buy at shops inferior made instruments, and pay large profits, when you can buy direct from the Maker High-class Instruments, and save 50 per cent. by so doing? Full value allowed for old Instruments in exchange as part payment. Write for Price Lists and Testimonials to A. G. LINSTEAD, Cobden Pianoforte Company, 5, Eversholt-street, Camden Town, London. Established 1874.

Certain HARNESS' Cure.
ELECTROPATHIC BELT
FOR
SLEEPLESSNESS
SLEEPLESSNESS.—The Rt. Hon. LORD BYRON says that—"Harness' Electropathic Belt is invaluable for sleeplessness, I recommend it to all my friends."
Guaranteed to generate a mild continuous current of Electricity, which speedily cures all Disorders of the Nerves, Stomach, Liver and Kidneys. Thousands of Testimonials. Pamphlet & Advice free on application to Mr. C. B. Harness, Consulting Electrician, the Medical Battery Co. Ltd.
Only Address,
52, OXFORD ST. LONDON, W. (Corner of Rathbone Place.)
Call to-day, if possible, or write at once

Printed and Published for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-st., London, E.C.; F. W. PARRY (late GUEST & Co.), 29, Paternoster-row.
WEDNESDAY, NOV. 28, 1888 [All rights reserved

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."

(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India.)

"And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the Forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS of the EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17.

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. XII., No. 623. Entered at Stationers' Hall.] WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 5, 1888. [DOUBLE NUMBER, TWOPENCE.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
German Co-operation in Putting Down Slavery	477
The Latest Addition to the Empire	478
The Conversazione at the Memorial Hall, Clifton	479
A Period of "Leaps and Bounds"	480
The Norfolk Chronicle and the Question of Our Identity	481
The Dean of Ripon on the Jewish Question	482
The British Empire and Contemporary Powers. By R. N. Adams, of New Zealand. Part III.	484
Obituary	484
Some Objections and How they have been Answered	486
The Population of France and that of the British Empire	487
What Josephus Said About the Ten Tribes	488
Dwelling Alone	488
Federation Portrayed in the History of Joseph. By John T. Gott	489
Anglo-Israel Free Distribution Fund	490
Israel's Scripture and Prayer Union	491
Correspondence	491

GERMAN CO-OPERATION IN PUTTING DOWN SLAVERY.

SINCE the great disturbance on the South-east coast of Africa opposite to Zanzibar, whereby the operations of the German East African Company have come to a disastrous standstill, the German people and Government have suddenly discovered that the African slave trade is a heinous abomination, and should be put down by united Europe. What the Germans wished, however, was that there should be an active joint crusade against the slave hunters and dealers by the united forces of the British, Italian and German nations. It was desired, we suppose, that we should unite "to raid upon the raiders" and to embark on armed expeditions to uproot slavery by fire and sword throughout Central Africa and the Eastern coasts thereof. In short Germany proposed a thoroughly impracticable scheme to attain her object, and will look in vain for this nation's co-operation in carrying it out. What the Germans want is pretty distinctly shown in the resolution passed at Cologne some weeks ago, reported in the London papers of the time, when the following was adopted by a large meeting attended by the Chief Burgomaster, the Archbishop, and the principal civil and military authorities :—

The suppression of slave-hunting is the common duty and mission of all Christian States. Since article 6 of the Congo Treaty pledges all the powers to co-operate for the suppression of slavery, it is the special duty of the Congo State, England and Germany, by a mutual understanding to take up and carry through the unavoidable struggle. We rely upon the honour of the German flag and German interests being effectually safeguarded by the Imperial Government, and are convinced that if such action may count upon the unanimous support of the people, without regard to religious distinctions, the active co-operation of the Reichstag will not be wanting.

The salient mistake in the above of course is the alleged basis out of which the national obligation of all Christian States is said to arise. It is not in fact "the common duty and mission of all Christian States" to put a stop to the accursed "slave-hunting" propensities of the Arabs. The German and other nations have not hitherto seen this to be their duty, but have calmly left it to be performed by the British. To the latter as the House of Israel it does belong to "break every yoke," and among the rest the frightful bonds of the suffering African. In Isa. lviii. 6, R.V. we have Israel's commission, and in it we see no mention of German or other nationality as partners with Israel in their destined blessed work. "Is not this the fast that I have chosen" (is God's declaration) "to loose the bonds of wickedness, to undo the bands of the yoke, and to let the oppressed go free, and that ye break every yoke." The sinful "House of Jacob" was the object of the Lord's reproof, as verses 1 and 14 plainly show, and to them the commission is entrusted to stop the slave trade and manumit the suffering African alone! Alone we believe they will yet do it, favoured by the plainly self-interested offers of the Germans to aid them. The German East-African Company has failed to secure success because it is not nationally gifted with British-Israel's God-given power to conciliate subject races. There are other methods than "the rifle and the rocket" plans of "squeezing" the Arab slave-hunter out of existence. We must do it by commercial methods, by the railroad and telegraph, by strict impartial justice, and by just so much force as will convince the Arab slave dealer that it will cost him more and dearer to cross us than to grow rich in our ways, ceasing thus to follow his own nefarious, murderous plans. Commercial operations in East Africa can never be fostered by general warfare to begin with. We must establish our commerce at the outset and make it a paying concern to a fairly large section of the natives of East Africa, and so have them with us, as we have always contrived to do with the natives of India, before we can dream of joining another nation's subjects in warlike or raiding operations to avenge the results of their own bad management, and, as some say, "brutalism or bungling."

Digitized by Google

A writer in the Times puts the matter very concisely on Oct. 29th thus :—

A very pretty sermon might be preached on the sudden but not inexplicable discovery by the German Government that religion and humanity demand the extirpation of the slave trade, even by fire and the sword. But the sermon may be spared. It is enough to say, perhaps, that whether the German awakening be sincere or not, nobody will suspect England of hating slavery and the slave trade less if she chooses to fight against them in her own way, which the Germans are, of course, more than welcome to imitate, even to excess. But we must have no joint crusading at present.

The fact is East Africa and its slave dealers and slave hunters require British civilization, British commerce, and British missionaries to cure them. We have solved greater problems in India and elsewhere than Africa presents to us, and we have never found ourselves unable to solve them alone. We cannot under any circumstances unite with a nation like the Germans, who have no colonial instincts, and who have shown already in East Africa that they are totally incompetent to confer Israel's blessings on the miserable races there, and can see no alternative but "the rifle and the rocket" plans they evidently wish us to apply with them in a joint crusade upon the slave hunters.

Israel's destiny is "to blossom and bud and fill the face of the world with fruit." It would be hardly a satisfactory mode of carrying out the purposes of the Lord if we were to begin, in company with an alien people, by exterminating a part of the inhabitants of Africa in order to civilize and benefit the rest. The Gospel, the Bible, steady civilized Government backed by force, to be applied sparingly but firmly, and the wealth that commerce, railways and the appliances of civilization always bring in their train, may be trusted to rid Africa of its slave-hunters, and to give her happiness at last. All these blessings Israel must confer on the Dark Continent, and do it alone. The British are Israel; and we therefore, we believe, shall not need to invoke the aid of German bayonets to carry out a work which can be done in a very different way, to the praise of the glory of the grace of Him who sent His Son to die also for the Africans, and Israel to proclaim the news.

THE LATEST ADDITION TO THE EMPIRE.

"THE process of absorption still goes on. Scarcely a week passes without bringing with it its story of the annexation of some plot or other of the earth's surface to the British Empire, or a new project or excuse for some such annexation. Yesterday it was a huge slice of East Africa, to-day it is a group of islands in the centre of the broad Pacific, to-morrow it will be no man knows what. With or without the desire of the Government at home, the Empire constantly expands, and it speaks highly for the high esteem in which English justice is held amongst savage tribes, that as a rule the unfolding of our flag is regarded by them as a cause for rejoicing. We have only to compare the peaceful manner in which the British protectorate has been received in the Hervey group, over which we have this week announced its extension, with the manner in which the attempt to enforce the German rule in the neighbouring island of Samoa has been resisted, or the slaughter of the natives of the Marquesas group by the French, who are setting up a protectorate there, to obtain a correct idea of the different estimation in which the flag of this country is held as compared with that of other colonising Powers. British rule is welcomed, because it means just government, increase of trade, and added freedom; the rule of other nations is resisted because they are hated as well as feared. British influence and British trade, as a rule, precede annexation, and the hope of greater gains in commerce and greater security of life and property lead the native mind to welcome any extension of that influence. Germany and France, who are our only colonising rivals, adopt very different tactics. Simple lust of possession seems to be the motive which has influenced their latest acquirements, and their rule has been roughly forced on unoffending races at the point of the bayonet. The British have a special claim to the Hervey group, or Cook Islands, as they are more properly called, from the great navigator who first discovered them. They are the chief centre of English missionary enterprise in the South Seas. By the apostolic efforts of John Williams, "the martyr of Erumanga," the population was won to Christianity from a state of the most barbarous cannibalism, and under the continued influence of the London Missionary Society they have become a civilized, industrious people, and a centre from which Christianity and civilization is spreading to all the yet unenlightened places in the Pacific. All the advance which the islanders show from their state of primitive ferocity is due to English influence, and the islanders themselves desire an English protectorate in order that they may be saved from the rapacious grasp of France, which country, although unable to digest the possessions she has already snapped up, looked with envious eyes upon this group, which has long been British in all but name. The immediate proclaiming of a British protectorate was under the circumstances imperative, not only in the interests of the Protestant islanders, but also in respect to the future interests of our Australasian colonies. The Hervey Islands lie close to the trade route between Australia and the Panama Canal, and it is therefore very important in the interests of the Colonies that no foreign Power should obtain possession of them. The protectorate has been proclaimed at the express wish of the natives, and it is stated that a similar request has been made by the natives of Savage Island, and will be acceded to. The Government has learnt wisdom since it refused to listen to the repeated prayers of the Samoans for annexation, and saw that interesting group, already semi-Anglicised, appropriated by Germany."

We take the above from the Bradford Daily Telegraph, of Oct. 4th, and point to it as a remarkable corroboration of our identity views on the same subject, as lately published in the BANNER. The verdict of the Islanders of the Pacific is corroborated by that of the native tribes of East Africa, who one and all welcome British rule, but detest and resent by violence and rebellion that of the French and Germans, whose idea of colonial and foreign possessions seems to be that native races must be kept down by force as wild beasts are restrained in a menagerie. Not so has Israel learnt her lesson! She so conducts herself, in our times at least, that her "seed is known among the nations, and her offspring among the peoples; all that see them acknowledge them—that they are the seed which the Lord hath blessed" (Isa. lxi. 9, R.V.). This scripture has been verified in our nation's favour in India, in the Colonies, in Africa, South, West, North, East, and Central, and throughout the islands of the sea: especially as we see to-day in Polynesia, in the South Pacific. This testimony ought to suffice, and it does suffice with those whose reason is reasonably exercised. That this is not always the case however appears from the testimony of a friend in London, who writes to us that he has made the effort to interest five of the clergy near him in the subject, with the following results. "One fears (he says) that it would hide Christ from view, and having come in contact with it in a former sphere, does not think it will promote Christian work, and so declines to look into the arguments." A second 'pooh-poohs' the subject altogether, as the Rev. Mr. Spurgeon does;—whilst a third gives it out that when you begin to study Anglo-Israelism you immediately become a candidate for a lunatic asylum! of the other two, one lately died, and the fifth has retired from active service." Such is about the nett result of the attempt to influence the clergy; yet the subject we deal with is God's truth, founded on His Holy Word. The time, in short, has not yet come for the general acceptation of Our Identity by the shepherds of Israel, and until it does arrive, we are unreasonable to expect they should with patience listen to us. Consequently they are at present wedded to the teaching which fails to recognise the existence of the House of Israel at all, as distinguished from the Jews; and which gives all God's sworn promises in Israel's favour to the Church; that is, to the true believers in Christ throughout the world. "Facts, however, are stubborn things," and facts are to-day altogether in our favour. They are confounding the clergy and the pious in our land: the British Empire continually expands. Its expansion is not by war, but by the selection and consent of the semi-civilized races of the world, who rejecting the dominion of the Germans, and of the French, are stretching out their arms to us, to come and protect them, giving them the good government, civil and religious liberty, wealth, and spiritual benefits we have bestowed upon India, Burmah, Egypt, South Africa, and a hundred other countries and places where the British flag is dominant to the glory of God, according to the prophecies. It is manifest to us that the colonial activity of both France and Germany are being used by our God to compel His people Israel to come forward and occupy the earth according to His will, and that without these incentives, we should have failed to advance our borders in South and Central Africa, in Upper Burmah, or in the South Pacific Ocean. When the great earthquake war-woe breaks out in Europe, and plunges these very nations, our rivals for Colonial Empire, into the awful cataclysm which is before them, we foresee that their present efforts for colonial greatness will utterly collapse, as that of Spain and France collapsed at the end of the Napoleonic wars. Thus it was that God ousted France from India, from the Mauritius, and Canada, giving us also the Cape Colonies, and many islands of the sea, as our inheritance, to bring them all to Christ. The process is still going on; and the time will surely come when not some, but "all the ends of the earth" will become Israel's,—British-Israel's possessions, that "the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole Heaven may be given to the people of the saints of the Most High; even to the children of Israel, a people near to Jehovah! Praise ye the Lord!" (Dan. vii. 27; Psa. cxlviii. 14, R.V).

Digitized by Google

THE CONVERSAZIONE AT THE MEMORIAL HALL, CLIFTON.

PART I.

On November 15th, the Bristol and Clifton Israel Identification Association gave a conversazione at the Memorial Hall, Clifton, from 3 to 6 p.m., when about 250 persons were present. The speakers were the chairman, Philo-Israel, Oxonian, M.A., Surg. Gen. J. M. Grant, M.D., the Rev. C. W. Hickson, M.A., Col. Senior, Bengal army, W. M. Webb, Esq., Brigade-Surgeon P. Wyatt Cockell, M.D., of Bath, and the Rev. C. Godfrey Ashwin, M.A.

The attendance was remarkably good, and the audience somewhat distinguished. We noticed a bishop, an incumbent of a Bristol Church, several of the curates of the place, two General officers, several Colonels, some Surgeons, and a very large number of ladies among those who were present. The room was decorated with flags and banners bearing on the Identity, with maps and diagrams, albums and scrapbooks filled with beautiful photographs of various places in all parts of the earth, taken mostly by Col. Senior, a very talented photographer; with old Bibles, and works bearing on the subject of Our Identity, such as Josephus, Camden, Sharon Turner, with a large model of the Tabernacle, heathen gods, an immense drawing of the Great Pyramid in section, works in three or four of the Indian Oriental languages, silver cashmere work, Cape curiosities, &c., &c. The whole of the decorations were carried out by Col. Senior with great taste and judgment, and the result was a very agreeable and profitable meeting. We propose to publish several of the addresses in our columns in a later issue, but present our readers with the chairman's address and Oxonian's in this. In his opening remarks the chairman, after complimentary allusions to Col. Senior's successful efforts to decorate the room, admitted that though the local Israel's Identification Association might be a feeble, unimportant, and uninfluential organisation, it had firm hold of a vastly important, national, scriptural, and even a spiritual subject in "Our Identity with the House of Ephraim." The association desired that their fellow-countrymen should share in the joy this subject affords them.

The discovery of Israel gives us a firm hold on the everlasting faithfulness of God; it puts the Scripture in a new and glorious light; it silences the infidel, and as patriots it enables us to see that God has in the past and present dealt with us according to His promises to Israel, and will for ever (since He changes not) favour us as His chosen people. The reason why (added Philo-Israel) we desire to place this subject before our fellow-townsmen is because, like the four lepers at the siege of Samaria by Benhadad king of Syria, when they descended to the enemies' camp, and found it abandoned but full of treasure, we soliloquise thus, "We do not well, this day is the day of good tidings, but we hold our peace! If we tarry till the morning light, some mischief will come upon us, now therefore come that we may go and tell the king's household" (2 Kings vii. 9, R.V.). This accurately describes our position. We cannot keep this matter to ourselves. The precious riches connected with Israel's discovery are meant for Israel the nation, not for a few persons in it. We have to tell the good news to the king's household, who are you, my friends, "the sons of the living God" (Hos. i. 10, R.V.); "God's chosen generation, His royal priesthood, His holy nation, His peculiar people, His chosen, heritage, and inheritance." If you ask where is the treasure we offer for your acceptance, behold the British Empire which belongs to you, the gift of God! It is by far the most glorious and unique on the face of the globe. Five times larger is it than that of Darius the Great in his palmiest days; four times larger than that of Rome in the times of its Emperors, one-eighth larger than the vast empire of Russia to-day, forty times bigger than the German Empire; sixteen times as big as France, and three times larger than the territory of the United States. This is the character of the empire God promised to Israel in Dan. vii. 27, and it has in modern days developed into a Heathen Empire, to serve as a theatre for Israel's missionary operations; into a Colonial Empire where a "company of nations" federated with the central "mother of nations" are acquiring force and strength, and into a Maritime Empire dependent on the possession of the Gates (Gen. xxxv. 11, xlviii. 16—19, R.V.). These developments are Israelitish gifts granted to Israel only.

God has further blessed us as His people by giving us: 1st, multitudinousness. This secures to us vast population, and "population is empire." 2nd, wealth, "that He may establish His covenant which He sware unto our fathers, as it is this day." But these temporal endowments are merely the necessary qualifications needed by any people, whose functions are to be those God has assigned to Israel, after He has blessed her with those spiritual gifts she has to administer to the world, whom God "so loves" (John iii. 16). These spiritual gifts are: 1st, the word of God. "He showeth His word unto Jacob, His statutes and His judgments unto Israel. He hath not so dealt with any nation, and as for His judgments they have not known them" (Psalm cxlvii. 19, 20). This gift we British enjoy to-day. 2nd, His Sabbaths; which He gave for a sign to Israel for ever (Exod. xxxi. 13, 17). 3rd, His ten true laws, the foundation of British jurisprudence, and theirs exclusively, but God's gift to Israel only (Deut. vi. 3—9). 4th, the love of souls, the evangelising function. This is the possession of the British people alone, but it was the allotted privilege of Israel (Isa. xxvii. 6; Gen. xxii. 18, &c.). Combine all these good things together, and we have the birthright of Joseph; our enjoyment of which proves our Israelitish origin, makes for God's glory, and points to that kingdom of Christ our King, over which is He is soon coming to reign.

Digitized by Google

Oxonian next spoke. He said he would confine himself to giving three or four hints upon the subject as they suggested themselves to him from the Scriptures. The first he took from Psa. cii. 11, 14. "Thou shalt arise and have mercy upon Zion, for the time to favour her is come; yea, the set time is come; for Thy servants take pleasure in her stones, and favour the dust therof." These words point distinctly (he said) to the work English hands have carried out in exploring, mapping-out, digging down to the foundation of Jerusalem, and preparing the plans and surveys of the Holy Land on the same British scale as that employed by those who have executed the survey of the United Kingdom. We have taken pleasure in the stones of Zion, and favoured the dust thereof. Why should we thus prepare the survey of the country unless it be our lot to reoccupy the territory as our own, and why should we do that unless we be Israel? The second hint was derived from Ezek. xlviii., and the predicted partition by lot thereof among the Twelve Tribes. Every inch of the ground west of Jordan has been triangulated, surveyed, and reduced to scale by British officers, and why should pains have been taken to prepare with accuracy the maps of the Holy Land unless our country had yet to occupy it as its heirs? Ezekiel xxxviii. and xxxix. afford the third hint, which Oxonian suggested to the meeting. Here is described, he said, the invasion of Palestine by a Power which is plainly described as Russia, with certain peoples, her allies, who can easily be identified at the present day. She is to be opposed by Israel, and will be her bitter enemy. In the present day Russia's eyes are turned toward the possession of the Holy Land for purposes which are opposed to British interests. These interests will one day clash with Russia's and a contest must ensue which will have for its object the decision of the question, which Power shall rule the world? which nation shall prevail in the holy places? The last hint related to the ancestors of the British people. A Greek historian declared that the Scythians located in his day in the East of Europe and West of Russia came from a spot in Media near the South-west of the Caspian, where Israel was cast away, and Esdras or Ezra, the reputed author of the second book bearing that name in the Apocrypha, tells us that the Ten Tribes left that same spot and travelled North-westward to "Ar-sereth" in the South-east of Europe, the land of the Scythians, who were our British ancestors. The chain seems complete, and the link which unites us with Israel unbroken historically. Oxonian had many maps, diagrams and drawings exhibited in the room, and his address was received with much applause.

(To be continued).

A PERIOD OF "LEAPS AND BOUNDS."

THE Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone's famous saying regarding the prosperity of British trade some years ago, and its improvement by "leaps and bounds," seems in a fair way to be realised again, after a period of deep gloom and depression, borne by the nation with fortitude and exemplary patience. The Board of Trade returns for October, 1888, are very satisfactory, and show that a revival of trade is now beyond question. The imports for instance have improved by £4,472,000 over those of October last year (1887), being 14½ per cent better, and the exports have gone up during the same period 11½ per cent. or £2,147,000. The nett result of the ten months of the year already past is that the exports for that period have reached three millions sterling more in value than during the whole twelve months of 1887, and "the volume of trade done this year with foreign States will be the largest in our history." The improvement further is not partial, for the increase extends to quantities as well as to values, to all the great categories of commodities." Nothing can be more satisfactory than this, and we may sincerely hope that there is "a good time coming," as we always expected there would be. But when we turn to The Standard's comment on the facts of the case on November 9, and to the real truth respecting our nation's position as a great carrying trading Power, we find reason to praise God for His goodness and mercy towards His people and for all the prosperity He has given her to enjoy. After commenting on the fact that Mr. Cleveland's defeat for the Presidential election in the United States is not likely to bring about Free Trade there, but on the contrary General Harrison is pretty sure to increase the hostile tariffs against our country, The Standard adds the following consolatory remarks:—

The United States may not continue to be as hostile to International Trade as they have been these five-and-twenty years, but they are not going to knock off their fetters at once. It is a pity, but one consolation remains. It is not we who are the sufferers. The trade of England grows, in spite of the jealous obstructions put in its way by other nations, and will continue to grow. Those countries which, in a spirit hostile to us, create high Customs' tariffs to bar our progress, do but "cut off their noses to spite their faces." No trade statistics are more eloquent of progress than our own; no trade weathers storms and hostile combinations so well as ours does. The Board of Trade figures published by us yesterday are a striking confirmation of this statement. Again and again it has been predicted that the hostile tariffs of other nations were ruining us. First, the United States shut their doors in our faces, and then European nations and our own Colonies followed suit. "We cannot stand against these hostile movements," it was said. The answer to such croaking is, that the foreign trade of England is to-day larger in volume than it has ever been in the whole course of our history. And if it be not higher in value, it is because the trade of the entire world has been affected by a wave of depression in prices, which has, perhaps, arisen from over-mortgaging the future more than from any other cause. It does not, however, follow that the trade has been less profitable because it was carried on at lower prices. To some it may have been, but to the great multitude of consumers, here and abroad, cheapness is gain. Within limits easily defined, progress must be marked by increasing cheapness, because in this way only can we have command of larger markets. From many points of view, therefore, low prices have been equivalent to increased prosperity; and there is no doubt at all that the foreign trade of England is now larger, healthier, and more powerful, as against subsidised competition abroad, than it ever was. We can well afford to wait till the rest of the world changes its mind about our business principles. It is not we who suffer meanwhile. The value of our foreign trade is more than double that of any other European nation, and not all the subsidies to shipping which our rivals can pile up enables them to make appreciable inroads upon the lion's share we possess in the carrying of this over-sea trade. It is true that late years have been comparatively profitless to English shipowners, but they have suffered less than the countries which fed their mercantile marine on bounties; and never for an instant did we cede the foremost place. When trade revived, we were ready to profit by the revival.

The thought that entered our mind when we read these few words was that again God had been faithful to His promises to "Israel-obedient," and had made her over-sea trade "the head and not the tail" among that of all the nations. He promised her too, "the power to get wealth" "that He might establish His covenant which He sware unto our fathers, as it is this day!" Everything has been against us in the matter of getting wealth, but in spite of vast trade depression, foreign-shipping bounties, and hostile movements on all sides, the nation has come out triumphant, as God said they should, "the head and not the tail, above only and not beneath all the nations of the earth" (Deut. xxviii. 1, 13, R.V.). Ours is "the lion's share" of the over-sea trade, and it is besides larger than it has ever been since we were a nation! Now that the times of "leaps and bounds" has set in, who can predict the amount of our coming prosperity and wealth? It seems possible that the only language properly to guage it will be that used by God Himself in Jer. xxxiii. 9, A. and R.V., in reference to the future capital of the Empire! With a vast ocean carrying trade which these facts disclose the question recurs whether our power in case of war would suffice to defend it? The Prime Minister, in his speech at the Mansion House on November 9, admitted that the five continental Powers (two against three and three against two) "were at this hour maintaining twelve millions of armed men" for the purposes of internecine war, and that when it breaks out, it must, considering the tremendous engines brought into play, "end in the national annihilation of those who are defeated in the great contest," which will then take place. Under the circumstances he remarked that this nation had pronounced that her own need of preparation for defence exists, and that such preparation must be made. He added that we must not only provide "for the safety of our citizens, but for the sense that the safety exists." These were admirable words, well chosen, and well spoken! They agree well with the precepts of the God of Israel which tells His people at this very juncture of the world's history, just before the restoration of the Tribes, and before the condign punishment of the nations of the world who have hated and persecuted "the people of the saints of the Most High," "Come, My people, enter thou into thy chambers, shut thy doors about thee; hide thyself for a little moment, until the indignation be overpast." The nation is directed to fortify its Gates (or doors), to enter, and close its chambers about it and wait, like Noah in the ark, till the indignation be overpast, and God's vengeance against His unrepentant enemies be satisfied by their destruction. Lord George Hamilton at the Lord Mayor's banquet assured the nation that the work of preparation as regards the navy was going on apace, and that in twelve months he expected a new and bold start would be made towards bringing up Her Majesty's navy to the standard at which, in the opinion of Her Majesty's Government, it ought to be permanently maintained.

Digitized by Google

We see thus that against all odds Israel's commercial prosperity continues to advance, and in spite of past carelessness and confidence, amounting almost to foolhardy neglect of ordinary precautions, the nation's safety has hitherto been provided for; also that for the future, steps are being taken, according to the prophecies, to defend our home and foreign Gates, as well as our enormous floating commerce. Let Israel therefore praise the Lord for His loving kindnesses towards her, and for His gracious protection of her island home, as well as of her sea-borne property and wealth.

"THE NORFOLK CHRONICLE" AND THE QUESTION OF OUR IDENTITY.

In order to give our opponents the fullest opportunity of making known their objections, we publish below a letter which appeared in the Norfolk Chronicle of September 22, showing cause why men ought to reject Our Identity and regard it as a "delusion." Our readers will see that Mr. Mark Knights replying to ours published on p. 397 of the Banner does not touch the Scriptural argument, but treats the subject as if the Bible had no concern with it. He deals with it as an ethnological and philological question only, and prophecy is not so much as once named in regard to it. Not so can we deal with the matter! with us the Identity is first and last a question of God's faithfulness and truth, and the relation of ethnic science and philology to the matter in issue we regard as a subordinate detail, respecting which we fail to see that any difficulty exists. Our reply to the opponent follows the attack.

THE ANGLO-ISRAEL DELUSION.

Sir,—I see that "the Israelitish origin of the English people" is contended for in your columns by one who signs himself "Philo-Israel." Allow me to reply to some of the statements of this writer. He says that the Ten Tribes in the days of Josephus (A.D. 93) were "an immense multitude beyond the Euphrates;" but as there were Celtic tribes in Europe 630 B.C. (which would be a century after the Ten Tribes went into captivity) he suggests that "parties of the tribes escaping from captivity might all along the centuries have accompanied the Celts in their early emigration into Europe."

Now "Philo-Israel," who referred your readers to Josephus, should quote that writer fully and fairly. What Josephus says is this:—"The entire body of the people of Israel remained in that country; wherefore there are but two tribes in Asia and Europe subject to the Romans, while the Ten Tribes are beyond Euphrates till now, and are an immense multitude, and not to be estimated by numbers." Thus according to Josephus the entire body of the people remained in the land of captivity till his time. But supposing, for argument sake, that "parties of the tribes escaping from captivity" (which is contrary to Josephus' statement) "might all along the centuries have accompanied the Celts in their early migration into Europe," what then? The land in which the Celtic tribes settled would be the land of that folk, and no more the land of the parties of Israelites (who are only supposed to have accompanied them) than England is the land of the Jews who followed the Norman invaders. "Philo-Israel" would lead your readers to suppose that the Celtic tribes settled in these islands exclusively, for he speaks of "their settlement in these islands." But the Celtic tribes occupied other lands than these islands, for Pytheas, the Greek navigator (B.C. circa 500), observed that the countries bordering upon the ocean were inhabited by Iberians and Celts, and that the Gauls, a Cymric branch of the Celtic race, were even then engaged in commerce.

Now as the Gauls, a Celtic tribe, settled in what is now called France and the Low Countries, it may be claimed for the French and Belgians that they are the Lost Ten Tribes, because if, as "Philo-Israel" says, "it is possible parties of the tribes escaping from captivity might all along the centuries have accompanied the Celts," it is as likely that they clung to the Celts who kept in Europe as to those who crossed the sea.

Assuming again that "the Celtic tribes called the Cimmerioi, or Cimbri, or Khumri (who are British)" all settled in these islands (which they did not), another difficulty arises—the bulk of the people of these islands are not British, not descendants of the Celts, but English. Now the English—Angles, Jutes, and Saxons—belonged to Teutonic tribes who came from the Continent in the fourth and fifth centuries, and drove out the Celts and Cymri. Were these Teutons also descendants of the Lost Ten Tribes? If they were, so also were the Saxons and Teutons who remained in the Fatherland to be the ancestors of the existing German nation. Thus the Germans have as much right to be considered descendants of the Lost Ten Tribes as ourselves.

But there came another invasion of England. The Scandinavians sent an enormous number of their kith and kin, who effected extensive settlements in and finally conquered England. If these settlers were descendants of the Ten Lost Tribes, so must have been their kindred who remained in Denmark and Norway, and consequently, the people of Scandinavia have as good a claim as the people of England to be considered descendants of the Lost Ten Tribes.

Many Englishmen boast their descent from Normans who came over with the Conqueror. Are they descendants of the Lost Ten Tribes? If so, then the people of Normandy descended from those who remained behind, are also descendants of the Ten Lost Tribes.

Professor Max Muller, the eminent philologist, in "Chips from a German Workshop," Vol. ii., p. 223, has an article on Dr. Dasent's "Popular Tales from the Norse," in which he explicitly states, what he has abundantly demonstrated in his works, that Germans, Swedes, Danes, French, Spaniards, Italians, Greeks, Slavs, Persians, and Hindus have a common ancestry.

He says, "The results of the science of language are by this time known to every educated man, and boys learn at school—what fifty years ago would have been scouted as absurd—that English, together with all the Teutonic dialects of the continent, belongs to that large family of speech which comprises, besides the Teutonic, Latin, Greek, Slavonic, and Celtic, the Oriental languages of Persia and India. Previously to the dispersion of these languages. there was, of course, one common language spoken by the common ancestors of our own race, and of the Greeks, the Romans, the Hindus, and Persians, a language which was neither Greek nor Latin, nor Persian, nor Sanskrit, but stood to all of them in a relation similar to that in which Latin stands to French, Italian, and Spanish; or Sanskrit to Bengali, Hindustani, and Mahratta. It has also been proved that the various tribes who started from this central home to discover Europe in the north, and India in the south, carried away with them, not only a common language, but a common faith and a common mythology. These are facts which may be ignored but cannot be disputed."

Digitized by Google

"The affinity," says Dr. Dasent (whose work the professor is here reviewing) "which exists in a mythological and philological point of view between the Aryan and Indo-European languages, is now the first article of a literary creed, and the man who denies it puts himself as much beyond the pale of argument as he who, in a religious discussion, should meet a grave divine of the Church of England with the strict contradictory of her first article, and loudly declare his conviction that there was no God."

"And again," Dr. Dasent says, "We all came, Greek, Latin, Celt, Teuton, Slavonian from the East, as kith and kin, leaving kith and kin behind us; the language and traditions of those who went East and those who went West bear such an affinity to each other as to have established, beyond discussion or dispute, the fact of their descent from a common stock."

As this common descent of these various peoples cannot be disputed, it follows, as a necessary consequence, that it can no more be asserted of the British or Anglo-Saxons, than of Greeks, Italians, Germans, Persians, or Hindus; that they alone are the descendants of the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel.

I put these results of the researches of eminent men before your readers that they may not be tempted to employ time on an unprofitable subject when there are so many others worthy of their attention. Such a theory as that the English are the descendants of the Israelites might pass muster some centuries ago, when monkish writers commenced histories of Britain by tracing the ancestry of the people to Brutus of Troy, and through him to the Hebrew patriarchs; but it will not go down in the nineteenth century among those who take the trouble to make themselves acquainted with the results of researches in comparative mythology, philology, and ancient history.

I am, &c.,
MARK KNIGHTS.

Gwenta-house, Alexandra-road, Norwich, September 13, 1888.

THE ANGLO-ISRAEL QUESTION.

[Reprinted from the Norfolk Chronicle, Oct. 6, 1888.].

SIR,—Mr. Mark Knights' reply to my letter, published on September 8, does not seem to me to call for much comment. He admits our nation's Eastern origin, and that the component elements which racially make up the British folk were "kith and kin." I never asserted that the Celtic tribes settled exclusively in these Islands. It were absurd to say so. I wrote of "the settlement in these islands" of parties of the Tribes of Israel escaping from captivity in Media, and wished to point out the possibility of such settlement. I beg to demur to Mr. Mark Knights' statement, that because some so-called Celts and Teutons (settled in Britain) were Israelites, therefore all Celts and Teutons were Israelites on the Continent of Europe and elsewhere. What I urged was, that parties of Israelites might have travelled with Celts and Teutons into Europe; and the Israelites, divinely impelled, were gathered, as to the bulk of them, into these islands, according to the prophecies; leaving their fellow travellers, non-Israelites, behind. How this was accomplished I cannot explain; but God said He would do it, and I believe He did.

But I have the certainty that He fulfilled His intentions, because I know that what He promised to grant to Israel exclusively, He has in these last days given to the British folk exclusively, as I pointed out.

It is no argument against me that our people speak an Aryan, Indo-European language. That is no proof of affinity of race, but only of "contact." African slaves in the United States, now freedmen, speak nothing but English. Are they, therefore, British in origin? Spitalfield weavers speak English to-day, only, being the descendants of Huguenot refugees. Were they, therefore, British, not Frank, in origin?

Yours faithfully,
PHILO-ISRAEL,
Editor of THE BANNER.

Clifton, September 27, 1888.

The above of course does not cover the whole ground taken by the objector. The argument taken from Josephus, who is stated to have declared that "the entire body of the people of Israel remained" in the land of their captivity when Judah returned to be subject eventually to the Romans, is easily answered. The historian did not speak from his own knowledge, but from report, and that of a general character. The argument that because the European nations were all kith and kin, therefore the Greeks, Italians, Germans, or Persians, Hindoos, must also all be Israelites, if the British are, is answered thus. God's Word puts certain marks and signs upon Israel whereby we were to know them, which signs we British exclusively possess, but the other nations named possess not at all. Thus, none of these latter peoples have their habitation in "the isles of the West," "afar off" from Palestine, none of them own "the Gate of their enemies" or are consequently supreme at sea, neither are they particularly wealthy. They none of them keep the Sabbath according to the commandment, or reverence the ten true laws of God. They none of them are missionaries to the heathen, being themselves witnessing or Protestant Christians, obeying God's word in reference to the sacraments. They none of them are distributors of the Word of God to "all the nations, families, and kindreds of the earth," and as to "the power to get wealth" that "God may establish His covenant which He sware to the Hebrew fathers," they are as poor, nationally, as they can be, and thus have no right, title or interest in the question of alleged Identity with the Lost Ten Tribes. The idea never occurs to them as it does to us, because, no doubt, there is not one single shadow of a shade of reason on which the argument may be based that they are of Hebrew origin.

(In our last letter to the Norfolk Chronicle, republished on p. 397 of the BANNER an error has appeared in col i., line eight from the foot; read, "Isa. xxiv. 15.").

(To be continued).

THE DEAN OF RIPON ON THE JEWISH QUESTION.

ON Sunday, July 22nd, the Dean of Ripon preached in Trinity Church, Ripon, in aid of the London Society for Promoting Christianity amongst the Jews, and chose for his text Zech. x. 6, an admirable Identity text, giving the distinction clearly between "the House of Judah" and "the House of Joseph." The Dean, however, who sees the distinction between the Ten Tribes and the two, and knows quite well that the Ten Tribes are somewhere to-day in separation from the Jews, is yet unable to see with Zech. x. 6, that there is any difference between the Jews and Joseph, for he said speaking of the Jews, "Ninety years ago no one cared for the soul of the Jew, or sympathised with the afflictions of Joseph." In the Dean's mind there is no distinction between the Jew and Joseph! In 2 Sam. xix. 20, therefore he would understand that Shimei who came out to curse David, being a Benjamite of "the House of Joseph," was nevertheless a man of "the House of Judah" or a Jew! Also, he would read Hosea ii. 6, 15, a chapter addressed to "the House of Israel" as intended for the Jews. In spite however, of these strange instances of oversight, the remnants of a blindness which prophetically Israel is to be afflicted with (Rom. xi. 25), the Dean's sermon is one of the most remarkable we remember to have read. He clearly sees that "Judah, Benjamin and Levi," must form a very small portion of the whole population of Israel, and that it must exist somewhere," (hear this O! opponents!) He declares in favour of the authority of "Josephus, who says few returned to Judea, but that the body of the nation remained still away." He sees that the Jews, quâ Jews, have never fulfilled the prophecies regarding the greatness and number of their nation, and asks "where then are the myriads of Israelites" (using the right name for once!) "who in their hiding-places had been multiplying since the days of Shalmanezer and Tiglath-Pileser to the present time"? So far so good! But now the darkness settles on the Dean's eyes, and when he strives to discover where these lost very numerous Israelites are he never so much as thinks of the British, who are enjoying exclusively to-day all the Divine blessings promised to Israel, and all the promises made to Abraham in respect to them exclusively, but flies off in imagination and in feeble curiosity to the borders of the Caspian, to the regions of Bokhara, to the passes of Cabul, to the mountains of Tartary, to the highlands of Abyssinia, to the crowded population of China, to the Afghan defiles, everywhere in short but to the Isles of the West, and to the Land of the North, where God in pity to the "blind ones" bids them look! The worthy Dean, in order to confuse himself still more, ends by mooting the very wise assertion that according to Jewish tradition the Ten Tribes lie hid perhaps "in the mountains of the Caspian!" and that thus "an immense multitude of Jews are yet awaiting the time when the Lord will hiss for them and gather them." He tells us too what will surprise us BANNER readers, that, in Egypt, in the days of Pharaoh, the Jews made its history! That our readers may see for themselves how near the Dean is to the truth and how he needs careful study of Our Identity literature to enable him to discover where he is wrong we proceed to transfer the report of the sermon to our pages, asking for it a careful perusal.

Digitized by Google

SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING CHRISTIANITY AMONG THE JEWS.

Sermon by the Dean of Ripon.

On Sunday night the Dean of Ripon preached at Trinity Church, Ripon, in aid of the London Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews. There was a large congregation. Service was conducted by the Rev. J. H. Goodier, vicar, and the Rev. W. St. John De la Bére, curate.

The Dean preached from Zech. x. 6; "And I will strengthen the house of Judah, and I will save the house of Joseph and I will bring them again to place them, for I have mercy upon them; and they shall be as though I had not cast them off, for I am the Lord their God and will hear them." He said that in the revival of religion which had taken place during the last 100 years, no work of evangelisation had borne more fruit, or received larger blessing from God than the Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews. It was one of the brightest jewels in the crown of the Reformation, and had brought down the favour of God to our country, fulfilling the promise, "blessed is he that blesseth thee." Ninety years ago no one cared for the soul of the Jew, or sympathised with the afflictions of Joseph. Now there were four societies in England, one in Scotland, and others in Switzerland and Germany, having for their object the conversion of the Jews. Whether this interest had arisen from the simple desire to preach the Gospel to the Jews, or from the study of prophecy with reference to their future conversion and restoration, it was not necessary to enquire; such was the fact, and what we had chiefly to consider was that the work should be conducted upon truly scriptural principles, for there was a danger on the one hand of our confining our view only to the prophetical view, and of limiting our expectations to the conversion of a few individuals on the other. The experience of the Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews supplied the true balance between the two extremes. Regarding the Jewish nation as the peculiar covenant people of God, destined to fulfil the important position promised to the holy prophets when the fulness of the Gentiles should come, the Society had acted in obedience to her Lord's command, and had gone to the lost sheep of the House of Israel, preaching to the Jew first repentance and remission of sins through the exalted Prince and Saviour. The result of about eighty years of labour amid many trials and much opposition, had shown that God had not cast away His people whom He foreknew, but that He had yet a remnant according to the election of grace, and He had not forgotten His holy covenant. The preaching of Christ by missionaries, the circulation of Scriptures in Hebrew, and the translation of the New Testament into Hebrew, was the special work of that Society, as well as the circulation of the Liturgy of the Church of England in Hebrew, and many tracts such as those written by the late Dr. McAll, the establishment of a mission in London, as well as in Jerusalem, with its hospitals, its house of industry, its schools and various helps, had produced a feeling in the mind of the commonest observer that the Jews could not remain long in their present state.

The conversion of the Jews to Christianity therefore touched one of the most interesting points of religious enquiry, both as regards the missionary, the political, and the prophetic questions of the future. We found ourselves embarked in an immense and overwhelming subject of interest, if it was only looked at in the light of Scripture, and under the influence of God's Holy Spirit. The three points then to which he would call attention, were (1) the persons to whom we were directed in the work of evangelization; (2), the grounds upon which we expected that some success would attend our efforts; and (3), the privileges of partaking in them. With regard to the first point, it would be scarcely necessary to make any remark upon that part of the subject if it were not evident that the persons spoken of in the text were not sufficiently recognised as being the objects of Christian compassion in the present day. The idea which men formed of the existence of the Jews was that there were some eight millions of them in different parts of the world, living in a state of great depression, moral and political. So far as could be gathered from authentic statistical returns this estimate might be correct, but if enquiry was made into the origin and tribal descent of those people, it would be found that they universally claimed to belong to the tribes of Judah, Benjamin, or Levi. This visible number therefore, must form a very small portion of the whole population of Israel, which must exist somewhere, if the words of the text contained a promise which involved mercy to the whole Twelve Tribes. The question arose, had the text been fulfilled, and did not God place the Jews in their own land after the captivity in Babylon? It would be well to meet this objection by referring to the period when the prophecy was delivered, which was after the captivity, when the city was being rebuilt, and the people were settling again to their restored privileges. To what purpose was the promise given of future blessing when it was actually in possession? To what purpose was it added, "Ephraim shall be a mighty man,"—"I will hiss for them and gather them,"—when they were already restored to their land and their country? If the Jews, as a nation, returned after the Babylonish captivity, then was the distinction between Judah and Ephraim at an end, and then must have been fulfilled all the conditions of the covenant made with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob that their posterity should inherit the land for an everlasting possession, that it should extend from the river of Egypt unto the great river Euphrates, that they should multiply as the stars of heaven and be a blessing to all the nations upon earth. But how stood the fact? Not one of the conditions foretold or commanded in the Scriptures concerning the restoration of the two families were fulfilled, whether we regarded their numbers, their location, their conduct, or the countries from whence they came. First as regards their numbers, we read in Ezra and Nehemiah that 42,360 returned, but what was this compared with the numbers of Judah in the time of David, when 470,000 were reckoned to that tribe alone, where there were above 1,000,000 men in Israel that drew the sword, without counting Levi and Benjamin? How could we account for this discrepancy but by adopting the solution of Josephus, who said that a few returned to Judea, but that the body of the nation remained still away? Secondly, if we considered their location, it was manifest that the provision which had been made for them when they should inherit the land was not complied with, for in the allotment of the land it was appointed that five tribes should settle to the south of Judah, that Levi should have its portion, that the divisions should run in parallel straight lines from the Mediterranean to the Euphrates, and that the Gentiles should have a portion; but we could trace no arrangement corresponding to this in the New Testament, nor in any history of the times subsequent to the captivity, and we must conclude that it will yet be given to those whose right it is when each will stand in his lot at the end of the day. Again, if we considered their conduct we did not find the Jews fulfilling the prophecy that they should be one nation, having one king, who should be their head. They were without a king and without a prince. Where, then, were the myriads of Israelites who in their hiding-places had been multiplying since the days of Shalmanezer and Tiglath-Pileser to the present time? Where were those mysterious and unknown generations which were yet to come forth to the name of the Lord, and fly as doves to their windows when the time to favour Zion; yea, the set time is come? Who could touch upon this subject without thrilling interest? Who could look over a map of the districts of the borders of the Caspian, the region of Bokhara, the passes of Cabul, the mountains of Tartary, the highlands of Abyssinia, the crowded populations of China, without imagining in the dark eye and the regular feature and the peculiar habit, the descendant of Ephraim, Gad, and Asher? Who could read the travels of Burns, of Wolf, of Samuel Grant, and of the curious discoveries made by pious officers in Afghanistan, without a certain inward and indescribable persuasion that the Jewish tradition was in part, at least, worthy of credit that the Ten Tribes lie hid in the mountains of the Caspian? If so, what a field of labour expanded before the missionaries, who would seem yet to be only in the infancy of their work. Then with regard to the grounds for supposing that a great result would follow their efforts, assuming that an immense multitude of Jews were yet awaiting the time when the Lord would hiss for them and gather them. It was but reasonable to suppose that great and important events were connected with and dependent upon any movement which was made by them.

Digitized by Google

It was but reasonable to suppose that Israel would occupy as prominent a position in the eyes of the nations as it did in days of old, and it would seem that the fortunes of Israel were bound up with the happiness of the world. The Jews had in all ages formed a sort of chronological gauge, or marginal reference on the page of history, and its details were authenticated by an appeal to collateral events in the history of this wonderful people. What was the history of Egypt without the Jews, Joseph, the shepherd king, and the Exodus; what the history of Babylon without Daniel and the decree of Cyrus; what the conquests of Greece and Rome without the astonishing political influence exerted by the brave and independent inhabitants of Palestine. As the history of the world might be divided into almost equal parts from Adam to the time of our Lord, so we might trace it onward in an almost equal ratio, with the history of the Jews from the destruction of Jerusalem to the rise of Mohammedanism, and from thence to the blood-stained career of the Crusaders, and onward to the Reformation when the reviving in bondage commenced, which, with the spread of Scriptural knowledge, had continued to the present day. If then, the kingdoms of the Gentiles performed their appointed course around the visible centre of Israel when it existed as a nation, so we must believe, if we believe the Scriptures, that the empires of the world are revolving on the same unseen centre, as on a common axis, and that every event, political and religious, converges to the grand culminating point, the moral and national glory of that people. Who could tell what results were depending upon the efforts made in favour of the Jews in the present day? If a Joseph, a Daniel, or an Esther, controlled the counsels of the mightiest monarchs, and secured the deliverance and protection of their nation, was it unreasonable to infer that God might have similar honour in store for many of the children of Israel who at the present moment hold no mean station in the scale of political power, and whose influence, as in the days of the Persians, of Alexander, or of Napoleon, must be regarded as of the first importance? In conclusion, the Dean pointed out that it was a great privilege to take part in the work of Jewish conversion. Some thousands of Jews had been already converted and many secretly believed in Jesus as the promised Messiah. The prejudices of the Jews and Gentiles were passing away, and even in Turkey, Russia, and Austria, persecution has been checked. Scarcely a day passed, but some event connected with the Jews in the highest places of intellectual, commercial and political influence on the one hand, or of poor Jews persecuted and claiming in their distress the sympathy of the Christian Church, was brought under our notice, The number of Jews in Jerusalem had increased fourfold during the last half century, and the mission there was prospering. The hospital had in one year 719 in-patients, and 14,297 out-patients, while 10,400 visits had been made to the houses of the poor suffering Jews, and 37,018 prescriptions dispensed. The society had an income of £36,000, and employed 26 missionaries, of whom 20 were converted Jews. There were also 92 agents who were all converted Jews. The collections in Ripon last year had increased from £35 to £40. The offertory at the close of the service amounted to £6 12s. 3d.

Obituary.

At Streatham on Nov. 13th, 1888, Capt. George Bayly, aged 81, deeply regretted. In the deceased our cause has lost a warm friend. He was an Israelite in whom there was no guile.

THE BRITISH EMPIRE AND CONTEMPORARY POWERS.

By R. N. Adams, of New Zealand.

(Continued from page 472).

PART III.

Another view of this nation's greatness is obtained from a survey of her territory and her continued enlargement, as well as the manner in which our kinsmen are found scattered through all countries of the habitable world. Few of us realise the magnitude of our race when looked at from this point of observation. We know that Britain properly speaking is only "an island," and we are quite prepared to cramp our ideas of the race into an insular form. But all men do not see us with such modest eyes; some there are who think it wise to measure us as truly as possible, that they may not undervalue to their own sad experience a possible antagonist, or at least a commercial rival.

At a meeting held last May to celebrate the anniversary of our Queen's birth, in Portland, America, District Judge Deadly made use of the following remarks in proposing the toast, "The British Empire":—"This Empire, what is it? and whence came it?" Then, after concisely relating some of the chief events of our island's history, he rose to the climax of his speech in the following words:—"And what is the result? To-day the British Empire includes 300,000,000 of people. . . . . nearly one-fourth of the population of the globe, occupying nearly one-eighth of the land surface, and containing probably one-half of its wealth. Every sea is whitened by the wings of its commerce, and the Union Jack floats in every port known to navigation." Then, after some sentences commenting on the gigantic commerce of the nation, he resumes:—"These are some of the elements which constitute the British Empire, an Empire on which the sun never sets—a colossal fabric of political, social, and commercial power and rule such as has never been witnessed since the days when the whole world acknowledged the supremacy of Rome. . . . This Britain is the power of which a distinguished American orator and statesman once said on the floor of the American Senate: 'She has dotted over the surface of the whole globe with her possessions and military posts, whose morning drum-beat, following the sun and keeping company with the hours, circles the earth with one continuous and unbroken strain of the martial airs of England.' But there is another phase of the British Empire—a phase which reaches over and beyond its martial limits and possessions, and asserts itself wherever man is found—I mean the empire of mind, which with its effective instruments of language, law, literature, and commerce, is bringing the nations of the world into a common brotherhood."

What Judge Deadly says may seem to many little else than a piece of flattery or a cunning satire, yet he has spoken nothing beyond the solidest of facts. The land surface we own does not nearly represent the extent of our empire, and still with America we own 13,500,000 square miles of land surface out of a total of 51,000,000 on the whole globe, and America is one with us in race and moral influence.

Of territory Britain alone rules over about 9,000,000 square miles. Russia comes next with 8,000,000. But then see how the possessions of Britain are situated. Those of Russia are all in one large block, with little outlet to the rest of the world except through the Gates of other nations, while the possessions of Britain are upon the open highway of all nations. We have our lands and colonies all along the coasts of the earth, with our ports in the most populous and busy thoroughfares of the world. We by sea command the most active markets, and also possess the most advantageous places of defence for the protection of our goods in transit; while Continental Russia has but two or three outlets to the world, and not one point of defence after leaving her gigantic and cumbrous home country. She can lay claim to but little influence in maritime marine, and still less to the empire of the sea. France is now making a severe struggle to secure for herself a share in this mighty realm of ocean sway, and is striving hard to plant colonies and secure possessions in foreign seas. She is trying to force what came to Britain without even solicitation. But France lacks the chief element necessary to the creation of a Colonial Empire: she lacks the people to do it. Since the year 1800 her birth-rate has been steadily decreasing. Her proportion of deaths to that of births has for the last eighty-three years been gaining ground at a steady pace, and has caused no little alarm to statesmen. Viewed from that point, the French have no need of colonies for the purpose of giving room to their increasing population. It is, in fact, doubtful if they could succeed in stocking a good-sized colony from their own people before it would be overrun by men of other nations, and at last probably fall into their hands; while the British statesmen are troubled on account of the surprising fecundity of their people, who are forced to seek foreign lands for their rapidly-increasing families. The British have doubled their numbers twice during this century; France has not yet done so once. The British people go out from their centre into the uncivilised parts without the aid or protection of their paternal Government, there found communities, and force the rule of the nation to follow them. They, in fact, carry with them their country's laws and religion, and then induce the Power which is the embodiment of that law to follow them. The French are not of this free, daring spirit, and can find quite enough scope in the Fatherland, or in the bosom of other civilised nations, where they throw off their nation's allegiance and become assimilated to or naturalised with those with whom they associate. The British never cease to own their race; they know no mode of becoming denationalised. The Government of France, with the tender care and affection of a parent, endeavours to secure foreign possessions for the race, and tries all sorts of ways to plant Frenchmen in them, yet cannot succeed.

Digitized by Google

COMPARATIVE STATEMENT OF LEADING NATIONS, 1881.

—	Population.	Area.	Exports & Imports.	National Debt.	Revenue.
		Sq'reMiles	£	£	£
British Empire	301,000,000	8,982,000	917,000,000	1,045,000,000	175,000,000
Russia - - -	94,000,000	8,325,000	246,000,000	417,000,000	129,000,000
United States -	51,000,000	3,028,000	301,000,000	328,000,000	67,000,000
Germany - -	45,000,000	208,000	335,000,000	218,000,000	49,500,000
France - - -	43,500,000	571,000	286,500,000	922,000,000	110,000,000
Austria - - -	38,000,000	241,000	131,000,000	375,000,000	64,000,000
Spain - - - -	25,000,000	321,000	65,000,000	515,000,000	32,500,000

There is little reason for surprise at the progress and general prosperity of our race, when we find such highly commendatory if not flattering remarks as the following passed by foreigners upon the skill, industry, and endurance of our British workmen. From an article in Lloyd's Weekly News of November 2, 1879, the succeeding statements are taken.

M. Taine, the well known French critic of English life, bears testimony to the English workman. According to him, "French manufacturers say that with them the workman labours perfectly the first hour, less well during the second, still less well during the third, until in the last hour he is of no use, his muscular force flags, and his attention becomes relaxed. The English workman labours as well during the last as during the first hour, and though his work-day is ten hours instead of the French twelve, he gets through more work."

Then on the German side we have no less an authority than Prince Bismarck, who in the course of a recent Parliamentary speech said:—"Anyone could see that a French builder executed in a day more and better work than a German. A German working-day was less productive than either a French or an English one."

A Dutch employer of labour on a very large scale, in reply to the inquiries of Mr. Brassey, member of the House of Commons, said:—"Dutch carpenters for rough work are good workmen, but not so active as Englishmen. The labour of four Englishmen is equal to that of five Dutchmen. Our joiners cannot compete in quality or finish with London workmen."

Mr. Lothian Bell, after a most careful consideration of the question, has stated that twenty-five furnacemen on the Tees, England, do as much work as forty-two furnacemen in France; and from his wide experience Mr. Bell has declared that the British iron-workers cannot be replaced by or have anything to fear from the introduction of foreigners.

Mr. Mundella says he "has often compared the production of French, German, and American workmen with that of the English, and he has never known a French or German workman to produce the same quantity of work as an Englishman, although the working hours of the former are longer." He also says that "the English workman is more inventive and can give more good suggestions to his master than the artisan of any other country."

I might quote similar testimony from all parts of Europe. Continental workmen are said to be more inclined to gossip, have not such persistency of purpose, are unable to fix their attention on their work, and are more easily excited and trifling than their British compeers. Doubtless in this characteristic lies much of the secret of our national activity and prosperity. Firmness of purpose, steadfastness of design, and devotion to business are things which must ever mark those who shall stand in the vanguard of life, whether it be individual or national. The people of whom these are not characteristic cannot lead, any more than a sloven can be trusted as manager of a number of workmen.

Another characteristic of the British race is its wonderful power of assimilation. Dr. E. A. Freeman, writing in "Longman's Magazine" in 1882, says:—"Whether in Britain or America, the German or other foreigner becomes English; the Englishman never becomes German. Alike in England and the United States the part of this dominant and assimilating element is played by the English stock. . . . . The strength of the English stock in the United States is nowhere more clearly shown than in the fact that it not only assimilates all foreign elements in those lands which were colonies of England, or colonies of such colonies, but that it makes itself dominant in lands which were never settled from England, but from other European countries." From this fact and others allied to it very much of our national stamina arises. Some of the noblest families of our neighbours forsake the land of their ancestors, and uniting with us infuse that particular spirit or force of character which they have inherited into a strain of our national blood, and the blend acting and reacting produces a fresh and ennobled departure in the outline of some heroic or notable family's history.

Then beyond this peculiar characteristic there is the very important fact of our natural increase of population, which is much more active and healthy than that of any other race. The Times of March 9, 1881, published the following remarks on this fact:—"Whatever the reason, the inhabitants of these isles are the most increasing and multiplying in the world. No political community ever contained so abundant a fountain of that strength which is among the essential elements of power, wealth and progress. Our population has to bear all the drains borne by our neighbours, and some that they are spared; we have not only to sustain and protect our peaceful dominion over the sea, and to feed numerous colonies with that labour which is the first requisite; we have to supply the vast republic rapidly occupying the vast regions of North America with the hands necessary for adapting a continent to the wants of civilised man. As fast as the aborigines recede or disappear the children of our towns and villages take their places. Without such outlets the prolific habits of our race assume even alarming aspects." . . . . "The British races, since they began to outgrow their narrow home, have been peopling that Greater Britain which extends round the world, and in which we may fairly comprehend the States, which prefer a new dynasty every four years to a new Parliament every seven." It appears that although there is an average emigration from Britain in excess of immigration of from 70,000 to 80,000 per annum, yet the population is increasing at the rate of about 500,000 per year. It is therefore a matter of necessity that the people should draft off into foreign lands and colonies to find scope for their energies. The Standard, in an article on the census of 1881, says the increase of our race is amazing, and yet it shows no sign of check." And one thought never to be forgotten in this connection is that wherever our race extends there is planted a British seed which eventually fructifies to produce good fruit for the national tree. Every member of the race going into the midst of other people continues there as a natural representative of the race, bringing into notice its customs, religion, or commercial importance.

Digitized by Google

(To be continued.)

SOME OBJECTIONS AND HOW THEY HAVE BEEN ANSWERED.

In the Middleton Guardian of Sept. 15th, we find three letters on the subject of Our Identity, two of which we propose to notice. One is the objection of a person signing himself "J. Jackson, of Besses," to the allegation that the British are Israel, made on the ground of our cosmopolitan origin; the other, the reply of Mr. F. S. Gandy, the Secretary of the Local British-Israel Association, to a previous attack by Mr. E. E. Hoole. In regard to the "attempt to prove the descent of the present English race from the Long-Lost Ten Tribes of Israel," Mr. Jackson stated as follows:—

I think the idea almost amounts to a craze or hobby, for the act of committing to the public papers such nonsense may tend to make more ridicule than converts, though we must give them both the credit and courage of their opinions, yet as the Jewish King said of Paul "much learning makes people mad." I hope it is not so in this case, though an attempt to prove that the most crossbred or mongrel nation in the world are the true descendants of the Lost Tribes of Israel seems to be a stretch of fancy more than a reality, and in my opinion one of the most Herculean tasks any venturesome scribe could undertake at the present time. However, as it is said that assertions are not facts, I may be allowed to ask our gifted friends how it comes about that a nation sprung from Celts, Saxons, Danes, Normans, and others can be the proper descendants of a nation taken captive some 3,000 years ago, and located then far away from our favoured land. On this point I may quote a sentence from Mr. S's. last letter, where he says that "the English Saxons came from Assyria, Armenia, Media and Asia Minor, where they were located." This specimen of geography gives them a wide berth previous to their migration northward. Mr. S— will perhaps, at his leisure, give the date or period of the migration of the tribes from the east of Asia to the north of Europe previous to their descent on the British Isles, to become a portion of the cosmopolitan family called Britons. I beg to use the latter term, as our friends will perhaps allow our Scotch, Welsh, and possibly our Irish compeers a chance in the heritage said to be the portion at the proper time from the long lost sons of Jacob. Will Mr. S— kindly give us more correct history, and less misty chronology on the events that most certainly have occurred to bring about such a wonderful fulfilment of prophecies, in which I, with many others, should be very much edified, and also obliged to him.

Mr. Gandy returned answer thus to a previous adversary whose objection seems to have been more elementary and puerile than even Mr. Jackson's. He wrote thus:—

E. E. Hoole is evidently under the impression that all Israelites are Jews, and that all the descendants of the Hebrew stock are included in that body (the Jews) to-day. Such, however, is not the case. It is essential that there should be a distinct understanding on this preliminary point, which meets us at the very threshold of the subject. It should be remembered that the Kingdom of Judah and the Kingdom of Israel had a separate history, each entirely distinct from the other. After the disruption, which occurred 975 B.C., these two people remained in Palestine, in separation, for more than two centuries. They warred against each other, conducted several treaties of peace with foreign nations, and existed under different dynasties, laws, customs, religions—practising different rites. In 721 B.C. the Kingdom of Israel was removed out of that portion of Palestine which they then occupied, were taken to Assyria, and never returned. In 588 B.C. (or 133 years after the removal of the Ten Tribes) the main body of the Kingdom of Judah was taken captive to Babylon, but returned after 70 years' sojourn there. Now as the Ten-Tribed House did not return from the Assyrian captivity, and the men brought from Babylon, Cutha, Ava, &c., (2 Kings, xvii. 24), were not taken back, it is clear that the descendants of these—non-Israelites—were occupying the cities of Samaria in the time of Christ. As our friend appears to think that the Ten Tribes returned to Palestine with the Two Tribes (in 535 B.C.), after the decree of Cyrus, I bring forward the following testimony to show that the Ten Tribes did not return, but went off in quite another direction. The Rev. M. Sailman (a Jew) in 1818 wrote a book entitled "Researches in the East: an important account of the Ten Tribes." He states, at page 25, that on the authority of several Armenian historians, the Ten Tribes passed into Tartary. Ortellius says, "The Ten Tribes went north and west of Media to a country called Arsareth, where on entering they took the name of Gau-thei, or the people of God." In Josephus Antiq. xi. 5, ii., the following occurs:—"Wherefore there are but Two Tribes in Asia and Europe subject to the Romans, while the Ten Tribes are beyond the Euphrates till now (A.D. 93), and are an immense multitude, and not to be estimated by numbers." The foregoing form only a small portion of the evidence I could bring forward in support of the so-called Anglo-Israel folly, but which is in reality a revelation furnishing the strongest evidence of the truth of God's word.

The last seems a full and fair reply to the usual objection that "all Jews are Israelites," and "there are no Israelites who are not Jews, because the Israelites and Jews were reunited when the Babylonian Captivity returned under the permission of Cyrus." Mr. Gandy's opponent seems to be one open to this Scriptural argument, and therefore we would suggest to him in support of the above, that there are many Scriptural reasons which ought to convince him that the Jews and Israelites have never to this hour been reunited; much less that the predicted union occurred in B.C. 535. For example. Whenever they return in triumph together, Hosea i. 11 must be fulfilled, and the two Houses united must appoint themselves one head, and come out of the land; the glory of the event being Jezreel's—or Israel's. But nothing of this sort occurred when the Jews returned from Babylon! Further, Isa. xi. 15, 16 tells us that when the Twelve Tribes return to their land certain wonderful portents will occur. But they have not yet taken place! These are the "utter destruction by the Lord of the tongue of the Egyptian Sea, the cyclone which is to dry up the river (i.e. the Euphrates) and the formation of a notable highway for the use of Israel in Asia. Amos ix. 15 declares that Israel restored and planted will never be uprooted. But the Jews were "pulled up" by Titus in A.D. 70! Such prophecies as Ezek. xxxvii. 15—28, which most men allow to be future, have reference obviously to the restoration of Israel and Judah to their land. These verses have never been fulfilled at any time, and certainly not during the return of the Jews from Babylon. These and many other prophecies exist showing unmistakably that the Ten Tribes never returned to the land of Judea or to their own portion of Palestine either. These considerations strengthen the case against Mr. Gandy's opponent, and commend themselves we hope to him.

In regard to Mr. Jackson and his opposition, founded on ethnic considerations, we think his jeering and scoffing tone ill becomes the subject. The matter relates to what is Scriptural and prophetic, and resolves itself into this:—God made certain declarations regarding His people Israel of the House of Joseph, to the effect that they were to become (because of their idolatry) "wanderers among the nations," and "sifted among them as corn is sifted in a sieve, yet without the least grain falling upon the earth (Hosea ix. 17; Amos ix. 9). In Ezek. xi. 16,17 we have statements of God's intention regarding the Ten Tribes which ought to teach Mr. Jackson, that if he finds a nation such as ours made up of cosmopolitan ingredients, Celts, Saxons, Danes, Normans and what not, he only finds what God declared would be the case. Israel was to be mingled with the nations, and so mingled they accordingly came to the "Isles of the West," to form the nation of God's Lo-Ammi, or Israel, "called by another name" (Isa. xxiv. 15; Hosea i. 10; Isa. lxv. 15, R.V). Mr. Jackson jeeringly asks for information as to the geographical route of the British from the East, not aware we suppose that all ethnographical and historical writers admit that the ancestors of the British, the Celts, the Teutons, Angles, Saxons, Normans, &c., all came from Central Asia, Assyria, Media and Persia, and we know from 1 Peter i. 1, that a portion of the same race, a detachment from the same great body, were in St Peter's days located in Asia Minor as he describes. If Mr. Jackson wishes for more detailed information respecting the route of Israel towards Western Europe and the "Isles afar off" we recommend him to study Oxonian's history of "Israel's Wanderings" (Banks and Son, Racquet Court, E.C.); also Bishop Titcomb's "Anglo-Israel Postbag," where the whole subject is treated in a luminous and able manner—historically, philologically, physiologically, ethnically and prophetically. The point of the whole matter however is this. However we came here, and however dim and dark may be the evidence of our pedigree, one thing is clear. We British possess exclusively all the blessings which God, who cannot lie, promised to give to Israel exclusively. It follows as a matter of course that the British must be Israel; and we do not see how Mr. Jackson can evade the force of the evidence we present to him in the case. Our witness is the God of Israel, and He cannot mislead. Why does Mr. Jackson neglect this testimony, but seek explanation as to facts which God's Word has made clear, and in reference to which there cannot possibly be any mistake? Mr. Jackson finds ours a mixed and cosmopolitan race as gathered in these islands. Israel were, according to the Scriptures, to be gathered into "the Isles of the West," out of many races where they had been previously scattered by the hand of God. The very thing has taken place in short which the Scriptures foretold, and yet Mr. Jackson, ignorant of the prophecies and of history, is dissatisfied; and inclined to joke upon what are very serious facts indeed, and God's own arrangements for the people of His choice. Mr. Jackson demands "more correct history." We refer him to Sharon Turner's "History of the Anglo-Saxons," Vol. 1, Book ii., chap. i., p. 57, and he will find our case there very amply corroborated, both historically and chronologically. What Mr. J. requires is information, and also historical research. Both these he must have before he can again venture safely to rush into print, to laugh at the Anglo-Israelites! For the laugh recoils on himself.

Digitized by Google

CHRISTCHURCH, NEW ZEALAND.—Sydenham British-Israel Association. The fortnightly meeting of this Association was held on Tuesday evening: Mr. T. M. Gee (President) was in the chair. After some ordinary business had been gone through, the President read some extracts from the BANNER OF ISRAEL in answer to certain objections which had been made by an opponent of the identity. A discussion then followed as to whether the people from the different parts of the civilized world, who were in Jerusalem at the Feast of Pentecost when the Holy Spirit descended upon the disciples (Acts ii.), were representatives of the Ten Tribes or not. The meeting closed with the Benediction.—The Star, Oct. 4, 1888.

"PHILO-ISRAEL" has kindly consented to lecture for the Metropolitan Anglo-Israel Association, on Friday evening, December 14th, at 7.30 o'clock. Subject, "The Kingdom, and the Lord's Will Concerning It." Further particulars will be duly advertised in our next.

THE POPULATION OF FRANCE AND THAT OF THE BRITISH EMPIRE.

THE Evening Standard of Oct. 6, has a despairing notice uttered by some of the Paris journals in reference to their nation's future greatness. They recognise that population is Empire, and that without it a nation must crumble into ruins. That is stated to be the condition of the French people, whose tendency is to decline, while that of the British, or as the French describe us, "the Anglo-Saxons," is to increase, being now two or three times as numerous as the French, and promising in a century to be ten times as many. We quote the words of the Evening Standard as sent us by Mr. G. Wells of Tunbridge Wells: they are the desponding accents of a people who have not the Abrahamic blessings, and who, wanting them, are not Israel; but feel and know that therefore they are "a lost nation!"

Several Paris papers publish articles on the population of France. The France shows that the increase of births over deaths is due entirely to a diminished death-rate. Men are living to be older, but this cause of increase is, from its very nature, temporary. The tendency of the population is to decline, while England and Germany grow at the rate of half a million a year. The Anglo-Saxon race, which was much inferior in point of number to the French race, is now two or three times as numerous.

Within a century for one man speaking French there will be ten speaking English. The France passes in review all the proposed remedies, and rejects them as visionary or impracticable, and concludes that the only one is to revive the old spirit of the nation. This, however, cannot be done by decree. The Universe says: We can fix the day, not a distant day, when by the perennial falling off of births France will have lost one-third of its population. The result is fatal. Within half a century France will have fallen below Italy and Spain to the rank of a second-rate Power. There is no denying the figures.

If this continues, in addition to other causes of decadence, we are a lost nation.

"Population is empire," and population is distinctly God's blessing conferred upon His people whereby they are to dominate the earth at last. But our nation knows not that it is the object of such a stupendous blessing. The historian J. R. Seeley in his lectures on "The Expansion of England" writes of this matter somewhat after the fashion of the BANNER, thus:—

There is something very characteristic in the indifference which we show toward this mighty phenomenon of the diffusion of our race and the expansion of our state. We seem, as it were, to have conquered and peopled half the world in a fit of absence of mind . . . . You may make it a question whether we ought to be glad of this vast increase of our race, whether it would not be better that we should advance morally and intellectually than in mere population and possessions, whether the great things have not for the most part been done by the small nations, and so on. . . . I leave it an open question whether our increase is matter for exultation or regret. It is not yet time to consider that. What is clear, in the meantime, is the immense importance of this increase. Good or bad, it is evidently the great fact of modern English history, and it would be the greatest mistake that it is a merely material fact, or that it carries no moral and intellectual consequence. . . . Whether good or bad, the growth of Greater Britain is an event of enormous magnitude Evidently as regards the future it is the greatest event (pp. 10, 12, 13).

The greatness of the event consists in the fact that the increase of our population forces us in our circumscribed islands to seek room abroad for our emigrants, and this God has given in strategic lands, among the "desolations" of the earth; whereby we are enabled to dominate the other nations of the world and bring them into subjection to Christ.

The great Napoleon, says Seeley, saw these results with his far seeing acute intellect, and he did his best to prevent the rising might of the British nation developing into world-wide empire, because he knew that if it did so his own beloved

Digitized by Google

France would be ruined and overshadowed by the mighty giant. "He saw in England," says the historian, "never the Island, the European State, but always the world-Empire, the network of dependencies, and colonies, and islands covering every sea, among which he was himself destined to find at last his prison and his grave" (p. 33). But Napoleon did not know that the French people, whom he so loved, would be afflicted from on high with another and a fatal disability, namely, a serious falling-off in the birth-rate, which has long been the trouble of the nation. What may be the resultant future of France we cannot venture to forecast, since we do not know. But we do know that our own abnormal increase is a blessing direct from the God of Israel, and that being a means to an end, God purposes to give to us thereby larger and larger portions of the earth to have and to hold, and finally to subdue it all to the Lord Jesus Christ, the King of the coming world-wide kingdom, according to the prophecies. Our redundant population, which some regard as a very questionable benefit, is being used by God to our national aggrandisement and to the blessing of the world, while the absence of this national advantage is deplored by the French writers as a curse which will finally cause their nation's ruin. We may therefore properly and gratefully praise the Lord for His mercies to our race and for His faithfulness to His promises "to Abraham and his seed for ever."

WHAT JOSEPHUS SAID ABOUT THE TEN TRIBES.

Mr. Mark Knights, of Norwich, whose letter in the Norfolk Chronicle we publish to-day, accused us in that communication of "unfairly" quoting Josephus, and tells us what the latter wrote in Antiq. xi. 5, 2, on the subject of the Ten Tribes at the period of the Jews' return to Palestine about B.C. 530. He gives the passage thus: "The entire body of the people of Israel remained in that country, wherefore there are but Two Tribes in Asia and Europe subject to the Romans, while the Ten Tribes are beyond Euphrates till now, and are an immense multitude, and not to be estimated by numbers." "Thus, according to Josephus," remarked Mr. Mark Knights, "the entire body of the people remained in the land of captivity till his time." He argued, therefore, in a subsequent letter, that as Josephus stated the facts thus, "it was impossible for even parties of the Israelites to have accompanied the Celts who had centuries before peopled Britain." We have, since the receipt of this letter, had occasion to consult our friend Oxonian on this passage, and hoped he would be able to ascertain from the original Greek of Josephus (which was not in our library) what were his actual words in the passage in question.

The reply we have received throws so much new light on the historical question that we feel bound to place the result of the reference before our readers to enable them to make use of the argument against our opponents, if any should feel inclined again to imitate Mr. Mark Knights' example. The literal translation of the Greek, as written by the Jewish historian in loco, is this:—"Now the copy of it (i.e., of Artaxerxes' decree) he, Ezra, sent amongst all his compatriots that were in Media. And many of them, gathering up their belongings, came to Babylon, desiring (to make) the journey to Jerusalem. But the general mass of the Israelites held their ground (or remained where they were.") (Josephus does not specify where they were or what lands they occupied!) "Whence it follows" (or "on which account," drawing an inference, or "whence it has happened") that Two Tribes are in Asia and Europe, subject to the Romans, but the Ten Tribes are till now beyond Euphrates, countless myriads" (or countless ten thousands), not able to be computed in number."

Josephus never says these countless multitudes were "in the land of captivity" when he wrote! He does not either state the facts as history, but as an inference he drew. Further, how could Josephus have been stating a historical fact regarding the "multitudinous" Israelites "beyond Euphrates," that is, in the "land of their captivity," while all other historians are silent about such an inconceivably vast concourse of Israelites there at that epoch? The fact is, Josephus never meant and never wrote here about the region of "Israel's captivity!" He said the people were somewhere "beyond Euphrates." It might have been thousands of miles beyond, for all Josephus says! He might, in short, as a historian, have been speaking of the mighty Israelite-Scythian Empire then existing in the heart of Southern Russia "across Euphrates from Palestine," far away from "the land of the captivity."

Josephus thus does not contradict the idea of a possible escape of Israel from the land of their Median captivity, but on the contrary his words quite accord with a belief in the fact which Oxonian demonstrates, that Israel did escape, and in the present modern Provinces of Russia did establish a great Scythian but really Israelitish Empire. Josephus' words have been misunderstood by Mr. Mark Knights, and no doubt by others. His evidence is not opposed to our case. It can be relied on, on the contrary, to prove these two facts—namely, that—1. Only Two Tribes returned from the Babylonian captivity. 2. That the Ten Tribes did not accompany them then or since to Palestine up to Josephus' era. In fact, as Oxonian remarks to us, "Josephus very well described the position of the House of Israel in his day without knowing precisely where they were!"

The inference drawn from Josephus by our opponent being wrong, it follows that parties of Israelites might, for aught Josephus wrote, have accompanied the Celts who had, centuries before, appeared in Europe; and having accompanied them there it is possible, because God said He would do it, that Israel was gathered from out of the nations, and brought into their Island Home according to the prophecies. All we have to prove in our contention with unbelievers in Our Identity is, that it was perfectly possible since B.C. 620 that stragglers from the tribes in Media, large or small in numbers, might have left the land of their captivity and accompanied the Celts, and the Teutons, or Goths, afterwards in their irruption into Europe. That point established, it becomes easy to identify those Celts who occupied parts of the British Islands as Israelites, because these, joined by the later Teutonic detachments of the same people, are now a nation having all the birthright blessings promised by God on oath to Abraham and his seed for ever. It is impossible for God to lie. And therefore, when we find a people who exclusively possess all the features and marks which He declared should be Israel's exclusively, we are tied up to the inevitable conclusion that the so-called Celts and Teutons, who settled here, were of the House of Ephraim or Israel, but not otherwise. We are glad to know that Josephus' testimony, genuine and authentic as we believe it to be, is not against us, but for our claim, and we thank God accordingly that it is so.

"DWELLING ALONE."

The London Daily Telegraph, on Sept. 4, published an article commenting on a meeting recently held by Frenchmen in Bordeaux, to commemorate the defeat of the British in 1453, when Talbot, Earl of Shrewsbury, was killed at the battle of Castillon, and the British were driven out of France with exception of the one solitary foothold at Calais, destined also to fall in another century from the nerveless grasp of Mary the Bloody. The Daily Telegraph, following all British historians, notes the valour of the British Commanders of those unfortunate times, but rejoices that they were vanquished, and that the British failed to secure or retain a continental frontier.

Digitized by Google

The reason the Daily Telegraph gives for its satisfaction is worthy of note by BANNER readers. This is the picture the writer draws of Great Britain had she been so unfortunate as to have retained a part of France within her empire:—

We have to thank His Majesty Charles VII. of France, and his captains and men of war, that we are not at this moment the anxious possessors of that most troublesome of all inheritances, a European frontier. And we have only to cast the most casual glance at what is going forward in Europe at this moment to see how much we have gained by that loss. England planted on the Continent in this era of huge armaments, fierce jealousies, and complicated intrigues, would be a singularly different Power both to herself and to the world at large from the England of to-day. For one thing, she would be—she would necessarily have to be—a nation of large armaments herself. We should be bleeding under the conscription, and staggering under a crushing load of military taxation. There would be no peace party, or none worth mentioning—whether that would or would not tend to increase the danger of war—and an immense proportion of the national power which now expends itself in industrial channels would be directed to barren and unproductive ends. It would be as dangerous to neglect our Army as our Navy, and the "economist" would be able to imperil our Empire with equal effect in two distinct ways—a privilege of which he might be trusted to avail himself. We should be deprived of our principal argument against the projects of Sir Edward Watkin, whose shareholders would be among the few gainers by the change. It would no longer be open to us to contend that the construction of the Channel Tunnel would be a fruitful source of panics, because panic would then be the normal condition of our existence. It is needless, however, to expatiate on the inconveniences and the anxieties attendant on the possession of a land frontier. They are familiar enough to all—as familiar as those singularly fortunate turns in our history which seem to have been designed to bring about the concentration of our strength. Failures of dynasty and lapses of succession have combined with military reverses to effect the double purpose of making these kingdoms one, and of segregating them so united from the outer world.

This, in short, is a neat way of expressing the Scriptural idea contained in Numbers xxiii. 9, R.V.: "Lo! it is a people that dwell alone and shall not be reckoned among the nations." Israel was to do this, and the Daily Telegraph, recognising that the British are now a mighty nation, declares that "we dwell alone," "segregated and united" apart from the outer world. That we are a great nation though isolated, appears from these following sentences of the same article:—

With such a splendid hostage on the European Continent to watch over we could never have gained a free hand. We should never have broken the power of Spain under Elizabeth, and probably we should never have provoked the struggle with France for dominion in America and the Indies. Our insularity has meant for us something more than security at home; it has meant power abroad, the freedom to shape our course of colonisation whithersoever we would, and the strength to strike for it against whomsoever we met. It has been "Imperium" to us no less than "Libertas;" and we have to thank our victors at Castillon that that insularity to which we owe all this was assured to us.

The greatness of our nation in short has depended on her "segregation," and her separation from the continent. Our dwelling literally alone among the nations, has been the means whereby God has given us greatness and mightiness of empire, the Gates, the heathen dominion and magnificent wealth, such as He promised to Israel His people, only. Some men object to our teachings because in this one point of "dwelling alone," they find that we do not respond to the prophecies concerning Israel. But here is a London newspaper, ably and cleverly written, which drags to the light one of our most salient characteristics, and declares that because we "dwell alone," united and segregated from the outer world, we have been blessed with security at home and vast power abroad. The remainder of the text in Numbers xxiii. is also literally true of our people, for we are not reckoned as Israel among the nations, nor do we reckon ourselves as such among them! As far as we and the outer world are concerned Israel is a dead and defunct people no longer known on the earth, as the Bishop of Manchester also declares to be the case. Men reckon the British among the nations, but no one ever attempted to reckon the Israelite kingdom as one extant among the nations, for the fact is not so! Israel is dead, outcast, known by "another name" than Israel. They are God's Lo-ammi, and unknown by the name of "Israel" among the nations.

If this be the right meaning of the passage, and our opponents generally declare it is; then the British people correspond exactly to the prophecy, and so establish the fact of their Identity. In short, so far from Balaam's prophecy being any bar to the acceptance of our belief, the two points indicated confirm the fact, and leave our opponents absolutely without excuse for rejecting it.

In another point of view, and that a Scriptural and spiritual one, our interpretation of Numbers xxiii. 9, has strong corroboration. In Exod. xxxiii. 16, R.V. we have these words, which explain what the Spirit of God really meant by Israel "dwelling alone." Moses said to the Lord, "For wherein now shall it be known that I have found grace in Thy sight, I and Thy people? Is it not, in that Thou goest with us, so that we be separated, I and Thy people, from all the people that are upon the face of the earth?" Here is the secret! To "dwell alone" as a nation among the other peoples of the earth consists in this, that God dwells with us, and "He hath not dealt so with any nation." This is the teaching of Gen. ix. 26, 27, regarding Semetic Israel. It is the burden of Psa. cxlvii. 19, 20, as to His instruction of us His people in His word; and Amos iii. 1, 2; Mal. iii. 6; Deut. ix. 26—29, all support the fact of God's choice. The British are Israel, as we have proved by a hundred lines of proofs, and therefore God dwells with us, teaches us, recognises and favours us, and commissions us to teach the other nations of the earth, thereby constituting us by this very privilege and distinction a separated nation, "dwelling alone," selected by the Lord Jesus Christ to be "His nation," "bringing forth the fruits of the kingdom of God" in place of His temporarily rejected, because now rebellious, sons, the Jews (Matt. xxi. 43, R.V.; Isa. lxv. 1, R.V., &c).

FEDERATION PORTRAYED IN THE HISTORY OF JOSEPH.

By JOHN T. GOTT.

IN recent years much has been written about Federation. Any ordinary mind, endeavouring to grasp the views advanced in our magazines and dailies, pro et con, will be very apt to fall into an intellectual daze, and will leave the subject in disgust, without knowing clearly what this great nation really ought to do. But as time rolls on, those who have thought about the Federation of the Empire will have noticed that one statesman after another has come forward with clearer and more definite views anent the subject, and with more solid arguments for its advocacy.

Recently, Lord Rosebery in Edinboro', and Sir John Macdonald in Canada, in terms almost identical, have strongly opposed any policy of independence for Canada, or any policy of annexation to the States.

Believers in Our Identity feel confident how this will end, but there are thousands who do not view the subject in the same light; who have certain misgivings about the possibility of such a union (?), and the ultimate fall of Great Britain in the not far future.

If we view this subject in a purely intellectual light, the pros and cons are not equally divided. More has been said in favour of Federation than against it. History teaches that "Unity is strength," and we ought to learn from that source alone that the Federation of our colonies is an imperative necessity, and that the Federation of the Empire at the present time is our best defence, when military and naval affairs, to all outward appearance, are in such an unsatisfactory condition.

Digitized by Google

We cannot shut our eyes to the palpable fact that Great Britain, as she now stands, isolated among the nations is surrounded by tremendous perils. But, while admitting the fact, that renewed energy is required on our part to defend ourselves, we remember that the God of Israel is not unmindful of His unconditional covenant promises, and that He will come to our rescue, as he did to our forefathers, when they were in equally as bad a state.

A Northern leader-writer has tersely stated that the perils of the Empire are common to the mother country and her many offshoots, (i.e., colonies) especially the young ones; that perils menace our commercial future, our maritime defence, the maintenance of our commercial and political union, and that we are vulnerable in every sea and ocean. But, he states, that by Federation in a supreme crisis of war, the whole forces of the far East, and of the far West, and of the mother country might be united against any combination of rival powers either in Europe or in Asia for the overthrow of our maritime supremacy.

So, as we have stated, as time rolls on, more definite views respecting the imperative necessity for Federation emanate from the Press at intervals. What worldly men can see, those who study prophecy in the light of modern days ought to be able to endorse or refute as the case may be.

In Vol. x. p. 10 of the BANNER OF ISRAEL, we endeavoured to prove that Federation was portrayed in Ezekiel's vision of the valley of dry bones. In 1878, in our lecture, "Israel in Britain, Portrayed in the History of Joseph,"* one important part of our subject was passed over in comparative silence. While fully assured that Joseph's dreams were prophetical of some extraordinary event, the signs of the times then did not enable us to understand their meaning.

Now the light streams in, and the signs of the times manifest the fact that the Federation of the House of Joseph, i.e. the House of Ten-Tribed Israel and all her colonies, including the House of Judah "gathered in," was distinctly forecast in Joseph's dream of the "sheaves in the field." It all seems very simple and very plain now. "We were binding sheaves in the field." The Master said the field was the world, therefore the seed of Israel, "binding sheaves," must be scattered throughout the whole world as they are to-day, Now, note carefully, the gradual development of the dream and its distinct stages. "Lo! my sheaf arose, and also stood upright." Prophetical of the House of Joseph or Israel attaining a pre-eminent position in the world. "Behold your sheaves stood round about." This indicates position. Joseph's sheaf in the centre: the others standing round.† So, the world is divided into two hemispheres, a land hemisphere and a water hemisphere. According to Guyot, Great Britain stands in the centre of the land hemisphere and her many colonies literally belt the universe, as most of our readers know. "Your sheaves made obeisance to my sheaf." This was a voluntary action. There was no compulsion, and Joseph's sheaf seems to have had little to do with the action of the rest. So we opine that we are passing through sundry stages of thought and experience respecting Federation. The action in our colonies indicates that there is a stirring among the sheaves akin to the stirring among the dry bones in the valley, and that we are drawing near to the time when the Federation of the Empire will inaugurate the dawn of a Universal Kingdom.

"Remember the former things of old:
For I am God, and there is none else;
I am God, and there is none like Me,
Declaring the end from the beginning,
And from ancient times the things that are not yet done, Saying, My counsel shall stand, and I will do all My pleasure."
—Isa. xlvi. 9, 10.

November, 1888.

* Indexed in BANNER, Vol. ii. "Bible Portraits, Joseph."

† He (Joseph) shall push the people, all of them, even the ends of the earth" Deut. xxxiii. 17.

ANGLO-ISRAEL FREE DISTRIBUTION FUND.

SIXTIETH MONTHLY REPORT.

THE following donations and subscriptions, from Oct. 20th to Nov. 17th, are very gratefully acknowledged:—

By the Treasurer: W. W. (monthly subscription, for BANNERS), 3s. 6d.; Captain F., Wimbledon, £3; H. G., Tooting (two months' subscription), 2s.; Well-wisher, Darlington, 3s.; F. A. W., Piltown, 5s.; H. E. T., Dorking, 10s. Per Miss E. M. Rush: G. J. (for BANNERS), 2s. 6d.; M. L. W. (for BANNERS), £1.

We have also gratefully to acknowledge the receipt of P. C. G.'s annual contribution of £10 towards the secretary's honorarium. This kind and repeated thoughtfulness being most warmly appreciated by both secretary and treasurer.

By Mr. A. Sibbald: Mrs. C., Summer-town, 4s.; Mrs. B. (monthly subscription), 5s.; Mrs. V. B., 2s. 6d.; Mrs. H., East Charleton, 2s. 6d.; Mr. W. (quarterly subscription), 1s.

Total, £16 1s. 0d.

Total amount received this year	£89	0	0
Received at the same date last year.....	£104	0	0

J. LAWRENCE, Hon. Treasurer.

Every people finds laid upon it certain necessary activities, in most of which all peoples find their common tasks. Each great race has some commanding inspiration, something which masters every other aspiration and ambition, energies its efforts, and shapes its destiny. What, then, is the work of Israel? The position we take is this, that the fact being patent that the Church is now staggering in its combat with intellectual wickedness and opposition of worldly philosophy, it is of much moment to her that the sacred Scriptures can be shown to be the infallible, unerring word of the Most High God. The fact is, the enemies of the Church have discovered its vulnerable point, and the devil is making serious breaches in what has hitherto been considered important strongholds. In such a moment of acknowledged weakness, it is of infinite importance not only to repel the darts of the enemy, but also effectually to silence his batteries.

Brethren of British-Israel, the time, we believe, has come for you to show the fidelity of God's promises, and the truth of His holy Word, for most assuredly this "Identification of Israel" is an important witness to it. May God open the eyes of the nation to help in scattering the news broadcast. We are in want of funds for the purpose. There is a large field open to us if the supply keep pace with the demand. The postage of each 1-lb packet to India costs 1s. One of our Sowers writes from Rawul Pindi that he could well make use of more literature if it were sent him.

The cost of sending out the full number of BANNERS weekly, including postage, is about £3 13s. per month.

BANNER DISTRIBUTION.—Owing to the small balance in hand at the beginning of November, the BANNERS were reduced for two weeks, but the usual number (137) are now sent out.

LITERATURE DISTRIBUTION.—Twenty-two parcels of pamphlets and leaflets have been forwarded to the following places: Cosham (Hants), Brighton, Portsmouth, Alvaston and Eckington (Derbyshire), Carlisle, Shepherd's Bush, Commercial-road, E., Westminster, Devonport, Dover, Sheffield, Birmingham, Great Yarmouth, South Devon, Chippenham, Wilsden (Yorks.), India, Malta, British Guiana, Barbadoes, Auckland (New Zealand).

Twenty-one small packets have also been sent to Rawul Pindi, Ambala, Secunderabad (2), Bangalore (2), Poona, Nellore (India); Rangoon, Moulmien (Burmah); Kandy (Ceylon); Cape Town, Ograbeis, Vryburgh, Bechuanaland (South Africa); Hong-Kong; Nelson's Plains and Gewgery (New South Wales); Launceston (Tasmania); Barbadoes; Cleveland (Ohio); Toronto (Canada).

CORRESPONDENCE.—A correspondent from Devonport writes:—"I have given Anglo-Israel papers to R. N. Scripture Readers for distribution, and on asking how the papers were received by our men, was informed that they are highly appreciated, and many men are deeply interested, and are believers in the question."

From Dover we have received the following:—"I am glad to say that there are a number of believers in Our Identity, but I have not been able to form a committee. I think that if a good lecturer could be sent there would be many who would be at the meeting. I have twice read papers, and they have been well received. There are some few hard opponents. One especially, a Jew (converted); he disclaims all the arguments put forward. I have given some of the papers to other Jews. But, on the other hand, those of us who are true believers are working quietly, surely, and effectively."

Digitized by Google

From the East End of London another correspondent writes:—"I have great pleasure in writing to you respecting the scattering of seed among my numerous friends, both at home and abroad. One dear friend who has just arrived home after a long voyage tells me that not only has he been profited temporally, but spiritually, since he has believed in Our Identity. Among my masonic brethren anything respecting the Pyramid, such as 'The Bible in Stone,' etc., has been eagerly taken up."

A Sower from Carlisle writes:—"I have had, through ill-health, to retire from the Army Scripture Readers' Society, and am now manager of the Soldiers' Institute here. I have, therefore not the same opportunity of spreading the good news of our Society; but shall always do what I can. I have always found the men in the army to take a deep interest in the readings, and a good number of Christian people to whom I gave papers always spoke well of it."

ANDREW SIBBALD, Secretary.

Contributions to the Fund will be thankfully received and acknowledged by the Hon. Treasurer, Miss J. Lawrence, Rosslyn, Hampton-road, Upper Teddington, Middlesex; or by Mr. Andrew Sibbald, 3, Townshend-villas, Richmond, Surrey. Cheques may be crossed, "London and Provincial Bank, Teddington Branch."

ISRAEL'S SCRIPTURE AND PRAYER UNION.

FOUR new members have been added to the list since our last report, making the total 1,475. One card has also been given out by our agent in Malta.

New members are requested, when writing for cards, to kindly state whether their names are to be entered as Mr., Mrs., or Miss, etc.

The prayers of the Union are earnestly requested on behalf of a member who is ill, that health may be restored.

A donation of 2s. 6d., from member 209, is most gratefully acknowledged.

For the convenience of those members who wish to continue the daily reading, the following list of chapters for December is appended:—

1st ...	Heb.	x.	12th ...	1 Pet.	iii.	23rd ...	2 John	i.
2nd...	,,	xi.	13th ...	,,	iv.	24th ...	3 John	i.
3rd ...	,,	xii.	14th ...	,,	v.	25th ...	Jude	i.
4th ...	,,	xiii.	15th ...	2 Pet.	i.	26th ...	Rev.	i.
5th ...	James	i.	16th ...	,,	ii.	27th ...	,,	ii.
6th ...	,,	ii.	17th ...	,,	iii.	28th ...	,,	iii.
7th ...	,,	iii.	18th ...	1 John	i.	29th ...	,,	iv.
8th ...	,,	iv.	19th ...	,,	ii.	30th ...	,,	v.
9th ...	,,	v.	20th ...	,,	iii.	31st ..	,,	vi.
10th ...	1 Pet.	i.	21st ...	,,	iv.
11th ...	,,	ii.	22nd...	,,	v.

The card of membership will be sent on receipt of three stamps.

The first and second series of Monthly Comments on the whole Bible, by Philo-Israel, may now be obtained in volume form. Price, in paper cover, 1s. 2d. each; in cloth 2s. each, post free.

The "Prayers for Daily Use," being a prayer for each day of the week, by Philo-Israel, are 1d., or 9d. per doz., postage extra.

The prayer of the Union, as on the Card of Membership, may now be obtained printed in larger type, price 1d. for three copies, post free; or 1s. per 100 for distribution. Address—Miss E. Sibbald, 3, Townshend-villas, Richmond, Surrey.

"ON the line of possibilities God is all sufficient for any reasonable purpose or work. On the line of space there is room enough for continued creation, and on the line of time eternity is equal to both. Our faith and our conceptions and our imagination have a fine field for exercise and development in these infinitudes. Three large words, God, space, and eternity, all warrant more than the human mind can take in. These facts should prepare us to receive wonderful things in a Divine revelation. All things are great relatively in the Divine economy, though small when separate."—Dr. Wild's Sermons.

Correspondence.

PROGRESS IN BIRKENHEAD.

To the Editor of the "Banner of Israel."

DEAR PHILO-ISRAEL,—From the report published in your impression of November 7th your readers will have noticed that we have started a British-Israel Identity Association here. We are trying to form a library of standard Identity works, and I shall be very grateful to any of our friends who have works at hand not in use, if they will forward them to me by parcel post. Bound volumes of the BANNER would be of the highest value, for experience teaches that of all our literature this is the most read and valued. I have now placed this upon the table of our Free Library here since August, 1882, and I constantly find working men intent over its pages. I also place one every week on the table at our Young Men's Christian Association, and distribute copies whenever opportunity offers. A number of persons who, till they received a copy of the BANNER, took no interest in the subject, are now regular subscribers and firm believers in our great truth. I heartily recommend this plan to other sowers. Through the kindness of Miss J. Lawrence and Messrs. R. Banks and Son, who each presented a bound volume of the BANNER (Vols. 2 and 8) we have been able to form a solid foundation for the reading of our members.

Philo-Israel's "Geography of the Gates" and "History of the House of Israel"; Bishop Titcomb's "Message to the Church" and "Post Bag"; Dr. Grant's "Kingdom of God" and "Israel in the New Testament"; the Rev. Robt. Douglas' "Ephraim-England" (which is so valuable from the masterly definition given of Ephraim's "fulness of nations," and makes most of us pass over what we consider the terrible mistake of cutting off the United States as Manasseh and putting in Gentile Germany); Dr. Wild's "Lost Ten Tribes," "The Future of Israel and Judah," and "Talks of the Times"; and Ed. Hine's "47 Identifications," would all be gladly welcomed; as also would the "Coronation Chair and Jacob's Stone," by Mrs. G. A. Rogers, a work which I find fixes attention, and usually makes a conscious Israelite wherever lent.

It is wonderful how our loving Father of Israel blesses His work, even if we do not see results immediately. I have been studying this great truth, with the Bible and English History compared, for ten years, and the more I study the firmer is the great fact of God's faithfulness to all His promises as revealed in our national Identity as Israel, fixed by the Holy Spirit in my mind. What I advise everyone is, study the sacred Scriptures and see if "these things are so" or not—do not take man's word, only God's—and wherever this is done conviction follows, the infidel and papist are confounded, the Bible loved as God's very truth, and the Sabbath kept holy and prized as our most precious heritage (Ex. xxxi. 13, 17.) I have been quietly sowing the seed "beside all waters," here and abroad for seven years, and the sheaves are appearing in all directions. To God be all the praise and glory. I mention what I would rather refrain from doing, only that others may be encouraged to go on in this grand work, seeing that God owns and blesses the feeble instrumentality we put forth in His name.

Yours faithfully,

THEODORE S. HILL,

President of the Birkenhead and District British Identity Association.

9, Christ Church Road, Birkenhead, November 8th, 1888.

P.S.—I shall be glad if those here who have received benefit from the literature given to them will send me their thank-offerings for the Free Distribution Fund, which I will forward to Miss Lawrence and acknowledge in the BANNER.—T. S. H.

"IN studying the history of the Hebrew people, one should do so in a connective way. A good deal of the Divine and the human blends in this history, and it is the only ancient history that you need recognize that fact in. If you read Hebrew history just as you would read the history of China or India you won't understand it. There are certain things in this history that could not belong to any other history. In their whole history we have a blending of the Divine and the human, and the human is very prominent sometimes, and the Divine is equally as prominent."—Dr. Wild's Sermons.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed: "Philo-Israel," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

SUBSCRIPTIONS.

	£ s. d.
Annual Subscription for one copy weekly (including the Twelve Double Numbers) post free	0 7 6
Two Copies (including Double Numbers)	0 13 6
Three Copies " " "	1 0 4
Four Copies " " "	1 5 6
Six Copies " " "	1 16 4

Post Office Orders to be made payable at the head office, St. Martin's-le-grand, London, to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C., or F. W. PARRY & Co., 29, Paternoster-row, London.

The Editor cannot undertake to return rejected MSS. unless stamps for the purpose be sent. Parties requiring an answer should enclose a stamp.

Contents Bills and Show Cards may be obtained on application to the Publishers.

Advertisements should be sent to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

Prepaid Advertisements are inserted at the rate of thirty words for 1s. 4d.

METROPOLITAN ANGLO-ISRAEL ASSOCIATION.

THE BIBLE READINGS

are held

EVERY TUESDAY AFTERNOON,

At 3.30, in the Library of the Association, 14, King William-street, Charing Cross, W.C. All friends are invited.

METROPOLITAN ANGLO-ISRAEL ASSOCIATION.

ON THURSDAY AFTERNOON, DEC. 6th, at 3.30 o'clock, a Lecture will be delivered in the ASSOCIATION ROOMS, 14, King William-street, Charing Cross, W.C., by Mr. DOUGLAS A. ONSLOW, J.P. Subject: "Some Thoughts on Romans XI."

JAMES BILLINGTON, Sec.

FOR SALE.—My Identity Library. Any inquiry answered. Bound volumes of "Life from the Dead," "Glory Leader," "Banner," "Israel's Hope and Destiny." Nearly all that has been published on the Identity subject. Apply—J. W. CARTER, 81, Scarbro'-street, West Hartlepool.

The Origin of Masonic Ritual & Tradition: A Lecture on the Three Degrees, by BRO. WM. ROWBOTTOM, P.M., with facsimile of a very rare Masonic engraving published in 1789.—Cloth, 2/6.

"Exquisitely clear and singularly correct in everything wherein I may be any authority or guide."—Professor PIAZZI SMYTH. "The Author seems to reason intelligently from his principles."—Literary Churchman.

London: R. Banks and Son, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C.; George Kenning, 16, Great Queen Street, W.C.

"A decidedly picturesque fairy-tale."—Spectator.

Eildon Grange: A Tale.

By ANDREW CLARK, M.A., Vicar of St. Michael's, Oxford. "Extremely readable."—Church Times. "Clever, graphic, and morally elevating."—Literary Churchman. "Of absorbing interest to boys."—Tablet. "Fresh and vigorous."—Church Bells. "The illustrations are very good and possess a distinct charm and piquancy."—Spectator.

Oxford: S. Rowbottom and Son; London: Hamilton, Adams and Co., 32, Paternoster Row, E.C.—Price 5s.

DE BEUVE'S GINGER CAKES

Are the most delicious Cakes in the world, and are highly recommended for invalids and the aged. They form an Unfailing Remedy for Constipation and Indigestion, and while most rich cakes disagree with children, these are very wholesome and conducive to health. Sent for 1s. Postal Order to any part of the Kingdom by Victor de Beuve, 3, Rood Lane, London, E.C.

GINGER CAKES

Christmas Cards.

30 MAGNIFICENT CARDS, by RAPHAEL TUCK, Value 6s. 2d., post free for 1s.

Best Value Ever Offered.

Cash Bonus of £5 for Competition, free amongst Purchasers only. Full particulars with every Parcel.

ALFRED H. TYLER,

102, FINSBURY PARK ROAD, LONDON, N.

FITS! FITS!! FITS!!!

ALL persons suffering from Epilepsy should send Name and Address to JAMES OSBORNE, Medical Pharmacy, Ashbourne, Derbyshire, who will forward, free of charge, full particulars (with Testimonials) of the most successful remedy ever discovered or this distressing malady. Sent to all parts of the world. References permitted to Rev. J. Baker, M.A., 80, Bolton Road, Pendleton, Manchester.

No Reader of Identity Literature should be without this Almanack.

Now ready. Price 3d. (by post 4d.). Interleaved with ruled paper, stiff cover, 5d. (by post 6d.). Brown cloth, gilt lettered, interleaved throughout with ruled paper, 1s. (post free on receipt of P.O.)

The ANGLO-ISRAEL ALMANACK and Diary for 1889.

Fontispiece—PORTRAIT OF DR. J. M. GRANT.

	PAGE
CALENDAR AND DIARY FOR THE YEAR	4-26
Church Lessons for each Sunday of the Year	4-26
Text of Scripture for each Day of the Year...	4-26
Notes for Months and Moon's Changes	4-26
Moveable Feasts	6
Measures of Length	10
The Nation's Drink Bill	10
Bank Holidays	12
Standard Gold	14
Letters Patent for Inventions ...	16
Length of Mile in Different Countries	18
Legacy and Succession Duty ...	20
Meteoric Showers, '89. Ocean Depths	22
Legal Tender of Money	24
Income Tax	24
University Terms	26
Postal Regulations	28
General Information ...	29
The Royal Family, the Church	29
Public Exhibitions	31
The Ministry	32
ARTICLES:—
The Operations of the Holy Spirit with Reference to the History of the House of British-Israel, Past, Present, and Future. By Philo-Israel ...	33
God's Promises, and How Men Treat Them. By V. M. Cox ...	42
Christian Britain—the Rock on Which Christ has Built His Church. By Rev. R. Douglas	47
Playing With Powder. By J. G. Taylor	62
"The Power of the Holy People." By J. C. H. Mehl	53
"Cui Bono?" By the Rev. C. W. Hickson	59
Israel no Type! By Douglas A. Onslow, J.P.	66
England's Mission. By Rev. W. J. Dawson	4
The Covenant Nation. By Rev. J. P. Britton	6
Is There Spiritual Benefit? By Rev. Denis Hanan	8
The Search for the Lost Tribes. By Rt. Hon. Viscount Folkestone...	10
Glimpses of the Future. By Rev. J. C. Boyce	12
A Reasonable Basis. By the late Bishop Titcomb	14
The Great Pyramid. By the Rev. Henry Morton	16
Jews and Israelites. By Rev. G. A. Rogers	18
Understanding the Prophecies. By Rev. John Huyshe	20
England's Position in the Divine Plan. By Rev. J. S. Krœnig ...	22
A Modern Goshen. By Rev. J. L. V. Cachemaille	24
Three Questions. By Rev. Canon Blake Brownrigg	26
LIST OF ANGLO-ISRAEL ASSOCIATIONS IN VARIOUS PARTS OF THE WORLD	69

LONDON: ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-st., and of any Bookseller.

CHOICE CHRISTMAS BOOKS.

Now Ready. Crown 8vo., cloth. Sent post free on receipt of P.O. for 7/6, net.

LIGHT AND COLOUR

Emblematic of Revealed Truth.

By the LATE MAJOR NICKLE.

EDITED BY

SARAH SHARP,

Author of "My Jewels," etc.

With Explanatory Coloured Diagrams.

LONDON:

HODDER & STOUGHTON, 27, PATERNOSTER ROW.

ALSO,

"MY JEWELS"

By SARAH SHARP.

Price 4s. 6d., 2s., and 1s. 8d., net. Postage 2d.

R. BANKS & SON, RACQUET-COURT, FLEET-ST.

LUNG TONIC

SAVE YOUR LIVES BY TAKING

OWBRIDGE'S LUNG TONIC

THE MIGHTY HEALER.

It has a power over disease hitherto unknown in Medicine.

Are you at all Weak-chested or inclined to be Consumptive, with just a touch of Cough now and then?

"Try this Wonderful Medicine." The Cough and Weakness will disappear as if by magic, and you will feel a strength and power you never had before.

HAVE YOU A COUGH?
A DOSE WILL RELIEVE IT!
HAVE YOU A COLD?
A DOSE AT BEDTIME WILL REMOVE IT.

Bronchitis & Asthma it relieves instantly

The Spasms of Coughing so dreadful in Whooping Cough become less with each dose of the medicine.

Prepared by W. T. OWBRIDGE Chemist, Hull

Sold in Bottles 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d. and 11s. by all Chemists and Patent Medicine Vendors. Wholesale all London and Provincial Houses.

HUMAN LIFE—FIFTY YEARS' Record of Facts, Principles, and Discoveries (just published complete) Relating to the Improvement and Preservation of Human Life on Earth. Origin and true treatment of diseases. A series of articles by DR. SAMUEL BIRLEY, M.D., Ph.D. Book form, 50 pages. SENT FREE to every applicant by the publishers, GORDON B. MURRAY & CO., 50, Theobald's-road, Holborn, E.C. Write to-day.

30,000 BEDS SOLD in SEVEN YEARS

NEWHAM'S CELEBRATED LINCOLNSHIRE FEATHER BEDS.

THE CHEAPEST FEATHER BEDS IN THE WORLD.

Direct from Boston, Lincolnshire.

No. 1. SINGLE BED, BOLSTER, and PILLOW, 6 ft. 3 in. by 3 ft. 6 in., weighing 40 lb. 30/0

No. 2. DOUBLE BED, BOLSTER, and TWO PILLOWS, 6 ft. 6 in. by 4 ft. 6 in. weighing 50 lb. 37/6

No. 3. DOUBLE BED, BOLSTER, and TWO PILLOWS, 6 ft. 6 in. by 4 ft 6 in., weighing 55 lb... .. 41/3

No. 4. EXTRA SIZE BED, BOLSTER, and TWO PILLOWS, 6 ft. 6 in. by 5 ft., weighing 65 lb. .. 48/9

WARRANTED NEW AND SWEET.

Any sized Bed only 9d. per lb., including Feathers, in Strong Union (bordered) Tick, making, packing, wrapper, and Carriage Paid to any Station in the United Kingdom.

SUPERIOR BEDS, Splendid Feathers, Linen Tick, 1s. per lb.

Samples of Feathers and Ticks, Price Lists, &c. post-free.

For the convenience of Purchasers we have opened a Branch Establishment at 178, Strand, London.

All orders must be accompanied by Cheque or P.O.O. (which, as security to purchasers, may be post dated ten days) payable to

NEWHAM & CO., Boston, Lincolnshire,

or to THOS. SMITH, 178, STRAND, LONDON,

where Goods and Samples can be obtained from 10 till 6, Saturdays till 2, or by letter.

Feathers only 9d. per lb. The trade supplied. Please mention this paper. A great reduction on three or more beds.

PIANOFORTES, Harmoniums, American Organs. Why buy at shops inferior made instruments, and pay large profits, when you can buy direct from the Maker High-class Instruments, and save 50 per cent. by so doing? Full value allowed for old Instruments in exchange as part payment. Write for Price Lists and Testimonials to A. G. LINSTEAD, Cobden Pianoforte Company, 5, Eversholt-street, Camden Town, London. Established 1874.

Certain 'HARNESS' Cure.

ELECTROPATHIC BELT

FOR

RHEUMATISM

Major PAKENHAM, Longstone House, Armagh, writes:—"The Electropathic Belt has completely cured me of rheumatic gout. I suffered intense agony for two years. I now feel strong and active."

Guaranteed to generate a mild continuous current of Electricity, which speedily cures all Disorders of the Nerves, Stomach, Liver and Kidneys. Thousands of Testimonials. Pamphlet & Advice free on application to Mr. C. B. Harness, Consulting Electrician, the Medical Battery Co. Ltd.

Only Address,

52, OXFORD ST., LONDON, W. (Corner of Rathbone Place.)

Call to-day, if possible, or write at once

Printed and Published for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-st., London, E.C.; F. W. PARRY (late GUEST & Co.), 29, Paternoster-row.

WEDNESDAY, DEC. 5, 1888 [All rights reserved.

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."
(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India.)

"And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the Forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS of the EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. XII., No. 624. Entered at Stationers' Hall.] WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 12, 1888. [PRICE ONE PENNY.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
The Heir of the World	493
The Conversazione at the Memorial Hall, Clifton. Part II.	494
The British Empire and Contemporary Powers. By R. N. Adams, of New Zealand. Part IV.	496
The Norfolk Chronicle and the Question of Our Identity	497
How the Doors are Being Shut About us at Home and Abroad	498
London: The City of Ships. By John T. Gott	499
Review	499

THE HEIR OF THE WORLD.

THOSE who have read the report in The Times, of September 10th, in reference to "Canada's Great Reserve," will understand our reference to Rom. iv. 13, when we say that the heir of the world has just been shown one vast portion of her valuable real estate, of which she had no notion before. It has come upon her with a suddenness perfectly bewildering, and is quite inexplicable to thinking minds, except on the assumption that the British are Israel, and her stalwart daughters are veritable giants, according to the prophecies; nation-colonies in fact, which in the aggregate exhibit "the nation and company of nations" as far greater in magnitude and importance than their independent sister, American-Manasseh. "It takes one's breath away," said the leader of The Times, to hear the almost simultaneous announcement of two such additions to the national patrimony as those which are indicated in the prospectus of the Imperial British East African Company, and the report to the Canadian Government on "The Great Mackenzie Basin."

These are described by the leader as a couple of "vast inheritances" from different quarters, which have suddenly descended upon the British race. The Times then proceeds to describe the new North-west Canadian windfall of wealth as hitherto a literal desolation, which people reckoned as "nature's wild park;" the indisputable seat of frost and fur, sealed up to human beings other than Indians and trappers, in fact, literally a "desolate heritage;" the inheritance of the British Canadians, but useless and worthless to mankind! Surely we have here a description which responds to Isa. xlix. 8, R.V., and tells us that being Israel, we have Israel's blessings and gifts. The desolate heritage of the Mackenzie Basin is all that enormous territory north of the Saskatchewan region, extending to the Arctic shores—from Hudson's Bay to the Rocky Mountains. The area of this immense territory is about half that of Australia. It covers about 1,200,000 square miles, not including the Arctic Islands. The lakes of the region in question exceed in extent that of the Eastern Canadian-American chain of great lakes. There is river navigation for 2,750 miles, and a total of 6,500 miles of continuous lake, coast, and river navigation, broken in only two places. The region contains, according to the Commission sent to inquire, a possible area supposed to be of 656,000 square miles fitted for the growth of potatoes, 407,000 square miles suitable for barley, and 316,000 square miles suitable for wheat. There is a pastoral area of 860,000 square miles, and 274,000 square miles arable. There are 400,000 square miles of barren ground unfit for cultivation or pasturage. The country possesses the most extensive petroleum fields in the world, with a forest area growing trees fit for house and ship building, mining, railway, and bridging purposes. The trees commonly grow over 100 feet in height, and are proportionately huge in girth; the immense lakes are stored with fish; the mineral riches of the land are immense—nearly 200,000 square miles are believed to be auriferous.

The question whether such an enormous heritage can be occupied by the British people is answered by The Times in truly Israelitish fashion: "All the divisions of the Anglo-Saxon and British races have a habit of multiplying which demands plenty of room. They have always hitherto shown capacity for growing, with no unreasonable delay, to the dimensions of their national holding, however liberal." Here, then, is a vivid description of God's last unsuspected good gift to His people Israel. It has all along been in their possession, but neglected because it was thought the region was too cold for human habitation—an idea which is found to be the exact reverse of the truth! In North America, in Africa, in Australasia, in all temperate zones in short, we have the wonderful spectacle presented to our notice, of a race rapidly advancing in numbers, and at the same time of enormous masses of habitable earth given over to their occupation, as by God's miraculous interference in their favour. Such blessings are not found to be the portion of any other people. The United States have truly an enormous territory: but Canada alone is larger! Australasia, including Tasmania, New Zealand, New Guinea, and the Fiji Islands, are together as large as Europe, if not larger. South Africa is equal to Europe in area—British-India and Burmah are the same—and now the British East African Company's territory, the Basin of the Niger, besides Egypt, must be added in Africa alone to the stupendous empire which belongs to Israel's protectorate, and owes allegiance, more or less direct, to the British Queen and Empress! How do our opponents explain all this stupendous, unique expansion? The like was never heard of before! What can possibly account for it? Our military power? We are weak in this respect! Our naval strength? Nay! that hardly suffices now for the protection of our Capital and of our home Gates. Our wealth? Nay, these possessions we do not buy and have not bought! They have fallen into our hands, and mostly undesired and unlooked for, have been thrust upon us by our God! But they all conduce to the national wealth, and tend to strengthen the might of our increasing population, by multiplying our markets and adding to our national influence. God "hath not dealt so with any nation." Why has He granted us such magnificent favours? They are distinctly those He promised on oath to grant to Israel exclusively! Why has He made them bodily over to our unworthy race? To these questions we see but one, and that a very sufficient answer. This nation is Israel, to whom God made these very same glorious promises, as reference to such texts as these will prove—Gen. xvii. 4—6, xxii. 17, xxxv. 11, xlviii. 19; Deut. viii. 18; Dan. vii. 27; Rom. iv. 13, R.V. He is performing His solemn covenants to us His people in these the last days of the Christian dispensation according to the prophecies: and knowing this, "O, that men would therefore praise the Lord for His goodness and for His wonderful works to the children of men!" (Psa. cvii.).

Digitized by Google

CONVERSAZIONE AT CLIFTON.

(Concluded from page 480).

PART II.

DR. GRANT was the next speaker, and gave a short address on the succession of the Royal Family of England from the Kings of Judah, comparing the testimony of the Bible with that of the old Irish legends. His chief points were that Jeremiah having been commanded to go to backsliding Israel in the north proved that a representative portion of Israel was established in some country north of Palestine in his time; that the terms he was commissioned to offer to Israel involved a complete change of their religion and laws; that his mission to plant and build the dynasty of David could only have been accomplished by the marriage of the princess Royal of Judah to a prince of Israel; and that she must have accompanied him in his journey north as his ward, because otherwise he would not have had authority to dispose of her hand in marriage; that by her marriage the tender twig of Judah would have been planted in the mountain or strong nation of Israel, but that the building of the dynasty of David required that the succession should be from her, and that it should be continued in the family line. Dr. Grant then went on to notice the prophecy regarding Dan in Gen. xlix., "Dan shall judge his people as one of the Tribes of Israel," which he contended must mean that in some way or other the tribe of Dan would represent the whole kingdom—a result which would follow the placing it under the people of David, so that its chief would not only govern it as a tribe in his own right, but as the representative kingdom of Israel, in right of his wife; and all this, he contended, corresponded so exactly with the Irish legend, that we were bound to consider the latter an authentic record of events which had taken place, and to believe that the Irish princess was Zedekiah's daughter and the ancestress of our British sovereigns.

The Rev. C. W. Hickson read a paper, of which the following is the substance:—

In a review of "The Origin, Progress, and Establishment of the Kingdom of God in the World," by Dr. Grant, in the English Churchman of November 8 last, the reviewer says that "many scholars maintain that the two Houses of Israel and Judah are united." Of course, if this really is the case, and if the people we commonly speak of as "the Jews" are the whole of the descendants of Jacob anywhere now in the world to whom any fulfilment of God's promises to Israel is to be expected, then the British people cannot be any portion of Israel's seed. This one hypothesis, if sustained, is fatal to the view of Britain being identical with the Lost Ten Tribes; for on this hypothesis the Lost Ten Tribes, if any portion of them survive at all, are part of this one whole united body which we call "the Jews," and among "the Jews" and not among "the Gentiles" they must be sought. But Anglo-Israelism makes no attempt to prove that the British race are "Jews," which would be on the face of it an attempt to prove what is manifestly not a fact. We form no part of "the Jews," and make no claim to be regarded as Jews. We do however claim to be a part of Jacob's seed, the House of Israel, which of course we cannot be if "the Jews" comprise the whole extant seed of Jacob. This point therefore is of the very greatest importance. If the statement of "many scholars" that "the two Houses of Israel and Judah are united" be a statement of fact, then Anglo-Israelism is nowhere. How can Britons ever be persuaded to believe themselves Israelites if they believe that "the Jews" include at the present time in a united or re-united body all the Israelites extant now in the world?

But pace the "many scholars," that the two Houses of Israel and Judah are united is clearly contrary to Scripture, and therefore must be contrary to fact, for Scripture is never at variance with fact.

One passage of Scripture is sufficient of itself to demonstrate that the Lost Tribes of Israel were in St. Paul's day regarded by him as a body of people not included amongst, and sharing in common with them the name of, "the Jews," but as amongst, and to all outward seeming a part of, "the Gentiles." I refer to Romans ix. 24—26. Here St. Paul divides the population of the world into "Jews" and "Gentiles." This is a perfect division, admitting of no third body who are neither "Jews" nor "Gentiles." All existing races must be either (under this division) considered "Jews" or "Gentiles," and those who are not included under "Jews" must be included under Gentiles. Now to prove that God has "vessels of mercy" "not of the Jews only, but also of the Gentiles," the Apostle quotes the words of the prophet Hosea, "I will call them My people" (in the Hebrew of Hosea, Ammi) "which were not My people" (in the Hebrew of Hosea, Lo-Ammi) "and her beloved which was not beloved." "And it shall come to pass, that in the place where it was said unto them, ye are not My people, (Lo-Ammi) there shall they be called the children of the living God." It is clear therefore that the people of whom God by His prophet Hosea said "I will call them My people" (or, Ammi) "which were not My people" (or, Lo-Ammi), and "her beloved which was not beloved," were in St. Paul's days, and in his view of things, not to be found as part of "the Jews" but amongst, and ostensibly forming part of, "the Gentiles."

But who are the people to whom Hosea's words relate? The words quoted are a free rendering of the Septuagint of Hosea i. 10, and ii. 23. The words in Hosea's prophecy have to do with no other people than the Lost Ten Tribes of the kingdom of Israel, as entirely distinct from the kingdom of Judah. The first verse of the first chapter mentions the kings of these two separate kingdoms. The ninth verse puts them in contrast as to God's dealings with them. The eleventh verse speaks of a re-union between the two houses which has never yet taken place. There is not a single reference to Judah in Hosea i. and ii., except in these three verses of the first chapter, the 1st, 9th, and 11th. All the rest concerns, and concerns exclusively, the Ten-Tribed kingdom of Ephraim, of which Jeroboam II. was then King, the dealings of God with whom are symbolised by the relations of the prophet with the woman Gomer (i. 1,) and her children Jezreel, Lo-Ruhamah, and Lo-Ammi (i. 4, 6, 9). There is not a single reference throughout the two chapters to "Gentiles" (as we usually use the word), that is, races other than those sprung from the loins of Jacob. What then are we to make of St. Paul's quotation and use of Hosea i. 10, and ii. 23, to prove that God has His called ones among "the Gentiles" as well as among "the Jews"? Clearly he understood Hosea as predicting that the Ten Tribes of the kingdom of Israel (as distinct from the kingdom of Judah), would lose altogether their Israelitish appearance and would become to all outward seeming part and parcel of the Gentile world. As therefore they were in the Gentile world, and to all appearance part of it—though not of course really racially so—and as God had expressed by this very prophet His purpose to recognise them again, after a time of chastisement as His sons, and to return to them in mercy, it was clear that God must have objects of His calling mercy not only amongst "the Jews," but also amongst "the Gentiles." I do not affirm that St. Paul meant to suggest that no other "Gentiles" were to come in for blessing under the gospel as "the sons of the living God," but the descendants of the Lost Ten Tribes. But I take it he clearly saw that they as a nation according to Hosea were to do so, and seeing this he meant further to indicate that as God had revealed His purpose to deal with Israel, whom He for a time reduced to a not-My-people condition, i.e., the condition of Gentiles, so on the same principle would He deal with others who never had been His people at all, and who were in the truest sense Gentiles. The words then as quoted by St. Paul are brought forward as proof of a calling from among the Gentiles generally; but they could not possibly be so cited except on the conviction that the Ten Tribes, to whom, in Hosea, the words exclusively apply, were to become ostensibly Gentiles, and altogether, as regards their Israelitish Identity, lost.

Digitized by Google

To put then the matter concisely, Paul divides the world into "Jews" and Gentiles." He reckons all who are not "Jews" as "Gentiles." He quotes words of Hosea's having exclusive reference to the Lost Ten Tribes of the kingdom of Israel as proving that God calls objects of His favour from among the Gentiles. Therefore clearly the Lost Ten Tribes were in his day regarded as being mixed up amongst and indistinguishable from the Gentiles, and therefore certainly not united with, and included under the common name of "the Jews."

Looking again at Hosea's prophecy we see that these self-same children of Israel of the Ten Tribes (1) before their re-union with their brethren "the Jews," the children of Judah," and (2) while still out of Palestine, in the lands of non-recognition as God's people ("in the place where it was said unto them, ye are not My people") should (a) become numerous as the sand of the sea, and (b) be recognised as a Christian nation. And not till all this has been fulfilled will the children of Judah, "the Jews," and the children of Israel be gathered together, and return under one head to their own land. As this return has not taken place, Israel now are not among "the Jews" but must be sought among "the Gentiles," and must be a numerous and Christian nation, and one to whom "the Jews" are likely to apply for help when any serious return to Palestine is contemplated.

Other passages of Scripture support the view here maintained, viz., Isa. xi. 11—16, Isa. xviii. 2, 7; Jer. iii. 18; Ezek. xxxvii. 15—28; Micah iv. 6, 7; Zeph. iii. 10, 19; and Zech. x. 6—12, in which the two Houses of Israel and Judah are distinctly indicated, and their reunion in millennial times predicted. The houses it will be observed, are thus distinctively referred to.

I. Israel, i.e., the Ten Tribes of the quondam kingdom of Israel or Ephraim, "a people terrible from their beginning hitherto, a nation meted out and trodden under foot, whose land the rivers have spoiled," "the House of Israel," "Joseph, the stick of Ephraim, and all the House of Israel his companions," "her that was driven out and her that I have afflicted," "a strong nation," "the daughter of My dispersed," "they of Ephraim."

II. Judah; that is the people we now commonly speak of as "the Jews":—"the dispersed of Judah," "Judah," "a people scattered and peeled," "the House of Judah," "Judah and the children of Israel his companions," "her that halteth," "her that halted," "mine offering," "her that halteth," "the House of Judah." That these two bodies are predicted of as separate and distinct from one another until the time when "the Lord" (i.e., the manifested Messiah) "shall reign over them," (i.e. her that halted, viz., "the Jews," and her that was cast off, viz., Israel, before that time become "a strong nation,") in Mount Zion for ever, must surely be perfectly clear to any one who studies these passages, and accepts them in their plain and obvious meaning. With such passages of Scripture before us, that any, especially scholars, can maintain that "the two Houses of Israel and Judah are united" is truly astonishing. From them we gather that the Ten Tribes of Israel are

(1) An ostensibly Gentile people, "not of the Jews, but of the Gentiles;"
(2) A multitudinous race;
(3) A strong nation;
(4) A Christian people, "Sons of the living God;"
(5) A people to whom the Jews will come, and with whom (representatively) they will return to Palestine, to be reigned over there as one nation by Christ for ever.

When we have arrived, by simple study of Scripture, at these conclusions, is it a very hard question to ask, Who and where is lost Israel?

Col. Senior, who was received with great cordiality, explained that he carried out the idea of this Conversazione because it seemed desirable to do something to impress the public with the importance of Our Identity, and he was glad to see the results justified his expectations. He explained how he had himself, when first the subject was brought before him, thrown away the volume from him as an absurdity, but when he studied it afterwards and saw how it proved the faithfulness of God, he had embraced the view as one of the first importance. He urged those present to look into the matter for themselves, to study the Scriptures to see if these things were so, but never to allow prejudice to prevent a fair and full investigation of the important considerations which had been so ably put before this meeting in regard to the Identity of the British with the lost House of Israel, but not with the House of Judah or the Jews.

Brigade-Surgeon P. Wyatt Cockell, of Bath, made a few observations respecting the Stone of Destiny or Coronation Stone in Westminster Abbey, and argued from the use made of it that it was what it professed to be, and what it is believed the late Dean Stanley esteemed it, namely, Jacob's Stone, the Stone of Bethel, or God's House and Tabernacle. Alluding to one of the objections our opponents make, he said, respecting the return of the Ten Tribes to their land that it would be representative, namely, "one of a city and two of a family," as declared in Jer. iii. 14.

Mr. W. M. Webb, of Bristol, gave his hearty support to the cause of Our Identity, and said the knowledge of the subject was spreading far and wide. A merchant of Bristol of large influence and wealth in the place had arrived at the conclusion the British were Israel from the facts of our history, and quite independently of the teaching of the BANNER or its Editor.

After a few remarks from the Rev. C. Godfrey Ashwin, the meeting was closed by the Doxology and Benediction.

THINGS work so harmoniously in nature that it is difficult at times to discern God's hand. There are occasions, however, in the lives of races, nations, and individuals, when divine interference and intention is easily discerned, they seem to happen so unnaturally and unexpectedly; cause and effect appear to be divorced for a time. The battle does not seem to be to the strong, nor the race to the swift. We wonder at it, but it is an indication of a Providence; of a power beyond.—From Dr. Wild's Sunday Morning Sermons.

Digitized by Google

THE BRITISH EMPIRE AND CONTEMPORARY POWERS.

By R. N. Adams, of New Zealand.

(Continued from page 486).

PART IV.

By their own energy the British race may now be found in almost every corner of the globe carrying on some sort of trade with the people of the land, very often connecting that trade with the great heart of the Empire, whose pulsations are felt to the remotest part of the heathen world. By our merchants and missionaries we are known, even in the heart of the "Dark Continent." Too often, alas! we are known for deeds of cruelty and severity; but thank God we are better known as the harbingers of the Gospel of peace. But, for whatever the purpose, the fact remains that our race is the most widely known and thoroughly scattered on the face of the earth.

That fact leads to the very wide diffusion of the knowledge of our language. Our people carry their language with them as well as our country's wares, and in many instances it becomes as much their business to teach the strangers among whom they live to speak the English tongue, as to use the English goods. As our race therefore spreads over the earth, so does the one great language of our people; and as our nation grows in commercial and political importance, so of course does the language of our race. This goes on even in countries not subject to the rule of the British, for our influence is much more extensive than our government is embracing. In an article published in the Lucknow Witness, the following remarks occur:—"A still further indication of the onward march of the noble English tongue is found in the recent adoption of this language in place of Arabic, by the Syrian Protestant College at Beirut, which under the care of American missionaries is doing such grand things in that country." This result was the effect of the copiousness of our grand English literature, the only key to which, of course, is through the language. Some idea of the importance of the English language to anyone who wishes to keep pace with the literature of the age may be obtained from the fact that out of 34,274 newspapers and periodicals of the world, 16,500 of them are issued in the English tongue, between 7000 and 8000 in French, about 4000 in German, and 1600 in Spanish. Almost one-half of the current periodical literature of the age is English, and so this language is of almost as much importance in this respect as all other modern languages together. Hence it is evident that no foreign scholar can afford to neglect English. Then again, as the Lucknow Witness says, "English is the commercial and religious language of the world," so that it claims the attention of foreigners from every point; and, as a consequence, it is rapidly gaining ground every year upon the languages of other nations. The Children's Messenger, for November 1, 1880, has the following:—"It seems as if the great work of carrying the Gospel to the heathen and Mahommedan, which is chiefly performed by English-speaking Christians, will in turn make our language the language of the world. The Hebrew and Greek languages have disappeared as living tongues, and are for this great divine work replaced by the English."

This influence of our language is not only seen in the lands of the heathen and uncultured races, but is as conspicuous in the centres of civilised and polite society. A quarter of a century ago it was a difficult thing to find a Frenchman in Paris who could speak any language but his own, and it was necessary to procure the services of a guide in the event of an Englishman wishing to travel through the city, for even the language of the shops was a sealed book to him. A complete change has been effected since then. Every French shop now keeps an attendant who converses in English, and at most of the leading hotels the same custom prevails. English is a part of the education of every polite Frenchman. It is regularly taught in both French and German schools. A recent Parisian correspondent of one of our local papers has expressed himself on this matter thus:—"The very language is being transformed by an infusion of English elements. The aristocrats give their children English names, and in high society it is considered the right thing to have none but English servants, and to speak to them in English. French novels are abandoned in favour of Thackeray and Dickens, or Herbert Spencer, who is a great favourite with the ladies there. Dinner is served in English style. On some tables even, English dry sherry has made its appearance. In short, the 'chic Anglais' is all the rage, and the Prince of Wales is the modern French exquisite's model of manners and excellence."

An English journal remarks that "the spread of the English language is among the marvels of the present, Other tongues stay in schools or sections, or grow in the soil where they took root, and die out, as in America, where they were transplanted more than a hundred years ago. But the English is the tongue that travels and discovers, lights, controverts, and converts."

Henry Ward Beecher, speaking recently of the great languages of the earth, said:—"The language of men—the language that contains the doctrines of independence, of liberty, of, I trust, man in man—is the English tongue. It is spoken more widely over the globe than any other. I do not know of another language which, carried abroad, has such treasures of literature, teaching humanity. . . . I love it, and bless it, and send it forth, because there is in it more of the Gospel, more of God, more of man, and more of the influences that bring God and man together, than any other language upon the globe. The English tongue is a charter of liberty to the human race."

Do not these words of Beecher in some measure account for the following facts, stated by a French journal, that while the speakers of all the Continental languages together, have only increased by 62 per cent., the speakers of the English language have increased by 300 per cent. during the past eighty years?

In the face of such a fact, it is not strange that the Rev. H. V. P. Bronkhurst, Wesleyan missionary in the East, expressed himself in July, 1881, in the words—"It is my firm conviction that in a few years hence, all the Indian languages will give place to the English—the one universal language of the world."

There is only one empire or nation which has an authorised national Bible, and that is the nation whose rulers committed the man who did most to give the Sacred Volume to the poor of the land to a martyr's death, but who in that most terrible and solemn moment uttered a prayer which has evidently rung through the courts of heaven, and brought down the most generous answer. When the raging flames were curling around him, William Tyndale, looking upon the crowd who had gathered eagerly together to see the sight—forgetful of the cause of his death, but simply to be gratified by the spectacle—he thought of his benighted countrymen, and of their spiritually blind monarch, and then, in all the love of a true messenger of the Gospel of peace and good-will, he breathed forth the words, "Lord, open the King of England's eyes!" If ever prayer was successful that short prayer was. Only a year passed from that time until a translation of the Bible went forth among the people under Roya' authority. From that day the Bible has been a people's book. Not only were the King of England's eyes opened, but the people were also supplied with that eye-opener, which has proved more powerful than was any remedy applied to the defects of physical sight. For over three hundred years now England has possessed her national Bible, and during those three hundred years has risen in the scale of nations in a manner not before paralleled in the history of the world.

But some will tell me that England would have become great without the Bible, and in fact, for that matter, in spite of the Bible. Well, the fact is there, that it is only since the Bible has become our national book that this great prosperity has attended us. And I agree with Shakespeare that—

Digitized by Google

"There's a Divinity that shapes our ends, Rough hew them how we will."

Speaking of Tyndale and his great life-work, the Standard of March 24th, 1881, says :—"He could hardly in his highest dreams have hoped to have thrown into the strong fermenting mass of the English race an element which has, beyond all doubt or question, modified it throughout, and to such a degree, that our race is intellectually and morally another thing from what it could have been without that leaven. . . . That influence is as evident as the sun in the sky ; nor is it easy to imagine what those feelings and views would have been had no such book been our heir-loom, and a priesthood alone with its unwritten traditions had served for our spiritual guidance, as is to so large an extent the unhappy case of the Latin race in Europe. . . . . To judge aright of this purely intellectual value of the Bible, we have but to turn to those parts of our country, and to those classes in those parts, where Biblical study has been at once a passion and a religion, and where there has been less of other conflicting interests than in our great cities. There, we behold—most notably in Scotland and Wales—the truly marvellous phenomenon of peasants and artizans so imbued with Hebrew culture and Hebrew poetry, that, all uncultured otherwise, and ignorant of much modern science and literature, they are in the truest sense educated men—far better educated than half the youths of French lycees and German gymnasia. . . . . Who shall say whether the contrast so striking at this moment, between the peaceful, loyal, industrious Celt of Wales, and his cousin the Celt of Ireland, is not in a large measure due to the fact that the mind of the Welshman has been nourished for generations on the meat and wine of the noble Welsh Bible, while the mind of the far less happy Irishman has been fed by the hand of the priesthood from the pap-boat of saintly legend and the patent-medicine bottle of Ecclesiastical Catechisms."

The whole literature of the nation is tainted, if even a large part of it be not imbued with the language, style, and sentiment of the Bible. And perhaps the grandest of all secular facts, is that even our Common Law is laid in the solid foundations of the grand old Bible, so much so that when the recent Law Courts of England were erected, it was not a Lycurgus, nor a Solon, whose statue was chosen to ornament its highest point, but that of a Moses.

But our nation is not contented with having the Bible for itself. It has taken upon it to provide the Bible for the whole world—not only for the savage, but for the so-called civilised of the nations. Since our first efforts to spread the usefulness of the Bible throughout the world to all, heathen and polite, our commercial matters have prospered with stupendous rapidity, and still give promise of continued improvement. Our Bible agents are found in every land, circulating that most ancient as well as most precious of books in every language, They are found in Russia, in Germany, in Holland, France, Spain, Italy, Greece, Turkey, Austria, throughout Asia, Africa. and in every remote and most barbarous corner of the earth. As the Times puts it—"No people is too savage for the Bible Society, no manners or intelligence too rudimentary, no language too barbarous, no vocabulary too limited. If pre-historic man could be found in his cave, breaking bones with a Celt to get at the marrow, the Bible Society would have for his use before the end of a twelvemonth the Bible, the whole Bible, and nothing but the Bible, in his own simple vernacular of squeaks, hiccoughs, stammers, and grunts." Concerning the national importance of such a gigantic work, the same article concludes with the following eloquent sentence :—"The simple circulation of the Bible in all languages is the one commandment, the one creed, the one virtue, the one grace, the one battle-cry, the one banner, the one palladium, the test of a rising or falling State, the way to possess the earth, and climb the skies." Our nation alone has Bible Societies, and only we have a national Bible. Since 1804, when the first Bible Society was started, 156,000,000 copies of the Bible either whole or in part, have by the agency of these organisations, been sent into circulation in over 300 languages, both civilised and savage. Of these, Germany got 12,000,000, France, 9,000,000, and other countries in lesser proportions. The British and Foreign Bible Society employed over 300 men circulating the Bible on the Continent of Europe during the year 1882, besides the large numbers in foreign and barbarous countries. As we stand in reference to the circulation of the Bible the same is our position as a Gospel nation. We cannot send the Bible without also having carried the news of the Gospel by the power of the living voice of the missionary. Wherever we send, there we have undertaken a work of evangelisation.

(To be continued).

THE "NORFOLK CHRONICLE" DISCUSSION.

WE continue this series from p. 482 of the BANNER. We are quite willing to produce Mr. Mark Knights' letters in the BANNER, as we are not anxious to conceal our opponent's opinions or refuse them publicity in our columns. Our readers will notice that our opponent has speedily arrived at the point of personalities, and brings charges freely against ourselves which we can afford to pass by. The opponent will not enter on the scriptural argument, but makes much of some alleged inconsistencies of ours in statements having reference to the settlement of Celts with Israelites in these islands; adding also that we have, in quotation from Josephus' famous passage in Antiq. xi. 5, 2, "distorted" his statements. We can afford to make Mr. M. Knights a present of these two arguments, so long as he will not touch the main points, namely, the prophecies respecting Israel, and the existing magnificent British Empire, the living, national, fulfilment thereof. The correspondence is as follows:—

THE ANGLO-ISRAEL DELUSION.

Reprinted from the "Norfolk Chronicle," Oct. 19, 1888.

SIR,—"Philo-Israel's" so-called answer to my reply to his contention that the British nation are of Israelitish origin, has exposed the absurdity of his theory. In fact, "Philo-Israel" has abandoned one of his guns and beaten a retreat. I know that the subject is an unprofitable one for discussion, but grant me a few lines to dissect "Philo-Israel's" letter, in order to further show your readers how undesirable it is to give ear to this "delusion."

"Philo-Israel" says he never asserted that the Celtic tribes settled exclusively in these islands, and it were absurd to say so. His admission of the absurdity is a point to me, for he certainly implied that they settled exclusively in Britain. Here is what he said: "The British people . . . came originally . . . from Central Asia. The first trace in Europe of the Celtic tribes called the Cimmerioi, or Cimbri, or Khumri (who are British), is dated B.C. 630, which was quite a century after the Ten Tribes were banished from Palestine to the Median territory whence the British folk and their ancestors emerged into Europe. It was, therefore, historically possible, not impossible, that parties of the tribes, escaping from captivity, might all along the centuries have accompanied the Celts in their early emigration into Europe and their settlement in these islands." The italics are mine.

Mark how Philo-Israel shifts his ground! He says: "I wrote of the settlement in these islands of parties of the Tribes of Israel escaping from captivity in Media." But the above extract from his letter shows that he wrote of the settlement of the Celts in these islands, and of the possibility of their being accompanied by parties of Israelites. Thus the main population would be Celts with some possible parties of Israelites.

But "Philo-Israel," besides shifting his ground, misrepresents my argument. He says, "I beg to demur to Mr. Mark Knights' statement that because some so-called Celts and Teutons (settled in Britain) were Israelites, therefore all Celts and Teutons were Israelites on the Continent of Europe and elsewhere." Now, I never admitted that any Celts or Teutons were Israelites. What I argued was that if any of the Ten Tribes came into association or mingled with Celts, Teutons, Scandinavians, or Normans, it might be urged, with much stronger force, that their descendants are also to be found among Continental Germans, Danes, and French, than that the population of Great Britain are "the flesh and blood descendants of the Ten Tribes." As, however, "Philo-Israel" distorted Josephus, I ought not, perhaps, to be surprised that he has misrepresented my argument. Now "Philo-Israel's" silence on the challenge I made him as to "Josephus" is significant; yet, while he ignores it, he continues to urge that parties of Israelites might have travelled with the Celts into Europe." But if, as I showed from Josephus, the entire body of the Ten Tribes remained in the land of captivity till his time, then it was impossible for even parties of them to have accompanied the Celts, who had centuries before peopled Britain. A man who writes of what might have happened shows that he is not sure of his ground.

Digitized by Google

After being compelled to abandon "Josephus," whom he had cited as a witness, I am not surprised at "Philo-Israel" writing wildly. He says, "The Israelites, divinely impelled, were gathered, as to the bulk of them, into these islands, according to the prophecies, leaving their fellow travellers, non-Israelites, behind." This is mere assertion; moreover, it contradicts what the writer has previously urged, that the Celts on their emigration into Europe and settlement in these islands might have been accompanied by parties of the Tribes. Clearly the Celts were not left behind.

"According to the prophecies!" says "Philo-Israel" with a positiveness to be expected from one who did not quote Josephus fairly. Well, as to that point, I remember a familiar line about certain folks rushing in where immortals fear to tread, and so I confine my comments to things knowable.

Perhaps I ought to reply to what "Philo-Israel" says as to our speaking an Indo-European language being no argument against him, and as only proof of "contact," not of affinity of race. He asks if descendants of Huguenot refugees who speak English are of French or British origin? But if the pedigrees of persons dwelling among us who bear Huguenot names are traced it will be found that they have generally on the one side a French and on the other side an English, Scotch, or Welsh descent. Can it be pretended that, if parties of the Ten Tribes accompanied the Celts to these islands, they did not intermarry with them? It might as logically be argued that we are French people, because some thousands of Huguenots came to England 200 years ago, as to assert that we are descendants of the Lost Tribes because parties of them might have accompanied the Celts in their settlement in these islands.

Here I take leave of "Philo-Israel" until he explains why he did not fairly and fully quote "Josephus." I would suggest to him that he reproduce this correspondence in the BANNER OF ISRAEL.

I am, &c,,

MARK KNIGHTS.

Gwenta House, Alexandra Road, Norwich, Oct. 11th, 1888.

THE ANGLO-ISRAEL SUBJECT.

Reprinted from the "Norfolk Chronicle," Nov. 3, 1888.

SIR,—Mr. Mark Knights has already, I see, descended to personalites. I am charged with "unfair and distorted quotation" of Josephus, and "misrepresentation of argument." Why cannot this subject be discussed without personalities, and the use of epithets which cannot advance the truth, but must pain without profiting the public? In regard to the settlement of the Celts in these islands, I never denied that some of the Celts, so named, settled here. They did so; but those so-called "Celts" were, I submitted, for a very good reason, mainly Israelites. That reason Mr. Mark Knights never touches. It is this: that they enjoy to-day, between the two advents, just at the appointed time, "the Birthright of Joseph." What God promised on oath exclusively to Israel, we British to-day exclusively enjoy. Therefore, I say, God being true, and the facts being true, the British must be "the House of Israel" of the Bible.

As regards Josephus, I fail to see where I distorted the quotation from his work? The historian of the Jews was not inspired; and does not, I contend, in the passage in question, declare that the whole of the Ten Tribes of Israel were gathered in the land of their captivity in A.D. 93, without the departure of any individual, family, or families, from it. The Greek will not bear that construction, and facts were against the historian, since on his own showing in Antiq. xiii. 5—8, it appears the Lacedemonians were kinsmen of the Jews, and were, therefore, probably of the Ten Tribes, and possibly of Dan the absentee. What Josephus spoke of was, the fact that as compared with the Jews who elected to return to Palestine, the main body of Ten-Tribed Israel remained in the land of their captivity; just as historians now, speaking of the emigration to Australia and Canada of the English folk, would declare, "but then the entire body of the British remained in the British Islands." Josephus was speaking of the two nations, Israel and Judah; and drew attention to the fact that while the latter representatively returned, the former, "in a body," did not return to Palestine. These are, however, not the main points in issue. Let Mr. Knights tell us how it is, that we British exclusively enjoy all the promises God made to Israel exclusively; and how, if that be true, and He be true, the British can fail to be the heirs of "Joseph's Birthright."

I am, &c.,

(E. W. BIRD) PHILO-ISRAEL.

Clifton, Oct. 25th, 1888.

P.S.—The philological argument Mr. M. Knights seems to have misunderstood, as used by me. If Frenchmen after only 200 years contact with us, speak nothing now but English, why look for a Semitic people, in contact with Aryans for 1,200 years, to employ any but an Indo-European vernacular?

By carefully ignoring the Scriptures and declaring that a reference to them is a "rushing in" of fools "where angels fear to tread" may do for Mr. Mark Knights, but it will not do for Christian men with the Bible in their hands, and with God's injunction to us all (including Mr. M. Knights), yet extant, "to search them" for the discovery of all truth. The prophecies are our only guide as to the future of nations, and as they have been found perfectly reliable guides in regard to such empires as Egypt, Assyria, Babylon, Greece, Rome, Pagan and Papal, also as to Israel and Judah, and last but not least, as to the Saviour of mankind as well, we cannot see any excuse for a public writer who refuses to consult them in the course of our argument, and who thus plainly shows that the discovery of God's truth is not his aim, but that he seeks only a mere verbal triumph as to trifling secondary matters. He calls our subject in insult "The Anglo-Israel Delusion," but the question remains, "What has become of the Lost Ten Tribes"? And what valid grounds are there for saying they are not in the British Islands, when it is plain that the British respond in every particular to the marks put upon the House of Israel by God Himself in his Holy Word, and when neither history, ethnic-science, philology, physiology, or chronology can show that the claim we set up for the British is palpably false or unfounded, according to their scientific standards?

HOW "THE DOORS" ARE BEING SHUT ABOUT US AT HOME AND ABROAD.

MR. STANHOPE, the Secretary of State for War, made a very important statement at a meeting he addressed at Islington, on November 1st, on the subject of "National Defence." Three and a half millions sterling being granted by Parliament for the purpose, progress has been made as Mr. Stanhope reported, and the special dangers apprehended have now been minimized. The big guns required to "shut our doors" abroad and at home are in hand, and will in time be ready. It takes a long time to build up a big gun. A 9·2-inch gun cannot be made under a year; a 10-in. gun requires fifteen months; and the still larger gun longer time in proportion to the size! A fruitful source of delay has been got rid of by giving the work not to Woolwich only as in former times, but to private firms as well. In 1885-6 guns to the value of £256,000 were in hand, but only 4 per cent., or £10,000 worth, were given to Messrs. Armstrong to build, the rest being reserved for Woolwich But this year (1888) guns were in course of supply worth over a million sterling, of which 56 per cent. were given out to the trade, and the other minor portion reserved for the Government factories.

These arrangements show that the need for dispatch in the preparation of war-like stores and guns is appreciated by the Government. The rifles in the hands of our infantry are about to be replaced by a perfect weapon, a new magazine rifle, which

Digitized by Google

Mr. Stanhope declares is a weapon superior to that now under manufacture by any foreign Government. Twenty-two batteries further (soon to be twenty-eight) have been armed with the 12-pounder artillery gun, which Lord Wolseley declares is the best in Europe, and seventeen more batteries will in due course have them also. A new and horrible destructive explosive for our big guns is now about to be introduced in the artillery; and these points added to many others, thus go to show that the Government at last is alive to the necessity of shutting the country's doors at home and abroad, and is preparing effectively for the defence of the empire against all possible enemies, according to the prophecies. The speech of the Secretary of State is remarkable because it shows that the obvious duty of defending the empire has been utterly neglected by former Governments in the most unaccountable manner, and that now they have suddenly awaked to their duty, aroused thereto by the warnings from the nation itself. These last no doubt are but the echoes of God's voice and words addressed to His people in Isa. xxvi. 19, 20, R.V.: "Come, My people, enter thou into thy chambers, and shut thy doors about thee, and hide thyself for a little moment, until the indignation be overpast." Clearly the nation was neglecting its duty and was called to a sense of its necessity by the warnings of God Himself. The prophecy and warning as well as the resultant facts, exactly correspond, thus pointing to the Identity of this nation with the lost House of Israel. The evidence in short is fast accumulating, and in the facts of the day, as well as in the speeches of our statesmen, we find fresh matter to convince us that to the very jot and to the tittle we are fulfilling the prophetic destiny of lost Israel. A solemn consideration arising from the circumstances we have pointed out, is that the precautions we are taking to safeguard our home and foreign "Gates," indicate that the crisis in the fate of the nations of the earth as distinguished from Israel, is at the doors.

The passage we have quoted from Isa. xxvi. goes on thus: "For behold the Lord cometh forth out of His place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity; the earth also shall disclose her blood and shall no more cover her slain." The fortification of the Gates is a precautionary step to secure the safety of Israel, while the earthly Powers meet their doom at the hands of God. Just so the ante-diluvian world was destroyed while Noah and his family were safeguarded in the Ark. So Lot was saved in Zoar while the cities of the plain were utterly destroyed. Men talk of the Cui bono? in respect to our contention. They will see what has been the "good" of the belief in Our Identity when that period arrives wherein the earthly Powers will be undone and Israel only will be saved "in that day." To Him be all the praise!

LONDON: THE CITY OF SHIPS.

By J. T. Gott.

"Who that has seen London from one of its bridges, with that magnificent forest of masts stretching down the river, or that has only heard of its commerce, but would learn with interest that 'London,' according to the most probable etymology, is a name formed out of two Celtic words, and means, 'City of ships'? Such a prophecy of the future greatness of the great commercial capital of England (we should say Britain) and of the world lay from the very first in the name which it bore; not to say that this name indicates that from earliest times, before a Roman had set his foot upon the soil, the wonderfully advantageous position of London for commerce had been discovered and improved" (Trench on the "Study of Words," p. 243).

The above quotation is from one of Archbishop Trench's lectures. Writing on Oct. 9, 1851, he says:—"I am persuaded that I have used no exaggeration in saying, that for many a young man his first discovery that words are living powers has been like the dropping of scales from his eyes, like the acquiring of another sense, or the introduction into a new world."

The suggestive character of the last quotation will arrest the attention of every Identity advocate.

October, 1888.

Review.

The Anglo-Israel Almanack and Diary for 1889. Price 3d. Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London.

We have the satisfaction of welcoming what is now an old friend, "The Anglo-Israel Almanack for 1889," issued by Robert Banks and Son. The new volume certainly is the best of the whole series yet published, judged by the standards of quality or quantity. The seven chief articles and the twelve shorter pieces which appear in this issue are really most excellent. They make the Almanack a valuable contribution to Our Identity literature, and point to it as an excellent medium for spreading the knowledge of the subject among those who are learners, as well as among those who as yet oppose our views. The authors who have contributed leading articles are Miss V. M. Cox, the Rev. R. Douglas, J. G. Taylor, J. C. H. Mehl, the Rev. C. W. Hickson, Douglas A. Onslow, and Philo-Israel. Each article has its special object, and teaches its own particular lesson.

Philo-Israel, for instance, traces the constant agency of the Spirit of God throughout the history of the Tribes.

Miss Cox almost indignantly calls upon those who are ever contending for the verbal inspiration of the Scriptures to explain their refusal to believe in God's literal promises of blessing to Israel. She writes in her best incisive style, now so well known to, and appreciated by, British-Israelites.

The Rev. Mr. Douglas undertakes to show that Christian Britain is the rock on which Christ has built His Church. He has performed his task in his usual painstaking, scholarly way.

J. C. H. Mehl's paper is an original view of Dan. vii. 7, R.V., which explains how "the power of the holy people" may be "scattered" and yet survive in strength.

The Rev. C. W. Hickson's version of Cui bono? is an able reply to the question, and one which all readers of the Almanack ought thoroughly to master and make their own.

Mr. J. G. Taylor's "Playing with Powder" is a racy, clever exposé of "the vapourisers" and their doings; such being those who spiritualise the scriptural promises, and leave nothing literal or material for Israel to enjoy. This is a very able article and worthy of careful study.

"Israel no Type" is one of Mr. Onslow's best, and follows Mr. Taylor, though in his own way, to the same goal. His object is to expose "spiritual jugglery" in those who transfer Israel's blessings to the Church, and consign the Jews to all the curses of the Bible. He strives hard to show, and succeeds in doing so, that the House of Israel (in the Scriptures) cannot possibly typify anything but the House of Israel."

We notice that the frontispiece is a portrait of our friend, Surgeon-General J. M. Grant, whose written testimony for Israel the Almanack somehow lacks this year. We miss his vigorous pen and the ideas it puts forth; but are glad to know that he contributes a capital paper to the New Year's No. of the Banner of Israel.

We trust the new Almanack will have a large sale and many readers. The "short articles" are well chosen and to the point. In other respects the Almanack quite comes up to the standard of what such a publication ought to be. We hope each Anglo (or British) Israelite will purchase a dozen copies at least, and send the little messengers broadcast over the whole Empire. There cannot be a better New Year's or Christmas gift; and a presentation, interleaved copy, in cloth, costs only a shilling; and other editions only three-pence and five-pence respectively.

Our Publishers have now ready the Prospectus of our New Year's Double Number, which will contain several valuable and interesting papers. We shall be assisted in our work if friends will distribute these circulars amongst their friends and neighbours, and thus assist in obtaining new subscribers. Messrs. Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, will be happy to send a supply of circulars free of cost, to any person who will send name and address, stating the quantity they can judiciously use.

The Secretary of the Railway Servants' Orphanage, Derby, desires to acknowledge the receipt of 10s. as a donation from "Henrietta" to the funds.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed: "Philo-Israel," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

SUBSCRIPTIONS. £ s. d.

Annual Subscription for one copy weekly (including the Twelve Double Numbers) post free 0 7 6
Two Copies (including Double Numbers) 0 13 6
Three Copies " " " 1 0 4
Four Copies " " " 1 5 6
Six Copies " " " 1 16 4

Post Office Orders to be made payable at the head office, St. Martin's-le-grand, London, to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C., or F. W. PARRY & Co., 29, Paternoster-row, London.

The Editor cannot undertake to return rejected MSS. unless stamps for the purpose be sent. Parties requiring an answer should enclose a stamp.

Contents Bills and Show Cards may be obtained on application to the Publishers.

Advertisements should be sent to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

Prepaid Advertisements are inserted at the rate of thirty words for 1s. 4d.

METROPOLITAN ANGLO-ISRAEL ASSOCIATION.

A LECTURE WILL BE DELIVERED in the ASSOCIATION ROOMS, 14, King (William-street, Charing-cross, W.C., on FRIDAY EVENING, December 14th, by

PHILO-ISRAEL (E. W. BIRD, ESQ.)

Subject: "The Kingdom, and the Lord's Will Concerning It." To commence at 7.30 o'clock. Admission free. Come, and bring your friends.

JAMES BILLINGTON, Sec.

The Origin of Masonic Ritual & Tradition:

A Lecture on the Three Degrees, by BRO. WM. ROWBOTTOM, P.M., with facsimile of a very rare Masonic engraving published in 1789.—Cloth, 2/6.

"Exquisitely clear and singularly correct in everything wherein I may be any authority or guide."—Professor PIAZZI SMYTH. "The Author seems to reason intelligently from his principles."—Literary Churchman.

London: R. Banks and Son, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C.: George Kenning, 16, Great Queen Street, W.C.

"A decidedly picturesque fairy-tale."—Spectator.

Eildon Grange: A Tale.

By ANDREW CLARK, M.A., Vicar of St. Michael's, Oxford. "Extremely readable."—Church Times. "Clever, graphic, and morally elevating."—Literary Churchman. "Of absorbing interest to boys."—Tablet. "Fresh and vigorous."—Church Bells. "The illustrations are very good and possess a distinct charm and piquancy."—Spectator.

Oxford: S. Rowbottom and Son; London: Hamilton, Adams and Co., 32, Paternoster Row, E.C.—Price 5s.

Post free 5d.

The Lost Ten Tribes in a Nutshell.

A Concise Exposition of the Truth Relating to British-Israel. By

WM. GREIG (Montreal). Preface by DR. WILD.

Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-st.

THE MONTHLY PART OF

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL

FOR DECEMBER.

Now ready, price 7d., by post 8½d. The Monthly Part is particularly useful for sending abroad, and for Libraries.

Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

DE BEUVE'S GINGER CAKES

Are the most delicious Cakes in the world, and are highly recommended for invalids and the aged. They form an Unfailing Remedy for Constipation and Indigestion, and while most rich cakes disagree with children, these are very wholesome and conducive to health. Sent for 1s. Postal Order to any part of the Kingdom by Victor de Beuve, 3, Rood Lane, London, E.C.

GINGER CAKES

Christmas Cards.

30 MAGNIFICENT CARDS, by RAPHAEL TUCK, Value 6s. 2d., post free for 1s.

Best Value Ever Offered.

Cash Bonus of £5 for Competition, free amongst Purchasers only. Full particulars with every Parcel.

ALFRED H. TYLER,

102, FINSBURY PARK ROAD, LONDON, N.

FITS! FITS!! FITS!!!

ALL persons suffering from Epilepsy should send Name and Address to JAMES OSBORNE, Medical Pharmacy, Ashbourne, Derbyshire, who will forward, free of charge, full particulars (with Testimonials) of the most successful remedy ever discovered for this distressing malady. Sent to all parts of the world. References permitted to Rev. J. Baker, M.A., 80, Bolton Road, Pendleton, Manchester.

No Reader of Identity Literature should be without this Almanack.

Now ready. Price 3d. (by post 4d.). Interleaved with ruled paper, stiff cover, 5d. (by post 6d.). Brown cloth, gilt lettered, interleaved throughout with ruled paper, 1s. (post free on receipt of P.O.)

The ANGLO-ISRAEL ALMANACK and Diary for 1889.

Frontispiece—PORTRAIT OF DR. J. M. GRANT.

	PAGE
CALENDAR AND DIARY FOR THE YEAR	4-26
Church Lessons for each Sunday of the Year	4-26
Text of Scripture for each Day of the Year...	4-26
Notes for Months and Moon's Changes	4-26
Moveable Feasts	6
Measures of Length	10
The Nation's Drink Bill	10
Bank Holidays	12
Standard Gold	14
Letters Patent for Inventions ...	16
Length of Mile in Different Countries	18
Legacy and Succession Duty ...	20
Meteoric Showers, '89. Ocean Depths	22
Legal Tender of Money	24
Income Tax	24
University Terms	26
Postal Regulations	28
General Information	29
The Royal Family, the Church	29
Public Exhibitions	31
The Ministry	32
ARTICLES:—
The Operations of the Holy Spirit with Reference to the History of the House of British-Israel, Past, Present, and Future. By Philo-Israel ...	33
God's Promises, and How Men Treat Them. By V. M. Cox ...	42
Christian Britain—the Rock on Which Christ has Built His Church. By Rev. R. Douglas	47
Playing With Powder. By J. G. Taylor	62
"The Power of the Holy People." By J. C. H. Mehl	53
"Cui Bono?" By the Rev. C. W. Hickson	59
Israel no Type! By Douglas A. Onslow, J.P.	66
England's Mission. By Rev. W. J. Dawson	4
The Covenant Nation. By Rev. J. P. Britton	6
Is There Spiritual Benefit? By Rev. Denis Hanan	8
The Search for the Lost Tribes. By Rt. Hon. Viscount Folkestone...	10
Glimpses of the Future. By Rev. J. C. Boyce	12
A Reasonable Basis. By the late Bishop Titcomb	14
The Great Pyramid. By the Rev. Henry Morton	16
Jews and Israelites. By Rev. G. A. Rogers	18
Understanding the Prophecies. By Rev. John Huyshe	20
England's Position in the Divine Plan. By Rev. J. S. Krœnig ...	22
A Modern Goshen. By Rev. J. L. V. Cachemaille	24
Three Questions. By Rev. Canon Blake Brownrigg	26
LIST OF ANGLO-ISRAEL ASSOCIATIONS IN VARIOUS PARTS OF THE WORLD	69

LONDON: ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-st., and of any Bookseller.

CHOICE CHRISTMAS BOOKS.

Now Ready. Crown 8vo., cloth. Sent post free on receipt of P.O. for 7/6, net.

LIGHT AND COLOUR

Emblematic of Revealed Truth.

By the LATE MAJOR NICKLE.

EDITED BY

SARAH SHARP,

Author of "My Jewels," etc.

With Explanatory Coloured Diagrams.

LONDON:

HODDER & STOUGHTON, 27, PATERNOSTER ROW.

ALSO,

"MY JEWELS"

By SARAH SHARP.

Price 4s. 6d., 2s., and 1s. 8d., net. Postage 2d.

R. BANKS & SON, RACQUET-COURT, FLEET-ST.

LUNG SAVE YOUR LIVES BY TAKING TONIC
LUNG OWBRIDGE'S TONIC
LUNG LUNG TONIC TONIC
LUNG TONIC
LUNG THE MIGHTY HEALER. TONIC
LUNG TONIC
LUNG It has a power over disease hitherto TONIC
LUNG unknown in Medicine. TONIC
LUNG Are you at all Weak-chested or in- TONIC
LUNG clined to be Consumptive, with just a TONIC
LUNG touch of Cough now and then? TONIC
LUNG "Try this Wonderful Medicine." The TONIC
LUNG Cough and Weakness will disappear as TONIC
LUNG if by magic, and you will feel a strength TONIC
LUNG and power you never had before. TONIC
LUNG HAVE YOU A COUGH? TONIC
LUNG A DOSE WILL RELIEVE IT! TONIC
LUNG HAVE YOU A COLD? TONIC
LUNG A DOSE AT BEDTIME WILL TONIC
LUNG REMOVE IT. TONIC
LUNG Bronchitis & Asthma it relieves instantly TONIC
LUNG The Spasms of Coughing so dreadful in TONIC
LUNG Whooping Cough become less with each TONIC
LUNG dose of the medicine. TONIC
LUNG TONIC
LUNG Prepared by W. T. OWBRIDGE Chemist, Hull TONIC
LUNG Sold in Bottles 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d. TONIC
LUNG and 11s. by all Chemists and Patent TONIC
LUNG Medicine Vendors. Wholesale all London TONIC
LUNG and Provincial Houses. TONIC

HUMAN LIFE.—FIFTY YEARS' Record of Facts, Principles, and Discoveries (just published complete) Relating to the Improvement and Preservation of Human Life on Earth. Origin and true treatment of diseases. A series of articles by DR. SAMUEL BIRLEY, M.D., Ph.D. Book form, 50 pages. SENT FREE to every applicant by the publishers, GORDON B. MURRAY & CO., 50, Theobald's-road, Holborn, E.C. Write to-day

30,000 BEDS SOLD in SEVEN YEARS

NEWHAM'S CELEBRATED LINCOLNSHIRE FEATHER BEDS.

THE CHEAPEST FEATHER BEDS IN THE WORLD.

Direct from Boston, Lincolnshire.

No. 1. SINGLE BED, BOLSTER, and PILLOW, 6 ft. 3 in. by 3 ft. 6 in., weighing 40 lb. 30/0
No. 2. DOUBLE BED, BOLSTER, and TWO PILLOWS, 6 ft. 6 in. by 4 ft. 6 in. weighing 50 lb. 37/6
No. 3. DOUBLE BED, BOLSTER, and TWO PILLOWS, 6 ft. 6 in. by 4 ft. 6 in., weighing 65 lb... .. 41/3
No. 4. EXTRA SIZE BED, BOLSTER, and TWO PILLOWS, 6 ft. 6 in. by 5 ft., weighing 65 lb. .. 48/9

WARRANTED NEW AND SWEET.

Any sized Bed only 9d. per lb., including Feathers, in Strong Union (bordered) Tick, making, packing, wrapper, and Carriage Paid to any Station in the United Kingdom.

SUPERIOR BEDS, Splendid Feathers, Linen Tick, 1s. per lb.

Samples of Feathers and Ticks, Price Lists, &c. post-free.

For the convenience of Purchasers we have opened a Branch Establishment at 178, Strand, London.

All orders must be accompanied by Cheque or P.O.O. (which, as security to purchasers, may be post dated ten days) payable to

NEWHAM & CO., Boston, Lincolnshire,

or to THOS. SMITH, 178, STRAND, LONDON,

where Goods and Samples can be obtained from 10 till 6, Saturdays till 2, or by letter.

Feathers only 9d. per lb. The trade supplied. Please mention this paper. A great reduction on three or more beds.

PIANOFORTES, Harmoniums, American Organs. Why buy at shops inferior made instruments, and pay large profits, when you can buy direct from the Maker High-class Instruments, and save 50 per cent. by so doing? Full value allowed for old Instruments in exchange as part payment. Write for Price Lists and Testimonials to A. G. LINSTEAD, Cobden Pianoforte Company, 5, Eversholt-street, Camden Town, London. Established 1874.

Certain HARNESS' Cure.

ELECTROPATHIC BELT

FOR

SLEEPLESSNESS

SLEEPLESSNESS.—The Rt. Hon. LORD BYRON says that—"Harness' Electropathic Belt is invaluable for sleeplessness, I recommend it to all my friends."

Guaranteed to generate a mild continuous current of Electricity, which speedily cures all Disorders of the Nerves, Stomach, Liver and Kidneys. Thousands of Testimonials. Pamphlet & Advice free on application to Mr. C. B. Harness, Consulting Electrician, the Medical Battery Co. Ltd.

Only Address,

52, OXFORD ST. LONDON, W. (Corner of Rathbone Place.)

Call to-day, if possible, or write at once

Printed and Published for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-st., London, E.C.; F. W. PARRY (late GUEST & CO.), 29, Paternoster-row.

WEDNESDAY, DEC. 12, 1888

[All rights reserved.

Digitized by Google

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."

(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India.)

"And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the Forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8.

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS of the EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. XII., No. 625. Entered at Stationers' Hall.] WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 19, 1888. [PRICE ONE PENNY.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

PAGE

The African Slave Trade and How it is to be Put Down 501
Hosea I. and II. By W. H. Larkins, Lieutenant Colonel.—Part I. 502
The British Empire and Contemporary Powers. By R. N. Adams, of New Zealand. Part V. 503
How One, Now Passed Away, Saw It 504
Which Teaching Wrests Scripture? By Rev. Denis Hanan, B.D. 505
Progress 506
The Norfolk Chronicle and the Question of Our Identity 506
Jew and Gentile. By W. L. Blore 507

THE AFRICAN SLAVE TRADE AND HOW IT IS TO BE PUT DOWN.

By all accounts the African slave trade is just now far from inactive. The retirement of the Egyptian Government from the Soudan, and the disastrous termination of the Gordon incident, with the complete collapse of civilized government at Khartoum, have united to encourage the traffic in human life. The question, therefore, is not "how soon will the slave trade in Africa be a thing of the past?" but, "what must be done to stop and discourage it?" "what must be done to prevent its complete re-establishment as an African Institution?" British efforts, in this direction, at present seem a good deal discredited. The attempt to reach Emin Pasha, and so deal a blow at the Arab slave traders, has been sadly discouraged by the murder of Major Barttelot, the head of the expedition in West Africa; by the suspected treachery of Tippo Tib, by the death of the second in command of the relief expedition, Mr. Jameson; and the sudden stop put to the effort by these untoward occurrences. The British having apparently failed, the Germans are aspiring to be a successful, exploring, and settling Power in Africa, and consequently, they are making great efforts to equip and send a relief expedition to discover both Emin Pasha and Stanley, who the German leaders, of the coming rescuing party, believe to be safe in Wadelai with Emin Pasha. Lieut. Wissmann, a German, and Dr. Peters, are preparing to set out, though it is feared their departure must be delayed in consequence of the unfortunate rebellion against the German African Company on the Zanzibar Coast at Pangani, and other spots. The latter Company have, as the Times describes it, been "unfortunate" in raising the ire of the nations; and we have, on the other hand, been "fortunate," as a British Company, in securing their good will. The Times looks on this as an accidental matter which will be got over, and then all will be well. But if we may judge from the annexed, which comes from Zanzibar, dated October 14, and was published next day in the Times, it seems there is a radical defect in the German mode of treating the native tribes, which will be a bar to all German settlement in Africa, and to the German offer of good government any way acceptable to the native mind. The message from Zanzibar was to the following effect:—

Zanzibar, October 14.

There is no foundation for the reports recently circulated attributing the native outbreak in the coast districts to religious fanaticism and the hostility of Arab slave traders. It is authoritatively declared that what has occurred was due to the ignorance of the native character displayed by the European employees of the German East African Company, and especially to their contemptuous treatment of the coast population, and the disrespect shown to the Sultan's officials and the Sultan's flag.

The British Indian traders, after laying the facts regarding their position before Colonel Suan-Smith, the British Consul-General here, held a public meeting, at which it was resolved to telegraph a petition to the Queen, through the medium of the Prince of Wales and the Marquis of Salisbury, praying Her Majesty to represent to the German Government the true cause of the hostile feeling which has produced the outbreak against the German Company's employees in order that the German Government may frame measures to restore confidence and thereby put an end to the grievous losses which, if prolonged, must utterly ruin the large community of native and Indian traders, who are peaceful and industrious men, numbering over 10,000.

Lieut. Wissmann, the German head of the proposed expedition, is, on the contrary, satisfied that his countrymen are quite capable of carrying out all that is needful to rescue Emin Pasha and Stanley, and put down the slave trade, provided that only two millions sterling be given him, and a couple of years' time be allowed for the objects proposed. The Times does not at all object to the Germans trying their hands at the matter, but considers these "the estimates of an enthusiast," since "the best and only certain hope of accomplishing this most desirable result lies in the gradual settlement of the country, from the coast inwards, and in the determination of those who occupy it, that wherever European rule extends there the slave trade shall cease to exist. That is a work not to be accomplished by money alone, nor in a short period of time. It needs" (the Times adds) "the sustained energy of races like the Germans and the English, and their association in the common undertaking would only redound to the honour and advantage of both countries." That is to say, the British cannot put down slavery alone, or civilize Africa alone, but it requires the united efforts of the Germans, and other nations like them, with the British, and in that union lies the hope of the African world. Not so do we read the Scripture! There we see that one race alone is designated as the liberator of the slave, and the bestower, under God, of civil and religious liberty throughout the world. Thus we read in Isa. lviii. 6, R.V.: "Is not this the fast I have chosen? to loose the bonds of wickedness, to undo the bands of the yoke, and to let the oppressed go free, and that ye break every yoke?" The breaker of all yokes is God's chosen people Israel, to whom the context refers (ver. 1 and 14). In Isa. lxi. 9, R.V., we have the testimony of the whole world to Israel as His blessed ones: "Their seed shall be known among the nations, and their offspring among the peoples: all that see them shall acknowledge them, that they are the seed which the Lord hath blessed." There is no hint here that God regards any other race as co-partners with Israel in the work of breaking "yokes," or that any other nation besides Israel will ever be regarded as the one He hath blessed in this or any other duty. We do not anticipate, therefore, that in the result it will be found that there will be any partnership between German and British Companies in breaking down the slave trade, or in giving Africa civil and religious liberty, with the Gospel and God's word.

Digitized by Google

In this, as in other matters, it will be found, we suppose, that Israel "dwelleth alone," and will alone carry out her own God-assigned destiny, by destroying the slave trade with her own right hand, upheld by the right hand of her Creator, Former, and Maker, to the glory of His great name, and in fulfilment of His own prophetic Word, and of His designs towards Israel His people, His chosen.

HOSEA I. AND II.

By W. H. Larkins, Lieutenant-Colonel.

"It shall come to pass that where it was said unto them, ye are not My people, there it shall be said unto them, ye are the sons of the living God" (Hosea i. 10).

PART I.

On the present occasion I propose confining my remarks to the events foreshadowed in chapter i., and more particularly with a view to ascertain when the House of Israel entered into their Lo-Ammi condition, as also when and where they were redeemed from it as sons of the living God. With the exception of two slight allusions to the House or children of Judah (verses 1 and 11), the whole of this chapter applies exclusively to the House of Israel, and it will be observed that the distinction between the Two Houses is clearly defined both in verses 7 and 11 and verses 6 and 7, as also in verses 10 and 11. From verses 4—9 we have set forth the judgments that would come upon the House of Israel for their apostacy, each being marked by the birth of a child, thereby implying that they would not come upon them at the same time, but at intervals between each. The first, the extinction of the kingdom, may be said to have been effected when the king was cast into prison by the Assyrians (B.C. 726), and the second, a few years later when Samaria fell into the hands of the Assyrians after a siege of three years, and the whole of the inhabitants were carried off into captivity (verse 6); and none remained but the tribe of Judah only (B.C. 721; see 2 Kings xvii.). With reference to the third (verse 9), all that can be said for certain is that the words Lo-Ammi (not My people) must have been spoken after the Ten Tribes had been taken away out of the land of Samaria. Then the prophet goes on to point in the distant future to the happier and more prosperous days for the House of Israel, when they would be restored to God's favour as the sons of the living God, and in numbers "as the sand of the sea" (verses 10 and 11). Then would follow the union of the Two Houses of Israel and Judah prior to their return to the land. With reference to the place where the events referred to in verse 10 had their fulfilment, St. Peter throws some light on the latter event, and if we can determine the one it solves the other also, as both were to occur at the same place. Now St. Peter, in his first epistle addressed to the strangers scattered throughout Pontus, Galatia, and Asia Minor, writes to them as "elect, according to the foreknowledge of God through sanctification of the Spirit and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ (chap. i. 2). Again he calls them "a spiritual house, an holy priesthood to offer up sacrifices acceptable to God through Jesus Christ. A peculiar people, which in time past were not a people but are now the people of God; which had not obtained mercy, but have now obtained mercy (1 Peter ii. 6, 9, and 10). Such words as these could not possibly apply to the Jews, still unconverted and under the law at the time they were written (A.D. 60), and at which period the scattering of them had not taken place, nor was it ever said to the House of Judah, Ye are not My people (Lo-Ammi) (Hosea i. 9).

It is certain, therefore, that they were not Jews, and it is equally certain they were not Gentiles, from the fact that the apostle beseeches them "to have their conversation honest among the Gentiles" (1 Peter ii. 12). If neither Jews nor Gentiles, the only conclusion to be arrived at is, that these strangers, whom St. Peter was addressing, were Lo-Ammi, Ephraim-Israelites of the Ten-Tribed House of Israel, to whom it fell to the lot of St. Peter to convey the glad tidings of mercy obtained for them (1 Peter i. 2), and their restoration to favour as His people (1 Peter ii. 10; Hosea ii. 23, and chap. i. 10), not under the old covenant which they had broken, and to which they had been aliens for nearly eight centuries; but under the new covenant promised to the House of Israel, which is this, "I will write My laws in their hearts, and they shall be to Me a people, and all shall know Me" (Heb. viii. 8—12). Whether St. Peter was the first to make known these glad tidings of mercy to his brethren, the lost sheep of the House of Israel, there may be room for doubt, inasmuch as St. Paul, in his epistle to the Galatians, written about two years before that of St. Peter, tells them that because ye are sons God hath sent forth the Spirit of His Son into your hearts (Gal. iv. 5), and no doubt these Galatian converts were chiefly of Israelitish origin, and, in fact, the whole epistle and the strong language made use of condemning the law by the apostle, tends to the belief that there was a leaning towards a recurrence to the law of their forefathers, which it was the object of St. Paul to counteract by every possible means. But whether we take the testimony of the one or of both, there is ample proof of the fulfilment of the prophecy contained in Hosea i. 10, and Galatia pointed to as the place of their fulfilment. It will be observed that in the redemption from the old, and restoration to God's favour under the new covenant, there is a change in God's relation to His people from that of husband to that of father. The latter is of a more permanent and durable character, and cannot be altered or broken, but the former, under the old covenant of the law, could be absolutely cut asunder by a Bill of Divorce, so that the change strengthened the bond of union between God and His people, and made it unlike the old, which was faulty, a better and an everlasting one.

Bromley, Kent, October, 1888.

(To be continued)

Our Publishers have now ready the Prospectus of our New Year's Double Number, which will contain several valuable and interesting papers. We shall be assisted in our work if friends will distribute these circulars amongst their friends and neighbours, and thus assist in obtaining new subscribers. Messrs. Banks & Son, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, London, will be happy to send a supply of circulars free of cost, to any person who will send name and address, stating the quantity they can judiciously use.

Digitized by Google

THE BRITISH EMPIRE AND CONTEMPORARY POWERS.

By R. N. Adams, of New Zealand.

(Concluded from page 497).

PART V.

The amount of money annually subscribed by voluntary contributions to mission and other charitable works is as surprising as any other evidence of Britain's greatness. Of the annual returns from this source the Daily Telegraph of January 9, 1883, has the following remarks:—"We published yesterday in tabular form the one yearly budget which is gathered from its contributories voluntarily, which never falls short, though no Parliament votes it, and though no power enforces its collection, and which does not devote one penny of its proceeds to war by sea or land, or any purposes except what are beneficent and gentle. Splendid and noble are the figures of that return, and such as reflect a noble credit upon the benevolent of all classes and opinions in this country. . . . These thousand-and-one London societies report last year a total receipt of £4,453,000 sterling, which is ever so much more than the whole public revenue of Persia. . . . It is three times the income of the London School Board; double the whole budget of Greece; nearly double that of Denmark; Holland only collects from all sources twice as much; Portugal's total imports amount to no more; Sweden's annual budget is lower than that of these societies; and Switzerland only raises one-third of their returns. The details of their receipts are as remarkable as their grand totals. We find four Bible and fourteen book societies, drawing £282,519; ninety-two home and foreign missions, in receipt of £1,481,600; six church and chapel building funds, spending £30,871; fifty-one institutions for the blind, deaf, dumb, the idiotic and the incurable, drawing £164,735; eighty-nine hospitals with a subscription of £528,277. Besides these we encounter 162 dispensaries and nursing institutions, £102,489; and 162 pensions for the aged, having £431,770." In addition to these, there are voluntary homes, orphanages, reformatories, educational charities, social improvement homes, protective societies, and such-like, showing an amount of internal machinery, and a work of love and good-will which truly amazes one by its vastness. Then when we think of how these vast sums are gathered together, the total result seems almost more surprising than before. From special church offertories, from mission boxes, from the proceeds of lectures, from children's pence, collection boxes, from thousands of "widows' mites," and from all imaginable springs, both affluent and penurious—the gentle little drops falling as in the spring shower, and the large supplies cast in as from the downpour of the surcharged clouds of an autumn sky.

And yet by such a return as that we have glanced at we only get a mere passing glimpse of the voluntary givings of the British people towards the help of the poor and the comfort of the distressed, as well as the enlightenment of those who sit in the regions of darkness, In it we see nothing of the other vast sums of money raised for similar purposes which never are heard of in London. We can only take this as a specimen of the wonderful amount of money voluntarily contributed to charitable purposes by the British people. No other people devote so much attention to the care of their poor. How comes it the British do? Is not this one of the glorious results of an open and free Bible in the land, and a pure Gospel of love and mercy faithfully preached in every community?

There is nothing more striking than the contrast which exists between the British and Continental manner of observing the Day of Rest—the Sabbath, or one day in seven. No one would argue that there is any approach, even in Britain, to keep that day with the sanctity and solemnity of the old Jewish Ritual, but still it is a recognised rest-day. It is the one special religiously observed day not only from custom, but also by law enacted. The law of the nation proscribes the general transaction of business on that day. The effect of this is that a Sabbath in London or any other English or Scotch city bears no resemblance to an ordinary day. The great flood of business is suspended; shops are, with a few exceptions, closed, and their attendants absent; all appearance of mercantile life is banished, and the church bells are heard in solemn tones calling the religious part of the community to the worship of the Divine Ruler of our race, when millions of devout people wend their way to the house of prayer morning and evening, and great multitudes of children are gathered between services to be affectionately taught the message of love and mercy found in the Gospel of Christ,

How different the picture when we step across from England to France! There is no legalised day of business suspension and rest from labour. The French law recognises no difference in days. Consequently the hammer of the workman is heard as on other days, the places of business are as active as at any other time, and some say that in the retail houses Sunday takings are almost invariably the largest in some quarters of Paris. Theatres are open morning and evening, séances are given by conjurors, concerts are given, and secular lectures on all questions are delivered. It is an exceptionally busy day in the cafés and the restaurants, where musical and dancing entertainments are provided for their frequenters; and instead of the church the family group usually attend either the theatre, the casino, or the circus. What obtains in Paris may in the main be said to indicate the customs of the Continent as a whole. Germany is little better than France. The law of Germany ignores the existence of such a day just the same as the French do, and work may or may not be carried on at the option of those who have the control of labour. Recently, when the Emperor was memorialised to prohibit military parades and demonstrations from taking place on Sunday, he refused, replying as follows:—"He who ordained the Sabbath has declared that the Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath. The Puritanical and Calvinistic idea of the Sabbath as a day of repentance has from ancient times been entirely foreign to the views and sentiments of the German people." So according to Imperial dictum the ancient views and sentiments of a race take precedence of Scriptural injunctions; but the British rest on the Bible.

THE DESTINY OF THE BRITISH RACE.

It has been freely said by many that the days of British greatness has almost reached, if it has not in fact already passed, the climax of its glory—that this magnificent empire, which now encircles the globe, will soon fall to pieces, and become a thing of the past. Those who urge this retrogression refer us to the history of all former great nations, and maintain that in these things history can scarcely fail to repeat itself. If the greatness of Egypt, Greece, Rome, Spain, and of all those mighty Powers which have added to the lustre of the historic page has passed away, so will the greatness of the empire of this nineteenth century. This is simply a guess, which supposes that things must ever be as they have been—that race must continue to supplant race as long as the world has a history; but surely it does not follow that because all previous nations have succumbed to the power of their enemies, so must all future nations fall before the barbarian hordes of each new Attila who may rise to drive the Cæsars from the Imperial throne.

One has seriously suggested the possibility of the day not being far off when some four million Chinese may be led into Europe by some bold warrior, who under the mantle of the old leader of the Goths and Huns will drive the civilization of cultured and refined Europe from the continent which has for so many years basked under the genial beams of its ennobling, liberating, emancipating sun. Can it be possible that these later years of science, of ennobled manhood, have taught us nothing? Can it be considered possible that barbarism is always to be able to assert its power and bravery over civilization and all the blessings of a liberated manhood? The civilization of this century is not the civilization of the Romans. The state of society under which we exist is not the system of despotism which Rome called civilization. We answer to no despot's call; we bow before no autocrat's demand; we shrink from no parade of military rule; but in the voice of the nation, by the consent of the people, we are urged on or are restrained from action. We have learned to own a monarch's power, but we have also come to that state of cultivation which enables us to know that we are men, not slaves. We look upon the State as the combination of its units, and refuse to submit to a monarch usurping our prerogative. The people constitute the empire, of which the monarch is only the representative head. How different this from the States of old! In them the king and the army composed the State, while the people were merely the sources of supply for the despot and his forces.

Digitized by Google

There is a complete change in the nature of affairs. Civilization is not now what it was, consequently barbarism stands not in the same relation to it which it did of old. There is no parallel between the two. Moreover, what was such an empire as that of Rome when compared in its racial constitution with that of Britain? Rome had provinces, and the British have colonies. Yes, truly; but what were Rome's provinces but land wrested from foreigners, and held under military sway, while England's colonies are peopled by her own blood and bone. There was no bond of race or family tie to bind those old States together, but there existed the slumbering desire for independence, and in many cases for revenge. Herein lay the weak point: this was the diseased spot which led to the destruction of those nations whose career for a few short centuries dazzled the world. Where is its counterpart in the British Empire? Every colony of our nation has sprung from the enterprise of her people, not from the penetration of her armies in the first case. Our seamen, and our merchants, or our missionaries, have first led the van, established themselves, and opened up a trade in the country, and so colonies of our race located themselves in every part, and the armies only came when the welfare of the colonies demanded their protection. Our empire has not, like its predecessors, pushed its interests at the point of the sword or at the mouth of the cannon, but has simply followed up the enterprise of her people, and has never forcibly interfered where necessity did not urgently demand it. In fact, empire has more truly come upon us in spite of the desire of the Imperial Government than on account of it. The race has spread out in all directions, and then when in trouble the wanderers have demanded the protection of the Government, which was not always given without reluctance.

What then is the destiny of a race which already holds "the keys of empire in all parts of the world," already outnumbers any other civilized nation, and is bound together by ties of race and one common language which is fast bringing all other tongues into its subjection? Is this empire going to cease to be? Can a race which already owns one-eighth of the land surface of the globe and which owns over half the sea-going fleet of the world, and is outstripping all others in the rate of its natural increase—can such a race soon cease to be? The fact is that if next year the world-renowned land of England were to be obliterated from the map of Europe, and all the thirty-five millions of our race upon it were taken from the roll of our register, still the race would live and prosper as a power amid the nations of the earth. So many are our possessions, so widely are they separated, and so thoroughly are they now established, that there is absolutely no reasonable method by which the British race could be destroyed while others remain.

Then we must have a great destiny still before us. In the moral and religious affairs of the world for the last hundred years we have produced a mighty influence. There is much in this respect yet to be done. No other nation seems disposed or prepared to contend with us in these matters. But a small part of the world is yet under the power of the Gospel—of a religion of Divine love. Our destiny is to go on, and to carry this banner into every corner and plant the truth of the Bible in the centre of every tribe and family on the wide earth.

Let it for a moment be supposed that the influence of this British race could be removed from among mankind—that its supply of Bibles to the races were to cease; that its missionaries were called away; that its teeming religious literature were withdrawn; that its benignant laws and elevating customs were no longer practised and exemplified—what would the condition of the world then be? Which country would then stand out as the centre of light and liberty to the benighted and down-trodden? What organisation would step forward and bear onward the work of civilization and evangelical labour from which the British would retire? What now restrains the piratical tendencies of the semi-civilized sea-trading communities but the dread of the British cruiser? What prevents the slave-dealing propensities of many countries but the fear of British indignation? What secures the safety of sea-borne merchandise but the power and willingness of the British Navy to assume the position of general police of the seas? What sustains and fosters the spirit of human liberty and the common brotherhood of man so much as the influence of our race upon the rest of the nations? What has overthrown and still holds in check the old monarchical spirit of despotism but the living social and political vigour of the Anglo-Saxon race? And, above all, by what power are the glorious rights of conscience, moral and religious, preserved from the rude hand of the dogmatist, unless it be by the power of the example radiated from the men of our empire? If the power of our nation should be by any means removed, what would occur in the annals of Christianity? We may talk of the influence of the Christian Church, and truly its power is great; but if it were deprived of the moral and physical influence of the nation which now stands around it, how would it fare? Moral influence is a most worthy thing when it can be employed, but it will be found to be no influence at all apart from the influence of physical force. Then remove the physical force of the British empire from the world, and tell me what will be left.

HOW ONE, NOW PASSED AWAY, "SAW IT."

We have received the following testimony, which cannot but be interesting and edifying to our readers. The facts are perfectly true, but the names we suppress as unnecessary.

"He who is taken from us, was, I may say, a staunch Anglo-Israelite. Time was when he used to laugh at us and our arguments, but somehow or other there was a text which fastened itself to him. It was this: 'His seed shall be in many waters' (Numbers xxiv. 7, R.V.). This struck him very much, and he dipped into the question, until at last he became a sound and pugnacious supporter of it. Shortly before he died we gave him a Banner containing what we considered a more than ordinary effective article (by a clergyman), when he said, 'You need not show me any more arguments on this subject. I cannot be more firmly convinced of its truth than I am!' It is often remarked by our opponents, 'O, some people will believe anything!' Yes; but he whose death we deplore was not inclined to 'believe anything;' quite the reverse; and his adhesion to the Identity, after careful consideration, was to us an additional confirmation of its truth." Instances in which the entry of this truth has given comfort and consolation to the dying and the anxious are happily not rare. It appeals to men's faith, since it points to the faithfulness of God to His promises and His covenants. The God who has faithfully observed His promises to the children of Israel after centuries, nay millennia of neglect and provocation on their part, is the Being whom we are called on to trust and obey. He declares that "God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish but have everlasting life."

Digitized by Google

Throughout the Old Testament He appeals to His covenant with nature and His immutable fidelity to the promises there made, as proofs that He will be true to His promises to Israel, His chosen ones, and to those, including His people Israel, "who have made a covenant with Him by sacrifice" (Psa. l. 5, R.V.). Then after the flood we have the promise to Noah and his posterity reaching down to our own days, and going even yet beyond them—"While the earth remaineth, seed-time and harvest, and cold and heat, and summer and winter, and day and night, shall not cease" (Gen. viii. 22, R.V.). They have not ceased, and never will, because God has promised it. In the New Testament we have St. Paul's famous argument recorded, drawn from these facts. He uses them as the witness God had provided in proof of His existence and of His faithfulness, to those who have not had the blessing of His revelation imparted to them. He addressed the idolaters of Lystra thus: "Ye should turn from these vanities unto the living God, which made heaven and earth and the sea, and all things that are therein; Who in times past suffered all nations to walk in their own ways. Nevertheless, He left not Himself without witness, in that He did good, and gave us rain from heaven, and fruitful seasons, filling our hearts with food and gladness" (Acts xiv. 15—17). God's covenant with nature is a sufficient proof to unenlightened man that God exists, and that He is their gracious Benefactor. If that be so, how much greater is His witness from His covenant with nature that Israel exists, as a nation, as a monarchy, and as a people under His beneficent rule!

There is first the distinct assertion of these facts, arrived at by appeal to nature, in Jer. xxxi. 35, 36, 37, R.V., "Thus saith the Lord, which giveth the sun for a light by day, and the ordinances of the moon and stars for a light by night, which stirreth up the sea that the waves thereof roar, the Lord of Hosts is His name. If these ordinances depart from before Me, saith the Lord, then the seed of Israel also shall cease from being a nation before Me for ever." This is followed by a similar appeal to the works of nature. "Thus saith the Lord: if heaven above can be measured, and the foundations of the earth searched out beneath, then will I also cast off all the seed of Israel for all that they have done, saith the Lord."

Again in Isa. lv. 10, 11, R.V., we have God's appeal to the natural world and His declaration that as the works that are therein obey Him, so in grace "His word that goeth forth out of His mouth shall not return unto Him void, but it shall accomplish that which He pleases, and it shall prosper in the thing whereunto He sent it." Now we know from Psa. cxlvii. 19, 20, R.V., that "He showeth His word unto Jacob, His statutes and His judgments unto Israel, and that He hath not dealt so with any nation." It follows, as surely as God's operations in nature are progressing, that in grace, Israel is now being "shown by the Lord" His words, His statutes, and His judgments, and that as a Christian people they are preaching it "to all nations, families, and kindreds of the earth," according to the prophecies. The only nation that attempts to do these things to-day, is our own British folk. They have received the word of God, the Bible, as a nation; and by the agency of the British and Foreign Bible Society and other like institutions, are spreading it far and wide, universally, as God said His people would. "His people," being Israel, He hath created, made, fashioned and formed for Himself; "they shall show forth His praise" (Isa. xliii. 21, R.V.). They are His people, His chosen, as ver. 20 declares: and we praise the Lord that we are they.

WHICH TEACHING WRESTS SCRIPTURE?

By Rev. Denis Hanan, B.D.

The Bishop of Calcutta, Metropolitan of India, preached in Manchester Cathedral on Sunday, October 7th, in aid of the funds of Missionary Societies. He enlarged upon the unexampled opportunities enjoyed by the Church at the present time, because of the power and wide-spreading influence of the British Empire. Taking for his text Psa. xxiv. 1, "The earth is the Lord's," he showed that although King David knew but little of the expanse of the earth, yet he knew that he had a part to play in the working out of God's purposes. He showed that Israel was "entrusted with a sacred deposit for the edification of the world," and that David knew this and desired it. He stated that "Israel was to emerge from above the sea of men and nations," and pausing he said, "My brethren, the application to England of the statements concerning Israel is not wresting Holy Scripture." He continued to say that God raised up England to bless her, and to bless others through her, and that her power was given to her in trust. He proceeded to show that power to work and opportunity were given in trust to the holy Catholic Church, and that "the Anglican communion was a city set on a hill," that this position of ours was to be "regarded with holy pride," and to be "used to bless others." He then instanced India, which was not conquered, but which fell into our hands, and to it "we have given security and rest, such as it never before possessed."

The Bishop, in short, preached a sermon which caused the British-Israelites who were present to open their ears and their eyes with wonder, for Philo-Israel himself could not have better supported the cause of the Identity. And yet he was but a blind witness. He stated afterwards in reply to a question, "My reference was only intended to point out that the Church of Christ, and so the English Church as a branch of it, inherited the duty imposed upon the Israel of God, which was a type of the Church." With all due deference to one in the Bishop's high position, St. Paul does not regard the Church of Israel as a type of the Church Catholic, rather, he says, the former was the root from which the branches spring, and upon which the Roman Gentile wild olive was grafted in, so that it, among and with the original and unexcised branches, partook of the root and fatness. The Levitical sacrificial worship was typical, but Israel, as the kingdom and Church of God, was not typical, except in the sense in which the sapling is typical of the full-grown tree, but this is a very different use of the word and of the idea. Well, whatever way the Bishop may understand Israel to be typical, we have his express statement, that it is no wresting of Holy Scripture to apply the statements concerning Israel to the English Church and nation. But is this so, starting from the Bishop's standpoint? For instance, "Israel shall blossom and bud and fill the world with fruit." Says the Bishop, This function of Israel—which he must admit she never fulfilled—is typical of England, and she is fulfilling it, and it is no wresting of Holy Scripture to say so; that is to say, a prophecy concerning Israel which has not been accomplished; is typical of a totally different people who are accomplishing it, or stranger yet, of the Catholic Church, which constitutes herself the root, and would forsooth make the branches that existed before her to be but typical of the independent position which she, the wild olive, unnatural graft, has assumed. But passing by this, is it not a sad wresting of Holy Scripture to say that a presumably Gentile nation has been given by God all Israel's functions to the exclusion of Israel, so that Holy Scripture is itself the witness to God's change of purpose and breach of covenant? It is, alas, a fearful wresting of Scripture and most dishonouring to God to teach that when God says Israel we are to read Gentile, and when God says My firstborn, My people, My inheritance, we are to read the Gentile Church or any part thereof. But it is not a wresting of Holy Scripture, to teach that when God says

Digitized by Google

Israel, He means that people, and that when God in His providence fulfils to a people all Israel's promises, and enables that people both nationally and ecclesiastically to undertake all Israel's functions, He has Himself proved that people to be Israel. This is our contention. Perhaps it may be God's will that by His good hand upon us, ere the next Lambeth meeting, the Church Congresses will consider these stubborn facts which the events of the day are forcing upon even blind witnesses, and that the pulpits of England will ring with the good news that He who is a light to lighten the Gentiles, is, above all, the glory of His people, British-Israel.

PROGRESS.

We always like to chronicle the fact when a clergyman or minister of religion takes the overt step of declaring for Our Identity, and of publicly proclaiming his convictions. A clergyman, who shall be nameless, has just done this, and what he writes to us on the subject is, with his consent, placed before our readers. We commend his words to his brethren of the establishment.

"My convictions on the subject, which have for a long time been growing upon me, are simply the result of the study of the light which Holy Scripture throws upon it, entirely apart from any spirit of 'fanciful speculation,' to which I know that you also are strongly opposed.

"My prayer is that I may discern and know God's truth on a subject so intimately connected with His glory and the welfare of His Church. If I can further the cause of this truth in my humble way, I shall be thankful. The more I study it, the more plainly the truth of the Identity seems to be set forth in Holy Scripture, and the more reflex light seems to me to be shed upon portions of the prophetic word which are certainly difficult to understand or explain apart from it."

We think these sober words should attract the notice, and rivet the attention of the writer's brethren, the pastors of the Lord's Israelite sheep. They are sentiments quite after our own heart. The writer of them is a man of sober judgment, not given at all to enthusiasm, excitement, or love of novelty in religion. He has not hastily formed his opinions: he has been years thinking over the matter, and has been guided in his search by the word written. He plainly sees that Our Identity with Israel is connected with God's glory, and therefore, no doubt, sees that he may not, and cannot, trifle with or neglect it. He acknowledges that it throws a flood of light upon difficult portions of the Word and enables men to comprehend it. Best of all, he engages himself to become a helper of those whose hearts are set upon propagating this truth, and thus we have gained the active Christian co-operation of a true shepherd of Israel; and for one we thank God for this. No doubt the truth in regard to Our Identity is quietly advancing in all directions, and preparation is making in many minds for a declaration of adhesion by-and-bye, which will take us all by surprise. We long for the advent of that day! already we have a good list of the clergy who are devoted fellow helpers. Such are the Revs. Messrs. S. C. Adams, M.A., F. Aston, R. Douglas, M.A., C. W. Hickson, M.A., H. Marriott, M.A., E. G. Wemyss-Whittaker, M.A., Denis Hanan, B.D., E. Denny, M.A., R. J. Lyon, M.A., Oxonian, M.A., C. Godfrey Ashwin, M.A., H. Morton, B.A., A. J. J. Cachemaille, M.A., over a dozen names to begin with! others are preparing to follow, and some are already announced as British-Israelites by conviction, and ready to become standard-bearers for this truth.

Christianity with hands, and arms, and feet, is the want of to-day—a living, acting, working religion. Ideas are as dead as shells unless the holder puts them on feet and sends them out to do good for mankind.

THE "NORFOLK CHRONICLE" CONTROVERSY.

(Concluded from page 498).

PART IV.

THE ANGLO-ISRAEL DELUSION.

Reprinted from the "Norfolk Chronicle," Nov. 10th, 1888.

Sir,—It is impossible to keep Philo-Israel to his original statements. In his first letter, he said that parties of the tribes escaping from captivity might have accompanied the Celts all along the centuries in their early emigration into Europe, and their settlement in these islands. In his last letter he says the "Celts" who settled here were mainly Israelites, "for a very good reason." This "reason," which he says I have never touched, is that the British people enjoy exclusively what God promised exclusively to Israel.

If Philo-Israel had confined his argument to pointing out coincidences between passages of Scripture and modern events, I should have paid no more heed to his lucubrations than I do to the various "identifications" we have had of the Beast of prophecy with great public men, or to the numerous predictions as to the speedy dissolution of this mundane sphere. But Philo-Israel not having apparently sufficient faith in his Scriptural "reason," or supposing that the general public would want evidence in support of the claim put forth for the people of these islands being the flesh and blood descendants of the Lost Ten Tribes, considered it would be as well to descend into the domain of history by quoting Josephus and Sharon Turner to help to prove his case.

His purpose was to make out his case with two sets of writings—the Sacred Scriptures and secular history. From pieces taken here and there from the first he set up a theory; from the second he advanced what he thought to be evidence in support of that theory. Now the logical and sensible course is to examine and cross-examine the witnesses put forward in support of a theory. This is what I have done. Not until Philo-Israel had his attention a second time sharply called to the fact that he had not quoted Josephus fairly did he venture again to refer to that author! and now he says that he fails to see where he distorted the quotation he gave from the historian of the Jews. If he did not distort the quotation why is he so ready now to discredit his own witness as "not inspired." Let your readers judge whether Philo-Israel did not distort the passage.

Philo-Israel. 1st letter.	Josephus.
The "Captivity" of the Ten Tribes, that is, its banishment from the Holy Land, continued till the days of Josephus, for he tells us in "Antiquit." xi. 52, that in his days (A.D. 93), the Ten Tribes were in separation from the two, and were still "an immense multitude there beyond the Euphrates."	So he (Esdras) read the epistle at Babylon to those Jews that were there; but he kept the epistle himself and sent a copy of it to all those of his own nation that were in Media; and when these Jews had understood what piety the King (Xerxes) had towards God and what kindness he had for Esdras, they were all greatly pleased; nay, many of them took their effects with them and came to Babylon, as being desirous of going down to Jerusalem; but then the entire body of the people of Israel remained in that country; therefore there are but two tribes in Asia and Europe subject to the Romans, while the Ten Tribes are beyond Euphrates till now, and are an immense multitude, and not to be estimated by numbers.

Was it a fair rendering of this passage from Josephus to omit his testimony that the entire body of the Ten Tribes remained in Media in the time of Esdras, who flourished about 462 B.C. and continued "beyond Euphrates" till the days of Josephus, A.D. 93?

Now if the entire body of the people of Israel remained in Media in the time of Esdras, how could the "Celts," who settled in Britain (which was occupied by Celtic tribes 500 B.C.), have been mainly Israelites? But Josephus went further, and said that the Ten Tribes remained beyond Euphrates till his time. Then see how "Philo-Israel" turns upon Josephus, the weight of whose testimony he had first of all invoked; "The facts," he says, "were against the historian, since on his own showing in Antiq. xiii. 8—5, it appears the Lacedemonians were kinsmen of the Jews, and were, therefore, probably of the Ten Tribes, and possibly of Dan the absentee." Just see how unfairly Philo-

Digitized by Google

Israel mixes up what Josephus says with his own suggestion as to their descent from the Ten Tribes. But look back at the previous quotation from Josephus and it will be seen that he says "there are but two tribes in Asia and Europe subject to the Romans, while the Ten Tribes are beyond Euphrates till now." Now the two tribes were the Jews, and as Sparta is in Europe and not beyond the Euphrates, the more reasonable suggestion to make is that the Lacedemonians were an off-shoot of a Jewish tribe. Further, the Spartan race could not have been flesh and blood descendants of the captive Ten Tribes because the Spartans were a people when the Ten Tribes went into captivity. Assuming that the Lacedemonians "were probably of the Ten Tribes" that is an argument for the Greeks, not the English, being blood and flesh descendants of the House of Israel.

I know that Philo-Israel would like to draw me into discussing his "good reason" which I call a theory. But, as I think I have shown that he is not to be relied upon in quoting profane history I should be very sorry to accept his dicta on the meaning of compilations from the Sacred Scriptures. I remember the story of how one Peter discovered in his father's Testament an authority for Shoulder Knots.

I remain, yours, &c.,
M. KNIGHTS.

Gwenta House, Alexandra Road, Norwich, Nov. 3rd, 1888.

P.S.—I shall not waste your space or my time with any further correspondence on this delusion.

THE ANGLO-ISRAEL QUESTION.

[Reprinted from the "Norfolk Chronicle," Nov. 17th, 1888.]

SIR,—I am sorry Mr. M. Knights declines to pursue the subject. Permit me as a stranger, and one who entered the lists to elicit truth, and not for personal triumph, to add a word by way of final explanation.

When I wrote my first letter (September 8th) I stated that the question could not be treated apart from the Scriptures. My opponent's wish to do so cannot, of course, be allowed, because, apart from the Scriptures, there could be no prospect of any future for the Ten Tribes after their dispersion in B.C. 721. Their future destiny and history are matters of Scriptural prophecy; and, therefore if my subject is to be discussed at all, the appeal from Scripture to fact and history must be allowed, and vice versâ. The Scriptures have been an unfailing guide in regard to the histories and fate of the Empires of Egypt, Assyria, Babylon, Medo-Persia, Greece, and Rome. There has been no error in them in respect to the birth, life, death, resurrection, and ascension of the Lord Jesus Christ; they have literally told us the true history and the fate of the Jewish people, properly so-called. Is there any conceivable reason why they should not be trusted and relied upon when they tell us, as they do, in great detail, of the expatriation, sins, sorrows, travels, and final greatness and victorious destinies of the greater House of "Ephraim-Israel"? Until I am shown why the Scriptures cannot be trusted in respect to the details of Israel's history, I feel bound to attend to these, as I do to their teachings regarding the Lord Jesus, the Jews, and the nations and empires I have named.

The statements of Josephus, and mine, are published by Mr. Knights in parallel columns, to show their discrepancy. I think no candid mind will observe any difference. My offence, it seems, was the omission of the words of the historian, "The entire body of the people of Israel remained in that country"—as if the Jewish writer meant that the whole of the Ten Tribes were penned up in Media, and not a man escaped before the date of the Jews' return, or up to Josephus' time! The Greek text will not bear this interpretation, as I stated before. The words literally translated are these: "And many of them (Jews), gathering up their belongings, came to Babylon, desiring (to make) the journey to Jerusalem. But the general mass of Israelites remained where they were (not 'in that country" or en ekeine te khorâ—but indefinitely—'they remained where they were'); whence it follows (dio) that there are Two Tribes, in Asia and in Europe, subject to the Romans, while the Ten Tribes are beyond Euphrates until now—countless myriads (countless ten thousands!), not able to be computed in number." You see, sir, Josephus never said the Ten Tribes were in Media, but only beyond Euphrates—it might have been thousands of miles beyond—in Russia or Europe! The historian merely drew the inference the Tribes were, in his day, "where they were," but he did not say they were "in that country" or any other! So much for my alleged want of accuracy. Josephus proves my case so far as this—"the Ten Tribes did not return with the Two." Where they were in A.D. 93 he does not particularly describe! If I am wrong, I hope Mr. Knights will put me right.

Mr. K. says my argument is only good to show that "the Greeks, not the English, are of the House of Israel." True; if it can be shown that the Lacedemonians of that time are the Greeks of to-day. Can Mr. K. prove that? And next, "yes," if the Greeks of to-day respond to the portrait God's Word has drawn of Israel to-day. We judge of trees by their fruits. The British have the "signs." The Greeks have not one of the "signs." Verb. Sap. Sat.

Yours truly,
PHILO-ISRAEL.

Clifton, Nov. 13, 1888.

JEW AND GENTILE.

BY W. L. BLORE.

IN that excellent work, "Kingdom of God," &c., by Surgeon-General Grant, I find it stated that there is no direct evidence that the Epistle to the Thessalonians was addressed to Israelites.

It appears to me from the following extracts from Ellicott's "Introduction" to that epistle that there is such evidence.

"We are not informed how long the missionaries stayed at Thessalonica; probably a good deal more than the three weeks during which the preaching in the synagogue continued."

"In this synagogue the Church originated; for of the devout Greeks a great multitude were persuaded."

"The preaching went on on the week-days."

"The Acts tell us nothing of evangelistic efforts among the Gentiles, except among the devout—i.e., the proselytes or Greeks." "Thus it is clear that they had spoken strongly of the regal aspect of our Lord's work." (So also Acts xvii. 7.) "It was in fact the proclamation of what is specially distinguished as the gospel of the kingdom (Matt. iv. 23, ix. 35, xiii. 19, xxiv. 14; Luke viii. 1, Greek, xvi. 16); the good news that he has organised us all into a well-disciplined Church (Rev. i. 6, Greek; comp. John xi. 52), which was to form an imperium in imperio within the Roman dominions."

Is not this blind evidence on the part of the bishop, especially in scriptural reference? Read last two.

Again: "At every turn in the epistle the advent of the kingdom is mentioned." "We find the Thessalonians reminded that one of the best blessings bestowed upon them was His calling them into His kingdom (1 Thess. ii. 12). The full development of this kingdom, at the King's return, was indeed very probably the main subject of the preaching.

Again, the commentator draws attention to 1 Thess. iv. 5, "As the Gentiles which know not God."

To me it appears that not only from internal evidence are all the epistles addressed to Israelites; but from the fact that all the Churches established by the apostles originated in synagogues; and that at Rome Paul addressed his own countrymen first. Also that the terms "brethren" and "saints" have a peculiar significance. Both Peter and Paul used this mode of address to their countrymen generally (Acts ii. and iii., &c.).

In Hebrews iii. 1 the Israelites are called "holy brethren," &c., which term includes that of saints. James and Peter addressed their epistles to Israelites by name as Paul did his to the Hebrews, and there is no doubt that the others were addressed to Israelites from the scriptural references which they contain, with the context. These scriptural references are sometimes transcribed from the Old Testament, and sometimes summarised or abridged as in Galatians, &c. In fact none but those thoroughly acquainted with the Old Testament scripture can fully understand these epistles.

Sandown, Isle of Wight, November 17, 1888.

PATIENT waiting is often the highest way of doing God's will.—India's last census indicates a population of 62,982,000, and there are 6,000,000 more males than females.—It is more honourable to fall, than to cease pushing for fear you will fall.—How can a man act on the judgment of another without using his own?—Popery does not stand well nearest headquarters. Out of 1,298 newspapers published in 1884, only 189, or 5 per cent., favoured Papacy, while the remaining 1,100, or ninety-five per cent., antagonised the Roman Church and the Pope.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed: "Philo-Israel," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

SUBSCRIPTIONS. £ s. d.

Annual Subscription for one copy weekly (including the Twelve Double Numbers) post free 0 7 6
Two Copies (including Double Numbers) 0 13 6
Three Copies ,, ,, ,, ... 1 0 4
Four Copies ,, ,, ,, ... 1 5 6
Six Copies ,, ,, ,, ... 1 16 4

Post Office Orders to be made payable at the head office, St. Martin's-le-grand, London, to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C., or F. W. PARRY & Co., 29, Paternoster-row, London.

The Editor cannot undertake to return rejected MSS. unless stamps for the purpose be sent. Parties requiring an answer should enclose a stamp.

Contents Bills and Show Cards may be obtained on application to the Publishers.

Advertisements should be sent to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

Prepaid Advertisements are inserted at the rate of thirty words for 1s. 4d.

CHRISTMAS PRESENTS AND NEW YEAR'S GIFTS

FOR THOUGHTFUL READERS.

—:o:—

3/6 The Geography of the Gates.

By PHILO-ISRAEL.

Handsome cloth, gilt, with Map and Seven Full-Page Illustrations.

3/6 Britain in History, Ancient and Modern.

By MRS. G. ALBERT ROGERS.

Cloth Boards.

3/- The Lost Ten Tribes.

By REV. JOSEPH WILD, D.D.

Handsome cloth, Gilt.

3/- Talks for the Times.

By REV. JOSEPH WILD, D.D.

Cloth, Gilt lettered.

2/- The Future of Israel and Judah.

By REV. JOSEPH WILD, D.D.

Handsome cloth, Gilt.

2/6 The Origin, Progress, and Establishment of the Kingdom of God in the World.

By DR. J. M. GRANT.

Cloth Boards, Gilt lettered.

2/6 The Sisters of Harrowdale Rectory.

By M. A. SEARSON.

Handsome cloth, gilt lettered, gilt edges, Double Page Illustration.

2/- & 4/6 My Jewels.

By SARAH SHARP.

A pretty presentation volume

Sent post free, carefully packed, at the published price, by the Publishers,

ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet Court, Fleet St., or may be ordered of any Bookseller.

No Reader of Identity Literature should be without this Almanack.

Now ready. Price 3d. (by post 4d.). Interleaved with ruled paper, stiff cover, 5d. (by post 6d.). Brown cloth, gilt lettered, interleaved throughout with ruled paper, 1s. (post free on receipt of P.O.)

The ANGLO-ISRAEL ALMANACK and Diary for 1889.

Frontispiece—PORTRAIT OF DR. J. M. GRANT.

	PAGE
CALENDAR AND DIARY FOR THE YEAR	4-26
Church Lessons for each Sunday of the Year	4-26
Text of Scripture for each Day of the Year...	4-26
Notes for Months and Moon's Changes	4-26
Moveable Feasts	6
Measures of Length	10
The Nation's Drink Bill	10
Bank Holidays	12
Standard Gold	14
Letters Patent for Inventions ...	16
Length of Mile in Different Countries	18
Legacy and Succession Duty ...	20
Meteoric Showers, '89. Ocean Depths	22
Legal Tender of Money	24
Income Tax	24
University Terms	26
Postal Regulations	28
General Information ...	29
The Royal Family, the Church	29
Public Exhibitions	31
The Ministry	32
ARTICLES:—
The Operations of the Holy Spirit with Reference to the History of the House of British-Israel, Past, Present, and Future. By Philo-Israel ...	33
God's Promises, and How Men Treat Them. By V. M. Cox ...	42
Christian Britain—the Rock on Which Christ has Built His Church. By Rev. R. Douglas	47
Playing With Powder. By J. G. Taylor	62
"The Power of the Holy People." By J. C. H. Mehl	53
"Cui Bono?" By the Rev. C. W. Hickson	59
Israel no Type! By Douglas A. Onslow, J.P.	66
England's Mission. By Rev. W. J. Dawson	4
The Covenant Nation. By Rev. J. P. Britton	6
Is There Spiritual Benefit? By Rev. Denis Hanan	8
The Search for the Lost Tribes. By Rt. Hon. Viscount Folkestone...	10
Glimpses of the Future. By Rev. J. C. Boyce	12
A Reasonable Basis. By the late Bishop Titcomb	14
The Great Pyramid. By the Rev. Henry Morton	16
Jews and Israelites. By Rev. G. A. Rogers	18
Understanding the Prophecies. By Rev. John Huyshe	20
England's Position in the Divine Plan. By Rev. J. S. Krœnig ...	22
A Modern Goshen. By Rev. J. L. V. Cachemaille	24
Three Questions. By Rev. Canon Blake Brownrigg	26
LIST OF ANGLO-ISRAEL ASSOCIATIONS IN VARIOUS PARTS OF THE WORLD	69

LONDON: ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-st., and of any Bookseller.

The Origin of Masonic Ritual & Tradition:

A Lecture on the Three Degrees, by BRO. WM. ROWBOTTOM, P.M., with facsimile of a very rare Masonic engraving published in 1789.—Cloth, 2/6.

"Exquisitely clear and singularly correct in everything wherein I may be any authority or guide."—Professor PIAZZI SMYTH. "The Author seems to reason intelligently from his principles."—Literary Churchman.

London: R. Banks and Son, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C.; George Kenning, 16, Great Queen Street, W.C.

"A decidedly picturesque fairy-tale."—Spectator.

Eildon Grange: A Tale.

By ANDREW CLARK, M.A., Vicar of St. Michael's, Oxford. "Extremely readable."—Church Times. "Clever, graphic, and morally elevating."—Literary Churchman. "Of absorbing interest to boys."—Tablet. "Fresh and vigorous."—Church Bells. "The illustrations are very good and possess a distinct charm and piquancy."—Spectator.

Oxford: S. Rowbottom and Son; London: Hamilton, Adams and Co., 32, Paternoster Row, E.C.—Price 5s.

LUNG SAVE YOUR LIVES BY TAKING TONIC
LUNG OWBRIDGE'S TONIC
LUNG LUNG TONIC TONIC
LUNG TONIC
LUNG TONIC
LUNG TONIC
LUNG TONIC
LUNG THE MIGHTY HEALER. TONIC
LUNG TONIC
LUNG It has a power over disease hitherto TONIC
LUNG unknown in Medicine. TONIC
LUNG Are you at all Weak-chested or in- TONIC
LUNG clined to be Consumptive, with just a TONIC
LUNG touch of Cough now and then? TONIC
LUNG "Try this Wonderful Medicine." The TONIC
LUNG Cough and Weakness will disappear as TONIC
LUNG if by magic, and you will feel a strength TONIC
LUNG and power you never had before. TONIC
LUNG HAVE YOU A COUGH? TONIC
LUNG A DOSE WILL RELIEVE IT! TONIC
LUNG HAVE YOU A COLD? TONIC
LUNG A DOSE AT BEDTIME WILL TONIC
LUNG REMOVE IT. TONIC
LUNG Bronchitis & Asthma it relieves instantly TONIC
LUNG TONIC
LUNG The Spasms of Coughing so dreadful in TONIC
LUNG Whooping Cough become less with each TONIC
LUNG dose of the medicine. TONIC
LUNG TONIC
LUNG Prepared by W.T. OWBRIDGE Chemist, Hull TONIC
LUNG Sold in Bottles 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d. TONIC
LUNG and 11s. by all Chemists and Patent TONIC
LUNG Medicine Vendors. Wholesale all London TONIC
LUNG and Provincial Houses. TONIC

HUMAN LIFE.—FIFTY YEARS' Record of Facts, Principles, and Discoveries (just published complete) Relating to the Improvement and Preservation of Human Life on Earth. Origin and true treatment of diseases. A series of articles by DR. SAMUEL BIRLEY, M.D., Ph.D. Book form, 50 pages. SENT FREE to every applicant by the publishers, GORDON B. MURRAY & CO., 50, Theobald's-road, Holborn, E.C. Write to-day

PIANOFORTES, Harmoniums, American Organs. Why buy at shops inferior made instruments, and pay large profits, when you can buy direct from the Maker High-class Instruments, and save 50 per cent. by so doing? Full value allowed for old Instruments in exchange as part payment. Write for Price Lists and Testimonials to A. G. LINSTEAD, Cobden Pianoforte Company, 5, Eversholt-street, Camden Town, London. Established 1874.

CASES FOR BINDING

THE YEARLY VOLUMES. Price 1s. 6d.

R. BANKS & SON, RACQUET-COURT, FLEET-ST.

Just issued, price 2d., by post 2½d., 6 copies post free 1s.

SUPREMACY;

Or, The British Church versus The Church of Rome.

By E. M. RUSH ("A E I"),

Author of "The New Old Story," "The Answer to The Eastern Question," etc.

London: Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street

DE BEUVE'S GINGER CAKES

Are the most delicious Cakes in the world, and are highly recommended for invalids and the aged. They form an Unfailing Remedy for Constipation and Indigestion, and while most rich cakes disagree with children, these are very wholesome and conducive to health. Sent for 1s. Postal Order to any part of the Kingdom by Victor de Beuve, 3, Rood Lane, London, E.C.

GINGER CAKES

FITS! FITS!! FITS!!!

ALL persons suffering from Epilepsy should send Name and Address to JAMES OSBORNE, Medical Pharmacy, Ashbourne, Derbyshire, who will forward, free of charge, full particulars (with Testimonials) of the most successful remedy ever discovered for this distressing malady. Sent to all parts of the world. References permitted to Rev. J. Baker, M.A., 80, Bolton Road, Pendleton, Manchester.

Certain HARNESS' Cure.

ELECTROPATHIC BELT

FOR

RHEUMATISM

Major PAKENHAM, Longstone House, Armagh, writes:—"The Electropathic Belt has completely cured me of rheumatic gout. I suffered intense agony for two years. I now feel strong and active."

Guaranteed to generate a mild continuous current of Electricity, which speedily cures all Disorders of the Nerves, Stomach, Liver and Kidneys. Thousands of Testimonials. Pamphlet & Advice free on application to Mr. C. B. Harness, Consulting Electrician, the Medical Battery Co. Ltd.

Only Address, LONDON, W.

52, OXFORD ST., (Corner of Rathbone Place.)

Call to-day, if possible, or write at once

Printed and Published for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-st., London, E.C.; F. W. PARRY (late GUEST & Co.), 29, Paternoster-row.

WEDNESDAY, DEC. 19, 1888 [All rights reserved.

Digitized by Google

DOUBLE NUMBER.]

"HEAVEN'S LIGHT OUR GUIDE."

(Motto of Her Majesty's Most Exalted Order of the Star of India.)

"And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a LION among the beasts of the Forest, as a YOUNG LION among the flocks of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces and none can deliver."—MICAH v. 8

"His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the HORNS OF UNICORNS: with them he shall push the people together to the ENDS of the EARTH."—DEUT. xxxiii. 17

THE BANNER OF ISRAEL.

"Thou hast given a BANNER to them that fear Thee, that it may be DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH. Selah."—Psa. lx. 4.

VOL. XII., No. 626. Entered at Stationers' Hall.] WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 26, 1888. [DOUBLE NUMBER, TWOPENCE.

EDITED BY PHILO-ISRAEL.

Contents.

	PAGE
The Beginning of the End	509
Hosea I. and II. By W. H. Larkins, Lieutenant-Colonel.—Part II.	510
Mr. J. T. Crosthwait and the Rev. John Wilkinson	511
Enquiries on an Important Subject. By the Rev. Ralph J. Lyon, M.A.	513
The Siege of Suakin	514
"My People Doth Not Consider"	514
And So It Came to Pass That there Were no English Swords in the Hands of Israel	515
Further Expansion	516
An All But Peaceful India	517
The Metropolitan Anglo-Israel Association	517
A Warning. By E. Reep	518
Rarotonga in the South Pacific as a Gate	518

THE BEGINNING OF THE END.

IT appears but a short time since we commenced the twelfth volume of the BANNER OF ISRAEL. To-day we have to record the conclusion of our labours, and to render to our readers a short account, by way of a summary of the events which have marked the progress of a not very eventful twelvemonth. We began the year in suspense as to the possibilities of war or peace; and to-day we have still to say, that though for the moment there are no burning questions agitating the nations, there are many grounds for grave alarm, because the continental States are still armed from head to foot, and there seems no cessation to the preparations for the war which all men there seem to believe to be imminent, but no one can tell in what quarter it will burst forth. During the year both the Emperor William of Germany, and his son and successor, Frederick, died, the latter on June 15, the former on March 9, three months and six days before his son, leaving what was thought to be a heritage of war to the present Kaiser. Preparations for it are doubtless being made in many quarters, and the German Emperor's recent visits to Vienna and Rome had a decided reference to the triple alliance which is so significant a sign of the times. "The great and heavy clouds charged with the electricity of war" are no doubt in a measure clearer and lighter than they were when Lord Salisbury uttered these words at Derby, on the 19th of December, 1887, but the slightest accident may ignite the powder magazine which is ready prepared for the terrible explosion. A feature of the year has been the gradual expansion of the Empire, which grows in spite of the wishes of its people and of its Government.

In January we noticed the grant by the Sultan of Zanzibar, of a territory 50,000 square miles in extent, to the British East African Association, the concession being for fifty years and including a rich and valuable territory, stretching from the neighbourhood of Mombassa, a Gate, to the equatorial lakes; embracing also the uplands of the regions near mount Kenia, with that splendid mountain thrown in. During the month of May three small islands in the South Pacific were annexed as coaling stations, followed by the declaration of Lord Salisbury, addressed to the Boer Government of the Transvaal, that the territory south of the Zambesi was henceforth included within the sphere of British influence—proclaiming thus a new protectorate in one of the most important regions of South Africa. More recently still we have learnt of the protectorate declared by Her Majesty's Government over the Hervey group of islands in the South Pacific, including Rarotonga, an event which must lead ere long to the annexation of other islands in the neighbourhood of those strategic places.

The chastisement dealt out to the wild tribes of the Black Mountain region in Afghan territory and to the Tibetans in the Sikkim Passes must lead to the enlargement of the Empire in those two directions. In Upper Burmah the work of pacification has by God's blessing on our arms gone on apace, and we hope to find, in 1889, that Dacoity will be put down, and railways and telegraphs spread over the land will lead the people to understand that peace has its blessings; wealth and commerce yielding greater riches in the long run than robbery murder, and arson.

During 1888 the knowledge of Our Identity has made good progress. The Metropolitan Association has been active, and its secretary's efforts have been very praiseworthy. It has received however an insufficient share of the pecuniary support of its friends, and is cramped for funds.

The British-Israel Conference Association has held three meetings, one at Wolverhampton in March; the second at Manchester in October, the last lately in Bath. They were all very successful, and elicited a considerable amount of attention at these three centres.

The literature of the subject has been enriched by various works, one of the most meritorious being by our active and able friend, Surgeon-General J. M. Grant, whose "Origin, Progress and Establishment of the Kingdom of God in the World," has been favourably reviewed in these pages, and has attracted attention in several directions. A good novel by P. Pullen Burry, entitled "Nobly Won," has skilfully worked out the Tea Tephi legend into a capital Identity tale, and contrived to bring it into the compass of a two-volumed work, which teaches our subject as founded on the Scriptures in a masterly way.

Digitized by Google

During the year one of our most stedfast and hardworking colleagues passed away after a life of much suffering. Charles Horner will long be mourned by those who best knew him, and his loss will be deeply felt by the Free Distribution Fund, to which he gave efficient help during several years.

The progress of our own Journal during 1888 has been satisfactory. The paper seems to hold its own, and to be acceptable not only in the land of its birth, but in all portions of the Empire of Israel where it travels. There are few spots now whither it does not penetrate, and obtain at least a casual perusal. It goes in the regular course of trade pretty nearly to all the outlying portions of the great Empire of the Queen, and is a favourite it seems both with soldiers and sailors of Her Majesty's Army and Navy respectively. We are glad to know that this is the case, and desire to return all the thanks and praise for the result to God, whose truth we strive to make known to our fellow countrymen throughout the world.

To our many friends who have aided us in filling the pages of this Journal during the year we tender our best and most sincere thanks. They have contributed to enrich the BANNER, and to lighten the sometimes heavy load of its Editor. To Mr. John T. Gott our readers' and our own thanks are again especially due for the accurate and excellent Index which as heretofore he has compiled for our use. It has cost him infinite toil, and we owe him grateful thanks.

It remains, in taking leave of our readers for the period now hastening to its close, that we should wish them, every one, all the blessings of the season, with a happy, prosperous new year to come. Those national blessings which we have all longed and prayed for, that they might be granted from on High to our people, have not yet been fully conferred upon us. We must not cease from besieging the Throne of Grace that they may be given. The promise of the new covenant which will regenerate our whole race is ours, and must in God's own time be made good to us, as He is true. Let us then give Him no rest until this bright covenanted blessing be fulfilled, and our entire people, "from the least of them to the greatest of them, know the Lord" as their own God and Father in Christ. To Him then shall be all the praise!

HOSEA I. AND II.

By W. H. LARKINS, LIEUTENANT-COLONEL.

(Concluded from page 502).

"She is not my wife, neither am I her husband" (chap. ii. 2); "Lo-Ammi, ye are not my people and I will not be your God" (chap. i. 9).

PART II.

IN chapter ii. we have again set before us the Apostacy of the House of Israel under the figure of a faithless wife divorced by her husband as "not my wife," and it will be my object on the present occasion to ascertain, if possible, what is the right construction to be put upon these words or on the parallel passage, Lo-Ammi not My people, in ch. i. 9. Do they constitute an absolute divorce or uncovenanting, and if so, from both or from which of the two covenants?

There are some who maintain that they mean an absolute divorce or uncovenanting from both the Abrahamic and Mosaic covenants, and on one occasion I actually heard this doctrine preached from the pulpit. But as regards the former which was unconditional, everlasting and immutable; being confirmed by an oath, it would be inconsistent with the nature of such a covenant to believe that any portion of the promised seed could be uncovenanted or cut off as heirs to the promises made under that covenant; or that a people uncovenanted could at the same time, during their Lo-Ammi condition, be fulfilling any part of the covenant blessings promised to the seed of Abraham; and yet we find that the House of Israel would be doing this and fulfilling the multitudinous seed promised to Abraham and his after-seed (chap. i. 10). Moreover, in view of such a construction, there must of necessity be a failure of the prophecy contained in chap. i. 11, and consequently such a construction must be set aside as untenable and inapplicable so far as the Abrahamic covenant is concerned.

The Mosaic covenant, unlike the other, was conditional, blessings being promised for obedience and curses for disobedience. The Ten Tribes broke this covenant and came under its curse. Neither was it of a permanent character, for it was added "because of transgressions till the seed should come to whom the promise was made" (Gal. iii. 19). Backsliding Israel for breaking the Mosaic covenant was given a bill of divorce; but what was the nature of that divorce? It certainly was not an absolute one, for the same prophet Jeremiah who refers to this divorce a few verses further on when calling upon these backsliding children to return, he says, for I am married to you (Jer. iii. 8, 14). Again, the prophet Isaiah referring to God's separation from His people, says, "Thy Maker is thy Husband." "In a little wrath I hid My face from thee for a moment, but with everlasting kindness will I have mercy upon thee" (Isa. liv. 5—9). These passages of Scripture do not support the idea of the existence of any absolute divorce, but merely that of a judicial separation, during which the conjugal rights were suspended, but which could be renewed at any time with the consent of the contracting parties; and the career of the faithless wife fully corroborates this view of the construction to be put upon the words, "she is not My wife."

But mark the concern evinced by the husband; the means taken by him and the measures adopted to cut off all intercourse between this faithless woman and her lovers (chap. ii. 6, 7).

Is this the conduct of a man absolutely divorced from his wife? Surely not, but rather that of one who separated from his wife was desirous of reclaiming her from her infidelity; and may we not take it as a symbol of God's gracious dealings with His covenant people? For the House of Israel although cast out was not cast away (Rom. xi. 2); though sifted among all the nations as corn is sifted in a sieve, yet was not the least grain allowed to fall on the ground, "Such was God's watchful care over His chosen people" (Amos ix. 9). What was the effect produced by the first steps taken by the husband for the reclaiming his wife? It produced a desire to return to her husband, "for then it was better with me than now" (chap. ii. 7). But he did not stop short here in his endeavours to reclaim his wife; he allures her and brings her into a solitary place and speaks words of comfort to her there, in her solitude far removed from all the allurements of the world around, and from the temptations to which she had been exposed; and "in their affliction they will seek Me early" (Hos. v. 15), and will say, "Come, let us return unto the Lord, for He hath smitten and He will bind us up" (chap. vi. 1). Affliction is often the means by which God draws us closer to Himself, diverting our thoughts into new channels, and thus, reclaiming us from sin, and hence it was that affliction was made a door of hope for the faithless wife by which she was rescued from her sinful life, induced to return to her Husband, and once more she sings as in the days of her youth (chap. ii. 14, 15), "and at that day thou shalt call Me Ishi, my Husband, and I will betroth thee for ever in righteousness and even in faithfulness, and thou shalt know the Lord" (chap. ii. 19, 20); as with individuals so with nations, for the land of Palestine was not a place of rest for the worshippers of Baal; and the House of Israel was removed from the land and went into captivity as a punishment for their apostacy, but even in this can be seen a mark of God's gracious dealing with His people, for the prophet adds, "because it was polluted and will destroy you even with a sore destruction" (Micah ii. 10). So that their removal from the land into the wilderness of the nations not only saved them from destruction, but it was there and not in Palestine that Israel would find grace; it was there that the Lord would plead with them face to face (Jer. xxxi. 2; Ezek. xx. 35). The House of Israel also had to pass through the Valley of Achor, or Affliction, for nearly eight centuries before they obtained mercy and redemption from their transgressions, and restoration to God's favour as His people (chap. ii. 23.)

Digitized by Google

What follows in verses 19 to 21 as to the betrothal of the wife for ever in righteousness and even in faithfulness clearly refers to a Christian dispensation, and the consequent strengthening of the marriage contract as compared with that existing under the Mosaic Law—under the latter the bond of union between man and wife was open to dissolution at the will of man by a bill of divorce, but Our Lord utterly condemned this law, and told the Pharisees, "What God hath joined together let not man put asunder." So that the betrothal of a wife to her husband for ever in righteousness and even in faithfulness, cannot be viewed in any other light than that of an indissoluble and everlasting contract: and such was the covenant God made with Abraham, and so it would be inconsistent with that covenant to suppose that any portion of the seed of Abraham could be uncovenanted, or cut off as heirs to the promises.

Bromley, November, 1888.

MR. J. T. CROSTHWAIT AND THE REV. JOHN WILKINSON.

To the Rev. John Wilkinson, Mildmay, London.

DEAR SIR,—I beg to thank you for your pamphlet, "The Ten Tribes; Where They Are Not? and Where Are They"? I presume you sent it in reply to the leaflet I sent you a few days ago, "The Jews! Who are the Jews?" I shall therefore make some observations for your consideration, which prove that not only have you failed to make any critical reply, but that such as you have made, is based on parts of prophecies, while you carefully leave out of consideration what I have based my leaflet on; and what, regarding the Bible as a whole, shows that you have missed the plan of God's salvation of the world by means of His ministers, chosen before the world began, even Israel, who were commissioned to bear the knowledge of the salvation through Christ to all the nations of the world,—for it is clear that the Jews are not making Christ known, hence the other House of Israel must be doing the work, as God is true.

1. "Lo, the people shall dwell alone, and shall not be reckoned among the nations" (Num. xxiii. 9). This was said of the Twelve Tribes, and you say it is true to-day of the Jewish people. In what way do they dwell alone? You do not say; but the facts about which we can agree, are, that they are scattered all over the world, and are alone in their customs and manners. But the Anglo-Saxons are also scattered all over the world, besides holding great territory, mostly away from contact with other nations, North America, the Australasian Islands, and British Isles, &c. Now if you argue that the Jews dwell alone when scattered all over the world, you must admit that the Anglo-Saxons also live alone! And in our customs and manners, we are very much alone, to wit, our laws are based on the ten commandments; hence our law acknowledges the sanctity of the Lord's-day, and we lend to all nations while borrowing from none, a peculiar Israelitish feature.*

Now the second clause, "They shall not be reckoned among the nations." Whatever meaning you may attach to these words, and you must remember that as the Jews of the present day do not reckon themselves among the nations, so Israel of old, so long as she knew herself to be Israel, did not reckon herself among the nations, yet she was a great nation; moreover, Jer. xxxi. 36, declares that Israel, the Ten-Tribed House, would be always a nation before God for ever! It cannot be or mean that Israel would not be a nation now in the latter days: for it is written in the prophet Micah, "In the last days, saith the Lord . . . . I will make her that was cast far off a strong nation!" Are you prepared to deny that this is spoken of the cast-off House of Israel? You will hardly venture so far! So on both accounts your first proposition not only fails, but denies other scripture prophecies.

2. "For the children of Israel shall abide many days without a king and without a prince . . . Afterward shall the children of Israel return, and seek the Lord their God, and David their king; and shall fear the Lord and His goodness in the latter days" (Hosea iii. 4, 5).

Now, sir, you admit that the term "Children of Israel" is applied to the Ten-Tribed House of Israel (p. 4); and that this same Ten-Tribed House of Israel was carried captive by the king of Assyria in 721, B.C. (p. 11); in fact they had no king from this time forward up to the time of the Apostles Peter and James, who address their epistles to them scattered throughout various countries; surely some 750 years would constitute "many days." But the prophet continues, "Afterward shall the children of Israel return and seek the Lord their God in the latter days," and may I ask why you should read this as though it said they were to return to Palestine? (p. 5). Israel was to return, evidently from idolatry, and seek the Lord their God; and if you refer to the 1st chapter you will find this stated, "In the place where it was said unto them, Ye are not My people," this could not be said unto them in Palestine! there, that is in their outcast condition and place, it shall be said unto them, "Ye are the sons of the living God." Now, sir, in the face of this prophecy, how can you state that "Israel is to remain without a true knowledge of God; and they are to seek the Lord their God on their return to Palestine"? For the prophet continues: "Then shall the children of Judah and the children of Israel be gathered together, and appoint themselves one head and come up out of the land," i.e., return to Palestine, as in Jer. iii. 18. Hence the return from idolatry, and their becoming sons of the living God, i.e. Christians, is before the union of the two houses or kingdoms, and before the Return to Palestine. I can hardly persuade myself that you are ignorant of these prophecies!

So you have now proof that the House of Israel did abide many days without a king or prince, afterwards they were to return to seek the Lord, and David their king. What further do you want? The Anglo-Saxons are Christians, and they have kings and princes; and when one reads that the kingship over Israel was given to David and his sons for ever, is it anything marvellous that God should perform His promises? So your second point also fails and denies Scripture!

3. You refer me to Deut. iv. 26, 27; xxviii. 62—66, and infer from them, that as long as the Twelve Tribes are out of Palestine they are under a national curse (p. 6), and while admitting that the Twelve Tribes were divided into two kingdoms, you presume, in the face of Hosea i. 10, that both houses are under a curse and are few in number. Now Hosea declares of the Ten-Tribed kingdom, the "children of Israel," in contradistinction to the "children of Judah," were to be in number as the sand of the sea, which cannot be measured nor numbered. Here again you contradict Scripture flatly! Now, sir, this is not all, but in the two chapters you refer me to, you keep back the blessing promised on repentance: why do you not refer to Deut. iv. 29, 30, 31? where it is declared, "If from thence thou shalt seek the Lord thy God in the latter days [hence pre-millennial] He will not destroy thee nor forget the covenant of thy fathers which He sware unto them." What did He sware? "I will make of thee [Abraham] a great nation" (Gen. xii. 2). Now, Mr. Wilkinson, I don't know what you call this; it looks to me very like taking away from the words of prophecy (see p. 24). In chap. xxviii. you have done the same; why do you not refer to the verses 1—14? where twice (verse 4, 11) the fruit of their body is blessed! Are you ignorant of these verses of prophecy which refute your statements?

4. You say "Circumcision was the initiatory rite into the

* Moses, in Deut. xxxiii. 28, gives a more definite meaning of Israel's dwelling alone, "Israel then shall dwell in safety alone." See also 2 Sam. vii. 10, 11. This is true of the Anglo-Saxons!

Digitized by Google

privileges of the national covenant, and is so still. The Anglo-Saxons, being an uncircumcised people, are excluded from all the privileges of the national covenant" (p. 7). Now, sir, you know that the division of the Twelve Tribes into two houses was arranged by God, and the house of Israel was cast off, divorced from the covenants of the law, as you will read in Ezek. xxiii.; Jer. iii. 8; Hosea. ii.; and therefore uncircumcised! But Christ came to redeem those that were (not are) under the law, that they might receive the adoption of sons (Gal. iv. 5, see also Hosea i. 10), and Paul in Rom. iv. treats of the very point you raise, and says, "Cometh this blessedness then upon the circumcision only, or upon the uncircumcision also? How was it then reckoned, not in circumcision, but in uncircumcision, that He might be the Father of all them that believe, though they be not circumcised." So the Ten Tribes whom Christ redeemed ought to be now in the last days uncircumcised just as we Anglo-Saxons are. So on this 4th head you are also wrong, from, I suppose, ignorance of Christ's mission to the House of Israel, and Paul's explicit statement on the subject.

5. You say: "All Anglo-Saxons (even if Israelites) are either believers or unbelievers: if believers in Christ, they are detached from the national Israel, and consequently from the future temporal interests and destiny of the nation. Indeed, they form part of an entirely new body, the church, the body of Christ, which will be with her Lord before the national Israel have full and peaceable possession of their earthly inheritance. All believers in Christ, Jews and Gentiles, secure this higher calling of the church, a heavenly calling, and will be married to the Lamb before Israel's national conversion and mission to all nations." I have quoted this in full; may I ask where you find such unscriptural statements? Do you not know that the church of God is the church of Israel? formed into a congregation at Mount Sinai (see Acts vii. 38), established in Jerusalem, continued but re-formed by Christ into the so-called Christian Church? And when the Redeemer was foretold (see Isa. lix. 26, quoted by Paul as fulfilled in Rom. xi. 26; Gal. iv. 5.), what does Isaiah add (ver. 21): "As for Me, this is My covenant with them, saith the Lord: My spirit that is upon thee, and My words which I have put in thy mouth, shall not depart out of thy mouth, nor out of the mouth of thy seed, nor out of the mouth of thy seed's seed, saith the Lord, from henceforth and for ever." Now, sir, where is God's church outside and apart from national Israel. Can you deny this prophecy concerning Jacob's descendants, or were you ignorant of it?

[Leaflet referred to].

THE CHURCH OF GOD IS THE CHURCH OF ISRAEL, THE BRIDE, THE LAMB'S WIFE.

Proof:—

Christ is the head of the Church, which is compared to a Wife. Eph. v. 23.

The Bride is the Lamb's Wife. Rev. xxi. 9.

It follows that the Church is the Bride; but the residence of the Bride is The Holy City, New Jerusalem, on whose Twelve Gates are written the names of The Twelve Tribes of the Children of ISRAEL; hence the inhabitants must be Israelites, and therefore the Church of GOD, the Bride, is ISRAELITISH!

Again:—

The Church of GOD, is the Church of the First-born. Heb. xii. 23.

The Firstborn is Israel, "Israel is My Son, My First-born." Ex. iv. 22.

"I am a Father to Israel, and Ephraim is My First-born." Jer. xxxi. 9.

Therefore the Church of God is the Church of ISRAEL!

And this agrees with the Prophets:—

Isaiah liv. 5.

Thy Maker is thine Husband: the Lord of hosts is His name; and thy Redeemer the Holy One of Israel.

Jer. iii. 12, 14.

Return, thou backsliding Israel, saith the LORD; . . . . for I am married unto you.

Hosea ii. 16, 19.

Thou [Israel] shalt call Me Ishi, i.e. My Husband; . . . . and I will betroth thee unto Me for ever.

Therefore the CHURCH of God is the CHURCH of ISRAEL; For the LORD hath chosen JACOB unto Himself, and ISRAEL for His Peculiar Treasure. Ps. cxxxv. 5.

I am the LORD, I change not; therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed. Mal. iii. 6.

"O slow of heart to believe ALL that the Prophets have spoken!"

Again, as you saw in my second leaflet, "The Church is the Bride, and the Bride is Israel" yet again, the church of God is the church of the firstborn; but the first-born is Israel! therefore the Church of God is the Church of Israel, and to this agree the prophets Isaiah, Jeremiah, and Hosea. Are you prepared to deny all these in order to overthrow Anglo-Israelism? I repeat a summary of the five points:—

1. The Anglo-Saxons do live safely alone, and are alone in their customs and laws and Sabbath-keeping. But if they lived alone in the sense of being shut up in a walled town or island, they could not carry out their high destiny of being God's witnesses (Isa. xliii. 10), nor be in the midst of many people as a dew from the Lord (Micah v. 7). "Not reckoned among the nations," cannot mean not a nation at all, for the prophet Micah states they are to be a strong nation in the last days, which the Anglo-Saxons are now, being some 100,000,000 strong. Why do you take no account of these prophecies?

2. The children of Israel did abide many days without a prince, etc., so did the Anglo-Saxons; the children of Israel were to turn to the Lord, the Anglo-Saxons have turned to the Lord.

3. The Twelve Tribes, out of Palestine, were few in number before Christ redeemed the House of Israel. But you have kept back the verses following those you quote, which declare that if they should seek the Lord their God in the latter days, He would perform the covenant which He sware unto their fathers, and the first promise to Abraham was, "I will make of thee a great nation." Truly, we Anglo-Saxons "are enjoying national blessings, and are not few in number" (p. 3).

4. The House of Israel was divorced from the Law, and therefore uncircumcised; but they were redeemed by Christ, and Paul expressly states that the blessing of Abraham was to be fulfilled in uncircumcision. "The Anglo-Saxons are uncircumcised" (p. 8).

5. The Church of God is the Church of Israel, as proved in my leaflet, see extracts above.

So far your pamphlet fails utterly, and what semblance of truth it may have, is entirely due to your withholding, not only other parts of Scripture but parts of the same prophecies you refer to. A very grave charge, but true! In the second part (p. 9), you proceed to shew where the Ten Tribes are; and you answer, "The Nestorians in the mountains of Kurdistan, and by the Lake Ooroomiah, in Persia" (p. 16). How simple! How wonderful! Yet how strangely different from the prophecies! The seed of Jacob was to spread abroad to the West, and to the East, to the North and to the South (Gen. xxviii. 14) and to be as the dust of the earth for multitude.

The children of Israel (or Ten Tribes of this prophecy) were to be as the sand of the sea, which cannot be measured nor numbered (Hosea i. 10). An exceeding great army (Ezek. xxxvii. 10). Dwelling in the Isles afar off from Palestine, and spreading from thence to the desolate places of the earth (Isa. xlix. 1, 3). A nation and a company of nations (Gen. xxxv. 11). A strong nation (Micah iv. 7).

Yet they are "the Nestorians in the mountains of Kurdistan, and by lake Ooroomiah, in Persia!" against the clearest testimony of Scripture. If I mistake not, sir, you have been answered before, and you were unable to reply in return; this being so, you have not acted uprightly in sending me your pamphlet in reply to my leaflet. Can you even now make any excuse for keeping back prophecies which contradict your statements? I am Sir, yours faithfully, JOHN T. CROSTHWAIT.

5 Manders Terrace, Ranelagh Road, Dublin, October, 1888.

Digitized by Google

ENQUIRIES ON AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT.

By the Rev. Ralph J. Lyon, M.A.,
Rector of Wickwar, Gloucestershire.

I ASSUME that, as Christians, we believe:—

I. That the Bible is the Word of the living God, and in all its parts and in every particular "is the truth."

II. That the purposes of God are unchanging, and His promises, whether to nations or individuals, are to be literally fulfilled in His own time; moreover, that the lapse of ages and delay in the fulfilment of those promises, however long, do not in the least degree invalidate them, nor affect the certainty of their complete accomplishment in due season.

III. That, though many parts of prophetic Scripture and promises contained in them are capable of a spiritual interpretation and application to the Church of Christ, and to the case of individual believers now, this does not in any way interfere with their primary literal meaning or application to the literal people of Israel.

IV. That it pleases God, by the progress of events in the world under His providential guidance, to throw increasing light on His prophetic Word, and to supply the key to much that has been locked up in obscurity; that it behoves us therefore at all times to study that Word with an unprejudiced mind, in the spirit of earnest prayer, for the teaching of the Holy Spirit; that while kept from "all erroneous and strange doctrines" our eyes may be opened to clearer views of what is God's truth, and in accordance with His Divine purpose and grace.

This being so, the following enquiries seem to demand our most serious and prayerful consideration in the present day:—

I. We know that God gave three great and unconditional promises to the patriarch Abraham (not in circumcision, but in uncircumcision), referring to (1st) the land of Canaan; (2nd) the Messiah, and (3rd) to the multitudinous seed (Gen. xvii. 4—6), the last of these being renewed to Isaac (Gen. xxvi. 4) and to Jacob (Gen. xxviii. 14). Why should we not expect this third promise to be literally fulfilled as well as the other two? If so, where are the promised seed?

II. We have in Gen. xlviii. 19, the patriarch Jacob's remarkable prediction of Joseph's son Ephraim, that "his seed should become a multitude or fulness of 'Goyim,' i.e., non-Israelite nations." At this advanced age of the world, why should we not expect to see the fulfilment of this prediction, and the appearance of Ephraim's multitudinous seed, not amongst Jewish, but among apparently Gentile nations?

III. In Gen. xlix. 22—26, we have another remarkable prediction of Jacob, that "in the last days" (allowed to be the prophetic expression for our own times) the richest conceivable blessings of all kinds should be poured out upon the seed of Joseph, who have apparently vanished altogether from the earth; a prediction of blessing, moreover, confirmed and amplified by Moses at his parting benediction of the Tribes of Israel (Deut. xxxiii. 13—17). Why in these "last days" is no such wealth of blessing to be traced as resting on any acknowledged Israelitish people? Does not this unquestionable fact suggest the idea that we may be looking in altogether a wrong direction for the seed of Joseph, and that they are really to be found in an entirely unexpected quarter of the world?

IV. In 1 Kings xii. we have recorded the separation of the kingdoms of Israel and Judah, "which thing was of God," and in 2 Kings xvii. we read of the carrying away of the Ten Tribes of Israel into captivity into Assyria, from which as a body they never returned. Why should writers and speakers of the present day persist in referring to the Jews as if that dispersed family included the whole of the Tribes of Israel; losing sight entirely of the distinction between predictions and promises referring to Ephraim and Judah respectively, and entirely robbing the expression, "the whole House of Israel," of its force and meaning?

V. In the prophecy of Hosea we find express predictions that the people of Israel, "Ephraim," should lose their distinctive privileges and be cast off by God as no longer "His people," the names Lo-Ruhama, Lo-Ammi, typifying their degraded, outcast condition; while at the same time a distinct promise is added of future restoration to God's favour and their lost privileges (Hos. i. 10, 11.)

Why is this truth persistently lost sight of and ignored by many expositors of the Holy Scripture?

VI. In various passages of prophetic Scripture, as Jer. xxxi. 35—37, xxxiii. 19—26, Amos ix. 9, the permanent preservation of Israel, as a nation, is declared in the strongest terms and by the most striking illustrations; and in other passages, as Jer. iii. 18, xxxii. 37—44, Ezek. xxxvii. 21, the re-union of the two families or kingdoms of Israel and Judah, and their restoration to their own land, are no less distinctly predicted. Why should these promises be put aside and direct predictions of national restoration be applied only to the spiritual kingdom of Christ?

VII. After what period in Scriptural history are we warranted in asserting that apparent promises to Israel as a people have no literal signification, and that their fulfilment is only to be expected in a spiritual sense?

VIII. In Nebuchadnezzar's vision in Dan. ii. what warrant have we for applying the inspired interpretation (ver. 38—43) to the well-known four earthly empires and sub-divisions of the last—the Roman empire—and then explaining the prediction that follows (ver. 45,) as referring solely to an entirely spiritual kingdom, thus destroying all prophetic analogy, and at the same time ignoring the actual fact of the present existence of a fifth earthly empire, five times vaster than that of Babylon, four times than that of Rome, which, by its very existence apparently contradicts such an explanation as the above, and falsifies the prediction of the vision when so interpreted?

IX. What answer, so effective, have we to give to the infidel objection, that God has failed to fulfil His promises to Israel, as when we shew that He is even now fulfilling those promises? that in these "last days" there exists a nation, gathered and consolidated from apparently Gentile sources, but enjoying Israel's covenant blessings; a nation which possesses, reveals, translates, and circulates the Word of God, maintains and honours the Sabbath-day, and enjoys God's favour and protecting, enriching blessing at home and abroad; vast in her rapidly increasing population, in her maritime power and commercial influence; rich in her widely extending colonial dependencies, using moreover her ever-growing influence for the spread of the Gospel and the extension of the kingdom of Christ in the world, for the conversion of the Jews and for the evangelization of the heathen nations?

X. Is it possible to deny that in our own beloved British nation and empire, we find these distinguishing marks of a people, to whom "God is" especially "nigh," whose "land" "He" specially "careth for"? And seeing that apart from Our Identity with Ephraim, in spite of our occupying the position among the nations that we do, and the relation to the Church of Christ as a missionary nation that we are permitted to enjoy, there is absolutely no allusion to our nation in the prophetic Scriptures, is it possible to withhold our belief from the truth that we are the representatives of him of whom God said (Jer. xxxi. 9), "I am a Father to Israel, and Ephraim is My first-born"? and that in all humility and thankfulness, as Christian Israel, it is our particular privilege to say, "This God is our God for ever and ever" (Ps. xlviii. 14). "The Lord hath been mindful of us; He will bless us; He will bless the House of Israel; He will bless the House of Aaron. The dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence. But we will bless the Lord from this time forth and for evermore. Praise the Lord" (Psa. cxv.)

XI. Lastly, why should so many good, earnest, and learned men treat this whole subject with ridicule, as unworthy of serious study, and as if the difficulties in the way of the acceptance of the truth of our Ephraimite origin were insuperable, even in spite of the strong and varied evidence of Holy Scripture in its favour? "Why should it be thought incredible that God should raise a dead" nation any more than a dead individual? And when He has predicted that Ephraim should be cast aside and lost, and his seed found in an unexpected Gentile quarter, and restored to their lost privileges, why should attention be refused to those facts of the 19th century, which confirm the truth, and testify to the fulfilment of this prediction?

Digitized by Google

Surely these enquiries are not to be lightly put aside as unworthy the consideration of thoughtful Christians, and the grave responsibility of rejecting the teaching of Providence in historical events, in conjunction with that of Holy Scripture, is not to be lightly incurred.

THE SIEGE OF SUAKIN.

THE condition of Suakin has become a ludicrous impasse. We are not nationally the protectors of Egypt and its possessions, and therefore do not undertake to be responsible for the safety of Suakin, which belongs to the Egyptian Government. In spite of that theory, however, we cannot afford to allow the Soudanese dervishes to take Suakin; and, therefore, we keep up the pretence by denuding the town of all British troops in the first place, but retain in the harbour a few gunboats, which really prevent the Arabs storming the place, and clearing out the Egyptian troops. We keep up the pretence that we are not "protectors" of Egypt; but go on all the same, protecting the harbour and town of Suakin; because France would, perchance, feel offended if we were to be bold, and assert our true position. Germany too might, in the event of our claiming our rights, demand some inconvenient equivalent in Central or South Africa, and so raise unpleasant questions.

The siege of Suakin, therefore, drags on. Trade is destroyed of course. The friendly natives, who only want to trade if we would allow them to do so under the British flag, are kept in constant suspense. The rebels are encouraged in their rebellion, and all round there is a huge blunder being committed, simply because our Government has not the nerve to declare that they are in Egypt as the "protectors" of the country, and mean to stay. We suppose matters will so proceed till the outbreak of the great Continental War-woe, when shams will suddenly disappear, and affairs will assume their true shapes and colours. Then French claims to Egypt, impossible of realisation, must forthwith disappear. Then German attempts to establish African and Australasian colonies, and trade, within their allowed limits of national influence (!), will collapse, and it will be found that "all who see" the British "will acknowledge them that they are the seed which the Lord hath blessed" (Isa. lxi. 9, R.V.).

Already the native tribes about Suakin are only watching, it is said, for a sign from us to make the rebel dervishes decamp, and begin the operations of peaceful trade. But they will only do that if the British alone will deal with them. "The English officials," says the Times, "are honest and disinterested; but the natives do not believe in the Egyptian Government, and so no negociations in the name of that Government have any chance of success. They do believe in us, badly as we have behaved, and they want nothing more than that we should secure their outlet, foster their trade, and cry "hands off" to all Egyptian and Turkish officials, whether civil or military. It appears our irresolute Government has decided to send round a British regiment from Cairo to Suakin, in order, directly the dervishes are "cleared out," to send it back from Suakin to Cairo!

They are still trembling at the consequences of their act, if France should frown at their boldness in attempting to assume a Protectorate; and, therefore, they will neither take up the position of the protectors of the port, nor leave it to its fate, with the certainty that Germany or Italy will take our place the day after we turn our backs on that important strategic position. It is a "strategic position," because it is the "natural outlet of the trade of the Northern Soudan, and the natural inlet of civilising influences." To make the position more ridiculous, it appears that the battalion of British troops who are going to Suakin are to be strictly confined to the neighbourhood of the town, and therefore are not to be drawn, we suppose, into any fight against the dervishes' trenches, unless the latter, being victorious over the wretched Egyptian black troops try, and rush the town. It is certain, therefore, the British troops will effect no good at Suakin, since they cannot do so, being too few in number, and hampered by restrictive orders. These orders have reference to the policy of the Government, which was declared by the Leader of the House of Commons, Mr. W. H. Smith, on December 1st, when he said:—"We have been challenged as to the policy of Her Majesty's Government. The policy of the Government with regard to Egypt has been set out clearly in the convention which we endeavoured to arrive at with the Porte, and which means that so soon as adequate security has been provided for peace in Egypt, Her Majesty's Government desire to withdraw altogether from that country. There has been no violation of or departure from that policy of any kind on our part."

Here, then, is the root of the whole difficulty. The Government of Lord Salisbury, like that of Mr. Gladstone, resolves not to yield its will to God's in regard to Egypt. God requires Israel, we believe, to take the country. Our Governments of the two parties absolutely refuse; and their refusal to obey has already cost, and will cost this our unfortunate nation, the lives of thousands of her precious sons, and treasure by millions. In every direction this disobedience leads us to trouble which we cannot escape till we accept our responsibilities, and make Egypt our permanent charge. Then the Soudan will submit; external enemies will subside; and prosperity will be Egypt's reward, according to the prophecies. The debate in the House of Commons has set the Government's hands free by a small majority to help the Egyptians in their difficulty as regards the town of Suakin only. But it remains to be seen whether further trouble will not come of it. We believe it will!

"MY PEOPLE DOTH NOT CONSIDER."

IT was a heavy indictment the Lord brought against Israel His people in Isa. i. 2, 3, R.V. The words there are the words of God Himself! "Hear, O heavens, and give ear, O earth: for the Lord Jehovah hath spoken. I have nourished and brought up children, and they have rebelled against Me. The ox knoweth his owner, and the ass his master's crib: but Israel doth not know, My people doth not consider." Israel was degenerate from the beginning. Moses testified to that fact in Deut. ix. 6—24, R.V., and in Isaiah's time, as the Lord declared above, they were no better. They were found, then, to be incorrigible. The Lord argues that further correction is useless. "Why will ye be still stricken that ye revolt more and more?" or, "why should ye be stricken any more," as the margin has it. All God's sore punishments had been inflicted. Their country was then desolate, overrun by the Assyrians; their cities were burned with fire. Their land, strangers devoured it in their presence, and it was desolate as the overthrow of strangers. The daughter of Zion (the Jews) was left as a booth in a vineyard, as a lodge in a garden of cucumbers, as a besieged city. Except the Lord had left Israel a very small remnant, in the tribe of Benjamin with Judah, they (the Ten Tribes) would have been as Sodom, and they would have been like unto Gomorrah (ver. 7—9.) This Scripture surely testifies the entire captivity of Israel, and their final disappearance from the land. If Benjamin, "a very small remnant," had not been left, the whole of the House of Israel would have disappeared from human ken and human history, which was not the Lord's intention then. The future of the rebellious, sin-stricken, ignorant race is depicted in ver. 16: "Wash you, make you clean, put away the evil of your doings from before Mine eyes, cease to do evil, learn to do well, seek judgment, relieve the oppressed, judge the fatherless, plead for the widow."

Digitized by Google

The House of Israel can only wash, to become clean in God's sight, in the blood of Christ, and this they did at the Reformation, since which all the blessings of Abraham have been theirs. "Israel-obedient" had great and important blessings promised to them conditional on obedience to God's commands (Deut. xxviii. 1—14; xv. 6), and those very blessings the British people have exclusively inherited since the date of the Reformation, thus proving they are Israel-obedient, now found under the British alias. Consequently we find in Isa. i. 19, this conditional promise: "If ye be willing and obedient, ye shall eat the good of the land: but if ye refuse and rebel ye shall be devoured with the sword: for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it." Israel obeyed, and obtained the promised blessings. Judah rebelled and refused, and have been devoured with the sword ever since the crucifixion. The Ten Tribes, evil as they are, and are correctly painted in this prophecy, are to be restored to God's favour through repentance and amendment, which are both also the purchase of the Cross of Calvary. "Though your sins be as scarlet they shall be as white as snow, though they be red like crimson they shall be as white as wool." But how is the change to be effected? The same chapter tells us in ver. 24—31, R.V.: It shall be by the power of the Lord, but not otherwise. "He will destroy His enemies in Israel, and will turn His hand upon her, and thoroughly purge away her dross, and take away all her alloy." Then follows the restoration of Israel's political constitution, and her redemption under the figure of Zion, David's city, the righteousness of Jesus being her garment. Then will appear Israel's national righteousness, when Isa. lxv. 1 shall be fulfilled, and "the mountain of Jehovah's house shall be established in the latter days," or this our Christian dispensation, in the top or head of the mountains (i.e., of the nations), and shall be exalted above the hills (or smaller States), and all nations shall flow into the Israelitish State, the chosen ones of God.

The teaching of the whole of these portions of the two chapters of Isaiah to chap. ii. 4, we take to be the utter depravity of man, and especially of the Ten Tribes; their dependence upon the faithfulness of God for restoration and deliverance; their salvation through the blood of Christ; and the consequent return of the people to national power and prosperity in our latter days, as a redeemed and Christian people, owing all to His blood and justification, who died and rose again for them; making them to become a blossoming and budding people, henceforth "filling the face of the world with fruit" (Isa. xxvii. 6).

On the line of possibilities God is all sufficient for any reasonable purpose or work. On the line of space there is room enough for continued creation, and on the line of time eternity is equal to both. Our faith and our conceptions and our imagination have a fine field for exercise and development in these infinitudes. Three large words, God, space, and eternity, all warrant more than the human mind can take in. These facts should prepare us to receive wonderful things in a divine revelation. All things are great relatively in the divine economy, though small when separate.—Dr. Wild's Sunday Morning Sermons.

ANGLO-ISRAEL FREE DISTRIBUTION FUND (Secretary, Mr. Andrew Sibbald, 3, Townshend-villas, Richmond, Surrey), and the Liverpool British-Israel Identity Association (Secretary, Mr. E. Lyon, 11, Magdala-street, Liverpool), have, through inadvertence, been omitted from the "Anglo-Israel Almanack" for 1889.

AND SO IT CAME TO PASS THAT THERE WERE NO ENGLISH SWORDS FOUND IN THE HANDS OF ISRAEL.

IT seems that our English-made swords were once famous throughout the world. But because they were rather dearer to produce than German manufacturers could supply from Solingen, our army came to be furnished entirely by the German workshops, and the art of making English swords was at last absolutely forgotten at home. It came to pass, therefore, that in the day of battle, no home-made sword was found in the hand of any of the people of these islands, but the swords they used in the cavalry and other branches of the services were made by Germans in Germany because we saved a fraction by the policy which starved our own people to enrich the stranger! The Globe newspaper of Nov. 21, commenting on the facts, was unable to illustrate the matter better than by going to the Bible and quoting from 1 Sam. xiii. 19, et. seq. There it found the fact stated that sword-making was forbidden by the Philistines—the masters of the Israelites, our ancestors, about 3,000 years ago, in the days of Samuel the Prophet, and Saul the King—the policy of the Philistines being to keep the unfortunate Israelites unarmed, or very badly armed, that they might the more easily be kept down by these, their Gentile conquerors. The Globe strangely quotes Scripture thus, declaring that the facts of our own day are only a repetition of what took place during the reign of Israel's first earthly monarch:—

ENGLISH SWORDS.

It is painful to learn from Mr. Stanhope that Englishmen should have forgotten how to make their own swords. One is reminded of those days told of by the Prophet Samuel, when "there was no smith found throughout all the land of Israel: for the Philistines said, Lest the Hebrews make them swords or spears: but all the Israelites went down to the Philistines, to sharpen every man his share, and his coulter, and his axe, and his mattock . . . So it came to pass in the day of battle that there was neither sword nor spear found in the hand of any of the people that were with Saul and Jonathan." In our case, if for "the Philistines" we read the Germans, and for "the land of Israel" the land of Great Britain, the parallel reads rather uncomfortably. Fortunately, however, it does not end there. Although the art of sword-making had been clean forgotten, so that we have had to import Philistines from Solingen to set up forges even in the land of hardware, our smiths have been wise enough to watch their supplanters at work; and so the Philistines are to be sent home again. We trust that we are not going to cut ourselves off from the famous forges of Solingen prematurely. However, there is some satisfaction in our being able to do so at all. That in these days one great empire should have had to depend upon another great empire for one of its most important weapons is not a little disgraceful—not to speak of the neglect of a home industry which implies high wages. It is not for the British smith to let what should be his own earnings go to the irrepressible German. No blame, but the contrary, is to be attached to the War Office for having provided him with efficient teachers; and it now only remains for him to better their instruction.

If the writer in the Globe had only read a little further on in ch. xiv. of 1 Sam. he would have found that badly as the wretched Israelites were armed they inflicted a tremendous defeat upon their Philistine oppressors. How it all came about is told us in detail. But the secret of the victory comes out in vivid colours in v. 23 in these inspired words, "So the Lord saved Israel that day!" The deliverance in war of His unarmed people was from the Lord, and the Philistines' exclusive possession of the art of sword-making, went for very little indeed, when the Lord God of Israel became the overt ally of His people. So it is now. The British people are God's chosen ones and His inheritance. He has allowed them to become dangerously weak in the presence of their enemies. Their ships of war have deteriorated in power, and their numbers have become far too few. They have even forgotten how to make their own cavalry swords! and have gone to the Philistines of Germany to have them made for them at a cost which has impoverished their own people and made the aliens very rich. Such folly would seem to be incredible did we not know the shameful thing to be true! But what is to be the end of this piece of national folly? The enemies of Israel have not risen up and destroyed them! The Lord has ordained peace for the children of Israel until now; and to-day when the Continental nations are about to enter into their times of sorrow and grievous troubles, God has given us the command to fortify our doors and Gates, and generally to look to our means of national defence! The manufacture of "English Swords" is one of those means to the end in view; and, therefore the word has gone forth that Israel must re-learn how to manufacture her swords for herself. She has not gone to Solingen to learn, but she has invited the Solingen workmen to come here and teach her! Our workmen, it is supposed, have mastered the mystery, and the German experts have gone back again home, with one source of gain the less, we hope, to enjoy at the expense of our skilled British workmen. Verily, we are the "blind people" described in Isa. xlii. 16, and xliii. 8, and God is bringing us by a way we know not, and leading us by paths we have not known—rescuing us from the jaws of national destruction and death, and proving to us thereby that He is our God, and we His people Israel. The lamentable folly of neglecting to make our own British swords is being remedied! New ships, stronger and more powerful than any we have, are to be built as soon as the Estimates are ready. Men for the ranks, necessary for the home army, are being drawn from the population at a time when the service is being made more popular. "The Gates" at home and abroad are being closed by sufficient fortifications, and the necessary preparations are being made for the time when, following the analogy of Noah's concealment in the Ark, the Lord will "shut" us into the Empire, and suffer none to do us harm! We look on these signs of our God's protecting care of His people as calls for our thankfulness and praise; since there is no doubt of our nation's unworthiness of the least of all the mercies our God is showing to us; and none that, because of His oath and promises to our forefathers, He is "keeping us as the apple of his eye." Israel, praise ye the Lord!

Digitized by Google

FURTHER EXPANSION.

A NEW British Protectorate has been organized, and the patent under which it will exist from this time forth, is contained in the London Gazette of Oct. 30, in the following official language:—

Downing Street, Oct. 27.

The Queen has been pleased to direct Letters Patent to be passed under the Great Seal of the United Kingdom, erecting certain British Territory in New Guinea and the adjacent Islands into a separate Possession and Government by the name of British New Guinea.

Her Majesty has also been pleased to appoint William Macgregor, Esq., M.D., C.M.G., to be Administrator of the Possession of British New Guinea.

How these things are brought about is stated in the Times of 31st Oct., regarding

BRITISH PROTECTORATE IN BORNEO.

We are able to state that an agreement between Her Majesty's Government, the British North Borneo Company, the Rajah of Sarawak, and the Sultan of Brunei, embodying the principle of a British Protectorate for the territories of the three last-named has been now signed by all three. The signature of the Sultan of Brunei has been added only quite recently, as a result of a mission by Sir Hugh Low to Brunei.

We see then the Empire is growing, and that States in Borneo, already British in character, are not more anxious for the protection of the distant flag than the native State of the Sultan of Brunei. British Government and protection is welcomed everywhere. In the Continent of India, in Burmah, in the Islands of the Pacific, in South, Central, and East as well as in West Africa, in Egypt, in North America, in Asia Minor, in New Guinea, and in Arabia, the righteous but firm rule of the British people is welcomed and admitted. The reason for the fact is not difficult to guess. The British are Israel, and to that race God made this glorious promise in Isa. lxi. 9, R.V.: "Their seed shall be known among the nations, and their offspring among the peoples. All that see them shall acknowledge them that they are the seed which the Lord hath blessed." The British being Israel have this peculiarity which the world is not slow to observe. Their operations and government have the Lord's benediction, and the nations seeing that, covet for themselves what they find other races are enjoying. Thus the report of British good government in India, whereby 300 millions of natives of all kinds and conditions of men, differing in language, religion, laws, manners, and customs from each other, see in the British laws and methods of Government, something that all may enjoy, under which all may prosper. Consequently the British Empire enlarges by leaps and bounds, and no one stops to consider the cause of the marvel, or why it should have continued to the present time. Our Identity explains it all! The leading, guiding hand of God is bringing it all about according to His will, and gives a majesty and importance to the subject which nothing else can. His word declares that "the kingdom of the world shall become the kingdom of our Lord and of His Christ," and accordingly we find that land after land, province after province, and island after island, are transferred to "the people of the saints of the Most High, even to the children of Israel," the British, as promised. This proves then that expansion will of necessity continue till the whole earth will be included in the Kingdom of God, and the subjects of that kingdom being the House of Israel as its leading members, it follows that the British Empire (which is Israel's) will gradually incorporate within its folds the entire planet in preparation for their coming King. The spirit in which the Empire grows and must be maintained was well shown by Lord Carnarvon in his speech at Newbury on Oct. 30, regarding the Australian colonies. His words apply equally to other parts of the Empire as well as to Australia, and we quote them accordingly in support of our general argument. He said:—

He himself held in the very fullest sense that they were all members of a great Empire, subjects of one Sovereign, and having their interests identically interwoven. Their safety on each side of the water lay in the firm union of the two countries. The relation of those great colonies to us should be the relation of happy, prosperous children growing up to full stature and the strength of manhood under the guidance of wise parents, who, as years rolled on, knew how prudently and generously to concede to them the freedom that was necessary. There were duties to be discharged on each side. Each would have to give and each would have to forbear, and both parties must recognize that their highest interests were involved in the maintenance of the family bond that bound each together. He hoped we might be equal to the great mission assigned to us and discharge its duties in no self-seeking, but in a generous spirit. (Loud cheers.)

His Lordship, like Lord Rosebery, is heart and soul in the subject of the Federation of the British Empire. No doubt he is an instrument chosen by God to bring about His purposes regarding the "nation" and company of Israelite nations that He promised to Jacob, and we see developing before our eyes to-day. Meanwhile the constant development and expansion of the Empire in unforeseen directions must be a puzzle to our opponents. They observe the phenomena but cannot see whither they point. They groan under the excessive enlargement of territories which they believe must add needlessly to this nation's expenses, responsibilities, and dangers. Consequently they are averse to further additions and annexations to already too vast an empire, totally unaware that this huge

Digitized by Google

Power is of God—His creation, formation, and workmanship—destined to embrace and fill the whole world in preparation for the coming Kingdom of God the Son, Jehovah-Jesus, Israel's King. In spite of their disinclination the Empire grows, and whether it be Lord Salisbury, Mr. Gladstone, or the Earl of Beaconsfield at home, or Lord Dalhousie, Lord Canning, or Lord Dufferin in India, they each do their assigned part by causing the Empire to grow till it promises to fulfil Israel's destiny by occupying the whole earth as the rulers thereof for their Lord Christ! Lord Rosebery's idea of Federation for the Empire aims at the same result as that which the prophecies assign to Israel. He looks for "a federation of peace." For it would be so gigantic, that no nation would dare to attack it, but all would fear to provoke a power for defence which would practically be irresistible.

"AN ALL BUT PEACEFUL INDIA.

THE Marquis of Dufferin and Ava has just left India; and has been succeeded by Lord Lansdowne, the new Viceroy, who has relieved him. The Marquis leaves, what the Times describes as an "all but peaceful India." He has taught the Tibetans a tremendous lesson; which, however, does not even yet appear to be sufficient, since it is reported they mean to try conclusions once more when the winter is over. The Black Mountain Campaign is over, and four of the refractory tribes have submitted after suffering punishment. Roads have been made from our frontiers into the heart of the enemy's country, which will enable Indian troops to enter it easily for the future if needful. The retiring Marquis has placed the North-west frontier of India in a reasonably fair state of defence. An elaborate system of railways and defence works, now nearly completed in that quarter, proves that Lord Dufferin had realised the defenceless condition of India, in case a Russian invasion should be attempted, and that he has made provision for its being foiled should it ever take place. His last act in leaving India was announced just before he embarked.

After long delay and consideration, the Government of India have resolved that, of "the offers of money made long ago by the Nizam and others, they will not avail themselves; but that in recognition of the spirit of loyalty which prompted those gifts, they will ask the chiefs possessing armies to train them, with the aid of British officers and British weapons, for service in company with our troops." Lord Dufferin's great act in ordering the conquest and final annexation of Upper Burmah was probably the most important of his Viceroyalty.

The Queen has promoted him in the peerage, and caused his new title of nobility to testify to the nation's appreciation of his statesmanship in including that enormous territory within the already magnificent Empire of India. This was indeed a giant stride in advance upon the Eastern Empire, but we have not yet seen the newly-acquired province reconciled to its fate! Dacoity has long been rife in the newly-conquered districts, and is not subdued yet. The annexation was a necessity forced upon us, and must be maintained at all hazards.

Such are the salient results of the Marquis' vice-regal rule. Like all his predecessors he has added to the Empire, which ever grows, but never shrinks. Our restless rivals, the Russians, are pushing out feelers in Central Asia, towards Afghanistan and Thibet on the one side, and towards the Corea, North-east of China, on the other, where it is declared from Tientsin that they have by a secret treaty obtained a protectorate, to be used of course against our ally China, and eventually against British power in the East. Port Hamilton, which we surrendered some time ago out of deference to Chinese and Russian susceptibilities, will now, we suppose, revert to the keeping of Israel as "a Gate" the better to hold Russia in check.

Serious times are before us, and as the clouds gather blackness in Europe, towards the east and west as well, we see God is preparing safety for His people, and taking measures to safeguard their possessions abroad. India, we may justly believe, is now secure on its North-west, Eastern, and Northern boundaries. Elsewhere that continent is washed by the sea, where Israel is supreme. Thence no attack can be made by our enemies, until the Gates have changed hands, in defiance of God's promises, and until the supremacy of the sea is no longer ours! That day can never come! because God gave the possession of the Gates to the afterseed of Abraham, for an unconditional inheritance, and that covenant was "for ever" (Luke ii. 55). It knows no abeyance, and therefore the Gates now ours, will be ours "for ever;" and India, now an all but peaceful country, will remain, we believe, in our undisturbed posssession, since God has shown to us the power of His works in giving to us the heritage of the nations (Psa. cxi. 6, R.V.).

Another danger has been menacing India—this time an internal one; arising from a godless system of State education which the Government have insisted on adopting for India by way of neutrality amid conflicting creeds. The consequence has been that the Bible of all books has alone been under ban and banishment throughout India in the State schools, and the native youth of India have left the Government seminaries with every spark of religious belief in their own systems destroyed, with nothing but infidelity and agnosticism to put in its place! But the evil is working out its own remedy. The parents of the rising generation are becoming alarmed and anxious. They see their children growing up without filial reverence, without restraint, because they are growing up without religion at all. They are learning to prefer the risk of the children becoming Christians to the certainty of their growing up without any religion at all. "I would rather see my boy a Christian than an infidel." If this sentiment springs up, and prevails, then we fail to see wherefore we need fear. Public opinion in native circles sees the heathen systems of religion gone beyond recall, and in the absence of any sanction for moral conduct will soon prefer Christian colleges and Christian schools to godless ones, where their sons may learn something of God and His law, and be taught to reverence and respect their parents. This change of feeling may give the Government of India the moral courage to admit that God is the God of education, and of history too; and that we insult and neglect Him and His Book at our proper peril. In mercy He has given us now "an all but peaceful India." We trust that when we nationally honour Him as we ought and must, He will give us not an "almost," but an altogether "peaceful" Heathen Empire, to rule and reclaim for its rightful, lawful, Sovereign, the Lord Jesus Christ, our King,

THE METROPOLITAN ANGLO-ISRAEL ASSOCIATION.

WE beg to call attention to the following resolution of the Council of the Metropolitan Anglo-Israel Association, recently recorded. The Association is anxious to have the debt of £73 now existing paid off, and by contracting their expenses in the matter of rent, &c., to keep within their income for the future. It is hoped that the small sum now asked for may be contributed without delay; and so a liability which is a detriment to the usefulness of the Association be speedily wiped out. The adverse balance has been caused chiefly by the rent of the present offices, which is clearly too high for the income of the Society. Subscriptions should be paid to the Secretary, at 14, King William-street, Charing Cross, W.C. London.

Resolution passed at meeting of the Council of this Association, held at the offices, on Dec. 14th, 1888:—

"Resolved, That to meet the sum of £73, the present liabilities of the Association, the following friends of the cause are willing to contribute two guineas each, on the condition that 25 other friends give the same amount, which will be duly acknowledged in the BANNER OF ISRAEL—E. W. Bird, Esq., Douglas A. Onslow, Esq., J.P., J. Hope Wallace, Esq., J.P., Dr. Alder Smith, H. H. Pain, Esq." Carried unanimously.

Digitized by Google

A WARNING.

By E. Reep.

At no time, since the discovery of the identity of the Anglo-Saxon race with the Ten Tribes of Israel, has it been so all-important as now, to urge the truth of identity teaching.

At the present time, there prevails amongst us a spirit of doubt and a disposition to set aside the Divine inspiration of the Bible. God's revelation of Himself in the person of His Son, and through His prophets, is being rejected as a mere visionary conception, no longer to be credited by educated and thinking people.

If any doubt the truth of this assertion let them note the eager appetite shown by the public for works of a sceptical nature, lately much gratified by the production of a certain novel, which shall be nameless, but whose ostensible object is to throw doubt upon Scripture, and to destroy our faith in the Author of our common salvation.

That this work of fiction has been pretty generally denounced from the pulpit, is not surprising; the pity is, that while feeling it a duty to give some verbal expression of protest against such impious writing, the denouncers did not administer an antidote in the shape of a homily on the truth of prophecy, as shown by its fulfilment in the history of the English people, and which has been so conclusively proved to be fulfilled by the researches of British-Israelites in prophetic and other history.

That our spiritual masters and pastors should be so blind to this palpable fulfilment is not so much a matter of wonder as at first appears; for as it was beforetime so it is now God's will to conceal His guiding hand in current events from the wise and prudent and to reveal His purposes unto babes.

This divine order of things being unmistakably apparent it is the duty of British-Israelites to call attention to the condition of society in the present day, and to warn, that being God's chosen people, we must for that very reason be alive to our responsibilities as His witnesses for the truth of all Scripture.

Like Amos and Isaiah of old we must teach that "prophecy is intimately connected with history" (see Professor Driver's work upon Isaiah), and that to turn heedless ears and blind eyes to God's wonderful dealings with the Anglo-Saxon race is probably to bring upon ourselves some startling chastisement to rouse us from our lethargy.

Had the Israelites of Samaria and Judah listened to the warning voice of their prophets they would not have lived the careless, luxurious, irreligious life they did, a social state of corruption which brought upon them, as we all know, the horrors of war, defeat, and captivity.

With this conscious knowledge of what befell our forefathers for their disobedience, the English people will be committing a deadly error if they wilfully hearken to the hideous teachings of scepticism. Let them rather study the denunciations of the prophets against such spiritual deceit; and realise to themselves what moral death is; in the picture of Israel neglecting all proper and religious functions, as painted for us by the Prophet Amos, who describes to us, in strongest language, princely palaces devoured by flames, women "ripped" by the sword, the smiting of the houses of the rich, the neglect of the poor, the continual indulgence in strong drink, the worshipping at false altars, the general agricultural ruin of the land, and the plague of death everywhere. These terrible calamities, dreadful as they were, were to teach a merciful lesson; they fell upon the high-living, pleasure-loving Israelites because God had known them, and them only of all the families of the earth, wherefore as a father reproveth his children He visited them for their iniquities.

It was thus God dealt with the House of Joseph before it was finally delivered into the hands of the Assyrians.

Since that great historical event the House of Israel has been sifted through many nations, ultimately to emerge in these English islands a people redeemed by the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

Shall we then, having been so wonderfully led, and brought into the fold of the new covenant again, by our infidelity and evil living provoke God to punish us? Ghastly crimes are being committed in our midst, and the social degradation of a large portion of our community is a disgrace to our religion and our civilization.

In the face of this grievous state of things, it surely behoves Israel to rise as one man to stamp out such national corruption. If our clergy and those who have the welfare of this great nation at heart, could be brought to see the spiritual force of the identity, what a weapon they would have in their hands with which to arouse the ignorant, or the indifferent, or the unbelieving, to the reality of God being with us; with us, His elect people, the House of Israel.

Not till God be enquired of by the House of Israel to do the things He has promised, will there be an outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon our suffering people; and this great consummation of God's goodness is being hindered by good Christian men and women, because they are either too idle or too prejudiced to test whether Anglo-Israel teaching be truth or not. If true, it is high time that it be proclaimed from every housetop, as well as pulpit, and the sooner our spiritual guides question themselves upon this matter the more quickly will come the spiritual kingdom of our Saviour Jesus Christ, who Himself has told us, is neither here nor there, but within us; the mystery of which the House of Israel was specially selected to teach to all nations, tongues, and peoples.

To be worthy of this great mission, Israel is enjoined to obey God's precepts, "to let judgment run down as waters, and righteousness as a mighty stream" (Amos v. 24).

Only by thus obeying God's injunctions to live temperate and spiritual lives, to bear one another's burdens, can Israel enjoy to the fullest extent the blessedness of being above all people, "a peculiar treasure, a kingdom of priests, an holy nation," producing the fruit of the Spirit, which is, "goodness, righteousness, and truth."

A nation bringing forth fruit of this kind would be a nation of ministering spirits, and it is to this ideal state of perfection that we (British-Israelites at least) hope to come; and in this hope we trust will die every wretched element of unbelief that is now passing over our land to the destruction of our eternal peace.

Abinger, Sylvan Road, Upper Norwood, Nov. 17th, 1888.

RAROTONGA IN THE SOUTH PACIFIC AS A GATE.

We have always maintained the pressing need that has long existed for some fresh strategic coaling stations in the South Pacific, between Auckland in New Zealand and the canal which M. de Lesseps believes he will be able to complete at Panama in the Central American Isthmus. Such a station is also required between New Zealand and Vancouver Island, where a master Gate, Esquimault, when duly armed and fortified, will represent British power throughout the North Pacific. We have already noticed the Protectorate which Lord Salisbury has recently announced over the Hervey group, (the chief of which is Rarotonga), and the results thereof to be reasonably expected. In the Times newspaper of October 27, there appeared a full and interesting account of this strategic island, which we propose to transfer to our columns on account of the very important character of the communication, and of the testimony it bears to the value of a British Gate, as well as to what such a Gate should be. The account was as follows:—

RAROTONGA AND THE NEW PROTECTORATE.

(From a Correspondent).

The establishment of a British protectorate over Rarotonga

Digitized by Google

and the inclusion within our protectorate in a short time of the other islands of the Hervey, or Cook's Group, may render desirable an account of these islands and of the policy that has led Lord Salisbury to the conclusion that they must henceforth be taken under our wing.

The group consists of seven islands, the largest being Rarotonga and Mangaia, each about 30 miles in circumference; the latter island, however, is barely 700 feet above the sea, whereas Rarotonga reaches a height of 3,000 feet. Both possess good soil and rich vegetation. Aitutaki, next in importance, is only about half the size of Mangaia, while the remaining islands, of which the better known are Atiu, Mauki, Metiaro, and Hervey, are smaller still. Mauki was once the resort of Pacific traders in search of wood. There ironwood was found in large quantities, and in length extending in some instances to 40 feet and measuring a yard in diameter. Hervey Island is a large atoll, extremely fertile, and covered with cocoanut groves. In fact, the whole group has attractions for commercial men; and as the thermometer only averages about 80 deg., even including the warmest season, it will be seen that Europeans can live in comfort, while the peculiar variety of temperature allows both tropical and other fruits and vegetables to grow to perfection side by side.

But it is more to the political than to the commercial aspect of the question that I would at this moment direct attention. The step now being taken has for some time past been frequently urged upon the Imperial Government by New Zealand statesmen, while the privilege of becoming Her Majesty's subjects has ever been present with the Rarotongans since British influence first made itself known and felt in that island.

In 1864 the Rarotongans applied to the British Throne for protection in a letter sent to the then Governor of New Zealand, signed by the King and chiefs of Awarua, Ngatangia, and Arorangi districts, which represent the entire population of Rarotonga. However, no notice was taken of that petition—a fact which must have thrown a considerable amount of cold water upon the native idea of English courtesy. Still the feeling of loyalty towards this country continued and remains to his day. Now that their wish has been granted, we may look forward to a race in Rarotonga even more prosperous than their neighbours the Samoans and Tongons, and a people who will be an accession of strength to Her Majesty's out-lying dominions in the Pacific Ocean.

The New Zealand Government a few years since pointed out the importance of Rarotonga to the home authorities in a long telegraphic despatch to the Secretary of State for the Colonies, but, although much correspondence ensued thereon, nothing was done in the way of an annexation which every student of Pacific politics knew was of great importance to the British Empire. In 1884 the following account, furnished by an eye-witness, was laid before the New Zealand House of Representatives. It is interesting and instructive, and affords an insight into the manners and customs of the inhabitants of the new British protectorate:—

The inhabitants are governed by a Queen, and are in an advanced state of civilization: one sees nothing like it in the South Pacific, not even in Tonga; and as far as concerns sobriety, decency, and quiet behaviour they are superior to the Sandwich Islanders. Their villages are all laid out in streets; their houses are of stone and lime; they have furniture; they dress nicely in European fabrics; they are all well-fed, happy, and prosperous. Their laws are just and well administered; they fear God and deal hospitably and honestly by all who visit them. There is no superstition, no barbarism, no want or discontent among them. If they have a weakness it is a fondness for intoxicating drink; but their dissipation is of a mild form, and seldom goes further than the imbibing of several pints of beer, which they manufacture from the juice of oranges and squashed-up China bananas. They are industrious and cultivate the ground assiduously when assured of a market for their produce. They also practice all manner of handicrafts. Among them are good carpenters, smiths, sailmakers, stonemasons, &c., They plant cotton and coffee and export great quantities of oranges. Besides the agent of the London Missionary Society, there are several Europeans resident upon Rarotonga who are married to native wives, also half-castes (as they are called) from Auckland, domesticated in the same manner. They have stores, plantations, cotton gins, and several small vessels trading round the Hervey Group, and running to Tahiti and Auckland with their produce. All the sympathies of the Rarotongans are English. They have had frequent communication with New Zealand. Pavra Tuhaere, the loyal and intelligent chief of Hauraki, visited them a few years ago with his family in a vessel which he chartered for the purpose. Some of his near relatives who accompanied him took to themselves Rarotongan wives. The islanders of Rarotonga regard Auckland as the centre of civilization, and its people, represented by Captain Waldy and Pavra Tuhaere, as their protectors and best friends.

Surrounded as the Rarotongans are by French possessions and French influence, it might have been supposed that they would desire French protection. Such, however, is far from being the case. They fear the French, whom they regard as their enemies. This is no doubt in a great measure due to the tales that have been circulated among them about the oppression of the French military system, and the alleged cruel treatment of labourers upon the La Terre Eugénie plantation. It is but fair to say, however, that both the one and the other were exaggerations; and although little doubt exists that the French method of dealing with natives is neither liked or desired by the Rarotongans, the treatment of Protestant missionaries by French authorities in the Pacific has in a measure inspired the text that has resulted in the preaching of an anti-French doctrine. And so Rarotonga has been saved from becoming part and parcel with the great French protectorate which extends over the greater part of the South-eastern Pacific. But while New Zealand statesmen and native Rarotongans were busily employing themselves in pressing the importance of Rarotonga upon Her Majesty's advisers, no statesman in this country was found to grapple with the Pacific problem, and proclaim in Parliament the importance of securing for this country the sympathies of the Rarotongans. Two years ago I pointed out the diplomatic relations that exist in the Pacific Ocean between Spain, Holland, Germany, France, and Great Britain, and suggested the formation of a conventional line that should secure "Rapa and Rarotonga on the British side," and then the important position of that latter island was brought home to the Imperial authorities. Later on, when the New Hebrides difficulty began to assume alarming proportions, we find Lord Carnarvon coinciding with the idea of a division in those regions between France and this country, and proposing, amid much enthusiasm in the House of Lords, that spheres of influence should be agreed upon between those two countries. Still, nothing was done except when that problem was solved, to hand over to our rivals Raratea, Huahine, and Boralora, and thus, with the exception of Pitcairn Island, Cook's Island (Rarotonga), Rurutu, and Rimatara, of the Austral Group, and Easter Island, the entire South-eastern Pacific remained under the control of France. Now, however, Lord Salisbury has seen the importance of extending British protection to Rarotonga.

Of course it may be said, and with some reason, that the Panama Canal is impossible. Perhaps it may be so; but suppose it is not, and this negative view is by no means an impossibility. If M. de Lesseps breaks down and his lotteries fail to draw, his mantle may fall upon an "Elisha," and then in years to come, when the canal is made, what, but for the possession of Rarotonga, would have been England's position in the South-eastern Pacific? The highway between Auckland and Panama is commanded by Rapa, and no other island lies in the direct route. Between Sydney and Panama not a single British coaling-station exists, while France possesses the islands of Tahiti, Meetia, Teliaroa, Raratea, and the surrounding islets in the direct passage, while near at hand lie the Marquesas on the one side, and Tubai, Raivavai, the Panmantus, and the Gambiers on the other, with their accompanying list of harbours and places of refuge. Without Rarotonga France on this route is supreme; with Rarotonga the balance of power is materially altered. Rarotonga has two small but fairly secure harbours, and is connected with Auckland by ties of friendship and commerce. Its position in the middle of the South-eastern Pacific gives it exceptional advantages over the neighbouring islands, while its protection by this country, which, by the bye, should be followed by annexation, supplies British ships with one coaling station and a place wherein to obtain supplies in the unhappy event of a European war along the 7,700 miles of sea that separate Sydney from Panama.

What follows is this. Rarotonga as a true Gate, having practicable harbours, must be properly fortified in order that when annexed to the Empire, it may act as a "place of arms" for the British fleet and for the commercial navies it will attract to itself as a safe refuge in time of war.

THREE Englishmen now have statues in France—Lord Brougham at Cannes, Jenner at Boulogne-sur-Mer, and Shakespeare in Paris.

Digitized by Google

NOTICES.

All communications intended for the Editor, to be addressed: "Philo-Israel," Woodcot Villa, Tyndall's Park, Clifton, Bristol.

SUBSCRIPTIONS. £ s. d.

Annual Subscription for one copy weekly (including the Twelve Double Numbers) post free 0 7 6
Two Copies (including Double Numbers) 0 13 6
Three Copies " " " 1 0 4
Four Copies " " " 1 5 6
Six Copies " " " 1 16 4

Post Office Orders to be made payable at the head office, St. Martin's-le-grand, London, to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C., or F. W. PARRY & Co., 29, Paternoster-row, London.

The Editor cannot undertake to return rejected MSS. unless stamps for the purpose be sent. Parties requiring an answer should enclose a stamp.

Contents Bills and Show Cards may be obtained on application to the Publishers.

Advertisements should be sent to ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

Prepaid Advertisements are inserted at the rate of thirty words for 1s. 4d.

CHRISTMAS PRESENTS AND NEW YEAR'S GIFTS

FOR THOUGHTFUL READERS.

Sent post free, carefully packed, at the published price, by the Publishers,

ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet Court, Fleet St., or may be ordered of any Bookseller.

—:o:—

3/6 The Geography of the Gates.

By PHILO-ISRAEL.

Handsome cloth, gilt, with Map and Seven Full-Page Illustrations.

3/6 Britain in History, Ancient and Modern.

By MRS. G. ALBERT ROGERS.

Cloth Boards.

3/- The Lost Ten Tribes.

By REV. JOSEPH WILD, D.D.

Handsome cloth, Gilt.

3/- Talks for the Times.

By REV. JOSEPH WILD, D.D.

Cloth, Gilt lettered.

2/- The Future of Israel and Judah.

By REV. JOSEPH WILD, D.D.

Handsome cloth, Gilt.

2/6 The Origin, Progress, and Establishment of the Kingdom of God in the World.

By DR. J. M. GRANT.

Cloth Boards, Gilt lettered.

2/6 The Sisters of Harrowdale Rectory.

By M. A. SEARSON.

Handsome cloth, gilt lettered, gilt edges, Double Page Illustration.

1/- Words of Help and Wisdom

Gathered by MISS J. LAWRENCE.

A pretty presentation volume

Crown 8vo., Cloth, price 3s. 6d.

BRITAIN IN HISTORY ANCIENT AND MODERN;

Or, Proofs Linking Israel with Britain.

By Mrs. G. A. ROGERS.

"A mass of information."—The Fireside News.

By the Same Author.

Fourth Thousand, Crown 8vo., Cloth, price 1s. 6d.

THE CORONATION STONE;

And England's Interest In It.

"Its pages will be read and re-read as time goes on."—Banner of Israel.

In the Press. Second Edition, cloth, 1s.

THE STAR-LIT CROWN.

A Brief Memoir of Rev. G. Albert Rogers, M.A.

"It contains, within a few pages, more than the substance of many three volumes."—(7th Earl of) Shaftesbury.

LONDON: JAMES NISBET & Co., Berners-st., R. BANKS & SON, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, and to be had of all Booksellers.

BY REV. G. ALBERT ROGERS, M.A.,

Late Vicar of Christ Church, Dover.

Second Edition, in wrapper, 6d.

WHERE IS THE FIRSTBORN?

An Investigation into our Claim to Identification with the House of Israel.

"Ably written, well edited."—Banner of Israel.

ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet Court, Fleet Street.

The Origin of Masonic Ritual & Tradition:

A Lecture on the Three Degrees, by BRO. WM. ROWBOTTOM, P.M., with facsimile of a very rare Masonic engraving published in 1789.—Cloth, 2/6.

"Exquisitely clear and singularly correct in everything wherein I may be any authority or guide."—Professor PIAZZI SMYTH. "The Author seems to reason intelligently from his principles."—Literary Churchman.

London: R. Banks and Son, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, E.C.; George Kenning, 16, Great Queen Street, W.C.

"A decidedly picturesque fairy-tale."—Spectator.

Eildon Grange: A Tale.

By ANDREW CLARK, M.A., Vicar of St. Michael's, Oxford. "Extremely readable."—Church Times. "Clever, graphic, and morally elevating."—Literary Churchman. "Of absorbing interest to boys."—Tablet. "Fresh and vigorous."—Church Bells. "The illustrations are very good and possess a distinct charm and piquancy."—Spectator.

Oxford: S. Rowbottom and Son; London: Hamilton, Adams and Co., 32, Paternoster Row, E.C.—Price 5s.

Are the English People the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel? An Inquiry Establishing the Identity of the British Nation with the Lost Ten Tribes. 4d

Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

LUNG SAVE YOUR LIVES BY TAKING TONIC
LUNG OWBRIDGE'S TONIC
LUNG LUNG TONIC TONIC
LUNG THE MIGHTY HEALER. TONIC
LUNG It has a power over disease hitherto unknown in Medicine. TONIC
LUNG Are you at all Weak-chested or inclined to be Consumptive, with just a touch of Cough now and then? TONIC
LUNG "Try this Wonderful Medicine." The Cough and Weakness will disappear as if by magic, and you will feel a strength and power you never had before. TONIC
LUNG HAVE YOU A COUGH? TONIC
LUNG A DOSE WILL RELIEVE IT! TONIC
LUNG HAVE YOU A COLD? TONIC
LUNG A DOSE AT BEDTIME WILL REMOVE IT. TONIC
LUNG Bronchitis & Asthma it relieves instantly TONIC
LUNG The Spasms of Coughing so dreadful in Whooping Cough become less with each dose of the medicine. TONIC
LUNG TONIC
LUNG Prepared by W. T. OWBRIDGE Chemist, Hull TONIC
LUNG Sold in Bottles 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d. TONIC
LUNG and 11s. by all Chemists and Patent TONIC
LUNG Medicine Vendors. Wholesale all London TONIC
LUNG and Provincial Houses. TONIC

HUMAN LIFE—FIFTY YEARS' Record of Facts, Principles, and Discoveries (just published complete) Relating to the Improvement and Preservation of Human Life on Earth. Origin and true treatment of diseases. A series of articles by DR. SAMUEL BIRLEY, M.D., Ph.D. Book form, 50 pages. SENT FREE to every applicant by the publishers, GORDON B. MURRAY & CO., 50, Theobald's-road, Holborn, E.C. Write to-day

PIANOFORTES, Harmoniums, American Organs. Why buy at shops inferior made instruments, and pay large profits, when you can buy direct from the Maker High-class Instruments, and save 50 per cent. by so doing? Full value allowed for old Instruments in exchange as part payment. Write for Price Lists and Testimonials to A. G. LINSTEAD, Cobden Pianoforte Company, 5, Eversholt-street, Camden Town, London. Established 1874.

Price Sixpence, post free Sevenpence, Subscription, post free, 3/6 half-yearly.

THE MESSENGER.

A Monthly Expositor of the Fulfilment of the Scriptures in the Anglo-Saxon Race, the Israel of God.

Edited by "OXONIAN."

In addition to a new work "RUSSIA-JAPHET," and other contributions by its Editor, this magazine will contain articles by Revs. Hugh Stowell, S. C. Adams, F. Aston, Idrisyn Jones and E. J. W. Whittaker; Marguerite Haskard, Surgeon-Gen. J. M. Grant, Douglas Onslow, D. E. Olivier, H. Britain, and other Identity writers. Each number contains

A SERMON BY DR. WILD.

R. FOLKARD & SON, 22, Devonshire-st., Queen's-sq., W.C.

MR. E. HINE'S PUBLICATIONS.

Forty-Seven Identifications. 6d., post 7d.

Cui Bono? 6d., post 7d.

Lost Israel Found. 3/6, post 3/9.

The Nation Warned by the Scripture Teachings of the Great Pyramid. 6d. post free, 7d.

Can be obtained of F. W. PARRY, 29, Paternoster Row; R. BANKS & SON, Racquet Court, Fleet Street, London.

CASES FOR BINDING

THE YEARLY VOLUMES. Price 1s. 6d.

R. BANKS & SON, RACQUET-COURT, FLEET-ST

Just issued, price 2d., by post 2½d., 6 copies post free 1s.

SUPREMACY;

Or, The British Church versus The Church of Rome.

By E. M. RUSH ("A E I"),

Author of "The New Old Story," "The Answer to The Eastern Question," etc.

London: Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street

DE BEUVE'S GINGER CAKES

These delicious Cakes are highly recommended for invalids and the aged. They form an Unfailing Remedy for Constipation and Indigestion. Children like these which are very wholesome and conducive to health. Sent for 1s. Postal Order to any part of the Kingdom by Victor de Beuve, 3, Rood Lane, London, E.C.

GINGER CAKES

FITS! FITS!! FITS!!!

ALL persons suffering from Epilepsy should send Name and Address to JAMES OSBORNE, Medical Pharmacy, Ashbourne, Derbyshire, who will forward, free of charge, full particulars (with Testimonials) of the most successful remedy ever discovered for this distressing malady. Sent to all parts of the world. References permitted to Rev. J. Baker, M.A., 80, Bolton Road, Pendleton, Manchester.

Certain HARNESS' Cure.

ELECTROPATHIC BELT

FOR

PARALYSIS

J. FULLER, Jun., Esq., Whiteparish, Salisbury, Wilts, writes:—"Since wearing your Electropathic Belt I am decidedly better and stronger. I have more confidence in myself, and the pain in my back is completely gone. Your Belt is truly wonderful."

Guaranteed to generate a mild continuous current of Electricity, which speedily cures all Disorders of the Nerves, Stomach, Liver and Kidneys. Thousands of Testimonials. Pamphlet & Advice free on application to Mr. C. B. Harness, Consulting Electrician, the Medical Battery Co. Ltd.

Only Address,

52, OXFORD ST. LONDON, W. (Corner of Rathbone Place.)

Call to-day, if possible, or write at once

Printed and Published for the Proprietor by ROBERT BANKS & SON, Racquet-court, Fleet-st., London, E.C.; F. W. PARRY (late GUEST & Co.), 29, Paternoster-row.

WEDNESDAY, DEC. 26, 1888 [All rights reserved.

733 of

Digitized by Google